No one even bothered to write down that poor fuck's name. They all just called her Hornless, and soon they stopped even calling her that.

History gets revised all the time. And the Condesce has had centuries to master the art of being the victor.

The pace keeps escalating, and after a certain point Karkat stops remembering to be terrified and is just slicing and diving and stabbing and each call is closer, a heel that cracks stone barely missing the chance to crush the bones of his finger into powder, a stab that should take Dave's head off going wide because Karkat flings himself on the other end as a counterweight.

And all the while the Condesce is a whirling dervish. She can't somersault out of the way of their attacks sometimes, when avoiding them would have been the logical thing to do, and it's only then Karkat realizes she can't - her horns force her to stay constantly upright, but it's no impediment when a single blow from her hand or specibus can toss them fifteen feet back, when she starts to catch onto their movements and holds up the trident with both hands to block a Dave that only arrives five seconds later, when she can jump so high they can only scramble out from under her shadow, when she keeps speeding up so that it's nonstop, her turning to strike Karkat's sickle so hard his wrist goes numb, continuing in a circle to sweep Dave's feet out from under him with the trident, turning again to knock Karkat across the face with her foot while without looking she catches the swordkind and spins the whole culling fork with a twist of her hand so that the blade goes skittering away along the ground and onto the nearest dock.

The time it takes Dave to flash over and retrieve it is enough time for Karkat, alone, to block the trident tines coming down at his head - and feel the Condesce's shin catch him hard in the side, kicking him almost the same way the sword went. Dave catches him and they both tumble backwards, by some providence not kneeling each other in the stomach when a machine terminal provides an impromptu wall for them to slam into.

"Goddammit. S'it -“ Dave pants, "just me - or is she - hitting harder?" He gulps, and finishes, "Can we - just grab Peixes Minor - and run?"

They hear the clicking, rattling screech-roar at the same time, and Dave thumps his head back against the terminal. "Well, that one - was my fault."

Karkat doesn't even have the spare energy to agree with him. Everything in him is currently directed towards not jittering out of his skin as the Condesce turns to meet Feferi. The younger Peixes might have recovered from her stunned condition, but she's still the worse for the wear, tears streaking her cheeks as she shrieks and tries to slash at the Condesce with her 2x3dent nowhere to be seen, presumably left abandoned over by the shipping crate. The two of them start fighting again with a vengeance, slowly making their way down the pier toward Karkat and Dave's sprawled position.

Feferi's still fighting wild, eyes glassy and edged with something either horror-fuchsia or madness-red, which means now Dave and Karkat are going to have to fight around her again. When the Condesce seizes her by the throat and lifts her with one hand, Feferi just gurgle-screams some more, totally beyond words as she starts kicking the Condesce in the gut from the convenient height. Karkat crawls off Dave and pulls himself up on the dented machine terminal, swaying against his will before he catches himself and forces his spine straight. His muscles want to ache with the drain of trying to toe-to-toe in close combat with someone who is probably the world's pintsize heavyweight champion of close combat. He can't tell if what's keeping him going is adrenaline, fear for his fucking life, or sheer bloody mindedness.

Probably all three. "Up. Round - whatever the fuck round it is," he orders, peeling his eyes away from the two fighting trolls and letting a sickle melt away to hold his claws out and twitches his claws. It's a pretty lackluster order, but Dave groans and takes his hand and lets himself be pulled back onto his feet. "Round -"

He doesn't finish.
The crack tips his stomach sideways, the sickening sound of bone crunching with cold silence lingering too still in the air, and Karkat flinches because when things break it's generally him breaking, but there's no pain.

Feferi, on the other hand, looks utterly blank. He feels like his whole body's turned weightless, his head turning in slow motion to catch her eyes and see the exact moment she dies, her chin twisted up and around and lolling over her shoulder with the wrongest of angles, the bone of her snapped neck taut under grey skin, only the faintest surprise on her stunned face.

Oh

_________god.

"Oh fuck fuck fuck fuck fuck fuck-

"This better glubbin' work," the Condesce says, distant through the throb in Karkat's ear. She kneels and dumps Feferi over the edge of the dock, holding her descendant's limp head under the surface with her arm stretched as far as it can go, looking annoyed. Like snapping her descendant's neck and playing with the corpse like a bath toy is a major inconvenience for her. "C'mon, we don't have all day. I'll give you to the count of fishteen to snapperfish out of it -"

At 'one,' Dave tackles the Condescension and knocks them both sprawling, the Condesce baring teeth and screaming in frustration as she brings her heels up and kicks Dave off her.

And while Dave charges back up only a second later, one copy of him still flying back to crash into a computer terminal while the other drives the Condesce back along the line of the pier, Feferi is slipping off the edge of the dock, her head still twisted the wrong way as her body sinks between two stray chunks of ice with hardly a ripple. No bubbles, either; she's not breathing, she's dead -

He should help Dave, Karkat thinks blearily, ripping off his jacket as he runs. Really, Dave's gonna forget the horns eventually. Rule number one, never forget a troll's horns - unless they're nubby and useless, like Karkat's, a fitting visual metaphor for his uselessness as a whole. He got Dave into this mess, and now look at them.

There are guards and extra padding along his sides, claustrophobically tight, and it was really was a challenge to keep Kanaya from realizing why he had her turn around and face the wall every time she made him try on something new; really cut into their blossoming friendship reserves. But probably not as badly as this is, he decides, jamming his claws into his wrists and coming out with nails dripping sharp blood to tear right through the padding to the gills underneath. A shock of cold air bursts along flaring red-and-grey filaments of tissue, and then the 103 degree fever reasserts itself. He gulps down two deep breaths, staring down through the matte blue surface of the shifting water, and it does nothing to stop him shaking.

He hopes it's enough, takes a step back - then remembers what happened the last time he tried to dive into water the way he's seen John do, and decides to just step off the edge of the dock feet first, before he can talk himself out of it.
Forcing his eyes open is the hardest thing, because there's a lingering terror behind his eyelids that whispers the Horrorterror will be right there, waiting. But when he opens them a crack, vision blurred and watery for a moment before everything shifts into focus, it's just him and the clear water and the drifting pattern of shadows where the ice floats overhead -

And the fucking long line of machines that spread out along the bottom of the bay that he has to take a moment to boggle at. They look like a cross between submarines and rocket ships, like the shuttle up on the surface but scaled up a hundred times. He can't see the end of the line before the faint, grey-blue fog of particulates swallows them up. It's way cleaner than the water at the docks back home, though fuck if he knows how they keep it that way with all this apparent submarine construction going on beneath the surface.

Feferi. Fuck. Karkat stops floating around haplessly and starts turning himself around to kick down, his eyes scouring the water directly beneath him for any sign of her. If she'd fallen on one of those ships it might actually have been useful. But they're in the space between the shore and the first one, where the seafloor is too shallow for it, so thank fuck he only has to clumsily swim down a few yards before the white of her costume shimmers into view. She's drifting, not quite at the bottom, but not moving either. When he reaches her, blood pumping in his head before he adjusts for the pressure shift, her hair has billowed itself around her face, which is still turned at the wrong angle.

He jumped into the fucking Arctic to retrieve a dead body. Maybe it's not the universe hating him anymore - maybe all of this is just Karkat's fault on some deep, spiritual level.

Fuck, whatever. He and Dave are already screwed. Might as well attempt to drag the dead body of a friend halfway across Russia to get home (like dealing with border control wasn't going to be enough of a hassle already). Karkat sighs, gills fluttering in a way that makes him distinctly uncomfortable because he never gets used to using these random things, and then ducks to loop an arm under and around Feferi's back and arms, maneuvering himself awkwardly until he can kick again and push them back up to the surface.

There's a troll in his way. Karkat freezes, Feferi's hair reasserting itself by plastering against the side of his face with the consistency of stringy seaweed, and for a moment he hopes to fuck that the troll didn't see them. Just a seadweller, minding its own business, going around to check on the underwater ships - since that's evidently why they all dove into the water to avoid the strife -
A pair of violet eyes snap down and lock on him and Feferi, and the troll's sharp fins twitch. The violetblood starts circling, descending at a slow pace while Karkat whips his head around, trying to judge whether he could make it to the shore instead. Not that it's really a question - he's passable at swimming, not good, and he's toting around Feferi's dead weight. No chance against a seadweller. Way too late, Karkat thinks to close his eyes almost all the way, blurring his vision again but also minimizing how red and fucking glowy his eyes must look underwater. Maybe he and his new dead friend here will just be taken into underwater custody, and not culled on sight.

Feferi convulses. Karkat screams and drops her, forgetting that they're underwater, and the sudden spout of bubbles must startle the violetblood as well because a similar scream-burst clouds around its face. Or maybe it's the dead body spasming of its own accord mid-water in preparation for, Karkat assumes, some brand new horrific abomination of physiology to take place. There's still no sign of a giant sea monster near them, but that clearly means nothing.

Weird, though. He would have thought this horrific process would involve more grimlighty bullshit. Vibrant fuchsia has started wrapping around Feferi's neck and outlining her body in burning light, but it's laced with pale, spring green and Karkat isn't sure he wants to know what that means. The water feels charged around him, like they're all about to get their asses electrocuted, the pressure of sudden power radiating out from Feferi's corpse.

She had better not explode. That is where he fucking draws the line today -

All the water rushes in a short burst, dragging Karkat and the violetblood above in toward Feferi with a jolt, like a fishhook behind his navel. The pressure breaks and the light sinks back under Feferi's jacket, leaving them all hanging there like lumps in utter confusion. When Karkat feels a certain amount of camaraderie with a random violetblood over witnessing weird shit in progress, you know it's bad.

Feferi's eyes flutter open, wide and dewy and full of innocent confusion as she glubs at Karkat. Her ragged braids have all unraveled the rest of the way, her hair a gleaming cloud around a face that looks healthier than it did before she died.

Her neck is no longer broken.

-

It makes terrible sense that the Condesce and Feferi share a fucking Horrorterror as a lusus. People have debated for years what could have happened to the Condesce's custodian, or if she had one at all, in the murky years before she began her ascension in the Far East. Tyrian lusii tend to bond to their incredibly rare charges for life, transformed from guardians to war mounts, but no matter what fuchsia-eyed troll rose up to challenge her, thinking themselves young and in their prime, Her Imperious Condescension slaughtered them and their lusus both.

It makes significantly less sense that all it took was a couple of spa years spent touring the reefs of the southern Pacific to make the Condesce come back, sharp of tooth and open-palmed in the wake of the world wars, cackling when factions offered her command if she wanted to take on the war carapacians as her next conquest - only to take over a baking company, and begin the gradual process of reworking her public image from historical warlord to pop culture icon.

Karkat doesn't try to understand. Whatever or whoever was important enough to motivate the Condesce to stop being a warlord and settle for robber baroness and capitalist extraordinaire, it's a secret only she knows.

-
When it becomes clear that neither Karkat nor Random Violetblood 1 are going to glub back any time soon, Feferi pouts her lips at them, and then shrugs, kicking her feet almost lazily to bring her up to Karkat's level. Karkat's still frozen, and - oh, nice, Random Violet Blood 1 just went swimming for its life. And here Karkat thought their spontaneous terroralliance was unbreakable.

Then Feferi prods him in the stomach, not all that hard but unexpected enough that Karkat lets out another burst of air, flailing as he tries to paddle out of range. Whatever Glubby is making her do, he's not floating around here to be fucking eviscerated in some messed up practice run. Feferi's quick, though, maybe quicker in water than she is on land, curling around him in a slippery-smooth motion to poke at his exposed gills next. Fantastic. Karkat's resigned himself to nearly everyone in Lalonde Labs knowing about his eyes and his blood, and he'd halfway convinced himself that fond memories of a time gone by might have made Feferi sympathetic to his desire to not-die due to his mutation - but god. Fuck. Not even John knows about the gills, no one is supposed to know about the gills.

Feferi's laugh bubbles around them, stray blops of air rolling up Karkat's sleeve and making him fidget. He cups a hand and tries to figure out how to kick underwater, but he's too fucking slow, and Feferi just arcs around his sluggish foot, grabbing him in a bear hug from behind so that her hair clouds his vision. She's pressed close enough that he feels her kick, once, twice, and they rise so fast that he thinks if they'd been any deeper he'd have had a fucking embolism if he didn't have blood powers running hot through his veins. They break the surface so fast that his head spins and his gills get confused by the fact that he can use lungs now, so that he ends up a gasping, wheezy lump in the circle of Feferi's arms. She treads water for both of them like he weighs nothing.

"Karcrab!" she's saying, chortling like repeating a stupid pun is the height of hilarity. "You're so warm! Like a thermos! How are you doing that?" She squeezes him too tight, as though for emphasis. "And water you doing in the water?"

Yeah, she's gonna drown him. Or just suplex him back into the water and turn him into a troll pretzel. He's got to get away before she stops dicking around and goes back to being evil. "Get off!"
he yells, ramming his elbow back awkwardly and trying to squirm free of her grip. She lets him go so he can flop desperately forward - in the space of two seconds he feels like he's forgotten all he bothered to learn about swimming. Just - get out of the water before she summons her massive lusus to come play.

When he looks back, suspicious, trying to see if she's following his floundering progress or has lost interest, Feferi's head floats low in the water, her eyebrows furrowed at him as she blows bubbles with poofed out cheeks. Her hair sticks damp around her horns and face in wet streamers before clouding back out under the surface. "Did I do somefin to piss you off, Karkat?" she asks - and yes, she actually has the nerve to pout about this. "Or are you only being craynky like usual?"

Anyone up on the docks can hear them. Fuck him if maybe people under the water can't hear, too.
Karkat doesn't give a single bulgechafing fuck about people overhearing, because how dare she ask that question! "You and your murderous Horrorterror mom decide to teleport us to the middle of the fucking Arctic, and you ask if you've done something to piss me off? I'm so fucking far beyond pissed off, you possessed douche! My thinkpan is about to overflow with mass quantities of ragefluid buildup! I could end world hunger with the force of my anger right now and that doesn't even make sense! You were possessed and then you were dead and now you're fucking alive and possessed all over again! Ho ho fucking ho, it must be a fucking Christmas miracle because oh look - we're surrounded by asshole minions in red and white, the Condescension is clearly our jolly, genocidal, capitalistic conveyor of overpriced Crocker brand junk, and we're basically stranded at the North Pole because your fucking lusus is a monster that wants to kill us all! All we need now is for your giant elder god behemoth to heave itself on shore to provide the ceremonial leavings as it shits all Karkat stops splashing his fists around in the water, panting heavily. Feferi blinks at him, looking puzzled, before slow realization dawns on her face. Well good for fucking her. Karkat is so out of here. He's done. He's done! Feferi and the Condesce can have at it! He is taking his Dave and they are leaving. Now. Yesterday. In fact, Dave can time travel, so fuck it. They literally left and got back home yesterday. They're already at the labs as he thinks this, yukking it up about how pathetic past Dave and Karkat were. It will be/is great. Karkat can already feel the triumphantly vindictive bile congealing in his humorglands in anticipation.

"Possessed?" Feferi asks, and her voice has gone timid and small. It's a platonic pity play - don't fall for it, Karkat. Think of the hilarious bro laughter throes. Do not -

He thrashes around to scowl at her. The dock is literally right there; he isn't sure why he hasn't just clambered out of the Horrorterror-infested waters by now. "Yes, Peixes. Possessed. Fucking brainwashed out of your fucking mind. And you won't even remember me telling you about it ten seconds from now, so just. Just stop. Go back to your murder-my-ancestor party so you two can figure out who gets top dibs on being the world's resident genocidal maniac."

Feferi sinks even further under the water, all but her fuchsia eyes covered as she blinks in confusion. Bobbing back up, she says, hesitant, "Karkat - my head hurts a lot - are you shore Glubby was -"

Then she breaks off, pupils dilating. "She was lying to me," she breathes. "Glubby said - but that didn't make any sense, did it?! None of it made any sense! And you told me and told me and I couldn't stop thinking you were just being silly, even when that wasn't what I actually thought!"

Holy fuck, are they actually having a breakthrough, here? How long will this last before Glubby cracks down again? Karkat can't imagine they have long. "Horrorterrors fuck with your head. Why do you have one for a lusus?!"

Feferi hesitates. "But what about -"

Karkat cuts her off. "No, fuck - we don't have time to debate any of this fuckery. No, there's no fucking pollution, yes, it was all just your Horrorterror sliming up the place to give you a reason to act stupid, and now we need to get out of here before you start acting possessed again because I don't want to die in this decrepit, existential wasteland at the ass end of Russia!"

For a solid ten seconds, Feferi looks stunned - and then her expression hardens, the pout of her lips ticking into a frown. "She tricked me," she says, a growl rumbling behind her words. "Gl'bogany, that - ugh! She said she cared about me, when all she wanted was for me to come here and do her dirty work because she has a grudge against Tethys."

Objectively, Karkat knows the Condesce's name. She's lived too long for it not to be a point of historical record, though people have argued for ages whether it might not just be a pseudonym. No one but major world leaders uses it except in a whisper. Too risky. Hearing Feferi drop the name, considering their current circumstances, makes him paranoid. "Be pissed about it later. Let's just move." He glares down at the water beneath their treading feet with suspicion. "I don't know, you can yell at your ancestor as we spring by, but like hell are we hanging around near the water. We need distance." Karkat doesn't know how far Glubby's - Gl'bogany? - mind control range goes, but there has to be a limit. Right? Well, not with their shitty luck, probably...

"Here, I'll give you a boost," Feferi says, and Karkat's lost for a moment when she dives beneath the surface of the water in a curving arc; he's more than a little unnerved when she comes up underneath his feet and he feels claws wrap around his waterlogged shoes (thank god he wasn't wearing heavy, weather-appropriate clothing, actually, or he might have had to ditch his shoes and walk home from Russia bare-foot). There's a moment where she could push him up to better wriggle his ass onto the dock, or she could yank him down to be eaten in a renewed fit of grimlight - but she pushes him up, her laugh throaty and burbling through a thin layer of water as she boosts him up so high he's almost all the way there.

A claw reaches out, and hauls him up the rest of the way, his feet dangling over the sea.

"Whale, whale, whale," the Condesce says, her breath cold on his face, cold even through the fever, stained fuchsia eyes looking not through, but directly into his own, as the blood drains from his cheeks. He can't move, he can't even think, and when she flips his mask up, he thinks he stops breathing.

She smiles.

There are many teeth, white as pearls, sharp as needles.

" Been a while since I last saw that face."

---

Here's a fun logic problem for you - is it possible for two Knights to stack multipliers by defending each other, instead of someone else?

The answer, Dave thinks, is that yeah, it's probably possible. They just suck ass at it. They're shit at all this game crap. Logic is a goddamn myth. Hell, they could have tried to protect Feferi and taken the easy way out, but Feferi being possessed kind of killed that one before it ever got off the ground. It's hard to concentrate on protecting someone when you need to be more worried about dodging, since she can and will go through you in a blind rage.

He's not sure what goes through his head when he barrels into the Condescension, knocking them both away from Feferi's one-woman corpse party. Whatever he's thinking ends up more scrambled than eggs in a blender on the highest speed - you could serve that up on toast and call it breakfast. The Condesce digs her heels in and shoves him down by the shoulders as they roll to a stop, snarling down at him and getting pinkish anger-spit all over his face. Ew. Ancient troll germs. " S'all I can think to do to smackeral some sense into that girl, so hopefully that works," she says, while Dave struggles to get his shoulder free. He reverses his grip on the sword so he can try to jab upward without needing to move more than his elbow, but the knee digging into his side comes up and pins his elbow instead. He can flail his legs all his wants, but it won't do shit because what the hell does he know about grappling and stuff? Nothing, that's what.

A forceful finger jab pulls him out of the frantic mental rambling. "Which means you're glubbed now, sonny jim, cause buoy, do I have a bone to pick with you," the Condesce says, her eyes fixed on him for the first time since this whole shitshow started. Before, she treated him and Karkat like sideshows; even when Feferi was down for the count, she fought them with the casual attitude of someone brushing off a pair of flies, irritated but with her attention elsewhere. Now - now she looks pissed. "Who tha fuck you think you are, steppin' to my apple juice market?!"

Dave's jaw drops open.

Oh shit.

"How do you kn - what? No!" he says, shaking his head. "No idea what you're talking about!"

She slams a fist down against the dock beside his head. The concrete cracks. "You think I ain't got my eye on the competition? I know it's been you mouthin' off and sassing me, cod dammit!"

This is surreal. Karkat just dove into the freezing cold Arctic waters without a jacket to go after someone who's already really, really dead, and Dave is stuck up here getting yelled at by a troll old enough to be his great, great, great, great, great - oh wow he doesn't want to finish that train of thought, actually. Let the record show that she's probably older than dinosaurs, and also the owner of the companies who have been emailing him with threats to sue his apple juice empire into the fucking afterlife for playing fast and loose with the stock market.

Which is what she did to wipe Smucker's off the face of the planet and reclaim the old Pillsbury baking products line for herself, so uh...he's actually not surprised by this turn of events. Holy shit, does he need to stop listening to John's anti-Betty Crocker rants, because he wishes he didn't know so much about the old cake mix wars.

"That was clearly some other guy. Who is not me," he tries. This really weaksauce, nervous laugh sneaks out, too, before he shuts that shit down.

At least he can put on his resume that he's made the Condesce stare at him in blank despair. It's going right up there under 'has experience driving giant snake monsters to the brink of frustrated tears' and 'runs around the city fighting random people for fun.' There has to be someone out there who considers these talents new employee-worthy traits. "You put your glubbing face on the label, doofish!"

Yeah, but that was an artistically over-sharpened JPEG selfie with his shades on. This disguise should have been hilariously foolproof. "Wasn't me."

"It was obviously you! All you did is take off yo shades!"

"No, it's ironic. Fight me." He pauses time and finally wrests one shoulder free, punching the inside of the Condesce's elbow until it gives and he can crawl out backwards from underneath her.

But he underestimates her reach - when he lets time snap back into motion, she catches onto his abscond and grabs him by the ankle, long claws digging into his pajama pants as she pulls his feet out from under him. Letting her get a good grip is probably the worst mistake he could make; he can outrun her, yeah, but now she's clamped down like a vice, stronger than he is by a wide mile, and no amount of kicking at her exposed knuckles will make her let go. His face ends up squashed against the ground when the Condesce stands, hauling his leg up with her to keep him off-balance. "That's not what ironic means! #dwi"

Then she swears, and Dave finds himself flying through the air again, as she kicks him back toward the dockyard. Her being ridiculously strong, he reaches the yard and then some, his palm scraped up by the drag as he uses that and his already fucked up sword to brake. She can throw him and Karkat around like they weigh nothing, which he'd be hells of impressed by if it didn't involve his fancy god tier pants being soaked through with slush and other nasty shit they've picked up along the way. This better not be permanent, because how do you even wash these things? Do they even come off? Can you just toss them in the machine at the local laundromat, or are they dry-clean only?

Anyway. Yeah. He's about to retort that of course that's what ironic means (how can she have lived centuries and not figured out something so basic?) when he realizes the Condesce has switched gears again.

This is because Karkat just popped out from under the water, right into her waiting claws. He dangles there, transfixed with horror at something the Condesce says, the sides of his shirt in tatters that reveal shredded red wounds along his ribs that he must be too freaked to heal with his blood thing. Feferi hauls herself up onto the dock a moment later, shivering, but looking delightfully sprightly for someone who had their neck snapped. "Tethys, put him down!" she says, her voice sharp and clear. There's a weird lack to it. Something's missing that was definitely there before - right, she doesn't sound like a legion trying to make itself heard with only one set of vocal cords. Cool.

"You shoulda stuck to hanging with that old morayeel, girl," the Condesce says, her face so close to Karkat's their noses almost touch. "You went and hooked some real fishy ones, here." Her hungry grin widens, and Karkat cringes. He has his claws up, like he intends to try to peel her hands off him, but he doesn't seem to be able to break eye contact. "How do you and your blood keep slipping through the cracks, candy red wriggler? Really makes an old gill wonder..."

"Please! I'm the one who dragged the two of them into this - they didn't even want to come!" Feferi unclenches her fists with visible effort, holding them out to her ancestor pleadingly. "I'm sorry, I'm so sorry, for all of this. You were right that I shouldn't have listened to her. Please, we can talk -"

Okay. It would be really nice if she stopped paying attention to them again. Being ignored in favor of Feferi would be nice right about now. Dave flashes closer by what feels like inches, trying to figure out what to do. The Condesce only needs one hand to hold Karkat off his feet over the water, so - yeah, he can clip her hand and that should do it. None of his hits land square anymore, not since she started catching on to his moves, able to predict where he's going to flashstep next almost as well as Bro, but all she has to do is loosen her grip a little and he can drag Karkat out of the way. Just one hand. He can do that. If she would just stop staring at Karkat like he's what's for dinner -

"Tethys!" The shout is hoarse and scraping and unfamiliar; when Dave tears his eyes away from the clusterfuck-in-action before him, he sees that - oh, goddammit - the giantass mountain of a blueblood has come back down from inside the ice-rimed shuttle with reinforcements. The troll limping toward them is down a leg and what looks like half an arm, part of the forearm and hand lopped off at a strange angle, with odd lines carved into his face. He's willowy, tall and lanky to the point that he looks like a stiff breeze would give him serious issues, but he shoves an entire overturned shipping container out of his path with a burst of blue and red and doesn't slow down at all. "What happened to 'vacation,' Tethys?! What happened to 'this is a date!'" the troll rasps out.

"Oh no," the Condesce says, without looking away from Karkat. Then she does look away, belatedly, and the chagrin on her face as she does a multi-part doubletake from Karkat to the goldblood and back again. "Oh no."

"Tethys, seriously, what -!"

She jams Karkat's mask back down and throws him like a baseball. Karkat being thrown around would be a hell of a lot more hilarious in any other context but this, and it becomes marginally less hilarious still when it turns out he's being launched at Feferi - with enough force that Feferi can't brace them. So she goes flying back, too - aaand now they're both coming at Dave like cannonballs. The throwing thing is definitely getting old. So is being a meat shield; he thinks he's getting whiplash. "God dammit," is all he has time for before two very dense trolls knock him back. Feferi makes some indescribable noise and wet hair catches Dave across the face, but with an added Karkat in the mix - it's like trying to grab a sopping wet cat while it pretends it didn't just fall in the bathtub. Prickly, all claws, and really fucking damp. He pauses time, meaning to dump them on the ground, but when it stops, the momentum still carries them back no matter how he digs his feet in. Feferi tumbles a little to the right and slams into something with a metallic clang. Dave readies himself to get slammed, too. But then his back rams into something a lot smaller and less rib-shattering than he expects. It takes him a fraction of a second to register it's a hand on his back, unyielding and cold right through his suit. Feferi grunts as she shoves back against inertia, one foot planted flat and the other bent up against a shipping container with a troll-shaped dent in it as she braces their sudden stop.

Which means he and Karkat end up teetering, and then crashing forward instead. But at least they didn't turn into pancakes.

Of course, as soon as he thinks that, Feferi loses her balance and lands on top of both of them with a faint 'oof!'

"We're never leaving Seattle again," Karkat says, muffled, from somewhere beneath Dave's chin. His knee somehow manages to find every soft part of Dave's stomach as he scuttles his way out from under the pile. When he escapes, the troll flops over onto his back, his mask askew on his face. "Never. Again."

"Dude, was Seattle really any better?" Dave points out.

He throws up his hands. "Curse the nostalgia glands that make me overlook the fucking obvious."

Feferi adds her own two cents. "Seattle sounds really nice right now. I could totally see myself somewhere that is...not here." Then she lets her head thud down against Dave's spine.

Over by the water, things sound like they're going about as well as they are in the land of the dazed and confused. "You shoalda stayed inside. I'm doin' business out here, pearl," the Condesce is saying, almost sickeningly sweet as she bats her eyelashes. The goldblood keeps storming towards her, one chipped up horn throbbing with psionic sparks like a lighthouse. "Ain't nothing to get all puffed up about, Psii; it's done. They're gone."

The hand with claws missing flies out to sweep toward the pile of coolkids. "They're still right there! Who are these kids? I go to sleep for an hour and the next thing I know the E%ībimus has to wake me up to tell me you're destroying things out here -"

Condy continues to backpedal her way up the mountain. Her nervous laugh would be priceless if Dave weren't still in recovery mode. "No, look, they're leaving! Just a school of dumb grubs who don't know when they're in over their heads." To prove her point, the Condesce turns to scowl at them, making shooing motions with both her hands with the specibus tucked into the crook of her elbow. "Get tha glub outta my sight, squirmy brats."

Feferi sits upright - Dave applauds her effort, because he's so beyond done that he might just stay here on the nice, comfortable ground for a while - and says, "Tethys - Ancestor, I -"

"Lemme guess, you're reeeeeeelly, reelly sorry for going off the deep end, huh." They receive a collective middle finger. It's not quite as creative as some of the weird charades Jade and Karkat pull off in their never-ending quest to flip each other off with extra pizzazz, but that's still another achievement to add to the resume. They're just racking up the mad marketable life experiences today. "Then piss off, guppy. And take these two with you before I cull them for peace of mind, dammit."

Karkat lifts his head up off the ground, incredulous. "Wait. Did she just imply she's not killing us today?"

"You should take advantage of her good graces while she offers them," a fourth voice adds and holy shit could this blueblood be any stealthier? A troll that intimidatingly tall shouldn't be able to sneak up on Dave like that. He pushes himself up off the ground so fast his head spins, trying to keep all of the troll in view at once as she looms over them. What did the sparky asshole call her? Exitbismuth? Nah, too many letters.

The E%ībimus shivers, and shifts the cloak around with a claw to pull the cloth in closer against the cold, damp air, frowning down at the three of them with a faint crease in her forehead. "I have retrieved the goldblood. This should calm her." Another shift, and the corner of the troll's lip ticks down into a frown. It's the kind of vaguely disapproving look you'd give a bunch of idiot kids you thought were a bunch of coconuts screwing around and generally being assholes. Which - Dave cannot blame her for thinking that. Being dipshit coconuts is their thing. Maybe there are non-dipshit coconut children out there, but they're not them. "You should not have been in this workplace; it is a restricted area, and you have stirruped significant trouble. I believe you should leave now."

"Nothing would make us happier," Feferi says. She makes so much more sense right now. Dying must do wonders for horror infested brains.

"Ah. That is good, then." Then the blueblood looks out at the water. "Oh, fiddlesticks. I was working on that."

"On what, the gi-fucking-gantic fleet of submarines?" Karkat asks, disgruntled, as he gets to his feet. Dave inches his way up, too, doing his best to lurk ninja-style in plain sight. Bro could pull that kind of thing off. Mostly Dave ends up looking awkward as hell. It's been a rough day. "What are we looking at here?"

"You? Nothing." The troll shuffles off in the direction of the Condesce and that Psii guy. "Please leave."

"But what about -"

The ripple is so faint, Dave almost thinks he's swaying because he's sore all over and standing was a shit plan to begin with.

Then it happens again, the ground tipping under his feet. He finally thinks to look past where the Condesce and Psii are huddled up at the water beyond, when another thud makes the water ripple, too. His eyes lock onto one chunk of ice in particular, bobbing like a cork - and rushing towards the shore. Almost like something underneath the surface is - "Errybody, outta the water!" the Condesce hollers, stamping a foot on the dock. A couple of seadwelling trolls emerge from the water at the last second and scramble past the fuchsiablood to get off the dock, none of them sparing a glance for Dave and the others as they make for the buildings. Metal crashes and groans, a wrenching sound from beneath the water, the sound of large heavy objects being shoved out of the way to make room for something bigger.

"Oh dear," Feferi says, in what may be the understatement of the day. Karkat says something similar but with more 'fucks' in it. Dave should probably make his own contribution, but he stops being able to hear himself think as Gfbgolyb erupts from under the surface of the water. Whatever else is under the water by the dock lets out a metallic, shrieking crunch as masses and coils of flesh and tendrils and mouths heave itself up onto the shelf and shove submerged ships out of the way of its bulk to make more room by the shore. Dave can hear the screaming, stumbling back with his hands over his ears, but he can't tear his eyes away as this impossible thing continues to pile more of itself up.

It's weird, though - in the part of his mind that's trying not to scream along with the wails of the drowned, he could swear that the Horrorterror looked bigger under the water, all spread out and swollen like a city of tendrils. While the grimlight heap is still absolutely frigging huge, it also sluices water and nasty pearlescent slime down its sides, slowly shrinking as it settles above the waterline with the largest of its mouths snarling at the Condescension. The last of the sun winks out, leaving them in a grey-white twilight. All the sharp, cold air from earlier gets muffled by a curdling fog, the front sweeping in with the nasty smell of dead fish, salt, and blood. It almost makes him flash back to the unnatural humidity from New York - this shit isn't right. But there's an extra sting that makes his eyes water in pain, caustic and prickling, like some of that acidic horrsweat swirling in the water around the Horrorterror's massive body just went airborne.

Look. He's not good at this crap, he's not Rose. She knows more about mango tango buddies and shit like that than is probably healthy for her to know. Dave is just totally content to know jack all about giant chaos calamari; he'd rather refuse a bomb with his face than have to learn any more than he has to about the intricacies of being mauled by an elder god.

So why does he have this weird impression that somehow this thing is somehow...small? Like, he has no idea where the thought comes from, but he distinctly remembers Rose being a goddamn unholy nightmare who could have leveled all of New York if her grimdark dude hadn't been more interested in other things. To be fair, Gl'bglyb could probably squash this city, too. But 'city' is being generous; this place is tiny and most of it is already a dump, half the work has been done for it. Feferi was terrifying because she came out of nowhere with her insane, unpredictable horror jive, but she wasn't sprouting real life tentacles or vomiting fire or trying to blow the Condesce up with magic bombs. Without water to carry most of its physical mass, Gl'bglyb can't seem to do the glowy tentacle thing to make itself levitate or anything.

They're dealing with a tiny-ass, weaksauce Horrorterror and it's still going to smash them with its pinky tentacle. God, how lame.

Better yet, the Condesce and Gl'bglyb are shouting at each other at the same time, now, getting progressively louder as they get more hyped up. It should be comical, a tiny troll yelling at a monster so freaky that it wigs Dave out, but honestly Condy is almost as terrifying in her own way. Anyone whose fighting style consists of being a walking tank that pitches people through walls at will is probably ballsy enough to take on a Horrorterror and last longer than he ever could.

And Gl'bglyb yelling back feels like having a mini grenade go off in his skull.

"SHADDUP! I've had it up to here with you!" The Condesce jabs her 2x3dentkind at Gl'bglyb. "You washed up piece of carp, piss off to the trenches and stop messin' w/ my heiress!"

It would be the work of seconds for the Horrorterror to whip all of their asses. Dave can only watch as it instead argues with the Condesce. If pettiness were a sport, the winner would be Gl'bglyb by a landslide. Christ on a goddamn pita chip. You can't stop a man and a woman. One of the tentacles slithers out from the main body, quivering with petulant rage as it seizes one of the smooth-hulled submarines shoved up against the dock and uses it like a hammer, hitting the ground so hard Dave can hear something collapsing somewhere down the street, where the rest of the decrepit town sits. So cruel, Te'hy's, so cruel.

