kicks and wide blows to cut her off. But not matter what angle they approached her from, none of their attacks even came close to landing.

What's more, she was dodging all of them with her fucking eyes closed!

In an effort to get their foe to move, Piccolo rushed in from behind her with a slash of his hands, his maneuver prompting the other members of the group to disengage. But his furious charge was easily avoided when the female deity slipped around him, resulting in the Namekian rushing past her and missing her by a mile.

Taking advantage of the situation, a circling Gohan and Vegeta, eyes fixed squarely on their target, vanished in a blur of movement and maneuvered behind her for an attack. With the deity standing perfectly still in the center of the terrace, the pair teleported behind her with their fists loaded and ready to fire.

But the instant the two Saiyans appeared out of their light speed jump a smiling Set suddenly leant forward and launched herself across the terrace. Her maneuver was marked by an involuntary blast of wind that smacked both the demi-Saiyan and the prince head on, and sent them tumbling painfully across the hard surface of the courtyard.

As soon as they were knocked away, Videl and Eighteen attempted to take the woman while she was floating parallel just three feet off of the ground, and dove in at her from the sides. They swung out at her with their fists, only for the relaxed God to suddenly to shoot up into the sky from her perfectly vertical position.

In spite of not putting any effort into her movements whatsoever, Set's speed was so great that the Z-fighters could barely keep track of her.

Snarling at the deity's retreating form, Paprika leapt into the sky after her, the demon's form blurring out and reappearing directly above her quarry a hundred meters above the pyramid. Intercepting the goddess, who slowed down and righted herself to face the Makyan, the white haired teen cranked her fist back and struck out at the woman in a blur of attacks. Her fists sliced down at the deity in an unending rain of blows as she forced her back little by little, but every punch she threw was effortlessly avoided by the woman, who continued to smile despite how dangerously close each strike came.

Frustration growing with every punch that missed, the Makyan tried once more to try and catch her. Her assault coming to an abrupt end, Paprika threw a wild haymaker at the canine, only for Set to deftly leap over her punch, hop off of her extending fist like it were springboard, and flip over the demon to appear behind her.

"W-What the?!!" Reacting in alarm, Paprika spun around to see where Set had gone. But just as she was in the process of turning around, the goddess, effortlessly moving around her opponent, lifted her finger and gently tapped the Makyan in the crook of her neck.

While this appeared as an ordinary poke, the impact of it was so great that it not only generated a deafening shockwave, but it sent a stunned Paprika rocketing towards the planet's surface. A split second after the attack landed, the Makyan slammed into the desert floor with a deafening thunderclap, a geyser like explosion of dust shooting into the stratosphere from where she landed.

The Z-fighters scattered across the area could only gawk in shock at how easily the woman dealt with their ally.

When the dust settled from the crash landing, it revealed Paprika lying sprawled out in the middle of the crater, reverted back to her normal form and her eyes closed shut, indicating she'd been knocked out cold with a single blow.

Set smirked down at the fallen demon, "That's one."

"You jerk!" a shout from above echoed out, drawing Set's eyes to her front.

The instant she looked, the deity saw Goten rocketing towards her at full speed, his golden aura blazing around him like a comet.

With a yell of effort, the child threw a punch at the goddess, only to miss when the woman held her finger up and gently placed it against his forehead. Comically, the child continued swinging out at the woman like a kid being held at arm's length from striking someone taller than them. "Ugh! Damn it! Ugh! You leave Paprika… ugh, ugh… alone!" With every grunt, Goten's fists swung out uselessly, putting an amused smirk on Set's face.

Moments later, the woman held up her other hand and placed a finger against the forehead of another adversary, who appeared out of super speed swinging at her. When Trunks's form appeared, the boy also took a few useless swings at the goddess, only to be held back just as Goten was.

"Ah! Stupid dog! I'll… ugh… I'll get you!" the lavender haired Super Saiyan yelled as he tried to kick and punch the woman, but to no avail.

After a couple more seconds of shouting and punching, Set soon grabbed the two boys by the hair, held them in front of her, and bonked their heads together. With a loud 'bang' the woman not only knocked them out of Super Saiyan but effortlessly knocked the two children unconscious. Upon which she then dropped the pair and allowed them to plummet back to the earth.

Flying across the terrace, Gohan quickly leapt up at the falling children and caught them, dropping back to the floor moments later with his brother and friend held securely in his arms. When he checked to see if they were alive, the teen breathed a sigh of relief before glaring over his shoulder to see the goddess reappear in the middle of the terrace.

"Shit. This is bad." Setting Goten and Trunks to the floor, the oldest son of Goku quickly got back to his feet and, powering up, rocketed towards their opponent in a flash.

Reappearing directly beside the woman with his aura blazing around him, the demi-Saiyan threw a couple of punches her way. The dog goddess, eyes open and fixed upon the boy, effortlessly head slipped his blows before leaning towards him. When her eyes met his, the angered Gohan threw a roundhouse kick at her face, only for her finger to shoot up and flick him in the shin. The unexpected counter effortlessly knocked the teen's powerful kick back and sent him spinning to the floor like a top. When he hit the ground, the Ascended Saiyan bounced off of it and went tumbling painfully across the courtyard, where he eventually skidded to a stop in a crumpled heap several yards away.

Sensing the other Z-fighters approaching, Set looked over her shoulder to see Eighteen lunging at her with a punch. Vanishing in a flicker of movement, the goddess reappeared directly behind the angry blonde with a gentle nudge to her neck, a blow that connected with a thud and knocked the cyborg out. As soon as the android dropped to the ground, Videl came in from in front of the goddess with a kick, only for the deity to catch her boot between her thumb and finger. Then, with barely any effort at all, the goddess tossed the teenager over her shoulder.

The raven haired crime fighter cried out as she spun into the air before hitting the terrace a split second later, landing painfully on her side, which she gripped as soon as she stopped.

Once she'd dispatched of those two warriors, Set then glanced to her left to see Krillin standing at a distance with his hand raised and a golden disk spinning above his palm.

The moment her eyes landed on him, the short human fighter yelled. "Destructo Disk!" He then pitched the monofilament attack in the God's direction, intending on cutting her in half.

Flying along a straight and narrow path, the sharp blade slammed into Set's shoulder with a flash of light. It then attempted to burrow its way through the target, but after several tense seconds of digging, the disk suddenly lost out and, after bouncing off of its target, shattered in midflight.

Before Krillin could even gawk, Set disappeared and reappeared directly in front of him, shocking the Z-fighter and forcing him to lean back. After seeing him gasp, the fox woman casually raised a hand to the short warrior's forehead and flicked him in the brow. A loud 'slap' echoed across the countryside followed by a scream, as Goku's best friend was sent spiraling towards the horizon. In the blink of an eye, the man crashed into a dune five kilometers away, his landing marked by a large burst of dust and sand.

In just under two minutes, Paprika, Goten, Trunks, Eighteen and Krillin had all been taken out. That meant only five Z-fighters were left.

"Special Beam Cannon!"

Tail wagging behind her happily, Set looked up when an orange light fell upon her and she spotted a corkscrew shaped beam rocketing towards her from the sky. After watching as it approached her from its launching point in slow motion, the deity then reached up with her hand and gave a loud yawn. The instant she exhaled, a wind like barrier exploded from her body and slammed into the drill-like attack, causing it to rebound against the invisible force field and sending it flying back at its user two times faster than it'd previously been fired.

Piccolo only had a split second to gasp before his attack slammed into his chest and exploded with the force of the sun. A dome shaped blast filled the sky and showered the area with sparks and embers, seconds before the Namekian's body came flying out of the inferno to collide with one of the pyramids making up the Egret Necropolis. When the dust and light settled from both the crash landing and the exploding beam attack, it revealed the former guardian of earth lying in a smoking crater covered in burns and dirt.

Just like that, another one was out of the fight.

"PICCOLO!" Gohan yelled out, charging towards Set and sending a jab her way.

His attacks swung out at her with terrifying accuracy, the dog woman smiling as she avoided them one after the other. It was only when he came in with a hook that the Super Saiyan 2 was grabbed by the hair and kicked in the stomach. Though Set intended it to be a mere tap with her toes, the attack hit Gohan with the force of a million comets hitting a single spot at the same time. The powerful blow drew a shout of pain from the young man as he was sent barreling into the terrace's floor. He bounced along the stone surface before stopping close to the destroyed temple. When the teen rolled onto his front, his hair faded to black and the boy struggled to get back to his feet.

Upon dispatching the demi-Saiyan, Set swiftly turned her attention to her sides when two more blurs shot towards her. Reappearing in midflight, a fully charged Vegeta and Zangya let loose a barrage of punches upon their foe. Their attacks flying at her at invisible speeds, the pair forced Set to slip and dodge their blows repeatedly. It was only when they came in with two large swings the goddess quickly slipped into their range and countered them.

With both ease and grace, the woman raised her hands and, with her two index fingers, gave them each two light pokes to their bodies. The lightning fast hits not only knocked the warriors out instantly, but the impact of the final blows sent both of them simultaneously rocketing into the distance with a sonic boom. Spinning through the air, the two out cold warriors ended up bouncing across the dune seas before crashing in the middle of nowhere; their bodies ending up at the bottom of two large craters in the sand.

Humming cheerfully at her success, Set took a quick glance around the terrace and marked all the areas she'd sent the Z-fighters packing. After counting the bodies she could see lying about the area, a cheerful murmur then left the woman's lips as she turned her attention to the horizon ahead of her.

"Three minutes, hm? They lasted longer than I expected." Even though she'd used only a miniscule percentage of her strength, that was still an incredible feat on the Z-fighters' behalf.

However, just as the goddess was starting to get comfortable with the idea that she'd taken out all of them, her expression then changed when her tail swung up and blocked a kick thrown by another person appearing behind her. The blow connecting with a loud thud against her appendage, Set glanced over her shoulder to see a still conscious Videl leap away and back flip across the terrace to the edge.

As soon as she stopped, the tomboy dropped into a stance and glared daggers at the deity.

Blinking a few times in surprise, the fox woman grinned and turned to the girl in interest. "My, my. You're a spirited one, aren't you?"

Gritting her teeth tightly, the raven haired girl gave a loud grunt as her white aura burst up around her. Focusing her energy just like she was taught, the girl then turned and disappeared using super speed, sprinting a full lap around the deity before appearing beside the destroyed temple where Gohan was lying, her hands cupped beside her.

The demi-Saiyan lying stricken on the ground saw his best friend appear across from him and watched in shock as the girl took aim.

Crosshairs locked and target sitting squarely in her sights, the snarling Videl called upon all the energy she could muster before, with a mighty yell, thrust her hands forward in a single motion. "Ka-me-ha-me-HAAAAA!" A blinding flash of light followed by a thunderclap marked the launch of a massive blue blast of energy from the girl's hands, which left her palms and rocketed towards Set like a missile.

The goddess, who had managed to keep track of the teen with her eyes without any trouble, raised an eyebrow at the wall of energy charging towards her. With her hands still locked behind her and tail wagging happily, the woman allowed the blast to slam into her at full speed, the energy attack swallowing her up before exploding with the force of several nuclear warheads. The shockwave it generated shook the countryside and the pyramid, causing bits of the ruined temple to collapse to the terrace.

When the explosion eventually faded, it left a cloud of white smoke hanging over the damaged area and a panting Videl standing at the trigger end of her burst.

Sweat running down her face, the battered and exhausted fighter lowered her arms and, watching the airspace clear, turned to her friend kneeling on the ground several feet away.
When her sapphire eyes met Gohan's charcoal ones, a warm smile pulled across Videl's face. It was one that was both joyous and full of vigor, and captured the demi-Saiyan's attention for but a moment.

"I got her… Gohan…" the girl breathed out happily.

No sooner had she spoke, a flash of light followed immediately by a clap of a gunshot filled the air. In the blink of an eye, Videl's body was suddenly lifted off the floor when a golden beam shot through her chest and came out the other side, her eyes widening in shock as she was sent flying back through the air.

The whole thing happened so fast, but Gohan was able to see every second of it, and the sight of his best friend being hit brought a horrified look to the young Saiyan's face.

A second after she was hit, the raven haired girl's body hit the floor with a dull thud, where she lay with blood quickly beginning to pool around her. In a matter of moments her energy signature flattened and Gohan could only stare in disbelief as Videl's glazed eyes gazed back at him.

The demi-Saiyan trembled, his eyes fixed squarely upon his fallen friend. He was so gripped by the sight that Gohan completely missed the cloud of smoke across the platform parting and Set's form emerging from the haze.

Smiling with her finger extended, the deity lowered her arm and began ambling across the terrace to where she'd shot the human teenager. Obviously pleased with her kill, the God of Storms then stopped a few meters away when she saw Gohan crawl over to where Videl was lying and, gently taking her into his arms, rested her head against his shoulder.

His hand wrapping protectively around her, the shocked half-Saiyan continued to tremble as he gently shook his friend. His eyes shimmered in terror. "Videl… Videl…" When he rest a hand against her chest to look for a heartbeat, his palm then pulled away a split second later and, when he looked down, he saw it was covered in blood. Eyes widening even more when the girl's head slumped forward, Gohan tried one last time to coax life out of her. "No… no… " Covering his mouth with his blood soaked hand, tears formed in the young man's eyes as he leant forward and began to sob. "No… no… no! Videl… no!"

Looking upon the scene with a serious gaze in play, Set shook her head as her master's tied up body floated around behind her. "It's like I told you… your decision to resist my will and to remain as you are on earth would cost you dearly." The fox goddess narrowed her eyes on the teen as his crying grew louder and, as he held his friend close to him, his body trembled even more violently. "Now you can see the futility of your struggle… and why you should've joined me when you had the chance."

Gohan didn't hear her. His arms wrapped tightly around Videl's lifeless form, the teenager continued to cry, his words muffled by her hair.

It was a sight that filled Whis's expression with hurt and brought a solemn one to Set's.

Unwilling to see the boy suffer anymore then he had, the fox goddess closed the last few feet of distance and stopped directly beside the wounded Saiyan and his dead friend. Bringing her right arm around, Set allowed a spark of electricity to run down her fingers before speaking up once more. "I know what it's like to lose someone you care about. The pain is… almost indescribable." Narrowing her eyes, the God of Storms lifted her palm up and, curling her fingers, took aim at the trembling boy beneath her. By this point in time, his crying had stopped and so had his trembling. "But do not worry. You and your friend will be reunited in the next life."
"I'm sorry."

Just as the deity was swinging in, the demi-Saiyan's head snapped up and, with speed Set couldn't even track, stood up, clenched his fist, and drove a planet splitting haymaker right into her face.

The teen's knuckles caved in the goddess's snout and sent the God of Storms blasting through the air. Bouncing across the terrace like a ragdoll, the woman slammed back first into the side of the pyramid it was attached to before hitting the ground hard, where the vixen curled up, grabbed her face, and screamed in agony into her palms.

Whis, still suspended by the golden cuffs, looked up in shock when he saw what'd happened.

When the pain from the blow faded away, the stricken Set slowly pushed herself back to her feet and, stumbling a bit, looked up across the terrace in anger. With blood leaking out of her nose, the fox woman was quite easily confounded. "Where the fuck did that come from?!" By the time her eyes relocated the hybrid Saiyan at the other end of the platform, she received the biggest surprise of her life.

On his feet with Videl's body lying several meters behind him, the slumped over warrior in orange and blue stood seemingly spent in the middle of the open space. At first he didn't do anything, with nothing out of the ordinary taking place.

But as the God of Storms continued to eye the boy carefully, she then watched as bits of stone and debris began to levitate into the air around the young adult and felt the floor begin to shake. Along with a low rumbling sound that started reverberating across the entire countryside, both Set and her trapped master Whis looked on as Gohan's gaze looked up and glared across at the storm deity.

Instead of having the usual charcoal or turquoise irises the woman had seen in the warrior before, the deity saw that the young man's eyes had gone completely white, showing that he was blinded by rage.

A few seconds after fixing his sights upon the God of Storms, the enraged Gohan took a deep breath and, bringing his fists up, bellowed towards the sky with a howl of rage.

"RAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAA.

Immediately following his scream, a deafening thunderclap filled the sky as his golden aura exploded around him and expanded till it was a hundred times larger than his body. Along with the bolts of blue lightning that streaked off of him, Gohan's short blonde hair then grew down to the back of his legs and his eyebrows retracted into his skin. Multiple sonic booms ringing out all around as the area shook with the force of an eight-point magnitude earthquake, a golden, blinding light then flashed over the entire region like a nuclear warhead had been set off. This explosion of radiance lit up the entire west side of the planet and was shortly followed by a devastating shockwave.

A ripple of invisible energy left Gohan's body in a ring, overshooting his fallen friends and slamming a still standing Set in the face. Not expecting such a violent outburst, the goddess had to shield herself with her arm when the powerful gale hit her. The deity's forward eye clenched shut as she saw the bright, strobe-like aura surrounding the teen retract into him and form into a miniature vortex, which caused the clouds above them to circle.

When the field stabilized shortly thereafter, the two conscious audience members quickly thought the display was over. With the boy's impressive spiky hair having grown down his back and his eyebrows and irises having vanished, Set immediately knew right then that the teen had attained a new kind of Super Saiyan transformation.

However, when the waves of golden energy blasting off of Gohan's body began to intensify, Whis and Set soon realized it was only the beginning.

As she continued to feel the enraged man's power climbing at an astonishing rate, the God of Storms eyes soon widened in horror when she suddenly saw a blue flame like aura bleed out of the boy's body and overtake his golden one. When the translucent cloak swallowed up the demi-Saiyan, it soon formed into a pure blue sphere around his body, which shone as brightly as a quasar. Then, after several flashes of lightning shot off of the orb and tore up the surrounding desert, the sphere became a flame once again, which lifted seconds later to reveal the transformed Gohan…

Only this time he looked noticeably different.

The violent golden aura with the blue electric bio field had been replaced by a red aura with golden bolts, and his hair, which grew down his back and had previously been shining as brightly as the sun itself, had turned blood red. His muscle mass had also increased a little bit to illustrate his increase in strength and, along with the change in coloration, his skin had also taken on a slightly more reddish tone. The contrast of his form having sharpened considerably, it was easy to tell that this Ascended Saiyan form was much more different from the one he'd assumed previously.

His eyes, which were once hollow and lacking eyebrows, soon filled with a pair of red irises with black pupils, which became fixed upon the stunned goddess.

As his red aura continued to fluctuate around him, producing a hurricane that kicked up a wall of dust around him and ruffled their clothing, the thunderstruck Set couldn't help but stare in disbelief. Her sensors were off the charts.

"W-What the hell is this?" the God of Storms gawked, unable to believe what she was sensing.

Along with his transformation, not only had the boy's appearance changed considerably, but so had the air around him. The rubble that'd been lifted from the ground at the outset of his transformation began to orbit around him and while it seemed like he was doing this unconsciously, neither Videl nor any of his other unconscious friends were being lifted into the air. However, Set could feel that she was being subjected to this unruly force, and after taking note of the planet's rotational patterns, and the mountains of rubble and rock she could see rising in the distance to orbit their position, she then made a startling discovering.

"He's producing so much power that his mass has increased," Set thought in alarm, watching as the sand in the desert started to steadily rise into the sky.

Scientifically speaking it was farfetched. However, as crazy and insane as it sounded, the young Saiyan's body was producing so much energy that his mass had become comparable to that of the moon's. The density he'd also attained in this form was close to that of a black hole, as he was consciously distorting and shifting gravity around him.

However, there was also one other thing Set had noticed.
"That's celestial energy!" the goddess thought in alarm. Somehow, the same Godly ki that she and all of the other deities used had molded with the energy in his body and he was instinctively using it to amplify his strength a thousand fold. It was responding directly to his rage, so it was possible that he had no earthly idea what the heck this energy was and what he was doing with it. However, Set knew, and with the amount that she felt, she was terrified. "Where the hell did all of that come from?!"

Just like Whis and probably all of the Kais who were now drawn to the source of the anomaly, she was completely stumped.

Noticing he had his opponent's full and undivided attention, Gohan, blinded with rage and unaware of the effect his otherworldly transformation was having on the deity in front of him, clenched his fists and snarled.

"I'm going to make you pay for what you've done to Videl."

And from the amount of venom laced in his voice… he meant it.

(TO BE CONTINUED)

Author's Note: Ooh. Interesting development. Shit just got real here, people.

Talk to me goose. What kind of galaxy reducing destruction can we expect here?

Power Levels:

Gods (Supreme Deities)

Whis – 150,000,000,000 (Godly ki 15)

Set, God of Storms – 190,000,000,000 riki (Godly ki 19)

Set, God of Storms (Full Power) – 200,000,000,000 riki (Godly ki 20)

xxx

Paprika – 26,000,000 riki

Paprika (Super Makyan) – 260,000,000 riki

xxx

Gohan – 28,000,000 riki

Gohan (Super Saiyan) – 280,000,000 riki

Gohan (Super Saiyan 2) – 480,000,000 riki

xxx

Gohan (Super Saiyan 3 with God ki/Super Saiyan God) – 210,000,000,000 riki (Godly ki 21)
God of Storms Arc - Clash of the Titans

Dragonball Z

Legacies

Clash of the Titans

As the landscape surrounding the Egret Necropolis continued to crumble, with enormous chunks of the desert's surface orbiting weightlessly around the main pyramid, on the terrace connected to the structure, the showdown between the Z-fighters and the evil overlord Set had reached its highest peak. The atmosphere in that area had shifted dramatically, and not only was the gravity still out of whack, but the air was also swirling violently and had become so thick it was almost suffocating. The reason for this was the Saiyan sitting in the heart of the abnormality and the immense levels of power emanating from his body.

Shrouded in a brilliant red aura with red bolts of lightning shooting off of him, the enraged Son Gohan, his hair grown down his back and waving violently on the winds of his energy, fixed his ire squarely upon the one responsible for his fury. The person in question was currently still standing by the wall of the top half of the pyramid, glaring back at him. When the dog woman growled, the boy responded with a tighter scowl and the energy fluctuating from his body increasing in ferocity.

The cyclone surrounding him caused the boulders floating in the sky around their position to blast outwards and fracture, earning a concerned glance from Whis.

Still suspended in midair and bound by golden bands, the teal-skinned attendant's eyes shimmered in amazement as he sensed the demi-Saiyan's energy skyrocket. "This boy... his power... it's incredible..."

And he wasn't just talking about the celestial energy swirling through his system.

Through the red aura surrounding his chiseled frame, the man also sensed a much more powerful energy source dwelling inside the youngster. It was the same radiance that was responsible for his initial transformation and the same one that was now being amplified by the Godly ki pumping through his veins.

Gritting her teeth under the fearsome gale racking against her form, the storm deity Set gritted her teeth and rose up to full height, removing her hand from her arm to glare across at the teenager. "What the hell are you?"

The moment she opened her mouth, the demi-Saiyan's eyes suddenly widened and, without even moving a finger, fired a powerful blast of wind towards the woman. The shockwave literally distorted the air space in front of him and warped the surface of the terrace as it rippled towards its target several times faster than light. The sight of the approaching attack had Set recoil in alarm before leaping out of the way. Landing on the very ledge of the courtyard, the canine looked back just in time to watch the wave of repulsive force take out the side of the pyramid they were on, rebound off of its surface and strike the desert beyond.

The attack damn near split the country in two, causing an explosion comparable to several thermonuclear bombs detonating at once.
Breaking a sweat at the size of the blast, which punched a hole in the atmosphere straight up into space, the God of Storms' eyes snapped towards the Saiyan in fright. "This guy's insane!" His terrifying outburst aside, the amount of power he was generating was astonishing. She hadn't felt so much power sitting in one place since her training days, before she became one of the most powerful beings in the universe. Celestial energy was pouring out of every pore and follicle on his body.

"But where the hell did it all come from?"

Set just couldn't figure it out. In her millions of years of existence, she'd only ever seen a handful of transformations like this. The ascension of a mortal being to the level of the Gods, despite being such an incredibly rare occurrence in their reality, was always an extraordinary and thought provoking event to witness.

The process in which a person transformed into a celestial being differed greatly from race to race. Most of the deities currently in existence had claimed their title of Godhood when they mastered the incredibly rare form of energy known as celestial energy or God ki, which could be acquired through a variety of different means. And of course, once a being gained mastery over this particular energy source, they were immediately put in the running for a position as one of the guardians of their universe.

"The Valkas' previous deity meditated for fifty years under a red star to gain control over celestial energy and became the very first God of Fire, and lived a further eighty million years in his time. The current God of Light achieved his power through absorbing the heart of a super massive star. And the God of War Ares unlocked his celestial energy by slaughtering and devouring the souls of his entire race." And that was only a small number of rituals used by different cultures, all of which had culminated in a single entity that possessed the sum total of their respective species' strengths and powers. "The last time I encountered a Super Saiyan God was during the time a Legendary Super Saiyan was rampaging across their home planet of Saiya over a million years ago. The Saiyans used a method of transformation in which the power of five righteous Super Saiyans was pooled into a sixth, granting the host the ability to control celestial energy and use it to amplify his powers."

It was a primitive method of transformation in which the power the Saiyan achieved from that form lasted for only a few minutes, but was potent enough to destroy the abomination that was the Legendary Super Saiyan; the embodiment of hatred, bloodlust and evil in their society. Though it wasn't a full and complete God transformation, it was still a transformation nonetheless.

"This one's different though," Set thought, sweat pouring down her face as she saw Gohan glare in her direction. "This isn't anything like the Super Saiyan God I encountered before. No pagan ritual could create a being of this strength, so where did all of this celestial energy come from?" Her train of thought stopping dead in its tracks, the girl's eyes widened in shock before snapping towards the entrance to the pyramid that was formerly her prison. When she saw the purple wisps of energy pouring out of the gateway, the goddess knew instantly what must've happened. "That's it! His body must've unconsciously absorbed the energy from inside the Nexus!" The copious amounts of celestial energy she'd been producing in her solitude had been unable to return to its host, so it sought out the only living vessel it could find. Namely, the person that'd been closest to it…

And that turned out to be the same Saiyan used to open the doorway in the first place.

Somehow his body had been able to absorb the rare energy that'd been perforating the dimension and was now utilizing it as his own. A feat like that took an astonishing level of natural talent... and apparently this half-breed had a lot of it. This young Saiyan was able to take a foreign energy... source and mold it with his own, multiplying his powers exponentially and allowing him to achieve a pseudo-full transformation to whatever level of deity form he'd now assumed.

It was a realization that had Set grit her teeth nervously and take a stance. "This is bad. He's absorbed twenty thousand years worth of celestial energy and is now using it to supercharge all of his senses. That means he's become an incredibly dangerous adversary." She then narrowed her eyes even more when the glowing red man's scowl tightened on her position. "If I remember my Saiyan biology correctly, this form can only last for a certain amount of time. That means if I can get him to burn through all of this energy as quickly as possible, I should be able to defeat him!"

That was easier said than done. But if she was going to get through this conflict alive, then she was going to have to step up in this fight and give it all she had. "If I don't kill him before his body adapts to this new level of power, then I'm going to be in serious trouble."

Hell, she could be in trouble either way.

As far as she could tell, this boy was one of the most exceptionally gifted warriors she'd ever encountered as a deity. There was something about him that sent a chill up her spine, both in a good way and a bad way. Considering he was very much like her in terms of fighting prowess and skill, if she was to allow this battle to drag on for too long then she ran the risk of his body memorizing the celestial energy patterns, which would then allow him to fight at this level regardless of the type of ki running through his system.

By this point in time, as the God of Storms was facing down her enraged opponent, over in the pyramid across from them, the grounded Piccolo had momentarily regained consciousness. From his half-buried position in the stone and amidst the chaos upsetting the stability of the planet, the green skinned warrior caught a glimpse of what was happening down on the courtyard. The sight of his student standing atop the wide-open patio bathed in red had the Z-fighter tremble with shock, shortly before blacking out once again.

"G-Gohan…"

Fixing her glare on her foe, Set smirked. "Well then, handsome… what are you going to do now-" Just before she could even finish her question, she saw the demi-Saiyan launch himself from his place several dozen yards away and, in the form of a glowing red bolt, slammed a knee into her face.

The lightning fast blow caused a shockwave that parted the clouds above them and sent a ripple of air across the desert in all directions, shaking the countryside. The attack itself managed to knock the God of Storms off her feet and blasting through the air, her head cocked back and a look of sheer surprise slapped upon her mug.

The boy's movement also dispelled the gravity distortion in the air, allowing all of the rubble and chunks of earth orbiting his position to crash back down to the planet's surface.

After landing the brutally successful hit, Gohan speedily back flipped through the air and landed against the side of the pyramid they were battling on. Crouching against it momentarily, he then took aim at the airborne deity and launched himself at her with a frightening battle cry.

"YOU KILLED VIDEL!" the demi-Saiyan roared, speedily catching the fox woman by the jaw before driving her straight into the desert floor eighty stories below. However, instead of just crashing into the sand, the two of them went straight through it and the earth's crust below that. With a towering explosion of dust marking their entry, Gohan then began burrowing his opponent into the planet's surface and kept right on going for several miles.
His aura having dissipated, the pair blasted through layer after layer of the earth’s shell, easily reaching its mantle layer and beginning to plow through an ocean of lava. An ordinary being would’ve been incinerated the instant they hit the first signs of heat. But being the super powered warriors that they were, the two kept right on going as if the planet’s center didn’t even exist. In fact, using his opponent as a drill head or a battering ram, Gohan continued pushing his quarry through more and more of the planet’s numerous layers. Their forms began to pick up speed as they drew closer and closer to the core.

"How many innocent lives have you destroyed in your quest to take over the universe?! Huh? Millions?! BILLIONS?!” Gohan bellowed with his hand wrapped firmly around Set’s throat as they continued crashing through boiling hot oceans of magma. The goddess let out a cry of agony as they continued descending violently through earth's mantle. But even this failed to quell the man's rage as the red haired Super Saiyan God continued yelling at the woman. "I won't let you kill anymore, Set! This ends now!" His eyes widened and pupils dilated in rage, a rush of images of Videl flashing through his head as he literally screamed his threat at the stunned goddess beneath him. "I'M GOING TO RIP YOU APART!"

Teeth clenched and biting back the pain of her descent into what was quite literally hell, Set sneered at her opponent and barked, "Impertinent boy! LUMEN!" With a yell of effort, a blue aura exploded off of her body, allowing the vixen to blast out of Gohan's grip and rocket upwards in the form of a lightning bolt, leaving the teen to continue crashing through to the planet's core.

Looking behind him with a grunt of annoyance, Gohan hit the brakes, slamming his hands into the walls on either side of him and forcing himself to a grinding stop. The second his momentum ceased amidst the inferno of the planet's outer nucleus, the demi-Saiyan then sprang off of the floor he'd dug and began flying after his opponent.

Set blazed a path back to the ceiling of earth's lithosphere, her body glowing brilliantly like a flare as she glared back down the enormous hole her opponent had dug. As she got further and further out of reach of him, a wide grin formed across her face. "You'll never be able to catch me at this speed!"

She spoke too soon.

After flying at cruising velocity for a solid few seconds, the red haired Super Saiyan suddenly hit the accelerator and, powering up, blasted after the woman at an even more ridiculous rate. Red aura blazing around him like wild fire, Gohan rocketed went after the deity like a missile, catching her in a matter of milliseconds and, as her expression switched to one of disbelief, buried a punch straight into her stomach. The lunging uppercut landed with a deafening thunderclap, ripping the crust around them apart and causing Set to reel forward in shock.

Choking up blood, the fox goddess was then blasted topside, the pair exploding out of the desert floor in an explosion of rubble and debris. Their reappearance had Whis staring after them in shock as the pair ascended into the atmosphere.

Feeling the damage coursing through every fiber of her being, the burnt and battered Set roared in anger, "You think you can beat me?! WELL YOU'RE WRONG!" With a yell, the woman threw two feet forward and slammed a double kick into Gohan's stomach, sending the glowing Super Saiyan plummeting back towards the desert.

When the demi-Saiyan tucked up and spun, slowing his descent and landing safely atop the terrace of the pyramid, he looked towards the sky to see Set power up and blast into the stratosphere, leaving a vapor trail behind her.
"I am the master of darkness and chaos! The most powerful God in existence! I will not be bested, certainly not by some half-breed amateur like you!" The eyes of the anthropomorphic deity filled with paranoia and fury. "I know because I'm destined to recreate this universe! It's the reason I am still alive! Once I've defeated you, I will tear down the old regime governing this reality and create a new universe where any and all dreams are possible!" In the midst of her tirade, the goddess sent a barrage of ki rocketing down at her target with enough power to wipe the earth out a dozen times over. But Gohan, quick as ever, smacked the blasts away and effortlessly sent them soaring up into space. His efforts however only served to frustrate the goddess further, as Set's right hand ignited with blue fire and she began slashing it through the air in a series of random and indistinguishable symbols. "I COULDN'T CARE LESS WHAT HAPPENS TO FEEBLE MINDED FOOLS LIKE YOU!" After several more swipes with her hand, the vixen ended it with her arms raised, causing a blue flash of light to fill the sky behind her.

All of a sudden, emerging from the light like a titanic phantom, the space behind the God of Storms was ripped open. An eerie white glow then began gushing out of the crack and into the earth's atmosphere, causing the clouds to part violently. At first this didn't seem like anything to the people watching from below. But after seeing the gap widen even more so and feeling the energy of the entire cosmos begin to circulate around it, pennies started to drop all around with a series of horrible clangs.

Whis's eyes widened in horror. "Elysium Breaker? No, Set! DON'T!" The terrified trainer reeled forward to yell up at his student, pleading her to stop. "If you use that technique without a catalyst you'll suck this entire dimension into the void between universes! There will be nothing left! You'll destroy everything!"

A manic grin quickly formed across Set's face, "That's the idea, master!" An evil chuckle escaped her lips as the energy of the entire solar system started to build and circle around the rip in space. It was a feeling that had Gohan clench his fists tightly and grit his teeth as he listened to the woman's voice echo down towards them. "I'm going to kill two birds with one stone! Why should I waste punches on a primitive life form from a Class C planet when I can simply wipe the entire slate clean with a single-

"Shut up." Just as his opponent was in the middle of what he assumed to be an 'important' monologue, Gohan's red aura suddenly exploded off of his body at a fiercer rate, before he vanished in a flash of golden light. A moment later, a deafening 'crack' rang out across the planet when his fist promptly impaled Set's chest a second time and had her reeling forward in shock, the teen teleporting directly up to her and burying a blow right into her solar plexus. If the power shot didn't make her chuck her guts up right then and there, then it certainly did its job in stopping her technique from being fully executed.

The moment Gohan buried his knuckles into his opponent's gut, the tear in the universe behind Set closed up and a smirk formed on the demi-Saiyan's face.

"Don't waste time on such flamboyant moves. They leave you wide open," the teen spoke, removing his fist from her stomach to let the woman curl forward and grip her abs painfully. Upon which he cupped his hands overhead and, with a loud yell of anger, drove a hammer blow straight into the vixen's back, sending her plummeting to the planet's surface. A couple seconds later, the fox crash landed in the middle of the desert, shaking the continent with her impact and sending sand hurtling into the air. The Saiyan grunted as he looked down, "Who's the amateur now?"

Dropping from the sky to join her, Gohan landed softly outside of the crater his opponent had formed. His aura fading, the red haired young warrior watched and waited with an intense glare in play to see what'd happened to his adversary. Sure enough, after a few seconds of tense silence, the ground around him began to tremble and the atmosphere became filled with the embers of a growing energy signature.

Just as the tremors were becoming more and more violent, a pillar of blue fire suddenly gushed out of the center of the hole and blasted into the sky, with a dark silhouette slowly rising up in the heart of the column. When it suspended itself above the ground and before the demi-Saiyan, the tower of fire enveloping it dispelled, revealing an incredibly ticked off looking goddess inside of it.

As soon as her hate-filled eyes glued back onto the earthling before her, the vixen clicked her tongue irritably and cracked her neck. "You know what… fuck it. I'm going to enjoy this." Her frown deepening, the woman then gave a low grunt as her blue aura burst up around her, accompanied by a storm of electricity. The blast of her energy engulfing her body sent a gale in all directions, which quickly transformed into a cyclone when she achieved maximum power. As soon as her output stabilized, Set bared her fangs menacingly at her foe. "Don't act so smug just because you think you've gained the upper hand. I'm going to take that cute face of yours and pound it into the ground until it's just a muddy stain on the sole of my foot."

Gohan scoffed, "I'd like to see you try." He then took a step back and gestured for the woman to bring it on. "Come and get me."

The goddess leered excitedly, "With pleasure."

Then, in the blink of an eye, the pair powered up and rocketed into the sky, taking off from the ground and leaving the earth in the form of two pillars of red and blue light. Whis, still tied up and hanging in the air, watched the pair leave the planet until they were well and truly out of sight, yet continued to follow the battle with his other senses.

While Gohan and Set flew safely off of the planet, across the great plains of the desert where Vegeta and Zangya had been sent on a one-way flight, the latter of the two fighters was just regaining consciousness. Battered and covered in dozens of cuts and bruises, the wounded Hera pulled herself out of the ditch she'd formed and back onto the surface of the dunes. Coughing and sputtering on the sand that had gotten into her mouth, the woman peered up through a blurry vision to see what the hell was going on.

Stretching out her ki reading ability, the Z-fighter felt a whole bunch of things at once. For one, the rest of her team was down, and both her best friend and the dog bitch were no longer on the planet's surface. Zangya knew this much because she couldn't see anything over on the pyramid in the distance except for the poor bastard that was tied up and floating in the air. However, while she did sense everybody else was still in the area alive and kicking, she suddenly noticed something else that instantly had all her alarm bells go off.

Following the barely registering ki signature she'd picked up to its source, she quickly spotted Videl lying over on the terrace of the pyramid a full kilometer away. Even though she could barely see through her messed up vision and the blood dribbling down her face, her other extra sensory capabilities allowed her a much better scope of the situation. When she detected the girl's body stationed there with her life force ebbing away little by little, the Hera knew instantly that something was wrong and looked up in panic.

"Videl… no…" Mustering all the strength that she could, Zangya pulled herself out of the mountain of sand and floated all the way back to the pyramid.

Due to all the damage she'd suffered at the hands of the goddess, it was taking everything she had just to stop from dropping out of the sky.
When she eventually arrived on the terrace, the blue woman stumbled forward and collapsed next to the fallen teenager. After seeing the state she was in and the hole in her stomach, the orange haired fighter wasted no time in reaching for the girl's shorts and digging into her side pockets.

"Come on… I know you had more than one. I saw it. Please be here… please be here..." Zangya whispered, her eyes shimmering with desperation as she hurriedly rummaged through the tight sleeve. Withdrawing her hand a few seconds later, relief and joy quickly washed through the Hera, "Yes. Oh, sweet Kai, thank you." As she thought, the girl still had a Senzu bean on her. Grinning through a half-lidded gaze, the Z-fighter promptly elevated the teen and pushed the bean between her lips. "Come on Videl… swallow it. Don't quit on me now, babe…"

She was the toughest girl she knew. There was no way a shot to the chest was going to be enough to put this human down.

Zangya hoped, no… she knew if anyone was strong enough to pull through a situation like this, it was Videl…

XXX

Encased in their respective auras, both Gohan and Set blazed two parallel trails away from the earth. Easily breaking out of its stratosphere and entering the thermosphere in a matter of moments, the pair then began a running battle across the solar system. When the two of them streaked past the moon, performing a variety of impressive aerial maneuvers and spins, the super powered warriors then rushed each other and began trading hits at close range.

Yelling out at the top of her lungs, Set lunged at the boy with a left overhand, the blow connecting with a deafening crack before the two of them began circling each other at high speed. Moving in every so often to trade blows, the pair continued their dance across the heavens until, in the blink of an eye, they left the solar system far behind and blasted further into space. Shockwaves rang out like fireworks as they hammered away at each other, with the God of Storm attempting to land a hook until Gohan ducked under it and drove a side kick into her stomach. This then earned him an elbow across the face before he countered with a right cross, sending his opponent blasting out of the spiral arm of the Milky Way and further into the vacuum.

As soon as he set her up, the glowing red fighter rocketed after her and nailed her in the side with another kick, sending her spinning to another part of space altogether.

The red bolt chased after the out of control blue one, cutting her off with a shot to the back and sending her in another direction entirely. This quickly led into another game of tag as the pair blasted further into the cosmos. Clocking speeds well above what was mathematically possible, the duo passed by dozens of other galaxies towards a green nebula far in the distance.

Arriving at a star system resembling the Sombrero Galaxy floating within throwing distance of the brilliant dust cloud, the pair rocketed towards it at insane speeds. The duo remained locked in epic combat as they exchanged hits while spinning into the outer dust lanes of the celestial region, where Set ended up kicking Gohan through an enormous cloud of dust and straight through to the other side. When she raced around to cut him off, the demi-Saiyan spun on the spot and greeted her with a kick across the face, which she did so as well. Their blows collided with an ear-splitting shockwave and the force of a supernova, breaking up the dense layer of cloud behind them and clearing the vacuum.

When the pair spun away, they quickly halted in midflight and returned to normal positions. Floating amidst a cluster of moons orbiting an enormous gaseous giant, with a star burning brightly in the distance, Gohan and Set took that opportunity to regain their bearings.
Staring each other down, Set spat the blood out of her mouth while Gohan wiped the trickle out of the corner of his. Both now bearing mirroring battle wounds, they then regarded the other with seriousness and caution.

A smile slowly formed on Set's face, "I can't tell you how long it's been since the last time I fought a battle like this one. In the eighty million years I've held a position as a God of this universe, I haven't faced a single opponent worth calling a challenge. Even those who were in the same league as me couldn't measure up to the level that I desired. Meeting you today is a refreshing change of pace."

Narrowing his eyes on the woman, Gohan frowned, "I wouldn't get too comfortable if I were you. You killed my best friend… so don't expect me to show you any mercy or pay you any kind of compliments."

"That much is a given," the goddess replied, tilting her head in his direction as her blue aura fluctuated at its usual rate, "I will not try to argue. You have every right to hate me for what I did. After all, I too have experienced the same pains that you've felt. Serving as a guardian of this universe requires a great deal of sacrifice, especially from those chosen to be its deities. You and I share quite a bit of common ground in that respect."

The demi-Saiyan grunted, "That's the only thing we have in common with each other. Nothing else."

A chuckle came from the vixen as her tail wagged behind her, "Are you sure about that? Why don't we keep things civil between us for a couple more minutes and try to find out more about each other? If we keep this up, I'm sure you and I will be able to find out some interesting things about how the other person ticks… maybe more." She then winked playfully in his direction.

Gohan immediately smirked in response, "Sorry… but I have no intention of talking to you for any longer than I have to." His fist then clenched tightly, a bolt of lightning shooting off of him and striking one of the moons surrounding them. The impact of the expulsion of energy destroyed the satellite effortlessly, turning it into a cloud of rubble. "I'm here to get you back for what you did to my friends and that's that. There is no in between."

Snorting, the fox deity nodded, "I figured you would say something like that. Alright then…"

An earsplitting shockwave exploded off of them from their point of impact, shattering nearby asteroids and pushing planets apart. The blast even wiped out an unfortunate moon that happened to be orbiting too close to the anomaly, scattering it across the vacuum in a wave of debris. Moments later, more thunderclaps began ringing out as both Gohan and Set battled each other across the foreign solar system, barreling around the nearby gaseous giant before rocketing towards a neighboring terrestrial world covered in a dark grey, mountainous surface.

Continuing to intersect one another along a sweeping path of their region, Gohan soon managed to pull ahead of his opponent, putting some distance between himself and her.

Spinning around, the glowing red Saiyan narrowed his eyes when he saw Set's blue form blasting towards him, a cry of fury leaving her lips. Telegraphing her approach, the young warrior crouched down before leaping over the goddess when she swung at him with a punch, which he avoided and swiftly positioned himself above her. Before she had time to turn around, Gohan dove towards her feet first, giving a loud battle cry and driving a flying side kick into her face. The blow landed with an earthshaking ‘boom’, cocking her head to the side and sending spit flying out of her mouth.

Upon landing the hit, the demi-Saiyan then threw a right roundhouse kick into her chest, causing another thunderclap that sent Set plummeting towards the terrestrial planet below.

The woman's body ignited slightly when she broke through a few levels of its atmosphere, only to spin to a stop just short of the stratosphere. As soon as her momentum ceased, the vixen took aim at the Super Saiyan God above her. Then, in a blur of movement, she charged up at him. Her form phased out on approach, putting her in front of Gohan in the blink of an eye.

A series of sonic booms began ringing out as Set unleashed the mother of all beat downs upon her opponent, her fists crashing across the demi-Saiyan's body again and again. The red haired warrior found his head and torso being smacked around this way and that as the goddess leisurely mashed the stuffing out of him, an eager smile framing the vixen's face. This vicious onslaught continued for a full minute, with Set stopping only for a moment to deliver a series of merciless kicks to her target's mug before proceeding with the bombardment once again. Then, after burying a punch into his stomach, the goddess speedily flipped over Gohan's stricken form and drove a kick straight into his back.

Her blow sent the teen rocketing towards the planet below, his form burning up through the atmosphere before colliding with the face of it like a comet. His impact generated a massive explosion reminiscent of a scene taken straight out of 'Deep Impact', the force of his landing causing ripples across the planet's surface.

Not one to miss out on an opportunity, her target's catastrophic landing allowed the orbiting Set to bring her hand overhead and, with a bellowing roar, fired a golden blast straight into the world's surface. "Stella Hastam!"

The attack struck the exact same spot Gohan had landed, causing the planet to fracture with countless red cracks across its crust, a split second before the entire orb went up in a colossal explosion.

Smirking at the fireball as it filled the cosmos with a blinding light with debris scattering in all directions, Set then watched as chunks of the planet's rubble flew at her from the center of the cataclysm. At first she thought it was nothing, but when she saw one of the massive rocks explode and Gohan come flying out of it, her immediate reaction was her eyes widening before a punch slammed across her face.

The surprise hook sent the girl spiraling towards another part of the solar system. Crashing through a moon and shattering it on the way out the other side, the God of Storms quickly flipped herself upright and stopped in her tracks. Gritting her teeth towards the planet still exploding in the distance, she quickly spotted the glowing red form of her foe arcing towards her and cocked her hand back.

Thrusting it forward, the woman shouted and unleashed a barrage of energy blasts, which scattered and streaked towards their target from different angles.

Gohan's form darted through the salvo in a blur; avoiding the projectiles and watching them scatter across the outer rim of the galaxy to destroy hundreds of stars in the distance. After speedily evading the assault, the winded warrior teleported in a flash of golden light and reappeared directly in front of Set.
Seeing her hand held up at his face, the demi-Saiyan smacked it upwards, causing her to unleash her ki blast prematurely and towards another distant collection of star systems, which she inadvertently mowed through with her beam. Gohan then proceeded to uncork a beating on the goddess, smacking her around just as she had done to him before. After landing several murderous blows across her body, stunning the woman at their ferocity, the teen then threw his body back and double-kicked her in the stomach, sending his foe hurtling over the gaseous giant behind her.

As Set's form was sent spinning through the vacuum, Gohan back flipped and, upon taking aim, threw his hand forward and unleashed a powerful blue blast from his palm. "Flash Madan!" The attack exploded from his hand and rocketed towards his target like a spear surrounded by golden bolts of lightning. However, instead of hitting its target head on, it slammed into her side and knocked the woman plummeting into the gaseous giant's atmosphere, punching her straight through the planet and causing it to implode on itself.

Gohan's attack meanwhile streaked off into the distance, tearing past countless systems before eventually striking a neighboring galaxy. The explosion that resulted was catastrophic, wiping out the entire sector in a blinding orange light. The rings of the explosion rippled outwards to wipe out any stray stars or planets that happened to be in the vicinity.

Bringing his hand back, the demi-Saiyan cursed, "Damn it. I missed." His aim was only off by a few inches. If his attack had hit dead on, he would've caused his opponent some serious damage.

However, while it seemed like it'd done nothing, as the gaseous giant in front of him continued to explode, a blue streak of light shot out from behind it and streaked towards him. A split second later, a battered and thoroughly pissed off Set charged towards the confused looking Gohan and nailed him in the face with a haymaker, sending the boy barreling into the distance. After which she gave chase, her opponent recovering quickly from the blow and meeting her head to head.

Their forms tore a path of destruction across the galaxy they were in towards its center, blowing past thousands of stars and planets, while wiping out dozens more in the process. Explosions the size of supernovas filled the skies as entire solar systems were wiped from existence, with the duo continuing to battle it out like there was no tomorrow. Despite it being scientifically impossible, the shockwaves of their attacks could be heard echoing all across the cosmos, the force of which shattered moons and cracked planets from merely being in close proximity of every blast.

More thunderclaps rang out when Gohan and Set dueled across the heavens, bouncing from star to star. Eventually the pair met once again, their hands locking in a grappling match before the demi-Saiyan promptly kicked the Dio-jin towards another planet. The goddess spiraled around it, her form quickly recovering in mid-flight and allowing her to arc safely around the terrestrial orb. The warrior from earth pursued her, blazing a trail of red light in his wake while his opponent laid a respective purple trail to follow as she shot off into the distance.

Turning around, Set suddenly tucked up and threw herself into a spin. Gohan spotted this when he advanced on his adversary and by the time he realized what she was doing, it was too late.

Stopping her spin by thrusting her limbs outwards, the goddess snarled as she focused her energy into her palms before slamming them together. Then, with a bellowing howl, the woman fired a powerful Kiai at her target.

Gohan only had enough time to gawk in shock before he was hit full on by the invisible blast and sent rocketing back. The repulsive shockwave was so powerful it not only knocked the demi-Saiyan flying, it wiped out an entire row of stars behind him, disintegrating several hundred planets at the same time.
This anomaly could be seen from a distance as an entire collection of lights making up the galaxy going out one after the other in rapid succession, like a blackout in a city as seen from orbit.

The force of the blast did its trick in sending the demi-Saiyan barreling into the distance. When he managed to skid to a stop in the midst of the vacuum, he was just about to lock his sights back onto his foe until Set teleported into his blind spot and nailed him in the side with a wicked flying kick. This blow sent Gohan spinning to another part of the galaxy altogether, where his ethereal form crash landed on a massive terrestrial world several dozen times larger than earth billions of miles on the other side of the galaxy.

Bouncing over the planet's rocky surface for several seconds, the teen eventually flipped himself back to his feet and slid to a stop, digging his hand into the ground to halt his momentum. Gritting his teeth, Gohan swiftly looked up to see whether his opponent had decided to follow him.

Much to his shock, instead of seeing the glowing form of his adversary barreling towards him, his entire field of vision was blocked out by the shadow of one of the planet's three moons plummeting in his direction. The sight of it burning up through the atmosphere had the teen assume a defensive stance. But the instant he threw up his guard, the satellite's descent towards his position sped up.

Set, holding the moon from below with one hand while her aura burned brightly around her, gave a loud battle cry as she threw the massive sphere of rock straight at her target. With a deafening clap on impact, the satellite collided with the planetoid, not only burying Gohan under millions of tons of rock, but causing the planet's surface to cave in.

The collision between the two spheres was catastrophic, resulting in a blast of rubble and fire that rippled out in all directions. What followed shortly afterwards was both worlds shattering and imploding on themselves, disintegrating any satellites that happened to be in their vicinity. However, just as the two planets were beginning to go up in flames, the observing Set balked in shock when she saw multiple golden blasts shoot out from the impact point of the two planetoids in all directions before arcing towards her position.

Holding up her guard, the goddess speedily deflected them, sending the barrage shooting off across the cosmos. As soon as she blocked the last one though, a red bolt shot through the disintegrating moon she'd thrown and slammed headlong into her. This was actually Gohan tackling the goddess from the front and sending them both rocketing towards the solar system's sun. The pair's auras spiraled through the vacuum, loud shockwaves ringing out as Set drove a few elbows into her opponent's back, only for the teen half-breed to thrust multiple knees into her stomach.

The grappling fighters continued to barrel through space, slamming into two other planets along the way, going through them, and destroying them completely. With Set being the one pushed into the rocky worlds, the woman suffered the brunt of the punishment as she burst out the other side covered in dust and debris.

"Gah! Ugh! Damn it!" the vixen shouted, driving another elbow into the boy's back before kneeling him in the stomach, "Ugh! Let go of me, you bastard!" She then balked when the teen grabbed hold of her even tighter, pressing his face into her ample chest but inadvertently gripping her backside. "AAGH! You beast! I told you to let go of me!" She then grabbed his head and tried to push him off.

Palm in his face, Gohan snarled, "Make me!" He then cocked back his fist and proceeded to slam punches across his opponent's mug while his other arm remained tightly wrapped around her waist.

More blows reverberated across the vacuum when the pair began descending towards the nearby sun. The temperature climbing the closer they came to it, both Saiyan and Dio-jin remained locked in an epic brawl as they spiraled towards the blinding inferno. At first Set managed to gain the upper hand by grabbing the teen's neck and proceeding to drive multiple hooks across his cheek. But on her last swing, she overshot, allowing Gohan to get around her and put her in an arm lock. Then, with a mighty bellow, the teen pushed Set the rest of the way towards the star and drove her face straight into the sun's surface.

The goddess cried out as her face was literally dragged across Satan's barbeque, fire and molten waves rushing past her at an insane speed as Gohan tore a path around the massive ball of plasma. Yelling out in fury despite being in close proximity himself, the demi-Saiyan continued to push his foe through the inferno of the mass while holding her arm and head tightly in his grip, their auras providing them some protection against the celestial body. With the way the teen was forcing his foe into the star's ocean of fire, if he kept this up he was certain he'd be able to rip her face clean off.

However, unwilling to let it end with her fur being torn out by the roots, the enraged Set gave a roar of anger and, powering up, managed to force herself off of the sun's facade. With a great deal of effort, she swiftly turned around and elbowed Gohan in the face, prompting him to let go and freeing her from his vice-like grip. Thanks to the boy using her profile as a sled, half of her face had suffered some serious burns and bruising. But thanks to her durability as a goddess, they were only superficial wounds that were certain to heal over time.

Extremely ticked off, the woman slammed her feet into the sun's surface and began to skate backwards across the firestorm, while at the same time being pursued by her enemy. Taking aim, the vixen lobbed a few energy spheres his way, only for him to dodge them and sprint after her across the burning ocean, driving a blow into her face before she countered with a kick to his side. After maneuvering around columns of fire and prominences jutting out of the sun's surface, Set then cranked it into high gear and rocketed away from the star with a burst of blue energy. His aura exploding off of him at a much fiercer rate as well, Gohan gave chase to his enemy, the pair leaving the sun far behind.

Flying to another part of the galaxy, the pair attempted to outgun each other with their speed. But after a few seconds of playing cat and mouse, the demi-Saiyan managed to cut Set off and blindside her with a shoulder tackle. He slammed her in the side and sent her spinning off in another direction, allowing him to give chase.

Growling in frustration at being intercepted so easily, the fox deity spun about in mid-flight and watched her opponent come charging after her. Fists clenching tightly, Set then cracked open a hand and began gathering energy into a sphere, which quickly took the form of black matter surrounded by orange fire. "Try and dodge this, you piece of shit!" After concentrating an enormous amount of energy above her palm, the goddess used her other one to stabilize it and, after compressing the sphere even more so that it was the size of a tennis ball, took aim at her target and yelled. "Disappear into oblivion! Black Hole!" Set thrust her hand forward, pitching the black sphere straight towards her adversary.

Gohan, spotting the approaching attack, skidded to a stop and attempted to avoid it. But the attack tracked him and slammed into his stomach, propelling him in the opposite direction at a ridiculous speed.

Trapped against the enormous gravitational pull of the ball of matter, the demi-Saiyan was unable to do anything when, all of a sudden, the black sphere began drawing in everything around it. In a matter of seconds, asteroids, moons and planets of all shapes and sizes were yanked towards Gohan's position and crashed together one after the other. The incredible suction power of the attack was so great that it began mashing the planets together into a single, uneven mass, with even more space debris coming in by the second.

Feeling the crushing pressure of billions of tons of matter pushing down on him from all sides, the thoroughly trapped Saiyan gritted his teeth angrily as the black orb at his chest threatened to crush him into oblivion. "I… can’t… let it… end!" Gohan growled while bolts of red lightning ran up and down his body. With the weight of a dozen worlds pressing down on him, it was easy to see how much pain this attack was causing him, "I can't! Not now!"

As the attack continued to draw in planets at high speed, including a nearby sun which began to break apart, Set, maintaining her position in the vacuum, grinned manically and took aim with her finger. "There's no getting out of this! It's over!" Focusing her energy and producing a bright orange glow from the tip, the woman allowed for a moment to catch her breath before letting loose her attack. "Die!" She then unleashed a powerful beam from her finger, sending it rocketing towards the growing collection of planets and rubble, and piercing it effortlessly.

His teeth clenching in rage as he sensed the attack burrowing towards him, Gohan's eyes then flickered before, spurred on by the images of Videl's death, as well as the demise of his friends and his home, the demi-Saiyan curled up, took a deep breath, and threw his head back with a mighty howl. "NO! I WON'T LET YOU DESTROY MY WOOOOOOOOOOOOOOOOOOOOOOORL!" His red aura exploded from his body with multiple shockwaves, dispelling the black hole pressed into his chest, disintegrating the rocks crushing him, and repelling Set's blast effortlessly. Energy skyrocketing, his aura not only shot through the cracks between the spherical bodies pressing tightly together, it also freed him from the prison of rubble and magma.

"RAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAA.

Set had to shield herself when the shockwaves from the teen's outburst rippled out from the mash of planets and struck her like a tsunami, causing her eyes to widen in shock.

Aura blazing like a strobe, Gohan tore through the surrounding layers of rock and mantle. Using his senses to mark a path, he tunneled his way out of the coffin of spheres at high speed and exited its northernmost pole in a spectacular shower of lava and rubble. As the body of planets began to collapse on themselves, the teen kicked his thrusters into action and streaked towards Set in a blur. With a loud battle cry he crashed into her with a punch, slamming it across her face and knocking the goddess senseless.

The teen chased after her, laying into the vixen's body with multiple blows until his kick was blocked by a well-timed check. After that the pair immediately began trading shots, more shockwaves reverberating throughout the heavens as they dueled at speeds no other warrior could reach. Eventually breaking off, Set gained some distance and, thrusting her hand out, launched a barrage of multiple ki blasts towards her target. The bombardment chased Gohan across the outer rim of the galaxy, blasting out planets and stars one after the other before the demi-Saiyan hit the accelerator and arced towards Set like a missile.

As he converged on her, avoiding the hail of blasts, he then thrust both hands forward and unleashed a salvo of his own. The blue attacks hurled by the Super Saiyan intercepted the golden ones, colliding in the center and exploding with enough force it took out another chunk of the galaxy they were in.

With the sector collapsing around them and becoming engulfed in super nova sized explosions, Set quickly bailed on her attempt to shoot down the teen and shot off into the cosmos. Gohan sent a hail of ki blasts after her, but when the deity arced around and effectively avoided the attacks that exploded uselessly in the distance, the demi-Saiyan clicked his tongue irritably.
"Damn mosquito." Sucking it in, Gohan held his hands outwards and took aim. Then, after gathering a substantial amount of energy, he slapped them together with a loud 'clap'. "Hold still!"

All of a sudden, while Set was speedily flying away from her adversary, the woman gave a yelp of surprise when a transparent wall of energy formed on either side of her, before slamming together and sealing her in a red pane of glass. Flattened inside the powerful seal, the startled vixen was unable to do anything when Gohan teleported directly beside her and, with a shout, punched the glass and shattered it into thousands of pieces.

When the shards scattered, they spilled out multiple purple streams of ki that quickly converged around a single point and reformed into the God of Storms. Gasping in shock with blood trickling down her face, the woman's eyes snapped in the direction of her enemy in bewilderment.

"He's fucking crazy!" Alarmed at how proficiently the Saiyan was using his celestial ki, the woman decided to get some more distance and quickly teleported in a puff of black smoke.

Appearing well outside of the galaxy they were fighting in so that she could see the entire star system all the way to its center, Set took aim with her hands before beginning to blast the shit out of it. "Go to hell, you prick!" Her hands thrust out one after the other, unleashing a hail of powerful orange energy spheres towards the area Gohan was in and began mercilessly decimating it.

Reacting instantly, the demi-Saiyan powered up and shot across the spiral galaxy, avoiding the salvo of attacks that started taking out stars by the droves.

From a distance, as Set chased her target with her barrage of Continuous Energy Bullets, countless sphere shaped explosions ripped across the cluster of systems until there was no galaxy left. With the explosions dying out, leaving nothing but dust and debris in the attack's wake, the goddess continued lobbing blasts after the retreating demi-Saiyan, who streaked past a quasar that got caught in the crossfire and became disintegrated in a similar manner to the galaxy that'd served as their battleground.

Just as another one was being subjected to the assault, the fox deity snarled. "Where do you think you're going?!!" Cupping her hands in front of her, Set yelled out at the top of her lungs and unleashed a powerful beam of golden energy towards the large irregular galaxy the teen had flown into. "DISAPPEAR!" The attack struck its center in the blink of an eye and engulfed the entire star system in a massive hyper nova that wiped out the entire area effortlessly.

The blast was so enormous and so bright that it could easily be seen from other nearby clusters.

Lowering her arms, the woman huffed excitedly as she began searching for her opponent, who had seemingly disappeared amidst the chaos of her assault. But just as she was beginning to hone in on his position, her eyes widened in shock before snapping around to see his form rematerialize out of golden photons of light directly behind her and charge at her with a battle roar.

In the blink of an eye, the young warrior shot past her, hitting her with a running blow that knocked her back and had her cough up blood.

Expression conveying shock and disbelief, Set then glared after her target. Blue aura springing up around her, the goddess's eyes shone a bright red before, with a bellow of rage, Set threw her limbs out and unleashed a storm of countless energy blasts from her body. The attack indiscriminately scattered, not only forcing Gohan to dodge more erratically, but also peppering and taking out several other bodies in the super cluster. Galaxies were either wiped out or suffered extreme damaged as the enraged goddess let loose all of her pent up anger and frustration upon the quadrant, with the assault soon dying off and leaving her floating in place panting heavily, but ultimately unsatisfied.

Gritting her teeth, the woman then looked to her right to see her adversary teleport into view and swing up at her with a punch. She quickly cocked back her fist and thrust in with a counter, only for her fist to pass through an after image. Before she could withdraw it, a punch from below knocked her upwards, allowing Gohan to get around her stunned form and kick her in the side. The blow produced an earsplitting shockwave and sent Set's body barreling across the sector.

The force of the attack knocked Set for a loop, sending her into a ragdoll like spin that had her passing galaxies left and right. Eventually the woman managed to halt her flight with a quick burst of ki, stopping her dead and allowing her to descend to the surface of a large moon.

As she descended from her flight, bolts of blue lightning began shooting off of her and into space, followed by a black aura that started to bleed out of her pores. A murderous look appearing across her face, the fox goddess then snapped her eyes towards a distant red galaxy shining like a beacon against the backdrop of infinite stars. After considering it for several seconds, her gaze quickly shifted back to her distant target. "Let's see you try and block this." Holding her left hand out to the star cluster as her body became incased in black flames, the entire spiral system became extinguished and all of its energy was sucked into her palm. "My ultimate move. There's not a creature alive, God or Demon, which can withstand an attack of this magnitude!"

As her left hand became filled with glowing red energy from the galaxy, Set then threw her right hand out and drew on the energy from a nearby quasar, taking its entire form and compressing it into her palm. The energy from both the celestial bodies became absorbed into her palms faster than the laws of physics permitted and, once she'd compressed the energy of two galaxies into a red and blue sphere, she mashed them together in front of her and molded it into a purple, basketball sized ball of pulsing energy.

With bolts of blue lightning shooting off of her shadowy form, the enraged goddess snarled and took aim at the cosmos in front of her.

Landing on an enormous terrestrial planet several galaxies away, Gohan looked across in alarm when he sensed the enormous build-up of energy in the distance. After seeing two separate celestial masses get sucked into a single point and watching that source burn brightly on the horizon, the demi-Saiyan gritted his teeth and took a stance.

"Whoa, whoa, whoa... wait just a damn second," Gohan murmured, eyes wide in horror as beads of sweat ran down his face. "Does she plan on firing that at me? The way she's distorting and altering the energy of those quasars, she's built up enough power to wipe out half the quadrant with one shot!" She was compressing several galaxies worth of ki into a single sphere, warping the laws of physics with enough energy to simulate her own big bang.

It seemed impossible in theory, but the laws of earth's physics didn't apply to her. Right now, the goddess was altering existing physics and changing it to suit her means, producing enough energy for an attack that had the potential to wipe out a significant portion of the universe. Hell, the amount of energy she was holding right now was almost comparable to the dawn of creation.

This was definitely not good.

Clenching his jaw tightly and powering up, Gohan cupped his hands beside him and began focusing his energy. "Fuck! Nothing ventured, nothing gained!" If he didn't match a counter to this attack, then he could kiss the entire Northern Quadrant goodbye. So, maxing out whatever power he had and drawing on energy from his surroundings, the teenager produced a massive blue sphere of ki between his palms and continued pouring all the energy he could into it.
With red bolts of electricity streaming off of his glowing form, the young Super Saiyan was producing so much power that the entire planet he was standing on began to shake and crack, with the landscape crumbling under the sheer amount of energy being built up. Gravity shifted drastically once more, with every chunk of land and satellite in the vicinity beginning to orbit his position. Even the planets that were once traversing a path around the nearest star shifted and began orbiting around him.

Expression scrunched up tightly, Gohan felt all the muscles in his body screaming at him in protest as the enormous amount of energy he was producing pulsed and burned between his hands. Blood beginning to drip out of his nose with the amount of ki he was trying to compress, the half-Saiyan pushed on, determined to stop his opponent at any cost. "Come on, body! Don't quit on me now!"

His aura blasting out at an even fiercer rate, the gutsy warrior began to chant. "Kaaa…. Meee…"

With her own body trembling violently and blood beginning to trickle out of every orifice on her face, Set grinned excitedly as she glared across the cosmos towards her opponent in the distance. "Yes! That's it! That's exactly what I want to see! Wow… what power!" the woman barked, thrilled that she was finally able to meet an enemy who could match her blow for blow. "You are, by far, the greatest opponent I have ever faced! Kai, I love that no-die-attitude! You are absolutely incredible!" She then laughed as she threw her hands above her head, the purple sphere's light intensifying and the power in it increasing several times over. "It's a shame it has to end now! I was planning on using this blast to recreate the universe in my image, but you will do just fine, handsome!"

Gohan, hearing her loud and clear via his telepathic connection to her, gritted his teeth as his eyes began to bleed. "Haaa… Meee!" Energy pouring in from the surrounding stars, a loud clap of thunder rang out as the entire planet he was on splintered. The aura blazing from his body pulsed as brightly as a quasar, flashing across the entire galaxy he was in while the energy in his palms gained stability.

In a matter of seconds, he was ready.

On the other side of the spectrum, so was his opponent.

Pulling her arms back, Set roared out at the top of her lungs. "Let's see which of us cracks first! CELESTIAL SPEAR: INFINITY BIG BANG STORM!" Then, all at once, she unleashed the largest blast ever conceived by a living organism, which left her hands in a blinding flash of light that could be seen from every corner of the quadrant. "BURN IN THE EVERLASTING HELLFIRES OF CREATION! BE UTTERLY ANNIHILATED! RIGHT DOWN TO THE VERY LAST ATOM!"

A deafening howl rang out across the cosmos when a bright, purple and green blast exploded from her palms and rocketed towards the distant galaxy. The attack leaving her palms was so big and so vast that it literally dwarfed the quasars in their sector by several times. They were like pebbles to a wave. In Gohan's eyes, the blast took the form of a massive wall of energy with the destructive potential to invert the entire face of the universe and blast a hole between dimensions.

However, not one to give up without a fight, the demi-Saiyan bucked up and, with a bellowing roar of his own, launched his attack at the approaching tidal wave.

"HAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAA!

A gargantuan blue beam left Gohan's hands with a thunderous howl, rocketing towards the approaching tempest and hitting it head on. The impact between the two was gigantic, generating a sphere in the center so large it swallowed up several galaxies and quasars that were too close to the fire and disintegrated them. The impact also created a repulsive shockwave that pushed many others in the vicinity out of the way, allowing the pair to clash in the biggest tug-of-war battle in history.

Both blasts drilled into each other like opposing vortexes, twisting and warping the very fabric of reality in its center. In the central mass being produced by the attacks, countless galaxies were born, grown, and destroyed all at once, creating explosion after explosion with enough force that the entire quadrant trembled. Though this part of the universe so close to earth remained devoid of life, all across the cosmos civilizations turned to the skies and saw the energy clash taking place before their very eyes.

The clash was so vast that the display was almost surreal.

From where Whis remained suspended on the terrace back on earth, as the attendant stared up at the sky he could literally see the two blasts launched by both warriors crashing into each other at infinitum, as if the battle itself was taking place in the earth's stratosphere. In reality, the fight was taking place billions of light years away, defying all the laws of reality. The sight of it had the man gawking in both awe and terror.

One of them had to give way eventually. But before that, you could bet that more destruction was sure to follow in the wake of this epic struggle.

XXX

(Meanwhile)

Up in Otherworld, the entire community currently living on Grand Kai's planet had stopped everything they were doing to watch the catastrophic events that were taking place down in the universe below. Across the sweeping magnificence of the planet where the greatest warriors in history came to train and study under the overseers of creation, every single fighter present could be seen standing in the open fields with their eyes shut as their teachers, the four Kais, hooked them up to the fight that was quickly capturing the attention of the entire universe.

Normally a battle down in the land of the living wouldn't have garnered so much interest. However, after it was discovered by the ever watchful North Kai himself that the God of Storms Set had been awakened from her tomb, he quickly relayed the events of the catastrophe to his fellow Kais, who then proceeded to inform their students of the chaos that was taking place. From the way they could see the events were progressing, it was an absolute possibility that if they weren't sitting in a completely different dimension, every single one of them would be able to feel the tremors of the battle raging on between the two titans.

Hell they didn't even need to be there to cringe at every single blow that landed. When all of it eventually boiled down to a quadrant-wide tug-of-war match, everyone across the netherworlds held their breaths and waited to see who would emerge victorious.

For the four Kais standing in the same patch of field as their disciples with their fists and teeth clenched, they were hoping that it would be the son of their resident Saiyan.

"Holy free holies, are you watching this?" the blonde East Kai with the wide-rimmed hat spoke up, her voice stammering nervously.

"My glasses haven't fogged up yet so… yeah… I still am," the tall, pink-skinned South Kai also spoke up, sweat breaking out over his face as all of his students behind him murmured anxiously, the battle escalating at an alarming rate.

If they watched closely they could see entire worlds breaking apart as the cyclone of two opposing energies grew even larger.

West Kai swallowed nervously as he looked over in North Kai's direction to see his colleague standing there with his number one student's hand pressed into his back. "Hey… d-do you think that Gohan boy has a chance against her? I mean, between him and the dog woman, I don't really think-

"Of course he has a chance!" Goku shouted as sweat poured down his face. Fists clenching tightly as he watched the beam struggle intensify, the man lowered his head and spoke up once again, his voice laced with seriousness and determination, "He's my son! There's no way Gohan will lose to her!"

The fury and confidence in the man's words had the short, purple guardian take a step back and murmur uneasily, "A-Alright. If you say so." He quickly turned back to the battle and shut his eyes. "I mean… this is Set we're talking about… the goddess of darkness and storms, and the most powerful force in the universe. Forgive me if I'm sounding a bit dicky about the whole thing."

Glasses flashing thoughtfully, the nervous Kai of the North turned to glance up at his spiky haired apprentice, "He's got a point you know, Goku. The person your son is fighting is one of the most powerful deities in existence. There are very few beings in the cosmos that can compete with the likes of her and even us Kais couldn't hope of stopping such a force on our own. The best we can do is pray and hope your son comes out of this in one piece…"

Breathing in deeply, the full-blooded Saiyan smirked, "If there's anyone out there who can beat this 'most powerful force in the universe', it's him." And despite what anyone else thought, the man meant it. "He's my son… and I know he will win. You can count on it."

Though Goku had every bit of confidence and belief in his child's strength, the Kais still had their doubts, with all of them quickly returning to watch the universal clash inch closer to its climax…

For all they knew, this was the battle that would go down in history as the one that decided the fate of their reality.

XXX

(Back in the Universe)

By this point in time the planet Gohan had been standing on was long gone, having been disintegrated in the wake of the energy struggle. With sweat and blood pouring down his body, the teen felt the top of his gi shred to pieces as the gale from their colliding attacks ravaged them from head to toe. Set too was pushed back under the typhoon, her fur being ruffled by the heat at the center of their clash rushing past her.

They couldn't give up. Not yet. One slipup would lead to the other's fall, but what a glorious fall it would be. The heavens themselves were trembling under their efforts.

Energy clashing and tearing at the walls of the universe, Gohan and Set continued pouring everything they had into their attacks and sending it at their opponents. With the force of their duel pushing them back through the vacuum little by little; it was only a matter of time before one of them broke.

Sensing that time was fast approaching, the demi-Saiyan decided to make his stand. "How does it feel, Set?" the teen shouted above the raging inferno of their tug of war, watching from his side as the goddess struggled to hold her ground… or whatever it was she was now floating on. "How does it feel to be oppressed?! To be broken down?! To be the victim?! To watch your dreams crumble and die right in front of you?! DOES IT HURT?!

Hearing him loud and clear over the howl of their attacks, Set snarled loudly as blue fire exploded from her shoulders and a black smoke began to waft off of her body. With her increase in power, the woman drew her hands back a bit before, with her eyes flaring red, unleashing all of her pent aggression in one mighty blast.

"LET ME SHOW YOU, YOU SELF-RIGHTEOUS HYPOCRITE!" Her output increased several times, a massive shockwave ringing out while her energy gushed out of her hands like water behind an exploding dam. The surge of energy rushed down the beam and struck the head of the attack, where it began forcing the opposing blast back towards its user.

Gohan, feeling the strain of Set's efforts pushing him through the vacuum, gritted his teeth and, snarling loudly, he let loose even more energy from his body. The blue inferno leaving his hands grew in size, burrowing into his opponent's own attack and causing it to split and break. Instead of being swallowed up by the significantly larger blast, the smaller one of the Saiyan's proceeded to push forward.

It was a result that had Set recoil in disbelief. "Impossible!" the God of Storms gawked while her body shook painfully, "Where are you drawing all of this power from?!

Gohan frowned as he felt the vixen's attack push back with just as much force as before. "You don't get it, do you? Your dream to conquer the universe, to tear it down and recreate it, it's all just a big fantasy! A delusion!" The teen roared as more ki left his body and fed into the stream of blue fire, "Deciding the fate of every single being in this reality is not your decision to make! It's nobody's decision to make! Everyone is free to make their own choices and to live their lives how they want to, without the need for anyone to tell them what to do! Mark my words Set… this battle will decide the future of this world! It will mark a path for everyone behind us; the dreams of those who have gone and the hopes of those who will follow! Tomorrow will bring about the birth of a new universe… a universe where all dreams are realized!" Taking a deep breath, Gohan then bellowed out across the stars, "AND NO ONE WILL NEED TO BE SACRIFICED TO MAKE THAT WORLD A REALITY!"

Shaking her head at the teen's speech, the goddess held her space firmly and brought up whatever energy she had left in reserve to the frontlines. "Strong words! But let's see how well they hold up with no skin on your bones!" With one final roar, she unleashed another burst of energy, her attack surging forward with even greater force.

Lurching back under the increased pressure, Gohan clenched his teeth before, with a cry of agony, blue energy exploded from every pore on his body and rushed into his attack, the power of which multiplied several times over. Like a roaring tsunami, his attack drilled into Set's blast, overwhelming it, and went charging towards her at an unbelievable speed.

The vixen's eyes widened in alarm when her attack's momentum creased and the Super Saiyan's beam barreled in her direction. Not willing to take a blast that powerful head on, the fox deity disengaged from the tug-of-war match and leapt out of the way, watching the missile that was the Son's signature move rocket past her.

Not wanting to be the medium that would lead to potential disaster, Gohan swiftly cut off the flow from his attack and thrust his hands forward. With a shout of effort, he willingly forced the attack to redirect to an empty part of space, where it shot off into the distance and vanished in a flicker of light. It avoided hitting any galaxies along the way and, if his calculations were correct, it would fly off and dissipate on its own.

Once the vacuum cleared, both Set and Gohan floated in the middle of empty space, glaring across at one another. Still shrouded in their respective auras, the former blue and the latter red, the pair took a moment to catch their breaths before deciding that they'd had enough of the silence.

Exhaling, Set frowned, "You're a real piece of work." Taking note of her foe's exposed chest and torso, which had been unveiled when his gi top had been disintegrated in the beam struggle, the deity licked her lips and grinned. "Oh yeah… a real piece of work."

Gohan grunted, "A lot of the guys I've fought over the years might agree with you."

Tail waving behind her, the deity smirked in his direction, "That reminds me. I never actually got your name."

Narrowing his eyes at the goddess, the young warrior considered her words for several seconds before figuring he could perform this one little courtesy. Though it was partly out of some semblance of respect for his opponent, there was another part of him that couldn't deny the request no matter how much of a grudge he held. In spite of having the greatest rage of any of the Z-fighters, the teen was admittedly terrible at having prolonged resentment towards other people. "It's Gohan."

"Gohan, hm?" the vixen exclaimed, the name rolling off of her tongue like an elixir as she shared with him a pleasant smile. "I like that name. I'll be sure to remember it." Rolling her head on her shoulders, she then threw him a challenging look. "Alright then, stud. Let's see what other tricks you have up your sleeve." Streams of electricity running up and down her body, Set then leaned forward and rocketed towards her enemy at a blazing speed.

The demi-Saiyan reciprocated her actions, charging forward with his red aura burning like NOS.

From a distance it looked as though the feuding duo were ready for another head-to-head confrontation. But just as they were closing in on one another, the two super powered combatants suddenly vanished into thin air. While Set disappeared in a puff of black smoke, Gohan's form turned completely gold and disappeared in a flash of light, signaling that both of them had used their respective Instantaneous Movement techniques. As a result, almost every single being across the universe, both in the living and Otherworld, completely lost sight of the warriors.

The pair had taken their fight to another dimension.

Their teleportation sent the fighters into the pocket dimension that allowed them to travel across the cosmos wherever they wished. This particular area took the form of a brightly lit, white void surrounded by countless portals and doorways leading down swirling tunnels to other parts of the dimension. As soon as their forms leapt out of their respective entry points, the pair wasted no time in charging at each other and locking horns in the center.

A loud thunderclap rang out when Gohan threw a counter cross over Set's shoulder and slammed it into her face. After which the demi-Saiyan elbowed her in the head, knocked her leg out and kneed her in the back. He then cupped his hands overhead and slammed a hammer blow down on top of her, sending the woman spinning into a portal below. When he cocked a hand back and prepared a blast to fire after her, the goddess suddenly leapt out of a portal to his right and smashed him across the face with her fist.

The teen returned fire with a swift kick to her side, only for the vixen to check it and punch him in the face. She then kicked him across the cheek and sent him spinning away, but Gohan managed to stop and charge back at her, throwing a hook that she blocked and countered with a powerful roundhouse. When the Saiyan parried it, he instantly slipped to avoid the spinning back-kick that followed and chucked a kick of his own, landing it against her cranium. When Set spun around and thrust her palm into his face, she fired a blast at him, only for the hybrid to dodge it and tackle her in the stomach, sending the pair plummeting down another portal.

XXX

(King Yemma's Palace)

The enormous check-in station serving as the registration zone for all those passing through into the afterlife was currently on break as the staff had called in for an early recess. Reason being was the same reason the rest of the universe was on stand-by; the battle between the Z-fighters and the God of Storms, or more appropriately the beat down between Gohan and Set.

At that very moment, every individual ogre currently employed at the station had assembled in King Yemma's office to watch the enormous television he had set up beside his desk. It was here through the excellent reception given to them by their generous service provider, they were able to witness the universal clash between the two God-level warriors. Despite the spiritual bodies struggling to get a good view of the pair due to the ludicrous speed they were traveling at, the crew was still able to acquire some excellent snap shots of some of the battle's key moments. From the moon being used as a battering ram, to the goddess being dragged across the sun's surface, and to the epic tug-of-war match between them, the pair's little skirmish had set the bar high for sheer galaxy busting awesomeness.

Heck, their duel was so monumental that King Yemma was actually taking the time to record the event for posterity. He and his staff had were having a blast watching the whole thing live, and with Baba floating on her crystal ball atop the main desk, the whole conflict was in the running to be one hell of an after party as well.

That was until the pair suddenly vanished using instantaneous movement, taking their battle to a dimension that they couldn't track.

Blinking as the screen drew up nothing but an empty starry sky, Yemma raised an eyebrow and attempted to flip to another channel. Coming up with nothing but a few more shots of lifeless space, the head ogre with the red skin and purple suit growled and slammed a fist into his table. "This is unacceptable! Where the heck did those two go?"

Baba, rolling her eyes, looked back at the man tiredly, "Give them a moment, you old goof. I'm sure they'll pop up eventually."

Murmuring uneasily while a couple of his crew moved over to the television to see if there was something wrong with the reception, the hulking administration officer propped his elbow on his work space and rested his cheek in his palm. "Damn this old satellite television system. Why couldn't they just have the fight in an arena where we can all see it, rather than across the whole damn quadrant? Hell, they could just have their fight right here if it means I get to watch them duke it out."

The short witch floating atop her crystal ball opened her mouth to say something against that, only to be effectively silenced when the skylight to the check-in station imploded and two figures suddenly dropped down from the ceiling. Crashing into the main floor of the building, causing it to shake violently, the two figures then rolled out of the cloud of dust and across the floor, stunning the administration workers.
Leaping to her feet, a bloody-faced Set growled in a very dog-like manner when she saw Gohan do the same on his side of the office. Upon seeing him get to his feet, the woman charged in his direction with the intent to deck him through the wall, only for the glowing red teen to catch her arm and, kicking her feet out from under her, chucked the goddess across the room at full speed. The woman ended up plowing straight through the leg of Yemma's desk, snapping it and toppling the whole table over while she crushed into the far corner of the room. The poor boss ogre yelped in shock and fell off his chair from the violent tremor caused by the deity's crash.

The contents of the large desk scattering across the office, Gohan rushed forward to engage his opponent a second time, only to see her jump out of the hole she'd made in the floorboards and fly straight at him. The half-Saiyan skidded to a stop and head slipped a straight, only to have a left hook slam across his face followed by a push kick that sent him tumbling to the ground.

Stopping on one knee, the teen glared up to see Set sprinting at him again. But just as she was closing in on the bruised teenager, Gohan suddenly grabbed the massive phone from Yemma's desk lying next to him and, with a wide swing, slammed it into the vixen and sent her into the wall. When she hit the barrier, he ran after her with the busted handset and, treating it like a melee weapon, proceeded to slam it into her repeatedly with a comical 'ding' sound echoing out following every hit.

"It's for you!" Gohan shouted, slamming it across the woman one last time and shattering the striking half of the phone.

Immediately after that last blow, the teen readied himself for another. But just as he was aiming to ram it over the fox's head, Set sprang from the ground with a hearty scream of, "Fuck you," and tackled him in the gut, sending them both hurtling across the room and through the wall. After disappearing outside, the entire section of the office they'd barreled through collapsed, leaving a towering pile of plaster and wood lying where a sturdy barrier used to be.

While the staff was completely stunned by what'd happened, a slightly shaken and befuddled Yemma sat up from the floor and looked around in shock. Upon seeing the destruction brought about to his chamber, the man gawked in confusion, "Uh… what just happened?"

Baba, having also been knocked about from the unexpected scuffle, straightened up on top of her crystal ball and looked back at the boss with a scowl, "That would be the God of Storms and her opponent making a quick pit-stop at your palace, sir."

She couldn't have been more right on the mark. Either way, Yemma got his wish of having the fight take place in his office.

Too bad for him it was nothing like he'd expected.

XXX

After their brief skirmish through the pocket dimension that served as the crossroads of their teleportation abilities, which led the pair through countless portals and tunnels, the two of them ended up taking an unexpected detour to Otherworld. Of all the places they could've ended up jumping to, it was King Yemma's palace that was the first to receive them. Completely ignoring the fact that they just trashed his office, the duo then wasted no time in taking their fight outside and across the golden clouds making up one of the many natural barriers of the netherworlds, where they proceeded to mercilessly kick each other across the fields at high speed.

More explosions and sonic booms reverberated throughout the infinite skies. Leaving a trail of destruction, mayhem and atmospheric disturbances in their wake, the red and blue figures streaked over the highway known as Snake Way to an open part of the cloud layer. Viciously trading blows, Set then received a solid uppercut to the face, prompting her to power up and leg it, gaining altitude. Gohan went screaming after her retreating form, but just when he was beginning to gain some ground on her, he suddenly saw the woman turn, cup her hands in front of her and, with a quick charge, unleashed a flaming ball of energy in his direction.

Dodging it, the teen watched the sphere streak off into the horizon, where it struck the cloud bank in the distance and caused a colossal, dome-shaped explosion. The shockwaves caused by the red blast were extensive, violently shaking King Yemma's palace in the distance and also distorting Snake Way, thrashing it about like a whip while the yellow ocean of gases and the very foundations of Otherworld were rocked to its very core.

Gritting his teeth at the gargantuan attack, Gohan spun back around to see Set charge at him with a yell. She chucked a fist his way, only for the demi-Saiyan to dodge her and slam a fist across her face. After a quick exchange of blows, the pair then rocketed up into the sky, streaking away from the administration zone of heaven toward a far more exclusive area of space. Not really caring where they were going or what they were running into, the two super powered warriors continued exchanging hits, with Gohan grabbing Set by the hair and beating her face in. While they ascended and the demi-Saiyan buried his knuckles into her mug, the deity's tail suddenly came around and wrapped around his neck, strangling the teen and allowing Set to land punches on him at her leisure.

Managing to catch her fists in mid-swing following several vicious hits, Gohan then kicked her in the stomach, sending her soaring.

Without even realizing it, the pair suddenly ascended into Grand Kai's airspace. The planet, complete with lake, rolling hillsides and palace, came into view from over the horizon of a gaseous giant; a beacon for any and all spirits trying to make their way in the afterlife. Their blows echoing across the sky as they plummeted from it, the pair's exchange became sloppy on the final descent before Gohan caught Set around the waist and slammed her into the ground. The duo landed hard in the middle of one of the planet's sweeping fields with an earsplitting crash, sending dust and debris hurtling into the air.

By some absurdly hilarious chance, the two supercharged warriors had managed to crash right in the middle of the crowd of fighters who'd gathered out on the plains to watch the battle via the Kais' telepathy.

The assortment of dead martial artists from all four corners of the galaxy gathered around the crater. They and the Kais, who'd speedily sprinted over to that area of the field, looked down to see Set straddling Gohan and, in full hoodlum style, was mercilessly pounding the crap out of him.

Loud cracks rang out as the fox woman drove blows into the stunned boy's face over and over again, stopping for a moment to catch her breath before going right back into it with a yell of rage.

While everyone in the area from North to South looked on in shock, with Goku speedily pushing his way to the front to see what was happening, the crowd then saw Gohan come to life and, grabbing the woman's fist, sat up quickly and head butted her. With the deity knocked senseless, the half-Saiyan then used that opportunity to reverse their positions, grabbing her by the arms and slamming her into the floor. The goddess managed to roll them a couple of times until she was on top again, locking his arm up before beginning to throw shots into his body, repeatedly and painfully.

Yelping out with every hit, Gohan attempted to fight his way out, but found he was unable to with her knee digging into his chest. "Damn it! Shit!"
The Grand Kai, a white haired man wearing leather and bearing a striking resemblance to a member from the Rolling Stones, gritted his teeth anxiously as he moved forward, "This is bad."

Goku, who was also watching nervously from the sidelines, then stepped to the edge of the hole and shouted into the center of the two-hundred yard wide crater. "Son! Remember that mud-wrestling show we watched together that one time?!" His shout inadvertently drew several odd looks from the nearby fighters, including his fellow sparring partner and rival Pikkon.

Hearing his dad above the string of blows knocking against his ribs, the teen shouted back, "Yeah! Why?"

"Do you remember what that woman did to the other woman when she was on top of her?!"

Thinking back several years as Set continued burying blows into his liver, Gohan was then struck with a sudden wave of inspiration. "Oh?" Acting on the memories of that amateur event, the teen swiftly wrapped his legs around the vixen's waist and yanked her down, pressing her close to him and preventing her from getting a proper angle to throw any hits.

With Set trapped against his chest, the teen twisted in and buried an elbow into her neck, before then slamming a hook across her face. Rolling them over, the demi-Saiyan quickly got behind the goddess, took her left arm, and stuck her in a lock that had him lying on her back.

From where the dead fighters of Grand Kai's planet could see from their places surrounding the crater, the position the pair had assumed appeared very… indecent. If this weren't a battle to decide the ultimate fate of the universe, at least one of them would've pointed it out.

The grunting and groaning wasn't helping the sight either.

Both growling angrily as they wrestled for dominance, with Gohan beginning to bend his opponent backwards in a very uncomfortable manner, Set's eyes suddenly widened before firing two golden beams from her irises. The attack veered upwards and, performing a perfect aerial loop, honed in and slammed into her adversary's spine. The beams ground into the demi-Saiyan's shoulder blades, drawing a cry of agony from the young warrior and prompting him to release her. This enabled the Dio-jin to slide out from under him and kick him in the stomach, sending him blasting across the fields.

When the teen struck the ground a second later, Gohan slowed his tumble and landed back onto his feet, sliding to a stop and digging two trenches into the ground at the same time.

Looking up with a frown, the demi-Saiyan powered up. His red aura sprang around him before he rocketed towards his opponent like a comet. Set, her own aura bursting up, yelled out as well and rushed in, the pair meeting in the center of the field and colliding with one another elbow first. Their impact sent a blast of wind washing over the planet, a shockwave that nearly knocked every single person in the area off their feet. As soon as they made contact, the pair began hammering each other mercilessly with attacks, shockwaves ringing out as every single punch, elbow, kick and knee was effectively blocked or deflected.

They continued assaulting one another in a blur, until an annoyed Set cocked her fist back and thrust it at her foe. Gohan blocked it with a side guard and, as soon as he pushed it away, went straight back to unleashing a storm of punches upon his adversary. The entire planet literally shook to the core under their light speed blows, an anomaly that knocked several fighters off balance and caused many others to stumble.

After a full minute of assaulting one another and not getting anywhere, Gohan quickly ended the skirmish with a quick head slip, avoiding a hook and countering with a right cross. His blow connected with a deafening 'crack', which he quickly followed up with a left hook, a right hook, and then a hard kick to the stunned vixen's abdominals. His last blow's impact was marked by a shockwave that split the ground and sent Set blasting to the other side of the world to crash into the enormous lake. Everyone in the area was able to see the geyser like splash the woman created.

Gohan on the other hand, as soon as he'd sent his opponent packing, held both his hands forward and unleashed a volley of powerful blue energy blasts from his hands. The attacks streaked through the air and bombed the lake Set had landed in, causing several explosions that evaporated a lot of the water and took a sizable chunk out of the planet. When the attack died down several seconds later, the entire atmosphere behind the assault had become choked up with smog and debris.

But just when it seemed the demi-Saiyan had taken his opponent out, the wall of smoke was then violently blown away when a thicker, blacker column suddenly shot up from the ocean and sliced the veil away. The shadowy mass of dark energy twisted and swirled through the air like a vortex, before stretching high into the atmosphere and spreading out like a phantom. The warriors watching from the sidelines gawked in horror as the necromancer like column of black cloud writhed in the air before them, whereas Gohan simply looked on with his battle-hardened expression in full view.

When the collection of gas reached a height greater than the tallest mountains back on earth, in the very center of the formation at its base, the source of the anomaly Set stepped forward and glared in her opponent's direction. The black aura literally gushing out of every patch of fur on her body, the red-eyed deity snarled angrily before bellowing across at her target. "This battle ends now!"
Pulling her hand back, she then threw it forward and launched a wave of black smoke in the demi-Saiyan's direction.

Responding quickly, Gohan powered up and took off into the sky, avoiding the tendril that slammed into the ground and punched a much larger crater into it. When he ascended, the black arms of smoke from his opponent's avatar followed him, but he managed to counter them with a quick volley of blasts, dispelling them and allowing him to boost higher into the atmosphere. After arcing across the skies and reaching the planet's mesosphere, the boy then reversed directions and dove for his opponent at full speed.

Growling at her miss, the frustrated Set then thrust her hands out one after the other, firing two more blasts of smoke that shot towards her foe like spears.

With a quick knife hand and a superman punch, Gohan swatted away the first blast and plowed right into the next one, breaking it up while swiftly advancing on his foe. However, after smashing through the first blast, he was then met with a multitude of attacks as the goddess sent more and more tendrils up at him. The black clouds shot up like spikes one after the other, threatening to impale the demi-Saiyan if he slipped up for even a second.

Set had to bite down hard and use every bit of concentration she had to try and shoot her damn target out of the sky. One after the other her hands thrust upwards, until she got fed up and threw both of them forward and fired several blasts of smoke at the same time. Unfortunately, her efforts proved useless as one after another, she watched Gohan slip around her attacks and dispatch each of them in turn, chopping, kicking and hammer fisting his way through the assault. Even a salvo of a dozen smoke blasts failed to do the trick as the teen cut through them like butter.

With a mighty bellow, she brought her hands down, thrust them upwards, and unleashed a powerful blast of dark clouds from her palms towards her enemy. The column was large enough to swallow the boy whole. But just like with all her attacks, Gohan countered it in spectacular fashion.
Forming a golden sphere in his left hand, he slammed it into the approaching wave and burrowed his way through it, screaming all the way down before delivering a solid punch to Set's face. His impact with the woman was marked by a sonic boom as he not only knocked the woman back and dispelled the mass of smoke surrounding her; he buried her straight into the floor.

But he didn't stop there.

The instant the goddess hit the ground, a colossal earth-shaking explosion rocked the entire world as Gohan pushed Set straight through the planet. A geyser of rubble and dust shot into the air on both sides of the celestial body, with a whole sixth of the Kai's home being blown out when the two overpowered warriors shot out of the sphere's mantel and began plummeting towards the lower levels of Otherworld.

All of the dead warriors and guardians of the four quadrants could only gape in shock at what had happened. Even Goku was standing there slack-jawed at the amount of power they were producing.

Still holding Set by the face, Gohan yelled out as they descended towards the yellow clouds at high speed. But just before they could reach them and punch straight through to HFIL, an infuriated Set bellowed in rage and powered up. Her blue aura engulfed her before she shot skywards, dragging the demi-Saiyan with her. Their red and blue auras clashed while they spiraled into the air, shooting past the planet that they'd been fighting on and soaring higher and higher into the heavenly plains that governed the order of their universe.

Blowing past moons and stars that didn't exist in the living world, Gohan and Set battled on for some time. Sticking close and circling each other, the pair exchanged punch after kick at high speed, most of them landing but just as many being deflected. Eventually, after several minutes of brawling through the otherworldly cosmos, the pair suddenly came across a distant, spherical world surrounded by moons; far out of the reach of the other Kais. It was here the pair spun in, burning up as they picked up speed before eventually colliding with the field covered planet. Their impact shook the entire world and knocked it slightly out of its orbit.

As it turns out, by some stroke of otherworldly luck, the pair had crash-landed in a field alongside two unassuming spectators. Both dressed in similar posh Kai outfits of blue and red respectively, one of them was a short, purple-skinned young man with a white Mohawk, while the other was a large man with reddish-pink skin with a head of long white hair. Having been out on a pleasant stroll of the hills earlier that morning, the pair had soon become glaringly aware of an outstanding conflict taking place in the universe and quickly linked up with the feed via crystal ball to see what was going on. But just as they were beginning to close in on the source of the untold levels of destruction racking the quadrant, the pair was suddenly interrupted by a pair of figures unexpectedly making landfall on their home turf.

The purple-skinned man with the pointy ears and sharp eyes, blinked in astonishment as he and his assistant stared across at the crater that had formed on the face of their sacred planet. "What in the world…?"

"Where did they come from?" Kibito also asked in bewilderment.

Hilariously enough, the two figures that'd dropped by just happened to be the same ones that were causing all the trouble down below.

Flying out of the hole and bouncing across the grass, Set leapt to her feet and glared at the ditch spewing smoke into the air. But just as she was about to fire a blast his way, a familiar ki signature caught her attention and her eyes snapped to her right. When her eyes landed on the two figures standing several yards away, most notably the shortest one, her surprised gaze gave way to full-blown rage.

"YOU!" the dog woman barked, spinning in the deity's direction and marching towards him. "EAST KAI!"

The figure with the Mohawk gasped and backed away fearfully, "S-Set? Is that you?"

"Yeah! It's me!" the fox deity shouted as her black aura sprang off of her shoulders like wildfire. "That was a real funny joke, you know; helping the other Gods lock me up inside of a fucking pyramid in the middle of nowhere." She then clenched her fists and loaded one at her side. "It was a cold and very, very lonely place. Here… let me give you a taste of what it was like." Aura blasting around her, the goddess launched herself from the ground and lunged right at the terrified Supreme Kai.

But just as she was just inches from landing a punch on him, Set was unexpectedly blindsided by Gohan body-checking her from the side and sending her barreling across the planet, crashing through several plateaus and mountains along the way.

Completely ignoring the stunned and terrified looks of the two aliens standing nearby, the beaten and bruised Gohan powered up and gave chase to his opponent, disappearing in a flash of red. This left both a baffled Supreme Kai and Kibito standing slack-jawed in the middle of the field, staring over the horizon with similarly pale expressions in play. It was while they were looking so close to fainting that all hell finally broke loose.

In a matter of seconds, explosions began engulfing the entire planet as massive chunks of the countryside were blown away in turn. Some areas ended up incinerated in enormous balls of fire, others simply had massive craters punched into them, and a handful more were blasted into a hail of rubble and debris. Either way, it wasn't long before the entire sphere became covered in battle scars and holes, with the Sacred World of the Kais taking on the appearance of a block of Swiss cheese.

Shockwaves and sonic booms reverberating across the skies in the form of trails of red and blue bursts, Gohan and Set continued landing crushing blows on their opposites. It soon reached the point where the pair had received so much damage that they were now battling at only a fraction of the effectiveness they had been at the beginning of their battle.

After receiving a hook across his face that sent him plummeting to the surface of the planet from the upper mesosphere, Gohan quickly tucked up and threw himself into a spin. Just when he was about a hundred meters above the ground, he opened up, slowed his descent, and cupped his hands beside him.

"Ka-me-ha-me …" the Super Saiyan chanted, teeth clenching as he then thrust his hands forward.

But just before he could fire his blast, Set suddenly teleported out of his line of sight and reappeared directly in front of him, grabbing his wrists with both hands and redirecting them skywards.

The goddess laughed at his stunned expression, "Ha! Too slow-"

Gohan smirked, "HAAAA!" He then threw his feet up and, in place of his hands, jabbed them forward and fired a powerful blue beams from his soles. The blast engulfed the woman's torso with concussive force, not only knocking the wind out of her, but also wrapping around her and continuing on. The attack struck a distant mountain and plowed an enormous hole into the planet's surface.

Releasing her opponent from her grip the instant the surprise attack hit her from below, the dazed and burnt Set gawked in shock before glaring in the direction of her retreating opponent. Veins pulsing on her forehead, the woman hit the after burners and blasted after him. "PRICK!" She then elbowed the boy in the face and sent him bouncing to the other side of the planet.

Flying over craters and destroyed mountains, Gohan's form ended up spinning towards what appeared to be a spire of rock standing in the middle of a lake with a patch of grass on top of it. When his body crashed into the lake and slammed into the base of the tower, the column of earth and stone rocked violently to one side before collapsing into the pond. As soon as it fell into the water, sending a cloud of dust and perspiration into the sky, Set wasted no time in advancing upon her quarry.

Lying dazed in the rubble, the badly battered Gohan glared up to see his opponent appear directly overhead. Hands clapping together, the goddess parted them quickly, producing a chain of gold lightning between her palms. "I've had enough of these stupid games! Sword of Osiris!" In a flash of light, a large, impressive sword of Middle Eastern design with a curved edge appeared from the current, which she promptly caught with one hand and brought overhead. "Dodge this!" She then swung down with a yell.

Eyes widening in alarm, the teen's eyes quickly snapped to the boulders next to him, where he saw a large claymore with a gold handle and a gem at the end of the pommel sitting in the ground. Without thinking twice, the Super Saiyan rolled over and, grabbing it, effortlessly yanked it out of the rock before a blade of energy was launched from Set's weapon. The light speed attack slammed into the ground where he'd been lying and, in the blink of an eye, cut the entire planet in half. The entire world shook violently as the two halves slid in opposite directions, explosions ringing out all across the newly made equator.

Irritated at her miss, Set gave chase to her rival, who she saw was flying backwards with the Z-Sword in his grip. Catching up to the red-haired demi-Saiyan, the goddess swung out at him with swift, wide arcs, the golden blade carving through the air several times before clashing with the heavier one of her opponent's. Sparks flew when Gohan parried her shots, until he dropped to the ground to avoid a decapitating strike. As soon as he'd touched down, he performed a quick back flip, avoiding his opponent when she also dropped down after him and buried a kick into the floor.

Spinning his sword up into a two-handed grip, Gohan quickly sent a wave of ki into the weapon, causing the blade to ignite and turn a hot blue, further protecting it from his opponent's superb edge. Watching the smoking crater carefully, the teen then saw the smoke break and his opponent come charging out of the wall with her sword held back and an enraged look on her face. Rushing towards her in kind, the Super Saiyan clashed with her head to head.

Loud clangs rang out when their swords met, with Set pressing her hand into the back of her blade and pushing forward. Sliding it across her adversary's, she then slashed at him repeatedly, her attacks slamming into his guard over and over, before she swung out wide and sent the boy skidding across the grass with his sword held up. A gust of wind blew between both warriors when they circled one another, the vixen spinning her sword around all-cool style before rushing her opponent once again.

Set attacked her foe viciously, using a single-handed style combined with a series of acrobatic movements that allowed her to avoid her enemy's counter attacks. Gohan on the other hand held his sword in a two-handed grip, utilizing a highly defensive style that allowed him the maneuver around his enemy effectively and counter her hits. His sword slashed out in wide arcs, crashing into Set's blade and knocking her back under the force of his hits. When she leapt at him with a kick, he ducked it, blocking a swing from her sword at the same time before spinning around and swinging his blade in a diagonal motion. His claymore slammed into the woman's and sent her skidding across the field.

Growling, Set threw a downward swing at her target; her blade crossing with Gohan's when he blocked it. But just before she could follow-through, her opponent suddenly grabbed her wrist and yanked her forward. The demi-Saiyan turned on the spot so that the vixen's sword arm was locked over his shoulder and his back was to her. Using his momentum, he then elbowed her in the chest and face, released her, and then spun at her like a top, swiftly kicking her in the face. His hit landed hard and fast, sending her sliding with a shockwave that split the ground beneath them.

When Set stopped skidding from his impressive counter, the woman quickly shook herself out of her daze and moved in for a retaliatory assault.

Ready and waiting, Gohan parried her running blow and quickly sprinted away, the vixen pursuing him relentlessly across the grassy valley. Sensing her right behind him, the teen ducked and spun around, avoiding Set leaping at him with a spinning strike. When she swung at him with a third, he blocked her blow, before retreating a second time. After several yards, the demi-Saiyan unexpectedly changed directions, dropping to the ground with a low swing at his opponent's legs. Set swiftly maneuvered around it, checking his shin when he suddenly performed a break-dancing kick, spinning his legs through the air like a windmill before leaping back up and slashing out at her with his long blade.

Sparks flew between them as they struck out again and again, their attacks colliding in a series of loud clangs. This exchange continued on until Set performed a quick thrust to the teen's head, cutting his cheek when he slipped it yet forcing him to back off. When he ducked under a blow aimed for the neck, Gohan was suddenly kicked in the face, leaving him wide open for the vixen to swing down with her sword and slice right across his chest.

Blood splattered over the ground when her blade carved into his muscles. Though it was only a flesh wound, it still left a very painful impression.

Shouting in pain, Gohan sprinted away, his opponent charging after his tail across the ruined fields of grass. After running up the side of a towering hill to its peak, the demi-Saiyan spun around to meet his fast-moving foe, swinging at her with a low, upward strike, which she avoided by speedily jumping over him. His missed swing produced a powerful energy slash, which arced outwards, cleaves the tops off of a couple of mountains, and cut a third off a nearby, orbiting moon. When he spun around, he met Set rushing at him from behind with several more swings, which he hurriedly blocked with his sword.

When the goddess pressed her advantage, she forced him back, her curved blade crashing into his again and again until they both swung at each other with a downward and upward swing respectively. This resulted in a collision that produced an ear-splitting shockwave and a clang, the former of which caused the entire countryside to fracture and shift violently. The resulting earthquake literally knocked an observing Kibito and Supreme Kai stumbling to the ground.

Their blades grinding into each other, both chipped and nicked from the prolonged clash, Set pushed forward, pressing her hand into the back of hers while Gohan kept a firm, two-handed grip on his. Both growled as they drew closer, their noses just centimeters away from their steel as the vixen pushed down from above. When the God of Storm's drew close enough that she could literally feel her opponent's breath on her face, a grin formed across her lips as she leered murderously in his direction.
"Not bad," she chuckled. "Your form is absolutely sublime."

Gohan, snarling, smirked right back at her, "You're not too shabby yourself."

With a shout, the demi-Saiyan disengaged, causing the goddess to stumble passed him. When they spun around to meet each other, Gohan cocked his sword back and, with a loud roar, thrust it upwards hard and fast. Set swung downwards in response, only for her opponent's sword to slash right through hers and the tip of his blade to cut across her forehead. The glancing blow caused a spray of blood, leaving a scar just above her eye that stunned the goddess.

Dropping her damaged sword, Set looked up in alarm to see Gohan bring his sword up and swing down at her. Responding instantly, the fox deity dropped to her knee and, slapping her hands together, caught the sword between her palms. As soon as she stopped it, she then twisted to the side violently and threw her opponent across the field, causing him to drop his weapon and roll down the hill like a barrel.

The moment he was sent rolling, the goddess sprang after him, picking up her damaged sword and spinning towards the teen. When Gohan stopped and turned to face his attacker, he immediately had to throw up his arm to block the stab from his foe, which ended up with her broken sword running right through his forearm. Upon impaling his limb, Set spun on the spot and snapped a kick into his stomach, sending him into the sky and straight through a distant mountain.

The edifice exploded in a shower of rubble when Gohan's form blasted through it before it went tumbling to a stop on the other side. A cry of agony left the teen's lips when he landed on his impaled arm. Quickly reaching for the handle, he yanked the broken sword out, before his eyes shot skywards to see Set diving towards him from the clouds.

With a shout, he chucked the busted blade at her, only for her to kick it out of the way and plummet towards him with a second kick.

Gohan leapt out of the way, avoiding the crushing blow that impacted the planet and cracked its surface. As soon as his feet touched the hillside several yards away, the Super Saiyan dashed forward and vanished into super speed. All of a sudden, the frustrated Set found herself surrounded by Gohans, as the warrior was moving around her so fast that he was producing countless after-images that filled the entire region and were now dashing circles around her. This had the vixen's eyes shooting around in alarm, sweat dripping down her head as she tried to figure out which was the real one.

Just before she could locate her shockingly swift adversary, a blow crashing across her cheek from the side sent her stumbling, the after images vanishing and Gohan reappearing half a kilometer away. Skidding to a stop, the demi-Saiyan took aim at his foe and vanished in a crack of wind, another blow slamming into Set's side when the Saiyan rushed past her at invisible speed. Then, after several seconds of silence, the red haired warrior dove towards his foe in a zigzag pattern, getting underneath her, and driving a kick into her chin that lifted her off the floor and into the atmosphere.

Teleporting after her in a golden flash, Gohan's form reappeared above Set and, just before the goddess could regain her senses, drove a kick into her side that sent her plummeting back to the planet. But the teen didn't stop there.

Diving in pursuit of the fox, Gohan caught her in mid-fall and began driving hundreds of punches into her head and stomach. His fists slammed into her over and over again, the sounds of deafening thunderclaps ringing out with every hit as they drew closer to the grassy floor. Then, after an onslaught of hits that left Set dazed and bruised, the demi-Saiyan loaded his fist and, with a roar that was matched by his red aura bursting around him, drove a right cross into her face that knocked the woman into the planet and out the other side.

The result was an enormous hole being blasted through the Sacred World's two halves, with the exit hole taking a massive chunk out of the celestial body. When the hail of rubble from the resulting cataclysm drifted into orbit, the two audience members on the ground saw Set emerge from behind one of the debris clouds with her glare fixed on the gaping tunnel. It was through the newly made hole in the planet she saw her opponent drift into view on the other side and, with his hands cupped over his forehead, he took aim.

"MASENKO-HAAAAAA!" Gohan bellowed, unleashing a golden blast straight towards his infuriated target. The attack rocketed through the fissure and thundered towards the goddess like a comet.

Seeing the incoming blast, Set smirked and held her hand out to it. "You think I'd fall for such a simple attack?!" She then gathered energy for a decisive counter attack.

But just as she was in the process of forming a fiery orange sphere in front of her palm, her shoulders were suddenly jerked upwards and her back was pulled against a hard surface. Caught completely by surprise, Set looked over her shoulder to see her opponent had caught her in a full nelson and, with a wide smirk framing his face, the teen powered up and blasted forward, taking her with him.

"Hey! What?! How-"

"Eyes front, Set!" Gohan shouted, his red aura blazing around him.

When the goddess looked to see where they were going, she saw the blast that her opponent had fired earlier closing in at an even faster rate. The instant she realized what the hell her enemy was planning, her eyes widened in horror before a terrified scream left her lips. A split second later, both the blast and the vixen collided in midair, the attack exploding above the planet with such force that it pushed the two halves of the ruined world from its original place. The golden, sphere-shaped inferno filled the sky, dwarfing the Sacred World three times over, and even managing to swallow up two nearby moons and disintegrate them.

The Supreme Kai and Kibito had to shield themselves from the shockwaves that crashed into the celestial body, digging their feet into the ground just to stay up. When the gales of wind died down shortly afterwards, the two of them looked back to see what'd happened.

At first astonished by the sight of the fire and smoke filled skies, as well as the completely trashed landscape, the East Kai with the Mohawk then blinked in shock when he saw the air clear. "Th-They're gone."

"Where did they go?" Kibito asked aloud, unable to locate them either.

XXX

(Sometime later)

Back in the land of the living, in the space surrounding planet earth, a flash of golden light and a puff of black smoke appeared just behind the moon. As soon as the small cloud emerged from the vacuum, it quickly spat out two glowing figures that bounced off of the satellite's pole before they went spiraling towards the terrestrial home world of the Z-fighters. Both forms trailing smoke and locked in a heated grappling match, Gohan and Set laid into each other with tired punches while they broke into the planet's thermosphere and began making a fast approach of its mesosphere.

Fire engulfed the pair shortly afterwards as they entered the earth's atmospheric layers at high speed, piling on the damage little by little while punches continued to fly between them. When Gohan managed to wrap his arms around Set and drive knees into her stomach repeatedly, the goddess threw body shots and punches into his abdominals and face. Loud 'bangs' rang out as the force of their attacks echoed across the planet, the duo soon smashing through the clouds, soaring over forests and cities until they eventually hit the desert. It was here where they both crash-landed into the dunes, bouncing off of it once, then twice, and then landing on separate parts of the plain a full minute later.

When the cloud of sand settled from their simultaneous impacts, the two warriors quickly pulled themselves out of the craters they'd formed and, catching their breaths, fixed their swollen gazes once more upon their adversary.

Huffing furiously with his red hair rising up even more, Gohan grunted one last time before his aura roared into life. Kicking up dust and sand with his actions, the boy shouted across the orange valley, "A little more… just a little bit more… and I'll win!" Getting into a sprinter's start, the young male aimed his body and took off, blasting at full speed towards his foe. "THIS ENDS NOW, SET!"

Looking up in shock, the wounded and battle stricken goddess was unable to react in time when her enemy, traveling dozens of times faster than the speed of light, slammed into her and sent her rocking across the desert. When they were just a few clicks away from the pyramids, Gohan drove her into the dirt and, with speed greater than anything he'd reached before on his own, he began to fly laps around her at blinding speed. The instant he started circling a tornado kicked up, a split second before he began laying punches into her like a glorified machine gun.

A cyclone formed above the two warriors when Gohan laid into his opponent with everything he had, his blows coming in at such a speed that it looked like Set was being attacked from all over by hundreds of opponents. The goddess's body contorted, bent and shook as she was violently rocked by a storm of blows; grunts and cries of pain leaving her lips under the assault. With the amount of damage that was starting to pile up, it was only a matter of time before his opponent eventually caved.

A sand storm blasted across the desert from the tornado that was the demi-Saiyan hammering away at his opponent. Due to the amount of force being exerted, the gales effortlessly reached the Egret Necropolis where the fight all started. In that very area, scattered across the landscape the beaten and battered Z-fighters slowly started to regain consciousness. From their places lodged in the ground, Piccolo, Vegeta, Paprika, Krillin, Android 18, Goten and Trunks looked up and across the desert to see the twister and the cause of it blazing a trail of never-ending laps around his foe.

Whis, who could also see from his shackled position on the terrace, gritted his teeth and leaned forward, counting down the seconds until Set's inevitable defeat. "H-He's going to do it..." This young warrior from earth, whom was just a small blip in the universe amongst countless others like him, was actually going to do the impossible!

He was close! So close!

"Come on! Come on! Come on! COME ON! Just a little more! JUST A LITTLE BIT MORE!" Gohan practically screamed in his head, not caring how much energy he was burning as long as his opponent was beaten at the end of this. His merciless bombardment continued and as he watched Set's face swell up under the beating, he knew he was only a few seconds away from victory.
However, just when it looked like Set would finally succumb to his attacks, the vixen, jaw clenching, reached out with her hand and caught the flying Gohan by the throat. Her firm grip locked around his wind pipe, stopping him dead in his tracks and causing the tornado he'd formed around them to start petering off. Then, as soon as she had him, the goddess snarled.

"BURN!" Set shouted, her red eyes igniting and firing two eye beams right into Gohan's face at pointblank range. The attack slammed into the demi-Saiyan's cheek, cocking his head to the side before the inferno that was the attack started to burn into him like a blowtorch.

The beams engulfed Gohan's head completely and traveled across the desert, flying off the planet's surface as the woman fed all of her energy into her final burst. Determined to fry the young man's brain, the vixen bellowed out as her aura exploded around her and the lasers shooting from her eyes intensified several times over. The glare was blinding and the pain the demi-warrior was subjected to as the tempest of fire tore into his flesh was excruciating.

Much to Set's satisfaction, a scream of agony echoed across the countryside as Gohan felt his skin start to fry and his flesh ripple under the waves of ki gushing out of the God of Storm's piercing gaze. The Z-fighters, who were well within earshot of the battle, could only stare helplessly as the battle-scared teen's face got roasted by the equivalent of ten thousand suns exploding in his face. Piccolo, Krillin and Paprika especially, unable to bear witness to his suffering, attempted to pull themselves out of the craters they'd formed in the earth to help him.

But try as they might, they just couldn't hash it.

As Gohan continued to cry out under the firestorm engulfing him, Set's grin widened as she saw the left side of his mug start to blacken. "Yeah! This is for dragging my face across the sun earlier! Come on, hot stuff! Let's see that skin boil!"

Teeth clenching under the unending hellfire, the demi-Saiyan allowed one last growl to leave him before, with a great deal of effort, his hands reached up and grabbed the vixen's wrist. It was a response that had the goddess balk in shock. "Not… TODAY!" Then, with a mighty push, Gohan jumped up and slammed a knee into the side of Set's head.

The blow drove into her cheek, switching off her eye lasers, releasing Gohan from her hold, and sending the woman stumbling. The world around her blacking out for two full seconds, the goddess hurriedly tried to regain her balance and fix her crosshairs back onto her enemy. When she saw him land several feet away and set himself into a firm stance, the woman cocked her hand back and focused her energy.

"Why you…!" Just as she was taking aim with her blast, a bright blue light suddenly fell over her when the fully powered up forms of Zangya and Videl charged at her and rammed two Kamehamehas into both sides of her head.

"EAT THIS!" the women shouted, a deafening thunderclap ringing out when they drilled the spheres of energy into Set's ears and unleashed their blasts. A sphere shaped fireball swallowed up the God of Storm's head and body, which pulsed and howled loudly for several seconds before detonating with colossal force. The shockwave the attacks produced knocked the two female fighters away, sending them skidding across the desert sands to a grinding stop. When the dust faded from their respective attacks, both looked up to inspect the fruits of their labor.

Grins framed their faces as Zangya and Videl believed they'd finally managed to cripple the bitch that'd nearly killed them. But when the smoke cleared shortly afterwards, they saw the fox woman's silhouette emerge from the veil, and aside from two burns on both of her cheeks, she appeared relatively unharmed.
Her murderous gaze switching between the stunned females, Set suddenly threw her hands out and aimed them at the interlopers. When the girls backed up at the sight of her palms, the goddess began to charge, "That hurt, you stupid pests! Now you're going to pay!" Two golden spheres appeared in front of her palms, both crackling with blue bolts of electricity as a manic look formed on her face. Her irises dilating to match her wild mood, the goddess laughed, "FAREWELL TO THE WORTHLESS!"

Zangya and Videl threw up their guards, eyes widening in horror when the woman prepared to incinerate them.

But just as Set was ready to annihilate the two female warriors, her gaze was suddenly pulled ahead when she sensed an enormous collection of energy gathering. When the vixen's eyes landed on her half-Saiyan opponent, she saw that Gohan had cocked his hand back and, with a large sphere of blue energy floating between his fingers, had taken aim at her.

As if preparing to pitch a baseball, the fiery haired Super Saiyan sneered as his red eyes fixed squarely upon his surprised target. When he saw he had her full and undivided attention, the boy quickly finished gathering all the energy he needed and acted instantly. With golden bolts of lightning shooting off of the incredible mass of ki he'd collected, the teen stepped forward and with his red aura burning brightly around him, thrust his hand forward.

"FLASH MADAN!" A yell of fury echoed from his lips when Gohan unleashed the full power of his signature move upon his target, bathing her in a blinding light. The blue blast left the demi-Saiyan's palm with a howl as an attack equivalent to the one he used in the previous beam struggle rocketed from his hand towards his opponent.

From the way she was positioned there with her arms outstretched, it was like the goddess was begging to be hit.

Stunned, her eyes glazed over in horror, Set threw her hands forward and fired the two attacks she'd created prematurely. When they bounced off of the blast as it thundered towards her, all the goddess could do was throw up her guard before it ran her down like a hyper-powered locomotive. The blast slammed into her with a sonic boom, lifting her off of the desert floor and blasting across the earth's curvature. The deity's scream was drowned out by the deafening roar of the attack.

The attack expanded when Gohan poured every last bit of energy he had left into it, picking up speed and momentum. In a matter of seconds it left the planet, blasted out of the solar system, and streaked across the cosmos for several seconds. Then, after arcing around a series of star systems, it quickly honed in on Centaurus A, where the attack hurtled its victim towards the nearest, brightest star, and rammed Set straight into its side.

The blast burrowed her into the core of the star, where the battered and bruised Set felt the heat of the attack and the sun burn into her flesh, before a scream of agony left lips. "THIS ISN'T OVER, GOHAAAAAN! GAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAH!" Her cry was drowned out by the inferno that enveloped her and, after several seconds of useless writhing, the blast pressing down on top of her and the sun exploded in a glorious blue super nova.

The rings of the star combusting rippled out in all directions, filling that region of space in a blinding light for several seconds. In that time, all of the planets that'd been orbiting the super massive giant were disintegrated or turned to dust, and any satellites orbiting them were also blasted into oblivion. It only took a single explosion to end any potential life existing in that area of space, wiping it completely out of existence and rearranging maps all across the galaxy. Then, as soon as the shockwaves from the blast dwindled, so did the inferno that engulfed the system.
In a matter of moments, space went black again, and any and all traces of Set had seemingly been wiped clean.

Gohan had emerged victorious.

(TO BE CONTINUED)

Author's Note: Woo. That was a great deal of fun. This was one of the most enjoyable arcs I've ever had the pleasure of writing. And this is only the beginning.

If you thought Set was bad, wait till you see what I have lined up next.

Obviously this chapter deserves some acknowledgements. When we're talking about God characters capable of wiping out galaxies, you can expect some Gurren Lagann stuff to come into the equation. For all those who didn't get the reference, that beam struggle was directly inspired from the series. I think it fitted quite beautifully.

Sure, the physics don't make sense, but those are only by earth standards. This is DBZ we're talking about. Reality is just a piece of A4 paper to these guys.

I've always wondered how six righteous Saiyans can make a Super Saiyan God. Kind of a very convenient number, as well as a very forced plot element. But it's a concept that can easily be manipulated. In this story it's just a ritual that creates a temporary God and, as explained by Set, there is more than one way to create a permanent God. The one that Gohan transformed into is indeed a pseudo form so it doesn't last long, but he absorbed enough energy for it to help him finish the fight.

Imagine Peter Griffin vs the Chicken, but on DBZ scale. That's pretty much what happened here, lol.

And before people start jumping out of their skin, yes, Videl was still alive, but only barely. If Yamcha could survive having both his energy sucked out AND have an arm shoved through his chest by Doctor Gero, safe to say Videl could survive a couple of minutes bleeding out.

Still though, it was a pretty close one. There were some miraculous saves in the series and there are definitely a handful in here.
It took a little while for the sun's light to flood back into earth's atmosphere and when it finally did, the damages caused by the battle between Gohan and Set became all too clear. Across the desert and a small portion of the cosmos, landscapes had been wrecked, planets had been blown up, and entire star clusters had been wiped clean from existence. Needless to say, the outcome of this epic conflict could've been a whole lot worse. But thanks to the courage and diligence displayed by the defenders of the terrestrial planet, any and all world ending threats posed by the vengeful goddess had been successfully dealt with.

Across the universe, every guardian and bystander who'd witnessed the fight firsthand was in full celebration. Galaxies swayed and kais applauded. Even the great leaders of worlds billions of light years away bowed their heads in gratitude to the ones who triumphed over the dark overlord.

Even Whis, who felt the energy restraints binding his arms together dissipate, smiled when he offered his silent compliments to the group for their stellar accomplishment.

Unfortunately, the ones who were supposed to be receiving all of this praise weren't exactly in the right shape to be accepting or returning them.

After managing to pull themselves out of the craters they'd formed, the beaten and battered team of Z-fighters all limped their way out onto the wasteland where the final showdown had taken place. Vegeta and Piccolo were the first to show up, covered in bruises, cuts, and both of them looking like they'd seen better days. The pair were then shortly followed by Krillin carrying Android Eighteen in his arms, and Paprika, Goten and Trunks soon after. Each and every member of the group was riddled with a variety of scuffs and open wounds, ranging from Piccolo after the beating he received from Frieza to Recoome after getting deep fried by Vegeta's blast.

On the plus side, all of them still had their teeth.

When the once scattered companions all gathered on the dunes, they found an utterly spent Zangya and Videl kneeling on the sand several feet from one another, and Gohan standing out in the open with his body turned side-on to them, his gaze directed upwards, and his once glowing red hair turned to gold.

After Krillin helped the winded crime fighter to her feet and Piccolo offered a hand to the equally shaken Hera, all eyes then turned to the demi-Saiyan to begin assessing his condition. From the way the teen held his station, covered in cuts and bruises, with his head held high, his hair blowing on the wind, and the endless landscape and sky stretched out behind him, there was no doubt in any of their minds that he certainly looked the part of earth's savior. What with all the insanity and wonton destruction they'd just witnessed only moments ago, he most definitely earned that title.

Sucking in air, Videl grinned and rushed forward, not even caring that her muscles were screaming in protest. "Gohan!"

Responding to the call, the shirtless hybrid glanced in the direction of the familiar voice. Despite his transformed state, the Super Saiyan's expression still managed to convey a sense of surprise and innocence you could only expect from a Son. When he saw the teenager running over to him with his friends all gathered in the background, a smile reappeared on the warrior's face.

"Videl." Almost three seconds after he uttered her name, Gohan heard the tomboy giggle before she threw herself at him. The blonde caught her effortlessly, wrapping the girl up in a hug that she gleefully returned. Due to the noticeable height difference between them, the Ascended Saiyan was able to keep her from touching the ground as he spun her on the spot, laughing joyously all the while.

That was pretty much the cue for Goten and the others to move in, with the former dashing bounding over the sands to meet his brother. The rest of the group chose to close the distance at their own pace.

When the elated Gohan eventually lowered Videl back to the ground, the teenagers took a moment to smile at one another until they were joined by the youngest member of their team. Looking down, they saw the child skid to a stop and beam at them through the cloud of dust with his usual, cheerful disposition.

The spiky haired hero smiled, "Hey there, squirt. What's shakin'?

After inspecting his brother for a moment, Goten's expression then faltered when he saw the current form his older sibling had assumed and tilted his head in awe. "Whoa. Gohan… what happened to your eyebrows?"

Blinking at the unusual question, Gohan chuckled and reached up to pat his forehead area. "Heh. I'm not quite sure. They just disappeared on me after I transformed." He then glanced nervously at his best friend while the rest of their group stopped around him. "What do you think? Does it look bad?"

The raven haired crime fighter shrugged, "Not really. I think it looks alright." She then reached up and prodded the ridgeline above his eyes. "You do look pretty scary though. I bet this'll do wonders for your opponent's confidence in your next planet busting fight."

This comment earned a sheepish grin from the warrior, "If you say so. Personally I prefer my appearance in Super Saiyan 2. It looks so much cooler in the mirror."

"Agreed," Videl answered fondly.

With smiles being worn all around, this presented the perfect opportunity for one particular member of their group to interject. Folding her arms over her chest and grinning widely, Zangya nodded towards the young man who'd saved their planet for the third time and spoke to him in casual inquisition, "I take it you finally managed to ascend to the third level then?" His enormous energy level was a dead giveaway.

There was so much of it sitting in one spot that she was positive even the people in Otherworld could now sense him.

"Yep." Gohan grinned back. During which time, Videl discreetly and rather shamelessly checked out his bare torso, whereas Goten decided to brush his brother's incredibly long hair to see what it was like.

"Neat. How does it feel?" the Hera asked.

The ethereal fighter held up his right hand and clenched it into a fist. "Pretty awesome actually. My body's got so much power coursing through it, I feel like I can split this entire planet in half with a single tap if I'm not too careful." It was this little announcement that had Krillin take a cautionary step back, which earned a quick backpedal from the powered-up teen. "But don't worry. I'm sure I can control it."

The short fighter stationed nearby grinned nervously, "If I were you, I'd watch your step, big guy. I mean, your Super Saiyan 2 is one thing, but this form..." He whistled and shook his head in amazement, "I'm surprised your muscles haven't ripped themselves to shreds from all of that energy blasting through your veins."

"Yeah. Me too," Gohan replied in his usual, carefree manner. Despite his response, he didn't seem too bothered by any of this at all.

Following up on their remarks, the senior fighter from earth and the young warrior's teacher crossed his arms and smirked in the Saiyan's direction. "I take it you'll be spending the next few months learning how to control it?"

The hybrid nodded to the Namekian. "Uh-huh. Since this has kicked the energy in my cells into a hundred percent overdrive, it's going to take a while longer than what it took to control my second form. Though I'm sure I'll get it down with practice, I'm still going to need a little bit of help." The demi-Saiyan then gestured to the Namekian. "What do you say, Piccolo? Are you up for the challenge?"

The former guardian smiled, "Sure. Why not?"

The spiky haired fighter then turned his gaze to Zangya, who'd also taken a step around to look the transformed warrior over more closely. "How about you?"

An affirmative nod was her immediate response, "Whenever you're ready, blondie."

His mood improving significantly, the half-breed fighter quickly turned his attention to the rest of the troop. After his gaze skimmed over the beaming Krillin and Android 18, as well as the cool looking Paprika, his eyes then focused on Vegeta, who he could see was glaring back at him with his arms crossed. Taking note of the man's battered form and serious contours, the demi-warrior shared a pleasant smile with him too before speaking. "What's up, Vegeta?"

The flame-haired man narrowed his eyes and looked away. "Good job, brat. You did your race proud today... both of them."

Noticeably surprised at the man's compliment, Gohan swallowed and beamed, "Thanks, man."

Shaking her head at her fellow warrior's gruff praising of the teen's success, Zangya then turned to her training partner with a half-grin. All the while, Goten and Trunks continued to walk circles around the older sibling, poking at his hair and staring up at his chiseled face. "He's just mad because you got to the third level before he did."

This only brought a chuckle from the young fighter, "That's what I figured." His little back-and-forth with the orange haired woman earned a grunt from the Saiyan Prince and prompted the full-blooded alien to turn his back on them. That being the usual response he'd expect, Gohan then focused his attention on Videl, whom he saw avert her gaze rather swiftly and sway on the spot in a very timid manner. "In any case, I'm just glad everyone's alright."

"Yeah. This whole thing was beyond intense..." Krillin sighed, placing his hands on his hips while glancing across at his wife, whom was standing directly beside him, "I sure hope we don't have to go through something like that ever again. Though with our luck, I highly doubt this will be the last time we run into somebody like her."

"All the more reason to keep at it and continue our training," Piccolo spoke, arms crossed while his gaze moved to stare off over the horizon. "We're going to need to be ready to face whatever comes at us next, whether it's alien, demon or an angry God."

It was a fair prediction. The first four opponents they'd fought earlier today had been a tough group to deal with. Not only were they able to beat Gohan effortlessly while working in tandem, but they also gave the rest of their squad quite a thrashing across the desert. And that wasn't even counting their battle against Set. On her own, the red haired fox deity was able to pick each of them apart one by one, and even with Gohan's newly acquired transformation to Super Saiyan 3, judging from his ridiculously high output, the Namekian doubted the boy would've been able to beat her.

The form he'd assumed before, where his hair and aura had turned red, was different from the one he had now. Piccolo knew this much because he'd seen it. He'd felt it in his gut. That meant that some other exterior force had unexpectedly come into the equation that allowed his student to trade blows with and defeat the goddess single-handedly.

This was something he believed would become more known to them over time. But for now, the Namekian was just content with knowing that the world had been saved from yet another apocalyptic threat.

After sharing looks with his teachers and friends, Gohan then turned his attention to the two rascals pacing around him and prodding at his legs. When he saw the children move away and stare up at him, he then heard them speak.

"You look so cool, big brother," Goten exclaimed, his eyes shimmering with wonder.

"And you're wickedly strong too," Trunks added immediately afterwards. "I think you're, like, the strongest person in the universe now. Did it hurt when your hair grew out?"

All the older Saiyan could do was shrug and grin, "A little bit. It was mostly my muscles that hurt. It I could compare the sensation to something else, it felt like… pouring kerosene over my body and setting it on fire." Although, his eyebrows being retracted into his skin did sting like a bitch for the excruciating five seconds it took for it to happen.

It was this subject that inevitably drew a puzzled look from Bulma's son. "Why did your hair grow so much? Did you push it out using your mind?" the lavender haired tike asked while tilting his head at the person he also viewed as an older sibling.

Gohan reached up and ran a hand through his golden, spiky locks. "I think it has something to do with every single cell in my body accelerating from all the energy I was putting out. The nerve points in the head couldn't take the strain so it funneled the excess ki through the hair follicles, which caused it to grow out and change. If not, then it's probably something similar to a temporary metamorphosis, where the Saiyan's strength increases by altering the structure of the body."

"Ah… I see," Trunks murmured, scratching his neck thoughtfully. "Kind of weird though."

"Yeah. I think so too," Gohan chirped, reaching over to ruffle his little brother's head. The moment he relinquished his hand from Goten's cranium and smiled at him, his aura suddenly flared up and dissipated in the blink of an eye, leaving the older teen standing there in his base form. Noticing his sudden drop in power, the young warrior looked down at his hands while his friends blinked in surprise. "Oh… that's it I guess…"
Noticing the sudden shift in ki patterns, as well as how low Gohan's energy levels had dropped, Piccolo narrowed his eyes, "It seems that this new Super Saiyan 3 of yours has a very fickle time limit." That's what he was able to gauge after getting a bead on the kid's life force.

"Sure looks that way. Oh well," the demi-Saiyan shrugged. "It's not like I'm expecting to stay like this for hours on end the first time around."

Though this did earn a round of looks from the others and a momentary glance from Vegeta, the silence was once again broken by Videl stepping towards her best friend of many years. With one hand behind her back and the other tucking a couple locks of hair behind her ear, the teenager stealthily slid up alongside Gohan and nudged him in the side. Easily drawing his gaze, the girl then looked at him with a playful smile.

"So… Zangya told me all about what happened after I got shot in the chest," the raven haired girl said in a rather sly tone as she stepped around to stand in front of the hybrid. Taking a moment to admire his bare chest, the tomboy then tilted her head, "She said that you went bat-shit crazy when you thought I'd been killed and you started kicking Set's tail across the entire galaxy."

Taking a slight step back and laughing nervously, Gohan cleared his throat when he noticed Videl slowly closing the gap between them. "Yeah. Well… several galaxies actually. The whole thing's still a bit of a blur to me." She soon got so close to him that there was only an inch of space left between them. This caused the Saiyan teenager to lean back ever so slightly and chuckle some more, especially when his friend batted her eyes at him. "Let's just say things got a little crazy for a moment. Sorry if I scared you or anything…"

Videl grinned, "I wasn't scared. In fact… I thought that what you did for me was rather sweet." She then took another step closer, her hands held firmly behind her back. "Even though you did end up trashing an enormous part of the universe, I'm honestly glad you reacted the way you did."

The young Saiyan arched an eyebrow, "Really?"

"Uh-huh. Your little flare-up told me a lot of things that you weren't able to say to me before," the tomboy replied, a shade of red appearing on her cheeks as she took a moment to contemplate what she was going to do. However, all remaining issues of self-confidence quickly vanished when she saw the innocent and inquisitive stare the young warrior gave her, which allowed her to dispense all doubts and prompted her to take that final step. "And this is what I have to say to one of those things." Without warning or hesitation, she then floated up from the ground and pressed her lips against his in a single, fluid movement.

While the Z-fighters had admittedly seen a lot of crazy shit over the years, the moment Videl leant up to kiss Gohan had to classify as one of the most surprising events the group had ever witnessed. At first all of the martial artists were a little bit slack-jawed at the display, as was the demi-Saiyan receiving the gesture of affection, resulting in a deer-caught-in-the-headlights look followed by his face lighting up like a bulb. But when the moment eventually sunk in, all the members of the troop quickly relaxed and began viewing the situation with their usual demeanors.

Krillin grinned devilishly while Android 18 folded her arms and smiled. Goten and Trunks looked upon the display in complete surprise, with the latter making a gagging face and the former tilting his head curiously. Paprika meanwhile, stared at the duo in amusement, Vegeta looked away with a grunt, and Piccolo, who didn't care much for human expressions of fondness, remained neutral in his position.

Zangya on the other hand, was a mixed bag of feedback.
Though at first bewildered by Videl's boldness in making her move on the demi-Saiyan, the Hera then froze up and crossed her arms over her chest. Her facade taking on a discomforted and pained one, the orange haired girl then glanced away in disappointment, every so often looking back at the pair nervously. Her stomach doing tumble turns inside her ribcage, there was nothing Zangya could do to stop her own cheeks from reddening as her hold around her waist tightened.

Though a part of her wanted to tease them, another part of the Hera was reacting in a completely different way… and it was really starting to bother her.

In the opening seconds, Gohan didn't know how to respond. All he did was stand there and let the whole situation run its course. When he eventually felt the girl's lips leave his and saw her float back down to the ground, all he could do was move his mouth a little, but no words came out.

Unable to contain herself, Videl giggled at the teen's expression and smiled warmly at him, "That's for the first thing." Upon seeing the fighter's mouth close, the raven haired crime fighter beamed brightly. "Is there anything else you want to add to that, Gohan?" Fortunately she didn't have to wait long for an answer.

The instant she stopped talking, the demi-Saiyan wrapped an arm around her, dipped down and kissed her back. Initially balking in surprise, Videl was quick to reciprocate his actions and wrapped her arms around his neck.

The collective response wasn't as pronounced this time. Everyone standing in the area remained as they were, with Goten and Trunks sprouting grins and sucking in their breath for a jeer. But just before they could start singing something as embarrassing as the sitting-in-the-tree verse, Eighteen suddenly came up behind them and slapped her hands over their mouths, preventing them from uttering a word. Apparently she was one of those people who didn't want to ruin a moment, and simply watched on silently like the others did.

Zangya though, recoiling at Gohan's celerity and confidence, frowned a little and turned away, with feelings of awkwardness and envy flooding through her.

When the two broke away sometime later, the Hera looked across at them and bit her lip. "Am I also…?" Her fists clenching tightly, she then shook her head and took a deep breath to steady her tumultuous heartbeat.

Looking at one another intently, the Satan City duo used that opportunity to recover from their little performance before sharing a smile with one another. Those grins were expressions that reflected their most sincere feelings, as well as their satisfaction at finally being able to cross that tacit line.

"Videl?" the demi-Saiyan spoke.

"Yeah, Gohan?"

"Would you like to go on a date sometime?" he asked without a single tremor.

The question filled the raven haired girl's heart with an overwhelming sense of warmth and joy, when then had her nod her head enthusiastically and grin widely. "I'd love to."

"That's… great…" Gohan trailed off, his eyes suddenly becoming half-lidded.

Without warning, the boy swayed on the spot before suddenly keeling over and falling flat onto his back, his impact knocking dust into the air. Seeing the teen collapse had the people standing around him react in alarm and prompted those who were closest to him to rush forward.
Zangya, blinking in bewilderment, stared down at the demi-Saiyan's sprawled out form. "I think you killed him."

"That would be a first," Paprika exclaimed, massaging her neck while ignoring all of the other bangs and bruises covering her body.

"Big brother!" Goten yelled frantically, sliding to a stop next to his older sibling. "Big brother! Are you okay?!"

"Gohan!" Videl also shouted, dropping down next to the teen to cradle his head. "Hey! Snap out of it!" After shaking him a couple of times and receiving only a groan for her efforts, she then looked up at the others in fear and concern. "What's wrong with him?"

"Stop panicking, woman," Vegeta replied, glaring down at the girl from his position a few meters away. "The brat's fine."

The teen's sapphire blue eyes reflected her distress, "B-But…"

"It's okay, Videl," Piccolo interjected next, standing alongside the youngsters as the most worried members of the team looked to the Namekian for counsel. With his arms crossed over his bare chest, the green warrior gestured to his out cold student and began relaying to them the situation. "He just fainted. The battle with Set must have really taken it out of him. Just let him rest for a little bit."

Videl, her expression mirroring those worn by Goten and Trunks, stared back at the Namekian nervously. "A-Are you sure?"

"He looks pretty beat up," the lavender haired child spoke, looking down at his older brother figure to see him lying there with his body all wrecked and his face half-burnt. Taking all of these damages into account, you could understand the kid's present woes.

Standing alongside the former guardian of earth, Krillin beamed reassuringly at the children. "Don't worry. I've seen Gohan go through a hell of a lot worse over the years. He'll be alright."

Head perking up in realization, the short fighter then reached into his pocket for his collections of miracle beans. It was only after tugging at his pant leg that he saw several large holes had been torn out of his training gear. "Ah, crap. I lost the Senzu bag. They must've been pulverized after I was sent bouncing across the desert."

Piccolo, hearing his comrade's plight, nodded in understanding. "Don't worry. We'll take the kid up to Dende and have him checked out." And maybe get him a sandwich afterwards.

Kai only knew how famished the kid would be after the fight he'd just had. Knowing how typical the Saiyan metabolism was, the Namekian wasn't going to put it past the demi-Saiyan to run straight for the kitchen the second his pilot light was back on.

Hearing the man's plan of action, Videl quickly turned to stare back down at her crush and best friend of seven years. While initially showcasing nothing but worry and uncertainty for the unconscious Gohan, the girl then smiled brightly when she saw he was quietly snoring away, and held his head gently in her arms.

As the group slowly gathered their wits and caught their breaths, atop the terrace overlooking the desert, the liberated, teal-skinned prisoner Whis, still bearing the marks of the trouncing he'd received earlier that day, watched the Z-fighters' actions from afar. Upon seeing the young warrior responsible for defeating his former student collapse from sheer exhaustion and have his head...
cradled by the ones he cared about most, the martial arts master and guardian of the universe allowed a small smile to creep across his face.

"Son Gohan… what an interesting young man," Whis whispered, eyes reflecting both intrigue and wonder. After playing back all of the awe-inspiring events he'd witnessed from that battle, the man knew without a shadow of a doubt that he would be hearing a lot more about this young man in the future, as well as the friends and family he surrounded himself with.

When he saw the team of fighters take flight several minutes later and head towards the planet's lookout, the wounded attendant telepathically shut the pyramid door with a wave of his hand, summoned a new staff out of thin air, tapped it against the ground and, using it to support his weight on account of his fractured leg, vanished in a flash of light. His body shot up into space in the form of an ethereal pillar, which carried him all the way back to the domain of his student, Lord Beerus.

All things considered, it'd been a hell of a long day.

XXX

(Meanwhile)

Deep in Vulpan space, well out of reach of the northern quadrant and hidden behind a super cluster of galaxies, the forest-covered planet Corvus continued to drift quietly through the vacuum of the cosmos. Surrounded by all the wonders of the universe, including the enormous eagle-shaped nebula known as the Doorway of the Gods floating in the background, the residents of the planetoid were enjoying a time of peace and tranquility. With no alien tyrants or natural disasters threatening to upset the balance of the lone world, the denizens of the lush, sweeping landscapes carried on with their day completely oblivious to the events that'd just taken place several light years away.

However, this fact only applied to the majority of them. On the northernmost pole of the world where the towering black castle sat atop one of the sphere's many mountainous regions, the rulers of the planet and the entire quadrant were just in the process of waking up. The leader in particular, who was currently sitting in the open-air throne room at the top of the tower, was enjoying several plates of assorted foods and drinks, with a clear view of the world's stunning landscapes and the galaxies silhouetted in the clear blue sky beyond her archways.

Adorned in a white and rather revealing Saiyan battle garb resembling a one-piece swimsuit, cut to show off her taut stomach and ample cleavage, with shoulder pauldrons, a cape, standard gloves and boots, and a golden headband with a red gem sparkling in its center, the raven haired ruler of the quadrant, Sandra, sat with her legs-crossed and a cutlet of some sort of exotic animal on the table next to her. Having enjoyed a long training session and a bath out on the terrace earlier that day, the eighteen-year-old warrior was looking forward to another period of blissful silence and meditation.

Her right-hand assistant, the elderly Namekian dressed in the household battle robes and turban, simply stood off to the side with his hands behind his back and a bird sleeping quietly on his shoulder. Vigilant as always, Gast kept watch over his boss, waiting for any instructions she may have for him.

Judging from how invested she was in her meal though, it looked like she wouldn't be saying anything for a while.

But just as the empress was about to take another bite off of her oddly shaped fork, Sandra suddenly stopped and, eyes widening, her gaze snapped to the side in alarm. Gaze narrowing intently, the battle-hardened woman set her fork down upon her plate, all the while listening to the castle's waterfall patter away and the sounds of the rainforest echoing in the distance.

Even Gast, who appeared to be completely closed off from the world around him, suddenly had his attention drawn in the same direction as well, and his eyes widened in surprise. It almost looked like the pair had seen a ghost.

On the contrary, it wasn't the wildlife or anything in the scenery that'd caught the leader's attention. It was something far more interesting and well out of reach.

"That power…" Sandra thought, her senses honing in on the source of the unexpected anomaly.

Due to their position in space surrounded by so much galaxy and celestial clutter, it was next to impossible for power levels to be felt inside their area. They were practically invisible to everyone. But from outside... that was an entirely different story.

About a full minute after the Saiyan felt the spark of electricity in her head, the floor space several meters away from her opened up and two more figures were elevated into view. As soon as the lift stopped, both Maya and Kure stepped off of the platform, the latter looking incredibly serious whereas the former was carrying what looked to be an arm of roast meat in her right hand.

When the pair approached the center throne to see their boss staring off into space, they knew instantly what must've happened.

"Did you sense it too?" the woman with the cat ears and wearing the blue and white spandex asked.

The female Saiyan nodded affirmatively, "Yes. I did."

"That was a ridiculous amount of energy… almost comparable to yours," Kure led on, her tail wagging excitedly as she moved around her friend's seat and looked upon her with interest. "Who do you think was causing it?"

Processing the feedback she'd received from the burst and allowing it to percolate in her head, a smirk slowly formed on Sandra's face. "There's only one being in the universe that possesses that kind of energy." After sensing it from her closest friend and partner many times before, there was no doubt in her mind that that ki signature belonged to a Saiyan.

The sensation was uncanny.

Feeling a new sense of vigor welling up inside her, the empress then turned back around and eyed her companions eagerly. "It seems that we've found our quarry."

Maya, sensing the excitement growing in her best friend, lowered the roasted arm she was eating and smiled at her. "What's the plan now, chief?" she asked, licking the grease from her lips.

Pushing her plate aside on the floating table next to her, Sandra then looked ahead and held her hand out. A series of 'beeps' quickly echoed throughout the chamber, followed immediately by a blue, transparent hologram appearing in the air, which then circled the entire room. With various windows and other screens opening up, displaying countless numbers and applications, the Saiyan Empress, using the airborne touch screen system, accessed one of the programs and opened it up. The entire room was soon filled with multiple floating lights, all of which represented countless galaxies, nebulae and star systems of an interactive, universal chart.
Amidst the blue stars filling the chamber, a red light suddenly appeared around one of the galaxies and began to blink, drawing the group's attention towards it.

Sandra pointed at it with her finger. "The scanners we set up outside of our sector picked up the energy signature as well. It's coming from the Laniakea Supercluster in the very heart of the Northern Quadrant."

Taking control of the computers, the technically proficient Kure zoomed in on the collection of galaxies, isolating a single one out of the many hundreds in sight. When she got close enough to the source of the anomaly, she stopped and narrowed her eyes on the hologram while rolling the toothpick between her lips thoughtfully.

"Barred spiral galaxy; position 5861:42, sector seven on the registry, just several clicks away from the Milos Nebula and the Andromeda System." She then glanced over at her leader to see the Saiyan Empress listening intently. "From our position, it should take about a couple of months through slip space to get there."

Nodding her head in understanding, Sandra rested her elbow on the armrest and gave the star map one last look. "Then that's where we'll go. Has the computer got an exact lock on those coordinates?"

Kure smiled fervently. "She's transferring the information to the core as we speak."

"Very well then. Have all hands prepare for jump." A smirk then appeared across the Saiyan's face as she gave the system a keen stare. "We're going hunting."

"Yes, ma'am," the cat woman exclaimed, zooming out of the star system so that they could see both quadrants spread throughout the room. A red dotted line then marked the way between them and the galaxy in question, telling the group exactly where they had to go. As the systems primed, a loud humming sound filled the air as the world began preparations for travel.

It was a long journey for sure. But Sandra and her crew were confident that they would be able to make it.

After all, this wasn't the first time they'd done this.

Getting comfortable in her seat and crossing her legs the other way, the leader was then about to get back into her breakfast until her attention was quickly switched over to Maya. When she saw her hedgehog-haired friend continue feasting on the arm of meat she was holding, the raven haired woman quickly grew curious and raised an eyebrow at the Saiyan.

"What the heck are you eating?"

Looking back at her companion in surprise, the dark-skinned warrior then inspected the roast limb she was holding before looking back up. "Saibaman."

"Ah."

Pumped and ready for action, the excited crew quickly settled in for a long flight.

Opening up in orbital distance of the spiral arm planet, a massive black sphere encased in blue energy suddenly appeared alongside the forest-covered world. The mass growing larger and larger by the second, the black hole effortlessly outgrew Vulpan's surrounding moons until it became three times the size of the satellite. As soon as it'd gained stability, the slip space rupture then sucked the entire planet into its center, swallowing it and its moons in one go, before closing up moments later in a burst of blinding light.

In a span of about eight seconds, the entire world had vanished completely into another dimension, leaving no trace of the planet behind.

The hunt was on.

XXX

(Sometime later)

For the battered and wounded Z-warrior, getting to Kami's Lookout was a piece of cake. It's what came immediately afterwards that turned out to be somewhat of a problem.

As expected of one of their group's most valued and trusted members, Dende was able to perform a brilliant patch job on each and every one of the fighters. While those with the most glaring injuries took a little bit longer to heal than the others, once the process was completed, every single member of the team that'd been involved in the day's tussle came out of the treatment looking better than ever.

However, when the young Namekian performed his magic on Gohan's comatose form, the teenager didn't regain consciousness.

Initially this news had Videl and a couple of the other group members panicking. But after Piccolo explained to them that Gohan was possibly experiencing some sort of temporary relapse from his sudden transformation and was just powering down for a little while, the others relaxed. Dende also concurred with this analysis and informed the team that their friend would be up and about sometime in the next couple of days.

This all then led to the group's second and possibly biggest concern, and that was fixing up all of the damages caused by Set.

Now, while making repairs to parts of the universe wasn't exactly their area of expertise, the Z-fighters still knew that it this was their responsibility and that many innocent people had been killed in the wake of the goddess's revival. This being the case, the next step that they would take immediately following the battle's end was grab the dragon radar from Bulma's place, go for a quick hop around the planet, gather the orange globes, summon the mystical beast, and have Shenron fix everything up. The routine was quick and simple. But that's when their next problem soon came up.

It's been less than a year since the Zeru incident and the sacred treasures hadn't been given enough time to power up since their last usage. That meant that they were unable to bring back any of the people that'd been killed during Set's rampage or recreate any of the galaxies that'd been wiped out. Almost instantly after hearing this news, the can-do members of the group quickly found themselves stuck in front of a wall.

But then, from out of the blue, a miracle happened.

The battle between Gohan and Set had been such an explosive hit that almost the entire universe had tuned in to watch the conflict. Intergalactic empires and civilizations aside, almost every single authoritative figure up in Otherworld had also been in attendance of the battle and, just as the Z-fighters were in the process of figuring out what to do next, King Kai decided to make his contribution to the struggle.

Through efficient telepathic contact with the overseer of the Northern Quadrant, the Z-fighters were able to rally the people of the distant Namek and have the elder of the far off world summon Porunga to mend all of the damages. Granted the dragon was slightly miffed about having to bring back several galaxies, which took a substantial amount of time and energy, it was easy for him to bring back the people that'd been killed by Set and her minions.

Thankfully, the Namekians had had ample enough time over the last seven years to improve upon their dragon balls and make Porunga's wish-granting abilities more wholesome. The only downside to this system was that, because of the enormity of the wishes, the dragon balls of Namek would be out of commission for an even longer period of time. But as long as the dragon was able to fulfill the group's requests, then that was good enough for them.

Once the deed had been done and all of the damages had been repaired, King Kai signed off and allowed the Z-fighters to return to their business.

Across the sweeping fields of Grand Kai's planets, all of the people that had gathered to watch the conflict with Set were standing behind the blue-skinned trainer and guardian; watching and waiting for the good news. When they heard the man exhale in relief and turn to face them with a smile on his face, the crowd knew instantly that it was all over.

Seeing the expectant look on Goku's own visage drew a nod from the martial arts master. "It's done. The wishes have been made and everything is back the way it was."

With that announcement, feelings of relief and joy appeared on everyone's faces. A clamor started up amongst the warriors in training, all of whom turned to each other and conveyed their reactions over the entire ordeal. The Kais were also pleased, with the Grand Kai nodding his head in approval, as not only had his planet been restored to its rightful state in the celestial plains, but he'd also been present to witness one of the greatest martial arts fights he'd ever seen.

Needless to say, every single person across the cosmos who'd been able to watch the battle from afar had been moved in some way by the epic conflict.

Goku, unable to contain himself, threw his fists into the air and cheered loudly, overjoyed by his son's victory. Once he was done whooping and laughing his heart out, his gaze quickly turned downwards to see King Kai standing beside him with a jolly look of his own in play.

This quickly drew a grin from the spiky haired warrior as he lifted his head with pride, "Well? Didn't I tell yah that my son could do it?"

The short guardian chuckled and raised a hand in consent, "Yes, yes. I know. You told me."

Lowering it slowly, the North Kai's glasses flashed as he craned his head towards his apprentice. "It was a close one, but your son managed to pull it off."

Deciding to be a little bit cheeky, Goku chuckled and tilted his head, "Is there anything else you want to say?"

"Well… aside from telling you to wipe that smug look off of your face, I guess the only thing that's left to say is your kid is one hell of a fighter," King Kai exclaimed, regarding his student with a momentary air of reverence as he brought his hand back around. "With his track record, I have no doubt that he'll become an amazing warrior by the time he reaches your age."

This particular piece of wisdom drew a nervous laugh from the already well-seasoned Saiyan, "Oh yeah. Man. If he's this strong now as a teenager, I can't wait to see what he'll be like all grown up."

Grinning, the short Kai then looked across the sweeping valleys surrounding them. Looking past the dead warriors celebrating the defeat of the goddess and the Grand Kai who could be seen inspecting the ground with his foot, both Goku and King Kai stood side by side and basked in the moment of victory.

"Honestly… I think my son's already grown up," the adult male said with assurance projected from his voice.

King Kai grinned, "Well… he's still in his late teens. Give him a couple more years. This isn't something you want to rush, you know."

"Yeah. No problem." Goku chuckled in agreement.

By the time the fields had cleared and all the Kais had returned to their posts, the universe was right back to where it started.

Once all of the reconstruction had been finalized and the lives that'd been lost that day had been restored, the Z-fighters also returned to earth to carry on with their lives. Not only did they take with them the memories of the most outstanding battle they'd ever fought, but they also returned home stronger than they ever were before.

This went double for the Saiyans, one of whom would not be moving for some time…

XXX

(Meanwhile)

Back at the dig site in the Giza Necropolis, the unconscious Haruko lying sprawled out on the sands groaned when she heard the sound of muffled voices echoing in her head. At least she thought it was in her head, until her vision started clearing up and the blue of open sky began filtering in.

Light and shadows slowly crept across her vision as the dazed blonde batted her eyes and shook her head to hasten her recovery. When the silhouettes crossing her line of sight morphed into faces and the collection of sounds formed into coherent words, the archaeologist was soon back in the land of the living.

"Hey. Haruko. You okay?"

As it turns out, the people she originally thought had been killed were also with her.

Eyes widening when she realized Clyde's face was staring down at her, the once out-cold scientist bolted upright with a gasp. She then groaned a second later when her world swayed and she made a note not to sit up so quickly again. When her brain stopped bobbing enough to regain its bearings, the woman looked across to see her grinning colleague staring back at her and the rest of the dig crew wandering about, wondering what the hell was going on.

"Hey there, chief. How're you feeling?" Clyde asked, placing a hand on the woman's shoulder.

"Huh? What?" Haruko mumbled, looking around with wide eyes to see the pit she was lying in, as well as the tomb sitting open beside her. "W-W-What happened?"

"You fainted chief. We all did," the man explained, pushing his hardhat up his head before gesturing towards the stone monolith next to them. When the woman's eyes landed on the hieroglyphic covered crypt, her co-worker continued speaking. "I just had a chat with some of the boys who were around at the time. Apparently there was some kind of hallucinogenic gas trapped inside the tomb that combusted when it was exposed to the air and sent us all on a wicked acid trip before knocking us out. When we came too, we were all lying across this place with splitting headaches. Pretty freaky, huh?"

"F-Freaky," Haruko mumbled, blinking several more times as she looked upon the stone crypt. When Clyde offered her a hand, she was promptly helped to her feet. Dusting herself down and making sure she still had everything attached, she then set her gaze back onto the ancient monolith. "So… it was … all a dream?"

"Yeah. And man, was it a doozy," Clyde whistled, shaking his head while also sparing a glance at the vault. "I dreamt I was cut to pieces and ended up following this long road down to some sort of temple over an ocean of yellow clouds. When I got there, I my mum and dad in a waiting room, and we all had a great time catching up. I'm telling yah, boss, it was super weird." Allowing for a moment of silence, the main digger nodded his head once before clapping the still befuddled woman on the back. "Anyway, it's all over now. We'd better get back to work. These boulders won't be moving themselves."

Upon informing her of their next course of action, the worker turned heel and ambled his way out of the crater, determined to get his staff back on track. As order was slowly restored to the area and the members of the dig crew were herded back to their posts, Haruko took a minute to think back on all the events that'd transpired before her sudden folly into the realm of unconsciousness.

When memories of the slaughter flashed through her head, including a pillar of blue fire and four human-dog warriors, the blonde archaeologist swallowed nervously and, approaching the old tomb, placed her hand against its surface. After running it over the hieroglyphics and outlines of the figures, while also sparing a glance back over at all the people who'd been involved in the incident, the woman's mind slowly came to rest and a suspicious look formed on her face.

"A dream, huh?" Haruko whispered, before a scoff left her lips and she brushed her hand dismissively across the crypt, her eyes landing on the switch she remembered accidently pushing in. "Yeah right."

OOO

(A few days later)

It'd become so quiet and peaceful across planet earth that any newcomers to the system wouldn't even realize that it'd just been attacked by an evil goddess and her company. This went to show that the efforts and efficiency of the Z-fighters were not to be taken lightly, as well as the attention to detail given by the magical dragons created by the Namekians. It often made you question whether or not there were other worlds out there where the aboriginal populations had created mystical beings capable of granting wishes. However, due to the rarity and uniqueness of fantastical creatures as well as magic in the cosmos, it wasn't surprising that there was only a single known race that was able to create one.

Everything was wrapped up nicely in the end, save for one or two personal matters in the Son household. For one, Zangya had to explain to her bosses back at work that she had been unable to attend the conference on the day Set's minions decided to jump her. She made up some bogus story where her car had an accident along the road and that she had been stranded out in the middle of nowhere. Of course, due to her position and track record with the organization, they allowed her little unplanned side trip to slide. The second issue of course had to do with Son Gohan still being out cold following his epic battle against the God of Storms.

Even after two whole days of nothing, the demi-Saiyan hadn't moved an inch from his bed. Ever since he'd been brought back home from the Lookout, Chi-Chi had been making regular pit stops at his room to check on him, and to make sure he had something to eat and drink at all times. While he'd failed to regain consciousness, the mother still felt the need to provide her oldest son with the appropriate sustenance should he suddenly decide to wake up. Fortunately he hadn't, which meant it'd been incredibly quiet inside the teen's bedroom for the majority of the week. Unfortunately, this also meant that he'd missed out on the day he was supposed to start high school.

The mother made certain to call the institute to inform them that her son had come down with an illness and would be unable to attend classes for the next week, pushing his starting time to next Monday.

Figuring he would be out for a little while longer, Chi-Chi, Zangya and Goten made sure not to disturb the boy while he was resting. But that didn't mean the young hero was left completely alone during the long mornings and afternoons.

On the third day of the boy's recovery, the Son household was graced with the presence of a most familiar guest. Upon touching down on the grass and capsulating her jet car, a casually dressed Lime, sporting a red gingham top, a white skirt, black leggings and brown boots, gave a spirited knock on the front door and waited for the answer. When the entrance opened up and Chi-Chi's head popped into view, the teen quickly smiled in greeting.

"Good morning, Chi-Chi."

"Good morning, Lime," the mother chirped happily, stepping back and opening the door for her guest. A curious expression quickly formed on her face when she looked the teenager over, "I didn't know you would be dropping in to visit today. Why aren't you at school?"

"Oh. I took the day off to come and check on Gohan," the farm girl replied as she was ushered in by the woman. As soon as she was through the door, she gave her host a most sincere smile, "How is he? Has he woken up yet?"

The question prompted the daughter of the Ox-King to shake her head, "Not yet. But he's been stirring quite a bit. If I know my son, which I do, I have a feeling he should be coming around sometime later today."

Lime, hearing this news, beamed brightly, "That's great. I'd really like to be here when he comes too." The girl then peeked into the lounge room through the archway, where she saw the familiar, hulking form of the Ox-King sitting there with his newspaper opened up in front of him. When the man glanced over and waved, the teen waved back and nodded pleasantly.

"I had a feeling you would," Chi-Chi chirped, nodding towards the corridor when the girl turned back to her. "He's in his bedroom right now. I brought him some breakfast and a bucket of water with a moist towel. While you're checking in on him, do you think you could…?"

"Sure. No problem," Lime answered, bowing to the woman kindly before slowly making her way towards the corridor. "Thanks a lot, Chi-Chi. It's good to see you again."

"It's good to see you too, sweetheart," the raven haired mother replied, returning the youngster's cheerful expression in kind and allowing her to be on her way. Upon seeing the teenager disappear down the hall, the woman in the oriental yellow robes and frilly apron sighed and placed a hand upon her hip. "What a lovely girl."

The Ox King, overhearing his daughter's remark, smiled and lowered his newspaper to his chest. "If I didn't know any better, I'd say your son has become quite popular with the ladies."
Craning her head in pride, Chi-Chi allowed a grin to form across her face. "Well, of course he is. He's my flesh and blood. What more can you expect?"

Before anyone could follow up on the woman's little remarks, there was another knock on the door that drew the pair's attention over to it. Caught a little bit by surprise, the mother of the household slowly made her way over and quickly opened it up. When she peaked around the gate, she found herself staring at the dazzling smile of her son's most regular sparring partner. Sporting her trademark over-sized white shirt with purple sleeves and wearing a pair of spandex shorts, Videl beamed right back at the housewife and bowed.

"Hey there, Chi-Chi. Good morning."

The parent's expression brightened. "Good morning, Videl. Have you come by to check on Gohan again?" The answer to this question was an obvious one, but the mother was willing to play the Q&A game for the time being. The teen had been visiting quite often over the last couple of days. This was probably due to the incredibly close bond she and the demi-Saiyan shared with each other.

"Uh-huh," the crime fighter answered quickly. "Is he doing alright? He didn't move a muscle when I was here yesterday."

"He's doing just fine, dear," Chi-Chi replied, her eyes sparkling with delight as she gestured for the teen to come in. As soon as she was through the entrance, the mother promptly shut the door and beamed her way. "He's been stirring and moving around in his futon quite a bit."

"That makes sense. He's always been a restless sleeper," Videl noted, inwardly giggling at the times she remembered sleeping over at the Son house and finding her best friend lying on his bed in the strangest positions imaginable. "At least he lets you know he's okay."

"Frankly I'd be more worried if he wasn't tossing and turning," the mother nodded in agreement. "He takes right after his father in that department." She then blinked in surprise and placed a finger against her chin thoughtfully. "Hmm… I wonder if it's a Saiyan thing to be so active at night?"

In more ways than one apparently. When Goku was still alive, Chi-Chi had found that every time the day ticked over to after-dark, both she and her husband would always engage in very rigorous 'extracurricular' activities, a majority of which had nothing to do with sleeping. The memories of those experiences brought a shade of pink to her cheeks and a dreamy look to her eyes when she recalled their wilder and more daring exploits from back in the day.

Her sudden mumble following her remark drew a puzzled look from Videl. "Uh? Did you say something…?"

Dropping back into reality, the Son mother shook her head and grinned across at the teenager, "No, no. Nothing dear. I was just thinking out loud." Seeing the suspicious look from her latest guest, the diligent housewife cleared her throat and beamed. "Anyway, if we're lucky he might be waking up sometime today."

Videl's expression brightened at the news, "Ah. Awesome. I've got so many questions I want to ask him, I can't wait."

"I had a feeling you'd say something like that." Eyes twinkling when she heard this, the mother then threw her guest a mischievous look and craned her head around to peer into the girl's eyes. When she saw the teenager recoil slightly at the expression being sent her way, Chi-Chi spoke. "By the way, I heard from my youngest son that you and Gohan are… together now. As in; a couple?"
Her little question causing Videl to freeze up, the tigress of a parent then went in for the kill. "Can I expect wedding invitations sometime in the next couple of weeks?"

"W-Wedding invitations?" Face turning bright red, the raven haired teenager stammered, "I… w-…? W-W-We haven't even started dating yet, Chi-Chi. He only asked me out a couple of days ago. We still need a little bit more time before the two of us can even think about getting married."

"Ooh…" A wicked look then flashed through the woman's eyes when she picked something up in the girl's response. "So you're saying that you're already planning on getting married?"

"Huh? Wh…"

"I mean, after seven years of hanging out with each other almost every single day, I wouldn't be surprised if the two of you have already had enough time to develop your relationship and think about other things," Chi-Chi continued on boldly, while at the same time raising a finger in a firm and confident gesture of assertiveness. "After all, a strong marriage is built upon strong foundations of love, friendship and fondness, you know."

Around this point in time, Videl's face had turned scarlet and her posture had become so timid and jittery, you could literally feel the waves of embarrassment and anxiousness wafting off of her.

Sensing she'd dug her fangs in far enough Chi-Chi moved closer and nudged the girl in the stomach. "Should I set a date for early May or April? What color flowers are you hoping to set up along the aisle?"

"I'm going to go check on Gohan now!" Videl suddenly shouted, before quickly turning heel and sprinting out of the room, desperate to escape before the mother took the situation any further.

"Thank you, Chi-Chi!"

Watching the girl disappear down the corridor, the raven haired woman grinned triumphantly. A laugh from the lounge room then drew the mother's gaze towards the couch, where she saw her father chuckling and holding the paper against his stomach. When the old martial artist stopped long enough to glance over at her, Chi-Chi saw nothing but warmth and amusement in his eyes.

"You shouldn't tease her so much, honey. You might end up giving the poor girl a heart attack."

"Ah, she's a tough little thing. I'm sure she can manage," the woman replied with a flippant wave of her hand.

Shrugging, the man with the square glasses and suspenders beamed at his daughter, "So… you didn't tell her about your son's other visitor?"

Chi-Chi got another evil glint in her eye as she threw her father a smirk, "Nope." She then crossed her arms over her chest, stuck her nose in the air, and nodded confidently. "My boy is in a very intriguing and exciting situation at the moment. I want to see how this thing plays out." And when she spoke in that tone of voice, you knew that only trouble could come of it.

---

(Moments earlier)

Quietly closing the door to Gohan's room, Lime slowly made her way over to the futon where the teen was lying. When she saw the young fighter lying under the covers with a tray of food sitting nearby along with a bucket of water, the casually dressed farm girl smiled and, tucking some stray hairs behind her ear, knelt down beside his head.
"Hello, Gohan," Lime whispered, getting comfortable before leaning forward to beam down at him. From the way he looked, eyes closed and his breathing steady, you wouldn't even think he'd gotten into one of the most spectacular fights the earth had ever seen. "I missed you at school. Did you get into some trouble again?" Even though she knew he couldn't hear her, the girl still held out hope that he was able to in some small way.

Staring at him for a few seconds and watching the boy dream away, the girl then blinked when she noticed something and reached over, placing her palm against her forehead.

"He's running a bit of a temp." It wasn't a fever. That much she was certain. It was probably from the climate seeping in from outside.

Glancing over at the wall, the girl quickly scampered over to it and switched on the overhead fan. Once she got the air circulating in the room, she then went over to the bucket, knelt down next to it, and plucked the towel from its edge. After unfolding it, she then gave it a quick dunk before twisting it between her hands and squeezing out the excess water.

"Days like this where the heat gets to you inside the house can be pretty annoying," Lime murmured, smiling as she slowly folded up the cloth. "I don't remember you ever coming home unconscious after a fight, Gohan. Every time you and your friends were done with an opponent, you always came back with a ruined outfit, but your body looking better than ever. The person you fought this time must have been absurdly strong." After folding the towel into a perfect rectangle, the girl sighed happily. "It must be tough being the hero." She then moved to place the cloth over the sleeping demi-Saiyan's head, only to realize her face was now only a foot above his. Her eyes widened slightly in surprise, "Huh? When did I get this close to him?"

Swallowing nervously as her heartbeat quickened, Lime quietly laid the towel over his forehead and beamed.

"I wonder if he knows I'm here? Gohan-kun?"

The boy had the tendency to be surprising. Due to his unique and vast skill set, the girl wouldn't put it past him to be able to sense his surroundings, even in sleep. However, figuring that this was one of the only times he would be somewhat normal, the visiting teenager decided to throw all caution to the wind and moved a little bit closer.

Cheeks growing warmer by the second, Lime gripped the floorboards with her fingers tightly. "He always looks so cool when he's fighting and training. But seeing him like this…" Biting her bottom lip as her heartbeat quickened, causing her to press her hand to her chest, Lime murmured anxiously. "Aaahn... geez. His face is so cute. Maybe... since he doesn't know that I'm here. No... I shouldn't..." Straightening out his blanket, the farm girl tried to think about something else to distract her. However, after several fruitless attempts to move her thoughts to a different subject, the girl gasped. "Oh, the heck with it..." Thinking she was not going to get another chance like this, Lime then closed her eyes, took a deep breath, and leant down till her lips were just an inch away from his. "Here I go-"

"WHAT THE HELL ARE YOU DOING?!!" a new voice suddenly shouted from behind.

In all her years of living, Lime had never moved so quickly in her life. Almost instantly upon hearing Videl's outraged voice cry out from the doorway, the farm girl found herself sitting stock straight on the other side of the futon a couple feet away from Gohan's pillow. When her owlish gaze fixed upon the entrance, she saw her red-faced, raven haired friend glaring right back at her, huffing like a wolf.
Taking in a deep breath, Videl stomped into the room and confronted the brown haired intruder. "The heck with what? What was that all about?!" Looking the startled teen in the face, the short-haired fighter narrowed her eyes, "And why in the world were you sitting so close to Gohan? Aren't you supposed to be nursing him?"

Swallowing nervously, the abashed visitor pressed her fingers together nervously and looked down like a scolded child. "Well… I was… but then…" Cheeks turning red, Lime smiled and glanced away with an expression that was just too pleasant for Videl's liking. "Things just started… happening…"

"Things… jus-?" Mouth opening and closing a couple of times, Videl then gritted her teeth and said in a very loud voice, "What are you even doing here? You just started at Orange Star High a couple of days ago! Aren't you supposed to be in class?"

Shuffling anxiously, Lime then gave Videl an inquisitive look of her own. "What about you? Why aren't you in school right now?"

When she was just about to make some form of comeback, the tomboy then stopped when she realized exactly what she was going to say next and blushed. "I… uhh…" Taking a moment to rethink her options, not really wanting to spill the beans so early, Videl pulled away and cleared her throat. "Well… since I'm Gohan's best friend and his partner in Satan City's police force, it is my responsibility to make sure that my co-worker is doing alright. It's also customary that I check up on him whenever possible."

Lime, not too convinced by the girl's stuttered reply, narrowed her eyes suspiciously. "Uh-huh."

Deciding to prove that she was here solely for medical intentions, the raven haired teen reached over, plucked the cloth from Gohan's forehead and dunked it in the water. "Let's start with cooling him off. You have to make sure the towel is properly ringed out before placing it on the patient's forehead-"

"I already did that," Lime said, her frown growing little by little as she watched the girl trying to maintain a professional air squeeze the cloth dry. "Just want to point that out."

Huffing irritably, Videl hastily laid the towel over Gohan's forehead and, after pulling away his blanket, took his hand in hers. "I wonder how his pulse is-"

"You know, you shouldn't move him so much when he's sleeping," Lime interjected a second time, her mind working out that Videl wasn't just here for business and that she had, in fact, ulterior motives in mind. As Videl's face became even more flustered, the farmer's daughter knew that she was right on the mark. "Plus his mum says he's fine, so you don't need to…"

Sweating even more, Videl then set the boy's arm down and checked his face, "His air duct is clear, and his pulse and temperature are normal-"

"We're not in a hospital," Lime interrupted, now staring oddly at the girl desperately trying to save face with the audience. "And I don't recall you training to become a nurse, Vi."

Now feeling really silly, the crime fighter stared ahead of her quietly for several seconds. When that time eventually passed, the girl threw her fists up and punched the air in frustration. "What-what-what?! I just came out here to see him, that's all!"

A smirk of triumph formed across Lime's lips as she watched the girl lose her composure completely, "Too bad. I got here first."
"Why are you treating me like I'm some sort of criminal?!"

"Because you're acting like one. That's why."

"Well… it doesn't matter! Gohan and I are a couple now," Videl stated, glaring across at her competition heatedly. "He asked me out two days ago!"

"So?" Lime asked, not at all shaken by this, "That doesn't mean you two are officially together. As long as he isn't tied down, he's still ripe for the picking." This was Gohan they were talking about after all; earth's greatest champion and her savior. There was no way she was going to let the greatest guy in the world and the boy she'd fallen in love with slip away so easily. "Just because he's partnered up, doesn't mean he's been taken off of the board."

Even if she had to go through Videl Satan herself, she didn't care.

"Besides… I knew him first."

"Well… I kissed him first! That means our relationship is two steps ahead of yours! So there!"

"What, are you bragging now?"

Just as electricity started to crackle between the pair and two clouds of unsettling auras began to waft off of their bodies, any and all potential for a catfight was quickly killed when the sound of someone's throat being cleared drew their attention towards the door. When Videl and Lime looked across the room, they saw a casually dressed Zangya wearing a purple turtleneck and a pair of jeans standing behind them with her arms crossed.

Leaning comfortably against the doorframe gazing in, the orange haired Hera shook her head when she looked upon the startled looks of the two girls. "Aren't you guys being a little bit too noisy in here? Gohan's trying to sleep."

Stiffening slightly at the serious look the young woman threw at them, the teenagers then watched as the newcomer slowly eased her way into the chamber and knelt down on the other side of the futon next to the demi-Saiyan.

"Hey, Zangya," Videl greeted, watching nervously as the newcomer tended to the half-Saiyan, "We were just… uhh…"

"Oh. His towel slipped off." Fixing her attention squarely on the spiky haired man under the blanket, Zangya picked the cloth up, folded it, and laid it out across his forehead. While she did so, she then proceeded to chastise the frazzled teenagers. "Geez. What are you two girls doing arguing so much? You lose points…"

It was that little remark at the end that had Videl and Lime stare at the alien strangely. "Lose points?" they both thought.

What exactly did she mean by that?

"And here I thought you were trying to make a good impression on him. But judging from the way you two are carrying on, I think you guys are going to need a bit of work." As the two confused martial artists were trying to decipher the woman's cryptic comments, Zangya sat back on the wooden floor and smirked across at the pair kneeling side-by-side. "Still, I am genuinely curious as to why I could hear you and Lime practically screaming at each other from the other end of the hallway. Since you're both in Gohan's room and looking like you were about to rip each other's throats out, I have to assume it has something to do with him." She then gestured to the young man in emphasis of this fact.

Not knowing what to say at the start, a stammering Lime spoke up, "Well… w-we were just…"

"Talking about how we should be looking after him so that he can recover faster," Videl hastily replied, knowing full-well that it was a shocking excuse. "Yeah. If he doesn't get up soon, he's going to miss out on a lot of important stuff at school, so… you know…"

And of course Zangya didn't buy it for one second. The Hera chuckled at the disconcerted expressions on their faces before looking across at them with a calm aura falling over her. "There's no need for the double-glazing. I know exactly why you two are fighting." Seeing the pair suck in their breaths gave the exact reaction the orange haired fighter was looking for. Upon sizing them up, the former mercenary looked down at the sleeping Saiyan in front of her and, after getting a good look at his face, a warm smile tugged at her lips. "It almost seems like forever since I first met Gohan on that island. When I saw him standing in the middle of that courtyard dressed in orange and blue, I didn't think much of him. I just saw him as some over-confident brat with a silly haircut…"

Glancing across at their would-be rival, Lime and Videl gave each other a confused look before turning back to stare at the newcomer. At first they thought the alien fighter was going to admonish them for making so much noise or tease them for being childish or something. But as the hands on the clock continued to wind around, they soon realized the full depth and seriousness of the circumstances they found themselves embroiled in.

"But then I got to spend time with him… and as the days rolled by… things started to change. I enjoyed hanging out with him here in his home, watching him work, and after weeks of training together and talking, we soon became good friends," Zangya exclaimed, her eyes reflecting a very familiar glow as she gazed fondly down at the sleeping teenager. Tempted to reach down and brush that signature bang of hair that sat over his forehead, the woman reframed from doing so as she continued to speak her mind. "Every time I look at him I always think to myself how such a tough, powerful guy, who's more than capable of turning an entire galaxy into a cloud of dust, could be so kind and gentle at the same time."

Lime, hearing this loud and clear, smiled warmly, "Easy. Because he's Gohan." She too then looked down at the teenager, leaning forward and resting on her hands so that she could get a good look at his face. "It's the kind of person that he is. He's always so brave when he steps out onto the battlefield to fight for his friends. But when he's like this, inside and away from all the action, he looks just like any other guy… only cuter." Pressing her legs together and tensing up slightly, a shade of pink then appeared in her cheeks as she said her next bit with both confidence and certainty. "Maybe that's why I like him so much…"

Caught off guard by the girl's words, Videl remained quiet as she stared across at the teen who was now regarding Gohan with the utmost respect and admiration. "Lime is open and easy to read, so I know exactly how she feels about Gohan." The realization that her friend from the mountain village had also developed strong affections for the demi-Saiyan put a knot in her chest unlike any she'd ever felt before. Though the situation wasn't at all surprising and sat well within the realm of reason, the thought still left her with a gut-wrenching sensation that filled her with both anxiousness and unease. "I can understand her completely. But Zangya…" Videl continued, her eyes panning over to the elven woman and fixing upon her smiling face. "How does she feel about Gohan?"

Continuing to beam at her sleeping sparring partner in silence, Zangya suddenly sprouted a grin and nodded towards the hybrid with an air of respect, "Fearless on the battlefield… kindhearted in life." Settling her jumbled nerves, the Hera-seijin tilted her head at the boy. "Changes like that… have the ability to pull women in."

These words and the look that appeared in the female warrior's eyes caused Videl to react in momentary alarm. "W-What does that mean?" She was so stumped by the woman's remarks that she was having trouble gathering her own thoughts together. With so many alarm bells going off here and there, it made the task of maintaining her composure all the more complicated. "D-Does Zangya also…?"

Before she could get a word in or finish her train of thought, the orange haired fighter glanced in her direction with a sly looking smile. "From the way you two are acting, I'd say both of you have been well and truly hooked by this guy's claws… especially you, Videl." She then grinned at the crime fighter. "And it seems like you've sunk your talons into his skin as well."

Acting restlessly, the raven haired girl retreated a little and looked down at the floor, "Y-Yeah… I guess I have." A sweet smile then formed on her face.

Seizing her opportunity to land a few jabs, the sweater wearing Hera leaned back on her hands and threw the pair of teenage girls a mischievous glare. "I suggest you hang onto him tightly. From what I can see… you've got some serious competition coming in that might give you some trouble." She then eyed Lime in particular, who quickly turned to stare back at her in confusion. "Why don't you two go outside and finish your little argument girl-to-girl. I'll stay here and watch over him until you're done."

Slightly taken aback by the woman's words, Videl and Lime took a few moments to analyze the situation before fixing the sneaky orange haired fighter with a glare.

"Oh-ho! No way!" the former shouted. "You think we're going to leave you here alone with him after what you just said?!"

Zangya quickly threw up her hands, "Hey, hey. I'm just thinking about what's best for Gohan here. I believe a little bit of peace and quiet can go a long way for him." She then lowered her arms and raised her head, "Not to mention some pleasant company as well."

From the tone of her voice, those words could have meant a whole lot of things. To the girls sitting right next to the boy, they only heard one thing… and they didn't like it one bit.

"If it's a friend he needs, then it's going to be me!" Lime stated firmly. "No way!" Videl shot across at the brown haired girl, sneering when she saw her turn in her direction, "I'm his girlfriend now! So if anyone's going to be staying with him, it will be me!"

"In your dreams, hawk girl." She then snapped in the direction of the blue-skinned woman and pointed at her. "And you! Go away and do something else for a while!"

Zangya shrugged, "Why? I don't have anything important going on. Where should I go?"

"I don't care! Anywhere but here!"

Just before the fight between the women could escalate into anything more, they were suddenly interrupted by the echoing of footsteps rushing down the corridor. The instant all eyes in the room turned towards the entrance, they suddenly saw a shockingly familiar person appear in the doorway. It first took Videl and Zangya a moment to recognize the silver plug suit with glowing blue nodes, but once her long, glowing hair floated out of the way, both young women backed off and gawked at the newcomer in disbelief.

"W-What the heck-?" Zangya barked. It was like she was starring down an old nightmare.

"GAH! It's you!" Videl also shouted, scooting back a bit while Lime stared at their newest visitor in puzzlement. "Y-You're that alien that attacked my father!"

Looking incredibly on edge, as soon as Kana's eyes fell upon the group of people in the room and spotted the half-Saiyan lying underneath the futon, a gasp soon emanated from her lips before she dove for his side. "Gohan! Are you okay?" Instantly dropping to her knees next to him, the Seirei wasted no time in thrusting her hand out and activating her suit's inbuilt scanners. As soon as the orange hologram jumped up and began relaying her all sorts of readings and numbers, namely medical based results, the newcomer allowed a relieved grin to form across her face. "Oh, good. You're alive." Sighing, the alien then glanced up at the other three people in the room. Blinking a couple of times at the stares she was receiving from the collection of females, a pleasant smile then appeared on her face. "Hello."

"H-Hello?" Lime responded, not knowing who this girl was. Determined to change that, the brown haired martial artist in training swallowed nervously and ventured forward, "Who are you?"

"Oh. Sorry. Where are my manners?" Acknowledging the question appropriately, the traveler from the stars bowed her head in greeting towards the young girl and began with her customary introductions. "My name is Kana; I am a part-time privateer and freelancer for the Planet Trade Organization that resides over the four quadrants of space. I am also a good friend and former rival of Gohan's… as well as his future mate." To emphasize that last point, the light user reached down and gently wrapped her hands around the unconscious Saiyan's palm in a comforting gesture. When she beamed at the boy, she completely missed the surprised blink from Lime and the baffled ones being thrown at her by both Videl and Zangya. "When my senses picked up an enormous surge of power coming from this sector, I knew almost instantly that it had to be Gohan, so I flew over here as quickly as I could."

It took a couple of seconds for the processing to take place, but when Lime and Videl eventually figured out what this Kana girl meant by 'mate', their faces flashed a deep shade of scarlet. Zangya's did as well when she also figured out the concept for herself, leaving her kneeling there staring at the girl with her mouth agape and shoulders slumped.

"M-M-M-MATE?" Videl choked out, this being the first time she'd ever heard that word used in this kind of context. Her response was almost an exact mirror image of Gohan's when he first heard the word from Kana six to seven years prior. Quickly growing frustrated when her normal instincts soon kicked in, the teenager then shot the woman a snarl, "Like hell you are!"

"Oh? Do you disagree?" Kana asked, tilting her head at the obviously flustered girl.

"Of course I do!" Videl snapped, pointing at the intruder threateningly while she continued to smile back at her as if what she'd just said was perfectly normal. "You think you can just waltz in here from out of the blue and start spouting this nonsense inside of his home? Things have changed around here in the years you've been gone, so let me make this nice and clear for you! Gohan is my boyfriend now… got it?"

"Boyfriend?" Allowing the word to slide off of her tongue a couple of times, the galaxy traveler smiled. "Oh. So… in other words… that would make you his life partner here on earth, is that correct?" the Seirei asked, causing the crime fighter to recoil a bit. Upon throwing the youngster a pleasant grin, she then nodded to the short haired girl and saddled up closer to her peacefully snoozing prospect. "Very well. If you have staked you claim over him as his first, then I am perfectly fine with being his second."

"Wait… what? Second?" Videl blurted, not sure what to make of this. "What the heck does that mean?"

"The quadrant of space that I originate from allows for both males and females in society to have multiple life partners. It is a practice that is done on numerous planets, including my own, and is considered a way of life by many. The princess of Orta has seven male life partners, each of whom she loves dearly," Kana stated, looking all proud as she watched the face of the girl in front of her flicker through different shades of red. When the orange scouter appeared over the fiery girl's right eye and blinked through a few paragraphs of information from the earth's databanks, the Seirei smiled, "I understand it is a tradition that is also practiced on this planet. So why stress the little details? I don't mind sharing him."

A long silence soon fell over the room. It was incredibly hard to ignore the bewildered faces on both Videl and Zangya, and even more impossible to overlook Lime's baffled one. It was only after some time was taken to think it over that the latter of the trio took one look down at the demi-Saiyan before then turning to face Videl.

Lime smiled cheerfully, "Considering our options, that doesn't sound like a bad idea."

"Hang on… you're actually agreeing with her?" Videl asked, looking across at the girl as if she'd just grown a second head.

Her friend in the checkered top shrugged, "Hey, if you ever find yourself stuck at the base of a mountain with only two roads to take, the quick and easy path is always the best one, right? Besides…" Lime then shuffled over and took Gohan's other hand, whereas the flame haired visitor continued to watch quietly from the sidelines. "We're not talking about a normal guy here, so why fight with each other when we can simply split the reward evenly?"

Taking a little bit longer to register to the words herself while Videl continued to look like a stunned guppy, Zangya then turned to the crime fighter with a more collected expression slowly coming into play. "She actually makes a fantastic point."

The Champ's daughter's gaze snapped in the Hera's direction, "Oh, don't you start!"

Sharing a grin with Kana, which she gladly returned, Lime then held up her hand, "I call dibs on being third!"

"DON'T JUST GO MAKING DECISIONS LIKE THAT IN FRONT OF ME!" Videl practically screamed, her hair standing on end while her cheeks glowed red with fury. "THIS ISN'T UP FOR DEBATE!" As it currently stood, she was very gradually losing touch with the reality she was brought up believing to be the absolute norm in society. But now that aliens from different corners of the universe were getting involved, she found herself being sucked into a culture and way of life that she just wasn't used to.

Lime was more receptive to the idea than she was and, as a result, she was steadily losing ground in the argument.

Now it sounded like fighting over Gohan was just a trivial and pointless matter.

"Come on, Videl. I think this girl is making a lot of sense," Lime exclaimed, imploring to the girl's more logical and diplomatic side while she continued to hold her spot alongside the half-Saiyan. When she saw the flustered girl look at her, she leaned towards her and smiled sweetly, "It's a fair deal. I mean… what have you got to lose?"

In order to get a better scope on the situation, one had to look at this entire situation from a distance. Upon calming her nerves and forcefully halting her irritated huffing, the crime fighter from Satan City took a moment to analyze the competition.

Videl loved Gohan. She could admit that freely in her head. The fact that he reciprocated her feelings instantly and asked her out immediately afterwards proved that he had feelings for her as well, if his intergalactic outburst against Set wasn't proof enough already. However, relationships were a fickle thing and love could be expressed in more ways than one. The meaning could also be twisted and warped depending on the degree it was given and received.

As of right now, what Videl could see was that there were a few girls out for her crush's heart and she could list them all off of the top of her head one after the other.

All Paprika wanted out of life was to watch Gohan drift in and out of consciousness while he was slowly disemboweled. Videl dismissed her immediately.

Lime, who'd known Gohan since before she'd even met him, was vibrant and cute, and when dressed in the right outfit, could pull off being either hot or dazzling. She was a year younger than them and, while she was nowhere near as strong as the crime fighting youth or could even be considered to be in the same league as the Z-fighters, she more than made up for her shortcomings with enthusiasm, intelligence, and energy. What was also scary was that she was receptive about her feelings towards Gohan and, if push came to shove, Videl knew that she wouldn't hesitate to move in for the kill.

However, while the farm girl was indeed passionate and lively, her personality didn't even come close to being as open as Erasa's, who was notorious for flirting with Gohan every time the two of them were together. You didn't need to take her physical strength into account since it was practically non-existent, but the girl had something that neither Videl nor Lime had. She could rely solely on her good looks to sway the game in her favor and, if you factored in her bubbly and cheerful personality, she was a perfect match for any man in any division. It's what came with the territory of being the hottest girl in school and the best friend to Videl Satan. Though her true feelings towards Gohan were an enigma, she was aggressive and fearless, something that Videl considered a major threat.

Then there was Zangya. She was older and much more mature than any of the other girls in their group. However, while she did have experience and good looks on her side, as proven by her profession, she had a short temper, she was brash, acted more like a boy than anything else, and was completely hopeless with technology. In the span of about three months, she'd managed to ruin a perfectly good microwave and a fully functioning, five-thousand zeni oven. Earthling incompetency aside, she was still knowledgeable in other areas of life, especially fighting, and she was the second/third strongest fighter on the planet. What's more, she seemed to be rather passive aggressive in her feelings towards the demi-Saiyan and, despite fighting in her own bracket and not showing much interest, Videl suspected she was working her way in from a blind spot.

She didn't know much about this Kana girl. However, the raven haired fighter knew right away that this alien merchant adored Gohan, as she'd practically traveled across the entire galaxy just to see if he was alright. That pretty much told her everything she needed to know about the Seirei's feelings.

This then left her.

Videl was a textbook firecracker and tomboy. She hated dressing up in fancy clothing, she was hostile towards other men, and she loved to fight. But while this did appear as a form of weakness to some people, this didn't at all affect her relationship with Gohan. In fact, the boy loved her passion, her personality, and her company. They also had a lot in common and could talk to each other much easier than with anybody else. However, there was a catch. While she did consider herself to be as good looking as Lime and Erasa, which she obviously was, they were much more feminine, and more in touch with the latest fashions. If Videl had to accurately place herself amidst the competition, she would have to be in the upper middle.

If she took the hard and treacherous path, she knew she would have to fight against all of them. But right now, two of the girls in the room were making a new proposition and, from the looks of it, it was starting to catch on real quick.

Confidence dwindling, Videl was about to respond to Lime's question when she then noticed another thing while she was sizing up her 'opponents.' From the way the brown haired girl had undid the top buttons of her shirt in an attempt to look good for Gohan, she was able to show off a great deal of her assets. Due to the manner in which she was sitting as well, it made it impossible for Zangya to ignore her appearance either, with both the teen and the Hera staring at the girl's rather prominent chest.

Kana's was also modestly large, but her bust wasn't as big as Lime's. Nevertheless, both Videl and Zangya started staring enviously at the two young women's cleavage before then looking down to check their own.

A split second later the orange haired woman found herself leaning against the wall with her hand against it, her head low and a proverbial raincloud hovering overhead, and Videl sat there, glaring at Lime with her eye twitching.

"Damn it…" both girls thought in unison.

In the midst of feeling absolutely miserable, Kana suddenly teleported over to where Zangya was and wrapped her arms around her. The Hera gave a startled shriek when she felt the cheerful alien rest her chin in the crook of her neck, before then glancing over her shoulder to see the girl leering at her. Their little show in the corner also attracted the attention of Videl and Lime.

"So… you like Gohan too, huh?" the flame haired girl asked in a chipper tone.

"W-What?" Zangya exclaimed, blushing and feeling a little bit uncomfortable from having the former alien invader so close to her. "No! Of course not!"

Kana chuckled, moving her body into the girl's back and causing her to stiffen nervously, "It's okay. You don't need to be so nervous about it. Trust me. If you just open your heart and allow your instincts to guide you, we can all hang out with Gohan together…"

"Th-That's not what I'm miserable about! Get off of me!" the Hera shouted, trying to worm her way out of the girl's grip while she continued to tease her.

Was it teasing? The victim couldn't tell.

"Come on. Loosen up. Let your feelings decide what's best and leave your mind open to trying out new things." She then playfully blew on the young woman's ear, causing a shiver to run up the Z-fighter's spine.

"I don't know what you're talking about! Get away from me, you creep!" By this point the woman's composure was completely gone.
So far the score was exactly how it stood: two of the girls were open to the idea of sharing, one was abstaining, and another one was against the whole thing. Guess which one was which.

In the end, the entire conflict in the room left Lime kneeling quietly on her own looking over her demi-Saiyan crush, whereas Videl sat alone, immersed entirely in her thoughts. Upon further contemplation over the situation, the young crime fighter started feeling hot and bothered in a variety of different ways.

On one hand she was all giddy and excited about being with Gohan as girlfriend and boyfriend, whereas another part of her was clamming up about being with the other girls… and the positives and negatives that came with it…

A lot of these things that came to mind were friendly and good-natured… whereas a lot of the other things weren't exactly considered age appropriate. Videl shook her head fiercely as a result.

The whole situation was raising so many different emotions and feelings inside the raven haired teenager, as well as stuff she never thought she'd even consider. It was beginning to mess with her mentality and all Videl could do was kneel there and squirm with the most annoyed shade of red burning brightly in her cheeks.

It was a good thing Gohan was unconscious for all of this. Because as the noise escalated, all the half-Saiyan did was stir, roll over in his sleep, and start snoring a little bit louder. The yelping and giggling of the girls didn't even bother him one bit…

Chi-Chi, who was standing in the kitchen tending to the family's next meal, could hear everything going on inside her house. Ever since she allowed that Kana girl in through the door after learning she was a friend of her oldest son, a big smile appeared on her face as she started humming cheerful tunes to herself and the sounds of wedding bells began reverberating through her head. A part of her was pleased to know that her son had so many friends and another part of her was ecstatic that he was also so popular with the ladies.

Clearly he had absolutely no problems in the wife-department.

While all this was going on, outside Gohan's window and at the top of the nearby hill where the old oak tree stood, the cowl-wearing form of Paprika could be seen standing there, leaning against the trunk with her arms folded, and staring down at the Son's domain. Upon seeing all of the girls arrive and begin arguing with each other over the unconscious Saiyan, all the white haired demon could do was watch and consider the following words.

"You know, in hindsight, I'm so glad I'm here right now," the young Makyan thought while an amused smile formed on her face.

The trials of love were always entertaining to watch.

XXX

(Meanwhile)

Far across the stars, millions of light years away from earth, in the region of space surrounding Centaurus A, everything was quiet. This uninhabited area of space, made up of nothing but the most vibrant and breathtaking of celestial clusters, drifted seamlessly across the cosmos as just another amateur astronomy target of the many thousands in existence. No matter where you looked, not a single planet in that region of space contained any life whatsoever…

Except for one.
On a large grey planet orbiting the outer rim of a nearby star system, lying in the middle of the sprawling desert, the burnt and battered form of the red-furred goddess of storms Set was on her back, with her face turned towards the sky above. On first glance it looked as though she was dead and long gone from this world. But when her body suddenly jerked and a cough left her lips, the vixen slowly started to come around.

Her eyes fluttering open, the darkness that once clouded her vision disappeared and was quickly replaced by the glittering veil of space. Seeing countless suns stretched out before her, the dazed and wounded goddess coughed several more times and, after shaking her head clear of the rest of her drunken haze, resumed staring at the endless canvas around her.

She was in pain. Every nerve ending in her body was literally screaming bloody murder at her after the hell she'd been put through. If the bruises she'd suffered weren't enough, then the swelling, the burns, the cuts, the torn muscles, the minor hemorrhaging, and the cracked bones definitely played their part. But thanks to her training, the woman was gradually and painfully able to suppress them all, and little by little, the pain started to vanish.

Everyday feeling soon regained control and, once she felt her vitals stabilize, the woman was able to move her fingers.

In part she was relieved to be still alive. After being rammed into a sun traveling at Kai knew how fast she was going, in the state she'd been in when it happened, there was no possible way she could've survived. It had to be some kind of bloody miracle.

However, Set was no fool. She knew exactly why she was still alive and there was only one person she had to blame for her continued existence.

"He beat me," the fox woman whispered, her eyes narrowing on the starry foreground as images of that infuriating Saiyan's face appeared in front of her. "That man… actually beat me." His perfect nose, his snake-charmer's smile, his spiky black hair, and the fury of a warrior burning deep in those mesmerizing eyes… the sight of him captivated and infuriated her at the same time. Fist clenching tightly, the woman brought it up and rubbed it against her bottom lip. Upon removing it, she saw the telltale stain of blood smeared against it.

Analyzing the damage, the humanoid dog snarled as her knuckles popped and cracked, "But he didn't kill me. That son of a bitch!" Slamming her fist into the ground, splitting the rock as a result, the woman rolled over and began forcing herself to her feet. Despite her body protesting at her actions, Set ignored the warning bells and shakily began to rise. "He spared me…"

For whatever reason, some small, insignificant part of that powerful warrior had found it in his heart to hold back that one little bit to keep her from being disintegrated. In spite of all that rage and hatred that'd been coursing through his veins, he still held back a tiny amount of energy to make sure she wasn't destroyed.

But why?

"Did I get lucky?" Set thought, wondering for a moment whether this was merely an act of fate. After thinking over it for several seconds, the vixen shook her head. "No. No way. There's not a person in the universe that is this lucky. That bastard held back!"

Even if he did experience a split instant of hesitation, he sure as hell gave her one heck of a pounding to make extra certain she had second thoughts about coming back for revenge.

Arrogant prick. Did he really think he could scare her off that easily?
Growling painfully as she rose up, the woman stumbled a bit before turning to glare towards the horizon of the planet she was on. Sizing up the vast empty landscape as well as the sparkling heavens above her, the God of Storms took several moments to catch her breath, before rising up to full height and stretching. Her muscles and bones creaked with every movement, signifying her return to full motion.

It only took a few moments before all of her pains melted away, leaving her feeling rejuvenated... or as rejuvenated as one could feel after just regaining consciousness from the ass-kicking of a lifetime.

"I'll show that little bastard," Set stated, her fists tightening even more as she locked onto the distant valley of stars. "You think because you let me live and showed me mercy that I will do the same? I'll show you! After I'm done beating you into a bloody pulp, I'm going to…"

"To do what?" a deep, gargling voice suddenly spoke up, causing the goddess to freeze instantly. Her body stiffening and her eyes widening in horror, Set gaped ahead of her for several moments before steadily swiveling around to look over her shoulder. The instant she did, her eyes landed on an enormous, hulking figure standing in front of a miniature black hole, which closed up behind him and left him standing in the desert a few yards away from her.

Despite the distance laid out between the two individuals, the newcomer still managed to easily tower over the vixen as her eyes trailed up his colossal frame. Eyes moving over two metallic legs to an armored torso and chest, followed immediately by two muscular arms and an iron-clad upper body, Set's eyes then landed upon the person's face. To those who didn't know this figure by name, the sight of his form alone would've sent any person running in fear. But to those who could identify his voice or could at least recognize his image, it not only sent a paralyzing current of fear shooting through their bodies, it also had their faces pale and their sweat run cold. Hell, even Set, allegedly the most powerful goddess in existence, felt her blood chill at the sight of the stranger.

Looking over the metallic implants and cybernetic enhancements jacked into his frame, including the large bars sticking out of his muscles and back, the vixen then started inspecting his face. Spotting both the respirator covering his mouth and nose, the scar on his head and his blood red eyes glaring back at her, the fighter's brain needed a few seconds to process his image before any words could be spoken.

Seeing the terrified look in the goddess's eyes, the grey-skinned alien smirked. "Oh, don't stop on my account. Please… continue." Even with most of his face being covered, from the intensity in his eyes you could tell he was thoroughly amused. Hands placed comfortably behind his back, the alien Korgoth chuckled, "You were saying something about… beating somebody up?"

Merely being on the very precipice of his shadow was overwhelming.

Finding her nerve, Set quickly shook herself out of her daze and, faster than a spring-loaded bolt, spun around to face him completely. "Varax."

"You recognize me? I'm flattered," the hulking alien exclaimed while beginning to amble towards the beaten and bruised fox. His legs making mechanical whirring sounds and loud, echoing clunks with every step, the tyrant approached the goddess. "I suppose Whis and the other Gods told you all about me and our previous encounters. No doubt you learned a great deal about my terrifying exploits over your many years of service as a guardian in this universe."
Set, sweat dripping down her face, glared back at the man furiously as he coasted to a stop in front of her. "Yeah. I also heard that you were a mass murderer and a psychopath… the worst kind of scum to ever exist in this world."

Eyes crinkling in delight, Varax brought up one of his clawed, gauntlet arms and rested its palm over his chest. "Be still, my heart." He then lowered it and bowed towards the woman, who took a cautious step back when he got a little too close for comfort. While staring each other down, the Korgoth's brow lifted in realization, "Oh. My apologies. I don't believe we've had the pleasure of meeting yet. Judging from your state of dress and your enormous power level, you must be the God of Storms, Set; the master of deserts and squalls. It's an honor to finally meet you in person."

Narrowing her eyes, the woman's tail wagged threateningly behind her, "I'm sure it is."

Straightening up, the cybernetic tyrant continued to speak, "I've heard a great many things about you… especially the various accounts of how you were imprisoned inside the Nexus following your failed coup against your fellow deities. Your story is quite the poetic one."

Growing both nervous and annoyed at the way this seemingly pleasant conversation was going, the Dio-jin huffed while taking another step away. Her movements didn't go unnoticed by the Korgoth, who continued to stand before her with his guard down and his hands behind his back. "What the hell do you want?" Set asked. Her face scrunched up, at the same time the man standing opposite her leered.

Blinking at her question, Varax lifted his head and, taking a deep breath through his respirator, began to indulge the flustered woman even further. "The same as you, I imagine; power and control over everything in existence. When I sensed your ki signature appear on the radar, I knew instantly that one of the greatest calamities the universe had ever faced had returned to the land of the living. Almost immediately after your revival, you then attempted to destroy our reality by opening a rift in space to suck everything into the void." This then prompted the man to narrow his eyes upon her. "That is something I'm afraid I cannot allow." At the drop of a hat, the titan's tone changed from casual to downright menacing.

Pacing several steps in retreat, the nervous goddess of storms gritted her teeth. "Oh yeah? And what makes you think you can stop me?" Smirking, she then poked a thumb into her ample chest and shot a look at her intimidating adversary. "Do you think I'm afraid of you, Varax? Don't make me laugh! I am Set; the most powerful and evil being in the universe!" Despite her spirited declaration, the Korgoth didn't even flinch. "I have enough darkness swirling in my heart to drown empires and enough hatred to corrupt entire civilizations! Why should I be afraid of you? An immoral dictator from a long forgotten planet?!!"

Remaining silent following the girl's outburst, the tyrant allowed her words to sink in before giving an exasperated sigh. He then shook his head sadly. "It seems that you have yet to understand what true terror really means."

Set then recoiled in shock. And with good reason.

Without even blinking, the woman saw her adversary vanish into thin air, only to then feel his shadow reappear directly behind her. "Looking for someone?" Varax asked, seeing the girl's eyes snap over her shoulder with a start. Almost instantly the vixen's hand shot up and, with a yell of rage, the goddess fired a powerful orange blast straight into the alien at pointblank range. The attack was so fast and immense that it swallowed up the hulking alien instantly, and shot off of the planet's surface. The blast itself traveled across the entire system, wiping out a moon and a planet along its path. Moments later the laser faded, leaving a wide trench behind the canine warrior and a wall of smoke hanging in front of her face.

Panting from the effort she exerted, Set grinned, "See? Just a pathetic mor-" Her confidence was short-lived. As soon as she saw the cloud part, her eyes widened in bewilderment when she watched Varax emerge from the fumes, still standing in the same place with his hands behind his back and not a single speck of dust on him.

Varax was unfazed.

"Is that all?"

Trembling in fear, it took a couple of seconds for Set to regain her composure. Once her body stopped shaking, the girl let out a fierce battle cry and leapt straight up at the alien. With a roar, the goddess threw a left hook across the alien's face, which connected with a deafening 'crack', followed instantly by a second one when her right crashed into his other cheek. The two blows shook the planet under their force, causing the tyrant to grunt and stumble away after the last hit. From the way his legs crumpled, it almost looked as though Set's combo had shaken him.

But after he staggered away for several yards, the hulking figure stopped, rubbed his chin on the back of his hand, and smirked sinisterly in the vixen's direction.

Set, stunned when she saw that her blows had done no damage whatsoever, cried out in pain and shakily brought her hands up. "A-Augh! What-?" Her arms were completely numb.

Wanting to find out what was causing this, the goddess quickly looked down at her knuckles to see what the problem was. She soon discovered that not only was her hands covered in black bruises, but her knuckles had also been torn open and were bleeding. From the look on her face, it was easy to tell that this was something that had never happened to her before.

"N-No way." Stammering, the deity looked up to see Varax rise to his feet and begin strolling towards her with his hands at his sides.

Cracking his neck from the combo, the Korgoth smirked down at his stricken foe. "The most powerful and evil being in the universe? Please..." Stopping just a couple of meters away from the woman, he watched his opponent step away. "You're just a speck... a child throwing a tantrum because she didn't get what she wanted. There is no real darkness in your heart... just a lot of anger and bitterness towards a world that has failed her."

Not willing to give up yet, Set prepared for another attack. But just as she was rising up to full height, a strange feeling suddenly came over her that had her vision blur. Swaying on the spot, the vixen groaned when a sickly, dizzy feeling struck her, and she stumbled. Trying to regain her balance soon resulted in her dropping to her knee, which then prompted her to reach up and grip the side of her head.

Feeling her strength start to leave her at an alarming rate, the humanoid canine glanced up in alarm, her vision turning double as she attempted to focus. Alas, even with her insane control over her powers, she was unable to recoup her senses, and she slowly started to grow tired.

"What's... happening... to me?" Set stammered, her voice wheezy as she pushed herself to her feet, only to collapse to her knee once again. Panting exhaustedly, her brain quickly worked out who was causing this pain, and her attention soon fixed upon her opponent. "Y-You!"

The hulking, granite-skinned alien chuckled, "Did you honestly think that I would face a God in combat without possessing some kind of an edge?" Watching his foe quiver under his presence, Varax continued his little monologue. "How naïve. I'm not considered the most dangerous being in the universe because of my incredible strength and cruelty… but because I'm the smartest and the wisest of all the tyrants, with a Class 20 intellect and over a hundred million years of experience under my belt. The amount of knowledge that I've accumulated in my lifetime is insurmountable."

The moment he said that, the glass plate on the center of his chest suddenly started to glow brightly and a sickly purple aura began to radiate off of his body.

Feeling another crushing weight fall upon her the moment the man's energy began to waft off of him, Set attempted to stand a second time. However, when she felt even more of her strength dissipate, the woman then perked up when she realized something was off. Her attention soon locking onto the center of Varax's chest, she quickly figured out what was going on.

"How…?"

"Beautiful, isn't it?" the tyrant exclaimed, before then speaking in a condescending tone of voice, "You see my race was born in the very heart of the universe, in a system where the planets orbited around a black sun. The negative-zero radiation emitted by this particular star has the innate and unique ability to neutralize all forms of celestial energy. Simply being in orbit of even a fragment of it is enough to render the strength and abilities of all deity warriors useless." A smirk formed on his face once again. "You could say that it is your Achilles heel."

The sensations getting worse, Set attempted to run. But the moment she stood, her body swayed before falling onto her backside. When she hit the ground, the vixen yelped, and craned her head up to see Varax take a couple of steps closer to her.

"I sliced off a piece of my planet's sun and integrated it into my body, allowing me to make use of its anti-celestial powers. Even though I lack the same strength and capabilities of you deities, thanks to my unlimited resources and experience, I've been able to level the playing field. In other words, I'm bad news for Godly ki users," stopping in front of her, the alien tyrant frowned. "Now you know why your compatriots are so afraid to cross paths with me."

"I… I…" Set groaned, trying fruitlessly to crawl away.

Staring at her for but a moment, Varax suddenly swooped down and grabbed her by the throat. As soon as his fingers wrapped around her neck, he lifted her into the air. The moment he had her dangling several feet above the ground, gasping and struggling for breath, the tyrant spoke.

"Your arrogance blinds you, God of Storms. You have no idea what true evil actually is," the Korgoth hissed, tightening his grip as the vixen clawed and kicked uselessly against his arm.

Watching the woman writhe and gasp for several more seconds, the hulking tyrant leered, "Allow me to educate you. Once I've plugged you into my ship's power core, I'm going to harvest your body for everything it is worth… and then… once you've given me all that you can, I will kill you."

Unable to cry out and starved for air, the vixen punched and kicked at the warrior's enormous arm for several more seconds, before her eyes inevitably rolled back and she blacked out.

Feeling the young woman go limp and sensing her consciousness conk out, Varax smirked in success before turning heel. Carrying her as if she were just a doll, the man then looked towards the sky, watching as a huge black hole formed above him and a large warship emerged from its center. Exiting slip space, the vessel drifted into the planet's atmosphere, passing over the planet and its master's position. As soon as it stationed itself above the desert, a beam of light suddenly shot down from its hull and enveloped the warlord like a scene from a sci-fi film.

The second the light fell upon him, the tyrant was lifted off of the ground and beamed up onto the ship. Once he was safely on board, the light vanished and the ship started moving again. After gaining some distance from the planet, a second black hole opened up and swallowed the vessel whole. In a matter of seconds, it was gone…

(TO BE CONTINUED)

Author's Note: Wow, that took longer than I expected. Oh well. Hopefully I managed to hit all the right notes.

Anyhow we have now reached the end of the arc and have now entered the High school period. And we also see some serious foreshadowing for the chaos to come.

First and foremost, Gohan and Videl are now together as a couple, but the girl has encountered a bit of a problem. Lime, who's also fallen in love with Gohan as well, and Kana, who also has her heart set on him, have moved back in, and Zangya is starting to develop feelings for Gohan as well. This results in a very entertaining encounter and argument in the bedroom.

It's a shame the young Saiyan is still knocked out after his fight, otherwise they'd be all over him.

On a side note - Cards on the table, this story does have a harem element in it. While I'm all for Gohan/Videl, since I'm a long time supporter and fan of them, their relationship has also been poisoned by a terribly executed and forever dreadful canon story line. Everytime I think of Gohan/Videl, I'm constantly reminded of the nerd-Gohan that he's devolved into in the main story line 'shudders'.

But of course, this situation introduces the foundations I was intending. For now this is currently a Gohan/Videl romance story, but it's now evolving and presenting other possible romantic avenues. Nobody ever said the path of romance was easy. There are always going to be obstacles.

I find this to be one of my most preferred genres.

Let's see… we also have Sandra finally setting her sights on earth and heading towards it (or more accurately the planet the Super Saiyan is hiding on), so she won't be showing up for a while, and then we have Varax making his second appearance.

I think Varax is a very interesting character and a personal favorite of mine. Though he is powerful in his own right, about the same strength as Super Gotenks Buu, he's not overwhelmingly strong like the Gods. He possesses intelligence and resources above everything else, knows how to use both to his advantage, and can utilize them to gain an edge over his opponents. The strategy he utilized against Set was a simple but brilliant one, where he used an external energy source he stole as kryptonite against the Godly ki user. It's sort of like Metallo vs Superman in a way. Unlike all of the other villains though, Varax doesn't use blasts and can't fly very fast. His fighting style resembles Mongul's from DC, whom inspired me to create him.

You'd expect someone who's lived longer than any other creature in the universe to have knowledge about such things. All things considered, Set is in real trouble. I wonder what's going to happen now?

Every single villain I designed has a unique fighting style and ability attached to them. Kana was quick, and had light and teleportation at her disposal. Paprika’s fighting skills and strengths are an almost exact mirror image of Garlic Junior's abilities. Sentinel 16 used high-powered artillery, rockets and, being a robot, could sacrifice parts of his body whenever necessary. Zeru, despite its enormous size and slow speed, used beams and force fields to defend itself. The Minions of Set had their own collection of unique abilities, and Set herself has powerful telekinetic capabilities. I think we've got a good mix here.

Anyhow, let's get an update on the stats:

Power levels:

Antagonists

Set, God of Storms – 200,000,000,000 riki (Godly ki 20)

Set, God of Storms (weakened) – 1,000,000,000 riki

Varax – 6,000,000,000 riki

Z-fighters

Videl – 17,000,000 riki

Krillin – 20,000,000 riki

Android 18# - 40,000,000 riki

Trunks – 13,000,000 riki

Trunks (Super Saiyan) – 90,000,000 riki

Goten – 13,000,000 riki

Goten (Super Saiyan) – 90,000,000 riki

Piccolo – 220,000,000 riki

Paprika - 26,000,000 riki

Paprika (Super Makyan) - 260,000,000 riki

Vegeta – 27,000,000 riki
Vegeta (Super Saiyan) – 270,000,000 riki
Vegeta (Super Saiyan 2) – 470,000,000 riki

Zangya – 27,000,000 riki
Zangya (Full Power) – 270,000,000 riki
Zangya (Super Hera) – 470,000,000 riki

Gohan – 29,000,000 riki
Gohan (Super Saiyan) – 290,000,000 riki
Gohan (Super Saiyan 2) – 490,000,000 riki
Gohan (Super Saiyan 3) - 1,490,000,000 riki

Other
Goku – 27,000,000 riki
Goku (Super Saiyan) – 270,000,000 riki
Goku (Super Saiyan 2) – 470,000,000 riki

Android 17# - 35,000,000 riki
Lime – 100 riki

Fat Buu – 1,000,000,000 riki
Kid Buu – 1,300,000,000 riki
Super Buu – 4,000,000,000 riki
It was early morning out in the country and everywhere you looked animals of all shapes and sizes were waking up to the same delightful chorus. This was especially the case over at the Son residence, where the denizens of the domicile were already up and about, and getting ready for a long day ahead.

Sleeping out at the front of the house just a couple of feet from the door, the familiar, pink form of the family's pet dragon Icarus was currently curled up near the clothesline like a cat resting underneath the shade. His tail shifting every so often while his breaths came out in soft purrs, the dragon's ears then perked up when he heard the sound of a ruckus inside the house. When those noises increased in volume, the flying reptile's head perked up and his eyes shifted towards the dome-shaped building, just in time to see the front door open up.

As soon as it did, the tall, strapping form of the home's oldest male tenant stepped out of the hall and into the light. Adorned in black pants, a maroon singlet top, and a yellow and black Capsule Corp jacket with matching boots similar in style to what Mirai Trunks wore in their first encounter, the cheerfully smiling Son Gohan emerged from the home with a laptop bag slung over his shoulder and hanging at his side.

After inhaling a deep breath of the cool mountain air and feeling a light breeze from the East lick at his face, the teen adjusted his duffle and glanced back into the house. "Alright, mum! I'm heading out!"

"Just a second, Gohan!" the voice of his loving parent called back, stopping him in his tracks. Quickly swiveling around, the young Saiyan was quickly met by his mother, dressed in her usual yellow gi, jogging out of the house with a large bento box wrapped in a white sheet. "Here. You'll probably want your lunch."

When the raven haired woman held the package out to him, Gohan grinned back at her sheepishly, "Oh. Yeah. I can't forget about that." He then gave his mother a grateful smile, which earned a shake of the head from the ever dutiful housewife.

"Geez. You're just like your father. Always jumping the gun," Chi-Chi exclaimed, placing her hands on her hips and watching as her son slipped the item into his bag. "Your brain's probably turning into mush from all the times you've landed on your head during training."

"Ah, I'm fine mum. I'm just a little overexcited, that's all."

"Well, make sure you keep that excitement to a minimal. I know how you Saiyans get when you're all riled up. Since this is going to be your first time attending a public school, you're going to want to make a good impression on your fellow students."

Chuckling as he buckled up his pack, the spiky haired young male then looked back up to meet the woman's adoring gaze. "Don't worry. I'll manage."
"Good," Chi-Chi nodded, a confident smile forming as she faced her son down with pride. "Remember to listen to your teachers carefully… and good luck."

"Yeah," Gohan nodded, only to then feel a nudge in the back of his shoulder. Turning about, he saw the adorable face of his best friend and companion Icarus standing directly behind him, his tail wagging happily. When the dragon squawked in greeting, the teen chuckled and gave the reptile's beak an affectionate pet. "Sorry, Icarus. Maybe next time, okay?"

The dragon purred, bowing his head when the boy massaged the top of his skull. Once he was certain his friend had received enough attention, Gohan glanced back to smile at his mother. It was then he noticed another figure step into his doorway and peeked around to see Zangya, decked out in an oversized white shirt that she'd obviously slept in with a wicked mess of bed hair, lean against the frame and look out across the front lawn.

Gohan smiled, "Hey there, sleepyhead."

"Good morning to you too, schoolboy." Yawning into her hand, the still drowsy Hera grinned and, with as little effort as possible, passed the young scholar-slash-hero a wave. "Evening spar? Same time, same place?"

"You're on," the teen shot back with a quick point in her direction, upon which he then readjusted his bag and turned heel. "I'll see you guys later." With one last nod, the demi-Saiyan ran out into the open and rocketed into the air, his takeoff causing a sonic boom to echo out across the valleys. A split second later, he was gone, his form vanishing over the horizon.

Even though he was long gone, Zangya, Chi-Chi and Icarus continued staring into the distance, smiles formed across their lips and their faces practically glowing. Out of all three of them, it was the mother that was the most elated, as indicated by the glimmer in her eye and the way her fingers interlocked in front of her.

"Do you think he'll be alright?" the raven haired parent asked the Z-fighter standing behind her.

The Hera, an eager smile in play, nodded while folding her arms across her chest. "Hey. The guy fought my former boss and saved the entire universe from a crazy-ass goddess. I'm sure he can handle a classroom full of people his own age for seven hours."

Acknowledging her words with a sigh, Chi-Chi nodded, "I sure hope you're right." And she sure as hell hoped nothing bad happened along the way.

After all, moving to a high school after so many years of studying at home was a pretty nerve rattling prospect for a normal kid. For a Super Saiyan capable of laying waste to an entire star system… that was another matter entirely…

OOO

(Sometime later)

As he soared over the valleys, farmlands and rivers making up the region surrounding his mountain home, all Gohan could think about was what his first day at school was going to be like. Ever since he received the letter from the principal of Orange Star High that he'd been admitted into their academy with the most outstanding results they'd ever seen, he'd been overjoyed and practically beside himself. His acceptance into their ranks meant that he would not only be free to try out something normal for a change, but he would also be able to attend the same institute as Videl and the rest of his friends.
The thought of being in the same class as the raven haired girl and her fellow peers made his stomach quiver with excitement. Though he was determined to make a good start in his first period, he also wondered how the kids would respond to him.

Would they find his appearance strange? Was his hairstyle suitable enough? What about his personality? How would the other kids respond to his out-of-town demeanor? Sure, Videl and Erasa loved his country-boy persona and general benevolence. But how would the others react to it? So many questions were flooding through him, making him wonder whether or not he was ready to attend such a prestigious establishment.

Though based on the graphs and reviews he'd read up on the place, the school was around midlevel in the state. Not to mention it was the only place he could afford to go to.

Either way, the teen was certain he would cross that bridge when he came to it. As long as he had Videl at his side to show him around, as well as Erasa, Lime and Touya, then he was certain he'd be able to make it through his first day completely unscathed.

His eyes shimmering with excitement as he watched the countryside and clouds zoom past him, the fast-moving boy grinned from ear to ear. "This is going to be so much fun." He would bet his money on it.

Looking down to make sure his bag was still strapped around him and everything was still inside, the teen then spotted the badge he had attached to his jacket. Reaching down to grab it, the Saiyan angled it so that he could see the big capital 'H' sitting in the orange star in the center.

After having it flash in his face a couple of times, the young man allowed a soft smile to form. "Finally… I have a chance to be a normal guy for a change." While being a Saiyan was fun and all, gallivanting about every single day and flexing your powers was a bit of a drone sometimes.

Needless to say, after the madness he'd recently been put through, Gohan needed the time out to try something new. Starting the coming week off with his first day at high school seemed like an appropriate thing to do.

While flying along at a casual pace and watching more towns and roads pass by under him, the demi-Saiyan couldn't help but spare a moment back to the day he'd regained consciousness. No matter how hard he tried, he just couldn't put the image of that one particular scene out of his mind…

XXX

(Flashback)

A current of what felt like electricity rushed through his body, prompting the peacefully sleeping Gohan to let out a low groan while his face scrunched up in discomfort. His fingers twitching as feeling returned to his limbs, the demi-Saiyan's eyes blinked open, pushing aside the veil of darkness that was consuming him and replacing it with the sight of his bedroom ceiling.

At first not knowing what to make of it, the doped up young warrior allowed for a few moments of reprieve to regain his bearings. It was only when memories of the events leading up to his sudden black out finally came about that the young man gasped and sat up with a start. By doing so, he inadvertently sent the towel folded up on his forehead flying to the other side of his futon.

Startled and breathing heavily, Gohan then winced when he started seeing spots and closed his eyes. "Ah, damn it… shouldn't have done that." He was then about to reach up to massage his scalp, only to realize he couldn't move his arm…

Or both his arms to be exact.

Puzzled by the fact he was feeling heavier than usual the demi-Saiyan then looked down at his sides to investigate the source of the problem. He received quite the surprise when he not only saw Videl lying directly alongside him, sound asleep and dressed in her signature shirt and pants, but that she was also accompanied by an unconscious Lime, Zangya and Kana, all of whom had decided to crash on the floor around him.

It was quite the surprise. Not only was the raven haired girl he'd known for many years curled up next to him and clutching his left arm like a hug-pillow, but Kana had taken up his right arm in a similar manner along with Lime, the latter of whom was lying across his torso, while Zangya was sprawled out at the foot of his mattress partially covered by his blanket. As they slept, the tomboy and farm girl wore fond smiles on their faces, while the Hera snored quietly away, not really caring about anything that was going on.

However, while seemingly unaware of her surroundings, the orange haired girl unconsciously gave Kana a kick. The young traveler yelped before kicking the orange haired woman back, who didn't do anything except groan.

Baffled by the number of people sleeping around him, as well as the condition of his room, Gohan then looked across at his door, where he suddenly spotted the familiar face of his mother beaming right back at him.

Her appearance drew a quiet gasp from the young man, "Mum?"

"Good morning, sweetheart." Carrying a tray of freshly made breakfast with her, the woman slowly made her way into the room and, careful so that she didn't step on anyone's hair, knelt down beside her son's pillow and set the food on the floor next to him. "Did you sleep well?"

"Y-Yeah… I guess…" His eyes falling back on the numerous female occupants, the teen did a quick scan of the space before returning his gaze to his parent. "Umm… why are all the girls here? Did I organize some kind of sleepover or something?"

"Not exactly," Chi-Chi exclaimed quietly, shrugging and throwing the boy a cheeky grin, "While you were snoring away for the past couple of days, there was actually a really big fight."

Gohan's eyes snapped back to her in bewilderment, "Really? Who won? Was it by KO? Ring out? Or decision?"

Surprised by her son's rather hurried reply, the raven haired mother had a look around the room herself. After taking in the smiles on everyone's faces and seeing how all of the girls were curled up comfortably where they were positioned, all Chi-Chi could do was scratch her head and smile back at her son.

"A draw… I think…"

(End Flashback)

XXX

After spending an entire weekend thinking about it Gohan had been unable to come up with an answer to the unexpected debacle. For whatever reason they had, Videl and the rest of the girls had all clammed up about whatever had gone on in his room while he'd been unconscious. When he tried to approach them about it, each and every one of them either gave him a completely vague answer or simply grinned at him cheekily and left him to stew over it.

Kana didn't stick around long enough for him to interrogate her, and Zangya and Lime weren't saying anything. The former was being her usual enigmatic self and the latter had decided to play hard-to-get. Heck, even Videl was being surprisingly quiet, saying that it was 'her problem' and something that only she could resolve. Of course, Gohan accepted this right off the bat, partly because he trusted her and partly because he didn't want to piss her off if he prodded too much.

He was aware at how angry she could get when provoked. It happened often during her training and whenever she got flustered.

"Why are all the girls I know so terrifying?" Gohan thought, taking a second to consider all of the people he'd come to associate with over the years.

This subject occupied his thoughts all the way to Satan City, which appeared over the horizon a few short minutes later. Keeping well out of sight of any wandering eyes, the demi-Saiyan continued to fly across the metropolis before eventually happening upon an alleyway nestled comfortably between two buildings. Dropping down between the apartments, he then ambled out onto the street and, acting like nothing out of the ordinary had taken place, began jogging towards Orange Star High.

Deciding to put all questions in his mind on the backburner for the time being, the demi-Saiyan made a beeline straight for the institute. Judging from the clear blue sky and the wonderful climate surrounding him, the young hero had a feeling that it was going to be a perfect day…

OOO

(Elsewhere)

Just several blocks away, on the edge of a residential district, the sounds of screams and gunfire filled the air as one of the many branches of the town's main bank system, Satan City Trust, was shaken down by the most vicious of crooks. Decked out in heavy artillery with woolen masks pulled over their faces, concealing their identities, a group of highly organized robbers stormed the counter area and began herding customers and staff into the corners of the structure.

The security guard stationed by the front door had been effortlessly dispatched at the outset of the raid, having his gun shot out of his hand and leaving him nursing the bullet wound on the carpet. This allowed the group of half a dozen thieves to pour over the front desk and force the agents stationed behind the tills to start emptying out all the cash from the various safes and registers. With the majority of the building's patrons lying on the floor and the doorway blocked off by two armed assailants brandishing Uzi sub-machineguns, barring anyone else from entry, it was easy pickings for the squad.

Heck, they didn't even care whether or not the silent alarm had been tripped. With the weaponry that they had, it would take a fully armed unit from the station to bring them down, and they doubted the Satan City police would respond in such force so readily.

They had the element of both time and surprise on their side as they made quick work of loading up the goods.

"That's right! Everybody stay down!" the head of the group, a man sporting a goatee, mustache and a tactical vest, shouted while pointing his assault rifle at the terrified staff members. Malicious grin framing his face, he then turned his attention to his cronies, who were now forcing the poor bank tellers to fill up the last of the bags. "Hey! How are we doin' over there?"

"We're just about done, chief! Just one more bag!" the man with the Glock, blue sweater and chiseled jaw shouted back, smirking as he watched the terrified woman with the orange hair finish stuffing away the rest of the cash. "Alright! That's it! We're good here!"

"Excellent!" the leader chuckled, cocking his gun and swiveling about. As soon as his boys cleared his line of sight, the man had a clean shot of the wall behind the counter. "And just so you people don't get any ideas..." He then proceeded to empty his entire magazine on the building, forcing the staff to drop down as the paper thin walls behind them were shredded by the MP5. The civilians cried out as chips of plaster and wood rained down on top of them.

As soon as he'd written his name on the bank's back wall, the cocky leader removed the magazine and shoved in a new one.

"Thank you for your cooperation!" the man spoke, earning a round of shortles from the rest of his fellow crooks. When the sound of fast-approaching police sirens echoed in from outside, the leader then gestured his comrades towards the glass doors. "Come on, boys! Let's blow this joint!" They then started for the exit...

But just as they were a few paces out, the group suddenly saw a figure teleport into view, giving them quite a start and stopping them in their tracks. Taking a few steps back, the gang of gun-touting thugs then recoiled in shock when they recognized the raven haired, over-sized shirt wearing form of the city's top crime fighter, Videl Satan, standing in their way.

Hands placed firmly on her slender hips and her short yet imposing form positioned directly in the center of the open doors, the gutsy teenager used the opportunity to count the number of bandits in front of her before a smirk appeared on her face.

"Let me guess; making a long-term withdrawal?"

Freaking out at the sight of the girl, the pistol wielder in the sweater turned to his companions, "Shit, boss! It's Mr. Satan's daughter!"

"What?! That's her?!" another man wielding an AK-47 choked out in disbelief, "The crime buster Videl?"

"I-If she's here... then that means the Gold Fighter can't be too far behind!" the brute closest to the entrance stammered.

Initially stunned and caught completely off guard, the boss then spat and cocked his weapon, pointing it squarely at the girl's head. The instant his sights were locked, fear gripped the already petrified bystanders and prompted them to take cover. "Fuck her and that blonde haired freak! Just shoot the bitch!" His shout startling his men from their reverie, the leader then wasted no time in opening fire on the girl.

The instant he began to shoot, every other robber in the room started unloading on the tomboy, the room becoming filled with the deafening chorus of machinegun fire and screams of terror. At first blush it looked as though Satan City's most beloved daughter was Swiss cheese.

But as the gunfire continued on for a grand total of fifteen seconds, the determined smirks of the bank robbers slowly faded into pale expressions of horror when they saw every single bullet they fired bounce off of their target like they were pellets. When the barrage ended moments later and their guns clicked to empty, the group of thugs then saw whatever bullets had ended up crushed.
against the girl's skin tumble off of her and to the ground, leaving her standing there with a fair bit of holes in her shirt and a smirk on her face.

Readjusting her ruined top, Videl then threw her bewildered attackers a grin. "Yeah… you may want to give up now."

When the men all took a step back, with one smart guy thinking it was a good idea to reload his weapon, the tomboy decided right then and there that she'd given them all the warning they needed.

Clocking speeds no ordinary human could keep up with, the raven haired girl darted for the closest men and began knocking them out one after the other with single, concussive blows. After dispatching the first three on one side of the room with a quick series of punches, she then spun around and thrust her hand towards the two on the other side. Just as they were realizing their target had disappeared, the pair of gunmen was struck down by a gust of wind, which knocked them off their feet and straight through the wall behind them, where they were promptly deposited in the alleyway directly beside the dumpster.

After knocking them out, Videl then turned her attention to the last guy; the boss. The instant she did, she saw the terrified man jump the front counter and, grabbing the nearest employee, got behind her and pushed his pistol into the poor woman's temple.

As the orange haired woman whimpered in fear, the manic robber shouted at the crime fighter. "Back off or I'll kill her! Believe me! I'll do it!"

Just when it seemed like the man had Videl in checkmate, the raven haired girl's eyes suddenly widened. A split second later, an invisible force smacked the gun out of the robber's hand, causing a loud crack to ring out followed by a cry of pain. The leader then gripped his broken wrist, allowing his hostage to drop out of his grip and run. The moment the mastermind of the assault looked up to find out what the hell had happened, all he saw was a fist followed by blackness.

A split second later his body hit the carpet like a sack of potatoes, which gave the bored looking Videl the cue to lower her arm.

When the staff members began moving from their hiding places to get a better look at the girl's handiwork, the raven haired teen smirked down at the out cold killer.

"I believe you."

It was a clean win, for sure. But just as the shaken victims of the bank robbery were beginning to relax, a screeching of tires pulling up outside drew their attention towards the glass doors. When she spun around, Videl spotted a large blue pickup parked outside, with a seventh man driving it and an eighth man at the helm of a Vulcan gun mounted on the back.

The six-barreled Gatling gun that was normally used in military aircraft was pointed at the building by the excited looking gunner, who pulled back on the massive cocking lever and braced against the handles. The sight of the massive weapon had everyone in the room take a full step back in horror, while Videl, expression hardening, dropped into a stance and prepared to attack.

"Eat lead, you bitch!" the man on the back of the truck shouted, pulling hard on the trigger. A loud whirring sound echoed out at the beginning of what was to be a glorious turkey shoot…

But just as the gun barrels started to rotate, they suddenly grounded to a stop when a hand appeared out of nowhere and grabbed it, preventing it from turning. The result was the gun's mechanisms snapping and cracking loudly as the insides exploded, startling the shooter who then looked to see who had grabbed it.

He got the most spine-chilling shock of his life when he saw the blonde, spiky haired form of the city's second most recognized crime buster, the Gold Fighter, glaring right back at him from two feet away.

Standing on the back of the pickup, dressed in black pants and a maroon vest, the latter of which showed off his muscular chest and arms, there was no doubt the teen looked the part of a very frightening and intimidating badass.

When he saw the gunner balk, Gohan smirked, "Careful. You can really hurt somebody with this."

Freaking out, the man quickly dove for the vehicle's open sunroof and dropped into the seat, scaring his coworker.

"DRIVE! DRIVE! DRIVE!" the gunner shouted.

Not even needing to ask why, the bandit behind the wheel floored it and pitched his vehicle into overdrive. From the screeching of tires against the tarmac and the smoke rising into the air as a result, any onlookers would think the robbers had gotten away and were now making good tracks downtown. But as it turns out, while the tires continued to tear away at the road's hard surface, the vehicle wasn't budging an inch.

This was because Gohan had speedily teleported behind the car and was now holding it by its rear bumper, a cheerful smile on his face as he watched the wheels of the truck wear out. Humming a cheerful tune while the desperate men attempted to figure out why they weren't moving, the blonde Saiyan then decided that they'd had enough fun for one day and moved to restrain them.

Effortlessly lifting the getaway vehicle into the air with one hand, startling the poor robbers, he then shook it like a person would a can of soda, allowing the contents of the truck to bounce around for a few good seconds before he set it back to the floor. By the time the car was back on the tarmac, all of the occupants in the seats were out cold and drooling; the act of shaking them so violently having knocked them out.

Hands on his hips, the boy nodded in acknowledgement of his victory before then turning to the entrance to the bank, where he saw Videl standing there with a couple of the bandits slung over her shoulders.

When her eyes met his, the girl beamed happily, "Thanks for the assist… Gold Fighter." She allowed the young male's title to roll off of her tongue in a mischievous tone of voice, earning a wide grin from the transformed Saiyan.

"Anytime, Miss Satan." Bowing graciously, he then gave her an inquisitive stare, "Need a hand rounding them up?"

"No thanks. I got this," the tomboy replied, grinning at the young man before nodding in his direction. "You've got other things to worry about, remember?"

"Oh. Right. First day. I have a meeting with the principal," Gohan hissed, quickly slapping the side of his head for his sudden memory lapse. "I'll see you in class, yeah?"

"Yeah," Videl exclaimed, nodding back to the boy in acknowledgement. "Good luck."
With one final salute, the Super Saiyan then vanished in a blur of movement, shocking all of the civilians scattered throughout the area. When the police units finally showed up seconds later, pulling up alongside the bank, the people that'd been watching safely from a distance started to move in, prompting a couple of the officers to close off the area and keep everybody back.

During which time Videl continued to stare off in the direction her boyfriend had disappeared in. Knowing he'd just popped around the corner to collect his stuff, the raven haired girl smiled to herself as her eyes sparkled with delight. Though she was thrilled at having downed an entire crew of armed bandits without the slightest bit of effort whatsoever, she was even more pleased to know that the boy she'd known for seven years was finally going to be attending the same school as her.

Even as the officers who arrived on the scene approached her and began thanking her for her hard work, all Videl could think about as she addressed the men was what the day was going to be like with Gohan in her class.

"I hope you're ready, Gohan... because today is going to be amazing," the crime fighter thought with excitement burning in her gaze.

OOO

(Sometime later)

Upon handing the crooks responsible for the bank job over to the police and informing the officers of the events that'd transpired, Videl then moved right into getting her affairs in order and heading off to school. Deciding to fly there, the girl easily made it across town to the enormous block that was her school. No matter how many times she passed over that area of the city the raven haired teen couldn't help but marvel at how big the place actually was.

Orange Star High was one of the most well-known education institutes in the state, being best known for its affordability, efficiency, and graduating with classes filled with high achievers. The main building where all of the main classrooms were situated was a large four story complex with a wide entrance and the school's name imprinted on the front. Surrounding it were the estate's lavish grounds and footpaths leading to other areas of the estate. To the right of the building sat a baseball field and to its left stood a massive warehouse that served as the tech center for its woodshop classes. Behind that you had a track and field oval with a soccer pitch in the center, a swimming pool next to that, and the performing arts center to its left.

Needless to say, the state spared no expense in giving the students the ideal environment they needed to receive the best education they could afford. It was the reason why Videl and her friends were attending this school, and it was partly the reason why Gohan had decided to enroll in it as well.

Heart still swelling with excitement, the now off-duty Videl descended to the city streets just outside of her academy and dropped down onto its footpath. As soon as she touched down, she dashed in through the front gates, greeting everyone she passed, and rushing up the steps. Heck, she was so jacked for the day that she nearly forgot to pick up her stuff from her locker before continuing the rest of the way to class.

She also made sure to pull into the girl's bathroom to change her shirt, due to the fact that the one she started the day with was full of bullet holes.

By the time she arrived at her room, about two thirds of the students were already in their seats. With a few minutes left to kill, the girl headed up to her isle, shimmied her way into the middle and planted her posterior against the edge of her desk.
As expected, her childhood friend Erasa and her school friend Sharpener, a tall guy with long blonde hair and the word 'jock' written all over him from his purple vest right down to his jeans, were already there and waiting in their seats. When the raven haired crime fighter inserted herself between them, she set her hands on the desk behind her and waited for their responses.

When her eyes panned over her friend's spotless condition, Erasa immediately noticed the state of her hair and boots and, after processing the image for several seconds, rested her chin against her hand. "Let me guess… bank robbery?"

"Yep," Videl chirped, waving a few locks out of her face before grinning down at the blonde. "Satan City Trust branch in the downtown area. Want to take a shot at the number of crooks involved."

The girl in the green tube top smirked at the challenge. "There were eight robbers in total. Six of them stormed the building while two of them were waiting in the truck outside. You took down the first guys easily, while the 'Gold Fighter' went after the other two and played peppershaker with their getaway car." Taking a moment to check her nails, Erasa answered her friend's amused expression with a reason for her fantastic insight into that morning's events. "News travels fast over Spacebook, Vi. As long as I'm logged on, you can't drop a pen anywhere in the city without me knowing about it."

Videl shook her head at her cheekily grinning classmate, "Sometimes I forget how much of a Class-A sleuth you actually are." When she saw the girl poke out her tongue, the tomboy smiled, "Seriously. You'd make an excellent detective. How about trying out for an internship over at the station?"

"Thanks, but no thanks," Erasa giggled. "I'm not interested in that cloak and dagger stuff. I mean, dealing with all those creeps around town, going down dirty alleyways, and the paperwork? Yuck. I think I'll pass on that." Bringing up both hands to her cheeks and looking ahead of her with a dreamy look falling over her face, the cheerful young girl smiled. "I'm into… other stuff."

"What? You mean the Gold Fighter?" Sharpener asked, slipping his hands behind his head as he glanced across at his fellow blonde. When he saw the girls glance in his direction, the boy chuckled in amusement, "Come on, Erasa; enough with the fantasies already. Can't you think about doing something more constructive with your time rather than just dreaming about some blonde superhero that fights crime with Videl?"

The blue-eyed teen grinned, "I could… but it's all everyone's talking about right now." She then turned her gaze back to her raven haired classmate, "Videl and the Gold Fighter; the top two crime fighters in Satan City."

Videl rolled her eyes at the dazzling gaze Erasa shot at her, "Come on. We're not that popular."

"Are you kidding me? You two are the biggest names to hit the news channels since your old man won the World Martial Arts Tournament for the second time in a row." The teen then raised a fist. "Forget about the singers and the movie stars of our generation. You and super-hunk are on the front cover of every single newspaper and homepage across the world."

Breathing out an exasperated sigh, the tomboy then scratched her head, "As if being the daughter of the 'Champ' wasn't bad enough already." She'd just gotten over being the third wheel to her old man. But now, thanks to her outstanding work as a defender of truth and justice in Satan City's enforcement agency, she was quickly becoming a celebrity all her own.

Heck. And all she was doing was trying to make this town a better place.
"Ugh. It can get so frustrating sometimes."

"Well at least you're making a difference out there." Giggling when she saw the look on her friend's face, Erasa folded her arms in front and leaned back in her seat. "The fact that I know both you and golden locks makes it even better. I mean, between you and-"

Realizing quickly where her friend was going, Videl's hair bristled in alarm, "Hey! Erasa!"
Stopping the girl's exclamations dead, the crime fighter then shot her a look and hissed, "Remember what we talked about last week… you know… back at my place?"

"Huh?" Blinking a couple of times in confusion, Erasa then gasped when she realized where she was going and clapped a hand over her mouth. "Oh. Right. S-Sorry, Vi." Her flustered response earned a puzzled glance from Sharpener.

Looking between the serious teen and the nervous one a couple of times prompted the blonde man to raise an eyebrow. "Am I missing something here? What are you two hiding?"

"Nothing to get your jockstrap in a twist, Sharp," the voice of a newcomer cut in from the side, drawing everyone's attention to the stairs. The group turned just in time to see the brown haired, glasses wearing form of Touya stop alongside them, where he then proceeded to grin in his classmate's direction. "The thing you got to learn about girls it not to pry into their personal affairs. Believe me, I know."

"Touya. Last minute, as usual," Sharpener chuckled, while taking note of the fact the guy still had his books under his arm. "This is the hundredth time you made it by the skin of your teeth."

Videl shot the boy an amused look, "What was the holdup this time?" She then pointed at him warningly, "And don't skimp out on the excuses."

The athletic man waved away the poster girl's sly tone and responded with a sheepish smile, "I stopped by Yukie's place so that we could walk to school together and ended up making a couple of stops along the way to grab some lunch. Once we got to her clubroom, I got caught up in a conversation with her volleyball team and spent about twenty minutes chatting with them about last night's game. I gotta say; those girls really love their sports."

"Uh-huh," Videl nodded, before then sparing a glance in Erasa's direction to see the blonde stifling a laugh. "And… how many times has he said that in the last two weeks?"

"This will make it the third time he's said that," the blonde chirped back, looking up momentarily to take stock of her count.

"Third time? Wow," the tomboy replied sarcastically while throwing a shit-eating grin at her other friend from middle-school. "You always tell such compelling stories, Touya. How on earth do you do it?"

"First of all, it's not that easy, okay," the teenager replied playfully, adjusting his glasses while shooting the Champ's daughter a look, which earned a flippant wave in return. "You girls always make it so damn difficult to please, even on good days."

"You know it," Erasa answered in a sing-song voice.

"Cut me some slack already. You don't see me harassing you about your tardiness every morning."

"That's because you're the only one who shows up late, Touya-kun," the blonde spoke up again, offering the boy a grin while he shifted the books under his arm. "And because you're an easy Taking note of his fellow sportsman's appearance, an intently listening Sharpener then grinned smugly, "Speaking of which, what's going on with your outfit?" When everyone's eyes panned over the brown haired male, they saw he was not only wearing a pair of white beach shorts, but also a green fluorescent top with the words 'Same Same' on the front. The group was willing to bet it said 'But Different' on the back. The fact that he was also wearing blue Converses was also quite noticeable. "Who are you supposed to be? Top or bottoms? Stern yet sensual skipper of the S.S Clean-Shaven?"

"Ha ha ha," Touya forcibly laughed at Sharpener's quip while at the same time casually ignoring the sniggers from Videl, Erasa and a large amount of his fellow classmates. The boy then pointed two fingers at his eyes before jabbing them towards the blonde, before slowly walking back down the steps. "Watch your back, buddy. If karma's taught us anything is that sooner or later you're going to get yours."

Sharpener saluted in return, "I'll see you on the pitch tomorrow during second period then!"

"It's a date!"

When she was done laughing, Videl shook her head, "I certainly hope not. Yukie would be very upset if it is."

As soon as Touya ambled to his seat, the bell for the start of class went, signaling all students in the complex to move to their desks. By the time the class's math teacher, a man in a blue suit with thin spectacles and silver hair, marched in through the doorway, every single teenager in the room was at their desks and ready to start the first lesson. Videl was among the last to slip into her chair, where she set her hands in front of her and proceeded to wait with an eager smile in play. As soon as she'd gotten comfortable, her lecturer had stopped beside the speaker's plinth and sat his notepad on the counter next to him.

Clearing his throat and listening to the silence perforating the room, the director began his scheduled announcements. "Good morning, class. I'm glad to see that all of you've managed to get out of bed to attend this morning's lectures. That's exactly the kind of commitment this school is expecting of you." Adjusting his thin-rimmed classes, the old professor then panned over the sea of still weary faces. "As you all probably know from last week, we have a new student joining us today that is actually serious about his education. I hope you'll all use this opportunity to welcome him into the folds of our community." He then turned his attention towards the entrance. "That's your cue, my boy."

When the class's focus shifted over to the door, most of those in attendance were expecting some ordinary bloke or gal to come slinking in following the professor's spirited introduction. Due to his exposition of how this new student was passionate about learning, the majority of the class pictured some kid in some long sleeved white shirt, black vest or red pants to ease his way in; someone of the nerdy variety. All across the board, the excitement at receiving a new student and the general vigor in the room was considerably lacking.

But that all changed the moment the new guy stepped in through the archway and the backs of every single student in the room noticeably straightened at the sight of him. The freshman, as it turned out, was a complete opposite to the person that they were expecting. Instead of a skinny kid with glasses and an outfit that was stereotypical of his background, they saw a dashing, fit young man with an athletic build and short, spiky black hair, black pants, maroon vest, and a yellow Capsule Corp jacket and boots, the former of which was unzipped, amble into their midst with a smile on his face. Reflecting the air of someone who was both physically imposing and benevolent in the same package, as soon as the teen stepped into view, he immediately began sizing up his environment.

All in all, the boys in the class were surprised while the girls scattered across the hall were swooned.

Raising a hand, the young Saiyan waved, "Hello. I'm Gohan. It's nice to meet you."

Just as Videl was about to wave back, she then cringed when she heard a squeal from her left and looked over to see Erasa clenching her hands tightly. As soon as she stopped making noises, the ditzy blonde then looked down at the boy with stars in her eyes. "Ooh... he looks so much cooler than when I last saw him." Without even a shred of hesitation, the girl rose from her seat and waved to him. "Hey, Gohaaan! Up here!"

While the hybrid warrior grinned, the elderly teacher scowled. "Miss Erasa, please! Control yourself!" The man raised his hand in a safely manner, "In this school, we don't jump out of our seats and call out across the room. It is highly disrespectful."

"R-Right. Sorry, sir," the blonde stammered, quickly sitting back down with a shade of pink flashing across her cheeks. Her little outburst earned an amused look from her companions.

Upon administering swift discipline and regaining control of the room, the teacher then waited for the newcomer to stand beside him before speaking up once again. "Gohan here achieved top marks in all areas of his entrance exam; math, literacy, chemistry and physics. I'm sure many of you can learn from his example." When a couple of jeers and whistles rang out across the hall, the director's hair bristled. "Pipe down! While you're at it, I recommend that you all take the time to learn a little more about common decency and good character." As soon as the room settled down, the professor sighed and turned his attention back to the demi-Saiyan, gesturing up to the stands at the same time. "Mr. Son, you can sit wherever you like."

The spiky haired hero smiled pleasantly, "Thank you, sir."

When the teacher moved over to his desk, Gohan headed straight for the stairs to his right. As soon as he started his ascent, he immediately noticed the amount of interested stares he was receiving from the young adults scattered throughout the classroom. A quiet murmuring started up amongst the groups as they checked out the new kid, with the girls paying special attention to his backside when he came in close.

On the way up, Gohan was greeted by the familiar face of Touya sitting at the end of the second row. The demi-Saiyan was sure to give his friend a high five as soon as he passed, the two sharing a typical salutation with one another before the demi-Saiyan directed his attention to the row where Videl and Erasa were sitting. Arriving at the second to last row, Gohan quickly found himself in front of his blonde haired friend, who stood up to face him.

Brushing some strands behind her ear, the girl in the green tube top beamed up at the strapping young male in front of her. "Hi, Gohan. How are you doing?"

The demi-Saiyan smiled, "I'm okay, Erasa."

"Are you sure? Lime said that you got really hurt last week and had to miss out on your first day of school," Erasa murmured, looking the teen over to assess his condition for herself. When she saw nothing, she looked up at him with a hint of worry in her eyes. "You're not hurting anywhere, are you?"
Touched by the girl's concern, Gohan shook his head, "No, I'm not in any pain. I'm actually feeling way better than before, which is awesome." He then grinned and scratched his cheek sheepishly. "I've always had a fast recovery time. I guess it's just one of the benefits of being such a nice guy, huh?"

Eyes and cheeks glowing in response, Erasa quickly ducked down and, reaching into her handbag, pulled out a little box wrapped up with a bow. When she stood up to face him again, she nervously held it out, "I'm sorry I wasn't able to come and visit earlier. Here." When Gohan gently took it from her, the girl slipped her hands behind her back and beamed. "A little get well present. I hope you like it."

Gohan's expression flickered with delight, "Awesome. Thanks a bunch, Erasa."

After sharing a warm smile with one another, the blonde then shuffled over so that Gohan could squeeze through. The blonde purposefully made sure there was barely enough room between them so that the handsome young teen could slide passed her, giving him a good-natured bump that prompted the half-Saiyan to nudge her back in a teasing fashion. When the blonde slipped back into her seat, the new kid on the block then turned his attention to the empty seat next to Videl.

As soon as he set his books on the table, the spiky haired warrior glanced across at his girlfriend and smiled.

When she returned it, the crime fighter then leant over and whispered in his ear. "That was an exciting start to the morning, wasn't it, Gohan?"

The Saiyan responded to her question with a smile. "You can say that again."

After elbowing him playfully in the side, the tomboy then turned her attention back to the front of the class where the elderly professor moved on with his lesson. In the trio's brief exchange of pleasantries, Sharpener looked across at them in confusion.

Baffled by the multiple personalities and relations he was witnessing, as well as the strangely chipper moods both Videl and Erasa were in, the blonde haired jock arched an eyebrow and turned away apprehensively. "Am I missing something here?"

OOO

(Sometime Later)

After Gohan's previous misconceptions in regards to what high school was really like in the big city, his first day attending the institute was actually turning out to be quite a blast. So far, in the two hours that had passed since entering the academy, there had been very little to no heckling, no paddle chases, no teasing, no rite-of-passage trials, and no harassment related abuse directed towards him whatsoever. In fact, from what he'd been able to witness, everyone seemed to be blown away by his presence, as he could sense the eyes of almost every single student glued onto his back wherever he went.

Whether this was a good thing or a bad thing he would reserve judgment on that later. But for now the hero of earth was just content with sharing the same classes as his girlfriend and her companions. Hopefully he would be able to carry on this streak throughout the rest of his tenure here at Orange Star High and make many fond memories.

Eventually the first period of the day came and went, and as soon as the bell rang at half past ten, all of the kids emptied out into the quads and hallways for recess. This was pretty much the cue Gohan was waiting for ever since the first hour. The moment the isle he was sitting in began packing up for the break, he speedily headed out to his locker to grab his food.

He didn't go alone. Videl, Erasa, Sharpener and Touya also went with him, and joined the young man on the seats outside. It was here under a large cherry tree the demi-Saiyan unpacked his food and began helping himself to the intermediate snack his mother had prepared for him.

With everyone arranged comfortably around the table, the situation was primed and ready for conversation.

"So… how is it that you two girls know this guy?" the voice of Sharpener spoke up while looking across at the two females he'd known since middle school. "I mean, I'm guessing you three must be pretty close if you're already acting so chummy on the first day."

Videl, opening up a box of assorted vegetables, fruits and peanuts, smirked back at the curious jock in the purple singlet top. "Well… I've known Gohan for over seven years now, and Erasa has known him for around two. So, next to her, you could say that he's my second childhood friend."

Raising his hand as if he were in class, Touya also added his own name to the list, "And I met Gohan a few months after Erasa did. Just around the time I was starting out at this school."

"I see," Sharpener murmured, counting up the scores with his fingers before resting one of his big arms on top of the table. "You must have quite a bit of history together then, huh?"

Giggling a little, the blonde girl sitting on the other side of the demi-Saiyan leant against his arm and grinned up at the new kid. "You could say that."

Giving Erasa a bit of a look, Videl then redirected her focus to her other classmate and continued on with her exposition. "Gohan's… actually my martial arts teacher and training partner. He taught me most of everything I know today."

"This guy?" Sharpener asked incredulously, poking a thumb at the spiky haired male. When he saw the Saiyan and the crime fighter grin, with the city's number one idol also throwing the new student a fond look, the blonde sportsman dropped his arm and smirked. "Come on, Videl. Seriously? You're, like, the second strongest person on this planet. What can some kid from the mountains possibly teach you when you were practically born and raised on the stuff yourself?" He then gave the new guy a momentary smile, "No offense, dude."

Gohan shrugged, "None taken."

"Oh. Shoot. I don't think we've been introduced yet." Setting down his protein bar, Sharpener held his hand to the teen across from him. "The name's Sharpener. I'm also a friend of Videl's."

"Nice to meet you," Gohan replied, reaching out and gripping the boy's hand firmly. "I'm Gohan."

Withdrawing a second later, the jock whistled and shook his hand out, "Woot. That's some grip you've got there."

"Oh. Sorry about that. I didn't mean to-"

"Ah, don't be, man. I'm used to it. Being a friend of Videl's kind of requires you to have a bit of a strong arm if you're planning on shaking hands with her or her old man," Sharpener replied, waving off the kid's apology and smiling. "Growing up out in the sticks, tipping cattle and pushing plows must've really toughened you up. Does your family own a ranch up there or something?" It was this question that drew a series of chuckles from the girls as well as a light-hearted laugh from
"Not exactly. My family owns an estate, but we don't have a farm next to it or anything. Our place is more like a cottage out in the groves."

"Ah. So your family is one of those self-made ones, is it?"

"Yeah. In a way." The spiky haired hybrid rubbed the back of his head in that characteristic manner. "My dad set it up for us on his grandfather's property. Since we don't need much up there in the mountains, we've been able to hold it together pretty well over the years."

Sharpener grinned, "I haven't visited many places like that so I can't imagine what it must be like." He then tilted his head towards him inquisitively. "So if I heard the girls correctly, you do martial arts as well?"

"Uh-huh," Gohan nodded while grinning. "My entire family does martial arts. You... could say it's in my blood." More than that. It was in his genetics.

Hearing this answer drew a chuckle from the blonde across from him, "I can see why you and Videl get along so well. But considering who her dad is, I still find it hard to believe that she's been taking fighting lessons under you." He then gave the Saiyan a sincere shrug. "Sure, I guess you might have some sort of old-timey folksy-wisdom that she may not know much about when it comes to trading punches, but aside from that I just don't see her taking many sessions from anyone except her old man."

After hearing Sharpener's piece on the matter, Satan City's staple girl shook her head at the man before then casually picking at her fruit salad. "Just so you know, Sharpener, the world is a lot bigger than you think it is. There are other fighters out there that are way stronger than my dad."

The jock scoffed and shook his head, "I'll believe that when I see it."

Touya jabbed his fork in the jock's direction, "If you behave, maybe you will." Upon receiving an odd look from the sportsman, he then glanced across at the girls sitting alongside him. "Do you... think we should tell him?"

His question was quickly followed by a shake of the head from Videl and a cautionary glance from Gohan, "Not yet. Just let him stew for a little bit longer before easing him into it. If we try to tell him everything in one go his head might explode."

"Ah. Got yah," Touya exclaimed, giving them the 'O.K' sign.

Erasa, trying to finish her apple, glanced up at the demi-Saiyan cheerfully. While doing so, she ended up completely missing the confused look being thrown at her by their blonde haired gym junky. "When it comes to keeping big secrets, yours has to be the best one yet, Gohan."

The spiky haired fighter gave the girl a humorous look, "And you just love that stuff, don't you?"

"It's my number one fix," the blonde replied while winking. "Got any more juicy secrets you want to whisper to me? Huh? Maybe something to do with-"

"Now now, Erasa. Take it easy," Gohan said while waving a finger warningly at her when she leant in closer with that captivating smile of hers. "You know what happens when you hear too much gossip... what it does to you when you try to take it all in?"

"It starts to spill out. Yeah, yeah," the girl moaned, before huffing in disappointment and propping her chin on her hand. Poking the table in front of her, Erasa then started absentmindedly drawing circles across the wood. "It's just that there are so many people in this school with so much to tell. Where do I even begin?"

Videl snickered at her friend's sulking. "How about hanging onto the eggs you've already bought for a little while and just bear with it for a couple more weeks?"

"Aww... but Vi..."

"No buts, Erasa. Behave. Otherwise I'm going to disown you," the raven haired girl threatened half-heartedly, despite the fact that she was also wearing a smile.

Exhaling deeply, the blonde then nodded in resignation, "Fine. I'll be good." This earned a pat on the head from Gohan, which prompted the cheerful teen to smile at him kindly.

Looking between the three in front of him, Sharpener blinked a few times in confusion and turned his attention to Touya sitting alongside him. "Okay... what exactly are they talking about? What's this big secret?"

Leisurely dining on his first period snack, the brown haired young male in glasses smiled, scrunching up his empty muesli bar wrapper and tossing it into the nearby bin. "You'll find out when you're old enough, Sharpie." This response drew a sour look from the man in the tight singlet. "This is something only grownups can talk about."

"Ugh. Tight-ass..."

"It's what you get for teasing me about my choice of clothing," the boy jabbed while throwing the guy a smirk. "If you take back your snide remarks, maybe I'll do you a favor and spill the beans on what these guys are hiding, right here, right now."

Staring back at Touya for several seconds in silence, Sharpener then looked over to see Gohan and the other girls listening to them intently from the sidelines. After taking in their collective expressions as well as the outfit the guy was still sporting, the blonde bit his teeth together in a brief moment of hard contemplation, before turning back to his recess.

"Nah. It's not worth it."

Touya smirked, "Hmph. Your loss." Deep down though, he was extremely disappointed.

With their parts said, the group returned to enjoying their post-opening period break. After several more minutes of conversation, in which the girls spent the entire time catching up with their favorite Saiyan, the bell to the institute soon rang, beckoning all students scattered across the campus. The tide of teenagers slowly flowed back into the main building, where Gohan and his companions quickly made their way to their next class. Along the way, the demi-Saiyan was approached by Videl, who began briefing him on their planned set of activities for the rest of the day.

You could say that the announcement she had to make came as quite a surprise to him.

"Club open day?"

"Yep. It's a day where all of the clubs in the school open their doors to new students who wish to try out for their organizations. It's basically a chance for all newcomers to hone their skills in whatever extracurricular field they choose," the raven haired girl explained to the boy as they stopped in the middle of the hallway. With the rest of their gang filing up behind them, the duo gave each other their undivided attention. "If you have a career path in mind and want an extra push to get there, joining a club is one of your best options."

"Think of it as an association that provides specific activities that will help you in accomplishing your goals," Erasa chirped in from the sidelines, drawing Gohan's gaze over to the smiling girl. Lifting a hand, the blonde placed it proudly against her ample chest. "I plan on going to university to get my degree in International Studies."

"Really?" Gohan asked, looking across at the girl curiously before smiling. "You want to become a journalist?"

The girl nodded enthusiastically, "Uh-huh."

"That's an interesting career choice," Videl murmured, eyeing her friend incredulously with her arms folded over her chest. "I thought your parents wanted you to do accounting after you graduated from high school."

The blonde girl shrugged, "Let's just say I found a new calling in life. I talked it out with mum and dad and they both think it's a terrific idea. Besides…" She then beamed towards the demi-Saiyan standing next to her. "As long as what I do makes me happy, then nothing else matters. Right, Gohan?"

Her comment earned a fond glance from the newcomer from the countryside. "Yeah."

Erasa tilted her head at him and pressed her textbook firmly against her stomach. "It's only common sense."

"Well… I guess that explains why you've been so focused on doing media studies lately," Videl replied while folding her arms over her chest comfortably. "We can go have a look at all the clubs during afternoon period. Classes have been cancelled so that the students can go check out the venues spread out across the campus, so you're gonna love it."

"Oh, I bet I will," Gohan chuckled.

Stepping up to the spiky haired fighter, Sharpener placed a hand on his shoulder and spoke with him man to man. "You should definitely try your hand at some of the sporting clubs while we're showing you around. I'll swing you by a couple of them so you can check 'em out."

"Thanks. I appreciate that," the half-Saiyan replied sincerely.

While the blonde jock began leading the raven haired teen down the hall at a faster pace, telling him all about the martial arts clubs they had at this school as well as various other contact sports, Videl, Erasa and Touya hung back and watched the pair amble on.

With a bright smile on her face, the blonde girl leaned over and whispered to her friend, "He looks so happy."

"Yeah," Videl nodded. "Being surrounded by so many people his age, I figured he would be a lot more nervous than this. But he seems to be settling into the school quite well."

"That's no surprise," Erasa stated with a fond smile in play. "Gohan's a really friendly, out-going guy. The fact that he's getting along with Sharpener of all people says a lot about his character."

Touya chuckled while slipping his hands into his pockets, "Must be his magnetic personality."
"Whatever the case, I'm really looking forward to spending a lot more time with him," Erasa informed with a giggle, a response that quickly drew the crime fighter's attention to her blonde haired classmate. Hugging her books to her chest even more, the cheerful young girl turned to her friend and spoke to her with an excited tone of voice. "I've got a lot of stuff planned over the next couple of months… and I can't wait to get started." She then wasted no time in moving to catch up to the demi-Saiyan and the jock, with Touya following them close behind.

After hearing her friend's remark and considering her words carefully, the raven haired crime fighter stared after the group uneasily before jogging after her…

OOO

(An hour or so later)

The class the group had after recess was literature studies, something that Gohan found rather enjoyable whereas the rest of his peers simply paid lip service to everything the teacher had to say. It was only when the bell for the end of class period rang that all of the students were excused for the day and instructed to go explore the many clubs the institute had to offer. All presidents and current members were out prepping their venues, and all newcomers to the school as well as those still 'free' denizens of the community were looking forward to trying out some of the extracurricular services that were available.

Gohan was especially eager to get started, so much so that he was one of the first students from his room at the front door and ready for action. With his bag slung over his shoulder, the spiky haired teen waited for his friends to catch up before the more seasoned attendants of Orange Star High began leading him around the main building. With a list of all the clubs available on hand, it was clear that the young Saiyan warrior had plenty of options to choose from. The only question now was which club he would end up picking, if any, to express whatever creative genius he had.

There was only one problem…

"What exactly is my talent?" Gohan asked aloud, scratching his head as he stared down at the sheet of all the clubs and where they were located. As he, Videl, Erasa, Sharpener and Touya strolled by dozens of other students roaming the hallways with similar objectives in mind, the demi-Saiyan couldn't help but address his current problem with the other members of the band. "What do I want to do with my skills?"

You would think this far along in his life he would've picked something other than martial arts and scholarship as dreams to pursue. What did he want to do alongside his role as a defender of earth and after all of his education was done? It was a question that he was unable to address until now and it was beginning to bother him as the group filed down the hallway with labored footsteps.

"That all depends," Videl cut in, siding up next to her boyfriend and throwing him a warm smile when he directed his gaze towards her. "What kind of stuff do you do in your free time? What are your hobbies?"

"Hobbies?"

"Yeah. Stuff that you're good at," Touya spoke up, pulling up next to his taller friend along with an intently listening Erasa and Sharpener. "Why don't you list them off for us? Give us an idea as to what you can do?"

Placing his thumb and finger to his chin, Gohan began to think in stages. "Well… I'm good at math, literacy, science, chemistry, quantum physics…"
"Aside from all that," Sharpener cut in, shooting the guy an amused smirk. "Geezus, Einstein. What about something that you enjoy doing?"

Gohan threw the blonde a surprised look. "But…I do enjoy doing that stuff."

His answer had the jock stare blankly at him. "Seriously?"

Shaking her head at her boyfriend's innocent reply, Videl then stepped back into him and nudged him in the ribs. "How about something that'll get you outside of the classroom? Something that's fun and you're really passionate about?"

"Oh," the hybrid teen replied, with a grin forming across his lips. "I get it. Let's see…" Rubbing his chin once again, the spiky haired hero then began pulling ideas out of the air and arranging them accordingly. "I'm good at martial arts…"

"That one's a given. Go on," Videl encouraged with a bright look in play.

"I like fighting, running, swimming, weight-lifting, flying…"

Sharpener raised an eyebrow, "Wait. Flying?"

"Gesundheit," Touya interjected, smacking the teen Saiyan in the shoulder and drawing his attention. "Sorry, mate. Keep going."

Grinning sheepishly at his little yet inconsequential slip-of-the-tongue, Gohan did as instructed and continued, "I like baseball…"

"So generally a lot of sporty stuff? That's cool," Videl summarized with an understanding nod, before then pointing at the list in the teen's hand. "The clubs out by the track and field should be right up your alley." Those items were the less intense sporting activities. Hopefully her idol would be able to find something he enjoyed out there on the grass.

Stopping in his tracks so that the others did so as well, the half-Saiyan smiled and showed the rest of his group the document he was carrying. "How's this for an idea? Why don't we go check out all of the clubs closest to us first before heading outside to have a look at the venues on the ovals? That way we'll be able to cover all of the indoor groups before getting into the more spread out ones. What do you guys think?"

Seeing his friend's logic, Touya nodded, "Sounds like a plan."

"Alright. Let's do it," Erasa chirped, clenching her fist victoriously and thrusting it forward.

Completely psyched and beaming from ear to ear, the half-Saiyan was then taken by the hand by his friend Videl and dragged down the locker-lined corridor. When Erasa and Touya quickly followed after the pair, they left Sharpener standing in place and staring after them with a bewildered expression slapped across his mug. After they got about a few yards away from the stumped jock, the long haired sportsman raised a hand as if to ask a question.

"Wait… nobody else heard him say 'flying'?"

Realizing he was being left behind, the long haired man quickly kicked his body back into gear and chased after them.

OOO
From that point onwards, a lot of things happened to Gohan, Videl and their compatriots. Over the next couple of hours following the dismissal from class, the group began a thorough inspection of every single curricular group inside the main building. While dodging the traffic in the hallways and locating places on the map was an easy task, it was getting acquainted with some of these afterschool-hours groups that proved to be an even tougher challenge, especially for those unfamiliar with the activities being practiced by said organizations. This went double for the young man from out of town, who had now begun systematically crossing the various clubs off of his list one after the other as he, Erasa and the rest of their squad checked them out.

The first few were easy. The math club and the chess club needed no introduction, seeing as how they were widely known as the brains of the institute. Though Gohan was intrigued by the opportunities they had to offer, the rest of the members of his troop weren't, and were quick to pass off on them and drag their friend to some more exciting venues. The science labs were bustling with a whole bunch of students performing and displaying experiments for the public. The chemistry club in particular gave a fantastic demonstration on chemical metal embrittlement and the results of compound tampering. Those standing in the front row of that particular event ended up covered in yellow soot, which prompted Gohan and his escorts to leave before the next big miniature cataclysm took place.

The other clubs inside the building that the group swung by also included the visual arts club, the pottery club, the home etiquette club, the manga club, and the occult research club. After getting the shit scared out of them by the guys actually representing the latter branch of the school's dark underbelly, Videl then dragged Gohan off for lunch. Stomachs were quickly filled in the maid café setup on the second level, where all of them enjoyed several servings of tea and cakes. When the tastes of all members of their group had been satisfied, they decided to hit the road again.

Soon enough, the young Saiyan found himself standing outside the entrance to one of the club rooms closest to the library. Hands at his sides and an eyebrow raised, a smile slowly formed across the physically fit teen's lips as he read the banner that'd been hung up over the doorway advertising the name of the organization it was playing house to.

'The Calligraphy Club'

Saying it out loud under his breath a couple of times, the boy then took a step forward to enter said room, only to be speedily swarmed by Videl and Erasa when the group realized the guy had stopped a few doors back. Grabbing him by the arms, the two girls quickly dragged him away before his fingers could even touch the doorknob.

"Don't even think about it," the raven haired girl exclaimed.

Disappointment quickly falling over him, Gohan expressed his surprise with a groan, "Aww… b-but I…"

"Your handwriting is as good enough as it is, so let's keep moving, stud," Erasa said in a sing-song voice as they quickly rejoined Sharpener and Touya further up the corridor. "We've got a lot more places to check out before this day is through."

Hurriedly falling into step with the two males, the girls released the half-Saiyan from their custody and allowed him to walk on his own accord. As soon as he was dragged away from entering that particular classroom, which would've surely been a buzz kill for them, the slightly frazzled teen in the yellow leather jacket quickly popped out his checklist and crossed out the name of the club.

"I take it trying my hand at the other literary clubs is also out of the question, huh?" Gohan asked sadly.
"You're surrounded by enough books as it is," Erasa continued, a proud smile on her face at successfully deterring him from a possible spirit hazing target. "Our goal today is to get you out of that cold, unforgiving place and into the sunlight."

"And don't think for a second that we're going to let you choose something boring," Sharpener cut in from the side, with Touya quietly pushing his glasses up his nose in his characteristic manner.

Giving a half-smile at his friends' various remarks, the Saiyan warrior then looked over his sheet and crossed out several more names. By the time they passed the book club setup in the library and began heading down the stairs, Gohan noticed that they'd already covered around half of the organizations at the institute. With lunch having come and gone, that practically left them with the rest of the afternoon to go check out the other clubs. This was a realization that put a smile on his face.

"I think we can go have a look at the outside venues now," Gohan informed, dodging a student dressed as a fantasy character and glancing across at the expectant faces walking alongside him. "Unless there are a few more in here we may have missed?"

Scratching his cheek, Touya then began making a couple of random suggestions. "What about the home economics club?"

"Pft. Yeah right," Videl chuckled while giving the sporty kid a smirk. "Gohan will eat them out of house and home. Not to mention his cooking isn't exactly… A-grade material."

"Alright. How about… the performing arts club?"

Erasa's expression brightened, "Now there's an idea. How are your acting abilities, Gohan?"

Pausing in the middle of the hallway so that his friends gathered around him, the demi-Saiyan watched them all take up audience positions and fix all of their undivided attention upon him. Realizing he was going to have to give a demonstration of said capabilities, the young warrior took a deep breath, calmed his nerves, and, with a big smile in play, let it rip.

"Fear not, citizens! So long as I'm here, the cold, unforgiving clutches of evil shall never think about laying its hands upon this city, nor shall it ever know the feeling of true victory! I am the light in the darkness! The protector of the innocent! The embodiment of all that is good in this world! I am the all-powerful, the unstoppable, the indestructible, Great Saiyaman!" And he recited all of this with the cheesiest super-hero voice and the most unusual poses ever conceived by a human being.

His little outburst in the middle of the hallway had almost every single student present stop and stare at him in bewilderment. With silence choking the area, the young warrior waited for his audience's collective responses. After several seconds of waiting, a light cough suddenly rang out, followed by a sympathetic and half-hearted applause from a nearby female student, who then stopped when she realized nobody else was clapping.

Appearing completely taken aback, Touya looked away in embarrassment, Sharpener was absolutely mortified, and Videl and Erasa had to turn away to hide their snickering.

The blonde jock glared, "Gohan…"

"Yeah?"
"Don't ever… EVER… do that again."

Blinking innocently a few times, the boy's arms dropped from whatever Ginyu inspired pose he'd assumed right there and he pressed his fingers together, "O-Okay." As soon as he'd straightened up, the rest of the students standing in the hall began to move once again.

Running a hand down his face, Sharpener shook his head at the teenager, who was now rubbing his head shamefully. "It's settled. That was, without a doubt, the worst acting I'd ever seen in my entire life."

"There's no way in hell you'd be able to put on a cape and cowl, go out into the city streets, and fool anyone with… whatever it was that you just did there," Touya cut in, voicing his opinion on his classmate's script-reading chops.

"Really?" Cheeks glowing somewhat, the spiky haired young Saiyan glanced over at the two boys with the most disappointed air you'd ever see on him. "I thought I did pretty well."

Her giggling subsiding as she brushed a stray tear from her eye, Erasa stepped over to the downtrodden warrior and laid a hand upon his shoulder. "Gohan… I love you, but… even if I was drunk, high, tripping balls, and had both my eyes pulled out and locked away in jam jars, there's just no way any of that poor excuse for dancing will ever pass off as acceptable… even by superhero standards." She then patted said area she was gripping comfortingly. "I guess that also crosses the dance club off your list. Two birds with one stone, eh?"

Sighing, the previously deflated Saiyan then passed Videl and the others a small smile. "I suppose it's for the best. I kind of have two-left-feet anyway." He then shrugged in their direction. "Besides… I can always learn how to dance another time, right?"

"Yeah. Whatever you say, twinkle-toes," Sharpener joked, wrapping an arm around the guy and beginning to pull him down the hallway next to Erasa, who locked her own arms around Gohan's. "Now… how about we try something a little more manly?"

 Appearing genuinely curious at the proposition, the hybrid Saiyan blinked. "What exactly did you have in mind?"

Murmuring thoughtfully, Sharpener then grinned, "How about football?"

OOO

As soon as the group led Gohan to the first club outside of the main building, things started to get a little more interesting… for the normal kids anyway.

The first field the teen squad arrived at was the soccer field. It was here the young Saiyan was able to try his foot at kicking a ball for a team so to speak, which the players were more than happy to allow him to demonstrate his skills. The game started off quite well, where Videl and the others watched from the sidelines as some super talented kids were able to have a shot at going for a goal. But all of that changed when the black and white object was knocked in Gohan's direction and the warrior loaded his leg.

That one flick turned out to be his last and only tryout for the sport, where he took aim at the ball and ended up punting it clear across the countryside and onto the horizon. The instant the ball disappeared from sight, every single student turned their dumbstruck expressions towards Gohan, who was quickly hurried off the field by Videl and Touya. Once he had his regular shoes back on, the young Saiyan was speedily moved on to the next club, while at the same time dodging every single question pitched at him from a pale-faced Sharpener.

Gohan then went and tried his hand at javelin. While he was slipping on a pair of shoes, his girlfriend went over and reminded him to hold back on his strength as much as he could, so as to not draw too much attention to himself. This seemed like a simple and easy request. But the instant he made the pitch, the result turned out to be the same as the one he had when he tried out for both the shot put and discus throws, and he ended up chucking all three items clear across the bleachers.
Gohan didn't really see much issue behind his rather stellar first attempts at a group of sporting events that didn't involve fighting. It was only when the club presidents started lobbying him to join them that Erasa and the others had to hastily pull the boy away from the oval so that he didn't end up swamped.

The last thing they wanted was for wonder-boy to get scared away.

At least the day wasn't turning out to be a total loss. The experiences on the ovals allowed Videl to learn more about her boyfriend then what she did previously; such as all of the stuff he was good at and… all of the stuff that he was shit at.

In complete montage form, the group of four then dragged the newcomers firm behind over to another tryout on the volleyball field. Though initially fearful of what kind of surprises awaited them, Videl and Erasa gave permission to Gohan to give it a shot, mostly for the fact that he appeared so happy. I mean, what else could they do?

There was no way they could turn down a handsome face like that.

The pair soon came to regret their decision to let the kid loose. As soon as the ball fell towards the half-Saiyan's side of the court, a single slap was all that was needed to knock all of the air from the ball and send it spiraling over the net. After a few graceful spins, the deflated mass of plastic then flopped back down to the sand, where all of the players could only gawk in shock at how effortlessly a single hit was able to put the ball out of commission. That was all the cue Videl needed to quickly push her friend out of play and away from the arena.

Things were no better at the basketball club either…

Inside the sports center, lined up with the hoop hanging just a few feet away, Gohan stood in the middle of the court, ball in hand and jacket zipped up tightly. The boy nervously weighed the sphere in his palms as he stared up at the spot he was supposed to shoot the ball through. Now though it seemed like he was being pressured by the crowd and wasn't responding too well to all the attention, it wasn't his audience that had him anxious.

Videl, Erasa, Sharpener and Touya were also watching him from the bleachers, along with a couple dozen other students, some of which had followed him down from the ovals to see what else wonder boy had to offer. It was these students that fell under the notice of the group, which then had the four of them hoping Gohan wouldn't attract any more attention then he already had.

Waiting patiently alongside him, the basketball club president, a tall red-haired young male adorned in the team jersey and shorts with the name 'Taiga' stitched onto the back, smiled at the spiky haired teenager and gestured for him to proceed. "Come on, kid. Don't be shy. Show me what you've got."

Swallowing heavily, the demi-Saiyan grinned back at him nervously. "A-Alright." He then turned back towards the basketball hoop, taking a few deep breaths to steady himself. Widening his stance, he then narrowed his eyes on the square as sweat began to trickle down his head. "Okay Gohan. Relax. Gentle… nice and gentle. Just a tiny bit of strength." Goal set, the teen was ready Crouching ever so slightly, Gohan then raised the ball up and, with a gentle flick of his wrist, tossed the ball towards the ring…

This ended with the ball leaving his hands at several times the speed of sound, punching a hole through the backboard and the wall behind that. Immediately upon which Gohan froze in his throwing position, along with every other teenager in the hall.

Unfortunately it was the same result as before. The poor Saiyan got excited and lost control…

After seeing bits of the wall's plaster fall away, the club president turned to gawk at the new kid, who chuckled and casually swung his arms out of his stance.

Before he could stammer out some sort of an excuse, Erasa rushed in from the side and began pushing him off of the court and towards the exit. "Okay. That's it. Time to go. Thanks for the tryout, boys!" the blonde girl shouted in a hurried manner.

As Gohan was forced out the exit under the stunned gazes of the audience and the basketball team standing by the bleachers, he was quickly pursued by Videl, Sharpener, and finally Touya; the latter of whom turned around to grin across at their fellow students, and give them all a thumbs-up and an apology.

"Hey! How about that new chest workout? Huh? Does wonders for the arms, am I right? Heh-heh. Right?" the boy nervously spoke, backing up through the door. As soon as he was halfway through, he quickly turned heel and dashed after his friends.

With the entrance swinging closed behind him, the group not only left a completely stunned crowd in their wake, but about a thousand zeni worth of damage to the court…

OOO

A little while later and managing to duck and dodge all of their pursuers from the fields, Gohan, Videl, Erasa, Sharpener and Touya managed to make it over to the multipurpose workout buildings. It was here where they found the gyms situated not too far from the swimming pool and the very place where they intended to checkout a couple of the other clubs. Thanks to their convenient placing, the five of them didn't have to walk too far to get to whichever one of the half-dozen they wanted to go to afterwards.

However, despite their success at managing to evade the people that'd taken an interest in Gohan's ridiculous displays in strength, it was the fact that the demi-Saiyan was able to pull it off in the first place that had one of them completely stressed out. They were of course referring to one blonde haired Sharpener, who was still shaking his head in disbelief at what he'd witnessed at the basketball courts a little while earlier.

"What in the heck happened back there?" the man practically shouted as they entered the hall of their next objective.

Gohan, cringing a little at the volume in the blonde's voice, rubbed the back of his head nervously, "I'm honestly not too sure myself. Could've sworn I had it all under control."

Nudging the demi-Saiyan in the side, the raven haired girl strolling alongside him smirked. "Didn't I tell you to watch that throwing arm of yours?" she asked as their group moved down the well-lit, white hallway, avoiding a drinking fountain and a couple other students along the way.
"You did. But I just couldn't help it," the Saiyan replied exasperatedly, feeling a little bit flustered as he rubbed the side the girl had hit. Though it didn't hurt, it was just his way of showing emotional discomfort. "With so many people watching me, I may have gotten a tad too excited. That or I'd managed to get a dozen times stronger since the battle with Set."

"Ah. Well... that would explain a lot," Videl replied with an understanding nod. "I guess with every power boost you have, you need a few extra days of training to fully accommodate to the new levels. Looks like you're still having problems in that area."

"Yeah. It sure seems that way."

Giving the duo a strange look, Sharpener scratched his head, "What are you guys talking about?" He was then lightly punched in the shoulder from behind by an intently listening Touya.

"Nothing for you to worry about, Sharpie."

Grumbling at the playful jab and how it'd struck a tender spot, the blonde then focused his attention on their next destination, which just so happened to be through one of the many doorways lining the hall up ahead. Judging from the amount of chatter he could hear coming from the various archways, he guessed that their first stop was the first corner on their left.

"So... what are we going to be checking out now?" the blonde jock asked.

"We're going to have a look at the martial arts clubs," Erasa chirped, looking over the rest of her crew to see the apprehensive expression her fellow golden haired friend was currently giving. "Since we know how much Gohan and Videl love to fight, I think this is the perfect place for them to show their stuff."

"Sure. That sounds fine and dandy. But..." Sharpener winced as he shot a cautionary glance in the demi-Saiyan's direction, "Have you seen the crazy shit this kid has been pulling all afternoon? He chucked a basketball through a wall for crying out loud."

"I know. Crazy... right?" Touya said with a lighthearted chuckle as he placed a hand on the guy's shoulder. "You gotta love those chest workouts."

"What chest workouts? What are you tal-" Completely baffled by the weird crap coming in from left and right, the blonde jock shook his head and glared at his fellow athletes. "Do we really want this guy to join a club that has him fighting other people?" he asked worriedly. "I mean, don't get me wrong, I'm all for watching you guys kick ass in the ring. But honestly, having this power monster get into a fist fight... that might be a little bit too much."

"Don't worry, Sharpener. Of all the things Gohan is good at, fighting is definitely number one in his top three," Videl answered, putting her full confidence in the Saiyan's ability to handle himself in this particular field. When she exchanged a smile with the teen in the yellow jacket, all eyes returned to their less than optimistic teammate.

Breathing out a heavy sigh, Sharpener crossed his arms. "Alright. If you say so. Which club are you going to check out first?"

Tapping his chin and giving the room beside them a quick glance, Touya then raised a hand, "I'm guessing karate, maybe?"

"Karate?" Videl chuckled in amusement, "The Dane Cook of martial arts? No thanks." She then shared an amused look with Gohan.
Crossing his arms, the teen in glasses smirked, "Oh yeah? And which club are you a part of, Ms. Satan?"

"I'm a member of the Judo Club. Since they didn't have a krav maga club and the taekwondo club was a tad bit overcrowded, I had to settle for the next best thing," the tomboy stated with a proud grin, which she quickly turned on her trainer of many years. When she quickly recognized the inquisitive expression he took on, the young crime fighter shrugged. "Hey. I've got a life outside of police work too, yah know. It's not always car chases, homework and training every single day. Plus you can trust me to hold back against these guys."

Gohan raised both his hands defensively, "Don't worry. I know you can handle yourself." After backing down from the girl's wide grin, the boy then panned over his companions a second time and directed their attention towards the entrance. "This club here is the muay thai group. Next to that is the boxing club. We'll check them all out and, if they don't pan out like the others did, we'll move on to the next lot. Yeah?" When he saw the boys and girls nod in agreement, the teen then led the way into the room.

As soon as they entered the training chamber, they were immediately greeted by the sight of an entire crowd of students gathered around the ring. Baffled by the number of people in the gym, Gohan, Videl and the others quickly approached the stage to see what was going on. When they came across a student decked out in full kickboxing gear with a pair of gloves held tightly under his arm, Sharpener approached the guy and tapped him on the shoulder.

"Hey, man. What's going on here?"

The young man with short black hair and his eyes seemingly closed gave the jock a smirk, "New kid up in the ring trying out for the team. He's taking on the president and two other guys at the same time."

The long haired sportsman recoiled in surprise. "Three on one? Seriously?" He then turned his attention to the ring, where he then proceeded to watch the show.

Up on the canvas platform surrounded by red, white and blue ropes, the group saw a petite looking fellow, adorned in a sweat jacket and padded gear, including chest protection, going up against three other, much bigger guys wearing the same stuff. From the normal bystander's point of view, it looked like a suicide run for the one squaring off against the far more muscular looking combatants. But as the sparring match carried on, both Gohan and Videl realized that it was actually the three fighters who were out of their league.

Hopping on the spot with their guard up, the mysterious newcomer danced around the three kickboxing students when they rushed at him with a swift series of punches and kicks. Doing their best not to cross blows or get in the way of one another, the three had scattered across the canvas to try and corner the guy. They did so by coming at him from all sides, striking out at him with wicked roundhouse kicks and punches. An onslaught like this would seriously intimidate any ordinary practitioner and even result in having the stuffing beaten out of them.

However, the person not only avoided the trio's assaults effortlessly, he was even able to parry and block whatever blows they did manage to land. Even attacks that seemed like they were heavy didn't even throw the guy off balance. He simply pressed forward and continued to toy with the three males, all of whom were struggling to keep track of him.

Sharpener whistled when he saw the newcomer slip a kick and block a left hook, and quickly shuffle out of range when they chased after him. "Damn. This guy's got some serious skill."
"You can say that again," Touya agreed, folding his arms as he watched the display.

Most of the members of that audience were blown away, unable to comprehend how a new guy could keep up with the president and two of the club's most senior members. It was something that caught the attention of Gohan and Videl as well. But when they stretched out with their senses to see exactly who this mysterious youth was, both of them smiled when they discovered exactly who it was playing around up on that four-corner arena.