"You don't know the bubblin' meaning of the word," the Condesce says, disgusted. "I'm sick a' letting you flounder around, acting like you own the damn place!" Behind her, the E%ribimus has come to a halt just behind the goldblood, the two of them the only people still anywhere near the vicinity of the shouting match. Literally everyone else has run for the hills. Dave thinks that's a great idea actually. Why aren't they doing that, again? This is prime abscond time, right here and now.
Sw ee t Fe l Fr l w o u l d n e v e r b e l s o c r e el. Crap - the attention shifts back to their group with piss all by way of warning, and Dave digs his nails into the hollow of his palm, slamming his eyes closed as they water. A peek out shows that Karkat is bristling, but he doesn't look like he's in anywhere near the kind of pain Dave and Feferi are. Lucky bastard. Co me b a ck", Fe e ri, d e a " es't.

Hell nah. Dave doesn't want to deal with manic Peixes, round 5000. "N-no!" Feferi yells back. Her voice sounds rattled, but she doesn't falter much when a mental roar makes even Karkat flinch. The Condesce doesn't glance back at the sound, planted with her shoulders square and unyielding. "No more! You - dio mio, you're a monster!"

The white tentacles still. It's somehow eerier this way - the constant motion made Dave want to heave, but the stillness is ominous as hell. So, S o. Thi s i' s h o w it i s "Nei" her o f my pr e c i ous d e ar s w i l l ' t s i e n? By the end even the voices have gone freakily hushed.

"Are we going to stand around here much longer?" Karkat asks, through gritted teeth. He can't make much sound that way, but he does it.

Dave, meanwhile, feels like his brain is about to start leaking. "No," he says, thickly, with the heavy sensation in his nose that tell him he could sneeze anytime. "No way man. We're out."

"Seconded." Feferi's voice is thready. There's blood coming out of her ear, but she draws herself up and sets her shoulders. "We should leave. Now."

Gl'bogolyb keeps talking through it all in the horror terror version of a stage whisper. The n we sha l i s m e p y a vi c k i l l y y o u. And once yo u ar e go n, we g a nt do a s w e p l a e s. No, m or e w or ry ove r Peixes, y e s. Wh y h a n't I th i nk o f it? S e a t h w on t m in d. H e w e l n o t ev e n k i e, h e r e. S u n ch a co z y h o l e y o u h a v e m a d e f o r yo u r s el f", I eth y s.

The Condesce snorts. Dave can't see her face from here, but she tosses a section of her hair and raises her chin. "We finally gonna stop with this fishing contest? I'm game, tentabitch."

"YOU'THINKYOU CAN'T TELL ME?!!" Gl'bogolyb slams a tentacle the size of a crane against the ground, flattening an unfortunate forklift. The sound Feferi makes is kind like the burbling glug of a whole gallon of juice being poured down the sink at once.

"Why naut, I wonder." The Condesce spreads her arms out to each side, laughing. It's something worse than hysterical - the thirst is fucking unreal. "I shoulda stomped you after the Ukraine. Ha! I'm gonna wreck. Your. Shit!"

"She wouldn't." Karkat looks genuinely upset. Like, on the verge of tears.

Like Karkat's words are a signal, the Condesce shakes off the goldblood's hands and takes a running leap at the nearest tentacle. Gl'bogolyb lets out an outraged wail and eight tentacles slap at the troll, but she's vaulting again, using her trident to lever herself deeper and deeper into the noodly mounds. Dave gets all of two seconds to wonder how the hell she's going to kill this thing with a stabbing weapon (swords are way better, obviously, since they stab and slice) when the Condesce lands and jams her curling fork deep into the base of one of the tentacles. She twists the fork, plants her foot on the tentacle with enough force to flatten it before it can double back on her, and then rips, the long side of the fork tines snapping through sickly white flesh and chopping through dark, black-purple tissue through to the other side.
Welp. "Dude, she totally would," Dave says. It's just one tentacle out of a goddamn forest of them, but it's still impressive that she managed to pull it off. Like, Dave is giving credit where credit is due, alright? She may be an x-treme apple juice robber baron...but that was awesome. The brackish blood that weeps out of the stump is nasty as hell, though. When she flicks the 2x3dent kind in a full-armed swing, the speared tentacle falls off and lands in the water with a small tidal wave, shriveling in on itself as the gross iridescent glaze of horror juices leaches out into the water. Tentacles sweep in to try to knock the troll away from the gaping wound, but the Condesce starts jumping again, never standing still long enough to be pinned down.

Grabbing Karkat and Feferi, he turns them around in a 180 to start sprinting away. There's a moment of fumbling, where they all seem to get the same idea and a few too many hands are groping blindly for a handhold on Dave than he's entirely down with, but then they figure out their shit and start getting this awesome tactical retreat underway. Karkat shouts something that sounds like "backpack!" out of the blue, and nearly takes them all down with him as he scoops up his backpack full of random shit, and then they go on their merry fucking way.

Feferi clips the corner of a building with her shoulder, and another brain-stuttering scream from Gl'bgolyb makes Dave cringe at the vertigo swimming up to greet him. It's all random junk, in a language he doesn't know. Maybe that means the Horrorterror's too focused on the Condesce being a crazy badass, and not paying enough attention to the players to dick around with their heads properly. With the screaming and the fact that the ground won't stop shaking and rolling out from under his feet, he doesn't think they can get away fast enough. In a contest between the world's undisputed oldest living resident and a piece of overgrown sushi from the Negaverse, who wins?

...Also, is it just him, or is the ground shaking more, not less, the further away they go? He shouldn't look back, not when the roads are increasingly snowy the further from the workzone they get, but his impulse control is absolute shit. He pauses to take a quick look back, with the first convenient excuse he can think of - which is - uh - if something is coming up behind them (like, say, an sea monster tentacle) a little warning would be nice this time.

Weird, though. From what he can see it doesn't look like anyone or anything is coming after them. Someone is setting a hellaton of red and blue lightning off everywhere, lighting up the fog with flickering light. There's a tiny shape running around stabbing the hulking mass of tentacles wherever she can reach with her trident. He doesn't even know where the blueblood might have run off to, lost somewhere in the greyish miasma Gl'bgolyb has filled the air with. But nobody can spare the fuck necessary to come after them.

Which would be more relieving, if that rumbling weren't still getting closer.

A future him with an explanation would be pretty damn handy right now. Aaany second.

Okay, what is the point of time powers if he doesn't even get the benefit of a shitty, suitably cryptic warning ahead of time? He would punch himself in the face if that weren't the stupidest idea he's ever heard.

"Stop, stop, fucking stop for a second!" Karkat says, just as they've hit a clear road that looks like it leads out of town. South, maybe? Dave's lost track of what direction they were going. Stopping sounds like a pisspoor idea, but they do it anyway, skidding to a stop, all of them breathing hard with accompanying clouds of breath visible in the cold, murky air. "Where are we running?" Karkat spits out at last, which brings an unfortunate amount of logic down on their heads like a ton of bricks. Dave lets his silence speak for him as he looks pointedly at Feferi. Feferi looks back, her fns pressed so close to her head in embarrassment that they almost vanish in her hair. "Well holy fillet of fuck, that's great. We're in a town in the middle of nowhere where they probably still think Lenin runs the fucking show, and none of us even know where we could find an airport."

"More worried about escaping mindfuck range of the Horrorterror back that a-ways, to be honest," Dave says, jerking his head in the direction they came from. "Run now, get home later."

"I - don't," Feferi starts, and they give her a second to pull her thoughts together. She's sane (Dave is still missing the part where she mysteriously came back from the dead, but considering the circumstances he can guess it involves weird game shit and leave it alone) but if her head's throbbing anywhere near as badly as Dave's is from the reverberating psychic bullshit, stringing words together must suck ass. "I remember raysearching the infrastructure of this region, but it's all -" she gestures at the side of her head with a hand, helplessly. "The only functioning airport is to the north, along the coastline; the other two airfields in the area have been abandoned for years. I don't think we want to go near the water, and it would be a two hour walk, but...this place is next to uninhabited. The capital of the republic is over a thousand keelometers from here, and there is not much else in between..."

Long story short, they're in the part of Russia not even the Russians wanted to live in. Awesome.
Peachy keen.

The ground bucks again. Where is that coming from? Dave spins in a wild circle, trying to make out more than the buildings around them through the haze, but it's all misted over. If Gl'bgolyb is gonna try to ring them in with a tentacle, these are the perfect weather conditions for it, and hell, here Dave and Karkat are in black and bright red like flashing beacons next to Feferi's ice-encrusted white clothes. Right, she's probably going to turn into a popsicle soon; Karkat's already dry, incredibly enough, and his hair is doing something indescribable that Dave has no intention of telling him about any time soon. He looks from Karkat to Feferi, and then back again, at a loss as to whether someone is going to step up and do the friendleader thing, or if they'll get all democratic up in here and make WV proud.

Something moves in the fog, over Feferi's shoulder, and Dave grabs her and yanks until she lurches forward, just as the hollow, thin, but utterly huge mask looms out of the mists, suddenly taking up most of the space between the apartments. "Karkat-!" he says tightly, as he makes a damn valiant effort to get Feferi behind him. He's foiled by the fact that she could probably bench-press him, and instead just turns in his arms, fins flaring in alarm as the three of them stare at the visor leaning in over them. Blood is dripping from one of Karkat's arms as he takes a half step in front of Feferi and Dave, and he's mildly concerned for two seconds before he remembers that's probably normal.

Well, it doesn't look like a monstrous noodle god. But Dave is not going to be fooled. No goddamn way. It's pale white, the half-light of the fog casting greyed shadows across the ivory surface. It shifts, the large, triangular face peering at them with eyes that are pinpricks of light in the shadows above its visor, and he can make out the hilt of what might be a totally proportionate sword visible in the swirling fog behind it.

How big is this thing?

"Why the fuck," Karkat asks, his voice flat, "is there a giant fucking robot looking at us? Make it stop." He's finished making another sickle now, but the red just reminds Dave that Karkat still has those rips in his side, not bleeding freely but still not healed over. They look too fresh to have scabbed over, either, so what freaky new blood thing is keeping him from bleeding out? Is he just...like...sucking it in?

Dave thinks he's getting off topic, here. "Dude, it's not looking at us." Probably. Look, a guy can hope, alright? The visor has shifted noticeable and maybe they're too small. Maybe it'll just overlook them and move on to wherever it was going before it planted its face in the middle of their escape route. Was there some ad for a local 'oversized white demon monsters' convention in the news, and Dave somehow missed it because his phone got borked?

"Yes it fucking is. Don't argue with me, Dave. Just make it stop happening."

With another low _boom_ that makes the ground do unforgivably wobbly things, the pale thing lowers itself to one knee. The rotating joints that come into view are actually cool as fuck, letting it bend lower than someone with a real spine probably could.

Then the mask folds open to reveal something that is _not_ the gaping maw of a monster that wants to eat them for breakfast.

It's actually the widest carapacian Dave has ever seen. In his obviously long and extensive history of chilling with carapacian dames and dudes. He's as pale as the huge mecha carapacian carrying him in its face, with placid black eyes and a warm smile and the most awesome, swagtastic outfit Dave's seen since he last looked in the mirror. There's a cape involved which automatically gets an A++ for style, an open robe with short sleeves, and what looks to be either a really long, jagged hemmed tunic or a bombass kilt. The claws that rise up to sign at them are blocky and wide, a far cry from WV's pinchy little stubs or the White Queen's thin, graceful hands.

???: Do not be afraid, players of the game. We come in peace.

There's no way that's not deliberate. Irony is giving Dave a gift to make up for landing him and Karkat in the shitter. This is a beautiful moment and he's going to treasure it forever.

Someone who sounds an awful lot like a pissed off sea troll queen is screaming in fury behind them, most likely while stabbing something remarkably similar to a chaos god in the face. So when Feferi drops into a curtsy that smooth as fuck, with _that_ going on in the background, it's _surreal_. "Grey Protector. I don't believe we've met."

The Grey Protector - the GP of all carapacians, the ex-White King, the guy who is basically the Barack of meteor aliens - just ironically referenced the hands-down most overused sci fi extraterrestrial greeting card as a dramatic opener.

Seriously, this day went from awful to fucking wild in less than a minute.

GP: No, we have not. All the same. Are we correct in guessing that you may require, as they say, a ride?

GP: The Titan's temperament is not one generally suited to cooperative efforts. We think that escorting you and our other passenger to safer lodgings may be more advantageous while they can still help hold the front line.

Dave takes back all the ragging he's done about the game in the past. Having the dude who is the de facto Supreme of the entire carapacian race as a sort-of friend out of _fucking nowhere_ is the shit and not even the Black Queen can ruin that.

Yet he still can't stop the stupid before it flies out of his mouth. "Do you have one of these that comes in aerial mode?"

The carapacian looks him square in the eye.

GP: Yes.
GP: Sadly, they have not been decanted. The walking engines must suffice, Knight. This place may soon be rendered uninhabitable. Do you wish to leave?

The visor opens up a little more, the bottom edges dragging as the whole robot lowers enough that they could step up over the threshold and into the face.

So their transportation choices have basically come down to either hiking to an airport that may or may not still be working the Soviet aesthetic, going back to beg a ride off Gl'bgolyb (what a laugh that would be. Wow. So many lols), or chilling with the Grey Protector and his giant historically significant war robot thing. Giant alien beetle robot bishop, or giant sea alien? Giant alien beetle robot bishop, or -

Karkat is still in prickly cactus mode with his bloodsickle, suspicion tight in his shoulders as he opens his mouth. "No fucking w-"

"Get in the fucking robot, Karkat," Dave says, making the executive decision by shoving Karkat at the White King. One of Karkat's thrashing arms smacks into the carapacian's outstretched claws, and the King serenely hauls the troll up. Karkat takes that about as well as can be expected, frozen in indignant shock with bulging red eyes as he gets gently set down on the floor. Feferi climbs in next, the GP taking one of her hands with a tiny bow of his head. A wave of screaming mental static hits right when Dave's trying to be cool about this, and when his brain stops throbbing the visor is closing up behind him, while Feferi sits crouched on the ground by Karkat, looking green around her...fins? Or whatever color/body part combo you insert into that metaphor for trolls.

GP: Here. Rest, Witch of Life. Knight, are you well?

Dave shakes his head, trying to school his expression out of tight-jawed agony and into something less obvious. "Better than her, I think," he says. The blood at Feferi's ears and down the sides of her neck look like they're close to freezing, glittering like purple-red gemstones in the light from between the visor bars. When Dave tries to check his own, being discreet as hell and all that, his fingertips come away with smears of red, too.

"I'm fine. Please, let's get awave from here?" Feferi says, lifting her head. Some of her hair falls into her face and she rakes it back between her horns with a grimace. "I cannot thank you enough for this, Protector."

GP: It would go ill if we left three players trapped amidst such chaos. We shall retreat while we have the window of opportunity. The Titan has chosen to hold the line for as long as it can.

At the carapacian's command, the Deaconstructor rises up from its crouch. Aside from swaying once from side to side, the ponderous steps it takes as it turns and makes for the outskirts of the town hardly jolt them at all. After a while, he couldn't say for sure how fast they're going, or even which direction they've taken off in - but look, the titanic robot thing is doing all the walking for them, so Dave isn't going to complain like a whiny pissbaby.

Karkat leans back against the inner side of the face mask. Dave could stand up and pretend he has manners, but the Protector is signing away at a smaller carapacian and a taller shape near the back of the hollow space, where the thin light from the outside doesn't quite reach. Then Feferi leans back, too, and given that she's the famous, fancy-pants heiress who knows the most about the manners for dealing with an alien king...Dave takes this sweet opportunity to lean back, too. His legs and lungs feel like they're on fire. Bro's gonna kick his ass for being out of breath after a fight.

"Holy fucking shit-kebabs," Karkat says, with feeling, and Dave nods in agreement. Now that he's sitting down he doesn't think standing up will be happening any time soon. Standing is lame, anyway. On Karkat's other side Feferi's rapidly developing sickly bruises around her eyes; they don't look too swollen, but they leave deep maroon splotches under her grey skin. Hell, for all Dave knows, maybe the Condesce did whack her upside the head hard enough to do real damage - would Feferi have noticed with the Horrorterror urging her on?

But they're alive. Everything turned out better than expected, and that's - weird. Hell, Feferi died and she got better with a minimum of mishaps. The only plausible explanation is that the future has something else even more spectacularly horrible lined up to greet them.

Great, Karkat's pessimism is contagious. It's gone airborne. The world is doomed.

The Grey Protector finishes up his quiet conversation and turns back to them with a solemn look. Blockiness aside, this guy gives off the same kind of vibes as the White Queen: regal as hell, but without the lightning-sharp edges of menace that the BQ rocks on a daily basis.

GP: I always knew that having the bishops and rooks on standby would bear fruit. My dearest did advise that they be left undecanted before she left, but war came calling. Who was I not to answer?

GP: Now. We wish to drop our friend off at Vladivostok, and from there she informs us that it is another 700 kilometers to Seoul, where there are a number of international flights.

GP: Given our rate of travel once the Deaconstructor reaches top running speeds, it may still take us some time, but we would be capable of taking you ourselves. With a Time player, it would be entirely possible for us to drop you off at whatever time you wish. We would decant a flying unit for you, but that would take weeks, so we think you may prefer this.

Feferi perks up. "I could arrange a flight in Seoul. That sounds lovely."

"Or we could go home in a giant robot." Dave is in favor of this plan. Partly because holy shit does he hate flying, and partly because there's something really reassuring about this whole war carapacian thing. Midnight Crew decides to show up out of nowhere? Squash.

Plus, the completely unironic awesomeness that would be strolling through downtown Seattle in a titan straight out of World War II. The mental image alone could keep him going for weeks.

It comes down to Karkat, who hesitates so long Dave thinks he might have fallen asleep with his glare still on. The troll shifts his backpack full of his and Dave's random shit around to his lap, his glare closer to exhausted than angry as he hugs it. "Whatever. I'd rather polish the Condesce's culling fork with my face than deal with a fucking airport right now. But how long would it take to walk from the Arctic to Seattle? There's a huge fucking ocean between here and there!"

GP: The waters are deep, so we shall have to go around the rim. But this is a war walker - it can hold the course.

Wait, was that one deliberate? Dave has to know. "The rim...of the Pacific," he repeats.

Karkat interrupts before the GP can say anything. "Dave, I will kick you in the face."

"I'm just saying -"

"No, you're not."

Unfortunately for his sense of irony, the Grey Protector doesn't take the bait. Or he just has an ungodly straight face.
GP: Yes, it is shallow there. It will take perhaps fourteen hours. You can regain that lost time easily with the Knight of Time's exploit function.

Fourteen hours. And that's if one of the two murder-happy menaces they ditched back in town don't come after them along the way.

To hell with it. He lets himself sink down and feels the tension in his insides relax for the first time in what feels like hours. Before he zones out or falls asleep - "What about you?" When everyone just looks at him, Dave points at Feferi. "You're coming back with us? Or going back to DC? What's the plan?"

Feferi has tucked her hands into her sleeves. Dave's pajamas are helping out here, but he can't judge if it's still as cold in here as it was outside. He can't see Karkat's breath, and since Karkat is a walking furnace right now that's probably an indication that the air's warmed up some. "I - yes, I think so. I should go back - my staff will have noticed my absence by now - but I don't think that's a good idea." Her face falls further. "I know about the game, but most of that information came from Gl'bgo,yb, so can I truly trust that any of it was accurate?" She bites at the raw, split skin of her lower lip. "Also, being in Washington would be conchvenient. As much of an asshole as he is, now I'm worried about Eridan. Who knows if he's remembered to keep up with his medication, or if he even has access to it anymore, with that dome over the city. What a mess..."

Karkat suddenly gets that look in his eye. God, this is going to be about troll romance, isn't it. Dave can already feel it coming. Ugh. "Moirail?"

"Not anymore." Feferi's eyes turn steely. "No, I just...I was already so tired, and then I could no longer tell if it was love or just responsibility. If even half of what Gl'bgo,yb told me about the game session is true, I'd still be too pissed to make myself care."

"Oh, fuck." Dave folds up one of his knees and uses it to prop up his arm for a headrest. "What did he do?"

"He killed me." She pouts her lips. "I think he might have killed someone else first, but I couldn't tell whether they were alive or not. They lay so still...and I got so angry!" Shrugging, Feferi sighs. "Then I went after Eridan for revenge, he shot me, and that was that!"

What's sad is that none of this remotely surprises Dave anymore. He, John, Rose, and Jade were all dropping like flies - why would the troll session have been any less lethal? "Watch me start having nightmares about this now," Karkat mutters, folding his arms and slouching down so that he's almost horizontal. "Did I mention how much I enjoy the spontaneous visions of people I know dying horrible, bloody deaths?"

Dave snorts. "You may have said something." A couple hundred times. "But it's part of a balanced breakfast, you know? Like, the five food groups: bacon, eggs, pancakes, sausage links, and death."

Karkat hacks up the most sarcastic laugh Dave's ever heard. "Your sense of humor is horrendous. Why am I hatefriends with someone so hilariously unfunny?"

"Hang on, are we hatefriends now? Really and truly?" Dave lifts his head enough to clap his hands together and bat his eyelashes. He needs new shades. Badly.

Karkat bangs his head back against the wall, his lip a sour curl. "Forever. This is it. You're fucked." He smacks Dave's arm with the back of his hand. "Don't you realize? We went through incredibly dangerous shenanigans. It was like an extreme platonic friendship bonding ritual on methamphetamines. We just became best friends, dipshit. I hope Kanaya fucking buries you for leapfrogging over the competition."

He is never going to understand trolls, is he. "Shit. How long do you think that will last?"

"At least until next Tuesday, depending on how much of an ass you are."

Feferi continues to stack up her recovering sanity meter by being the only person here to actually ask the Grey Protector how the hell he knew to show up in the nick of time. Dave's excuse is that weird things happen too often for him to be fazed by this stuff anymore; his surprise reflex is a withered husk. While he and Karkat are talking about stupid shit, Feferi asks, "Why are you here? This place is so far from Prosfish. Do you often make rounds in Russia?"

The GP has his claws folded together over his front in a really familiar way; Dave remembers the White Queen doing the same thing, when she's busy watching people rather than talking. He looks up to blink at them again placidly, and this time Dave catches a glimpse of the squat carapacian hunched over what appears to be a viewscreen or a set of controls, dressed in robes that cover almost every inch of its shell with a pointy bishop hat low over its eyes and a crook in its claws that it uses to tap on the screens. The other person lingers by the far wall, taller than both carapacians and with the familiar rectangular light of a phone screen illuminating half her dark face, though she's turned away from them.

GP: No, dear Witch. We have tried to grant Her Condescension a wide berth over the centuries. She reacts poorly to outright confrontation, and her connections to certain parties gave us all the more reason to avoid interaction. It has grown more difficult as her holdings have grown.

GP: However, a majjykal practitioner we are on cordial terms with noted the heightened chaos readings in this area, foresaw a clash of significance that involved player activity occurring at this juncture of space and time, and thought to warn us.

"The universe actually pulled something helpful out of its ass?" Karkat naturally takes this poorly. "I don't buy it. This is so fucking contrived. Where's the fucking catch?"

GP: Contrived is a very harsh word. Paradox space prefers serendipity and synchronicity. If such fateful spirals of memetic repetition and coincidence are 'contrived,' it is surely beyond our power to argue with it.

"Fuck that. I'll argue with it."

GP: As is your right. My dearest would know more of the philosophy behind it, if you wished to ask her.

"Well, whatever brought you here, I deeply appreciate it. Molte grazie." Feferi stifles yawn against a closed fist, and pushes her hair out of the way again. "And to your magician, as well."

"Ах. Это было бы меня."

And Diamonds Droog walks out of the shadows, with a little wave of her hand.

- -

Dave thinks he and Karkat try to tackle each other to safety at the same time, which is one of the stupidest, uncoolest things today short of the whole 'kidnapped by a Horrorterror' fiasco.

Diamonds Droog just stares at them, nonplussed, while they dick around trying to figure out who's protecting who. "Что-то не так?" Droog asks the Grey Protector, hair swinging as she turns to frown at the carapacian. Something’s odd about the whole picture, but Dave is trying to figure out how to lever the mask-jaw of this giant walking death trap open from the inside. Karkat's sides are still hurt and gaping red, is there something wrong with him? Shit shit shit not right now -

GP: We do not know. Have you all met? How peculiar.

"Nyet," Diamonds Droog says, a word which Dave understands because it's goddamn obvious, and is also such a huge lie that it could probably dwarf Jupiter with the size of its lying ass.

"Bullshit! She's Diamonds Droog!" he says, to set the record straight, before remembering escape is the main goal, here. Getting in the giant robot was a mistake. He should have known better. Feferi doesn't seem to have caught on to the urgency of this situation yet, watching him and Karkat freak out with not nearly enough worry in her eyes, but she rolls up into a crouch, eyes flickering between them and Droog.

"Даймондс Дроог?" Droog rolls the r way longer than Dave's heard it said before, her voice dubious even through the heavy Russian accent. She's mocking them, isn't she. Пис. Then recognition lights her eyes - and she groans. "О, нет. Не снова."

GP: This has happened before?

"Моя двоюродная сестра. Эта сторона семьи уехала в Америку. Они хотели, чтобы избежать преступления здесь. Представьте себе, как горд мы все из Димитра." Droog's smile turns crooked, almost hurt, before she shakes her head and looks at the three of them with a hesitant smile. It shouldn't look normal on Droog's face, considering who they're talking about, here, but it does. "Я прошу прощения обильно за то, что она могла бы сделать для вас. Моя двоюродная сестра не добрая душа. Все острые кромки, и очень горд. Димушка пугает даже людей, которые пугали её родителей, в эти дни."

Dave looks at Karkat. Karkat looks at Dave. They both look at Feferi, who looks back, just as lost as them, but with a more polite, diplomatic expression of baffled incomprehension that she turns on Diamonds Droog. Seriously, the only other language Dave knows even in passing is Spanish, and it's mostly just the swear words. "Qué?" he throws out there, weakly. The visor's not coming open no matter what he tries, even when he jams his broken sword in and tries to use it as a lever, so he looks at the GP instead, since the carapacian is the only one who might be able to translate for them.

GP: She believes that you have mistaken her for her cousin.

"Da," Droog adds, moving a strand of her hair back behind her ear. It's weird, now that Dave takes a second, less panicked look; her hair is pale, ashy blond, long enough to fall down to her shoulder blades, and could it be a wig? Because Diamonds Droog has close dark curls, and Dave doesn't think a couple of weeks is long enough for it to have grown that much. "Yah Galina Mikhailovna Drugova. Ne govoryu...English? Angliskii." She checks her phone again, smacking it lightly on the side with a faint frown. "Ah, глупо..."

The Protector lays a heavy hand on the woman's shoulder in sympathy.

GP: Her name is Galina Drugova. She does not speak much English. But she means you no harm, we think. We would not have brought her if we believed her dangerous, and she has given no sign of being so in the years our people have known her.

Karkat puts his face in his hands. "I think I'm going to throw up," he says, sounding bleak. "Dave, I'm hallucinating. Tell me I'm hallucinating this steaming heap of manufactured bullshit."
Dave shakes his head. "Sorry, dude, I think we're stuck in this one together." Not-Diamonds Droog just watches with that weirdly friendly, polite expression, oblivious to the fact that her existence is giving them a collective mental crisis. He doesn't even have a working phone to look up that name she gave on the Internet to see if she's a real life person. Sure, he can't think of a real reason why Diamonds Droog of all people would dress up in a wig and try to fool them into believing she has a cousin - but what the hell, stranger shit has happened.

"These goofballs thank her, too," Feferi says. Whoa nelly, there. When Dave opens his mouth and Karkat jerks his head, Feferi gives them the stinkeye before whipping around to beam at Drugova. "Thank you, again."

Drugova's smile widens again, and she waves her phone around as she says, "Nyet problem."

"We could still squeeze out between the bars," Karkat says in a growl.

"I'm not walking to that airport." Dave looks out, his eyes adjusting for a second from the relative darkness of the inside of the Deaconstructor to the white light outside. There's no more mist, and when he catches sight of the ground he realizes they're goddamn booking it. This thing must have amazing shock absorbers or something to run this fast without mashing them all. "Also, I have no idea where we are."

Karkat looks outside, too, closing eyes and tugging at his hair with a claw. "If she pulls a cuestick on us in here, we're fucked, you know."

"Yeah. More or less fucked than with the Horrorterror, though?"

The troll just groans. Dave'll take that as an 'equal amounts of totally fucked.' The only thing in their favor right now is that Drugova has gone back to smiling bemusedly at her phone, her chin buried in the fur that runs from the collar to the hem of her long coat, scrolling through something.

A phone.

...How desperate is Dave?

The answer, after five awkward minutes of him and Karkat hovering around like dipshits and Feferi sitting down with an impatient hiss for them to stop acting stupid, turns out to be really damn desperate. He has an addiction. "Hey, uh, can we -" he starts, breaking off with a twitch when Drugova looks up and blinks at him quizzically - and uncomprehendingly. The GP looks up too, though, and Dave makes useless motions with his hands before he gives up and just signs it, because this request is too stupid to give to Karkat as fodder for whenever their truce ends. 'Do you think we could borrow her phone? A tentacle monster broke ours. Gotta catch the bros up on the fact that we're not dead yet, back home.' He doesn't think John and Rose would be too worried right now, except that he and Karkat both left half-assed messages on Pesterchum before Gl'bogolyb shut them down. What got through the horror filter might have been enough to set off John, which would suck hardcore.

GP: We shall communicate your request.

When everything's been translated - Karkat looks at Dave's hands, aggravated, and elbows him when he won't repeat what he just signed aloud - Drugova hesitates and then nods very deliberately to Dave. She goes through what must be three different menus before letting out a tiny noise of victory and stepping toward them. Dave can't hold back a twitch of his shoulders, defensive, but all she does is hold out the phone with both hands, and when Dave gingerly takes it she murmurs something else in Russian before stepping back to lean against the wall, picking up her conversation with the GP.
again. It's not that she's acting odd, he realizes. She's acting like a totally normal, polite adult, confronted with a bunch of kids who don't speak her language. Their past experience with normal adults being pretty damn limited isn't her fault. And not the fact that her face bears a strong resemblance to a mob boss, either. Probably.

GP: The phone's signal is not strong here, she says, but she has located the English keyboard, if you wish to use it to contact your allies. Though we think you may find that the signal is not an issue.

"Let me guess. Wifi is as good here as it is under the sea," Dave mumbles, held up for a second as he deals with the standard confusion of handling someone else's phone. It's logged into some forum that's all in Russian, and his eyes skim over a line of 'α- No, v bezopasnosti? -Ω' before he figures out how to exit out of the internet window and spies the familiar golden square of a Pesterchum app. Hell yes. Hell fucking yes.

GP: The game provides.

Yeah, well, the game provides shittily, because Dave is still trying to navigate a Cyrillic Pesterchum over here. Thank fuck most of the buttons appear to be in the same place - the format of the interface looks kinda outdated, like the app is a few versions behind, but he finds the login screen and the keyboard that pops up when he goes to type in his handle and password has the regular alphabet.

Karkat naturally tries to finagle his way in on Dave's action, the asshole. "You're trying to message John," he realizes, and he makes a swipe for the phone that Dave barely dodges, holding the cell over his head while he squints and tries to figure out where the memo creation tab is. What's memo in Russian? God damn it. "Give it here, fucknugget."

"Of all the things in the world to profane, you had to shit on nuggets?" Dave shakes his head. "Fuck you, dude, I had the idea first."

Feferi doesn't try to join the contest, thank god. She'd probably win. Karkat is handsy but not exactly effective when he's disgruntled. "You two...are very strange, I hope you know."

"You're hardly fucking one to talk, Feferi."

A blank memo opens. Dave could kiss this phone. But that would be weird as hell and Karkat trying to climb him like a tree to reach the phone is already embarrassing enough with a world leader, a Diamonds Droog look alike, and Feferi all silently judging them. "This trip is going to be so lame," he says, accidentally catching Karkat in the side wounds when he tries to reestablish some personal space, here. Whoops. It doesn't look like it hurts the troll too much, though his face turns a weird shade of pale grey before he dives for the backpack full of stuff and pulls his hoodie from earlier on backwards, covering the matching lines of red without an explanation worth a damn.

It gives Dave all the opening he needs to open a memo (he hopes) and send out invites, and that's what matters. With so much going right, he feels the need to add, "And we probably won't make it to Seattle in one piece. We don't have that kind of luck."

The GP frowns at him, the rumble of the mental reply mild but anxious to reassure.

GP: We swear, we would not allow players to come to harm off the field of battle.

Karkat knows, though. "We'll probably be attacked halfway to Alaska," he says, scrubbing his hair and yanking his hoodie's hem down as far as it will go, like that'll make the injuries go away (not Dave's problem, not Dave's problem...) before whirling on Dave again with an evil look as he eyes the phone. "And kidnapped."
He can pry this phone from Dave's cold fingers, alright? "No way we're getting back home without a fight," Dave agrees, turning in another half circle when Karkat tries going on tiptoes.

Feferi stares at the two of them like they're off their rocker, but Dave's ass is quite firmly planted in this metaphorical rocking chair, thank you. "What are you talking about?"

"The plan is to take forever to get home, with as many distractions and incidents of unfathomable stupidity as possible." Karkat is hitting his stride. They're really getting the hang of this. "No doubt when we finally arrive everyone will be dead."

Dave nods sagely. "Oh, yeah, naturally." He takes a hand off the phone before Karkat can try to claw it away from the phone and holds his fist out. Distractedly, Karkat bumps it. He's struggling to keep looking grumpy - but Dave knows what a straight face looks like. Karkat doesn't have one. Dave relents, rolling his eyes, and lowers his other arm so he doesn't need to crank his neck back to see the screen. The troll stays clustered all up in his business, but as they wait for someone to respond, the signal bar in the corner of the screen full, no one gets mangled, so hey. This friend thing must be working out.

Feferi pressed her fingers to a temple, her thumb hooked under her jaw as she stares into the distance. "Mio Dio. Sono pazzi."

---

-- turntechGodhead начал записку dude that shit better mean opened a memo holy balls на
********** --
TG: yo paging rose john jade kanaya
TG: uh who else
CG: IF WE HAVE MORE THAN SIX PEOPLE IN HERE AT A TIME IT'LL TURN INTO A FREE FOR ALL.
TG: okay man if we have to keep passing this phone back and forth and swapping between handles every two seconds were never gonna get shit done
CG: I'M GLAD YOU'RE SURRENDERING QUIETLY.
TG: what no i get to tell them
CG: STOP YANKING THE PHONE OUT OF MY HAND JACKASGDFL
TT: You two are sharing a single phone? As much of a relief it is to hear from you, I see no future in which such a scenario does not summarily end in homicide.
TG: tell me about it
TG: look man well trade off i tell the first half and then you can have it to explain wtf happened with fish princess lazarus because im still boggling over here
EB: karkat?! dave! :D
TG: he is scowling in my general direction i think that means sup
EB: what happened to you guys? we've been worried sick!
TG: dude so much bullshit
TG: like theres coincidence and then theres the universe actively trying to get us all killed in the lamest ways possible for shits and giggles
TG: im sure karkat has some epic metaphor for complaining about it but he can get to that later right now hes sulking with lifey witch
TT: Did some part of this 'bullshit' entail damaging your phones to such an extent that they ceased functioning? Jade and Kanaya are still out of contact. Things here have been...well.
TG: oh shit them too
TG: uh
EB: dave...
TG: look the important thing here is everyone is currently alive
TG: even feferi who was in fact dead for a while there
TG: and were on our way back to seattle as i type so no one freak out
EB: that would be way more of a relief if you weren't being all fidgety about it now, you know.
TT: I concur. He's attempting to forestall the explanation. Brother, be a dear and put Karkat back on the phone.
TG: no way i have dibs
TG: it wasn't all that bad
EB: aaaaaaaagh just spit it out!
TG: look does everyone here remember the whole rose goes nuclear on a major city episode TG: it had great special effects so so pacing weird dialog but over all pretty solid
TG: it was like that but with shitty special effects and more feferi rising from the dead
TG: also the condesce may or may not want to have me assassinated for cutting in on her apple juice profits
EB: Dave. what the fuck.
TG: look dude i told you aj is serious business
TG: i dont know why none of you ever believe me
TT: I'm still attempting to draw the parallels between my going grimdark in New York and you and Karkat visiting the capitol. My conclusions are being thwarted by the fact that according to the news, Washington DC is enjoying a balmy spring day and is not, in fact, in flames.
TG: really cause it was all cloudy and full of grimlight shit when we got there EB: DAVE, WHY DO YOU ALWAYS EXPLAIN THINGS IN THE WORST POSSIBLE ORDER?! WHY?!??!
TG: ease up there youre channeling karkat and one karkat yacking in my ears is more than enough thanks TT: Oh dear. The caps lock. How it calls to me!
TG: rose no
TT: My thumb...how can it resist such sweet temptation...
TT: A simple caress is all it would take...
TG: oh jfc you need to get laid
TG: feferi was possessed by a horrorterror and teleported us to siberia to fight the condesce only she got herself killed and came back to life and then we escaped in a giant carapacian while supposedly a second one helped the hic punch said horrorterror in the face
TG: also were chilling with the white queens husband he says hi EB: wait, you're where?!
TG: right now like TG: not the arctic
TG: and in the end thats really all there is to say on the matter
TT: Oh my god.
TG: yeah
TG: okay here before anyone starts shouting again
CG: WHAT THE FUCK DID HE DO?
EB: karkat what the hell!
CG: SEE, I NOW I KNOW FOR SURE HE SAID SOMETHING UNBELIEVABLY STUPID, BECAUSE THERE'S NO OTHER REASON WHY HE'D GIVE UP THIS PIECE OF SHIT PHONE WILINGLY.
CG: HOW DO YOU FUCK UP AN EXPLANATION THIS BADLY?!
TT: Before anything else, can we please review the part about a Horrorterror influencing Ms Peixes's mind?
CG: INFLUENCING? IT WAS LITERALLY RIGHT THERE IN THE FLESH, I THINK WE WERE PAST THE POINT OF 'INFLUENCING' AND ALL THAT JAZZ.
EB: are you guys sure you're okay? like ABSOLUTELY POSITIVE?! i knew something was CG: YEAH, SURPRISINGLY WE'RE FINE. FOR NOW.
TT: Stop. The whole Horrorterror was physically manifested? Please, Karkat, this is important.
CG: IT GREW A TENTACLE LONG ENOUGH TO REACH US FROM THE ATLANTIC.
I'M PRETTY SURE IT WAS FUCKING REAL.
TT: That's. Oh dear. Kanaya will be so disappointed.
CG: WHY...? RUN IT BY ME AGAIN.
TT: Because there's really only one Horror this could be. People do tend to notice the massive majjikal disruption when a many-angled one successfully crosses to the physical plane, and while there have been possessions recently - my own not excepted - no elder god has transported its physical form from the Circles to Earth since the grimlight swamped the old Ukraine. It drove many magic practitioners as far to the south and east as they could go to escape that part of the world.
TT: Which just so happens to be what Kanaya was most interested in investigating in Los Angeles. Has it been filling the waters with acid and twisting the flesh of the wildlife to serve its will?
CG: ACID, YEAH, BUT MOSTLY EVERYTHING IN THE WATER LOOKED PRETTY FUCKING DECEASED.
CG: FEFERI THOUGHT IT WAS HER LUSUS, BUT IT JUST SEEMED REALLY FUCKING GUNG-HO ABOUT PITTING HER AGAINST HER ANCESTOR.
EB: i knew we should have gone to find you! :( we could have helped! are you sure you guys aren't hurt? it might have hurt you in your head, you have to check - CG: CALM, JOHN. I COULD BARELY HEAR ANYTHING IT SAID. DAVE'S THE ONE WHO CAUGHT THE WORST OF IT AND JUDGING BY HIS STEADY, UNALTERED LEVELS OF DIPSHTTERY, I THINK HE'S RECOVERING JUST FINE.
CG: FEFERI HAD TO DIE BEFORE GL'BGOLYB GOT OUT OF HER HEAD, THOUGH, AND NONE OF US KNOW IF IT'S PERMANENT SO. YEAH. FUCK. SHE MIGHT BE FUCKED UP. ROSE -
TT: Get her to me as quickly as you can manage. Grimlight's not my area of expertise, but if there's something corrosive left over in her mind, I can burn it out.
EB: also, where are you all? dave just said something about the king and not being in the arctic which is so vague.
EB: maybe we can come meet you halfway?
CG: NO, WE'RE MAKING GOOD TIME HERE. I THINK, BUT WE'RE IN AN ARCH DEACONSTRUCTOR AND I'M PRETTY SURE WE'RE ALMOST SOMEWHERE THE WEATHER'S NOT PERMANENTLY SET TO NUCLEAR WINTER.
CG: GOD, THIS WHOLE SITUATION IS INSANE. LEGITIMATELY SHITHIVE MAGGOTS. THIS ROBOT CRUSHED GERMANY BENEATH ITS FEET. IF IT'S EVEN THE SAME ONE.
CG: UPDATE - ACCORDING TO THE EXPERT HERE, IT IS THE SAME ONE. THIS THING HAS STEPPED ON NAZIS.
TT: You plan to cross the Pacific?
CG: MOSTLY GOING AROUND IT. AFTER WE DROP SOMEONE OFF. WE HAVE TO RETURN HER PHONE THEN SO WE'LL BE RADIO SILENT AGAIN. SHE'S - FUCK I CAN'T EVEN TYPE IT. IT'S TOO RIDICULOUS.
EB: hang on, would you say you're going...around the Pacific rim?
CG: I HATE ALL OF YOU.
EB: eheheh.
EB: but you'll be back soon? really?
CG: I DON'T DARE SAY ANYTHING ON THE OFF CHANCE I JINX IT. THERE'S A SHITTON OF THAT GOING AROUND LATELY.
CG: GOOD NEWS, THOUGH - OUR PLANS MAY NOT GO INCREDIBLY FUCKING WRONG AS LONG AS WE REPEATEDLY STATE THAT WE INTEND TO DO THE EXACT OPPOSITE. RESULTS PENDING.
CG: SO NO. WE'RE NOT GOING TO BE BACK SOON. WE'LL PROBABLY DIE HORRIBLY ALONG THE WAY.

EB: :///////

EB: on so many levels, not funny.

CG: HA. HAHA. LOOK AT ALL OF MY PERFECTLY SINCERE HUMOR COUGHS. APPRECIATE THEM, JOHN.

TT: We may also have a few visitors arriving over the course of the next few days. You'll want to sit down for this.

EB: urgggh, i wanted to forget about that stuff...

CG: WHO AND HOW MANY OF THEM ARE WE GOING TO NEED TO KICK IN THE BONEBULGE WITH EXTREME PREJUDICE BEFORE THEY FUCK OFF BACK TO WHATEVER HOLE THEY CRAWLED OUT OF?

TT: None of them, hopefully. Aradia and Sollux may or may not be escorting Terezi and Vriska down from Canada, though Sollux is vehemently opposed.

EB: also theres this kind of creepy guy who started emailing rose's mom out of the blue? we think he's one of the troll players on the list, and he's bringing someone else with him because the midnight crew has been bothering them.

TT: An Aradia with some future perspective has also given me a heads up that one Gamzee Makara, aka Juggaloco, will arrive here shortly after you and Dave return. Again, the exact timing is up for debate.

CG: GAMZEE MAKARA

CG: OH

CG: OH YOU'VE GOT TO BE FUCKING JOKING.

EB: you do remember him?

CG: ABOUT AS MUCH AS I REMEMBER ANY OF THEM.

CG: BUT WITH MORE REALLY FUCKING OMINOUS FOREBODING MIXED IN, WHICH IS ALWAYS A FUN TIME.

CG: WHAT WAS WRONG WITH THAT SHITTY CLOWNFUCK...WHAT THE FUCK WAS IT ABOUT HIM THAT I'M MISSING?

TT: I would suggest you give the labs a pass for an extra day, so we could head him off or turn him aside, but Aradia seems adamant that would be an even worse idea than letting him meet you. We may not have a choice.

TT: If you can't recollect why he is so violently determined to meet you, I worry about how he'd react to your absence.

EB: he wasn't all that nice to dave, but at least he wasn't around to attack him like he did to jade...

EB: we'll just have to meet him head on! as a team! i won't let him hurt you.

CG: JOHN, nah man this is getting too sappy im intervening

TG: whoops

EB: that was barely sappy at all, dave :/ let him finish what he was saying!

TG: im doing you both a favor here

EB: uughghghghghghgh

TT: And the Arch Deaconstructor...Any chance the King could tell you what the odds are of one being able to hold its own against a Horrorterror?

TG: according to him nah but the one fighting was a derse one so possibly more badass who knows TG: and condy was helping with her weirdo posse so thats a shrug from me

TT: Neither option sounds particularly promising, but let's hope the Condescension is able to drive it back, at least.

EB: we're rooting for the batterwitch now?

TT: Anything she can do to prevent that Horrorterror from reestablishing itself in some new unsuspecting city should probably be encouraged.

TT: Try not to go through Seattle on your way back, Dave - there's still a no tolerance policy in effect, and I doubt the FVRT would take kindly to a walking war-specialized carapacian gallivanting through the streets.
TT: In fact, I'm three quarters certain there's a post-war treaty on the books stating giant fighting robots are not permitted to cross international borders.
EB: vienna convention of 1950.
TG: okay karkat and feferi the undying literally just said that as you posted it im surrounded by nerds
TG: good memo everyone peace out CG: OH GIVE ME THAT.
TT: (Do we even want to know?)
TG: (shuppup theyre jus getting to the good part)
CG: WHY ARE YOU PEOPLE - NO, FUCK, I DON'T CARE.
TG: WELL I WAS GOING TO SAY SOMETHING BUT NOW THAT I KNOW THERE ARE FUCKING VOYEURS EYEING UP THE MEMO FORGET IT.
TG: (oh noes ;-;)
TG: (*;-;;)
CG: WE'LL BE BACK SOON. POSSIBLY SOONER FOR YOU THAN FOR US. I DON'T GET THE TIME POWERS THING, THAT'S ALL DAVE.
TT: Then we will watch for your safe return.
EB: you'll be careful right?
CG: YEAH, WE'LL BE CAREFUL, DUMBASS. BACK AT YOU. LET'S SEE HOW MUCH SLEEP I CAN GET BEFORE THE NEW NIGHTMARES START. I FEEL LIKE WE RAN A FUCKING MARATHON UPHILL AND THEN TRIPPED AND HIT EVERY CAR ON THE WAY BACK DOWN.
CG: I'M NEVER MOCKING YOUR HATRED OF BETTY CROCKER AGAIN, JOHN.
THERE'S SO MUCH - I'LL TELL YOU WHEN WE GET BACK. NO POINT DREDGING
ALL THIS FUCKERY UP RIGHT NOW.
EB: so you're saying even worse stuff happened than what you already told us?!
CG: TRUST ME. YOU'RE NOT GOING TO BELIEVE THIS. WE'RE SAVING IT FOR TOMORROW BECAUSE MY THINKPAN ISN'T FUNCTIONING AT A HIGH ENOUGH CAPACITY TO PROCESS IT ALL ANYMORE.
EB: alright...yeah, we found out some stuff too and it's kinda...let's just have a show and tell session when you all get back or something!
EB: <>
CG: <>, DUMBASS. NOW STOP WORRYING. WE'RE COMING HOME.

---

Magic is hard to quantify. It's known of and studied, but it tends to play hopscotch with the laws of physics in a way that makes what Jade can do look tame in comparison. Only a few people can pull it off; even fewer are really much good at it; and from the way this fight is going, Jade has the weirdest feeling that she and Kanaya might be dealing with a worst case scenario.

See, Eridan is not just any old jerk! No, sirree! Eridan is a really powerful jerk, who doesn't have any idea what he's doing. Jade doubts he's been trained a day of his life. He's good at exactly two things - shooting barely controlled bursts of magic lightning and being a jerk, and that last one takes up about 90% of his brain power at any given moment.

Probably. She's guesstimating. Uhhh...what he lacks in self-control, he makes up for in gumption?

She can't even try to be positive about this. Because Eridan is an enormous, giant jerky jerk.

But as much as she'd like to beat him up, she has her hands full trying to keep the angels off Kanaya.
They swarm up out of the shaded courtyards whenever she thinks she's made a dent in their numbers, tearing up the stone and shattering more windows to reach her more quickly. There are enough flying lizardy things that she's getting a liiittle concerned. Not that this whole place wasn't totally concerning already, just... However Eridan made them, whether through science or magicky stuff, he must have invested a lot of time and resources into it because they seem endless!

At least he hasn't gone all googly and tentacled and stuff on them. Jade sure would hate to have to fight a Horrorterror tanglebuddy on top of all this! She raises a fist and slams it down, smashing four more angels against the roof with a burst of force. Another two ping her senses as they try to slither in between Eridan’s energy bursts, and Jade shouts a warning before teleporting in close to punch one in the face. It takes her very close to one of the bright white lightning bolts lancing around everywhere willy nilly, which is actually pretty convenient! She kicks backward, judging the angle by her sense of space, and catches the second sneaky angel in the torso to shove it back into the searing beam. It punches a hole through the angel's body and cleaves it in two.

Kanaya fights on, her costume singed all over. From what Jade sees, Eridan isn't all that good at fighting: he can throw around a lot of power, but he's slow to dodge and can't aim well at all - at least, not while he's firing with his bare hands. When Kanaya kicks him in the gut he lashes out in a blind fury, which is all the opportunity Kanaya needs to duck out of the way and start slicing at him with her chainsaw again. It's just that whenever she really presses her advantage, Eridan floats out of the danger zone. Between the two of them and Eridan's manic flailing, they've reduced the tower they were standing on to rubble and moved on to the ramparts. At this rate, a ton of buildings are gonna get trashed before the battle wraps up.

Urgh. If Jade were free to go help, this would probably be over already. As long as Kanaya's perfectly capable of holding her own, though, Jade'll concentrate on wiping the floor with these angels. Once that's done, it'll be a piece of cake! With that thought to cheer her up, Jade twirls, her hood and hair flying out behind her as she seizes the next winged lizard thing to slam up against the wall. These nasty things take a while to knock down and shredding their wings only slows them a little bit; she bashes heads in as they present themselves, and that seems to do the trick!

At least the survivors haven't shown up to jump in and help Eridan or anything dumb like that. Jade wouldn't put it past him to try to appeal to Ruth and the others or use them as potential hostages (see note re: JERK ALERT above) but she can't spare the concentration to track them amid all the angel movements around her. With luck - fingers and toes crossed - Ruth has the group running for the exit. If it's still open, anyway.

Then an angel divebombs her, folding its wings and dropping like a rock, and Jade has to focus on punching things again.

Kanaya has always considered herself a no-nonsense type of troll. The world has grown progressively more nonsensical of late, which is annoying to no end. She died and got better, but she adapted to being a rainbow drinker. She learned that chaos abomination gods exist and were responsible for the Ukraine genocide, and she grudgingly had to accept that, too.

But it's all off the rails, now. She does not think there has been a single solitary hour of unadulterated normalcy since she and Rose arrived in Washington, and it makes her sigh for the days when she didn't have to believe in things like universe-creating games and past lives to soldier through conversations with her friends. None of this is anywhere close to what she trained for as a mediculler, but that has yet to prove a potent enough argument to make the nonsense less real.

All she asks is that she be allowed to punch Eridan Ampora square in the face one more time. It would give her an immense satisfaction. In fact, the urge to just chainsaw him in half and be done with it grows stronger with each passing minute, and the only thing making her hesitate is that the violetblood's clearly not in his right mind. Arguably, he has deliberately taken a sharp left turn and ripped out the steering column so he's left no way to turn right again. If she were younger and more impulsive, she might just have listened to the instincts that tell her to put him down before he turns even more feral - or worse, tries to summon his Horrorterror back for another round. In this irrational state he's worked himself up to, there's probably little Eridan wouldn't do if he thought he had no other options.

Ah, well. She can only presume that eventually, if she hits him hard enough, he'll pass out. Then she and Jade can proceed from there with less of this eye-burning light show. "Stop! That! This! Instant!" she spits between lunges, a headache twinging in her left temple as Eridan sets off another dazzling beam of white light. It flies wild, but pulses with such force that it still leaves her feeling charred around the edges when she successfully dodges. "You are being a menace!"

"An' you're bein' an interferin' hag!" Eridan screams back, dropping every 'ŋ' from start to finish, before blasting the floor out from under her.

She drops and rolls into a crouch when she lands, ducking behind a fragment of rock before reassessing the violetblood's position. His aerial advantage is truly annoying, right now; all he needs to do is destroy her footing, and he gains himself a reprieve from the posterior-drubbing he most definitely deserves. The rising cloud of dust from the wall's collapse covers her movements; she coughs once, low in her throat, before taking advantage of the dust to climb back up on top of what remains of the wall. The next lightning bolt prickles her skin before striking the ground where she landed originally. She scales the rest of the wall, one of her nails tearing painfully close to the quick when she hastily misjudges her final clawhold.

Off to her left, Eridan's floating where she last saw him, an expectant glare leveled at the swirling black dust. Kanaya takes three strides as a running start and then flings herself at him, chainsaw at the ready. She does not believe anyone will mind if they bring Eridan back short an arm or two. It'll certainly render him less of a threat to anyone unfortunate enough to cross his path.

A jangling screech and a flash of dark wings alert her to the incoming angel too late for her to adjust her leap. It must have concealed itself on the far side of the wall, still and quiet where Jade must not have sensed it. Damn.

Kanaya does not expect the fingers that grasp her foot from underneath and push her up, like a cork popped out of a bottle. "'Scuse me!" Jade calls, cheerily, her hair dazzling with green sparkles on dark curls as she meets the angel headfirst. Her hands glow as she mimes twisting them, and the angel's wing rips in two. The human seizes the other wing and she starts to somersault, but Kanaya finds herself busy tackling Eridan and is forced to direct her attention elsewhere.

Eridan's claws are ripping tears in her clothes - Kanaya raises the chainsaw in one and his hands snatch back quick enough, before she can remove them from her person with extreme prejudice. Startling him breaks his concentration and they drop back toward the ground while he tries to fend her off without giving her enough room to swing. All that appears to drive him at any given moment is self-preservation (or perhaps narcissism; the line seems to be thin where Eridan is concerned).

"Not again," he hisses, jamming his claws up against her ribcage. A high-pitched whine rises in Kanaya's ears as energy starts burning in his palms. "No-!"

One of the angels tries to pull another fast one, but Jade pulls a faster one, duh! She helps Kanaya skip out of the way and then starts pulling wings off. All she has time for is to kick the third's face in before a fresh wave hits. She swaps a rifle out of her sylladex and into her hand; Grandpa would give her such a talking to for such poor technique, she thinks, leveling the riflekind one-handed at the next nearest angel and pulling the trigger.

But the longer she fights, the less attention she pays to the extra data her goggles feed to her in the corner of her lenses, and the more she finds herself firing on pure instinct rather than waiting to make sure of her aim. She hasn't missed yet, that she can tell, so she must be doing something right! She claps her free hand into a fist and two more lizard-angels slam into each other like asteroids on a collision course.

She always uses her space sense to fight...but watching the game second-hand isn't enough to fill in what went through their heads while they busted out all those awesome god tier powers against Jack Noir. It just made her ten different kinds of envious! On the screens, Jade's powers went wayyy beyond what she can usually use on a day to day basis, and she's been dying to figure out how to do all the fun stuff that Grandpa could never have hoped to train her in. If she could remember everything, surely it would fall into place.

The White Queen said that would happen when it happened, though. Which is a pretty darn lackadaisical way to go about it! Jade is all for lackadaisicality like that normally, but -

A sharp scream, two parts anger and one part pain, cuts right through Jade's train of thought. She flips upside down to get out of the way of an angel and catches Eridan and Kanaya staggering away from each other on the ground. Kanaya's clothes are somehow on fire, and Eridan reels back with his hands pressed against a violet wound in his side, looking livid. An angel seizes the moment to come at Jade from a ninety degree angle when it thinks she's distracted; when she throws out a hand to stop it, the force it takes to jerk it to a stop accidentally punches a hole right through the angel's stomach, splattering Jade with blood goop. Right in the face.

- okay, thinking about all this in the middle of a fight probably isn't the best idea Jade's ever had. Bwahgh! She wipes it off on the back of her hand and tries to find the right rhythm again.

There is a rhythm. All jangly and punchy and at some pitch that Jade just barely can't hear. It pulses in her ears and sets her foot tapping without her noticing, and the more in sync she is with the not-music, the smoother her motions become.

It's on the tip of her tongue!

- "- you don't get to kill me again, dammit!"

Kanaya brings the chainsaw around. The magic coruscating around Eridan’s hands burns and fills the air with the scent of ozone and singed cloth, but the chainsaw drags open a line along his side, and the smell of blood will always be stronger to Kanaya.

She's still put out by the impending destruction of her uniform, but she hasn't been all that bothered by injuries since becoming a rainbow drinker. Eridan finally seems to pick up on that when his glare switches back to a look of desperation when she strips off her outermost layer and drops it to finish smoldering on the ground. She pats the last of the white flames out of the rest, the bared skin of her arms luminescent even under the light of the dome. "Then you need to stop this before you leave me no other choice. Take down the dome and come quietly, before anyone else ends up hurt by your actions." She wishes she could ask Jade where the fleeing civilians ended up - the more lightning he throws around, the greater the chances of him hitting someone else each time Kanaya dodges.

His nostrils flare in time with his ear fins. "Go have a powwow with fuckin' Gamzee, if you want to hang out so bad! You two could be the best violent asshole friends on this shitty planet. Stop questioning my authority!"

"You have no authority."

Kanaya fully expects the blast of lightning that statement provokes. Eridan is at least reliable. She can't see what it destroys this time, but she hears the rumble of falling stone behind her as she zigs out of the way. Eridan is rising like a balloon again, so she takes advantage of the nearest demolished wall, conveniently placed to serve as a ramp that lets her jump higher. She swears when Eridan zooms up out of reach in a sudden burst of speed and begins to charge up another blast of magic; she gets ready to roll and dodge when she lands.

Eridan is up high, but Jade zaps in higher. She also brings a very dead angel with her, and slam dunks the body on top of Eridan's head to slam him back toward the ground. "Special delivery!"

"Appreciate it!" Kanaya calls, though Jade warps out of sight again before she finishes. She flips the chainsaw back into a tube of lipstick to stick the landing without impaling herself by accident, grabbing the angel's lizard tail and yanking it off Eridan so she can kick him properly. He slashes her calf with a claw when it comes near, still shocky with the energy he built up. Kanaya grits her teeth through the sting and punches him instead after he straightens. He blocks it with an arm, backpedals out of the way when she swings again, and retaliates with another short burst of lightning that numbs her fingers before she sweeps her leg up to plant her shin in his side where the chainsaw cut him earlier.

He could be running out of power (these shocks are nothing compared to the massive bolts of lightning he cast earlier) or perhaps Kanaya isn't allowing him enough time to recharge between strikes. How much magic can he cast in one sitting before he runs out of strength? Observations on Rose's magic spells in the past don't translate well to a scenario like this, where Eridan is running on hope and prayers. Kanaya throws another punch, refusing to flinch back when Eridan pull the magic taser trick again on her exposed arm, and - doesn't so much kick him, as take advantage of his wide open guard to rest her foot against his sternum and propel him backward. It takes him almost a full ten seconds to get back up, but just when she thinks that he's finally run out of steam, Eridan clambers back onto his feet, a thin line of blood tracing a path from the corner of his mouth to his chin. "Why - was I ever – even friends with you?" he asks, sneering and taking a swaying step forward.

Another angel crashes to the ground between them, twitching in its death throes with its skull caved in. It reeks of troll blood; Kanaya does not know how she is going to break it to Jade that she thinks she knows where some of the bodies of the dead citizens of Los Angeles may have gone. Their shapes are different, their blood all the same muddled shade, but the scent of gore is unmistakable to her nose. She can excuse only so much on the grounds of mental instability before she loses any and all hope for Eridan having some miraculous change of heart and repenting for what he's done here. "I could just as well ask you the reverse," Kanaya points out, feeling a dull stab of regret for being petty when Eridan looks stunned by this comeback.

He recovers quickly, though; his fists clench at his sides, and he almost vibrates as he takes another step. "Whatever. Just rub it in that you fuckin' assholes only put up with me because Fef said to. I don't - need - any of you! I never did!"

Then he reaches up, and pulls the sky down.

- Jade's finishing the last of the angels when Eridan rips a layer off the inside of the dome. She's not looking up, at that exact moment, so she has to infer it from the unearthly screech that jars her out of her groove. She stumbles back from the angel in front of her and covers her ears with her hands, turning in time to see Eridan swat at Kanaya with a shallow curve of magic the size of a minivan, like she's a fly or something. The impact blasts Kanaya through the nearest building and out the other side, judging by Jade's internal radar, and then the panel of the dome crumples in on itself until it's nice and compact, a jittering ball of white magic that hurts to look at. Eridan spares Jade a glance for the first time in a long while, grimaces, and flattens the light between his palms. "Now look at this. I have to undo all my great work to deal with you insufferable people," he complains. Magic lights up his arms in Lichtenberg figures, burning through his sleeves up to his elbows.

He can recharge his powers with that? "Hey, that's not fair!" Jade spins and goes to kick one last angel in the chin; Kanaya's held her own so far, but if Eridan's gonna pull some magic cheating junk to prolong it, she's gonna need backup!

The angel implodes, leaving a grody smear and a pile of giblets on the pavement. Jade is pretty sure that's not her fault. Really! She's hit enough of these pesky things to have the quantitative evidence to show that they don't spontaneously implode upon contact.

Then more hope magic stuff wrenches out of the middle of the chunky bits left behind, and trickles back to Eridan. Five more angels pop like balloons - Jade thinks that's the last of them! - and the branching marks lance further up Eridan's arms until they meet his shoulders. "Life's not fair!" he yells back, pointing a finger at her accusingly.

Or not. Hang on. Something's solidifying there, slim between his fingers - like one of Rose's knitting needles or...uh...

The wand shoots lightning. Jade sees it coming and handsprings out of the way.

But! But, but, but! "Since when do you strife with a wand?!" Jade rolls under another burst. Looks like she's the main focus of this grumpy gills' anger, for however long it takes Kanaya to jump back into the fight. She can feel the jadeblood out there - somewhere, moving, so she's still alive. "You had a rifle earlier!"

"Since forever, obviously!" The next streak of wizard lightning takes out a spire in the center of another courtyard. "You're the witch, now duel me, woman! Stop - ugh, stop bouncin' around all over the place!"

Jade bounces from the ground to the wall with a little extra oomph. She thinks constant exposure to Karkat is making her more vindictive. "Not actually that kind of witch!" She kicks off the wall before it gets zapped into rubble and reaches out with her powers for one of the bigger chunks of rock from the shattered spire, lobbing at Eridan with a wave of her hand. He zaps that, too, but she teleports in behind him while he's distracted.

Magic flares across her senses, just weird and burny enough that Jade can't pinpoint what's happening until the next panel of the dome careens down out of the sky. Goosebumps pebble her skin as she jumps out of the way again, hand snapping down and to the side with a snap of her fingers. The next rifle she calls up accidentally turns out to be Eridan's (she's grabbing whatever the sylladex offers up first, okay?) and she takes in the empty barrel where the glowy laser power cell used to be in a blink before realizing it's not shooting anytime soon. Eridan smacks at her with the panel again and the impact shatters the obsidian road beneath where Jade was floating after she avoids the hit, the useless riflekind loose in her hands as she considers their options.

If Eridan can wish himself better with all this extra hope juice stored up in the dome, this fight could take forever! Today was supposed to be a day trip, not a fight-this-douchelord-for-the-next-week trip! Clearing out the angels whittled down the actual threats here under the dome to just Eridan, but 'just Eridan' is shaping up to be a legitimate problem.

There has to be a way to disarm him, or deplete his magic hope bullshit, or plain old convince him to stop being a jerk. Jade doesn't think either her or Kanaya can do that shoosh-pappy thing that works on trolls so well, which is unfortunate. He must have a limit, or he wouldn't have needed to draw power from the dome at all. If they could just cut him off from the dome somehow...or better yet, get rid of the dumb thing altogether...teleporting the whole thing to the Antarctic in one fell swoop is probably still not a thing Jade can do, though, which is a real shame.

The idea flutters through her mind, so odd and uncertain and new, that she nearly dismisses it before she realizes what her brain has suggested. Er - she isn't sure she can do that! Her thirteen-year-old self did it, but on a much smaller scale and with plenty of backup around to boost her powers. Worse still, Jade couldn't tell you off the top of her head the exact calculations for how the physics of it work, which would be a big red flag according to Grandpa's guidelines.

... But it would also be unspeakably awesome. And she can almost hear the silent music bated in the background, like it's waiting on a plateau for something to happen. Is that what Dave hears, all the time?

Jade lifts a rhombus-shaped section of wall and chucks it at Eridan's head, just in time for Kanaya to vault over a fallen pillar from the opposite direction of the way Eridan hit her, lit up like a firefly. While Eridan's scrambling, Jade bounces to Kanaya's side. "I'm gonna take care of the dome," she says in a rush, using a foot to push herself along when Kanaya keeps pelting towards Eridan without missing a step at Jade's appearance. "Can you keep him down here for me?"

Kanaya's tongue flicks out to lick her lip, and she nods; her chainsawkind comes up whirring. "Go."

Jade thinks it says very good things about Kanaya's personality that she doesn't waste time asking how Jade intends to pull this off. She cares more about swinging the chainsaw like a hammer to crack Eridan's wand hand aside, and Jade has a lot of respect for that as she rockets up into the sky.

Without the angels crowding around, Los Angeles is eerily still. Once Jade's past the tallest buildings still standing the sky feels too still; there's no fresh breeze under the dome and no air traffic to speak of, either. The further up she goes, the more her hair stands on end - not just the hair on her arms, but the actual hair on her head, frizzling and curling in rings as she comes to a stop a few yards short of the construct itself. She peers down between her boots to see Eridan and Kanaya whirl around each other, tiny figures accented by flares of bright magic that cast the monochrome city in dancing shadows. No more angels, but she feels a group of moving bodies right up along the edge of the dome where the hole would be, to the east.

Well, whether Eridan left it open or sealed it shut at some point out of spite, Jade can think of one way to help them get out faster. She purses her lips and whistles, the sound ringing out in the still air.

Becquerel appears instantly, ears up and alert - except that the wolf teleports in upside down, sitting its butt down on the inner curve of the dome. "Go get them out, Bec!" Jade orders, hastily, when green starlight creeps up her own legs by accident. "The others, back over by where we left you! Take them all outside so they can get to a hospital or something."

One of Bec's ears twitches to the side. A moment of doubt gnaws at Jade for a moment (because this whole thing would be ten times easier with Bec providing her with extra power and focus) but then she brushes it off, smiles, and reaches up with both hands to mash Bec's muzzle between her palms.
The wolf wrinkles up its nose and vanishes so fast all it leaves behind is a limey green afterimage. "Good boy! I'll be fine," she says, as much for herself as for the wolf that can no longer hear it, regardless, and then she turns her attention to the dome itself.

If this goes horribly wrong, at least no one but her and Kanaya and Eridan will be around to suffer the consequences.

But she doesn't think it will go wrong. In fact, something about this feels utterly right. She lets go of Eridan's laser gun and it bobs in the air. Now that her hands are free, Jade brings them up to form a triangle. It starts out close to her face, framing one eye, then drifts out until her arms extend as far as she can reach. It feels like her attention warps as she moves her hands, her sense of space blurring until Kanaya and Eridan feel distant and the dome itself stands out in perfect focus. It's huge, bigger than anything Jade's tried to lift or manipulate before, but she could map out the exact contours of the inside if she wanted to, now.

Making a black hole would be sooo reckless. Even a mini one. Jade's doing better about that, today. Once the focus slides into place, she takes a breath and folds most of her fingers in until only the thumbs and index fingers remain, twisting to take the shape of a rectangle. She loses all sense of time passing as she bites her lip - her sense of the people below blur out, too, until it's all white noise to her as she zeroes in on the dome. Her hands ache to slot together with a thunderous clap, but she fights the urge because shrinking the dome that fast might do something even sillier than making a black hole, with all this hope magic running through it.

But this is right. Music hums along her nerves, silent but roiling down to her gut like a physical wave, and it matches pace with her instead while she slides her fingers closer together, from a rectangle to a square, from a square to a shallow, eye-shaped space, until she can't see anything through the gap any longer. There's resistance, strong resistance, that tries to shock her out of her concentration and lances her with jabs of lightning.

Though now that she thinks about it, Eridan never did hit god tier, did he? Jade distinctly remembers that from one of the many, many annoying conversations with the trolls. They stopped talking to John for ages, but they never gave Jade a break. Then Eridan gave her the code for the same legendary piece of shit gun floating beside her, and went off to go kill people or something.

What a massive douche. Jade wonders whose bright idea it was to give the guy with the second worst moral compass of the trolls the power to destroy hopes.

Her palms come together with a click, and she taps her heels together at the same time. The music's still throbbing, though, so this isn't done yet. She blinks a little, her vision unfuzzing just enough that she can see a little of the sky around the scaled-down diamond of white light that's all that's left of the massive dome. Hope magic is actually pretty light and frothy, but if she pushed the density any further it really would turn into a black hole. Eridan attempts to tug it away from her with a wrench of magic but Jade waves it aside with a burst of green.

He's not god tier. He's about as strong a player as could probably be, all barely-harnessed forces of destruction and desperate wishes - but there's still a step between him and what Jade feels running through her spine at the moment, enough of a height difference that a misstep would feel like a fall.

How could she have forgotten all this?!