For the next few seconds the small fighter continued to evade the three boys, sticking to an incredibly defensive style as he allowed his opponents to burn out all of their energy. After avoiding a couple more hand blows and a kick, the newcomer then decided it was time to hit back, and did so in spectacular style.

When he dodged a right, he countered with a kick that sent his attacker flying into the ropes on the other end, which he bounced off of and face-planted the mat. After dispensing of the first, the newbie then avoided two blows from the club president and blocked a kick. Hit stopped, he then drove a hook across his face, which sent him crashing into the canvas. The instant the leader went down the third man came in swinging wildly, only to be met by a jumping knee from the novice, who took him down in a similar way to the first.

The moment all three students hit the floor and lay their motionless, the bell was rung, allowing the novice to stand victorious in center ring while the audience looked on in amazement.

Once the shock of the moment passed, the teenagers watching from the sidelines applauded the newcomer for their victory. The shared expression of elation allowed Gohan and the others to make their way to ring side, where they saw the young warrior in the head gear raise a glove in victory and slowly make their way over to the edge.

Touya laughed out joyously, "Bravo! Well done!"

"Wow. Who is that guy?" Erasa murmured, also clapping as she gave the petite fighter a curious once-over.

All of their questions were answered shortly. As soon as the new kid did his victory lap, he suddenly spotted the familiar faces of Gohan and Videl smiling from the sidelines. Upon doing their double-take, the person hastily removed the gloves from their hands and lifted their headgear free. This allowed their long brown hair to fall freely down their shoulders, and gave the audience an unobstructed view of the winner's identity.

It came as one hell of a wake-up call to a lot of the boys, particularly Sharpener, to see that the victor was actually a hot girl.

"Gohan-kun," the boxer exclaimed, quickly walking over to the ropes and leaning over the side, "You're here!"

"Hey, Lime. Great to see you," Gohan laughed, placing his hands on his hips as he gazed up at the girl. "Man. You really killed it out there. Nice work."

The farmer's girl giggled and nodded her appreciation under the waves of congratulations she was receiving from the other students. "Thanks. To be honest though, it wasn't that tough of a fight. I was just humoring these guys to make things a little more interesting."

"I'll bet," Videl snorted, sparing a glance around the girl and towards her opponents, who were now in the process of slowly regaining consciousness. When Gohan and Lime looked over at the fallen males, they saw the other club members hop in to help them back to their feet. "If you'd actually hit them with all your strength, you could've put them in hospital…"

"Or worse," Lime finished, before then turning her attention back to her friends, especially the tall one with the spiky hair. "Anyway, I'm so happy to see that you're here." Taking a moment to wave at Touya and Erasa, a gesture which was cheerfully returned, she then pushed down the ropes and jumped over. "Sorry I didn't drop by earlier. I was too busy organizing things with the teacher and getting my assignments sorted that I wasn't able to come say hello." Landing on the ground directly in front of the two Z-fighters, she quickly rose to her feet and beamed their way. "Welcome to Orange Star High, Gohan."

"Thanks. That means a lot coming from you. This school is awesome," the demi-Saiyan replied with a fond smile, stepping forward so that he could share a hug with his friend. Upon sharing pleasantries up close, the boy then pulled away and looked the unscathed fighter over. "Having fun?"

"Tons," the girl immediately replied, before then nodding towards her crush. "And you? Checking out the clubs?"

"Yep. I already had a look at the ones outside," Gohan said while thumbing over his shoulder, "They… heh… didn't exactly pan out how I was expecting."

"You could say his heart was deviating more towards these ones then the other one," Videl chimed in, folding her arms as she gave her rival a confident smile. "With a little bit of help from us, of course. If things go well, maybe we can settle him into one of these groups."

Raising an eyebrow, the girl in the fighting gear looked across at the boy and, after analyzing his current state of dress, chuckled in response. "If that's what you want to do, then go ahead. But if you ask me, I think you're a little too overqualified for a sport like this."

Appearing sheepish, Gohan then tilted his head uneasily. "That may be true. Still, it wouldn't hurt to give it a try."

"I suppose," the teenager replied, sharing a fond look with her friend before then gesturing for him and the others to follow her. "Come on. I'll introduce you to the president… if he's done seeing stars, that is."

OOO

(Later that afternoon)

All in all, the last remaining hours of school turned out to be some of the most fun the group had spent at the institute. Aside from watching Gohan utterly dominate in the martial arts department when trying out for the assorted clubs, they were also able to go out and have a great time checking out the clubs around the warehouse and the swimming pool. In the end, the young Saiyan didn't end up picking a club right away, but he did put his name down for three; swimming, automotive, and boxing. Needless to say, the teen walked out of the school much more excited and invigorated than when he entered.

His exit from the stage was made that much more significant when he left the grounds with his friends.

Lime, who'd joined the group following her tryout at the muay thai club, breathed a sigh in relief, "Ugh. I'm pooped."
"Yeah. Man that was one hell of an afternoon," Touya groaned, stretching his arms over his head. "I could go for some tea right about now."

"Well, you're going to have to enjoy it without me. I'm heading home," Gohan exclaimed, pulling to a stop by the front gates and turning around to face the rest of his team.

Almost immediately he was met with disappointment.

"Aww. You can't hang out with us for a little while longer, Gohan?" Erasa asked, putting on a feigned look of hurt. She even willed her bottom lip to quiver slightly in the cutest way imaginable. "Don't you like us anymore?"

Chuckling when the blonde girl stepped towards him, the young warrior waved her down and looked back at her, "Come on, Erasa. Of course I like you guys. It's just that I made a promise to my little brother that I would play with him as soon as I'd finished all of my homework. Since I've got quite a bit of reading and writing to catch up on, the sooner I get back to Mount Paozu the better." He then grinned heartily at her. "I promise to hang out with you guys tomorrow though."

This drew a warm smile from the ever-excitable girl, "I'll hold you to it."

It was when he was sure he had his friend's undivided attention he then brought up his wrist and showed her the band of stones he was wearing. When the blonde girl spotted it, the warrior smiled. "And thanks so much for the gift, Erasa. I love it."

Surprised to see he was wearing it so soon and hearing his words of gratitude, Erasa blushed and looked away bashfully. "You're welcome…"

Nodding to the cheerful beauty when she glanced back at him, Gohan then clapped hands with Touya in a bro-like manner and bumped fists with Sharpener, the latter of who placed his hands on his hips and smiled at the newcomer. "It was nice meeting you, man. Hope the school wasn't too overbearing for yah."

The young Saiyan grinned, "I had a great time. And thanks so much for showing me around."

"No problem," the jock nodded, smiling respectfully at his fellow sportsman. "Looking forward to seeing which club you pick in the end. It better be a good one."

"Oh. It will be," the hybrid answered with a confident gleam in his eyes. He then turned his attention to Lime, whom he could see was beaming up at him as if he were the most interesting person in the world. Her expression earned a grin from the boy. "I'll see you tomorrow then?"

"Uh-huh," the brown haired girl nodded, wasting no time in throwing her arms around him in a hug and pulling away slowly. "Recess?"

"Table under the tree. In the quad. Right after the bell."

"Cool," the teenager chirped while stepping away, hands behind her back. "Say hi to your mum and Goten for me."

"I will," Gohan nodded, adjusting his bag and turning his attention to the raven haired girl standing next to him. When he saw her eyes snap to him intently, the hybrid grinned. "You were right. This is a great school."

"Right?" Videl chuckled, looking genuinely pleased with her assessment. "I know you're going to love it here. The teachers are great and so are the students."
"Yeah. I can already tell it's going to be a good year."

"It'll be even better if absolutely no apocalyptic threats come knocking on our front doors."

"You can say that again. Speaking of which… no calls today?"

The crime fighter shook her head and held up her wrist, which she used to flash her watch-slash-communicator, "Nope."

"Good. That means nothing bad happened while we were fooling around at the clubs. You'd be surprised how many messages you can miss while you're having so much fun."

"Or it could mean the police didn't need us jumping in to save the day. I'm not the only cop in the city you know… and neither is tall, dark, and ridiculously handsome alter ego," Videl winked, at the same time throwing the boy a mischievous smile. "Quite the interesting change, huh?"

Laughing a little at the girl's quip, the boy nodded. "Honestly, I think it's better if we don't get too involved. The rest of this city has gotta work too, yah know. They won't be able to rely on us all the time, especially when things get really busy," Gohan continued, seeing the girl snicker and scratch her nose bashfully. "At least a lot of other exciting things happened today."

"Let's just hope we can keep those 'exciting things' on the down-low from now on," the raven haired girl added. It was a response that had the young warrior in front of her nod his head in agreement. "Don't worry. If anything bad happens or if things get out of hand, I'll be sure to step in and help you out."

"Thanks a lot, Videl. Well…" Tugging at his strap, the half-Saiyan stepped forward and gave the raven haired young girl a warm smile, surprising her at how close he came. "I'd better head off. See you soon?"

Videl nodded, swallowing nervously under his charming smile, "Yeah. Real soon." It was at that moment, without any warning whatsoever, the two stepped towards each other and shared a kiss, with the taller of the two martial artists having to lean down slightly to meet his girlfriend halfway.

The show of affection was chaste and tender all in one. By the time the two separated seconds later, they were unaware of the stumped expressions on the faces of the teenagers standing around them. Before any of them could say anything or fully recover from the shock, Gohan waved them all goodbye and jogged down the road. Moments later, he was gone, turning a corner and disappearing from sight.

Cheeks red and a happy smile on her face, Videl sighed joyfully, brought her hands up, stretched, and began to walk. "I'll see you guys tomorrow," she said while waving over her shoulder.

As the girl walked away, a currently gaping Sharpener raised a hand and pointed in the two directions the young fighters had broken off in. "Did she jus-… are they…?"

"It certainly seems that way," Touya murmured, appearing just as stunned as the blonde.

Completely caught off guard by what she'd just witnessed, Erasa stared after Videl for several long seconds in disbelief. When her mind eventually processed the sight of the two raven haired teenagers kissing, the blonde recoiled, frowned, and gripped one of her arms tightly.

"What was that just now?" For some reason, watching her best friend and crush kiss each other right in front of her made her feel restless and uncomfortable inside. It was almost like her heart had twisted and caused the rest of her body to shudder and freeze on its own accord.

Shaking her head to rid herself of that feeling, Erasa resolved to figure this out later as she then watched her childhood friend of many years amble away.

Lime meanwhile, out of view of the other teenagers, huffed slightly and allowed a smirk to form on her lips. Though she'd responded in a similar manner to the others following the pair's show of affection, her rate of recovery from said gesture was far more in tune.

"You'd better watch out, Videl… because I'm comin' for him as well."

(TO BE CONTINUED)

Author's Note: Another chapter with many more to come. We are able to see Gohan's first day at school and the aftermath of his tussle with Set, with some surprising twists.

The next few chapters are going to be more peacetime showing Gohan's life away from fighting. So far we're just warming down now so that we can focus more on his schooling and what else he and his friends get up to. I'm really excited for these next arcs. The club ideas I was inspired from watching Hyakko and Seitokai Yakuindomo. The martial arts clubs and Videl and Lime's membership to both judo and muay thai were also inspired from the latter show.

Hope to hear from you all soon.

IMPORTANT: To continue reading Dragonball Z: Legacies, skip the next chapter, as it is an alternate ending/epilogue to the story.
Epilogue - Gohan X Videl Ending

Author's Note: Hi all, ALP here again.

For all those who're just joining me, I've just needed to make some structural changes to my fanfiction and have transferred the one-shot After Story chapter of Videl over to here. Sure, it may mess up my chapter order, but this was something I've been thinking about adding to my story for a while, yet have been putting it off due to other commitments.

This Epilogue is part of my alternate endings plan I have going. This one-shot chapter in particular is the ending directed towards the readers of Dragonball Z: Legacies who read up to Chapter 22 of my story at the end of the God of Storms Arc, and is sticking solely to a Gohan/Videl ending. There will be more endings towards the end, but this is for those who've read up to Chapter 22 and just want to Gohan/Videl pairing, and not the others.

Basically this is an AU of Legacies where after Gohan beats Set, he carries on a relationship with Videl into peacetime and they end up as an official couple, leaving the rest up to the readers to decide. Short, sweet, and nothing more.

If you want a more complete ending or a different ending, you can continue reading Legacies. But for all those who want to stop, here you go. Hope you enjoy.

-----------

Dragonball Z

Legacies

Epilogue - Gohan X Videl

(A few weeks later)

"Mr. Son. Mr. Son? Excuse me?" the math teacher's voice echoed across the room and up the stands of approximately two dozen students, all of whom were listening to her attentively. "Are you still alive back there?" Her tone level and mood calm, the brown haired young woman in the sundress, Mio, waited patiently for a few seconds to see if the male scholar she was addressing would respond. When she got nothing and heard the snickering in her class start to ramp up, the educator pursed her lips cutely in annoyance and, taking a deep breath, spoke even louder. "MR. SON! HELLO?!"

Her yell effortlessly reaching the middle row and startling about half of the class who were sitting closest to her, she then watched in satisfaction as the person she was addressing sat bolt upright in his seat and gasped in surprise. His short, spiky locks all a mess and his jacket equally disheveled as he stared ahead of him with the most hilarious, groggy look of confusion on his face, the part-time hero of earth and first ranked student in the class glanced around in momentary paranoia, before then turning his gaze towards the front of the room.

The fact that he had a piece of paper plastered to his face as well as a whole bunch of pen writing on his cheek made his appearance all the more comical.

Looking past the amused faces of his peers and friends to the podium at the base of the room, he saw his teacher, arms folded over her chest and notepad held close to her, staring back at him with a triumphant expression in play. Upon realizing what must have happened and why everyone was now staring at him, the teenage half-Saiyan in the yellow Capsule Corp jacket and wearing black pants cringed in embarrassment and blushed brightly.

Tapping her foot, the teacher spoke. "Sorry for yelling so loudly, Gohan-kun. But you looked so deep in thought back there that I was worried you'd passed out on us," Mio chirped, tilting her head and smiling warmly in his direction. "I hope you're feeling better."

"Uhh... y-yeah." the demi-Saiyan murmured intelligently, before then running a hand through his hair and allowing the piece of graph paper attached to his face to fall off. He then smiled and nodded in her direction. "Sorry about that, Ms. Hirasawa."

"That's alright," Mio replied with a beaming smile still in play. "Do you need to go to the nurse's office? Have a bit of a rest? I know you've been working extremely hard-"

"No, no. I'm alright," the half-Saiyan replied, clearing his throat and straightening up in his seat. Ignoring the few audible sniggers alongside him, he continued to address the teacher with the utmost respect and diligence. "I'll be fine."

"Are you sure?"

"Yes, ma'am," Gohan answered with a firm nod, which earned a sad shake of the head from the person next to him. "Thank you for your concern."

"Alright then," the teacher chirped, satisfied with his reply as she then looked back down at her notepad. Using her finger to find exactly where she'd left off, the young woman then turned heel and continued to pace again, all the while reading her neatly arranged lecture notes to the class.

Her voice once again filled the room for the third time that session and gripped the attention of all those students who were present. As time went on and the woman began guiding her young flock through the processes involved with their current topic of advanced trigonometry, Gohan allowed a long sigh of relief to escape his lips. With the usual monotony and pacing of the atmosphere settling in, the young man then turned his attention to the teenagers who'd been stifling their laughter next to him during the little back-and-forth with his teacher, and focused his gaze upon the gaggle of misfits.

These people turned out to be the group of students he'd come to refer to as his closest and most trusted friends at Orange Star High; Sharpener, Touya, Erasa…

And his partner and teammate of many years, Videl Satan… the latter of whom was now grinning in his direction along with the others.

Being the most vocal of the four, the long-haired jock sitting comfortably in the middle of the row, craned his head forward and gave the boy a mischievous grin. "Welcome back to the land of the living."

"And about time too," the raven haired teen in the oversized white shirt and purple sleeves chuckled, resting her cheek against her knuckles and giving her instructor and companion a wry smile.

Immediately following up on their remarks, the cheery media student in the green halter top motioned forward as well and shot the demi-Saiyan a curious grin, "Did you have a nice sleep, Gohan-kun?"

"Ugh." Rubbing his eye on the back of his knuckle, the spiky haired male groaned and proceeded to massage his neck. "That all depends on your definition of nice." He then grunted when he cocked his head to the side and clenched his jaw. "The surface was good, but the padding was too firm. I think I was lying on my head the wrong way."

Note to self: don't fall asleep in class again. Napping in such an upright position was not good for the back or muscles.

"You were pretty out of it, dude," Touya spoke up from his place, folding his arms and placing them on the table in front of him. "After you set your head down, we thought you'd just dropped your pencil and were leaning over to pick it up. But no. You ended up falling asleep right there on the wood, drooling all over your revision paper."

"It was hilarious," Sharpener exclaimed in a quiet voice, watching the demi-Saiyan groan and place a hand over his forehead in a mortified manner. "Ms. Hirasawa was calling out your name for like… two minutes straight before you decided to come around. If you'd actually started snoring while you were lying there, I bet she would've cracked a fit." If he was being brutally honest, he was certain he would've as well.

But that reaction was for another time and place.

Yawning a little after stretching out his arms and back, Gohan then looked across at his friends to see Videl staring at him with a sly look in her sky-blue eyes. The others were too, but the boy was so focused on exchanging smiles with his girlfriend that he barely even noticed them.

The demi-Saiyan chuckled, "What?"

The girl shrugged coyly. "Nothing… just… thinking about stuff."

"Stuff? Like what?"

"Like you," the raven haired girl replied instantly, reaching forward and poking him in the cheek. Her little gesture of affection drew a lighthearted laugh from the spiky haired boy, who then nudged her back playfully, enough to bump her into her blonde, childhood friend. The tomboy responded with an elbow of her own, before quickly settling down so that they didn't get called out by the teacher. "It's dangerous to fall asleep at your desk inside of a classroom… especially when there are a bunch of other kids sitting around you."

"Yeah. I kind of figured that," Gohan sighed while scratching his temple with his finger in a troubled way. "Not only is there a good chance to get busted by the lecturer, but everybody else takes notice of you as well."

"True. There is that. But there's also a bunch of other reasons why it's a bad idea to nod off while you're sitting next to someone in class… especially somebody you know. You just haven't figured it out yet," Videl hummed, looking away with a sneaky grin, at the same time her friends continued sparing furtive glances in their general direction. Erasa in particular was also struggling to hold in her breath, something that the demi-Saiyan finally noticed out of the corner of his eye. "Don't worry. I'm sure the answers will come to you sooner or later."

"Why don't you make it easier for me and tell me now, so that I don't have to find out later?" Gohan asked, craning his head to grin at the suspiciously acting teenager.

Shaking her hair and brushing some bangs out of her face, the crime fighter then threw her boyfriend an inquisitive glance. "Now that wouldn't be very fair, now would it?" She then began playing with her pen, twirling it about in an obvious and ostentatious manner. "Nor would it be any fun. You forget that I'm not the average, goody-two-shoes that you and your friends have made me out to be. I'm the kind of girl that lives for the simple things… like indulging in various extracurricular activities, doing martial arts in my off-hours, fighting crime in my home city, and saving the world from evil aliens, demons and alike, while having as much fun along the way as possible." After saying this, she then gestured to him with her pen and jabbed it in his direction, "Get the point?"

"I think so." Gohan then threw her a quizzical stare. "In other words, you're just getting me back for all the times I'd beaten you down during our regular weekend sparring sessions. Is that it?"

Videl snickered, "Maa~ybe." She then looked ahead of her again, with a prideful and roguish air falling over her person. "I'll give you to the end of the lesson to figure it out. Perhaps by then you'll finally have your answer."

Finding her response both perplexing and curious, the hybrid then went about taking notes of the teacher's lecture. For the next several minutes after that, nothing important, disruptive or out of the ordinary took place. Just the usual drivel. The entire class stayed completely on course as their lecturer walked them through a couple more algebraic processes, before they were then instructed to go through the tasks themselves. It was during that time that Gohan eventually noticed the various looks of amusement he was receiving from the people around him and the stifled laughter from his friends to his right. Heck, even his teacher was looking in his direction strangely.

At first he didn't make anything of it.

But after a couple of minutes of hearing nothing but silence and the playful humming from his girlfriend sitting alongside him, the once dozing teenager then looked up, sighed, and shook his head in disapproval.

The answer he was looking for was sitting right in front of him… or more appropriately on him, in the form of a pen drawing across his right cheek.

"I have a dick on my face, don't I?"

His question echoed throughout the entire classroom like a mobile phone going off in church, a result that had Videl, Sharpener, Erasa and Touya crack up with fits of laughter.

Note to self (2): Don't ever… EVER fall asleep in class.

XXX

(At the end of the day)

Groaning as he banged his head monotonously against the locker on his left, Gohan then rested his cranium against the door frame and slowly glanced across at the person standing next to him. When his exhausted eyes fell upon the beautiful form of his girlfriend leaning against the line of storage units, with her arms folded and an amused gaze fixated upon him, the demi-Saiyan spoke in a tired, defeated tone of voice.

"That… was mean," the young hero of earth remarked.

Videl cheekily stuck her tongue out at him in response. "Sorry. I couldn't help myself." She then stood off of the metal wall and, as the remaining students in that corridor began to file out of the building and out into the wide, open world, the girl beamed fondly in the teen's direction. "It's just that you looked so cute and defenseless that I just had to draw on your face. You were practically begging for it."
"But did you have to use a black marker?" the demi-Saiyan asked, turning around to reveal his face was still covered in faded ink marks and scribbles. This didn't just include the male extremity sitting on his right cheek. Apparently, Videl had also taken the liberty of writing 'Stallion' across his forehead, and even drew a couple of tear drops and a flower next to his left eye. His entire complexion looked like a post-modern, new art masterpiece. "Did you know how long I spent trying to rub this stuff out in the bathroom? It took me five minutes to even get rid of the worst of it."

"Oh… stop whining, you lug. You can barely see it. Besides…” the girl then sprouted a joking grin, "It looks good on you."

This earned an immediate deadpanned expression from the boy. "Really?" He then pointed at his cheek. "I have a part of the male's anatomy on my face. How is that, in any way, good?"

The tomboy shrugged suggestively, "It brings out the color of your eyes?"

"Ha-ha," Gohan laughed sarcastically, letting his arm drop and another, miserable sigh escape him. When he saw his companion giggle and gaze fondly in his direction, he couldn't help but smile back at her and return her enthusiasm with some of his own.

No matter what he did, he just couldn't be mad at her. His heart wouldn't let him.

"Well then, I guess this means you've learned an important lesson today."

Raising his eyebrow was the demi-Saiyan's instinctive response. "Don't trust my girlfriend with a sharpie?"

The crime fighter smirked and wagged a finger at him, "Don't ever let your guard down, even in the classroom." She then paused for a moment to consider his words carefully, before grinning widely once more. "And yes. Don't trust me with a sharpie. Perhaps next time you'll think twice before you decide to stay up till two o'clock in the morning playing video games on a school day."

Grabbing his last book out of his locker, Gohan then shut the door and gave the teen a half-motivated smile. "I can't help it that I already know everything there is to know about mathematics. Any new information the teacher supposedly gives us is just boring revision work for me. Plus…” He then raised a finger in a defensive manner, "Zangya dared me."

The orange haired fighter had said that she could kick his ass on Bailo and so they decided to have a little tournament with the rest of the online community. Due to the obsessive nature that both the Hera and the half-Saiyan had in regards to competition, you could only imagine how things turned out in the end.

Rolling her eyes at her boyfriend, the girl then walked over to him and elbowed the teen in the arm, earning a wince from the hero due to the sharp nature of the blow. "No excuses, mister." Videl then pulled away and gazed firmly up at him. "Even if Zangya dared you, I think you would know better than to fall asleep during school hours and tune out of a lesson. As smart and clever a person as you are, it's still common courtesy to listen to your teachers… especially to someone as nice as Ms. Hirasawa."

The boy smiled sadly, "Yeah. Sorry."

Still beaming from ear to ear, the girl then nodded her head and straightened up, adjusting the straps of her backpack. "Apology accepted."

Feeling a sense of closure flood through him, the demi-Saiyan straightened his jacket and shared a
With Erasa having gone off to attend to her club activities, Lime doing the same thing, Sharpener heading off for home so that he could get a quick workout at the gym, and Touya excusing himself from the group early to walk his girlfriend Yukie home, this pretty much left the two Z-fighters all to themselves. After the hectic week they'd just had, hounded by both their friends and fans, while also having to endure their respective, agonizing training sessions, this moment of peace and serenity with one another was exactly what they needed.

"By the way… where did you want to go this Saturday? You said you wanted to do something with me, right?"

Videl's head then perked up at her boyfriend's words and she held a hand to him apologetically. "Ooh… sorry. I've got to cancel that."

"Huh?"

The tomboy took on an awkward smile, "Erasa said she wanted to go shopping with me, Yukie and Lime, and we haven't done that in ages. Girls day out. Lots of clothing" She then tilted her head his way. "You'll have to take a rain check."

Blinking in surprise, Gohan then gave his partner an understanding look and nodded affirmatively. "Alright then. If that's what the boss wants, then I guess there's nothing I can do about it."

Videl, grinning brightly, turned sideways to him, bumped the boy with her hip, and stuck her nose in the air. "That's right. Just be a man and take it." With a playful laugh, the girl then slipped her hands behind her back and jogged down the corridor towards the exit, stopping long enough to turn around and beam at her boyfriend.

Grinning right back at her, the half-Saiyan high school student slowly followed after her, falling behind the teen as she led the way out of the building.

XXX

The moment the pair set foot off of Orange Star High's grounds, both Gohan and Videl went on a wander of Satan City's streets. Deciding to take a more scenic route as opposed to their usual footpath, the young couple went on a detour around the neighborhoods of one of the metropolis's many suburban districts. They wasted no time in plotting a course in the opposite direction to where their entourage would normally roam and, side by side, headed towards the outskirts of the city.

They were glad that they chose this route, because the moment they hit the small roads, they were immediately overcome by the most radiant and welcoming feeling of liberation they could remember experiencing for a long time. The sun's rays breaking through the trees and scattering over the backdrop of houses around them, the pair enjoyed a pleasant stroll through the urban garden, taking in the sights and soaking in the light. It was while they were climbing a hill alongside an adjacent river and reserve, and listening to the birds singing in the foliage around them that the pair was soon able to fully appreciate the highlights and sounds of the manmade environment around them, and the pleasure of one another's company.

This went double for Gohan.

Over the last couple of years, the demi-Saiyan had tangled with a variety of powerful figures, including an alien freelancer wanting to claim and sell their planet on the intergalactic market, the daughter of his childhood nemesis, a gargantuan alien monster from outer space, human criminals of different classes, colors and creeds, and just recently a vengeful Goddess of Storms, who wanted nothing more than to destroy everything in existence. Working together with his friends, family and teammates, they were able to beat them all one after the other, and come out of every scenario virtually unscathed. But the young warrior was positive that neither one of them would be standing where they were right now, if it wasn't for the bravery and determination of the young girl sharing the road next to him.

When Gohan looked across at the raven haired tomboy and saw her warm smile and sapphire blue eyes sparkling underneath the sun, he knew without a shadow of a doubt that everything he was today and everything he'd been able to accomplish, was because of her.

As it just so happens, Videl felt the exact same way about him. Years ago, she was just a troubled, teenage girl, struggling to get through a mundane, unfulfilling and lonely life filled with nothing but press and her father's unbearable ego. She wanted to break free of that life and make something of herself, to become someone other than what her last remaining parent had made her out to be. It was only her chance encounter with the boy next to her at the Intergalactic Martial Arts Tournament that allowed her that opportunity.

Through his gentle, guiding hand, Gohan was able to turn her from a closed-off, negative child into a strong, confident warrior, who could open her heart to other people rather than shut them out. He unlocked the gates for her and let down the bridge… and he did so without question.

Gohan meant everything to her and so much more, and she wasn't sure what her life would be like today without him.

Glancing in his direction, the raven haired girl beamed. "It sure has been stifling lately, huh?"

The demi-Saiyan walking alongside her nodded in agreement, "Yeah. We need to get out of the classroom more often."

It was then, as they were strolling down the footpath and passing under the scattered shadows of the trees, Videl stopped and turned towards her boyfriend. "Hey…" When the Saiyan's momentum ceased and he looked at her as well, he saw for himself the inquisitive stare she was giving him. "Do you think that… we're going to be okay?" He then saw him blink, the female crime fighter continued hastily. "I mean… do you think we're going to be alright protecting the planet from whatever comes at us next? After all the crap we had to go through with Set and her minions, there's bound to be a lot more powerful enemies like her out there. Looking back on what she could do…" She then glanced downwards in worry, "I think you can see where I'm coming from."

Hearing the girl loud and clear, a small smile appeared across Gohan's lips as he then nodded towards his partner. "Yeah." He then raised his hands and looked at them thoughtfully. "Set was too strong for any of us to deal with, both individually and as a group. Even now, two weeks after the fight, I don't think I'd be able to even touch her as I am. She was just way too much." He then narrowed his eyes and looked back on the memories of his battle with her, which zipped through his mind in montage. "Though I was able to beat her in the end and send her packing to the other side of the quadrant, all of that strength I had during the battle… it's all gone now… and I don't think it'll be coming back anytime soon." Despite his forlorn tone, when he looked at his girlfriend immediately afterwards, happiness appeared over his face once more. "Even if I've gotten a lot stronger since then, I'm nowhere near as strong as I was when I fought her."

His little insight into the situation put a curious glimmer in Videl's eye, "And… what does that mean?"
Gohan chuckled and rubbed the back of his head in his characteristic Son way. It was a gesture that had the girl's heart skip a beat, as the warm expression he took on was directed solely at her. "I think it means that if we keep at it and keep doing what we're doing... the earth, its people... and everyone that we care about are going to be alright." He then placed his hands on his hips and focused all his attention on the teen standing before him. "We've made it this far fighting together. If we continue training every day, getting stronger, and keep moving forward, I know there's nothing out there that will be able to stop us."

They did defeat a goddess after all... one of the strongest beings in the universe. That alone had to count for something.

A giggle soon followed his response and earned a curious blink from the demi-Saiyan. "That's a pretty cheesy thing to say... even for you," Videl laughed.

The spiky haired teen chuckled and scratched his now clean face with his finger in a bashful manner. "Yeah. That was a little bit corny... but there wasn't really any other way for me to put it. Besides... you were the one that asked me what I thought... and I gave you my answer."

Videl, finding a moment to interject, stepped a little closer to the teen and, placing her hands behind her back, gazed fondly up at his handsome face. "And what about us?" Her question drawing his full and complete attention to her, the raven haired crime fighter continued on boldly. "Do you think you and I will be alright?"

A little bit thrown by her sudden inquiry, Gohan quickly recovered and shot the girl a sincere smile. "Well... if a group of bank-robbing gangsters, a giant space monster and a million year old, all-powerful goddess wasn't able to tear us apart... then I doubt anything ever will." He then raised an eyebrow at her, watching as the girl swayed gently on the spot and waited for him to finish. "What do you think?"

A mischievous spark appearing in the corner of her eye, the raven haired teen then hopped a little closer and, with only an inch of space between them, stood up on her toes. "Perhaps this will answer your question."

A split second later, the girl pressed her lips against the boy's in a chaste and tender kiss. It was a gesture that was enthusiastically reciprocated by the boy, who leaned into the tomboy's show of affection just as she did. Hearts beating warmly as they embraced one another on that road, the pair remained that way for several long seconds. The sounds of the river flowing nearby and the birds in the air added more to the radiant atmosphere surrounding them, and made it feel like they were walking on air.

Then, once the pair separated moments later, Gohan looked down at Videl in surprise to see her cheeks were red and a warm, loving smile was pulled across her lips.

The young man beamed, "You beat me to it."

Giggling in a way that no other person outside of their group had seen before, the short-haired, female fighter giddily wrapped her arms around the Saiyan's and drew him closer. Once she was certain she had him, the girl laughed and playfully pulled her body towards his, her left arm curled around his right, leaving them standing side by side with one another. Pressing her cheek into Gohan's shoulder as they stepped into the sunlight, the happy couple walked on for a few more feet before stopping under the sun.

Eyes closed as she savored the warm feeling of her boyfriend's arm in hers, Videl then looked up and gazed fondly in the Saiyan's direction. When she did, she pulled herself closer, physically expressing her true feelings towards him.

If that didn't get through to him, then the words she spoke moments later most certainly did.

"Gohan… I love you."

Heart skipping a beat and his smile widening even more so, the happy demi-Saiyan and his equally elated girlfriend turned their gazes towards the sky and up into the clouds.

Though neither of them had any idea what the future had in store for them, the two of them were confident that they would be able to get through it… together.

After all, as long as they had each other, then there was nothing they couldn't do…

THE END
Highschool Arc - Gods and Demons

Continuation from Chapter - First Day.

Author's Note: The story's continuation after the first Epilogue. It's an edit I've been wanting to include for a while but never got the chance to do so. Since this is a very long story, many would probably want to cut out about halfway through. I won't blame them if they do.

For all those just joining, this is a recent edit, which may have sent mixed signals for all those expecting the next chapter. Sorry if this may have inconvenienced some.

Anyway, moving on, this is the continuation of the Legacies storyline.

---

Dragonball Z

Legacies

Gods and Demons

(Meanwhile)

Light years away from planet earth, in a realm where only the truly privileged are permitted to reign, the most unusual of structures floated. Surrounded by dozens of moons and sitting beneath a golden glowing nebula, as if piercing the heavens themselves, the enormous pyramid that was the home of the God of Destruction floated in the cold vacuum of space. Its multi-layered transparent base, topped with sweeping fields and forests, and a massive tree almost as big as the oddly shaped world itself, which jutted into the clouds, stuck out of the formation like a sore thumb. The fact that its sheer size also camouflaged the countless buildings stacked across the naturally grown constructs meant this was the ideal training spot for the ruling deity and a perfect means to showcase his grand image.

After all, when one possessed strength capable of wiping out entire galaxies, one needed a secluded place to train and polish their skills.

However, at this point in time the primary denizen of this particular sanctuary was still asleep, leaving his training grounds open for the other resident of the floating pyramid to do as he pleased. Standing out in the fields stretched out across the pristine landscape surrounding Beerus’s temple, the teal-skinned man with the white curled hair that was his attendant, dressed in his distinguishable maroon robes, black cuirass with white and orange embellishments, and wielding the scepter characterized by the floating gem above its pommel, had taken up position near the lake at the top of the hill.

Able to see most of the lowlands making up this part of the region, the servant breathed in the fresh air and let out a relieved sigh.

"You seem to be in an awfully chipper mood today, Whis," a deep voice spoke up, drawing the attendant's gaze over to another part of the plain.

When Whis glanced over his shoulder, the martial arts master saw the large, muscular form of one of the other guardians of the universe standing nearby. Possessing a fighter's build with a thick, chiseled upper body, big arms, and golden feathers covering its entirety, wearing plated boots, a white Shendyt wrapped around his waist held up by an obi, topped with a white nemes headdress, arm guards, golden bands and necklaces, and bearing the face of a falcon, the King of the Gods Ra held his post several yards back with a smile on his face and his arms crossed.

"Is it something you want to talk about?" the deity asked curiously as butterflies fluttered around him.

The every dutiful assistant chuckled, "You wouldn't happen to have been standing there this entire time waiting for me to say something, would you Ra?"

A shrug was the golden God's immediate response. "Nah, I've just been standing here for the past half-an-hour watching the birds dance across the meadows while the bush-tails nibbled on their acorns in the background." The falcon-headed deity then smirked at him. "Of course I'm waiting for you to say something about it! It's been driving me crazy all morning."

"He's right, you know," a third, soft voice chirped from above, drawing Whis and Ra's gaze upwards. As soon as their eyes turned towards the clouds, they spotted a petite figure floating just several feet above them.

Hovering on her back horizontal to the ground and dressed in flowing, pink silky robes that hugged at her luscious body, a shapely humanoid female with dark brown skin, pointy ears, and long, flowing blonde hair, and a figure that was the inspiration for countless artworks in history, drifted through the air with her hands behind her head. Legs crossed and the toes of one foot pointed towards the sky, the gorgeous elven woman sighed as she gently kicked the ether, at the same time feeling the pupils of the two males fix upon her.

"Ra's been restless the entire morning. I can literally feel his intensity. Perhaps you could indulge him a little and let him know what's on your mind," the cheerful poltergeist exclaimed, at the same time raising her hand up to check her finger nails. "His edginess is kind of throwing me off my mojo."

Picking up the exasperation in the woman's voice earned another laugh from the teacher. "Well, I'm afraid you're just going to have to be a little bit more patient with me, Ra... Aphrodite. Until your other fellow deities arrive, the vault containing all of my little secrets has been sealed off until further notice."

The blonde woman identified as the Goddess of Love pursed her lips and rolled over, resting her chin on her arms as she glared down at her host. "Party pooper..."

Huffing irritably, the falcon God looked away with a grunt. "Ugh. It better not be something petty, like a new dessert you discovered that you plan on sharing with us later this afternoon."

Whis smiled innocently, "You make that sound like it's a bad thing."

"While I admit the worm-sundae special from Proteous Five was extremely delicious, the fact that you dragged twelve of us to that diner just to have tea and cakes together was kind of strange." Not to mention unorthodox.

It was a good thing nobody in that small county restaurant realized that they were having dinner alongside a group of the most powerful warriors in the universe otherwise they would've had some serious problems. Granted not being able to sense their ki was a big advantage on their part, that didn't mean the Gods were completely anonymous from the public.
"Well, considering the amount of work we've been doing over the last thousand years and the fact that we don't see each other very often, I just thought it would be nice for all of us to meet up for the day and have a little bit of fun together," Whis explained to the royal fighter with a good-natured smile on his face. "After all, the responsibilities of a guardian can be incredibly taxing on the body and the mind. It's good to get out there in the galaxy and let off a little bit of steam."

Aphrodite, seeing the reason behind his explanations, nodded her head in agreement. "That, I can agree. Making Love-Love arrows fifty-six hours a day, ninety eight days a fortnight can be such a pain…"

Shrugging a little, the falcon God then glanced across at his former master with a sour looking scowl. "For the record, that bowling match we had back on that moon a thousand years back was completely fixed. You and Artemis cheated on your last two turns."

The attendant, his back turned to the other two warriors, faked a gasp and turned to the deity with a look of shock slapped across his face, "How could you say that? Artemis didn't cheat." He then gave a very devilish smirk at the end, showing the falcon warrior that his astonishment was all an act.

His bullshit meter going off the scale, Ra pointed at the man in triumph, "Ah-ha! So you admit it!"

Humming cheekily, Whis looked away from the man coyly, "What? I didn't say anything."

"I want my fifty gold daleons back! All of them!"

"Oh, I'm afraid that that's impossible. You see… I spent it all."

"What?" Ra shouted, his feathers bristling in outrage. "How? When?" His shouting had the goddess floating above them laughing in amusement.

"I used my winnings to buy several boxes of those delightfully milky confections they were selling at the front counter called marsh cakes. I'm sure you remember them; the little brown lathered treats topped with cream and dallen berries. They were quite expensive too if my current shopping bill is anything to go by, but so worth the extra expense."

Turning upside-down in midair, the laidback Aphrodite crossed her arms over her ample chest and smirked. "It's true. Those cakes really are delicious." She then took on a thoughtful look. "Perhaps I can pick some up for my subordinates on my way home."

Shoulders slumping as his once imposing image quickly deteriorated, the golden feathered warrior brought his hand up and ran it down his face and beak. "Ugh. You're more gluttonous than Dionysus back when he was the God of Festivities."

Whis giggled under his breath, "I'll take that as a compliment."

"Would you two stop arguing so loudly? I can hear you from the other side of the third moon," a new voice suddenly spoke up, drawing the trio's attention over to a nearby tree.

When Whis, Aphrodite and Ra looked towards the top of a large dead wood with the thickest branches cut down to form three ascending platforms, they saw a large man, about a head shorter than the falcon deity, with long, flowing blonde hair, silver figure-hugging chainmail outlining his muscular physique, silver and blue plated armor similar to a Viking's, with a fur lined collar and boots, sitting there with a hammer held tightly in his grasp.

One leg hanging from the side and swinging back and forth above the ground, the irked looking newcomer frowned. "I'm disappointed in you Ra. After all our years of fighting alongside one another, I always thought you were more composed than this. But it looks as though I may have overly misjudged your character."

The golden warrior grumbled and pointed at the armored fighter. "That's tough talk coming from the man who got his tail handed to him by Set in the first hour of the battle."

"She sucker punched me," the Norse God shot back with a dejected frown, "It was an unfair fight."

Aphrodite rolled her eyes as she turned back over and slowly floated down to the floor, "Yeah right."

Sensing a challenge, Ra smirked and placed his hands on his hips, "Whatever you say, sparky. Don't forget, I was there when it all happened. Just suck it up and admit that you're disappointed it was someone else that wound up defeating the God of Storms in the end and not you."

"Hence the reason why I'm visiting today," Thor spoke up while turning his gaze towards the white haired man standing on the hill. A smile formed on his face when his gaze met his, "Isn't that right, Master Whis?"

A nod quickly answered the warrior's question as the attendant held his post. "Any news from the others, Thor? Will the rest of the Gods be arriving soon?"

Reaching out with his senses, the blonde hammer wielder shook his head and slowly stood up from the edge he was sitting on. "I'm afraid that most of our kin are tending to other business and have been unable to answer your call. I suspect we will not be seeing them for another few days."

"Ugh, really?" the present goddess groaned as her bare feet gently padded along the ground. Hands on her hips, the dark elf then lightly kicked at the grass. "Damn…"

"Hmm. That's a shame," Whis murmured while turning his gaze towards the horizon. "And here I was hoping for a better turn out than this… what with the events that'd transpired recently. But I suppose if everybody else is too busy…"

Blinking a few times, the blonde man, who'd obviously been sleeping on the sidelines for the past hour or so, then pointed his hammer towards the lake. "What about that carapace gentleman over there?" His quick jab of the hammer had Ra, Aphrodite and Whis look towards the water banks at the bottom of the hill, where they immediately spotted a humanoid man covered in a hard exoskeleton that was light-green with black spots, had black plates on his shoulder, shins and chest areas, two black wings extending from his back, and two off-shooting sections of his cranium that pointed straight upwards.

Not only was his back turned to them, showing a pointed tail retracted under his wings, but his arms were also crossed and his attention was fixed upon the distant horizon.

"He's been staring across the lake and listening to us for some time," Thor informed the other two Gods.

The goddess standing alongside Ra tilted her head at him. "Yeah. I've been wondering about that guy too. Who is he anyway?"

Whis merely smiled at his fellow deity's inquiries. "Do not worry. That young fighter down there is a delegate from one of the neighboring universes… a denizen of Universe 13 I believe."

"Ah. Well that explains why I do not recognize him," the hammer wielder exclaimed, taking a moment to analyze the foreigner before a smile formed on his face. Stroking his bristly beard, he then raised a hand in the air and waved. "Hello, friend!" When his shout reached the lakeside, he saw the carapace warrior turn to look in his direction. Thor then beckoned him over, "Why not come over here and join us? You must be pretty lonely over there!"

Blinking a couple of times, the green stranger breathed out a sigh and, turning around, slowly began to amble towards them.

Smiling at his success of coaxing the fighter over, Thor hopped down from his pedestal and landed on the grass at the base of the trunk. Walking over to where Ra and Aphrodite were standing, he met the armored insect-male halfway and extended a hand towards him. "I do not believe we've been introduced yet. I am Thor; Guardian of the Asgard System, first in line to the throne of Odin and the current God of Lightning."

Staring at the equally tall warrior and considering his hand for a second, the fighter from another universe slowly reached out and shook it, at the same time meeting the warrior's gaze.

"It's a pleasure."

Thor grinned back at the alien stranger in a respectful manner. "And who do I have the privilege of shaking hands with?"

Coming to stand next to his fellow deity, Ra chuckled and crossed his arms, at the same time gesturing to the newcomer. "This smartly dressed young man here is named Cell; the current God of War of Universe 13 and the successor of Guan Yu."

"God of War, you say?" Thor repeated in surprise. With his hand still firmly wrapped around the android's palm, the Norse warrior took a moment to consider the individual's title before an even more enthusiastic grin formed across his lips, "A most intriguing prospect. You and I must do battle some time, Master Cell. I believe a little joust to stretch the legs, strengthen our souls and empower our hearts is a terrific way to solidify a bond between two fellow warriors."

Raising an eyebrow at the gutsy and ever-confident Norse God, Aphrodite sighed and shook her head. The elven goddess even went so far as to place her hand upon her crown. "Men… always thinking with their fists…"

The armored warrior, hearing the thunder deity's proposition loud and clear, smirked confidently and nodded. "That's a very tempting offer. I'll consider it."

Feeling more invigorated than before, the armored fighter with the hammer then turned his attention towards Ra, at the same time releasing Cell's hand from his ludicrously strong grip. This was indicated by how the android ended up shaking his fingers out after their brief and spirited exchange of pleasantries.

"Visitors from other worlds? What's the occasion?"

Ra, a smile appearing on his beak, locked his gaze on Beerus's assistant, who was still standing at the top of his hill like a statue on the plain, "I'm sure you'll find out soon enough." His attention was then pulled towards the heavens above. "Ah. It seems that a couple more of our friends have finally arrived."

The moment everyone's eyes turned towards the sky, they suddenly saw a flicker of light appear in the distance, followed shortly by a flaming, golden comet that shot down through the clouds and crashed in the field directly beside them. The mass of energy struck the valley with a violent, earthshaking tremor, blasting debris and dust into the air, and washing the cloud over the four individuals in the valley. As soon as the veil caused by the object's impact lifted, two new figures emerged from the mass.

The first was a humanoid woman with golden yellow skin and long brown hair. Shapely and fit in appearance, the woman wore Egyptian clothing similar in design to Ra's, complete with Shendyt and a white, folded sheet top, and golden braces and plates holding it all together. Along with a pair of multi-strapped sandals that ran up her legs, the woman also had on a golden-band crown with a red jade sitting in its center, with two eagle-like wings of red feathers growing down her arms, giving her a very majestic, angelic appearance.

The second was a human woman, only her outfit was a lot more outlandish and revealing than her companion's. Tall, about the same height as a Saiyan male, she was a tan-skinned, curvaceous young female with a very stoic, aloof expression that didn't at all detract from her attractiveness. She had cool blue eyes, straight black hair framing an enchanting face and cut into an asymmetrical bob style, with the front bangs reaching her shoulders. Her outfit was also unique, consisting of a scarf, elbow pads, gloves and a leather jacket, all black with shoulder pauldrons, which she wore over a black, thin ribbed, zip-up corset top with a long coat back and no front. This meant that her stomach below her midriff and pelvis was exposed, which showed that she was wearing a black lace thong. To round out her incredibly steamy outfit, she also had black lace leggings that went all the way up to her mid thigh area, black boots, golden bands on her arms, and the top part of her dress zipped open.

This exposed her sizable cleavage, which was just as ample as Rangiku Matsumoto's, made more pronounced in her incredibly tight top.

She also had golden eagle wings sewed over the front of her uniform and on the back of her jacket, showing that she was aligned with the woman she'd traveled here with.

When the attractive pair arrived at the spot the rest of the Gods were standing, the woman with the feathers greeted them with a smile. "Long time no see everyone."

Expression brightening at the sight of the alien woman, Aphrodite took a deep breath and dashed forward. She moved so quickly that the winged newcomer swore she teleported directly in front of her. "Isis!" Her cheer was matched by her hug, which she trapped the woman in and caused her to stumble back slightly. "You're here. I'm so glad."

"I missed you too, Di," the brown haired woman also spoke, pulling away from the slender girl to smile at her. "You look breathtaking, as usual."

"So do you. You got a new haircut. That's awesome," Aphrodite chirped, levitating off of the ground to float over to her friend's side as she continued walking along with her companion.

Once the new arrivals got close enough, the leader of the entourage acknowledged their arrival in his usual laidback manner. "It's good to see you," Ra spoke, nodding to the angel when she stopped in front of him. "How's your arm?"

The yellow-skinned woman chuckled as she flexed her right, spreading her feathers with a quick stretch, "Much better, especially after almost having it blown clean off. Thanks for asking."

"Set really did a number on you during our last battle. Most of us didn't think you were going to make it," Thor spoke, gesturing towards his comrade with a gentle smile of his own. "It brings me great joy to see that you're alive and well."
Eyes twinkling at the kind words spoken by the deities, the old but still remarkably young-looking goddess bowed to them and turned her attention to the voluptuous young woman standing behind her. When their attention turned to the raven haired girl, Isis gestured in her direction. "I don't think any of you have met my new student yet. This is Cleopatra. I'm training her to become my successor."

Upon being introduced to the group, the woman in black bowed in the direction of the Gods, receiving similar gestures in kind. When her presence was made known to everyone standing in the field, she then quietly straightened up and folded her arms, causing her chest to stick out even more.

Looking at the raven haired girl from the side and seeing how her promiscuous bust was almost bursting out of her top, Aphrodite took a moment to look down at her own. Pressing her hands against it, she then frowned and scowled enviously across at the girl.

The blonde goddess immediately became downtrodden and turned around, shoulders slumping as a raincloud appeared over her head. "Damn it…"

Ra tilted his head at the raven haired trainee when her emotionless gaze panned over them in a very analytical manner, "When did you pick her up?"

"About thirty thousand years ago… give or take a couple of years."

"Ah. A young goddess?" the falcon warrior said with an understanding nod. "She must be pretty talented for you to actually see fit to choose her as an apprentice. Eighty million years of serving as a guardian of this universe and in all that time you never showed even the slightest interest in taking on a student. What changed your mind?"

"Oh… a lot of things," the winged protector giggled, resting a hand on her hip as she watched the girl in black step away for some space. When she saw the youngster then proceed to watch the butterflies dance across the meadows to her right, Isis allowed a gentle smile to form. "Mostly because I believe it's getting to the point where it's time for me to hang it all up… to call it a day."

Perking up when she heard her friend's words, Aphrodite spun around and floated over to her, "R-Really?"

The winged-guardian nodded, "Yes."

"B-But…" the blonde stammered.

"You're still young. I'm sure that you have many more years left to give before the universe sees fit to grant you a safe and noble passage into retirement," Thor said, trying to convince her otherwise.

"Maybe. But in case things go awry, it brings me comfort to know that I have somebody to carry on my work, should something happen to me," the fighter replied, sharing with the warriors a warm look before glancing over to her protégé. "She's strong, compassionate and wise. I know she will serve this universe well." Upon receiving gestures of acknowledgement from the two males, her gaze then fell upon Whis, who she noticed was now walking towards them with his signature staff in hand. Isis brightened up when he finally stopped on the edge of the circle that they'd formed. "I received your message."

"I knew you would. Of all the Gods that existed in the early days of the universe, I could always count on you to make an appearance," the teal-skinned attendant replied with a bow of greeting. "The years have been kind to you, Isis. I'm glad you're alright."
"As am I, Whis," Isis replied, nodding to the man as soon as he rose up to full height. Once their exchange was made, she then took a moment to step back and count the heads that'd decided to show.

While she, Thor, Aphrodite and Ra stood next to one another, with Whis positioning himself as center speaker a few yards away, to their right the visitor from another universe had taken a few steps away and was once again standing out in the open. Cleopatra on the other hand had decided to take a spot a few meters behind Isis, and was now using that time to play with the butterflies that had decided to converge around her.

Heck, she even held out a finger for one to land on, which it did. It was a sight that brought a smile to the raven haired human, as well as a cheerful look to the winged deity's eyes.

"It seems that we are the only ones who've shown up," Isis remarked, glancing back into the semi-circle that she and the other Gods had formed. "That's a surprise."

"So far," Ra said, arms crossed and a serious look on his face. "Give the others another day or so. I'm positive that several more will come." His attention then shifted over to the teacher of the God of Destruction, who was now looking them over with a more professional air about his person.

"Are you going to tell us now why you decided to call all of us out here on such short notice?"

Lowering his head, the blue-skinned man's eyes flickered with seriousness as he raised his staff ever so slightly and tapped it into the ground. At first Thor, Aphrodite and Isis were confused as to why he did that. But after the chime of the scepter's contact echoed across the field like the ring of a mystical bell, the group then saw two silhouettes suddenly teleport into view behind the attendant, drawing their gazes over to them. The instant they appeared, the two Gods then realized that they weren't alone, and that there were two other warriors whom were visiting this temple.

As soon as their forms became tangible, the group saw a human male with spiky black hair, his face covered in multiple battle scars, wearing a red headband, black figure-hugging spandex, and black and green battle armor similar to those worn by the Saiyans, step into the light. He was soon followed by a second figure, an alien who was a couple heads shorter than him, with a white and purple carapace form, an incredibly effeminate appearance, sharp red eyes, and a long white tale waving behind him. Despite his form's diminutive size, it was sleep and imposing, and managed to convey an air of incredible power.

While the first one didn't seem like much to the group, the second one without a doubt had a couple of the Gods in the area turn a head. Furthermore, it was their appearance to the scene that had the visiting Cell look in their direction and stare at them with an intrigued gleam in his eye.

After stopping behind Whis and sharing a glance with one another, the two newcomers then turned their attention to the rest of the crowd as the teal-skinned man proceeded to speak.

"Just like our friend from Universe 13, the gentlemen you see behind me are also delegates from two of the neighboring realities. The warrior with the spiky black hair is designated Bardock; the God of Fury and representative of Universe 6. The man standing next to him with the long tail is Frieza; the God of Destruction and representative of Universe 9... a man I understand a couple of you are quite familiar with." Whis focused his attention on the central deities as the two visitors stepped closer, their arms crossed and moods set to tense. "I called these three here because of the precarious incident that had recently unfolded involving one of our own..."

Isis, well aware of what the overseer was referring to, frowned at what she expected was the discussion to come, "Set... right?"
The attendant nodded. "Due to circumstances that were beyond our control, the seal surrounding my former student's prison was broken and the God of Storms was allowed to run loose across the universe once again. She then quickly proceeded to try and destroy it. However, as I'm sure that all of you are aware, Set was promptly confronted and defeated by a warrior from the planet that she'd previously been imprisoned on, and her efforts to lay waste to the world were quickly thwarted."

Narrowing his eyes, the King of the Gods acknowledged the attendant's words with a nod. "This much we already know."

Eyes panning across his audience, Whis took a deep breath before continuing the recount. "Above all odds, the warrior was able to summon the power necessary to defeat the goddess Set and cast her off into the depths of space. At first I believed she'd been destroyed in the closing stages of the battle, but after checking in with King Yemma and taking a look through his records, no mention has been made of my former student passing through the check-in station."

The carapace visitor standing nearby threw the speaker a concerned look. "You're saying she wasn't destroyed?" Cell asked, earning a quick nod from Whis.

Thor, finding this news puzzling and quite troublesome, glared in the attendant's direction. "Can you locate her through your staff?"

Expression conveying defeat, the martial arts master shook his head. "That's the problem. I can't find a single trace of her. That tells me that she's either been incapacitated and does not wish to be found or something else is preventing me from locating her."

"That's odd. Usually you don't have any problems with finding anything through your all-seeing-eye technique," Ra commented, giving the attendant a puzzled stare. "Perhaps you're reading the airways wrong?"

Expression twisting slightly in thought, the blue-skinned guardian turned his gaze from the ground back up to his audience, whom was now currently scratching their heads over this newest mystery. "Whether or not my student survived the struggle is the least of my concerns right now. As long as she isn't stirring up trouble, then we don't need to make any efforts to pursue her. The reason I called you all here today is because of something far more serious. During the battle above earth, Set threatened to suck this entire universe into the space between spaces, taking everything and everyone with it. A move like that, I know, would've not only destroyed our world, but unleashed the terror that would've gone on to wipe out countless others…"

His announcement quickly entrapped the attentions of Ra, Aphrodite, Thor and Isis, all of whom looked at the man with a glimmer of concern on their faces. While the males looked surprised, the females appeared genuinely shaken.

"Surely you're not suggesting-" Isis began to speak, her tone reflecting a sense of fear.

"I am," Whis interjected, shooting a serious look in the winged-goddess's direction.

"No way." Ra narrowed his eyes as a bead of sweat trickled down the side of his face, "I doubt even Set would be stupid enough to allow such a thing to happen."

"She was there when we faced it the first time. Even with all her power, not even the goddess of storms came close to being a match for it," Aphrodite spoke up.
"She was blinded by both anger and ambition the moment she was released from the Nexus. Due to the mixture of emotions clouding her judgment, I have every reason to believe that she'd forgotten all about the monster that we fought and defeated all those years ago," the white haired man stated while his grip around his staff tightened nervously. "Had she succeeded in her endeavor, I have no doubt she would have inadvertently awakened the creature from its slumber."

The events that'd taken place during that battle had been more than enough to shake the man to his very core knowing how close their reality and many others had come so close to extinction.

Feeling that they were being kept out of the loop, Bardock, arms crossed, took a step forward and directed his attention towards the falcon deity. "What exactly are you guys talking about? What monster?"

For something to get even the guardians of this universe riled up, it stands to reason that whatever it was they were referring to should have the rest of them worried too. This became abundantly clear to all those standing in the area as the other two visitors from the neighboring universes focused all of their attention on their hosts and began listening to what they had to say.

Deciding to fill in the blanks, the falcon-faced God turned his attention to the newcomers and addressed them in kind. "The creature that we're referring to goes by many names. The inhabitants of the ancient planet of Gama called it Mictlantecuhtli. The people of Sura called it Erebus. Other races in the common tongue refer to it as Death Bringer. But the race who first encountered this entity in the early days of our universe called it Esdraelon, which translates to 'the one who will end all worlds'." Scowl becoming more serious, the man began recalling everything he knew on this matter, and began relaying it to their guests. "A primordial beast unlike anything you've ever encountered before, Esdraelon was a genetically engineered monster created by a group of aliens called the Charon, who were conducting illegal biological experiments to transform an alien child into the ultimate life form; one that was capable of surpassing even the Titans. The trials that they ran involved an infant child surviving on the harshest worlds imaginable, killing it and reviving it repeatedly, and forcing it to evolve regenerative abilities to adapt to its surroundings. Due to the horrid nature of its inception, the child eventually developed the mindset where its one and only instinct is to kill everything in its path, hence its name."

While Bardock found this information quite shocking, the white and purple alien standing beside him smirked at what the man had just said. "This beast sounds like an interesting pet. With his power, I bet he could do an entire afternoon's work for me and I wouldn't even have to lift a finger to help." He then shared a glance across at his fellow delegate, who threw a glare back at him. "Reminds me of how I did business back in the day."

Hearing Frieza's amused chuckle, Isis's gaze snapped in his direction. "You think this is a joke?" Her statement caused the lizard man to frown, which then prompted the woman to carry on the story in Ra's place. "This beast is a monster of the worst kind; the embodiment of all hatred and malice in the universe. It doesn't eat, it doesn't sleep, it doesn't age, and it feels no sense of compassion or mercy. It just kills, because it knows nothing else… because it has no choice." Ruffling her feathers, the woman stepped towards the center. "After decades of constant torture and torment at the hands of its creators, the beast eventually broke out of its confinement, murdered the scientists that gave it life, and destroyed the planet it was on with its bare hands, traveling to the next one in the debris and repeating the process over and over again."

"This monster was unstoppable," Thor interjected, shivering at when he remembered the strength and capabilities demonstrated by the ancient foe. "The creature's strength fed off of its rage… and its rage burned as hot as the brightest star. Its power grew in proportion to the strength of its opponent, meaning that it could learn and evolve while it was fighting. Decades of being killed and brought back to life also gave this 'Death Bringer' creature the innate ability to resurrect itself on its own accord. It would then adapt to whatever caused its death in the first place, meaning it could not be killed the same way twice. It'd come back stronger than before every time it regenerated."

"It's the most powerful force of nature we ever encountered," Aphrodite explained, crossing her arms over her stomach and shivering when memories of their clash flashed through her head. "That thing's face still haunts my nightmares."

Narrowing his eyes, Cell glanced across at Ra, who shared a similar look of dread on his face. "What happened to it?"

The golden God took a deep breath and looked over at the carapace android. "The creature rampaged for many years and destroyed countless galaxies, threatening the balance of life in the universe. When it started encroaching upon our domains, the Gods of the universe decided to step in and stop it. Over thirty of us went in to fight it… but only fourteen of us made it out alive."

Bardock's eyes widened in shock, "It took thirty of you to kill this thing?"

The question prompted Ra to look across at the stunned visitors with a serious glare. "The God of War Ares and the Goddess of War Freyja sacrificed themselves to defeat it. They killed it and sealed its corpse inside of a crystalline prison, which we set on an infinite orbit around a distant star in a system that we could monitor from a safe distance."

Finding a problem in the warrior's story, Cell turned to him questioningly. "Why didn't you destroy its body or send it packing to another dimension?"

"The creature's body is indestructible. No matter what we tried, even when it was immobile and unresponsive, we could not destroy it," Whis spoke up, drawing everyone's attention to him as he brought his ever-trusted scepter around. "And we couldn't risk sealing it inside another dimension and breaking the prison Freyja gave her life to put it in. If, by chance, it suddenly fell through a subspace wormhole or struck a dimensional barrier, we ran the danger of dispelling the seal or sending the creature to another world, which is something we could not allow. By keeping it locked away in this universe, we have the ability to quarantine it, while at the same time spare the other worlds from its wrath." The blue-skinned warrior then threw a glance towards the other two delegates behind him. "This is the reason I called you here today. In case Set's rampage caused Esdraelon's prison to weaken, it is best that we take extra precautions to ensure that we can stop it, should it somehow manage to break free."

"Since there are so few of us left, we can use all the help we can get," Ra finished in place of the attendant.

Processing the words of their hosts, Bardock looked down at the grass for several moments in thought. With the weight of what'd just been said now pressing down on his shoulders, the battle-scarred Saiyan smiled and looked up. "What the heck? Since I've got nothing better to do, I'd be more than happy to lend your universe a hand. Even if it means I have to work with the scum of creation." He said this while shooting a look towards the lizard alien standing nearby. "The Frieza from my world was a monster and a tyrant. I'm glad our race was able to do away with you back when you tried to destroy our planet."

Tail waving behind him agitatedly, the deity from universe 9 also smirked, "The feelings are mutual, Saiyan. Before I was indoctrinated for the position of God of Destruction in my universe, I wasted no time in seeing your backward home planet was completely and utterly destroyed. I'm just surprised that neither of us has taken the opportunity to try and destroy one another over the matter. However… since I am a benevolent deity, and both of us have killed the other in our respective spaces, I'd say that we are even on the karma scale. Yes?"

A chuckle and a nod answered the smug alien's inquiry, "Of course." Bardock then turned his gaze towards the other visitor to this universe, whom he could see was still standing separate from the rest of the group with an unflinching expression. "And you? What are your feelings on the matter?"

Cell, eyeing the rest of the group suspiciously, took a few seconds to consider his options. "I for one have no grudges or express any ill will towards either of you, even though my creator did design me with the sole purpose of defending my home planet from the likes of you. Since this Esdraelon presents a threat to all the universes and not just this one, I see no reason why I should decline the invitation to join this prestigious alliance." He then gave the deities of this universe a wide smirk. "A battle with this so-called destroyer of worlds presents somewhat of an interesting challenge to me. If worse comes to worse, I'll do my best to uphold my title as a God."

Clapping his hands together, Whis expressed a sense of joy at the delegates' unanimous responses. "Wonderful. Than we have an accord." He then gestured to the three warriors standing in the field. "Please… feel free to make yourselves at home. Lord Beerus is currently still asleep in his citadel, so you can take any one of his chambers for your stay-"

"I'm fine out here," the green android answered quickly, turning his back on the attendant with his arms firmly folded. Though his response did draw a few stares from the Gods standing nearby, the visitor paid them little to no mind and instead focused his attention on the horizon ahead.

"Very well," Whis chirped, while adjusting the blue hoop around his neck. "If that is your wish, then I see no reason to argue against it."

Tapping his finger against his bicep, a deeply contemplating Ra turned his gaze over to the attendant and gestured towards him inquisitively. "How is the status on our doomsday friend? Is he still stuck inside his little mobile home?"

Twirling his staff around and bringing the gem to the center, a rush of ki then ran down the stick and caused the crystal at the end to glow. A series of multiple energy-based polygons then sprung up and encompassed the area, drawing everyone's eyes to the sky above. It was there they saw a large bubble appear, giving them a clear view of the Solar System and the comet that was in orbit of the cluster. Whis was sure to zoom in on the celestial object in question, which could be seen trailing blue fire around planet earth's path.

"Still in transit, thankfully," the blue-skinned assistant said with a sigh of relief. After allowing the group a chance to inspect Hayley's Comet for themselves, he then deactivated his all-seeing-eye technique and withdrew his scepter. Returning it to his side, the man straightened his back and beamed around at all of the Gods. "If the system remains stable, then we won't have to worry about our apocalyptic problem breaking free and going on a killing spree of the neighboring systems."

"Good," Thor breathed out, tying his trusted hammer to his belt and placing a hand on his hip. "Very good."

After looking around at the relieved expressions on everyone's faces, Aphrodite and Isis shared a glance with one another before then fixing it upon their host.

"Just so we're clear, what was the name of the young warrior that defeated Set?" the winged-goddess asked curiously.

Waving her hair about, her pink-wearing companion cupped her hands together and smiled, "Was he handsome? Please tell me he was."
Chuckling at the enthusiastic inquisitions towards the other matter, Whis tapped the gem of his staff against his palm and analyzed it. "Well, first and foremost, he was not a God; just a mortal man. He was also quite fetching for a denizen of his world too, not surprising considering his lineage," Whis informed while looking around at his fellow deities. "The one who defeated Set was a martial artist gifted with incredible strength and talent… a half-Saiyan from earth named Son Gohan."

Initially the Gods didn't react beyond a surprised blink. However, the one who responded the most noticeably was Cleopatra, who'd previously been standing in the background staring off into the horizon. It was only when the name of the mysterious fighter who'd vanquished the goddess of tempests was mentioned that her interests were fully perked. The raven haired vixen's head snapped towards the center where, as her mind fully processed the speaker's words, her eyes widened and surprise appeared across her once impassive face.

This was quickly followed by a quiet whisper, "Did you say Gohan?"

Isis and the others quickly turned towards the formerly silent party, with the teacher giving her student a curious stare. "Cleo… you know this person?"

Shaking her head of her astonishment, the empress quickly set her sights on her instructor and briskly nodded. "Yes. Yes, I do." She then turned away, her expression once again tightening as she focused her eyes onto space in the direction of earth.

When they saw the goddess-in-training wasn't going to say any more on the matter, the crowd of powerful deities slowly returned their attention to the middle. Conversation quickly started up amongst them once again, with Ra and Thor expressing interest over this mysterious warrior and deciding to approach Whis about it, who was also graced by the presence of Bardock. Isis began chatting with Aphrodite, in which the two beauties proceeded to catch up on old times, and Cell and Frieza isolated themselves from the group.

While all this was going on, the raven haired Cleopatra, who had said and done very little to that point, then directed her astonished gaze towards the grass in thought. Raising her right hand, she flexed her fingers a couple of times, upon which she then clenched it into a fist and turned her gaze to the nebula above.

Eyes shining, the beautiful human goddess smiled.

"I've finally found you… Gohan-kun…"

(To be continued)
By the time the sun started to rise over the mountains, the sounds of battle had finally died out, and calm and tranquility had once again returned to the countryside. Now that the landscape was no longer being ravaged by violent tremors, explosions and the chorus of shouts that were the results of said conflict, the denizens of the forests and grasslands could finally emerge from their hiding places and groom themselves for the day ahead. The same went for the ones that were directly responsible for the ruckus that'd been carrying on since five, only they were going through it in an entirely different way.

Breathing a sigh of relief as steam wafted around him, Gohan sunk a little more into the drum his family often used for hot baths. Aside from being an ideal way to save money on their water bill by filling it up directly through the nearby river, it was also comfy, cozy, and served as an excellent place to scrub down following a vigorous morning of training.

The half-Saiyan could certainly agree on that last point as he allowed his sore body to go limp in the human-sized barrel. After spending the last couple of hours learning to control his newfound strength and his newest Super Saiyan transformation, which required an insane amount of effort to maintain, his muscles felt like they were about to burst.

"Ahh… this is heaven," Gohan groaned, eyes closed as he rested his head back against the edge of the metal cylinder. "Of all my favorite things in the world… this is definitely somewhere in my top ten."

Among the many others included training, fighting, assorted foods, and spending time with his loved ones during his off hours. The rest he could list off on a later date. But right now he was simply content with just floating weightlessly here in his pot of boiling water and let sweet, irresistible bliss take over.

The sensations were so overpowering that he almost lost all sense of time and place.

Breathing out a sigh of relief as he ran his hands up and down his arms to clean off the grime and tension, the young hybrid smiled as he gazed down at the water thoughtfully. "If I died right now, I would have no regrets…"

"Oh, I'm sure you might have some regrets," came the amused chuckle from his family's closest resident. "Try not to pass out while you're still in there. Don't forget, there are a few other people in this house who want to use that barrel too."

Looking up, Gohan found himself staring at the orange haired form of his most regular training partner. Decked out in a white bathrobe with a towel slung over her shoulder, the blue skinned Zangya threw the boy a cheerful smile as she watched him simmer away in the broth.

"Enjoying yourself?" the Hera asked.
A wide grin formed across the spiky haired boy's lips, "You could say that." Obviously he was. The expression he had been wearing before was so half-lidded and relaxed that it looked as though he was about to fall asleep. Thankfully his friend showed up just in time to stop that from happening. "It's so nice and quiet out here that it's so easy to get lost in your thoughts."

Chuckling at the man's laidback tone, the woman placed a hand on her hip and shifted her weight to one side. "Perhaps it also has something to do with the fact that you're taking a dip in something equivalent to a hot spring."

"There's that too."

Shaking her head, the alien woman smirked. "Speaking of which, are you going to be done soon? I have to get to work in about an hour and I've got a lot of hair to scrub out," Zangya informed, at the same time waving said locks about for the boy to take notice of. "You didn't exactly go easy on me while we were kicking each other across the valley the day before. My head is a complete wreck."

Realizing the actual amount of time he'd spent in that barrel, the boy quickly splashed his face and shook his hair out. "Ah. Yeah. Just give me a second." Wandering over to the girl's side of the drum and crossing his arms, he then rested against the tub's edge and smiled across at the patiently waiting female. "I really appreciate the spar this morning, Zangya. Thanks a bunch."

A warm smile quickly followed his words of gratitude. "Don't sweat it. Throwing down with you and the Green Man every morning is always a blast. It really helps get the blood pumping."

Gohan chuckled and cleaned out his ear with his finger. "The spars are also helping me tons with my control. The first and second stages are easy for me to keep up for extended periods of time, but staying in Super Saiyan 3 for longer than fifteen minutes… that's asking quite a lot."

"Give it another month or so. I'm sure you'll get used to it eventually," Zangya said with an encouraging smile. "You're one of the hardest working guys I know. If there's anyone who can pull this kind of crap off, it's going to be you."

Feeling his spirit and energies lift at his friend's confidence, the boy straightened up in the tub. "I'm glad to hear you say that." Upon looking the Z-fighter in the eye and sharing a smile with her, Gohan then gripped the sides of the cylinder and prepared to hoist himself out. "I think this weekend I'll pop over to say hi to my dad. After seeing my fight with Set and the amount of damage we caused, I know he's going to want to see what Super Saiyan 3 is like before giving it another shot. Knowing him as well as I do, I'm sure he's probably trying to figure it out for himself right now."

"I've seen the guy work. Your dad is crazy talented," the Hera remarked, tilting her head with an amused grin on her face. "I suppose that answers the question as to why you're so good as well."

"You know what they say: blood is thicker than water," Gohan recited, before then bending and hoisting himself up.

Upon realizing that the teen was coming out of the tub, Zangya freaked. She opened her mouth to protest, not wanting to see him in such a state so early, but the instant the boy leapt over the side and landed on the grass, the girl balked in shock.

At first the young Hera was expecting the boy to be buck naked, a sight that she admitted she wouldn't have any problems in seeing. But as it turned out, the lower part of the young man's body was clad in a pair of tight black swimming trunks, an item of clothing that concealed the most important parts of his person yet accentuated all the rest.
As she watched the teen stretch out to the morning sun and watched the water droplets roll down his toned body, the orange haired girl stiffened like a board as her eyes panned up and down his muscular physique. Having caught numerous glimpses of his frame on a number of occasions, the Hera had been driven to wonder what it'd be like to see the boy without any clothes on at all. The fact that she was attracted to both his personality and his dashing façade made her thoughts on the matter all the more impactful. It literally had her quivering on the inside.

Her past few nights of sleep had literally been dominated by nothing but thoughts and dreams of herself and Gohan entangled in situations that were a little bit more than friendly, which always made her wonder what the real deal was actually like.

Now that she was able to see what his body was actually like up close and personal, from his broad shoulders, to his chest, to his toned abs and to his gorgeous legs, Zangya could now say without a shadow of a doubt that he was all she imagined him to be and more. The shock of his athletic form and her proximity to it had her face light up, her body freeze, and her heart start pounding against the inside of her chest.

Running a hand through his gravity defying hair, Gohan lent down, tossed a couple more pieces of wood into the fire underneath, and smiled across at his friend. "The bath's all yours, Zangya."

Swallowing nervously, the girl murmured as her eyes darted over his majestic form. "Um… Gohan," she stammered.

"Yeah?"

"Why are you wearing shorts?" she asked, her eyes locking onto the black spandex outlining his pelvic area.

"Oh? These?" He then tugged at the waistband and released it with a snap. "I've decided to join the swimming club at school."

"Swimming club?" Zangya repeated, looking up at the ripped teen in surprise. "Really? That seems a little bit out of left field."

"Yeah. I had three to choose from and this one seemed like the most appropriate choice. Since boxing wouldn't exactly be fair on the other kids and because I'm already technically proficient at using tools and such thanks to my job, I thought I'd try out something a little more recreational. Who knows… it might even take me somewhere after I graduate."

Hearing what he had to say on the matter, the Hera smirked. "You being in a club focusing on any kind of physical activity wouldn't be fair on anyone. Period."

A chuckle of amusement came from the boy as he tentatively scratched his nose. "I know. But hey, at least I'm participating. I'll make sure to slow up for the other students and give them a chance to show their stuff. Make it more exciting for everyone." Gathering up his towel from the floor, he then began moving towards the orange haired girl, who sucked in a breath of air when he got real close.

However, unlike what Zangya was expecting from the moment, the boy then walked right past her, drawing her gaze around and to his back.

When the boy stopped, he glanced over his shoulder. "Now that I think about it, I might put my name down for the automotive club as well." He then saluted the girl and proceeded towards the door. "I'll see you after school, Zangya."
"Y-Yeah… see yah…" the girl murmured as her eyes strayed down to his backside, which was perfectly showcased in the tight swim trunks he was proudly sporting. Watching it as he ambled away from her at a casual pace caused Zangya's face to heat up some more as some very erotic thoughts started to worm their way into her subconscious.

So entranced by the sight of Gohan's toned ass, the Hera was unable to sense the presence of a familiar figure landing nearby. It was only until they spoke up several seconds later that her pilot light finally switched back on.

"What are you doing?"

Startled, Zangya spun around to see Paprika standing nearby with her arms crossed and a deadpanned expression fixed squarely upon her. When the blue-skinned fighter realized that their group's informal member had been standing there and watching her actions closely, the fighter's cheeks turned red and her mind fell into a panic.

"W-What? N-Nothing! Nothing! I'm not doing anything."

Unconvinced by the woman's stutter, the white haired Makyan raised an eyebrow. "It didn't look like you were doing nothing."

Gritting her teeth in frustration, the orange haired martial artist turned heel and marched towards the tub. "Look, I don't know how long you've been eavesdropping on our conversation, but I could care less about what you think I was doing. So just drop it, okay?" Grabbing her towel, the woman tossed it to the ground and proceeded to hastily undo the tie of her robe.

Watching the fuming Hera stomp towards the barrel and hearing her heated reply drew a grunt from the ever stoic Paprika. "Hmph. Whatever." She then watched the shapely fighter drop her bathrobe, leaving her standing nude in the morning air to stretch and flex her muscles. "Goten said he wanted me to come over and play today. Do you know where he is?"

Not even bothering to turn around, the naked Z-fighter pointed over her shoulder towards the building. "He's inside having breakfast with Chi-Chi."

"Ah." Acknowledging her directions, the scarf-wearing girl swiveled about and followed the same path Gohan had taken. "Thanks." It was just as she arrived at the steps of the building's front door the Makyan then heard the telltale splash of Zangya jumping into the barrel.

Breathing out a long sigh when she resurfaced, the Hera ran her hands through her hair and stretched. Her body quickly adjusting to the temperature, she then began to rub down her skin with her delicate hands, a chore that allowed her a moment of silence and a chance to meditate over her rampaging thoughts. Settling in, she hoped the hot water would settle her tempest of emotions and quell the fire burning in her chest.

But as the seconds ticked by, more and more explicit images of Gohan's half-naked form began to bleed into her mind, causing her stomach to tighten up and her face to get even hotter.

Whether it was the water or her own body's natural chemistry acting on its own accord Zangya didn't even know anymore. All she knew was that she was starting to feel really strange and, after wrapping her arms securely around her body and feeling her thighs press together, she attempted to drown her thoughts by submerging herself completely into the pot.

With only the top half of her head bobbing about on the surface, the Hera blew out a stream of bubbles in an exasperated manner.
"Damn it. Now I need a cold bath…"

As soon as she was done scrubbing down, the woman got out, wandered over to the nearby river, and jumped straight into it. She came back seconds later feeling like a million zeni…

	XXX

Over the next few days, Gohan spent the majority of his time settling into his six-to-seven hour a day attendance at high school, which had been cut and pasted right into his schedule. On first blush this seemed like a bit of an issue, where the demi-Saiyan wouldn't be able to do anything he would consider worthwhile or valuable. But as it turns out, him going to Orange Star High not only introduced a great deal more diversity into his day-to-day activities, it also gave him the shot at a normal life he'd always dreamed about. To put it in simple words, his first week was terrific.

In his hours spent during and outside of class, the demi-Saiyan's schedule bounced from doing subjects he already knew all about to meeting whole groups of new and interesting faces. Like at the start of his second day for example, the instant he walked in through the front gates of the campus, he was immediately set upon by a swath of the institute's numerous club presidents. Representing the track and field and martial arts clubs respectively, the group of elected officials attempted to get the newcomer to join their organizations, saying that he would 'be a big win for them' during the competition dates and that he had 'a ton of potential'. However, the boy politely declined each and every one of them, and they accepted his apologies with grace and form.

While a couple of them did give him a couple of days to think about it, the young warrior already had his heart set.

Throughout the rest of that day, Gohan used his time exploring the school as thoroughly as possible, getting a bead on his timetable, engaging in hushed conversations with his friends, and also getting used to the hundreds of eyes he could feel drilling into the back of his head and the whispers that came with them. As it turned out, word of his stellar and odd demonstrations at the various student organizations the other day had managed to filter out from their respective fields and across the network known all around as the gossip chain. Erasa, being a major player in that area, said to the young hero that his performances were a massive hit and that he'd become the hottest thing among the school's new arrivals.

As flattered as Gohan was to learn about this, a part of him was still a little bit ashamed and embarrassed at himself for allowing his various 'talents' to get out of hand. Despite the fact that he'd practically made a side-show of himself that entire afternoon, a lot of the kids seemed to think it was fantastic, and he was receiving a tidal wave of attention because of it. That's not even counting the fact that a lot of people were now hearing rumors about how he and Videl were officially an item.

Whether this was a good thing or not he would find out later. However, based on what Sharpener told him afterwards, after seeing how strong the young man was and who he was best friends with, he concluded that he wouldn't be having any problems with bullies. After a lot of the kids saw the ridiculous stunts he pulled, he'd be surprised if anyone tried anything to get on Gohan's bad side.

Videl had seen her boyfriend get mad before and she could say with absolute certainty that it never ended well for the antagonists… ever.

Aside from all the whispering and staring, as well as having a lot of the girls he came into close contact with ogling him, the days following were awesome for the half-Saiyan. While the bonds between him, Videl, Erasa, Lime and Touya grew that much stronger, Gohan also found a friend in Sharpener and a couple more in the students around the school. Though the blonde jock had come off as a rogue and a really cocky sort of guy, Gohan grew to like and respect the sports star. He was able to learn a lot from him, particularly about how he interacted with a lot of the other blokes around the campus and with Touya. The banter they shared often involved a lot of insults, blatant expressions of innuendos and teasing, but at other times they were also able to share genuine conversations with one another.

Though they acted a lot more reserved around the girl members of their group, the two boys really let each other have it when outside of their circle. The young Saiyan took this as typical male, human teen interactions and something that friends often did with one another to keep the bonds between them strong. It sure worked well between the rowdy pair and, despite all of it, no feelings were hurt or genuine insults were made. It was really great.

Time spent in class was also an interesting experience. The primary status quo shared across the broader range of the institute was that everyone was to remain silent during lectures and kept busy during work minutes. For the most part, the students respected this code of practice and behaved smartly all throughout the lessons. But every once in a while this chain was broken, with the teachers often having to confront a couple of the students for their behavior. This was either in the capacity of restoring order to the classroom by administering swift discipline or sharing banter with the students during discussion periods. This fluctuated between teachers and Gohan observed these various interactions with both fascination and, at often times, amusement.

But the one other thing he found out during class time was, because of the structure some of the lecture theatres had, he was able to share whispered conversations with the kids next to him. Sometimes it was Erasa and Videl, and sometimes it was Sharpener and Touya. Either way, whenever the teacher was going through a longwinded presentation or the class was recording notes or doing work during study period, Gohan always found time to chat with the people next to him.

A couple of times they were caught, but none of them were penalized for it in the slightest. They only received warnings.

Putting aside the homework, the lectures, and the whispers, the young Saiyan's first week at school was great. At the end of every day he would hang out with his group, say farewell, head home, and give his family a brief retelling of what'd happened to him. And every time he hit the hay he would then think about what else would be in store for him tomorrow before nodding off.

XXX

(The following Monday)

The sound of the bell ringing throughout the school signaled the start of another exciting day and, as the students in Gohan's class slowly ambled to their seats, one particular person had decided to sprint up to his.

Slamming his books down on the table in front of him, a heavily panting Touya nearly collapsed into his seat while the rest of his peers slid into theirs. Swallowing a few times between breaths, the brown haired sweaty boy then looked up when he heard a chuckle next to him and saw Sharpener and the rest of his friends grinning smugly in his direction. Even Gohan, who had a text book opened up in front of him, was looking across at the teenager in the button-up shirt and shorts staring back at them.

After catching his breath, the young athlete gave them all the business, "What?"

"Barely made it again," Sharpener commented in a sing-song voice, which was hilarious to hear
"Why not give us some variety and actually be late for a change, Touya-kun?" Erasa asked while grinning down the row towards the newcomer.

"That shouldn't be too difficult," the blonde jock continued, looking across at Videl and the others.
"On top of doing his hair and making it as messily perfect as possible, perhaps he should start doing his nails as well. It'd do wonders for him at his next cheerleading practice or whatever sport he's doing now."

Still breathing hard, Touya glared, "Fuck… (pant)… (pant)… you…" Straightening up from his desk with a groan, the man then wiped the sweat from his brow and directed his ire on his fellow battle ball teammate. The instant he did, a sly look quickly spread across his face. "And why are you so early today, Sharpener? Forget to jerk yourself off this morning?"

The jock sitting next to him frowned at the question. When Touya started snickering, the jock, sprouting a smile of his own, reached over and attempted to punch the brat in the arm, leading to a playful fist fight in the row when the blonde threw a few jabs and his friend parried them easily.

"Ha-ha. Very funny," Sharpener exclaimed, laughing along with his classmate for a few more shots. This led to Videl shaking her head at the duo and Gohan sharing a grin with Erasa.

However, when the demi-Saiyan's eyes met the bubbly girl's captivating blue ones, he suddenly saw her stiffen and look away awkwardly, which had him pause in confusion.

Before his momentary balk could linger on into question, the class suddenly stirred when the sliding doors making up the entrance to the room opened and a teacher ambled into their midst.
Her sudden appearance prompted all of the kids who were still standing to return to their chairs, cutting Sharpener and Touya's horseplay short and ushering the late arrival into his seat. By the time everyone was down, the lecturer was already by the desk with her books down and a stack of papers in her hand.

"Looks like you made it with extra time to spare," Videl whispered towards her bespectacled classmate sitting on the other side of Sharpener. "Lucky you…"

"You can say that again," the sporty kid exclaimed exhaustedly.

When the smartly dressed teacher, a woman with shoulder-length, silky brown hair, wearing a yellow summer dress and a green sweater, turned to face the class, she placed the papers and her hands in front of her and beamed warmly up at her students. "Good morning class. You probably don't recognize seeing me around the school, but I was told by the principal that you all knew that I would be coming in today." Her eyes twinkled with excitement when she looked upon the curious stairs of her children. "My name is Mio Hirasawa. Starting from right now, I'm going to be your new homeroom teacher. Since I just moved into the city last week, I've been unable to get acquainted with the institute until only a couple of days ago." She then bowed to the students when she saw that all of them had their eyes locked onto her. "I look forward to teaching all of you over the next year to come."

An approving murmur started up amongst the students, with the girls whispering how pretty this Mio lady was and the guys showing just as much interest in her good looks. Even the students up in Gohan's row viewed the lecturer with great interest and satisfaction. The demi-Saiyan in particular, upon setting his book aside, sensed a gentle and kind spirit emanating from the woman and beamed just as brightly as she did when her gaze panned over the class.
Of course, while the student body was initially clamoring with excitement at having a new instructor, their whispers and chatter were soon silenced when the woman raised her hand to address them once again.

She did so by holding up the stack of papers in her hand. "Now… as much as I would like to take the time to get to know each and every one of you, I'm afraid we're a little bit strapped for time. Would anyone like to take a guess as to why I was late for class this morning?" the incredibly innocent sounding educator asked with a giggle.

The sight of the papers being waved about in the air had a couple of the students closest to her station slump their shoulders.

"Not a pop quiz," a girl's voice moaned out.

Mio, eyes closed and a sweet smile in play, nodded her head affirmatively, "That's right." And with that announcement, the entire class, sans Gohan and a couple of the other more intellectually competent kids, shared a collectively groan of despair. "Since I'm new here and will be taking on both your math and literature classes, I feel that the best way I can get to know all of you in the shortest amount of time is through a quick diagnostic assessment. So… let's see how much all of you have learned so far."

With the help of some able bodied students from the front row, the teacher was able to disperse the documents throughout the classroom and come up with a collection of appropriate markers for all of them to complete the questions by. Setting a start time at eight fifty-five and an end time at nine thirty-five, the new instructor then took up position behind the desk and allowed the kids free reign over the quiz. As soon as the second hand ticked over, the sounds of papers being turned over along with pencils scribbling across them soon became the most dominant sound in the room, letting Mio know that all of the kids had thrown themselves right into their work.

The quiz went off to a flying start for a majority of the students. Videl and Touya plowed through it at a comfortable pace, showing where they currently sat in the pecking order. Scoring above the averages, these two go-getters had no problems with the questions whatsoever. Sharpener on the other hand, being the least bookish member of the group, was sitting at his desk with his elbow propped up and his cheek in his hand, staring at the sheet as if he were trying to solve a rubix cube in his mind.

Gohan, as expected, finished his in record time and went on to reading from the textbook next to him. When Mio came up to his row and saw that the group's star pupil had finished, she happily took the paper away from him, gave the boy a pleasant smile, and moved on.

Or at least she would've if she didn't stop over Erasa along the way. When the kindly instructor curiously looked over the girl's shoulder and down at her sheet, she saw the poor blonde was still stuck on question one and was just staring at it with the most hilariously baffled expression you'd ever see on her.

Don't get anything wrong by this one observation. Erasa was a bright girl with good instincts and good grades. Though she wasn't exactly a brain, she wasn't an idiot either. She actually did really well in class when she applied herself and excelled in many of the areas she was passionate about. But… this time didn't count.

In fact she was feeling pretty miserable right now.

Expressing sympathy for the girl, the teacher leaned over and smiled. "Ten minutes left," she whispered, before ambling on, earning a frown from said girl.
Recognizing his friend's plight, Gohan lowered his book, leaned over and beamed fondly. "I can help you out if you're having problems."

Glancing up at the boy with a start, the short haired girl blinked a couple of times when she saw the young man's kind look fixed intently upon her. Blushing slightly at his proximity and at first hesitant in regards to his offer, Erasa then allowed her lips to tug upwards and looked back at the teen in a shy manner. "C-Could you?"

The compassionate teen nodded, "Sure." Making extra certain the teacher wasn't looking in their direction the young warrior discreetly edged over and proceeded to offer his friend some support. All the while, the blonde haired girl sitting beside him didn't dare look the boy in the eye.

Over the course of the next few minutes, all Erasa did was smile, nod, and thank the demi-Saiyan quietly for every question he was able to help her out with, while at the same time maintain the narrow proximity between them. None of the other students in the class even noticed, all except for Videl who, after seeing Gohan point across her girlfriend's page and see her respond to his directions in kind, reasoned that her crush was simply helping her out as a gesture between friends.

Though it did draw a momentary curious blink from the tomboy, the situation didn't alarm her in the least, and so she quickly returned to her own work.

Almost instantly after the crime fighter did so, Erasa, her head held low and her eyes shifting nervously from Gohan's face to her page, smiled warmly before glancing up at him. "So it's official, huh?" the girl whispered, "You've joined the swimming club?"

Stopping for a moment, the boy smiled. "Yep. I handed in all of my paperwork this morning. You're now looking at the newest registered member of the school's swimming team."

His answer to her innocent inquiries put a grin on the teen's face. "Awesome. I'm really looking forward to seeing you in the pool, Gohan-kun." That was the response she verbally gave him. However, it wasn't her full reply, as the remark that she thought of afterwards reverberated through her mind like an echo in a corridor. "Not to mention what you look like in your swim suit." The image of the obviously athletically fit boy clad in only a pair of figure-hugging trunks put a deep shade of red on the girl's cheeks and had her squirming with excitement.

"Thanks." Unaware of the visions rampaging through the girl's head, Gohan merely beamed back at his friend and nodded. "I'm looking forward to it too." He then saw Erasa smile back at him before returning her attention to her test sheet, prompting him to do so as well and continue with his hushed instruction.

Bringing up his right hand to point at the third question, he began explaining to his classmate how to come up with the answer for the equation splayed out across it. But just as he was whispering the steps to her, the blonde suddenly noticed on his wrist the gem stone bracelet she'd given him last week and, realizing he was still wearing it, smiled joyfully in his direction.

When the ten minutes of writing and checking time came and went, the teacher then told everyone to put their pencils down and proceeded to collect all of their sheets. Once all of the papers had been piled up onto her desk for checking, she then told them to carry on with the task they'd been assigned from last lesson and to continue drafting.

Needless to say, that'd been a real interesting start to the morning.
Over the course of that bright and cheerful day, the class got to know a little bit more about their new teacher. Apparently this Mio woman was born and raised in Central City where, after graduating with solid marks from university, found a career as a musician with her school friends. Over a period of a few years the group went on many tours together, playing at small gigs across the entire country. But after several months of B-grade success, the group eventually decided to settle down to find some more stable work. All of her friends found apartments here in Satan City, where they all went out and acquired new jobs befitting their education. Since her entire time at university had been spent getting her Bachelor's Degree in Education, Mio found a job as a teacher at different schools, with her latest one being here at Orange Star High.

You could say her knowledge in life was quite substantial. Even so, a couple of the kids still thought it was a little bit funny that they were learning from a young woman who became a teacher as Plan B.

Anyway, after first and second periods blew past, the students then retired to the grounds for lunch. After packing up her books, Erasa rose up from her chair and turned to Gohan, with the intent of asking him if he wanted to come down to the canteen with her to grab something. But just before she could speak, Videl had already grabbed Gohan by the arm and had begun dragging him out of the room down to their lockers, leaving the blonde standing in place with no answer. When she saw all of the others start to leave, the bubbly blonde gathered up her gear and started to make her way out of the room to the lockers as well.

A few short minutes later, after informing Touya and the others that she was going down to the cafeteria to grab some food, Erasa wound up shuffling down the footpath towards the school's main eatery. Her head down and eyes focused on her feet, the teen ignored all of the other kids rushing past her left and right, as her body automatically made its way towards the serving counter. It was only when she was halfway down the footpath outside that she was suddenly set upon by a familiar face. The tap on her shoulder drew her gaze upwards to see Lime jogging past wearing a white button-up shirt, leg warmers and a red skirt.

"Come on, Erasa! Quit dragging your feet! You're gonna miss out on all the good stuff!" the brown haired girl laughed as she ran ahead at considerable speed.

Blinking a couple of times, the blonde realized she was being challenged to a race and quickly chased after her. Unfortunately, due to being less physically fit than the rest of her compatriots, her brisk run quickly transformed into a struggle up hill. "Geez. Hold on a second, will yah?" the girl panted while jogging towards the end of the road.

Just before reaching the veranda where a whole bunch of students could be seen standing and waiting in line to be served, the farm girl skidded to a stop and looked back with a wide grin. When she saw Erasa putter to a stop a couple yards early and stagger the rest of the way over, a tad bit out of breath, Lime was then about to spout some quip about her friend needing to get out more. It was only when she noticed the downtrodden look worn upon the blonde's face that had her stop short any remarks on the matter.

Seeing her friend's eyes focused on the ground without the usual energy she was used to seeing in her, Lime turned to her out of concern. "Hey. Are you okay?" Her question had Erasa's eyes shoot up in surprise. "You seem a little bit upset, girl."

Blanching at the comment, the blonde quickly straightened her back and waved her hands frantically. "No, no… I'm fine. Don't worry about me." She then gave the junior a nervous smile. "I'm just a little bit tired today. That's all."
Hearing her stammered response, Lime paused for a moment to process the validity of her answer. However, not really able to gauge too much from it, she decided to let it go for the time being and nodded in understanding. "Okay. If you say so." She then waited for Erasa to walk over before falling in step with her, the pair slowly making their way over to the line at a casual pace. "It's just that I've noticed you've been acting a little less... I don't know... you for the last couple of days. I'm just a little bit worried."

"Ah, it's probably just a lack of sleep," the blonde informed with a shrug, giving her friend a wry smile at the end. "That's how it is sometimes at the start of a new term. Getting back into the swing of schooling after a two month break can be a real shock to the system, yah know."

"I see," Lime murmured. Watching her friend turn to look ahead of them, the brown haired fighter raised an eyebrow at her. Somehow she was still unconvinced by the girl's reasoning for her shallow mood. But as much as she wanted to pry into her about it, she didn't want to run the risk of upsetting the girl further and simply focused on the there and now, which was lining up to grab an oriental roll for lunch.

While Lime and Erasa chatted with each other in the canteen lineup, Gohan had taken Videl over to the swimming pool so that she could see the area he would be practicing in the next season. The walk across the campus was quick, a lot faster than they were expecting considering the amount of people that stepped up to them for an exclusive with the champ's daughter and the mysterious new kid. Upon politely brushing by the mixed groups of youngsters, the pair of Z-fighters soon arrived at the arena where the fifty meter pool sat glistening under the sun.

As expected, the place was mostly empty, save for a couple of students having lunch at the bleachers and a couple more camping around the blocks. The sight of the sweeping field of water and the sky reflected against its transparent surface brought smiles to the couple's faces.

Trotting out into the open with a wide smile on her face, Videl slipped her hands behind her back as she looked over the pool with delight and admiration. "Man. This is going to be so much different from the arenas we're used to competing in. On the canvas and out there on the field, it's always wild and chaotic... where our skills, strengths, and strategies are tested against another's."

"But out here, it's precise, straight-forward, and relies entirely on finesse and technique," Gohan finished, earning a quick look from his girlfriend. "That's based on my experience anyway." He then saw her take a step towards him and felt her elbow him in the abdominals.

"I was going to say fitness and speed, but I guess that works too," the crime fighter exclaimed while placing her hands on her hips. She then nodded up at him. "Think you can handle it?"

"What? The swimming, the competition or the crowds?"

"All three... in that order."

"Well, considering I can swim faster than a giant trout and have fought in front of a live audience many times before, if I take a few lessons to refine my techniques, I'm sure I'll be able to give them something to remember me by," Gohan replied, smiling brightly down at the girl as she tilted her head at him. "I just need to control my strength."

"You'd better," Videl said, looking at his handsome face with a smile. "Your body can cut through half a kilometer of water like a torpedo with a single push. If you use too much power your head will go through the end wall." The girl then brought up her left fist and jabbed him in the arm, earning a look from the teen. "This club might actually be good for you. You won't just be making friends and participating in competitions, but you'll also be able to focus on suppressing your strength outside of fighting."

Gohan's grin widened. "I think you're right."

"Oh, I know I'm right," the tomboy replied with a cocky smile, turning to face him confidently with her eyes narrowed on his dashing façade. "The way you're going in your training, you need all the help you can get if you plan on competing evenly with the other kids. You don't want the same thing happening to you as the crap that happened last week."

The boy chuckled while scratching the back of his head. "People aren't going to forget about that, are they?"

"What? You chucking a discus over the bleachers and punching a hole through the backboard with nothing but a basketball? Nah, I'm sure everyone will forget about that in a couple of weeks."

The boy gave her a grin. "You're just humoring me now, aren't you?" He was then playfully pushed in the chest by the shorthaired girl, who leered at him smugly.

"Of course I am, you big lug," Videl giggled, until her expression hardened once again. "But seriously, you and I are going to need to put a lid on all of that superhuman stuff. It's a lot easier for me because I've spent most of my life being a normal human. You on the other hand were blasting holes through mountains since the age of four."

His own expression steeling, yet keeping his smile in play, the half-Saiyan gave his girlfriend an understanding nod. "Don't worry. I promise you that I'll do this right. You have my word."

"You're damn right I do," Videl said, smiling proudly as she then raised a finger and waved it at him warningly. "And you better not screw this up otherwise you're going to be in serious trouble."

"Really? I'm going to be in trouble?" the half-Saiyan asked with a mischievous glint flashing in his eye. It was a sight that was completely missed by his classmate, who continued to regard him with amusement. "Me?"

"That's right mister. And if you don't shape up before the competitions, I'm going to-EEK!" Videl suddenly shrieked when, without warning, her boyfriend swooped down and picked her up, hoisting her onto his shoulder like a sack of flour. "GOHAN! WHAT ARE YOU-?!

"Who's in trouble now, huh?" Gohan laughed, holding the girl by the waist and preventing her from escaping. "It's certainly not me. That's for sure." The area soon became filled with shrieks of laughter and giggles as the raven haired girl was quite literally treated like a ragdoll by her stronger crush.

"Hey! Put me down, you ass! Come on! Where do you…" the girl continued to laugh, not knowing what he had in store for her. However, when the boy began to walk, the raven haired teen's eyes widened when she realized where they were going and began slapping his back. "Oh no. No. No, no, no, no, no- Gohan! No. Don't you dare-"

"What's the matter, Videl? I thought you said I was the one that was going to be in trouble?"

"You will be in a minute if you don't put me down right now! Gohan!" Videl exclaimed, her face paling when she felt him mount the starting block at the very edge of the pool and take her waist in both hands. "Gohan! I'm warning you! If you even think about doing-AAAAAAH!" All of a sudden, the girl was thrown backwards and sent into a fit of laughter when her boyfriend held her by the ankles and dangled her above the water's surface. "You jerk! I'm so going to get you for this!" she cackled hysterically.
Gohan laughed as well as he suspended his girlfriend over the pool. "What are you gonna do now, Videl? Huh?"

Laughing at the top of her lungs, the raven haired girl attempted to fight back, but all she could do was flail uselessly. As the two of them messed around, with the demi-Saiyan reframing from dropping his girlfriend in the water, the pair's antics quickly drew the attention of all the students who were in the area. Though the sight of the champ's daughter giggling like a school girl baffled most of the kids there, what was even more shocking to them was who they saw was fooling around with her.

It was only when Gohan pulled Videl back and allowed her to straddle his chest that the pair was interrupted by the timely arrival of the swimming team captain. Looking over to the side, the two martial artists saw an athletic male about the same height as the demi-Saiyan with auburn hair, wearing a track suit and a white shirt underneath the jacket, stop beside them and smile in their direction.

"I see you two are having fun."

"Oh. Uh…" Stammering, Gohan quickly set his girlfriend to her feet and turned to face the male student, at the same time both he and Videl couldn't hide the shades of red that came over their faces. "Y-Yeah." Clearing his throat, the nervous warrior stepped towards the swimmer with his head held high. "Makoto, right?"

"Yep. Captain of Orange Star High's swimming team and the state champion in backstroke," the young man replied, extending his hand to the fit looking boy in the yellow jacket. "It's a pleasure to meet you. I take it you must be Gohan, the new kid?"

"Yeah." The teen nodded, reaching forward and shaking hands with the head of the institute's competitive swimmers. "The teacher at the front office told me to come and see you as soon as possible. That was immediately after I put the paperwork through with the principal."

"Well, I'm glad to hear that you'll be joining our troop for this year, Gohan-kun," the young man said, before relinquishing the Saiyan's hand and taking a step back. "Our team has been in a bit of a rut for the past couple of seasons. But with your help, I'm sure we'll be able to change that streak and start raking in some wins." He then turned his attention to the girl standing behind the new guy and smiled in her direction. "Ah… and you must be Videl Satan?"

A smile appeared on the tomboy's face as she nodded back to him, "Nice to meet you, Makoto."

Makoto bowed at her address, before then turning his attention to his team's newest recruit. "So… I understand you both came over to check the place out?" When he saw Gohan nod and his girlfriend loop her arms around his, the swimming team's captain smiled and waved for the pair to follow. "Come on. I'll show you around the lockers and get you up to speed with our planned schedule."

Arm in arm, Videl and her boyfriend followed the swimming team captain into the main building of the arena. For the rest of lunch period the pair spent exploring the place with Makoto acting as their tour guide, giving his club's newest protégé a rundown of their regiment while also making sure to cover all of the essential areas in that part of the campus. Not a second was wasted in silence.

Meanwhile, over on the baseball field, as a mixed crowd of male students were kicking a soccer ball in the background, Touya and Sharpener had taken up position over by the plates and were messing around with a bat and ball. With the glasses-wearing athlete posted by the fence, the kid swung the metallic pole back and forth all cool-style. At the same time, the gutsy sportsman
It was this little introduction he had going on that prompted his blonde haired friend to stare at him with a deadpanned expression.

"Number twenty three is up to bat," Touya exclaimed in an announcer's tone of voice as he gripped the stick with two hands and took a stance. "He's batting… four-twelve this year. He's undefeated at the plate and is looking to claim another big win as he prepares to score yet another homerun for the Satan City Demons." And his excited piece of dialogue just kept on going and going.

Deciding he'd had enough of hearing his friend's delusions of grandeur, Sharpener decided to switch out the baseball he was planning on throwing and picked up the net ball he had lying down next to it. With Touya's back turned as he warmed up his swing, the blonde quietly jogged over to him before, with a mighty heave, he chucked the bigger ball straight into his back.

The sphere smacked Touya in the shoulder blade and knocked him to the ground, earning a yelp from the teenager as he rolled clumsily onto his ass. His partner then ambled up to him with a cheeky grin, hands on his hips and a laugh escaping his throat.

"Stop talking to yourself man. You look like an idiot."

"Oh, you blonde jerk," Touya groaned, collecting up the netball as he steadily rose to his feet. "You think you're pretty funny, don't you? Come on… let's see what you've got." Tossing it between his hands as he straightened to full height, the glasses-wearing sportsman then took another stance and, bouncing the ball between his legs, started to circle the jock.

The pair danced around each other for a few seconds. After several seconds of face-off, the blonde then took off running in some random direction, with Touya in hot pursuit.

"Get back here!" the brown haired boy shouted, only to hear Sharpener's laughter echoing back towards him as he advanced. The instant he fell within range, Touya took the netball up in two hands and threw it into the retreating jock's back, knocking the sportsman flat onto his face.

The two boys continued their little game of dodge-ball, in which they spent the next several minutes chucking the ball at each other and knocking the stuffing out of their opponent. They continued this for the rest of lunch and when the bell finally rang, both Sharpener and Touya left the field covered in both dirt and bruises.

XXX

(Tuesday – Second Period)

Once again the students of Gohan's homeroom had found themselves carted off to another class, this time for a more relaxed session of education. As listed in their respective schedules, this was a home economics class and, after being given a rundown on the subject that they would be covering in this lesson as well as the procedures, the students were then divided up into pairs and sent off to complete their task by their teacher. The activity itself seemed like an incredibly simple process. But in truth, the students felt like they were a little out of their depth.

As per the routine that they'd established, Gohan's group had broken off into their respective pairings. The demi-Saiyan had taken a table alongside Videl, Touya had gone with Sharpener, and Erasa was paired up with another friend of hers from their homeroom. The five of them had taken up stations and stoves closest to one another, where they could see the ingredients up on the board and were able to run through it just as they were taught.
This was turning out some interesting results between each of the pairs as they diligently applied themselves to the roles chefs.

The meal for the day was tempura prawn with a side serving of string beans in oyster sauce and chicken rice. This seemed like a pinch with the right ingredients. But as soon as the timer started ticking, things started going awfully wrong for a lot of people across the board, ranging from instructional complications to messy cutting boards.

While most of the class was coping fairly well at their desks, some of the other less adept cooks weren't, chief among which were Gohan and Videl. Almost as soon as they got started, the two young warriors found themselves standing by their chopping board with their notes spread out between them, white aprons tied securely to their persons and puzzled looks slapped across their faces.

Scratching his head, the half-Saiyan glanced over at his girlfriend, who was huddled up close to him with a similarly bewitched expression in play. "Got any idea how this is supposed to work?"

The tomboy bit her bottom lip, "Uhh… nope. To be honest I'm just as unsure about this recipe as you are."

"Well it can't be as complicated as putting a drain pipe together or assembling a box of legos. As long as we have the instructions, I think this might turn out alright."

"The only difference is that we get to eat the thing we make afterwards," Videl murmured, squinting at the notes before turning to look up at the boy next to her. "It'd be pretty problematic for us if we miss a step and screw the whole thing up."

"I guess we better take extra care then," Gohan replied, switching on the stove before then pointing across at the plastic bowl next to them. "Get the flour, baking soda and corn starch ready. I'll pre-heat the wok and tend to the fire."

Clearing her throat, the raven haired girl placed a hand on her hip and gave her crush a funny look. "And what makes you think you're qualified to use this household appliance?"

The spiky haired young male blinked at the teen in surprise, staring at her in silence for several moments before opening his mouth. "Umm… I'm not?"

"Uh-huh. That's what I thought." Videl shook her head in amusement and, with a cool look on her face, rolled up her sleeves. "Step back, Mr. Hero. I'll be taking command of this ship." Nudging the boy aside, she then took hold of the wok and gathered up the cooking oils. "Remember the last time you tried to make something by following the instructions in a book? You nearly set the whole house on fire."

Giving a sheepish laugh at his friend's brief recount, the boy scratched the back of his head. "I got a little careless with the oil, that's all."

"Exactly. A task like this requires a delicate touch… something that I understand you're considerably lacking at the moment," the raven haired teen exclaimed cheerfully, at the same time smirking at her teammate. "You take care of the mixing and I'll take care of the cooking. That way we can split up the responsibilities and keep things from getting out of control. How does that sound?"

Acknowledging her instructions, Gohan beamed pleasantly and moved over to where his girlfriend had previously been standing. "Alright. We'll do it that way."
A very sneaky smile then popped up on the girl's angelic visage. "You don't have anything to say in your defense?"

"No. I trust you enough to be able to handle yourself," the Saiyan teenager answered with a wide grin, which quickly turned cheeky as he leaned in to whisper in her ear. "But just in case you overlook something and end up going full potato, I'll be here to help you out."

Clicking her tongue and narrowing her eyes, Videl then turned around and threw a few jabs into her boyfriend's arm. The hits she managed to connect landed hard and heavy. In spite of this, Gohan ended up laughing the last two blows off due to their playful execution. "You ass," the girl growled, grinning all the while as the boy held his hands up in a sign of surrender.

The pair's laughter filled the room, drawing the attention from several of the other students and a certain blonde haired girl stationed at the desk across from them. As the tomboy playfully threw punches at the demi-Saiyan, Erasa, adorned in the same apron as everybody else, watched the pair quietly from the sidelines with mixing bowl in hand. Able to hear and see their antics loud and clear, the cheerful blonde remained standing as still as a statue, with a curious look framed on her face that slowly transformed into a desponded one as she observed her two friends fooling around with each other from a distance.

When she saw Videl flick some baking soda at Gohan's top and watched the boy wiped the stuff that managed to get on her nose away with a tissue, all Erasa could think about was them and the demi-Saiyan messing about with her childhood friend.

As she did, it caused a knot to tighten in her chest, leaving her frozen in place.

"Gohan-kun…"

Unfortunately the girl wasn't given enough time to be alone with her thoughts. While her eyes remained fixated on the pair, the sound of her name being called soon drew her attention back over to her partner.

"Hey, Erasa," a girl with short brown hair, wearing a white shirt and a blue skirt spoke up, craning her head to look at her teammate's face. "Are you done mixing those ingredients yet?"

Realizing she was being addressed, the blonde looked over at her teammate with a start before shaking her head. "Oh… uhh…" Panicking a little, she then glanced down at the plastic bowl in one hand and the stirrer in the other. "S-Sorry, Nagisa. Not just yet. Just give me a few more seconds." She then continued mixing the ingredients as quickly as she could, making a damn mess of it in the process.

Looking across at her friend apprehensively, the girl carrying the bag full of prawns nodded in understanding and, sporting a small smile, turned back to their station. "Okay. Just make sure all of the ingredients and powders are blended together."

"Right-O."

As the two girls continued to work, Erasa couldn't help but spare a few furtive glances over at Gohan's table, where she saw the loving pair had stopped messing around long enough to get their affairs in order. Despite starting out late, the two Z-fighters were quickly getting back on track and catching up with the rest of their peers.

Over on Sharpener and Touya's station, things weren't going so great.

Due to the fact that both had little to no experience with cooking acceptable dishes, the pair of sportsmen was struggling with some of the more remedial tasks. Stirring the ingredients ended up with both of them covered in batter and all of the chopping that they'd done so far had left an even bigger mess. All in all, their efforts weren't exactly yielding the tidiest results. But after about fifteen minutes of grinding and hardcore perseverance, the pair found themselves coming up to the final stages of cooking their prawns.

After failing to pick up a couple of the slippery sea creatures with his chopsticks a decent three times, Touya then prepared to put them over the wok and show them the fire. It was just as he was prepping his chopsticks for the dip that he was stopped by the timely concerns of his partner.

"Hang on a second. Are you sure the batter is ready to be used?" Sharpener asked with a worried look on his face as he stood directly beside his friend. Peering into the bowl, the blonde narrowed his eyes on the questionable mixture. "It looks a little bit stringy to me."

Eye twitching at having the man's voice blaring in his left ear, the glasses wearing teen turned on the taller kid with a growl, "Of course it's ready. I didn't spend the last ten minutes dumping crap into the base and mixing it all together for it not to be ready."

"Hey, I'm just asking. I was so busy trying to get the stove setup that I wasn't able to pay attention to what you were doing," the jock replied with an equally brash tone. "Geez. No need to get all snippy with me, darling."

A sour look crossed Touya's expression due to his partner's teasing jabs. "Let's just focus on getting this done." After speaking his part, the boy then dipped the prawn into the batter and, after lathering it about for a solid second, slowly pulled it out into the open. Hand held under it as the excess dripped into his palm, the young sportsman then turned his attention to the wok and the flames burning beneath it. "Okay… here we go."

Gritting his teeth together, Sharpener took a step forward. "Careful, man. Try not to splash the oil over the hot top."

"Oh, stop worrying, mum. I know what I'm doing," Touya stated, rolling his eyes before slowly approaching the wok. As soon as he was close enough, he then lowered the prawn into the mix…

Only to realize too little too late that there was too much oil in it. Misjudging the distance to the base of the wok, the prawn suddenly slipped out of his chopsticks and splattered hot oil onto his hand. A loud hissing sound was followed by a loud yelp from Touya as he stumbled back waving his arm, only to inadvertently bump into Sharpener and knock the man into the desk behind them. The blonde jock yelled out when he fell over, reaching out to try and grab hold of something. He ended up catching a chopping board and knocking half a cabbage flying into the air and, with almost perfect aim, into his partner's wok. The students scattered around the surrounding desks moved out of the splash zone just in time to watch the utensil catch fire, with the orange flames reaching halfway up to the ceiling. This drew a startled cry from everyone standing nearby and had everyone stop whatever it was they were doing.

Panic ensuing, the teacher quickly rushed over to the burning stove. "What the hell are you guys doing? Get the fire extinguisher!" the red haired woman in the chef's uniform shouted, pointing at the students who were just standing around and gawking.

"Don't worry! I got it! I got it!" a male voice came in from the side, moments before a student edged his way onto the scene with fire extinguisher in hand. Managing to step around Sharpener and Touya, both of whom were gawking from wherever they were lying or standing respectively, the attentive young man in the blue shirt and jeans blasted the fire with the red cylinder and put it out. Moments later, the flames had been doused, leaving several surprised students in their wake and two stunned sportsmen with slightly singed bangs.

As the flames were snuffed out, Gohan and Videl stood watching from the sidelines over their own work, with the former sidestepping over to the bench out of concern. The young Saiyan ended up standing beside Erasa, a position that allowed the two of them to watch as the chaos over by the central cooking station was mended. Upon seeing white smoke rise from the wok in the wake of the extinguisher's use, the entire class breathed a collective sigh of relief knowing that the situation had been successfully averted.

"Alright students. The fire's been put out. No need to evacuate. Everyone back to their stations," the teacher announced and quickly ushered everyone away from the area.

Exhaling deeply, Gohan shared a look across at the blonde haired girl clutching the wooden spoon next to him. However, as soon as their eyes met and he tried to smile at her, Erasa suddenly stiffened, glanced in the opposite direction and quickly moved back over to her desk. This action had the demi-Saiyan recoil in surprise as he watched the teen return to work alongside her teammate.

Finding her reaction puzzling, the young warrior was about to follow her with a question, only to have his gaze turned around when he felt a tug on his sleeve. Looking down, he saw Videl looking up at him inquisitively.

"Is everything alright?" the raven haired girl asked while tilting her head up at her boyfriend.

Hearing her question loud and clear, the young man put on a smile and nodded, "Yeah. I'm fine."

Acknowledging his response, the crime fighter shared a fond look with her partner and returned to their desk. Gohan lagged behind a little, taking a moment to spare a glance back at Erasa. Concern filling his expression, the teen hesitantly moved to rejoin his partner and to continue on with their task.

XXX

(A few days later)

The inner workings of Capsule Corp were all abuzz with activity as the gravity room was currently dishing out its toughest session yet. With Goten and Trunks resting up in the observation room following their own grueling practice an hour or so earlier, they were able to get a good view of the current match being conducted by their seniors. Just like every other day before, this training regiment was just as captivating as the last ones.

Hanging over by one side of the room, adorned in black spandex shorts and a top that was cut to expose her midriff, Zangya was performing a one-handed handstand on her thumb and two fingers. Gritting her teeth as sweat trickled down her face and body, the Hera was currently putting herself through hell on earth as the force of over one thousand times gravity was weighing down on top of her. With her body maxing out her base power level, she was doing her best to keep herself steady, while at the same time doing push-ups on one arm and balancing what looked like a couple of anvils on her feet.

While she was doing her own workout, the two most powerful Saiyans on the planet were engaged in their own activity across the rest of the chamber. Both adorned in spandex shorts and training boots, Gohan and Vegeta were spending their time polishing their technique and power work across the floor space. Mixing it up from their previous spars, the demi-Saiyan was wearing large metal bands on his forearms that Bulma had designed to increase his weight several times over and to make the task of fighting more difficult. The prince meanwhile had on a pair of weighted metal pads on his arms, which he was using to catch the boy's various punches and kicks.

Heavy and durable, these pads were made up of twenty percent adamantine, meaning that they were flexible enough to be bent yet strong enough to take a Saiyan's planet splitting punches. This made them exceptional training tools, especially since both of them were in Super Saiyan form and were battling against the elements at their absolute maximum.

Gritting his teeth and pouring sweat, the shortest of the two warriors backed away across the tiled surface at a staggered pace as his opponent drove a dozen more concussive blows into the metal blocks on his arms. "Come on, brat! Faster! Double jab and a right kick!" Vegeta shouted, taking the blows and checking the kick from the teenager as he staggered after him. "Good! Three punches here, switch kick and a low punch!" The hits rang out throughout the room like cannon fire, rattling the chamber to its core and prompting the full-blooded fighter to back away at a faster rate. "More power! Right and right hook!"

Yelling out with every punch, Gohan drove into the metal pads a combination of blows before driving a two consecutive kicks into his opponent, who caught them with the steel cushions effortlessly. After uncorking those attacks, the demi-Saiyan then jumped at the prince and dove at him with a downward elbow. This attack connected with a deafening shockwave, which he then followed up with a powerful roundhouse that Vegeta blocked and sent the royal sliding along the ground.

Wincing under the force, Vegeta looked up in time to see Gohan zigzag towards him at a ridiculous speed. Timing his approach, the man then jabbed out at him, forcing the boy to slip the blows and counter with a swinging elbow, slamming it into the metal block with a 'clang.' He threw a couple more elbows one after the other, driving them in with cutting force. Immediately after taking the kid's last elbow and body shot, the prince cocked his foot up and slammed a push kick into the teenager's stomach, sending Gohan crashing to the ground. When the hybrid rolled onto all fours, the prince rushed him with a kick.

"Is that the best you can do?!" Vegeta shouted, his golden aura blasting around him as he aimed the blow for his head.

Spitting out sweat that was rolling into his mouth, Gohan blocked the kick with his arm and lunged up, slamming two punches into the metal blockers, before being forced to block a series of hooks from the sides. When Vegeta threw a third hook though, the boy pivoted on the spot and slammed a kick into the man's ribs, drawing a yelp from his opponent and knocking him stumbling away.

Vegeta then leered at the teen after shaking his head of sweat. "That's more like it!" He then put up his guard when Gohan dashed towards him.

Ready for the assault, the shorter fighter threw a kick at the approaching teenager, forcing him to check it. But this didn't stop the demi-Saiyan from jumping at the man with a knee, which connected with one of the pads and had Vegeta stumbling backwards again. Instead of falling, the Saiyan lord spun back around and drove a hook into the boy's side, forcing him to block and counter with a series of punches to the metallic pads. When those hits landed, Gohan ended it with a step-in knee, which his training partner caught with the block and knocked the pair away from one another.

Stopping a few yards from one another, the two panting and battered warriors glared across at their adversary, their forms readying for another go. But just before they could rush in to confront each other for one final hurrah, the bell inside the chamber went off and the control system's voice

Almost immediately after the computer read the curtain procedures, the two Saiyans felt the weight lift from them in an instant and slowly stepped out of their fighting stances. The sensation also told Zangya that her session was over and, after performing one last rep, returned to her feet.

All three warriors stretching out, Gohan and Vegeta slowly removed the metal blocks wrapped around their arms and limped their way towards the door. With the demi-Saiyan unclipping the cuffs with a resounding hiss and the prince simply sliding his pads off, the two sweating and exhausted warriors breathed a collective sigh of relief as they unconsciously followed the Hera out of the room. When the equally beat woman met the pair at the exit, she grinned at them and held her hand up for a high-five.

"Good session, guys," she chirped, watching Vegeta walk passed without even giving her a second glance. Doing a double-take at practically being blown-off by the prick, she then received a congratulatory high-five from Gohan, who she shared a grin with before following him into the lockers. After stretching her fingers above her head and groaning in satisfaction, she threw the teen a smile and gestured towards his opponent. "You really gave his royal highness a pounding back there. Nice job."

Chuckling as he made his way to his steel top shelf, with the central bench dividing the pair from one another, the spiky haired hybrid smiled in the young woman's direction. "Okay. First of all: phrasing." When Zangya grinned lecherously in response, Gohan shook his head and blindly grabbed the towel hanging off of his door. "And second of all, I think we were both equally beating the crap out of each other."

A quick scoff from Vegeta pulled the pair's gaze down the line of lockers to see the royal standing by his shelf and using his towel to wipe himself down. "You wish, brat. I had you on the ropes the entire time," he then threw a smirk at the boy.

Feeling his Saiyan side acting up, Gohan returned the man's competitive expression with one of his own. "Hey, at least you weren't the one carrying the thousand ton weight bands on your arms and being forced to block everything being thrown at you. That pretty much gave you a handicap." He then held up the metallic cuff he was still holding before depositing it on the bench. Since it was programmed specifically to respond to the gravity room's settings, the normal weight of the brace had also been restored to it, making it a poultry two kilo. "I'll be sure to return the favor this afternoon."

"Hmph," the prince grunted before returning to wiping down his face.

Shaking her head at the pair, the orange haired woman quickly grabbed her towel, wiped her face down and turned to face the demi-Saiyan across from her. Her eyes running up and down his muscular back and broad shoulders, Zangya took a moment to savor the sight of his toned upper body until the Super Saiyan's attention fell upon her once again. "It's been a couple of weeks since I've had a pad session. Mind if I take a swing at you as well?"

"You want to share in my pain?" the young Saiyan asked, finding her request quite curious. When he saw the Hera nod her head affirmatively, the teen smiled. "Alright then. If that's what you want to do, then I'm not gonna stop you."

"Oh, trust me. You won't be able to," the woman grinned slyly while turning side on to the hybrid. At the same time, the girl bent her leg and struck a rather alluring pose, one which she hoped would catch Gohan's attention given her current state of dress. Sadly though, the boy simply smiled at her as she gave her response. "After seeing what you were doing to Vegeta, I'm gonna use every opportunity I can to jump in and start beating the stuffing out of you as well."

Ecstatic to hear this, Gohan pointed at her confidently. "I accept that challenge."

"Goodie," Zangya exclaimed, wiping her arms down before tossing her towel back into her locker and saying in a sing-song voice, "This afternoon is going to be so much fu~un." She then did an about face and began sauntering towards the gravity room, making a show of waving her hips at the same time.

Vegeta seemed to take notice of this, his eyes darting between both Gohan and Zangya couple of times suspiciously. Noticing the oblivious smile on the boy's face and the flirtatious manner the orange haired woman was speaking to him with, the Saiyan male raised an eyebrow at their banter and slowly turned back to his locker. He did so at the exact same time Goten and Trunks rushed into the room and made a B-line straight for the GR.

"Hey, big brother!" Goten laughed, giggling as he and Trunks ran after Zangya. "It's our turn to train now! Second session!"

"Alright." Gohan smiled and watched as his younger sibling dashed past him, springing over the center bench in the process. "Good luck, little bro. You too, Trunks."

"Thanks, Gohan!" the lavender haired adolescent called back, before leaping at the retreating Hera's back. Unfortunately, the blue-skinned Z-fighter sensed the sneak attack and dodged it, taking a mock boxing stance and throwing a few playful punches at the youngster until Goten leapt onto her shoulders from behind.

The two little devils giggled as they latched onto Zangya, who laughed along with them as she staggered towards the training room's central control panel. Watching them from a distance, the hero of earth couldn't help but allow a cheerful smile to spread across his lips and a soft laugh to leave his heart.

Grabbing a bottle of water and sitting down on the bench directly behind him, the spiky haired defender of the planet took a moment to rest and recover. While doing so, and listening to his brother and friends preparing the gravity room for use, Gohan then sensed Vegeta sit down next to him and looked across to see his father's arch rival glaring ahead of him with a bottle of water of his own and his towel slung around his neck.

Remaining silent for several seconds, the full-blooded warrior took a deep breath and, after one last moment of consideration, glanced over at his most recent sparring partner. "I understand that you've chosen that buffoon Hercule's daughter to be your future mate and life-partner, is that correct?"

Caught off guard by the Saiyan's sudden question, the demi-Saiyan froze up for several moments before looking the man nervously in the eye. "Future mate? W-What do you mean by that?"

"Don't play games with me, brat. You know exactly what I mean," the flame haired warrior snapped with a slowly deepening scowl. "That Videl girl is incredibly fond of you, yes?"

Gohan swallowed anxiously, "Y-Yyeah?"

"And you're as attached to her as she is to you, am I right?"

"Yes. I like her a lot… no… I love her. More than you know," the teen replied immediately, his own frown becoming more pronounced as he glared right back at the alien male. "Where exactly are you going with this?"

The prince continued to glare at the teenager for some time. After he was certain he'd instilled a feeling of uncertainty within his opposite, Vegeta's back straightened up and he began to speak. "It has recently been brought to my attention that there are a number of women in your life that have developed a bit of a healthy interest in you and, if my observations aren't deceiving me, you've taken quite a shine to them as well. And I'm not talking about some best-friend sideshow or an ordinary companionship here. These girls have become incredibly fond of you … and are growing more so by the day."

Hearing the Saiyan's words loud and clear had the spiky haired teen balk in shock. "Huh? H-How do you know?"

Vegeta turned his head away slightly, but kept his eyes fixed upon his sparring partner. He then allowed a small smirk to form across his lips. "Believe it or not, brat, but I've seen more than my fair share of this kind of crap over the years. Your case in particular is bringing me a great deal of amusement… and that doesn't happen to me very often." He then threw the boy a sly look, one that promised no ends of frustration for the hero of earth, before then directing his gaze towards the GR. When his and Gohan's eyes fixated upon Zangya playing around with the two kids, watching her laugh and mock spar with them in the white, dome-shaped room, the Saiyan prince nodded towards her. "She's a very attractive woman that one… tough… strong… laidback… I can see why you like her so much."

Visibly baffled by the man's statement, Gohan stared at the man with his eyes wide in shock, "Huh? Wait… I don't-"

"And she likes you a lot too," Vegeta interrupted, stopping the boy short and looking across at him with a steeled look. "Don't act coy and try to hide the fact that you find her character and physique appealing. It's humiliating… especially for a Saiyan. You like her more than you care to admit and I can see that as clear as day."

Staring right back into the prince's hard, charcoal eyes, Gohan swallowed nervously and looked away, his eyes becoming half-lidded. "I… I don't… know… what…" Sighing, the boy ran a frustrated hand through his sweaty hair and, after a few seconds of irritated contemplation, glanced back up at his group's second strongest member. "Why are you telling me all of this?"

Expression becoming more serious, Vegeta allowed for a few moments of silence to pass before an exhausted sigh escaped his lips. "Somewhere underneath this gruff exterior, there's a small, insignificant part of me that actually cares about you and your friends. I just don't show this side of myself very often, mostly because I can't be bothered." Taking a swig of his bottle of water created a brief pause in their conversation that enabled Gohan to process the man's words. After having his fill, the short fighter rose to his feet and, taking his towel with him, glared down at the boy intently. "Here's the thing runt… as you probably already know, the Saiyan race's most prevailing trait is our voracious nature. This includes the desire to fight, to grow stronger, and to find mates to help bear us a strong offspring. But because our occupation as planet conquerors became the most dominant aspect of our society, we never had the time or the luxury to spend pursuing other meaningless aspirations or practices. Marriage for example was a foreign concept to our race… or at least to most of us, and there was no official law or process on Vegeta regarding those kinds of rituals. Saiyans were allowed to take as many mates as they wanted… and they did. It was in our nature to do so and, considering the blood running through your veins; it's well within your nature too."

Gohan blinked as he stared up at the man, narrowing his eyes questioningly at the same time.
Staring back down at the stern looking teen for a few moments, the prince then turned around and focused his attention on the other side of the room, "A little something for you to think about while you're deciding who you want to spend the rest of your life with. Since I've told you this much, I suggest you find out what other females have selected you to be their potential mate… otherwise you're going to end up destroying whatever bonds you've managed to forge between yourself and them." He then started towards the shower, a smile tugging at the corner of his mouth as he looked back at his second rival. "Knowing the kind of person that you are, that's something I know you will never want to let happen. Try not to disappoint me." He then promptly left the room, leaving Gohan to stew over his thoughts.

Sensing the prince retreat into the showers and the door to the GR shut behind him gave the demi-Saiyan the perfect opportunity to think about his predicament. Thanks to the prince's timely advice, the boy had suddenly become aware of the fact that there were a bunch of girls in his life that were vying for his attention… and not in the conventional sense. He'd been completely oblivious to this detail for some time, but in the wake of his most recent conversation with the Saiyan royal, Gohan was now able to see the kind of debacle he was actually in.

He loved Videl and she loved him, without a doubt. She was the one person he could always look to for support and for guidance in times of great turmoil, and he valued her companionship above all others. She was also his closest companion and his closest friend. But there were others too whom he valued just as much; Zangya, Lime, Kana, Erasa… all of whom he cared just as much for and found himself being drawn towards by some unknown force. It was uncanny.

"I care deeply about all of them," Gohan thought, clenching his fists tightly as his mind revolved around the faces of all the girls whom he'd formed strong bonds with. It was this idea that had his brow narrow uncertainly. "But… how much do I care about them exactly? Videl is the only one I'm in love with and treasure the most, right? Yeah. That's it. That's definitely it. I love her and… and… her… alone…"

Without even realizing it, the seeds of doubt had been firmly implanted in his head.

Was Vegeta right? Did he care about the other girls more than as a friend? Were his latent instincts and desires as a Saiyan telling him that he wanted to develop his relationships like his father's rival said… to become more intimate with them? With Zangya, Lime and Kana? Were his inner demons telling him to act on his primal impulses? It certainly would strengthen the bonds that all of them shared, no question, but that also meant going down an avenue that was rife with fears and uncertainties.

Simply thinking about it had the young warrior blush a deep shade of red and shake his head furiously when less than appropriate thoughts of the other girls he knew started to flood into his mind. He then brought a hand up and slapped it against his skull.

"Damn it… that jerk just had to open his big mouth and say something…" Right up to this point Gohan had been perfectly fine being completely ignorant of the belief that most of the girls he knew liked him in a more-than-just-friends-way. Heck, he wasn't even doing anything to attract this kind of attention from them in the first place… at least not consciously. But now another part of him was starting to act up and it was beginning to make him think about all kinds of things he'd never even considered before.

While putting a plug on the rather inappropriate images starting to seep into his brain so as to preserve his sanity, the boy then looked up when he remembered something important.

It was something that'd been gnawing at the back of his head for the past few days but he'd been unable to acknowledge it properly. But now he could.
"Erasa's been acting really strange ever since I started at Orange Star High," the teen thought, his expression softening when the image of his friend entered his mind.

It was this new thought that allowed him to stem all others and focus his mind on something that wasn't tainted by 'darkness.'

Since the day he'd met her, Erasa had always come across as a bubbly, energetic girl who was always happy and full of life. She'd always been a shining beacon of light amongst their group, not just physically, but emotionally too. For the last two years Gohan had never seen her break this mold that she'd created for herself and had always referred to her with a smile. But in the past few weeks since he started high school with Videl, and his friends realized they were an item, the girl's character had taken a sudden and drastic shift.

Now she was acting more distant and less like the girl the teen had grown to know, and it worried him.

It was after hearing what Vegeta had to say that the demi-Saiyan came to the conclusion that he knew what was wrong with her.

Looking ahead of him and towards his locker, Gohan quickly spotted the gemstone wristband he'd received as a get-well present from the blonde sitting there on the shelf and, reaching forward, gently picked it up. Holding it in his palm and studying the aqua rocks carefully, Gohan began thinking about all of the good friends he'd made over the past seven years, particularly Erasa, and all the times he'd been able to spend with them.

All of them had shared so many great moments. As a group, they'd spent time at each other's houses, played games, went to see movies, went out on the town, and even spent days with one another individually. Gohan had found the blonde's company to be very enjoyable and always filled with activity. Whenever he saw Erasa and whenever they spent time together, the boy always had a smile on his face because her spirit was always alight and brimming with positive energy.

Perhaps this was why he found such intrigue in her as a person? In spite of all the trials and tribulations she'd faced in her life, she could still smile through it all, just like him.

After taking a minute to think about his blonde haired friend and how much she meant to him, Gohan then enclosed the bracelet in his fingers and looked up with a resolute expression coming into play.

"I'll go talk to her sometime later and find out what's bothering her. I want to try and fix this and go back to the way we were before." By doing so, he hoped he would be able to find out how she really felt about him and whether he'd be able to make things well between them again.

Hopefully…

After all, he didn't want one of his friends going around looking miserable for the rest of the year. It's what he felt was the right thing to do.

XXX

(A few days later)

It was the middle of the day on a Wednesday and the entirety of Gohan's class was out enjoying a nice day of physical activity. This wasn't a usual event either. For this particular second period the gym teacher had decided to let the class participate in a little bit of a game called battle ball, which was pretty much a jacked up version of rugby involving studded protective gear. The sole purpose of the game was for one of the two opposing teams to get the ball from their side of the field to their opponent's side. If they could get the ball between the markers on the other side of the oval and touch the ground with it, then that was basically a point. How they got the ball to the other side was entirely up to them, just no crotch shots, kicking, punching or kneeing was allowed.

While the gym teacher allowed the girls to play on one side of the field to get a taste of the sport, the boys got the other side and, for the guys that followed this sport religiously, it was turning out to be a real blast. For the majority of their hour out on the pitch, the two opposing groups on the male half of the green were running the ball up and down the line. With testosterone and adrenaline running high, it was no wonder the display looked so chaotic from a distance. The gym teacher actually had to blow the whistle on them a fair few times when the males decided to get a little too rowdy. But all in all the entire class was having fun…

… for the most part.

So far Sharpener's team was on a ridiculous hot streak. Not only did his group have a much better idea of strategy, but he had a really strong battle back on his end. This, unsurprisingly, took the form of the innocent yet physically dominating embodiment of toughness known across the campus as Son Gohan, who was decked out in the exact same gear as everybody else and marching on the jock's orders with every wave.

For the majority of their class time the young Saiyan had remained in the background, hoping to go throughout the entire game unnoticed. However, the moment his blonde haired classmate assigned him the role of chief ball runner, the opposing team started getting massacred.

And here was a reason why.

With both teams formed up across from one another and assumed in sprinter's stances, hands placed firmly on the ground, the contestants were primed and ready for battle. Ball held firmly under him, Sharpener took sized up the opposing squad and readied himself for the off.

Looking left and right, making sure that everyone was in position, the blonde sportsman grinned, "Three, two, one… GO!" He then rolled the ball under him, allowing Touya to catch it and chuck it over to his far left. The instant the ball was loose, the two opposing teams went at each other like mad bulls, their shoulders crashing into one another as the enemy group attempted to force their way through the defensive line.

The ball soon dropped from the sky and landed in the waiting arms of Son Gohan, who could be seen standing on the edge of his team's formation looking as anxious as ever. A few seconds later, the grappling line his team had set up to tackle the other team was broken, and three of the larger boys from the enemy squad charged at him with the intent of burying his ass into the ground. They ran at the hybrid at full speed and tackled him shoulder first, one after the other with concussive force.

The moment they crashed into the demi-Saiyan though, it was almost like watching a bunch of kids trying to push over a tree. With the three males stacked up against one another, all Gohan did was stand there like he wasn't even doing a thing and looking down at his opponents, all the while listening to the trio of jocks as they growled into his chest and their feet dug into the grass. After a few seconds of staring, he then looked up to where Sharpener was now standing, the boy having dispatched the person he was grappling with and had now cleared the way forward.

"What are you doing, Gohan?!” the blonde shouted, waving towards the other side of the oval frantically, "Don't just stand there! Run!"
"Oh? Okay," the spiky haired Saiyan chirped. Almost instantly, the three male students pushing against the dark haired teenager were blown back and sent tumbling through the air almost like a bull had charged into them. As soon as they were airborne, Gohan began a brisk, effortless jog towards the other side of the green.

Both girl teams on the other half of the oval literally stopped and dropped whatever it was they were doing to watch the spectacle unfolding on the boy's side. From a distance, the entire female entourage had the pleasure of watching their class's top student Gohan run through an entire army of guys without the slightest bit of effort whatsoever. It was almost like seeing the Juggernaut take down an entire row of soldiers one after the other as he jogged down the oval and towards the end line, ball under his arm and a smile on his face. The sight of his dominance on the field drew a series of cheers and whistles from all the girls egging the half-Saiyan on, whereas the rest of his team simply stood back and watched in awe and amusement.

Sharpener especially pretty much phoned it in as he stood by with his hands on his hips and watched as his friend practically bulldoze his way to the enemy markers, "Geez… this guy is freakin' unbelievable." When he saw Gohan set the ball down behind the line and turn to face them, the blonde shook his head in disbelief. "I wouldn't be surprised if I found out that he ate steel every morning and crapped out tanks in the afternoon." He then raised a fist and cheered, "Way to go, man!"

Hearing the cheers and praise begin to rain down from his side of the field, the spiky haired teen beamed brightly and waved back at them.

On the other half of the oval, the girls were ecstatic. Up and down their end the entire female body could be heard whistling and cheering the boy on, congratulating him for a job well done. When he turned to smile in their direction, an even louder chorus of squeals followed, with Videl throwing her hand up to wave at her boyfriend.

"Lookin' good, Gohan!" the raven haired girl shouted, causing the young Saiyan to blush and rub the back of his head in his characteristic Son manner. Her grin widening as a result, Videl then looked towards Erasa, whom she knew was standing nearby and was currently watching the young Saiyan with an expression filled with wonder and admiration. "Did you see that? He was like a freight train out there."

Erasa, startled out of her dreamy-eyed daze, looked back at her friend and smiled nervously, "Y-Yeah. Gohan… he… he's really amazing."

Finding her stutter a little bit out of place, the young crime fighter then gave her friend a concerned look, "Hey. You okay, Erasa?"

"Huh?"

"I asked if you're okay?"

"Oh. I… I'm fine Videl," the blonde hurriedly replied while glancing the other way, "R-Really."

"Are you sure? You… seem a little bit distracted…"

"I'm probably just thirsty, that's all," the stuttering girl answered while attempting to clear her throat. Massaging it to indicate her parched condition, Erasa looked across at her classmate with a pained smile. "I've been running around so much the entire day that I haven't had the time to stop and grab a drink."
Though this was an obvious lie on the blonde's behalf, Videl bought it without a second thought and nodded to her friend in understanding.

"You should go sit down and rest your head a bit. Maybe that will help."

This seemed to cheer Erasa up as she responded to her friend's suggestion with an enthusiastic smile, "Good idea. I think I'll do that." Without the slightest bit of hesitation, the blonde quickly turned heel and headed off, completely missing the wave she received from Gohan.

When the demi-Saiyan tried to get the attention of his other friend, his hand lowered in surprise when he saw Erasa rush off towards the bleachers. Though it appeared she was going to sit down and catch her breath, the boy then saw her disappear around the bend and head in the direction of the wash room. This had him stare after the blonde for several moments with a confused glimmer in his eyes, only to be snapped out of his trance when a firm arm wrapped around his neck.

Looking to his left, he saw Touya had snuck up on him and was now patting his chest in a hearty gesture of congratulations. "That was a wicked run, dude. You just steam-rolled through those chumps. They didn't stand a chance."

Feeling himself being pulled along, Gohan's concerns over his retreating classmate were quickly swept away as a nervous grin returned to his face. "I tried my best to hold back. Really, I did."

"Su~ure you did," the brown haired sportsman chuckled, before then quietly dragging the Saiyan back towards their line. "I could tell you were having fun out there. Now come on. The teacher wants to debrief us."

And that's exactly what happened next. After the chipper young warrior was pulled back over to the center of the oval, Gohan was able to receive a few words of praise from the gym teacher for his incredible performance before the man then sent the boys and girls off to wash up after their hard day of play. Needless to say, after the amount of roughhousing that'd taken place on the patch of green over the course of their second period, a lot of the boys were in desperate need of a shower. So, pushing and gunning their way towards the change rooms, the demi-Saiyan took a moment to have a playful chat with Videl before they had to split to their respective locker rooms.

Once in there, things quickly settled down as the guys striped down and headed for the cubicles. As soon as the faucets started running, this left Gohan, Sharpener and Touya as a couple of the only males left standing in the locker room, decked out in towels.

After setting his clothes down on his shelf and shutting the door, the blonde jock turned and chucked a glance towards the new guy's back. "Geezus, man. No wonder you rule at everything sports related. You're fucking ripped."

Looking over his shoulder in surprise, the demi-Saiyan then realized that Sharpener was talking to him and, after doing a quick check of his appearance, grinned nervously at his classmates. "Really? Well… I wouldn't exactly say 'rule' at everything… more like… fail spectacularly."

The long-haired teen snickered as he swiveled around, placing his hands on his hips and showing off his own chiseled body. Compared to the demi-Saiyan's muscles though, his refined state was only second best. "That all depends on which end of the board you're standing on. It's your opinion against everybody else's. No matter which way you slice it, there's no denying the fact that you're one tough son of a bitch." He then gestured to his classmate when the martial artist turned to face him completely. "Most of the guys in the school would kill to have a body like that. I can imagine a lot of the girls would be lining up for a piece of that action too. Point is… I just don't see why you insist on hiding most of your figure underneath that jacket of yours."
Gohan grinned and scratched his cheek, at the same time propping a hand on his hip in an effort to act casual. "It's hard enough getting through the day with everyone whispering about the kind of superhuman feats I can pull during gym class. Needless to say… having every single boy and girl across campus talking about my body is a hassle I can probably do without."

A shrug was Sharpener's immediate response, "Whatever you say, dude. But just so you know, comes swimming season… I doubt that kind of secrecy is going to matter anymore."

Quickly realizing what the blonde was implying, Gohan's eyes widened in shock and he slapped himself in the forehead. "Ah, damn it! I completely forgot about that!"

The boy's exclamation had both Touya and Sharpener laugh out loud.

Folding up his glasses and propping them inside his locker, the brown haired teen slung an extra cloth over his shoulder and turned to face the young Saiyan. "Look on the bright side. At least you won't have to deck yourself out in long sleeved crap anymore. If you want my opinion, just forget about what everyone says about your body and your skills, and just role with it. I'm sure that whatever gossip gets out about you will pass in about a month or so…"

That sounded almost exactly like what Videl said to him before… only without the sarcasm.

Sighing as he ran a hand down his face, the demi-Saiyan placed both hands on his hips and nodded in consent. "I guess you're right…"

"Hey! Son!"

The sudden shout had the trio's attention snap down the line of lockers, where they quickly spotted a pair of big teenagers stomping towards them. Both still dressed in their sporting gear from earlier, the two males, one a really big guy about half a head taller than Gohan with an incredibly cut body and a bishonen haircut of black locks, and a second guy about the same height as the Saiyan, with a brown army cut and a cleft in his chin, stopped in front of the group and confronted the startled hybrid. Together, the two upset and roughed-up looking males glared hatefully at the spiky haired warrior as he stared right back at them, a little bit confused by their show of aggression and unflinching in their presence.

Trying to make himself look as big as possible, the black haired guy stepped towards the young man in the towel. "That was some stunt you pulled out there on the oval with the ball. You really made the rest of us look like a bunch of pussies."

"Uhh…" Gohan murmured, unsure of what to say as the slightly taller kid got right up into his face.

Sharpener, sensing the problem almost instantly, frowned and stepped forward in the demi-Saiyan's defense, placing a hand on the big guy's shoulder at the same time. "Hey, Jin. Come on man…" He then had his hand violently thrown off by his fellow jock, who shot the blonde a warning glare.

"Back off, Sharpener," the tall kid hissed, before turning his ire back towards the demi-Saiyan. "The boys and I don't appreciate being made fun of in front of the rest of the class, especially in the sport that most of us play competitively." He then took a step closer so that he was practically overshadowing the confused young man. "I think it's high time I teach this new kid a lesson and show him his place in the pecking order…"

Alarm bells going off, Touya stepped forward, only to be blocked off by Jin's friend and teammate sticking his arm out. "Whoa, dude. Hang on a second… you really don't want to be doing that…" the sportsman spoke in a worried tone.

The teen with the army cut and firm jaw line smirked down at the towel-clad male. "Oh yeah? And why's that?"

"Well, for one, the guy you're trying to muscle is Videl Satan's boyfriend," Touya spoke up, earning a couple of scoffs from the two brutes.

"Like I'm supposed to be afraid of Videl's boy-toy," Jin snickered while still continuing to look down on the Saiyan.

Touya then nodded his head slowly. "And… since you probably don't know this, the guy standing in front of you also beat the same Videl Satan in the 25th Martial Arts Tournament's Junior Division." He then raised a finger and pointed it in the jock's direction. "That's a fact I would probably take serious note of before you start trying to get physical with him."

In typical fashion, the black haired jock snorted at the teen's warning and looked the towel-wearing Saiyan over. Despite the fact his body was composed entirely of rock hard muscles, the guy was obviously not impressed and simply waved whatever facts were told about the kid's capabilities out of the way. "What? This piss-pot?" All of a sudden, using a level of speed that seemed impossible for a lad of his strength and size, Jin then threw his hands up and slammed them into Gohan's chest, with the intent of shoving him into the lockers behind him.

However, the instant he made contact with the Saiyan, the battle ball captain unexpectedly ended up shoving himself back into a stumble, which had him look across at Gohan in momentary shock. It was almost like he'd just pushed off of a wall.

Sharpener, Touya and Jin's teammate looked across at the duo in bewilderment, with two of them wondering what was going to happen next while the latter appeared just as stunted as his companion.

Expression solidifying a little, Gohan raised a hand towards Jin when the boy straightened up and approached him a second time. "Hey, listen… I don't want any trouble, okay?"

The bigger boy frowned and moved past the boy's hand to glare down at him. "Too bad. You just got it." He then clenched his fists tightly. "You think that just because you're Videl Satan's boyfriend that you can go about doing whatever the hell you want? Well you're wrong! Out there on the oval, I'm the team captain. I'm the boss. That means I run the show and I make the rest of the boys look good."

"And I respect you a lot for that," Gohan continued to speak, his voice calm and level as he stared the fuming boy down without even a single twitch. "I apologize if I caused any problems for you and your teammates out there… and I'm sorry if I upset any of you. But if you're looking to settle any disagreements you may have with me with violence, then I'm telling you right now that it's not worth it and that you should walk away while you still have the chance."

Jin sneered, "Or what?"

Gohan frowned, "Or… you're going to regret your actions in the next ten seconds."

The bigger jock smirked. "That's tough talk coming from Videl Satan's bitch. It makes me even wonder why she even picked a pinhead like you. Or is that cow actually your bitch?"

Sharpener and Touya frowned at the boy's slight towards their friend and were about to step in to defend her honor. But before they could even move an inch from their spots, their half-Saiyan friend beat them to it.

Before Jin could even flinch, Gohan suddenly hooked the collar of the jock's shirt with his index finger and lifted the boy into the air, holding him about a foot or so off the ground. The jock gasped and grabbed the teen's wrist in shock, clawing against the arm in an effort to free himself from his grasp. But try as he might, he could not shirk the steel column that was the crane now holding him up.

His friend Eita, reacting in alarm, rushed in to help and threw a punch at the Saiyan's head. But the boy ended up having his fist caught in midflight and twisted around, resulting in the boy being brought to his knees as his hand was rotated in the most uncomfortable direction imaginable. In a matter of seconds, Gohan had brought both jocks to heel and was literally holding both of them at his mercy.

The two boys standing on the sidelines could only look on in amazement as their spiky haired friend asserted himself as alpha right there in the locker room.

When Jin looked down, he saw through a pained expression the fury and outrage burning in Gohan's eyes. His charcoal irises set firmly upon the raven haired jock's, the demi-Saiyan blasted him with a suffocating wave of killing intent, enough to make the teen cease his struggling and have him gawking down at the hybrid in fear. From the way the warrior's eyes had narrowed and an eerie shadow had cast over them, he almost looked like he was going to rip the boy's head off.

But, through extreme discipline and patience, the teen Z-fighter reframed from doing so, and merely continued to hold the boy in the air with literally just his finger.

Taking a deep breath, Gohan began to speak. "I hate getting into senseless fights… mostly because I don't like the idea of hurting people by accident over something as trivial as pride or settling a score. That kind of stuff is meaningless," the Saiyan said, loud enough for everyone in the room to hear. After which, he then intensified his glare, so much so that he literally felt his suspended victim begin to tremble under his ire. "However, if you even think about calling Videl or any of my friends such vile names again… or if I catch even the tiniest breath that you've done so around this school, mark my words… I will break you. Understand?" The boy made sure to speak every word with enough malice and venom to make the blood inside the two males run cold.

On the verge of pissing himself with fright, Jin bit his lip and nodded. As soon as he saw the boy nod, Gohan released him and Eita from his hold, allowing the two to stagger away to nurse their bruises. They only looked back once to see the demi-Saiyan glare after them, before frantically disappearing round the corner to their lockers.

Rotating back around, Gohan fixed his attention on Sharpener and Touya, both of whom were shocked to see his expression had returned to normal and had now been replaced by a warm smile.

"So… showers?" the demi-Saiyan asked brightly.

Nodding dumbly, the two sportsmen quietly led the way into the other chamber. It was while they were ambling down the line of lockers that the blonde man fell in step with the young warrior of their group and, trading a couple furtive glances with him, grinned in Gohan's direction.

"Hey, man…"

"Yeah?"
"Remind me never to piss you off," Sharpener exclaimed with a hint of nervousness in his voice. The spiky haired young male smiled right back. "Sure thing, Sharpie."

OOO

(A little while later)

Due to their being a small number of cubicles in the shower room, Gohan had to wait a little while before he could actually use one of them to have a rinse. Even though he didn't end up breaking a single sweat out there on the field, he still managed to get some grass and dirt on him. This was mostly due to the other players attempting to tackle him when he went for the goals and had to plow through them all to get to where he was going. As trivial a matter as it was, this counted for only one of the two reasons why he wanted to have a shower.

By the time the demi-Saiyan got underneath a faucet and switched it on, he was among the last people left in the shower room. As he spent the next minute or so scrubbing down his hair, both Sharpener and Touya finished up with their washing up and headed back to the lockers to collect their things, leaving the teen alone in the white-tiled room with the stream of personal rain pattering down on him.

The silence perforating the area presented Gohan with the opportunity to contemplate over his second reason for being here. On the surface it may have seemed like just some sort of bogus excuse to take a shower, but the hot water actually helped to elevate some of the stress he had and meditate over the matter more thoroughly. If there was ever a time to stop and take an appropriate breather, this was it.

For the past few days Gohan had been trying to talk to Erasa alone. Though he did manage to catch her in with the group on a number of occasions, almost every time he tried to approach the blonde to speak with her on his own, she would just clam up and scamper off somewhere as fast as her legs could carry her. Now, while the Saiyan was used to seeing the girl running around with boundless energy, the fact that she was purposefully doing it to avoid talking to him was very off. Not only that, but the act of doing so was also disheartening and upsetting to the young Saiyan, as he found himself unable to talk to his friend like a best friend should.

"The situation is even worse than I thought," Gohan murmured in his head as he caught some water in his hands and splashed it across his face. Rubbing his cheeks vigorously under his palms, he then sighed and turned to stare up at the faucet, allowing its spray to wash over him from head to toe. "I wonder if I'll ever be able to talk to her normally again."

Maybe he could get Videl to speak with Erasa on his behalf and try to come to a solution between them.

No wait, if he did that, then he would have to tell her the reason why as well.

Not only would relaying the same stuff that Vegeta had told him to the raven haired beauty have the potential of pissing her off, but Gohan knew for a fact that he wouldn't be able to call her his girlfriend afterwards if she had any disagreements on the matter.

He was pretty damn sure she would have more than a few words to say regarding the issue… and none of them would be good.

Clenching a fist and knocking it against the wall, Gohan lowered his head under the shower and huffed. "No. This is something I need to do myself." Just like his girlfriend said, they each had their own personal battles to fight.
For the demi-Saiyan, his was part alien and part human related. It was all a matter of finding the right entry point and following-through on it.

Deciding right then and there that he was going to resolve this debacle in his own way, the demi-Saiyan switched off the water and moved to leave the cubicle. However, the instant he turned around, the young defender of earth suddenly found himself staring face to face with a person he'd never seen before. His charcoal eyes fixating upon the enchanting emerald ones of the stranger, it took the hybrid a few milliseconds to realize that it was a girl standing in his way and was leaning in so close that their noses were practically touching.

The moment the boy faced her, the stranger smiled. "Hi."

Alarm bell going off, Gohan's eyes widened and his expression switched to one of shock. Then, before he could even react, the demi-Saiyan felt his body lift off the ground and slam into the tiled wall behind him. The force of impact caused the barrier to crack, drawing a pained wince from the teenager who then looked up to find he was now being pinned to the surface by the dark skinned girl with sparkling eyes.

Sizing up his attacker, the demi-Saiyan saw that the person confronting him was a beautiful young woman in her early twenties, with dark brown skin, long, wavy blonde hair that looked to be as smooth as silk, a pretty face, and a curvaceous figure all the women in the world would die for. On top of her glamorous, all-natural look, the woman also wore a pink dress cut to show off only the necessary amount of cleavage, which had a very Ancient Greek design to it and was made out of a material that was almost ethereal in nature. What's more, to make her appearance that much more striking, the girl looked like she had a golden glow surrounding her body, giving her the appearance of an angel.

However, taking note of her pointy ears, Gohan immediately backtracked on his initial review as he quickly identified his attacker as a Dark Elf of some sort.

There was no denying that she was beautiful… breathtaking in fact, but despite her bewitching good looks, the young Saiyan recognized an even bigger issue in the fact that she was crazy strong. Looking down at the deceptively delicate arm pressing him into the wall, the demi-Saiyan noticed that she was holding him down using only her index finger and, judging from the expression on her face, she wasn't even trying.

Acknowledging the potential danger, a grunt followed shortly by a blast of golden energy and blue currents of lightning kicking up inside the cubicle marked Gohan's sudden ascension to Super Saiyan 2. Bio-field crackling at full power, the blonde haired warrior grabbed the arm holding him down and attempted to push it away. But try as he might, the teen couldn't even budge it a millimeter. It was like trying to heave a steel pole.

"W-What the hell?" the young Saiyan growled.

Expression remaining unchanged, the cheerfully smiling angel grinned across at the boy as he attempted to remove her finger. "I wouldn't try breaking free if I were you. Right now I'm pressing down on you with the equivalent of two hundred quintillion tons of force."

Looking up at the woman in surprise, Gohan frowned, "I can easily push that much in Super Saiyan 3."

The woman then shrugged, "Then I would just press down even harder. The only reason I haven't punched you through the wall yet is because I've erected a spatial barrier around us to stop you from doing so. Even if you somehow managed to break free, you won't be able to leave. Not without my permission." She then nodded to him challengingly. "So… do you still want to try and fight me?"

Allowing his aura to continue blasting around him for a few more seconds and continuing to glare at the strange woman, Gohan then conceded defeat and powered down. His hair turning back to normal, the now air dried warrior watched as the gorgeous blonde in front of him tilted her head and nodded.

"There. That's much better." Beaming, the woman's eyes then began moving up and down the teenager in front of her, analyzing him from head to toe.

It was by this time Gohan realized that he was still buck naked and, freaking out a little, attempted to cover himself. A quick glare from the woman though stopped him from doing so and the teen simply remained as he was, arms and legs splayed out with a deep shade of crimson on his cheeks as his attacker shamelessly checked out his goods.

Her eyes tracing every curve of the healthy young fighter's muscles, she then licked her lips when she went over his pelvic and abdominal regions, before a murmuring sound of approval emanated from her throat. "Mmm… yes… very nice." Her eyes then ran up his chest, then back up to his face, "Handsome, fit, healthy, with a fighter's body and a beautiful aura… yes, you are definitely the one I'm looking for." She then leaned forward some, enough so that her wicked gaze was able to bore into her prey and that her body was angled enough for the young man to be able to see down her top. Needless to say, her proximity to her victim easily had the boy's attention.

It was from her tone of voice and the closeness of the woman's face that Gohan's eyes suddenly widened a little in fright.

Oh God, was he going to be molested by this woman right here in the men's room? Granted it wouldn't be the worst way to go since she was ridiculously hot, about as hot as Zangya and Android 18 put together, but that was entirely beside the point. The thought of being taken advantage of by this woman and not being strong enough to mount even a heaven's chance of escape had Gohan gulp nervously and his knees start to buckle.

Damn it. He hadn't felt this helpless since the time he and his friends were fighting Frieza and things were getting incredibly dire. This though… this was a different kind of terror.

Noticing the teen's fearful look and pale skin drew a playful giggle from the gorgeous intruder. "There's no need to be afraid. I'm not going to jump you or anything like that. Although…" She then looked down. "Considering your endowment, you're making it incredibly hard not to." When she saw the teen's cheeks light up like a bulb, the blonde woman then grinned. "But seriously, I didn't travel billions of light-years across the universe from my home planet to inflict bodily harm on such a dashing young boy. I just wanted to check you out and to talk, that's all."

Swallowing apprehensively, Gohan stared back at the woman for a couple more seconds before narrowing his eyes, "What do you want to talk about?"

The stranger's eyes flickered with mischief, "Nothing important. Just stuff."

"Stuff?"

"Uh-huh. I mean… can't a goddess take a few minutes out of her daily schedule to come see one of her trillions of clients in person?" the woman asked before slowly removing her finger from his chest. Upon releasing the young man from her hold, she then watched the Saiyan return to a normal standing position and massage the spot she'd been holding him, after which the woman slipped her hands behind her and beamed his way. "Sorry if I was a little bit too rough. I hope I didn't hurt you."

Gohan chuckled as he gazed across at the stranger. "Don't worry about it. If anything, you popping up out of nowhere to say hello shook me up more than the push did." Dusting down his chest, the still naked Saiyan then fixed a serious look upon the newcomer. After giving her a good once-over with his senses, a small smile quickly formed on his face. "So… would you mind telling me who you are? Since I can't sense your life force or any other abnormalities, I'm going to assume you must be some sort of deity?"

A giggle left the girl's lips as she took a step back. "You are correct." She then performed an elegant curtsy. "I am Aphrodite; the Goddess of Love and one of the primary entities representing the elements of Construction and Reconstruction in this universe. It is a real pleasure to meet you." Her eyes then fixed upon the young warrior's charcoal ones. "And I take it you must be Son Gohan, the one who defeated my former associate Set a few weeks ago."

The demi-Saiyan nodded, "Yeah, that's me." He then narrowed his eyes on the woman. "Are you here because you wanted to take stock of the person who killed her?"

Aphrodite gestured affirmatively, "Uh-huh."

The young fighter's expression became a little graver. "Then… does that mean you're also here for revenge?" His question drew a laugh from the goddess, who placed her hands on her hips and gazed across at the boy with interest.

"Of course not, silly. I already told you I didn't come here for that. Why would I trouble myself with such petty actions of violence? That would go against everything I stand for as the embodiment of compassion and kindness. Not to mention killing you certainly wouldn't benefit me in any way." Upon relaying this message to the young fighter and seeing relief flash across his face, the powerful woman then looked him in the eyes and took a slight step forward. "No. I'm here on personal business. Ever since I found out from my colleagues that it was a mortal warrior from this planet who defeated the most powerful goddess of our time, I've literally been dying to meet this mysterious figure in person. Now that I have, I can say without the slightest bit of hesitation that he was everything I imagined him to be and that he is indeed the one that defeated Set. Congratulations."

A little bit surprised by the woman's praise, Gohan massaged the back of his head in embarrassment and smiled bashfully at the young deity. "Uhh… thanks? I guess…"

The blonde chuckled and flicked her hair over her shoulder. "There's no need to be shy about it. You should be proud that you were able to best the God of Storms in combat. It's not every day that an ordinary martial artist from the physical plains can draw on the power necessary to defeat a deity of her class and stature… but then again… you're no ordinary warrior are you?" She then looked him over once again, causing the demi-Saiyan to blush at being shamelessly checked out a second time. "You have an incredible power dwelling deep inside your body that's unlike anything I've ever felt before. Considering you're half-Saiyan and half-human as well, that makes you and your abilities all the more special."

Gohan raised an eyebrow at the Elven woman curiously, "You can tell that I'm a half-breed?"

"I'm a goddess. It's my job to know these things. Plus… it was a friend who told me." She then playfully stuck her tongue out.
A chuckle quickly followed the goddess's flippant response. "Is me having the blood of two different species a problem for you?"

Answering his question with a warm smile, Aphrodite shook her head, "Not at all. Being a hybrid is nothing to be ashamed of. It just makes you more unique. You're the best of both your worlds, with the powers of a Saiyan and the spirit of a human all wrapped up in a single body."

Tilting his head, the hybrid smirked, "Not that I'm not pleased to be receiving such compliments from one of the universe's main guardians, I still don't understand why you decided to pop in now of all times to have a chat with me." He then frowned a little while gesturing around the small cubicle. "If you haven't figured it out by now, this isn't exactly the most convenient place to have a meeting. Nor do I imagine is it the most appropriate."

Aphrodite raised an eyebrow at the slightly flustered young male before leering. "Don't tell me a man of your impressive endowment is embarrassed to be seen naked by a member of the opposite sex?"

"Under normal or familial circumstances, no I'm not. But in front of strangers... it's honestly kind of weird. And can you please stop talking about my junk?" He then crossed his arms and looked across at the innocent looking woman with a frown. "For the Goddess of Love, you really don't have any concept of shame."

The deity looked at him cheekily. "You've seen my pictures in your earthling history books? It should be common knowledge among you and your kind that the deities of beauty and love are often depicted in the nude."

A deadpanned expression soon followed. "So I'll take that as a no?"

"Yep," Aphrodite exclaimed proudly before placing a hand on her hip. "Back home when I'm off duty, I usually take the time to train and frolic around the open fields in the buck. Helps elevate the stresses of a guardian." She then threw the boy a mischievous smile and, reaching up, began to slide one of the bands of her dress down her arm. "Since this is a bath house... perhaps I should do the sensible thing and-"

"NO! No-no! No! That's not necessary! Really!" Gohan practically shouted, slapping his hands over his face when he saw the woman's toga come down just a little bit. "Please, keep your clothes on!"

"Aww... but it's so hot and steamy in here-" the goddess teased.

"I said I'm fine thanks! One naked person is more than enough right now! We don't need a second one!" the demi-warrior continued, his face glowing red through his palms.

Grinning in amusement, the deity then slowly returned her band back to her shoulder and looked across at the frustrated warrior triumphantly. "The fact that you're peering through the gaps in your fingers to sneak a peek tells me everything I need to know about your character. You're a perfectly healthy young male with desires and interests befitting someone of your personality and station. That is excellent news." She then spared a third glance downwards, alerting Gohan to the 'big' problem that'd come up because of her actions. This forced him to try and conceal his body's natural response, which then drew an enthusiastic smile from Aphrodite. "Now then... how about we move on to business?"

The flushed warrior raised an eyebrow, "Business?"
"Uh-huh. Since you, Son Gohan, are personally responsible for averting what could've been a multi-universal catastrophe by defeating our former associate turned rogue, I believe a little reward for your actions is needed," Aphrodite informed while winking in his direction. She then turned her nose sideways when he shot her an inquisitive look. "Though it goes against protocol for me to reveal this kind of information to my clients, because of your good deeds and courage in the face of great adversity, I think I'll make an exception this one time."

Curious as ever, the half-breath warrior faced the goddess completely. "What kind of information do you have to share with me?"

Grinning at his inquiry, the deity then raised her fingers and clicked. In a puff of white smoke, the duo was soon joined by another male inside the cubicle. A dark elf just like Aphrodite, this young newcomer had combed-back white hair and pointy ears, was wearing a butler's uniform, and had on his back a pair of tiny angel wings. As peculiar as his uniform was, especially given the person the Saiyan was speaking with, Gohan didn't say a word as he saw the man turn his gaze towards the woman in the pink dress and bow.

The goddess smiled across at him, "Cupid."

"Yes, mistress?"

"Bring me the file on Son Gohan of planet earth, please."

The smartly dressed gentleman nodded, "As you wish." He then vanished in another puff of smoke.

For the next couple of seconds Gohan and Aphrodite stood there on the wet floor waiting quietly, with the demi-Saiyan having pretty much forgotten the fact that he was nude while the blonde woman checked her metaphorical watch. Once that time had ticked by, the dark elf runner returned to the scene in another puff of smoke, with a scroll held tightly between his gloves hands. Bowing to the goddess, he then held the item out to her.

"The document as you requested, my lady."

"Thank you darling," Aphrodite chirped, plucking it from the man's hands and watching him disappear with a quiet 'poof'. She then undid the latch of the parchment and grinned in the demi-Saiyan's direction. "The fairies go through millions of these a fortnight. We have a very efficient system."

"I see..." Gohan murmured as he watched the goddess open up the scroll.

"All of the old records of deceased clients have been stored away on computer. That makes sorting through the current paperwork that much easier. Not to mention if we suddenly had to convert all of this material to digital format, I would be putting over a billion people out of a job," the goddess informed, rolling her shoulders as she extended the length of sheet to take a look. "Erhm. Let's see... Son Gohan... age: eighteen... a little sketchy on those details, date of birth: May 18th, Age 757, height: 173 centimeters, weight: 61 kilograms... address..." Her reading then deteriorated into a series of inaudible mumbles, which then resulted in her eyes widening in success seconds later. "Ooh... here we go... love status."

"Love status?" Gohan balked, not really expecting her to get to that at the end of the list.

Nodding her head as her eyes scanned over the file, Aphrodite then made an approving sound and glanced over the parchment towards the Saiyan. "My, my... you really do get around, don't you? It looks like you've got a bunch of girls after your heart… one… two…three… six so far? Wowza."

Baffled by this news, Gohan began counting on his fingers the girls that he knew and could identify off of the top of his head as the ones that had an interest in him. "Videl… Lime… Zangya… Kana… Erasa…" he whispered, searching his brain for a few seconds. He then blinked in surprise and looked across at the goddess in confusion. "Wait a second… those numbers don't add up."

"Well, you got all of them except for the sixth," Aphrodite said, looking over the names of the parchment intently before then giving the teen a cheeky smile. "I think I'll be keeping that last one a secret." Ignoring the odd look Gohan threw her, she then continued on without missing a beat. "The last guy I visited set the record for most lovers in history at eighty five. Don't know if you plan on going for that record but I seriously doubt you'll ever reach it. Ra clocked out at ten and Thor gave up at fifteen."

"Those names sound very familiar…" the young Saiyan whispered, recognizing them as the official titles belonging to other known deities.

Just how many of these guys were there?

"Anyway, back on track. The one that's managed to sink her teeth into you the deepest so far is this lovely young flower Videl Satan… a very beautiful girl with a strong spirit and a strong heart. She's incredibly fond of you. As it stands, you've managed to get to the first stage with her, openly declaring a romantic relationship with your friends … but, oh… and isn't this a delightful sundae with two delicious cherries on top…" She then gasped and held the scroll close to her chest. "I think that little fact is private… heh-heh."

When he realized what the goddess was implying with that line of reading, Gohan blushed to the roots of his hair and tried to hide his face from sight.

Humming cheerfully in an effort to bypass that little awkward moment, Aphrodite carried on with her breakdown of the document. "And isn't this interesting… the girls who refer to you as their closest friend are also deeply in love with you too… and you didn't need any of my help to make it so." She then grinned over at the intently listening young man. "I mostly work management, just keeping an eye on things to make sure there aren't any irregularities. I never get involved with casting the red strings of fate between people. My job is simply to ensure it continues to weave and unravel." After speaking her piece, she then shut the scroll up and beamed at the hero of earth. "It seems to me that you've laid the groundwork to leading a rich and happy life."

"S-So…" Gohan stammered, staring across at the woman anxiously, "You don't know who I'm going to end up with in the end?"

"That… I'm afraid is something you're going to have to find out for yourself. Though we Gods do have the ability to travel through and alter time and space, tempering with it is expressly forbidden amongst our kind," Aphrodite answered with a warm gaze. "Nothing is set in stone in this world, especially love. The act of expressing affection and fondness for one another can take many forms and was never meant to be tied down… bound inside of a cage. It was meant to be free and shared amongst all of creation. The bigger your heart is, the more love you can give and receive from others." She then reached up and placed her hand over chest, gently clenching her fingers around her dress. "My predecessor taught me that before she passed away… and I've been doing right by those words for the past eighty million years."

Hearing this caused a smile to tug across the young Saiyan's face, as he then gazed across at the woman kindly. "And you decided to play matchmaker with it, am I right?" His question drew a giggle from the goddess, which had him shake his head. "Isn't that a blatant misuse of your powers?"

Aphrodite winked at him, "Didn't I tell you… I have nothing to do with that. Though I do like to tease the idea a little bit every now and then… and make things a little bit more challenging for the people." Taking the scroll and slipping it into the belt in her dress, the blonde woman breathed a sigh and cupped her hands behind her promptly. "Well. I'd better be off. I hope you put what you learned today to good use." She then turned around and was about to step out of the cubicle. However, just before she could leave, the goddess looked over her shoulder and grinned. "Oh yes, and here's a little something you may want to consider… frolicking is always fun, especially in the bedroom. It's something I hear you Saiyans are exceptionally good at. Though the experience is always a blast amongst couples, it gets really wild when a few others you like are involved. In your case, I would strongly recommend inviting these other young ladies who are fond of you along to share the reward," she said while pointing down at the scroll. Taking note of the teen's stumped reaction, the blonde woman then giggled and looked away. "Break a leg." She then vanished in a flash of pink smoke.

Staring at the space the goddess once stood, a full minute of silence passed for Gohan in which absolutely nothing happened. Hearing very little but the dripping of a faucet at the other end of the room, it took a certain amount of time and a lot of brain power before the boy's mind was finally made up. Once his processing was complete, the teen groaned and placed a hand against his temple, which he could feel was literally throbbing through the skin.

At least that's what it seemed like to him.

"Was I dreaming?" Gohan then pinched himself to check… an act which quickly had him yelp.

"Nope. I wasn't." He literally just had a house call from the Goddess of Love Aphrodite.

His life was just getting weirder and weirder by the day.

And of course there was the stuff that she had to say following her arrival.

In her wake, the mystical woman had imparted onto the young man genuine information he'd been made aware of by the Saiyan Prince. But now, thanks to her contribution to the subject, Gohan knew right then that what he previously thought was a possibility was now a fact. He'd attracted the attention of a whole bunch of girls, which he knew without question had the potential to disrupt the current relationships he'd already established with them.

Since Videl was his girlfriend now, this made his position in the center all the more worrisome.

How was he going to deal with it? Would he approach each of the girls who liked him to confirm for himself their feelings while simultaneously telling them he was off the market? Doing that would undoubtedly upset the girls and, for all intents and purposes, potentially destroy the bonds they'd established as friends, leading them down a road of loneliness and heartbreak. If anything, he wanted to try and preserve the current status quo and at the same time avoid traveling down that route as much as he could. That's what his inner conscience was telling him to do. However, if he left this alone, not only would it definitely cause more friction to build, but he doubted a smooth comeback from sudden fallout would be possible. No matter which way he looked, his choices were small, problematic and rampant with consequences.

Counting his cards, he knew right away that trying to maintain the current state of the affairs was not a viable option.

However, there was one other alternative he'd recently been led into considering that was negotiable. Aphrodite suggested to him to form what could only be described as an alliance… a universal truce; to involve all of the other girls in his relationship with Videl to avoid a prolonged and hurtful conflict. It was a fantasy bet for sure, but after realizing how far down the line he'd already come, he now had this gut feeling that this supposedly untouchable dream he was imagining had somehow fallen within his reach.

His Saiyan genetics were burning… begging for him to try and pursue it, proving to the young warrior that the fierce alien race from Vegeta was indeed greedy by nature. They lived in sin and lived by the rules of sin. It was an irrefutable truth.

Would it be possible for him to talk this out with the girls and come to some sort of an arrangement with them? Was an agreement between them actually possible? On one hand all Gohan wanted to do was keep the peace and hold onto the ones he treasured most. This was the side of him choosing the selfless course of action. But on the other hand, a part of him wanted to act selfishly and to act on his impulses. It was an inner conflict that caused the boy's fists to clench and his brow to furrow tightly.

In a matter of moments, Gohan found his head was being filled with less than appropriate thoughts once again. This time though, they were not only coming to him in great quantity but were also far more pronounced. He imagined himself with Videl and Erasa in positions that were nowhere near decent, with a chorus of pleasure-filled moans echoing all around him as they ground up against his body in tandem. Lime and Zangya were there too, advancing on him with no clothing at all and their hungry eyes fixated solely upon his motionless form.

These images flashed through his head like a strobe, causing a deep shade of scarlet to light up his face that had the demi-Saiyan growl and slap a hand over his eyes. Running his palm down his façade, he then banged his fist against the wall next to him and glared down at the ground, noticing out of the corner of his eye that his other part had decided to react on account of his thoughts.

"What am I going to do?" he thought.

All of a sudden, Sharpener's voice echoed into the room.

"Hey, Gohan. We're heading down to the cafeteria to grab some coconut bread. You want to join us?" the jock asked as he ambled past the showers and halted just outside of the demi-Saiyan's cubicle. "What's taking you so lo-" He then stopped when he saw the spiky haired male and almost instantly looked away. "Ah, geez, man! What the hell are you doing standing there like that? Put it away!"

Snapping out of his trance, Gohan then realized that he was still naked and hastily reached for his towel. Wrapping it around him, the spiky haired young warrior grunted and looked across at his classmate apologetically, "Sorry, Sharpener. I must have zoned out for a second."

The blonde stared back at him with a sour look. "It's bad enough that you're in such perfect shape. What? Are you trying to make the rest of us guys look bad?"

"Not intentionally, no," Gohan replied with a sheepish grin, stepping out of the box while rubbing the back of his head.

Unconvinced by his response, the sportsman crossed his arms and stared at the Saiyan with a thoughtful expression in play. "What exactly were you doing in here anyway?"

Straightening up and placing his hands on his hips, the Saiyan chuckled, "You wouldn't believe me even if I told you."
Sensing a challenge, the jock smiled, "Try me."

Working out a summary in his head, Gohan took a deep breath and nodded. "Alright then. While I was taking a shower, Aphrodite, the Goddess of Love, popped into my cubicle, we wrestled for a little bit, had a chat, then she told me about the universal law of love, the number of girls who are in love with me, and suggested I invite them all out for a cup of coffee." He then finished by giving the teen an unflinching stare.

"..."

"..."

"..."

Several moments of silence passed in which the two boys did nothing but stare at one another. Once an appropriate amount of seconds had finally chugged by, an amused grin spread across Sharpener's lips before he barked out a laugh. He then clapped the muscular boy in the shoulder, earning nothing but the same deadpan stare from him as a result.

"Ha! That's a good one. Goddess of Love? Oh man, I'm writing that one down," the jock laughed, turning around and beginning to walk out. "Come on, lover boy. We're gonna miss the bell for lunch."

Staring after the blonde, Gohan smiled and shook his head. "I knew he wouldn't believe me."

Deciding to put a pin in his thoughts for the time being due to his stomach begging him to get some food, the demi-Saiyan adjusted his towel and followed the man out.

As he left the showers far behind, what Gohan didn't realize was that his life, from that point onwards, was about to get a whole lot more exciting…

(TO BE CONTINUED)

Character Biographies: (Since a few people have asked, I will now be periodically providing biographies for the OC characters that have shown up in my story)

Name: Kana

Race: Seirei

Gender: Female

Occupation: Mercenary/Inquisitor

Hair color: Glowing orange

Type: Light user

Age: Approximately 118

Home planet: Unknown

History: A humanoid alien recognized for her trademark glowing hair, Kana is a member of an ancient and powerful race of aliens called the Seirei. Preferring to keep mostly to themselves and very hard to come across outside of their home planet, her people originate from a world close to the centre of the universe, and are one of the few alien races that existed around the time the cosmos came into existence. Possessing an incredibly strong life force, allowing them to live for hundreds to thousands of years without ever growing old, the people of Seirei have incredibly advanced technology and are born with the ability to manipulate light, allowing them to perform a variety of unique techniques. A freelancer and a wanderer, Kana is a part-time member of the Planet Trade Organization, the same group that Frieza and his family were a part of, and is assigned to the planet preservation branch. She's charged with the inquisition and acquisition of rare and valuable planets, in which her primary job is to determine whether or not the security of a world and its inhabitants were in good hands. This inevitably leads her to earth, in which she battles Gohan to the right to planet earth.

Unlike all of the other villains the Z-fighters have encountered in the past, Kana isn't inherently evil or cruel. In fact, she is a very kind, respectful and adventurous alien, with a strong desire to learn, see and experience new things. However, despite having visited multiple worlds in the past, she is incredibly direct and bold in her approaches, always sticking to a set system of codes and practices. This gives her a form of tunnel vision, which causes her to make mistakes. She also relies heavily on computers for a bulk of her information. Vegeta describes her as being an airhead. Oftentimes, she is unaware of a lot of the cultures of the worlds she visits, always wanders off without an escort, and is prone to jumping the gun without warning.

Since members of her race are very particular about their life partners, after their battle, Kana immediately selects Gohan to be her mate. Even though they are worlds apart, they still remain in close contact with one another and, as a result, her fondness towards the hybrid has grown considerably.

OOO

Name: Paprika
Race: Makyan
Gender: Female
Occupation: None
Hair color: White
Type: Brawler
Age: 17
Home Planet: Makyo Star

History: A member of the Makyan Race and daughter of Garlic Junior, Paprika comes to earth looking to take revenge on the one who blew up her home planet. Having been off world at the time of its destruction, she'd spent five years training to defeat and humiliate the one who destroyed her home and 'killed' her father.

A strong fighter from her race with a very cold personality and preferring to keep to herself most of the time, Paprika draws a lot of her power from the remains of her planet, which she'd embedded in her body in the form of crystals, to increase her strength and allow her to undergo their race's transformation to Super Makyan. It also provides her with a form of regeneration, making killing her an incredibly difficult task.

Though she still intends to defeat Gohan in battle, despite being severely outclassed, her time spent hanging around the members of the Son family has allowed her to open up a little more and find a small sense of peace.
In a scene very reminiscent of the one he remembered being in a couple of weeks ago, Gohan breathed a heavenly sigh of relief as he felt his battle worn body sink further into the hot water of the barrel. With steam wafting around him like flames licking at his skin, the young man literally felt all the pings and pains of his muscles fade away as the boiling water washed against his flesh. Having added enough wood to last for up to fifteen minutes, the Saiyan had laid the groundwork for a long and enjoyable bath.

Of course, since it was the middle of the school week and it was early in the morning, he unfortunately didn't have time to stew for very long. Every minute that passed drew closer and closer to the next slot in his timetable, which meant that he couldn't stay in here for very long. But that didn't mean he couldn't enjoy it while he had the chance.

"I love the smell of herbs and hot water in the morning," Gohan whispered, reaching up to grab the towel folded atop his head. Upon peeling it away, he then dunked it in the water and massaged it against his cheek. A pleasant smile remained on his face when he eventually returned the towel to his crown. "The only thing that's missing from this picture is a sauna. Maybe I can go see Bulma about getting one for half-price later this week."

Being a close friend of the family, he was positive that he would be able to strike up a bargain with the president of the largest and most well-known company on the planet. Given their track record and history of working together, it wouldn't surprise him in the least if the woman lent him a temporary appliance to use at home for free.

In the midst of his meditation, the demi-Saiyan then looked up towards the sky in thought. "I wonder if I can get a portable hot spring as well."

"If it's anything like this then I say go for it," a new voice suddenly spoke up, drawing Gohan's gaze to the other side of the barrel to see the glowing haired, curvaceous form of Kana smiling back at him. Beaming from ear to ear as the steam of the hot water enveloped her, the space explorer then tilted her head and beamed across at her half-Saiyan crush, "Like with all physical activities, relaxation is an important if not vital part of the healing process. You'd be doing yourself a big favor by acquiring an appropriate facility to assist you in those needs."

"Oh, Hey there, Kana," Gohan exclaimed, at the same time smiling cheerfully at his friend from another galaxy. "Do you really think it's a good idea?"

The glowing alien shrugged, "From a conservative point of view, purchasing such equipment may initially seem like a big financial risk. But I'm positive that through careful planning, consideration, and monetary usage of said application over a period of a few months, the long term benefits greatly outweigh the short term expenditures."
Nodding his head in understanding, the boy then closed his eyes and rested his head against the edge of the tub. "You make a solid point. I'll talk it up with the family afterwards and see what they think about it. Thanks."

Kana giggled, "No problem. Always glad to help."

"…"

"…"

It was only a few seconds later that the half-Saiyan finally realized that the orange haired Seirei was soaking in the barrel with him and, eyes widening in shock, the teen recoiled in horror. "GAAAAAAAAH! KANA! W-What… What the heck are you doing in here?!!" The teen attempted to back up. But due to the confined space of the drum, the best the young warrior could do was stand up and throw his arms out. That didn't stop his face from turning red as well.

Kana, appearing completely oblivious of her actions, smiled back at the boy as the bubbles of the bath massaged her naked skin. "What does it look like? I'm taking a bath."

Gritting his teeth, the half-blooded adult shook his head. "That's beside the point! Can't you see I'm using it right now?"

"So? There's plenty of room for the two of us. What's the harm in sharing a household appliance with my life partner?"

"Life pa-… you still think I'm-?!"

"Of course. It's only customary that both mates partake in the same activity as one another in order to strengthen the bond between them," Kana replied, sitting up from the side of the drum and beginning to wade her way over to where Gohan was standing. The closer she got, the more alarmed the teen appeared and the more he attempted to lean away. "Do you not approve?"

"Well… I… I…" Just before he could form some sort of coherent rebuttal, the young Saiyan then heard someone clearing their throat nearby and turned to see who it was. When his eyes landed on the grass next to the bath, his face literally paled. "V-Videl?"

The tomboy, having shown up out of nowhere, was currently standing next to the makeshift tub with her arms crossed and adorned in her usual oversized pink and white T-shirts and spandex shorts. From the look on her face, the boy could tell she appeared irritated and was now directing all of that ire towards him. "And what exactly is going on here?" the girl asked, her eyes sharpening when she looked between the two warriors in front of her.

Swallowing nervously, Gohan hastily turned around and waved his hands in front of him frantically. "I… I can explain everything. You see… I was just sitting out here trying to relax after a long morning of training and then…well…” He then threw a few nervous glances over his shoulder towards the Seirei, who was still smiling right back at him from where she was floating. "Look, this is all just a big misunderstanding…"

"Oh, it's a big misunderstanding alright," the crime fighter snapped while tapping her finger against her bicep. Judging from her current expression, Videl was displaying all the signs of a person on the verge of exploding. Knowing what was to come, Gohan braced himself for the inevitable. "This has gone on long enough! How can you be sharing a bath with another girl…” Then, just when it appeared she was about to break out into a tirade of heated words, the fury once filling the girl's face quickly vanished and was shortly replaced by one of mischief and excitement, "And not invite me along with you."

At that, Gohan's terrified expression quickly became one of bewilderment. "Uhh… what?"

With a playful giggle, Videl suddenly reached down and pulled both her t-shirts up over her head, leaving her standing in front of the barrel in nothing but her sports bra and shorts. "Geez. You're so inconsiderate, Gohan-kun. Did you honestly think that I was just going to stand by quietly and let the two of you have all the fun?" Before the demi-Saiyan could even begin to respond, the girl suddenly unclipped her bra and tossed it aside, causing his face to light up like a bulb. Upon seeing shock fill the boy's face, the blushing girl then gripped the waistband of her shorts and pulled both them and her underwear down in the most sensual way imaginable. When she finally kicked the last of her articles off of her feet, the incredibly fit and curvaceous girl was left standing out in the open in all her naked glory.

The sight of his girlfriend literally baring it all without even a moment's hesitation nearly had Gohan black out as a spurt of blood shot out of his nostril. He then clamped a hand over his orifice to stop the flow and proceeded to watch in utter disbelief as the short haired female seductively ambled her way over to the drum and placed her hands atop its rim. Videl then hoisted herself up, leaning forward so that her face was literally right in front of her boyfriend's, putting her in a position that allowed him to see her entire body from the most alluring pose imaginable.

The tone of her stomach, the perfectly round shape of her breasts swaying before him, and the curves making up her backside and legs, were all accentuated from her catlike stance.

A wicked look framed her face as the sapphire eyed temptress motioned forward and grinned at her baffled crush. "I want you, Gohan-kun. Let's do it together, right here… right now…"

"D-D-Do it?" Backing up under the leer of his surprisingly bold girlfriend, the demi-Saiyan then froze when he felt a pair of arms wrap around his neck and two firm yet plush 'pillows' press into his back. The chin resting into the crook of his neck followed by a sultry giggle filling his ears then had the spiky haired male glance fearfully to his left to see Kana smiling right back at him.

"There's no need to be shy," the Seirei whispered seductively as she blew on his ear, causing a pleasurable shiver to run up his spine. "All three of us can have our first times together. It'll be fun…"

"B-But Kana-?"

Grinning, the alien girl leaned in closer, an act that caused her generously large mounds to squish further into his muscular back. "I'm tired of waiting, Gohan-kun. I want you to give it to me."

Placing a hand against his chest, she then slowly ran it down his front. Moaning when her palm slid over his rock hard abs, she started venturing lower and lower, arriving at a place that had the teen's hair bristle and the woman lick her lips. "Let's procreate and make a strong, healthy child together…"

Without warning, the demi-Saiyan then felt another set of arms wrap around him from the other side. Looking ahead, he saw Videl pull her body towards him and press her ample chest firmly into his. The feeling of two sets of breasts sandwiching him from both sides caused Gohan's face to light up red and his body to tremble nervously.

Sly grin still in play, the human teenager spoke in the sulriest voice the Saiyan had ever heard from her, "I'm going to be your first, right Gohan? You'll have me and then you'll have her?" She leaned in closer, "Then both of us together?"
"I… I…"

"I can't take it anymore, Gohan-kun," Kana spoke up again, her voice laced with need as her cheeks flushed red. "Please… I need you…"

"I want you…"

"Gohan-kun…"

"Gohan."

Unable to take it anymore, Gohan let out a cry of fright and vanished in a golden flash, leaving the two girls floating in the barrel as he speedily grabbed his towel from the floor and rushed towards the door of his family home. Without even bothering to look back, the teen wrapped the cloth around his waist, barged into the house, and barreled his way into his room.

Shutting the door behind him, the flushed and exhausted boy leaned up against the barrier and panted heavily for breath. Running a hand through his still wet hair, he allowed for a few moments to get the wind back into his lungs and quiet his thundering heart rate before, with a slight stumble, he began to stagger his way over to his cupboard.

"W-What the heck was that all about?" Both his girlfriend and his best friend from out of town were acting so strangely; in a way he'd never seen them act before.

They had quite literally been on top of him and, not only were they both naked, but neither of them seemed to care in the least that all three of them were sharing the same bath together. What's more, the two girls had been making moves on him and saying stuff that sounded like both of them were in heat or something.

Unable to comprehend what was going on and how things spiraled out of control the way they did, the boy figured he should suit up and get the hell out of there before the pair of vixens decided to come chasing after him.

The last thing he wanted to do right now was get tangled up in a situation he had no experience in only an hour before the start of school. Though he didn't have any problems with exploring that kind of area with the two girls under more appropriate circumstances, especially with his girlfriend, the fact that both of them were coming on to him so strongly and quite literally from out of nowhere scared the living daylights out of him. He had to get some distance and figure this thing out before jumping into anything he was possibly going to regret sometime in the future.

So, throwing open the doors to his closet and peering inside, the teen began rummaging through his gear so that he could get dressed and head off to Kami's Lookout for some counseling. He was just about to grab his pants from the line too when, all of a sudden, another familiar voice suddenly filled the room.

"What are you doing, Gohan?" The question caused the teen to stiffen in surprise. Upon which the demi-Saiyan then spun around to see none other than Lime, wearing a red checkered, button up shirt, jean shorts, and her hair wrapped up into a ponytail, standing by the door with a warm smile pulled across her face.

Unable to explain why he didn't sense her presence until now, the demi-Saiyan gave a confused blink and straightened his posture, "L-Lime?"

The instant his eyes fell upon her, the girl shut the bedroom door behind her and leant up against it, a mischievous grin forming on her lips. "Oh dear. Has Gohan-kun been a bad boy? Did something happen out there on the front lawn?"

Not sure where this was going, the spiky haired boy faced her and, scratching the back of his head anxiously, glanced away in thought. "W-Well... I'm not exactly sure, to be honest. Things were moving so fast that I didn't know what I was supposed to do. It was so weird." He then pointed over the girl's shoulder towards his door. "Did you see Videl and Kana while you were coming in? I think something might be wrong with them."

He meant that sincerely. His concern for his friends greatly outweighed any other need and desire. That was the kind of person that he was.

Giggling at the innocent question, the brown haired girl stood off of the door and began strolling towards the boy with an accentuated sway in her hips. "Oh, I wouldn't be worrying too much about them," the teen said while suddenly reaching up and removing her hair tie, allowing her long brown locks to flow freely down her shoulders. "To be honest, I'd rather you be more worried about me."

At first Gohan was confused by her words and her actions. But then, as she drew closer, the Saiyan's eyes widened in shock when he saw the girl suddenly undo the buttons of her shirt and open it up, revealing she wasn't wearing anything underneath.

The sight of her shirt being removed from her shoulders and her ample bosom bouncing free from its confines had the poor boy back right up into his cupboard when his childhood friend closed the last two feet of distance between them. The moment she came within range, Lime stopped directly in front of the boy and boldly pressed her chest into his stomach, pinning him to the closet door. As soon as she stopped, she placed her delicate hands against his sides and began running them up his firm torso.

The Saiyan literally trembled under her touch. "L-Lime? What's... what's gotten into you?"

A lustful smile formed across the girl's face as she ran her fingers over his rock hard abs before running them up his arms. "Why, isn't it obvious, Gohan? It's you." Her answer causing the teen to blanch, she then proceeded to elaborate on her words as a fond look fixated upon his startled expression. "All this time... you and I have been nothing more than the best of friends, always smiling and laughing together, hanging out and having a good time. But then... after all these years, my feelings for you changed... and all of a sudden... I found that I couldn't stop thinking about you." She then moaned slightly as she ran her hands down his chest and began marveling his toned upper body. The feeling of his warm skin prompted her to push her bare body into his and grind her clothed pelvis against his thigh. "You're so hot... I can't hold myself back anymore. I want you, Gohan. I want all of you." After admiring his build, she then looked up into his charcoal eyes and smiled. "I want to be your girlfriend, just like Videl... and I wouldn't mind sharing with her one bit... as long as I get to have a piece of you."

Her sultry words had the teen gulp and laugh nervously under her half-lidded stare. "W-What do you mean a piece of me?" His body was so worked up right now he could barely even think straight anymore, let alone comprehend simple lines of dialogue.

Grinning lecherously, the girl then looked down towards his hips. It was then the boy noticed the problem for him and, after spotting the tent formed in his towel, freaked out and tried to hide it. But with the girl pushing him further into the closet, the young Saiyan found himself incapable of performing any evasive tasks as the girl suddenly gripped his wrists and, guiding his hands down her hourglass waist, slipped them into her shorts and maneuvered them to her backside.

When she felt his hot palms pressing against her firm buttocks, the girl groaned and pushed her body further against his. "I've been a bad girl, Gohan. Please… punish me…"

Feeling another nosebleed coming on as his face got even hotter, the demi-Saiyan tried to fight off the impulse to respond. But with every second that ticked by of feeling the girl's ample chest and hips grinding against his, that inner desire was becoming harder and harder to resist.

Lime, cheeks red and breathing coming out in hot, heavy pants, leaned up even further and closed in one his lips. "I love you… Gohan…"

She was only millimeters away from her goal and was about to move in for the kill. That was until Gohan suddenly felt the back of his closet disappear and his body fell through the wall of clothing. With a startled yelp, the half-Saiyan tumbled out the other side and fell flat on his ass, an event that had him cringe painfully and shake his head.

By the time he looked up, he suddenly found himself sitting in one of Orange Star High's many hallways, surrounded by lockers and doors on all sides, dressed in his usual outfit.

Blinking in confusion at his location and his state of dress, the startled teenager hurriedly stood up and looked around wildly. Reaching out with his senses, he attempted to find out where he was and figure out exactly what was happening to him, until he heard a series of distinct voices echoing around him.

"Gohan…"

"Gohan…"

"Gohan-kun…"

The moment he heard his name reverberating throughout the hallway, he knew right then and there that this wasn't a natural part of the setting. His entire situation was beginning to transform into a set from a cheap horror film and the ghosts that were so ingeniously incised into the main storyline were coming after him with a vengeance. What's more, the disembodied female vocals knew who he was by name and he had a distinct feeling he knew who each of them were. The fact that he could literally feel them breathing down his neck put him on edge.

Spinning around, the young fighter then started a brisk walk down the corridor, looking around nervously for an attack that was sure to come from a blind spot. He was right on the mark on that observation too.

While he was in the process of cautiously moving down the corridor and being bombarded from all sides by the collection of female whispers bouncing off of the walls, the teenager was suddenly grabbed by the arm and yanked into one of the adjacent rooms.

In the blink of an eye, Gohan found himself surrounded by darkness with his back pushed up against the wall. Dazed and confused, he then attempted to see through the blackness of his environment the identity of the person who'd grabbed him. When the light above him eventually switched on, the baffled hero then received one hell of a shock when he saw Erasa standing in front of him and pinning him against the wall. With her arms placed firmly on either side of his person and literally boxing him in, the young Saiyan also noticed that they were in the janitor's closet and surrounded by mops and brooms. This however turned out to be the least of his problems, as after doing a quick sweep of the cleaning equipment, he focused his nervous gaze upon his attacker.

"Erasa? What are y-?" His startled question was quickly silenced when the girl placed a finger to his lips and shushed him.
Grinning mischievously, the blonde haired girl, dressed in her usual green tube top and tight jeans, fixed all of her attention upon the stunned male. "Surprise." She then beamed at the demi-Saiyan when he gulped and straightened his back. "Hope I didn't scare you too much. I've been waiting for you to come by here."

"Huh?" the part-time crime fighter murmured, "Why?"

"Easy. I wanted to be alone with you... away from everybody else. I wanted a place where I would be able to talk to you in private and we wouldn't be interrupted," the chirpy girl answered, her eyes shimmering as she gazed up at the man backed up against the wall. "It's nice and cozy in here, don't you think?"

"Y-Yeah... I guess..."

"Nobody will be barging in here anytime soon... and I doubt any of our friends will be able to find us so easily. I think that gives us plenty of time to chill and hang out," Erasa continued, her expression turning sly as she regarded the boy with interest and intent, "Especially for what I have planned for us."

Not knowing what to say, Gohan smiled worriedly. "And what exactly is that?"

Continuing to hold her position, the blonde haired girl eased in a little bit closer and brought her hands down to his chest. Running them over his shirt, she could feel toned muscles jumping underneath her touch. It was a feeling that brought an excited gleam to her eye. "You may not know this yet, but... I really like you a lot, Gohan-kun. I've just been... too afraid to say anything because I was worried about getting between you and Videl. She's my best friend and... and so are you... and I didn't want to do anything that could risk ruining your relationship." She then smiled as she got even closer, sliding her leg in between his as her nose edged towards his. "But that doesn't matter anymore. My heart is screaming at me, begging for me to come to you... to be with you. I love you, Gohan... I've loved you for a long... long time..."

Blinking in shock, the demi-Saiyan's mouth opened and closed a few times, but no words came out. Upon which his back then straightened up and he regarded the young girl with an uneasy air and a warm look in his eye, "Erasa..."

Smiling, the girl's cheeks then heated up as she moved in ever so slightly. Her knee brushing up against his inner thigh as his leg rode up on the juncture between hers, she then took a deep breath and moved in so close that her breasts, strained tight against her top, pressed up against his chest. When her hands moved down his shirt, she then beamed up at him, "Your heart is racing, Gohan. I can feel it beating against your chest."

"Well... that's just because... I..." Not knowing how to finish his sentence, the boy mumbled out until no further words could be spoken.

A giggle shortly followed his nervous response, "That's okay. My heart is racing too... and my body feels so hot. Here... see for yourself." Grabbing one of his hands, she then led it up to her chest and slid it under his top, causing the boy to blush to the roots of his hair. When she felt the Saiyan squeeze her breast, the girl groaned and leaned in further. "I... I can't take it anymore... waiting on the sidelines." The girl then rubbed up against him, moaning even more as she wrapped her arms around his neck. "I want you, Gohan... I want you so bad." She then grinned when she ground her hips against his, "And I can tell... you want me too."

Hair standing more on end, Gohan freaked out when Erasa's lips drew closer and closer to his, her eyes glimmering with desire and excitement. When she came within two inches of him, to the point where their breaths were mingling with each other, the demi-Saiyan was unable to do anything as the girl quickly edged away the last few centimeters between them.

"Take me… Gohan… I'm yours."

Shutting his eyes tightly, the young fighter braced himself for the inevitable. However, after several seconds of waiting and his lips feeling nothing, the boy then opened his lids and looked down in confusion. Much to his shock, he found he'd once again been transported to another place, only this time it was less familiar.

He was standing in an open, barren wasteland on a planet far out of reach of earth's space. His feet digging into a surface equivalent to the moon's, with millions of stars twinkling around him, the teen circled a few times in order to assess exactly where he was. His eyes panning over dozens of craters and hills on the horizon, Gohan then stopped and took a glance at his outfit. Upon plucking at his top, he quickly saw that he was adorned in his orange and blue gi, and that he was all decked out and ready for a fight.

Puzzled, he then set his eyes on a distance ridge and prepared to explore the uncharted wilderness. It was just as he was prepping himself for a quick flight that he caught the sight of a shadow moving in his peripherals; one that had him spin around in alarm. The moment he dropped into a fighting stance, the force of a thousand angry bulls suddenly crashed into his chest and knocked him to the ground, prompting him to look up and see what'd hit him.

He then swallowed his tongue when he saw the familiar red-haired and red furred form of the fox deity Set glaring back down at him. Wearing the same skirt and top she'd fought him in all those weeks ago, the sight of the woman's blood red eyes and fierce scowl had the boy grit his teeth in battle readiness. "You?!"

Her own eyes locked firmly upon the boy's, the goddess smirked. "I have you now, Gohan. There is no escape." Her tail waving aggressively behind her, the demi-Saiyan's immediate thought was that she was going to attack him and rip his throat out with her teeth. He readied himself for that inevitability, his fists clenching tightly in the sand and his energy beginning to gather in the pit of his stomach. "Your heart is mine…"

Gohan locked his jaw and prepared to land the first blow. But just as the two warriors were glaring daggers at one another, he suddenly saw his opponent's expression change and a sly smile slowly form across her lips.

"And so is your body."

The young warrior blinked. "Huh?" It was then he noticed another unexpected change in the scenery; the starry sky quickly being replaced by the walls of his bedroom and the surface he was currently laying on being switched to the blanket of his bed. "Huh?!" Another look around and Gohan then saw, much to his utter shock, that not only was he naked, but so was the vixen pinning him to the bed, her curvaceous figure hovering above him for his uncensored viewing pleasure. "HUH?!"

Not caring that she was now in the nude, the predatory goddess slowly leaned in till her toned body rubbed against that of the Saiyan's. The fur covering her chest and stomach brushed against his skin, causing a pleasurable chill to run up the teen's body.

Giving a moan of excitement, Set smiled down at the young hero seductively. "Make me yours, Gohan-kun. Ravage me…"
Eyes widened in shock, the demi-Saiyan shook his head, unable to believe what was happening to him as he felt the woman's breasts press against his pectorals. He shut his eyes and thought to himself that what he was seeing wasn't real. But when he opened them again moments later, he found that Set was now sharing the space above him with Videl, both of whom were naked and leering down at him like a pair of hungry lionesses ready to pounce.

One last look around and Gohan saw that Lime, Erasa and Kana were also on the bed, and all three of them were surrounding the boy and looking down at him with lust burning in their eyes. It was a sight that had the boy's stomach quiver. He was fashioned to the bed, held down by an unseen force and unable to move. This made him easy prey for the collection of beautiful women now moving in on him.

Their mischievous smiles filled his view as they all moved forward, converging on him like a pack of hungry carnivores. With him pinned to the bed by his girlfriend, despite all of his otherworldly strength, there was nothing he could do to get away. They had him.

"Gohan." They all whispered at once, their voices dripping with want and desire. It was a sound that caused Gohan's face to light up red and his body to freeze up.

Then, all at once, they swooped in and…

OOO

(Present – Night time)

Eyes widening in shock, Gohan's body suddenly leapt from his pillow with a yell of fright, causing his blanket to fly off of him and land on his waist. Sitting there as straight as a board, the boy then proceeded to stare through the cold darkness of his room, panting heavily with sweat trickling down his body. His charcoal eyes darted around in paranoia, looking through a hazy vision for the half a dozen women he thought had had him trapped and lying at their mercy. However, after several looks around his empty room and seeing nothing but his familiar cupboard, his familiar desk, and his school gear lying next to said desk, the frazzled teenager's stiffened body slowly relaxed as his brain finally came full circle.

Taking several deep gulps of air, the Saiyan's heart rate returned to normal and the boy unclenched his fists, which he'd formed in the sheets beneath him. Breathing in through his nose and out through his mouth calmed his nerves enough to enable Gohan to reach up and run a hand over his damp face.

"A dream… it was all a dream…" he whispered over and over again, unable to shake the images that'd been allowed to play in his mind like they were the real deal.

It wasn't a nightmare. Far from it. However, the onslaught of events that had taken place across the landscape of his dream had been so sudden and so intense that the boy had no idea how to respond to it. Everything that had happened over the course of that day just came out of nowhere and put him in the spotlight, confusing him and rattling him to his very core.

The whole situation involving all of the women in his life had had a profound effect on his psyche, his emotions, and his mentality.

His body had also suffered as a result of the experience, a sensation that he quickly acknowledged when he lifted the covers of his bed and saw that his friend was up and standing at attention. Shaking his head, the demi-Saiyan lowered his blanket and dropped his shoulders, exhaling a sigh of disappointment as he concluded the meaning behind his unconscious adventure.
Videl was no longer the only one dominating his dreams anymore. She had at one stage, but now, thanks to a series of extenuating circumstances, his mind was now being invaded by a collection of other females, most of whom he’d formed powerful attachments with. His fantasies, which were once tame, had now taken on a whole new meaning of perversion and changed his default setting from innocent to full-blown hormonal male teenager.

"I guess nothing is sacred anymore," Gohan thought in a disgruntled tone of voice as he stared down at the blanket now barely covering his hips. With his naked upper body exposed to the nightly air, the teen then looked down at his right hand and clenched it into a fist a few times, showing just how riled up he actually was. "I've become just like any other ordinary guy." Whether he should be happy about this or not he would reserve judgment on later.

Whatever the case was, the half-blooded warrior knew he had to put a dampener on these erotic dreams of his. If he was unable to keep them under control and suppress his body's natural impulses, then he was certain he would be seeing a lot of trouble in the future, namely in the area concerning his anatomy acting up on its own accord.

A couple hours of meditation under a waterfall should do the trick and get his garbled assortment of fantasies back on track.

"At least I know I'm not dreaming anymore," Gohan murmured, taking a moment to look on the bright side of not being chased across the galaxy by a swath of girls out for his genes anymore.

Finally, he was safe.

But just as he was getting comfortable with the idea that he'd escaped the claws of his dreams, the demi-Saiyan then heard the door to his bedroom open up and, looking over to his left, he saw the blue-skinned form of Zangya step into view. Dressed in a set of revealing purple lingerie that exposed her toned stomach and accentuated a great deal of her delicious cleavage, with her soft, curly orange hair all a mess, the tired looking Hera scratched her head and glared across at her training partner, whom she could see was now sitting up in his bed and gawking in her direction.

Leaning up against the frame in an inadvertently alluring pose, the woman scowled, "What's with all the screaming, Gohan? It's two in the friggin morning. Some people in this house are trying to sleep."

"..."

"..."

"..."

At first there was nothing but silence, as Zangya's firm scowl set upon the stunned and bewildered face of her half-Saiyan counterpart. But then, after several moments of baffled gaping, the woman then saw the teen's face flash bright red, his nose start to bleed, and then, after swaying on the spot a couple of times, collapsed into his bed like a sack of potatoes.

Surprised at the teen's sudden cave in, the concerned Hera tiptoed forward. "Uhh… Gohan?"
Moving over to the side of his bed, she then looked down at his sprawled out form to see the vacant look on his face and the blood trickling out of his nostril. "Gohan? Hey. Are you alright? Gohan? Gohan?"

Responding to her words as best as he could, all the unconscious demi-Saiyan could do was mumble a few incomprehensible lines of dialogue, which quickly prompted Zangya to sigh, smile, and shake her head at the out cold hero of earth lying underneath the covers.

"Geez. What a lug."

Not the best look she remembered seeing on him, but at least he was asleep now.

(TO BE CONTINUED)

Author's Note: lol

Character Biographies:

Name: Sentinel

Race: Android

Gender: Male

Occupation: N/A

Hair Color: N/A

Type: Mobile weapon house/Nano Tech user

Age: 6

Home Planet: Earth

History: In an effort to try and rebuild Android 16 after his unfortunate end at the hands of Cell, Bulma works tirelessly day and night to reconstruct the automaton from the files she was able to download from the original during his repairs. When she is unable to recreate the consciousness the original Android 16 possessed that gave him his humanity, she leaves the office exhausted and spent. One night, a file from the copy of Android 16's memories is opened up and a dormant A.I starts absorbing files from the main computer at an alarming rate. Upon gaining sentience, it forcefully uploads itself into the unfinished body on the lab's table and, after seizing control over it, continues to rebuild itself. The A.I turns out to be the original programming Doctor Gero intended to install into Android 16 in his desire to kill Goku and conquer the world, before being switched out for the kind A.I that the Z-fighters came to associate with.

A complete opposite of the original Android 16, Sentinel is essentially the manifestation of all the malice and hatred Doctor Gero poured into his creations. Cold, calculating, ruthless, and wanting nothing more than to destroy and conquer everything, the android murders Doctor Briefs and attacks his family. It's only thanks to Vegeta's efforts that prevent the robot from going on a murderous rampage. However, the android manages to survive the encounter, and is now in hiding, plotting his next move.

OOO

Name: Zeru

Race: Aster

Gender: N/A

Occupation: N/A
Hair color: N/A

Type: Energy shields, beams, shock waves

Age: Over 120,000,000

Home Plant: None

History: Once referred to as the vessel of destruction, Zeru is an alien descended from an ancient race of giant creatures called Asters, which inhabited the furthest corners of the universe millions of years before the first Kais came into existence. Known for wandering between planets and galaxies, Asters were massive asteroid-sized animals that fed on the life energy of planets, leaving behind nothing but death and decay wherever they went. The people of the planet Sariel called this particular entity Zeru; which translates to 'Planet Eater' or 'Wandering Death' in their language, and was regarded by many as a God. But in truth, it's actually a veracious parasite, sucking entire planets dry of their nutrients and turning them into empty, lifeless husks. Once they've drank their fill of a world, they move on.

Thanks to feeding on planets its entire life, Zeru is incredibly powerful, possessing the energy of several celestial bodies in a single shell. Due to its primary source of food and incredibly high energy level, the creature has its own Magnetosphere and is capable of producing concentrated blasts, shockwaves and barriers, allowing it to deflect all forms of energy. It also has enormous ribbon-like appendages capable of cutting through entire planetoids, and can fire beams able to destroy threats as big as suns.
Miles away from any known metropolis or mega city, high up in the mountain ranges of a distant countryside, a very big project was currently underway. In the middle of the misty wastelands consisting of scattered patches of evergreen forests, an enormous research facility and a campsite had been set up on the edge of what looked to be a primitive village of mud houses and wooden roofs. Obviously having been very poor and outlandish at one stage, the villagers of Natade were right now enjoying a rise in tourism and increased economic fortune thanks to the arrival of their out-of-town visitors, the majority of which were workers adorned in blue trade uniforms aligned to the company who had decided to make their base here.

Despite their appearance, the workmen weren't apart of any small mining company anyone was aware of, which was surprising given the abundant amount of crystals that were growing out here. Although they were providing an income boom for the simple folk who lived in this part of the land, what they were really here for was something of far more value, which also explained the strong military presence. The main base of operations constructed several hundred yards away from the outskirt village was surrounded by a barbed wire fence, which served as the defensive perimeter for a series of mobile buildings, jet-copter pads and shipping containers. In it, the dozens of company staff on supply could be seen hauling all sorts of equipment from heavy machinery to minerals, which moved back and forth across the property at blazing speed.

Inside the buildings scattered around the site, you could imagine a maze of hallways and clean rooms filled with high-tech computers and scientists hard at work, studying the material being brought in from outside. The amount of information they were gathering from this location was simply outstanding.

But the interesting activity wasn't what was happening inside the base, but what was taking place outside the gates. Crawling up the side of the nearby mountain, a winding road had been constructed by the company all the way up to the peak of the gradually sloping edifice. It was here, a full kilometer away from the primary facility that the real grinding was taking place, and was currently under the occupation of hundreds of staff members digging away at the walls. With the help of drilling machines and an army of other vehicles, little by little the men moved tons of ice and rock away from the crater at the top of the mountain. Given the peculiar position of the hole, the rocky edifice could've easily been mistaken for a volcano. But it wasn't.

As to what they were searching for at the top of that mountain, nobody knew. All the villagers and the staff at the base of the hill were aware of was that they were moving tons of snow and earth from its peak, and they were obviously trying to get to somewhere from it.

The crater at the top of the mountain was surrounded by a hexagonal platform with cranes that helped in hauling out the material from the large pit being dug. There were guards stationed all along it and, at the bottom of the hole, there was a platoon's worth of men working hard with pick axes and other equipment chopping away at the frozen walls. A platform along the walkway had also been built directly above the dig site for observational purposes.

It was here ambling along this metal road with guards stationed along either side of it, the mastermind of the project was on the prowl.

The individual in question was a smartly dressed, fit looking male in his late twenties, with combed back black hair, a goatee and a mustache, wearing a tailor made black and white suit, polished wing-tipped shoes, and dark gloves. He certainly cut an imposing figure compared to the private military he had standing guard over the walkway along the rails in full tactical gear and masks. This was mostly thanks to the way he was carrying himself, with his head held high and his hands linked behind his back.

While the well-dressed stranger certainly caught most of the spotlight, the person he was strolling down the boardwalk with was just as intimidating. Obviously the boss's main bodyguard, this man stood at about two heads taller than him, and was decked out in a full combat armor. Unlike conventional military armor though, this one was a large mechanized metal suit outfitted with sensors and vents, with a strange yellow glow between the gaps of the joints and plates. Though it looked bulky and incredibly heavy, it was incredibly sleek, had a very muscular appearance to it, and a thick protective collar around the base of the helmet, providing complete protection for the neck area. The design of the suit concealed an assortment of weaponry and also featured a built in jetpack and repulse system, with the entire ensemble being specially painted in green and black army camouflage.

The face of the person commanding this impressive suit, who had the full facial visor of his headgear pulled up, was a Polynesian male with tanned skin, a very gruff appearance, with a small scar above his right eye and another on the left corner of his mouth.

As the two walked slowly side-by-side down the gangway, with the mechanical suit making a noticeable clunking noise with every step, the head of the organization shot a quick glance towards his companion and smiled. "Vulcan… you seem unusually quiet today. What troubles occupy your thoughts?"

Realizing he was being spoken to, the armored man glanced down at his boss before looking ahead of him once again. "Kaiser… I do not wish to be impudent… but when you took me on as your right hand, you charged me with the complete and utter subjugation of this entire planet."

Reaching up to stroke his beard, the bearded leader smirked across at his bodyguard, "A most noble cause for one with such a troubled past, I'm sure."

"And I am thankful for my task," the soldier exclaimed. Stopping in his tracks, he then turned to face his boss, who also stopped with his hands still set firmly behind him. "But sir… you have me skulking ancient ruins, guarding dig sites and raiding military installations across the continent." A shrug of confusion quickly followed. "How does any of this help me accomplish my goal?"

Smile widening, the bearded leader stepped off of the walkway and onto a nearby platform overlooking the icy crater far below. "A war against the denizens of this earth will require a great deal more machines and resources than we can currently muster."

Frowning, the armored warrior clenched his fists and caused the gaps between the plating of his armor to light up, a white aura bursting up around him like a flame. Vulcan's sudden power up prompted all of the soldiers lining the rails behind him to stand at attention in a show of force.

"I will take what we have!" the bodyguard declared confidently.
"And leave us defenseless?" Kaiser asked, shooting a look back at his soldier before looking across the dig site with a smirk. "I admire your lust for battle, Vulcan. It's a trait that made you one of the best and most notorious soldiers in the royal military at one point in your life. But if we plan on taking control of the population and overthrowing the bumbling fools that govern this world some day, it's going to take a lot more than eagerness and determination to get the job done… especially against the ones that defend this planet and call it their home… the so-called 'guardians' of this terrestrial cesspool." When he sensed his bodyguard power down and the soldiers relax, the tie wearing leader frowned as he stared off onto the horizon. "I'm sure you know the individuals I'm referring to."

Vulcan narrowed his eyes when he realized who his boss was talking about, "The warriors that were responsible for defeating that abomination Cell all those years ago…?"

"As well as preventing a number of other calamities that took place before and after," the leader continued, lowering his head as his eyes panned over the massive hole in the ice beneath him. "Their strength and power far exceed that of any weapon that this planet's military can possibly produce… conventional weapons anyway. So in order to defeat them, we're going to need a lot of time, money and patience in order for any of our plans to succeed… three things that I just happen to have an abundance of." Raising a hand, he then clenched it into a fist and held it in front of him. "If my information on this site is correct, then this mountain that we stand upon holds the key to a power that is beyond anything any other individual on this planet possesses… enough to crush these super powered protectors quickly… and with ease."

Finding this information perplexing, the armored guard narrowed his eyes and stepped towards his master inquisitively. "But this land is empty and lifeless. It's just a barren wasteland."

A chuckle soon followed the man's statement as the boss glanced over his shoulder at him. "Haven't you heard the expression? Don't judge a book by its cover… Vulcan."

Before the bodyguard could question the company head further on that statement, a series of footsteps from behind drew their attention down the walkway to see a beautiful young woman with short purple hair, dressed in a suit, short-skirt and high heels, ambling towards them at a casual pace. The bodyguard, recognizing the smartly dressed female immediately, took a step back and allowed her passage through to the lookout. In a show of respect, the office woman acknowledged the security chief's presence with a silent nod of greeting before she continued her approach of her superior.

The mogul smiled when he saw his secretary cart to a stop in front of him, "Ah yes… Colonel Violet. What can I do for you?"

A smile formed on the woman's face as she bowed to her leader. "Sorry to disturb you, sir. But Kuze sent me up here to inform you that they've found it."

Not needing to be told twice, the boss quickly instructed his bodyguard and the former Colonel of the Red Ribbon Army to follow and, side by side, the trio made their way down the gangway and towards the heart of the dig site. By the time they arrived at the first level of the manmade crater, over by the edge of the chasm, the squad of high ranking officials spotted a dozen staff members gathered around a steel dais, directing the crane operator as he hoisted something large from the bottom of the hole. When the boss stopped at the edge of the crowd, he, his bodyguard and his secretary watched as the crane lifted an enormous block of ice from the earth and maneuvered it over to them.

As soon as it was placed in the center of the platform and the chains holding it up slackened, the staff backed away to allow the boss to move forward and inspect the artifact for himself. Their shouting and excitement soon reduced to a quiet clamor of murmurs, as every able man and woman there looked on to see the dig site's backer and chief overseer approach the crystalline monolith and inspect the treasure.

Once he'd gotten close enough, Kaiser reached out with a hand and ran it over the cold surface. Brushing away the layer of frost allowed him to see inside the transparent block of ice, which revealed to be containing a larger than average man, with an incredibly fit and muscular build, long black spiky hair, wearing white pants, golden boots, a red sash, and golden bands and cuffs with green emerald gems decorating them, lying frozen in the heart of the monolith.

The sight of the seemingly dead warrior had Kaiser's eyes widen in awe and an excited smile form across his face. "Incredible. You've been asleep here all this time," he whispered.

Even his bodyguard and the dig site's security converging on the obelisk looked upon it with amazement and curiosity.

Brow furrowing, the boss then glanced across at the head of the dig crew, who he could see was standing nearby wearing an orange high visibility jacket and hardhat. "Where exactly did you find him?"

The manager, Kuze, stepped forward and gestured towards the crater he and his men had been working on. "The boys located his body two hundred feet below the mountain's surface. At first we thought he'd been lying buried here for over a hundred years, but after analyzing the ice cores we managed to fish out of the surrounding landscape, we realized that his body has actually been buried for around six. We suspect it was a flash flooding and a freak storm brought on by his sudden entry into earth's atmosphere that led to him being frozen in such perfect condition."

Turning back to look at the 'corpse' lying in the ice, Kaiser narrowed his eyes. "Did you find anything else while you were down there?"

Smirking, the head of the dig site then pointed to another platform nearby. "As a matter of fact… we did. We found what we believe to be his space craft lying not too far from where we located his body in the center of the fissure." When everyone's attention moved around the crystal block towards the other station, they saw a pod-like vessel half frozen in ice sitting there with the hatch opened up for all to see. "The specifications of the craft match those of the two pods that reportedly landed in East City thirteen years ago and the remains of the one we recovered from the wastelands a year before."

This information brought a big smile to Kaiser's face. After which he turned his attention back to the block of ice and regarded it with a small moniker of admiration and respect. "Then it is just as I suspected. This man is definitely a Saiyan." He then turned and nodded towards Colonel Violet, who in turn directed one of the nearby workmen holding what looked to be a life support box up onto the podium. When the man stood beside the monolith, he pressed the machine up against its surface and began to scan the inside of the icy cell.

While Kaiser's secretary stood quietly on the sidelines with a smile on her face, Vulcan, curious as ever, approached his boss with a deep frown in play. "Is this man anything like those four warriors that were present at the Cell Games, sir?"

Smile still worn proudly on his own mug, Kaiser looked down at his armored soldier with a sly glint in his eye. "He is." Gesturing towards the glacier, he then proceeded to elaborate further on the matter. "I've been monitoring these Saiyans for quite some time… observing their battles from a distance, recording them, and taking careful note of each of their abilities. It's no secret who these people are since they've made no real efforts to conceal themselves from the public. This is mostly due to the fact that the people of this planet believe their abilities to be fictional and a mere 'trick of the light'. But this carelessness has allowed observant people like me to gather some very useful Intel on them." He then turned towards his two assistants, both of whom were standing side by side and were listening to him intently, along with everybody else in the area. "Through my contacts at Capsule Corp, I was able to learn the names and identities of every single one of the planet's super human defenders… a group the head of the corporation nicknamed the Z-fighters."

Violet, smirking widely, placed her hands on her hips and shared a glance with the hulking bodyguard next to her. "That's a pretty cheesy name," she remarked with a shrug, "Still, you have to give the woman points for creativity."

Expression remaining unchanged, the boss turned to look off to another part of the dig site in thought. "This group has been known to associate with Bulma Briefs on a regular basis. A handful of them also happen to be members of her family. Though there are several figures amongst their faction that interest me greatly, it is these Saiyans that concern me the most. I am absolutely fascinated by their power, their ability to wipe out entire planets and civilizations with a single breath… and their capacity to increase their strength to unprecedented levels." He then turned his attention to the block of ice and the figure resting inside of it. "I believe that this one here is another key piece in the puzzle to helping us unlock the secrets behind the gifts that these aliens possess and claiming them for ourselves."

There was a moment of pause, in which all of the workmen gathered around the block looked around at each other in confusion and scratched their heads. Vulcan and Colonel Violet however knew exactly where their leader was going with this and shared confident smirks with one another. It was then Kaiser raised a hand, placed it against the block of ice, and tilted his head. "However… I'm afraid that this one subject isn't going to be enough. The information from Bulma Briefs' personal files on this particular individual tells me that he is a corrupt sample… a tainted specimen. We're going to need a lot more information on the others if we even have a hope of understanding the full extent of their capabilities. Even a single drop of blood from every one of them isn't enough. I need more." Bringing his hand back and gripping his chin, the boss then turned his gaze skywards in contemplation. "There is one Saiyan in particular that's caught a great deal of my attention… the one that goes by the name of Son Gohan. He has displayed a rather unusual set of skills over the years unlike any of the others that I have on record." He quickly turned his attention towards his bodyguard, who straightened up when he realized his boss was looking at him. "He's taken Videl Satan under his wing as an apprentice and is currently attending school with her at Orange Star High. I would like for you, Vulcan, to go over to Satan City and to have a little chat with him."

A dark smirk formed across the armored man's face. "A little 'chat', boss?"

Slipping his hands behind him, the company magnet faced his assistant completely. "Yes. With your ability to command the God Buster Mark III armor, I have every bit of confidence that you'll be more than capable of defeating him." He then held a hand up and clenched it into a fist. "I want you to capture him… and bring him to me."

Vulcan raised an eyebrow. "Dead or alive?"

The question had Kaiser smirk, "Either or. I don't care how you do it. Break him if you have to. Just remember… no civilian casualties and no unnecessary destruction of property. Got it?"

Face becoming serious, Vulcan lowered his head and bowed in understanding. "It will be done." With that said, the intimidating figure then turned heel and marched his way out of the area.
Upon seeing the hulking warrior head off, the purple haired Violet narrowed her gaze and walked up to her boss, where she then came to stand beside him. As the rest of the staff in the area clamored, discussing the possible reasons why their company owner was so obsessed with these 'alien' people, the secretary faced the man with a stern look and a hard eye. "Do you think it was wise, sir? Sending Vulcan to confront the Gold Fighter of all people? You know what he's like when he gets riled up…"

Kaiser chuckled, "If he gets mad, he gets mad. As long as he gets to fight Son Gohan, pushes him to his absolute limits and gets me the information I need, I could care less about whether or not either of them come out of this alive. It's just one less problem for me to worry about." The man then turned his gaze towards the workman scanning the ice block and nodded in his direction. "How is our intergalactic friend?"

Removing the plug, the officer nodded to the mogul in response, "He's alive, sir… and in perfect hibernation."

"Good," Kaiser murmured before jabbing a finger at him, "Keep him in an induced coma and prep him for transport to my science branch in Central City. Make sure his body is kept completely frozen." Upon receiving a gesture of acknowledgement and watching the surrounding workers bring in portable freezers to keep the block intact, the leader then turned his attention back to his secretary to see her awaiting instructions. "Get me an update on our research & development labs in North City… and cancel all my appointments for the following week."

Violet nodded in understanding, "Of course, sir."

After giving the frozen body one last look, Kaiser tapped his finger a couple of times and turned to his office assistant once again. "And activate all of the other assets. Put them on standby and wait for my instructions."

"Yes, sir. Right away."

"Young man…"

Hearing the wheezy voice call out across the quad drew the corporation owner's gaze downwards to see an old man with long, shaggy brown hair, wrinkles, adorned in the robes of a villager and carrying a walking stick as support, approach the podium. He was also accompanied by several other similarly dressed men and a little girl with curly blonde hair and a sweet face around the age of seven. The elder stood at the head of the pack, asserting himself as the leader and identifying to the gentleman as the one to have spoken.

The black haired Kaiser smiled when the old timer ambled up the steps towards him. "Ah. Zalador. How can I be of service?"

Throwing the ice block standing beside the man a foul look, the village chief marched over to the billionaire and set a firm glare upon him. "So… did you find what you were looking for?"

"Why, yes I did," the industrial tycoon exclaimed while placing a hand over his chest in a humble gesture. "I very much appreciate you for allowing us to use your lands to dig for this treasure. It has been an honor and a privilege."

Narrowing his eyes on the smiling, respectful man, the village elder ground his teeth for a few seconds in careful thought. He then spared a few glances towards the glacier and the person that was sealed inside of it. After giving it a long, silent look over, and getting a feel for what this great artifact the man had ventured all this way out here to acquire, Zalador frowned and turned his gaze...
back towards the ambitious hunter.

"Though I greatly appreciate what you have done for my people, vanquishing the monster that's been terrorizing our countryside and bringing prosperity back to our village, there is still something of great importance I wish to tell you," the elder rasped in a serious tone of voice.

The blissfully grinning boss with the goatee nodded, "Feel free to speak your mind, sir. My ears are always open for good friends."

Taking a deep breath, Zalador tightened his grip around his cane and spoke. "Do not awaken whatever is sleeping inside that block." When he saw the businessman and his secretary blink in surprise, the elder frowned even deeper. "There are some things in this world that were never meant to see the light of day. That man trapped inside the glacier... he may very well be one of those things." Pulling back so that he stood side on to the smartly dressed billionaire, the village chief bowed in farewell. "You would do well to heed my warning." With his piece said, the elder then walked his way back down the steps and towards his family waiting on the sidelines.

Watching the village leader limp away, Kaiser narrowed his brow irritably before then slipping both hands behind his back once again. "Come, Violet." He then turned away and stepped off of the platform, closely followed by his secretary.

As they left the workers to conclude their business and a large truck was brought down into the ravine with portable freezers to be set up around the artifact for transport, deep inside the icy prison, no one seemed to notice the finger of the frozen man twitch. To accompany this small movement, a wisp of green energy also ran up the Saiyan's chest up to his face. Before anymore anomalies could take place, the diggers setting up the facility meant to move the monolith began blasting the monolith with ice, keeping it at a subzero temperature and whatever was trapped inside of it asleep.

They did so as per the instructions of their boss.

After what he'd found out about this individual from Bulma's personal files on the Z-fighters and their enemies, the last thing Kaiser wanted to do was wake the Legendary Super Saiyan Broly from his slumber.

XXX

(The very next day)

It was the end of second period and, like with every other day, the classes were heading out to have a spot of lunch. Normally around this time Gohan and his group would amble over to their usual spot under the tree, eat and share stories with one another as a unit. But on this particular occasion, the group had split up a little in order to tackle certain chores that they needed to address first before going outside to get some good Vitamin D and whatever else came with eating under the sun.

Sharpener had headed off to meet up with his fellow rugby club members for a meeting in their room and was going to have lunch with them. Lime also had some paperwork to fill in for her previous class, so this meant she wouldn't be seeing them today either. This left Gohan, Videl, Erasa and Touya as the only available members of the troop, the latter of whom had taken the liberty to lead the group down to his girlfriend's classroom to meet up with her. On the way there, the demi-Saiyan and his crime fighting partner had found themselves locked in a rather interesting discussion about what sounded like something from the science fiction genre.
In reality though, the spiky haired male in the black turtleneck top, the yellow CC vest and black pants was actually passing on his knowledge of what he learned about the Planet Trade Organization from Kana to his girlfriend. It was a conversation that easily bit and held the raven haired girl's attention, while simultaneously inviting the other two teenagers walking alongside them to listen in as well.

"So Frieza was an Emperor of only one part of space and not the entire universe?" Videl asked, looking up at her boyfriend curiously as they exited the classroom as a pair, with Touya and Erasa in front of them. "Didn't you say that he wouldn't stop bragging about how he was the most powerful and feared being in existence?"

The demi-Saiyan sighed and nodded his head in a sad manner. "Yeah, but if we're being completely honest here, his strength isn't exactly such a big milestone anymore. It was at one stage… but after all the crap we had to go through over the years… we've taken that bar and raised it several steps higher." He then looked up thoughtfully for a moment. "Make that several flights higher."

Videl smiled at her boyfriend's statement. "That just goes to show that any race, no matter how small and insignificant, has the potential to exceed their limits and become something great. Even us humans," the tomboy replied while smiling warmly in the teen's direction. "Anyway, so he was an evil galactic emperor, but not as big a one as he claimed he was?"

"It's actually a really complicated arrangement to explain," Gohan murmured, scratching the back of his head while holding his books tightly under his arm. "While it is true Frieza was an emperor and a leader in the Planet Trade Organization, he commanded only a small part of it, representing the destruction branch of the company and was a ruler of only one portion of space."

Videl chuckled at the boy's emphasis on small, "And we both know how big and terrifying space actually is."

Grinning, the spiky haired warrior then continued to speak, "Kana said it worked out like this. There are two main factions making up the Planet Trade Organization; the destruction branch and the construction branch. The organization as a whole encompasses a significant portion of the universe across the four main quadrants, the North, South, East and West, with the headquarters of the company residing somewhere in the core systems. In each quadrant there are regions of space ruled by representatives of the corporation, most of whom proclaim themselves as leaders within their respective areas. Frieza was one of these representatives and so was his brother, Cooler. Both of them proclaimed themselves as emperors of their portions of space, which was befitting their primary occupations."

"So… that kind of makes them like warlords?" the tomboy said while raising a finger in realization.

The demi-Saiyan grinned brightly, "Exactly. A lot of the representatives of the destruction branch of the organization are tyrants, even though the entire chain of command is run like a business. Some of them can be real monsters like Frieza and his family, but a lot of them can be open to reason."

"And what's Kana's deal? You said she was only a part-timer, right?" Videl asked, stepping a little closer to her boyfriend.

Gohan nodded in response, "She's a freelancer representing the faction of the construction branch, hired to help in the preservation of rare planets. The leaders of the corporation value her greatly due to her ability to transport planets digitally and safely from one part of space to another."
A giggle left Videl's lips as she gazed up at her boyfriend, "It's amazing the kinds of physics you can bend when you come from a race of light people from the center of the universe."

"Kind of reminds me of that sweet movie I watched last weekend with my girlfriend about this down-on-his-luck high school boy that meets a beautiful girl who turns out to be an alien from a far off world," Touya suddenly spoke up, slowly down to walk in step with the couple to trade pleasantries with them. "I recommend you guys watch it. It's called Falling from Orion."

After sharing a look with Videl, Gohan then raised an eyebrow towards the brown haired sportsman. "That's a pretty apt title."

"It also sounds like a pretty good movie too," the hybrid exclaimed, wrapping an arm around his girlfriend's waist to smile down at her. "We should check it out at my place this Saturday... just the two of us."

"Oh. Is that an invite I hear?" the raven haired beauty asked slyly, laying her head against the boy's chest. "That's awfully forward of you, Mr. Son."

"Well, I figured since we've been so busy with work and everything, I'd bring you over to my place so that we can spend some quality time together. Do you have a problem with that?" the young Saiyan asked with a grin.

Videl chuckled as she turned in his arm to wrap hers around his waist and hold her body close to him, "Not at all."

While the pair flirted away, walking a couple of paces in front of them Erasa was looking back at the duo with her books held close to her chest and a downturn in her expression. Upon seeing the raven haired girl lean up to peck the demi-Saiyan on the lips, the blonde teen felt a ping in her chest that caused her to look away and continue staring ahead of her. This allowed the journalist in training to hide the pained expression that came across her face and tighten her knuckles around her binder.

A minute of walking later and the group eventually arrived at another classroom, where the familiar, blue haired form of Touya's girlfriend could be seen waiting just outside the door. The teen was wearing a very trendy pair of jean, blue vans and a red top that exposed her midriff, and also had with her a packed lunch held securely under her arm. What was also noticeable, aside from the fact that she was tall, around the same height as her boyfriend, and cute, was that she was also an anthropomorphic doe, with light brown fur and green eyes. When she saw the group approaching her from her left, the girl smiled and waved.

"Yukie-chan," Touya exclaimed, jogging towards the girl to meet her half way.

The tomboyish looking female greeted her boyfriend with a hug, stepping away from him with a beaming look on her face, "I've got some awesome treats to share with you today. I made them last night."

"Same here," the boy replied, holding up his neatly packed bento for her to see. "Wanna split em' up like we did last time... or just pinch it from each other's boxes while trading small talk?"

Yukie giggled at his enthusiasm, "Whenever we do that I always end up stealing everything from you... and you end up going hungry."

The boy then playfully poked her in the nose, "That's because you're cheat... and you're scary tough. I can never beat you at anything." The girl responded by jabbing him in the chest, earning a playful laugh from him.

"Dick," she giggled, knowing full well that she didn't mean it.

Gohan, Videl and Erasa hung back and watched the lovey-dovey couple make plans on how they were going to swap meals with one another. As sweet as it was to observe their interactions from the other pair's point of view, for the blonde standing next to them, all it did was bring a sadder frown to her face and an even more unpleasant feeling to her stomach. Sparing a glance across at the demi-Saiyan standing next to her and seeing him bring his girlfriend closer only caused Erasa's mood to plummet even more.

It was only when she watched the boy pinch Videl teasingly in the side and saw her slap him in the shoulder in kind, the tube-top wearing teen decided she'd had enough.

Sensing their friend beginning to walk away, Gohan and Videl quickly turned to stare after her, with the former speaking up out of worry. "Hey, Erasa. Are you okay?"

The blonde stopped, breathing out a sigh at the sound of the boy's voice. "He's so sweet." Turning to look back at the two couples, the girl in the green shirt threw them a weak smile and ran a hand through her golden locks. "I uhh… I actually just remembered… I need to go see my media teacher about that intern position over at the news station up town." She then pointed in the direction of said classroom and backed away anxiously. "I'll meet up with you guys in the next lesson, alright?"

Upon seeing the nods of acknowledgement from a couple of her companions, Erasa then wasted no time in hitting the road and quickly marching off to her next destination.

Watching the girl leave prompted Touya and Yukie to share a confused look with one another and wonder what had gotten into her all of a sudden. After Gohan and Videl also traded expressions of concern and uncertainty, the spiky haired warrior then fixed his attention on the corridor his friend had retreated down and clenched his free hand into a fist.

OOO

Managing to get away from the group brought a small sense of relief back to the blonde haired beauty. She didn't know how much longer she would've been able to stand there alongside her classmates before her chest decided to split open. That was pretty much how fiercely her heart had been ramming away at her ribcage. It was unbearable.

That being said, even though she'd been able to clear out of there before something did end up breaking, Erasa still had to contend with an upset stomach and a mind filled with turbulent thoughts as she strolled down the corridors of the school to a meeting with a teacher that was purely fictional.

The reason why she'd left the area so suddenly was obvious. She just couldn't take being in the presence of her friends, all of whom had found themselves soul mates amongst one another; especially the one whom she herself had incredibly strong feelings for. Seeing Gohan and Videl fraternizing with each other in such a manner caused her stomach to tense up and her heart to beat heavily against the inside of her chest. Hell, even the boy alone was more than enough to send her head into a downward spin.

She wanted to be with him, to share affections with him like he did with Videl, and to let him know that he meant more to her than anyone else in the world, and him in kind. She wanted to experience the exact same things her friends were feeling, only she wanted them with a boy who was already shackled up with somebody else, and that person just happened to be her childhood friend.
As much as she loved Gohan, she didn't want to interfere with his and Videl's relationship. She loved them too much to ruin what they had with each other, all because she was selfishly pining after the raven haired girl's guy.

"But he's the kindest, gentlest, most handsome guy I've ever met," Erasa thought. At that exact same time, the face of said demi-Saiyan appeared in her head and caused her arms to tighten further around the books she was holding to her chest.

Finding some momentary comfort in the thought of actually sharing a moment with the hybrid in her mind, the blonde continued her autopilot stroll through the institute. She was then about to come up with some place to have her lunch in peace, but was suddenly interrupted from her train of thought when a familiar presence nearby caught her attention. Looking to her right, she suddenly spotted Gohan walking towards her from the nearby stairwell with a concerned look on his face and a hasty step characterizing each of his strides.

The appearance of her classmate and crush had the blonde stop, stare, and, after seeing the half-Saiyan coast to halt beside her, smile sadly in return. "It must be cool being able to teleport wherever you want. Out of all the super powers I would have, that one would definitely be in my top ten."

The demi-Saiyan tilted his head and beamed at the girl, "What would some of the other ten be?"

Giggling, the girl turned to her friend and began counting on her fingers. "The ability to shape shift and super strength." She then made a twisting gesture with her hands. "You wouldn't believe how tough it is to open jars with these fingers. Trust me; it's painful and annoying."

Sharing a chuckle with the blonde following her little impressionist performance, the raven haired boy allowed a moment of silence to pass between them. When his expression softened, the hybrid then spoke to the girl in the most sincere voice he had, "Listen Erasa... ever since I started out at this school, I've noticed you haven't been... acting your usual self. Every time I want to try and talk to you or hang out, you always either run off or turn your back on me like I'm going to hurt you or something. It's really upsetting seeing you like that. I'm really worried about you."

Stiffening a little, the teen quickly averted her gaze. "I... I don't know what..."

"Please, Erasa," the demi-Saiyan spoke while taking a step closer, watching the girl rub her arms timidly. "I want to be able to talk to you again like we were able to before. I want to try and make things right between us. Just... please... tell me what's wrong."

Gritting her teeth as she felt the concerned eyes of her crush boring into the side of her head, the chirpy blonde then took a deep breath of air. After trying her best to fend off his honest advances and prying stare, she then shook her head and looked up at the demi-Saiyan with a hard gaze. "I thought I'd be able to handle it... this warm feeling burning deep inside my chest that would act up whenever I saw you. I figured that it was just a phase that would pass after only a couple of days and leave me in peace. But I can't take it anymore." She then fixed the confused young man with an honest stare, one that had him balk a little at how intense it was. "For the last year I've had feelings for you, Gohan. I don't know how or when it started, but all I know is that after hanging out with you, getting to know you and your family, and seeing the kind and gentle person that you really are, I suddenly found myself falling for you... and there's nothing I could do about it."

Expression reflecting a small sense of surprise, the young Saiyan then slowly relaxed and gave the blonde teen a troubled look. "So it is true... you really do like me." And he literally had to have it shoved into his face from two different people for him to finally realize it.
Erasa's eyes shimmered as she looked into the charcoal ones of her friend. "I love you so much that my heart hurts every time I see you and Videl together. But as much as I want to be with you and have you all to myself, you two are my best friends. The last thing I want to do is get in the way of your relationship." When she spoke, her voice trembled and cracked. It was a good thing that the two of them were alone in this corner of the school otherwise they would be receiving quite a lot of questionable looks from the other students.

At first Gohan didn't know what to say. However, after standing there frozen in place and looking into the now tear strung eyes of the blonde in front of him, the demi-Saiyan bit his lip and moved forward to speak. "Erasa… I—"

"I think it would be better for all of us if we didn't talk for a while… at least… not until this thing between us has passed," Erasa said, closing her eyes and looking away from the demi-Saiyan, cutting him off from whatever he was going to say next. "I don't know how long it'll take… but I don't think we'll be able to see each other again. I'm… I'm sorry… Gohan."

"Wait… Erasa…" Before the shocked Saiyan could stop her, he suddenly saw the girl turn heel and run, dashing around the corner and out of sight. This left the spiky haired young male standing there with his hand outstretched and a dismayed look pulled across his face.

When he felt her presence fade, the hybrid then allowed his arm to drop and, in the midst of the moment, contemplated whether or not he should go after her. But after some careful thinking, he quickly opted against it. He didn't want to make the situation any worse than it already was.

Meanwhile, as the boy's eyes fell to the ground and his shoulders slumped in defeat, hiding at the end of lockers in the corridor Erasa had retreated down, Videl could be seen standing there with one hand at her side and the other held firmly over her chest. Her eyes staring ahead of her, the tomboy was unable to say a word thanks to the information she was able to take away from the pair's emotional conversation. After then seeing her blonde haired friend rush past her with tears streaming from her cheeks, the tomboy couldn't help but feel her own chest tighten up as she sensed her boyfriend kick at the floor before slugging his way back to where they'd left Touya and Yukie behind.

Even after he left, Videl remained exactly where she was, leaning against the side of the locker with her own head hung low.

OOO

(The afternoon)

The rest of that day saw Gohan's group short one person. Though Touya questioned the other two why Erasa had suddenly decided to sit in a different row to them that day, the demi-Saiyan said that things were 'complicated' between them, whereas the tomboy had chosen to remain quiet on the subject. In the end, the mood up in that middle row stayed cold and choppy for the entire duration of third period. When the hour eventually ticked over to quitting time and the end of school bell rang throughout the entire complex, the entire populace inside the institute spilled out of the classrooms and back out into the city streets.

Like with every other day since the start of term, Videl's group waited for the majority of the students to file out so that they could avoid the bulk of the traffic. It was as soon as the river of bodies was at its thinnest that she, Gohan and Touya took their time to collect their stuff, before joining their peers out on the main road. Though it took them a few minutes, the trio eventually found themselves outside the gate and on the footpath. Once there, the brown haired sportsman threw a smile at the couple behind him before gesturing a little ways down the road, where his girlfriend Yukie could be seen standing with her white bag slung over her shoulder and waiting patiently for him.

"I'll be heading off now guys. See you tomorrow," the teen waved.

"Yeah. See yah, man," Gohan responded in kind, seconds before he and Videl watched the man turn around and jog down the footpath to meet up with his other half.

The pair smiled when they saw them reunite. But while the demi-Saiyan was caught up in seeing his friend off his girlfriend's attention suddenly snapped to the footpath on the other side of the road. It was there, strolling down the street with her head down and her hand gripping the strap of her bag, Videl saw Erasa making her long, lonely trip home, ignoring the other students passing her by and absentmindedly dodging the rest of the civilian traffic along the way.

Blinking in surprise, the raven haired girl's expression then steeled before she turned to look up at her partner. "I have to quickly go pick up something before heading home. I'll catch up with you on Scape tonight, okay?"

Returning his girlfriend's statement with a surprised look, the hybrid then nodded in understanding. "Oh. Alright. Do you need me to come with you?" Gohan asked before suddenly seeing his colleague in crime fighting dash across the tarmac.

Making sure there were no cars, Videl took a moment to turn around and jog backwards so that she could wave to her boyfriend. "Don't worry! I'll be fine!" With a hasty grin, she then skipped back around and sprinted away, leaving the young Saiyan behind with his hand awkwardly rising into the air to wave back at her.

Seeing the raven haired girl disappear around the corner impelled the half-blooded warrior to lower his hand and adjust his pack. Wondering what could be so important to drag his girlfriend away so suddenly, the spiky haired teen figured that Videl had to take care of business related to her and to her alone. If she'd needed his help in any way, then she would have asked for it beforehand. So, reasoning that his classmate and friend of many years had a handle on it, Gohan checked his watch, assessed the time, then gripped the strap of his backpack and vanished in a flash of golden light.

By the time the young Saiyan took flight back to his place, Erasa was already halfway down the main road around the bend. A miserable look drawn on her face as she crossed another set of lights, the girl was just about to pass by a flight of steps leading up to one of the city's monorail stations. It was here, beside an empty park and bench with a line of soda machines standing beside her that the girl then heard a series of rushing footsteps approaching. Turning around in panic, thinking she was about to be attacked, the blonde then breathed a sigh of relief when she saw it was Videl jogging towards her.

Slowing to a stop, the city's poster girl brushed back some locks of stray hair and smiled at her friend. "Yo."

"V-Videl? Wha—… What are you doing?"

"I'm following you home, of course," the raven haired teen exclaimed, placing her hands on her hips and shooting her friend a sly smirk. "What? Doesn't your best friend of many years have permission to stalk you wherever you go around the city?"

Finding her friend's words a little bit off, the surprised blonde's expression then became serious as she turned to confront her pursuer. Despite being known for being the most cheerful and harmless person in the school, in that one moment, the future reporter appeared quite intimidating.
Alright… cut the crap. Why are you really here?"

Sensing hostility growing in her voice, Videl's smile disappeared and a serious look set across her face. "You really want to know?" Shifting her weight to one side and folding her arms over her chest, the raven haired hero of the capital decided to skip all idle pretenses and went straight to business. "I heard what you said to Gohan back during lunch time when you decided to run off to see your teacher." When she saw the blonde's expression switch to one of shock, the tomboy knew right away that she landed right on the mark. "Remember… back in the corridor?"

Eyes widening, Erasa's gaze then snapped away and she cursed inwardly at being found out. After several seconds of trying to figure a way out of this, her attention then switched back to the crime fighter and the blonde sucked it up. "V-Videl… I… I didn't mean…" Gritting her teeth when she realized that was the wrong thing to lead off on, the blonde restarted her response. "You and Gohan are the two closest people in my life next to my own family. I didn't mean to fall in love with him. It just sort of… happened."

It was at hearing this that Videl's expression slowly changed to a more deflated one, a complete difference from the unshaken contours of before. She then nodded her head in acknowledgement of her friend's reply and lowered her head, "Yeah. Gohan has that kind of effect on people."

Looking her childhood friend dead in the eye, the journalist in training continued her tirade. "I mean, how could I not? He's smart, strong, kind, generous, fun-loving, down to earth, and between you and me, he's without a doubt the hottest guy I've ever laid eyes on." When she saw Videl raise an eyebrow at the enthusiasm she uttered that last bit with, the blonde clenched her hands tightly and stepped towards the crime fighter in a pleading manner. "But he's your boyfriend… and you're his girlfriend. I don't want to get between the two of you and break you guys up, and even if I did there's no way I would be able to. He loves you too damn much." She then looked away shamefacedly. "About as much as I love him…"

Her expression reflecting her downtrodden reaction to the girl's confessions, Videl clutched her own arms tensely and looked down at her feet for but a moment. Once she'd processed everything the blonde had told her, the tomboy then looked up at her friend and spoke. "Erasa…" When she saw the blonde's gaze switch to her, the raven haired girl's eyes wavered as she looked upon her with warmth and fondness. "I treasure you as a friend just as much as I love Gohan and… I know in his heart… that he cherishes you just as much as I do. Sure that sounds cheesy as hell, but knowing exactly the kind of person that he is, I know that the last thing he would want to happen is to lose a person who has become so close to him… someone who has touched his life in so many ways and respects just as much as he does everybody else. He would go to the ends of the world to protect those he cares about… and for that I am certain."

Staring at her friend silently as her mind stewed over her words, the blonde swallowed nervously and, turning to face her classmate head on, spoke in a raspy voice, "But Videl… even if that's true… aren't you worried about my feelings towards him?" She then shook her head in bewilderment. "Aren't you… afraid that I would just end up getting in the way of you two? Because I'm gonna be completely honest with you… even if I was to try to go back to the way things were between us… I don't think I'd be able to look him straight in the eye knowing how much I like him." She then brought her hands together and locked her fingers anxiously. "If you two weren't already together, I would definitely still be trying to go after him…"

Looking her friend in the eye, Videl allowed a small smile to grace her lips and rested her weight on her right leg. "You really like him that much?" When she saw Erasa nod her head vigorously, the raven haired fighter chuckled and brushed a few strands of hair behind her ear. It was a gesture that had the blonde raise an eyebrow at her strange reply. "It's funny, you know… ever since Gohan and I became boyfriend and girlfriend, almost every single girl around us who's become close friends with him, suddenly wants to have a piece of him. Lime… Zangya… Kana… I'm telling you, the amount of attention he's receiving is mindboggling." When she saw the surprised blink her friend gave, the tomboy placed her hands on her hips and smirked. "What's more, every single one of the girls who's made a move on him so far likes him just as much as you do. Even though we're officially a couple, it's suddenly gotten so much harder to try and keep him all to myself. At the rate this is going… I don't think any of our friendships are going to last for very long. Things are going to get ugly."

The wide-eyed blonde's mouth opened in confusion. "Videl…?"

Taking a deep breath, the raven haired crime fighter then looked towards the sky and took on a noticeably distant stare. "You know, one of the girls who said that they're also in love with Gohan had a very interesting proposition. Since she comes from a society that allows life partners to take on multiple mates and not just one… she suggested to all of us that we share him."

This particular news had Erasa's eyes widen in shock and her face turn bright red. "Sh-Sh-Sh-Share him?"

Seeing the expression appear on her classmate's face brought a look of amusement to the crime fighter's, which was quickly followed by a lighthearted laugh. "I know. I had the exact same reaction… well… at least I think I did. It's all still a bit of a blur to me." Videl then shook her head to rid herself of that memory and held a hand out to her friend. "But as much as I hated the idea, after hearing how much you care about Gohan and seeing how broken up you were after your confession to him… I'm starting to think that maybe giving that sharing concept a try wouldn't be such a bad idea. I mean, he is an alien… and a ridiculously hot alien at that… and a lot of the rules that apply to us certainly don't apply to him or his friends." She then crossed her arms and looked at her friend, who was still in a bit of a bumbling mess. "The point is… I don't want to lose a good friend over such a senseless squabble… or any of my friends for that matter… especially someone I've cherished since primary school."

Staring across at the raven haired girl in bewilderment for a few moments, the blonde girl then bit her bottom lip and stepped towards the crime fighter wistfully. "You… Videl…I…"

The girl's hand then shot up quickly. "I said I'd think about it. That doesn't mean I'm completely sold on the idea." She then grinned across at her warmly. "What I want is to try and resolve this thing so that I don't have to see my friend go home in tears and never have to speak with her again.
I'm certain Gohan doesn't want to see that happen either. So let's just… give the matter some time and we'll see how this works out in the end, okay?" Inwardly she admitted the whole thing might turn out to be a lot of fun.

I mean, this was her best friend and her boyfriend she was talking about, the latter of whom arguably being one of the most good-looking and selfless guys in the world. What was there not to like?

Gulping nervously, Erasa then nodded her head dumbly and, after taking a deep breath, allowed a small smile to reappear on her face. "A-Alright. We'll do that." Taking a few steps back, the blonde then started to turn around until a sudden thought came to her head. Sparing a quick look back at the tomboy, the girl in the green top then blushed and rubbed her hands together nervously. "Just…
for the record…" Erasa then smiled in a shy manner. "I don't think sharing Gohan with you would be such a bad idea. I… think you're really cute as well, V."

Realizing exactly where that line of speak was going caused Videl to blush and wave a hand at the blonde, "Oh, get out of here, you horn dog!" This shout had Erasa giggle and continue down the empty road on her accord, all the while the raven haired fighter pointed after her waringly. "I said I'd think about it! You hear me? I'd think about it!"

Laughing a little as she began to walk, the blonde stuck her tongue out at her classmate. "Don't go thinking about it for too long, okay, because I'm getting impatient!"

Videl rolled her eyes, "Oh, suddenly you're sounding so confident. Now do you see what happens when I give you an inch?" Seeing the teen wave goodbye from a few yards away had the crime fighter sigh and wave after her as well. After trading one last smile with each other, the raven haired beauty then began to walk away and set her own sights for home.

But then, just as Erasa turned her attention to the footpath ahead of her, she then stopped when she noticed something off about the air.

Able to see clearly down the street, with cars and people moving around in the background like the backdrop of a movie, she also noticed a peculiar shimmer breaking up the air just a couple feet in front of her. It was almost like rays of sunlight were refracting through a pane of glass that was moving, which had the blonde take a back step to see if she wasn't tripping.

It was only after taking that small step the blonde received the shock of her life when she unexpectedly felt a powerful grip around her neck before she was lifted off the ground by an unseen force. The sudden jerk caused her to drop her bag and let out a strangled gasp in fright as her windpipe was practically blocked by the invisible hand.

Seeing her friend suddenly get lifted off the floor had Videl recoil in disbelief. When she realized the girl was in trouble, the crime fighter quickly dropped into a fighting stance and glared ahead at the collection of air on the other side of the floating blonde. At the same time the champion of Satan City's police force took aim with her hand and focused her hardest glare on the ghost that'd taken her classmate captive.

Initially baffled by what was going on, Erasa then watched in horror as the invisible gleam in front of her faded and, in a scene taken straight out of the movie Predator, a massive armored figure suddenly appeared out of thin air; the large fingers of its right hand wrapped firmly around the girl's neck. His cloak disappearing in a blue flicker of pixels, a large mecha about the same height as Piccolo, with green and black army paint, leered at the girl through its four, yellow optical sensors.

The moment the invisibility lifted, the helmet opened up and revealed a dark skinned, scarred male adult in his early thirties, glaring threateningly at the blonde teenager.

"You will come with me," he hissed.

With Erasa clawing and kicking uselessly at the suit's massive arm, Videl cautiously eased off of the footpath and onto the road so that she could get a clear shot at the mech's pilot. However, due to the manner in which he was holding the girl in front of him, being able to shoot the prick without hitting her friend seemed like it was going to be impossible.

Almost immediately, a nervous sweat broke out on the crime fighter's face. Not only did she have a hostage situation unfolding directly in front of her, but for some odd reason she just could not fathom, she was unable to sense the man's presence at all. His ki signature was being blocked by that weird armor he was wearing.

Just who the hell was this guy?
Knowing that this wasn't the time to be asking petty questions, Videl began to focus her energy into her palms and widened her stance. "Why don't we put the girl down and talk about this woman to freak?" she called out to the unknown assailant, her hand held steady and crosshairs locked onto his face.

Eyes snapping towards the teenager curiously, Vulcan then saw the girl he recognized immediately as Hercule Satan's daughter, edge across the main road and ready herself for a fight. After considering her words and looking down at the blonde in his hand, a smirk then formed on his face and he nodded to the city's defender conceitedly. "As you wish." Helmet visor snapping back across his face, he then tossed the blonde girl aside and lunged for the tomboy.

Almost instantly Videl opened up on the mecha with a rapid fire chain of golden ki blasts, which shot towards the creep from both her hands at light speed. However, the moment her attacks struck the man's armor, instead of taking chunks of metal out of it or disintegrating the mecha outright, the beams either bounced uselessly off of the tough shell or got absorbed by the strange plating.

Feeling the blasts ricochet off of his suit prompted Vulcan to duck his head and, as he jogged towards his target, he reactivated his cloak. In just a few milliseconds, the hulking metal frame thundering towards the Z-fighter turned invisible and vanished into thin air. When Videl saw her last ki blast shoot down the street and hit nothing, her expression instantly became one of alarm and frustration.

Backing away slowly, the girl narrowed her eyes and attempted to spot any telltale traces of her target. Since she couldn't feel the guy's presence at all, she had to rely on her other senses to do the work. However, in spite of the armor's supposed weight and size, the tomboy couldn't detect even a single sliver of her opponent. It had her and all of the civilians who were watching the events from the pavement scratching their heads in confusion.

At first Videl had no idea where her opponent was. But then, just as she was thinking he'd taken off, she heard a sharp hiss and an electronic humming noise appear behind her, and spun around. Thrusting her right hand forward, she attempted to fire a blast at her invisible opponent, only to have her wrist grabbed and her palm pointed upwards, resulting in her missing with her ki blast. Attempting to pull free, the teen then saw her opponent reappear out of thin air holding her arm with his left and holding a red beam sword shaped like a machete in the other.

Eyes widening in fright, Videl slammed a kick into the mech's forward leg, hoping to crumple it like aluminum. But her blow, despite its tank crushing strength, bounced off of the durable limb like it was nothing, leaving it completely unscathed. Stunned, the girl then jumped back at the last second and slammed both her feet into the suit's chest, yanking her arm out of his grip and avoiding the upward swing of the mech's blade… or at least most of it.

In the end, the tip of the laser weapon sliced into her chest, sending a spray of blood into the air and knocking the strong girl to the ground.

As soon as her back hit the tarmac and began to slide, the raven haired fighter put both fingers to her forehead and, with a quick power up, aimed them at the armored suit with a yell. "SPECIAL BEAM CANNON!" A pink corkscrew beam then shot out from her fingertips, striking the approaching mech in the chest with a deafening thunderclap. However, instead of drilling straight through the armored warrior and leaving a big hole in its chest, the beam suddenly got absorbed into the suit, the gaps of which lit up with a golden glow as it literally sucked in all of the energy powering the attack.

Once Videl was done firing, the flash of light produced by her attack faded to reveal that the robot... was still standing without a single scratch. The sight of its untouched front had the wounded girl's eyes widen in shock.

"What the fuck?"

A metallic chuckle left the mech's lips as it stomped towards her. "Thanks for the power up." As soon as he was close enough, Vulcan raised his energy sword and prepared to run it through the teen to finish her off. The sight of the weapon had Videl raise her arms in defense and prepare to move.

But then, just as the armored warrior was swinging down in a stabbing motion, Erasa suddenly jumped in front of him. "STOP!" Arms out, the blonde stepped directly into the path of the blade, which immediately ceased momentum and had to the mechanized soldier glaring down at the teen in surprise.

Seeing her friend movie in between her and her opponent caused Videl to look up in bewilderment. "Erasa! What are you doing? Get out of here!" she shouted, waving for her classmate to run.

Ignoring her friend's call and knowing exactly what would happen if she did move, the brave blonde lowered her arms and glared right back at the intimidating cyborg in front of her, "I'll come quietly if you let her live."

Hearing her concession loud and clear, the mechanical man retracted his blade and sheathed it into the side holster of his leg plate. Straightening up, Vulcan then stomped forward, grabbed the girl by the stomach with his whole hand and, holding her lightly in his grip, proceeded to walk down the street. Passing by the fallen Videl, who was still struggling to get back to her feet due to the deep flesh wound across her front, the hulking machine stopped and glared down at her. When he saw the raven haired teen look back up at him with a fierce expression, the pilot frowned behind his helmet.

"Nine o'clock, tomorrow morning. The Plaza. If you want to see the girl again in one piece, tell him to come alone." It was a warning that had the Champ's daughter frown and spit at his feet.

Message given, the civilians watching from the sidelines then watched fearfully as the mech, with his blonde captive in tow, activated his jetpack and, with a loud roar of its engines, took off into the sky and shot towards the horizon faster than a bullet. In a matter of moments, he was gone, and so was Erasa's ki signature.

Crying out as she gripped the wound across her chest, Videl rolled onto her side and, bringing her wrist watch around, pressed the quick-dial button on the side of the face.

Under any normal circumstances she would've called the cops. However, in this case, ordinary backup wasn't going to cut it. So, knowing exactly who she had to call, she brought the communicator up to her lips and, with a strained voice, spoke into it as calmly as she could.

"Gohan… Erasa's been kidnapped…"

(TO BE CONTINUED)

Author's Note: So, things are starting to go really bad now. Let's see how our heroes fair against this threat.

Power Levels:
Z-fighters:

Erasa – 5 riki
Videl – 18,000,000 riki
Gohan – 30,000,000 riki

Antagonists:

Kaiser – 120 riki
Colonel Violet – 120 riki
Vulcan – Unknown

Biographies:

Name: Set, God of Storms
Race: Dio-jin
Gender: Female
Occupation: God of Storms
Hair Color: Red
Type: Godly ki user/Telekinetic
Age: Approximately 80,000,000 years
Home Planet: Houndark

History: An incredibly powerful martial artist from the Dio-jin race, an anthropomorphic group of humanoid dogs, Set is a female warrior possessing incredible telekinetic and fighting skills, and is capable of unimaginable feats of physics bending abilities and strength.

Millions of years ago, when she was just a child, she was taken in by Whis as his apprentice to become the very first God of Storms. Viewed by the master martial artist as his most gifted and talented student, Set was a remarkable fighter with a knack for manipulating and controlling celestial energy, so much so that she could pass it on to others. When she was still young, Whis said to her that when she was old enough she would be able to take his place as teacher and chief guardian of their universe. However, when the oracle fish (seer) said that she wasn't destined to become his successor, Whis turned his attention to another student. Set felt betrayed, and over the many years she served as the God of Storms, her heart became filled with hate, jealousy, and resentment.

Thousands of years prior to the start of the series, around the time humankind was still in its infancy on earth, Set attempted to seize control of the universe, but was stopped by the Gods and Kais of the seventh universe. After a long and endless war with her fellow protectors of the cosmos, she was eventually sealed away inside the Nexus, an impenetrable prison inside a pyramid in Ancient Egret, as punishment for her crimes. In her solitude, Set's bitterness grew as she trained... and meditated for over twenty thousand years, until she is later revived by her four minions.

When she encountered the Z-fighters, Set forced them to battle her servants. After Gohan and his friends emerged victorious, she offers them a chance to become her servants, but ends up fighting them instead. During the battle, she ends up mortally wounding Videl, a blunder that inadvertently causes Gohan to become enraged and assume a celestial form utilizing the Godly ki he unknowingly syphoned from her prison. The battle ends in her complete and utter defeat, and when she eventually regains consciousness on a distant planet, she winds up being taken prisoner by Varax to have her body broken down for its secrets.

OOO

Minions of Set – Four Dio-jin warriors that act as the main bodyguards of Set. Extremely loyal, relentless, and each possessing incredible power and skill, they are minor deities forced into the service of the God of Storms. They are so devoted to their master, that they are willing to do anything to see that her wishes are fulfilled. This is mostly out of fear of being killed by her hand. When they're released from their tomb, the group of four immediately go after the strongest power source on the planet, Gohan, to use his energy to free Set from her prison.
Gasping when she felt a surge of life flood through her entire body like a current of electricity, Videl sat bolt upright from the spot she was lying in shock. Due to the sudden nature of her awakening, her lightning fast movement startled the person who was helping her and caused them to take a really big step back for safety.

Blue sapphires darting about in paranoia, Videl expected to see her body still lying in the middle of a street in downtown Satan City. As it turns out, not only did she find herself surrounded by the familiar tiled surface of Kami's Lookout, but the faces of all her closest friends and martial arts instructors. These took the forms of Dende, Piccolo, Mr. Popo, and Gohan, the former of whom was sitting comfortably on her right-hand side.

After clearing the spots of grogginess from her eyes, the teenager groaned and squinted across at her boyfriend, who she saw had come to kneel alongside her.

"W-What happened?"

The demi-Saiyan smiled, "You passed out just a few seconds after I arrived. That attack you received across the chest must have shocked you a lot more than you initially thought." He then gestured to her top, which he could see had been sliced right through. When the crime fighter reached down and ran her finger over the cut and the now perfectly healed wound, Gohan continued without missing a beat. "However, your adrenaline rush kept you awake long enough for me to teleport to your position and get you out of there. It's a good thing you dodged whatever it was that hit you… otherwise you would have been in serious trouble."

A nod of understanding was the girl's immediate reply. "Damn it! This is literally the second time this has happened to me. I've really got to watch my back out there so that I don't have to go through this crap over and over." She then directed her gaze towards the earth's guardian and smiled warmly at the young Namekian. "Thanks, Dende."

The overseer of the planet beamed in response, "No worries. Always glad to help. I only wish I could do more."

"I'm sure you do more than enough for us," the raven haired girl remarked.

As the female Z-fighter inspected her wounds and thanked her boyfriend for saving her, she was then interrupted by the firm and commanding voice of the former overseer of the planet speaking up from the sidelines. "Now that you're feeling a whole lot better, do you mind telling us what the heck happened to you down there that almost ended with your body being cut in half?"

Blinking up at the serious looking Piccolo, the raven haired teen's brain quickly rewound the footage of her death-defying encounter with her assailant. As soon as her memories returned and her processors kicked, Videl's gaze then switched over to her half-Saiyan schoolmate in panic, "Gohan… that guy that attacked me… he got Erasa."

Despite having heard this part already over his communicator, the hybrid's eyes narrowed gravely. "What guy? Who was he?"

"I… I don't know," the girl stammered, her expression becoming just as dark as she looked the boy square in the face. "He just showed up out of nowhere."

"Can you tell us what happened?" Piccolo asked, wanting to hear the story with his own ears in order to find out how things for Gohan's friend managed to spiral out of control so quickly.

Looking up at the rest of the group, it took Videl a couple of moments to get her flashes of events in order. The moment she did so, she then began a thorough retelling of her few-second skirmish in the middle of her city. "It was just several minutes after I left school. I followed Erasa into town and after I caught up with her beside the station, the two of us had a chat. When our conversation ended and we were about to go our separate ways, this freak in a giant metal suit literally appeared out of thin air and attacked us. After I tried to fight him off, he sliced open my chest with an energy sword, grabbed Erasa, and then took off with her to Kai knows where."

Looking up at the rest of the group, it took Videl a couple of moments to get her flashes of events in order. The moment she did so, she then began a thorough retelling of her few-second skirmish in the middle of her city. "It was just several minutes after I left school. I followed Erasa into town and after I caught up with her beside the station, the two of us had a chat. When our conversation ended and we were about to go our separate ways, this freak in a giant metal suit literally appeared out of thin air and attacked us. After I tried to fight him off, he sliced open my chest with an energy sword, grabbed Erasa, and then took off with her to Kai knows where."

"Can you tell us what happened?" Piccolo asked, wanting to hear the story with his own ears in order to find out how things for Gohan's friend managed to spiral out of control so quickly.

Sharing a look with Gohan, one that reflected extreme concern over the matter, the older Namekian then looked back at the teenager inquisitively. "You're one of the strongest people on this planet and probably the entire galaxy. How can some joker in body armor harm you?"

Videl scrunched her face up in thought. "This wasn't some ordinary costume or tactical gear that was thrown together by some loner in a backyard shed. The thing was tough… like… super-human tough. It looked like one of those big, military, Iron Man type mechs I remember reading in a comic book not too long ago. The tricks this thing could pull were unreal. Not only could it turn invisible and hide its movements, but it was also able to completely mask the ki signature of the man inside it. The creep who was piloting the thing looked like some scar-faced, ex-military jokey, but he knew exactly how to scrap using both stealth and close-quarters. So I think it's safe to say he was trained to operate it."

This information had Gohan bring a hand to his chin and rub it anxiously, "If it's anything like those robots Cooler brought with him when he attacked New Namek all those years ago, I think I can see why he was able to beat you. Those things were tough and hit like a train."

"That's not all," Videl interjected, surprising her boyfriend and drawing the attention of all the men standing beside her. "The suit also did something else I'd never seen before. Not only was it able to render all of my attacks useless, but when I tried to shoot it the suit absorbed every single one of my blasts. It's almost like they were sucked into it."

Eyes narrowing, Piccolo and Gohan looked at each other with beads of sweat appearing on their faces.

"That sounds just like…" the demi-Saiyan murmured.

"Yeah. Like the first two androids we encountered seven years ago," the Namekian finished with the bottom of his right eye twitching.

His student reflected a similar look of trouble, indicating how dark their situation had become. "But it seems like whoever designed the technology for this guy made some improvements."

Full-body energy absorption? The last enemies they encountered that could absorb energy blasts had that capability confined to the palms of their hands and that trait was easily circumvented by chopping off said hands. From a fighter's point of view that was an extremely effective defense to have in combat. But from a hero's point of view… that meant nothing but bad news.

Videl, hearing this exchange of words loud and clear, looked towards her Saiyan boyfriend with an apprehensive frown. "Doctor Gero and Android 19#, right? Those were the androids you said were able to absorb energy and were able to move around without being detected." When she saw the nods from both senior fighters, the girl clenched her fists. "That would mean this guy must be incredibly dangerous."

"All we know thus far is that the suit this mercenary is using is extremely durable and can take energy blasts like a champ. As to how strong he is, we don't know," Gohan said, rising to his feet and turning his gaze towards the horizon. With his game-face fully set, his charcoal colored eyes burned fiercely against his whites with fury and intent. "But I'm going to find out."

Sensing the determination in her crush's voice, the still shaken crime fighter from Satan City stood up and faced him with her foot firmly on the ground. "He said he'll be in Satan City's Central Plaza at nine o'clock tomorrow morning, waiting for you. Since he's also got Erasa as a hostage and will likely be holding her at point, he'll be expecting you to come alone."

"Then that's exactly what I'll do," the demi-Saiyan said, glancing back at the group to see the concerned stares he was receiving from them. "I don't want her or any of you guys getting hurt… so I'll go along with this creep's demands, for the time being. If his tech's as good as I think it is then I don't think we'll be able to mount a successful rescue mission without him catching wind of us."

Even if they could suppress their energy, not only did they still run the risk of being picked up by whatever sensors the guy had installed in his armor, but Gohan wouldn't put it past this assassin to plan for an attempted snatch-and-grab maneuver.

After all, he was able to catch Videl, one of the sharpest fighters on the planet, completely off guard and knew exactly how to fight someone of her specialization and skill set. That screamed 'dangerous' on a number of different levels.

If he even smelled that there was someone else in the area, then there was the absolute possibility that he would straight up kill his prisoner. That was an eventuality Gohan wasn't going to let happen.

Piccolo stepped forward, "Are you sure you want to do this alone?"

Gohan nodded, looking back at his friends for a moment before a small smile graced his lips. "If anything goes wrong… you know where I'll be."

With her grip still firmly enclosed around the gash in her shirt, the raven haired crime fighter gave her boyfriend an understanding nod as her stare remained fixed on his person. "The two of us will be watching from a distance. In case things go south, we'll be there to help." She then spared a look up at the Namekian, who also gestured affirmatively and unfolded his arms as a sign that he was ready for action. "Erasa's my friend too. There's no way I'm going to let you carry the weight of this mission all on your own."

When he saw the two most active members of their team step forward and vocally announce their intent to support him, Gohan, with determination burning in his eyes, responded to their decisions with a smile and a nod of acknowledgement.

XXX
A cool silence stretched across the vast landscapes surrounding the outskirts of Satan City. This was also the case regarding the grounds of the capital's local power station. Here, with lights blazing over the entire property and illuminating the two large columns acting as the place's primary cooling towers, the most recognizable elements of the facility, a collection of workers could be seen waiting away the night performing various maintenance tasks and standard surveillance chores. Men wearing high visibility jackets and hardhats patrolled the grounds, with most of them inspecting the power lines and the main structures forming the major bulk the facility, checking on the conduits for their feedback.

It was all business as usual on the outside and so far no alarms had needed to be activated. This was also the situation involving the many workers inside, the majority of which were scattered throughout the main building and toiling away in the planet's many sectors. As this was a nuclear-type facility, you could expect there to be a lot of men and women on station overseeing the continued operation of the base and the dispersion of power across the region. With the amount of energy being outputted on an hourly basis, there was an equal amount of chance for a minor glitch in the system and catastrophic failure occurring on their watch.

However, since this industry was a direct product of Capsule Corporation and their line of high-tech, sustainable energy plants, confidence was good across the broader range of employees in reference to the station's reliability and ongoing performance. For the past twenty years, there had been no real technical issues, no emergencies, and no breakdowns. Since this was the current track record, most of the staff inside was spending their time doing whatever they could; catching up on their reading or just hanging out and chatting, while occasionally looking in on their stations to make sure that all was well with the numbers.

One security guard in particular was currently patrolling the inner workings of the facility around the main line. Flashlight in hand, the man with the mustache and the vest scanned the corners and shadows of the chamber, while also paying particular attention to the ceiling. Once he was certain the room was clear, he left to check out another area.

The instant he left the room, a figure who the guard had no idea had been present and had been crouching quietly in the corner, unexpectedly appeared out of thin air and approached the main terminal, which consisted of several metal boxes monitored by computers. Upon making sure the coast was clear, the massive army painted mech turned its attention to the main box with a chuckle, his yellow optical sensors flickering with mischief as it scanned the layout of the instrument.

Raising his hands, the ever stealthy Vulcan reached for the door and spoke in a metallic voice, "Hello, power line. Mind if a burrow a little bit of energy?" Grabbing the sides, he then effortlessly ripped the lid off of the large box and unveiled a big, transparent pipeline with blue energy running through it underneath. Tossing the door away with a loud 'clatter', he then cocked his hands back and took aim. "Don't mind if I do." He then thrust his hands through the glass, shattered it, and grabbed the metal wires underneath.

Almost instantly the entire room flashed red and a large humming sound rang throughout the chamber. A split second later, the sirens went off all across the power plant as bolts of liquid lightning shot out of the breach and began to strike the room. However, the expulsion of excess energy didn't last, as within mere moments of its exposure to the air, the power began getting sucked into Vulcan's metal suit, which proceeded to drain the electricity being produced by the plant at an alarming rate.

As all this was going down in his area, the intercoms set up around the facility blared to life and began to shout over the emergency sirens. "Energy breach in Sector 7-E! Energy breach in Sector 7-E! Emergency protocols engage!" The moment the woman's voice spoke up, every single entrance in the room became sealed by large metallic doors. Each weighing about a ton, the black and yellow striped barriers slid shut with simultaneous, thunderous clangs. "Sector 7-E successfully quarantined!"

The nodes and gaps in his suit lighting up bright blue, electricity crackled and danced across his body. At first the transfer of power caused his armor to jerk and twitch, while also drawing a growl of effort from the user. But as the outflow of highly potent energy into his body intensified, his hearty exclamation of effort was replaced by a roar of laughter, before the man breathed a long sigh of relief. Leaning his head back, the human inside the mech huffed and groaned.

"This is amazing! The power!"

While the electricity and radiation continued to pour into his armor, and the workers at the station rushed around in an attempt to fix the problem, over in Satan City, every single light across the metropolis was tweaking out and flickering like mad. Entire blocks randomly went pitch black for a couple of seconds, moments before flashing back to life and repeating the process over and over for the next several minutes.

It was only when the men monitoring the stations at the terminals finally located the source of the problem that they quickly went about shutting down the station's engines and proceeded with the grueling task of isolating the breach. Unfortunately, thanks to Vulcan's grip on the main line and the rate at which he was draining the energy from the core, it made it incredibly difficult for the plant's operators to shut down and purge the system.

"Cut the main line to Sector 7! Now!" one of the officers at the control station shouted, flipping switches and turning knobs all across the board.

His colleague in the glasses shook his head furiously. "We can't! The receivers in that area aren't responding! Something's interfering with the system!"

"Then shut them all down! Run the overflow out through Sector 6 and 5, and flush the area!"

"I don't think the transformers will be able to handle that much power."

"Then activate the emergency lines!"

After several tries and with some forceful tampering of the system, they eventually succeeded in their task.

But by this point, the suit wearing human had managed to gather enough energy that he'd literally shortened the overall lifespan of the station's core.

The entire area surrounding Satan City went dark, with the town itself turning black and disappearing completely from satellite view. With the alarm inside the plant still going, the blazing red chamber Vulcan had found himself confined in then activated the fire suppression system, the pipelines above opening up and beginning to spew Halon gas into the area. By the time the room became flooded with smoke the mech pilot released his grip on the main line and took a big step back.

Amidst the lights that continued to flash like methodical strobes and the clouds bellowing through the air, the lines and gaps all over the soldier's body glowed blue and his four optical sensors blazed yellow. When he turned around and faced the doors isolating the chamber, a metallic chuckle left his lips and a current of blue electricity ran up his now supercharged body.

With energy levels comparable to the sun pulsing through his armor, he knew right away that he was ready.

"I guess this'll do for now. Time to kill me a Saiyan."

XXX

(The very next morning)

Due to the unexpected meltdown at the power plant, the entire region encompassing Satan City experienced a full two hours of blackout and electrical difficulties. The workers at the station labored quickly to fix the issue, in that time leaving thousands of people in darkness. Though this wasn't much of a problem seeing as how most of population was asleep, this was extremely inconvenient for all those who were working the night shift, particularly the hospital and at other emergency departments. Fortunately the facilities were able to activate their backup generators to keep their various life-support systems running and their doors open. It being an incredibly vital part of the community, it made perfect sense that they had to be the ones most prepared for a situation like this.

By the time dawn eventually ticked over, the staff at the power plant was able to attend to the source of the power outage and make repairs to it. Electronics and technology were soon restored and by the time people started to get up for the day ahead, the city was once again running at full capacity. Though the workers were unable to figure out the exact cause of the explosion in their main power line due to the surveillance feeds being messed with prior to the disaster, the security at the station was still put on full alert. In case there was another energy surge, the staff made extra certain that they were ready to rush in and address the issue as efficiently as they could.

Thanks to being occupied up on Kami's Lookout making preparations for the battle ahead, the members of the Z-fighters Gohan, Videl and Piccolo, who had been brought to the attention of the mysterious armored assassin the previous afternoon, completely missed out on the blackout debacle. After all, regularly occurring human calamities were considered the least of the team's worries, as they were currently dealing with an even bigger issue in the form of a ki draining sociopath. The thought that the man was capable of absorbing different types of energy was completely lost on all of them as the demi-Saiyan and his teammates flew down to the capital in the final hour leading up to their fated meeting with their unknown quarry.

Landing on a distant tor on the outside of Satan City, Gohan, Piccolo and Videl went over the plan of attack one last time. After assuring his comrades that he would be okay, the young warrior, dressed in a white turtleneck and tight jeans, and assumed in his Super Saiyan form, took flight towards the center of the metropolis. Passing over traffic and crowds of people wandering aimlessly in the streets, the powered up young warrior soon arrived in the Central Plaza.

This particular landmark and tourist hotspot was designed into a miniature town square; a quad with a post-modern statue made of iron and resembling a person standing in the center, with enormous glass buildings, most of them five star shopping malls, surrounding the courtyard. Set in the heart of the wealthiest district within the city itself, there were dozens of people wandering around the place, enjoying breakfast at the local bars and having tea at the cafes setup alongside the shops. Since it was still early in the morning, the people had yet to clear off to their day jobs. The only plus-side was that the malls weren't flooded with customers yet. That wouldn't happen until sometime around ten.

Nevertheless, Gohan found the presence of people worrisome, and regarded them with both care and caution. After landing on the edge of the square and having a quick look around, drawing a couple of bewildered gazes from those civilians who recognized him as the Gold Fighter, the young Super Saiyan then began to march. Sensing and seeing nothing for him to be concerned about at first, the teenager then started a more thorough scan of the area. He circled the plaza, patrolling the floor plan and keeping an eye out for any sign of his would-be adversary.

The man had called him out here for a fight. If it was a battle that he wanted, then the Saiyan was going to give it to him.

Taking note of the large clock setup against the side of one of the buildings and seeing the hand tick over to nine, Gohan stopped beside the plaza's central statue and waited. Silence dawned across the area for the focused and battle hardened warrior as his steel gaze narrowed on the massive shopping complexes in front of him. With people continuing to walk about and some even stopping to snap some photos of him, particularly a group of girls from a nearby private school, the entire scene drew to a suspenseful still, in which nothing but white noise filled the half-Saiyan's ears.

Then, moments later, a scream of fright broke the mold, followed immediately by a series of surprised gasps that instantly had Gohan's body snap around.

Gaze locking onto the glass shopping mall on the other side of the plaza, the demi-Saiyan then used super speed to approach the area the noises and exclamations were coming from. When he entered the mall via the open glass doors and skidded to a stop at the edge of the crowd gathered in the center hall, the young man quickly nudged his way to the front. When he managed to weave his way through the mob of civilians, the young warrior then recoiled in shock when he saw for himself the cause of the disturbance.

Sitting as the centerpiece for the mall's grand entrance, there was a large fountain with the statue of Venus positioned proudly in the center. Through the cascading water raining down from the cupid statues gathered above the goddess and into the shallow pool surrounding her, Gohan spotted a person bound, gagged, and standing conscious against the statue with their hands tied in front of them.

It wasn't just any person either.

"Erasa!" Gohan gasped, before quickly sprinting forward. Jumping over the wall, the boy landed directly in front of his friend in a heartbeat. When he saw the girl look up at him, the concerned Saiyan took a quick moment to assess her condition. He narrowed his eyes when he saw a strange metal collar with a blinking blue light wrapped around her neck. Gripping it between his fingers, he snapped it in two and was relieved to feel her ki come back into focus. "An energy suppressor?"

Seeing she hadn't been harmed in any way, with another quick tug he snapped the ropes holding her to the statue, freeing her from the marble pillar. "Are you alright?" He then reached up to remove the gag.

The instant he pulled it away, Erasa shook her head and looked up, only for her eyes to widen in horror a split second later. "LOOK OUT!"

Spinning around, Gohan immediately spotted a red energy blade being guided by an unknown force and flying straight at him like an arrow. The sight of it approaching causing him to react in alarm, he speedily pushed Erasa out of the way and ducked at the last second, avoiding the blow that would have impaled his skull.

The instant he dropped, the energy sword buried itself into the side of the statue where it stopped. Instinctively, the young half-Saiyan then lunged towards the air and drove an elbow into whatever was attacking him. It came as no surprise when he felt his arm slam into something solid and heard a loud grunt. This was shortly followed by his invisible opponent dematerializing out of thin air as his active camouflage dissipated and his body was sent stumbling away, sword still firmly in hand.

Lying in the fountain water, Erasa looked back to see a now visible Vulcan staggering away, with Gohan standing bravely in place with his elbow jabbed forward.

The moment the giant mech appeared and attacked, the crowds of people flocking to the fountain quickly took flight, scattering across the plaza and out onto the streets, screaming in fear.

Upon hitting his opponent, the demi-Saiyan leapt out of the fountain and tumbled along the ground in an evasive maneuver, leaping to his feet and spinning around to properly face his assailant. When he did, he saw the massive, hulking mech, which stood at the exact same height as Piccolo, stomping towards him with his yellow optical sensors flaring brightly. Narrowing his eyes the young warrior threw up his left hand and fired a powerful Kiai right into the machine's chest. The repulsive shockwave slammed into Vulcan head on and managed to slow him down, jerking him to a momentary halt. Despite this, the soldier kept right on coming, bringing up his sword and, using speed the Z-fighter didn't expect, lunged forward and swung for his head.

Gohan slipped it, avoiding the decapitating strike and prepared for another blast. But the mech swung at him a second time with an upward blow, which clipped the Super Saiyan in the shoulder. Grunting at the glancing blow, the young warrior gritted his teeth and rushed forward. Diving in close to stop Vulcan from using his weapon, he tackled the armored suit in the stomach and sent him into the ground, slamming the man's back into the fountain wall and crushing it under his weight.

Seemingly dazing the pilot, Gohan kept it pinned to the floor with his full body. When the giant robot turned its head to look in his direction, the demi-Saiyan backhanded it with his fist, stunning him, before grabbing its arm and slamming it repeatedly into the floor, forcing it to release its sword. The weapon flew out of his grip and landed outside the fountain's pool, just a few feet from where Erasa was now standing out in the open.

Giving an audible growl, the mech suddenly reached over with its free arm, grabbed Gohan's waist with its gigantic hand, and threw him to the floor next to him. As soon as he had the Saiyan on his back, Vulcan cocked his right fist behind him and slammed it into the teen's stomach, caving him into the floor. The blow landed with a deafening thunderclap, drawing a cry of pain from the demi-Saiyan and causing him to spit up blood as a result of the rib crushing blow. The teen then ended up grabbing the stomach area that was hit with both hands, rolling over in agony while the giant armored suit lumbered to its feet.

After rising to full height, Vulcan stomped around and smirked down at the fallen warrior. "Like the rest of your kin; you lack discipline and imagination. Pathetic." With the Gold Fighter still on the ground, the pilot reached down and grabbed the teen by the head. After turning his face towards him to get a good look at his cringing mug, the mech then turned, aimed out the entrance of the shopping complex, and chucked the boy straight out into the plaza.

Gohan's body was sent flying through the wall of glass, where he proceeded to bounce several times across the square and eventually slam into the building on the other side. His impact was marked by a shattering of glass and a cloud of dust, which shot out of the store he'd ended up flying into like a miniature explosion.

Seeing her friend get taken down brought a terrified look to Erasa's face. '"Gohan!"

The sight of the boy's crash landing drew a chuckle from Vulcan, who then stomped after him and out of the ruined mall. Not caring as he broke down the rest of the door frame and began cracking the tiles at his feet under every footstep, the giant armored suit made a terrifying impression on his audience as they ran screaming past him in panic. Now that explosions were taking place across the plaza, no one wanted to be within even a mile of this bout. Only those who'd heard of the Gold Fighter's legendary exploits and were bold enough to want to stay, held their ground and kept their distance.

While marching across the now slightly battered square toward the other side, the armored warrior smirked. "After everything I heard about you Saiyans, I figured that you would be a lot tougher than this. But I guess I was wrong."

A few seconds after he said this, he suddenly saw the hole in the café's wall explode outwards in a shower of rubble and debris, which blocked out his view of the ground floor of the structure for several moments. Stopping in his tracks, Vulcan narrowed his gaze upon the anomaly as his scanners honed in on the center. A split second later, he saw the cloud of dust clear and his adversary come floating out of the shop. Battered yet standing upright and proud, Gohan's golden aura blazed around him like a hurricane, with currents of blue electricity surrounding him, and his hair elongated and standing on end, accompanied by a single bang beating over his forehead as opposed to his previous two.