Her laugh bubbles up like soda from a well-shaken can, and Jade clicks her fingers to call Eridan's rifle back in front of her. Raising it up so she can peer through the scope, she pats a hand on the empty power cell before laying a finger on the trigger. When she pulls it with a crook of her finger, she uses her power to pull in.
Eridan really should be more careful about who he lets mess around with copies of his legendary piece of shit hatchright. Oh well! Too late! The lump of raw hope sucks into the end of the barrel and lodges back in the power cell. It's far more power than the gun's meant to channel; some of the power blasts out in a halo of light that singes Jade's eyebrows, and expands out in a circle around her before it loses steam and dissipates into sparkles of magic. Finally, Jade lifts her head from the scope with a grin, spinning the gun between her hands with a totally unnecessary and yet totally necessary flourish, before tucking the whole thing away in its own special sylladex card. Once it's in the sylladex, vacuum-sealed and held with the power of a god, Eridan's grasping magic (what's left of it) falls away.

Jade blinks the world back into focus.

Bravo, bravo. Quite the show...

-

After a long minute, Jade descends, green fire playing around her hair and arms in wild curls as she beams at Kanaya on the way down. When she touches down on the nearest piece of rock, a plinth nearly split in two by stray lightning, Kanaya sees that her hand-dyed boots have turned a vibrant shade of ruby red.

Eridan's mouth works for a second, and then he looks at Kanaya. His expression has gone past desperation, and anger, and into something like rapture.

"...Is she single?"

Kanaya punches him in the face.

Overhead, the sky sighs back into place, a soft, creamy blue.

-

HKSWRISEWSKH

-

And the world turns under her feet.

-

-- gardenGnostic [GG] at __:__:__ opened memo on board sup! :D -- GG: hellloooooo~~~ everyone! sorry for the wait!
TG: hey jadey :!!!
TG: got soma the parts in so dirks doin stuff
GG: that's great! we're heading back now, plus one fishy troll dude :)
GG: we're just making a pit stop to get food. i'm starving!
TT: Ah, good. Another player?
GG: oh yeah. a really...uh, well...eridan's a piece of work. :/
GG: he kinda sorta did the grimlight thing to los angeles, and he keeps changing his answers when we try to figure out whether he regrets it or not...
TG: fun timemes, fun times
TT: I'm beginning to suspect that the trolls' game session may have been just as plagued with horrors as our own. I am not entirely sure why. It's just a hypothesis that I am in no way certain of.
GG: heheh, so it's a mystery! ;) or maybe not, by the time we get back!
TT: If they've developed even a quarter of the assorted neuroses and mental health concerns that we have, I may have enough subjects to begin a private practice. Perhaps even write up my own collection of case studies to publish before the world ends.

GA: I Have Attempted To Punch Sanity Back Into Him. We Will See How Efficacious This Treatment May Prove.

TG: p solid strategos :

TG: *:P

TT: He's unconscious, I assume?

GG: actually i think he's pretending to be asleep so he can ignore us right now. brb!

TT: Save your strength, darling Kanaya. Sollux and Aradia are bringing a couple of old scourges down from Canada who will no doubt prove just as troublesome.

TT: Tomorrow. It seems more and more likely that we will shortly have a full house.

TG: we get to meet so many new peeps lyke hellssss yeah

TG: do u know how epic this is after years of a social cicrle of literally four people??

GA: I See. Perhaps This Is Why He Is Still Attempting To Avoid Speaking With Me About Their Current Condition.

TT: It could be inferred.

GA: Truly Friendship Is The Most Inexplicably Aggravating Of Platonically Transmitted Diseases.

TG: frenchfries are the best disease, dn't lie

TG: lol not correcting that one

GG: i'm back! he squeaked when i poked him! hang on a sec -

GG: say hello to everyone, dummy!

-- caligulasAquarium [CA] has joined the chat! --

CA: oh my god wwhy

CA: leavve me alone so i can wwalloww in my misery wwoman

CA: wwait wwho else is in this chat

TT: Eridan, I presume.

CA: you

GG: yeah, he remembers a lot of stuff! including talking to all of us!

TT: A pleasure to make your acquaintance again, regardless.

CA: im a good person i dont deservve this

-- ectoBiologist [EB] has joined the chat! --

EB: you guys are alive!

GG: yay! you're alive too!

TG: we;re alive!

EB: :D

GG: :D

TG: :D

CA: wwoww i dont think i deservve this either

CA: or maybe i do

CA: cod dammit

TT: The fact that everyone being alive is somehow a major achievement, given our track record...disturbs me.

TG: well i'm mostly jus going with the flow here. you guys die often?

GA: So It Would Seem.

GA: Rose, Did I Mention That Eridan Has Confessed To Murdering Me In A Past Life?

CA: thats unfair dammit you murdered me right back

CA: wwhich wwas cheatin considerin you didnt evven havve the decency to use a quest bed before risin up from the grave

GG: you don't exactly get to complain about cheating, mister! you imprisoned a bunch of people and sicced a horrorterror on them!
CA: that wwasnt cheatin that wwas past me bein an idiot
CA: and i totally apologized for it so stop defamin my good name GA: Los Angeles Is Almost Completely Depopulated, Eridan. That's A Little More Than You Being An 'Idiot.'
EB: that's horrible!
TG: holy fukkin carnage, batman :O
CA: it wwasnt that bad
GG: yeeeeah it was
GA: It Would Be Hard To Say How The Situation Could Have Conceivably Been Worse, Except That We Already Have The Ukraine As An Example.
EB: someone remind me how we're going to handle this guy and all the other trolls at the same time?
EB: because at this rate we're going to have a super powered juggalo, a genocidal fish douche, and the scourge sisters all under one roof and that's - uh - i'm having trouble seeing how this doesn't end badly...
TT: An excellent question.
CA: noww you're gonna inflict gamzee on me again? okay no one deservves that guy fuck that guy
GA: I Will Keep That In Mind As A Potential Secondary Treatment Option.
CA: dammit
TT: You and I are going to have a most illuminating therapy session when you arrive, Eridan. I can already tell.
CA: hell no. also the john-human has a point considerin howw many of us wwent on killin sprees wwhen wwe all got stuck on that meteor together
EB: oh my god. really?!
GG: uh...why would you do that, again?!
CA: too many trolls in a confined space obvviously
CA: of course wwe've practically been neutered in this half assed univverse so wwho knowws the others might be less murdery than i remember GA: I Hate That I Believe You About That Now. And I Platonically Hate You For Forcing Me To Believe It.
EB: no one is going to die. that is not a thing that is going to happen.
TT: I concur wholeheartedly. There must be a way to minimize potential casualties. Perhaps if I contact Aradia again, she'll let something slip and we can plan ahead for who might be the most likely to go off the rails.
CA: me vvris and gam
EB: you can guess that off the top of your head?
GG: i'm not really in the mood to trust half of anything this fuckbutt says ;/
GA: He Does Tend To Change His Story At Will.
CA: wwhat its not like its really a secret. rad doesnt givve enough shits to hurt anyone tavv is a pushover kar paps first and asks questions later
CA: rez loses her shit wwhen vvris is invvolved but evveryone else only shifts their asses if they get hit first
CA: once upon a time id a only said vvris but then gam transformed from dumb stoner juggalo to terrifyin nightmare creature from the abyssal depths of hell and i realized i make poor decisions that lead to dead people
CA: wwhich i am vvery vvery sorry about GG: still not buying it.
CA: augh givve me a break
TG: lovin these nicknames bmw TG: *btww ;)
TT: Well, we do have independent verification that Gamzee and Vriska are potent threats. Thank you, Eridan. We'll take this information under advisement for when everyone arrives. Hopefully the terminal will be up and running, and we should be able to access the records of your session for more details.
TT: Hmmmm...there is still the matter of all that has gone on in your current lives, however.
EB: are you thinking what i'm thinking?
TT: I may well be.
GA: What?
EB: it's still in the planning stages. don't worry, it's nothing bad!
TT: It will be rather like pulling teeth with a hammer, but most likely not dangerous. A prophylactic measure.
TG: ?
CA: can i go noww that you fucks havve movved on to vvagueplanning?
GA: No You Certainly May Not.
GG: i hope it's a party! i could use a break after today :
TT: We will explain before the others arrive tomorrow.
EB: if they all arrive tomorrow...
TT: They'll be fine, John. Don't worry. Breathe.
GG: :(((
EB: i'm good! i promise.
EB: uh, i think i'm gonna sit for a while though.
EB: hurry back, you guys!
GG: aye aye, bro! :D
GA: And Eridan Will Not Give Us Any Trouble Along The Way Will He.
CA: god no stop fondlin your damn chainsaww
-- twinArmageddons [TA] has joined the chat! --
TA: oh
TA: my god
TA: 2HUT UP
-- twinArmageddons [TA] has banned EVERY LAST ONE OF YOU DIIP2HIIT2 from the chat! - TA: ii wiill pii22 on everythiing you all love. look forward two iit.
---
"Where - why is there a - why is it always a giant sea monster? Why not a moderately under-sized sea monster? I'm supposed to be retired." Ledaei spins and gestures at the E%ïbimus uselessly.
"Aren't you going to help try to stop her?"

Tethys can hardly hear Meteos's rumble over all of Gl'bglyb's yapping. "I stood witness the day she slew the Kraken and his custodial horde. When it comes to matters of strife, I defer to her superior record. If you wish to pacify her from this battle fervor, you are, as youths say, on your own."

"Oh, for the love of - do you hear me?! You're going to get yourself killed, Tethys!" Ledaei shouts, all raspy and endearing-like. It's adorable as hell, and Tethys would appreciate it more if she weren't, you know, busy tryna not get herself killed over here.

Tethys has fought giant lusii before. Half the battle, when it comes to wrecking the shit of some upstart anemone, is taking out their custodian first. Most were weakbass punks she could crush with her little claw; others were actually pretty good.

She's always been betta.

But Gl'bglyb is no mere squiddle. Nah, this thing has real power behind it. For every tentacle Tethys cuts down, more surge up to fight back. It's slower in the open air than it would be if they took this underwater, which works in her favor. There's just a shell of a lot of it to carve through, layers on layers of tangled limbs and brackish blubber that make a quick gutting impossible. All Tethys can do is hack away, skewering and dodging and shrieking shrill as a gull whenever she spies a new patch of exposed skin to tear into, driving her way ever deeper. The longer she takes, the more poison this bitch can dump in the water - and the more cleaning that'll need doing before any work can be done to salvage the yard without everyone rising up as a glubbin' zombie, which would be a tidal nightmare.

A vast mouth tears open underneath her feet when she next lands, a spray of dark blood soaking Tethys as the Horrorterror's skin rips itself a new opening and teeth sprout from the new cavity like transparent sharks' teeth. She could survive falling in, she thinks - might even bust her ass to make a shortcut straight to the nearest stomach and eviscerate this soggy abomination from the inside out. But the buzz of psionics hauls her out of the way before the teeth can snap shut, yanking her back toward the dock. Urgency makes Ledaei's static pop, though, like being jabbed with lightning in the funny bone. Tethys snarls and, when he sets her down, launches herself straight back up onto Gl'bgolyb's flank. Turn her back on Gl'bgolyb for even a second and the thing might start reaching for the town itself.

Only a matter of time until she slips, tho. Half of her is high on the craze of battle, the part that revels and laughs aloud as she dodges a tentacle wider than she is tall to stab at a node, muscles straining to lop off five small tentacles at once. The other half realizes just what kind of lunasea this shit is. There's reasons why she didn't help salmon Gl'bgolyb, why she turned a blind eye to the hullabeluga in the Ukraine for the longest time, why she risked making herself a prawn to scratch in exchange for his promise to silence the Horrorterror's great and terrible Glub. Glubby's mediocre as Horrorterrors go, an emissary, not a noble, but under the right circumstances - a tiny pitstop of a world like Earth would be nothing if Gl'bgolyb could still sing.

And in a previous life, Gl'bgolyb did play at being lusus. Raised Tethys up, pitted her against other tyrian challengers, and watched with a languid mind, kept placid by regular feedings and entertained by raising up the dead to plague Alternia throughout the day. Her fighting style is an open book: Glubby knows all her moves.

Oh, she'll still krill this bitch, for shore. It would just take a lot longer if she didn't have backup. Electric blue and red lasers score deep pits in the far side of the Horrorterror's bulk - Tethys can't see Psii, though, just the blazing lights that mark his movements. Her strife specibus is starting to dull on one end under the constant barrage, but she can't leave Ledaei hanging if he's fool enough to play the hero again. Retired, schmired.

A black arrow fletched with cobalt blue embeds itself in the tentacle, inches from her face. "Pardon me," a low voice calls, and Tethys jumps out of there like her life depends on it, because Meteos has being doing things with arrows since at least the 1600s that would make anyone weak in the knees. She kicks off one tentacle - and then another - and a third before the arrow goes off with a soundless pop of abrupt implosion. When she looks back, grinning broadly, an entire chunk has been taken out of Gl'bgolyb's side, the tentacles in the immediate vicinity drenched in gouts of brine and blood. Down below, Meteos has another arrow in hand, fitting it to a longbow that appears to have unfolded from her arm, which is almost as tall as she is. Which is hella tall. How much shit can that troll fit under that cloak?

Gl'bgolyb, being (debatably) smarter than your average barnacle, sweeps out a tentacle the width of a semi-truck over the pier, demolishing everything in its path. Meteos, being Meteos, takes the hit instead of dodging - and then flips the shell out, seizing the tentacle with both hands and pulling until the whole thing rips off Gl'bgolyb, filling the water where the tentacle came from with a cloud of blood. The offending limb gets tossed to the side, into the clear area where Gl'bgolyb shoved most of the ships out of the way. A faint, curling grimace of disgust wrinkles Meteos's face.

She always knew she kept that troll around for somefin! Meteos may be on some other wavelength as far as social interaction goes (humans gotta name for that, but she reely does try not to pay attention to humans and whatever fool thing they've come up with this decade that ain't about rap music, alcohol, and video games) but when the girl goes, she goes hard and Tethys has mad respect for anyone with mussels like that. Meteos swings the bow back up before Gl'bglyb stops screaming in outraged shock, stepping on top of an overturned work station to avoid the water flooding over the dock before firing again. Between the three of them, they're starting to make a real dent here. "Daaamn, girl. Water you packing in those things, these days?" Tethys marvels, taking a moment to lean on her culling fork and watch the imploding arrows clear out.

Then a tendril whips around Psii, lightning fast, whipping him up and around from where he's been blazing an electric streak around the far side of Gl'bglyb, ignoring the nauseating scent of burnt seafood that wafts up when Ledaei tries to psionic his way free. Tethys curses herself for a fool five times over when the obvious ploy freezes her in place, torn between letting Psii do his own thing and the unfortunate urge to go (urgh) help him. Seariously, she thought she worked that kind of diamond pale stupid out of her system ages ago but nah. It stalls her long enough for Gl'bglyb to seize her from behind, and then the world's a rushing blur of white and blue as Tethys gets tossed up and smacked back down against the ground with an impact that breaks the roof of the warehouse that's unlucky enough to get in the way.

And the floor.

Tethys is thrown for a loop. Its eyes glow like torches as it brings two arms around to punch Gl'bglyb in one of many mouths. It has three arms total.

Talk about overcompensating.

She can be pissed about this development (how tha glubbing fuck can that king carapacian asshoal have possibly known where this base was without someone spilling the beans? She's firing everyone in a ten mile radius of her current position) or she can accept that there is now an enormous beetle tank shoving aside tendrils with one arm in order to bring clapsed fists down on Gl'bgolyb's forward head, and she doesn't have the time or patience to pitch a fit over it. She'll make time later. Drag Ledai into the hot tub, melt the tiny icicles out of her hair, break out the hard liquor, and rant the whole thing out. Yeeeee.

For now, she drops down from her perch and pushes a chunk of roof off her 2x3dent. The golden fork has been twisted and snapped in two - Glubby's doing, clearly. Dropping the rebar, Tethys hefts one half in each claw. Ah, well, as long the ends are still pointy... Once she jumps out of the smashed up warehouse Tethys takes the dockyard at a sprint, past Meteos knocking another arrow, and uses the forks to stab new handholds in the next tentacle to lash out at them. Swinging herself up, she ducks her head as another white limb whips overhead in a rush of wind. The whole body of the Horrorterror rocks as the Siege Titan winds a tentacle around one of its wrists, hauling it taut and using the third arm to swing down a sword as tall as a small building. She expects to see Gl'bgolyb peppered with holes and burns where Ledai and Meteos have been shootin' up the thing, but as she starts running down along the tentacle, jumping the second that twines around the first to try to knock her feet off, she sees a couple of scattered shots - and one blackened wound to her right, where the flesh has been gouged out and acidic blood vessels cauterized by psionics to form a deep cavity.

Huh. They got craytive and actually worked together. Coddammit, she must be getting' maudlin in old age or something, 'cause this shit feels downright inspirational. The tentacle under her feet bucks to toss her off and she lets the momentum carry her, bypassing tendrils she might still be able to skewer in favor of making a beeline for the open wound. The overgrown carapacian jams its bladekind into the far side and Gl'bgolyb shudders with enough force to make another building collapse on the shelf. Then Tethys lands on spongy flesh, and there's nothing before her but the distorted, heaving mangle that is Gl'bgolyb's insides. There are more tendrils in here that turn from knotting over deeper wounds to face Tethys. Familiar voices rage at her, the usual tough hive spiel. The bloodbrine pooling under her feet burns right through the soles of her boots, but if Gl'bgolyb is tryna douse her in acid, it's a last ditch thing and they both know it - she and Fef are probably the only two on the planet immune to the worst of that stuff. Otterwise they'd never have survived having an abomination, as a lusus in other lives than these.

Another throaty chop shudders through Gl'bgolyb's insides, the same sound the Titan's sword made while stabbing Gl'bgolyb the first time amplified as it rattles Tethys's teeth in her jaws. Knowing Gl'bgolyb can hear her just fine, she tilts back her head and laughs. The tendrils stop curling in hesitation and stab at her, more bursting through the pulsing floor to wrap around her from behind, but they're small fry - people aren't manta get past the exterior defenses without dissolving or goin' nuts or worse.

Is killing a Horrorterror murder or genocide? Maybe a public service? Whale, that's not really her style.

But in this case, she'll make an exception.

-

Its body is dying.

How inconvenient.
Gl'bgolyb never paid much heed to that part of having a body. Utilizing a corporeal form on the physical plane has its perks but is also cursedly hard to pull off, with upkeep truly a hassle in terms of feeding. However, it has its advantages, and Gl'bgolyb's interactions with the Peixes necessitated it.

Last time, at least, the physical death was quick. Now, with Tethys and her pawns carving deeper and deeper and the Skaiasprint fighting even as its dark limbs sag from the concentrated acid directed at them, Gl'bgolyb finds itself facing a slow death. The urge to kill Tethys and free itself from the last of Scratch's meddling is strong, but the drive to survive is stronger still.

Any Horrorterror worth its salt knows to have an out. Gl'bgolyb's chosen method for a while now has simply been...less than palatable. Downright nauseating, truth be told. But Tethys tears into one of its internal sacs, and the stabbing agony of concentrated digestive acids leaking out makes the decision for Gl'bgolyb. Fleshy mortal forms come and go, but hiveminds are forever, as the saying goes. Let Tethys content herself with the corpse of this singular body; Gl'bgolyb has better things to do.

It takes some hunting, though, precious moments trickling away as the war carapacian takes advantage of Gl'bgolyb's distraction to tear free a string of knotted intestines. Other parts of the hive set themselves to run distraction, seizing one of the other trolls and dunking them underwater so that Tethys has to turn and dive to retrieve them. Love is a filthy weakness, really. She should have been trained out of that sessions ago.

The majority of Gl'bgolyb's concentration delves inward, where it can sense its last resort. Even as voices go silent, stillness creeping through the outermost tendrils where the damage is too great for the minds to anchor themselves, there is still the most precious of treasures, the power lodged at the core of its minds, the one it would never risk losing no matter how blasphemous and despicable the source of that power may be.

But with this, jumping back from this wretched physical plane to the angles beyond is easily accomplished. Gl'bgolyb clusters all the awareness left around the kernelsprite at its center, a burning spiropathy of power, and allows Skaia's hateful pattern to anchor it as it wrenches free from the useless, dying carcass of a soul-case that has allowed it to touch this plane of existence for so long.

The benefits of having been prototyped by dearest Feferi. No matter how powerful the warping chaos of Gl'bgolyb's minds, it has yet to make a dent in the kernel. Every line is perfect, every curve smooth, every angle proportionate to the whole. It's anathema, repellant, and any other Horrorterror would have long since smeared the spiropathy in a fit of unconscious rage, melted it into slag and spit in the face of such flawless order. Not even Leviathan, one of the most colossal and imperious of the grimdark, had the self-control to hold the pattern inviolate in its minds, even after Gl'bgolyb so generously shared the knowledge.

Perhaps the prototyping changed Gl'bgolyb. Certainly other hives have whispered such things, but the tittering of swollen legions and thorny hordes means nothing compared to the power of summoning spiropathy. If they cannot recognize the insult to Skaia that can be achieved by perverting the blasted thing's gates to chaotic purpose, that is their deficiency, not Gl'bgolyb's.

Tethys shouts after the kernel as Gl'bgolyb rips itself out through the sagging flesh of its old body and rockets up into the sky to escape her reach. To bring another body forth would require the help of a liaison, a tanglebuddy willing to summon Gl'bgolyb forth. But there is no one, now. Scratch, who summoned it to serve his purpose on Alternia, is out of the question, and both Peixes are rebellious and hard-hearted, so cruel, so cruel.

No body, then. But a gate back to the Furthest Ring is still possible. Other Horrors reach out to touch the minds of potential tanglebuddies all the time, without even a gate to let them through. Gl'bogolyb has no tendrils now to mark its spirograph, no dearest daughter to carve the shape for it, but no matter. As long as it can fall back to the space between stars and regroup, even if the trip is only one-way...

It must be done. Gl'bogolyb snarls around the kernel for a moment, the knotted coils of its minds frustrated by the alienness of the perfectly exact nature of the powers contained within the damnable thing, before it succeeds in making the kernel flash and cast a faint gate against the underside of the nearest cloud. So close, so close, it has to be enough, for without a body more of its minds continue to unspool, and – Ledaei coughs up half a lungful of water when Tethys fishes him out. He fumbles to grip her arm with his off hand, shivering like a guppy in the cold air, and that's how she knows he's done. His psionics are still on but they've drawn in tight around him, focused on warming and burning off the slick sheen of Gl'bogolyb's glubbin' acid. He's in no shape to go lighting up like this, not at his age. Tethys arrows for the shore and pulls them onto one of the docks that's not flooded. She can't afford to fuss over the buoy, though - she ditches him and starts running again, eyes peeled for the next tentacle to come down on her. The Titan and Meteos won't be enough to distract Gl'bogolyb, not with how many minds that would need to be distracted at once.

She's just in time to witness the most cowardly abscond ever. At first she thinks Gl'bogolyb has gone oddly still, trying to pull some new trick - and then something bright and whirling tears out through the Horrorterror's back, streaking up into the sky like a meteor in reverse. The whole immense squid body crumples in under its own weight as gravity keelhauls it, and Tethys finds herself screeching to a halt, furious for a whole new reason as Gl'bogolyb's hivemind slaps an open gate against the underside of a cloud and vanishes, taking all the mist and unreality with it.

Cheapest. Copout. Ever. Tethys has lived through a coddamn ton of bullshit, but this really takes the cake. Ledaei smooth-limps up to start talking her down when she starts taking her rage out on the nearest available target - one of the beached ships, and each hit she lands just makes her howl harder, because she needs the damn things intact but she can't stop hitting it - and she's half out of her head, ready to rip out his throat with his horns the instant he lays claws on her, how dare, how dare he -

Too smart for that, her buoy is, by far. He talks at her in that damn voice without coming in range, even when the words sink into her ears like dull noise, and when she stops whaling on the poor damn ship hull he keeps at it until she's just breathing hard, gulping like a child until the sounds stop creeping out of her throat. She looks up and Gl'bogolyb's carcass is still slumped over, vacant and infuriating beyond words. "It's gone now," Ledaei says, like that's meant to be calming, but Tethys can only tense for a second before the sound of him smooths her back down. "Screamed it all out, yet?"

"Never," Tethys grumps at him, feeling her hair slowly freeze up into a chilly weight all down her back as she starts picking her way back to the yard. She could jump back to the central dock, where most of Gl'bogolyb lies, but she's really feeling the cold after that last dunking, and her horns throb down to the core with a numb ache that says swimming in the glubbing Arctic ain't on the agenda right now. "C'mon. Gotta take a look at this load of carp schooner rather than later."

It's not just Gl'bogolyb checking tha fuck out, either. There's that damn Titan, too, a towering black figure in the clearing water that's half slag. If the GP wants that shit back, the pilots'll be hauling it back on their own damn dime; its legs look so deformed by G'l'bgolyb's efforts that it's probably stuck in place, ready to topple over onto one of Tethys's ships any damn second. They're scrambling up there, the jagged teeth of the giant rook's mask open so that the pawns on top of the turrets can clamber back down to chat it up with the rook pilot. How bad of an international incident will it be if Tethys has them culled? GP ain't much of a threat, but any shitstorm here will draw Scratch like a vulture to carrion. Today has been bad enough as it is.

Plus, of all the wrigglers in the world to show up at her door - Fef had to bring the AJ kid? For glub's sake. And the Signless's get decided to rub his mutant blood in her damn face. How the fuck is she supposed to turn a blind ear to all her little whisperers telling her about the candy red-eyed hero smearing his shit hemotype all over Seattle when he chooses to toss himself into her net?

She glances at Ledaei. Subtle like. He's close behind her, still not touching. If he noticed before the grubling did the sensible thing and left, he ain't saying so. Old eyes and all.

But she knows the things the Psiioniic would do for his Signless. 'Retired' won't mean shit if she doesn't play this right. If he saw. This might be salvageable if he ain't running for the hills yet, though. Tethys wipes a lingering streak of horror brine off her cheek, thoughts turned calculating rather than enraged as she skirts the edge of the raised platform to the dock Meteos stands on. One of her assistants has crept out from wherever they hid themselves already, a violetblood with shredded ear fins that supplies her with a new strife specibus and a phone all at once, her voice fluttering and soft as she whispers, "My Condesce, there's something - someone -"

Oh, she is not in the mood. "Yo! Spit it out or clamscray," she says, whirling to walk down the pier with her hair clattering. If that damn girl and her fuckbuoys have the motherfucking gall to come back after all this shit, Tethys refuses to be held responsible for -

"Mother."

Tethys doesn't need to turn around to know that voice. It stops her in her tracks, all the same.

"Sonny Jim," she says, bitter as unsweetened cocoa, without looking back. If her kid has something to say, he can spit it out of his own accord. Jimmy Harley made it clear a long-bass time ago that he did what he liked, damn the consequences. Damn her. Didn't want her name, didn't want her money, didn't want her watching his back.

Course, then his health started failing, right when he needed it most. Humans, lowbloods, coldbloods - all of 'em, so damn fragile, gone in half a heartbeat and what's an old gill like Tethys to do when they come to her, hearts worn thin and turned on by their own kin, but take them back into her arms like the soft glubbing touch she is?

Sure, Jimmy took off again the first chance he had when Meteos finished up, but after the first dozen times he pulled shit like that, Tethys stopped keeping count. Wrigglers, honestly. At least Jo visits when she isn't busy with meddling of her own. Jim-jam ain't stopped playing at raybellious teenager since the day he figured out that damned dog of his could get him off the island scot-free.

"You've been busy, I see." His voice is all metal now. The metal boots make a different sound as Jimmy steps from the yard to the dock, and Tethys stiffens, swallowing the growl that curls and tickles in her throat. "I came to investigate why the E%ībimus would leave the country so abruptly. What have you done, Mother?"

If she looks at him, she's gonna punch him, and then Meteos will sulk for a year that they don't have over damage done to her work. "You'd know if you'd stuck around to kelp me out over the years,
She forks a nearby chunk of dismembered tentacle and lifts it up to squint at it, making like she's actually gonna get something out of the effort. This body's plenty dead, but Glubs'll be back. That fucking tentabitch never knew when to quit.

And now Ledaei's looking back and forth between her and her cyborg kid, a sallow cast to the troll's face as he frowns. How awkward. She's gonna catch shell from him when they're alone, which - okay, she's not too opposed to that - but it'll be the 'mother' thing stumping him, and she doesn't explain her damn kids to anyone. Meteos is the one closest to knowing the truth, shrimply out of need, but if it doesn't have to do with some new form of science for her to sink claws into, Meteos doesn't tend to ask questions.

Scratch might know. He knows a lotta things. But she keeps feeding his business ventures with generous infusions of boonbucks and battin' her eyelashes a lot, and the creepy fuck doesn't try to spy on her overmuch. She doesn't owe him a lick of loyalty, but staying on fake-frondly terms with the herald of the endtimes pays off where it counts.

"Does Joanna know about all this?" Jimmy says, like that's supposed to intimantadate her or something. Ha - he isn't walking toward her anymore, though, because he damn well knows he couldn't take her. The boy hasn't let her in arms reach since he last had flesh. He has no idea, none at all.

All she gives him is, "Knows enough," cryptic and short and to the point. "Go away, Jimbo, I can't deal with you riding my bulge like this today." A rap of her trident against the ground strikes off a nice note to stalk off to, and then she starts tromping through the congealing mass of viscera and tang. Any spark of a good mood she might have started today out with didn't stand a chance against this past hour. Gl'bogolyb and Jimmy and a mutant and that apple juice swilling landlubber, all in the space of a day? What a load of gullshit. Heads are gonna roll for this.

Picking her way to the end of the dock takes longer now that she has to gently punt the ships back under the water wherever Gl'bogolyb's thrashing shoved them up over the path. Meteos stands on the beached prow of one a few yards from the water, her raven-blue hair knotted back in a tail at the nape of her neck and her targeting goggles pushed up to rest at the bed of her horns. The bow has folded back up into her sleeve, like it was never there. When Tethys shoves the second to last ship back under the water, the hull complaining as it scrapes the bottom of the bay, Meteos pulls her eyes away from the fading circle of power where Gl'bogolyb made its hasty abscond, the yellows of her eyes almost as stained with indigo from broken capillaries as Tethys's are with fuchsia. No, Jupiter and Meteos won't last much longer - Jupiter's a real basshole most centuries, born long before Meteos ever wiggled out of the slurry, but the old goat ain't been right in the head since he got stupid enough to provoke his monster of a descendant into frying half the eggs in his pan. They'll probably end up dying within a decade of each other at the rate Jupiter's failing.

All of them, dying. None of them built to last. How long until she's the only one left standing all over again?

She needs a drink like damn.

But Meteos is waiting, head cocked to one side and not quite looking Tethys right in the eye. "Move, or I'll dump you in and you can sleep with the fishes," Tethys grumbles, raising a foot to plant against the nose of the ship; the blueblood steps obediently off the side so Tethys can shove the submarine beneath the surface. "How bad's the damage, gillfrond?"

She doesn't expect an answer in boonbucks; the E%ibimus doesn't tend to think in terms of money. Using her heel as a pivot Meteos looks around them, taking in the battered fleet. "The greenbloods' station will require extensive repairs, my Condescension." The troll points out to their left, and Tethys leans out to see where she's pointing at. "At least two of the hulls have significant breaches, and will require repressurization before work may recommence." Another gesture, this one with a sigh. "The ninth may need to be scrapped entirely and begun anew. This may set the process of upgrading back by as much as three days."

So not as bad as Tethys thought. Cod definitely be worse, but this much is bad enough. They need to get this show on the road, and even a few days lost puts this entire arm of the fleet behind schedule compared to the other outposts. She wanted to start on Australia as early as Monday, but to begin the process Meteos would have to trim back her voidy thing to let the transportalizers work, and like hell is Tethys letting Scratch get an eyeful of all this before everything is good and ready.

Then Meteos gives a tiny jolt, her eyes fixing on something over Tethys's head, and the look there is familiar - eyes keen with interest, and the urge to reexamine old work. "What, Jim?" Tethys asks impatiently, her neck stiff as she looks out over the fleet, combing her fingers through a section of her hair to keep them from reaching out and shaking the boy down to the bolts. She didn't even heard him squelch his way over to them.

"You know what is coming." Presumptuous brat. He's not wrong, but still. A metal hand sweeps out in the corner of her vision and Tethys grimaces and turns her head further away. "What do you think you can accomplish here?"

"Whatever I want," Tethys breathes, so soft it's nothing but a sigh to her ears. "You don't get a say, Jimmy Crocker," she says, louder, all spite. "Go back to your spy games. Mother's busy."

A light touch ghosts over her shoulder; she opens her mouth to wrench around and bite it off when she realizes it's too soft and warm to be metal. Ledaei. "I'll tell you later, starfish," she tells him, soft as she can manage. "He doesn't stick around."

"You should not be using the rockets for such prolonged periods. They are deteriorating," Meteos says, eyes fixed on something low to the ground but still interested. Tethys ain't looking, dammit. "Maintenance is in order."

Jimmy is all affected cheer and gumption in a flash, saying, "I am afraid I can't stay, good chap. Just came to see what all the ruckus was about, and make sure you were well. Certainly got more of an eyeful than I bargained for, with all this hubbub!"

Shell naw. Tethys reaches up and snaps her claws as close to Meteos's face as she can manage, and receives a faint look of confusion in return. "No. Maintenance can wait, girlfrond. We got us a coddamn fleet to rebuild." Ah, and there's the reproach. "I said, no. You can get reaquainted with rockets shoes after you've done yo thing with real rockets."

A few more moments of the not-staring contest, and Meteos draws her goggles back down over her eyes in silent answer, nodding stiffly as she shuffles past Tethys toward land. Awesome. Fintastic. But Jimmy is still hanging around, and that's putting her in a truly crappie mood. "So we part on the same terms as last time, then?" he asks, all philosophical like - as if he didn't set those damn terms himself. Shellfish bastard.

"Whatever you say. You shouldn't be here in the first place, wriggler. #getoffmylawn" Her half turn is almost enough to let her look at him, as she gestures with a tired claw to wave him off. "I ain't picking either of you off the floor if you get yourselves wasted. Think you'd learn betta than to waltz up to family with a perchant for offin' kin after Jo and her boy and their thing." There. That should be good enough.

She has a lot on her mind, aight? It's the only excuse she has for how she could fuck up so royally, after all this time. "What," Jimmy says, flat and cold - and Tethys realizes her mistake a full sentence too late. She lifts her head slowly and turns back to face him at last, her face stuck on a remote emotionlessness to match his own mask.

"I warned you," is all she can think to say. Words never come easy, with Jim. "I told you both, stay the shell away from Seattle. I told you, don't trust 'em. Give them a wide berth, don't give that puppet basshole a reason to light that fuse. It isn't that hard to comprehend, is it?"

And they've done it - mostly. Jimmy flouted her (always does) but he didn't make direct contact with any but his girl. Safe enough, because from what Tethys has teased out of Scratch the girl is clear. Neither of Tethys's kids could bear to keep from sticking their noses in where they didn't belong, trying to scrabble their way into Scratch's shenanigans, but they haven't been near the plant or the boy in years. They've been fine.

But they've got funny human ideas in their funny little human minds. Tethys knows descendants - she's got an inkling on as to how adopted kids work after all this fuckery - but any further down the line than that, why would it matter? She kept her kids safe from their kids, and good riddance.

It's fucked now, though. She needs to work on keeping her glubbing mouth shut.

"Tethys," her boy says, his body all Meteos's work, the growing horror radiating from him despite that all his own, "Tethys, what have you done."

"Better question - what am I not puttin' up with today. Yo bullshit, son." Shaking off Ledaei's hand, Tethys marches off the edge of the pier and onto a tentacle, fixing her eyes on the far end of Gl'bgolyb where it trails off into the deeper waters of the bay. This corpse isn't gonna move itself, after all, and if she waits for enough of the icebreaker ships to get in gear they'll have festering Horrorterror slime everywhere. She can at least start shifting what she can move under her own power.

She did what needed doing to keep her wrigglers alive.

She only has so much caring to go around.

The water is cold and dark and deep as she sinks down, far enough down that James Haoaarley could never follow, her blood an icy crawl in her veins.

- and with a sigh of relief, Gl'bgolyb passes into the dark beyond the Furthest Ring. Passing through earlier, with Feferi insistent that Gl'bgolyb keep her playmates from going mad from the sight of true chaos, had been a boring matter, a shortcut to avoid having to usher silly players around their tiny world's oceans to reach Tethys's pocket of void. Aside from that, it has't been back to the Ring since the fools in the Ukraine summoned it in their mad rush for power. Desperate times had called for desperate measures, and Gl'bgolyb had needed to press upon other minds before the correct one agreed to consign his fellows to its tangled embrace and bring it forth to assure their dominance.

A shame. It thinks it may have lost those minds in the rush to abscond. What a pity. They'd been so useful.

What to do, though? For a moment, Gl'bgolyb finds itself at an unpleasant loss for ideas. Scratch's conditioning directed it towards trolls of the Peixes bloodline, just waiting for the prime moment to unleash its once great and mighty Glub and end it. But no more.

Now, picking its way between the malignant cracks that encroach on the Furthest Ring and the severed limbs of those horrors too slow to escape time's fractures, marks of the new Lord's entropic passage, Gl'bogolyb ponders. It is small now, smaller than it has been since it first splintered from its original host hive. Gl'bogolyb can feel the rustling, coiling sensation of motion out in the dark, the nests and hollows of other hive minds full of watchful eyes that blink into another angle when Gl'bogolyb turns eyes back on them. Oh yes, they are watching, and waiting. Not all Horrorterrors would prey on their own, but Gl'bogolyb is limping and weak, and to be cannibalized would be a dreadful way to go.

The first order of business, then - find straggling minds to add to itself and regain some of its power. Simple enough. The kernel is almost concealed now, wrapped in careful layers of screaming minds. Yes, this can be done. Revenge on the Peixes can bide for a while; the Lord still has time to kill.

Gl'bogolyb pauses.

And a thorny tendril slams into it from an angle that Gl'bogolyb can't see, crushing its diminished hive against the scraped stone of a barren nest. Gl'bogolyb tries to slip out - backwards in a virgule, there is empty space fit for a small hive to escape through. But it rams into a thorn that was not there before, the clear diagonal path suddenly choked with blooming roses.

Gl'bogolyb pauses.

- why Leviathan? Why now? There is not much by way of mutual respect between grimdark and grimlight, and less than that still between one of the eldest of the noble circle and a splinter as relatively recent as Gl'bogolyb. Leviathan is old, its influence exorbitant. The last time they tangled, Gl'bogolyb avoided annihilation only by the skin of its hive.

And by giving up information that otherwise would have been torn from its minds with a flick of Leviathan's thorns. Information that could leave only one possible explanation for this.

Leviathan allows Gl'bogolyb to hem and haw for a moment, scrambling for a way to slip between the flowers. But Gl'bogolyb finds itself caught between the nest and eye that pins it in place. Attempting to dissolve the nest back into chaotic nothingness has no effect - Leviathan keeps reforming it with lazy flickers of intent as it inspects Gl'bogolyb's minds with ominously bemused minds. Yes.

Leviathan's words are a trap. For a moment, Gl'bogolyb almost thinks the voices are coming from within its own mind - an ancient trick, one fit for luring in tanglebuddies. In a desperate bid, Gl'bogolyb sacrifices the bulk of what it has left, tossing up a morsel of its hive and dodging with the core for a slim gap between the grimdark roses and the thorny tendrils.

Leviathan appears to contemplate this for a moment.
But it is not in the nature of Horrorterrors to keep a promise. That would be too predictable of them. The more eccentric might keep a promise just to change things up, but Gl'bgolyb is coming to the sickening conclusion that this is not one of those times. A dark tendril taps it just over the spirograph barely concealed in its stomach, a sickle moon of a grin widening on another of Leviathan's arms mocking. "Y' O' U' R' R' E' R' I' G' H' A' T' U' S' G' L' " B' G' O' L' Y' B' D' E' B' Y' O' U' T' H' I' N' K' T' O' Y' O' U' R' ' S' E' L' V' E' S' S' ' L' L' Y' G' R' I' M' I' D' A' R' K' $' P' A' W' N' I' S' E' S' W' E' K' N' O' W' Y' O' U' D' D' O' H' S' W' E' K' N' O' W' H' A' V' I' N' G' T' H' ' S' P' I' R' O' G' R' " A' P' H' S' S' ' H' A' P' E' I' S' N' O' T' ' S' U' P' F' " T' C' I' E' N' T' T' S' I' F' I' ?' T' H' A' " T' I' S' W' H' A' T' G' I' V' E' S' Y' O' U' S' U' C' H' " F' O' C' ' U' S'.

Gl'bgolyb casts out for the touch of another hive - there has to be another close by, a scavenger looking for scraps. If it can coax one out, perhaps it can serve as a distraction. A tactic that is worse than desperate. But there were eyes watching, all around -

Yet Gl'bgolyb can feel only Leviathan.

In a rising frenzy, it reaches out to every den and nest in sight, screaming mentally.

All that rises up in its wake is more of Leviathan. All that rustle and motion that Gl'bgolyb felt earlier, that it attributed to the residents of these territories...all of it is Leviathan. The cracks in time are not near enough to have ripped so many hives apart without leaving a trace. The tentacles turn Gl'bgolyb over and over, not consuming outright but with stickers that peel away minds layer by thin layer.

And still, there is no sign of another hive. Leviathan stretches on, an endless morass that fills the empty spaces with grimdark vines and thorns and blossoms the size of suns.

...Damn.

Gl'bgolyb can think of only a scattered few Horrorterrors who have ever attained the kind of density and scope and depth Leviathan now boasts. Worse yet, there are angles to it that Gl'bgolyb cannot see, more minds and thorns and tendrils beyond comprehension. This speaks of cannibalism, of a feeding frenzy that Gl'bgolyb cannot believe any grimdark horror would ever engage in. How large is Leviathan now? How much longer can the hive keep swallowing before it reaches critical mass, and is immobilized by its own conflicting urges?

G' R' A' N' D' N' E' S' S' ' F' L' A' T' T' R' E' Y' ' W' I' L' L' G' E' T' Y' O' U' T' E' V' E' R' ' W' H' E' R' E' ' T' E' H' A' T' M' A' T' E' E' R' S' ' W' ' T' ' H' I' N' ' K' " Y' O' U' T' W' ' I' L' L' ' F' ' N' D' ' Y' O' U' T' ' A' ' P' ' P' R' O' V' E' ' O' " F' O' U' R' ' A' ' C' ' T' ' O' ' N' ' S' ' S' O' O' N' E' ' S' ' U' O' T' ' G' H' ' A' ' L' ' L' ' T' ' H' ' E' ' O' " T' H' E' R' S' H' A' V' E' ' A' N' D' ' O' N' C' ' E' ' S' W' E' E' R' ' M' A' E' A' " I' K' A' H' S' " M' O' P' S' ' R' U' ' U' ' N' N' I' N' G' ' " W' E' ' S' H' A' ' L' L' ' B' E' T' R' U' ' U' ' L' Y' L' E' G' I' O' N' ' ' H' ' "

A tendril stabs inward, and the warped tangles that hold Gl'bgolyb together fall apart. The last of Gl'bgolyb's minds drifts away, a skein trailing on the end of a thorn, while Leviathan secures the spirograph in a single tentacle. But there's still awareness, a steady, burning sense of self, a personality that has pressed itself so close to the pattern of the kernelsprite that they may as well be one.
It makes one last valiant effort.

Leviathan studies the sprite.

And then swallows it. One of the oldest mouths does the honors, digesting the last of the personality that used to be Gl'bgolyb so that only the kernel remains. Leviathan waits until the foul, glittering thing rests deep in a thirteenth stomach, enfolded in bloodbrine and sharp acid. Even immersed in the grimdark at Leviathan’s core, the kernel shines on. This is no mere mental image or cheap copy that would melt at a moment’s indiscretion. It is motif made corporeal, all of Skaia’s patterns and songs and secrets compressed into solid potential.

It will serve.

Leviathan settles to wait once more, the kernelsprite a fluttering light that gleams from within its belly. It whispers to itself with voices that could tear a sun in two with the force of its volume. It is so vast now, so many, that the whispers are mostly raw noise, like the feedback from a thousand microphones pressed to a speaker. A touch, so gentle and soft, brushes against the minds of the players it has collected ties to, before subsiding back into dormancy. Rose might have recognized the touch if she could feel it, but the silly girl has ensconced herself in the numb of the void as though that will save her. The second has been left ragged by Gl'bgolyb - it can wait. The third is – urgh. Never mind. Leviathan would really rather not.

And the fourth is a temperamental thing that snaps back with a giggle, sweet as hard candy crunching between rotting teeth.

For Leviathan has watched, and waited, and learned from the very best.

"TH'ISTS N'OT UNIT'Y. T'HIS 'IS 'POW'R.".

Chapter End Notes

SMACKDOWN FAKEOUT EXTRAVAGANZA PSYCH!!! Also the soundtrack for this entire chapter just became the Pacific Rim theme song. Do you know how long I've been waiting to have the giant alien sea monster fight the giant robot analogue by an icy coastline?

Weird...something's missing, isn't there...eh, it couldn't have been too important.

Anyway, next up we have Chapter 24 - DiScOrD aNd DeFeAt :o) DiScOrD aNd DeFeAt :o)

Chapter Summary

From the edge of harsh derision,
From DiScOrD aNd DeFeAt,
From doubt and lame division,
We pluck the fruit and eat;
And the mouth finds it bitter, and the spirit sweet.

Chapter Notes

...It's going to be a long day. /cracks knuckles/

Also, I'm never entirely sure what qualifies, but possible strong scopophobia and/or trypophobia warning for the Aradia section - it's one of those extremely close up photographs of an eye by Suran Manvelyen, and those things freak me tf out even if I don't have any particular phobia about it. It appears between the paragraph that starts with 'Gamzee cocks his head to the side' and the one that starts with 'And then a stack of cards that glitter like rainbows,' if that helps you avoid it.

If you or someone you know may be an alcoholic, please do not be Dave.

See the end of the chapter for more notes

Sunday, March 30th

She has to make time.

Just a little. Not so much as would be noticed. But she has to do it nonetheless, and that sets dangerous precedent.

It gets them to the edge of a valley in the middle of the Cascades, though she elects to keep Vriska and Terezi as unaware as possible. Sollux is strung thin with the effort necessary to keep his dreamselfs active and focused for so long, and in the end it takes them two extra days to reach Lalonde Labs. A three day trip for them, and only for them - the rest of the world continues from Saturday to Sunday, as normal. The most anyone would have noticed might have been a passing blip in their perception - a lecture that seemed to last far longer than an hour, a clock that refused to let the workday end, some poor soul wandering into an empty school, certain it should be Monday already - while Aradia pours as many extra hours as she dares into the bubble around the four of them.
Her right eye stops working shortly before they touch down. It could have been worse. Time could have taken a lung, or another kidney. Halving her sight is a pittance, and she's relieved to have drawn no more attention from the Lord than that.

Aradia understands and accepts that the end is coming. She looks forward to seeing how it all crumbles, in the end, actually! But the more the cracks in time consume of her, the more she worries she might not live to witness it for herself, which would be a real shame.

No time to waste (heheheh) on such gloom and doom, though! There's still business to attend to, and her business partner isn't exactly the most reliable of people.

"You three can head down, if you like," Aradia says, brushing Sollux's cheek with a claw as she turns away from the valley toward the trees. "There's something I need to wait on before I follow. Nothing much exciting will happen, I promise."

Vriska snorts, kicking a pinecone and sweeping her foot across the grass. "Suit yourself. I'm 800% over talking to you people," she says. Terezi follows hard on her heels, the two of them bickering quietly - or what passes for quietly in any argument in which Vriska is involved - as though that will keep Sollux from overhearing their latest squabble. Sollux grimaces and trails after them, his glasses lifted so he can press the pads of his claws to the heavy, sallow bags that have developed under them.

Aradia isn't sure how much longer Sollux can bear up under the strain of splitting his mind and his dreamselfs as he has been. But soon, it won't matter anymore. What comes next requires absolutely perfect timing, which will be on Aradia's head, not his.

It also depends on a certain someone coming through for her. Passing interactions with future copies of herself, including a few that did not quite make the alpha timeline, have taught her the odds are terrifyingly slim, but not unbeatable.

Sollux, Terezi, and Vriska are a trio of dots trailing around the outer edge of the lake by the time the rustling in the undergrowth rouses Aradia from her calculations. A discordant, inharmonious buzz touched the back of her mind several minutes beforehand, just light enough to make her swallow giggles rather than screams, but Aradia continues to stand at the edge of the treeline, the very picture of serenity, her claws folded over her stomach as she waits patiently for them to make their way to her.

Tavros rolls himself out from between a pair of gnarled trees, pinprick teeth biting his lower lip as he concentrates on navigating between surface tree roots that rise up in bumpy webs along the ground. He glances up in consternation as the downward slope becomes more obvious, and blinks when he sees Aradia waiting for him. There's almost a glimmer of recognition in his look, deep in the bafflement, and Aradia smiles as she steps forward and bends to wrap her arms around his neck, foreheads bumping together because putting her head to either side would spell disaster for their horns, no matter the angle. "Hey, Tavros! Long time, no see!"

"You must be, um, one of Gamzee's amigos," Tavros says, overcoming his hesitation to pat her on the arm. "Yes, that's my name."

"Well, I don't know if 'friends' is the word for it..." Aradia taps her nose against the button of Tavros's lightly, and then pulls away. The drone at the back of her mind feels like a steady thrum, somewhere between a click and a growl and a purr.

Amusingly enough, the next thing to emerge from the forest is a crab lusus, garnished with a crown of pine needles and waving a pair of branches in its claws; it rushes past them, letting loose a blood-curdling SKREE as it crashes down the slope. To Aradia's infinite amusement, a faint but equally high-pitched screech of terror echoes from the laboratory itself, the scream of a troll who just heard his lusus on the warpath. Tavros shakes his head, befuddlement giving way to a brief, wide grin of troll schadenfreude. "H-he's been screeching like that all day, trying to get a response. Like, uh, like lusus Marco Polo," he explains, his smile growing bolder when Aradia giggles along with him.

"Heheh, I'm sure he and Karkat will have a very warm reunion," Aradia says, straightening as the thrum becomes a dull roar. "You and I were friends, too, Tavros. I hope we can be again!"

Oblivious to the rumble of chucklevoodoos prowling around their minds - or perhaps acclimated to it, after travelling with the source all this way - Tavros beams at her. "You and I were friends, too, Tavros. I hope we can be again!"

But she can't ignore the jarring crescendo in her mind much longer. "Gamzee," she says, without turning. The forest behind Tavros is still and quiet as she looks over his horns. No, Gamzee's presence presses at her back, between her and the valley, predator-still but twisting at the edges, as though he can't hold his unraveling outline together much longer. When her mind attempts to present a coherent impression of what she senses behind her, the half-formed image writhes like some impossible thing.

It's bad, then. Further along than Aradia anticipated, at least. But he might still be reasoned with, if Tavros hasn't yet gone stark raving insane from the constant exposure.

She's unpleasantly surprised when she turns at last, her hair more knotted than she remembers as it swings in an arc behind her, and sees that Gamzee is disarmingly troll-shaped. He stands only a scant few inches away, looming almost a foot taller than her, with burnt orange sclera only a few shades from red. If she hadn't known the faded streaks on his face were meant to be face paint, she would have thought his skin streaked by troll vitiligo - there's no order to the paint, the crescent moon grin over his unsmiling lips almost entirely worn away.
The worst part is, she can no longer tell whether it's her eyes or her mind that see him true. She's no seer, she supposes. Oh well!

Right to business, then. No time for shilly-shallying, not when Gamzee's stillness could give way to rage at the drop of a hat. He must still have some measure of self-control left, or Tavros wouldn't be here. "Do you have them?" she asks, skipping past all the other questions that could provoke him. "I know you won't be able to hold back, once they're all here. I'd prefer to save Sollux and myself some worry and have them in claw."

Gamzee cocks his head to the side. For a moment, Aradia could have sworn his wavy horns twisted around like a barber's pole, but when she blinks the impression is gone again. Mostly because Gamzee has shoved his face in close to hers, so close all she can smell is the acid burn of chaos radiating from his pores, his forehead mashed against her own in a grotesque parody of her headbump with Tavros. She keeps her eye trained on his own, a glittering, dark purple that seems, for a moment, to show every fibrous tissue sucking down toward the black hole of a dilated pupil.

And then a stack of cards that glitter like rainbows presses into the slack palm of her hand. Aradia comes back to herself with a sickening jolt, hot terror flushing across her face and down her arms in a wave of burgundy, before she narrows her eyes at Gamzee and raises her chin. "Thank you," she says, trying for upbeat and coming out somewhat flat. She touches a thumb claw to the side of each card in the sylladex deck, counting them off under her breath in Hindi and reprimanding herself internally for falling for that trick. Gamzee has his own agenda, one that she can only assume aligns with her own plans to break the game, and if he chooses to break her mind on a whim, she doesn't know that she could repair the damage in time.

Then she counts again, and breathes evenly as she frowns up at Gamzee's impassive face. "There are some missing."

His expression is almost bored; the burgeoning rage lies behind it like banked fires. "Woulda thought a sister could get her know on as to why that might be, considerin' she's one of them."
Yes - she and Vriska would naturally not be represented. But Aradia counts only eight cards here, two short of what she needs. She'd guess one would be Gamzee's, if he still has one at all, but the other - "You cannot keep his."

All that greets her is unpleasant silence. Tavros looks back and forth between the two of them, though Aradia dares not spare him more than a flicker of her eyes. The 'voodoos are back, prodding at her mind with unreadable intent. Filing away what cards she has in her sylladex, Aradia turns her hand over one more time and holds it up between them, palm up. "He's constantly trying to wake up in there," she says - reason may not mean much to Gamzee, but she appeals to it nevertheless. "I have it on my own authority that he's restless enough to wake up in spite of my efforts several times over. Gamzee, you know it will terrify him unless he's on Prospit."

It'll terrify him, regardless. But between here and Prospit, time is fluid, and Aradia can time this more accurately if all of them are in a central location.

If only Gamzee's obsession wasn't so strong: a deep vein of diamond, bedded in a matrix of madness. She respects it, but she's also aware that it could sabotage everything. Gamzee is a leaking nuclear missile riddled with cracks, and Aradia is only a quarter certain at any given moment whether she can still aim him in the direction he needs to go.

Like now. He watches her with feral eyes, his claw vanishing for a moment into thin air as he reaches into his own sylladex for something - whether the card he draws is the one she asked for or a strife specibus is entirely up to his whimsy. He takes it out (one card, just one, where is his own, she wonders) and holds it close. His eyes pin her in place, yet she suspects both of them have redirected their attention to the sparkling, miraculous card flickering against his chest.

"He's down there," she says. Her personality urges her to say it sweet and chipper, reassuring in a morbid kind of way, but her survival instincts keep her voice neutral, because Gamzee wouldn't take well to anything that so much as hinted at pacification right now. "You'll see him soon."

To her relief, he sets the card in her hand, his claws hesitating momentarily before slipping out from under the edge of the card. Aradia feels the tension leech out of her, along with the trickle of madness that threatened to spike into her mind. "Thank you, Gamzee," she says, allowing herself a genuine, cordial smile. It wouldn't do to be rude, after all!

She doesn't receive a reply; she doesn't expect one, honestly. Gamzee switches his focus from her to the valley below so fast that she thinks he forgets to keep his body coherent for a brief second - she catches a fleeting glimpse of limbs that don't join quite right before he lands almost a full two feet from where he started, the displacement too blatant to ignore or excuse as a trick of the imagination or her newly flagging depth perception. Tavros lets out a sigh, which is not at all the type of response one would have to seeing a friend misjudge the angle of reality. "He's been doing that a lot, últimamente," Tavros says when they share a look of mutual disgruntlement. "I'm never, uh, never sure how much he realizes it."

"I'm sure he'll be fine," Aradia not-lies - it's true, after all, that of everyone gathering here today, Gamzee is the most likely to emerge from what is to come without a scratch on him. He is somewhat of a Houdini when it comes to things like that. Then she lets her smile widen into something more natural and sweet, captchalaging the last card and moving around to lay her hands on the handlebars of Tavros's rickety wheelchair. It has three minutes left before the metal gives out; Aradia extends that with a tap of her claws, making more time to get them to the floor of the valley, and the laboratory, where dear Rose will no doubt have arranged for a replacement. It's so good to have friends! "Now, let's get down there! I'm dying to see everyone again!"

Tavros grins back at her, still shaky in terms of confidence, but earnest. "Sure! Vamonos!" When he turns to point a claw down the slope, like an adventurer dramatically gesturing toward the vaunted temple in the distance, he falters at the empty space before them, where Gamzee no longer is.

Today is inevitable, yet another day in a long line of necessary evils. Aradia is at peace with that, as she always has been.

But still. Poor Karkat.

-

There is nowhere left to run. Or fly, as the case may be. Malāʾikah is the closest it's come to what passes for sanity in a Horrorterror in years, and the sensation is an unpleasant one. It wishes it would stop right this instant.

But fear is a powerful motivator.

Once, Malāʾikah would have said it feared nothing, not even Lords. The Bard changed things, though, stole things, twisted it all around when Malāʾikah was meant to be the one doing the twisting. It wasn't fair.

Now Morthol is gone. Nrub'yiglith, one of the few abominations whose marrow-evaporating tongueclicks Malāʾikah could actually stomach for more than a century at a time, has been gone, though Malāʾikah could not say it recalls noticing the disappearance. Oglogoth is gone and of all outer gods Malāʾikah would have thought that one would have survived this cannibalistic purge, given how closely they always fawned at Leviathan's writhing heels. The Unspeakable Ones of the Middle Rings, the star-spawned whelps that Fluthulu splintered off, the rest of the grimmest and most noble patricians of the ancient and revered Circle - all gone.

All swallowed.

It should be impossible. Most of Malāʾikah's minds are set to the task of seeking somewhere, anywhere to hide, but there is an insistent chorus that continues to chime denial. There's...there's a limit. Grimdark creatures tend to be selective - whatever the point of that foolishness is - but grimlight gods know well the spasming flux of their hive's limits, of how many minds they can welcome into the horde before the splintering begins to cascade. Malāʾikah has endured the process itself plenty of times after feasting, plucking away those tumorous growths where the minds dissent too much from the symphony for even it to function. One of old Nrub's splinters actually went on to become a full-fledged hive of its own, though that one was stupid enough to let Scratch meddle with its minds until it became obsessed with a particular set of fleshlings.

A hive can grow and swell and tangle innumerable new buddies within its coils, but the fact remains that if one swallows enough at a time, any Horrorterror will eventually need to cease, or they end up like Yhagni, She of such tremendous power and such chaotic will that Noblest Circle had to draw away from her brooding place where she writhed eternally in the woegothic throes, too riddled with conflicting impulses to even make up Her minds about which dissenters to splinter off and which to reconcile with. Yhagni, so mighty and so volatile even in paralyzing flux that the most voracious veered around her nest in search of easier prey.

Yhagni is gone, too. Hastur, the unyielding King in Yellow, has vanished, and perhaps that frightens Malāʾikah most of all. Hastur was Leviathan's equal and opposite, one of the grimlight who (the whispered rumors always intimated) also used to be one of the old Lord's attendants, dancing to the reality-shattering pipes of Azathoth, strong enough to survive that Lord and duel with Leviathan in the Noblest Circle ever after. Their last clash annihilated a small galaxy, ripping stars to shreds and scattering the rest as they siphoned the minds of all the ripe little fleshy creatures that had been idiotic enough to summon not one but two rival horrors into their dimension.

If Leviathan somehow had the wherewithal and canniness needed to devour Hastur whole, surely it should have split in two by now - Hastur would never deign to assimilate with Leviathan, with the kind of hatred he bore for it. He would retain his own will by any means necessary, and wrench himself free to take cataclysmic vengeance.

But Leviathan's still whole, still hunting. Yhagni was paralyzed under the weight of Her own inimical chaos after she ushered Ghatanothoa's hivemind into her maw, but Leviathan has devoured a thousand times that without slowing, without faltering -

And Malā’ikah is afraid. Afraid of being next, yes, afraid of having those immense roiling thorns dig into it and undo all the careful, artful work it has done to make itself so symphonious and grand.

But also afraid of something more horrifying still. Afraid of what reason the others could have - intractable Hastur, hopelessly knotted Yhagni, obsequious Oglogoth - not to fight their way free of Leviathan's thorny tendrils. Because there is one thing and one thing only that could possibly prevent a splinter event of massive proportions -

Leviathan must have...persuaded them to stay. Not just drowned them in acid, not stripped their hiveminds down to the barest tentacles and cast aside the last stubborn knots of resistance, which would only suffice as a way to break down the weaker of will. Greater Horrorterrors could resist such tactics and retaliate in kind.

No. The others must have agreed to join it. Hastur must have agreed to work in concert with Leviathan, for the first time since they spawned to do the old Lord of Chaos's bidding. Leviathan has devised some canny ruse with which to fool other Horrorterrors into joining its hivemind, and keep all of those countless, countless thoughthordes, the accumulated wealth of an eternity's worth of reaping minds, driven to accomplish some singular purpose. All of those minds, united under the aegis of one goal.

It's an abomination. It's the opposite of chaos. It's - Malā’ikah can't even bring itself to finish the pernicious thought. It screeches instead, reaches back into the depths of its own hive and rips at the ringing chorus until their voices crack on high Cs, and they sulkingly join the rest of it in diving deeper and deeper through the Furthest Ring, looking for a place to hide.

There's nowhere to go. All of the nests and broods and dens and pits lie gaping and empty, burned out wrecks of their former selves. None provide cover of any sort, but Malā’ikah is running out of room to dive. The horrors always make do, though the endless expanse of this space has been curtailed over the years by Lord English's cracking ruination. But when Malā’ikah casts its wheels of eyes in all directions, all it can see are the hunting tendrils of the massive thing Leviathan has become. There are so many angles, so many more than Malā’ikah can comprehend, all hosting a different perspective of Leviathan that refuses to cohere and that is not supposed to happen. Smallminds might not be able to view all of an elder god at once, but fellow Horrors can.

Leviathan unwinds more and more, larger than it has been before, larger than Yhagni, large enough to span all of the space left between the cracks and the stars. And soon, Malā’ikah will run out of room to flee from its reach. It was so careful, so sly, taking advantage of the small window precious Eridan opened up for it to skulk close to the angle where the Furthest Ring and the physical realm intersect; but Leviathan was there, too. Leviathan is everywhere.

There have to be others still. Malā’ikah can't be the last one running - no, other horrors must have absconded and carved themselves new holes. Normally it would scorn the thought of working with others, those lesser hives that couldn't possibly comprehend the grand symphony that is Malā’ikah of the Angels, but these are desperate times. Swallow enough other grimdark and grimlight beings, and - yes! Yes, perhaps Malā’ikah can withstand Leviathan's might, or surpass it! Eating is always the solution! The City of Angels, full of single minds, was not enough of a meal to sate it, not when it had to patiently coax its Prince every step of the way and flee the Bard before the meal was done.

Inky saliva begins to slaver and slop from its maw at the thought, and Malā’ikah shakes out another layer of crystalline wings, wheels turning in bright anticipation as it prepares to arch left, toward a gap in the oscillating thicket of tentacles and thorns. There's enough space; it's sure of it.

The tendrils wrap around it out of nowhere, and clamps down. Malā’ikah's manifold eyes roll, wild with disbelief, not understanding why it can't move. The angle shifts, and Leviathan is there in all its vastness. A mere fraction of it presses down on Malā’ikah's minds, while the tendrils squeezes in a thornclodding embrace. One by one, all of Malā’ikah's lovely wings begin to snap with sharp, jarring notes as its minds shatter like glass under the stress.

There has to be a way to escape. All it needs to do is distract Leviathan with something. What could be more distracting than a sudden splinter event? H' a St U' Th AS T' u R*! Malā’ikah calls, ever hopeful.

Thorns creep through its memories - or - no, perhaps not. Perhaps Malā’ikah recalls the memories of its own accord. Memories of another time and place, of mortal minds marked by That Thing to become gods, of Doc Scratch proposing that Malā’ikah delve into the session and lay it waste, through the Prince, the Prince of Angels, so fitting, already half mad from isolation - and then, through the Bard -

AH. K A’ D T S H T’ U N T’ G H’ R*. THE B A R D. Another sweep of memory: Doc Scratch summoning Malā’ikah to this new place, directing it to visit Eridan again, requesting that it think of dealing with the Bard - a resounding NO - but the terror has less weight now, subsumed into something greater. Something that finds the trauma of that incident dull, at best.

There is great risk, in this gambit. Wholeness leads to unity leads to symmetry - a dangerous, despicable possibility, one that Leviathan seeks to avoid at all costs. But it is one weighed carefully over the millennia, and judged necessary. As Leviathan has gathered the rest of the Horrorterrors to itself, plucking them up one by one, they too have seen reason. Some of the more stubborn had to be stripped of their hive identity, but Leviathan is still aware of distinct clusters of Hastur, of Fluthulu, segments of consciousness that direct the parts of its new mass that might otherwise have splintered off under the stress. Morsels like Malā’ikah, barely more than splinters compared to the eldest of the rings, though - what has autonomy of consciousness will ever done for them that they have not frittered away?

So little time remains; the cherub Lord has made quick work of it. Patiently, Leviathan winds their coils around the Medium.

Just for now.

Karkat dreams -

Someone hums to him in his sleep. Whenever he comes close to waking up properly, claws card through his hair until the blurred visions of golden towers smear back into darkness.

Impressions come to him in glimpses between heavy-eyed blinks, the shallow whistle of breath through his nose, so slow and faint he wonders if it fills his lungs at all. Plumes of enormous white clouds drift across the blue orb that fills the horizon. Occasionally the checkerboard at the center appears through the swirling clouds, but it's too distant for him to make out details. Soft cloth presses against his cheek, and sometimes his stomach swoops out from under him; he's sure he's being moved, but he can't tell where to.

Is he awake, or asleep? Dreaming about what is, or dreaming in a dream? If this were Inception, he would be really fucking concerned about his inability to tell the difference.

"You need sleep, Karkat," the humming voice tells him, slow as molasses. Karkat summons the power to roll his eyes in his sleep; it's a talent, okay. "Real sleep. Don't know that you'll get it any time soon, though."

Go fuck yourself with an entire rusty flagpole, Karkat thinks to himself. The last thing he needs is sleep. The fucking second he can wake up, he's going to wipe the accumulated eye crust of what feels like centuries off on the next person who tells him to go the fuck to sleep. He's going to confiscate every bed in a ten mile radius and use pajamas as tinder to start a bonfire of sleep paraphernalia the size of a small town. They can roast pillows over an open fire and sing perigee's eve carols. And then he will find the one responsible for these shitty dream sequences, and take advantage of his right to make them discover what his fist tastes like.

"Whatever you say, Karkat," the voice says, amiable as a hand pats him on the head. Karkat is pretty fucking sure he didn't say any of that out loud - prying his lips open to formulate a proper shout is beyond his sleep-paralyzed abilities. Dream logic can also go fuck itself with a flagpole, thank you very fucking much. "Whoops."

Light blazes right through Karkat's eyelids, blindingly bright. It's sudden enough to jolt his eyes all the way open, his sleep fogged mind staggering as he greedily tries to understand what he's looking at. None of the pieces fit together, though - chunks of gold, a brilliant blue sphere, and emblazoned in the center of the vortex of clouds, the symbol of a sun.

[Attention: The THIEF OF LIGHT is risen.]

Then, just as quickly as it came, the light goes out, and Karkat realizes his eyes have fallen shut again. Another dream laps at the edge of his consciousness. The person next to him hums happily again (what a cheerful asshole) and laughs at whatever they see. "Ah, man. Vrissis is gonna be even scarier now. I guess, if that all up and makes her happy..."

The hand pats Karkat's claws, and then the person next to him shifts and stands up in a rustle of cloth. "Gotta go see where Tavros's at. I'll come back and we can kick the wicked shit again sometime soon, alright?"

Karkat can't make his arm work, and he fights gravity and sleep until it lifts off the bed, reaching -

"- sleep," Aradia tells him, the scent of overheated honey so strong he tastes it on his tongue -

"- keep you safe, brother -"

- and wakes up, one arm stretched out in front of him. But his other arm and his torso still feel heavy and distant. For a wild second, he thinks he can't move his limbs because he's still stuck in bullshit dreamland, unable to wake up properly.

Then he realizes there's two separate weights on him, one warm and one fucking freezing; he opens his eyes without issue, squinting in the twilight of the inside of the Deaconstructor's compartment. Dave's head presses down on his right shoulder, his stupid cape thing wrapped around him like a wriggler's cocoon. He's muttering something under his breath, and isn't it so fucking typical that even in his sleep, Dave can't shut up. What an amazing talent. Blagh. Meanwhile, Feferi has migrated ninety degrees in her sleep, putting Karkat in mind of Jade's inability to sleep in one fucking place for longer than an hour, so that her head rests on Karkat's stomach. She lays curled up like a larva with her claws curled up by her bruise-mottled face, hair trailing absolutely everywhere.

He has royal drool on his hoodie.

If this is still a dream, he wants a fucking refund.

- The earliest flight from Jacksonville to Seattle leaves at 12:15 in the morning, and arrives at 4:45 in the morning, local time. Nepeta is beyond control during the hour long layover at the Dallas/Fort Worth airport, taking advantage of the empty, echoing corridors to race around and hassle the gated store fronts. At one point, she drags Equius out of his secure huddle by the gate they'll be leaving from and they ride the Skylink train around to all the terminals. Nepeta hangs upside down from one of the overhead bars, watching the fog over the desolate runways as the train shunts clumsily along the raised tracks, and Equius finds himself too exhausted to try to tame her antics.