Blinking at the sight of the teen glaring daggers in his direction, the pilot inside the suit chuckled and rolled his shoulders. "Oh? Did I say something to piss you off?" The numbers on his helmet then echoed out in a series of notable beeps, giving the Vulcan a display of his adversary's power level. "3000 roentgens? Not bad." He then sneered confidently. "Still... it's not enough."

Gohan landed firmly on the ground safely outside the café and scowled at his foul smiling opponent. "That's some impressive tech you've got there." He then nodded at the man inquisitively. "Mind telling me where you got it from?"

The warrior straightened his back, lifted his hand and waved it through the air in a condescending manner. "I'm glad you asked that because I wanted to... take this time to reveal all of my dirty secrets." All of a sudden, Vulcan thrust said hand forward and unleashed a powerful red beam of liquid energy from his fingers.

Balking in shock, Gohan reacted defensively and dodged to the right, the blast clipping his arm on the way past so that it punched a hole through the building behind him. Briefly looking back and then towards the burn caused by the glancing shot, the Super Saiyan 2 snapped his gaze back around to see his opponent hold up both his hands and begin lobbing similar red blasts his way. The bolt sized attacks flew at the demi-warrior faster than light, threatening to tear him apart. Holding his ground, the Saiyan powered up so that his aura surrounded him protectively and he began deflecting the shots one after the other. The attacks bounced into the sky, scattering across the countryside and landing safely out of harm's reach.

As another volley of blasts flew his way, Gohan advanced, blocking them with his hands and forearms with expert precision. Vulcan meanwhile started to edge around the area, firing shot after shot with terrifying accuracy, all targeting the boy in front of him. It was after marching through another volley of red death that the half-Saiyan eventually came within a few yards of his enemy, who stopped moving around the perimeter of the square when he found himself backed into a corner.

The moment his target got close, the armored warrior took flight, the jets on his back and boots firing up and propelling him into the sky at ridiculous speeds. As he climbed, Vulcan unleashed another volley of continuous energy blasts down at the Saiyan, who defended against them while at the same time stopping them from hitting the plaza.

Vulcan ascended to about twenty stories above the city streets, where he then produced a cluster of barrels from his gauntlet and unleashed several energy blasts upon his target at the exact same time. The sight of the approaching rain of energy beams forced Gohan to dive out of the way, resulting in the attack striking the square and decimating half of it in a fiery explosion. This allowed the mech pilot to maneuver behind a nearby skyscraper, where he took cover as the demi-Saiyan rolled back to his feet.

Leaping into a stance, the still powered up warrior gritted his teeth and watched the area of sky his foe had disappeared in with a hard glare. His reaction to the salvo was mostly out of frustration at how troublesome this guy was already proving to be.

Despite his looks, this mech pilot mercenary was a lot more powerful than Gohan initially gave him credit for. Due to the fact he couldn't sense his bloody energy signature the demi-Saiyan wasn't able to gauge exactly how strong he was. What's more, his attacks were powerful, damnably fast, and deceptively precise.

A single misfire and he risked accidentally taking out one of the surrounding buildings or nuking this entire area.

The fact that this assassin was fighting him in such a densely populated area meant that Gohan couldn't use any big moves against him without risking the civilians. He was keeping it confined to this space, which was honestly putting a lot of pressure on the seasoned Z-fighter.

Hell, he couldn't use any big moves anyway due to the guy's ability to absorb energy attacks. Since a lot of his strongest techniques involved blasts, this pretty much cut his ability to fight effectively by half.

While his eyes scanned the clouds, Gohan suddenly spotted a flash of light from the top of the nearby skyscraper, followed instantly by a massive red energy blast that was sent rocketing towards him. Sensing just how much power it possessed, Gohan cocked back his right hand and, thrusting it forward, unleashed an even more powerful golden blast towards it. Their attacks collided above the city streets in a colossal, sphere-shaped explosion, one that rocked the buildings around them and rattled windows for miles. The people on the ground cried out in terror when the shockwave caused by the calamity hit them from above.

With the fire in the sky slowly starting to dissipate, the demi-Saiyan's eyes cut through the smoke in search of his opponent. When he saw the cloud break and his opponent come diving down at him feet first, his jets roaring loudly, the Super Saiyan 2 leapt into the air and, with a growl of effort, slammed two feet into the mech's stomach. The blow knocked Vulcan out of the sky and sent the armored suit plummeting to the ground, which he hit with a loud bang. Bouncing once off of the concrete and cracking it, Vulcan quickly rolled to his feet and hopped up onto one knee, just in time to see Gohan dive down at him with a second kick.

The armored warrior lifted up his arm and blocked it, the impact of which echoed across the quad like an artillery round. He then blocked a right hook and parried a left body shot while still on his knee, but was unable to deflect the right roundhouse kick that crashed into his helmet. The hit was loud and the force of impact was even greater, sending the armored mech onto his back several yards away. The instant Vulcan went down Gohan dove at him and buried a knee into his stomach with earth splitting force, smashing a crater into the floor around them.

Pinning his opponent, the demi-Saiyan then grabbed the unit by his metallic collar and began driving punches into the mech's helmet one after the other at blinding speed. Yelling out with every hit, the young warrior drove his blows into his target's skull like a piston, shaking the earth around them and causing every single building within ten miles of their position to rattle under the sheer force of the assault. The citizens of Satan City thought they were experiencing a freak earthquake of some kind, when in reality it was just the planet crushing blows of the Super Saiyan 2 attempting to bury his opponent into the ground.

Feeling the earth ripple violently under the blows, a closely watching Erasa, who was standing safely on the edge of the plaza behind a bollard, raised her still bound hands and shouted. "Get him, Gohan! Beat his metal ass!"

It looked as though he was on the verge of pulverizing his adversary into dust. But just as the half-Saiyan warrior was loading up for yet another power shot, the teen suddenly saw the front visor of the helmet around the optical sensors open up. When the plates slid away, Gohan then saw his assailant's face emerge from the confines of his head protection, scarred, gritted, yet completely unscathed.

With barely a scratch on his armor or his skin, the calm and collected Vulcan smirked up at his Saiyan foe and spoke in an arrogant tone of voice, "Is that all you've got?"

Gritting his teeth, Gohan powered up and prepared to hit him while his real face was exposed. Faster than the Saiyan could react though, the armored suit's chest suddenly opened up, revealing the barrel of a large cannon. Then, in the blink of an eye, the hidden weapon fired a titanic red blast straight into the teen's stomach, which detonated with terrifying volume and power, and sent the boy flying off of his opponent and bouncing across the court like a ragdoll.

After a two second flight, the winded demi-Saiyan righted himself and landed firmly against the side of a café wall, crouched against it, and then launched himself at his opponent. In that time, the mech managed to shut his helmet and leap to his feet with surprising flexibility, just in time to see his target flying at him with a swinging right overhand.

Throwing both arms up, the mech blocked the punch, but the force of the attack was so great it broke open his guard and sent him skidding back along the floor for several feet. After Vulcan forced himself to a stop, he then rushed at his opponent with a hook, which Gohan blocked and locked under his arm. The demi-Saiyan then blocked a left punch from his foe, catching his wrist, holding it, and trapping the mech in his iron grip. But just when the Z-fighter thought he had him, the pilot reared back his head and slammed it into Gohan's face, hitting him square in the forehead with a loud 'crack' and forcing the boy to let go. The force of the unexpected hit sent the young warrior flying back a few yards to land hard on the concrete floor, which he slid across before flipping backwards onto his feet.

Taking a stance once again, Gohan gritted his teeth and began powering up to Super Saiyan 3 to finish this prick off. As big a risk it was to max out in the middle of a public area, the young warrior knew that he was quickly running low on options. He had to try and finish this now, and with as little damage as possible. When his aura burst up around him and he began focusing his energy through his muscles, he was all set for the big jump. However, as his aura tore into the ground and his bio-field crackled around him like a storm, Gohan then looked up with a start when he noticed a big problem.

"Hang on... something's wrong."

For some reason the Saiyan couldn't explain, his energy levels had dropped to a ridiculously low level. His current reading was registering far below par and his muscles felt like they had just been injected with several hundred pounds of lead, preventing him from ascending to the third level. It was a clear sign of both ki exhaustion and fatigue.
When he first arrived at this city he was in peak physical condition and his power was well over a hundred percent. But now…

Snapping out of his befuddled state when he remembered his current position, Gohan instead cupped his hands beside him and prepared to throw another Kiai at his opponent. The moment his form locked however, his armored opponent had already taken flight and was now rocketing towards him at bullet speed.

While approaching his target, Vulcan suddenly raised his right gauntlet and fired a metal cord towards the demi-Saiyan, the whip-like projectile wrapping around his target's wrists and binding them together. When he flew past the young warrior, he yanked Gohan off his feet and proceeded to drag him across the plaza surface. Flying over the rubble, the armored warrior swung the teenager into the ground floor of a second shopping center, smashing him through windows and walls all along the way. The demi-Saiyan grunted when his body crashed through a vast assortment of barriers and obstacles, as well completely decimating an entire row of cafes one after the other.

Eventually though, Gohan became fed up with being dragged around like a sack of potatoes and, with his body covered in a new collection of bruises and scratches, rolled onto his feet and yanked back on the cord wrapped around his wrists. Using all the strength he could muster, Gohan managed to jerk the mech's flight to a halt, drawing the attention of his opponent and resulting in a vicious tug of war match.

His thrusters blasting away in an attempt to get the boy off the ground, Vulcan growled when he couldn't budge his opponent one bit. So, taking aim with his left gauntlet, he fired a cluster of rockets towards his enemy.

Spotting the incoming salvo, the teen powered up and snapped the cord with a quick pull, before jumping out of the way at the last second to avoid the wave of projectiles. The missiles detonated against the plaza floor and took a decent chunk out of the nearby mall, flooding the air with glass and smoke. When Gohan landed on the other side of the ruined square, he saw the rest of the rockets fired by his opponent flying towards him. Upon taking count of the homing weapons, with a quick swipe of his hand, the young warrior detonated them with a well-timed shockwave. The rockets went off one after the other in the direction his hand was thrown in a series of multiple explosions.

Gohan narrowed his eyes when he felt the force they went off with. "Those rockets are more powerful than they look… very powerful and concentrated chemical explosions. I should avoid getting hit by those."

Hearing a loud clank behind him, Gohan looked over his shoulder to see his opponent had landed on the other side of the plaza, dropped into a fighting stance. Spinning to face him, the Z-fighter suddenly saw the robot take aim at him with his fist a third time before, without warning, the pilot launched it at him at blinding speed.

Gohan, responding in alarm, ducked under the fist and watched it slam into the building behind him, demolishing it in spectacular fashion. The instant he avoided it, the Super Saiyan 2 powered up and, his aura exploding around him like wild fire, launched himself towards his quarry at full speed. Bathed in gold, the demi-Saiyan cocked his fist back and prepared to drive it straight through his target's chest while he was still assumed in a firing position.

"Let's see you block this!" Gohan roared, watching as rocket pods opened up on his target's shoulders, limbs, sides and chest, before launching another hail of high explosive projectiles in his direction. Plowing through the missiles effortlessly so that they either missed or detonated...
harmlessly against his aura, the young Z-warrior barreled towards the intimidating mech. Then, with a bellow of rage and effort, he threw a punch straight into the armored suit's chassis, intending to rip straight through it.

However, just as he was making his final approach, Gohan suddenly saw his opponent's form shimmer before, in a flicker of blue electricity, the mechanized suit vanished into thin air. The sight of his target turning invisible had the demi-Saiyan's eyes widen the moment he let his attack fly, only to hit nothing when he passed the very spot Vulcan had been standing. The miss caused Gohan to throw himself into a forward flip and slam his feet into the ground, slide to a stop and spin around. His aura still active, the teen glared in the direction his foe had previously been positioned before beginning to look around for any sign of him.

For the next couple of seconds Gohan attempted to track down his now invisible foe. But thanks to the suit's ability to completely mask its pilot's ki and presence, the demi-Saiyan couldn't find even a single sliver of it. However, this all changed moments later when, picking up a faint whirring sound on the breeze, the defensive hybrid suddenly felt the equivalent of a train being plowed across his face as his head was smacked painfully to the side. This punch was then promptly followed by a barrage of other punches flying in from all directions, an assault that literally had the teen's body lifted off the floor and knocked around through the air like a ball on a string. His invisible opponent took full advantage of the young man's confusion to assault his target and mercilessly beat the stuffing out of him at his own leisure.

After a couple of seconds of attacking the Saiyan, the phantom brawler's body reformed out of thin air and, with his free hand cocked back, slammed it into the teen's stomach and sent him flying through the plaza statue. Gohan bounced across the quad along with the remains of the monument for several dozen yards, managing to land on his feet and, taking aim, charged towards the mech at full speed. Aura blazing around him, the Saiyan slammed an elbow across his target's face in a running blow, a loud clang ringing out as he blew past the unit and knocked him backwards. Immediately after which Gohan then leapt after him a second time and landed two more blows across the pilot's face. He then kicked Vulcan in the temple area and attempted to nail him with a hook, only for the armored warrior to duck it and land a swift body shot in his side instead.

The blow slammed into Gohan's waist, dispelled his aura and crumpled the Super Saiyan to the ground, allowing Vulcan to grab him by the head and throw him into the floor a few yards away, punching a crater into the damaged tiles with an earthshaking tremor. While the boy was down, the mech marched over to him, simultaneously holding his stump of an arm out and retracting the missing fist he'd fired earlier from the rubble of the downed building. As soon as the gauntlet reattached to its limb and locked up, the mech loaded his arm and threw it down at his target.

On his hands and knees, Gohan spun around and fired another shockwave at the soldier, which slammed into Vulcan's chassis like a cannon shot. When he stumbled, it allowed the Ascended Saiyan to leap to his feet and drive a right cross into the soldier's face. A thunderclap rang out from the hit, which the Z-fighter prepared to follow with a left hook, only for the mech pilot to catch his arm with his massive hand and begin twisting his arm into submission.

Gohan, attempting to resist, heard his bones and muscles creak as his limb was twisted into an uncomfortable position, bringing him to his knees. The Super Saiyan 2 then growled and powered up, golden flames and blue electricity shooting up around him in an attempt to muscle his way out of the hold. But just when it seemed like he was about to break free, he suddenly saw his aura start to get sucked into his opponent's arm and felt his energy begin to leave his body at an alarming rate.

The nodes and channels all over its armor starting to glow a bright gold, the large mech's eyes flared up as it continued forcing his foe towards the ground. At the same time, the pilot looked on with growing satisfaction as an expression of utter bewilderment and disbelief formed across his victim's face.

Hair reverting back to its original state as his Super Saiyan form dissipated, the now base form Gohan gasped as he continued to watch his aura flood into his opponent's suit like water down a drain and his strength gradually leave him. "W-What the hell?"

Having observed the entire fight from the safety of her fixture, Erasa, who initially believed her classmate was going to win the fight, was now looking on in fear as her friend was slowly brought to heel under his powerful enemy's grip. When she saw his golden form fade and his legs crumple under the weight of fatigue and exhaustion, her eyes widened in panic. "Oh no."

Vulcan, watching the numbers in his helmet skyrocket, gave a robotic chuckle as he continued to feel the boy's energy course into his suit and leaned in closer when his adversary dropped to both his knees. "Remarkable isn't it? The incredible feats we humans are capable of achieving with today's technology."

"All this time you thought you've been fighting smart and trying to break through my armor. But what you didn't realize was that with every blow you managed to land against me, I've been subtly siphoning off of your energy and steadily growing in strength."

Looking up in disbelief, the demi-Saiyan gasped in disbelief, "What?"

So that's why his attacks felt like they were slacking. The force behind them was being dissipated by the man's suit!

A sinister look flickered across the mech's visor. "This armor was designed with the ability to absorb energy, including the kinetic energy of punches, to augment the strength of the user. It doesn't matter how strong or how precise the blow is, whether it's a flick from a finger or a thermonuclear explosion at point blank range, the suit will simply nullify its force via the anti-vector field coating the surface and absorb the energy into its neutron core. That means the harder you fight against me, the stronger I get. Sure, it's expensive as hell and the technology is impossible to replicate, but as long as it gets the job done, I say it's worth every zeni." He then brought his fist up and began to load it, seeing his steadily weakening enemy glare up at him in anger. The look on his face drew a grunt and a menacing leer from the pilot. "Don't pass out on me just yet. We're just getting started. I know this isn't all you've got. Get mad. Show me what you can really do… Gold Fighter."

Gohan, gritting his teeth, caused his eyes to momentarily flicker turquoise. "You really don't want to do that."

This statement drew a laugh from the armored man. "Oh, I'm pretty sure I really do. Come on. Let's see that full power of yours."

The metal in his arm creaking as he drew it back like an arrow in a bow, Vulcan prepared to bury it into his stubborn enemy's face. But then, just as he was about to fire off his attack, Erasa, sneaking up behind the hulking suit of armor, pulled back the metal pole she was holding and slammed it over the back of the mech's head. The blow impacted against the soldier's helmet with a loud and hilarious 'clang' reminiscent of a bell being rung, which had the soldier stand there in nerve rattling silence before turning to look behind him.

When the suit's eyes fell upon her, the girl stood in place, staring back awkwardly at the robot as it glared at her. Realizing a few moments later what she'd done, Erasa frowned and took another stance, holding the frame of the window she'd picked up like a bat.

"You wanna fight? Bring it on, tin man!" the blonde shouted, narrowing her gaze upon the intimidating machine.

Gaze hardening, the robot turned to her, brought his free arm up, and pointed it at her like a gun.
When Erasa saw an RPG pop out of the gauntlet, her eyes widened and she froze up.

But just before it could launch its rocket at its new target, a shadow suddenly fell over the mech before Vulcan was unexpectedly struck across the face by a kick. The impact of the blow forcing him to release Gohan from his hold, he was then sent flying across the plaza, sliding to a stop some yards later and looking back to see that his attacker was none other than Videl Satan. He raven haired defender of the city landed in front of her kneeling boyfriend and stood at her friend's defense.

Blinking in surprise, the pilot then prepared to focus his attention on the strong newcomer, until a second figure dropped down in front of him and began nailing him across the face with a blur of punches. Deafening clangs ringing out, the mech staggered backwards through the ruined plaza as Piccolo, cape and turban long gone, drove his strongest blows into the soldier as fast as he could.
His surprise attack stunned the pilot momentarily, forcing the mechanized enemy into a retreat as he bore down on him with the fury of a Namekian warrior.

Yelling out as he plowed a kick into the mech's stomach, sending the hulking block of metal skidding along the floor, Piccolo then looked back at the others with a glare filled with intensity and desperation. "I'll hold him off! Help him!" He then went at the armored soldier a second time, grabbing the machine man by the shoulders and pushing him back across the quad, straight into a shopping mall and into a wall.

Nodding after she watched the green fighter cave in the complex in a shower of rubble and debris, the girl reached into her pocket and, yanking out a Senzu bean, tossed it over to her boyfriend.
"Here!" When the demi-Saiyan caught it, he wasted no time tossing the herb into his mouth and biting down. "Go Super Saiyan 3 and finish this sucker. Don't worry about any damages you make to the city. They can be fixed."

Considering how dangerous their situation was becoming, the demi-Saiyan didn't have any reason to argue. His opponent was just too strong for him to show any restraint and he acknowledged this with a firm and understanding nod. "Right." He then looked across at Erasa to see if the girl was alright.

When his eyes fell upon her, the blonde dropped the pole she was holding and brought her hands to her chest. Blue eyes meeting his, she smiled encouragingly his way and nodded. "Go get him."

Acknowledging her words with a grin, the spiky haired teen then used a quick Kiai to break the rope around her wrists, looked ahead of him, and allowed the Senzu bean he just ate to take effect.

As Gohan continued his speedy recovery, over on Piccolo's end, the Namekian's assault on the mech had come to a screaming halt. After burying body blow after body blow into the armor with murderous precision in an attempt to cripple it in some way, the green fighter was suddenly punched across the face by the armored suit, picked up by the waist, and thrown to the ground like a bag of rocks. When he struck the floor and punched a substantially large crater into the cement, Vulcan then lifted his right foot and prepared to stomp him into the ground. But the Z-fighter, not willing to give up yet, rolled out of the way and leapt to his feet. He then launched himself at the mech a third time, only to see the robot lift its arm up and fire a red blast from his fingertips, which struck the Namekian in the chest and sent the man barreling across the plaza.

Piccolo then collided with a nearby center, flying straight through the window and several stores inside it before eventually crash landing in the clothing department.

Taking aim at the building with the same hand, the pilot of the mech prepared to disintegrate the structure along with his opponent as a red sphere of energy formed in front of his palm. However, just moments before he was fully charged, Videl suddenly teleported in front of him and kicked his arm skywards, causing him to misfire and send the ball of light hurtling into the atmosphere. The attack detonated with the force of a nuke safely above the city, yet still managed to shake the countryside with the explosion it generated.

After redirecting his blast, the raven haired girl drove a punch into the mech's side, hitting it with a loud 'clang' but failing to damage it. She then ducked a swing from one of its massive arms before hiking off of his forward leg and running up the robot's chest. She then used its face as a springboard and, after slamming a foot into its mask, back flipped away. As soon as she landed safely a few feet in front of the hulking metal suit, she then brought both hands up for a Kiai, only for the mech to thrust its hand forward and unleash a torrent of red lightning at her. The blast of electricity sent the girl flying back to the floor, where the bolts of energy proceeded to fry her.

Screaming out at the top of her lungs as electricity coursed through her entire body, all Videl could do was writhe and flail uselessly as the mech advanced upon her.

Vulcan chuckled as he continued bombarding Satan City's poster girl with red lightning. "Want some more?" He then brought his other hand forward and took aim.

But then, just before he could fire a second stream of lightning at the girl, he suddenly heard a sonic boom ahead of him before something fast and powerful slammed into his chest, knocking him into one of the still standing shopping complexes and pushing him straight through its many walls. Barrier after barrier was blown apart as the metal soldier was plowed through the structure at terrifying speed, where he eventually exploded out the other end and onto the main highway. As soon as he was clear of the building, the mech was promptly kicked down the street and sent bouncing across the road, before coming to a grinding stop on his hands and knees.

The people on the street who saw the explosion and the one responsible for it tumble onto the highway, destroying several parked cars in the process, panicked and ran for it. Once again, only those bold enough and curious enough chose to stay, wanting to watch the conflict that was now starting up in the middle of their fair city.

Rising to his feet and shaking his head, the slightly stunned Vulcan looked up to see his previous opponent Gohan standing at the other end assumed in his Ascended Saiyan form. His body bathed in a golden glow with bolts of blue electricity running up and down his frame, he looked as awe striking and fresh as the minute he started out in this fight.

Nevertheless, the sight of the ethereal-looking Saiyan drew a dark chuckle from the mercenary as he rose up to full height once more. "Seriously? This again? Don't you realize that no matter how hard you try, you're never going to be able to beat me?"

Scowling unpleasingly, the now well and truly infuriated young man spat venomously at his opponent. "We'll see." Then, clenching his fists tightly, the boy focused his energy and, with a bellow of rage and a flash of blinding light, his aura exploded off of him like wildfire and his short, blonde spiky hair grew down to his waist. At the same time, his eyebrows vanished into his forehead and his form bulked up, showcasing a considerable increase in power. Energy skyrocketing as a result, the conclusion to his transformation was marked by a flash of lightning and a shockwave that punched a massive crater into the road beneath him, startling the observing civilians and cracking the nearby structures. The hurricane wind also generated by the boy's power up damn near knocked all the people and the surrounding buildings over.

Shielding himself from the blazing gale and looking back at his opponent to witness his drastic transformation, Vulcan narrowed his eyes when the numbers on his visor went through the roof. A smirk then slowly pulled across his lips when the readings stabilized. "So... this is the power you've been hiding from me? I'm not impressed." When he saw the Super Saiyan 3's frown deepen, the robotic man raised his head and sneered. "Although... now that I think about it, your hair would look pretty good sitting on the wall next to all my old army relics. Perhaps once I kill you and take your body back to my boss for study, I think I'll bring your head home with me as a trophy. Your friends' heads too."

It was a split second later that Vulcan soon realized that that probably wasn't the best thing for him to say.

Before the soldier could even blink, Gohan eyes widened into an expression of pure rage and, with enough force that he literally caused the space and matter around him to distort through a visible ripple, fired a full-body shockwave at the armored warrior. The attack slammed into Vulcan's frame with such power it split the earth around him and knocked him stumbling away like he just tripped over something. The instant he was thrown off balance, the glowing warrior dashed over to a nearby range rover, picked it up by the front bumper, and hurled it at the mech with the speed of a meteorite. Vulcan barely had enough time to throw his hands forward and catch it before it rammed into him like a locomotive, causing him to skid back a few feet.

At first he thought he'd blocked the attack. But the instant his hands stopped the vehicle, Gohan's fist suddenly crashed through the car and slammed into Vulcan's face, sending him hurtling down the road along with the remains of the four-wheel drive as it was practically disintegrated by the punch. The mech bounced several times before eventually throwing its feet back and digging them into the tarmac, forcing its pilot to a stop. However, the instant his momentum ceased, the soldier saw his opponent come blazing towards him in the form of a golden comet, which crashed into his chest, lifted him off the ground, and sent him flying down the main road.

Traveling faster than light, Gohan grabbed his opponent by the visor and, with a roar of effort, slammed the back of his head into the road and began to drag him through the cement. The pair tore a trench down Fifth Avenue like a bolt of lightning, sending rubble, debris and parked cars flying in all directions. Eventually, after feeling his skull rattle against the inside of his helmet for a solid few seconds, Vulcan then kicked his opponent in the stomach and sent him flipping through the air, ceasing his own momentum and allowing him to coast to a gentle stop. The demi-Saiyan meanwhile, his aura dissipating, spun through the air and landed against the side of a nearby skyscraper, which he crouched down upon and glared towards his grounded adversary.

When Vulcan jumped out of the hole he'd formed with his body, the man wasted no time igniting his boosters and shooting up at his stationary target. The soldier swung at the boy with a punch in an effort to deck him through the wall, only to be backhanded when the young warrior effortlessly dodged and struck him with an attack that sent him spinning towards another tower. While he was in midflight, Gohan took aim at him and fired a second Kiai, slamming it into his back and sending him spiraling into the twenty-eighth floor of an office building.

Gohan then flew after him through the hole the mech had formed, blasting past the ruined office cubicles and towards the wall on the other side of the room. When he teleported into view and skidded to a stop, eyes fixed ahead of him, he was suddenly blindsided by his adversary coming up on his right and nailing him across the back with an enormous desk, the item shattering and sending him spinning across the room. Crashing through dozens of large computer terminals and towers, the demi-Saiyan ended up rolling along the floor of the department and jumping to his feet. When he did, he was quickly set upon by Vulcan charging in and hammering away at his body with merciless blows.

The man's punches crashed into his guard again and again, smacking him left and right as they battled fiercely across the office, breaking through cubicles and smashing desks to pieces as if they were nothing but confetti. After blasting through another wall like it wasn't even there, Vulcan got behind Gohan and trapped him in a head lock, only to receive a swift elbow to the stomach that had him stagger away. The pair then swung at each other with a punch that connected with a deafening thunderclap and disintegrated everything within five feet of them from the shockwave. When their fists bounced off of each other, the Super Saiyan 3 dove in and tackled his opponent, blasting him through more walls and finally out the window.

Gohan forced his opponent into the sky above the city. Once he reached a high enough altitude, he detached from his foe, locked his hands above his head, and drove a hammer blow right into the mech's body. A shockwave rang out as Vulcan was sent plummeting into a construction site, where his metallic body smashed through every floor and railing of the building that was under construction. The steel frames snapped and crashed all the way down to ground floor, where the armored soldier impacted with an earthshaking tremor.

When the man eventually struggled to his feet from the crater he'd formed, he then looked up to see support beams from the structure raining down on him and hastily leapt out of the way as they cascaded around him. Jumping to his feet safely outside of the building's area, he was then struck by his Super Saiyan opponent teleporting directly beside him and nailing him in the face with a kick, lifting him off the floor and sending him shooting into a pile of building equipment lying on the edge of the worksite.

Upon landing that blow and dropping to his feet, Gohan, with electricity running up and down his golden form, panted as he felt his energy levels take another serious hit.

"Fighting in Super Saiyan 3 even for three minutes against this guy is really taking it out of me," the demi-Saiyan thought, dropping into a stance when he saw the cloud of dust his opponent had formed fade and his hulking form rise up from the heap of decimated building equipment. "But I'm not giving up. Not yet! That suit can only take so much punishment, and I'm not going to stop until either it breaks or I break!"

Right now the guy was getting closer and closer to his level the more attacks he took and the more energy he absorbed. At the rate this was going, Gohan knew without a shadow of a doubt that he would be fighting someone on par with his level of strength and speed, a prospect that he was not looking forward to. After all, from the amount of ki the suit had already absorbed, the Z-fighter was pretty certain the guy already had an insanely dangerous amount of energy coursing through his system. Perhaps if he kept at it and continued laying into the guy with everything he had, something was bound to give way sooner or later.

The hybrid's first strategy to beat his opponent with purely physical attacks and shockwaves had failed. He even tried targeting the mech's joints and vital areas to exploit any structural weak points it may have, but that didn't work either. The machine was just too tough and the metal was too durable, probably made of the same adamantite material Bulma infused into her Gravity Room designs.

Now Gohan was working a different strategy and, if his hypothesis was correct and if he timed it right, he was positive he would be able to make it work.

Powering up with a yell of rage, the Super Saiyan 3 allowed his aura to flare around him before blasting towards his opponent. When Vulcan saw his enemy approaching, he quickly reached around, grabbed a nearby metal beam, and swung it through the air like a bat. The soldier managed to smack the approaching demi-warrior in the side and send him hurtling through the air towards a nearby crane.

Slowing his ascent, Gohan gritted his teeth and struck out with his arm, slicing through the crane's chain hanging next to him and catching the wrecking ball as it fell. Taking it up in both hands, the blonde dove towards his target and, performing an impressive aerial flip, threw the wrecking ball straight down at the mech. The armored suit threw its hands up defensively and ended up getting crushed underneath the plummeting metal sphere, which nailed him into the ground with an earsplitting thunderclap.

Upon burying his foe, Gohan skillfully landed behind the impact zone of the wrecking ball, where he quickly gripped hold of the chain in both hands and yanked the metal sphere out of the ground. Then, spinning it through the air with a yell, he swung the object back towards his opponent in a wide arc, catching Vulcan in the middle of standing up and slamming his makeshift kusarigama into him, sending the armored man blasting into the air.

Igniting his rockets to stop his flight after the wicked hit, the mech leveled out in midair. Looking down to see the demi-Saiyan swinging the several ton wrecking ball above him like a lasso, the soldier cursed inside his helmet and fired a liquid beam from his finger. He managed to strike the chain while Gohan was spinning it above him, causing it to snap and fly up towards the soldier. Then, ducking under the airborne sphere with a quick aerial maneuver, Vulcan caught the chain and, with a yell of his own, chucked it back at his target.

The Saiyan instinctively spun on the ground and nailed the wrecking ball in the side with a roundhouse kick, sending it blasting into the incomplete building and knocking down an entire section of it. Almost as soon as he deflected it, Gohan received a kick to the face that sent him blasting across the property, through the metal fence, and straight into a parked truck. Caving in the side of the mover like it was nothing but crate paper, the blonde shook his head to rid himself of the stars he was seeing and, spotting his opponent appear above the construction site, turned his attention over to a parked sedan. Getting an idea, the hybrid teleported over to the vehicle, slammed his fists into its side, ripped it in half and, while holding the two halves with his bare hands, cracked them together like a pair of boxing gloves.

Vulcan responded to his opponent's challenge by opening up the thrusters on his suit and diving down at him. Growling when he saw the mech rocketing towards him, Gohan charged at his opponent in kind, yelling out when they met in the center of the main road and swung at each other with their respective attacks.

Having the longer reach and the greater speed, the demi-Saiyan easily drew first blood. A loud clang rang out when he slammed a right cross into Vulcan's body, smashing the car against him and causing the armored man to recoil in shock. Gohan then proceeded to slam the two halves of the sedan into his opponent over and over again, hitting him with wild hooks and punches as bits of car and shockwaves filled the air. The car's horn also beeped comically with every hit, adding an extra sound effect to the tremors being generated by their battle.

The manner in which the Z-fighter struck down his opponent was like a person wielding two enormous sledgehammers, which he used to nail his enemy repeatedly until both halves of the car disintegrated under the punishment, leaving the soldier winded on the ground.
With his opponent kneeling in front of him, Gohan drew back his right fist for a blow that would more than likely put the armored suit in the ground. However, as lightning crackled around his forearm and the demi-Saiyan swung in, Vulcan suddenly jumped off the ground and slammed a palm into the teen's open chest, sending the boy blasting down the main road to crash into the tarmac eight blocks away. His impact caused a geyser of dust and rubble to shoot into the air. The people surrounding that area screamed and ran for it as the entire suburb was bombarded by debris.

Rockets propelling him above the buildings once again, Vulcan held out both his arms and quickly produced two mini-guns from his wrist gauntlets. As soon as they popped into view, they then began spraying a hail of red, bullet-shaped energy blasts towards his target lying in the fissure just down the road. The entire area was soon subjected to a scene reminiscent of an artillery barrage as the entire street was hammered by the rain of powerful attacks. The mech pilot continued to decimate that part of the town with a grin on his face and as the cloud of smoke rose higher into the sky, the damage to the city steadily mounted.

Feeling his skin start to sear under the heat of the attacks raining down on him, with his arms bearing the brunt of the assault, the battered Gohan gritted his teeth and glared through the flashes and hellfire. Struggling to his feet under the force of compressed meteorites crashing into him en masse, the demi-Saiyan gave a guttural growl before, bringing his right hand back, began to gather all of the remaining energy he could muster. His golden aura kicking up around him and repelling a majority of the bombardment, he then conjured up his electric bio-field and compressed it into his palm.

Finally, after feeling he'd gathered all the energy he needed, the Super Saiyan 3 threw his hand forward and unleashed the mother of all elemental attacks upon his enemy.

"RAIKA HOKEN!" Howling in rage, a current of blue lightning exploded from Gohan's body, cutting through the hail of energy blasts and shooting straight towards his mechanized opponent. The bolts crashed into Vulcan's frame with a tidal wave of planet-destructive power, engulfing the soldier and sending him further up into the sky as chain after chain of super charged lightning spears erupted from the demi-Saiyan in a chorus of deafening thunderclaps that echoed across the countryside, accompanied by a string of concussive shockwaves.

People screamed and ducked for cover when lightning filled the sky, as if the deities themselves had grown tired of waiting and, opening up heaven's doors, decided to bring the wrath of Kami down upon them in the most terrifying manner imaginable.

The sheer amount of power from the attack caused the earth to tremble and bursts of excess lightning to blast outwards at an alarming rate. There was so much of it in fact that any bolts that didn't impact their target directly, shot through the atmosphere and up into space. The blasts reached as far as Mars' orbit, despite not being intentionally hurled that far and traveling based solely on their momentum. What Gohan was really aiming for was his mechanized opponent, who he was determined to incinerate or destroy in one go. But as lightning continued to stream out of his body like water through a burst dam, the demi-Saiyan could only watch in utter bewilderment as the mech took each and every one of his attacks head-on and absorbed them.

Body shining like a bulb and his arms crossed over his face, Vulcan floated there beneath the clouds as his opponent mercilessly hammered him with lightning. The flashes created by each individual strike were so intense and so bright that the man flinched from every shot that struck his customized suit. If he were a normal fighter, a barrage like this would've disintegrated him on the first shot. But thanks to his armor's ability to absorb energy, the man was able to withstand the planet destructive attacks of his foe, who was now putting everything he had into this move in an attempt to bring him down.
As the counter in his helmet continued to climb with every roentgen of energy his suit absorbed, the soldier piloting the mech smirked. "This kid is hilarious. Does he seriously think he can bring me down with this level of attack? What an idiot." Guard lowering, Vulcan decided to wait out the storm until his opponent lost steam and passed out.

But just when the pilot was about to settle in for a short pause, he suddenly saw his target vanish in a teleport before reappearing in a golden flash directly in front of him. Caught completely off guard by his speed, Vulcan was then tackled in the stomach by his opponent ramming an elbow into his gut at full speed. The blow sent him hurtling up into the sky, where he was quickly pursued by the enraged Saiyan. Shockwaves reverberated throughout the atmosphere when Gohan began driving his strongest blows into his target in a vicious combo, yelling out with every punch and kick that struck the mech's chassis. During the assault, the ridiculously durable suit retaliated with a few of its own punches and hooks, only to have them deflected and countered respectfully.

Soon enough, Gohan had managed to punch and kick his opponent well up into the clouds. It was here, after reaching the very edge of the stratosphere itself, the demi-Saiyan teleported behind his foe and, with a mighty roar, buried a hammer blow into Vulcan's back. The attack struck with a tremendous thunderclap and sent the suit plummeting to the earth below. After a few seconds of uncontrolled descent, the armored suit then landed smack-bang in the middle of Satan City. His metal body slammed into the middle of the main road with a terrifying crash, which sent a cloud of dust and debris blasting into the air like a geyser. The people in the area literally had to leap out of the way to avoid the object and the rubble it sent flying in all directions following its collision with the earth.

The moment the dust settled in the wake of the calamity, Gohan landed beside the fissure with a gentle tap. Still assumed in his Super Saiyan 3 form and looking somewhat drained, the battered and burnt young warrior scanned around for a few seconds for any sign of his foe.

"Alright... where are you?" Stepping forward, he decided to go check out the center of the crater. By this point in time, the people who were in the area at the time of the disaster decided to approach the scene out of curiosity, wanting to see exactly what was going on.

However, just as Gohan was beginning to think he'd finally killed his opponent, the teen suddenly felt his arms lock together and his body lift off of the floor on its own accord. Gasping in shock, he attempted to fight against the vice-like grip that wrapped around his form, only to then look up when he saw a flicker of blue light before his invisible opponent appeared out of thin air.

Dropping his active camouflage, Vulcan, his helmet visor broken in half and revealing a portion of his bruised face, sneered at the demi-Saiyan, who he now had trapped in a bear hug. The boy attempted to fight against him, but despite his flailing, the man kept a firm grip on the spiky haired boy and locked his hands around his wrists, making sure escape was impossible.

"That was a good effort. You actually managed to damage my armor," the mercenary exclaimed in an amused tone of voice. Tightening his grip and crushing his opponent further into his chest, the soldier elicited a yelp of pain from the hybrid and let out a cold chuckle. "That last attack really caught me by surprise. I honestly thought you were going to kill me for a second. But it's going to take a lot more that savagery to beat someone of my caliber, boy. I'm far too good to be put down by a few love taps."

Gritting his teeth as the sounds of muscles popping and bones crunching filled the air, Gohan managed to hold back a cry of pain before smirking at his foe. "Don't bite off more... than you can… chew."

The pilot laughed and tightened his grip a little bit more. "If you're trying to act cool by bluffing your way out of this situation, you can forget it. Now that I've got my hands on you, there's no way in hell that you're going to be able to break free. In just a few seconds, I will have absorbed all of your power… and there won't be a single creature on this planet that will be able to stop me."

Feeling his energy begin to get sucked into the man's suit had the Super Saiyan 3 grin just a little bit wider as the pressure around him increased even more. "You think… you can handle it…?"

Vulcan grinned, "Oh, I know I can."

"Fine then… take it!" Gohan hissed, his energy starting to climb as a golden glow began to radiate off of his body. At first the pilot looked at his foe in confusion as electricity and energy began to waft off of him, even though he was still continuing to drain it. Then, almost as soon as the anomaly took place, the demi-Saiyan took a deep breath and, with his eyes widening, let out a bellow of rage, "TAKE IT AAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAALLLL!!"

A blinding light then filled the area when Gohan's aura blasted around him with the intensity of the sun, blue chains of lightning shooting out that soon began to get sucked into the mech. Vulcan literally recoiled in shock as an enormous tidal wave of energy rammed into his armor and began to course through his system, pouring into him all at once and causing the nodes in his protective gear to fly off the scale. Numbers blared and warning alarms went off as, little by little, every single storage chamber started to fill to the brim, with the main hub on the suit's back beginning to crackle and sparkle when the young Saiyan proceeded to force all of the power in his body into his opponent's.

People watching from a safe distance shielded their eyes and ducked for cover as the equivalent to a cyclone made landfall on downtown Satan City. Gale force winds lifted cars off of the streets and sent them tumbling down roads, with people left and right having to hang on for dear life to stop flying off with the rest of the traffic. Those that were inside nearby buildings also had to hold in their lunches as every single skyscraper and office structure was rocked from side to side by the repulsive forces blasting out from the heart of the squall. It was an event that carried on for several long minutes, as the defender of earth and the local hero of the capital continued to battle his adversary in the most intense tug-of-war match that part of the world had ever seen.

Energy blasting off of him in torrents and a scream of agony continuing to echo out, Gohan continued pushing energy into his adversary, who was now struggling to hold his ground as well as all the power he now had coursing through his suit's wiring. The heat at the center of their clash was intense, incinerating the ground beneath them and causing an enormous crater to form between the buildings. They were only fortunate it remained confined to that area, because both fighters highly doubted they could take a couple of skyscrapers collapsing on top of them when they were locked in such a delicate state.

But there was nothing at all delicate about a portable black hole sucking in several galaxies worth of energy into it and holding the rest of it at bay. At the rate this clash was going, it was only a matter of time before one of them reached their limit.

Several seconds later, one of them did.

The numbers in his suit peaking, Vulcan's armor soon reached the point where it could no longer take on anymore energy. Vents hissing loudly in an effort to expel the heat being produced by the high influx of ki, the portable neutron reactor built into the back of the suit finally achieved critical mass. With a loud 'crack' and a flash of light, the unit containing the miniature celestial body combusted and unleashed its payload with terrifying force.
The back of the armored mech exploded with orange fire, before a golden beam of light enveloped both warriors and shot straight up into the sky. This thick beam flared, crackled and burned brightly as it rocketed past the planet’s atmosphere and traveled through the depths of space for several minutes. Eventually, the center of the anomaly went up in a second flash of light and sent both figures blasting away with a thunderclap, landing half a kilometer away from one another.

When the dust from the chaos eventually faded sometime later, it revealed Gohan, dropped back to his normal form, lying at the foot of a set of stairs in a fissure of his own making. His shirt gone and his form covered in various burns and cuts, the young warrior panted exhaustedly as sweat poured down his ripped frame. Groaning, the demi-Saiyan coughed and sputtered a couple of times, and attempted to sit up. But thanks to the amount of energy he'd sacrificed in his battle with his mechanized foe, he was incapable of even wiggling his toes.

His muscles were numb and all his strength was gone.

"Ugh… I guess… this is what I get for… following-through on stupid plans," Gohan muttered to himself, at the same time trying to get some movement back into his limbs.

His attempts at a speedy recovery were actually coming along quite well. After only a few seconds, the boy was soon able to wiggle his pinky finger a little… and nothing else. This being the result of his hard efforts, the teen then proceeded to restore order to the rest of his frame. Unfortunately, he was unable to do so when he suddenly heard the distinct clunking of approaching footsteps and looked up to see his armored adversary lumber into view through the mist shrouding the area.

The plates of his armor sporting various scratches and burns as if he'd just been run through a blender, with an entire side portion and arm charred black, Vulcan's heavyset form ground to a stop in front of his exhausted victim. Suit sparking in an irregular manner, the shaken and scarred soldier sitting inside the unit growled and, lifting one of his enormous metal boots up, slammed it into the teen's stomach. The impact caused a loud 'crack' and drew a pained cry from the demi-Saiyan, who clawed at the ground as the pilot proceeded to crush him.

Taking a deep breath, while simultaneously ignoring the freshly made burn marks visible on the exposed parts of his face, the now notably pissed of soldier sneered at his quarry, who lay helpless beneath his heel. "I can certainly agree with you on that. It was definitely a stupid plan."

Gasping for air, Gohan gritted his teeth and, slowly and painfully, smirked up at the battered warrior. "But it worked… didn't it?"

"Oh, yes. It most certainly did." A grin then tugged at the corner of Vulcan's mouth as he reached for his belt and drew the handle of a new weapon. It was one that'd been concealed by his leg waist plate. "You destroyed my suit's neutron core; an incredible feat for a man of your background." As soon as he had the device in his grip, Vulcan struck it and revealed it to be another red energy blade about the size of a dagger, which he then brandished at the wounded Saiyan's face. "But you did so at great cost… and now you've lost." He then loaded up the weapon and took aim, watching the twisted expression on his opponent's face contort into more pain as he ground his foot further into the teen's ribcage. "Victory is mine."

Unwilling to give in just yet, Gohan, mustering up all the strength and fortitude that he could, chuckled weakly, "Congratulations."

Vulcan snorted at his half-assed response. "Any last words before I carve out your heart?"

Taking a few deep breaths in an effort to suppress the pain, the demi-Saiyan then looked his opponent square in his one visible eye. Then, after glancing down at the dagger a couple of times and taking note of its unique composition, looked up at the soldier inquisitively, "That blade… how sharp is it?"

Raising an eyebrow at his rather odd choice of last words, the soldier considered his inquiry for a moment. Being a proud soldier and figuring he could honor this last question with an answer, the man reluctantly gave the boy the information he wanted. "The blade is made out of laser-induced plasma outfitted to a magnetic stabilizer, and powered by hellion crystals. It's sharp enough to cut through almost any substance."

Gohan then smiled in a relieved manner, baffling his opponent with the mischievous glint in his tired eyes. "Good to know. Thanks."

Just before Vulcan could question what his opponent meant by that laidback reply, a sharp hiss followed by a loud 'squelch' filled the air when a red blade suddenly shot out of the left side of the mech's chest. The appearance of the energy blade caused the soldier to stiffen suddenly and gasp in shock as the section of plating the weapon stuck out of burned and sizzled. This prompted the pilot to drop his dagger and stumble away, revealing to his opponent that he'd been stabbed right through the back by the machete he'd dropped earlier all the way to the front.

And the person responsible for doing so turned out to be the raven haired prodigal daughter of Satan City herself. Standing there with her hair all a mess and holding her arm tightly, the tired and beaten-looking Videl smirked at the gasping soldier as he dropped to his knees before then collapsing onto his back, his energy sword still sticking out of him like a skewer through meat.

As he lay there with his organs failing one by one, the short-haired crime fighter stepped up to the stricken fighter and spoke in a loud voice, "And for the record… I would've kicked your ass the first time if Erasa hadn't stopped me."

She said that just seconds before blood came gargling out of Vulcan's mouth and his head finally lolled to the side. His final resting place ended up being the stairs directly beside the crater Gohan was lying in, the latter of whom was now staring across at his opponent with a serious look on his face and an unflinching gaze.

When the half-Saiyan eventually looked back at his girlfriend, and saw both Piccolo and Erasa standing behind her with varying levels of tiredness, the demi-Saiyan then let out a long breath of air and gave an exclamation of sheer relief. "Woo. Man… that was close." He then threw his girlfriend a cheerful and victorious grin. "Thanks, Videl."

The crime fighter smiled back, "It's what I'm here for." Plucking another Senzu bean out of her pocket, she then tossed it towards him and watched the boy catch it in his mouth.

Biting down and swallowing a couple chews later, Gohan soon felt life return to his body and slowly got back to his feet. Dusting his pants down and feeling crumbs of concrete fall out of his spiky black hair when he shook it out, he then turned to face Videl and shared a grin with her.

"You managed to find his sword?"

"Yeah. I just saw it lying out there in the open glowing like a flare. Since the guy was practically walking through everything we were throwing at him and was absorbing all of our attacks, I decided to take a chance," the raven haired fighter replied with a shrug. She then looked down at the man's lifeless body with a rather disturbed look in play. "Guess this would make this my first win."

"And a big one at that. The guy would've killed me if you hadn't shown up at the last second and stabbed him," Gohan said with a grateful look on his face. "That's twice you've saved my life."

Shooting him a warm smile, Videl then gestured over her shoulder. "If I'm not mistaken, I believe you owe her one as well."

Curious, the demi-Saiyan then turned his attention to Erasa to see the girl was standing nearby and looking at him in awe. As people started to spill into their area and return to the streets, the hybrid slowly moved towards his blonde haired friend. The moment she got a full frontal view of his bare upper body, the bubbly teenage blinkered in astonishment and took her time in looking him over, admiring him in his full, chiseled glory.

"Whoa." Thank goodness she had the right sense of mind not to drool.

Rolling her eyes, Videl crossed her arms and looked at her friend in amusement. "Really? Now?"

Hearing her friend's exclamation, Erasa quickly scrubbed her head of her stupor and grinned sheepishly at her classmate. "Sorry. Just… enjoying the view." While Piccolo was busy minding his own business in the background, figuring that this was a conversation he didn't need to get involved in, the blonde girl quickly looked back up at Gohan and, with a cheerful grin framing her pretty face, stared at the boy with a happy glimmer in her eye. "You came to rescue me."

The demi-Saiyan beamed, "Not just me..." He nodded toward his girlfriend and his mentor of many years. "All three of us did..."

"And we'd do it again in a heartbeat," Videl added from the sidelines, hands still comfortably crossed.

Smiling around at her closest companions, the blonde bowed her head to each of them and stepped towards Gohan with her hands behind her back. "Thank you. Really. I owe you two everything..."

"Hey. There's no need for that. To be completely honest, I'm the one that should be thanking you," the demi-Saiyan remarked, placing his hands on his hips and looking down at Erasa with his usual, cheerful disposition. "If you didn't come up behind the guy and whammed him over the head with that pole, I probably wouldn't even be standing here talking to you right now."

Erasa giggled and gazed fondly at her best friend. "Don't be so modest. You're the one that did all the heavy lifting." Not to mention the grinding and the iron punching. That fight was just monstrous.

Now she could see why he was the one that actually beat Cell. The stuff that he did in that battle was out of this world.

"True. But it's the way the heavy lifting is done that really counts. I had way too many close calls in that fight to call this any kind of a win for me. There was no way I could've won against this guy fighting on my own." He added to this by sparing a quick glance down at Vulcan's corpse, which lay sprawled out under the morning sun.

"So it was a team effort then?"

Gohan nodded affirmatively, "Oh yeah. A lot of our hardest fights were won through teamwork." He quickly spared a glance over at Videl and Piccolo, both of whom also shared a similar look with him. Upon which the teen gazed back at his inquisitive classmate, "That and a lot of luck. That's why I think I'm right in saying that I owe you big time for distracting the guy before he could put a fist-shaped hole through my head."
Raising an eyebrow at his reasoning, the blonde then spared the boy an amused expression. "How about this? Since you saved my life and I saved your life, I'll call it even between us if you do me one little favor."

Her sudden offer for parlay had the demi-Saiyan give his merry friend a curious once over. "What... kind of favor?"

At that, a sly smile formed across the girl's face. "Hold still."

Just before Gohan could say anything or throw a question her way, he then froze when the blonde suddenly stepped towards him and, leaning up on her tippy-toes, kissed him full on the lips. It was a gesture of affection that not only had the warrior teenager blush to the roots of his hair, but it also have a shiver run up his back when Erasa promptly wrapped her arms around his neck and pressed her lips in further.

Then, after several moments of awkward and tender silence, she then peeled away to find a very startled Gohan staring back at her, his eyes wide and face practically glowing. The sight of his deer-caught-in-the-headlights look drew a playful laugh from the girl and had her step away with a victorious spring in her step.

"Oh yeah. I think we're even now," Erasa said, her own cheeks glowing as she stared up at her stunned crush. "What do you think?"

"Uhh..." Gohan didn't know what to say. He was so stumped and shocked by the girl's actions that his tongue seemed to have been stricken with rigor mortis.

Just as he was in the process of recovering though, the pair then heard someone clearing their throat next to them and turned to see Videl standing by with her arms crossed and a deep frown on her face. When the demi-Saiyan saw his girlfriend tapping her foot at him, his face almost instantly turned from red to white and the young man started freaking out. Piccolo meanwhile, remained an abstract observer, looking upon the scene with a raised eyebrow and a moderate degree of interest, as his student was just now going through what he could only describe as a human-related crisis.

"Oh Kami... Videl... I uh... uhh... I can explain!" the demi-Saiyan exclaimed in panic, whereas Erasa remained completely calm, despite the boy's obvious distress and her other friend's expression of irritation.

After glaring across at the pair for a solid minute, the young crime fighter then uncrossed her arms, marched over to her boyfriend and, after looking him square in his terrified eyes, smirked and shot a look at her blonde classmate. "Erasa... didn't I just say to you yesterday to be patient while I took a couple of weeks to think about it?"

The blonde then gave the crime fighter a sweet smile and replied in a cheeky voice, "Think about what, Videl?"

"About whether or not I was interested in sharing him," the tomboy replied, quickly hopping over to stand beside her boyfriend and, wrapping her arms tightly around his, pulled the hunk of a male towards her. By this point in time, Gohan was so perplexed by what was going on that he was looking between the two girls as if they were both about to chop his head off. He also had the most innocent look of confusion they'd ever seen on him, making approaching the lug all the more tempting. "Right now, Gohan is my boyfriend. That means we're officially a couple. And if you think I'm going to let my childhood friend take him away from me so easily, you're sadly mistaken."

Not only did she say this in an overly challenging tone, but she also grinned confidently and winked in her friend's direction.
At first puzzled by her friend's declarations, Erasa then responded to her subtle message with a grin of her own and, taking appropriate action, moved towards the demi-Saiyan and latched onto his other arm. Gohan soon found himself sandwiched between both girls and was unable to stop the shade of red returning to his face, as he could now feel their ample chests pressing into his forearms.

In that one moment, he couldn't have been more confused and more bewildered even if he tried.

"Oh? And do you think I'm going to give up on him so easily? Well, think again, sister," Erasa shot back at her friend, grinning across at the crime fighter to meet her challenging glare head-on. "When I set my eyes on something, I'm in it to win it. There's no way I'm going down without a fight."

"Really? You think you can win Gohan's heart from me?"

"I don't think I can... I know I can," the blonde responded with a smirk, electricity crackling between the two classmates as their blue eyes locked on to one another. "Let the best woman win."

"Bring it on," Videl replied, similar auras forming around the pair that had the demi-Saiyan between them shiver.

Sweating up a storm as he looked between his girlfriend and his best friend, the spiky haired warrior swallowed nervously while a rather awkward thought passed through his head. Despite having gone through the worst hell imaginable, he couldn't help but dawn on this situation for a moment as the two teenagers played tug-of-war with his arms. "This is almost like that dream I had a couple of days ago," Gohan murmured as the pair's grips tightened around him and their breasts squished further against his arm.

He tried his best to ignore them. But in spite of his terrific fortitude, he just couldn't.

Looking down at his girlfriend, the demi-Saiyan gave the raven haired crime fighter a nervous stare. "Uhh... can I ask you why you're not angry with me right now... or why you're not trying to kill me? What's going on between you two?"

Videl quickly gave her boyfriend a smirk, "This is between me and Erasa, Gohan-kun. This has nothing to do with you."

"Yeah. Keep your cute nose out of this," the blonde girl also added with a nod.

The boy chuckled nervously. "I seriously doubt that..."

After what'd just happened a couple minutes prior, you could see his concerns. His anxious comment had Videl and Erasa give him mischievous grins, and left him feeling more uncomfortable than ever before.

Before the trio could get too wrapped up in their personal affairs, Piccolo, who was now shaking his head at the ridiculous scene, stepped forward and cleared his throat. "As entertaining as it is to watch you three kids bicker back and forth, I think we should focus our attention on the more pressing issue of where the hell this guy came from and why he attacked us." When he drew the group's attention over to him, he then directed his gaze towards the pilot lying in the battered hunk of metal at their feet. With the blade still lodged in his back and sticking out of his chest, the Namekian frowned. "We've fought against people enhanced by earthling technology before, but nothing as advanced as this. This man was able to take on a Super Saiyan 3 and still have enough energy to stand."
That was a feat no other fighter had been able to accomplish, even their worst enemies. While the androids had been ridiculously powerful at one stage, this man was able to trounce them all through a new level of tech that was considerably more advanced than anything they'd ever come across.

It was this realization and this thought that had Gohan and Videl frown apprehensively.

As the damaged suit sizzled away, the female crime fighter moved away from her boyfriend and looked up at him. "What do you think? Could this guy have something to do with the androids?"

The young Saiyan shook his head, at the same time Erasa also stepped away to gaze worryingly at the soldier's corpse. "No. This guy is part of something else. The way he fought and came after me was way different to anything I was expecting. He knew how to take us on and he exploited all of our weaknesses with ease."

Gulping, the blonde next to the demi-Saiyan looked towards him as well. "Is there a chance he's working with someone?"

This was a question Gohan was easily able to answer and he did so with a troubled air in his person. "While we were fighting, he mentioned something about bringing me back to his 'boss'. That means he's taking orders from somebody who's obviously developed an unhealthy interest in our group." He then looked between both girls standing on either side of him before directing his gaze towards Piccolo. "I have no idea who it could be, but until we get to the bottom of this I think we should keep our eyes and ears open, and tread a little more carefully from now on."

The Namekian warrior nodded. "I agree."

Videl then crossed her arms and glared at their kebab of an opponent. "We should take this guy to Bulma's... see if she can figure out where this guy's tech came from and discover who's really behind this."

That was a suggestion both Gohan and Piccolo could easily get onboard with. So then, just as civilians starting pouring back into the streets and began approaching the spot where the final showdown between the Z-fighters and the unknown assailant took place, the demi-Saiyan grabbed hold of his friends and their corpse, and vanished in a flash of golden light. By the time the authorities arrived on the scene and the residents of that part of town got close enough to see the very spot the battle had ended, the heroes were long gone... as was their quarry.

XXX

(Later that day)

It was late afternoon over in Central City, the crowned capital of the mainland. Across the vast, sweeping metropolis making up the downtown area of the planet's largest known kingdom, situated in the center of the office district, there stood an enormous tower closely resembling the design of the World Financial Center. Posed as one of the tallest structures in the region, able to see the Northern edge of the city right down to the South, this monolith of mankind represented a symbol of prosperity and peace in the community, as well as the heart of the corporation that made up one of the many superpowers of the world.

This was, of course, the international conglomerate known as Talos Industries, the rival company of Capsule Corp and the brainchild of one of the smartest men in the world. At the very top of the tower, underneath the letters making up the name of the production giant, sat the main office and the command center of the business. And in that office, positioned directly in front of the window, the head of the corporation could be seen standing, his hands behind his back, and his eyes set firmly on the horizon beyond.

Poised within the spotless and incredibly spacious work area, with a red carpeted floor, mahogany walls and glass ceiling, the black-and-white suit wearing Kaiser was simmering the day away in the usual manner. Lost in thought and silent contemplation, the head of the company remained seemingly oblivious to everything going on around him. He didn't even move an inch when the automatic doors to his four-hundred meter square room opened and his secretary, Colonel Violet, dressed in a fashionable purple suit and skirt, sauntered in with a notepad in hand.

When she came within a few feet of his desk, the woman waited for a moment to see if her meditating boss would acknowledge her. After he didn't, she then spoke up. "Uh… boss… I have some news that you may want to-" She then stopped when she saw him raise his finger, causing her to cringe. "Oh… sorry."

Several seconds later, Kaiser lowered his hand, pulled out a transparent notepad, and typed into the program that was currently on display. "Take this down to Medical R&D… Hawker's branch." He then turned around and held out the portable computer for the woman to take, which she did after strolling over to him.

"What were you working on? Cure for cancer?"

"Close. Acquired Immunodeficiency Disorder." When he saw the ex-military officer take it from him, the scientific genius smiled and looked away. "Have Hawker patent it and slow the formula to a crawl. Make it a lifelong treatment."

Violet looked at him with a smirk. "Cold as ever, aren't you?"

"That's how it is in the real world. Stuff like this can't simply be handed out to people on a silver platter… they need to be earned. People have to learn to take more responsibility with their lives and to tread through this world with caution."

After hearing her boss say this, the purple haired woman remained silent for several moments before looking down at her notebook. "Anyway boss, the news on the battle in Satan City you wanted to-"

"Beautiful, isn't it?" Kaiser suddenly interrupted a second time, raising his hand and gesturing out the window. When his secretary looked up to see him staring out across the sunset bathed environment, the manager of the office proceeded to elaborate on his own question. "Not too long ago, this entire city was subjected to the worst tyranny ever witnessed by man and saw a great portion of it transformed into a smoking crater by the wrath of the mighty King Piccolo. It was only thanks to my company's diligent efforts and my charity that Central City was able to return to its former glory, and the King's Palace was fully restored. Times were tough back then, but after years of hard work and persistence, the population of this country managed to get back to its feet." He then shook his head in mild amazement. "It's ironic isn't it… how greedy people can be despite living in such marvelous splendor. They've grown fat and comfortable with their snug little lives-"

"Vulcan is dead, sir."

"…"

"…"

"…"
There was a long, cold silence that filled the room, one that had Violet shuffle uncomfortable on the spot as she waited for her boss's reaction. Due to the true nature and general intent made known by her employer, she had every right to fear what was to come. It was only after a couple of minutes she soon got her answer and it damn near frightened her out of her skin.

The man with the goatee turned to glance over his shoulder with a frown. "Do we have the footage from the battle?"

Swallowing nervously, Colonel Violet nodded. "Yes, sir. The recordings we got from the satellites and the surveillance cameras on site captured every moment of his battle. We even received the complete feedback from Vulcan's suit before it shut down and deleted all information."

"I assume his body has now fallen into the hands of the Z-fighters?"

"Bulma Briefs is looking it over as we speak."

"Good," Kaiser replied, breathing a sigh of relief as he then turned to smile out his window. "Even if she does delve into the suit's memory banks, she won't find anything in it that will trace it back to us. There are far too many channels for her to navigate through and too many dead ends. I made sure that all information pertaining to Vulcan and his connection to our organization has been wiped clean from the system."

Tapping her fingers, the purple haired, former Red Ribbon Army commander straightened up. "Would you like me to donate his finances and personal effects to charity?"

"Yes. I think that would be very nice," Kaiser chirped, strumming his fingers as he kept them linked behind him. "His retirement fund is quite substantial, after all. Always good to boost the morale of the common folk." He then waved over his shoulder. "See to it that his apartment is destroyed, as well as any and all other sensitive information regarding his involvement with us."

The woman bowed. "As you wish, sir." The secretary then turned heel and left the room, her stride matching the same vigor she used to enter the hundredth floor office.

The instant he heard the door close behind Colonel Violet a few seconds later, Kaiser remained standing in place for some time, before a foul grin formed across his face. As the sun fully set over the horizon, leaving an eerie orange glow hanging in the sky and in its place, the mogul and billionaire business owner chuckled and closed his eyes.

"Everything is going exactly as planned…"

(To be continued)

Author's Note: Another chapter and another turning point in the story. If you thought things were going well for the Z-fighters before, well… they're about to get a whole lot worse.

I thought Vulcan was a really cool villain. Not only does he have a beefed up version of Android 19 and Android 20's Energy Absorption technique and can do it with his whole body like Super Android 17, but he can cloak himself with invisibility like that guy Goku and his friends fought years ago, uses rockets and other weapons like those 'Tuffle' soldiers from Dragonball Z: Multiverse, and beam weapons. His Energy Absorption technique isn't like Super 17s, since Super 17 can absorb as much energy as he wants without overloading, but the same weakness Super 17 had doesn't apply to him. His main weakness was storage capacity, which his suit did not have, and the fact his suit couldn't nullify his own weapons. There's also a bunch of other weaknesses.
associated with this type of armor, but those will be explored much later in the story.

Basically Vulcan's character is an improved version of the old Android concept. Like Meta Cooler, he steals energy from living organisms and such to fuel his power cells, and can become stronger and stronger the more he fights. Vulcan's Neutron Star core is also the same the Geti Star that Cooler uses as a home base and stores most of his power, only it has a greater capacity and is contained inside his suit. Just like Cooler, even Vulcan had a limit as to how much energy he could absorb. This is basically taking existing ideas from the Dragonball Z universe, modifying them, and applying them to the story. I'm also taking some design inspiration from other series' like Marvel, Cowboy Beebop, Gurren Lagann, Kill la Kill, and a host of other awesome animations and anime.

This chapter also marked one of the many occasions Gohan actually lost a straight-up fight. Why don't we pull up a tally to check his score?

Gohan's Fighting Record:

Gohan (SSJ) vs. Zangya, Bujin and Bido - (Loss)

Gohan (SSJ) vs. Bojack (Round 1) – (Loss)

Gohan (SSJ2) vs. Bojack, Zangya and Bujin (Round 2) – (Win)

Gohan (SSJ) and Z-fighters vs Kana (Round 1) – (Loss)

Gohan (SSJ2) vs Kana (Round 2) – (Win)

Gohan (SSJ) vs Paprika – (Win)

Gohan vs Videl – (Win)

Gohan (SSJ), Zangya and Videl vs Zeru (Round 1) – (Loss)

Gohan (SSJ2) and Z-fighters vs Zeru (Round 2) – (Win)

Gohan (SSJ2) and Piccolo vs Minions of Set – (Loss)

Gohan (SSJ2) and Z-fighters vs Set (Round 1) – (Loss)

Gohan (SSJG3) vs Set – (Win)

Gohan (SSJ2) vs Aphrodite – (Loss) lol

Gohan (SSJ2) vs Vulcan – (Loss)

Gohan (SSJ3) vs Vulcan – (Loss)

I think that pretty much covers it for Legacies so far. A couple of fights he's won under his own power, a few enemies he fought that he couldn't hope to beat on his own, and a handful of losses. You don't have to die to actually lose a fight; it's the quality of your fight and what you do in it that really counts. Hope you all enjoyed the chapter and stay tuned for more chaos to come.
Phantom Enemy Arc - The End

Dragonball Z

Legacies

The End…

(15 Years in the Future)

Orbiting the solar system in the third place from the sun, an eerily familiar planet continued its infinite lapping of the region. Looking at it from a distance, this world lacked any and all life. Its surface was blackened, covered in volcanic fissures and cracks stretching from the northern hemisphere to the southern hemisphere, and its atmosphere was clogged up with smoke and hurricane-like storms. On first glance it seemed like some random planet in another galaxy or star cluster that was practically uninhabitable. But in reality, this planet, which possessed the exact same weight, makeup and consistency as the earth, was in fact the earth.

The only problem was that, unlike the earth of the present, this one looked as though the apocalypse had finally come and laid its claim upon its inhabitants.

Across the once lush, green landscapes and ocean covered floors of this futuristic dystopia, death and decay dominated the surface of every continent. Volcanoes, crevices and barren wastelands stretched as far as the eye could see in all directions, and in the city ruins where large populations of people once lived peacefully with one another, sleek, steel factories, cooling stacks and skyscrapers resembling enormous computer terminals towered above the ruins, symbolizing the current empire in control of this part of space. The best way to describe this new world was post-nuclear fallout, where the skies had turned black with smog, the air had become toxic, and the humans that once existed as the guiding lights of the world had all but lost to the machines.

In actuality… this illustration couldn't have been any closer to the truth even if it tried. The thunder and lightning that reverberated across the countryside only seemed to accentuate this fact.

Beneath the beating heart of the steel, industrial centers dotting the surface of the world and the metropolis formerly known as West City, in the bowels of the earth where enormous sewer systems weaved around in an endless labyrinth, a figure was currently on the run.

Dashing down one of the concrete tunnels at Flash-like speeds, the tiny figure's silhouette flickered past the few remaining lights still illuminating a path through the maze. Her footsteps clapping against the mud covered floor and splashing through the occasional puddle, the mysterious runner then skidded to a stop at a fork in her road. Amidst the low rumblings and tremors reverberating around her from the surface above, the figure's face revealed itself from the shadows to be a young, thirteen year old girl with short black hair trimmed to a shoulder-length bob cut, with a pretty face and charcoal black eyes. She also had on her a pair of martial arts boots, a red and blue gi with a blue belt tied firmly around her waist, and a very familiar power-pole strapped to her person, which sat alongside a khaki backpack.

Appearing both battered and scuffed from whatever adventure she was returning from, the muddy girl panted as she took a moment to catch her breath. All of a sudden, the post-apocalyptic adolescent then looked behind her in alarm when she heard a distant whirring noise and a loud clanging of pipes. Upon hearing the sound echoing off of the walls, the raven haired runner then took flight down the tunnel to her right and continued making her way across the city via its hidden highway.

Her sprint through the maze carried on for several more minutes. The sounds of distant explosions could still be heard booming throughout the labyrinth despite its size and scale, and were made even more pronounced in the various pockets of intersections and flood ways the girl entered, which were now barren and empty. After traversing through seemingly endless miles of dried up passages and pipes the girl soon happened upon a large, rusty iron door, which had been built at the end of a long corridor.

Stopping in front of it, she banged against the side and waited. Moments later, the door opened up with a loud creak, and the familiar, lavender haired form of one of her closest friends and allies stepped into view.

He was also one of the only family members she had left.

Looking to be in his late twenties with most of his hair tied back into a ponytail, wearing combat boots, black pants, a maroon turtleneck, scarf, a brown trench coat with a fur collar, and a katana hanging at his side, the now adult Trunks looked down at the new arrival in surprise. "Pan? What's going on? What ha-"

"No time to explain," the girl said loudly, pushing past the Saiyan and jogging down the brick-lined hallway with speed and purpose. When the hybrid warrior shut the iron gates behind them, he quickly followed after her. "They know where we are and they're on their way."

Looking startled at the news, the lavender haired boy quickly fell in step with her as they ran towards the main room built just down the tunnel. "How many?"

"Too many to count. Enough to invade an entire star system."

Frowning at the news, the demi-Saiyan with the sword looked ahead of him as they closed in on the archway. "Then he must be serious this time."

"We've been a thorn in his side for over ten years now. Frankly I'm not surprised he's coming after us with everything he's got," Pan replied without a single hitch or stammer in her voice. Despite how scary the situation sounded, the young fighter knew that this was no time to clam up. They all needed to be strong, now more than ever… even in the face of overwhelming odds.

When the pair finally exited the corridor and into the central room of their home, the raven haired girl stopped and looked back at her senior. "Do you think he'll be there with them?"

"Most likely," Trunks murmured, nudging past her and heading down the metal steps. "Knowing the kind of scumbag he is, there's no way in hell he's going to miss the opportunity to finish us off himself. Especially since we now hold the key to destroying him once and for all." He then stopped at the base and looked up at his comrade with a serious look in play. "You have it, right?"

Hiking down the rest of the flight, the girl frowned at him as she passed. "Of course I do. What? You think we went all that way out into no-man's-land to come back empty handed?"

The lavender haired man smirked back at her. "Just checking." After seeing her saunter on, the older Saiyan followed.

As expected of an underground, secret base, the facility had everything it was supposed to have. The central room in particular was a large, round chamber with archways leading and connecting to a whole bunch of other tunnels, making this a convergence point for over a dozen pipelines. The interior of the room was constructed out of bricks, with walkways and stairs crisscrossing the space and leading to different levels. Since this also served as a home for the people that lived here, not only were there a couple of worn out couches, cupboards and cots set up in the living area on one side, there was also a rundown kitchen area and a small wreck room.

The majority of the place was filled with computers, monitors, Tesla coils, and all other manner of scientific equipment, most of which was state of the art, whereas a good other percentage of it looked salvaged. This included pipes, wiring, cooling equipment, and some of the processing towers. There also appeared to be a couple of reactors set up against the side of the chamber, including a particle accelerator and a massive workshop equipped for heavy duty maintenance on vehicle-sized machinery.

It was here where the rest of their group was currently stationed.

Gathered around the workshop's central control panel, there stood three figures. One of them, standing in the middle of their formation and working away at the board, was a woman in her midfifties yet still looking incredibly young, with long blue hair tied into a ponytail, wearing combat boots, tattered jeans, a white shirt, yellow Capsule Corp vest, and a red ascot.

The person standing next to her and also typing into the keys of the computer was a fit-looking, middle-aged man wearing a black suit, with slicked-back black hair, and a mustache and goatee.
Though his outfit was completely out of place, considering the time and setting they were in, he seemed completely unaffected by the harshness of the world around him. His uniform, in contrast to his compatriots, was completely spotless.

The third person standing guard alongside the diligently working pair was another beautiful young woman with shoulder-length black hair in a hime-cut, wearing army camouflage pants, combat boots, an orange singlet that exposed her toned midriff, and an RAF jacket. Despite how turbulent the earth had become and the exhaustion that racked her body, the female fighter still looked as beautiful and vibrant as ever. She was currently leaning against the control board of the work station and was watching the pair of scientists toiling away, but as soon as she sensed the two youngsters approaching them from the stairway, she looked across at them and stood off of the panel.

Her eyes instantly landing on the woman in the pilot jacket, Pan's expression lit up and she rushed over to her, "Mum!"

"Pan," the thirty-odd year old female replied, sighing in relief when the adolescent leapt into her arms and hugged her tightly. Returning it while simultaneously patting the child on the head, Videl then set her daughter to her feet and looked at her with concern. "Your energy signature disappeared. We were all worried sick about you. What happened?"

"Sorry, mum." The child frowned as she stared up at her parent. "We ran into some trouble."

"Trouble?" Drawn to the attention of the hybrid Saiyan, the blue haired woman at the control panel, Bulma Briefs, turned to face the Son's daughter with a serious gaze. "What kind of trouble?"
She then had a quick look around. When all she saw was Trunks ambling down the stairs after the newcomer, her face slowly formed into one reflecting dread. "Where's Paprika?"

Expression falling, Pan looked away from the women staring at her and shook her head. "She… didn't make it." It was this announcement that had everyone standing in the area freeze and their moods plummet. After several moments of silence passed, the child then looked back at Bulma with her eyes gleaming with hurt and loss. "When we broke into the master control's mainframe, an entire squadron of drones was waiting for us… including one of the android's generals. Paprika held them off long enough for me to get away from there, and killed the commander by sucking both herself and it into the Dead Zone.”

The quiet in the room carried on for some time after that, in which all the people present used the next few minutes to recover from the shock of learning that another of their closest friends had been lost. They paid their respects to her.

When one of the distant rumbles eventually echoed into their midst and broke the ice, the group was soon joined by two more figures walking in from the other side of the chamber. Their presences shaking them out of their trances, the team standing by the computer terminal looked across the workspace to see the familiar form of Zangya, adorned in white shorts, yellow boots, a white singlet top and blue vest, step into view. She was also accompanied by a second figure, a much younger girl around the same age as Pan, with a fair complexion, red hair similar in style to her mother's, wearing an orange singlet top, dark blue spandex shorts, yellow boots and wrist guards, and a long purple scarf. She also had a machete sheathed onto her back and a combat knife belted to the same bandoleer at the front.

As soon as she appeared, the Hera, arms folded, looked around at her teammates sternly and with great purpose. "We can still save her." When she saw she had their full and undivided attention, she then directed her gaze over to the workstation, where the machine all their hopes were resting on was currently parked and waiting for launch. "Save her and the rest of the universe. As long as we still have breath in our bodies and strength in our legs, there's still a chance we can win this thing."

The vehicle she was referring to of course was the ever familiar, single-seated time machine she remembered Mirai Trunks traveling in all those years ago. However, unlike that particular model, this version of the yellow time capsule was larger and, aside from having a sleeker design, had some extra additions melded into the surface. It was this very medium that Bulma… that everyone gathered in that room… had all their last remaining prayers and expectations resting in its seats.

Bulma, hearing her friend's words loud and clear, steeled her jaw and nodded affirmatively. "That's right. Once we send you kids back into the past, we'll be able to make sure none of this ever happens and change things to the way they're supposed to be. This war, our friends' deaths, this hell of a world... we'll be able to reverse it all." She then turned back to where Videl was standing and set her eyes on the girl's daughter. "Did you manage to get the data we need to finish the omega cycle?"

"Yes. We got it all," Pan replied, quickly jogging over to the woman and handing her the USB, "The final piece to the puzzle."

"Excellent," Bulma exclaimed, taking it from the girl and quickly rushing back over to the computer. Stopping beside the man in the suit, the blue haired woman handed it to him. "Can you make this work?"

Looking like he hadn't aged a day, the suit-wearing gentleman, who was none other than former Talos Industries leader Kaiser, looked in the woman's direction and quickly took the device from her. "Of course I can. Who do you think you're talking to?" He smiled when he held the USB between his fingers. "I did say this was the last one, didn't I?" Wasting no time in plugging it in, the man's fingers then flew across the board and began typing into the computer at blinding speeds. The screens in front of him flickered with thousands upon thousands of lines of code, which zipped past at the exact same rate Kaiser's fingers danced over the screen. After several tense seconds of watching the man tap away, a series of beeps rang out as the segments of code were then arranged into a 3D rubix cube of information. A green text soon appeared over it reading 'complete', upon which the machines in the corner of the room started to buzz with life.

A few hisses and clanks later and a large terminal was suddenly ejected from the side of the block in the form of a drawer. When the panel appeared, Bulma marched over to it and removed the contents from the case, which turned out to be six vials of a grey, swirling liquid. The sediment inside the small tubes looping and swirling about at random, the blue haired woman quickly moved over to where the others were standing and held out two of them to her compatriots.

"They're finished," Bulma informed, watching Pan walk forward and stop just a few feet from her. Kaiser, looking on from his station, smiled at the raven haired child when she analyzed the items curiously. "Thanks to the information you and Paprika were able to steal over the last six months, the two of us were finally able to complete the weapon that will allow us to destroy the abomination plaguing our universe once and for all, and save trillions of lives in the process." He then gestured towards the tubes in question. "These nano-machines Bulma developed are specially designed for the sole purpose of killing the A.I they've been programmed to target, by shutting him out of all other electronic and mechanical interfaces, thereby confining him to a single body and rendering his transfer capabilities inoperable."

"If these get into his system, there's no way he'll be able to eject them and there's no way he'll be able to escape. All you have to do after that is destroy his body and his brain, and make sure there isn't a single piece of him remaining," Bulma added. When she saw the young Saiyan child in front of her nod in understanding, the scientist then placed two of the vials into her waiting hands, before beaming warmly in her direction. "Just stab him with this and let the nano-machines do their job. The rest will be up to you and Eva." She nodded towards the long haired teen standing next to Zangya, who stood at attention upon being addressed.

Blinking as she glanced down at the vials in her hands, the thirteen year old Pan thought about them for a good long moment. Upon which she then looked across at her mother and martial arts teacher. "But… why us? Can't you or Trunks go back in the time machine and do it?"

The lavender haired adult folded his arms and stared back at his student seriously. "We've talked about this. It has to be you two. No one else is more qualified."

"That's not true. You, mum and Zangya are so much more powerful than us and have way more experience. Any one of you guys would be able to do this easily."

It was at the girl's questioning that Bulma once again spoke up. "It's not because they don't want to go… it's because they can't go, Pan." Placing two of the other vials into Eva's steady hands, the blue haired scientist turned to stare across at the young Saiyan with a solemn expression in play. "The reason we're sending you and Eva back to destroy the cyborg before he can achieve full power is to make sure this future never happens. Not in this reality… or any other reality. To do this, we've programmed the time machine to travel along this universe's time stream and to go back to the year before any of this started."

"I ran the calculations myself," Kaiser spoke up, drawing the teenager's attention over to him as he continued typing into the computer. Looking from the screen to the yellow Capsule Corp pod positioned on the production room floor, the suit-wearing gentleman then glanced over at the girl with a frown. "The vehicle has been uploaded with the coordinates and data necessary to make the jump down our reality's continuum, thereby enabling us to change this future and to make sure it never transpires. The only problem with this paradox is that if two bodies from the same time stream but from different time periods were to meet in the exact same era, the resulting contact could cause a cosmic shockwave that could tear this universe apart and destroy all of creation."

The man then looked up at the stunned face of the young Pan and shrugged her way. "Not that it would be that bad of an outcome considering our current circumstances, but I would prefer avoiding that anomaly from taking place as much as possible."
While Pan was quite literally stunned by this information, Zangya's daughter, Eva, who was listening carefully from the sidelines, then narrowed her eyes on their former enemy in confusion. "But… didn't a Trunks from another future do that many years ago?" she asked while looking across at Bulma, who glanced back at the child inquisitively. "Videl told me and sis this story when we were both younger. A Trunks from a different future journeyed back to a time and place where he was still just a baby, and ended up fighting with you against Cell, the androids and Bojack, and the universe didn't fall apart then."

"That's because he came from an alternate timeline, sweetheart. An alternate universe," Bulma answered, looking the red haired girl in her crystal blue eyes to see her lurch a little in surprise. "The Trunks from that reality came to our world with the intent of warning us about the android threat and preventing the events in his future from ever happening. The me from the same timeline was able to create a machine that allowed him to do so. The only problem was that the me from his world didn't take the multiverse theory into account."

"The multiverse theory, or meta-universe paradox if you will, is the theory that there are multiple, parallel universes out there; each and every one of them branching out from the exact same starting point, yet each one following its own unique path," Kaiser interjected, focusing his attention on the group around him as the discussion progressed. "With every choice and action we make, we literally create a new world. History branches along two lines, creating one universe where we made the choice and a second where we didn't. That's the secret to creation; billions of people, making billions of choices, creating infinite universes… some so similar to each other you can spend a lifetime searching for any distinction… and others so radically different that they defy comprehension." He then tapped his nose at the kids with a half-smile in play. "And that's where the biggest complication with time travel lies."

"If the me from Mirai Trunks' time had wanted to alter their timeline and change their future, she would've needed to take into account the formulas necessary to maintain linear travel along a single continuum, so as to not break through the Coulomb and space-time barriers," Bulma informed with a grave look on her face. "Though she succeeded in solving the decoherence problem, she wasn't able to account for the slip-space imbalance. In the end, the Trunks from the future that we met ended up crossing over from his branch to another world altogether and back again. Hell, the Trunks that fought alongside us during the android crisis could've been a completely different warrior from the one that we met when Goku returned from space three years prior. It's a real pain in the butt to get around trying to solve this problem. Only the Gods would know how to travel through time without intruding on any of the other continuums."

"But where the Bulma from the alternate universe overlooked this fact, we did not. Thanks to the information Whis was able to give to us, I was able to perfect the space-time algorithm that will allow us to alter the time stream of our universe and change it for the better," Kaiser informed, pressing two more keys on the control panel and causing all the machines in the area to start humming loudly. A few seconds later, the pipes connected to the yellow time machine expelled steam before disconnecting, signaling the completion of his programming. Grinning triumphantly, the man in the neatly pressed suit turned to his colleagues with a look of excitement on his face. "That should do it then. We are finally 'go' for launch."

As Bulma quickly jogged over to the capsule to make sure all the cables were removed, Zangya crouched down in front of her daughter and, seeing the red haired girl look up from the vials she was holding, placed her hands on her shoulders and smiled warmly at her.

"You're ready for this, firecracker. I know you are," the orange haired adult whispered. She then brought her hands up to the teen's cheeks and cupped them, tenderly rubbing her thumbs against them. When the girl's eyes shimmered, Zangya's did too. "Make me proud."
Tears starting to form at the corners, Eva nodded. Clutching the vials close to her, she beamed. "I will mum… I promise."

Holding back tears of her own, the alien mother sniffed and ran a hand through her daughter's beautiful red hair, before then attempting to straighten up her scarf. "Maybe when you go back… if you're lucky… you'll be able to meet your father… and see the great man that he was back then. Just… be careful… and look after your sister." When Eva nodded, the two of them then shared a hug, with the Hera being sure to kiss her daughter on the cheek. "Love you."

"I love you too."

As they said their final goodbyes to one another and Videl approached her daughter to do the same, there was suddenly a loud rumble that shook the room that they were standing in. The anomaly forcing all of them to look around in alarm when dust and granite cascaded from the ceiling above, the troop then stretched out with their senses in order to determine the exact cause of the quake. After a few more low rumbles suddenly echoed into the chamber, the scientists then shared a look with one another and frowned.

"He's here," Kaiser informed.

"Then we don't have much time," Bulma said, hopping off of the top of the capsule and quickly marching over to another terminal. She then pointed across at her colleague and barked orders at him. "Make sure those coordinates are double-locked and checked and the fuel cells in the craft are fully charged. I'll handle the rest." She then marched over to the wall and, grabbing hold of two levers standing side by side, slammed them down, causing a loud hum to reverberate throughout the room and a massive surge of power to flood into the controls. The inventor then stood back and looked across at her allies. "No sense in tip-toeing around anymore." When her eyes fell on Pan, the Brief's mother nodded while clenching her fists tightly. "It's time to go."

Staring back at the woman for several tense seconds, the child, holding the vials closely to her chest, then looked up at her mother to see Videl kneel down in front of her. "I… I can't do this…" Pan whimpered, her eyes shimmering as she looked at her family pleadingly. "I can't do this, mum. I can't leave you here on your own."

Seeing her daughter was starting to crumble, the raven haired former crime fighter smiled warmly and brought a hand up to the girl's hair. As she stroked it, she whispered soothingly to her. "Shh, shh… it's alright, Pan. It's alright." She then took her child by the shoulder and squeezed it reassuringly. "You can do this."

The girl shook her head fiercely. "No. I can't."

"Yes, you can. Don't say that to yourself."

"But you'll die," the girl cried, tears starting to fall from her eyes as she looked back at her mother, who continued to smile at her. "I… I don't want to leave you here alone." Sniffling for a few moments, Pan gritted her teeth and pressed her cheek into her mother's hand when she continued to comfort her. "Why? Why does it have to be like this?"

Beaming brightly, Videl then pulled her daughter into her arms and hugged her tightly. After the girl sobbed freely into her shoulder for a full minute and her trembling ceased, the raven haired woman slowly moved away and, running a hand through her daughter's black locks again, beamed encouragingly in her direction. "Listen to me, Pan." When she saw the child wipe away tears on the back of her wristband, the mother continued, "You and Eva are the daughters of Son Gohan… the strongest, bravest, and greatest hero the earth has ever known." She then placed a hand over the center of her daughter's chest and pressed her palm into it. "You two have the same blood that ran through his veins. Not only do you possess his strength and his spirit, but also his ability to do amazing things." When she saw her daughter stare at her with wide eyes, the mother beamed. "There's no way that either of you will fail... for that I am certain."

As the pair gazed at each other, they were soon joined by Zangya and Eva. The Hera knelt down alongside them as well, and looked both children squarely in the eyes. "Your father sacrificed his life believing he'd saved the world. He and Sandra both. But now it's up to you two to finish what he started... and save the future."

When Pan and Eva looked into the eyes of their respective parents, the duo then glanced at each other. After sharing an understanding nod with one another, they then pocketed the vials that they were holding and, upon making sure that they were secure, the teary-eyed daughter of Videl then leapt into her mother's arms for one last hug.

"I love you, mum."
"I love you too, sweet heart."

The daughter was sure to kiss her mum on the cheek just as the parent did. Once a long embrace was shared, the pair then separated and the adults stood up, turning around to see Bulma, Kaiser and Trunks were all watching and waiting for them patiently.

Gazes locking, the man in the suit gestured towards the time capsule and spoke in a serious tone. "We've got to move."

Acknowledging the scientist's words, the two daughters rushed past their mothers and sprang up into the pod. Landing at the top and along its edge, the pair then slid into the two pilot seats built into the center. When Pan buckled in, Eva looked over the side and smiled down at the group gathered at the base of launch pad.

"Good luck, you guys. Give em' hell," the redhead shouted, earning warm smiles from Bulma and Kaiser.

When Zangya walked over to the edge of the platform with Videl, she looked up at her daughter and scowled at her. "Hey. Language."

Cringing a little and smiling sheepishly in a very Son Gohan way, the half-Hera, half-Saiyan beamed and sat back into the capsule as well. As she started to buckle up just as her teammate did, Pan peered over the side and waved, before then setting her sights on her friend and teacher. "Don't wait up. We won't be gone long."

Trunks, smiling under his long, lavender hair, saluted the girls and looked on as they began to prep the machine for travel.

Just as they were taught, the young, two-person team began running pre-flight checks. After Eva checked the control panel for irregularities inside the capsule and Pan made sure they had everything they needed, especially the vials, the pair then looked up when they heard someone clamber up the side of the craft. They then saw Bulma's head pop into view and the woman prop herself on the rim of the vehicle's cockpit. Once she was up there, she then looked the pair in the eyes and spoke to them seriously.

"Listen carefully to me you two. We're sending you back several months before the 26th World Martial Arts Tournament. That's where all of this chaos started. We can't send you back any further due to all the inter-dimensional turbulence that was taking place during that period involving all of the Gods. The computer can't quantify the information to travel beyond that time. But that's far enough," the blue haired woman explained, before narrowing her eyes on the pair. "When you arrive, find the place where the cyborg is hiding outside of North City, inject him with the nanovirus, and destroy him."

Pan and Eva, their expressions hardened, nodded to the woman affirmatively.

"We will," the red haired girl said. "You can count on us."

Bulma then raised a finger and pointed at each of them. "We've told you everything you need to know about the events that transpired back then. Whatever you do, try not to cross paths with any of the Z-fighters, or you run the risk of sending the timeline spiraling completely out of control. No matter what happens and no matter how bad any of their battles get, stay as hidden from them as possible." When the duo in the pod stared back at her firmly, the blue haired scientist smiled and patted them on the shoulders. "And good luck."

Seeing the pair had heard her words loud and clear, the scientist wasted no time in hopping down from the pod and watching the children engage the capsule's hatch. The glass dome closing over the girls, the Z-fighters standing in the room then took a step back and looked on as the pair activated the machine, just as planned. A loud humming soon emanating from the vehicle's engine, a transparent bubble of energy then formed around the pod and lit up the entire cavern.

With the final stages of launch drawing closer and closer, Pan and Eva then looked down from their perches in their seats to see their friends and family gazing back at them. Taking note of the eyes of their mothers staring lovingly and hopefully in their direction, filled with tears of sadness and joy, the two children waved, with the raven haired youngster pressing a hand against the glass to try and reach through to her parent. In a final farewell, the two mothers waved back, just moments before the capsule's frame lit up with a brilliant golden glow and it vanished in a pop, slipping away with a crack of light.

The instant the machine disappeared, the winds died down and so did the sound, leaving behind a cold, empty space.

As soon as she saw the time machine disappear, a stray tear fell from Videl's eye, which she then brushed away. "Goodbye…"

With final waves and wishes made, Kaiser wasted no time in shutting off the central control panel and ejecting the cables from the platform. Once that was done, he hurried over to another terminal sitting against the wall, a route that immediately drew the attention of the others. When he stopped directly in front of the towers, he then opened up a panel in the side of one of them and began typing into the computer pad. Code given, he then pressed the 'start' button and activated the countdown timer, which began from one hour mark and started counting down to zero.

Nodding at the successful unlocking of the device, Kaiser then shut the panel and turned to his friends. "The Clean-Slate Initiative has been activated. We just need to hold them off for an hour so that the Quantum Eigenstein Device can reach full power."

Smirking at the news, Zangya then brought her hands up and slammed a fist into her open palm.
"That's more than enough time for us to get out there and let off ten years worth of built-up stress."

"Ugh. Here we go again." Her statement had Bulma roll her eyes and place a hand on her hip. "It's always fighting with you girls, day-in and day-out. Why can't you talk about something more interesting that we can all get into, like calculus, hair styles, or celebrities?"
"Hey, when you have a mad, killer robot out there destroying the world, assimilating everything in sight and reprogramming it so that it fits into his vision of a perfect society, let's see you try to go on a day without throwing a punch. But I'm sure you already know all about this," Videl exclaimed, pulling a couple of fingerless gloves from her pockets and slipping them on. As soon as they were yanked down tightly, she then turned to her fellow mother and beamed in her direction. "Zangya... it's been fun."

The Hera gazed fondly at her, "Likewise, babe." She then leaned towards the raven haired girl and gave her a chaste, tender kiss on the lips, which she gladly reciprocated.

Upon sharing that small gesture of affection, the group then moved in to discuss their next plan of action, until a second shockwave unexpectedly shook the area around them. The violent tremor causing them to stumble, the group stopped and set their eyes on the wall on the far side of the room. Loud metallic thuds and grinding echoing from the back, the group of mixed warriors of planet earth watched and waited with serious expressions in play as a low hum began reverberating off of the walls.

The noise growing louder and louder as the source of the disturbance drew ever closer, Trunks responded to the approaching danger by gripping the sword at his side and Kaiser drew his sidearm, which revealed to be a high-tech Luger pistol with a glowing blue discharger. As soon as the man cocked back the slider of his weapon and took aim, there was another violent tremor, followed by a clashing sound of thunder. This was shortly outdone by the entire far side of the wall shifting, as both it and the entire ceiling above them was ripped away like a lid on a can of sardines.

A flash of light soon blasted the room, temporarily blinding the group standing in the workspace. When their eyes eventually adjusted to the atmosphere, Trunks, Bulma, Videl, Zangya, and Kaiser looked up in shock to see the black sky of the outside world swirling above them, streaks of lightning crisscrossing the heavens, and the skeletal frame of the ruins of West City towering over them.

Debris and rubble falling around them as their hidden, underground base was quite literally brought to the surface, the group then looked up at the silhouette of the figure responsible for the demolition of their headquarters. Though at first unable to see him due to the spotlights beating down on their position, the team was soon given a full view of their enemy when he dropped from his altitude and landed on the ridgeline above them, several yards in front.

Over the last fifteen years, the enemy that they had come to identify as the greatest threat of their time had steadily transformed his body from a clunky, rigid science project, into a highly versatile killing machine equipped with the latest technology and software. The last time they encountered this particular foe prior to the great chaos at the 26th World Martial Arts Tournament, he'd modified his original body into a machine made ideally for large-scale war. But after that incident, his form had not only been heavily upgraded, but he'd also undergone a horrifying transformation. It was one that they'd come to familiarize over the past decade and in that time, destruction, ruin and enslavement spread across all four quadrants of the cosmos.

It was a form and face that they all detested, and one that brought a sneer from Videl as she lowered her body into a fighting stance.

"Majin Buu."

The entity that they were now facing was a figure that was a head taller than Piccolo, yet had a body that was far more imposing. Sleek and muscular, the person had incredibly smooth, silver skin that reflected the light, and was almost metallic in nature. Possessing eyes that were dark with red irises and black pupils, the man, entity or whatever you wanted to call it, had a chiseled facial structure similar to Cell's, including the same ear formations. But instead of having a pointy crown, the man had a tentacle protruding from his head that was long and went right down his back to his waist. On top of the muscular physique, the individual wore a pair of black arm bracelets with golden trim, golden boots with black shin guards similar to the arm gauntlets, and a white pair of pants held up by a black belt, which had the letter 'M' etched onto the front. The figure also wore a black vest with armored plates, and looked like it was welded to the skin.

Furthermore, his entire body had very strange veins running over it, which looked very much like circuit wiring on a microchip.

As soon as he heard the Z-fighter's shout and saw the group's enraged gazes fixated upon him, the tentacle-headed figure smirked.

"I'd appreciate it if you didn't address me with that old moniker. It's insulting," the entity spoke in a deep, robotic voice that was laced with both a condescending tone and malice. When he watched the rest of the figures assume defensive stances, the metal abomination sneered and lifted his nose at them. "If it isn't too much trouble, I'd prefer it if you called me by my chosen name… Sentinel." He then shrugged at them when he saw their eyes narrow even more. "Or… maybe I would like to be called Majin Buu; the great terror of the universe. Either way, it doesn't matter to me."

"Oh, put a sock in it, banana-head," Zangya spat, focusing all of her ire on the smirking robot while sliding into a wider position. "Don't you get tired of listening to yourself talk?"

"You came here to kill us, right?" Trunks asked, holding his sword tightly in his grip. "Well, what are you waiting for? Give it your best shot!"

The silver entity, still smirking confidently, waved his hands in front of him and tilted his head at his targets. "Now, now, there's no need to rush. I just got here. Since it's been such a long time since any of us last ran into one another, I'd very much like to use this opportunity to catch up and swap a few stories of what happened over the last few years. Seriously, I've got some killer tales to tell." He then crossed his arms and chuckled. "Oh, did I mention that I now control a majority of the universe?"

"Pft. Like hell you do," Videl shot back at the twisted abomination, the latter of who raised an eyebrow at the human. "Not while we're still breathing and are able to do something about it!"

Eyes twinkling with mischief, the mutated android leered menacingly. "My, it seems the spirit of the old guard hasn't waned at all in my presence here. But I guess I should expect nothing less from one of the only remaining Z-fighters to survive their initial encounter with me." He then nodded down at the group when he also spotted Kaiser and Bulma. "And what do you know… my old parent and her rival in economics are still strutting about too." His attention quickly switched over to the blue haired scientist, whom he regarded with great interest. "How's dad?"

Reflecting nothing but malice in her own gaze, the woman glared at the metal prick. "You tell me, you gelatinized freak. You're the one who killed him!"

Eyes twinkling with mischief, the mutated android leered menacingly. "My, it seems the spirit of the old guard hasn't waned at all in my presence here. But I guess I should expect nothing less from one of the only remaining Z-fighters to survive their initial encounter with me." He then nodded down at the group when he also spotted Kaiser and Bulma. "And what do you know… my old parent and her rival in economics are still strutting about too." His attention quickly switched over to the blue haired scientist, whom he regarded with great interest. "How's dad?"

The android appeared shocked and placed a hand over his chest in emphasis of this fact, "Killed him? You think I killed." Emitting a fake gasp, the metal warrior then grinned and gestured over to his right. "Why… your husband is right over here."
All of a sudden, the group's gazes turned to the rest of the ridgeline to suddenly see several more figures drop down from the sky and land in front of them. As soon as their forms straightened up and steadied under the series of spotlights, the team looked on in horror when they noticed not only Vegeta, dressed in his blue spandex uniform, white gloves and boots, standing next to the android, but Goku, Piccolo, a teenage Goten adorned in a blue gi with orange belt and wrist bands, and…

"Goren," Videl gasped, her hands covering her mouth when she recognized her eleven-year-old son standing alongside his uncle. Decked out in an orange and blue gi characteristic of the Son family, he not only had a flatter style of haircut to Goku's, but it was shorter and more combed, and he also had his name imprinted on the left breast of his gi. From her position, he looked just like what she remembered he looked like two years ago.

It was the sight of her son that not only brought a look of horror to the woman's face, but had everyone in that hole snarl in disgust.

Unlike the friends and family they'd come to know, Bulma and the others noticed that the figures standing on the crest were different to what they'd come to remember. Though all of them looked exactly like their old teammates, with the same expressions, build and outward appearances, their skin had taken on a darker, greyer, and metallic tone, which was especially noticeable on the bodies of the Saiyans. Their eyes had also inherited a reddish coloration, which glowed and pierced the darkness of the world they now lived in.

From the surviving Z-fighters' points of view, it was like they were facing down their worst nightmare. And it was…

The manic android with the tentacle-head leered at his quarry cowering in the open sewer before him. "All of your friends and family are still very much alive and well. I just made some…" He then waved his hand in circles in front of him, thinking up the right word to use. When it came to him, his grin widened, "Improvements…"

"You fucking monster!" Videl all but shrieked, glaring hatefully at the robot as tears streamed down her cheeks. "You robbed their graves and defiled their bodies!"

"You didn't improve them!" Trunks shouted with a growl in his voice, "You absorbed their corpses and transformed them into your own personal slaves!" This was accentuated when the serious expressions on the tyrant's captives darkened and their eyes flared red, showing how deeply ensnared they were by their leader's will. "That isn't life! That's living death!"

"There are no slaves here, little Trunks. Nor is there any kind of death," the android abomination exclaimed, uncrossing his arms fully and spreading them. As lightning struck the ground behind his position, the metallic entity not only looked the part of the villain, but he embodied the role in its entirety. It was a sight that would have spread terror through his audience were they not already blinded by rage. "There is only ME! In this world… in this universe, I am the law… I am the creator… and I am the one that decides the fate of all things." Sentinel's grin widened tenfold as his eyes burned with excitement. "In this world…"

"We… are… one," Goku, Vegeta, Piccolo, Goten and Goren spoke up in perfect yet haunting synchronization. "Together, we are…"

The android's eyes shimmered menacingly as his menacing grin widened, "Sentinel Buu."

While the rest of the Z-fighters stood around glaring up at the entourage before them, Kaiser, who was listening intently from the sidelines, groaned in annoyance and rolled his eyes.
"I can't stand listening to this shit."

Without warning, the man then raised his gun, pointed it at the creep above them, and fired a powerful blue blast from his pistol with a loud 'bang.'

The shot left the barrel at ridiculous speed and struck Sentinel in the head, taking it clean off and disintegrating it. Initially, the group inside the cavern thought the prick was done and that his presence was no more. However, unsurprisingly, the team then looked on as the mad deity's head reformed out of grey particles and come together in the form of a blob of fluid. This blob reformed above the rest of the still standing body, before taking the shape of the head that'd previously been shot off.

"You know… it's a damn shame I wasn't able to absorb Gohan or Sandra back when they were in their prime… those two would have been the defining pieces to my Saiyan collection. Oh well. I'm sure they're happy wherever they are, tumbling endlessly through oblivion." Groaning as his complexion solidified, the android smirked at his would-be assassin, who continued to glare up at him without a single tweak in his expression. "I don't understand why you lot are so uncomfortable with the idea of joining with me." Sentinel then raised a hand towards them in a gesture of 'good faith' and began appealing to the team's sense of reason. "You five are the last remaining free souls on this planet AND this entire quadrant. Everything that exists and contains some form of power in this world has been assimilated into my very being. There are no wars and there are no conflicts anywhere in the cosmos. There is only peace."

"No there isn't," Zangya retorted while watching the android lower his hand. "There is only the illusion of peace… one that you forced onto every single person across the cosmos."

"Even so, you cannot deny the results," Sentinel spoke, smile remaining as he then gestured across at the Z-fighters he'd recreated and were standing on his right flank. "Can't you see how happy your friends are?"

When the good guys turned to look over their former allies, they saw smiles appear on their faces before hearing each of them speak in turn.

"It's alright guys," Goku chirped in his familiar, cheerful tone, stepping forward and extending a hand towards them. "Honestly. Sentinel doesn't mean you any harm…"

"He only wishes to bring peace to the universe," Piccolo informed, arms still crossed as he stared down at the group. "It's true. We've seen it."

"Come join us and achieve greatness," Vegeta spoke, wearing his characteristic smirk despite the fact his eyes were glowing blood red. "Become one with Sentinel and you can have everything you ever wanted. Power… immortality… ultimate knowledge… love… you can have it all."

"There isn't anything to be afraid of, Trunks," the teenage Goten spoke, flicking a bang of his short, spiky hair out of the way to grin down at his best friend, who was still glaring revoltingly at him. "Come on. It's so much fun up here with everybody else. Really."

Goren, wearing an innocent smile that his father was best known for, also stepped further up the ridge and beamed at his mother. "I miss you, mum." He raised a hand to her as well and gestured for her to come up. "Please… stop this senseless fighting and join us." Arms widening, he then gave the impression of wanting a hug, one that had the raven haired woman grit her teeth painfully. "I want us all to be a family again… you and sister both."
At first not knowing what to say, the members of the Z-fighters held their ground and watched all of their friends extend their hands towards them in perfect sync. It was after exchanging nervous glances with one another and silently contemplating what to do, their silence was then broken by a growl from one of their own. Looking in the direction of said person, they saw Videl had both her fists clenched and, with tears streaming down her cheeks, barked up at the android and his army of zombified, android slaves.

"There's no way in hell we're ever joining you!" Videl roared, taking several more steps forward and showing just how serious she actually was. "You're just a crazy, hypocritical scumbag! This world, the lives you've stolen and the lives you control, they're all just one, big, fucking lie! Everything you do and say is a lie!" She then jabbed a fist at him. "If you think we're going to shake hands with you and become your slaves, then you've got another thing coming to you! Do you hear me?!!"

Blinking in surprise at the woman's hearty rebuffing of his offer, the android stood there staring down at her and the rest of her colleagues, who seemed to regain their courage and set into proper fighting stances once again.

After a moment of silent contemplation, Sentinel brought a hand to his face and ran his palm down it in an exhausted manner. He then sighed in disappointment, "Ugh... I hate it when negotiations go sour." Without even the slightest bit of hesitation, the android suddenly pointed a hand down at the group and unleashed a powerful red blast from his hand, which rocketed towards them like a comet and threatened to incinerate them in one go.

But just as the group reacted defensively to the approaching energy attack, a shadow suddenly landed in front of them and blocked the blast. At least... that's what it looked like.

In a stunning turn of events that Sentinel did not expect, as indicated by the stunned expression on his and his slaves' faces, he saw his red energy wave shrink down and get sucked into the person that'd jumped in front of it. The area remained bathed in a bright red light for several seconds, until it vanished completely and revealed the culprit responsible for the unexpected dispelling of the attack.

Standing at the defense of the surprised group of surviving Z-fighters, an incredibly tall man with sharp blue eyes, a pointed nose and chin, long black hair that grew down past his shoulders, could be seen kneeling in front of the group with his hands extended towards the sky. Wearing navy-blue boots, tight blue jeans held up by brown suspenders resembling bandoleers, a tight, navy-blue shirt outlining a toned, muscular body with holes cut into the shoulder areas, golden arm bands, fingerless blue gloves, an orange scarf and golden earrings, the newcomer cut an imposing, and surprisingly familiar image.

The palms on his hands also had pink nodes inserted into them, very similar to the ones Android 19 and Android 20 had, which he'd obviously used to absorb the blast's power. What's more, engraved in his belt, he had the letter 'Z' imprinted for all to see, a symbol that was very distinct and recognizable.

When he rose up from the ground where he'd taken that blast, the stranger showed his face to the maniacal conqueror above.

The sight of the figure had Bulma and the others react in delight.

"Seventeen! You're here," Trunks exclaimed, feeling relief wash over him as one of their most trusted allies had finally returned.
Sparing a glance at his friends, the raven haired former antagonist beamed. "Sup guys." He then turned his glare towards the cliff, where his eyes then narrowed on the collection of fighters before him. "Sorry I'm late. I got a little caught up over in the Andromeda system dealing with this prick's armies. The number of factories he's got is insane."

Kaiser chuckled as he felt relief wash through him as well. "As long as you're here to help us, then I'm not complaining."

Recognizing the man's face purely from memory, Sentinel then allowed his stunned expression to transform into one of amusement. Straightening up to appear more dignified, the metal man greeted the newcomer cheerfully. "Ah… Android 17… I wasn't expecting you to show up here. I guess I was a little too preoccupied with looking for the vermin hiding out on this rock to pay any attention to you." He then placed his hands on his hips and looked down at his fellow android with a grin. "How's sis doing? Is she still around?"

Upon speaking that question and seeing the glare thrown back at him, the mutant android snapped his fingers and exclaimed in surprise. "Oh, wait. How could I forget? I absorbed her and her family a long time ago. Silly me." After shaking his head, the silver figure then beamed at the raven haired hero. "After taking in over one trillion souls into your body, you kind of lose track of those who are really closest to you. Anyway… how are you doing these days, brother? Still fighting the good fight?"

Super 17, tensing up at the mention of his sister, sneered at the abomination. "Don't call me brother, you silver-plated freak. You and I are in no way related."

"On the contrary… the two of us were created by the same master, and were struck from the same mold in the same room. The only difference between us is that we were born out of different mediums, which really does make us siblings in a sick and twisted kind of way," Sentinel chirped, folding his arms as he looked the tall figure up and down. After getting a good bead on his makeup and drastically changed appearance, the silver God then exhaled a dark chuckle. "But it seems as though fate has put us on opposing paths. I noticed you've also made some improvements to yourself over the last several years." He then gestured to the man curiously. "Tell me… is your juiced up state a result of you fusing bodies with that bumbling Mark II, Android 16 counterpart Bulma created after my inception?"

The raven haired automatron nodded with a proud smirk. "Yeah. Thanks to her and Kaiser, I was able to join forces with my brother to become strong enough to fight you and your infinite army of mechanized slaves." Clenching his fists, Seventeen then slid into a stance and faced the terrifying looking creature head-on. "It was a tedious procedure, but it was worth the wait. Now that I'm here, I'm going to put a stop to your madness and take revenge on you for killing my family and destroying this planet!"

Hearing the man's declarations loud and clear had the smug looking villain tilt his head inquisitively. "An admirable objective. But I doubt you'll be able to accomplish much, even with this remarkable new form that you've achieved." The man then raised his head arrogantly. "Unlike you, I've long surpassed my limitations as a machine and transcended into the realm of the divine. My war with the Gods has spread to every corner of the cosmos and my sphere of influence continues to grow with every system I assimilate with my armies. I've already absorbed Beerus the Destroyer and Aphrodite the Compassionate into my consciousness… using their powers to fuel my factories. It won't be long now before the rest of their kin submit to my will."

At this, the black haired hero grinned. "That's quite the impressive record you've got there… even though most of your strength was achieved through petty theft and kidnapping. Care to put them to the test?" He then waved for the delusional warrior to 'bring it on.'

Sentinel chuckled at the man's declaration. "Do you really think you can do it? Alright then. Enlighten me." Gesturing for his soldiers to back-off, which they did, the cyborg suddenly super-speeded down to the Z-fighter's level and landed on the other side of the room. Upon reappearing, the android cracked his neck and began to march forward. "It's been a while since I've had a decent, one-on-one competition with a warrior of equal speed and skill. I could use the challenge. Let's see how strong this new Android 17 has become." As he marched across the open space towards the group of heroes arranged in front of him, the silver warrior was all riled up for a good battle. But just as he was walking in their direction, he suddenly stopped when he sensed something was off and looked across at them in surprise. "Wait a second…" Sensors beeping audibly, his eyes then panned around the room in confusion. "I'm sensing an enormous build-up of energy. What is that?"

Before anymore questions could be asked, Kaiser, rushing over to the central panel, suddenly slammed a hand down on a large red button and activated another machine. The engines underground roaring to life, a series of loud clangs filled the air followed by a violent tremor. The anomaly causing Sentinel to back off a few steps, the android then proceeded to watch the floor in the center of the former, underground base open up, and the panels separate to reveal a hidden storage area.

An icy mist filtering out of the hole, a burst of pure green energy suddenly exploded out of the hole and rocketed into the air like a fire, alarming the enemy force and causing their leader to shield his eyes. The green aura blasting the sky for several moments in the form of a celestial pillar of light, it soon died down, leaving a cloud of ice hanging in the air around the breach in the floor. When Sentinel and the Z-fighters peered through the mist shrouding the area, they suddenly heard a low grunting noise and saw the silhouette of a massive figure rise up from the hole.

Metal clanging loudly as the steel chains and melted ice sticking to his body fell to the floor, the enormous entity that appeared stood before the two opposing sides, and turned his piercing gaze towards the silver android. As the smoke slowly lifted from the space, everyone in the area saw a massive man about the same size as the Hulk, with bulging muscles, spiky green hair that stood on end, wearing golden arm bands, boots, a necklace, a belt with gems welded into them, white pants, and a red cowl around his waist, rose before the automaton and fixed a hateful gaze upon him.

The sight of the man's white eyes and fearsome expression put a look of bewilderment on Sentinel's face. Then, when the giant narrowed said eyes and gave a low, animalistic snarl, the android's arms dropped and he looked at the figure in disbelief.

"Oh… fuck me dead…"

"RAAAAAAARAAAAAAAAAAAARGH!" the enormous figure bellowed, bringing back an arm before literally backhanding Sentinel into the far wall, smashing the android through several hundred meters of earth and stone.

The man's metal body disappearing in an explosion of dust, the Z-fighters could only look on in disbelief as the muscular giant of a man, Broly, dispatched his foe with a single swing and proceeded to rage out in the middle of the open room. Clenching his fists, the Legendary Super Saiyan reared his head and let out a mighty roar, his green aura exploding around him and punching a crater into the floor. The force of his power up nearly knocked everyone around him off their feet, leaving Videl and her friends gazing across at the Saiyan in disbelief.

Once he was done powering up and his aura had settled to a more controllable glow, the enraged warrior looked around to see where he was. When his eyes spotted the android Z-fighters on the cliff in front of him and the spiky haired Saiyan in the middle, the fury reflected in his eyes increased tenfold.

"K-Kakaro~oot…” This was then followed up the ever-familiar howl.
"KAKAROOOOOOOOOOOT!"

His scream was only matched by the ferocity of his aura, which tore the ground apart before he launched himself at the spiky haired, former hero of earth.

The android-modified Goku gritted his teeth when he saw the Legendary Super Saiyan charging at him and, in response to the monster's charge, transformed to his maximum. His ascension to Super Saiyan 3 being marked by a storm of blue lightning, a golden aura and his hair growing down his back, the adult then took a defensive stance to counter the large behemoth's dash. Unfortunately for him, the spiky haired warrior was unable to respond fast enough before he was tackled by the hulking warrior and sent flying across the ruined metropolis in the arms of the psychopath.

Explosions in the distance and the sight of collapsing skyscrapers marked the path the pair traveled, blasting through obstacle after obstacle out of the capital. When the pair vanished beyond the sight of the Z-fighters standing in the crater, Bulma and Zangya spared awkward glances with one another, as did Super 17 and Videl, before all four of them turned to look back at Kaiser.

The orange haired woman raised an eyebrow at him, "I was wondering when you were going to unfreeze that Neanderthal."

A chuckle came from the man in the goatee as he took their surprised expressions in stride, "Well, our world is coming to an end one way or another… might as well let the big man out to have some fun." He then smirked across at the martial artist when she shook her head at him. "You know, not too long ago, I was planning on using him to patent the Saiyan's powers and use them against your group. But thanks to Sentinel's untimely arrival, all Broly and his biology ever amounted to was a pipedream."

Videl gave the man a funny stare before smirking across at him, "Want to have a clear conscience before you die?"

Cocking his pistol a second time, Kaiser made sure he had enough ammo before then taking his sidearm into a two-handed grip, "More like I want to have a clear conscience before my journey into the next universe… or hopefully my next incarnation. Either way, my soul is prepared." He then frowned and nodded towards the ridgeline the Legendary Super Saiyan went blasting through, where they could see the rest of Sentinel's soldiers and their former allies looking around in confusion. "Broly is the only one that can take on someone of Goku's level. What about the rest of them?"

Gazes snapping up to the confused, undead Z-fighters, Zangya then frowned and moved into line next to Videl, who was also taking stock of the minions. "I'll take the green man. He and I have some unfinished business." She leered when she saw Piccolo turn in their direction and drop into a fighting stance. She then nodded back to her lover and best friend. "And you?"

Narrowing her eyes, Videl clenched her fists and steeled her jaw. "My son will be my opponent.
He's my responsibility and it's up to me to free him from that madman's control."

With the pair deciding their opponents and Super 17 stepping towards the hole his silver counterpart had formed in the side of the base, Trunks then moved into arrangement and gripped the sheath at his side.
"I'll take on my father. Next to Zangya, I'm the only one strong enough to—"

"No," Bulma's voice suddenly cut in as the blue-haired scientist moved to the edge of their line and set her glare on the zombified Vegeta. "He's my husband. As his wife, it's up to me to bust him out of this jam… and knock some much needed sense back into that thick head of his." Stretching her arm out to the side and sensing her son's apprehensive stare fixated upon her, the woman then smirked back at him deviously. "Don't worry. I won't hurt him… that badly." Without even needing to wait for an answer, the blue haired woman then stuck out her hand and directed it towards the rear of the workstation, away from the massive terminal Kaiser had activated the timer on and towards her gear. "Mobi! Deploy Saiyan Buster Armor Mark 52: Ex-wife!"

The instant she shouted her instruction, a large, cylinder-shaped cupboard wedged into the corner of the room suddenly rotated about and unveiled its contents, which then proceeded to fly out one after the other in a river of metallic parts. The yellow and silver pieces, propelled by individual thrusters, shot towards Bulma at blinding speeds and began attaching themselves to her body, one after the other. They hit her hard and fast, covering parts of her randomly in what looked like body armor. In a matter of seconds, the woman was covered in the first protective layer, which elevated her to Piccolo's height, before then having larger parts start to build. The individual components slammed into the metallic limbs, fusing with her first layer, building up like blocks, and providing extra protection.

Soon enough, Trunks, Videl and Zangya were soon standing alongside a robot the same size as Broly, bearing the yellow colors of the time machine, with silver and black plating making up the joints and flexible components. Though it did have a womanly shape and appearance to it, it was a very butch womanly appearance, which molded perfectly to Bulma's frame.

Her head still exposed around the enormous collar protecting her neck, the blue-haired woman narrowed her eyes on their Saiyan opponents and nodded. "Suit up guys." The mask of her battle armor then snapped shut and locked into place, the blue optical sensors lighting up and providing her with a perfect field of vision. "Let's rock."

At that command, Zangya, Videl and Trunks wasted no time in powering up as well.

Clenching her fists, the lavender haired Saiyan let out an impressive roar, his golden aura bursting up and shrouding him in an ethereal coat. The instant his energy appeared, his power level skyrocketed, followed by his spiky locks growing down his back and his eyebrows sinking into his forehead. His frame also bulking up considerably due to the sheer power being exerted from his body, the teenager achieved stability and held his form, which crackled with blue bolts of lightning and an electric field of glowing energy. In a matter of moments, his transformation to Super Saiyan 3 was complete.

Zangya followed suit, crying out at the top of her lungs and causing her vest to disintegrate. Her sleek, curvaceous frame developing muscle and increasing in height, the woman's skin not only turned a darker shade of green than what it normally was, but her hair also flashed dark red, spiked up, and golden bolts of energy began running up and down her form. These golden bolts streaked over her skin with her green aura, painting streaks in her hair, while also forming glowing sclera around her eyes, across her cheeks, and over her forehead. When her transformation to Super Hera 2 was complete, the woman relaxed and allowed her green aura to continue beating around her, with bolts of yellow lightning engulfing her form.

On her end, Videl also maxed out. Her white aura turning pink, the girl then let out a cry of pain as her skin shone and her hair stood on end. Purple bolts running up and down her body and tearing apart the ground, the woman then straightened up and, with a loud crack of thunder, her hair turned... bright pink and continued to glow like it was transformed into pure energy. Radiating a constant glow, the woman allowed her aura to settle and, opening her eyes, revealed her blue sapphires had also turned a hot pink, and were burning furiously with her Super Terra form.

As soon as all three had transformed, they stood side-by-side, watching their enemy power up to maximum as well. While Piccolo's golden aura blasted around him and crackled with lightning, indicating his jump to full powered, Super Namekian state, Vegeta went Super Saiyan 3, and both Goten and Goren went straight to Super Saiyan 2, their auras kicking up around them like a storm.

The insane amount of power standing in one place caused the sky around them to distort and form into a swirling hurricane, sending bolts of lightning shooting down from the heavens to strike the earth.

Super 17, leading the pack and standing at the head of their formation, then watched the hole Sentinel had blasted through burst outwards in a shower of rubble and dust. When the cloud cleared several seconds later, it revealed a still alive and breathing android standing there with an infuriated expression on his face and oil trickling out of the corner of his mouth.

"Ugh… did someone catch the number of that bus?" Rubbing the bruise on his cheek where he'd gotten struck by the crazy Saiyan titan, the silver warrior then narrowed his eyes on the group as his sensors scanned the area. They then locked onto the mass of terminals and machinery in the far corner and, after taking a moment to analyze them, frowned when he recognized a large tower standing against the wall. "The massive energy signature is coming from that machine." He then shot a look towards Bulma and her team. "What exactly are you six planning?"

The blue-haired scientist smirked behind her armor's mask, "That's for us to know and for you to find out."

Finding nothing but displeasure from that response, the tentacle-headed abomination then raised a hand and flexed his fingers. "I've had enough of these stupid games!" Powering up with a grunt that caused his form to noticeably bulk up, the android then yanked on the air and generated a wind-like ripple through the space around him.

This was instantly followed by a powerful, magnetic force that suddenly grabbed hold of Super 17 and began pulling him towards the android at an alarming rate. The raven haired fighter growled as he attempted to resist the gravitational pull, using his ki to propel himself in the opposite direction, before his opponent suddenly threw his hand forward and unleashed a powerful shockwave towards the fused fighter. The repulsive force slammed into the long-haired automaton and sent him blasting past his group and into the rear wall, which he slammed into with a deafening 'crack'. Upon dropping to the ground and landing on all fours, the android glared up, charged up his energy, and leapt from the floor, propelling himself towards his battle-ready opponent at full speed.

Sentinel charged in as well, the pair colliding with one another in the air above the Z-fighter's base and landing concurrent blows with a terrifying shockwave. The pair circled as they climbed further into the sky, with the silver android reaching downwards, grabbing hold of a section of walkway with his tractor-beam abilities, and hurling it at Super 17. The raven haired warrior smacked it out of the way and fired a powerful golden blast at his counterpart in retaliation, drilling it into the android's chest and sending the tyrant blasting across the field and into the side of a ruined building.

The black-haired warrior pursued, rocketing towards the man's position with his fist cocked back. In return, the winded Sentinel looked up from his place against the tower and fired a powerful red beam from his mouth, which slammed headlong into Android 17 and stopped him in his tracks. After pushing the warrior back a few yards, the silver warrior cut off the flow from his attack to watch the smoke clear and his target emerge perfectly unscathed.

Sensors beeping, Sentinel narrowed his eyes when he saw the red glow surrounding his opponent fade and noticed his energy signature increase via the numbers. Upon which the silver android embedded in the wall of the ruined building gave a sigh of annoyance, before the burn mark over his chest healed over via liquid metal.

"We'll be at this all day," Sentinel groaned, thrusting his hand forward and firing a lance of metal from his palm in the form of an extending spike.

Dodging it, Super 17 rocketed in his foe's direction with a yell and slammed a kick into the android's ribs, sending the metal freak blasting through every single wall of the building and several more buildings afterwards. The silver warrior's body continued traveling across the city for many kilometers, before his stunned form inevitably crashed into a deserted hillside on the outskirts of the metropolis, allowing his adversary to give chase and continue the battle at a safe distance.

It was Sentinel's opening attack that inevitably forced the rest of the Z-fighters into action and in a matter of seconds… all hell broke loose.

Everyone attacked at once.

Trunks, aura crackling brightly around him, launched himself from his spot and rocketed towards his best friend, who also flew at him in kind. However, when the pair opened up with simultaneous punches, it was the lavender haired warrior who landed first, as he held the advantage in both speed and power. The Super Saiyan 3's blow landed against Goten's skull with a deafening 'clap' as he sent his fellow warrior spiraling out of the hole and further into the city. Trunks gave chase, drawing his sword with the intent of slicing through his foe and ending their battle quickly. But just as he was gaining ground on the wounded android, he saw the spiky haired warrior power up and shoot off in another direction, trailing golden energy behind him. The lavender haired Saiyan pursued.

Kaiser opened up on the enemy group with his pistol, firing blue bolts of energy at the undead warriors. Piccolo and the others avoided them, with the Namekian charging down the goatee scientist with his fangs bared and a snarl leaving his lips. He was however intercepted by Zangya, who leapt straight off of the ground and buried a skyward kick into the green man's abdomen, knocking the warrior high into the clouds. As his form vanished into the atmosphere, Zangya powered up and, in the form of a green comet, rocketed after the man at full speed, breaking the sound barrier several times in the process.

Managing to stop high above the planet, Piccolo, cocking back his hand, thrust it forward and unleashed several orange blasts towards his approaching foe. The green bolt that was his target slipped through the rain, deflecting several of the shots at blinding speed and sending them streaking across the planet's surface. Then, after an impressive aerial display of lightning fast maneuvers and dodging blasts traveling faster than any projectile in existence, Zangya closed in on her opponent and slammed a punch into his guard. Her blow crashed into the former Z-fighter's arm with a thunderclap, causing a loud shockwave, which was followed up with several more when the pair began trading hits in a wicked display of speed and power.

Following a furious exchange of attacks, Piccolo then landed a kick into his opponent's solar plexus and knocked her back, and was about to follow-up with a punch until the Hera stuck her hand out and fired a blast into his chest, sending his body shooting across the sky.
The instant Zangya engaged the Namek, Bulma ignited her jets and rocketed towards her undead, android husband, tackling him just as he was pulling his fist back for a punch. The impact caused a countrywide tremor as the woman in the yellow mech armor held the man by the head, yanked it back, and then slammed it into the ground, which she proceeded to drag him through for the next three kilometers. After the Saiyan Prince had had enough of having his skull used to plow the roads, he then promptly kicked her suit in the stomach and sent the scientist flipping over him, releasing his head from her hold and allowing him to roll back onto his feet.

Landing several yards away on all fours, grinding to a stop across the tarmac, Bulma then stood up and, pointing both arms at her target, opened up a series of rocket pods and unleashed a salvo of missiles at her husband. The projectiles curled through the air at blazing speed and began bombarding the area in front of the Saiyan. Massive explosions then ripped down the street and struck Vegeta head-on, knocking the man flying off the ground and sending him into a ruined skyscraper, which collapsed under the force of his impact.

Bulma retracted the rocket pods as she watched the structure collapse on itself, sending dust and debris flying in all directions. Stomping forward and flexing the fingers of her ultimate weapon, the woman scanned the area for any sign of her opponent. It was only when a warning arrow lit up that had her gaze snap left she saw Vegeta appear out of thin air and slam a fist across her mask. The loud 'clang' that rang out was immediately followed by the mech being thrown off its feet and sent bounding down the main road. When Bulma eventually applied the airbrakes and flipped back into an upright position, she slammed her feet into the floor, skidded to a stop, and reengaged her thrusters.

"Alright, honey… if that's how you want to play!" She then blasted back down the main road towards the android at high speed, watching him throw up both hands and unleash a powerful golden blast. Seeing the attack approaching, the woman held up an arm and produced a solar panel, which allowed her to bounce the attack off of her and continue on unscathed. As soon as she reached her opponent, she kneed him in the face and sent him blasting into the buildings behind him, taking out an entire block with the speed of his flight.

As the buildings were in the process of cascading to the earth, a large explosion across the city then saw Vegeta's form flying up into the sky and suspending itself above the city. Sneering angrily, the man then took aim at his female opponent on ground level and powered up. Aura warping around him and accompanied by currents of lightning, the Super Saiyan 3 gathered energy into the palm of his hand before firing a powerful sphere of ki at the enormous mech. His Big Bang Attack shot towards Bulma like a meteorite and threatened to nuke the entire metropolis.

Having expected him to use that move, the scientist thrust her hand forward and caught the attack like a baseball. Then, cocking it over her shoulder, she chucked it back at her foe, the ball slamming into the prince's chest and detonating with colossal force. A sphere-shaped explosion large enough to incinerate the entire city went up inside the clouds, seemingly wiping out the Saiyan warrior in a golden inferno. Bulma knew better though and as soon as she saw the fire become replaced by smoke, she saw her mechanized husband cut his way out of the haze and dive in her direction like a bullet. His emergence from the smog had the woman grit her teeth and take a stance.

Videl on the other hand, while avoiding all of the other fighters crisscrossing the air to engage with their respective opponents, made a B-line straight for her son as he charged at her in kind, opening up with a wide punch. But the mother, anticipating the attack, expertly ducked her android boy's swing, caught his arm, and ended up tossing him across their base and straight into the far wall. The boy slammed into it hard, splitting the barrier and dropping to his hands and knees. Speedily getting to his feet, Goren spun around in time to see the glowing haired woman rush him and kick... him square in the chest, sending the child blasting through the brick and earth behind him, and then into the sky. After practically punting the teen through several feet of stone and over a distance of several blocks, Videl huffed furiously and gave chase.

Flying after him in the form of a glowing pink bolt, the former crime-fighter then skidded to a halt in the air when she saw her target roll over and face her. Both holding their positions above the war torn metropolis, the humanoid fighter narrowed her eyes on her son to see him do the exact same thing, before he suddenly held up both his hands and unleashed a hail of blasts in her direction.

Dodging it with super speed, the nimble warrior darted through the barrage and eventually made her way to her son's position, stopping in front of him. When the teenager balked and attempted to hit her with a punch, she kneed him in the stomach, doubled him over, before driving a blow into his back and sending him into the city streets below. His crash was marked by a geyser-like explosion of dust and the area around him splintering like glass.

And from there, the Z-fighters' final battles dragged on…

XXX

Scampering across their exposed base's floor plans and walkways, Kaiser, armed with his trusted sidearm and his wits, was now taking on a new kind of enemy. The moment the Z-fighters took off and engaged one another in the most congested opening to a battle he'd ever seen, the genius found his position becoming swarmed by dozens upon dozens of androids. All of them resembling humans wearing tactical armored suits, each with glowing red eyes and possessing Cell-shaped heads with only a single horn on the right-hand side, the mechanical army bore down on the crater in a wave of silver, metallic death.

"Target the human! Target the human!"

"Engage!"

All of them outfitted with blasters and thrusters capable of sustained flight, the Human Class drones rained down on Kaiser from all sides. Opening fire on their target, they attempted to corral the man into a corner and kill him. However, showing surprising agility and dexterity, the man with the goatee avoided the initial hail of ki blasts and began taking them out one after the other with his supercharged sidearm.

Dodging a couple of red beams and watching several more of the metal men drop down from the sky and land around him, Kaiser cursed. "Damn these stupid robots. They just don't end!"

Like a champ, the man scaled the railing and picked the steel skeletons off one by one, preventing them from getting him or their base's machinery. After taking on a whole swath of them on the walkway and actually engaging one in hand-to-hand, ducking its swing and snapping its leg with a kick, he then leapt over the side and back onto ground floor. Barrel-rolling upon landing, Kaiser then sprinted over to one of his cupboards and kicked it open, where he then yanked out a submachine gun resembling an FN P-90. Cocking the slider, the scientist then spun about and mowed down an entire group of drones charging at him from the other side of the room, taking them out in a hail of blue blasts.

Dodging a series of red beams that were lobbed at him in retaliation, the man then dove for cover and continued his campaign. Rushing over to the workshop area, he picked off several more droids coming in from above, until one rushed up behind him and attempted to run him through with its arm. Sensing it, the man dodged it, spun around, and slammed the butt of his gun across its face with a 'clang'. He then drew his pistol and shot the stunned machine twice in the stomach, before turning and using both guns on the swaths of robots converging on his position.

Things were going well on his end so far and it looked like he was going to get through this battle without a scratch. But then, after wiping out about eighty of the damn things, a squad on the ridgeline suddenly started getting clever, and fired at him from above. The rain of shots drew Kaiser's attention and he fired upon them with his P-90, unloading his weapon and wiping out an entire group of them, including several that were dropping in from the sky. However, one of the drones got lucky and, managing to creep out from around the corner, fired a blast into the man's chest while he was focusing on the ones attacking his flanks. The attack slammed into the human and knocked him straight into the wall, knocking the fire arms from his hands before his body crumpled to the ground.

The man ended up sprawled out on the floor, body smoking and his suit covered in dirt. Thinking he was down for good, the Sentinel drones drew in closer, their weapons still locked and sensors fixed upon their human target. Due to the way the man had been hit and the location of the wound, they were positive he was a goner. Even his life-signs had flat lined.

But then, just as a few of the robots had gathered around his body and were about to scrub him, Kaiser's eyes suddenly flew open and, with a quick, acrobatic spin, he kicked the feet out from under them. Grabbing one by the arm, he got it into a headlock and, grabbing the blaster on its arm, aimed it at its compatriots and forcefully fired at them. The blasts from the automaton wiped out a good portion of the enemy forces, allowing the human to snap the head off of the poor bugger he was holding and collect his sidearm. Once he had it, he ducked a jab from behind and tackled that robot to the ground.

Fingers around its neck, he then pointed the pistol at its forehead.

The drone's eyes flashed in alarm. "Illogical. Illogical-"

Kaiser smirked, "You're damn right, asshole." With his response made, he then shot the drone through the skull and, collecting his energy-based machinegun, continued his rampage against the invading automaton army.

Explosions racking the city from corner to corner, the chaos soon spilled out into the central park area, where a distant figure was sent crashing through several office buildings before punching a crater right in the heart of the dried up lakebed. Dust clouding the crash site, the meat projectile was soon followed by the golden glowing form of Trunks, who appeared hovering over the reserve covered in a few bruises and cuts, and sporting a now torn up coat. Eyebrow-less gaze fixed upon the ground beneath him, the Super Saiyan 3 then watched the screen fade to reveal his opponent standing slumped over in the fissure, with his right arm completely missing and his form covered in a wide assortment of bruises.

When he saw his old friend Goten turn his hateful glare towards him, with blood trickling out of his many open wounds and the cybernetic enhancements protruding from his flesh, Trunks smirked and shook his head at his old training partner and long-time, best friend. "You were never the kind of person to throw in the towel. No matter how much you got beaten down, you always found the strength to get back up." Turquoise eyes with dark pupils shimmering with unaccountable amounts of sadness, the Brief scientist's son brought his katana up, spun it, and pointed the tip of the blade in his foe's direction. "But in the years you've been gone... I've had plenty of time to train and surpass you. With this strength that I've achieved, I'll finally be able to beat you and end your suffering."
Growling, the android Goten launched himself from the crater and blasted towards his incredibly powerful foe with a swing of his one good arm. Jabbing out with his palm, the red-eyed Super Saiyan 2 fired a ki blast at Trunks in an attempt to take his head off, but the long-haired Super Saiyan dodged it and kicked him across the face. His blow crashed into his companion's cheek and knocked him spinning across the sky. For a moment, it seemed like the attack had done the trick.

But after flying for several hundred meters, trailing blood and engine fluid, the cybernetic Saiyan halted his body in midair and spun about. The second he did, he threw up his hand and fired a powerful, one-handed Kamehameha towards the Super Saiyan 3, intent on wiping him out or, at the very least, inflicting some small amount of damage to the obviously stronger fighter.

It happened in an instant. Trunks's form vanished and the blast streaked past his position, striking a distant mountain range and wiping it out in an enormous, dome-shaped explosion. The instant the blast went up, the demi-Saiyan reappeared in front of his opponent, who recoiled in shock and attempted to counter him with a blast to the face. But the android Super Saiyan was unable to follow-through on his retaliation, as the long-haired warrior used his katana to not only slice off his remaining arm, literally disarming him, but also sliced straight down at him, cutting him clean in two.

The look of shock that appeared on Goten's face remained as his body slowly split in midair in a manner very similar to Frieza's final moments. Then, just as he was in the process of separating, the ever efficient and agile warrior spun his sword around, kicked his friend in the stomach and, after sending his two halves flying, thrust his hand out at him and unleashed a powerful, gargantuan ki wave at his stunned, bifurcated body.

The golden attack engulfed Goten's form completely and disintegrated him, before the blast streaked up into the sky and left the planet in the form of an ethereal beam of light. It faded moments later, revealing a much more damaged city and Trunks floating in the very place his attack had been launched.

Frowning deeply, the man lowered his hand, gripped his sword firmly and then sheathed it back into his scabbard full samurai style. The instant the blade clicked, the Super Saiyan 3, with beads of sweat running down his face, breathed a sigh of relief.

"I'm sorry, Goten."

Hopefully now his friend could finally find a small semblance of peace.

Unfortunately for the lavender haired Saiyan, his battle wasn't over yet.

Several moments after the man uttered his heartfelt apology, a loud screeching sound had him spin around and shoot his gaze upwards. Eyes widening, the man threw up his arms a split second before he was suddenly smacked out of the sky by a massive fist and sent plummeting to the ground. After slamming into the earth and forming a huge crater in the city streets, the half-Saiyan quickly sat up and, spitting out the blood from his mouth and narrowing his eyes into a hard glare, looked in the direction the lightning fast blow had come from.

He was then immediately forced to dodge when another enormous attack came plummeting towards him from above. Jumping to the side and avoiding the colossal length of steel, Trunks made it just in time to watch it split the earth with a deafening thunderclap, the shockwave it caused prompting him to ascend to the top of a nearby skyscraper. Landing on the very tip of the spire, the demi-Saiyan then looked across the way to see not one, but twenty giant, humanoid robots stomping through the downtown metropolis and heading straight towards him, their wide red optical sensors glowing fiercely. Resembling enormous silver mechs designed in the appearance of Samus Aran's armor, with each one easily towering over the buildings of the once great city, the automatons also had two large, flat cables protruding from their backs. Acting like tails and extensions of their bodies, these lengths of earth-cutting metal whipped through the air like tendrils in a threatening manner.

The moment the Super Saiyan 3 spotted the hulking machines lumbering towards him, he then watched as the giants were soon joined by an army of smaller, human-sized robots. Appearing as beefed up, advanced models of the ones that were currently attacking Kaiser, adorned in armor similar to knights and armed with battle lances, these soldiers suspended themselves in the sky around the giant mechs and confronted the young warrior. They came together like a swarm of bees and blocked out the horizon in a wall of blinking red lights.

As soon as the young man saw the army of a thousand plus mechanized soldiers emerge from the smog and the skeleton of West City in front of him, the sword user gritted his teeth and gripped the handle of his katana, ready for another fight.

As soon as he set himself into a stance with his fingers wrapped around his primary weapon, Trunks powered up and stared down the enormous android army with a snarl. "Alright then! Bring it on, you metal freaks!" Drawing his weapon with a crack of lightning, the man launched himself from the tower and, while rocketing towards the army, opened up with a gargantuan blast of golden energy.

The attack shot towards one of the giant metal warriors, who smacked it away with the back of its arm. But the instant the titan knocked the attack into the sky, Trunks was instantly upon it, lunging in with his sword.

"YAAAAAAAAAGGHH!"

XXX

Like the rest of her friends, Bulma was having problems of her own.

Over the last several years, the once leading representative in Research & Development had spent a great deal of her time and effort exploring the concept of mechanized, personal armor for the everyday human soldier. Ever since Gohan's battle with Vulcan back in Satan City, which saw a large amount of the downtown area demolished, Bulma had invested an enormous amount of energy into improving upon the idea and attempted to achieve the same results of the suit worn by the vicious war dog. Though she was unable to replicate the neutron core design due to a substantial lack of anti-trinity matter on the planet, which is often found on planets orbiting white stars, the woman was able to come up with dozens of other impressive models.

She spearheaded this ambition with great enthusiasm and passion. After all, if Doctor Gero, an old, half-crazed man operating on the bare minimum of equipment, could construct human automatons as well as a biological abomination from a handful of cells, designed with the sole purpose to bring down Super Saiyans capable of wiping out entire star systems, then why couldn't a billionaire scientist with unlimited resources do the same thing?

Combining her knowledge on the androids built upon from years of study of their original blueprints brought to her by Mirai Trunks and Krillin, Capsule Corp's own robotic designs, her recordings from the Z-fighters' multiple uses of the GR, space tech, and scientific genius, Bulma was able to develop a chassis capable of taking on super-human monsters of various levels of strength. Her last fifteen years had also given her a chance to improve on these designs and, using the same material that was normally used in the Gravity Room to withstand blasts capable of turning planets and stars into dust, create a suit that was durable and powerful enough to trade blows with a Super Saiyan 3.

Unfortunately, going that extra mile to actually put down a Super Saiyan 3 was looking to be a bit of a long-shot.

Sporting several new scuffs and punch marks on her front chest plating, the yellow mech Bulma was piloting stomped forward down the main road, sensors scanning the area for any signs of her illusive foe. When the numbers on her visor started to rise and hone in on her target's signature, the scientist raised an arm and produced a rocket launcher from the machine's gauntlet. But just as she was in the process of finding her quarry, the wall of the building to her left suddenly exploded outwards and, flying through the cloud of debris, Vegeta reappeared and rammed into her with his shoulder.

The blow connected with a loud 'crack' and saw Bulma's mech sent hurtling down the street and straight through a couple of skyscrapers. After bursting out the side of the third one, the woman thrust her hands and feet forward and used the repulsors on her hands to stop. Airbrakes also assisting in this endeavor, the scientist leveled out and began to turn in the direction she'd come from. A split second later, she was suddenly slammed in the back by Vegeta super speeding into her blind spot and tackling her in the spine. The Super Saiyan 3 drove her straight into the highway, where she crashed and punched a massive crater into the surface of the tarmac.

As soon as she was pinned, Vegeta grabbed one of the armored suit's massive arms and, slamming his foot into the back of her shoulder, proceeded to pull it from its socket.

Plating crumbling and wires snapping little by little, the visor inside the robot's helmet began flashing warning lights in the pilot's face, who attempted to force herself back to her feet. Unfortunately, thanks to the hold the Saiyan had over her and the sheer amount of raw power he was exerting, the woman found the task of getting up to be next to impossible.

Starting to feel the strain herself, Bulma cursed. "From behind? Really, Vegeta?" Gritting her teeth as she then willed her suit to start sending emergency power to her arm and leg hydraulics, she began to fight back. Loud hissing echoing out as her suit started expelling steam from its joints and vents, Bulma slowly rose up as the Super Saiyan 3 pulled back further on her arm. "How many times... do I have to tell you?" the scientist growled, causing the android pinning her to the floor to balk in alarm when he saw the mech's hands form into fists. "Whenever we start getting rough..."

With barely any warning, her free arm unexpectedly rotated around and, utilizing the mech's double-jointed abilities, suddenly shot a punch straight into Vegeta's blind spot. The blow connected with the force of several thousand freight-trains charging down a single point, sending the prince blasting through the air and straight through several nearby buildings. After spinning through steel structures and apartment blocks for a couple of miles, the Saiyan hit the brakes and stopped in midair. It was just as he was turning around that the prince looked up in time to see the yellow mech piloted by his wife, dive down at him and bury a kick into his chest.

Following-through with her surprise attack, the woman slammed the short man into the earth with catastrophic force, punching a huge crater into the floor that sent a geyser of dust and rubble shooting into the sky. Then, when the cloud settled, it revealed Bulma pinning the Saiyan to the earth with her knee and hand, her suit working to apply even more weight to his chest.

Grinning underneath her mask, the slightly banged up Bulma chuckled as her husband writhed under her armored suit's grip.
"I'm the one that gets to be on top!"

Clawing at the woman's gauntlet, the android Vegeta growled and banged away at her limb for a few moments. In that time, the scientist then raised her damaged arm and, transforming the limb into a massive Vulcan gun, began unleashing bullets into the man's face at pointblank range. The Gatling gun poured thousands of rounds into the Super Saiyan 3, causing a series of loud clangs to ring out as the projectiles tore into his flesh. At first it almost seemed like this monstrous attack would effortlessly rip the prince's mug to pieces.

But just as Bulma was starting to get comfortable, Vegeta's hand suddenly snapped up, grabbed the gun, stopped it, and began to crush it. Snarling menacingly, the prince forced the woman's limb away and powered up, his aura springing protectively around him and producing a storm of lightning. In an effort to counter against it, the mech attempted to absorb the energy through special nodes in the chassis, but due to the vast quantity of power the android was exerting, it just couldn't hash it.

Especially when Vegeta suddenly went into full rage mode and, reaching up with his other hand, fired a big golden blast straight into the suit's chest. The attack exploded with concussive force and sent Bulma flying back to slam into the earth a split second later. Shaken, with one arm damaged and abdominal area burnt, the pilot then attempted to get up and reengage her adversary, only for the Super Saiyan 3 to leap straight at her and begin driving blows into her chest one after the other. The attacks impacted with devastating effect, tearing up the ground beneath the unit while Vegeta relentlessly hammered into its plating, denting it bit by bit.

The assault was so vicious it not only pushed the adamantine robot down the street, but also ripped a trench right across midtown. It was only after throwing a few counter blows to the fiercely fighting warrior Bulma then opened up a section in the chest area and fired a red blast straight into the man's face, knocking him into the sky. Once he was off, Bulma followed up with a missile, which popped up from her shoulder plating and rocketed after her target. The nuclear warhead connected with a thunderclap, unleashing a compressed blast that smashed Vegeta into another building and knocked it over.

As the building began to tip with the prince embedded firmly in its side, Bulma jumped up at him with the rocket boosters on her feet and dove at him with a punch. But Vegeta countered with a swift kick into her chest that knocked her into the building across the street. The situations quickly reversed when the Super Saiyan 3 dashed at the mech instead, opening up with a fierce assault that dragged up the side of the structure. Frame and glass shattering with every foot they covered, the pair traded blows one after the other until they reached the top, where Vegeta then caught a punch from the robot's damaged arm and, with a quick spin and a yell, drove a hand through it and cut the hand off.

The mech spun through the air until the airbrakes were applied, stopping it from flying off. Bulma once again faced her foe with a harsh glare, at the same time using that moment of reprieve to speedily eject the damaged arm attached to her suit and assess the rest of the damages.

"Okay… this isn't going very well," the woman thought, seeing her undead husband was still fit and willing to fight, while the stats on her armor weren't all that great. "He was always the most difficult man in the quadrant to handle. Even Goku had a hard time putting his ass down." This analysis of her situation then brought on the interesting question of how she was going to go about doing it herself.

He was too fast to outrun, too tough to knock out with hard punches, and too fit to turn this into an endurance match. Even if her own body could take it, she wasn't sure her suit would be able to.
There was only a certain amount of punches it could withstand before something important gave up.

She had to think of something, otherwise she was mincemeat.

Fortunately, the woman didn't need to think up a strategy for this particular debacle. The moment she set her suit into a battle ready position for one final showdown with the prince, a green blur suddenly dove down from the sky and slammed a kick into the back of the Super Saiyan's head. The attack knocked Vegeta plummeting to the streets below, which he impacted with the force of a small meteor. When Bulma looked to see the one responsible for catching her husband off guard, she saw Zangya floating there. Covered in cuts, bruises, and bleeding from the corner of her mouth, the Hera smirked in her direction.

"You okay?"

Sighing in relief, Bulma spoke up through her suit's intercom. "The suit's a little bit banged up, but I'm still in one piece. Vegeta was giving me a real pounding back there."

The red haired woman then frowned in her colleague's direction. "Okay, first of all; phrasing. And second of all... you wouldn't mind if I took him off your hands for a little while, would you?" She then glanced over her shoulder when she sensed another figure appear on the scene and saw Piccolo teleport into view a few yards behind her. Also covered in burns and bruises, the Namekian glared exhaustedly in her direction while the Hera looked right back at him with her unflinching gaze. "Neither one of us is getting out of this alive, anyway. So I'll hold them off while you go help Android 17... and make sure that silver Oscar-statue stays right here where we want him."

Eyes widening when she realized what the woman was saying, Bulma floated closer to her. "That's a one-way trip, Zangya. You can't possibly hope to take on both of them at once. They'll kill you."

Cracking a smile, the Hera glanced back at her friend and chuckled. "Well then... I guess this is the perfect time for me to find out exactly how useful I am to you guys." She then held a hand up to the scientist to stop her from saying anything else. "I don't want to hear it. Our universe is coming to an end and we're the only ones left to see it all happen. Hell... we were the ones that let it get this bad in the first place. Since it's our responsibility to set things right, what better way is there to go out of this alive, anyway. So I'll hold them off while you go help Android 17... and make sure that silver Oscar-statue stays right here where we want him."

Eyes widening when she realized what the woman was saying, Bulma floated closer to her. "That's a one-way trip, Zangya. You can't possibly hope to take on both of them at once. They'll kill you."

Cracking a smile, the Hera glanced back at her friend and chuckled. "Well then... I guess this is the perfect time for me to find out exactly how useful I am to you guys." She then held a hand up to the scientist to stop her from saying anything else. "I don't want to hear it. Our universe is coming to an end and we're the only ones left to see it all happen. Hell... we were the ones that let it get this bad in the first place. Since it's our responsibility to set things right, what better way is there to go out of this world then dying on my feet... fighting for my loved ones to the bitter end." Her smirk then widened when she glared right into the eyes of the mech, whom she knew concealed the face of a bewildered Bulma Briefs. "I think that's a fitting end for a person like me, don't you think?"

Swallowing nervously, the scientist spoke, "Zangya..."

Just as the red haired woman shared one last smile with her friend, she suddenly heard a loud explosion and looked down at the city in alarm. She then threw up her arms just in time to block a punch thrown by Vegeta, who rocketed up at her from the streets and slammed an attack into her with tremendous force. The prince, locking horns with the Hera, then proceeded to push the woman further up into the sky at an alarming rate, both warriors gritting their teeth and growling against one another as their auras burned brilliantly.

Almost as soon as Vegeta engaged Zangya in a grappling match, the Namekian floating in the background flew in as well, roaring out and throwing a punch at the woman's head. The Hera however, quick as ever, spun around and caught his fist, ending in her wrestling with both enemies.
as they spiraled through the sky. Receiving several knees in the side from Piccolo and grunting in pain from each hit, the woman Z-fighter then managed to kick the prince off of her and throw several retaliatory blows at the Namekian. Her attacks landed with a series of loud and painful sounding thuds, marking the beginning of a bloody and chaotic brawl between the redhead and the two androids.

Looking to see Bulma still flying in place, the bloody-mouthed Zangya tightened her jaw and screamed at her. "WHAT ARE YOU DOING?! GET THE HELL OUT OF HERE! GAH!" Receiving a body shot to the stomach, she then smashed Piccolo in the jaw before turning to trade a couple of blows with Vegeta. "GO!" After a grueling exchange, in which she was elbowed mercilessly in the face, the woman powered up and shot off into the distance, while at the same time being pursued by the two incredibly strong, ex Z-fighters.

Seeing her friend and ally vanish into the distance with her opponents, Bulma steeled her expression and, resetting her coordinates, jetted off to another part of the city.

It was there, in that general direction, she hoped to find exactly what she was looking for…

XXX

(Some time later)

For the last remaining heroes fighting on planet earth, things quickly started going downhill.

While Kaiser continued blasting away at robots left and right on his end of the field, protecting what was left of their base, Broly's battle with the android Goku had become even more brutal, resulting in untold levels of destruction. Since the beginning of their final, decisive grudge match, the pair had wound up exchanging blows evenly with one another. Despite the fact that the Super Saiyan 3 android had the upper hand in speed, handwork, power and timing, the bulky, green haired warrior still had strength and durability on his side, which he was able to use to great effect. This allowed the psychopath to trade attacks with the longhaired man for quite a while and, even with all the damage he took from the amount of punches Goku landed on him, he persisted and pushed forward.

It soon became abundantly clear that the genocidal maniac wasn't going to be throwing in the towel anytime soon… or ever for that matter. Just like in their first encounter many years ago on New Planet Vegeta, as their battle raged on, Broly's power started to climb. Speed and strength increasing, as well as his rage, the Legendary Super Saiyan began hitting back against the former hero harder and harder, putting on quite a bit of damage on the smaller fighter.

Buildings and mountains leveled as the pair brawled. When Goku's body ended up crashing through an apartment block and was sent bouncing across a ruined expressway, Broly followed immediately afterwards. Tearing through the tarmac like it wasn't even there, the madman seized the Super Saiyan 3 by the face and, cackling loudly, drove the warrior into the ground and proceeded to drag him through it. After ripping across the concrete at high speed for well over a kilometer, knocking wrecked cars, trucks and buses out of the way at the same time, Goku then countered the man with a swift kick to the face.

Landing the blow hard and forcing the bulky warrior to let go, the android fighter quickly sprang away for breathing space.

Looking between the two, it was apparent the former hero had taken on far more damage than Broly had; the latter of who was still continuing to fight at full power while the former hero's energy levels were beginning to wane. Hoping to salvage some sort of an advantage, the cybernetic Goku tried to make a hasty retreat. But much to his utter shock, the enraged warrior flew right on after him, growling loudly while his right fist loaded for another planet-splitting hit.

"KAKAROOOT!" the hulking warrior bellowed, roaring as he pitched a hook at his target. The Super Saiyan 3 avoided it and attempted to counter with a punch of his own. But his fist bounced harmlessly off of the man's side like he'd just hit a brick wall, an instant before he was handily backhanded by the Legendary Saiyan and sent spinning through the sky. Just like before, Broly tore after him with an angry yell. "RAAAAAAAAAAAAAARGH!"

The badly shaken ex-hero managed to apply the brakes in midflight just in time to take a defensive stance. Blood pouring out of his mouth and his many other open wounds, Goku then cupped his hands beside him and fired a Kamehameha at the approaching giant. Despite the amount of force he managed to put behind the attack, the monster of a Saiyan plowed right through the beam and slammed his fist across the warrior's face, knocking him into the streets and punching a massive crater into the ground.

Following up on his attack, Broly held his hand out and, charging a ball of green energy that caused an odd discoloration in the atmosphere around him, clenched his fingers around it and then pitched it straight down at the spot his opponent had crash-landed. The sphere of ki struck the human projectile's point of impact with the force of a miniature supernova. A green, dome-shaped blast engulfed the area, wiping out a great portion of downtown West City and filling the sky with a blinding, radioactive light. The Legendary Super Saiyan managed to compress all of that force to the one spot, holding back just enough to keep the entire continent and, by extension, the entire planet from splitting in two.

When the cloud of dust eventually faded from the inferno, it revealed the android Goku had reverted back to his base form and was lying sprawled out in the middle of the hole, his gi in tatters and his leg noticeably bent the wrong way. Gritting his teeth, the badly damaged warrior attempted to push himself up and crawl out of his grave, until his opponent suddenly dropped down from the sky and crashed into his spine with his knee. A loud 'crunch', a shockwave, and a scream of agony filled the air, before the grinning Broly grabbed his stricken opponent by the back of the head and lifted him into the air above him.

Powering up to maximum, his green aura twisting around his body, the Legendary Super Saiyan then grabbed Goku's waist and began to pull the two halves of his adversary in opposite directions. It was only a couple seconds later that a sickening crunch sound was quickly followed by Goku's head being ripped clean from his body by his old nemesis. The psychopath of a warrior cackled madly and tossed the hero's corpse away, before then holding his target's head high for all to see… namely him.

"HAHAHAHAHA!" Broly laughed, narrowing his eyes on his foe's disembodied person to see his dead eyes staring right back at him… or… more appropriately, up towards the sky.

However, the legendary warrior's celebration over his finally killing his nemesis was cut short when a powerful red blast suddenly slammed into his back and exploded harmlessly against his skin. Growling irritably, the hulking Saiyan tossed the head away and spun around, where he saw one of the giant, mountainous robots Trunks had been fighting, standing over him with a platoon of smaller units orbiting its head. When it then raised its hand up and produced a large cannon from its palm to fire at him, Broly narrowed his eyes and, with a yell of rage, powered up to maximum.

"RAAAAAAAAAAAAAAHHH!" His power multiplying once again, the Saiyan abomination then leapt from the ground and charged at the towering mech, dodging the blast it fired and tackling it in the chest. The man's collision with the titan was marked by a thunderous clang as the giant android was sent stumbling back into a skyscraper, which it crashed into. With it pinned against the steel frame, the Legendary Super Saiyan then proceeded to rip into its chassis with his bare hands, disemboweling it of all its critical systems and wiring.

While all this was going on in the background, down on ground level just a block away from where the giant robot was being pulverized into the building by the hulking Saiyan, a sea of metal bodies had been unceremoniously laid out across the entire Southern side of the metropolis. Stretching as far as the eye could see, these metal skeletons and suits of armor had been blasted, smashed, ripped apart, and cut to pieces in a wide variety of different ways, transforming them from once proud, technological achievements into the brand new foundations of the dying West City. From an audience's perspective, it looked like a massive war between two armies had been fought to the last man, with absolutely no survivors; a poetic end to an epic struggle.

In reality though, this particular battle was still going on.

Trunks had no idea how many of these damn robots he'd managed to destroy. Jotting up his total count from the last half-hour of pumping iron, the young man figured he'd lost track around fifty thousand or so. Through economic use of his Super Saiyan powers and his energy, the young sword user was able to wipe out a decent chunk of the armed forces sent after him until there were only a handful of them left. However, the enemy that he and his friends were confronting was a relentless one, and soon enough, the man found himself set upon by wave upon wave of super-powered robot warriors of all shapes, models, and sizes, which came flying in from all four corners of the planet.

The resulting conflict in that part of town soon played host to the most brutal, man-machine carnage the earth had ever seen. At first it seemed like Trunks would emerge victorious, but as the fight carried on, his strength started to leave him… and so did his energy.

If the sheer numbers of enemies weren't bad enough, the fact that the vanguard type robots he was fighting were constructed out of a percentage of the universe's strongest metal, katchin, made his task of beating them even more challenging. This soon became apparent when a couple of the elite units got the drop on him and, after a squadron bombarded his position from above with a hail of blasts, they then ran him through with lances. He soon ended up with two spears in his back and one straight through his side, crippling his movements.

This didn't stop Trunks though, and the boy continued to fight. Several long minutes of hard cutting and explosions later, and the young man was soon on the ground, covered in cuts, burns, bruises, with his cut open, and three lances impaled in his back.

Having spent an enormous amount of energy mowing down over a dozen swarms of these robots, the demi-Saiyan had dropped from Super Saiyan 3 to 2, and had resulted to ground skirmishes. With one hand applying pressure to the massive gash in his waist and the other gripping his sword tightly, the exhausted young warrior held his ground and cut down every single robot that came his way. Covered in blood and losing even more by the second, Trunks's power level dropped like a stone in a lake, even as he cut another android in half and fired a blast at a second, wiping it out with a yell of effort.

Panting exhaustedly and stumbling backwards, the young man collapsed to his knee and gasped for air, at the same time burying the tip of his sword into the earth. He then gritted his teeth angrily and looked up through a squinted gaze, "No… not yet… I'm not giving up yet!" Even though the army of Sentinel drones wouldn't stop coming, the man was determined to finish this on a high note. With their entire universe on the line, this was the least he could do to ensure that their plan ran full circle.
Looking up to see an entire fleet of Sentinel's armies beginning to descend from space, the demi-Saiyan clenched his jaw, cocked his hand back, and launched a powerful, one-handed Buster Beam towards the atmosphere. The golden blast struck one of the approaching dreadnaught-class starships and wiped it out in a large, sphere-shaped explosion. The attack also ended up consuming many of the other squadrons, incinerating entire formations of silver craft group after group. With the airspace surrounding the earth transforming into orange hellfire as a result of the thermonuclear explosion, the exhausted Trunks continued focusing his attention on the drones charging at him from the ruins.

Lowering his hand from the sky, the man then spun around and fired another blast at an approaching robot, only to see it bounce off of its armored chest. Watching it lunge at him with its metal spear, Trunks quickly yanked his sword out of the ground and dodged. He then swung at it with his blade, slicing the droid's head off. Immediately upon taking it out, the Super Saiyan 2 then cried out when a blast struck him in the chest and knocked him back. A second robot rushed him from the front, forcing the adult to evade the thrust from its lance and run his sword through its stomach. It then threw a punch across his face, but he retaliated by slicing it clean in two.

Knees shaking, the lavender haired Saiyan spun on the spot and cut down two more drones sprinting at him from the sidelines, only to then be speared in the back a fourth time by another robot. Crying out in pain, Trunks spun around and rammed an elbow into the robot's face, before then slicing off its head. This allowed another opportunistic soldier to rush at him from the front and bury another lance into his stomach, taking advantage of his momentary weakness. Screaming in pain and chocking up blood, Trunks swung his sword up and cleaved the robot in two. His vision becoming blurrier by the second as bolts of pain racked his form, the young man then cocked his arm back and held his sword up defensively, just as a squad of drones flew in from all sides and buried their lances into his body.

The simultaneous impalement causing blood to splatter all over the floor, the Super Saiyan 2 yelled out one last time before, with a mighty swing of his sword, he cut through all five of the androids and wiped them out. Then, after swaying groggily on the spot, the young man fell over backwards and hit the ground with a dull thud, his limbs and body completely impaled by spears. Gasping for breath, Trunks gazed up at the smoggy sky hanging high above him, where he saw another fleet of Sentinel's robot army descend through the atmosphere and begin their reacquisition of the planet.

Energy plummeting as blood pooled around his pincushion body, the demi-Saiyan's eyes slowly shut as he uttered his last words. "Everyone… I'm… sorry…" Head lolling to the side, Trunk's reverted back to his base form and his life force finally dissipated.

XXX

(Elsewhere)

Looking just as roughed up as Trunks had before his collapse, Zangya stood in the center of a distant, open field clutching her left arm as her two opponents landed clumsily on either side of her at several yards apart. Eyes snapping between them in alarm, the red haired woman with golden sclera focused her energy and clenched her jaw tightly, knowing full well that she'd been cornered. When she saw the equally damaged Piccolo and Vegeta, minus one arm, power up and take aim at her central position, the beaten and bruised woman sucked in air and shut her eyes tightly.

Then, sensing their attacks start to build, the Hera acted.

Aura bursting up around her, the green woman spun around and, jabbing her right finger forward, fired a red beam at the Namekian. Her attack slammed into his chest, went straight through it, and knocked him stumbling across the gravel, allowing the Z-fighter to spin back around, drop to her knee and fire a second shot at Vegeta. The beam struck the prince in the kneecap and took it out, dropping him to the ground and causing him to fire his blast sideways prematurely. The attack drew a grunt of pain from the Super Saiyan 3 and had him glare at the ground momentarily, until his gaze snapped upwards to see his opponent diving at him from above with a red energy sphere in her hand.

Letting out a mighty bellow, Zangya drove the blast right into the dead man's face, simultaneously avoiding his counter punch and knocking him onto his back. The attack engulfed Vegeta's entire head and fired right across the planet's surface, expanding and engulfing entire mountains before shooting out of the planet's atmosphere. When the attack faded, it revealed the Hera standing over her headless opponent at the starting point of an enormous, several hundred kilometer trench.

Panting heavily, the woman glared momentarily at her fallen opponent, with a half-assed victorious glimmer reflected in her eye. But just when it seemed like she'd won, Zangya suddenly spun around and, thrusting her finger out a third time, fired a red beam towards her original opponent. The exact same time she did, an orange, corkscrew beam slammed into her stomach and went straight through her, a split second before her attack went straight through Piccolo's head and caused the back of his skull to explode outwards.

Apparently the Namekian was able to recover fast enough from her quick-draw maneuver to get back to his feet and charge a full power Special Beam Cannon to launch at his adversary while her back was turned. This ended in both of them firing at the exact same time and hitting each other squarely in their vital points, with Piccolo's attack managing to drill right through Zangya's stomach while her finger beam took out his brain.

Eyes rolling into the back of his head, the stricken Namekian android fell flat onto his back while Zangya, with a massive hole formed in her chest, panted a few times before then collapsing to her knees. Slumping forward weakly, but managing to stay upright, the red haired woman relaxed and allowed whatever breaths she was able to manage to go steady. Her sclera vanishing and her hair turning back to orange as she reverted to her base form, the mother remained in place, with blood dripping from her open wound and lips.

After sitting there for a full minute and looking at the bodies of her two former comrades, the woman then choked out a pained laugh and turned her gaze towards the heavens. When she saw the smoke filling the atmosphere part and reveal the starry night beyond the earth for the briefest of moments, Zangya's eyes shimmered with tears and a sad smile gradually spread across her lips.

"I guess… this is it..." the Hera rasped, taking in one last breath as a tear then broke and trickled down her cheek. "Looks like… I won't be… seeing you again… after all… Eva… Gohan..."

She'd hoped above all for a chance to be able to embrace her family again for one last time before she passed. But as it turned out, the future had other plans for her.

Her energy levels finally depleting, the smiling warrior's life vanished, leaving her body kneeling in the middle of the war torn world that'd become her home, with her vacant gaze staring up towards the celestial plains above. Just like Trunks a few minutes before, Zangya died there that night; her form reflecting the virtuous spirit she'd cultivated over her many years on this planet, at the same time her soul passed into the netherworlds.

XXX

(Not too far away)
Videl's own battle with the android that was formerly her son had also come to a bloody end. Covered in scuffs, cuts, and various other wounds, the young mother stood over Goren's body as he lay there in the mud, a blast shot straight through his chest and a lifeless expression on his face. Her glowing pink hair fading back to its original, black coloration as she allowed her transformation to subside, the crime fighter then knelt down and took the boy's body into her arms.

Tears appearing in the corners of her crystal clear, sapphire eyes, the woman gently caressed her son and ran a thumb over his cheek. Brushing whatever muck and blood he had on him, like she often did when they were together, she then stared into the eleven year old's pale complexion. Far gone memories of a better time flashed through her mind and Videl was slowly reminded of all her greatest triumphs and failures of her short life. The one that stood out above them all just happened to be the one where, because of her weakness and inability to act, she'd allowed her son to fall victim to their enemy's strength. It was this knowledge and these decisive thoughts that caused the tears gathering in her eyes to finally break free and her face to scrunch up into one of pain, sorrow, and regret.

Sniffling as her hand ran through her boy's short hair, the woman then leant down and pressed her cheek into his mane, and hugged him to her in a hope of reviving him. But try as she might, no response came and no warmth was returned. Only cold and emptiness was her response.

"I'm sorry…" Videl whispered, sobbing as she rubbed the boy's head soothingly. "I'm so sorry…"

Oh, how she wished that none of this had ever happened. How she wished that it was her that could go back and stop all of this from happening. If there was even the smallest chance that her efforts would yield in some form of positive result, and could steer them away from this hellish future, then she would seize this moment and make it happen, no matter the cost.

However, she knew that this was not her fight to finish, at least… not on her own.

As the sounds of war raged on around her and she watched a fleet of Sentinel's ships descend towards her position, all Videl could do was form a small smile on her face and cradle her son's in her lap.

"Pan… I leave the rest to you…"

XXX

(Meanwhile)

"Super Flash Bomber!" Super Android 17 shouted as his fingertips stretched out and unleashed a torrent of golden energy blasts that went streaking across the sky like a rainbow. The miniature attacks curved along the atmosphere like missiles, wiping out a massive portion of Sentinel's Starfleet while the majority of the beams spanned the remainder of the earth's surface.

Their main target, Sentinel himself, ended up flying headlong into them.

Pursuing his foe to another part of the continent, the silver android looked up in alarm when he saw the golden attacks heading towards him and skidded to a stop in midflight. Crossing his arms over his face, the synthetic warrior then metaphorically held his ground as the energy bullets slammed into him and began tearing into his metallic flesh. Little by little, the golden attacks chipped away at his body and took big chunks out of his form, drawing a growl of pain from the silver warrior and prompting him to peer through his guard.

Realizing that the attack would not stop anytime soon, the abomination of an android then decided to act and, with a brief moment of concentration, vanished in a golden flash of light.

Seeing his foe teleport away, Seventeen jerked upwards in alarm and cut off the energy to his attack. When he spun around, he saw his opponent emerge from his Instantaneous mode of travel and dive at him with a punch. Avoiding it, the long haired man began trading lightning fast, devastating blows with the automaton, watching as the tyrant's wounds regenerated at the exact same time their punches and kicks collided with one another. Both shouting with every blow as they streaked across the sky, the fused android then drove his boots into Sentinel's chest and kicked him away, allowing him to get some much needed space.

Flying backwards across the sky, the good android drew his hand back and swung it through the air, firing a spray of golden beams at his enemy. This shotgun attack flew towards Sentinel and bombarded him relentlessly, puncturing holes across his chest and torso. Riddled with holes and noticeably winded from the damage, the silver fighter glared up and, cracking open his mouth, unleashed a massive pink energy wave that charged towards the fused warrior with the intent of incinerating him in one shot.

However, Android 17 was ready for it, throwing out his hands and catching it, and promptly absorbing the mass of ki in the blink of an eye. The moment the blast was absorbed into his body, he then charged towards his foe with blinding speed and threw a kick across his opponent's face. The blow, enhanced by the newly absorbed spurt of energy, impacted with a deafening thunderclap, sending blood flying from Sentinel's mouth and the android himself spiraling across the heavens. As soon as he dispatched his foe, the Super Cyborg flew after him with the intent of reengaging.

Managing to halt his flight along its projected path, the dazed Sentinel then looked around and swung the tentacle atop his head forward. The instant the tip jabbed out, it unleashed a pink, electric beam towards his cyborg counterpart.

Knowing exactly what that attack was capable of, the approaching Seventeen activated a blue energy field and deflected it. When the electrical pulse bounced uselessly off of his shield, he continued his charge and buried a fist into his opponent's face, caving it in. When the blow landed and knocked Sentinel a few yards back, the fused automaton then teleported above him and drove a kick straight down onto the boss's head. The blow connected loudly and sent the silver, regenerating warrior towards the earth, which he slammed into with an earthshaking tremor and a geyser of debris.

The cloud of dust from his impact lifted high into the air and when it eventually settled, it revealed that the silver warlord had landed on the very outskirts of the ruined West City, where the majority of the fighting was now taking place.

Lying at the bottom of the crater covered in gashes and dirt, the stricken Sentinel groaned as his wounds slowly healed over. Adjusting his jaw and feeling the joints and tendons heal, the silver Oscar-statue of a man then looked up to see his opponent land on the edge of the crater and look down at him in disgust.

For a few seconds, Android 17 contemplated attacking the guy and punching him right into the center of the planet. But before he could make sense of any of his options, the cyborg fighter then heard a series of loud sonic booms and looked across at the nearby city in surprise. It was then he saw the fleet Sentinel had called upon land around the metropolis. Like a scene taken straight out of a sci-fi film, the silver army of battleships and destroyers descended into the ruins, with smaller, drone-like craft flying out to patrol the planet.

When the raven haired man looked upon the enormous army with displeasure, he then looked back towards the leader of the armed forces and saw the android chuckle at him darkly.

Injuries finally healed, the still sprawled out Sentinel leered at his foe. "You know as well as I do what this means, Seventeen." The silver warrior lowered his head and cast a foreboding shadow across his gaze. "Your friends have failed... and I've won."

The fused android's glare hardened considerably as a gentle breeze whipped through his hair. "Not yet."

Smirking at his bravado, the silver plated android suddenly widened his eyes and spiked his energy, executing a move Seventeen did not expect. "Solar Flare!" A blinding flash of white light then exploded from the automaton's body, flickering like a strobe that had Android 17 take a big step back and shut his eyes.

Squinting through the haze of the technique, the long haired android then sensed his opponent thrust his hand forward as if to fire a blast, which prompted him to guard high with both arms to absorb it.

The instant he did however, a loud 'squelch' followed by a gasp of shock rang out. When the flashing light of the silver man's supplementary move faded seconds later, it revealed Sentinel had speedily leapt to his feet and, after morphing his arm into a spike similar to the T-1000, had run it straight through Super 17's stomach and out the other side. Now the teenage warrior found his body standing impaled against the taller man's limb like a piece of meat, a stunned look on his face and his arms held protectively in front of his face. This defensive maneuver had inadvertently left him wide open below the chest, allowing his foe the perfect opportunity to strike.

Grinning widely, Sentinel twisted his limb in the man's stomach and watched in satisfaction as he spat up blood. "I have now." Then, without a hint of hesitation or remorse, he removed the spike from the android's stomach and allowed Seventeen to stumble backwards in shock, clutching his gaping wound. His limb morphing back into a hand, the silver tyrant observed in quiet curiosity as his stricken enemy collapsed to his knees and attempted to stop the blood from flowing. "Earlier I noticed that your body was unable to defend itself from physical attacks while you're absorbing energy... a weakness Doctor Gero failed to scrub out of his models. You got careless."

Gritting his teeth, Super 17 looked up to glare hatefully at his foe. "Do you honestly think... I'm going to let... something like this... stop me?"

Sentinel shrugged, "Maybe? But that all depends on whether or not you'll be able to defend yourself from this." He then held his hand forward and began charging energy for a final blast. Sphere of ki forming, the silver android watched his enemy's expression twist into one of alarm. "Well Seventeen... it's been fun. But I'm afraid that our time together has sadly come to an end. Good bye." He then finished gathering energy and prepared to wipe his foe off of the face of the planet.

It was only when he was primed and ready to launch his finishing move at his wounded quarry, the silver warrior's sensors suddenly went off and his eyes snapped over his shoulder. At that exact moment, the metal monster of a conqueror slipped to the side just in time to dodge a swinging hook from Bulma, the mech-wearing woman attempting to impale him with some sort of needle she was holding in one of her massive gauntlets. The blow was barely avoided, but as a result, Sentinel had to cancel his final move on Seventeen, who collapsed onto his back when the raven haired fighter also had to avoid the woman blowing past them.

Applying the airbrakes, the blue haired heroine in the yellow armor halted her charge and spun...
around to see her target land a safe distance away. With a valiant cry of battle and a boost from her rockets, the scientist hurled herself at the silver warrior once again, striking out with the only arm she had left on her suit. This time though, when Sentinel avoided the blow, he also wound up grabbing the mech's arm, and tossing the unit over his shoulder and straight into the ground. The instant he slammed the machine into the floor with an earth splitting 'crack', he then slammed a foot into its chest and grabbed the top portion of the suit.

With a single, effortless pull, he ripped the entire top-half of the mech from the pilot, whose stunned face instantly revealed itself from underneath the shell. It was as soon as the protective helmet and armor was torn free from its host that Bulma tried one last time to jab the prick with her arm, only for Sentinel to catch her thrust with his hand and begin to slowly crush the limb under his powerful fingers. Unlike Vegeta before him, thanks to the Godly strength granted to him from years of absorbing people and integrating their minds and fighting styles into his software, he pushed back the limb without a single budge or twitch, allowing him to hold his would-be assailant at bay, and keep her pinned under his foot.

She was done.

The silver warrior smirked at the woman. "A fine effort. But you are a fool to think that I would fall for such an obvious sneak attack. I could sense you coming from a mile away."

Bulma, struggling to move her metal arm from the android's grasp, then threw a smirk up at her former creation. "Well… it was worth a shot."

Snorting at her attempt to act cool, Sentinel then raised a finger and pointed it towards her forehead. "Though I have no idea what you were trying to accomplish, it doesn't really matter now either way. As entertaining as your group has been to me over the last several years, I find that there's no more enjoyment to be had from you"

"Wait," Bulma exclaimed, looking the android in his blood-red eyes with a wry grin. "We could… always play twenty questions."

"Alright then. First question," the android replied with a smug grin. "Are you about to die?"

"… no," the scientist replied hesitantly.

"Uh-uh-uh," replied the silver abomination as the tip of his finger began to glow a hot orange, "No lying…"

At this, the blue haired woman pinned under the tyrant's heel, smirked. "Who says I'm lying?"

Baffled by her unusually calm response, the robot was then about to ask her what she meant by her retort when he felt a sharp sting in his back. Gasping in shock, Sentinel disengaged from his advantageous post and staggered away, reaching over his shoulder to pluck whatever it was that'd 'bit' him. When he opened his palm and looked down, he found a vial attached to a syringe sitting in his hand, which had his eyes widen before a sharp pain suddenly overcame his body. Crying out in agony and stumbling around like a drunk on a field day, the android's skin began to ripple, crawl and pump with varicose veins, which led to his horrified gaze landing on the person responsible for the stabbing.

He turned to find a very badly burnt but noticeably chipper looking Kaiser standing behind him with his hand extended. Having obviously tracked them down from the base where he'd been fighting, the man had been able to move swiftly and stealthily enough to get the drop on their enemy, who obviously wasn't expecting someone with such an insignificant presence to strike a blow at him.

The sight of his smiling face and his empty, open palm was all the evidence the silver android needed to know that it was this particular individual that had driven the needle into his skin.

"W-What the fuck did you do…?" the android questioned in a pained voice, watching the human with the goatee step away expectantly. Upon analyzing his systems to find out what the hell kind of toxin he'd been hit with, which didn't make any since considering he was immune to practically everything, Sentinel's eyes then flared red when he found the exact result of the injection. "You shut me out?"

"That's right, you prick," Kaiser exclaimed while Bulma sat up from the ground nearby and came to stand alongside her ally. The former businessman then pointed across at the android. "Now you're unable to transfer your consciousness to another body. You're stuck like that. Permanently."

Clenching his jaw tightly, the silver android thrust a fist out and cursed them outright. '"So what? I'm the most powerful being in the entire universe! The alpha! The omega! I am the creator of an empire spanning four entire quadrants! Even if you knock out my transferring capabilities, I can still return to one of my factories and reverse whatever the hell you did to me!" That's what he thought anyway.

Following his little outburst, a sly smile formed across Bulma's face. "Not unless you're killed in the next fifty seconds."

Sentinel then balked. '"What?" The exact moment he uttered that question, his body was suddenly grabbed from behind in a powerful bear hug and his feet were lifted off of the ground, causing him to look over his shoulder in shock. When he did, he found himself caught in a stranglehold by a still alive and well Super Android 17, who was now holding onto the mad tyrant with all the strength he could muster. He even managed to pin his tentacle against the man's spine. The sight of the black haired adult had the silver fighter's eyes widen in disbelief. '"Y-You? What the hell are you doing?!""

The long haired automaton grinned, "What does it look like, bitch? I've got you… and now… you're not going anywhere."

Snarling, the silver warrior attempted to shake his way out of the man's arms, even throwing a few elbow strikes into his wounded stomach. But after several seconds of fruitless writhing, kicking and elbowing, the metallic android was unable to break loose. He then attempted to warp his body and teleport out of there, but thanks to the hold Android 17 had over him, he was incapable of even focusing his energy, as it was steadily being drained from his body.

"Oh, you miserable, long-haired punk! When I get out of this, I'm going to blow you and this entire miserable planet to nothing!" Sentinel roared, throwing his head back to try and hit the android in the nose, but missed every single time.

Seventeen chuckled and spoke sarcastically, "Sure. Whatever you say, little bro." He then looked across at Bulma and Kaiser to see both of them collapse to the ground and take a seat. Though their laidback actions baffled the silver man, it brought a smile of amusement to the fused android's face. "So… how long have we got?"

The blue haired scientist looked down at her mech's wrist and, sliding back the panel, saw the exact position of the countdown. "About… forty-five more seconds." She then looked back up at her companions and sighed. "Might as well just sit back and enjoy the fireworks."

Eyes darting between the smirking group members, the android antagonist then shot a glare towards his 'mother'. "What the hell are you talking about? What's going on?!"

Grinning from ear-to-ear, Kaiser grinned at the confused tyrant and began to speak. "Since these are going to be your last few seconds as grand chancellor of the universe, I guess we can let you in on our little secret. You know that energy build up that you detected back at our headquarters?" Seeing the android's eyes narrow, the magnate chuckled. "That 'power' was actually coming from a specially designed bomb we had planted in the cellar. Its core is outfitted with a unique power source we were able to manufacture through the particle accelerator we had setup alongside it."

"Power source? What power source?"

Bulma shrugged, "A new type of matter composed entirely out of pure energy, which we call a 'God Particle'… a little something that Whis helped us in naming when we were assembling the quantum trigger system. When exposed to a powerful enough charge, this particular element can generate an explosion equivalent to a miniature Big Bang."

"We ran the calculations ourselves. The device has a successful utilization record of one point two-trillion simulated in one-actual. It is ready to fire… on demand," Kaiser nodded affirmatively with a proud look on his face.

"If our numbers are correct, the blast will produce a series of chain explosions that will stretch from one corner of the universe to the other, wiping out every single known galaxy until the entire cosmos has been completely sterilized of life, both synthetic and natural." She then looked across at her scientific partner. "It's an invention only two of the smartest, maddest people on the planet can possibly concoct… and something only the most desperate can ever think of putting into practice." She then shared a fist-bump with their group's former enemy, before they went back to staring at their current enemy, who was now gaping at them in horror. "I think you can guess what's going to happen in fifteen more seconds."

"No. NO! YOU CAN'T DO THAT!" Sentinel roared, thrashing even wildly against Android 17's hold in a final bid to break free. But try as he might, he was unable to budge. "If you do that, every single one of you will die!"

A grim smile forming, Bulma shared a nod with the android as she settled in for the final curtain. "A small sacrifice, but one that is well worth it, if it means wiping you from the pages of history…"

As Sentinel proceeded to continue struggling to break out of Seventeen's hold, the two scientists sat in deathly silence for several seconds. Then, as the second hand was about to reach zero, Kaiser looked up towards the clouds swirling high above and spoke.

"You know… if it's any consolation," the bearded man said while glancing across at Bulma,"This is going to be really… really painful for me."

Grinning a little, the blue haired scientist shook her head and smiled up towards the sky along with him. "Ah… shut up, you wuss."

Then… it happened.

From the center of West City, a blinding white light shot up into the sky, followed immediately by a deafening thunderclap that sent a catastrophic shockwave in all direction, and causing a visible ripple to shift across the fabric of reality. What came next was a blinding, dome of white light that began expanding at an alarming rate, producing countless small explosions that grew larger and larger as it traveled outwards.

The first to go was Broly who, after tearing into another one of Sentinel's giant androids, turned his attention to the wall of approaching light. In typical madman fashion, he attempted to punch it. The Legendary Super Saiyan then vanished shortly afterwards with a final scream of his arch nemesis's name before his body was completely atomized. The wall of fire then engulfed Zangya, Vegeta and Piccolo's bodies, then Trunks, and then finally Videl. Continuing to cradle her dead son in her arms, the mother vanished inside the wall of light without a single cry or scream, her soul passing into the afterlife peacefully.

Sentinel, eyes widening in horror, tried one last fruitless attempt to wrestle his way out before the wall of energy washed over the group in the blink of an eye. The android's scream marked the deaths of all the remaining Z-fighters as he, Android 17, Bulma and Kaiser vanished into nothingness.

From the moon's orbit, the first explosion was seen as a tiny gleam on the darkest side of the planet. That light then grew and expanded until it engulfed over half of the world. Then, in spectacular fashion, thousands more explosions began ripping across the planet and then out into space. The world became engulfed in lightning and hellfire and then, within a matter of moments, so did the rest of the solar system, the Milky Way, and finally the rest of the quadrant…

XXX

(Present Day)

In a clearing inside of a dense forest not too far outside of Satan City, a flash and a loud hum suddenly shook the trees and startled a flock of birds from their roost. The cause of this anomaly quickly revealed itself to be the familiar, four-legged time capsule from the not too distant future, which floated down from the air to gently land in the middle of the patch of grass. Its engines slowly powering down the moment it touched the clearing, the top of the pod soon opened, allowing the two pilots working the controls to hop out and land on solid ground.

Quickly dusting themselves off and making sure they didn't leave anything behind, the two young teenagers then went about pocketing the time machine. Hitting the button underneath the panel on the outer side of the hull, Pan watched the vehicle vanish in a puff of white smoke and a Capsule drop to the ground from the cloud a moment later. Picking it up and slipping it into her bag, the raven haired child then had a quick scan of the area before jogging over to the tree line. She was completely oblivious to what was going on behind her.

"Come on, Eva. If we're going to stop that metal freak from constructing his army, we have to get to North City and find him as fast as we can," the young Saiyan chirped before turning her gaze back towards her partner and best friend. "Come on. The sooner we get this done, the be-" She then noticed the look on her half-sister's face and, looking at her wide eyes and pale complexion, slowly approached her. "Eva? What's wrong?" Receiving no immediate response, the worried girl jogged over to her. "Are you alright?"

When she reached out to try and grab her shoulder, Pan then saw the red-haired fighter look up at her robotically. As soon as their eyes met, the youngster wielding Goku's signature power pole then looked on in shock as tears started to run down Eva's face, and her voice spoke up in a croaky and broken manner.

"Th-They're gone…" Eva murmured, her pupils shimmering as the usually brave and calm teenager sniffled with hurt. "I can sense it. They're... they're all gone. Mum... Videl... Bulma... th-they all just..." Gritting her teeth, the half-Hera, half-Saiyan reached up with her arm and sobbed into it, unable to contain her sorrow any longer than she could.

Not knowing how to respond, Pan remained silent for the longest time. Reaching up with her hand, she hesitated in making physical contact with her sister, as she didn't know how she was going to react. It was only after hearing the girl start to weep and seeing her tense up that the raven haired fighter acted, and placed a hand on Eva's shoulder, prompting the young Z-fighter to look up and meet her gaze. Videl's daughter then offered her a warm smile as the waterworks shimmered in her own eyes.

"We can save our tears for later. But right now, we have a job to do," Pan whispered, bracing her sister's shoulders tightly and shaking her ever so slightly, showing just how much she was hanging on both mentally and emotionally. "I won't be able to do this mission on my own... not without you, Eva. You're the toughest, bravest, and the strongest out of the two of us. If there's anyone that should be trying to shake some sense into someone when they lose it, it's gotta be you."

Hearing her sibling's words loud and clear, the red haired teen slowly nodded and quickly dried her face on her arm. "Y-You're right." As soon as she'd cleaned herself off and calmed down, she then looked up at her partner with a renewed look of determination. "Thanks."

Returning her gratefulness with a warm smile, Pan then straightened up, returned her hands to her sides, and looked around. "The time machine landed us outside of Satan City. That means we've got quite a ways to go to get to where Doctor Gero's lab is." She then turned to smile at her sister. "Come on. I'll race you there." She then began to gather her energy. But just before she could take off, she was suddenly grabbed by the shoulder and forcefully turned to face the redhead. A look of surprise immediately appeared on Pan's face. "Hey? What gives?"

"Don't you remember what Bulma said?" Eva hissed, stopping her half-sister from doing anything reckless. "Sentinel is still in hiding and building his army. That means he's monitoring every single super power on this planet from, dad's to Yamcha's, for any signs of unusual activity. If he even catches a whiff of someone strong approaching him, he's just going to bail out of there and head to another mountain. We have to do this quietly."

Pan, hearing her sister's words loud and clear, then narrowed her eyes on her. "Then what do you propose we do?"

Adjusting her bag, the red-haired half-Hera then walked around her sibling and proceeded towards the tree line. "We need to keep our power levels hidden and as suppressed as possible. That way we won't get picked up by any of his drones." She then glanced across at her teammate when she fell in step with her. "We're gonna have to get there on foot."

Breathing out in frustration, the raven haired girl groaned, "Alright then. If you say so."

As the pair proceeded to march into the forest and towards the nearest highway, where they hoped they would be able to barter some sort of transportation, the two of them took a moment to admire their scenery. Not used to seeing the earth so lush and full of life, with fauna and flora sitting everywhere they looked, the sisters figured they'd enjoy their time here before they continued on to the serious stages of their mission.

While jogging downhill, Pan then looked across at her partner in crime and gave her an inquisitive look. "Do you think dad would recognize us if he saw us?"

Pursing her lips thoughtfully, Eva shrugged. "I don't know. Mum said he was one of the densest people in the galaxy. Even if we do happen to bump into him, I doubt he would be able to tell we are his daughters."

"Ugh…" Pan grunted, narrowing her eyes in annoyance. "I wonder what he's doing right now."

(TO BE CONTINUED)

Author's Note: Well then, if there are any readers out there keeping tabs on thins, then I think you'll be able to connect the dots and guess what happened to make the future so fucked up.

Contrary to what you may believe, a lot of freaky shit had gone on after the World Tournament, which we'll be getting into after the next few arcs. Fifteen years into the future, Gohan and Sandra are dead, all of the Z-fighters were absorbed by Super Buu, or Sentinel Buu if we're keeping score here, the earth is dead, the universe has been taken over by his infinite robot army, Beerus and a couple of other Gods were assimilated by Sentinel to power said army, and now everyone else is dead. Even Kaiser (he says while clearing his throat awkwardly).

It's a pretty grim future that not even our hero survives. I wonder how he gets killed. Hmm? Well, for all naysayers out there, even the heroes in my story die horribly and brutally. No mercy, I say. This coincides with my original intent that brings the heroes back to their roots, making them human, and showing that despite their strengths, there are still other opponents out there capable of killing them. No Godly foes here, just monsters.

This Future Ending that I'd concocted was solely inspired off of Dragonball Z and the History of Trunks Arc. In fact, everything that I've come up with in this story has been directly inspired off of DBZ related themes. I wouldn't have written them in if they didn't connect in some way to the lore.

Sentinel is one of the biggest threats the Z-fighters' have faced since the androids. Since he is basically one of Doctor Gero's androids, the story is harkening back to the time travel theme of the Cell Games, which has differed greatly for this particular future. Instead of Mirai Trunks traveling to the present timeline from an alternate reality, Pan and her sister Eva travel from the future and go directly back along their timeline. That means there are certain rules and guidelines they have to follow that govern this sort of thing.

There are a lot of things you can do with time travel in a story like this. The way that these two traveled back means that they're capable of changing their future unlike what Mirai Trunks did where his actions in the past didn't do anything to effect his world. Basically by the end of this arc, things will be so much different for Pan and Eva's future. However, that didn't stop the Z-fighters of the future from going down in flames and glory, basically destroying the entire universe to destroy Sentinel. They pretty much Halo'd space and sterilized every single quadrant the android had assimilated.

So what about the Z-fighters of the future? Well, from analyzing Vulcan's suit and combining it with Doctor Gero's technology, Bulma was able to create her own armored suits to fight in, meaning she's going to play a much bigger role in future events. She's pretty much my version of Tony Stark in the DBZ world.

Trunks trained to become a Super Saiyan 3, Kaiser joined their side to fight against Sentinel, and there's a lot of other stuff in there I'm sure you guys were able to pick up. Again, this is just another one of the multiple endings I have planned, so hold on to your horses, because there's going to be a lot of weird stuff that's going to happen.

Sentinel's army is also unique. Think of Meta Cooler and the Big Gete Star, only on a much larger scale, in which he actually wins and ends up conquering all of space. In this story, Sentinel is pretty much a more terrifying version of Baby, where he was able to absorb the Z-fighters and a couple of the Gods, and is using them to fuel and create his robot army.

The robot army as well is made out of kachin, which Supreme Kai stated is the hardest known metal in the universe. What with his conquering millions of planets, he was able to discover the element and use it to create his armada of 'Coolers' or androids. Pretty freaky shit. The sheer number of androids he was able to create was able to beat all of the Z-fighters.

Anyhow, this gives you a much better idea of what's to come and how the future stories and arcs are interwoven together. Hope you're all looking forward to the next chapter.

Future Ending

Survivors:

Bulma
Kaiser
Trunks
Videl
Zangya
Pan (Videl and Gohan's daughter)
Eva (Zangya and Gohan's daughter)
Super Android 17 (fusion between Android 17 and Android 16)
xxx
Paprika (recently deceased)
Broly (unwilling ally)

Enemies:

Sentinel Buu (Z-fighters absorbed)
Android Goku
Android Vegeta
Android Piccolo
Android Goten
Android Goren (Videl and Gohan's son)
Inside the enormous, dome-shaped building that was the home and headquarters of the largest and most powerful Research & Development conglomerate in the world, the president was hard at work trying to resolve her group's latest debacle. This took the form of the hulking, busted up armored suit lying on the operating table in front of her, with its limbs and joints plugged with wires and its chest piece cracked open, allowing the scientist full access to its contents. Adorned in her white lab coat, working jeans and blue halter top, Bulma Briefs narrowed her eyes on her computer screen as she tapped away at the keys, allowing the automated eyes to do all the routine work for her, while she analyzed the specs up close.

She wasn't alone in the room either. Standing together and watching her in the background, the people responsible for bringing the body in with them were all arranged into a group directly behind her station. This included Gohan, Piccolo, Videl, Erasa, and a newly arrived Vegeta, the latter of who had just finished a routine workout in the Gravity Room earlier that morning. Obviously having sensed the battle from a distance, the flame-haired man had prematurely retired from his training session to come see what all the fuss was about when the Z-fighters' ki signatures appeared in his wife's workplace.

Needless to say, he had been rather surprised when he found out the exact cause of the atmospheric disturbance.

Narrowing his eyes as he stared down at the burnt and busted up army mech lying on the operating table, he then looked across at his teammates to see that all of them had tidied themselves up as best as they could following the fight, and had slipped on three respective sets of brand new clothing.

This was especially noticeable for Gohan, who had previously been short one T-shirt and a pant leg, both of which had been incinerated during his fight. But now he was back in full casual gear and looking just as troubled as the rest of them.

It didn't help that he was still looking a little bit grungy and busted up from his battle.

"So this was the thing that was responsible for causing all that ridiculous power fluctuations I could feel several hundred kilometers away," Vegeta muttered in his usual, gruff tone, "This walking pile of scrap metal?"

Gohan shot a hard glance at the man, "Trust me, it was a lot more impressive back then compared to what it is now."

Blinking at the teen's response, the Saiyan Prince then looked behind him at the other operating table, where he could see the deceased pilot of the mech lying underneath a white sheet. After getting a good look at the now dead human, who was being examined by a separate computer, Vegeta frowned and, looking back at the group, directed his next question towards his rival's son.
"And you're saying that it was a human inside this suit that actually forced you into using Super Saiyan 3?" the royal asked, still sounding incredibly unconvinced.

"He didn't exactly have much of a choice, Vegeta," Piccolo spoke up, also glaring across at the Saiyan when he scowled in their direction.

"The suit was able to absorb both energy attacks and physical attacks, meaning that whenever we landed a hit on him, he would simply nullify the force behind our blows and gain strength from them," Videl continued, giving her own two cents on the matter. When Vegeta glanced in her general direction, Erasa, who had met the Saiyan on a couple of occasions, slinked behind her friend a little due to how intimidating the prince was coming off. "It didn't help that he was built like a damn tank either. He practically strolled through everything we threw at him."

Vegeta blinked and focused back on the metal frame strewn across the desk, "So he had a modified version of the old androids' abilities to absorb energy, huh? That sounds fun." His voice was almost literally dripping with sarcasm, indicating how unappealing he found this information.

Absorbing energy from your opponent was such a cheap way to gain strength to win a battle. However, despite how vile and despicable the concept was, the Z-fighter still had to tip his hat to the person who developed that idea, since taking power away from an enemy to use as your own had the potential to give members of a weaker, inferior race the ability to match blows with someone far above their class. This soldier in the armored exo-suit was no exception.

"How bad was it, exactly?" Vegeta asked, giving Gohan and Piccolo an inquisitive glance.

Knowing exactly what he was asking, the demi-Saiyan took a deep breath and shook his head in a dejected manner. "Let's just say if Videl hadn't stabbed him in the back when she did… I wouldn't be standing here talking to any of you right now."

That was pretty much all that needed to be said to get his message across to the full-blooded alien. Once that piece was spoken, all the people in gathered together in that group then turned their attention to the hostess, who was currently finishing up her diagnosis on the suit.

Swallowing nervously on the sidelines while standing alongside her best friends and their compatriots, Erasa looked up at Gohan and spoke in a soft voice. "How are you feeling, Gohan?"

Acknowledging the girl's question, the demi-Saiyan smiled back down at her and nodded. "I'm fine, Erasa. Don't worry about me." In truth, he was more worried about her and her condition, and he tried to make that stand out in the look he had reflected in his gaze.

"Are you sure?" the blonde asked, stepping closer and, after slowly raising her hand, placed it against his shoulder. "That prick didn't go easy on you out there. The two of you completely wrecked one another across half of Satan City."

The young male responded with a bright and radiant grin, one that had the blonde's heart skip a beat. "I'm alright. Though I may not look it the way I am now, covered in dirt and crap, my friends and I have taken a whole lot worse in the past. Trust me." He then bowed his head to her kindly. "But thanks a lot for asking."

His gratitude towards the teen's consideration earned a balk from Erasa and a blush, which then led to the girl looking away and locking her hands in front of her in embarrassment. It was a reaction that was easily noticed by Videl, as well as the ever vigilant and battle ready Vegeta. However, instead of saying anything on the matter, the Saiyan Prince merely threw a glance in the hybrid's general direction, before quickly returning his sights to the computers in front of him and to the
The automated arms of the operating device ran over the entire suit, hitting it with beams of light that outlined its entire casing and burrowed deep into the heart of the armor. This incredibly meticulous and robotic routine continued on in the foreground, even when Bulma was done performing her tests and affirmed this by pulling away from the screen, breathing a heavy sigh as she watched the lines of data continue blazing away in the side window.

Sensing she was done, Gohan stepped forward with his hands on his hips and a firm expression in play. "Well? What's the scoop?"

Looking to see that every single person behind her was patiently waiting for an answer, the blue haired president of Capsule Corp crossed her arms and fixed her sights on the team of super-powered fighters. "I don't know what it is about your group and the rest of the universe, but you guys have a really interesting way of making new friends." She narrowed her eyes specifically on the strongest warriors there, coaxing looks of discomfort from each of his comrades. "And here I thought it was Goku that always attracted the unwanted attention. I stand corrected."

Her statement drew an indignant grunt from the Saiyan Prince. "Spare us the third degree, woman, and tell us what the hell this thing is and who sent it."

Frowning back at the man that was her husband, the blue haired company president huffed irritably while sticking her prominent chest out. "Hey, I may be one of the top five smartest people on the face of the planet, maybe even the smartest, but I'm no miracle worker… and I'm certainly no fortune teller." She then glanced back at the broken suit lying behind her and gave it an annoyed look as her computer continued its diagnosis, "Whoever designed this suit and put it on the guy lying on the gurney behind you, did a really good job making sure the software or any of the parts built to make the thing move couldn't be traced back to him."

Normally that would've been impossible. Just like the pieces of a car, which came straight out of the factory, the pieces could be tracked via the serial numbers and general craftsmanship. However, all of the bits and pieces of the suit were custom designed straight out of some random person's workshop. There was no groove, curve or cut that Bulma could identify, with absolutely no personal marks whatsoever. It was baffling.

Almost instantly, every single one of the Z-fighters standing in front of the woman frowned at this bit of news.

"I assume that that's a bad thing," Videl murmured, finding absolutely no joy or comfort from the scientist's statements.

"If by 'bad' you mean there's another mad scientist that's set his sights on the group and has put into motion some sort of evil plan for us, then yes. I'd say that's quite bad," Bulma replied with a firm nod of her head, turning to look at the group with her unshaken gaze. "The last time we dealt with someone that not only had the intellect, but also the means, skills, and the drive to create an artificial abomination capable of fighting and killing members of our team; Goku, Trunks, and a good portion of the earth's population ended up getting killed." She was of course referring to Doctor Gero and the spawn of his twisted genius. When she nodded over to the busted mech, the woman shook her head. "Whoever made this suit is no different from him."

Finding this news as troubling as every other flash item that they'd heard in the past, Piccolo narrowed his gaze further on the motionless robot before quickly shifting his gaze back to the woman tasked with examining it. "In other words… you weren't able to find out anything?"
His question put a smile on the scientist's face. "Even though I wasn't able to draw up a signature of the person who made this, I was still able to learn a great deal about the armor itself that I'm sure you guys will be interested to hear." Sliding back on her office chair, Bulma then dialed blindly into the touch pad she'd been working on and caused a hologram to jump up from the ceiling-built projector overhead.

A blue screen of light appeared before the team as the scientist began flicking through images like slides on a power point presentation. The team of fighters was soon presented with two sets of blueprints, followed by a third that was obviously a layout of the mangled suit of armor. The woman then posted them side-by-side, and zoomed in on each of them, allowing the gathering of warriors and visitors to get a good bead of what they were looking at.

Bulma looked at the hologram as she began to speak. "The suit is of hybrid design, combining elements from both the Red Ribbon Army mechs and the recent double-digit android models, all of which were designed and constructed by the late Doctor Gero." She then pointed at what the group suspected to be the blueprints for Eighteen's brother, which was splayed out across the digital canvas. "Notice how the nervous system of Android 17 mimics the wiring in the suit and the distinct similarities between their key components. Both the suit and the androids employ the exact same science in their respective frame constructions, allowing them to perform unbelievable superhuman feats of strength and agility. However, instead of implanting these components inside a living, human body, the chassis has been modified and adapted into a highly versatile, multi-purpose combat armor, which negates the need for extensive surgery and the use of cybernetic implants. That makes this a far more all-around and deadly killing machine that can be worn by anyone."

Tilting her head at the floating blueprints, Erasa frowned, "It all sounds like one big headache to me." It was a remark that earned nods of agreement from both Piccolo and Videl.

"That's not even the half of it. Not only does the suit enhance the strength and speed of the user just like the wireframe models used in the androids, but it also masks the life-force of the person it's surrounding and utilizes an advanced weapon system very similar in range to Android 16's," Bulma informed, moving her hand over the basic elements of the suit and enlarging them on the big screen. When she looked back at the group, her eyes reflected both amazement and concern. "The rockets and projectiles are loaded with a red mercury compound that creates an explosion similar in power to your energy blasts, which it can also fire from its hands, chest and feet. In addition to that, it's outfitted with an active camouflage system, allowing it to turn invisible at a moment's notice, as well as beam weapons capable of cutting through the densest materials, and jet pods that can be used for sudden bursts of speed and sustained flight."

Gohan chuckled in surprise and took another look at the battered mech. "That's a lot of high tech gear crammed into a single suit of metal. What the heck was powering all of that stuff?"

This question drew a smile from the woman. "That's actually the most interesting part. After analyzing the remains of the shattered core, I discovered traces of Struve particles along the surface of the heat shield, a substance that can only be found on planets orbiting new stars. By using the matter as a fuel target in the form of a concentrated pellet, the person was able to create a miniature fusion reactor that could generate an energy mass equivalent to a celestial body." She then pulled up a diagram of said power-core on screen, allowing the Z-fighters to see exactly what they were dealing with. "Judging from the elemental composition of the resulting radioactive dust, the energy source that was powering the suit was most likely a neutron star. The same core designed to maintain the solar sphere was also built to take in external energy and add it to its center, allowing it to increase its output and lifespan, which also explains why it was able to drain so much energy from you."
This news brought a smirk to Vegeta's face. "Hmph. Apparently it could only handle so much power before it eventually decided to pop like a water balloon." He then glanced across at Gohan, who also looked in the prince's direction. "I guess this will teach him never to underestimate a Super Saiyan."

While the two warriors interacted, Videl regarded the suit's power source with momentary suspicion. A few seconds later, she then looked across at the one spearheading their current lecture and issued her next question, "You said the material needed to power the suit came from a different planet, right? Well... how in the heck did the person who made this manage to get their hands on stuff that came from millions of light years away?"

A smile formed on Bulma's face, "That part's actually quite simple to explain. You see, the only reason we have Struve particles in our Solar System is due to the amount of space debris that drifts in from other galaxies. The meteorites that crash land on our planet sometimes come from other systems, and can carry all sorts of surprises with them, most notably rare and valuable elements." She then shrugged in their direction. "Modestly speaking, my father and I are two of the most gifted technicians on the continent. But since Struve particles are one of the rarest elements in the world, there's no way in hell I'll be able to replicate whatever technology went into making this without it."

"So in other words, whoever sent this guy after us knew it was going to be a one-shot deal, even if he failed?" Gohan asked with a gradually deepening frown, "That was a pretty big risk for such an outrageous play."

"A big risk that ultimately led to his defeat," Piccolo stated, his own expression set into a cold one as he watched Bulma scroll through an even longer batch of information. He then grunted and looked down at his students, seeing both the demi-Saiyan and Videl looking up at him. "Regardless of the outcome, this suit of armor was still unbelievably strong. I'm actually surprised it managed to take as much punishment as it did without breaking into a thousand pieces, especially when it was taking hits from a Super Saiyan of Gohan's level."

"That's because the person who made the armor infused the casing with the exact same metal used to make the androids and the surface of the gravity room," the blue haired scientist informed, allowing another schematic to pop up onto the hologram, showing the group the compounds in question. She then directed their attention towards a collection of loosely connected grey molecules. "This is a sample of the metal used in Android 16's original chassis. The alloy composing the frame underneath his artificial skin is made out of ten percent adamantine, the hardest and most versatile substance on the planet." She then pointed towards the image next to that one, which also consisted of molecules, only there were far more of them, with several of them stuck together. "And this is a sample of the metal used in the suit, showing an adamantine percentage of roughly twenty five percent. Even a slight difference in the quantity of adamantine used can have a dramatic affect on even the smallest plate of metal."

Her announcement earned a slight grimace from Gohan, who then proceeded to massage his knuckles from the sudden rush of phantom pains he received. "No wonder it felt like I was batting around a block of iron. That thing was literally built like a tank."

"Since adamantine is difficult to mold at high quantities due to the viscous nature of its raw state, it's normally combined with common alloys to enhance their strength and durability. It also allows for a reduction in material weight, making it ideal for military vehicles and prosthetics," Bulma said, typing away at her pad and shutting off the hologram. She then proceeded to analyze the formulas her computer was now bringing up for her, at the same time the Z-fighters waited patiently behind her. "I'm actually finding out quite a bit of fascinating things looking at the spectrographs of this suit. Perhaps I can borrow some of the design elements used in its construction and build one or two of my own."

The Saiyan Prince looked at his wife oddly, while the rest of the troop appeared somewhat surprised. "You're not serious, are you?"

"Oh, I'm dead serious," Bulma exclaimed as an eager grin formed on her face and her eyes darted over the blueprints of her handheld device. "It's been forever since I've come across an idea for a project this exciting. I mean, sure, building robots to assist in manual labor and human services is one thing, but piloting a suit of armor that can give me super-strength? That's friggin' awesome!"

She then turned around and winked at the group, causing a nervous shiver to run through Gohan, Piccolo and Vegeta. "If I play this out right and use my time wisely, maybe I'll be able to make a mech strong enough to punt your sorry butts around the planet."

Gohan emitted a nervous chuckle and placed his hands on his hips, "Now there's a scary thought."

Videl also smiled uneasily, "No kidding. The world's most famous scientist kicking bad-guy ass in a mech? The idea was almost unheard of.

Almost…

Following their shared collection of remarks over the woman's preposterous sounding concept, the group of enamored Z-fighters continued to listen in as Bulma spouted some more plans and details regarding the suit she wanted to design. She even brought up some drafts she'd been able to come up with right there on the spot through her computer's assorted programming.

It was just as the brilliant young woman was panning over the many features of her first pick and was in the process of presenting them to her audience that the equable Gohan suddenly felt a cold and very unpleasant chill run up his back. It was a sensation that caused every strand of his hair to stand on end.

Puzzled by this involuntary reaction, the demi-Saiyan then looked over his shoulder in the direction the unusual current of electricity had come from.

It was there that he saw it.

Standing just a few paces behind him, bathed in shadow, he saw a very familiar person staring back at him. Adorned in all black, with traces of red and white trim and stylish embellishments, the figure was a very fit and curvaceous young woman around eighteen years old, with a patch strapped over her right eye, long, pale-blonde wavy hair that grew down her back, and was tied into a long ponytail. She was also sporting a noticeably revealing outfit, a low-cut neckline that went down below her naval, revealing a toned stomach and ample chest, giving the suit the appearance of a swimsuit. Along with a long, black cape that hung behind her waist, she was also wearing shin-high, black heeled boots, and a black wide-brim hat with a pointed tip, which had a tiny gold bell at the end of it. Overall, this strange looking person had the appearance of a witch, minus the broom, wand and cap, with a hat that was comically large for her head, about half her own size, but fit nice and snugly over her cranium nonetheless.

Aside from having perfectly smooth skin, as the half-Saiyan noticed above her skimpy outfit, the woman also had a fair complexion, grey sclera, and a blood red eye that shone brightly from beneath the shadow of her hat. It was when Gohan's gaze met hers and he saw the woman smile at him, his entire body unexpectedly seized up.

It was a sensation the demi-Saiyan couldn't describe. On one hand, the appearance of the mysterious young woman surprised him, and even caused a momentary wave of serenity to flow through him. But the instant his charcoal stare met hers, all warmth, happiness, and strength in his body was swept away, and was replaced by the cold, iron grip of fear and terror. Looking into the eye of the shadowy figure, it was almost like all the power the young man once held was scared out of his body and sent running off into the distance, leaving him standing in place, with every bone in his body trembling uncontrollably. His breathing stopped when all his organs ceased functioning for the briefest of moments, leaving him in a state reminiscent of death.

The only time he could remember ever feeling this close to it was when he found himself in the vice of Bojack, multiplied exponentially by all the horrors and moments of sheer hopelessness he'd experienced over the course of his young life. The feeling now encasing his rigid body was stifling and suffocating, leaving him choking on words and bleeding sweat.

His mouth moved, attempting to utter words in a desperate attempt to warn his friends of the imminent danger standing behind them. He even tried to force his body into action through sheer willpower, but for some unexplained reason... he couldn't even get his finger to budge. Simply being captivated by the stranger's blood red eye, the demi-Saiyan had become powerless and unable to act under his own power. It was like the intruder's will had completely overpowered his and, with only the smallest of glances, now controlled his every thought and movement.

Unable to fight the sensation confining him to this space, all Gohan was able to do was gawk back at the person standing in the room in front of him. When he finally managed to get a good look at her face beyond her devil's gaze, the teen's mind instantly processed an identifiable profile of the figure.

There was a reason why this stranger seemed so familiar to him. Maybe it was because he'd known her for the past seven years and had become bonded to her through both happiness and grief. There was no way he could forget an angel like her; someone who gave him courage in his darkest times, who lifted him up whenever he was down, who gave him company and friendship, and whom he shared an invisible and unbreakable bond with.

Ironically enough, it was the image of this particular person that allowed the teen to free his body from the overpowering hold of the stranger and speak their name.

When his voice broke, all fears and feelings of doubt broke with it.

"Videl?"

In response, the witch standing behind him grinned menacingly.

...
...
...
"Gohan?"
...
...
"Gohan?"

Letting out a gasp of shock as he was shaken out of his trance, the spiky haired half-Saiyan quickly looked down to see his girlfriend was gripping his shirt and was tugging on it with a worried look on her face. It was this very expression and showcasing of emotions that immediately captured the dazed teen's attention, and had him swallow nervously.

Seeing her classmate finally respond to her calls, the concerned martial artist gave the boy an inquisitive nod. "Hey? Is everything alright?" The tone she spoke with emphasized her state of unease and care for her boyfriend.

Confused by the panicky expression on the girl's face, the surprised Gohan then glanced around at the others, and saw that Piccolo, Vegeta, Erasa and Bulma were all looking in his direction. Blinking at the reception, he then quickly looked back at the entity that he'd been staring at moments before, and had been filling his body with an overwhelming sensation of dread and alarm.

However, when his eyes landed on the spot he had been so focused on before, he found the shadowy figure had disappeared. The resulting discovery left him stunned and gaping like a startled mackerel, with beads of sweat trickling down his face.

It was only the feel of Videl's hand against his cheek that shocked the male back into reality and had him turn towards her once again.

When she got a good feel of the boy's temperature, Videl balked, "Whoa. Are you feeling okay, Gohan? Your skin's as cold as ice."

"And you're as white as a sheet," Erasa also spoke up observantly, having taken notice of the teen's state. Taking his arm in her hands, the blonde then pressed her knuckles against his forehead and narrowed her eyes. "Did you catch a cold? How many fingers am I holding up?" She then proceeded to make random numbers on her hand.

Recoiling a little at the attention he was now receiving, Gohan then asked the question that had his mind boggled and his focus knocked askew.

"Di-… Didn't you guys see that?" he asked, his voice all a stutter as he pointed towards the back of the room.

The Z-fighters, puzzled by his question, looked in the direction he was pointing. When they didn't see or sense anything in that general area, Piccolo and everyone else looked at the teen and gave him a strange look.

"See what?" Vegeta asked in his impatient tone of voice, while his arms were crossed firmly over his chest.

Blinking at his friends and companions, the half-Saiyan regarded the space a second time for a few moments. Upon which he then looked at Erasa and then at Videl, unable to comprehend what the problem was. "None of you… saw a person standing there?"

The crime fighter shook her head, "No. We… didn't see anyone."

"You were just staring across at an empty wall with a terrified look on your face," Erasa continued, her concern having failed to lift even for a moment as she addressed her crush. "We thought you were having a panic attack or something."

Leaning back in her seat, Bulma Briefs tilted her head at the teen and spoke, drawing his gaze over to her. "When you didn't say anything after I asked you how the armored suit fought in an enclosed space, we tried calling your name and shaking you several times to try and get your attention." She added to this by nodding towards Hercule's daughter, who was still clutching his shoulder like he was her personal lifeline. "After you didn't respond for three minutes, I was about to have Vegeta come over and give it a try. Good thing you came too when you did, because I don't think he would've been as gentle as your classmates."

Hearing the woman's remarks put an anxious feeling in the pit of Gohan's stomach, which then prompted the young man to look around at the others, particularly the more experienced warriors of their gathering. "So you guys honestly didn't see or sense anything out of the ordinary?"

Piccolo shook his head at his student's question. "It's like your girlfriend said; there was nothing there brat. Only air and computers."

Grunting a little after getting a good look at his supplementary rival's face, Vegeta grunted and cocked an eyebrow in his direction. "Maybe you got hit one too many times in the head during your battle in the city this morning. You're probably feeling a little punch drunk and dehydrated."

Processing the things his comrades had to say to him, rebutting all of his questions regarding the mysterious girl, Gohan then took a deep breath and directed his gaze back towards the spot where the phantom had been standing moments before.

It was the strangest thing. Despite the fact that he was totally convinced that there had been a girl dressed in a witch's costume in the same room as them, all of his friends had failed to sense any intrusive or hostile spirits whatsoever. Hell, they had all just been standing three meters away from where she'd appeared and none of them had even heard her breathing. Even Piccolo, the supposedly sharpest member of their team, didn't detect her presence. It was this fact that filled Gohan with a sickening feeling of foreboding and made him wonder whether what he saw was real or not.

It sure as hell looked like it was real. There had been a genuine, living, breathing person with an ungodly power level standing directly behind them and breathing down their necks. The aura of killing intent she'd also been emitting had been so potent and so intense that it'd quite literally put the fear of Kai in the teen's heart, giving him the impression that he'd been staring down death herself.

Judging from the amount of sweat his t-shirt had also accumulated, it was safe to say that Gohan had never been more scared than he had just been in his entire life.

However, what prevented these same feelings from bursting forth a second time and overtaking his current train of thought came from yet another revelation, which suddenly popped up in the demi-Saiyan's mind. As Bulma proceeded to bring the group's attention back to her drawing board of ideas in constructing a new combat suit, the spiky haired fighter could only think about the blonde girl's face…

And why it looked so much like Videl's.

After a couple of minutes of contemplation and looking down at his girlfriend, who was vigilantly propped against his arm, all worries over his encounter were quickly swept under the rug. Chalking the entire experience up to just a bad migraine as a result of his early morning battle to the death, Gohan spared his training partner and classmate a smile. When he received one from her in kind after she beamed up at him and acknowledged his warm gaze, the demi-Saiyan massaged the back of his head and wrapped a protective arm around her shoulders.

"Maybe they're right. Must've just been my imagination," the young warrior thought as he proceeded to watch Bulma dash around the room and pluck random bits of hardware off of the desks to show her visitors. The scientist was obviously super excited about her project and after witnessing what the mechanical abomination before them had been capable of firsthand, neither one of them could blame her.

"I hate to interrupt while you're in the middle of an important brainstorming session, but shouldn't we be trying to find out where this thing came from and who sent it?" Piccolo asked, arms still folded and serious scowl slapped across his face. When the blue haired woman skidded to a stop beside the operating table in the middle of the lab, the green-skinned warrior then nodded towards the motionless suit in front of her. "While it's good that you were able to deconstruct this impressive piece of equipment for its technology and capabilities, maybe now is as good a time as any to be answering the question as to why it was built in the first place?"

Processing the man's words carefully, Bulma then straightened up and gave a nod. "Yeah. I guess you're right." She then placed a thoughtful finger to her chin and tapped another against the table.
"Since I can't trace it through its parts or software, or find out anything about the guy that was driving it, then what's our next option?"

Also getting in on the action, Videl pursed her lips and meekly raised a hand. "The dragon balls?"

Piccolo shook his head. "Not a good idea."

"We only use those for real emergencies, like when planets and populations have been unjustly wiped out, or to help a person in need. Though using Shenron to wish for the mastermind's location will definitely make things easier for us, I think it would be best that we save our wishes for a time that we need them most," Gohan stated, looking down at his girlfriend with a warm smile. "You never know when another crazy God, demon or alien will come out of the blue to wreck the place for whatever grievances he or she may have suffered."

Considering his words earned an understanding nod from the girl. "Hm. Good point." Knowing the kind of trouble the Z-fighters annually got into gave the demi-Saiyan's words credit where it was due.

Vegeta, narrowing his eyes on the team, then focused on the world's strongest fighter. "Alright then, so if we can't use the blasted dragon, then how do you expect us to find this cretin?"

After several moments of thought, Bulma's head perked up and she snapped her fingers in success.
"I know. We can go ask Baba for help. If she was able to find a dragon ball stuck inside an anti-tracking box, then surely she's more than capable of tracking down the mastermind behind this suit."

Remembering who the woman was referring too, Gohan grinned widely. "Oh yeah. Now there's an idea."

"Baba?" Erasa murmured to herself, looking up at the half-Saiyan in confusion. Considering she'd only met half of her friend's group, it was understandable why she would be the most in-the-dark about their circumstances. "Who's that? A relative?"

"An old friend of ours who makes a living ferrying the dead between worlds and practicing divination on the sidelines whenever she's not hosting private tournaments at her summer home," Bulma said, placing her hands on her hips and nodding towards the teenagers in front of her. "She's pretty much a witch that travels around on top of a crystal ball."

The blonde city girl nodded, "Ah."

Folding her arms, Videl then took on a questioning look. "Alright then. So who gets the job of going over to visit her?" She glanced towards the clock, before then turning to her boyfriend with a serious frown. "We're already late for our first two lessons. Any longer and we're going to get reprimanded by our homeroom teacher."

Piccolo grunted when he saw Gohan prepare to raise his hand to volunteer. "I'm sure we'll be able to find someone to go say hello to her." The look he gave his student quickly stopped the demi-Saiyan from acting and had him drop his arm resolutely.

"Preferably a person who's already met Baba on a previous occasion and isn't as busy as the rest of us," Bulma said in agreement.

Just as she was about to dial up a couple of names and put them out on the table, there was a sudden knock on the door followed by the entrance to the lab being opened. When the team looked in that direction, they saw the familiar, scar-faced form of Yamcha, sporting a new shortened haircut and a trimmed suit, come strolling into their midst. The sight of the gang put a smile on the martial artist's face as he waved at them in greeting.

"Hey guys. What's shakin'? I was just on my way over to my team's big game over in Pepper City and I was wondering if anyone wanted to come watch us play this Saturday." He then stopped dead in his tracks when he noticed the eyes of every single person in the room were glued onto him, creating a rather humorous moment of silence. The collection of stares had the yellow-suited baseball player balk in surprise. "Uhh... hi?" He then noticed the mech lying in the middle of the room and the corpse just a few feet from him. Staring at it for a couple of seconds, Yamcha then pointed at the soldier. "Who's the stiff?"

Sparing a glance amongst each other, everyone from Vegeta to Erasa smiled, before Bulma threw their visitor a mischievous smile.

"Why, good morning, Yamcha," The scientist then leant against the operating table in a nonchalant manner and set her eyes on her old fling. "Your timing couldn't be any more perfect. As it so happens... we've got a very important job for you to do."

The former mercenary and rising sports super star blinked in confusion. "What? A job?"

"Uh-huh... and just so you know... we won't be taking 'no' for an answer."

OOO

(Meanwhile)

Somewhere on the other side of the universe, on the pyramid shaped world known all around as the home of Beerus the Destroyer, a great battle was currently taking place. Well... that's what it looked like from a peon's perspective. From a celestial being's point of view, the fight that was being waged across the sweeping fields of the deity's homeland was just a friendly spar between two ridiculously powerful opponents.

A series of chain explosions ripping across the open valley marked the beginning of yet another volley attack, which was quickly revealed to have been thrown by the familiar, spotted-green and winged form of the biomechanical android Cell; the God of War from a neighboring universe. Gritting his teeth as he soared above the hillsides and the rising clouds of dust and smoke, the artificial warrior cocked back his hand and fired off another barrage of energy attacks, which scattered like a spray of pellets from a shotgun. The attacks bombarded the grasslands for miles, shaking the entire world and sending rubble flying in all directions.
The explosions ripped across the pristine landscape, chasing after its fast-moving target, which revealed itself from the cloud of debris to be the scantily clad Cleopatra, adorned in her revealing black garb, back-flipping from the blasts. When the attack eventually subsided, she ceased her momentum, slamming her feet into the ground and sliding to a stop. Looking up with a frown, the raven haired woman fixed her attention on the sky above and towards her opponent, only to see he had vanished.

Tracking him easily, the goddess's gaze snapped over her shoulder to see the android teleport into view, his two fingers held to his forehead.

Golden electricity crackling around his fingertips, Cell cocked his hand back and, with a loud yell, thrust them down towards his opponent. "Special Beam Cannon!" An orange corkscrew beam rocketed from his fingers and shot towards the woman several times faster than light.

But just when it seemed like it was going to hit her, the raven haired woman spun around and smacked it away with a timely roundhouse kick, sending it arcing into the distance. It then struck one of the moons orbiting the strangely-shaped world and impacted its surface, taking a massive chunk out of its side in an enormous, spherical explosion. When the blinding light of the blast faded, Cleopatra crouched down and sprang off of the valley floor, vanishing in a blur of movement. She moved so quickly she appeared directly behind her opponent in a heartbeat, drawing Cell's gaze around just in time to receive an axe kick to the spine. The blow landed with a deafening thunderclap and sent the android plummeting to the valley floor, drawing a yell of pain from him before his spiraling body slammed into the middle of the planetoid's lake with a splash.

The spray caused by Cell's crash landing in the lagoon reached the shoreline, where Whis and Isis could be seen standing side by side and watching the spar with great interest. A cheerful smile spread across his lips, the teal-skinned man with the white hair and staff murmured in satisfaction as the geyser formed by the android God's drop into the pond settled back into the pool. The winged-woman standing next to him had a similar look on her face, and nodded her head in an impressed manner.

Cleopatra held her position several hundred stories above the valley, watching as the cloud of condensation dispersed. When she saw the ripples in the lake vanish, a burst of water, followed instantly by a pink sphere of energy, suddenly shot out and rocketed towards the goddess. Responding in kind, the black haired woman cocked her hand back and, with a grunt of effort, fired a golden ball of energy at the approaching attack in a speedy counter. The two attacks intercepted one another in midair, detonating and generating a gargantuan explosion, which filled the sky with a blinding flash of white light.

When the sparks and fire generated by the colliding ki blasts faded, leaving a heavy plume hanging in the sky, Cleopatra then balked when she saw a hail of bullet-sized, orange spheres shoot up at her from the lake. Arcing through the sky in all directions, the multiple Dodon Ray shots converged on the goddess's position, prompting the raven haired beauty to load her arm and begin batting away the attacks one by one. Her arms blurred out as she smacked away the hail of bullets, yelling out with every hit while she sent the beams rocketing off-world and to scatter across the galaxy.

The attack faded shortly afterwards, leaving Cleopatra floating in the sky and glaring down at the fog hanging over the lake. Figuring her opponent was about to try something crafty again, she readied herself for a third attack, only to suddenly spin around when she heard a clap of thunder and looked up to see a bolt of blue lightning appear out of thin air.

Appearing in the blink of an eye, Thor, bathed in blue electricity and adorned in his Norse God armor, complete with fur collar, gloves and boots, had his hammer drawn back and pointed towards the sky. The stone melee weapon crackling with a ludicrous amount of energy, the blonde haired Calvin Cline hunk gritted his teeth and, with a mighty bellow, thrust his hammer downwards in a glorified swing.

"DIVINE THUNDER DRUM!" The planet was soon rocked by the howl of a hurricane as a mass of blue lightning blasted from his weapon and shot towards the goddess in the form of an enormous sphere. The flashing ball, the size of a small moon, corkscrewed towards its target, literally blocking out most of the sky with its sheer mass and scale.

Gritting her teeth at the sight of the approaching attack, Cleopatra thrust her finger up and yelled out at the top of her lungs, firing a golden blast into the lightning ball. The powerful beam slammed into the compressed storm shot, burying into its front and locking the pair in an epic tug-of-war match. Eventually, after several seconds of battling one another in a test of power and will, the two blasts eventually gave way to a massive explosion, which filled the sky in a sphere of white, burning light.

The sight of the explosion had Whis make a sound of delight and clap his hands together in applause, even as the valley was rocked by a shockwave and a fierce blast of wind. "Well done. That is some superb maneuvering." He then turned his attention towards his companion, who was also smiling at the performance. "You have taught your student well, Isis. The way she coordinates herself in battle and uses her skills to trade blows with her opponents is of an incredibly high standard. You should be very proud her."

The dark skinned woman giggled and beamed back at her old friend. "I am. But even though she is incredibly talented and fulfils her role as a goddess well, she still has a long way to go before she can be considered strong enough to take my place."

"That's understandable. Your position is an esteemed one, and requires an incredible amount of self-discipline and understanding," Whis replied in a chirpy sounding voice. "Not to mention your level of experience is on equal terms with my own, something that very few beings in this universe have."

"And what of your disciple? Do you still have much to teach Lord Beerus in the ways of fighting?"

"Why, of course," the white haired sage chuckled, folding his arms and turning towards the sky to continue watching the battle unfold. "After all, life is a lesson that we are constantly practicing. Even though we claim to be the masters of a particular field, every single one of us is learning, seeing and experiencing new things every day. I myself, despite my overwhelming wealth of knowledge and wisdom, still have a great many things to learn about the secrets of the universe."

Isis giggled at his response. "That remains to be seen." She then threw him a curious look, one that matched the cheerfulness that was reflected on the attendant's expression. "It has been a few centuries since I last saw you getting surprised or worked up by something out of the ordinary. Maybe with some luck, I might actually be able to see that rare look of bewilderment on you once again."

A warm smile remained pasted on the master martial artist's face, even at the teasing grin the Goddess of Magic was giving him. As he continued to watch the battle being fought between Thor, Cleopatra and Cell in the sky above, and observed the trio as they began trading hits, a sudden ping of electricity unexpectedly shot through his head, causing him to recoil in shock and his gaze to snap over his shoulder in alarm.

The winged goddess Isis, also experiencing a similar ping, spun around and fixed her attention across the grassy plains of Beerus's world, locking it upon the veil beyond the horizon and into the great beyond.

While the spar between the three deities continued behind them, the two master martial artists gawked into the distance, their eyes shimmering in disbelief and their limbs quivering with fright. For a moment the pair stood in absolute silence, ignoring the sounds of battle and the hum of the planet's environment around them. After a full minute passed them, in which neither of them said a thing, the two horrorstruck spectators swallowed nervously and attempted to hone in on whatever it was that caught their attention.

"Did you feel that?" Isis whispered, unable to tear her eyes away from the cosmos.

The teal-skinned man, catching his breath, nodded in response. "Yeah."

But what was it? That was the question.

Due to the sudden and intense nature of the energy spike, even with all their experience and near omnipotent capability, the pair of powerful deities had completely lost track of the source of the anomaly. The feedback from the surge had left them standing there, staring off into the distance, and wondering what could've possibly produced an energy signature that had them nearly shit themselves with panic.

It was only after several moments of due deliberation over the sensation that the ever knowledgeable Whis soon came up with an answer. It was one that had a look of displeasure and worry cross his face.

"Someone… or something very powerful… has entered our universe."

OOO

(Later that day)

After Bulma had told him the full story of what’d transpired earlier in Satan City, the scientist then wasted no time in giving the baffled Yamcha the job she had planned for him in a series of simple steps. Almost instantly after being given this most prestigious and important task, the mercenary began kicking up the shortest hissy-fit the Z-fighters had ever heard from him. He tried to argue that he had other important plans and was simply passing by, wondering if his friends had wanted to come watch his team play in the last game before their shot at the championships. This was shortly rebuffed moments later by simultaneous death stares thrown at him by Bulma, Piccolo and Vegeta respectively, which pretty much solidified the man's place in the pecking order.

With his attempts to defend his position shot to bits, the third longest standing member of the group quickly gathered up his gear and flew off to meet with Baba at her palace. Having ventured here previously during one of Goku's quests to collect the dragon balls, the former bandit touched down just outside the building's main entrance. Bypassing the half a dozen rich people already lined up there and waiting to see the fortune teller, the man went through the visitor's center, where he then proceeded to wait in the lobby.

"Man, is this what I get for being a nice guy?" Yamcha asked himself, wondering what possible circumstances could've led him to being made the messenger of their powerful group.

Could you blame him? Being pushed around by his ex-girlfriend, bullied by the other Z-fighters, and having his free time used up in a journey across the country to an old relative they barely saw anymore… it definitely gave the impression that the universe was being super unfair on him.
However, after thinking about it a little while longer, he did see why the group had decided to send him on this little trip. Over the years they'd been fighting together, the scar-faced man hadn't been able to contribute much in terms of support or combat, and was normally always the first to fall when the going got tough. Acting as a runner on behalf of the other members of the team was probably one of the only ways he was able to function as a productive representative of their faction.

Upon pondering over this revelation, the human warrior then scrunched his face up thoughtfully and gazed out one of the lobby's windows, "Hmm... maybe I should start training again... get back into fighting shape." Yamcha then looked down at his side and slapped his abdominals, where he could feel tight muscles tense up underneath his shirt. "Everybody else has been working hard to stay at the top of their game. Why shouldn't I?"

Maybe it's because he was lazy and enjoyed a simple life of mediocrity? Of course, knowing the kind of strength he possessed, he knew he would be doing all of his friends a disservice if he let all of the power that he had go to waste.

He then made a mental note that after this weekend's game he would start hitting the gyms again, and perhaps pay his old friend Tien a visit to see if he couldn't touch up on his fighting skills.

Just after making this small pact to himself following his internal argument, the man then suddenly had his attention drawn to the sound of a person's throat being cleared. When Yamcha looked across the room towards the entrance on the other side, the fighter saw the familiar, robe wearing form of Baba hover into view atop her crystal ball. The seemingly diminutive old woman peered up at him from underneath the rim of her witch's hat and took a moment to inspect her visitor. Once she was certain she knew who it was, the fortune teller smiled. "Ah. Yamcha. Long time no see."

The scar-faced man grinned, "Yeah. Long time. You're uhh... you're looking well." In other words, she looked like she hadn't changed one bit. What was up with that? "How has life been treating you?"

"Same old, same old. Business is good and so is the world. You also seem to be doing pretty well yourself, aye, Mr. Superstar," the woman exclaimed, floating further into the room to hover just a few feet in front of the man. Fingers laced together in front of her, the witch then looked him straight in the eyes and beamed in a mischievous manner. "Can I expect another easy win for you and your team this coming Saturday?"

Yamcha gave a chuckle at the twinkle he saw in Baba's eye. "Couldn't you find that out by looking into your crystal ball?"

Shrugging, the witch then hovered around the man and floated over to another end of the room. "I could. But... I don't like using the ball to discover the outcomes for every major sporting event. It takes the fun out of the game. Not to mention it spoils it for everybody else who appreciates the heart and thrill of a decent competition." After taking up position several feet away from the warrior, the fortune teller then spun around and smirked in his direction. "Wouldn't you hate it if you knew the outcome to everything just by taking a peek into a tiny glass sphere and seeing your future staring right back at you?"

Rubbing the back of his head, the human fighter grinned sheepishly at the floating witch, "Honestly, it all depends on the situation." He then chuckled as another thought crossed his mind. "If I really wanted to find out what the universe has planned for me ahead of time, there wouldn't be any surprises left. Nor would there be anything to look forward to. Though I'm sure it'd help me..."

heaps at the betting tables, everything that's made life as fun and exciting as it is today would be tossed away like a piece of wrapping paper."

"Hmph," the witch grunted as she leered at him, "And I take it you're not a gambling man?"

"I dabble in poker from time-to-time whenever I go out into the city with the boys. But aside from that, not really," Yamcha answered quickly, a half-smile coming into play. "I kind of developed this theory that whenever I end up betting big at the craps tables or at life itself, I always end up blowing it."

Nodding her head in understanding, the woman then turned to him with a smile. "The gift of good fortune varies from person to person. Though not everything is created by chance, there are still many actions in life that requires someone to roll the dice. You've just been getting bad numbers so far due to a series of unfortunate events."

"Tell me about it. If I'm not out there playing on the field and hitting home-runs for the Taitans, everything else I attempt just goes straight down the toilet," the Z-fighter sighed, looking down at his feet and rubbing the back of his head worriedly. "Even though we've had seven years of peace, with only one or two occasional upsets, I'm still finding it impossible to catch a break. Hell, I can't even find the right girl to settle down with."

Baba gazed across at him sympathetically, "Striking out at the bars and clubs?"

"More or less. I end up taking a good-looking dame out every once in a while, but after a couple of weeks we always end up falling out. It really sucks, you know?"

"Maybe you're just approaching them the wrong way," the fortune teller spoke, trying to offer the man some semblance of support.

The human warrior shrugged, "That or I have commitment issues."

"Stay strong. I'm sure a dashing young man like yourself will find someone eventually. After all, there are plenty of fish in the sea, and if it's not meant to be, it's not meant to be," Baba exclaimed, at the same time giving the warrior a cheerful smile. "Have a little more confidence in your actions, but don't come on too strongly. Try to speak from the gut rather than the heart, and let your instincts guide you. Just... give it some time, and I'm sure you'll find your soul mate sooner or later."

This seemed to bring a sense of hope to the baseball player's heart and, upon looking up at their group's less frequented companion, gave her a small grin. "Yeah. I suppose you're right." All he had to do was look at this thing positively. Every single one of the relationships he'd had in the past has been a test on his charm and fortitude as a man. He just needed to stick it out just a little while longer.

I mean, look at the rest of his group. Goku had Chi-Chi. Krillin had Android 18. Tien had Launch. Hell, even Gohan seemed to be having his own personal flings with the ladies if his little reunion with him back at CC with his two ridiculously attractive school mates was anything to go by. Hell. If the rest of his friends could do it, then so could he!

Upon giving him that boost of self-confidence, Yamcha soon remembered why he'd come all the way out here in the first place. Knowing this wasn't a personal call but one of business, the scar-faced baseball player cleared his throat and faced the fortune teller with a stern look. "Anyway, Baba. The reason I came by to see you today was to-"
"Help your friends out of another jam, yes?"

Finding his sentence completed for him, the man looked upon the woman with surprise. "Y-Yeah. H-How did you know?"

"I'm a fortune teller, darling. I make a living reading people's hearts and minds. Your needs especially are quite easy to decipher, especially considering it involves more than just yourself… but your friends as well," the witch replied, at the same time her expression became one of earnestness and understanding. "Since none of you youngsters have ever approached me asking for anything other than the fate of the world and the lives of other people, selfless requests are probably one of the only things I can expect to hear from you."

Hearing her reasoning loud and clear, the black haired former mercenary in the suit cleared his throat and addressed the older woman with a wide smile. "Alright. Since you already have an idea of what I'm going to ask, I think I can just give it to you straight then…"

The martial artist then proceeded to recount all of the events that occurred earlier that morning in Satan City between Son Gohan and his mysterious, armored attacker. Though he left out much of the details of the battle to sum it all up for the fortune teller, Yamcha made extra certain to highlight all of the important issues the young Saiyan had encountered in his fight, and emphasized how dangerous this foe had been. This gave credence to the assumption that the man responsible for pulling the strings in the shadows was an incredibly dangerous and sophisticated individual, one that was comparable to Doctor Gero back in the day.

Baba regarded Yamcha's words with seriousness and understanding. Realizing the fact that the world was once again facing another potential threat, the woman wasted no time in hopping off of her crystal ball and allowing it to float to the floor in front of her. The visiting martial artist straightened up, realizing that the elderly woman had every intention of helping him out with their group's debacle without question.

"So… you wish for me to locate and identify the person responsible for sending this armor-plated dog after you, is that right?" the fortune teller asked as she pulled back on her sleeves in a professional manner and stretched her neck.

The scar-faced man nodded affirmatively, "Yes. That's what Bulma said."

"Very well then. Because I'm doing this for some very close associates of mine and the son of an important client, I will waive the service charge and throw you a freebie," Baba chirped, clearing her throat as she began waving her hands over the glass sphere in front of her. While she did so, the surface of the reflection began to stir and her lips began to chant. "Spirits and souls of the shadow realms; show me where the darkness dwells. Tell me now. Tell me true. Show me what I ask of YOU!"

Feeling a sense of nostalgia wash over him from the woman's display, Yamcha then looked on as the crystal ball levitated off of the floor and started to flash an eerie green. The old witch also watched carefully as the device she used to tell people's fortunes and futures worked its magic, and waited with anticipation for a response. However, after several seconds of hovering, the ball suddenly began to crackle with violent blue electricity, and the center of the sphere began to fluctuate with a dark cloud. It was a sight that had both parties recoil in alarm.

"Hold on… something's not right," Baba murmured and leaned towards her trusted viewing orb.

Baffled by the strange anomaly, the small witch shuffled forward to see what the problem was. When her palms moved to hover over the glass, the woman then took a big step back in shock when she suddenly saw the glowing blue eyes of a ferocious beast appear in the sphere. Bearing a white, scaly coat and the characteristics of a fearsome deity, the reptilian creature roared at the person attempting to peer into the icy mist, startling the fortune teller, before quickly fading away and bringing a veil of darkness back to the ball's core. Moments later, the green glow vanished, and the crystal orb floated back to the ground with a loud 'ping'.

Stunned by the lightshow, a nervous Yamcha gulped nervously and took a step forward. "What the heck just happened? Did you see something?"

Processing what she had just witnessed, a frown quickly formed across Baba's face and she turned her attention towards the man beside her. "I don't know how to tell you this, my boy, but the enemy that you and your friends have encountered is one crafty little devil."

"Huh?" the baseball player pulled back in confusion. "What do you mean by that?"

Baba then frowned at her crystal ball and began recalling everything she'd just witnessed. "The person you are attempting to find out is being shielded by some sort of powerful magic, which is preventing me from getting a lock onto his location." She then placed a hand to her chin and glared hard into the surface of her trusted fortune telling tool. "He must have predicted that someone might attempt to research him and figure out his identity, and had cast an anti-tracking spell over himself to deter anyone curious enough to do so."

"But… how is that even possible?" Yamcha asked, looking across at the elderly woman in confusion.

"Before the transmission cut out, I caught a glimpse of a creature's face… one that appeared both familiar and unfamiliar at the same time. It is an omen I fear will only bring more problems than solutions and will likely lead us down a very dark path… one that's riddled with death and terror. I'll need to investigate this further if I'm to figure out exactly what we're dealing with here."

Hearing the witch loud and clear, as well as receiving a stern glare from her as an immediately follow-up, the baseball player nodded his head slowly in acknowledgement and took a cautionary step back. "O-Okay." He then waited for a second before continuing to speak. "What should I tell Bulma and the others, then? You know they're going to be expecting an answer from me as soon as I get back."

"If worse comes to worse, tell them exactly what I told you. The enemy that's taken an interest in your group is an incredibly shrewd and dangerous individual… someone who threatens the very balance of peace and prosperity that all of you have worked so hard to achieve." The woman then turned around and fixed her attention upon the fighter, who she saw stiffen at the look in her eyes. "Heed my words well, young warrior. Powerful dark forces are at work here. You would be wise to prepare yourselves for what the future may bring."

And when Baba said it in that tone of voice, the human Z-fighter had every inclination of believing her.

OOO

(A week later)

"For the next upcoming house party, I think that we should play the 'I have never' game sometime after all the barbeque shit is done," Sharpener stated, looking down the aisle to see the rest of his friends looking back at him with their utmost attention, "You know… just to spice things up a little."
Since it was the middle of free-study period, midday on a Wednesday, this was the ideal time for any and all students to swap ideas and plans for upcoming assignments. As expected of the minority, a lot of the students in the class were using this time wisely to make up for lost time. However, for those who were ahead in their work or just couldn't be bothered doing any writing-based tasks, the members of the opposite group were using this period to interact with their friends.

And who else would capitalize on this moment then the blonde-haired jock that was known school-wide as one of the chattiest men in the institute.

Gohan, finding curiosity behind the topic, looked back at his friend over the heads of Videl and Erasa, both of whom were sitting between him and the sportsman, and were also listening intently to their classmate. "The 'I have never' game? What's that?" the teen asked.

Propping an arm on the desk and leaning forward, Sharpener threw the spiky haired teen a surprised look. "Are you serious? You've never heard of that drinking game before?"

When the Saiyan shook his head, Videl emitted a playful giggle and thumbed at her boyfriend with a sheepish smile in play. "He doesn't go out to parties that often. Believe me, I know."

Erasa nodded in agreement. "That's just the kind of person Gohan is, Sharpie: an innocent, down-to-earth country boy who has yet to taste the thrill of a real high schooler's life."

Blinking a couple of times at their collective remarks, the blonde haired jock decided to roll with it and continued on with his line of talk. "Anyway… the 'I have never' game is pretty much a drinking game you play around the table, where one person takes turns in saying 'I have never' something, and if the people have done the thing the person said they didn't do, they take a drink. We basically keep on playing until one of us passes out or throws up."

This then led to Erasa turning around to smile in the demi-Saiyan's direction, "It's a great way to kill some time… and to find out your closest friends' dirty little secrets."

Finding out the details of the game quickly brought a smile to the intently listening Gohan's face. "Sounds like a really fun game."

"You should give it a try. Though, just a fair warning to you, it isn't exactly a game for lightweights," Touya spoke up from the other side of the blonde jock, an act that drew everyone's attention towards the young male. When he found himself under the curious gazes of his compatriots, the glasses wearing sportsman grinned, "Just make sure you have something good to eat before downing any form of alcohol. It'll do well in softening the blow."

Nodding towards his friend and classmate, Sharpener then looked back at the others and continued on with his planned reading. "Basically you think up random stuff or stuff that you yourself haven't done. Like, for example; I've never bought anything in red suspenders. I've never driven twenty miles over the speed limit. Or I've never been on live television before." He then brought his hand up and waved it forward in a suggestive manner. "And basically if a guy is losing, he can always say 'I've never used a tampon'."

Videl thought about it for a second before then nodding in agreement, "For a bloke, I'd say that's a real winner."

"Yeah. No kidding," Erasa chuckled, shaking her head as she then went back to sketching happily in her workbook.

For several brief seconds of glorious silence, Gohan watched on as the chuckles and giggles slowly faded with Sharpener's little joke in the wake of his informative talk. Not only had the teen learned something new from the conversation, but he was also given a greater understanding as to what one of his closest friends at school had planned for his upcoming bash. If he was to go up to Bulma, Krillin or Yamcha and ask them for a few suggestions as to what possible activities he could pull at this sort of gathering, he was certain he would get more than a handful of ideas. However, what he'd just heard over the course of the last couple of minutes had been more than enough to satisfy him.

He felt like he could go to sleep that night feeling just a little bit wiser.

As it turns out though, the line of dialogue between the five amigos had yet to be completed, as one other person at that table had something else interesting to share with them.

"I have," the voice of Touya suddenly interjected, a combination of words that slowly had everyone's eyes turn robotically in his direction.

Hell, even a few of the boys and girls sitting in the rows of desks around them looked towards the teen with looks of sheer bewilderment.

Blinking a couple of times as he stared at his friend, Sharpener then opened his mouth to speak. Hesitant at first, with no words being spoken at all, he then stared at the boy in disbelief and asked the question that was now on everyone's baffled minds, "You've… used a tampon?"

Nodding his head with pride, the brown haired teen then looked across at his other friends and watched them lean away from him ever so slightly. "Yeah. You know… for spillage." He then cracked a sickeningly cheerful smile.

Finding his very brief and straight forward response incredibly baffling, Videl gazed across at the sportsman with bemusement written all over her face. "Aw, mate… what?"

After the rest of the group's members started sharing strange looks with one another, they then watched as their proud classmate started making mopping gestures with his hand. "Well I had a bit of an accident over a cooker once, and-"

"Sorry, dude, but… this is just getting worse," Sharpener interrupted, looking at the man as if he were crazy.

"No, no. Hear me out," Touya interrupted, at the same time gesturing to a space in front of him as if he were tending to a pot. "When you're boiling something, I was doing something with milk in it and, you know, it boiled over, and it goes into that bit in the back where you can't get your finger in. Basically if you don't clean it out, it goes rancid and it smells, forever."

Erasa, waving her hands in front of her, stopped the teen before he could go any further. "So… let me get this straight. You used tampons to clean out a cooker?"

Finding an equal interest in the conversation, Videl leant across her desk and propped her chin on her elbow curiously. "Can I ask what brand it was?"

Making an 'ick' face, Sharpener then reeled the discussion back in his direction and jabbed a hand towards Touya, while at the same time directing all of his attention towards his half-Saiyan classmate. "And this is coming from a man who doesn't have OCD?" He then made several pointing gestures back towards the man next to him, who was now attempting to interrupt the blonde and was failing miserably. "He does have OCD."

"I do not," Touya said loudly, but was promptly shrugged off by his classmates.
The boy's efforts to prove his friends otherwise were thwarted by a quick and very pronounced smirk from Gohan, "You totally have OCD." This was supported by a brisk nod from his girlfriend, who was sitting comfortably alongside him.

"We can prove it too," Erasa cut in, holding out her arm and showing off the wristwatch that she currently had on her. It was a beautiful, silver Swiss with a brown leather strap holding the timepiece in place. "You know the bezel on a watch... and that little arrow thing here?" she asked while pointing at the red marker at the top of the ring. "If I have it..." She then turned it so that it was pointed over the six, "here. He's fine. But if I put it around..." The girl then offset the arrow ever so slightly, "there."

"It's like a powerful magnet," Videl whispered, before then proceeding to watch along with the others as the blonde girl then brandished the watch in Touya's direction. "He just can't resist it."

At first the young man in glasses didn't do anything and simply stared down at the girl's wrist being held out to him. But then, without warning, the silence of the classroom was broken by the teenager suddenly jumping out of his seat, catching the girl's arm, and his fingers moving to grip the bezel to rotate it back to its previous spot. His sudden movement drew a startled yelp from the girl in the desk behind him, at the same time the surrounding students and the boy's friends looked on with interest as Touya corrected his best friend's manually altered device.

The clicking of the bezel rang out when it was promptly returned to its previous state. "Get it back to the right position," Touya ordered, causing Videl, Erasa, Sharpener and Gohan to hold in fits of laughter as the young sportsman stopped cranking the ring. As soon as the arrow was back over the twelve, he released the girl and sat back down.

A giggling and thoroughly amused Erasa then showed everyone the now properly restored watch, before then giving her friend an incredulous grin. "You can't bear it if I don't have that arrow, can you?" she asked. As soon as she saw the teen plant his posterior back into his seat, she then cheekily and ever so slightly rotated the bezel out of place.

Touya, looking on irritably as the blonde also sat back down with her watch plainly in sight, then took a few deep breaths to steady his nerves before pointing across at his friends. "So another interesting thing about tampons is that..."

"I swear to Kai, you should be working in an infomercial or something," Videl groaned, shaking her head disbelievingly at the teen as he continued to smile in their direction.

"I'm half expecting you to be carrying these things around with you on a bandoleer across your chest," Gohan remarked, making gestures over and around his jacket to illustrate the appearance his friend should take under advisement. "You know, in a military sort of arrangement like Rambo... just in case."

Groaning at the smug looks and smirks his friends were giving him, Touya then tried one last time to defend his case. "It's a new application for an existing technology. When you think about it-"

"Touya. Touya," Erasa chuckled, at the same time holding out her watch for him to see. "Go away."

Shaking his head, the brown haired teen then breathed a sigh of defeat, collected his books and pens, and stood up. "I can't stand looking at that." Without another word, but with an amused smile on his face, the teen edged his way out of the aisle and began making his way down the stairs.
Under the watch of the entire class and the grins of his colleagues, the brown haired sportsman marched through the doorway and shut it loudly behind him.

It was after following him out of the room that Gohan and the others soon noticed their homeroom teacher was staring up at them from the front. Hands on her hips, the woman in the skinny jeans and maroon sweater threw the group of mischief-makers a look and raised an eyebrow at them. The expression drew a series of sheepish grins and prompted Erasa to sit back down, while the others awkwardly began rearranging material on their desks in a nonchalant manner.

"Care to tell us what that was all about?" Mio asked, gesturing to the rest of their peers, some of whom were still trying to get work done. "There'd better be a really good reason why you five troublemakers decided to interrupt my class's quiet time."

Sharpener, slicking back his hair, gestured in the direction their classmate had gone, "I'm not sure, Ms. Hirasawa. Some guys just can't handle studying, I guess."

"Uh-huh," the young adult replied in an unconvinced tone, before then holding two fingers up to her eyes and then pointing them in their direction, clearly saying that she would be watching them… the jock especially. Upon signing her warning, she then went back to pacing the rows of desks and helping out students in need of assistance.

As the class quickly returned to its business, with Sharpener taking the time to lean back in his seat and whisper to the guy in the row behind them, and Erasa slowly adjourning herself to the task of doodling in her textbook, Videl then leant to her side and bumped her head against Gohan's shoulder. The teen responded to the playful move with a look, which earned a warm grin from the crime fighter in kind.

After silently conveying to the girl that he was alright through their invisible bond, the pair then went back to work, while at the same time turning their once vocal conversation into a whispered one.

"So… when is your first swimming trial?" the raven haired girl asked curiously, a question that also had Erasa's head perk up and caused the blonde to lean over. Feeling her friend practically press into her shoulder to listen, Videl frowned and playfully pushed her away, earning a quiet giggle from the teen.

Sensing his girlfriend's eagerness, Gohan smiled, "Next Monday."

"Great."

OOO

(A week or so later)

It was the end of another hectic period and the beginning of another weekend, which gave hardworking men and women the chance to wind down and catch their breaths for the next repeat. This was especially good for one Son Gohan, who seemed to be getting a lot more stuff crammed into his schedule with each passing day. Taking into account the gradually increasing load as well as his personal training routine, it made sense why the young man had decided to relax on this particular Saturday by hanging out with his family; namely Goten, Lime, and Paprika, on the front lawn of their property.

Even Icarus, the family's pet dragon, was lying next to them on the grass, napping away under the warm rays of the sun.
Taking the opportunity to spend some time with his younger sibling as well as his closest neighbors, the teen had gathered up every single board game from the house and stacked it on the grass beside them. Because Emissaries to Byzantium was boring as shit and Candyland practically gave people cavities with every move they made, the group had opted to go for a spirited game of Monopoly to open their weekend morning, before then planning to move on to a joust in Snakes and Ladders, Chinese Checkers, and then Age of Mythology after that. Since the young Saiyan was limited to only a handful of games and they didn't want to waste their day away on the television, he aimed to make this stretch as long and as enjoyable as possible.

So far, out there under the warm, Mt. Paozu sun, things were going swimmingly for them… well… most of them at least.

"Four. One… two… three…WHAT? Oh, come on! Another hotel?" Gohan mock shouted while pointing down at the square he'd ended up on, which just so happened to be a hotel owned by Paprika, who grinned victoriously. "That's totally not fair!"

Icarus squawked in response, noticing his best friend's plight loud and clear.

"Hey, if you're going to spend the night here at Paprika Lodgings, Son, you're going to have to pay up," the Makyan wearing the long scarf exclaimed, gesturing for the teen to hand the cash over.

Grumbling as he pursed through his funds, the casually dressed Saiyan then handed the notes over to the girl, who began counting them along with the stacks of bills she'd already accumulated.

"Why is it that you decided to set up two hotels on Oxford Street instead of one? Is that even allowed in the rule book?"

"It's as they say with everything else in life; two hotels on one avenue are better than one. Why establish a business alongside a competitive organization when you can simply own the entire market and take advantage of the customers?" the woman continued with a cocky smile in play, licking her fingers so that it would make flicking through the money easier for her. "Flood the city streets with your chain of businesses and where are the peons going to go? You tell me."

Lime, who had come out here to visit her family for the weekend, shrugged her shoulders and beamed across at her demi-Saiyan crush happily. "She's got a point, you know."

After reaching the end of the bunch and calculating the sum total and the amount, the woman then looked up thoughtfully and rubbed her chin. "I'm pretty good at this human practice in capitalism. Maybe I should start my own chain of motels and restaurants, and see where that takes me."

Waiting around a few seconds, the white haired demon then shook her head and continued, "Or maybe it's just a lot more trouble than it's worth."

"Oh, trust me. It is," Lime replied, nodding towards the powerful woman with a half-smile in play. "Heck, even owning a single diner or hotel is mind numbing enough. Better to leave that kind of stuff to the professionals."

Goten, listening carefully to the conversation taking place between the adults, slumped his shoulders and gave the Makyan a disappointed look. "Aww… so… does that mean I won't get to eat Paprika burgers, ever?" the child asked with a groan.

Feeling for his little brother's displeasure, the older sibling, adorned in a white shirt and jeans, reached over and ruffled the kid's hair playfully. "Sorry. Maybe next time, little buddy."

The Makyan also gave the young boy a grin, drawing the demi-Saiyans' attention back to her, "I'll try to make you a special meat patty on rye later. How does that sound, runt?"
Upon processing the woman's words, a grin quickly reformed over Goten's face and the boy nodded his head enthusiastically. "That'll be great! Will you make it with onions?"

Paprika smiled, "Lots of them."

"Awesome! I love onions!"

Laughing at the kid's enthusiasm, Lime then lent back in the grass and placed her hand over her gut. "Man, can you guys stop talking about food. You're making me hungry."

"Same here," Gohan agreed, with his stomach actually giving an audible growl in support of this fact. Blushing a little at the looks he got from the two girls there, the adult half-Saiyan tried to shake off the awkwardness with his usual charm. "Whenever Goten gets started, so do I. It's kind of a weird trend we share with our dad." Another squawk from Icarus drew the teen's attention over to the pink dragon, who he gestured towards in agreement, "I know, right?"

A wash of sympathy for the young man prompted the brown haired high-schooler sitting nearby to reach over and pat the handsome young man on his broad shoulder, "Don't worry. We'll try to steer the topic away from food as much as possible." She then pulled away, cleared her throat, and holding a hand out to him. "As I understand it, I believe you still owe me a hundred and fifty from your last two stays at my lodgings."

The woman's remark drew another grumble from the demi-warrior as he reached down and pulled two notes from his pile, before then forking it over to his tax collector. "I swear... you guys are going to clean me out."

Not wanting to show her greatest rival any mercy, Paprika smirked at him. "If you want to survive in this day and age where industry is at an all-time high, you'd better start setting up shops, Son. Lots of them."

"Right," the teen grudgingly replied before then looking around the circle with a slightly more downtrodden visage. "Whose roll is it?"

"Mine! Mine!" Goten chirped excitedly, picking up the dice before then tossing it across the board, marking the beginning of yet another round of good-natured economic abuse.

While the four of them were messing around outdoors and catching up with one another, inside the Son household over in the kitchen, a certain orange haired Z-fighter was currently in the process of doing some much needed remedial exercises. Zangya, also deciding to take it easy this morning, had taken to cleaning the pots, pans, and whatever other dishes had been left out of the machine cycle in the sink. Treating this as a form of chore that she could easily lose herself in and transform into a therapeutic scrub down of her mentality, the woman had kindly taken this task off of Chi-Chi's hands while the raven haired mother went about doing some of the other jobs around the house, namely the laundry.

Even though this wasn't her scheduled day to do the dishes, as it was Goten's, the Hera, feeling overly generous and in need of something normal for a change, volunteered on behalf of the others so that they could go about doing other stuff. It was an offer that had put a smile on the Son woman's face and earned her a rather nice compliment from the Ox King's daughter about how she would make a fantastic wife someday. Though it did fill Zangya's head with some rather interesting thoughts, the blue skinned fighter was sure to dispel them as quickly as possible, so that she could concentrate on completing her task as thoroughly as possible.

Though she soon found herself daydreaming at the same time as she was cleaning the dishes, she was at least conscious enough to be aware of exactly what she was doing. The Hera even spared a warm smile to the group of teenagers outside when she went to put one of the dry stacks in the nearby cupboard.

As perplexing as it was to see Paprika breaking bread with her arch nemesis and rival, someone who she vowed one day to eviscerate with a spoon, Zangya didn't make that big of a fuss over the scene for a few good reasons. One: it was peacetime. Two: the Makyan and her half-Saiyan counterpart had agreed to a temporary ceasefire. And three: Goten was with them. If there was anyone the pair didn't want to be seen fighting around, it was the young half-Saiyan that they'd both played a part in raising over the last seven years.

"You wouldn't think they were rivals when you see the two of them acting like that," Zangya chuckled, shaking her head when she saw Gohan's shoulders slump and Paprika stick her nose in the air victoriously. "They act more like a brother and sister than anything else."

And she knew how much Goten loved his brother and his multitude of older 'sisters.'

Since this was something not worth arguing over for semantic reasons, the Hera simply looked over the situation with a mild interest and went about carrying on with her job inside the household. After half an hour of working in the kitchen and tending to the sink, Zangya was soon moving on to her last pot and was looking forward to a nice, hot cup of tea afterwards. Collecting up the aluminum scrubber, she dunked the steel drum into the water and prepared to wipe it down like the others.

But just as she was in the midst of doing so, the woman then looked up when she sensed something off and set her sights on the window in front of her. As she gazed through the glass and towards the mountains on the horizon, she suddenly spotted a person in the reflection, standing directly behind her.

Though the sight of them initially surprised Zangya, when the Hera got a good look at the mysterious person, she saw that it was a girl a couple years younger than her with long, wavy blonde hair, wearing a revealing black, one-piece suit showing off a lot of cleavage, a cape, an eye patch, and a large witch's hat with a bell on the end. The appearance of the person had Zangya gasp in surprise, moments before her entire body unconsciously froze up and the woman found herself gaping at the reflection, a shock of electricity and terror running up her spine.

While she gawked at the reflection, the Hera saw the blonde girl look up from underneath the wide brim of her hat. Showing off her patch and the one, blood-red eye underneath, the witch then flashed Zangya a sinister smile, one that had a bead of sweat form on the woman's temple and caused an even more painful electric feeling to rush through her body.

Her expression showcasing a look of complete horror, it took the Z-fighter several moments of processing for normal mobility to return to her limbs. As soon as feeling gripped her limbs once again, Zangya then mustered all the strength she could to spin around and look towards the person that was standing directly over her shoulder.

However, the moment the thunderstruck Hera turned to face the intruder, she didn't see anything.

As it turns out, she was the only one standing in the kitchen.

Zangya panted as her eyes darted around in search of the phantom witch, cold sweat trickling down her face as she took a few steps out. In her search, the woman quickly thought back on the intruder's appearance.
Though having previously been overwhelmed with feelings of fright and terror she'd never experienced before in her life, on account of the amount of killing intent was being thrown her way, the woman was still able to bring up the image of the person responsible. Despite having changed her hair color and her uniform drastically, there was no doubt in Zangya's mind that the witch she saw in the reflection was…

"Okay, Videl. That was a really, really funny joke. Really appreciate it. But I think it's time for you to come out now, please," Zangya said loudly, trying to coax the witch out of hiding and into the open. "Videl?"

Had that actually been Videl? Well, after hanging out with the girl for over seven years, training with her, and becoming one of her closest friends and allies, she'd had more than enough time to become familiar with the teenager's face.

However, after stretching out her senses for the girl's signature, not only was the crime fighter nowhere inside the house, she wasn't in the same damn region. She was currently a hundred miles away in Satan City doing whatever it was she was doing, which tickled Zangya's funny bone in a very uncomfortable way.

How could she be here when she was clearly all the way over there? Unless she knew Instantaneous Movement, then any other theory the Hera had was shot to bits.

Finding the entire situation beyond troubling, Zangya decided to chalk up the ghostly encounter she'd just had as a hallucination brought on by sniffing too much detergent. Making a mental note to ask the Son mother to change whatever brand she was currently buying, the orange haired woman turned around to return to the sink…

Only to cry out in shock when she found Chi-Chi standing directly behind her carrying a basket of dry laundry.

The mother blinked in surprise when she literally saw her stay-in relative from another planet leap three meters away like a startled cat, with eyes wide as saucers and a look of horror on her face.

"Whoa. Zangya? Are you okay?"

Panting and clutching her chest tightly, the Hera gritted her teeth, slammed her foot into the ground, and jabbed a finger towards the woman, "You gave me… a heart attack!"

"What? What happened?" Chi-Chi asked, looking completely bewildered by the woman's current state. She then pointed over her shoulder. "I just finished taking down the laundry and came in to find you standing in the middle of the room staring at an empty wall. It was like you'd just seen a ghost or something."

Taking a few more deep breaths, the orange haired fighter processed the woman's words for a moment and then looked off to the side of the room. Considering the events that occurred in the last few seconds and then the preposterousness of the entire thing, Zangya took a deep breath and shook her head. "Maybe I did… maybe I didn't." She then groaned and placed a hand to her cranium. "Damn. I don't know what to think anymore. After all the shit I've seen…"

Smiling warmly at her houseguest, Chi-Chi then set the basket of laundry down on the table, walked up to the Hera, and extended her arms. "You've had a long week, sweetie. Relax." She then took the Hera by the shoulder and placed a hand over the alien's heart to monitor her condition. "Just take a deep breath and think happy thoughts. You're just worked up from all the running around you've been doing all week, that's all."
Taking the kind mother's words to heart, Zangya did as she was instructed and breathed deeply. After which a smile formed across her lips. "Yeah. I just need to loosen up a little."

"That's it," Chi-Chi chirped, returning the Hera's smile with one of her own. "Take it easy and don't think about anything else. Concentrate on getting some rest."

The Z-fighter smiled. "Thanks, Chi-Chi."

"Don't mention it."

Giving her a couple more comforting pats and some extra reassurance, the wife of Son Goku then allowed Zangya to return to the sink and finish up with the dishes. While the alien went about doing her thing and moved on to packing away the dry stuff, the raven haired martial artist behind her then began the process of sorting and folding the clothing she'd brought in. A melodic hum soon filled the air as the adult guardian flew through the material at a superwoman pace, demonstrating a level of skill and professionalism developed over years of practice. This was unsurprising to the Hera, as Zangya figured taking care of not one but three hungry Saiyans, two of which were completely abysmal to the art of cooking and cleaning, had to be one of the most trying experiences in history.

Offering her a silent applause, Zangya enjoyed the woman's melody while proceeding to wipe down and dry the pots and pans she'd been tasked with organizing. It was only after several minutes of filing through the assorted utensils that she soon found herself in conference with the Son mother once again. This time however, it was over a matter that all of them, including the members of their entire group, had been finding quite bothersome.

"So even Baba, the woman who can bring people back from the dead and see into the future, wasn't able to find out anything about the person who sent that man after my son?" Chi-Chi asked as she stopped folding a towel midway.

Plates clattering together as she piled them up, Zangya then looked towards the window and frowned deeply. "Gohan said so himself. After Yamcha told Bulma, Bulma told everybody else and then went about trying to fill in the blanks herself. Let's just say that neither one of them was very happy with the results."

"And… no one has been able to find out anything yet?"

Despite the woman's concerned sounding voice, all the Hera could do was shake her head sadly in response. "Bulma has run every test imaginable she could on the armor and the pilot that was driving it. Even Baba has been jumping from one side of the planet to the other looking for answers. But whenever they think they've found something good, it always leads them to another dead end." She then picked up the stack of plates and pushed it into the cupboard above her. "It's funny. Even though our group is made up of the most powerful and capable people in the quadrant, we're all getting migraines over a single human with absolutely no unique powers whatsoever."

Except that he could make weapons that made the androids look like windup toys and was smart enough to cause even the divination powers of the greatest fortune teller on the planet to malfunction.

Feeling nothing but bad vibes from that remark, Chi-Chi turned to look across at her friend and helper, "And Gohan isn't worried in the slightest, despite nearly being beaten half to death by that bastard in the mech?" You could tell how concerned she was from her tone alone.

She cared more about her children's safety and wellbeing than she did her own. This was a fact that'd been made glaring apparent over the course of her entire married life thus far. Even though she was content that both her children were growing up strong and were living rich, fulfilling lives, she still felt some semblance of regret and woe over letting the two of them train and fight.

Despite the fact that she'd long since let such doubts go, she nevertheless felt similar feelings of foreboding arising from the potential danger this new, unknown enemy posed towards her family. This was magnified several times over when she learned that it was her oldest son that was specifically being targeted.

What kind of sick, twisted bastard would mark her child for dead with absolutely no cause or reason whatsoever? It was baffling.

Zangya, hearing the woman's worries loud and clear, gazed over her shoulder with a look of seriousness plastered on her face. "I think he's more worried about it than anybody else in our group. He's just really good at hiding it." She then looked across the room and narrowed her eyes thoughtfully. "Even though Gohan acts happy and seems like he's smiling, I think deep down in his gut… he's scared of who this enemy is and what plans he has in store for us."

Nodding in agreement, the mother quickly turned her attention back to her laundry. "My son made a promise to protect the earth and its people. It's been easy for him so far, since for the past seven years he knew exactly who his opponents were and could fight them evenly head to head. But this is the first time he and the others have run into an enemy who not only knows who they are and what they can do, but is also hiding and attacking from the shadows."

And that made them more dangerous than any other adversary they'd ever fought. After all, you couldn't defeat an enemy, let alone confront them, if you had no idea who the hell they were.

This remark drew a troubled sigh from the Hera, who then ran a hand through her orange locks and reached down to pick up one of the large pots in front of her. "At this rate, the next course of action will have to be to use the dragon balls to find out the identity of the puppet master behind the mech. And if that doesn't work… then we're just going to have to stick this out the old-fashioned way."

Hopefully, with some luck, they may not even have to use the dragon balls to figure out who their phantom adversary was. If they were patient enough and played this out right, perhaps their real opponent would make themselves known without the need for foresight and magic.

It was only an earthling after all. I mean… what enemy out there could possibly be worse than a single man on this planet?

OOO

(Meanwhile)

On the far side of the universe, outside of the four quadrants governed by both Otherworld and the Kais, there drifted a region of space divided from all the others. Overseen by neither one of the Gods and made up of a series of irregular and spiral galaxies, the residents of this wild and untamed domain carried on with their lives like every other world. However, unlike the four quadrants and the empires within them, the communities of this realm followed a completely different sort of banner, one that struck fear into the hearts of all those who knew the ruler's name.

Deep inside the expanse of stars and clusters, orbiting a bright, orange sun of an unknown system, an enormous fleet of around a hundred ships was stationed. Scattered throughout the area, yet staying within sight of the command vessel, the armada consisted of an assortment of triangle shaped cruisers, each one estimated to be around 1,600 meters in length, with dark grey hulls, enormous ion engines on the back, and bridges standing atop heavily fortified spires at the stern, allowing for optimal visibility in all directions. Each vessel being designed for planetary invasions and manned by crews of up to thirty thousand strong, these ships were also under the escort of hundreds of smaller craft that were shaped like arrow heads, all of which were about the size your average jet fighter.

Needless to say, it was an impressive display of military might and firepower.

However, the most outstanding vessel out of all the craft present there, was the commander's ship itself. About fifteen times larger than any of the other battleships at a whopping 20,000 meters in length, this monstrous dreadnaught not only looked the most heavily defended, but was also the most heavily armed, with a crew of up to two hundred thousand, thirteen massive engines propelling it through space, and what looked like a small city built across its top deck. It also had a massive tower closest to the rear, with the captain's bridge allowing a grand view of the vessel, the fleet, and the entirety of space itself.

The vessel cut through space like a knife, striking terror into the hearts of any civilization it invaded. However, due to the random nature of the fleet's formation, it was plainly obvious that the armada wasn't invading any planets or systems at this stage. In fact, they were currently on standby, and listening out for any chatter that may interest the commander of this grand attack force.

The leader could be identified by the insignia that he had inscribed on the hull of every single one of his ships, which took the form of a black fist surrounded by a golden helix. It was the symbol of his great empire.

Standing on the bridge of the command vessel in front of the triangle shaped windows, which formed a wide arc around the entire room, the hulking, muscular form of the heavily armored, grey-skinned tyrant Varax, could be seen gazing out into space. With his metallic, clawed hands held firmly behind his back and his red eyes piercing the infinite night, the man not only looked the part of a leader, but also a dangerous and imposing foe.

Behind him, across the floor plan of the vessel's helm, dozens of aliens dressed in officer's uniforms could be seen manning the computers, all of whom were performing under the watch of large, black, bipedal robots with red visors and attack gauntlets.

The platoon of aliens weren't any ordinary ones though. Far from it. While all of them resembled races one would easily recognize in Frieza's and King Cold's army, all of the personnel walking around the bridge had metallic parts and electronics jacked into their flesh, most of which took the form of armor plating slapped over their clothes. This gave them the appearance of the most well dressed Borg army you'd ever seen.

Their current states and appearances was all thanks to the generosity of their great master, who'd not only experimented and modified all of them, but had forced them all into his servitude by turning them into an army of obedient cyborgs.

It was an eerie sight, especially when all those with cybernetic eyes could be seen as glowing red dots in the shadowy parts of the room.

While the personnel went about their business in monitoring the ship, the navy, and the system they were currently stationed in, the boss and Commander in Chief of the fleet continued scanning his quadrant; the Helix Realm. Overseeing its entirety with a keen eye and an open kind, the cybernetic giant of an emperor twiddled his fingers expectantly, while also considering some of the big plans he had in development in the deepest, darkest recesses of his mind. These schemes of his not only involved the rulers of the other quadrants, but the entirety of the universe itself. For someone of his power and capability, it meant no shortage of trouble for those who defended this reality and called it their home.

However, just as Varax was in the midst of his meditation and was about to arrive at an important juncture, a sudden jolt of electricity in the back of his mind had his head cock upwards and his eyes narrow. His red irises focusing on a distant star system far beyond his sight, an irritable growl soon left his throat as he then focused on the source of the disturbance.

"There it is again," he whispered in his gargling tone of voice.

For the second time that month, a powerful energy signature, unlike anything anyone had ever felt within their universe before, had once again appeared like a ghostly blip on the radar. Not only was it immense, but it was potent, pungent, and toxic, something he was certain even the Gods could feel from their respective home worlds. However, despite its overwhelming sensation and soul crushing quantity, no mortal on this plain of existence was able to detect it, save for only a handful that was capable of picking up celestial energy.

What's more, it didn't belong to a planet, a sun, or anything else along those lines. No. This energy signature belonged to a person.

"I sense… a presence…" Varax murmured, honing in on the very spot he sensed the signature originate from and had now vanished like mist on the wind, "A presence I… haven't felt since…"

It was after a couple more seconds of discreet observation and deliberation the alien's red eyes widened, before a dark smirk formed underneath the breathing apparatus covering the lower part of his face. "Ahh… it's her."

"The lost one from another universe…"

Just before he could fully comprehend the magnitude and excitement of his discovery, the sound of footsteps stopping behind him quickly ripped his attention away from the cosmos and towards the blue, diminutive alien now standing behind him.

It was the admiral of the fleet, as indicated by his white uniform and multi-colored badge on his chest.

"Excuse me, Lord Varax."

The giant alien sneered and turned, making a loud metallic stomp at the same time, "What is it?"

"Prisoner zero… she is… awake, sir," the admiral continued, his robotic voice all a treble despite it being completely monotone.

Knowing exactly what the officer meant by that statement, Varax allowed a grunt to leave his lips as he turned completely and began marching down the walkway. "Move the fleet to sector seventy two and continue monitoring the system for unusual activity. Notify me of any changes," the tyrant growled, at the same time he pushed past the much smaller man on his way down the gangway.

"Yes, master," the blue cyborg stammered, bowing to the warlord as the Korgoth stomped towards the exit.

All officers and personnel currently on that bridge, and working tirelessly away at the monitors, watched Varax leave with a terrified glimmer in their eyes. Even the robots standing guard at the doors stiffened to attention when their boss walked past them. It was when he finally vacated the room completely that a semblance of peace quickly returned, allowing the admiral to take control of the situation and pick up where the rest of them had left off.

As for Varax, it didn't take long for the all-powerful alien tyrant to get where he was going. A quick trip in the elevator and a brisk stroll down the hall of hangar lined windows, all of which were filled with countless ships and mechs, and the commander soon arrived at the entrance to his laboratory. Safely secured behind a huge, thick set of metal doors, the man was able to access it simply by walking up to the sensors and allowing the computers to scan his signature. The instant it did, the doors opened and the lights that'd previously been switched off beyond the barrier flipped right back on. In a matter of moments, the room where the warlord conducted most of his personal business was back online and operating at full function.

Hemispherical in design, with a smooth, metallic surface all around, there were clear tanks of multiple-colored fluid set up against the walls beside various computer terminals and machines, with a single table in the center and a spotlight hanging over it. When the giant alien stomped passed it and towards the back wall, he soon unveiled another part of the chamber from the shadows, which looked like some sort of custom-made turbine hooked up to a bunch of monitors with a heavyset frame. In front of this massive and highly sophisticated engine, dangling several feet above the ground, were enormous restraining devices and, hanging between them with her arms and legs locked by the machine's arms, was the familiar, red-furred form of Set: the Goddess of Storms.

Still adorned in the uniform she'd been captured in with all her bits intact, the woman looked even worse than she had been coming out of her fight against Gohan. Not only was the goddess's fur all ruffled with burn marks visible all over, she also had multitudes of scars covering her front and back, giving her the appearance that she'd been whipped and tortured constantly for the past few months.

It didn't help that she had a series of syringes and drilling devices suspended all around her from the machine she was plugged into, and were all pointing in her direction. This gave credibility to the fact that she had bought the brunt of whatever horrific experiences the alien tyrant had subjected her to.

And, for the hundredth time that cycle, it appeared he was back to continue administering his good work.

Stopping in front of the crucified woman, with his eyes hovering perfectly level with her face on account of his ridiculous height, Varax watched as the broken fox woman's body twitched into life. A groan escaping her throat as she slowly regained consciousness, the bruised and beaten goddess then looked up at the alien, revealing a face covered in dried blood and one eye shut in pain.

When he saw that he had the woman's full and undivided attention, the giant grey alien in the respirator stared back at her for several moments before turning to his left. "You've certainly become quite obedient over the last few weeks." Varax then began walking towards the wall, his large, metallic legs making a loud 'whir' and 'clang' noise with every step. "The anti-energy binds are also doing a superb job at holding you in place. That means I don't have to exert any effort in keeping you on a leash."

Hearing his garbled voice loud and clear, the red haired vixen sneered. "Even if I could move… it wouldn't do me any good," Set groaned weakly.

Varax chuckled and, sparing a glance back at his prisoner, stopped beside one of his many computer terminals positioned against the wall. "I'm happy to hear that. You're finally starting to understand the complete futility of your situation." Reaching out, the Korgoth typed into the key pad with his sharp fingers, causing a series of interconnecting, maze-like lights to spring up along the wall. This was immediately followed by a loud humming sound from the turbine that the goddess was jacked into, indicating something had been switched on. "I believe that that's my cue to start the next phase of my experiments."

The woman spat. "What the hell… are you planning?"

Turning his back on the deity and seemingly ignoring her, the alien continued tapping away at his computer screen for a few more seconds. Once he was done writing in the code, he then began to speak once again. "Being one of the longest living goddesses in history and one of the most knowledgeable and educated amongst your kin, you should know that there are three main super powers that govern this universe."

As his fingers danced away and the wall surrounding the chamber continued to light up one section after the other, the Korgoth spared a momentary glance back at the woman and smirked. "There are the Gods, both good and evil, who are charged with overseeing the balance of creation and destruction across the cosmos, and employ the services of the Kais and the Planet Trade Organization, to assist them with a majority of their labors. Then there are the Titans, the original deities who aided in the construction of our world, and are responsible for ensuring the laws that hold the universe together are protected, preserved, and maintained. And then, finally, there are the Dragons, capricious beings created from enormous masses of energy, and are considered forces of nature that can bend the laws of creation to their will. They represent the binding influence of spirit and power in the cosmos. This is the case for most of, if not all the universes in existence, as these factions are a constant across all of the known realities."

The alien then turned back to look at his computer and continued to type absently into the screen. "Some universes have all three, some only have one or two, and other worlds may have none at all. But in this world, all these elements come together like spokes on a wheel, working tirelessly to ensure the cycle of power keeps on turning." Varax then slapped his entire palm against the pad, ending the program and causing the rest of the nodes across his laboratory wall to light up. As soon as it did, the man glared back at the goddess, who he could see was hanging off of his every word. "I intend to break that wheel."

Set, gritting her teeth at the detestable tyrant's words, threw the man a hateful scowl. "And how pray tell… do you hope to accomplish that?"

Still conveying an air of confidence and superiority, the Korgoth turned to face the woman with his hands behind his back and a menacing gleam in his blood red eyes. "The Gods of this universe are recognized for their ability to manipulate the coveted form of energy known as Godly ki, which grants them unbelievable power and the ability to influence both time and space. It is the ultimate expression of overwhelming force." Varax then placed a hand over his armored chest and allowed the center piece to light up an eerie purple. This caused Set to recoil in pain when his negative ki began to flood the air and violently affect her energy. "My power however is different. Unlike you so-called Gods, my body represents the culmination of a lifetime of hard work and self-sacrifice. Millions of years of fighting, training, learning, and testing my limitations have allowed me to accomplish feats no other mortal has ever achieved before. My will and ambition is unyielding… and is the ultimate expression of individual perseverance."

Confusion racked the vixen as she remained drawn up between the machine's arms and glaring across at her captor. "Where exactly are you going with this?"
A grunt soon followed her question as Varax began to pace in a thoughtful and methodical manner. "Let me tell you a little story… one that I'm sure you've heard at least once before in passing. It's a tale about a little group of deities, and their battle against a deranged alchemist and one of the greatest threats ever seen by mortals." Stopping on one side of the lab, the alien looked up towards the ceiling and began his recount. "Long ago, about five million years before the age, a powerful wizard from the distant edge of the universe named Bibidi first appeared. With him he brought a terrible monster of his own creation, whose one and only purpose was to destroy. The name of that monster was Majin Buu."

Eyes widening a little at the announcement, the fox woman then looked up at the tyrant with an expression of surprise slapped across her face. "Wait a second… I've heard of that name before."

"I'd be surprised if you didn't," Varax remarked, turning around and continuing to pace around the room. "This creature had no feelings or conscience. He was designed as an instrument of fear and terror, with a single desire to eliminate all living things… and he was very good at it. With Majin Buu under his control, Bibidi set about the systematic destruction of all life in the cosmos. Hundreds of planets were reduced to rubble and entire galaxies were erased from existence. No force could withstand his evil power. Eventually… the creature's rampage drew the attention of the Kais, who rallied together in an attempt to stop the creature. One after the other they fell to the beast's might, attempting to repress his strength by allowing him to absorb them, until only one of them remained. In the end, their strategy to overwhelm the monster with their collective power and influence was successful. The last Supreme Kai then waited patiently until Buu was eventually sealed away by his master for his hibernation cycle, which gave the surviving deity the opportunity to kill Bibidi once and for all. The egg that contained the abomination, the creature that was responsible for bringing down an entire generation of Kais, was soon lost to the ages on an unknown, backwater planet."

Listening closely to the alien's story brought a grunt of annoyance from the dog woman, who continued to follow him around the room with her eyes. He had incredibly intimate knowledge of this story and with every word he spoke, Varax invoked a new memory from inside the woman, who had also heard of this tale many, many years ago. After he was done, Set soon remembered everything and narrowed her eyes on the Korgoth.

"Good riddance. The universe can do with one less wannabe God of Destruction. He was a nuisance and a pest. I'm glad that the Supreme Kai managed to stop him."

"This is the story that most people know as the origins of Majin Buu and the truth behind his legacy." Varax continued, the alien stopping in his tracks with his back turned to the goddess. At that moment, when the alien looked over his shoulder and glared across at his audience, a shiver of fright ran up Set's spine when she saw the look of deviousness reflected in his irises. "While a majority of it is true… it is not the full story." When the vixen witnessed the man's leer, she then watched as he turned to face her once more and began telling the next chapter. "Most of the people who are familiar with this recount believe that it was Bibidi who made the creature and set the beast loose upon the universe. But the truth is that the one called 'Majin Buu' was not created by him, at least… not the Bibidi everyone knew. You see… the original wizard who created Buu existed a hundred million years before the age, in a time when the universe was still young… as were the races and deities that inhabited it. The wizard that existed back then, who was also named Bibidi, was able to prolong his life through generations upon generations of clones, where each copy was raised as an offspring of the one before him, allowing the wizard to continue his lineage and develop his craft for over several millennia. The knowledge of how to summon the creature Majin Buu was also passed down through Bibidi's clones, allowing the magician to call upon the beast after every cycle."
"What an interesting fairytale," Set grumbled indignantly, her eyes narrowed firmly upon the man as he elaborated on the creature's history.

It was then Varax raised a finger in a pointing gesture. "But here is where it gets even more interesting. Since Majin Buu's one and only instinct was to destroy everything in his path, the next question you have to ask is... why was Majin Buu created in the first place?" When he saw the puzzled look come over the vixen's expression, the Korgoth lowered his arm and smirked. "What possible reason could a wizard, with no outstanding celestial powers, have to produce a monster with the sole purpose of wiping out all life in the cosmos, with no hopes of recreating it? Well... I'll tell you why. You see, over a hundred million years ago, an ambitious young genius from the planet Gon commissioned the maniacal wizard Bibidi to create a body for him that was not only capable of supernatural and regenerative powers, but was also immortal and able to change its shape to whatever it pleased at a moment's notice. It was an incredibly volatile process and the formulas behind it were ludicrously complicated, but the wizard accepted the challenge and promised the man a final product at the end of the season. The alchemist worked tirelessly day and night for decades creating this body, and when the time came for the great unveiling, the gifted magician's use had run its course... and so did his sanity. When the genius from Gon came by the alchemist's secret lab to collect his prize, the wizard turned his creation on him and blew the young warrior's body to kingdom come, before releasing the beast upon the universe." When the alien saw the goddess's eyes widen, a low chuckle left the hulking alien's lips. "Figured it out yet?"

"You were the one that hired Bibidi to create Majin Buu?"

The tyrant nodded his head affirmatively. "That's right." Turning his back on the woman, Varax then continued to speak. "I was a full, flesh and blood Korgoth back then, and even though I lacked the same great intellect and strength I have now, I still craved power and longevity. In order to make my ultimate dream of ruling the cosmos a reality, I gave Bibidi the rarest, most malleable element in the universe; a heap of pink matter that traveled between worlds, destroying and absorbing them in the form of an unconscious mass of fluid, and cycled between violent rampages and hibernation. This was Majin Buu's raw, untainted form; a substance with no name that existed since the beginning of the universe. I asked him to stabilize the agent and transform it into a perfect, immortal body that I could inhabit and live a long, eternal life. When I went to the wizard's place to claim what was rightfully mine after the procedure was completed, the retched alchemist attempted to kill me with the very entity I sought to own for myself." Varax growled at that last part as memories of that moment rushed through his head, prompting him to place a hand painfully to his temple. "In most universes where Majin Buu existed, I was killed by Bibidi, and my story in those alternate realities ended in the dark pits of his laboratory. But in other worlds, I managed to survive the unfortunate encounter... and spent the next million years in a healing tank, where I was slowly built and transformed into the cybernetic abomination you see standing before you." He then gestured to himself, showing the goddess his muscular form impaled by metallic prosthetic implants and robotic components. "Now that I'm back, I plan on making things right by reclaiming my lost property and taking my place as ruler of this cosmic cesspool by force."

Gritting her teeth angrily, Set thrashed against her binds, only to give up moments later when she didn't budge an inch. "Even if you do manage to get Majin Buu's body, there's no way in hell you'll be strong enough to conquer the universe! That freak alone wasn't enough to even warrant the attention of Whis and Beerus!"

Varax grunted at the woman's retort. "In order to stabilize the element, Bibidi wrapped the matter around the body of a child, enabling it to gain a form of semi-consciousness. In essence, what the wizard ended up creating was an artificial Magic God... a Demon... a Majin; the second most perfect organism in the universe, which could heal from any injury and change its shape to whatever it saw fit. When the Charon created Esdraelon, they foolishly made the mistake of giving the creature too much free will, meaning the beast would never tire and never stop, no matter how much punishment it took. Not even I would be able to stop it. Bibidi however, modified Majin Buu's DNA by giving him an 'off' switch, allowing him to seal the creature away and put it into a forced state of hibernation if it became too unruly." Hands being held behind his back once again, the cyborg tyrant looked upon his prisoner with a smile. "I studied Bibidi's original notes on Majin Buu and learned everything there was to know about our creation. That means there are now only two people in the universe who know how to fully control the pink monstrosity and utilize its abilities to its fullest potential: me and the original Bibidi." He then raised his hand and clenched it into a fist. "Even if it takes me a thousand years to find it, once I reclaim Majin Buu, I will use his DNA to manufacture a perfect, immortal army, and use his powers to conquer all of creation. Once I do… nothing, not even the Titans or the Dragons, will be able to stop me."