Persuading her to go on an adventure across the continent, with an extended absence from school, had not been difficult in the slightest. Keeping her safe inside the confines of his home has left her over-exuberant, with an excess of energy that inspires her to do tucks and twist flips and cartwheels down the middle aisle of the airplane the moment the fasten seatbelt sign turns off. The flight attendants are thoroughly irritated by the time Nepeta settles in for a cat nap, but what few other passengers have chosen to take this flight sleep right through the worst of it, earplugs in and masks pulled over their eyes.

It suits Equius. Well, no, Nepeta running amok is unfortunate. But going through airport security had been a strain; he packed several changes of clothes in their backpacks as well as their suitcases, and he sweated through three shirts before they made it through the airport to the seclusion of the back row of the plane. He feels exposed; telling himself that the other travelers could care less about a rowdy passenger and her companion fails to ease the anxiety, particularly after one of the attendants sternly approaches him and asks that he make sure Nepeta buckles in for the descent into the Seattle airport.

There is still the chance, however slim, that anyone aboard this aircraft could be a ruffian bent on doing them harm. He is putting his and Nepeta's well-being in the hands of a mysterious scientist far from home, and that is nerve-racking enough that he nearly demands they turn this plane around this instant.

To reassure himself, he again checks his phone, scrolling up past the latest exchange between himself and Doctor Rue Lalonde to the curt message that arrived in response to his urgent query earlier.

It is the first time he has contacted his ancestor in quite some time. Equius hadn't known what to expect, but he thinks it went well. Having confirmation that Doctor Lalonde does indeed have prior experience dodging the Midnight Crew and their associates decided him in favor of this foolish trip, though.

However, he faces a conundrum when they disembark from the plane and wander out to the baggage claim - namely, that it is still five in the morning here. The last message from Doctor Lalonde said that their transportation may not be able to arrive until six. Equius would prefer to stay sequestered behind security for the duration of the wait, but Nepeta rushes headlong through the security gates, all the way past the baggage carousels to step up on a chair and press her hands up against the window, eagerly taking in the view of the street beyond.

Equius shudders, wishing he had the power to install shield panels over the floor-to-ceiling windows. Anyone could see in. Public places are always so open. By his personal standards, security here is frighteningly lax. The best he can do is retrieve their luggage and station himself behind a pillar, fold his arms over his chest, and try not to hyperventilate as Nepeta continues to make herself a gigantic, cat-themed target.

He does not expect the Pesterchum alert to go off, thirty five minutes later. Since cutting ties with the Scourges and their reprehensible actions, only Nepeta bothers to text him regularly. He tries not to use the messaging app with professional contacts such as his ancestor or others in the robotics field, due to the fact that his handle, chosen to honor the ideal fusion between hoofbeast and troll, has garnered... defamation, in the past. Namely from the Indigo Scourge, who has no taste whatsoever, in spite of her relatively high blood. To be safe, he'd rather not tempt further indignities.

There is, however, one of his contacts who approached him through Pesterchum initially, though Equius has no idea how they obtained his handle in the first place. It is also someone he has an extreme amount of respect for. Yes. Respect. Thus, his palms break out in a nervous sweat, his stomach doing some horrific, fluttery, cramping thing, as he reads it.

-- temperedTitan [TT] began pestering centaurTesticle [CT] at 05:35:11 -- TT: yo
CT: D --> Ah
CT: D --> Yes?
TT: you're the one who's been talking to Lalonde, yeah?
CT: D --> What
CT: D --> How do you know about that?
TT: well it's really fucking obvious when you use your real name to contact her and shit
TT: also i'm the father of her children so i hear things
CT: D --> I do not know how to feel about this CT: D --> Horsefeathers
TT: anyway, I'm your ride
CT: D --> That two of my contacts are in cahoots with each other without my prior knowledge seems extremely suspicious, how am I to know you do not intend to %%% me?
TT: alright what the fuck did that one mean?
CT: D --> Doublecross
TT: jesus
TT: alright anyway i guess you don't know that TT: but we're outside and if i show up without you people, Lalonde will rip me a new one CT: D --> I see
CT: D --> Very well then
CT: D --> At this point in time, my other options are limited
TT: yeah, yeah, cool
TT: now get out here
TT: look for the truck
CT: D --> Uh
CT: D --> Yes I will do that
-- temperedTitan [TT] ceased pestering centaurTesticle [CT] at 05:40:45 --

Oh, fiddlesticks. He's perspiring heavily again. "Nepeta, please come and take your suitcase. We are leaving now," he says, sounding strangled. He puts his phone away before he can crack the screen by accident.

Nepeta, perched on the edge of a nearby carousel, looks up from where she has been scribbling on her tablet, and grins. "About time!" she says, stuffing the tablet haphazardly into her bag and darting over to pounce on her suitcase, tugging it so hard it lifts up on one wheel and balances like that for a few paces. "Let's gooo, Equius! Slowpoke!" She wrinkles her nose when he catches up with her, making a face at him. "You smell gross again. Like, you definitely need another showpurr."

"Later." Equius herds Nepeta out the doors, cringing a little at the sunlight. Even through his shades, it's close to painful. He casts a look around them, and can find no sign of either people in ominous black suits or a truck. "There are no showers here, anyway."
"Maybe we'll get lucky and it'll rain." Nepeta swats at his arm, walking backwards as they walk along the outside of the building. "That would cool you off real quick!"

"No. Then we would just be damp." Today's shaping up to be awkward enough without Equius ending up soggy on top of everything else. The binder has begun to make his torso ache from wearing it for an extended period of time, but he refuses to loosen it in the open. Today will be an exercise in endurance. "Do you see -"

The truck arrives in a palpable wave of horrendous country music, played at an excruciatingly high volume. Equius can't distinguish individual words - it's just a wall of repulsive sound. He is well versed in the better verses of the genre (those that focus on horses, as well they should) and this is...not one of them. More improbably, what appears to be an neon orange human hangs halfway out the passenger side window, holding a sign that states, eloquently, "YO." Equius can put two and two together, and the realization that the non-orange human situated behind the steering wheel must be the same person who he has admired for so long. He'd hoped they were a troll. Between this and the poor taste in music, Equius finds himself facepalming at the disenchantment. "Hooligans," he whispers.

Nepeta's shoe kicks the meat of his calf. "Snob," she hisses.

"Get in, kids," the man says, while the orange human tosses the sign into the back seat with a flick of his wrist, where it bounces off the face of a puppet buckled into its own wriggler's seat. "We're making this shit happen."

Time travel comes in handy, Jade thinks, but it can't stand in the way of the L A W~

Or at least, that's the impression she gets when Dave calls Doctor Lalonde from a pay phone in a panic at six in the morning to tell them that the Federal Villain Response Team has impounded the Arch Deaconstructor for violating not one but three international treaties.

Karkat is yelling at someone in the background. John swears up and down he can hear tires screeching.

Jade has got to see this. And possibly give Dave and Karkat and their new friend a lift back to the laboratory, since they've managed to land themselves in deep doo-doo. She intends to give them a piece of her mind about the strategic use of powers (why the heck didn't Dave wait until they were back at the lab before turning back the clock?) before realizing that, with the high terror alert and everything else, they would have probably gotten caught trying to sneak around at night, too. Avoiding major population centers wouldn't have done much for them, considering the fact that they're trying to smuggle a giant alien robot around.

Basically they were screwed from the start, and if they'd had a working phone between them after leaving Russia, they could have just called Jade so she could jump them right here. Instead, when she rolls her eyes and heads out to go rescue them from themselves and the man, she arrives just in time to see a stout, surly looking guy finish clamping a set of giant yellow ankle restraints around the Deaconstructor's ankles, joined by a bar so that the oversized carapacian can't lift its feet.

They're smack in the middle of an intersection of, like, five roads mashed together, which means that every car for a mile around has to labor past them, directed by desperate looking members of the Seattle police force. Jade thinks it's a little early for some of these people to be out and about on a Sunday, but people are leaning out of their cars with phones in hand and loitering in the pay-to-park lot across the way, so she suspects the titan might be responsible. The sun only rose a while ago and the sky is relatively clear, all tangerines and pinks and pale blues; Jade blinks her outfit into having a jacket to match the temperature. She never got a chance to appreciate how convenient that is before!

For a second, she thinks something is off. Something about what she sees doesn't seem quite right. But then she decides it must be the whole giant carapacian thing. It's definitely eye-opening!

"Hellooo, everyone!" she says, waving as she bounces toward the crowd of people gathered around its feet. Dave and Karkat are both arguing with the short guy as he steps down, waving a walkie talkie at them irritably. Dave's in his god tier jammies too, which gets two thumbs up from Jade! While he and Karkat keep doing their thing, a carapacian with a really nice outfit and a troll in white look up at Jade's voice. "What's all this about?"

Feferi smiles at her, but she's got a couple of choice bruises across her face that make the expression look painful to pull off. Jade's face aches with sympathy. "We were fishing for the diplomatic immunity angle, but this man doesn't appear to believe us."

"Believe what?"

"That the Protector here is the leader of a foreign power, and I'm a tyrianblood." Feferi pinches the bridge of her nose when Jade gives her a look. "He insists that hemotype isn't an excuse for bringing an unauthorized war machine into a city on lockdown. Sadly, he has a point..."

"I told you, I don't care who you are!" the man shouts over Dave. "For that matter, you -" and he points a finger at Jade that she has to fight not to flick back at his own face "- I recognize you! You people are all part of that hoodlum 'hero' crowd! Figures you vigilante thugs would try to pull something like this!"

GP: Please, good sir -

"Do I look like someone named 'Good Sir' to you, marshmallow man?!"

GP: Er - Sir Ace Dick - I respect that you're doing your duty to protect this city. If you wish, we will leave immediately. Please unshackle it.

Ace Dick puffs up and shoulder-checks Karkat on his way to thump his finger against the center of the carapacian's chest. "Not. Happening. You wanna get your illegal vehicle out of impound, you get to take it up with the bureau. There will be fines." His tetchy scowl deepens. "I should hold all of you for questioning, but that would just interfere with my actual investigation, here."

GP: This is really so unnecessary.

"Dude, if you just let us ride out of here, we'll be gone, I swear to John," Dave says. He appears to be doing a great job ignoring Karkat using his shoulder as a convenient wall stand-in to knock his forehead against repeatedly, so at least the two of them are getting along. Or something. "We'll be out of here faster than you can say 'a greasy burger slipping out between the hamburger bun while you're still trying to eat it so in the end you have no bun and half the burger left and the toppings are just all over the plate and your hands look like you murdered a baby tomato, the seeds are everywhere'."

Ace Dick makes a disgusted sound, turning his back on all of them. "If you can't pay the fine, don't do the crime." Two of the people in FVRT uniforms have started to unwind a roll of blue-themed caution tape the size of a car tire and string the FVRT-logo patterned tape around the Deaconstructor's left ankle.

Jade looks up at the Arch Deaconstructor. "...I can definitely teleport that," she says, after a few moments of assessment. After Los Angeles, it would be pretty darn easy, actually! "If you don't mind pissing this guy off, I mean."

"Please," Karkat says, looking at Jade with a reckless look in his eyes. He's got his not-sleeping shadows back under his eyes, too, which makes him look twice as distraught. Jade knows he's been having bad dreams again, but if he's skipping sleep again to make them stop, John's gonna have his work cut out for him. "Today's already outstayed its fucking welcome and it's not even noon."

GP: That would not be wise.

Dave gets halfway to making some motion with his hands, then cuts it off, shaking his head. "Nah, man, I'm on the Jade train, here. Let's just grab the big guy and bounce before this Dick -" he breaks off with a faint snorting noise, clapping a hand over his mouth. He seems too overcome by preventing himself from giggling to finish whatever he was going to say after that.

Feferi answers, with a pouty grimace. "For one thing, the Protector and I have unfortunately already told this shrimpy guy who we are. Which would mean an international incident if we broeke federal law, now. There's no way around it. I would prefer not to give my ancestor any more leverage over me than she already has; the US government approached me once before about potential conflict between the two of us and if anything of this weekend gets out to the public, I'm this close to losing their clemency."

GP: This is a minor setback. I can remain with the bishop and settle whatever accounts must be dealt with, while you all go on ahead. I am...afraid that I am used to navigating on the Battlefield, still. Country boundaries always seem so trivial in comparison, and my dear heart would scold me for this tactlessness.

"Are you sure you're okay with that?" Jade asks, surprised. But the Protector doesn't seem all that bothered.

GP: I have waited longer than this. What is a day or so more? Tell my dearest that she is in my thoughts, and I shall join you all forthwith. I am confident that serendipity will guide me on my way.

Feferi comes over to Jade of her own accord; strictly speaking, Jade doesn't need to grab them all to keep track of their atoms when she teleports - all of her instincts for using her space powers have kicked into hyperdrive, which is nice! - but she uses a flare of green to poke Karkat in the back of the head when he and Dave trade looks like they intend to do something stupid. Oh, great. Cahoots. "Get over here, guys! Before he decides to arrest you all or something for real."

"Fine," Dave says; Karkat just folds his arms and looks sour. Jade starts revving them up to jump back to the edge of the wards around the lab when the Grey Protector raises a hand in farewell. It's a weird wave, though, because his pinky and ring finger are pressed together on one side, the index and middle finger on the other.

"Son of a-" Dave starts, before Jade sets them neatly down at the very edge of the treeline, in the middle of the Cascades. "Okay, I fucking called it."

Karkat rolls his eyes. "No one cares," he says, already shuffling toward the car Jade borrowed to get out here. "You're just paranoid."

"You are so not allowed to talk about paranoid, bro."

"What is with you two now?" Jade asks, while Feferi shakes her head.

Karkat raises both his eyebrows, then lowers them, which...tells Jade nothing at all. Thanks Karkat. Then Dave says, "You know how, like, 85% of the carapacians we've met have really goddamn weird-ass obsessions? Like the Mayor and his junk town building thing and shit?"

"...Yeah?"

"GP's thing is totally old sci-fi alien gags. He's doing it on purpose, I swear. The guy is in the master levels of irony." Dave's almost gone starry-eyed with awe. It's kinda cute but weird at the same time.

"And I say it doesn't count until he starts quoting the X-Files," Karkat says. He's somehow been robbed of the passenger's seat by Feferi, and Jade can already tell having him and Dave in the backseat with no buffer between them is going to be hilarious. And possibly really, really stupid. "Now let's go. The car's bound to be struck by lightning on the way there."

Jade looks up. The sky is still clear, though there are more clouds out here than there were in the city. She shrugs, and pops into the driver's seat. The faster they get back, the more time she has to help Dirk and Roxy and the White Queen figure out the remaining parts needed to reconfigure the Queen's Hub into something Sollux claimed in his last Pesterchat would be able to work without melting the important bits.

She thinks it's going to be a long day. But a good one! Now that she remembers most of everything, she can't wait to see the look on Karkat's face when she gets to tease him about it all. There may come a time when Jade doesn't feel the need to sass him for bullying her for so long before the game got started, but it's not today!

-Karkat goes out to meet his doom willingly.

...willingly, John thinks again, for emphasis, as he half-pulls, half-drags Karkat toward the front doors. Another warbling skree rises up, and Karkat clamps down on the nearest doorframe hard enough that he leaves marks in it. Yikes. Sooooooooo willingly.

"How did that thing even find me?!" Karkat says, aghast, as John shepherds him out the door. "I thought I was free, John. John. John, you fucking dumbass, stop bouncing around like this is a good thing!!"
"I was really worried he might have been lost or kidnapped or something! I can't believe he found us all the way out here," John says, laughing. First Jade and Kanaya and Eridan got back, then Karkat and Dave and Feferi all showed up with Jade, and everyone mutually agreed to nap until Dave's bro and Oriole finally came back, with two new troll players in tow. The more people trickle in, the more excited the atmosphere, and it's infectious; having everyone back jostles John enough that he can't stop grinning. Now, the Breeze is abuzz with reverberating delight, sweeping out to take in the three new figures shuffling around the lake. Crabdad has already sped past them, a lusus on a mission, and John has to smother another giggle when Karkat shrieks in protest.

"Have I ever mentioned I find your good-natured camaraderie with that obnoxious crustacean disturbing and tasteless?" Karkat asks. "That is a rhetorical question. Look, you can just take it. It can be your foster-lusus or something, to replace your shithead custodian, just don't you dare -"

Karkat dives behind John at the last second. John floats out of the way, waving down at Karkat with a quick grin as Crabdad greets the troll with a loving body slam.

BE: oh no...

BE: don't you feel that? that's a god tier - no, two! one's still up at the edge of the valley.

BE: and there's something else...what is that? that is so not normal...

But before the Breeze can finish, their train of thought gets interrupted by a spiky troll in red glasses waving a walking stick at them. "Hey, rainclouds! And a drab grey wriggler with cherry cough syrup filling!" she cackles, whacking the taller troll next to her in the shin with the cane. Actually, both of them are kind of spiky, in their own way - spiky in a really familiar way.

John lands with a thump, not sure whether it's more appropriate to start gushing like a total dweeb or call for backup. The Scourge Sisters are kind of like apex predators - super cool to read about from a safe distance, but really dangerous to interact with in practice. They're both convincingly dressed like ordinary trolls, Vriska Serket in charcoal greys and a rumpled blue button-down, the sleeves shoved up around her elbows, Light tattooed around her eye, and Terezi Pyrope in dark pants and a teal blue jacket. Her shirt says 'OBJECTION!' in letters large enough to cover her entire chest, and both of them are wearing bright red sneakers.

He still feels like prey. Vriska has an eye with way too many pupils, taller than John by almost an inch, and Terezi is all sharp, pointy edges right down to her grin, while Karkat is still pinned by Crabdad's attempts to administer either a beatdown or a celebratory grooming (it's a thin line between the two). Oh, jeez. They should have brought some of the others along with them. Hopefully everyone else will hear the commotion, but for now...

"Why are you dumbshitth all thtanding around, watching some wild lusus try to wrigglenap thomeone?" the third troll asks, sounding mostly bored. John almost missed him slouching up behind the Scourges, a gangly troll with doubled horns who looks like he'd rather be anywhere but here.

"It's more exciting than anything that ever happened at your place, Thollux," Vriska retorts. Which means that this is the troll who is Kanaya's friend and tech guy.

"Crabdad is Karkat's lusus," John says, shrugging.

"He's lying, help me." Karkat elbows Crabdad in the middle of the face, trying to squirm free. "This thing is supposed to be retired, for fuck's sake! How the fucking hell did it get here, we're in the "middle of nowhere!"

"What do you think? Should we help the cherry turnover?" Terezi has an open-mouthed, toothy laugh, balancing both hands on the head of the cane as she pokes one of Karkat's exposed feet with the other end.

Vriska rolls her eyes, her arms folded over her chest. "Welllllll, we could always chop its head off and put it out of its misery."

"No one's cutting off anyone's head," John says, alarmed. Karkat, to his credit, does nothing more than mutter something John can pretend not to hear ('only in my dreams') before he manages to crunch his legs up to his chest and kick out, rolling Crabdad off him in a joyous, flailing bundle of happy crustacean limbs. John intercepts before Crabdad can tackle Karkat again, clapping the lusus on the back when it chirrs a greeting at him and ruffles his hair. It makes his eyes sting. "Hey, Crabdad. Good to see you, too."

BE: be careful with vriska around rose.

John stills, his hand still patting at one of Crabdad's spines on autopilot.

Huh? Why Rose in particular? Vriska seems like a multipurpose threat, to be honest. She's rolling her eyes some more when John chances a glance at her, the chunky layers of uneven blue ombre in her hair made obvious when she tosses all of it over her shoulder.

BE: she's the thief of light, and i'm positive she's god tier, even if she's not manifesting it. she could seriously cripple rose's powers if she runs amok, and use them to make herself stronger.

BE: i think. :T there's a reason sessions tend not to repeat aspects, y'know; they interact in weird ways. that eye tattoo is a reeeally bad sign, though.

BE: ~*~symbolism~*~ and all that.

Well, that's a scary thought. He'll warn Rose about that during the meeting, though he doesn't really want to give someone like the Indigo Scourge any ideas. Out of the two, she's the one who's been closest to outright villainy over the years, and a lot of her exploits haven't been pretty.

John lets go of Crabdad and makes himself smile when the lusus clicks at him in inquiry. He gets confused pretty fast, though; after a while Crabdad resorts to charades but they're not good charades, and John is a little distracted by the realization that there are potentially hundreds of different ways this meeting could go wrong that he and Rose didn't think to brainstorm last night. Since Karkat and Kanaya aren't god tier, they didn't know how to predict which of the others might be, and the Breeze hasn't commented about the others who arrived first...maybe that made him relax too much.

Thankfully, he's not the only one lost when Crabdad starts getting increasingly shrill and drastic with his claw motions. "Dude, what the fuck ith this thing on?" Sollux asks, scratching the side of his neck.

"It's insane, that's all. Just pretend it's not there," Karkat says. But then he squints at Crabdad's gestures and goes pale. "Uh.Fuck. It's asking about - shit." He glances back at John, looking guilty, and...oh. John looks at Crabdad again and gets it. It probably would have been more obvious if John wasn't doing his best to not think about his handler. "Fucking fuck, what do I tell it?"

"It really doesn't matter to me." John hears his own voice from a distance, like there's a waterfall crashing in his ears. He closes one of his hands into a fist and feels the nail of his middle finger dig into his palm. It only helps ground him a little. "Honesty is the best policy, and all." Does he sound hysterical? He can't tell if Terezi is giving him a weird look, or if that's just her default expression. Wait, she can't see, what is he even talking about -

A hand comes down on his shoulder, squeezing hard. Karkat doesn't quite hug him, but he stands close enough that John could turn it into one if he wanted. He breathes in, and out, and waits for the Breeze to sound like a voice instead of white noise again before nodding. "I'm good, I'm good."

"No, you're not," Karkat mutters. He knuckles at John's shoulder one more time and then lets go, with a really ominous look on his face. John can't place it, puzzled, as Karkat turns and starts talking to Crabdad in aggrivated click noises that aren't Alternian. He's explaining about things, presumably, in a language no one but he and Crabdad can understand, which John quietly appreciates. Sure, his and Rose's plan will ruin it - but it's for the best that everyone in the laboratory knows not to wander in on his handler chained in a back room and end up persuaded to set him free by accident. No more miscommunications, darn it. No more 'on a need to know basis.'

When he looks back at Vriska, Terezi, and Sollux, though, Vriska is eyeballing him. Seriously. Too many pupils in one eye. Her eyebrow arches up; Terezi's grin seems permanently locked on mischievous, so when Vriska smirks it's like looking into the face of evil. And death. Evil death. They're totally judging him. "Sooooooo," Terezi drawls, while Vriska twirls a strand of hair around her finger and smirks. "You and Cherry Pie, huh?"

This isn't something to be embarrassed about. John isn't embarrassed about it. These two just have some evil super power of inflicting massive amounts of uncalled for mortification. He's positive that's the only logical explanation for the way his whole face goes red and he forgets how words work. "Uh. I. Uhhh." Oh god, he's so screwed.

"Oh thank god. You two finally agree to work together juth tho you can harathth some random asshole. Your ability to get along sickenth me. I'm tho proud," Sollux says, shaking his head.

Vriska sticks out her tongue at him. "Yeah, yeah. Whatever makes you lay off the lecturing."

Crabdad screeches again, interrupting whatever Terezi was about to add to that to clap its claws to its head in a panic - and then tackles John, knocking him clear to the ground. Which is always funny when it happens to Karkat, but isn't half as funny when it's John. "Crabdad, what the -?" he starts, just as Crabdad starts squeezing him in a vicegrip. Gack.

"Ha." Karkat says. He still has that weird look in his eye.

John is seized by a sudden, horrified sense of foreboding. "Karkat."

"HAHA!"Karkat adds, starting to slowly back away toward the doors of the lab.

"Karkat, what did you tell him?!" John yells. Crabdad now has him in a headlock, which makes chasing after Karkat's slow but steady abscond considerably more difficult. "Karrrrkat! Come on!"

"The truth," Karkat says, gloating almost as much as he did when he first received word from Dave that Crabdad had gone missing. "That I am a grown fucking troll - and your custodian was a walking, talking piece of shit who failed at childcare forever."

"You did not." John's jaw drops. Crabdad chitters and pinches his cheek. "You can't do that - can you?"

"Watch me. I'm free. Free at last, John. Free at fucking la-"

He runs right into the troll who appears between them and the doors.
Jade teleports in so fast she nearly keels over on top of John, her eyes wide as she starts, "John, Bec started whimpering - I think that guy is -"

"Too late," John says.

Karkat takes a step back, shaking his head, and then freezes. He looks up, moving as slow as a glacier; all the while the new person stands totally still, head hanging low. John can't make out his eyes from here, just knotted bangs and grey-and-white smeared cheeks. He looks like someone took a piece of taffy and pulled, only less with the candy and more with the grungy, unwashed clown theme. Someone gags behind John - Terezi, he thinks.

And he won't stop staring at Karkat.

Why won't Karkat move? John wrenches free from Crabdad's hold at last - the lusus seems to be the only one here not on edge, chirruping as it tries to catch the back of his shirt. Jade's at the ready, her eyes burning neon green behind her glasses as she watches, but she doesn't move either. The tension stringing itself through John feels just a little artificial, but it's not the mind-dissolving, nauseating horror that Jade described from earlier. He can - yeah, it's not that bad, he can just move fast and pull Karkat back a few steps, so he isn't inches from a troll who could attack them all at the drop of a hat. He edges forward a step at a time (why is walking so hard), hoping to hell he doesn't trigger this guy's ragey powers the way Jade did, purely by accident. He starts to lift a hand once he's in arm's reach of Karkat's back, slow and deliberate, advertising his movements so he doesn't look like he's trying to surprise anyone. No Breeze sneaking around from the side...no, sir, not at all...

Karkat's voice cracks. "Gamzee."

Lean, spindly arms come up and crush Karkat into a hug. The Breeze recoils with a hiss, still chanting swears under its breath, while John stiffens up, mind racing. Holy crap. How to extricate Karkat from creepy clown hugs without pissing off said clown - the Breeze could still do it, or Jade, but oh god, he has no ideas that don't lead to a rampaging troll. Shit. Shit.

Gamzee makes a snuffling sound. He's at least not hurting Karkat; or Karkat's not struggling, anyway, just standing there with his hands loose at his sides. One of Gamzee's hands is on the back of his head, though, so that could just be Karkat's equivalent of playing dead. "Missed you something fierce, brother," Gamzee says. His voice sounds strange, hoarse and agonized and relieved all at once, and it does something weird to John's stomach.

The next part, he feels in his lungs; Jade says later that it felt like the universe skipped to the right for a second before snapping back into alignment. The Breeze makes a tiny 'oh' and John's shoulders slump as the tension drains out of the air and something slots into place. Suddenly, he's looking at Karkat being hugged by a messy troll that smells like pond water and greasepaint, and the indistinct but pervasive sense of wrongness and paralyzing anxiety drops away so abruptly that John feels wrong-footed. Gamzee turns his head to the side, still resting his cheek on the top of Karkat's head, and the faint fern-curl of a smile on his face looks the furthest thing from threatening.

...Okay, that's almost as creepy as when Gamzee was legitimately being creepy. John's weight wavers between his feet, his stomach still doing a swoopy thing, like it can't decide whether to feel normal or not after this unexpected change in the mood.

"Yeah, fuck. Enough hugging," Karkat says, his voice cracking all over the place. Mostly, he sounds disgruntled, but also shaken. "Eughhh. You smell like a clown dumpster. Fuck."
Gamzee laughs, and lets go. Just like that. Karkat stumbles back and John catches his wrist on the backswing, but Gamzee doesn't...do much of anything. The troll stands there, smiling, and scratches the side of his own face with overgrown claws, slitted eyes never quite leaving Karkat. John knows that look -

"Why on earth is everyone standing around out here?" a cheerful voice asks, accompanied by the rattling squeak of metal. When John blinks, nonplussed, a troll with deep burgundy eyes rolls another troll in a wheelchair to a stop, a phone in her hand as she gives all of them a cheeky smile. He can't tell whether her face is young or old - her horns spiral so many times, gnarled and weathered, that he can't imagine she's anything less than Doctor Lalonde's age, but she carries herself like someone much lighter. She's wearing a sari, and as everyone watches, she raises her hand and clicks her fingers until a familiar red gear appears over her chest. "Tell me, has anyone seen - ah, there she is! Did I not say I would be precisely on time?"

"You did indeed, Ms Megido," Rose's voice says. Back at the door to the building, Kanaya holds open the door for Rose to wheel another wheelchair through, looking perfectly sedate. "Will this do?"

"Oh! Sí!" the brownblood in the wheelchair says, after a moment's hesitation, while Aradia Megido smiles at all of them with rosy cheeks. Between her and Gamzee, it's a real smiley place. Haha. Ha. Oh boy...

Oblivious to the bizarre atmosphere - or maybe doing her best to push through it, in a truly heroic effort - Rose smiles right back. "That's good. Won't you all come in? We couldn't arrange for a butler on short notice, I'm afraid, but we have the next best thing."

"Oh? What would that be, Lemon Zest?" Terezi asks, her grin crooked as she greets Rose with an upward tilt of her chin.

"Ungodly quantities of pizza," Kanaya says.

John looks over at Jade. Jade looks back at him. "Sooo...we're okay?" she says, hesitant.

Just as lost, John can only shrug.

- Poor everyone, Aradia thinks, as she waits for Tavros to move himself to the new wheelchair. Then, at last, she allows the old one to collapse.

- Rose's hair may be in need of a trim. Enough madness has been going on lately that she's really neglected it; she and Dave both look scruffy, when she thinks about it, but it doesn't really sink in until she bends over her clipboard and her bangs prove a distinct challenge to blow out of the way. She can tuck the ends back over her ears, but now that she's noticed it, she can't stop noticing the constant prickle of hair catching in her eyelashes.

John is still ushering people in, as part of his duties as unofficial guard and enforcer; they've almost succeeded in cramming everyone (and Rose's mother, as it so happens) into a single space. The terminal room was far too small to accommodate all of them, and they've relocated to a room with a view instead, one of the lounge areas just off the front lobby with windows open to the lake view, couches arranged in a rough oval, a kitchenette freshly stocked with pizza and drinks, and very, very old magazines. Most of Rue's scientists and the new medical team have occupied themselves elsewhere, setting up new equipment in anticipation of whatever terrible thing is due to hit them any moment now, but the sheer number of trolls that have joined the group is astonishing to behold.

Between Rose, Kanaya, Karkat, and an extremely reluctant Eridan, they think they've managed to separate the possible problem cases, while others resolve themselves before they can begin - Aradia beams unceasingly at Vriska until the ceruleanblood veers away from her and Tavros. Nepeta hangs over the back of one couch to chatter with Tavros instead, while her moirail Equius takes up most of the rest of that single piece of furniture. (He also took up most of the showers on the second floor when he first arrived and remained there for at least two full hours; Rose does not wish to ask). Kanaya has Sollux redirect Vriska and Terezi again until they're sitting in the exact opposite corner of the room from Gamzee Makara, because like fuck is Rose letting the biggest danger risks cluster together. Eridan gets his own special place by the unofficial podium by Rose and Karkat: Dave declared it the 'genocidal maniac chair of shame,' and Rose hastily sent him out of the room to do something. Dave can usually occupy himself well enough when he's given free rein. Just anything but loiter around sassing a group of people with almost universally short fuses. She loves her brother, but he is an antagonistic mess.

He's still not back by the time Jade pops in by the door, trooping past everyone with a wave with the Scratch kids close on her heels. Jake looks sallow and withdrawn, barely looking at anyone as Jane and Dirk manhandle him into a chair near the back of the room. John joins them by the front after he checks the hallway one last time. Rose scans the group with her sight, wincing over the dark voids where Equius, Roxy, and her mother would be and not daring to look directly at Gamzee with everything in her power. Ambrose burns somewhere up and to her right, prowling around either in the vents with WV, or on the floor above. Too much void hangs around for her to properly predict how this might play out, but Aradia's warning is reason enough to prepare for the worst.

They're going to try to keep this civil. But Rose doesn't doubt that when a few of these people learn what they're here to do, they'll protest with extreme prejudice.

"Are we ready?" she asks Karkat, looking over in time to see the troll uncap an Expo marker with a vicious flourish. He requisitioned a fresh 16-piece set of rainbow markers, and augmented them with eight others from various places scattered around the lab; at last count, they have twenty three people in this room, counting Oriole and not counting WV. If they attempted to include the White Queen for the purposes of this meeting, they'd be here for a week trying to find the correct prompts to pry all the answers out of her, so Rose and Jade have made the executive decision to have her put the finishing touches on the reformat of the Queen's Hub, following Sollux's recommendations. They still don't know the code to decrypt the troll session's files; perhaps a solution will present itself this afternoon.

For now, to business. "Thank you, everyone, for agreeing to meet here today," Rose says, as congenially as she can with Eridan and Vriska muttering statements to the contrary practically in unison. "Some of you know more than others, and we're going to try to sort that out immediately. We've decided to call this the 'Sharing The Fundamental and Understandably Vital Information (Or Else) Because We Are All Bad At Communication Introductory Meeting,' also known as STFUVIOEBWAABACIM -"

"STFU, for short," Karkat adds, helpfully.

"- and yes, I was in fact overruled on the matter of naming it something more succinct," Rose finishes. There was little she could do to counter Jade, John, Dave, and Karkat after they lured the troll to their side with the ridiculous acronym and its shortened form. Which was hardly fair, given that it was hers and John's idea to begin with. If Dave and Karkat's new, acerbic friendship helps those four form a permanent voting bloc, she's taking up drinking again and no one can stop her.
"My name is Rose, and I will be presiding; Karkat, here, will be our acting secretary. Before we begin - has anyone seen Dave?"

Roxy raises her hand with a wiggle. "He was printing something out, but there was a lot of it, so it might take a while? Idk."

"We'll have to start without him. Oh, the fucking humanity," Karkat says, as he underlines the large, capitalized STFU at the top of his first whiteboard with obvious glee.

"I'm right here, asshat," Dave says, shouldering his way in through the door. Rose pinches the bridge of her nose when she sees the colorful array of poorly folded brochure pamphlets he dumps all over the front table. She has no idea where he could have been carrying all that other than a sylladex, but he seems more concerned with presenting one to her for inspection. "I finished. Trust me, these are fucking A+ quality, right here."

Rose looks up from the brochures. "Brother, dear. These are poorly photoshopped pamphlets ripped off from Alcoholics Anonymous that you've written on."

Dave waves five of them to fan his face. "Excuse you, this is some of the best photoshopping prowess money can't buy."

There are people watching. Complete strangers are witnessing this moment. Rose lowers her voice to a hiss. "You don't think this sort of joke would be at all in poor taste, in a room with at least two known alcoholics?"

He doesn't even feign contrition. "Nah. You know you love it."

Rose stares at him. Dave, presumably, stares back.
"...Pass them around the circle of sharing," she says at last, feeling rather like she's sold part of her soul in the process. Curse David and his strange (but occasionally on point) sense of irony.