When the goddess heard his declaration, all she felt at first was fear and terror. However, once she processed everything he had to say, the woman then allowed a sly grin to form across her lips. Even though she was chained up, defenseless, and practically at the tyrant's mercy, the strong-willed vixen couldn't help but get in one more shot at him.

"Good luck," Set wheezed in a ragged voice. "Like you said… Majin Buu's egg has been missing for over five million years. I doubt you'll be able to find it… even if you had another hundred million cycles… which I doubt you do."

Staring the woman down as she leered back at him, the bulky Korgoth with the respirator kept his fist held up for several tense seconds. Then, after processing the Dio-jin's words, the man lowered his arm and smirked, an expression that put a very uncomfortable feeling in Set's stomach. "You're right. I may never be able to find it. For all I know… it could be lost in the deepest recesses of space; drifting through the cosmos like an asteroid. But even if its location is unknown to me… that doesn't mean I can't move on with Plan B."

Doing an about face, the man then stomped his way over to the central table. It was here he reached down and pressed a button, allowing a panel from underneath to slide out. While his prisoner watched him wearily from where she was hanging, the man reached into the compartment and pulled something out.

"There are plenty of other life forms in the four quadrants that I can use to clone a slave army and use their powers for myself." Holding the device up nice and high, Varax then looked over his shoulder and leered at his prisoner. "If I plan on bringing down the Gods some day, I have to be as ready as I possibly can be to face them. And what better place to start then by finding out more about their weaknesses through the goddess that I have now?"

At first appearing confused, Set suddenly let out a scream of agony when a powerful current of electricity suddenly shot through her entire body. The turbine behind her humming loudly as it hit her with the charge of over a million volts, the woman's body lit up blue as her entire form was toasted from the inside-out by the surge of power. Once the current stopped, the red-haired vixen slumped forward and panted heavily.

Vision blurring out as she nearly lost consciousness, the woman then looked up when she heard Varax's footsteps approaching and saw his shadow appear in her line of sight.

"I was originally a scientist on my home world, tasked with advancing our technology and providing comfort for my people. Progress was made through a combination of trial and error, as well as continuous experimentation, hard work, and monitoring of all processes. That makes me a kind of doctor in a way; meticulously fiddling with his subjects to make sure everything went according to plan."
When Set eventually looked upon her captor, her eyes widened in horror when she saw he was carrying a laser powered scalpel; a device that surgeons often used in the hospital when cutting open patients. Seeing the tyrant brandishing it with one hand and a syringe in the other not only drew a whimper from the woman, but also had the vixen tremble on the spot. Smirking at the look of pure terror in the vixen's eyes, the cyborg emperor leered as he raised the tools. "And since I am a doctor… I think I will perform some surgery."

In a matter of moments, screams and howls of pain filled the entire ship from bow to stern, with Set's voice being loud enough for even the drones on the top levels of the bridge to hear. If the cyborg officers and the robots on the vessel's bridge could feel anything for real, there's no doubt that even they would be shivering at the cries being emanated by Varax's prisoner.

(TO BE CONTINUED)

Author's Note: Ugh. Poor Set. Even I wouldn't wish that fate upon my worst enemy.

Oh well, another chapter come and gone, and I hope you all enjoyed it. The story is finally getting into the thick of the plot and even more secrets are revealed. All of these events will culminate into a single, major event that will shake the entire planet earth and when that comes, a lot of shit is going to happen.

I took a lot of inspiration from a lot of anime and shows for this overall story, including but not limited to: One Piece, Doctor Who, Dragonball Z: Multiverse, Dragonball Z movies and games, Highschool DXD, Nocome, To Aru Majutsu no Index, Avengers, Baccano and Code Geass. Just to name a few.

There are really only three villains you have to remember over the next couple of arcs. There is Sentinel, who is doing a lot of secret shit somewhere in the mountains, Kaiser, who has his own plans for planet earth and is apparently protected by some powerful Dragon magic, and Varax, who is probably the most ruthless and dangerous one out here so far, is planning to conquer the universe.

After reading up on Majin Buu's history on the website, I noticed that a couple of changes have recently been made to his origin story, so I had to write it to fit into my project. Apparently Bibidi didn't create Majin Buu, per se, but Majin Buu has in fact been around since 'time immemorial', which is really strange since I was always under the impression that Bibidi created him. It basically shows the author has to meddle with everything in his own story, even though it's already been released for over a decade. Oh well, whatever makes him happy, I guess. Also, apparently Bibidi wasn't survived through his 'son' Babidi, but Babidi is in fact the genetic clone of Bibidi in the manga, which is also weird, but also makes sense now that I think about it.

Using the information I was able to take away from the website, I was able to implement it into the story to make it more interesting. The element that 'created' Majin Buu has been around since time immemorial (which is basically taking an overly generalized back story and narrowing it down into something that fits into the plot), and Varax actually commissioned the original Bibidi to give Majin Buu consciousness, all for the purpose of creating a perfect, immortal body to rule the universe.

I thought this was a really cool idea to use, and actually gives a reason as to why Bibidi 'resurrected' or 'created' Majin Buu in the first place, and why he couldn't control him properly; because Bibidi lost his shit and Buu is a reckless weapon.
Everything Varax is doing in this story is to grab power, and he basically experiments on life forms to get what he wants. If he gets his hands on Majin Buu, then shit is going to get a hell of a lot worse for the heroes.

But wait, in the last chapter, Sentinel had actually fused with Majin Buu and took over the universe. So that means something bad must have happened in the timeline that caused things to get so terrible for the Z-fighters.

Well, with Pan and Eva in the present, things might change for the better… or not.

Also, it appears Pan and Eva traveling back in time has also 'awakened' something else. Wonder what it could be. Just a little bit of foreshadowing for the final boss.

FANART UPDATE: Also, for all those curious to find out what some of the girl characters look like (Kana and Set) and the total number of girls included in the Harem aspect of the story, my friend has also done another comic page for me in the link I've provided in my profile. The page features all of the girls in Gohan's Harem so if you're interested to find out who they are, you can check out the link in my profile.

It's an awesome pic. Makes me laugh.

I also renamed the links to chapters with the arcs, so people know which arc they are currently on.

Next one coming soon I believe will be the Saiyan Invasion Arc.
Standing patiently outside the massive iron gates of the Satan residence with the light of the midday sun beating down on him from above, Gohan, adorned in a blue, long-sleeve thermal, a hooded blue vest, jeans and a pair of vans, looked down at his watch to see exactly where he was on time. Having already waited out here for a couple of minutes since making his call, the demi-Saiyan soon began to wonder whether the event that he and his close friend of many years had organized with one another was ever going to happen.

"Hmm… I wonder what's taking her so long?" the spiky haired hero thought out loud as he then spared the nearby mansion another look over. What with the way his feet had begun to chafe in his canvas made shoes, he couldn't help but wonder and worry about whether or not his girlfriend was okay.

However, his woes and concerns over the matter soon ebbed away moments later when, after a couple more minutes and a few patient taps of his foot, Gohan saw the double-doors to the mansion open. Straightening on the spot, the teen then moved into the archway of the resident's perimeter, where he watched with a warm smile on his face and a glint in his eye as his girlfriend trotted down the steps of her home and made a brisk jog out toward the entrance of her property. It didn't escape the teen's notice that the girl's father, dressed in his martial arts garb and a bathrobe over it, had also stopped by the door to see his daughter off.

When the poster girl of Satan City eventually skidded to a stop in front of her half-Saiyan sentry, the young man beamed down at her. "Hey, Videl."

"Hey, Gohan," the raven haired crime fighter, dressed in a yellow sweater and skirt, answered happily, at the same time slipping her hands behind her. "Sorry I took so long. I got a little bit caught up trying to decide what kind of shoes I should wear for our walk across town." Her remark had the demi-Saiyan look down and check her feet, where he saw a pair of lovely white sandals wrapped around her toes and ankles. His little inspection earned a bashful smile from the radiant angel as she lifted her heel in an uncharacteristically girlish manner. "Do you like them?"

"Yeah. I think they look great," Gohan replied, which earned a sigh of relief from his teammate as the Saiyan fixed his most delightful smile upon her. "They definitely match the colors of your jersey and skirt. But, more importantly, are they comfortable?"

Videl nodded enthusiastically. "Uh-huh."

"Good," the demi-Saiyan exclaimed, at the same time grinning brightly. When he received one from his girlfriend in kind, the warrior then looked over the girl's shoulder and waved across at her father. His greeting to the man with the mustache and afro was promptly returned with equal vigor, allowing the teen to rest at ease that the man of the house was at least approving of the situation.
Once looks of respect and understanding had been shared, Gohan then looked back at his girlfriend and smiled. "So… are you all set?"

"Well, that depends," Videl shrugged while holding her arms out. "I had no clue what the hell you had planned for today and didn't know what to bring with me. All I've got are my wallet, my phone, my keys, and the clothes on my back… and even now I think they may be a little bit wrong." She emphasized this by checking out her top's sleeves.

"What are you talking about? The stuff that you've got on right now is perfectly fine," Gohan said, grinning from ear to ear as he looked the angel over from head to toe. From her glowing smile to her fit figure adorned in that attractive ensemble of clothing, he couldn't have asked her for anything more. "In fact… you look absolutely stunning."

His comment earned a playful punch in the chest from the raven haired teen, "Oh, stop it."

"No. It's true," the Saiyan persisted with a warm, admiring look in play, "You're beautiful, Videl. The… most beautiful girl I've ever laid eyes on." Sure, it sounded cheesy as hell coming from him, but what else could he have said in that situation?

When it came to making statements like this, there was no way he couldn't stop himself from sounding all gushy. It was part of his honest, innocent schoolboy charm.

Feeling her heart skip a beat at her boyfriend's highly personalized review on her appearance and overall state of dress, the crime fighter then brushed some strands of hair behind her ear and averted her gaze. Her cheeks reddening with embarrassment, Videl then allowed a loving smile to form on her face as she spared a nervous glance back up at her amiable partner.

"I'll make sure you pay for that," Videl remarked, bringing her hand up to poke him in the arm. Her little jab tickling the demi-Saiyan and earning an even wider grin from him, the raven haired girl then giggled and latched onto his arm. The human Z-fighter instantly took a step closer to her crush so that she was pressed up against him. Once she was certain she had a hold of him, she spoke, "Alright then, Romeo. Where exactly did you plan on taking me this fine Saturday?"

"Oh… I was thinking the local aquarium first. You know, I hear they have a new dinosaur on display in one of their newest exhibits and have recently opened it up to the public. We should go over there and check it out," Gohan informed, at the same time tugging the girl towards him so that he too was leaning into her. When she fixed her fond gaze upon him, the demi-Saiyan felt his heartbeat quicken. "Then after that, I was thinking of shaking down the city a little with a long walk and 'an explore'. What do you think?"

Videl shrugged, "Works for me. Lead on."

With his girlfriend's limb secured in his, the demi-Saiyan wasted no time in walking her down the road and out of sight. As they strolled away, the pair of experienced fighters was overseen by the city's savior and namesake, who stood by the entrance to his home with his hands on his hips and a big smile on his face. Just before he watched them vanish around the corner, the Champ was soon joined by his butler Jenkins, who stood by his side with his hands behind him and a professional, stoic expression in play.

Exhaling deeply, Hercule smiled down at his assistant and commented out loud, "They grow up so fast, don't they?"

"If you ask me, sir, your daughter couldn't be in better hands," the butler replied, an agreeable smile forming on his lips too. "She absolutely adores that boy."
"Indeed," the Champ sniffed, before then puffing his chest out and grinning in his characteristic manner. "I just can't wait until he finally proposes to her. The strongest boy on this planet joining houses with my own… I'm telling you, it will be a day everyone will want to hear about!" Bringing his fist up, the martial arts champion shook it proudly and slammed it into his chest. "As soon as a date is set, I will waste no time or expense in making it the greatest wedding ceremony ever!"

The butler bowed his head courteously, "Whatever you feel is right, sir."

"There's nothing too good for my daughter!" the happy fighter shouted, before quickly turning heel and making his way back into the house. As soon as Hercule stomped away while continuing to spout all sorts of jolly nonsense about the preposterous ideas he had for his child's ceremony, Jenkins closed the doors behind them and followed after the father with a bounce in his step.

As for the young couple from Orange Star High, their day started off on a relaxed and noticeably chipper high note. From the Satan Residence, the pair shared a languid walk down to the nearby tram station, where the pair took the trolley to the marina. There, they soon found themselves at the entrance to the aquatic center and the aquarium next door. The facility being the same size as the city's main botanical garden and featuring an equally vast array of plant and animal life, both Gohan and Videl had a wonderful time exploring the various corridors and tanks the center had on display. One of their most enjoyable walks through the park definitely had to be the coral gardens, where the pair took their time strolling through a maze of glass hallways, which gave them a pristine view of what the underwater environment was like at the bottom of the ocean.

Though it'd been quite some time since Gohan had last gone for a trip to the bottom of the sea, with one of his most memorable excursions being with Krillin when the two of them were looking for a giant pearl for his ex, the demi-Saiyan was certain very little had changed about it. What with the recent visit by Zeru to their planet and its death leading to an increased abundance of all life and resources on the planet, the oceans of the earth were probably even more beautiful and healthy than they'd ever been in a long time.

The pair had a blast checking out all the aquarium life and indulging in a little game of tag through the passageways. A dutiful staff member made sure to stop them before their little game got out of hand, and the two Z-fighters went back to acting civil once more.

After their walk through the aquarium and a stop off at the souvenir store, where Gohan bought Videl a dolphin key ring and tried to get her a plushy from the claw-machine, but ended up failing, the duo then carried on to the nearby shopping mall. Here they had another walk about and stopped by at the food court, where the demi-Saiyan purchased a couple of crepes for them. He helped himself to an apple-crumble with ice cream and bought his girlfriend a wild berry one, with an assortment of over a dozen fruits, topped with whipped cream and cherries. The pair enjoyed their treats as they walked around the enormous complex of shops and stands, at the same time intermittently stealing bites of the other's treat. While Gohan put up a fuss that his girlfriend was eating too much of his, the crime fighter simply stuck her tongue out at him and let him have one extra bite of hers just to keep him tamed.

As they were nibbling and devouring their respective crepes, the duo went on a personalized tour of all the shops. Interested in the items that were on sale, both Gohan and Videl went for a little bit of window browsing, where they both took time in admiring the clothes and other accessories on display. Oftentimes the demi-Saiyan pulled them over to some of the shops that were catered towards women, where he attempted to curry his girlfriend's favor by checking out some handbags, belts and other goods that she might be interested in. While this did catch her attention briefly, the raven haired teen soon tore her well-meaning boyfriend away from those stores and dragged him over to the sports outlet places, which she found even more interesting. This went to show exactly where her ideas and preferences sat in contrast to his, and the hero of earth made sure to allow his partner to lead him in this endeavor wherever she pleased.

She did show a surprising amount of interest in the swimsuit section. Though he pointed it out and his girlfriend brushed it off as him being paranoid, Gohan simply let the argument slide and continued to follow her like a diligent boyfriend should.

Their trek through the shopping mall soon led the pair to a Ferdinand brand clothing store, where the demi-Saiyan spent the next few minutes watching the crime fighter peruse through a wide selection of dresses and suits. When she found something she thought would definitely make the boy's head spin, the raven haired angel retired to the change rooms, upon which Gohan then stood patiently outside her door with her sandals in hand.

Almost immediately the girl hit a snag.

"Ugh. I don't understand it. Why is it that at every Silk Sheik and Dunstan outlet the girl clothes always have to be so complicated?" Videl cursed out loud while her boyfriend leant against the frame of the gate. "This goes on the outside… so this chord should go all the way through… right?"

Hands in his pockets, the spiky haired Saiyan looked over his shoulder and peered through the overlapping slits in the door, yet couldn't see jack-all. "Having problems?"

"No. I… I'm fine," the girl replied with a slightly frustrated undulation in her voice. "I can take care of this myself. Don't worry about me."

"Are you sure?" the warrior asked again for clarification.

"Positive. I'm a tough girl. I'm not afraid of a little challenge… ah! Crap…"

Her little break in confidence in the end shot down any value her dispute had. However, not wanting to point it out and earn her wrath as a consequence, all Gohan did was stand there quietly and shook his head in amusement.

For the next several minutes after that, the demi-Saiyan waited patiently for his partner to finish dressing and looked on as a few other customers went about checking out the contents of the store. It was only when he once again heard the struggled grunting sounds of his date through the barrier that his concerns were once again raised. Looking back through the gateway, the young man blinked a couple of times and tilted his head.

"Videl? Do you… want me to get somebody who can help you?" Gohan asked in earnest.

After a couple more muffled grunts, the raven haired teen on the other side of the door smirked and looked over her shoulder towards the visor. "If you're so worried about me, why don't you come in here and help me out?"

Hearing her question loud and clear, as well as the tone she spoke with, the young Saiyan blushed to the roots of his hair and looked away. "Uh. Th-That's okay. I… I'm fine out here."

"Really? I mean, it is you after all… and you are my date. I can trust you enough to let you hang around here while I'm in my underwear. Aren't you even a little bit curious about what your girlfriend wears underneath her regular clothes?"

"I'm not gonna lie, it has crossed my mind a few times," Gohan murmured a little under his usual volume, before his cheeks flushed red again and he spun towards the door. "B-But that's not the
"Hey," Videl suddenly interrupted, causing the demi-Saiyan to stop his train of thought, "Do you want to see what kind of underwear I'm wearing?" She then wasted no time in unhooking the latch on her door.

Alarm bells going off, the demi-Saiyan jumped in the way of the entrance, shut his eyes, held his arms out, and looked away in panic. "Wait! Don't do that!" His shout echoed throughout the entire store, startling a few of the customers and drawing the women's gazes in his direction.

At first the blushing Saiyan remained as he was, standing as still as a statue as he heard the fitting room door creak open. Moments later though, as he stood there shielding the gate as best as he could, he suddenly heard the sound of a playful giggle and cracked open an eye to see what the problem was. When he did, his expression then became one of shock and disbelief when he saw exactly what his girlfriend was wearing.

"I'm just messing with you," Videl chuckled, placing her hands on her hips as she saw her boyfriend's stunned gaze fixate upon her person. "So... what do you think?"

Gohan was at a loss for words. He initially hadn't thought much of the black dress his girlfriend had taken down to try on. Though it was designed specifically for formal occasions, it was tasteful and had a moderate feeling of elegance to it. It seemed like something he'd seen on several occasions on the television and reasoned that it was just another ordinary piece of clothing. Oh, how wrong he was.

The long, black silk dress hugged at his girlfriend's body like a sheet, accentuating every curve and every highlight of her form. Not only did it have a cut at the bottom, showing off her leg, the dress was also backless and hung off of her shoulders by two straps, with the front of her chest exposed by a low-cut neckline. It was also tied at the waist by a large front bow and, to complete its look, she also had on a long black shawl wrapped around her neck and draped over her arms.

Since the dress matched both her night black hair and her sapphire eyes, the girl looked just as stunning and radiant as a goddess at a party.

Swallowing nervously, Gohan attempted to slow his heart rate and keep his face from getting any redder. He then put a smile on his face and directed it towards his dazzling girlfriend. "You're gorgeous." When he saw the girl wrap her arms around her waist and throw him an inquisitive stare, the demi-Saiyan nodded affirmatively, "I mean it. You look amazing."

Feeling her own cheeks heat up, a loving smile formed across the girl's lips as she gazed back at the young warrior. "Good." She then turned away to hide her red cheeks.

It was clear she appreciated his comments, as well as the outfit she'd picked out, and in the end Gohan wound up buying her the dress. After that, the pair left the store and went on another explore of the district, where they pulled over at a bar and ordered a couple of smoothies. This was the very place where the pair decided to end their venture of the mall with a late lunch and share in some small talk. Once again, the demi-Saiyan donated his wallet to the cause, enabling them to enjoy a filling meal and a delightful beverage on the side.

Of all the many dates they'd been on in the past, after the recent string of chaos that'd engulfed their daily lives, this one had to be the most memorable outing yet.
As the sun drew into the late afternoon and the skies over Central City started to turn, beneath the enormous tower that stood as the symbol of the world famous Talos Industries, a sinister plot was slowly unfolding.

Through the metal plated, winding hallways that was the maze situated beneath the structure, with armored security guards and scientists patrolling the labyrinth, there sat an enormous chamber. Resembling a hangar, custom built to hold a large amount of equipment and machinery, this room represented one of the largest halls in the district, and was filled to the brim with a vast assortment of tech. This wasn't limited to aircraft and vehicles, but construction mechs and tanks, all of which were scattered throughout the room in an orderly fashion, and were being worked on by dozens of men.

All of the models on display here were prototypes and no two vehicles were the same. This was the floor where the creative minds of many designers and engineers came together to give birth to the future.

A few rooms over though, an area similar in design to this one had been setup away from the rest of the engineering labs. Serving as the brainchild and workstation for the boss of the company, this series of rooms and chambers was sectioned off from the main factory and, unlike the rest of the structure, was mostly empty. It was here, in a long corridor running alongside a secondary production hall, Kaiser Talos himself was standing and gazing through the window with a deep scowl on his face.

Through the clear glass of the observation deck, the object the world renowned genius was currently looking at was a craft very few had laid eyes on and one even fewer would recognize. However, for all those living out there in the cosmos and had existed around the time of the owner's reign, this saucer was of a very familiar shape and design. The white ship with yellow windows, black and purple embellishments, and white, crab-like landing gear, was none other than Cooler's spaceship, which had made landfall on earth many years ago and had since been abandoned due in part to its owner's timely demise. Bearing the exact same characteristics as both his father's and brother's vessels, the ship had fallen into the clutches of business owner Kaiser, who had ordered the vessel to be brought to his lab for study.

Already a great portion of the ship had been dismantled, with its interior having undergone analysis by both the owner of the company and a select few of his most loyal and trusted employees. Not only has the vessel served as the foundations for a lot of the company's many advances in technology, but it has also filled the role as a hobby that the boss often practiced in his downtime. Most of the days he didn't spend up in his office were spent down here in one of his many laboratories, where the boss could tinker for hours on end without interruption.

This vessel, among the many other artifacts and relics he'd dug up over the years, was one of the things he'd been fiddling with.

Hands behind his back, the man with the goatee murmured as he looked upon the spaceship and hull that'd brought terror to many across the galaxy. It was while he was facing it that flashes of a time long forgotten flickered through his mind, procuring images and memories of countless events throughout history that he'd witnessed. Too many to count and too fast to completely process, the man then frowned when the face of a familiar, white-scaled, blue-eyed beast appeared in his mind.

Mirroring the exact same creature that Baba saw in her crystal ball, this monster of nightmare towered over him with wings made of blue glass and armor tougher than any material in the known universe. The entity reared its head back and flashed its cold, fiery eyes upon its prey, spreading its cape grandly and swinging its tail across the sky, cutting away the clouds with a single stroke.

The creature was in fact a dragon, a Western one to be precise, but as to what kind exactly was a mystery. Kaiser however knew… and the memories of this creature brought a big smile to his face.

"Has it really been that long?" the magnate thought quietly to himself.

Just before he could muse over this little snippet of history that was one of the first chapters in his life, the company owner was suddenly pulled away from his daydream by the arrival of his secretary. Craning his head around, Kaiser watched as Violet, adorned in her suit and skirt, coasted to a stop alongside him with her trusted notepad in hand. Typing away at the board, the woman with the purple hair then looked up and fixed a firm gaze upon her boss and mentor.

"The staff at the East City Research & Development branch has had another successful run with the Mark VI prototype particle generator," the woman informed, referring to her chief with the utmost reverence and respect. "No breakdowns or failures in the electromagnetic buffers to report."

Kaiser nodded in acknowledgement of this report, "Good. That means I was right to infuse the titanium casing with adamantine. What were the results?"

"Four positive, two negative. They were able to create another piece of dwarf star matter out of helium atoms they'd inserted into the machine. That makes three energy cores in the last eight months," the assistant continued, looking down at her pad and pulling up another window onto the screen. She then held out the electronic pad for the president to inspect. "Doctor Yura sent the formulas through to your computer about an hour ago. She said you'd want to take a look at them yourself."

Taking the pad from his messenger, the man with the goatee scrolled through the lines of a complex equation, which had been drawn up by one of his finest researchers. After reading through the entire subject and doing the math in his head, the boss of the company grunted and handed it back to the former army Colonel, who took it without question or hesitation. "Tell her to continue the research and that I will be monitoring her progress closely. What was the weight of the dwarf star material this time around?"

"Three point five kilograms, sir."

"Tell her to boost the generator up to fifty seven percent and start from phase one. Use the cross-section fusion reactor model as a medium and channel the energy through the conductors. That should focus up the power a little bit more."

Violet looked up in surprise. "Fifty seven? Are you sure that's wise? They've been running the machine at fifteen percent for the last month."

"It's fine, Violet," Kaiser replied, frowning as he continued to glare through the glass in front of him. "I ran the calculations in my head. Tell her to gradually increase the machine's output by one point seven percent every three seconds to keep the cooling towers and the circuits from overheating."

Swallowing nervously, the woman nodded and began typing into her pad, "Yes, sir."

"When she has successfully achieved several consistent results, I'll fly over to East City and oversee the last two stages of the procedure myself," Kaiser also informed with an excited smile in play.

His eagerness put a smile on Violet's face too, who then went on to jot down his last instructions.
"Understood."

The pair then stood side by side for several seconds in silence, with the head of the company listening as his assistant typed away into the pad and the sound of machinery and men hard at work continued to echo throughout the underground complex. After hearing a couple of security guards march past them and his secretary cease her activities, the man in the goatee then looked up and narrowed his eyes.

"What's the status on our half-Saiyan friend, Son Gohan? Do you have anything to report on him?"

Violet shook her head, "Not much has occurred in the last couple of weeks since his tussle with our operative in Satan City. Recently he stopped an airliner from crashing into the south side of the metropolis and foiled a bus hijacking along with his partner Videl Satan. But aside from these events, there have been no major changes or alternations made to his routine." She then looked across at her boss seriously. "His strength, though increasing little by little, has also remained relatively unchanged."

"That much I can expect," Kaiser murmured, a smirk slowly forming across his face.

"You should also be aware that Bulma Briefs is still trying to find out information about our dear friend Vulcan… as well as anything related to the person he was supposedly taking orders from," the assistant stated, causing her boss to murmur in understanding of this fact. "She's prying into every backdoor and source available to her and her connections. Aren't you a little bit worried that she might be getting too close to figuring out the truth?"

"Bulma Briefs and her associates can dig and dig as much as they please. They won't be able to find out anything… at least, not unless I want them to. I made extra sure of that. Even if they do find out that it was us that sent Vulcan after them, there isn't much they'll be able to do about it… not without inviting severe consequences," the boss said with an unchanging expression. After tapping his finger against his hand a couple of times, he then turned to his secretary and smiled. "Perhaps we can help steer away any suspicions towards us by hosting a couple of social events… to show the world that our company and its staff has nothing but the community's best interests at heart."

His remark had Violet tilt her head curiously. "What did you have in mind?"

"A trip to Satan City… where the head of Talos Industries will pay a surprise visit to a certain Orange Star high school to… inform the students of the many wondrous career opportunities that await them at the world renowned and respected industry supergiant, following their graduation. I'll make sure to highlight repeatedly in my speech the importance of education in our society and announce that I'll also be hosting an outdoor banquet to raise money for the country's many disadvantaged primary and secondary schools, in which all of them are invited to attend," Kaiser said, the excitement in his eyes growing as he turned his attention away from the spaceship in the hangar and began marching down the corridor. As his secretary moved in step with him, the bearded inventor and genius continued to inform his assistant of his plan. "A little charity event every now and then is always a good distraction for the press and any pesky inquisitors. Politicians do it all the time."

Nodding her head in understanding, the purple-haired assistant raised her pad and began to type. "I will have the boys arrange a venue in Satan City to host the dinner for the following week." She then looked across at the man curiously. "Would you like me to invite any of the King's staff?"

"Send out as many invitations as you see fit… but make sure that you invite the senators of the East District and Hercule Satan above all others. I have some land ownership agreements I wish to discuss with them regarding my next big city project… and to use that bumbling fool as extra leverage over those money-laundering mongrels," Kaiser stated, while at the same time sparing a glance across at his helper. When he saw his secretary begin typing into her notepad, the man looked ahead of him again and smiled. "Tell them it will be an open bar. Drinks are on me."

Acknowledging his orders, Violet looked up at him once again. "And what of the school? Is there anything in particular you would like for me to arrange for your visit?"

"Oh, just the usual spiel; security, paperwork, slide shows, snacks. I'll have the principal announce my presence on stage, which I will then follow up with an invigorating speech, questions, a demonstration of our company's latest products, and then a quick mingle amongst the students," Kaiser said, beaming ahead of him as a sly smile formed across his face. "I would also like to meet with Satan City's poster girl Videl Satan, as well as her companion Son Gohan, so make extra certain that those two will be present at the reception. I have a little 'gift' I wish to give our half-Saiyan adversary… to apologize for all the trouble I've caused him and his friends thus far."

Hearing the man's tone shift when he said the word 'present' had Violet pause for a few moments. When she realized exactly what he meant by that, the woman narrowed her eyes on her boss. "What exactly do you plan to do once you meet him? Slip him some sort of nano-weapon… a bomb…?"

"Nothing so crass," the man answered as his head lifted a little, "And a bomb wouldn't do the job… not against someone like him."

Still not sure exactly what he intended to do, the woman frowned, "What about the other kids in the school? Aren't you worried you'll effect the rest of the population?"

Kaiser chuckled darkly and spared a glance down at his assistant, cutting her worried exclamations short. "My dear Violet. After all these years we've worked together, have I ever done anything for you to express any sort doubt in my actions?" The man then looked ahead of him once more and lowered his gaze. "Do not worry. I wouldn't dream of involving innocent bystanders and children in my personal affairs. I'm not that cold hearted. This business is between me and the Z-fighters… no one else." After passing the hangar and strolling further into the building, the company owner then relayed his next instructions. "Have our asset in West City on standby and ready to move in on my order."

Expression reflecting concern, the purple haired woman soon nodded in understanding and looked away, closing her eyes at the same time. "As you wish, sir."

It stood out as plain as day in Kaiser's mind.

Everyone, no matter how all-powerful they seemed, had a weakness… even the Gods.

XXX

(Several days later)

(Otherworld)

Across the sweeping, seemingly infinite skies of the heavens, orbiting high above the rainbow plains of one of the many worlds making up this part of space, everything that possessed physical form was as it should be; calm and peaceful. However, up on the Grand Kai's world, which orbited one of the many celestial bodies in this region, things had taken a startling turn for the residents of that world.

On the wide open valley making up the western half of the planet, the training regiments of every warrior in that region was suddenly and violently interrupted by a shockwave, which was immediately followed up by an earthquake. The tremors being produced by this anomaly, which continued to grow more and more intense as the seconds ticked by, rattled the entire planet to its very core, disrupting the many routines of the fighters scattered across the grass, and scaring the daylights out of the many creatures living on that planet. Heck, even the Southern and Eastern Kais overseeing their students' sessions were startled out of their wits by the unexpected irregularity.

The reason and cause of this planet-wide quake, turned out to be none other than the planet's current Otherworld Champion Son Goku, who could be seen standing out in the middle of the grass with his feet spread, fists clenched, and his head thrown back in an unbroken, deafening scream. Golden aura blasting around him along with a chain of blue lightning shooting off of his body and blonde locks, the Super Saiyan 2 continued to yell out towards the heavenly cosmos as his energy levels skyrocketed, generating so much force that it caused not only the planet, but the vacuum of the dimension to tremble under his fury.

Freaking the hell out as he often did, King Kai shifted his weight forward as he was rocked back and forth by the typhoon that was being emanated from his star pupil. "Whoa! Goku! Goku! Take it easy! At this rate, you'll split the entire planet in two!" the blue-skinned deity shouted, unaware that his fellow Kai had fallen flat onto his ass.

Grunting, the West quadrant trainer with the monocle looked up from his spot in disbelief, unable to believe the feedback he was now receiving from his rival's student. "North! This man is crazy! What in the world is he doing?!"

Goku's energy blasted across the landscape in the form of a golden typhoon, which could be seen as ripples of dust drifting across the grass. These clouds effortlessly reached the people who were watching his display from the sidelines, most of whom were attempting to hold their ground and were gaping at the dead Z-fighter in awe. Not only were the man's trainer North King and competitor West Kai looking on from a safe distance, but so were Pikkon, Olibu, Chi-Chi, Goten, Videl, Zangya, and Gohan, the latter of whom had brought his family up here for a well-deserved visit.

While most of the group were standing on that spot gaping and hanging on for dear life, particularly the man's wife Chi-Chi, Gohan and Zangya remained as they were, looking on with their arms crossed and interested looks on their faces. The former of the two had a smile pulled across his mug as he silently observed his father power up, pushing himself to a state that only one other person in their group had managed to achieve.

The demi-Saiyan's mother was currently holding onto her youngest son, who'd anchored both of them to the ground, and Videl was shielding her face from the debris and dust blasting into her from up front. If the gale force winds weren't enough to knock them off balance, the violent trembling of the ground definitely did and, as the next several seconds rolled by, they felt Goku reach the final hurdle.

After a full minute of focusing his energy and pushing it into overdrive, with one last mighty howl of agony, Goku allowed his aura to explode off of him in the form of a brilliant supernova. This flash of light had everyone surrounding him wince in surprise, moments before the flash faded and revealed the man in all his Super Saiyan glory.

The result not only had Goten and Videl gaping, but the Kais and their students as well.

Blue lightning shooting off of his aura and carving trenches into the ground around him, the full-blooded Saiyan hero was now floating an inch above a small crater, his body noticeably bulked up and his form bathed in an ethereal glow. Furthermore, not only had his face become more chiseled by the effects of his transformation, but his eyebrows had also vanished, leaving him with a very prominent brow, and his golden spiky hair had grown down to his waist, leaving a single bang beating over his forehead.

This didn't just give him a much more fearsome appearance. It'd also caused his energy to jump to a level that had all those in close proximity of him shaking and sweating in their boots.

"By the Gods," Olibu murmured, eyes widened and shimmering in awe as he gazed across at his training partner, "Are you feeling what I'm feeling, friend?"

"Yeah. It's unreal," Pikkon answered, trying not to look too shocked. "How in the world can he generate that much power?"

Wiping his face on a frilly handkerchief, the ruffled West Kai rose up from the grass and stared across at the glowing fighter with a deep frown. "He may have a lot of power, but that doesn't mean he can control it," the deity grumbled in his usual, snobbish tone of voice, before then dusting down the front of his tunic. "Kids these days… they have no respect for the old ways. It used to be about technique and skill, and focused solely on the aesthetics. But now it's all about who has the biggest muscles and who can blow up the most stuff."

Breathing a sigh of his own, the equally shaken North Kai nodded in agreement, "You can say that again, buddy."

Even though the amount of power radiating off of Goku was biblical enough to stun the entire planet, the blue-skinned deity was well past this stage of the process. After all, not only had he seen transformations like this more times than he could count, but he'd also seen this particular metamorphosis in another from his quadrant, and that person was standing only a few yards to his left.

Unable to believe what she was sensing either, Videl swallowed the saliva in her mouth nervously, "He… He did it. Goku actually did it."

"Wow," Goten exclaimed in amazement, also feeling completely overwhelmed by what he was sensing. "That is so awesome. Go dad!"

The fact that all of their clothing and hair was messed up by the gale made the impact of the scenario much more pronounced.

Upon feeling he'd finally achieved stability, the adult Saiyan looked across at his eldest and smirked in his direction. "Well? What do you think? Pretty cool, huh, son?"

Gohan, having also had to hold his ground at the closing stages of the man's transformation, grinned and nodded back at him, "Oh yeah. It looks great." He then placed his hands on his hips and tilted his head. "So this is what a Super Saiyan 3 looks like?"

"You have to admit, it's a hell of a lot different seeing the transformation on another person as opposed to transforming yourself, huh?" Zangya remarked, earning a nod of agreement from the demi-Saiyan standing next to her. She then looked at the boy and smiled. "Be honest with me. What does it feel like? Does it hurt?"

The young warrior chuckled, "Like a bitch." He was sure to say this as quietly as possible so that his mum or brother didn't catch wind of him. When he heard the Hera scoff, Gohan then took a few steps forward and nodded towards his father. "So… how was transforming for you, dad? Being dead with no actual muscles or limits to hold you back, it couldn't have been as bad for you as it was for me when I jumped for the first time under my own power."

Aura still warping around him brightly and a spark of electricity running up his front, Goku raised an eyebrow. "You want the truth?" When he saw his son nod, the man shrugged, "It felt like my blood was on fire…" He then laughed and scratched the top of his head through his spikey locks in his typical, boyish manner, which looked really comedic in his transformed state. "That is… if I had any blood. It still hurt a lot though."

"Yeah. I could tell," Gohan said, smiling as he got a good bead on his father's power level. Even though he didn't have a live body, he could still sense energy clear as day up here. "So far I've transformed into a Super Saiyan 3 at least two dozen times now. Trust me. You'll get used to it."

Looking down at his arms, the man flexed his fingers and biceps. "And… does it get any easier?" Goku asked, drawing on his previous experiences with previous transformations. He looked up towards his son and quirked his brow. "I can tell how taxing this can be on the body, what with the amount of power that's currently being put out. The transformation itself was also brutal."

"It's just like with everything else. The more you train with it, the better you get," the demi-Saiyan answered, hands still on his hips as he threw his dad a cheeky grin. "And sooner or later, all of that hard work will pay off in the end."

The full-blooded Saiyan smiled, "So then… what happens now?" With the amount of energy burning through his veins, you could assume the man was pumped and ready for some action.

Sensing his father's eagerness for a scrap, Gohan took on a competitive look of his own and, hands still on his hips, cocked his neck to the side. "Since you can transform to a Super Saiyan 3, how about we take it for a test run?" Without even a moment of hesitation, the demi-Saiyan jumped straight to Super Saiyan 2, a power up that was marked by a loud 'bang' and a flash of light. Golden aura blasting around him with blue currents of electricity dancing across his skin, the blonde haired young man then brought his fists up, held them above his head and, focusing his energy, let out a loud yell of effort.

This was immediately followed by a second, even more powerful shockwave when his aura intensified and his energy skyrocketed. In the blink of an eye, his eyebrows vanished and his hair grew right down his back, whipping on the wind as he went straight to max power.

His own transformation, though not as intense as his father's, still put stunned looks on the faces of everyone who was watching. Even Chi-Chi held a hand over her mouth in shock.

"Oh, wow. They can both do that?" the mother murmured. Obviously, she was still getting used to the process of identifying the different forms of Super Saiyan and, this being one of the first times she'd seen the third level, you could understand her surprise. "That's amazing."

Goten, grinning widely, threw his fists out in a loud and gutsy cheer, "Yeah! Dad and big brother look so cool!"

Beads of sweat running down her temple, Zangya grinned nervously, "Yeah. They sure do." She then gulped a little and tapped her foot uneasily. "Not to mention scary. The amount of ki that was sitting in one place was unreal.

Not to mention inspiring. Looking at the father and son duo, the orange haired woman allowed her more positive emotions to take over and a warm smile to grace her lips. Watching her most regular training partner stand out in the middle of the valley and clad in an armor of gold, not only lifted her spirits, but also made her want to join him in the throngs of power as well.
Of course, she didn't have a transformation state that could reach the same level that he'd reached... at least... not yet.

"Maybe... if I keep working on it..." the orange haired woman thought to herself.

As the two Saiyans stood across from one another, sizing each other up and letting their transformations burn away, Gohan then glanced behind him and grinned at their audience. "Don't worry. This won't take long." He then turned to his girlfriend, who'd also started smiling again as she and the others gazed across at him. "I'd hang on to my seat though."

Hearing him clearly through the crackling of their auras, the teen nodded and, along with Goten and Chi-Chi, took a big step back.

Turning to stare at his father once again, the young Saiyan in the orange and blue gi grinned, "Ready whenever you are."

The former hero nodded and grinned at his boy. "You know... we should really start trying to dress a little bit differently from now on," the man said, pointing between their two identical transformed states, as well as their identical uniforms. "Given how much you and I look alike in this form, people might be finding it difficult to tell the two of us apart."

Looking at his dad's orange and blue gi, the same one he'd been wearing for the past seven years, Gohan chuckled and nodded in agreement, "Yeah. I suppose you're right."

"But that's something to worry about for another time," Goku declared, clenching his fists and bringing them up into a horse riding stance. "Come on.. Let's have some fun."

"Yeah." Without another word or a moment of hesitation, the smiling teenager's expression tightened and his aura blasted around him at a fiercer rate, causing blue chains of lightning to shoot off of him.

His old man reciprocating his actions, the pair of them then took off from their respective places and charged at each other faster than their audience could track. In the blink of an eye, the duo intercepted one another in the center, their fists slamming into their opponent's and locking the father and son in a knuckle-to-knuckle grappling match. The impact of their collision punching an enormous crater into the floor and producing a violent shockwave, the Saiyan fighters gritted their teeth and at each other. Their auras fused together into one at the proximity they'd reached, causing their cyclone of power to converge on a single point.

The Kais and the pair's families looked on in shock as a massive gale started blasting off of the martial artists and across the valley, forcing all of them, including Zangya, to cover their faces and hold their ground. Then, just as the pair's grappling match began reaching its climax, the two warriors suddenly vanished with a clap of thunder, their golden forms leaving the valley floor and shooting up into the sky.

In a matter of moments, the heavens above the Grand Kai's world became filled with the sound of battle, as shockwaves powerful enough to turn mountains into dust rippled through the clouds.

For the next half an hour, the father and son spent fighting it out across the celestial plains that was their battlefield. While every once in a while they brought it back down to ground level, causing a ludicrous amount of damage as a result, the combatants spent most of their time off world and inside the clouds making up Otherworld. However, despite their altitude, this didn't stop the force of their attacks from rattling the small training world beneath them, which soon drew the attention of the Grand Kai and the rest of the fighters currently on station there.
The rock star of a guardian, along with his associates and staff members, watched from the edge of the valley as the two Saiyans sparred above the estate, clashing fists and trading blows of near equal strength and speed.

Having never had such powerful martial artists on his front lawn before, you could see why the Grand Kai was so invested in their duel. His interest ranged from amazed to frightened, as every blow the two landed on one another shook the planet to its core. Their fight was so out of this world and so unnatural that the Kais feared one misfire would lead to the destruction of half the region.

But as the minutes passed and the duel raged on, the intensity of the fight faded away, and both father and son soon became exhausted from fatigue.

Training alone to master Super Saiyan 3 was one thing. But fighting in the form and taking on damage from an opponent of the same class was another.

Soon enough, both Goku and Gohan found themselves on ground zero once again, on their hands and knees, and panting heavily from the damages of the fight. Having taken more hits due to his son being the strongest out of the two of them, the father wiped the sweat from his brow and looked up from his position on the floor, where he saw the demi-Saiyan standing with his arms at his sides, and also looking a little bit puffed out. When the pair exchanged looks, the older combatant grinned widely and allowed his form to dissipate, leaving him kneeling in his base state.

"Not bad, son," the dad exclaimed, rising to his feet to place his hands on his hips, "Excellent form… and not a single wasted movement at all. Your defenses and parries have gotten so much bet-… whoa." The man then wobbled when his legs nearly buckled, prompting him to stumble forward and slam a foot into the ground. Gasping in relief, he then turned his gaze upwards and grinned sheepishly at his surprised son, his expression reflecting nothing but exhaustion. "Heh. That was close."

Looking even better than his father in terms of appearances, the less damaged young man grinned and also allowed his form to fade. Dropping to his first Super Saiyan state, the teen breathed out and ran a hand through his hair, ridding himself of the sheen of sweat that'd accumulated, "Watch out for that first step after powering down. It's a real doozy."

"No kidding. Geez. I nearly passed out for a second," Goku laughed, dusting his torn pants down and staggering forward. He hissed when his muscles screamed in protest, "Even as a dead man, I can still feel the aches and pains of overtraining like I did down on earth. Who would have guessed?"

Gohan raised an eyebrow at his comment, "I thought you couldn't get tired when you're dead."
Sure, his father had, in essence, become both immortal and ageless in his current form. Considering these facts, the young hybrid also fell under the assumption that a dead warrior didn't need sleep, rest, or any other necessities required to keep the body… well… 'alive'.

When the adult martial artist finally made his way over to where his oldest son was standing, Goku took a moment to catch his breath and smiled at his young scholar. "I may have a physical body to train with, but it still feels the same stitches and cramps it did when it had real blood flowing through it." He then jabbed the teen in the chest in a show of fatherly affection and good will. "But that's only on the surface. Even if my current body could take twenty four hours of nonstop training, there's no way my mind would be able to. I may be tough, but even a man like me still needs to lie down, close my eyes and recharge every few hours." He then grinned widely once again, "Why do you think I still eat so much?"
The demi-Saiyan shared in his dad's reverie, "Even in the afterlife your body still needs a Saiyan's daily intake of food to keep on going."

"That's right. And it's just like I told you before; rest is an important part of a fighter's training. It's what Master Roshi and Kami taught me when I was growing up. You can push yourself as much as you like, but there's always a limit to how much you can put out in a series of sessions; both mentally and physically. Sooner or later, you're going to need to slow down," Goku informed his son, reminding him of one of the most crucial aspects he'd previously taught the teen about fighting. When he saw his son's approving stare looking back at him, the older Saiyan folded his arms and beamed. "There's no such thing as perfect strength. If you fight, you will always face repercussions."

"I know dad," the young Super Saiyan said, meeting his dad's gaze before then looking over his shoulder. "You told me that a long time ago." When they saw their family and friends watching and waiting for them on the hill across the way, Gohan turned back around and nodded in that direction. "Come on. I'm sure those guys want to find out how it all went out here."

"Yeah. And I think King Kai might want to have a word or two to say about our fight as well. Heh.
I'm definitely not looking forward to that lecture," Goku laughed nervously, patting his son on the shoulder as they both began walking side by side across the plain. As they strolled, taking it slow on account of one of them still being a little bit heavy footed from the spar, the father then looked over at his son and frowned, "How goes the search for your enemy in hiding? Is he still causing you problems?"

Hearing this question from his father, the young man shook his head and shared with him another troubled glance. "It's been quiet so far and nothing bad has happened over the last several weeks, but we still haven't found anything else about the guy. Heck, even Baba is coming up with nothing and she's a real whiz at this kind of stuff."

Nodding in understanding, the worried parent looked ahead of him as well. "If a man is able to shield himself from even Baba's magic, then it's safe to say that he is definitely no amateur.
Whoever he is… or whoever she is… there's no doubt they're going to be causing a lot of problems in the future… especially if they're sending armored assassins after you." Feeling a troubled sweat trickle down his face, Goku then looked across at his boy and gazed at him seriously. "Be careful down there, son… and watch your back."

Gohan, processing his dad's words and sensing his concerns, nodded affirmatively, "Don't worry. I will."

As they continued to march and drew closer and closer to their group of friends, the full-blooded Saiyan couldn't help but spare a few furtive glances between them and his son. After a few more looks, particularly towards the pair of women his boy had come to associate with over the years, a mischievous smile soon formed, which then led to the teenager looking across at his father.

When he saw the older man grin, Gohan blinked, "Huh? What's up, dad?"

Leaning over, the spiky haired hero then spoke, "So… I see Zangya and Videl are looking nice and happy today. Have you figured out which one you're going to marry yet?"

Almost instantly after hearing that question, the demi-Saiyan face planted the floor in shock and slid across the earth for a few yards. When the dust eventually settled, Gohan then stood up, turned to his father, and showed off the full-body skid mark that ran from the top of his head to the bottom of his pant legs, and the bright red glow beating across his face.
"WHERE IN THE WORLD DID THAT COME FROM!!?" the teen shouted, clearly flustered at the outrageous inquisition.

Goku laughed in amusement and waved a hand in front of him defensively. "Hey now, come on, son. I'm only kidding."

Sometimes the demi-Saiyan wondered if that was true.

XXX

(That Monday)

It was midday during school period and the atmosphere at Orange Star High was buzzing with excitement. The corridors of the main building were filled to the brim with students all making their way down to the main hall, all of whom were expected to attend a very special ceremony. It was for this very reason why everyone was being so well-behaved, even the more disobedient ones. However, neither the affair nor the mood of the student body was going to stop the local gang of troublemakers, whom everyone affectionately referred to as Videl's Crew, from having a pleasant conversation on the way down to the big meet.

"Oh my God, this is going to be so great!" Erasa cheered brightly, the look in her eyes glowing as brightly as her hair. "I can't believe that we're all going to see the legendary Kaiser Talos give a speech at our school in person! Ooh, I can't wait!"

"Geez. Cool your jets, Erasa," Videl groaned, looking across at her friend with a slightly nervous expression in play. "If you keep carrying on like that, you're going to give yourself a heart attack."

Acting as though she didn't hear the girl's words at all, the blonde quickly turned to the city's poster girl with stars in her eyes. "Come on, Vi! How often do we get to see a real life, big time celebrity at our school?"

Touya, who was walking alongside his girlfriend Yuki, glanced across at the blonde with a half-smile in play. "Well, if we're being realistic here… pretty much every day. I mean…" He then gestured across at the raven haired crime fighter the bubbly reporter-in-training was speaking to. "We have the 24th Junior Division Martial Arts Champion and the daughter of Hercule Satan walking alongside us."

"Not to mention the 25th Junior Division Martial Arts Champion standing right next to her," Yuki also added, pointing to the demi-Saiyan whom their beloved poster girl was attached to the hip to. "That's two cards on the first draw."

"Not to mention those two cards also happen to be a pair," Sharpener interjected with an amused grin drawn across his lips. He then raised a finger, "The most famous pair in the school, I might add."

"Well. Yeah. We have these two, for sure," Erasa exclaimed, at the same time waving her hand flippantly in their direction. She then gestured to them in a grandiose manner, "But that's the thing. We all know these guys. They're not some well polished trophies that have been put on display in some case to be ogled at by the public… or just a couple of people we've randomly bumped into on the streets." She then wrapped her arm around Videl and hugged her in an affectionate, BFF manner, "They're our best friends and classmates; people we've developed an incredibly strong bond with. There's no way we can view them as anything else."

This remark earned a cheerful grin from Gohan and a warm smile from Videl, the latter of whom hugged her friend back in response to her remarks. "Thanks, Erasa. That's really nice to hear from you."

The cheerful blonde nodded judiciously, "You're most welcome."

"But Touya does have a point. You guys aren't exactly novices when it comes to meeting famous people. In fact, you guys have shaken hands with a whole bunch of them in the past," Videl commented, at the same time unwrapping her friend's arm from around her neck to look across at the rest of their crew. "Why should Kaiser be any different from them?"

"She just likes meeting new people, that's all," Gohan answered, drawing the attention of his peers as he beamed at them in his characteristic manner. "It's just one of the many things she loves to do in her free time: chatting over the phone, making friends, hanging out with the ones she knows, going out to the shops, playing games… and keeping in touch with the latest trends, news, and gossip."

"Aww," Erasa exclaimed, reaching up to poke the handsome boy in the cheek, "You know me so well, country boy."

The demi-Saiyan grinned at her despite the girl's finger being pushed into his face. "That's because I've gotten to spend so much time with you, Videl and everybody else. Hell, I've been hanging out with you guys so much that knowing what each of your individual interests and quirks are has become second nature to me. Your fascination with celebrities and famous people is definitely at the top of that list."

Erasa giggled, pulled away, and put her hands behind her back. "Well, when you're studying to become a reporter some day, you've got to keep a close eye on all the big fish swimming around out there in the world."

Yuki chuckled as she shot the blonde an odd glance with her doe-eyes and doe smile, "There's an original excuse if I ever heard one."

"And an acceptable one at that," Touya finished, sharing a shrug with his anthropomorphic girlfriend. "Kaiser is a pretty famous guy and a big shot toy maker. We all know that."

"Pretty famous guy?" Eraser scoffed, looking across at the sportsman with a look that was a cross between amusement and disbelief. "You think a man as big and powerful as Kaiser is just 'pretty famous'?"

"Oh boy," Sharpener chuckled from the sidelines as he slipped his hands into his pockets, "Here it comes."

"Kaiser Talos is the owner and founder of the second largest research and development conglomerate in the world, Talos Industries, and is one of the wealthiest, powerful, and most generous billionaires alive. His work on quantum engineering, medicine and sustainable energy is unparalleled, and has led to some of the greatest innovations and discoveries in the history of the human race. It's no wonder his company is the only monopoly in the world that can compete with the likes of Capsule Corp," Erasa raved, filling the corridor with her exclamations that all of her friends leant an ear to hearing. Upon ranting over this topic with a flare and passion no one else could match, the blonde then waved her hand dismissively and added her last bit as a side note. "That's not even counting the fact that he's one of the top ten smartest people on the face of the planet and donates millions of zeni to charity, as well as unaccountable resources to helping the poor."
Hearing this drew a nod of acknowledgement from the demi-Saiyan walking with Videl under his arm. "Sounds like he's a very kind man. I wouldn't mind actually meeting him face to face."

"His efforts and donations have helped a lot of people across the country, and has rebuilt entire communities that'd been ravaged by sickness, famine and war," Yuki informed, beaming across at her friends with a smile. "Given his character and laundry list of accomplishments, I think your assessment on him is spot on."

"Well then, I guess we're going to find out for ourselves exactly what kind of a person he is when he finally gets up on stage," Videl stated, knowing for certain what a lot of celebrities were like when addressing the public. "His presentation today should be more than enough for us to get a feel for his character."

All those who were walking alongside the girl could agree with her statement. But as they continued marching along with the rest of the crowd, Gohan's head then perked up when he remembered something and he turned his attention towards Sharpener. This was where the demi-Saiyan put a big grin on his face and addressed the man in a very sly, very Bulma-like manner. "Speaking of breaking news in Orange Star High, there's another bit of gossip I'm sure a few of you might be interested in hearing…" He then shared this practiced look with Erasa. "You probably already know this, but our friend is no longer one of the most eligible bachelors on the premises anymore…"

Blinking a couple of times, the blonde teenager then realized what he was inferring and quickly turned to the jock. "That's right! Sharpener's got a girlfriend!"

At that, almost every single person walking in that formation made a simultaneous 'ooh' sound and looked in the direction of their physically adept classmate. In a matter of moments, they saw the teenager in question hunch over and form an expression that was easily akin to embarrassment for someone of his personality.

A few seconds later, Sharpener replied, "Alright. There's no need for that. It's nothing for any of you guys to be losing your heads over."

"Who is she?" Touya asked, completely ignoring his friend's remarks. "Is she cute?"

"What's her name?" Gohan asked. "Does she go to this school? If yes, what year level is she in?"

"Is she a human or a hybrid?" Yuki asked, leaning over her boyfriend to interrogate the blonde standing on the outside of their arrangement. "Is she a local?"

"Where did you meet her?" Videl asked next.

"Is she allergic to shellfish?" Touya asked a second time, drawing an odd look from most of the kids there, particularly Sharpener.

"What the hell kind of question is that?" the jock asked, earning a cheeky grin from the boy in glasses, who then shrugged at his friend. Shaking his head at the man's stupidity, the long-haired track star scratched his head and looked away. "Well… to answer your questions, Sena is a transfer student just in from Red Star Senior College on the other side of town, and is in the same year level as us. She's a red haired girl, really good looking, and has a spunky attitude to boot. Even though she's new, she's already made a name for herself on the fencing team."

"Oh. So she's a sporty type as well, huh?" Yuki asked, finding an interest in this information.

"Yeah, and not just in sword fighting either. She's also super good at judo and has won several championships in middle school," Sharpener added proudly.

Lips turning upwards into a grin, Videl looked towards the ceiling with a grin, "I'm starting to like this girl already."

"I'll introduce her to you guys when we get down to the hall," Sharpener stated, looking more excited at the thought of getting his friends to meet the mysterious young woman who had managed to bury her claws into his heart. "Since I know how hospitable you guys can be, I know you numbskulls will hit it off with each other just fine."

"That sounds awesome," Erasa chirped, grinning across at her blushing friend to see him look back in her direction. "I really want see the kind of girl who was able to capture the heart of our romantically challenged sports superstar."

"I bet she's tough," Gohan commented, beaming at the blonde man to see him shrug while Videl and Erasa nodded in agreement. "If there's one thing I know about Sharpener, it's that he likes girls who can kick him in the backside."

The raven haired crime fighter leaning into his arm snickered, "He's one of those people who gets pleasure from pain."

"Hey! I object to that!" the jock spoke up, scowling at his thoroughly entertained classmates and companions. "What? You think I get my jollies from getting my ass beat?"

Sliding in on this exchange of friendly banter, Touya leaned forward and threw his fellow sportsman a sly grin at the same time the rest of his friends did. "I do."

"No one asked you!" the jock snapped, blushing in frustration and taking a swing at his rival, only to see him dodge and laugh.

While the two sportsmen grappled, with Yuki laughing on the sidelines, as Gohan, Videl and Erasa watched the scene unfold, the demi-Saiyan walking in between them suddenly lurched forward when someone stealthily jumped onto his back. Feeling a set of arms lock around his neck, the teen quickly looked over his shoulder in surprise to see the familiar, friendly face of Lime grinning back at him.

As soon as she straddled her friend, the teenager giggled, "Surprise, Gohan-kun!"

"Hey. Good morning, Lime," the hero laughed, not bothering to fight the girl as she held onto his shoulders nice and tight. "Where've you been hiding this whole time?"

"Oh, just a few lockers back… waiting for you to let your guard down," the brown haired girl replied, sticking her tongue out at him. "Now I've got you… and I ain't lettin' go."

Greeting each other in their usual, friendly manner, the young Saiyan allowed his fellow villager from the mountains to remain pasted to his spine, hanging off of his neck like a backpack. During that time, Videl and Erasa couldn't help but look upon the duo enviously as their schoolmate from another year level nuzzled their spiky haired idol. When she eventually hopped off of the warrior, relief and stability quickly returned to their ranks, and the group continued following the herd down to the hall where they would be receiving their school's visitor. Videl and Erasa were sure to secure their spots on either side of Gohan, and made doubly certain to huddle in close to him to prevent Lime from hogging all of the glory.

About halfway down the hall, Sharpener excused himself from the group to head off to the restroom, allowing his friends to carry on without him. Though this puzzled a few members of their troop, namely Gohan and Lime, everybody else had a sneaking suspicion as to why their blonde haired friend disappeared so readily. The girls shared mischievous grins with one another, as they all knew the real reason why the boy had retreated so quickly.

He wanted to go meet up with his would-be, mystery girlfriend before introducing her to the rest of his friends. No doubt to warn them about their shenanigans.

When the group eventually arrived at the foyer where the presentation was set to be held, every one of them was surprised at the room they found waiting for them. Everywhere they looked across the center, from the stage to the seats, they saw security guards dressed in suits posted all over, with equipment and machinery built specifically by Talos Industries on display on numerous temporary stations. There were also banners with the company's logo inscribed on them hanging high up in the rafters, in a way that made this seem like a military rally or a presidential fundraiser.

After the troop eventually found their way to their seats directly in the center of the procession and watched as the rest of their peers followed shortly afterwards, they were able to get a full view and appreciation of the setup. Over the next several minutes following that, the boys and girls of the institute then waited patiently for the assembly to begin, and occupied themselves by admiring the various inventions and marvels spread out across the hall before them.

As Gohan, Videl, Lime and Erasa enjoyed a very spirited conversation about an upcoming gaming convention, and Touya and Yuki also busied themselves by talking about a place they could go to on their next date, the hall of three-hundred plus students was effectively silenced by the appearance of the district's overseer. Approaching the podium with her hands behind her back, the principal, an anthropomorphic Siberian tiger in a blue suit and skirt, stood before the school and locked eyes with the sea of teenagers. The moment she appeared, the hall went dead quiet and all of the students rose out of their seats in a show of respect.

"Good afternoon everyone," the woman greeted, her voice firm and amplified by the microphone in front of her. A smile also framed her rosy red lips. "I'm sure you're all very excited about this afternoon's assembly, because we have a very special and important guest joining us today. He is a man known all over the world for his big heart, his efforts in helping the disenfranchised, and his innovations in the fields of technology and medicine, which have provided aid and comfort for millions of people across the globe. His efforts have been an inspiration for many and a guiding light for more to follow, so be sure to give him a warm and well-deserved welcome to our ranks. Remember, all of you are representing Orange Star High school, so I expect each and every one of you to show the proper respect and civility you would show any new member and visitor to our community." Once she was certain she'd said her piece and that all of the students had heard her loud and clear, Ms. Valentine then took a step to the side and held her hand out towards the edge of the stage. "Now… without further ado, I would like all of you to welcome Sir Kaiser Talos!"

Almost immediately the entire hall erupted into rapturous applause as the big man himself marched up onto the stage from behind the adjacent curtain, where a couple of suit-wearing sentries could be seen standing guard.

The audience of teenagers cheered loudly and blew the man whistles as he waved to them. When he eventually arrived at the podium and gripped hold of the edges for a secure position, Gohan and Videl saw a person they just did not expect.

This Kaiser fellow was dressed in a suit and shoes, for sure. Though it was oriental in its design and had been neatly pressed for the occasion, this was nothing out of the ordinary for someone of his position and standing to wear. No. What surprised the demi-Saiyan and Videl most about the person when they saw him appear on stage, was the look he had on his face and the air he conveyed when he took position behind the pedestal. He had all the bearings of a gentleman, and as he waved back at the people gathered in front of him, all of whom were cheering him on, the company owner smiled in an incredibly reserved and tame manner, and did his best to return their enthusiastic greetings with a thumbs-up and a V-sign. Hell, despite being a handsome devil, with slicked-back hair, and a tastefully trimmed mustache and beard, he didn't even try to wink at anyone or make a show of himself.

He came across as just some ordinary guy who needed to show his face to the public. It actually put a smile on Gohan and Videl's faces to see that.

"Thank you. Thank you, so much. You're all very kind," Kaiser exclaimed, waving his hands toward the crowd in a gesture for them to settle. "Please. Sit down." In a matter of moments, silence fell over the mass of onlookers, which was quickly followed by the entire collection of students sitting down at once. Upon hearing the last chair squeak into place as the crowd got comfortable inside the hall, the man in the suit beamed and nodded towards his audience in acknowledgement. "I have to say, it is a real honor, a privilege, and a pleasure to be standing up here on this stage, ready to give a speech to all of you young, hard working men and women. Looking across this sea of faces and seeing all of you smiling back at me, I see reflected in all of you virtuous spirits aspiring to make something of yourselves some day. If life has taught me anything about the human spirit, it is that ambition is the element that guides us along the path of righteousness and passion is the fuel that drives us forward, compelling us to reach our desired goals." Breaking off into a few seconds of pause, the man with the goatee then breathed a sigh of relief and tugged on his collar humorously. "Man… and the boys back at the lab said I couldn't give a good introduction. How about that?"

His question drew a collective laugh from the crowd, including Gohan and his friends, all of whom were listening intently. Hearing the man clear his throat and chuckle a few seconds later, they then watched as he gripped both sides of the plinth and, straightening his back, faced the crowd with a warm smile and a firm gaze.

"But all kidding aside, I'd like to take a moment to get a little bit more serious now," the bearded company owner began, before then raising his hand in a very Bill Clinton manner. "Many people believe life is easy and that we can coast through it without a care in the world. We've grown to think in our young lives that things are simply… handed over to us on a silver platter. Trophies… medals… commendations… awards… diplomas… jobs. Many of you may be thinking to yourselves that by kicking back and taking it easy that I can just be awarded on my presence and participation in any kind of event. While in some cases that is true, the hard fact of life is that there is no award for just being around. No one can achieve anything, even a basic cost of living allowance, by simply sitting around and not doing any work. That privilege has to be earned." Kaiser then steeled his face and gripped the podium tightly once again. "I am a man who came from humble beginnings… someone who started out life as a starry-eyed youngster from a far-off country town… with a dream of changing the world and making it a better place. To get to where I wanted to be, I worked hard, I studied hard, I listened to my teachers, and I strove to be the best that I could possibly be. And no matter what obstacles stood in my way, I overcame them with a combination of determination and perseverance."

When he noticed the number of approving and interested looks being directed at him from the many teenagers across the large hall, the man then stepped to the side of the podium and grabbed the microphone. Pushing back his hair and adjusting his collar, he then continued to address his eager audience with a smile on his face and enthusiasm in his voice.

"I believe that education is one of the most important aspects of our society and is a subject that is continuously being addressed by both governments and communities across the globe. My schooling was what helped get me to where I am today, and I think that it is up to all of us, students, teachers, parents, businessmen, officials and politicians alike, to support our schools and to encourage our children's education in every possible way that we can," Kaiser informed, once again raising his fist and clenching it tightly, showing just how passionate he was about this position. When he heard a positive murmur start up amongst his audience, the man with the goatee then stepped further to the side and began making his way over to the edge of the stage. As soon as he did, he pulled out a clicker from his pocket and pressed it, causing the overhead screen to lower and the lights to dim, indicating the coming of a slideshow. "One of Talos Industries' main focuses is supporting schools, early development centers and child care institutes across the continent, to ensure that all children and young adults receive the best in quality education they can afford. To show you exactly what kind of provisions and programs we provide at my company, here is a little informational video that I'm sure all of you will find to be quite insightful…"

And so his presentation portion of the billionaire's speech began. He went on to talk about all of the extra-curricular opportunities and programs that his business provided for various schools across the world, as well as the numerous accomplishments he and his organization have achieved on the side of education. Following up on this, the man then went on to talk about the marvelous career paths that his corporation had in store for students aspiring to move up in the world, and presented them with a whole list of areas they could apply for at the end of their graduation, and the prerequisites that were necessary. He also informed them of scholarships for all those looking to study abroad in preparation for a higher tier position in his company.

These were all fine and dandy, but then he started getting into the real thick of the subject, and that was presenting all of the latest inventions his business had on the market. Not only did he show off a new type of aerial transport and a prototype engine powered solely on food scraps and rubbish, he also introduced to the kids a whole bunch of smaller inventions that have made lives across the world so much more convenient. This included a new type of phone rivaling one of Capsule Corp's latest models, an instant coffee heater, a blood transfusion machine that helped cure people of Hepatitis by switching out the fluids in their bodies, a new laptop with the latest software patches, and an instant plant grower.

Once all the displays were over and Kaiser returned to the stage, he once again emphasized the importance of education, before going on to say how he was hosting a charity banquet in a couple of weeks time. After all that was said and done, he thanked the audience for their attendance and received a standing ovation in return. Sometime afterwards, the teenagers in the foyer were dismissed by their principal for lunch, and while most of the people their vacated into the hallways, those who lagged behind were unexpectedly graced with the presence of the billionaire philanthropist himself, who came down from behind the stage to interact with his fans and supporters.

Gathering in the middle of the isle, Gohan, Videl and the others of their troop watched Kaiser from several yards away as he spoke with several of the students and shook hands with them. As he was setting up to have selfies taken with the girls, the demi-Saiyan smiled in the magnate's direction and nodded in approval.

"He seems like a really great guy," the spiky haired hero exclaimed. "He's calm, collected, he speaks highly of all of the people working at his company… and he's really approachable as well."

"The same can be said for a lot of other celebrities in the world," Videl added, her arms wrapped around Gohan's as she looked across at the billionaire along with her group. "The only difference here is that Kaiser is a businessman… not a rock star or an actor."

"Kaiser is regarded as one of the most powerful and influential people on the planet, who has shaken hands with leaders and kings across dozens of nations from here to the West Coast. Though his company isn't as popular or as wide spread as Capsule Corp's, Talos Industries is definitely one of the most active, daring and intrepid in the service. It helps that they are being spearheaded by an equally bold director," Touya said with a proud smile in play. Folding his arms as he watched the kingpin of the corporation chat with the girls and boys gathered around him, the sportsman then glanced across at his girlfriend with a look of amazement. "Can you believe that he climbed the highest mountain in the world just to scout the perfect location for a space elevator?"

This was just a concept though. They were still working out all the details and design ideas, something that the boss wanted to share with the school as part of his post-graduate induction program.

The doe-girl Yuki smiled and shrugged, "I guess eccentric billionaire businessmen are like that sometimes… particularly if you've got enough money to buy out several cities at the same time, just to have all of the roads and highways redone with eighty percent fewer traffic lights."

"That's a really awesome way to reduce roadblocks and jams," Erasa remarked, smiling agreeably with Gohan and the others. "It makes it a heck of a lot easier to get to where I'm going."

"Especially since you still drive like a madwoman," Lime added with a teasing grin.

This earned a mock glare from the blonde standing across from her, "Shut it, Lime. You're no better at driving than I am."

"At least I haven't been pulled over yet for going ten miles over the speed limit." The brown haired girl flicked her nose towards Erasa in an all-knowing manner. "Remember that ride we took a few days ago?"

"That? That was just a cop pulling over random cars for inspection, that's all."

"Yeah. Sure. Just keep telling yourself that."

"Girls, please," Videl breathed exasperatedly as she held her hand out and glared between the two bickering friends. When she saw them stop but continue fuming at one another, the crime fighter continued, "If there's ever a time for you to be acting like a couple of kids… this isn't it."

She was so set in pushing the two tigresses apart that she missed the snickers from Touya and Yuki behind her.

Grinning down at the sight of his girlfriend breaking up the squabble, Gohan then looked back across at Kaiser to see the entrepreneur bid farewell to the people around him. Over the last forty five minutes they'd gotten to learn about this man's history, his skills, and his character, as well as learn about the ins-and-outs of the enormous company he ran. Though the demi-Saiyan already had intimidate knowledge of what the atmosphere of a world renowned corporation was like, along with how the staff and president went about doing their work, seeing another business owner outside of Bulma Briefs and hearing the ideas he had to share with them was a surprising breath of fresh air. At least in this case, the man didn't have to juggle responsibilities between dealing with a multi-billion zeni company and a full-blooded Saiyan Prince and a half-Saiyan child at the same time.

Before the group could continue voicing their opinions over the celebrity, they were suddenly caught completely off guard when the intrepid billionaire himself approached them. Ambling down the aisle accompanied by his secretary and bodyguards, the man in the goatee grinned when he set his sights on the teenagers in front of him and lifted his arms in amazement.
"Now this is a real honor," Kaiser exclaimed in an enthusiastic tone of voice, "I never expected to run into the daughter of the World Marital Arts Champion and Savior, Hercule Satan." Stopping directly in front of the girl in question, the man placed a hand over his chest and bowed to her in respect. "Ms Videl… it is a real pleasure to finally be able to meet you in person." The man then humbly extended a hand to her. "I've heard a great many things about you."

At first surprised by the company boss's friendly greeting, the baffled Videl quickly realized what was happening and, removing her arm from around Gohan, brushed her hand against her shirt before seizing the billionaire's palm. "The pleasure is all mine… sir?" She then balked a little when she felt her hand gently pulled towards the magnate and felt him kiss the back of her knuckles in a gentleman's greeting.

Upon doing so, Kaiser then looked up at her from his bent over position and smiled. "Everything they say about you is true. You truly are as fierce and as beautiful as they made you out to be in the news; the embodiment of femininity and virtue… a person who is doing everything in her power to make this world a better place."

Blinking a couple of times, the raven haired teen grinned nervously. "Oh… y-yeah. That… sort of sounds a bit like me."

Kaiser chuckled, continuing to hold her hand in his like a piece of valuable treasure. "There's no need to be so modest. A hero is allowed to acknowledge the praise given to them from the people they protect. It's all part and parcel, after all." The billionaire then beamed at her in a very charming manner. "I can imagine a radiant soul such as yourself would receive an enormous amount of gratitude, commendation and respect from the public, especially one that you so passionately defend."

Another anxious chuckle came from the girl standing in front of him. "Well, I do my best. But honestly, I don't do it for any kind of reward. I fight to protect the safety and wellbeing of Satan City and its citizens… because it's the right thing to do."

Unbeknownst to the raven haired crime fighter, Gohan, who was standing behind her and watching the man's interactions with his girlfriend, frowned a little at how close the guy was getting to her. Erasa too also shared a similar expression of distaste, but remained quiet and courteous as her friend continued to trade pleasantries with the pioneer and entrepreneur.

"And so it is," Kaiser nodded in agreement, placing his other hand on top of hers and shaking it eagerly. "You and the Gold Fighter have been doing a marvelous job at keeping the peace. My heart is moved to hear that we have such courageous and powerful individuals like the two of you putting their lives on the line for our world." He then turned his attention to the people standing behind her, inadvertently missing the scowls he was receiving from Gohan and Erasa, both of whom switched back to their respective neutral stares. Upon sizing them up, the man released his grip on Videl's hand and slipped his right into his pants pocket, allowing him to better scope out the girl's compatriots. "Oh? Are these young men and women friends of yours… or fans?"

Jolting back into reality, Videl nodded and, reversing to her boyfriend's side, gestured to each of her classmates in kind. "They're my friends, sir. Well… more like my best friends." She pointed to the demi-Saiyan next to her and then made her way down the row, "This here is Gohan, Erasa, Lime, Touya and Yuki. I've known all of them for a very long time now." When all of them waved or nodded to the man after their names were called out, the crime fighter went back to the first in line and beamed proudly. "But Gohan over here I've known the longest. He's my training partner and my boyfriend." She then turned around and gave the other girls a smug grin.

This earned envious glares from both Erasa and Lime, the latter of whom raised a fist and shook it discreetly at the teenager.

Hearing this announcement drew a lighthearted laugh from Kaiser, "Is that so? How very interesting. I never expected the powerful Videl Satan to have her heart stolen away by a classmate of hers so readily." He then stepped towards the demi-Saiyan on the girl's left and looked him squarely in the eye. "But I suppose when you're young and in the prime of your life, stuff like this is to be expected. This boy does look to be quite the gentleman and a scholar." He then pulled his right hand out of his pocket and held it towards the spiky haired teen. "I'm sorry, it was… Gohan, right?"

"Oh? Yes. That's right," the demi-Saiyan replied, rubbing the back of his head with his left while cordially shaking hands with the celebrity with his right. "Son Gohan. Nice to meet you." The grip he formed around the man's limb was firm and tight.

"It's always a pleasure to shake hands with a person that has a good work ethic and a strong heart." When he saw the inquisitive look being given to him by the boy, Kaiser nodded to the link they'd formed with their arms and continued. "I can tell by the calluses on your hands. You are clearly a man who has seen his fair share of manual labor and strife over the course of his youth… toiling away at the fields, hitting the iron bag and working the metal at construction sites."

Gohan, as well as a couple other people there, were genuinely surprised by the man's spot-on analysis. "You could tell all that just by looking at my hands?"

"Why of course. Human physiology and psychology are two of my favorite hobbies," Kaiser replied with a firm nod of his head. "This world has been constructed and built up on the backs of hardworking men and women like yourself for centuries. I'm glad to be able to make the acquaintance of someone who still follows that old code of conduct, especially when they're a friend of the daughter of our planet's savior," Kaiser replied, disengaging from the handshake and slipping his right into his jacket pocket. "And I say that with the utmost sincerity." He then smiled across at the other faces standing around him. "This! This is exactly the kind of thing that I love to see; students of different backgrounds and classes coming together in the bonds of friendship, to learn and grow with one another side-by-side. Even without knowing any of you, I can see in the faces of every person present the will, the determination, and the desire to achieve something… to work and strive for a better future. Whether it's for the benefit of their friends, the benefit of themselves, or for the benefit of the world, it doesn't matter. Whatever the case may be, it always brings a warm smile to my face to know that wherever I go, there are people willing to make an effort to accomplish their dreams."

Gohan, feeling his spirit lift at the gentleman's tone, nodded to him in agreement, "A lot of people share the same vision of a world where they can work and live in peace, without the stress of conflict or misfortune." He then gave the man a shrug. "As long as we're willing to work together and keep pushing forward, I'm sure that with enough time and energy… anything is possible."

"Hard work has gotten us this far in life," Lime announced, drawing the group's gaze to her as she beamed up at the billionaire magnate and stood by her crush. "If you can get to where you are with good, old-fashioned perseverance and axel grease, then I think we can do it to."

A chuckle left the boss's lips as he looked at the group's smiling faces. "My, my. I see we have a couple of very optimistic dreamers in this bunch." After taking in their individual expressions, Kaiser then placed his hands on his hips and nodded. "Well, whatever your goals or aspirations may be, don't let somebody like me or anyone else, stand in your way. Just remember…” He then raised a finger and wagged it towards them, "there is a very fine line between need and desire. It is in a human's nature to want more out of life… and whether or not this nature is based off of good or bad intentions, it doesn't matter. If a person should find themselves on the path to seeking prosperity, chances are that their dreams and ambitions will become corrupted by the vices of the world. The more a person gets, the more they will crave… which in turn will lead to greed and dishonor." Upon saying this to the group, he then spared one last glance in Gohan's direction and threw him a warm grin. "Be very careful. The world is full of danger and peril. As bright and as good as it may seem, there is always going to be darkness lurking around every corner."

Blinking at the man's remark, the demi-Saiyan quickly processed his words before giving a nod of understanding.

Once he was certain the teen had heard him, the boss of Talos Industries straightened his jacket, smiled, and looked back at his secretary. When he saw the purple haired woman adjust her glasses, the company owner spoke, "Well then, I suppose I'd better be off. Once again, it was a real pleasure meeting you all… and I hope to see each and every one of you at the banquet." Starting from Videl, the man once more shook hands with her, and proceeded to do so with the other teenagers behind Gohan. He made extra certain to kiss Erasa on the knuckles just as he did the girls before her, but when he did, he completely missed the hesitant and tentative expression that appeared on the blonde's face.

The moment he was through expressing his fondest farewells to the troop of youngsters, the boss directed his guards and his secretary to follow him. In a matter of seconds, the man vanished into the crowd on his way towards the exit. Almost as soon as he started to move, a whole collection of students from the assembly began following him out, with quite a few of them snapping pictures of the visiting entrepreneur on their phones.

As Kaiser's presence faded into the distance, Videl and the others watched on carefully for several moments as the population of the chamber thinned out. When the smiling raven haired girl felt his presence disappear entirely, she then turned to see how Gohan and the others had taken the situation. It came as somewhat of a surprise to her when she saw Gohan and Erasa were glaring in the man's direction, indicating something was wrong.

"Hey… guys?" the crime fighter spoke, informing Touya, Lime and Yuki of the issue with their companions. Holding up a hand, the martial artist stepped towards her boyfriend worriedly, "What's up? Why do you look so gloomy? Did something happen?"

"No. Nothing happened, Videl. It's just that… well," Gohan whispered, his troubled expression breaking out a single bead of sweat as he shook his head. "I want to tell you… but… I just… can't quite explain it."

"I can," Erasa spoke up, drawing the team's gazes towards her as the blonde made her remarks. "It's Kaiser. He may look like a really cool guy in the papers, magazine articles and the net, but there was something off about the way he was acting towards us that really didn't sit well with me. The way he smiled, the way he laughed and the way he talked to us… it just… all sounded so fake." It was the only word she could think of to describe what she picked up.

Lime blinked at the solemn expression on her friend's face, "Fake? You mean… nothing that he said to us was real?" She then saw the blonde nod.

Finding her words hard to swallow, Touya and Yuki shared looks with one another before turning back to their normally chipper and welcoming friend.

"Really? I didn't sense anything wrong with him," the boy with the glasses replied.

"Yeah. Me neither," his girlfriend also said.
However, while both of these youngsters had something to say in doubt towards the girl's observations, Lime didn't. Being Erasa's roommate and also her closest comrade next to Videl, the brown haired girl from the mountains frowned as she began mulling over the events prior to Kaiser's departure from their presence. As the seconds passed, her mind began to open up some more, and slowly but surely, she too started to see something was off about the man's character as well.

She just couldn't put a finger on what exactly that was…

"Are you sure, Erasa?" Videl asked, tilting her head at her friend inquisitively. "Maybe you were just looking at him from a weird angle. How could you tell?"

Shooting a serious look towards the sportsman and his doe-hybrid girlfriend, the blonde set her hands on her hips and looked towards her best friend with a frown. "I've studied cinema and film for years, Videl… and I've hung out with many different cliques over the course of three different schools. I've gotten so used to reading people's moods and expressions that it's gotten to the point that I can tell when someone is genuinely happy and when someone is playing bullshit with me… and this guy was playing us big time." When Videl and the others gave her a look, Erasa threw her arms at them. "Come on! You're one of the sharpest people in our school and you honestly couldn't see any of it? Just think about what he said to us for a second."

Processing the girl's question as well as her words, the raven haired fighter then did as she was instructed and thought about it for a moment, seconds before looking down with an intense scowl. When her mind played back the scenario for her again and again, an uncomfortable murmur left her lips. "Actually… now that you mention it, there was something creepy about the way he spoke to me and held my hand."

Despite how well meaning and sincere it came across, the thought of his gentlemanly gesture and the way he smiled at her afterwards caused a cold chill to run up her spine.

"You can say that again," Gohan spoke up, looking down at his girlfriend with a deep frown. "I didn't like how he was getting so chummy with you."

When she heard her crush's serious tone in regards to the matter, the poster girl of Satan City glanced up at the teen before a small grin formed across her face. "Oh… did I hear that right? Is my goody-two-shoes, innocent boyfriend from out of town feeling a little jealous at having another guy kiss my hand as a friendly 'hello'?"

The demi-Saiyan, balking a little, looked away with red in his cheeks and a nervous look on his face, "W-Well… a little bit… yeah."

This then led to Videl playfully poking him in the face, "You're sweet. Don't worry. There's no other guy on this planet that I'm interested in except you." She then looked over her shoulder and narrowed her eyes once again. "Anyway, it's not that a lot of other guys haven't done something like that before… public officials, businessmen from wealthy families, and politicians that my dad knows… but the way Kaiser came across to me was off par. He just… played it really well."

"Like a pro," Erasa remarked with a nod, before then looking across at her childhood friend with a serious look. "Believe me… I almost bought it for a second there. But then he started talking to you guys and, even though I could hear and see a person, all I could think was snake."

Her remarks brought on a few new thoughts and emotions to the demi-Saiyan and his compatriots. After dawning on this information for a little while longer and sharing somber looks with one another, they were then interrupted from their moment when the other member of their group finally returned. Long blonde hair trailing behind him and across his broad, singlet-wearing shoulders, Sharpener ambled up to the group standing in the middle of the aisle all casual-like, accompanied by a girl with short, red hair that had a purple highlight on the forward bang, wearing a silver jersey over a tank top, a blue miniskirt, and shin-high black boots.

When he saw the troubled expressions worn on all of his friends, Gohan included, the confused sportsman blinked before glancing at the city's poster girl. "Did I miss something important?" He then thumbed over his shoulder, "Sorry, I got a little bit caught up back there. What happened?"

"Oh. Nothing much. We just had a little chat with billionaire Kaiser Talos," Touya answered, keeping his arm wrapped around his girlfriend as they greeted their classmate in the usual manner.

"He was a pretty cool guy, but Erasa, Gohan, and Videl seem to think otherwise," Yuki finished, while also sparing a nod towards the trio in question. "That basically sums up everything that happened in the last ten or so minutes."

Lime, hands in her pockets, then gestured towards the jock and his plus one. "What about you? What's been going on over on your end of the soccer pitch? And who's this?"

"Oh. Well…" Clearing his throat, the long haired jock then held out both his hands and framed the young woman with the highlight standing alongside him. "Let me introduce you guys to Sena. Sena… these guys are my friends, Videl, Gohan, Erasa, Yuki, Lime, and… such-and-such." He did this while waving a dismissive hand in Touya's general direction.

"Hey! Don't try to write me off as some side-character in your cheesy romance story! I'm standing right here!" the boy with the brown hair and glasses practically shouted, drawing the startled gazes of several other students in the area.

Completely disregarding his friend's exclamations, Sharpener blew him off with another hand wave, "Yeah, yeah. Whatever." He then spared a smile towards the redhead standing directly beside him. "They're the group I was telling you about earlier."

"Yeah. I kind of of figured that. I've seen you hanging around with these guys in the school's quad during recess and lunch," the newcomer, Sena, exclaimed, grinning from ear to ear as she moved forward and held her hand out to Erasa. "Great to finally bump into you fellas." She then took hold of and vigorously shook hands with the blonde girl, baffling her at the enthusiasm in her gesture.

The bubbly teen grinned nervously back at the tomboy, who soon relinquished her hand after nearly shaking the bones out of her body. "It's… great to run into you as well." After getting a good look at the newcomer beaming at her, Erasa then craned her head around and peered in her fellow blonde classmate's direction. "So? This is the girl that has managed to lure in and capture the great Sharpener's attention?"

"Indeed it is," the sportsman nodded.

"Hm. Not bad," Erasa chirped, stepping back, placing her chin between her thumb and finger, and giving Sena an approving once over. "Not bad at all." This in turn caused the tomboy to look back at her in confusion, before then blush when she felt the stares of several of the other teenagers begin boring into her from the sides.

Noticing the girl's plight, Videl stepped forward and waved her hands in front of them, "Come on you guys. Let's not scare the poor thing off in the first five minutes. We haven't even had the chance to get to know her yet." She then turned to the tomboy and nodded to her in greeting. "Don't mind, Erasa. She can be a little bit overbearing at times, but she's a great friend once you get around her super-high moments and her general, all-around, bubbly personality."

"Ah. I don't mind," Sena replied quickly with a cheerful expression, at the same time sensing Sharpener step in from behind to stand protectively on her right flank. "Believe me. I get around a lot. Three years at Red Star Senior has allowed me to get used to her type."

"Good. Then I guess we can skip all of the hard stuff and move on to the easy stuff," Gohan spoke up, moving in as well to make his introductions, with Lime and the others at his side. He then raised his left hand in greeting, "Hey there. We're Sharpener's friends... otherwise known as Class 3-B's local misfits."

Sena giggled at that reference, particularly when she saw Videl and Erasa wave and pose in response to the self-proclaimed title. "So the legends have been told." She then spared a glance back at Sharpener, who grinned anxiously and scratched his cheek in an uneasy manner. After seeing the boy's look, the girl shrugged and stared back at the others. "But that doesn't matter. As long as you guys aren't against sneaking out at night and partying every once in a while then I've got nothing to complain about. I mean... what fun's a social life without a little bit of drama in it?"

This in turn drew a chuckle from Videl, who placed her hands on her hips. "Oh yeah. I think you're going to fit into our group just fine."

OOO

While the band of weirdoes held their customary welcoming ceremony for the new arrival to their group inside the hall, the hot topic of today's assembly was currently making his final farewell to the students of Orange Star High. About half an hour following the closing moments of his presentation, the kind yet oh-so-charming Kaiser, accompanied by his secretary, slipped into the limo waiting outside the school's gates and prepared himself for the trip back to his office. Rolling down the window and waving goodbye to his supporters, the man left the amorous crowd of a hundred teenagers with a screech of his vehicle's tires and a honk of his horn. His driver saw to the effect of the last two occurrences before the black, elongated luxury sedan drove down the main road and vanished around the corner.

After rolling the tinted window back up to where it belonged, the billionaire mogul in the suit breathed a sigh of relief and, unbuttoning his collar, crossed his legs and kicked back for the long ride ahead. "Man... now that was a chore-and-a-half. Even though I'm used to pulling all nighters and hauling paperwork, giving speeches at community events can be such a drag." Running a hand through his black locks, he then looked towards the mini-bar he had setup alongside the window and smirked. "Barkeep. Martini please. Painfully dry." He then watched the automated drink dispenser place a martini glass on the conveyer and begin mixing the ingredients for the beverage. After the flask was shaken by the robotic hands, the robot then emptied the alcohol out into the glass holder and placed a skewered olive into the drink. Once the martini was slid over to the man's position, Kaiser took up the glass, held it up with a joyous smile, and spoke in the most posh voice imaginable. "Ah, yes. Thank you, Nigel."

As Violet watched her eccentric boss sniff his beverage and swirl it gently in his hand, the former Red Ribbon Army Colonel then pulled up her notepad and, upon skimming over the notes of the day's procession and the timetable scribbled across the screen, glanced in his direction.

Taking a sip of his cocktail, Kaiser gasped in delight, "Ahh, there's nothing like a glass of cool gin to help wash away the woes of a long and exhausting day." He then rested an arm across the luxury seats behind him and spared a glance at his assistant, who was sitting just over from him on the neighboring seat. A grin then formed at the uncomfortable look on her face. "Come now, Violet. Why do you look so anxious? Relax a little and have a drink with me."
The purple haired woman in the suit and skirt nodded, "That sounds lovely, sir. But... uhh..."

"Hm? What is it?"

Removing the stylish spectacles she was wearing and slipping them into her left breast pocket, the short-haired woman gave her boss an inquisitive stare, "I'm just a little bit worried... about the exchange."

"The exchange? What do you... ooh..." Quickly realizing what the woman meant, Kaiser took on a far more sadistic expression as he set his martini glass on the stand next to him and held out his right hand. Palm facing up, the boss then gripped the end connected to his wrist and pinched, "You mean... this?" He then pulled off what Violet first mistook as a dead layer of skin, but was actually a transdermal patch designed to resemble human skin plastered to his palm, which he removed with a simple tug. Holding the band aid like piece in front of him, the boss grinned. "Beautiful? Isn't it? It worked like a charm."

Frowning at the piece of material as if it were something foul and unpleasant, Violet then turned back at her leader with a raised eyebrow. "Please tell me you didn't shake hands with the other children while you were wearing it."

"No. Of course not. I had it in my pants pocket the entire time," Kaiser replied, lowering the graft a little. "I only slipped it on the moment I had to shake hands with Son Gohan."

The woman blinked, "How does it work, exactly?"

"The weapon's design is actually quite ingenious. You see the epidermal layer of the patch works by injecting powerful microscopic toxins into the body via physical contact with the target. By coating the outer surface with the viral strain and attaching the nonlethal side to my skin, I can infect any person I want with a simple handshake," Kaiser explained, before then sparing the transdermal patch a smirk. "Basically, Son Gohan has approximately twenty four hours of blissful living before the full effects of the infection finally kick in."

As disgusting as it was to hear, Violet simply went along with the man's plan and nodded her head in understanding. "And... what about the other kids? How did you prevent the weapon from infecting them?"

"That part's simple to explain. I coated the inside of my jacket pocket with an anti-viral solution that nullifies the patch's lethal cargo, basically shutting off the weapon and rendering it harmless," Kaiser stated as he then spared a smug glance in Violet's direction. "You may have noticed I only shook the boy's hand once."

"I see," the woman murmured. After watching her boss scrunch up the transdermal patch and chucking it into the disposable unit beside him, the secretary gave the man one last, nervous look. "That's all it took, huh? And what poison did you decide to give him?"

"Oh... I gave him a small shot of subject HV-15 from the Central Branch's development sector... a little special something I cooked up just for this occasion."

Recognizing the number off by hard, the purple haired woman looked at the man in shock. "Isn't that-?"

"Uh-huh," Kaiser replied, not even bothering to acknowledge the horrified expression that appeared in his assistant's eyes. When he picked up his martini glass and took another sip, the man then stared down at the clear contents and grinned. "It's the disease that wiped out over a hundred people seven years ago, slowly eating away at their strength and vitality until there was absolutely nothing left. Let's see how our young friend takes to it."

Violet, her expression becoming serious, closed her eyes and lowered her head in resolution, "Yes… sir."

Even though she obeyed every one of his orders without question, it didn't mean that she had to like all of them.

If there was ever a crueler way of killing ones adversary… her boss had just found it.

XXX

(That night)

It was dark out and all Gohan could see as he jogged through the blackness of his world was the stony path of the floor flying past him. Ignoring the fact that he couldn't see anything, the boy's panting filled the air as he attempted to reach the end of the stretch of road he was on, desperate for an exit. Though he had no idea how he got here or what'd transpired in the hours beforehand, all the young warrior knew was that he had to leave… and fast.

Seeing all sorts of lights flashing by him, the man in the orange and blue gi broke out into a sweat as he kept on running, not knowing where he was going but hoping he would get there soon. The cold was gripping and the atmosphere was foul, something that did not sit well with the boy at all and compelled him to move.

After several minutes of continuous sprinting and watching an aurora borealis blow past in a cyclone of colors, Gohan suddenly saw a bright light up ahead. Looking up in surprise, the young demi-Saiyan sped up his sprint and charged forward, determined to reach the end of the tunnel of darkness. He eventually spilled out of the void in a flash of blinding white, which ended in him stumbling to a stop atop a rocky plateau. Gasping in shock, the young man looked up when the haze of the stunning glow vanished and he found himself positioned on a wide expanse of grey earth, with the stars of space glittering in the skies all around him.

At first baffled by the sight of the cosmos, the young warrior looked around the area surrounding him momentarily to figure out exactly where he was. The ground was soft, barren, and had an incredibly dusty texture to it, and the land stretched out before him was dotted with hills, craters, and mounds. It was safe to say on this observation alone that he wasn't on any particular part of the earth, especially since the stars could be seen so clearly. Gohan then began to think that he'd ended up on some planet he'd never been to far outside of his galaxy. However, when he eventually turned to look in a particular part of space above the world he was on to assess exactly where he was, the spiky haired hero then spun around in alarm and his expression became one of abject horror and disbelief.

"N-No way."

Hanging in the sky high above him, he saw the unmistakable form of the planet Earth hovering in the vacuum just over the horizon line. But unlike the lush, green and blue ball he'd come to recognize as his home, the demi-Saiyan instead found himself staring at a planet with its oceans tainted red with blood, it's skies set alight by a raging hellfire, and its continents, which were once covered in pristine forests, splintered and cracked by the heat of the planet's core. This led the boy to the realization that he was standing on his planet's moon, looking up through space and towards his home, which had fallen victim to a foe whose identity he did not know.
To sum it all up, the earth had become an inferno… a world that'd been scorched by war and destruction.

Backing up with his face reflecting a clear expression of terror and incredulity, Gohan suddenly heard something behind him and turned. When he did, he was met with a sight he could only imagine in his worst nightmares.

The Z-fighters and all of his friends lying scattered across the barren field… dead.

Every single one of them was there. Krillin, battered and bleeding from a massive hole punched in his chest, was lying in the arms of his wife, Android 18, the latter of whom was hunched over with an arm missing and a hole blown through her chest as well. Android 17 was splayed out nearby, torn in half, lying near the burnt bodies of Tien, Yamcha and Chiaotzu. All three of them were covered in bullet-sized holes, indicating they'd been taken down by a hail of powerful energy beams and bullets.

Closer to the demi-Saiyan and away from the first area of carnage, Paprika was on her knees with her head was slumped forward; her body riddled with spears that was not only impaling the ground but also holding her corpse upright. Next to her lay Kana and Piccolo, both of whom had been nearly burnt beyond recognition and had their faces buried in the ground. Goten and Trunks, having suffered the least, had had their necks broken, and were lying side by side, staring across at the demi-Saiyan with lifeless eyes.

Vegeta soon followed them, the man looking as though he had put up one of the biggest fights of his life, as the entire right side of his body had been burnt black, and he had blood trickling out of his mouth. Next to him was Zangya, her body broken, covered in blast burns, and had a sword shoved clean through her chest, leaving her on her back and impaled to the floor.

The last of them was none other than Videl Satan, lying at the base of the hill, her form left burnt and battered with her hand resting across her stomach. It was the raven haired girl that eventually snapped Gohan back into reality and, with his expression still reflecting a look of pure horror, the boy stumbled towards the girl lying on the edge of the field, and immediately knelt down beside her.

Taking her head in his hand and wrapping the other one around her, Gohan attempted to rouse her from whatever slumber she was in. "Videl… Videl! Wake up. Wake up…" Seeing her head lull back in his grip coaxed a look of despair and desperation from the young warrior, who then brought his hand up to run across his girlfriend's face. What once was filled with color and life had now been replaced by the cold and paleness of death. "N-No. This… This can't be. How… did this happen?"

Sorrow starting to fill the boy's heart as he came to full understanding that all of his friends had died trying to save the earth, he was unexpectedly shocked out of his trance when he saw Videl choke up blood and heard her strangled coughs fill the air. Caught completely off guard, the half-Saiyan attempted to hold her in an elevated position as the teen gasped for air. When her sapphire eyes eventually blinked open, showing the bags and the stress of a terrible battle, Gohan then heard her speak.

"You… c-couldn't… save… us…"

Sadness and grief crossed Gohan's face when he saw his girlfriend's eyes stare back up at him, blood dribbling out of the corner of her mouth and her energy beginning to fade. He shook his head, not wanting to believe that this… or any of it, was real.

"You… let us… all… down," Videl wheezed out once again, as tears of sadness and despair formed in her eyes. "You've let me… down… Gohan."

"No. I… I didn't know," the half-Saiyan whispered, attempting to come up with a reason for his absence and failure. But try as he might, he just could not hash an answer, mostly for a fact that he had no idea who'd done this or who his enemy was.

What monster could've destroyed their world and killed everyone he loved and swore to protect? Was it some alien from another galaxy? Another tyrant like Frieza or Bojack? Or was it an Android that had done it? A creature created by Doctor Gero or someone similar to him. The young Saiyan did not know.

However, just as his mind was filling with a rage of questions and emotions, and his heart slowly began to sink deeper into a pit of blackness, he suddenly saw Videl lower her head and her eyes become hidden by a veil of hair. At first the boy thought his girlfriend was finally slipping and clenched his eyes shut to stop the tears from flowing. A few sobs left his lips when he felt the girl's body go limp and her life-force vanish.

But then, when he looked back up at her moments later to see the results of what he directly blamed as a result of his actions, a startling transformation had place. In the blink of an eye, the girl's raven black hair had turned blonde and her entire state and appearance had changed dramatically. Her frown became replaced by a sickly smile and a black eye patch had formed over her right eye, while the left pupil had turned blood red. Furthermore, aside from her blonde locks having grown all the way down her back, her outfit had also been swapped out, becoming a single, revealing swimsuit with a cape and black, long boots. To complete the transformation, all the wounds and damages he'd been afflicted with, had all vanished, and an enormous witch's hat had formed on her head, transforming her into an entirely different person.

Before Gohan could even do anything, his once dead girlfriend had turned into the phantom he remembered seeing back at Capsule Corp all those days ago.

A look of stunned bewilderment filled the teen's tear strung eyes.

"V-Videl?"

He heard the blonde girl giggle and saw a grin form on her face. A split second later, a sharp pain suddenly shot through his body followed by a loud 'squelching' sound. Eyes widening in shock as his body froze up, the demi-Saiyan then looked down to see what had happened, and saw that the girl in his arms had run her hand through his chest and out his back, leaving him impaled on her arm.

In an instant, a wash of pain unlike anything Gohan had felt before, rushed through him like a bolt of electricity, drawing a scream of agony from the fallen defender of earth…

(End Dream)

OOO

Gasping in fright, Gohan sat up from his bed with a start, covered in sweat and eyes widened in horror. Panting heavily as beads of perspiration rolled down his face and skin, the demi-Saiyan stared ahead of him and towards his wall on the far end of the room, where he took a long moment to process everything that'd happened.
Initially believing he'd just been standing on the moon with a person's arm shoved through his chest, the boy's first instinct was to check the area on his pectorals for said wound to plug it up. When his hand patted over his breast bone and felt no hole, he then looked down to clarify for himself that it wasn't, truly there. Upon doing so, a sigh of relief then left him and he spent the next several seconds calming his mind and gathering his thoughts. His heart, which had once been beating like crazy, soon settled and allowed him to sit comfortably across his bedspread.

"A nightmare. It was just a nightmare…" Gohan whispered.

It'd been a while since he'd had one of those. The last bad one he remembered was back in the Hyperbolic Time Chamber when he saw Cell in his perfect form murder both his mother and Piccolo right before his very eyes, and that had been a traumatizing experience in itself. This recent one though took the cake as the most fucked-up dream he'd ever had thus far, leaving him to wonder whether it'd been a vision or just a hallucination brought on by indigestion.

Feeling his stomach give a bit of a ping, the demi-Saiyan, still covered in a bit of sweat, figured he should go and grab a drink to help cool himself down. So, upon hopping out of bed and adjusting his underwear, the demi-Saiyan in the skin tight black shorts went to the kitchen, fetched a glass of water, took a moment to survey the countryside beyond the window, and then, after finishing his drink, headed back to his room. On his way he made sure to check up on his brother's and Zangya's rooms, where he saw both family members sound asleep and respectively enjoying a pleasant dream.

Expressing momentary enviousness and smiling at their peaceful states, the teen quickly adjourned to his bed for some shut eye.

However, as the minutes passed and the restless boy found himself tossing and turning under the sheets, Gohan couldn't help rid this feeling that something was off. But, being the persistent character that he was, the half-Saiyan calmed his turbulent thoughts and tried to get some shut eye…

XXX

(Early Morning)

With the sun breaking through the condensation on the window and adding a comforting glow to the inside of the mountain home, the day at the Son residence was off to a fine start. Chi-Chi in particular was having a blast standing by her favorite spot at the kitchen desk, picking away at the stove and getting her children's breakfast ready. A gentle tune filled the air as she hummed to herself, showing the world how deeply she was engrossed in her task. With the steam wafting up from her frying pan as she finished off the last of the morsels to be added to her oldest son's lunch box, the mother made sure that he was all set for a long day ahead.

What with his studying, his training, and his extracurricular activities, the teen was currently undergoing what most would refer to as the busiest period of his young life. Knowing how much work the boy had on his plate, Chi-Chi knew she had to make a little bit extra for him so that he had enough food to sustain him throughout his bloated schedule.

The woman reasoned to herself that this was just going to be another ordinary day as she fixed up her son's carrier and added the finishing touches to the enormous Saiyan breakfast before her. But just as the mother was moving plates and dishes over to the center table, she then heard the shuffling of footsteps in front of her and looked to see who of the other residents of their home had woken up first. It came as a bit of a surprise when she saw Gohan, dressed in his school uniform, staring back at her.
Ordinarily she would have greeted him with a smile and a hug. But on this occasion, the parent appeared taken aback when she panned up the teen's form and got a good look at his face. "Gohan?"

"Morning, mum," the spiky haired teen yawned, at the same time slugging his way towards the table. Catching a whiff of egg in the air, the demi-Saiyan licked his lips. "Mmm. That smells good."

Disregarding his comment, Chi-Chi stepped towards him and extended her hand, "Never mind the food. Look at your face. Besides his hair looking even more messed up than usual, the woman couldn't help but notice the pale coloration in his cheeks as well as the fact that he had bags under his eyes. These were all the signs of insomnia, something that the mother would not dismiss lightly. "Did you sleep at all last night? What happened?"

"Oh, I just… well… I had a bad dream, is all. It's nothing for you to get worked up about," the boy replied, yawning as he pulled up a seat and, setting his school bag aside, shuffled into his spot. A smile remained plastered on him, even as his mother went about straightening his collar and hair. "Really, mum. I'm fine. You don't need to worry."

Pulling away when the boy fended her off with a couple waves of his hand, the mother placed a hand over her chest as she stared at her son uncertainly, "A-Are you sure?"

"Yes. I am," the demi-Saiyan replied, at the same time giving her the characteristic Son grin. "Can I eat now?"

Breathing a heavy sigh, the raven haired woman in the apron nodded and allowed the boy to begin his feast. Pulling up a plate, as well as a knife and fork, Gohan slowly got to work devouring the eggs and rice that'd been placed in front of him. His mother had even gone out of her way to make Eggs Benedict, which filled his nostrils with a scent that had his stomach hungering for more. But unlike what he did with other meals following vigorous training sessions, he was determined to savor every bite of this one.

While he was in the process of eating and his mother was just dealing out the last of the dishes, the pair were soon joined by Goten sprinting into the room and a still half-asleep Zangya shortly afterwards. Dressed in a purple, over-sized shirt and panties, the woman with orange hair yawned as she pulled up a chair alongside her sparring partner and watched Goten, who'd decided to sit across from her, gaze down at the meal in front of him with stars in his eyes.

"Food! Food!" the boy sang, before looking at Chi-Chi with a wide grin. "Thanks a lot, mum! You're the greatest!"

"You're most welcome, sweet heart," the raven haired woman gleefully replied, just in time to watch her youngest dive into his meal with great speed and vigor.

Ignoring the bits of food flying everywhere, Zangya slowly turned to the older male sitting at the table and, seeing him eating his own food at a languid pace, beamed in his direction.

"Morning, spike."

"Morning, Zangya," the boy greeted with a cheerful nod.

It was then the Hera noticed the look on his face and recoiled somewhat, "Geez, what the hell happened to you? Did you get any sleep last night?"

"Not really," the demi-Saiyan replied with a sheepish grin, "I wasn't able to get one in this time.
But I'm pretty sure I'll be able to get to sleep after a good, long training session tonight."

Staring at him inquisitively for a moment, the blue-skinned woman then shrugged and cracked a smile. "Okay then. I think I'll be able to manage one of those after today's photo shoot." She then picked up a fork and poked it in his direction. "You'd better watch out though, because I will not be taking it easy on you. I'm going to grind you so hard that you'll be seeing triple by the time you pass out."

"Uhh… phrasing," Gohan immediately replied, clearing his throat before a wide, cocky grin crossed his lips, "And yes, I'll be looking forward to it."

As the pair smirked at one another, Goten, stopping for a moment when he heard the word "training," looked up from his scrambled eggs to gaze curiously at his older brother. "Can… I do some training with you as well, Gohan?"

The hero of earth beamed at the child and, reaching forward, ruffled his head playfully. "Of course you can, squirt. What kind of a sibling would I be if I didn't let my younger brother join in?" His exclamation drew a brilliant smile from the boy, who nodded his head enthusiastically before quickly moving back into his meal.

"Okay, you three. That's enough talking," Chi-Chi spoke up, interrupting the group from their banter as she brought up her own fork to begin digging into her serving. When she saw them all look at her, the mother chuckled, "You'd better eat up before your food gets cold. And Gohan…"

"Yeah, yeah. I know. School," the teen replied, at the same time returning his gaze to his dish. "Don't worry, mum. I won't be late."

And so, with any and all discussions quelled for the time being, the entire family adjourned to their morning tea. The home was quickly filled with the sounds of utensils scraping against plates as the four residents did away with the mother's bounty at their own pace. The first one to finish up was Gohan, who thanked Chi-Chi for a wonderful breakfast and proceeded to put the plates into the dishwasher. Once the machine was loaded with everything it could carry, he started it up, took his lunch, said good bye to his family, and then headed off for Satan City. All the while the teen wore a bright smile on his tired face, the latter of which he was hoping to fix up with a quick shot of coffee when he eventually got into town.

Kai knew he needed one right now more than anything…

OOO

(Later that Day)

(Second lesson)

Not many things happened at the start of school period. Being the first of their group in class, Videl and Erasa were able to share a pleasant conversation with one another over last night's literature homework until they were broken out of it by the timely arrival of their half-Saiyan crush. They initially questioned his exhausted appearance and the fact that he had a take-away cappuccino in his hand, but when he explained to them the situation and that it was all because of a bad dream, the pair let it slide and went back to talking about their upcoming assignments. As first period approached, the trio was soon joined by Sharpener and Touya, both of whom came into class bickering about the members of their favorite sports team. Any and all fist fights were promptly quelled by the arrival of their teacher, who then proceeded on with their lesson.
Things were relatively smooth sailing from that point onwards, with the only interruptions being a couple of kids having the nerve to talk in class and being called out by the lecturer. Justice was swiftly dealt by the class coordinator, allowing the rest of their peers to return to their activities and assignments. Eventually, the first couple of lessons came and went, and Videl's group was able to retire for quick spot of recess. Out on the quad, the group gathered together to share their snacks and swap stories, the main one being Gohan's many problems with learning how to use Instantaneous Movement. This story baffled Sharpener, because the guy had no idea what the hell the group was talking about. However, he soon reasoned that this may have had something to do with a television show he was a big fan of, and passed it off as 'geek stuff'.

After recess was over, the group returned to their homeroom for math, a field that they all knew Gohan would fly through and would end up sleeping at his desk in the first ten minutes. The session was off to a great start too, but by the fifteen minute mark, Erasa, Sharpener and the others noticed something off about the way their demi-Saiyan friend was acting. He was sitting in his seat in between Videl and Erasa and was doing his work, for sure. But he didn't seem like he was acting like his usual self.

As he sat there glaring down at his paper, Gohan couldn't shake this double-vision he was getting and attempted to correct it with a few shakes of his head. Not only was he having trouble reading the questions or his own writing, but he was also dripping with sweat, the air was stifling, he was having trouble breathing, and for some strange reason he could not fathom, he was also getting some serious pings in his chest.

All of these strange sensations had started at the end of recess. At first he chalked it up to a mild case of indigestion. But as the minutes passed and the teacher's lesson went on, the pain in his chest gradually became worse, and the heat in the classroom began to rise at an alarming rate. What's more, his hands had started to become clammy and his vision had begun to blur considerably, leaving him to wonder whether this also had something to do with the nightmare he had last night.

Unfortunately, any and all coherent thoughts that he had were soon swept away and replaced by delusions and nausea, and as he attempted to get his work done, the teen felt the pain in his chest get even worse.

Unable to ignore the ragged panting and fluctuating energy signature next to her any longer, Videl looked across at her boyfriend and, seeing sweat collecting in the collar of his shirt and dripping down his face, the girl instantly became concerned. "Gohan. Kai… are you alright?" Setting her pen aside, the girl quickly shuffled over and placed a hand on his shoulder. She then balked when she felt how damp it was.

Hearing her, the demi-Saiyan looked across at his girlfriend through a pained, half-lidded expression, and shook his head. "N-No… I… I don't know… what's wrong…" His speech was slurred and he was having trouble forming clear words due to the intense pain in his chest. When he felt another sharp ping, he cringed and, reaching up, grabbed his pectoral in pain.

Erasa, also seeing something was wrong, placed a hand over his chest and then reached up to lay once over his forehead. She was then alarmed when she felt the equivalent of an oven radiating against her palm. "Oh my Kami, you're burning up," the blonde whispered, looking across to see the equally concerned look on Videl's face staring back at her. When she saw Sharpener and Touya look up from their work, the girl stared back at her crush worriedly. "We need to get you to the nurse's office."

By the time Videl raised her hand, a lot of other students sitting around the group had become aware of the commotion going on in the middle row, and began looking in to see what the heck was going on.

Mia, who was currently down in the front row, glanced up when she heard the odd noises going on in the stands. "Videl! Is everything okay? What's wrong with Mr. Son?"

"He's feeling really ill, Ms. Hirasawa. We think it's some kind of fever. Can we take him down to the office?"

Sensing the seriousness in the girl's voice, the brown haired teacher in the sundress nodded and proceeded to watch the city's poster girl and her friend help the boy out of his seat. "Of course. Please..." She and the rest of the room then looked on as Videl and Erasa passed the class genius over to Sharpener, who then helped his mate out of the isle.

Feeling how off temp the demi-Saiyan was even from just holding his arm over his shoulder, the blonde haired jock gritted his teeth as he attempted to keep the teen upright. "Whoa. Easy there, dude. Stay with me."

"You're going to be alright, Gohan," Videl whispered in encouragement, her voice wavering fearfully as her eyes reflected concern for her boyfriend's wellbeing. "We're going to get you some help."

Slumped over the pair's shoulders, the demi-Saiyan attempted to keep his body upright, using all of the strength he could muster. However, the instant he left the row with his right arm over Sharpener's shoulder and his left over Videl's, an even greater pain suddenly hit the teen, prompting him to grab his chest tightly. This in turn caused his girlfriend to lose her hold of him and the young warrior to lose balance. In the blink of an eye, the class watched in alarm and shock as Gohan went tumbling down the stairs, before winding up at the bottom and curling into a ball.

He then screamed in agony, leading the class to believe that he'd hurt something bad, which frightened and startled them considerably. However, this was not the case.

Horrified, Videl instantly sprang down the steps and wound up on her knees next to the boyfriend. She then attempted to turn him onto his back, but the teen fought and, gritting his teeth painfully, tried to get to his feet under his own power. It was only after several seconds of looking upon the boy and hearing him cry out in agony that the teacher and the class saw that he was gripping his chest with one hand, and had a look on his face that showed he was in absolute pain.

"Gohan! Gohan! Are you okay!" the terrified Videl cried out, moments before she was joined by Erasa and Sharpener, the former of whom placed a hand over her mouth fearfully when she saw the amount of agony the teen was in.

With the rest of the class rising to its feet, the homeroom teacher quickly rushed forward and waved away the other students that'd come down to surround the crippled Saiyan. "Get back! Give him some air!" She then knelt down next to Videl and placed a hand on the boy's back. "Gohan! Can you hear me? Are you alright?!"

In response, the teen shook his head. "No! It... It burns! It burns!" He added to this by gripping the area over his chest even tighter. "It... It's my chest..."

No one knew what to do. All the class could do was clamor and look on in terror as the teen screamed out in pain and curl up on the spot, all the while he was on his hands and knees. Several moments later, they suddenly saw a golden aura explode around him and blast upwards like a flame, alarming those standing closest to him. His hair also flashed blonde for several brief seconds, before flickering back to normal a few times, indicating a subconscious transformation to Super Saiyan.

Moments later, the aura vanished, and Gohan collapsed to his side, still gripping his chest and panting heavily, gasping for air.

Placing a hand to his forehead and checking his pulse, the homeroom teacher Mia noticed how erratic and irregular it was, before then looking up at Videl and her friends in panic. "How long has he been like this?"

The raven haired girl, looking alarmed, shook her head. "Don't know. Ten… fifteen minutes now?"

"Symptoms? What are his symptoms?"

Erasa, removing her hand from her mouth, spoke up in a stammer, "Uhh… high temperature, high pulse, sweats, fatigue, fever, chest pains…" The last one was the most obvious.

"Did he show any signs of being ill earlier or say he was feeling off?"

"Well… he did say he didn't have a good sleep last night and came in looking like death."

"Nightmares?"

Thinking on it for a moment and looking at Erasa for a few seconds, Videl then looked back in alarm and spoke up, "He did mention having a nightmare that kept him awake."

This news filled the woman with a sense of dread and, still keeping a hand on Gohan's shoulder, looked down at the teenager with an anxious expression on her face. "I think I know what he has." When the teacher looked up at the girls kneeling in front of her and the rest of the students surrounding them, Mia frowned. "My friend's father experienced the exact same symptoms six years ago… before he died a few days later." When she saw the expressions on Videl, Erasa and the rest of their friends become more horrified, the teacher gave her final diagnosis.

"It's the heart virus."

OOO

(Later that afternoon)

Over in Talos Industry's company building in Satan City, in one of the large towers in the center of the metropolis, the boss of the company was currently having another meditative session up in his office. Standing behind his desk with his back to his chair and head held high, Kaiser could be seen gazing across the city and enjoying the sights of the people down below going about their daily business, and watching the clouds drift by overhead. Given that he didn't have much work to go on with or had completed all of the cases that he needed to finish for the day, this left him plenty of time to carry on with his own personal business.

But while he was in the midst of his brainstorming session, he suddenly heard the door to the office open up and heard the high heels of his secretary approaching him across the carpeted floor. When said footsteps stopped in front of his desk, the man with the mustache and beard craned his head to the side and spoke. "What's the scoop?"

Expression remaining unchanged as she held her notepad underneath her arm, Violet cleared her throat and answered in a clear and firm voice, "Our scanners intercepted an emergency call for an ambulance from Orange Star High School. They say that young Son Gohan has come down with an incredibly severe case of heart pains and is going into cardiac arrest. It's safe to say that your plan to inject him with the weaponized heart virus has been a success."

"And... what's his current status?"

"Incapacitated. They say that Ms. Videl Satan has taken the boy to West City to receive medical treatment at Capsule Corp. My guess is that Bulma Briefs is going to administer the cure for the virus that she has stored in her medical labs."

At first remaining silent at this report, leaving his secretary in an uncomfortable silence and believing that her boss was irritated, Violet then saw the man smirk in the reflection of the window before looking over his shoulder. When his eyes landed upon her, the woman stiffened, and the head of the company spoke. "Good. Now that his body has succumbed to the debilitating effects of the virus, not only is our young half-Saiyan adversary going to be left incredibly defenseless, but weakened and vulnerable to attack. No doubt his friends are going to be standing guard over his bedside to try and prevent any further issues from arising. Due to the fact his father suffered from the exact same illness seven years ago, they will simply believe this to be a hereditary infection and won't think twice about an alternative source." The mogul then turned to smirk across at his assistant. "Inform our asset in West City, Agent Hasky, to infiltrate Capsule Corp within forty eight hours. I want her to locate Son Gohan..."

"...and kill him."

(TO BE CONTINUED)

Author's Note: Wow, this was a doozy of a chapter, and a surprising twist at the end. Hope you all liked it.

Romance at the beginning, drama all the way through, and a cliffhanger at the end. Man, this is getting exciting. And now Kaiser has hired Hasky from Goku's adventures in Dragonball to finish off Gohan. I wonder what changes she's gone through under his employment.

We'll soon see.

Anyway, hope to hear from all of you soon and hope you're all looking forward to the next update.

Character Biography

Name: Kaiser Talos

Race: Human/Neanderthal

Gender: Male

Occupation: Businessman/Philanthropist/Entrepreneur

Hair Color: Black

Type: Immortal Human/Strategist/Genius Inventor

Age: Approximately 100,000 years

Home Planet: Earth

History: A world renowned businessman, entrepreneur and industrialist, Kaiser is regarded by... many as one of the wealthiest and most powerful men on the face of the planet. Possessing wealth and riches far more than any other person alive, save for Bulma Briefs, the man is famous for being the leading rival against Capsule Corp in design and technology. As the head of Talos Industries, most of his work is conducted behind a desk and, according to the press and celebrity magazine, Kaiser has made a reputation for himself as being an incredibly kind, generous, and charitable individual, with very few bad habits.

Despite his high standing in the public, his industry and name as one of the most prominent people on the planet serve as nothing but a front for his real activities, which are weapons designing, drug manufacturing, and a shady criminal enterprise. Despite doing good deeds with his company, and providing both aid and comfort for the poor and disenfranchised, Kaiser's true ambitions are total control over the world and all of mankind.

Over the course of his long life, the mogul has been able to accumulate a fortune greater than any in human history. This is due to the fact that he is immortal and has lived for approximately a hundred thousand years.

In his previous life, Kaiser was a hunter during the Stone Age period. While venturing outside of his village, the young warrior stumbled across a wounded dragon high up in the mountains. Unlike the dinosaurs and beasts that were living on earth at the time, this particular serpent was in fact the Great Vanishing Dragon, Valika; a member of a race that is considered one of the three great powers in the universe, and had been wounded in battle against his rival. Instead of killing it, Kaiser showed the creature mercy and the dragon granted the man the gift of eternal life, shielding him from death and every other form of magic. This has allowed Kaiser to evolve and live a thousand lifetimes, in which he assumed countless aliases.

Among the many occupations the mogul had taken up over the years, these have included porter, messenger, scientist, priest, emperor, writer, philosopher, prisoner, king, warlord, soldier, pilot, inventor, captain, sportsman, and adventurer. In his life, he has also crossed paths with and defeated a great many warriors with his intelligence alone; remaining the only human alive to have killed the demi-God Gilgamesh and defeated the mighty hero Hercules, both of whom were regarded as the most powerful mortals in the universe during their time.

Possessing a vast network of resources, spies and informants, as well as having an IQ well over 300, Kaiser is one of the top ten most informed and intelligent people on the planet. Fiercely competitive and devious, his vast experience has allowed him to engineer weapons and technology capable of subduing super humans and entities powerful enough to wipe out entire planets. However, because of his position in society, he doesn't perform his criminal activities directly or out in the open. Instead, he relies on mercenaries, warriors, and staff to do his dirty work for him, most of whom he views as expendable assets.

Because he fights using strategy, science, and underhanded tactics rather than brawn, he is one of the first villains the Z-fighters have encountered that they cannot defeat with their strength. Kaiser himself lacks any super human strength and ability, save for his smarts and his immortality. Considering he has defeated super humans in the past using only his mind, this places him in an entirely different league of his own.

Intelligent, shrewd, and vicious, with a goal of conquering all of mankind and destroying the Z-fighters, Kaiser is the most dangerous adversary Gohan and his friends have ever faced.

His name Kaiser Talos is a direct inspiration from the villain Keyser Soze from The Usual Suspects.
Phantom Enemy Arc - Assassin's Blade

Dragonball Z

Legacies

Assassin's Blade

(The very next day)

If there was one thing Bulma Briefs could say without the slightest bit of hesitation, it is that Capsule Corp's had its fair share of hard times. When it wasn't dealing with economic hardships, lawsuits, or disputes within the family, she was attempting to corral the shenanigans of the Z-fighters into a controlled state. While being the primary backer and close friend to a group of the most powerful group of super heroes on the planet had its share of benefits, such as personalized life insurance, safety and the thrill of adventure, it also had an equal balance of detriments. This included having to repair the damages made by her husband and son around the house and facing off against perils she did not agree to or expect.

However, while all of these had been merely inconveniences on her in the past, the situation she was currently faced with was most definitely not. Despite having pulled an all-nighter, the blue-haired woman didn't voice a single complaint as she went about checking the machines that were hooked up to their patient. Lab coat worn tightly around her shoulders and eyes focused completely on her monitor, the mother typed some keys into the program before then checking the feedback. Upon which she then looked down at the bed, where she saw Son Gohan lying unconscious, with two sets of IV and wires plugged into his arm, and an oxygen mask fastened to his face.

Needless to say, he looked to be in a seriously rough state. Aside from all the electronics and medical equipment plugged up to his frame, the boy was still sweating up a storm, his breathing was still coming out raggedly, and his right hand was also gripping his chest tightly, even though he was unconscious. There was not much Bulma could do about that, except make the boy as comfortable as possible, while she and the facility's doctors and physicians ran him through their procedures.

Because the heart virus was such a temperamental case and their study on it has been one of their top priorities since the events of seven years ago, you can understand the lengths that they'd had to go through to ensure his condition was stable.

As it turns out, the news of Gohan falling ill hadn't just been confined to his school. Not only was Bulma and Videl present in the room, but so were Vegeta and Trunks, both of whom had been torn away from their training sessions out of concern for the teenager's wellbeing, Chi-Chi, Goten, Piccolo, Zangya, Paprika, Lime and Erasa, the latter two had flown in from Satan City to see their friend.

This is not even counting Android 16, who was quietly standing against the back wall like a glorified robot sentry, blending in with the rest of the equipment.

While Piccolo and Paprika stood over by the entrance alongside the Prince of all Saiyans, looking upon the bed with seriousness in their eyes and worry in their hearts, the rest of the teenager's friends and family were sitting close by, waiting patiently for their companion to make her final diagnosis.
Since Bulma's primary field was in engineering and not medicine, she had another doctor with her overseeing the demi-Saiyan's status. The blue haired scientist made extra certain that she was in active communication with the man at all times.

All the events of the past several hours eventually led them here. Once the doctor was done checking the boy's condition through the machines, he spoke with his superior one last time and dismissed himself from the room. He passed the Z-fighters with a single, respectful nod of his head, before stepping through the door and disappearing down the hall, allowing the warriors to turn their attention to the woman in charge of the computers.

"Well… the good news is that his condition is finally stable," Bulma said, rolling around in her office chair to look across at her friends. When she saw relief pass over each of their faces, most notably across Chi-Chi and Videl's, the blue haired woman then took on a more calmed expression and gestured towards the Saiyan lying underneath the sheets. "Doctor Yusa said that once the debilitating effects of the virus wear off and he finally regains consciousness, Gohan will be as right as rain."

"Oh… that's good," Chi-Chi sighed, placing a heavy hand over her chest and looking down at her son's bed with red, shimmering eyes and a small smile on her lips. It was quite obvious that she'd been crying beforehand and, having managed to calm down with the help of her friends and family, was able to remain in the room without causing a ruckus. This was good for her son, who she knew needed all the rest he could possibly get in his current state. "Thank the Kais."

It was after hearing this that the Namekian standing over by the wall then narrowed his eyes upon the scientist and addressed her with a glare, "And? What's the bad news?"

Looking in Piccolo's direction, Bulma took a deep breath and a solemn expression became reflected in her gaze. "The bad news is that it's going to be a long haul." Typing into the keypad next to her, the woman then produced what looked like a set of complex molecular models and bacteria onto the screen next to her. "The viral strain that Gohan's been infected with is causing violent irregularities in his cardiac cycle, affecting the aortic and pulmonary valves, as well as the right atrium in his heart. His body attempted to expel the virus, but the infection spread so quickly that it shut down his immune system. The pain caused by the stress in his heart muscles was so intense that it put his body into shock."

"That much is to be expected," Vegeta spoke up from his post as he looked over the concerned faces of his compatriots. "The virus that attacked Kakarot put him out of commission for several days… leaving the rest of us to try and clean up his mess." He then looked away with a huff, "I just can't believe something as insignificant as a germ can affect warriors as strong as him and his son."

"Whether you are a Saiyan or human, the organs of both species are exactly identical to one another, meaning that the virus's affects on either body yield the same results. I know this because my father and I have been studying your biology for years now," Bulma informed, looking at the worried expressions of her friends anxiously. "Just like with Goku, the next few days are going to be incredibly rough for Gohan. He'll be having nightmares for the first couple of nights during the early stages of the disease, but will peter out when the antibiotics start taking effect. We just need to make sure we move him every few hours and ensure he receives the right amount of vitamins and supplements to hasten the recovery process."

Swallowing nervously, Erasa then tore her teary eyes away from the boy on the bed and looked up at the world famous scientist uneasily. "H-How exactly are you going to give him the medicine if he's unconscious?"

The blue haired woman reached up and tapped the IV feed next to her and the bottle of purple solution that it was attached to. "Through this. The antiviral serum is set on an automatic drip sequence to inject the solution directly into his veins every five hours. This way we’ll be able to not only destroy the virus completely, but nullify the sediment gathering in his heart much faster than he would through ingesting the medicine. It will also assist his body in building up a strong enough immunity to the disease, as well as all other subsequent viral strains. After all, Saiyan biology allows members of their race to adapt and develop powerful antibacterial defenses and antibodies against any unwanted visitors, meaning the same infection won't work on them twice."

It was from the woman's little lecture that Lime picked up on something and, looking over at her, raised an eyebrow, "You mentioned a sediment? What exactly did you mean by that?"

Hesitant at first, the scientist then reached over to the desk and, grabbing up a vial, held it out in front of her. "I acquired this sample from my studies on the heart virus. The doctors over at the nearby hospital pumped this out of a patient's arteries surrounding his heart. They say that it's this build-up of viscous fluid that is causing the patient's random cardiac cycle failures and excruciating chest pains."

Chi-Chi almost fainted when she saw the black, sludge like substance swirling about inside the glass beaker being held up by her friend, which simultaneously elicited cringing expressions from Paprika and Vegeta respectively. Hell, the stuff that was sitting at the bottom of the cup almost looked like the tar you'd find in a swamp out in the countryside, something that definitely didn't instill any warm feelings in the Z-fighters' chests. In fact, it actually made them feel sick and nauseous looking at it, which was why Bulma was quick to hide the beaker well out of sight.

Once she slipped the vial back onto the rack and rotated it around, the woman then rose from her seat and, slipping her hands into her pockets, looked down at the boy lying restlessly under the sheets. "Well… we've done all we can. The rest is up to him now. I also contacted our company branch over in Satan City to dispatch a team over to Orange Star Highschool to vaccinate all of the students and teachers. Just in case the strain is contagious, no one else will get infected and we'll be able to eliminate the virus where it stands." She then turned her attention to the people in front of her and smiled. "I also recommend that the rest of you take the medicine as well… since all of you have been close to Gohan at the time he got it."

"It's for the best," Paprika murmured from where she was standing, gazing across at Gohan’s bed with her unchanging expression. Upon seeing him shift underneath the covers, sweat dripping down his face with the machines relaying back to them his condition, the white haired Makyan couldn't help but narrow her eyes and clench her fingers around her arm in discomfort.

It was obvious from her current expression that she did not approve of the sight, despite it involving the person she viewed as both an enemy and rival.

"I guess even the mightiest warrior can be brought down by something as trivial as a flu," the woman thought, at the same time looking on as Bulma moved away from the bed to stand further off to the side.

This signaled the Z-fighters closest to the demi-Saiyan to move forward. While Videl held her place sitting directly beside the boy's bed, hands on the edge and her terrified eyes fixated fully upon his form, Erasa and Lime also shuffled in closer, while Chi-Chi and Goten edged over to where Bulma had previously been positioned. As soon as she was within arm's reach of her oldest son, the mother's expression broke down and tears began pouring out of her eyes. In a single stroke, she reached forward and placed a hand upon her son's arm, at the same time the droplets of water fell from her cheeks to land on his sheet.

"Gohan… my baby…" she whispered under her breath, her words drawing the attention of her youngest child up to her. Before she got too carried away, the mother brought out a handkerchief and quickly wiped her face down.

Standing beside Chi-Chi, Goten at first didn't know how to respond when he saw his mother begin to sob and sniffle. However, understanding that it as his big brother that was currently underneath the covers and out of commission, the child wisely chose to comfort his parent and, reaching up, gripped the sleeve of her kimono. The mother responded by taking her youngest child's hand and squeezing it gently, prompting Goten to move over to hug her.

"Is… Is Gohan going to be alright?" the child stammered, simultaneously trying to hold back his own tears.

Sniffling and holding her handkerchief up to her eye, Chi-Chi nodded affirmatively. "Yes. Of course he will, Goten. He… He's just resting now."

"O-Okay," the youngster murmured, while also holding back his own sob as his grip tightened around his mother's leg. "I… I really hope we wakes up soon. He promised… to play with me and Icarus when he got back from school."

While Goten leaned into his mother's leg and wiped away the moisture accumulating in his eyes into the fabric of her dress, Trunks, who'd also come to stand closer to Gohan's bed, looked at his friend worriedly. Summoning whatever hope and positive feelings that he could, he reached over and patted his playmate on the shoulder, and glanced across at the teenager he too viewed as an older sibling.

They were only some of the few. Videl on the other hand had also become overcome with emotion, gritting her teeth and clenching her fists around the sheets of Gohan's bed. When she reached forward and took his hand in hers, the raven haired girl couldn't help but allow a few sobs to break through her tough exterior, resulting in a stream of tears. "G-Gohan." She then leaned forward, looking as though she was about to fall out.

However, thanks to the timely interference of Erasa, who took her friend by the shoulders in a hug, she was quickly shaken out of it.

Looking across at her blonde friend, the crime fighter of Satan City saw the teen smile back at her and nod. "It's okay, Videl. Gohan will be okay. I know he will."

"He's the strongest in the whole universe. There… There's no way he'll let something like this stop him," Lime also spoke up with a slight stammer, voicing her support of the demi-Saiyan in question.

Sniffing a couple of times to clear her nose, the raven haired fighter took a deep breath and let it out. When the feelings of her classmates' words of confidence and hope finally flooded into her, the girl felt warmth return to her heart and she smiled back at her friends. "Yeah. You're right. There's no way he can be beaten by something like this." Quickly turning back to her boyfriend's cot, Videl's expression fixed upon him, and when she squeezed his hand comfortably, she swore she felt him squeeze back in kind. "The man is as stubborn as a mule and a million times stronger. There isn't a virus or an enemy in the world that can bring him down."

She knew her two best girl friends in school were doing their best to cheer her up. It would be nothing short of disservice to them and towards the boy she cherished with all her heart to simply shrug off their gestures of reassurance now. She was not that kind of person.

If there was anything Gohan had reinforced inside of her over the years, it was the will to never give up. That was something she knew she couldn't do. So as she sat there beside the bed, with Erasa's arms around her, she slipped her other hand around the one she was already holding out to cup her boyfriend's hand. From that point onwards, Videl began to pray and mentally pass on her strength to the demi-Saiyan in an effort to support him.

Chi-Chi, noticing the girls huddled around the side of Gohan's sleeping area across from her, beamed and placed a hand over her chest. Their actions of good will and bearing also drew a slight smile from Piccolo, who returned to his serious stare shortly thereafter in favor of quietly watching the scene with Paprika as backup.

Vegeta would've been a part of that pairing too. However, while he was watching and listening to the teenagers fussing over the teen's state, he quickly noticed Zangya off to his left and the foibles currently enveloping her form. Normally he wouldn't have paid the orange haired woman any mind, figuring she could take care of herself. Unfortunately from his point of view, he was unable to ignore the sudden energy spike he sensed coming from the Hera or cutout the sound of muscles popping when the woman's fists clenched tightly at her sides.

When his glare fell upon her back, the Saiyan Prince saw that Zangya was trembling and staring down at Gohan's bed with a hard look in her eye. This wasn't out of any spite towards the girls crowding around the teen's resting area or anything related to their proximity. However, what Vegeta sensed emanating off of the woman was almost palpable and had him narrow his gaze upon the alien when he saw the look on the side of her face.

Though her expression showcased a stoic visage, in her eyes he saw the unmistakable signs of unshed tears reflecting pain, grief, anger, and fear.

Not wanting to address this openly in the presence of the others, the flame haired Saiyan simply remained where he was, arms folded across his chest and his attention fixed upon Gohan's bedspread.

The demi-Saiyan shifted underneath the sheets, his breathing ragged and brow creased in agony. When the boy gasped through his oxygen mask and his lips emitted a groan of discomfort, Videl quickly reached forward and placed her hand upon his forehead. The sudden contact of her skin against his suddenly seemed to ease his pains and, after stroking it a couple of times, his expression quickly relaxed.

Seeing the stricken boy respond to her gesture brought a smile to the crime fighter's face, whose eyes glowed as she gazed upon his sleeping mug.

"It'll be okay, Gohan. I'm here for you," she whispered.

For the past seven years the boy had risked life and limb to protect his family and friends, all in an effort to keep them safe. Well… now it was Videl's chance to return the favor.

XXX

(That afternoon)

Just a few clicks across town, situated between two towering complexes in the heart of the Entertainment District, there sat a very trendy looking pub with the name West McLaren inscribed over its entrance. Judging from its stylish layout and real-estate positioning, it was a very rich and upbeat looking establishment, with potted plants arranged according to the spirits of prosperity, an outdoor eating area under a red veranda, gold embellishments, and big windows giving indoor customers a clear view of the streets outside. All in all, the place simply glowed with wealth and luxury, inviting anyone with money and time on their hands to spend their evening with a drink and a good time.

It was here in this high-class, respectable business, with smartly dressed men and women scattered throughout the interior of the complex, that a familiar figure could be seen sitting over by the bar and living out her days of freedom in seemingly ignorant bliss.

The years of peace and tranquility had been extremely kind and munificently fortuitous for this particular woman. Though she'd cut her bountiful blonde hair to a generous, shoulder-length height and sharpened up her appearance to blend into her new crowd, the young angel of chaos looked as fit, robust and healthy as the day she first stepped into the limelight of crime. This was back during the time the Red Ribbon Army was in its prime and all the denizens of the planet were expecting full-scale invasion from the power hungry forces.

The person in question of course was none other than the strong and beautiful Master Thief Hasky, who was currently playing out her day out at the clubs as the centermost attraction at the bar.

Having previously been incarcerated due to her unfortunate encounter with Son Goku years prior, the woman had gone through several notable changes over the past couple of decades. Aside from still maintaining her blonde hair and bewitching good looks, the woman had lost her trademark blue biker jumpsuit and swapped it in for a stunning red, sparkly dress that hugged at her curves and accentuated her long, slender legs, with a backless feature that seemed to go on forever. Aside from having much of her cleavage exposed due to a secondary deep neckline in her outfit, the woman's curly hair was pulled back slightly, revealing a set of diamond earrings, as well as green lining in her eyes and red lipstick outlining her supple mouth.

To complete her outlook, her green, emerald eyes could be seen gazing down into the cold glass of scotch she was now swirling with her delicate fingers. Entranced by the cool liquid and ice sitting inside the clear cup, the woman held it up and took a swig, downing it with a single motion. She sighed when she felt the substance flood through her in a wash of heat, which warmed her stomach, straightened her back, and made her toes curl.

"Ahh…Age 710… now that's what I call a good drink," the woman exclaimed in a silky smooth, posh, English tone of voice.

The bartender, a man wearing a black suit and a prominent mustache, with a martini glass and cloth in hand, chuckled in amusement at the woman's compliment. "I can see you really love your liquors, miss. Planning on drinking anymore tonight?" he asked, at the same time cleaning the drinking glass he was carrying.

Setting her crystal glass down, the elegantly dressed Hasky ran a hand through her locks and looked upon the worker with an enchanting smile. "That all depends. What else have you got for me?"

"Well…" Clearing his throat, the bar runner turned to the rack of bottles behind him and looked them over with a keen eye, "I've got a 700 Red Baron and a 690 John Walter, if those two names tickle your fancy."

The blonde woman looked up in interest, "Oh. That last one sounds good. How much?"

"On the market, a bottle of that costs about fifty thousand zeni," the barkeep promptly and enthusiastically informed, looking back at the former thief to see her grin widen.

Eyes twinkling with delight, Hasky pulled out a wad of cash from the juncture between her breasts and, sensuously removing the clip with her teeth, slid it across the counter towards the barkeep. "I'll take it."

Her offering of money was retrieved without the slightest bit of hesitation. Hand shaking ever so slightly, the well-dressed customer service agent removed the bottle from the shelf and held it firmly between his hands. Being sure to wipe it down for the sake of appearances, the gentleman then placed the showpiece on the counter. Silently asking if she wanted a drink and earning a nod of approval, the man popped the top and, with a skilful dip, poured the woman a nice, cold glass. The scotch sloshed across the ice like a gentle current of gold water, unintentionally drawing the woman closer to the current.

As soon as it was about a few centimeters full, the man pulled away and watched as Hasky took up the glass and held it to her nose. Upon sniffing it, the golden locked woman took a sip and, allowing the liquid to wash over her tongue to analyze its taste and texture, swallowed it and exhaled in relief.

The shiver that ran up her spine drew a gentle groan from the master thief, "Now that's what I'm… talking about." Sheer, unbridled, unadulterated, ecstasy.

When the barkeep smiled and set the bottle down on the counter, he then moved on to carry out his business with the other customers. It was only upon leaving the woman to her affairs that Hasky's alone time at the club was suddenly interrupted by the arrival of an unknown figure. Dressed in a tailor-made suit, a man with slicked-back blonde hair edged up alongside the woman and stood beside her at attention, as if waiting for her to acknowledge his presence.

An annoyed look quickly forming across her face as she held the scotch glass to her lips, Hasky breathed an irritated huff and, after setting down her drink, glanced over her shoulder at the intruder. "Hey buddy, if you're looking for some action tonight, forget it. I've already blown off three other guys who thought it was a good idea to hit on me at this club and I'm not about to stop now. So beat it." She then picked up her beverage again and took another sip. After setting it down a second time and sensing the man still standing behind her, the woman frowned deeply and quickly turned to him. "Didn't you hear me? I said get lo-"

She blinked when she saw that the stranger looking down at her had on a pair of black sunglasses and was holding out a large, yellow envelope to her.

At first baffled by the fact that the guy would be wearing a set of shades indoors at this time in the evening, the woman instead chose to focus her attention on the package he was holding. Quickly recognizing the familiar seal slapped across its lining, Hasky spared the figure a couple of suspicious glances, before voluntarily taking the envelope from him. Upon relinquishing the item to its intended recipient, the man in the suit then wordlessly turned around and vanished into the crowd, no doubt heading for the exit.

Not at all put off by the shady delivery, the blonde woman took a momentary look at the letter. Weighing it in her hand and feeling there was an item of significance inside, she then popped open the seal and slid whatever the paper was holding into her hand. This turned out to be an incredibly thin and lightweight I-Pad, which was closely followed by a small ear bud, which dropped into her lap from the bottom of the letter. Curious, the woman picked it up, examined it, and pushed it into her ear.

Almost immediately after she engaged the device, a familiar voice spoke to her.

"Enjoying yourself, Hasky?"
Recognizing the female on the other end instantly, the blonde woman chuckled and lent back against the bar, "You could say that. Aside from a few pig-headed males in black ties trying to put the moves on me, the night's been quite enjoyable so far."

"Oh, I'm sure it must be awful for you," the person replied sarcastically.

"Oh yeah. It's just dreadful. Absolutely dreadful. My afternoon of kicking back and having fun at the tables is completely ruined. Can't wait to get out of here," Hasky played along, not even bothering to hide the cheeky smirk that formed across her lips. After twirling her finger through one of her golden locks like a love-struck school girl, the master thief waited for a moment before then speaking to the earpiece once again. "But enough about my terrible, uneventful night on the town. What've you got for me this time, Violet?"

"We have a new assignment for you. Did you get the package I sent?"

"Duh. Of course I did. Would we be having this conversation if I didn't?" Holding up the computer pad, Hasky then absently tapped it with the pinky of her glass-holding-hand. After waiting for a few moments as the device's security nodes scanned her, she then watched the black screen light up with the glory of modern day technology. She then waited as the computer went through several hundred lines of code in the blink of an eye, before a folder with a single file opened up. "Who's the target?"

"Young male. Eighteen years old. Currently in hospital. The information in relation to the individual is in the files that we've provided."

"So… am I to assume this is going to be some sort of… conjugal visit? Because I'm going to tell you right now, if he's just some fat, nerd kid from the city who isn't in the least bit attractive, then I'm just gonna have to- oh, hello? Yummy," Hasky stopped midway when she saw the profile of the target in question pop up on screen, who just happened to be Son Gohan. Admiring the boy's handsome face and the contours of his muscular neck and shoulders for the next few seconds, the blonde thief then scrolled down the document when the information on the teen began presenting itself to her in short, snappy paragraphs of text. "That is one deep dish of man meat right there, if I do say so myself."

"Keep your panties on, Hasky. You're not going to sleep with him. The boss wants you to take him out-"

"To an all-night sleep-easy motel with no callers, I hope," the bodacious woman exclaimed while licking her lips.

"As in: kill him, you sex-crazed lunatic. Geez. Can you please take this seriously for just two minutes?"

Hasky giggled at the distress she sensed in her colleague's voice and shook her head, "I'm just messing with you, Vi. No need to get all bent out of shape." Scrolling through the info on the subject, the vixen of a criminal then nodded, "So who is this kid, anyway? What's he done to ruffle the boss's feathers?"

"I suppose this is where I tell you that you're going to find the specifications of this particular mission quite interesting. He's actually part of the same group that you encountered several years earlier when you were hired by Commander Red to retrieve the dragon balls for him. The Z-fighters," Violet finished with an assertive tone of voice. "Remember them?"
This bit of info drew an annoyed groan from the well-dressed maiden by the bar. Even with the priceless scotch in her hand, the news her colleague had to give left a very foul taste in her mouth. "You mean the group with the pig, the cat, the scar-faced rogue and the blue head harlot? Those guys?"

"The very same."

"Ugh. First King Piccolo, then Cell, and now this. Don't these guys ever take a break?"

"Once in a blue moon, I'm sure. But now they're back and they're stronger than ever. The boss wants to find out more about how they operate, so he wants you to go in and take out one of their key members. He's just recently been hospitalized with the heart virus and is taking a nap over at Capsule Corp… courtesy of your employer, master and long-term benefactor."

The blonde grunted at the tasteless proposal, while at the same time skimming over the information on her target. "That doesn't sound like fun at all… taking out some poor kid who can barely lift his head from his pillow. I hate going after sick targets. They don't put up any kind of a fight. Not to mention it's bad sport." She then raised her glass again to take another sip. "Don't know why Kaiser chose me and not one of his other lackeys to take care of something as easy as this."

"You were the number one candidate for the job… and the only person he can trust to follow-through with such a sensitive operation. Not only are you the best stealth agent under our payroll, but you're also Kaiser's most reliable asset, who already has innate experience in dealing with this group," Violet stated, before her tone took on a dramatic shift into seriousness. "I've got to warn you though; the Z-fighters are nothing like the children you fought with over twenty years ago. They've gotten much stronger since the days of the Red Ribbon Army… strong enough to wipe out the entire population of this planet a million times over."

The cool woman with the British accent smiled, "A terrifying group, to be sure."

"But that shouldn't be any kind of a problem for you… what with your mastery over the Mark V Babylon Armor the boss saw fit to assign you."

Hasky chuckled as she tugged on the hem of her dress, which suddenly gave an unnatural shimmer of gold. "Of course. There's not a person alive who can possibly hope to defeat me when I'm clothed in this remarkable piece of hardware. Heck, not even that monster Cell would be able to match my greatness. Master has practically transformed me from the number one thief to a bona fide goddess of destruction."

"Then I guess this assignment will be the perfect test for you… of both your infiltration skills and proficiency at using Kaiser's technology," Violet commented. Once she was certain that word got through, she then moved on to her final bit of information. "Your target is currently lying in the West Wing on the far side of the main complex under heavy guard by the security forces. You should have little problems slipping in, but I advise you proceed with extreme caution. Son Gohan has many powerful friends watching over him, including Vegeta and King Piccolo. You'll have to wait for an appropriate opening to slip in and snuff him out. All the information related to the mission has been uploaded into your tablet. Study it well."

The blonde woman smiled, "Unless the building has gone under extreme renovations over the last decade or so, then breaking in should be a piece of cake. Hell, I'd be able to do it even without the energy altering suit." She then drummed her fingers against her glass thoughtfully as she considered yet another idea. "Still, I sure do hope I get a chance to fight one of these guys somewhere down the line. I'd really like to see what a member of the most powerful group of super heroes on the planet is really made of. It'd be a hell of a lot more fun than taking out some bedridden kid…"

Violet smirked on the other end of the line, "That 'kid' just so happens to be the son of Son Goku." This announcement from the purple haired secretary had Hasky freeze in surprise, a result that the attendant in contact with her clearly heard over the radio link. "You remember him, don't you? I believe he was the same kid who humiliated you twenty years ago and ended up sending you to prison for about half a decade?"

A deathly silence soon rolled over that part of the bar, setting the stage for an incredibly tense moment. It became so unnervingly quiet that the drone of the surrounding establishment soon wasn't registering on Hasky's radar at all, leaving her sitting there with the ice in her glass gradually melting in her grip. Violet actually began to wonder whether she'd accidentally broken her friend with her message.

However, after several seconds of inactivity, life soon returned to the club's setting with a deep breath from the blonde haired assassin. Upon inhaling deeply, the woman then set her glass of scotch down and, after looking down at the I-Pad, a menacing grin then formed across her lips. It was a smile that promised not only bad news to the Z-fighters, but a lot of pain to the person who would become the receiving end of her wrath.

"Really?" Snickering under her breath, Hasky then locked her foul gaze upon the screen of her computer and spent the next minute taking in the face of her target. "My, my… is it just me… or did this mission just get a whole lot more exciting?"

XXX

(Later that evening)

By the time the sun had begun to set, every single employee at Capsule Corp, save for the half a dozen on the nightshift crew, had retired for the evening. This meant that the halls of the main building were practically empty, which was good for one member of the Z-crew as he went about his merry way, marching through the corridors of his home with his hands in his pockets. Training boots clapping against the tiled floor and shoulders struck back, the dark haired form of Vegeta strolled along with his eyes set ahead and his thoughts focused on a number of different subjects. On the surface he appeared perfectly normal.

But in truth, the man had found himself troubled by the odd series of events that'd been occurring over the last month. First Satan City had been besieged by a human mercenary dressed in a mechanized suit of armor that was specifically designed to combat super beings and aliens of Super Saiyan class. Then Gohan spouts some nonsense about a phantom woman that'd just appeared out of nowhere to haunt the very room they'd all been standing in. And then, without any warning whatsoever, the same demi-Saiyan then falls prey to the very virus that his father had been plagued with years before.

In other words, it was simply baffling. For one, not only had this collection of circumstances occurred one after the other in succession, but they also didn't fit into Vegeta's knowledge of coming events. As far as he was concerned, his son Trunks, the one who'd came to them from the future all those years ago, didn't mention anything about a mechanical abomination, a phantom, or Gohan contracting the same virus his father had. In fact, the only member of their group to have caught the disease was Kakarot. Though this was probably a result of the timeline skewing in a different direction or due to a set of completely unrelated actions, for things to get this far out of hand was just astonishing.

As hard as he tried, the Saiyan Prince just couldn't put his finger on it or the source that was causing all these anomalies.

Choosing to shelve these thoughts away for the time being, Vegeta decided to focus on getting to the kitchen to grab a coffee and some after dinner snacks. However, when he passed by the entrance to the Gravity Room, the man then noticed on the screen beside the door that the chamber was currently occupied. Curious as to who was using the chamber at this time since the design of the room's walls prevented ki from being picked up the prince moved over to it and went through the first door. Entering the locker room and passing through the aisle of steel cupboards, he quickly found himself at the porthole window of the blast door and looked in to see what was going on.

He then blinked when he saw that it was Zangya inside the dome-shaped chamber and gutting it out with the equipment. Dressed in a pair of black spandex shorts and singlet, the woman was positioned in the center of the floor space and glaring through the glowing red room towards the ceiling. Judging from the way her body was shaking, it looked as though she was currently under a lot of stress.

This was no surprise because when Vegeta took a peek at the control panel next to him, he saw that the room was set to over two thousand times earth's gravity. She was practically hitting the danger limits of the machine on an organic life form and what any person was capable of achieving in that kind of environment. Raising an eyebrow, he then looked in to see the orange haired female take a step forward and cock her hands to her sides.

Sweat falling off of her and hitting the ground with the force of anvils dropping from the sky, the powered up Hera gritted her teeth and took aim at the flying drones above her. They orbited her for several seconds, keeping their crosshairs locked firmly upon the woman's form. Then, after the sensor lights flashed between all of them, the drone floating behind the warrior a full story above her then lit up and fired a powerful golden sphere of energy down at her.

Reacting fast, the Hera spun around and smacked the attack away, sending it hurtling towards another drone. In the blink of an eye, the ki blast bounced off of an invisible force field that sprang up around the basketball-sized robot, which promptly sent the attack shooting towards a third. Once again the attack bounced off of the machine and flew towards another, and another, and continued to repeat the process over and over again, until the single ki blast was moving in a blur between all of the training bots, forming a glowing net above the Hera.

Zangya growled as her eyes darted after the energy attack, watching it rebound off of the floating metal orbs one after the other. A few seconds later, the attack, which had built up enough momentum between the robots to confuse any ordinary quarry, then shot towards her a second time, prompting the Hera to leap into the air and avoid it. The attack struck the ground, where it was absorbed by the energy resistant barrier above the tiled floors, preventing the attack from detonating and keeping the room intact.

With a yell of rage, the orange haired warrior thrust her hand forward and unleashed a powerful energy blast towards one of the robots, slamming it in its single eye and sending it flying into the far wall. The drone smashed into the barrier, exploding into a thousand pieces that scattered over the floor. Zangya then followed up with a blast behind her, only to watch the attack streak past her targets when they avoided it.

Responding quickly, the remaining six robots hovering around her then unleashed simultaneous energy attacks in her direction, catching her in the middle of their formation. The energy balls converged on her position at light speed. But just when it seemed like the woman was about to be crushed by the synchronized force of their multiple shots, Zangya crossed her arms over her chest and produced a blue energy shield that jumped up around her like a bubble and stopped the attacks. The blasts burrowed into the film and began to compress it, threatening to break through. Then, just when it appeared the sphere would pop, Zangya threw her arms out and, with a mighty howl, dispelled the attacks with a full-body blast.

"HAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAA!

This counter took the form of a bright flash of light, which engulfed the surrounding drones and melted them under the sheer heat of the wave. The robots' lights flickered and flashed, giving off a warning sound as their hardware was toasted from the inside out. Several seconds later, a shockwave reverberated across the chamber that sent the metal spheres hurtling into the surrounding walls, bouncing off of them and scattering their remains all over the chamber.

Once the deed was done, the spent and exhausted Zangya hovered back down to the ground and stood in place, feeling the gravity continue hammering down on her like a weight. Sweat dribbling down her face in rivers, the Hera then prepared to move on to the next stage of the training regime, only for the light of the room to suddenly turn back to normal and an emergency siren to call out.

Hearing this announcement over the intercom quickly drew Zangya's attention towards the entrance. When her eyes fixed upon the door, she saw Vegeta standing there, with the blast proof gateway to the training hub closing behind him and sealing shut.

Blinking in surprise, the Hera looked across at her visitor uncertainly, "Oh. Hey, Vegeta. I… didn't know you were still hanging around here."

Arms folded over his chest, the prince frowned at the blue-skinned alien before then taking stock of the damages. After counting all of the robots lying in pieces in the training space, the man then grunted and looked back at the exhausted woman with his usual, disapproving scowl. "And what possible reason could I have to not hang around my own house… let alone my own Gravity Room?"

Scoffing, the sweat-covered and visibly battered Zangya then looked away with a frown, "None, actually. Geez. I keep forgetting that this is Bulma's place and not mine." She then clocked herself on the forehead, "Ugh. I'm such an idiot."

Brow creasing, Vegeta took a decisive few steps forward, "That's an assessment that both of us can agree on. However, all matters of self-examination aside, I notice that you were in the middle of a rather interesting training exercise."

Zangya then snapped up to glare at her visitor, watching as he approached the control panel standing in the center of the room. "Yeah? What of it?"

"Well… after seeing your little outburst against the woman's training probes, I thought to myself that you could use a proper, live training partner to shoot at; someone who can actually take your hits without falling to pieces in the first few seconds and hit back with just as much force."

Stopping beside the control tower and looking at the computer board, Vegeta then reached out with his hands and typed into the keys. After applying the appropriate settings, a loud clank followed by the hum of machinery echoed throughout the room once more, signaling the start of another round.

Upon seeing the computer accept the codes, the prince turned and faced his home's guest once again. "Do you still have the energy to take on a Saiyan elite? Or would you rather call it a night?"

Hearing the thrum of the turbines echoing all around as the room began diverting power Zangya then narrowed her eyes and faced the flame-haired man with a frown. Her fists were clenched and at the ready and, after a few moments of consideration, she relented. "Fine. I'll take you on."

This drew a nod from the serious warrior. "Good." Then, in a bright flash of golden light, the Saiyan Prince jumped straight to Super Saiyan 2, bolts of electricity running up his form and accompanying the fierce, celestial aura that now shrouded him.

Without needing to be told twice, Zangya also powered up and went right into her Super Hera form, her hair flashing blood red and her skin turning a shade of green. Her own aura blasted around her, matching the intensity of her opponent's as they both stood glaring each other down.

Several seconds later, the entire room turned red and the gravity engines activated. Both fighters lurched forward ever so slightly when they were both hit with the same gravitational pull of a black hole, causing them to grit their teeth and fix their most intense glares upon one another. As soon as the room's power and output stabilized, both Hera and Saiyan were primed for combat, and the stage was set for what was sure to be an explosive bout.

However, from Vegeta's perspective on the situation, it didn't look like one of them was intending to make this a long one.

With an angry snarl and a yell of rage, Zangya exploded from her spot and charged straight towards her opponent at full speed, her green aura blazing around her. She lunged at him with an overhand, watching the man parry her blow and slip away. She pursued with due haste, unleashing a barrage of punches and kicks on her opponent as he retreated across the tiled floor, yelling out with every blow. However, despite their great speed and strength, Vegeta's expression remained mostly calm as he avoided and knocked aside every attack launched by his opponent, allowing the alien warrior to chase him down.

After crossing fists with one another across the ground for some time, the Hera then threw a kick at her opponent, only for him to leap straight into the air and out of her reach. Zangya growled in frustration and chased after him, attempted to cut him off. She roared when she swung at him with hooks and upper cuts, trying to hit the man in the face, or any part of him that would earn a satisfying 'thump' from her knuckles. But when he successfully avoided all of her strikes without the slightest bit of effort, it only caused the woman to yell out with even more fury.

Dodging another series of punches, Vegeta then swung around the woman and nailed her in the cheek with a well-placed counter cross. It was after the blow landed Zangya spat venomously and, spinning in the direction the Saiyan had gone, the woman thrust her hand out and fired two quick ki blasts. She watched them streak after the man at great speed, only to see her opponent smash them away and promptly return fire. She evaded his retaliatory blast easily with a quick duck and charged in after him, swinging towards the man's face with a hook.

The Prince blocked it, but then received a powerful uppercut that knocked his head upwards and smacked some spit out of his mouth. Clearly caught by surprise, Vegeta gritted his teeth and retaliated with a swift roundhouse kick to the woman's side, knocking her out of the air and towards the ground. When the Hera landed, she quickly back flipped into a standing position, just in time to dodge a diving kick from her opponent when he chased after her. Seeing his foot slam into the floor then prompted Zangya to thrust her finger out and fire a red beam, which shot towards her target like a bullet.
Spotting the approaching attack, Vegeta calmly head slipped it while simultaneously pitching an energy ball at his opponent in an awkward, underarm throw. The ki blast curled upwards and slammed Zangya in the stomach hard, knocking the wind out of the woman's lungs as she was unceremoniously knocked into the air by sphere. Her back slammed into the wall of the gravity room, causing her to bounce off of it with a thunderous 'bang' and spin to the floor, where she landed painfully on her side. Coughing in shock as she remained on all fours, the woman gave another bellow of rage and, picking herself up, sprinted headlong towards her opponent.

She ran down Vegeta like an enraged bull, opening up with a vicious assault of punches. But despite the swiftness of her attacks, the Saiyan Prince avoided them easily, even when she was punching out at him with full force. In the midst of her continuous combo, her opponent waited patiently for an opening, before eventually slipping around a punch and nailing her in the stomach with a swift body blow. This attack stopped Zangya dead in her tracks and had the female spit up, before she eventually received a hook across the face, followed by a vicious kick. These two hits sent the Hera skidding across the floor and through the piles of scrap that were the remains of the training robots, before she eventually stopped several yards away.

Blood trickling from her mouth, the Hera shook her head and frowned deeply. When she fixed her glare upon her opponent, she then sneered loudly and vanished into super speed. Vegeta copied her and also disappeared, intending to outgun her.

For two minutes after that the air became filled with the sounds of shockwaves and fists making contact with bodies. Moving around the room at untraceable speeds, both Vegeta and Zangya darted after one another in the form of two unrecognizable blurs, which crisscrossed the training room floor and the air above the ground repeatedly. Their high speed battle meant that their maneuvers and actions were impossible to track, with the ultimate outcome of the battle remaining completely unknown. However, after another violent spurt of shockwaves filled the space and rattled the chamber's walls, the pair's battle soon came to an abrupt end when Zangya reappeared near the ceiling, her eyes darting around in paranoia, and her opponent nowhere in sight.

Almost immediately after she emerged from the speed zone, Vegeta teleported behind her and dove at her from above. Her response to his attack came far too late when the Saiyan Prince buried a knee into her stomach, before he cupped his hands in the air above him and dropped a hammer blow right into her back, sending the Hera spiraling to the ground. Zangya slammed into the floor with an earsplitting crack, leaving her lying sprawled out on the tiles with blood flying out of her mouth.

The moment she was grounded, her opponent landed alongside her stricken form, arms crossed and a disappointed look on his face.

The Prince of all Saiyans huffed, "It's over."

Groaning through her teeth and the various bruises covering her body, the red haired woman attempted to get back to her feet. "No. I'm not… done yet." Sitting up was a struggle, especially when she had the force of several thousand times earth's normal gravity weighing down on her. The woman breathed heavily when she then dug her nails into the ground. "Let's… go again."

"No."

"I'm telling you, I can keep going."

"Enough!" Vegeta, sporting a solitary bruise on his cheek and a bloody lip, turned his back on the stubborn woman and stomped over to the control panel. "This session is over." Pressing the big red button on the controls, the man promptly shut the gravity field off, the hum of the chamber's engines dying down as normal environmental settings were once again restored. As soon as he felt the weight of the simulation lift, the Saiyan Prince turned his glare back to his opponent, who was breathing heavily from the short bout. "Hmph. Pathetic."

Zangya's head snapped towards the man when she heard his comment, "What?"

"Your form. It was all over the place. You barely even touched me once. Your attacks had little to no edge to them, your punches were sloppy, you had no flow in your movements whatsoever, and you barreled towards me head first like an idiot without even taking a second to think about your strategy or technique. To put it to you simply, your abilities in this round were revolting, a complete eyesore... utterly unfit for a warrior of your stature," Vegeta said straight out, eliciting a stunned look from the woman, who then looked towards the ground in disgrace. The Prince grunted at her desponded expression. "You should be ashamed of yourself."

Biting her tongue for but a moment, the red haired woman then sighed and closed her eyes, "I... I know that. I know."

Scoffing in disgust as the lights of the room returned to normal, the Prince then dropped out of his Super Saiyan 2 form and turned his back on the woman, who remained seated in a damsel position on the cold, hard floor. Keeping his eyes locked on the far wall, Vegeta then spoke. "Out of all the warriors on this planet, you are the only one besides the brat I view as being an equal to me in both skill and power, with the Namekian coming in at a close second." He then glanced over his shoulder to see Zangya sit up properly, before bringing her knees up to her chest to rest her chin behind. "Normally you would've put up a more decent fight compared to that pitiful excuse of a performance you just gave me. Care to explain yourself?"

Gritting her teeth and clenching her fists tightly around her legs, the red haired woman allowed her body to revert back to its base form. The strain of the battle and the expenditure of energy she had in her fight with the Saiyan instantly caught up with her. But through sheer force of will, Zangya was able to prevent it from upsetting her train of thought.

Glaring ahead of her, the Hera spoke in a quiet voice, "I just... have a lot on my mind right now."

"Like what?" Vegeta asked gruffly, turning around a bit more to glare down at his sparring partner. His question caused the alien girl's shoulders to jump. "Please. I'm all ears."

Turning her head away, the clearly upset Zangya exhaled sharply, "It doesn't matter. A guy as tough and unfeeling as you wouldn't understand."

The prince smirked, "You sound so sure about that."

"Just leave me alone, alright. What I'm thinking and what I'm feeling is none of your business," the Hera replied, unable to hide the annoyance in her voice from the arrogant smirk she could feel on her opponent's face. "It's nobody's business but my own."

"It certainly doesn't seem like that from where I'm standing."

"JUST GO AWAY!" Zangya finally snapped, spinning around and chucking one of the drone parts that'd been lying right next to her at the Saiyan.

Her outburst, though sudden and unexpected, was easily avoided by the prince when he simply moved his head to the side and heard the chunk of metal impact against the far wall. When it eventually clattered to the floor, Vegeta moved his head back into position and watched as his opponent's tear-filled eyes glared right back at him.
Unable to hold it in anymore, the orange haired woman on the ground brought her arm up and pressed her eyes into it, her body trembling as she began to weep. She sobbed freely into her skin, filling the once silent room with her cries of sadness and despair. Though her expression of grief didn't at all affect the Saiyan Prince, he certainly could not ignore her display and continued to look upon her silently and considerately.

After listening to her bawl for several seconds, the Saiyan Prince sighed and stepped towards the alien girl, his arms crossed and a serious glare still in play. "Anger for a warrior can be a very powerful weapon and a source of great strength in battle when put to the proper use. The problem with you is that your anger is misguided and unfocused. You have allowed it to get the better of you, to steer your actions and, as a result, it has clouded your judgment." He then raised his head when he heard the woman's sobbing subside and her trembling still. "From what I gather, all of this drama you're experiencing right now must have something to do with the brat."

Looking up from her arms, the Hera took a moment to catch her breath before, with tears still shimmering in her red, tired eyes, she began to speak. "Somebody did this to him," Zangya whispered, prompting Vegeta to raise an eyebrow at her. "Gohan and Videl being attacked on the streets by that armored freak, the mech having the exact same tech as Seventeen and Eighteen, Gohan being affected by the same heart virus his dad had… these aren't just coincidences. Someone very dangerous is hiding out there somewhere on this planet, watching us, and he wants Gohan dead." Her gaze then shot towards the Prince, whom she could see was staring back at her with as straight an expression she'd ever seen on him. "You can see it too, right?"

Remaining silent for but a moment, the flame haired man then grunted and looked away, turning his gaze towards the wall. "Yes. I can see it. I'm not blind."

Clenching her fists again, the orange haired fighter then glared ahead of her and snarled under her breath, "My best friend is in that room right now… suffering… dying. I just… can't bear seeing Gohan in so much pain. He doesn't deserve that… not someone as good and as kind as him." Tears started to roll down her cheeks as she spoke, which prompted her to shake her head and shut her eyes. "I only wish… I could do something to help him… make him feel better. But I can't. All I can do is just stand here uselessly, like an idiot…"

Expression becoming even tenser, the Saiyan then tapped his finger against his bicep impatiently and murmured. "There isn't anything more you or anyone else can do for him, except allow him to rest and let the medicine do its job. There's no need to stress over it." When he turned back to his fellow Z-fighter and saw Zangya still sitting there with her face pressed into her arm, the prince blinked a couple of times before grunting in acknowledgement of her current emotional state. "Especially you. You're angry right now because of what's happened to Gohan and because you feel powerless to help him… but you have no idea what to do with your rage and who to center it on. That's why your fighting skills were so terrible just now… because you were confused, scared, and unable to focus your emotions and accept the truth." Vegeta then narrowed his eyes even more as he broke down the woman's words and the secret that she was concealing. It was something he was able to figure out with just a single glance. "You're in love with him… aren't you?"

His question had Zangya look up with a start. Unable to contain her gasp, the Hera quickly looked over her shoulder and towards the Saiyan Prince, whom she could see was staring at her with his unflinching gaze. Eyes shimmering with her tears of grief, the woman attempted to speak, but no words came out.

Vegeta grunted at her bewildered gaze, "Don't bother trying to deny it. I can see it clearly on your face. You love that brat more than anything else in the world and its killing you keeping all of these feelings for him locked up inside, especially now that his life is in danger."
Cheeks turning bright red, the alien looked away hastily and gripped her legs even tighter, pressing her knees further into her chest. Trying to hide the stunned and embarrassed expression currently framing her visage, Zangya began forming a reason in an attempt to dispute the prince's wild allegations. However, after several minutes of silent contemplation and coming to terms with her whirlwind of thoughts, the woman bit her bottom lip and nodded her head meekly.

She couldn't deny it. Seven years of hanging around Gohan's home, as well as the demi-Saiyan's warm and welcoming presence, had finally taken its toll on her. The two of them had shared so many great times and experiences together that she'd more than just grown to appreciate his company. His innocent, country boy nature, his words of comfort and support, his virtuous spirit, his confidence in battle, and his charming smile, had all but captured her existence in its entirety. To put it in simple terms, the boy had opened his heart and his home to her, and in return she'd given hers to him. Despite all of her exhaustive defensive strategies and attempts to prevent her feelings from escalating too far, she couldn't help but fall for the boy with the spiky hair and boyish smile, who had long since become the most prominent figure in her life.

"He gave me the life I have now," Zangya said, speaking in the firmest and most sincere voice Vegeta had ever heard from her, "And I intend to protect his in return… no matter what it takes." She then nodded and allowed a small smile to tug at the corner of her mouth, as her true feelings were allowed to flow freely. "I love him."

Even though she'd admitted it in her head, the impact of her words still felt just as potent to her as the first time she even considered the notion. Her heartbeat quickened as a result of her confession and, curling up even more, the woman did the best she could to keep the heat out of her cheeks.

Smirking when he heard the woman speak her peace, Vegeta then turned away and chuckled, "To each his or her own, I suppose."

The Hera, taking a minute or two to cool off and catch her breath, then rose up from the floor and stretched her arms. Slapping herself in the cheeks a couple of times to clear her head of her daze, she then turned back to her sparring partner, whom she saw was now glaring over his shoulder and in her direction. After a quick stare-off with who many would regard as the most dangerous man on the face of the planet, the woman massaged her arm and left the room with a renewed spring in her step.

"Thanks, Vegeta," Zangya said as the Gravity Room door automatically opened in front of her.

Grumbling in his usual, dismissive tone, the Saiyan replied coolly, "I expect a much better fight from you tomorrow."

"Alright. What time?"

"Five A.M sharp… and just so you know, I don't like to be kept waiting."

His demand was returned by a half-assed wave from the Hera, who nodded at the same time she stepped through the exit. "Sure thing."

Zangya then disappeared into the locker room, leaving the Prince of all Saiyans standing in the center of the training space all by his lonesome to count up all the busted up drone parts carpeting the floor. The cleaning bot would be in later tonight to sweep up the mess, but until then the man was simply content with just standing there brooding, until it was time for him to turn in.

OOO
Over the course of the entire day, the Z-fighters had remained almost completely vigilant at Gohan's side, occupying their time between watching him, talking, and standing nearby, just to make sure everything was alright. On top of their periodic rotations in shifts, every once in a while the group would receive visits from the facility's main doctor, who would drop by the room every two hours to make sure the machines hooked up to the demi-Saiyan were still up and running, and that his condition was stable. But thanks to the presence of the teen's closest friends and family members, there was little to fear of any unwanted dramas or events unfolding. Having already dealt with a similar case seven years ago, you could say that a lot of them were already experienced in handling this sort of situation.

While Chi-Chi, Goten, Trunks, Vegeta, Paprika, and Bulma occasionally left the room to attend to business elsewhere and what not, the only ones who stayed were Videl and Piccolo, both of whom were making do with the environment available in the dimmed hospital room. The bedside lamp, the adjacent corridor, and the starry night sky beyond the window were the only sources of light the two of them had at their disposal, establishing a scene reminiscent of an old movie.

With the Namekian having rooted his feet to the floor in the corner of the chamber, his arms crossed and his eyes closed in silent meditation, the demi-Saiyan's girlfriend could be seen sitting by the teen's bed with her eyes fixated firmly upon his person. Not only was there an empty tray of food sitting on the table next to her, she also had a sheet laid across her shoulders for added warmth and her hands were wrapped around Gohan's in a gentle and comforting gesture. She'd maintained this position for a majority of her stay here, moving only to go to the toilet and to receive the vaccination from Bulma Briefs for the heart virus. Other than that, the girl hadn't done much else by way of activity and had resolved to remain as she was.

She wasn't alone in this department either.

Looking across the bed and toward the chairs positioned on the other side of the divan, Videl saw that Lime and Erasa were also present, and Goten was sitting comfortably on the former's lap. However, unlike the crime fighter, the journalist-in-training, the demi-Saiyan's younger brother, and his best friend from the mountains, had all fallen asleep at their stations. While the girl in the green halter top and jeans had assumed a very comfortable position lying across her crush's bedspread, her underclassman was sitting upright with the adolescent half-Saiyan cuddled up in her arms and a children's book opened up in front of them, which they'd both been reading together earlier that afternoon.

It was apparent to Videl that her two girl friends had tried to stay awake as long as they could. But thanks to all the stress and hysterics of the day, the pair found that they were unable to hack it, and so resigned themselves to collapsing wherever they were.

Smiling when she saw the trio snoring quietly alongside one another in the most adorable sight imaginable, Videl quietly grabbed up an extra blanket from the nearby desk. Unfurling it, she laid it over the two girls and the seven-year-old demi-Saiyan so that they wouldn't catch cold, and took a step back to survey the bed from a distance. The moment she did so, the poster girl then heard a gentle knock on the door and, turning around, watched as Zangya ambled on in through the entrance, dressed in a red jumper and jeans. When the young woman finally edged her way over to the raven haired fighter, she gave Gohan's bed a once over and glanced across at her friend.

"Is he doing okay?" she whispered.

Videl nodded, "Yeah. He moved around a few times and woke up once from a nightmare, but other than that he's been sleeping well."
This put a relieved look on the alien's face as she went back to assessing the teen's condition. "That's good. Hopefully the medicine will let him get a good night's sleep." After a few moments of contemplation and sparing a glance across at Piccolo, the Hera focused back on the human fighter and the weary look in her eyes. "And you? How are you coping?"

Adjusting the blanket over her shoulders, the crime fighter nodded and replied in a quiet voice, "I'm okay. Just hanging around and making sure Gohan's okay."

Smiling at her response, Zangya reached over and patted her on the shoulder, "You should get some rest. You've been up for two days straight. I'll keep an eye on him tonight."

The raven haired girl looked back at the female in surprise. "Are you sure? I mean… you haven't gotten any sleep for the last forty-eight hours either… and you sleep more than the rest of us combined."

An indifferent wave was her immediate response. "Ah, it's fine. My race can stay awake for weeks at a time and not even feel the slightest bit tipsy. I just do it because it feels good," Zangya replied, a confident smile on her face as she gazed back at her fellow martial arts partner. She then nodded in her direction and the exhausted expression on her face, "You on the other hand could use the break."

Videl then attempted to protest, "But…"

"Don't worry about it. Gohan won't be going anywhere. Just take a seat and kick your feet up for a few hours… give yourself time to cool off," the Hera said, being sure to offer the girl a reassuring once over.

Hearing and feeling the earnestness in her friend's voice, the raven haired girl swallowed whatever protests she had and responded with a beam of consent. However, just before she or Zangya could do or say anything more on the patter, the pair was suddenly startled out of their dazes when they felt a powerful energy signature approaching from up high.

Their gazes snapped towards the side of Gohan's bed at the exact same time Piccolo moved away from the wall, prompting the three of them to take fighting stances.

Even the previously immobile Android 16 reacted to the approaching life sign and, sticking his right arm out, he removed the gauntlet and produced a ki-powered Gatling cannon from underneath. "Intruder Detected. Proximity breached. Stand-by for engagement."

Seconds later, golden photons of light started to appear in the air and gather directly beside the hospital unit. The corporeal mass of energy speedily took shape and form and, once the shroud of matter had dispersed, it instantly revealed itself to be the familiar, plug-suit wearing form of Kana; the beautiful traveler from another galaxy. Glowing orange hair waving behind her as the nodes on her uniform died down, the star traveler's eyes darted about the room for a couple of moments before settling on the trio of fighters nearby.

When their gazes met, the Z-fighters relaxed, with the Namekian blinking at the woman in shock. "It's you?"

"Kana?" Zangya murmured, watching the Seirei glance about the area before her eyes fixated upon the bed.

Hearing the voices of the Z-fighters, Android 16 quickly deduced through his vocal processing system that the group knew this stranger. So, responding logically, the red-haired android retracted his arm and reattached his hand, before quickly going into standby mode once again. However, unbeknownst to the others, the robotic man remained active and tuned in to the conversation that was sure to follow.

When she saw her close friend, crush, and former adversary lying underneath the covers, hooked up to what she assumed were health and life support monitors, the glowing freelancer gasped and moved towards him. "Gohan-kun." Dropping to her knees beside the teen, Kana attempted to reach out, but reframed from making contact, for fear she might trip something off that she shouldn't. Looking over the equipment and the tubes plugged into his arm, her gaze then snapped towards the others. "I-Is he-?

"Don't worry, he's alright," Videl spoke back in a whisper, walking over to where the Seirei was positioned along with Zangya. When the crime fighter stopped behind her, she then knelt down next to the bed as well. "He had a rough night and a bit, but the doctors say he's going to be fine."

Hearing this, Kana quickly looked back at the teen and, when her holographic scouter popped over her left eye, she scanned the demi-Saiyan for any anomalies. "Bit: Analyze Subject." Her onboard computer beeping in her ear as all sorts of numbers and images flashed in front of her, the Seirei remained fixated upon the teen for a full minute in silence. Once the scan was complete moments later, she recoiled in shock and, gently, reached out to touch the boy on the arm. "No. H-How… did this happen to him?"

"That's the question we've been trying to answer for the past several hours," Piccolo spoke, crossing his arms and looking down at his student with a frown. He then addressed the visitor with his serious scowl. "Do you know what he has?"

"He has a pulmonary irregularity caused by cellular degradation on the left side of his chest cavity around the primary circulatory organ. It's a rare illness that occurs solely in primate-based life forms across the cosmos, and causes intense pains, fevers, and a number of other symptoms in the affected subject," Kana answered, using the information she was able to take away from her analysis. Regarding the teen with consideration and concern for several seconds, she then looked back at the group and narrowed her eyes. "But how did he receive such an illness. The last time I was in contact with him, Gohan-kun was in perfect physical health, with a strong cardiac cycle. There wasn't a single trace of a viral strain in his system."

"Well… Bulma thinks it's a hereditary infection that he received from his dad," Videl informed. When she saw the demi-Saiyan under the covers shift and a pained expression come over him, the teen reached over and grasped the stricken boy by the hand. When her thumb rubbed against the back of his knuckles, the agonized Gohan relaxed, and he went back to breathing normally once more. "She said that the microbes could've been lying dormant inside of him for the last seven years and reacted to an unknown stimulate in the atmosphere."

Processing this bit of data, Kana quickly stood up and, hologram scouter appearing over her eye a second time, she scanned every single record she had on Son Gohan. Once her search was complete, the Seirei shook her head and looked back at Videl, who she could see was staring up at her. "Impossible. My computer would've detected any foreign anomalies in his body the moment I scanned him. Even dormant spores inside a living host wouldn't've been picked up by my computer." She then glared down at the demi-Saiyan suspiciously. "An ailment of this grade affects the host within thirty-six cycles of physical assimilation with the body's cells, so the chances that it's been lying dormant inside of him are slim to none. I don't think he received it from spores either, as I didn't detect any irregular particles in his lungs. He must've received this virus recently… probably when he came into contact with a possible carrier."
"That's what I think happened as well," Zangya said, her words drawing the gazes of the others standing around her. When they all looked in her direction, the Hera narrowed her eyes on the boy and spoke, "Gohan was perfectly fine before he came down with this. He only started acting funny when he headed off to school yesterday morning."

The Hera's knowledge on the matter had Kana and the others pause for a bit. As they began wondering how Gohan could've contracted something like this, conjuring up all sorts of possibilities from old bedding used formerly by his father when he was ill to possible wildlife he'd run into, the silence soon began to overwhelm them. After a great amount of time had passed, the members of the group slowly returned to their previous positions, with Piccolo backing up into his corner, Videl settling into her seat alongside Gohan, and Zangya picking her spot at the windowsill, which she leaned against with her arms folded.

"At any rate, there isn't anything more we can do, except wait for the medicine to run its course and the virus to pass," Videl informed, looking up towards her boyfriend with her eyes reflecting hope and positivity. "It's all up to him now."

"Gohan is as stubborn a man as they come. He won't let something like this keep him down for long," Zangya added from her place, a smile framing her lips when she saw Videl and Kana look back at her. She showed them nothing but certainty behind her words, at the same time her face radiated with the warmth of expectation. "I can guarantee that once he gets up, he will bounce back stronger than ever."

Kana didn't hesitate in agreeing with her fellow alien, her own expression reflecting warmth and conviction as she nodded in agreement, "You're right. After all, he is the man who defeated me in battle… and the only one I would cross the entire universe to stand beside."

The words of the two girls put a smile on Videl's face and instilled in her an unyielding flame, one that burned with both happiness and pride. She was delighted to hear how much faith her friends had in the man that she loved, while at the same time she was driven by the desire to fight for him. She was determined to spur Gohan on in his recovery and be the first person he saw when he finally opened his eyes once the infection had passed. It was what she wanted to do as both his teammate and his girlfriend.

After these words were spoken, the group returned to the silence and proceeded to wait out the night. True to her words, Videl soon fell asleep alongside the demi-Saiyan, her hand wrapped around his in a gesture of unbending support and affection. Kana also joined the raven haired beauty in defense, standing by the boy's bed right up against the wall in meditation, with her hair bellowing behind her on an invisible wind and her suit's lights set on a light glow that brought warmth to the room. It was like she'd become the group's own mobile heater.

The same went for Zangya in terms of the company she gave; the Z-fighter remaining seated on the windowsill, periodically looking between the night sky above and the demi-Saiyan sleeping peacefully on the bed, surrounded by the people he loved… and who loved him in kind.

"With all my heart, I swear… I won't let anything happen to you, Gohan," Zangya thought as she gazed upon Gohan's face, watching him turn and exhale softly. Simply seeing his face had the woman's heart skip a beat. "No matter what."

XXX

(Early morning)

Waking up at the crack of dawn to the sun's gentle glow breaking through a light overcast, Bulma
Briefs readied herself for the day ahead in the usual manner. After dealing with the ravenous appetite of her husband, who couldn't help but join her in the shower and 'rub her down' for an extra half hour following his awakening, and sending him down for an early breakfast, she then grabbed a cup of coffee from the lounge room and headed down to the hospital wing.

Passing by security guards and other employees just pulling in for the day shift, greeting each and every one of them in kind, the blue haired woman soon arrived at the room where her best friend's son was currently resting. Nudging her way through the door, she was quickly greeted by the uplifting sight of Videl, Lime, Erasa, Goten, Kana and Zangya, all scattered around the demi-Saiyan's room, dozing away. Though the latter of them was awake and watching over the teenager with an eagle eye, the rest of the team looked like they were all fast asleep, and enjoying whatever dreams the mercy of Morpheus had decided to bestow upon them.

Looking over into the corner of the room to her left, Bulma noticed that Piccolo was also present, head lowered and eyes closed in silent meditation. After counting up all of the heads that were currently sharing the same room together, the scientist cracked a smile and moved into the area. She made her way over to where Videl was lying and placed a hand on the girl's shoulder.

A few gentle shakes were enough to wake the crime fighter, who looked up through a drowsy expression and a wicked forming of bed hair to see what the problem was.

"Oh… Bulma," the girl murmured groggily in surprise.

"Hey there, sleepy," the woman greeted, her voice loud enough to lightly wake the two girls snoozing on the other side of the cot. "Had a good night?"

Stretching her neck and arm, the raven haired beauty groaned in relief, "Yeah. It was alright. I had a really good dream too." She then looked over at Gohan and after seeing he was still with them, snoring away through a slightly tense expression, she turned to the woman in the lab coat and gestured in her direction. "What's up?"

Smiling lightheartedly at the teen, the president of the company thumbed over her shoulder and towards the door, "You could use a little pick-me-up. Come on. Mum and the boys are making breakfast over in the hall." She then looked at the crime fighter's classmates, where she also saw Goten's head perk up from its place on Lime's shoulder. "If I'm being completely honest, all of you could use a little break from your watch. A little bit of bacon and egg should definitely help to lift your spirits."

The prospect of food instantly brought the youngest of their group around, who looked up from his position to beam across at his best friend's mum. "We're having bacon and eggs for breakfast?"

"Uh-huh. Mum's also making Eggs Benedict and Apple Risotto for all of our special guests, so feel free to help yourselves," Bulma replied with a warm smile.

"Yatta!" Goten cheered, immediately springing off of his neighbor's lap to scamper out the door.

Chuckling at the sight of the child's sudden burst of energy, Lime slowly rose up from her seat and massaged her shoulders, "Actually… some hot chocolate and porridge doesn't sound too bad right about now." After rolling her muscles and making sure her body was in a suitable condition, she then turned her attention to the patient's bed. "How's Gohan? Is he doing okay?"

"He's still out of it, but he's fine," Zangya answered, hopping off of the window sill to get blood back into her legs. "The medicine did a good job in making sure he had a comfortable night's sleep. He didn't have any nightmares at all." She then looked over at Videl, who was also rubbing her eyes of the sandman's earlier visit. "I think it was all thanks to you, V."

The raven haired young woman in question smiled warmly in return.

A yawn emanated from Erasa's mouth followed by a cheery expression, "That's good." She then leaned over to gently pat the still sleeping demi-Saiyan on the arm, before turning towards her host and pointing sleepily out the door. "Is there a bathroom near the dining hall?"

Bulma nodded affirmatively, "Yes. Just down the corridor and to the left. You'll find the washroom facilities through the door on the far right."

"Thank you," the groggy blonde chirped, before slowly slogging her way out of the room. Swaying a little with every step, the girl in the green top was shortly followed by Lime, who assisted her friend in getting out the door without bumping into the frame.

Obviously both of them needed some R&R following their shift of the previous afternoon. Considering the positions they'd slept in, the duo weren't just sore, but also in need of a good wake-up.

After flicking back her hair and giving a well-deserved yawn, Bulma quickly turned her attention to Piccolo, who she could see was also awake and staring at them with his usual hard disposition. The scientist chuckled at his steely faced and waved reverently. "Hey, big guy. Wanna come down for a coffee with us? Even though it's not your favorite thing in the world, you really look like you could use with one."

Murmuring hesitantly to himself, the Namekian took a few seconds to think about her proposal. After running it through his head and performing a quick diagnosis on the patient, he then nodded and picked himself off of the plaster. "Why not? I think a glass of water should do me just fine."

He then slowly strolled over to the exit, where he was shortly joined by the scientist.

Bulma followed him out with due haste, but not before sparing one last glance back at the demi-Saiyan under the sheets and then towards the remaining three girls in the room. The president of the company nodded to them, before disappearing round the bend and down the corridor.

Fully revitalized from her sleep, Videl removed the blanket from around her shoulders and laid it over the chair. Looking in the direction of her second most frequent training partner, the poster girl of Satan City smiled and nodded. "Thanks... for last night."

Zangya nodded in acknowledgment of her gratitude, "Don't mention it."

Satisfied from her sleep, Videl then looked over at their other extraterrestrial companion, who she could see was also awake, alert, and standing there with her fiery glowing hair wafting behind her. She was also looking in her direction with the most innocent look of curiosity on her face.

Figuring the woman hadn't experienced much of earthling culture, the crime fighter gestured their guest to follow. "I'm sure you'd like to try out some of the food we humans like to eat around here for breakfast. You game, Kana?"

Eyes lighting up as much as her suit, the Seirei gave a light cheer and jogged over. "Yeah! I'm game. Lead the way." She then cheerfully followed the teenager out of the room. Heck, she was so excited about the idea of earthling food that she practically floated the rest of the way out of the hospital wing and down the hall.

This left Zangya as the only one left standing in that chamber. Gazing down at the demi-Saiyan from her place by the window, the orange haired woman slowly inched forward to stand by his side, where she was able to clearly see the beads of sweat on his face and his expression twist a little in pain. When she heard him groan and saw him turn towards her, his fists opening and closing in response to his heart's spasms, the worried Hera acted quickly and, leaning forward, captured his hand in hers.

Squeezing it reassuringly, the orange haired fighter then slowly watched as Gohan's face relaxed and the pain slowly vanished from his expression. When she felt his grip loosen in hers, Zangya couldn't help but allow a loving smile form across her lips as her cheeks heated at the contact she was able to make with the teen.

She then released his hand, allowing the young male to turn over again. Being the caregiver that she was, the woman grabbed a dry cloth from nearby and wiped the sweat off of his face, making sure to clean him up so that none of his perspiration made him uncomfortable. Before she could do anything else to further her silent communication with the teen, a presence over by the door drew her attention across the room. There, leaning against the frame, she saw Vegeta standing with his arms folded and his warrior's gaze locked onto her.

His appearance didn't surprise the Hera at all, who set the towel down and turned to face him completely once she realized she was no longer alone.

The prince nodded to her and asked in an impatient tone of voice, "Well... are we going to do this or not?"

Smirking, Zangya disengaged from her post and marched towards the exit. "I was just spending some quality time with my friend. No need to give me the whole angry dad treatment, Veggie."

"Hmph. There'll be plenty of time for you to hang out with the brat once he's fully recovered. Right now, he can use some time to himself," Vegeta snapped, standing off of the wall to lead the way towards the Gravity Room.

Despite the man's agro state, the Hera didn't kick up any sort of fuss over it. Instead, she eagerly followed the Saiyan warrior from the resting area and out of the hospital wing. After the night she'd had standing guard over her crush, while simultaneously being left alone to her thoughts, Zangya was more than eager to partake in a little morning joust to ease her burning enthusiasm and restlessness. She had some ideas and stress that she needed to get off her chest, and what better way to work both out at the same time then by taking her frustrations out on Vegeta for an hour or so.

She had no intention of making the same mistakes she did yesterday. Today... she planned on getting a little bit back for herself.

Hopefully Gohan would be able to handle being alone for a little while without her. After all, both he and the rest of the gang were inside one of the safest buildings in the world, surrounded by the strongest people in the quadrant, as well as their closest friends and allies. What's more, the bedridden demi-Saiyan was receiving frequent visits from both the nursing staff and the main doctor on site, who walked in a little while after Zangya had left to double-check Gohan's condition, as well as to pull the curtains around his bed and the other units.

Needless to say, Gohan couldn't have been in better hands or in a higher class of facility.

What could possibly go wrong?

OOO
As the sun started to rise higher and higher into the sky behind the light veil of cloud cover, the gears inside the Capsule Corp main building that were its facilities and factory floor had begun to turn, as one after the other, members of the main crew began arriving for the morning rush. At around this time, the dining room inside the key structure had become the most occupied space in the entire estate, as a majority of the Z-fighters there had turned out for a serving of Mrs. Briefs' delicious breakfast. Videl, Goten, Chi-Chi, Lime and Piccolo were among the distinct few who'd come down to share in a quick meal, before they planned on returning to their previous stations to carry on whatever it was that they'd been doing beforehand.

With all this commotion going on over in the lounge, a little further up the corridor and away from the structure's main facilities, the Gravity Room was playing host to the likes of Vegeta and Zangya. Just like yesterday, the two of them were engaged in a vigorous spar inside the blast-proof, energy-proof simulation area, where they both took turns in beating the living daylights out of one another until one of them decided to call it quits. Unlike her reckless spat that took place in the late evening of the day beforehand, the orange haired Hera put up a much better fight against the Prince of all Saiyans, who in turn managed to get the workout he was expecting from the powerful Z-fighter.

The rest of their family and friends left the two of them to their own devices. Even Goten and Trunks were so occupied with their exquisite and bountiful breakfast that they completely disregarded the training session going on between their two seniors. They, like the rest of their peers, were perfectly content gorging on the offerings the woman of the house had so generously made for them.

So as the Briefs family and their staff gradually got themselves ready for a day of hard work and personal development, one other person that was not a part of their institute was also preparing for what she hoped was going to be an easy assignment.

Just outside Capsule Corp's main building, on the main road running adjacent to the world renowned corporation, a long white sedan operating on a hovering system pulled up to the curb directly alongside the estate's entrance. Engine revving as its pilot lowered the vehicle onto its landing pads, the side door directly behind the driver's seat opened up and deposited the passenger it was transporting onto the footpath. Showing a bit of leg as she pulled herself out of the vehicle, a young, beautiful, raven haired woman with a mole on her left cheek, wearing a white lab coat and a purple suit and skirt underneath, stood up alongside the car and scanned her surroundings.

Adjusting the pair of square spectacles she was also wearing, the enchanting woman then glanced back inside the car she'd stepped out of and nodded to her companions watching her.

"You boys can head on home. Don't wait up for me," the woman instructed.

The two men, who were also suited up and dressed neatly for the occasion, revealed themselves to be a middle-aged man wearing a driver's cap with a bit of a stubble on his chin and a male, anthropomorphic boar-man, with a single broken tusk and armed with an 12-Gauge auto loading shotgun. Both dressed in black and white suits, the woman's lackeys nodded back to their leader, who smirked confidently at them in kind.

"Will do, ma'am," the driver replied, at the same time tipping his hat to her while his hybrid-animal companion rotated in his seat to face the front. "Best of luck."

Shutting the door behind her, the raven haired woman then watched the car lift into the air and take off down the road at cruising speed. As soon as she saw it round the furthest corner, the fit female in the doctor's garb made an about face and ambled towards Capsule Corp's main building.

Passing through the entrance with her hands in her pockets, the curvaceous female in glasses flashed the attendant behind the desk her company identification tag. When the woman sitting at the check-in station saw it, she waved the staff member on through, while also signaling the security guards and roots up ahead that she was one of theirs. As soon as she strolled by the two armed men and two security drones in uniform, the raven haired worker then began making her way through the complex, her stylish heels clapping against the tiled floor and echoing throughout the labyrinth of a science factory.

Completely ignoring the building's central garden in favor of the hallways, the visitor made her way to the far wing of the edifice, making her way up two flights of stairs and at the same time passing employees left and right. Being sure to salute the 'coworkers' she ended up crossing paths with, the woman then reached into her coat pocket and pulled out a touch phone from inside. Swiping it with her thumb, she then scrolled over the information she had waiting and ready for her, and double-checked the map that she had uploaded into the device. The GPS system gave her an ideal picture of the entire complex and worked out her location right down to the exact centimeter.

"Okay... I'm getting closer to the medical wing in the upper levels. I just need to get passed the big shots," the raven haired woman thought, knowing full well that even though she'd been able to get by the first lines of defense, there would be some question as to whether she was allowed access into the more restricted areas.

There was an incredibly strong possibility that the managerial staff at the corporation, most notably the heads of the board and the general founders of the corporation, would know the faces of all the workers that were allowed in that area. Since they were also looking after one of their own in this area of the building and were likely sectioning it off solely for the members of their group and organization, the security in the area would also be pretty tight. This meant that she would have to bump up her disguise if she intended to access this area.

It was a good thing she was perfectly equipped to handle the situation…

Not to mention it came as some stroke of luck when the woman passed by two of the people who just so happened to be mentioned in the list of individuals to be on the lookout for.

Coming down the same corridor, possibly on their way to one of the recreation rooms, the raven haired woman in the lab coat saw Lime and Erasa heading her way. Recognizing them as people who were associated with her target, the good doctor lowered her head and adjusted her spectacles as she moved around them. At the same time, the new arrival managed to catch wind of the conversation the two youngsters were having.

"Do you think we should let Sharpener and the others know what's going on over here?" Lime asked her blonde friend, nodding to the raven haired employee when they made eye contact. "I'm pretty sure they're just as worried about Gohan as we are."

"Yeah. I've been meaning to text them yesterday about Gohan's condition, but I've been so worried over how he's doing I just plain forgot," Erasa replied, while at the same time taking a look at her mobile. "The reception in this building is so funky. In one part I'm getting no bars at all, but as soon as I hit an area with windows, I suddenly have a full set. What is up with that?"

"It must have something to do with the way this building is designed. I think they made it this way so that we can't operate telecommunications devices around places where they either have patients or sensitive equipment lying around," the brown haired girl replied, shrugging at her upperclassman in a slightly impressed manner. "If you ask me, I think that's a pretty useful system."

"Hm. You got a good point there," the chirpy blonde remarked, breathing a heavy sigh as she then looked at her friend in concern. "Are you sure it's okay to leave Gohan-kun alone? I mean… after hearing what Videl and Chi-Chi had to say about his dad and what happened to him… I… well… I think you know why I'm worrying so much."

It was this anxious segment in the girl's words that had Lime smile and pat her classmate on the arm, "It's alright, Erasa. I'm sure Gohan will be fine without us for a little while. Doctor Yusa said his condition has gotten better and that he just needs some space. Since he's taken him off the oxygen mask, I think the best thing we can do now is to not crowd around him and just give him some time to breathe."

Erasa smiled back at her friend in an agreeable manner. "Yeah. Gohan never really was comfortable around large crowds. I guess we can do what the doctor says and stay off guard duty for a bit."

"I think he was also getting a little bit edgy at the number of people who were hanging around his room," Lime added with a troubled look falling over her face. "The patients he normally works with on a daily basis probably don't have large groups of love-struck school girls and aliens sleeping in the same room as them."

"When you put it like that, I can see why he's…"

As their voices faded down the corridor, the raven haired doctor in the coat watched through her peripheral vision as the pair ambled out of sight and out of earshot. The moment they rounded the bend and the woman saw she was once again alone in the corridor, after checking to make sure there weren't any cameras, the doctor then focused on the path ahead and, with a wide grin on her face, suddenly underwent a startling transformation.

Her form shimmering like a mirage on the road, a ring of gold suddenly fell over her, encompassing her entire body and moving down towards the floor. As it descended over her frame, her bewitching, raven haired form was suddenly replaced by the golden locks and outfit of one of the two girls who'd walked passed her just a few seconds ago. By the time the golden ring reached her feet, her entire body had been transformed into an exact copy of Erasa, complete with her enchanting smile and glamorous blue eyes.

Black sandals clapping against the tiled floor, the newly transformed blonde imposter casually strolled down the hallway, without any further need to avoid security or any other curious onlookers. She merely nodded to the one or two staff members she passed on the way over to the medical wing, in which she also ended up traipsing by the corridor leading down to the dining hall. A few short minutes later, the teen doppelganger arrived at the entrance to what she quickly identified as the room containing Son Gohan.

Checking her map to confirm that she was in the right location, the blonde then waited outside for a moment, looking around to see if the area was clear. While she was waiting with her hands behind her back, the girl then saw the entrance to the room open and Doctor Yusa step through with his nose buried in his writing pad. When he looked up, he saw Erasa straighten up with a start and look back at him with a concerned expression.

"How is he, doc? Is Gohan alright?"

The man in the long white coat smiled warmly and nodded, "He's doing fine, miss. There are no problems with the medicine and his heart rate has gone back down to normal. The patient’s just sleeping now."

Running a hand through her short, blonde hair and exhaling in relief, the teen gave the professional a meek smile. "Do you… think I can go in and see him?"

Considering it for a moment, Yusa nodded and stepped to the side, "If it's just you, then there shouldn't be any problems. Just make it quick… and try not to make too much noise when you're in there, alright? We don't want to wake him."

"Yes," Erasa nodded affirmatively, watching as the capable surgeon turned heel and left the room, heading predictably towards his office nearby. The girl waited until the man was well and truly out of sight and, after seeing his coat disappear around the corner, a serious look quickly overtook her cheerful disposition. Upon which she scanned the immediate block.

Over her eyes, a tiny hologram came up with the results: No other life signs detected.

Sensing no one, the blonde then peered inside to see if there were any of the notorious Z-fighters hiding around. But when she picked up no other ki signature on her radar, 'Erasa' then eased her way into the chamber and shut the door behind her.

Locking it for extra incentive and cutting out the light of the window-lit hallway behind her, the blonde girl strolled across the room and towards the bed concealed by the hospital curtains. Gently nudging them aside, the uninvited guest to the company quickly spotted her target lying unconscious under the sheets, plugged into an IV, with a slightly pained expression on his face.

Quietly approaching his side, the blonde then stood directly over his head, looking down at him from above like a hungry predator stalking a cornered mouse. Watching him breathe raggedly for several seconds and noticing the telltale signs of sweat trickle down his forehead, the blonde teenager then allowed an amused giggle to escape her sinister grin. As soon as she did, the same shimmering effect from earlier encompassed her entire body, followed by another golden ring that descended from her head to the balls of her feet.

Her true form soon revealed itself to be none other than Hasky. Unlike the beautiful dress she had on last night, the master thief and infiltrator was now adorned in a full-body, black jumpsuit that hugged at her curvaceous figure, starting from the tips of her toes and went right up to where the juncture of her jaw line met her neck.

This was no ordinary piece of clothing though. Despite its similar look to the spandex Vegeta wore on a daily basis, this skintight suit had a very metallic appearance to it and reflected the light in a manner reminiscent of a suit of armor. It looked as though it had a scaly texture to it as well, similar to what you would find on a chameleon or a reptile, only this blended in with the grayscale of the uniform. Her entire suit was covered in red neon lines that bent at perfect ninety degree angles, which bore a strong resemblance to cuneiform lettering and hieroglyphics. What's more, her forearms, wrists, feet, chest, upper back, and shoulders were shielded by golden plates of metal similar to the pieces on a knight's armor; only these were fitted to her body, ideal for flexible movement, and were sleek in their design.

It was an impressive piece of hardware. Based on its unique properties and futuristic design elements, it was obviously this jacked-up jumpsuit that gave the woman her unique shape shifting abilities.

Dropping the veil encasing her body, Hasky breathed a gentle sigh and flicked her hair back. "So… this is the boy that my boss has been so interested in lately? Hmm…” Tilting her head down at him, the assassin clicked her tongue and grinned mischievously. "He certainly is a handsome young man. Given his build and fitness levels, I bet he'd do pretty well in the sack. If I'd met him out on the streets over on South Side I would have gladly asked him out for a drink. Such a waste."

Shaking her head sadly, the woman then raised her left hand into the air and concentrated for a moment. In the blink of an eye, photons of golden light gathered above her palm before forming into a spear of light. The sheen of energy faded shortly afterwards and, from the shroud of electrons, a golden lance, a Doru, dropped into her waiting hand. Gripping the three meter long weapon tightly, she pointed the bladed end down at the sleeping boy and aimed it directly over his chest.

An apologetic smile pulled across her lips. "Sorry about this, but my client has ordered me to take your life. Since I'm being paid an eight figure sum for the completion of this mission, I'm obligated to follow through on his request. It's nothing personal. Well…" A chuckle left her mouth, which quickly took on a sinister grin. "Maybe it is a little." Arm tightening and the red lines on her suit glowing menacingly, the woman cocked back the spear and thrust it downwards in a single, decisive swing. "Say hi to your dad for me, handsome."

A loud thud echoed throughout the room and it looked as though Gohan was as good as gone; perishing with a lance through his chest.

However, just when it seemed like she'd struck gold, Hasky blinked in surprise when she saw the end of her lance was hovering just an inch above the center of her target's chest, with the length of her weapon being held in the vice-like grip of an enormous hand. Baffled, she then tracked the hand to its arm and, following it up to its owner, she found herself confronted by the hulking form of Android 16, who'd dashed through the bed's curtains and reached out to stop the woman from killing the bedridden demi-Saiyan just in time.

Looking at the scene from a distance, Gohan was just an inch from having three meters of staff shoved through his heart.

Arm shaking as she attempted to push the spear through, Hasky continued to glare up at the hulking, red haired man with the Mohawk, who stared right back at her with an equally intense expression.

The woman clicked her tongue irritably when her weapon failed to budge. "You have a lot of nerve… jumping in and grabbing my lance without my permission. Who do you think you are?"

At first unable to believe her attack had been stopped by, the blonde then began wondering how on earth she could've missed such a big figure standing over by the wall. With that hair style and his heavyset build, there was no way her scanners could've missed him.

The answer soon came to her moments later when she realized that the 'person' standing directly alongside her was in fact a military cyborg, and that his presence did not register on any of her equipment.

This realization was made even more apparent when the demi-Saiyan's savior began to speak. "Your bio-signature has been suppressed by a particle-based spatial interference field being generated by a mark twenty one quantum interface device built into your suit's diaphragm. This enabled you to evade detection from the energy sensitive denizens of this household. Despite your attempt to circumvent the security stationed in this sector, your unauthorized entry into this space failed to take into account my presence in this facility. It is how I detected you and allowed me to interfere with your actions. A poor error in judgment would be the most logical answer."
After looking the man over, Hasky smirked. "I'm going to venture a guess that you're the Android 16 model Bulma Briefs has been building from Doctor Gero's blueprints over the last couple of years. I had no idea you were even in the room."

Seeming ignoring the woman's remarks, Android 16 frowned. "Your presence in this chamber and the formation of the weapon you currently have in your possession indicates you intend to harm this boy." The robotic giant then pulled the woman's lance away from Gohan's chest, a struggle that was marked by a noticeable trembling of their limbs as the assassin attempted to resist. "That is something I cannot allow. You are trespassing on private property. I must ask you to leave."

Fighting back against the robot's shockingly strong arm, the golden haired woman grinned, "And what if I said 'no'?"

Android 16's grip around her lance tightened, causing the metal to creak, "I will be forced to detain you… and your data link will be terminated."

"Would you like to try?" Hasky asked, narrowing her eyes challengingly on her foe as the lines on her suit started to glow again. "Because I'm going to tell you right now that you're in no way equipped to tackle somebody of my caliber. Your endoskeleton's design is seven years out of date… an obsolete model. If you think you can take me on and come out of this fight in one piece, then you may as well start taking yourself apart right now."

Processing the woman's words at computer speed, the cyborg stared at her in unnerving silence. A few seconds later, the cyborg frowned, "Are you refusing to stand down?"

Hasky grinned, "I think you and I both know the answer to that question, big boy."

Eyes flashing a dangerous red, Android 16 furrowed his brow and snarled with a metallic groan, "Response acknowledged. Commencing data link termination…"

(TO BE CONTINUED)

Author's Note: And so it begins.

How will the events unfold in the next chapter? Well, I guess you'll find out next week.

P.S: I'll come up with a profile for Hasky later. Since she is an anime-only character from Dragonball, you can guess a lot of things have happened to her since you last saw her. We'll see exactly how much has changed later onwards.

On a rather interesting side note, I'm finding out a lot of interesting things about Akira's work on Dragonball and Dragonball Z. The original concept of Dragonball was obviously inspired off of the famous Chinese tale of Journey to the West, but there are so many other movies that inspired several other concepts featured in the series. Kami's Lookout and the healing tanks on Frieza's ship are based off of Cloud City and the Bacta Tanks from Star Wars: The Empire Strikes Back respectively, Goku's origins and the fight scenes were influenced by the movies and comics of Superman, the androids of the Red Ribbon Army (including Sergeant Metallitron and Android 16) and the whole Cell Saga was heavily inspired off of The Terminator and T2: Judgement Day, Frieza's transformations and army are inspired by elements from Alien and the original Star Wars, and the Saiyan transformations to the Oozaru and the giant monsters take you back to the old King Kong and Godzilla movies.

These influences are really noticable throughout the series and I don't think that's a bad thing at all.
He's just paying homage to some really awesome media.
Phantom Enemy Arc - Love Conquers All

Author's Note: Fair warning to all of you, this is a ridiculously long chapter. I basically put two chapters into one here, so you may have a hard time chugging through it. I recommend regular breaks and plenty of hydration. Thank you.

I promise next chapter won't be so long.

Dragonball Z

Legacies

Love Conquers All

(Meanwhile)

Out in the hallways that circled around the main building and its central labs, the employees of Capsule Corp were going about their business as they normally would and performing whatever duties they'd been assigned for the hour. Two staff members in particular, a pair of security guards dressed in blue uniforms with the company logo sewn into their shoulder pads and hats, were presently ambling down the corridor toward the research wing on the far side. With one of the men carrying a cappuccino in his right hand and a magazine under his arm, it was safe to say that he'd just come on duty and was moving to his assigned station.

Engaged in conversation with his colleague, the officers were making good time on their walk through the facility. But then, just as they were about to turn off from their current point, an earth shaking tremor followed by a deafening 'bang' echoed throughout the hallway, the force of which threw both men stumbling forward. Spilling his coffee, the guard on the right slapped his hand against the wall for support and spun around, where he and his stunned partner saw a woman in a black jumpsuit lying underneath the window on the side of the hallway, surrounded by a pile of dry wall.

Shaking her head of the debris and pushing herself to her feet, the blonde woman groaned and looked up, where she saw the gaping hole she'd formed with her body. Needless to say, despite being sent flying through several offices and hallways, she was looking surprisingly chipper.

In fact you could say she was entertained. "Heh. Well now… that was fun."

"Freeze!"

The shout catching Hasky's attention, the woman quickly looked to her left to see two Capsule Corp security personnel pointing their pistols at her; tasers to be exact. When she saw they were both glaring at her and locked into firing stances, the blonde gave them a single look over before turning back to the hole she'd been thrown through.

It was obvious that despite having two firearms pointed in her direction, she wasn't interested in them in the slightest.

Irked that the woman was deliberately ignoring their instruction, the security guard with the bristly beard edged around and gritted his teeth. "Get down on the floor and put your hands behind your head!" Moving further to the front of the offender, the man switched the safety off and held the gun up higher. "Get down on the floor, now!" He added a step forward to his movements, hoping that it would prompt the figure in the jumpsuit into responding. When this failed however and the golden haired intruder failed to budge an inch, the officer glanced back at his friend and shouted,
"Okay. Drop her!"

Both men then fired their stun guns at her, hoping to take the woman down in one hit. However, when the pins they launched struck the woman's suit and proceeded to electrocute her, Hasky simply stood in place with barely a twitch. Even though she had over a thousand volts coursing through her body, the blonde remained completely unfazed.

After several seconds of being zapped, the thief's eyes then snapped towards the two security officers, who she saw recoil under her glare.

Freaking out, the pair then dropped their tasers and drew their Berettas. Loading them, both men then proceeded to empty their clips on the woman, only to watch their bullets get disintegrated by an invisible energy field surrounding her body. The projectiles burned up in a series of golden flashes, just an inch above their intended target. When their side arms finally clicked on empty, the security guards lowered said weapons and backed away fearfully.

Grunting at their pitiful attempts to stop her, two tiny spheres of energy appeared to hover on Hasky's left-hand side, before they suddenly shot towards the two men and nailed them in the stomachs. The projectiles knocked them off their feet and sent them tumbling down the corridor, where they both ended up in unconscious heaps on the tiled floor.

"Mongrels," the blonde muttered. As soon as she'd handily dispatched the men, the intruder then looked back towards the hole in the wall, just in time to see her attacker lumber his way into view.

Footsteps stomping along the ground, the man in the black spandex, green armor and boots, knocked away the bits of wall that was blocking his path and forced his way through the gap. As soon as he was in the hallway, Android 16 rose up to full height and, eyes fixing upon his target, began to speak. "Hostile interface identified as Hasky Valentine. Wanted for five extreme counts of suspected breaking and entering, three counts of grand theft auto, eighteen counts of assault, eleven counts of destruction of property, three counts of impersonating an officer…"

Rolling her eyes, Hasky then frowned at her opponent, "Yeah. Sure. Whatever. Are you going to read me my Miranda Rights too or are we going to fight?"

Fast forwarding on his target analysis, Android 16's eyes narrowed and he took another big step forward. "Threat analysis: complete. Suspect assessment: armed and extremely dangerous. Use of deadly force: authorized." Clenching his fists, the large man's body suddenly bulked up, his muscles emitting a loud 'squelching' sound as they expanded widthwise. To accompany this sudden alteration, not only did the cyborg's height increase with his body mass, his armor plating and spandex also thickened when several more sections of armor popped out to cover his more vital areas. Once his transformation was complete, the android's eyes flickered with an array of red numbers. "Energy restrictors: deactivated. Total output set to one hundred percent. Activating primary defense protocols. Now commencing termination of hostile links to Son Gohan."

Blinking in surprise at the android's jolt in size and stature, Hasky grinned broadly, "I stand corrected. You might actually present a challenge to me after all." She then set herself into a fighting stance against her newly modified adversary.

Android 16's frown deepened the moment the lights in his eyes stopped flashing. "Battle mode locked and activated. You're going down, bitch!" Moving faster than the human eye could track the enormous man lunged at the woman and struck down at her with a right overhand, intent on either caving her head in or sending his target through the floor.
However, despite his sudden burst of speed, Android 16 ended up missing when his opponent's form blurred and darted off down the hall to his left. Grunting irritably, the giant cyborg gave chase, rushing after the blonde as she skidded to a stop several doors down the strip. As soon as Hasky stopped, the woman thrust her hand forward and fired a golden blast towards the android in an effort to blow a hole through his chassis. She then recoiled in shock when she saw her target plow through the attack effortlessly, a split second before he rammed his shoulder into her. The blow sent Hasky flying further down the corridor like she'd just been hit by a train.

"Interesting." She then frowned when she saw the armored warrior come thundering towards her, yelling out as he skidded to a stop directly in front of her position and chucked a left hook down at his target.

In a shocking display of movement and acrobatic ability, Hasky spun her legs in a windmill motion on the floor and, while avoiding the man's downward punch, simultaneously kicked him in the face. The blow slammed across the android's cheeks, sending spit flying out of his mouth, before the woman back flipped to her feet and assumed a fighting stance. After the red haired android stumbled to a stop, he then lunged forward with a right hook, only for his opponent to duck and land three consecutive body shots. The blows however bounced off of the cyborg's thick abdominals and armor, allowing Android 16 to throw a left uppercut at the assassin. Hasky managed to slip around the punch and, jumping up at the hulking robot, nailed him with a right cross.

The fist slammed into his face. But just when it seemed like she'd hurt him, the robot suddenly grabbed her arm with both hands, spun her, and smashed her into the side wall. Holding onto her as he plowed her through the plasterboard, unintentionally punching a new doorway to the lab, Android 16 then dragged her out of the wall and chucked her back down the corridor from whence they'd come.

Tucking her body up and spinning through the air to control her flight, Hasky quickly recovered from the toss and landed safely on her own two feet, sliding along the tiles to a stop. As soon as she did, the woman then glared ahead of her to see her opponent in a full on charge, his fists primed and ready to go. Not wishing to be pummeled into the floor, the blonde woman then smirked, which prompted the red lines on her suit to flash brightly. When they did, the assassin suddenly darted forward in a blur of movement, much faster than Android 16 was anticipating. He quickly received a front kick to the stomach, stopping his approach dead. After staggering away, he then swung at the woman with an uppercut, nailing her in the chin with a concussive blow.

However, despite seemingly knocking the woman off her feet, he suddenly saw Hasky's form flicker before vanishing, revealing itself to be a hologram. Caught completely off guard, the android was unable to respond in time when the real assassin slipped around him, wrapped her arms around his waist, and suplexed the giant of a robot into the floor behind them. The cyborg's impact with the floor head first was marked by a deafening artillery blast as an enormous crater was punched into the tiles, rattling the building, splintering the corridor and shattering every window in their area.
The two security guards watching nearby had to brace themselves to stop from being thrown about the hallway.

Almost instantly after putting the android on his back, Hasky flipped onto his chest like an acrobat and pinned his limbs to the floor. She then leered down at the stunned Sixteen like a cat, meeting his glare head on, before raising her right hand over her head. "You got in some good hits, big boy." A cloud of golden photons then formed above her, all of which came together and solidified into a gold Spartan sword. As soon as her fingers wrapped around it, the assassin took aim and grinned. "But I'm afraid your time is up."

Android 16 frowned, "Not while I'm still functioning."

"Whatever you say." Smirking, the woman then drew back and prepared to stab the android through the head. But just as she was swinging down, Hasky was unexpectedly kicked in the face and sent rocketing down the hallway, losing her weapon in the process. Bouncing across the floor and back onto her feet, the blonde skidded to a halt and looked up with a start, where she saw Videl standing in front of the downed Android 16 at his defense.

When the raven haired girl rose to full height, she shot the blonde woman a threatening glare.

"Who are you?" Videl practically shouted, continuing to mark the intruder down while Android 16 struggled to his feet. "What are you doing here?"

Flicking her hair back, Hasky chuckled, "Get lost, little girl. You have no idea who you're dealing with."

Baring her teeth with a snarl, the crime fighter quickly brought her hands up into a boxing stance. "I can say the same for you." She then nodded towards the woman threateningly and went into full police mode, "Put your hands on your head and get on the ground. Now!"

Scoffing, the master thief in the jumpsuit suddenly jumped up and, brandishing a finger at the girl like a gun, fired a golden bolt of energy in her direction. The blast shot towards Videl, who quickly slapped the projectile out the window and sprinted forward in a blur. Acting instinctively, Hasky continued shooting golden bullets of energy at the approaching girl, attempting to take her out. However, with a few head feints and body slips, Videl avoided every single one of them until she was directly in front of her quarry. With a loud yell, the raven haired warrior threw a big hook at her target, which the assassin promptly blocked.

Videl then kicked the woman in the leg and followed up with a knee, only for Hasky to check and block both blows respectively. After those attacks failed, the Z-fighter then ducked when the blonde chucked a hook at her head, which the crime fighter responded to with an uppercut. She successfully managed to get the thief to slip her head back and avoid it, allowing Videl to follow up with a left hook. Quick as ever though, the woman in the jumpsuit caught her wrist and held it tightly.

Gritting her teeth in frustration, Videl then threw a right cross with her free arm, but watched as the surprisingly quick intruder caught that as well.

Normally, against any other opponent, the spirited female fighter would've wrestled her way out of a grapple like this, no problem. However, the raven haired girl gave a surprised yelp when she suddenly saw the red lines on Hasky's suit light up and felt her body forced downwards as her opponent began to pressure her into a submissive position. Videl dropped to her knee as a result, growling in effort as her smirking adversary continued to push her towards the floor with an absurd amount of raw strength.
Struggling as she attempted to fight back, putting all the energy she could muster into their grapple, the raven haired teenager then looked down at the suit her opponent was wearing. "She's using this armor... to make her body stronger. Just like that other one."

It was this analysis alone that led Videl to one conclusion.

This one was working for the same man as that other prick that attacked them not too long ago.

Looking back up at the blonde, the young fighter choked out, "W-Who... are you... working for?"

"My, aren't you full of questions," Hasky hissed back through a wide grin, her green eyes twinkling with mischief. "Well... as much as I'd like to tell you, I'm afraid that that's a secret I'm going to have to take to my grave." Almost as soon as she said that, another cloud of golden photons gathered together over her shoulder and instantaneously formed into a golden spear, complete with fancy engravings and decorations, with the tip pointing straight down at Videl's head. The teen's eyes went wide in shock when she saw the weapon materialize out of thin air in front of her. It was a sight that brought an excited grin to Hasky's face, "Cheerio-"

"Rocket Punch!"

Head snapping up when she heard the shout, a loud thunderclap rang out when Hasky had a massive fist slam into her face, a blow that not only forced her to release Videl, but also sent her flying back with blood flying from her mouth.

Stunned, the raven haired crime fighter looked back to see the fist that'd been fired shoot back in the direction it'd come and watched it get caught by the free hand of Android 16. She then watched as the battered android with the bleeding lip shove his detached limb back into place, twist it, and lock it into its socket.

"Surprise attack: successful," Android 16 said, smiling across at the raven haired girl in front of him as he rose to full height. "Thank you for the assistance, Videl Satan."

Upon smiling gratefully at her savior, the poster girl of Satan City then snapped around to see Hasky roll backwards along the floor and jump to her feet. Despite being hit full on by the cyborg's piston of a punch and signature technique, the blonde not only had her head still attached to her neck, but she still looked to be in relatively good condition. The sight of her straightening up put a frown on the young Z-fighter's lips and had a bead of sweat run down the teen's temple.

"She's a tough one. Do you think we can beat her?" Videl asked.

Stomping forward to stand alongside the Z-fighter, the red haired cyborg with the Mohawk furrowed his brow thoughtfully. "My sensors indicate that this woman, Hasky, is using an extremely advanced energy-based combat suit to shield her body and increase her fighting power to an incredibly high level. It's also given her the ability to create hologram-based after images and form solid objects out of matter, such as swords and spears. Due to the sophisticated nature of the suit's design, I am unable to ascertain the full extent of her abilities."

This piece of information didn't sit too comfortably with the raven haired fighter. "Okay. So in other words... you don't know?"

After a moment of processing, Android 16 lowered his head, "By my calculations, the two of us alone should be able to deal a maximum amount of fifteen percent damage to her combat chassis, before she eventually decides to terminate us."

"Wow... you are just... a walking mountain of comfort, aren't you?" Videl remarked while rolling
The red haired cyborg smiled, "Affirmative."

His response had the teenager's eye twitch. "That wasn't a compliment."

Blood trickling down from the corner of her mouth, the female assassin reached up, wiped off the spillage on the back of her hand, and grinned menacingly. Calming herself down and recovering from the minor amount of damage, the human fighter widened her stance and chuckled, "Got another one in yah?" Before she could take anymore action against the two heroes, she suddenly heard the sounds of approaching footsteps and snapped her gaze over her shoulder. Looking down the corridor behind her, she quickly spotted Piccolo, Goten and Trunks skid to a stop several feet away from her, and was joined shortly afterwards by Chi-Chi and Bulma.

The three warriors, upon arriving on the scene, took fighting stances and set their crosshairs firmly on their intruder.

The moment Hasky spotted the newcomers, her eyes suddenly widened when she thought she saw a ghost. "Wait... is that...?" She shook her head and focused all of her attention on Goten, wondering if she was hallucinating or something. When she saw the boy was the spitting image of the kid she remembered fighting twenty years ago, the blonde woman frowned deeply and clenched her fist. "He must be Goku's other son... the younger brother to Son Gohan."

Oh, how she detested that face and the untold amounts of misery and humiliation it'd brought to her. It made her sick to her stomach just remembering how handily she'd been taken care of. Her! The woman regarded as the greatest thief on the entire planet.

Realizing she was cornered in that tight hallway, the blonde frowned and looked between her opponents carefully. It was then she spared a momentary glance at the world outside and, seeing the clouds beginning to part and the sun appear from behind them, a smirk quickly formed across her lips. Not willing to let the Z-fighters gang up on her in here, the woman crouched low and sprang out the window backwards, shattering the pane as she then dropped down to the property's front lawn. The warriors gathered in that hallway appeared bewildered at the woman's sudden retreat, before unanimously agreeing to give chase.

"Hey! Where is she going?" Goten shouted.

"Who cares? Let's get her!" his friend Trunks yelled, nudging his friend in the side and jumping out the window first.

Kicking themselves into gear, the rest of the fighting members of the crew leapt after the children one after the other, breaking the rest of the windows that were still intact. Chi-Chi and Bulma meanwhile rushed over to the sill and looked out the broken line of panels, where they then stood and proceeded to watch the battle that would unfold.

Hasky, unwilling to get cornered so easily, dashed across the grass to get away from the Z-warriors who were following close behind. She was making good progress to. But just as she was about to reach the fence circling the property, a series of golden flashes drew the thief's attention forward. Skidding to an abrupt stop, the blonde then watched as photons of light gathered on the lawn in front of her, which then formed into a person. A split second later, Kana materialized in front of the assassin, hands on her hips and a smirk on her face. Though this occurrence would've normally alarmed a normal person, Hasky merely stopped, frowned at the Seirei, and watched the newcomer flick her fiery hair back over her shoulder.

"You can't leave now. You haven't seen the ending," the space traveler greeted in her usual, cheerful tone. Since she'd managed to intercept the target without any worries whatsoever, she was confident in both her victory and her position.

Narrowing her eyes and sparing a glance back over her shoulder at the group of Z-fighters now gathering a few yards behind her, Hasky straightened up and clenched her fists. The moment she did, the lines all over her suit lit up and radiated a menacing, radioactive red glow.

Just before Kana could question what she was doing, multiple clouds of golden photons gathered around the alien on all sides and rapidly formed into twelve separate bodies. When the light surrounding them faded, they revealed themselves to be twelve perfect clones of the blonde haired assassin facing down the Seirei, each looking exactly identical to the original. The sight of the multiple doppelgangers not only baffled the heroes, but it had the alien girl look around at them with a surprised glimmer in her gaze.

"Whoa! What the heck?" Videl exclaimed, shaking her head to see if she wasn't hallucinating.

"Is that… Tien's Multi-Form Technique?" Piccolo asked, before looking over the group of identical assassins warily. "No. This is something else..."

After glancing around at the crowd of blondes circling her, the orange haired woman from another world scoffed and looked back at who she suspected was the original Hasky standing in front of her. "This is supposed to scare me?" Kana asked, a wide grin forming across her face while she shrugged at her adversary. "They're just illusions."

All of a sudden, the clone standing on the alien's left cocked her fist back and decked the Seirei across the face with a painful 'crack.' Kana yelped in shock when the blow connected, a split second before she was set upon by all twelve of the clones, which began attacking her from all sides in a blur. Videl, Piccolo, Goten, Trunks and Android 16 then proceeded to watch as Kana was viciously assaulted by the platoon of doppelgangers, which nailed her from all sides with punches and kicks. When the Seirei attempted to evade and block them, she instead received several devastating attacks in return, the last hook sending her to the ground and causing blood to dribble out of her mouth.

Groaning while on her hands and knees, the dazed woman shook her head as the twelve clones formed another ring around her. "They do pack a wallop though." She then looked up at the copies in front of her with a glare.

One of the clones smirked, before the red lines on every single copy began to glow. A split second later, more photons of light gathered around the group and Kana quickly found herself surrounded by fifty more Hasky clones. The one standing closest to the Seirei, taking advantage of the moment, spoke up, "I can make light solid, chump." She then kicked the fiery haired girl in the face, sending Kana flying back across the grass, where she was almost instantly set upon by the army of copies.

The girl in the plug suit jumped to her feet and attempted to fend off the clones, even firing two simultaneous blasts in an effort to force them to back off. But the copies, quick as ever, evaded the attacks and rushed in, pummeling Kana from all sides. The alien traveler successfully managed to exchange blows and defend herself against the first few. However, as their numbers increased and the space she was using shrunk, she soon began receiving more and more hits to the body, resulting in her being dropped like a sack of flour. As soon as the woman was on her hands and knees, the army of Hasky clones rushed in and jumped on her, forming a dog pile on top of the poor girl.
While Kana was dealing with the contingent of assassins, outside of the gathering of blonde copies, a single Hasky stood watch with her hands on her hips. When this solitary doppelganger turned around, she shot a smile at the Z-fighters standing behind her and quickly rotated to face them completely. "Oh. Where are my manners? I almost forgot about you five." As the lines on her suit started to shine brightly once again, the entire field lit up, filling the sky with a brilliant, golden glow and causing the Z-fighters to shield their eyes from the glare.

Several tense moments later, the entire field in front of them was covered in hundreds of Hasky clones, all of whom were glaring menacingly across at the group of warriors. The Z-fighters all took a big step back at the sight of the clone army, the majority of which took fighting stances and readied themselves for combat.

"Holy Moly. How many of them are there?" Trunks exclaimed, blinking his wide eyes as he attempted to count the exact number of blondes he could see.

Eyes flickering with numbers, Android 16 took a split second to scan the crowd before his head lifted ever so slightly, "Exactly five hundred and eighty two replicas."

The lavender haired boy's eye twitched as his head snapped towards his mother's trusted helper and part-time babysitter. "I… was… KIDDING!"

Not having the faintest idea of what they were up against, Piccolo quickly looked across at the Capsule Corp cyborg in alarm, "Hey. Talk to us. Who the hell is this woman?"

Registering to the man's question, the giant, armored male with the Mohawk took a moment to process the inquiry before answering robotically, "Accessing criminal records. Target, first name: Hasky. Last name: Valentine. Primary occupation: mercenary. Formerly a Special Forces Captain of the Imperial Army, specializing in stealth, weaponry and close quarter combat. Suspect wanted internationally for a multitude of crimes, chief among which include burglary, destruction of property and grand theft auto. Disappeared from the limelight three years ago following a failed assassination attempt on President Tsukuda of the Republic of Mendel off the South Western Islands and presumed killed when the plane crashed."

Videl promptly cut the android off after taking a head count of the number of enemies they were now facing. "You've been scanning her suit since the start of the fight, right? Can you tell us how she's using those weird techniques?"

Focusing on one of the Haskys, the red haired machine answered the teen's question as thoroughly as he could, "The woman is wearing a specially designed combat suit constructed out of a double-woven, adamantine coating, and is being shielded by an incredibly strong particle field. After scanning her attack patterns and analyzing her photon constructs, I have discovered that the armor's design is allowing her to channel enormous quantities of energy and bend matter in the form of light, giving her the ability to create weapons, heat blasts, and clones. The same function also enables her to mask her presence and use an active-camouflage system that works doubly as a shape-shifting ability." Android 16's frown deepened even more so. "The technology being used in that suit is beyond anything I've ever encountered before. Not even Bulma Briefs possesses the resources to create a weapon of this grade."

Goten, not really understanding the android's dialogue, attempted to make sense of the news as best as he could. "She sounds like one of those really scary super villains I remember reading about in Trunks' comic books."

"Yeah… only this one is real," the boy's best friend remarked, at the same time scrunching his brow in annoyance, "And that really sucks for all of us."
This news had Piccolo click his tongue and glare across at the woman threateningly "That's just great. So not only are we dealing with a professional assassin, she's also being supercharged by a piece of custom made clothing that allows her to create her own private army at the snap of a finger."

Now why did that sound so familiar to him?

Flashes of their previous fight against Vulcan briefly shot through the Namekian's head, causing him to clench his fists irritably.

The sight of the multitude of opponents prompted the heroes gathered up on the lawn to take defensive stances. The original Hasky, who had her arms folded and was standing at the very front of the crowd, then gave a confident chuckle and gestured towards her opponents. "You didn't seriously think I was going to run, did you? As long as I'm outside, I have the advantage." She then turned to the groups of copies next to her, whom she gave an approving nod as soon as their eyes met. "Take them down."

Obeying their creator's instructions, the blonde army wasted no time in charging forward, giving a collective battle cry as they thundered towards the Capsule Corp's enormous estate and towards their enemy. Any and all civilians who were out and passing by the property became absolutely baffled by the sight of hundreds of doppelgangers making their charge across the front lawn. Even the employees and security inside the industry giant's main building had dropped everything they were doing to turn out and watch the spectacle taking place right outside their front door.

Seeing the thousands of blondes charging towards them forced the heroes into action. Piccolo, moving quickly, forcibly ripped his turban and cape off in one swipe, Goten and Trunks transformed into Super Saiyans, and Videl powered up to her maximum, her white aura bursting around her like a flame. As soon as they were set, including the hulking Android 16, the group of heroes then charged forward and met the oncoming storm with a furious opening assault.

The warriors of earth plowed through the crowd of copies in a blur, with the two young Super Saiyans leading the attack and blazing a path right into the formation, decimating swaths of clones in a single stroke. They only managed to carry this on for several seconds until they were jumped from all sides by a squad of blonde clones, forcing the child duo to take them on in hand-to-hand. Thanks to their diminutive figures and ridiculous agility, it made it difficult for the adult Hasky copies to effectively target them and take them out. However, they did have strength in numbers.

Sooner or later, one of them was bound to land a blow on the little imps.

The tide of battle for the other Z-fighters fighting it out across the enormous Capsule Corp estate began to change at each front. In a show of astounding brute force and power, Android 16 plowed through the copies like the Hulk himself, smashing each copy with megaton punches and batting them aside with no regards for their wellbeing whatsoever. Due to the fact that all of the copies were made out of bodies of light, they weren't actually living people. They were just dummies that acted like them and with that knowledge in mind, every single one of the heroes present were given all the motivation they needed to cut loose and give them hell, no matter how much bodily harm was inflicted.

Hell, the cyborg had gotten so into his role as the brawler in this situation that the red haired Sixteen handily caught one of the blonde assassins in his two gigantic hands and ripped her in half, watching in satisfaction as the woman exploded into a shower of golden dust. This was the fate that befell every single one of the doppelgangers that received too much damage, in which all of them either exploded into a cloud of smoke or vanished in a fiery explosion when ki blasts started to fly.
Bellowing at the top of his lungs, Piccolo unleashed an ass kicking of a lifetime when a whole platoon of Hasky copies attempted to surround him. The man knocked them away with a vicious combination of punches and kicks, and even evaded one of the clones who caught him in a full nelson by reaching over, grabbing her hair, and tossing her into another approaching doppelganger. When the two copies crashed into a crowd coming in from behind, causing a domino effect, the Namekian opened his mouth and unleashed a powerful blast at the stricken group. His attack engulfed an entire line of Haskys in a blazing inferno, one that reached the very edge of the highway running parallel to the property.

Gritting his teeth when he saw another wave coming in from the side, the green warrior took flight and avoided ending up at the bottom of a Hasky dog pile. He took to the skies above the city and drifted over the tops of the neighboring skyscrapers, hoping to get a better view of the situation. It was only when he suspended himself in the air that he received quite a surprise when he saw dozens of blonde clones flying after him, all of them shrouded in what appeared to be golden flames.

When Piccolo realized that they could pursue him wherever he went, the Namekian grinned and drew both his hands back, "Here's something for you to think about! Rapid Fire!" The man roared, before unleashing a continuous barrage of energy spheres towards the approaching swarm of doppelgangers.

The Hasky copies flying after the Namekian looked up just in time to see the rain of golden death plummeting towards them, before becoming engulfed in a series of brilliant explosions. Flashes of light filled the sky as Piccolo mercilessly bombarded them, the screams of the women becoming muffled by the thunderclaps that came with the combusting energy balls. The man didn't stop until the entire area of airspace was filled with a thick black cloud, which covered a great deal of the nearby buildings. When the smoke eventually lifted, Piccolo saw another wave of clones coming right at him from below, which put the man into defensive mode once again.

Down on ground level, as Android 16 was taking his opponents apart one by one, Videl was having her own game of tag just a few yards from the killing field. Kicking away opponents left and right, the raven haired teen was making superb use of her superior agility to strike down the onslaught of clones diving at her from all sides. Receiving a few hits of her own, the woman retaliated with a furious onslaught of punches, taking out an entire swath of clones and managed to jump out of the death circle that they'd formed. Powering up, Videl rocketed out of reach of the swarm and onto another part of the property.

Arriving at the main building, the teen fighter fought off a couple more copies that tried to cut her off, elbowing and kicking them out of her way. Once her path was clear, the human fighter sprinted up the side of the main building, while at the same time being pursued by over two dozen of Hasky's copies. When Videl reached the top of the dome structure and looked over her shoulder to see the clones inadvertently line themselves up, the raven haired girl slammed her feet into the roof, spun around, slid to a stop, and threw both hands forward.

When she did, a deafening roar left her hands in the form of an explosion of energy. "KAMEHAME-HAAAAA!" Two enormous blasts of blue ki gushed out of her palms, instantaneously engulfing the wave of attackers and those advancing along the lawn behind them when the attack expanded and flooded the front yard of Capsule Corp. The detonation that followed rocked the entire complex and neighborhood, startling the employees, as well as all the residents in the area.

All those Hasky clones that were standing closest to the heart of the explosion were almost instantly disintegrated. When the smoke cleared seconds later, it revealed an enormous trench had been burnt across Capsule Corp's property and Videl standing proudly at its entry point.

As time ticked on minute by minute, the battle between the Z-fighter's and Hasky's powerful clone army continued. More explosions and shockwaves rang out across the lawn of the enormous estate, with trees and nearby buildings accidentally getting caught in the crossfire. Though the heroes of earth tried to avoid getting the rest of West City involved in their scuffle, they were unable to help let a few stray shots hit the distant buildings and countryside. Little by little, their conflict with the blonde assailant slowly, but surely, moved to encompass the rest of the nation.

The majority of the battle took place at the source of the outbreak, in other words ground zero. It was here, in the very heart of the conflict, Hasky could be seen standing with a smug look on her face and her arms folded comfortably across her chest. Watching as another platoon of clones met their end at the hands of her enemies the blonde woman quickly created another squad and sent them in to pick up the slack. Things were going well from her point of view and she continued to watch the fights play out with a thoroughly entertained look on her face.

But just as she was getting comfortable with the concept of being a spectator, a loud battle cry drew her attention over her shoulder, where she saw the enormous dog pile of clones she'd formed on top of Kana get incinerated in a brilliant flash of light. When the fire lifted and became replaced by a pillar of smoke, a golden bolt shot out of the crater formed by the blast and suspended itself in the sky above. When Hasky looked up, she saw the orange haired Seirei hovering high above her, looking a little bit roughed up but ultimately unharmed.

Snarling when she immediately spotted the original Hasky standing on the grass below, Kana chucked her hands forward and formed a concentrated sphere of energy, which pulsed with golden bolts of electricity shooting off of her. "STAR BURST!" She then launched the attack down at her target like an artillery round, the orb rocketing towards the woman at terrific speed.

In spite of the attack's size and speed, Hasky merely scoffed and nodded her head towards the approaching ball of ki. "Svalinn!" (Shield that deflects the Sun) In the blink of an eye, a golden cloud of dust formed directly above her before solidifying into an enormous Norse shield, about the size of a pagoda roof, with a sun crest on its front, which suspended itself protectively above its owner. The attack launched by Kana impacted the circular barrier with a metallic clang, but ended up disintegrating against its surface in a shower of sparks.

Recoiling in shock, Kana hurriedly fired three more of the exact same attack from her hands in rapid succession, shouting every time the blasts left her hands. The attacks, each carrying enough power to disintegrate an entire planet, rained down on Hasky with the intent of wiping her out. But every time the energy balls impacted against the plate of golden steel, they rebounded and dispelled with no effect whatsoever. The instant the attacks were stopped, the massive shield broke apart into a cloud of photons and instantaneously reformed into a golden spear, with lightning and wind engravings all along its shaft.

When the tip pointed directly up at Kana, the metal began to glow and funnel golden wind energy into a miniature cyclone around it. As soon as the air gathering started to reach critical mass, Hasky smirked and uttered her next incantation. "Gae Bolg!" (Spear of Mortal Pain) The Celtic spear then launched a powerful beam straight from its blade, which shot up towards Kana faster than a bolt of lightning.

The super fast attack caught the Seirei by surprise, first impacting her in the chest and knocking her spinning out of the sky, before continuing to travel off planet and across the solar system. It was only when the blast reached the approximate orbital distance of Neptune did its power finally recede and the attack finally faded, with the spear formed by the particles vanishing on the wind in Kana, who'd been the primary target of the attack, crash landed on the lawn of Capsule Corp with an earthshaking bang and a shower of debris. Seeing the woman's collision with the ground brought a smirk to Hasky's face, only to have it vanish moments later when she sensed another presence teleport directly behind her. When she spun around, she saw Piccolo lunging at her with a punch, his eyes set firmly on her head. The blonde woman blinked in alarm as the Namekian dove at her, letting out a yell of effort as his knuckles cut towards her face.

All of a sudden, the momentum in Piccolo's attack vanished when his body unexpectedly jerked to a stop. Eyes widening in bewilderment, the man looked behind him to see a series of golden chains wrapped around his arms, chest and torso in a very web-like formation. Each of the golden lengths protruding from four energy spheres hovering about in the air, they held the green warrior firmly in place, before the warrior's eyes snapped back towards his opponent.

Her face hovering just a few inches from his, Hasky grinned. "You want to play, too? Very well. Loeding!" (First Chain of Fenrir)

Piccolo yelled out in shock when his body was then yanked backwards and tossed through the air, the chains of energy whipping him in circles through the sky several times. After making about fifteen turns, the chains then threw the former guardian high into the air and released him, sending him hurtling into the clouds and providing the blonde assassin the perfect target.

Thrusting her arm out and pointing her thumb, index finger and middle finger at the airborne Namekian, the woman smirked and spoke, "Donar!" (Thunder) In a flash, golden streams of lightning exploded from her fingers and struck the green warrior like a whip, engulfing him and burning him from head to toe. Piccolo cry of agony echoed for miles, before he was thrown across the city and into a distant skyscraper, which he impacted against and took out every single window on that floor.

After sending that nuisance packing, the blonde woman then turned her attention forward once again, where she saw a swath of her clones get cut down, and Goten and Trunks come blasting through them directly towards her.

"Leave Mr. Piccolo alone!" the former of the two shouted, his body covered in noticeable bruises and his eyes burning with fury. Both boys gave simultaneous battle cries as they rushed the assassin in front of them.

Seeing that the two of them were bathed in their Super Saiyan auras as they went at her at full speed, Hasky merely grunted and, using the same hand she'd wielded to cast her lightning attack at Piccolo, summoned a lance into her hand. The stylishly engraved Yari dropping into her palm, the woman cocked it over her shoulder and swung it through the air. The result was the blade at the end unleashing a golden wave of energy at the two children, the force being so great it not only ripped the ground in front of them asunder, it sent the youngsters barreling across the property, simultaneously decimating the remaining army of clones she had fighting on her behalf.

Android 16, in the midst of taking out another wave of them, ended up getting hit headlong by the lance's shockwave, and was sent barreling over the lawn under the hail of rubble.

Watching her effortless swing lay down a path of total destruction across Capsule Corp's doorstep, literally fracturing the earth with its effectiveness, Hasky then twirled the lance around and laid it across her neck. Drumming her fingers against the metal bar and inspecting her handiwork, Hasky then glanced upwards when she sensed another presence approaching and saw Videl diving straight down at her.
Yelling out, the girl struck at the blonde with the intent of burying her, only to hear a loud clang echo across the estate when her knuckles slammed into a transparent, golden bubble that jumped up around her target. The crime fighter of Satan City gritted her teeth at the way her attack was stopped, which earned a satisfied smirk from the assassin she was trying to beat up.

Without warning, Videl quickly vanished in a blur of speed and dropped down directly in front of her opponent. As soon as she did, she struck at Hasky with a roundhouse kick. She then watched in frustration as her foot slammed into the same shield, which completely deflected the force of her blow and sent the raven haired girl sliding back along the ground behind her. When it seemed like her attack had ended, the female crime fighter threw her hand forward and let loose a scattered ki blast. The five individual rounds curved through the air and converged on Hasky's position, only to bounce off of her light barrier one after the other.

Before Hasky could make a comment on the girl's seemingly pitiful attack, she suddenly sensed Kana teleport behind her and strike at her head. The blonde woman evaded the swift punch however, allowing the Seirei to overshot, which ended in the orange haired alien getting nailed in the back by the woman's staff when she spun it about. This sent the space traveler flying forward and into the ground, leading to the alien bouncing off of the ruined floor and back to her feet. Sliding to a stop, the plug-suit wearing visitor glared up from where she was crouched on all fours, her face covered in burns and bruises.

Videl's appearance looked no better than hers and, standing side by side, the two women faced off against the original Hasky with courage and annoyance radiating equally between them.

Catching her breath, Kana couldn't help but curse, "Damn it… this woman is powerful. No matter what we try or how fast we move, she's always waiting with a counter attack."

"Not only that, but it also seems like she's getting stronger," Videl added, at the same time hearing Goten and Trunks land behind them to join the fray. This then led to the raven haired girl looking across at them with a serious glare. "Listen. We won't be able to do anything unless we get passed her defenses, so I think the best course of action is to attack her from all sides at the same time. That way we can get through that barrier and stop her from using any of those weird weapons."

The Seirei narrowed her eyes, "Are you sure that will work?"

"I don't know, but we have to try something. She only seems to be able to summon one type of weapon at a time and all of them have a limited range. If we tag her with synchronized blows, there's no way she'll be able to block them all."

Considering the girl's words for a moment and looking across at their adversary, whom they could see was standing in the middle of the decimated landscape with her spear over her shoulder and a cocky smile on her face, Kana then clenched her fists and nodded. "Alright. Let's do it."

Her take off was all the signal Videl, Goten and Trunks needed to act as well, the three breaking off and darting in different directions. They formed up positions in a triangular formation around Hasky, who watched the group act with an intrigued look in play. When she turned her attention skywards, she saw Kana hovering above her with her arms outstretched and two golden energy spheres beginning to gather in her palms. Watching the woman charge up her attack for a few moments, she then looked throughout the rest of the sky to see Android 16 and Piccolo fall into line, with both warriors locking their crosshairs onto her and taking aim with what was to be their hardest hitting moves.
While the cyborg detached his arms and pointed the stumps down at her, the Namekian had his fingers pressed and locked together in front of him, and a ball of blazing white energy gathering between his palms that was flashing like a strobe. The same could be said for the other three fighters on ground level, the Super Saiyan children's auras flaring brightly and Videl bathed in her own white flame, her hands cupped at her side in an all too familiar stance.

Masses of ki gathering in their users' respective hands filled the area with a blinding light show, which dragged on for only a few seconds. Then, as soon as their blasts were fully charged, all six warriors unleashed their attacks at the exact same time.

Kana bellowed at the top of her lungs and threw her hands forward, "Block this! STAR CRASHER!" A deafening howl similar to that of the Final Flash then echoed across the sky as an enormous golden beam exploded from her palms and barreled towards the assassin down below.

At the same time, Videl and Goten fired off two Kamehamehas at the center, whereas Trunks rounded it out with his Buster Cannon. Joining the onslaught, Piccolo and Sixteen completed the simultaneous attacks with a Light Grenade and a Hell's Flash respectively, the attacks leaving them with a chorus of thunder claps. The barrage of multi-colored shots rained down on the blonde haired woman's position from different angles, who appeared quite impressed at the enormous output of energy she was witnessing. All of that changed though when her entire body was swiftly swallowed up by the blasts coming together and fusing into a single, white sphere. The individual beams continued to grind together so that the mass of light in the center grew until, the construct reached critical mass.

The sphere detonated with catastrophic force, sending a shockwave over the Capsule Corp main building and the rest of the neighborhood. All of West City shook under the terrifying force of the exploding attacks, startling the population and knocking entire groups of people off their feet. Screams rang out across the entire metropolis when people left and right thought that the entire country was being hit by an earthquake that could split the ground at any second. It soon came as a relief to all of them when the anomaly faded shortly thereafter, leaving a huge mushroom cloud of embers and smog hanging over the land of the worldwide conglomerate.

Standing or floating in the spots they'd wound up in, the group of Z-fighters took a few moments to survey the scene, panting heavily from the effort of their respective blasts. The only one who didn't appear exhausted was Android 16, who hid his fatigue behind a veil of uncertainty as he reattached his gauntlets to his arms and tightened them into place. His blue eyes narrowing, the cyborg then proceeded to scan the heart of the catastrophic explosion, looking over ground zero for any sign of their quarry.

For a moment, it seemed like their combined shots had worked. But when the smoke lifted a full minute later, Piccolo, Videl, Kana and everyone else in the area then looked on in disbelief when they saw their foe emerge from the cloud, standing in the center of a massive crater, completely unharmed.

The reason for that could be seen floating around her in the form of eight individual golden shields, all of which were held up in the directions the attacks had come from.

These weren't ordinary shields either. The circular steel barricades were all the exact same model of weapon; a perfectly formed plate of thin steel that glowed as brightly as the sun. The surface of each screen had the same texture, with the carving of a lotus flower and a helix ring stamped into all of them. However, the face of each plate had been polished to such a degree that if you were to look into them, you could literally see your reflection staring back at you. This was exactly what each of the Z-fighters in the area saw in the table-top sized disks.
Before they could do or say anything, their enemy, who was standing in the middle of the defensive formation with her spear held over her shoulder, grinned and opened her eyes to gaze up at her airborne targets.

The first person she looked at, Piccolo, would be the first to suffer the wrath of her counterattack.

"Yata no Kagami," (Eight Hand Mirror) the woman whispered.

The shield that'd been used to block the Namekian's attack flashed brightly, before the warrior's own Light Grenade came flying out of the mirror to strike the man in the chest. Piccolo's scream of agony filled the air when his blast exploded against his chest and sent him flying.

And that was only the beginning. Just before the other Z-fighters could try anything, the other mirrors that'd caught the attacks also flashed, and returned the group's blasts to their respective owners. Every single warrior standing or floating in that area was struck by the sum total force of their own techniques, exploding against them, knocking them off their feet, and sending them flying across Capsule Corp's property, trailing smoke.

But then, just when it seemed like all of them had been struck down, Videl and Trunks surprised them all by dodging the attacks flung at them and mounted a charge on the blonde woman. They flew at Hasky at full speed, avoiding the blasts that flew at them from the mirrors.

Seeing the two fighters approaching her at blazing speed, the assassin breathed a heavy sigh and, swishing a finger through the air, responded with an instant counter. "Dorni." (Second Chain of Fenrir) All of a sudden, golden chains materialized out of thin air and whipped across the lawn towards her attackers, catching them completely by surprise and snagging them in a net of golden metal. The interlocking cables wrapped around the two young warriors and bound them in a hot snare, which then suspended the pair several feet above the ground. The exact same thing happened to the other Z-fighters.

Before Kana, Android 16, Piccolo or Goten could even hit the ground the same golden chains appeared around their bodies and snapped tight, binding them in a similar manner to their friends. Crucified and prostrated in the sky around the blonde assassin, the group was quickly brought to heel before her might. Though Kana and Piccolo struggled, the duo was unable to break loose of their binds, which slowly brought them into Hasky's line of sight and allowed the woman to do a headcount of her opponents.

As soon as she saw that all of her targets were present and accounted for, the blonde grinned victoriously. "You are beaten. An impressive feat, considering I'm just an ordinary human, but understandable given the technology that I have in my possession," Hasky exclaimed arrogantly, at the same time whipping her hair back to bask in the aura of her achievement. When she saw the hateful glares of her targets staring back at her, she then nodded to each of them in descending order of preference. "Even I'm surprised at how easily I was able to dispose of all of you. Guess that entire year I spent training in the simulator to gain full control of this suit was worth the pain of fitting into it after all."

Gritting her teeth as she continued fighting against the chains holding her by her wrists, ankles and torso, Videl shouted across at their opponent. "You won't get away with this, you bitch!"

Chuckling when she heard the slight directed towards her, the thief glanced across at the trapped crime fighter and tilted her head. "Mongrels shouldn't talk to people of higher stature like that… especially a spoilt little princess like you, Ms. Satan." Turning towards the teen she was addressing, Hasky shook her head at her pitifully. "Did you honestly think you could take me out with a combined attack from different directions because you thought I could only summon one weapon at a time? Well…” The lines on her suit glowing once again, Hasky then snapped her fingers, causing golden clouds of energy to gather directly in front of all eight of her trapped victim. A split second later, the masses of dust transformed into lances and swords, with their tips pointed directly at their targets. The weapons materializing right in front of their faces startled the Z-fighters, allowing Hasky to finish her sentence on a high note. "Unfortunately for all of you, that is most definitely not the case."

Gawking at the golden sword hovering right in front of him, a frightened Trunks then powered up and started thrashing about even more. It was only when the blade floated closer to him that the boy stopped his struggling and Hasky wagged her finger at him, making a 'tsk-tsk' sound as she did so.

"It's just like your android said…” Turning her attention to Piccolo and Kana, the blonde thief quickly took advantage of her superior position to brag, "My suit was designed with the ability to form solid objects out of matter in the form of light, allowing me to change my appearance, create duplicates of myself, and forge weapons of the highest grade and class. By programming the designs of legendary weapons into my armor and the incantations used to trigger them, my boss has granted me the ability to summon the tools of every single legendary warrior throughout history.” She then swung the spear she was holding around and slammed the tip into the ground, giving the Z-fighters an example of what she meant. "However, unlike the original owners of these weapons, my suit doesn't rely on ki to operate them. It's actually solar powered… drawn on rays of light from the sun; the purest energy source in the world." She then pointed towards the sky, pulling the group's attention to the ball of hydrogen they could see hovering in the center of their Solar System, and the very entity that their planet was now orbiting. "The more sun there is, the more energy I have at my disposal and the more I have to increase my power."

"So that's it," Piccolo thought, gritting his teeth irately when he glared down at the woman standing before them. "While we've been running around and fighting her army of clones, she's been siphoning energy off of the earth's sun, growing stronger and stronger as the battle progressed." It was simple physics. Her proficiency in combat all depended on the circumstances of their field and the quality of sunlight she received. That explained why she was unable to demonstrate all of these techniques indoors and why she deliberately took the battle outside. She'd strategically placed herself in the optimal position to use her abilities to their absolute fullest and, right now, she had them all trapped. "I hate to admit this… but I don't think any of us has a chance against her."

Smirking at the stunned and enraged expressions she saw, the blonde thief flicked her hair over her shoulder and beamed. "It's a fitting ability for someone like me… the one who is called the 'Greatest Thief in the World.' My power is so great I'm able to plunder the graves of the mightiest warriors across time and space.” Looking down at the spear she was holding and seeing it gleam under the light of the sun, the woman analyzed it for a couple of seconds and prodded its tip with her finger. When she was done, she then turned her attention to Goten, an action that had the boy recoil fearfully at the look in her eyes. "Oh well. Enough with the pointless monologue. I think it's time for all of you to die."

Thrusting her hand up, she caused all the weapons hanging in front of the Z-fighters to jerk into firing positions and the chains binding them to tighten. Pained winces quickly appeared on Videl and Goten's faces, at the same time prompting all of them to try one last time to break out of the web that had befallen them. However, thanks to the positioning of the chains and the amount of power coursing through them, it made escape for any member of their group next to impossible.

But then, just when it seemed like they were done for, Kana, narrowing her eyes on the woman in the center, suddenly vanished in a flash of golden light. Her unexpected teleportation startled the thief long enough for the Seirei to attempt one last ambush on the woman by taking her from behind. Fist cocked back, the alien thrust it towards the back of her skull in an effort to take her out. Hasky even turned around in time to see the girl's knuckles flying towards her.

It seemed like a sure hit. However, just when her fist was only an inch from hitting its intended target, Kana was suddenly blindsided by a golden mace appearing out of thin air and nailing her in the side of the head. The counter attack struck her temple and sent the humanoid alien sliding across the ground at high speed. Digging a trench across the ruined lawn, the Seirei ended up lying sprawled out on her back with blood trickling down her face.

Coughing in pain, the female traveler then looked up. When she did, she saw a cluster of swords form above her head and aim directly down at her body.

Hasky, staring at her target from a distance, grinned and raised a tentative hand. "I believe I'll start with you. After I'm done, I'll take care of your friends and anybody else who thinks it's a good idea to stand against me. Then, once I've cleared this area of you retched mongrels, I'll go back to the hospital wing and kill Son Gohan."

"Like hell you will!"

Eyes widening at the shout, Hasky's eyes snapped upwards to see who the heck had suddenly decided to drop in on her party. The rest of the trapped Z-fighters looked up as well. When their eyes fixed upon the sky, they saw the unmistakable form of Paprika, assumed in her Super Makyan form, hovering in the clouds and glaring down at the blonde woman; her left fist held forward and her right palm drawn back to her side. Having apparently been watching the fight from a distance for the last couple of minutes, the young fighter had decided now was as good a time as any to jump in and interrupt the villain's party.

Needless to say everyone, especially Goten, was enthralled to see her.

"Paprika!" the demi-Saiyan child shouted, his eyes brimming with tears of joy.

Blinking as she stared up at the newcomer, Hasky frowned deeply. "Another one? Where in the world have you been hiding?"

Concentrating her energy as best as she could as her expression intensified, the white haired, green-skinned woman in her fully-powered state drew her arms back and shouted at her competitor. "How's this for an answer? Up… your… ASS! FU-RI-KA-KE-HAAAAAAAAAA!

Thrusting her right palm out and drawing her left fist back at the exact same time, a blinding flash of orange light filled the air and the entire neighborhood. While this seemed like the ultimate result of the woman's strike, what the light really originated from was the enormous blast that rocketed from her glowing body and was sent plummeting towards the blonde down below.

Sidetracked by the gargantuan attack descending towards her from up high, Hasky completely forgot about all her other opponents and focused entirely on the attack now falling towards her. Its blazing form caused her shadow to stretch out the closer it came and, as it approached, the blonde scoffed in amusement. After the display of power she'd seen from the Z-fighters thus far, she seriously doubted an attack of this level could do anything.

She smirked at the comet of an attack, completely confident at being able to deflect it with her spear, which she held up and jabbed towards the large mass of energy.

"Aww… that's adora-SHIIIIIIIIIIIIIIIIIIIIIIIIIIIIIIIIIIIIIIIIIIIIIIIIIIIIIIIIIIIIIIIT!" Hasky was promptly cut off when the tsunami of an attack crashed right down on top of her with the force of a thousand suns. The attack swallowed her up and burrowed into the earth, causing a gargantuan shockwave that sent debris and dust flying in all directions.

The attack happened so fast and hit with such power that Hasky's lance was completely incinerated by the blast, which didn't do anything to slow it down.

What happened afterwards was instantaneous. The chains holding the Z-fighters dispelled, depositing the warriors on the ground. As soon as they all dropped to the floor, Goten, Trunks, Android 16 and Kana collapsed to their knees, while Videl and Piccolo stood upright and watched the orange blast their comrade had unleashed bury her target into the earth. When the burning light faded and the smoke quickly lifted from the blast, the group saw, to their astonishment, a massive, deep crater about fifty yards across in the perfect shape of a hand.

So the attack Paprika essentially fired at her opponent was a genuine, hand-shaped blast with enough force to slap a planet across its face. It certainly was the most creative attack they'd seen in recent years. There was no arguing that.

While the members of the group struggled to their feet and dusted themselves off from their respective thrashings, Paprika continued to glare down at the field from up high. Keeping her eyes pasted squarely on the palm-shaped fissure she'd formed in the earth, the white haired woman panted a few times and began gathering energy into her other hand. If there was a chance that her target had survived that hit, which there was, she wasn't going to let her catch her breath. She intended to bury her permanently, no matter what it took.

Speak of the devil, several seconds later, after the dust had faded…

"UPSTART, WHITE-HAIRED, BITCH!" Hasky roared as her golden form rocketed up the half-a-kilometer deep fissure and straight up towards her opponent.

Eyes widening in alarm, Paprika gritted her teeth and thrust her other hand forward, unleashing another flash of blinding orange light. "FURIKAKE-HAAAAAAAANAAAAAAA!" Her blasts left her hands with a sonic boom straight down into the fissure she'd formed, causing the entire crater to light up. The sheer speed and power behind her lightning fast blast not only funneled and filed out the edges of the hole, but also slammed headlong into the approaching blonde assassin and knocked her spinning straight back down into it.

Hasky's shocked cry of surprise bounced off of the walls of the depression as she was sent straight down to the bottom.

And so, a painful tug-of-war match between the two fighters ensued. While the Z-warriors surrounding the point of contact got to their feet, all of them were able to look on from a safe distance as Paprika continued to hammer the fissure with a constant string of blasts from her hands. She unleashed the beat down of a lifetime, repeatedly slamming planet splitting attacks into the exact same spot over and over again, not caring whether they were damaging her opponent, but making sure she stayed down there for as long as possible. Whenever she came up, the Makyan knocked her back in with mountain flattening force, rattling not only the blonde with her shots, but the countryside as well.

Gripping his shoulder painfully and feeling the hot winds of the resulting barrage wash over him, Goten, still in his Super Saiyan form, grinned and raised his fist towards his friend in victory. "YEAH! Go Paprika! Beat that woman!"

Blinking as she watched the demon woman continue letting off power shots, Kana shook her head and murmured nervously, "She's not going to stop, is she?"

Hearing the question directed at him, Piccolo frowned, "No." And that was pretty much all he had to say on the matter.

Earth shaking with every blow it took, Hasky tried repeatedly to try and blast her way out of the crevice. She rocketed straight up, her form bathed in the golden glow of her suit's shield. But every time she tried to crawl her way back to the surface, another shot from her opponent would knock her back into the pit and down to the bottom. Though the attacks weren't doing any real damage to her, they were still strong enough to have Hasky's ears ringing and kept her from moving forward. The fact that they were coming in at a continuous rate was also pissing her off something fierce and she decided to let her opponent know in the only way she could.

Blasts still smashing into her like waves, Hasky screamed out at the top of her lungs. "UGH! STOP IT! AUGH!" Another blast knocked her down, only for the assassin to correct her fall and fly straight back up again. "STOP IIIIIIIIIIIIT!" A third blast dropped right on top of her immediately afterwards, hitting her with the force of a nuke and sending her spinning down into hell. "ANGRRYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYY!"

Lightning strikes continued raining down in rapid succession, shaking the planet and echoing across the countryside. With every flash, a clap of thunder sounded, with Paprika's cries of battle accompanying every blow.

"FU! RI! KA! KE! HAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAA!" the Makyan bellowed, thrusting her hands forward and unleashing an attack on every syllable.

OOO

(Meanwhile…)

Across the continent to the East, in the mega city known all over the world as the one bearing the name of the planet's savior, the surface of Talos Industries' branch headquarters stood gleaming under the midday sun. As the streets outside the office building played host to the hustle and bustle of the common folk, deep inside the facility, a different kind of atmosphere had fallen over the head staff and leaders of the conglomerate.

This was most definitely the case for the corporation super giant's founder and owner, who could be seen sitting at his enormous desk looking down at its black surface with a thoughtful look on his face. Leaning back in his thousand zeni office chair and the towering support cushions, Kaiser Talos seemingly carried out his usual daily business of stock taking and number crunching. To any ordinary person or staff member who happened to walk in and see the man posted behind his station, they would immediately believe he was doing important paperwork for the company.

However, to those who were familiar with his everyday dealings and interests, this wasn't the case. Standing to the man's left, enveloped by the shadows of the office, Colonel Violet, dressed in her regular suit and skirt, with her hair pulled back into a tasteful top knot, was looking down at her boss's table with the same interest and focus as he was. Because it wasn't any ordinary documentation or work the man was conducting. They were actually watching a video of Hasky's battle with the Z-fighters.

Receiving different shots of the Capsule Corp property from completely different angles thanks to a series of super powerful, super tiny spy cams similar in design to Doctor Gero's surveillance drones, the pair were given an accurate, live-feed of the events unfolding over in West City.
Thanks to the quality of the tech at his disposal as well as the high definition provided by his desktop computer screen, he was able to keep up with every piece of action taking place.

On top of the computers processing the information and shelving the clips for future references, Kaiser himself was breaking down all of the data on the spot.

He was literally taking note of and processing the images in his head frame by frame and, with an electronic pen in hand, was tapping the interactive board that was the center of his desk with the end of it in a haunting, monotonous beat.

After getting a real joy watching the opening minutes of the fight take place inside the CC main building, he was now getting a real kick watching Hasky get her backside nailed into the ground by late newcomer Paprika. Seeing the blasts of energy engulf the woman over and over again, as well as listening to her cursing and screaming through the audio, all the businessman could do was snort and do his best not to fall into fits of laughter.

"AAAAAAAAAHH! BAAAAAAAAALLLLS!" Hasky's scream filled the office when she was hit by yet another ridiculously powerful, hand-shaped blast.

Her creative use of the male anatomy caused Violet to snicker in the background at how well-timed that was with the explosion.

The scene became so funny in fact that Kaiser eventually has to bark out a laugh. "Ha! Who needs the World Cup when I've got this championship gold mine right in front of me?" Deciding to get even more comfortable, the man kicked his feet up onto the desk, leant back, and slipped his hands behind his head. "Kai, I love my life."

OOO

(Back at Capsule Corp)

For the next two minutes, the group watched and listened in as Paprika administered swift and decisive discipline upon their foe. The blasts were coming in so aggressively with such consistency that the group was worried the Makyan might actually tunnel all the way through to the other side of the planet. She certainly had the strength and power to make that happen. But, thanks to her precise and almost perfect control with her technique, she was able to keep that from happening. Normally an excavation like this would've already struck lava, but the hearty young woman was doing so well at stopping herself short that no eruptions took place at all.

She was definitely on a roll today… and was letting off quite a bit of steam at the same time.

Eventually, her continuous barrage of energy blasts came to an end and Paprika stopped with her hands held out. Sweat pouring down her face and ragged breaths of air leaving her lungs, the woman kept both eyes forward and on the fissure, wondering to herself whether her adversary would try for the hundredth time in a row to break loose.

She'd stopped screaming and throwing curses at her a full minute ago. There was a good chance she'd probably been knocked out.

Catching her breath, the white haired demon woman then narrowed her eyes in an attempt to see whether her target was going to try for another run. Sights locked and her hand primed and ready to fire, all she needed now was someone to shoot at.

However, just as she was prepping herself for a second round…
"PAPRIKA! LOOK OUT!" a horrified Videl shouted at the top of her lungs.

Her warning came too little, too late. All of a sudden, the Makyan's eyes widened in shock when three separate sets of pain went shooting through her body in different directions, causing her to lurch forward and stop her attack dead. Blood flying out of her mouth as she began to fall, the white haired fighter then noticed that while she'd been preparing to hit her target in the hand-shaped fissure, three golden lances had materialized out of thin air in her blind spots and impaled her.

Now, not only had one of the staffs gone straight through her back and out her chest, a second had also gone through her collar and out her hip, and a third had gone through her side and out the other.

Baffled by the simultaneous hits, Paprika was unable to stop herself from dropping out of the sky like a duck. When she hit the ground, she landed directly in front of Piccolo and Goten, with the latter quickly rushing forward to her aid. He was soon joined by an equally concerned Trunks and Videl, both of whom rolled the demon girl over to assess the damage. Needless to say, it did not look good.

"Paprika!" Goten shouted, a terrified look on his face as he saw her spear-riddled body begin bleeding out all over the place. "Oh no."

"Whoa. That attack came out of nowhere," Trunks exclaimed, unable to believe what he'd just witnessed either.

A pained expression framing her face, the white haired fighter groaned and looked up. When she did, she saw through a blurred vision her favorite little demi-Saiyan in the world kneeling over her, as well as his friends standing in the background. The sight, though as messed up as it was, brought the woman some moniker of comfort as she lay there in a crumpled heap, with three large spears stamped with Roman engravings sticking through her body like she was some kind of voodoo doll.

"Ugh. This hurts… so much," the Makyan croaked out, obviously straining against the metal shafts piercing her lungs.

Not really wanting to touch her, in view of her current state, Trunks settled for staring down at the teen in worry. "Are you alright?"

Paprika's gaze slowly shifted to the inquisitive youngster. "Really? I have three spears… shoved through my chest and torso… and I'm bleeding all over the floor. Does it look like… I'm alright?"

The lavender haired youngster recoiled at the angry look in the woman's eyes, "N-No. Not really. Sorry."

Before the conversation could be taken any further, all the Z-fighters' gazes quickly snapped towards the crater.

The moment their sights locked onto the literal landmark, they saw the glowing form of Hasky rise up from the earth like a demon. Bearing a few scuff marks from the beating she'd taken at the hands of the Makyan, the blonde set her infuriated glare upon the team of Z-fighters several yards away from her. When she saw them form a defensive line in front of the fallen Paprika on the ruined yard of Capsule Corp, the female assassin in the cuneiform black suit folded her arms and huffed.

"Okay. I think I'm done. As fun as it's been watching you dogs run around like headless chickens…"
that little temper tantrum back there wasn't as enjoyable as I wanted it to be." She said the last bit with both spite and venom. Immediately upon doing so, the floating Hasky then lifted her right hand and wagged her finger through the air. When she did, the red lines on her suit began to glow. "Now it's mummy's turn to express some rage."

In the blink of an eye, the air floating directly behind Hasky became filled with a cloud of golden dust, the entirety of which came together to form a cluster of over a hundred bladed weapons and pointed in the Z-fighters' direction. The group scattered on the ground in the woman's line of sight gawked at the high volume of spears, swords and daggers that'd materialized around the assassin, literally forming a wall of floating death behind the woman. Even Piccolo and Android 16 expressed utter disbelief at the amount of blade works that'd now come into the picture, and one of them was barely emotional to begin with.

"Th-… That's impossible," Kana murmured, taking count of all the weapons she could see. From the amount of sweat now rolling down her face, you could tell that bad things were about to take place.

Hasky, grinning as the last of her plus one-hundred swords had formed, then took the same right hand from before and pointed it forward. "And… Blad Storm." Multiple flashes of light quickly filled the air as wave upon wave of deadly weapons were sent hurtling at the Z-fighters. The attack occurred almost instantaneously.

Piccolo, Kana, Videl, Goten, Trunks, Paprika and Android 16 barely had enough time to shield themselves before their entire position was bombarded by golden streaks of light, the earth and front area of Capsule Corp being ripped to shreds. The field around the troop went up in an inferno of multiple explosions from the sheer force of the weapons raining down on them, completely blocking out any and all view of the warriors in the heart of the barrage.

Though it seemed like the attack would end once all of the swords Hasky had created were used up, the reality was that every single time a spear or sword was sent flying, it was instantaneously replaced by another, different weapon, which was also let loose. This meant that the attack was not only immense, but also continuous. The result was the battlefield stricken front lawn of the Briefs' property suffering the brunt of the assault, with the barrage of swords even reaching the edge of the main building. All those watching from the windows literally had to duck and cover when the salvo of light-formed blades tore through the ground floor walls and ripped sizable holes in the main structure.

Even if they weren't the intended targets, there was no denying how effective and wide-spread the attack was.

When the barrage eventually ended at the behest of the user, the entire field revealed itself to be covered in bladed weaponry, all of which were sticking out of the scarred and uneven ground. A heavy cloud of dust and smoke hung over the battered front, which then slowly lifted to reveal the ultimate result of the torrent. What Hasky saw from where she was floating brought a wide, victorious smile to her face.

The Z-fighters she'd been fighting this entire time had been reduced to a broken down wreck. While Paprika still maintained the same amount of damage she'd received beforehand, those that'd taken the brunt of the assault in her place were in an equally terrible state. Goten and Trunks, both had reverted back to their base forms, were lying directly beside the woman, covered in scratches, burns, scars, and their respective gis torn to shreds. Their tops were nearly gone. Piccolo was standing in front of Videl, with two swords lodged in his torso, while the raven haired girl had a lance through her shoulder. The two of them were also covered in scratches and scars, and had their clothes ripped in dozens of places. Kana and Android 16 on the other hand had been brought to their knees, with the former's plug suit riddled with damage, and two daggers and a broadsword embedded in her arms. The cyborg alongside her had a Spartan sword sticking out of his chest, a spear through his waist, and an arrow lodged in his skull.

All in all, the group of heroes had survived by the skin of their teeth.

Coughing up purple blood, Piccolo then looked behind him at the others with one eye shut to stop the cut along his brow from dripping into it. "Is… everybody alright?" he asked in a strained tone of voice. "Speak up if you can."

Grabbing the ground tightly, a badly shaken up Videl looked up and choked, "More or less."

"Augh… swords… so many swords," Trunks muttered over and over under his breath, unable to even comprehend how such an attack was physically possible. Even Goten was stunned, groaning as he struggled to his knees and gripping the massive gash in his side, which had been caused by a lance that'd come too close for comfort.

Looking across from where she was slumped over, Kana turned her attention to her cyborg companion's head. When she saw the arrow lodged in the red haired man's cranium, the Seirei cringed, "Whoa. Are you okay?"

Android 16, eyes flickering with random numbers, promptly diagnosed his condition. "My cranial shell's integrity has been compromised and my secondary processing unit has received minor damage. But I am fine." When a spark of electricity ran up the arrow and over his head, the stoic robot's tone suddenly shifted drastically. "The temperature is currently twenty five degrees."

Not really knowing what to make of that last readout, the orange haired Seirei forced a smile, "If you say so."

As they were talking, the group suddenly noticed all of the swords scattered across the desolated grounds vanish into clouds of golden dust. Even the weapons impaling Paprika and the other martial artists disappeared, leaving their forms riddled with holes and open wounds.

When the stricken and battered Z-fighters directed their glares towards their incredibly powerful foe, they saw Hasky throw them one of her signature grins. Despite the battle scars riddling their almost broken bodies, the woman had no intention of showing them any mercy whatsoever. "I admire your ability to stand up after an attack like that. Your group is definitely made up of strong stuff. However…" When she raised her right hand a second time, several more clouds of photons accumulated behind her, from which another hundred or so blades took shape from the fumes. The broad swords, katanas, lances, spears, and daggers pointed in the direction of the group, causing all those in sight of the woman to shrink back in alarm. "I wonder how all of you will fair against weapons of a higher class?"

Though the new collection of projectiles didn't seem any different from the last batch, every single one of the swords and lances floating behind the blonde had been specially modified and crafted for a final, devastating assault on her enemies. Unlike the models from before, the weapons in this cluster were surrounded by a golden, ethereal shroud that had them all glistening brightly under the sun. Despite the fact that all of the other tools beforehand had been incredibly well polished, these blades were enchanted in nature and were made of a much denser material. In addition to the engravings decorating their surfaces, they also had jagged edges and intricate curves in their molds, allowing for deeper, cleaner cuts in their targets.

Even Piccolo noticed that these swords were different from the ones that'd cut them down before and brought his fists up as high as he could in anticipation of the coming salvo.

These weapons weren't just created to intimidate; they were built with the express purpose of maiming and killing their targets.

Seeing the members of the troop in front of her brace themselves for her attack, the blonde assassin smirked and, without the slightest glimmer of hesitation, waved her hand towards them. "Ta-ta."

Once more, and hopefully for the last time that day, bright flashes of metal filled the area as the wall of seemingly infinite swords was sent flying at the Z-fighters all at once. Golden death rained down upon the team in a haze, the attack ripping the landscape apart and explosions of rubble and dust engulfing the defenseless heroes.

This time the main building of Capsule Corp was spared from the assault, as Hasky had deliberately aimed all of the blades away from it and squarely upon each of her targets. However, this concentrated and insanely accurate storm of attacks didn't stop a black cloud of smoke from rising into the sky, giving the impression that a nuke had just been set off in the middle of the city. When the rumbling from the bombardment eventually settled a full minute later, the veil of smog that blanketed the property lifted to reveal the battlefield underneath and the amount of damage that had been inflicted upon it. Even Bulma and Chi-Chi were astonished at how badly the property had been hit.

Confident in her victory, Hasky took a deep breath, smiled, and stood back to admire her handiwork. With the amount of swords she'd fired in that one barrage, she was positive that all of her opponents had been reduced to nothing.

"Ahh… there's no kill quite like over ki-" the woman began, before her words were promptly cut off the second she saw the dust settle.

Standing in the center of the sword covered battlefield, in a ring formed by the barrage of blades, two new figures suddenly emerged from the mist. Positioned at the front of their wounded compatriots, a transformed Vegeta and Zangya, both dressed in spandex uniforms, were glaring up towards the blonde floating several yards in front of them.

Given how instantaneous they'd moved to cut off the hail of swords from taking out their friends, you could see why Hasky appeared so surprised.

"Hey! What in the-? Where the hell did you two come from?" the assassin practically barked, her hair bristling in frustration at seeing her attack so successfully intercepted. She soon relaxed moments later when she recognized their faces. "Hang on a second… aren't they…?" Though the blonde and red hair threw her for a moment, after taking a closer look at the two of them, Hasky was able to work out the identities of the newcomers. It had the woman narrow her eyes irritably. "Their profiles were in the files Vi sent me: Vegeta and Zangya."

When they saw their opponent perform a double-take, the two fighters' expressions steeled. Vegeta's especially, and while the Super Saiyan 2 kept his eyes locked on the blonde woman, the Super Hera took that opportunity to look behind her and take stock of the others. As soon as her eyes panned over them, the alien woman nodded, "Is everyone okay."

Hand pressed against her abdomen, the stricken Makyan gritted her teeth and groaned, "That all depends… on your definition… of okay." She did her best to keep her blood from dripping all over the floor, but even with her rapid healing powers, she was still having a tough time keeping it all together.

"My head hurts," Trunks groaned.
"Mine too," Goten wheezed, trying his best to keep his balance when he finally got up. Blood running over his eye, the youngster glanced across at Android 16, who he could see was kneeling nearby with a hole in his temple. The spiky haired runt then pointed at him with a deadpanned expression, "Not as badly as his though…"

Sparks flying out of the crack in his skull, the cyborg's eyes slowly shifted over to Zangya, "My pain receptors have been shut down. Therefore, I am still…" His eyes then went blank for a couple of second and, after his body emitted a weird computer shut-down sound, he then started to speak in a woman's voice from the radio. "News just in from South City, pop star actress Mitsuki… Mitsuki… Mitsuki… Mitsuki…" After repeating that name a few times, the android's head perked up before speaking in a normal voice. "System error."

"For Kai's sakes, man," Videl exclaimed, glaring at the red head with a concerned look on her face, "Shut off for a few minutes. Get some rest."

"Command acknowledged," the giant robot replied, "Shutting down." A low hum then echoed off of his body as his eyes slowly closed and his head went limp. The cyborg then remained there on the ground, as still as a statue, on his knee, and with visible fractures all over his frame.

Now that their robotic companion was out for the count, but still thankfully in one piece, Zangya quickly turned her attention to the one responsible for this whole mess. "So I wasn't imagining things. Something actually was going on out here and we didn't know about it. Stupid energy shields," she muttered. After training her crosshairs on the blonde and giving her a decent once over, the red haired woman deepened her frown and, raising a fist, gave the group behind her a thumbs-up. "You guys take five. Vegeta and I can handle her."

"Go right ahead," Paprika coughed, before then rolling onto her back and turning her gaze towards the sky. "I'll be cheering you on… from the sidelines…" She was quickly joined by Goten and Trunks, both of whom took up protective positions around the spot she was lying. "Just… watch out for her weapons. They can get you from anywhere."

While Videl moved over to make sure Android 16 wouldn't fall apart on his own accord, Kana and Piccolo picked themselves up from the dirt and hobbled to the front, where they stood on either side of their teammates. Given that they were in better fighting condition then the rest of their friends, the wounded pair was determined to carry on the fight and faced off against their adversary with both scorn and vigor.

Vegeta, sparing a glance over at Piccolo, scoffed at the man's appearance and turned back towards the front. "You're a mess."

"And you're late," the Namekian replied, spitting the blood out of his mouth to continue the face-off with dignity. "Caught up training again?"

"Of course. You think I would cancel my routine for any little thing that just happens to drop by unexpectedly?"

"Let's just skip the pre-fight banter and focus on the problem in front of us," the former guardian interrupted with a serious scowl in play. "While I don't know about you, I'm sure this one isn't the kind of person who would waste time and energy standing around trying to decide what to do with her opponents."

Narrowing his eyes, the Saiyan nodded at the blonde hovering in front of them. "Who is this woman, anyway?"
"The big guy back there said her name was Hasky; a very dangerous and prolific thief," Kana stated, shrugging as she continued to regard their enemy with caution and care. "She broke into the building, snuck into the hospital wing, and the others chased her out. Apparently she was there to try and kill Gohan-kun while he was sleeping."

That last bit of info had Zangya's body freeze up and her eyes widen in shock. When her mind was done processing the freelancer's announcement, the red haired alien clenched her fists and ground her teeth in a manner that was clearly anger. Her gesture was so intense that the other heroes standing alongside her could literally hear her top and bottom jaws filing together. It did well in setting the mood for the future conflict to come.

"She's here… to kill Gohan?" the Hera whispered, trying to keep her breathing under control and her vision from going red. When she saw the smug smile of the blonde gazing back at her from her position above the field, the woman with the green complexion snarled and took a major step forward. "Over my dead body."

A grin tugged across Hasky's lips, "If you insist." When the lines of her suit lit up, the area behind her filled with golden clouds of energy, which instantaneously formed into eight long swords and spears, all of which turned and pointed in the group's direction. This then led to the assassin craning her head like a curious eagle and marking each of her targets individually. "Being a hard working, self-made woman, I enjoy a good joust every once in a while to break the monotony of a boring week. But as much as I love to deal a good thrashing to those who think it's a good idea to get in my way, if it interferes with my work and takes up too much of my time, I absolutely despise it. So… unless all of you want to walk through the pearly gates with swords and lances covering your bodies, I suggest you back off now."

Piccolo's and everybody else's glares, only seemed to intensify. "Not a chance." This prompted the other three warriors to slide into fighting stances, showing they had no inclination of breaking the line they'd formed.

This only coaxed a harsher leer from the blonde warrior, who then closed her eyes in satisfaction. "I was hoping you'd say that." Tilting her head upwards, Hasky then flashed her venomous green eyes towards her foes, causing the weapons floating behind her to rattle. "As a goddess of the new age, it is my duty to purify the world and administer swift justice upon those unfit to stand in my presence. Die on your feet… mongrels." Then, in a flash, she unleashed all eight of her weapons upon the Z-fighters.

The blades shot towards the group like bullets. The instant the first weapon struck the front of the pack a massive explosion rang out and filled the air with a towering fireball. The shockwave also generated by the bladed weapon impacting its targets also prompted Videl, Goten and Trunks to shield their faces from the debris, before the three of them looked towards the heart of the calamity in shock.

As soon as their eyes fixed upon the area, they saw the smoke clear and their four friends emerge from it unscathed. Initially they believed that all of them would've been impaled by the lightning fast attacks. But when the dust faded, it revealed Zangya standing further ahead of the others, with a blade in hand and her eyes glued firmly on the blonde in front of her. Needless to say, even Hasky appeared surprised to see her targets were still on their feet.

And there was a terrific reason why.

"W-What the heck just happened out there?" Videl asked, unable to deduce what'd just occurred due to how fast the scene had played out.
Paprika, lying flat out on her back but still able to watch the battle clearly from her position, smirked as her memory replayed the incident in full. "Since it was so fast… I'm not surprised you didn't catch it," the Makyan wheezed. "Zangya's movements were flawless. She dodged the first sword that came her way… and caught it as it flew over her. Then she used it to deflect the second one, before repeating the process… with the others.

Glancing down at the golden broadsword she'd snagged from the air and admiring the royal markings engraved upon its length and handle, Zangya then frowned and tossed it to the ground. As soon as it clattered to the floor, the blade broke apart into a cloud of dust and vanished, prompting Hasky to click her tongue irritably.

From the look on her face, the assassin was not pleased. Not in the slightest.

"How dare you lay your filthy hands upon my treasures…" The shadow across the assassin's eyes darkened considerably as her ire grew to an unprecedented level. "You must want to die really badly… DOGS!" she shrieked, eyes widening in rage as another cloud of gold gathered behind her and formed into a wall of fifty blades, all of which pointed directly down at the warriors positioned far below. "Just how long do you think your impudent thievery will keep you alive? Come… show me!"

Without needing any instruction, Vegeta, Piccolo and Kana quickly scattered, while Zangya stepped forward, cocked her hand back, and threw it towards her target, unleashing a powerful green ki blast at the woman. Her attack struck the hovering Hasky headlong and detonated with concussive force, filling the sky with fire and smoke. When the cloud began blanketed the area in a thick mist, it was quickly chopped away by a barrage of swords, which were sent shooting towards the grounded Hera and the wounded group of fighters behind her.

However, not planning on abandoning Videl and the others in their time of need, the red haired woman held her ground. Gnashing her teeth, Zangya threw her hands forward and caught two of the lances that'd been thrown her way. Despite grabbing them by their middles, the force they hit her with not only generated a sonic boom, they also sent her sliding back several yards along the ground. Feet digging into the ruined earth, the Z-fighter managed to stop just in front of Paprika, Goten and Trunks, all three of whom were gawking up at the female as she held the two lances she'd caught forward and assumed a defensive stance.

The rest of the swords soon came flying at the Hera at breakneck speed, prompting the female to step forward and begin smacking the weapons out of the air with the spears one after the other. Loud clangs and sparks echoed across the pitch when Zangya deflected the projectiles, sending them flying off in random directions. A couple of the swords struck some of the distant buildings in the city, smashing holes straight through them before exploding safely in the sky. The others struck other places around the Brief family property and detonated harmlessly, forming massive craters wherever they landed.

And still, Zangya kept up her vigorous defense. When one of the lances in her hand shattered after successfully blocking another claymore sent flying her way, the red haired Hera snarled, swung upwards with her remaining lance, and knocked an airborne battle axe towards the clouds. The weapon and the loosely held lance both spun into the sky, before dropping down seconds later to be caught by the alien woman. Expertly twirling the massive battle axe about half her size between her fingers, Zangya then used the heavy duty tool to smack a second one over her shoulder, sending it cork-screwing into a distant car park ten blocks away. The battle axe could be seen striking the sixth floor of the structure a full kilometer away, before detonating with enough force to level the entire building and disintegrate every single vehicle in that lot.
Slamming her newly acquired battle axe and lance into the earth, Zangya cracked her neck and took flight, aiming to draw her opponent's gaze away from the rest of her teammates. Videl, Goten, Trunks and Paprika remained where they were, and watched on carefully as the battle started to unfold.

Hasky, seeing her target vanish, narrowed her gaze on the sky before a smirk formed across her lips. "Interesting. You think that just because you've scattered yourselves you'll be able to confuse me? Well... you're wrong!" A wild grin quickly appearing on her face, she then turned her gaze upwards. Forming yet another cluster of swords and spears on her right flank, the woman sent them shooting up into the sky in a series of golden, streaking lights. The first couple of rounds shot off into the distance, whereas the second wave ended up being deflected in a shower of sparks when Vegeta's form suddenly materialized out of super speed.

Cloaked in his golden aura, the Super Saiyan 2 bit his teeth as he skillfully dodged the barrage of heavy weaponry homing after him. Kicking a lance towards the ground and deflecting a sword with his arm, the prince was suddenly clipped in the back of his shoulder by a yari and sent spinning to the ground. Yelling out as he fell, the warrior eventually corrected his fall and slammed his feet into the concrete of an open highway. As soon as he was up, Vegeta then sprinted forward in a blur of movement, avoiding the rain of golden weapons that began plunging down at him from the clouds above.

Occupying the flame haired warrior with her barrage, Hasky, maintaining her position hovering above the hand-shaped crater, then turned her gaze elsewhere when a brilliant light fell upon her. Looking to her left, a knight's shield formed in front of her, just in time to deflect a barrage of ki blasts sent flying at her from behind a distant building, which was under construction. After the shots ended, the woman then formed a column of broad swords, all of the same design, before sending them flying towards the unfinished and empty skyscraper. The blades cut the building to shreds, sending the remains cascading to the ground in a cloud of rubble and debris. This ended up driving the Z-fighter in hiding from behind it and prompted him to take flight into the sky above the plume.

White aura beating around him, the battle-scarred Piccolo placed two fingers to his forehead and, after charging his signature attack, thrust his fingers forward with a loud battle cry. "Special Beam Cannon!" The attack shot towards Hasky's position at an unbelievable speed and flooded the entire region in an orange glow.

Unimpressed by the approaching drill beam, the blonde woman simply summoned a large buster sword in front of her, gripped its handle, and swung the enormous blade through the air in an effortless, backhanded motion. The golden weapon intercepted the beam and cut it cleanly down the center, sending the two halves of the Namekian's strongest attack shooting off into the horizon behind her to strike a couple of mountains. The attacks detonated with the force of atomic bombs, disintegrating the edifices in separate, dome-shaped explosions and cleared the atmosphere of all cloud cover.

"Flash Storm!"

The instant Hasky deflected the beam attack, her eyes then snapped upwards to see a rain of millions of tiny energy spheres flying down at her from the heavens, and the source of the attack floating above them with her glowing orange hair wafting on the wind. Seeing the deadly rain of pellet shaped blasts hone in on her position, the blonde promptly held her hand out and produced an enormous, transparent crystal shield in the form of a lotus flower, which fanned out and took the energy bombardment head on. The salvo ripped into the shield and detonated en masse in rapid succession, splintering the barrier and causing it to crack. However, when the attack eventually... ended, none of the energy pellets had managed to break through and the shield remained standing. It was a sight that brought nothing but astonishment to Kana's face.

Once she saw the attack wrap up, Hasky then willed the shield protecting her into a different shape, the petals closing in over one another before transforming into a lance with a drill-shaped head. When it began to spin on its axis, a compressed sphere of electrical energy formed at its tip. As soon as it reached critical mass, a stream of energy was then sent gushing out of the weapon and into the sky, forcing an alarmed Kana to teleport out of the way to avoid getting disintegrated by the blast that effortlessly shot out of earth's orbit.

While the spear's blast dissipated, the assassin's attention was then drawn over her shoulder when she heard yet another battle cry and saw Zangya flying at her from behind with a kick. Unsurprised, Hasky ducked under the blow and retaliated with an upward kick of her own, forcing the Hera to duck under it awkwardly and respond with a downward punch. The thief saw the blow coming and leapt over the woman in a fancy cartwheel. When Hasky found herself flipping over the surprised alien, the blonde forged a spear in her hand and thrust it down at her opponent, who managed to spin out of the way just in time to have the side of her singlet get torn by the blade.

Flying up and out of reach, Zangya huffed furiously and, loading her right arm, chucked it forward in an underhanded motion and pitched a powerful red energy sphere towards her foe. "Beauty Trigger!" The ball of light arced through the air and plummeted towards the woman, who was right in the middle of correcting herself following her aerial cartwheel. While her back was turned, the red sphere of energy fired by the Z-fighter impacted her spine and detonated with fantastic force, covering the area in a fiery, orange cloud.

At first Zangya thought her attack was successful. But just when the woman was in the process of watching the cloud of smog disperse, an eerie glow from above quickly drew her attention to the sky, where she saw her opponent floating several stories overhead with a spear in hand and its tip pointed straight down at her.

The moment the attack had finished charging, the woman then let loose a powerful golden beam at her target.

Reacting immediately, the Hera powered up and took flight, avoiding the attack when it struck the earth and, guided by its user, began chasing after her. The attack cut an enormous trench across the property and highway, disintegrating anything that got in its way. When it eventually pursued the woman up into the sky, the continuous beam sliced right through the city, burning through a dozen buildings, chopping a crane in half, the top off of a distant mountain, and then the clouds on the horizon.

Before she could continue shooting after her elusive foe as she ascended higher, Hasky then became aware of another attacker positioning himself behind her and shut off her spear. Spinning around, she snapped her glare into the atmosphere to see Vegeta, aura burning brightly around him, floating a safe distance away with his hand pointed straight down at her. The instant her eyes met his and locked onto his form as it radiated both energy and electricity, a powerful golden sphere quickly appeared in front of his palm. A split second later and with a yell of effort, the prince then fired the attack and sent it flying at the assassin at blinding speed.

Telegraphing its flight path, the blonde woman spun her lance about and, swinging it upwards in a single, graceful motion, smashed the man's Big Bang Attack into the clouds, where it detonated harmlessly out of reach. As soon as she deflected it, she spun her lance back around, jabbed it out, and fired a cluster of beams from the tip. These lightning fast attacks forced the Prince of Saiyan to dive out of the way in alarm, with the man giving a growl of frustration before he was struck in the shoulder by one of the lights. This stray shot knocked him out of the sky and left him open for a follow up attack.

But just as Hasky was about to capitalize on that opening, her body suddenly froze up and her arms snapped together. Eyes widening in shock, the woman then attempted to jerk her way out of whatever the hell kind of snares had managed to bind her. After trying and failing to escape several times, the woman then glared over her shoulder, where she quickly spotted the cause of her sudden stoppage; Zangya, who had both her hands thrown forward and an intense glare fixated upon her.

"What?" At first unable to see what the problem was, Hasky soon noticed a shimmer of light hanging in the air between herself and her opponent. When she focused in on it, the blonde was then able to see that the Hera had her bound in energy wires, all of which were wrapped around her like fishing net and were keeping her from moving. She sneered when she looked back up at her opponent and spat in her direction. "You… insolent cur!"

The red head chuckled as her body trembled from the effort of keeping her opponent exactly where she was. "Sorry. But you're not going anywhere."

Hasky's eyes then shot back to the area directly in front of her. When she looked down, she suddenly saw light photons gather in front of her, a split second before Kana materialized directly in front of her, charging in with both hands held out. Golden spheres of energy glowing brilliantly in both palms, the fiery haired Seirei gave a loud battle cry and lunged up at the trapped woman, intent on taking her down with one hit.

"YOU'RE FINISHED! STAR-!"

A stunned look crossed Hasky's face as she watched her foe begin throwing her hands towards her in slow motion. The likelihood of it wiping her out was set at an instant high and, with the proximity between both attacker and target, it seemed like nothing was going to stop the blast from taking her out. But then, just when Kana's blast was milliseconds from being unleashed, two golden spears about four meters long dropped down from the skies and intercepted the attacking Seirei in the most brutal way imaginable. Like lightning, the two weapons struck the woman in the shoulders, colliding with a bone-crunching 'crack' and knocking the alien girl backwards.

Eyes widening in disbelief as the energy spheres in her hands vanished, Kana then looked on as the barely visible wires locking her opponent's arms together snapped and disintegrated. This ended with Zangya being thrown back when the tension was suddenly released, startling the Z-fighter and sending her flying several yards back. This pretty much freed Hasky from the confines of the barrier and, as soon as mobility was returned to her limbs, spun on the spot and landed a swift kick into Kana's stomach.

The blow smashed into the woman's sternum, knocking the wind out of the girl's lungs and sending the poor Seirei rocketing across the property at breakneck speed. Traveling quite a distance, Kana ended up bouncing over the entire Capsule Corp property before colliding shoulder first into the main building, where she ended up buried under a huge pile of frame and rubble.

Security and staff in the area were immediately on the scene to help, where they quickly found the Seirei unconscious under a massive section of wall, which they proceeded to pull off of her.

Upon dispersing the nuisance, Hasky quickly had to contend with yet another one when Piccolo decided to touch down directly behind her and go right for her neck with a quick pressure point strike. But the instant his hand chopped out, the Namekian's eyes widened when his blow passed straight through his foe. Moments later, the blonde's body became transparent, revealing it to be nothing but a hologram.
"Huh?"

Before Piccolo could respond accordingly to the sudden switch, a sharp pain suddenly hit his chest and the man gave a loud scream of agony. Gripping the blade sticking out of his stomach, he was suddenly lifted high into the air and held at the mercy of whatever it was that had gotten him from behind. After coughing up blood and biting down with his jaw in an effort to stop the pain, he slowly turned his head to look over his shoulder. When he did, he saw Hasky floating behind him, a single hand wrapped around the handle of an eleven foot, golden crested katana, which she'd used to effectively run through him and nail him to the sky.

"Surprise," Hasky said in a sing-song voice, before quickly glancing to her right. Without any warning or hesitation, the woman pivoted on the spot and threw her impaled quarry across the field. "Here! I think this is yours!" Almost a split second after Piccolo was thrown off of the sword, the Namekian's body slammed into something invisible and solid traveling through the air at incredible speed. As it turned out, that solid just happened to be the still active and fighting Vegeta, who gave a loud yell of shock when he ran headlong into his ally's back and was knocked out of the sky.

The force that they were hit with threw the two warriors barreling over the ruined grounds and into the earth, where they tumbled to a stop on a fresh patch of open lawn; not too far from the main building but away from the other wounded Z-fighters.

Videl and the others could only watch helplessly from a distance as the enemy responsible for taking them out floated to ground level and glared at the two stricken warriors.

While Vegeta struggled to his feet and Piccolo nursed the new wound in his chest, Hasky, taking a few steps forward, breathed a sigh of relief and raised a hand. As a gentle wind coursed over her armor clad form, she then focused her suit's power and began gathering energy for one last assault, while at the same time indulging her targets with some final words of 'comfort'.

"Imagine you were dying. Imagine you were afraid, a long way from home, and in terrible pain. But just when you thought it couldn't get any worse… you looked up… and saw the face of the devil herself." Hasky chuckled when she noticed the agonized expressions on her targets' faces craning in her direction. As soon as she knew she had their full and undivided attention, she then narrowed her eyes and spoke in a calm, yet menacing tone of voice, "Let these words be the last things you ever hear in this world." A cloud of gold formed behind her, which instantly solidified into a wall of around a hundred swords, lances, axes, arrows and daggers, all of which jerked towards the two warriors in front of her.

Vegeta and Piccolo, both still grounded, looked up at the formation of weapons in alarm. However, just before any of the tools could be fired, a figure dropped down from the skies and landed on the grass in front of them. Rising up from her position and flicking her red hair over her shoulder, Zangya made her presence known to all the warriors there as she came to the defense of her friends. Bringing her hands up and clenching them, the Hera faced off against the blonde assassin with a combination of pluck and verve. Manipulating the ki in her limbs enveloped her arms in a potent green glow, allowing her to protect them for the assault to come.

Frowning when she saw the Hera jump in her way, Hasky wasted no time in raising her hand and pointing her finger at the three Z-fighters. In the blink of an eye, over a dozen weapons were sent flying at them at several times the speed of light, with the intent of cutting the warriors down in a single stroke.

But the moment the weapons flew within range of their targets, loud clangs and bangs began echoing out when Zangya proceeded to smack the weapons out of the air with her arms, effectively sending them shooting off in different directions. As soon as the barrage ended moments later, the Hera had successfully managed to bat away every single one of the swords, allowing her to exchange glares with her foe for a second time.

Hasky clicked her tongue in annoyance. "How dare you..." Taking that as her prompt, the thief conjured another cluster of weapons to replace the ones she'd fired. This meant the numbers increased from a hundred to two hundred, and more. Her ammunition effectively multiplying, the moment she saw her newest target take another stance, the blonde raised her hand and let loose another wave.

This time, instead of just a few weapons, she unleashed all of them.

A continuous stream of golden swords and lances began flying out of the wall behind her and towards the group of heroes in front of her. Their paths were straight and true, and the power behind each and every one of the blades was strong enough to pierce through a planet’s crust right down to the core. However, despite the sheer quantity of swords that was now being fired upon them, Zangya, mind open and senses sharpened to the point of needles, began deflecting the waves of deadly weapons in droves.

Her glowing arms moved in a blur in front of her as the Hera vigorously struck out at the projectiles, batting them aside in a spirited and sturdy defense. Sparks flew every time a blade or staff was knocked away, with a majority of them being sent spiraling off to the side to impale the ground elsewhere. Since the force of each of them was effectively being nullified by Zangya's accurate parries, the damage that the weapons dealt to the landscape was minimal, and they simply ended up landing uselessly away from their intended targets. Though their forms were much different from the ki blasts the Z-fighter was used to defending against, the woman treated each of the weapons being flung at her as if they were energy attacks, which allowed her to fend off the assault and protect the two men on the ground behind her.

Vegeta and Piccolo watched their teammate hold the line, slowly pushing themselves to their feet as the stream of weapons in flight began to increase.

It seemed like the Hera's efforts would eventually pay off. But then, right in the middle of the seemingly infinite wave of swords, the alien defender accidentally misjudged the speed of an approaching short-sword, and ended up getting clipped in the side as it passed. Zangya yelped in pain as a spurt of blood splattered across the grass behind her, effectively breaking her rhythm. When she tried to correct her stance, a Roman sword slashed across her left shoulder, causing a stinging pain to shoot through her and the woman to swing out blindly at the other projectiles flying her way. The two close shots left her struggling to stand and Hasky capitalized on that moment of weakness with extreme prejudice.

Eyes widening in an insane manner, the riled up Hasky giggled incessantly and, reaching behind her, gripped the handle of a large claymore materializing behind her. "Come on! Come on! You don't have any time to rest!" the blonde shouted, letting out a laugh as she hurled the massive sword and its companions straight towards Zangya's position.

Looking up in alarm when she noticed the streaks of gold flying towards her, the Hera attempted to cover up, crossing her arms over her face protectively. Another loud clang rang out followed by a cry of pain as the female Z-fighter was hit full-on by the barrage of swords and knocked off her feet. Slash-marks cut into her skin, the bloodied and battle damaged Zangya flew back several yards before crashing to the grass directly in front of Vegeta and Piccolo. While the pair of men assumed defensive stances, their colleague quickly sat up, looking back at her opponent through a cringing expression and blood trickling down her face from her hairline.
Chuckling when she saw her red haired target struggle to get back up, Hasky placed her hands on her hips and tilted her head. "The title of 'Master Thief' is considered an honor and a privilege in my line of work. It sets me apart from the everyday criminals, making all other burglars and lawbreakers obsolete. Well… I'm happy to say to all of you that, as of this very moment, the Z-fighters have also become obsolete… and a new hero of earth has been born."

The blonde then held her right hand out to the side with her palm facing upwards. The instant it was moved into position, the red lines on her suit started to glow a deep shade of scarlet. "My original plan was to go easy on all of you, beat you down, and complete my mission of assassinating Son Gohan while his friends were lying helplessly on the ground. However, since all of you have put up such a good fight, I think I'll honor your final moments by showing you exactly the kind of force you are up against."

Once again, a golden cloud of energy began to gather over her, which then formed into a sword. However, when the weapon eventually solidified and took shape, the sword that Zangya, Piccolo, Vegeta and the other Z-fighters watching from a distance saw was nothing that they were expecting.

In fact, the structure of the sword was far from any blade they'd ever laid eyes on.

What Hasky's fingers ended up curling around was a weapon unlike any sword currently in existence, and had a very jousting lance-like quality to it. The handle was crafted out of gold, with a warped pommel to strengthen the user's grip and allow for extra leverage. It also had a triple-layered, gold handle guard that spiraled upwards, with blue hieroglyphic markings all along the surface. These then moved up into the primary aspect of the weapon, the section of which deviated from the normal traits of an edged weapon. The "blade" itself and the tip of the sword, spun in a spiral shape, were dull. It had the shape of a cylindrical, cone pillar made up of three independently rotating segments. The design resembled the model of bedrock excavators used to drill underwater tunnels.

It was also blank and as black as the night sky. However, a second after the golden sword appeared in her grip, the entire sky above Hasky's position suddenly became filled with countless, glowing red jagged lines, which branched outwards from the tip of the sword like a tree, and completely eclipsed the atmosphere of the planet. Emitting a deafening sound of over a thousand birds and bats, the random red branches suddenly began retracting at light speed into the assassin's sword, giving the blade a brilliant red glow. When the light faded, the black, drill-shaped blade revealed itself to be covered in red cuneiform, all of which were random and spelled out into an unknown incantation around the weapon.

The moment the entity gained stability, every single ki-sensitive denizen in the area became stricken by what they felt.

A crushing presence fell over the countryside that left even the most powerful fighters in the group gaping like fish. Eyes widened in horror, Piccolo, Vegeta, Zangya, Videl, Goten, Trunks and Paprika looked on as Hasky lowered the weapon and, keeping its tip pointed skywards, watched as the individual components of the shaft began to rotate on the sword's axis.

If they were being completely honest… they weren't sure if that weapon could even be called a sword.

"W-What the fuck is that thing?" Vegeta stammered under his breath.

Piccolo, shaking his head as sweat rolled down his face, also voiced his concern, "I've… never sensed so much energy sitting in one place before. It… It's mindboggling." But was it really energy? That was the big question here.
Getting to her knees, Zangya also became petrified with fear as she felt the mass amounts of energy being generated by the weapon grow at an alarming rate. "What the hell kind of sword is that? I… I can't get a bead on its construction at all."

Not only was the weapon emitting so much energy that it felt like they were standing next to an infinitely exploding quasar, the weapon itself was also emitting an incredibly dark and foreboding presence. It was almost like the blade was alive and was somehow communicating with all of them, giving the team the impression that they were staring down some sort of divine spirit of vengeance. The words it spoke, though incomprehensible to the human ear, only whispered one thing.

Certain death.

Hasky, smirking widely, narrowed her eyes upon her targets. "Exterminate them… Ai!" The instant she uttered the name of her sword, the cuneiform lettering along the weapon's shaft began to glow and the drill-head started to spin at an unheard of speed. As it did, it began to emit a bright, red aura that whipped out in all directions, forming into a drill of energy that branched upwards like electricity, cutting the air and heating it to an almost unbearable degree.

Then, after the blade's spinning had gained enough momentum, it happened.

A deafening thunderclap echoed across all of West City as a massive shockwave of red ki exploded from the sword. This shockwave washed over the entire property of Capsule Corp like a tsunami, engulfing the Z-fighters and striking the main building with such force, it almost lifted the entire structure off of its foundations. The screams of all the people in that district were drowned out by the sheer volume and scale of the blast, which shot up into the sky and up into space in the form of a red vortex.

The tornado of celestial matter sliced away at the clouds, clearing the airspace over the metropolis and the country. A few seconds later, an explosion comparable to several supernovas confined to a single point lit up the front property of Capsule Corp in a white fireball that stretched up into the stratosphere. Any planes flying near the city were knocked out of the sky and sent plummeting to the earth below, while all those people standing in the heart of the cataclysm were instantaneously swallowed up by the blast and seemingly incinerated.

The explosion was so bright and so powerful that it could literally be seen from orbit.

When the dust settled over the city sometime later, carnage had been brought to the front steps of Capsule Corp.

The main building and the city itself remained mostly intact. However, in the midst of the chaos, a smoking, black crater had formed on the front lawn of the estate where grass, fences, and footpaths had previously been standing. Due to the insane amount of heat generated by the attack, a lot of the areas of earth inside the crater had been turned to glass, while the rest of the fissure was still radiating a hot orange and was smoldering under the midday sun. It was almost like a meteorite had made landfall right there in the heart of West City.

With the results of her attack revealing itself from underneath the veil of dust, Hasky, lowering her weapon, gave a loud gasp of ecstasy, at the same time a shade of red formed across her cheeks. She then brought her treasured sword close to her and pressed her cheek against its warm surface. "Oh… that was magnificent. Simply magnificent. The power that this sword gave off, the tingle that ran up my spine when it unleashed its fury… the sensation… is almost indescribable." When her eyes finally landed on the smoking pit that was her battlefield, she saw for herself exactly what'd happened to the group of intrepid and determined Z-fighters.
To put it in simple terms… they were beat. Across the crater to the blonde's left, she could see Videl lying unconscious beside the broken down Android 16, both of whom were covered in burns, scratches, ash, dirt, and had their clothing in tatters. Goten and Trunks were fairing no better, looking as though they'd both been put through a meat grinder made entirely out of fire and brimstone. Paprika on the other hand, who'd managed to summon the strength to jump in front of them at the last second, had her back charred by the blast and was lying unconscious at the feet of the two children. An incredible feat, considering she was barely hanging in there as it is.

And directly in front of the woman about a few yards away, at the very edge of the crater, Piccolo, Vegeta and Zangya, were also lying in three separate, broken heaps. The Namekian was on his back with his entire top disintegrated and the Prince of all Saiyans was on his side, reverted back to his base form and covered in second degree burns. The Hera too was on her stomach, with her face in the mud and her back covered in debris.

While Bulma, Chi-Chi, and the rest of the staff at Capsule Corp were all okay, save for several scratches and dirt marks, the majority of the heroes had all been taken out of commission. The two mothers, who were hanging over by the window supporting one another, could only watch on powerlessly as their enemy looked down upon the fallen with a menacing leer.

"Goten, no," the Son mother gasped, placing a hand over her mouth when she saw her boy had been knocked out.

"My Trunks," Bulma also murmured, unable to believe what was happening.

Bringing her sword down to her side as she took stock of her enemy's condition, Hasky gave a lighthearted chuckle. "You all finally understand the complete futility of the battle you'd just waged. Even with all your great strength and power… not a single one of you stood a chance against the terrifying might and ferocity of Ai." Upon mentioning the artifact's name, she quickly held her sword up and brandished its blade for all to see. "This is the legendary weapon once wielded by the demi-God Gilgamesh; the greatest hero of all time. It is a completely unique existence all its own… an artifact that was created before the concept of the 'sword' was ever conceived in the universe. You could say it was the origin of all blades currently in existence; one that is capable of emitting enough energy to cut through dimensions and destroy entire galaxies with a single swing." She then held it towards the sky and watched it disappear in a cloud of golden light. "Well… this is just a copy of the sword made from a fragment of the original. Compared to its template, it only has a fraction of the strength the real artifact once possessed. Nevertheless, you should feel honored to have been struck down by such a glorious weapon. I only ever use it against opponents who I deem worthy of its blade, but for your group… I made an exception."

It was a startling reveal. However, the impact of it was lost on her audience, due to the fact that all of them were either well out of earshot or had been knocked unconscious. However, thanks to her overwhelming victory against the Z-fighters, Hasky was more than happy to blab on and on about her favorite toy without any fear of reprisal. She was just that confident.

Waving her hair back, the barely scathed and still fresh assassin decided that enough was enough. "I guess that's it then. As brief as it was, it was still fun while it lasted." Stretching her neck and rubbing her palm against her shoulder, Hasky quickly turned her attention to Capsule Corp's main building and began strolling towards it, an act that had the people watching from inside shirk back in fear. "Guess it's time to go kill Son Gohan, collect my paycheck, and spend the next few weeks working on my tan at the beach. Enjoy whatever life you have left in you, boy, because it's about to be forfe-" She then stopped dead in her tracks.
Not because she was having second thoughts or anything. Far from it.

It was because her path was being blocked.

Standing up from where she was lying in the crater, covered in dirt, muck, ash and grime, a still conscious and fully transformed Zangya rose to her feet and stood before her foe with a hateful glare fixed squarely upon her. Panting heavily as smoke rose from her battered and almost broken body, the Hera slowly edged her way into the path of the blonde to cut her off. As soon as she did, the redhead was able to see the master thief look at her in disbelief. In doing so, the Z-fighter held her ground, her body slumped forward and her arms hanging limply from her shoulders.

After stepping into Hasky's path and eclipsing her view of the Capsule Corp headquarters, the Hera straightened up, took a deep breath, and faced her adversary with an unflinching gaze.

Hasky recoiled in shock, "You've got to be kidding me. How did you-" Frown deepening considerably, the blonde clicked her tongue and flicked her hair. "Well... you're certainly a persistent one, aren't you?"

Ignoring the woman's unintended compliment, Zangya clenched her fists and spoke, "As long as I have breath in my body, there is no way I'm going to let you or anyone else lay a finger on Gohan." Her brow furrowed even more as she shot the woman a wave of killing intent. "If you do... there's not a sword in the world that will stop me from ripping your head clean off of your shoulders. That I can promise you."

The alien's threats put an amused grin on Hasky's lips. "From the looks of it, I doubt your body will be able to survive even one more hit from me. Seriously... what can you possibly hope to accomplish in the sorry state that you're in? Huh? Nothing. That's what." She then craned her head and leered at the red head with a menacing air. "But... I suppose I can humor you for a little while longer. It's no skin off my ass. But as soon as I'm done playing around out here, I'm going to waltz into that building, carve out Son Gohan's heart... and show it to you. That way, not only will you be able to see how wrong you actually were, but also if you were able to live up to your promise. How does that sound?"

And that was when the world and the galaxy suddenly seemed to snap.

A clap of thunder rang out followed by a shockwave, one that was powerful enough to generate a visible ripple across the country's surface and almost knock Hasky off her feet.

The blonde haired assassin barely had enough time to steady herself before a second blast of wind crashed into her body and forced her to throw her arms up in defense. Gritting her teeth in shock, the master thief looked through the crack in her forearms to see a bright, green aura burning around her opponent's body, a formation that reached several stories into the sky and became enveloped in currents of gold lightning, which tore at the ground and shredded it like confetti.

Despite the ridiculous amount of noise being produced by the miniature super storm, above the howling winds, the thunder crashing, and the ground being ripped asunder around them, Hasky was still able to hear the bellowing cry from the person at the center of it. In a show of unfathomable rage and force, Zangya, with her fists clenched and her stance wide, threw her head back in a terrifying scream of agony. The action caused her aura to kick up at a much fiercer rate and the lightning that was surrounding her to shoot up into the clouds. Not only did this phenomenon cause the entire countryside to tremble violently and a cyclone to form overhead, but the light being generated by the Hera covered the entire metropolis in a blinding strobe, which had the blonde haired assassin as well as the rest of the audience shut their eyes in pain.
Sparks and embers also flew off of the alien's body, which wrapped around her in a cloak of sparkling flecks, which then led to a bright, white glow wrapping her form up like a cocoon.

Flustered by the shockwaves given off by the infuriated girl, Hasky did her best to hold her ground as the last of the fierce winds died down. When they finally did, the assassin looked back at her target to see what'd happened and her jaw slowly dropped at what she saw.

Standing in the heart of a pillar of green, transparent fire, a newly transformed Zangya emerged from the light. Not only had her skin taken on a darker shade of green, her curly red hair, which once floated behind her like a cloud, had turned spiky and now resembled the hair-styling of a Super Saiyan 3. Furthermore, not only did she have golden streaks in her hair, she also had golden sclera around her eyes, with a single streak across each of her cheeks, and a leaf-shaped one in the center of her forehead.

Her green aura had also become fiercer, blasting around her in an impressive and deadly inferno. When she opened her eyes moments later and fixed them squarely on her foe, a current of gold lightning shot across her body and struck the ground, marking the completion of her transformation.

Chi-Chi and Bulma, who were watching the scene from their second-story position, were gob smacked at what they'd just witnessed.

Even Hasky was initially overwhelmed by the sight of the transformation. However, after staring back at her opponent for a few moments in awe, a smile quickly returned to her face and the assassin grinned confidently. "Oh… it looks like you had another trick hidden up your sleeve, after all. Though the streaks and sclera are a nice touch, I don't see how spiking up your hair and adding some makeup will do you any good in a fight." Despite how intimidating Zangya looked, clad in her newly acquired form, the assassin standing several yards away wasn't swayed in the least, and simply conjured up another cloud of golden dust behind her. "As impressive a light show as it was, it was a sad and completely useless gesture." She then formed another wall of a dozen swords behind her and pointed them all directly at her opponent.

That was when it happened.

Her eyes widening sharply, Zangya suddenly summoned a row of twelve green energy spheres behind her, all of which materialized in a nano-second. The instant they appeared, they then shot forward one after the other at a ridiculous speed, streaking through the air and leaving trails of hot, green energy behind them. In a series of flashes, the energy balls struck the swords hovering in the air behind Hasky and shattered them, causing sparks to fly and loud clangs of metal against metal to ring out.

A split second later, it was over, and Hasky's eyes snapped behind her in alarm. When she saw her swords were all gone, she looked back at her opponent in shock.

"Wait… what the hell just happened?" the blonde thought. Shit, not even her built-in sensors were able to pick up what'd happened.

"When Bojack destroyed our home planet all those years ago, I thought my life had lost all meaning and purpose to it… that any and all dreams I may have had vanished with the other three billion members of my kind," Zangya's voice spoke up, drawing Hasky's full and undivided attention. When the assassin fixed her glare back onto her, the Hera, shrouded in a flame of green energy and golden lightning, narrowed her eyes and continued to speak. "I thought that I was destined to serve under him for the rest of eternity… to remain a slave to his will, with no hope of pursuing anything more. I did everything he asked of me out of fear of his power and the cruelty of his wrath." She then clenched her fists tightly and lowered her head. "But then I met someone…
someone who not only had the strength to stand up to that monster, but someone who was able to free me from the prison Bojack had formed around me… and gave me a chance to find meaning in my existence… a reason to live. That person was someone who risked everything to open my eyes to the world and unshackle the chains of my heart… and he became the most important person in my life. It was only after all of that did I find my real reason for living."

Curious by the woman's speech, the blonde assassin cocked an eyebrow. "Really? And what would that be?"

Zangya smiled, her eyes twinkling under the veil of her aura. "He made me realize that I could do anything with my life… that I could chase any dream and any goal that I wanted, so long as I gave it my all and had friends to support me every step of the way. I came to understand that as long as I have people in my life to cherish and protect, they can give me the strength to make any dream I had possible." She then took a step forward and, with a sudden burst of ki, allowed a current of lightning to snap off of her and strike the ground next to Hasky, sending dust splattering over her suit. "And I'll be damned if I'm going to let the one person who made me realize all of this get killed by some blonde haired, wannabe goddess who relies on cheap tricks and thievery to gain power!"

Eye twitching from hearing that little slight to her name, the assassin clenched her fists and lowered her head at the woman. "Do you wish to test me… mongrel?"

The Hera grinned, "You claim that you are some divine being from another world? Well… if that's the case, and you really are the genuine article, then I'll just surpass everything about you and take you down. After all, if a mere human can become a goddess, then there's no reason why a Hera can't!" When she saw her opponent's expression change to one of shock, Zangya slid into a wider stance, clenched her fists tightly, and powered up, allowing her aura to explode off of her with a clap of lightning.

The shockwave she generated sent a wave of dust in all directions, slamming it into the Capsule Corp main building and rattling it, forcing all those inside to hold on for dear life. Chi-Chi and Bulma literally cried out when they felt the floor above them crack, dropping dust and debris right down on top of them. Furthermore, due to the sudden massive increase of ki in the area, Zangya's actions were able to rouse the other Z-fighters from their individual states of unconsciousness.

From their places on the ground, Vegeta and Piccolo looked up to see what the heck was going on.
When they spotted their teammate standing several yards away, bathed in a green glow, and noticed the drastic changes to her form and the enormous jump in her power level, all the two wounded warriors could do was gawk and watch to see what would happen next.

Even Videl and Kana, both of whom had regained consciousness, were watching from a distance with half-lidded gazes and amazement reflected in their eyes.

Once she was certain she had enough energy and had her crosshairs locked firmly upon her target, Zangya, assumed in her Super Hera 2 form, cocked her body forward and leapt into action with an explosive start.

"HERE I COME, MASTER THIEF HASKY!" the Z-fighter bellowed, launching herself from her position with a deafening thunderclap and a roar of wind. She then barreled towards her opponent in a blur of green light, tearing a path across the ruined property, "DO YOU HAVE ENOUGH WEAPONS AT YOUR DISPOSAL?!"

Biting her teeth tightly, Hasky conjured up a katana and a claymore directly behind her. After reaching for them, she grabbed both weapons and yanked them out of the air, their golden blades flashing under the rays of the sun as the red lines on her suit lit up with her fury.

"DON'T GET TOO CONFIDENT… MONGREL!" Hasky practically screamed back, before dashing forward and meeting Zangya in the center.

When the two lunged at one another, they collided in the center of the field with a flash of light and a sonic boom, with enough force to split the ground and cause the entire city to jump two feet into the air…

OOO

(Meanwhile…)

Hundreds of miles away from West City towards the North, in a town that was far out of reach of any of the major capitals on the continent, a pair of familiar figures was quietly making their way across the wilderness. Though they managed to blend into their environment and interact with the communities of this period to avoid drawing any suspicion, the two of them still found a way to stand out due to a couple of notable differences in their respective appearances.

For the past couple of weeks since arriving in this time plain, the young female duo, Pan and Eva, had done their best to adapt to their new and unfamiliar surroundings. After spending so many years fighting across a gradually worsening wasteland of rock and ash, which was also under the control of a universe conquering, psychopathic, magical, scientific monstrosity, you could imagine that coming to terms with an ordinary earthing life, in a time when none of that was happening, would be pretty difficult for a pair of adolescent girls. In spite of all their military and martial arts training, there were not many situations in their short lives that'd required them to fit into a world like this.

The last few days had actually seen the pair experience genuine communication with a person who wasn't one of their family members or close friends in their resistance group. As far as human contact went for them, speaking with their mothers, Kaiser, Bulma, and Trunks, was about as much talking as they got with human beings over any given amount of time, and they were pretty much all relatives to them.

However, being the strong-minded, savvy little fighters that they were, both Pan and Eva were able to meld well into their setting and assert themselves into the urban community. From that point onwards, after acquiring some new sets of clothing that didn't look like rags, tactical gear, or stuff that smelled like open sewer, they were able to go out into the world and explore a time that had since long been forgotten by them for close to a decade.

It was a real culture shock for the young martial artists to actually see trees, rivers that weren't boiling streams of lava, and food shops that weren't broken down or deserted, still intact and fully functioning. Thankfully the cash Bulma was able to lend them to purchase items in this time was still in circulation.

Anyway, after many days of traveling, the pair of tired youngsters had decided to stop off at this small, country town to have a bit of a rest. Using the time to explore the world that they'd never had a chance to see, the two children had taken to wandering the streets for most of that morning, before settling down at a café for a quick break. Ordering a couple of drinks and a pipping hot meal, the teenagers sat across from one another, and relished in the orange flavored shakes and spicy yakisoba. Since arriving in this time, this was probably the most delicious food they'd ever had in Kai knew how long.
The pair nearly cried at how tasty it was.

However, keeping it together and not letting their emotions get the better of them, both Pan and Eva spent an enjoyable midday, feasting on scrumptious treats and sauce-based food.

They were right in the middle of the best parts of their meals too, until the red haired girl with the pointy ears sensed something amiss in the air and looked up from her noodles in alarm. As soon as she did, her eyes then darted Westerly-wards, tracking the source of the anomaly back to its source. Her alarmed response was also detected by her sister Pan, who looked across at the Saiyan-Hera hybrid in concern.

"What is it, Eva?" the raven haired girl in the winter coat, boots and beanie asked.

Her sibling, dressed in a fur coat of her own, gloves and a winter beaver, blinked as she gazed across town and onto the horizon. Taking a few moments to analyze the disturbance and certify its origin, the red haired child from the future then balked when she realized exactly what the disturbance was.

"Th-That's mum… she's… transformed into her angelic form," Eva informed with a surprised tone of voice.

Pan, setting her chopsticks down, also looked up with a similar expression of surprise on her face. It didn't take her long to get a fix on the energy signature either. "You mean she's gone into her ascended form? Wow…" Even though she'd felt this energy signature many times before in the future, it still amazed her at how much power these higher level transformations actually possessed. Not to mention they were experiencing these instances of their parents as they were happening, making these moments even more monumental.

Though they weren't close to the scene, the impact of the ascension was still mindboggling in itself. The Kais up in Otherworld could probably feel the energy from this transformation as well as they could, and they were trillions of light years away… practically outside of the universe.

Looking down for a moment to think about what could be prompting her mother to transform to her high level state so soon, Eva then looked back at her sister with a frown, "She must be fighting Hasky-oneechan right now."

"You mean our kenjutsu master?" Pan asked, to which she was quickly graced with a nod from her sibling and teammate. When she ran this answer through her mind, the raven haired teen then clenched her fists on top of their table and frowned inwardly. "This was back when dad's group and Kaiser's company were still enemies with one another. That means Sentinel is still moving around and gathering resources." She then faced her sister with a troubled gaze. "We can't attack yet… not when the full copy of his programming is scattered across different interfaces."

Eva nodded in agreement, "Yeah. We have to wait until the right moment." Seconds later, she then craned her head back around and looked towards the horizon once more. When her eyes focused on the distant clouds, her expression became one of longing and forlorn, something that her sister was able to pick up even from her position.

Upon sensing the shift of concern in her sister's mood, Pan frowned and, reaching forward, poked her sibling in the arm. "I know what you're thinking. Remember what Bulma said? We can't interfere with any of dad's or mum's battles. Doing so will only give away our presence and send the timeline into a downward spiral, just like when Trunks came back from the future to warn dad and the others about the androids."
Staring back at her sister, the red haired hybrid gritted her teeth and clenched her fists as well. However, before her energy could start to rise in response to her frustrations, the adolescent calmed her senses and relaxed. Giving a sigh, she then nodded in understanding and focused her attention back onto her food.

"This is going to be a lot harder than I thought," the girl replied in a whisper.

It was a remark that Pan wholeheartedly agreed with, "No kidding."

After mulling over in uncomfortable silence for a minute or so, the two returned to their meal.

Even though they had the right sense of mind to maintain proper eating habits just like their parents taught them, they still possessed the diets of a female Saiyan in her youth. That was why they decided to order two to three more servings of food afterwards, before moving on to the next town and closer to their objective.

So much for not drawing attention to themselves.

OOO

(Back in West City)

The battle between Zangya and Hasky had dragged on for several minutes now, and in that time the two had been battling it out in one of the most vicious contests of strength the metropolis had ever seen. Ground had been shifted and cracked, buildings had been damaged and collapsed, and entire properties had been forced to withstand attacks with the ability to level whole mountains, all of which had missed their intended targets. Though only one or two bystanders had unintentionally gotten caught up in the crossfire and hurt, no other civilian casualties or deaths had been reported. That was surprising considering the level both warriors were fighting at.

However, there was a reasonable explanation for the lack of damage to the countryside. After realizing that their fight was leaving a lot of marks on the Capsule Corp estate and was slowly beginning to involve the rest of the community, Zangya wisely chose to take the battle elsewhere. During a particularly brutal exchange between the two warriors that saw them fly through a couple of skyscrapers and then onto a freeway, where they ended up trading a few hits, the Hera dragged her opponent out onto the ocean. Knowing that the water would help dampen the impact of a lot of their attacks and soften the blows to the earth a little, it was probably the most ideal location for a battle between two super-powered fighters to take place.

Dragging their battle several kilometers away from the mainland, as well as the coast brushing against the West capital, the Z-fighter was confident they would be able to fight it out here till their hearts were content and one of them had killed the other. After all, the Hera was more inclined on killing her foe rather than any other scenario taking place. So sucking up whatever remaining doubts or reluctances she had in using deadly force, the red haired angel with the golden streaks cranked up the output.

The blonde haired assassin meanwhile was having troubles of her own.

Though her battle with the Z-fighters had gotten off to a great start and she was able to control the pacing of the conflict throughout its duration, the moment she started crossing blades with the Hera, weird things started taking place. When she was dealing with the other warriors, her bladed weapons and beams had proven to be super effective against their fighting skills and tactics. Based on her understanding of their abilities, she knew the group of super powered fighters wasn't used to crossing fists with opponents who used excessive amounts of weaponry and preferred fighting in close, hand-to-hand. While their use of blasts was impressive and well above par, they weren't experts at fighting at long range or with handicaps.

That was the basis of all warriors who practiced martial arts. The engagements were always within arms or legs reach, and rarely exceeded that distance. Utilizing her archery-inspired, long-range fighting style, Hasky was able to capitalize on their weaknesses and deal them incredibly painful defeats.

But now, as her fight with the newly empowered Zangya started to drag on, the master thief found herself struggling to deal the woman any damage. In fact, she was finding it incredibly hard to land any hits at all. Every time the blonde sent blasts or swords after her target, she would either deflect them or avoid them altogether, allowing them to hit the water or the surrounding islands without any effect, except causing a useless explosion. She even tried dropping them down on her from above, but even then her attacks were avoided.

However, while this occurred for only a minimal amount of time, the main issue she was currently experiencing was having her weapons knocked out before they even had a chance to fire. Whenever Hasky created a new cluster of swords or spears to launch at her opponent, the red haired Hera would simply take them out with those weird ki blasts floating behind her. While at first the assassin thought nothing of these attacks and would simply replace the swords that she lost, when it started happening repeatedly, the woman began to grow more and more annoyed and concerned.

What's more, these green ki blasts her opponent was using to counter her blades were orbiting around her body like little moons, protecting the Hera from attacks that came from blind spots. It was almost like they had a mind of their own.

More explosions ripped across the ocean surface as Hasky sent more swords flying after her opponent, who sprinted over the waves in a green blur. Golden streaks chased after her, impacting the water and detonating one after the other. When Zangya arced around after avoiding the barrage, she then rushed towards Hasky's position atop the water and picked up speed, causing several sonic booms to ring out as she effortlessly broke the sound barrier.

Narrowing her eyes, the blonde assassin raised her hand and, with a yell of effort, she fired a powerful golden blast from her hands. Her attack, which had enormous width and spread, struck the approaching Hera headlong, only to be deflected and sent up into the sky. It was there the blast detonated in an enormous sphere of white, sucking up the nearby clouds and dispelling the rest hovering over the region. The exploding attack then allowed Zangya to close the distance and charge her opponent, who responded by firing several more swords in her direction that honed in on her position a full kilometer away.

Just like before, the green spheres of ki orbiting the Super Hera shot forward and intercepted the swords, shattering them before they could reach their target. This enabled Zangya to leap off of the ocean's surface and into the troposphere, where she then took off as more swords and spears chased after her.

Using perfectly practiced aerial maneuvers, the woman effectively avoided all of the razor sharp projectiles when they attempted to cut her off. Once that was done, she took off down a straight line and picked up speed. When the spears attempted to follow her, the Hera spun around and nailed the weapons with a salvo of blasts, destroying all of the swords and allowing Zangya to drop down safely to the ocean's surface. The instant she hit the water and crouched down on top of it, another wall of golden blades was sent raining down at her, prompting the woman to look up and focus her ki. When she did, the remaining green spheres of energy orbiting her launched upwards and cut off the descending swords, taking them out in a shower of sparks and shards of metal.

As soon as her counter was successful, Zangya rose to her feet and allowed another cluster of green energy spheres to begin orbiting her body protectively.

The sight of them had Hasky click her tongue and narrow her eyes in annoyance. "Why are this woman's energy attacks giving me so much trouble?"

To answer her question, the Hera standing several hundred meters out spoke, "You don't get it yet, do you?" Seeing the blonde look at her attentively, the Z-fighter continued to speak. "As perfect as your suit's abilities may seem from a distance, there are several major flaws in its design that I was able to spot while I was fighting you. Though you can upgrade the class of each individual weapon you create, their constructions are inflexible and can't be changed once they've been launched from their positions. That means they can be successfully countered with a ki blast of equal or greater strength. A person who is proficient enough at manipulating energy and using attacks at long distances can effectively neutralize each of your creations before they have a chance to be launched and, as it so happens, I'm the best in my group at molding energy with pinpoint precision." She emphasized this by gesturing to the green energy spheres orbiting her, which continued to do so even as she traded words with her adversary. "What's more, your attack patterns are too predictable. Since the weapons you create mostly travel in straight lines, I can simply avoid them or intercept them before they have a chance to hit their targets."

Spitting to the side, Hasky shook her head and shot the woman a threatening glare. "So what? Even if you've figured out the trick to my abilities, I can still cut you down with a full frontal assault!"

When she said that, another formation of lances and spears took shape behind her, and pointed directly at Zangya's position.

Upon seeing the woman summon another cluster of deadly weapons, the Hera smirked and shook her head sadly. "You know… at first I thought you were a really great warrior… someone who was dangerous and could pose a real threat to our group. But now that I look at you for what you really are, someone who talks big and uses insults and intimidation to put people down, all I can feel for you is pity." When she saw the blonde balk at her remark, Zangya pressed forward her advantage and leered. "You're just a reflection of my former self… a bully… a scared little girl who has to rely on technology and other people's accomplishments to give them power. Actually, now that I think about it, Master Thief Hasky is definitely a fitting title for someone like you. You're just like the weapons that you replicate and steal from other heroes… a tool that was made to be used by someone else."

This comment turned out to be the last straw for the blonde haired assassin. Gnashing her teeth in anger, Hasky narrowed her green eyes menacingly and snarled. "When I'm done with you… there won't be a single shred or bone shard left of your wretched, shit-talking, insolent corpse… YOU GREEN, DEMON WHORE!" With her rage climbing, the woman summoned a second golden cloud of energy behind her, which then formed into a wall of a hundred swords on top of the lances she already had. When these weapons took shape and solidified, they pointed at the Hera and launched themselves in her direction without hesitation.

Massive explosions engulfed the area of ocean where Zangya was standing, sending an enormous geyser of water into the sky. When the pillar eventually cascaded back into the sea, more and more blasts of water began shooting into the sky, accompanied by an occasional flash of fire and a burst of smoke.

Determined to kill her opponent, Hasky held her ground and began unleashing volley after volley of bladed weapons after her target. Keeping track of her with her eyes and her suit's inbuilt sensors, the assassin continued producing more and more swords to replace the ones she launched. At first she managed to hold her place standing on top of the ocean, attacking her opponent at long range with her infinite string of light-based projectiles. But when Zangya retaliated with a barrage of her own, the blonde haired fighter was forced to abandon her station and back off.

Through the mist and steam produced by the heat of the blasts across the ocean, Hasky found herself glaring into a thick wall of perspiration. Expressing visible annoyance at the barrier, the moment she managed to touch back down onto the water's surface, Hasky formed an arc of swords in front of her and fired them into the steam, cutting it away under the sheer force of her attacks. She managed to clear much of the air space for her field of vision to improve, but her actions came a little too late when green blasts started rocketing at her from random spots in the fog, and flew towards her at breakneck speeds.

Seeing the lances of energy honing in on her spot, Hasky threw her right arm up and produced a cluster of circular shields, which effectively took the force of each of the attacks. The green beams exploded against the steel barriers, shattering them one after the other. When the barrage ceased, the blonde fighter produced another wall of spears behind her and let them fly once more, returning Zangya's fire with a round of her own. Her swords once again peppered the stretch of sea, filling the sky with blasts of water.

"Spark Laser!"

However, in the midst of her salvo, a red flash of light filled the cloud, followed by a heavy stream of red lightning that engulfed the entire ocean surface and flew towards the blonde assassin. Alarmed at the sight of the electrical energy charging towards her, Hasky took a big step back and thrust both hands forward. When her suit lit up, golden streams of electricity ran down her arms and shot off of her fingers. The torrent was just as powerful as the one heading towards her.

"Donar!"

The assassin's electrical attack flew from her palms to intercept Zangya's. In the blink of an eye, every single current and stream of the opposing bolts intercepted one another in midair and clashed in a terrifying display of power. The forces of nature had nothing on the display of raw, unbridled chaos, which not only covered a majority of the ocean, but also reached as far as the coastline. The cliffs and hillsides near West City fell under the duo's respective assaults, taking the force of the rebounding lightning streams, which tore into the earth and forests. Their attacks eventually started a small fire, which began to spread over the wilderness at an alarming rate.

When the lightning storm faded shortly thereafter, Hasky wasted no time in summoning a spear into her hand and, after spinning it around her body and arms, jabbed the tip forward and powered it up. The blade began to glow a hot yellow, with sparks of electricity and fire flying off of it. As soon as the staff had reached maximum potential, a powerful beam was then launched from it and sent screaming across the ocean, cutting a trench through the water. She then began guiding it, carving it across the marine to slice through an entire island. Upon seeing the isle go up in a fiery pillar of smoke, she then directed the beam into the sky, where her opponent could be seen retreating several kilometers away in the form of a green streak of light.

After gaining a high enough altitude where she could see her opponent as clear as day, the fully powered up Zangya cocked her hand back and thrust it forward. A red beam then shot from her finger and dove towards her target like a straight bolt of lightning, prompting Hasky to quickly maneuver her spear's attack to intercept it. The two blasts collided in midair and detonated with catastrophic force, engulfing the air above the ocean in an enormous, sphere-shaped blast that could've easily destroyed the planet. With the earth shaking under the force of the combusting energy, the assassin down on the ocean surface watched the flames eventually subside and become replaced by smoke.

Almost instantly after the cloud emerged from the embers of the colliding attacks, green energy spheres began shooting through the smoke towards the woman. Recoiling in alarm, Hasky fired off a counter attack of her own in the form of golden spears, which streaked towards the approaching attacks and cut them off in a series of flashy fire bursts. Loud clangs filled the air once more, before a second large explosion ripped through the atmosphere, when the last ki blast hit the drill-shaped spear the assassin launched to break the salvo.

Losing sight of her target for a few moments, the blonde thief then spun around when her sensors picked up an energy signature approaching from behind. In retaliation, the woman forged another line of swords behind her and, like an artillery unit, launched them at the Hera when she saw her opponent's aura clad form sprinting over the ocean. Her swords and lances chased her in a continuous stream of attacks, peppering the sea with explosions. In the middle of the offensive, as the geysers of water continued to chase after her, Zangya formed another cluster of three green spheres over her shoulder. Once they were stable, the Z-fighter mentally willed them to life and launched them at her opponent's position two miles away while she continued to run from the barrage.

Instead of directly striking Hasky, the attacks hit the water around her instead, causing explosions of steam to fill the air. When the blasts eventually settled, they left a cloud of fog hanging around the woman, blocking her view of the battlefield.

Snarling in annoyance, Hasky attempted to reacquire her target through the mist. But just before she could do so, she was caught completely by surprise when she saw Zangya's form burst through the condensation and, held firmly in her right hand, a sword that was unlike any the human had seen before.

It wasn't any sword either. As a testament to her race, the Hera had managed to recreate the exact same weapon once used by her former teammate Gokuha through the Magic Materialization technique taught to her by Piccolo. With a gold, triangular handle guard, blue handle, and a long, thin blade, it was the primary weapon that was once used by the royal guard of her people.

Taking it into a single-handed grip, the red haired woman cocked it back and, with a loud battle cry, lunged at her foe with a downward swing.

Hasky barely had enough time to summon a second sword to counter it, conjuring up a claymore and blocking the weapon that slammed into her. The resulting collision caused a deafening clang and had the blonde skid back along the water for a few feet, before the duo found themselves locked in a heated grappling match.

Her suit glowing red with fury as it mustered all the strength it could to fight back against the powerful Z-fighter, Hasky then took up the lance in her other hand and attempted to spear her opponent through the stomach. But Zangya, already aware of the second weapon, caught it with her free hand and held it tightly, preventing the woman from doing anything more. This left both of them standing in place on the ocean surface, glaring at one another with a combination of hatred and disgust.

The master thief ground her teeth in frustration, "Impossible! I'm being... forced back... by an opponent like you?!

Eyes burning furiously, the red haired woman with the gold sclera stared right back at the human as she slowly began to push her across the sea. With her superior strength granted to her by her new transformation, she began to press her advantage. "As long as you strike hard and fast… you'll be able to crush your opponents with ease. But if you cling too tightly to your techniques… and drag out the same motion over and over again… your skills become nothing but a novelty… and you leave yourself wide open!" She then grinned and pushed against Hasky's sword even further, causing the blonde to lean away in surprise. "You've shown your hand against me one too many times, Hasky! And now my attacks are ready and waiting… so I'm always one step AHEAD!"

With a cry of effort, the Hera drove her sword forward and shattered the blonde's claymore, forcing Hasky to release her hold on both.

Recoiling in disbelief, the assassin growled through her teeth, and in the blink of an eye, summoned more weapons to her hands. "D-Damn it!" Grabbing an axe and a katana out of thin air, she lashed out at her opponent feverishly, only to have her weapons deflected when the Hera swung back with her rapier and lance. "Why don't you… WHY DON'T YOU…" The Z-fighter destroyed both of the blonde's weapons and, when Hasky called upon another sword and struck down at her, Zangya ended up shattering the lance as well, sending sparks and metal flying everywhere. But Hasky didn't relent nor did she shirk, and continued to lash out in rage, "JUST DIE!"

When the woman swung down at her with another battle axe, the Hera gripped her rapier in two hands, swung upwards, and destroyed both weapons in an explosive collision. The instant they shattered, Zangya cocked her fist back and drove a punch straight into her opponent's face. The blow broke through the woman's bubble shield, connected with a thunderclap and punched a crater in the water straight down to the seabed thousands of feet below. Hasky meanwhile was sent flying backwards, where she ended up skidding along the water's surface, accompanied by the enormous wave caused by the punch.

Upon stopping her flight, the stunned assassin reached up with her hand, wiped her lips on her fingers, and looked down. When she saw the splatter of blood across her palm and tasted the telltale tang on her tongue, Hasky's hair bristled and she glared up at her adversary in rage. "You… HOW DARE YOU!" she barked loudly, before the red lines on her suit lit up and a cloud of gold formed behind her. The energy then transformed into two dozen swords and lances, which she aimed at her quarry. "I can't believe I have to go all out against a worthless piece of scum like you!" Without even a shred of regard or mercy, Hasky unleashed a wall of a thousand swords directly upon her opponent.

But Zangya was ready.

Summoning two green spheres of energy into her hands, the Hera forged them into a pair of long energy blades resembling knight swords. Their forms crackling like lightsabers, the woman lunged forward and, swinging both weapons through the air in a graceful and impressive display of skill, began deflecting the enormous projectiles one after the other. Her beamed weapons sliced through the salvo of lesser arms like knives through butter, shattering them and sending their sparks on the wind. Even when Hasky concentrated the barrage into a single river of swords in an effort to push the woman back and keep her at bay, it did her no good.

Shockwaves rang out after Zangya destroyed the last of the spears flung in her direction. When she saw her opponent create another wall, the Hera retaliated instantaneously, producing three dozen green spheres of energy behind her and sending them arcing into the sky. The streaks of green struck the clusters of swords, wiping out two thirds of them and stopping Hasky's attack dead.

With the air clear, the Z-fighters charged forward with a loud cry of battle, her aura springing up around her and sending golden currents of lightning shooting off in all directions.
Hasky recoiled in fright, quickly replacing the weapons she'd lost with a handful more and sending them at her target.

Millisecond by millisecond Zangya advanced upon her foe, recreating another set of beam weapons to take out the barrages of swords to clear her way. Despite their sheer numbers, the warrior was undeterred. Not even the highest forms of lance could damage her and, with a combination of her martial arts skills and her mastery over energy, she was able to avoid and repel them all. Another cluster of green energy balls had formed into orbit around the Hera, allowing her to pepper her opponent from a distance and open up her route.

Explosions ripped across the ocean from all the blasts and swords that were deflected. When the effectiveness of the attacks spread to some of the nearby islands, the landforms were wiped out in a series of fiery domes and eruptions, disintegrating them with ease.

Realizing that her opponent was getting closer and closer with every lap she made around her,
Hasky clenched her fists tightly and, deciding that she'd had enough, threw both her arms out wide.
"Don't push your luck, scum! DORNIIIIII!!" Golden chains then exploded off of her body in arcs, cutting and slicing through the air towards the approaching Hera like bolts of lightning.

Seeing the net of chains heading towards her and threatening to block her path and catch her, Zangya cocked her right hand up, formed a red disc of ki, and hurled it forward in a wide arc. The monofilament attack expanded when she threw it, slamming into the chains and, after grinding against them for a few seconds, sliced right through them. When the air cleared and the disc continued traveling forward, the Hera unleashed a shotgun blast of energy from her hand, the tiny, pellet spheres arcing through the air and converging on Hasky's position.

The blonde assassin, shocked at seeing her chains cut away so easily, ducked to avoid the energy disc, but was unable to block the blasts that followed. The attacks hammered her body repeatedly, knocking her a bit and causing her to stumble away. After regaining her balance and bearings, Hasky looked up in time to see Zangya diving down at her with her fist, prompting the blonde to take immediate action.

With a quick power up, the spandex wearing assassin sprang off of the ocean surface and shot straight up into the sky. Her explosive movement caused the Hera to miss with her downward swing and, following the woman's path up into the sky with her eyes, decided to give pursuit. The defender of earth took flight with a sonic boom, sending a wave rippling out in all directions. In her haste, the Hera left a trail of green energy in her wake as she rocketed after her quarry at full speed, who only seemed to climb higher and higher the closer she got.

After ascending into the lower stratosphere and seeing her enemy was getting closer by the second, Hasky decided she'd had enough playing around. As soon as she reached an appropriate height above the clouds, the woman pointed her hand straight down at her approaching enemy and, seeing her growing bigger in her crosshairs, summoned whatever energy she had at her disposal. In a series of flashes that encompassed almost the entire face of the planet, a wall of over a thousand curved energy blades suddenly formed around the woman to cover the troposphere. The instant the clusters gained stability, they solidified into droplet-shaped daggers, all of which were trained and ready to fire.

The instant her weapons had taken shape and her sights fixated upon her rival, Hasky sent forth her attack in a single, unbroken wave. "YASAKANI NO MAGATAMA!" (Eight Shaku Curved Jewel)
A rain of metal gold shortly followed; the weapons cascading towards Zangya all at once and filling the sky with a twinkling haze.
Despite the huge number of projectiles now raining down towards her, Zangya didn't hesitate in plowing right through them to keep on going. Powering up and shielding her arms in the same green energy she had before, the red haired alien smashed her way through the first strike, disintegrating the projectiles and scattering them on the wind. After that, she then began dodging and evading the rest of the falling daggers, occasionally smashing through several with her arms and lobbing energy spheres up at the ones that were out of reach.

She zigzagged left and right, dodging clusters and entire walls of daggers. After kicking off one of the daggers and punching her way through a fifth wave of weapons, Zangya picked up speed and attempted to push further. She blew past the blue of the sky and progressed higher into the black of the vacuum, leaving the earth far behind. But the higher she climbed, the fiercer Hasky's waves became, gradually increasing the difficulty of reaching the finishing line.

Eventually, the Hera's ascent into the atmosphere slowed down enough to give the blonde punisher an easier target. After she'd charged a strong enough attack behind her shield of infinite daggers, the assassin then dropped a powerful golden blast right on top of the Z-fighter.

The attack crashed into Zangya's aura with the force of a comet and, after a momentary tug-of-war match, the alien woman was sent plummeting back to the earth's surface thousands of feet below. Her form barreled through the clouds like a stone, shattering the sound barrier, while also throwing her completely off course. When the Hera spotted the mainland closing in through her petrifying tumble, the red haired martial artist stopped her fall short with a quick burst of ki, causing a loud 'thump' to echo out as she successfully halted herself in mid air.

Finding she was now suspended several hundred feet above West City and the noticeably battle-scarred Capsule Corp far below, the transformed Hera then turned her glare upwards and snarled when she sensed her opponent was still hanging up in the clouds.

She was probably waiting up there, catching her breath and planning her next move. Thankfully their battle over the ocean had spared the planet's inhabitants from being bombarded by their respective assaults. The rain of daggers had been thankfully dampened by the marine's surface, stopping them from doing any further damage to the planet. Though the fish certainly wouldn't think too kindly of their battle, Zangya was positive Mother Nature would forgive her for any other little discrepancies she caused the earth in this conflict.

The rest of the Z-fighters, still picking themselves up from the beating they'd received, watched the battle taking place from far below.

Meanwhile, high up in the clouds, Hasky was now all set to finish off her opponent with one last, decisive hit. Fists clenched and the red lights in her suit glowing brightly as they absorbed an enormous batch of energy from the sun, the blonde then held both hands out and began summoning an enormous quantity of ki. This took the form of a huge cloud of sparkling, golden light, which filled up the thermosphere and converged into a single point.

Drawn by a powerful magnetic force, the particles of light quickly came together into the form of an enormous pillar of energy, which solidified into a long sword of a unique design. Possessing a long silver blade of excellent quality, it also had blue runes inscribed along the weapon's length towards the handle, where three gems sat within an elegant crest of blue and gold. These flame designs then fed into the handle, which was made of blue overlapping plates and golden inscriptions. From a distance the sword was a spectacular, glistening piece of treasure.

The only difference between this artifact and the genuine article though, is that this one was roughly two thirds the size of the earth's moon and its tip was pointed straight down at the planet.
Grinning widely at finally conjuring up the enormous weapon in the vacuum of space, the blonde assassin pulled her hand back, took aim at her opponent, and prepared for launch. "I've had enough of this pointless battle! I'm ending this once and for all! Dodge this if you want to! But know that if you try to avoid it... the entire earth will be split in half!" Golden aura exploding around her as she telekinetically took hold of her massive weapon Hasky drew her arms back and, with a manic grin in play, let loose all her frustrations in one, titanic swing. "Let's see if you have the guts to stand up to this! CALIBURN FAAAAAAAAAAAALLLL!"

With a loud rumble, the woman dropped the sword straight down onto the planet, its blade piercing through the atmosphere and into the clouds. The speed it began to drop at caused its tip to burn through the layers of the earth's sky and, while sonic booms rocked the heavens, the gigantic blade descended towards West City.

Vegeta, Piccolo, Videl and all the other fighters who were conscious, looked up in horror when they saw the titan of a construction burst through the clouds. The sheer size, weight and girth of the weapon was tremendous, striking fear into the hearts of the defenders of earth, who were unable to do anything except watch as their inevitable death prepared to make landfall. Its approach caused the planet to tremble and, while the heroes held their ground, the population of West City scattered in terror.

The cries and screams of people fleeing the metropolis in an effort to escape the massive blade heading towards the mainland were drowned out by the atmospheric entry of the sword itself. Judging from the scale of the artifact, there was a one hundred percent chance that should it make contact with the earth, not only would all life be wiped out in a catastrophic shockwave, but the whole planet would be sliced in two.

Zangya however, who continued to hold her position directly below the plummeting monstrosity, had no inclination of letting any of that happen. In fact, she was already prepared with a response.

Green aura bursting around her along with a current of gold lightning, the woman cupped her hands at her sides and began focusing her energy into her palms. Her power skyrocketing while the tip of the blade continued its approach at an alarming rate, the Hera gnashed her teeth and, narrowing her sights on the metal giant, formed a pulsating blue sphere of light between her fingers.

If she was going to defend the earth, then she was going to do it with the very technique that Son Gohan taught her.

"Not a chance in hell! KAAA...MEEE...HAAA...MEEE..." Eyes flashing under the glow of her bio field, the woman drew her arms back and launched her hands forward with a sky splitting shockwave, "HAAAAAALAAAAAAALAAAAAAAALAAA!" A stream of blue energy exploded from her hands, gushing up towards the approaching sword like a missile. The roar of her attack's launch was joined by a series of sonic booms, which rippled through the sky and marked the path that her blast followed.

The woman's beam ascended into the heavens like an interplanetary lance, filling the atmosphere with a celestial glow. A few moments later though, just when it seemed like it would travel on forever, the tip of the Hera's blast then collided headlong with the gigantic sword. Their impact was marked by an earth shaking thunderclap, which sent a gale of wind blasting in all directions. The force produced by the sudden stop in momentum of both moves cracked the land and nearly knocked the buildings in West City toppling to the ground. The Z-fighters on the estate actually struggled to latch onto the earth to stop from being blown away as they were pelted by dust and debris.
Lightning and sparks filling the sky, the blast and the giant sword ground into each other like two opposing drill heads. All the energy being emitted by the energy pillar was effectively repelled and sent on the wind as it prevented the light-made forge from going any further. From the way it was being cut into by the sword and looking at how big it was compared to the Z-fighter's diminutive attack, there looked like a very real possibility that Zangya's beam would lose out. But as the sound of a thunderstorm continued to roll over the earth and the two attacks continued to push against one another, the Hera eventually had enough.

With a loud battle cry, the red haired alien unleashed all of the energy she'd built up and poured it straight into her attack. An even more powerful wave of energy rocketed out of her hands and rushed up the beam she was using to clash with her opponent's sword. When it eventually reached the tip a split second later, another loud 'crack' rang out as the hero's pillar of energy forced its way right through the sword. The sudden burst caused the tip of the titanic Caliburn to fracture.

Moments later, the blade shattered and the remains of the beam were swallowed up by a blast that expanded to the size of the moon, before thundering towards the blonde assassin in a wall of energy.

Eyes widening in horror, Hasky only had enough time to give out a single cry of terror before the Hera's attack slammed into her and pushed her up into the thermosphere. The beam of blue light continued to travel off world, effortlessly taking its human passenger with it and sent both of them careening towards the sun's position in the center of the solar system.

Moments later, the iridescent glow generated by the two warring attacks faded, and silence fell over the planet once more.

Rattled under the force of the tug-of-war match, the main structure of Capsule Corp stood crumbling as the center point of the epic clash. While the employees and spectators inside were doing their best to regain their bearings, the Z-fighters out on the lawn were already on their feet and limping from their places of rest. With Vegeta clutching his arm, Videl supporting Goten with her arms, and Piccolo slumped forward on his knees, the group of warriors looked up to see their newly transformed ally drop down from the sky and land in the center of the ruined grass.

Covered in a light sheen of sweat, breathing heavily, but still looking as radiant and battle ready as ever, the Hera locked her eyes firmly on the sky above. Rather than concern herself with the damages in her surroundings, the woman was more worried about the outcome of the fantastic duel she'd just had. What with the capabilities she witnessed Hasky pull during the entire course of their battle, it was clear to see why she still appeared so tense.

Zangya narrowed her eyes when her senses reached up into the atmosphere above earth, "It's not over yet…"

Sure enough, exactly five seconds after uttering those words, sonic booms echoed down from above, which was instantly followed by a bolt of gold light descending from the sky. This missile of photons crashed into the ground several yards in front of Zangya, where it quickly expelled the heat and flames enveloping it, and revealed a burnt and battered Hasky kneeling underneath. Upon rising up from the ground, the incredibly frazzled assassin huffed and focused all of her ire upon her foe.

Much to her scorn, the Hera wasn't intimidated by her return in the least.

Red lines glowing and golden sparks shooting off of her overly charged suit, Hasky conjured up another pair of swords behind her, which bled into the real world in a shimmer of light. While the Z-fighters looking on from a distance took a major step back in fear of another assault, Zangya simply held her ground and watched a smile form on her enemy's face.
"You know… I'm really glad I was able to have this fight. Do you want to know why?" the thief asked in a smug tone of voice, before craning her head towards her opponent. "What you did today was something no other person has ever done before… and that is making me want to kill someone more than anyone else I've ever met in my entire life. Seriously. That is an accomplishment worthy of the highest praise." Her leer increased considerably as she then decided to press a few buttons of her own. "I can expect no less from a woman who wants nothing more than to protect the man that she loves. Too bad that person will never, ever return those feelings to her… especially to a green, alien harlot like you."

Eyes widening and shoulders jerking upwards, Zangya felt the tension representing both her patience and her mental fortitude snap. The jab to her sense of self as well as to her heart was enough to prompt a series of flashbacks to pass through her mind. Images of days she'd spent with Gohan, training with him, eating with him, interacting with his family and loved ones, and seeing his smiling face beaming back at her as he lifted her up from a hard fall, on top of her enemy's uncorroborated slander, were more than enough to set her off.

With menacing snarl, the Hera suddenly stuck her arm out and summoned her race's triangle-guard rapier, which flashed into form and fell into her hand. As soon as her fingers wrapped around the handle, the woman took it into a duel grip, cranked it back, and lunged forward with a bellow of rage. "You… damn… BIIIIIIIIIIITCH!"

Grabbing her own swords out of the air, Hasky held their blades forward and, smirking wildly, charged towards her enemy in kind. "Let's finish this now… Z-FIGHTEEER!"

Meeting in the middle, the two females crashed into each other at full speed, their impact with one another generating a shockwave that cracked the ground and caused a loud 'clap' to echo across the entire city.

After grinding her rapier into the edges of her enemy's twin swords, Zangya then dragged her blade across and threw the woman off of her with a violent shove. Then, the moment she drew her weapon back over her shoulder, the Hera began hammering away at Hasky's blades without even the slightest bit of care or restraint.

Her aura burning around her in a terrifying inferno, the Hera pressed forward with her attack, ramming and smashing her weapon against the duel swords of her adversary in a blur of movement. Green flashes filled the area around them from the speed of the Z-fighter's strikes, all of which were accompanied by a chorus of loud clangs of metal banging against metal. At first Hasky seemed unaffected by the opening assault and held her ground firmly against the alien's relentless blows. But as the close-quarter melee dragged on and Zangya's energy began to climb higher and higher, the blonde started to back away under the pressure being placed upon her. The assassin held her swords up higher in an effort to stop her foe's rapier from hitting her directly. This did well in keeping her from getting cut.

But little by little, Zangya began to force her enemy into a hasty retreat. Her attacks, lacking any grace, form or choreography, smashed into the blonde's defenses without regard for the woman's wellbeing. Along with the ever increasing pressure of her attack, the Hera's ferocity and intensity escalated, enabling her to push her foe further across the grass at a faster pace. The tension was almost palpable and, as the Z-fighter pressed home her advantage, her rage and anger at the blonde grew to an unheard of height.

Hell. She became so caught up in her battering of her foe that the Super Hera didn't notice that her hands had started to bleed from how tightly she was gripping her sword. Even the Z-fighters watching the fight from a distance were baffled by how fiercely and determinedly their teammate was driving her hits into her enemy. It was unreal.

Like the final, decisive spurt between Luke Skywalker and Darth Vader on the Death Star, the Hera hammered, smashed, bludgeoned, cracked, and pounded away at Hasky's defense, desperate to get through. Her speed and strength of her swings increased tenfold when a scream of fury left Zangya's lips, drowning out the sound of her sword knocking the blonde's swords about like a pair of training dummies. She continued to bellow out her war cry the further she pushed her opponent, the sparks of her blade setting fire to their surroundings and causing entire sections of ground to get chopped away under the force of her assault.

Her attack began reaching its climax and, under the blistering onslaught of strikes, a disturbed and bewildered Hasky was trying with all her might just to hang in there.

Arms going numb from blocking, the blonde woman choked out in disbelief, "Ah! Ugh! D-Damn it! There's just… augh… no way!" Noticing her cracking swords, the blonde felt her arms get thrown back when her opponent's bat-like swings crashed against her swords and nearly knocked her off her feet.

She attempted to regain her balance. But the moment the thief skidded to a stop, the blonde then looked up in panic when Zangya, yelling out at the top of her lungs, came barreling down at her with a heavy, downward swing of her rapier. Bringing her blades up, Hasky intercepted the blow, only for both her swords to shatter under the force of the strike that had her recoil in shock.

Seeing the shards of blade fly past her, Hasky gasped in horror. "To think that I'd…" Gritting her teeth, the woman stuck her right arm out and conjured a second weapon into her hand.
"DURANDAL!" (Sword of the Paladin Roland)A giant claymore then appeared in her grip, which she took into a two-handed grip, blocked three more of her foe's swift strikes, and drew it back for a charge. Rage burned in her own eyes as she lunged towards her foe with a mighty roar, one that matched the anger of her foe. "… ever be defeated… BY THE LIKES OF YOU!"

Both women roared at the top of their lungs as they charged at each other. The moment they met in the center for the second time, the pair engaged in the fiercest and most violent clash of swords ever witnessed between two warriors on earth. Sparks and metal filled the air with every blow and, as the pair shook the planet with the violent strikes of their blades, Hasky couldn't help but belt out the same curse over and over again every time their blades connected.

It was brutal.

"Damn you! Damn you, damn you! Damn you, damn you, damn you, damn you! Damn you, damn you, damn you, damn you! Damn you, damn you, damn you, damn you!" Hasky shouted with every blow she landed, sparks and metal flying as the two warriors chipped away at their swords bit by bit. More flashes and clangs filled the air as Zangya kept pushing her, forcing the blonde to back step and, after several more powerful swings, their clash was brought to an end. "Damn you! DAMN YOU! DAMN YOOOUUUUUUUUUUUU!"

Their last swings saw their weapons crash across one another with a blinding flash of gold and green, throwing both fighters back under the force of the simultaneous hits. What resulted from that was the swords the two women were holding shattering in their hands, which sent the two stumbling away from one another.

Baffled and alarmed at seeing one of her strongest weapons fracture from the assault, Hasky quickly took action. To prevent her foe from getting the upper hand again, the blonde summoned another cluster of swords in the air directly above Zangya and sent all of the blades shooting down at her in a stream. The golden blades peppered the floor and forced the Hera backwards in a hasty
After evading the lightning fast rain of metalwork, the Hera pitched her hand forward and fired off a powerful red beam from her fingertip. While Hasky was able to produce a shield in time to deflect it, she only managed to divert the attack ever so slightly, as the majority of it pierced through the plating and struck her shoulder. The round hit her like a gunshot, sending the woman stumbling away and gripping the wound with an agonized yell. In response, the assassin held her hand out and formed a massive dome of swords and lances around Zangya's position, encircling the woman in a manner similar to Piccolo's Hellzone Grenade and preventing her from escaping.

The instant the wall of weapons materialized around the Hera, every single one of them converged on their target in a brilliant flash of light. Their impact with the ground caused a massive explosion, which rocked the estate, and sent rubble and dust hurtling into the sky.

At first attempting to spot her opponent through the thick of the smog, Hasky's gaze then shot upwards in alarm when her sensors located her target. It was there, hovering above the plume of smoke generated by her attack, the blonde spotted Zangya, with a green energy shield surrounding her and her menacing gaze locked squarely on her position. The second she spotted the wayward hero, the assassin wasted no time in producing a wall of swords and throwing every single one of them up at the red haired demon.

Powering up, Zangya dove straight down at her foe at full speed, breaking the sound barrier while simultaneously breaking through the barrage of swords. The field she generated around her deflected every single one of the spears and daggers her opponent lobbed up at her and, after performing a few aerial maneuvers to position herself accordingly, the red haired fighter brought her hand back and created a spinning red disk of energy above her palm, which gave off a loud, foreboding hum.

Hasky snarled in frustration when she saw her barrage of weapons wasn't working. So, opting to change tactics for one last hit, the woman once again threw her hand out and summoned her most powerful weapon. The cuneiform spire of Ai materialized next to her and, as soon as it gained form, the thief grabbed it, poured all her energy into it, and swung it forward in a stabbing motion to carve right through her opponent with a single swing.

"DISAPPEAR INTO OBLIVION! A-")

"LIKE HELL YOU WILL!" Zangya screamed before swinging straight down at her opponent.

In a flash of light and a sharp bang, the Hera dropped right down in front of her target and, with her red energy disk, sliced the woman's arm clean off. The hand that Hasky was using to swing the sword, remained firmly attached to the weapon's handle as it flew out of reach, leaving the blonde standing there, with blood flying out of the stump in her shoulder to splatter over her face and the ground.

Upon cutting the woman's link to her strongest weapon, Zangya quickly rose up, produced her race's signature sword for a third time, and turned her glare upon her foe, who was now stumbling away with anger burning in her gaze.

Teeth and fist clenched, the enraged Hasky hissed under her breath, "I'll give you this…" She then looked up and, seeing her opponent coming at her in slow motion, sent one final shout her way. "At this moment… you are the strongest!"

"YOU'RE FINISHED!" Bellowing out one last time, Zangya dove forward and drove her sword into her target.
It all happened in an instant. Stepping back, Hasky was hit square across the chest by the woman's rapier, which sent a spray of blood flying through the air and over the grass. Zangya, meanwhile, followed-through with her strike as far as she could go, sending her opponent flying backwards across the property to slide to a stop several yards away. When her momentum ceased, the Hera collapsed to her knee and remained locked in that position, breathing heavily and glaring at her enemy.

At first everyone thought it was over and that the assassin was beat. What with how clean the strike had landed, there was no way she could've survived. But then, when a few strangled coughs echoed across the property, all of the Z-fighters hanging in the background looked on in disbelief to see that Hasky was still on her feet, with her body slumped forward and a massive scar carved across her chest and suit.

Apparently she'd stepped back just far enough to avoid a fatal shot to her neck and vitals, allowing Zangya's sword to pass over her without killing her.

It was an amazing evasion and one that the Hera had to congratulate her enemy for pulling off. "Figures. You're a tough little bitch, aren't you?"

Blood dripping out of her various open wounds, the stricken Hasky growled, "This fight isn't done yet, scum. I've still got-"

"That's enough, Agent Hasky."

Everyone in the area froze when they heard the deep voice echo across the neighborhood, prompting the Z-fighters, Capsule Corp staff, and the assassin in question to look around in alarm. Expressions reflecting both surprise and alarm, Zangya and the rest of her group attempted to narrow down the source of the interruption. But as Videl, Bulma, Trunks, and everybody else quickly realized, it is that the sudden interference had in fact come from a series of loudspeakers…

However, this turned out to be the least of their concerns, because by the look on the blonde assailant's face, she knew who that altered voice belonged to, and she looked terrified. "B-Boss? Wh-What are you-?"

"I'm calling it in now, assassin. You've completed your mission and gave us a substantial amount of information to work with. But now I need you to return to base so that you can be properly debriefed," the voice continued, flooding the area with the deep echo of his commands.

At first shaken up to hear her employer speaking directly to her, the one-armed, battle damaged woman then turned to the sky and, with a desperate look on her face, spoke up in response. "B-But boss… just give me a few more minutes to finish the job! I know I can beat these guys if you just-"

The man on the other end of the line laughed, stopping the woman's pleading in its tracks. "Even if you had all your limbs intact, you are nowhere near strong enough to finish this fight. Even from the very beginning I knew you couldn't win. I sent you out there only as a test to see what the Z-fighters were capable of… and you performed that task beautifully. But now that you've lost an arm, depleted Ai's energy core and knocked out your armor's primary servos, it will take me a whole year to repair all of the damages you've taken." The man on the other end sounded as though he was losing patience and, after making this known, finished relaying his instructions to his nervous subordinate. "We will discuss your performance when you get back. Now return to base. That's an order.'"

Hesitant at first, the woman eventually managed to get her anger, frustration and pride under control. After biting her tongue and breathing out in annoyance, the exhausted and thoroughly beaten blonde then turned her glare back to the Z-fighters. When she saw all of them get to their feet and a couple of them begin approaching her position with caution, she then shot a look back at her opponent.

When she saw the transformed Hera glaring back at her with equal exhaustion and hatred burning in her eyes, the thief quickly popped the question. "Your name is Zangya, right?"

The red haired alien with the sclera nodded, "Yeah."

"Hasky," the blonde shot back. Upon which she then narrowed her eyes and pointed across at the Z-fighter with her one remaining arm. "Remember that name well, mongrel, because even though you won this battle, the war isn't over between us. When I come back and you've gotten stronger, we will have our rematch… and when we do… I will be sure to kill you."

Hearing her loud and clear, Zangya's frown deepened and she nodded, 'I'll be waiting, bitch.'

Smirking, the blonde assassin raised the hand she'd used to point and thrust it towards the ground. This caused a blast of dust to envelop her and shoot into the air. When the cloud eventually settled moments later, it revealed the woman had disappeared. Whether she'd vanished through a teleport or fled the scene in the conventional manner nobody knew, since her energy signature was constantly masked. However, what the Z-fighters did know was that their battle with the intruder had finally come to an end… for the time being.

Upon seeing Hasky was now gone, Zangya allowed her head to drop and, with a sigh of relief, she reverted back to her base form.

Despite what the blonde had said to her, the Hera knew without a shadow of a doubt that she'd fought the good fight… and won.

(TO BE CONTINUED)

Author's Note: Good God that was a long chapter. I'll make a note not to make another one like it again.

I was planning on splitting this up into two, but since I want it out of the way fast, I figured I'd get the entire battle in one hit.

That's basically the formula in this story. The longer the fight, the stronger the opponent, and Hasky was strong.

Those of you who are savvy with anime will definitely know a lot of the references in this fight. If you've done your homework then I'd like to see what you guys know.

I'll make sure the next fight won't be so long. This was just a chore and a half. Even writing it was exhausting, despite how much fun I had. Hope you can forgive me for that.

Anyway, Zangya achieved her Super Hera 2 form and Hasky got her teeth kicked in. Kaiser is also having his own fun and games in the background, and is toying with his food rather than eating it. Guess that shows exactly where he stands in terms of character. He's an arrogant prick.
Next chapter is the start of the Saiyan Invasion Arc, and we shall have a wind down from all the fighting with a little break for the characters. They definitely deserve it, and so do you.

Hope to hear from all of you soon.

---

Power Levels:

Z-Fighters

Erasa – 5 riki

Bulma – 5 riki

Lime – 100 riki

Chi-Chi – 150 riki

Videl – 18,500,000 riki

xxx

Android 16#C – 35,000,000 riki

Android 16#C (Battle Mode) – 40,000,000 riki

xxx

Paprika – 28,000,000 riki

Paprika (Super Makyan) – 280,000,000 riki

xxx

Piccolo – 290,000,000 riki

xxx

Kana (Suppressed) – 25,000,000 riki

Kana (Full Power) – 480,000,000 riki

xxx

Vegeta – 29,000,000 riki

Vegeta (Super Saiyan) – 290,000,000 riki

Vegeta (Super Saiyan 2) – 490,000,000 riki

xxx

Zangya – 29,000,000 riki

Zangya (Full Power) – 290,000,000 riki

Zangya (Super Hera) – 490,000,000 riki
Zangya (Super Hera 2) – 1,490,000,000 riki

xxx

Gohan – 31,000,000 riki
Gohan (Super Saiyan) – 310,000,000 riki
Gohan (Super Saiyan 2) – 510,000,000 riki
Gohan (Super Saiyan 3) – 1,510,000,000 riki

xxx

Kaiser's Organization

Kaiser – 120 riki
Violet – 120 riki

xxx

Vulcan – 15,000,000 riki
Vulcan (After Videl fight) – 20,000,000 riki
Vulcan (After Absorbing Reactor Energy) – 400,000,000 riki
Vulcan (After Gohan fight – Round 1) – 800,000,000 riki
Vulcan (After Gohan fight – Round 2) – 1,600,000,000 riki
Vulcan (Limit) – 2,000,000,000 riki
Vulcan (After overloading) – 10,000,000 riki

xxx

Hasky (Indoor fight) – 42,000,000 riki
Hasky (After absorbing solar energy – Round 1) – 500,000,000 riki
Hasky (After absorbing solar energy – Round 2) – 900,000,000 riki
Hasky (Limit) – 1,400,000,000 riki

---

Character Bios:

Name: Vulcan

Race: Human

Gender: Male

Occupation: Bodyguard
Hair Color: Brown

Type: Mech Pilot/Energy Absorption/Weapon Specialist

Age: 40

Home Planet: Earth

History: Kaiser's right hand man and adjutant, this human male is an ex-military soldier, who was regarded as one of the best in the service. When a training accident led to his expulsion from the service, he quickly found a career under the billionaire as a mercenary. He went on to perform many missions for him under discretion and became his most trusted bodyguard. Fiercely loyal and determined to prove his worth, he is obsessed with fighting, and will take any mission that requires his combat skills. He is soon sent on a mission to capture Videl's friend Erasa in order to lure out the Gold Fighter. When he encounters them on the street, he badly wounds the Champ's daughter and takes Erasa to the market square for a face off.

When Gohan arrives, he fights him and ends up badly wounding the boy. Even at Super Saiyan 3, the young warrior is unable to overcome the man's tech to be able to absorb energy, and ends up having to fight him using materials from the street and hand-to-hand. After a long and gruelling match, the demi-Saiyan is eventually beaten to the point of being unable to move and, when Vulcan is about to kill him, Videl stabs the man in the back with his sword, finishing the soldier off once and for all.

A vicious fighter as a normal human, when confined to the armour Vulcan is capable of performing superhuman feats and attacks capable of worldwide destruction. The technology provided to him by Kaiser allows him to turn invisible, fly, fire super-charged projectiles, and absorb enormous amounts of energy. He is also able to take in the kinetic energy of punches, meaning that the more damage he receives, the stronger he will become. This allows him to fight and overcome fighters as powerful as a Super Saiyan, making him a formidable and dangerous adversary.

However, despite his suit's seamless invulnerability, it does have several major drawbacks. Due to its heavy duty design and size, the armour has trouble fitting into tight spaces and is quite cumbersome. Since it focuses more on defence over offensive capabilities, it sacrifices speed for durability, and has difficulty fighting against more agile opponents. Furthermore, the suit's abilities are also limited by the user's skill at handling it, meaning that if the pilot is unfamiliar with the controls it cannot be used to its full potential.

There is also a limit to how much energy it can absorb. Because its core is fashioned around a neutron star, a step up from the energy absorption cells used in Androids 19 and 20, it can hold several times more power than the cyborg models designed by Doctor Gero. However, if the suit takes in too much energy, the neutron star will lose form and detonate, expelling any excess power in a catastrophic explosion that will permanently damage the suit's mechanisms.

Despite these weaknesses, Vulcan was still able to give the Z-fighters an incredibly tough time and even nearly ended up killing his opponents. Not only was he able to effectively beat down Piccolo and Videl, two of the earth's strongest fighters, but he was also able to defeat a fully-powered Super Saiyan 3 Gohan… twice. He would've no doubt killed the half-Saiyan, were it not for the last second interferences from Videl and her friends.

OOO

Name: Master Thief Hasky
Race: Human
Gender: Female
Occupation: Thief/Mercenary/Assassin
Hair Color: Blonde
Type: Long Range/Weapon Specialist
Age: 38
Home Planet: Earth

History: Referred to as the greatest thief in human history, Hasky made a reputation for herself by breaking into places with the highest levels of security money could buy and leaving the scenes without a trace of her presence ever being there. The crime scenes she does leave evidence on are the ones she considers her crowning achievements, and intentionally lets the authorities know that it was her who'd committed the crime. This not only makes her the best thief, but also the proudest and most arrogant in the profession.

Possessing a background in the Special Forces as well as military espionage, Hasky retired from the army to pursue a career in burglary and crime. She became a mercenary, a person who sold her services to the highest bidder and worked on her own terms. Her most frequent client back in the day had been the leader of the Red Ribbon Army, Commander Red, in which she took on missions involving the theft of top secret documents and items of value to the rogue military. For the longest time, she had a flawless record and enjoyed a long streak of crimes without any mishaps or blunders. It was only when she eventually encountered Goku and his group that she suffered her first defeat and, when she wound up getting caught, spent the next ten years in prison.

In that time, the woman developed a deep-seated grudge against Son Goku and occupied her free periods learning new fighting techniques and working out. The environment of the penitentiary hardened her even more to the world and tweaked her personality in a number of different ways, turning her from a respectable, crafty thief, into a more violent woman with a nasty streak and a taste for excitement. Years later, she was eventually bailed out of prison by Kaiser Talos, who employed her as one of his lieutenants and a bodyguard in his company. After years of working for the corporation president, she, Kaiser and Violet developed a strong working relationship with one another, and she became the boss's second most trusted right-hand woman.

She spent the next many years working for Kaiser's company, performing various jobs and missions in secrecy under him. Her name soon started reappearing in numerous law enforcement agencies across the world, but just when it seemed like the master thief had returned to wreck havoc upon the world, she once again disappeared into obscurity. Her location remained unknown, until she was once again called into service by her boss for an assignment to assassinate the son of the person she despised most: Son Gohan.

Over the years she worked as an assistant at Talos Industries, Hasky was trained to use one of the boss's most powerful prototype combat suits: the Babylon Mark V Armour. Powered by the energy of the sun, this spandex suit was designed with the ability to bend and manipulate matter in the form of light, with its primary function being able to conjure melee weapons out of thin air. This allows Hasky to form solid objects out of light and even create live clones of herself, the number of which is determined by the amount of energy she commits to the technique. The cuneiforms grafted into the suit, though decorative in nature, are in fact runes of an unknown language arranged into a complex algorithm that allows the thief to forge copies of every single legendary weapon throughout time and space. She does this by speaking incantations and the names of the weapons, which trigger the suit's programming.

Combining her light manipulating abilities with the cuneiform lettering, Hasky can conjure weapons almost instantaneously and at the most optimal positions. Using this ability to its fullest potential, she can produce weapons one at a time or multiple arms at once, and she can do so continuously depending on how much energy she has at her disposal. She can even hurl weapons at opponents in unbroken waves of attacks in such quantities and at such speeds that the sheer amount of blades can disintegrate her targets, leaving not a single shred of them left.

Among the legendary artifacts she can summon and have been programmed into her suit, many of them include:

Svalinn – A legendary shield in Norse mythology that stands before the sun

Gae Bolg – Also known as the Spear of Mortal Pain, it is the name of the spear belonging to the hero Cuchulainn in the Ulster Cycle of Irish Mythology. It was given to him by his martial arts teacher, the warrior woman Scathach, and its technique was taught only to him. It was made out of the bone of a sea monster.

Loeding – In Norse mythology, it was the name of the first chain that the Norse Gods used to try and bind the demon wolf Fenrir

Dorni – In the same context of Norse mythology, this was the name given to the second chain used to try and bind Fenrir and stop his rampage

Donar – The literal name for Thor, which translates to 'thunder', and allows the user to conjure up lightning as a weapon

Yata no Kagami – Translated as Eight Hand Mirror, it is one of the three legendary treasures from Japanese history

Yasakani no Magatama – Translated as Eight Shaku Curved Jewel, it is one of the three legendary treasures from Japanese history and is said to reside in one of three temples across the country

Caliburn – Named the Golden Sword of the Victorious, it is the title given to the holy sword from the old Welsh Legend that King Arthur of England pulled out of the stone and became the rightful ruler of his country

Durendal – Also named the Sword of the Paladin Roland, in history, is the sword belonging to Charlemagne's paladin Roland. The origin of the sword varies from different accounts. According to one legend, the sword was once owned by Hector of Troy and was given to Roland by Malagigi (although this is impossible since the blades used in Ancient Troy were made of bronze). According to one account, the original owner of the sword claimed that the blade was indestructible, as he'd tried and failed many times to destroy it in order to prevent it from falling into the hands of his enemies. When he failed, Roland hurled the sword into the side of a cliff in Rocamadour, France, where it would remain for hundreds of years, and serve as a point for many pilgrims searching for truth and enlightenment.

Ai – The sword owned by the legendary King and demi-God Gilgamesh, this sword represents the genesis of every single blade throughout history. Being the very first of its kind and coming into existence before the concept of the 'sword' was ever conceived in the universe; it is a singular existence that allows the user to summon an untold amount of energy. It can cut through dimensions with but a thought, create black holes, and destroy galaxies. Though it was used by Gilgamesh as a last resort, Hasky uses it to show off her newfound powers and as a means of intimidating the Z-fighters. The sword itself is nameless, and was once described by Whis as the "only sword that does not exist in this world." It is something that does not appear in any modern legends, crystallized during the Age of Gods at the beginning of the universe. It is the primordial sword that is the actualization of the works of a titan recorded before life came into being, and it is that which divided the formless into a distinct heaven and earth in ancient times. It is a divine construct created by a titan unable to be replicated by any means, and its status as a unique existence means it cannot be reproduced in any way. Because the weapon Hasky wields was built around an original fragment that Kaiser owned, which broke off of its host thousands of years ago, it only possesses a fraction of the original weapon's power.

As invincible as her powers appear on the surface, Hasky's suit does have several major drawbacks and weaknesses. Chief among which is the amount of power it can store.

Due to the fact that she is using solar energy instead of her own energy to execute attacks, Hasky is extremely limited to the maximum amount of power the cells in the suit are able to maintain. A limiter has been built into the suit to stop the armour from overloading. There is a very real chance that if this limiter was removed and Hasky was allowed to receive more power from the sun than necessary, the amount of solar energy that can go into the suit could potentially eradicate and kill her.

Because she is only limited to a certain amount of energy at any given time, this means that Hasky can't increase her power beyond a given point. That means that whatever legendary weapon she summons using her light bending abilities only possesses a fraction of its original strength and power. This gives credence to the fact that the weapons she does conjure into form are only fakes and prototypes, and not the genuine articles.

Secondly, because the weapons she does conjure up and launch at opponents travel mostly in straight lines, this makes her attack patterns incredibly predictable. That means an energy user of equal skill and prowess can counter her attacks before she has a chance to fire them.

Since the suit is also the primary source of her abilities, Hasky's durability is determined mostly by the suit itself. If the suit receives the force of an attack it can't fully absorb through its shields, the damage reflects back onto the suit's user, meaning Hasky would receive a fraction of the damage.

Despite these weaknesses, Hasky is still a formidable opponent and, with her survival instincts and combat experiences, it makes her one of the Z-fighters' most powerful enemies. When she meets her first defeat at the hands of Zangya and is forced to retreat, the two of them instantly become rivals and arch enemies.
Sitting in the ruined center of the industrial district of West City, surrounded by news and engineer crews from all corners of the metropolis, the world's largest manufacturer of computers and technology was currently undergoing post-disaster control. The recent scuffle between the Z-fighters and their uninvited guest had rung the bell for all emergency services and departments across the capital, calling them into immediate action to fix all the damages that'd been caused. Though Capsule Corp had dispatched its numerous divisions to assist at the affected sites, its second biggest priority was fixing up their base of operations, which was where most of the problems had occurred.

Thanks to the newly formed protocols and provisions taken by the Briefs family in regards to world and city-wide destruction, it was reasonable to see why they were so well prepared for situations like this.

For the most extreme and outrageous individuals, they were probably used to having explosions and earthquakes shaking up the countryside around them. However, for most of the members of the Z-fighters, even after their many years of fighting planet destroying monsters, aliens and demons alike, there was no way they could get used to taking attacks that practically had their bones ringing from head to toe following every single bout. Hell, they may have been the toughest people in the quadrant, but it wasn't like they enjoyed getting their asses kicked. No one did.

This was made painfully obvious by the poor states the group's main fighters lying scattered throughout the hospital room where Gohan was still lying incapacitated.

On the one hand, Chi-Chi, Bulma, Lime and Erasa, all of whom had watched the entire fight from the sidelines, were in perfectly good condition. Because of this, they were actually able to help out with the heavy lifting once the actual battle was done and dusted, and their lives were no longer in mortal peril. Since there had been so many swords and blasts being thrown around, there was no way that four normal humans, whose fighting skills were way below the bar, were going to get involved in that kind of crossfire.

Sitting on the other side of the spectrum though, was every other person who was able to take the full force of a blow that could crack a planet in two, only they were in less pristine condition. Sure, Piccolo, Zangya, Paprika and Videl were up and about, but all of them were still sporting bruises, scratches and scuffs that could make a boxer jealous. The Namekian, adorned in a newly constructed uniform, still had burns and bruises riddling his body, with several, newly healed cuts crisscrossing his complexion. Positioned alongside him, Paprika was also on route to a fast recovery and, as a courtesy to the nurses at the facility, had only accepted bandages around her chest, neck and torso to cover her horrendous spear wounds. Though this did little in dulling the excruciating pain that she was in, she was surprisingly still able to hold it together.

Furthermore, while Zangya had both her hands bound from the burns and blisters inflicted upon her during the fight, along with a generous amount of first aid patches slapped across her cheeks, shoulders and chest, the raven haired teen standing next to her directly beside Gohan's bed had her arm in a cast and bandages wrapped around both her legs. At least the poster girl of Satan City could count her lucky stars that she was still able to walk and had only taken a handful of flesh wounds.

Those who couldn't were bedridden. Trunks for example had collapsed from fatigue with his best friend Goten, and both of them were snoring away on one of the free beds with band aids and bandages covering their bodies. Kana was also lying under a set of covers nearby and was looking just as miserable as the others from all the injuries they'd sustained.

However, unlike a select few of them, she didn't have advanced healing and could only stare enviously at her two, fellow aliens, her shoulders wrapped tightly in bandages. Since she took two lances to the upper body, she couldn't move her arms any higher than her waist, which really hampered her abilities to move.

"I have to say… out of all the hits I've taken over the last hundred years… that one had to be the most painful…" the Seirei mumbled, drumming her fingers on the air as she looked down at her right shoulder to see how it was doing. "Man… this sucks… and I was hoping to go exploring as soon as I was conscious." It didn't escape anyone's notice that she was wearing a white hospital gown, with her damaged, interstellar plug-suit hanging from a hook on the nearby wall.

Hearing the girl loud and clear, the Namekian standing in the background grunted and glanced in her general direction, "It's the attacks that you don't see coming that hurt you the most. You were so focused on trying to take out the bad guy that you weren't able to sense her weapons coming in from above."

"Yeah. And I ended up getting skewered like Maho meat between two pikes, before being placed over a nice, hot plate of batter," Kana remarked, groaning as she let her head and glowing hair rest on the pillow behind her. "The only difference is that I haven't been barbequed."

"Give or take a couple of minutes and you probably would've been," Zangya spoke, keeping her eyes firmly pasted on Gohan's bed while the poor demi-Saiyan slept. With all the people currently stationed in the room, there was no need to question whether or not the boy was well-defended.

Because as soon as the fight outside between the Z-fighters and the blonde haired assassin had come to an end, once they were patched up, not a single one of them wasted any time in returning to the boy's room. It was their instincts as friends and fighters that pushed them into action, and compelled them to move over to their friend's side.

Paprika, hearing the whining of the glowing Seirei nearby, looked up from her post against the wall to glare at the stricken traveler, "Consider yourself lucky that you were only stabbed. At least you haven't had the pleasure of having most of your flesh burned off of your body, and some massive alien's arm the exact same weight and girth as a tree run through your spine and liver."

Her rather graphic description of her previous battle with the monster Zeru had Bulma, Chi-Chi, Erasa and Lime turn a sickly shade of white and look across at the demon girl in shock. "Let's see you try and bounce back from a beating like that, especially after most of your internal organs had been punctured."

"Oka~y. Too much information~" Erasa commented in a sing-song voice, while at the same time trying not to collapse from shock.

Sensing the teen's concern, the demon rolled her eyes, "I'm just trying to make a point."

"Which is what exactly?" Lime asked, glancing across at the white haired fighter with an odd look in her eyes.

"That there are more painful things that can happen to you in a fight then just getting impaled?"

Videl, picking up on the line of conversation, looked over at the Makyan with a sympathetic smile, before then turning it towards Kana. When she saw the bandaged Seirei gazing back at her, the crime fighter shrugged, "Don't mind her. She's just a little bit sore because she got taken out of the fight so quickly." Her little teasing comment had the white haired girl grit her teeth and look away with a huff. Following it up with a sheepish laugh and a scratch of her head, the raven haired crime fighter continued to speak, "Of course, I got taken out at the very end of the first round, so I'm not exactly one to talk."

Waving her hand at the battered girl, Chi-Chi then beamed at her warmly, "You did your best, sweetie. No one should be expected to ask any more from you."

While everyone, sans Paprika and Piccolo, shared a round of joyous smiles and murmurs, Bulma quickly looked across the room from her post beside the bed. After taking stock of everyone's individual conditions, her eyes quickly fixated upon one particular individual, who she could see was standing defensively behind Videl, right by the demi-Saiyan's bedside. "The real hero for today though definitely has to be our resident golden girl Zangya." The blue haired woman nodded to the Hera when her gaze darted in her direction. "She really stepped up in that fight and showed to the world that a woman's fist can hurt just as much as any man's."

"Yeah... not to mention that when she gets pissed off, she gets really pissed off," Lime added with a mischievous grin.

When all the other people in the room nodded at that assessment, Erasa's head perked up from where she was standing and beamed at the former space pirate. "If it wasn't for her... everyone in this room would've been beaten or worse... and Gohan-kun would be dead right now." Rising up from where she was kneeling by the demi-Saiyan's bed, the chirpy girl quickly skipped around to where Zangya was and stood in front of her. Taking the woman's hands in hers with a happy giggle, the blonde squeezed them gratefully while her eyes shimmered with delight. "You were fantastic out there. Way to go, girl."

In a heartbeat, Erasa then hugged the startled Zangya, almost picking her up off of the floor with the strength she exerted. Thanks to this, and the combination of compliments and remarks flying around the room, the Hera's steel-like shell finally cracked and a deep shade of scarlet spread over her cheeks. Clearing her throat when the high school student finally set her back to the ground, the orange haired fighter looked back at her crew nervously.

"Th-Thank you." Grinning back at the bubbly blonde, whose face was getting a little too close for comfort, the Z-fighter then took a moment to catch her breath and calm her nerves. "That means a lot." When Erasa stepped away, Zangya then glanced around at the rest of her friends, whom she could see were viewing her with respect and admiration. It was then, after taking a moment to soak it in, the Hera decided to add her own opinion to the pool for the sake of transparency. "But I'm not the one you guys should be thanking. If Android 16 hadn't been in the room at the time that woman broke in, I don't think Gohan would be with us right now."

Hearing this, Videl's smile widened even further and, turning towards their hostess, directed her next question towards her. "How is the big, metal lug? Is he doing alright?"

Bulma quickly answered the teen's question with a smile, "He's fine. Right now dad's working on repairing the damages done to his CPU over in the computer lab. He should be up and running again in the next twenty four hours." She then chuckled and raised a finger to add a second piece to that report. "He'll also be installing some new software and personality patches, so he'll be able to converse with you guys more articulately next time."

"Ah. That's good," Videl sighed, at the same time sharing a look with Piccolo and Zangya standing nearby. "It was getting hard talking to a toaster that could only speak in lines of computer dialogue."

The Hera nodded in agreement, "I'll say."

Piccolo, not really caring one way or another about the composites of human speech patterns in a robot, slowly turned his attention to the other beds. Passing by Kana, who was doing everything she could to pass the time, his gaze then landed on Goten and Trunks. Seeing the duo curled up on the single spread with the covers scrunched up in their hands as they snored away, the Namekian breathed a heavy sigh and closed his eyes. "It was a close one, but we managed to chase off that assassin and stop her from causing anymore damage." He then cracked an eye and peered at the others. "However, I doubt this will be the last time we see her. She'll be back."

His words in regards to their opponent put game expressions back onto the fighters' faces. While Paprika had remained relatively unchanged throughout the entire conversation so far, the sudden shift in mood was sensed by all and acknowledged by those who were the most willing to speak on the matter.

Sitting in the chair directly beside her oldest son's bed, Chi-Chi glanced over at Bulma with uncertainty reflected in her eyes. "Is there anything we can do? I mean… is there a chance that we can find out where that woman came from so that we can chase her down and stop this from going any further?"

Obviously she was concerned about the safety of her family. The proof was all in the tone of her voice and the fearful look in her eyes. She was scared and, at this point, she would take even the slightest of chances of putting an end to this chaos as quickly as possible.

Sadly though, Bulma could only shake her head at the woman. "I'm not sure, Chi-Chi." She then turned to the rest of their troop. "There really isn't much evidence for us to go on. All of the weapons and clones Hasky threw into battle against you guys dispelled after every time they were used or damaged. The only thing we did find on the property was her arm, which Zangya managed to slice off in the final moments of their fight." A shrug shortly followed her remark. "The computers down in the lab should be able to analyze the material and work out where it came from. But if it's anything like the guy Gohan fought before, I doubt we'll be able to get much. We already know who the woman is. We just don't know who she's working for."

A momentary silence then fell over the group, prompting a couple of them to shuffle about uncomfortably. The entire ordeal made all those who'd come across this roadblock before feel the same weight and emotions that they felt several weeks prior. The uncertainty of the situation had chests tighten and fists clench, as restlessness and fear spread between all of them.

However, there was something to be said from all this. From the doom and gloom of the news shared to them by the Capsule Corp president, Zangya had only one thing left to say.

"At least we accomplished one thing," the Hera whispered, drawing everyone's gazes towards the warrior as she glared right back at them. "We now know that Gohan getting the heart virus and being attacked by these assassins aren't just random occurrences. Someone is trying to kill him."

Piccolo nodded, along with many of the other fighters in the room, "The question now though… is who?"
It was a riddle that had the entire atmosphere inside the room go completely stagnant and all the Z-fighters scratching their heads. Out of the five billion plus people on the planet, who could possibly want one of their own dead?

OOO

(Meanwhile)

With the sun starting to set over the horizon, signaling the end of yet another long and tiring day, the population living on this side of the planet began the long and weary track home. Men and women alike signed off from work and left their respective places of business, looking forward to a relaxing afternoon. They'd earned their keep for the day and many of them had big plans for this last quarter of the day. The same could be said for the chief of Talos Industries who, as he stood in front of his office window looking out across the downtown metropolis of Satan City, was currently wrapping things up with one of his most trusted employees.

Inside the organized and high-tech office of the billionaire entrepreneur, Kaiser was rhythmically tapping his fingers against his knuckles, as he had both his hands placed behind his back. After giving the city in front of him his usual thousand-yard stare, he then breathed out a long, tired sigh and glanced behind him. Looking past his secretary Violet, who he spotted standing beside his desk, he set his sights squarely on the fresh out of battle Hasky positioned in the middle of the room.

From his place by the window, he proceeded to inspect the assassin's condition.

Needless to say, the woman had seen better days. Not only was her spandex armor a complete wreck, riddled with burn marks, fried circuits and tears all over, she was also missing her right arm, had dried-up blood running down her forehead, and a massive gash carved across her chest, which she had her arm tightly pressed over. All of these markings told the story of a battle that started off great, but then ended badly for the golden haired thief. The evidence was all on the expression she was currently wearing, which reflected nothing but disappointment and anxiousness. The former was from her failure in the mission and the latter was in regards to the person standing in front of her.

Even Violet sensed the blonde's distress and unease, but she hid her concerns beneath a veil of calm and seriousness.

After several seconds of tense silence, the air was broken by the stern, level voice of Kaiser. "Did you have fun out there… Hasky?" the man asked, in a tone that was almost akin to that of a father scolding his daughter for coming home after ten. "Remodeling Capsule Corp's front yard? Creating new skylines and office spaces across the entire industrial side of West City? Showing off the fantastic super powers of the suit I designed for you out of the goodness of my heart?"

Swallowing nervously, the blonde meekly lowered her head, "Sir… I… I can expl-

"Because after seeing your little spat against the Z-fighters, I believe I'm right in saying that you may have gotten a little bit carried away out there," the man interrupted, turning to face the woman fully. He then started a slow approach of post, bringing his hands around to hold out at either side. "Look at you. You're a mess… and you're missing an arm. By the Kais… if I hadn't intervened when I did, I doubt you would've been able to get out of that city as quickly as you did without those pesky Z-fighters running you down and finishing you off." Kaiser then stopped directly in front of her and, with the same pace he'd set, wrapped his arms around the woman in a warm hug. Closing his eyes, the man took a deep breath and rubbed her back comfortably. "I hope they didn't hurt you too badly."
Finding the hug incredibly discomforting due to the abnormal manner her boss had approached her, Hasky looked at the back of the mogul's head from her position against his shoulder for a few, tense moments. Then, with a great deal of hesitation, she replied. "N-No. They didn't… sir."

"Are you sure?" Kaiser whispered, inadvertently or advertently breathing on her ear, causing the blonde to shiver with uneasiness. "Are you absolutely sure?"

"Yes. I'm positive."

"Good. Good," the man sighed, finally releasing Hasky from his hold to take a step back. Smiling down at her in a very sagely way, the raven haired man with the goatee took a few seconds to place both hands on the thief's shoulders, dust her down, and inspect her state up close and personal. Really personal. "You are a head strong and intelligent woman Hasky… one who possesses a grace and spirit very few others can match. Losing you in such an insignificant scuffle would be equivalent to losing one of the world's most priceless treasures to a gang of delinquent children. Not even I could stomach the thought of such an event taking place." He then removed his hands and stepped away, beaming all the while as he and Hasky remained in the center of the carpet. "But here you are… safe and sound."

Hearing her boss's words loud and clear, the blonde haired thief rubbed her side anxiously and nodded, "Th-Thank you, sir."

"Your performance against the Z-fighters was, shall I say… exemplary. It's all thanks to your spectacular efforts and unshakeable loyalty to our cause that we were able to retrieve an enormous amount of useful data on the group's strongest fighters," Kaiser informed, placing his hands behind him again as he turned and strolled back over to his desk, only to stop short of it. "My theory on their increasing power was correct. Now it's time to move on to the next phase of our plan."

Raising an eyebrow at her boss's back, the incredibly wounded and exhausted thief looked down for a few moments. After stewing over her collection of jumbled thoughts, the infamous Hasky then took a cautionary step forward. "Forgive me, sir, but… what… exactly is our plan?" the blonde asked, incredibly terrified at how her employer would respond. Her fear only increased when she saw the man's finger stop tapping and heard an uncomfortable silence fall over the room. "You've… spent all this time having your best agents scouring the globe, gathering up information, breaking into factories… and stealing weapons and artifacts of all shapes and sizes." She then spared a furtive glance to Violet, who remained completely still and unshaken. Upon which she then looked back at her leader. "While all that is fun and all, you never really explained to me what that stuff is for."

It was the one question that'd been hanging over her head for a while now. What were her boss's plans? What were his intentions? What could he possibly want that would involve butting heads with the strongest warriors on the planet?

What was his ultimate goal?

Her curiosity drew the man's gaze back around to her. Peering over his shoulder, Kaiser narrowed his hard, unfeeling gaze carefully on the blonde's battered form.

Upon strongly considering her words and drinking in her apprehensive state, the bearded man smirked and exhaled sharply. "Why not? I don't see any harm in divulging a little bit of top secret information to one of my most trusted lieutenants. After all, you've done so much for the company over the last several years. I'd hate to keep you out of the loop now that we're closing in on the most important stages of our operations." Immediately after saying this, Kaiser turned to face his agent, pulled a remote out of his pocket, and jabbed it towards the wall to his left. The second he pressed the button, a hologram of a large map suddenly jumped up a few feet away from him and projected a clear picture of a very familiar location. He then placed his hands behind him once again. "What do you see there, Hasky?"

Attention drawn towards the energy screen, the blonde analyzed it carefully before speaking in a slow voice. "I see… a map of the world… with all the countries and capital cities written on it." That's exactly what she noticed first. The hologram was projecting a fully unwrapped image of the planet earth.

The purpose of it being pulled up in the middle of the room soon revealed itself when Kaiser responded to her answer. He nodded towards the image astutely, "I see… enormous collections of rich, fertile land being blocked off from one another by borders and fences. I see dozens of countries and nations glaring each other down… distanced from one another by governments, religions and extremists of various opposing factions." His smile broadened when his eyes landed on his intently listening audience. "What the map is showing us, is a picture of a broken world locked in perpetual conflict with itself… fractured… separated… divided." When he saw confusion spread over the woman's face, Kaiser then held his arms out in excitement. "It's depressing, isn't it? How life has become so ugly and inconvenient. Here… let me "enhance it" for you." He then clicked the remote at the screen a second time.

All of a sudden, every single country and city on the map was erased and, in a shimmer of code and light, Hasky saw all the lands of the earth change to the same color, with a single capital city in the heart of the largest continent. Unlike a war map, which showed how many nations the axis powers had under their control by a shade of red, every single continent and nation on this one was entirely red.

The banner and flag that all the former countries were now flying belonged to that of Kaiser Talos's company.

A comfortable grin settled across the boss's lips. "For thousands of years, I've watched empires and kingdoms crumble all around me like sandcastles on a beach. I've seen nations and countries across seven different continents ravaged by sickness and despair, as men and women left and right dropped to the ground like flies. And I stood on the sidelines and looked on as the planet was ripped apart by hatred and grief, spearheaded by ideals forged in the minds of mad men and monsters. Sometimes they were one in the same." Raising his head ever so slightly, Kaiser instilled a sense of awe in his agent. "I've lived hundreds of lifetimes and sat in the shadows of countless figures. I was a priest to Ramesses the Second, a personal scribe to Hammurabi of Babylon, a general in Julius Caesar's army, caretaker to Peter the First of Russia, a counselor to warlord Genghis Khan, adjutant to Napoleon Bonaparte, advisor to Adolf Hitler, and a friend and ally to Alexander the Great." Kaiser then smiled and looked over his shoulder towards his battered audience of one. "I helped many of these great leaders in their quests to conquer the world… and only a handful of them ever succeeded. But now… I intend to take their dreams a step further."

Hasky, regarding the man's map a second time, then looked back at her boss nervously. "How exactly do you plan to do that, sir?"

Confidence brimming, the company owner turned to face the woman fully. "I'm glad you asked that, Hasky. You see, when Alexander the Great conquered the world during the Argead Dynasty, he was unable to lead his campaign any further than Ancient India due to a significant lack of resources, manpower and technology. Swords, shields, horses, and alchemy could only take him so far across the globe, and there were severe limitations to what we could actually accomplish with the army at his disposal. Even I was only able to govern the world for a limited amount of time during the prehistoric era, before greed and duplicity amongst my ranks caused a massive breakdown in my kingdom's structure. However, now that we've reached an age where space travel and matter manipulation is now possible, I'll be able to carry out my plan to establish a new, one-thousand year world order; the greatest civilization to ever be conceived in human history." The man once again pointed at the hologram next to them. "That dream, which was once an impossibility, can now become a reality. It's all political physics, after all. Two super powers cannot possibly occupy the same space at the same time. One of them is bound to roll over for the other… or face inevitable destruction at the hands of the superior force."

"But… won't the rest of the world try to fight back?" Hasky asked, a little bit confused by her employer's explanations. "It's not like the people are just going to sit idly by and let you take over everything. They'll..."

"They'll..." Kaiser shrugged, "What?" When the blonde didn't say anything and simply looked back at her boss nervously, the company owner smiled and began counting on his fingers all of his recent accomplishments. "I have… advanced alien technology, thousands of years beyond what any person… what any nation, can throw at me, and all the science Doctor Gero used to create biomechanical abominations capable of conquering entire planets." The man then grinned and clenched his fists in a gung-ho pose. "BRING IT ON!" After seeing Hasky jump at his sudden shout, the boss beamed, relaxed, and nodded towards his friend. "The world can try and fight me. But one way or another, the people will fold… and the day that they do..." He then pointed his remote at the hologram, "the world will change for the better."

He then flicked the program to its next slide. Hasky then proceeded to watch from her place in the center of the room as the projection of the map zoomed in on the capital city of Kaiser's future empire. When she saw the massive parliament building that was to become his primary base of operations zoom into view, one that was easily reminiscent of Hitler's architectural vision for Nazi Berlin, she then saw it zoom in on the people scattered across the rally grounds. There, she saw all the men and women there were dressed in high-tech body armor, all of which were hybrid designs of both hers and Vulcan's suits. They were sleek, crammed with cutting edge weaponry and computer systems, and made the wearers appear more threatening than they normally would when wearing conventional tactical gear.

Not only did they all appear ready for battle, but they all bore the markings of Talos Industries' logos. It was a sight that not only prompted the blonde assassin to stare in awe, but also put smiles of excitement on both Kaiser's and Violet's faces.

While the wounded woman attempted to process all the information being thrown her way, Kaiser casually wandered over to his desk and, after typing a few keys into the touch screen on the corner, caused a special compartment built into the workspace to rise up next to him. When the steam settled after the hatch opened, he then reached into the box and pulled out a black, shiny brick of an unknown substance, which he then turned and showed to his servant.

Noticing the object in Kaiser's hand, the thief frowned. "What is that?"

The businessman chuckled. "Mind over muscle, Agent Hasky. Mind over muscle." He then raised the brick even higher and brandished it against the light. "This remarkable block of matter is a substance identified in the data banks of Cooler's Spaceship as katchin... a rare element that, if the bonds holding this brick together are anything to go by, makes this the strongest material in the known universe." He then lowered it and set it on the desk beside him with a light 'clink'. "In its raw, untainted form, it is brittle and easy to mold. But once it's been melted down and cooled, it becomes unbreakable. This extraordinary mineral will serve as the primary ingredient to helping me construct the ultimate weapon, which will allow me to seize power and control in a single night."
And he wasn't going to stop there. He was going to construct his entire elite force out of katchin. With a garrison of his most trusted men and women adorned in unbreakable, super-powered armor made out of the strongest metal, his military would become unstoppable.

Though this information had Hasky's spirit lift somewhat, the blonde then became aware of an important fact that'd been overlooked. When her mind eventually worked it out, she addressed her concerns with her boss promptly and clearly. "What about the Z-fighters? Obviously they're not just going to stand around and let you do whatever you want. Shouldn't you be trying to… kill them?"

Chuckling at the woman's inquiry, the corporation owner gazed across at the woman with a mischievous glint in his eye. "Trust me, Agent Hasky. The Z-fighters will eventually die… but only when I say so." He then slipped his hands behind his back and approached the woman slowly. "Keeping tabs on their progress from a distance will allow me to upgrade the combat algorithms of my armors to match their strengths accordingly. They'll also be able to mop up any more unseen problems that happen to drop by the earth unexpectedly… most notably world shattering disasters and monsters." Stopping just a few feet in front of the woman, Kaiser shrugged coyly. "Why should I waste valuable time and resources fighting alien invaders, petty criminals and demons when I can simply let their group do it for me?"

Hasky, cracking a weak smile, nodded in agreement. "That's… a really good strategy, sir."

"You think so?" the man asked while giving her a genuine smile.

"Yes. Letting them do all the heavy lifting while you potter around under their noses. That's… brilliant."

Kaiser then raised his arms and held them out in a conceited manner. "It's what I do. After all… I'm a high-functioning sociopath." He then turned side-on to the woman and, slipping his hands behind him once again, gazed upwards with intent burning in his eyes. "Once I finally establish my company as the greatest super power on earth and have the entire population in the palm of my hand, I will use the technology I managed to replicate from the remains of Lord Slug's spaceship to transform this planet into a mobile fortress. With it and the entire population clothed in my super-powered battle armors, I will begin a ten year campaign to take over, not just this galaxy, but the entire quadrant, establishing the first Intergalactic Human Empire." The leader then glanced across at the blonde and leered. "And with you, Violet, and the others standing by my side, nothing… not even the Gods, will be able to stop me."

Invigorated by his speech, the completely taken Hasky took a step forward and, still clutching the place where her arm used to be, spoke up in support of her boss. "If that is your dream, sir, then… I will do everything in my power to help you realize it."

Ears perking at the woman's declaration, the mogul turned to face the woman more completely and raised an eyebrow. "Really?"

The thief nodded her head vigorously, "Whatever you want, sir. I'll do anything."

Staring back at the injured woman seriously for a moment, Kaiser used that time to consider her words and analyze her condition. After several seconds of careful thinking, the man with the beard smiled and, giving his subordinate an affirmative nod, stared back at her with warmth and esteem flickering in his eyes. It was a sight that had Hasky blink in surprise, as she'd never seen such an emotion permeate from her employer before.

"I'm so glad to hear you say that. Thank you, Hasky."
Before the blonde could say anything more, a loud 'squelch' sound rang loudly throughout the office and a numbing pain shot through her body. Her muscles freezing in shock, Hasky's eyes widened in horror before her mouth choked up blood, which poured from her lips and dribbled down onto the carpet. The reason for this sudden occurrence quickly revealed itself to be a long blade sticking out of the part of her chest where her heart was. After remaining in place for several moments, the weapon was suddenly yanked out and the thief's body crumpled to the floor with a thud.

Hasky was dead.

The source of the weapon soon revealed itself from behind the woman. Appearing from the shadows, dressed in a Chinese martial arts outfit, was a young, teenage girl around eighteen years old, with an ox horns hairstyle and sharp blue eyes. Possessing a fair complexion and smooth skin, the girl had a very curvaceous figure that was notably muscular, giving her a very tomboyish appearance. Her overall appearance was strikingly similar to Chun Li’s, except the qipao she was wearing was red instead of blue, and she had brown boots instead of white. However, unlike a traditional martial artist, on top of her outfit she also had on metal platings protecting her upper arms, shoulders, neck and back, which provided her a form of defensive armor, yet allowed for optimal movement of the limbs and joints.

The blade she was holding was attached to her gauntlet, but was quickly retracted into the arm with a snap. She then lowered her limb and glared down at the blonde assassin.

Despite her sudden appearance in the office, neither Kaiser nor Violet was surprised. Hell, they didn't even flinch when they saw Hasky crash to the ground face first and begin forming a bloody red pool around her corpse. The woman's lifeless eyes and stunned face were more than enough to show that death had occurred almost instantaneously.

Funny how fragile the human body actually was when all its defenses were bypassed.

Viewing the newcomer curiously, the purple haired secretary looked between her boss and the assailant, before then nodding towards the stranger. "One of your other assets, I presume? Which one is this?"

"Oh. Sorry. Where are my manners?" Glancing back at his assistant, the billionaire mogul smirked and gestured towards their visitor courteously. "This fetching young lady you see standing before you is Chico. She's one of six young orphans that were brought in by the authorities several months before the arrival of the Saiyans Vegeta and Nappa over a decade ago. Based on the information I was able to obtain from the officers who rounded up her little group, I found out that Son Gohan had ended up in their company for a brief period of time after washing up on a nearby beach." He lowered his hand and continued his story. "I... 'adopted' the children and took all of them to my branch in South City to partake in one of my earlier training programs to create the perfect super soldier." He then looked up at the brown haired girl proudly to see the fighter in question glare at him. "I had my best men spend the next twelve years working on their gang, breaking them down mentally and rebuilding them from the ground up, until they were strong enough to be put through the conversion process." He then shrugged at the girl and smirked darkly. "Once they were old enough, I injected them with an experimental, self-replicating, nano-machine serum that was designed to convert the human skeletal system and internal organs into metal. Five of the six test subjects failed, as the nano mites ripped their bodies apart and destroyed their brains." A gesture towards the girl in front of him shortly followed. "The sixth one however... was a huge success."

"Ah," Violet replied while nodding in understanding. Inspecting the teen in the martial arts dress and armor plating, she then looked towards her boss curiously. "I knew you had some interesting assets hiding out there. But you never really briefed me on this one."

"Well, I guess now you can consider yourself informed," the boss exclaimed, before then looking at the newcomer with a proud smile. When he saw the teen brush her fringe with the back of her hand, he continued to speak. "Chico here represents the culmination of a lifetime of hard work, self-sacrifice and scientific discovery. She is the embodiment of all of mankind's hopes and dreams for the future; a successful fusion between human and machine. It's a winning combination."

The brown haired teen in front of the duo smiled and bowed respectfully to the company founder. "In this world, only the strong and powerful are destined to survive, as it is the natural order of things. If you're unable to fight or fend for yourself, then you're as good as dead." Her eyes sparkled as she gazed admirably at her maker, whom she could see was gazing right back at her. Despite his recounting of her struggle, her expression continued to reflect nothing but blind devotion, loyalty, and fondness towards the maniacal genius. "You're the one who taught me that, master."

While the secretary raised an eyebrow at the way the teen said those words, Kaiser simply looked at his assistant and explained. "I called her in as part of my support crew to replace the members who've recently been lost. I'm going to need her to run a few errands for me while Hasky is being put through the cybernetic enhancement cycle." Glancing down at the blonde lying across the floor, the man then frowned at both her battered state and the blood pooling on the carpet. "Her Babylon armor, though cutting edge and robust, has too many faults and glitches in its design to be of any further use to me. The amount of energy she took in during her battle, even with the buffers in place, still managed to irradiate her cells and pollute the atmosphere. I'm going to have to can the old motor, remodel the photon pores, upgrade the processing units, and start the whole thing from scratch."

The inventor and billionaire planned on making her better than ever. Too bad Hasky was out of it to hear any of this.

After watching Chico back away to give her boss some room, as well as to stay out of reach of the pool of blood, Violet glanced across at Kaiser with an inquisitive look on her face. "What are you going to do about Son Gohan and his friends?"

The head of the company had his response ready and waiting for her, and answered with a smug grin. "Let the Z-fighters continue running around, playing heroes. With some luck, the next worldwide calamity that happens upon us might knock one or two of them down a peg… or maybe even take them out of the game for good. Given their current track record though, I seriously doubt that will happen." He then raised his hand and clenched it into a tight fist. Upon which, he began lifting one finger at a time in turn, "Constructing the ultimate weapon, destroying the Z-fighters, and assuming total dominion over the nations of the world. Instead of going through the long, costly process of attempting to achieve each of these goals one at a time over a spread of a few months, I intend to accomplish all of them in a single stroke."

Violet nodded to the man in approval. "Understood."

With one last glance at Hasky's body, the boss reached into his pocket, pulled out a cell phone, dialed into it, and held it up to his ear. Listening to it buzz for a moment, his head perked up when the receiver on the other end picked up. "Hello, security? Yes… could you send Doctor Kimura and a couple of his boys up to my office with a cryo freezer? I've got another volunteer for the android program to pick up. Uh-huh." After hearing the officer on the end respond, Kaiser then looked over the floor around the blonde and spoke again. "Oh yes. And send some boys up here to mop up the blood and change the carpets. I feel like… maroon today. Thanks." Closing up his phone, Kaiser pocketed it and nodded towards his deceased agent. "I'll perform the operation on Hasky myself… make sure she gets the best hardware and software possible."

"Very good," the purple haired woman exclaimed, holding up her note pad and quickly typing into the screen, "I'll cancel your meetings for this evening and tomorrow."

Turning his back on the body, Kaiser then wandered back over to his window and, with his hands behind his back, continued to speak. "I'll also scrub Hasky's memories and modify them. Her time spent in prison twisted her view on the world and warped her personality… and her battle with the Z-fighters only made it worse. I'll give the woman some peace and forge some happy memories in place of the old ones." A warm smile spread across his lips when he sensed Violet move over to his desk and Chico move around to stand on his left hand side. With the teen gazing through the window just as he was, the boss was now content with waiting out the rest of the afternoon until his next appointment.

A minute later, the doors to his office opened and a group of doctors and workers came rushing in, dragging a large, human-sized freezer with them. While they hoisted Hasky's body into the compartment and began cleaning up the mess left behind in the brief scuffle, Kaiser continued to stare out the window, his mind plotting out the next stages of his plan.

Conquering the world took a lot of patience and planning. Taking it from a group of humans and aliens capable of laying waste to entire planets took a little bit more. Nevertheless, the idea of a challenge brought an excited glow to Kaiser's eyes.

XXX

(Over the next few days)

The battle that'd engulfed the industrial area of West City soon faded away with the media. With the officials in charge of the emergency departments wrapping everything up around the district, the authorities quickly wrote off the catastrophic, earth-rocking events as yet another one of those otherworldly calamities that periodically fell upon the communities of the earth every year. Considering how often this'd happened in the past and the amount of times cities and villages have been affected by them, you could understand why they were so laidback about the whole concept. All the same, acting swiftly under the directions of their multibillionaire benefactors at Capsule Corp, the people in charge of the city were quickly able to quarter off the affected areas and proceed with repairing their home town.

The Z-fighters on the other hand, had business of their own to conduct.

True to form, the staff at the corporate super giant was able to commit their best men and women to fixing all the damages done to the estate. The holes and craters were patched up and the main building itself was soon returned to a hundred percent operational capacity. Mr. Briefs was even able to put his robots to work in carrying out any extra duties around the property, while the rest of the human staff continued their jobs as normal.

Bulma meanwhile had gone back to tinkering; upgrading some of the old systems around the building, while also buffing up the security systems. Even though she had a stay-at-home super hero for a husband and a son who could function better than any guard with a gun when he wasn't messing around, she still felt the need to add some extra counter measures to her hallways. What with the enemy they'd recently encountered, you could understand her sudden desire to add some extra additions to her home.

Android 16 was soon back on his feet and more efficient than ever. With his help, the Briefs family was able to complete all of their work on fixing the main building and then some, while at the same time assigning him to a round the clock patrol of the estate. It was a role befitting someone of his remarkable skill set.

With the massive android walking the hallways twenty four seven while every so often turning over to the computer labs to power down for a few hours, everybody else quickly settled into their usual stations. When Yajirobe eventually came around with a bag of Senzu Beans for his friends, those who'd sustained heavy damages in their most recent battle were quickly put back to full strength and health. For those who'd needed it most included Kana, who spent the next few days happily exploring the mazes of Capsule Corp's primary facility, and Goten and Trunks, both of who were back to running around and causing trouble, as per the norm.

Paprika had decided to stick around as well, but had opted to spend most of her time in the building's main garden to meditate and spend time on her own. She would also take the time to babysit the two munchkins whenever they were up and about, sparring with them and playing games in the lavender haired boy's bedroom. Though it continuously frustrated the Makyan at how often she lost at their devices, she still had the good graces to accept defeat and continue playing like the sport she was. That's probably why the kids loved her so much.

Piccolo also went over to the garden to meditate every once in a while, but he spent most of the time standing at attention in the corner of Gohan's room, watching over him. With his ability to stay up for long periods of time and hold a position for days on end without rest, he made for one of the best bodyguards in the business. His presence was also often overlooked, which made him the ideal person to hang around his student's room without attracting too much attention.

Though Vegeta would sometimes drag the Namekian away for the occasional frustration-spar, it was an annual request compared to how often he badgered Zangya for a fight. Ever since her stellar performance against the blonde assassin, the flame-haired man wasted no second fighting with the Hera to get himself up to speed. The orange haired demon accepted his spars gladly, but she spent most of her free hours standing by Gohan's bed, keeping a close eye on him and making sure he was alright.

Erasa and Lime had decided to stay at Capsule Corp as well, doing their schoolwork over the net, while also checking in with Sharpener and the others to see how they were doing. They found a room to share with Videl just a few doors down from where their half-Saiyan boyfriend was sleeping, even though they spent sixty percent of the time holed up in his wing, and would often drop over to his side to keep him company.

While all of this stuff was going on around Capsule Corp, the routine for the comatose half-Saiyan remained completely unchanged. The boy didn't shirk or twitch in the slightest and continued sleeping off the effects of the heart virus that were still coursing through his blood. Though Bulma was positive her solution was successful in flushing the strain out of his system, the teen was still unconscious and unable to respond beyond the occasional snore, yawn, or groan.

Videl often wondered if he was actually able to hear them at times. She also wondered what he was dreaming about, as did the rest of the girls who spent their time chatting around him and looking down at his serene mug.

That knowledge however, only belonged to the half-Saiyan himself and the people who were inside his dreams.

XXX

(A week later)
Gohan had no idea how long he'd been wandering through the darkness. Time and space apparently didn't matter in this empty shell of a dimension as he strolled and sprinted across the endless void, his feet treading upon an invisible, nonexistent surface. As he did, the only sounds he could hear around him were his own breathing and the clapping of his shoes against the cold floor of the blackness beneath him. Though this world looked and felt incredibly familiar to him, something he'd explored many times in the past, the demi-Saiyan didn't stop to ponder over it.

All he knew was that he was wandering through the dream world created by his coma, which was caused by the heart virus in his system. So far, the ordeal had been pretty rough for the hybrid. He'd been in and out of horrendous nightmares and excruciating chest pains, but all of those brief experiences were replaced shortly afterwards by instances of peace and euphoria. He assumed it had something to do with the presence of his friends on the outside, whom he could sense and feel in the form of their faces appearing in his dreams. However, though their efforts and compassion were more than welcome, the state he was primarily experiencing in this dimension was periods of empty blackness and weird acid trips of swirling lights. These were the episodic effects brought on by the heart virus attacking his mind.

Ever since he'd gotten here, the warrior had only one purpose in mind, and that was to escape this spirit hazing hell. That's why he pushed forward, intent on seeking an end... any end that would allow him to break free from this confine. But as hard as he tried and as far as he looked, all he found was darkness waiting for him around every bend and curve. It not only brought to him great deal of disappointment, but misery and dread. For all he knew, there was absolutely no way out of this dark labyrinth, as everywhere he went all he could see was an empty black canvas, which sucked him in the further and further he traveled.

After what felt like an eternity of endless walking, the teen decided to stop and turned his gaze skywards. Head craned and arms dangling at his sides, the boy stood against the coldness of space, soaking in the vacuum of damnation that gripped at every inch of his flesh. His orange and blue gi remained wrapped protectively around him, providing him whatever warmth there was to be had in this place. However, despite it and his various attempts to lift his spirits, all Gohan felt was the overwhelming sensation of emptiness and defeat as he gazed further into the cosmos above, his very soul becoming swallowed up in the blank horizon.

Rocked to the core by the nothingness of it all, Gohan suddenly heard voices behind him and spun around. Caught completely by surprise, the demi-Saiyan quickly found himself staring down a scene that appeared all too familiar to him; an event that he'd experienced nightmares of many times before.

What he saw staring right back at him, was the same mountainous valley where he, Piccolo, Krillin, Tien, Chiaotzu and Yamcha had fought against Nappa and Vegeta over a decade ago. It was as if he'd been brought right back to where all of his battles had started and, lying scattered across the open and rugged terrain, he saw all of his friends with their faces in the dirt, broken and beaten, just as they had been at that fateful encounter.

Tien and Yamcha were dead, Chiaotzu was gone, Krillin was unconscious and, as Gohan's gaze passed over the battlefield, kneeling at the foot of a long trench and a large crater, he spotted his adolescent self positioned beside the burnt body of his best friend, Piccolo. The sight of his teacher's beaten down frame struggling to draw breath as he looked up at the child had the demi-Saiyan's heart stop as he proceeded to watch and listen to the scene replay right before his very eyes.
His own form wrecked and battered, a frightened and weakened Kid Gohan pushed against Piccolo's form in a desperate attempt to get the man to his feet. "No... please. Mr. Piccolo... don't go... please," the child begged, tears forming in the corners of his eyes as the Namekian breathed his last.

A smile forming across his lips, the green warrior whispered back to the child in a low voice, tired voice, "Good bye... my... friend." And with that last gasp of effort, the warrior's eyes closed and his head lolled to the side.

The instant Piccolo's life vanished the young Gohan threw his head back and cried out in despair, his voice echoing across the sky. It was a yell that drew the winded Krillin's gaze up from where he was lying and had the present teenage demi-Saiyan's heart pinch.

Gritting his teeth, the disembodied warrior from many years in the future swallowed to keep his own emotions from brimming and shook his head. The moment he did so, the adult Gohan's gaze then snapped down the length of the trench, where he saw the unmistakable form of Nappa marching towards the fallen duo and Vegeta watching haughtily from the sidelines.

As expected, the half-Saiyan watched his younger self cry out in rage and, clapping his hands over his forehead, unleashed a powerful Masenko towards his hulking opponent. He then watched as the bald Saiyan punched his attack away, sending it arcing towards a distant mountain where it impacted and incinerated the entire edifice in a flash of golden light. Though the attack was spectacular and impressive in its execution, it was ultimately a useless gesture of anger that only served to numb the elite warrior's arm. Nappa ended up laughing the technique off and continuing his march towards the defenseless child.

Watching the memory slowly unfold before him, the adult Gohan considered intervening. After all, with his current level of strength, he was more than capable of destroying the two Saiyans and putting an end to this nightmare. However, before such a thought could even be realized or fully processed by the half-Saiyan, he suddenly felt a presence materialize behind him. Torn away from seeing the vision through to the end by the sound of a tiny bell ringing, the spiky haired warrior's gazed snapped over his shoulder. The moment it did, he spotted the familiar, haunting figure of the curvaceous blonde witch with the eye patch, revealing one piece suit, and oversized pointy hat, glaring right back at him.

The chime had come from the tiny golden bell dangling off of the tip of the phantom girl's hat. Instantly entrapped by her appearance, Gohan faced the newcomer with an expression of awe and confusion. After gazing into her one red eye peering from beneath the wide brim of her headwear, he then whispered in a stunned voice, "It's you." Seeing her lower her head at his greeting, the young man continued to stare at the projection in deathly silence, completely ignoring the nightmare taking place behind him. It was until his eyes consciously narrowed that he then spoke, addressing the stranger with a hard, cold tone, "What are you doing here?"

The lengths of fabric curled around her body wafted on the breeze behind her as the blonde slowly turned and pointed in another direction.

When Gohan looked, he suddenly saw the surrounding, earth valley bleed away into darkness, before being replaced by another familiar setting. The blue sky, mountains and greenery were quickly overtaken by the aqua, plateau covered landscape of the former planet Namek. Blinking in surprise at the sudden swap in scenery, the demi-Saiyan took a moment to adjust to the light of the new world, before his gaze was drawn to a nearby valley. It was there his eyes widened when he once again saw his child self locked in combat, this time with the hulking form of Recoome of the Ginyu Force.
Despite suffering an insane amount of punishment from Vegeta in the previous round, the massive, humanoid-alien of Frieza's elite crew still had enough energy and dexterity to deliver the beat down of a lifetime upon the other remaining fighters. The sounds of battle rang out over the entire planet as the large man chased after his tiny opponent, smacking the five year old left and right across the valley. Though the young demi-Saiyan stood up to the man's assault and attempted to fight back as best as he could, his efforts were rendered completely useless as the powerful fighter walked through every single attack sent his way.

Dropping down to a safe distance, the battered, brave boy, bleeding from a concussive blow to the head, brought his hands back and, powering up, thrust them forward with a mighty roar.

"MASENKO!" His orange-purple blast exploded from his hands and shot towards Recoome at breakneck speeds.

However, much to the boy's dismay, he saw the orange haired fighter inhale deeply before blowing the beam of energy right back at his opponent. Gohan barely had enough time to dodge his own attack, leaping into the air to see it explode against the ground. But just as he was climbing to escape the fire generated by the blast, he was unable to respond in time when Recoome sped after him and intercepted him in midair with a well-placed chop to the back. The blow smashed into the poor child like a train, landing with a terrifying crack that sent the Z-fighter flying.

Adult Gohan continued to watch his younger self receive the man's attacks without mercy, right up to the point the five year old tried one last ditch effort to hit the hulking fighter. With a sickening crack, Recoome managed to jump over the tiny warrior and land a crushing kick to his neck. The force sent the kid flying across the grass to land on the ground with a dull thud, where he lay twitching and choking up blood. His life was hanging on the razor's edge.

Seeing the large fighter tower over him, ready to finish him off, Gohan then watched the scene change drastically once more. All of a sudden, the disembodied demi-Saiyan saw Goku, Piccolo, Krillin and his younger self standing on a tiny island in the middle of Namek's ocean in the minutes following his father dropping the Spirit Bomb on Frieza. His eyes moving upwards, he saw the alien tyrant himself standing at the top of the nearby ridge, glaring down at them hatefully, missing half of his tail, and covered in horrendous bruises and scratches.

In a matter of seconds, the white alien with the purple carapaces proceeded to cut down each of the demi-Saiyan's friends one after the other; first shooting Piccolo through the chest with a Death Beam and then propelling Krillin into the sky, where the poor Z-fighter exploded with a cry of terror. The sight brought shock and despair to the two Saiyans standing on the small scrap of land far below, with the event ultimately serving as the trigger to Goku's transformation to a Super Saiyan.

While all of this was going on, the older Gohan, just like his younger counterpart, could only watch helplessly from the sidelines as all of these events unfolded in rapid succession. Shortly thereafter, after seeing Krillin meet his end on Namek, the scene once again faded away and cut to another event a few years later.

This time the demi-Saiyan was shown a memory of his battle against Perfect Cell before his eventually transformation to Ascended Saiyan. The android was attacking him viciously, attempting to force the young warrior to unleash his so-called 'Hidden Power'. He chased and harassed the youngster without remorse or hesitation, before eventually catching the child in a bear hug and proceeding to crush him against his chest.

The teen Gohan's bloodcurdling scream filled the adult version's ears with the sounds of torment, drawing on several phantom pains from that terrible day that had the young male's bones ache.
Moments later, the adult Gohan then saw Android 16 dart down from the nearby plateau where the other Z-fighters were stationed and grabbed Cell from behind, in a brave attempt to finish the biological abomination with one last, kamikaze attack. But as the demi-Saiyan watching from his place several feet away predicted, he watched the tragic event play out in full as Perfect Cell snapped out of the android's grip and nailed the cyborg with a critical blast to the chest. The explosion sent the automaton's body scattering across the field, marking the first great casualty of that day.

Much to the young warrior's anguish, he then saw his old nemesis eject several miniature clones of himself to administer agonizing pain upon the rest of his friends. The Cell Juniors all leapt into action at the command of their father and proceeded to beat the living hell out of Goku and the heroes of earth. The maniacal android aimed to make them suffer in order to draw out the young warrior's power, before ultimately killing them.

Though it pained the older Gohan to watch this memory play out, he couldn't help but notice the one thing that stood out from all of the chaos and pain unfolding around him. He saw his younger self, kneeling uselessly on the ground behind the monster that was causing his friends to suffer. Despite his great strength and his gifts, the young half-Saiyan was still so weak and scared, unable to do anything with his powers to save his friends. It was only through the sacrifice of one of their own that he was soon able to achieve the resolve and the strength necessary to make a difference.

But before that, even when he did have the strength to do something of worth, Gohan had been too afraid, too unsure of himself, and too naïve to use it. This fateful battle with the android marked a major turning point in the child's life, giving the hybrid the drive and self-assurance to do something with his power.

It was the day that he stepped up and took on the mantel as protector of the earth.

The feelings and sensations the adult Gohan received from this particular battle were accentuated further by the death of his father, whom he watched spirit the self-destructive biological monster to King Kai's planet at the closing stages of the memory, sacrificing himself to protect the earth.

When the scene eventually faded to black for the fifth time, Gohan thought the ordeal was over. He glanced behind him towards the one-eyed witch, whom he could see was still staring at him with her unnerving smile in play. Just before he could question the reason for her presence here and the purpose of these memories, he heard the sounds of heavy panting and battle, and spun around in the direction he'd previously been staring. A split second later, the teenager saw another hallucination bleed into view and wash over him, dropping his body right into the heart of a new setting. Gohan quickly found himself standing in the middle of a dry, barren wasteland, surrounded by mountains and long stretches of empty countryside, which dominated the area for miles.

Almost instantly upon seeing the desert appear before him, the demi-Saiyan blinked at what he made out next.

In front of him, he spotted himself, or at least another version of himself, standing defensively over the beaten, battered body of a short, purple figure with a white Mohawk, earrings, and adorned in a posh Kai outfit of esteemed design. Initially baffled by who this person was Gohan then began inspecting the version of him that was protecting said figure. Looking him over, he saw a gutsy fighter dressed in a ruined, black spandex uniform with white gloves and boots, and assumed in his first Super Saiyan form. He was also bleeding from various battle wounds and was covered in bruises, making the disembodied Gohan wonder what monstrous force could've done that to him.

"Why... am I so damaged?" Gohan thought, shaking his head in confusion at the doppelganger standing several yards from him. "Did I... get attacked from behind or something? Why haven't I "transformed into a Super Saiyan 2 or Super Saiyan 3 yet? What the hell's going on?" He just could not comprehend what this vision was, nor could he recall such a battle taking place.

His string of panicked questions was soon shut down when his gaze was drawn across the battlefield his beaten down doppelganger was thrust into. Following his glare, the real Gohan's eyes then fell upon a creature that literally had him do a double-take. On the other end of the field, he spotted a fat, pink, humanoid creature with a tentacle on its head, wearing golden boots, gloves, white diaper like pants, a vest, and a short purple cape, standing on one foot several dozen yards away. At first Gohan thought it was a giant, inflatable figure or a ball of some kind, but after giving it a second look over, the young Saiyan judged from its getup and appearance that the creature was some kind of repugnant demon.

The 'M' mark on its belt indicated that it was indeed a being of supernatural origins. That was his personal assessment at least.

Before he could delve further into his investigation, Gohan then proceeded to watch the pink blob of a creature standing on one foot begin cart-wheeling across the battlefield towards his battle-damaged counterpart. The creature giggled and laughed as it did so, before eventually rolling to a stop directly in front of him. It then turned and leered at the Saiyan's stunned double, laughing all the while.

Gohan then heard his doppelganger speak, with a voice expressing nothing but shock and disbelief.

"What is this thing? Its skin just absorbs everything I give him," the Super Saiyan whispered, openly expressing astonishment at how the monster was able to heal itself from a powerful kick it'd previously received to the face.

The fat, pink demon then grinned in a menacing way and brought its hands forward. "You a big pest! You leave!" it shouted in a squeaky, nasally voice, showcasing a clear sense of anger towards the Z-fighter with the vernacular of a child. Its energy began to skyrocket as it prepared to attack the blonde warrior, intent of ridding him of the nuisance once and for all.

A growl left the battered Gohan's voice, before the Super Saiyan leapt at the pink monstrosity with a loud battle cry.

It was a sight that alarmed the demi-Saiyan watching from the sidelines, who stepped forward with panic burning in his eyes. "YOU IDIOT!" However, before he could yell out any sort of warning to stop himself, the purple Kai lying on the ground beat him to it.

"WATCH OUT FOR HIS BLAST!"

The warning came too little, too late, as the pink demon thrust both hands forward and unleashed a powerful blue blast directly at the approaching Super Saiyan. The beam engulfed the young warrior, stopping him dead before reforming into an enormous sphere of energy that slammed the fighter up against its surface. The heat of the attack drew a scream of agony and terror from the battle damaged Gohan, before sending him rocketing across the valley and up into the sky, where the blast exploded and sent the half-Saiyan plummeting back down to earth.

As the scene chugged to its conclusion, all the real Gohan could do was stand there gawking in the direction his counterpart had been thrown. His gaze then snapped in the direction of the demon that'd beaten him and saw the fat, pink joke of a monster dancing merrily at sending the teen flying with barely any effort whatsoever.

While the creature danced, the only thought that ran through the demi-Saiyan's head was how he could've let himself get beaten by such a pathetic attack? Why did he make such an amateur mistake, jumping into the monster's line of fire? Why wasn't he powered up to his maximum level? If he was Super Saiyan 3, there was no way he could've been taken down by such an obvious counter. In fact, the real Gohan was pretty sure he could've ripped that thing apart with a few well-placed hits and not waste any time with theatrics or needless heroism.

That being the case, why was he so weak in that vision to begin with? What'd happened to him that had him lose so much strength, sense and skill?

Before he could proceed to solving this riddle, he the scene once again changed and, a split second later, Gohan found himself standing on Kami's Lookout. At first bewildered by the sudden teleportation to the platform, the half-Saiyan then turned towards the edge and spotted most of his friends and family gathered out in the open. Clearly making out Piccolo at the head of the group, but seeing no Vegeta, Zangya or any of the other strong fighters in the area, he also noticed a tall, muscular, pink figure leering at them from the platform's ledge.

It took the demi-Saiyan a few moments of looking the creature over to realize that this menacing new face was in fact the same, fat monster that'd blasted his weakened doppelganger into the sky, only it seemed he'd gone through some sort of weird metamorphosis since that battle. He now looked like a legitimate killing machine; sleek, muscular, menacing, malicious, and even more powerful than before.

Dreading the events that were to come, Gohan looked on as the demon suddenly marched towards Piccolo. His approach caused the Namekian to freeze and stare up at the fiend in terror, sweat pouring down his face and his eyes wide in alarm.

"Time to kill," the demon with the tentacle on his head snarled, sending a chill down every Z-fighter's spine.

At first the demi-Saiyan thought the pink creature was going to kill his friend right there, on the spot, and stepped forward in panic. He was about to jump in to attack too, only to feel a firm tug on the back of his gi that stopped him dead in his tracks. When Gohan looked behind him, he saw the blonde witch with the eye-patch holding onto his top with her thumb and finger, keeping him from moving. Surprised by her sudden interference, the young warrior then stared ahead of him to see what was going to happen next.

All of a sudden, Gohan saw the pink monster raise his hand into the air and, in a flash of blinding light, began unleashing a torrent of pink energy blasts that arced down from the lookout and shot towards the planet below. The attacks rained down upon the earth like an unending river of death, trailing streaks of light that marked the path of the billions of ki attacks the monster was now letting loose into the atmosphere. The display was frightening, causing all those watching from the sidelines to take a big step back as the vortex of energy surrounding the entity continue spewing blasts out like there was no tomorrow.

However, the worst was yet to come.

The pink fiend wasn't just firing off all those shots as a trivial show of force or as a means of intimidating the heroes. Every single one of the blasts he was firing down at the earth was aimed at every single person living down on the ground. As the assault carried on, Gohan's expression twisted into one of horror when countless screams of terror suddenly filled his ears and his vision became plagued by the sight of all the innocent people of the world being cut down by the barrage of powerful energy attacks. The sight was as horrendous as he thought it was, the vision showing him people getting incinerated instantaneously left, right and center, by attacks capable of incinerating entire buildings with barely a tap.
However, what struck him the hardest was seeing Capsule Corp get shot to bits and the whole of Orange Star Highschool sterilized by the blind assault. He saw Sharpener, Touya and Erasa get struck down by the energy waves, their forms vanishing in a flash of fire and simultaneous cries of pain. He even saw Lime perish under the heat of the salvo, her scream of terror drowned out by the dozens of others around her.

The sight of his friends and the people he loved being killed drew panicked breaths of air from the demi-Saiyan and put tears in his eyes, which began to trickle down his cheeks without restraint. His heart burning, the teen then looked on as the vision slowly faded to black and was replaced by yet another, which made him wonder how much longer this torture was going to last.

Back on the courtyard of Kami's Lookout, he saw Krillin confronting the monster all by himself, while all the other members of the Z-fighters stood back.

"RUN!" the short fighter bellowed, a split second before taking off and charging the terrifying creature down.

Eyes widening while her arms were wrapped protectively around her daughter, Android 18 leapt forward in desperation, "KRILLIN! NO!" But it was too late.

The human warrior dashed towards the pink demon with a mighty bellow in a desperate attempt to take the creature out and buy his comrades time to escape. However, the moment the man struck at the villain with his fist, the entity's body suddenly liquefied and sprang into the sky, warping through the air and reforming above the Z-fighter when he flew past. As soon as Krillin missed, the creature threw his tentacle forward and fired a pink, electrical beam at the man. A scream left the warrior's lips when the field of energy engulfed him, before a puff of white smoke burst around his body.

Gohan watched closely as the cloud quickly vanished and a bar of chocolate dropped out of it, landing on the hard, tiled floor. The transformation was baffling, but the young martial artist quickly deduced that the attack was some form of twisted, yet incredibly powerful magic. Before he could fully comprehend the magnitude of the fiend they were up against, Gohan's expression became one of dismay and shock when he saw the pink monster begin targeting the rest of them.

"No! No, no, no, NO, NOOO!" Gohan shouted, his feet digging into the floor as he attempted to rush in and save his friends. Despite his best efforts though, he found legs rooted to the ground thanks to the ridiculous force holding him back. Glaring over his shoulder in panic, the demi-Saiyan gritted his teeth at the witch holding onto his gi and barked, "I HAVE TO SAVE THEM! PLEASE! LET ME GO!" He then attempted to fight his way out, but as hard as he tried, he could not wrench his way out of the woman's vice-like grip. "I CAN'T JUST STAND HERE AND WATCH THEM DIE! I HAVE TO DO SOMETHING! ANYTHING!" After failing several times to escape her hold, Gohan then looked back to see the next set of events.

To his utter shock and horror, the Saiyan watched as one after the other, the pink, tentacle-headed creature started transforming every single one of his friends into chocolate. Though it stunned Gohan to see all those closest to him meet the creature's twisted beam, the worst one came when he saw Videl get transformed into a piece of candy and heard her scream vanish with the others. The disembodied warrior attempted to break free one last time, his feet cracking the floor to try and get out of the girl's hold.

But he was too late. Seconds later, the teenager saw the smoke from the bombardment of electrical beams dissipate and, lying scattered across the floor, he saw his girlfriend and everybody else had been turned into treats.
Limbs shaking as tears streamed down his face, the demi-Saiyan looked on as the creature gathered up all of his comrades and proceeded to eat them. Gohan shook his head, unable to believe what he was witnessing as the scene slowly faded into darkness, with the final image being the pink monstrosity gobbling down the last of his friends.

His hands reached up to cover his face, as he knew he could not bear to watch any more. But when he pulled them away a moment later when he thought it was all over, he couldn't help but gasp in shock when he saw the faces of himself, Piccolo, Goten and Trunks, unconscious, and trapped in a series of cocoons made out of flesh, inside an enormous cave system of cobwebs and brain stems. The setting was like something taken straight out of a horror film, and he knew right then and there that he and his friends had met the greatest defeat of their lives.

However, this wasn't to be the last of the visions. As Gohan's resolve began to crumble, he saw the scene change once again. This time he was standing on a rocky shore, just several feet away from a pair of figures facing each other down, with the ocean waves crashing against the stones behind him. At first he didn't know who the people were due to how different they looked. But when the demi-Saiyan's eyes eventually focused on them, he found to his bewilderment Vegeta, dressed in a new design of armor and assumed in a bright blue, Super Saiyan form, standing over the battered body of Frieza, who was currently kneeling on the ground before him.

Looking at the two from his position, Gohan reasoned that both warriors had been locked in battle and that the two warriors appeared more powerful than ever before. He could tell just from the air surrounding them that they were now fighting in a league completely above any the demi-Saiyan could reach, and had just recently passed the climax point of their battle.

The sight of the alien tyrant kneeling before the Super Saiyan Prince was so gripping that Gohan completely disregarded the fact that Frieza had been brought back to life and that he was currently on earth. He also noticed himself and the rest of his friends standing on a nearby cliff, with his father lying defeated between them.

Just when he was about to ask what was going on, the disembodied Gohan suddenly heard Frieza speak.

"If I'm going down… I'M TAKING YOU ALL WITH ME!"

The Super Saiyan God Vegeta balked in shock, moments before the ground beneath him suddenly started to fracture and burn. As it turns out, Frieza, who had his hands placed firmly on the floor, had unleashed a powerful blast into the planet's crust so fast that the Prince had had no time to react to it. This resulted in the planet beginning to implode at an alarming rate and, after several tense seconds of mountains and oceans erupting into enormous, fiery columns of magma and rock, the entire world suddenly went up in a massive explosion.

Watching safely from the protective bubble of his dream, Gohan could only look on in disbelief as his home and all the people he loved vanished in a flash of fire. When the cataclysm ended shortly thereafter, all that remained of the earth was an asteroid field of rubble and rock, drifting aimlessly through the vacuum of space.

The sight shook the teen up so much that it literally brought him to his knees. Collapsing onto all fours, Gohan reeled forward and choked out several loud sobs, which rattled his bones and blurred his vision. His chest hurt and his head throbbed, giving his body the unmistakable sensation that he was about to throw up. However, this being a nightmare, the act of blowing chunks out in his mind would've been an incredibly redundant and arbitrary action, as he was merely a projection of his mental self. Nevertheless, the urge was overwhelmingly, and the boy did his very best to keep it together.
After all of the things he'd just seen play out before his very eyes, he found this to be an incredibly difficult act to accomplish.

He spent the next few minutes from that point onwards panting and sobbing, allowing his tears to flow free and hit the ground, where the droplets eventually faded to nothing. After feeling the sensations of defeat, grief and sorrow at the loss of his friends disappear, the boy slowly, but surely, glanced over his shoulder and towards the figure standing behind him. Eyes red from the tears he'd shed, Gohan saw the blonde witch staring down at him with an emotionless gaze in play.

Obviously she felt no pity for the teen's misery and simply allowed him to express his agony without any fear of consequence.

After taking a moment to catch his breath, Gohan whispered in a hoarse voice, "Are these… visions of the future?"

Immediately upon asking this question, the blonde phantom turned and looked in another direction. When the teen demi-Saiyan followed her gaze in confusion, he suddenly saw more visions begin playing out against the backdrop of blackness to his right. His eyes locked onto the ethereal screen as it started playing instances from the past, showing him multitudes of scenarios he'd never seen before.

He saw himself at the Intergalactic Martial Arts Tournament as a Super Saiyan 2, charging down both Bojack and Zangya. It was a scene he remembered as being one of the major stepping stones in his life and a moment where he set his closest and dearest friend on the path of redemption. However, he then received the shock of a lifetime when, as he watched the terrified female Hera back up, he suddenly saw her maniacal boss teleport behind her, push her forward and, without mercy or hesitation, unleashed a powerful blast right into her back. Her scream of terror filled the void as Zangya was incinerated in an instant, a sight that horrified the adult Gohan as he saw the blast that killed her shoot towards his younger doppelganger, who speedily avoided it.

Another vision flashed into view shortly thereafter, where he saw a young, eight year old Paprika on some far off, alien world, sitting in a dank, dingy alleyway of a backwater, garbage ridden city, with her knees brought up to her chest and arms wrapped tightly around them. The girl was sobbing and covered in muck and dirt, looking as though she'd recently been beaten, and had been living on the streets for a long time. The vision was one of loneliness and hurt, as she appeared both weak and helpless. Over the next few minutes afterwards, amidst the hustle and bustle of this forgotten market setting, it began to rain around the young Makyan, and she attempted to cover her arms in an effort to protect herself from the cold. She soon fell into a painful coughing fit and, dropping onto her side, her breathing eventually stilled and her eyes closed, presumably for the last time.

As this depressing vision slowly turned to black, leaving Gohan with a sickly feeling in the pit of his stomach, his dream soon came up with yet another premonition. This time it was on a different, futuristic planet with an orange sky and skyscrapers all around him. Almost instantly he spotted Kana, who was standing in the middle of the street surrounded by countless other members of her race, all of whom were looking up towards the sky in terror. What they saw hovering above them was a purple, cat-like alien of sorts wearing Egyptian clothing, accompanied by a blue-skinned man with white hair and holding a staff, a man who appeared eerily familiar to the demi-Saiyan.

From his place on the ground, the young warrior watched the cat alien raise his finger and, with an effortless flick of his finger, sent a tiny purple blast towards the city. Kana and her people were soon engulfed in a blinding flash of light, seconds before her entire planet was swallowed up by magma and hellfire. In the blink of an eye, the entire world was blown to kingdom come, along with her and a million other innocent lives.
A few more flashes of scenarios quickly passed across the screen, as the real Gohan saw many other scenarios and events transpire. He saw his father training in Otherworld, Vegeta piggybacking Trunks as a baby while Bulma and her family watched from behind, he saw himself cradling Goten when he was young, Krillin and Android 18 playing with their daughter in the sand, Piccolo meditating on the lookout, and various other sights that appeared familiar yet foreign to him at the same time.

After seeing dozens of visions flash through his mind, he then saw one last shot. It was an image of him in his room, as his twelve year old self, studying, and surrounded by books and worksheets of all kinds. He was dressed in casual clothing befitting someone pursuing the dream of a scholar and, as he worked, his mother came in to give him something to eat.

Gohan saw more of the same vision flicker in front of him. While his friends and family were doing things on the world outside, training, socializing and hanging out, the demi-Saiyan saw his dream-counterpart sitting behind his desk, cramming, sleeping there, and staying isolated from the rest of the world. This eventually led to him leaving the house for high school for his very first day, but instead of being dressed in the trendy clothes Gohan remembered wearing, he saw this version of him was dressed in a pair of concealing brown pants, a baggy, long-sleeved white shirt, and a black vest. He also looked skinny and pale; signs that indicated a person hadn't been outside much, was out of shape, and had been cooped up inside for days on end.

Initially the half-Saiyan didn't know what to make of this. However, after a minute of processing these images, Gohan's eyes widened in realization and his gaze snapped towards the blonde witch behind him.

It was then he spoke. "These… are visions from an alternate universe, aren't they? An alternate past and an alternate future?"

This much was obvious. Zangya being killed by Bojack, Kana and Paprika dying through extenuating circumstances meaning he and his friends never got the chance to meet them, an unfit version of himself losing to a fat, pink glob of chewing gum, his friends dying because he was unable to kill the creature, and Frieza being brought back to life and destroying the earth… all of these clues pointed to a universe where, instead of training and staying in shape, he got slack and weak, and important events in history had skewed ever so slightly off of the timeline that he knew.

His question towards the witch was soon answered by a firm nod from the phantom, which prompted Gohan to begin deciphering the meaning of everything he'd just witnessed.

"That world… all those terrible things that took place… my friends dying, me, Goten, Trunks and Piccolo being trapped in that prison, and Frieza destroying the earth… all those things happened because… I was too weak to protect them." Looking back at the vision where he saw his alternate self grinning back at him, with that stupid, naïve smile that hadn't seen a real battle in years, the warrior then spun back around and looked at the witch. "By not training and keeping up my strength… not only did I fail all of my friends and family… but I got every single one of them killed."

He should've saved them. No. He knew he could've saved them. If he'd continued to train, kept up his strength, and made an effort to uphold the mantel of his father, not only could he have prevented the earth from being destroyed, but he could've stopped his friends from meeting such a horrible end. He could've saved Zangya. He could've made a difference that brought Kana to him and changed Paprika's heart for the better. He could've destroyed that pink monster before he even had a chance to lay his hands on Krillin, Eighteen, his grandfather, Erasa, Lime, Videl and everybody else he cherished.
If he had been strong and had the courage to face his fears, no one would've had to suffer because of his weakness.

But in that alternate reality, he couldn't protect anyone, because he allowed his abilities and responsibilities to go to waste behind a desk, and they all suffered and died as a result.

The knowledge that he'd failed them in that reality brought a terrible pain to Gohan's heart, which had him reach up and clutch his chest tightly. The memories of all of his past battles and the horrors he'd faced… every single one of them came back and struck him down like a ball taking out a stack of pins, leaving him with a shockingly painful impression.

In these few, brief moments he spent lamenting on his past actions, Gohan was able to realize the full totality of all his failures. Even after his battle with Cell, very few things had changed. His fights with Nappa, Vegeta, the Ginyu Force, Lord Slug's army, Turles, Frieza, Cooler's Armored Squadron, the androids, Broly, Cell, Bojack, Zeru, and the human mercenary, all these tests he'd faced all amounted to one irrefutable outcome: his failure as a warrior and as a person. In every single one of those battles, he'd been unable to carry the weight of the hero… of the role that his father had willingly passed down to him. No matter what he did and no matter how much pain he took, he couldn't stop his friends from getting hurt or beat any of the monsters he'd faced without their help.

His father had fought and won countless battles under his own power. If he was supposed to have inherited the strength that his dad once held to make a difference in the universe, then why couldn't he do the same thing?

He may have been strong, but what was the point of having all that remarkable strength if his friends were still going to get thrown into harm's way?

The visions being shown to him of this alternate reality only confirmed his fears… that no matter what he did, he was doomed to fail.

Gritting his teeth and fighting off the stinging sensation in his heart as best as he could, the boy took a few deep breaths to try and relax. He tried anything… everything he could to quell the feelings of dread, defeat and hopelessness from overtaking him.

Eyes closed and expression calming, the teen used the next few moments to gather his thoughts. In that time, a warm sense began to creep over him like water and, looking up from where he was kneeling on the ground, he saw a bright light appear in front of him. When it flickered and expanded, figures began to emerge from the veil and reach out towards him, trying to communicate with him.

Feeling a warm hand press against his cheek, Gohan's eyes shimmered with surprise when he saw Videl, Zangya, Erasa, Lime, Kana, Piccolo, Vegeta, Krillin, Bulma, his brother, Trunks, Chi-Chi, and many other people appear, with the former two standing directly in front of him and lifting his chin up to look at them. Seeing them all gathered together under a bright, celestial glow, standing together as one, their eyes fixed firmly upon him, and smiles on most of their faces, the teen felt all the negative energy and exhaustion leave him.

When Videl and Zangya nodded to him with their reassuring smiles, his heart skipped a beat. Smiling, Gohan moved his cheek into the former's hand. Placing a gentle palm over the raven haired girl's, he took a deep breath and stood up. Feeling their strength lift him from the gutters of despair and loss, the Z-fighter kept his eyes locked forward for several seconds, before eventually turning to face the blonde witch standing behind him.
His eyes narrowed upon her when their gazes met. "All those battles I'd fought over the years… all the times I felt like the world was crashing down around me and I was powerless to help… all of that is in my past. This alternate world you're showing me…" He shook his head firmly, "It will never happen. Do you want to know why?" Fists clenching, Gohan glared the blonde witch down with all the confidence he could muster as he was propelled forward by the memory and image of his friends standing behind him. "Because I won't let it happen. I will continue getting stronger so that I can protect everyone that I love. Videl, Zangya, Goten, Piccolo, Erasa, Lime… no matter what it takes, I'll make sure nothing ever happens to them."

As he spoke, he saw the expression on the girl's face darken and her frown deepen. Despite the menacing aura she was emitting, the blonde witch with the eye patch continued to glare up at the young warrior as he said his piece. The situation quickly unfolded into a glaring contest, where both fighters continued to glare one another down without the slightest hitch in either of their domains. It seemed like the two of them had hit an impasse, in which neither one of them knew what to say or do next.

However, as the silence continued to permeate throughout the void that was Gohan's nightmare-slash-dream, the demi-Saiyan narrowed his stare even further and hissed. "Tell me… where exactly do you fit into all of this?" he asked in a low voice, with a tone that was both threatening and dangerous at the same time. "I couldn't see you in any of those visions and I don't recall ever meeting you before. So who are you… and how do you know me?"

At first the shorter female with the oversized witch's hat didn't appear to want to answer his question. Just like with a lot of other details that remained privy to the hybrid, it seemed as though she was probably going to hold out on revealing anything incriminating about her until she felt it was necessary. But just when Gohan felt like she was going to turn tail and run for it, the blonde surprised him by raising her hand and pointing to his left. Taking that as a directive, the half-Saiyan then turned and proceeded to watch as another viewing portal opened up nearby.

For what felt like the tenth time this cycle, another vision began to play. Again, it was an event the young warrior had not seen before… and one he figured was from an alternate universe.

He was on Kami's Lookout again, but this time he could see all of his friends standing there and looking around in confusion. He could see Bulma, Chi-Chi, the Ox-King, Master Roshi, Yamcha, Mr. Popo, Android 18, Krillin, their daughter Marron, Puar, and Oolong. Videl was also there, alive and well, bringing a sense of relief to the young warrior. However, he couldn't see him, Goten, Trunks, Piccolo or Vegeta anywhere in the area, which left several questions the teenager had unanswered.

Apparently confusion gripped the Z-fighters that were present there as well, as they gathered together to try and solve this bewitching riddle.

"We're alive?" Bulma asked, looking across to see Chi-Chi and everybody else form up alongside her. "How… can this be?"

"Did one of us do this?" Videl also spoke up, adjusting her blue T-shirt with the word 'Fight' emblazoned upon it, while also checking to make sure everything else was in one piece.

"Well… we're no longer ghosts. I guess that's a good thing," Chi-Chi remarked, while coming to stand alongside her son's girlfriend with her hands on her hips. She then began to survey the area as well. "But… where are the boys?"

"I don't see Goku, Gohan or anybody else around," Krillin added, scratching his head while watching his wife pick up their daughter. When the android ambled over, the short fighter quickly shrugged. "To tell you the truth, I'm just as stumped as the rest of you guys."

"I remember training on the Grand Kai's world with you. But other than that, I've got nothing," Yamcha added, stopping alongside his fellow human fighters with a befuddled gaze in play.

"Somebody must have wished us back," Master Roshi's voice croaked in as he held his place beside Oolong and the others. Stroking his beard, the old master looked down and began processing his collective knowledge for a solution. "I don't sense the boys or Piccolo around… nor do I sense anyone else. So… if I was to guess as to who used the dragon balls to wish all of us back to life, my best bet would have to be-"

"It was me," a new voice suddenly interrupted.

When the Z-fighters and the incorporeal Gohan followed the exclamation back to its source, all of them got the shock of a lifetime when they saw the owner of the vocal chords standing nearby. Almost everyone on that lookout literally jumped back several feet in alarm, as the pink demon with the tentacle on his head, the white pants and the belt with the letter 'M' on it, was grinning right back at them with a smug expression in play.

The sight of the demon staring them down had the adult demi-Saiyan blink in astonishment, before he realized that the creature seemed a little bit different this time around. Unlike the previously muscular, humanoid form he'd taken on before, this one was much more defined and rounded out, as if a sculptor had gotten to work in filing him down to size. He seemed more human this time, with facial characteristics, a proper nose, and a much longer head-tentacle that extended down to his waist. He also had proper fingers, which made Gohan think that the demon had gone through yet another metamorphosis.

The name of the creature was revealed to him shortly thereafter, thanks to the terrified shouts of his friends.

"M-M-M-Majin Buu?!" Krillin shouted in alarm, "W-What… you… how are you still alive?"

Everyone else standing behind the short fighter, Videl, Mr. Popo and Puar included all had the exact same question hanging over their minds.

By the looks on their faces, they obviously weren't expecting their most dangerous enemy to date to be standing up there on the lookout with them.

A playful grin crossed the pink demon's face as he shrugged his shoulders at his befuddled former enemies. "That question should be obvious to answer." He then pointed at himself. "I won. Fair and square. Satisfied?"

Swallowing nervously, Videl shuffled forward with her hand placed timidly against her chest. "W-W-Where's Gohan?"

"And Goten?" Chi-Chi also asked, terror gripping her as she too moved forward with a terrified look in play, "Where are my boys?"

"Oh? Them?" Super Buu muttered before tilting his head and smiling back at the women. "Don't worry. I haven't hurt them. Goku, Gohan, Vegeta, Piccolo, Goten and Trunks are all alive and well inside of me." He then raised a hand and patted it against his stomach, an action that brought horrified looks to the Z-fighter's faces, as they all knew what his words entailed. "I absorbed them."

Pupils dilating and body falling into a trembling fit, a thunderstruck Videl soon felt her knees give way, and she collapsed to the ground in shock. Her body going limp from her legs buckling unexpectedly, she stared across at the pink creature in disbelief, as if she was watching her entire world begin exploding in bullet time. "N-No... it... can't be..."

Seeing despair begin gripping the crowd of warriors, the pink demon sighed and began to speak to them in a sympathetic tone of voice. "If it's any consolation to you guys, your friends put up a really good fight." He then crossed his arms and looked over the Z-fighters slowly and cautiously. "However, I'm afraid you won't be seeing them anymore. I apologize, but that's the way it is and that's the way it's going to be." He then nodded upwards and gestured towards the sky. "I'll be leaving this planet now. I don't know when I'll be back, but I'll be sure to pop in every hundred years to make sure things are alright."

Coming from him, it must've sounded terrible. The Z-fighters certainly didn't find any comfort from the way he said any of that.

While Chi-Chi and the others were in the midst of grieving, Majin Buu's red eyes then landed on Bulma, whom he saw skirt back fearfully under his gaze. After staring at her for a few moments and getting a bead on her characteristics, the demon then tilted his head curiously. "Hmm... Bulma... you're really smart, aren't you; a woman with many interesting ideas and talents?" Before the bewildered woman could even have a chance of answering him, a pink length of goo suddenly shot out of the demon's stomach, grabbed up the blue haired scientist, wrapped her up, and sucked her back into Buu's gut.

In the blink of an eye, much to the horror of Gohan and the others, the creature had absorbed yet another member of their group.

"BULMA!" Yamcha shouted in alarm, rushing forward instinctively, only to stop dead in his tracks when he saw Majin Buu pat his stomach and sigh.

Checking himself out under the multiple glares of the Z-fighters, the demon made a murmuring sound of approval. "Huh. That's funny. Even though I can feel the difference in my intelligence, my body isn't physically changing anymore. Looks like it's finally become stable from all the specimens I've absorbed." Nodding in understanding, the demon then turned to the stunned group of heroes, grinned at them, and saluted in a very creepy, Goku-like way. "Well gang, I'll be off. Stay out of trouble." The demon then leapt off of the ground, floated high up into the sky, and took off into space at breakneck speed.

For the next few minutes after that, Gohan looked on from a distance as his friends remained silent and scattered across the surface of the lookout. Not knowing what to do or how to respond, the group of friends and broken families came together in tears, consoling one another over their respective losses.

However, the one who looked the most upset out of all of them besides Chi-Chi... was Videl.

Still kneeling on the ground, the teen's eyes were fixated on the horizon in front of her with a look of complete shock, speechlessness, and incredulity reflected in her gaze. Her mouth moving but no sounds coming out, tears poured down her cheeks in the form of tiny streams as her mind slowly took in the realization that Gohan, the boy that she'd fallen in love with and had the most impact on her life until now, was gone... forever... stolen away by a demon of evil and madness.

Unable to believe what she'd just heard and witnessed, the girl's head craned downwards and, without any hesitation, she began to cry and sob uncontrollably, her voice carrying across the entire Lookout.
Gohan felt his chest tighten painfully once more. Seeing the girl crying her heart out in the courtyard with no one to comfort her, made the demi-Saiyan want to punch through the invisible barrier between his dream world and that dimension, go over there, and give his girlfriend a big hug, and let her know that he was alright. He wanted so badly to jump through into her reality and console her that he almost completely forgot that he was dreaming.

The second he stepped forward though in an effort to reach the heartbroken Videl, he saw the world fade into blackness and become replaced by another. From the darkness, he found himself on the front lawn of Capsule Corp, with the sky above him black as night and an eerie golden light radiating from over his shoulder. Drawn to the feel of the mysterious glow, the half-Saiyan warrior and his tagalong turned to see what was causing the strange color alterations to their environment.

Gohan soon found the source of anomaly in the form of seven dragon balls and the enormous dragon Shenron hovering in the clouds high above them. Initially distracted by the serpent's immense form, he then followed his tail back down to ground level, where he saw a group of figures gathered underneath. He quickly identified the collection of strangers as the surviving members of the Briefs family, Krillin, Android 18, a slightly older version of Maroon, Yamcha, Tien, Chiaotzu, and Videl, all of whom were gathered in front of the mystical spheres.

It became apparent to the spiky haired hero that all of his friends looked a little bit older than before, including his girlfriend, whom he noticed was dressed in the outfit belonging to the Turtle Hermit School of martial arts. Piecing together what he already knew and what he was now seeing, he reasoned that Videl had spent the past few years studying under Master Roshi and the other Z-fighters to become a more active member of their group. She also looked to be the one responsible for gathering the dragon balls today, which then led him to wonder why?

He was sure the answer would be revealed soon enough.

"I have come to grant you two wishes. Tell me what they are so that I may go," Shenron's booming voice echoed across the property, startling any and all nearby onlookers who could see the creature from their homes, windows and the neighborhoods.

Gulping anxiously, Krillin quickly turned to where Videl was standing. "Are you… sure this is going to work?"

"We have to at least try," Tien commented from alongside his teammate, arms folded and a serious look in play. A smile soon formed across his lips, which he directed towards their raven haired fighter from Satan City, "Besides… she was the one who insistent on doing this. There's no way we can say no to her when she's so determined."

Clenching and unclenching her fists beneath the towering form of the dragon uneasily, Videl took a guarded step forward and fixed her best glare upon the beast's face. Once she was sure she had the serpent's attention, the girl spoke in a voice loud enough for everyone to hear. "Shenron… our friends Piccolo, Trunks, Vegeta, Gohan and his family are trapped inside the monster Majin Buu, who terrorized our planet several years ago. Can you please set them free and bring them back to earth?"

Murmuring uncomfortably, the dragon's eyes shone a bright red as his mind began making sense of the wish. After spending several moments seeing if this wish was actually possible, the serpent groaned before speaking, "No. This wish cannot be granted."

Appearing as stunned as the other members of her group, Videl stepped forward once again, "Why not? W-Why can't you do it?"
"I cannot remove their forms from the host's body, as doing so will cause the demon extensive physical and mental trauma, and will likely kill him."

Gritting her teeth in frustration as she glared up at the magical serpent, Videl stomped her foot into the ground. "I don't care whether that bastard Majin Buu lives or not!" the teen practically shouted, causing the men and women standing behind her to react in alarm. This was actually the first time any of them had actually seen someone lose their temper at the dragon for being unable to grant a wish. "Just get them out of there!"

An irritated growl left Shenron's lips as his eyes fixed upon the insolent girl. "Even if I could, I would still be unable to grant you this request. My magic is nowhere near powerful enough to break through Majin Buu's barrier, as his power far exceeds that of my creator's. I'm afraid his hold over your friends is too strong."

"What gives?" Videl barked, feeling Krillin's hand wrap around her arm in an attempt to pull her away. She threw him off of her and stepped towards the beast, determined to tear him a new one. "Everyone here said that you could grant any wish I ask! They said that you would be able to help me! WHY CAN'T YOU HELP ME SAVE GOHAN?! TELL ME!"

"ENOUGH!" the dragon shouted, his loud voice shaking the ground and cracking the earth, effectively silencing the raging girl. When he saw the teenager back down, panting from her courageous outburst with her friends hovering meekly in the background, Shenron continued to speak. "If you have any other wishes, speak them now."

Gritting her teeth after hearing the dragon's demands, Videl lowered her head and took a few deep breaths to compose herself. The other fighters behind her also spent the next minute or so considering any other wishes that they could ask the dragon. Since there were indeed only a handful of things they could do with the power at their disposal, they now needed to vote on which moves were actually viable.

However, before any of them could think of anything, Videl's head suddenly craned upwards and she faced the wishing dragon with a serious look on her face. After weighing all of the options she had on hand, there was really only one last thing she could do.

It was risky, but knowing exactly what was at stake here, she was determined to follow-through with it.

"If you can't do anything… then that means we have to try something to save our friends ourselves, right?" the teenager asked, her back straightening and ears listening eagerly for the serpent's response.

The dragon raised a brow in curiosity, "That's right? Does that question come with a wish?"

"It does. Two wishes… and I want to use both of them," Videl said, taking a deep breath before steeling herself for what was to come. Though she wondered how she ever came to this conclusion, she knew that this was not the time to be second guessing herself. She had to act now. "With my first wish, I want you to transport me to someone who can make me powerful enough to defeat Majin Buu and save Gohan!" When this wish echoed across the front lawn of the Capsule Corp property, all of the Z-fighters in the area looked across at the girl in bewilderment. Before any of them could speak up in protest, she then shouted her last request, "And my second wish… is to remain there and not come back until I've destroyed Majin Buu!" The instant she finished, the girl slowly looked over her shoulder and gave a sad smile to her friends. "Sorry guys."
Caught completely off guard by the girl's wishes, Yamcha rushed forward, "Wait… Videl! Y-You can't be serious?" Unfortunately, he didn't have a chance to get an answer.

"It shall be done," Shenron's voice boomed, his eyes lighting up the sky and a low growl escaping his throat, "Good luck."

Seconds later, the stunned Z-fighters and family members watched as Videl disappeared in a flash of blue light, leaving all of the heroes standing thunderstruck in their places. It was a scenario neither one of them could have expected and to come from their newest member, of all people. However, after thinking about all the things she'd lost and all the trouble she'd had to go through over the past few years, her reasons for executing such a gutsy decision started to receive a little more clarity.

Even Gohan was blown away by what he'd just witnessed and could only gawk in silence as the vision transported him to the very place where Videl had been sent by the dragon.

He soon found himself standing on the precipice of a cliff looking over a large valley of a pyramid shaped planet that had a massive tree growing out of its top. Aside from the beautiful foundations and the fantastic view, he also noticed a large temple embedded in the side of the edifice, giving credence to the fact that this place was inhabited.

Perplexed by the exotic location and the weirdness of the world's design, the teen spent the next few seconds looking around the place and drinking in all there was to see, until his eyes eventually pulled across to a particular spot on the rise.

There, poised before a tall, familiar blue figure with white hair, elegant robes and a celestial staff, he saw Videl looking up at him from the grass, her arms set firmly at her sides and her gi blowing on the wind. Moving in closer to listen to the conversation that was going on between them, the demi-Saiyan and his blonde haired escort stopped just a few yards away. From there, amidst the rustling of the lush fields of reeds, flowers and butterflies, they were able to hear every word being spoken between the two figures.

Drumming his fingers against his staff, the teal-skinned alien beamed curiously down at the determined looking girl, who'd come to this world only a few hours ago, "So… let me get this straight? You traveled all this way to this part of the universe, to ask me to train you and make you strong enough to defeat this… Majin Buu creature… in order to save the man that you love and all the other poor souls he has absorbed?" When he saw Videl nod in response, a big smile appeared on his face. "I must say, out of all the requests I've received to train people and make them my apprentices… this has to be the most straightforward and noble one I've heard yet." He then blushed a shade of scarlet and gave a delightful giggle, "It's so romantic."

Undeterred by the man's odd response and character, the raven haired girl dropped to her knees and bowed to him, in an attempt to appeal to his compassion. "Please, Master Whis." She prostrated herself before the alien, literally placing her forehead to the grass and shutting her eyes tightly. "Please. I know I may not be the most worthy, or the most powerful… or the most pure hearted person in the world, but I beg you… for the friend I have lost… please train me and make me strong enough to save him. It would be a great honor and a privilege to learn from you."

Even though she knew nothing about this person, she could tell right away that he was powerful and that he was the man that Shenron sent her to see. She knew it in her gut that he was the one.

Blinking in surprise at the girl's humble gesture and words, the alien with the staff momentarily averted his gaze out of bashfulness and astonishment. Using this time to dwell on her request, his eyes ran up the side of the distant temple where he knew his other student, Beerus, was fast asleep.
and undergoing his ridiculously long hibernation cycle. Considering he was alone on this world during his student's annual sleeping period and had nothing much else to do with his free time, the blue-skinned man gave a cheerful smile to the birds fluttering about and, after nodding his head in approval, turned to look back down at the human kneeling in front of him.

"Alright, young lady. I'll gladly train you," the man chirped, watching the girl's eyes snap up to him as a kind smile framed his face. "Though I don't know how long it will take, I promise I will make you strong enough so that not even the universe will stand in your way. How does that sound?"

Almost instantly, a radiant expression formed on Videl's face as a smile appeared on her lips and her head gave an enthusiastic nod of gratitude, "Yes! Thank you so much, sir."

From that point onwards, Gohan saw his girlfriend's life flash in front of his eyes. He saw the girl undergo a fierce training regiment under the life form known as Whis, engaging in vigorous sparring matches with him and undergoing countless hours of meditation to enhance her ability to manipulate energy. They were even joined by the same purple, humanoid cat alien the Saiyan remembered seeing destroy Kana's planet in a previous vision, who mixed up the routine from watching the girl's training from the sidelines and actually taking the time to train with the girl as well.

Though at the end of every session Gohan saw Videl walk away from her training battered and bruised, the gutsy, courageous young girl woke up the next morning stronger than ever and ready for another bout.

Between bone breaking physical exercises and endless hours of meditation, the demi-Saiyan also witnessed Videl undergo thorough book lessons under Whis in her off periods, learning how to control magic, physics, matter, time, and telekinesis. She even went through an unusual conversion ritual underneath one of the pyramid world's heavy waterfalls, where the demi-Saiyan saw his girlfriend walk into the lagoon with her short, raven black hair framing her face, and emerge from the lake with long, pale-blonde hair and a cloud of steam encasing her form.

In the end, Videl had transformed herself from an ordinary fighter, into an entirely different woman.

These visions soon bled away into darkness and were once more replaced by another. From it, Gohan guessed that a great many years had come and gone, as he saw his girlfriend had gone through yet another series of extreme changes. This time however, the situation he saw the teenager in was completely different to every other one he'd seen before.

He could see Videl, dressed in an outfit similar to Whis's, wielding a long, golden staff of an intricate and otherworldly design, standing on the surface of a moon in a far off galaxy, with her foot planted firmly on the chest of the monstrous, shape shifting demon Majin Buu. The stars burning from unaccountable amounts of damage and the landscape around them looking no better than the rest of the quadrant, the demi-Saiyan also noted that both fighters were bearing enormous amounts of battle damage. Not only was his girlfriend's outfit torn in several places and she was completely covered in burns and bruises, she also had a deep scar carved across her right eye, which was missing and bleeding profusely.

Buu on the other hand, was looking even worse than her. His body resembled a pile of beaten up goop on the ground, covered in burns, scars, with his head barely intact. He lay beneath the girl's boot, groaning and choking in agony, while the girl brandished the tip of her golden lance directly over where his brain would be.
From that sight alone, Gohan knew his girlfriend had won their battle.

Huffing angrily as the moon around them burned, the blonde fighter hissed, "You're finished, Majin Buu."

Choking up blood from his barely formed mouth, the entity known across the quadrant as Zen Buu grinned at the woman standing over him in an impressed and irritated manner. "Well played… Videl Satan. Well played." He nodded towards the fighter in acknowledgement of her great power and silently commended her for her victory. "I never would've thought… that my actions in this world… would eventually come back to bite me in the ass. And here I thought I'd become the most powerful force across all of creation." A shake of his head soon followed. "Oh, how wrong I was…"

Videl scowled, "You may have killed Whis and Beerus over a century ago, but there is no way you can kill what I am."

The demon leered, "And what would that be, my dear?"

Her glare only seemed to harden even further. "The legacy of all the innocent people you've wronged." Bringing her staff even closer while at the same time suppressing the gooey mass of her opponent with her powers, Videl sneered. "I've been waiting several hundred years for this moment… and now it has finally come. Release Gohan and the others now… and I just might let you go."

"Gohan and the others? Who are you talking about... ooh," Zen Buu stopped, shortly before a dark, foreboding smirk pulled across his confused face. "You mean the Saiyans I absorbed on earth a hundred thousand years ago, right?" When he saw the girl nod and brandish her staff even closer, his eyes narrowed menacingly. "Unfortunately for you... you're too late. Gohan and his family have all been assimilated into my body, meaning he and the others are no longer cocooned inside my brain... and no longer have physical form. His soul and personality have become molded with my own... lost in a sea of billions of other unique individuals... and I can't tell which one is which anymore." When he saw a look of shock cross over the girl's eyes, the demon cocked his head towards her apologetically. "You could've saved him several decades ago... but it looks like you came up short. Sorry." And he said it in the snidest way he possibly could. "No hard feelings?"

At first Videl remained frozen; her weapon poised and still holding the demon beneath her at bay. From the look in her eyes, you could see the sensations of shock and defeat slowly become realized in the flecks of her red eye. All her years of fighting and training to achieve the power necessary to defeat the universe's greatest threat, had all yielded nothing to her but a string of backbreaking trials and a total of zero accomplishments. The pains she'd experienced, the losses she'd witnessed, and the deaths she'd faced... not a single one of them had helped her one bit in achieving her goal. When her mind finally worked out that she'd lost Gohan for good and that there was absolutely no way that she could bring back the man that she loved, something inside of her suddenly snapped.

Without warning, Zen Buu unexpectedly found himself staring up in fear when he noticed the blonde's expression twist into one of pure rage, malice and hatred. A shadow falling over her blood-covered face, the one-eyed woman gave a deep snarl before, in a flash of golden light, she struck down at her defenseless opponent with a mighty cry of anguish and a deafening thunderclap, incinerating the demon with a single blow.

But Majin Buu wasn't the only thing she destroyed. In her anger, Videl generated an explosion so great and so powerful, it not only consumed the entire galaxy she was in, but burned and destroyed every single other galaxy in all directions. From his safe little bubble, Gohan looked on in abject disbelief as the entire universe lit up around him like a glorified fireworks display, burning hotter than the brightest of quasars, before every single piece of matter in this reality was reduced to nothing but dust in a raging inferno. Then, after a full minute of listening to the collective screams of a countless number of dying worlds, the demi-Saiyan witnessed the entire universe vanish in the blink of an eye, with the wildfire extinguishing in a puff of smoke.

Soon… there was nothing. Of the billions of star systems, galaxies and quadrants making up the once vast reality, Gohan saw nothing but the endless vacuum of the howling stretching out all around him. It was a harrowing and disconcerting sight, knowing that every single planet in all of creation had been snuffed out just like that… and at the whim of a victim who served as the center of a great tragedy. It was actually kind of poetic.

After drifting through the blackness of the void for what seemed like an eternity, the demi-Saiyan eventually spotted the one life form that was left behind following the great calamity. Floating in the space of nothingness, which was all that remained of her world, he saw Videl curled up, with her face tucked into her knees and her eyes shut tightly against them, trying their best to hold back the tears that came streaming down her left cheek.

Her sobs and cries marked the passing of her world and, after seeing her form drift off into the endless horizon, the vision finally ended.

After seeing the entire sequence of events play out like a scene from a movie, Gohan's wide eyes slowly turned and landed on the blonde witch standing behind him. When he saw the mysterious girl glaring right back at him with her one red eye, the demi-Saiyan swallowed nervously and faced her completely.

With the memories of the vision still fresh in his mind, the teen knew the exact identity of the person he was now speaking with. He would have to be the world's biggest idiot to not know who it was.

"That… was your world, wasn't it?" the warrior whispered, stepping towards the phantom girl as she scowled right back at him. "When you lost the man that you loved… you sacrificed everything you had to try and get him back… friends… family… even your life. You fell to your knees and tortured yourself for decades… working yourself to the bone in order to gain the strength necessary to do what needed to be done. But just when you thought you would finally get to see him again… he was already gone… and there was no way for you to get him back." He then stopped in his tracks, his mind rewinding and replaying the events one last time. "In that world, I was defeated… and you went out to rescue me…"

After gazing down at the girl, the demi-Saiyan uttered the phantom's true name.

"Videl."

The blonde witch's eye narrowed even further upon the boy. When he took a step closer to her in an attempt to work away the gap between them, he saw the girl's glare on him harden and her fists clench. Taking that as a warning to keep his distance, Gohan held back for the time being and looked down at the teenager with a crestfallen expression.

Staring at her carefully, the boy glanced back in the direction the visions had previously been projected to him. After considering the images for a few moments, he quickly turned back to his visitor and began to speak again. "All those memories… they were from two different universes, weren't they? One where we all survived against Majin Buu and Frieza was brought back to life… and another where we were all absorbed by Majin Buu and you defeated him years later. You destroyed that previous universe and, if my guess is correct, moved on to another universe… and then another." He narrowed his eyes thoughtfully as he began figuring out what this meant. "For you to know all of these things... to have witnessed them and to know exactly when each of these events took place... you must have relived them a thousand times over and crossed countless dimensions to get where you are now. Your grief drove you into a state of rage... and you exerted all of the energy you had fighting... trying to make things right."

Staring the blonde square in the eye, Gohan took a few moments to gather his thoughts. Once he was certain he'd arrived at an answer, the demi-Saiyan furrowed his brow and fixed a hard glare upon the witch.

"Tell me... how many universes did you destroy before you came to this one?"

The one-eyed girl didn't say anything at first, choosing to remain completely silent. However, after meeting the demi-Saiyan's glare and matching it over the course of a few seconds, the blonde craned her head towards him and replied in a low voice.

"Enough."

Reflecting a sense of surprise and hurt, the young Saiyan warrior slowly held a hand out to the girl in a sincere gesture of compassion. "I saw all the pain and loneliness you had to go through... and I'm really sorry for all the suffering that you had to endure because of me." He looked her squarely in the eye when he said this next part. "Please... let me help you, Videl."

The girl remained silent again, her one eye reflecting a momentary balk and hesitation in her mental state. However, just as Gohan was reaching out to take her hand, with nothing but the best of intentions of helping the blonde, the phantom suddenly thrust her arm forward and slammed her palm into the teen's chest. The impact was immense, causing a dull thud to ring out that not only knocked the wind out of the Saiyan's lungs, but sent him to the ground. Dropping onto his back with a heavy 'oof', the teen then looked up with a start to see the blonde witch step forward and stand over him.

Glaring down at the stunned warrior, the phantom girl spoke, "You can't help me. There isn't a person alive that can help me. I know this, because I saw it with my own eye. In every single universe I've visited, no matter how hard you tried and no matter how hard you fought... Son Gohan was always destined to fail." When she saw the look of bewilderment flash across the demi-Saiyan's face, the blonde witch slowly raised her arms and held them out. As soon as she did, a series of shadows manifested around her, all of which then transformed into silhouettes of all shapes and sizes. From his position on the ground, Gohan saw two large, hulking aliens and a handful of humanoid figures gather around the blonde, all of whom had their glowing red eyes fixated upon him. Though he couldn't identify any of them on sight, even if he could see their clothing and skin, it was still an incredibly intimidating picture.

Knowing she had the thunderstruck Saiyan's full and undivided attention, the phantom Videl spoke one last time, "This is your destiny. These people you see standing before you... they are the monsters that you and your friends will eventually face. You can try and fight them all you like, and you might actually win... but sooner or later... one of them is going to kill you." The witch then began backing up into the crowd of ghosts, all of which moved forward as she began fading into the darkness. "The day that they do, just like what's happened thousands of times before... your friends will suffer and die... and your world will end."

Hearing these words loud and clear, a stricken Gohan gritted his teeth and sprang off of the floor with a yell. "No! I won't let it happen!" Just as he was dashing towards the retreating female, he suddenly felt several arms grab him from behind and pull him back. Recoiling in shock, the Saiyan looked behind him to see a series of black hands attached to a collection of wraithlike figures begin pulling him back. Shocked at the strength they possessed, the demi-Saiyan fought back, trying with all his might to break free. His ability to go Super Saiyan however was hampered by the foundations of his dream and, with every second that ticked by, he started to lose ground against the opposing forces. Yelling out in pain, he attempted to reach out for the fading blonde. "I'm not going to fail! Do you hear me, Videl?! I swear… no matter what anyone says or does… I will not fail! Not now… NOT EVER AGAIN! I will protect you, Zangya, Piccolo and everybody else! TO MY LAST BREATH IF I HAVE TO! I PROMISE!" His screams echoed across the surreal landscape, reverberating off of the invisible boundaries surrounding him.

Without warning, the army of phantom figures standing behind the blonde witch, each of whom were distinguishable from one another only by their size and outline, charged at the demi-Saiyan and struck out at him en masse. Covering up just in time with his arms, the teenage warrior managed to take their collection of blows, which impacted against him with a crack of thunder. The impact of the simultaneous hits was massive; with the force being so overwhelmingly powerful that it plowed Gohan into the arms holding him down and sent him flying back through the darkness of his nightmare.

Before he knew it, the stunned demi-Saiyan felt his body beginning to fall. Looking up through the blackness of the void and the haze of the attacks, he saw the Videl from another universe and the figures surrounding her fade away into the distance.

The teen gave one last yell of fright as he plummeted into the abyss below, shortly before a bright, white light engulfed him…

XXX

(Midnight)

Eyes flickering open, a bedridden and mentally shaken Gohan gave a light groan as his eyes adjusted to the light of his bedroom.

At least… he thought it was his bedroom.

Finding himself staring up at a pale white ceiling and a cluster of fluorescent lights, all of which had been switched off, the bewildered demi-Saiyan spent the next minute or so trying to figure out whether or not this world he was seeing was real. He felt life, electrical impulses, and odd sensations running up and down his body, letting him know that he was indeed conscious and able to comprehend what he was receiving through his senses.

However, after spending what felt like a decade wandering a surreal world, surrounded by illusions, sanity, madness, and fantasy, he found it quite difficult discerning if this was just another part of it. The truth soon revealed itself moments later when the previously comatose teenager looked down the length of his body and began taking in the sights. Aside from finding himself in a bed that was clearly in a hospital wing of some high-tech facility, the very first thing the demi-Saiyan saw the instant he fixed his gaze across the sheets, were all of his friends scattered around him.

To his left he saw Erasa, dressed in a set of cute pajamas, lying asleep atop one of the free beds on the far side, and Lime snoring away on the desk alongside him with the lamp turned on. Apparently the latter had fallen asleep doing homework and had refused to move from her station, even to get to a proper incline position, bless her heart. Judging from the pages lying underneath her head, she appeared to have been working on her calculus homework too.

Knowing that the processing parts of his brain were working just fine after working up the numbers, the dazed Gohan then looked over the rest of the room. He immediately spotted Piccolo meditating in the corner, sitting cross-legged on the floor with his eyes closed and was so wrapped up in his activity that he didn't even notice the teen had regained consciousness. Not wishing to disturb the Namekian, the demi-Saiyan continued his scan of the area and soon spotted on his right-hand side Videl lying against the bed beside him, her hand wrapped around his and Zangya perched on the windowsill behind her. Both girls were fast asleep and, despite her awkward position, the Hera was using the frame of the viewing platform as a comforter.

After marveling at the fact that many of his closest friends were in the same room with him and were standing guard by his bedside, so to speak, Gohan quickly looked down at Videl to see the girl shift across the sheets and let out a gentle sigh. Feeling her hand tighten around his, the young half-Saiyan soon realized that he was well and truly awake, and that this was no longer a dream.

Unbeknownst to him however, standing atop a lamppost across from the Capsule Corp main building in full view of his window, the same blonde witch with the eye patch that'd invaded his dream could be seen watching his room carefully from a distance. Narrowing her one good eye on the people inside and seeing the demi-Saiyan slowly regain consciousness, the inter-dimensional traveler, with her bell jingling on the night air and outfit tails waving on the breeze, then turned her gaze towards the starry sky above and, without a moment's hesitation, vanished in a flash of golden light.

Analyzing the condition of his body and the bits and bolts holding it together, he felt no pain, no fatigue, and no weakness. The heart virus was completely gone. In fact, after taking another quick look down his frame, the demi-Saiyan felt even stronger and better than ever.

When his mind eventually got around to working this out, the newly revived Gohan allowed a warm smile to cross his lips, at the same time he gently squeezed Videl's hand in his. Seeing her respond unconsciously and her beautiful face turn towards him, the Z-fighter soon thought back to the dreams he'd experienced and the visions he'd witnessed. Upon recalling the identity of the mysterious phantom and allowing her words to percolate in his mind, the boy frowned deeply and, upon looking ahead of him, permitted a look of absolute certainty and confidence to forge his expression.

"I won't let you down," Gohan thought assuredly as his gaze landed on his girlfriend sleeping alongside him. Running his thumb over the back of her hand and seeing a smile tug at her lips, a sense of serenity and peace formed upon his. "I promise."

After all, nothing was set in stone in this world. His fate was what he made for himself and not something that was decided by anyone.

Whether he would live up to that promise though, would have to wait until tomorrow.

(TO BE CONTINUED)

Author's Note: Well that was fun. Onward and upward I suppose.

Basically Kaiser has plans to create a human empire while using the earth as a flying fortress and killed Hasky to turn her into an android. I think that's a pretty accurate direction in where this is going.

And Gohan experiences his last nightmare before waking up from the heart virus. This sequence is interesting, since it reveals basically who the person haunting him is, and establishes the fact that Gohan has failed in every single one of his battles. This gives our hero an opportunity to grow and change his fate, so we'll see how he carries that out in the future.
The story acknowledges the fact that there are multiple universes in motion. Not just counting the ones where God Frieza, Bardock and Cell came from and the ones from the Dragonball Z: Multiverse comic, but also the canon universe, or a universe like it, which this alternate Videl apparently visited during the Revival of F arc and probably destroyed. We don't know that. All we know at this point is that she's an inter-dimensional God who has seen a lot of shit, and has now set her sights on this universe, and will test it to see if it will be worth her time.

I wonder how things will go from here.
The sun was warm and the sky was clear, and all across West City the roads and buildings were glistening like well polished jewels sitting on top of a mantelpiece. The damages that'd been inflicted to the city during the Hasky crisis weren't very visible anymore and the estate that served as the frontline for the entire conflict was also looking better than ever. Maybe it was because the workers had done a bang-up job at patching things up this time. Maybe it was the way the light was reflecting off of the planet's surface like glass. Or maybe it was because the mood had shifted drastically from the last few days.

Whatever the case was, this morning felt much different from any other that'd come and gone before, and the entire planet could feel it. When the glow from over the horizon eventually fell over Capsule Corp and illuminated the windows of the facility, the sensations of warmth and life rang the alarm clocks for every single person sleeping peacefully throughout the main building.

Groaning when the sun beams danced across her face like dust over a river, Videl sat up from the bed she was lying on and rubbed her eyes. Giving a very lioness like yawn, she then squeezed the hand of the boy lying on the bed next to her, just to check and make sure he was alright. However, when her grip ended up clutching nothing but air and the fabric of the bed and her fingers attempted to seek out the hand they were supposed to be joined with, a jolt of alarm suddenly rushed through her.

"Gohan?" Looking up towards the pillows with a start, the raven haired fighter saw that the comforter the demi-Saiyan was supposed to be lying on was empty. At first thinking this was some sort of an illusion and shaking her head to clear the airways, when she looked back, she saw that the spread was still empty and the indent in the sheets was real.

Springing to her feet, the baffled Videl gasped in shock, "Gohan!" Her exclamation drew the attention of the meditating Piccolo and roused the dozing Hera on the windowsill, both of whom looked over to see their human companion looking around and appearing distressed. "Gohan! Damn it… where are you?"

Lime, having previously been enjoying a Gohan-orientated dream, sat up from her place atop the desk with a piece of paper glued to her face, where she then turned to stare groggily at her schoolmate. "What's with all the noise?" the brown haired teen mumbled.

"Did something happen, V?" Erasa also asked, sitting up from her bed with her arms wrapped tightly around a pillow.

Looking around at her friends, the startled Videl then turned to fix her gaze upon Zangya. "He's gone."

Her statement had the Hera look at the teen in alarm. "What?"

Seeing her friend hop off the sill, the raven haired girl quickly turned and dashed across the room.
"Gohan! He's gone!" She ripped back the curtains of one of the chamber's cubicles and looked from corner to corner. "I… I don't know where he is."

Also expressing surprise at the announcement, the former guardian of earth took a moment to settle his thoughts and, dropping out of his meditative state, dragged himself to his feet. "Calm down, runt," Piccolo cut in, at the same time stepping away from his spot to watch the frazzled student continue searching the chamber. "No one else entered the room and there aren't any signs of a struggle, so it's safe to say he probably got up sometime in the middle of the night to stretch his legs. He couldn't have gone far."

Still, this didn't answer the question as to how the brat was able to slip away right under their noses. What? Did he pick up some sort of new stealth mode while he was in a coma?

"Right. A Super Saiyan who can teleport between dimensions and travel great distances faster than the speed of light, couldn't have gone far," Zangya replied sarcastically, brushing her hair back and throwing the Namekian an irritating smirk, "Might want to reassess your points there."

The former guardian glared back at the woman for her comment, "Cut the crap and help us out here, would you?"

Rolling her eyes, Zangya then began a very relaxed walk towards the door, at the same time Erasa and Lime finally got to their feet to join what was expected to be an interesting hunt. "Relax, green man. It's not like this is the most difficult problem to work out. Gohan's been unconscious for about ten days now, and has barely had any food, drink, or sunshine, so there are only a few places he could've gone. It's either: A, the bathroom, B, the kitchen, C, outside, or D, the gravity room. Unless you want to pick all of the above and try to multiply yourself, I'm guessing he's gone to make himself a sandwich so I'll start with B, the kitchen." She then exited the room, passing a still confounded and shaken Videl.

Quickly regaining her senses, the raven haired fighter decided to follow up on Zangya's suggestions and dashed out of the room after her. Lime and Erasa also gave pursuit with the latter not really caring that she was still dressed in her PJs. After shaking off the sardonic remarks of his second most casual sparring partner, a grumbling Piccolo also joined the four women on a hunt across the billion-zeni facility, deciding to carry it out at his own labored pace.

Before the morning shift had even begun to roll in, the hallways were already clamoring with the bodies of dotting youngsters, all of whom were trying to find the owner of another. Zangya, Videl, Lime, Erasa and Piccolo searched high and low, splitting up so that they could cover more ground in separate locations. One of them cracked down the stalls of the nearby bathrooms, not really caring it was the male toilets or not. Another one visited the kitchens, while paying particular attention to the several pantries that were built on station to feed the hundreds of employees and one very anger-prone Saiyan Prince. The third member of their group searched the indoor gardens, being sure to check every tree and furrow, while a fourth member of the team, just for the heck of it, went searching all of the rooms she came across, one after the other, alphabetically… or whatever was convenient.

The key here was process of elimination and, if fortune favored the intelligent, then it was the wisest of them that would find the demi-Saiyan first. It certainly wasn't going to be Erasa, as the dutiful blonde, bless her heart, had gone out of her way in her investigation to leave no stone unturned… literally.

Case in point, while she was searching the lounge room, the pajama wearing teenager thought it was a good idea to sequentially check underneath each of the room's incredibly expensive couch cushions. Noticing Tama was asleep on top of one of the place holders the girl carefully picked up the pillow and removed it, with Mr. Briefs’ cat still snoring peacefully across it.

Ignoring the kitten's wagging tail the bubbly teenager then peered into the couch, at the same time carefully holding the seat above her head. "You-hoo. Gohan? Are you there?"

Hey, as far as she knew he could've been anywhere. That was her logic anyway.

For the next twenty or so minutes the gang continued running about the facility, with the commotion even attracting the attention of Bulma Briefs. Stepping out of her room following a long and very comfortable sleep, she immediately noticed Lime running past her in a hurry, which snapped her out of her drowsy state and had the scientist stare after the girl in bewilderment. Before she could ask where the fire was at, the brown haired teen was gone, which prompted the woman to quickly follow after her out of curiosity.

As Piccolo looked around outside and Erasa turned her attention to the cafeteria, Videl moved her search to the training facilities built for the Saiyans of the establishment. Arriving in the familiar corridor of the gym department, the girl quickly jogged into the locker room, which she proceeded to search. Her investigation soon came to an end when she spotted Vegeta standing over by the GR door, leaning against the wall with his eyes closed and arms folded. Puzzled, the poster girl of Satan City approached him.

"Vegeta? What are you doing out here?" the girl asked.

Eyes cracking open, the prince grunted and nodded over his shoulder. "Take a guess."

Puzzled by his seemingly irate response, Videl jogged over to the viewing window to see what was going on. When she peered through, her eyes instantly lit up in astonishment when she saw Gohan, alive, well, and back on his feet, standing in the center of a ridiculously powerful gravity field, sparring with the company's training probes.

Darting through the glowing red air in a blur of motion, the half-Saiyan hero, dressed in a pair of training shoes and spandex blue shorts, dodged a series of powerful, highly concentrated beams sent flying his way by the spinning robots. His form flickered as he moved through the air at unheard of speeds, grinning to himself when he finally came within range of the probe floating at the highest point of the formation. When its sensors detected Gohan's approach, the orb-shaped robot fired another beam down at its evasive target, only for the hybrid to skillfully slip it and dart behind the probe. Cart-wheeling over in midair, the teenage warrior jabbed down with his fingers and hit the button on the machine's side, switching off the droid's weaponry and forcefully putting it in standby mode. The moment he did, he then went about doing the same to the rest of the training bots.

In record breaking time, the boy shot between the robots in a barely visible blur, effortlessly avoiding their attacks and striking their off switches one by one. He ended up moving so fast between the swarm of machines that every single one he ended up tapping wound up switched off at the exact same time. The moment he charged through the entire wave, he landed straight back down on ground level in a crouched position, eyes set ahead of him and a steeled look slapped across his face. When the wind finally settled from his light speed dash, the last of the probes beeped their final chorus before the entire room's lighting faded back to normal.

The sound of electronics and engines powering down signaled the end of the gravity simulation, allowing the half-Saiyan to rise up from the floor and face the ceiling without any strain on his person.

A sigh of relief soon escaped his lips as he felt the pings of his early morning session dissipate and looked down at his hands in thought. "Even after being out of it for several days, I didn't lose a single step." He then clenched his fists tightly. "Actually… I think I've gotten even stronger than before. Kai, I love my Saiyan genetics."

He loved his alien metabolism, he loved his adaptability, he loved his superhuman strength, speed and reflexes, he loved staying up for consecutive nights without any drawbacks, and he especially enjoyed those full moon nights when his body got all tingly and his-

"Gohan!"

Having completely missed the sound of the gravity room door opening and the intercom informing him that the chamber was being accessed, the demi-Saiyan turned around just in time to see a wide-awake Videl rushing over to meet him. His surprise quickly becoming replaced by delight at the sight of his girlfriend, Gohan faced the approaching teen and opened his arms just in time to catch the laughing fighter when she leapt at him without pause or hesitation.

The two embraced, with the former comatose patient spinning the love of his life about while he held her comfortably above the tiled floor. They both smiled and spent the next few minutes enjoying one another's company, with neither caring that one of them was half-naked and covered in sweat. After the spirit hazing ordeal they'd had to go through over the last ten days, neither one of them cared how the other person was dressed, appeared or smelled. They were just happy to see each other again.

Once Gohan set Videl to her feet and the two gazed into each other's eyes, the elated crime fighter then shook her head at him in incredulity. "Idiot. Why didn't you wake me up to let me know that you were alright?"

The boy chuckled, "Honestly, I was really tempted to. But you just looked so peaceful lying across my bed with the moonlight bouncing off of your cheeks that I just couldn't bring myself to wake you." He then grinned cheekily and looked over his shoulder in a very sly manner. "Plus… there was this other girl that I really needed to see across town, so I decided to-ow!" He was cut off when Videl punched him in the chest.

A frown remained across her lips as she half-scolded, half-humored him. "Don't spoil it, you spiky haired jackass. While I'm not sure about you, I'm still trying to come to terms with the fact that you're all better now. Just give me a few moments to catch my breath before you start throwing wise cracks my way," the girl stated, giving him a foul smirk before wrapping her arms around his neck. A loving gleam then appeared in her eye following her gesture, which then gave way to the raven haired firecracker leaning closer to her boyfriend and rising up on her toes. "Geez. You really know how to give your family and friends a hard time without even knowing it. Getting sick, spazzing out in the middle of class, and ending up unconscious in a hospital wing with round-the-clock doctors and nightmares for over a week… honestly, you scared us half to death."

Gohan, feeling his chest flutter at the look he saw in the girl's irises, beamed warmly, "Sorry for making you worry so much for me, Videl." He then reached over and tucked some stray hairs behind her ear. "After all the trouble you and the others had to go through over the past several days, I promise I won't let anything like this happen again." He then placed a hand over her cheek and caressed it soothingly. "The last thing I want is to cause you anymore pain."

Her stare shimmering with joy and relief, the teenager's complexion noticeably brightened, "If that's the case, then I'll work extra hard to make sure you keep your promise."

The demi-Saiyan laughed a little, "Hey. That's supposed to be my line."
Videl grinned playfully in response, "Bite me." The next thing she knew, both of them had closed the one inch distance between them and locked lips in a tender kiss. Closing their eyes the instant they made contact, both teenagers then began gently clawing at one another for extra purchase, with the raven haired beauty moving her arms further around the Saiyan's neck while her boyfriend secured his grip around her waist. The embrace was sweet and affectionate, with both expressing all their pent up emotions from the past ten days into that one gesture.

While the two of them continued to make out in the middle of the training room floor, over by the GR's blast-proof entrance, several more figures made their appearance on the scene. Stepping into view of the archway, a calm looking Zangya along with a previously frantic Erasa and Lime, made their presences known to the two warriors inside.

Panting from an obviously brisk jog, the brown haired country girl gasped. "Hey! Any luck finding him in he-oh?" It was then she spotted her two best friends embroiled in what could easily be identified as a public display of affection, despite the fact that they'd started out alone. However, after quickly grasping the fact that Gohan had successfully been found and was obviously doing alright, Lime took a moment to relax and breathed a heavy sigh of relief. "Never mind."

"Has he… been training this entire time?" Erasa asked, shooting an inquisitive glance across at Vegeta, who was still leaning up against the adjacent wall.

When the prince stood off of it, the group was also joined by the still drowsy, pajama-wearing Bulma, who came strolling into the room curious to find out what was going on. The Saiyan royal grunted at the blonde's innocent question, "I woke up over an hour ago to get some extra training in before breakfast. But the instant I walked into the room, I saw that it was already being occupied by the brat."

"That would be a yes, then?" Erasa responded dryly, looking on as both the gruff fighter and his wife ambled over to accompany them.

"I didn't bother disturbing him, since I wanted to see what he could do after being out of commission for over a week," Vegeta said, leaning into the doorframe with his shoulder to watch Gohan and Videl continue their private performance. "As I expected, he hasn't lost a single bit of his strength."

Lime nodded in understanding, "That's good to know." No way they could they have the strongest man in the world going slack and potentially putting all of them in mortal peril. That would be terrible.

Confused as to that little assessment, the lithe blonde standing in the middle regarded the demi-Saiyan with interest, "But… didn't Gohan just have a really bad heart attack? How is that possible?" By her understanding, anyone who suffered from cardiovascular failure of that degree would've been bedridden for weeks and practically crippled.

"He's a Saiyan… well… half-Saiyan, really. Their genetics allow every member of their race to adapt and gain strength from whatever kind of damage done to them, whether it's from a vicious beating or a deadly virus," Bulma informed, crossing her arms and smiling into the center of the GR. "Since the strain Gohan was infected with was so potent, his immune system has gotten a massive kick-start and energy boost. That means his resistance to bacterial and viral infections has increased tenfold."

It was this news that drew a sense of utter amazement from the two school girls and a curious look from Zangya, the latter of whom then smiled brightly before quickly turning her attention back to the reason why all of them had come here.
The next minute passed by at a snail's pace. In that time, every single person watching from the sidelines wondered to themselves whether or not the two love birds were ever going to separate from their little exhibit. The display becoming more passionate by the second as the pair's hands started to roam all over one another, a couple of the female audience members started to fidget uncomfortably, as seeing the two in such a state slowly began feeding the hormone overloaded group some rather inappropriate ideas. This was most apparent in Erasa and Lime, both of whom looked on enviously as their girlfriend finished making up for lost time with her boyfriend.

A few seconds later and the pair eventually separated from their tender clinch, with Gohan and Videl ending the engagement with a gasp and a look into their opposite's eyes. When they finally realized they weren't alone anymore, the pair's gazes quickly snapped towards the training room's entrance, where they saw most of their friends watching them intently from the sidelines. Noticing the offbeat expressions they were wearing, the pair separated from one another and grinned sheepishly in their direction.

"Oh, hey guys. Good morning," Gohan greeted, at the same time Videl ran her fingers through her hair and looked away in a very girlie, very bashful manner. "Check it out. I'm all better now."

"You don't waste any time, do you, stud?" Rubbing her tired eye out, a grinning Bulma then looked upon the boy proudly. "Looks like that cure for the heart virus we managed to hash out from the sample we got from Trunks seven years ago worked like a charm." She then nodded towards her former patient probingly. "How's your chest? Have you got any aches and pains anywhere?"

Propping his hands on his hips, the demi-Saiyan shook his head. "Nope. Body's as tight as a drum." He emphasized this with a quick knock to his chest. "Not a cramp, stitch or sore muscle to report."

"What about lightheadedness? Are you feeling faint?"

"Flight check…" Gohan then flicked his bang of hair back and tested his form's natural equilibrium, "Pilot's good… so is the plane." His little gesture drew amused giggles from Erasa and Lime, both from his playful puns and the boyish grin he threw them at the end. "It's alright, Bulma. I'm fine."

His answer had the blue-haired scientist nod in relief, "Excellent. That's just what I wanted to hear."

Skipping over to the demi-Saiyan while he expressed his appreciation to the world renowned inventor, Erasa skidded to a stop in front of the boy and beamed at him. Taking a moment to admire his chiseled chest and broad shoulders up close, the blonde then spoke in a cheerful and happy voice, "We're so glad to see you're doing alright, Gohan. Your mum, your brother… everyone was worried sick about you." Sparing a glance over at her best friend of many years to see her beam back in kind, the girl in the pajamas turned her attention back to her crush. At which stage she then slipped her hands behind her and swayed nervously on the spot. "And… so was I."

Nodding his acknowledgement to Erasa's concerns, the spiky haired fighter placed a hand on her shoulder and gripped it reassuringly. "I know. I sensed all of you while I was sleeping… and I could tell how hard it must've been sitting there at my bedside, making sure that I made it through every night." He then lowered his head meekly. "I don't know how I'll be able to repay you… or know if you'll ever be able to forgive me… but-" All of sudden, Gohan was cut off when the blonde in front of him stood up on her toes and pecked him on the cheek, which she immediately followed up by pulling his face around to meet her gaze.

Smile firmly in play, the beautiful, kind-hearted teen nodded to him in earnest, "Apology accepted." Before the boy could mount any sort of reply, she then gave him a big, welcoming hug, which he immediately returned to let her know how much it meant to him. Feeling his warm embrace envelop her like a blanket, Erasa sighed. "Great to have you back, nerd boy."

A chuckle followed the girl's teasing jab, "It's good to be back." When the teen finally released him, the adult hybrid was able to catch his breath. However, his moment of relief was to be short-lived, as Lime shoved her way to the front and, without warning, punched the Z-fighter squarely in the stomach. The unexpected blow damn near had Gohan double over and crash to his knees, as half the air in his body was literally knocked out of his lungs. Gasping and clutching the knuckle imprint in his abs, the Saiyan warrior then looked up to see the brown haired country girl glaring right at him. He grinned sheepishly when he noticed how mad she was. "Heh... hey, Lime."

"Don't you 'hey Lime' me, mister," the childhood friend scowled, before blamefully pointing at the dashing martial artist. "You've got a lot of nerve taking off like that and not letting us know you were cured. The five of us were looking all over the place for you."

Gohan, wincing at the volume in her voice, scratched the back of his head in his typical Son manner, "Sorry about that."

Lime grunted and folded her arms over her chest, "Unlike some of the other guys here, I'm not as forgiving as Videl and Erasa when it comes to stuff like this. People who suddenly get up and run away after being in serious, critical condition don't get a simple flyby from me. Tell me... how do you plan to make up for all the worry and trouble you've caused us over the last ten days?"

Wheezing slightly as he straightened up, the Saiyan then forced out another, weak smile, "Would you... like me to go over your math and literacy homework... and help you get started on your Ancient History report?"

Lime didn't say anything for the next few seconds as she tapped her foot against the tiled floor and carefully considered the teen's proposal of assistance. Taking into account all of the work she'd taken on over the past couple of weeks from school and the difficulty of the numeracy material she'd encountered, the brown haired farm girl then cracked a bright smile and extended her hand gleefully. "Deal." When Gohan reached out with his to take it, he suddenly had to brace himself when the girl ducked in and gave him a hug instead. Laughing a little at how enthusiastic she was about it, the demi-Saiyan felt both assurance and joy, as he knew that everything was going to be alright.

For some reason he felt a whole lot lighter. It was like a week's worth of stress and woes had been lifted clear off of his shoulders with the girls' affectionate gestures.

After all, he knew better than anyone that Lime didn't mean what she said earlier. Though she appeared mad on the surface, in reality it was just her acting out of worry for his health and safety. To put it in simple terms, she was just as relieved as everybody else that he was alright. She just had a different way of showing it.

When Lime eventually released the boy from her hold and stepped away, Gohan's gaze was then drawn towards his right due to the feeling of another set of eyes locked onto him. He then felt his insides jump a little when he saw Zangya was also staring at him intently, a serious glare drawn across her face and her arms crossed. Considering he was already receiving the usual thousand yard stare from Vegeta and had been ceremoniously punched in the solar plexus by Lime, he'd hate to think what the Hera would do to him if she was in any way pissed off.

The Saiyan held his ground, standing before the orange haired girl's ire with his arms at his sides and a pleasant look on his face. "I guess it's your turn to scold me for my insensitivity, huh?" He then sighed and closed his eyes, raising his hands ever so slightly. "Go ahead. Lay it on me. Just keep all the blows above the belt and below the hair line. It parts funny when it gets lumps."
Seeing the teen open up to her, Zangya then had a smile spread across her lips as a chuckle then escaped her lips. "Really? Keep it above the belt? That leaves out all the fun stuff." When the demi-Saiyan cracked an eye open to look across at her, the Hera then walked closer to him. "Don't worry, spike. I'm not going to beat you up." She then stopped a few feet in front of the teen and looked him right in the eye. "I'm just glad to see you're alive again. Not to mention you're looking fitter than ever."

"Well, it's a good thing I'm feeling fitter than ever too. It's a set," Gohan said, scratching his cheek with his finger and grinning nervously at the woman. "That's what I was able to figure out over the last hour, at least."

Returning his remarks with a fond look, Zangya then took a moment to check him out. Shamelessly admiring his sweat-covered body, from his big arms, to his broad chest and his tasty looking abs, the orange haired demon had to take a deep breath to maintain her composure. Clearing her throat when her breath hitched, the woman then flashed the barely dressed teen a delightful grin, "It's always good to get out and stretch your legs after being a vegetable for a certain period of time."

She then tilted her head at the Z-fighter curiously. "Speaking of which, did you happen to do any lifting while you were jumping around down here? Because you look great."

No. Better than great! He looked like a bona fide, professional athlete advertising the latest in men's undergarments.

It was hot.

Gohan then looked around the room they were in and shrugged, "Does over a thousand times gravity count? If it does… then yes." When he saw the woman's smile grow at his answer, the teen then stepped towards her and his gaze warmed. "Though I didn't see what was happening while I was unconscious, I was still able to feel everything that was going on around the place. You guys must've gone through hell to make sure that I was alright." He then nodded to the Hera gratefully. "Thanks for looking out for me, Zangya. I owe you everything."

Initially the Hera looked as though she was going to take the boy's compliments and words of appreciation calmly and collectedly, like she always did. However, with all the crap that'd gone on in the last ten days, combined with the teen's smile bombarding her at close range, Zangya couldn't stand it anymore. With a deep shade of red appearing in her cheeks, which prompted her to shake her head in frustration, the Z-fighter had had enough.

"Fuck it. Come here." Without even taking a moment to think about it, the orange haired beauty grabbed Gohan by the shoulders, pulled him in, and gave him a searing kiss right on the mouth.

It happened so fast that Gohan didn't even have time to gasp. The stunning sucker punch to the face had the Saiyan recipient freeze up in shock, as what felt like an electric current shot right through his body, leaving him standing there with a thunderstruck expression slapped across his mug and his back as stiff as a board. Feeling the woman's arms tighten around him as one hand moved to tangle with his hair while the other remained behind his neck and shoulder, the teen attempted to figure out why this was happening and how things suddenly ended up like this. But as Zangya deepened the kiss, all his thoughts on the matter were effectively dispelled and replaced by the unmistakable sensation of enjoyment.

The rest of the group though had different reactions.

Videl and Lime reacted in the typical gob-smacked manner, their jaws dropping and shoulders slumping in utter disbelief. Though they figured the alien woman definitely held a strong fondness for the teen hero, never in their young lives did they expect the female warrior to act on them so suddenly… and in front of the rest of their group no less. The result was shocking enough to put their heartbeats on hold and stop their breathing for a full minute.
The only exception to the group of beautiful girls currently gathered in that chamber who didn't act like the world was falling apart around them was Erasa. Though the reporter in training was initially stunted like the rest of her companions, the blonde, acting on her journalistic instincts, was quick to recover from her alarmed state, grin cheekily, pull out her smart phone, and snap a couple of pictures.

For documentary purposes, of course.

Dispelling her surprise at her own volition, Bulma, scratching the top of her head, allowed a wide smile to appear as she stood back and enjoyed the sight of Gohan's friends gaping at their boyfriend like a school of guppies. The only person who didn't seem remotely shocked by this development was Vegeta, with the prince merely looking away and exhaling in boredom.

Obviously the man had been expecting this event for some time now, which was why he appeared even more frustrated at how flabbergasted everyone was acting as opposed to incredulous.

After Zangya was done giving the half conscious Gohan mouth-to-mouth resuscitation, the woman slowly broke away from the teen and spent the next few seconds catching her breath. Once her body fully registered to the pounding in her chest, the fuzzy feeling in her stomach and the warm, pleasant glow radiating from her face, the Hera then rested her arms over the boy's shoulders and whispered, "You won't believe how long I've wanted to do that with you."

Gohan was, to put it in layman's terms, speechless. "Uh… guh…?" Those were pretty much the only two discernible sounds to leave his mouth.

Giggling at the baffled expression on her friend's face, Zangya flicked her hair around and playfully poked the boy on the nose. "What's the matter, Gohan? Alien-chick caught your tongue? Because it sure as hell felt like I did."

Biting down nervously at the woman's remarks as blood rushed to his face, the demi-Saiyan cleared his throat and smiled, "Well, umm… you could say that…" He then laughed a little at the end, making a sound that was a cross between pleased and terrified. "Then again, I probably may have swallowed it by accident… among a few other things."

Honestly, what was going on right now? Sure he knew Erasa and Kana had a thing for him, even though they were well aware of the fact that he and Videl was already a couple. It didn't even occur to the Saiyan that Zangya was also into him… at least, not in a profound sense.

This was probably because he was so preoccupied with not only building a relationship with Videl, but also working out a solution to compliment Erasa's feelings and dealing with the various conflicts that extended beyond his social calendar that he was unable to respond to other matters accordingly.

Well, sure, in his dreams he may have fantasized and teased the idea once… twice… several dozen times over a span of a couple of years, but he always chalked these occurrences up to growing pains and hormonal fluctuations. Even though the two of them got along with each other like best friends, spent most of their free time with one another, trained with each other, complimented each other, and lived in the same home across from the other's bedroom, that didn't mean any feelings could've developed between him and-

…

Stopping his train of thought on that little tidbit of information, Gohan quickly figured out how things ended up the way they had.
Memories of his talk with the not so delicate Vegeta and the wisdom given to him in confidence by the far more compassionate Aphrodite slowly began to return to him one chapter at a time. Once they did, the teen soon came to understand how deep this whole thing actually went.

He then swallowed anxiously, as he figured that he too had a similar connection and fondness for the Hera.

Seeing the boy's mind working like clockwork behind his startled gaze, Zangya giggled in amusement and tilted her head at the teen fondly. "It's funny, isn't it? Ever since you and I became best friends, the thought that I'd ever end up falling in love with you never crossed my mind. Since you were just a scrappy young kid and I was a former space mercenary on the path to redemption, the idea that I'd wind up forming a bond with someone like you was just some whacked-up pipedream." At that, her expression deepened and her gaze on the boy strengthened. "But it seems like that's no longer the case."

Taken aback by the woman's words and the look that she threw him, Gohan remained standing in place, staring back at her in surprise. Sensing the warmth and sincerity in her remarks, the teen felt his chest swell as he was effectively overwhelmed and disarmed by a tidal wave of emotions crashing down on him at once. When his mind was finally able to work out the key segments of information needed for him to fully grasp what she was saying, all he could do was take a deep breath and whisper, "Zangya…"

The Hera, pressing home her advantage, made sure that her next words rang clear and true with the man of her dreams. "I know this may seem a bit sudden for you… but… I just wanted to let you know how I really felt. Besides, since you already have Videl and the other girls competing for your heart…" She then beamed brilliantly at the teen, "What's one more?"

Hearing this little point of fact from the alien female he regarded as his closest friend, confidant and partner in crime, the teen then allowed a smile to cross his lips as a warm glow to fill his own face. "Hey, I-"

"WAIT JUST A DAMN SECOND HERE!" a loud scream suddenly bounced off of the walls, scaring the daylights out of the two warriors and drawing their gazes over to Videl, who they saw was staring at them with a red face and wide eyes. Having obviously recovered from her shock ahead of Lime and restarting her train of thought, it was now becoming glaringly apparent that she was in the middle of a ridiculous freak-out. "Where in the world did this come from?! Huh?! Who gave you permission to kiss Gohan?!

Blinking in confusion, Zangya slowly developed an intrigued gleam in her eye and, with a cheeky grin coming into play, wrapped her arms around the demi-Saiyan's neck, and clung to him possessively. "Come on, Videl. It's not that bad." She added to this by rubbing her cheek against the confused Saiyan's face affectionately, all in an effort to tease her friend. "All I was doing was letting off some steam and confessing my love for him. There's no reason for you to get all bent out of shape over something like this."

"Only if the person making the confession decides to make out with him first!" the raven haired fighter continued shouting, all the while her two girl friends and a couple of the other people behind her were grinning in amusement. Stomping up to the Hera, the human fighter then jabbed a finger at her in a lecturing manner, "Kissing comes after the confession, not the other way around!"

To the other people listening in on the conversation, this seemed like something that would be the least of her concerns.

"Says the person who made hers on the first date several days after they kissed," Zangya retorted with a persistent, irritating smile.

"That's because we were in a very delicate and emotional stage in our relationship! We couldn't help it!" the flustered teen attempted to argue, yet failed miserably. "Plus it was during a time we were all recovering from a really tough battle!"

"Yeah? Well... so is this."

Becoming a little bit concerned, Gohan raised a hand to intervene, "Uh, girls?"

Growling as her cheeks glowed a hot red, Videl then grabbed hold of Gohan's arm and began shaking him, along with the Hera who was still firmly attached to him. "That doesn't matter!" the girl half-whined, half-cried. "As his partner and girlfriend, I simply can't accept this!"

While the demi-Saiyan's head was rattled from side to side, the highly amused Hera continued grinning like a Cheshire cat. "Why not? Gohan doesn't belong to you. In fact, he doesn't belong to anyone. He has the right to do whatever he wants, same as the rest of us." She then giggled and latched on even tighter to the boy in question, who was so besieged by what was happening that all he could do was panic and try to keep his head out of the line of fire.

Gohan's face then lit up like a thermometer when he felt Zangya hug him even more so. "Uhh... lady parts... touching places..." These were the only intelligent things he could say in regards to this crisis.

The two female warriors continued to ignore him.

"Besides, considering what's at stake here, I wouldn't mind messing around with you and the other girls if it means having a piece of him." Zangya then leaned towards the raven haired girl, giving the baffled teen a mischievous smile. "Why don't we take a few pages out of Kana's book and... 'explore' our options a little? What do you think?"

Blushing to the roots of her hair at the rather dirty comment, Videl gulped and leaned away from the alien girl, who was now coming in a little too close for her liking. "H-Huh?"

Zangya, deciding to take advantage of the situation, then winked at the stunned teenager playfully, "Hey, if it makes you feel any better, I think you're pretty cute too, V-chan."

Like the wire on a guitar string, the chord inside Videl's head representing the elements of sanity and restraint finally snapped, compelling the fighter from Satan City into immediate action. "THAT'S IT!" She then took a swing at the grinning Hera, who effortlessly dodged the punch and began a long and very joyous run around the room. The frustrated and embarrassed Videl, who was unable to do anything about the redness in her face, then started a merry chase of the orange haired woman, who merely laughed and cackled at the girl's efforts as the two of them proceeded to run laps around Gohan's position. "When I get a hold of you, I'm going to shave off both your eyebrows and mop the floor with your hair, you perverted, alien, demon-girl!"

"Whatever floats your boat," Zangya sang back. She was so confident in her ability to stay out of reach of the girl's terrifying fists that she was practically skipping as she ran, which only served to infuriate her friend even further. "Oh, Videl. I just love the way your skin sparkles when you sweat!"

"Shut up and stop running!"

"Make me!"
While Gohan had a little laugh at the odd display of bickering, over by the rest of the group, Erasa and Lime were watching the scene play out with great interest and amusement. Smiling away as the performance ticked on, the pair was then approached by the intently observing Bulma, who slid up alongside the country girl and whispered cheekily into her ear.

"I bet you can't wait for him to come around, huh?"

A sly grin formed across Lime's lips at the impish question. "Oh my Kai, you don't even know," she whispered in a mischievous and shameless manner. It was only a few seconds after she uttered her response that the brown haired teen realized what she'd just admitted and, looking up with a start, turned to Bulma with her hands over her mouth. "No, wait, I didn't say that! That's not what I meant!"

Laughing along with Erasa, the president of Capsule Corp looked across at Gohan and, after seeing Zangya and Videl lap him again, spoke up loud enough for him to hear. "Between the frisky tomboy, the childhood friend, the blonde bombshell, the hot demon girl with the long hair, and the cute alien traveler that glows in the dark, you've got a pretty nice harem, kid." She then winked at the demi-Saiyan, "I'm so jealous."

When Gohan chuckled nervously and rubbed the back of his head, a still present Vegeta groaned and looked away.

"Ugh. Give me a break," the Saiyan prince grumbled in annoyance.

And so the antics of the group opened up the gates to a brand new day, setting the stage for many more things to come. By the time the Z-fighters got around to stopping Videl from potentially maiming Zangya for her teasing jabs and Gohan was able to settle things between the pair, Piccolo, Kana and Paprika finally rocked up to the scene to join in on the festivities. After seeing Gohan was back on his feet and doing just fine, each of the newcomers that'd arrived at the GR walked over to express their relief and share in the celebrations, saying they were glad to see their friend was alright. This really only applied to the Seirei and the Namekian, the two of them hugging and patting him on the back respectively, whereas the boy's Mekyan rival merely nodded to him in a show of momentary respect.

In fact, the former of the trio was so happy to see Gohan was up and about that the moment she stepped into view and saw him speaking with Videl and Zangya, she practically threw herself at the boy.

"GOHAN-KUN!" the Seirei practically squealed, teleporting directly in front of her crush and knocking him flat onto the ground. The demi-Saiyan balked in bewilderment as the girl rubbed her cheek into his, nuzzling him with the affection only an excitable alien like her could express. "You're awake! You're awake! I'm so happy!"

Gasping under the woman's rather explosive gestures, the demi-Saiyan chuckled and placed his hands against her shoulders, "Th-That's great, Kana. I'm... really happy to see you too." He did his best not to blush at how close the woman was, since she was practically lying on top of him, but there were only so many things he could do at once.

Acting like a cat, the glowing haired woman relinquished her arms from around the teen's neck and beamed at the boy with a sparkle in her eyes, "So, so? Are you feeling all better now? Is the heart virus completely gone?"

"It definitely feels like it, yeah."
"Sweet." Hair flickering behind her like a flame, the excitable alien giggled and straddled the boy's waist, all the while completely ignoring the surprised looks on the rest of the gang's faces. "We really need to do something to make up for lost time. Wanna go out to Nimbus 5 or Zalu 1 to celebrate your recovery? My treat."

Hearing her spitfire question loud and clear, Gohan stared back at the girl nervously and spoke, "That would be awesome, Kana. But… I think… going up into space to party at an alien nightclub after just recovering from a virus might be a little too much for me right now. Maybe… next weekend or something?"

Deflating a little at the teen's response, Kana then exhaled and gave the boy a sincere look in kind, "Oh. Okay then." She then levitated off of the spiky haired warrior, while simultaneously helping him to his feet. "Given your race's biology, you're probably still a little winded from your ordeal. Better let you catch your breath first before doing anything too extreme. After all, you are an earthing before anything else."

"Yeah. It's a really nice thought though, Kana. I'll be sure to let you know the next time I'm available." It was then the cheerful alien once again caught him by surprise by playfully wrapping her arms around his neck and hanging off of him like a balloon, drawing a lighthearted chuckle from the teen.

Once all the commotion and talk over the teen's return to form had died down, the group soon retired from the Gravity Room floor and pulled into the dining hall for breakfast. Though Gohan took a couple of extra minutes to get to the rendezvous point due to an overwhelming need for a shower, all the members of the Son and Brief families soon found themselves sitting at the dining table, surrounded by their comrades and best friends, and sharing a meal together under the same roof. Mrs. Briefs even went to the trouble of cooking up something really special for her domicile's guests, in honor of this wondrous occasion. The Saiyans at the table certainly enjoyed the pancakes, waffles and the feast of egg based foods, which came to them by the truckload.

Needless to say, it was the best breakfast any of them could've asked for, and Gohan was glad to be able to share it with all the people that he treasured most in the world.

OOO

(Meanwhile)

High up in space, in an area well outside of earth's orbit, Halley's Comet could be seen drifting through the vacuum along its predestined course. Having remained completely undisturbed in its short orbital path of the Solar System, the astronomical object cut across the blackness like a brilliant knife sent by the Kais, leaving a trail of ice, rock and space dust with every parsec it managed to cover.

Seemingly acting as nothing more than one of the many pieces of debris blasting across the cosmos, it continued on its route between planets unhindered; with its ultimate destination unknown.

However, just as it was well on its way to making its next orbital pass, a shadowy figure from a distant world suddenly teleported directly into the giant rock's path. Revealing herself to be none other than Alter-Videl, the blonde witch from a now extinct universe, complete with oversized hat, eye patch, and black, skimpy, one-piece suit, the diminutive humanoid then summoned a large blue staff from out of nowhere, pointed it towards the approaching ball of rock and, without any effort whatsoever, stopped its flight with a psychic push. The comet slowed its course before stopping altogether, along with the debris floating around its hot, glowing form.
Scrutinizing the ball of fire and ice carefully, the one-eyed witch then narrowed her gaze upon its surface and, after sparing a curious glance to another part of the Solar System, quickly turned it back to the comet.

It was at that moment a bright glow began emanating from her eye as she visually began deconstructing the comet, right down to its very core. Upon several seconds of scanning the piece of debris, when her piercing red eye finally arrived at the flying object's heart, she found the very entity that she'd been searching for.

Sprawled out between the icicles and walls of the impenetrable diamond prison, Alter-Videl saw the unmistakable, eerie silhouette of a massive, muscular creature of ancient origins with grey, ivory skin, a long tail, claws, and bones protruding from several parts of its hulking body. Furthermore, on top of having a length of ghostly white hair hanging behind it, through the shadows of its face, the teenage phantom saw its eyes shoot open and stare right back at her, seemingly detecting her presence and revealing a pair of hollow, blood red eyes.

These weren't just the eyes of a monstrous animal. They were the eyes of raw, unbridled hatred, which burned hotter than the brightest quasar in reality.

The glow in her iris fading, the one-eyed witch frowned deeply at the monster now floating in her grasp. "The power contained inside this prison is far greater than any other element in existence; the embodiment of both rage and destruction. Not even the Gods of this world could completely destroy the entity sealed within this crystalline shell." Upon uttering these words, a very dark thought then crossed her mind, prompting an evil smirk to appear across her lips. "Let's put it to the test."

Through use of her blue staff, the one-eyed Alter-Videl conjured up a thick mist, which she manipulated with her lance and directed to the area directly alongside her. A split second later, the blonde in the skimpy suit created an exact duplicate of the comet she was now keeping at bay, with the same weight, girth, atomic composition and appearance to its predecessor.

Since she knew Whis's powers like the back of her hand, Videl knew exactly how to fool him and take advantage of his weaknesses. Using the same skills he taught her in her previous universe, she could effortlessly block his Divination abilities and put up an impenetrable cloak to her actions. This meant that even with his seemingly unlimited foresight, he wouldn't be able to tell that the comet containing the most powerful monster in existence had been rerouted.

As soon as the enchantress had finished creating the dummy object, the foreign fighter then floated out of the copy's way and sent the doppelganger meteor rocketing along Halley's previous course. Once the decoy had been set, she then turned her attention back to the original comet, which she continued to admire from a safe distance.

Her one eye then twinkled with obvious excitement, "You may stand against me, you may defy me, you may try to fight me… but in the end, Gohan… all of your efforts will lead you to one inevitable outcome… the complete and total destruction of your universe." She then brandished the giant rock like it was her greatest asset. "This beast will herald the end of this world, carrying my swift and terrible sword to every corner of the cosmos. Then, when the dust finally settles, the only thing living in this world… will be darkness." With one last inspection of the comet's specs, the floating woman then pointed her spear in another direction and sent the ball of fire hurtling towards the distant horizon. As she watched the glowing object fade away into the distance, her dark smile widened considerably. "Death is the fate of all things that exist in this reality… and it will be I, Orthros, who will guide its merciful hand across the eternal plains of creation."

One way or another, this world was going to meet its end, and the monster she'd just sent towards the earth was going to make it happen. However, it wouldn't be a quick ceremony. The creature would bring death to all, one planet at a time, and there wasn't a single person in the universe that could stop it once it was unleashed…

Not even her.

After seeing the comet vanish along its assigned path, which would bring it into direct contact with the earth and deposit its lethal cargo gently upon its surface, the Videl from an alternate universe, Orthros, then turned her sights to another part of space. When her eye locked onto the stars hanging beyond her reach, a smirk once again spread across her lips.

"Let's see what happens from here."

Then, without a second thought, she vanished in a flash of blue light, teleporting to parts unknown.

As of this moment, her plan to upset the balance of this world had been set in motion.

XXX

(Two weeks later)

Timetables and schedules restored to their original settings, the Z-fighters quickly returned to the lives that they'd left behind in the days of the chaos surrounding their half-Saiyan compatriot. Though tensions and stress had been high over the course of that long week and a bit, things quickly calmed down for the fighting members of the troop, allowing all of them to go back to whatever it was they did best. You know… when they weren't saving the world from evil monsters and everything.

After celebrating Gohan's recovery, Kana returned to her star system to carry out her business as an interstellar negotiator, promising to visit the group again. Since she had such strong ties to the half-Saiyan hero of earth, there was no way they were going to lose her so easily.

While the Briefs family went back to dealing with their multi-billion-dollar corporation, Vegeta predictably went back to the Gravity Room, which was basically his second home. Feeling he was falling behind at an incredibly fast pace, the man was now more determined than ever to push himself to the same level that Gohan and Zangya had both reached. Knowing that a third form of Super Saiyan existed and that even his arch rival had managed to achieve it in his time spent in Otherworld, the prince was positive that he could reach it as well. That meant cranking up the training room to its highest settings possible and abusing the fuck out of his body to get the necessary results to achieving that strength. However, after seeing the trouble his rival's son had to go through pushing himself to accomplish that state, the man knew he had to find some other form of outlet to get there in his own way.

Gohan accomplished his through a combination of both rage and an alternative power source, while the teen's father, following his boy's example, had primal instincts and good, old-fashioned perseverance on his side. Based on that history of success, Vegeta reasoned with himself that if he was able to reach the first level of Super Saiyan his own way, then what was stopping him from finding a different route to gaining Super Saiyan 3?

A Saiyan's power was limitless, as far as he was concerned. That all depended on how much one could achieve in their lifetime.

With Vegeta spending most of his hours toiling away doing continuous pushups and situps, Piccolo was back up on the Lookout, switching times between meditating, giving lessons to the new guardian of earth, and doing some planet watching just like the good old days. He tried testing out his advanced hearing by narrowing down the voices of all the normal people on the surface of his home world. But since there were so many families and local groups living in each of the many community pockets, and they all pretty much had the same ki signature as the next person, the man always found this task of focusing in on each individual to be a bit of a chore.

At least it gave him something to do when not stopping by Gohan's place for a visit.

Speaking of which, Chi-Chi, pleased to have all her children back under one roof and in one piece, was now going to great lengths to make sure that her oldest son was doing alright. Even though Bulma tested Gohan to be completely free of the heart virus strain, the mother, acting on fierce parental instincts, still felt the need to make sure that the demi-Saiyan was comfortable at home and had all the resources necessary to achieving a full recovery. Though at times it did feel like she was acting like one of her children had the flu and was going overboard with her treatments, nobody wanted to argue against her about it. After all, her chicken soups and herbal teas were amazing, and Gohan, Goten, and Zangya had nothing to complain about.

Aside from getting back to school about two weeks behind on work, Gohan was quickly able to make up for his absence in class. Though there were many apologies he needed to make to his friends and to the members on his swimming team, he was still able to get all of his affairs in order just in time for the competitions. He even made good on his promise to help Lime with her homework, which she was having quite a bit of trouble with. Furthermore, whenever he was not out in Satan City for school related purposes, he was back at home, training with his younger brother and his best friend, both of whom were glad to have him around again.

On this particular occasion, in the middle of the two week period, the residents had decided to live it up the only way they knew how.

A large explosion rocked the countryside surrounding the Son Household, sending a blast of dust high into the air and signaling the collision of the two strongest warriors on the planet. Their forms being thrown out of the cloud's radius, both Gohan and Zangya skidded to a halt, digging their feet into the ground to cut off their momentum. The instant they did, both warriors revealed to the world their ruined, dirt covered uniforms and their forms bathed in the glows of their respective transformations.

While Gohan had achieved a fully controlled Super Saiyan 2 state, his spiky golden hair waving above him and blue electricity running up and down his body, Zangya had gone for her first Super Hera transformation. Their auras gone due to the simultaneously hits they'd managed to land on one another, this left both warriors in a neutral state that allowed them to better hold their forms without exerting any excess energy. Those instances were reserved solely for when they needed either a boost in strength or speed in order to catch their opponents off guard. Nevertheless, both fighters looked as equally impressive as the other in their powered-up states and they weren't in the least bit afraid of showing it.

The only difference here was their overall difference in power, which quickly became apparent when the panting Hera acknowledged her opponent's strength with a grin. "Damn. You really are one tough son of a bitch. Aren't you even the least bit tired?"

The teenager on the other end of the field chuckled. "Just give me a couple more minutes and a few more shots to the head. I'm sure I'll conk out eventually," he teased with a straight face. Even though he did his best to hide it, the Saiyan's competitive nature was unable to suppress the smugness that was reflected in his grin.

"Oh, ha-ha. Very funny, wise guy." Zangya then stood back up and dropped into a new fighting stance, arms held wide apart with her fingers curled into claws. "While you were lying around and wasting away under the sheets in the hospital wing, I was training with Vegeta to get my skills up and to work all the knots out of my system. Not to mention I've added a new transformation to my repertoire."

"So I've heard. I'm actually really curious to see what you can do with that new form of yours," Gohan replied in earnest, stepping forward with his right and taking a southpaw stance, which prompted his opponent to adjust the position of her hands once again. It'd once again reached a point where both fighters were now testing each other out from a distance, accommodating themselves for every time the other warrior changed styles. Since the two of them had such a diverse range of techniques under their belts, even the slightest alteration in combat performance meant a big difference in terms of the result. "Do you think you'll need it to bring this Super Saiyan down?"

Zangya smirked, "If push comes to shove, maybe I will. But don't count on in. I've still got a lot more tricks up my sleeve."

This drew a nod from the golden haired warrior. "Then let the best man or woman win." His aura then exploded around him with a storm of lightning, cracking the ground under the force and shaking the countryside for over a mile.

His power up prompting his foe to do the same, only with a green aura, the two fighters then leapt off the ground and charged their adversary down. The sky soon became filled with the telltale signs of miniature sonic explosions, as the super powered pair became locked in a heated exchange of punches and kicks; their attacks impacting their quarry in a vicious show of skill and power. Their shouts and yells were drowned out by the sheer volume of their clash, as the full force of their inhuman strength was thrown into the mix in an effort to outgun the opposition. Entire clouds were blown away and had chunks taken out of them when the force of the duo's blows eventually echoed up to them, rattling the sky for hundreds of kilometers in all directions.

And both weren't even fighting at full power.

While this concert was going on, down on ground level, Goten was getting his own workout. Wanting to tear away from the kitchen for a while and join in with the rest of her family, Chi-Chi quickly found herself in the process of giving her youngest the workout of a lifetime. This pretty much involved her chasing after her son and lashing out at him with her father's style of martial arts, her hands cutting through the air towards Goten in a terrifying blur of movement. The boy dodged all of her hits as best as he could, with shouts of fear leaving his lips as the woman struck at him with lightning fast shots.

Though she was nowhere near as strong as her sons in terms of power, the mother certainly made up for her shortcomings with aggressiveness, determination, and passion. On top of that, she was definitely scary when she was serious, a trait that all members of the Son family were intimately familiar with.

"Come on, Goten!" Chi-Chi practically screamed, throwing a kick at the boy and watching him dodge with a yelp. "Keep your eyes on me! You can't expect to fight your opponent if you can't tell what they're doing!" She then charged at the boy and lunged at him with a series of palm strikes, forcing the child to weave between them.

The demi-Saiyan panicked as he dodged, "Ah! B-But mum-! Whoa!" He then blocked a snap kick that came way too close for comfort, only to then parry a swift right chop. "Wait a second! I can't keep up! Let me just-AH!" He was then forced to block an axe kick that dropped straight down on top of him, the impact causing the ground beneath him to crack.
Holding her leg in place, the normally docile housewife then leered. "Not on your life, son! If you want to survive out there fighting alongside your brother, then you have to learn to control your strength and your energy! You can't just go around using it all at once! You have to be smart and fight using your head!" She then drew her leg back in and, spinning on the spot, snapped a kick into her boy's stomach. The blow landed hard and sent her son flying, where he then crash-landed on the grass several feet away. As soon as he was down, Chi-Chi took another offensive stance. "Feel and see what the opponent is doing, and counter. Don't just stand there and take everything thrown at you."

Struggling to get back up and coughing a few times, Goten then looked up with a whimper, "B-But… you're too strong when I'm like this. C-Can't I just use a tiny bit of energy?"

Chi-Chi responded with a firm shake of her head, "Uh-uh. This training is about getting you to use your senses without using your full strength. If an enemy manages to take away your powers, then you've got nothing. You only have your fighting skills to fall back on. Not only that, you have to learn to control your strength… especially when you're dealing with other people far weaker than you." She then widened her position and hardened her glare. "Besides, out here, I'm the master and you are the pupil. If I even feel your energy start to climb, I'll make sure you only get one serving of rice tonight. Got it?"

At this, the demi-Saiyan's eyes widened in horror. "W-What?! But mum-!"

Without another word, the woman dashed forward and leapt at her son with a yell, "No buts! It's time for round two!" She then dove at him with a kick, causing Goten to leap to the side in alarm. The child moved just in time to avoid her foot, which plunged into the earth and caused a loud shockwave to fill the air.

As the pair continued to fight it out, with Goten being forced to exchange shots with his mum using the bare minimum of strength, over by the house, the Ox King could be seen sitting on a lawn chair and watching the simultaneous shows unfold before him. This being one of the rare occasions he was able to see his daughter training, the man was also treated to the spectacle of his grandson and his best friend duking it out over the distant hills. Though he could only see the pair's battle in the form of an ongoing firework display of invisible explosions and sonic booms, the man could still feel the battle through the tremors in the earth and the clouds of dust rising over the mountains. He could also see his daughter and his other grandson sparring just a few feet in front of him, which put a big smile on his face as he sipped away at his enormous mug of coffee.

"Well done, Goten. Keep it up," the big man with the beard and glasses encouraged, before then turning to the horizon and calling out, "You too, Gohan!" He then chuckled when the response he got was the sound of his youngest grandson yelping and leaping out of reach of another of his mother's kicks. When he tried to fight back, the child paid for it with a palm strike to the forehead. "Ah, it's so nice to have a good, strong family. They don't take guff from no one," the Ox King remarked, at the same time laying his hands across his stomach comfortably.

It was same-old, same-old for the people living up in Mount Paozu, and things seemed to be coasting along for them just fine. Circumstances could also apply to the rest of the group. Kame Island was still in the same place it'd been left, with Krillin doing his best to raise his family, while also saving up for a place of their own, Yamcha was currently coping with the solitary existence of a bachelor in his penthouse outside of West City, and Tien, taking a page out of Goku's book, had decided to settle down in a new village outside of Central City with Launch, where he worked as the village leader and his friend Chiaotzu ran a martial arts school for youngsters.

This pretty much summed up the circumstances of everyone to date. However, despite the quick
That Wednesday, it was the day of the state swimming competition, and parents and students from schools all across the region had turned out to Orange Star High to view the festivities in person. With the bleachers and stands packed to the brim with excited spectators, every single man and woman was hyped up for the events to come. They’d already had the pleasure of watching the first two rounds of students for free style and were now waiting for the next group of kids to move up to their respective platforms. The students from the home team who’d turned out to support their side applauded as the next row of swimmers moved up to the block, with one particular group being the most vocal in their exclamations.

"Hey. Heads up, guys. It's Gohan's turn now," Touya said loudly, elbowing Sharpener in the side as he gestured towards the end of the fifty meter pool to their right.

The long haired sportsman, dressed in his usual material of singlet and jeans, grinned widely and clenched his fist in excitement, "Awesome. Our boy's totally going to roast those other pinheads standing alongside him. Their schools don't stand a chance." He then looked to his left and towards the rest of their group. "Alright, girls. The bases are lining up. It's time to show them what you've got."

While Erasa, Lime, Yukie and Sena were all more than willing to participate in the little scheme they'd cooked up, the only one out of their entourage who expressed a tiny bit of concern was Videl, and there was a good reason why. In the spur of the moment, all five of the girls had borrowed a set of cheerleading clothes from the club so that they could better support their friend during the main events of his competition. The outfits consisted of elasticized leotards with teasingly short skirts, and an orange and white color design to optimize the entire look. The school's logo was also clearly emblazoned on the front of the outfit, with the name Shooting Stars written in bold across the breast. It certainly was an eye catching ensemble, there was no doubt about that, but it was one that the most hardcore member of the group wasn't overly thrilled of being seen in.

This was made obvious by the nervous look on Videl's face and the shade of red radiating off of her cheeks. Shifting apprehensively in her seat, the raven haired girl murmured, "I… I'm not really sure about this."

"Oh, Vi. Stop being such a chicken," Erasa exclaimed in encouragement, grabbing the girl by the arm and, with the help of her friend Lime, hoisted their uneasy companion to her feet. "You're the one who said we should do something special for Gohan's big day."

"Y-Yeah. But… this isn't exactly what I had in mind," the crime fighter mumbled, at the same time gripping the front of her skirt and pulling it down. She could feel an uncomfortable draft up her legs due to the flimsy consistency of the dress, which had her shuffle about uncomfortably on the spot. "Look at me. I look like a friggin' idiot."

"No you don't," the blonde replied, waving her had dismissively at her friend's comment before patting the normally hardnosed teen on the back. "Trust me. You look great." She further encouraged her with a smile, which was as enchanting as it was heartwarming.

Her comment causing an even deeper shade of scarlet to spread over the fighter's face, Videl then looked up at her childhood friend with a blink, "Y-You think so?" She asked this while tucking some stray hair behind her ear.
"Of course," Erasa reaffirmed, at the same time picking up the four pompoms lying behind them. Handing two of them over to the shy Z-fighter, the incredibly cheerful teenager then giggled and waved them in front of her, "Besides... even if you did look funny in that skirt, then both the cheerleading squad and the rest of us would look pretty ridiculous as well, wouldn't you agree? That's the main rule when it comes to consistency." Erasa then took up the two glittering cheering tools and held them out with both hands. As soon as she did, she struck a very sailor-moon-like pose. "And even if you don't like them, you have to admit that these outfits are pretty damn comfortable."

Balking at her friend's remark, Videl then looked to her left to see Lime nod in agreement, "You can say that again. Though the skirt is a tad bit short for my liking, the waistlines on these leotards are really snug and stretchy." She added to this by placing her hands on her sides and moving her hips left and right. "The tailors they hired to design these really know how to make our school's extracurricular uniforms really well. I feel like a completely different person in these tights."

"Hmm... now that you mention it, I do feel pretty important and self-empowered," Yukie remarked, her doe's tail wagging behind her as the anthropomorphic girl beamed at the other teenagers sharing her row. "You know... metaphorically."

"And hey, as long as the five of us are dressed up like this, we may as well go out there and have some fun," Sena concurred, giving Lime a wide grin and earning one from her in kind. She then tugged on her skirt in a showy and playful manner, "If those featherbrains from Central City's Next Top Model can pull an exciting chant off the top of their heads, then the five of us should be able to do it too."

"Damn straight," Lime replied, at the same time bumping fists with the red haired girl.

Taking up their borrowed pompoms, the group of girls all stood side by side and prepared themselves for the whistle. Since a couple of them were completely new to the concept of cheering while dressed in the appropriate uniforms, they had to count on Erasa to lead them in the opening chorus. Though the boys planned on giving a holler for their local demi-Saiyan, they were more or less enjoying the sight of their gang's girls all dressed up and ready to dance. The pair of sportsmen even took a couple of moments to snap a few quick photos, much to the embarrassment of Videl and Sena respectively.

Once everyone was done ogling each other, they quickly turned their eyes back to the blocks, where they saw the next swimmers relinquish themselves of their towels and ready themselves for the event. As the line of eight swimmers flexed, stretched and warmed up for the hundred meter dash, Videl, Erasa and Lime couldn't help but do some gaping of their own when they saw Gohan step up to the front.

Though they'd seen the teen topless before on a number of occasions, including that time back at Capsule Corp, they'd never really seen him clad in a pair of swimming shorts while dripping with pre-competition perspiration. Standing there, under the light of the sun with a pair of goggles pulled over his forehead, the demi-Saiyan put on one hell of a presentation for the girls in the stands as he stood before the crowds, stretching his arms and back, and flexing his shoulders. While performing a basic arm stretch, with his right in the air and his left curled behind his neck, he gave everyone a wonderful view of his chiseled abs, chest and back, a sight that practically had Erasa's mouth watering with delight.

"Oh... wow," the blonde gasped, her unblinking gaze fixated squarely on the demi-Saiyan. She licked her lips for extra measure as they moved up and down the teen's ripped form.

"Is it just me... or does Gohan seem really, really hot today? More so than usual?" Lime asked, at the same time swallowing the saliva she had collected in her mouth. "Kami. Look at those deltoids."

"I sure can't wait to sink my teeth into that meat some day," Videl commented, earning a couple of odd glances from Sharpener and Touya at the tone the crime fighter used to say it. It was only a few seconds after her statement that the Z-fighter quickly realized what she'd just uttered on her own accord and, after blushing under the stares of her classmates, cleared her throat and nudged Erasa in the side. "Alright. Enough standing around and looking like idiots. It's time to rock this joint."

Down by the pool, Gohan had just finished limbering up with his opponents and was now taking position behind the block. Carefully slipping his goggles over his eyes, even though he didn't really need them on account of his experience, the attractive young male prepared for the call of the referee to move to the final starting point. However, just before he was getting ready for the instruction, a series of loud cheers and calls suddenly pulled his attention away from the swimming pool and his glistening reflection underneath. When he looked towards the stadium's stands moments later, the boy not only saw Sharpener and Touya cheering for him from their seats, but he saw all the girls of his group waving at him in the most bizarre display he'd ever seen.

"All together, now!" Erasa shouted, before leading the gang through a hilariously unsynchronized, unrehearsed chant that had the people in the audience closest to their row looking up at them in confusion, "Gohan, Gohan, he's our man! If he can't do it, no one can! Gee! Ooh! Haitch! An! He's the greatest of our band! GOOooo, Gohan!" When the group did a really clumsy jump at the end with their pompoms held out to the sides, the girls then gave a collective laugh as they tried to form letters with their arms to spell their friend's name.

When that failed, the girls simply waved.

"You've got this, man!" Sharpener called loudly above the clamor of the crowd. "Whatever you do, don't drown!"

"You can do it, Gohan!" Videl added at the end, being sure to stick her arm high into the air to signal her best wishes to her boyfriend. "The school's counting on you!"

Though the demi-Saiyan was initially stunned by the sight of Videl in a cheerleading uniform, considering it was the last thing he expected the tomboy to wear, he quickly shook his head, grinned back at the group, and waved back timidly. When he heard them all call out his name a second time, a comical sweat drop appeared on his forehead. "Thanks a lot guys. But... don't you think the outfits are a little bit much?" Granted, it did make the girls appear more alluring, he wasn't exactly sure whether this was the most appropriate setting to have them. Oh well. At least he knew they were out there supporting him.

A loud whistle then rang out, signaling all of the swimmers to step up to the block. Doing as instructed, Gohan and the rest of the row moved onto the diving platforms and stood straight up, readying themselves for the off. Upon assuming the positions, the referee then made the final call.

"Take your marks...!" Almost all at once, every single swimmer on the diving blocks bent over and took their stances. Then, a split second later, a loud, electronic 'beep' rang out, and all eight of them jumped.

The race was on!

A loud cheer rang out across the school the moment Videl and the others saw Gohan take the leap, performing a perfect dive into the water. After performing the standard dolphin kick in a hope of putting themselves ahead of the competition, every single one of the swimmers then surfaced at once and began to free style through the water to the other side. Hands chopping into the pool like knives as they raced towards the wall, the group of teenagers began picking up speed the further and further they went. The sprays they kicked up were tremendous and the amount of ground they covered was amazing, even for high school students. But while all the swimmers currently in motion demonstrated perfect form and superb technique, it was the demi-Saiyan of the bunch that stole the entire show.

Videl's group cried out in full support of their classmate as he shot down the swimming pool and pulled ahead of the pack, determined to finish in a leading position. Though they all knew that the boy was purposefully cutting down on speed to make the competition more entertaining, even with the minutest amount of effort, he was really tearing it up. The boy was like a torpedo; a man in his natural element that could make Poseidon himself blush with jealousy. It was only when he reached the other side seconds later that he really decided to cut loose and, after performing a spectacular flip and turn, he kicked off the wall like an arrow launched from a bow.

Gohan's kick through the water after the maneuver caused a noticeably small wave across the pool that nearly knocked a couple of the swimmers off course. However, it was still too small to be of any real notice to the officials, as the crowds watched the teenager leave every other swimmer in his mist. Under the cheers of his friends and the cries of his school mates, he barreled down the lane like an Olympic Champion. Several seconds later, his hands slammed into the wall, and the boy's head leapt out of the water with a gasp.

Flinging water over his body as he threw his head back and ripped off his goggles, the hybrid then turned his attention to the clock to get his time and place. When Gohan saw the rest of his competitors finish several seconds later, it was all the proof he needed that he'd won the leg, hands down. Turning to the stands, the victorious teenager grinned and raised his fist towards the sky, before then giving a spirited and well-earned, "Yatta!"

Sharpener, Touya, Videl and the rest of the misfits cheered loudly when they heard Gohan give his triumphant shout. This signaled for the rest of the crowd to follow, with all those who'd turned out to support Orange Star High's team giving a collective roar of congratulations, showcasing their elation at the young man's victory. Under the applause of the people and his companions, and at the instructions of the referee, the demi-Saiyan then clambered out of the pool with the rest of the swimmers. As soon as he was back on land, he then waved to the people and turned to where his friends were seated.

When the boy raised his fist towards them, Sharpener turned to Touya and banged his knuckles against his shoulder, "Did you see that? I told you he could do it."

"Well, it certainly sounded like you did," the blonde replied, having a laugh when his friend took a playful swing at his head, which he ducked. "Hey, man. Chill. I'm just kidding. No need to go throwing punches at me just because I was right."

"Pft. Sure you were. Now stand still, you bum," the man laughed as he grabbed the man by the forearm and drilled several good punches into the one spot in his shoulder for good measure. "How do you like that? Huh? Huh?" This ended in Sharpener nursing a painful yet good-natured bruise, a few seconds before he returned the boy's punishment with a jab of his own.

The sight of them scuffling had the nearby Yukie and Lime shake their heads and thing to themselves, "Men."
As the boys scuffled and the rest of the girls continued to cheer heartily for their friend, Videl, sharing a grin with Lime, then faced the edge of the pool where she could see Gohan standing. When his gaze fell upon her, she smiled warmly at him and he threw one right back.

It was funny. Seeing him positioned directly underneath the limelight, bathed in the adulation of his fans… the girl couldn't help but think to herself how much it suited him. Had he taken the credit for Cell's defeat and the many times he did save the world from an enemy's wrath, she didn't think anyone would've been able to doubt his strength. However, that was neither here nor there, and even receiving credit for small victories such as this was good enough for her. As long as it made him happy.

And hey, he certainly looked good doing it. Hell, dressed the way he was, dripping with freshly drawn pool water, he looked even better than good. The sight practically had her eyes sparkle with desire.

The same could be said for Erasa, who couldn't help but blush as she admired every inch of the boy from a distance, standing there with his muscular arm raised in victory above the rest of his toned figure. Her hands came together excitedly as the blonde savored the sight, being sure to burn it into her retinas.

A sigh left the crime fighter's lips when she saw the boy return to the waiting area to dry himself off. "He looks really cool out there, doesn't he?"

Erasa swooned, "Mmm… yeah…"

"Once this is all over, we should definitely go out and celebrate. What do you think?"

"Yeah…"

"How about a restaurant? Do you have any suggestions?"

"Yeah…"

Hearing the breathy, unfocused responses coming back at her, Videl looked across at her best friend to see what was going on. When she saw the blonde was still gazing down at the Saiyan with a dreamy look in her eyes, a shade of red on her cheeks, a lustful grin in play, and her nostrils flared, the raven haired teen visibly balked and frowned. She was then about to give her distracted friend a good tongue lashing. However, when the blonde inhaled and licked the corner of her lips in a rather lewd manner, it was all the crime fighter could take before she decided to administer swift justice upon the situation.

Without a moment's hesitation, Videl reached over her friend's shoulders, hooked her fingers inside Erasa's nostrils, and pulled. The blonde was quickly snapped out of her trance when the raven haired girl buried her foot into her spine and, treating her nose like a set of reigns, began yanking back on them as if she was a horse. This had Erasa's body bending backwards like a bow, a sight that had everyone, including their rest of their group, cringe at how painful it appeared.

"What the hell is wrong with this nose, huh?" Videl growled, ignoring her friend's cries and flailing arms as she pulled back even further in a highly comical way. "Listen to what I'm saying, damn it!"

"AAAH! VIDEL! IT'S GOING TO RIP OFF!" Erasa practically screamed, her words all muffled due to the fingers in her face.

While the commotion pretty much went on unnoticed by Gohan and a majority of the stadium, it certainly didn't go on unacknowledged by the people in the immediate vicinity.
Nevertheless, it was all in good fun, and once Lime was able to break the two girls apart from their own squabble, things quickly returned to normal.

XXX

(Several days later)

(Omega Quadrant, Nimbus 5)

True to his word, as soon as Gohan was back in tip-top condition and had gotten all of his affairs in order, he gave Kana a buzz and asked her whether she still wanted to take him out to celebrate or not. Much to his amusement, without even a second of hesitation, the alien girl jumped down to earth, said her Christmas greetings to all the members of the Son residence she’d come to associate with over the years, and then took the demi-Saiyan on a trip across the cosmos.

The Z-fighter had no idea how many star systems and galaxies they passed. Whatever the case, about a few seconds of light speed travel later, and Gohan soon found himself and Kana standing in the middle of the seediest neighborhood the boy had ever come across.

At first the spiky haired warrior in the orange and blue gi thought he’d been dropped straight into the set of Blade Runner. The brightly lit, rustic skyscrapers of futuristic design towering all around him, flying cars and space ships choking up the skies, holographic billboards written in various bizarre alien languages, and the steamy, backwater streets stretching in all directions certainly amounted to a dystopian version of downtown Las Angeles. However, on closer inspection, the community was much more than that. Aside from seeing the typical street thugs, lowlifes and gutter dwellers the Saiyan would often see back on one of his planet’s great infrastructures, what he also saw were aliens and creatures of all shapes and sizes assumed in the roles of this setting’s common folk.

The diversity of extraterrestrial life around him was astonishing. To his right, gathered in front of what he suspected to be some sort of porno theatre, was a group of lizard-men gangsters dressed in nineties bikey outfits, with hot alien groupies wrapped around their arms, giggling away as two of them fought. Behind him the Saiyan saw a couple of really tall birdmen walk past, chatting away with a female cat-alien and a green woman with dreadlocks for hair and a tail, all four of whom were dressed in fashionable spandex. To Gohan’s left, he saw a man in a hood making what he figured to be some sort of drug deal with a shady alien with a crystallized face in an alleyway. Furthermore, just as he was soaking in the rest of the population, the boy leapt back with a start when a large snake man, who was about three feet taller than him and had fours, claw-like arms, slithered past him.

Needless to say, the sudden change in scenery was a real culture shock to the country teen.

Clearing his throat in surprise, the bewildered Gohan spoke. "This is where you go to relax?" he asked, while at the same time taking note of a tall, humanoid male dressed in a space suit and leaning against his parked car, making out with a scantily clad alien girl with grayish skin and dragon wings.

Laughing at the boy’s question, the Seirei in the glowing jumpsuit grinned and elbowed the teen in the side. "No. I said this is where I go to celebrate." She then waved for him to follow, "Come on." She then crossed the street, heading towards a large, metal building with a glowing neon sign on the outer wall just above the entrance.

Initially apprehensive, Gohan decided to shadow the freelancer out of sheer curiosity. However, just before he could cross after the woman, the boy jumped back with a start when a grey hover car suddenly came screaming down the road and blew past him. The driver, a burly alien with orange skin, mandibles around a human mouth, and scales, honked at the boy and screamed out the window.

"Watch where you're going, numbskull!"

Shaking his head, the demi-Saiyan shouted after the offender, "HEY! I'M WALKING HERE!" Not sure whether his yell reached the inconsiderate driver or not, the miffed warrior ignored the snickers from the two alien men, leaning against the wall behind him, both of whom looked surprisingly like Appule and Cui, and quickly followed after Kana.

When the hybrid eventually reached the girl waiting patiently on the other side, he heard her giggle. "Trouble with the locals?"

"That crazy guy nearly ran me over," the frazzled Saiyan exclaimed, simultaneously pointing after the vehicle that'd been traveling well above the speed limit. "Should I report him. I got his license tag. Triangle, triangle… something that looks like a square." Damn. What a weird language.

With the amount of aliens hanging around, it wouldn't surprise him one bit if he ran into somebody who spoke brail.

"Don't bother," Kana chuckled, giving the issue a flippant wave before wrapping her arms around Gohan's, hugging him tightly. "In this town, there's practically no government or law to run things. It's all done by the local crime bosses and space port companies. Just think of it as your typical, outskirt rat pit or crud bucket, where the scum of the universe gather to eat, celebrate, and party, sixty two cycles a day."

Gohan smiled when he felt the girl proceed to drag him down the footpath and towards their intended destination. "Sounds like a really charming place," he remarked, at the same time ducking under a crate being carried by a massive, red alien about three meters tall in space armor, with four eyes and four arms. "Vegeta would feel right at home here."

"He probably would," Kana replied, her glowing orange hair trailing behind them as they continued to edge their way across the neighborhood. "Sounds like a really charming place," he remarked, at the same time ducking under a crate being carried by a massive, red alien about three meters tall in space armor, with four eyes and four arms. "Vegeta would feel right at home here."

The young man laughed at the face the girl made and nodded to her, "Let me guess, Star Trek?"

Kana then slapped him in the chest, "Don't be ridiculous. I watched it from your planet's data bases yesterday when I downloaded it. It was awesome." Her nose then turned forward again as the pair continued to walk and talk. Despite the general scope of the area, from the way the two of them looked with their arms interlocked, you could swear that they were a young couple out on a date. It certainly felt like it from the Seirei's perspective, even though Gohan was completely oblivious to her motives. "Anyway… if you're ever looking for a more disgusting place, you've found it. Everyone on this planet is completely hardcore."

"You don't need to tell me twice. I've only been here for five minutes and I already feel like my life is in danger," Gohan said, watching a tall man in a high-tech combat suit similar to a SWAT uniform march by with a rifle on his back. Taking note of a tiny, spherical robot with a lone, red eye floating after the mercenary and stepping over a family of bipedal insectoid-aliens the size of boots, the cautious Saiyan then directed a smile back at his friend. "So, reckless-woman-who-decided to abduct me... where is this place you've been dying to take me to all this time?"

Grinning widely, the orange haired woman then stopped in front of a set of metal doors and pointed at the sign above. "Right here."

At first Gohan was taken aback. Size of the gate aside, the damn thing was made completely out of metal and was covered in all sorts of grime, indicating that whoever owned this place didn't put much effort into making this a really respectable establishment... or at least tried to. Furthermore, besides the smell of fish and garbage water, there was also the distinct sound of party music booming loudly on the other side, causing the various vents and panels to tremble with every base note that was hit. Drinking it all in, the demi-Saiyan quickly deduced that this was some sort of night club and that it was the stuff going on inside that the Seirei was so eager to introduce him to.

Before he could even ask Kana what was waiting for them beyond the steel barricade, the glowing woman stepped forward, placed two hands against the handles, and threw the entrance open with an excited shout, "What's up, guys?!"

Almost instantly, the entire place let out a collective, booming roar. "KANAAAAA!"

And this was on top of the ridiculously loud music.

As the girl stepped in with her arms raised, basking in the collective outcry of her admirers, and the double doors closed behind them, Gohan was treated to his second biggest surprise for the day. Not only did he saw the Seirei receive high-fives from all the patrons that were there to greet her, he also saw the place that they were associated with.

In front of him, the Saiyan saw the biggest, most high-tech disco joint he'd ever come across in his young life. The dance floor in front of him and the booths surrounding the place were packed to the brim with drunk, rowdy aliens, all decked out and dressed for a night on the town. Left and right, he saw men and women of all races, shapes, colors and creeds tearing it up across the space, crying out as the music thundered from the speakers above them. All the girls, or what he could see were girls, were dressed in skimpy tops, skirts, spandex and lace, hitting it up with the most bizarre men from all four corners of the universe. Initially Gohan had to shake his head when he thought he saw Captain Ginyu, Cell and Frieza dancing in the crowd, when in reality they were just other people from their races busting moves under the light of the strobes. They certainly looked like them though... there was no arguing that.

Now Gohan would have to live the rest of his life with the image of a Frieza, with boobs, dressed in a bra and G-string, dancing on a table in high heels.

Only the most coma-inducing amounts of alcohol and a few shots to the head would be able to get rid of that memory. Hopefully this place could provide such a beverage.

Under the blazing lights flickering from lamps and spots, Gohan also saw hot alien go-go girls in bikinis dancing in cages that were hanging from the ceiling, food and drinks being served at the booths, a poker tournament taking place in the far corner, and massive television screens and holograms playing party themed recordings for everyone to enjoy. From the cheers going on all around and the amount of testosterone he smelled, it certainly looked like people were having fun, and as he proceeded to follow Kana into the sea of hormones and excitement, it became even more obvious.

"Wow. And you think you know a girl," Gohan mused to himself, smiling as he watched Kana chart a course through a path formed in the crowd.
As they walked, the glowing woman continued bumping fists and high-fiving people left and right. "Hey! How's it going? Long time no see?" the girl chirped, jabbing a large, red-haired, humanoid alien in a jumpsuit as she passed him. "Lookin' good, Zil."

"You too, Kana," the large, muscular traveler laughed, while at the same time grinning at the Seirei. "Workin' hard?"

"You know it," the bombshell mercenary replied, before raising a hand to a boney, Martian-like man in battle armor approaching her from the front. "Yo, Yin. Nice suit. Up high!" She then slapped the alien's hand good-naturedly, earning a croaky response from him when he stepped aside. The man's words earned a playful grin from the glowing girl. "Ten-four, my friend. Ten-four." After waving at the people she'd met on the way through, the girl then dragged Gohan over to the bar.

When they arrived there, they quickly found two seats between a large, bulky man with plates of bone growing out of his skin and a lizard woman in tights. Edging her way in, the glowing Seirei then slapped her hand on the bar and grinned across at the man working behind it.

"Yo, Gonz. Is the garcon in this dive still as bad as I remember?"

Hearing her voice loud and clear, the alien working behind the counter, a burly, orange alien with tusks and an apron, turned around, grinned a toothy smile at the Seirei, and raised two large pints of an unidentifiable foamy liquid. "See for yourself, firefly." He then slammed the two drinks on the counter, not even caring if they spilled as the glowing woman quickly grabbed the nearest one by the handle. "On the house."

"Thanks," Kana exclaimed, taking a seat as the barkeep moved down the line and Gohan slid into the one next to her. Pushing the second serving over to her guest and watching him take it, the Seirei then picked her mug up and held it between them. "Cheers." Clinking it against the Saiyan's when he returned her gesture, the glowing female wasted no time in putting the glass to her lips and chugging back on the beverage.

Gohan could only watch in utter amazement as Kana guzzled down the entire pint in one swig, his mouth dropping when he saw the woman slap it down a second later and belch at the top of her lungs.

Wiping away the excess foam from her lips, the Seirei sighed, "Ah. Now that's good garcon." She then glanced over at the Saiyan next to her and smiled warmly. "Try it. It's great."

Looking at his apprehensively, Gohan then brought the drink up and took a swig of it as well. At first the taste of bubbly sweet nectar danced across his tongue, filling his stomach with wonton desire. But then, when a very gasoline like taste replaced the sensation of honey, the boy's cheeks unexpectedly bloated and he spat out the liquid all across the counter. Sputtering in shock, he looked back down at his drink in bewilderment, "Ugh. Man… that's some really strong stuff."

"Well… it might not be your vintage, but it certainly is mine," Kana laughed, resting her cheek on her hand as she beamed across at the boy in amusement. After seeing him give the drink another try, this time with a little more success, the Seirei stared at him brightly. "I take it you don't come to neighborhoods like this very often?"

"Honestly, no. However, I do find a lot of enjoyment from visiting new places and trying out different cultures," Gohan quickly replied, grinning as he gazed back at his hostess. As the music continued to play and the patrons continued to dance like fools behind him, the demi-Saiyan still found the opportunity to engage with his friend in civilized conversation. "Though this isn't really the kind of setting you'd find me in, I'm still really glad you were able to take me here. Thanks."

"No problem. Live life to the fullest! That's what I always say. It's an experience you shouldn't let go to waste," the Seirei stated, tapping the bar and watching as the host, Gonzo, slid another full glass over to her. Taking it into her firm grip, she gazed at her friend welcomingly to see him casually sip away at his beverage. "After your near death experience, I figured taking you to the wildest, most jamming joint in the galaxy would be the best way to celebrate your return to the real world."

"Yeah. And what a place it is," the young man chuckled, turning to the dance floor and gesturing to the aliens dancing on the stage and tables. "I've never seen so many aliens packed into one building before. Forget about the guys that look like my old enemies, there are groups of men and women out there that I never even seen in movies."

"These are the outskirts. You're bound to run into a few familiar faces," Kana stated, earning a curious look from her companion.

"Oh? Any I should look out for in particular?"

"Let's see. Well..." Kana began, before then grinning and pointing down the table over Gohan's shoulder, "If we're looking for familiar faces, here comes one right now." When the hybrid turned around to look, the pair was quickly confronted by the individual in question.

"Kana. I thought I heard your name get called out across the club," a four foot, blue alien with yellow eyes, a human shaped body, and a purple jumpsuit recognized as belonging to the Galactic Patrolman spoke, at the same time stopping right where the two fighters were seated. Placing his hands on his hips and scowling up at the orange haired woman in the plug suit, the odd-looking alien frowned. "What are you doing all the way out here in such a dirty, disgusting place?"

The Seirei chuckled as she looked down at the serious man. "That's funny. I could ask the same thing of you, Jaco." She then raised an eyebrow at the little officer. "What could a man working for the Galactic Patrol Corp be doing on a planet way beyond the reach of his jurisdiction?"

Grunting, the short alien policeman quickly placed his hands on his belt in an attempt to look intimidating. "That, my dear, is something that doesn't concern a freeloading, freelancer like yourself. For your information, I just happen to be on a very top secret mission issued to me personally by the head of my department." He then waved his gloved finger up at the wanderer in warning. "I do not believe someone of your position and reputation has anything to gain from such an endeavor... especially since you seem to hanging around with... uhh... umm..." The alien then looked up at Gohan. Quickly taking note of his attire and appearance, Jaco scrunched his face thoughtfully and nodded, "Other... unauthorized... persons of interest."

Chuckling, the young traveler leaned back against the counter and raised her foamy drink to the man in a relaxed manner. "Cool your jets, Jaco. I'm on vacation now. You don't need to worry about me stirring up any trouble here. At least... not right now anyway." She then glanced across at Gohan and pointed the boy down at the man in front of them. "Gohan. Meet Jaco: a very close friend of mine and a frequent business associate that I've crossed paths with on a number of occasions."

"Oh. Really?" Clearing his throat, the demi-Saiyan slapped a hand onto his knee and bowed to the man politely, all the while remaining seated on his bar stool. "Um, pleasure to meet you, sir." His gesture and politeness to the tiny official had Kana snigger with amusement.

Grunting at the boy's reply, the alien patrolman waved back, "Likewise." Quickly shooting a glare back at the orange haired woman, Jaco then pointed up at her once more warningly. "Remember, Kana... I've got my eye on a very important target in this town, so don't go doing anything stupid... like blowing it up in another bar fight." When he saw the glowing girl give him the 'OK' sign, the alien adjusted his jumpsuit and stomped off, looking incredibly adorable as he vanished into the crowd of dancers.

When they saw him leave, Gohan quickly turned back to Kana with a curious look. "A policeman?"

"In a way," Kana shrugged, before smiling fondly at her friend. When he took another sip of his drink, she continued to shed some light on the identity of the newcomer, "He's part of an organization that ensures the laws and orders of the universe across the world trade territories are kept in line. He thinks he's an elite member of their unit, tasked with bringing down the most dangerous criminals and lowlifes in the quadrant, when in reality his superiors treat him like fodder and give him assignments that really don't mean anything. I try to tell him that, but he keeps denying it."

"Heh. I see," Gohan chuckled. Now he felt a little bit sorry for the guy. He seemed really nice. "If there are guys out there who hunt down criminals across the galaxy, then I'd better be careful with the stuff I do back home. Our fights haven't exactly been solar system friendly."

"Ah, I doubt you have anything to worry about. Just try not to break any intergalactic laws while you're outside of the Milky Way and you should be fine," Kana informed, giving the young man a grin when he turned back to face her. "The last thing you want is someone like Remington coming after you."

"Remington?"

"He's an armored warrior from the planet Dawn; a humanoid plant who has made a name for himself as the most ruthless, toughest bounty hunter on this side of the universe. If you've got a massive price on your head, chances are he's coming after you," the glowing alien informed, at the same time chugging back another sip of her drink. After seeing Gohan do the same thing, the girl chuckled, "I've only met him twice in my life. The guy literally looks like he kills people for a living."

"If he's a one-eyed man with a black trench coat, a five o'clock shadow and a mechanical gauntlet for an arm, then I'm totally onboard with that," the demi-Saiyan stated with a grin.

Kana chuckled at the teen's near-accurate description of the individual. "Three out of four. Well done."

After taking another swig, Gohan was about to carry on the conversation and ask his friend a little bit more about the other notable creatures in the cosmos. But before he could even proceed with his next question, the boy then noticed a little ways down the bar, past the aliens seated along the counter, and in a booth situated firmly against the wall directly in his line of sight, a person staring back at him. At first he needed another look past the bodies to see if he wasn't tripping, but after focusing on the figure in the seats, he was able to see exactly who they were.

A beautiful, fair-skinned woman around her thirties, humanoid in appearance, with very long black, spiky hair that grew down to her waist, and was done into a hanging ponytail. Aside from its style resembling his when he was a young kid, the woman was also wearing a set of armor that was similar in style to Frieza's military. Unique in its overall design, the main parts of the armor were black, with a single yellow shoulder guard on the right, a waist guard on the left, and two red pull-up sleeves and a red battle dress. On top of the boots, she also had a brown fur belt of some kind wrapped around her waist, something that struck Gohan as oddly familiar.

Blinking in confusion when he saw that the woman in the booth was still glaring at him, the demi-Saiyan then noticed Kana look over her shoulder. Obviously wondering what had him so distracted, the glowing girl then gazed back at the teen curiously.

"What's up? Something wrong?" the Seirei asked.

"No… nothing much… it's just…" He then nodded down the bar, only to then see the woman in the booth look away hastily. "It looks like that woman over there is staring at me."

"Really?" Glancing at the person that was under the Saiyan's suspicions, Kana raised an eyebrow and smiled at her hybrid crush happily. "Ah, she's probably interested in you because you're the hottest guy to enter this bar in weeks. Granted there are a few attractive men in here, you're probably the only one in this town with a nose and complexion like yours."

"Uh-huh," Gohan murmured, tilting his head back at the booth before returning his attention to his drink.

Sensing his apprehension, the Seirei grinned and, picking up her glass and finishing off her second serving, then looked at the boy mischievously. "Hey. I've got something that'll help take your mind off of her." Placing her hand against his cheek and pulling his face towards her, the glowing girl gave the surprised teen a sly grin and inched her nose closer to his. "I read somewhere in your planet's national geography that fox couples down on earth, bond with one another through boxing. It's a practice that you Saiyans and several other races across the universe excel at… trading blows as a means of showing affection for one another."

Gohan gulped nervously, watching the proximity between him and the girl close millisecond by millisecond. For a moment he thought Kana was going to do something to him that would have his hair stand on end, his cheeks reddening as expectations for the event began to build. However, just as he felt the girl's breath touch his lips and her nose gently brush against his, the boy suddenly felt the glass in his hand get yanked out of his grip. In the blink of an eye, he then saw the Seirei spin around and slam his cup across the head of the large man sitting next to them.

The hulking man with bones growing out of his leathery body cried out when the glass shattered over the back of his skull, sending him lurching forward.

As the demi-Saiyan gawked, not sure what had compelled Kana to do such a thing, he then felt the girl place the broken handle of the glass in his open hand and noticed the Seirei take a step back. When the giant alien with the chiseled face and oversized molars for teeth turned to glare at them, the Seirei cheekily held up her hand and thumbed over to Gohan, who was holding the large handle as evidence of 'his actions.'

Seeing the girl pointing at him and the giant alien snarl in his direction, the teen then put two-and-two together and looked up with a start. "What?"