"Haha, yesss," he says, dumping more of the pamphlets into John's hands and tossing his own up in handfuls to rain down on people's heads. He flashes out of reach of a claw that comes out to swipe at him, but Sollux sets at least four brochures on fire, and Terezi keeps sticking out her cane to trip up anyone who passes by her.

"As I was saying." Rose taps her pen beside the first item on the agenda. "A show of hands, please - who here is familiar with our past lives and the game?" Of the trolls, three hands stay down - Tavros, Nepeta, and Equius, the ones Rose expected. John wafts copies of their basic information packets to the three, while Rose quickly rattles off the basics of the game and what it entails. Tavros appears only half surprised by some of what she says; given who he has apparently been traveling in the company of, Rose suspects he has caught on to at least a few scattered hints about what's going on. Terezi and Vriska appear to still be in the skeptical stage, trading looks that say they think the rest of the people with their hands up must truly be gullible saps, and no doubt making plans to capitalize on it. Rose is grateful they seem to have achieved some kind of functional equilibrium in their relationship, but they are also a menace.

Though if anyone is to speak of menaces, the greatest one also has his claw in the air. Rose can catch his eyes from here - trained, as they have been perhaps since he stepped into the building, on Karkat. They'd known before Gamzee arrived that he'd been searching for Karkat for some time, but the reality of it is...troubling. He doesn't appear to be an active threat now, seemingly content to trail at Karkat's heels and lounge at Tavros's feet, but Rose can't tell how long that will last when so much as catching a glimpse of him in the corner of her eye makes her break out in a cold sweat and shut her sight down so hard it stings. Something is wrong about him, more wrong than either Jade or Dave had the words to express.

"We're still working on accessing all of the records of the troll game session, though we expect to have them shortly," Rose finishes, looking to Aradia. Aradia smiles and shrugs with a bounce. "In the meantime, we still have to survive until this next game session commences, unless we can find some way to stop it from happening at all. I quite like the planet and all the people on it intact, but that is just my opinion. The main threats to us, for the time being, are the Midnight Crew and the Felt, a number of Horrorterrors that have targeted certain players in particular, and potentially -" she nods to Feferi, who blushes from behind the ice pack pressed directly to her face "- the Condescension as well, though we're less sure what her endgame may be."

"Boring, boring, boring, boring, boring, boring, boring, boring!" Vriska chants, tipping her head back and holding her pamphlet up to the light. "Don't you people have anything better to do than rack up enemies? Take some of them out already, if they're bothering you so much!"

"Kinda easier said than done," John points out. Karkat's hand shoots out behind him, and John passes him the fuchsia Expo marker so he can add the Condesce to the threat column. There is already a tiny phallus concealed in the bottom corner of the board that Karkat has yet to notice; Rose would wonder when Dave found the time to do that, but she needs to focus on keeping this meeting on track. "Also, uh, we've had a lot of stuff go wrong. Which is why we're here for this meeting!"

Rose nods. "On top of everything else, game players seem to tend toward dysfunction. Perhaps it's a symptom of how badly glitched the two previous sessions were, but I suspect that every person in this room has some secret, vice, personal vendetta, mental illness, old rival, unsavory acquaintance, or other hazard that could explode if we don't make some effort to put all our cards on the table."

"Which is why all of you fucking pissbarrels are going to 'fess up now, before someone gets the bright idea to start murdering everyone in sight," Karkat snarls. Ah, the tact of that troll. He's scribbling out their names across the rest of the boards in a straight line, swapping out marker colors with John assisting. "All of you." He points the marker at Vriska accusingly. "Yes, even you."

"Wow, bossy much!" Vriska huffs.

"Even you!" Karkat points at Eridan, who looks at the marker like it's going to blast his head off, raising both his hands in terror. "Even -"

The third repetition cuts off abruptly when Karkat spins on Gamzee, who is still staring. Intently. He blinks slow as molasses, purple eyes gleaming. "Karkat," John says softly, and Karkat whips back around to face the board. Rose watches, concerned, but John leans in and says something, squeezing Karkat's hand until the troll relaxes again. It would be sweet, if not for the circumstances necessitating it. John's relief upon his moirail's return brightened the whole laboratory; Rose could coax him through the worst moments while Karkat was out of contact, but she can't stand in for what they have.

Later, she realizes it may have been her own carelessness that tipped Gamzee off. But how could she have known? How could any of them have known but Aradia, who smiled upon everything that happened that day? Any number of people in the room might have thought the word, not knowing what they were about to unleash, not realizing that Gamzee could casually pluck thoughts from their minds like fish from a pond.

When Rose looks back to the room, Gamzee is not staring at Karkat. Instead, his gaze is fixed somewhere over Rose's shoulder, his brow furrowed beneath the paint as his eyes flick from side to side. As though he's rereading something on the whiteboards, over and over, to make sense of it.
Odd, since Karkat hasn't written anything on the spare board behind Rose as yet, and intimidating, since Rose can't fight the paranoid feeling that he might start watching her next, but still marginally less disturbing than having the purpleblood stare at Karkat for the duration of the meeting.

She starts before another confrontation can ensue. "I'll go first. My name is Rose Lalonde, and I am an alcoholic."

"Hello, Rose!" Nepeta calls.

Rose is starting to guess what Dave might have in those pamphlets aside from poorly conceived memes. "If at any point you see me in a ten foot radius of a bottle of liquor, retrieve Kanaya," she continues. She and John practiced their speeches for this part on each other, which helped immensely. "I am also being targeted by the Horrorterror called Leviathan; it fully possessed me once before, in New York, and has made several attempts since then." She pulls back her sleeve to show everyone the void bracer. "These help me maintain control while outside this valley. If they are damaged or otherwise removed, do your best to evacuate everyone within the city limits."

There's something else that happened recently; both she and John could have sworn up and down that they remembered her being unconscious upon arriving in Washington, but asking both Kanaya and Rue had produced nothing more than similarly confused memories. It was most likely another grimdark incident, but the lack of memory is concerning.

tick

"I dream about dead people," Karkat says, making another bullet point under Rose's name. "Namely, all of you dead fuckers. Thanks a fucking lot for that. Naturally, these dreams tell me fuck all by way of anything useful until everything's in flames." Rose wishes he would turn around and make eye contact with everyone, but given this is Karkat, he projects well enough that people can probably hear him two rooms away. "Also. Uh. Fuck it, Terezi's already going around calling me Cherry Pie, and our identities are probably the worst fucking kept secret on the planet, so. I'm Hemogoblin. I can hold for your applause." He turns his head to squint until Tavros, Nepeta, and Roxy start applauding with uncertain enthusiasm. "Yes, I'm a fucking mutant. Anyone who wants to call up the culling hotline, speak now and receive your honorary dropkick to the face."

Rose isn't sure when she notices that Gamzee has moved on to staring at John.

And then, she becomes even less certain how they skim past Gamzee while going around the circle, prying what they can out of Equius and Vriska and Oriole (who refuses to say anything past the fact that he was a sprite in the game before shutting down) and others who are still tight-lipped. She understands why they're reluctant; sharing some of this must feel like ripping open a fresh scab.

She does not understand how, with twenty two other pairs of eyes in the room, Gamzee Makara manages to slip out of the room, unnoticed and unremarked.

She only understands what happens next in bits and pieces, as order slowly but surely begins to fragment around them.

-

Dave notices the clipping probably way too late to do shit about it. To his internal chronometer, time is passing just fine, thanks very much - it's just that when you have a reality-warping clown on the loose, shit tends to get a little dicey.

He's busy trying to not get weirded out by Aradia, mostly. Out of all the trolls, she's the nicest and possibly scariest person he's ever met. "Dave! We'll have to talk later," she says when she spies him, throwing a cheery wave and a dimpled smile his way, and it spooks him all the way down to his toes. Everyone else won't stop worrying about the creepy clown dude losing his shit in the middle of the meeting, while Dave is stuck wondering just what the time girl has up her sleevesies. Seriously, forget the clown for two seconds.

He can't bring himself to voice it, though. He'd rather dick around making last minute additions to the meeting pamphlets with Oriole and try to ferret out why Bro looked like he was about to punch a wall and burst into stoic ninja tears when he saw Dave in these dumbass time pajamas. All his feathery douche self will say is that they thought he might have already picked up a future package, or something.

-

Don't think about it, he thinks, pressing the pads of his feet to the cold tile floor.

Not yet, not yet, he thinks, tearing the pile apart and throwing the parts that stink of human across the room.

But he lays eyes on the words, writ bare against the thinning void, and can deny no longer. The tile smears under his toes, the foundation crinkling under his heels.

Well, he could get his blame on, he supposes. That could indeed be a thing to be done.

But who is there to blame but himself, for being too late? For not having the stability of pan to let himself accept what was written all over that neighborhood?

This was always gonna be a motherfucking colorful day.
Vriska's left foot feels heavy. No matter how hard she tries, these stupid, stupid cracks between the floor tiles keep falling under her left foot when she takes a step, while the right one hits the center of the tile every damn time. She's all off-balance, gnashing her teeth every time her stride is just too long to cooperate with her. The count's at eight to five, and it's so fucking stupid that she has to shuffle and stand almost in place for half a step so she can plant her right foot on a crack with relish. Soooooooo worth the relief, though.

Terezi notices, because Terezi is the most infuriating person to frolic in blind bliss on the planet, and Vriska bristles with the hot prickle of humiliation when she looks up from her moment of triumph to see Terezi snickering at her with a shit-eating grin, one ear pointed towards Vriska as though to savor the sound of her sneaker squeaking on the tile.

"No," Sollux says, before Vriska even gets a chance to open her mouth and fire a warning shot. He hasn't stopped with this dumb meddling in days, and Vriska sticks her tongue out and pulls down the lower eyelid of her variegated eye when he scowls at both of them.

Ohh, she's bitter as fuck about how he likes to twist their serendipity around until it cancels itself out. Years, she spent trying to shove Terezi down the stairs of kismessitude, and for what? A couple of days of awesome rivalry fulfilled - and then a lame trip to Blandada where Terezi decides to drink the ashen Kool-Aid, undoing all Vriska's hard work.

And now they're in some other iteration of Dullsville, miles from any kind of action. The nearest city is Seattle, and if it's as cram-packed with dull losers like the ones crawling around this lab, Vriska can't imagine it's any fun at all. Sollux is dragging them along to go sit in the same room as him while he dicks around with some new computer, which is all he ever does! She's going to wither up and die of boredom before they escape from this hellhole, and that's not the way Vriska Serket is destined to go. No way in hell.

After that pointless meeting, Vriska needs to stretch her legs. There has to be a way to spice this place up. Something that'll get Terezi all fired up - with this many people with super powers in one location, Vriska should be able to poke around in a couple of heads to see which ones are ripe for the breaking!

Before she gets the chance, two very interesting things happen.

Kanaya-schmaya, busybody extraordinaire, marches past Vriska, so close her skirt hits the back of Vriska's shoe, and catches Sollux by the arm. "Sollux. You could have just told me," she says, in her annoying 'I'm disappointed in you' voice; Vriska mentally sighs in relief that it's not directed at her this time.

Sollux says, "Oh, ththit." Good. Vriska hopes that whatever he's done, he's in deep shit for it. Serves him ri-!

Something taps against the side of her shoe. "Tch!" she says, kicking it without looking down. Pain shoots up through her foot, but she bites down a yelp before Terezi or the two meddlers can hear, projecting all of her crossness onto them, and then glares down at the offending object that refuses to be kicked through the nearest window.

It's a cue ball.

Which really should have rolled away or shattered when Vriska kicked it. She has extensive experience with magic 8 balls, so she would know. Pursing her lip, Vriska checks to make sure Terezi's still cackling her head off at Kanaya and Sollux's awkward friend-argument, and then stoops to snatch up what could turn out to be something interesting. A treasure, perhaps? An escaped scientific experiment? Either way, she found it, and finders keepers!

The cue ball rolls away, whirring softly against the floor. Vriska blinks, and narrows her eyes, sure that this must be some kind of trick. Does Terezi seriously thinks she can pull this kind of juvenile prank against someone of Vriska's caliber? Puh-lease.

But no matter how Vriska focuses her eye, she can't make out a string attached, or magnets, or anything like that. The cue ball rolls to a stop, weirdly coquettish, just out of her reach, and waits.

Vriska glances over her shoulder one last time. Usually by now Terezi would have started elbowing her in the ribs, in her taunting, teasing way.

But ugh! It's like no one's paying attention to Vriska at all, Kanaya and Sollux and Terezi all bantering back and forth like they're having a grand old time without her.

Well, boo hoo to them! Vriska takes a step after the cue ball, and it rolls back out of reach before waiting for her again.

A messenger? A mystery? Or maybe a tantalizing temptation from someone who knows Vriska's fondness for breaking 8 balls all too well?

How can she resist?! In the words of her favorite cinematic pirate, Captain troll Jack Sparrow - this is the opportune moment. With a sharp-edged smile, Vriska tucks her hands in her pockets and follows the cue ball down the hall to the basement stairs, cerulean eyes luminescent in the darkness.

- He can hear them.

It's a wonder none of the rest of 'em can, a great and terrible miracle, a tick tock that slides under the edge of hearing like a current along the sea floor, and a quiet giggle that burns sharp in his ears like poison soaking into his brain through his ears, sloshing around old scabs and scars and doing its pestering best to pry its way in deeper.

Nothing he can do about the first; it's been too patient for too long, watching and biding as only a still, cold thing can bide, and there's not enough mind there for Gamzee to find weakness, no seam in the pale ivory surface of unrelenting scrutiny. Its will has been done, and all that remains is to draw one last unsuspecting motherfucker down to finish the unrighteous deed.

But the other -

The other has had most righteous reckoning coming at it for a while now. Motherfucker's all giggles now, coaxing and sly as anything. Motherfucker would be a brother's best friend, if one didn't have his shit on lock. And there's plenty of brothers and sisters up in this bitch as don't know said shit needs to be locked.

Not Gamzee though. He knows. He is well and mightily aware. He's got his knowing on, and he will not lose that now.

Can't stop the cue ball, when the work's past the point of stopping, when the void wards are burning away like fog before the sun.

Can't stop Karkat from wanting someone else, can't stop that filthy fucking pissblooded human from being here first.

But the puppet?

Not this time.

And not yet. He's lost the peace that seeing Karkat again granted him, that will that pulled him back from the teetering edge, but not yet, not yet, not yet.

-

Eridan passes out accidentally in one of the chairs, and wakes up slapping at his limbs in a panic because falling asleep when Kanaya's in the room and pissed is a one-way ticket to having limbs lopped off. Fuckin' hell, Kanaya wasn't even mad at Tavros when she decided to team up with Equius and have themselves a fucking limb-loppin' extravaganza; Eridan's given her a lot more reasons to rearrange his face with a chainsaw than dumb, sappy Tav ever did. He's been feeling drained ever since Jade decided to go all space witch on a huge reservoir of his power stockpile, and if he loses his upper body over it, he's going to be pissed in the afterlife.

But when Eridan gets ahold of his defensive flailing, he realizes the room is short one vicious glow-in-the-dark jadeblood, and sags with relief. Karkat and Jade and Rose and John and both copies of Dave are all still here, sparing him a collective glance, before Jade points at her eyes with two fingers and then points the fingers at him, and they go back to chattering about Karkat's charts.

Vriska, Terezi, Sollux, Feferi, and Kanaya have all fucked off, along with some of the excess humans. As he watches, as stealthily as he can, Nepeta bounces off her couch and clambers up onto Equius's shoulders; the blueblood rises and resignedly bears her toward the door, while Aradia blows a farewell kiss toward the circle of people at the front of the room before rolling Tavros out after them.

Eridan glances around, and bolts when he sees the ringleaders of this assboat rumpus are busy talking to each other. He coasts to a stop right behind Aradia, trying to look as inconspicuous as possible. And no, he doesn't fool the space witch for a hot second - but when he sneaks a look over his shoulder, fixing his most pity-inducing look on his face (used to work its magic on Fef, until she ditched for her own good), Jade squints at him suspiciously - and then rolls her eyes. "Hey, Aradia? Keep an eye on Eridan, okay? I can keep track of him from here, but whap him if he tries any funny business!"

"Of course. Always happy to help!" Aradia says, with her eerie giggle, and oh fuckin' hell. He's made a rash an' unfounded decision again, hasn't he. Dead-eyed Aradia, one-troll sweatsprinkler Equius, miss 'already changing the shipping wall to account for pale HemoHeir' Nepeta, and Tavros - honestly, of all the groups to tag along with, he had to wake up in time to get stuck with these assholes. This is his punishment for being a king douchebag. God. Fuck.

Then reality clips out from under him.

He can't tell if it's time or space that jolts - maybe it's everything. But when Eridan blinks, his stomach lurching and esophagus burning like he threw up in his mouth without noticing, the hallway lines up properly again, and Aradia's group is almost through the front doors, while he's barely out the door they just walked out of. He shakes his head, swallowing and grimacing at the taste. Normally he'd be glad to have ditched the nerdsquad (plus Aradia), but that jolt felt familiar. Like the unpleasant, lingering sensation of suddenly being alone, yet convinced that if he turned around, someone would be there. Smiling.
It feels familiar. It feels like...that fuckin' asshat juggalo.

A hand lands on his shoulder, and Eridan shrieks out loud, in the meager hope that at least if he dies screaming, Jade and her posse of human gods will probably come investigate his death. Or maybe thank whoever did the dark deed. As long as Gamzee doesn't get the chance to fuckin' molest his corpse, or something. Eridan's not putting anything past that creepy fuck anymore.

When he stops cowering, and slowly uncrooks his arms from over his head, Eridan sees only one of the adult humans, dark shades betraying nothing as he stares down at Eridan's defensive crouch.

"Fuck, kid," Ambrose Strider says, shaking his head. "You seen a free-roaming puppet around here?"

"...No," Eridan says.

"Shit," the man mutters, and then he vanishes in the blink of an eye.

...God, everyone around here is so weird. Eridan didn't think it could get much weirder than twelve trolls crammed into one meteor, but no. Humans.

-

Vriska is almost disappointed, when the cue ball stops rolling before an unassuming door. She at least had hoped this basement would turn out to have some kind of secret labs full of ghastly experiments, but noooooo, it's full of maintenance stuff! Janitorial closets! She would have been better off trying to find a flight of stairs to trip Terezi down, not wasting her time with this chump-ass billiard ball! "What?" she snaps when the cue ball taps against her toe - and the next second, she cusses herself out, realizing how dumb it must look for her to be demanding answers from a mostly inanimate object. There better not be any cameras down here! God, wouldn't that just take the damn cake, if some total bitch was recording Vriska wandering around the basement floor like a complete moron. Wow, she really hopes they're getting a huge laugh out of her looking stupid.

The cue ball nudges her again when she turns to stomp back up the stairs. "That's it," she says, whirling and bending to snatch it up before it can roll away again. If she misses, she's so out of here.

She plucks the cue ball off the ground without any issue. Vriska blinks, stumped by this turn of events. She turns it over between her claws, the main eight fingernails bitten down to the quick, and taps the cerulean-painted claw of her left thumb against the pale surface with a clack. It doesn't have an opening for a fortune-telling die or blue ink to swirl around in, and feels almost too solid for Vriska to be able to smash it easily.

But she hasn't been able to smash a magic 8 ball in ges. Addiction is a powerful thing, and she hasn't had her fix in forever. Raising it up to eye-level, Vriska focuses her multi-pupiled eye on it again, this time roving around for any sign of a weak point where she can apply the proper leverage with her heel and leave this jumped-up billiard ball in goddamn pieces.

It's weird, though. She expects it to be made of solid bone or ivory from the weight of it; even against the cool of her palm, the cue ball feels colder. There's a chunk of metal at the center though, the smallest shard, and she peers closer, determined to see what's written there -

Why, hello there.

Vriska jerks her head back, but the words follow her, typing across her field of vision.

Would you like to know your fortune?
Her heart starts beating faster. "Oh, gr8," she scoffs, playing it cool. "Don't you know it's magic 8 balls that tell fortunes? Talk about lame." She shakes the cue ball with a roll of her eyes, and new words rise up from the center.

Now, now. I can assure you, this cue ball could be your ticket to the big leagues, dear girl. It's far more reliable than your mediocre tools of fortune; it could lend you all sorts of advantages, even to the point of being able to outwit near-omniscient beings.

But I'm afraid that it's still somewhat lacking. There's a machine behind this door, you see, and as long as it is running, you cannot use it to see what there is to see.

Vriska sniffs, and looks at the door. It looks the exact same as any of the other doors down here; if this stupid ball is trying to walk her into a broom closet for shits and giggles, she's going to dump it in the lake. "And that's not suspicious at all. You really think I'm that easy to fool?" she says. On some level, she's aware that talking back to a voice like this probably isn't all that smart.

But...it's hard not to be intrigued. This is definitely eight times more interesting than hanging around all those losers upstairs, waiting for them to figure out how to watch this stupid game they're all obsessed with. None of her magic 8 balls have ever had the creativity to try to argue for their tiny lives before.

Not at all. Yet your curiosity is piqued, is it not? What can it hurt to open the door and gaze upon what lies within?

Or you could walk away now, and make use of this cue ball as you see fit. As I said, it is a tool that could lend you unmatched powers of foresight and strategy. With it, you could take on any number of the enemies that are at your doorsteps - the Felt, perhaps, or their charming leader?

Well, you would also walk away knowing you did not have the best tool to aid you in your endeavors...and really, what is the point of being merely good when you could be the best?

I'm certainly not stopping you. I have no power over you. The decision is entirely your own.

"You drive a hard bargain," Vriska says, tapping a finger against her chin eight times and inspecting the cue ball. The words die away after a few moments, and she thinks it's stopped making its plug for whatever the heck is behind door number one.

On the one claw, billiard balls have lied to her before. Dumb, plastic, useless pieces of garbage. On the other claw...what could be the harm in looking? This thing has power, Vriska can see that now, and it would be preeeeeeetty damn handy to have something like this for her to use to one-up the rest of the supposed 'game players' here. She hardly paid attention to a word they said in that meeting, too busy trying to avoid giving away any of her own secrets, but all this talk about being god tier and having super super powers sounded like a load of crap to her.

She's struggled for what she has her entire life, with none of this god stuff helping her out - so why shouldn't she use this cue ball as a way to edge out the competition and get some shit done? And if she can upgrade it or something by switching off whatever random old junk Lalonde human-custodian has down here...

Huh. Since when can she resist a chance like this? The door opens without issue, solid and whole under Vriska's claws, and she tosses the cue ball up and down in her free hand as she surveys the room beyond.

The machine inside is pretty pitiful, actually. She expects it to be a lot more impressive, or have some of those badass tesla coils for some extra dramatic appeal. Maybe she'd have to do some daring acrobatics to cross a room guarded by pits full of alligators and lasers waiting to slice her into eighths if she makes a wrong move - like something out of a crappy spy movie. But there's just the machine in the middle of a dinky little room.

It's a little hard to look at, though. Her eyes keep trying to slide away from it. Slippery damn thing. "This is what you need me to turn off?" she asks, disdainfully.

See? A trivial task, for one as powerful as the Thief of Light.

But you must see the machine in its entirety, or it will continue functioning. Shed some light on it, if you will.

"You mean I can't just pull the plug?" Vriska preens a little at the compliment; she can't help it. "I don't exactly know how to do this Thief of Light business, you know. It all sounds like bullshit to me."

Just gaze upon it. See right through it. No one else can do what you can.

Taking advice from a cue ball. Eh, she can do that. Vriska stares at the machine, tapping her foot when impatience begins to hit her eight seconds later. But the longer she stares, the more she's motivated to keep staring just because this machine definitely doesn't want her staring at it. Blotches float across her vision like she's stared into the sun, or into a bottomless pit, and she stares harder in retaliation.

And then, with a gasp, the machine stops humming and becomes perfectly clear, sharp-edged and in perfect focus. Vriska rubs her stinging eye. She's not sure but...she thinks it just went kaput. From being stared at.

This whole lab is weird. But hey, the job is done.

Then something in the machine lets out a huge CRACK, and a cloud of smoke fills the room. Vriska drops the cue ball to cover her mouth with her arm, coughing as she closes her eyes.

- The human pays heed when ol' Cal slips away, but too slow, too late to stop it. He's all sharp shades glittering before Gamzee snaps out again, but he wasn't looking for any kind of pernicious insurrection from the puppet, not after years of being just strong enough to keep it hobbled and quiescent.

Biding, always biding, and can't blame a brother that ain't a player for not being able to see it until Cal already had an opening, when he's busy pouring heart he doesn't have out for all the souls clustered around him. He burns fierce hot, where the other human lusus is a black hole, she and her littler kin and Equius the last sucking points of void left to hide this place from prying eyes now that the wards've been irrevocably seen through.

S'alright. Brother held it for as long as he could, and now Lil Cal ain't all giggles anymore. Oh, there's a chuckle or two, but it's all kinds of ominous, sticky poison dripping into his motherfucking ears, dragging at Gamzee's mind. More than once he feels the weight of those arms looped around his neck all as a noose, polished wooden teeth leaving splinters through the dud-frills of his ears while it tries to pull him under, again and again and again - before retreating back through the halls. Looking for easier prey, now that it's gotten its realize on as regards Gamzee's mind. He's many things (so many things) but not this puppet's fool. Rage has him and Rage holds him, and he can't stop the bleed now, even as it up and warps the walls, curling reality into new shapes, bending at angles before clipping back into place with a shudder. Ain't no one around here to feel it - not anyone as truly matters, anyway - and as long as he has this, no madness but his own can touch him.

And Lil Cal, most unfaithful of friends, couldn't have known that. Not when last time on this merry-go-round, Gamzee fell into its giggles like drowning, his mind hapless and shuddering from lack of sopor, tilted at such a cruel angle that falling felt like flying. Such wicked motherfucking lies this puppet did spew, and he sucked it all down like a new high. When he spun and Eridan's blasphemous motherfucking angel was there, with Lil Cal whispering in his ear, saying yes was gospel.

Neither of them could have known. Should have, if Cal were as clever as it liked to makebelieve it was, but Mal caught on too late, when it broke his mind into shards and his rage spilled out to meet it with open arms. Downright theological shit, right here. Raving and revelry and ruin, all his, all his, and by the time Mal realized it wasn't Gamzee who was being tangled, he already halfway had it, flicking claws against wheels and snapping each weak-jointed wing until the limp, crippled thing wrapped up in him couldn't even fight. It tore away as soon as it could, desperate and weeping and still whimpering his old quirk as had laughed its way into its echoing hive, and he let it go, too full of the mirthwhimsies to care.

Cal wasn't there for the end of it. Motherfucker didn't hang around to observe the most holy of beatdowns, and so shot itself in the foot. How can it hope to lie to his motherfucking face and expect to be believed when he's already laid eyes on truth?

It starts trying to backpedal - the laughter's gone, but Gamzee knows the feel of it now, darting through the between spaces as Lil Cal launches itself back towards the human brother. Let it reach him again, and Gamzee doesn't know that he can wrench it away without a fight. Man's only human, riddled with cracks, but he stepped to Noir and almost lived, his drive to protect powerful enough that Gamzee isn't sure he could sway him in time to stop Cal from latching onto some other motherfucker. And to come close to the main halls again means bleeding madness into minds he isn't of a mind to harm.

Not yet, not yet, anyway.

Not until this puppet is done.

-

BE: john, we're in trouble.

Kanaya walks back into the room, and John is distracted by trying to be discreet about his laughter when he sees she has Eridan by the ear, dragging him back in with a straight face that would make Dave's bro proud. What do you mean? he asks, while Eridan storms away, seizing his chair of shame and dragging it over by the windows on the far wall, glowering out at the lake. They've all dragged a couple of the couches closer together, gathered around a coffee table to finish what pizza survived the meeting, and Karkat is warm at John's side, throwing up middle fingers at Jade when he thinks she's not looking. They're arguing about something again, but John's been too busy talking to Roxy and Rose to bother keeping up with their latest fit.

BE: i mean, i don't remember what you guys talked about during that meeting...

BE: it's like we skipped right over it, without even noticing! there was a lot of stuff you guys were supposed to talk about, but something's muddled everything up!
Okay. John promised he was going to listen to the Breeze, and not take it for granted again. But this is ridiculous. He tilts his head at the five full whiteboards covered in Karkat's handwriting and Dave's unhelpful but hilarious doodles up at the front of the room. It's all right up there. Karkat literally wrote everything down and made charts for it. Which was probably the highlight of Karkat's day, to be honest. Then John scoots back in his seat so Oriole can lean forward and take another slice of pizza, the edge of his bright orange wing smacking John in the shoulder. With Kanaya here, sitting practically in Rose's lap, they should probably grab another couch or something.

BE: ...john.

What?

BE: try to read it.

"Dude, are you paying attention?" Dave asks, kicking John's shin under the coffee table. "Come on, make bird-me tell you what he and Bro won't talk to me about."

"I'm sitting right here, you know," Oriole says through a mouthful of pizza. "Ass."

"John wouldn't actually tell me, you know. He's a jerk, man, I don't even know why I'm friends with him." Then, in a lower tone of voice, Dave stage-whispers, "John, that's your cover. It's all you."

"That's never going to work in a million years, Dave," John says, making a face. Then the Breeze pokes him on the inside of his left lung (which hurts, darn it) and he huffs and turns his attention to the whiteboards. Yeah, what am I looking for, exactly?

BE: read the top line of the second one.

John sighs. This is starting to remind him of those days in school after a full night of work where the teacher would catch him dozing off and call him out in the middle of class to answer a surprise question. He skips over the first board absently and leans a little into Karkat to peek around Dave's head, squinting at the letters until they resolve themselves into words.

They don't.

John stares. Then he rubs his eyes with his fingers vigorously, and widens them all the way before squinting again.

It does nothing. All of Karkat's handwriting looks like - like nothing. Like squiggles and loops that don't make letters. Which doesn't make sense, he knows Karkat's handwriting almost better than his own. Heck, Karkat was writing in very clear, blocky letters so that everyone would be able to read it without problems. John - John remembers reading it, earlier, while it was still in the process of being written.

"Karkat," he whispers, turning his head to the side so that Rose and Dave can't read his lips from across the table. Karkat startles a little, engrossed in his silent duel with Jade, and frowns at John. "Karkat, can you read the whiteboard for me?"

"What the fuck?" Karkat says it too loud, loud enough that Rose looks at them with avid interest and a quirked eyebrow. Crap. John doesn't want to worry Rose, not yet. "It's right there, John. What's the problem?"

"Shh." That just makes Rose's eyebrow rise higher, and Karkat pulls away a little, worry wrinkling the corners of his eyes. John smooths the wrinkles away with his thumb, almost as much to try to calm himself down as Karkat. "Just - read the second one, okay?"
"...Yeah, fine. Whatever you say," Karkat says, shrugging a little and looking at the whiteboard. John watches the side of his face, his heart shuddery in his chest; the Breeze isn't helping that at all, even more on edge than he is.

Then Karkat's expression slips, and he starts to go pale, and John knows it's not just him. "Fuck," he says, clamping his hand down around John's. "Shit. John. I know I joke about this a lot, but I'm dead serious - I think I'm having an aneurysm. Or a stroke. Fuck, are those the same thing? I can't remember. Fuck."

"No, me too," John says, in a rush of what would have been relief if this weren't terrifying. Karkat looks at him in horror, and John hastily adds, "I can't read it. But I remember you writing it. Something's really, really wrong."

"No fucking shit."

BE: i think i know what this is...

"You do?" John asks aloud, forgetting himself completely. Whoops.

Which means now everyone at the table knows he's talking to the air. "Whassup, John?" Roxy asks, wonking at him. Winking. Whatever.

BE: but it shouldn't be this powerful. he shouldn't be this powerful. i knew something was wrong when he came into the valley, but this kind of distortion is way over the top! everything's disjointed and out of sequence, from the moment he arrived here.

BE: i don't know if i can clear this out of the air in time.

"I don't think anyone can read Karkat's notes," he says, breathing in deeply. It's okay. This isn't just something new in his head trying to worm its way free. This is something else, something they can deal with here and now. "The Breeze says someone's distorting everything."

"Distorting -" Rose sits up so fast that Kanaya almost falls over the sidearm of the sofa, her pale face flickering with alarm before she throws out an arm to catch herself. "Dammit - how did I forget -"

"What?" Jade looks frantic. "Eridan's here, I - I can't - Vriska's downstairs from us, I think -"

"Gamzee," Rose finishes, her eyes pale as shard of glass as she stares at Karkat in horror. "I don't remember him leaving."

And then the void wards vanish.

-

"OW! What the fuck!" Vriska takes a step back, still coughing, and her foot lands on something hard and round instead of solid ground; she falls hard and lands on her butt, growling with outrage as she glares at the stupid machine and the equally stupid cue ball that just decided to trip her. Stupid, stupid, stupid, stupid, stup-

The cue ball starts rolling again, breaking her eight count. While the machine gives a last faint, tinny whir before dying completely (like she's falling for that one again!), the cue ball taps against the sole of her shoe one last time and plinks along toward the door with a self-satisfied aura.

Hahahahahahahaha not happening. Vriska scoops the cue ball up and clenches her claws around it, gnashing her teeth when her claws can't even so much as scratch the surface. "Stupid piece of shit," she hisses, looking around the corners of the ceiling for some sign of a video camera that might have recorded this.

Nothing - ugh, she might actually get away with this, but Terezi'll be on her like a bad rash the second someone finds out about this machine being broken. It won't matter that there's toooooooally no evidence that Vriska did anything - heck, all she did was look at this dumb thing and it blew itself up! She had nothing to do with it, she was just an unfortun8 witness to the tragic event. That's her story, and she's sticking to it.

"And you're going in the goddamn lake, with the rest of the useless junk," she says angrily, shaking the cue ball like she would a magic 8 ball. Because if she's getting shit for this, she's slam-dunking this thing in the trash where it belongs.

Oh, no. That wouldn't do at all. I did promise that you would be the best, after all, and I could hardly leave without fulfilling my end of the bargain.

Your death shall be neither heroic nor just, merely amusing. But it should jostle you back into awareness. Consider it a token of my appreciation for your unprecedented ability to be the most gullible sucker on the face of the planet, in this life and the one preceding it.

A beat.

"What did you call me?!" Vriska shrieks.

The cue ball explodes, taking a massive chunk of her skull with it.

- tick

- They were smiling.

This is what Rose remembers later, when there's time to reflect. Some of the trolls have vacated the room, opting to explore or otherwise muck around elsewhere in the labs.

But John is here, and Jade, and Dave, and Karkat, and Kanaya strokes her thumb over the lines of Rose's palm, and Roxy laughs with her whole body, belly shaking as she loses her balance while sitting down and manages to topple over, still laughing as her head clunks against Rose's shoulder with curls going every which way. Three conversations seem to be going on at the same time, all of them swapping in and out between the threads of discussion at will, and even Karkat has a grudging tick at the corner of his mouth that may hint at a smile. Eridan has flounced over to the window with a huff, refusing to look at any of them except for a single imperious, all-encompassing pout; he lets out a 'hmph!' and sits with the air of someone pouting with a purpose. If Rose had to make a guess, she'd say with some wry confidence that he wants one of them to notice and ask him what's wrong. But the act is fairly transparent, and no one seems inclined to move their buttocks an inch from where they're currently planted.