Cracking his knuckles, the hulking man in the spandex shorts narrowed his eyes upon the one 'responsible' for smashing the glass over his head. A split second later, the alien gave a primal roar, charged at the startled demi-Saiyan, and tackled him with the full force of a comet. Like a rhino, the man lifted Gohan off his feet and plowed him through the crowd, before slamming the winded teen straight down onto a table, shattering it under their combined weight.

Initially the crowds were baffled by the sight of the two alien warriors beginning to duke it out across the floor, with the giant alien seemingly having the upper hand over his smaller opponent.
But then, when smiles began to appear on the faces of all the men and women in the area, all hell suddenly broke loose. A loud, collective cry echoed throughout the building as drunks and partygoers began breaking tables and chairs across people's backs left and right, with every single patron beginning to engage in a building-wide slugfest. With bottles and debris flying through the air and bystanders jumping into the fray, interrupting the celebratory atmosphere of the business, almost every single person in the vicinity became involved in the scrap.

As bodies and furniture filled the air behind her, Kana decided that it was time for her to get involved as well. Grinning when she saw Gohan throw his hulking opponent off of him, the girl downed the last of her drink, wiped her lips clean and, with a bellowing war cry of her own, dove at the nearest pair of drunks she could see. "HAAAAAAA!" Grabbing the brawling pair by the backs of their skulls, she pulled them apart, slammed their faces together, knocked them out, and dove at a nearby woman with blue skin, tackling her to the floor.

It soon transformed into an all-out-war inside the outskirt club. Televisions were smashed, tables were shattered, and people began dropping to the ground like flies. The first to go were the incredibly inebriated, who stumbled about for several moments before collapsing under the weight of their own vices. The next were the faint of heart, who were easily overpowered by the more macho opponents, who didn't hesitate one bit to beat the crud out of them before moving on to their next target. Hell, the fight became so intense and so outrageous that even the go-go girls inside the cages jumped out and began clawing at the men scraping beneath them. It was great.

Over the next hour, Gohan had to contend with multiple, surprisingly powerful opponents. His hulking tackler aside, who wouldn't stay down no matter how many blows he dealt the man, the demi-Saiyan also had to deal with attacks from behind and from his sides; resulting in a very hectic exchange between dozens of opponents. Catching one particular alien when he tried to blindside him, the young warrior threw him into another oncoming foe to his left, a large slug patron who was attempting to bring him down with a charge. Managing to throw both to the ground, he then dodged a wide swing from an armored, troll-like foe, who let out a terrifying roar as he attempted to down the poor human.

"This is insane!"

"Yeah! Isn't it great?" Kana shouted back, knocking the spike-covered man out with an elbow to the head before kicking the woman into a nearby table. After disposing of the two, she was then grabbed from behind by a giant insect-alien in a space suit, which caught her in a headlock and began lifting her off the floor. Coughing out in shock, the Seirei grinned, "Aren't you having fun?"

Punching the large troll in the gut, dropping him to his knees, Gohan stopped for a moment before looking at the woman behind him. "Actually… yeah." Grin forming, the man turned to punch his stricken adversary across the jaw, smacking him to the ground. His victory over his alien quarry was short-lived however, as he was suddenly struck in the back by a chair that sent him hurtling into a booth.

Crashing into the couches and table, the poor boy ended up buried under several feet of furniture and wall plating. The cause of his painful flight turned out to be a large, carapace alien with a face resembling an iguana, and dressed in black battle armor, complete with side-arm. Upon sending his target flying, the fit looking creature chuckled darkly and threw the destroyed chair aside, before then beginning to stomp towards the spot Gohan had wound up landing. At first he thought the young warrior had been knocked out cold. But then, much to his and everybody else's surprise, a loud clap of thunder followed by an explosion sent the pile of rubble flying off of the downed fighter, who rose up from the crash site bathed in a bright, golden glow.

From her position on top of a squirming dancer girl, whom she had pinned beneath her posterior, the raven haired woman that'd previously been staring at the demi-Saiyan from the booth looked up at the glowing young man in amazement. With her alien opponent's legs caught in her arms and the owner of the trapped limbs clawing at the ground for some sort of purchase, the armored woman whispered in surprise, "I knew it… he's…"

Head spinning from the surprise hit to the spine, the hybrid Super Saiyan panted and wiped the blood dripping from his lip. When he noticed the startled look on the hulking iguana's face, a wide grin appeared across Gohan's mouth. "So you want to play rough, huh? Alright." He then threw his hands forward and fired a powerful kiai, slamming it into the alien man before charging at him. With a loud yell of excitement and vigor, the Saiyan leapt at the stumbling man and tackled him in a manner very similar to a football player, only to feel the anthropomorphic iguana, who stood to about two times his size, catch him with his giant limbs and hold his ground. This resulted in a wrestling match between the pair of warriors. The two brawlers dug their feet into the hard ground, the effort of which prompting the carapace patron to power up through a fierce, white aura to match his estranged foe, who in turn snarled against the man's chest.

Ending in a good, old-fashioned stalemate, Gohan quickly decided to break the hold and took his opponent by surprise. Leaping off of the ground, the blonde demi-Saiyan kneed the man in the face and dropped him to the floor, where he then pinned the large man under his foot. Snarling menacingly, the lizard alien grabbed the boy by the gi and drew his fist back to meet the half-human head on.

"Bring it on, runt!"

"Sure thing, pal!"

However, just as Gohan was loading his own fist to continue pummeling his opponent into submission, on the second floor balcony above them, a large, blue man in a metal space suit, jetpack and mask, leapt over the side of the railing and, with his arms and legs held out, dove straight down towards the Super Saiyan with a primal yell. Before he knew it, the muscular, heavy alien managed to body-slam Gohan straight into the floor with the force of a meteor, ending in all three men smashing a hole down to the basement. It was here that the trio of idiots ended up crushing on top of one another in a very painful, yet very comical dog pile.

And so the epic, intergalactic bar fight continued.

Feeling the pressure of multiple opponents mounting, Kana also powered up and engaged Gohan's previous opponent. When the hulking figure attempted to get rough with her, the Seirei wound up shoulder-tossing the boney man into the massive television screen above, destroying it in a shower of glass and sparks. As a result, the platform broke and dropped to the ground, flattening a couple of patrons and knocking them out cold, inadvertently providing a perfect, king-of-the-hill space for other men and women present to wrestle over. Gohan soon rejoined the scuffle after jumping out of the hole he'd formed in the ground and, along with several other aliens who powered up to match their more powerful adversaries, ended up breaking what was left of the bar's fixtures. Even the owner of the club threw himself into the fray, pulling out a frying pan to smack the daylights out of the more rowdy of patrons.

Things soon started to pick up after Gohan thinned out another herd of would-be opponents, picking off a couple more aliens one after another. However, the moment he kicked away an alien from Frieza's race charging at him from behind, sending the carapace figure straight into another two brawlers, he was suddenly hit across the face by something hard and fast, which sent him spinning into a support beam. Slamming into it and denting the structure, the baffled Super Saiyan then looked up with a start to see the raven haired woman who'd been spying on him earlier, glaring in his direction.

Blinking at seeing this particular figure facing him down, the demi-Saiyan hurriedly rubbed off the bruise and rose up into a proper fighting stance, "That was a solid hit. Think you can do it again while facing me?" He asked this with a glint of excitement in his eye.

In response, the woman smirked back at him in a very Vegeta-like manner, something that sent a cold shiver up Gohan's spine. "I don't know. Let's see." All of a sudden, the female's expression steeled and her fists clenched. Just when the hybrid thought his new adversary was going to throw an energy blast his way and force him to dodge, in a flash of white light, a golden aura suddenly exploded around the woman, spiking up her hair and turning it blonde. At the same time, her eyes also turned a shade of green, completing her ascension.

The woman's sudden transformation into Super Saiyan had the Z-fighter recoil in shock, his eyes widening as he saw the female glare him down in her newly powered-up state. Initially he was thunderstruck when he realized that the woman he was now confronting was actually a Saiyan…and a full-blooded one at that. But what astonished him more than that was the fact that upon gauging her now open-book power level, he noticed that her energy was higher than his. This was made evident by how well-defined her body had become and the fact that her muscles were now more prominent in this state.

As soon as her transformation had stabilized, the woman then nodded towards the boy in a 'what-up' manner. "Well, kid? Do you think I'll be able to hit you now?" When she didn't receive an answer in the first five seconds and only a dumb shake of the head, the mystery Saiyan then grunted and frowned. "Thought so." All of a sudden, the woman dashed forward at blinding speed and, appearing directly in front of her opponent, elbowed him in the face just as he was raising his arms to block. Her light speed hit landed with a sickening 'crunch', sending Gohan flying through the air to slam into the back wall. His aura extinguishing the instant he stopped, the boy dropped back to the ground and fell to his hands and knees. The moment he landed, the hybrid, with his teeth gritted and blood trickling from his nose, leapt back to his feet and lobbed a golden ki blast straight at the antagonistic Super Saiyan in the center of the room. Before it could hit, the woman effortlessly backhanded it into the stage light above her, disintegrating the piece of equipment before sprinting towards the teen with intent.

Sprinting forward as well, Gohan fired off two more blasts at the woman, both of which bounced off of her chest and shoulder when she blew right through them. Realizing blasting her wasn't going to work, the teen continued his approach at a much greater speed, before he leapt at her and landed a solid left hook across her face. The blow struck with a dull 'thud', knocking the woman back and momentarily stunning her, which caused her golden aura to dissipate. Gohan then followed up the haymaker by lifting his right arm and driving it down into her neck, connecting hard and causing the woman to lurch.

However, undeterred by the two power shots, the woman responded with a growl and slammed a right hook across the teen's face, knocking blood from his mouth before then attempting to hit him with a left cross. Gohan parried it easily enough and retaliated with a right elbow to her temple, which would've cut the skin wide open. Unfortunately it didn't, and the teen received a swift uppercut to the chin as a result. When the woman threw a right snap kick to his head, which he quickly blocked, Gohan then tried to nail her with a right hook, only for the woman to catch his wrist and twist it into a submission hold.
Growling as he resisted, the demi-Saiyan found that he was unable to break the grip when the Super Saiyan woman suddenly grabbed him by the back of his gi with her free hand, spun him around, and slammed him face first into a nearby support pillar. The teen struck the iron bar with a loud 'clang', before several more loud thuds began to ring out as his opponent drew him back and slammed him into the pole three more times, bending the frame at its base. The moment it collapsed, she then finished her vicious beat down of the boy by throwing him straight into the table next to them, disintegrating it and punching a crater into the cobalt floor.

Groaning at the concussive blows he'd received, Gohan struggled to get back to his feet, only for his opponent to grab him by the shoulders and hoist him the rest of the way up. Just as he was hooking his hands around her arms to get some kind of leverage, the Super Saiyan woman spun them again and threw him straight through a crowd of drunken fighters. The poor demi-Saiyan bowled them over before crashing through a large speaker, destroying it in a shower of sparks.

Pushing himself back to his feet, a shaken and badly beaten Gohan opted for a change of tactics. Grabbing a nearby steel pole, the boy spun around and slammed it across the head of his approaching opponent. The first hit landed with a deafening 'clang.' The second hit that followed shattered the pole and had the female Super Saiyan spin on the spot as bits of metal scattered across the floor. When Gohan threw away the dented handle, he saw his opponent turn to glare at him, with a cut over her brow and a deep bruise on her left cheek. As soon as both fighters glared at each other, they rushed forward and tackled one another, grabbing their adversary by their shoulders and attempting to push them over.

Their feet dug into the tiles and split them as the two Super Saiyans grappled, their auras bursting forth and beginning to rip the place asunder. Patrons and debris was blown in all directions from their combined force, causing the second floor walkway to collapse. But just before a winner of the wrestling match could be decided, the female Super Saiyan suddenly weaved her arms around Gohan's, knocked them away, and front kicked him straight into the chairs behind him. The couches exploded when the hybrid smashed through them, before the teen back-flipped and landed clean on the other side.

Amidst the debris and the raging battles going on around him, Gohan spat out the blood in his mouth and smirked. "You're really tough. Hitting you in the head and torso is like burying my knuckles into a block of iron."

The golden haired female chuckled. "That's what living in deep space does for you. Training on planets with hundreds of times normal gravity and no oxygen helps build a Saiyan's endurance and stamina. I'm actually surprised you've gotten as strong as you have in the conditions you must've been raised in," the woman admitted, before taking another stance and grinning excitedly. "Let's see how long you can keep that up."

"Sure," Gohan complied, a split second before running in to engage the woman once again.

Eventually, after another hour of trading punches, almost every single man and woman in the bar had been knocked unconscious. Scattered amidst the ruins of the indoor battlefield, bodies could be seen strewn about the place, covered in food, liquids, and other bodies of dozens of aliens, all of whom had fallen in the heat of battle. Those who were unable to limp away from the fray had wound up crashing wherever they were lying and were now snoring away, while the bartender switched off the lights and began sweeping up the mess. Obviously he was unconcerned with the insane amounts of damages caused to his establishment, as he knew his insurance and connections would be able to take care of it.

As for the two people responsible for the fight in the first place, they could be found standing outside on the other side of the street, nursing some serious bruises, and being shadowed by their new dance club companion, who'd decided to tag along. All three of them were now walking off the vicious beatings they'd received and given, with Kana rubbing a sore jaw and Gohan tending to a swollen left eye, bloody lip and bruised ribs, using a piece of meat he'd managed to buy from the front counter to treat the former. His opponent, the mystery Saiyan woman with the long black hair, also had her arm in a sling and a noticeable black eye, courtesy of her fellow Saiyan opponent.

Groaning as she rolled her shoulder, sitting on the bench next to her demi-Saiyan friend, Kana spoke in a strained voice, "Man… we really gave it to each other back there, didn't we?"

Cringing at the stinging pain in his face, the battered Gohan chuckled, "Do you think we got a little bit carried away? We did trash Gonzo's place pretty good."

"Nah. It's alright. This happens a lot more than you think it does," the Seirei replied with a careless wave of her hand. "Plus he's covered."

"That's good. I can't imagine the amount of paperwork and crap he'd have to go through if this only happened to him once every month," the warrior with the torn up gi remarked. After moving the steak- or what he thought was steak- away from his face and holding it out for Kana to use, he then turned his attention to the woman behind him, who he could see was working on a nasty shiner on her left leg. Upon seeing her eyes shift over to him, the teenager spoke a little more seriously.
"You're a Saiyan too, huh? That's cool. The last thing I expected coming all the way out here was running into another one."

The woman standing beside him chuckled, "What's there to be surprised about? You and I are warriors… members of the most powerful race in the universe. It'll take more than some lizard in a floating chair to take us out."

Kana, the piece of meat pressed up against her swollen cheek, laughed a little at the woman's comment, "She certainly talks like a Saiyan. There's no doubt about that."

It was then Gohan cracked a smile, "Let me guess; you managed to escape Planet Vegeta's destruction and came all the way out to these parts of the universe so that you wouldn't be discovered?"

The Saiyan woman shrugged, "More or less. A lot of really intense shit went down after our home planet was vaporized. It was like a mass exodus gone mad. Those who were off world at the time on top secret missions fled their systems when they heard rumors of Planet Vegeta being destroyed by Frieza. Those who heard it'd collided with a rogue planet went to their assigned rendezvous points… only to be ambushed by Frieza's men and massacred. And others who were around at the time Frieza attacked Vegeta either stayed and died… or fled the world as fast as they could, with most of them being caught up in the planet's explosion." The mysterious Super Saiyan then raised her good hand and shrugged in a casual manner. "Dozens of us managed to survive the destruction of our planet… with a great many going into hiding. That's not even counting the young Saiyans who'd been dispatched to other planets in the days prior to the event."

It was hearing this that drew an understanding nod from the two fighters listening to the mercenary's compelling tale.

"That certainly explains a lot," Gohan commented, glancing across at Kana for clarification.

The glowing girl smiled, "The Saiyans are a resilient race… one of the greatest primate-animal species in the cosmos. Not even time has been able to diminish your bloodlines."
"I'm a freelance agent now," the Saiyan woman interjected, drawing the pair's attention back to her to see the proud smile on her face. She then poked her chest armor with her thumb. "I live on this planet as a bounty hunter and a local gun for hire, with no tyrants or bosses to rule over me."

Her statements earned a small smile from the hybrid warrior on the bench, "That's nice. Do you have a family here as well?"

A shrug followed the boy's innocent question, "In a way. I've dated a few men and women in the years since I got here, but ever since my first mate, I haven't been able to move on to anybody else. We Saiyans form incredibly powerful bonds with the first people we develop attractions towards… feelings I believe are characteristic of what other life forms would identify as 'love.' As for family… well…" She then directed a warm and very friendly smile towards the boy in front of her. After taking in the sight of his handsome face, his hair and his guiltless expression, her eyes suddenly seemed to glow like the stars around them. "It seems Kakarot has grown up well without me."

At first confused by the woman's sudden remark, it took several moments of processing her admission before Gohan eventually figured out what she meant. "Wait a second… if you know that name… then that means…" It was then his eyes widened in shock, at the same time Kana's brain caught on to what the pair were discussing. "Y-You're…"

A grin formed on the woman Saiyan's lips as she held her arm out in a shrug, "Bet that's your second biggest surprise for the day, huh?" She then gestured down to the stunned fighter. "My name is Hanasia… ex-Saiyan Elite formerly of Planet Vegeta and the second most powerful warrior under King Vegeta's command." A frown then formed on her lips as she looked away with a disgusted snarl. "That damn cannon fodder Gerkin won the title of first seat because I was fucking pregnant at the time of our last evaluation. Bastard…"

Still overwhelmed by her first bit of information, Gohan then raised a hand and dumbly pointed across at his former opponent. "So… if you're my father's mother… then that would make you-"

"Your grandmother. Yes. Kai," the woman shook her head at the boy when his arm dropped. "I knew the people on earth were slow, I just didn't realize how slow. Guess some of their little idiocies managed to rub off on you during your conception."

"B-But…" Swallowing nervously, the spiky haired Z-fighter then regarded the woman with a great amount of interest, "How did you know I was your grandson?"

Hanasia smirked, "Well, at first I was unsure. When I first spotted you back inside the club, I initially mistook you for another Saiyan who'd managed to escape Frieza's wrath. However, after seeing you sit down at the bar and begin chatting up your fetching young friend here…" Glancing momentarily at the Seirei sitting alongside him, the woman then continued her explanation, "I quickly realized who you must've been. A grin slowly reappeared on her lips. "Aside from your gestures, mannerisms and general way of fighting, you also have the exact same eyes that my late son and mate once had. There's no way I could mistake them for belonging to anybody else. The resemblance is uncanny."

"Guess it would be impossible for a mother to miss those sorts of details, huh?" Gohan chuckled, easily recognizing how the woman was able to identify him.

Hanasia chuckled at the boy's inquiry and nodded, "Obviously you couldn't have been Gine's grandson. You are much too powerful to have descended from her side of the family. Then again… you do possess a few of her traits that Bardock greatly admired, including her gentle spirit and strong heart… features that were normally frowned upon in our society." The Saiyan then placed a hand on her hip and continued her story. "Gine, Palantay and I were Bardock's mates, and all four of us lived together under the same roof. While Palantay only had one daughter, who'd gone off to fight in a massive rebellion a whole star system away, Gine had two children of her own: Turles, whom she repeatedly mistook for Kakarot after we gave birth in the same hospital wing, and Ruco, who she sent to the Southern Quadrant to live in peace, away from our planet. Since I was always away on missions for the King, she took care of Kakarot in my stead before he was sent to earth, using the information I'd uploaded into his attack pod to stimulate his aggressive Saiyan behaviors and psychologically encode the mission parameters into his brain's subroutines. It was a very efficient process."

Looking back on what Vegeta, Nappa and Raditz were like back when they invaded earth, Gohan immediately gave an uncomfortable nod of agreement, "I think I can agree with that."

Growing more curious by the second, Kana rose from her seat and moved in to get a closer look at the woman in front of her. After a moment of personal inspection, the Seirei's holographic scanner then popped up over her eye and began analyzing both fighters. Shifting between her crush and Hanasia, with the numbers on her device beeping loudly between the two figures, the girl then balked and deactivated her readout. "Damn. She's right. The two of you are related to each other."

"Yeah. Not to mention both of us have the same, wicked right hook and a head as hard as a cannon ball," the teen remarked, taking a moment to look the woman over once more. After analyzing the individual aspects of her exterior, Gohan then reached a rather interesting conclusion of his own. "Now that you mention it… she sort of does bear a striking resemblance to my uncle Raditz."

"Ah yes… little weakling Raditz; a man whose name has become synonymous with the lowest form of currency on several different planets across the Northern Quadrant," Hanasia chuckled before smiling across at her grandson. "How is my oldest boy doing? I'm guessing since you know his name that he must have dropped by the earth at some point over the last few years to pay his brother a visit."

Cringing a little at her question, Gohan then frowned at the woman in an anxious and notably upset manner, "I don't know how to tell you this, but… he's dead."

Hanasia's smile quickly vanished. "Dead?"

"Yeah. You see, when Raditz came by to collect my father after the mission he was sent to perform as a child, he found out that not only was the entire population of the earth still alive, but his brother had forgotten everything about his mission and his race's heritage, on account of him hitting his head when he was still a baby. Raditz got pissed, kidnapped me, and then ended up getting into a fight with my father… after which he wound up killed." Gohan then shrugged at the end. "That's the short version, anyway."

At first the woman didn't say anything, leading the demi-Saiyan to believe she was going to blow a gasket. However, it then came as a puzzle to him when he heard the female murmur and look away with a thoughtful frown. "Raditz died, huh? Guess I shouldn't be surprised. Bardock and Gine always spoiled him rotten when he was a child, instead of pushing him into developing his fighting skills like I told them to. He was also too arrogant for his own good… a little trait he probably picked up from me." She then snorted and looked up at the teen with a half-smile. "Good thing I'd learned some humility over the past couple of decades. So it was Kakarot who did him in, huh?"

A hesitant look met the woman's question, "Well… dad and his then rival, now close friend, Piccolo. Both of them had to work together to take him down."
"Ah," Hanasia replied with an understanding nod. "That makes sense. With the genes he inherited from me and Bardock, if he'd had enough time, Kakarot would've been able to give even the most powerful warriors of our race a hard time. But since the earth has less pull on the Saiyan body in terms of gravity and hosts a primarily non-violent culture, exposure to its environment and its population probably softened him up and slowed his progress."

Gohan responded to her assessment with a pleasant smile. "Dad didn't start out powerful at first. But after Raditz came around and attacked his friends, he started training even harder to become even more powerful... to the point he could take on Vegeta head to head, and win." It was this brief recount that put a wide grin on the older Saiyan's face. Upon which the teen then waved a hand towards Hanasia in labored, circular motions. "It's a... bit of a long story."

"Well... I'm sure I'll be happy to hear all about it," Hanasia remarked, stepping forward to stand before the young man at attention. "But... that's going to have to wait for another day. With the amount of shots I've taken to the head back in that club, I doubt I'll be able to keep my attention for very long before I pass out. Plus..." She then grinned down at the Seirei standing next to her grandson, "I think you two would rather get back to your date rather than spend the rest of the night talking to me and hanging out in these Kai-forsaken streets."

"Uhh... okay," Gohan hesitantly replied, looking back at his glowing friend to see the girl look away and blush fiercely. It was with the sudden coloration to her cheeks that Kana's body started to radiate more brightly in kind, something that her companion inadvertently overlooked when he turned his gaze back to his elder. "If that's the case, then... I look forward to seeing you again." He then reached into his belt and began rummaging for something to write with. "Do you... want me to give you my home address?"

"Planet 4032-877, just off the Andromeda Pathway," Hanasia said, a knowing smile slowly forming on her face. "Your residential details won't be necessary. All I have to do is search for the strongest energy signatures on the planet and follow them back to their sources. It shouldn't be too difficult." At that, the woman's head then perked up and she stepped forward, "Speaking of which, since I'm guessing you're half-blood on account of you being earth born, what happened to your tail?"

"Oh... well..." Chuckling a little and rubbing the back of his head, the demi-Saiyan smiled, "After transforming into a Giant Ape on a number of occasions and putting my friends' lives in danger, I had to have it... uhh... cut off." He then grinned sheepishly at the woman. "My dad, Goten, Trunks and Vegeta had their tails removed too, so that they wouldn't put the rest of their friends in danger."

Hearing that there were actually more Saiyans out there had the woman recoil momentarily. After which she then shook her head. "I'm sure I'll be able to hear more about this later. But... first things first..." She then stepped around and looked down at the teenager with a notable scowl. "The tail of a Saiyan isn't just a trait that defines us as a race; it is also one of the most important organs on a Saiyan's body. It increases our sensitivity to our surroundings, stimulates our nervous system and reproductive organs, provides us extra leverage during stressful situations, and helps control energy flow through the primary nodes. Cutting a Saiyan's tail off is equivalent to cutting off one of our arms... or being castrated." Gesturing for the boy to stand, which he did without question, Hanasia then took his arm in one hand and began prodding the muscles with her thumb and finger, slowly running her digits up his limb. "We Saiyans are dependent on our body's natural qualities to survive in the harsh wilderness of the universe. It's been a defining element of our people since the dawn of creation."

Blinking a little, Gohan then glanced across at Kana when he heard the beautiful Seirei speak.
"She's right, you know. Your race was one of the first alien species to be born in the cosmos."

Turning back to Hanasia, the young man spoke, "If I knew it was so important… then I probably would've worked on growing it back a long time ago." He then raised an eyebrow thoughtfully. "I wonder why Vegeta never mentioned any of this before."

The Saiyan female inspecting his muscles grunted. "That pompous little upstart never even finished his basic studies. I should know, since I helped tutor the brat while he was growing up. He got it in his head that power was the only thing important for a Saiyan to survive and completely neglected all of the other important aspects of his education. All of the stuff he learned was all for the purpose of pursuing his own, selfish gains. The rest he must have picked up from that dunderhead of a General Nappa or learned it on the fly." She then peered up at the young hybrid with a smirk. "A Saiyan isn't complete without his or her tail. By having it cut off, a Saiyan can only ever fight at eighty percent their full capacity… at most eighty five."

When the woman said this, Gohan's eyes widened in shock, "Are you serious?"

"Uh-huh," Hanasia informed, before stopping her thumb at the boy's bicep and glancing at it. "And that's only one of the consequences a Saiyan suffers from losing a tail." The female then threw him a smirk. "Luckily for you, I've had plenty of time to touch up on our race's biology and know how you can get it back."

The demi-Saiyan raised an eyebrow as he and an equally surprised Kana stared at her.

"Really?"

They both asked in unison.

Rolling her eyes, Hanasia then instructed for Gohan to turn around, which he did. She then began running her fingers down his back. The way she did it though almost seemed like she was counting each of the individual vertebrae in his spine, which had her experimental patient glancing back at her curiously. "Normally when a Saiyan has their tail cut off, they're able to grow it back if the host body experiences sudden and intense bursts of adrenaline in response to danger, which often generates severe anxiety or stress. This in turn stimulates the nerves in the thoracic and lumbar portions of the spine, which then triggers protein and calcium deposits in the lower back. This then allows the tail to grow back in an instant. The more common cases often happen in young Saiyan children, as they have larger protein deposits that give them more energy to grow. It also raises hell for the adults tasked with looking after them. But as Saiyans grow older, it becomes harder and harder for them to re-grow their tails, due to their growing bodies and natural resistance." When she looked up to see Gohan looking back at her and listening to every word she had to say, the woman then got an evil glint in her eye. It was her change of expression that had her patient gulp nervously. "However, there is an easy way for adult Saiyans to get their tails back. You see, if I apply a little pressure to the number five and six thoracic vertebrae…"

Without warning, the woman suddenly pressed down on the middle juncture of Gohan's back, causing a loud 'click' to ring out. This was shortly followed by the sound of pants ripping and the demi-Saiyan giving a yell of surprise when his tail shot straight out of his pants and waved through the air erratically. Leaping forward, the boy gripped his lower back in shock and danced about in astonishment. It was a sight that put amused grins on both Hanasia's and Kana's faces.

"OW-WOW-IEEEE-YOW!" Gohan hollered, his cries of alarm drawing the attention of several aliens in the street, as they all turned to see the man in the orange and blue gi skipping on the spot.
Once he was done running circles, the stunned teenager looked over his shoulder to see his brown, furry appendage wagging behind him. As soon as he got feeling back into it and forced his fifth limb to a stop, the teen exhaled deeply and looked across at the women with wide eyes. "Man… I so did not expect that. What a rush." Grinning happily, he then reached over and pointed at his newly grown friend. "Hey. Check it out, Kana. I got my tail back. Isn't that great?"

When both women looked at where he was pointing, they then noticed something else out of the ordinary that had their eyes fix on him for several moments. It was after processing the sight around his pelvic area that caused a bright shade of scarlet to appear in Kana's cheeks and had Hanasia cough into her hand. Seeing the odd responses from the pair quickly had Gohan stare at them strangely. That was until the Saiyan female pointed towards the issue in question.

"Yo kid, is that a second tail in your pocket… or are you just happy to see me?"

Puzzled, Gohan then looked down. It was a split second afterwards that the boy's face flashed red and his hands slapped over the front of his pants, upon which he quickly turned away to hide his big… umm… problem.

Apparently re-growing his tail had had a rather interesting and hopefully temporary side effect. He would hate to think he would have to go through the rest of his school life with a ready-made flag pole on his front twenty-four seven.

Laughing at the teenager's embarrassment, Hanasia stepped forward. "Don't worry. That only lasts for about a few minutes. My recommendation: enjoy it while it lasts." She then pointed back at the blushing Seirei standing behind her and smirked. "Besides… you have this hot young thing here to help you out. Why waste it?" When she stopped in front of her estranged grandson, the raven haired woman looked him square in the eye and finished off her wisdom with a few more pieces of sound advice. "Remember… an untrained tail can be a very detrimental asset to a Saiyan, so be sure to train it well. A strong tail equals a stronger body. This way you will be able to remove the paralyzing effects of having it grabbed from behind by an enemy and transform it into your most trusted weapon. Secondly, you have to learn to control the Oozaru state should you happen to glance at a full moon. With your stronger body and mastery over your Super Saiyan transformations, this should not be a problem for you at all." When she saw the embarrassed teenager smile and nod in understanding of this information, the woman then grinned and, raising her good arm, jabbed him in the shoulder. "Good luck, kiddo. I'll be in touch." With that said and done, she then turned and walked away.

Standing up to full height as he watched Hanasia leave, the previously flushed half-Saiyan smiled and waved after the woman's retreating form. When she finally disappeared down the street, the teen felt his Seirei companion saddle up next to him and looked over to see the glowing girl beaming in the direction of their newfound friend. Gohan then turned his eyes back to his tail, which he gave a few testing swings before wrapping it securely around his waist.

"Well… this turned out to be a very interesting excursion. Thanks so much for bringing me out here, Kana."

The glowing girl giggled and turned to gaze up at the Saiyan. "It was my pleasure, Gohan-kun. And thank you for accepting my invitation."

"Hey… any time. If you have somewhere you want to go or something you want to do, I would be more than happy to tag along. All you have to do is ask." Feeling his spirit lift somewhat and after making sure his issue had subsided, Gohan then massaged the side of his face where he'd received the hardest hits of that night. Feeling the bruises and swelling were still there, especially since he couldn't see out of one eye, the young man breathed a sigh of relief and turned his attention to the girl who'd brought him here. When he did, he saw that Kana was gazing up at him with the fondest of looks, her eyes sparkling, her cheeks glowing, and an expression of longing and affection fixated squarely upon him. "You're one of my closest and dearest friends, Kana… and I know that my life would never have been as amazing as it is today if I'd never met y-"
In the blink of an eye, Kana suddenly leapt forward, threw her arms around the boy's shoulders, and planted a firm kiss upon the teenager's lips. The act of doing so was almost like the young woman had tripped, resulting in a seemingly clumsy embrace in the middle of the street. It was here the glowing girl deepened her show of affection and the male recipient blinked in surprise, his mind quickly recovering from the unexpected maneuver. Seconds later, the searing kiss ended, and the Seirei fell back to the floor with her enchanting stare fixed upon the bewildered demi-Saiyan's mug.

"The feelings are mutual," Kana whispered, beaming at the boy as she watched his mind slowly recover from her brilliant sneak attack.

Recoiling back into reality, the warrior from earth chuckled, "Huh… I guess… this kind of thing runs in the family." Clearly referencing his late grandfather and his love experiences, the teen then gave a wide grin and looked back at the dazed alien girl nervously. "This kind of puts me on the spot, doesn't it?"

"Kind of," Kana shook her head, "But you don't need to stress yourself trying to figure this out. No matter what your decision is… no matter who you choose to be with, I will always be there for you, my hero from earth." She then stepped back and allowed her hands to glide down his shoulders and chest, where she then took a moment to admire him up close. "I know, without a doubt, that I'd never consider being with anybody else." Her hands then fell…

Only to be caught up in Gohan's when he reached up to intercept them. Looking up with a start, the Seirei saw the Z-fighter was beaming brilliantly down at her, with a warm glow in his cheeks and a sincere expression that spoke nothing but complete fondness for the girl. "Damn it… you girls are making it so difficult for me," he then laughed a little when he saw the Seirei smile in response. "I don't think I'd ever be able to choose… at least not without getting my teeth kicked in and my ears blown out for a solid hour. Even it if takes me a life time… I'll… do my best to try and make this work."

A laugh from Kana was his immediate response, "I can work with that." She then leaned forward and playfully bit him on the neck, earning a startled jolt from the teen that ended in the two of them laughing on the sidewalk. After resting against the boy and feeling his arms wrap around her lithe form for about a minute, the glowing girl then got a mischievous twinkle and leered up at the hybrid curiously. "So… want to take your relative's advice and… go try your hand at breeding?"

Swallowing his tongue at her incredibly forward offer, Gohan made a few nervous sounds as he saw the beautiful girl in front of him bite her bottom lip and begin running her hands up and down his chest. Exhibiting clear signs of yearning for the half-Saiyan warrior and his affections, all the innocent teenager could do was curl his tail up a little tighter, try to ignore her leg rubbing against his thigh, and acknowledge her veracious mood with the most diplomatic answer he could muster.

"Maybe we should wait a little bit longer," the Saiyan reasoned, before nodding towards the obviously excited girl. "It's been a really long night and, considering the kind of planet we're on, I don't think this is really the most appropriate place to procreate. Plus I'm still having trouble discerning different colors and shapes from one another, which might throw me off my game a little." He then acknowledged this by prodding his swollen eye and wincing. "After the beatings we'd taken, I doubt either of us will be able to enjoy an attempted first dance."

Though hearing his reasons had Kana deflate a little, as she was really hoping he'd use that moment to jump her, the girl eventually saw his point and smiled warmly. This in turn caused her hair to flare in approval and a grin to form across her lips. "Alright. But just so you know, at the rate this is going, I doubt I'll be able to keep myself under control for much longer. If you ever want to have some fun… the door to my ship is always open." She then winked, eliciting a warm look from the young male.

"I'll try not to keep you waiting."

XXX

(A couple weeks later)

Things picked up for the Z-fighters over the next several days following Gohan's interesting excursion. His accomplishments in the school's swimming competition and grades out-of-the-way, everyone was feeling more positive and vibrant than ever. To commemorate this new season of festivities and peacetime, the gang decided to gather everyone together for another barbeque out at Kame House on Master Roshi's private island. Normally the place wouldn't play host to so many diverse individuals packed into one place, but seeing as how insistent Krillin, Android 18 and Bulma were in regards to the event, everyone found it impossible to turn down the invitation.

After all, they were celebrating Marron's 4th Birthday, so there was no way anyone would want to miss out.

The good thing about this particular day was that all of the Z-fighters were made available, including those who were normally too 'busy' to even care; with the main players being Vegeta and Paprika. Gohan also went the extra mile and brought along his school friends to partake in his gang's little gala, which presented the perfect opportunity for his family to get to know the new faces in his life.

It was a simple fête. Aside from a cook out on the beach, which Yamcha and Krillin were overseeing with a couple cans of Hetap in hand, everyone else had scattered themselves across the rest of the island, and were reveling in the events that were being provided. Chi-Chi, Bulma and blonde Launch, all of whom were dressed in some very eye-catching swim suits ranging one-piece purple to two-piece green, were working on their tans and gossiping about their lives back at home, while every once in a while making comments about each other's figures. Zangya, who was wearing a very beautiful yellow sundress and straw hat, was sitting at a wooden table with Tien, Vegeta, Hercule and Oolong, playing a specially customized version of Cards Against Humanity… which was ironic considering three out of the five of them actually opposed humanity at one point in their lives. However, it did make for some very interesting combinations in cards.

As of right now, it was Zangya who was dealing out everyone's responses to the topic question.

"What is Frieza's guilty pleasure?" the woman read, before setting down the four cards the other players had given her. "A: Ripping into a man's chest and pulling out his still-beating heart." She snorted and looked across the table, where she saw Oolong subtly adjust his singlet and smile. "B: Jerking off into a pool of children's tears… aauuooow. Now that one's totally uncalled for." She then threw a dirty look at the group in front of her, whom she saw snicker and Vegeta crack a smile. Despite her disgusted reaction, even the Hera couldn't help but grin a little, before looking down at the card next to her. "C: Powerful thighs." A quick glance in Hercule's direction saw the man with the afro clear his throat and rub his knuckles proudly against his chest. After shaking her head, Zangya then looked down at the last one. "And finally, D: Blowing some dudes in an alley." She rested her head against the edge of the table and, giving a few pained laughs, held up the last card. "Which one of you had this?"

"Right here," Tien answered, reaching over and claiming his card in victory, which had the rest of the people around the table groan.
"What! Oh, come on!" Vegeta practically shouted, raising a hand towards the woman in disbelief. "The swimming pool of children's tears was the obvious winner! By far!"

"Yeah. Even I'm surprised you didn't go for that one," Hercule also remarked, rubbing one of his big hands against his temple in surprise.

"I guess humor registers differently for other aliens," Oolong muttered, before then shrugging offhandedly towards his companions. "That… or she knew it was you who put it down and is just yanking your chain."

Giving a wide grin as the black card was tossed over to him, the three-eyed fighter glanced across at his miserable competitors seated alongside him. "It's the quality of one's responses that inevitably wins the battle. I think one of you was a little bit over-reaching in that regard." The answer he got from the Saiyan Prince was an immediate middle-finger, which had the man roll his eyes in amusement. "Whatever. Point is… this puts me ahead."

"By one point, tri-clops. But not for long," Vegeta growled, before turning to the snickering Hera and glaring at her, "Whose turn is it?"

"That would be me, sir," Hercule spoke up, dispersing the trash cards and reaching for the black pile. The moment he began to move, the rest of the group around the table did too, with everyone adding a few extra white cards to replace the ones that they'd thrown into the pile. Humming a cheerful tune as he decided which set to choose from, the Champ eventually drew one from the far left and looked at the question inscribed. "Alright… here we go." Reading it put a big grin on his face, "Blank: kid-tested, mother approved."

"Ooh… I've got just the perfect card," Oolong laughed, sorting through his hand and picking out which one he wanted to use next. He then said in a singing voice, "You four are gonna love this o~ne."

His little giggle drew a smirk from the orange haired woman sitting alongside him, "Bring it on, pig. I'll beat it down with both hands behind my back." She then pulled out a card from her hand and offered it to the Champ, who took it and laid it face down on the table.

This then had Tien look across at her in amusement, "I swear to Kai, if you pick anymore dick ones, I'm leaving this table."

"Come on, Tien. Don't be a pussy," Oolong whispered, looking overly excited as he handed his card over to the Champ.

As the boys and girls at the table mucked around, everywhere else across the island, a lot of other events were taking place. Android 18 had found herself wrapped up in a very stimulating conversation with her brother's wife, Ami, whose stomach was notably larger than it was when she last saw her, indicating that she was pregnant. Adorned in a lovely summer dress and hat to protect her from the beating rays, the dark-skinned woman spent the majority of her time speaking with her sister-in-law, enjoying the topics that came their way and giggling when she made mention of how much the brother and sister looked alike.

"Honestly, if you dyed your hair black, I bet you'd look exactly like him," Ami remarked, gesturing towards the twin's blonde hair.

Bringing her hand up and running it through her golden locks, the female android shrugged, "Me and my brother had our disagreements. While we were traveling on the road not too long ago, he claimed that he could pull off the blonde look better than I could and I told him he could eat it. Of course, looking in the mirror, if our hair colors were the same… obviously one of us might end up looking better than the other."

"Heh. That remains to be seen," Ami giggled, placing her hand over her lips to stifle her laugh. She could definitely see the subtle competitive natures between the identical pair. Even though they weren't fighting in the conventional sense, it was still a contest of sibling superiority, which was commonplace in any family.

As the two women talked, they were also keeping a close watch on Goten, Trunks and Marron, all three of whom were playing close to the water. With all three of the kids dressed in their respective swimming attires, the trio of misfits was currently building what could only be described as the world's largest sandcastle on top of a sleeping Master Roshi. While the old man snored away, the youngsters giggled incessantly as they added more and more beach-themed ornaments to their Japanese-slash-European castle. Sea shells being the main element, the structure also consisted of miniature flags, palm trees, plants, and even a pool on top of it, showing the amount of architectural care the youngsters had put behind it.

The one who was helping them assembling all of these aspects together was none other than the resident Turtle, who also had Puar perched comfortably on his head.

"Looking good, kids. Looking good," the old sea turtle chirped, nodding his head in approval as Goten added yet another tower to the majestic piece.

"Yeah. It's really coming along nicely," the floating cat of the group also chirped, marveling at the sheer size of the structure Trunks was now patting down with his shovel.

Stepping back with his fingers forming a frame in the air, the now uncharacteristically cautious lavender haired demi-Saiyan sighed and looked across at his two closest friends, "Alright. Just a few more towers and I think we're good."

Putting down her plastic crab, the cheerful looking Marron smiled at the prince's son, "What do you think we should add this time?" She then picked up the two sand-castle buckets she had with her. "The boxy one or the cone shaped one?"

Rubbing his chin, Trunks then grinned and pointed at the one on her left, "Let's go with the boxy one and build a massive wall around the castle." He added to this suggestion by drawing a line in the sand around Master Roshi's position, "A defense around the building to stop the tide from coming in."

"Yeah. Yeah. Let's build a giant moat as well. Make it super defensive," Goten chirped from his side, poking his head around from his side of the mountain.

Feeling giddy, Marron raised her hands in the air and cheered, "We're going to make this the best sand castle ever!"

"And all of us are here to make sure that happens," a new voice cut in from the sidelines. When the kids turned, they immediately saw Paprika, dressed in a surprisingly tasteful skirt and vest, kneel down beside the castle with another bucket of shells and seaweed. Laying them out across the sand, the white haired woman with horns then beamed up at the kids with a very motherly smile in play. "I think you guys could use a little more shells along your wall." Her words earned a playful laugh from Goten and Marron as the two crawled over to see what other goodies their teenage friend had managed to grab.

Obviously the Makyan was having a blast searching the island for all the trinkets to give to the kids. It was her way of partaking in their little game.

As the youngsters got down to constructing the castle wall around the still unconscious Master Roshi, following the small beach around the remainder of the island, the rest of the gang could be seen having fun in their own respective ways. While Piccolo was standing beside the house and chatting with Android 17, on another part of the beach, Gohan and his friends were having an exciting game of volleyball.

Wanting to satisfy their personal rivalries with one another, the teens had been divided up according to everyone's desires to beat the other person down. On one side, you had Gohan, Erasa, Touya and Lime, and on the other, you had Videl, Sharpener, Sena, and Yukie, all eight of whom were wrapped up in what seemed like your everyday volleyball game between friends. There was really nothing out of the ordinary going on between them that would call for any sort of attention. They were just out there having fun knocking the ball over the net… and becoming quite competitive with one another as to how quickly the game was progressing.

All of them adorned in fashionable swimsuits that suited each of their characters, the gang of eight zigzagged left and right at great speeds, trying to keep the ball in play. Laughter and banter rang out loudly between them as Videl hit the ball up high, setting it up for Sena to leap and spike it over the net.

"Whoa!" Lime shouted, diving to the side and knocking the ball into the air just before it hit the sand. Landing on her front, the girl in the two-piece yellow and red striped bikini looked up with a grin, "Touya!"

"Mine!" the boy with the glasses and white trunks shouted, cupping his hands together and digging the fast-moving object into the air.

Seeing the ball flying towards her, Erasa grinned and sprinted forward, heading towards the area where it was going to pass. As it turns out, it was right where her crush and school's top student was now standing, with his back turned towards the ditzy player. "Gohan!"

Without needing to be told twice, the grinning demi-Saiyan dropped to his knee and braced for impact, a split second before he felt Erasa's foot land against his back and the girl leap high into the air above him. Intercepting the ball the instant it was flying past, the lithe blonde smacked the inflated sphere and sent it shooting over the net and straight towards the opposing team's boundary.

Reacting in alarm, Sharpener attempted to hit it, only for it to blow past his spike and towards the ground. Yukie attempted to dive for it, successfully managing to intercept it just before it hit the floor. However, with the angle it bounced off of her hand, not only did it fly out of bounds, it also ended up striking the water on the way out. The moment it splashed, the winners of the long volley made their victory known to the world.

"YES!" Touya shouted, hands shooting up into the air as he and Lime shared a high-ten. "Eight-to-six, baby!"

"Woo! Yes!" Erasa cheered, shrieking with laughter as she found herself straddling Gohan's shoulders and being lifted into the air. As the blonde in the green string bikini and thong shook her hands in the air victoriously, the Saiyan that was holding her, with his tail hidden comfortably underneath his blue shorts, did a miniature lap of their space and bounced the girl up and down, allowing her to properly acknowledge their score. "Now that's what I call teamwork!" She then leaned forward and grinned down at the boy she was piggy-backing. "Thanks for the setup, hot-stuff."
"Anytime," the demi-Saiyan chuckled, earning an affectionate poke in the nose from the blonde.

Once she'd said her thanks, the girl looked back up and jabbed across at the others. "In your face, Videl and Sharpener!"

Shaking her head at her best friend's antics, Videl, wearing a tasteful sky-blue, two-piece swimsuit, then pointed back at the blonde, who was using her boyfriend as a victory platform. "You'd better watch yourself, Erasa, because my next spike is heading right for your head." She said this all with a competitive grin in play.

"Bring it on, girlfriend," the blonde teenager replied, upper-cutting the air and clapping her bicep at the same time. "I'll send it right back at you, tenfold."

"Not if I get to it first," Sharpener shot back in support of his team, looking on as Sena returned with the volleyball and passed it back over to Lime on the other side. The jock then cracked his knuckles and slid into a battle ready stance, throwing a nod towards the players on the other side. "I'm coming for you, Touya!"

"Bring it on, blondie!" the glasses wearing teen hollered, throwing his hands out in a showy manner before slapping his hands against his pectorals like a primate. "You can't touch this!"

"But I sure as hell can," the boy's girlfriend, Yukie, returned competitively, cracking her neck as the doe girl then shook her hands out. "I think it's time to redeem myself for my slipup."

"You said it, babe," Sena chuckled, giving the girl behind her a high-five before placing her hands on her knees and smirking. "Let's do this."

"Hear that, guys?" Lime asked the teenagers on her side of the net, "These posers think they have what it takes to take us on. What do you think we should do with them?"

It didn't take long for one of them to come up with an answer. "Destroy them. That's what we're going to do," Gohan answered, shooting a grin across at Videl, who returned his competitive air in kind. When he looked up at Erasa on top of his shoulders, the half-Saiyan boy grinned and patted her thigh, "Are you with me on this?"

"You bet your sweet ass, I am," Erasa replied, sliding off of the teen to get back into position. When she high-fived her crush and best friend in appreciation, the blonde and the rest of her troop quickly rotated and changed spots, with Touya taking the lead at the front.

Once Lime passed Gohan the ball, the teen with the glasses grinned at his compatriots, "Alright, boy and girls. Let's bring another win back for team four-star! Who's with me?" When all of them answered in their own individual manners, Touya shook his head in a disappointed manner, "Oh, I think I heard a tumbleweed blow across a dry wasteland several miles away from here. I said WHO'S WITH ME!" This earned an even louder, more aggressive cheer from his three teammates, which drew an impressed nod from the sportsman. "Now that's more like it! Bring it in, guys!" He then placed his hands on his hips and felt all three of them take a step towards him and give him a good, old slap on the ass one after the other. "Yes. We got this. Yep. We got this. We got this. Get in there. Get in there."

"Quit slapping each other's asses and let's start the next round already!" Sharpener practically yelled, though it was clear from all four kids on the other side of the net that they were thoroughly amused by the idiot quadruples' stupidity.

Once all the kissing and bro-hugging was done and dusted, Gohan got the game restarted and soon enough, the band of eight troublemakers were at it again. The ball was soon flying over the net in a white, spherical blur as both teams began trying to decimate the other by putting in the hardest hits possible. It soon began changing hands so many times that their volleys lasted for several full minutes at a time, which didn't bother any of them in the slightest.

Their little content though soon drew the attention of the other guests at the party. Piccolo, Krillin, Chiaotzu, Launch and Android 18, retiring from their previous conversations, soon wandered over to watch the teenagers conduct their little exercise in futility and sat off to the side as their only invested audience. While the Namekian stood under the nearby palm tree with his arms folded alongside his human companions, Launch and Android 18 had taken to lying out on benches underneath the shade, enjoying the cool breeze of the ocean and the hilarious banter between the kids.

As an additional note, both women were dressed in two-piece swimsuits, with the android sporting a hot green number with string-ties and the other a white bikini with red flames.

Watching Gohan spike a shot over the net, only to be effectively intercepted by Videl, Krillin gave a hearty chuckle as the teens continued screaming at each other for more action. "Man. They're really going at it."

"Do you think they'll stop anytime soon?" Chiaotzu asked, while at the same time sipping on a mango smoothie that he'd made for himself inside the house.

The former monk chuckled at the little mime's inquiry, "With Gohan and Videl on their teams, that doesn't seem very likely."

As the two men made comments, a shadow soon fell over the women seated underneath the palm. When both tanners looked across to see who it was, they spotted Zangya, still decked out in her sun dress, setting up a chair alongside their position. When she noticed the two blondes staring at her, the fair-skinned Hera grinned, "Hey. Mind if I join you guys?"

The curly haired Launch smiled and waved, "Knock yourself out. It's a free space."

"Thanks," Zangya chirped, straightening up and slowly removing her dress. Sliding the bands off of her shoulders carefully, she then lifted it over her head and tossed it aside. Once that was done, she then slid into the chair she'd positioned alongside Launch and made herself comfortable. "So… what's the score?"

The former bandit shrugged, "I don't know. I lost count about seven volleys ago."

Willing to fill in that part, Android 18 glanced across at her friend from outer space and answered, "I believe the score is tied at fourteen to-ugh." She then stopped dead when she suddenly noticed the outfit Zangya was wearing, a reaction that also drew Launch's attention over to the newcomer.

When Tien's wife noticed the issue for herself, the woman's eyes widened just as much as her fellow blonde's.

Sensing the eyes of the women burrowing into her temple, the orange haired woman looked across at them oddly, "Something wrong?"

Clearing her throat, the startled android smiled back nervously. "N-No. It's just…" She then took a moment to look her friend over. Smooth skin and curvaceous figure being the foundational traits, the woman's outfit wasn't exactly something she would expect the Hera to be wearing. Figuring it was something new, the android drank in the purple, one-piece swimsuit, which not only had a strap design that made it resemble something a little more erotic, it also had strings crisscrossing the front part and tying it together like a shoe or a corset. Needless to say, it was quite the eye catcher of an ensemble, something that Eighteen felt she needed to acknowledge. "Your swimsuit is... pretty daring..."

"Eh?" Blinking, Zangya then blushed and looked down at her purple one-piece, "I-Is it?"

Both Android 18 and Launch nodded in perfect sync, with the bandit also giving a nervous grin, "Damn girl. Who are you trying to impress with that... Gohan?" When she saw the Hera look away with an even deeper shade of scarlet appearing across her face, the mercenary slowly sat up in surprise and her grin widened enthusiastically. "Oh, seriously? Woo! Check out the stones on this girl!"

The incredibly flushed Hera then glared back at her and hissed, "Shut up, Launch." Honestly, having her suit pointed out by the raucous woman was bad enough. She didn't need to rest of the island catching on to her motives.

Either way, the party at Kame House turned out to be a real blast for everyone. The teenagers' game of volleyball lasted all the way up to the point the food on the barbecue was all done and, as soon as the plates had been dealt out, everybody wasted no time in digging in.

OOO

(Two weeks later)

Another many days came and went, and peace and prosperity continued to grip the entire population of planet earth. With no otherworldly calamities befalling them in the wake of the chaos that'd recently been dealt to West City, the human and animal races of the world continued to live out their days as per the usual routine. But despite the warm summer days of plenty and the serene atmosphere that continued to bathe most of the parts making up the super continent, the people of the tiny world couldn't help but feel that something else was going to happen.

Something big...

With the string of random events that'd taken place following the seven years after Cell's threat upon the world, entire populations found themselves bracing for the next oncoming storm. As to what this storm would be however, they had no idea. However, after their most recent experiences with giant alien monsters and mechs invading the planet, the earth's united military force was on permanent stand-by, holding their breaths for the next big cataclysm to march in.

Whatever disaster was to befall them next, the government and their defenders were ready. Their success all depended on how much their weapons had improved over the last several months and how early they were able to act.

As for the Z-fighters, their timetables hadn't shifted in the least. Vegeta was still killing himself in the Gravity Room, Gohan had been training even harder than before to master his new assets while simultaneously attending school his friends, Bulma introduced a new line of capsules to the market, Goten and Trunks were still lively as always, and the humans who made up the rest of the team were still chilling out as always. Even the guardians up on the highest tower of earth were finding their days had become pretty mundane.

All except for Piccolo, who was right now floating above the tiled surface of Kami's Lookout and was deeply engrossed in meditation. As he hovered there, completely ignoring the butterflies fluttering around him, Mr. Popo had taken to his usual chore of watering the flowers in the garden and Dende, sticking to his responsibilities like a pro, was looking down upon the earth and keeping tabs on the population. With his fingers wrapped securely around his staff for support, the young Namekian played his part, contemplating over the events taking place around him, while simultaneously offering his support to those people who needed it most.

Though he didn't often use his far-reaching telekinesis, whenever Dende did hear of a person in desperate need, he would help them out however he could, using his influence to come to a reasonable arrangement.

Times were pretty much the same for the guardians up on the floating castle and as the night rode on into morning, it seemed as though they were in for another, long, ordinary day.

However, just as Mr. Popo was about to water his collection of tulips on the next patch, a distant rumble on the horizon suddenly drew his attention upwards. A second later, the entire lookout unexpectedly shook. It was this tremor in the atmosphere and ground that caused Dende to look up with a start and Piccolo to open his eyes, effectively cutting him off from his training.

Blinking, the young guardian quickly looked behind him. "Hey… did you guys hear that?"

His senior, frowning deeply, dropped down from his position and landed with a grunt, "I felt that."

The man then quickly marched over to the edge of the lookout, determined to figure out where that sound had come from.

Before he could reach his fellow Namekian, another shockwave suddenly rang out. This one being even louder than the first, the thunderclap caused both the lookout and even the earth to tremble, as Piccolo was nearly knocked stumbling forward from the violent quiver the floating castle experienced. The trio's eyes widening in shock, the band of protectors quickly regained their balance and held their positions, their brains mentally counting down to what they predicted to be the next shockwave.

Their prophecies were right on the mark. Just as they anticipated, another loud thunderclap rang out, with this one rattling the lookout and drawing cries of shock from both Mr. Popo and Dende, the latter of whom had to throw his body onto the tiled floor to stop from falling off of the platform.

Amidst the shaking and the undulating of the tiles, the teenage Namekian looked up with terrified yell, "By the Kais… what is happening, Mr. Popo?"

"I… I don't know," the guardian's attended replied, before giving another yelp of shock when repeated thunderclaps suddenly started to echo across the sky.

Baffled by the invisible tremors engulfing their space, Piccolo gritted his teeth and stretched out his senses, despite to figure out what was causing this anomaly.

Eventually, the source of the outrageous shockwaves soon pinged on the man's radar and, when he eventually honed in on it with his full and undivided attention, the man's eyes widened in horror. The same thing happened to Dende as well who, along with his mentor and fellow Namekian, turned their attention towards the skies. Once all three people on the courtyard looked towards the heavens, they watched in utter bewilderment as a large black hole suddenly opened up in the space above the planet.

Initially terrified, thinking that this mass of gravity-defying energy was going to suck the entire earth into oblivion, the two guardians were then caught completely by surprise when, from out of the slip space rupture, they saw an entire planet shimmer into view. Looking to be roughly the same size as the earth, the large terrestrial world with the glowing atmosphere had a large, green nebula-like cloud surrounding it, which hugged against its surface like a ring and had multiple spiral arms wafting out from it. This gave it an overall galaxy like appearance, with the earthen world at the center of its mass.

The moment the forested object completely materialized into view and the black hole closed up, it then sat there, falling into orbit of the earth and, by extension, the rest of the Solar System.

Piccolo, Dende, Mr. Popo, and no doubt the entire portion of the earth facing the planet, were dumbstruck.

Eyes wide with sweat pouring down his face in a stream, the current guardian of earth could only ask one thing, "Wha-…. What is that?"

Piccolo, being the most rational-minded and calmest on the balcony, gulped nervously and, with beads of sweat trickling down his face, uttered a single, irrefutable answer.

"Trouble."

(TO BE CONTINUED)

Author's Note:

Additional Info: Because my fanfiction Dragonball Z: Legacies not only includes elements taken straight from the canon storyline, GT, and the manga, but also the movies (e.g. Bojack Unbound, Broly Second Coming, Lord Slug) and the games (e.g. Budokai Tenkaichi, Dragonball Online), there is a lot of information I researched and included in the story itself that many fans should be able to recognize.

Not only does it include game and anime exclusive characters such as Lime, Master Thief Hasky, Chico the orphan, Icarus the dragon, and Froze of Frieza's race, but it also includes technology and cultures across the broader range of the Dragonball genre (mentioned but not limited to the Dr. Slump comics and the fan comic Dragonball: Multiverse by Salagir and Gogeta Jr.). This is why I added Hanasia into the story as Goku's mother, since I thought she was cool. Gine is also in it, but in a twist is Turles' mum. This is in keeping with the original Bardock - The Father of Goku OVA.

Since we've gotten this far in the story, I think it'll be worth mentioning some of the other aspects that's already been covered so that all my readers are informed of the direction I'm taking the story.

Super Saiyan transformations:

Super Saiyan: Mentioned as part of an ancient Saiyan Prophecy as far back in the series as the Namek Saga by Vegeta, the legendary form of the Super Saiyan is an advanced transformation assumed by extraordinarily powerful members of the Saiyan race in the Dragonball franchise. Up until that point, for the last thousand years it was considered nothing but a legend, until Goku first achieved it on Namek in his battle with Frieza.

As quoted by Goku in the manga, the transformation to Super Saiyan "comes in response to a need, not a desire." In all known cases in the canon storyline, the form has initially been triggered by either desperation or indignation. Any other conditions are unknown, and motivation between each character tends to differ. For example, Goku achieved it through anger at the murder of his best friend, Gohan achieved it through the anguish he felt from his past failings, and Vegeta achieved it through sheer frustration at his inability to achieve it, including Bardock, who was nowhere near as conditioned or as powerful as his son had been at the time of his first transformation.

In the Legacies storyline, both Sandra and Maya were able to achieve their first Super Saiyan forms on two separate occasions. This happened while they were both locked in combat with aliens from Frieza's race and a dictator from another planet, with rage and personal loss allowing them to attain their respective forms.

Furthermore, in the canon storyline, the form is primarily reached by individuals who've achieved a high level of strength and skill. As the Saiyans train over the course of the series, they discover uncharted levels beyond the first Super Saiyan forms.

Unlike in canon, in the Legacies storyline, both Goten and Trunks, being inherently strong due to the power achieved by their fathers on the days they were conceived, experienced similar sensations of anger and pain in order for them to transform to Super Saiyan. This is in-keeping with the primary elements necessary to achieve the legendary form.

Known users: Goku, Gohan, Vegeta, Goten, Trunks, Mirai Trunks, Mirai Gohan, Bardock, Hanasia, Pan, Goren, Eva, Beat (Dragonball Online), Note (Dragonball Online), Sandra and Maya

Super Saiyan 2: Also known as the true Ascended Saiyan form, Super Saiyan 2 is the direct successor to the first Super Saiyan transformation. It is very similar to the original form in appearance and attainment; however, the power output is far greater, as speed, strength, and energy are all drastically increased. Gohan is the first person to achieve it in the manga in his fight against the maniacal android Cell.

Initially it was believed to be a direct result of Gohan's 'Hidden Power', while in actuality it is just the second level in the long line of Super Saiyan transformations. The transformation is triggered through the same emotions that were used to achieve the first Super Saiyan form, but to a much higher degree. While it is not specified how Goku and Vegeta achieved Super Saiyan 2 in the manga, both of them were still able to achieve it through hard work and perseverance. According to the information in the Daizenshuu power guide, a large quantity of energy earned through intense training and an intense emotional response is required to trigger the transformation.

In the Legacies storyline, Goku achieved this form training in Otherworld, Vegeta initiated his trigger through rage at his wife being harmed in the battle against the alien parasite Zeru, Sandra was prompted into it through her best friend getting injured in a battle to save a planet, and Maya achieved it through sheer frustration at being unable to cause damage to an incredibly dangerous foe, and reacted to her need for greater power.

Known users: Goku, Gohan, Vegeta, Mirai Trunks, Beat (Dragonball Online), Note (Dragonball Online), Goren, Pan, Sandra and Maya

Super Saiyan 3: Officially the third form of Super Saiyan transformation; it is the successor to the first and second transformations. In the canon storyline, Goku was the very first person to achieve this form training in Otherworld, with Goten and Trunks reaching the form when they fused into Gotenks and trained to master it.

According to the official Daizenshuu guide, the form uses a Saiyan's full potential with power extracted from every drop of the Saiyan's blood. While the Full-Power Super Saiyan form was 100 percent utilization of the user's stamina, the purpose of the Super Saiyan 3 transformation is to increase the utilization of ki. As a result, energy is rapidly drained from the user's body in order to maintain its form. This notably leads to extended levels of fatigue. If the user has died and is not encumbered by a living body, the strain of the transformation is reduced somewhat, but as demonstrated by Goku a number of times in the manga and the movies, even while dead the transformation is still taxing on the body.

Though it is never specified in the Dragonball canon how Super Saiyan 3 was initially discovered, Goku was still able to achieve the transformation by pushing his body to its absolute limit similar to how the Super Saiyan 2nd Grade form was achieved.

In other series media, including Dragonball Online and the Dragonball Z games, other characters have been able to successfully achieve the transformation through a variety of different means. Vegeta was able to successfully achieve the Super Saiyan 3 form through extreme rage and vigorous training, Mirai Trunks transformed when enraged in his battle with Mirai Fat Buu, and Broly was able to achieve the form through an enormous Zenkai boost, upgrading his Legendary Super Saiyan level.

In the Legacies storyline, the characters that have achieved Super Saiyan 3 all used the abovementioned elements mentioned in the Dragonball Z media and canon to achieve their forms in a variety of ways. Gohan, being the first Z-fighter to achieve the form, came very close through vigorous training alone. It was only with an emotional push of rage at the supposed loss of Videl that allowed him to achieve it and, simultaneously, jump to a pseudo-Super Saiyan God form after absorbing Godly ki from Set's prison. Goku achieved Super Saiyan 3 the same way as he achieved it in canon in Otherworld by following Gohan's example, drawing on the power from deep within to push his body beyond its limit. Sandra also achieved the form through rage at seeing her friend being tortured while fighting as a slave in Intergalactic Emperor Mondo's arena.

Only the most exceptional of Saiyans have ever successfully achieved this form. Through Sandra's exposition in Legacies, the culture of the Super Saiyan forms is further expanded upon, as she mentions that the alternate name given to the legendary Super Saiyan 3 was called the Golden Mane Super Saiyan form, due to the incredibly long hair and regal appearance.

Known users: Gohan, Sandra, Goku, Bardock, Beat (Dragonball Online), Note (Dragonball Online), and Mirai Trunks

Super Saiyan God (Transformation to Godhood): Though it is unknown whether there are any other forms of Super Saiyan beyond Super Saiyan 3, there is an alternate form a Saiyan can achieve that can be accomplished exclusively by those who can harness the potent form of energy known as Godly ki.

A new concept officially introduced in Battle of Gods, a Super Saiyan God is a legendary form that'd remained shrouded in mystery for over thousands of years (coincidentally enough). Having never been mentioned prior to the Buu Saga, it was then brought to light when Beerus, the God of Destruction, was told by the Oracle Fish that he would meet a rival and that he would be a Super Saiyan God. When it is eventually achieved by Goku in the movie, the form allows the Saiyan to fight on par with Beerus using only 70 percent of his full power, who was previously able to defeat all of the Z-fighters effortlessly. This form also allows the user to sense and utilize godly ki, which can only be picked up by other deities.

According to canon, the ritual required to achieve this form involves five Saiyans with righteous hearts concentrating their ki and 'pouring their heart' into the body of a sixth. If successful, the Saiyan having the energy concentrated into him will achieve the Super Saiyan God form and gain control over Godly ki.

A rare form of ki, godly ki is shown to be far above other forms of normal ki. Because it is exclusively used by deity level beings, only those who use godly ki can sense other beings that use godly ki, and cannot be sensed by anybody else, including scouters. In the canon storyline, known users of godly ki include Beerus, Whis, Goku, Vegeta, the Kais (though to a much lesser degree), and Dende. Though it is not mentioned how Dende came to learn how to control godly ki, it can be assumed he learned it while taking on the role of Kami of earth over the past seven years. Because only deities can sense other deities, they must possess some sort of control over godly ki.

Unlike with the Saiyans, who use a six person ritual to enable one of them to gain control over godly ki, it is also unspecified how Beerus or Whis achieved mastery over godly ki. However, this opens the door to the possibility that mastery of godly energy can be done by anyone, with the transformation and utilization manifesting differently between races, emphasizing a much larger culture behind the concept of godly ki.

The story of Legacies expands on this culture, dubbing Godly ki as Celestial energy by other alien species due to its divine nature.

Officially, according to Akira Toriyama, Beerus's design was conceived from appearances and attitudes of other Ancient Egyptian Gods and Goddesses, including Seth and Sekhmet, both of whom were notable figures in Egyptian mythology and contributed to the God of Destruction's final design. With Beerus's origin being deeply rooted in mythological figures throughout history, other Gods and Goddesses of various cultures have also been included in the Legacies story, including Norse, Egyptian, Roman, Greek, Celtic, Chinese and Japanese deities. Such deities include Ra, Set, Aphrodite, Thor, Odin, and Loki, all of whom come from different alien races who've mastered godly ki.

This expands on the concepts of Gods in the Dragonball Z universe, while also creating gender equality between characters by including powerful female Goddesses, as well as male Gods.

Each of these deities have used different rituals and means to gain control over godly ki. This isn't just limited to a primitive six person ritual, but also trials exclusive for the races they originated from. Gohan also demonstrated in his battle with Set an alternate means of gaining control over godly ki by unconsciously absorbing it into his body from her prison cell due to the absence of other forms of ki. In doing so, he also achieved a pseudo-Super Saiyan God form by adding his Super Saiyan transformations into the mix, thereby multiplying the Godly ki in his body several times over.

Though it is not the official ritual used by the Saiyans, this method demonstrated another means of gaining strength through godly ki for a Saiyan.

Just like the Gods of Ancient Greek, Japanese and Norse mythology, the Gods featured in Legacies also demonstrate an Achilles heel to various artifacts and elements in the universe. (This is an element I derived specifically from Homer's Odyssey, which I found to be a compelling read during my study. I just love how all of the Greek Gods have such a lively culture. I think that's what's really missing from the concept of Beerus, it's that he never experiences these kinds of conflicts. Hopefully my story amends that by adding more diversity). Mythological artifacts such as swords and spears forged from enchanted elements can be used to harm and slay Gods, with artifacts constructed from materials, such as stars, quasars and anti-matter, also serving as a resource. Much like the Rings of Gyges of Ancient Greek mythology, which were made of an unknown celestial element to grant invisibility to the one who wields them, in the same suite, an element of the opposite nature can harm one who possesses invincibility or Godhood, such as the box that sealed Pandora and the blade wielded by Perseus to slay Medusa, whose status was said to be equal to that of the Goddess Circe.
In Legacies, Beerus is one of several Gods who represent the element of destruction and maintain balance in the universe. He is also a student of the life form identified as Whis, who'd trained many other Gods and Goddesses over the centuries he's lived. The other deities that represent the elements of construction and destruction also received their training from other figures and past Gods, and have their own attendants that serve them and fulfill responsibilities in their absences.

Androids and Mechs: In the canon storyline, Doctor Gero demonstrated the ability to create androids capable of fighting against Super Saiyan and even deity level opponents. His strongest creation, Cell, is a biological android capable of using the exact same techniques and skills as the other Z-fighters, including the Saiyans, as he possesses the DNA samples of every single one of them. The android was also able to increase his strength to the point he could match a fully powered Super Saiyan 2 Gohan.

In Dragonball Online and Dragonball GT (even though it's non-canon, it's still used as part of the series like the movies), the science that went into designing the androids was further expanded on in the Dragonball universe. The androids Nico and Nimu, who were designed by Doctor Auto and possess the exact same technology and appearances as Androids 17 and 18, have demonstrated the ability to fight on par with Super Saiyan 3, Super Saiyan 4, and God level opponents. Super Android 17, who was also partly designed by Doctor Gero, also demonstrated the ability to fight on par with Super Saiyan 4 Goku, as well as absorb enormous quantities of energy to multiply his strength. Even Doctor Flapp created Arale, who possesses the innate capability to distort reality at a whim and split the earth in two with a tap of her finger.

Borrowing concepts from the androids in these media, Legacies further delves into the capacity of human technology through Kaiser. Showcasing intelligence on par with Gero's and Auto's, Kaiser was able to use the same technology used in the androids to create armored combat suits and mechs capable of fighting on par with Super Saiyan 2 and Super Saiyan 3 level opponents. Instead of having the metal frames on the inside, the mech frames are exterior and can be used by anyone, making his technology incredibly flexible in terms of their usage. However, while the androids are cell and biological based, Kaiser's mechs are core and armor based, meaning they have more limitations than the androids in terms of how much energy they can store and absorb. He is later able to correct this by modifying Hasky's design by adding the energy cells to her suit, and later Chico's.

If the idea has been used in Dragonball Z, whether it's canon, filler (including GT), a movie (not Evolution), a game or a comic, then it is guaranteed to be featured in this story. Dragonball Z: Legacies can be seen as an expansion of old and new Dragonball Z concepts, as well as a trial of ideas embedded into one story. At least that's what I'm aiming for.

For more information, consult the Dragonball Z wiki.
Across the desert, several kilometers outside of Earth's capital, an enormous military base, the same installation that was responsible for detecting the alien titan Zeru a year earlier, was currently on full emergency alert. Past the enormous radar and telescopic dishes scattered across the landscape, the barbwire fences surrounding the airfield and across the base's open grounds, sirens could be heard blaring from every single corner of the facility as men and women crisscrossed the tarmac, prepping vehicles and readying their weapons for combat. As of right now, the site had become a steaming cauldron of barely organized chaos, with soldiers rushing into battle positions and preparing their aircraft for launch. The engines of jets and assault vehicles roared into life, filling the countryside with a deafening howl, at the same time staff on the ground directed the pilots to their stations and guided the craft to their exit points.

While all this was happening on the outside, inside Fort Skuld's main tower, in the room that was easily recognized as air traffic control and surrounding the massive, circular table that was the beating heart of the base's operations, the officers in charge the facility were corroborating with their staff to try and figure out what was going on. Across all four corners of the chamber, surveillance personnel and airmen working diligently at the dozens of monitors were in a state of continuous panic, as whatever it was they'd managed to pick up on their scanners was raising all kinds of hell with their instruments. Not only that, but the men tasked with organizing the emergency protocols and communicating with the ground crews at their neighboring bases were oblivious as to what they were supposed to do next.

After all, this was the first time any of them had ever had to deal with a planet appearing out of nowhere a few hundred miles away from Earth's orbit.

Shit like this just didn't happen on a daily basis.

As the staff scrambled about the central hub, the General of the base, a dark-skinned man with a grey army cut, mustache, and wearing a blue uniform with five-stars on his shoulder patches, stormed into the room with his secretary right on his heels. Returning the salutes of the people he passed, the well-dressed commander then stopped in front of the central table. There, hovering above the platform, he spotted the large, blue hologram of the very thing the personnel at the base were now attempting to deconstruct.

While the General slipped his hands behind his back and furrowed his brow, he was quickly joined by an attractive, anthropomorphic wolf woman with grey and white fur, wearing a similar style of blue uniform, and showcasing the multiple insignia of a Colonel, which were sewn into her shoulder straps. "General Rin, sir," the female greeted, saluting her superior as she stood at attention beside him.

Acknowledging the woman's salute, the commander then frowned deeply, "Alright… would somebody care to explain to me what the heck I'm looking at right now?"
The female wolf with the mascara and yellow eyes quickly turned her gaze to the projector. "Sir, as you can see by the three-dimensional satellite rendering; a terrestrial planet the same size and density as the Earth, along with half a dozen small moons, has just appeared inside of our orbital path, and has situated itself several hundred miles away from our planet's position. The scientists over at the National Aeronautics and Space Travel Administration are gathering up Intel on the alien world and sending it over to us as we speak."

"I see. Great," the General muttered, looking the hologram over a second time as more numbers and readings suddenly started popping up around it. "Is there any chance the computers can tell us where this... thing actually came from?"

"That... I'm afraid is something we're still working on," the Colonel replied hesitantly, before turning her attention back to the General, where she saw him lean in closer to read the information materializing beside the sphere. "Though we have no idea what system or galaxy this planet originated from, the satellites did pick up an unusual amount of Hawking radiation and gravitational fluctuations. Based on the information we were able to collect, the scientists at NASTA theorized that the planet must have arrived here via a slip space rupture... most likely a wormhole in deep space. Its exit from the subspace dimension caused a cosmic shockwave, which rippled outwards at great speed and affected everything within reach of the planet. This explains why the computers picked up the strange resonance field bouncing off of our atmosphere."

General Rin, processing the information being pieced together, nodded in understanding, "Have there been any accidents or casualties caused by these resonance waves?"

"None so far," the Colonel answered, shaking her head, "However, we do have reason to believe that the anomaly may have upset some of the local air traffic around the Western parts of the continent. I have ground crews and air control looking into it right now."

"Good. While you're at it, contact our departments over in Central City and have them lock down any outward bound communications from the surrounding observatories and research facilities. The last thing we want is for the media to get involved in this and starting up a worldwide panic, like we saw during the first meteorite crisis several years ago," the commander of the base stated, recalling memories of the time Lord Slug and his army invaded the earth.

Though he knew it would be next to impossible to completely stop news of the alien planet's arrival from getting out to the public, since half of the world could practically see the thing hovering several hundred kilometers above them, the best thing they could do right now was stall and assure the people that they had everything under control... at least until they could get troops on the ground.

However, considering they were dealing with something a thousand times larger than some stray comet or space debris from another solar system, even the General was having trouble figuring out where to go from here. In fact... he was absolutely stumped as to what they could actually do.

After seeing the Colonel relay his instructions to a nearby airman and focus her attention back on the celestial object, the base commander then turned to the staff working on the monitors behind him and asked loudly, "How are we doing on the updated status of the alien planet?"

The team leader overseeing the personnel in that part of the room, a blonde man in glasses and uniform, moved away from the monitors and addressed Commander Rin in a serious voice. "The scans of the world show that the planet has a surface pressure of approximately 101.3 kPa... that's roughly around the same pressure as the Earth's. The atmosphere also has a compositional volume consisting mostly of nitrogen and oxygen, meaning that the air surrounding the world is definitely breathable." The sergeant then stopped beside the central hologram and, after typing into the keyboard on his side, threw up a series of slides for the General to inspect. "Photos taken from our planet's orbital telescope also shows that there is a dense layer of cloud covering a lush, green world of mountains, lakes and oceans… indicating a thriving ecosystem of alien flora and fauna."

Narrowing his eyes suspiciously on the windows rotating around the projection of the planet, Rin then gave the team leader a curious look. "And? What do you think?"

"Honestly, sir?" the blonde agent replied with a shrug and a smile, "I think it's safe to say that we've just discovered a planet that humans might actually be able to live on." He then nodded to the hologram alongside them, "Aside from the multiple moons and the enormous dust cloud orbiting it, the planet's atmosphere and structure is almost exactly identical to ours. It even has a strong magnetosphere, which is preventing solar winds and cosmic radiation from affecting its surface."

It was this breakdown of data that quickly had Rin regards the projection with suspicion. "Hold on a second… doesn't the moon's gravitational pull on the Earth cause the ocean's tides to rise and fall with each rotation?" When he felt the eyes of his subordinates boring into his side, the General quickly turned to face them with a concerned stare, "Since the planet is moving so close to ours… how come it hasn't flooded all of our lands and cities yet?"

Adjusting his glasses, the blonde sergeant glared up at the hologram. "That's actually quite tricky to explain," the team leader answered, pulling up another window with a large mathematical equation written in it. He quickly pulled it across so that it hovered directly over the alien planet for illustration. "With such an enormous celestial body suspended so close to us, you would think its proximity to the Earth's surface would be causing enormous gravitational turbulence. However, as you can see from these readings here…” He stopped to point out the thin shield surrounding the foreign world, "we have reason to suspect that the planet is producing its own artificial gravity well. This allows the planet to travel safely through space without affecting any of the systems it happens to come across, protecting it and its atmosphere from harm. It also explains why it's able to hold so many moons in such perfect geosynchronous orbit of it."

General Rin raised an eyebrow, "A planet that defies the laws of physics, huh? That's interesting." Tapping his finger against his hand, the stern commander gave the planet one last look over before glaring apprehensively. After seeing another wave of information appear in the hologram, another question then appeared in his head. "Wait… something about this doesn't feel right."

The female Colonel stepped forward curiously, "What do you mean, sir?"

"Planets don't just appear out of nowhere. I also doubt they have the ability to travel between dimensions on their own accord," the man said, drawing the attention of several other staff members scattered throughout the room. Moving closer to the hologram, the General then scrutinized the surface of the world with a wary eye. "The fact that this one not only has a breathable atmosphere, but also possesses perfect living conditions and an artificial gravity field, means that someone or something must have brought it here." He then turned to the Colonel with a steely look on his face. "I know it sounds crazy… but I think this planet might be inhabited."

This announcement had most of the people in the room go deathly silent. As the computers continued to beep, hum and communicate information between each other, the team leader that'd come to stand beside the hologram projector straightened up and faced the General with an anxious stance. "Inhabited? You mean… there might be… aliens living on that planet?"

"After what's happened to the Earth in the last couple of decades, I think it's been made clear to all of us that we're not the only ones living in the universe," the General stated with a frown, before focusing his attention back on the new world. "That being the case, if this planet is actually inhabited and the people living on it brought it here; my next question is… what do they want?"
After an unsettling white noise fell over the personnel gathered in the chamber, the commander of the base quickly looked across at the men at the monitors, "Have the scanners picked up anything else?"

Realizing he was being called upon, an anthropomorphic male bear in an airman's uniform focused back onto his computer screen and typed away at the keyboard. After a few moments, the furry humanoid shook his head, "No. Nothing, sir. The satellites haven't… wait." Placing a hand over his left headphone, the man then listened carefully as his station began relaying something back to him. Using the programs on his monitor to break up the signal a little more, the staff member's eyes then widened and he looked up towards the General in shock. "I'm… I'm getting something. A message!"

"Me too," a woman from another computer across the room shouted. The officer pressed her hand against her headpiece tightly as she turned her gaze towards her intently listening commander. "A signal is coming in from the alien world."

Rin, appearing startled at this news, looked across towards the female staff member anxiously, "Is it a cyber-attack?"

"No, sir. It's a video and audio stream being transmitted over the public airways. No malicious malware or software detected," the mediator answered, reaching up to her screen to adjust the power. As soon as she did so, she nodded victoriously and then looked back at her commanding officer. "Got it. The message is coming through."

"What's it saying?"

Before she or any of the other men at the desks could answer, a loud hum suddenly filled the room, followed by every single computer screen shutting down. All personnel currently on station recoiled in surprise, with most of the staff quickly moving to adjust their machines and screens. The General and his head staff looked about in alarm, initially thinking that they were experiencing a full system crash of some kind, with most of the staff quickly coming to the same conclusion.
However, just before the crew could being the process of restarting their hardware, the computer screens and the massive hologram in the center of the chamber switched back on and, after the screens blinked and flickered several times, a figure suddenly appeared.

The staff in the room recoiled at the face that materialized before them; a scrambled, pixilated face of an alien humanoid with big ears. Because the monitors were all tweaking out and the quality of the image was considerably scrambled, it was hard to tell who the person was or what the alien looked like. Considering the circumstances and the way all of their computers had suddenly been hijacked, all the men and women in the room could think was that it was the most terrifying thing they'd ever seen in their lives.

Not even the face of the maniacal android Cell from seven years ago had anything on this invader.

A few seconds after the profile of the stranger was projected onto their monitors, through the static and the feedback of the transmission, a haunting, robotic voice suddenly spoke up over every speaker and intercom in the facility.

"We're… (tzt-tzt)... going… to drop… (tzt-tzt)... by."

Moments later, the face vanished and, for the second time in a row, the computers shut down and restared, with power soon being restored to the base. As soon as the lights of the room came back on, the military personnel scattered throughout the room all stood or sat staring at their screens with a look of fear and uncertainty reflected in their eyes.

General Rin, sweat breaking out on his flabbergasted face, swallowed nervously. "Get me King Koku…"

XXX

(Meanwhile)

Up on the alien world orbiting hundreds of miles away from earth, across the sweeping fields and lush forests making up its main continent, the residents of the black fortress that stood as the center of the planet were all gathered in the throne room. Enveloped in the shadows being cast by the chamber's fixtures and pillars, the people assembled inside the enormous, armored castle were all standing around the central throne, which was currently turned in the direction of the hologram screen being projected in front of it from the platinum stone floor. It was on this very screen that a detailed, three-dimensional image of the earth was being shown, along with a series of numbers and additional specifications.

Under the glow of the hologram, six figures of different shapes and sizes could be seen flanking the center seat, with a seventh figure situated comfortably upon the throne. While the latter was adorned in a white, revealing one-piece suit, boots and cloak, the four people standing closest to her were all decked out in heavy, metallic black combat suits. Each one of these uniforms was equipped with a black cape, heavy looking gauntlets, and a helmet with a tinted face visor, designed for concealment and optimal visibility.

Though the blueprints for these outfits were all relatively the same, it should be noted that it was easy to distinguish each of the four figures from one another based solely on their body-shapes and sizes.

The two standing to the right of the chair were both female. The first was a petite young woman with long, brown, hedgehog-style hair that grew down to her waist and had her arms folded across her chest. The second female stood a foot taller than the first, with cat ears protruding from the top of her helmet, and a white and brown, furry tail sticking out from the back of her suit and waving in the air. Stationed behind them was third figure, a large, male, burly figure, with stubby legs, massive arms, and stubby fingers. The fourth figure, standing on the left side of the throne and also decked out in metal plating, was the tallest of the group, possessing a muscular, fighter's build, and a heavy frame and, judging from his shape and stature, was also a man.

The fifth figure in the room was a Namekian, who was not only standing to the left of the armored man, but was also the third tallest and wasn't decked out in any armor at all. On the contrary, instead of a bulky suit, the green fighter had opted to wear a pair of loose-fitted, white pants, brown boots, a yellow top, a shawl with a thick, weighted neck band, and a yellow sash, which he wore over his shoulder. He also had his big arms folded over his chest, showing that he was in a position of attention and readiness.

As for the final figure, this one wasn't human-shaped or organic in any way. About the size of a small tank, the entity was a four-legged, spider-like robot with a large, barrel-like abdomen, two forearms with three, claw-like fingers, and a white, spherical optical sensor at the front. Its design resembled that of a Logicoma and, judging from its specifications, was all tricked out and prepped for combat.

After seeing the extra window that had appeared alongside the image of the earth disappear, the group's standing members then turned their attention to the throne. Once their eyes landed on her, the raven haired leader, with her chin resting on her knuckles, spoke in a calm and clear voice.
"Do you think that message got through to them?"

The woman with the cat-like tail nodded, before speaking in a voice made robotic by her suit's built-in respirator, "Our video was broadcast over every single one of the planet's communication networks. This includes all satellite and media transmissions. If my calculations are correct, about sixty percent of the world's population has now been informed of our presence in this system and will likely be making preparations for our arrival."

"Good," the commander replied, content with hearing this news. "As long as they know that we're in the vicinity, we'll be able to move into the next phase of our operation without interference from the local population." She then glanced across at the two women standing alongside her. "How are we doing on our scan? Have we located the Super Saiyan yet?"

Raising her arm, the woman with feline features then pressed a button on her suit's gauntlet and took control of the projector. When she did, the hologram of the planet broke up into several individual windows, zooming in on different parts of the Earth. Once they'd gotten close enough, the windows then highlighted a dozen spots with red, blinking dots, which were then accompanied by a compilation of various numbers and readings.

"Our computers have detected several enormous power levels scattered across the planet's surface, with each variant registering above the standard norm."

The Namekian positioned nearby lifted his head astutely, "It's true. I can feel them… over half a dozen strong presences on the surface."

It was an assessment that drew a nod of agreement from the raven haired woman seated in the throne. "So can I. But it's clear that most of these figures are keeping their energy suppressed. I can barely tell where they are from all the way up here."

The large spider-tank posted nearby murmured thoughtfully to itself. Upon taking stock of the results, it then swiveled its optical sensor towards its friends and spoke in a child's voice, "Perhaps it is part of their training regiment or something." The tank added to this suggestion with a shrug of its forward arms.

Noticing her leader's eyes glance towards her prompted the humanoid feline to continue her assessment of the situation. "Since they haven't assembled into a single location yet, we can assume that they must've strategically positioned themselves across the planet's surface to cover more ground and split our attention."

"Or…" the armored woman with the long, spiky hair interjected with an obviously impatient tone, "they have no idea that we've even arrived in their space and are just carrying on with their day like normal."

"Obviously we can't tell which one of these power levels belong to our mysterious Saiyan. However, judging from the numbers and statistics, I've managed to narrow down four possible locations our target could be," the woman informed. Pointing up towards the hologram, she then outlined the windows in question, "There is one located in this mountainous region to the East, another atop a large, floating platform to the South West, a couple resting on a secluded island in the middle of the ocean, and two more in this community pocket here, in a large, dome-shaped facility on the West Coast of the mainland."

After contemplating the information for a few moments and seeing how far these power levels were apart from each other, the raven haired female then lowered her hand and tapped it against her arm rest. "There's only one way for us to be sure; we have to go down to the planet personally and make contact with the high power levels at each of these locations. If neither of them turns out to be the Super Saiyan we're looking for, then we may have to resort to more extreme measures." She then turned her attention to the spiky haired woman on her right. "Maya, take Cal and head down to the home in the mountains and draw out the variants residing there. Be sure not to start any trouble until we have confirmation of our target." When she sensed both figures nod, she then looked across at the burly figure in the black suit. "Mobi, you head to the island in the middle of the ocean and pull a headcount of the occupants. If any of the tenants exhibit traits belonging to a Saiyan, contact me at once. You copy?"

The large figure nodded before responding with a simple, easy to distinguish sound.

"Beep."

"Excellent." The raven haired commander then turned to her feline associate, who she saw was waiting patiently for her instructions. "Kure. Since your diplomatic skills and patience are better than the rest of ours, I'll allow you to make contact with the targets hiding out in the city. No doubt they're going to be surrounded by figures of authority and high standing, so I'll be relying on your subtlety and charm to accomplish this task."

An affirmative gesture from the tall female immediately followed, "Roger."

"And what about me?" the giant tank asked with an excited inflection in its vocals, while simultaneously looking across at its raven haired leader with a gleam in its sensors.

Glancing at the quad-legged tank, the female leader responded to it with a fond smile, "You San… I'm going to need you to remain up here with me until we make our way down to ground. I'll need you to keep tabs on the others' life support systems and run the broadcast when the time comes. Got it?"

Flashing the signal lights on her front excitedly, the giant tank acknowledged the order with a salute of her turret arm. "Understood."

While the two individuals made sure the specifications were properly relayed to one another, a loud 'ding' from the hologram's speakers drew the attention of the intimidating Cal and had the large, armored man crane his head upwards inquisitively. "Hey. One of the power signatures is on the move."

Quickly turning their gazes towards the screen, the group of fighters and armored warriors saw one of the windows zoom in on the floating castle. It was here they saw one of the blinking red lights take off and begin heading into the planet's atmosphere. Traveling faster than any manmade object, the unidentified power signature broke into the vacuum and, in a matter of seconds, plotted a straight course towards their planet.

It was the sight of this high power signature that had the warriors in the room stare in confusion and prompted the unmasked members to focus their senses on their rogue target.

When the Namekian in the room locked onto the incoming individual and analyzed the feedback, his eyes widened a little in surprise. He then gazed up at the screen in astonishment. "This energy… it can't be…"

The woman on the throne shot a look across at the green warrior. "Gast? What is it?"

Shaking his head to rid himself of his daze, the old fighter quickly glanced at his leader with intensity reflected in his stare. "The power level heading towards us… belongs to a member of my
This announcement had the enchanting woman in the one-piece suit regard her companion with a mild sense of bewilderment, "Are you certain?"

"Positive," Gast replied without a hint of hesitation. "There's no way I can mistake that energy to belong to anyone else."

Analyzing the feedback of the approaching figure and narrowing her eyes upon the hologram, the spiky haired Maya spoke. "Do you want me to intercept him? The numbers we're getting from this guy are pretty high and he's heading towards us really fast-"

"No. Let me," the Namekian interjected with a sudden flare of assertiveness. After shooting a hard look across at his spiky haired compatriot and the rest of his comrades, the elderly, green fighter reached up, tugged at his collar, and marched across the room, making a b-line for the nearest exit. "It's been eons since I've had a run-in with a member of my race, so I'll go out and personally greet this one myself. If you guys don't hear from me in the next few hours… well…" Stopping for a moment, he then glanced back at his friends and smiled. "I think you can guess what must've happened."

Blinking a few times in confusion, the raven haired warrior on the throne then returned the man's gaze and nodded in understanding. "Alright, Gast. Best of luck." The rest of the people standing around her also passed their respects and best wishes on to their old friend through a series of nods and waves.

With a flash of his cape and one last salute, the green man then flew out through the nearest balcony, setting his sights on a different part of the planet altogether. In a matter of moments, he was gone.

After seeing Gast off, Kure looked back at the holograms above them, gave the windows another once over, before furrowing her brow seriously. "I think he's just coming to check the planet out. I doubt he knows that we're here."

"Then let's try to keep it that way until Gast brings him in. Since our armors are designed to help keep our energy levels suppressed, we shouldn't have any problems of any ki sensitive denizens catching wind of our actions," Maya said, before turning her gaze back to her captain and friend, along with the other fighters next to her. "So… what now, Sandra?"

Thinking it over for a moment, the raven haired empress narrowed her eyes and spoke in an assertive tone, "We'll continue the arrival as planned. We know who our targets are… now it's time to go out and meet them. So let's move."

XXX

(Several minutes later)

Deciding to act as point-man on behalf of the rest of the team, as soon as the alien planet had situated itself comfortably in the space above them, just outside of their moon's orbit, Piccolo wasted no time in taking flight towards the foreign world now floating a stone's throw away from their own. Not even taking the time to contact the others, as he was pretty sure the rest of the Z-fighters had at least gotten word that a large, terrestrial body had appeared right on their doorstep, the Namekian dropped all pretenses of waiting around to see what would happen next and began making tracks towards the unknown object. If there was a chance that the people, if any, on the newly materialized planetoid were hostile, the man wasn't going to give them the chance to make the first move.

If all else failed, then at least the former guardian of Earth could say he was the first to arrive on the scene and was able to stall the enemy long enough for the rest of his compatriots to organize.

Cutting a swath through the vacuum of space, Piccolo continued his approach of the beautiful green planet. Once he was certain he'd gotten close enough, the warrior hit the brakes and drifted to a stop in the middle of the vacuum, just a dozen kilometers away from one of the moons orbiting the primordial, paradise of a world. From his position, the caped crusader was able to see the entire alien body for all its magnificence and splendor. Then, after silently drinking in its scenery for about a minute, the man then focused all of his attention and senses upon the interstellar object, and began getting an accurate bead on its surface.

Piccolo's first objective at this point was to scout the world from a distance for any high power levels. If there happened to be any strong, antagonistic aliens on that planet and they were aware of his presence, the Namekian was in the perfect position to both avoid and return any fire sent his way. This would then lead into his second objective, which was to investigate the world on foot.

The warrior was confident he would be able to find at least something substantial to justify as being problematic. However, after about two minutes of searching, the eagle-eyed Piccolo narrowed his gaze in suspicion.

For some strange reason, not only was the planet showing up as an invisible speck on his radar, but there didn't appear to be anyone living on it. At least… that's what it looked like on first glance.

"Doesn't seem like anyone's home." Ears twitching ever so slightly as his brow furrowed, the green guardian then decided to throw his super-hearing into the mix. "However…"

Then… it happened.

The Namekian warrior recoiled in surprise when a flash of light, one that shone as brightly as a star, suddenly appeared on the surface of the planet. Once it faded, a white beam of energy was then sent hurtling towards him from the same area of the planet at a ridiculous speed. It homed in on Piccolo's position and threatened to wipe him out in a single stroke. Crossing his arms over his face, the former guardian braced himself for the impact and burning sensations to come. But then, instead of striking the man with the force he was anticipating, the bright ray of ethereal energy engulfed the fighter and, like a scene taken straight from an alien-abduction, began to drag the green fighter towards the planet.

Unable to resist the gravitational force enacting upon his body, a bewildered Piccolo gave a loud yell of shock as he was tractor-beamed at neck-breaking speed towards the foreign world. He traveled through the pillar of light, spinning and spiraling out of control down a straight and narrow path. Then, after passing the moons orbiting the alien world and plummeting through the gaseous cloud surrounding the world, the Namekian was gone…

…sucked down towards parts unknown.

XXX

(Sometime later)

(Back on earth)

While the population across the rest of the planet gradually descended into a nervous clamor, in the regions surrounding the Mount Paozu area, the locals were still carrying on like they would any other morning. In fact, due to the alien world appearing thousands of miles to the west of the continent, here on the eastern side, the people residing in the multiple villages and towns were pretty much oblivious to the chaos that was now taking place in their world's respective capitals. The same could be said for the resident super heroes who, on this beautiful, crisp, late Saturday sunrise, were enjoying a pleasant day out in the woods, appreciating one another's company the only way they knew how.

With Goten still gorging on jam toast, eggs and bacon at the kitchen table, Gohan, Zangya, Icarus, Lime and Videl used that opportunity to sneak out several minutes earlier to have a brisk stroll through the fields, which they quickly hoped would lead them to some place exciting. This eventually ended with the group stopping by one of the enormous lakes dotting the mountainous region, which also happened to be the very same spot the males of the Son family often came around to do some fishing.

That being the case, since they had so many people over today, the half-Saiyan male and leader of their little troop decided to do the honorable thing… and catch them a couple of tuna for lunch.

So, upon depositing his stuff on the bank, the ever adventurous Son Gohan wasted no time in diving in and going for an aquatic hunt. Icarus, not too comfortable with being underwater, had taken to sleeping on the cool ground by the lake's edge, guarding his best friend's training gear and keeping an eye on their surroundings. The women meanwhile, stripping down to their undergarments, opted to have some well-earned fun of their own. This took the form of a free-for-all splash war in the shallows, in which all three of them did their best to try and one-up the other in an old-fashioned, pond slugfest. It started off as playful and tame at first, but had now started to escalate into something a little bit more competitive.

"Eat this!" Lime shouted while digging both hands through the water and hitting Videl in the face with a wash of perspiration. The full-frontal shot from the girl in the green lace underwear had the raven haired teenager stumble back with a laugh.

"Oh yeah?" the crime fighter yelled back, at the same time returning fire with a few, one-handed splashes of her own. "You want to test me, girl? Take this! And this! Ack!" While the teen in the black spandex shorts and white gym bra was bombarding her friend with splashes, she was suddenly struck from behind by a separate wave of water. This had Videl look over her shoulder to see Zangya, with her hands cupped in front of her, grinning impishly in the pair's direction.

"Come on, Satan. Bring it on!" the orange haired woman in the purple lace underwear goaded, before beginning to send huge arcs of water flying at the pair of teenagers. Both Videl and Lime stumbled backwards when they were hit by the salvo of heavy streams, which the Hera scooped out of the lake and sent flying at them by the pale load.

Feeling the equivalent of tidal forces hitting her over and over again and blocking out her vision, a thoroughly amused Videl grinned and cocked back her right leg. "You think I can't take that sort of punishment? Well… how about this?!" She then kicked at the shallow water in front of her and sent her own wave back at the overconfident Zangya, who caught the blast right in the face and had her cough in surprise.

Shaking off the hit and wiping her hand over her mug, the Hera laughed. "Oh-ho. So that's how you want to play it, huh?" She then slapped her hands together directly on the lake's surface and, holding them up, took aim with her thumbs. "Surprise!" She then fired a high-pressure stream of water, which shot towards her friend like a round fired from a water pistol.

Gasping, Videl ducked it at the last second, which ended in Lime getting hit in the face instead. The farm girl yelped in shock and sputtered when the attack ended, which then had her glare back at the Hera competitively. "You are so dead." She then returned fire by putting her own hands together, cupping them in the water and, adding a little ki for extra measure, scooped up a mass of water and sent it blasting towards her opponent.

Seeing the attack approaching her at great speed put Zangya on the defensive. Waving both hands outwards, the Z-fighter caused a ripple in the air that separated the approaching wave and dispelled it. The Hera then used her telekinetic energy to conjure up a ball of water from the shallows beside her and, after setting it into a spin, pitched it towards Lime's position like a softball. This ended up leaving her wide open for a second torrent of water, which was thrown by Videl from her right-hand side and ended up blindsiding Zangya like a speeding truck. The orange haired alien gave a shout of surprise as she was dropped into the water, at the same time Lime ended up barely dodging the sphere sent at her from the front.

As soon as she avoided the attack, Lime prepared another blast, only for Videl to thrust her right hand towards the shallows and send a mini-tsunami at her rival. The poor farm girl had no clue how to respond as she was hit headlong by the wave and dropped back into the lake with a big splash. The wave itself ended up crashing harmlessly against the rocks of dry land in the background.

Being the only one left standing, the short-haired fighter from Satan City looked around to see all of her opponents lying on their backsides, drenched, and floundering in the pond. Upon taking their waterlogged states into account, the victorious fighter smiled and returned to a proper standing position with her hands on her hips. "Well. It seems like the best girl won."

Shaking out her dripping locks, which were hanging off of her like wet towels, the orange haired Hera flicked them back and chuckled, "For now."

As the alien girl stood up, Lime followed suit, being sure to brush away the droplets cascading down her face, "You really like to play rough, don't you V?" She then leered at the raven haired girl standing in the center, a glint of mischief in her eye. "Man. It's one thing to throw your weight around on the battlefield. I'd hate to see what you're like off stage and behind the curtain."

"Hey. I know where you're going with this," Videl said in a low voice, at the same time pointing across at the teenager in warning. "If you start saying anything weird, I'm going to begin slapping you over the back of your head until your tone changes."

Lime shrugged back cheekily, "Whatever floats your boat, girl. I'm not one to judge." Her little remark had the nearby Zangya snicker as she casually squeezed out her lengths of bushy hair.

Before the raven haired fighter could respond to her friend's comments, the trio was then interrupted by Gohan surfacing in the middle of the lake. Clad in only his orange gi pants, the spiky haired fighter flicked his hair back and slowly drifted towards the shore. As soon as his feet waded into the shallows, he dragged with him a still alive and kicking tuna. Literally about the same size as a car, the giant, freshwater animal flailed and splashed about as it was unwillingly pulled onto the shoreline by its tail, its demi-Saiyan captive then holding it up for all his friends to see.

"Check it out girls. I got one," the drenched hybrid said loudly.

Awed by the sight of the giant fish the demi-Saiyan had managed to snag, Videl grinned and waved back at him, "Wow. Great job, babe."

Icarus, head perking up from his front legs, crowed happily as his best friend waded towards him. Soon enough, the oldest male of the Son family then dropped the fish on the floor directly beside the pink dragon, the latter of whom stood up and waddled over to sniff the abnormally large creature.

As his reptilian friend inspected his prize, the thoroughly saturated Gohan ran a hand back through his moist locks, completely unaware of the three girls ogling him from the shallows. "Well… that's our lunch for today. Though I know mum has something else planned for all of us, I'm pretty sure she has some room for a couple of tempura fillets and sushi rolls." He then turned to beam at the group, only to then balk in shock when he finally noticed that all of them were standing in the water, dripping from head to toe…

In their underwear.

Marveling at the teen's successful catch, as well as the demi-Saiyan himself, Zangya straightened up, placed her hands on her hips and smirked, "Nice going, handsome. That guy will definitely make a terrific side dish." She then waded forward, only to stop when she saw the boy look away with a nervous expression on his face. "Huh? What's wrong?"

"Something the matter, Gohan?" Videl also asked, moving towards her boyfriend in genuine concern.

Swallowing anxiously when he saw the three girls move within jumping distance of him, the half-Saiyan then looked in another direction and, massaging his head in his usual way, spoke with a noticeable stammer in his voice, "N-Nothing. Nothing's the matter. It's just that… well…" He then tried to find the right words to explain what the problem was, mustering up whatever self-confidence and tasteful words that he could. "You guys aren't exactly-"

However, before he could even begin to speak what was on his mind, the ever sharp-eyed Lime quickly realized what the problem must've been and, grinning from ear to ear, moved even closer to the boy. "Ooh… I think I know what's gotten under our boy's skin." She then leant over, putting her face just a few inches away from Gohan's while simultaneously giving him a breathtaking view of her ample cleavage. "It's because we're showing off so much of ours. Isn't it?"

Backing up a little and holding up his hands, the now brightly blushing teenager babbled, "N-No. That's not what I was…"

Quickly catching onto the teen's distress, Zangya also gave a mischievous leer and, deciding to play along, struck an alluring pose in front of the half-Saiyan teen, which did not improve the boy's situation at all. "What's wrong, Gohan? Can't handle so much stimulation so early in the morning?" Her question put an enthusiastic grin on Videl's face, who then gave her boyfriend a predatory glare.

Icarus, tilting his head at the sight of the three girls advancing on his friend, chirped teasingly from where he stood beside the giant catch. It was his animalistic comment that earned a distasteful scowl from the half-Saiyan.

"Not helping, buddy." Gritting his teeth in panic, the anxious young warrior backed up even further, until he was practically nudging the shore with his heels. "Look, guys. I don't think now's a really good time for gah!" He reeled forward in surprise when he suddenly felt a pair of slender arms wrap around his neck and a familiar chin bury into the side of his neck. When he looked to his left, he saw a confident looking Videl hanging off of him with her generous chest pressed firmly into his back. The proximity was enough to have his face light up like the end of a thermometer.

"Now, Gohan, you know I don't like you shamelessly ogling the other girls while I'm standing right next to them," the raven haired teen said in a half-warning, half-playful tone. "I'm in my underwear too, yah know. As long as you're making more passes at me, then I don't have any—... hey?" She then pulled back a little and looked down in surprise, as she felt something long and fuzzy rubbing against her belly. When she caught a glimpse of the culprit wiggling between her and her boyfriend's hips, her eyes widened. "Gah. What the heck?" She then sprang away and looked down at the teen's backside in surprise.

Her sudden retreat had the Saiyan look at her in worry. "Huh? What's wrong, V?" Gohan asked. When he turned around to investigate the problem himself, the other two women behind him also spotted the thing that'd caught Videl's attention.

Honestly, what the three girls saw protruding out of the top of the man's gi and waving behind him was the last thing they expected to see on him.

The sight literally had Lime do a double-take, "Gohan! Y-You have a tail⁉!

Zangya blinked in amazement, "Whoa. That's a first."

"Oh. This?" Gohan asked, doing an about-face and showing off his derrière. After waving his monkey-like appendage through the air a few times, at the same time giving it a good stretch, he then turned towards the two females gaping at him across the shallows and grinned. "Yeah. I've been meaning to tell you guys about this for a while now. I just thought I should train it up a little before pulling back the curtains."

Shaking her head in amazement, Videl then pointed down at it, "But... I thought you said you had it permanently removed when you were six? That was not long after your first battle with Cooler."

"Well... as it turns out, the tails can't be permanently removed," Gohan replied, giving his girlfriend a shrug while running his appendage over his shoulder to wipe off some moisture. "It just takes a bit of effort to re-grow them."

Blinking and moving around so that she could get a better look, a fully entranced Lime murmured curiously, "How did you manage to get it back?"

"It's actually quite an interesting story," the hybrid said, at the same time placing a hand on his hip. "Basically, Kana dropped by and took me out to this awesome pub on a planet in a star system outside of our district. While we were there, we got into a bar fight, met my grandmother and, long story short, she showed me how to get my tail back." He then gave another chuckle when he saw Zangya raise an eyebrow at him. "I... haven't told any of the others yet since I figured Vegeta would want to have a few choice words with me."

The Hera in front of him scoffed, "That's a nice way of sugarcoating it."

Turning back around to see his girlfriend step in closer, Gohan then gave her a half-smile and a shrug. "This... isn't weird to any of you is it? I mean..." He then gestured to his tail timidly, which responded to his emotions in kind. "I know it may look a little strange and out of place, but considering I'm half-Saiyan—"

"I don't mind," Videl interrupted, cutting the boy's stammering short.

The teen blinked, "R-Really?"

Shaking her head, the raven haired girl gazed cheerily at him. "Not at all. If you hadn't told me about it years ago, I'd probably be a little bit more surprised than I am now. But since it is part of your race's heritage and genetics, then I have no problems with it whatsoever."
"I don't either," Zangya also said, at the same time throwing the boy one of her fond smiles.

"Me too," Lime spoke, voicing her support for the boy. "Actually, I think it looks really cool."

When he heard the unanimous vote from the three girls he considered the closest people in his life, Gohan then allowed a warm smile to break out on his face. Just before he could thank them all for their support, an electric current suddenly ran up his spine when a pair of soft hands latched onto his tail and began to stroke it, which had the teen look behind him to see Videl staring at his extra appendage with great intrigue.

Giggling in a very girlish manner, the raven haired fighter looked up at her startled boyfriend with a mischievous gleam in her eye, "Hey, the fur on your tail is really soft. Have you been using conditioner on this bad boy?" She then wagged her eyebrows at the demi-Saiyan, who smiled back in a sheepish manner.

"I don't… really know how to respond to-"

"Ooh. Can I try?" Lime asked excitedly, quickly skipping her way forward and moving to where Videl was standing, alerting the spiky haired boy to the sudden change in atmosphere. "Please, Gohan. Can I rub it."

Showcasing the same enthusiasm as the other two girls converging on the spot behind the hybrid warrior, Zangya also moved in for the attack. Raising her hands up, the Hera cheekily clawed at the air through a series of very obvious 'honking' gestures, which had her crush and training partner stare at her uneasily. "Hey. That's not fair. Let me cop a quick feel too." She said this while grinning lecherously in his direction.

"Uh… girls… I… I don't think that's such a-gauuoogh… good id-…" Unfortunately he was unable to finish his protest. Before he had a chance to fend off his attackers, he was unexpectedly tackled from the front by Zangya, who then proceeded to violate his personal space alongside the other two by pressing her cleavage into his chest and wrapping her arms around him playfully.

As the teen's startled yelps and exclamations of surprise echoed over the surrounding forests, startling some of the still sleeping wildlife, the still present Icarus craned his head and squawked at the unusual performance now taking place in front of him.

Seriously, what was so interesting about a tail?

XXX

(Twenty minutes later)

(Many miles away)

Out on the oceans to the east of the mainland, where the tiny island serving as the foundations for the familiar wooden domicile of Kame House lay, the members of the household were experiencing their own wake-up call. Though it wasn't as fun as Gohan's, it was still as equally stimulating. After hopping out of bed early to make breakfast for their respective families, Krillin and Launch worked side by side at the kitchen counter, stirring ingredients and setting pots of rice-porridge over the stove. The first hour went by in a breeze and after laying out the table for all the people who were present, Master Roshi, Android 18, Tien, Choutzu, and Oolong were also up and about.

After the mother went to fetch Marron, the entire group gathered at the table for a delicious morning meal. They even switched on the television to check out how the rest of the world was doing. It was the moment they switched over to the local news channel that the group of human fighters was soon informed of the commotion unfolding across the continent thousands of miles away. From satellite footage to live footage on the ground, the entire collective gathered around the table, and were quickly brought up to speed on the alien planet that had appeared just outside of their orbit.

Needless to say, this was the last thing any of them expected to hear when they woke up.

"So far the terrestrial planet has situated itself approximately four hundred thousand kilometers away from earth. That places it just outside of the moon's orbit. Though experts have yet to determine exactly where this strange new world had come from, the information they've managed to collect so far suggests that it must have originated from a system very similar to our own," the female reporter in the red suit informed, addressing the camera with a serious and unwavering expression. "The tropical climate and lush vegetation growing on the alien planet indicates the presence of a thriving echo-system. Professor Yamada from the North City University commented earlier that such a terrestrial body sporting such a wide variety of plant life, along with numerous stretches of water, has the innate potential to sustain other forms of life. In other words: extra-terrestrial life. Suspicions of alien life existing on this planet were later confirmed when just an hour ago a transmission from the alien planet was broadcast over the planet's media and internet feeds. Despite this startling development, authorities have yet to determine exactly what the aliens' true intentions are." Adjusting her papers and the position in her chair, the woman slowly turned towards the screen behind her. "We'll now go live to Jack Bryan outside of NASTA headquarters in Cape Dune, South City, for an update on the situation. Jack?"

As the feed switched over to a raven haired male television reporter, the group of human fighters watching the television from the dining table could only stare in dumb silence as more and more information on the situation was relayed directly to them. Despite their vast amount of experience, knowledge, as well as having the situation spoon fed to them in bite-size pieces, including all the scientific nonsense designed to explain the baffling phenomenon, the group of human warriors was still finding it incredibly hard to believe that a planet of unknown origin and scope, had deliberately parked itself right next door to theirs. When Oolong stood up to go splash his face with water to wake himself from his stunned daze, the only remarks the group could make were murmurs of disbelief.

"Damn," Tien groaned.

Master Roshi nodded in agreement of the young fighter's remark, "You can say that again."

Blinking curiously, the four year old Marron looked up at her mother seated beside her and gave her an innocent, yet slightly scared look, "What do the aliens want with us, mommy?"

The blonde woman in the jeans and black top with striped sleeves, shook her head at her daughter sincerely, "I'm not sure, sweetheart. But don't worry… I'm sure nothing bad is going to happen." She then turned to see what her husband was doing, and noticed that the man had switched out his orange shirt and green cargo shorts for his red and blue gi. Blinking, Android 18 straightened up and fixed her usual, curious gaze upon her beloved. "You're gearing up already?"

"Yep." Tightening the belt around his waist, the short fighter with black hair smiled at his gorgeous wife and gave her a reassuring look. "If my years of fighting have taught me anything, it's that whenever a space ship or meteorite happens to drop by our solar system, you can bet it's carrying something big and terrifying on it that's itching for a fight."
Processing the man's words quickly, the blonde bombshell acknowledged his words of wisdom and rose up from her seat, "In that case, I'm coming with you." When she sensed Tien and Chiaotzu do the same, the cyborg fighter quickly turned her attention to her blue-haired friend from the mountains and gave her a serious stare. "Launch, look after Marron for me while we're gone."

Placing a finger to her chin nervously, the woman in the green sundress and apron gave the blonde an understanding nod. "O-Okay. Just… be careful out there you four."

"Don't worry. We will," Chiaotzu replied, while simultaneously smiling up at his friend.

After Android 18 made sure Marron's face was clean and whispered to her one last time that things were going to be okay, she and her husband then proceeded to put on their outdoor shoes. However, just as they were preparing to form up with Tien to begin organizing a plan of defense, a nervous stammer from the other side of the house quickly drew their attention over to Oolong.

"Umm… guys," the pig squeaked, turning towards the able troop from his stool at the kitchen counter and pointing out the window, "You… might want to take a look outside."

Puzzled by their friend's nervous direction, the fighters instantly chased up his instruction and moved to the front porch. As soon as Krillin, Tien, Chiaotzu and Android 18 spilled out onto the front lawn, they immediately recoiled at what they saw waiting for them.

Standing on the sand, casting a really long shadow across the house's veranda, an enormous, rotund man with stubby legs and massive arms, dressed in black, high-tech battle armor and matching helmet, was staring at the wooden house with an unflinching, emotionless gaze.

It seemed as though the aliens the news casters were talking about, had finally decided to pay them a visit.

XXX

(Meanwhile)

Over in West City, despite it being super early in the morning, things had become quite hectic across the downtown areas of the metropolis. Being one of the few cities built along the coast of the mainland, all of the people who'd bothered to wake up early that Saturday had been able to witness the arrival of the alien planet firsthand, as well as the numerous live media reports to follow. Since it was the start of the weekend, you could understand why most of the population was slow to respond to the development. However, as the minutes of the hour ticked by, more and more people began pooling out onto the streets and by the time the sun began to peak over the horizon, there were well over a thousand people now keeping tabs on the situation.

Though it was a normal routine for some people, for others it was a completely new experience; standing out on the front lawn, in pajamas, with coffee in hand, and staring up at the sky.

Thankfully, unlike previous situations involving extra-terrestrial objects coming into close proximity with the Earth, no riots or panics had broken out in the population centers. Perhaps this was due to the fact that the media and experts had yet to determine exactly who they were dealing with and why the planet had come to their solar system. Or maybe it was because the majority of the population on the western parts of the continent, who were still in the process of waking up, had yet come to terms with the fact that a planet had just popped up right next to theirs and was hovering right over their heads. Perhaps they were used to events like this happening and had built up an immunity to panic. Whatever the case, the authorities had very little difficulty in keeping the public's nerves and actions under control, as tempers across the continent were still at a reasonably
The same could be said for the people over at Capsule Corp. Out on the front lawn of the company's main building, a handful of the staff had abandoned their work on the production room floors and had come out to see what all the fuss was about. The multitude of workers simply stood out there on the grass and pavement, whispering to each other and wondering whether they were going to receive a visit from some aliens sometime in the next few minutes.

In fact, the crowd of men and women in lab coats and button-up shirts were so occupied with making bets, discussing their real place in the universe, and staring up at the sky that they failed to notice a tall woman, clad in black, metallic armor, float down from the clouds and land on the footpath behind them.

Landing gracefully on the concrete and following the footpath all the way to the front entrance of the company's main building, the feline-humanoid warrior Kure strolled towards the glass doors with a spring in her step and a smile on her face. As she closed the distance to the archway, the cheerful and obviously enthusiastic delegate from another world couldn't help but take a moment to admire the diverse colors and atmosphere of her surroundings.

"Hmm. What an interesting facility. I really like the way the paint scheme compliments the building's shape and structure," Kure whispered in a sing-song voice, at the same time completely overlooking the odd stare she received from the male Capsule Corp employee she passed by on the footpath and walking in the opposite direction. The woman's armor clinked against the concrete floor with every step she took, as she focused primarily on the path ahead and on the mission she'd been dealt by her compatriots. "Now then. Let's see where those big power levels are coming from."

Analyzing the dome shaped factory ahead of her, Kure's visor quickly lit up with the same numbers and readings that'd been displayed to the rest of her group prior to leaving on their respective assignments. Upon confirming that these were the exact coordinates where the power levels had been registering from, even though she could no longer see them, the alien visitor wasted no time in strolling through the automatic glass doors and heading towards what she assumed was the front desk. Passing by a couple security guards that were staring up at the wall television broadcasting news of the alien world with their backs turned to the counter, the armored woman stopped in front of the desk and waited for the young woman working behind it to look up.

When the good-looking teenager with brown hair tied up into a bun, wearing square glasses and a purple suit and skirt, turned to smile at her visitor, she literally balked in surprise when she saw the armor-clad warrior staring down at her. The sight of the oddly dressed person had the secretary clear her throat nervously, "Y-Yes. May I help you?"

Approving of the reception she was receiving thus far, the armored woman with the cat-like tail swishing about behind her responded in kind, "Good morning. My name is Kure Aegean of the Planet Savannah. I'm Second-Lieutenant General to Empress Sandra of the New Saiyan Empire, Head of the Department of Science, Research and Development of Corvus, and primary liaison and advance surveyor of the Halcyon Quadrant's Kio-Jin Republic."

Blinking at the woman's lengthy introduction and title, the secretary then hesitantly turned to her computer screen and opened up today's registration documents. "Do you… have an appointment with us today?"

Kure, puzzled by the sudden question, blinked in confusion, "An appointment? N-No, I don't think so."
"Did you post an online notification to one of our staff requesting a meeting of any kind?"

"Yes. Well, uhh… no. Not exactly. You see…" the armored woman then tried to explain her situation as clearly as she could, but as the eyes of the secretary bore into her visor, the confidence she once held slowly started to drop. "I actually sent out a formal, inter-planetary broadcast over the Earth's airways about forty minutes ago, informing all the population centers and governments that-"

Before she could finish, the naïve but diligent teenager behind the counter quickly cut her off, "I'm sorry, Kure-san. But if you haven't booked an appointment with one of our department officers or staff members, I'm afraid I cannot let you into our building." She said this all with a polite but nervous smile, showcasing how stressful this portion of the job was for her. "You see, due to a recent incident involving one of the president's closest friends, Capsule Corp has been forced to adopt a new civilian and worker's policy, requiring all guests to notify the administration of any visits several hours prior to their arrival. If you have a photo ID with you, I could book you in for an appointment with one of our liaisons at ten o'clock?"

Due to all the information bombarding her right out the gate, it took a moment for Kure to respond to the question before the armored woman finally broke through the ice. "Oh. Y-Yes. Of course." Doing the diplomatic thing, the alien woman reached for her gauntlet and, pressing a couple of buttons, produced a miniature hologram of her picture and profile information to the equally tense secretary. "Is this information sufficient?"

"Yes. That is plenty," the girl in glasses replied, using the hologram as reference as she began typing it into her computer. After getting down all the information necessary and checking the woman's face through her visor for photo and I.D comparison, the clerk nodded in approval before pointing the woman towards one of the couches pushed up against the side of the wall. "Please take a seat, Kure-san. A staff member from administration will be with you in a moment."

"Thank you very much," Kure bowed, deactivating her personalized hologram and slowly making her way over to the designated couch. After inspecting the furniture, the woman then slowly turned and sat herself down. Due to the weight of her armor, the cushions made a low 'urk' sound as pressure was applied to it. When the leg mechanisms locked up, preventing the chair from being squashed any further under the insane weight of her suit, the cat woman then proceeded to wait while the woman at the desk made some calls.

Drumming her fingers against her leg patiently, the armored female then became interested in the Capsule Corp and Woman's Monthly magazines lying on the coffee table beside her. While the security guards continued to busy themselves with the hot news reporter on the television, the interstellar traveler occupied herself with the 'Inventor's Guide by Doctor Briefs' and, for the next several minutes, proceeded to entertain herself with the numerous articles the earthlings had to offer her.

Not the most exciting of entrances she's ever made, but as long as she got to where she was going, Kure was in absolutely no rush…

XXX

(Several minutes later)

(Many miles away)

Back over at Mount Paozu, the peace and serenity created by the sparkling countryside continued to grip the lush mountain regions and the tiny domicile of the Son family. With the white sheets from last night's laundry fluttering about on the line and the birds in the trees serenading away the morning, it seemed like nothing could possibly ruin such a quaint and cheerful setting. Even the grasshoppers appeared entranced by the splendor of it all, bounding around the wide-open valleys with their brothers and sisters, and chirping under the golden rays of the sun.

However, the emptiness and immaculate picturesque setting was soon broken by the arrival of two figures from out of town. Floating down from the sky just like their teammates before them, dressed in black, metal armor and capes, the spiky haired Maya and her tag-along Cal touched down just a few meters away from the entrance to the Son household. Stopping where they landed, the duo then took a moment to analyze the property before the brown haired warrior activated the scanners in her helmet, which quickly projected a series of red numbers and arrows.

Glancing down at her, the enormous bodyguard spoke, "Are we at the right place?"

"Looks like it," the brown haired female replied, the electronics in her visor finishing their calculations on the location and projecting the results to her. "Yep. This is definitely the house Kure sent us to check out… but it seems like only one of the power levels the computers detected is currently inside."

Cal, hearing her puzzled tone, shrugged in a suggestive manner, "The rest of them are probably out at the moment." He then looked over his shoulder curiously. "I'm not picking up anything else. That means their power levels are probably being suppressed."

Marching forward, the armored woman decided to take action, "We'll chase them up in a little while… maybe even ask where they went so that we don't have to waste time and energy flying around in circles. I can't sense jack shit in this stupid helmet." She then rapped the side of her headgear, creating several loud 'ding' sounds every time her knuckles struck the heavy plating. "But first let's find out exactly who's hiding out in this little home." Since their power level was registering at such a high level, even for a normal fighter, Maya imagined that the person it was attached to must've been absurdly intimidating… or at least had the appearance to match their strength. Acting on her adventurous instincts, the armored woman and her partner stopped in front of the wooden, mahogany door, inspected it and, taking a few moments to collate their story, knocked.

It didn't take long before the duo heard a light pattering of footsteps inside the house, shortly before the entrance to the house opened. As soon as the gate swung away, the two armored fighters were greeted by a happy and smiling Chi-Chi.

Adorned in her usual yellow kimono with her hair done up, the raven haired mother spoke in a cheery voice, "Hello. How can I… help-" Her grin quickly faded when she finally registered to the two people standing outside. "Hang on. What? Oh, great. Security salesmen." When she saw the pair of masked figures glance at each other, Chi-Chi rolled her eyes in an exasperated fashion and crossed her arms impatiently. "Listen, if you two guys are here to sell us some sort of top-of-the-line, groundbreaking alarm system or an anti-burglar mesh to put over our doors and windows, we're not interested."

"Uhh…" Maya murmured in confusion, before turning to stare at the woman awkwardly, "We're… not here to sell you any of that. In fact… we're not here to sell anything at all."

The woman's response had Chi-Chi blink in surprise, "Oh? Really?" A smile quickly reappeared across her lips, "Then… are the two of you lost or something?" Looking them over, the owner of the house chuckled and gestured towards them. "Judging from your outfits, I'm guessing you're not exactly here for a company function. Camping holiday? Hunting trip?"
Cal then stepped forward to speak in place of his partner, "No, ma'am. Nothing like that. We're… not actually from around here."

"In fact, we only just arrived in this system a couple of hours ago," Maya concluded with an affirmative nod of her head. When she saw the puzzled look appear on Chi-Chi's face, the woman in the armor elaborated further, "My friend and I have come down to this planet because we're looking for someone."

Chi-Chi blinked, "Looking for someone?"

"Yes." Raising her hands, the armor-plated female then began making descriptive motions with her hands, "The target we're searching for has an outward build and appearance very similar to you humans, with only one or two noticeable differences. The person has a visibly more muscular figure, ideal for exercising enormous bursts of super strength and power, and was born with a brown, furry tail, just like this one." She then pointed behind her, where she then unraveled the monkey-like appendage she had wrapped waist and waved it about in the air for emphasis. The sight of the fifth limb brought an astonished look to Chi-Chi's face, the woman quickly placing her hand over her mouth to suppress her gasp. "Only members of the race known as Saiyans possess these kinds of appendages. Do you happen to know any living on this planet… or perhaps in this general area?"

Sweat breaking out on her face as the woman quickly realized who these two strangers were and what they were looking for, Chi-Chi swallowed nervously and, through a trembling hand, did her best to hold her ground and stand firmly against her visitors. Though in most circumstances she would've taken up arms and tried to chase these two hoodlums off of her property, or at the very least slammed the door in their faces. However, seeing as how both of them appeared armed and battle ready and that one of them was apparently a Saiyan, she knew in her gut that she didn't have a chance of fighting these two off.

So, deciding on the best and most tactful course of action, the brave human woman straightened her back and began to speak, "Okay. I'm sure you two must have traveled a long way to get here and that you're probably tired from your trip, but-

"Mum? Who's at the door?"

Damn it. Talk about bad timing.

Looking to her left, Chi-Chi saw her youngest son skip out from behind her and into the doorway. Dressed in his orange and blue gi with long sleeves, the chipper and ever-curious Goten was quickly brought to the attention of the two armored figures in the doorway, who looked down to see the hybrid child peering up at them with the cutest, most innocent expression on his face imaginable.

Looking each suit over and tilting his head at the towering figures, the spiky haired boy blinked, before speaking in his typical, country boy manner, "Oh… hello."

Puzzled by his appearance, the visor on Maya's helmet then lit up with various numbers and windows, which began scanning the child in front of her. After several seconds of analyzing the newcomer, the woman's eyes widened in surprise. "Well… what do we have here?" Smile appearing underneath her visor as the readings of her mask dispersed, the armor-clad warrior then took an eager step forward and spoke in a more excited tone of voice, "Looks like we found our first big power level."

Initially perplexed by her words, Goten then raised a finger and pointed at himself, "M-Me?"
"Yep. Who do you think I was talking about?" The spiky haired traveler placed her hands on her knees, bent over, and looked the youngster square in the eye. "I have to admit, you're a lot smaller than I was expecting." She dropped down low enough so that the glass of her mask was just a few inches from the boy's face. "But, since you're still so young, I can see why your energy could go a little wild sometimes... especially when you're running around inside the house. Did you have a big breakfast this morning, short-stack?"

Despite the woman's intimidating appearance in the suit, a smile quickly formed on the demi-Saiyan's face as he gazed back at the woman crouching down in front of him, "Uh-huh." He then raised a hand with two-fingers held up, "I had six of mum's special egg and bacon plates, two bowls of stir-fry, and seven slices of toast. It was delicious." He said this while sparing a glance up at his mother, who smiled back at him nervously.

Maya chuckled at the child's energetic and cheerful nature, which had her tilt her head in a cheerful way, "I'll bet it was." Glancing momentarily towards her comrade, who continued to hold his place and listen in on their conversation, the alien visitor then looked back at the child and gave him a curious stare. "Tell me, squirt... you wouldn't happen to know of any Saiyans living around here, would you?"

"Wha? Saiyans?" Goten repeated, before realization soon clicked on his face, "Oh. Are you and your friend looking for Saiyans?"

The woman answered the boy's innocent question with a nod, "That's right."

"Well... I know that Trunks is half-Saiyan and that his dad is full Saiyan," Goten replied while rubbing his chin thoughtfully. After looking up for a moment and scratching his little noggin, the child then beamed and turned back to the woman squatting down in front of him. "And I'm not sure if I count, but I'm a half-Saiyan too."

Maya tilted her head curiously at this info, "Is that so?"

"Uh-huh," the youngster responded proudly. "I can even transform into a Super Saiyan."

It was this revelation that had the spiky haired fighter murmur in an impressed sounding manner. "Ooh. A Super Saiyan? Now that is interesting." The woman then grinned at the eager and cheerful look on the boy's face. "Do you think you can you show me, squirt?"

"Yeah. No problem," Goten chirped, before clenching his fists and concentrating hard. Scrunching his face up and showing the amount of effort he was now exerting, the boy summoned the huge well of energy stored up inside of him and, with a yell and a flash, he transformed right there on the spot. His golden aura exploding around him prompted his hair to spiky up and turn blonde and his eyes to turn green, a sight that put amazed looks on the visitors' faces. Even Chi-Chi had to take a little step back when she saw her boy assume his race's legendary form right in front of her eyes.

When the winds from the aura eventually died down, the transformed child smiled once again. "What do you think? Pretty cool, huh?"

Shaking off the initial daze, Maya cracked a big smile, raised her hand, and ruffled the blonde's hair in encouragement, which earned a giggle from the super-powered child beneath her, "Not bad, little man. Not bad at all."

While she made this remark outwardly, on the inside, a completely different thought crossed her mind.
"Bingo."

Without needing any further evidence, the young woman reached up and pressed a button on the side of her helmet, causing a small, blinking red light to appear on the side.

XXX

(At the lake)

After managing to escape the clutches of the three gorgeous girls in his company, Gohan wasted no time in dragging his soaking wet body back onto shore to stretch and dry off under the sun. When the rays evaporated a majority of the perspiration gripping his skin, with a quick burst of ki, the teen was able to dispel the rest of it, before going about the arduous process of putting the rest of his clothes back on. The girls, seeing the boy begin packing up, did the exact same thing, only… they decided to spend a few extra minutes trying to make life for their half-Saiyan hunk of a crush a little more challenging. They did this through a number of different means, from jumping on his back while they were still soaking wet, to teasingly moving over to where he was standing so that they could rub-up against him in a provocative manner.

Sure, the girls enjoyed the feeling of physical contact with their spiky haired hero, but the real reason they teased him in such a manner was to see if they could get him to a point where he actually started to return fire.

They'd seen his playfully, innocent side, and did so almost every single day. Now they wanted to see his wilder, more daring side.

They knew he had one. He was just very good at hiding it.

Before they could take their fun and games any further, Gohan, quick as ever, was able to dodge them long enough to get back into full uniform. After making a mental note to pick this up on a later date, perhaps at a time when they had him alone, Videl, Lime and Zangya also spent a minute drying themselves off and getting dressed. As soon as they were all fully clothed and had their boots back on, they then gathered up alongside the teen's freshly caught fish and watched as the hybrid gave his dragon friend Icarus a pat on the head.

"I don't know about you, but I think this was a really good morning," Gohan commented cheerfully, at the same time earning a playful head nudge from the pink, mythological reptile.

An approving murmur quickly followed his remark. "You can say that again," Videl said, regarding the teenager in front of her with a look of both mischief and longing. It was an expression she shared with her teammates Zangya and Lime, both of whom were also eyeing the demi-Saiyan with a predatory gleam.

Picking up on his girlfriend's tone as well as taking note of the trio's respective stares, Gohan gave them all a good-natured laugh and placed his hands on his hips, "Come on, girls. Enough of that. I know what you're all trying to do and I'm going to tell you right now; it's not going to work."

A smirking Zangya shot a teasing look towards the young male, "You sure about that, spike?"

Siding up next to Gohan with her hands behind her back, an impish Lime then tapped his leg with her foot and grinned, "You may look as cool as a cucumber on the outside. But inside I bet you're just hanging on by a thread."

"Who's to say that a tough guy like you wouldn't crack under pressure," the Hera continued, at the same time giving the teen a suggestive shrug. "Everybody breaks sooner or later."
"Besides… we haven't even done anything to you yet," Lime concluded assertively, while simultaneously leaning into the boy and putting her weight on him.

Smiling in amusement, the half-Saiyan warrior then brought his hand up and began counting on his fingers, "You all tried to grab my tail, you all kept getting me wet by jumping on me in the lake, and all three of you keep trying to pinch me in places that's just not called fo-hey!" He then dodged Zangya when she attempted to make another sneak attack on him with her fingers, which had the teen hold his hand up defensively and laugh. "I'm serious, Zangya. Don't even try it." He then looked behind him to see Videl creeping up on him with the voracious stalk of a Velociraptor. "You too, V. I see you."

"Aww, come on, Gohan," the raven haired girl whined with an amused grin in play. "You know you love it."

"Just one last quick feel for today," Zangya pleaded childishly, raising her hands and making a 'squeezing' motion in the air. "Pl pleaase. I promise we'll stop bothering you if you do."

The hero raised an eyebrow at the Hera and gave her a disbelieving look, "Oh yeah? And what makes you think I can trust you to keep your word?"

Stopping for a moment to think about it, the orange haired woman's leer only became more intense, "Do you really want to hear the answer to that question?"

The stares from the three girls attempting to flank him drew a nervous laugh from the man in red and blue, as he slowly started to back away. "Something tells me that this isn't going away anytime soon."

As of that moment, Son Gohan had no idea how accurate that prediction actually was.

Before the demi-Saiyan could begin comprehending the full weight and breadth of his situation, a sudden ping on his ki radar unexpectedly snapped him out of his funk. The same thing happened to both Zangya and Videl who, after stopping in their tracks, the three Z-fighters then turned their attention towards the treetops. It only took them a couple of moments, but as soon as their gazes fixated upon the horizon, they quickly realized that the sudden feedback of energy that shot through them had come from the direction of their house.

"Hey. That's Goten," Videl murmured, at the same time furrowing her brow in concern. Icarus also seemed to pick up on the disturbance and, along with his human counterparts, turned in the direction they were all looking. "Why'd he go Super Saiyan all of a sudden?"

After honing in on the signal coming from afar, Zangya then balked in shock when she picked up something else hanging on the precipice of her senses.

There were two of them… that much was clear, and they were faint… but they were definitely there, standing right next to Chi-Chi's and Goten's energy signatures, the latter of whom was now serving as a beacon for all three fighters positioned by the lake. It was a realization that put a tight knot in the Hera's chest and caused her to look towards her crush with fearful look reflected in her eyes. "Someone is with them."

When Gohan picked up the trace amounts of energy as well, he then concentrated all of his efforts into figuring out who they were. Initially he thought they were normal people visiting their place, but their energy levels were reading so low that it didn't seem natural. It was almost like something was blocking them and only tiny amounts of ki were slipping through, perforating the air around them. After concentrating even harder, the teenager was soon able to get somewhat of a bead on one of the energy signatures and, eyes widening in horror, his entire body did a full, ninety degree turn.

"No." Without another word, the half-Saiyan took off at such a great speed that his form seemed to vanish, an act that was immediately followed by a sonic boom.

Zangya didn't even wait for the cloud of dust to fade before she too powered up and took off,
"Shit! This is not good!" Videl took off along with her and the pair began burning a path straight towards the house.

Startled by the group's sudden flight, a perplexed Lime quickly waved away the cloud of dust surrounding her and jogged after them, "Hey! What's going on?!" Stopping when she realized running was useless, she then turned her attention to Icarus, who ambled after her and squawked inquisitively. The brown haired girl shrugged in response, "No idea. But we're going to find out.
Come on, boy." Focusing her energy on the ground, the brown haired girl then called upon all of the training Gohan had started putting her through in the last couple of weeks. After a few moments of concentration, the teenager then levitated off of the floor and into the air.

At first clumsy and apprehensive, Lime began a slow flight in the direction of the Son household, with Icarus spreading his wings and following right on after her. Though they had no clue as to what had gotten the three strongest warriors in the region so riled up, the pair of misfits figured that it had to be something bad.

After all, they were all so quick to leave the area that they completely forgot about the fish Gohan had caught for lunch…

XXX

(Back at the house)

"Your group is looking for the Saiyan that killed Frieza?" Chi-Chi asked, earning an affirmative nod from the spiky haired woman in front of her. Tilting her head curiously, the mother then narrowed her eyes on Maya and gave her a puzzled stare. "Why? Are you here to take revenge on him or something?"

Scratching the hair protruding out of the back of her helmet, Maya exhaled exhaustedly, "It's… a little bit more complicated than that." Turning to her left, the woman saw the young Goten, still assumed in a controlled Super Saiyan state, checking out the tall and imposing figure of her partner. "Our group follows a very unique set of codes and practices when it comes to dealing out justice. Since Frieza and his family were responsible for killing billions of innocent people without cause, including our entire race, it stands to reason that there were many out there who wanted to see them dead. My best friend wanted to take care of the lizard herself, but somebody else beat her to it."

The raven haired mother then looked at the armored female strangely. "So in other words… your boss felt robbed of the opportunity and now wants to take her frustrations out on the one responsible for stealing her mark?" When Maya looked back at her, Chi-Chi frowned in a manner that conveyed her disbelief, "Isn't that a little counterproductive?"

Maya chuckled and turned to smile at the mother, "Since your son is half-Saiyan, I think you know full well what a true Saiyan is actually like." She then raised a hand and placed it against her chest plating. "Our people are a warrior race; born and bred to fight against the most exciting and impossible of opponents. As it is in our nature to gain strength through combat, we are constantly seeking new obstacles to conquer wherever we can… otherwise we lose all sense and purpose in
Her response put a small, amused grin on Chi-Chi's face, as the wife and owner of the household then folded her arms and leaned against the frame of her door. "Oh… I think I have a good idea of what you're getting at."

After all, her Goku and her sons were exactly the same, and were unshaken in their pursuits. If they didn't get out to fight or train at least once a day, they became stir-crazy and were unable to sit still for even a second.

Shrugging, Maya then glanced down at Goten, whom she now saw was tapping against the shin-guard of Cal's leg. The giant of a man then took a step back and, raising his hands in the air, began waving them about in a goofy manner, causing his metal plating to chime loudly with every hop. It was this little performance that had the child Super Saiyan giggle and the armored Saiyan shake her head. "Aside from wanting to do battle against opponents we deem worthy, both my friend and I have also developed a code of honor that we feel we must uphold, both as individuals and as a group. Looking at your family dynamic and the way you've raised your son, I have a feeling you understand what we mean."

The mother quickly nodded in acknowledgement of this fact, "I think I do." She then gestured towards the woman inquisitively, "So… you and your group are truly set on finding this Saiyan and fighting him, huh?" Despite sounding sincere, the woman couldn't help but feel a little bit sorry for this woman and her friend, as neither Goku nor Mirai Trunks were currently around.

Oh well. Perhaps they could find somebody else to play around with… preferably soon. If her internal clock was working fine, Chi-Chi was positive he was going to show up right about…

Maya chuckled and turned her attention to Goten, whom she then approached with a casual pace. While Cal took a step back, the armored woman placed her hands on her hips and sized the young half-Saiyan up. "If I know Sandra, she won't rest until she's fought against the Saiyan we felt from our side of the cosmos. To be honest, I'm pretty excited about fighting this person as well. For someone to generate the amount of power our computers picked up, he must be really incredible… probably the strongest warrior on this planet." She then grinned down at the adolescent hybrid in front of her. "Although… I don't think that person would be you, huh, short stack?"

Blinking, Goten then gave the woman an innocent smile and shook his head. "Uh-uh. Nope." Upon which, a very proud grin then appeared across his lips. "My big brother is actually the strongest person on this planet."

It was this bit of information that had Cal and Maya stop, with the latter staring down at the child in silence.

"Wait. You… have a big brother-" Her words were cut short when a warning arrow suddenly jumped up onto her visor and pointed in the direction of a massive power level. Recoiling in surprise, the woman then turned when she heard a sonic boom echo in from the valley to her left.

Then, before she could respond in any way, it happened.

Tearing a cloud of dust across the grassy fields at a ridiculous speed, a human-sized orange and blue mass tackled the armored woman in the stomach and, picking her up, rocketed into the distance like a missile. Passing over valleys and rolling hills in a blur, an infuriated Gohan, with his face pressed into Maya's stomach, bellowed at the top of his lungs as he plowed his opponent straight through a forest of evergreens. Trees exploded one after the other in rapid succession as the young warrior used the woman's armored back to cut a swath right through the woods.
Traveling at a speed greater than any other object on the planet, the pair soon burst out the other side of the forest, where the demi-Saiyan ended up flying them over an enormous stretch of farmland. Approaching a cluster of silos, Gohan didn't hesitate one bit in pushing his hapless foe straight through them. Three of the towering grain containers exploded from the fast-moving figures blasting out the other end, transforming the cement structures into a cloud of smoke and debris. Continuing along a straight line through the cloud, the half-Saiyan then gripped his enemy by the shoulders and pushed her into the earth, where he proceeded to drag her through the wheat fields.

Cutting a trench across the vale, Gohan held the startled Maya by the throat and began to viciously bash her head in with his fist. His knuckles impacted against her visor over and over again as he continued to push her through the crops at breakneck speeds, causing her to yelp out in pain with every blow while her head bounced back and forth in time with his haymakers.

"Ugh! Ah! Hey! Ugh! Wait!" Maya grunted between each of his hits. "Augh! Stop! Gah! It!"

Gohan however, was having none of it.

"YOU THINK… YOU CAN ATTACK… MY FAMILY?!!" he yelled between blows.

Actually, it was more like he couldn't hear her above the sound of his knuckles burying into her helmet.

On the verge of blacking out from being dragged through the earth while simultaneously being clobbered in the face plate, Maya let out a cry of pain as the two of them flew out of the wheat field and bounced from hilltop to hilltop. A few seconds after the epic tackle on the Son family's front lawn, the pair soon came across the neighboring town, where Gohan sent both of them flying straight into the back wall of a Bait Shop and out onto the street. The pair eventually collided into a petrol station on the other side of the road, and it was here both warriors ended up smashing through the main building and the multiple filling stations, which exploded in a massive ball of fire and debris.

It was this particular explosion that startled any and all nearby civilians, and had every single person out on the streets duck for cover.

Back in front of the Son household, Chi-Chi, Goten and Cal were gaping in the direction Gohan and Maya had gone shooting off in, leaving the three members at the front door to the house stunned. Being the first to snap out of his dazed state, the big, armored warrior frowned and quickly moved to give chase.

After all, his comrade had just been blindsided by a very fast and powerful adversary. Based on the readings he'd just received from his helmet, he knew that while encumbered and protected by her thousand ton training armor, Maya was going to be in serious trouble against this particular foe.

However, before the man could take flight, a few more numbers popped up on his screen, which immediately had him spin around in alarm. When he did, he was suddenly attacked from above by Videl dropping down to deliver a killer knee right into his visor. The blow crashed into the alien warrior with a terrifying 'crack', knocking Cal sliding back along the grass and away from the house. His feet digging two trenches into the earth, he then raised his arms up when he saw Videl come at him again from the front to deliver a punishing hook into his face. This hit knocked him stumbling backwards a second time, giving Videl the perfect opportunity to charge in and continue her assault.

Blasting off from the ground, the human fighter leapt at him with a wild haymaker. "Take this, you oversized, metal freak!” the girl shouted.

Just before her hit could land however, the large alien's hand suddenly shot up and caught her attack by the forearm. Startled, Videl then let out a cry of alarm when she was suddenly thrown through the air and straight into the ground, which she struck with her back and punched a sizable crater into the earth. Blinking in shock at literally having the air knocked out of her lungs, the stunned Videl stared up at the sky in silence.

"Ow."

Upon uttering her wheezed response and giving a couple of astonished blinks, she then saw her opponent loom over her frozen body and stare down at her oddly. At first she thought he was going to continue her attack and braced herself for the inevitable. It was only when the scouter in Cal's helmet lit up again that the enormous warrior turned his attention away from her, spinning around and backhanding the air.

His knuckles almost immediately struck something invisible with a loud 'clang', prompting a charging Zangya to materialize out of thin air with her arms raised in defense.

"What the-WHOA!" The surprised Hera took the blow as she was knocked spinning into the sky. She quickly halted herself with a quick burst of ki, after which she repositioned herself upside down and about ten stories above the ground. After a quick recovery, she once again charged towards the large alien in black armor. With a battle cry, the woman brought back her fist for a running hit, only to be caught completely by surprise when the armored Cal suddenly vanished from his spot on the ground and reappeared directly in front of her.

Zangya's jaw dropped in shock. "Mother fu-"

The instant she began to speak, the Hera left herself wide open for a punch to the face that sent her spiraling towards the ground, which she struck hard and fast. Her collision with the earth was marked by a small mushroom cloud of dust and debris, and when the plume cleared seconds later, it revealed the woman lying in a small crater; the top half of her body buried in the soil and bottom half sticking into the air.

Cal landed a few feet away from Zangya's position, where he then stared silently at her for several seconds before then turning towards the house. When he saw Chi-Chi and Goten gaping at him in shock, the warrior quickly realized what he'd just done and, panicking momentarily, placed a hand over his chest in a bow. "I… apologize for ruining your front lawn, ma'am." After making his worry and guilt known, the man quickly turned towards the horizon and took flight, blasting off with a clap of thunder as he effortlessly broke the sound barrier. Seconds later, he was gone.

Realizing their family member was in deep trouble… literally, Chi-Chi and Goten rushed out to see if Zangya and Videl were alright. While the Son mother helped the raven haired girl to her feet, the little Super Saiyan stopped beside his big sister's legs, only to jump in surprise when Paprika suddenly dropped down from the sky and landed right next to them.

Arms crossed, the green demon girl with the red, hooded cape and scarf, gazed down at the laughable sight of Zangya's bottom half sticking out of the earth. After a few seconds of burning the image into the back of her brain and watching the woman's legs twitch, the Makyan sighed.

"Zangya… that was pathetic." When she saw the legs in front of her stiffen, she then tilted her head and raised an eyebrow. "Need a hand?"

Miraculously hearing the estranged teenager through the upturned earth, the Hera could only utter Paprika smirked, "That's what I thought." Reaching forward, she then grabbed the woman by the ankle and effortlessly yanked her out of the ground with a comical 'pop'. She then unceremoniously dropped her on her ass, leaving the woman sprawled out on the front lawn, covered in dirt. As Goten dropped down to ask if his big sister was alright, the red-caped female began marching away from the house. "Feel free to join me after you two are done cleaning yourselves off." She was of course referring to both her rivals, who were still trying to get the ringing from their one-sided beating out of their ears.

Videl, Chi-Chi, Goten and Zangya then watched silently as Paprika took off from the ground and began flying at a leisurely pace in the direction Gohan and his opponents had disappeared.

Though they had no clue what was happening, judging from what the ki sensitive members of the group could feel taking place in the neighboring town, they had a pretty good idea of what was unfolding…

XXX

(Meanwhile)

(Back at Kame House)

There weren't many unique details the group of perplexed Z-fighters could make out about their large visitor, only that he seemed to be standing upright with a perfectly symmetrical figure, almost giving the impression that he was a statue, and that he resembled some poor sap that got kicked off the SWAT team due in large part to his weight and size. However, the thing about the silent stranger that had the trio on the porch back up a bit was not because his height was quite intimidating, but the fact that they couldn't sense any energy coming off of him.

It was almost like he was…

Soon being joined by the concerned bodies of Master Roshi and Marron, the four active members of the team Tien, Krillin, Chiaotzu and Android 18, quickly slid into defensive stances as the immobile figure stared each of them down. As unnerving as it was to be singled out by this inanimate looking entity, the group still had the right sense of mind to be mindful of their surroundings. The blonde fighter standing on the far corner of their formation acknowledged this by edging her way in front of her daughter, where she then used her hand to gently ease her back into the house.

"M-Mom…?"

"Stay behind me, darling," the cyborg whispered, before fixing her glare upon the burly, armed robot standing out on the sand. "Krillin?"

The short fighter swallowed nervously, "I don't know. Tien?"

"I'm in the same boat as the rest of you guys. I've got nothing," the three-eyed martial artist replied, his brow narrowing firmly on the pear-shaped individual. "However, if I was a betting boy… I'd say that this guy was somehow connected to that alien planet appearing next door to us."

"Yeah. I think you're right," the former monk murmured, a bead of sweat running down his temple and to his cheek. "Man. I know I may have said this many times before, but I really hate it when I'm right."
"In most cases, you usually are," Chiaotzu added, while simultaneously swallowing nervously. "Wow. This guy looks scary."

The group remained silent for a full minute, wondering whether or not their unexpected 'guest' was going to do anything violent. It was while they were sizing up his frame did the five humans suddenly see the large figure’s head rotate from side to side, as it then went about scanning the island in a systematic fashion.

After looking from one present figure to the next, the burly individual in the combat suit and visor then uttered one, clear word of dialogue.

"Beep." (Good morning)

The sudden, loud noise made by the robot had the people on the porch blink in unison. "Beep?" they all replied in sync.

All of a sudden, a series of computer sounds began to fill the air as lights and numbers jumped up on the inside of Mobi's visor. These readings focused in on each and every one of the fighters present and, after seeing the invader begin checking them out more thoroughly, Krillin, Chiaotzu and Tien quickly realized that the helmet the creature was wearing was probably some sort of scouting device; similar in design to the Saiyans they encountered back in the day wore. This became even more apparent when they saw the numbers of the headpiece flicker across the tinted glass and display five separate readings, which told them all that they were being checked out.

"Beep. Beep-beep." (This island has a collection of very powerful humans, but no Saiyans)

Once the details were displayed to the automaton, the dutiful warrior and diplomat then shut off the scanner and, bringing his arm up, snapped open a panel on his gauntlet.

"Beep." (I'll contact Sandra and let her know)

Thinking the robot was about to activate some sort of weapon, an alarmed Krillin threw both his hands forward and yelled out at the top of his lungs, unleashing a powerful beam of blue energy right at their stationary foe. His attack shot towards the robot like a comet, which looked up just in time to be hit square in the chest and sent careening over the ocean in the form of a ball-shaped projectile.

"BEEEEEEEEeeeeeep!!" (SHIIIIIIIIIIIIIIIT!)

However, thanks to the heavy armor cushioning the force of the energy blast, Mobi was able to spin out of line of the attack and watch it soar off into the distance. Upon which the robot then suspended itself in the sky above the water and spent the next minute or so recovering from the surprise hit.

When Tien, Android 18, Chiaotzu, Master Roshi and Marron looked towards the man that’d struck the first blow, they saw that Krillin was glaring across the ocean with his teeth tightly clenched and hands still raised in a defensive way. "A lot of bad things happened from me acting stupidly. I'm not taking any more chances." With a courageous yell, the man then leapt from the porch and blasted towards the robot floating in the distance.

Smiling at her husband's enthusiasm, the calm and supportive Android 18 took flight as well, with Tien and Chiaotzu following shortly afterwards.

Spotting the trio of fighters charging towards him across the water at breakneck speed, the surprised Mobi quickly raised its hands and waved them through the air in fright. "Beep-beep!"
Beep! Beep!" (Wait! Please stop attacking! I mean no harm!) From the way it was reacting, it was obviously stunned by the group's sudden display of aggression and was now attempting to signal them that he didn't come to their domicile to fight.

However, being unable to understand the robot's peculiar exclamations or gestures, Krillin, Tien, Chiaotzu, and Android 18 wasted no time in charging the thing down and attacking it from all sides. The metal man quickly crossed his arms over its face and blocked the four simultaneous punches they threw at him. The force of their blows caused a thunderclap that sent the armored Mobi skidding across the sky, where he quickly opened up several air flaps on his armor and slowed his body down. The instant he stopped, the automaton looked up to see Android 18 and Chiaotzu raise their hands in his direction and fire off two golden blasts of energy.

Calculating the trajectory of the attacks at light speed, the robot fired up the boosters on his feet and back, which quickly propelled him up and over the beams in a blur of movement. As soon as he dodged the shots, Mobi opened up the metal plating on his shoulders and fired a cluster of blue, flare like attacks straight down at the small contingent of Z-fighters. The group scattered when the flares shot towards them and struck the ocean, where they all detonated in a series of electrical flashes that caused noticeable ripples across the surface.

Stopping several yards away, an alarmed Chiaotzu blinked, "Wow. That was close."

Looking down at the water, an observant and nervous Tien frowned deeply. "Was he… trying to stun us?" Before his question could be answered, the man suddenly sensed a shadow fall over him and spun around, throwing his arms up just in time to block a heavy chop from the massive robot dropping down on top of him. The blow connected with a loud 'clang', which then ended in a tug-of-war match between the tri-clops and the metal warrior.

The former's partner reacted in alarm and flew forward, "Tien!"

"Chiaotzu! Stay back!" the man barked, prompting his friend to stop in his tracks.

Clenching his teeth tightly and growling under the strain, Tien attempted to force back the robot's arm as it effortlessly continued to press down on him. However, after several seconds of grappling, the man realized he was at a disadvantage. This was probably due to the rigid posture his opponent had and the fact that it didn't have an expression to read. Even so, realizing that he couldn't push back his ridiculously strong foe, the human quickly opted for a new strategy and, throwing his legs up, sent a double-kick straight into the burly alien's chest. The blow struck the armored entity with a loud bang and sent Mobi flying backwards, allowing Tien to thrust his hand forward and fire another blast at the invader.

Mobi saw the attack coming and barrel-rolled around it, firing up its boosters to charge directly towards the bald warrior. "Beep. Beep." (You're vicious. I must knock you out before you endanger any lives) Picking up speed and bearing down on the man like a rocket, the robot then prepared to tackle his quarry head first.

Just before Tien could prepare to dodge or counter the fast-moving automaton, Android 18 and Krillin suddenly dove in from above and kicked the robot square in the side. Their simultaneous kicks landed with a loud boom of force and sent the metallic man hurtling in a downward trajectory. Trailing vapor, the robot quickly righted itself before it could hit the water and fired up its stabilizer jets. As steam rose up from the ocean just a couple of feet beneath it, the armored warrior looked up to see his four opponents converge on his location and glare down at him.

While they floated into place, Krillin's head suddenly perked up and his eyes shifted in the direction of the mainland. After staring off onto the horizon for several seconds, the raven haired fighter then looked across at Tien. "Hey man… do you feel that?"

The three-eyed martial artist quickly nodded in response, "Yeah. It seems like Gohan, Zangya and Videl are having problems of their own."

This realization put a nervous expression on the shortest fighter's face as Chiaotzu began trembling from head to toe, "This is bad."

Appearing both nervous and uncertain, Krillin quickly glared down at their burly adversary, who continued to hover above the ocean with its optical sensors fixated squarely upon them. "Looks like this is going to be a really long morning."

Android 18, hearing her husband clearly, grunted in response. "At least you'll be getting a good workout, honey."

Its scouter giving a new reading on its opponents' power levels, Mobi quickly assessed the situation for what it was. Once it was certain it'd gotten all the information it needed from three of the four life forms in front of it, it then craned its head and started to back down across the water. As it did so, a red warning light then began to flash in the corner of his visor.

"Beep." (I must contact Kure)

Just before it could make any plans to retreat or attack, both Chiaotzu and Tien suddenly threw their hands forward and sent a barrage of energy blasts down at the robot's position, prompting Mobi to raise its arm and defend…

XXX

(West City)

Back inside the lobby of Capsule Corp, things were still going by normally for the staff working on the ground floor. While the secretary continued on with her morning paperwork and the security guards over in their corner continued watching the news, over on the waiting room couch and blending into the scenery, the armor-clad Kure continued to wait patiently for her name to be called up. Though waiting for anybody else would've been a mind numbing chore, the cat-woman from another quadrant wasn't in any hurry at all and continued entertaining herself with the magazines the station had provided.

Legs crossed and Doctor Briefs' article held up in front of her face, the woman listened absently to the ambient noise going on all around her while casually flipping through the pages of Earth's science and mathematics. After analyzing one of the C.C sport cars being advertised in the free space, she then turned over and found a little snippet showcasing Albert Einstein's Theory of Relativity and a cartoon version of Doctor Briefs explaining it.

After skimming over the numbers with her eyes, the young woman then gave an amused chuckle, while the cat ears protruding from the top of her helmet twitched adorably. "Your formula is spot on, Albert. But you're wrong about the speed of light being fixed. What about the thirteen other divergences?" Picking up a child's coloring book from the table next to her and flipping it over, she then pulled out an electron pen from her gauntlet and began scribbling across the page at high speed. "Energy does equal mass times the velocity of light squared in this dimension, but you're forgetting about the other twenty. It's Brianna's Fact of Transdimensional Motion versus Comprehensive First Dimension Linear physics. Clear example, if you break down the elemental components of the naturally recurring energy source Fulcrum, assume a constant decay rate and extrapolate for each of the fourteen galactic convergences it takes for a physical object to travel through a three-dimensional slip-space tunnel, you wind up with a formula for inter-dimensional energy increase that mass and light alone can't possibly explain."

Across the piece of paper, Kure managed to print out one of the most convoluted mathematical equations ever seen by a living person. Not only did it use symbols and numbers that were familiar to mathematicians from this planet, it also included a bunch of other drawings that were just incomprehensible, but seemed to connect to one another seamlessly.

Eventually the woman got to the bottom of the page and after looking for some more space to draw on, Kure then looked up with a thoughtful murmur.

"Hmm… maybe it would be simpler to explain if I wrote it using Algebraic graph theory?"

However, before she could get into the finer details of her explanation, she suddenly saw a red marker flash into view on her visor. Looking at the blinking text, which simply displayed the words 'Emergency' and 'Maya', the cat woman lowered her coloring book and engaged her mask's com link. "Talk to me."

Initially there was a blast of static. But after a moment, the crackling cleared up and a very angry, female Saiyan began screaming at the other end. "God damn it! Would you stop attacking me?!" The odd thing about the transmission is that it didn't seem like she was yelling at the person she was trying to contact, but at somebody else entirely.

Blinking in surprise, the perplexed Kure then attempted to adjust the signal. "Whoa-whoa. Maya. Calm down. What's going on? Tell me what's happening."

"Augh! Fuck!" the girl's shout came back before addressing her associate through the head piece. "Guess what… I found the Saiyan."

Kure craned her head towards the receiver in surprise, "Really? Up in the mountains?"

"Yeah! But here's the thing… he's half-Saiyan, he's got a little brother who is also half-Saiyan, and he's pissed off at me for some reason! Don't know why! AAAAAAAHHH!" All of a sudden, there was the distinct sound of explosions and crashing, all of which echoed through the transmission for several long seconds. After they faded, ragged breathing followed shortly afterwards. "I think he's attacking me because-GAH… he thinks I tried to hurt his family."

Pausing for a moment, the bewildered Kure then gave her communicator a deadpanned look. "Oh God. You didn't, did you?"

"What?! No! Of course I didn't! What makes you think I-… SHIT!" Another loud whooshing sound echoed in from the other end, indicating the woman had just dodged something big and powerful, before she began screaming at her opponent once again. "That was aimed for my head, you dick!"

Shaking her own head, Kure then took on a serious stare, "Do you think you can try and defuse the situation?"

After a few more, incomprehensible grunts, Maya's aggravated response came through, "I can try! But unless this idiot stops shooting blasts at me sometime in the next few minutes, then I won't be able to do jack shit! RAAAAGH!" When another blast being fired reverberated in over the airways, the spiky haired Saiyan then shouted. "You keep looking for the other Saiyans! I'll try and talk some sense into this-WHOA!" Following a second explosion, the exasperated Maya barked in outrage, "You know what… fuck diplomacy! It took us over a month to get here and I need to let off some steam!"

At that, a panicked look quickly appeared on Kure's face, "No-no-no-no-no! Wait a second, Ma~" Before she could finish, the transmission cut off and a defeated look fell over the woman's face, "-ya. Damn it." All of a sudden, another red light began blinking on her visor, which she quickly responded to. "Mobi? What's wrong?"

"Beep! Beep-beep!" (Kure! The people on the island you sent me to are attacking me!) came the frantic response from the robot on the other end.

Staring ahead of her in surprise, Kure then looked over at the secretary behind the desk and then the security guards, all of whom were now staring at her strangely. "Wow. The humans on this planet are a lot more violent than I was expecting." Obviously being a little louder than she was anticipating, the armored woman cringed and lowered her head. "Do you think you can hold them off until Sandra orders us to regroup?"

After a moment of silence, the robot replied, "Beep. Beep." (I'll do my best. But they are very persistent)

"Alright. Good luck buddy." Switching off her receiver, the woman looked up and considered her situation.

So far, her best friend Maya had reported two bingos and her partner Mobi was experiencing technical difficulties. Judging from what she'd heard over their transmissions, her comrades were apparently being attacked due to a major misunderstanding in communication. This was probably because the people on this planet weren't used to receiving visits from other celestial bodies and aliens… or perhaps they had been attacked multiple times in the past by interstellar visitors. Whatever the case was, Kure reasoned that the people Maya and Mobi were now fighting were this planet's defenders, and they were now acting on both instinct and experience to protect their planet.

With her companions in trouble, Kure knew that she had to do something to try and fix this. After mulling it over in her head for a couple of minutes, the shrewd and intelligent woman then figured that if she tried talking to the people with the high power levels in this place, whom she deduced were in some way connected to the ones assaulting her teammates, maybe she could get them to go out and stop their friends from attacking her friends.

"That could work," Kure mumbled to herself.

After all, this was a pretty civilized building. Perhaps the strong people here were a lot more reasonable.

So, dropping the drawing book and standing up, the woman thrust her right arm out and activated her gauntlet. A weapon resembling a wrist launcher then popped out from one of the plates, which she quickly pointed towards the nearest wall. The sight of the woman's weapon caused the secretary to scream and duck, while the security guards nearby quickly rushed forward and reached for their pistols.

Before they could do anything though, Kure fired off a blue energy ball from her wrist, which struck the wall, flattened against it and expanded in the blink of an eye. The flash of blue light then vanished shortly afterwards to reveal a perfectly circular hole, large enough to fit a car through, had been drilled into the wall. However, the interesting thing about it was that there were no burn or shrapnel marks anywhere to be seen, nor had there been any kind of explosion. It was like the entire section of plaster had just popped out of existence.
After creating her makeshift doorway, Kure then turned to walk towards it, only to be greeted by the sounds of gunfire when the two guards in the lobby opened fire on her. The bullets effortlessly bounced off of the woman's body in a series of sparks and clangs, which prompted the humanoid cat to glance in their direction. When she saw the pair of guards empty their guns and reload, the woman raised her gauntlet arm and fired a second blue sphere of energy towards them.

When the ball of light struck the pair, it expanded and swallowed up the human and his anthropomorphic German shepherd partner in a blinding flash of light. However, when it seemed like the two guards had been utterly disintegrated by the attack, when the light faded shortly afterwards, it revealed the two men standing in defensive positions, completely unscathed… and butt naked. Upon realizing that their clothes and weapons had been disintegrated, the two men panicked and covered up as best as they could.

Their mortified reactions drew a childish giggle from Kure, who then wagged her finger at them. "Sorry, boys. But I'm on a very important mission and I can't have any of you guys interfering."

After handily dispatching the men, the armored woman then turned her attention back to the hole and walked through it, leaving a pair of very embarrassed security personnel and one baffled secretary.

A few seconds after Kure left, the office door near the security station opened up and a clerk in a formal Capsule Corp uniform stepped into the lobby. Reading off of his clipboard, the man in the square glasses smiled and looked up, "Alright, Ms Kure. My name is…" He then stopped when he noticed the two naked men, the terrified secretary, and the massive hole in the wall. After looking around for a couple of moments, the man then murmured, "Did I… miss something?"

XXX

(Meanwhile)

Over in the main lab where Bulma and her family did most of their research & development, both the company president and her father could be seen standing side by side near one of the massive work stations, looking over the information streaming in from Earth's latest visitor, at the same time expressions of awe and uncertainty framed their faces. Analyzing the dozens of monitors scattered across the counter in front of them, the blue haired mother and her father drank in the specifications on the alien world that had materialized next to theirs over an hour ago, and were now running bio scans on its surface.

As bewildering as it was to see a planet appear in the space right next to theirs, what they were now more focused on was figuring out how it got here and whether or not there was any life on it. Being the sharp individuals that they were, the father and daughter pair knew right away that this wasn't some ordinary phenomenon and that there were other forces at work. So, activating whatever operating systems and equipment they had on hand, the pair were now running every test imaginable to see if their hypothesis was correct and whether they were going to receive a visit from a less than friendly race of people.

Of course, that statement was only half-true. They didn't quite know that yet.

Looking over the satellite imagery on the windows to the right, Doctor Briefs murmured uncomfortably, "There's no doubt that this world is inhabited. The question now though, is what kind of creatures or aliens are actually living on it."

"Obviously they're intelligent," Bulma answered, while at the same time zooming in on certain geographical areas being highlighted by the computers. "But what we don't know is if they're friendly."
The elderly scientist then looked at his daughter with a raised eyebrow. "Is it really such a big concern whether or not these aliens are bad?"

Staring at her father, Bulma then took on an incredulous look, "Dad, in the past seven years alone, the planet has been visited at least three times by aliens. Two of those three were monsters that wanted to enslave and/or kill all of us, while the third alien is now a close friend of ours, and is constantly checking in on Gohan to try and get her hands on his genes." She then looked across at her old man with an amused smile in play. "Trust me. It's even better than it sounds."

Adjusting his glasses, the old director chuckled, "Alright then." Turning back to the monitors he was tasked with watching, Doctor Briefs then placed his hands on his hips and tilted his head. "So… let's assume that the aliens on that planet are evil and have come here to invade the Earth. How do you propose we stop them?" He glanced back at his daughter inquisitively. "After all, this isn't some small group of intergalactic mercenaries that arrived here on a space craft or some giant, intergalactic octopus with multiple arms. We're talking about an entire planet here…"

Smirking in response, Bulma then rose up from her chair and began making her way across the room, with her father right on her heels. "Listen. If worse comes to worse, we have my Super Saiyan husband and son training in the Gravity Room just a couple doors down the hall; both of whom are strong enough to wipe out an entire system of planets if they wanted to." When she passed by one of the many other work spaces covered in mechanical clutter, she picked up a remote and pressed it, causing a space on the floor in front of her to open up. A large, human-sized plastic tube then rose up from the ground. Once it did, the unit then unveiled a white, sci-fi armor resembling a miniature Red Ribbon Army Battle Jacket and SWAT suit, standing in its center.

Bulma pointed proudly towards the armor and flashed a wide smile at her father, "But… if they're just a bunch of typical soldiers and grunts, I can take care of them with this."

Nudging his glasses up his nose, the president's father beamed, "The combat armor you've been developing from the schematics of the wrecked suit Gohan brought in a few months ago." He then gazed at it curiously and analytically. "Is this your first prototype?"

"Third," Bulma replied, before leaning against the suit's storage container comfortably. "The first one had several major drawbacks in terms of power consumption and energy output. However, I was able to fix that in the second model by applying a new element to the core and blending cobalt with the copper wiring, which I then improved again for the third. This baby here..." She then tapped the armor in the side, "comparing the stats that I was able to pull from the recordings of Vegeta's training sessions in the GR, can generate enough power to go head to head with a Super Saiyan for three days straight. The Saiyan Buster Mark III."

"Sounds like an impressive piece of equipment." Doctor Briefs gazed warmly at his daughter, "I can't wait to see her in action."

Turning to look at her suit, the blue haired woman sighed, "Gohan, Vegeta and the rest of the boys are constantly putting their lives on the line to save the world from monsters, demons and alike. After all these years of sitting on the sidelines and pottering around like some damsel in distress, I think it's about time I started pulling my weight around this place."

Before her father could make any remarks against his daughter's statement, the pair was suddenly interrupted by a brilliant flash of light and a gust of wind, which blasted across the room from the far wall and ruffled the pair's clothing. Their gazes quickly snapping in the direction of the anomaly, the father and daughter duo then spotted a perfectly circular hole in the wall and an armored figure standing in the middle of it.

Lowering her arm and disengaging her gauntlet, the intruder with the cat-like ears and tail strolled into the room. The boots of her armor clanking with every step, the graceful female in the suit surveyed the room momentarily. When she spotted the two scientists gawking at her from beside a large storage unit, the stranger's ears perked up and she hastened her stride towards them.

"Oh, hello there," Kure greeted with a wave, her voice being robotically amplified by the respirator of her helmet. From her point of view it seemed like a very natural and normal exclamation, but from Bulma and her father's perspective, it sounded absolutely terrifying. "I'm in a bit of a hurry, so I'll have to make this quick. Do you two happen to know a couple of really strong people living in this building?"

When the woman stopped walking, both a nervous Bulma and Doctor Briefs stared back at her in both bewilderment and confusion.

Blinking, the blue haired president of the company looked at the armored figure questioningly, "Huh?"

Kure smiled warmly at the pair, even though they couldn't really see it through her tinted visor. "Yeah. My scanners picked them up over an hour ago, but now they seem to have vanished. Could you please point me in the direction they're hiding?"

She then proceeded to wait for an answer. However, while the two humans standing by the pod edged back ever so slightly, the armored woman then felt a large hand place itself on her right shoulder, which had her turn around. When she did, she quickly found herself staring at the broad chest of a large human wearing green, shock-proof combat armor and a black, spandex suit. Following it up to the owner, she saw the chiseled face of the red-haired Android 16 staring down at her.

After noticing he had the intruder's full and undivided attention, the man with the Mohawk and warm smile then spoke in a robotic sounding voice, "I can show you where they are."

Hearing this put an excited look in Kure's eyes, "Really? That'll be great!"

XXX

(Meanwhile)

Just down the hall, sealed in the vibration resistant, energy-proof chamber known as the Capsule Corp's Gravity Room, Vegeta was currently putting his son through one of the most intense morning training regiments he'd ever been through. Dressed in his blue spandex uniform with white gloves and yellow-tipped training boots, the prince of all Saiyans had a serious look on his face as he watched Trunks go through a series of fighting maneuvers and attack the air with a variety of punches and kicks.

Shouting with every blow he unleashed, the lavender haired boy fought against the weight of over five hundred times gravity pressing down on his body, while simultaneously attempting to execute each of his attacks properly and without fault. Thrusting his hands in a blur of straight punches, the youngster then spun around and threw a kick, only to stumble to the side when he brought it back down to the ground. It was a sight that put a harsh glare on his father's patient face.

"Sloppy. Don't throw your leg so far back. You'll knock yourself off balance," the man stated, at the same time seeing his son reset his position.

Gritting his teeth, Trunks gave an affirmative nod and brought his hands up high. "Yes, dad."

Swallowing nervously, he then leapt into the air and performed a series of side-kicks, which cut through the space like a spray of bullets, before he threw his left arm forward and launched a barrage of high-speed jabs. This was then followed by the boy dropping down to deliver a right hook, a left elbow, and finally a right flick-kick.

Watching his son a little bit longer, the father then tapped his finger against his bicep and spoke, "You're slowing down, pick up your speed a little more. Don't even think about slacking off."

Trunks then went about adjusting his form to accommodate for his father's instructions. When Vegeta nodded in approval, the child then proceeded to move into a new set. But just as he was in the process of sliding into a new stance, a tremor throughout the room put a stop to the pair's training. When both of them looked around, wondering what the heck that sudden vibration was, a loud crashing sound suddenly echoed throughout the dome, followed shortly by the wall on Vegeta's right-hand side exploding in a shower of white rubble.

From the cloud of debris, a body was sent flying between the father and son duo, which struck the wall on the far side and dropped to the ground with a heavy thud. The second it touch down on the tiled surface, emergency alarms blared into life, which then prompted the computers to shut down the engines running the simulation. As soon as the gravity field lifted, both the perplexed Vegeta and his equally surprised son then found themselves staring at a tall, slender figure adorned in black armor, kneeling beside cracked barrier.

Confused, the two Saiyans then looked over their shoulder and towards the hole that'd been blasted through the GR from the outside. When they did, they saw the massive, hulking figure of Android 16 come stomping through. He was then shortly joined by Bulma, who was now adorned in her female Battle Jacket and had the suit's tinted visor engaged.

Upon seeing the pair appear, Trunks blinked, "Mum?"

"Oi! What the hell's going on?" Vegeta barked in both confusion and irritation.

Bulma, frowning deeply, pointed across the training room floor, "Take a guess, genius!"

Hearing a low groan, the Saiyan Prince and Trunks quickly snapped back to the black figure in armor, whom they saw shake her head and rise up from the ground. Dusting off the specks of rubble covering her shoulder plates, the stunned Kure then adjusted her ears and whipped her tail around, which she double-checked to make sure was still attached. Confirming that it was, she then looked ahead of her once again and frowned across at the group of people staring her down.

Upon getting a good view of the human torpedo, Trunks then blinked when he noticed the appendages protruding from her armor. "Hang on… are those… cat ears… and a tail?"

Hmm. That was odd. This was the first time he'd ever seen someone with authentic cat-like qualities on their person. As perplexing as it was, the boy suppressed any further questions he had on the matter and listened in as the intruder began to speak.

"Okay. That… was mean." Kure quickly perked up when she spotted Vegeta and Trunks standing in front of her, both of whom had now assumed similar fighting stances and had all of their attention fixated squarely upon her. Curious, she then activated her inbuilt scanner, which quickly got a bead on their power levels. "Oh. So this is where the two of you were hiding; inside a training room that can suppress energy. That's cool." When the numbers came back to her, along with a series of biological scans and prints, Kure balked in surprise. Upon which, a smile quickly appeared on her lips. "And it looks like I found the other Saiyans Maya was screaming at me about over the radio. Even better."
Vegeta and Trunks appeared genuinely stunned when they heard the woman mention the name of their race.

"Wait? You know about the Saiyans?" the prince asked in his gruff tone of voice.

A chuckle left Kure's lips at the obvious answer. "Of course I do. There isn't a civilization in the universe who doesn't know about your race." She then placed her hands on her hips and smirked. "After Frieza wiped out a majority of your population on Vegeta, everyone thought your people had become extinct. But, as it turns out, it's not that easy to wipe out an entire planet made up of the strongest and fiercest collection of warriors in the cosmos."

Upon processing her words carefully, the full-blooded royal then frowned deeply and took another fighting stance. "And let me guess… you came here to try and finish the job?"

"What?" Jerking in surprise, the brown haired feline then raised a hand. "No. That's not what I-"

"An entire alien planet just appeared out of space right next door to ours," Bulma interrupted through her suit's speakers, cutting the intruder off and turning her attention to her husband and son. "You and Trunks didn't know about it because the two of you were stuck in here training for the last hour. I was going to come and get you after we figured out what the heck was going on." The scientist then pointed across at her target, "But then this woman busted into our facility and broke into my lab."

Freaking out a little, Kure then held her hands forward, "Wait a second. I honestly didn't mean to-"

Eyes flashing red, Android 16 took a big step forward and stopped the intruder mid-sentence, "The staff at the front desk reported this woman coming in through the front entrance and booking an appointment with one of our liaisons. She then sat down in the waiting area, where she then began exhibiting odd behaviors. After which she attacked the security guards stationed in the lobby and started firing energy blasts at the walls."

"Well, yeah! I did! But that was only after I received a message from my teammates telling me that they'd gotten into fights with several other people living on this planet and then this… this… uhh…!" Kure shouted, only to trail off moments later when she realized the words that were coming out of her mouth, "this… isn't helping me is it?"

Unfortunately, the young woman didn't have time to rephrase her sentence, as the strongest warrior in the room decided right then and there to take immediate action…

"That's all I needed to hear," Vegeta said, before charging forward with his signature yell. "You're mine, woman!"

Hair bristling in panic, Kure lunged forward and ducked low when the prince dove at her with a flying side-kick, a maneuver which allowed her to avoid the vicious fighter while simultaneously sending her into a tumble. After rolling along the ground, she then sprang up, slid along the tiles, and assumed a low defensive stance. Sensing a second attack coming from behind, the cat woman quickly slipped her head to the side and threw her hands up, allowing her to catch the wrist of an attacking Android 16 and stop the man dead in his tracks. Upon locking his massive arm, the woman spun around and tossed the hulking male across the room and towards one of the heavily reinforced walls, only to see the cyborg flip in midair and land hard on the tiled floor several yards away. After redirecting the robot, Kure once again dropped to the floor to avoid a flying punch from Trunks, who then leapt at her and began lashing out at the woman with a series of vicious punches. Once again, the alien woman effortlessly weaved between his attacks, which eventually ended in her spinning around the child when he dove at her with an overhand, causing him to overshoot. The second she avoided his hit, the interstellar visitor then raised her arm and blocked a flying punch from the suit wearing Bulma, which connected with her gauntlet with a resounding clang.

When the scientist yanked her arm back and began to throw a left hook, Kure skillfully slipped under it, mounted the suit's forward leg with her foot, and ran up its front. This maneuver was similar to a person running up a wall, enabling Kure to drive several vicious kicks against the unit's front before back-flipping off of it, allowing the woman to spring away and land safely in the center of the room in all fours. When she looked up to see the surprised Bulma stagger away, Kure's ears suddenly twitched at the sound of approaching danger, prompting her to reach back with her tail. Her appendage stretched to an unbelievable degree, allowing the sharp minded Kure to wrap it around the leg of a charging Vegeta and catch him by surprise. Unable to react fast enough, the cat-like appendage wrapped around his ankle suddenly redirected the Saiyan and threw him upwards, slamming him into the roof of the GR. After impacting the ceiling, the tail then yanked him back down, driving the man into the floor before Kure spun him around and chucked the prince into an approaching Trunks. The father crashed into his son from the side and sent both of them tumbling across the room.

The two quickly leapt to their feet and, slamming their feet into the tiles, skidded to a stop. Upon which they looked up at their opponent in surprise, whom they saw assume a very cat-like fighting stance, her hands formed into claws and her tail swishing about behind her in an aggressive and predatory manner.

Eyes darting between the four figures in front of her, Kure then cringed in disappointment, "Alright. I guess if we're going to do this… I might as well play along." Reaching up, the woman pressed a button in the side of her helmet, which then activated a small, red signal light.

His sensors flaring brightly in warning, Android 16 leaned forward and, giving an angry, robotic yell of his own, charged towards the alien to carry out his attack. However, with her instincts set on full alert, the defensive Kure was ready and waiting for him.

With a loud hum from the back of her suit, the woman raised her left hand and, activating a built-in plasma cannon from the side panel, fired off an electrical ball of energy at the advancing android. The charged shot struck the red haired man dead on and sent the hapless cyborg blasting back at breakneck speed, upon which he then slammed into the Gravity Room wall before dropping to the floor. The other three fighters looked across at their cybernetic ally in alarm, where they saw blue electrical currents begin running up and down his body. While Android 16 was still alive and conscious, he was now lying helplessly on the floor, jerking, twitching and convulsing.

Bulma, gritting her teeth in anger, threw both her hands forward and, with a yell of effort, launched a powerful blast of fire at the woman in black armor.

Quick as ever, the female alien leapt clean over the ball of flames and dashed out of the room via the massive hole she'd formed. She then disappeared around the corner, leaving her opponents in her dust as she then attempted to get some more space.

Seeing the woman literally turn tail had Vegeta snarl in frustration, "Get back here!" Not willing to let her get away so easily, both the prince and his son wasted no time in going after her.

"Stop, you!" Trunks' yell echoed down the hallway as the pair darted out of sight.

Upon seeing her family give pursuit of the woman and hearing explosions begin echoing throughout the facility, Bulma then looked behind her and towards the fallen Android 16. Concern quickly fell across her face when she saw the twitching robot pan up to her, "Sixteen? Are you…?"
"I'll… (tzt)… be fine. That woman… (tzt)… hit me with an… e-energy disruptor. I just need t-to… (tzt-tzt)… shut down for a moment and… (tzt)… reboot my systems," the red haired cyborg replied, his eyes fixed upon his creator as he then pointed out the hole that they'd come through, "G-Go."

Nodding in understanding, the woman powered up her suit and rushed out the door, leaving Android 16 to slowly recover from the EMP attack.

The chase was on.

XXX

(To the Far East)

As the events taking place in other parts of the world rapidly unfolded, right next door to the mountainous regions of Mount Paozu, the battle between Gohan and his opponent was just getting heated up.

Amidst the chaos and the fire burning from the explosion at the petrol station, the demi-Saiyan continued battering his foe with a relentless onslaught of attacks, determined to bring her down as quickly as possible. However, a few minutes after making ground zero in the middle of the town's streets, the young warrior slowly began to realize that trying to knock his opponent down for the count was going to be a lot harder than he previously thought. Despite the advantage he had from the surprise attack, the armor the woman was wearing was providing a lot of protection for her. Not only was it ridiculously heavy, but every time his fists dragged across the metal plates, Gohan felt like he was digging his knuckles through a surface of anvils.

This led him to the conclusion that even though he was landing so many hits, he was only causing a small amount of damage to his foe. His hypothesis was quickly proven when he saw his foe jump back up after a particularly vicious beating and started hitting back at him with an equal amount of force.

Eventually being compelled to fight even harder, the pair continued to lay into one another across the small town, destroying not only the local infrastructure, but also whatever fixtures and landmarks happened to be standing in their way.

Being sure to keep their exchange away from the people, Gohan, dodging a blast thrown at him from the armored woman, sped up his charge and rammed into the spiky haired fighter with his shoulder. His running blow knocked Maya off her feet and sent her straight through a café behind her. Decimating pretty much all of the furniture and walls in the front room, the woman eventually exploded out the back and onto a second road, where she lay sprawled out with a dazed look on her face.

"Augh. Good one," the Saiyan mumbled, sitting up slowly as the stars in her eyes faded.

When she looked up to see where her opponent had gone, she suddenly spotted Gohan appear in the sky above the building, before diving straight down at her with the speed of a bullet. Reacting in alarm, the brown haired fighter rolled out of the way at the last second, avoiding the boy slamming his foot and punching a sizable crater into the floor where her head used to be. Sliding to a stop several yards away, Maya looked back in time to see Gohan leap out of the hole and, white aura blazing around him, charged at her at full speed.

Just as Gohan was cranking back his fist for another hit, he suddenly felt his body stop dead in its tracks by a powerful force grabbing hold of his ankles. "What the-?" Looking back to see what was going on, he suddenly saw the woman's teammate, the tall warrior in black armor, holding onto his legs with his two hands.

Having jumped in at the last second to catch the teen, with a growl of effort, Cal yanked Gohan back and threw the boy into the ground like a sack of flour. The demi-Saiyan impacted the tarmac with a deafening 'crack', punching a human-shaped dent into the earth. A split second later, the giant fighter then picked up the warrior by his shoulder and leg and, after raising him up and holding him upside-down, slammed the boy into the ground a second time. As soon as the half-Saiyan crashed into the floor and punched an even deeper hole into the floor, his hulking pile driver of an opponent took a step back and, with a furious yell, kicked Gohan out of the crater and down the street, where the teen ended up clothes-lined by a waiting Maya.

The demi-Saiyan struck her arm and flipped under it, before landing face-first several yards down the street in a cloud of dust. Once he was down, both Maya and Cal glared in his direction and watched as he painfully tried to get up.

Rolling onto his back, Gohan gritted his teeth and whispered in a strained voice. "O-kay… that hurt like hell." When he looked up at the two armored warriors approaching him down the street, the spiky haired fighter then cracked a disappointed frown. "Two on one, guys? That doesn't seem very fair."

Flexing her wrist, Maya quickly gave the young man a blank look through her visor, "You spear-tackled me while I wasn't even looking and shoved me through a God-damn silo."

At this, the demi-Saiyan smiled sheepishly, "Yeah, I'm… really sorry about that."

A satisfied smirk then crossed the woman's lips, "Apology accepted."

Rubbing his sore neck, the teen then gave his opponent a hopeful stare and proceeded to sit up straighter, "Does this… make us even?"

The brown haired woman chuckled, "Not yet." She then nodded towards her comrade, "But this will."

With a loud bellow, Cal lunged forward in a blur and tackled Gohan while he was standing up, dragging the teenager a block down the road and through the tarmac. After carving a nice, deep trench in the earth with his opponent's back, the hulking armored fighter rose up, drew his right fist back, and dropped a haymaker right down onto the teenager's chest. The blow slammed into Gohan's breastbone and bounced him off of the ground with a thunderclap, practically knocking the air out of him. Yelping with pain, the half-Saiyan suddenly saw Maya dart around and, seemingly teleporting alongside him, swing at his head with a kick.

Catching her leg, the demi-Saiyan swept it out from under her and dropped her onto her back. Maya hit the ground with a thud and a grunt of pain, leaving her teammate Cal to raise his left foot and attempt to stomp Gohan on the head. Acting swiftly, the demi-Saiyan rolled out of its way, barely avoiding getting its skull smashed in like a watermelon. After which he then rolled onto his stomach and attempted to fly off. However, for the second time in the last five minutes, Cal suddenly grabbed him by the ankle, held the floating boy in place, before stepping forward and dropping his forearm right on top of him.

His body smashing back into the tarmac, Gohan rolled over just in time to see Maya, back on her feet, lunging down at him with her right fist. Parrying her punch, the demi-Saiyan locked up her wrist and, redirecting her weight and motion, slammed her into the floor next to her. The maneuver elicited a yelp from the female fighter as she ungracefully slammed face first into the road.
"Dick!"

The second he stopped her, Gohan then head slipped a swift, left jab from his other opponent, who was now standing over him. Seeing the man's fist hit the tarmac directly next to him, the demi-Saiyan then skillfully grabbed the prone Maya by the back of her armor's collar and, rolling over, slammed her into the torso of her partner.

This hit knocked Cal stumbling away, freeing Gohan from underneath him. Then, while still holding onto the armored woman's back, the teenager powered up and took off into the sky. However, unwilling to let him get away that easily, the tall alien growled and leapt after him.

"Oh, no you don't!" Cal shouted, giving a loud yell as he landed right on top of the ascending Gohan and snapped his arms around him.

However, not only did the warrior end up successfully catching his opponent, he also inadvertently ended up grabbing Maya who, with the combined weight of their bodies and training armor, began to drag Gohan straight towards the ground at an alarming rate.

As they spiraled in, the female Saiyan also locked in the bear hug couldn't help but scream in alarm, "CAL! YOU IDIOT! LET GO! AAAAAAAAH!" The three warriors screamed out as they suddenly careened into the side of a warehouse and crashed right into it. Their landing was marked by a deafening explosion as the entire inside of the building and its construction material was blown to kingdom come. As fire gushed through the busted roof, the trio exploded out the rolling door and back onto the town's streets, trailing gas bottles, debris, and fire.

Rolling along the road, the three separated and leapt back to their feet at their own leisure. Skidding to a stop along the ruined highway, a slight charred Gohan glared across at the two armored warriors at the same time flames continued to scatter around them, setting the stage for another face off.

Though none of them were hurt at all, the battle so far had made them dizzy from all the spinning and crashing they'd been doing. It was starting to irritate them.

Clenching his fists, Gohan had a quick glance around before frowning deeply. "These guys are ridiculously strong. If this keeps up, we're gonna end up leveling the entire town." Initially he wanted to avoid going anywhere in sight of any villages, factories or buildings. But thanks to his sneak attack on the pair back at his place, not only did he get carried away, but the weight of his opponent ended up dragging them both down to ground level, leading to the two of them crashing into the town's service station. After looking back at the events that got them here, Gohan quickly realized that he was partly to blame for their current circumstances and concluded that he needed to correct this as soon as possible. "I have to get them out of this place and away from the people. If I do, maybe the damage to the cities can be minimized and we won't risk getting anybody else involved." He was well aware of how powerful his attacks were and what a fight between opponents of his level was capable of.

Unbeknownst to him of course, both Cal and Maya were thinking the exact same thing and were now looking at one another in concern.

"Should we try and move this somewhere else?" Cal asked with an anxious look in play. "The village is taking a lot of damage and I don't think we'll be able to keep this away from the people for much longer."

"Yeah. I think you're right," Maya answered in agreement, before quickly turning back to the half-Saiyan in front of her, who was now looking as equally concerned as them. "Hey, orange boy-"
Unfortunately the woman was unable to say anything. All of a sudden, a powerful golden blast thrown by an unknown assailant blindsided Cal and knocked the man straight into another nearby building, leveling the structure with a massive explosion. Both Maya and Gohan looked towards the blast zone in alarm when, dropping down from the sky and landing on the damaged street, Paprika joined the fray.

Scarf swishing behind her like a cape, the white haired Makyan took a fighting stance and smirked. "I've got the big guy, Son! You take care of the chick!"

"Paprika! Wait! Don't-" Gohan yelled, only for his exclamations to fall on deaf ears when the woman recklessly charged into the burning building and engaged the tall warrior, who'd just managed to resurface from the pile of rubble on top of him, "fight… in the town."

Poor Cal wasn't given any time to catch his breath when Paprika suddenly hit him with a flying side-kick, which ended up sending the big man through the remaining walls of the shop and into a nearby park.

Groaning in frustration and slapping his forehead in defeat, the demi-Saiyan turned back to the armored woman standing across from him. After seeing her face pan back over with a look of clear disbelief reflected in her posture, Gohan then raised his thumb and pointed down the road. "I was about to say we should take this fight to somewhere a little more empty."

The long haired woman nodded weakly in response, "Funny… I was about to suggest the same thing."

Chuckling a little, Gohan then shrugged, "Well. I doubt this can get any worse."

The moment he said that, a loud battle cry from behind suddenly drew the teen's attention over his shoulder. When the demi-Saiyan looked, he immediately spotted the blurred forms of a aggravated Zangya and an equally motivated Videl, both of whom blew past him at full speed and charged towards the big, armored man that knocked them around back at Mount Paozu.

When they flew past, both Gohan and Maya heard the two fighters yell at the top of their lungs.

"Let me at him!" Videl shouted.

"That big bastard is mine!" the Hera also screamed, the two fighters disappearing over the block to join Paprika in her vicious beat down of the big fighter.

After the two Saiyans on the road gave the sight of the energetic pair a deadpanned look, they then heard the distinct sounds of engines and the sounds of approaching footsteps. When the duo turned to look down the battered main road they were standing on, through the wrecked cars, the cracked buildings and the multiple pillars of smoke, the pair spotted a contingent of soldiers, dressed in full combat gear, and a pair of military jet copters hovering over them.

As the company of men on the ground cautiously approached, the commander seated in the aerial vehicle above spoke over the radio. "You on the ground! This is commander Nishima of the Yajiga Eastern Airbase under King Koku! Drop all your weapons and place your hands on top of your heads! This is your last and only warning!" The instant he issued his order, a pair of Harrier jump jets roared overhead, their thrusters propelling them over the town and telling all those out on the streets that these guys meant business.

Shoulders slumping, Gohan and Maya gave simultaneous looks of disbelief, before the female Saiyan looked at her opponent in dismay.
"It just got worse…"

XXX

(Back in West City)

In the large baseball stadium that was the home of the world renowned West City Taitans, the entire team could be seen going through their morning practice. With one half of the team out on the oval, positioned strategically across the pitch and filling up the green, the other half was observing comfortably from the dugout, watching as the rest of their compatriots played it out under the watchful eye and direction of the coach.

Having been out there for the past couple of hours, the entire team was looking forward to a prompt finish and a good lunch. The only one who was still showing he had juice left to burn was Yamcha who, sitting on the practice mound, was taking his time test-swinging three bats between his hands. After determining which one was the most reliable, the scar-faced martial artist nodded, chucked away the other two bats, and made his way over to home base. "Oh yeah. It's Yamcha's time to shine!" Here, the young man took a moment to test the ground beneath his feet and adjust his footing, before then settling into a comfortable stance. He then grinned across at the pitcher standing on the mound directly in his line of sight. "Bring it on, Mark!"

"Batter up!" the ref shouted across the stadium.

"Alright boys. Let's do this," the catcher also yelled excitedly, slamming his hand into his mitt and crouching low behind the human warrior. "Come on!"

Yamcha grinned, watching and waiting with anticipation as the pitcher brought his throwing arm up and took a deep breath. The guy seemed determined and, judging from his pose, was ready to throw a fast one. But just as the Z-fighter was priming a swing to intercept, he suddenly heard the sounds of distant explosions and felt the ground beneath him tremble. It was this unexpected anomaly that had the scar-faced man look at the ground before then turning his gaze towards the sky in confusion.

Apparently the other players felt the tremor too and, as the sounds of rumbling started to grow louder, everyone quickly fell out of their stances and positions. At first wondering what the heck these distant noises were and figuring they belonged to an earthquake, the group of ball players on the field were suddenly startled out of their wits when one of the floodlights surrounding the stadium exploded, and a black object was sent plummeting into the center of the field.

The figure collided with the oval with colossal force, causing a pillar of dust and rubble to shoot into the air, and a cloud of debris to wash over the field. While the terrified players scattered, Yamcha quickly dropped his bat and rushed forward, his eyes and attention fixed squarely on the disturbance. His approach of the crash site had a couple of his other teammates follow in his footsteps, which then led to them gathering around a large crater that was still belching out smoke and dust.

When the cloud eventually faded, Yamcha and the rest of the Taitan crew saw an armored figure, dressed in all black, with a shredded cape and a cat-like tail, rise up out of the hole. It didn't escape any of their notice that the person was incredibly tall and had a very womanly figure, which led most of them to believe that there was a girl hiding underneath all that metal plating.

Their suspicions were proven correct moments later when, realizing that her helmet was obstructing her view, the kneeling traveler reached up, disengaged the locks and ripped it off with a gasp. As soon as her head was free, the glasses wearing Kure looked down at her protective headgear with a frown. "Damn it! Maya was right. I can't see or sense shit in this thing." She then looked up when she realized people were standing around her.

The moment her eyes landed on Yamcha, who was standing just a few feet away from her, the two warriors blinked in momentary surprise. Their gazes meeting, the pair then proceeded to stare at one another for several seconds in silence. In that time, not only did the human martial artist give a quiet gasp of astonishment, the woman in armor felt the equivalent to an electric current suddenly shoot through her body and a force comparable to a punch hit her square in the chest.

It wasn't a literal blow of course. For some strange reason though, Kure felt her heart begin to beat even faster, and an exhilarating, pleasant warmth rush through her entire body. Though she had no idea exactly what this delightful sensation was, she figured it had something to do with the scar-faced man she was now looking at and admiring. The sight of him staring back at her with that innocent expression and clueless eyes had the traveler from another planet gulp nervously and utter the only thing that she could think of.

"H-Hello?"

Reeling back a little at hearing the woman's silky voice, Yamcha took a deep breath of his own and smiled back in a friendly manner. "H-Hey there?" he answered with a wave. Obviously he had no idea what the heck was going on, but with such a gorgeous looking woman sitting right in front of him, he just didn't care. The least he could do was be civil, even if his face was starting to feel a little red. "What's up?"

"Oh. Not much. Just… enjoying the scenery, nya," Kure responded cheerily, only to slap her hand over her mouth when she realized what she'd just said.

Staring blankly at the woman, the baseball players scattered around the oval, Yamcha included, could only think one thing…

"Did she just say 'nya'?"

After replaying the scene several times in their heads and seeing the shade of scarlet appear on the female's cheeks, they quickly realized that she did… and it was adorable.

Noticing the strange beauty was staring at him with her hand over her mouth, Yamcha quickly threw the armored traveler a charming grin. When he laughed, he watched as Kure lowered her head and, despite the obvious embarrassment reflected in her gaze, smiled back at the martial artist. However, before the pair could continue their awkward string of dialogue, the human fighter's gaze suddenly snapped upwards and, reacting in alarm, he dove for the woman with a yell. "LOOK OUT!" Grabbing her up, Yamcha then leapt out of the way just in time to avoid a ki blast striking the very spot the woman had been lying in, which detonated with terrifying force.

Skidding to a stop several yards away from the explosion, the man looked back to see the flames and smoke gushing out of the crater fade, before then turning to the armored female in his arms. Ignoring the weight of the woman's frame, as her suit was absurdly heavy, the scar-faced fighter smiled warmly.

"Are you alright?"

Blinking as she stared up at the man in the baseball uniform, the woman's cat-like ears twitched, before a fond smile framed her face. "Y-Yes. Thank you."

"Oi! Moron!" the gruff voice of Vegeta suddenly echoed down from above, drawing the pair's gazes towards the sky to see the Saiyan Prince, his son, and his wife clad in a mechanical suit, hovering in the sky above them. It didn't escape Yamcha's notice that the one who was addressing him was incredibly pissed and had his hand extended in a threatening manner. "Care to explain to me what the hell you think you're doing down there?"

Initially befuddled by the man's question, the scar-faced fighter then frowned and shot the man a foul glare, "What am I doing?" He then pointed up at the Saiyan. "You're the ones flying around and firing energy blasts into crowds and stadiums! Are you fucking kidding me, bro?! You guys could've hurt someone!" It was his yell of outrage that earned a look of curiosity from the interstellar visitor in his arm, who couldn't help but admire the man's spirit and good heart.

While her husband balked, Bulma, manually retracting the shield of her helmet so that she could see, floated down on her suit's thrusters and glared down at her ex. "Yamcha, you meathead!" She then pointed at their target. "That woman you're holding in your arms is an enemy! She and several others warriors came here on a mobile alien planet and are now attacking our friends as we speak!"

After processing the news at a turtle's pace, Yamcha continued to stare up at the blue haired woman for five whole seconds, before the realization of the situation finally clicked. "Seriously?"

Trunks, floating next to his mother, looked at the adult as if he'd grown a second head. "You didn't know?"

Rolling his eyes, Vegeta then fixed his best glare on the human he deemed the weakest of their group and growled, "For the love of… are you dense?! Can't you sense the other battles going on across the planet?" The prince then pointed towards the East, where the human fighter on the ground quickly followed. "Gohan, his girlfriend and the rest of the group are all fighting a bunch of God-knows-what and you're just running around playing stupid games with your pathetic baseball friends!"

"Well excuse me for trying to live a normal, human life outside of fighting, your majesty!" Yamcha shouted back sarcastically. "Though this may come as a shock to you, but not all of us can be super-powered, alien monsters who train twenty-four seven!" After giving the trio a harsh, irritated glare, he then turned to the woman in his arms and grinned sheepishly. "I'm… really sorry about that. Some of my friends can be a real pain sometimes."

Kure, hearing and sensing the earnestness in his tone, waved off his apology with a grin, "That's alright. I know the feeling well enough from hanging out with my friends." And she meant that sincerely.

Then, after sharing one last smile with each other, the cat woman leapt out of the man's arms in a blur of movement and sprang across the oval, at the same time Yamcha back flipped to a safe distance. It was almost as if a trigger had been pulled, setting the two fighters into immediate action and prompting them to assume their respective positions on the field.

Landing several yards across the stadium, the human fighter then watched as the armored female he'd saved rematerialized on the same pitch across from him, standing on all fours with her eyes fixed on both him and the other group hovering in the sky above her. When the trio in the air saw their target relocate, Vegeta, Trunks and Bulma took up defensive poses and prepared for combat.

Following their lead, Yamcha grabbed his baseball top and ripped it off, leaving him in only his pants, cleats, white singlet, and cap. Looking incredibly cool in this particular ensemble, the man slid into his signature Wolf Fang fighting stance and set his sights squarely on his attractive foe. Though he was obviously taken with the woman's appearance and innocent charm, because she was identified as an enemy, the man was forced to drop all chivalry and focus on fulfilling his Tail whipping about behind her eagerly, the woman with the glasses once again smiled as her eyes and senses darted between her opponents. Once she saw all of them were ready for a fight, she then licked her lips playfully.

"Sandra… if you don't hurry up and get down here soon, things are going to get even more out of hand…"

XXX

(Thousands of Miles Away)

Across the sprawling metropolis of Central City, most of the entire population was just now tuning into the events that were taking place along the western parts of the continent. With news of the alien world appearing above theirs currently flooding all television and internet channels, it was only a matter of time before something big went down.

Clearly, no one was paying any attention to the super-powered warriors fighting it out in the small town to the East or the capital city to the West. However, that veil of ignorance that'd been unceremoniously draped over the entire population was to be broken soon enough, as a few minutes after Yamcha had joined Bulma and the others in their battle with their alien quarry, two new figures suddenly appeared.

Floating down from the sky to land atop the spire of King Koku's castle, draped in a long white cape that completely covered her slender form and wearing a scouter with a hologram screen on her right ear, the leader of the intergalactic group, Sandra, fixed her gaze upon the sprawling megacity before her. Moving to the edge of the wide platform of the golden tower so as to get a better view, she was soon joined by her longtime friend and mechanical companion San, the giant, multi-legged tank taking up position directly alongside her and moving to survey the countryside just as she did.

While the two scanned the horizon, a series of silver, spherical objects the size of baseballs and resembling training probes, hovered down from the clouds to orbit their station. It was when these two-dozen identical devices formed up around the tower that the tourists and security on the ground finally took notice of them. The King's royal guards, who were also on duty with the officers, were quick to radio in reinforcements. However, despite their superiority in numbers and efficiency in responding, the well-dressed men in rifles had no idea what to do about the two figures now standing at the top of the monarch's tower.

Honestly, next to the King Piccolo and Kana incidents that'd occurred years before, this was the first time any of them had had to deal with a woman and some giant, robot spider-thing, using the King's place of residence as a lookout.

While the soldiers in the courtyard scurried about and the groups of tourists began snapping pictures of the pair with their cameras, San quickly glanced across at her boss and spoke with an inquisitive tone. "So… what's the next step, Empress?"

Sandra, cracking a smile as her scouter located each of the enormous power levels registering on the planet, flung back her cape and steadily raised her right hand. "Maya, Cal and Kure have successfully made contact with two possible targets, and are now trying to fend off the other high power levels that are accompanying them. Based on the information they were able to send us, it's safe to say that all of these individuals are part of the same group and have been living peacefully on this planet for the past several years." Turning her gaze towards the sky, the raven haired beauty's eyes then twinkled with mischief and excitement. "Now that we've gotten their attention, it's time to bring them in."

Processing the teenager's words quickly, the giant robot nodded energetically and chirped in a lively voice, "Understood."

Upon clenching her extended hand, the calm and collected Sandra then jabbed her arm towards the sky and, grunting effortlessly, powered up to maximum. Her white aura jumped around her in a flash of blinding light and, with a current of blue electricity running up and down her frame, fired a supercharged bolt straight up into the sky. The expulsion of energy not only caused a series of loud thunder claps, the move also parted the clouds and caused the people gathered in the courtyard below to cry out in terror.

Despite the sheer intensity of the woman's aura and her amazing display of power, San simply stood in place with her feet locked and her body lowered, as the harsh winds generated by the female Saiyan distorted the planet's weather patterns and atmosphere.

To accompany this sudden blast of energy into the sky, Sandra's energy levels skyrocketed…

XXX

Krillin, Tien, Android 18 and Chiaotzu were finding it rather odd that no matter how many hits they managed to land on their opponent or how many times they blasted him out of the sky, the burly fighter would simply get back up and return their shots with an aggressive barrage of his own. Despite his hulking frame and massive size, not only was the robot deceptively quick, he was damnably strong and durable to boot, as his armor pretty much deflected almost everything the group threw at him.

This wasn't even counting the number of tricks and weaponry the armor was also hiding. Besides the energy blasts it was able to discharge from its shoulder plates, the robot also had smoke grenades that it used to mask its movements, nano-machine rockets that it fired from missile pods concealed underneath its plating, and various other projectile weaponry that it was able to use with great effect. Even though it spent most of its time avoiding direct combat with the team, the automaton was still outrageously skilled at using the devices it had on hand to keep its persistent attackers at bay.

Determined to knock it out of the fight for good, the four warriors tried one last time to corner it, smashing it towards the ocean and firing blasts at its head. However, after unsuccessfully trying for the fifth time in a row to smack the big fighter into the water, the Z-fighters suddenly stopped when they felt an enormous power level drift in on the wind and, all at once, snapped their gazes towards the horizon.

Krillin, with a noticeable bruise on his cheek, blinked in shock. "W-Whoa. Do you guys… feel that?"

Through the sweat trickling down his face, Chiaotzu gave a nervous nod, "Y-Yeah."

"That power level… it's massive," Tien whispered. Though he'd felt his share of ridiculous energy signatures in the past, this one struck the human as odd because it felt awfully familiar to him. Phantom pains in his arm and body took the man back several years into the past, to the time Vegeta and Nappa first arrived on earth…

Noticing his four attackers were distracted, Mobi quickly looked to see what had suddenly caught the group's attention. When his helmet's scouter lit up, the robot quickly realized that the enormous energy signature they were sensing was coming from none other than his leader and comrade.
Upon registering to the glowing blip on his radar and the information that followed, the robot floating above the ocean acted without a moment's hesitation.

"Beep."

Target locked, the robot fired up its thrusters and took off towards the horizon like a rocket. After its form broke through the sound barrier with a loud clap of air and sent a blast of wind hurling in all directions, the group of human warriors hovering over the sea quickly gave pursuit.

"Let's go!" Android 18 shouted, before shooting off after their retreating foe.

"Right!" Krillin yelled back, his white aura bursting around him as he followed after her.

In a matter of seconds, the four Z-fighters left a series of vapor trails across the sky in pursuit of their opponent who, like them, was now making tracks towards the high power level in the distance.

XXX

Standing atop a flaming car with bullet holes riddling its entire body, a still alive, active and unscathed Maya could be seen facing down an equally energized Gohan and Videl, while her towerling partner stood behind her with his eyes set squarely on Zangya and Paprika, positioned on another part of the busted highway.

After apparently being locked in combat for quite some time, the two separate groups had done their best to drag the fight away from the town's center and into the outskirts. It was here, on the main highway leading out of the village and across an iron bridge, the representatives of both sides were facing each other off, with a crashed helicopter in the background and squads of exhausted and bruised soldiers gaping from the sidelines. Obviously the men's efforts to stop the super-powered fighters from destroying the countryside had ended in failure and, after thoroughly embarrassing themselves and being disarmed by the Z-fighters and the alien invaders, had resigned to watching the battle from a safe distance.

Both Maya and Cal, sporting only minor scuff marks on their armor and tears in their capes, had just begun the painstaking process of reassessing the situation regarding their multitude of opponents. But then, just as they were preparing for a third bout, a series of readings and numbers suddenly appeared on their visors. The arrows pointing them in the direction of the anomaly's source, the pair quickly straightened up and narrowed their eyes, with Maya glancing over her shoulder and towards her teammate.

"Cal?"

"Yeah. I got it," the man replied. Without warning, the pair then shot straight up into the sky and rocketed towards the horizon at a blistering speed, breaking the sound barrier several times as they flew. In just two seconds, they were gone.

Down on the ground, the crime fighter from Satan City balked, "Hey! Where the heck are they going?" It was only after her senses cued in to the pair's frequency that Videl's eyes widened in shock, and she too found herself staring in the direction they'd left. "Whoa. Wait a second… is that…?"

Also picking up on the massive power level growing in the distance, Gohan quickly set his body into a sprinter's stance and powered up. "I think I have an idea. Come on!"

Recovering quickly, the renowned guardians of the earth launched themselves from the ground and flew after the two alien fighters, their auras blazing around them and propelling them across the continent. Seeing their friends lead on, Zangya and Paprika followed suite, their forms leaping from the road and arcing into the sky, where they swiftly fell into formation alongside the pair.

Once all four heroes had taken off, they not only left a moderately damaged town and over a dozen wrecked vehicles in their wake, but also a battered and bewildered force of soldiers scattered across the community's main highway. Their commander, who'd managed to bail out of his destroyed chopper, could be seen at the front of his garrison, scratching his head and dusting off the ash covering his uniform.

As the locals slowly recovered from their brush with the intergalactic visitors, soaring over the smoking town and leaving a trail of his own, Son Goten, worried about the wellbeing of his older sibling and respective sisters, chased after the group as fast as his little body could carry him.

"Wait for me, big brother!" the demi-Saiyan chirped, his aura firing up as he picked up speed.

XXX

Over in her battle with the Z-fighters in the baseball stadium, Kure also managed to pick up her leader's power increase over in Central City. Tracking it quickly with her senses, the woman wasted no time in abandoning the battlefield and flying on over, with a thoroughly frustrated Brief family and a confused Yamcha right on her tail. The cat-alien humanoid made sure to put as much distance between herself and her antagonists, so as to avoid taking fire from behind. This allowed for a safe and straight passage to her friend's location, as well as what she suspected was to be her group's rendezvous point.

As for Gohan and the others, the gang had no idea what to expect when they finally arrived at the point where the unusual anomaly was originating from. All they could do on the flight over was share a quick briefing with those who were present, before returning to the pursuit with their senses locked onto the enemies they were following. Due to the haste in which they'd jumped into their battle, they were still debating on whether or not the guys that they were chasing after were going to sack a couple of towns or cities along the way. However, after seeing how they acted throughout their battle thus far, they had reason to suspect that the invaders weren't here to conquer or destroy the earth.

This left a majority of the Z-fighters bewildered and confused, wondering what was going to happen next.

All concerns over the possible threats these mysterious warriors posed to the planet would be cleared up soon enough. After traveling for a couple of minutes along a straight and direct path, the once scattered group of Z-fighters rapidly converged on the capital of the planet, Central City. Upon passing over the housing areas, business districts and through the enormous skyscrapers making up the downtown sectors, the groups then arrived at the sprawling estate of the world's largest ruling monarchy.

Entering King Koku's domain and arriving at the central tower that was his palace, the Z-fighters quickly hit the brakes and descended to ground level, where they were quickly greeted by swaths of excited civilians and befuddled soldiers. The majority of the humans cleared out when they saw Gohan's group touchdown in the enormous, white, cobblestone courtyard, while the royal guard responded to their arrival in typical, defensive fashion.

Seeing the soldiers moving towards them with rifles cocked and loaded, taking charge of the situation, Videl stepped forward and made her presence known to the people in the area. "Easy, fellas. There's no need for that," the young warrior spoke, her voice loud enough that it echoed across the entire quad. "We'll take it from here."

"Ms. Satan?" The commanding officer at the front, a large, beefy soldier in a blue uniform with golden cuffs and sidearm, as well as bearing the insignia of a Colonel, instantly recognized Satan City's poster girl and quickly raised his hand. "Hold it, men. Stand down. Stand down." He then waved for his soldiers to back off, which they did without question or hesitation. Once the guards fell behind him, the Colonel turned to the raven haired martial artist and nodded.

Acknowledging the man respectfully, Videl promptly fell in step with Gohan as he and Zangya approached the palace. Stopping in view of the balcony and looking up, they soon spotted the source of the enormous power level and the cause for all this morning's pandemonium.

Standing on the ledge above the King's veranda, the demi-Saiyan and his friends saw, flanked by both the armored Maya and Cal, a beautiful, raven haired woman around eighteen years old, adorned in a white cape, wearing a scouter with a blue, hologram visor over her right eye, and a golden headband with a red gem in the center around her cranium. Furthermore, not only did this woman have a very imposing presence befitting someone of royalty and high standing, she was also regarding the Z-fighters in front of her with a cool and collected disposition. This indicated that she wasn't intimidated by their presence in the least, which solidified her position as the head of the invaders and the strongest individual of her group.

While Gohan, Videl, Zangya and Paprika stared up at the newcomer with a mixture of uncertainty and confusion, they soon noticed a couple more armored figures fly into view and stop on either side of their leader. A few seconds later, the team of four heroes was promptly joined by Vegeta, Trunks, Yamcha, and Bulma, with Android 18, Tien, Krillin and Chiaotzu bringing up the rear a few seconds later. Once the eight of them had touched down on the quad where Gohan's group had gathered, a tardy but energetic Goten also rocked up to the scene, his aura dissipating as he landed and rushed over to where his best friend from West City was standing.

"Hey, Trunks!" the boy giggled, earning a grin from his lavender haired counterpart.

"Yo!" Sharing a high five with his fellow troublemaker, the pair quickly put their game faces on and turned their eyes to the spire above.

Once the entire group had formed up in the square, they quickly focused their attention on the tower, where the squad of armored opponents and their leader had assembled.

Wind whipping through her hair, Sandra silently took count of the number of fighters Maya and her friends had managed to lure in. Her scouter taking stock of their profiles, appearances and power levels, the young woman then blinked when she recognized one of the faces hanging at the front of the crowd. This person took the form of the short, raven haired fighter with the flame-shaped haircut and wearing the blue training suit.

"Hey… isn't that Prince Vegeta?" Sandra whispered in surprise, before a smirk gradually formed across her face. "Well I'll be damned. I guess that answers the question as to which Saiyan had wound up killing Frieza. And here I was expecting to find some random renegade or ruffian from a backwater planet with no history. Instead we're getting a royal delicacy." Shutting off the hologram screen of her scanner, the woman then spared a quick glance towards her teammates and addressed them seriously. "Did these guys give you any trouble?"

Maya, still sporting various marks and scratches on her suit, frowned irritably, "Things were going great at first. But once they started attacking us, things started getting a little… messy."

Concurring with her friend's brief report, the unmasked Kure also looked across at her leader with a noticeable scowl of her own, "The people I dealt with were really set on getting into a fight. I assume it's because their planet has been attacked so many times by other aliens that they weren't really in the mood for listening." Which was understandable, given the circumstances.

"Not to mention there are a couple of other races from different planets living amongst them," Cal added from the sidelines, while at the same time gesturing to the ones he and his friend had been stuck fighting. "There presences here are probably causing some strong, defensive psychological responses in the people who are closest to them."

After Sandra nodded in acknowledgement of this information, her long haired teammate then shot her a foul look that was effectively masked by the tinted visor of her helmet. "For the record, Sandra, you owe both Cal and I big time for making us come all the way down here on a diplomatic scouting mission… only to have every single one of those guys kick the crap out of us for the better part of the day."

Rotating his head towards them, Mobi added his own comment into the mix. "Beep." (Agreed)

Feeling her friend's hateful glare boring into the side of her head put a slightly nervous look on Sandra's face, which she then shook off and quickly glanced down at the Z-fighters below. "Duly noted… and good job. Now let's get this thing done." Adjusting her cape, the raven haired Saiyan then levitated over the ledge and began floating down to ground level, flanked on either side by her compatriots.

While the invaders descended to their level, an outwardly calm but concerned Zangya, looking around at the rest of their team, then noticed someone was missing. Leaning forward, she whispered to her spiky haired crush, "Hey… where's the green man?"

Obviously referring to Piccolo, Gohan could only shake his head, as he too was at a loss, "I don't know." Honestly, his best friend of many years was never one to not show himself at a time like this. Sure he usually arrived late on occasion, but despite his poor timing, the Namekian was probably the most reliable in terms of physical presence and determination, and could always be counted on to drop in at the last second to save the day when he was most needed.

But right now, Piccolo was nowhere to be seen. This led Gohan and the others to wonder what could've happened to him.

Touching down on the stone surface of the quad, the collection of intergalactic fighters then faced off against the Z-fighters. By the time the large spider-tank planted itself behind their group with a loud 'thud', which caused the soldiers in the area to back off warily, the contingent of visitors were soon graced with the presence of King Koku.

Exiting his palace with several high-ranking members of his military and political staff, along with over a dozen heavily armed guards, the blue, anthropomorphic dog with the mustache and suit, marched around so that he stood beside both the aliens and Earth's defenders. Once he was certain he had a good view of their leader, the man cleared his throat and spoke.

"Excuse me, young Ms?" the political representative of the planet began, drawing the gazes of both super-powered crowds staring each other down. Feeling their eyes on him, the man swallowed nervously before continuing, "I am King Koku: ruler of Chow Castle, Central City and all existing states of the great continent of the Dragon Kingdom. What is your purpose in this solar system and why have you come down here to our planet?"

Seeing the spider-tank glance in their general direction, the bodyguard standing closest to Koku stepped in front of him and held his arm across the ruler, "Your majesty, please stand back." There was a high chance that these people meant to harm the king and it was the duty of the Royal Guard to prevent that event from taking place.

After the multiple fiascos involving demons and monsters in the last couple of decades, there was no way in hell they were going to let another scenario like the one involving King Piccolo happen a second time.

Hearing the man's questions after his introduction, Sandra kept a cool gaze fixated upon him for a few moments. After which she then responded in a clear and cautious tone of voice. "My friends and I have come to this planet on a personal matter, your highness. As such, we do not wish to involve you or any other innocent people in our affairs. Please have your men evacuate the area so as to avoid getting caught in the crossfire." Her statement drew looks of surprise and amazement from most of the civilians gathered in that courtyard, including the Z-fighters. After seeing the noble leader acknowledge her words and begin directing his people to a safe distance, the raven haired commander turned her attention back to the group standing in front of her. "So then… where were we?"

Vegeta, baffled by this turn of events, shoved his way to the front and glared across at the woman. "Alright… I've had it up to here with this goody-goody nonsense! Why in the hell are you telling those people to leave instead of wasting them like you're supposed to? Aren't you and your people here to attack us?"

"Yeah. What gives?" Tien asked with a nervous frown of his own.

Shaking her head in disbelief, Sandra glared back at the group with an annoyed glimmer in her eye. "If you think we're here to invade or conquer this planet in any way, you people are barking up the wrong tree."

"Didn't any of you receive our message?" Maya asked, looking around at the group for confirmation.

Sharing confused glances with each other, Gohan, Videl, Zangya, Goten, Trunks and Yamcha all raised their hands at once and spoke, "We didn't."

"I don't have a television," Paprika mumbled awkwardly at the end, whereas Vegeta remained completely silent.

"We did though," Krillin added. It was a statement that was promptly followed by a concurring nod from his wife.

"So did I," Bulma also answered. Seeing the invaders turn to her, the scientist then placed her hands on her hips and frowned. "But the message was a bit scrambled. We couldn't get much from it except that 'we're going to drop by'. It was probably due to the atmospheric turbulence caused by the arrival of your planet, since it was messing up a lot of our instruments."

Blinking, Kure then groaned and slapped her forehead in exasperation. "Stupid. I should've known this would happen." She then looked back at the team with an apologetic expression in play. "The full message was supposed to say: 'Citizens of Earth: do not be alarmed. We're not here to invade your planet, we're just going to drop by and say hello'. It's my race's motto and the most used way of informing a civilized world that we don't mean them any ill will."

"OOhoh," Chiaotzu murmured, before then looking up at Tien inquisitively. "That… kind of explains a lot."
Raising an eyebrow, Zangya then rested a knuckle on her hip. "So, you guys… really aren't here to kill anyone?"

Sandra shook her head, "No."

Feeling as though he should add something, a cheerful Goten skipped forward and waved. "It's true." When he saw his big brother and Videl look down at him, the little hybrid gleefully pointed in the direction of the two people that'd dropped by his house and began to speak. "Those guys over there are super nice and didn't want to do anything bad to us. Mum was even about to invite them in for a cup of tea."

At first a little bit surprised by this revelation, Videl then cracked a smile and looked across at her boyfriend in amusement. "That's Chi-Chi for you; always offering people coffee and biscuits when not chasing off pesky salesmen or animals."

Grinning, Gohan slowly reached down and ruffled his little brother's hair, earning a giggle from the child in return, "Guess I shouldn't have been so hasty, huh?"

Hearing him from where she was standing, Maya's eye twitched in disbelief. "Nah. Ya think?"

Lowering her hand, the woman with the cat-like ears and tail then stared across at the group of fighters and spoke in a serious tone of voice, "We're not here to conquer, destroy or do anything even remotely related to that stuff. We simply wanted to ask your group a couple of questions and have a civilized conversation before moving into anything formal."

At first remaining silent, the confused collection of heroes looked between one another before Trunks stepped forward and raised his hand inquisitively. "Then… why didn't you say so in the first place?"

Hair bristling and a tick mark forming on her forehead, Kure took a big step forward and shouted at them, "I WAS TRYING TO! BUT YOU PEOPLE WERE SO BUSY KICKING ME THROUGH WALLS AND BUILDINGS THAT YOU COULDN'T HEAR ME YELLING 'I COME IN PEACE'!" Her scream practically echoed across the entire palace, scaring the daylights out of the children and startling the Z-fighters.

Hell, even the members of Kure's group standing next to the woman leaned away when they saw the fuming feline panting to catch her breath.

When the glasses-wearing diplomat looked back at them, Sandra blinked at her through wide eyes. "Whoa."

"Calm down, girl," Maya whispered, while at the same time making an easing motion with her hands.

Taking a deep breath of composure, the brown haired female then propped her hands on her hips and nodded as she inhaled and exhaled slowly. "Okay." Sniffing, she then looked back up and whispered repeatedly, "I'm okay. I'm okay now."

Cringing a little, Sandra then turned back to the startled Z-fighters and, noticing their collective expressions of concern, spoke in an apologetic voice, "Sorry about that. The six of us have had a really… really long trip here and, so far, it's been a pretty rough morning for all of us. You can probably tell we're a little bit stressed out."

Smiling back at her, the ever thoughtful Gohan waved off the incident in his usual, good-natured manner and accepted the woman's reasons gratefully. "That's okay."
"We've all been there at one point," Videl finished with a sympathetic gaze. "Don't go beating yourself up over it."

A sigh quickly left the leader's lips, "Thanks." Straightening up once again and adjusting her cape, Sandra then cleared her throat and set her glare squarely upon the group, continuing from where she left off. "Anyway, now that that little discrepancy is out of the way, we can move on to more important business. I understand that there are a couple of Saiyans amongst your group."

The announcement coming as a bit of a surprise to most of the heroes, after quickly realizing the purpose of the aliens' presence here, Paprika stepped forward with an inquisitive frown. "You guys… are looking for Saiyans?"

Sandra nodded affirmatively, "That's right."

It was then Kure moved forward and took charge of the next portion of the conversation. "Over a month ago, while we were on a routine orbit of our quadrant's nebula, our planet's long-range scanners picked up an enormous power level registering from somewhere in this system. At first we thought it was a computer malfunction and attempted to isolate it, but when members of our group actually managed to sense the energy fluctuation, we immediately realized that it wasn't a glitch, and that the energy signature was actually coming from an incredibly powerful individual."

"This came as a big surprise to all of us, because normally we wouldn't be able to feel power levels in our quadrant, no matter how strong they were, due to the fact that all inward and outward bound energy signatures are dampened by the high number of galaxy clusters in our area," Maya added, folding her arms across her chest as the members of her group shared their knowledge on the matter. "However, this energy level was so strong, it not only managed to slip into our system, but the feedback was so clear that we were able to distinguish it as belonging to a member of the Saiyan race."

This information prompted Zangya to critically analyze their story, "From the sounds of it, you guys must've picked it up from, like, over two dozen galaxies away."

Hearing the Hera's deduction brought a smirk to the feline humanoid standing on Sandra's left. "We were actually on the other side of the universe," Kure replied, her ears twitching as she noticed the looks of astonishment appear on all the humans presents. She then drew a circle in the air in front of her. "Look at it this way. Your solar system resides in the North Quadrant of the Planet Trade Organization's space, which is the top most quarter of a large circle encompassing all of the galaxies in that area. Our group comes from an entirely different circle right next to yours, in a region known as the Vulpan Quadrant." She then lowered her hand and smiled. "It's a bit of a complex system to explain. But let's just say there are multiple areas of space in the cosmos and each and every one of them is governed by a different empire."

After all, space was fucking huge and scary.

Seeing most of the group understood what was being said, Sandra then crossed her arms and smiled. "Only a Saiyan could possibly produce an energy signature that could be felt from the other side of the universe… and I'm not talking about some ordinary, middle-class soldier or officer of the former King's forces. What we felt was a warrior with a power level in a completely different league of his own… a Super Saiyan of the highest grade and class." She then focused her attention on Vegeta, whom she saw lower his head suspiciously. "We believe it was your energy signature we felt reverberating across the cosmos… Prince Vegeta."

The Z-fighters' gazes quickly snapped towards the middle where their infamous heir to the Saiyan race stood. At first the man's expression reflected a sense of astonishment, but after a few short seconds, his expression quickly fell into one of suspicion and seriousness.

"You... know who I am?" the man asked with his trademark scowl, "Impossible. How can a group of random commoners from some distant part of the universe nowhere even close to the Saiyan home world, possibly know who I am... the last remaining royal of my bloodline and the only surviving elite of the greatest warrior race in history, which is now close to extinct?"

It was this question shared by many other people in the group that had the raven haired empress chuckle. "First correction: my friends and I are hardly what you would call commoners. In fact, we are actually regarded as the most powerful group of fighters in our quadrant, making us the rulers of that part of space." Reaching up to remove the device from her right ear and handing it over to her trusty, mobile assault unit, San, the group's leader then reached down and gripped the golden band holding the cape on her shoulders. "And second correction: if you think you're the last surviving Saiyan elite in the universe... you are sorely mistaken, your highness." With one, swift movement, the woman removed her cloak and threw it into the air.

When the white sheet of fabric dropped to the ground and slammed into the quad with a 'crack', indicating that it had a significant amount of weight to it, the Z-fighters' eyes widened at what they saw. Upon completely unsheathing her form from beneath her royal garment, they saw waving in the air behind her a brown, monkey-like tail attached to her lower back. The furry appendage wiggled about in an almost teasing fashion, before the intimidating female brought it around to wave playfully at her audience.

A smirk remained plastered on her lips as she proudly flaunted her race's most identifiable trait to the planet's defenders, "After all; only a true Saiyan elite can tell when they are facing off against a member of their own kind."

The surprise emanating from every hero in the vicinity was almost palpable.

"Whoa! Are you serious?" Krillin practically shouted as he openly gaped at the woman in front of them. "Th-This isn't some bad dream is it? That girl is actually a Saiyan?"

Android 18, looking completely unfazed as usual, regarded the woman with a sense of indifference and curiosity, "It certainly seems that way."

While Bulma had to shake her head a few times to make sure she wasn't hallucinating, the half a dozen other affiliates of the human contingent continued to gawk openly at the woman in front of them. "Well, it looks like Vegeta is no longer the special little snowflake he thought he was," Yamcha chuckled, at the same time glancing at the prince's shoulders.

As everybody else gaped at the Saiyan female and her entourage, at the head of the pack, Gohan and Zangya remained generally composed. Steadfast in their positions, the latter spared a momentary glance across at her teammate to see if he was in any way moved by this development. Upon exchanging stares, the duo then once again focused their attention on the group of newcomers and waited patiently to see what would happen next.

Quickly calming his nerves, the once panicking Krillin then pulled back a little and placed a hand on his chin. "You know... it's funny. Though we've seen dozens of aliens in the past, this is actually the first time I've ever seen a female Saiyan up-close and personal. If you take away the muscles, the suit and the tail, I bet she could easily pass off as a normal, human girl."

The man actually wasn't that far off the mark.

Taking in the teen's appearance from a distance, Gohan noticed that the alien leader was wearing a revealing, white battle armor resembling a one-piece thong swim-suit. Aside from having her belly and a great deal of skin exposed, the suit also had two yellow pauldrons, similar to what Vegeta's old armor had, only they were carved to match the curvature of her shoulders, with the entire outfit being held up by a white collar with a red gem inserted on the front of the neck. Along with the golden crown, the woman also had a pair of white gloves and yellow tipped boots, all of which came together to complete the ensemble.

This then led Gohan to take note of her figure. Due to the risqué design of her uniform, Sandra was showing an awful lot of cleavage. This particular aspect of her suit drew attention to the fact that the woman was not only well-endowed, but also had a delectably slender, toned body with smooth skin, and the telltale signs of powerful muscles rounding out the rest of her frame. These muscles were so prominent that she even had the faint outline of a six-pack showing in the cutout on the front of her suit. All in all, her body reflected characteristics of an empowering female Saiyan and, due to the way she was presenting herself so confidently to the group, Gohan could only speculate at how powerful this female actually was. This was made obvious by the way he was now staring at the girl with that innocent look of wonder on his face.

Vegeta, recovering from the shock of finding out the leader was actually a member of his race, glared across at the leader with unease. "Who are you?"

Flicking back one of the bangs hanging on the side of her face, the raven haired fighter smiled. "My name is Sandra. I am the Empress of the New Saiyan Empire, ruler of the Planet Corvus, guardian of the Vulpan Quadrant, and one of the surviving members of the last generation to be born on Planet Vegeta."

This little snippet put looks of curiosity on the group's faces, whereas Vegeta continued to sneer with displeasure. "How did you manage to survive the destruction of our planet? Were you on a mission in a different star system?" His eyes narrowed. "Or… were you part of one of the groups of newborns that were sent off world?"

Smiling warmly, Sandra then closed her eyes and breathed a sigh. "I was formerly a soldier in King Vegeta's military, serving as a low-level grunt on his interplanetary forces. About a week before the latest crèche of newborns was scheduled to be sent to another galaxy, my teammate and I were dispatched on a two-man expedition to wipe out the population of a Class-C planet. It was supposed to be a routine assignment, in-and-out, with little to no resistance." She then craned her head downwards as a frown appeared on her face. "However, our mission hit a major snag when our pods fell into the path of an exploding sun. The blast waves from the celestial body knocked out our communication and life support systems, triggering the pods' emergency stasis units and putting us into cryogenic sleep. We then drifted through space for Kai knows how many years, until we crash-landed on a prehistoric planet in the far reaches of the cosmos." Sandra then glanced across at the armored woman with spiky hair next to her. "And just so we can avoid anymore pointless pronoun games… my partner on that mission just so happens to be standing right next to me."

Vegeta and everybody else's eyes quickly snapped to the figure in question, whom they saw unwrap the brown belt from around her waist and, waving it behind her, also revealed it to be a monkey-like tail that was almost identical to her partner's.

This presentation put an incredulous look on Videl's face, "Wait… she's a Saiyan too?"

Sandra smirked proudly as her partner glanced back at her. "Maya here is my closest friend and my most trusted partner. The two of us have been together for years and have fought countless battles side-by-side." She then looked across at the shaken Z-fighters and shrugged, "We both ended up trapped on that hellhole of a planet for months, with no way of getting off world or contacting for help. It wouldn't be until sometime later that we discovered Planet Vegeta had been wiped out by Frieza."

Gohan, tilting his head at the teenager, regarded her with a bright and compassionate smile. "Sounds like you two had a really hard time."

A chuckle escaped the raven haired empress's lips, "You don't know the half of it." Placing a hand on her hip, the fighter then turned her attention to Vegeta and his family. "Long story short, both my partner and I ended up making this new part of space our home; traversing its many galaxies and defeating a number of its villains. As far as we knew, we were the only two, full-blooded Saiyans living in that region and, for the longest time, we believed we were the only ones to have survived the destruction of Planet Vegeta. It was only until a month ago that we realized there were other Saiyans still alive and active in our old quadrant, and decided to investigate."

Tien, crossing his arms, looked upon the young woman with a combination of intrigue and distrust. "So let me get this straight; you transported an entire planet from one corner of the universe to the other, just so you could track down and reunite with a lost member of your race?"

"Not just that," Sandra replied, before pointing up towards the sky. "That planet you see hovering above you represents the full scope of our group's strength. It is both our home and the foundations for which we will reestablish a New Saiyan Empire; one even greater than the monarchy of old. To do this, I must first stake my claim as the most powerful Saiyan in the cosmos… and the only way I'll be able to do that is to fight and defeat the warrior responsible for destroying the monster who wiped out our entire race."

Krillin then balked when he realized what that declaration entailed, "You mean you want to fight the person that beat Frieza?"

This question drew an amused chuckle from Maya, who folded her arms and nodded, "That's right. Only a Saiyan of incredible power and strength could've possibly defeated that tyrant and brought down his entire branch of the Planet Trade Organization. That warrior would've also been capable of reaching new heights of the Saiyan's power, effectively becoming the strongest being in their part of the universe. After traveling all this way to meet them, we believe that person to be you, Vegeta."

When all eyes fell upon the former mercenary once again, they saw the flame-haired man smirk and close his eyes. Several moments later, the heroes then heard the distinct sound of his laughter fill the air, confusing the group of visitors from outer space and worrying a handful of his friends. As soon as he was done expressing his mirth, the royal then folded his arms and leered at his would-be challenger.

"While I'm flattered to be receiving so much attention and praise from a member of my race, I'm afraid it's my turn to make a few corrections." An arrogant gleam than appeared in the corner of his eye, "First off; I wasn't the one that defeated Frieza, nor was I the one that killed him and his family. That distinction is held by two other members of our group who, sadly, are no longer with us. Secondly, and though it pains me to say this, the strongest warrior on this planet is actually the man you see standing right there." He then held out his left hand and pointed straight across at Gohan, who was now looking back at the prince inquisitively. "Even though he's a half-breed, that boy's Saiyan powers and talent are far greater than any other person's here."

Surprised by this sudden announcement, especially since it was coming from none other than the prince himself, Sandra's gaze then panned towards the figure in question. "Is that so?"
Puffing her chest out, Videl confidently strode forward and spoke up in support of her boyfriend, "It's true. Gohan's the strongest person on this planet."

"Yeah!" Goten also chirped, hopping into the spotlight with a eager grin, "And not only that, our dad was the one that fought and beat Frieza."

Hearing and noticing the verbal and physical responses from all the people in the area, including the approving looks from the other Z-fighters, Sandra quickly spared a glance across at her teammate. When she saw Maya nod to her, concurring that what they were saying was all true, the Saiyan leader quickly turned to face the half-Saiyan in the center of their formation and took several steps forward.

"Well then… it seems as though I'm going to have to address these next concerns directly with you." Stopping a few yards away, the woman in white then stood before the young Saiyan with a determined smile in place. At the same time, the silver, metallic orbs orbiting her group's position spread out, with one of them coming to hover directly next to her. "As you've all noticed, we've brought the full force of our Empire to bear upon your doorstep. Being the strongest warrior in this system and quite possibly this entire quadrant, I now issue you this formal declaration."

Intrigued by her use of words, Gohan gave her his full and undivided attention, "Yeah? And what would that be?"

Sandra then lifted her head and grinned, "By the laws and customs of the New Saiyan Empire, I, Empress Sandra, challenge you and your compatriots to formal combat; my group against all of yours." She then raised her arms and gestured towards her friends, who adjusted their positions under the stares of their opposition. "The winner of our battle will decide who the most powerful Saiyan in the universe is."

Frowning a little at the challenge while the rest of his friends shuffled nervously in their respective manners, Gohan then tilted his head questioningly. "And what will happen if either side loses?"

Dropping her arms, the female warrior spoke. "Don't worry. If your group ends up defeated, nothing will happen to this planet or its people. We will simply leave this system and return to ours without any hassle or consequence." She then closed her eyes and smiled. "I simply wish to claim the title as the strongest Saiyan alive so as to cement my right to be the new ruler of our race. After all, back on our home planet, the tribal leaders were always decided through formal combat… just like how it was when King Vegeta's ancestors rose to power."

When Gohan, Videl, Zangya and everyone looked towards Vegeta for confirmation, they saw the serious fighter narrow his eyes and grunt in response. "She's right. That's how it was done back in the day. Survival of the fittest… the strong will always rule above the weak." A smirk then slowly formed on his face. "This one knows our people well."

Bulma, adjusting the armor plating on her suit, placed a hand on her hip and looked across at the foreign group oddly. "It seems like such a backwards tradition though…"

"One that many in the universe still practice, mind you," Kure interjected, easily hearing the woman above the clamor of courtyard. The blue haired scientist shirked when she saw the feline alien's gaze fall upon her, which then led to the scientist rubbing her arm sheepishly.

Understanding this much, the adult demi-Saiyan then focused his attention completely on his challenger. "Though I am keen to fight you… are you really sure you want to do this?" He then winced a little when he saw the woman's glare and scratched his head in a good-natured manner. "I mean, I know you guys traveled a long way to get here and… I'm sorry we didn't welcome you as well as we should have, but… do we really have to fight over something so trivial?"

Frowning, the raven haired woman quickly stomped forward and spoke in a much louder voice, "You have Saiyan blood in your veins, don't you? Then you should know full well the true nature of our people and the instincts that drives us!" Sandra then inhaled deeply and shot the young warrior a fierce glare, "We are inherently a violent and primal race; genetically built to fight and conquer whatever crosses our path, as we are constantly seeking conflict wherever we can. Our desire to battle and gain strength compels us to seek new challenges and excitement, and we instinctively take whatever we want in the pursuit of greater power, whether its food, company, wealth, mates, rivals, or items of great personal worth. It is through these very desires and actions that we've practiced for over a million years that we've gained knowledge, strength and respect… and from that knowledge, we created a culture. It is our pride and strength as warriors that defines us as both individuals and as a people… and it is through combat that we gain that sense of self-respect and personal worth that you would call honor."

Vegeta, having remained silent throughout the Saiyan's lengthy speech, slowly felt a wide grin form across his lips. "Oh-ho. I like this girl." He then turned to see how Gohan was handling this, only to notice that the demi-Saiyan seemed completely mystified and entranced by the young woman's words. Looking between him and Sandra, the prince mentally scratched his head as to what was going on, only to then raise an eyebrow when it eventually clicked with him.

Though he wasn't saying anything, the man could tell that Gohan was taken by this girl… Really taken by her.

Smiling when she saw the awed looks on her audience's faces, Sandra finished her declaration with a few final words. "The stronger the opponent, the greater the reward. Your father defeated the very man that sought to wipe our people from the pages of history; a monster possessing power and strength far greater than any other creature in his kingdom. The honor of battling such a tyrant fell upon his shoulders and, through his actions, he established himself as one of the strongest and most remarkable Saiyans in the universe." She then flicked her hair back and smirked. "As such, neither my friends nor I will be able to rest easy, until we have regained that sense of honor through battle with an adversary that we deem as an equal. Our pride as warriors demands it."

For the next minute after that, the group stood in silence. Most of them had no idea how to respond to her words or what they were supposed to do to initiate the next stage of the conversation. However, Sandra's statements weren't meant for the humans in the group. No. Her words were aimed directly at Gohan, whom she was now waiting patiently for an answer. Whether he would accept her offer or not was up to him. After all, this battle that she was proposing wasn't over anything major, like the destruction of the planet or the enslavement of a race. It was merely a challenge made to satisfy the ego of an alien people, whose thirst for battle and taste for excitement was next to unquenchable.

Considering the fuss that was being made, the request seemed almost unreasonable. Hell, Krillin, Tien and the others wouldn't be surprised if Gohan outright turned her down.

However, in a surprising twist, a very competitive and determined smirk suddenly formed on the adult demi-Saiyan's face. When Zangya, Videl and Vegeta saw it, they knew instantly what was coming next.

"Alright… you've convinced me," Gohan responded loud and clear, stepping forward so that he was at least a few meters ahead of his friends. "Though I'm sure my father would love the chance to fight against you, since he isn't here… I will accept your challenge in his place." His declaration and consent to the battle put smile on all the able warriors in the area, including the humans, with Videl cracking her knuckles in preparation.

A wide grin appearing when he heard the teen's declaration, Sandra rolled her shoulder and stepped up as well. "Excellent. I'm glad to see there's a bit of Saiyan in you after all."

"Hey. You came all this way to our planet just to say hello and to challenge us to a friendly contest? Hell, unlike some of the other aliens we've fought in the past, you guys are one of the friendliest groups of invaders we've ever had... and that's saying a lot," Gohan chuckled, while at the same time adjusting the wrist band on his right arm. "After the horrible way we treated your friends the entire morning, I'd say you guys have earned something in return for your troubles. I just hope my challenge will be enough of an apology." When he looked back at the rest of his team, he saw many of them look away in embarrassment, while people like Android 18 and Vegeta remained completely unshaken.

Maya, hearing the hybrid's remarks, smirked across at him in amusement, "You know... you could just say you're sorry."

Shaking her head at her friend, the Saiyan Empress beamed across at her now formal opponent, "I'm sure your acceptance is more than substantial." She then pointed around at the silver spheres floating in the area. "These mobile cameras have been hooked into every single one of the planet's internet and satellite channels, and will be transmitting a live feed of our battle to every corner of the globe at an appropriate frame rate. This way, not only will the people of your world be able to get a clear, inside view of all of our battles, but by the end of the day, everyone will know what the official score will be."

Gohan gestured to the woman in understanding, "Good. So long as they're not going to interfere with our fight, then I'm completely cool with that." After assuring himself that he'd made the right decision, the teen then narrowed his eyes into a serious scowl. "The terms and conditions of our battle will remain the same, I hope?"

Sandra nodded, "Of course. Win or lose, my group and I promise not to bring any harm to your friends or to the people of this planet. It would be a major upset and a great dishonor on my part if either of us were to resort to Frieza's level of conduct." She then lowered her head and eyed her opponent mischievously. "However, depending on how well you do against me, I just might be tempted to induct you and the entire Earth into the ranks of the New Saiyan Empire."

Chuckling at the leader's little joke, the demi-Saiyan then clenched his fists tightly, "I wouldn't be so confident if I were you. As your friends may have already noticed, you're not dealing with an ordinary group of fighters here. I myself have gone through quite a few battles over the past several years and after all the opponents I've fought... I managed to pick up a few tricks."

"Oh? And what kind of tricks would they be?" Sandra asked, goading the young man to show his hand first.

This teasing jab was more than enough to have Gohan widen his stance, which signaled the other Z-fighters positioned behind him to brace themselves. "Tricks like this." His stare hardening, the young half-Saiyan then summoned all the energy he could muster, resulting in a ripple of heat waves rising off of his body and chains of electricity crackling across the cobblestone floor. It was these sudden anomalies in the atmosphere that alerted Sandra and her cohorts to their opponent's rising power level, which had Maya, Kure and Cal look upon the young man with a mixture of shock and awe.

A split second later, a fierce wind kicked up around Gohan and a loud, pained scream left his lips. This was quickly followed by a series of dull thumping sounds as his arms, chest and legs bulked up, and a barrage of lightning strikes shot off of his person and hit the earth around him.

Then, with a bellowing howl, Gohan's body was enveloped in a blinding flash of light, which sent a shockwave rolling across the courtyard in all directions. This deafening sonic boom cracked the floor and rattled the buildings, startling King Koku and the Central City people watching from the sidelines many yards away. When the white flash faded shortly thereafter, it revealed the adult hybrid in his full, Super Saiyan 3 glory. His impressive golden hair had grown all the way down to his knees and was now wafting in an electric, golden aura, with bolts of blue lightning running up and down his person. Furthermore, not only had his eyebrows seemingly disintegrated, but his face and muscles had become far more pronounced, rounded out by two bangs hanging over his forehead as opposed to the usual one.

As soon as his aura stabilized, the young adult warrior straightened up into a normal stance as he stood in the center of the courtyard, kicking up dust and debris, and scaring the hell out of his comrades. It wasn't just the fact that the teen looked scary, but his power level was also massive. Since they were all stationed a few yards away from him, they were getting the full, ki readout experience, as the demi-Saiyan's energy was now quite literally blasting them in the face.

"Holy cow… Gohan is stronger than he's ever been," Tien thought, sweat dripping down his face as dust washed over their group. "There's no way a normal person can generate that much power. It's unreal."

Yamcha, unable to hide his own shock, stood trembling alongside the gaping Krillin, Android 18 and Bulma. "There's so much energy radiating off of him that I can't stop shaking. Geez. How can the others even stand near him right now?"

The only people who didn't seem affected by this were Zangya and Vegeta, both of whom continued to hold their ground and watch the performance unfold.

As for Sandra and her crew, while the female Saiyan looked mildly surprised, her teammates were all stunned when they saw the boy's transformation. They didn't even bother reading the numbers that jumped up on their visors, as they could pretty much feel the amount of energy coming off of the boy through their armor.

"Wow," Kure murmured, her eyes shimmering in disbelief, "It's amazing."

"You can say that again," Cal added at the end, his own stunned expression hidden by his visor.

Standing inside his aura of electric gold, a fully powered and confident Gohan then threw his would-be opponent a smirk. "Well? What do you think? Pretty cool, huh?"

Upon hearing the boy's remark, the raven haired female quickly glanced over her shoulder and, drawing her subordinates' gazes towards her, nodded in their direction. Complying with her partner's silent instruction, Maya and her compatriots quickly began removing the armor covering their bodies. The helmets came off first, quickly followed by the gloves, gauntlets, boots, shoulder guards, and chest plates. The ruined capes also joined the collection of metallic parts which, upon impacting the cobblestone ground, punched miniature craters into the floor at the sheer force that they were dropped.

It was when the groups saw the first sets of clothing hit the ground that Zangya, Gohan and the rest of the Z-fighters blinked in surprise, with the former quickly addressing the issue.

"Whoa. What the heck is that all about?" the Hera asked.
Seeing the huge holes each armor plate was making in the ground, Tien quickly deduced what was going on. "That's no ordinary weighted armor. Each of those blocks looks like they weigh around a hundred kilos each."

While Maya was taking off the bottom portion of her armor, bending over in a rather alluring manner, Sandra turned towards the confused group of heroes with a smirk. "Not even close. To be more precise, each block was hand crafted out of refined dwarf star material, meaning the suits each weigh over five thousand tons apiece. In the months we were traveling here through slip space, my friends and I have been training extra hard in preparation for our eventual confrontation. On top of the extra gravity of our planet, we were also wearing these custom made combat armors to help increase our strength."

Hearing this had Krillin gape in shock. "A thousand tons apiece? That's insane!"

Kure, removing the last plate from her shoulder, smiled across at the group with a proud look in her eyes. "It's perfectly safe. Each suit is built with an automatic locking system to prevent the wearer from damaging their surroundings. It's one of the most advanced and effective training units designed by my people, and are ideal for on-the-move conditioning." She then tossed the plate over her shoulder. After arcing through the air, the piece then slammed into the ground behind her with a deafening 'bang', punching a huge crater into the floor, and sending a cloud of dust and rubble shooting three stories into the air.

Once the rumbling from the dropped shoulder plate stopped, Sandra cocked her head to the side. "Normally armor is worn in order to defend users against attacks from the outside. But in our case… it's a little bit different." When she saw Maya and Cal were done removing their gear, the female Saiyan smirked. "We wear it to suppress our power and protect our opponents from harm."

Through their awe and shock, the Z-fighters began checking out the uniforms the group had been wearing under the suits. While the burly robot and the spider tank hadn't done anything with their appearances, the organic beings among them definitely had.

The feline humanoid Kure had an attractive, figure-hugging elastic space suit, which was designed with navy blue sections on the arms, back and leggings, and white portions around the chest, torso and trim areas. She also had red padded shoulder, elbow, knuckle and shin plates, providing extra protections where there was none.

Maya meanwhile was sporting a very tasteful, one-piece blue spandex suit, which hugged at her body and showed off her smooth, dark skin and shapely fighter's figure. She also had her tail wrapped around her waist, her ridiculous amounts of hair done up into a ponytail, and wore the standard white Saiyan boots and gloves on each limb.

As for Cal, the man revealed to the group that he was in fact a very large, humanoid male in his prime, with a hulking, Schwarzenegger-like body, adorned in a full-fitting, grey spandex suit, grey boots and grey gloves. Furthermore, to match his chiseled frame, he also had a very tough, but also a kindly sort of face, with short, black hair that was combed, and a single bang hanging in front of his forehead.

Upon seeing the rest of the invaders rise to full height and form up behind their leader, the still Super Saiyan 3 Gohan raised an eyebrow and looked towards Sandra with an inquisitive smirk. "You're definitely a lot stronger than the average fighters, there's no arguing that." He then lowered his head a little, "However… after seeing what I can do, are you sure you're still up for this fight? Because I gotta warn you, this isn't any ordinary transformation—"

"Oh, my friends and I are already well aware of the Super Saiyan transformations; the legendary state that grants any Saiyans who've mastered it enormous strength and power, allowing them to fight against beings of the highest possible class and caliber," Sandra informed, putting a momentary look of surprise on the teen's face. "I wouldn't have traveled all this way for a fight without at least knowing this much."

Frowning, the demi-Saiyan then regarded the leader with greater interest and intent. "So… what happens next?"

An excited grin appearing, Sandra then clenched her fists at her sides. "Now that I've seen what you've got, it's only fair that I show you what I've got." Her expression tightening fiercely, the female then spent the next couple of seconds focusing the energy inside her body. After heat waves and wind began to bellow around her, the young leader then brought her arms up and, with a roar of pain and effort, threw them downwards as a golden aura exploded from her body with a thunderous shockwave. In the blink of an eye, the proud female leader's hair turned gold, spiked up, and grew down her back, with her muscles bulking up significantly and her eyebrows vanishing into her forehead. To accompany her instantaneous change in features, a storm of lightning blasted off of her frame, sending a second shockwave rippling across the landscape and splitting the earth beneath her.

The moment her body became enveloped in her electrical, golden aura, complete with a bio-field of blue lightning, the Saiyan Empress relaxed, allowing the Z-fighters to gape openly at her newly transformed state.

Without even the slightest bit of effort, the interstellar traveler had managed to transform into a Super Saiyan 3.

When she saw the demi-Saiyan in front of her gawk in disbelief, the now more muscular and battle-ready Sandra chuckled in amusement. "So… did that feel as good for you as it did for me?"

Just like Gohan; Zangya, Vegeta, Goten, Trunks, Paprika, Videl, Android 18 and all the other Z-fighters, were speechless.

Krillin gulped, "OOooh…"

"-Shit," Zangya finished.

(TO BE CONTINUED)

Author's Note: Damn it, I didn't intend for the chapter to go for so long, but… oh well. The next one is up and I'm happy. Hopefully all of you are entertained as well.

As part of the changes I've made in Legacies from the original canon, I've also provided some more specs for the main character below, listing all of the transformations and states exclusive only to him. I also hope it covers all of the important points in the story:

P.S - I've also provided a link to the new cover for this story in my profile, if anyone's interested. :)

Gohan's transformations:

Super Saiyan – Gohan first acquired this form at the age of nine training in the Hyperbolic Time Chamber, making him, at the time, the youngest Saiyan to ever achieve this form. Through a combination of hard work, pain, and encouragement from his father, the young half-Saiyan was able to achieve the legendary transformation, turning him into one of the strongest fighters in his group.
Super Saiyan Full Power – Gohan is one of the first people to display full mastery over his Super Saiyan state. He learned to perfect this form from his father, who suggested that they both remain transformed for extended periods of time so as to diminish the strain on their bodies, enable them access to their full strength without the fatigue of powering up, and eliminate all the unwanted behavioral effects exhibited by the transformation.

Initially using it exclusively during the Cell Games Saga, in the Legacies storyline, Gohan frequently uses the form to train as an adult, maintaining the transformation for extended periods in between sessions so as to increase his control over his powers. Strengthening his base form and his first Super Saiyan form also enables him to increase his power in all subsequent Super Saiyan transformations, allowing him to increase his power at an accelerated rate.

Super Saiyan 2 (aka Ascended Saiyan) – Gohan is the first and youngest character in the series to reach the second form of Super Saiyan. Officially in the manga, Gohan first achieved this form when he became enraged during his battle against Cell after witnessing the Cell Juniors attack his friends and the death of Android 16. But in an anime-only flashback, it was revealed the demi-Saiyan first reached this form while he was training in the Hyperbolic Time Chamber with his father, but was too exhausted to maintain it. Initially, Gohan exhibited much more violent and sadistic behaviors when in this form, a stark contrast to his normally gentle and selfless nature, as the enormous power exerted by the transformation twisted his state of mind.

However, in the Dragonball Z canon, as an adult, Gohan was able to reduce the drastic changes in his nature caused by the form and was able to gain control over his transformation.

In the Legacies storyline, Gohan learned to master his Super Saiyan 2 form in a similar manner to how he mastered his first Super Saiyan form; by maintaining it for extended periods of time and training with it in the early stages of his teenage years. This allowed him to rid himself of the feral tendencies of his Saiyan side, to the point that he can act completely normal while in his ascended state, and power up to the form without any strain on his body whatsoever.

Super Saiyan 3 (aka Golden Mane Super Saiyan) – The most powerful form of Super Saiyan to date, the Super Saiyan 3 form is a legendary form that can only be achieved by the most dedicated and remarkable of Saiyans, with the key to triggering the transformation being unique to each individual.

In the Legacies storyline, this was the most difficult form for Gohan to achieve. Although the demi-Saiyan got close to achieving the transformation through intense training, he was unable to access it through powering up alone. It was only through an emotional push he was finally able to cross the threshold. This was triggered when Gohan became enraged when he thought Videl had been killed by Set, allowing him to jump to the third form in an instant. The form not only grants him a hundred percent access to his power, it also causes an enormous strain on his body, burning through his energy faster than all the other forms in his arsenal.

Gohan struggled to maintain the form for over five minutes. However, through hours of dedicated training in a secured environment, he was able to increase the time he was able to maintain the form to fifteen minutes.

The demi-Saiyan later discovers that after regrowing his tail, he's able to reactivate the naturally recurring Saiyan stimulates in his body's nervous and circulatory systems, allowing him to maintain the form indefinitely without any strain on his person. He later reveals this discovery in his first encounter with Sandra, who'd also mastered the Super Saiyan 3 form to the same degree.

Super Saiyan God – A form that was once thought to be a myth in Saiyan history, this transformation allows the Saiyan user to tap into an unfathomable well of energy, achieving feats and powers no other member of their race could possibly reach on their own.

In the Legacies storyline, by supplementing his normal ki with Godly ki (aka Celestial Energy), Gohan was able to multiply his powers and achieve a form Set quickly identified as a Super Saiyan God form. However, due to the unusual nature and method Gohan used to acquire this state; it is in fact not the true Super Saiyan God form (as seen in the Battle of Gods movie or Dragonball Super). On the contrary, it is in fact an entirely different Super Saiyan God form; a hybrid fusion of both his conventional Super Saiyan transformations and the Godly ki he absorbed from Set's prison, making the form he achieved a unique transformation exclusive only to him.

As Gohan is a half-Saiyan and not a full-blooded Saiyan, the transformation can be regarded as a pseudo-Super Saiyan God form. Also, because he didn't go through the ritual to create the Super Saiyan God, his body didn't receive the power up that is normally given to the Saiyan when their bodies become adapted to the strength.

Due to the enormous amounts of Godly ki his body absorbed, combined with his latent powers and natural talent, Gohan was able to maintain the form in a Super Saiyan 3 state for a period longer than the projected time limit. This can be attributed to the unique nature of the Godly ki resonating with his body, as it'd previously belonged to the most powerful God in existence, which in turn amplified his existing powers.

After burning through most of the Godly ki in his fight with Set, Gohan soon returned to using his normal energy. However, the remains of the Godly ki his body managed to absorb is now lying dormant inside of him and continues to grow with every training session. This means Gohan has access to two different forms of energy: the first being his normal ki, which he has mastered, and the second being the Godly ki he absorbed from Set, which he has not yet mastered.

Hidden Power (aka Mezame) – In the canon series, Gohan showed he possessed a great, mysterious power, which was normally triggered when he experienced extreme states of rage and anger. This resulted in enormous bursts of power, which would only last for a few short minutes before eventually fading. It is through this 'Hidden Power' that enabled Gohan to defeat and/or harm foes thousands of times more powerful than himself, including Raditz, Garlic Junior, Turles' men, and multiple forms of Frieza's transformations (though he only wounded the tyrant), as well as eventually achieve his Super Saiyan 2 form. According to Akira Toriyama, this Ascended Saiyan form was originally believed to be Gohan's Hidden Power finally unleashed. However, this fact was later changed with the continuation of the Dragonball Z storyline into the Buu Saga, and Gohan's 'Hidden Power' was later forgotten and carelessly written off in his adult life.

In the Legacies storyline, Gohan's mysterious 'Hidden Power' continues to play a major role in the story and is frequently mentioned by multiple characters he encounters, including Set, Sandra, Whis, Piccolo, Aphrodite, Zangya, Kana and even Orthros.

It is later revealed that Gohan's 'Hidden Power' is actually alive; an ethereal body of living energy that responds exclusively to his will. The form has only appeared in brief instances in the story so far, allowing Gohan to achieve and maintain a variety of Super Saiyan forms for extended periods of time, including his pseudo-Super Saiyan God form, and use the powers granted to him by the subsequent transformations to tackle the most impossible of foes. When Gohan eventually awakens his full power, he achieves a form greater than any deity in existence, allowing him to perform unimaginable feats of universal bending proportions.

The form is aptly named 'Mezame' or 'Awakening', a state inspired off of the term used in Buddhism to describe a 'sudden insight in transcendental truth.' (I'd like to thank Nobody knows exactly what this 'Hidden Power' actually is, except for a select few individuals, including Orthros, as she regards it as a universal entity that grants the wielder a gateway to a dimension of limitless power. This is in-keeping with what the original Dragonball Z canon, as Goku frequently referred to Gohan's true power as being limitless, something that not even he could fathom.
Saiyan Invasion Arc - Heroes vs Heroes

Author's Note: Man. It's been weeks since I was last on here and now I'm back. Sorry to keep you all waiting.

Lol. I remember promising a shorter chapter this time around. Unfortunately, it looks as though I'm still working on it. Next time.

I guess I'm just having too much fun writing this arc that I get a little carried away. Anyhow, let me know what you think and hope you all enjoy this next installment.

---

Dragonball Z

Legacies

Heroes vs Heroes

(Grand Kai's Planet)

Gathered on the lawn in front of an old television, similar to the one King Kai had used to view the Intergalactic Martial Arts Tournament years earlier, Goku, his trainer, Olibu, Bubbles and Gregory, had arranged themselves on a collection of lawn chairs and were watching the events unfolding down on Earth. This being a rather special viewing, Babba, West Kai and Pikkon were also present, with the former having situated herself on her crystal ball, while the latter were standing in the background.

Judging from the way they were focusing on the magic box, you would think this was just some casual event for the band of fighters. However, after the North Kai picked up the strange signals he was receiving from Earth and honed in on them to get a closer look, he immediately had his closest associates gather in one area, so that they could observe the competition taking place in the land of the living.

Unlike all of the other times, it wasn't a planet or galaxy shattering event that spelled doom for the entire universe. No. After listening in on what'd been going on and watching the events transpire first hand, the Kais and the fighters quickly determined that this was something a little more fun.

This fact was made more obvious by how King Kai and Bubbles were splitting a box of popcorn and Goku was gorging himself on hot dogs.

After witnessing his son and his opponent go Super Saiyan 3 within seconds of each other, the thunderstruck father stopped his gorging to gawk at the fuzzy screen. "Whoa. Is she for real? That girl can reach his level too?"

"Looks like it," North Kai answered while glancing over at his student. "For the past several years I thought you and Vegeta were the only full-blooded Saiyans left in my quadrant. I never imagined there would be several others living in another part of space." He then turned his gaze back to the television, where he continued to watch the broadcast play out. "But I shouldn't be so surprised. It's really difficult trying to keep track of over a trillion souls in a single sector, especially those that are really good at keeping a low profile. It's not like I'm keeping stock of all the Saiyans in the universe."

"Yeah. But still… unreal," Goku murmured, taking another bite out of his hotdog and accidently spilling some sauce on his shirt, "This girl must have been training her heart out her entire life to get as strong as she has. Makes you wonder how powerful she actually is."

"Powerful enough to reach Super Saiyan 3 apparently," King Kai remarked, at the same time grabbing a handful of popcorn and holding it above his chest. He then narrowed his eyes and focused his antenna more intently. "You have to be an incredibly disciplined and exceptional warrior to achieve that kind of strength. I don't even want to begin to imagine the kind of battles and monsters her and her group had gone through to get as far as they have."

Goku tilted his head, "What do you think?"

The blue man shrugged, "From what I can sense, she's exactly the same strength as Gohan."

This news put a big grin on Goku's face, "Well then, this should be a pretty exciting match for my son." He then shoved the rest of the hotdog into his mouth, spilling crumbs all over the front of his top. "Gohan's gotten into loads of fights over the years with aliens, humans, androids, robots, giants, mechs, and even Gods. But this'll be the first time I'll be able to watch my boy get into a one-on-one battle with another Super Saiyan."

"Yeah. And this will also be the first time we'll get to see a fight where the entire Planet Earth isn't in any kind of mortal peril. I tell yah, the amount of insurance claims I've had to deal with regarding your home planet in the last decade alone… I swear," King Kai finished, before putting the handful of popcorn he was holding into his mouth. As the sound of chewing filled the air, the man then mumbled through a full mouth just as his student had, "I just hope those two kids will be able to keep the fight from getting out of hand."

"Ah. It'll be fine, King Kai. Let them have their fun. I'm sure Gohan has it all under control," Goku stated, voicing his complete and utter confidence in his oldest boy. "Plus this group seems really nice. The Earth's never been visited by many friendly aliens before, so I think things are going to be okay."

Though he knew his family and friends had the situation well in hand, the full-blooded warrior had no idea what kind of damage to expect from two Super Saiyan 3s fighting each other in the mortal plains. Able to feel the power levels for himself from where he was sitting billions of miles away, he had a distinct feeling that it was going to be quite immense…

OOO

(Meanwhile)

(Planet Corvus)

Groaning under the cracks of light beating against his skin, a groggy and disoriented Piccolo arose from his slumber at a wounded pace. His eyes still cloudy from his lapse in unconsciousness he'd experienced, the Namekian then cleared out his eyes and rose to his feet, where he then began the irritating process of regaining his bearings. Unfortunately his mental compass may have gone a little bit awry, because he quickly realized that he was in a place he'd never been to before.

"Wait… this is…" It didn't take him long to figure out he wasn't on Earth. Combining his knowledge of recent events with the environment he was able to identify, all signs pointed to the fact that he'd in fact arrived on the alien world he was previously investigating… and in a forested area no less. The enormous amount of vegetation, shrubbery, mountain ranges arcing around the horizon, and the unfamiliar terrain, gave him all the clues he needed to know that he was a long way from home.
The fact that the sky was purple, there were enormous mountains floating in the atmosphere, and two moons orbiting in sight of the world, were also a dead giveaway that this wasn't Earth.

A grunt from the Namekian indicated how impressed he actually was. "Okay. A new planet, a new sky, a new forest… all that's missing now is the aliens."

He then began making an inspection of the vicinity he'd woken up in. From what he could see, he'd landed inside a clearing, with a line of flowering trees surrounding him, and a large, crystal clear lake sitting just a few yards away. Commenting on how the area made for both a beautiful garden and a sanctuary all in one, the man then looked behind him, where he saw to his surprise an enormous, towering castle situation at the top of a mountain several miles away from his position.

Blinking at the sheer size of the fortress, and the medieval and science fiction qualities governing its design, the Namekian then clenched his fists and prepared to take a closer look. However, just as he was getting set to move, the Z-fighter was suddenly stopped in his tracks at the sound of branches snapping in his blind spot, and looked to his right to see what it was. He recoiled in alarm when he saw an enormous beast emerge from the woods, a six-legged, towering mammal resembling a rhino bearing reptilian traits.

The creature with the scarab horn on its crown stomped towards Piccolo, who braced himself when the animal gave a loud, booming groan. When the warrior from Earth thought the creature was going to attack, a whistle followed by a deep, gravelly voice suddenly caught the Namekian's attention.

"Heel, Sesha. Heel." When Piccolo turned in the direction of the owner, he received his second biggest shock when he saw a Namekian, dressed in a white gi, yellow shawl and sash, standing over by the tree line. Obviously being the one to have announced his presence, the dark green alien then wandered out into the open and gestured at the enormous creature breathing down on the astonished Z-fighter. "This newcomer is our guest. There's no need to get defensive. Go on, now."

Giving a low groan in response, the giant beast slowly wandered off, heading over to the lake. Piccolo, taking a deep breath of relief, watched the alien mammal move over to the water's edge and settle on the shore, before quickly turning his attention back to his fellow Namekian. He looked back at the stranger in time to see the inhabitant of the foreign world chuckle, while at the same time observing the rhino drinking from the lake.

"Don't mind her. She's normally harmless, but she gets a little antsy around strangers, especially those who drop into our garden unexpectedly." The mysterious Namekian then glanced across at Piccolo, whom he saw was glaring intensely at him. "We picked her up when Maya and I ambushed a hunting party illegally transporting animals from the Planet Werlun to sell on the black market. We adopted her and brought her home with us, since she didn't have anywhere else to go… being the last of her kind and everything. After three whole years of living on this world, she still hasn't gotten used to some of the conditions."

"I see," Piccolo murmured, sweat breaking out on his face at seeing how calm this Namekian was.

He didn't like calm enemies… or calm strangers for that matter. That usually meant they had some kind of hidden trick up their sleeve or an advantage he didn't know about. It usually ended in something bad happening.

Smiling at the untrusting look on his visitor's face, the unknown Namekian extended his hand, "My apologies. I should probably introduce myself. My name is Gast of the Southern Island Tribe, Third Generation and butler to Empress Sandra of the New Saiyan Empire."
"Piccolo," the warrior from Earth promptly responded, clearing his throat when he saw Gast's change in expression and noticed the Namekian was expecting a little more information. "Sorry… I… don't really remember much of my old life on our home planet. I… didn't even know I actually came from another world until only a few years ago."

"Ah. Well, that's perfectly understandable," Gast chuckled, retracting his hand and slipping it behind his back. He then gave the Earthborn Namekian a pleasant smile. "A lot of things happened after the Great Famine that gripped Planet Namek over five hundred cycles ago. Many of our kind ended up migrating to the four corners of the universe, while those who weren't brave enough to travel remained behind. The insurrectionists born from the schism period were also banished in the ensuing chaos." He said all this while casually strolling past the spot where Piccolo was standing, who continued to keep a close eye on his host. "Judging from the look in your eyes, I take it you were one of those who left on their own accord."

Still suspicious as usual, the former guardian of Earth spoke. "And which one were you? Were you one of those who migrated… or were you part of the group that was banished?"

Stopping in the middle of the clearing, Gast continued to smile as he stuck a hand into the pouch on the right-hand side of his sash. He then proceeded to pull a handful of crumbs out, which he gripped tightly between his fingers. "Sadly, I was one of those who were banished. My former incarnation was accused of conspiring to commit a heinous crime against our race and, by the will of the people, was sent to the far side of the quadrant as punishment for his actions." He then tossed the food across the grass and watched as several blue birds with four wings and butterfly-like antenna fluttered down from the nearby trees.

Piccolo turned to face the man's back with a disapproving frown. "So you're just like Slug then?"

"Slug?"

"He's an evil Namekian who came to Earth once and attempted to transform it into a mobile ice fortress," Piccolo informed, shaking his head at the memories he received from that old battle. "He also used our planet's dragon balls to grant himself eternal youth so that he could rule the new world in his prime. Not sure if you knew him." The Namekian then drew a line over the side of his face. "He had a permanent scar going over his left eye."

"Oh. You must be talking about Shurak? Yes… I knew him," Gast remarked, looking towards the sky with a nostalgic expression in play. "He was a Namekian formerly of the Northern Mountain Tribe and was the leader of the insurrectionists that attempted to seize power after many of our kind were wiped out during the famine years. Along with a handful of the planet's warriors, he attempted to kill Guru and use the dragon balls to take over the whole system. But he and his compatriots were defeated by the guardians and sent off world, never to return. I was banished along with them simply because I was associated with their group."

Hearing the warrior's words and watching him closely, Piccolo attempted to identify any form of treachery or deceptiveness in his story. But after several moments of due consideration, the fighter from Earth quickly deduced that the man was telling the truth. This became even more apparent when he saw the shawl wearing stranger glance at him with an honest smile, allowing the former guardian to read his expression for what it was.

The few seconds of silence that passed by after that allowed Piccolo more than enough time to take in the elderly Namekian's appearance, as well as the various characteristics making up his person. "I can tell from the way that you carry yourself that you've seen your fair share of action. How old are you exactly?"
Feeling one of the birds he was feeding fly up to land on his left shoulder, Gast smiled and held up some more crumbs for the little avian to feed on. "Oh, I'd say about three hundred cycles, give or take. Honestly, I try not to think about it too much… mortality… it really puts a dampener on the finer things in life." Once the bird was done eating, the man then brought a hand up to his face and rubbed it against the many wrinkles that were present. "Still though, I can't help but constantly be reminded of how much time has actually passed since I first hatched on Monmothma."

"And how did you end up on this planet?" Piccolo asked.

The host Namekian laughed a little, "My, aren't we full of questions today?"

A small smirk tugged at the hero's lips. "Being curious and stubborn is part of my charm. I can't help it."

Gast looked across at the visitor inquisitively, who continued to keep a safe distance away from him while they proceeded to converse. "Well then, if that's the case, the when and how leading up to my current circumstances makes for a pretty interesting story. Not too long ago, while my band and I were traversing the outer rim of a distant spiral galaxy in the Zoran Sector looking for a planet we could establish a new home, we came across this small world floating beside a gaseous giant and an orange star. We discovered that it didn't just have a thriving ecosystem, but also the atmosphere and conditions ideal for starting up a brand new colony. After several months of excavation and hard work, we commandeered the celestial body and made it the crown jewel of our new utopia." A shimmer of pride then streaked through the man's eyes. "Sure, a utopia sounds like a child's fairytale, but in the end the five of us were able to liberate our entire quadrant and establish a new interstellar government that was free of prejudice."

This then led the former Guardian into his next line of question. "You mentioned 'Saiyan Empire?' I take it from the information you were able to give me that you're not the only sentient being living on this planet…" His frown then seemed to darken on this new topic, "There are Saiyans here too?"

"Correct," Gast answered without the slightest bit of hesitation, "Along with several other life forms, as you may have noticed." He then gestured to the bird on his shoulder and the giant, multi-legged rhino now dozing by the lake.

Piccolo cocked his head to the side, "Who exactly are they, these Saiyans? Are they dangerous? Are they forcing you to work for them? How many are there? And what do they want with Earth? Are they going to destroy it or conquer it? How—"

"Whoa, whoa, whoa, slow down there, friend," Gast chuckled, raising his hands and waving them towards the fighter reassuringly and ceasing the man's alarmedrambling. "I can't answer so many questions at once. I'm not a five-headed trilodon." When he saw the anxious glare Piccolo threw at him afterwards, the older Namekian sighed and walked towards the hero, who took a big step back. "Relax. I'm not going to bite. I just think it'll be easier if I explained this to you through a telepathic link, so that we can avoid the obvious small talk." Stopping a couple feet in front of the former guardian, Gast then closed his eyes and raised his hand, bringing his palm to hover over Piccolo's forehead.

At first the Earthborn Namekian was uncertain. However, after several moments of debate, he too shut his lids and opened up his mind. Almost instantly, the man's thoughts were bombarded by a torrent of flashbacks and images, all of which shot through his bran like a bolt and gave him all the information he needed in a single reel. Once the experience was over, Gast removed his hand from Piccolo's reach and watched the warrior from the blue world stare back at him in surprise.
The Z-fighter then huffed in exhaustion, "So that's how it is, huh?"

"That's right."

With a swish of his cape, Piccolo quickly spun around and strolled across the clearing. "Thanks for the hospitality… and I appreciate you opening the front door to your private garden for me, but I think it's about time that I headed back. If what you showed me just now was true, then Gohan and the others are going to need all the help they can get if they have a chance of beating your friends."

"Not so fast," Gast suddenly spoke up, just in time to stop his fellow Namekian from taking off. The older fighter then smirked. "You probably haven't noticed this already, but leaving this world isn't going to be so easy." Showing what he meant, the Namekian then held out his hand and, concentrating for a moment, produced an orange sphere of crackling energy. Piccolo then looked on as the elderly traveler tossed the ball straight up into the atmosphere and, after seeing it shoot past the cloud cover, watched it strike something solid and invisible, which caused a multi-colored, translucent wave to ripple across the sky.

The sight of the anomaly immediately told the former guardian that the entire planet was surrounded by a protective field… and a strong one at that.

"Ah," Piccolo murmured after watching the aerial disturbance fade away.

"The entire world of Corvus is protected by a powerful magnetosphere, which we've erected to prevent outside forces from damaging our humble home. You'd be surprised how many warriors out there are capable of destroying planets with a single blast," Gast informed, while at the same time placing his hands behind his back. "This shield is powerful enough to stop even someone as persistent and dangerous as my boss at level 2. Nothing can get in or out… not unless I allow it."

Piccolo's glare hardened as he slowly turned to face his fellow Namekian. "So… what happens now then?"

Gast craned his head thoughtfully and looked upwards, "I guess our primary recourse would be to fight. Given the current circumstances, it would be most appropriate."

"Well, what do you think?" Piccolo asked, clenching his fists tightly. "Since you're the one controlling the force field on this planet, if I was to defeat you, and there's a good chance that I could, it might deactivate by itself-"

"Or it may not," Gast interjected, promptly shutting down the Earthling's idea. The Namekian then nodded in his direction, "In order to protect our interests and the lives of our comrades, my group made sure to take all possibilities into account, including hostage situations. If you want the means of safely shutting down the energy shield and rejoining your friends on Earth, then I propose a friendly game of tête-à-tête."

This had the Earthborn Namekian raise a brow, "I'm listening."

Still looking positively cheerful, Gast then pointed his left hand down at the grass beside them. In a flash of white electrical light, the man fired a beam at the ground, which Piccolo watched fade seconds later to reveal a white, rock table, two small chairs on either side of it that sat low to the ground, and a circular board with squares and triangles carved into its surface, which sat in the middle of the bench. To accompany it, a series of smooth, circular rocks designed to fit inside the shapes were stacked up on both ends of the slat.

Once the panel and its parts had been created, Gast walked over and planted himself on one of the seats. When he did, he then gestured for Piccolo to join him. "It's been many cycles since I last ran into a member of my race. If it's okay with you, I'd rather spend the first meeting talking with my fellow brethren rather than fighting."

A little been taken aback by the man's proposal, the Namekian from Earth lowered his head, "What's the catch?"

Eyes twinkling, the elderly warrior crossed his arms. "No catch. I just feel it'll be more civilized of us to share experiences with one another in a battle of wits as opposed to a battle of strength. After all, you and I are not Saiyans, nor do we originate from a violent race. Though I have no doubt of your ability to win in a physical contest, it gives me cause to wonder whether or not your mind is as strong as your fist." When he saw Piccolo's brow crease, Gast cracked a smile of amusement. "Here's the deal; if you beat me, then I will deactivate the shield and let you return to your friends without complaint or hesitation."

"And if I lose?"

Gast shrugged, reaching down and separating the pile of rocks on his side of the board, "If you lose, then we can have another game… and keep on playing until you win." He then shot the warrior from Earth a mischievous expression.

His words and expressions earned an odd stare from the Z-fighter standing across from him. Upon deeply viewing his options, Piccolo then reasoned to himself that going along with this traveler's games was probably his best bet of getting out of here. Though he was confident he could beat the Namekian in a straight up fight, the warrior wasn't too comfortable with the idea of doing in a so far non-threatening member of his race, especially when he hadn't been provoked in any way. Based on the information he was able to gather from him too, even if he did somehow manage to overpower him, there was no guarantee that he would be able to escape this planet with that shield hovering overhead.

Blowing up the world was out of the question too, as the resulting fallout could potentially damage the Earth, leading to apocalyptic consequences. He didn't want to end up using the dragon balls to fix a situation that could've altogether been avoided in the first place.

So, sucking up whatever pride and doubts that he had, Piccolo nodded to the Namekian, to which he then watched Gast crack a grin his way.

"Do you remember how to play?" the foreigner asked as he then went about placing the rest of his pieces across the board. "Charaka was one of the most popular pastimes on our home planet. The kids loved it."

"I… have a vague idea," Piccolo responded uncertainly, marching over and stealing the seat across from his counterpart. Upon which he began setting up the pieces too, placing the rocks carefully inside of each square. "Though I don't remember a thing about my people or my culture, I'm sure that deep down in this twisted head of mine, there are some lingering memories that are bound to resurface. After all, I'm sharing this body with two other members of my kind, so I'm positive at least one of them has to have some idea of what's going on."

Gast smiled, "Here's hoping."

It was then the Earthling shot the man a look of warning, "Just so we're clear, I haven't exactly had a good track record with other aliens and members of my race visiting my home planet. If I even feel a slight shift in your intent or a spike in your energy levels, I will not hesitate to put you down. Understand?"
Another warm chuckle left the older Namekian's lips, "Trust me, friend; all of my time and energy is going to be spent fighting you across this board. I only hope you're planning on doing me the same kindness." Once he saw the Earthling finish setting up his pieces, the man then leant forward, placed a finger on the rock in the middle square, and nudged it forward into the triangle in front of it. "Now... let us play. It's your move."

Following through on the warrior's prompt, Piccolo, tossing his cape off of his arm, reached forward, placed a thumb on a piece on his side, and pushed it into a triangle on his right, marking the beginning of their battle, in which not a single punch would be thrown.

It would take Piccolo exactly three minutes after the first move for his brain to fully realize this fact...

OOO

(Meanwhile)

If there was ever a time in the Z-fighters' lives where every single one of them was at a complete loss for words... this was it.

While only a handful of the group had already seen Gohan transform into a Super Saiyan 3 up-close and personal, every single one of them now had the privilege of seeing two Saiyans from different corners of the universe assume the exact same state. Under normal circumstances, merely standing beside the demi-Saiyan would've been enough to have the lower tier members of the group trembling in their boots and sweating bullets. But due to the amount of raw power now sitting in the same place, not only were most of the planet's defenders close to collapsing from shock and fear, but the atmosphere around them was now being heavily affected by the duo's colliding energies.

As if responding to the electrical auras surrounding the golden haired warriors and the bolts of lightning now shooting off of them, the clouds above the city had formed into a massive cyclone, with the eye hovering directly over the two figures. Due to how strong the wind being emanated from both fighters was, almost everyone present in the castle square was having a hard time keeping a sure footing.

Only the members of Sandra's group, Vegeta, Zangya and Paprika were unaffected by the gale blasting dust into their faces.

Laughing nervously, Krillin then shook his head in terror, "Uh... there's... heh... there's two of them." He continued to chuckle while backing away, "Two Gohans... standing in front of each other."

"Two Gohans?" An equally befuddled Chiaotzu quickly glanced across at his friend, "What do you mean by that?"

Looking between the pair of fully charged fighters, a noticeably anxious Zangya answered the short fighter's innocent inquiry. "Sandra and Spike... their power levels are exactly the same." At her distance, there was no way that she could be mistaken. Both warriors' energy signatures were almost exactly identical to one another.

Funny. This was the first time she could remember Gohan ever meeting anyone who was exactly the same strength as him.

Bulma, opening and closing her eyes several times to see if she wasn't seeing things, inhaled sharply, "I don't think I like where this is going." She then engaged her suit's visor, which quickly snapped over her face and provided her additional protection from the storm. At the same time, readings and numbers began jumping up all over the front of the glass, informing her of the current situation. Once her helmet had finished processing, her fears were quickly confirmed. "Yep. I definitely don't like where this is going."

The readings both of them were giving off were greater than anything her computers had ever encountered before. It was like she was standing in the heart of an intergalactic anomaly, which took the form of two aliens surrounded by ethereal light.

With most of the Z-fighters scared out of their wits, and even Vegeta, Android 18 and Zangya appearing stunned at the development, over on the visitor's side of the field, Sandra was taking her time admiring the shocked visage being showcased on her opponent's face. His eyes wide and his jaw slack, she could see her fellow Ascended Saiyan exhibiting all the signs of being completely dumbstruck by her power level and appearance.

It didn't take her long to come to a conclusion. "Amazing… isn't it?" She then craned her head, causing a current of electricity to run down her neck and hit the ground. "It's been over a thousand years since a Saiyan last achieved this kind of power. With the destruction of our civilization on Planet Vegeta and the annihilation of our people, every single race across the Northern Quadrant believed they'd seen the last of the legendary primate forms. But now, in a span of only twenty years, two members of the last generation have managed to not only achieve the first level of Super Saiyan, but two of its subsequent transformations as well."

Gohan, closing his jaw, once again narrowed his eyes upon his adversary. "How…?"

Bringing her hands to her hips, Sandra sighed, "Let's just say that Maya and I had managed to land ourselves in quite a few rough patches over the years." She then glanced back at her best friend, whom she could see was standing in the same spot completely composed, alongside the rest of her contingent. "Not too long ago, the two of us wound up getting captured by a bounty hunter named Remington, and were sold as slaves to Emperor Mao on the Planet Hague, where we were forced to fight as gladiators in his arena. We put up enough of a fight that we managed to convince the big man himself to get involved." Her expression then cringed when memories of that day started to bleed into her head. "He beat both of us to within an inch of our lives and planned to finish us right there in front of the crowd. But then, just as he was about to kill Maya, my anger and desperation kicked in and propelled me into action. I was able to push my body beyond the limits of its abilities and save my best friend, before giving that monster exactly what he deserved." She then looked back at Gohan with a smile. "I take it you had a similar experience on this planet involving your friends?"

The demi-Saiyan, sensing the sincerity in her voice, then put on a warm smile of his own and glanced behind him at Videl. When he saw his girlfriend gaze at him in kind, he turned back to his opponent and spoke through the loud crackling of his aura. "Yeah. It was a pretty bad day for all of us."

Sandra nodded in understanding. "We can talk about it afterwards. But right now, we have a battle to wage and a title to claim." Gesturing for the cameras hovering around her to spread out, the Super Saiyan 3 Empress then slid her legs apart and brought her fists to her sides. "We'll keep all attacks and engagements outside of heavily populated areas, so as to avoid causing too much collateral damage."

Her words immediately signaled Gohan to put his game face on. "Agreed."

The leader then turned to the Z-fighters standing behind her opponent, "I also suggest your friends use this time to pick their opponents. No doubt one or two of them already have somebody in mind."

Vegeta, arms crossed and his eyes fixated on the opposing group, then took a big step forward. "I'll take the big guy." His eyes immediately landed on the towering form of Cal, whom he saw had an intense glare in play. This seemed to put a smirk on the prince's face, as was to be expected of any obstacle he was faced with. "For one; he looks tough, and two, I don't think I like the way he's looking at me."

Also moving to the front lines, Zangya quickly shifted her gaze to the female Saiyan, whom she saw look in her direction. The Hera grinned, "Alright then, I'll take the broad. She looks to be a little more my speed. Plus I owe her one for that time she slugged me across the face back in town." The woman then looked behind her. "What about you fellas?"

Moving down the line of fighters in the enemy contingent that were still available for sport, Paprika, still appearing as stern as when she first arrived, then focused her gaze on the glasses-wearing female with the cat features protruding from her rear and head. The white-haired warrior with the scarf promptly nodded towards her chosen target, "I call dibs on the space cat."

"You may need a little help with that one. Believe me, she's a lot tougher than she looks," Yamcha added from the sidelines. His words drew a fond look from the alien-cat hybrid in question, which prompted Kure to wink in his direction. The quick gesture in his direction had the baseball player crack a smile, as well as a little blush, "If you don't mind, I think I'll join you two on your little dance." He then rolled his shoulder in a show of excitement.

"Count me in too," Videl spoke up, also eager to knock heads with one of the females there.

Tien, standing side-by-side with Krillin and 18, quickly set his attention upon the remaining foe. "Well, you boys and girls have fun. I've got the big guy." He gestured towards Mobi, the giant android raising his hand and saluting in a very stiff manner.

Goten and Trunks, realizing that all of the competition has been taken, then turned to the senior members of the troop with disappointed looks on their faces.

"Hey. What about us?" Gohan's younger brother asked.

"We don't have anyone to fight," the lavender haired child added, before training his sights on the massive tank standing in the background. "What about that weird, spider-robot thingy? He looks pretty tough."

An enthusiastic smile appearing on her face, Kure swiftly stepped forward while reaching into the pouch on the back of her plug suit. "Hold on. I think I have just the thing." Rummaging about for a moment, the woman then pulled out a small plastic container that she snapped open with her thumb.

The Z-fighters then observed as the woman casually directed her hand at the ground in front of her and, her palm igniting a hot blue, vaporized the entire cobblestone surface, revealing the soil hidden underneath. Upon which she then stepped over and proceeded to push tiny, glowing, marble sized objects into the floor. At first the group didn't think much of it, until a series of nightmarish flashbacks had a majority of the human fighters, including Vegeta, stiffen with panic.

"Uh, guys," Krillin stammered when he finally watched the feline woman hop out of the rectangular garden she'd made, "I may be spit-balling here, but aren't those...?"
"Saibamen?" Yamcha also gulped, causing Gohan to look on in momentary bewilderment as well.

Hearing the Earthlings from her end of the pitch drew a lighthearted laugh from Kure, "Ah. I see you're familiar with that little brand of synthetic soldiers. Considering you have Prince Vegeta in your company, no doubt you would've encountered the little ankle biters sometime in the past." When she glanced at the man in question, the cat woman then folded her arms. "However, the people of my home planet don't use such crude organic creatures for their day-to-day activities. We manufacture a higher class of life form."

Almost as soon as she finished uttering those words, the Z-fighters suddenly saw the exposed earth in the square begin to shift, signaling the imminent birth of a new threat. Ideas started filling everyone's heads, as one after the other the defenders of Earth began imagining the kinds of monstrosities their adversary had planted for them. Krillin anticipated some form of upgraded Saibaman, about two times the size of the original and twice as ugly. Tien envisioned an armor-plated, carapace abomination similar in appearance to Cell, a thought that was equally shared by Yamcha and Vegeta. Even Zangya experienced recurring images of some multi-legged reptile jumping out of the Earth to devour the younglings.

The heroes braced themselves, not knowing what to expect.

But then, as soon as the first creature clawed its way to the surface, every single person in the area, sans the Saiyan Contingent, became taken aback by what they saw.

One after the other, a group of about twelve tiny humanoid beings leapt out of the ground and stood in perfect military formation before their masters. While the time it took for them to grow and sprout was astonishingly quick, it wasn't their inception or their horror-movie appearance to the scene that confounded the Z-fighters. It was the fact that they didn't appear threatening at all. The creatures resembled little humanoid robots… or more appropriately dolls with body shapes and sizes mirroring plush animal toys with oversized heads. They had a red feline tail protruding from their backs, tiny legs with inflated feet, and tiny arms with comically inflated hands similar in appearance to boxing gloves. They also had collars around their necks that shared design traits to those you would find on Earth's most common house pets, with an identification tag hanging from the lock of each one. Above that, each individual bot had a perfectly round, white head, a red helmet, and white cat ears protruding from said helmets. They also lacked any distinctive details on their faces, with only a pair of tiny blue eyes being the sole, artificial organ present.

Furthermore, though the creatures appeared mechanical in nature, their skin was smooth, plastic and rubbery, like the surface of a beach ball. They also shared the same color-coding with one another: white bodies, red limbs, and red helmets, making it virtually impossible to tell each of them apart.

The look on Kure's face showed how pleased she was at the prompt appearance of her 'elite' attack force.

As for the Z-fighters, well… after inspecting the group of soldiers the woman had to bring to the table, they could only say one thing.

"They're…" Videl began.

"Adorable," was the unanimous vote from every single person in the courtyard, Vegeta and Paprika included.

A sweat drop appearing on his head, a still aura clad Gohan stared down at the robots lining the trench. "What in the world are they?"
"You like them?" Kure asked, putting her hands together and beaming proudly at her creations. "These little critters are called Carbon Active Tech Droids… or CAT Droids for short. My people on Savannah manufacture these little guys to help with our everyday chores and activities, such as cooking, cleaning, researching, and helping to move heavy loads." She then pulled out one of the marbles she’d planted in the ground and held it up for all of them to see. "They're created by scattering these nano-machine capsules and using the soil to help fabricate them. They're really useful when going out on long-term expeditions that require several extra hands." Turning her attention back to her platoon of helpers she’d summoned, the feline woman grinned, pocketed her marble, and clapped her hands together cheerfully. "Alright everybody, fall in!

At her command, all twelve little robots spun around and moved towards her, their little feet making cute pitter-patter sounds as they gathered together, before looking up at their creator with their full and undivided attention. The sight of them moving into place had all the soft-hearted Z-fighters make a cute 'aww' sound in unison.

Grinning, Kure then pointed at them, "Operations Check: Dance." In perfect sync, every single cat robot began to perform an impromptu lion dance, tapping their feet against the cobblestone surface in an elaborate and choreographed display. Nodding affirmatively, the alien woman then cocked her head upwards. "Stand proud." She then saw every one of her little units place their knuckles on their hips and pump their chests out. "Look sad." The platoon then curled forward, placing their hands against an invisible wall in front of them. "Now sing." All at once, the dozen little droids then started waving their right hand in front of them in a way to imitate speech, as it quickly became apparent to the Z-Crew that these little tykes couldn't make any form of audible response. "Excellent. All of them appear to be functioning normally." Kure then nodded to her squadron and pointed over their shoulders. "Okay everyone. Ready for battle!" The group of automatons then did an about-face and squared off with their soon-to-be adversaries.

Bulma, staring at the contingent of toy soldiers, grinned excitedly. "I really, really want one of those."

Glancing up at the armored scientist, Krillin smiled, "Maybe you can ask her for one later."

"Kitty."

Hearing a woman's voice speak up, the Z-fighters looked around at Eighteen, where they saw the normally composed blonde woman with her hands held out, a cute blush on her face, and her eyes glowing like a child's. Immediately upon seeing her make a grabbing gesture with her fingers, the group quickly realized that she had become thoroughly taken in by the little robots, and wanted to hug one.

When she realized people were staring at her, the android mother quickly snapped out of her daze and looked away in embarrassment.

Upon sizing up the little units for himself, Yamcha chuckled. "Well… I got to say… thank Dende they're not Saibamen."

"Honestly, if Vegeta and Nappa had brought these guys along with them when they first came to Earth, I would've had absolutely no problems fighting them," Gohan commented, doing his best not to laugh when he saw the twelve little cat-robots go through a series of stretches and warm ups with one another.

"Speak for yourself," Zangya spoke, a clear look of amusement pulled across her face, "These little fellas are so cute, I wouldn't want to even think about hurting them."
“Don’t be fooled by their appearances,” Kure added, drawing the group’s attention back to her. “Though they were specifically designed to be non-threatening, their technology is state-of-the-art; the most advanced in our part of space. They’re extremely adaptable; equipped with the best liquidware and software from my home planet, allowing them to communicate and interact with any form of life. They’re also really hard to destroy and can survive almost anything thrown at them, making them ideal as temporary sparring partners. They’re even capable of self-repair.” She then cocked her head to the side and grinned. “All of them are currently preset to Level 5. Considering how strong a majority of you are, I think you’ll find them to be adequate enough opponents.” After saying this, she then raised her hand and pointed towards their targets.

Almost immediately, the twelve robots honed their sensors onto Goten, Trunks, Krillin, Android 18 and Chiaotzu, locking them squarely in their crosshairs. When they realized they’d been paired off, the warriors of Earth quickly took a step back, as suddenly being singled out by a group of silent, cute plastic robots didn’t exactly seem like such a funny prospect anymore.

Trunks, cracking his knuckles, grinned excitedly, “Indestructible robots, huh? That sounds like a challenge.”

His comments earned a little laugh from Zangya, who gently patted the youngster on the head. “Enjoy your child-friendly automated sparring partner, little prince.” Her statement had the hybrid Saiyan blush, while many of the adults in the area snickered at the Hera's jab to the boy's pride. When she looked back at her half-Saiyan roommate at the head of the pack, the woman with orange hair nodded to the Super Saiyan 3 affirmatively. “I think we're all good here.”

Acknowledging everyone's decisions, a previously listening Gohan quickly returned his attention back to his foe, who he noticed was still smiling quietly in his direction. With his glare locked and loaded, the half-Saiyan warrior then slid his left foot forward and took a full standing stance, in a manner similar to how he fought as a Super Saiyan 2 against Cell. His action then prompted Sandra to signal for her comrades to back away, which they did by moving off to the side. The Z-fighters followed suit, knowing full well from their friend's expression that their battle was just about to begin and, with the amount of power that’d been pooled into one spot, they didn't want to be anywhere near them when their fists started to fly.

A single hit from a Super Saiyan 3 had the potential to either disintegrate everything in its path or cause a full body of a lesser being to implode on itself. That was something they wanted to avoid at all costs.

As everybody moved to a safer position, Gohan quickly used that opportunity to assess his current status. “My energy levels are good, my head’s clear and my body's relaxed. Perfect. Looks like I'm in top condition for this fight.” He then quickly set his eyes back onto his foe. “Having my tail back is really helping me to regulate my power level in this state. Without it, I'm just a car running without an alternator. Since my gear is set on overdrive for the entire duration of this form, it makes sense for the body to have an extra valve in place to keep it from clocking out. However…” When his eyes landed on his opponent, he saw that she was also in a similarly calm state. “Since Sandra has also achieved this level, I guess she already has that weakness figured out.” Along with a few other chinks he assumed, which made him wonder how powerful this girl actually was.

The clouds overlooking the pair's position continued to swirl above them in the form of a rapidly rotating hurricane, indicating how badly the weather was responding to so much energy sitting in the one region. While the staff and visitors to the castle continued to hold their stations on the very perimeter of the enormous five hundred square meter courtyard, Gohan and Sandra glared one another down. Their arms at their sides and their hair billowing within their auras, the duo held firm to their posts and waited to see who would make the first move. Since they were both practically around the same strength, the first clean hit to land could make a big difference in the long run. It could even mean a big difference between victory and defeat.

The Z-fighters and the visitors were also curious as to who would make the first move. Goten and Trunks gulped, as the tension and atmosphere around them grew heavier by the second.

"Gohan…" the younger sibling whispered.

Kure meanwhile, with her crew of CAT Droids lined up in front of her and standing at attention, tapped her finger against her bicep nervously, while at the same time glancing across at her friend. "Hey. Do you think Sandra will be able to keep her 'bad habits' in check this time?"

In response, Maya shrugged, "Don't know. Hopefully, if this battle goes well, she won't let it come to that. We'll just have to wait and see."

All questions and concerns on the matter were swiftly broken, as moments later one of the two fighters finally threw themselves into action.

Gohan, eyes lighting up with determination, shifted his weight forward and took aim at his foe, his aura intensifying tenfold.

"Take the pace!" he told himself.

However, just as he was readying to attack, Sandra, sensing his intent with split-second accuracy and foresight, suddenly dashed towards her enemy in a blur of motion and skidded to a stop directly in front of him, making it appear as though she'd teleported. Her sudden charge had Gohan freeze up in shock, as he instantly found himself looking directly into the eyes of his assailant hovering just a few inches in front of his face.

The sheer intensity he felt radiating off of Sandra in that moment of pause was enough to have the half-Saiyan stop dead in his tracks and a bead of sweat to trickle down his face.

Without warning, the female warrior fired her left fist straight towards Gohan's face at breakneck speed. Reacting in alarm, the boy threw his arms up to block. The instant the girl's knuckles struck his forearms, a deafening shockwave rang out as a force equivalent to a comet traveling through space struck the boy head-on and sent his body skidding across the ring. Expression reflecting nothing but pure astonishment, the demi-Saiyan barely had enough time to react to the second jab that followed immediately afterwards, which slammed into his arms and blew his guard wide open. Feet digging two identical trenches through the floor, the teen eventually stopped on the other side of the courtyard, where he then found himself gaping at his opponent, whom he could see was standing in a basic fighting stance with a fierce glare fixated upon his person.

The expression she was now wearing was almost identical to that of a wild tiger staring down a helpless mammal. It was a sight that had Gohan literally shaking in his boots.

The fact that smoke was wafting off of his right forearm where an imprint of Sandra's fist could be seen didn't help the matter either.

Krillin, gob smacked by the swift opening, spoke up in concern, "Hey… what's wrong with Gohan?"

"Is the pressure of the atmosphere getting to him?" Yamcha asked.

"No," Tien answered, drawing the group's attention over to him as the three-eyed fighter clenched his fists nervously. "It's the woman standing in front of him. The moment he tried to charge in for an attack, she beat him to it by darting straight into his range and blasting him with a wave of killing intent. The intensity from her presence was so potent that she was able to stop him dead in his tracks."

Videl, looking over her shoulder at the man, swallowed nervously, "If she was able to intimidate Gohan, then… what does that mean?"

Beads of sweat appeared on the bald warrior's brow as he watched their friend face off against his otherworldly adversary. "It means his opponent is strong. The kid probably felt that the moment he was hit by her jab."

Seeing his opponent edging towards him across the quad, Gohan slowly shifted back, his arms up and a nervous look on his face. Making sure he wasn't backing up into the main building or the courtyard's dividing wall, he moved further out into the open. Once he'd gotten some more space, Sandra was once again standing a few feet away from him, where he could practically feel her turquoise eyes boring into him like knives.

Electricity sparking off of his aura, Gohan clenched his jaw tightly. "Three seconds in and she's already backing me into a corner. This is not good." He then took a deep breath to try and compose himself, "Not only is the pressure from her intense, but her jabs… they're ridiculously heavy. My arms were knocked away from only two hits." When he saw Sandra step even closer, he began analyzing her form to get a bead on her defenses. Taking careful note of the positions of her arms as well as her wide feet, the Super Saiyan 3 hybrid clicked his tongue in annoyance and backed off even more. "She's got a solid stance and a strong focus. There are no openings for me to attack."

Before he could begin thinking up some sort of strategy to get around his opponent's guard, the blonde suddenly saw Sandra dart forward and swing at him with a right hook. Telegraphing her motion, Gohan brought his arm up and blocked it, before a string of even more punches began raining down on him. Shockwaves then rattled the courtyard as the demi-Saiyan's body was hammered by a lightning fast salvo of ludicrously powerful blows, with hooks and kicks beginning to slam into his body left and right, as if he were some kind of punching bag.

Feeling a roundhouse kick bury into his left arm and bend his body over, a desperately defensive Gohan gritted his teeth as he quickly blocked a right punch, which had him stumble back across the quad. He didn't have any time to catch his breath, as his opponent was right on top of him once again, driving even more punches into his guard.

"There... oof... may not be any... augh... openings..." Gohan grunted between blocking punches and kicks, "But guarding alone... oof... won't get me anywhere!" Taking several straight punches to the upper body, which he barely blocked with his forearms, the demi-Saiyan growled. "I need to hit back! At this range, my punches can definitely reach her!" The instant he deflected an uppercut, the boy saw a gap in his opponent's assault and dove for it. "THERE!" He then threw a left corkscrew blow into Sandra's face.

A thunderclap rang out when his jab drilled into the woman's cheek. However, instead of knocking her back like he expected, Sandra appeared completely unfazed by the blow, and simply pushed through it, shoving his fist off of her with a careless shove.

The sight had Gohan recoil in shock. "Sh-She's not stopping?!"

Before he knew it, his arms were once again nailed by a barrage of heavy punches, which battered him over and over, before a powerful right smashed through his guard and nailed him in the face. The blow shook the ground and had Gohan fly back across the quad, where he landed several meters away in a cloud of dust. Legs shaking, the bruised fighter looked up to see Sandra dashing at him once again.

"The power behind her attacks is unreal!" Gohan thought, his jaw tightening as he hurriedly regained his balance. As Sandra closed the distance on him in slow motion, the teen quickly prepared for an attack. "Damn it. There's no way I'm going to win this battle by fighting on her terms. If I have a hope in hell of bringing her down, then I have to push forward-" Cranking his fist back, the half-breed then sprang from the floor and launched himself right back at his foe, a move which caught the approaching Saiyan completely by surprise. "And ATTACK!"

Avoiding her right hook, Gohan dove into the girl's range and landed the mother of all haymakers across her face. The impact of the blow cracked the ground and caused a shockwave that rattled the surrounding buildings, sending Sandra sliding over the cobblestone surface. When she stopped several meters away, she immediately hunched forward, her eyes glazed over and a surprised look slapped across her mug.

Maya, Cal and Kure appeared stunned by the sudden development, whereas the Z-fighters cheered. Even the civilians watching from the sidelines gave a cheer.

As soon as he realized he'd hit her, the demi-Saiyan smirked, "Alright! Now it's my turn!" Leaning over, he then charged towards his enemy, breaking the sound barrier with his speed.

The moment Gohan launched himself from his place, a jerk from Sandra's shoulders and a gasp of shock signaled the Saiyan Empress returning to the land of the living. Blinking away her stupor as she gazed through a blurred vision and ringing ears, the female warrior spotted her adversary approaching her at breathtaking speed.

Nano-seconds passing by like minutes, Sandra quickly shook her head clear and threw her arms up into a defensive position. "Shit. I lost consciousness there for a second. What a hit." A grin then spread across her lips when she saw her opponent dive at her with his right fist loaded and ready to go. "Yes. This is it… THIS IS IT… the opponent I've been dreaming of for so long! Finally… a real challenger!" Licking her lips in excitement, the woman's eyes then lit up with a spirited fire, as she saw his punch come swinging in at her with lightning-like speed. "Come on! Give it to me… give me everything you've got, so I can tear it down and rip you apart!"

It was time to test his mettle.

The demi-Saiyan's punch slammed into the girl's guard with concussive force. As soon as it impacted, a fierce storm of punches then rained down upon Sandra without pause or hesitation, shaking her forearms and tearing into her muscles bit by bit. Eventually, in the midst of the planet crushing bombardment, a hook managed to sneak around the female warrior's guard and slam into her temple, causing the Super Saiyan 3 to drop her arms and leave herself wide open for Gohan's assault. Punches and hooks then battered her body left and right, knocking her head about like a piñata, while a swift shot to the body caused her entire form to lurch forward sharply and blood to splatter across the floor.

Gohan, pressing home his advantage, grabbed the woman by the scruff of her suit and drilled her head with three direct punches to the face, before finishing it with a swift hook to the nose. Upon hearing the crunch of his fist smashing into her skull, he then proceeded to hammer his opponent across the courtyard with another swift combo, filling the air with the sounds of dull thuds and titanic shockwaves.

The Z-fighters watching from the sidelines all lit up in awe when they witnessed Gohan snatch the pace from his opponent and uncork the beating of a lifetime upon the female ruler.
"Yes! Get her, Gohan!" Videl cheered.

"That's the way," a reinvigorated Zangya remarked, arms folded and a big smile on her face. "Go! Keep up the pressure!"

Vegeta also felt the tug of a smirk on the corner of his lips, "Once he's found his rhythm, there's no way she'll be able to fight back." As far as he was concerned, the son of his rival had the woman on the ropes.

Gohan thought so too and continued to swiftly drive punches into his opponent like there was no tomorrow. Despite the amount of power he was exerting, just like the opening bout between his father and Cell, the youngster made sure to keep his attacks under control, so as to not cause any damage to his surroundings. Given that there were people in the area, he had to be really careful with the amount of punches and kicks he threw. However, with the hits he was landing, this didn't seem like too much of a problem, as his opponent was thoroughly getting the piss beaten out of her.

However, as Gohan proceeded to slam his fists into the girl's arms when she brought them up to guard herself, her lithe body being smacked about back and forth like a duffle bag, he was unable to notice the look in her eyes or the fact that she was whispering to herself.

With every blow the demi-Saiyan landed, Sandra counted under her breath, "One… two… three… four…” She grunted when a knee buried into her stomach, before a swift overhand knocked her head downwards, causing a shockwave to ripple across the ground and shake the cobblestones. "One… two… three… four…”

In the midst of another vicious combo, Gohan suddenly saw his opponent lift her right hand and extend it towards his head. Thinking she was about to blast him, the demi-Saiyan knocked her arm out of the way and drove an uppercut into her solar plexus. He then landed multiple punches and hooks across her face, rattling her once again, before grabbing her by the shoulder plate, yanking her around, and nailing her across the face with a left overhead. When she stumbled away, the demi-Saiyan sprinted at her, leapt into the air, and nailed her square in the face with a jumping knee.

That final blow connected with a thunderclap and sent Sandra to the ground. She hit the quad and dug a trench towards its center, where she then stopped in a sprawled out heap at the feet of the Z-fighters. Zangya and the rest of their crew took a step back when the cloud of dust sprinkled over their legs, upon which they looked down to see the Super Saiyan 3 female staring up at the sky, her eyes covered by her hair, and blood pouring out of her nose and the corners of her mouth.

Needless to say, Sandra had gotten wrecked.

King Koku, his staff and the civilians meanwhile, upon seeing the warrior in orange and blue drop his opponent, raised their fists and cried out in joy.

"Way to go!" the anthropomorphic dog ruler cheered.

Amidst the cries and shouts of approval from the audience, Gohan, still imbued in his golden aura and blue electric field, clenched his fists and marched over to the spot where his opponent was lying. When he got about half way, he heard Sandra groan and saw her sit up, before the rest of her body eventually lifted off of the floor. By the time she was up, her knees were trembling and her entire form was hunched over with blood dribbling down her chin and her hair concealing most of her expression.

Despite the damages she'd suffered, the female Super Saiyan 3 then craned her head upwards and, with her eyes still hidden, grinned in a sinful and devilish manner.

"Is that all you've got?" Sandra's leer seemingly widened and the shadow across her irises darkened. However, just before her fangs could reveal themselves, Sandra suddenly put her hand over her mouth and shook her head. "Oops. There goes my 'bad habit' again. No. Stay calm, girl... not yet... not yet..." She then took a deep breath, composed herself, and returned to smirking normally.

Her question surprising the Z-fighters and Gohan, the demi-Saiyan then narrowed his eyes and, curling his fists, leant forward. "Want more? Fine!" His aura firing up, the golden fighter then dashed towards the seemingly stricken woman at breakneck speed. "HAAAAA!" With a mighty yell, the protector of the Earth cocked back his right fist and, taking aim at his foe, dove in at her with a hit.

His fist then shot out like a golden bullet, corkscrewing through the air towards his enemy's face. In slow motion, he watched his knuckles bury into her cheek and begin distorting her skull. But then, all of a sudden, there was a flash of blinding red light, which was instantly followed by a clap of thunder. Before Gohan knew it, his head had been sent reeling skywards and a spray of blood clouded the air above him, as from out of nowhere Sandra managed to land a devastating punch directly between his eyes.

Mouth open in shock, the demi-Saiyan felt his body blast back across the concrete at great speed. At first his body just flew. However, a few milliseconds in, the teenager realized what was going on and stepped on the brakes hard! His feet dug into the quad and he ground to a stop, kicking up a cloud of dust. As soon as he stopped, he then looked up in disbelief to see his opponent standing in front of his friends with an excited grin on her face and her right fist fully extended.

"W-What the hell was that?" Gawking, the hybrid Saiyan then realized that blood was dripping out of his nose and mouth, causing him to brush it away in surprise. He then set his gaze ahead, only to suddenly feel his knees buckle and his body lurch forward. Quickly regaining his balance, the teen hurriedly began trying to figure out what just happened, which didn't take long at all. "She... She hit me."

But with what? It wasn't an ordinary attack and it certainly wasn't thrown in a normal way. If it was, then he would've seen it coming from a mile off and avoided it. However, the angle the attack had struck him and the speed that had propelled it was completely unnatural... and that wasn't the only thing. Despite all the damage he'd managed to inflict upon his opponent in the last couple of minutes, Sandra was able to bounce back from it all and retaliate with a shot that had even more power than the attack he was going to land on her.

How was that possible?

Even the Z-fighters watching from the sidelines were stumped.

Krillin blinked, "Hey? Did you guys catch that?"

"No. It was too fast. I couldn't see anything." Tien replied, clenching his fists nervously as he watched Gohan tremble and shake on the spot, with blood dripping from his open mouth. "But whatever it was, it was strong."

With sweat dribbling down his face, a concerned Trunks looked across at his father fearfully, "What's going on, dad? Gohan was winning a few seconds ago... but now he looks like he can barely stay on his feet."
"W-What did she hit him with?" Goten asked, his tone just as nervous and timid.

Blinking a few times, the Saiyan Prince then frowned and gritted his teeth. "I think… it was a jolt counter."

"A what?" Bulma asked, also hearing the name of the blindingly fast attack.

Being one of the most technical fighters in the group, Videl filled the children in on it. "A jolt counter is a specific type of counter that is accomplished by putting the entire body weight behind a single punch. Basically in order to apply it, the fighter first predicts an opponent's line of attack and the blow they're going to use. They then position themselves to evade it, weaves their head around their opponent's attack, and nails them by arcing their arm over and driving their fist forward."

Having watched the entire thing play out for herself, Zangya also added to the breakdown with her own input, "Since it's a counter punch, not only is it impossible for the person being hit by it to see it coming, it also capitalizes on the target's momentum and turns it against them, so that when it lands, it lands with both the user's and the opponent's power behind it, and multiplies the damage." She then gritted her teeth when she saw Gohan struggle to find his footing. "In other words, Gohan just got hit by the equivalent of a punch that was double the one he just threw."

"Being a Super Saiyan 3, the power behind his punch and the rebound must have also been monstrous," Paprika concluded, unable to hide the discomfort on her face.

However, that wasn't the most perplexing thing about the scenario. The way Sandra had landed that hit seemed slightly off, as she'd allowed her opponent's own punch to graze her just a split second before she threw hers. That showed that she'd been prepared to take his attack even if she didn't hit him.

What exactly was her deal?

Vegeta, narrowing his eyes, then scoffed in a cynical manner, "It was probably just a lucky shot."

As all of this was going on, Sandra, deciding to get a little more space, began to circle the courtyard and position herself on her opponent's side. Moving away from the Z-fighters' station, the empress then observed her adversary move to a more suitable place as well, away from her comrades, putting both of them on opposite ends of the courtyard. With The Z-fighters on Gohan's right and the Saiyan Empire representatives on his far left, both Super Saiyan 3s, bleeding from multiple wounds, glared each other down.

Gohan huffed as a bolt of electricity ran up his body, "That was a good one. I didn't even see it coming."

"You liked that, huh?" Sandra asked, before reaching up and wiping the blood off of her face on her glove. After spitting out the fluids that'd collected in her mouth, she then stretched her neck and slid her left foot forward. A smile quickly formed on her face, "Well then, brace yourself big guy, because I've got a lot more coming your way."

"I'll bet," Gohan replied, his expression also letting loose a smile before he widened his feet and dropped into a stance similar to the one his father used when squaring off against Vegeta all those years ago. With his left arm held low and his right held behind him and higher in the air, the transformed boy narrowed his eyes as a bolt of lightning shot off of him, striking an opposing bolt of lightning that unconsciously left Sandra's body. A loud clap rang throughout the district as sparks flew between both warriors. "Come on. I dare you to try and show me. Hit me with your
"With pleasure," Sandra shot back, before suddenly bringing her arms up and positioning them in front of her, with her fists curled, positioned on either side of her face, and the left extended further out.

It was this stance that had Gohan flinch and the Z-fighters watching blink in surprise.

The position the female Super Saiyan had assumed was one very few of them had come across before in combat. On the surface it looked pretty basic; a stance that had the figure standing more upright than conventional kata with their legs slightly crouched. It was pretty much a boxing stance for all intents and purposes. However, upon closer inspection of the positioning of the hands and the way Sandra was standing on the front toes of her left foot, the human fighters of the group quickly equated that stance to a fighting style they'd seen multiple times before in media and on the sports channel.

"Hey… isn't that…?" Krillin began in a baffled tone of voice.

"Muay Thai?" Yamcha blinked, as images of famous kick boxers began filling his head.

The Saiyan Contingent though, upon overhearing the Earthlings discussing the appearance of Sandra's fighting stance in comparison to one of their own, had a completely different take on its origins. This was something Maya was willing to point out as she observed her friend settle into a comfortable rhythm, where she began to bounce lightly on her forward foot, whereas her arms and shoulders moved in a bobbing motion.

"Sandra's using the Kai Mui Style, huh?" Maya commented while raising her head.

"She's deciding to go for her main fighting style right out the gate?" Kure also remarked, adjusting her glasses while leaving a single hand on her hip. She then smirked when she saw Sandra's left fist lock onto the position of Gohan's head. "This should be interesting."

Gohan, unable to ignore the sight of Sandra's extended left fist tracking his head's movements, experienced a moment of hesitation. In spite of having fought against multiple opponents in the past, all of whom used different fighting styles, there was something about his current opponent that didn't sit too well with him. Whether it was the way she managed to brush off his assault or how she was able to counter him before, he didn't know. Whatever the case, he just couldn't shake the feeling that he was up against someone who could give him even more trouble than he'd bargained for.

Deciding to throw all fears and uncertainties to the wind, the demi-Saiyan sucked it up and dug his feet into the ground. "I'll start off with the same approach as before; attack her quickly, set the pace, and don't give her time to breathe. I'll move in close and take her to a pummeling match, and see if I can't force her hand!" Considering they were pretty much the same strength, he had to focus everything he had into his blows. So, in a flash of electricity, Gohan's form vanished, a sonic boom echoing across the quad as he charged his opponent head on.

With electricity coursing over his entire body, the demi-Saiyan seemingly teleported in front of his adversary and thrust down at her with a right hook. In a blink of an eye and with the sound of gunshots, Sandra fired off a couple of jabs at her opponent, forcing him to block them instead. Blasts of perspiration exploded off of Gohan's head as the punches connected with ridiculous speed, forcing him to stop his attack. Upon which he responded with a blur of mixed punches. More sonic booms rang out and clouds of dust filled the air when the female empress, with a completely calm expression in play, shot down the boy's attacks with a series of quick parries, smacking his fists off course. After that attack failed, the demi-Saiyan then sprang into the air and uncorked a spin kick right for her head.

Sandra responded with a swift elbow, their attacks colliding with such force that they caused the entire estate they were standing on the bounce several feet into the air. The audience of human observers watching from the sidelines all cried out in panic from the impact that rippled out from between the two super-powered warriors, whereas the Z-fighters and the Saiyan Empire representatives did their best to try and hold their ground. When both parties looked back into the heart of the chaos, they saw both Super Saiyan 3 fighters glaring at each other with determination and excitement burning in their eyes.

Holding their positions for a split second, Gohan then sprang off of his opponent at the same time she shoved him off with her arm, propelling the young warrior across the courtyard. As soon as the half-Saiyan tapped down on the other side of the ring, he suddenly vanished in a flash of gold and teleported into his foe's blind spot on her right, swinging down at her with a kick. Unfortunately, much to his chagrin, Sandra was expecting his attack, ducking under his leg as it sailed over her, before retaliating with a kick of her own. Her leg shot past the half-Saiyan's head when he dodged it, springing across the quad to stay in her blind spot. The woman tracked him however, swiveling about till she was locked onto him once again.

Darting forward allowed Gohan to close the gap on his opponent in an instant, where he then nailed her with three sharp lefts. His shots came in fast, but Sandra calmly and effortlessly deflected them with a couple of parries. Wanting to capitalize on his rush, the attacking half-Saiyan, still bathed in a golden glow, prepared to follow up his assault with a kick, only to jerk to a stop when he suddenly saw his opponent turn in to counter and clench her hand tightly.

"A hook?" Gohan thought in alarm, seeing in slow motion as Sandra's right fist and shoulder began to pull back. "No! A right straight! But the windup is huge!" Though he shouldn't have been as surprised as he was when he spotted her intentions, there was something about the girl's motion that had him stall his advance. "Do you seriously think you'll be able to hit me with such an obvious attack?" Gohan then gritted his teeth and brought his left arm up to parry.

The hero was all set to deflect her shot. However, just as he was setting up for a block, he suddenly saw his opponent's loading arm light up with a golden glow and a current of electricity, before it shot forward at blazing speed. Sandra's entire body twisted into her attack, causing a powerful gust of wind to billow off of her when she spun her entire bodyweight into her shot. Not wanting to take that hit head on or risk getting struck, the demi-Saiyan dodged it.

It was a good thing he did too, because the instant her fist shot past his head, a sonic boom rang out, followed by the sound of rushing wind and a hurricane blasting across the city behind him. The force of her attack tore through the sky, distorting space as it traveled at light speed before, several seconds later, an entire mountain range a hundred kilometers away exploded in a shower of rubble and debris, filling the atmosphere with a cloud of dust.

The force behind Sandra's attack was so great, not only could the shockwave be heard from one end of the country to the other, but the power of her punch disintegrated the mountains it struck and bifurcated the very troposphere of the earth for thousands of miles over the ocean, as indicated by the way the clouds parted in a perfect 'V' shape, which could be seen from the moon's orbit.

The Z-fighters gaped at the destruction and effects generated by Sandra's punch.

As for the empress, she continued to remain as she was in her unloaded position, her fist fully extended, while Gohan stayed rooted to the ground, his body leaning to the right just an inch away from the woman's arm, with sweat trickling down his face.
From the way his pupils had dilated, you could tell he was just as stunned as everybody else.

"Holy shit. If I'd taken that punch…" There was a good chance not only his arm would've been snapped in half, but his head could've been taken clean off of his shoulders.

When the wind from Sandra's attack died down, the empress quickly retracted her fist and, her eyes snapping towards her foe, wound up for a second shot. Gohan, reacting in alarm, leapt to the right as fast as he could.

"Damn it! I need to get away-" Unfortunately he couldn't get out fast enough. In a blur of movement, Sandra leapt in his way and cut him off, darting forward and ramming into him with her shoulder. The tackle shoved Gohan back, knocking him through the air and across the courtyard. "Whoa! She's quick!" Slamming his feet into the floor, the demi-Saiyan skidded to a stop, only to see his opponent dash after him and stop right inside of his defensive circle. When he saw her fists were up and ready, Gohan brought his guard into play and braced himself. "You're really asking me to go all out, aren't you?!

In a blur, Sandra dove in and began hammering at Gohan's arms with swift punches and body hooks, her form moving like a machine as it repeated the string of attacks over and over. The demi-Saiyan attempted to weave around it and look for an opening. But due to the speed the girl's attacks were landing, he just couldn't find one. Dull thumps rang out as her knuckles struck her target from head to body, causing a cloud of perspiration and dust to fill the air with every hit. Being Super Saiyan 3, only the strongest Z-fighters could follow what was going on.

The pressure of Sandra's relentless attacks battering his arms had Gohan grit his teeth. "She must be trying to make me guard my body," the half-Saiyan thought, keeping his arms up even when he felt his opponent's fists drive even harder into his arms. Since he was keeping his body tight, he was preventing her from landing any clean hits, even when she struck him with a couple of kicks in between her punches. "I can tell from the quick but heavy blows she's landing down there." A frown crossed his face as he watched his opponent ram him with several more left body shots, which struck his arm instead. "So that's your aim, is it? You want me to drop my guard so you can go for my face?! Okay… I'll bite!"

As soon as he saw a gap in Sandra's pattern, Gohan dropped his arms. In that instant, the female Saiyan pulled away and, turning towards him in a haze of speed, began winding up with a right punch, which she was now clearly aiming for his face.

His super human reflexes putting their high-speed battle into slow motion, the demi-Saiyan smirked, "Bring it on! You're not the only one that can take big risks!" Telegraphing her incoming punch, Gohan brought his right arm up and, with a grunt, thrust it forward in a right counter. His fist cut forward like a knife, aiming to cleave his opponent's head off the moment her arm extended.

Sandra however, expression calm, then uttered a single, well-known idiom.

"Check mate."

All of a sudden, her left fist, which had been pulled back, lit up with a hot sleeve of gold like the end of an iron poker, before striking Gohan in the stomach with enough force to split a planet. A loud thunderclap rang out when the demi-Saiyan's body was literally lifted off the floor and bent forwards, his opponent's knuckles burying into his abs. In that same instant, the sound of bones crunching and muscle fibers tearing filled the sky, Gohan's eyes bugging out in horror and a strangled gasp escaping his lips, as a wave of pain shot through him like electricity.
Vegeta, Zangya and all of the teen's friends stood dumbstruck, especially when they saw Gohan spit up blood.

When Sandra retracted her fist, she watched her opponent's knees buckle and his entire body fall forward, crumpling under the damage of her counter attack.

"You needn't feel shame after falling from one of my body blows," Sandra thought, watching through her calm yet bruised face as her Super Saiyan 3 foe descended towards the cobblestone canvas. "The abs of many powerful men and monsters has been penetrated by my Senko (Flash) multiple times before." She then cracked a smile, "I'm sorry, but it's over..."

Suddenly, just when it looked like Gohan was about to pass out, the demi-Saiyan's eyes lit up and snapped towards his opponent, who recoiled in shock. In the blink of an eye, the young warrior lunged at his enemy and nailed her in the face with a swift one-two combo, knocking her head back twice. The shock of the two hits had Sandra leap away to reduce the damage, while at the same time watching her opponent close in on her at full speed.

"The timing and the angle of my punch was perfect," Sandra thought in alarm, watching her opponent dive at her with his guard held high. "Why hasn't he gone down?" More to the point, why wasn't he knocked out?

Using speed none of the others could track, both fighters began attacking each other at close range with a series of punches, knees and elbows. They traded shots, striking and parrying repeatedly, unwilling to fold to their opponent so easily. Their exchange of lightning fast attacks caused the ground to shake beneath them and the air to vibrate.

It almost seemed like the pair would be stuck in this cycle for the entire duration of their battle. That was until Sandra suddenly slipped under a jab from her opponent and nailed him in the chin with a short-motion uppercut. The attack knocked Gohan's head upwards, setting the empress up for her finisher. With a shout and a flash of light, the female Saiyan uncorked a superb right cross into the boy's face, her fist burying into the demi-Saiyan's cheek and knocking his head back with a crunch.

The shockwave from the blow was immense, causing the clouds above them to part instantly and a gust of wind to ripple across the city. The instant Sandra retracted her fist, Gohan's eyes rolled back into his skull and he began to fall forwards once again.

"He should've more than felt that one," Sandra thought when she saw her opponent lurch forward in slow motion, his face clearly showing the damage her punch had caused. "I heard his jaw cra-huh?!" Reacting in alarm, the woman threw her body back to avoid a vicious right hook from her opponent. For the second time in a row, Gohan's consciousness bounced back, allowing him to retaliate against his powerful foe. But despite his lightning fast recovery, he was unable to land a clean shot on Sandra, who managed to leap to a safe distance and land on the other side of the quad. Still, this didn't stop the look of pure astonishment that crossed the female Saiyan's face. "He's still conscious?"

Both warriors then held their ground, with Gohan now sporting his own fair share of facial wounds and Sandra showcasing hers. In spite of their monstrous exchange of hits, the two Saiyans weren't tired in the least, and simply glared one another down without the slightest signs of faltering.

It had been an impressive display. But while most of the Z-fighters were clearly impressed, some of the others weren't, and let the rest of their friends know with a series of grave expressions.

"Yes! Al-right Gohan!" little Trunks cheered, throwing his fists into the air.
"Those two are really heating things up," Yamcha remarked, unable to stop the sweat from dripping down his face. "Man, this is exciting."

"You can say that again, bro," Krillin added at the end.

While this particular half of the group appeared optimistic, Vegeta, Zangya and Paprika were the only ones unable to hide their concern. After hearing the children and the rest of the team behind her laugh, the Hera could no longer keep her stress contained and broke the mood with the bluntest comment she could make.

"Gohan's in trouble," the woman said, her finger tapping against her bicep impatiently, at the same time the people alongside turned to her in surprise.

"Huh? Why?" Goten asked, looking up at his big sister in confusion.

Vegeta, deciding to fill in the gap, spoke up in place of Zangya, "Your brother's taken a lot more damage than he's letting on. Every time he tries to get in close for an attack, his opponent stops him with a sharp, piercing blow from a blind spot, keeping him at a distance. The second he moves, she hits him with a counter and prevents him from landing any clean shots."

Looking just as bewildered as the others, Videl spoke up in a worried tone of voice, "But… how come? Gohan wasn't having any problems like this before. In fact, he was cleaning house with her at the start of this fight. So why is he losing now?"

"It's because of his rhythm."

Hearing the woman's voice across the quad, the Z-fighters turned their attention to Sandra's group, where they saw Maya staring across at them with her arms folded and a smirk on her face. The moment she had their attention, the Saiyan warrior then raised her voice so that those in the back could hear her clearly.

"All fighters, no matter how skilled, fast, or powerful they are, are constantly dictated by a rhythm characteristic of whatever form they practice. It's the basis upon which all warriors center their martial arts around." She then gestured towards her traveling partner and boss, who was back on her feet and assumed in a defensive position. "Sandra over there is gifted with almost God-like concentration, enabling her to figure out and break down an opponent's fighting style by simply observing it. Through use of her exceptional depth perception and timing, she's able to exploit the rhythm of her opponent's attacks and turn the tide of the battle in her favor with only two hits, even against fighters with a marked power advantage. What's more, she can telegraph her opponent's movements right down to the last millisecond, enabling her to block or evade any punch, kick or blast thrown her way. This, combined with her Kai Mui fighting style, allows her to predict and counter every one of her enemy's attacks to a near-perfect degree."

Responding to the assessment, one of the CAT Droids standing in front of the Saiyan Contingent held up a plastic sign that read, "Sandra is the best." It was a statement which all of the little robots agreed with.

Absorbing this information caused Zangya to grit her teeth in frustration. "Shit. That explains everything." She then tapped her finger nervously. "When Gohan dashed in after rattling her head with that right straight, Sandra deliberately left herself open so that she could analyze Gohan's fighting style and memorize his attack patterns. She made him believe that he had the upper hand and let him beat the snot out of her, then surprised him when he came in to finish her off with a big hit, by countering his shot with her own from an awkward angle."
It was a risky strategy, but brilliant; conserving energy by letting the opponent tire themselves out instead of wasting it on high octane rushes and combos whenever an opening presented itself. What's more, not only would the counter she threw have done a lot of damage to the opponent by way of a concussive blow to the head, it also would've left somewhat of a psychological impact on the individual who was hit by it. As far as they knew, Gohan was probably still feeling the mental sting of the shot, even as they were standing and staring one another down.

Hearing the Z-fighters continue expressing their concerns over the gradually developing battle, on one side of the field, the slightly battered Saiyan Empress cracked a smile and brought her left fist further out, while at the same time beginning to bob on her legs.

"On the battlefield... it's always flashy... always frenzied... always chaotic... but not when you're dealing with the very best in the universe... not when you've got two fighters with similar tools," Sandra thought, her eyes twinkling with excitement as she watched her foe adjust the position of his arms. "Having incredible power is one thing... but that only matters if you're able to apply it tactically to each engagement. Incredible strength and speed mean jack all if you don't have the techniques and skill to back it up. If you have the insight to put your power to good use, then you can transform yourself into a one-man-army. Things quiet down then... like a game of chess: a battle of wits and psychology." She then extended her left fist ever so slightly, a move that had Gohan flinch and adjust his defenses. "I don't fight like normal Saiyans... you've probably noticed that already, haven't you? This entire planet... this solar system, they have become my chess board, and you and I are the kings. You've taken two of my pawns and I've taken two of yours and a bishop. Now I plan on taking your knights." A wicked look then appeared across her face, which she shot in her opponent's direction. "I've got eight deadly weapons in my arsenal, and I plan on using all of them to bring you down."

On the other side of the spectrum, Gohan, still regaining his bearings from the vicious body blow and head shots, was currently mulling over his own troubled thoughts on the issue. "This girl... she's nothing like the other monsters I've fought before. I can tell from the air surrounding her person. There's something very perceptive and shrewd about her fighting style that sets her apart from all the enemies I've dealt with in the past, like it was designed to defeat martial artists and warriors like me. An anti-fighter fighting style, man... if we weren't duking it out right now, I'd be gushing like a love-struck school girl." Brushing the blood off of his chin, the teen then smirked and cracked his neck. "Frieza, Cell, the Ginyu Force, Broly, the Androids, Garlic Junior, the assassin... they all fought using very direct and aggressive fighting styles, without an ounce of thought or care behind their attacks. But Sandra... she thinks before she acts and times each of her moves carefully; an intelligent fighter with superb technique who weaves tactics and strategies into all of her blows." His heartbeat quickened as excitement started to flood through his body. "Guys... I think... I've finally found my perfect rival."

Clicking his tongue, a spark of electricity shot off of Gohan's form as he then shifted weight to one side and darted across the quad. The baffled audience swiftly returned their attention to the field when they saw the demi-Saiyan finally move and proceeded to watch as he circled the courtyard at breakneck speed. After which the boy then charged in, causing a sonic boom to ring out as he broke the sound barrier.

"I can't let her set the pace again. The battle becomes too one-sided if she takes the lead. Watch out for her counters, get in close, and shut down her arms and legs," Gohan thought, gritting his teeth as he dove at his opponent, left arm up with his right covering his chin protectively.

As the half-Saiyan closed in at the speed of light, Sandra, watching him in slow motion, perked up when she noticed the position of his arms had changed. "Oh? So you're looking out for my uppercut, huh?" She then grinned and clenched her left fist, a move which the approaching Gohan noticed through his inhuman reflexes. "Alright then. I'll let you make the first move, but in the meantime, I'll give you something else to think about-"

"Kyokusen." (Curve Shot)

Gohan speedily ducked when Sandra suddenly shot two swift jabs at him, upon which he swiftly blocked a push kick aimed at him from below. After knocking it back, he saw the girl leap back and fire off another jab, which he head-slipped and dove past. At the same time his opponent began to retract her fist.

"That's it. Follow her fist back to her face. As soon as she brings it in, she's mine!" Gohan thought, cranking back his left for a body shot, as he saw his opponent's ribcage wide open.

All of a sudden, Sandra's jab, which she was still in the process of pulling back, suddenly changed directions and shot towards the boy's head, clocking him just when he was inches away from landing his attack. The punch, which had transformed into a hook mid-flight, knocked spit out of Gohan's mouth as his body lurched sharply to the left, putting him off balance.

His vision blurry from the unexpected shot, the demi-Saiyan's eyes snapped back up to his opponent in surprise. "W-What the hell was that?" Before he could figure out what it was, he suddenly saw Sandra fire off another jab, which he quickly lifted his right arm to parry. But just when he thought he'd catch it, he suddenly saw her fist veer off course and around his arm, before nailing him across the face with a harsh thump. In a matter of seconds, more and more jabs began flying at him, nailing him square in the face from multiple angles. "Shit! I have to get out of her range!"

He then sprang to the side to avoid her last punch, making sure to stay keep to the outside. However, just as her fist was retracting, it suddenly changed course and smacked him on the side of the head just before he was completely out of reach, knocking him stumbling across the ring.

"What's with those lefts? I've run into tricky punches before, like Zangya's chopping strikes, the angular blows used by my father and the big swings thrown by Broly, but nothing like these. These are different. They change directions and come at me after I dodge them. What kind of attack is this?"

Even the Z-fighters could see how much he was struggling to avoid those blows.

Watching her opponent retreat had Sandra smile. "That was my special homing punch. Let's see you try and get past these!" Even though they were fast and lacked significant penetration power, they still had the capability of knocking an opponent's head around thanks to the awkward angles the punch was able to land from.

Apparently Gohan was aware of this, as he'd been on the receiving end of those blows. Shaking his head to rid himself of his daze, the half-Saiyan gave a throaty growl and his energy level began to spike. "There's no way I can take her on directly... not like this. If I try to get close, a short-motion uppercut or a slicing hook stops me. If I try to fight her at middle range, her weird homing jabs cut me off. I have to shift it up a gear...!" His aura bursting around him with a flash of lightning, he then vanished in the blink of an eye, his form shooting around the quad in the form of a golden bolt. Upon which he then spun in, coming at his opponent from a blind spot. "And get her from the side!"

He powered towards his foe, gaining some altitude before diving at her with a right side kick to knock her lights out. But then, just as his heel was about an inch away from her face, Sandra's eyes suddenly snapped up to him and, with an earsplitting crack, her left fist shot up and connected with his cheek in a counter. Both fighters seemingly struck one another at the same time, splitting the earth while their attacks buried into one another's faces.

Stunned by the shot, Gohan then dragged his cheek down her arm and, retracting his leg, began opening up on her with a blinding barrage of punches and kicks. It was an assault Sandra responded to in kind and, in a matter of moments, both fighters were attacking one another with a vicious onslaught of blows. Miniature shockwaves rattled the city as the two Saiyans attempted to overwhelm the other, attacking and counter attacking, their fists pummeling the opposing body without restraint. Eventually their ferocious string of combos was finished by Sandra receiving a concussive right straight to the face, which she blocked with her hand while simultaneously twisting her head away to cushion the impact.

"You've sped up a little, huh?" Sandra thought excitedly, despite the powerful blow that struck her hand. "Okay. I guess I'll speed up too."

At first Gohan thought he had her. But just as his fist was following through, he suddenly saw Sandra's leg shoot up and nail him in the solar plexus in the form of a side kick. The solid hit connected hard and fast, sending the demi-Saiyan skidding across the cobblestone floor like a sled.

"Another counter?" Taking a moment to regain his bearings, the stunned Saiyan then crouched and darted forward in a sprint. He ducked in low to avoid the woman's jab and, cocking his left fist back, powered up and threw it up at her in a full-motion uppercut. His fist connected with Sandra's right forearm when it came around to block his attack, which landed with earth shattering force and propelled her straight up into the sky like a rocket.

Maya, Cal, Kure and the Z-fighters followed Sandra's body as she soared into the clouds above, punching a hole right through them and causing the white masses to part in the form of an expanding ripple. The sight had all of them blink in surprise.

"Whoa," Android 18 murmured.

"That was one hell of an upper cut," Bulma added with an equally baffled look in play.

Vegeta however frowned, "She still managed to block it though."

The instant he sent his opponent packing, Gohan straightened up, slapped his hands over his forehead with one palm on top of the other, and aimed it at the sky. With Sandra in his crosshairs and suspended about a dozen kilometers above him, his aura exploded from his body with the deafening roar of a hurricane. "MASENKOO-HAAAAAAAAAAAAAAA!" the teen bellowed, a split second before a golden sphere appeared in his palms and a torrent of unending energy gushed out of his hands. The force of the blast being expelled from his palms knocked Gohan flat against the floor and punched a thirty foot crater into the quad beneath him.

A pillar of light shot towards the sky from the middle of Central City, expanding widthwise to the point it could potentially swallow up the entire country in a blazing hellfire. The attack pretty much became a 'fuck-everything-in-this-general-direction' move that reached Sandra in record breaking time, lighting her up as it closed the final few meters of space between it and her.

However, undeterred by the sight of the apocalyptic level blast, the female Super Saiyan 3 corkscrewed about and, thrusting her left hand forward while guarding her face with her right, the woman expelled a bright, golden dish of energy from her palm that expanded into a circular shield in front of her body. When Gohan's blast hit, the attack split and went around it, like a rock in the middle of a raging torrent. The tidal wave of an attack continued to rage around the woman until it dissipated a full minute later.

Her eyes narrowing, Sandra's head then snapped around when she sensed a presence appear directly behind her. Spotting Gohan easily, the woman smirked and prepared to hit him with a kick, only to see the demi-Saiyan's eyes fly open and a white light shoot out of them.

"SOLAR FLARE!" A blinding flash then burst from his body and filled the sky, hitting Sandra square in the face.

Unable to look away in time, the female Saiyan ended up blinded by the attack, her irises going blank and her vision distorting. "M-My eyes!" Before she could shield herself, the woman was struck from above by Gohan nailing her in the head with a kick, sending her across the country with the deafening clam of a sonic boom.

As her body was practically rag-dolled across the continent, Gohan powered up and gave chase. His form bolting across the sky in the form of a golden stream of energy, he quickly homed in on Sandra's position and cranked back his left fist, which lit up with a blue glow. Once he was in range of her stricken body, he bellowed at the top of his lungs, "EXPLOSIVE DEMON IMPACT!" With a terrifying thunderclap, the demi-Saiyan struck Sandra in the stomach, causing her body to bend around his fist. A split second later, the sound of multiple shockwaves began echoing out as the empress's body was assaulted all over by a hail of punches, which seemed to hit her all at once, hundreds of them, over and over.

Her form distorting, contorting and seemingly caving under the storm of heavy blows, Sandra continued to receive the beating of a lifetime. However, under the heavy rain of attacks, a wide, excited grin remained plastered to her face.

"You really love using combination attacks, don't you?" the girl chirped, before Gohan finished off his assault by cocking back his left fist and thrusting it towards his enemy.

All of a sudden, just when it seemed like he would score a final hit, Sandra, bolting back into life, suddenly dove into the boy's range and struck demi-Saiyan with a perfect counter cross from the outside, over his left shoulder, nailing him at the exact same time his arm fully extended. The woman's knuckles connected with the sound of crunching bones, smacking the Z-fighter's head to the side and stunning him.

Sandra's well-timed counter put an immediate end to Gohan's assault and extinguished the golden flames of his aura. As soon as he began flying off to the side with blood and spit clouding the air around him, the female then brought her foot up and smashed the boy in the stomach, sending him propelling towards the countryside below. He then collided with a mountain, which went up in a cloud of rubble and debris, as if it was made out of confetti. While he was blasting through the debris, his Super Saiyan 3 opponent pursued him, darting through the rain of rocks and boulders, and converging on his position in a heartbeat.

Slowing his flight through the rubble, Gohan responded to his advancing opponent with a right hook. However, with razor sharp precision and timing, Sandra was able to head slip it and counter him with a right cross. When he attempted to hit her with a chopping left, she responded by striking with a left uppercut. Eyes reflecting shock, the demi-Saiyan tried one last time to nail his opponent with a right roundhouse kick, only for the female Saiyan to slip in close for his kick to have no effect, and nail him with a left backhand using the knuckles on her index and middle finger.

Her swift counter attacks knocked Gohan out of the cloud of rubble from the collapsing mountain and across the sweeping fields of the forested valleys behind it. Covering over two dozen miles in barely a second, the half-Saiyan watched forests and grassy hills slip by him in a blur, before quickly flipping backwards and driving his feet into the earth. Digging two trenches through the ground, he forced himself to a stop, where he then looked up to show blood trickling out of his nose and down from his hairline.

In the sky high above, he saw Sandra, bathed in her golden aura, laughing in amusement and floating against the backdrop of clouds at a leisurely pace. "Haha! This is great! I can't remember the last time I fought against an opponent who could go toe-to-toe with me!" She then leered down at her foe with excitement burning as fiercely as her energy. "Come on, Stallion! GET UP! Give stimulus to my existence! Show me the power of a half-Saiyan from planet Earth!"

Spitting out the blood from his mouth, the once dazed and stupefied Gohan, managing to find his feet, clenched his fists in determination. "You want me to get serious? Fine! Here I come… READY OR NOT!" With a mighty yell, the golden rays of his energy then gushed out of every pore on his body and ignited him like a flare in the night. Then, with his aura tearing a seventy foot wide crater into the ground underneath his feet, the demi-Saiyan crouched low before tearing into the sky like a bolt.

Sandra, seeing her opponent coming right at her, kicked herself into high gear and super sped into the horizon. Both leaving golden vapor trails in their wake, the two warriors quickly became entangled in a game of cat and mouse where, as they danced through the skies around the entire planet, began laying into one another with catastrophic force.

Seeing the pair of warriors finally take off had the Z-fighters and the Saiyan group staring after them for several long seconds. Upon hearing the sounds of their battle disappear into the distance, both sides then turned back to one another, with Maya deciding it was time to get into the action.

"I guess that's my cue," the dark-skinned Saiyan chirped while stepping forward, at the same time uncrossing her arms and giving one of the little CAT Droids standing in line a pat on the head. When she saw the defenders of the planet glare at her, the young woman then flicked back her hair and focused on her chosen target. "After traveling all this way to get here, I'm really hoping your group can give me some sort of challenge."

Also taking center stage, Zangya moved forward with her arms at her sides, while Vegeta and everybody else hung back. "Why don't we skip the warm up and get straight to the good stuff? That shouldn't be too much of a problem for you, right?"

"Not at all," Maya replied, before rolling her head on her neck and widening her stance. "Unlike Sandra, I prefer using brute strength and raw power over superior technique to win my fights." She then took a moment to look over her opponent. After taking in her trim figure, orange hair and the intense look in her eyes, the spiky haired warrior moaned appreciatively and licked her lips, "Do you think your cute little body can stand up to my punches?"

Ignoring the obviously flirtatious tone of her opponent, a sly and confident smile crossed Zangya's lips. "I don't know?" Clenching her fists, the woman then gave a loud holler before her green aura blasted around her. With golden lightning dancing across her skin like a storm, the flash of her transformation quickly died down to reveal the Hera's blue skin had taken on a dark shade of green. Her orange hair, once full and lively, had turned a shade of blood red and spiked up, with golden streaks appearing along several of the strands. Furthermore, golden sclera had formed around her eyes and forehead, giving her an angelic appearance. As soon as her energy calmed down, the female Z-fighter grinned widely. She then proceeded to watch the stunned expressions appear on the opposition's faces. "You tell me."

Maya blinked. "Oh, fuck. That's so unfair."
Getting a bead on the woman's power level, Kure balked in shock. "This one… she's almost as strong as Sandra."

Feeling confident, Zangya crossed her arms, "The amount of power I have in this form is really incredible. Even though I've only had a few weeks to train with it, I've managed to get most of it under control." She then gestured towards her opponent. "You can give up now if you want."

Hearing her question, Maya stared at her blankly for several moments before a smirk appeared on her lips. "That won't be… click… necessary."

Zangya quickly looked taken aback, "Click?" It was faint, but she could've sworn she heard a very tiny button being pressed.

Kure and Cal, hearing that sound clearly on their end, took several steps back, along with their robotic teammates. Their actions had the Z-group stare at the team strangely, as they had no idea what was going on.

A chuckle then escaped Maya's lips as she focused her attention on her opponent, who watched in confusion as the Saiyan female brought both her hands up and formed them into fists. "I've just switched on a miniature lamp that's been surgically implanted into each of my eyes, which generate blutz waves of 17 megazenos."

This news had Vegeta frown thoughtfully, "Blutz wa-…?" It was then a terrifying realization occurred to the prince, which had the man recoil in alarm. "Shit."

Seeing the royal's expression shift drew a laugh from the spiky haired woman, who continued to cackle as her body began to change. The Z-fighters, in a complete state of disbelief, looked on with slack jaws as Maya's face distorted and grew a snout, while the rest of her body began to increase in muscle mass and size. As she expanded, fur began to grow out on the parts of her flesh that were exposed and, to go along with her facial changes, her hands and feet also became more beast-like. Even Zangya, despite her increase in power and energy levels, could only look on in shock as her opponent's shadow stretched and fell over her, until the dark-skinned female stood several stories tall, about the same size as King Koku's tower, leering down at the heroes.

For some of the Z-fighters, Vegeta especially, it was a familiar sight: the gigantic, hulking frame, the elongated tail, the brown fur, the massive jaws, sharpened teeth and blood red eyes. To sum it all up, Maya had just transformed into an Oozaru.

The Royal Entourage and civilian bystanders, who were still watching from the sidelines, let out simultaneous cries of terror when they saw the monster that'd materialized in the middle of the castle grounds. Some of the guards even had half a mind to draw their guns and shoot at it. But after witnessing the feats that'd taken place so far, they wisely chose not to.

Tien, sweat breaking out on his face, spoke in a raspy voice, "This… is bad."

"Uh… I'm not sure bad quite covers it?" Krillin whimpered, his voice cracking out of fear.

In response to his friend's remarks, Yamcha laughed nervously, "Funny… I remember having nightmares that started out like this for years… only the girl that was transforming into the giant monkey was Bulma." That little bit at the end earned him a hard elbow from the blue-haired woman in question, which wound up in the martial artist choking on his own breath and curling forward, clutching his stomach.

Upon seeing the terrified expressions on the Z-fighters' faces, Maya, still adorned in her stretched out Saiyan one-piece, gloves and boots, leered at the team in a mischievous manner. "Oh... I'm not done yet," she said in a deeper, booming voice. Balling her hands, the woman then raised her massive arms overhead and focused her energy. Then, with a furious roar, she threw them down, an action that was immediately followed by a golden aura and a storm of blue lightning erupting from her body, and the hair growing down her back spiking up. With a loud thunderclap, the towering gorilla punched a crater into the floor beneath her as she transformed into a Super Saiyan 2, only with a slight alteration. Her enormous power up nearly knocked everyone and everything off of their foundations, a result that had the full-blooded Saiyan cackle with excitement.

"Behold... a form only the most trained Super Saiyans in history have ever achieved; a fusion between our race's Great Ape transformation and the legendary Ascended Saiyan form... the Super Oozaru... or in this case Super Oozaru 2!"

Hearing her friend's rather obnoxious exclamation had Kure roll her eyes, "I told her that name sounded terrible, but she still went with it. What a showoff."

Zangya, managing to shake off her initial bewilderment, frowned deeply at the face of the giant, "This... is going to be a bit of a problem."

"You don't SAY?!" Maya shouted, before suddenly raising her right foot and, with a growl of effort, thrust it right down on top of the red-haired woman.

With a yelp of surprise, Zangya managed to throw up both her arms in time to block the enormous boot dropping down on her position. The sole connecting with the back of her arms caused a tremendous shockwave to fill the region, rattling the castle and knocking the nearby crowd of onlookers to the ground. As dust rose into the air around the two combatants, it revealed a grinning Oozaru Maya pressing down onto a struggling Zangya, as if she were trying to crush a very stubborn ant. Both female martial artists were alit by their respective auras and were now attempting to overpower the other.

While all this was going on, Cal, who'd reached the end of his patience, smiled and began sprinting across the courtyard towards the Z-fighters. When Vegeta saw the large humanoid in black spandex sprint around from behind Maya's oversized leg, the prince gritted his teeth and took a defensive stance.

"Terrific. Not giving me any time to warm up, huh?" Vegeta shouted, before his aura burst up around him and he jumped straight to Super Saiyan 2. The prince grinned enthusiastically, "BRING IT ON!"

By the time he'd reached full power, Cal was already upon him.

With a battle cry, the man in the black tights tackled Vegeta head-on and lifted him off the floor, before charging right through the middle of the Z-fighters' formation. Carrying the man on his shoulder, the humanoid bodyguard then leapt over one of the castle's buildings and across the city, where the pair soared over the skyline and into the valleys in the distance.

Noticing they were out of the metropolis and soaring over the countryside, the riled up and determined Vegeta, still trapped in the arms of his foe, gave a loud snarl and, cocking his head back, slammed it into his opponent's face. Forcefully breaking out of the hold, the Saiyan Prince brought both arms over, cupped his hands in the air, and slammed them down into Cal's back. The blow sent the big man plummeting to Earth, where he crashed with tremendous force and sent a cloud of dust and rubble shooting into the sky.

The still empowered Vegeta then brought his hand back, intent on following up with a Photon
Bomber to sterilize the landing zone. But just as a blue sphere appeared above his palm, he suddenly saw two beams shoot out of the cloud beneath him, which then slammed into his chest. The surprise attack knocked the wind out of the man's lungs and sent him spinning through the sky, trailing smoke. When he hit the ground a full kilometer away, he quickly sprang back to his feet and glared towards the spot his opponent had impacted, ignoring the two tiny burn marks on his front.

Just as he was watching the dust billowing from the crater settle, Vegeta was suddenly blindsided by his opponent appearing directly beside him and nailing him with a right cross, which sent him bouncing over the hills. After plowing a trench across the valley for several hundred meters, the prince came rocketing back at full power, his golden aura burning around him as he closed the gap on his foe and chopped at Cal's head with a right overhand. The bodyguard in black parried it and deflected Vegeta's uppercut, before retaliating with two straight blows to the short man's stomach and a chop to his neck. Upon which the large fighter then struck the prince in the gut and sent him skidding back along the floor.

Gasping from the sharp attack to the solar plexus, Vegeta looked up in time to see Cal lunging at him with a hook. Reacting fast, the Saiyan ducked it and nailed the man in the stomach with a body shot, his fist causing the man to lurch forward. He then attempted to follow-through, but ended up getting nailed across the face by an elbow. Stricken, the royal was then kicked in the stomach by the large fighter, sending him bouncing across the farmlands outside of Central City and up the side of a mountain. When he neared the peak, Vegeta rolled backwards, dug his feet into the ground and skidded to a stop.

Looking up, the flame haired man chuckled, "Oh-ho… this one might be more fun than I originally thought." A current of electricity shooting off of his form emphasized his excitement.

Cal, seeing his adversary looking back at him from the edifice several miles away, smirked as well before dropping to his knee. When he did, he crossed his arms, closed his eyes, and concentrated. In a matter of seconds, debris and dust began to levitate off of the ground around him, which began to quiver and tremble under an unseen force. Then as the rocks began to orbit around his position, orange flames began to pour out of the man's skin and surrounded him in a protective, fiery cloak. His energy coming out in an inferno, the warrior in spandex then opened his eyes and, setting his hand on the ground, grinned in a beastly and fearsome manner.

"BLAZING METEOR!" With his full power unleashed, Sandra's bodyguard and friend then leant forward into a sprinter's stance and, taking aim towards the mountain, took off like a bolt across the landscape. His fiery form tore a path across the valley and up the side of the edifice, leaving a trail of fire in his wake. In the blink of an eye, he was directly in front of Vegeta, charging towards him without any signs of slowing down.

The prince took immediate action, barreling out of the way just in time to avoid the swinging right hook his opponent threw at him. The punch struck the top of the mountain, taking it out in a shower of debris. As soon as his opponent missed, Vegeta spun in and nailed the defenseless warrior in the side with a roundhouse kick, only for his blow to strike the man's arm. Seeing his adversary guard against the shot prompted the Saiyan warrior to power through it and, with a yell, he kicked the man off of the mountain and into the sky at several times the speed of sound.

Upon becoming airborne, Cal took flight and rocketed into the clouds, with Vegeta in hot pursuit.

Back in the castle square, Zangya, still holding her own, then let out a yell and forced Maya off of her, sending the giant woman stumbling backwards. As soon as the foot was off, the Hera powered up and shot into the sky, where she was speedily intercepted by a left chop from the Super Oozaru.
The Z-fighter blocked the blow from the side, but was pushed across the airspace by several meters, before being forced to guard against a massive punch from the woman. The blow caused another shockwave to wash over the landscape, causing the Z-fighters on the ground to lose their balance.

After effectively taking the punch, the Hera then blasted up into the sky and, upon stopping in the area above King Koku's castle, thrust her hand forward. With a yell, she unleashed a powerful green blast down at the golden ape, only to see Maya's hand shoot up and catch the attack in the palm of her hand, which exploded uselessly against her skin.

The woman cackled, "Oh. Did I forget to mention? The Oozaru transformation has the ability to multiply the Saiyan's durability-" All of a sudden, the woman's mouth opened wide and a massive blast of purple energy came gushing out, "AND THEIR POWER!" The wave of ki rushed towards Zangya at an insane speed, catching the red haired woman by surprise.

Reacting evasively, the Hera dodged to the side, barely avoiding the attack that rushed past her and into the sky above, where it disappeared into space. Sweat breaking out on her face, Zangya then grinned and looked back down at the ground. "Impressive. But your new form lacks speed." She then recoiled when she saw her opponent was no longer standing in the quad.

She'd been so caught up in avoiding the woman's attack that she didn't notice Maya's massive form materialize in the air directly behind her.

The Great Ape grinned widely, "Speed like this?"

Zangya then let out a cry of agony when she was struck from behind by a fist two times her size, which not only sent her flying across the city but the valleys outside of it. The force of the blow was so immense that the Hera ended up blacking out for three whole seconds, leaving her wide open for Maya, still suspended in the air, to fire off another blast from her mouth, which chased after her target. The purple beam struck the red haired woman in the back and knocked her out of the sky, slamming her into a hill below and transforming it into a smoking crater. The blast meanwhile traveled onwards and hit a mountain, engulfing it in a dome-shaped explosion that effectively incinerated the entire edifice.

Groaning as her burnt and battered body wafted with smoke, Zangya stood up and looked ahead of her. Vision clearing, the woman then cracked a smile of excitement, "Now that's more like it." She then spun around and took a defensive stance, looking up just in time to see Maya appear in the sky above and plummeting towards her foot first. Powering up allowed Zangya to crank her foot back and intercept the woman's kick with one of her own, the pair colliding in the form of a landscape reducing shockwave.

By the time Maya reengaged Zangya, back in King Koku's castle, the rest of the Z-fighters had thrown themselves into action.

When Paprika powered up, jumping straight into her Super Makyan form, Yamcha and Videl also went full power and rushed in. The three fighters dashed at Kure while the cat woman, acting on instinct, leapt into the sky and allowed the group of warriors to come blazing after her. Their forms streaking high up into the atmosphere, the cat alien managed to make it into the clouds before looking down in time to see her pursuers thrust their hands forward and launch a barrage of energy blasts after her.

Glasses shimmering, the female diplomat extended her arms and grinned. "Scatter!" Kure shouted, before opening her palms and performing an aerial twirl. Doing so allowed her to unleash a shower of energy spheres from her hands resembling flares, which spiraled outwards and away from her current path. The magnetic pull from each of the energy balls drew the blasts launched by the Z-fighters towards them, causing the attacks to veer off course and detonate harmlessly away from their intended target, filling the sky with a spontaneous fireworks display. When explosions blew away the cloud cover, Kure explosively changed directions and shot back towards her attackers, which she then promptly engaged.

Goten and Trunks, taking the initiative, went Super Saiyan and dashed towards their miniature opponents. The tiny cat robots, responding to their respective programming, fired up jets on their feet and took off in different directions, allowing the two boys to chase after them. Krillin and Chiaotzu did so as well, rushing forward to engage the miniature androids, which dashed off to different corners of the city so as to separate them from the masses.

As for Eighteen, the woman held her ground and watched her opponents charge towards her, forcing her to bring her right hand up. "Sorry about this!" She then fired off a series of golden blasts, which the two little robots dodged in a series of graceful aerial maneuvers. Blinking in surprise at how easily the bots avoided her, the blonde woman then crouched low and shot straight into the sky. As soon as she was airborne, the cool woman looked down with a grin. "This way, cuties."

The Cat Droids, tracking her, flew after the woman while she led them out of the city just like the others had before them.

Mobi, acting on his master's instructions and seeing his companions take wing, raised one of his massive arms and locked onto his target. Tien, his senses already fixed upon the large robot, bailed when he saw the armored unit fire the arm of its gauntlet straight at him in a manner very similar to one of their automatonic allies. When it missed, the arm quickly returned to its owner with a snap, allowing the rotund robot to turn its sensors towards the sky and fly after its opponent. Mobi then pursued the three-eyed warrior, opening up a series of panels on its back and unleashing a cluster of missiles, determined to keep the Z-fighter on the defense.

Seeing the giant robot fire upon him immediately forced Tien to counter its attacks, where he wound up switching between shooting the missiles and kicking them. After the human fighter dispersed of its opening assault, Mobi quickly honed in on him, tackling the bald fighter with its massive shoulder plating and sending him flying over the metropolis. Tien quickly retaliated with a series of ki blasts from one hand, which the armored robot powered through and carried on assaulting him, forcing the human into a steady retreat. When it came at him with a wild hook, Tien leapt over the giant man and kicked it in the back, knocking the automaton towards a skyscraper. When it seemed like it would collide with it, the black, armored android kicked its boosters into action and dodged, before rocketing towards the horizon and leaving the district far behind.

Tien, powering up to maximum, wasted no time in giving pursuit.

The instant all fighters and their opponents left the area, the hovering cameras that'd previously been circling the palace scattered and shot after them at blinding speed.

Bulma meanwhile, after seeing her friends and the roving drones disappear, then turned her attention to San. When she saw the giant spider tank turn to her, the scientist immediately primed one of her weapons to attack.

However, just before she could follow up, she then lowered her arm, to which the alien tank did as well. As soon as the atmosphere settled, the spider automaton then marched forward, its legs making low piston sounds as it scuttled towards the scientist and stopped in front of her. Using one of its forward arms, it then brought it up to where its forehead was and saluted the woman proudly.

"Hello," the mobile tank chirped.

A little taken aback by the machine's politeness, Bulma smiled and waved nervously, "H-Hey…"
She then laughed a little at the end.

With its optical lens spinning excitedly in place, San held her hand out and pointed towards the one camera still floating in the area. "Wanna watch our friends fight?"

Regarding the giddy, childlike robot momentarily, the blue haired scientist beamed pleasantly and nodded. "Sure. I could use a break." She then retracted her helmet, allowing her to get a better view of the world.

"Alrighty then!" Immediately following his exclamation, San quickly opened up a compartment in its undercarriage and dropped a disk like device onto the floor. "Step right up! Step right up! It's time to start screening our main event! On tonight's program: we have approximately three hours of bone-mangling, spirit-crushing action and excitement, as the New Saiyan Empire takes on the challengers from the beautiful blue planet Earth! Place your bets right now!" Sliding it forward, he then activated it with a quick press of a button, which then produced several hologram screens in the air in front of them, each one showing a different view of the world. Once the modem was done synchronizing with the mobile cameras, they quickly brought up the half a dozen battles taking place across the plain.

There were plenty of events to choose from. Gohan and Sandra, who were currently trading shots over a desert, Zangya and Maya, who were brawling across the grassy valleys, Vegeta and Cal, who were busy tackling and throwing each other inside a mountainous area, Paprika and Kure, both of whom were being accompanied by Videl and Yamcha, Goten and Trunks playing tag with the Cat robots along with Krillin, Chiaotzu and Eighteen, and finally Tien and Mobi, who'd taken their battle to some place along the coastline.

Bulma whistled when she saw the high definition pictures come alive. "Damn. You're actually processing all of this at the same time?"

"Uh-huh. Ms Kure upgraded my software with the latest media package from her home planet. That means I can keep track of anyone no matter how fast they're moving… even someone as quick as Ms Sandra," San replied cheerfully, obviously feeling proud of his capabilities.

This drew a chuckle from Bulma, who removed her helmet and set it underneath her arm. "Damn. I gotta learn more about you guys. Your technology is insane." Hell, with what she'd seen so far, she was positive she could use their information to help bulk up her armor designs.

Rotating about, the spider tank quickly turned its attention towards King Koku and the crowd of civilians watching from the sidelines, all of whom immediately freaked out when the machine rounded on them. However, instead of doing something hostile like they expected, the large robot waved them over in an enthusiastic manner. "Come on, you guys! What are you all standing over there for? Come watch the fights with us! You won't be able to see anything sitting behind a wall!"

Initially hesitant, King Koku and his staff quickly assessed the potential danger behind breaking ranks and approaching the fighters. Considering the fact that all but two of the warriors had left the area, and that the remaining members of both parties were now offering them a place on the sidelines to witness the events firsthand, the leaders of the country and the palace visitors accompanying them threw all caution to the trash, and slowly made their way over the dividing wall and into the center of the quad.
Bulma actually cracked a smile at seeing how nervous they appeared, as she was well aware of what being in their position was like.

They then gathered around the hologram projector, where they proceeded to watch the bloody mashups now taking place beyond the city. The moment King Koku, his subordinates, and the rest of the world fixed their eyes on the projections; they immediately bore witness to what would become known as the greatest boxing tournament in all of Earth's history…

OOO

(Gohan & Sandra)

Having initially kept their fight in the skies above the countryside, after trading devastating blows across the majority of the planet, the pair of Super Saiyan 3s eventually brought their battle back down to the ground. It was here Gohan had hoped to retake the advantage over his more agile quarry. But just like in the aerial scuffle they'd been waging before, he was soon to find that Sandra was even harder to hit when she was on a level playing field.

Ducking and weaving between blows, the Saiyan Empress kept her eyes and senses fixed squarely upon her enemy as he darted at her across the rocky desert. Thanks to their superhuman strength and agility, both of them were covering dozens of yards with every leap and side-step they made. To the naked eye, their forms were barely visible, appearing only as golden bolts of light dashing over the open ground, with the occasional exploding mountain and hill marking the path they were traveling. But in their eyes, through their insane speed and reflexes, both of them were able to see each other as clear as day.

Well… one of them was.

Despite the fact that Gohan's fists and feet were cutting through the air faster than laser bolts, Sandra was doing a fantastic job at avoiding them, back stepping and side stepping with deft, superfluous movements. While she practically danced around his blows, the demi-Saiyan stumbled and staggered, attempting to keep pace with her, but always finding his knuckles barely grazing her on every swing.

Yelling with his blows, Gohan attempted to cut her off, only to have his opponent dart in the opposite direction. Chasing after her, the teen pulled up right next to the girl as she ran, jabbing and kicking out at her. Just like before Sandra dodged, all the while running and returning fire against her opponent. The pair burned a trail of dust across the desert at mind-blowing speed, even plowing through two plateaus along the way like they were wall paper, which showered the surrounding area with debris.

Eventually after a swift running duel the pair hit the brakes and skidded to a stop. This was a moment Gohan opted to capitalize on and, gritting his teeth, dove in with a left body shot. His knuckles slammed into Sandra's right arm, who managed to telegraph his attack from below. As soon as she blocked it, his right arm then came chopping down at her at blinding speed. A loud crack suddenly rang out, followed by a spray of blood that filled the air around the duo, as it seemed like the hybrid had managed to nail his opponent.

But then, just when it seemed like Sandra had taken the blow, Gohan suddenly stumbled away with a blank look on his face and blood trickling out of his mouth. His opponent meanwhile, brought back her left fist and allowed it to swing in front of her tauntingly.

"You got careless," Sandra chuckled, her words snapping the demi-Saiyan out of his reverie, who barely managed to slam his rear foot into the ground to stop from falling over. Right now, with his vision blurry and making it seem like he was facing off against three Sandras, it was a miracle he was standing up at all. "Every time you try for a combo, you always start with a super obvious punch to distract your opponent from the second one to follow. Since your strongest arm is your right, you always follow-up with it to trap your opponent inside a crisscross, using a classic one-two-feint. Hell, I don't even have to read your rhythm to see it coming."

Gohan, gasping for air as he attempted to regain his sense of balance, then brought his hands up into another wide stance. "Shit. She didn't just shut down my attack, she totally dismantled it." Spitting out the blood from his mouth, he then darted forward, intent on pushing forward. "She blocked my shot from below and before I could hit her from above with my overhand, she nailed me with a super sharp, compact right hook as a counter. I was so focused on getting her with my right that I didn't even see her attack coming." To be able to match his speed in such a short amount of time was unreal.

When Gohan ducked in, he opened up with two right straights, which Sandra swayed around. He then tried for a left jab, only for her to parry it and bury a roundhouse kick into his side. The blow landed with a spine chilling crunch, knocking the wind out of the boy's lungs and sending him skidding over the sand. When he stopped, he threw a left jab at Sandra when she lunged at him, only to slip around it and hit him in the face with a left jolt counter that knocked his head flying backwards.

Vision almost going black, Gohan was unable to do anything when Sandra began nailing repeatedly kicks into his body. When she struck him with a left teep, she then followed up by switching to her right and, after loading it up, aimed at the hapless warrior.

"Hyakuretsu Yari!" (Hundred Rending Spears) Sandra shouted, before she unleashed a lightning fast barrage of side-kicks upon her opponent. Her attack came at Gohan in a continuous salvo of light speed blows, which nailed his body over and over, before the girl finished up with a big one, burying her foot into his ribs and sending him spiraling across the desert.

Bouncing for several kilometers, the demi-Saiyan eventually stopped when he crashed into a distant mountain, transforming it into a smoking crater.

When the dust settled around the rubble, it revealed Gohan, bruised and with a tattered gi, sitting in the center, bleeding from the face and panting heavily. Glaring in the direction he'd come, he saw his opponent standing several kilometers away in the distance, still set in her stance and waiting for him to get up.

Wiping away the blood from his chin, the boy cursed. "Forget her punches; her kicks are also a big problem. Damn. What reflexes. I've never fought anyone who could counter my attacks so easily before." He then frowned when he quickly noticed something off about this picture. "Wait a second... why isn't she firing any blasts at me? She knocked me down and has me in her sights. Is she even going to try?" After several moments of watching his opponent hold her position, revelation quickly hit Gohan like a pallet of bricks. "No. She won't. Sandra's too smart for that. She won't waste energy on long range attacks that have a high chance of missing their target when she can just as easily wait for me to get close to her." Clenching his jaw, Gohan quickly leapt to his feet and cupped his hands at his side, his aura bursting up around him at full power. "So that's your game, is it? Alright... if you won't come to me, then I'll just make you move!"

Sensing her opponent's energy spike, Sandra perked up in surprise. "Hm? What's this?"

"KA-ME-HA-ME... Haaaaaaaaaaaaaaaaaaaaaaaaaaaaaaa!" Gohan roared, thrusting both hands forward and unleashing an enormous blue energy blast from his hands. The beam came gushing out of his palms, expanding widthwise and traveling across the desert at a terrifying speed.

The attack was so powerful that the shockwave it generated cleared the sky of clouds and caused an earthquake to rock the entire country.

Sandra, seeing the attack approaching her in the form of a bright blue light that grew and grew at an alarming rate, gave her opponent an amused grin. "Aww. How cute. It has a name-" OH SHIT!" An expression of pure horror quickly shot across her face when the sheer magnitude of the blast coming towards her finally hit. A split second later, the spear of the attack struck her head on, causing a sonic boom to ring out on impact and distorting the surface of the entire desert, before the rest of the enormous beam consumed its target.

After making its mark, the beam continued to travel across the planet and out into space, where it then rocketed far off into the cosmos to dissipate billions of miles away.

The attack faded sometime later, revealing a trench two miles wide had been carved across the entire country from end to end. Gohan, standing at the far end of the chasm, panted heavily while watching the billowing wall of dust in front of him settle. When the air finally cleared, the boy couldn't see any signs of his opponent. That was until a ping on his radar had him turn his attention skywards, where he immediately spotted his Super Saiyan 3 opponent hovering several hundred meters above ground zero.

Upon assessing the damage done to the area, Sandra breathed a heavy sigh of relief. "Phew. If I hadn't ditched at the last second, there's a good chance whatever was left of me would have ended up on the other side of the galaxy." Looking a tad bit frazzled after barely avoiding the planet reducing attack, the Empress then cracked a smile and fixed her gaze upon her foe, who didn't appear to be all that pleased at seeing her in one piece. "You almost had me there, big guy, but I'm afraid all you've managed to do is show me your hand."

Eye twitching, Gohan fisted his hands tightly before, with a grunt, he vanished from his spot in a flicker of movement. His sudden teleportation caused Sandra to recoil slightly, as she seemingly had no clue that her enemy had materialized directly behind her, with his right leg cocked back. However, when the demi-Saiyan struck, the girl ducked, thrusting her own leg back and attempting to nail her target in the chin, who managed to sway at the last second to avoid her deadly counter.

Panicking slightly when he felt the heat of her leg scorch his face, the golden haired warrior sprang away to a safe distance, at the same time avoiding her second kick.

"Okay. New strategy. In-and-out, hit and run attacks!" Gohan thought, before darting forward aggressively when he saw his opponent bring her leg back and load up for another. "Since I can't block or dodge her counters, I just have to outrun them!" He then threw a right roundhouse at his opponent, watching as she blocked it effortlessly with her left arm, before her jab came shooting out at him. Ducking the compact blow, the demi-Saiyan then dove in at her with an uppercut. "Great! Now I just have to-" THWACK! Just as his fist was coming up, his head was suddenly smacked to the side when Sandra retracted her jab and fired off a second left hook with the same arm, which knocked Gohan off course.

Sandra smirked, "Sorry, but that won't work either. That's another pawn."

"Fuck! Her homing jab! I forgot about that!" Gohan cursed as he pulled back, only to be met by a barrage of swift left punches. The girl's fist cut towards him at blazing speed, hitting him across the face from several different angles. The demi-Saiyan attempted to hold them off by bringing his arms up to protect his face, but while these stopped the ones from the front, it did nothing to stop the shots that came from the sides, which forced him to fly back to get some distance. "Alright! If attacking from below won't work, then I'll just hit her from above!" Bringing his hands down to reveal a slightly swollen face, the boy then vanished with a crack of wind and appeared above his opponent, swinging down at her with an axe kick. "Take this!"

While the teen's leg was descending towards Sandra like a falling meteor, the female Super Saiyan, composed as ever, slipped to the side and avoided it. As a look of disbelief slowly appeared across Gohan's face, he was unable to do anything when the female warrior, her right fist primed at her side and glowing, shot it upwards and nailed him in the stomach with a vicious right straight. Her Senko buried into his abdominals with devastating force, the shockwave from the blow punching a hole in the atmosphere above them and tearing away the blue veil to reveal the space behind it. With Gohan stunned by the liver blow, he was then nailed in the chest by a left knee, before he was then kicked across the face by a roundhouse kick, which sent blood flying into the air and bent his body sideways.

With her opponent stunned by her counterattack, the confident Sandra then struck an elegant fighting pose and brought her right fist to her side in a showboating manner. "Here are a couple of useful tips for you, stallion. Firstly: never over think your moves. If you think too much, you hesitate and stop, leaving yourself wide open for your opponent's assault. Secondly: the objective of a combination move is to finish your opponent completely, so that they won't get up again. In order to deal maximum damage, each separate attack must be delivered with intent to kill. LIKE THIS!" Sandra then lunged forward, her right fist shooting towards her stunned target at blazing speed. "DAI KONRAN!" (Havoc)

All of a sudden, Gohan saw a wall of fists flying towards him, a split second before his entire body was engulfed by a storm of punches. Sandra's knuckles drilled into him over and over again at a ridiculous rate, pummeling and distorting his body mercilessly. The attack was so vicious and so powerful that the entire sky above the earth shook from the salvo, and the continent was drowned out by the sound of continuous thunderclaps. The impact of the thousand punch string dominated the atmosphere in such a way that you couldn't even hear Gohan's grunts and cries of agony, as they were muffled by the sound of his muscles and bones being broken down into mush.

After several seconds of unending punishment, Sandra finished her combo by bringing her left foot back and nailing the boy with a side kick, which sent the teen plummeting to the Earth below. When he struck a mountain, it exploded with the force of a nuke, as rubble and debris rained down across the planet.

With her opponent felled, the female Super Saiyan withdrew her leg and struck another elegant pose, as if she'd just finished a ballet dance. She then said in a sing-song voice, "She shoots… she scores… and the crowd goes wild! This is so much fun." She then blinked in surprise when she saw the dust cloud disperse and spotted Gohan's body at the bottom of the crater. The fact that he was still in one piece was one thing, but the fact that he was once again on his feet and conscious, had Sandra pause in shock. "Oh. Still alive, huh?" A mischievous grin then reappeared on her face. "That's impressive. You actually managed to survive my lethal onslaught. Bravo."

Ignoring the ringing in his ears and the blood dribbling down his face from his nose, mouth and forehead, a thoroughly beaten Gohan with a half-torn gi top, took a deep breath and smirked. Since he had blood visible in his teeth and mouth, it made his gesture more aggressive then he intended. "As painful as it is, I appreciate the compliment." Without warning, he then thrust his right hand up and unleashed a powerful blue beam of energy surrounded by golden lightning, "FLASH MADAN!" The beam exploded from his palm and filled the sky, shooting towards Sandra like a missile.

Balking in shock at the speed of the attack, Sandra quickly ducked under it and avoided the blast, which shot past her and up into space. The moment she did evade however, the woman then saw a salvo of golden blasts flying up at her, which quickly pushed her into action.

Taking the initiative, Gohan began unleashing a continuous barrage of ki attacks at his adversary, whom he saw start ducking and weaving around them as she speedily flew towards him. The demi-warrior followed her with his senses, leading the girl with his hands and firing off attacks wherever he thought she would end up. However, despite his terrific speed and timing, every single blast he threw at the swift girl was effectively dodged and, in a matter of seconds, Sandra had managed to close the ten kilometer gap between them, all the while avoiding his high speed barrage.

When Gohan thrust his right hand up to fire one last laser bolt, Sandra was already inside his range, diving right under his arm and avoiding his blast. The demi-Saiyan saw her duck to his side in slow motion, a sight that confounded him at first, before he was suddenly nailed in the chin by a right uppercut. The attack smashed his head skywards, the female Saiyan managing to hit him with a running blow. As soon as he was hit, Sandra dashed right past him, turning around and smirking when she saw the teen stumble backwards.

"Now that is how you do a hit-and-run attack," the girl informed.

Gritting his teeth to shake off the damage from the razor sharp blow, Gohan spun around with his hands cupped. Aura blazing, he then took aim at his foe, "KA-ME-HA-" Before he could finish, he suddenly saw Sandra's face appear directly in front of him, her right hand had seizing his wrist. Her agility astonished the Z-fighter and kept him frozen in place.

"That technique won't work on me twice," Sandra said, before quickly twisting his wrist around and kicking his foot out from under him. Powering up, the girl then, with a mighty heave, tossed the boy into the air above her. The instant her opponent was airborne and suspended above the ground, the female warrior used her momentum to cock her leg back and charge it. Blue lightning shooting up and down her body, her entire foot lit up a bright gold, before she thrust it straight into her stunned foe. "This one is mine. RAIKO YARI!" (Lightning Spear)

Gohan let out a cry of agony when a golden blast suddenly shot out of his enemy's foot and slammed into his stomach, sending him rocketing into the sky and off of the planet. With his body flat up against the head of the attack, the teen felt every burn and sting from the blast on every fiber of his being for a full minute. By the time he'd reached satellite orbit of the Earth, he managed to roll out of the way and allow the attack to shoot off into space. Ignoring the smoke wafting off of his skin, the winded Gohan spun to face the planet, priming his hand as his senses worked on locating his enemy. He took a defensive stance just to be safe.

However, a ping on his radar had him look up in shock, as he suddenly sensed a presence directly behind him. When he spun around, he saw Sandra spinning down at him with a kick, which she connected with a deafening shockwave. Her foot sunk into his stomach, causing Gohan to lurch forward as he was effectively kicked back towards the planet.

"Sh-She can teleport, too?" Gohan thought in shock, at the same time spitting out blood. Throwing his arms out, the teen let off a burst of ki and stopped his fall short. "This changes things." Upon which he then let out a mighty bellow, thrust both his hands forward and unleashed two golden blasts at his attacker.

Sandra, reacting instantaneously, slapped one of the beams away and dodged the second, before taking off across the solar system in the form of a bolt. Gohan, powering up as well, rocketed after her, in which the pair began a deadly game of tag through the vacuum of the cosmos.

When Gohan attempted to hit his opponent again, Sandra caught his arm, nailed him across the face with an elbow, and then tossed him through the void. Spinning around as he flew, the hybrid then fired a couple of blasts at the Empress, only to see her dodge them effortlessly before lunging at him with a kick. He then attempted to kick back, only to receive a hook in the face when she faked the blow. The girl then attempted to follow up with another punch, but was unable to when Gohan suddenly ducked in and got her in a clinch. She reversed it however and, with both fighters gripping the other's shoulders, plummeted towards the surface of Mars.

The pair burned up on entry and collided with the endless red desert of the planet, with their impact being marked by an explosion of dust equivalent to several dozen thermonuclear bombs going off at once…

OOO

(Zangya & Maya)

Deep in the Mountain Ranges many miles North of Central City, a massive explosion of pink energy tore across the landscape, shredding the rocky edifices and sending dust and rubble into the air. When the blast settled, it revealed an entire row of peaks had been utterly obliterated and replaced by a crater, with embers and flames rising out of the center. The cause of this several kilometer wide explosion was of course the enormous Super Saiyan 2 Oozaru standing at the very edge of the trench.

With a mighty roar, Maya lurched forward and opened her mouth, unleashing another torrent of pink energy from her throat. Her blast shot over the ranges and into another mountain, which quickly went up in a dome-shaped explosion and incinerated everything within the blast radius. While the energy from the blast continued to rage, the giant golden ape suddenly saw a tiny figure come flying out of the explosion, trailing smoke.

With her green aura burning around her and a torrent of golden lightning shooting off of her body, Zangya charged straight towards her opponent with a yell. Fist cocked back, she thrust it forward, only to see her enormous target crank her right arm back and chop at her with a diagonal swing. The Hera reacted just in time to parry the blow, which struck her with a terrifying blast of force, and sent her spinning over the tops of the ranges. When she used a burst of ki to stop her flight, she then shifted forward and rocketed towards her enemy once again.

Maya, spotting her opponent's approach, growled and punched out at her with a right straight and a left hook. Her massive fists, which were more than capable of splitting a moon or leveling an entire city with a single blow, sliced out at the Hera at terrifying speed. However, through superb use of her speed and maneuverability, Zangya gracefully avoided her power shots, twirling around the woman's left hook and thrusting a kick at her face. With a yell, the red haired woman slammed a monstrous kick into the Oozaru's cheek, not only knocking blood flying out of Maya's mouth, but also sending the hulking ape careening across the mountains.

Crash landing into a mountain and flattening it with her massive hide, the golden giant snarled irritably and sat up. As soon as she did, she saw her opponent appear in the sky directly above her and bring her hands back. When green spheres of energy began to gather in Zangya's palms, Maya suddenly cracked a smile and, quietly grabbing a massive chunk of rubble lying next to her, chucked it straight up at the Hera like it were a rock.

"Think fast, bitch!"

"What the-" Zangya's eyes bugged out of her sockets when she saw the twenty ton boulder flying at her and quickly crossed her arms over to block. The object slammed into her at full speed and sent her flying over two sets of mountains, a cry of pain and shock echoing across the countryside, before the woman crash-landed on the icy peak of the tallest edifice in the region.

With the giant rock sitting on top of her in the small crater, Zangya quickly shoved it off and sat up, revealing her battered form and blood dripping down her forehead. The moment she leapt back to her feet, a shadow suddenly fell over her that had her look up. To her astonishment, she saw her massive opponent burst through the clouds thousands of feet above the region with an enormous rock the size of an island held above her head.

Upon appearing out of the veil, Maya gave an angry roar, "Planet Quaking Star!" She then chucked the enormous mountain of stone straight down at her grounded adversary, her throw causing a sonic boom to rattle the atmosphere as the rock broke the sound barrier.

The force of her throw was so great, that the entire rock began to burn up as it approached its target.

"Whoa, whoa… are you serious?" Zangya exclaimed, analyzing the attack and calculating the damage it could cause. If that rock should be allowed to hit the Earth, it would cause an impact wave powerful enough to split the entire continent in two.

Alarm bells going off inside her head, the Z-fighter took a defensive stance and watched the section of Earth descend upon her position. By the time it'd come close enough to literally blot out her entire view of the sky, the red haired fighter had already come up with a counter attack, as she had both her hands loaded and ready to go.

"Beauty Net!" With a shout, Zangya swiped her hands across the sky, producing dozens of thin, purple energy wires that formed a protective net above her. The net then expanded at great speed as it approached the enormous meteor dropping towards it. When the two attacks collided, the translucent energy-absorbing strings cut through the rock like bread, carving it up into perfect square segments that scattered and bombarded the Mountain Range around the Hera's position, limiting the damage it ultimately would've caused.

As the land shook from the multiple slabs of rock crashing down on it and the sky filled with fire and smoke, Zangya suddenly saw it all break away and her opponent come diving towards her. Right hand cocked back, Maya let out a loud yell and threw a punch down at her opponent. Responding in kind, Zangya fired back, the pair's fists meeting in the center and causing a gale of wind to rip outwards and splinter the surrounding land. With dust swirling around them, the two warriors began pushing against each other, with the enormous Super Oozaru pressing her full weight down onto her diminutive foe, who herself was also shoved back with equal force.

Maya barked out a laugh as their one-on-one grappling match continued. "Yes! That's it! That's the way! Give me all you've got! Show me more of your incredible power!"

Gritting her teeth as she saw her opponent leering down at her, the slightly burnt and battered Zangya cracked a grin, "Don't worry, friend… you haven't seen… anything yet. I've got way more… tricks up my sleeve!" She then grunted when she felt Maya push back, which prompted her to lean forward some more and keep the momentum going.

Her words drew another chuckle from the Super Oozaru. "Kai, your spirit is incredible. There aren't many women out there who can go toe-to-toe with the likes of me. Honestly… I think I'm starting to fall in love with you."

Raising an eyebrow, the Hera then scoffed, "Is that your way… of trying to weird me out?!" An idea coming to her head, the red haired Z-fighter then pushed forward before, without warning, leaping back with great speed. "Because it's not going to work!" Her maneuver caused Maya to stumble forward suddenly and her fist to become embedded in the mountain side. The moment she fell onto it, Zangya then mounted the woman's fist and began sprinting up her massive, fur-covered arm as fast as she could. "Running, running, running, running, running, running, aaaaaand…" As soon as she reached the woman's bicep, Zangya then jumped into the air, pulled her hand back, and thrust it forward, firing a red blast right into Maya's snout. "FACE!"

Her blast struck the giant ape pointblank, causing a flash and an explosion that drew a cry of pain from Maya and dropped the woman to the ground. The Super Oozaru crashed into the valley behind her, flattening an entire tor as well as several trees. However, when it seemed like Zangya had knocked her out, Maya's eyes suddenly snapped open and, turning towards the sky, opened her mouth and fired another powerful blast at her airborne target.

The sudden counter attack forced Zangya to dodge at the blast second, the beam grazing her left arm and scorching it. "Whoa! Hot!"

All of a sudden, Maya suddenly sprang off the floor and jumped at her falling adversary, snatching her out of the sky with her massive hand. As soon as she dropped back to the ground, the giant Oozaru then brought Zangya in front of her eyes and wrapped her other hand around her body, grinning all the while.

"Got you!" Maya exclaimed triumphantly.

Struggling against the massive fingers binding her, the Hera then shot a glare up at her opponent, whom she could see was grinning mischievously. After looking into the woman's eyes for several moments, Zangya suddenly had a bad feeling come over her and smiled back nervously. From what she sensed, she did not like where this was headed.

"Now… I know what you're thinking. Should I crush her? And the answer may surprise you."

Cackling humorously, the transformed woman brought her foe even closer to her. "Oh, I'll bet. Now… let's hear that little body of yours break." Licking her lips hungrily, she then proceeded to tighten her grip on her enemy, the sound of muscles popping and bones crunching filling the air. Zangya immediately began feeling the pressure build, the Hera gritting her teeth and groaning as the woman's enormous hands began to constrict around her like the coils of a python.

Pain beginning to slither in, the red haired warrior then started fighting back, squirming against the full-body grip and trying to find some form of leverage. Eventually, after some pained struggling, the Earthling managed to yank one of her arms out, placing it on top of the Oozaru's thumb and gasping for air. She then cried out in pain when Maya doubled the strength of her grip, showing that the giant ape was determined to defeat her opponent whatever the cost.

Giggling when she heard Zangya scream again and watched her writhe like a bird, the golden giant spoke, "Oh-ho… I'm really loving the sounds you're making, girl. You have a very cute voice."

Panting after a particular loud cry, Hera then glanced up at her enemy and smirked. "You're… ugh… saying weird… grrgh… stuff again."

Maya then shrugged, "Guilty. But hey, at least I'm being honest."

"Right," Zangya laughed weakly, before then holding out the arm she'd successfully managed to free and trying to concentrate. "Well… as fun as it would be to just sit here and have my bones turned into gravel, I'm afraid I'm going to have to cut out early." She then focused her energy into her palm, manipulating it in a way only she knew how. "I apologize in advance."
"Huh?"

Before the giant ape could respond, in a flash of light, Zangya conjured her race’s signature trigram sword and grabbed hold of the handle. As soon as the weapon had fully materialized, she pointed the tip of the blade at her opponent's hand and drove it straight into the flesh. Maya instantly let out a howl of pain and released her opponent, grabbing hold of her thumb while the Hera flew up into the sky and suspended herself above the land. Upon which the Z-fighter thrust her palm forward and fired off several golden blasts at the ape.

The bombardment from above covered the mountain ranges with multiple explosions of fire and smoke, with the region around the Super Oozaru caving in. The Hera soon ceased firing, allowing her a moment to breathe and to inspect the damage. However, just before the cloud of smoke could fully clear, Maya suddenly came springing out of the mass and rocketing up at her enemy, her golden aura blazing around her. With a snarl of rage, the transformed woman then began lashing out at Zangya in a furious attempt to catch her.

"Damn it! Fuck! Stop moving!" the golden ape roared, her hands snatching at the air while the Z-fighter danced around her arms.

Keeping her distance from the woman's limbs, Zangya chuckled. "Your speed in this form is pretty good. But thanks to your increased size and weight, I can easily avoid your huge swings."

Quickly getting frustrated at her inability to hit her foe, Maya spun around, showing her opponent her back. Zangya figured she'd managed to force her enemy to bail and moved to retaliate. All of a sudden, the red haired fighter was smacked out of the air by the woman's enormous tail, which came at her from a blind spot traveling much faster than any of her punches and kicks. The wind was literally knocked from the fighter's lungs as she plummeted from the sky, where she eventually impacted a hillside. Groaning and sitting up quickly, she then darted out of the way when her opponent dropped down from above and landed foot first, punching a massive hole into the ground where she'd previously been lying.

Stopping a safe distance away, Zangya jabbed the sword she was holding forward and produced several green energy balls that began to orbit around her person. As soon as they appeared, she launched them towards her massive foe, who lifted her arm just in time to deflect the barrage. Maya then swung her arm out and cleared the smoke, giving a hearty laugh of amusement before she powered up. However, unlike previous times where her form became surrounded by a golden aura, she was instead surrounded by a sheath of golden lightning, which began tearing up the landscape around her.

"Don't get cocky! When put in the right hands, overwhelming power can just as easily negate mind-blowing speed!" Her lightning sheath beginning to focus around her right hand, the female Saiyan started clenching up her fingers and bringing her entire arm to bear on her target. From the way she was struggling, it seemed like she was concentrating an enormous amount of power into her limb, a development that immediately alerted Zangya to danger. "I learned this strategy years ago while Sandra and I were under the direct command of General Nappa: our former instructor and commander!"

"Nappa?" Zangya murmured, "Wait a second. That name sounds familiar." Wasn't he that big, bald Saiyan that came to Earth with Vegeta and beat the living hell out of Gohan and her friends? She distinctly remembered the demi-Saiyan telling her about that battle… and it wasn't pretty.

Grinning excitedly, Maya then took aim by extending her middle and index fingers, before then craning her head to the side. "He taught us many things about Saiyan combat, stuff that allowed us to fight and survive in the harshest conditions imaginable. But I was the only one who took the time to learn his techniques!" After several more seconds of charging, she was ready, and the Super Oozaru showed this with one, massive outburst. "Let me show you one of them!" She then thrust her index and middle finger upwards. "BAKUHATSUHA!" (Exploding Wave)

In an instant, the gravity in the Mountain Ranges over a twenty mile radius inverted, lifting rubble, pebbles, stones and Zangya several meters into the air. The Hera gasped, instinctively crossing her arms over her face. A split second later, a blinding flash of light exploded off of Maya's body, before a powerful chain of explosions engulfed the entire region inside range of her technique, which then traveled outwards. Entire mountains ended up disintegrated in the blast in a matter of seconds, leaving nothing but a smoking crater in its wake…

OOO

(Paprika & Kure)

Knuckles clashed in an explosive collision between two super powered beings as the Super Makyan Paprika, her white hair fanning out behind her under a strong gust of wind, slammed a right cross into the one thrown by her opponent. Teeth bared in anger, the tall green woman with horns protruding from her hair, snarled when she saw her adversary glare back at her with a wide smirk in play. Despite the fact that both of them were pressing their full body weight into one another, the feline woman didn't seem affected by the clash in the least, as her tail was whipping around behind her in a casual and taunting manner.

Now that their fight had taken their lot all the way out into the grassy valleys outside of Central City where they could really cut loose, frustrations were running high for all defenders of the Earth, as their opponent was proving to be a bit more than they could handle. This was evident by how irritated Paprika was getting.

Eye twitching when she saw the alien woman's ears flutter in a cute manner, the Makyan had just about enough.

"Stop that!" Paprika barked, lunging forward with a left hook. However, when she saw her opponent duck under her blow and drop to all fours like a cat, the supplementary Z-fighter then attempted to swing at her with a downward right thrust, only to have the female in glasses kick her forward leg out and wrap her tail around her extending wrist. "Hey. What the-WAAAAAIIIIIIIIIIIIHHH!" The Makyan was then promptly thrown across the valley, where she eventually crashed into a distant barn and the construct exploded in a shower of wood and splinters.

Giggling as she remained on all fours, Kure's eyes then snapped upwards when she sensed someone else attacking, and saw Videl dropping down at her at full speed.

"BANZAI!" the crime fighter shouted, lunging in with a kick.

Reacting quickly, Kure sprang away in time to see the human warrior crash into the hill with catastrophic force, sending dust and debris everywhere. Within seconds, the raven haired fighter leapt out of the clouds and chased her opponent across the countryside, throwing combinations of punches and kicks after the diplomat. However, in spite of Videl's terrific speed, none of her blows were connecting, as the cat woman merely slipped and dodged every single one of them easily.

Smiling, the female then elbowed out at Videl, forcing the girl to drop to the floor, before the teenager sprang at her with a swift uppercut. The cat woman leaned away to avoid it, causing her adversary to overshoot and setting her up for a clean counter. Twirling on the spot, Kure then kicked out at the human Z-fighter, only to suddenly see the raven haired teen catch her leg and straddle it. As soon as she locked on, the raven haired fighter let out a yell and thrust an elbow down towards Kure's kneecap, intent on snapping or breaking her limb.

The feline expected the blow and quickly dropped her leg, causing Videl to miss. Before the crime fighter could even touch back down, Kure began unleashing a storm of punches at her, which cut towards the human like powerful blades. "Shit! She's fast!" Videl speedily retreated, ducking and dodging the attacks that went flying past her head from all directions, with the knuckles making a loud 'whooshing' sound every time they missed. After several close calls, the teenager then leapt away, figuring she'd avoided the last of them, only to balk when she saw Kure's left fist stop just short of her nose.

This was merely a feint, as the cat woman suddenly retracted her jab and struck Videl across the face with a powerful right straight. The impact caused a sonic boom that knocked the crime fighter flying across the valley, before the stricken girl hit the brakes and slammed her feet into the floor, grinding to a stop. When Videl looked up, she had blood dripping from her nose and the corner of her mouth, with a purple bruise forming on her left cheek.

"She got me." Gasping, Videl dropped to her knee, as the damage from the hit finally got to her. "Ugh. That blow affected my legs. I can't move."

Smirking, Kure then brought her right hand up and prepared to fire a blast to knock the girl out of the game, only to duck when Yamcha teleported behind her and kicked at her head. Responding swiftly, the woman spun around and punched at her attacker, only to see the human dart out of the way and spring at her from the side. The woman then proceeded to dodge and block all of the man's attacks, a casual smile in play while the human shouted and yelled with every blow. Eventually Yamcha ended his attack with a straight, which he slammed into her face.

At first he thought he'd actually managed to hit her, only to realize moments later that she'd brought her hand up at the last second to stop it. When he felt the cat woman pull his knuckles away, the warrior groaned childishly, "Come on. Are you even trying to fight us?"

Kure giggled and smiled sweetly at him, "Would it help?"

"N-No," Yamcha stammered awkwardly, not really comfortable being this close to her. "But at least try to make it look like you're struggling."

"If it'll make you feel any better, then sure, I can definitely try-"

"DUCK!"

Hearing a shout from behind prompted the scar-faced man to hit the deck. A split second later, Videl flew right over Yamcha's position, her right fist crackling with electricity and a blue aura burning around her, before she slammed an earthshaking haymaker straight into Kure's face. "Hawk Arrow!" The blow connected with a loud crack and knocked the woman off her feet, drawing a yelp of pain from her and sending the cat flying over the valley. Both human fighters then watched while her body bounced over the hills and collided with a distant tree, which snapped at the base and collapsed on top of her.

Assuming another fighting stance, a battered and bruised Videl threw a smile down at her fellow martial artist. "Thanks for distracting her."

Scratching his head, the scar-faced fighter smiled sheepishly, "That wasn't really my intention, but… you're welcome?"
Before the two of them could finish patting each other's backs, they failed to notice the tree Kure had landed in several hundred meters away burst into a shower of splinters and their opponent materialize right next to them. Using damn near untraceable speed, the feline woman spun at Videl with a kick, slamming into her guard and knocking the teen into Yamcha's back, sending both of them bouncing across the land. When they tumbled to a stop over a dozen yards away, the two warriors painfully sat up to see their adversary land from her elegantly executed move with a trickle of blood running down from the corner of her mouth.

Reaching up to rub it away, the female warrior smirked, "Nice one. Got any more like that?"

Seeing that she was only bruised had the two thoroughly beaten human fighters laugh nervously, before they both sprang to their feet and stood side-by-side. Both using completely different fighting poses to one another, they focused all their attention on their adversary while also beginning to whisper to one another.

"What do we do now? She's too strong to fight head-on and we can't just throw her down," Videl said, beads of sweat appearing on the side of her head. "We need to come up with some sort of strategy."

"Yeah. But what?" Yamcha asked, seeing their opponent set herself into a playful fighting form and begin swaying back and forth. "She doesn't fight like a normal person, nor does she move like one. Her reflexes are also top-notch, so coming at her with feints and sneak attacks are out of the question. The only way we'll be able to catch her off guard is to knock out her senses before going in for the kill."

After staring at the woman for several moments, Videl then realized something and narrowed her eyes on her opponent. Analyzing her movements for a moment, she then nudged the man in the side, "Hey. Why don't we try going for her tail?"

"Huh? Her tail?" Yamcha repeated.

"Yeah. I mean, Gohan told me that grabbing a Saiyan by the tail can cause them extreme pain and paralysis, robbing them of their strength and leaving them wide open for attack. Maybe grabbing her tail while she's not looking will do the same to her."

Processing the girl's words and taking in the woman standing several yards away, the baseball champion nodded in understanding. "That doesn't seem like a bad plan. But how do we know it'll work?" After all, she wasn't a Saiyan.

In fact, they didn't know what she was, aside from the fact that she had feline qualities.

"Do you have any better ideas?"

The man cringed at the anger in the teen's voice. "No. No. I don't. Let's go with yours." He then extended his right arm and grabbed his wrist with his left, upon which he started to concentrate her energy. "Do you think you can set me up so I can tag her?"

Videl smiled, "No problem." She then brought her index and middle finger up to her forehead, readying herself for their next move.

Watching the pair with interest, Kure tilted her head when she saw the pair of human fighters cease talking and take battle ready positions. Her initial thought was that they'd come up with some sort of strategy to flank her. However, she was caught a little bit by surprise when she suddenly saw the raven haired girl place her fingers to her forehead and, after gathering a significant amount of energy, brought her hand around and jabbed her digits in her direction.

"SPECIAL BEAM CANNON!" the girl roared while firing an orange spiral beam from her right, which shot towards Kure like a drill.

The speed of the attack forced Kure to react with all haste, leaping high into the sky to avoid the beam striking the spot where she'd been standing and detonating with terrifying force, filling the sky with a fiery explosion. The hybrid feline felt relieved at having avoided the attack, since it'd been way too fast to have been a conventional beam. However, before she could catch her breath, she then looked up in surprise when she sensed another spike in energy and saw Yamcha cocking back his hand, with a white ball of energy hovering above his index and middle fingers.

Twirling the pulsating energy sphere to gain momentum, the man then lunged forward with a roar, "SPIRIT BALL ATTACK!" The warrior then flung the attack at the woman, the ball flying towards her at an amazing speed.

Alarm bell going off, Kure quickly head slipped to the side, barely avoiding the sphere of ki as it shot past her. She then saw it fly into the distance, only to suddenly change directions and zip into her blind spot. "Whoa. What the-" She then attempted to follow it with her senses, so as to keep it in her sights.

Yamcha meanwhile, taking advantage of her surprise, then began guiding his attack with a series of swift hand movements, pointing his index and middle finger in various directions. This altered the trajectory of his fast moving attack, which began orbiting Kure's position and shooting past her at awkward angles. He eventually guided it downwards, before sharply changing its direction and causing the ball to shoot towards their foe. This came at Kure directly from below and, when the woman attempted to see where it was, ended up getting nailed in the chin.

What followed was an onslaught of continuous hits as Yamcha directed his attack at his opponent again and again, slamming into her body from all sides. The ball bounced off of her multiple times, before eventually soaring upwards and positioning itself in the sky several meters above its target. Then, with one more decisive yell, the man pointed his fingers downwards and slammed his attack into the back of Kure's head, knocking the woman out of the sky and towards the Earth.

"YES!" Videl shouted, punching a fist into the air in triumph.

Spinning as she fell, the woman let out a cry of shock while she approached the ground at breakneck speed. Just before she could hit, she suddenly flipped into an upright position and dropped to the floor with a super-hero-like landing, knee and fist in the ground and an intense expression on her face. "Wow. That was a good volley. His high-speed aerial barrage actually winded me a little." She then looked up with a glare. "That was a really well-coordinated attack. Hard to believe they were able to come up with that on the fly. A highly concentrated beam of negative energy with a corkscrew spin used to set me up for a telepathically guided ball of compressed positive force energy. Those are two very high level moves… not something an amateur would use. These guys have experience." When she spotted Videl standing in the same place she'd attacked from, Kure then recoiled a little. "Hey. What happened to the cute one?"

All of a sudden, the ground behind her burst upwards in a shower of rubble and, amidst the hail of debris, Yamcha sprang out of the dirt. A big grin plastered on his face, the man then lunged forward in an epic dive, catching the cat woman completely off guard.

In the blink of an eye, the man grabbed hold of the woman's tail and held it tightly. "GOT YAH!"

"KYAAAAAA!" came Kure's shriek, the female warrior's back stiffening and her hair bristling.
Almost immediately after Yamcha caught her, she reeled forward and dropped to her knee, a sight that put a triumphant expression on both humans' faces.

Feeling victory just seconds away, Videl then dashed forward and flew towards Kure as fast as she could, her right fist primed for a hit. "YES! Hold her still, Yamcha!" Her aura bursting up around her, the raven haired girl prepared for a final blow.

However, while the scar-faced man gripped the woman's tail with one hand, he suddenly became aware of a shivering sensation coming over her and looked at the ambassador from another world in surprise. Hearing the sounds of panting, Yamcha then watched as Kure turned to look at him. When she did, he saw that her cheeks were bright red and her lungs struggling to breathe.

Swallowing nervously, the woman with glasses whispered in a breathy and pleasure-filled voice, "P-Please don't grab my tail."

Face paling, Yamcha quickly released the feline's appendage, watching the woman drop to all fours, while being completely unaware of Videl swinging in with a punch. "GAAAAH! I-I-I'm very sorry!"

"YOU IDIOT! WHAT ARE YOU-" WHAM! The crime fighter was unable to finish as she ended up missing Kure's head by two feet and crashing into her scar-faced teammate at full speed. The two ended up rolling across the valley for several yards, where they eventually tumbled to a stop on the other side at the bottom of a hill, where they wound up sprawled out and covered in dirt.

Pulling her face out of the grass, Videl then threw her partner a glare, "Dude… are you fucking kidding me?"

The former mercenary, looking slightly shaken from the events, stammered meekly. "I'm sorry. I wasn't thinking straight."

Having witnessed the collision first hand, a surprised Kure stared across at them with wide eyes and an uncomfortable expression. "Are you guys okay?"

Growling as she pushed herself up, the teenage crime fighter glared back at the cat woman. "We're fine! Don't worry about us!"

"Oh, good," Kure murmured, bringing her hand up and nibbling on the tip of her finger, at the same time her ears drooped in embarrassment. "It's just… your attack really caught me by surprise back there. I never expected one of you to grab my tail the way you did." She then shuffled on the spot anxiously, obviously still reeling from the affects of their assault. "You see, unlike the Saiyans, who experience intense pain and paralysis whenever their appendages are grabbed, my people instead experience extreme waves of pleasure whenever the fur and muscles in the tail are stimulated. It's a very indecent act, grabbing each other's rears in public, which is why we only practice such rituals in private."

Videl recoiled at this news, "Augh! Too much information!" When she saw the woman look away shyly, the crime fighter then shouted at her. "AND STOP MAKING THAT FACE! IT'S WEIRD!"

All of a sudden, the barn a whole field across from them suddenly went up in a fiery blast. Splinters and slabs of wood flying in all directions, the air quickly cleared to reveal a very ticked off Paprika marching out of the works, with hay covering her uniform and her hair all a mess. When she saw the cat woman sitting in the middle of the valley with the two Z-fighters staring back at her, the Makyan dusted her arm and craned her head, her expression becoming even more beastly in appearance.
"I've had enough of this shit." The moment she said this, the provisional Z-fighter became surrounded by a menacing red aura, which engulfed her entire body in a field of fire and electricity. With a loud yell, the demon girl's power level skyrocketed, alerting the trio to her presence and drawing their gazes over to her. They managed to look just in time to see Paprika's muscles bulk up, her height increase, and her entire body shape begin to change. Along with her increase in size, the green girl's horns grew and curled, transforming into ram horns that gave her a more demonic appearance, with her nails also extending and sharpening. The moment her transformation came full circle, Paprika gave one last howl of rage and her red aura blasted off of her in an inferno.

Once her scream petered out, Videl and Yamcha could be seen gaping at their newly powered-up teammate.

They had no idea the girl had had a second form beyond her first one. Of course, from what they could gather, this wouldn't be classified as a second transformation state, as it was more of a bulked up version of her first form. For comparison's sakes, this was how much Paprika changed. While in her base form the teen was exactly the same height and build as Videl, her Super Makyan form increased her size to about Piccolo's range, with muscles befitting her drastic height, weight and power shift. This alteration alone was intimidating enough.

This new Super Makyan form she'd taken increased her height by at least half a person, making her the same height as Super Android 13, and made her appear even more terrifying, as her horns had grown quite a lot and her aura had taken on red lightning.

As she stood in the middle of the field surrounded by her bio-field, Paprika then spoke in a deeper voice, "Enough playing around, bitch. You've held back long enough. Let's see what you can really do."

Kure, sensing her opponent's drastic increase in power, took on a more serious expression and stood up. "Very well. If a real battle is what you wish, then I'll be more than happy to oblige!"

Reaching up and removing her glasses, she quickly pocketed them. As soon as she did, she then spread her legs, dropped into a horse-riding stance, and set her hands at her sides. Once she'd assumed the position, a pure white mist of an aura began pouring out of her body like smoke, surrounding her and shielding her. The fog then transformed into a white inferno, spiking up the woman's hair as her expression became more feral, eyes sharpening, fangs and jagged whiskers appearing, and claws extending from her fingertips. Once her body had finished transforming, she then got onto all fours and grinned across at her opponent. "All restraints have been unlocked. Now I'll show you the full power of my race! Beast Mode!"

Yamcha and Videl quivered, as they could almost taste the amount of power now radiating off of both warriors.

Once she saw her cat-like opponent take on her most powerful form, Paprika shifted her weight forward and, in a blast of wind, charged at the woman at full speed. The demon girl literally tore across the valley in an instant, appearing directly in front of Kure and swinging down at her with a wild haymaker. The impact caused an explosion equivalent to a small meteor colliding with the countryside, sending dust and rubble into the sky...

OOO

(Vegeta & Cal)

As for the Saiyan Prince, he was having a party on his own side of the continent. After forcefully dragging his foe away from Central City, the pair had decided to hold up inside a thick, redwood forest, where the ground was flat and the trees were immense. However, this didn't stop massive explosions and shockwaves from ripping the land asunder, as both Vegeta and Cal squared off in a battle for dominance, trying to find out who the best warrior out of the two of them was.

But it wasn't going to be easy. That much was clear. While their fight had started off relatively clean, it had now boiled down to a good old slugfest, one where both fighters were now caving in each other's faces and ribcages with blows that could crush planets.

Receiving a hit square in the guard, Vegeta was sent skidding back along the forest floor till his spine slammed into the trunk of a massive tree. Growling, he then looked up at his foe, who he saw lunge forward with his eyes burning a hot red. Knowing what was coming next, the short man braced himself before he was hit squarely in the chest by the warrior's eye beams, which pushed him through the tree behind him and through the forest at backbreaking speed. An entire line of redwoods was felled thanks to that attack.

After crashing through half of the forest, the battered prince, with great effort, sprang back onto his feet and flew in a wide arc around the area. Ducking and dodging trees, the man powered up with a crack of thunder and sharply changed directions, tearing through a dozen trees before tackling his opponent in the side. His blow sent Cal busting through another row of forest, which toppled over like dominoes. When the dust and splinters lifted, the man in the black spandex was back on his feet and glaring heatedly at his Ascended Saiyan opponent, who was panting from their scuffle.

Bleeding from the forehead and sporting a multitude of other wounds, Vegeta held up his hand and waved Cal over, who was also bleeding from various wounds and bearing an orange skin texture.
This indicated that he was still in a powered-up state and was scrapping with everything he had.

"Come on, chump. What else have you got?"

Taking a deep breath, the humanoid alien then took a new brawling stance and focused his energy into his arms. When his limbs ignited, the Saiyan Prince then watched in surprise as ki began to gather around them, before they suddenly took shape. A split second later, Cal could soon be seen holding a circular, Spartan-like shield in his left arm and a square hammer in his right, his energy solidifying into glowing red weapons of war.

The sight of the tools had Vegeta frown distastefully. "Oh, that's just cheating."

Grinning, the gladiator of a warrior then let out a yell and darted forward, swinging at the Super Saiyan with his hammer. The flame-haired man had a split second to dive out of the way before the man's weapon cut through the tree behind him and slammed into the Earth. What followed soon afterwards was an explosion equivalent to a nuclear bomb going off, which sent a pillar of dust and rubble shooting into the atmosphere as yet another enormous crater was punched into the continent.

When Vegeta landed several yards behind the man, the prince threw his hand forward and shouted, "BIG BANG ATTACK!" A golden sphere of energy then shot from his palm and towards the warrior like a missile. Just when it seemed like it was going to hit, the fighter in black spandex spun around and effortlessly slapped the ball of energy away with his shield, sending it over the horizon where it struck a distant mountain and exploded harmlessly. The sight of the man's defensive play actually had Vegeta start to sweat. "Okay. Not bad. I'm actually quite impressed."

Spinning his energy hammer in his hand, the hulking fighter then threw his adversary a smile.
"Now... it's my turn." Frowning, Cal then lunged forward with a yell, swinging at his target with his newly formed tool of destruction.

OOO
Blood dribbling down his chin and onto the ground in front of him, a thoroughly beaten and winded Gohan, his left eye black, his face covered in welts, and half of his orange gi top gone, set his battle-damaged body into a wide stance and cupped his hands at his sides. Ignoring the throbbing pain in his head as well as the fact that his knees were about to give way, the demi-Saiyan powered up, his golden aura bursting up around him while energy quickly began gathering between his hands. With his female opponent standing squarely in his sights on the other side of the great red desert in front of him, this was his moment to strike.

Lightning shot off of his body and scorched the sand into glass around him as a familiar chant filled the air. "KA-ME-HA-ME-HAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAA!"

His scream was instantly followed by a terrifying howl as Gohan thrust his hand forward and let loose a torrent of fiery blue energy. His ki exploded from his palms and filled the sky in front of him, the beam swallowing up a good chunk of the ground as it rocketed towards its target like a comet, which tore across the surface of the planet and could clearly be seen from orbit.

Sandra meanwhile, despite seeing the brilliant glow of the attack charging towards her, wasn't swayed in the least. Sporting only a few bruises and scratches from her fight, the Empress merely clenched her fists and, with electricity coursing up and down her body, cocked her right fist back. As soon as she did, her entire arm lit up a hot gold, as she then focused all of her energy into a single point.

"Useless. Consecutive Senkos!" the female Super Saiyan 3 shouted, before suddenly thrusting her fist forward in a perfect right cross. While at first it seemed like Sandra had only thrown a single punch, while her attack was being thrown forward, her fist unexpectedly multiplied into several golden arms, all of which impacted Gohan's energy blast.

The result was biblical, as a terrifying shockwave caused by Sandra's consecutive power punches ripped right into the Kamehameha Wave and split it down the center. Seeing it firsthand had Gohan's eyes widen in horror.

"NO WAY!"

His beam split into several and was effectively deflected as the invisible blast from his opponent traveled down his, before slamming into him head-on. The force of several dozen super powered punches ended up knocking Gohan off his feet and causing the force of his own attack to rebound, effectively splitting the ground around him and causing several mountains behind him to explode into a shower of rubble. His body meanwhile, tumbling through the gale of his opponent's counter attack, eventually crashed back into the desert and rolled for about a kilometer.

Gohan managed to slow his momentum and use it to leap back to his feet. However, when he tried to stand, he then collapsed forward, gasping for air as his vision went out of focus.

With his muscles twitching and burning with pain, the teen spent the next minute trying to recover. During which time Sandra, flying over from her spot in the desert, landed several yards in front of her foe. Her shadow fell over the downed half-Saiyan like a cloud, letting him know that she was there and ready to pick up where they left off.

However, after looking her opponent over, she knew right away what the score was.

"Third time's the charm, I guess. Unfortunately, in your case, your third time backfired horribly."
After staring down at her foe for several seconds longer and seeing him glare up at her exhaustedly, a frown quickly appeared on her face. "Wait? Is that it?"

Gohan, hearing her question loud and clear, stiffened on the spot, his eyes glued upon the rugged lines of her face.

"Hmph. Honestly… I'm a little bit disappointed…"

OOO

(Grand Kai's Planet)

By this point in the battle, all confidence that the audience in the Otherworld had for Gohan securing a clean victory had been all but wiped clean from the board. The moment King Kai's group saw the demi-Saiyan drop to his knees and his opponent come to stand over him, they knew right away that he was in trouble.

Looking at the teen's condition from his seat and analyzing his status through his extra-sensory capabilities, the blue-skinned guardian of the North and overseer of that region of space bit his teeth together nervously. "This is not good."

Seeing the situation for herself, Baba frowned, "It certainly isn't."

Olibu, standing beside Pikkon with an equally worried expression in play, also lowered his head in dread. "The kid is on his last legs."

"If he keeps this pace up, he's going to die on his feet," Pikkon commented, having kept an accurate count of all the shots to the head Gohan had taken. Seeing him now, gasping for breath on a deserted red planet against an adversary who could clock his every move down to the last nano-second, there was no doubt in his mind that the teen had reached the end of his ropes.

The West Kai, having kept quiet for most of the session, nodded in agreement. "I definitely have to give the kid points for determination. No questions there. But let's face it; his opponent is just too fast and too skilled for him to beat on his own. I think this is the end." The man then looked across at his colleague seated on the fold-out chair next to him. "He should quit before he gets hurt."

At that, King Kai nodded in agreement. "I'm afraid it's over, guys."

"No!"

All eyes quickly snapped to the front, where they saw Goku leaning forward in his seat and staring at the screen intently. At first the man had been perfectly content just lying back with his feet kicked up and watching a pretty thrilling series of battles unfold on the box in front of him. However, about halfway through their viewing time, the Saiyan had quickly begun to notice how one-sided the battle was becoming, and had opted to paying even closer attention to his son's bout. This led to him glaring at the television screen, with a fearful and frustrated look reflected in his gaze.

Hands clenching tightly in front of him, Goku tapped his foot against the grass anxiously, all the while throwing in whatever support for Gohan that he could muster. "My son will never give up. He'll find a way to beat this girl… he has to!"

"Goku, look at him!" King Kai suddenly shouted, pointing at the screen and towards the demi-Saiyan's battered and exhausted face. "Even though they are exactly the same strength, his opponent is picking him apart piece by piece! I've never seen your boy take so much damage before! If he keeps this up and doesn't back down, then she's going to beat him to death!"

"Yes… but-"

"But nothing, Goku!" the blue-skinned trainer yelled, his expression becoming one of firm and unyielding authority. "This girl is too much for him. Any more blows to the head and his brain is going to shut down… and the next thing you know he's going to be knocking on King Yemma's door and asking for the first ticket here. If he doesn't stop in the next few minutes, then I want you to contact him and tell him to stand down. No excuses!"

His pride and faith in his son's strength grappling with his need to save his boy's life, Goku gritted his teeth and balled his fists even tighter. He actually clenched his fingers so hard that his nails drew blood from the skin on his palms. As he watched his son tremble and gasp for air on the television, all the while trying to regain his sense of balance through a drunken and agonizing haze, the father desperately attempted to think of some kind of strategy to beat this female Saiyan.

But try as he might, no matter how he attempted to swing it, he just couldn't.

"What can he do? What can Gohan do?" Goku thought, drawing on all of his past experiences and battles for a solution. "I… I don't know. I don't know. I don't know. He's used every strategy, technique, plan and attack he could come up with, and it's still not enough! He's already given this girl everything he's got. If he tries even one more plan and gets shot down… then… I don't think he'll be able to stand up again." In simple terms, he wouldn't just be beaten… he would be killed.

It was as clear as day. In all their years of fighting and battling evil monsters, this was probably the first opponent that neither he nor his son would be able to defeat.

OOO

(Back on Mars)

When Sandra saw Gohan struggle to get back to his feet, his body shaking like a leaf as he attempted to divert all remaining power to his legs, the girl raised an eyebrow in surprise. "Oh? You want more?" Receiving no response from the hybrid but a snarl and a grunt as he desperately slammed his fist into his leg to wake it up, the female Saiyan smirked. "I've seen through every one of your attacks so far and cut you down more times than you can count. None of your attacks are even landing on me anymore. Face it. It's over! Why don't you just give it up before you do something that you're going to regret?"

His teeth biting together so hard that you could literally hear them grinding, Gohan then gave a loud yell and shakily began to rise, "Not… yeeeeeet!" The moment he finally managed to stand up, the teen then dropped back to his hands and knees, gasping for air as bolts of pain shot through his system.

Though the girl found his courage commendable, all she could do was continue to try and dissuade the demi-Saiyan into continuing this fruitless battle. "You can barely stand. How do you expect to put up any sort of fight in this condition? Or perhaps you have some kind of death wish I don't know about." When she noticed the boy continue to tremble from head to toe, Sandra then craned her head curiously. "Though your heart is telling you to go on, your body is telling you something else altogether. After all the hits it's taken and all the damage it's received, deep down in your subconscious, your soul is telling you you're about to break… and it's scared. Right now it's doing everything in its power to keep you down." Her smile conveyed nothing but her victory. "I think you should listen to it."
Gohan, amidst all his pain and fatigue, glared up at the woman. When he saw her cool green eyes glaring back at him, full of confidence, the teen felt his body shudder even more. "Oh no. This isn't good." His fingers digging through the hard, red earth beneath him, the Z-fighter then clenched his eyes shut. "My body won't stop shaking." When his arms and legs once again refused to move, the boy then curled forward even more. "D-Damn IIIIIIT!"

Breathing out a sigh, the female Saiyan then slid into her Kai Mui stance and brought her right hand back to form a fist. "You gave me one hell of a fight, stallion… the best one I've had in a long time. But I think I should put an end to this once and for all…"

Rearing his head back, a determined Gohan then did the only thing he knew would keep him from passing out.

"Shaking…" He then thrust his head straight into the rock beneath him, "STOP!" His forehead's impact with Mars's surface caused a comical 'thunk' to ring out, something that had Sandra recoil in surprise.

Even the audience watching the fight from Otherworld was baffled by the way Gohan shut down his anxiety attack, as indicated by how they were now gaping at the television screen.

A few seconds later, Gohan looked up with red bruise on his forehead, swirlly eyes and a stupid smile on his face, at the same time he could see stars dancing around him. Being in Super Saiyan 3, the expression he made was even more hysterical. "Uheh-heh-heh-heh-heh… there… shaking's gone," he replied in a goofy tone of voice characteristic of his family, "All better." He then collapsed onto his rear, still grinning like an idiot.

Blinking at the teen's unusual display, Sandra then snickered before breaking out into a fit of laughter. She then placed a hand against her head in disbelief and worked on steadying her breathing. "Man, you are one weird Saiyan, you know that?" Upon which she then looked up at the slightly dazed man with an admiring gaze. "As funny as that was to see, this doesn't change the fact that you're at the end of your ropes."

Mentally snapping out of it, Gohan then went back to glaring up at his opponent, who he could now see was preparing for a final bout. "Damn it. She's right. Even though I've still got juice to spare, I still haven't figured out a way to beat her. What the hell am I going to do?" A damage report quickly gave him an idea of his current position. "I've taken quite a beating, but it's nothing I can't stand up from. I just have to avoid taking more head shots. Increasing my power isn't an option, I'm almost tapped out… and using a booster at this stage will only burn out whatever stamina I have left trying to force my way through her defenses. There has to be a better way."

Gohan then began powering over both of their status levels as quickly as he could, all in an attempt to figure out some kind of weak point. "Her strength and power are exactly the same as mine, and her speed and reflexes are a little more refined. The only things I have going for me are my reach, accuracy, creativity and durability, but she counters all of these by having greater technique, footwork and hand speed. What's more she's able to perfectly predict and counter my every move by reading my rhythm and fighting style, so every attack I try, no matter how fast or powerful it is, is pointle-" It was then, right in the middle of his breakdown, the demi-Saiyan was struck by a sudden wave of inspiration. It occurred to him the moment he thought, "Wait a second… rhythm… my rhythm? My fighting style? My attacks?"

THAT'S IT!

Realization hitting him like a ton of bricks, a devilish smirk slowly spread across his lips. It was a change in his expression that Sandra immediately took notice of.
"So you can perfectly predict all of the moves and attacks I can throw at you, huh?" Throwing the woman this question gave him time to get back to his feet, as he then went about performing his final preparations. Sure, it was going to take all of his concentration and imagination, but he was positive he could make it work. After all, he was a stubborn son-of-a-bitch. "Alright then… if any attack that I try is pointless… then that leaves one option…” He then steadied himself, swaying from side to side when his world did a little bit of a spin. Upon securing his footing and taking a deep breath to settle his nerves, Gohan clenched his fists courageously and steeled his resolve. "Let's see how you handle it…” His eyes then shot up, locking squarely upon his opponent's face, "WHEN THE ATTACKS COME FROM SOMEBODY ELSE!"

Sandra squinted in confusion, "Huh?"

All of a sudden, Gohan's expression altered.

Eyes taking on a sharper and more aggressive tone, the boy quickly slid into a wide stance and brought his hands into open-palmed positions. Upon which he began striking the air in front of him at great speed, his arms waving about in circular and swiping motions. Giving a loud 'ha' in an uncharacteristically high pitched tone of voice every time he struck out, he then switched the positions of his feet and, assuming a much narrower stance, brought his arms about and arched them over into cobra-like positions, with his left being held out the furthest. "Ya-ya-ya-haaaa-HA!" He then shot his foe a firm and unwavering glare, one with a more prominent frown and even more prominent eyelashes than normal. "Are you ready? It's time to teach you a lesson!"

Sandra was baffled, leaning back ever so slightly in a worried manner. "UUuuuuuuuh… what are you doing?"

OOO

(Grand Kai's Planet)

On the sacred training grounds of Otherworld, the audience standing around the television was completely and utterly bewildered.

As relieved as they were to finally see their comrade's son back on his feet and ready for another round, in spite of their best efforts, the small group of fighters and trainers had still been unable to come up with some form of positive solution to fixing their current problem, which was a way of defeating the girl standing in front of the hybrid. However, the moment they saw the boy get up and reset his fighting position, every single one of them became stumped by what they saw him do next.

For some reason, the boy had abandoned his previous fighting form for another one altogether and was now going through some impromptu warm-up routine that involved a lot of high pitched shouts and fancy handwork. At first they thought he was just trying to get some feeling back into his arms and legs after the amount of nerve trauma he'd sustained. But when they heard his voice come through and heard the words that he spoke, they knew immediately that this was something else.

Pikkon, seeing the shift in tone instantly, then appeared just as taken aback as the female Saiyan on screen. "Hold on… Gohan's body movements have changed completely. What's he up to?"

"Beats me," Olibu commented.

Baba, still sitting on her orb, also tilted her head. "Strange. I've never seen young Gohan act like that before. Is he hallucinating or something?"
However, amidst the whispering, questioning and gaping of the audience, Goku, in the spur of the moment, had suddenly gotten out of his chair and moved directly in front of the screen. While the others sitting behind him craned their heads around to try and watch the television being blocked by their star player, the Saiyan father ignored them completely in favor of watching his son's performance. There was a great reason for his astonishment too.

It was perplexing. Though it'd been a long time since they'd last sparred with one another, the father hadn't seen martial arts strikes like that since-

Goku's eyes shimmered in disbelief as a smile slowly spread across his lips. "Those movements… and that pose… that's the Turtle School's Snake-Style Palm Fist! That's Chi-Chi's fighting style!"

No. It wasn't the fact that Gohan was using his mother's fighting style that was surprising; it was the fact that his movements resembled Chi-Chi's exactly!

What was he planning?

(TO BE CONTINUED)

Author's Note: Ooh, things are getting good. Sorry it's taking so long, but I've been busy with work. But I always write in my free time. So far the Gohan and Sandra fight is turning out to be my favorite, since it isn't just a mindless slugfest like the Super Saiyan 2 Goku and Vegeta battle, or any of the Buu battles. Here Gohan has to fight smarter and figure out how he can beat an opponent more skilled then him.

So what strategy does he come up with here?

Piccolo is also taking a different approach to his battle. This time there is no fighting involved, at least for him. Wonder what will happen next.

Once again, not afraid to admit this, a couple more TFS and DBZ Multiverse references, for all those who are big enough fans of the series to spot them.

Anyhow, now that we've reached this leg of the journey, let's take a look at Sandra's profile. She's my favorite character I've written so far and she's giving me a lot of joy to write in this next coming chapter. To go along with her complex character, I've also come up with a list of her abilities, which you can find below:

XXX

Sandra's Fighting Style and Techniques: Unlike other Saiyans (and other fighters in general), Sandra doesn't just rely on power to win her battles, but rather the use of refined skills and strategies to overwhelm her opponents. In comparison to most Saiyans like Goku, Vegeta and Nappa, who prefer using brawling and aggressive styles of fighting, Sandra instead uses a more technical form of combat that enables her to exercise her abilities to their full potential.

A master of positioning, Sandra fights primarily with an out boxer's mindset, utilizing her great speed and power to cut down opponents with well-timed, razor sharp blows and counters. This makes her an unorthodox fighter of sorts, enabling her to pick apart and dismantle an enemy's fighting style through use of her own, while also exploiting their weaknesses. Many have often referred to her core style as an anti-fighter fighting style, making her an incredibly difficult person to deal with since she actively avoids her enemy's blows, while simultaneously putting herself into positions that allow her to execute attacks that have a low-risk and high-reward. Though she is no stranger to brawling, she prefers using her superior timing and ability to control the battlefield to defeat her foes.

One of the most interesting traits that define Sandra's methods is that she prefers using coordinated, close-range melee attacks over excessive long-range energy blasts. Doing so means she doesn't waste energy pouring all of it into big moves that have a small chance of hitting her targets. Instead, she chooses to focus it into her limbs and body parts. This allows her to maximize the effectiveness of her attacks by focusing all of her power into her fists or feet, allowing her to deal incredible damage to her opponents up close, with a higher percent chance of landing attacks as opposed to missing. This, coupled with her remarkable observational skills and reflexes, makes her a close-quarter specialist and the best hand-to-hand combatant the Z-fighters have ever encountered.

The only weakness to this particular approach is that Sandra has to get in close to her opponents to inflict damage on them, meaning she has to dodge and risk taking a lot of attacks thrown at long range. She will often use energy blasts to hit her opponents during a heated engagement, but only out of reflex or as a means to create an opening. Furthermore, she only has a couple of big energy attacks in her arsenal to fall back on if a fight ever boiled down to a beam struggle. However, despite the risks, thanks to Sandra's speed and reflexes, she has little issues bringing a fight into her range.

Kai Mui – Also referred to as Sandra's main fighting style, it is a martial arts form that the Saiyan Empress picked up while visiting one of the many planets in her quadrant. Very similar to earth's Muay Thai style both technically and physically, this martial arts utilizes all eight weapons of the body: fists, elbows, knees, and legs.

Unlike most fighting styles the Z-fighters practice, which are predominantly Kung Fu based and almost exclusively has all the practitioners standing side-on and narrow to their opponents in wide stances, this fighting style has Sandra facing her opponent completely, her body turned square to them, and feet positioned shoulder-width apart with her dominant side forward, allowing her to use all parts of her body effectively to attack and defend at a moment's notice. Because she's standing facing her opponent as opposed to standing side-on, she is able to minimize the rotation of her punches and kicks, cutting down on the time she needs to pivot while also improving her balance and her positioning capabilities. Due to her more upright and unorthodox stance, she is able to see everything her opponent is doing and respond to their attacks accordingly.

This martial arts form suits her preferred battle style well, which involves analyzing and countering her opponents with swift, precise punches and kicks. It also gives her good balance and, on top of her natural durability as a Saiyan, can also be used for effective brawling. The clinching style allows her to position her body so as to utilize her opponent's weight and movements against them. Instead of wasting energy in a battle of strength, any disadvantage she picks up during a grappling match she exploits by sharply reversing her enemy's weight, off-setting her own, and tossing them with relative ease.

The positioning of her stance also provides her an incredibly effective defense. Thanks to the fact that both of her arms are suspended in front of her body, it makes it difficult for opponents using more flamboyant fighting styles to land any clean hits, as her arms and elbows are in the way. Any punches and kicks thrown at her are swiftly shot down by her limbs, while also putting her in the perfect position to counter.

Sandra spent years learning this style and endured months of disciplined training. However, while this is indeed her favored fighting style, there is another form that she reverts to when put under extreme pressure.
'Yaju' – Sandra says that she has "bad habits", which she forcefully seals away during non-life threatening battles; they are essentially a tendency to want to brawl. "Yaju", which is translated as 'Wild Beast' in Kure's native language, is a byproduct of Sandra suppressing her bloodthirsty and animalistic tendencies of her Saiyan nature in favor of a calmer, more controlled approach to fighting, which allows her to execute and perform counters so perfectly. She disciplined herself for years attempting to master her Kai Mui form without the use of her brutal Saiyan instincts. The result of this training however created an emotional state within her that is often triggered when she's overcome by pain, anger, rage or extreme excitement, which occurs whenever she's pushed to her limits.

According to Kure and Maya, whenever 'Yaju' takes over, Sandra's offense is greatly increased, but her defense is lowered considerably, making her vulnerable to attacks. She also loses a great sense of her main fighting style, meaning she loses technique in favor of throwing power punches and big swings. Many would consider this state a sort of Berserk Mode, where Maya claimed that Sandra was pretty much unstoppable.

One of the key characteristics of this state is that whenever Sandra receives damage, she fights back even harder and becomes more aggressive. It's an aspect that often ends in the enemy being decimated by Sandra's attacks and the Saiyan receiving a great deal of damage in kind, due to the relentless nature of her state. Sandra also develops a very masochistic personality, in which the more pain she suffers, the more turned on and excited she gets, increasing the physical power of her blows.

Moon Drop – A technique used by Sandra and Maya, it is the two Saiyans learned to store Blutz Wave energy inside their bodies, and use it to provide them sudden bursts of power. Acting as a sort of booster and a "last resort", this ability allows them to tap into the power granted by the Oozaru transformation, but without actually having to transform into the Great Ape itself. In this manner, they are able to increase their strength and durability several times over, without compromising the speed, skills, techniques and abilities granted to them in their base forms.

Sandra claims that they learned this fighting technique after meditating underneath the ten moons of Corvus for the past two to three years.

Kyokusen – The Kyokusen or 'Curve Shot' is an unpredictable jab used by Sandra. What makes it different from conventional punches is that, unlike with most martial arts, the arm isn't retracted completely or brought down to the waist or chest. It stops halfway and then abruptly flies back at the opponent. Arm, elbow and wrist rotation is applied so that the punch changes trajectory in mid-flight, transforming it into either a hook or an uppercut. Depending on how they are bent, multiple punches can be thrown in the same combination: either a straight followed by a hook, a jab followed by an uppercut, or a hook followed by a jab, and so on. The speed of which the different punches can be stringed together can be quite staggering.

The way this punch is thrown gives the impression that Sandra's jab is 'following' or tracking its target. When an opponent attempts to dodge her punch or get around it, the punch suddenly changes direction and nails them while they're in motion. This makes the punch next to impossible to avoid. Due to the manner Sandra throws it also means that it has much greater reach than what her opponent can expect, as a lot of the punches are thrown in a flicking motion. Through a combination of shoulder rotation and deft footwork; she can hit her target even when they're standing several feet away from her.

The main weakness to this punch is that it lacks penetration power, meaning an opponent can force their way through to get in close, albeit by taking a few hits. However, this merely sets them up for a very nasty surprise, which Sandra has waiting behind with her right hand.
Senko – Also known as 'Flash', it is an attack used exclusively by Sandra, usually to counter, and is considered to be her Sunday punch. By focusing a substantial amount of energy into her fist, which causes her arm to glow a hot gold, Sandra is able to launch a power shot with speed that is almost impossible to track, even by a Super Saiyan. She usually attacks with it in unison with a lightning fast combination of punches, particularly her Kyokusen, luring her opponent in with a barrage of jabs, before striking them with an explosive left or right blow from a sharp angle. The degree of strength that is used in the blow depends on how long she has to charge it, which can range from a very nasty power punch to a devastating, planet-splitting blow.

When using her Senko in the form of a short-motion uppercut, a blow which is thrown with no motion in the body except the arm, she effectively transforms her punch into an effective counter that kills rush attacks. It's a very effective blow to use against brawling, swarming, close-range, and aggressive type fighters.

Consecutive Senkos – This attack is a variation of her original 'Senko'. By throwing multiple power punches at an untraceable speed, Sandra is able to produce a shockwave with enough force to rip apart a full power blast capable of laying waste to an entire Solar System. Sandra demonstrated this by tearing right through Gohan's Kamehameha Wave, with the remaining shockwave nailing him through the beam.

Dai Konran – Translated as 'Havoc', this technique is a rush attack used primarily by Sandra. This takes the form of a high-speed combination of rapid fire jabs and straights, variations of which can be thrown by the same hand. The resulting effect makes the attack appear like birdshot pellets flying in all at once in a deadly barrage, with next to no space in between punches, coming in at various angles. What's more, each individual attack that Sandra throws in this combo is thrown with intent to kill, meaning each punch is thrown with lethal power.

Raiko Yari– Translated as 'Lightning Spear', by focusing her energy into her kick, Sandra launches a high-powered and explosive energy blast from her leg, with enough force to disintegrate a planet.

Hyakuretsu Yari – Translated as 'Hundred Leg Spears' is a combination attack used by Sandra. Since her legs are the most powerful limbs on her body, even more so by Saiyan standards, Sandra is able to utilize them with relative ease, grace and agility. Almost impossible to completely evade, Sandra launches multiple kicks similar to her Dai Konran, nailing her opponent repeatedly with lethal blows that possess a ridiculous amount of hit damage. Using them in conjunction with her Senko, she can pick apart a person and tear them to shreds.
For a full minute Sandra stood in silence, watching as her opponent held his position several feet away from her, while at the same time trying to make sense of what he was now doing. Even with all her years of experience training across dozens of civilizations and fighting on over a hundred different planets, this was admittedly the first time she'd encountered something as unusual as this.

At the start of their battle, things had gone completely how Sandra had expected. The two of them opened up with big, obvious moves and wild attacks to gauge one another’s abilities, chipping away at the edges of their adversary's guards to see what they were hiding underneath. Once the female warrior managed to get a bead on her opponent's rhythm, she then proceeded to pick apart his attacks one after the other, conserving energy while at the same time using well-timed, compact moves against the demi-Saiyan until she was able to predict her opponent's patterns perfectly.

By the time she'd gotten an accurate bead on Gohan's habits, Sandra had already landed so many head shots against him that he was practically color blind. It eventually got to the point that she could so perfectly guess what he was going to do next that she was able to hit him with both eyes closed and one hand tied behind her back. This eventually led to the two of them standing on the surface of the big red planet orbiting the Solar System, facing each other down with one of them close to passing out.

Sandra was all set to finish her adversary off, not wanting to kill what she believed to be a valuable asset and companion in her future Saiyan Empire. However, just as she was about to knock the boy out and take him back to his world, he suddenly bounced back with a renewed surge of energy and was now squaring off against her with the most bizarre performance she'd ever seen in her entire life.

Shifting from left to right in a wide and narrow stance, the Super Saiyan 3 hybrid was smirking broadly with his hands positioned in a manner Sandra hadn't seen him use before. His fingers were curled and his palms were open in very snake-like gestures, which presented a rather unusual form of guard. Hell, even the positioning of his feet were odd in contrast to his previous stance, where he was shifting weight to his less dominant side. Nevertheless, Gohan was now giving the impression that he was much lighter on his feet this time, instead of being grounded to the floor.

All clues pointed to the fact that he'd changed to a different fighting style. However, while this did explain his change in hand and feet arrangements, it didn't explain why his expression had become sharper or why the pitch in his voice had gotten much higher. It was almost like he was imitating someone… most likely a female.

In the background behind her half-Saiyan adversary, Sandra swore she could see the silhouette of a middle-aged woman with black hair tied into a bun and wearing a yellow oriental martial arts dress. The sensation was completely trippy.
"What's the matter, girl? Feeling less confident all of a sudden?" Gohan suddenly asked in an uncharacteristically snooty, harpy-like voice, which had the female Super Saiyan look at him strangely. The hybrid then smirked and switched his hand positions again, this time leaving his index and middle fingers pointing, while the rest of them curled over. "Hmph. Tell you what; if you don't want to continue this fight, then I'll gladly take a step back and let you give up."

Confounded by the teen's offering of surrender and overwhelming confidence, the self-proclaimed empress scoffed before smirking widely. "Is that supposed to be some kind of joke, because if it is, it's a pretty weak one? I found your head banging performance a couple minutes earlier to be far more entertaining."

"Are those your last words? Very well," Gohan responded, still speaking in a higher pitch as his expression once again became more serious and... assertive? "Have it your way!"

Chuckling, Sandra then raised her left fist and clenched it tightly. "I don't know what kind of half-baked scheme you're cooking up in that head of yours, but it'll prove just as useless as the others." She then aimed down her knuckles towards her foe standing squarely in her crosshairs. "No one has ever defended themselves against my hundred percent accurate, light-speed punches." Her eyes twinkled with excitement when she saw her victory just moments away. "Face it. Just a few more hits and you're-" Sandra's eyes then widened in horror when the next thing she saw in front of her was Gohan, ":THE FUCK?!"

"HI-YAH!" the demi-Saiyan yelled, his right leg spinning around and clocking the woman in the side, which she barely blocked with her left arm, but still ended up taking the brunt of the damage.

The blow connecting with the force of a train, Sandra was knocked stumbling to the side with an alarmed look on her face. "I-Impossible!" She then freaked out when a left palm strike followed immediately afterwards, forcing her to evade awkwardly while the boy's hand grazed her face. The attack was so fast and strong that it left a burn mark on her cheek, upon which she hurriedly backed away, just in time to avoid an upward palm strike. When Sandra looked back at Gohan, her eyes reflected confusion and disbelief. "Am I reading him wrong? What's going on? I can't predict his attacks!"

OOO

(Grand Kai's Planet)

Standing in the background alongside his master, Pikkon's eyes widened when he saw the demi-Saiyan on the television screen attack. "That's odd. Gohan's regular movements have changed completely."

"Really?" the grasshopper Gregory chirped while looking back at the green fighter. "They look the same to me."

After analyzing the demi-Saiyan's opening blows and noticing the flustered look that came over Sandra's face, the once worried North Kai then perked up in realization. His glasses flashed and antenna twitched to convey his surprise. "Oh, I see what's going on."

Goku meanwhile, sitting directly beside the magic box to its left, grinned widely when he saw the confident expression on his son's face. "He copied her exactly. Gohan looks just like Chi-Chi."

OOO

(Back on Mars)
It was almost uncanny. His expression, his hand positions, his feet, his movement, his rhythm…
they all belonged to the daughter of the Ox King. The proof was all in the practitioner, as the demi-Saiyan fixed his best Chi-Chi-like glare upon his opponent and grinned in a manner only his mother would on her most competitive day.

"That sniveling look on your face tells me that you're not trying hard enough. Come on, girl! Get those fists up!" Gohan exclaimed with a terrifying, high-pitched snarl, giving the impression that he was really baring his fangs. In actuality however, he was just imitating his mother during one of her recent training sessions with Goten. As harsh as it'd been, it was giving him some really cool ideas. "Let it be known that Chi-Chi of the Ox Kingdom doesn't give a damn about leniency! If you think I'm going to let you off with a warning, you're sadly mistaken!"

"Huh? What? I…? Huh?" Sandra babbled, unable to comprehend the tone coming out of Gohan's mouth. She shook her head to try and clear it, all the while ignoring to scorch mark on her cheek.

Forming a grin, the fully pumped up Gohan whispered. "I may not come close to mum's level, but I've learned a few things from her." The teen then dashed forward, approaching Sandra in a blur before lashing out at her with a rotating palm strike. "Heart Fang Slicer! Ha! Ya-ya-ya-ya-YA!"
The moment he did, he began opening up on the female Saiyan with a series of wild finger and palm shots, all of which came flying right for her head in a storm.

Sandra, barely deflecting the first couple of attacks, then began dodging erratically as the demi-Saiyan lashed out at her with a flurry of blows. She was so preoccupied dodging his palm strikes that she didn't notice him spin around and slam his knee into the thigh of her forward leg. Losing balance momentarily, the girl quickly leant away, only to receive a swift palm strike in the stomach followed by her chin, which knocked her head skywards. When she stumbled backwards, the female Super Saiyan quickly threw up her guard.

"Shit! Where the hell did this come from?!" Sandra thought, beginning a hasty retreat when Gohan came spinning at her a second time with an onslaught of low kicks and chopping strikes at her head. Blocking an elbow and neck shot, the female warrior clenched her jaw. "Alright! Calm down, Sandra! Even though the speed and intensity of his blows have increased, as long as he doesn't do anything too fancy, I can still take hi-" THWACK! Receiving a palm slap to the face then forced her into a hasty retreat, where she quickly leapt into the sky. When Sandra suspended herself several stories above Mars, she suddenly saw her opponent leap into the air as well and, after suspending himself above her, suddenly plummeted towards her spinning like a wheel.

"No escape! Spinning Cobra Kick!"

Panicking, Sandra brought her arms up high, just in time to block the blow that sent her dropping back down to the planet. When she crashed down on one knee, she then sprang out of the way, dodging the boy when he dropped down at her with a second kick. She wasn't able to get very far when the hybrid sprinted after her shadow like a wild dog.

"Persistent prick. He's not giving me any time to recover." Sandra thought, blocking another series of palm strikes before frowning. "Okay. Focus! I just need to read his rhythm and set up my Senko to finish him off. That'll put an end to this." The woman then began backing down, dodging and parrying the teen's blows. The attacks came flying at her from all angles, slicing and chopping at her vital spots, forcing her to adjust her dodging techniques to accommodate for the difference.
After several more seconds of blocking, Sandra was once again ducking and weaving between palm strikes with textbook efficiency. "One… two… three-four… five. One… two… three!" She then saw Gohan stop and smirked. "That's it! I've got the rhythm now!" Bringing her arms up, the Super Saiyan 3 female then primed her right hand, causing lightning to run up and down her body.
"So you switched to an open palm style, huh? Well, you almost got me there, but it's not quite going to be enough! Senko!" Her right punch then flew forward at a near untraceable speed.

Gohan, seemingly leaning towards the oncoming blow, saw it approaching him in slow motion. When it appeared he was going to take it, the teen's expression suddenly shifted; the lines on his face becoming more aggravated, the canines in his teeth more prominent, and large veins appearing to pulsate on his forehead.

In the blink of an eye, it happened!

All of a sudden, Sandra's fist was knocked off course when the demi-Saiyan's arm rotated upwards in a clockwise direction and parried the attack. When the shockwave from the punch misfiring occurred, Gohan then let out an animalistic growl and countered with a right claw strike, which corkscrewed towards his female opponent and caused her eyes to widen in shock. Sandra barely managed to slip around his attack, before her eyes followed the punch back to its owner.

"No way! He blocked it?!!" the girl shouted, before she suddenly saw Gohan step in close and drive a second claw strike directly into her stomach. He then followed-through with the blow in an upward direction, yelling out at the top of his lungs while his opponent was blasted off her feet.

"MAKEN SHO!" (Demon Blow)

Flying backwards with a cry of pain, Sandra hit the floor before back-flipping onto her feet. Landing firmly, she then directed a startled look towards her foe. "I was sure I had him! How did he manage to deflect my Senko?" It was then she noticed her opponent had taken on a completely different stance from before.

His legs set into a horse riding position, the demi-Saiyan could be seen standing square to his enemy. With both his left and right hands formed into claws, making it appear as though his nails had grown longer, the teen was also glaring across at his adversary with a far more aggressive expression in play. This drew attention to the fact that the details on his face had also become a lot more menacing, with a demonic grin pulled across his lips and his pupils dilated. It was entirely different from the sharper, more feminine appearance he'd taken on before, which told Sandra that her opponent had once again changed his tone and persona.

"You're a lot stronger than I gave you credit for. But that's nothing compared to me," Gohan spoke, this time in a deeper and rougher sounding voice. It quickly became apparent to all those who were watching from Otherworld which of his friends he was now mimicking. "It's time for Piccolo to show you how it's done!" He then gave an evil laugh at the end for extra measure…

OOO

(Meanwhile)

(Corvus)

While he was in the middle of moving one of the stone pieces on his side of the board, Piccolo, in the midst of a rather complex and daring plan of attack, suddenly experienced the uncontrollable urge to sneeze, and did so in the form of a loud outburst and a violent shudder.

The Namekian's unexpected shout had his foreign counterpart Gast sitting quietly on the other side of the table look at the warrior from Earth in bewilderment. Seeing the man wipe his nose on the back of his hand drew a blink from the elderly fighter, "Are you alright?"
"I'm fine," Piccolo sniffed, though his expression reflected a mild sense of confusion. After pondering on the unusual sensation and reaction, the former guardian then looked over his shoulder in annoyance. "I think... someone is making fun of me."

Staring blankly at his opponent for a moment, the Namekian in the yellow shawl and tunic smiled. "Such is the way of the universe, huh?"

"Yeah. I guess so," the hero from Earth responded. Choosing to ignore his strange encounter, the fighter decided to carry on with his game, placing his stone piece in the triangle diagonal from his counterpart's army of stones. "Mafe." Crossing his arms, Piccolo then leant back and looked at his adversary sternly. "Your move."

"Ah. I see what you're doing. Well done," Gast chuckled, before then picking up one of the pieces on the right hand side and pushing it forward. "Dole." He then placed his hands on his knees and beamed warmly at his opponent, whom he saw break out into a bit of a sweat. "Now it's your turn to defend."

Tapping his finger impatiently when he saw Gast force him into a pincer move, Piccolo frowned deeply, "Grr..."

OOO

(Back on Mars)

At this point, Sandra was beyond confused. "What the hell is a Piccolo?" Seriously, what the hell kind of game was this guy playing?

"Why don't you get a taste of my Wild Demon Fist!" Thrusting his hand forward, Gohan unleashed a golden blast straight at his opponent. The female Saiyan sprang over it and dashed forward, intent on intercepting the boy before he tried anything else. She unloaded a left cross, which the demi-Saiyan blocked with his forearm, before she then threw a roundhouse kick at his open side. However, just before her blow could land, the hybrid's eyes unexpectedly widened and the female Super Saiyan 3 was hit head-on by a concussive shockwave that knocked her to the ground.

Bouncing off of the floor, Sandra sprang to her feet and looked up, only to suddenly get clocked in the face by an elbow when her opponent caught her off guard with a dash. Gritting her teeth from the shot, the woman spun back and attempted to nail the boy with right hook, only to have him catch her wrist and nail her in the stomach with a body crunching knee, which caused the woman to spit up in shock. As soon as she crumpled forward, Gohan then turned into her, gripped her arm over his shoulder and tossed her across the desert.

When Sandra hit the ground face-first, she flipped back to her feet. Landing gracefully, the female Saiyan spun around and charged at her foe, yelling out in frustration. "Enough!" She then lashed out at him with punches, watching him head slip the first two before bringing his arms up and beginning to parry and redirect them. After uncorking a kick into his body that Gohan blocked with his knee, causing her to hop painfully from her shin's impact, Sandra then unleashed a rapid barrage of straights, which struck the teen's guard repeatedly. When she attempted to slip an uppercut in through the gap, Gohan suddenly caught it with his clawed hand and, after yanking her arm down, lunged forward with a mighty roar.

"YAAAAAAARGH!" He then struck her across the face with a killer right hook, knocking blood flying from her lips. The woman stumbled away in shock.
Before Sandra could recover, the demi-Saiyan speedily crouched down and sprang forward at an alarming speed. The empress barely had enough time to throw up her guard to block the flying kick that drove into her limbs, knocking her backwards under the force. During which time Gohan smirked in a very Piccolo-like manner.
"You may be able to predict all my moves, but you don't know anything about my friends!" He then suddenly twisted in the air and drove a left kick straight under Sandra's guard and right into her chest. The attack struck with the force of a bomb blast and sent the female Saiyan flying back at breakneck speed, a cry of pain leaving her lips from the vicious blow. When he saw her crash and slide across the desert for a hundred meters, the Super Saiyan 3 from Earth touched down and took a stance. "Every battle I've fought, every conflict I've resolved, and every lesson I've learned… I will show them all to you!" His expression then switched instantly to a new one, his eyes becoming round and his nose… disappearing? That's what it looked like when he then fired off several punches before suddenly settling into a Mantis stance, fingers bent and thumbs pressed against them. When he spoke, his voice became squeaky and higher in pitch, "Now let me introduce the new master of the Turtle School, the fearless and incredibly handsome Krillin and his Northern Praying Mantis style!"
Sandra, blood trickling from the corner of her mouth and body covered in more bruises than before, picked herself up and snarled. "Don't get clever with me you-" All of a sudden, she saw her opponent, who was standing half a kilometer away, vanish, a split second before his form fazed into view a few yards in front of her. Preparing a counter, she then fired off a right straight, but mistimed it when Gohan suddenly zipped forward at a lower height than she was expecting and nailed her with a left seiken, which had her reel forward in shock. "He changed his rhythm again!"
In the blink of an eye, Sandra was suddenly bombarded from all directions by punches and kicks as Gohan began darting around her. Seemingly acting like he was three feet shorter than his normal height, he laid into the female Saiyan with lightning fast attacks, shouting with every blow he landed. "Da-da-da-da-da-da-da-da-da-da-da!" was the string of yells that left the noseless Saiyan's lips as he laid into the girl's ribs with repeated body shots, before finishing off with a jumping right uppercut that nailed Sandra's head skywards and sent her back flipping through the air.
A cry of agony left the female Saiyan's lips, until she righted herself and crashed back down to the floor. Dropping down onto one knee, the woman panted to catch her breath. Upon which she then gave a harsh chuckle and looked up with a more enthusiastic look. "Interesting… VERY interesting, Gohan!" She then wiped the blood dribbling down her chin and huffed, "I didn't think I would find you this entertaining!" Rising up clumsily, the female Super Saiyan quickly steadied her legs and powered up, causing her aura to explode around her with a flash of blue lightning.
Upon attaining a heightened state of readiness, Sandra then suddenly dropped into a horse riding stance and cocked both fists at her sides. "You're a tough and tricky son of a bitch, I'll give you that. But if you think putting on different faces and acting like an idiot is going to work on me, then think again!" Lightning shooting off of her body, she then rushed forward with a mighty bellow, right fist primed and ready.
Gohan, watching his opponent approaching with a serious glare, then raised both hands over his head protectively. He looked all set to take her head on. However, struck with a sudden wave of inspiration, the boy's expression once again changed.
Just when Sandra was lunging out at him with a roar, the teen suddenly dropped into a crouching stance, pushing his right leg back, holding his left hand up and loading his right. His sudden drop was accompanied by a manly grunt, as his face developed a look of overwhelming confidence and manliness, with a twinkle in the corner of his eye. Making a low thrumming sound, like an orchestra building up to an epic high note, the hybrid Saiyan waited for his opponent to get close, before diving in as well, seemingly intent on meeting his foe head-to-head.


"Eat knuckle, you varmint!" A gung-ho roar left Gohan's lips as his right fist shot forward. "HERCULE PUUUUU-Gaaouh!" The Saiyan's epic attack suddenly transformed into a moment of pure comedy when his foot inadvertently, or deliberately, wound up catching on a rock hidden in the sand in front of him and his body was sent stumbling forward. His trip allowed him to barely dodge Sandra's punch and, much to the girl's utter shock, head butt her right in the solar plexus.

Gohan's slip, topped with the power built up from his punch and general momentum, transformed into an accidental counter that hit Sandra with the force of a buffalo. As such, the Saiyan Empress literally ended up having the air knocked out of her lungs, her body lifted off the floor, and her eyes bugging out of their sockets from the unexpected blow to the spot directly below her sternum. When the shockwave rang out, the girl choked up blood before she was sent stumbling backwards across the sand, clutching her gut.

Knees shaking, a stream of drool wound up falling from the girl's gaping mouth as pain gripped every inch of her body, almost bringing her to the point of collapse. Gasping, Sandra attempted to glare at her opponent, only to see three of him standing awkwardly in front of her, as her vision had become quite blurry, "You… I… cough I don't… understand. You were… right in front of me…" She choked in a strained voice.

He did it again! He changed his attack pattern!

Recovering from his "embarrassing slipup" like he knew the original owner of that technique would in a similar situation, grinning and rubbing his head like a buffoon, Gohan took yet another stand and lunged forward. "DYNAMITE KICK!" Before Sandra could comprehend the full degree of her fuck-up, the demi-Saiyan nailed her with an explosive heel to the chin, which struck with a thunderclap and sent the stunned woman rocketing into the sky.

The moment he'd sent his opponent flying, Gohan, clearing his throat, placed his fists on his hips, reared his head back and laughed in an uncharacteristically obnoxious manner. For some reason, to match his new change in persona, grinning and rubbing his head like a buffoon, Gohan had become bushy, almost afro in appearance, and his face looked like it'd grown an illusionary beard and mustache. There was only one person in the world that could fit that description. "Ha-ha-ha! You fell for it! Now let's see how you fair against the World Champ's fighting style! The Super, Ultra Secret, Satan Fist™."

Dropping to the ground and assuming a sprinter's stance, the teen suddenly sprang after his foe at a ridiculous speed.

"Tee-Em?" Sandra muttered under her breath, wondering what the hell that could mean. However, realizing she was getting lost in thought, the dazed girl recovered quickly and sprung back into an upright position. "Enough of this bullshit!" Her leg igniting gold, the girl swiftly raised her foot and prepared to fire a blast. When Gohan materialized in front of her, the Empress let him have it. "TAKE THIS!" She then yelled and launched a sidekick at him, firing a golden blast from her sole. Much to the female Saiyan's astonishment, before her blast could even leave the bottom of her boot, Gohan threw himself forward, mounted her leg with his hands, and flipped over her, causing her blast to misfire and shoot across the planet. Sandra looked completely alarmed when her foe performed his surprisingly acrobatic move. "What?" Before she knew it, Gohan suddenly had his arms wrapped around her stomach and was flipping them upside down.

"Mr. Satan doesn't give away his techniques; he provides a license for use." The hybrid then cracked a cheeky grin. "Try this on for size! Hercule Suplex!

ORAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAA!" the demi-Saiyan bellowed as he dive-bombed towards Mars's surface with the speed of a comet in freefall and his opponent trapped in his muscular grip.

Seeing what was happening but unable to do anything, Sandra screamed in terror, her eyes wide as saucers and mouth agape. A second later, both Gohan and his adversary collided with the planet's surface, the former driving the girl into the floor headfirst. Their impact caused an explosion similar to an atomic bomb going off, literally splitting the planet down the center and sending a cloud of dust and rubble straight into Mars's atmosphere.

They damn near cut the entire world in half.

OOO

(Grand Kai's Planet)

Sweat drops appeared on a majority of the audience's faces, as King Kai and the others gaped stupidly at the screen. When they saw the cloud of dust eventually begin to fade, the warriors of the dead snapped out of it in their own respective manners, with Olibu being the first.

"Well… that was… unorthodox," the big blonde man in the tunic remarked, shaking his head and folding his arms. "Still, I've got to give the kid points for creativity. Even if it was a little bit unusual, that was still one hell of a move." Dropping his opponent into the surface of the planet? There was no way you couldn't pull that off and not look stylish. It was freakin' badass.

"Yeah. But let's not forget that he tripped over his own two feet just to set himself up for that suplex," Pikkon added, glancing across at his fellow martial artist with a distasteful look in play. "Did he do that deliberately… or was it by accident?"

"I think it was on purpose," Olibu answered with a shrug.

This response had the green warrior shake his head. "Seriously. Who in the world did Gohan have to impersonate to perform such a maneuver?"

"Apparently somebody who calls himself 'The Champ'," Olibu replied, an amused smile tugging at his lips as he then thought back on the name. "A man would have to be pretty strong and pretty renowned to earn himself that kind of title…"

"Yeah. Or a complete and utter bonehead," North Kai continued, watching the television with his hands and fingers interlocked in front of him. Honestly, out of all the fighters Gohan chose to imitate, it had to be that man. Granted it did allow him to catch his opponent completely by surprise, it was still a rather clumsy move… something that Gohan wouldn't normally use in that situation.

After a quick analysis of the situation, Olibu then looked over at the West Quadrant's champion and gave his fellow warrior an odd look. "There's something I don't quite yet understand. If Gohan already knew all of these fighting styles and techniques, why was he being beaten so easily before? Hasn't he already been using all of those movements as part of his regular fighting style?"

"It's because he didn't just change his style," the voice of the West Kai spoke up, drawing the group's attention down to the short man in the monocle. As soon as their eyes landed on him, they saw the purple guardian smile knowingly, "He changed his rhythm… his persona. Young Gohan did exactly what needed to be done. He noticed that his own patterns were being read, so he remodeled his movements after the people he's fought beside and trained with everyday, adopting not only their techniques, but also their mannerisms and habits. That's why his opponent was caught unawares and is now in a state of panic." Looking up at the warriors next to him, the West
Kai grinned. "Do you see now?"

Realization clicking in his head, Pikkon then looked towards the television with a smirk of his own. "That's pretty smart."

"Well… thinking outside of the box has always been Gohan's strong suit," a floating Baba remarked, keeping her hands folded and her eyes on the magic box. At that, her gaze quickly fell upon the back of the full-blooded Saiyan standing beside it. "It kind of reminds me of somebody else from our group who is a master of the unpredictable."

Her amused comment, clearly directed towards him, drew a sheepish laugh from Goku. "Sometimes the most difficult lessons we learn are the ones we never forget."

And believe it or not, Gohan had experienced the hardest and most trying lessons a person in his position can possibly imagine. His past battles and accomplishments were proof of that.

OOO

(Back on Mars)

When the dust settled in the crater formed in Mars's surface, a pair of smooth and incredibly attractive legs could be seen jutting out of the ground, with Gohan standing just a few yards away from them, hands on his hips and an obnoxious, Hercule-like grin in play. After watching the legs twitch for several seconds, he then saw them drop to the floor before the person they were attached to yanked their upper body out of the floor. With a gasp and a shout, Sandra's dusty form appeared from the ground, where she then remained on her hands and knees, coughing, spluttering, and regaining her bearings.

By the time she'd caught her breath, the female Super Saiyan 3's eyes snapped up, where she quickly spotted her foe grinning widely at her.

"Your technique is sublime and your fighting sense is astonishing. But even though you can perfectly predict your opponent's moves right down to the last millisecond, there's a massive blind spot in your routine that any fighter sharp enough can exploit," Gohan informed, before tapping the side of his head. "I noticed it just before you started using your Muay Thai style. The moment you memorize your opponent's rhythm, the fight is pretty much over for them and the battle becomes completely one-sided. However, it takes a certain amount of time for you to perfectly analyze a person's fighting patterns and match them to your own, which means any counters you try during the process end up messy. Since you're so focused on fighting based on numbers and using your perfect trace, you become flustered when an opponent does something you don't expect them to do and you have to recalculate. You panic, you lose focus… and that leaves you wide open."

There was no doubt in Gohan's mind that Sandra was, by far, the most skilled and technical fighter he'd ever had the pleasure of coming across. While Set had definitely been the most powerful, the goddess only relied on one fighting style throughout their battle and never once changed her approach against him, which emphasized brute strength and overwhelming telekinetic force over refined counters and tactics. Considering she was a deity of a single genre and was unanimously regarded as the strongest force in the universe, it made sense that she wouldn't give two shits about technique, approach, or any other forms of martial arts practiced by other civilizations, since she was so used to breezing through every single opponent who came her way and could shrug off blows that would normally be fatal to most.

Sandra was of a different breed to the goddess and, because the Empress's main strength lay in her sense of timing and fighting technique, the weaknesses she had were much different from an opponent who relied primarily on power.

Hearing the teen's comments drew a growl from the battered girl, who powered up and sprinted at him in a fury. "Damn you!" Sandra practically screamed, opening up on him with a series of punches aimed for his head. When Gohan began dodging them, backing out of the crater at the same time, the Saiyan's impatience only increased and her attacks came in at a faster rate. "Damn you! Damn you! Damn you! Damn you!" After throwing a kick that was timely avoided, she then pulled back her right fist and took aim from a karate-like stance. "This is ridiculous! Why don't you pick a style and stick with it?" She then grinned menacingly as she then lunged forward. "Or are you just a damn copycat after all?!

The moment he saw his foe fire off another Senko in his direction, Gohan's expression changed. His eyes sharpening and his face becoming serious, the boy swiftly blocked the girl's shot, curved his arm around hers while it was still in motion, and performed a swift throw. "Hmph. Sheer ignorance." Sandra let out a yelp as her body was picked up off of the floor and tossed through the air, where she ended up crashing into a hill several yards away. When she leapt to her feet and turned her attention back to her foe, she suddenly saw him assume a wide stance with his hands outstretched. At the same time, she swore she saw a third eye hovering over the center of his forehead. "You'll never defeat me with such shallow thinking. All fighters know that to study martial arts, one must always begin with the art of imitation." With his palms open and arms outstretched, the demi-Saiyan grinned in a manner similar to one of his group's senior members. "Now, it's time for you to taste Tienshinhan's White Crane Style!"

Shaking her arm out after another failed attack, Sandra shook her head before rushing forward. "I'll break it down like the rest!" She then opened up with a series of swift punches and kicks.

The instant she started attacking however, Gohan began a series of fancy blocks and parries, his arms swinging around and redirecting all of the woman's blows. When she advanced, he backed off, using wide and graceful footwork to reposition himself and shift his adversary's weight around. After effectively checking a kick and deflecting a right chop, the demi-Saiyan then thrust his left fist up at his foe's chin, only for her to block it. Upon which his right fist came around and clocked her across the head, before then slipping both hands down and performing a double palm strike into her ribs. The attack knocked Sandra back and stunned her, allowing Gohan to duck in, grab the back of her ankle with his hand, and toss the woman.

Sandra flipped through the air before crashing face down into the floor with a yelp of pain. Glaring up, the Super Saiyan 3 quickly performed a break-dancing spin, kicking out at her opponent and forcing him to leap away. When she jumped back into a proper stance, she quickly powered up again and darted forward.

"I've got your rhythm!" Sandra shouted, catching her opponent seemingly off guard as she unleashed a roundhouse kick at his head.

Gohan blinked, spotting his opponent's attack coming right at him. "She's sped up her pattern reading, huh? If that's the case, I just need to change it up even faster." Cracking a smile, the hybrid then thought of another person closest to him and quickly switched over to their pattern. Expression changing, he suddenly darted forward and drove an elbow across Sandra's face, nailing her in the cheek and sending her flying. When he landed, Gohan then performed a very graceful swirl, before striking an elegant pose with his hand on his hip and the other running through his long hair. When he saw his opponent look at him in bewilderment, he then stuck his nose in the air and grinned in a feminine manner. "It's time for Zangya to take the stage. Come at me, girl."

Still appearing irritated, especially at the boy's incredibly flamboyant display, Sandra huffed and vanished with a crack of wind. Performing an instant teleport, the woman suddenly materialized out of her dimension directly behind her opponent, coming at him with a chopping strike. Through quick reflexes, Gohan detected the girl's appearance and spun out of the way, avoiding her opening strike and the ones to follow. The teen then began an uncharacteristically graceful aerial dance, allowing him to dodge and avoid all of the attacks his foe was now chasing after him with.

Swaying around a punch, the demi-Saiyan darted in and nailed his opponent with a swift kick straight into her stomach, "Vicious Combo!" All of a sudden, attacks began raining down on Sandra from all sides, starting with a swift cross to her face and then a knee to the stomach, which lifted her higher into the sky. Upon which Gohan elbowed the woman in the back and kicked her towards the horizon. When he saw her recover and vanish into super speed, he quickly gave chase.

The duo darted across Mars at incredible speeds, their forms appearing as nothing but a pair golden blurs spiraling around one another. After a lengthy scuffle that saw them pretty much cover the planet's entire terrain, the duo then reappeared in the sky high above the planet, their legs slamming into each other through two simultaneous kicks. With Gohan effortlessly holding his knee in place, he watched Sandra growl before throwing a swift left jab his way.

Knowing that a curve shot was to follow, the demi-Saiyan quickly took action, performing a speedy swayback in order to avoid it. His move startled Sandra, but not as much as the next move when his legs suddenly shot up and wrapped around her waist, allowing him to perform a backwards throw that sent the girl spinning across the sky. By the time she halted herself in midair and turned to refocus on her target, she saw Gohan had once again switched out personas and was now looking across at her with his hands locked into taekwondo positions and an aggressive expression in play.

"You're catching onto my strategy pretty quick. Not bad. But being sharp isn't going to be enough to put Videl Satan down for the count!" His aura bursting up around him, Gohan shot forward in a flash, nailing Sandra in the guard with a sharp kick. At the same time his right fist cocked back and sparkled with electricity. "Catch this! Hawk Arrow!" A gutsy battle cry leaving his lips, the teen lunged in with a right punch, which Sandra hurriedly attempted to block. His punch collided with her arms with a deafening shockwave, before the blow corkscrewed through her guard and burrowed into the female Saiyan's face. The impact of the shot sent Sandra flying back down towards the planet, a cry of surprise echoing all around. Spinning as she fell, the empress then slammed her hands and knees into the desert, punching a huge crater several meters into the floor as the entire world slowed her momentum.

After Gohan saw his enemy land, he too dropped down to the planet not far from her position. As soon as he rose up, the young warrior, still imitating Videl's movements, then looked up thoughtfully and scratched his head. "Hmm… who should I imitate next?" Several seconds of contemplation later, a rather evil grin then crossed his lips. "Oh. I know."

Muscles stinging from taking the blow, Sandra looked up with a start and cursed. "This guy… is starting to get on my nerves." Gritting her teeth, the woman leapt to her feet and spun around, sensing her opponent had touched down somewhere behind her.

However, when she spotted Gohan standing several yards away, her mouth dropped at what she saw him doing next.

With an innocent and rather mischievous look on his face, the Super Saiyan 3 hybrid suddenly struck a ballet-dancer-like pose, standing up on the toes of his right foot while lifting his left knee to his chest. When he brought his hands and clapped them above his head, Gohan then yelled at the top of his lungs, "RECOOOOOOOOME…!" He then cocked his head to the side and grinned, "KICK!" In the blink of an eye, his aura exploded around him and he rocketed forward so fast that Sandra lost track of him.

The female Saiyan only had enough time to gasp before she was struck in the face by the mother of all knees. The impact was marked by a colossal shockwave that shook the entire planet and sent her careening across the desert, blood trailing from her mouth and a bruise imprinted on her chin. After several miles of flight, Sandra shook herself out of her daze with a snarl and, back flipping into an upright position, softly touched down on the ground. "That's it! I'm sick of this!" She then powered up and charged back across the desert in the form of a golden bolt, tearing a path through the dunes until she was directly in front of her opponent. "You're going down!"

The second she was in range, Sandra threw a right hook, which Gohan blocked and retaliated with a right elbow, slamming it into his attacker's guard. What soon followed was a brisk and fast-paced boxing match, in which the female Saiyan began unloading lightning fast punches and kicks upon her half-blooded target, who proceeded to block, parry and slap away her blows in the most awkward and fanciest ways imaginable, similar in style to the member of the Ginyu Force he'd fought years ago. Shockwaves rang out as the pair ascended into the sky, circling one another while locked in a heated engagement.

Despite the fact Sandra was giving her foe everything she had, attacking him with a flurry of blows, the demi-Saiyan simply shrugged them off, all the while grinning in an obnoxious manner. While she continued to fire off attacks, Gohan then spoke in a bullheaded manner, "Ha! You've got some pretty nice moves, Sandra. But you'll need more then fancy punches and kicks to defeat the Ginyu Force!" Deflecting a kick, the demi-Saiyan suddenly raised his right arm overhead and yelled out, "RECOOOOOOOME…" By the time Sandra spotted it, it was too late, "ELBOW!" He then cracked her on the skull with a vicious elbow, sending her plummeting towards the ground.

When Sandra struck the surface of Mars, an atomic like shockwave rippled outwards as she was literally punched into the planet's crust. As the dust billowed into the sky, an airborne Gohan looked on as the earthquake he'd caused settled moments later and an amused chuckle left his lips. "Wow. What a rush." When he saw the fumes choking up the air begin to disperse, the young warrior then looked up and thought out loud, "Who knew acting and fighting at the same time could be such a blast? Maybe I can try imitating Frieza next. Though I don't have an extra long tail like his, I'm sure I can make it work if I try."

Unfortunately he was unable to finish his little breakdown.

All of a sudden, the ground several yards away from Sandra's newly formed crater exploded and, with her golden aura and lightning trailing off of her, the female Saiyan rocketed up towards the hybrid at a terrifying speed. With a mighty yell, the woman drove her knee into the boy's gut, lifting him up and causing a thunderclap to echo across the heavens.

A shocked expression appeared across Gohan's face, while his adversary cracked a triumphant smile of her own. "How do you like that?"

Gaping in pain, the half-human warrior remained where he was, hunched over the girl's leg and on the verge of throwing up. But then, just when Sandra thought her opponent was going to pass out, she suddenly saw his face turn to her and recoiled in shock when she saw a look of pure rage and anger staring back at her. Teeth clenched, brow furrowed and eyes a hollow white, devoid of any irises or pupils, Gohan snarled at his adversary like a wild dog, causing the female to back off worriedly. But just before she could pull away, the hybrid suddenly reared back, cupped his hands over his head, and slammed them down onto Sandra like a hammer, sending her plummeting to the ground with a sonic boom. When the Empress crashed into Mars's surface for the fifth time in a row, the entire world shuddered violently as the once perfectly round orb literally distorted into a slightly more oval shape.

"RAAAAAAAAGH!" Gohan bellowed at the top of his lungs, his aura exploding off of him like wildfire before he shot towards the planet like a comet. "KAKAROOOOOOOOT!"

Stumbling as she got to her feet after her impact with Mars, Sandra attempted to regain her bearings. However, when she heard Gohan's scream echo down from above, she looked up just in time to get hit in the throat by the demi-Saiyan's arm crashing into her in the form of a charging clothesline.

Lifting the girl off her feet, Gohan rocketed across the landscape, tearing a path through the desert for several kilometers before happening upon the closest mountain. Flying straight into it, the boy slammed his stunned adversary into its side and punched a human-sized crater into the wall. The force of the collision bent the edifice and caused rubble to start cascading all around them. The moment Sandra was pinned, the powered-up hero leapt away and, still wearing his menacing expression, threw his head back and cackled in a very familiar manner.

"Hahahaha! What's the problem, Kakarot? Have you given up? That's too bad!" Gohan yelled, looking across the way to see his shocked opponent gaping back at him. Obviously the hit to the chest had taken the wind out of her lungs, giving the demi-Saiyan the perfect opportunity to gloat the way he remembered this particular person used to. "You don't have the power to stand up to the likes of me! I will crush you!" Giving yet another yell of rage, the boy then shot forward at blazing speed, catching his foe completely off guard.

Forgetting all style, grace and form, Gohan began laying punches into his opponent with reckless abandon. His fists came flying in from all directions in the form of full swings and haymakers, losing no speed whatsoever when his knuckles seemingly began striking his target from head to toe. In reality, he concentrated most of his attacks on his opponent's midsection and chest, determined to cave in her ribs in a way that Broly once tried to do to his father all those years ago. This quickly resulted in him pushing Sandra straight through the mountain, slowly but surely hammering her battered body all the way to the other side.

Sandra cried and choked in agony when she became riddled by Gohan's non-stop attacks, her back literally carving a path right through the enormous landmark. The huge slab of rock was split down the centre, with debris raining down upon the glowing duo. Moments later, Gohan punched Sandra out the other side, where she bounced across the desert for several miles and ended up crashing into another hill back first.

Spitting up blood all over her ruined battle suit, the female Super Saiyan 3 gasped for breath and quickly forced herself to her feet.

Once again her opponent was not going to give her any time to breathe, as Gohan speedily teleported directly in front of the stricken fighter with his arms folded and an arrogant, foxy smirk pulled across his lips. The hybrid's eyes had also become more animalistic; in a way that was hauntingly similar to a very powerful and dangerous goddess he'd met not too long ago.

"You think you'll rule this universe as the strongest? Ha! Don't make me laugh!" Gohan barked in a haughty and feminine manner, his Saiyan tail swishing about behind him as he struck a fighter's pose. "There is only one who is the strongest in this reality, and that is Set; the Goddess of Storms! If you pledge your loyalty to me, I will grant you eternal life and a place at my side."

Getting incredibly irked at his female impressions, Sandra lunged forward to strike at him with a sloppy jab, only to receive a swift elbow to the neck that dropped her to the ground. Leaping back up, the Saiyan female tried lashing out at the hybrid again, only to watch him avoid her blows with head slips and parries, before suddenly countering her with sharp palm and fist strike to the body. When she countered with a right cross, Gohan locked up her arm and struck the joint at the shoulder with a finger blow, before suddenly dropping to the floor and spinning. His tail swept and knocked Sandra's feet out from under her, suspending the girl above the ground and allowing Gohan to nail her with a powerful side kick that sent her sliding through the dirt.

Twirling on the spot, Gohan calmly assumed a wide stance with his hands outstretched, the heels of his hands exposed and his fingers bent somewhat, resembling the claws of a predatory animal. Remembering Set's style perfectly from his battle with her, the boy smirked and edged his feet along the floor, all the while marveling at his handiwork.

"Let's rattle her brain a little more..."

Sandra was deeply hurting by this point in time, bleeding out of the mouth and clutching her ribs, which had most certainly been cracked. When she got up, she immediately reeled forward, placing her hands on her knees and taking the few precious moments she had to recover. Due to the way she was panting, her opponent knew right away that she was struggling and was not enjoying this part of the bout in the slightest.

Unfortunately Sandra didn't have much time to contemplate the sudden change in the battle's pace, as she instantly sensed a shadow fall over her and peered up to see Gohan, a childlike smile in play, beaming at her from only three feet away.

He'd ended up bending so far forward that his face was practically right up in front of Sandra's, which startled the hell out of the female Saiyan.

“What's up, big sis?” Gohan asked in his best impersonation of his little brother. The effort was clearly shown by the little giggle he added at the end. "Do you want to keep playing?"

Veins pulsing on her forehead, an incredibly frustrated Sandra stood up as fast as she could and, cocking back her right fist, threw it at her opponent in anger. "RAAAAH!"

Grinning cheekily, the demi-Saiyan was all ready for her haymaker and, taking a basic horse riding stance, promptly countered her attack with a combo he remembered his kid brother use too long ago. He jabbed out, intercepting Sandra's punch with his own and shouting at the top of his lungs. "ROCK!" As soon as their attacks collided, he lunged forward with a right straight, nailing his opponent in the eyes with his middle and index fingers. "SCISSORS!" When Sandra yelped and covered her eyes with her hands, Gohan stepped in deep and struck her in the chest with an open-palm slap. "PAPER!"

Skidding across the ground with a handprint engraved in the front of her suit, Sandra gasped in shock and hit the brakes. She managed to stop herself just several yards later and, watching the clouds of dust billow about her, looked up to see what her opponent was doing now. It came as a big shock to her when she saw him standing directly in front of her, just a few inches out of reach, his hands cupped at his side and lightning shooting off of his body.

A serious and focused expression framed his face as he took aim at the woman. "KA-ME-HA-ME-

"Fuck!" Sandra shouted, realizing she had no time to dodge when she sensed his energy spike. Unable to counter due to being off balance, the woman instead threw her hands up into a cross arm guard, covering her face and bracing herself for the inevitable impact. She shut her eyes and held her breath, ready to feel the burning sensation of a several billion megaton blast engulfing her
However, after a few seconds of standing there and not feeling anything, the woman cracked open an eye to see what was going on.

All of a sudden, a shockwave rang out and Sandra's entire body doubled over when her opponent's fist buried itself into her stomach up to the wrist. Eyes bugging out of their sockets, the female Super Saiyan could only gape in disbelief while Gohan, standing two feet in front of her, grinned mischievously and kept his knuckles pressed against her abs.

"Fooled yah," Gohan sung.

When he removed his fist moments later, he allowed Sandra to stagger away, trembling from head to toe and gripping her stomach with both her arms. The pain became too much for her to handle and eventually the girl dropped to her knees, curling forward and crying out in agony. Gohan, being the good sport that he was, simply watched and waited for his foe to come around. He even held out a hope that his opponent would give up, considering her stricken state and the amount of pain she was apparently in. Honestly, a part of him wanted to apologize for hitting her with such a strong punch.

But then, just when he thought it was over, Gohan saw the female Saiyan look up, her teeth clenched and fury burning in her eyes.

Huffing angrily, the haze filling Sandra's vision quickly cleared and revealed her opponent standing perfectly still several yards away. At that moment, the woman felt the overwhelming and irresistible urge to jump in and beat the living snot out of the smug teenager. "I'm going to rip that dirty bastard a new one!" But then, before she could power up and run down her opponent, the Empress suddenly stopped dead in her tracks. "No… wait a second… that's exactly what he wants me to do!" Looking at his face, she could see his plan all too clearly, as if he was telling it directly to her. He wanted to get her frustrated and make her panic, so that he could take advantage of her lack of focus and tear her down. "He's baiting me… waiting for me to slip up and make a mistake." After seeing him tilt his head, the female Saiyan frowned and, reaching up, brushed away the blood dripping down her chin with the back of her glove. "Attacking him while I'm flustered won't get me anywhere. I need to calm down and start over." She then closed her eyes.

Gohan looked on as he saw Sandra take several deep breaths. Watching her shoulders rise and fall, and her shivering lift like a bad spell, he then saw her stop and, after several seconds of meditation, glare up at him with a renewed glimmer of self-assurance in her eyes. This brought a serious look to the hybrid and prompted him to take a cautionary step back. "It looks like she's ready for another round." A bolt of lightning crackled from his forehead and struck the desert. "Okay; enough playing around and enough acting. It's time to get serious."

Rising up, a now calm and collected Sandra slid her feet into a completely new position and brought her hands up. Upon which an excited smile graced her face, "It seems I was right about you all along. Your speed, strength and skills are absolutely breathtaking, and the amount of talent you possess is beyond anything I could've imagined. All things considered, I can say without a shadow of a doubt that you've impressed me."

Her compliments put a grin back on Gohan's face, "Thanks. After all the things you've shown me today, I'd say that feeling's mutual. I've never faced an opponent as skilled and incredible as you before."

Sandra smirked, "Touché. But let's not get caught up in senseless flattery. I think it's time to begin round three of our battle." Widening her feet, the woman curled her fingers and assumed a stance entire body.
Gohan had never seen her use before. This put him on immediate guard and had him flex his fingers anxiously. "There hasn't been a single fighter capable enough to overwhelm my perfect trace. The amount of personas and fighting styles that you know is simply astonishing. But now it has me wondering…" The girl cocked an eyebrow at her foe, "Do you know more than me?"

This question had Gohan's heartbeat quicken with anticipation and his smile widen even more, "I don't know. Want to find out?"

Sandra licked her lips sensuously. "Let's."

Skipping on the spot in a very Bruce Lee like manner, Gohan then slid his feet into yet another stance and, bringing his right hand up to his chin while his left remained suspended around his chest, the demi-Saiyan took on the Jeet Kune Do form and steadied his breathing. Compiling all of the fighting styles he knew and pushing them to the front, the warrior prepared once again for what was to be a spectacular fight. His opponent meanwhile set herself into a narrow stance and what he assumed was the Baguazhang martial arts form, but figured it was a similar fighting style from a different planet.

As soon as both warriors had assumed stances, they powered up, their auras bursting around them and lightning filling the sky…

OOO

(Meanwhile)

(Vegeta & Cal)

For two of the dozen warriors back on Earth, their battle, which had started out explosive and full of energy, was now quickly coming to a head.

When Vegeta's opponent had began using his weird energy based weaponry against him, the prince's exciting brawl with the alien humanoid quickly transformed from a battle of wills into a glorified interstate-baseball match, where the extra terrestrial in spandex spent the next portion of their fight smacking every energy attack sent his way across the continent.

This development forced Vegeta to take on a more strategic approach to fighting his opponent, where he had to avoid the big swings from his foe's melee weapons and get inside the warrior's reach. He had no other choice, because as he found out rather painfully and unexpectedly during one of their exchanges, simply being tapped by Cal's energy weapons was enough to send him straight through a mountain. Being sure to keep an extra eye out for them, Vegeta started striking his enemy from different angles, out of range of the man's attacks. It wasn't easy, since the man was built like a brick house, but the prince was persistent.

By this point in time, the forests and mountains Vegeta and Cal had been fighting in had been reduced to a barren wasteland, with only a few logs and bushes left standing here and there. Random fires burnt across different parts of the country, filling the clear blue sky with smoke, signifying that the stage was set for a decisive and climactic finish between the two fighters.

Golden aura blazing around him like the fires of the sun, the prince, with the top half of his spandex suit disintegrated and blood caking a majority of his face, charged across the torn up battlefield like a bat out of hell. Roaring at the top of his lungs, Vegeta loaded up his right fist and prepared to deck his opponent in the face. Cal, also sporting a thoroughly ripped suit and a busted up mug, brought around the energy shield in his right arm and attempted to cut his enemy off.
Head-slipping the shield on the warrior's forearm, Vegeta then jumped when the large man swung at him with the energy hammer in his other hand, avoiding it and allowing him to hit the humanoid across the face. The blow landed with a deafening crunch sound, knocking Cal off his feet and sending him across the wasteland. By the time he managed to dig his feet into the ground to stop from sliding, the dazed extraterrestrial was able to ready himself for Vegeta's next attack, as he saw the Saiyan with his arm extended, and his thumb, index and middle finger pointed directly at him.

Lightning shooting off of Vegeta's battered and bruised body, the Ascended Saiyan gritted his teeth before bracing himself. "Final Impact!" A powerful golden bolt of energy then exploded from his extended fingers, flying towards his target straighter than the edge of a ruler and several times faster than the speed of light. Its path was marked by a high-pitched whistle, which tore a trench through the ground from the force it was producing.

Cal, his bloody face reflecting alarm, quickly dispelled his energy hammer and gripped his forearm where his Spartan shield was suspended. Doing so allowed him to focus whatever energy he had left into the energy dish and, upon taking a crouching stance, allowed his barrier to double in size. He managed to divert his energy just in time to take the full force of Vegeta's attack, which struck his shield with a deafening thunderclap, before bouncing off of it and flying back at its owner.

Vegeta, stunned to see his blast deflected, barely had enough time to throw up his guard before his own attack slammed into him and detonated with concussive force. The explosion sent him spiraling across the countryside like a ragdoll, bouncing several times across several hills, and eventually crashing at the base of a rocky slope. His landing punched yet another crater into the ruined landscape.

Body scorched and burnt from head to toe, Vegeta coughed up blood over his chest and glared across the smoldering valley. His eyes then shot wide open when he spotted his opponent descending towards him from above like a meteor, bathed in an orange aura and holding a war hammer made of pure energy above his head the size of a small trailer.

"Planet Crushing Hammer!"

With a deafening battle cry, Cal thrust his weapon down at the prince with all his might, slamming it into the surface of the Earth. The shockwave from the impact was so great it caused the entire countryside to bounce several feet into the air and parted the clouds in the sky. When silence fell, the extraterrestrial thought it was over.

However, after looking down at the spot where the face of his weapon had struck, he spotted his opponent lying there, arms pressed up against its edge and holding the hammer just three inches above his face. Teeth bared and a look of pain reflected in his eyes, the determined Vegeta let out a growl of effort as his aura roared to life, giving him the energy he needed to slowly push the giant energy weapon further away from him.

"Impossible!" Cal, shocked to see his foe was still conscious after managing to block the planet splitting hit, gritted his teeth and powered up to maximum. His orange aura blazing around him and supercharging his muscles, the humanoid warrior's energy hammer increased in size. Its structure pulsating, the energy weapon then proceeded to push down on Vegeta even more, the weight of several dozen stars multiplying three times over.

The ground giving way beneath him as he attempted to fight back against the increasing pressure, Vegeta tried to push back, only to find his arms steadily giving way. Limbs going numb and blood beginning to pour out of his nose as the blood vessels in his body began to burst one after the other, the Saiyan Prince tried to muster all the strength he could to stop from being flattened into the planet. But try as he might, he just could not remove the weapon growing closer and closer to turning him into a pancake.

Cal sensed his opponent's approaching defeat and, wanting to avoid killing him, snarled at the man through bared teeth. "Please… surrender!"

Hearing his foe loud and clear, the Super Saiyan gritted his teeth as the veins in his eyes began to throb. "Never!" Snarling as the ground split and crumbled around him, the short fighter then began digging deep for whatever strength he could muster. Already at his limit, the man's hopes seemed lost. But this didn't stop the most stubborn man on the planet from putting up one last fight. "I… am… Prince… Vegeta! And I will not… be beaten… by a commoner… like YOOOOOUUUUUU!"

All of a sudden, a bloodcurdling cry echoed across the country as the prince's aura intensified, warping the space around him and covering the land in a bright, flashing light. A miniature lightning storm then fell around Vegeta's position as Cal, watching in utter disbelief, felt his opponent's energy levels skyrocket and watched his hair grow down to his waist. The locks fanned around the prince like a mane while his eyebrows evaporated with his aura, his sudden and explosive transformation quickly ending with a titanic shockwave that pretty much disintegrated the alien's energy hammer and sent rubble hurtling in all directions like snowflakes.

Skidding across the battlefield to a stop, an astonished Cal looked ahead in awe as he watched Vegeta rise up from the ground, his form shrouded in an electrical aura. When he saw the man's gaze fixate upon him, the large humanoid felt a chill of fear run down his spine.

"He… He can ascend to that level too?" the alien warrior whispered.

Lightning running up his body, the Prince of all Saiyans, sheathed in the glow of Super Saiyan 3, huffed confidently, "You're done."

Feeling his body trembling with fright, Cal quickly shook his head and clenched his fists, so as to stop his strength from running out on him. Even though his opponent's power had ascended to a level far beyond his own, the warrior was not going to go down without a fight. Being one of Sandra's most loyal and trusted friends, the gladiator of a warrior was determined to give this battle his all, and was not going to be dissuaded.

Powering up with a blast of orange flames surrounding his body, the humanoid alien rushed forward in a flicker and nailed his opponent in the face with a right cross. He immediately followed up with a few more blows, cracking Vegeta's mug over and over again with powerful hooks, before finishing with a sharp uppercut and a chopping right. However, though his blows landed with enough force to generate a string of earth quaking shockwaves, all his knuckles managed to do was knock the prince's head left and right a couple of times. As soon as he'd finished his combo, Cal stepped away in amazement, drawing a firm glare from Vegeta.

"Not bad," the prince remarked. "But…" All of a sudden, with speed Cal couldn't track, the Saiyan Prince drove a punch into the man's gut, nailing him with such force that it caused the large fighter to buckle over. "Not good enough."

His orange aura dispersing, the stunned warrior choked up whatever air he had left in his lungs. Unable to support him any longer, Cal's legs quickly gave way and, despite his best efforts to stay upright, dropped forward into a hunched over position. The man collapsing to his knees was all the signal Vegeta needed to retract his fist and, as his bio field continued to crackle around him, the new Super Saiyan 3 glared at his fallen adversary with a harsh gaze.
"Like I said... you're done." Taking this opportunity, the prince extended his right hand and held it directly above his foe. It was almost like he was preparing to finish his opponent off right there on the spot, which was made more apparent by his energy beginning to climb and the electrical currents running over his body intensifying.

Moments later, a look of genuine surprise crossed Vegeta's face when he saw his foe look up at him with a hard glare and a pained expression twisted into one of courage and grit. Though it was clear the blow had done a lot of damage, there was not an ounce of panic or dread on Cal's face. In fact, it appeared as though he was welcoming his opponent's final move with open arms.

The sight had the royal blink. "You're... not going to beg for your life?" Vegeta asked in confusion.

The kneeling man braced himself, "No."

"Why not?"

Taking a deep breath, the winded fighter then spoke in a hoarse yet clear voice, "For as long as I can remember, my entire existence has been spent resting underneath the heels of men more powerful than myself. To them, I was nothing more than a piece of trash... an insect groveling in the dirt. When Kure and her friends rescued me from that wretched hellhole of a planet I called home, they showed me I was more than what I was... that I was more than just scum." Struggling to his feet, the man shakily stood before his opponent, even as the warrior's hand was pointed squarely at his face. "For the sake of my friends and the people I now call family, I vowed from that day forward to never let anything break me... because if I did... I would go back to being a lowly insect." Cal shook his head firmly. "I would rather die than face that humiliation ever again."

Staring at the fighter now glaring him down with blood trickling over his swollen and cut-up face, Vegeta considered his words for a moment. After several bolts of lightning sparked down his arm, making it seem as though he was still going to finish his opponent, a smile then broke over the Super Saiyan 3’s visage.

Closing his eyes, Vegeta lowered his arm. "I must say, I'm impressed. Normally whenever I defeat someone in battle and have them kneeling before me, their first instinct is to whimper and beg for me to spare them like the cowards that they are," Chief examples included Cui, Dodoria, Zarbon, and Jeice. There was no conviction or metal behind their actions. No honor. No bravery. "But you my friend... you're the first one who's ever stood their ground and faced their defeat with pride... even after being beaten to the point of collapse. For that, you have earned my respect."

Hearing this drew a nod of understanding from the big man, who allowed his body to relax and drop from its powered up state. "I'm grateful."

Disengaging from his newly acquired Super Saiyan 3 form, Vegeta groaned and stumbled a bit, feeling the fatigue of the ascension hit him like a ton of bricks. Now he knew how Gohan felt after his first few days testing out his new form. Even two minutes in such an overpowered state was murder on the body.

Once he'd shaken off the flashes and the spottiness in his vision, the Saiyan Prince turned to his opponent and smiled at him. "Back in the day, there wouldn't have been a force in the galaxy to stop me from blasting you and scattering your ashes across the planet's surface. But now... well..." The man snorted and looked away, "I guess I just don't give a damn anymore. I think my time spent on Earth living amongst these fools has made me grown soft." Receiving no response but a curious blink from his wounded foe, Vegeta then looked up thoughtfully. "Shit. I'm supposed to be the Prince of all Saiyans... and yet here I am showing mercy to a stranger I just met. What's this universe coming to?"
Cal could only stare silently at the prince. When the Saiyan looked in his direction, the large warrior saw the much shorter fighter chuckle and turn away with his arms crossed.

"You don't talk much do you?" When Vegeta saw the warrior nod, the flame-haired man chuckled and rested his knuckles on his hip. "That's fine by me. I actually prefer people who don't say a lot. Makes my days on this ball of dirt a lot more bearable." As soon as he'd said that, Vegeta then turned heel and took flight for another part of the planet. His take off was shaky at first, due to the amount of energy he'd spent during his battle, but he was quick to correct and divert whatever ki he had left to stabilizing himself.

The large humanoid in spandex lifted his head curiously. "Where are you going?"

"Where do you think?" Vegeta spoke back, a smirk remaining plastered on his face. "To see how the other imbeciles are doing without me." He sensed two very powerful combatants clashing somewhere nearby on the continent, with both of them throwing some serious attacks at each other.

Needless to say, he was very curious to see how that battle was turning out and, with Cal following close behind, made all speed towards the disturbance…

OOO

(Goten & Trunks)

A very frustrated and bruised son of Vegeta gave a loud yell of effort as he unleashed yet another golden blast at his attackers, who simply dodged his technique and barreled towards him. Airborne several meters above a small village outside of Central City, the CAT droids assigned to do battle with the young Trunks flanked the child from both sides and began battering him with a vicious onslaught of punches. The boy managed to throw up his arms just in time to intercept the storm of blows, which immediately began hitting him like dozens upon dozens of very hard tennis balls.

Gritting his teeth under the barrage, the bruised and battered Super Saiyan opened up his arms and fought off the robots with a kick, smacking one in the head and knocking it away. He then dove in and proceeded to hammer his opponents mercilessly with punches, elbows and knees, his attacks landing with loud shockwaves, as well as bending and distorting their diminutive forms. Once his assault was complete, he then sent the two machines plummeting into the streets below with a swift punch and a kick, where one crashed into the tarmac and another caved in the roof of a parked car.

Panting after seeing the dust settle around his opponents, Trunks then looked down at his fists and waved them irritably. "Damn it. It's like smacking around a pair of beach balls!"

It was ridiculous. Not only were these things actually tough to hit, but they were also cushioned due to the unusual material that'd been used in their construction. This made attacking them exhausting because their bodies were able to absorb and nullify the hits from the people hitting them, meaning Trunks had to hit a lot harder than he was used to.

The results of this stressful realization were beginning to show, as Trunks took an offensive stance when he saw his two opponents look up at him with their expressionless faces. Before the boy could fire down at them, the CAT droid duo raised their hands and began lobbing energy spheres up at their target, forcing the hybrid to begin dodging rapidly and awkwardly due to the suddenness of the barrage.

Yelling when one of the shots barely grazed his head, the young warrior quickly threw his hand down and fired off a shot of his own, striking the ground between the two robots and sending them tumbling down the road with the rubble. The moment they stopped rolling, Goten suddenly came dropping out of the sky to crash down in the tarmac nearby.

His own gi torn and face covered in bruises, the younger brother of Gohan looked up from his place to see his two opponents come diving after him, their fists held up and ready for a pummeling.

Reacting quickly, the boy dodged the attack from the droid that reached him first. Then, as soon as the second one dropped down behind him for an attempt, Goten brought his foot up and kicked the robot into its companion, sending both automatons down the road to join their friends, who had also been grounded.

Taking the initiative, Trunks jumped over the four robots kneeling in the middle of the road to land next to his friend. The moment he touched down, both adolescents cupped their hands in the center and powered up.

"Goten! Now!" the lavender haired boy shouted.

All at once, both children threw their hands forward and unleashed a simultaneous Kamehameha Wave at their foes. Their attacks melded together in midflight consumed the four little robots while they were still struggling to their feet, seconds before a massive explosion ripped across the town and rattled the surrounding buildings. People watching from nearby cried out in terror as they were pelted by dust and debris, the force of the attack shifting buildings off of their foundations and filling the sky with a fiery, mushroom shaped cloud. Eventually the plume faded into the atmosphere and, when the tired and beaten demi-Saiyan duo watched the space in front of them clear, they saw a massive crater emerge from the thick and four seemingly unconscious robots lying at the bottom of the crevice.

It looked as though their attack had been a success. But then, just when Goten and Trunks were beginning to think that their opponents were about to stand up again and carry on with a fourth bout, the pair suddenly saw the robot in the middle of the formation raise their hand and wave a white flag in defeat. This was especially hilarious to see coming from the little droid, as it continued to remain where it was, lying flat on its back in the pit surrounded by its beaten yet still remarkably intact comrades.

Nevertheless, seeing the white flag filled both Goten and Trunks with a sense of relief, as both boys soon collapsed shoulder-to-shoulder in the middle of the road. When their Super Saiyan forms dispelled, their bodies revealed the various cuts, bruises and blood splatters they'd sustained during their scuffle, indicating just how tough of a fight they'd had. Taking a few moments to catch their breaths, Trunks then raised his fist towards his friend and bumped knuckles with him.

"We did it. Way to go, buddy."

"Yeah," Goten chirped, "You too, Trunks."

After a full minute of kicking back and resting from the battle, the pair was suddenly roused from their daze by the sound of footsteps approaching. When they opened their eyes, they saw their four opponents, covered in scratches and dirt, holding up plastic water bottles and towels to them.

Surprised by the unexpected offering and even more confused as to where the four little CAT droids had managed to get those supplies, the kids instead threw all caution to the wind and accepted their help gratefully.

Goten giggled when he took the water bottle from the one closest to him, "Thank you very much."
In response, the cat robot raised a cardboard sign that said, 'You're welcome.'

Putting the warm towel to his face to wipe off the blood, Trunks smiled at the automaton in front of him and laughed, "Man. These guys are, like, the nicest opponents we've ever had."

"I know," Goten replied, while also taking a warm towel from the same robot in the middle. "Mum would love to have these guys doing chores around the house. I bet they'll be a huge help for her, since I'm not really good at doing dishes or anything."

"Doesn't your mum hate having pets inside the house though?" Trunks asked with an inquisitive look, as he was well aware of the incidents his friend's oldest sibling had experienced with his parent regarding their family dragon Icarus. "You know, because they get dirt everywhere and make a mess of the place."

"Yeah. But these guys aren't animals," Goten said cheerily, at the same time turning to beam at the squad of robotic cats standing at attention. "They're robots… and they're awesome."

While the two sat and enjoyed a breather, along with the four little critters who'd called it quits and were now helping their opponents, the pair were suddenly joined by a third party. Floating down from the sky above, the Saiyan youngsters saw a slightly burnt and disheveled Android 18 land nearby, with her arms wrapped around the three CAT droids she'd previously been fighting. Just like with Goten and Trunks, the little automatons were all in one piece, yet clearly showed the signs of a small beating.

"Hey, Ms Eighteen!" Goten greeted with a wave. "Did you have fun?"

Holding the cat robots as if she were cuddling them, the normally expressionless android put on a smile and tilted her head. "Yeah," she chirped. "A lot."

OOO

(Paprika & Kure)

Receiving a slash across the chest from her powered up opponent, which sliced through her top like crate paper, the enormous demon Paprika let out a snarl and thrust a kick into the beastly Kure's chest. The powerful blow smashed her foe backwards, which only served to enrage the cat woman further, who then spun on the spot and kicked at the demon's feet.

Shifting her foot back to avoid the blow, the white haired giant of a Makyan began a slow retreat as her opponent began striking out at her with various low and high kicks from the floor. Using moves and cartwheels very similar to what you would see in the martial arts Capoeira, Kure spun at her opponent with her legs and tail, slashing and sweeping at her foe repeatedly. When Paprika checked one of her low blows, the cat alien suddenly leapt at her with a right hook, drilling her across the cheek and sending blood flying out of her mouth.

Eyes flaring with anger at the sudden overhand blow, Paprika growled and threw a straight kick into Kure's torso, knocking the woman off her feet and tumbling across the battle scarred field. When the extra terrestrial rolled back into an upright position, she remained crouched on all fours with her tail whipping angrily behind her. From the looks on both warriors, with the Makyan covered in bloody claw marks and Kure sporting numerous bruises of her own, along with an impaled shoulder, the two Z-fighters had been giving one another hell.

And they weren't alone in that respect either. As Paprika bared her fangs and stomped towards Kure threateningly, the latter glanced behind her when she sensed the presence of two others.
nearby. Her eyes narrowed when she instantly spotted Yamcha and Videl, also covered in bloody scratches, bruises, ruined clothing and black eyes, panting exhaustedly and glaring in her direction. Hunched over and bleeding from the corners of their mouths, the duo had clearly taken a few hits of their own trying to get the jump on Kure, only to receive a thorough beating in return for their efforts.

Taking several deep breaths, showing she was close to reaching her limit, Kure then dug the elongated nails on her hands into the soil and whipped her tail in front of her. "Time… to end this." She then vanished with a crack of wind, her blur darting towards Yamcha faster than he could track.

However, just as her invisible form was making its way across the wasteland, a hand suddenly shot forward and grabbed her ankle. Being pulled out of super speed, a stunned Kure looked down to see Paprika had jumped forward and caught her leg, stopping her dead in her tracks. As soon as she had her, the large-horned, devilish woman yanked the feline warrior out of the air, tossed her over her shoulder, and slammed Kure into the ground. Hitting the surface with an earth-splitting crack, the Makyan gave a yell of rage and, spinning around, threw Kure into the air.

"DUST HER!" Paprika shouted at her teammates.

Yamcha, white aura exploding around him, pulled back both his hands and, with a loud yell of his own, thrust them forward, unleashing two simultaneous Spirit Ball attacks at his airborne target. The speed he launched the spheres meant that he was able to nail her right in the chest and torso, propelling the cat high up into the sky. When Kure spat up blood from the shot, Videl used that opportunity to finish the combo.

Clenching her fists, the battered human crouched low and pressed her right knuckles to her chest. "Okay… last chance. Time to use that technique I've been practicing." Steam rising off of her body, Videl shut her eyes for a moment to focus her energy. Then, as soon as she was ready, her head snapped up and her jaw clenched tightly. "Make it count! KAIOKEN TIMES TEN!" All of a sudden, an aura of red energy burst off of her and began gushing out of every pore on her body. Her muscles bulking up in response to the expulsion of power, the girl let out a cry of agony before vanishing in a blur of speed.

Her take off was marked by a sonic boom, a split second before her body materialized several stories above the stricken Kure, who was still ascending at high speed. Hands brought up and placed over her forehead, Videl, red aura burning around her like flames, then clenched her teeth and growled in effort.

"This'll kill me, but…KAIOKEN, MAXIMUM POWER!" Like dumping petrol over an open pit, her aura exploded widthwise and filled the sky with a raging inferno, burning a hole straight through the atmosphere and right up into space. A scream of agony leaving her lips when she felt her veins expand, all of which could clearly be seen pulsating along her muscles, the human girl then concentrated all of the energy she had into her palms and formed a golden sphere of ki in front of her.

With so much energy gushing through her body all at once, the vessels in a lot of her more vulnerable spots could no longer hold back the strain, as blood came dribbling out of her nose and ears. Ignoring the pain, the girl then let out one last growl and threw both hands forward, unleashing her attack with a mighty roar.

"SUPER MASENKO-HAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAA!"
In a flash, her attack left her hands with a clap of thunder and rocketed towards her approaching foe, filling the sky with a light brighter than the sun itself. A split second later, her attack struck Kure in the back, knocking her into Yamcha's spirit balls, disintegrating them, and sending the woman blasting back towards the planet's surface, with a stunned look slapped across the feline's face. When she slammed into the country's surface, an explosion similar to a thermonuclear bomb ripped the land asunder in a dome shaped blast of orange fire.

The continent rattling under the force of impact, a thoroughly drained Videl then dropped out of the air to land next to Yamcha. When her legs buckled, her fellow human ally was there to catch her, while Paprika came to stand defensively by their side. When the trio watched the explosion of the Masenko die out, they saw an enormous crater emerge from the blast, and when the smoke from the impact zone cleared, so did Kure.

Her suit all but shredded to the point of leaving her in nothing but a bra and underwear, her back seared and the rest of her body covered in second degree burns, a still transformed Kure forced herself to her feet. Trembling from the damage racking her body and the fire still burning on her limbs, it took several moments for Kure to get to her knees. When she did, the woman then threw a glare towards her opponents where, through a blurred vision, she saw all three of them standing together several yards away.

Paprika, stepping forward, then brought back her hand. "Now… FU-RI-KA-KE-HAAAAAAA!"
She then thrust her palm forward, unleashing an orange, hand-shaped blast that blasted towards Kure faster than a lightning bolt.

Jumping to her feet, Kure braced herself in time to take the attack head-on, feeling it slam into her and send her rocketing backwards for well over a kilometer. Her body consumed in the flames of the blast, the woman dug her feet into the ground and slowed her retreat. As the forces of the attack continued to rip into her and burn her skin, the desperate and still conscious woman then began marching forward through the fire, her teeth gritted and fists clenched. Like a rock against an endlessly flowing stream, she fought against the river and continued to stomp across the disintegrating landscape, to the point a scream of rage left her lips and the pain overwhelming her became next to unbearable.

Videl and Yamcha were stunned to see the woman withstand the full might of Paprika's most powerful and dangerous attack. Even the Makyan unleashing the blast was more astonished than they were. However, not willing to give up just yet, Paprika took a deep breath and, after concentrating more energy into her free hand, thrust that forward too and unleashed a second blast down the line. The reinforced attack shot towards Kure in a surge of energy and, a split second later, hit the young woman like a tidal wave, knocking her off her feet and sending her tumbling through the twister of orange fire.

The explosion that followed shortly afterwards was immense, as energy filled the sky of the planet and the force of the blast distorted the surface of the Earth. When the smoke faded several minutes later, it revealed a major indent had been formed on the edge of the continent connecting the land to the ocean, which could clearly be seen from space. By the time the last embers of the attack had dissipated, water from the sea had finished flooding into the newly formed basin.

There, on the shores of the burnt cove, an exhausted Paprika, Yamcha and Videl floated over from the beginning of the trench to find Kure, back in her base form and even more damaged than before, wafting with smoke along the banks. Coughing as she was woken by the tides of water washing against her arm, the woman forced open an eye and turned to find her opponents standing over her.
When she saw the three of them staring down at her and looking quite concerned at the amount of damage she'd taken, she knew right away what'd happened and what the results of her battle were. Unable to feel really anything, due to having been subjected to the most thorough sterilization process ever recorded, Kure's lips broke into a smile and a pained laugh escaped her throat.

"Looks like… that's game over for me," the cat woman coughed.

Videl, hanging off of Yamcha's shoulders due to being unable to walk anymore, gave the woman her own cheery smile. "Yah think?"

Hearing the response prompted Kure to beam at the trio, "There's no doubt about it… you guys are strong."

Yamcha, feeling a little sympathetic for the pain she must be in, grinned down at their extraterrestrial opponent as well, "Hey. Don't sell yourself short. It was three against one. You're pretty damn strong yourself."

"Even if it was one-on-one, I would've lost anyway," the female with the cat features wheezed, at the same time shooting a look up at the still transformed Paprika. When she saw the devil woman crane her head, the woman with brown hair nodded to her, "After all, that one's powers are well above my own. She purposefully held back on that last attack… to stop from killing me."

The two Z-fighters also glanced over at Paprika to see their ally nod in understanding to their defeated adversary. After sizing up the giant woman, who was now easily twice their height, pulsing with Amazonian muscles, and had two enormous devil horns that would put the Lord of Darkness to shame protruding from her spiky white hair, the pair of miniscule humans then gave her a slightly apprehensive look. When Paprika felt their eyes boring into her side, the teenage girl glanced down at them and blinked in surprise.

"What?" she asked in a butch tone of voice.

Videl threw a nervous smile at the Makyan. "Yeah… do you think you can change back now, Paprika? Please?"

"Huh?"

"Yeah. I'm going to have to back Videl up on this one," Yamcha stammered, before then gulping at the puzzled look the green woman threw them, which came off more intimidating than she intended. "Don't take this the wrong way, girl, but… you look fucking terrifying."

Agreeing with the pair's assessments, the burnt and battered Kure nodded quietly in support.

Blushing, the giant woman then, much to her friends' relief, reverted back to her normal form, giving her muscles and the group's nerves a rest. Considering all the hits they'd taken in the last couple of hours, they definitely needed it.

(TO BE CONTINUED)

Author's Note: And that's another chapter come and gone, and now the Z-fighters' battle with Sandra's group is quickly coming to an end. But it seems like Gohan and Sandra's battle will be going on for quite a while, considering how stubborn they both are.

Can't wait to see how the next chapter turns out. Hope you all enjoyed it.
Z-Fighters Fighting Styles: Back in the early days of Dragonball canon, martial arts styles were featured more prominently in the series as a means of identifying different characters and their training, with each warrior practicing a different martial arts. This concept of warriors using specific fighting styles became all but non-existent in the Dragonball Z series, where the characters focused more of their attention on increasing their fighting power and strength in favor of technique.

While martial arts were still ever-present in the Dragonball Z franchise, the specific types of styles, movements, punching, kicking, kneeing and parrying techniques, were never touched on by the author, so one could never determine what level of fighting ability any of the characters were actually at. This is mostly due to the fact that all of the Z-fighters are so powerful that they rarely had to worry about skill or technique, as they believed having greater speed and strength was all that was needed to win. It's also impossible to tell which warrior used what kind of fighting style, due to their incredible speed and agility, as displayed in a multitude of their fights.

However, from the Z-fighters' points of view, all of them still practice specific styles of fighting, which greatly affects their overall abilities and skills. While in the Dragonball Z canon this is never touched on, the concept has been expanded upon in this series as a means of individualizing and defining each character.

Since most of the characters' fighting styles are never specified in canon, with only masters and schools ever being mentioned in the series, most of the fighting styles I've listed are either designed by me to suit their characters or based off of real life martial arts and assigned to the characters based on personal observations. For those who know their history, their sports and are open to other cultures, they should recognize a few of the forms that have been listed.

---

Gohan's Fighting Styles: Over the past seven years, many of Gohan's training sessions weren't just focused on increasing his strength and power. As it was shown in several of the previous chapters, the demi-Saiyan undertook numerous sessions with all the members of the Z-fighters, including Videl, Piccolo, Zangya, Krillin, Tien, Master Roshi, Yamcha, Vegeta, his father, and even the warriors on Grand Kai's Planet. During that time, Gohan learned dozens of different forms of martial arts from Earth, all in an effort to improve his punching, kicking, grappling, countering, and holding techniques.

In order to overcome and defeat Sandra's ability to perfectly predict and read his movements via his rhythm, Gohan adopted the patterns and characteristics of his friends and enemies, including their fighting styles, which he imitated with textbook accuracy. This made it next to impossible for Sandra to keep up using timing alone, which meant she had to change her strategy and ultimately her style. After mimicking his friends repeatedly, Gohan quickly picked up how to use their fighting styles while simultaneously changing his rhythm without having to resort to full personality changes, allowing him to start battling Sandra more fluidly.

The styles Gohan learned from his friends and used in this round of his battle with Sandra and their descriptions are listed below as follows:

User - Goku

Style - Hung Ga

Real or OC - Real

Origin – Chinese Kung Fu
Description - A southern Chinese martial arts, which belongs to the Southern shaolin styles of the Asian province, is a style of fighting used famously by legendary hero Wong Fei Hung. The hallmarks of this style include deep, low stances, most notably the Sei Ping Ma horse stance, and strong hand techniques, most notably the bridge hand, and the versatile tiger claw. Many punching, parrying and kicking techniques can be utilized from this style, due to its versatility and emphasis on brute force, control, concentration, and use of soft techniques.

This fighting style was used by author Akira Toriyama as a template to illustrate Goku's various movements in the Dragonball manga, which he also adopted for other warriors including Krillin, Master Roshi, Gohan, Piccolo, Cell, Kid Trunks, Goten, and to a lesser extent Vegeta.

XXX

User - Chi-Chi

Style - Snake-Style Palm Fist

Real or OC – Original creation based off of actual martial arts style Original Style derived from - Shequan (Snake Fist)

Origin – Chinese Kung Fu

Description - A style similar to Shequan (literal translation 'Snake Fist' or Snake Boxing) in Chinese martial arts, this particular style was taught by Master Roshi to the Ox King, which was then taught to Chi-Chi at a young age. Like many martial arts imitating Snake Style, this form uses very serpent like movements, allowing users to entwine with their opponents in defense while striking at angles they wouldn't expect in offense. As emphasized by Chi-Chi during the World Tournament in her match with Goku and later her training sessions with Goten, she used a lot of open palm style and finger strikes, reminiscent of snake strikes.

XXX

User - Piccolo

Style - Wild Demon Fist

Real or OC - Original creation

Description - A style used by King Piccolo, which he named, it is the main fighting style used exclusively by the warrior in all of his battles, emphasizing powerful strikes, clawed hand movements and slashes. Though this style was named by Piccolo, it is actually a form of Namekian martial arts, used by many warriors of the old race, including Nail.

This was the main style Piccolo taught to Gohan when he was a kid, which he used in combination with his own style and strength to compensate for his short stature and lack of reach. It was ideal for the young demi-Saiyan starting out in his training, and he used this style as the foundations for the martial arts he would use in the future.

XXX

User – Krillin

Style – Northern Praying Mantis
Real or OC – Real

Origin – Chinese Kung Fu

Description - Also known as Shandong Praying Mantis from its province of origin, it is a style which emphasizes striking at vital spots with distinctive hooks and punches, and also the use of whip-like and circular movements. It is also known for its speed, elbow and knee strikes, as well as its complex footwork derived from the Monkey Style martial arts.

XXX

User – Hercule

Style – Shotokan

Real or OC – Real

Origin – Japanese Karate

Description - While it is difficult to place the exact origin of Hercule's fighting style, as it seems to incorporate techniques from numerous martial arts including Judo, WWE (lol) and kick boxing, the most distinctive feature of Mr. Satan's style is his low, horse riding stances and emphasis on the seiken punch, which is a fully rotating corkscrew blow thrown from the waist. This indicates that Hercule's main fighting style is derivative of karate, most likely Shotokan . This fighting style was first adopted by the Japanese military back in World War II as a physical conditioning system to instill the spirit of Bushido in the enlisted soldiers, and serves as the foundations for many styles used today.

XXX

User – Tienshinhan

Style – White Crane Style

Real or OC – Real

Origin – Chinese Kung Fu

Description - Also known as the Fujian White Crane , it is a Southern Chinese martial arts style that originated in the Fujian province. It was developed by a female martial artist, strongly associated with traditional fighting techniques, including long range, as well as close range and hand-to-hand combat skills. It is a very graceful style imitating the movements of a crane.

Because Tien and Chiaotzu originated from the Crane School, it is expected that their main fighting style would reflect aspects of or would be in some way related to this form. It is featured briefly in Dragonball Z Resurrection F , where Tien is seen fighting off Frieza's forces using movements reminiscent of this fighting style, as well as during the World Tournament arc of the original Dragonball.

XXX

User – Videl

Style – Taekwondo & Hapkido
Real or OC – Real

Origin – Korean martial arts

Description – Going off base from her father, many of Videl's movements and attacks are derivative of a lot of the techniques from these two respective styles, as the teen seems to favor using fast kicks and disarming movements, particularly against criminals and larger opponents. This is understandable as Taekwondo was originally derived from other martial arts including Japan's Karate and China's Kung Fu styles during the 1940s. This makes it a very holistic style, emphasizing quick strikes, kicks and holds. Hapkido on the other hand deals in self-defense and disarmament techniques designed to deal with people armed with weapons, as well as the flow of movement and motion, where the fighter would use the opponent's weight and shift momentum against them.

XXX

User – Set, Goddess of Storms

Style – Northern and Southern Dragon Style(s)

Real or OC – Real

Origin – Chinese Kung Fu

Description – A Chinese style of martial arts, these two forms rely on a variety of techniques that can be employed for a wide range of needs. It can cripple or kill an opponent if need be or be used to settle simple disputes. Both forms use a variety of hand, palm, fist and claw strikes, with the Southern style relying on upper body techniques as opposed to the Northern style, which the latter allows for a greater usage of kicks. The styles were created as aggressive combat arts, though control and softness is also encouraged by masters of these forms. The dragon-like smoothness of the blows also helps disguise a lot of attacks, making it difficult for opponents to effectively counter.

Since Set comes from another world that is not human, her main fighting style probably wasn't named the Dragon Style, but her movements and techniques are very similar to those practiced on Planet Earth. As expected, Set was a master of this form and used it very effectively to disable opponents, strike at joints and vital spots, upset their techniques, and attack with limited effort. When aggression was required, she could attack with fearsome power and precision. Because Gods like Beerus and Whis practice only one form of martial arts related to their respective cultures and genres as beings of absolute power and destruction, which involves a lot of pressure point strikes and swift, accurate blows with the hands and feet to deal the maximum amount of damage, they have no need to learn any other styles. Each of the Gods is a master of one style from their race, which is most often characteristic of their mythologies.

XXX

User – Zangya

Style – Changquan

Real or OC – Real

Origin – Chinese Wushu/Kung Fu
Description - Also known as Long Fist, it is a fighting style associated with wushu and Northern styles of Chinese Shaolin kung fu, emphasizing strong, extended kicks, speed, power, and fighting techniques, making it a long-range style that possesses terrific grace and form. It is a very complicated style often practiced from childhood, as it requires great flexibility and dexterity.

Though Zangya's fighting style originates from her race and home planet, many of the techniques she uses is strongly related to this martial arts form.
Million of light years away from Earth where all the excitement was taking place, on the pyramid shaped world owned by arguably the most destructive force in the universe, everything was peaceful and quiet. That was until the loud booming of explosions and shockwaves began reverberating inside the main temple, which not only shook the sweeping valleys and disturbed the water, but also the enormous tree growing out of its center.

From the sounds of it, it almost seemed like a couple of the residents had started up some sort of scuffle. But that was not the case.

Inside the enormous cavern like chamber that was Beerus's bedroom, where several hourglasses and platforms of rock could be seen floating about the room, the God of Destruction was roused from his sleep by a particularly loud bang. Eyes flickering open, the purple anthropomorphic cat with the large ears, long tail and wearing a white nightgown sat up from his circular bed and stared at the cliff wall of his bedroom groggily. Dazed and confused, he then looked over to the space beside his cot, where he spotted a handful of figures sitting atop a large couch he couldn't recall being there before, with their feet kicked up and a large box of popcorn sitting between them.

"Oh. Good evening, Beerus," the cheery voice of the dark elf in the silky white dress and strips wrapped around her body greeted after finally noticing the man sitting up in his bed. "Did we wake you? Sorry about that. Have a good sleep?"

Blinking away the haze of his surroundings, the purple feline raised an eyebrow, "Aphrodite? What the heck are you doing here?" He then noticed the other people sitting alongside her. "And who are they?"

Giggling, the raven haired girl gestured to the three people sitting alongside her. "These are your planet's guests. The man with the scars on his face and wearing the outdated Saiyan armor is Bardock, God of War from Universe 6… and the girl in the hot leather lingerie and coat is Cleopatra; Isis's apprentice."

"Oh. That's nice," the purple God responded with a deadpan voice, before the frown on his face became all the more prominent. "Why the hell are they in my bedroom?"

"Well… I was getting a little bored sitting around the fields checking Cupid's daily reports and paperwork all day long, so I decided to bring these guys in here to watch some television."

"Television?" Beerus murmured, before turning in the direction his three visitors were staring in. When he looked at another part of the cavern wall, he saw a two hundred foot, cinema-sized plasma screen television switched on and playing multiple recordings of some sort of martial arts competitions. Though the fights taking place on the flat screen were intense, what had the God of Destruction's immediate attention was the object playing the feed itself. "I don't remember having that in here."
Reaching into the large box next to her, Aphrodite pulled up another handful of popcorn and shoved them into her mouth. "I made a quick stop over at the closest star system and bought one, then had my subordinates install it." She then waved her hand flippantly. "I could've done it myself, but my boys can do it a hell of a lot better than I can... plus I pay them."

"Uh-huh," Beerus nodded sleepily, his brain still attempting to make sense of everything that was being said to him. Once he was done processing, he looked back at the trio with his half-lidded gaze. "While I don't mind you buying one, did you have to set it up in my room? There are plenty of other places you could've put it."

"This was the only room that didn't have a stupid glare coming in from the twenty suns sitting outside. I could've destroyed them, but Whis and Isis-chan would be cross with me, so I decided not to," Aphrodite said through a mouthful of popcorn. When she swallowed, she looked back at him. "Plus the acoustics in here are the bomb. You can practically feel the surround sound hitting you in the face." She then elbowed one of her friends in the side. "You guys think so too, right?"

Bardock, arms crossed and a serious look in play, responded with a shrug. "Yeah. Whatever."

"It's nice," Cleopatra replied, at the same time watching the battles on screen with a big smile on her face.

"So there you go," Aphrodite answered, using her magic to summon a bottle of soda out of thin air and taking a long sip from it.

From the look on Beerus's face, the God of Destruction didn't appear to find her reasoning very convincing. That or he was just a little annoyed from being woken up so early in his hibernation cycle. Glancing at one of his nearby floating hourglasses, he saw that he had a couple more years left on it before it was set to go off, which had his eye twitch in annoyance. However, before he could voice this complaint with his intruders, he unexpectedly saw his servant Whis teleport out of thin air and plant himself on the space directly beside the Goddess of Love.

A box of popcorn sitting in his lap, the man with blue skin, white hair, and wearing a pair of purple and yellow striped pajamas, smiled happily at the big screen. "My... this is so exciting. I can't remember the last time we had a movie night and a slumber party." Helping himself to his snack, he then noticed that his apprentice was awake, and didn't hesitate for one moment in waving him over. "Come on, Beerus-sama. Why don't you join us?"

Initially hesitant at his teacher's offer, the feline soon caught whiff of the freshly popped corn and, feeling his stomach growl, made the decision to join them rather than just lie on his bed and do nothing. Dragging his feet over to the couch, which magically extended to include another seat for him, Beerus planted himself next to Whis and, getting comfortable, accepted his master's offer of popcorn and beverage. When he turned to the channel playing on the wall, he saw a series of warriors battling each other over different terrains, on a world that didn't appear all that familiar to him. After glancing between the multiple cameras and shots, the God of Destruction spoke up.

"What exactly are we watching?" Switching from window to window, Beerus then proceeded to point out the combatants. "From the looks of it, there appears to be a couple of puny mortals squabbling senselessly with each other on two different planets."

Aphrodite shrugged when she heard the man's comment. "I heard from Cupid that a gladiator matchup of some kind was being broadcast across the entire Northern Quadrant between a few of my district's clients, so I had the television lock onto the signal so that we could watch it."

Finger tapping against his bicep, the ever-serious Bardock craned his head upwards, "To be honest, it's starting to get really interesting… especially the battle between the two Super Saiyans."

"Super Saiyans?" Beerus muttered, scratching his cheek absently while also staring at the flat screen. "Hmm… I don't know why, but that name sounds very familiar to me… Super Saiyan…"

Seeing that the still groggy God of Destruction was lost in thought, a present Whis and Aphrodite chose not to interject, and simply fixed their attention back on the television. As they continued to watch the multiple screens intently, sharing the popcorn and taking sips from the beverages they'd brought with them, the fights taking place on screen quickly began heating up…

OOO

(Meanwhile)

(Bulma's Group)

A similar gathering had taken place over in King Koku's courtyard, where the aforementioned ruler of the land and his staff had taken up comfortable positions on a series of chairs, to continue watching the multitude of fights unfolding on the hologram in front of them. Even the kitchen staff had gotten in on the action, bringing out various snacks, confectionaries and drinks for all of the people sitting out in the sun. It certainly was a welcome relief to those who were present, as the once nervous crowd was now hanging on the edge of their seats and watching with anticipation who out of the remaining contestants would come out on top.

While Bulma sat beside the large spider tank San in the background, arms crossed and an anxious expression in play, she suddenly became aware of a few feet tapping down beside her. When she looked, she saw Krillin stroll onto the scene, accompanied by his two CAT droid opponents.

From the looks of it, he'd been through one hell of a brawl with the robots, both of whom were covered in band aids and bandages… oddly enough.

"So… what did I miss?" the short fighter asked, his attention set squarely on the projection in the center of the courtyard. "How are the others going?"

The blue haired scientist smiled and turned back to the broadcast. "They're doing pretty well actually. Goten, Trunks and Eighteen just finished wrapping up their battles. So has Videl and her group. They're still hanging around the newly formed inlet they'd created on the other side of the continent. And Vegeta is currently heading over to where Zangya is fighting Maya… albeit at an incredibly slow pace. Not surprising, considering my husband had the stuffing beaten out of him during his fight."

"Uh-huh," Krillin chirped, rubbing a swollen cheek before then glancing about the screen. "And what's the scoop on the ones that are still going on?"

"Well, Zangya is having a bit of trouble trying to get around her opponent's massive bulk. Even though she's big, that Maya girl can still move pretty fast… and she's got quite a few clever tricks up her sleeve," Bulma informed, turning her attention to the screen where she could see the Super Oozaru belching fire out of her mouth and trying to hit an opponent with a size equivalent to a fly. "The two of them are really giving each other hell."

"And… what's going on with Tien?" Obviously he was worried about the state of his best mate, especially one who was full-blooded human and not some extraterrestrial monster.

"The man fights harder than most of you guys combined," Bulma remarked, crossing her arms and raising an eyebrow at the screen featuring the triclops in question. "The problem is that his opponent is armored and keeps using these strange counter measures to dodge all of his big attacks. It's almost like Tien is fighting a fast-moving submarine in a game of cat-and-mouse." She then glanced over at the largest window, which was showing the fight between the two main contestants in this interplanetary tournament. "However, the best fight that's going on is definitely the one between Gohan and Sandra."

"Ah. Our fabulous hero. How's he holding up?" Krillin blinked curiously, "Kicking major butt… or is that just me being optimistic?"

"Super now," Bulma answered enthusiastically, but then backtracked slightly. "At the beginning he was getting his ass kicked. Anytime Gohan tried to do something, his opponent would counter him with a punch or a kick to the face, and knock his lights out. He was getting beat on so badly that he was practically at the point of passing out. But then, out of nowhere, he started impersonating all of you guys and using your moves against his opponent. It messed up her sense of timing and gave him the upper hand." She then clenched her fists and brought them up. "Now it's dead even between the two of them."

"Where are the two wonder kids now?" Krillin asked, looking up at the screen and watching the two golden blurs clashing on an unknown countryside.

"Well… they've just finished trashing Mars," Bulma recounted thoughtfully. "All that's left of it is half of a now oval shaped planet and an entire field of debris orbiting it. Now they've decided to take their battle all the way to Pluto."

"Ah," Krillin nodded in understanding, moments before his eyes widened and turned to the woman in surprise, "Wait, what?"

OOO

(Meanwhile)

(Pluto)

The state Gohan and Sandra had left Mars in following their little scrum on its surface was, for lack of a better expression, a work of art. Just like Bulma had described, the once gorgeous, perfectly rounded planet had been transformed into an oval of red dirt, with its entire southern hemisphere blown to kingdom come. What's more, the remains of that half had been scattered around the planet's space, leaving it with its own veritable asteroid belt.

Following the trail of destruction, the pair's battle inevitably reached the very outer reaches of the solar system. There, on the smallest, coldest and most isolated planet in the region, the two Super Saiyans began laying into one another with reckless abandon, not caring how much damage they caused as long as their opponent felt most of it. However, this being more of a contest of skill as opposed to a contest of strength, the duo was making one hell of a show of it.

Shockwaves rang out across the frozen planet in droves. On the western plains facing towards the sun, imbued in the glows of their respective Super Saiyan 3 forms, Gohan and Sandra could be seen locked in a heated exchange of blows.

Parrying a series of kicks, Gohan ducked and countered with a kick of his own, forcing his opponent to block. Upon which both fighters threw a right cross at each other, their knuckles impacting in the middle and sending both warriors skidding back across the frozen tundra.

The moment they stopped, with a cloud of ice and dust billowing about them, both warriors set themselves into low stances of two completely different fighting styles.

Clenching her fists tightly and cracking her knuckles, Sandra shifted her weight onto her back leg and held her arms straight out in front, one fist hovering over the other. From the looks of it, the stance she’d taken was reminiscent of the one found in Shao Bei Quan, but was really an extraterrestrial form similar to it.

Responding to her style accordingly, Gohan brought both his arms forward and assumed a wide, low stance with his left side facing forward. In addition to this, he also had his knuckles turned downwards and his index fingers extended, adopting the use of the phoenix eye fists. Judging from his own posture and arm positions, he was now using the Choy Li Fut style, emphasizing pressure point strikes and extensive use of the upper body.

Despite their battered and bruised states, both Saiyans were fired up and ready for another round, the pair of teenagers shooting their opponent a smile.

Letting out a yell as she rushed forward, Sandra leapt into the air and threw a side kick at her foe. Gohan attempted to block with his arm, but was sent stumbling back from the force of the blow impacting his limb. When he stopped, the demi-Saiyan blocked a second roundhouse kick, before being forced to catch a downward strike from the woman. Grappling with her momentarily, he then threw her arms off and dropped both of his on top of her. The female empress deflected his downward swings and returned fire with her own. Gohan backed away, using his forearms to block. After which he then stepped forward and drove two fists into her chest and stomach simultaneously.

Despite the hit, Sandra was able to counter her opponent with a sharp front kick to the chest, knocking the Z-fighter back under the force.

A winded Gohan quickly recovered from the attack and reset his position. As soon as he did, Sandra spun at him once again, letting out a yell as her arms flew at the young warrior from long range. Her fierce assault forced the demi-Saiyan onto the defensive, parrying her strikes one after the other. Due to the rotating nature of her attacks, Gohan was pushed into a steady retreat.

Following a particularly vicious string of punches, the demi-Saiyan lunged forward, swinging his arms in and attempting to clap his opponent on both sides of the head. Sandra moved back to avoid it. After that, Gohan then spun in low and attempted to hit her with a strike to the kidney, only for his foe to block it, spin around, and nail him in the side of the head with a spinning back kick.

The blow knocked Gohan tumbling across the planet, bouncing painfully off of the ground several times before flipping back into an upright position. Coughing up some blood, he then reset his stance, gritting his teeth to fight off the pain. "Okay. That hurt like hell." Thanks to that shot, he was now seeing double.

Before his vision had a chance to recover, the teen then had to block another barrage of punches and kicks when Sandra came swinging at him a third time, using the momentum of her rotations to drive all of her attacks in. After Gohan unsuccessfully attempted to counter her with a kick of his own, he then redirected several more punches, until Sandra slipped one through his arms and nailed in the shoulder with a loud crack. Gohan shouted in pain and skidded backwards, gripping his joint. "Fuck! That's another bone!"

Sandra, giving another yell, swung her right foot up and dropped an axe kick towards Gohan’s head. Catching it, the hybrid slipped under the woman's split, grabbed her other leg and tossed her over his shoulder, throwing her into the air. His maneuver however backfired when he received a swift kick in the ribs when Sandra used the momentum from his throw to hit him on her descent.
Gripping his side with a shout of pain, the battered demi-Saiyan stumbled away. "Her legs are too damn strong! I can't fight against such a flamboyant style with a form like this! I have to change it up again!" Taking a few deep breaths to clear his head, the demi-Saiyan calmly slid his legs apart and assumed a low horse riding stance. Bringing his right fist to his face and sticking his left all the way out, Gohan then focused all of his attention on his foe, while simultaneously switching to Muay Boran. "Let's see how you fair against this one!"

Muay Boran was the traditional form of Muay Thai, which relied predominantly on well-timed, powerful kicks, knees and elbows to disorientate and defeat enemies. With the sturdy defense and powerful offense provided by this particular martial arts, Gohan was confident he could shift this battle in his favor.

Looking at the new stance Gohan had taken, Sandra narrowed her eyes suspiciously. Figuring it was just another ploy to deter her; the female Saiyan sprang forward and spun in with another kick. However, the moment her leg came swinging around, her opponent caught her completely by surprise by stepping forward and slamming his foot in her face with a straight kick. The counter knocked her flat on her ass, allowing Gohan to reset his stance and smirk.

"Appai!" he shouted, before stepping back and switching to southpaw.

Springing to her feet and massaging her jaw, Sandra then leapt at her opponent with another series of wild kicks. Her legs swung in and up at her foe, all aimed for the body and head. However, despite the speed and ferocity of her attacks, Gohan was able to check, block and knock all of them back. When she tried to throw another left roundhouse kick at him, the demi-Saiyan brought up his leg and stepped on her thigh before it had a chance to come around, knocking her off balance. When she then tried to spin at him with another backhand, Gohan instead jumped up, checked her arm with his leg, and dropped an elbow right down onto her skull.

"Appai! Appai!"

The loud crack was followed by Sandra stumbling away in a daze. When she recovered, she then attempted to hit her opponent again. But every time she tried to get close, Gohan repeatedly checked or parried her, using his knees and arms to stop her in her tracks. Sandra tried for a kick, but Gohan checked it and shoved her away with his hand. When she tried to throw a hook, the demi-Saiyan responded by slamming a front kick into her shoulder and knocking it back with a painful thud. She then followed up with a roundhouse kick, which Gohan blocked and struck when she landed with a kick of his own. After which the hybrid began driving repeated left roundhouse kicks into her thigh and hamstring, nearly causing her body to buckle from the vicious assault. To finish up, Gohan jumped forward and kneed her in the stomach, dropping her to the floor.

Gasping from the sharp blow to her ribs, Sandra rolled out of the way to avoid her foe's axe kick, which split the ground beneath them. The evasion placed her at a distance and allowed the woman to leap back to her feet. Body stinging from the pounding, the female warrior cursed. "Damn, he's got some seriously brutal kicks. I can't take too many more of those." Because his kicks were short, he could nail her faster than her more flamboyant punches and kicks. On top of that, he was using knees and elbows, which was really starting to hurt. "Alright. If you want to play dirty... let's play dirty."

As Gohan watched his opponent carefully down his extended fist, he raised an eyebrow when he saw Sandra lower her waist, widen her stance, and bring both her arms across her body, her right fist hovering at her cheek while her left was positioned low and across her torso. She also appeared to be leaning towards her right side with her left shoulder elevated and weaving from side to side, making her movements look very crablike.
Initially this confused Gohan. That was until he remembered seeing a very similar style during one of his free study periods. "Cross-armed defense? No… her left arm is positioned much lower and her shoulder is pressed up against her chin. The shoulder-roll defense." Whatever style it was, it looked to be very boxing-oriented, as her movements were mimicking that of a first-rate ring fighter. However, when Gohan looked down at her legs, he noticed she'd lowered herself into a crouching stance, very similar to the horse-riding stance. But something was off about it that had the teen sweat. "What exactly is she planning?"

Deciding to throw caution to the wind, Gohan kicked forward and shot towards his opponent with a left jab the instant he blurred into range. However, the second he threw his punch, Sandra head-slipped under it and opened up on the Saiyan with a left-overhand that caught the demi-Saiyan by surprise, who managed to block the counter with his arm. The attack slammed into his guard with such force it sent him skidding back across the icy field.

Alarmed, Gohan began backing away at high speed as Sandra came charging at him in a zigzag motion, her head weaving from side-to-side so fast the Z-fighter could barely track it. Taking advantage of his surprise, Sandra unleashed a series of swift straights and hooks, which the hybrid was forced to block and parry while retreating. He attempted to counter with a left roundhouse kick, but his opponent punched his thigh the instant he came up and knocked it to the ground. The startled Gohan then leant back to avoid another hook and retaliated with a swift side-kick up to the woman's head.

Sandra blocked with her cross-arm guard and shoved her opponent off his feet, sending him flying several dozen yards to smash into an icy glacier.

A crater being knocked into the mountain's side, Gohan gasped in shock and reset his stance and arm positions. He reacted just in time to begin blocking and dodging a second assault from Sandra. The female Saiyan hammered him with wide arcing punches and straights, at the same time head-slipping the hooks and counters Gohan attempted to land on her. She also managed to throw a swift right Senko at him, her attack shooting out with the whip-crack of a rifle. But Gohan ducked just in time to avoid the golden bolt of her fist, which struck the mountain behind him and disintegrated it in a blinding flash of light.

Not willing to stand there and get beaten into submission, the demi-Saiyan then threw a knee up at Sandra's gut, which she blocked with her own. The maneuver allowed the hybrid to force his way into her defense, grab her behind the head with his left, and ram his right elbow into her neck, locking her up.

The pair then began to grapple, with Sandra trapping Gohan inside her grip by locking her hands directly behind his head and forcing him down. The gutsy fighter from Earth then attempted to sweep the Saiyan's legs out with his own, but his opponent would constantly slide them out of reach, predicting his trips while also pulling him further towards the floor.

With the struggle getting them nowhere, Sandra decided to stop forcing her foe into submission and threw him across the countryside, sending the Super Saiyan 3 crashing through several hills. Upon which she spun and shot her foot out, unleashing a golden blast from her heel that chased after her target.

Back flipping and deflecting the blast into the sky at the same time, Gohan thrust both hands forward and fired two ki blasts at his foe, only to see her teleport out of the way and reappear at his side. After blocking her left hook, the demi-Saiyan then lashed out with his own fists, only to see Sandra head slip his punches with ease, allowing him to aim a swift roundhouse kick at her leg. However, with her foot firmly planted to the ground, she blocked it with her knee. When Gohan...
continued attacking her legs and body with his roundhouse kicks, the woman either blocked them with her elbows or cut them off with her knees, repeatedly stomping her feet forward in between his attacks and wedging them inside the boy's stance, putting the hero off balance.

The moment she saw Gohan stumble Sandra stretched her arm across his chest and kicked his legs out from under him, knocking the teen into the air before dropping him into the floor. Smashing a crater into Pluto's surface, the demi-Saiyan spat up blood before the woman swung her leg up and dropped it down on him in the form of a glowing axe-kick. Deflecting the charged attack with a swift kick of his own and causing her foot to slam into the floor next to him, punching a hole straight down to the other side of the planet with explosive force, Gohan then began slamming scissors kicks into Sandra's outstretched legs, all in an effort to take them out. He then leapt off of the floor and kicked her square in the abs, only to knock himself back when she held her ground. He then lunged with a hook, but Sandra blocked it and drove a left straight into his chest, knocking the boy several yards back.

Stopping in his tracks, a winded Gohan looked up to see Sandra smirking at him.

"Sorry, stallion. But there's no way you'll be able to break my iron horse stance. In this position, my legs are as solid as bedrock and my body as strong as steel," Sandra gloated, gesturing to her lowered waist and straight posture. Despite the bruises on her face, the blood dribbling from her mouth and the massive damage she'd sustained from their fight, she was still standing firm and at the ready. "This form is the second most used in my arsenal and has allowed me to defeat hundreds of warriors across the cosmos... and it will do the same to you! Give me your best shot!"

Hearing this put a smirk on Gohan's face. "That's a pretty bold claim there. Fine. If this has become a game of endurance, then let's see who breaks first." Upon which he then slid his left foot out and brought his arms around in a smooth and graceful motion. When they stopped, his left arm was bent awkwardly while his right hovered over it, protecting his body in a forward position with a non-threatening and soft-looking kung fu style. Breathing deeply, as if he'd practiced this hundreds of times before, the Saiyan angled his toes inwards and smirked. "Wing Chun... Ng Mui."

Sandra chuckled as she once again assumed her solid, cross-armed stance, "Iron Cat Fist... Shiera Mao."

Upon announcing their styles and the teachers whom they practiced them under, both Gohan and Sandra paced around the icy field, their arms extended in their respective forms. As they lapped, both fighters powered up, their golden auras bursting around them and lightning beginning to dance across the planet's skies, till the bolts could be seen covering the entire planet. With the world crumbling beneath their feet from the very energy they were exuding, the stage was set for yet another, fast-paced hitting match.

"She's using a hard-fist style with an incredibly awkward defense that emphasizes a high amount of upper-body weaving, head slips and a low center of gravity. Her attacks are also ridiculously powerful and she seems to be favoring a very long-reaching left jab that doubles as a hook, so that makes counter attacks for the head and chin on my end impossible," Gohan thought as his eyes traced over every inch of Sandra's frame. Upon which he frowned. "Her swings are wide, but she compensates for this by being fast and aggressive with her attacks. I may not be able to go for her head, but her body and core are pretty much open season. Let's see if I can't work with that."

"You're thinking of going for my body, aren't you?" Sandra thought when she noticed his lingering gaze. "Go for it. I'll cut you down before you can land anything big." By this time she'd already finished her own assessment. "He's subtly changing his rhythm every time we engage, so I can't rely on my timing to finish the job. I'll have to use a more direct approach if I want to finish him off. He also seems to have taken a narrower stance with forward hand positions, so that means the rotation in his punches and kicks will be minimized considerably. If my instincts are telling me anything, his attacks are going to be coming in much faster than before." If she had to guess, it would place him in the exact same category she was fighting in.

Interesting.

Sandra's eyes then flashed mischievously. "But by favoring speed, you're sacrificing a great deal of power in your attacks... and that means softer punches. I wonder how you'll cope."

After sizing each other up, the invader decided to make the first move.

Eyes widening, Sandra fired an invisible kiai at Gohan's head, who head-slipped it before diving into her range. He then ducked to avoid the opening jabs and long hooks that Sandra began swinging out at him with terrifying accuracy. Dodging her punches, Gohan unloaded swift bursts of chain punches into her chest and torso, landing ten punches with every one she threw. His attacks hit like beestings, aggravating the woman and prompting her to swing out faster, only to miss when he dodged and hammered another chain punch combo into her side.

When he avoided another right straight, Gohan snapped a kick into her back leg, only to see her parry it with her leg and swing at him with yet another hook. Slipping under it, the demi-Saiyan fired a swift body blow into her side, followed by a shot to her head, which she skillfully parried and countered with an uppercut. Gohan barely avoided the blow when it grazed past his cheek and forced him to perform a series of parries, before dropping low and unleashing more chain punches into her stomach. Seeing his head directly beneath her, a determined Sandra aimed a body blow for the side of his head, only to watch the boy tuck-and-roll between her legs, catching her back-leg at the same time.

This maneuver forced Sandra into a split when Gohan used his full bodyweight to dislodge her foot and drag her leg back with his roll. The moment they stopped, with the demi-Saiyan lying on his back and hugging Sandra's extended calf, the boy swung his own leg back and slammed a kick into the girl's face, releasing her at the same time and sending the Saiyan Empress bolting across Pluto's surface, tearing a massive trench through the ice. She crashed into a mountain a hundred miles away, which went up in a shower of rubble.

Rolling back to his feet, Gohan gritted his teeth and took a stance, waiting for his opponent to retaliate. After watching the clouds in the distance fade, his eyes then widened when he saw her teleport directly in front of him, already in motion to throw a punch. Before he could even parry, Sandra clocked him with a killer right overhand, knocking blood and spit from his mouth. She then proceeded to bash him.

Recovering quickly, Gohan parried her next blows and checked her kick, before catching the girl's hook with his arm and, simultaneously, landing a chop on her neck.

A crack rang out when Gohan's blow hit, but the boy winced when he realized the muscles in her collar had dulled his pressure point blow and broke his finger. Recoiling in pain left the hybrid wide open for a punch from Sandra and sent the hero stumbling away. Before the girl could follow up with another blow, Gohan snapped a kick out at her stomach, stopping her momentarily.

Recovering from the shot to the face, Gohan shook his hand out and brought his guard back up, where he was quick to meet Sandra's next assault. Blocking and deflecting her heavy punches with a series of elaborate hand checks, the teen tried to lock her left arm up when she attempted to nail him with an uppercut. He countered with a palm strike to her face. But Sandra blocked it, freeing her arm from his hold and retaliating with hooks. Ducking her big swings and blocking her uppercut, Gohan then stuck his hand out at her face, alarming her and forcing the female Saiyan to bring both arms up to guard.

It was a good thing she did because the instant her arms went up Gohan unleashed a hell storm of chain punches on her arms that hammered her defense in a blur of motion. The sounds of rapid cannon fire rang out with every blow Gohan landed, Sandra's feet skidding back along the floor under the force of his assault.

Snarling through the salvo, Sandra forced Gohan's arms away and countered with hooks, only for the demi-Saiyan to block them and continue throwing chain punches at her. The boy maneuvered around the girl and her rock solid stance, peppering her body with endless chain punches, forcing her to curl up and move her arms around to protect herself. The moment her arms returned to her face, Gohan spotted an opening and slipped an uppercut right under her turtle guard, knocking her head skywards with a thunderclap. As soon as he did, he then uncorked a kick right into her chest and sent her sliding back.

Stopping, Sandra groaned and rubbed her chin, spitting out a tooth before looking at the footprint slapped against her breasts. Brushing it off, the female Super Saiyan 3 growled, slammed her knuckles into her chest like a wild woman, and brought her fists up into a boxing stance.

"COME ON! BRING IT!" she screamed, bolting forward with blazing speed.

Gohan braced himself and switched hand positions, before his eyes widened when he saw his opponent spin through the air and slice at him with an aerial heel kick, prompting him to cross both arms over his face.

The tremendous blow that followed powered Gohan across the planet, slamming into several mountains along the way. When he stopped several leagues across Pluto's surface, the young Saiyan brought his hands to his forehead and, powering up, chanted at the top of his lungs. "MAESENKO-HAAAAAA!" Golden energy erupted from his hand and thundered across the planet, shredding the surface as it traveled.

Sandra countered immediately by lifting up her glowing foot and thrusting a side kick towards the oncoming blast, hurtling a fully charged attack of her own across the icy land. "RAIKO YARIIIIII!" The two golden blasts impacted one another and engaged in a fierce tug-of-war match, which formed a golden, pulsating dome in the middle of the frozen countryside. The clashing blasts expanded, incinerating the land and sending rubble everywhere.

Seconds after the beams clashed, an enormous explosion went out, which gradually began to swallow up the entire celestial body. As Pluto started to split, inside the blast, both Gohan and Sandra charged at one another. Yelling at the top of their lungs, the pair of warriors collided in the heart of the cataclysm, moments before they vanished and the entire planet lit up like a thermonuclear firework.

For about ten seconds, the Solar System was graced with a second sun, before it vanished into nothing.

OOO

(While)

(Grand Kai's Planet)

As Gohan and Sandra's battle raged on, the North and West Kai contingents watching the fight from the Grand Kai's front lawn via the television were clenching their fists in excitement; looking on as yet another planet was destroyed in their battle. While the fate of Pluto did have North Kai groan and slap his forehead, the other people there didn't give two flips about the ball of ice as they all began making bets as to who would throw in the towel first and which planet would crumble next.

Upon seeing the pair of Super Saiyans vanish via teleportation, Olibu leaned over and nudged Pikkon in the side, "A hundred thousand pushups says Mercury is next."

Glancing at his training rival and back towards the screen, the green warrior in the weighted training gear then cracked a smile, "A hundred and fifty thousand pushups says Earth's moon is next."

"Deal."

Goku, catching wind of the gambling going on behind him between his two friends, also turned around and held up a hand, "Hey, let me get in on that action."

While the three warriors began blurting out absurd, random numbers, since it was the only currency they had to spend as dead people, Baba, who was watching the screen with keen interest, floated closer to the television and narrowed her eyes. When she saw the two Saiyans remerge, plummeting towards the surface of the sun while simultaneously locked in combat, the old fortuneteller spoke up.

"Gohan and Sandra are nearly reaching their limits," Baba said, seeing the pair trade bone crushing blows to the body and face respectively. Her words drew the attention of the entire group, allowing the witch to turn around with a grave expression in play, "Even though the two of them seem to be holding up physically, they're still landing a tremendous amount of blows on each other. The fact that they're still able to see straight after all the hits they've received is astonishing."

"True. They may be powerful and incredibly gifted warriors… perhaps the greatest of their generation, the body can only take so much punishment," King Kai informed, his hands crossed and a bead of sweat trickling down the side of his face. "If this keeps up, both of them are going to end up beating each other to death."

"That is unless one of them burns out first," the West Kai concluded with a flash of his monocle, drawing a nod of agreement from his companions.

Hearing this line of talk caused the three apprentices in the troop to cease their elicit activity of wagering pushups and returned their attention to the television. There, they saw Gohan nail Sandra in the face with several chain punches, before the woman countered with a knee to his body. Hearing the sounds of battle carry on prompted the Saiyan father to clench his fists and narrow his eyes in determination.

"You can do it son. Just keep fighting at your own pace," Goku thought.

OOO

(Back on Earth)

(Tien & Mobi)

Dodging a hail of missiles fired from his opponent's back, the three-eyed martial artist, sporting burns and bruises all over his chiseled body, along with a fresh new scar across his abdominals, brought his hands forward and unleashed an onslaught of golden blasts at his foe. "Take this!" His attacks arced towards the rotund, armored robot hovering several stories above him. But just when they seemed like they would hit, the automaton fired up a couple of boosters from its side panel and evaded, while at the same time discharging a cluster of electrical balls that caused the fighter's energy blasts to veer away and follow them. "Damn it! Stop doing that!"

"Beep-beep!" the robot replied. (But if I do, you'll hit me)

Grunting as he dropped altitude sharply in order to stay in sight of his retreating foe, Tien grumbled to himself. "You're right. Dumb request." He then powered up and, crossing his arms over his chest, concentrated on his next technique. "Alright then. If one opponent isn't going to work on you, how about ten? Multi Form!" In the blink of an eye, the human warrior suddenly split himself into ten identical copies, all of whom scattered and charged towards the robot from all sides, with the intent of surrounding him.

A group of three managed to get in front of the droid, who applied its airbrakes to stop from crashing into the group when they rushed him. Its cracked visor flickering with various numbers and calculations, the large robot was unable to process its opponent's intentions fast enough when it was suddenly assaulted from all sides by ten Tiens. The group of clones pummeled the robot's armor from above, behind, in front and below, driving home attacks with the hopes of piercing through and getting at the droid's soft underbelly.

However, its armor was tough, and even with their combined efforts, the Tiens were hard-pressed trying to land any good damage on it.

The fact that they weren't able to land a solid hit meant that Mobi was able to perform a daring and successful escape. The robot suddenly launched itself into a spin with its arms outstretched, smacking its attackers away, before using the rockets on its feet to blast upwards. In doing so it unleashed another cluster of electrical flashes, which scattered between a couple of the Tien clones and electrocuted them.

When the clones vanished back into its host, the remaining few then aimed their fingers up at the retreating droid and powered up.

"Not so fast!" one of the remaining Tiens shouted.

"Dodon Ray!" the clones yelled in unison, before unleashing multiple orange beams after the flying robot.

Spotting the incoming attacks, Mobi began maneuvering between the blasts as quickly and gracefully as it could. Performing rolls and flips like a jet fighter, the robot was able to avoid a majority of the warrior's shots. That was until a single beam hit it in the foot and knocked out one of its primary thrusters. Its rocket boot exploding in a shower of debris, the droid then began a long plummet towards the Earth's surface, with Tien letting out a successful yell of triumph.

"Bulls eye!" the bruised and battered martial artist exclaimed.

His victory was short-lived however. As Mobi was falling back towards the planet, the battle-damaged automaton suddenly took aim and fired a cluster of red energy balls at the martial artist, forcing him and his copies to avoid. However, the energy spheres didn't need to make contact with their targets to cause damage, as they all detonated prematurely and caught the original Tien in the center. The bald martial artist ended up falling out of the sky too; crashing into the landmass the pair had been fighting over. His clones quickly dispelled back into him.

After both fighters ended up burying themselves in the ground and the dust settled around them, they then struggled to their feet and glared across at one another.

Lights flickering and blinking, the armored Mobi stomped out of the crater he'd formed and began marching towards Tien's position.

Seeing his opponent approaching, the warrior acted quickly and leapt to his feet. Setting himself into a firm stance, the man concentrated and held his hands up to form a diamond shape in front of him. Taking it a step further, Tien then used his Four Witches Technique to produce two more arms from his shoulders, and arranged them into a second diamond directly in front of the first. It was through this technique he intended to magnify his next attack and hit his opponent with several times the force he would with the conventional blast.

With his foe standing directly in his crosshairs, the Z-fighter was ready.

White aura springing up around him, Tien unleashed his attack, "TRI-BEEEAAAM-HAAAAAAA!" A deafening howl rang out as an orange blast erupted from his hands, tearing across the landscape and incinerating the ground it covered. When the head of the attack eventually reached Mobi, it hit the walking tank like a tsunami of light and fire, engulfing the robot and causing the land around it to crumble.

As the ground disintegrated inside the eye of the attack, the automaton continued to march through it, raising its right arm in an attempt to block out the storm. Tien continued to feed energy into his attack, gritting his teeth as he watched his foe draw closer and closer. Eventually, just when Mobi was several feet away from its goal, the blast finally got to him, the inferno of the attack knocking the robot off its feet and sending him tumbling across the countryside.

When Tien saw his opponent go down, he cut off the energy to his blast and powered down. Panting heavily as he watched the dust settle across the island, he saw that a massive, square-shaped trench had been carved through the earth all the way to the ocean. A great deal of water had been evaporated from the force of his attack, as evident by the enormous cloud of condensation hanging above the bay.

Limping down the length of geometrically perfect destruction, the battle-damaged and effectively shirtless rendered Tien arrived at a pile of broken pieces of armor. Sitting not too far away from it, he spotted the unmistakable form of his opponent lying under a mound of dust and debris. When he noticed it sift, the human immediately dropped into a defensive stance, expecting his foe to attack.

But when Mobi sat up, the bald martial artist blinked in surprise when he saw that, underneath the plates of armor, the robot was actually big, white, bubble man, with two black optical sensors for eyes, stubby arms, stubby legs, and a big torso. When he saw the robot turn to him and stare, Tien stared right back at it.

"Beep," (I lost) Mobi spoke.

Eye swollen, the bald Z-fighter tilted his head, "Umm… okay?" He then became even more perplexed when he saw the robot stand up, waddle out of the trench, and instantly find interest in a couple of birds fluttering around, which he absently followed. Tien watched the squishy robot walk off, completely losing interest in him and their fight. "So… what do I do now?"

Just let the robot wander off by his lonesome or take him back with him? Honestly, he was more used to destroying opponents completely and asking questions later. This was a first for him.
"Hey," the Namekian in the shawl spoke from his side of the rock, watching as the frustrated warrior from Earth glared up at him. "Just out of curiosity... how many of our kind have you joined bodies with so far?"

Piccolo blinked at the casual way his counterpart just brought this subject up... and in the middle of such an intense game too. "That's a rather odd question to ask... not to mention kind of personal."

"Call it an old man's curse," Gast chuckled, placing his hands on his lap as he leaned towards his brother in arms. "But just between you and me, how many? I'm well aware of all the techniques and rituals practiced by our people, and given that your energy level is so much higher than most other warriors I've encountered in the past, it simply begs the question as to how you were able to obtain such strength."

Mulling it over for a moment soon led the fighter from Earth to glaring down at the pieces in front of him. Seeing how many he had left in comparison to Gast and the positions of said numbers, he was at a bit of a loss as to what to do next. "I fused with two others of my kind... a native from our home planet named Nail... and the one the people of this world referred to as Kami, who was previously the good half of my previous incarnation."

"Your previous self was split in two?" Gast repeated with a look of surprise. "I'm sure there was a good reason for that."

"It was a sacrifice my original embodiment was willing to make in order to be accepted as the new guardian of this planet," Piccolo replied, before then giving a humorless shrug. "We were separated for over a hundred years... and in that time a lot of things happened, from storms, to wars, to worldwide disasters, to alien invasions."

"I can only imagine," the elder Namekian remarked, propping his chin on his hand while resting an elbow on his lap. "Some really terrifying battles must have taken place to prompt you into joining bodies with two others."

"They were certainly a necessity on my part," the warrior from Earth stated while closing his eyes. "The fusion on Namek was done partly out of kindness and partly out of a means to gain strength to defeat the one who massacred our entire race. The other was done during a time our group had hit a dead end and was desperate for a quick resolution." He then looked up and faced his counterpart with a no-nonsense glare. "Though I wound up outclassed at the end of every major engagement, I was still able to play my part in the battles and was a big help to everyone involved... and have been for many years."

A big smile spread across Gast's lips, "The path to self-improvement is always rife with challenges and adversity."

"What about you?" Piccolo asked, raising an eyebrow at his fellow Namekian, "Your power level is nothing to sneeze at either. How did you manage to get so strong?"

Gast chuckled and leant back on his stone seat, "You caught a glimpse of my history... so you should have some idea as to how I did it." When he saw Piccolo was still listening to him, the man then took a deep breath and craned his head towards the sky above them, where they could see three of the planet's moons floating in orbit. "I was born into a world connected to countless others..."
like it, filled with dangers and environments that were not fit to sustain life. But as treacherous as it was, I wasn't going to let any of it stop me. I went out there, faced the darkness… and overcame every bad guy, monster and obstacle that stood in my way." He glanced back at Piccolo with a smirk. "In the decades to follow, I worked as a mercenary, a body guard, a tradesman, a bounty hunter, a prisoner, and a slave… someone who fought and bled at every stage and turning point in his life, without pause. No matter where I went, there was always conflict… always a battle to be won. It soon got to the point where I'd fought almost every kind of alien in the known universe, from bugs, to primates, to self-proclaimed deities. My God…" A chuckle left his lips. "You should have seen me in my prime. I was unstoppable."

"Sounds like you've lived a very charming life," Piccolo commented, reaching forward and moving another piece around. "Dole." When he looked up again, he heard Gast give a short laugh at the strategy he was using, "I'd hate to see such an amazing legacy cut short."

"I'm not going to let it end either," the man in the shawl and sash answered, picking up a rock and nudging it forward. "Sho mafe." Seeing his opponent grit his teeth, Gast then crossed his arms and tilted his head. "But honestly, out of all of us, I'd say you're the lucky one. You ended up landing on a peaceful planet and making friends with so many good people. You were able to lead a life that many of us dreamed of finding."

"Do you really mean that?"

"I do," Gast admitted with a broad smile, "And I don't give out compliments like that very often. Believe me."

A smirk then tugged at Piccolo's lips, "A life of adventure doesn't sound so bad either. Gaining strength by battling countless warriors across the galaxy? Had the circumstances of our respective exiles been reversed, I wouldn't have minded ending up in your shoes. But that's just me speaking personally."

This drew a look of interest from the elder Namekian, "I see." When he saw the green man's expression change, Gast then raised a hand. "Very well, if that's the case, then permit me this modest proposal. Considering you've now learned the mechanics of this game, how about we up the stakes a bit with a little wager?"

Piccolo frowned, "I'm listening."

"If you win, I will give you everything that I own," Gast offered, gesturing to the planet around them, "This garden, the animals, my position… and all the secrets and techniques I've learned over the past three hundred years. With my knowledge and experience, I can make you the most powerful Namekian in the known universe and one of the strongest warriors in existence."

"Okay…" the Namekian from Earth then narrowed his eyes, "And if I lose?"

"Your planet has wishing jewels, am I correct?" When he saw Piccolo blink in confusion, Gast elaborated. "The magical crystals forged from a Namekian's life force that, when brought together, can be used to summon a great guardian dragon to grant the user a single or multiple wishes?"

"Oh. You mean the dragon balls?" Piccolo asked, clearing his throat, "Yes. We have them."

"Well, if you lose, I would very much like to use your crystals to make a small wish of my own. It's nothing too big or selfish like eternal life or anything like that, just something I would like to cross off of my bucket list," Gast explained, appearing both sincere and honest with his request.
Giving his opponent a long, silent stare, as if trying to determine whether the man had any ill intent behind his words, Piccolo quickly came to a conclusion and nodded. "Alright. Deal." As soon as he said that, he watched Gast raise his hand and telekinetically return the pieces on the board to their original positions. Having already played this game a couple of times, the Namekian from Earth wasn't at all surprised to see the man clear the slate and start the new round from scratch. "First one to reach a triple mafe wins?"

"Sure," Gast replied, at the same time giving his opponent a competitive smirk. "I'll let you make the first move."

And with that, a serious Piccolo then reached forward and pushed his first piece into one of the triangles…

OOO

(Zangya & Maya)

Dodging a massive fist flying her way, the Super Hera leapt from the top of a plateau and into the sky, avoiding a punch that completely demolished the tor she'd been standing on and sent rubble cascading over the battlefield. Ignoring the shockwave that chased after her, Zangya repositioned herself behind her immense foe and spun down at the Super Oozaru with a heel kick. Yelling out, she caught the transformed Maya across the face and sent the massive beast toppling to the ground, which she impacted with the full weight of her girth and sent a towering wall of debris and dust flying in all directions.

Flying up to a higher altitude, the battered and bleeding Super Hera 2, with burns and bruises covering most of her body, held out both her hands and produced a dozen green energy balls, which began orbiting her at a terrifying speed. After gaining speed and size, Zangya then thrust her hand forward and threw them down at her target one after the other, with each attack instantly being replaced by another, and another, and another. Soon a string of unending energy spheres began raining down on Maya's position, detonating with the force of miniature nukes and setting the already scorched battlefield ablaze.

The Super Oozaru 2's cries of pain filled the air as smoke and fire billowed into the atmosphere, choking up the area and blocking out Zangya's view of her opponent. At first it seemed like the Z-fighter had her enemy on the ropes. But just as Zangya was in the midst of her barrage, the woman suddenly saw the clouds part violently and her opponent launch another Mouth Energy Wave at her. The purple blast gushed out of Maya's jaws with a terrifying roar and rocketed towards the Hera, forcing her to dodge.

Dropping down to ground level and landing in an open field, Zangya glared across the landscape to see her opponent spring to her feet and spin around to face her. Reacting fast, the Z-fighter drew her hands back and thrust them forward, unleashing a net of barely visible telekinetic wires from her fingers. The strings of energy crisscrossed through the air and caught Maya in an instant, wrapping around her at light speed and binding her to the floor. As the woman tried to struggle against them, they proceeded to drain her energy.

Digging her feet into the floor when she felt Maya thrash violently, Zangya gritted her teeth and barked. "Oh, no you don't!" the woman yelled, curling her fingers and giving a hard yank, pulling her string back and tightening them around her hulking foe.

Crying out in pain when she felt the wires cut and dig into her skin, the transformed Saiyan used all her strength to bring her one good arm around. Stretching her fingers out, Maya grabbed an air full of wires, getting a good grip on them and holding them at bay. When Zangya balked in shock at seeing her opponent fight against the restraints, the Super Oozaru on the other end then dug her feet into the floor and gave a hard pull. The next thing the Hera knew was her whole body being yanked from the ground and thrown into the sky, before slamming into the earth with a loud crack.

Lassoing her foe around, Maya pulled Zangya out of her crater and slammed her into the ground on the other side, punching another hole into the floor. Then, still clutching her opponent's wires, the Oozaru turned and hurled her foe into the sky, Zangya's wires finally dispelling and sending the red haired woman spinning towards the clouds. The moment the Hera was airborne the Saiyan opened her mouth and unleashed another powerful blast at her enemy.

Spotting the attack fast approaching, Zangya powered up and shot into the atmosphere, bringing her hand back and producing a sphere of crackling red energy. Her attack expanding and pulsing as she took aim, the woman shouted, "Beauty-"

Before she could finish her incantation, Maya suddenly powered up and rocketed into the sky after her, shooting right passed the diminutive Z-fighter. "Not so fast!" the Super Oozaru roared, flying above her adversary and thrusting her finger upwards. Aura and lightning intensifying, the woman's had then ignited with an orange blaze, "You're mine! Shine Shot!" With a yell, the Saiyan elite flung an enormous, crackling ball of fire down at her opponent, who had to swiftly adjust her aim.

Her own energy burning around her, Zangya gave a cry of effort and launched her attack skywards, right at the approaching energy meteor. "-TRIGGER!" She flung her ball towards the fireball, the two blasts impacting one another and causing a massive, sphere shaped explosion. The resulting cataclysm filled the sky with a huge orange blast, swallowing up both Zangya and Maya, and knocking the two out of the air.

The explosion was so large that it could be seen from the moon.

When Zangya leapt out of the blast wave, trailing smoke and bits of her outfit, she landed hard on solid ground. Ripping off what was left of her pants and leaving her in only her singed halter top and purple underwear, the red haired fighter cupped her hands behind her and powered up. "KA-ME-" Seeing her opponent crash down on the floor several hundred meters ahead of her, uniform also in tatters and fur singed from the fire, the Hera's green aura with golden lightning expanded tenfold. "HA-ME-" Blue sphere taking shape in her hands, Zangya then thrust it forward with a mighty bellow, "HAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAA!"

The moment Maya saw Zangya's attack rocketing towards her the Golden Oozaru opened her mouth and unleashed another powerful pink blast at her. Her attack erupted from her throat and hit Zangya's head-on like a tidal wave; the two attacks clashing before the Saiyan's slowly started to overwhelm the Z-fighter's. In a matter of seconds, the pink blast pushed the Hera's back to its owner and proceeded to swallow her up, causing Zangya to skid back along the ground and the earth around her to burn away.

Gritting her teeth as she felt her skin hiss and burn from the energy coursing around her, she then leant forward and screamed at the top of her lungs. "YOU WON'T WIIIIIIIIIIIIIIIIIIIIIIIN!" In a flash, her energy came pouring out of her body with a thunderous roar, the green aura behind her expanding and warping the atmosphere. She exuded so much energy in fact that the lightning she produced solidified and formed into two golden, angelic wings behind her, which grew to match the size of her opponent. The moment they formed, her energy spewed from her palms in a great tidal wave of fire, "AAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAGH!" The resulting surge of ki powered through the pink beam and swallowed Maya whole, burning the Oozaru's body and sweeping her up, sending the woman tumbling down a tunnel of blue light.
Screaming in agony as she spun through the whirlwind of energy, Maya crashed through several hills and plateaus, all of which ended up disintegrated in the attack. The blast itself expanded and grew to such a size it not only engulfed an entire mountain range, it also punched a hole through the atmosphere and right into space. Such was the power put behind the attack. When Zangya eventually cut off the flow to her technique, she left an enormous trench in the land a mile wide, all the way to the edge of the country.

Lying in the center of the blast zone, a charred and battered Maya coughed and choked on the smoke rising off of her golden ape form.

Before she could sit up or recover, Zangya, her angelic wings still drawn, dropped down from the sky and landed on the woman's tail. Conjuring her three-pronged sword out of thin air, she then sliced off the woman's appendage, which quickly caused its owner to revert back to her normal form. Both Maya and her tail shrunk down to regular size, where the woman ended up dropping out of Super Saiyan 2 seconds later from exhaustion. What was left of her was a thoroughly burnt body, with her one-piece Saiyan suit torn and ripped in several places.

Dispelling her weapon, the equally exhausted Hera spoke. "It's over."

Gasping for air, the beaten and battered Maya looked up at her opponent. Seeing the transformed woman with golden wings glaring down at her, the female Saiyan cracked a pained and bloody smile, "Yeah. No kidding." After staring at her for a moment, she then shakily raised a hand, "By the way… am I dead?"

Zangya cocked an eyebrow, "No."

"Oh… good… because for a second there I could've sworn I was staring at an angel," Maya replied as cheerily and sincerely as she could, "You look absolutely radiant."

Appearing slightly taken aback, the Hera then blinked, "Uhh… thanks?" She then looked behind her at the wings she'd generated and waved them a bit. "Huh. That's weird. I wonder what this is all about?" Upon dispelling them, she then reverted back to her base form, by which point the fatigue of her battle hit her like a ton of bricks. "Damn… that was exhausting. You sure didn't make it easy on me, did you?"

"I'm an Elite Saiyan warrior. Of course I wasn't going to be pulling punches," Maya wheezed with a grin, her left eye open half way from the swelling in her cheek, "It was either you or me. There is no in between in this kind of competition."

"Hm. Good point," Zangya breathed, running a hand through her curly locks before then nodding down at her opponent. "Need a hand?"

"Sure," Maya answered, before slowly being helped up into a sitting position. Crossing her legs, the long haired fighter with dark brown skin looked at her opponent in a friendly and considerate manner. "Wow. You're the only woman besides Sandra who's ever beaten me this badly. That was one hell of an ass kicking."

"What can I say? I try?" the Z-fighter chirped with her hands on her hips.

Looking the orange haired woman over, Maya then cracked a cheerful smile, "By the way… do you have a boyfriend?"

On cue, Zangya face-planted the ground with a comical thud. Seconds later she leapt back to her feet, covered in dirt and face red, "W-W-What?"
Maya then shrugged, "I'm just asking. I mean..." Rubbing her sore arm, the young woman then looked away with a light blush on her face, "Since I'm always hanging out with my crew day in and day out, I haven't really had the time to meet many other men or women as striking as you. The fact that you're super strong to boot is also kind of a turn-on for me."

Mouth opening and closing several times in shock, Zangya then stuttered, "W-Well... I uhh... I, umm..." Nothing. She had no means of responding to this situation.

"Don't get me wrong; even though most of the guys on my crew are super hot, I'm not really that interested in dating any of them. I mean, Gast is way too old, Kure is as straight as an arrow, Cal is gay and reproduces asexually, and Sandra... well... even though she's awesome to look at and I've had a crush on her for years, I know she won't be interested in hooking up with her best friend. I'm just... really, really lonely right now... and just want to find a mate." She then beamed hopefully up at the blushing Hera, who she saw was growing redder and redder by the second. "Hey. If you're free tonight, would you like to go out, find a hotel and mess around a little?"

Before Zangya could utter some form of response to Maya, who was clearly now hitting on her and asking her to an evening on the town, she suddenly heard two sets of feet land behind her and a familiar, gruff voice speak up.

"What are you two doing?" Vegeta asked, his arms folded and a frown pulled across his lips.

"What are you two doing?" Vegeta asked, his arms folded and a frown pulled across his lips.

"OKAY...?" the Sura-jin in the black tights spoke slowly.

"What the hell's wrong with you?" the Saiyan Prince inquired, completely baffled by the woman's reaction, whereas Cal just scratched his head in confusion.

Realizing she'd just yelled at the two men, Zangya gathered her senses and gave the pair a nervous smile. "W-What's wrong with me? Nothing at all." She then laughed nervously. "You don't need to worry about me, Vegeta. I just got smacked around a bit while I was fighting my opponent here. She was one tough customer." After gesturing to the woman behind her, the Z-fighter then stuck her nose in the air and did her best to regain her composure, sniffing for good measure. "Yep. Just a couple of girls standing around and having a normal, everyday, completely age appropriate and non-sexual conversation with each other."

The Hera was so caught up in trying to explain herself that she missed the sight of Maya standing up, sneaking up behind her, and pinching her ass. Shrieking, the Hera leapt several meters away from the Saiyan and glared back at her in shock, who she saw was grinning mischievously in her direction.

Finding the woman's performance rather unusual, Vegeta and Cal decided to shrug it off as just the Hera wigging out after a tough battle. Ignoring her look of alarm and the bristled state she was in, the battered Saiyan Prince then fixed his attention on his equally damaged colleague. "Anyway, do you two happen to know where the brat and his opponent have gone? The big guy and I can't seem to find them anywhere."

Quickly realizing that they too couldn't sense their friends anymore, both Zangya and Maya began searching the skies intently. Stretching out their senses to see if they could locate Gohan and Sandra somewhere in their quadrant, the group of four warriors in the desert then picked a direction and searched it. However, after zooming out as far as they could go, all of them came up blank.
"Can you sense anything?" Maya asked.

"Nope. I've got nothing. Zip," Zangya replied, narrowing her eyes in worry and placing her hands on her hips. "Shit. Where did they go?"

"Maybe they're not in this galaxy anymore," Cal suggested, appearing just as confused and concerned by the development. "Since both of them had taken their fight into space, it wouldn't surprise me one bit if they'd managed to make it all the way to the Andromeda sector."

"Or… the two of them are fighting each other in slip space and are no longer in this dimension anymore," Maya shrugged.

Frowning, the Saiyan Prince glared in her direction, "What the hell does that mean?"

"Can your half-Saiyan friend teleport?" the female second-in-command asked, earning nods from both Zangya and Vegeta. "Well… Sandra can teleport as well. So if we're putting two and two together and both of them are still in this game, then that means our friends have-"

Just as she was in the middle of explaining where the group's respective teammates and would-be team leaders had gotten to, a loud sonic boom suddenly filled the sky. A split second later, two figures dropped down from the clouds and slammed into the earth several yards away from them. Dust and debris pelting their position, the four former-combatants quickly snapped their attention towards the crash site, where they saw two bodies tumble out of the crater and land in the desert. Uniforms tattered to the point of disintegrating and bodies covered in multiple bruises, burns and lacerations, both Gohan and Sandra were locked in a heated wrestling match; the two fighters attempting to trap one another in a strangle hold. Having managed to get his opponent from behind, the Super Saiyan 3 hybrid growled as he slammed Sandra into the floor and pushed her into the dirt, tightening the hold he had around her neck in an attempt to put her to sleep. Sandra meanwhile, grabbing the arm that was choking her, forced herself forward for dear life, gasping and snarling through her own teeth, while at the same time clawing at the ground.

Surprised by the pair's sudden appearance, Maya then pointed lamely at the wrestling duo, "Found them." Earning glares from Vegeta and Zangya, the audience of four then proceeded to watch the fight taking place before them.

Wiggling her leg around and propping it under her, Sandra then brought a hand up, grabbed the back of Gohan's head and, with a firm pull, threw the boy over her and into the ground. This forced the demi-Saiyan to let go and separate from his opponent. Seconds later, the two warriors wound up on all fours, facing each other with bruised faces and bloody lips.

"There's no point in worrying about the damage I'm taking!" Sandra panted as she watched her foe wipe the blood from his nose on the back of his arm. "This fight will go nowhere if I don't give it everything I have! Even if I break every bone in my body, I will defeat this man!"

With a yell, Gohan powered up and sprinted forward, at the same time his opponent's aura kicked up around him. Diving in, the demi-Saiyan opened up with a series of sharp straights, forcing his opponent to slip them and retaliate with a series of equally fast swings. When Gohan managed to nail her twice in the face, Sandra retaliated with sharp hooks and straights, hitting the demi-Saiyan across the face and forcing him back.

"Be brave! Don't back down!" Gohan shouted in his head, parrying a hook and countering with a flurry of hits. "I've been training for seven years for a fight like this! Everything I've done has led me to this moment. I will win if I use everything I've learned, from my family, my friends, and myself!" He then lunged in with a left hook, only for his eyes to widen when he saw his opponent diving at him with her right fist burning a hot gold. "Another Senko! Stop it!" Without missing a beat, he changed his hook into a left straight, throwing it over his opponent's shoulder and clocking her across the temple, at the same time her fist grazed his cheek.

Sandra cursed as she backpedaled clumsily, avoiding the demi-Saiyan's kick. "Shit! I've used too many Senkos! He's got the motion down!"

Chasing after her, his aura blazing around him in a storm, Gohan intercepted his opponent as she sprang to the right. "I can't take any more of those! If she manages to nail me directly, I'll be finished in one shot!"

Leaping away to avoid another punch, fending the boy off with a left hook, Sandra then reverted to her shoulder-roll stance and began to move in a cautious and twitchy fashion. At the same time, her fists started to pop out and jerk in a threatening manner. "The Senko isn't my only trump card! I'll get you with these!" She then made it look like she was about to lunge in with an attack, but stopped herself short, causing her opponent to hesitate.

Bringing his fists up defensively, Gohan gritted his teeth. "She's coming! Sandra will use feints! I shouldn't worry about them!" Resting his knuckles on his chin directly under his nose, the demi-Saiyan took on the Peek-a-boo guard and began to weave in a figure of eight motion at high speed. His body blurred out, creating two after images on his left and right as he charged straight at his opponent. "If I weave my body, I'll be able to dodge them, including her feints! As fast as I can! FASTER!" Dust clouded the air as the demi-Saiyan pursued his foe across the desert like a raging bull.

Cal blinked as he watched Gohan stick to his foe like glue, not letting her get away as they leapt across the desert in a blur. "That's some incredible head weaving. He's trying to dodge all the feints and real blows at the same time."

"With that kind of movement, it'll be really hard for Sandra to corner her target and use counters, since his head is constantly in motion," Vegeta stated, finding the boy's strategy to be incredibly well thought out. "He knows his opponent will be aiming for a knock out, so he's going to do everything he can stop her from doing that."

Zangya, also watching the super fast battle in awe, grinned widely, "He's got Sandra on the run! Now he has the advantage!"

Despite hearing the confidence in her former opponent's words, the wounded and badly bruised Maya frowned uncomfortably. "It's not over yet." A sense of dread fell over her.

Looking at her friend and the condition Sandra was in, beaten, bleeding and fighting to the point of collapse, she knew exactly what was going to happen next.

The demon was banging on the front gates, just waiting to break free.

It was only a matter of time.

Getting sick and tired of being chased, Sandra quickly changed tactics and dove in. Her opponent did so too. When the two golden blurs crossed paths, the two warriors slammed into each other head first, their foreheads colliding with a colossal shockwave, which punched a crater into the desert floor. Earth trembling under the force of their impact, Gohan and Sandra snarled as they attempted to push through their opponent, their eyes burning holes into the other while their electrical bio-fields sparked around them violently.
Knowing that his opponent would not be able to use her vicious counters at this range and that neither of them could use kicks, the two eventually separated and began lashing out at one another at super close range. Hooks and uppercuts began raining down from both sides as Gohan and Sandra laid into one another with sharp and powerful blows. Using parries and blocks characteristic of Wing Chun, the hybrid Saiyan attempted to nail his foe on every turn, but the female warrior was able to stop his blows with elbow blocks and knees, preventing him from landing any clean hits to the vital areas.

Taking a left hook to the cheek, Gohan spat. "It's no good if I hit according to Sandra's rhythm! I'll return two for each of her shots!" With a yell, the Saiyan rushed in and nailed his opponent in the face with two straights. When she retaliated with a hook, he hit her twice in the body and again across the face. After she lashed out with another uppercut and hook, the hybrid once again struck with chain punches, catching her four times before she managed to block with her arms.

When Sandra caught another straight to the face, sending blood splattering down her front, the woman bellowed. "Damn you!" She then tried to nail Gohan with a right cross, but overcompensated and ended up getting nailed in the face instead by his left.

Seeing Gohan take several more heavy punches from the frustrated Sandra had Zangya grit her teeth with worry. "You don't see a warrior like Sandra every day. A woman with her kind of power and strength is an incredibly rare thing. Each and every attack she throws must be terrifying." Upon watching Gohan dodge another two punches and respond with a vicious onslaught of straights to the woman's guard, the Hera tensed up. "There's no chance of winning against that kind of tenacity if you're scared. Don't lose your spirit, Gohan-kun! Take it all the way to the end!"

All of a sudden, a deafening crack rang out when the group saw Gohan fly in and deliver a haymaker to Sandra's face, not only knocking the woman off her feet, but also deactivating her aura. Blood and sweat clouded the air as the female warrior was thrown several yards across the desert, causing Vegeta and Zangya to look on in amazement.

"That's the way!" the Hera shouted.

"You've got her, brat!" the prince also roared. "Finish her!"

Spotting an opportunity, Gohan tucked up, took on the Peek-a-boo guard, and went for it. "Sandra has stepped back!" the teen shouted, seeing the woman stumble and throw her left foot behind her to keep her from sliding. "GO FOR IT!" His aura roared to life as he lunged in, ready to deliver the final blow.

However, just as the hybrid was closing in, a smirk crossed Sandra's lips as she suddenly brought her arms up and cocked back her left. The instant she did, steam suddenly burst off of it as it ignited gold, a sight that had the fast approaching Gohan's eyes widen in horror.

"No!" Quickly noticing the woman step in deep with her right foot and spring off of her left, the half-breed immediately realized his blunder. "Southpaw! She used a quick shift to set herself into position! A LEFTSENKO!" Throwing his weight back as fast as he could, Gohan hit the brakes hard and crossed his arms over his face. But it was too late.

With a mighty roar, Sandra lunged in and uncorked the mother of all jabs into Gohan's guard. The punch drilled through the boy's arms and cracked them wide open with a titanic thunderclap, the shockwave parting the clouds behind her target and annihilating a miraculously still standing mountain. The empress practically clear cut the entire countryside with that one hit, as a stunned and wounded demi-Saiyan was thrown back by the force of the attack hitting his body.
"It broke through!" Zangya shouted with her eyes wide in alarm.

"Despite the guard," Vegeta also remarked, looking on as Gohan threw his feet back and stopped himself, burying his heels into the dirt.

Bringing her right hand up to protect her face, Sandra then extended her left hand and, with a quick pivot, fired off her long reaching jabs at her opponent. "Take this!" When two shots clipped Gohan in the arms, the woman suddenly stepped in a little bit closer and, just before her jab could fully retract, unleashed a hook upon her opponent. "Kyokusen!" (Curve Shot) And just like that, her attack slammed into her opponent's temple with a loud clap and a blast of sweat.

Vegeta and Zangya reacted in alarm, thinking that their companion had just been knocked out by the punch.

Or so it seemed.

Eyes widening when she felt her attack had been blunted, the Saiyan Empress hurriedly backed off and retook her stance. When she saw the cloud of perspiration fade around Gohan's head, she quickly noticed that the demi-Saiyan had brought both his arms up and formed a crucifix in front of him in the form of a cross-arm guard, which he held firmly in front of his face. It was through this defensive technique that he was able to successfully fend off his opponent's curved blow.

Maya was stunned, "That's-?"

"A cross-arm block!" Zangya said, a grin appearing on her face, "It's a defensive technique used by boxers in the professional ring. Since it has the user pressing both arms against each other in a locked forward position, it's able to stop blows from the heaviest weight classes." She knew this much from her spars with Gohan.

"But doesn't that defense make it hard to counter punch?" Cal asked, noticing the awkward positioning of the boy's limbs.

Vegeta nodded, "Yes. That means he has to rely on his legs to get in close."

The frustration Sandra felt in that moment prompted the woman to press forward her assault, in which she began viciously unleashing a hail of Kyokusen shots upon her adversary. Jabs, hooks and uppercuts started hammering at Gohan's guard from different angles, chipping away at his defense and attempting to slip through. But as the demi-Saiyan slowly edged forward and forced his opponent to retreat, it quickly became apparent that the jabs were no longer having an effect on him.

When Gohan pushed into her range, Sandra fired off several more curved jabs and growled in frustration. "Damn it! I can't stop him with my left! The bastard figured out how to get through! If that's the case..." Since her Kyokusen was no longer cutting it, the woman quickly changed strategies and, with a sharp pivot on her forward leg, slammed a full right hook across Gohan's face from a blind spot. After knocking his head to the side, the Saiyan Empress started mercilessly pummeling her opponent with wide hooks and overhands, nailing him repeatedly around his guard.

Vegeta cursed when he saw this, "Shit! The cross guard can't block those! It's next to useless!"

Zangya, smile still in place, clenched her fists, "Yeah. But if Sandra can hit him with hooks..."

"THEN SO CAN I!" Quickly dropping the cross arm guard in favor of the standard one, Gohan suddenly ducked the woman's right hook and, with a deep step in, chopped at his opponent with a counter. "TAKE THIS!" All of a sudden, a sickening crack rang out when the Saiyan's fist buried...
Eyes open in horror and her breaths coming out in gasps, Sandra stumbled away with a deep impression of Gohan's fist in her waist. "Fuck! That blow cut in deep! He just broke three of my ribs!" Knees shaking as she attempted to catch her breath, the woman's eyes then snapped up when she sensed her opponent closing in and recoiled when she saw him directly in front of her. "Damn it!" Trying to throw a counter, the Empress ended up catching Gohan's punches instead, and what followed shortly from there was the female Saiyan getting the beat down of a lifetime.

Unable to defend herself in time, Sandra started receiving crippling blows to the abs, chest and face, the repeated body blows knocking the air out of her while the kicks she received to the head knocked her brain about. After hammering her with multiple right straights, Gohan checked a kick before, leaping into the air, slammed a roundhouse into her head and sent his opponent flying to the side. When Sandra skidded to a stop several yards away and looked up, she showed a cut had been formed in her hairline and blood was now running down her face.

Seeing her friend receive such damage had Maya step forward in horror. "Sandra!"

"This is it!" Gohan thought, noting that his opponent had her guard down and was wide open. His aura bursting around him once again, the teen rushed at the female Saiyan in a veil of golden flames and blue lightning, ready to deliver what would be his final attack. "I'm ending this fight right now!" Clenching his left fist tightly, the young man closed in on his foe and lunged at her with a left cross, aiming to cut Sandra down with one blow.

Clenching her fists tightly to the point they were shaking, Maya gritted her teeth in anticipation. "There he is, Sandra! The man standing before you now is the man you've always wanted to see! He's the only one who can satisfy your hunger!" Stepping forward, she then yelled at the top of her lungs, "If you win, everyone will recognize you as the most powerful Saiyan in the universe! Win this, and prove that you're the best!"

Blood pouring down her face from the open wounds in her head, Sandra watched in bullet time as Gohan's fist slowly approached her. His fist howled with the force of an artillery cannon, threatening to split her skull right open and send her soul careening into the next world. As Maya's cries of desperation echoed through her head and her vision slowly turned red through the stream of bodily fluids dripping over her vision, something inside the Saiyan Empress snapped.

Her pupils glazing over and turning white, Sandra suddenly bit her teeth together in rage, revealing the set of razor sharp canines protruding from her gums. Then, as the blood caking her face molded perfectly into every welt and groove in her mug to form a thick layer of war paint, the Super Saiyan 3's expression morphed from one of anger into one that was damn near demonic.

"RRRRRRGGGGGMMMMMMMPHHH-"

All of a sudden, just as Gohan's fist was about to make contact, the enraged woman unexpectedly lunged forward with a hook and struck the man in the face with a wicked counter cross. A shocked look filled the hybrid's eyes as his skull was literally warped from the force of the punch slamming into his temple, sending a cloud of blood and spit blasting through the air with the sound of a gunshot. Then, as soon as his body was sent flying backwards, Sandra gave a loud and terrifying cry.

"RAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAA. Her bloody scream echoed with the roar of a wild beast, the likes of which none of the Z-fighters had ever seen before.
Her reaction was so violent and so aggressive that not only were Vegeta and Zangya horrified, but Maya and Cal were too, both of whom stepped back in shock.

"It's here…" the Sura warrior whispered.

"Yaju," Maya whispered, shaking her head in astonishment, "Sandra has finally let the beast free…"

OOO

(Meanwhile)

(Grand Kai's Planet)

When Pikkon heard the crunch of Sandra's fist echo off of Gohan's face, the man cringed, "That one connected at a really bad angle."

"Sandra's expression has changed completely," Olibu added, his own expression reflecting his concern and astonishment. "She must have lost it at the sight of her blood running down her face."

Before any more comments could be made from the most senior members of the troop, the audience on the lawn was jumpstarted out of their reverie when Goku darted forward and grabbed the sides of the television. As the trainers and fighters were about to protest against their companion for blocking their view of the fight, the group then heard the Saiyan yell.

From what he had to say, it was definitely not good.

"GOHAN! HIT HER! DON'T LET HER TAKE THE OFFENSIVE!" Gripping the sides of the box in panic, Goku then spoke under his breath. "You might not realize it, but you're damaged way beyond your limit! Both of you are! If you take any more direct hits, your body will shut down!"

He then shook the television and shouted once more, "ATTACK HER NOW, BEFORE IT'S TOO LATE!"

Sensing the desperation in his friend's words, Pikkon also looked at the television and yelled, "Come on, kid!"

"Fight back!" Olibu roared immediately afterwards, wanting to offer his support as best as he could, "Give it all you've got!"

OOO

(Back on Earth)

Sandra's outburst was only the beginning of things to come. Before Gohan could even begin to regain his bearings, he suddenly found himself being brutally assaulted by his opponent, who proceeded to unleash the biggest ass-kicking he'd ever received upon his person. Her rage burned around her as intensely as her aura and lightning, as every hook, elbow, punch and kick Sandra managed to land crashed against the boy's arms and body; smashing his guard open like the window of a car.

The sound generated by all of her attacks connecting one after the other was equivalent to that of an artillery bombardment falling upon the landscape, with the shockwaves actually mimicking the ferocity of one.

As for the female Saiyan, she no longer held the serious or composed expression she'd previously been wearing. The instant she snapped, her face had transformed into one of unbridled fury. Coupled with her frenzied attack upon her adversary and it became clear that Gohan was no longer fighting the same Sandra he was before. The female Super Saiyan 3 cried out as she swung at her target with reckless abandon, pulverizing his guard several times with straights before splitting it open with a wicked uppercut. The instant his head was exposed, she then mashed him with hooks, before thrusting a kick into his chest, smashing him across the landscape and plowing him through the dirt.

Gohan, lying in a massive crater of his own making, spit up blood and looked up in shock, where he saw Sandra marching towards him with lightning dancing around her in a storm. By this point, a devilish grin had spread across her bloody face, indicating the Saiyan was excited.

"Come on, Gohan… get up. I know you've got way more than that in you! Hit me! Fight me!"

Running her tongue over her lips and sucking up the blood running down her face, Sandra giggled madly, her eyes blood shot and reflecting a look of hunger. "Show me the girth of a true Saiyan Warrior! A true Super Saiyan! Give it to me! Give me everything you have! I want it! I want all of it!"

Not willing to go down that easily, Gohan sprang to his feet and leapt at his opponent with a punch, only to suddenly get hit in the face by lightning fast hook from a sharp angle. Several more punches flew at him from random angles that he desperately tried to block, but no matter where he positioned his arms Sandra's fists powered right through his defenses. After several more crushing blows, Gohan retaliated with a right straight, but had his wrist caught by Sandra and pulled towards her. Bringing his face right in front of hers, Sandra then snarled at her opponent through a manic and beastly grin.

"You call that a punch? That was pathetic," Sandra growled, bringing back her knee and burying it into Gohan's stomach, knocking the wind out of his lungs. "I want you to hit me! To rip me apart with your bare hands!" She then grabbed his long golden mane, pulled him up, and began driving her fist into his face. Loud crunch sounds rung out every time she struck him, more and more blood becoming smeared over her knuckles with every draw, "Fight me! Fight me! FIGHT ME! FIGHT ME!

Quickly regaining a moment of consciousness in between her punches, Gohan yelled out and threw his head forward, his skull crashing into Sandra's face. The hit causing her to release her quarry, Sandra spat blood onto the floor and smirked broadly.

"That's the spirit!" Sandra barked, darting forward and slamming a fist into the man. "Do or die! Fight to your last breath!"

Stumbling, the demi-Saiyan barely had enough time to put up his arms before he was once again set upon by his adversary. From that point, both he and the audience of four standing on the sidelines could only watch helplessly as Sandra proceeded to pummel him into submission. Despite being able to stay on his feet, the attacks the woman landed smashed right through his guard, hitting him repeatedly in the face and body. What's more, not only were her attacks thrown with full swings and full power, but they were fast and continuous, coming in one after the other without pause.

Sandra yelled and grunted every time she threw an attack, kicking Gohan in the sides, battering his front with straight punches, and knocking his upper body from side to side with merciless hooks. Every once in a while she threw an uppercut into his body, burying her fists into his ribs and knocking the wind out of him. At first it looked as though the half-Saiyan would be able to withstand the assault, but as her punches and kicks continued to knock him about, it quickly became apparent that he wouldn't. Soon, Gohan could no longer keep his arms up and was now staggering about, Sandra's fists impacting his head over and over again, sending his blood splattering all over.

Her fighting style no longer reflected the grace and choreography of a trained warrior. No. Every single attack she threw was that of a ruthless thug; one more animal than Saiyan. As a result, no mercy or quarter was shown towards her enemy. Just violence.

Zangya's expression reflected horror when she watched the dazed and barely conscious Gohan receive another crushing blow to the head. "GOHAN!" she screamed out.

Laughing in a psychotic manner, her enraged state preventing her from hearing the Hera's cry, Sandra let loose several more haymakers upon her foe, watching Gohan's face cave in and feeling his bones turn to mush beneath her knuckles. By this point, her gloves, once a clean and shining white, were now turned red from the boy's blood. When a bit more splattered across her face, the Empress licked it up and lunged in with another punch. "What's wrong, stallion?! CAN'T KEEP UP WITH ME ANYMORE?! Well, FUCK YOU!" she howled as she drove one more punch across his face, sending Gohan flying into a boulder. The instant his body collided with it and wedged into its side, leaving the teen lying unconscious against it, the female Saiyan powered up and charged in one last time, "DIIIIIIIIIIIIIIIIIIIIIIIIII!

"STOOOOOP!" Zangya cried out, sprinting towards the pair several dozen yards away.

Looking up in alarm, Vegeta also leapt forward, "Zangya! Wait!"

Gohan's face was barely recognizable. Due to the amount of blows Sandra had landed, not only was both his cheeks puffed up like he had cotton stuffed into his mouth, but his right eye had swollen completely shut, he had blood running from his eyes, forehead, mouth, ears and nose, and a swollen temple throbbing in the corner of his hairline. As for the rest of his body, it was clear he had nothing left. No more punches, kicks, knees, or words left to give. He'd been hit so many times by Sandra's latest assault that he'd practically been broken. His arms were hanging limply from his shoulders and his legs could no longer support him, which was clearly shown by how he was lying against that boulder, waiting for the last punch now hurtling his way.

"W-What happened?" Gohan thought, unable to see anything but blackness, "Did I… did I lose? Am I… dead?"

No. He wasn't dead. But he was out of it. All he could feel was numbness and a cold fast approaching him. The clear signs of his brain shutting down and his body failing him.

"Who... who did this to me?" He was at a complete loss. The punches his brain had received had literally knocked him senseless.

There was no light in his one remaining eye, as it was staring vacantly up into the sky… into an unending darkness. Though he'd been knocked unconscious, he was still in his Super Saiyan 3 form, which was miraculously being held up by whatever willpower his body was gripping onto.

It wouldn't make much difference in the next few milliseconds though, as Sandra, approaching him in bullet time, unleashed a fully loaded punch towards his face, her knuckles corkscrewing through the air like a missile.

Unable to see it coming, the busted up Gohan could only stare into darkness and wonder who had knocked him out.
All of a sudden, from out of the shadows, he heard the sound of several low voices echoing all around, moments before a group of faces came flying right at him. When they stopped, Gohan found himself confronted by the demonic mugs of Radditz, Nappa, Garlic Junior, Turles, Lord Slug, Recoome, Ginyu, Frieza, Android 13, Doctor Gero, Broly, Hatchiyack, Cell, Bojack and Vulcan, all grinning at him and taunting him with a haunting chorus of chuckles and laughter.

"Wh-What's this?" Gohan thought with a confused look in play, watching as the bodies of his past villains stepped into view and stood over him, all cackling and grinning at him while bathed in a blood red glow. "What the hell are all of you doing here?"

Knowing who each and every one of them were and remembering what all of them had done to him and his friends, the sight of all these villains staring him down just… pissed him off. Really, really… really pissed him off.

"It's all…"

"…"

"…"

"It's all…"

"…"

"…"

"…"

Then… it happened.

"IT'S ALL YOUR FAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUULLT."

An explosion louder than anything anyone had ever heard suddenly rang out as a shockwave greater than a comet colliding with the planet rocked the entire continent, as Gohan, from out of nowhere, drove a punch right into Sandra's face. His scream of rage was drowned out by the impact of his blow, which reverberated through the heavens with the distinct sound of bones crunching. In that moment, Sandra's skull and jaw fractured, while her head was sent bending in the opposite direction she'd been moving.

So sudden was the attack that everyone, from Zangya and her lot on the sidelines, to the group watching from King Koku's Palace, to the Gods watching several hundred thousand galaxies away, stood frozen in astonishment.

Almost immediately after landing his meteor of a haymaker, Gohan set upon Sandra with an onslaught of blows. Moving so fast that his attacks blurred together, the enraged demi-Saiyan unleashed the most brutal rush attack his friends had ever seen him perform, the sound of multiple thunderclaps and bones being mashed echoing all around. With his fists and shins powering into her from all angles, the stunned Saiyan Empress was unable to do anything as she was battered around like a piñata. The instant Gohan's first body mangling salvo ended, blood spewed out of Sandra's open mouth, along with a strangled cry of agony.

"What the fuck?" Maya whispered, watching Sandra's body fly back and crash into a hillside, disintegrating it and every other hill stretching behind her for several miles in a cloud of dust.
"G-Gohan," Zangya choked out, having stopped in her tracks the moment she saw him wake up.

Or so it seemed.

With blood caking his face and his teeth bared, Gohan had taken rage-out to a whole other level. A snarling sound left his lips with ever breath he exhaled, steam leaving both his mouth and nostrils, and clouding the air around him. What's more, on top of the bodily fluids running down his swollen face, his eyes had creased in a clear display of fury, and his one open eye had glazed over with a shade of red. Since he was still in his Super Saiyan 3 form, his transformation made his expression look all the more beastly, as he stood in place panting like a wild animal.

That was just sugarcoating it. He looked down right terrifying.

To put it simply, the audience was at a complete loss.

"It looked like he was knocked out by Sandra's punches," Vegeta murmured, blinking as he watched Gohan sprint after his stunned opponent. "I don't get it."

"It happened while he was unconscious," Zangya spoke up, drawing the prince's attention towards her. "He must have snapped."

Maya looked across at the Z-fighters in shock, "W-What does that mean? What happens when he snaps?"

The Hera looked at the pair of invaders fearfully, "I've only seen him lose it a couple of times. But this is the first time I've ever seen him rage out like this." She then looked back to see Gohan close the final distance between him and his enemy, "I don't know what the hell happened to him while he was knocked out for those five seconds, but whatever did, it really must have gotten under his skin."

She had no idea.

When Sandra saw Gohan diving at her with a punch, the desperate woman attempted to avoid it. She leant back, hoping to sway under his blow, only to get nailed by another monstrous punch from below, which connected against her chin with a sonic boom. Feeling more blood fly out of her mouth, the pissed off female growled and flew back in, unleashing a storm of punches and swings upon the demi-Saiyan, all thrown with intent to crack his skull open. However, despite her speed and ferocity, Gohan dodged all of her attacks, his expression steeled with concentration as he suddenly lunged in, hit her in the temple with a cross counter, and struck her in the ribs with a bone-crunching body shot.

His attacks hit her so fast and so sharply that it almost looked like he'd thrown them simultaneous.

More blood gargling out of her mouth to pour down her top, the pissed off Sandra threw even more attacks with reckless abandon, desperately trying to catch her opponent in a pincer. Gohan, arms hanging at his sides, effortlessly avoided every single blow sent his way, her fists and kicks missing him by miles. When he dodged them all, he came back in with another lethal barrage of punches, which pulverized her waistline and doubled the woman over. When Sandra staggered away again, panting as heavily as Gohan was, the half-Saiyan sprinted at her and, with an animalistic snarl, uncorked a haymaker into Sandra's body, followed by another to her head, and one more to her side, bending her over and causing a strangled cry of pain to leave her lips.

Her legs almost buckling under the punishment and blood continuing to drool from her mouth, the wounded Sandra stumbled to a stop and gasped for air. When she saw Gohan's murderous eyes turn to her, his teeth grinding like a mad dog, the female warrior then cracked a drowsy smile. "Yes. YES! This is it! Oh, you beast! I knew it! You're a fucking animal, just like me!" Straightening up, the Super Saiyan 3 chuckled excitedly as she ran her bloody hands up her body and squeezed her right breast, "Don't stop! Give it to me! I want to feel you against me! Fuck me! Ravage me! Break me! RIGHT NOW!" All of a sudden, the woman lunged forward with a laugh and threw a right haymaker.

Gohan responded and, with a yell of his own, struck his opponent in the face in a simultaneous exchange. What followed immediately after that was a glorified slugfest, as the two warriors proceeded to beat on one another without pause or restraint. While Sandra was ecstatically dealing and receiving punches, her opponent was smashing and powering into her with so many attacks it almost looked like he was trying to kill multiple opponents at once. It seemed as though he was fighting a bunch of people who'd caused him a lifetime of pain and suffering, and whom he hated with every fiber of his being. That was the only possible explanation for the carnage now taking place before the audience.

Faces were bashed in by knuckles, abs was crushed by well-timed knees, and ribs were repeatedly caved in by shins, even after blood started pouring from the pair's every orifice. After several minutes of an agonizing exchange of mountain crushing blows, in which the pair assualted one another senselessly and mercilessly, Sandra then dove at her opponent with a wicked right overhand, at the same time Gohan did with his left, their foreheads and fists slamming together and ending with the two grinding skulls against each other.

One grinning madly while the other simply glared the two then separated and attacked. Sandra went high while Gohan went low, which inevitably led to the latter hitting first with a crushing knee to the woman's gut. When the deranged female choked up blood, her legs finally gave out and she dropped to the floor like a sack of flour, while her opponent stumbled away, panting heavily.

As Sandra lay twitching and bleeding all over the floor, Gohan, watched on by the shocked audience nearby, suddenly blinked and shook his head. Life returning to his eyes, the young man then looked around in confusion, before his eyes landed on his opponent, who was now struggling to get back up.

"W-What the heck just happened?" the demi-Saiyan asked, his question earning bewildered looks from Zangya and the others. "Did I pass out or something? What was I…?" He then narrowed his eyes on Sandra, whom he saw form a fist in the dirt, "Why are you on the ground?"

Did he knock her down? What was going on? Thinking hard on it, all Gohan remembered seeing was the faces of all his past enemies leering and laughing at him, before his mental self proceeded to rush forward and beat the ever-loving daylights out of all of them. He'd been so convinced that the villains from his past had come back to haunt him that he'd lost all sense of self and control, which resulted in him annihilating every single one of them until they were just a series of bloody smears on the floor. At least that was what he'd envisioned.

But in the end, it had all been a dream, and the next thing Gohan knew upon waking up from it was finding himself standing in the middle of the desert, with his actual opponent Sandra lying in a broken down heap at his feet.

Needless to say, he was not happy. Far from it.

He was absolutely livid with himself.

"Did I seriously beat my opponent while I was out cold? How? When? And with what? Did I use a ki blast? A left jab? A right straight? An uppercut?! A kick?! A knee?! WHAT?!" Gohan growled, his hands turning to fists as his frustration spiked to an unbelievable degree. "How the hell can I call myself a fighter if I don't know how I defeated my opponent?! Sandra was the one who challenged me to this battle and I promised to fight her in a fair and equal contest! If I walked away now, it would be like I'd won this fight through pure luck! That's not even funny!" Feeling outraged and robbed of a clean victory, with the pain he was feeling spurring him on and firing him up, the demi-Saiyan let his feelings known with a yell of fury, "If I don't beat you with an attack I remember… I'M NOT GOING TO BE SATISFIED!" Sticking his arm up, he then began spinning it, winding it up and generating a vortex of wind beside him, "STAND UP AND FIGHT ME, YOU BITCH! I'M GOING TO KEEP POUNDING YOU UNTIL YOU'RE BEGGING FOR ME TO STOP!"

His words were powerful and angry, designed solely for intimidation. However, while Vegeta appeared stunned by his rather aggressive outburst, Zangya seemed somewhat mystified by it.

"Wow…" Placing a hand over her chest, the woman breathed in deeply as her eyes shimmered, "I'm actually pretty turned on right now."

"Third," Maya also whispered, sounding a bit out of breath.

Though it was quiet, Vegeta heard all three of them clearly, and slowly took a big step away from them. A big step. Seriously, what was wrong with these people?

After coughing up a bit more blood and rising to her feet seven seconds later, Sandra faced off against her enraged opponent with a more alive expression than ever. Her eyes no longer blood shot but having rings under them, especially the left one that was starting to swell over, the female Super Saiyan 3 analyzed her opponent carefully. Taking a moment to think back on the last few exchanged and events that'd transpired in their wake, the woman kneeling on the floor then gave a harsh chuckle, which she directed towards her adversary.

"So… you've finally decided to show me your true colors?" Sandra chuckled, wiping the blood from her nose and smearing it across her cheek. "That's good. It's no fun when the people who are supposed to be fighting each other are holding back. It's far more exciting when they're going all out…" Slurping up some more blood that dribbled down her nose, the Empress grinned lecherously at her foe. "I really like what I'm seeing. Got any more to give me, stallion?"

"Don't bite off more than you can chew," Gohan shot back, his own manic grin appearing through his bloody and bruised face. The fact that it was so busted up made him appear even more menacing than he actually intended. "You may be enjoying this battle as much as I am, but I can tell you're on your last legs. That last spurt really took it out of you." To be honest, he was almost running on fumes as well. He had some reserves left in the tank, but he needed that to be able to walk or fly back home.

If he was going to finish this fight, he was going to have to use them.

Sandra wheezed out a laugh as she shakily rose back to her feet, "True. But it won't be long before your engine conks out as well. And when it does, you can bet I'm going to enjoy taking full advantage of you and your immobile body." Her voice was laced with the undeniable tone of want and flirting, something that Zangya couldn't help but notice and frown at. Brushing a couple bangs of her golden mane out of the way, the woman then smirked, "Let's give it one more try. No more tricks, no more tactics, no more playing around. Just a straight up slugfest between two evenly matched warriors. Agreed?"
"Agreed," Gohan replied, sharing a smirk with his opponent. They'd felt each other out, tested each other's strengths and weaknesses, and engaged one another in a high-speed game of chess. Now that they'd gone way beyond their physical limits, it was time to see who would fall or pass out first. This had now become a battle of wills. "Ladies first."

"As you wish," Sandra murmured, before narrowing her eyes and dropping into a deep horse riding stance. The instant her hands curled into fists, golden energy began erupting out of her body like wild fire, filling the air around her before forming into a dome of rotating ki. As the sphere expanded the ground began to shake, purple lightning started shooting off of Sandra's body, and a hot wind starting to kick up around the group. It was the moment a hurricane formed in the sky above that Gohan and the others suddenly noticed the Saiyan's energy was skyrocketing, which had everyone in the vicinity recoil.

Golden flames twisted around Sandra like a gale, burning the ground at her feet and incinerating anything that got too close. At first they thought it was just an ordinary power up. But when her golden aura suddenly turned purple and the lightning shooting off of her suddenly turned black, the audience quickly realized that this was something else. This became evident when Sandra, screaming in rage, suddenly began to transform. Her muscles expanded, her height increased, her teeth sharpened, and her expression became all the more feral, accentuated by the white in her eyes turning blood red. What's more, not only did her golden tail increase in length, but glowing, purple veins started to appear all over the parts of her body that were exposed, which pulsed and throbbed from all the blood rushing through them.

Once the popping and cracking of her metamorphosis finally subsided, the Empress then crouched down and dug the claws of her right hand into the dirt, at the same time steam started to pour off of her body in a hot cloud.

"Moon Burst!" Sandra growled in a beastly and agro tone of voice, which sent a shiver down Gohan's spine. By this point, the woman had grown to be a full half a person taller than her opponent, and was now leering him down like a hungry tigress.

With the way her veins were showing, she may as well have been.

Zangya blinked in astonishment, "Whoa. What's happening to her? She's gotten bigger."

"Her power level just… exploded," Vegeta exclaimed, unable to believe what he was seeing either. "What is she doing?"

"That move is called Moon Drop or Moon Burst. It's a technique Sandra and I developed on Corvus," Maya informed, gritting her teeth as she fought back against the winds hammering them across the battlefield. "Since we were constantly being exposed to the radiation being generated by the planet's ten moons, we spent the last couple of years learning how to gather and store that energy inside our bodies. If we ever wound up running out of energy during a battle, we would be able to tap into the Blutz radiation in our bodies, and use it to give us an extra burst of strength and power." She then turned to Zangya with a frown. "Saiyans increase their strength from the light of the moon and use it to transform into the Oozaru. But Sandra and I learned how to master that power and taught ourselves how to suppress the urge to transform completely."

This information had Zangya blink, "You can do that?" After speaking to all of her friends, she assumed that whenever a Saiyan looked at a full moon, they were unable to stop themselves from transforming. She'd even asked Vegeta about it and he was the source material for the Z-fighter on all things Saiyan related.

But it seemed like some members of his race have been experimenting with the process.
"While the massive bulk of the Great Ape form can have a huge advantage on the battlefield, there are some battles where the size of the Oozaru can prove to be a great hindrance. Not only can it cause a lot of unwanted damage to the surrounding area, the form's frame also prevents it from fighting smaller and more elusive opponents. Aside from the risk of glancing at a full moon and transforming in a densely populated area, the Great Ape form can also inadvertently endanger your comrades' lives. I learned that last part the hard way," Maya informed, before turning back to the battle taking place in front of her. "Both Sandra and I practice completely different fighting styles. While I prefer using the full transformation to increase my power and durability, she uses it to increase her strength and speed."

"With that much power coming off of her…" Vegeta murmured, sweat breaking out on his face as the full impact of what he'd learned finally hit him like a ton of bricks.

All things considered, it looked as though Gohan was finished.

However, just when it seemed like Sandra had the upper hand; the demi-Saiyan quietly and discreetly clenched his fists and teeth, before widening up his stance. Despite the fact every muscle in his body was screaming at him, telling him not to do this, Gohan knew he had no other choice and cracked a pained smile. "My body's going to hate me for this later… but… Kaioken times-!"

Before Gohan could finish his sentence, a deafening thunderclap rang out, followed by a purple flash as Sandra launched herself at her foe at full speed. The act of doing so caused the ground and the air around her to catch fire, while a trench was carved into the floor in the direction she was traveling. The audience didn't even have time to look surprised when, without warning, the Saiyan Empress drove a fist into Gohan's face, the impact of which caused a shockwave so great it sent a twister of purple fire blasting across the desert behind her target.

Several miles of rock, grassland and forest was practically incinerated in an instant by the force of Sandra's punch traveling over the planet, sending smoke and dust into the atmosphere and terrifying everyone near enough to feel the tremors. As the earth crumbled under the shockwaves rippling through the sky, Gohan's body was sent hurtling through the vortex, tumbling like a ragdoll while his female opponent pursued him. In an instant, Sandra set upon the hapless Saiyan with a vicious onslaught of blows, which rained down on the Z-fighter from all directions and pummeled him into submission. The attack was rapid, unending and fast, and continued to carry on as the duo rocketed across the planet.

From space, the satellites in orbit were able to spot a golden bolt of energy traveling around the Earth in its upper stratosphere. The object was moving so fast that it was able to lap the planet twelve times in only three seconds, leaving a trail of golden energy in its wake.

Sandra, being the source of this unusual anomaly, ignored the audience watching their battle and continued to attack Gohan with a ferocity that was unmatched. When her glowing form shot over a series of snow covered Mountain Ranges in the North, a little too close for the planet's liking, not only did the act of doing so carve a trench into the surface, but two seconds after they'd passed, a sonic boom rang out that caused all of the edifices for three miles to crumble to the ground. A split second later, the heat from the shockwave hit the countryside, incinerating the ground instantly and causing it to melt.

Just from flying over them, Sandra was able to transform a series of mountains from solid bedrock into an ocean of molten lava.

The same happened to a couple of other unfortunate high points that got in the way of Sandra's flight path. After several more laps of the planet, the Saiyan Empress's route became more erratic and spontaneous, as the woman flew circles, loops and arcs through the sky, all the while continuing to hammer her opponent mercilessly with attacks. As the sky began to catch fire from the speed the two warriors were traveling, Sandra eventually ended her combo of attacks by grabbing Gohan by the leg and tossing him to the other side of the world.

As she flew after him, the woman yelled at him with a manic grin in play. "This form represents the sum total of all my years of hard work and training! With the power of the Oozaru behind me, our race's greatest and most recognized trait, I have become the closest living Saiyan to reach the coveted Super Saiyan 4 form in over one thousand years!" Catching up to her opponent, she slammed a fist into a stomach and sent Gohan rag dolling over the continent, smashing through another mountain, incinerating it, and then bouncing up into the sky, where Sandra quickly intercepted him. "The energy shunted from my body in this halfway state transforms me into a propelling force..." Grabbing him by the leg a second time, Sandra then spun him around several times, before then tossing him towards the ocean, "elevating speed and power beyond the limitations..." Intercepting him a second time, the woman brought her hands above her head before slamming her fists down into the unresponsive Gohan's back. "OF LIVING FLESH!"

As Gohan's broken body was sent shooting towards the planet's surface, Sandra was able to shoot past him and cut him off. Blazing across the ocean and evaporating much of the water, the woman then shot up into the sky and caught Gohan just milliseconds before he could hit the water. She drove her knee into his stomach, causing a deafening impact sound to ring out, as the clouds were parted and so was the ocean, right down to the seabed. Lightning shot off of Sandra's body and struck the surrounding sea, sterilizing the air before, with a scream of effort, the woman kicked Gohan straight up into space, his body shooting through the atmosphere at such speed he probably incinerated what was left of the ozone layer.

Traveling well over Mach 100, Gohan's body eventually impacted a solid five seconds after being kicked. When his body punched a crater into the surface he'd struck, the still remarkably conscious teen realized he'd not only been kicked into space, he'd left Earth's entirely. In fact, from the looks of it, Sandra had managed to kick him so hard he'd flown straight through Saturn, punched a hole in it, and straight into one of the planet's moons. Judging from the position of the ringed celestial body above him, as well as the debris orbiting the vacuum of his crash site, he'd apparently smacked right into the planet's moon of Rhea.

Still lying flat out in the crater, Gohan allowed the full realization of what'd hit him percolate in his mind. Upon realizing that Sandra had just hit him with everything she could possibly muster with her body alone, the demi-Saiyan then cracked an exhilarated smile and chuckled.

"Good one. Now... it's my turn," the half-Saiyan chirped, his skin glowing red with excitement. However, it turned out to be more than just an emotional response, as he'd discreetly activated his Kaioken form before Sandra could hit him, allowing him to withstand her following assault. After making sure that the most important bones in his body were intact and that he was still in one piece, Gohan clenched his fists and gritted his teeth. "Super Kaioken... TIMES TWENTYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYY! AAAAAAAAGHHHH!" With a mighty scream, red energy began pouring out of his body and ripping the moon apart around him, his muscles bulking up and veins beginning to pulse with blood.

The instant he powered up, the boy then leapt to his feet and jumped off of the moon, causing the satellite to explode into a cloud of rubble as he left a trail of red ki in his wake...

Right back to Earth...
Having touched down on an island in the middle of the ocean, the still transformed Sandra stood panting raggedly and staring up into the sky. Her golden, spiky hair trailing down her more muscular body, with purple veins still visible and tattooing her skin, the powered up woman then hunched forward an clenched her fists.

"Using this form... places enormous stress on my body, similar to anaerobic exercises," Sandra panted, shaking her head as sweat dribbled down her face. "Since I'm drawing on Blutz radiation directly from my cells, it elevates my power to such a degree that without the Oozaru form to back it up, it rips my body apart every time I use it, thereby shortening my life span. Therefore it should only be used as a trump card for settling fights quickly." She then looked up with a smirk. "And it looks like... I won."

All of a sudden, a flash of light hit the ground several yards away from her and punched a massive crater into the ground, sending debris and rubble blasting across the island. When the shockwave and dust settled, Sandra couldn't help but gape across at it in disbelief as she saw a familiar person step out of the crater. No longer wearing his orange gi top, with only half of his blue top, with his pants tattered to the point of falling apart, a red-skinned Gohan emerged at the crest of the crater and smiled down at his opponent.

Despite having received the beating of a lifetime, the bruised and swollen Z-fighter looked surprisingly chipper.

"Did you miss me?" Gohan asked in his cheerful tone of voice. A split second later, a serious expression suddenly crossed his face before his red aura exploded off of him once again, forming a cone of fiery energy around him. This was further enhanced by a storm of white lightning, which trailed across the ground and left black burns across the dirt.

Unable to believe that her opponent was still alive, Sandra continued to gape up at the demi-Saiyan in bewilderment. Sensing his energy level had increased to a level far beyond the form she'd attained, the woman continued to stare at him with wide eyes, before she leaned forward into a runner's stance. In that instant, a wide grin spread across her lips, her expression intensified, and her heart started hammering against her chest in excitement.

"This man..." Lurching forward, Sandra broke into a light jog. Seconds later, her jog transformed into a full-blown run as she practically sprinted at her opponent standing in the crater several yards above her, "MAKES ME WANT TO GO ALL OUT!" All of a sudden, the woman's purple and golden aura exploded around her, as she then blasted right up at her opponent, vanishing with a crack of wind. A split second later, the ground Gohan was standing on was disintegrated as he was suddenly bombarded from all directions by his adversary, prompting him to shield his face with a cross-arm guard while Sandra unleashed a powerful string of attacks on him without pause or hesitation."RAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAA:

The island literally turning to dust around them from the power Sandra unleashed, Gohan decided to end the one-sided beating once and for all. Sticking his fist out, he caught his opponent flush in the stomach, hitting her with such force it generated a shockwave atop the ocean and sent a tsunami fifty feet high rippling out over the vast stretch of sea. As for Sandra, the woman's red eyes bugged out of her skull from the force of the hit, moments before she vomited up blood and was sent rocketing towards the mainland.

When her feet slammed into the shoreline of the continent and she skidded into a cliff, smashing straight through it and up onto the valley floor, Sandra then hunched over and coughed up more blood. Noticing the fist imprint in her stomach and the right side of her ribs, the transformed woman laughed and looked up with an overexcited and bloody smile.

"That's it, Gohan! Let me feel the power of your Super Saiyan fists!" Licking the blood from her lips, she then spat on the ground and took a stance, "Kai… you're making me so hot! You definitely are an opponent worth defeating!" Golden and purple energy erupted from every pore in her body to surround her, the woman let out a mighty roar as she once again powered up, her strength multiplying to match the increase in her opponent's.

The moment she did so, Gohan came barreling at her across the ocean in the form of a red lightning bolt, which struck Sandra and propelled both adversaries up into the heavens. Not only did the land melt and cave in from their point of impact, but the sky was set alight from the sheer force of their take off. What followed from that point was both warriors engaging in one last epic clash in the skies, their red and purple auras leaving vapor trails of energy as they twisted, coiled, spun and collided with each other. Each impact caused the planet itself to shake and could be felt all around.

Those watching through the cameras following the pair could only look on in amazement as the pair struck and exchanged blows with the capacity to split entire planets. Unlike the rounds from before, where the two showcased superb technique and form, here there was absolutely no grace or skill at all. The two Saiyans were just battering each other with wild haymakers and attacks, not caring whether or not they were hit. They just wanted to break their opponent and put an end to this fight once and for all.

Their efforts eventually yielded incredibly painful results. As the pair lapped the planet in a running battle, attacking each other while traveling at speeds well above that of light, the sound of muscles popping and bones cracking soon began echoing all around. Both fighters winced when they felt their muscles shred, their bodies unable to maintain such high levels of energy as blood seeped out of their mouths, noses, ears and eyes. Eventually, when the pair slammed their fists into each other during the last of their exchanges, the pair felt all the bones in their knuckles and forearms fracture, with some of the fluid spurting out of their hands. This caused the pair to separate and scatter in the vacuum, where the two then suspended themselves between both Earth and Corvus floating several hundred miles away.

Gasping for air inside their auras, Gohan and Sandra then leered at one another excitedly, knowing full well that their fight was finally coming to an end.

"Damn, Gohan fucked me up real good. Eight broken ribs, a fractured arm, a broken jaw, a broken leg, cracked femur, seven busted toes, splintered wrists, broken knuckles on both hands, bruised fingers, fractures around my eye sockets, busted nose, two missing teeth, ten concussions, wicked bruising in the abs and midsection, torn muscles, and multiple internal injuries," Sandra thought, before licking her lips happily, "Kai… he's incredible…"

"Sunken eyeball, broken shoulder, three broken ribs, two cracked, eighteen concussions, fractures around the eye sockets, broken jaw, three missing teeth, a broken toe on each foot, hairline fractures in my shins, a busted arm, shattered knuckles, ripped muscles, tearing in the midsection and thigh, broken nose, and other internal injuries I'm still trying to count," Gohan also thought, rolling his shoulder and clenching his fists, "It's a miracle I haven't fallen apart yet. Kami, this woman is awesome."

Not wanting to lose out, both warriors powered up, their auras kicking around them in a blaze. Upon which the two leant forward and charged, battle cries leaving their lips as they rocketed towards one another with the intent to knock the other out.

It seemed like this battle would be decided by who could land the last punch. But just as the pair was closing the last few inches of distance between each other, their auras suddenly dispelled and with it, so did their transformations. As a result, not only did both of them return to normal size, their hair went back to its normal length and color, their eyebrows grew back, and the veins pulsing on their muscles sunk back into their skin.

All of this happened with a hilarious and comical pop, leaving both fighters staring at one another in momentary surprise, before they suddenly started to fall out of the sky. Easily reentering the planet's atmosphere, the two Saiyans fell side by side, still staring at each other and still wondering what'd happened. When the pair saw the clouds start flying past them and saw the ground approaching, the two suddenly realized that they had no more energy and started to panic.

Unable to fly, the pair did everything they could to gain altitude. While Sandra started flapping her arms, Gohan hilariously tried to do breast stroke through the air. When that didn't work, the two warriors then started shouting.

"We're going to die!" Sandra screamed.

"No we're not! It's just a fall from over twenty thousand feet!" Gohan shouted back. "We can survive this! Think positive!"

After a moment, the female Saiyan cried out again, "I'm a hundred percent positive we're going to die!"

"HOW IS THAT POSITIVE?!"

"IT'S AN IMPROVEMENT!"

When the pair saw ground fast approaching them and details of the landscape getting larger and larger, the two warriors shrieked and latched onto each other. Since they had no means to stop themselves from falling, they were pretty much screwed.

"Gohan! Before we hit whatever part of the Earth we land on… there's something I really need to say to you!"

"Yeah? What is it?" the demi-Saiyan asked.

"You were the best opponent I've ever had!" the Empress shouted.

Hearing her loud and clear, Gohan nodded and yelled back, "The feeling is mutual, Sandra-san! You are the greatest, most awesome person I've ever had the pleasure of fighting!"

Sharing a smile through their bruised and swollen faces, their cheeks puffed up from all the punishment they'd sustained, the two then took a deep breath, before letting out two simultaneous screams.

Seconds later, the two crashed in the middle of a densely populated city, sending rubble and dust shooting up into the sky, and shaking the ground from their impact.

By happenchance, the two had ended up crash-landing in the center of Satan City.

OOO

(Meanwhile)

Over in King Koku's courtyard, the people watching the events unfold on screen shared the exact same reaction as every other person watching around the globe, which consisted primarily of both bewilderment and blank.

Around this point, most of all the Z-fighters that'd been locked in battle with their opponents had returned to the starting point. Here, they'd been able to watch the fights between the remaining members of their group unfold, with Zangya and Maya's being the most recent. However, after watching the epic showdown between Gohan and Sandra, which led into the most astonishing slugfest and gladiator match in the history of the world, they then had the pleasure of watching both of them crash and burn in the most anti-climactic way imaginable.

This led to Bulma, Krillin, Tien, Kure, Yamcha, Videl, Choutzu, Android 18 and Paprika palming their faces or staring at the screen with deadpanned expressions, with the only ones not reacting in any manner being Goten, Trunks and the collection of CAT Droids standing around them. Even King Koku and his staff were confused by the development, which prompted the royal to turn to the Z-fighters for answers.

"W-What happened?" the man asked, unable to see anything through the smoke and dust clouding the crash site on screen. His question caused murmuring to break out amongst the crowd gathered around him. "Who won?"

"Don't know," Bulma replied, narrowing her eyes on the picture before turning to the enormous spider-tank standing next to her. "Do you think you can clear up the screen a little? Get one of those cameras closer?"

"I sure can," San replied, a secondary hologram popping up next to the big one, showing the tank manually seize control of one of its drones. Moving the mechanical sphere closer in, the automaton was able to give the audience a clear view of the situation. "There." When they watched the roving device zoom in through the clearing smoke, everyone saw a massive crater had been punched right into the heart of Satan City square, about eighty feet in diameter and twenty feet deep.

There, lying at the bottom of it, covered in dirt, bits of concrete and busted up pipes, they saw Gohan and Sandra, all bloodied and battered, with their faces in the mud.

Shocked at the sight, Videl quickly limped forward with her hands over her mouth, "G-Gohan."

"Geez. They look pretty bad, guys," Krillin spoke up, gritting his teeth in worry, "I don't see them moving."

"We need to get them some Senzu Beans... stat," Yamcha spoke up, turning to his friends hastily. "Does anybody have any on them?"

Upon seeing the senior members shake their heads, the ever-attentive Tien then stepped up to the plate. "Don't worry. I'll fly by Korin's place and grab some," the martial artist spoke, floating off of the ground while everyone else looked on. "I'm the least banged up out of you guys and I'm a fast flyer. I'll be back in a few ticks." Powering up, he then shot off into the distance, leaving a white vapor trail in his wake.

When the dust from the man's takeoff settled, Bulma quickly turned to her friends and pointed in the direction of the city. "We won't be able to do much good standing around here. Let's head over to Satan City and help them out." Accessing her helmet and pulling down her facial visor, the woman willed her suit's engines to life. As soon as her jets fired up, the woman then shot off of the ground and rocketed into the distance.

Following her lead, the battered and exhausted Z-fighters also took flight, with the CAT droids helping those who couldn't move fly after them, namely Kure, Mobi, and Videl.

Upon watching the super heroes take flight, along with the enormous spider-tank that'd been relaying the fight to all of them, King Koku, his staff, and the visitors to the castle stood there looking around at one another. After several seconds passed, the ruler of the nation and the world narrowed his eyes, and then pointed across at his secretary and head of security.

"Get a transport ship ready! We're going after them!"

And so they did…

OOO

(Several minutes later)

The first to arrive at the crash site was actually the people living and working closest to the center of Satan City. People who had previously been watching the fights on their laptops, computers and televisions quickly abandoned their posts to go see for themselves the person who'd instigated the planet-wide battle, who was now lying in a massive ditch of her own making.

After a huge crowd had gathered around the crater, police were quickly called to the scene, with a majority of them bordering off the area to prevent people from going down into the crater themselves. While the officers on the scene quickly called in the military and news choppers suddenly came down in their droves, amidst the clamoring crowds, Erasa, Touya, Yukie, Sharpener and Sena appeared on the scene.

Forcing their way to the front, the group of teenagers looked down into the bottom of the hole, where they saw their best friend and classmate lying in a pool of sewage water.

Upon seeing the bloodied and battered state he was in, a concerned Erasa gasped in horror.

"Gohan-kun. N-No…"

"Damn. Our boy got the stuffing taken out of him," Sena whispered, not really knowing what else to say after seeing the state the teen was in.

"So did his opponent," Touya spoke up, gesturing to the raven haired woman lying several feet away from his position. "Even if he didn't win the battle, he still managed to take her down with him."

Swallowing nervously, Yukie looked across at the others, "Do you think he's dead?"

"Hell no," Sharpener said, clenching his fists and gritting his teeth. "He's our bro. There's no way he can get taken out so easily." Though he sounded confident, after watching the sheer brutality that had taken place during the fight, his gut was soon telling him otherwise.

Erasa however, not willing to believe her Gohan was down for the count, gritted her teeth and screamed down into the crater, "Come on, Gohan! Get up! Don't you dare let it end like this! Get up and win this thing! I know you can!"

The crowd gathered around the girl thought otherwise and immediately began calling this fight over. However, almost immediately after the girl's cries echoed out, the people surrounding the crater gasped in disbelief when they suddenly saw Gohan's body start to move. Silence rained instantaneously as everyone watched in astonishment as the burnt and battered demi-Saiyan shoved the slab of concrete off of him and struggled to his feet, at the same time his opponent did as well.
Rising up from the ground like a couple of corpses, both Gohan and Sandra revealed to the world the horrifying states they were in. Faces beaten to the point of being made up entirely swelling and bruises, blood dripping from various open wounds and cuts, and their clothes practically hanging off of their bodies in tatters, the two warriors choked and gasped for breath, stumbling as they attempted to regain their footing.

Straightening up as best as they could, the two barely conscious Saiyans shook themselves out of their dazes and, upon realizing where they were, quickly turned their attention to their opponents. When they saw them standing on opposite ends of the crater, the pair's expressions immediately hardened. Upon which the duo then went about regaining proper fighting postures.

While the crowds gaped down at the two nearly dead warriors, the Z-fighters arrived on the scene. Dropping down from the sky, both Bulma's group and Zangya's group landed inside the police barricades, with the crowds behind them taking a big step back when they saw the rest of the competitors arrive.

The police on the scene quickly considered drawing their guns on them, but they instantly thought against that idea, as neither of them was keen on tangling with the super powered group.

When the newcomers looked down in the crater, they could not for the life of them comprehend what they were witnessing.

"I don't believe it. They're still going?" Vegeta choked out, shaking his head.

"They shouldn't even be conscious," Android 18 murmured.

"They barely have any energy left," Yamcha uttered, narrowing his eyes when he saw the two Saiyans edge around each other. "Do they seriously want to keep fighting?"

"Neither one of them has been knocked out yet," Kure announced, narrowing her eyes on the scene and adjusting her glasses. When Maya and Cal moved over to her position, with San coming to stand behind them, the feline alien spoke up, "From what I can see, those two will keep going until one of them passes out completely or concedes defeat. There's no other way about this."

"I can't believe how much both of them want to win," Choutzu murmured, gulping when he saw the blood dripping down their faces and arms. "Saiyans are really incredible."

Cupping her hands together, Videl edged forward and stared down at her boyfriend, who she could see was swaying drunkenly on the spot. Hell, from all the damage she could see on him, he looked like he was about to keel over. "Please… finish this, Gohan. You can do it."

After several more seconds of panting, Sandra gritted her teeth and stuck her nose in the air. "I've said this before… and I'll… say it again… you are one tough bastard," she wheezed.

"And you are one… amazing woman," Gohan also gasped, his knees trembling badly.

Chuckling in a pained manner, the Empress then raised a broken finger and pointed at him, but was unable to focus properly due to how blurry her vision had become, "This… won't be over… until one… or both of us are either dead or unable to move."

Gohan smirked, "You… read my mind." Reaching down, the boy ripped away what was left of his top and yanked off the remains of his pants. When he tossed them to the side, he revealed his beaten up, muscular body, and the pair of black swimming trunks he wore under his gi, which were torn on the side.
Licking her lips when she saw her opponent cast his attire aside, Sandra decided to follow his lead. Grabbing her broken suit by the collar, she also ripped it free and dropped it to the ground. At first people thought she was nude, but as it turned out the woman was actually wearing a black thong underneath and a single strip of breast tape around her chest. As soon as she dropped her armor, she then cracked her neck and took a stance, not caring that her body was screaming at her to stop. "To the end?"

"To the end," Gohan parroted, before letting out a roar and powering up. His aura flickered several times, before his hair shimmered blonde and eyes turned green. His transformation to Super Saiyan was weak and pathetic, but it was all he could do just to stay in the game.

Sandra copied him, also letting out a gutsy yell as her own aura flickered around her and her hair spiked up. As soon as her locks flashed gold, the woman gave a spirited battle cry and rushed at her opponent, stumbling and zigzagging all the while.

The demi-Saiyan did so as well, almost tripping over his own feet as he practically threw himself at his opponent. Cocking back his right fist, he threw a hard straight punch at his approaching target, only to watch the woman duck under it and tackle him. The air was knocked out of his lungs as he was picked up and slammed into the ground. The moment he was down, Sandra leapt on top of him and began uncorking punches into his face, clocking him across the cheek several times before he grabbed her wrist and pulled her over. When the female landed in the mud and attempted to sit up, Gohan leapt at her with a knee to the face, cracking her in the nose and knocking her back into the floor before springing to his feet.

Seeing she was still down, Gohan cocked back his leg and threw a kick at her head. But the downed Sandra blocked the attack with her forearm, leapt from the puddle and nailed the hybrid in the stomach with a swift body shot.

From that point onwards, the slugfest continued, with both warriors stumbling about the crater, trading slopping punches and sloppy kicks in the mud, all the while desperately trying to stay conscious. When Sandra grabbed Gohan and shoved him into the wall, she attempted to punch him in the face. But the teen pushed off the crater and drove a kick into her gut, sending her skidding back with a loud thud. Stopping several feet later, the woman then raised her arms and parried an onslaught of punches, before countering with a right straight that nailed Gohan in the temple, sending him staggering drunkenly to the side. Not willing to go down just yet, the half-Saiyan let out a roar and lunged at the Empress, slamming a hook across her face, which threw her to the other side of the crater.

As the crowds watched silently as the fight between the two Saiyans chugged along, Krillin couldn't help but clench his fists and grit his teeth with amazement. "Damn. Even though they're Super Saiyans, both of them are so gassed out I bet even Master Roshi could beat them right now."

"Yeah. But even I don't want to get in between that," Yamcha remarked, cringing along with everybody else when they saw Gohan smash Sandra's chin with an uppercut.

The crowds stirred and murmured, not knowing what to do or what to say. This being a fight that was well beyond any of them and between people they didn't know who to root for, all they could do was watch and wait in silence.

Clenching her knuckles tightly as she watched the agonizing engagement unfold, Videl soon grew tired of standing in silence, and stepped forward with a yell. "GOHAN! You can win! Don't let that woman beat you! COME ON! GOHAAAAAN!"

Hearing his older sister figure begin to call out, prompted Goten to also voice his support. "Yeah!
Beat her, big brother! You can do it! I know you can!"

"Go Gohan! Fight her! Win!" Trunks also cried out, throwing his arms in the air as high as they could go.

When the people nearby saw Videl Satan begin to shout and cheer for the young man fighting down in the pit, men and women left and right quickly picked up on the mood. Piggybacking off of the trio's cries of encouragement, the rest of the crowd started cheering as well, urging the duo on and voicing their support for the one who was fighting for them.

"That's right! Fight! Keep it up, son!"

"Go! Go! Go!"

"Take it to her! You've come so far! Don't give up!"

"You can do it, Gohan!"

"You're both awesome! Keep going!"

"Fight for us, Gohan! Win!"

"Don't make it easy for him, Sandra!"

"Show that woman the power of an Earthling!"

The tension and excitement was just too powerful to resist. Everyone who'd tuned in to watch the battle on screen was now jazzed to see how the fight would end in person. So, not caring what was at stake or who would win, the crowd cheered and bellowed for the two to give it their all. Hearing the people of the planet cheer for their friend and comrade had Maya, Cal and Kure look around in amazement, before they too started to cheer.

"YEAH! GO SANDRA!" Maya screamed.

"Go for it, girl! Go for the win!" Kure also shouted.

Stumbling into the wall of the crater, the female Saiyan lay against it for a moment, panting for breath, before stumbling forward and hitting Gohan in the face with a haymaker. When the demi-Saiyan was flung back by the punch, trailing blood and sweat, the female warrior cocked her left hand and fired off a barrage of high-speed jabs. "Dai Konran!" Punches then flew towards Gohan at an incredible speed, threatening to pummel him into submission.

But the Saiyan, reacting fast, covered up with a guard and began weaving his head from side-to-side. Keeping his movements compact, the hero was easily able to dodge the woman's rapid fire punches, charging his way forward while avoiding punch after punch. Sandra, stunned to see her opponent avoid her barrage so easily, fell into a retreat while continuing to fire off attacks. However, despite her best efforts, she was unable to stop Gohan from slipping right into her defensive circle and nailing her in the side with a liver blow. The crunch of his knuckles landing against her ribs doubled the woman over and had her spit up blood.

Taking advantage of her state, Gohan began landing hooks and punches on his opponent without mercy, battering her about with heavy attacks. To end his combo, he then stepped in with a right hook, only to get nailed in the gut by a body shot from Sandra. She then proceeded to nail him with more haymakers, before being stopped by Gohan hitting her in the ribs with a roundhouse kick, sending both fighters backpedaling from one another.
Managing to stop himself from falling over, the badly swollen Gohan took a deep breath before bringing his hands up and stepping forward. The moment his leg hit the ground, his knee nearly buckled, causing him to wince. "Damn it! My legs are nearly dead! I can't kick anymore!" Shaking his head, he then rushed forward and, diverting the rest of his energy to his upper body, began to weave about in a figure of eight. "This will be the last attack! I'm taking her down right here and now!"

Sandra, also pushing forward, brought her arms up and fired off a series of sharp jabs at her opponent. Watching him duck and weave between them, she then attempted to throw a kick, but couldn't bring her leg up any higher than a step. "My legs have shut down! Alright! I'll finish this with my fists!" She then fired off a right straight, only to see Gohan disappear from her line of sight. Recoiling in shock, she then looked down and saw that her foe was weaving his upper body from side to side at high speed, leaving multiple after images as his head followed a figure of eight motion. "W-What the-?"

"That's the…" Videl whispered, recognizing her boyfriend's technique.

"I saw this used once in a documentary… so I know it will work!" Gohan shouted in his head, picking up speed as he closed in on his shocked opponent. "Dempsey Roll!"

Watching her adversary edge closer and closer at a terrifying speed, Sandra was then forced to lean back to avoid the blur of his punch zooming passed her, causing her to take a step back. After hearing the whoosh of his blow miss her by a hair, the female then felt her heart start to race, and a grin slowly pulled across her lips. "So, this is what it's come down to? You want to take my life by sacrificing yours with one last, desperate attack?" Her head turning in the direction Gohan had swung himself, the Saiyan Empress's pupils dilated as a beastly expression of excitement suddenly appeared on her face. "Alright then… if it's a brawl you want… IT'S A BRAWL YOU'LL GET!"

Twisting towards her opponent, Sandra cocked back her right fist and lunged at him with her signature punch. "You think I'll fall for such a simple technique?! I'll just telegraph your movement and match a counter to your punch! Sorry, stallion, but I'm going to split your skull open with my powerful right! SENKOOOOOOO!" She then let her attack fly.

Seeing the woman fire off her counter and seeing her crush turning into it with a hook, Zangya's eyes widened in horror, "GOHAN! LOOK OUT!"

Spotting the attack without being warned, Gohan gritted his teeth and hit the brakes. His feet screeching across the ground as he sharply reversed his momentum, the demi-Saiyan was able to slow himself down enough to avoid the punch. Feeling the full weight of her right shoot passed him with a blast of wind, the Z-fighter ducked right under it, throwing his body to his opponent's right.

The act of doing so caused a series of loud tears to echo out across the square, as every muscle in Gohan's calf ripped from the pressure.

Realizing she'd missed, Sandra spun around in alarm, "He dodged it?"

"Ignore it! Keep going! Keep going!" Gohan shouted in his head, spinning back around and coming back up at his opponent from her blind spot, whom he saw turn back to face him in kind. His left fist held out, the boy snarled as he threw himself at his opponent. "EAT THIS!"

"My fist will hit you first!" Sandra screamed out, copying his motion and swinging back at him with her left.

All of a sudden, a sickening crack rang out across the city as both Sandra and Gohan struck each other at the exact same time, their head's jerking back with sweat clouding the air above them. Everyone cringed and groaned, as the sight of the pair's fists impacting one another looked gruesome and painful. However, this was not the end of it.

Twisting his body back around, a stunned and bleeding Gohan growled and swung back in with his right. "I've worked too hard for this! I CAN'T LOSE HERE!" he screamed, flying right back at his opponent with another wide hook.

Sandra, also bleeding heavily from the mouth, spun around and swung in with a hook of her own. "If this is your last stand against a fellow Saiyan Elite… I'LL TAKE YOU HEAD OOOOOOOOOONN!" With a yell of her own, she unleashed the mother of all hooks upon her target.

What followed from that point onwards was thunderclap after thunderclap as Gohan and Sandra began hitting each other over and over again, with every one of their attacks hitting at the exact same time. Following the same side-to-side motion, the pair continued slamming punches into their target, desperately trying to knock the other one down while at the same time stay conscious. However, as blood started to splatter across the ground and their respective visions started to blur, it became clear that this battle was soon coming to its end.

By the time their battle had reached this stage, the crowds in Satan City were soon joined by King Koku and his entourage. When they made their way to the front, they were able to watch as Gohan and Sandra attacked one another with their last spurt of energy.

Even Hercule Satan had arrived on the scene, but everyone was so caught up in the battle taking place that they didn't notice the Champ skulking about in the crowd in his gi.

"My gosh…" the bearded martial arts champion whispered, seeing blood cloud the air from the two Saiyans striking each other simultaneously.

Gohan, blood pouring down his even more swollen face, spun in with another hook, a cry of desperation leaving his clenched jaw, "Just a little more… just a little bit more… and I WILL WIN!"

"I won't lose!" Sandra also cried in her head, "I WON'T LOSE TO ANOTHER SAIYAN!"

As the two Saiyans continued to hammer each other with side-to-side hooks, the crowd gripped their metaphorical seats and started to chant, Gohan and Sandra's names echoing over the city and egging the two one. Quickly attaching themselves to the audience's collective cries of support, the Z-fighters also started to shout in encouragement.

"Gohan!" Krillin hollered. "Go for it!"

"Don't give up!" Choutzu shouted.

"You can do it, buddy!" Yamcha yelled.

"Beat her, Gohan!" Bulma cried out.

"Don't let her win!" Trunks called.

"Big brother!" Goten shouted.

"You're almost there!" Zangya shouted. "Gohan!"
"GO GOHAN!" Erasa screamed alongside Sharpener, Touya, Yukie and Sena.

"DO IT, GOHAAAAAN!" Videl screamed, tears flying out of her eyes as she did so. "WIIIIIIIIIIIN!"

After another thunderclap from their hooks landing rang out, Gohan and Sandra spun around one last time, their green eyes burning with determination and their jaws clenched for the final hit.

"THIS IS IT!" Gohan bellowed in his head.

"THIS MATCH IS MINE!" Sandra cried, her left fist uncorking for a full swing.

But then, just when Sandra's arm was extending, the woman suddenly felt her left calf jerk backwards as her ankle gave out, momentarily stopping her momentum. Feeling the tug in her leg muscles caused a shocked look to appear on the woman's face, a split millisecond before the clap of Gohan's fist slammed across her face and knocked her head back with a blast of sweat and blood.

Maya, tears hanging at the corners of her eyes, reeled forward in horror, "SANDRAAAAAAA!

Concussed by the hit, Sandra began to drop the ground like a rock, watching her blackening world fly passed her and the people up on the crater staring down at her. Hearing the cry of her best friend above the white noise filling her ears, the Empress looked up during her fall. When she did, she saw Maya, Kure, Mobi and Cal all standing on the cliff, all staring down at her in fear, concern, and desperation.

All of a sudden, the female Saiyan was bombarded by flashes of her past. Images from her childhood and young life filled her eyes, showing her the time she spent with Maya on that prehistoric planet, their life in the apartment, their first meeting with Kure and her race, their war against King Cold's brother Emperor Blizzard, their time spent as slaves in the gladiator pits, and their time spent on Corvus. Within those visions, she saw the smiling faces of all the people they'd saved and all the people they'd made friends with, all of whom were looking up at her with both hope and joy.

"I... I am..." In that moment a surge of energy rushed through the warrior's body, causing her half-lidded eyes to widen. "THE SAIYAN SANDRA!" Throwing her foot back, she was able to stop herself from falling and spun around, dropping her arms and standing as straight as she could.

A split second later, the crack of a gunshot rang out as Gohan, screaming at the top of his lungs, drove his last hook across Sandra's face. His fist impacted the woman's face with such force it split the ground beneath them, warped her head, and lifted her off her feet, sending her flying across the crater in a cloud of blood and sweat.

The moment his finishing blow landed was the moment every single person in the crowd was silenced, as they watched Sandra's body crumple to the floor like a pile of bricks.

When Gohan finally saw his opponent slide to a stop, on her back and staring up at the sky, the young man gasped for breath before, inhaling deeply, he threw his arms to his sides and screamed up to the heavens. "RAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAH!"

His voice echoing into the distance, the teen staggered backwards, blood dripping down his face and onto the floor. Continuing to stare up at the sky, the completely exhausted and drained Super Saiyan warrior figured this battle was good and done.

But when a series of gasps and murmurs rang out, drawing his gaze back down to the ground, his eyes widened in disbelief as he saw his opponent, still in Super Saiyan form, glaring back at him with a swollen left cheek and blood filling her hair. As he and the rest of the crowd gawked at the miraculously standing Sandra, they saw her raise her fists and take a stance, sending a cold chill down Gohan's back.

"I... I could've sworn I knocked her out," the boy gasped, feeling his body shake and tremble fearfully under the woman's gaze. "My energy is all gone. I don't have anything left." All she would need to do was tap him and he would fall over. Only sheer willpower and adrenaline was keeping him from collapsing under his own weight.

For a moment the demi-Saiyan had no idea what to do. He was at a complete loss. But then, when he saw Sandra shuffle forward, her boots smearing her blood over the ground, the Z-fighter from Earth gritted his teeth and raised his hands.

"To the end," he whispered, remembering the words the two of them had shared with one another. Seeing Sandra cock back her right fist prompted Gohan into action. With a mighty battle cry, he rushed forward. However, just as he was feet from engaging his opponent one last time, a couple of shadows suddenly darted down from the crater and jumped in his way, stopping him before he could make another step. All of a sudden, a pair of familiar cries rang out.

"GOHAN!" Zangya shouted, her arms wrapping around the boy's waist and holding the teen in place.

"STOP!" Hercule yelled, holding the boy's arm and stopping him from throwing a punch.

Surprised, Gohan looked down at the people who'd stopped him. When he saw their faces staring back at him, along with Maya who'd also leapt down to intercept him, the three interlopers then turned to where Sandra was standing. The demi-Saiyan followed their stunned and wide-eyed gazes, expecting to see one of his friends to have leapt in front of his opponent as well.

It came as a surprise to both him and everyone else when they saw Sandra standing there, still in Super Saiyan form, frozen in mid-punch.

Pulling out of his own attack, he felt Hercule and Maya release him, while Zangya held onto him, keeping him from toppling over. In the meantime, the Champ, amidst the stunned clamor of the crowd, slowly approached the frozen Sandra. Leaning towards her, the big man with the afro raised his hand and waved it a couple of times in front of her face.

Nothing.

"She's unconscious," Hercule said, loud enough for everyone to hear.

As the Z-fighters and crowd murmured amongst each other, Zangya blinked as she stared at the stationary Sandra, her fist halfway extended in her signature counter. "But... she's still a Super Saiyan," she said, noticing her hair was still blonde. It was almost like someone had taken a snapshot of her and posted her on the ground right in front of them.

She was frozen in time, unconsciously still fighting a battle inside her head.

As Gohan exhaustedly leant against his friend, Maya, staring at Sandra's bruised and bleeding form, stuck where she was, quickly realized what'd happened. Placing both hands over her mouth, the dark-skinned female Saiyan then started to sob, tears flowing from her eyes as she stared into her friend's eyes.
"She heard us," Maya whispered, feeling Gohan, Zangya and Hercule look at her. "Even though she was knocked out, her body responded to the cries and cheers of her friends… and everyone she'd saved." Sniffling, she then brought her hand up in an attempt to cover up her whimpering. "She wasn't just fighting for herself… she was fighting for all of us."

When he saw Maya start to weep into her hands, Gohan, not knowing what else to do, reached forward and placed a hand on her shoulder. When he felt the female Saiyan respond and saw the other Z-fighters slide down the crater to join them, he then looked up and allowed himself to relax. The moment his Super Saiyan transformation faded, he then spoke in a hoarse and tired voice.

"It's over…"

He'd won.

(TO BE CONTINUED)

Author's Note: Okay. That battle's over and done with… although Piccolo and Gast are still having their game up on Corvus. Who do you think will win? And do you think Piccolo will have another fusion?

Don't know. Maybe I'll let the audience decide.

As for this arc, I've decided that this will be the last of the long fights. I mean, three chapters… that's just overkill. I didn't really want it to stretch that far, but in a battle between two Saiyans who are equal in strength and power, and making a proper resolution to that battle unlike with the one between Goku and Majin Vegeta, it did drag on till the last one was knocked out of commission. Their pride as Saiyans wouldn't let either of them lose.

For the next chapter, I'm thinking of making it the last one for this part of the story. Maybe split the story up into two parts, since there is more story that needs to be covered before the finale.

But, as for this one, I guess I'll throw in some numbers, just for the hell of it. I don't really like writing power levels since it's annoying keeping track of them, but I'll just do it anyway.

I stopped doing them for my One Piece crossover and the others to follow, since it's just a drag doing them. I notice that the DBZ fandom focuses more on power levels than anything else, which really shouldn't be the thing you should concentrate on. The fighting, sure, but the story, yes.

Anyway…

Power Levels:

Z-Fighters

Lime – 500 riki

Chiaotzu – 7,500,000 riki

Yamcha – 17,000,000 riki

Krillin – 25,000,000 riki

Tien – 30,000,000 riki

Bulma – 2
Bulma (Saiyan Buster Mk III Armor) – 250,000,000 riki

Android 18# - 45,000,000 riki

Android 16#C – 40,000,000 riki
Android 16#C (Battle Mode) – 45,000,000 riki

Goten - 20,000,000 riki
Goten (Super Saiyan) - 100,000,000 riki

Trunks - 20,000,000 riki
Trunks (Super Saiyan) - 100,000,000 riki

Videl – 22,000,000 riki
Videl (Kaioken X10) – 220,000,000 riki
Videl (Maximum Kaioken) – 350,000,000 riki

Strongest Z-Fighters

Paprika – 31,000,000 riki
Paprika (Super Makyan) – 310,000,000 riki
Paprika (Super Makyan 2 – Devil Queen Form) – 510,000,000 riki

Piccolo – 310,000,000 riki

Vegeta – 30,000,000 riki
Vegeta (Super Saiyan) – 300,000,000 riki
Vegeta (Super Saiyan 2) – 500,000,000 riki
Vegeta (Super Saiyan 3) – 1,500,000,000 riki

Zangya – 30,000,000 riki
Zangya (Full Power) – 300,000,000 riki
Zangya (Super Hera) – 500,000,000 riki
Zangya (Super Hera 2) – 1,500,000,000 riki

xxx

Gohan – 33,000,000 riki
Gohan (Super Saiyan) – 330,000,000 riki
Gohan (Super Saiyan 2) – 530,000,000 riki
Gohan (Super Saiyan 3) – 1,530,000,000 riki
Gohan (Super Saiyan 3 – Kaioken X 12) – 3,600,000,000 riki
Gohan (Super Saiyan 3 – Kaioken X 20) – 4,200,000,000 riki
Gohan (Super Saiyan Fatigued) – 100

xxx

New Saiyan Empire

CAT Droids - 20,000,000 (each)
San – 30,000,000 riki
Mobi – 5,000,000 riki
Mobi (Armored Suit) – 30,000,000 riki

xxx

Gast, the Super Namekian (Full Power) – 250,000,000 riki

xxx

Cal (Base) – 29,000,000 riki
Cal (Meteor Burst/Super Sura-jin) – 490,000,000 riki

xxx

Kure (Base) – 49,000,000 riki
Kure (Super Kio-jin) – 490,000,000 riki

xxx

Maya – 30,000,000 riki
Maya (Super Saiyan) – 300,000,000 riki
Maya (Super Saiyan 2) – 500,000,000 riki
Maya (Super Oozaru 2) – 1,400,000,000 riki

Xxx

Sandra – 33,000,000 riki

Sandra (Super Saiyan) – 330,000,000 riki

Sandra (Super Saiyan 2) – 530,000,000 riki

Sandra (Super Saiyan 3) – 1,530,000,000 riki

Sandra (Super Saiyan 3 Moon Burst) – 3,200,000,000 riki

Sandra (Super Saiyan 3 Moon Burst Full Power) – 4,200,000,000 riki

Sandra (Super Saiyan Fatigued) - 100
Out in the country towards the North, in a diner along one of the main highways, the patrons of the small establishment currently had all of their attention glued to the one television set hanging from the corner of the dining room. While the group of three farmers, three truck drivers and two waitresses were staring at the screen in awe, listening to the reporter fill them in on the events taking place, they completely overlooked the sight of the two young teenagers sitting at the counter behind them.

Looking over the group's shoulders and up at the magic box, dressed in the same jackets and clothing they'd bought on their arrival several weeks ago, Pan and her sister Eva were also watching the broadcast, listening intently as they were given the full summary of the battles that'd taken place.

However, after watching the matches unfold for themselves as the feed switched between the various competitors, they were able to take in everything that they needed to. Though all of the Z-fighters had performed spectacularly and remarkably without fail, there was only one person that they'd wanted to see in action and that was their father, whom they'd just witnessed power through what would become known as the greatest fight of his life.

Eva, seeing the camera pan around Gohan's battered and bruised form, cracked a warm and adoring smile, "Mum always told us what an amazing man dad was."

"Now we finally get to see for ourselves that those stories were true," Pan said, her face reflecting the same look of adulation that her sister was also wearing. Gripping the bottle of grape soda in front of her, the raven haired girl beamed at the screen. "Wow. His strength is unlike anything I've ever seen before."

"He's even stronger than Trunks-kun and Paprika-san at full power," Eva chirped, watching her father move about on screen for a few more seconds before breathing a sigh of contentment. "I never thought we'd ever get to see him in action. We're so lucky."

"Mum said the match between him and Sandra was the hardest battle he'd ever fought on his own," Pan informed, smiling as she saw the cameras pan over the rest of the Z-fighters and the still unconscious Saiyan Empress. "If he was around when Sentinel returned, I bet we would've been able to beat that monster and stop our future from ever happening."

"Well… this is where we're going to set things right," Eva said, frowning as she looked back down at her drink. "We'll stop that freak and save our family and friends. Then afterwards… maybe we'll get the chance to go back to our time and see them again… mum, dad, Trunks-kun, Kaiser-san… everyone alive and well."

Seeing their dad and teammates fight Sandra's group filled the pair with a renewed sense of hope and confidence. It was like they could see a brighter light at the end of the tunnel, making the duo want to reach it no matter what.

Upon sharing one last smile, the pair went back to watching the television from their seats at the counter, their feet tapping with excitement and anticipation. Unbeknownst to young warriors however, as they continued to observe the events slowly unfold on screen, they completely overlooked the sight of a tiny little fly landing on a shelf next to the kitchen window.

Keeping to the shadows and staying out of sight, the minuscule creature focused its attention on the girls, finding an interest in both their appearance and conversation. It wasn't an ordinary bug either. Zooming in on its position, the insect was in fact a miniature, four-legged microbot, with optical sensors in place of eyes, little propellers in place of wings, and the Red Ribbon Army symbol etched into its forehead.

Its lenses subtly locking onto the girls, its antenna picked up on their voices, matching them to records it contained in its memory while transmitting the information back to its receiver. Unfortunately for both Pan and Eva, the robot was able to pick up on every word they spoke…

OOO

(Thousands of Light Years Away)

Giving a big, tired yawn, the purple-feline deity Beerus rubbed his eye on the back of his paw and hopped off of the couch. Straightening out his nightgown, he then sluggishly made his way back towards his circular bed, scratching his behind for extra measure. "That was an interesting match. Though the power levels were pathetic, the performances were satisfyingly dramatic. The slugfest at the end was especially entertaining." Wagging his tail behind him, the yellow eyed God then smirked up at his bedroom ceiling, "Makes me think I should pay this Earth a visit next time I wake up and see what else this Gohan person has to offer."

"It certainly was invigorating, wasn't it?" Aphrodite chirped.

"Absolutely," Whis responded through a mouth full of food.

"It sure was," Beerus agreed, before then thumbing over his shoulder towards the open window. "Now get out. I'm going back to sleep."

While his rather blunt directive earned a raised eyebrow from Cleopatra, Aphrodite merely giggled at the man's harsh commands. "Oh, Beerus, you adorable little sloth, you. Would you like Auntie Venus to come over and give you a hot, sensuous kiss good night?" She asked this while striking an alluring pose with her leg sticking out.

The sight of the goddess's dress hiking up her delicious thigh had Bardock eye her skin with interest, as the woman was undeniably attractive.

For the God of Destruction however…

"Pass," Beerus grumbled, before leaping off of the floor with a comical spring and plopping down on top of his duvet. With one last yawn, the anthropomorphic cat was out like a light, snoring away with a bubble inflating and deflating from his nose.

While the Goddess of Compassion slouched in disappointment, the quiet and previously stoic Bardock looked back at the television screen in front of them. When he saw Son Gohan standing over the defeated and unconscious Sandra, with the rest of his friends moving in to form a defensive perimeter around the scene, the man then tilted his head thoughtfully. "This may sound a little bit strange to you guys, but I have a feeling that I know that young Saiyan from somewhere."
He then lifted his hand and rubbed his chin. "I just… can't quite put my finger on it."

Whis giggled as he took a bite out of something that resembled a hot dog, but was not a hot dog at all, as the stuffing was some kind of green paste. "Do you think he's a long-lost nephew or son of yours?"

"Perhaps," Bardock murmured, at the same time his forehead creased with seriousness. "There's no denying that he is an incredibly gifted warrior… with a personality and power level to match. He could be a member of my family."

"Hmm," Whis murmured while time taking another bite from the "hotdog" in his hand. A smile graced his lips after he chewed and swallowed, "Nevertheless, there's something very special about this one. I can tell just by looking at him."

As the television droned on in the foreground and the Gods continued to watch it, the ever-silent Cleopatra was unable to stop the warm smile from spreading over her lips as she gazed silently and adoringly at the screen. While the reporters went on photographing and documenting the scene under the watch of the Z-fighters and King Koku's forces, the raven haired goddess-in-training propped her cheek in her hand and sighed.

"He's just like how I remember him," the former ruler of Egypt thought, looking on quietly as the man from her past spoke with his friends and family.

Though her look of forlorn went on unnoticed by Bardock and Whis, Aphrodite's eyes suddenly cut across the couch to where the raven haired deity was sitting. Confusion racked the celestial being for a moment as the dark-skinned elf took in the expression on Cleopatra's face. When she sensed a strong feeling of love wafting off of the beautiful woman, Aphrodite then cracked a smile of her own and returned to her viewing.

OOO

(Back on Earth)

(Central City)

Up on the top floor of Talos Industries' main headquarters, which towered high above the sprawling metropolis that was the planet's capital, the head and founder of the second largest research and development company in the world was sitting in his large office chair, staring up at the hologram in the center of his room. With his office's drapes pulled all the way down, the boss was left completely in the dark, allowing him a clearer projection of the battles that were taking place.

Having locked onto the transmission being sent out by San and Kure, Kaiser had watched and recorded every single battle that'd been waged across the Earth and Solar System between the Z-fighters and the New Saiyan Empire. It was a broadcast that the billionaire entrepreneur was unable to ignore and had spent the last few hours reveling in the blood, sweat, tears, and fireworks that followed. He'd seen mountains fall and planets crumble, culminating in what was without a doubt the greatest and most exciting series of events he'd ever watched. The entire thing put a big smile on his face as the company owner leant back in his seat with his hands folded under his chin.

"So… now we have two more Saiyans on this planet?" the man whispered, pressing a few buttons on his desk and instructing the hologram to produce several more windows. The individual frames showed different angles of the other competitors, particularly Maya and Sandra, with a series of numbers and algorithms sitting alongside them. "Including Vegeta, Trunks, Goten and Gohan…" that brings the total count of super-powered primates up to six." Wheeling about in his chair so that he was facing the drapes of his window, where he was barely able to see Central City peeking through from under the veil. "Interesting."

All things considered, this turn of events was presenting to him the perfect opportunity to collect more samples for his research. It wasn't everyday an entirely new planet with a habitable surface and life forms materialized out of nowhere directly alongside the Earth. If his understanding of the events were accurate, he expected this new group wouldn't be leaving anytime soon.

Kaiser's eyes shimmered with delight.

"It looks like I'm going to need to start planning and construction ahead of schedule," the entrepreneur muttered.

At first it seemed like he was speaking to no one in particular. But as he was staring at his window with his back turned to the hologram, two more figures that were also in the room made their presence known. Stepping into the light of the central projector, a raven haired young girl with an ox horn hairstyle and wearing a red qipao martial arts dress, and a purple haired woman in a black suit and skirt, appeared behind their boss.

Standing side by side and at attention, Chochi and Violet gave their employer their full and undivided attention.

"What are your orders, sir?" the former officer of the Red Ribbon Army asked.

Cracking a smirk, Kaiser then pressed his fingers together thoughtfully, "Head to East City and have the labs there begin prepping for the final stages of the fusion experiment." When he saw Violet nod through the reflection of his window, the man then turned his attention to his other asset. "As for you Chochi, I have a different mission for you…"

OOO

(Sometime later)

The climax of Gohan and Sandra's battle across the greater part of the Solar System marked the end of the Z-fighters' gladiator match against the New Saiyan Empire. With the two groups now resting at the finishing line of their epic race, all limbs present and accounted for, there were far worse ways the fights could've ended compared to the way they did. Thankfully things had more or less stayed within the realm of contest friendly and didn't result in any deaths whatsoever.

Yes, despite the fact that a majority of the planet's landscape had been permanently reshaped and several towns had been trashed along the way, there were no human or alien casualties to speak of. This wasn't even counting the fact that Pluto had been utterly annihilated, Mars had been turned into a cloud of rubble, Mercury had been pushed into the sun, and Saturn had a 38,000 kilometer wide gaping hole in it. After all the chaos that'd boiled over since the beginning of the gladiator match, this was all fixable collateral damage. Nothing that the dragon balls couldn't fix.

Although… there was a very good chance that Shenron was going to be incredibly annoyed at having to fix a whole bunch of planets for the third time in a row, something that the Z-fighters weren't all that comfortable in explaining how and why.

In hindsight, it was a hell of a lot better than having to bring one of their friends back to life… again.

The damages made to the Solar System however paled in comparison to the big dent that'd been formed in the center of Satan City, which now stood as the ending point for the epic, planet-wide tournament. Here, surrounding the crater in the heart of the square, thousands of people were being held back behind police and military barricades, as officials and leaders were now trying to sort through the mess.

The only people who were permitted beyond the yellow lines and obstacles were King Koku and his staff, Hercule Satan, the Z-fighters, and the delegates of the New Saiyan Empire.

It wasn't like many of them had a choice. While the majority of the Z-fighters were there to support Gohan, the members of the Saiyan Empire had to tend to the unconscious Sandra, who was lying at the bottom of the fissure atop a stretcher. Among the other contestants who couldn't really move due to fatigue and broken limbs included Videl, Maya, Vegeta, Yamcha, and Kure.

About forty minutes after Sandra had been knocked unconscious, Tien returned from Korin with two big bags of Senzu Beans. His arrival was a Godsend for the tired and exhausted heroes, who wasted no time in consuming the miracle vegetables when they were passed around. For Gohan however, his recovery was going to take a little bit more effort.

Sitting cross-legged atop a partially unburied cement pipe, a still visibly beaten yet grinning Gohan was having a short, albeit exhausted, word with the people who were gathered around him.

"I think I-ow… I think-ow… there is a-ow…" Gohan said and yelped between the dabs of disinfectant being applied to the throbbing bruise and cut to his face from the still armor-clad Bulma, who'd accessed the medical pack on her belt to help the injured members of her troop. "Ow… I think there is a really important lesson to be learned here. Ow."

While Videl and Zangya, both of whom were standing next to him, giggled at the pained sounds he was making, and Erasa, Sena, Yuki, Sharpener and Touya laughed quietly in the background, the blue haired scientist performing the treatment on the half-Saiyan hero shook her head in amusement.

"Let me guess: is it to not get punched in the face by a woman who is just as strong as you?" Bulma asked, pulling back the cotton ball and dipping it in the disinfectant bottle in her other hand. She then brought it back to his bruise and continued dabbing.

"Ow. No. Ow," Gohan said before chuckling, "Don't mix too much pork with the fermented vegetables. It spoils the flavor. Ow."

Bulma sighed and smiled, "You're an idiot." Disposing of the cotton, the woman stood up and stepped to the side, watching as Tien walked over with the bag of Senzu. "Okay. He's ready. Kai knows if what I did helped in any way."

A smile graced Tien's lips as he got his first good look at the state Gohan was in. "You feeling alright there, buddy?" he asked while pulling out a handful of beans. "You look like hammered shit."

The demi-Saiyan shrugged, "Well… both my legs are numb, I've lost all color in my vision, I have a splitting headache, an aching pain in my torso, and this strong taste of copper in my mouth… but all in all, I'm feeling pretty good."

"Oh. Okay," the human martial artist replied in a cheerful tone, before turning around and starting to walk away.

"Hey! Hey! I'm kidding! I'm kidding!" Gohan comically freaked out, waving both hands towards the warrior, "Come back!"

Letting out a laugh, the three-eyed fighter walked back over and dropped three Senzu beans into one of Gohan's open hands. "Don't worry. I'm just messing with you, man."

Bringing one bean up, the teenage Saiyan grinned at his comrade through his thoroughly bludgeoned face. "Thanks." He then popped it into his mouth, then the other, and then the other.

As Gohan downed each of the Senzu in turn, his collection of friends, Bulma and Tien included, watched in fascination as the bones in the teen's body popped back into place and his face steadily returned to normal. The swelling subsided, the cuts and burns faded, the breaks in his bones and organs mended, and the bruising slowly vanished. By the time the third bean was downed and digested, every single wound the boy had sustained was gone, leaving him looking as good as new, save for his lack of a gi and the dirt and dried blood on his skin. Once all the pain and stinging from his resetting frame and muscles subsided, the young Saiyan was back on his feet and skipping on the spot.

"Woo. I feel a lot stronger than I was at the start of the day. This is awesome," the young Saiyan chirped, before stopping moments later when Bulma walked up to him and gave his head a scan with her suit's gauntlet.

Once the computer was done breaking down the three-dimensional rendering of the teen's brain, zooming in on all the microscopic portions it was able to dissect digitally, Bulma then lowered her computer and looked at the screen. She then nodded and typed away at the buttons, filing away the images for future diagnosis. "No trauma, bleeding or any other abnormalities detected. All your brain cells and nerves are perfectly intact."

"Seriously?" Touya asked, having overheard what the woman had to say from his spot.

"After all the head shots he received?" Sena asked, looking over at the spiky haired teen cautiously. "Shouldn't Gohan have gotten, like… a dozen concussions or something?"

"We all watched his battle and saw the amount of punishment he took," Sharpener said, keeping his arms crossed as he eyed the president of Capsule Corp seriously. "Honestly, I'm worried he might develop a… brain tumor or an aneurism or something."

"Believe me… it's not that easy to physically incapacitate someone of Gohan's background and caliber," Bulma responded, turning her attention back to the hybrid in question. "He shares the same genetic advantages as my husband and son. Due to his body's reinforced bone structure, self-regenerating cells and healing factors, he is naturally immune to all forms of degenerative brain diseases, including dementia, Parkinson's and Chronic Traumatic Encephalopathy, which a lot of contact sport players often suffer from. Considering the amount of blows he and the others sustain on a weekly basis, this is an incredibly useful biological asset to have." She then grinned at the boy standing in front of her. "Guess you have your genes to thank for that."

Gohan grinned proudly and placed his hands on his hips, "Damn right." While his posturing had Bulma roll her eyes and Zangya shake her head, the demi-Saiyan then directed his attention to where Sandra was lying, surrounded by her friends and teammates. The sight of the worried visitors prompted the hero to speak up. "What about them? Are they okay?"

Realizing who Gohan was referring to, Tien then held up the bag of Senzu Beans he was carrying, "All of them are alright, but Sandra is still unconscious and bleeding all over herself. I wasn't sure whether I should give them any of these." He was quickly cut off when the demi-Saiyan walked up to him and held his hand out expectantly. Glancing at the boy's palm quickly told the human what Gohan wanted to do. "Huh? Are you sure?"

"Yes," Gohan answered with a firm and serious nod.

"Okay then," Tien replied, plopping the bag of beans into the teen's hand and watching him march over to Sandra's troop.

The Z-fighters, all of whom were scattered around the crater along with the few people who were invited into their area, watched the half-Saiyan curiously as he made his way to the other side of the pit.

When Gohan arrived at the visitor's circle, he was immediately greeted by Maya and Cal confronting him, assumed in defensive stances, which had him stop in his tracks and raise his hands. "Whoa, now. I come in peace." He then nodded down at their leader, who he could see was being tended to by both Kure and Mobi. "Is your friend doing okay?"

Frowning, Maya spared a glance down at her battered friend. "She's still alive, thankfully. But after all the damage she's taken, it may be a while before she regains consciousness. Even Mobi is having trouble healing a lot of her injuries." She then looked warily back at Gohan, whom she could see was still standing there with his serious expression in play. The face he wore had Maya rub her arm anxiously. "You're… one hell of a warrior."

"Thanks," Gohan answered gratefully, giving the woman a smile and causing her to shirk slightly in discomfort. Approaching the ring formed by the group, the teen nudged his way past Cal and knelt down next to Sandra's stretcher. When he did, he then held up three Senzu Beans and showed them to Kure. "Here. Get her to try and swallow these."

Puzzled by the sight of the beans, Kure slowly reached over, picked one up, and looked at it closely. "What is it?"

"It's a Senzu Bean," Gohan informed with a warm smile, "It's a medicinal herb grown only on this planet. It'll help her get better faster."

"Really?"

"Yeah. I mean…" He then leant back and gestured at his body, "Look at me."

When Kure inspected the half-Saiyan, she quickly noticed through her sharp eye that all of the wounds and bruises he'd sustained had been wiped clean. Gaping momentarily in shock, the woman then began analyzing the bean in her hand. Sniffing it, rolling it around, and scanning it with a small device from her pocket, she then whispered, "Fascinating. Are you telling me that a person can recover from even the most grievous and life-threatening of injuries by consuming only one of these agricultural pits?"

"That's right," Gohan answered, reaching into the bag and rummaging about for another one. "Though it can't cure bacterial infections, it works wonders on physical wounds and starvation." He then proceeded to give each of the members of Sandra's crew a Senzu, "This bean is a real life saver. Here. Try them."

Though skeptical at first, Maya, Cal and Kure ate the beans. After chewing and swallowing them, the trio initially felt nothing for the first couple of seconds. But then, just as they were in the process of becoming restless, a rush of energy suddenly shot through them and the group of travelers from another galaxy looked down at their bodies in shock. Their reactions drew a collective grin from most members of the Z-fighters, as this was probably the first time the alien team had ever experienced such a miraculous recovery.

"W-Whoa!" Maya yelped in shock.

"My vitality… it's restored," Cal exclaimed, clenching and unclenching his fists, before then moving to pat his abdominals down. "All of my wounds have healed."

The spider tank San, who was standing off to the side, raised her arms and waved them above her fervently. "Wow. All of your energy and vitality levels just took a big jump, you guys. They're back to normal."

Gohan chuckled when he saw the astonished fighters look one another over, at the same time tossing the bag he was holding up into the air and catching it. "Told you. These little things have been around for hundreds of years and saved our lives more times than we can count." He then took a step over to Maya and tapped her on the shoulder, drawing the young woman's attention to him. "Not only are they easy to carry…” Pointing over her shoulder, he had Maya turn towards the edge of the crater to look at a random wall. A mischievous grin then crossed Gohan's face as he drew his hand back and aimed his fingers at the lower vertebrae of her spine. "They're also handy to have for a quick fix!" He then swiftly jabbed her spine.

"KYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYYY
Gohan chuckled, "It's a... bit of a funny story. You see, Kana took me out to this planet on the other side of the quadrant for a date and showed me this awesome watering hole she regularly visits. When we got there we had a couple of beers, got a little tipsy with each other, talked about some stuff, started a massive bar fight, met my grandmother, and ended up limping home feeling better than ever." When he saw Vegeta and everybody else staring at him in silence with strange looks on their faces, the demi-Saiyan gave an anxious laugh and scratched his head sheepishly. "I'll... tell you more about it later."

His response drew a shrug from Yamcha, "Fair enough." Considering everything he knew about Gohan, all of it seemed to add up.

When everyone turned their attention back to the comatose Sandra, the majority of the heroes were able to watch as Kure and Gohan proceeded to give the woman the beans as well. Though they struggled in getting her to swallow them, the pair eventually managed to do so through a little bit of coaxing and a little bit of manual assistance. This pretty much involved Kure crushing one of the beans up and feeding it to the sleeping girl one bit at a time.

Just like before, the two groups were able to watch the injuries on the young woman's body disappear in front of their very eyes. Kure was especially astonished by the development, as she used her hologram scouter to record the entire procedure for posterity.

About a minute after Sandra had taken all three beans, the Empress was looking as good as new, minus the lack of clothing and the dirt on her exposed skin. She was also still unconscious. This wouldn't last long however. Hearing the group leader groan and mumble under her breath a couple of times prompted Gohan, Kure and everybody else to lean in. As they were attempting to understanding what she was saying, the entire group then leapt back about two feet when Sandra suddenly bolted upright with a scream of terror and a flurry of punches.

Her fists wound up striking nothing but the empty space of the stretcher around her. When her vision finally cleared moments later, the Saiyan Empress batted her eyes and took a couple of deep, calming breaths. Surveying the area to see the stunned faces of the Z-fighters and the crowd on the ridgeline surrounding her, Sandra lowered her arms and opened her mouth.

"Uuhh... what... what happened?"

Kure, relieved to see she was alive, shuffled into Sandra's line of sight and smiled, "You lost, girl."

"And what a loss it was," Maya remarked, grinning broadly while crossing her arms over her chest and wrapping her tail back around her waist. "Even when you were unconscious, you still wanted to keep fighting."

"You ended up passing out on your feet," Cal informed, keeping his arms crossed as well when he saw the raven haired female glance up at him. He then gestured back to the group behind him, "A couple of their friends had to jump in to stop you two from killing each other."

"Really?" When she saw her teammates nod and Sandra noticed the Z-fighters looking seriously at her too, the woman then stared down at her body and analyzed the damages. Seeing none and figuring she'd ended up being healed, the Saiyan female breathed a heavy sigh and let her arms drop to her sides. "I lost, huh?" Her head lowered in disappointment, "Damn. And all this time I thought... I... I..." She swallowed nervously, "I thought that I could make a difference... that if I fought and tried hard enough, and showed that I was the strongest in the universe, I could build a new world where the Saiyans of this generation could live and work together with other races in peace and harmony. And no one, not even men like Frieza, would be able to push us around and force my people… or any people, into servitude or slavery. Everything I did was in pursuit of that dream… of a free and just quadrant." Sandra then brought her knees to her chest and, inhaling deeply, pressed her chin to her legs. "I guess I… wasn't strong enough…"

At first no one knew what to say, as her friends and most of the Z-fighters could only look at the woman with pity. After watching her fight so hard against Gohan and wondering why she refused to back down, they finally understood the real reason she wanted to win so badly. If she'd emerged victorious, she would've formed a coalition with the Earth and brought the entire planet under her banner, with which she would then be able to build a society that the rest of the galaxy could follow and look to for an example.

This lent credence to the fact that Sandra and her group weren't conquerors, but just another band trying to find and build a place in the universe where they could belong. It was a desire held by many in the world; recognition as an individual, a group, a community, and a nation… and it made sense for such a mixed team to want that as well.

From the story they had to tell, the Z-fighters knew Sandra and her friends had been through a lot, fighting to survive and relying on the same dogma for the past several years. It must've been a big upset, especially for their leader, to have endured so much, only to hit a roadblock here.

Before Sandra could immerse herself further into a state of disappointment and defeat, one person amongst the crowd decided to interfere. And wouldn't you know it…

"You are."

Perking up, Sandra quickly turned her attention to Gohan, whom she could see was standing right next to her with his hands on his hips.

When the female Saiyan's eyes fixated on him, the half-Saiyan smiled, "Honestly, you gave me one of the best fights I've ever had in my entire life… by a wide margin. And I'm not just saying that because the fate of our world was at stake or anything. You fought me with an earnestness and fairness no other enemy I've met has given me before, and you didn't let up from that path. Not even once." Kana and Paprika were notable exceptions to this rule, but both had been contested under differing circumstances. "Not only that, but you're also the toughest and strongest opponent I've had the pleasure of exchanging blows with. You came at me with everything you had and poured your heart and soul into the match. The way you were able to weave in tactics into your fighting style as well was absolutely sublime." He then threw her his trademark Son family grin. "You are without a doubt, the best opponent I could've asked for."

Gazing up at the boy in awe for a moment in awe, Sandra suddenly felt a little flutter in her chest that had her draw breath sharply. However, when she saw her vision start to become a little hazy and her muscles start to tense up, the woman quickly shook herself out of her bemused state and sat up on the stretcher. "Heh. Complimenting your opponent so highly is unbecoming of a Saiyan Elite. You should feel ashamed of yourself for being so generous with your words and letting your emotions get the better of you," Sandra chuckled, looking up at the young man to see him blink a little in surprise. She then smiled back at him. "But, in hindsight, it's not the worst thing you can do after emerging victorious. As it so happens, I too feel the same way about you. You were incredible." After a moment, she then added a small amendment to her statement. "Conversely, I can also say without hesitation that you are the strongest and most honorable Saiyan I've ever encountered; a warrior worthy of the highest honors and praise."

Hearing this swelled Gohan's chest and had the boy lift his nose with an iota of pride. He then beamed back at the Empress brightly. "Even though we come from different worlds, I can see that you and I share the same hearts and values. The beliefs we follow and the principles we embody…"
when put together, they can stand for something greater than ourselves and help bring peace to people all around." He then tilted his head cheerfully, "I hope that in the future, the two of us will be able to fight alongside one another as equals rather than against one another as adversaries. I think both our planets could benefit a lot from an alliance."

Sandra's eyes widened a little at what the Z-fighter was implying, "Wait… you mean…"

The demi-Saiyan's grin broadened, "I would really like it if our two groups could join forces with one another… to team up." A chuckle left Gohan's lips as he reached up to massage his shoulder. "After all the battles we'd been in over the years and all the pain we've had to endure, we could really use a few extra friends on our side. I mean, I'm not saying we should do it right away, but if we play our cards right… I think we can make it work. What do you say?"

Staring at the boy quietly from her seat on her temporary bedspread, the Saiyan Empress at first didn't say anything. Even the people watching from the sidelines remained silent; some stunned by the hybrid's proposal while everybody else listened in with intent. Perhaps it was the suddenness of the proposal that was causing such a stir. However, after several moments of deep contemplation, Sandra eventually returned to the real world and nodded in understanding.

Gohan grinned, "I look forward to fighting with you in the future, Ran-chan."

At that, the Saiyan Empress suddenly gritted her teeth, a tick mark forming on her head and steam shooting out of her ears, "HEY! WHO THE HELL DO YOU THINK YOU ARE?! DON'T YOU DARE CALL ME BY THAT NICKNAME!" Her exclamation had all the Z-fighters nearby stumble about in shock from the volume of her yell, while the people at the top of the crater had to clamp their ears shut.

Gohan however remained unaffected by her shout and tilted his head curiously, "Why not?" He then used his finger to start penciling the air, "It looks pretty cute when you write it out in hiragana."

His reasoning had the girl blush and look up at him in momentary alarm, "H-Huh?"

The amused half-Saiyan shot her a friendly and very dashing smile, to which he then winked for good measure, "I think you and I are going to have a great time together." His entire face seemed to light up and sparkle with an ethereal light, which seemed to come from out of nowhere. In no less than a few choice words, it was breathtaking.

The result was instantaneous. Sandra's face lit up red as her heart literally throbbed a loud ba-dump, causing her to stiffen on the spot and stare up at Gohan's face in shock. Feeling heat rush to every part of her body, particularly her face and chest, the raven haired Saiyan suddenly found it even harder to breathe and maintain composure. Gripping the sides of her stretcher uneasily, the teen then began shifting about in her seat in a clear sign of discomfort, thighs pressing together tightly, shoulders bobbing up and down, and her eyes wandering back and forth from Gohan to the floor. The frequency at which she did so increased when she realized that the boy was almost stark naked and was standing there in all his Spartan glory. To make matters worse, she was also in a less than panty clad state, which had her curl up even more. These were all clear signs of embarrassment.

In a matter of seconds, thoughts of a very impure nature began bleeding into her head, all revolving around her and the handsome Saiyan male in front of her.

For a majority of the crowd, the irregularities in the girl's movement went completely over their heads.
But for some of the others, it was all too obvious.

Videl, Erasa, and Zangya’s eyes widened and shoulders slumped in disbelief as they all uttered in unison, "Oh, no."

Shaking her head to dispel her dirty thoughts and clearing her throat, Sandra suddenly stood up, stepped off of her stretcher and turned to her comrades, all of whom were listening quietly from the sidelines. "Maya… Cal… Kure… I have made a decision." When she saw them all stand at attention, the Saiyan Empress raised a finger. "As of this moment, the New Saiyan Empire and all of its states shall ally themselves with the humans of Earth and the Republic that governs them. I believe this will not only be more economically beneficial for our side, but I also feel that a union between two parties will strengthen our political position in the universe." She then threw her hands out and directed her proclamation towards the people surrounding the crater and the roaming cameras orbiting their position. "Hear me, people of Earth. Thanks to this young warrior and his comrades, who have fought and battled valiantly for you today," she said while gesturing to Gohan and the Z-fighters behind her, "we have decided to leave your planet as it is and, instead, form a partnership with it. These men and women have proven themselves worthy as both heroes and guardians, possessing honor, benevolence and strength beyond compare. And I know it will be a great honor and a privilege to live and build a world alongside them for the next many generations to come."

While the crowds on the cliff looked around at each other and clamored with uncertainty, Mr. Satan, noticing their doubts and suspicions, frowned and marched forward with a loud stomp in his step. Nudging past Cal and the others, the man stood beside Gohan and Sandra, and turned to the crowd before him. Throwing his signature cape back so that it unfurled on the wind, the afro-headed champion spoke up at the top of his lungs. "Listen to the woman!" Hercule shouted, reaching up and wrapping one of his massive arms around Gohan's shoulders. His presence causing a massive stir within the crowd, drawing stunned murmurs and exclamations from the people, the martial arts champion used that moment to his advantage and to assert his position. "This young man, his family and his friends, have risked their lives countless times to save us and our planet from destruction! They fought for us, they bled for us, and they died for us, and despite all their hard sacrifices, they never once asked for anything in return! Not ONE thing!" He then jabbed a finger across at the rest of the Z-fighters, all of whom were remaining silent and still. "They were there when that giant monster from space came down to Earth and attacked our cities! They were there when the aliens infiltrated the International Martial Arts Tournament, murdered the contestants, and threatened to do the same to the rest of the people! And they were there at the Cell Games, where they fought against the monster Cell and stopped him from destroying our world!"

The Z-fighters' jaws dropped in disbelief, while Videl and Gohan looked up at the man in amazement. The people up on the crater's ledge, able to hear the Champ's voice loud and clear, stood baffled and astonished at what their great champion had to say.

Feeling a great weight lifting off of his shoulders with every word he spoke, Hercule's smile became more sincere as he then stepped away from Gohan and gestured the crowd towards him. "In fact… this young man standing right here, Son Gohan… was the one who defeated Cell… not me. Without him, or his father, Son Goku… none of us would be standing here today." It was these words that rang true across the planet, as well as every other across the quadrant receiving the transmission's signal.

It was an announcement that caused the entire world to stop moving for a full minute.
As the reality of Hercule's words started to sink in, King Koku, being the most collected man in the audience, also took to the stand and turned to the cameras alongside Hercule. "That's right. Every single one of us here has many things to be thankful for. All the days that we've lived, all the peace and prosperity that we've gained, and everything we've been able to accomplish over the past seven years… none of that would've been possible were it not for efforts of the brave warriors you see standing before you." Reaching up to pat Gohan on the back, the recognized ruler of the planet then held his hand up towards the people and spoke to them directly. "This boy, his father, and his friends have done us many great services over the years, and received no rewards or recognition for their actions. Well… that changes now!" Koku then turned to Gohan with a grin. "Statues will be erected in this city, Central and all other places of significance where these great warriors have made a mark on our world, in honor of their accomplishments, and their families will be awarded the Blue Star Medal for their deeds. Furthermore, I officially recognize these… these…uhh…"

Thinking on it for a moment, Bulma suddenly tiptoed up to the blue king and whispered into his ear, allowing the dog ruler to continue his declaration, "these Z-fighters as this planet's champions and protectors!"

Grinning broadly, Hercule threw his fist into the air high with a loud shout, "Well, what are you people waiting for… LET'S HEAR IT!"

And with that, a great cheer rang up throughout the crowd, as every man, woman and child present gave the King and the Z-fighters a well-deserved round of applause. The volume of their merriment only increased when Hercule, laughing loudly, grabbed Gohan's hand and lifted it into the air as well, causing a deep shade of red to appear on the hybrid's cheeks. The sight had Sharpener, Sena, Yukie, Erasa, and Touya cheer even louder for their best friend, who they knew couldn't stand being acknowledged without suffering from fits of embarrassment.

Lime, who'd also arrived at the scene on Icarus's back and was standing at the top of the crater, also cheered and clapped for the demi-Saiyan's success.

"Way to go, Gohan-kun!" the brown haired farm girl exclaimed.

Even the rest of the Z-fighters standing nearby had the common courtesy to look bashful. Well, Krillin, Yamcha, Chiaotzu and Goten appeared nervous, but the others accepted the cheers raining down on them with open arms. Tien was smiling with his arms crossed, Android 18 also cracked a small one, Bulma was posing heroically in her armor, Zangya flicked her hair back and beamed proudly, and Trunks was waving his arms about in the air like he'd just won the World Cup Final. The only people who didn't appear joyous about the whole thing were Vegeta and Paprika, both of whom were just looking around the roaring crowds with unchanging expressions and hands folded.

As the crowd continued to applaud, cheer and whistle, King Koku, posing for photos alongside Gohan and Hercule for a couple of minutes, then turned to Sandra. Approaching her, the ruler of the nation then held a hand out to the raven haired Saiyan. "Ms Sandra, as the lead political representative of planet Earth, it would be a real honor and a privilege to recognize the New Saiyan Empire as an ally of our world and would like to make the future coalition between our two governments official through formal documentation."

The Saiyan Empress looked surprised at first. But after realizing the King was offering a proper declaration of allegiance, Sandra was quick to respond with a smile and a firm hand shake. "S-Sure. No problem." Her moment of nervousness was dispelled with a clearing of her throat, "Always glad to make new friends, your highness."

"If you would like to arrange a time and place to perhaps hash this out on neutral ground—"

"Oh. If we're going to be discussing politics, then you're going to want to speak with me," Kure quickly interjected, stepping forward with a big smile on her face and tail wagging behind her happily. She placed a hand over her chest in earnest, "I am the official liaison and negotiator of the New Saiyan Empire and the Republic of Savannah. As the primary representative for both organizations, I'm sure that the two of us will be able to arrange an agreement that is fair for all parties involved. I hope this isn't inconvenient for you in any way, sir."

The anthropomorphic dog stared up at the woman momentarily, before turning to her with a big smile under his bushy mustache, "Oh. Of course not, Miss. That isn't a problem at all." The two then moved off to the side, where they then went about the business of government.

As photographers and reporters from all over continued to capture pictures of the people down in the crater and the police continued to hold back the majority of the crowd, Gohan was quickly approached by Zangya, Videl, Sharpener, Goten and Krillin.

The latter member of the entourage shot his best friend a smile as the taller Saiyan stood there with a sheepish look in play, "It's about time, huh?"

"Yeah. I guess," Gohan chuckled, at the same time running a hand through his spiky locks. "Honestly, it doesn't matter one way or the other whether people know what we did or not. I'm perfectly fine with the way things are… and I'm sure the rest of us are to."

"Well… it looks like all that's going to change," Zangya commented, walking up to the teen and leaning against his shoulder. After sharing a smile with him, she then turned her gaze to Videl. "Thanks to your father, the whole world is going to know what Gohan and his family have done."

"I didn't think my dad had it in him," Videl said, placing her hands on her hips while glancing across at her father, who was standing a couple of feet behind Gohan. "But… this isn't the first time he's surprised me. I'm just glad to see him actually step up and finally tell everyone the truth."

When she saw her old man scratch his head nervously from her remark, the daughter's gaze softened and a warm smile spread across her lips. "To say all that in front of the entire world, much less an entire crowd, takes a lot of guts. I'm really, really proud of him… and I'm sure mum would be too."

"You know people are going to start asking questions about that day," Krillin said, looking at the girl in concern. "More secrets are going to get out, not just about the Cell Games, but about everything else that happened afterwards."

Videl shrugged, "Don't worry. I can handle it… and I'm sure my dad can too." Her head then lowered a little from the small feeling of worry and dread that came over her. "After all… I am the Champ's daughter… and we are part of the same family…"

It was from her downtrodden comment that Gohan suddenly spoke up, "You've been your own woman for a long time now." Seeing his girlfriend's eyes turn to him, the half-Saiyan beamed, "Years ago you told me that you wanted to follow your own path, to become your own person… someone who could stand on their own two feet and change their destiny… someone who wasn't just viewed as the daughter of Hercule Satan. You spent the last seven years training and pushing yourself in order to fulfill that goal. And after all the time we spent together, I can tell you right now that you've become that and more."

Enamored by the boy's words of confidence in her, Videl quickly broke out an expression reflecting warmth and positivity. This then led to her elbowing Gohan in the stomach, "If you weren't such a smooth talking snake charmer and my boyfriend, I would have half a mind to step on your foot, Mr. Hero." Her statement earned a laugh from the boy, which drew an affectionate smile from the human fighter in return.
Zangya, also cracking a grin of her own, then looked the teen over when she noticed something off about his appearance. "By the way, Spike… when exactly are you going to put on a new change of clothes?" She said this while gesturing to Gohan's body, which was still clad in only his martial arts boots and a pair of tight black swimming shorts. "Not that I don't mind you staying like this, but…"

Thanks to the woman's intervention, the hybrid finally noticed his half-naked state, "Oh. Shoot. I almost forgot." A moment of concentration later, a flash of blue light surrounded Gohan's body, which quickly faded to reveal the boy dressed in an entirely new orange and blue gi. Testing the weight of the material, Gohan then gave his friends the thumbs-up, "There. All good."

"Aww," both Zangya and Videl groaned, while Sharpener just stared incredulously at his best friend.

"Damn. I've never seen you do that before," the jock said, only to reach up and massage the back of his head, "Actually, I've never seen you do any of that stuff before. Heh. This whole thing is kind of a new experience for me." If he hadn't known Videl Satan already, he would be more shocked than he already was.

Krillin, hearing everything the blonde had to say, chuckled and slapped him on the back, "It's new for everybody, kid. Hell, even those of us who've been at this for years still get surprised."

The highschooler took the man's words to heart. Once everything had finally sunk in, Sharpener walked up to Gohan and wrapped an arm around his pal's neck in a bro-like manner. "Well, even though this guy here can probably destroy the entire planet just by sneezing in the wrong direction, I bet I can still beat him in a game of Ping-Pong."

Gohan smirked at him, "You're on." When Sharpener finally released him, the teen was immediately set upon by Goten, who leapt into the air and landed atop his shoulders. The kid's presence earned a laugh and a head rub from the older brother, "Hey, squirt."

The youngest demi-Saiyan grinned, "You were awesome, big brother. I've never seen you fight like that before."

"It was a first time for me as well," the hero responded good-naturedly. "Powering up the way I did took a huge chunk out of me. Next time I'll have to be a lot more careful with the way I expend my energy."

Goten looked down at his eldest hopefully, "Do you think I can be as strong as you some day?"

"Well, there's only one way to find out." Gohan then reached up and tickled the boy in the side, causing his youngest sibling to fall into fits of laughter. "If you're up for it, I'll train the heck out of you till you can beat me in a Super Saiyan arm-wrestling contest."

Gohan spent the next couple of minutes talking with his little brother, Zangya, Videl, Krillin and Sharpener, telling them all about his battle with Sandra. During which time the group was suddenly interrupted by the arrival of the Saiyan Empress herself. Stepping over to the gathering of Earthlings, the raven haired woman rubbed her arm nervously and, gathering up her courage, took a more confident stance under the group's collective gazes. Her new mod look was spoiled slightly however due to her current state of dress, since all she was currently wearing was her boots, gloves, a white breast strip and a black thong.

"I'm… rghm… I'm very interested in seeing what this planet and its cultures has to offer. Do you… mind if I stick around for a little while?" She then lost a little bit of her nerve when her eyes met Gohan's and she averted her gaze momentarily. "If… if that's okay with you."

Looking at one another, the five then looked back at Sandra, with Krillin taking the lead by pointing up towards the sky, "Seeing as how you're parked right next to us, I don't see why not."

"And it's not like your planet is really going anywhere," Zangya shrugged with an amused grin.

When Sandra's eyes switched back over to Gohan, she saw the boy scratch his head before then nod affirmatively, "Sure. I guess we can show you around." His answer had the young woman's face light up with joy. But before she could get carried away or take off on her own, the demi-Saiyan quickly raised a hand and pointed down at her lamely, "Of course… we're going to have to do something about that first."

Sandra followed his finger, where she quickly saw what the problem was… and the reason why a majority of the people standing around her were blushing and looking awkwardly at her. "Oh… right. Clothes."

OOO

(Meanwhile)

It was an intense match, but after what felt like hours of exchanging vicious blows and dealing countless moves of tactical brilliance with one another, a winner between Earth's former guardian, Piccolo, and Sandra's personal counselor, Gast, had finally been decided. Sure their battle wasn't as exciting, action-packed or groundbreaking as the fights that had taken place down on Earth. But it was still an invigorating contest of metal and strategy, where two bright minds were pitted against one another in a test of intellectual prowess.

As it turns out, the victor went to the man in the white cape and turban.

Both still seated on either side of the stone board, showing an arrangement of pieces standing in favor of Earth's representative, the two Namekians took a deep breath and looked at one another firmly.

"Well… I guess that's it then," Gast said with his sincere, trademark smile.

"Yeah. I suppose it is," Piccolo answered, keeping up a stoic visage as he stared back at his older Namekian counterpart.

Standing up and stretching, the aged warrior then gave a low groan, "Even though I lost, it was still one hell of a match. I haven't experienced a match this exciting since my duel with Red Spider back on Perbothimus 3. The energy webs that guy put up were a real piece of work." Stepping away from the table, Gast then walked out into the open clearing of the alien world, where he slowly approached the giant, three-legged reptilian rhinoceros dozing by the lake. "Honestly, out of all the foes I've encountered in my journey across the cosmos… demons, aliens, cyborgs… you were definitely the most satisfying. And that's saying a lot." Stopping beside his friend Seshu, he gave the creature a gentle pat on the head. The giant rhino grunted happily at his gesture, which had the old warrior beaming fondly. "I'm really happy that my adventure led me here to this planet. I've really got Sandra and Maya to thank for that, those damn brats…” A chuckle of amusement left his lips following that particular remark.

It was these words that then prompted Piccolo to rise from the ground, where he then faced his older counterpart with a no-nonsense glare. "So… regarding our little wager…”

"Ah, yes. The wager," Gast replied, clearing his throat and turning around. When he saw the distrusting look the Earth warrior was throwing him, the Namekian in the shawl inhaled deeply. "You have no reason to be concerned, friend. I am a man of my word and, as I have done on countless occasions, I make sure that all my debts are repaid." He then raised a hand and placed it over his chest in a gesticulation of good will and honesty. "I am yours."

His remark had Piccolo raise a brow at the strangeness of his comment. "Uhh… come again." From the way he said it, it sounded like Gast was soliciting himself… and not in a good way.

Gast chuckled when he realized the Namekian mistook his words, "I was quite clear, wasn't I? If you were to win, I would give you everything that I had; my possessions, my properties, my knowledge and my experiences. Would you like for me to read the fine print for you again?"

Piccolo's frown deepened, "You're not seriously suggesting that you-

"I am," the butler replied, his own expression becoming stern. "And just so you know, I was willing to accept these terms the moment we sat across from one another."

"But… why?" Piccolo asked, completely baffled by why this Namekian was offering him this, of all things.

Taking a deep breath, Gast then looked down at the grass at his feet. "I've been wandering from galaxy to galaxy for over three hundred years. I've visited alien worlds, fought in interplanetary wars, endured slavery and starvation at the hands of tyrants, survived famines, hunted criminals, saved lives, and encountered monsters that only existed in your worst nightmares. I even found friends who were willing to take me in and make me part of their family. By all accounts, the life that I lived was a long and good one, filled with both happiness and sadness." After a moment of silence, Gast then raised his hands and looked down at them. "But the years have taken their toll on me… and now I'm no longer the man I once was. I've gotten old, with no children or significant others to pass my legacy on to. Thanks to all the hell I've suffered, I lost that ability long ago… and all I can do now is wait out the rest of my life on the sidelines to get reincarnated again. Sure I'll go on, but it's not the same." He then looked up at Piccolo and saw the warrior staring at him with an unflinching gaze. "I don't know. Maybe I just want to pass my knowledge and abilities on to someone who I believe is worthy of them… particularly a member of my own race. I believe you fit that bill nicely."

Processing everything that the man had to say to him, the Namekian from Earth blinked, "So you're willing to give up your freedom so willingly to another?"

Ambling towards the younger fighter, Gast faced his compatriot with a look conveying calm and confidence. "In the years since Sandra unlocked the power of the Super Saiyan, the number of alien races demonstrating supernatural and ethereal abilities has grown exponentially and, during the same period, the number of potentially galaxy ending events has grown at a commensurable rate. All things considered, there may be a causality behind these incidents." The man then raised his hand and gestured towards the Namekian. "Our increased strength invites challenge. Challenges incites conflict. And conflict… breeds catastrophe."

Furrowing his brow, Piccolo glanced at the ground. "I see your point." After all, everything the Z-fighters had gone through since their adventures on Namek followed the exact same pattern that Gast was explaining to him. Every time the group made some kind of leap forward in strength, there was always another villain or disaster lying in wait to challenge them. The Androids, Kana, the monster Zeru, Set, the assassins sent after Gohan… it was as if their very existence on Earth was drawing all of these villains towards them, like moths to a flame.

Somehow the universe was using them as a measuring stick for worse beings to follow, creating a hierarchy of perpetual chaos. Kind of a grim prospect if he was being honest with himself.

"What's the end game then?" Piccolo asked, wanting to get Gast's two-Zeni on the matter.

"There are dark forces in motion… monsters and aliens far more powerful than Sandra and myself out there in the universe," Gast stated, pointing up into the sky over Corvus and across the Solar System. "There are those who created the governments of the universe that we know today… and there are those who wish to disrupt that balance and incite war." He then pointed to himself and Piccolo. "You and I are part of one of the oldest races in existence, with powers and potential few can comprehend. Before I pass on to my next incarnation, I want to be able to make an impact on this world, and I believe that it is through you and your power that I'll be able to make that impact… if you'll have me."

Biting his lip, the green man in the turban and cape took a deep breath and looked Gast squarely in the eye. "Are you sure you really want to do this? You can always say no."

Gast smirked, "Like I said; I've lived a long life. Of all the things I have yet to do, this is the last thing on my list. Perhaps this'll open a gateway to something new and exciting for the both of us."

"I wouldn't get your hopes up. For all I know, it's pretty crowded in here," Piccolo joked, cracking a smile of his own. "Two others are stuck with me too, you know."

"Oh, I'm sure we'll learn to live with each other," Gast said, reaching up to straighten his top. After dusting it down the fabric, he then inhaled deeply. "Well… I suppose this is it then."

"Is there anything else you want to say before you do this?" Piccolo asked, watching the elder Namekian approach him slowly. "I'm still not a hundred percent about doing this myself, but since you're being so insistent, I can at least ask you this much."

Murmuring thoughtfully when he stopped in front of the younger warrior, the planet's caretaker then looked towards the sky. After several seconds of silence, Gast finally answered, "Tell Sandra, Maya, Kure and Cal to take care of themselves… and for Maya to get a haircut. She looks like a torcupine."

"Will do," Piccolo said, straightening up as he raised his hand. Looking down at the palm for a moment, he then glanced towards his counterpart one last time. "By the way, if you'd won that game, what were you planning on using the dragon balls for?"

"Oh?" Gast balked, before then grinning, "I'll tell you about that later."

"Huh?"

"You'll see." Clearing his throat, Gast started following Piccolo's hand as it extended towards him. "Now, I'm sure you're already familiar with the technique."

"Right," Piccolo replied, pressing his left against the elder Namekian's chest and garbs. As soon as it was there and firmly set, the two Namekians locked eyes.

"Alright now," Gast breathed, at the same time giving a smirk of mischief. "Lower…"

"Hmph," Gast closed his eyes, "I didn't think so." He then inhaled slowly, as if readying to follow through with the process. The Namekian from Earth braced himself for it, expecting the man to go up in blue flames at any moment.
However, a split second before it seemed like Gast was about to disappear, the old warrior slowly lifted his own hand and pressed two fingers across Piccolo's brow. Before the former guardian could ask or even comprehend the reason why the old mercenary was doing that, Gast's eyes suddenly shot open and a loud yell left his throat. A blue aura sprung up around the old Namekian's body, the fires of his energy sending ripples of wind across the planet's surface, stirring the animals and drawing the attention of the nearby Sesha.

Moments later, a blinding white light filled Piccolo's vision as he watched Gast dematerialize right before his very eyes, with the essence of his being phasing into his body. The ethereal rays filled the skies and lit up the surrounding jungle, moments before it faded to reveal only one Namekian standing in the center of the field.

Cape unfurling behind him as the winds finally died down, the confused Piccolo then looked down at himself to see if there were any unexpected changes to his body. Moving from his hands, to his arms, to his legs, the former guardian found no abnormalities. No extra limbs, no changes in color, no injuries or organs out of place. Yep. Everything was all there and accounted for.

However, one thing was clear to him: he felt much, much more powerful than he did before. Hell, he didn't think he could possess this kind of strength. It was unreal.

His attention turning to the planet around him and to the board game sitting nearby, Piccolo stared at it for several moments. When that time passed, the Namekian smirked.

"I don't believe it. You lost that game on purpose," Piccolo whispered.

A few seconds after asking that question, a voice then echoed through his head, "Yep."

Hearing that response had the Namekian from Earth recoil and stare ahead of him in surprise, "What?"

OOO

(Meanwhile)

(Somewhere in the Multiverse)

(Just off Parallel Universe #4066987342690)

Across the vast expanse of void serving as the space between spaces, several hundred thousand universes away from the timeline where the battle between Gohan and Sandra had taken place, another tournament of a higher class was currently wrapping up. However, the results of this competition were far bloodier than the one that'd just been waged between the New Saiyan Empire and the Z-Fighters of Earth, and much darker than most people would be familiar with.

This was of course the Universe 6 and 7 Gods of Destruction Selection Martial Arts Tournament, which was an off the books contest set up by the Gods Beerus and Champa of Universes 6 and 7 respectively, featuring participants from both timelines. The wager for this competition was simple. Should Beerus win, he would be given the six Super Dragon Balls that Champa possessed. Should Champa win, he would obtain the seventh of the Super Dragon Balls, and wish that the Earth of Universe 7 was swapped with the one from his universe. It was a simple contest of overly hyped proportions, where the strongest denizens of both worlds would battle to decide who was superior.

Following the final match, which pretty much ended with Beerus's universe as the victors, and the King Above All Zeno's arrival, it seemed like the tournament was off to a smooth and gratifying finish.

However, just as the spectators and competitors were watching Zeno interact with Goku and the feline tournament organizers, every single person present in the stadium was suddenly cut down by an unseen specter, which materialized in the center of the ring atop the Nameless Planet, directly behind the hosts.

The Gods, Zeno, his bodyguards, Goku and all the Z-fighters there set upon the phantom with intent of stopping them. But in a span of only a few seconds, all available bodies in the area could now be seen decorating the stands and moon in the most grisly fashion imaginable.

Beerus had been impaled by dozens of unidentifiable black pikes jutting out of the ground and, barely conscious, was dripping blood all over the ring. Frost's body was drawn and quartered all over the visitor stands, Auta Magetta had been ripped to pieces and was lying all over the place, Piccolo's headless body was impaled on the giant self-portrait of Champa, the Supreme Kais of both universes were lying in a broken and bloody heap near the center, Zeno's bodyguards had been turned into piles of limbs and tattered clothes, and the rest of the Z-fighters were lying in varying states of consciousness or near death across the spectator lawn. Even the children weren't spared from the massacre and were lying comatose on the floor.

The only ones who were conscious in any way were Whis, Vados, Goku, Vegeta, Hit, and Champa, but neither of them was in any fit state to stand. Whis was on his knees, missing an arm and bleeding profusely from the head, Champa had a hole in his stomach several inches wide that he was trying to cover up, Vegeta was lying on the floor missing both his legs, Hit was also missing his left arm and had half his body burnt black, Vados was attempting to stand from having her own scepter shoved through her ribcage, and Goku was bleeding heavily from various, x-shaped wounds all over his body.

As for Zeno, he was currently being held by the throat at the mercy of the phantom standing in the middle of the ring. After several seconds of holding the tiny Omni King above the ground, there was the sound of bones breaking and a harsh wind, moments before the blonde woman in the oversized witch's hat and eye patch tossed the tiny Zeno to the floor and turned to glare at the remaining warriors.

After watching the woman end the King Above All's life, Vados, unable to open one eye, looked up at her in horror. "S-Such power…"

"What kind of a monster is she?" Champa choked out.

Gritting his teeth, the bloodied and bruised Vegeta let out a roar and transformed to Super Saiyan Blue, his aura tearing a crater into the floor around him. "That bitch is MINE!" the legless man roared as he took off from the ground and flew right at the witch at full speed. "I don't give a damn anymore! SHE KILLED BULMA!" With a howl of fury, the enraged warrior lunged at the woman like a bolt of lightning.

Watching the Saiyan Prince approaching her, the one-eyed stranger merely frowned and, waiting for the man to get in range, countered his attack accordingly. In a flash, a feint transparent light shot from her pupil and hit Vegeta squarely between the eyes. The act of which not only caused the prince's Super Saiyan God form to dissipate, but also caused his body to hit the floor and slide to a stop just inches from the witch's feet like a toboggan. A dead, vacant stare was all that remained on the great warrior's face.
Whis gritted his teeth when he saw the attack that killed Vegeta, "A cohesive beam… right through the brain."

"VEGETA!" Goku bellowed, also powering up and leaping into the sky at terrific speed.

Following the Super Saiyan God as he soared into the air above the ring, the one-eyed witch then watched him barrel down at her with a spinning heel kick, which she casually avoided by stepping to the side. When the man struck the ground beside her, she then dodged a series of punches from him, before summoning a massive, golden spear twice her height in length out of nowhere and twirled it at him. Slamming his feet against the staff, Goku sprang off of the weapon to avoid being cut down. Almost immediately afterwards, the woman held the staff behind her and blocked Hit's punch that came at her from a blind spot, while simultaneously summoning a barrier and deflecting a kick from Champa materializing in front of her.

Cornered between the two warriors in a two-on-one grappling match, Whis and Vados quickly darted to the witch's open flanks. Once there, the two trainers then held out their hands and unleashed two powerful ki blasts at her. The attacks slammed into one another in the center and swallowed the witch up in a dome of twisting green fire, with enough compressed energy to wipe out the entire universe. As the inferno caused the ring and the planet to crumble, Goku teleported above the fireball and, after cupping his hands at his side, thrust them forward.

"KA-ME-HA-ME-HAAAAAAAAAAA!" the Super Saiyan warrior bellowed, a blue wave of energy erupting from his palms and slamming into the dome from above. His attack joined the pair's and forced the sphere to expand, the sheer amount of power causing the sky above them to splinter and the dimension they were in to begin shaking itself to pieces.

But just when it seemed like their combined attacks had managed to incinerate the phantom, a clap of thunder suddenly ripped the energy ball to shreds, sending a shockwave blasting outwards and slamming into Whis, Vados, Hit and Champa, hurtling all four of them and a cloud of debris into the stadium walls. Each of the fighters and Gods collided with the barriers with considerable force, before dropping to the floor like sacks of flour.

Goku was also sent arcing across the sky from the attack, where he then plummeted a fair distance from the ring.

Hit, springing to his feet quicker than the others, leapt onto the partially intact ring and darted at the witch. When the phantom became aware of the approaching assassin, she turned towards him with an unflinching stare, to which the warrior in purple aimed his one remaining fist.

In a flash, time suddenly seemed to stop around the witch as Hit thrust his fist towards the woman, intent on finishing her with a pressure point strike. But just when it seemed like he was going to land his blow, the woman suddenly brought her hand up and caught the man's fist while in the midst of his \textit{Time Skip}.

"N-No way." Eyes widening in shock, Hit was unable to respond quickly enough when the witch in front of him casually raised her other fist and tapped it against his stomach.

The blow from the one-eyed woman was instantaneous, creating a shockwave so powerful that it liquefied her opponent and sent Hit splattering through the air and across the ground, where all that was left was a bloody stain on the tiled floor.

After retracting her fist, the witch then turned around when she sensed someone else attacking her from behind, and spotted Vados charging at her bathed in a sphere of blue energy. The moment she spotted the woman with the scepter wound in her chest, a long stroke from the Universe 6 overseer buried into the phantom's side and caused the witch's top half to explode in a shower of blood, bones and entrails.

It looked like the surprise attack had done the trick. But as the witch's top half was scattering to the wind, the cloud of body parts suddenly stopped and got sucked back into the bottom half at light speed. Like tape being rewound, the shower of limbs and gore quickly reformed into the witch's top half, leaving her completely unscathed.

The stunned Vados was unable to do anything when her target suddenly held her hand to her face and, without so much as a blink, caused the trainer to explode into a cloud of dust. When the dust cleared, the blonde witch glanced the other way and saw Champa powering up a blast from a distance.

Purple orb of energy pulsating in his hand, the purple cat deity drew it back with a roar, "Die you scum!"

As he was moving in for the pitch, the one-eyed intruder raised her finger and, taking aim like a pistol, fired off a golden flash from her nail. What followed was the nucleus of the blast in Champa's hand being pierced by a lightning fast beam, which not only ruptured the sphere but caused it to detonate in the user's hand, engulfing the cat God and sending half of his corpse bouncing out of the explosion.

When the witch lowered her arm, she noticed that a majority of her limb had begun to burn and fall apart. After the decaying remains of it fell away seconds later, the blonde witch clicked her tongue in annoyance and looked over her shoulder, holding up her remaining good arm to deflect a kick from Goku. When the shockwave from the blow disintegrated a decent chunk of the ring beneath them, the Saiyan then vanished through a quick Instant Transmission.

The blonde witch tracked the Saiyan with her eye. Calculating his trajectory and eventual reappearance, she once again summoned her spear out of thin air and, allowing it to spin above her palm, chucked it into the sky above her. The moment the lance left her fingers, the weapon also vanished in a teleport. As a result, the instant Goku rematerialized behind his opponent ready to attack her, the spear the witch threw materialized behind him and went straight through his back. Drilling through the hero's body in a flash of light, Goku's transformation faded in an instant and his dropped to the floor, at the exact same time the golden weapon swiftly returned to its owner.

Twirling it between her fingers, the unfazed attacker looked down to see her missing arm regenerate and flexed her newly grown fingers.

She was so focused on looking at her hand that she seemingly missed the sight of Whis appearing behind her and striking out at her with his staff. It looked as though he was going to take her head clean off with the end of his scepter. But just as his weapon was inches away from cracking the witch in the skull, a pair of arms suddenly shot out from the phantom's back, caught the staff, and grabbed Whis firmly by the neck. When the blue-skinned trainer gasped in shock, he suddenly saw the blonde witch pull a T-1000 and body warp around, her face, chest and stomach bleeding out of her back until the front side of her body had switched places with her back, and she was once again facing her opponent without even moving an inch.

Throttling her opponent to his knees, causing the planet beneath them to crack and splinter, the witch then glared at Whis, who she could see gawking up at her and struggling to draw breath. The moment she had him at her mercy, the witch then spoke in a low and intimidating tone of voice.

"You should've killed me when you had the chance, master," Orthros hissed, before opening her mouth and beginning to inhale air at an astonishing rate.
What happened next was comparable to a black hole sucking up an entire planet, as Whis, screaming through the gale, had his face and the skin on his body sucked into the witch's mouth. The phantom continued to inhale the man's form at an accelerated rate, his body transforming into dust as he was absorbed into her body one cell at a time, until all that was left was his skeleton. When Orthros closed her mouth moments later, she watched the trainer's skeleton crumble into nothing, forming a pile of ash on the floor in front of her.

Deed done, the blonde invader then turned and marched over to where Goku was lying with a five inch wide hole in his body. Seeing the man was barely alive, choking up blood and twitching from his feet and fingers, the blonde witch stopped and tilted her head at the man like a bald eagle.

Spitting up more blood, the fallen Saiyan wheezed, "Wh-Why… would you… do this?"

"Why?" Orthros asked, before shrugging dismissively, "Because I can. Because I could. Your existence… this pathetic excuse of a universe… the Gods and mortals residing within it… they are all meaningless. The perpetual circle of motion you call the cycle of life and death is all just a sick, twisted game, prolonging the inevitable. As it is written, everything that exists in this world, from the tiniest atom to the largest star cluster, is destined to die and fade into darkness… as is the fate of all things." She then narrowed her eye on the man. "Even you."

Staring up at the woman in terror, Goku gasped, "Who… are you?"

Remaining silent for but a moment, the woman then answered with two words. "The end."

Glancing around the area and noticing all of the fallen bodies and remains, the witch considered them for several seconds before opening her mouth and beginning to inhale again.

However, unlike before, the people she began to suck towards her suddenly evaporated and burst into individual blue flames. Transforming into the same wisps of fire that all deceased took the form of when entering the Check-In Station in Otherworld, the souls of the broken and murdered Z-fighters, warriors and spectators, Zeno, Vegeta, Hit, Champa and Vados included, were drawn towards Orthros's mouth. Leaving trails of heat through the air, the plus four dozen spiritual wisps were sucked down the witch's gullet, before every single corpse and body part scattered across the Nameless Planet had been absorbed into her being.

Once she was finished, the only two people of significance who remained were Goku and Beerus, both of whom were purposefully left alive to watch the spectacle.

Clean up done, Orthros then looked up, where she saw the six individual Super Dragon Balls orbiting overhead. Dead expression unchanging, the blonde witch then took up her large, floating golden spear and tapped it on the ground. A loud chime of metal rings then echoed out across the fractured neutral space, which caused the giant crystalline spheres to start glowing and flashing brightly.

As the planet sized dragon balls started to react to one another, a transparent sphere of white energy then surrounded the stadium and spectator stands, picked them up, and floated them off of the planet. Pulling away to a safe distance, Goku, Beerus and Orthros watched as the Nameless Planet they'd been fighting on cracked and fell apart, before exploding and revealing the last Super Dragon Ball hidden underneath.

Unsurprised by the turn of events, Orthros then moved forward and, with the aid of her scepter, projected her voice at the top of her lungs. "Teenakawo Iganeteshiso Uyurinomika Yodei…" Stopping for a moment, the witch then jabbed her spear at the dragon balls and spoke in a commanding voice. "Come forth and face your death, dragon of the realm!"
All at once, the massive dragon balls lit up a brilliant gold, flashing and sparking with currents of lightning. Seconds later, a mass of light greater than any in existence burst forth from the collection of orbiting spheres and filled the cosmos. Undulating, twisting and burning through the vacuum of space, knocking galaxies and planets out of alignment, the nebula of ethereal energy soon took the shape of a massive dragon, whose tail stretched across the entire quadrant, sweeping past galaxies and planets as if they were grains of sand.

The moment the dragon appeared, its glowing red eyes piercing the tiny orb containing the ruined stadium, the witch Orthros then jabbed the end of her staff towards the dragon. As soon as she did, literal red chains of fire suddenly shot out of the spear and towards the beast at unheard of speeds, growing to gargantuan size till they were the same size as the intergalactic dragon itself. Multiplying and whipping around the serpent from all directions, the red chains surrounded the creature before snapping together, solidifying, and binding the celestial entity in its web. A bloodcurdling shriek of agony left the dragon's maw, as the red chains burned and ate away into its flesh, preventing it from moving lest it shred itself to pieces.

Upon seizing the dragon's otherworldly mass in its entirety, from head to tail, Orthros then twisted her spear and began to retract the chains, drawing the entire creature in with them. Before Goku and Beerus's eyes, the great dragon Super Shenron began to shrink and evaporate, breaking down into golden streaks of light that gravitated towards the tip of Orthros's staff. It took a full minute for the dragon's form to completely compress to the size of a marble, but once all of his light had disappeared into the void of the weapon, all that remained of the immense beast were the grey, crumbling asteroids that were the now empty Super Dragon Balls.

Once the act was complete, Orthros lowered the weapon to eye level and peered into the center of the overlapping drill head.

Inside the crystal marble sitting within the blade of the spear, she saw tiny, winged creatures circling around inside of it. Looking closely, one could see they were dozens of dragons, all of different types, colors and origins, flying and orbiting around each other inside a literal pocket dimension.

The sight of them put a small smirk on Orthros's previously emotionless glare.

"This will make the 11,931st dragon I have obtained," Orthros informed, turning around to face the half-dead Goku and Beerus, both of whom were now gawking at her in terror. "Only a few more left before I'm ready to move on to the second phase of my plan." She then walked towards where they were both lying, unable to move or mount any form of defense against her. Not that they could even when they were in top condition. "You think this is the first world I've invaded and burned? Well, you're wrong. No universe, however large, however small, is denied to me. The twelve continuums that make up your tiny branch of creation are just a small cog in a much larger and far reaching multiverse, made up of infinite timelines, infinite worlds and infinite possibilities. I plan on wiping them all from existence and starting a new world from scratch; one that doesn't suffer from the faults and inadequacies of the old." Stopping beside Goku, she then glared down at him firmly. "Once my plan is complete… all of reality, the new one born from my design, and all its little intricacies will revolve solely around me… and the people of the new infinity will finally know true peace."

As Beerus and Goku stared up at her, the wounded Saiyan's eyes then widened in disbelief, as he was finally able to match a profile to the one-eyed woman's face. "Y-You're-

"Just so you know; I didn't have to fight any of you. I could've wiped every single one of you out without even lifting a finger and stolen your dragon balls without expending any energy whenever. I merely wished to alleviate the unpleasantness within my chest that was my boredom by humoring you with a little bit of drama, at the same time giving you a small glimmer of hope that maybe- just maybe- you had a chance of beating me, before having that light snatched away from you… just like how it was torn away from me," Orthros stated before narrowing her eye on the crippled Saiyan. "Since you and your friends were kind enough to indulge me with your performances, I shall grant you and Beerus a swift passage into your next reincarnations." Her one eye glowing red and her staff flickering with golden electricity, she then performed one last act upon the two survivors.

In an instant, Goku and Beerus's bodies vanished into puffs of sparkling blue light and were replaced by tiny blue flames, which were then sucked up by Orthros. Once she'd swallowed them, she took a deep breath and murmured in satisfaction, before allowing her eye to wander in another direction.

Blinking as she stared across the cosmos, the witch then smirked and spoke in a low voice, "Congratulations, Gohan. You defeated the Saiyan woman. But I wonder how you will fair against the next one?"

After a few seconds, the witch vanished in a golden flash, leaving behind a white sphere of pulsating light that ruptured moments after her disappearance. When it exploded, the blast not only wiped out the two universes it was resting between, but all twelve of them in a series of gargantuan fireballs, cleaning the entire branch and leaving nothing behind but a black, endless void…

(TO BE CONTINUED)

Author's Note: Hey there. Just another quick chapter of the events following the Saiyan Invasion Arc, which has now come to an end. Expect more adventures and humor to follow as Sandra attempts to adjust to Earthling civilization.

As expected, we also catch glimpses of what the other villains in this story are planning, with the last one being a personal favorite scene of mine.

There's something morbidly satisfying watching Orthros clean house of the DB Super world. She's pretty much a big FU to both Dragonball Super and Superman respectively (to be clear, I don't hate Superman, just the OP versions of him. My favourite one is from Justice League Unlimited. Love that guy. Epic series. Hate that they finished it). Of course, she is completely inspired off of Othinus from To Aru Majutsu no Index. If you don't know who she is, you can look her up. She has the same powers and abilities as Orthros.

I thought she would be an awesome villain to really test Gohan's mettle.

Anyhow, I've done another bio, so feel free to read it below.

Character Biography:

Name: Orthros

Other names: Videl, Alter-Videl, One-Eyed, One-Eyed Witch, Odin

Epithet: "The one who wields the power of God"

Race: Human
Gender: Female
Occupation: N/A
Hair Colour: Pale-blonde
Type: Magic God/Jinn/Reality Warper/Abstract Existence/Essokinesis Age: Appears 18, but is countless years older
Home Planet: Earth

History: When Pan and Eva make a direct trip back in time to the months prior to the 26th World Martial Arts Tournament, due to the number of inter-dimensional turbulences occurring in that period, their actions inadvertently draws the attention of a mysterious wanderer from another reality. At first remaining hidden in the shadows and causing several events to unfold prematurely, the hidden force soon reveals itself to be a vengeful Goddess named Orthros. The literal translation of her name means "Early Dawn", and is also the name given to the Twin Headed Dog of Ancient Greek Mythology, the brother of Cerberus. This coincides with the character's deceitful and two-faced nature, while also signifying the newfound danger she brings with her presence. It is also the name given to a ritual practiced in the Eastern Orthodox Church and the Eastern Catholic Churches.

Though appearing at different stages throughout the story as a phantom witch with one eye and a bell at the end of her oversized hat, the mysterious female is, in actuality, a Videl from an alternate universe and timeline, who has been travelling between dimensions, studying them, and causing chaos in every realm she's visited. Unlike her normal, human counterpart, who is kind-hearted, cheerful, and has a strong sense of justice, this version of Videl is cold, ruthless, and malicious, and is willing to sacrifice anything to achieve her goals, regardless of how much destruction and misery it brings upon others.

Though originating from a universe very similar to the original canon timeline, the events that unfolded in that world following the Z-fighters' final battle with the demon Majin Buu transformed Videl from a once mediocre fighter into one of the most dangerous enemies Gohan and his friends will ever encounter.

During the fight with Super Buu, while Goku and Vegeta were trying to rescue Gohan, Piccolo, Goten and Trunks who were trapped inside the monster, something went horribly wrong. In a surprising twist of fate, Super Buu managed to corner both of the Z-fighters inside of him and absorb them. However, while the heroes ultimately lost the battle, absorbing all the strongest warriors of earth had an interesting side effect on Buu's personality, convincing the demon to spare the planet from destruction. As a result, the pink fiend wished all of the people of the planet back to life and left to explore the cosmos. The ending however was not without its cost, as Videl, stricken by grief and sorrow, spent the next many years of her life training, determined to rescue the man that she loved from the monster's clutches. Through use of the dragon balls' power, she was able to travel to the God of Destruction's home world and receive training from the life forms Whis and Beerus, achieving mastery over incredibly powerful techniques and various forms of magic.

During her long sessions, Videl meditated and bathed under the Falls of Truth, a sacred pool on an unknown planet, to cleanse her spirit and gain full control over godly ki, allowing her to tap into enormous wells of power. The result caused her hair to turn a ghostly blonde and her skin white.

Eventually, after decades of hard training and self-sacrifice, she ended up engaging Majin Buu in battle who, over many centuries of invading and pillaging, had managed to absorb over two thirds of the universe, including Beerus. She fought against the demon in an epic, intergalactic scuffle, which inevitably resulted in the loss of her right eye. When Videl finally managed to subdue the creature, she then demanded that he release Gohan and the others from his grasp. However, the demon, now referring to himself as Zen Buu, said that the boy and his friends were long gone, having been assimilated into his bio mass with the trillions of other souls in his collection. Realizing she couldn't bring back the man that she loved, the girl's mind snapped and, in a fit of blind rage, she disintegrated Buu and the entire universe. Several other universes suffered the exact same fate before the Z-fighter eventually calmed down.

From that point onwards, the lone goddess began an unending journey across the multiverse, visiting countless worlds in an effort to reunite with her Gohan. After failing at every turn and crossroad she encountered, the girl's sadness grew and her anger festered, transforming her into a cynical individual with a warped perspective on life. This caused her to become detached from all events past, present and future transpiring across the cosmos, and instilled the belief in her that the everyday struggles of mortals were 'pitiful' and 'a pathetic waste of time.'

Though Videl's deepest desire was to find a Gohan whom she could live a normal life with and could succeed where every other version of him had failed, due to her laundry list of experiences across multiple worlds, the teen had come to the conclusion that no such Gohan existed and that all of them were fated to die. She soon developed the mindset that every single thing in creation was destined to fall into darkness and, given her position as an outsider in reality, the woman has become determined to see this revelation through to the end. Her newly forged goal is, in essence, to acquire the power necessary to destroy all of reality, while simultaneously allowing her to restart it from scratch so that the sins and sufferings of the past can never be repeated.

Orthros/Videl, also known as Alter-Videl, was trained as a goddess by both Whis and Beerus, making her the most powerful human in her universe and the only human to ever achieve Godhood. She has even imitated Odin in multiple timelines on numerous occasions, killing the original Norse God and taking his place. However, following her victory over Zen Buu and the destruction of her world, she has long since surpassed her limitations as a goddess, having cast aside her mortal bonds and ascended into a higher plain of existence.

Countless years of travelling and living on the precipice of reality transformed Orthros into one of the most powerful entities in the multiverse. An exiled Magic God in space and time with 5th dimensional capabilities, she is essentially a life form capable of bending all things in the world without exception through use of her magic and powers. Her control over Namekian, Elysium, Celestial, Saiyan, Empyrean, and other forms of energy, grants her the ability to shape reality to her will, as well as manipulate matter, time, morality, probability, causality, and the natural laws of creation. She can even devour and seal people's souls within her own body, multiplying her already immense supernatural powers and increasing her strength to an incomparable degree. Due to all the universes she has visited, the number of souls she has in her possession is unaccountable. She can also travel freely throughout time and space without the use of a time machine or external elements, meaning she can jump to any universe and to any time period at her leisure, indicating she has an intimate knowledge of all historical events. It is also implied that she can read peoples’ intent and minds, as she is fully aware of what everyone, particularly what Gohan is thinking and feeling.

Orthros is also not bound by any rules or limitations, as she can cross dimensions freely, and even enter people's dreams and nightmares. This makes her literally omnipotent, as she is 'everywhere and nowhere' at the same time. Since her powers are so perfect, they encompass every single possibility in existence, meaning she has an equal chance of succeeding and failing; essentially making all of her powers and attacks a 50/50 shot. Since she is able to execute attacks in such rapid succession, the instances of her smaller attacks failing are barely noticeable. It is only when she uses large scale techniques, such as ki blasts capable of maiming people or destroying entire planets; the attack will reflect and cause notable damage to her body instead of to her intended target when a rebound occurs. However, in order to overcome the 50/50 restriction of her abilities, Orthros is able to unify her infinite possibilities by channeling her attacks through a weapon or tool capable of quantifying her techniques, allowing her to focus her powers and control her techniques with murderous precision.

Her primary weapon is the Spear of Longinus. Also known as the Spear of Destiny, it is a legendary weapon that, according to the Gospel of John, was used to pierce the side of Christ while he was hanging from the cross. In actuality, it is a powerful extraterrestrial artifact that is an amalgamation of dozens of other legendary weapons, such as Zeus's Lightning Bolt, Kronos's Sickle, Gilgamesh's Ai, the Super Dragon Balls, and Odin's Gungnir, which enables her to pierce through universes and immobilize beings with god-like power. Aside from granting her a 100 percent success necessary to use her powers, it can also be used as a throwing weapon, allowing her to hit targets without fault and provide a counterpoint to deflect her opponents' more destructive techniques. Wielding the Spear of Longinus also grants her the ability to successfully destroy (or create) multiple universes with a single swing and, due to it being forged from magic, grants her free control over life and death. She can even summon corpses of deceased fighters she's killed to battle on her behalf.

Orthros also possesses a form of immortality, a skill granted to her through her mastery of all forms of energy that allows her to effortlessly warp reality. Because of this, whenever she encounters 50 percent failure, any damage she receives from an attack or an opponent's attack, even a critical one, will be healed instantaneously through her regenerative capabilities. Even losing her head or being atomized can't kill her. It is only when she encounters a power that can defy possibility and logic that she is unable to heal from injuries sustained by an attack.

Orthros's power is such that she can destroy any universe on a whim and overcome multiple opponents without exerting any effort whatsoever, be they mortal or God. When she encounters Odin after she invaded Asgard, the all-powerful ruler stated that "she has more power in her little finger than a palace full of Gods of Destruction." She even disrupted the Universe 6 and Universe 7 tournament and killed all the participants with her own two hands just for the heck of it. Because she has destroyed countless universes and timelines, it is expected that she's encountered beings like Zeno, Beerus, Zamasu and Whis on multiple occasions. She has killed several hundred versions of the Omni King and thousands of different versions of Whis and Vados, placing her in a completely different category of her own. A direct blow from Orthros has the power to wipe a target from existence.

However, despite seemingly being the most powerful entity in existence, Orthros still has several major weaknesses.

Arrogance makes up one of the major flaws in her character, as she sees herself invincible and someone who stands above every other life form in creation, which makes her ignorant to opponents who can actually harm her in battle. Because of her invulnerability and invincibility, she is also prone to carelessness, and often lets her guard down to attacks that completely destroy her body. Her techniques also backfire horribly against enemies that defy her understanding and can be effectively nullified by a force that refuses to yield. She also fears the entity that is the 'Hidden Power' that Gohan possesses, as its strength far exceeds that of her own. It being one of the defying forces in the multiverse, she seeks to acquire its power as a means of reshaping reality safely through an appropriate anchor point, but is unable to control it directly as it repeatedly migrates from host to host. This is why she seeks to control the Legacies universe/Universe 7L Gohan, who is the current host of the 'Hidden Power' and the only one who can successfully wield it.
Varax of Universe 7L has proven at a number of points in the story to have knowledge of her existence. Whether or not alternate versions of him do is unknown. The only enemies that can match Orthros in terms of power and abilities are: Esdraelon, the legendary dragons that create and destroy universes, the Gods of the multiverse, and the titans, with Esdraelon being the only thing Orthros truly fears can kill her, which is why she chooses not to engage the monster directly, but use it to test Gohan.

Gohan’s Enemies - Summary

All of the enemies that Gohan has fought have had a significant impact on his growth and development as a character. Each villain has presented a trial for the young Saiyan to overcome, whether mentally or physically, and has also spurred on the other members of the Z-fighters to grow as well.

Cell – An artificial abomination made out of monsters, and the personification of hatred and malice. This android is the sum total of all of Goku's past failures and the very creature that served as a test of Gohan's vigilance and worthiness of inheriting the title of hero from his father.

Bojack – An intergalactic demon and mercenary who would be the one to define Gohan's destiny: either as the boy who would remain a child and grow up to be continuously saved by his father or the one who would grow up to become the new hero and protector of the Earth.

(This is where the great diverge from canon and Legacies occurs. When Gohan is saved by his father from Bojack in the 9th movie, he doomed himself to forever live in his father's shadow, which leads to the weak Gohan in the Buu Saga. By fighting and winning this battle in Legacies under his own power, he cemented himself onto the path of the hero and would forge his own destiny as a man.)

Kana – An alien freelancer who would serve as the agent that would officially assert Gohan's role as the guardian and defender of the Earth. She is his first true test as a fighter inheriting his father's role.

Paprika – The daughter of Garlic Junior and a villain inadvertently created out of Gohan's past actions; a person who seeks revenge against the demi-Saiyan for destroying her home planet and a majority of her race, despite not caring much for them, and would also be the second enemy Gohan and his family convinces to have a change of heart.

Zeru – A mindless, planet-destroying monster, representing the unpredictable nature of the universe, the only known survivor of the prehistoric world, and is an enemy that could not have been defeated without the combined strength of all the Z-fighters.

Set – The first true deity the Z-fighters ever encounter, embodying hatred as the harbinger of death and destruction, revered even by her own kind. She would prove to be Gohan's greatest test of spirit; showing his personification of good could overcome the personification of darkness.

Kaiser – Is the exact opposite of Gohan both physically and mentally; a villain that relies solely on his intelligence against the demi-Saiyan's overwhelming power. He is the most dangerous opponent that the Z-fighters will ever face.

Vulcan – An agent of a greater evil, sent by Kaiser to kill Gohan, and is the first enemy to not only best Gohan physically, but also reveal all of the Saiyan's weaknesses.
Varax – The embodiment of evil and ambition.

Orthros – The sum of all of Gohan’s failures.
Things moved really quickly following the interplanetary tournament. The media swept in to cover all the details of the story, from the victory of the Z-fighters, to their commendation, right up to the King's proposal to form an alliance with the new visitors from space. This being the first time any sort of interstellar relationships had ever been discussed between two planets on Earth, the news behind this development was to die for. That wasn't even counting the fact that Hercule Satan had confessed to the entire world of only having played a small part in Cell's downfall, as opposed to having destroyed the android with his own two hands.

The press was lucky to have received only a few minutes to get an exclusive with the Z-fighters and the Champ. However, everyone knew that there were even bigger problems to take care of first, namely the damages caused to the numerous cities and towns the battles had gone through.

This was quickly rectified by Kure and her personal army of CAT droids, whom she immediately sent out to repair all the damages. The little robots got straight to work, starting with the crater in the middle of Satan City, which they helped fill and patch up through use of their resources. While they worked under the supervision of the feline representative, San and King Koku, the latter of whom wanted to make some changes to the square, the Z-fighters used that opportunity to return to their homes.

Bulma, Mobi and Yamcha stuck around with Kure, so as to keep an eye on the woman and make sure reconstruction went smoothly, while Vegeta and Trunks returned to Capsule Corp with Cal in tow. Krillin, Tien, Choutzu and Android 18 flew back to Kame Island, with the latter insisting on taking one of the CAT droids as her own, for both her and her daughter. It was a request that Kure was more than happy to oblige, the blonde woman leaving the city square with a big smile on her face and a new companion in hand.

Most of Gohan's high school friends went off on their own way. As for Gohan, he, Goten, Videl, Zangya, Sandra, Maya, with Erasa and Lime accompanying, flew back to Mount Paozu where the first rounds of their interplanetary tournament had began. While they were airborne and flying over the lush countryside making up the majority of the East District, Goten riding atop Nimbus, and Lime and Erasa perched high up on Icarus's back, the group engaged one another in casual conversation.

"This is a really beautiful planet," Sandra spoke, wind rushing past her as she took the time to admire the mountains and forests that passed under them, "Such green and fertile lands, with a blue sky that seems to stretch on forever. No wonder you fought so hard to defend her."

Gohan beamed across at the woman as they glided along, "This place isn't just good to look at. It's also our home. Of course I was going to fight hard for it. You'd do the same for yours."

"Indeed," Sandra replied, watching a series of rivers and farmlands below drift past them, along with the clouds they were soaring over. "A jewel like this deserves the very best protectors the universe can offer. It's a shame I wasn't sent to this place when I was a baby."

Hearing her remark loud and clear had Zangya smirk across at the Saiyan Empress in their formation, "If you had wouldn't you have just destroyed it along with the millions of people living here? You know… because it was your mission?"

It was this question that had Sandra pause for a moment before glancing away sheepishly, "Oh. Good point."

Videl laughed a little when she saw the look of embarrassment appear across the warrior's face, "Your fantasies kind of fall apart when you look back at the place you come from and realize what could've really happened, huh?"

"Yeah. If my dad hadn't fallen down that cliff and bumped his head when he was a child, who knows what might've happened," Gohan said, looking ahead of him with a sigh. "The future would've been so much different."

Flying in closer on Nimbus as the yellow cloud puttered along, Goten gave his brother a curious look. "Dad was sent here on a job to destroy this planet, wasn't he, niichan? That's what you told me a long time ago."

"Uh-huh. But thankfully things didn't pan out that way," Gohan replied, flipping over while flying and placing his hands behind his head. Staring up at the sky as he literally glided through the sky on his back, the Saiyan chuckled in amusement. "Dad would've never met our mum, and you and I would never have been born."

"And I never would've met you," Videl spoke, flying into position above the Saiyan so that she was flying directly over him. Just a few inches of space hung between them as both teenagers ended up staring into one another's eyes intently as a smile framed the girl's face. "I would have lived my entire life not knowing of the amazing things out there in the universe, because I never would've met my soul mate. How tragic does that sound?"

Gohan grinned, "Very."

Their little aerial engagement earned intrigued looks from Erasa, Lime and Zangya, with the pair riding on the little purple dragon exchanging grins of mischief. As for the Hera, while she was flying at her own pace and watching the pair have their little moment, she suddenly felt someone else pull up alongside her and looked to see Maya flying next to her with her arms crossed…

A little too close for her liking, as her shoulder was damn near close to nudging against hers.

Freaking out a little at their sudden proximity, Zangya stuttered when she mounted an inquiry, "W-What's up?"

Maya, unable to hide the blush on her cheeks, threw a couple of furtive glances at the Hera-seijin. "Nothing. Just flying."

"Just flying?"

"Uh-huh?"
"Right next to me?"

"Yep. Right next to you."

"Like, literally right next to me?"

"As close as I need to be."

"How close?"

"Close enough," Maya replied without missing a beat, even daring to move in a bit and cause Zangya to lean away with uncertainty. Almost immediately upon doing so, the dark-skinned female's expression became one of want, appreciation and fondness. "Your sweat smells just like wild flowers in bloom."

"Oooo-kay," Zangya said, nervously extending the 'o' before swallowing the fluid that built up in her mouth. She then turned to look across at Gohan with her face showcasing a completely new shade of scarlet, the likes of which didn't even exist in nature. "If you guys will excuse me I'm… taking a lap."

It was this statement that had Videl look across at her teammate in confusion, "A lap of what?"

"Anything!" the flustered and embarrassed Hera shouted, before powering up and shooting off towards the East Coast as fast as she could, leaving a vapor trail and several sonic booms in her wake.

Seeing the orange haired female leave so quickly drew a series of surprised blinks from the crew. All the while Maya couldn't help but snicker and continue gliding along with a triumphant smile on her face. It was quite clear she was happy with the way Zangya had reacted to her flirting and only served to spur on the advances she had planned for the future. Noticing this drew an amused look from Sandra, who'd watched and listened to the entire conversation firsthand.

"Keep it in your pants, Maya," the Saiyan Empress warned, though this was clearly a half-hearted attempt.

"Just admiring the craftsmanship, ma'am," the alien warrior sung, yet was unable to keep her sly tone from leaking out. "She has such smooth and supple lines."

"I bet she does," Sandra chuckled, really not in the mood to argue with her horndog of a best friend.

It didn't take long for the group to finally arrive back at Mount Paozu. As soon as the troop saw the Son Residence glint into view on the horizon, Gohan and his entourage of powerful fighters gracefully descended upon the property, where they all touched down one after the other just a few feet from the front door. With Goten springing off of Nimbus and Lime and Erasa unsaddling Icarus, the team then approached the steps, where the half-Saiyan wasted no time in knocking on the wooden barricade. Almost as soon as he finished the third knock, the door swung open and out stepped Chi-Chi, dressed in her usual yellow qi pao and white apron, and her knuckles planted firmly on her hips.

Gohan took a nervous step back when he noticed the harsh glare his parent was throwing his way, prompting him to chalk out one of his usual, sheepish laughs, "H-Hey, mum. We're back." It was impossible for him to hide the fact that he'd not only brought Lime, Erasa and Videl along with him, but both Sandra and Maya as well, all five of whom were arranged behind him in a rather cliché yet fashionable arrangement.
The son returning to the house with a plethora of gorgeous ladies? A mother could interpret that in so many ways.

Choosing to forgo a pleasant greeting to start with, Chi-Chi simply scowled with her typical impatient demeanor as she surveyed the troop in front of her. After panning over the two strangers, who she easily recognized as the warriors who'd fought both her son and Zangya, the Son mother then inhaled deeply. "So... I take it the fight went well?" When she received simultaneous, quiet and obedient nods from Gohan, Goten and Videl, the home owner narrowed her eyes even more dangerously. "No one got killed?" The trio shook their heads. "No cities were destroyed?" Again, the group shook their heads. "Are you sure?"

"Weellll..." Videl began, pushing her fingers together and looking up innocently.

Before the crime fighter could answer, Chi-Chi's façade finally cracked and a smile reappeared on her lips. The woman shook her head as she ambled forward, "Normally I would be screaming my head off right about now and telling my boys how reckless and inconsiderate they were. But as long as no one got seriously injured, then I'm completely fine with however the fight turned out. Especially since it was our side that came out ahead." Her last statement carried an inflection of pride in it, which was a note that did not go amiss by any of them, especially her family. A few steps later placed the mother directly in front of Sandra. "I hope my son gave you a satisfying battle."

Recoiling a little at the woman's remark, the Empress in the white and revealing one-piece Saiyan suit straightened up and nodded, "Yes. He did." She then bowed to Chi-Chi in a royal manner. "I apologize for causing you any undue stress or anxiety with our feud."

"Ah, there's no need." A wave from the mother was her immediate response, "I've watched my son fight in dozens of battles ever since he was little. Believe me, I'm used to it." Chi-Chi then rested that hand at her side and grinned. "Now, since all the fighting is over and done with, how about we go inside, have some tea, and get ourselves ready for a celebratory dinner? Since the day's been so pleasant this afternoon, I figured we could have our meal on the back table under the old oak." She then gestured to their new guests. "The two of you are more than welcome to join us."

A smile appeared on Maya's face as she nodded back in appreciation, "Thank you. That's very kind of you."

"I wouldn't be such a good hostess if I was to turn away every single friend Gohan brought home," Chi-Chi replied, smiling at the two Saiyans before turning around and heading inside. "I'll get the kettle started."

"I'll help you, Chi-Chi," Lime offered, nudging past Gohan and giving the teen a fond smile, upon which she then skipped after the woman.

"Me too," Goten chirped, running up to jog alongside his mountain neighbor, all the while singing cheerily, "I want to bring out the cakes and biscuits! I'm so hungry!"

As the three disappeared into the home with varying moods of joy and enthusiasm, Sandra approached the spot where Gohan was standing and gave him an appraising stare. "Your mother is a very strong and generous individual. To invite a couple of troublesome strangers into her home so willingly is the mark of a woman with great purity."

A chuckle left the Saiyan's lips, "That's mum for you."

Videl smirked and glanced across at the two Saiyans, "Wait till you see the other side of her. Then you'll be in for a shock."

"Though don't let her catch you saying any of that," Erasa whispered, feeling a phantom shiver run up her spine when she remembered the time Chi-Chi had to chase off a dinosaur that had wandered onto their property. That day did not end well... for the dinosaur that is. "She'll kick your ass three times before you hit the ground and fight off an entire army barehanded just to prove a point."

"Considering her current power level that definitely seems like a possibility," Gohan remarked, looking down at his blonde haired schoolmate with a grin. "Rule number one at the Son household; never mess with our mum... especially when it comes to housework."

"Except for me. She loves me," Erasa said cheekily, at the same time head-butting the boy in the arm.

"Oh yeah, I'm not going to argue that," Gohan chuckled, reaching up to rub his chin. "There's something about you that mum really enjoys, I just can't quite put my finger on it."

"I'm a people-person," Erasa added with a wink, before reaching up to pinch the man in the arm. "Heck, even Vegeta laughed when I told him my story of Touya and the pineapple."

Gohan blinked in disbelief, "Wait? Vegeta laughed? Like... genuinely laughed?" When he saw her nod, the half-Saiyan chuckled, "Wow... go you." He then shared a crisp high-five with the girl, an exchange that went over the heads of both Sandra and Maya, and earned an amused look from Videl.

Following that brief exchange on the lawn, Gohan and his friends quickly retreated indoors. Once they entered the small country domicile, the demi-Saiyan showed Sandra and Maya around the place with Erasa providing on the spot commentary. He introduced them to the dining room, the kitchen, the bathroom, the living room and his bedroom, the latter of which he explained were most of his studying took place. The Empress in particular became extremely fascinated by his living quarters, commenting that she never expected a warrior of his incredible power and stature to have been brought up in such small and simple dwellings. This then led to the hybrid telling her about how their family had always lived off of the bare minimum, this being whatever money the father and grandfather were able to rake in, with most of their earlier days being piggybacked on Goku's winnings at the martial arts tournament.

Sandra accepted this history breakdown with welcoming arms, to which she then stated that her and Maya's childhoods were spent wrestling in similar financial and domestic circumstances.

Not long afterwards the entire family and their guests sat down at the dining table for tea and cake. Goten finished early and took Erasa into the next room to play video games on the console, as if completely unaffected by the day's events. Chi-Chi meanwhile used that opportunity to lightly probe Sandra and Maya for information, wanting to hear more about where they came from and how they ended up where they were now. Though they were brief on the details, the Empress did divulge some very interesting facts about how she governed a whole star system and controlled an entire planet, which she considered as her personal estate for all her years of suffering.

"How did you and your friends come across your planet anyway?" Gohan asked, holding his tea in one hand while watching Sandra sniff hers with interest. "If what all the stuff Kana told me is true, terrestrial worlds capable of sustaining life like the Earth are really hard to come by."

Maya, enjoying the scent of the various teas and treats in front of them, crossed her arms over her chest and leaned back in her seat, "Believe it or not, we actually came across Corvus purely by accident."
"A few months after our battle in the Maelstrom arena, Kure and I were performing a routine flight around the quadrant searching for a group of pirates who'd attacked a nearby star system. Since we pretty much liberated that entire area of space from Emperor Mao Kogen when we defeated him in the pits, every single planet previously under his rule elected us to be their new leaders, so we decided to stick around," Sandra informed, setting her tea down and staring across at both Gohan and Videl thoughtfully. "While we were checking the outskirts of the Vulpan quadrant, the two of us stumbled across an enormous nebula, which the civilizations of that region referred to as the Doorway of the Gods. It was there we found the planet orbiting around a rogue star, along with two gaseous giants and three smaller planets."

"Originally it was only one terrestrial planet with two moons," Maya said, picking up two biscuits and holding it up in front of her. "But after we constructed our base on its highest peak in the northern hemisphere and set up the shield generator, we also borrowed a few more moons from the same system and placed them into orbit of the planet. Kure arranged them into a pattern that not only created gravitational balance, but also helped mask our ki signatures from the rest of the quadrant."

"Not that the nebula we were orbiting didn't already do that," Sandra interjected with a shrewd grin. "There was so much celestial activity going on in our area that it made picking up our energy signatures next to impossible. This was especially useful in keeping a low profile, so that interstellar governments and people looking for Saiyans wouldn't be able to find us." She then chuckled and rubbed the back of her head, "We… got into quite a few skirmishes over the last couple of years, so there's a good chance we may have made a few enemies along the way."

"Join the club. We've got jackets," Videl remarked, at the same time gesturing across to her boyfriend sitting comfortably next to her, "This guy and his friends killed most of their enemies, but about fifty percent of them came back for revenge. That's not even counting the number of criminals the two of us caught while cleaning up Satan City."

Blinking, Sandra and Maya looked at one another before turning to stare back at the pair in confusion.

"Killed… most of your enemies…" Maya parroted.

"But fifty percent of them came back?" Sandra muttered before shrugging, "How does that work?"

The hybrid host rubbed his chin for a moment before holding a hand out to his guests, "Okay, first of all, spoiler alert. Second of all, this is going to start getting very complicated very quickly. I don't even know where to start." Scratching his head, Gohan then grinned and snapped his fingers. "I guess we can start with my dad's childhood."

"Kakarot, right?" Maya asked while nodding to the boy, "Bardock's son."

"Yeah," Gohan nodded, folding his arms on the table in front of him. "My dad got wrapped up in quite a few adventures while he was living here on Earth."

This remark earned a grin from Videl. "He also killed a ton of bad guys when he was a kid… a lot more than you would expect from a man like him. Most of them came from this massive military group called the Red Ribbon Army and a cult working for Piccolo's dad," Videl informed, as she remembered all the stories Gohan and Goku had told her when they went to visit him up in Otherworld. "All of this stuff happened way before his father even realized he came from another planet. Heck, he didn't even know anything about the Saiyans or his real parents."

"But then my dad's brother Radditz came to Earth and the entire game changed for everyone," the demi-Saiyan continued, waving his hands through the air to illustrate the gravity of the event. He then started recounting the tales and adventures as briefly as he could. "While my father and I were visiting friends on Master Roshi's island, Radditz appeared, kidnapped me and held me hostage, threatening my dad to kill at least a thousand people if he ever wanted to see me again. Shortly thereafter, my father and his then arch-rival, now best-friend Piccolo ended up teaming up and fighting the bastard, in which Piccolo killed both Radditz and my dad when he sacrificed himself to hold him down. At first we thought that would be the end of it."

"But then they learned from his uncle after Piccolo pretty much blabbed about the dragon balls that two more Saiyans were still out there and would be coming to Earth in about a year or so," Videl informed.

"Dragon balls?" Sandra repeated, not knowing what the duo was referring to.

"Uhh, the… orange crystals that the Namekians use to summon a mystical dragon to grant wishes," Gohan explained.

"Oh. Right," Maya nodded in understanding, "Our friend Gast mentioned something about his people creating those."

"Well, long story short, Piccolo kidnapped Gohan and trained him for about a year. Several months later Vegeta and his partner showed up and started wasting everything in sight," Videl said, beginning the next chapter of her boyfriend's tale. "They destroyed all of East City the moment they stepped out of their pods and laid waste to an entire naval fleet. I read about it in our school's history books."

"After we wished dad back to life using the dragon balls, my friends and I fought against the Saiyans, in which most of us ended up being killed by Nappa," Gohan explained, breathing a heavy sigh as memories of that day flooded back into his head. "Dad finally showed up, saved us, crippled the Saiyan brute, and then watched in disbelief as Vegeta finished him off. After that me, dad, Krillin and Yajirobi fought against the mercenary prince and beat him half to death." He then shook his head in amazement. "Man. No matter how many times he got hit, that guy just refused to go down."

Sandra let out a chuckle, "That's a Saiyan Prince for you. He will not take no for an answer." She then gestured to the boy to continue.

"Anyway, since Piccolo sacrificed himself to save me during the battle with Nappa, we knew that the dragon balls wouldn't be able to work, as their power was directly linked to his life force. So we decided to head to Namek to try and find some there. But when we arrived, not only did we run into Vegeta again, we ran into Frieza and his group as well. Vegeta killed most of them, but when the Ginyu Force showed up and came after him, we got the crap beaten out of us."

"How did you survive?" Maya asked, narrowing her eyes on the pair. "Those guys were Frieza's elite. The best of the best. You couldn't possibly have beaten them on your own."

"Nah. My dad did," Gohan said, smiling when he looked across at the women. "He showed up and kicked each and every one of them to the curb with barely any effort at all. Initially he left them alive, but Vegeta -being Vegeta- finished them off and killed the red guy by himself. We even fought Ginyu when he came around and beat him too… well, after he switched bodies with a frog that is."

This part caught Sandra while she was in the middle of drinking her tea, which she ended up spitting out and laughing in disbelief. "W-What?!"
"Yeah. Dad threw a frog at that weird beam he fired from his mouth and he switched bodies with it." His casual reveal of this information had Sandra and Maya staring at the kid for a moment, until both women broke out into outrageous fits of giggles and laughter. Once everyone managed to calm down and catch their breaths a full minute later, Gohan was able to continue his story. "Though we killed off his entire crew, the guy's still hanging around. He's actually living in one of the animal sanctuaries Bulma has set up over in Capsule Corp."

OOO

(Meanwhile)

(In West City)

In the lush, green garden that served as one of the many research plantations at the billion dollar industrial headquarters, along one of the dozen creeks passing through the manmade paradise, a collection of about a hundred small reptilian and semi-aquatic animals were gathered around the shallows. There, sitting atop the tallest rock, was the easily identifiable off-green, spotted, red-eyed amphibian from Namek that the soul of Captain Ginyu currently inhabited.

His loud, throaty croaks filled the entire area with a gentle, calming melody that accentuated the serenity of the garden as he addressed the various animals in what most people would believe was a speech preaching peace and harmony for all creatures, great and small. However, when Ginyu-Frog’s words were translated back to a language that was understandable by humans, the words he uttered carried a completely different tone.

"Hear me, my fellow amphibian and reptilian brothers!" Ginyu-Frog croaked loudly in an expression hauntingly similar to the late Stalin, "Today is the day you’ve all been waiting for! The day that the creek folk of the Southern quarter rise up against the mammal oppressors dominating the hills to the North!" Bringing up a flippered hand, the frog slammed it to his chest and croaked out even louder. "Long have we endured pain and humiliation at their teeth and claws! No longer! Arise! Arise warriors of Ginyu's Army! Though our bodies shall be broken and our fangs shall be splintered, our spirits will carry us on to a new day! A red day! And the sun RISEEEEEES!"

All at once, every single frog, toad, snake, turtle, lizard and iguana standing before the alien critter rose up and cheered, showing whatever limbs they had in support of their brilliant, tactical leader. In that moment of glory and under the roaring adulation of his followers, Ginyu-Frog also thrust his flipper into the air, rallying his soldiers to him and hollering at the top of his lungs.

"Fight! Fight with me! And the memory of your name shall be remembered forever, by your children and your children's children!" Ginyu cried out with a fierce and undying passion. "We're going to die today and it's going to be AWESOOOOME! WHO'S WITH ME?!" Another cry of support came from all the reptiles and amphibians present. The moment their cries rang out, Frog-Ginyu turned and faced the hills further up the stream they were gathered around, and pointed them forward. "Give thanks, men; to all those who've fallen and to all those who will fall! TO VICTOOORRRRRYYYYY!"

And with that, every single toad and reptile behind Ginyu-Frog followed the amphibian up the stream and hill. As if expecting the attack, the various furry mammals living in the grasslands and bushes in the northern part of the garden, including the mice, rats, possums, armadillos, cats and otters, had all gathered in preparation for the war to come. The moment the first frogs burst out of the bushes and attacked the mice on the front lines, all hell broke loose.
What followed from that point was a glorious battle, reminiscent of all the great charges in modern cinema.

However, pulling back from the battle now taking place across the clearing; seeing an army of tiny reptiles attacking an army of equally tiny mammals was quite an unusual sight. This much was obvious from the bewildered reactions of the two scientists on duty standing just a few meters away from the squabbling critters.

After a minute of watching the determined Ginyu-Frog and his allies tackle a large possum to the ground and bite into its flesh, the female scientist with the glasses and brown hair tied in a bun turned to her black haired male colleague quizzically.

"This is the third time this week. What is wrong with these animals?" the woman asked incredulously.

OOO

(Back in Mount Paozu)

"So after that battle, dad needed to be thrown into a healing tank so that he could recover. While that was happening we wished Piccolo back to life and Frieza showed up, and boy was he pissed. From there it was just chaos, mayhem, Vegeta and Krillin dying, and dad going Super Saiyan for the first time when he finally joined the battle," Gohan said, crossing his arms proudly but then shrugging afterwards. "We thought they both died when Namek blew up, but as it turned out dad and Frieza managed to survive."

This news had Maya raise an eyebrow, "Your father didn't kill him?"

"No. He thought Frieza would actually learn something from the ass-kicking he gave him and left him barely alive to soak it in, but that only made things worse. He came to Earth years later to get revenge on dad by killing all of us," the half-Saiyan informed. "Unfortunately for him he never got that chance and ended up getting killed by Trunks."

"Trunks? As in…?" Sandra spoke, lifting a thumb and gesturing over her shoulder, obviously referring to Goten's adolescent best friend in West City.

"Oh, no. Not that Trunks. Another one who came to us from the future," Gohan chuckled, watching Sandra and Maya's faces twist into expressions of confusion. "See. I told you it would get complicated."

"That's not even counting the other battles they fought in between those ones," Videl informed while gesturing towards the demi-Saiyan. "There was that Garlic Junior guy Goku and Piccolo butted heads with a month before Radditz's arrival. Then some crazy robot doctor named Wheelo decided to mess with the planet while Goku was gone. After that some Turles fellow showed up… then this planet conquering Namekian named Slug…"

"Oh yeah, and Garlic Junior came back a second time and attacked Earth while dad was up in space," Gohan added with a shrug. "Funny stories. Terrifying battles. Tell you about them later."

This earned a couple of understanding nods from their Saiyan guests.

"After Mirai Trunks killed Frieza, Goku finally came back to Earth. When he did, our half-Saiyan friend from the future told us that a couple of androids would emerge to wipe us all out," Videl said, placing a hand on her hip while glancing over at Gohan. "These guys were created by the head of the research and development team of the Red Ribbon Army, which Gohan's dad destroyed.
“He blamed my father for all of the pain and loss he suffered since that day and spent the last decade designing a group of cybernetic soldiers to kill him,” the demi-Saiyan added, taking his cup of tea into two hands and staring down at it with a look of dread. “Thanks to Trunks’s warning, we thought we would be ready for when they arrived. But the truth is we weren’t. Even though my father, Vegeta and Trunks were all Super Saiyans, the androids managed to beat every one of them, including our friends. We had to pull back for a bit and rethink our approaches, and even managed to find an old room in another dimension where we could get special training to increase our power in a short amount of time. While some of us stalled, the rest of us trained in that room and we thought for sure we had a way of winning.”

“But the worst was yet to come,” Videl interjected, her expression becoming grave. “The three androids who came first and their Plan-B counterparts were only the start. Doctor Gero apparently had a Plan-C hiding in the depths of his laboratory; a biological android crafted from the cells and DNA of all the strongest fighters on Planet Earth, including Goku, Vegeta, Gohan, Nappa, Trunks, Krillin, Tien, Yamcha, Frieza and King Cold.”

This news had Maya’s eyes widen in shock, ”Damn. Are you serious?”

“Yeah. He was a monster made out of monsters. A creature from your worst nightmares and the most dangerous villain we’d ever fought,” Gohan said, his expression remaining serious as he glared across at the two Saiyan women. “He was designed to use all of our abilities and techniques, and had a ridiculous power level to match. What’s more, and though I never actually saw this, he could absorb people into his body by drinking them through his tail.” This piece of information had Sandra and Maya cringe with disgust, and earned a scoff from the teen. “Yeah. And that’s not even the worst part.”

“What’s worse than being sucked up through that monster’s tail?” Maya asked. It was honestly the most horrifying thing she’d heard from another person, as she’d obviously never encountered a creature that could do something like that before.

“The creature went through evolutionary stages similar to an insect. By absorbing two of the other androids created by Doctor Gero, he could modify his physical form and attain heightened levels of power. This eventually led to him achieving what he called his perfect form and gave him the self-proclaimed title Perfect Cell.” He then looked up at the Saiyans with a grim look on his face. “The power he had in this form was unlike anything we’d ever seen before. A single attack from him could wipe out the entire solar system.”

Videl shivered at remembering seeing that creep on television and turned to look at their Saiyan guests. ”He had so much confidence in his power that he created an event called the Cell Games, in which the planet’s greatest warriors would face him in one-on-one combat to decide its ultimate fate. He pretty much had the whole Earth as his hostage.”

“Every single member of our group reached new levels of power leading up to that final battle,” Gohan said, clenching his fists tightly while looking down at his hot tea. ”My dad and I especially. But when dad called me up to battle Cell in his place and I stupidly refused to fight back at full power, that monster began goading me by torturing my friends. He did this through a form of cellular mitosis, in which he produced several clones of himself and sent them after dad and the others.” His gaze quickly shifted back up to Sandra and Maya. ”When he killed one of them, my rage finally got to me and I transformed to the second level of Super Saiyan.”

Sensing the boy’s pain and feeling the gravity behind his words drew a sad yet understanding nod from Sandra. ”That was a rough time for you. What you went through was probably far more...
"I was only eleven when I fought that battle," Gohan stated, inhaling deeply at the memories of that day. "With my new power I killed Cell's clones and took my anger out on that beast, and I thought I had everything under control. But then he did something that I never expected him to do…" He tensed up on this next part. "He threatened to blow himself up… and take the entire planet with him. When his body set itself to combust, I knew I'd screwed up." His eyes shimmered when he looked down at the table's surface. "My dad jumped in and sacrificed himself to teleport the bastard away to another planet. But that wasn't the end of it. Cell regenerated and came back stronger than before, and I was forced to fight him one last time and finish him off… when I could've easily done it when…" He stopped there, shaking his head furiously.

The negativity in Gohan's voice as well as his mood was easily picked up by the other people in the house, Goten and Erasa stopping their game to listen, while Chi-Chi and Lime glanced over their shoulders through the kitchen archway. Sandra and Maya also respectfully remained quiet when they sensed the distress in the young adult's voice and gave him the time he needed to catch his breath and settle his thoughts.

Observing that Gohan was having a hard time recounting that final part of his story, Videl reached over and gently gripped his hand. Her gesture helped calm the boy down and settle the bundle of emotions gathering inside of him. When his glazed eyes turned to his girlfriend, he saw the crime fighter give him a smile of assurance.

Feeling cheered up, Gohan beamed back at his guests. "A lot of things happened that day… and nothing that I don't regret. I just have to live with it."

Sandra also gave the teen a smile and, leaning forward, placed a hand on his arm. "Believe me, I know how you feel." Her eyes meeting his, the pair of Saiyans stared at one another for several moments in silence. When that time passed, the woman leant back with a grin. "Why don't you tell me everything else that happened afterwards? I doubt your epic tale of adventures and battles ends there." She said this while grasping the cup of tea in front of her.

After recovering from his bout of gloom Gohan, together with Videl, went on to talk about the other battles and mind-blowing events that followed. This included the Intergalactic World Martial Arts Tournament where Bojack showed up with Zangya and his gang, the visit of the envoy Kana from the Planet Trade Organization's preservation branch, Paprika's first appearance at the World Martial Arts Competition, the monstrous parasite Zeru coming down on the continent's West Coast and wrecking havoc on the planet, leading to a resurgence in the Earth's life-force, the battle with the God of Storms Set, and finally the mech-suit assassins. Needless to say, Sandra and Maya were absolutely rapt by these stories and regarded the boy with their utmost attention.

"Gods, demons, cyborgs, assassins, mystery, excitement…" Sandra counted on her fingers one after the other, before then grinning across at her partner and best friend. "I think I'm going to like it here."

Nodding in agreement, Maya quickly turned back to the demi-Saiyan with an expression reflecting determination. "If you and your friends ever need our help, don't hesitate to ask. We'll be here to support you however we can."

When Gohan accepted the women's words with a grateful dip of his head, they were then interrupted by the return of Chi-Chi and Lime from the kitchen.

"That's good to hear," the mother interjected in a cheerful tone, to which she then directed a happy smile at their guests. "The Earth's been attacked by so many monsters and aliens in the last two years alone, we could use with some more allies. Honestly, you guys have been the best invaders we've had since Kana, and even then she smashed through several buildings and properties before even finding her first opponent. You guys even sent your own personalized greeting video."

It was then Maya rubbed her chin thoughtfully, "That reminds me, I have to realign the satellite dish on top of the castle and patch it through to the one setup on moon five. The signal we gave off on that first entry was shocking."

Taking another sip of her tea, Sandra nodded in approval, "Your plans have been duly noted."

Staring between the two women for a moment, Chi-Chi couldn't help but catch on to one of the key bits of info the second in command had to say. "Hold on. Back up a little. Did you say you two say that you own a castle?"

"Hm? Of course," Sandra replied, appearing confused for a moment. "It's pretty much the only property we own, apart from our planet's moons." Almost immediately the woman balked and threw her hands up in disbelief. "Ah! Damn it! I forgot to collect the deposit we put down on that apartment we rented back on Argo!"

Also remembering this, her dark-skinned Saiyan colleague cursed under her breath and looked at her friend, "Shit! How long ago was that?"

"Nine years ago!"

"Ah. Crap. Well, it's gone now."

Despite the pair's sudden lapse back to their childhood years when they were planet hopping across their part of the universe, the Son mother couldn't help but become enthralled by the new information they were now sharing with her. Almost on cue, Chi-Chi began asking the Saiyan Empress about her estate, with the most standout questions being about her furnishings and income, which she guessed was probably through the roof. This soon transformed into a rather entertaining conversation about how Sandra and Kure were constantly bickering with one another about what kind of drapes they wanted to have hanging around the castle hallways displaying their various galactic banners.

Sandra wanted purple and Kure wanted green, a color that the Saiyan Empress was completely against.

Shortly thereafter Chi-Chi returned to the kitchen to continue making dinner with Lime, leaving Gohan and Videl to entertain their new friends, all of whom weren't quite finished with their drinks. This allowed them a chance to discuss other things around the table that weren't as relevant but were no less entertaining. When it involved a group of some of the best warriors on the planet, what else could they possibly talk about than their respective battle histories?

If they weren't knocking heads, they were measuring egos. It was one of the fun things about being a person in their shoes.

However, while the group was in the process of exchanging fight records with one another, recounting the various wins and losses they'd experienced in their lives, the congregation of super-powered fighters were soon interrupted by the arrival of Zangya. Looking even more haggard than before and sweating profusely from what they could guess was one hell of a training session, the Hera slogged past the living room and down the corridor, her intentions focused solely on a shower.
Noticing the frizzy-haired woman walking by the wall, Gohan couldn't help but lean back in his seat and watch his friend stagger down the hallway with slight concern. "Hey, Zangya. You alright?"

"I'm fine. I'm fine," the blue fighter replied groggily, at the same time waving over her shoulder, "Just… going to dunk my head in a barrel of cold water for the next couple of hours. Then I'll hit the hay."

"Oh. Okay," Gohan answered, not willing to argue with his exhausted partner, "Have fun." When he heard the door shut behind Zangya at the other end of the corridor seconds later, the spiky haired Saiyan turned back around, appearing slightly confused. "Flying a couple dozen laps around the planet doesn't normally tire her out. The fight she had today must have taken a lot more out of her than I thought."

Feigning ignorance to the Hera-seijin's current condition, Maya quickly hid her smile behind her tea cup and glanced away offhandedly, suddenly finding an interest in Chi-Chi's china collection on the nearby shelf. "Yes. The battle. Let's go with that."

Sandra shook her head at her best friend frivolous reply and plucked another biscuit from the plate, "Give her until tomorrow morning. I'm sure your friend will be back tossing mountains over the horizon in no time." After nibbling on the crumpet and giving it an appreciative look, the Empress then looked up at Gohan and Videl. Noticing how close the pair was sitting next to one another and how both teenagers were interacting, the boy feeding the girl half of his biscuit before poking her in the nose, the raven haired woman tilted her head curiously. The scene, showing the playfulness of the boy's character as well as his affection for his loved ones, then led to Sandra cracking a smile of her own and returning to her drink, quietly filing her observations away for another time.

Things seemed to quiet down even more after that, which saw Gohan taking Sandra and Maya to their backyard to show them the far reaching borders of their estate. Not gonna lie, there was a lot more than just grass and bushes to show off from their front porch, as there were hundreds and hundreds of acres of infinite greenery stretching out beyond the first row of mountains on the horizon. The visitors to the humble little home were certainly impressed.

By the time the sun started to set, the entire household was gifted with a feast fit for a king courtesy of Chi-Chi and Lime, complete with an otherworldly aroma that had Sandra and Maya practically salivating. They pair looked as though they were going to dive right onto the table. However, containing their baser instincts, the two women sat down on either side of the bench with the best dining etiquette they could muster. Of course this didn't stop the pair of hungry warriors from digging in alongside Gohan and Goten, which put more than a couple of amused smiles on the rest of the family's faces as bits of rice went flying everywhere.

Seeing two other Saiyans, particularly female Saiyans, stuffing their faces with food next to the two local bottomless pits was absolutely priceless. Erasa and Lime even snapped a couple of pictures of the four eating in perfect sync for posterity.

Eventually all the food was gone, with nothing but bones and crumbs being left behind. Once the slate was cleared, Sandra and Maya didn't hesitate one bit in giving Chi-Chi and Lime the most spirit lifting and sincere reviews on their cooking that they could. They practically spouted lines of poetry in their appraisal of their abilities and even helped to clean up most of the dishes. Needless to say they were the best visitors the Son mother could've possibly asked for.

In return for cooking, Erasa cleaned up all the dishes, allowing Chi-Chi to rest and giving Lime a chance to have a few rounds with Goten and Maya on the game console, which inevitably resulted in a rather vigorous onscreen contest between the two Saiyans over who the superior talent was. As the mood in the house settled, Gohan spent the rest of that evening chatting with Sandra and Videl on the benches outdoors, watching as the stars gleamed into life and their new planetoid neighbor pulled into view from over the horizon. When the trio finally came back inside with a set of empty glasses and plates, they quickly joined the rest of the family by the television, where they then showed off a movie to their intergalactic guests.

One after the other, as the minutes ticked on into night, the kids started to drop off. Goten and Maya were the first to fall asleep, followed shortly by Erasa and Lime, both of whom collapsed next to one another on a couch and beanbag respectively. Their light snores filling the room with a gentle atmosphere, Chi-Chi and Gohan quietly tiptoed about collecting the spare pillows and sheets they had stashed away in the laundry, which they then laid out over the dozing guests. Once that chore was done, the heads of the Son household and Videl moved over to the hallway and looked on as Sandra took her boots off and got comfortable on the sofa.

"I always wondered what it would be like to have a sleepover at a friend's place. I'm afraid that experience was lost on me in my years of traveling from planet to planet," the Saiyan Empress remarked in a whisper. She then turned towards the owners of the house and gestured to the cushions next to her. "May I?"

"You're our guest. Help yourself," Chi-Chi answered.

Sandra returned her words with an appreciative nod. "Again; thank you for your hospitality." The three then watched curiously as the gleefully smiling Empress laid back on the couch's pillows and, giving one last yawn of satisfaction, quickly fell fast asleep.

Needless to say, it'd been a long day for all of them.

Switching off the television as well as the lights to the main rooms, an exhausted Chi-Chi turned to her eldest and placed a hand against his cheek. "You get a good night's rest too, son. You need it."

"Thanks mum," the hybrid replied. "And thanks for letting them stay over. I'll make up for it tomorrow."

Gazing up at her boy lovingly, the mother then leant up and gave him a quick kiss on the cheek, before heading for her room. When her door at the end of the hallway locked shut, Gohan and Videl shared one last look with one another in silence.

Noticing the bags under her boyfriend's eyes, the raven haired girl giggled and reached up to brush his hair. "Hell of a day, huh?"

"Oh yeah," Gohan chuckled tiredly, giving a wide stretch that had the muscles in his back pop one after the other. "Hey. If I ever decide to use Kaioken and Super Saiyan 3 at the same time again during a fight, please feel free to give me a good, hard slap. Seriously. Using that form almost killed me."

"More than Sandra?" Videl asked jokingly, while at the same time thinking back to how much the pair had brutalized one another during their battle across the Solar System.

"Oh, no. What she did to me was way worse," the Saiyan laughed, before then cringing at the phantom pains that went shooting through him. He then glanced back into the living room, where he and Videl could see the woman was fast asleep on the couch in a very Vegeta-like manner.

"Sandra Could-kick-Gohan's-Ass… that's her official new last name from now on," Videl said with a broad grin in play. "How close did you think she came?"

"Honestly… it wasn't that far off. Out of all the people I've encountered over the years, Cell, Frieza, Zeru, the Ginyu Force… she gave me the hardest fight I've ever had," Gohan stated, without an ounce of hesitation to be heard. "I know I may have said that a lot in the past, but the amount of times I thought I was going to pass out or die when getting hit by her was just insane. Every attack I threw was just sheer agony."

"Poor baby," Videl whispered in a very motherly tone of voice, reaching out and wrapping her arms around the teen's neck. When she felt the hybrid's hands rest firmly on her hips and pull her towards him, the raven haired girl gazed at him approvingly. "Remember to keep your guard up and your chin down next time."

"Don't worry, I will," Gohan murmured, looking into his girlfriend's eyes and rocking her from side-to-side. "The last thing I want to do is mash up this perfectly good mug for you."

"Hmm… maybe it's not just your mug that I'm interested in," Videl replied, narrowing her eyes suggestively as a mischievous smirk formed on her lips.

"What is it? My hair?"

The girl bit her bottom lip. "Mmm… no."

"My chin? My hands? My magnetic personality?"

Videl's grin only seemed to widen, "Keep digging."

For the next minute the pair stood there, just appreciating one another's company. Affection and warmth shimmered in both their eyes, accentuated by the dark of the living room on one side and the light of the hallway on the other. In those few seconds of silence the young couple seemed to draw even closer to one another and, for a moment, it looked like Videl was going to say something. By the way her cheeks turned red and the way her lips seemed to part in a faint exhale, the question she wanted to ask was obviously intimate yet nerve-racking at the same time.

Her heartbeat quickened when the urge to utter her words became more and more perilous. Even Gohan seemed to pick up on her dithering nerves. Feeling his face starting to become hotter and hotter as he stared down at Videl's soft expression, the Saiyan suddenly found it much more difficult to maintain his composure in her presence. Gone was the confidence and charm he'd built up interacting with his friends and loved ones over the last seven years, and gone was his ability to communicate and function at his usual capacity. The man's courage was quickly replaced by nervous quivers, as his mouth opened and closed a couple of times in a vain attempt at a coherent response.

In their minds, both teenagers knew what the other one wanted to say and could sense what was going through their minds. The evidence was staring them right in the face and being held in their tender loving grips. However neither one wanted to make the first move for simply stepping into this new territory was rife with uncertainties and new experiences too terrifying to even contemplate.

Moments later the ice was broken.

"Well…" Gohan said, clearing his throat and drawing a surprised look from his girlfriend. "It's… uhh… it's getting late. I think we should turn ourselves in for the night." He then gestured her down the hallway. "You want to have a shower first or-?"
"Oh. Umm…” Videl stuttered, before putting on a small smile. "Yeah. Sure. I mean, after being thrown through hillsides, trees and farm houses for most of the day, a shower sounds really good right about now." She rubbed her shoulder nervously after stepping out of her boyfriend's arms. "Goodnight, Gohan."

"Goodnight, Videl," the hybrid replied, watching his girlfriend slowly amble down the hall.

Feeling he was missing something important, which probably accounted for a lot of things in his life, the half-Saiyan hero decided to head to his room, where he figured he could organize a hot water barrel out back and scrub himself down before hitting the hay.

Unbeknownst to him and Videl of course, they missed the sight of a pair of eyes watching them from the dark, as the seemingly asleep Erasa followed their conversation from her place on the couch…

OOO

(Later that night)

The quick dip in the barrel out back had Gohan feeling both clean and refreshed, as he was able to use the entire period to rid himself of all the kinks in his system. Once he'd emptied out the water and extinguished the fire, the spiky haired hero of Earth returned to his room for a long and much deserved rest.

Adorned in a pair of grey fleece pants, Gohan cleared the space on his desk, tidied up his books, and dropped down onto his mattress. Hands placed behind his head and on his pillow, the boy spent the next few minutes staring up at his ceiling, counting the multiple smudges formed in the paint and contemplating the various events that'd transpired in the wake of Sandra and her planet's arrival. Though it seemed pointless and borderline obsessive repeatedly replaying the same battles in his head over and over, the truth was that he was merely doing this out of some nervous effort to cover up the feelings currently surging through him.

These were of course the ones regarding Videl.

After powering through such a long and hard battle that had him sweating blood, it made sense for his body to have produced an insane amount of endorphins to compensate for the loss of other minerals. The chemicals pumping through his system made him feel happy, excited, and played a significant role in blocking out a lot of the pain he'd suffered as a result of the experience. The exercise he undertook from such a rigorous workout gave him a powerful form of 'runner's high', something he assumed was thanks to his Saiyan DNA kicking in and adding their juices into the mix.

The sensations of excitement he received were overwhelming. That being said, it wasn't so much of a stretch to believe some of the 'other' parts of his anatomy would be acting up in response to the chemical fireworks going off inside him. It was a completely natural response.

His hormones and adrenaline helped emphasize the many other emotions he felt on a day to day basis and most of these were aimed directly at the girls closest to him, especially Videl. When he'd held his girlfriend in his arms and gazed into her eyes, whatever feelings of love and desire he felt for her in that instant had been multiplied tenfold, and resonated throughout his entire body like a strobe. It fired him up, made him feel anxious, and compelled to act on his instincts.

So profound were these sensations that Gohan, scared of what might happen next, was forced to retreat and gather his thoughts. This was one of the reasons why he decided to take the long dip in the tub. Even when he had all the confidence in the world to go through the most dangerous and daring trials a person could face, all of that nerve and resolve went away the moment he was faced with the reality of what might've - what most certainly would've - happened in that hallway.

This was the human part of him acting up: the innocent, rational, realistic, and levelheaded side of him that would always come into play when dealing with a new and unfamiliar situation. It made him curse himself and grit his teeth, thinking how much of a coward he was for backing away like that.

He loved Videl and he couldn't even muster up the guts to approach her and take their relationship to the next level. That had been the perfect opportunity to do so and he missed it.

"Well... I'm going to make up for it right now," Gohan thought, a determined look coming to his face as he leapt out of bed and headed straight for his bedroom door. He then grasped the handle and swung it open, only to come to an abrupt stop when he found Videl standing right there in a white over-sized t-shirt, looking as though she was about to knock. The two jumped in surprise. "V-Videl?"

"Gohan?" the tomboy murmured, hastily lowering her hand. At first not knowing what to say, once she realized the demi-Saiyan was standing directly in front of her, Videl averted her gaze and blushed, "M-Mind if I come in?"

Recovering from the shock, the hybrid Saiyan gently smiled and ushered her inside, before shutting the door behind her, "You don't need to ask to see me, Videl. You're always welcome in my room."

Videl walked in with her hands behind her back, feigning interest in the various furniture around them, "I... didn't wake you up, did I?"

"No. Of course not. Why?" Gohan asked, keeping his smile up as he watched his girlfriend pace about his room, "Were you standing outside my door this entire time?"

"N-No," Videl replied defiantly, trying to put on a tough exterior. Failing when she saw the Saiyan's eyebrow arc upwards, the raven haired girl then rocked on her heels bashfully and kept her gaze on her bare feet. "Well... only for the last couple of minutes. But that's it. All I wanted to do was check to see if you were doing alright."

Sensing she was trying to play off the real reason why she was here, Gohan smiled warmly, "You don't need to worry about me, Videl. I'm fine. There's no way I'm going to let myself check out that easily." He then sat down on the edge of his bed and smirked at his visitor. "I don't plan on doing that for a while."

Videl giggled lightly as she lingered in place for a moment, "Sometimes I forget I'm dating the toughest man on the face of the planet." She then tiptoed forward and stopped within arm's reach of her boyfriend. "That and the fact he always seems to find himself in some kind of trouble."

Without even missing a beat, she straddled the teen's lap and draped her arms over his shoulders. "You know you love it," Gohan said, reaching up to gently rub Videl's cheek. Feeling the girl's delicate hands begin skimming over his shoulders and back, the hybrid then brought both hands down and laid them on her lithe waist, which he easily felt through her oversized T-shirt. This move earned a kiss from said girl, "So what, if I may ask, have you come to see me for then, babe? Were you hoping for a chance to nurse me back to health?"

"Oh, I can do a lot more than just nurse you back to health, stud," Videl replied, teasingly giving him another peck on the lips, at the same time her hands started to become a little more adventurous. She then moved back a little to stare into his charcoal eyes. "Did you just call me 'babe'?"

"Uh-huh," Gohan nodded with a mischievous grin. "Problem?"

"No. None at all," Videl answered with a giggle, her expression deepening into one reflecting appreciation, excitement, and a range of other profound emotions. Seconds ticked by as she sat there gazing at her boyfriend and admiring the contours of his handsome profile. Her heart started to race a little faster, causing her expression to twist into one of desire and longing, until her wall of restraint finally gave way. "Gohan… I can't wait any longer."

"Yeah. Me neither," the hybrid replied, swallowing nervously when he felt his girlfriend slide a little further up his lap. "I wanted to say something before… but I… I guess I was nervous."

"So was I. But not anymore," Videl whispered, shaking her head in disbelief as her breathing quickened, "Kami, I want you so bad."

"Me too." Feeling his girlfriend's hands start running over his chest with need, Gohan immediately responded by slowly moving his palms around her waist to grip the full globes of her ass. "Do you think it's a good idea… right now? I mean, with so many people-"

"It'll be okay," Videl replied with a mischievous grin, "Just try not to make too much noise."

The Saiyan responded with a smirk of his own. "I'm pretty sure that's supposed to be my line." He was promptly silenced by Videl grabbing him by the back of the head and crushing her lips against his in a passionate embrace.

"Ass," Videl breathed affectionately when they parted, before quickly going back to their newly rescheduled program.

(Lemon)

With their wants, needs and objectives established, the pair began setting the mood the best way they knew how as first timers. As Gohan proceeded to familiarize himself with the curves of Videl’s body, his hands slowly sliding up her hips and under her shirt, the pair once again became locked in a passionate embrace. Their kiss, which was chaste and tender at first, quickly became heated as the pair’s tongues intertwined with one another and hungrily devoured their partner’s mouth.

Their energy escalating, Videl made her intentions known by beginning to grind her hips into Gohan’s pelvis, who reciprocated her actions by grabbing both sides of her waist and pushing her down. Feeling the heat between them growing and the intensity of her boyfriend’s actions increase, the raven haired girl pulled away and moaned softly.

“G-Gohan?” Videl gasped, looking down to see Gohan’s arousal pressing against the panty covered apex of her legs. She then grinned mischievously, “Damn. You’re really ready for this, aren’t you?”

“Have been for a long time,” Gohan retorted, before then feeling his girlfriend start rubbing herself against him even more. A groan was released from his own lips when he felt her hand reach down to palm his aching erection, “And you’re not messing around either.”

Videl giggled before leaning forward to kiss along his jaw line. “Well I know what I want and I’m tired of waiting for it. So go ahead and give it to me,” she whispered in a sultry tone, before letting out another sound of appreciation when she felt her boyfriend nibble at her ear and start moving down her neck.

As he suckled on her flesh, drawing even more groans from the hot tomboy, Gohan’s hands ventured further up Videl’s shapely frame under her top, before finally resting on her ample chest. His quick discovery had Gohan raise an eyebrow and grin against her collarbone. “No bra?”

“D-Didn’t need it,” Videl stammered, before gasping when she felt her boyfriend give her breasts a testing squeeze.

“Good. Makes things much simpler,” Gohan whispered eagerly, proceeding to leave a trail of kisses back up her neck and to her lips, at the same time rubbing and kneading her breasts under her shirt. He then promptly silenced his girlfriend with another deep kiss when her excitement started to get more vocal.

Their mouths battling one another in a vigorous lip lock, the pair continued on with their ministrations; Videl’s hands moving over Gohan’s hot muscular frame while his palms continued to explore the amazing body she had under her shirt. In the midst of their engagement, the raven haired angel slowly pushed the demi-Saiyan onto his bed, where she wound up straddling him and grinding against him from a dominant position.

With their enthusiasm escalating, the pair started to get more adventurous. Videl’s hands slid down Gohan’s abs and began rubbing them shamelessly, while the demi-Saiyan was already attempting to slide off her panties.

But just as they were about to get into the good stuff, the bedroom door suddenly opened, and a large shadow fell over the duo. Looking up with a start, the two youngsters on the mattress looked across the room to see Zangya, clad in a white robe, standing in the doorway. Her blue skin reflecting the light of the moon and giving her an enchanting glow, the orange haired woman stared at the pair with an unflinching expression and a firm stance.

Seeing Gohan and Videl, caught smack bang in the middle of their brazen activity, caused the young Hera’s face to slowly transform into one of surprise and embarrassment; cheeks turning red and her fingers curling and uncurling repeatedly. Seconds later Zangya felt a warm sensation rush through her entire body, causing her limbs to tremble and her breathing to quicken.

While she was standing there, looking as though she was about to scream or flea, a second figure suddenly poked her head around the doorway and stepped into view. “Ooh… what’s going on here?” Erasa’s chirpy voice suddenly cut in.

Finally registering to the fact their two best friends were now in the room and watching them, both Gohan and Videl’s moods switched instantly, as they quickly found themselves staring back at the intruders with their respective deer-caught-in-the-headlight expressions.

“Z-Zangya!” Gohan stuttered. “Erasa?”

“Th-This isn’t what it looks like.” Videl sat up off of Gohan, unable to hide the fact that her hair was a mess, her shirt was ruffled, and her panties had been tugged slightly down her hips, “We were just, uhh…”

Grinning, the most popular blonde in Orange Star High, clad in her signature green halter top and dangerously revealing blue, leather short shorts, took a couple bold steps into the room with her hands placed on her waist. “It seems like we caught you guys in the middle of something naughty,” Erasa remarked in a mischievous tone of voice as she turned to look back at her fellow gatecrasher.
“Can you believe it? Gohan and Videl were trying to get some nooky-nooky time with each other and we weren’t invited.”

Zangya however wasn’t listening, at least not completely.

Biting her bottom lip momentarily and fidgeting restlessly on the spot, the woman with the orange locks stood in silence for several seconds, confusing Erasa, Gohan and Videl with her disposition. But then, out of nowhere, the anxious Zangya wordlessly rushed passed the blonde teenager and leapt at Gohan, throwing her arms around his neck and crushing her lips against his in a searing kiss. The attack was so sudden and so passionate that the Saiyan, in the midst of his confusion, was too shocked to respond as he sat there looking at the woman with wide-eyes while Videl, still perched on his lap, gaped at the Hera-seijin.

After remaining like that for several seconds, pressing her bosom into Gohan’s chest and clawing at his body like a lifeline, Zangya pulled away, red-faced and breathing heavily. When she gazed into the young man’s eyes, seeing his astonishment and awe reflected in his charcoal irises, the powerful Hera spoke in a raspy voice. “I can’t take it anymore, Gohan-kun. I just can’t. I want you…” Hands running up and down his back before resting on his neck, the woman shuffled closer to the boy and wrapped a long leg around his waist. “I want you right now.”

“Zangya?” Gohan whispered.

Her expression showcasing nothing but sincerity, the blushing and obviously excited woman ran her hands over the boy’s chest wistfully, “I’ve been running myself into the ground for the past month trying to keep my feelings for you in check. But with every day that’s passed us, I’ve found it harder and harder to hold myself back. What with the flirting, the teasing, the fun and games we have together, and not being able to do more than just look… all of it is driving me crazy. What’s more, seeing you fight and go wild against Sandra today, unleashing that beast from inside you, made things even worse.” She then gazed hungrily into his eyes. “Now, no matter how hard I try, I just can’t stop thinking about you.”

“Me?” Gohan asked, as if the answer was the most shocking thing in the world.

“I love you, Son Gohan,” Zangya whispered, running a hand up Gohan’s head fondly. “I love you so much it feels like my chest is going to burst… and now… I want to show you just how much you mean to me… how much I want you.” She then proceeded to run her hands down his back yearningly, moving one to the front to ghost tantalizingly down his abs. “Do you… want me too?”

Blinking, the demi-Saiyan cracked a smile. “Zangya, I…” It was then he realized the current position he was in and looked at Videl, whom he could see was still on his lap, watching and listening to them carefully. Freaking out a little when reality came full circle, the red-faced Gohan stammered fearfully, “I… don’t know what to do. I’m not sure what I should…” He was at a complete loss. This situation was a complete first for him.

After staring at her boyfriend and the Hera for several moments, the previously embarrassed Videl then put on a smile and, leaning forward, draped her arms around her boyfriend’s neck once again, resting her arms on top of Zangya’s. “Geez. You can stand up to a monster capable of destroying an entire planet, but the moment another girl throws her arms around your neck and confesses her feeling for you, you get cold feet. Honestly, you’re such a push over.” A sly grin then came over her face as she sifted her fingers through his spiky locks. “Why don’t you show us the same confidence you do when you’re fighting? Maybe then it will make things easier… and a lot more fun for me.”

“Huh,” Gohan whispered, before feeling his girlfriend lock lips with him in another deep kiss.
When she pulled away moments later, the hybrid took a few seconds to catch his breath, while at the same time gauge the implication of what the girl in front of him was now suggesting, “Are you serious?”

“I am,” Videl replied, her eyes shimmering with admiration. “I know in my heart that I’ll never be able to find another man as kind, strong and compassionate as you… not in a million years. But as long as I’m with you, I know I’ll always be happy, even if I have to share you with more than one girl.” She then looked across at Zangya sitting next to her, “Especially since they love you just as much as I do.”

Nodding, the Hera also looked up at Gohan and looked into his eyes, “You mean more to me than any other person in the world, Gohan… and I’ve visited a lot of worlds. Of all the countless galaxies and the millions of people living in them, the warmth and kindness that you showed me when I came to this planet was unlike anything that I’d ever known. You opened your heart and soul to me… and in return you opened mine.” She then glanced back at Videl, “You feel the same way too, right?”

This drew a soft smile from the raven haired beauty, “As long as I’m his first, you can have him as many times as you want. Deal?”

“Deal,” Zangya agreed without a second thought.

And with that, the pair looked back up at their crush, with Videl beaming with self-assurance, “Well… what do you have to say to that?”

Hearing his girlfriend’s words put a relieved smile on Gohan’s face, moments before a serious glimmer flickered through his eyes. “Alright… if that’s what you wish.” Placing his hand behind Videl’s head, the Saiyan stole a third kiss from her, crushing his lips against his girlfriend’s and surprising her at his intensity. Pulling away seconds later, he then turned his attention to Zangya and, wrapping an arm around her waist, pulled her in to kiss her too.

Caught completely off guard, Zangya quickly responded to his gesture with a fiery passion, her hands running over his naked body adventurously and clawing at him for extra purchase. In the heat of the moment, her over leg wrapped around his waist and pulled her towards the handsome hybrid, allowing the Hera to grind up against him. A string of moans left Zangya’s lips when she felt Gohan’s hand run down her back to grip her buttocks, at the same time Videl leaned in to kiss along the Saiyan’s jaw and neck.

When Gohan pulled away from Zangya moments later, the heat of his breath mixing with hers in a mist, a very Saiyan-like grin spread across his lips, “To answer your question, Zangya… I love you too.”

Her face lighting up in joy, the Hera-seijin kissed him one more time, before moving around to nibble him lightly on the ear. “Just for that, I am going to rock your world tonight, stud.” Nipping at his lobe, she then moved her hand down to his boxers and gripped his erection through the fabric, which drew a groan from the Saiyan and a gasp from Zangya.

While the three were busy having their bout of fun on the bed, they completely forgot about Erasa, who was still standing in the doorway and watching them.

At first Erasa wanted to tease Gohan and Videl a little more, having caught them in an act so promiscuous, she knew that it would embarrass the hell out of them for many more weeks to come. However, her plan quickly backfired when she saw Zangya jump into the fray and, after hearing her confession loud and clear, watched in silent wonder and amazement as her three friends expressed their love for one another in the most erotic manner imaginable.

Stunned by the development and unable to say a word after hearing Videl and Zangya’s non-aggressive pact with one another, the astonished Erasa’s expression slowly morphed into one of envy, a deep shade of scarlet crossing her cheeks and her thighs rubbing together as she saw Gohan take her best friend’s lips in his.

As the trio’s passion escalated, so did Erasa’s arousal. Her right hand sliding down the front of her shorts while her left hand moved to paw at her bosom, the blushing blonde then bit her lip before deciding right then and there what she wanted.

If the other girls were going along with it, then why not her too?

Unbuttoning her shorts, sliding them down her long legs and kicking them off her feet, leaving her in her white thong and green halter top, the blonde rushed forward and, clambering onto the bed, wrapped her arms around Gohan from behind. Pressing her ample chest into his back, the blonde drew the attention of the half-Saiyan and the girls already in front of him, causing them to stop their activity prematurely.

“I… I can’t hold it back anymore either, Gohan,” Erasa said with a red face, looking Gohan squarely in the eye as hers irises shimmered with want and need. “You’re the most amazing, selfless guy I’ve ever met. You’re smart, strong, kind, handsome… everything that I’d ever want and love in a man. You see me as someone more than just some girl… more than just some piece of ass… and I don’t want to lose you ever.” She clutched the boy desperately, pushing her chest further into his back and causing the boy to blush brightly. “Please… let me be part of your life too.”

Initially appearing surprised, Gohan then smiled and nodded in understanding. “Yeah. Absolutely, Erasa.”

A joyful laugh left Erasa’s lips as a positive glow filled her eyes. Quickly reaching a hand around his head, the blonde pulled the demi-Saiyan towards her and planted a deep kiss upon his lips. Slipping her tongue into his mouth and allowing it to dance with his for several seconds, she then pulled away with a gasp. “You’re so hot, Gohan-kun… I need you so bad.”

“You’re not the only one,” Videl also spoke, turning Gohan back to her and pashing him for a few seconds. “Mmm… let’s keep going.”

While Erasa kissed and nibbled on Gohan’s neck, at the same time letting her hands roam freely over the front of his body with Videl mimicking her actions, Zangya snuck in a second taste of the demi-Saiyan’s lips.

As their exchange started to get a little more salacious, the Hera suddenly pulled away for a reassessment of the situation. “W-Wait a second. Since there’re four of us now… we’re…” Her blush developed a deeper shade at her next line of words, “We’re going to be making a lot of noise.”

Stopping her own venture short, Erasa looked up worriedly, “Yeah. You’re right.” She then looked at the man she was embracing from behind. “Where should we go?”

Thinking on it for several seconds while the girls stopped having their way with him, the sandwiched Gohan then perked up and smiled. “I know a place. Hold on.” When the trio braced, the young Saiyan focused for a moment and vanished in a flash of gold, their bodies disappearing from the room via countless individual streaks of light.
A second later, the four rematerialized atop another bed, a large two-person spread with curtains drawn and open. When Videl, Zangya and Erasa looked around, they found a white room surrounding them with a big, circular window on the far side, double doors, shelves, oriental style furniture, and a table and cabinet set up against the wall. It was a small, modest little domicile with very little in it, but it still felt like home.

Videl actually did a double take when she recognized the interior. “Isn’t this-?”

“Your great grandpa’s house?” Zangya apparently also recognized the establishment, “The one sitting on the other side of the tree line?”

“Yep. Just a hundred yards away,” Gohan replied, leaning back to survey the place. “The family helps keep the place in good condition. The bed, the cupboards, the floors… everything is cleaned and dusted once every few weeks in case we ever have a guest who can’t find a place to sleep.” He chuckled when he remembered the current number of people at their home. “Luckily everyone decided to crash where they dropped, so we have this room all to ourselves.”

Erasa, sitting on the mattress beside the other three with her hands in her lap, murmured thoughtfully, “A hundred yards, huh?” She then raised an eyebrow and smirked, “Think that’s far enough?”

“Well, we’ll soon find out,” Videl replied, gripping the bottom of her shirt, “In the meantime…” She then lifted the white fabric away and tossed it to the floor beside the bed, leaving her topless before the trio. When she saw Gohan, Zangya and Erasa react to her exposed cleavage, particularly the man of the hour, the leering girl then slowly crawled towards her boyfriend like a hungry lioness, “Let’s pick up where we left off.”

Feeling Videl’s fingers creeping up his chest as he gazed at the beauty before him, Gohan was then nudged in the side and turned to see Erasa sliding over to him as well. Cheeks hot with excitement, the blonde beamed expectantly at him. “Do you mind?” she asked while raising her arms.

Getting the message, Gohan gently helped pull Erasa’s halter top over her head, revealing to everyone there that she wasn’t wearing a bra either. Once it was removed, the demi-Saiyan watched the blonde rotate around and give him a perfect view of her ample breasts.

Erasa, seeing the hybrid’s eyes glued to her chest, giggled in amusement and grabbed her boobs playfully in each hand. “Well… what’cha think?” she asked, pushing her breasts up a bit for emphasis.

The nervous Gohan gulped at the sight of the topless blonde. “Th-They’re amazing.” While Videl was certainly well-endowed herself, sporting a perfectly round C-cup, after seeing what Erasa had to offer he guessed she had to be a large D, maybe even a small E-cup. Feeling his erection tighten inside his shorts, the young warrior was interrupted from his open inspection by a pair of arms draping over him. He turned just in time to see Zangya leaning into him, pressing her own bosom into his skin.

“Don’t forget about me,” Zangya replied, shrugging her shoulder and allowing part of her robe to slide down her arm. Their gazes meeting, Gohan quickly engaged the beautiful Hera in a tender kiss, during which time he reached up to untie her robe. Sliding a hand up the kimono and rubbing her breast, the boy coaxed a low moan from Zangya, prompting her to slide her hand completely down his abs and into his boxers. There, the woman seized the boy’s burning arousal, which had her stop her kiss short and look down. “Whoa… is… is that you?”

The blushing Gohan chuckled, “Well, I can feel you grabbing me so… yes.”
The woman swallowed as her face lit up, “Damn. I can’t even wrap my fingers around it.” Proceeding to stroke him through his tight shorts elicited a pleasurable groan from the boy, putting a smirk on Zangya’s face. “Do you like that, big boy?”

“Oh yeah.” Grinning back, Gohan then moved his other hand down the woman’s body and, without pausing for a second, slipped it into the apex of her legs, “Allow me to return the favor.” A wash of triumph flooded through his chest when he heard Zangya moan loudly as his fingers massaged her pussy, followed by a cry of pleasure when he slipped two fingers inside of her.

As he slipped the rest of the woman’s robe off, leaving the blue beauty sitting completely in the nude, Gohan and Zangya continued to stroke each other into bliss, until the Saiyan had his head turned towards Videl for another passionate kiss. While his girlfriend embraced him, Erasa came in from behind and, snaking an arm around his waist, pushed her hand into his boxers to join Zangya’s.

The blonde licked her lips excitedly when her fingers grabbed hold of the monster hiding inside. “Wow, Gohan. You’re huge.” She then grinned at the Saiyan making out with Videl, “How do you manage to fit all of this inside here?”

“With great care and a mild feeling of discomfort,” Gohan replied after his lips left Videl’s. Continuing to work his fingers in and out of Zangya’s pussy while she continued to stroke his shaft and suckle on his neck, the half-Saiyan then got a wicked idea and, snaking his hand around the firm globes of Videl’s ass and into her underwear, slipped them into her pussy from behind, causing his girlfriend to cry out in a combination of surprise and pleasure.

Stimulating both Videl and Zangya at the same time, while the Hera and Erasa worked him in return, Gohan started lavishing attention to all three of them at a more vigorous pace. He did this by kissing down Videl’s neck and collarbone to her breasts, while at the same time working both girls a little bit harder. His thumb brushed against Videl and Zangya’s clits, causing his lovers to shift, lean into him, and moan even louder.

“How is he so good at this?” Biting her bottom lip, the incredibly turned on Zangya encouraged Gohan to continue his actions by reaching up to his head with her free hand and gently scratching his scalp through his hair. Videl at the same time ground against Gohan’s incredibly skilled palm, wanting to feel more of him while whimpering and moaning into his ear.

Hearing his lovers coaxingly coo encouragement to him was like music to Gohan’s ears as he buried his face into Videl’s chest, gently suckling and licking around her areola. He used his tongue to tease the girl even more as he routinely switched sides, before then moving over to Zangya, much to the two women’s delight.

Watching Gohan pleasure Zangya and Videl simultaneously had Erasa squirm, as she was feeling a little left out. Removing her hand from the Saiyan’s shaft, she then focused her attention on her best friend, who she could tell from the sweat running down her face and rapid breathing that she was getting close. She placed her delicate fingers on Videl’s cheek and turned her towards her.

“That face you’re making right now is so hot, V. Is Gohan really that good?”

“Y-Y-Yes. He… He’s amazing,” Videl panted, finding it hard to speak from the bolts of pleasure rushing through her as she felt herself getting closer and closer to an explosion.

Erasa’s expression then transformed into one of lust, as her eyes traced over every inch of Videl’s naked body and the delicious grooves of her lips. Without even giving it a second thought, the blonde leaned in and captured Videl’s mouth in a hot kiss. At first surprised by her best friend’s sudden gesture, the human fighter quickly responded with gusto, clumsily moving her tongue out and around Erasa’s lips, begging for entrance. In that moment, the blonde obliged, and engaged her best friend in a battle for dominiance.

Erasa wrapped her arms around Videl’s body, reveling in the smooth and subtle feel of her skin, at the same time the pair became lost in their lustful dance. While Zangya gripped hold of Gohan even tighter and started breathing even faster, Videl, struck by a wash of inspiration, snaked one hand down her blonde friend’s hourglass figure and, slipping it into the front of her panties, started rubbing her fingers against her most precious place.

This caused Erasa to disengage from their kiss, latch onto Videl and give a loud cry of passion. Feeling her fingers start working her clitoris, the blonde began to wantonly grind against her, before moving down to kiss and suck on her breasts, simultaneously massaging them with her hand. Smiling triumphantly, the raven haired girl also slipped a hand into Gohan’s shorts to replace Erasa’s, joining Zangya’s in rubbing him off.

She wasn’t able to carry out this task for long as several seconds later Videl felt the walls of her restraint about to be breached.

The crime fighter moaned loudly, “G-Gohan… I… I can’t-”

“I’m cumming!” Zangya cried as well, panting as Gohan hungrily suckled the nipple of her breast while moving in time with each entry and exit of his fingers.

The tempo of Gohan’s ministrations increased. Then, moments later, both Zangya and Videl let out simultaneous wails of passion as they both reached their limits. Their bodies spasmed for a couple of seconds as they were overcome by fits of fiery bliss, before eventually coming to rest against Gohan’s chest and shoulders, panting heavily from their climactic finishes. When they both recovered and looked up at the Saiyan, they saw the young man lick at the fingers on his right hand, which caused the two girls to blush at his bold gesture.

Gohan chuckled at their reactions, “What can I say? You girls taste pretty good.” He then leaned over and kissed Videl.

Still not sated despite their extended foreplay session, Videl responded to the boy’s probe in kind, being sure to thank him as best as she could with her mouth and tongue. Zangya and Erasa also got some face time with the man and after taking it in turns to show their appreciation, slowly pushed him down onto the mattress until he was resting on his elbows. Once he was in position, Erasa distracted Gohan with a fierce make out session, allowing Videl and Zangya to move down to his waist and remove his obscenely tight shorts.

The pair blinked in surprise when his erection sprang free of its confines and, kneeling side-by-side, took a moment to marvel at its glory.

“Oh, wow…” Videl murmured, her eyes shimmering with awe and hunger.

“I’ll say,” Zangya also whispered, estimating the monster before them to be at least twelve inches.

Taking the lead, the raven haired girl took a hold of Gohan’s cock and quickly continued the good work she and Zangya had been doing before, with the Hera joining her soon after. The pair smiled with lustful delight as they noticed their fingers couldn’t completely go around the boy’s shaft, prompting them to take a duel-handed approach to the situation.

“Mind if I join in?” Erasa asked cheerily, nudging into place alongside the pair. It was here she was finally able to see for herself what had her friends so worked up. “Oooh. Now this is going to be a very fun night.” Reaching in, the blonde added her own hand to the fray, leading to one of the most sensational, albeit crowded hand jobs ever.

Overwhelmed at the cooperative effort going on downstairs, Gohan happily allowed himself to get swept up in the pleasure as the three women went to work on him. All of a sudden, the Saiyan male threw his head back and gave a long groan when he felt Videl leaned in and envelop the head of his cock with her tongue, an action mimicked by Zangya and Erasa. The two females ran up and down the entire length of his shaft, leaving no inch untouched or unexplored.

“You’re so big, Gohan,” Erasa remarked as she sucked and nibbled along her lover’s cock.

“With such a strong scent as well,” Zangya also commented, finding enjoyment in her own piece of the action.

Wanting to taste the fruits of her labor as his phallus throbbed under their combined assault, the ever eager Videl then ducked down and took half of Gohan’s cock into her mouth in one go.

Feeling the hot, moist cavern of his girlfriend’s orifice around the head of his length threw Gohan into an inner frenzy, gritting his teeth and clenching the sheets of his bed as the tomboy alternated between long slurps and short sucking motions. Zangya and Erasa assisted their fellow lover in this endeavor; the Hera gripping the base of his cock and massaging him up and down at a rapid pace, while Erasa fondled his balls.

“Ah. Th-That’s great,” Gohan said, wincing when he felt a particularly strong bolt of enjoyment shoot through his waist. “Keep it up.”

Sensing he was getting close, Zangya and Erasa moved in and began to suck the boy’s cock with Videl, who started bobbing her head up and down even faster. Their ministrations and efforts caused the demi-Saiyan to thrust his hips into their mouths, sitting up on his hands as more moans of delight started to leave his lips. The three girls worked him in tandem, intent on bringing their man to heel just as he had done for them.

Their patience was rewarded seconds later.

“I-I can’t anymore. I’m gonna…” Gohan called out before, with a groan of finale, thrust his hips upwards and came, his seed exploding into Videl’s waiting mouth.

Swallowing as much as she could, with some spilling out from the corners of her lips, the raven haired girl pulled away, upon which Gohan’s cock shot a few more ropes out onto the waiting girls’ faces. Shocked and awed at the quantity, Zangya and Erasa caught as much as they could. The moment his throbbing ceased, the trio moved in to clean up the mess.

“What an incredible amount of semen,” Erasa murmured, taking Gohan’s cock and sucking on the head. She then passed it over to Zangya, who also gave several long sucks of the man’s amazing phallus.

“Here. I’ll share some with you, Erasa,” Videl said, leaning over to her best friend and giving her a passionate kiss. In doing so, she gave the blonde the overspill she had in her mouth, allowing her friend to slurp it out.

“Mmm… there’s so much,” the blonde replied gleefully, sucking on Videl’s tongue before giggling and licking around her mouth, “I’ll clean you off.” Getting on her knees and shuffling closer, she then began kissing down the tomboy’s face, moving to her breasts to lap up the splatter.
While she did so, Erasa took a hold of her friend’s tits and started rubbing them, kneading one while licking the nipple of the other.

This drew a series of low and delighted moans from Videl, who rubbed Erasa’s head affectionately to let her know she was doing well and pulled her face closer, coaxing her to continue. While this was happening and Erasa started to grate against her friend’s thigh with need, Zangya suddenly came up behind Videl and, wrapping both arms around the human girl, groped her breast and stroked her thigh firmly. The Hera’s unexpected actions caused Videl to squeak in surprise, especially when she felt Zangya’s breasts press into her back.

“You have an amazing body, Videl,” the orange haired temptress whispered, causing the raven haired girl to shiver. “It’s really starting to turn me on.”

“Z-Zangya?” Videl gasped, before letting out a cry of pleasure when she felt Zangya’s fingers slide up her leg and into her pussy, where her digits began massaging the insides with vigor.

“Hope we get to have some one-on-one time tonight,” the Hera spoke softly, nibbling on the side of her ear to get some more sounds out of her. She grinned victoriously when the raven haired girl responded with some beautiful music, at the same time bucking against her out of reflex.

Allowing Zangya to take Videl’s reins after feasting on her breast for a few more seconds, Erasa quickly turned her attention to Gohan, who she noticed was gawking at them in silence. Obviously seeing the three women closest to him locked in a passionate embrace and playing with one another was a big shock to the system, especially since the teen had never seen a scenario like this before. Not every man’s first time involved multiple girls in the same bed at once, all three of whom were also inexperienced and fumbling their way through this as best as they could. Nevertheless, it was a night all of them wanted to make the most of and remember.

Crawling over to Gohan and finding his cock was still rock hard and ready to go, Erasa came up beside him, looped her arms around his neck, and beamed up at the teen mischievously. “I think she’s ready for you, tiger,” Erasa said while rubbing her body against the Saiyan. “Go get her.”

Getting the message loud and clear, Gohan calmly crawled over to the other two girls, where he saw Zangya gently lay Videl down. Overcome by the Hera’s generous massage, the panting Videl allowed Gohan to turn her onto her back and slowly remove her underwear. After flinging her panties to the side, the demi-Saiyan positioned himself directly over his girlfriend, resting on his hands and knees and gazing into her beautiful blue eyes.

Taking a moment to look her over, Gohan smiled warmly, “You’re beautiful.”

Videl blushed and smiled up at the Saiyan, “Thank you, Gohan-kun.”

“Do you… need me to take it easy on you?” the Saiyan asked half-jokingly.

The crime fighter playfully slapped him in the shoulder, “There’s no need. All the training I did made sure of that.” When she shifted beneath him to adjust his tip at her entrance, Videl then tensed up slightly when she felt the Saiyan graze her folds. “Just… go slow at first, okay? You’re… really big.”

Nodding in understanding, Gohan took a moment to move into position and then, with a single, gentle motion, he entered Videl. The girl’s moan filled the entire home as her boyfriend buried himself fully inside of her, stopping several seconds later so that she could get used to his size.

Once she’d gotten used to the full feeling of her boyfriend’s length and girth, Videl reached up, pulled Gohan down, and kissed him on the lips, “You can go anytime now, Gohan-kun.”

Unable to hold back any longer, the calm yet blushing Saiyan slowly began working his hips. Using long, deep strokes to set the pace, his opening momentum quickly drew a series of loud moans and cries of ecstasy from Videl, who started to writhe and twist under his actions. She was incredibly tight, something that he expected from their first time with each other, but didn’t make it any less mind-blowing to have her wrapped around him. Gohan could feel his heart racing inside his chest and he was pretty sure Videl was experiencing the exact same thing.

Sensing the Saiyan’s eyes on her as his hands caressed her body and held her hips in place as he moved in and out of her, made Videl feel like the most important woman in the world. Gohan had his attention fixed entirely upon her person as he made love to her, filling her with a warmth and pleasure that she’d never experienced before in her life. Even the erotic motion of her breasts jiggling back and forth by his body moving into hers couldn’t tear Gohan’s eyes away… that is when she could tolerate the bolts of pleasure shooting through her to keep hers open.

Gasping and gripping the sheet she was laying on, a blissful Videl looked up at her boyfriend with need. “Come on, Gohan-kun pant-pant more… harder,” she breathed heavily, reaching up to run her hands down his back. Feeling his hard, powerful muscles working to keep his body moving had the girl lick her lips eagerly. “Show me… how much you love me.” Doing something completely unexpected, she moved her hand down to grip the base of his tail, not knowing what kind of response it could elicit as she began massaging it firmly.

The sudden static of pleasure that shot up his body drew a low growl from Gohan, causing his pupils to flash a shade of teal. Grabbing one of Videl’s legs and propping it over his shoulder, the Saiyan then placed his girlfriend on her side, allowing him to hit her from a completely different angle. What’s more, his sudden surge of excitement prompted him to start thrusting his hips even faster, drawing cries of delight from his girlfriend as his manhood plunged in and out of her hot, wet center. Hearing Videl scream had the Saiyan increase his tempo even more as he kissed her calf and ran his hands up and down her well-toned leg.

All her training kept Videl in fantastic shape, as Gohan joyfully marveled at the tightness of her ass and the flatness of her stomach, all of which moved in time with his thrusts and the rapid succession of her breaths. Her combination of moans and cries were like music to the young man’s ears, and every plunge and dip of his hips was done with intent to elicit even more of these heavenly sounds from her.

While the pair became lost in one another’s bodies, Zangya and Erasa, who were watching the pair quietly from the sidelines, looked on with expressions of awe and excitement as they both started shamelessly playing with themselves. The Hera fondled her bosom and rubbed her legs together, whereas the blonde had one hand squeezing her breast and the other fingering herself, with the latter working in time with Gohan’s thrusts. The thought of having the Saiyan inside of them, giving them the same attention that he was now showing Videl, was driving both of them crazy.

Videl felt like Gohan would split her in half from their newfound position and she loved every second of it. The sensations her boyfriend was instilling inside her prompted her to sing out her satisfaction in response to his forceful ministrations. His girth was incredible, as was the power he exerted every time he moved inside of her. Through her panting and her cries, she gleefully called out his name, periodically telling him to go ‘deeper’ and ‘faster’, to which the teen happily obliged.

Feeling a tightness building up inside of her as Gohan’s thrusts sped up caused Videl to call out between breaths, “D-Don’t… uh… stop, Gohan-kun! I’m so close!”

Grinning, the half-Saiyan spoke between grunts, “Well, V… let me… uh… help you get there.”
He leaned forward some more, increasing the speed of his movements, and grinding his hips up against Videl for extra measure.

A white haze filled her eyes as Videl felt a surge of electricity pass through her, causing her mouth to open in a cry of ecstasy, “Oh… fuck! Gohan-kun… you’re incredible! Oooh! So good! Uh-uh! Do me harder! Ohh! Harder!”

Seized by a desire to see her reach the height of ecstasy, Gohan increased his efforts, working his cock in and out of her with extra vigor. She looked so beautiful, her naked body dancing to the rhythm of his thrusts as her second climax for the night fast approached.

“Oh! Ohh! I’m gonna cum! OHH! I’M GONNA CUM!” Several seconds later, it happened. Eyes widening in shock, Videl’s head reared back as a high-pitched scream then left her lips, “OOOHHHHH! FUCK YEEEEESS!” Her orgasm was like an electrical earthquake, causing her toes to curl, her pussy to clamp and contract around Gohan’s shaft, and her juices to come erupting out of her core to coat Gohan’s manhood.

Stopping for a moment as his girlfriend’s body bucked and convulsed in his arms, Gohan allowed Videl to ride out her orgasm, groaning when he felt the pressure from her release squeeze around him tightly. After feeling her trembling start to subside and her back return to the surface of the bed, before she’d even had a chance to catch her breath, the determined Saiyan continued his current course, thrusting into her and drawing another round of cries from the elated tomboy.

“Oh… oh fuck, Gohan! D-Don’t stop! Keep… uh… fucking me!” Videl cried, gripping the sheets beneath her tightly as her hips moved in sync with his thrusts. When his momentum changed, the girl panted in approval, “Y-Yes! Like that! Ohh! Just like that!”

Videl hoped above all that the walls of this building were thick and that the people over in the main house could not hear them, lest they end up waking them. In the end she didn’t care, as long as Gohan fucked her like this whenever they hooked up, they could know whatever they wanted.

For several more minutes they carried on, their passions being unleashed bit by bit as both Gohan and Videl poured their love for one another into their actions, enjoying the feel of the other’s body and prolonging this moment for as long as they could. The heat that they felt, the pleasure they received, and the sensations they were experiencing were completely intoxicating, and for a second they wished they could make this last for eternity.

But like all good things, even this wonderful engagement had to come to an end.

Inner muscles clenching as she felt a tightness building once again, the blissful Videl moaned loudly, “Gohan-kun…ohh… I-I’m…”

“M-Me too,” Gohan whispered back.

“Inside…” Videl panted, looking up at her boyfriend desperately, “I want it inside.”

Not willing to argue with her as he too could also feel himself reaching his limit, Gohan set his girlfriend onto her back and lifted her other leg onto his shoulder. Leaning over, he began plunging even deeper from a new position, drawing louder cries and moans of rapture from Videl. During which time, the Saiyan leaned over and covered Videl’s lips with forceful kisses that she returned right back, wrapping her arms around his neck and moaning into his mouth as their tongues danced and their lower halves met in a series of erotic motions.

Disengaging from the kiss seconds later, Videl shrieked in delight, leaning towards Gohan’s ear while he buried himself into the crook of her neck, kissing and biting along her collar bone. “G-Gohan! Uh-uh-oh! Fuck! I-I’m gonna cum!” Feeling him respond in kind and speed up his thrusts, Videl was unable to hold back any longer. Clawing at his body for dear life, toes curling and a shiver running up her spine, the girl met her end with a wail of finality. “OHHH! I’M GONNA CUM! OHHHH! I’M CUMMIIIIIIING!” She screamed at the top of her lungs as her orgasm crashed over her like a tidal wave.

Gohan, feeling Videl clamp down on him and pulse around his member, followed shortly afterwards, shooting his load inside of his willing lover and hearing her let out a soft, sexy moan when she felt his white jets saturate her inner walls.

“Amazing…” Videl gasped, a blissful smile spreading across her lips, “So much… is pouring in…”

Gohan pumped the rest of his load into her, rubbing her thighs and squeezing her pert buttocks as he admired the beautiful angel beneath him, who now appeared to be glowing after their raucous session. Leaning over when he saw Videl look up at him in a daze, the Saiyan then gave her a warm smile. “We’re just getting started.”

“I sure hope so,” a hot voice suddenly breathed into Gohan’s ear, bringing his attention around to see Zangya’s chin resting on his shoulder. “Did you two enjoy yourselves?”

Blinking in surprise, Gohan then smiled, “Yeah. I believe we did.” His remark earned a few silent laughs from Videl.

Arms encircling the man from behind, Zangya then began running her hands over the Saiyan’s body teasingly. “So… I believe it’s my turn?”

A flicker of mischief and excitement passing through his eyes prompted Gohan to pull out of Videl, much to her vocal displeasure. But as the demi-Saiyan was drawn into Zangya’s arms and away from his number one partner, the raven haired girl then saw Erasa move over her and, seeing the blonde’s eyes staring into hers, quickly blinked back into reality.

“While they’re having their fun, I think I’ll play with you for a bit, V,” Erasa chirped, her face red hot as she lay down and pressed her ample bosom into Videl’s.

“Huh? Erasa?” Videl murmured, only to suddenly have her lips seized by the blonde’s. Feeling her best friend’s tongue slip into her open mouth drew a moan from the tomboy, who then responded to the teen’s gesture by snaking her hands up and around her body, pulling her closer.

As the two girls made out and started feverously grinding against each other nearby, Zangya pushed Gohan onto his back and slid up his body, her breasts squishing into his chest in the most tantalizing manner imaginable.

“I want you to do the same thing to me as you did to her,” Zangya whispered, leaning in to give him a hot kiss on the lips. After a quick pash, the blue Hera suddenly moved up and hung her perfectly round breasts over his face, swaying them for good measure. “Come on.” Doing as he was instructed, Gohan leant up and took a nipple into his mouth, reaching with his hands to grope the girl as he sucked. Moaning shamelessly as she felt the man lavish attention to her bosom, the woman dropped down with her hips and began grinding against him, feeling his member rubbing against her pussy.

Switching attention between her breasts a couple of times, much to Zangya’s delight, Gohan then watched as the girl slowly turned around, bringing her face to his crotch while her lower half hung over his head, putting them into a 69 position. Using her hand to guide his manhood towards her, Zangya opened her mouth and immediately went down on him, swallowing half his cock in one go. A pleasurable groan left Gohan’s lips as he felt the Hera work him back to length, before he too leant up and began licking her folds.

Zangya moaned around the teen’s cock when Gohan sucked on her clit, prompting her to begin bobbing up and down even faster, relishing in the taste and the sensations this new situation brought. As the pair devoured one another in their respective ways, drawing muffled groans and gasps from both fighters, Zangya decided to get a little more daring and, bracing herself, took as much of Gohan’s dick as she could, and deep-throated him.

The act of doing so had Gohan stop and inhale sharply, “Z-Zangya… that’s… great!”

Grunting in response, Zangya continued the same motion for several seconds, slurping up his cock and whatever juices that came out of the tip as her tongue also worked his shaft. Both his taste and his scent were intoxicating, coaxing the Hera to work even harder to get more out of the man she loved. To counter her delightful actions, Gohan hastened his own efforts to help his lover reach her own climax, bringing his fingers up to bury into her snatch and pleasure her thoroughly. Feeling his tongue suckle on her bud and his fingers slide deep inside of her sent bolts of pleasure shooting up her stomach, causing Zangya to pull away prematurely to cry in ecstasy.

“Do you like that?” Gohan asked from below.

Trembling and panting rapidly, Zangya nodded, “Ohh! Y-Yes. Yes. Ah-oh… Gohan… that’s amazing. Ohh!” Her composure and restraints collapsing instantly, the Hera quickly disengaged from her oral work and shuffled her body forward. Turning around so that she could straddle her lover’s hips, the red-faced woman looked down at him with desire and lust burning in her eyes, at the same time she slowly positioned herself over his cock. “I can’t wait any longer, Gohan-kun.”

Hearing her voice carry a small waver of uncertainty and fear, Gohan sat up and gently placed a hand on her cheek. Feeling her hot face shiver beneath his touch, the teen leaned forward to give her a tender, reassuring kiss on the lips, before leaning back with a warm smile. “It’s okay, Zangya. Go ahead. I’ll be gentle.”

His words earned a loving smile from the Hera, who nodded in understanding. Courage reaffirmed, after wrapping her arms around his neck and feeling his hands rest on her hips, Zangya lowered herself onto him. His phallus immediately penetrated her tight walls, filling her and stretching her like nothing ever had before. The invasion drew a scream of pain and pleasure from the blue beauty, and prompted her to latch onto the teen. “Ohhh! G-Gohan… you’re so big!”

“Zangya,” Gohan also panted as the pleasure of feeling his lover clamping down around him filled and overwhelmed his senses. Given that he was inside a woman who was practically the same strength and power as him, the feeling of her gripping him was absolutely sensational. It made the Saiyan lean forward and suckle her neck lovingly, “Relax… it’ll start feeling better soon.”

Nodding silently, Zangya took a few deep breaths, waiting patiently as her vaginal walls loosened and molded around his enormous cock. Once the pain subsided, the woman found herself floating in a sea of pleasure, which had her begin grinding against her partner and causing both of them to moan. However, before the pair could get started, Gohan’s hands trailed down Zangya’s sides and cupped the weight of her full buttocks; holding her in place and making the woman mewl with need.

Her body desperately wanting to feel the warrior moving inside of her as her desire to have him climbed, Zangya grated against the Saiyan weakly as hot, heavy pants left her lips. “Gohan…
please… I want…” the Hera whispered, holding him tighter as she felt him begin rolling his hips, teasing her mercilessly with his light movements. This wasn’t what she wanted.

“What do you want me to do, Zangya?” Gohan asked, using every ounce of self-control he had as he felt the burning walls of the woman’s cavern contract, begging him for more. His Saiyan side, the one that piloted him into battle, was yelling at him—screaming at him to fuck her senseless, to sate the desire burning inside both of them. But what he wanted more than anything else was to hear it from the woman herself, to hear her command him with the same strength he knew her for. It’s what his body demanded. “Tell me.”

At first looking at him with defiance, after several moments of torment, the woman then ran her hands down his back and dug her nails into his skin, moaning when she felt him bury himself just a few millimeters more. “Gohan… I want you to fuck me. Right now!” Zangya ordered, now at her breaking point.

Giving a satisfied grin, Gohan pulled the woman down and thrust into her as deep as he could, impaling the Hera all the way onto his rigid cock.

The result was instantaneous as Zangya threw her head back and gave a loud cry of pleasure, at the same time the man of her dreams quickly set a strong and vigorous pace. As the hybrid began moving the woman up and down on his shaft, simultaneously pushing his hips to meet hers on each descent, the Hera gyrated against him in kind; dropping down every time he thrust into her with his cock. The size of his manhood meant that she felt every inch of him inside of her as he stretched her, sending bolts of pleasure shooting through her body and causing her to moan and cry with every erotic motion.

After a minute of moving in one another’s arms, Zangya suddenly pushed Gohan down onto the bed and, after grinding against his hips, began bouncing up and down on him on her own accord, his hands resting on her hips and helping her move. Seeing the strongest man in the world and the man she loved laid out beneath her, his powerful muscles and torso on full display, had Zangya lick her lips hungrily, as she placed her hands on his abs and began running over them, marveling at their feel. Desperately wanting to taste more of him, she leant over and kissed and licked his skin, feeling his muscles jump under her tongue. Once she did, she then pushed herself back up and started working her hips with verve.

For Gohan, hearing the woman’s screams fill the room, feeling her clench down on him every time he buried himself inside her, and watching her breasts jiggle with every spring, was the hottest and most erotic thing he’d ever seen.

“Uh-uh-oh… Gohan! Yes!” Eyes closed in pleasure and a lustful smile present on her lips, the woman’s mouth hung open as more cries echoed from her throat. When she moved up so that the tip of his cock was barely inside her, she then dropped back down, his phallus penetrating her even deeper, right up to her womb. “Ohh! Kami! I love… having you inside me… inside… my pussy! Uh-uh-oh!” When she felt his hands run up her body to grab her breasts, more moans flowed from her mouth as the Saiyan began kneading them, prompting her to double her efforts. “More! Fill my pussy more! Oh! Please… I want you to fuck me deeper! Ohhh! Don’t stop… don’t ever stop!”

“Okay, Zangya,” Gohan panted, bringing his hands back down to her hips where, after seeing her move up, pulled her back down and thrust into her. This action caused Zangya’s cries to turn into raw screams of pleasure. As she rode him, he thrust back into her, the erotic sounds of their hips connecting and slapping together growing louder and filling the room with the chords of their passionate tryst. Gohan gritted his teeth when he felt Zangya grind against him, “Kami, you’re so tight, Zangya. I can feel your pussy sucking me in!”
“Oh, yes! That’s it! Fuck me harder, Gohan! Oh! Ohh!” Zangya cried out, the hands she had on his chest giving her the purchase she needed to move in time with Gohan’s hips as his dick plunged into her depths, hitting her womb on every descent. Seeing his herculean form thrusting back into her as his muscles moved to give him motion, turned Zangya on even more and had her gazing down at him with want. “Ohhh! You’re going to split me in two! Uh-uh! Oh, fuck! Do it faster! Harder!”

“Do you like that, Zangya?” Gohan asked, his hands repeatedly pulling Zangya down as her full breasts bounced in front of him, her dark blue nipples moving up and down hypnotically, “Do you like riding me as I fuck you?”

“Yes… Yes! I love it! Don’t stop! Keep fucking me!” she screamed, almost hoarse from pleasure as she felt each thrust from the Saiyan seemingly bury even deeper than the last. It was during this period the orange haired beauty then felt a familiar pressure building and gasped out in between breaths, “Oh… oh fuck, Gohan! So good! You’re so fucking good! Uh-uh! I… I’m going to cum!”

“Let it go, Zangya,” Gohan whispered, encouraging her as he moved his hands to cup her firm ass. “Just… uh… let yourself go.”

Consumed by the wild passion of their love making, time seemed to slow towards Zangya’s impending release. Then, after several more seconds of feeling Gohan’s natural spear power into her, the woman threw her head back in a cry of elation, “Fuck! S-So deep! I…I’m gonna cum! Ohh, I’M GONNA FUCKING CUUUUUMMM! AAAAAHHHHHHH!” The girl’s back arched as she hit her euphoric high with a surge of electricity, insides erupting into wild convulsions as a white hot fire hit every nerve ending in her body, at the same time bursts of brilliant colors filled her eyes.

It was heaven.

Feeling Zangya tighten around him and her inner walls pulsing almost pushed Gohan over the edge as well, as he sat up and wrapped his arms around the girl’s waist and buried his head into her bosom. Allowing her to ride out her orgasm for several seconds, Gohan then felt Zangya lift his head up with her chin, where he found himself staring into the flushed and excited face of his lover.

Eyes reflecting passion as her breaths came out hot and heavy, the Hera then leaned over and passionately took Gohan’s lips in hers, their tongues dancing in a heated battle for dominance. After practically devouring one another’s mouths and clawing at one another hungrily, Gohan then set Zangya onto her back. Remaining connected, the Saiyan got up onto his knees and, gripping his lover by the hips, proceeded to thrust in and out of the girl at a rapid pace.

Head lolling back into the mattress as a new series of passionate shouts left her mouth, Zangya’s fingers gripped the sheets to the point of tearing them when she felt Gohan plow into her from above. His hips snapping into her with wild abandon caused the Hera’s body to shift back and forth repeatedly as he plunged into her over and over again. Keeping her lower back and hips off the bed while her upper body was pushed into the sheets, Gohan leant forward and began hitting her even deeper, causing Zangya to holler out even more when she felt him hit her sweet spot.

“Ah! AAHHH! Fuck! Gohan! Oh! Ohh! So good! So fucking good!” Zangya felt so full, as with every stroke his thick member reached all the way to her back, pounding against her entrance and sending all sorts of wonderful sensations washing through her system. Kami, he was better than she’d ever imagined and, from the way he was taking her, pounding her the way he was, she was in absolute bliss.
She wanted more and, with her body acting on its own accord, began moving to meet his thrusts, rocking into his pelvis as it slammed into her.

“Oh… so good… you feel so good, Zangya,” Gohan panted, quickly grabbing her leg and, without even breaking their connection, rolled her onto her front.

When Zangya felt her chest and stomach press into the sheets, the woman gleefully looked up at him, “Yes, Gohan… take me like this!” With her body lying flat out on the bed and the Saiyan positioned directly behind her on the back of her legs in the tight squeeze position, she then felt Gohan begin plunging into her from a new angle, causing her to sit up on her arms and arch her back in joy. “OH, FUCK! YES! OHHH! THAT’S IT… RIGHT THERE! AAAAAH! AHH! YES! POUND ME!”

With his own blood boiling with sexual energy, Gohan knew it wouldn’t be long before he reached his end too, yet he soldiered on. Heavy drops of perspiration ran down his back as the musky aroma of sex filled his nostrils with every breath. The vocal encouragement of his lover, topped with the feel of her moist canal pulsating around his cock, pushed him towards his climax and he joyfully savored the feeling of fucking the blue beauty from behind. He admired the way her hot, tight body moved in time with his own, as with every slap of his pelvis caused the full cheeks of her luscious rump to ripple from the force and her back to arch in pleasure.

From the position he was in, plowing into her and utterly dominating her body, it gave him a sense of wonder and enjoyment he’d never felt before. It was almost primal.

Several minutes later, Zangya felt her limit fast approaching and gasped out in bliss, “Uh-uh! Gohan… I’m cu-cumming again!”

“M-Me too,” Gohan said between thrusts, his hips snapping faster and faster. Deciding to get a better angle, the Saiyan reached forward and, wrapping his arms around her, lifted her up so that she was on her knees and sitting in his lap, allowing him to thrust up into her. With his hands cupping her breasts from behind, squeezing and massaging them as he sped up his assault, the teen coaxed a new round of delightful yells from the woman. “So close.”

“UH! AHHHH! YES! OHHH! GOHAN… FILL ME! SPRAY YOUR HOT CUM INSIDE ME! OOHHH! ALMOST… THERE! OH! FUCK ME! YES! FUCK ME!” Zangya begged, feeling Gohan’s right hand grope her breast while his left suddenly snaked down and started rubbing her clit. The act of doing so was all it took to send her into a frenzy and, eyes widening and head flying back, Zangya came in a gush of hot steamy fluid and a scream of ecstasy, “OHHH FUCK YEEEEESSSSSS! I’M CUMMIIING! AAAAAAAAHHHHHHH!”

When she came, her pussy tightening around his cock like a vice, Gohan came too. Shutting his eyes and giving a loud groan, the Saiyan came inside her, his balls tightening almost painfully as a tide of thick seed erupted from his manhood and flooded her core.

His dick pulsed inside of her, spurting several jets of semen into his lover as he held her tightly and felt her body twitch and tremble in his grip. Once the euphoria of their respective orgasms finally passed and the tidal wave of pleasure finished crashing down around them, the two panting lovers snuggled against one another, at the same time feeling the sweat of their passions trickle down their numb and throbbing bodies.

Chests heaving as they took huge lungfuls of air, Zangya gazed back at her partner groggily and, after looking into his deep charcoal eyes, reached over with her arm, wrapped it around his head, and pulled him in for a deep, sloppy kiss. Their tongues intertwining in gratitude, she then pulled away with a gasp.
“That was… incredible,” Zangya whispered.

Gohan grinned, “Is this how you imagined your first time would be?”

The girl shook her head, “Even better.”

Chuckling, the demi-Saiyan then looked down as he felt Zangya’s pussy squeeze him a couple of times, coaxing him back to full length. “I came a lot. Aren’t you a little worried that, you know…?”

“Don’t worry. It was a safe day.” Zangya beamed as one hand rubbed his cheek while the other rested over her stomach. “Not that I wouldn’t mind it.”

Sharing a loving smile with her, Gohan was about to kiss her a second time until the sounds of more moaning and cries drew their attention forward. When the pair looked across the bed, they saw the other two members of their foursome engaged in their own delightful foray.

While Gohan and Zangya had been busy pleasuring one another and enjoying the feel each other’s bodies, Erasa had pulled Videl into a scissoring position and, straddling one another’s legs, were now wantonly grinding their pussies against their partner in a salacious display of desire and passion. Both girls gasped and moaned avidly as they set a fast tempo, sweat dripping down their hot bodies as they ground against the other girl in a carnal tryst.

As the two girls made love, Erasa couldn’t help but glance out of the corner of her eye and smile when she caught sight of the other two watching them, both wide-eyed and overwhelmed with excitement and arousal.

Wanting Gohan to enjoy the show as much as she was, Erasa moved forward and laid Videl onto her back, to which she quickly took control and began rocking her hips into her friend’s. The way she was positioned made her clitoris bump against Videl’s, causing them to gasp in sexily as a shudder of pleasure rippled through them. Feeling a pressure building in her once again prompted Erasa to increase her speed, groaning loudly as she repeatedly thrust her burning entrance into her best friend.

Not caring that the blonde was being the dominant one, Videl arched her back and cried out, her head shaking back and forth as her body moved in time with her friend’s thrusts. “Ohhh yeah! Erasa! Do me… ohhhh! Do me faster! Ohhhhhh! Oh God… DO ME FASTER!”

“Uhhhh… okay…” Erasa replied, having trouble talking due to her own heavy breathing and moaning, “I’ll do you… uuhhh… faster! Ohhhh! Fuck!”

As requested, Erasa sped up her assault, increasing the pace of her thrusts as her hips slammed into her best friend with vigor and aggression, causing the raven haired angel’s body to rock back and forth and her breasts to jiggle even wilder. The bolts of pleasure surging through them had the pair holler in sheer delight, Videl responding to the blonde’s thrusts by moving her hips to meet hers midway as Erasa pounded her pussy with everything she had. Soon enough, the heat from their venereal exchange reached its inevitable breaking point.

“Oooh… oh… Erasa… I’m gonna… I’m gonna…”

“Videl… oh fuck… I’m cumming again… I’m…”

Grinding her pussy against Erasa’s as she felt the woman plow into her one last time, the pressure in Videl’s stomach finally burst as she arched her back towards the ceiling in ecstasy. “AAAHHHHHHH! YEESSS! ERASAAAAAAAA!” the girl wailed as a wall of pleasure came crashing down around her and a blast of hot fluid burst from her nether regions.

“OHHHHHHHHHH! VIDEL! FUCK! OHHHH!!” Erasa also cried out, her body bucking into her best friend’s as she also came in a tidal wave of euphoria.

Their bodies seemed to spasm for several seconds as the hot, electrical sensations of their orgasms ripped through their insides. Once it ended, Videl collapsed into the sheets, while an equally exhausted Erasa shakily managed to hold her ground. Upon removing herself from between her friend’s legs, the blonde crawled over her lover’s numb body and, seeing her pretty mouth wide open, leaned in and gave her a long kiss of appreciation. Upon which she then turned her attention to Gohan and crawled her way over.

Knowing what was to come, Zangya moved out of the way just in time to see Erasa slide her way up Gohan’s body and snake her arms around his neck. Pressing her ample bosom into his chest while she straddled his hips, the girl gazed longingly into his eyes. “I hope you’ve saved enough energy for me.”

Gohan beamed as his hands ran down her sides to her hips, “Don’t worry. I’ve got plenty.”

Face lit up with excitement, the blonde then leaned up and captured the boy’s lips in a searing kiss. Her soft hands moving over his muscular shoulders and down his back, sending shivers throughout his entire body, Erasa circled her tongue around his, moaning when his hips jumped up to meet hers. Feeling his manhood rubbing against her entrance, the blonde responded by pushing against him more aggressively, rubbing her hips against his lap to work the boy into a frenzy. When she heard a groan of pleasure leave his lips and felt his hands move to cup the full cheeks of her ass and keep her in place, she knew she had him.

Floundering in a rising tide of desire, Gohan then felt Erasa’s mouth leave his to run a trail of kisses down his jaw and neck, where she bit into the skin playfully. Upon which she then slid silkily off of his lap and began moving down his chest, her hands marveling at his hard muscles as they jumped and tightened under her feathery touch.

The feelings and desires Erasa began stirring inside Gohan was almost maddening. As much as the young Saiyan wanted to take her right then and there, to throw her onto the bed, ravage her and have his way with her, he just couldn’t bring himself to stop the blonde vixen as her hands and lips sensually worked their way down his body.

When Erasa finally arrived at the juncture between his legs, the blonde stopped and threw a wolfish grin up at the young man, whom she could see was panting with excitement. Feeling her own desires raging, the blonde then reached down and gripped Gohan’s throbbing manhood in her hand.

“Mmmm… Gohan… you’re so hard,” she purred as she sensually stroked the man from base to head. Her gaze fixating upon him in a lustful trance, the blue eyed girl then leaned forward, her full lips parting as her small tongue darted out to lick the bulbous crown. This action drew a loud groan from Gohan, encouraging Erasa to concentrate on this action as she swirled her tongue around his engorged member, lathering up and down his length before sucking the tip into her mouth.

“Ohh… Erasa!” Gohan groaned, eyes shutting tight as he felt the head of his cock become engulfed by Erasa’s hot wet orifice, her plush lips squeezing him tightly. Once her mouth settled over him, the blonde’s tongue slithered out to按摩 the underside of his shaft, before she earnestly began to suckle. Erasa moaned sweetly as her hand stroked the base of his organ while her head bobbed up and down, taking more of him in with every descent.
Relaxing her throat, Erasa took as much of his dick into her mouth as she could. The torrent of groans that flowed out of Gohan only seemed to excite her further as she slid back up to his pulsating tip before plunging back down, repeating this action over and over as she deep-throated him.

Caught up in the moment, Gohan moved his hands into the girl’s hair and rubbed her head gently, causing Erasa to look up at him approvingly as her hand and mouth worked him even harder. It was then the Saiyan noticed her breasts. Though she almost never wore a bra due to her regular choice of clothing, Erasa’s cleavage was full and bouncy, and jiggled every dip of her head. They were definitely larger than Videl’s and Zangya’s, but not so much that they appeared comical or artificial. They were perfect and, as much as he tried to contain himself, he couldn’t help but become mesmerized by them.

Reaching down, Gohan cupped one of the girl’s large breasts and kneaded it. When he did, he felt Erasa pull her mouth away from his cock and, after giving a soft moan, leered up at the boy. She then teasingly swayed her tits from side to side and bounced them on her hands. “Do you want them?” When she saw him nod the blonde then leaned forward and slipped his cock into her bountiful cleavage. Squeezing her orbs around his pulsating shaft, Erasa dipped down and enveloped the head of his cock in her mouth.

As she suckled the weeping head, Erasa began sliding her chest up and down, massaging his thick organ and timing it with the rhythm of her bobbing head.

Overcome by the torturous pleasure, Gohan quickly felt the familiar pressure building quickly at the base of his cock, “Oh! Fuck! Erasa! Nhh! Your breasts feel amazing!”

Moaning around his mouth, Erasa sped up her ministrations, feeling her own loins pulse with excitement as she continued to devour his delicious length. She was determined to please the boy and make this night a memorable one for them both. As much as he was trying to suppress it, she could feel his orgasm approaching, as his cock twitched between her lips.

“Oh Kami! Suck it, Erasa… oh… so close…” Gohan’s pleasure-filled words had Erasa’s heart racing and aroused her further.

In her mind she imagined him spraying his seed all over her face, marking her as his with his hot cum, just like in her fantasies. But at the same time her hunger for him was unyielding and she wanted to taste him.

One last, long suck was all that it took to finally shatter Gohan’s restraint, a loud yell filling the room as his seed exploded into Erasa’s mouth in long ropes. Moaning when she felt her lover hit his peak, she then felt the Saiyan grab the back of her head and pull her further down onto his cock, allowing her to gulp down every drop of his thick, tasty cream. Once the boy had finished firing, Erasa pulled her mouth away from his phallus, gasping as she looked up at her lover.

“Mmm… you’re delicious,” Erasa purred, savoring his flavor while leaning down to lick the remainder off of his dick. It was then she noticed to her delight that he was still rock hard, which had her take one last, long slurp of his shaft and position herself onto her knees. Without an ounce of hesitation, she carefully straddled his waist, aligned herself over his rigid cock, and plunged right down onto it, causing her to cry out in pain.

It hurt. His dick was inside her so fast that it sent a white hot pain shooting through her loins and up her body, causing Erasa to seize the boy’s shoulders and bury her nails into his skin. Heart thudding loudly in her chest, the blonde looked up through her haze to see Gohan staring at her in concern. Bringing a hand up to her cheek, he then leant in and kissed her deeply, drawing a soft moan from her as he ran his other hand down her waist.

When he pulled away, he whispered, “You okay?”

“Y-Yeah… I’m okay,” Erasa hissed back, moving a bit as she attuned to the feeling of his dick inside her. He felt so hard and impossibly large, unlike anything she’d ever felt before. Not even her fingers could compare to the sensation the boy was now stirring inside her. So she sat there, waiting for the pain to subside and for her pussy to adjust to his presence.

“Don’t try to push yourself,” Gohan said, tentatively running a hand through her gorgeous, golden hair as he beamed into her tear-strung eyes. “The last thing I want to do is hurt you.”

Feeling her chest swell at his words, Erasa beamed lovingly and leaned forward to nip at his nose. “You’re so sweet.” She then leaned in and kissed him tenderly on the lips. The combination of emotion and reassurance helping to quell the flare from the initial entry, the girl then moved back and started shifting her hips slowly and teasingly. “Alright… you can move now, Gohan-kun.”

Giving an understanding nod, the raven haired Saiyan then seized the girl by her narrow waist and started to move, her first descent drawing a loud shriek from the blonde as he started to bounce her up and down on his shaft.

“Oh! Gohan! Ohh! You’re so big!” Erasa cried out, closing her eyes as she enjoyed the dick that was inside her. Pushing him down onto the bed and placing her hands on his delicious abs, she then began to ride and bounce on him on her own accord, meeting each of his thrusts as he worked his hips into her. The strength of his motions increased when he gripped her buttocks and helped pull her down, matching his timing and drawing even more heavenly sounds from the girl as they made sweet love to each other. “Mm, yeah baby, keep it up… like that!”

Noticing her breasts bouncing up and down hypnotically, Gohan, unable to resist the temptation, sat up and captured the enormous orbs in his hands, burying his face into her right breast as his tongue flicked out to tease the pink bud. When he caught her nipple between his lips and suckled on it, he new chorus of passionate cries from Erasa filled the air as the blonde ground her hips against his even harder.

“Ahh! Kami! Gohan! Th-That feels so good!” Erasa bellowed in delight as she felt Gohan switch between her breasts, lavishing attention on them equally.

As the two of them fucked, they absently noticed Zangya and Videl kneeling a couple feet away, the raven haired girl positioned behind the Hera, arms wrapped around her, and massaging and squeezing her tits with both hands. At the same time, the orange haired alien was making out with the raven haired beauty, moaning and gasping into her mouth.

“Mmm, Videl… ohh…” Zangya murmured, her tongue looping around her friend’s and her lips sucking on it with need. While she was distracted, she suddenly felt one of the girl’s hands leave her breasts to tantalizingly slide down her stomach and over her pussy, before her fingers slipped inside of her with ease. Feeling Videl working her nether regions had Zangya cry out in delight, “Ohh! Fuck yes! Uhh! More…”

The sight of Zangya and Videl playing with each other turned the other couple on even more; Erasa starting to grind against Gohan even more while he massaged and sucked her tits. After a few minutes of passionate gyrating and feeling the other’s body working against her own, the blonde then suddenly slid off of her partner and turned around. Positioning herself on all fours, the horny blonde stuck her ass out and swung it side-to-side enticingly. “Come on, Gohan-kun. Fuck me doggy style,” Erasa purred lewdly, her eyes molten with desire as she gave the Saiyan the most inviting look imaginable.

Too aroused to say no, Gohan quickly got behind Erasa and, seizing her slender waist, stepped through and in one fierce motion, slid every inch of his rock hard cock into her moist channel, right up to the hilt.

“AAAAaahhhhh! Sweet Kami!” Erasa shrieked, feeling her body shudder and her pussy tighten when his impossibly long shaft all but ripped her in two. A white flash filled her eyes followed by a series of spots as the gaping blonde panted before her trembling arms gave way and put her face onto the mattress. Drool leaking out of her mouth, Erasa looked back at her lover in amazement. “He made me cum… just by putting it in.”

Sensing the girl’s orgasm pass, Gohan leant forward with a smile. “You alright, Erasa?”

“Y-Yeah,” Erasa replied breathlessly, before slowly forcing herself back onto her hands. Pushing back against the boy and feeling his cock reach in even further, the still incredibly excited blonde then spoke in a commanding voice, “Now fuck me. Fuck me with everything you have, Gohan-kun.”

Happy to follow her demand, the grinning Gohan pulled his hips back, drawing his member out to the tip, before snapping his waist back in, setting a fierce tempo as he began to fuck the blonde beauty from behind.

Unprepared for the fresh assault, Erasa’s mouth opened in a loud wail of ecstasy as she felt the boy’s cock begin plunging in and out of her core, rocking not only her body but also the bed beneath them. In all her life she’d never felt anything like this; the fullness of his cock inside her, the static pleasure of his enormous shaft massaging her insides, and the force… oh, it was divine. Wanting to feel even more of these wonderful sensations, the girl quickly responded to his assault by moving back into her lover, rocking her hips in time with the thrusting of Gohan’s enormous cock.

“Oh Kami! Yes… yes… fuck me! Ohhh! Fuck me harder! Ohh! Harder!” Erasa shouted, pleading for her boyfriend to give it to her.

An involuntary growl left Gohan’s throat as he felt Erasa’s plush, inner-walls begin suckling his shaft, begging him to go deeper. “O-Okay! Ahh… I’ll fuck you, uhh, harder!” Doing as he was instructed, he drew back from her warmth only to slam back into it once more, doing so again and again till Erasa and the bed were shaking. The sound of hips slapping filled the room with the chorus of their lustful acts.

Their movements quickly became synchronized; when Erasa rocked forward, Gohan would move back, before thrusting after her and impaling the girl to his base. Their passion and excitement climbing, the pair picked up the pace, consumed by the wild fervor of their steamy tryst. Time seemed to slow for them as their hips slammed together, their intensity growing as Gohan’s groans became more wolfish and Erasa’s moans became more high-pitched, promising the arrival of a mind-blowing climax.

“Ah! Ahh! Ah! Go-han! Fuck! Ohh! So good! So good!” Erasa blabbed as Gohan’s hips snapped into her with long, deep strokes, causing her arms to fail her and put her on her elbows. “Ohh… Gohan-kun… I… I love you!”

“Ahh… I love… you too, Erasa,” Gohan moaned, grabbing her hips tightly as he rocked her in time with his motions. It felt so good inside her; so hot and tight, and he could feel her walls vibrating around his shaft, molding to his every entry. As his tail whipped around behind him, Gohan couldn’t help but marvel at the way the girl responded to his moves.

“Oohhyessss… Gohan, right there! Don’t stop! Don’t stop! Uhh! You’re… you’re going to make me cum!” Erasa panted. By this point the air was thick and heavy with the musky scent of sex and the sounds of wet slapping of flesh meeting flesh was all too prominent. The pressure in her stomach building once again like lava, the blonde moaned loudly as she felt the very walls of her spirit about to give way. “UH-UH-OH! GOHAN! GOHAN! YES! YES! YEEEEEEEESSSSSS-OOOOOHHHHH!” His last jab sent her into an erotic fit as Erasa cried out with rapturous joy, her back arching, her pussy squeezing tightly around his cock, and her body twitching with an orgasmic convulsion.

Seeing Erasa collapse onto the bed had Gohan pause for a moment. After feeling her second orgasm subside, he then quickly rekindled his prior passion, and continued fucking her. Pulling out, he rammed back into the blonde with force, causing Erasa to arch back with a shriek of delight. Grunting, he set a new pace as he began pounding her with long, fluid strokes, which had Erasa rocking and grinding against him lewdly.

“AHH! AH! AHH! AHHH! YES!” Erasa cried out in ecstasy, drool leaving her lips as her body moved to meet Gohan’s and tightening around his swollen arousal as he quickly propelled her to another release. “UH-UH! GOHAN! YES! FUCK ME! FUCK ME! HARDER! HARDER! YESSS!” From the way he was taking her right there on the bed, she knew she was becoming addicted.

This feeling went beyond just plain sex. Gohan was filling her like nothing ever had before, fulfilling and satisfying her way more than any of her own fantasies ever could. Thanks to her string of orgasms, she could feel every minimal movement of his cock inside her. His motions were dominating but considerate, he was rough but also restrained, and he was claiming her while worshipping her at the same time, just like he did Videl and Zangya. In the end, she was glad… thrilled to have had her first time with such an amazing man.

Gohan held nothing back; feeling his limit fast approaching as he relished in the sounds of Erasa’s pleasure driven mewling and the sight of her ass rippling under each of his thrusts. Adding some more power to his movements, Gohan leant forward, molding his chest with her back while his hands ran up Erasa’s toned stomach to grasp her large, swinging tits. Roughly kneading them in his hands and pinching the nipples for good measure, the Saiyan drew even louder wails from the blonde. The sensation was incredible; she was hot, tight and slick with longing, drawing him in every time his pelvis slapped against her succulent rump.

“OOohhh Kami! So… so deep… ohh… so good! K-Keep fucking me, Gohan! Harder! Harder! Yes, yes, yes, YESSSS!” Erasa cried senselessly, her head rearing back as her eyes glazed over.

“I’m going to cum, Erasa,” Gohan grunted between thrusts, feeling Erasa’s pussy begin to convulse.

“Inside,” Erasa gasped, looking back as she felt Gohan’s thrusting intensify. “Cum inside me, Gohan-kun! Make me pregnant with your thick cum!” After several more thrusts, the blonde was finally pushed over the edge and, with a wail of finality, cried out as she came. “OHH! FUCK!! GOHAAAAAN! AAAAAAALHAAAAHAAAAHHH!” The erratic spasms of her inner walls helped the Saiyan reach his end too, their combined howls filling the room as he filled Erasa’s insides to the brim with his sperm.

Erasa felt her eyes roll into the back of her head as her pussy milked him of his essence, her insides boiling as she felt his cum slosh around inside her and a little bit dribble out. Seconds later, the blonde’s world went black and she collapsed onto the bed, with Gohan carefully laying her down.
Erasa’s eyes blinked open as she slowly regained consciousness, allowing a few extra seconds for her vision to clear and light to return to them. When it did, she became vaguely aware of the world around her shifting, a shadow hanging over her, and a rather pleasant feeling of something hot rubbing up against her. Upon looking up to see what was causing these anomalies, the blonde recoiled in surprise when she saw a sweaty Videl lying on top of her, poised on her hands and knees, and her breasts rubbing against hers as she was moving back and forth in a metronome-like fashion.

It was only until seconds later that Erasa realized her best friend was being fucked from behind by Gohan, whom she saw had positioned her on top of her and was stimulating both her and Erasa in a completely new position. What’s more, Videl’s mouth was currently being occupied by Zangya, the blue bombshell kneeling in front of the raven haired girl with her pussy in her and Erasa’s faces, and being passionately licked and devoured by the crime fighter.

Realizing that all of her lovers were locked in an entanglement of carnal lust and passion, Erasa soon started moaning as well, as the feeling of Videl’s breasts rubbing against hers and Gohan plunging into his girlfriend from behind was stimulating her as well. Grinding her body and rocking her pussy into Videl’s, where she could clearly feel Gohan’s cock and hips slamming into them, the blonde’s panting soon turned into cries and moans of renewed delight, as she felt herself quickly being pushed towards another orgasm.

Wanting more, the blonde shimmied down and buried her face into Videl’s tits, capturing a nipple in her mouth while her hand groped and fondled the other, squeezing it as her hand trailed down to finger herself.

Their moans and groans echoed throughout the room as the four made love together, Gohan gripping Videl’s hips tightly while Zangya fondled and massaged her breasts, pinching her nipples in excitement as she cried out shamelessly.

“Oh, Videl! Gohan! Ah-ah-ohh… I can’t anymore…” the Hera babbled as she felt Videl’s tongue swirling around inside her. “Ahh! Ah! I-I’m gonna cum!”

“M-Me too!” Gohan also panted, his hips snapping into Videl’s at a fierce tempo, filling the room with the sounds of flesh hitting flesh as the force of his thrusts rippled through her pert buttocks. “Oh… so tight…”,

Disengaging from her oral play, Videl also cried out. “OOHH! KAMI! AH! AAAAAH! FUCK! I’M CUMMING!”

“I-I’M C-CUMMING TOO!” Erasa called out, clutching the raven haired girl as she arched her back into her body in ecstasy, her pussy tightening around her fingers, “OH! OHHHHH! YEEEEEEEHSSSSS!”

“GOHAAAN! OOOOOH FUCK! AAAAAAAAAAH!” Videl cried out, her face pushing into Zangya’s pussy as the Hera also came.

“OOHHH! VIDEL! OOOOOHHHHH!!” the Hera cried, one hand gripping her lover’s head while the other gripped her breast.

The four youngsters wailed out in orgasmic bliss as they climaxed together, Gohan letting loose his load inside Videl while the girls drenched one another in their hot fluids. Once the trembling and the writhing from their respective ends finally ceased, the group collapsed onto the bed in a heap of post-coital bliss, surrounded by the ruffled sheets of the bed and the damp areas of sweat, sex and perspiration.

(End Lemon)

Panting as he lay there on the blanket, Gohan soon felt a pair of bodies snuggle up against him, along with a third. Looking down, he saw the hot, naked bodies of Videl and Erasa curled up on either side of him, while an equally satisfied Zangya had crawled on top of and was now lying with her chin on his chest. All of them smiling tiredly, the demi-Saiyan returned their loving and warm expressions with one of his own.

“I love you girls,” he whispered hoarsely, wrapping his strong arms around the three as he felt their hands roam tentatively over his torso.

“I love you too, Gohan,” Videl whispered, rubbing her stomach from the warmth inside of her as she kissed and nibbled the Saiyan’s neck affectionately.

“Me too,” Erasa chirped, running her hand up his sexy abs.

“You were amazing, stud,” Zangya said, giving a soft moan as she embedded herself onto Gohan’s still hard erection.

Groaning when he felt the girl slip his manhood inside her, the demi-Saiyan looked up at the Hera in amusement, “You want to keep going?” His answer was Zangya giving him a deep and tender kiss, while Videl and Erasa’s hands started exploring his and her body with a little more enthusiasm.

The tired but still willing and excited Hera replied in earnest, “Oh yeah. For the whole night.” Zangya then gave him a sly, challenging grin, “That is… unless you can’t.” She then shrieked and laughed when Gohan suddenly flipped them over, leaving the blue beauty lying flat out beneath him, her breasts pressing into his chest and his manhood buried deep inside her pussy.

His own eyes reflecting eagerness and excitement spurred on by the Zangya’s teasing, the half-Saiyan hero smirked down at his lover, “Challenge accepted.” When the Hera giggled, he then leant forward and captured her lips in a searing kiss, her giggles transforming into moans of pleasure as Gohan then kissed Videl and Erasa, who crawled over to make out with the man.

Soon, more groans and cries began echoing out of the small mountain home and over the hills, a chorus that rang all throughout the night and into the earliest hours of the morning.

By the time they were done and their passions had finally subsided, the four lovers wound up snuggling together under the sheets of the bed, sleeping safely in the arms of the ones they loved most.

(END)

Author’s Note: GOHAN, MY BOY! YEAH!

Anyway that’s another chapter down and another series wrapped up. I tend to write my arcs in seasons, so this chapter is an epilogue to a series of arcs, so I can have a rest in between posts to catch up on other stuff.
Now I can decide whether to continue posting on this story or split it up and create a new story continuing Legacies.

On a serious note, I really did let myself go when writing this chapter. I measured this out to be about eighteen pages of lemon, so, there you go. I know a lot of you were looking forward to this chapter, so I’ve given it to you with interest.

Just so you know, I plan on replacing this with a censored version in a couple of days, so whoever gets to this first, good on yah. For all those looking for the uncensored versions, find my profile on Archive of Your Own. Both ‘Long Night’ and this chapter, as well as all future stories with heavy lemons will be there.

Anyhow, I just want to wrap this up with a brief foreword.

I wrote Dragonball Z: Legacies because of my disapproval and disgust of how Gohan has been treated in the Dragonball Z franchise after the Cell Games. He’s been beaten down, robbed of his character, and shamelessly pushed out of the limelight to join the plethora of other irrelevant characters in Dragonball, including Tien, Yamcha, Videl, Choutzu, Bra, Uub, Launch, Android 18, Krillin and so on and so forth, with most of the episodes being handed over to Goku, Vegeta, and characters I consider products of Dragonball Z’s marketing.

It is clear that I am not a big fan of Dragonball Super (or the two new movies for that matter). In fact I hate them with a passion and am not afraid to admit it. It’s like the author is trying to redesign Dragonball to be more like One Piece and other Shonen shows, which really explains why he’s brought back a bunch of previously forgotten and forgetful characters from Dragonball, and has Vegeta and Piccolo acting like Zoro and Sanji respectively, when they clearly never have previously. What’s more a lot of the storylines don’t add up and, even though Godly ki was hyped up to be this universe bending element in the show, thanks to the recent episodes with Mirai Trunks and Zamasu, it’s now just become a useless gimmick. Power scaling doesn’t matter anymore, even though the author showed how formidable God characters could be at the very beginning of Super and in Battle of Gods, where a single tap from a character with Godly ki could immobilize a Super Saiyan 3 character. No matter how much you try to argue, that shit makes no sense.

It makes the fanfictions created by the fans of the Dragonball Z show more canon than Dragonball Super is, and I send this compliment out to all Dragonball Z writers and fans out there. Keep soldiering on.

The original Dragonball Z harkens back to the comic books and anime of old that I enjoyed when I was younger, including Slayers, Ranma, Astro Boy, and even the classic movies from the eighties, including Star Wars, Terminator, Star Trek and Flash Gordon. You can see bits and pieces of their inspiration littering all of Dragonball Z. Goku’s arrival on Earth being an inspiration from Superman, the androids and Cell being inspired by Terminator, and more. They even had villains whose motivations were clear.

My intentions for this story were to bring the world back to the Dragonball Z we know and give Gohan the story he deserves, with epic fights, a big universe, multiple love interests and terrifying villains. I always imagine the most graphic and epic fights to include into the story, and imagine how they would translate to screen, which is why I always try to vividly capture them as best as I can, though I do tend to go overboard.

Anyhow, I hope you guys enjoyed this chapter and hope to see you in the next one.
Please drop by the archive and comment to let the author know if you enjoyed their work!