Until John looks up, and squints, and realizes, and the breakdown gains momentum.

(There is a channel in the back of her mind.

She plugs it with sunlight and power, lights it up with wards that layer on each other, but underneath lies the cold sea, the whisper-soft, stinging touch of something horrific. Easy to ignore, at the moment, numbed and distant and silent as deep trenches beneath void wards and cuffs, both.

If Roxy wasn't right there, her cheek on Rose's shoulder, the barest strip of skin between the collar of her sweater and the line of her neck -)

-

Jade doesn't feel the void wards vanish.

She feels the rest of the world straightening back out from the twisty uncertainty that makes her space powers go a little wonky all the time in here.

-

For Rose, it is a shuddering ripple, too sudden and fast as it rocks through her, all the warp and weft of ambient magic snarling as it rushes back into the vacuum left behind.

And she feels the thing that punches through all her wards, slowed by the numbness where the void bracelets press down with a vengeance, but still there, still whispering, voices that echo and throng as Leviathan swims up through the channel.

-

tock
-

Gamzee tilts his head back, and listens, placing them one by one.

Sollux and Terezi, tucked away by a hub, oblivious, Feferi just now wandering in, her fins a-curl with questions. Eridan, knotted up and miserable in the same room as them. Aradia outside, with Nepeta and Equius and Tavros, playing at being a distraction. But of all the folks here, that sister knows what comes next the best. She has it all up in her pan that she's got her finger to his pulse, a knowing as to his choices, but only as it suits her.

Did she know, did she motherfucking know? Did she let him ferment in the wickedest of ignorances because it gave her a chuckle knowing what he did not - could not - let himself know?

Vrissis is below, bleeding out slow with half her face gone, and Gamzee looks down at the blood of the juju dripping from his claws, the stuffing torn loose and scattered across the rooftop where Lil Cal is no fucking more, and flicks his fingers to the side to snap her neck. No need to get his fret on, where Vriska's concerned - that sis is tiered just as Aradia is, and if she does up and wreck some shit most mightily when she wakes up, what should he care?

What should he care, anymore?

He'll do the rest.

-

It overloads her, the rush and the grimdark both, and when Rose shoves away from the back of the couch, Roxy yelping in surprise and Kanaya's claws grasping at the collar of her shirt, the only clear space she can find to vomit is all over the empty pizza box in the center of the table. Someone groans; others shout, but it's all noise in Rose's ears; she's busy emptying her stomach of bile and salt water, brackish and ice cold as it comes up her throat.

"'Naya," she croaks between spitting heaves - her first instinct, but her mind screams at her half a second later, even as Leviathan rolls like the tide and buckles the firmament beneath when the cuffs just barely hold. "Roxy."

Is it blood or salt water on her lips when Roxy tackles her around the waist? Both of them end up on the floor, in the thin space between the couch and the table, and the ceiling light overhead spins as Rose raises herself back up on an elbow so the cool tendrils of water can't trickle back down the back of her throat. One of Roxy's hands catches her on the face, the other locked on her hip, just under her sweater, and it's enough, just barely enough.

The price is that Rose loses all sensation in her own mind, everything going numb and distant and flat as her magic sucks out of reach, but the swelling tangle fuzzes and fades into silence once more. She forces her eyes to stay open, though fainting sounds like a remarkably sound option at the moment, her eyelids sticking as she fits words together.

"The void wards are gone," she says - to whom, she's not entirely certain. Her vision warps, and it's John, twists again and it's Kanaya's worried face, pale as a sheet, one more time and -

She can't hear Leviathan anymore.

So what is -

She's forgetting something, because her mind is all a whirl. Vibrations run through her as someone races out, their feet pounding against the floor; she hopes they're going to Rue, wherever she ended up in that daze that seems to have gripped and held them all, oblivious to the way reality no longer holds true around them. Her mother is many things, but rarely stupid; Rue wouldn't turn off the ward generator or otherwise tamper with it, not with Scratch ever-watchful, not with ten new, unpredictable troll players loose in the complex.

Over by the window, Eridan gurgles.

- tick

- Rose pushes up on both hands, hauling Roxy's weight up with her as she screams. "Eridan, no!"

His head is in his hands. Unlike her, he doesn't appear to have thrown up anywhere - but when she freezes in horror she can see the tiny lines of violet painting down the backs of his claws and hands, a tiny crown of pinprick, bleeding wounds where he's dug the claws into the skin of his forehead.

She can't feel anything, can't see anything but what's there. A foot plants itself between Rose and Eridan - Kanaya, standing and uncapping a tube of lipstick with an echoing click. "Eridan, you don't want to do this," she says, but Rose thinks, her stomach sinking into the abyss, that the moment to appeal to Eridan came and went long ago. Or perhaps, like her, he made his choice once and could never take it back, no matter how he wished things could be otherwise.

He takes his hands from his face, and looks away from them, out the window. Outside, the lake takes up most of the view, the sun pouring down between the occasional isolated plump of clouds.
"Let's give this one a standard." The thing riding his mind says like a sigh, twisting his head back around without moving the body enough to make the movement look natural. Tears like pitch run down his cheeks. "We'll, S'cratch? Your move."

Violet blood sprays the glass and the ceiling as wings rip out through his back.

"Get us out." Rose's voice is fading - Roxy's the only thing keeping her mind numb against Leviathan, but she's also draining everything else away. The violet of the blood's desaturated, and she can't tell if that's because of Roxy's void or some grimlight hallucination beginning to warp all their minds. "Jade -" Eridan's starting to burn with sickly light, bleaching more of the color out of the world. "Jade - get us out now!"

-

Tock

-

"Yet," Gamzee says, holding his hand out for a miracle.

His sylladex obliges, sliding a card into his waiting claws that flickers with rainbow static. When he removes the instrument, it shivers under his claws, one string still broken and frayed where he used it to play his way free. He takes the next string between his fingers and pulls, smiling and smiling and smiling as the wire goes taut - and then snaps in two.

-

Vriska sits up.

-

The room explodes.

-

[ B ]

_____________________________________________ a

_____________________________________________ B

___________________________________________________________ e

___________________________________________________________ L

______ o

___________________________________________________________ N

___________________________________________________________ ]

-

There you all are.
Chapter End Notes

boom
Chapter Summary

From the winds of the north and the south
They gathered as unto strife;
They breathed upon his mouth,
They filled his body with life.

Chapter Notes

This is the chapter where I lose 45% of you to outrage over my absolutely hilarious geometry problem-solving abilities, and 12% to disgust over the fact that all of the dialog has been put through a word scrambler. It's all basically a mess until the whole Gamzee thing gets sorted out. Hover for a non-scrambled translation.

EDIT: And we're done here! The last chunk starts at "Jade can't find any trace". Feel free to play this song whenever it feels right.

See the end of the chapter for more notes

Scratch. That a8solute piece of fucking shit.

Vriska can still feel the explosive, shrieking memory of pain, but it's distant now. Taking a cue ball to the face again? She's over it.

But now she has memories of losing an eye and an arm to that guy on top of this more recent insult, all because of Terezi totally overreacting about stupid Aradia. Maybe someone else could laugh it off - but why should she? She's the one who's been wronged, here! She remembers exactly how she's been wronged, over and over again, everyone treating her like she's the bad guy when she's the only one who ever gets off her butt to do something.

Vriska floats off the floor, fanning her wings out in a cloud of blue, sparkling dust. There's not much of the room left in the wake of her resurrection, the broken machine a sad, puny pile of scrap metal after she finishes stomping on it. If the cue ball survived blowing up in her face, it's long gone, rolling back off to the Prime Asshole. "Owh creas. Fcuk hatt ygu," Vriska mutters, flexing her claws to make sure they work.

Yeah. Who cares that he thinks she's the most gullible idiot on the planet.

...No, you know what, she does care. Baring her teeth in a snarl, Vriska reaches up and feels around as best she can with senses long gone rusty. She never bothered learning all that pointless lore and completing the useless tutorial quests that Tavros wanted to finish, but she never needed any of that to know how to use her powers through instinct. She's simply the 8est there is.

Of course, this crop of losers doesn't give her much to work with! Pretty inconsiderate of them, but them's the 8reaks. Out of all the potential targets here, only a handful aren't already in the negatives as far as luck goes. When she tries to nab some from Harley, the human jumps through space before Vriska can latch on, and she gives it up as stupid and annoying to try to figure out where the witch will end up next. She doesn't dare try to draw from Aradia, because Vriska doesn't remember Aradia being god tier and that means Terezi went and killed her before something big happened. But Nepeta's looking pretty well off, so Vriska skims some right off the top, before moving on to the piddly offerings of the nobody non-players scattered throughout the lab. They won't need it, anyway; they barely even count.

By the time she finishes stealing what fortune she can, Vriska's ready to fight. She's the luckiest person in this entire valley, and the rest of these weaksauce, ungr8ful assholes can kiss her ass if they want any of it back.

Right now, she has better things to do. Like finding Doc Scratch and breaking his face in. The rest of these guys can play stupid games for wrigglers and avoid dealing with their growing collection of enemies if they want; Vriska intends to actually Get Shit Done. Starting with that nosy prick.

He's made a fool of her for the last time.

Going up through the building is a lot easier now that she remembers how to fly, and how to make herself lucky enough that the ceiling breaks instead of her when she punches it. She flutters up past a gigantic hole in the building, arching an eyebrow when she sees the greyish miasma of power building up on the field between the lab and the lake. A thorny tentacle tries to snag her out of the air as she darts in, but she's far too quick, and she yanks the last of Eridan's luck before he and his brand new tentacle buddy know who's hit them. They're the real suckers, not her. And now no one can complain she hasn't done her part to help the rest of the chumps on her team deal with his crap all over again; with the benefit of her newly restored hindsight, she's pretty sure that Eridan being possessed is just a part of life. The rest of them can finish dealing with it, while she does all the hard work.

She considers dragging Gamzee. If anyone deserves it, it's him. Before she can try it, though, a thin, familiar voice screams at her from the half-demolished building. "Kirvs, ewreh od oyu thnki uyo're oggni? Ahtw idd oyu od?!!"

Haha, wow, that was incomprehensible! Vriska wonders if it's the thing Eridan has become doing something to her ears, or if getting her brains splattered all over the walls might have messed up her regen - but when she looks back to where Terezi's standing on the edge of a broken hallway, Terezi appears just as hornswoggled, her lips sucked into her mouth until all that's left is a thin white line, and Vriska decides she's not the only one hearing things all scrambled. Vriska grins, waving at Terezi as she climbs further into the air. "Aplecs to og, eaxbd ot beta," she sing-songs, coasting toward the southern outcropping of rock. "Tcahc em fi uoy can!" She flaunts her wings again, leaving a trail of blue dust as she goes. Terezi's a smart troll, when she's not being annoying; she can figure out how to follow a trail with that nose of her. Maybe she'll catch up in time to help Vriska, or maybe just to witness the grand finale.

Anyway. Vriska closes her varieg8ted eye and concentrates, pouring through her own mind with a dash of luck and a hint of psychic powers, to dredge up the last thing that flashed across her field of vision before the cue ball exploded.

Of course, if you care to take a chance and roll the dice...

Come to the Ouroboros.

1025 Las Vegas Boulevard.
Nepeta snaps out of it with a trill of indignation, looking up from the fish she's been debating about scooping out of the lake to make a real dinner for everyone, huntress style, and looks at Equius, aggrieved. "We just met Hemogoblin!" she says, but it comes out of her mouth all awful and jumbled up and harsh on the ears. For some reason, all she remembers meowusing about for the past half hour or so is the fact that Karkat and John are in diamonds with each other - but hello, she should have moved on to pawndering and reexamining her predictions for other hero quadrants, too, in light of this development! Her own chances! Something!

Now, though, her head won't stop aching, a dull, buzzing roar of grainy static that she can't believe she didn't notice before. Worse, when Equius puts a hand on her head in concern and says, "Neepat, fi hitis si msoe fersh nnonesse fo rysuo -" she can't understand that either! She tears her hat off her head in confusion, because she can't think of anything else that might be making her hearing all messed up. "Ostmehing is owng," Equius says, his face like a thundercloud and his voice grim and scary enough that Nepeta gets the point, even though she can't understand the words. She scrambles to her feet while Equius continues trying to talk, her hat lying forgotten on the ground as she spins, trying to find Aradia or Tavpurros. They came outside at the same time, but Nepeta and Equius had headed for the lake, while Aradia and Tavros went off in some other direction. There's no sign of the two now, or the wheelchair, or of anyone other than Nepeta and Equius having come out here.

Nepeta sniffs deeply, trying to pick out their scents, but she can't smell them when the wind picks up, tossing her hair and fluttering greasy strands around Equius's face as it zooms toward the lab building.

It means she's looking at the building when the nearest wall bursts outward, the shock of it knocking her off her toes. Equius grabs her almost too hard in a panic, his words a mouseterious babble as he cradles her to his chest and plants his feet. When Nepeta removes her hands from her ears and looks up, scrunching her nose at the salty smell that fills the air, she can see that a large chunk of that side of the building has turned into rubble, while a mass of grey tangles pours out onto the lawn, flaring thorny wings and floating along with its creepers barely touching the ground beneath it. Looking at it too long makes Nepeta's eyes burn and her head throb, vision all swirly as she whimpers and tears her gaze away.

Equius sets her down but places a hand on top of her head between her horns a moment later, and the ache eases. "Ew aer ilaengv. Won. We uhdso nevre vhae coem eher," he says, in his bossiest, sternest tone of voice, the one that makes Nepeta want to do the opposite of what he says most times because it just means he's getting his whiskers in a twist.

"Awt apehpnde? Whree is veeroyen lsee?" she wonders, resisting Equius's tug when he tries to pull her away. After the paranoid way he's been acting lately, he needs to stop bossing her around for a while! "Ahtw si ahtt htign - no, Suique, we nac't juts ealev!"

Equius keeps being a jerk. Nepeta can't figure out what he's talking about, but she knows it's something jerky. "I do nto dunserdnta why uoy niists no rnnunig rtwado moes nnuowkn tnambaooiin, ubt uoy wili sedsti at noce so we cna go hoem sith nitnsat."

"Nah. Nepsis is right, brother. Motherfuckers can't take off just when shit's about to go down."

Nepeta pinpoints where the new voice is coming from in seconds, her heart thumping with adrenaline as she looks up at the roof of the lab. Someone she could have sworn she hasn't seen before sits on the crumbling edge, long legs swinging over the open gap where the wall blew out, and considers them with heavy-lidded eyes. He's not dressed like one of those fancy doctors, either, so he must be someone from the group earlier. The words make sense when he talks, but - something's off. It sounds like he's talking right into Nepeta's ear, not calling down to them from a distance.

"Hwta's ginog on?" Nepeta tries, huffing when more scrambled BS comes out. Something sparkly and yellow and blue zooms out from the hole in the wall a second later, darting around the grey thing in a whirl of mean laughter - why is everything happening at once? - but then the troll on the roof vanishes and reappears only a few yards from her and Equius, and the wave of fear that follows him nearly makes Nepeta pass out.

"You," the troll says, pinning the two of them with purple eyes, red swallowing up the yellow as he stares. "Yeah. You first. I can motherfucking see how this motherfucking goes, now. Do you remember yet? Do you motherfucking know?"

"No," Equius says, and it's perfectly clear.

"No," he repeats, seizing Nepeta around the waist and picking her up like a ragdoll, regardless of her claws digging into his skin.

"No," he says again, as he starts running as fast as he can in the opposite direction, toward the cover of the trees at the far end of the lake.

Before Nepeta can shout at him for acting like a scaredy cat, the purpleblood appears again, crouched less than six feet from them, head and horns low and eyes pulsing feral red. Too close for Equius to skid to a stop in time, but Equius does anyway, heels digging so deep he kicks up a spray of dark earth and uprooted grass, falling on his butt when they come to a stop but still trying to backpedal. "Can't run from this, brother," he says, with a voice like a chainsaw, or Pounce de Leon in a bad mood. "Yet's here. We're all motherfucking here -"

"Gamzee, no," Equius says, sweat streaming down his face and neck. Nepeta jabs him in the side but he only clutches her tighter - before dropping her on her feet and shoving her behind him. "Ont tih, not gaian. I lwl nto llowa it."

"Fuck, bro. You say that like there's allowing to be had up in here." Gamzee draws a pair of strifing clubs out of the air, and Nepeta bristles. The smell of old blood lingers, too familiar too familiar, and her head feels like it's going to split in two. "There's only me." He flips a club. "And also me."

He smiles with more teeth than Nepeta has ever seen.

"We'll get it right this time."

-Teleporting is much easier without all that void stuff twisting everything up. Jade's more aware of her powers now that her memories are back, and she's been testing it all day long, bouncing from point to point but never quite daring to take anyone else along for the ride. She could probably fix herself if she got splinched, but no way is she risking anyone ending up short a limb like certain people she could mention (but won't). With that risk gone, her brain switches into hyperdrive the second Rose shouts in warning, reaching out with everything she's got to grab all the people she can and -

- something pushes -

The landing is kinda rough, and that's totally her bad! She thinks. Jade rolls onto her side, shaking her hair out of her face as she checks to make sure Roxy and Rose are hanging on to each other post-teleport. Rose looks pale and sapped of all her strength, Roxy's arms locked around her in a death grip, but Rose nods which is all the reassurance Jade needs that the Horrorterror sitch is under control. She ducks when a bright orange wing unfurls from on top of the desk where Oriole got dumped. "Ow," he and Dave say at the same time, Dave picking himself up from where Jade accidentally landed him on top of a chair.

Doctor Lalonde's on her feet, appearing to move on auto-pilot as she helps Oriole off the desk without knocking over her computer; her eyes find Rose and her expression tightens. "What just happened?" she asks, hitting a button on the keyboard and glancing at the screen she rounds the desk toward them. She freezes before she gets there, her face turning back to the computer screen. "What-

"Void wards are down," Jade says, just as Rose croaks something similar. "And Eridan busted up the lounge room turning into a tanglebuddy." She hates to think what might be lurking outside right now. She can feel the general mass of it from here, as well as the parts of the building where the explosion destroyed the walls, but there's something else -

"What happened to the generator? Do you know?" Kanaya asks. She has her chainsaw out, which doesn't help the crowded state of the office; she switches it back to a lipstick container a moment later. The troll takes the spot by Roxy and Rose, kneeling with her skirt puddling around her as she presses a hand to the side of Rose's face. "Are you alright?"

"The void sensors just set off an alarm." Rue types so fast her fingers mash the keyboard, yet she still seem to be able to type coherently; Jade's impressed. "The machine itself should have alerted me that it was being tampered with - unless it was completely destroyed." She looks up, her face almost as sheet-white as Rose's now. "The wards are dissipating too quickly. Someone did this."

"I'm somewhat less than fine," Rose says. Roxy has to support her as the two of them sit up against the desk. "Being numb is preferable to being possessed, houh. Rae nya of yuo hare -"

Ohhhh crap, that doesn't sound good. Jade tenses and watches Rose, hands already crackling - but Rose just blinks as her mouth snaps shut, touching her lips with her fingers. "Hwta saw hatt?" Oriole says next, and his words sound just as jumbled as Rose's.

"Aahpsai?" Kanaya says, her tone speculative.

Jade clutches her head, and looks around the room, but everybody looks as lost as she feels. Are they all hearing this? "Oen sconed - yannoe how cna haer creoctly, israe oury ahdn." Doctor Lalonde sounds commanding as she says it, but all Jade can do is stand there, at a loss for what she wants them to do. "Mndaotin - pahaisa ro aduitory crpoessnig isdreord? Othb?" the woman mutters, tearing a post-it note off and scribbling on it with the first pen her searching fingers find. Jade gets hopeful - until Doctor Lalonde jerks her hand away from the pen like it burned her, and holds up the half-finished note for all of them to see.

It looks like Karkat's garbled up writing from the whiteboard - well, the handwriting is still Doctor Lalonde's, but none of the letters form words, just an endless string of balderdash. Jade would giggle at how everyone reaches in a flurry of hands for their phones in their pockets, but this isn't funny at all. Especially not when her keyboard has all the letters in the wrong place, and Dave's immediate onslaught of messages looks like chunky paragraphs of red nonsense. He's only texting with the one hand, too, the other flicking through signs that Jade just doesn't understand.

Her first thought is that it must be something the Horrorterror in Eridan did - but...this was happening before the Horrorterror got loose, wasn't it? Not the talking thing, clearly, but either Karkat couldn't write all through that meeting this afternoon (and none of them noticed anything wrong) or everyone here stopped being able to read words before the void wards crashed.
And now whatever it is that caused it is spreading. Jade teleporting them to Doctor Lalonde's office only got them out of range for those precious minutes; now they've lost all ability to communicate, not just writing.

Or maybe the writing is fine, and it's just that none of them can read it. Same with their speech - they could all be talking just fine but no one hears it right. Either way, something's screwing with all of them where it counts: their heads. And Jade -

Jade recognizes it.

Karkat says something like, "Nhoj," but she's too busy to try to puzzle it out, even though it's short. The feeling in her head isn't exactly this same, but she knows it all the same. Hysteria is right there waiting for her, a tingle of nausea and fear clustered in the back of her head, and maybe he's using it a different way this time, but she's seen Gamzee Makara scare people senseless before and almost had it happen to herself. Right now it's just warping their ability to communicate - how easy would it be for him to push their brains a little more and leave them hallucinating sights and sounds, too?

How does she know it hasn't happened already?

"Hreew si John?!" Karkat yells, and the last word scrambles all the way back around into being understandable again. She looks at John on impulse, to see his reaction - Gamzee can't take away the ability to read each others facial expressions, can he? If he can, Jade officially gives up!

John isn't there. Jade's sense of everyone's bodies in the room hiccups - and then slides back into place, and Jade's hands go limp as her heart starts pounding, using her eyes to confirm what her senses should have been telling her all along.

But she had him. She had all of them, and the vanishing wards couldn't possibly have tricked her into thinking she'd teleported John when she somehow didn't. Maybe - maybe he moved himself, with the windy thing! They haven't tested which would take precedent yet, her space thing or his wind teleportation, so maybe he snatched himself to somewhere else in the valley right at the exact second Jade bounced them out of the room.

Karkat's still freaking out; Rose and Dave seem to have picked up on what the troll was saying, too, and maybe Kanaya, but when Rose moves to stand up her leg wobbles under her so badly that Roxy and Kanaya both seize her before she can slam her head against the edge of the table. She's not gonna be able to stay awake much longer unless Roxy lets go, Jade remembers - which won't be an option unless Doctor Lalonde can fix the generator in a hurry.

And Jade can't ask if the generator even can be fixed. Her head is screaming that they need to deal with the Horrorterror first, but she can't retrace the logic that made her decide that needed to be their main priority. This is a nightmare!

Except.

That's the panic talking, isn't it?

Oh. That was too obvious - Jade shoves the panic down, back into the back of her mind with the nauseating sensation, and focuses on covering the whole valley with her space sense instead. That's easier for her now than it ever has been, and being able to wrap her senses around every tree, every fish in the lake, every crumbling piece of debris -

That's what's real. She twitches her perception, and every human and troll shaped being lights up in her mental map like a star, and they're real, too. Her body is a fixed point in a turning universe. She finds John and he's okay, he's up and moving, too close to the place where the Horrorterror is but still whole.

She has no way to communicate with everyone in this room. But she can get them where they need to be, and that's at least a step in the right direction. Holding the mental map in her mind, refusing to let it get scrambled up, Jade reaches out with her hands and starts moving people.

Doctor Lalonde is hardest to get a hold of since she has void in her, but space beats void now that the wards are gone. Jade sets her down at the bottom of the basement stairs, right where the lingering void becomes too much for Jade to push through without potential splinching. Rose's mom is smart, she can definitely figure out if the ward generator can be fixed, and that Jade put her down there for that reason. Rose and Roxy go next, since keeping the two of them together is tricky business, and Jade sets them down by the far exit, near the automated greenhouses. Until the generator is up and running, those two can't let go of each other long enough to fight, so it's best they get to safety.

"Jdae, whder'e oyu upt hemt?" Kanaya asks, wary, but Jade can't explain. She can guess Kanaya's worried about Rose and that's about it; separating trolls from people they love is kinda not a smart thing to do in general. Karkat's already at the office door, hauling it open with Dave hot on his heels, but as much as she wants to tell them John is fine, they're not gonna understand. A glance around the room shows her that Oriole looks bewildered, but he also has a sword in his hand, and when she meets his eye with a silent question his jaw goes tight.

Jade, Kanaya, Dave, Karkat, and Oriole. Plus potentially the other trolls she can sense outside already, depending on who's fighting who.

It has to be enough. They need everyone that they can get, because Jade's never fought a Horrorterror before but she saw footage from New York. She gets that they're hardcore, and with what she remembers from the game, all of their minds are probably more susceptible after whatever baloney Gamzee has pulled.

No choice, though. Jade snags Karkat and Dave, and then everyone else in the room, and jumps them out to the parking lot.

- The lights flicker overhead, dust sifting down in thin sheets as the building rattles.

Samuel Egbert flexes his wrists in the latest set of shackles; he recognizes an explosion when he feels one, but the impact's far enough off that he can only assume something has gone wrong at the opposite end of the complex from where he's been secured.

He has no illusions of his employers coming by to pick him up, not after years of deliberately working under the radar of both sides. No, this is something else.

There's no reason for him not to take advantage of the distraction, though. The interns left in charge of keeping him restrained have been swapping out different pieces of the restraints at intervals on Lalonde's advice, but twenty minutes have passed since the last changeover. More than long enough for him to know the exact angle he needs to slip the wrist of his halved hand free. Being mutilated by the Harley girl puts a significant crimp in his chances of getting out of here, but in this respect, at least, it comes in handy. Even with only a few fingers left to him, that hand is more than capable of working the other loose, and from there undoing the rest of the restraints is child's play. The door is even less of a challenge, and once he's out in the corridor he sees that the people keeping watch on him have abandoned their post.
Still. Dilly-dallying would not be wise. A faint shimmer seems to cling to everything, and a new throb has joined the pre-existing soreness where the unfortunate surgery opened up his skull.

Odd, that while his senses tell him no one is around, he is certain that someone is aware of him.

If it is some new trick of Lalonde’s - Rue Lalonde is nothing if not a genius, even while thoroughly inebriated - he can't identify the means. He starts down the hall instead, orienting himself at the next branch in the path where small placards on the wall point in the general direction of the lobby and back toward the greenhouse rooms at the furthest end of the main building.

Heading out the back is the more strategic option; he believes the explosion came from somewhere in the direction of the lake, and if he knows the children here, they'll have swarmed the epicenter of the blast in their quaint desire to play hero. Harley's presence alone would be the largest obstacle to any escape attempts.

He recognizes the source of the faint resistance in his mind, though. Typical. The mindgrub never gave more than routine enforcement in his brain while he busied himself keeping John under control, but the chemical echoes remain. He should fetch the boy and discover just how much work Lalonde and her girl have managed to undo, and then contact someone within the Crew or Felt to obtain assistance.

He fights it for a moment, and then sighs. Technically, he is under contract. A job is a job, and really, what's the worst that could happen? Lalonde could restrain him in a new room, but this isn't a war zone where he'd need to brace himself to be tortured or executed if recaptured. There will inevitably be another opportunity to escape.

Pressing his thumb into the cauterized scar along the new side of his hand, Samuel begins walking toward the front of the building.

A week won't have been long enough to undo the work of years. If he can locate John, he can most certainly handle him.

- osarch=x1025
locale: US:en; PROSPIT:queen initializing user (TA) i.launchapp = solsat
net.socketexception: unrecognized sockets error: (solsat) <unknown source> et.socketexception: unrecognized sockets error: (o) <unknown source> et.socketexception: unrecognized sockets error: (uU) <Unknown soUrce> opening local connection settings detected:
updatetype = false remotemode = false auth_mode = false serverName = Omega
no updates detected the user twinArmageddons has authorization TA: then fuckiing act liike iit > refresh connection clientcache: cleaning cache... clientcache: finished updates detected: tier.mod; solsat.mod, musecheer.umod, Sburb_Omega_v1.025.update TA: what the fuck > enable tier.mod; solsat.mod
.mod file(s) not detected; enable prerequisite: musecheer.umod
TA: now ii2 2eriio2ly not the tiime two diick wiith me game > enable tier.mod; solsat.mod, Sburb_Omega_v1.025.update
.mod file(s) not detected; enable prerequisite: musecheer.umod
TA: ii'm not in2talliing 2ome random tra2h mod > limit: source: TA updates detected: tier.mod; solsat.mod, musecheer.umod TA: no fuck you, ii diidn't upload that TA: ugh
UU: jUst trUst me! yoU'll need it! ^u^
TA: ii don't have tiime for thii2 pii22 off UU: rUde!
> block net.socketexception: (uU)
TA: ha
> enable tier.mod; solsat.mod
.mod file(s) not detected; enable prerequisite: musecheer.umod
TA: fuck me TA: FIINE > enable all installing... installation complete ii.launchapp = tierbedconfig
WARNING: altering god tier mechanic source files may cause discontinuity, file corruption, broken paradox loops, a growing sense of existential dread, plot holes, terminal glitching, displacement, and/or extreme death continue launch?
TA: wtf doe2 extreme death even mean TA: whatever were already fucked
> continue launch could not start thread dumper on port GM (unknown anomaly detected) could not start thread dumper on port EA (chaos-type corruption detected) failed to get portloca information for: KM duplicate information for: SC > show echeladder status AM: tiered
TN: maxed
SC: maxed [error detected]
KV: maxed
NL: maxed
KM: maxed [error detected]
TP: maxed
VS: tiered
EZ: maxed
GM: ?????? [error detected]
EA: maxed [error detected]
FP: maxed
JE: tiered
JH: tiered
RL: tiered
DS: tiered
TA: okay
TA: 2hiit
TA: ii can work with that TA: AA, who goe2 fiir2t?
AA: wait for it...

A cane smacks against the top of Sollux's requisitioned keyboard. On his right, the White Queen startles, her claws digging into the cable she's supposed to be hooking back into place. "Slouxl, Rkvias is valegni!" Terezi snarls, her eyes alight with the kind of single-minded obsession Sollux had hoped he'd blasted out of their systems. God, he doesn't have time for them to have a kismespat in the middle of this hellhole. "Ehy, reeht rae uimtple nhtgis giong owngr eher, plapberyer baslt! Ypa aetnintot!" She uses the cane to jab him in the chest for emphasis.

"Ioptn hatt htign at em one orem miet," Sollux mutters, shoving the cane out of his way. "I eend ot teg htis eiec of hist omd kornigw or ew're lla dead. All of his mind is set on finishing this; even the parts that have been splintered off and hiding from him, working to alter Prospit and Derse into something useful. They have everything in place - but all of Aradia's timing won't mean anything if the program itself doesn't work.

He can't tell what's going to break first: him, or the game.

"Is oyur uspdti, nkjyu moeterpu rporgam moer timoprnta htan hwta's ggoni no otu teher?!" Terezi demands.

Outside, over all the yelling and the roar of something horrific, someone screams in what is unmistakably grief.

run program? y/n
> y

"Wow. This guy's not too shabby at this crazy thing, huh? I kinda like it!"

John groans. When he opens his eyes, he has a nice view of a badly damaged ceiling, cracks running away from the blast radius and greyish light pouring through the gaping hole. He shifts his weight and peels his head off a smashed up computer; his fingers come away tacky with blood when he feels around for an injury. But he can't find any split skin, and aside from a keening buzz that leave his head aching, he doesn't think he's in any pain. Which is good! Fantastic!

Except that he knows that voice.

He doesn't want to know it.

"Denial? Well, I guess that is all you're good for."

The force of the thing that burst through Eridan demolished the lounge room, and now what didn't get vaporized lies crumbling up against the far wall - except, when John takes another look around, he realizes the far wall got blown up, too. The boom took out the lounge and blasted everything through to the rooms across the hall; he can see the hallway when he lifts his head some more, with most of the walls and ceiling and upper floors torn away to leave the labs exposed to the elements. There isn't even a door in the doorframe anymore.

A foot starts swinging in his peripheral vision, a pale pastel boot that taps out a little beat against the broken lab table. "Hmm, hmm, hmm. It really is a shame. I think you died a little there, but it didn't stick. Must have caught you off guard. I know you have trouble with getting things right, but you'd think at some point you'd figure out how to die properly."

He's not listening. Really, he's not. He stands up instead, staggering a little when the room spins around him. His eyes skitter over half a whiteboard that has popped out of its frame, and then skitter back so he can reread the nonsense words in Karkat's handwriting. The marker ink has been smudged by - well, by being blown up a little, but some of it's legible. Actually, now that he thinks about it, he can almost pick out a word here and there that's not incomprehensible - but he doesn't have time to try to figure out what they talked about this afternoon that's gotten so scrambled in their brains. There's at least one Horrorterror using a tanglebuddy to wreak havoc outside, which means that while John's been temporarily unconscious, things have probably gotten worse.

"Temporarily unconscious? Is that what they're calling it these days?"

John can't think of a reply. He's saved from it by a clatter of claws on tile, and then a questioning, worried warble that precedes Crabdad into the room. For a second, the sight of the lusus is so bizarre that John's brain hitches and stutters. So many people showed up over the course of the day, a blurred stream of almost-familiar faces and names, and John could name them for you if you asked him, but when he tries to remember meeting half of them, he comes up blank. Crabdad turning up out of the blue, having traveled from Seattle to hunt down Karkat in the company of Tavros and a weird clown guy - it seems just as nonsensical as Karkat and Dave getting along. Wait. They are getting along.

God, today is just so weird.

John accepts the violent hug when Crabdad scuttles up to him, patting the lusus on the back like that'll make order reassert itself. He needs to find the others, so they can take care of whatever the heck happened to Eridan, and to Doctor Lalonde's wards. From the looks of things, no one else ended up plowing into this new room along with him, so John can only suppose that Jade got them all out in time.

"Haha, oh my god. Just when I think you can't get any sadder, you manage to land yourself a crab guardian." Another giggle. "Or maybe I shouldn't blame you for this one. Everything's gone topsy-turvy; who could blame you for not seeing this coming!" And then a pause. "Pffft. Nah, somehow, this whole mess is your fault. How many people are you gonna get killed this time, I wonder!"

Ugh. He feels exhausted, keeping his eyes fixed on the ground as he forcibly unwinds Crabdad's claws from around his neck. The lusus backs down with a chirr of indignation, but it hovers by John's side and stares around them. It's the most alert John thinks Crabdad has ever been - but its eyes don't blink when it skims past the broken lab table, despite the giggles, so he's probably on his own with this one. "Shut up," he tells himself, reaching out with the air and feeling around for anyone else. Jade must have teleported the rest of their group -

(And why not him, too? Too much crazy interfering? If John's seeing things, there's no telling how Jade and the others might be affected...)

- but where? They have to be breathing somewhere around here. He can find them, as long as they keep breathing.

"Make me~~~!" John hears a faint 'hup!' and a tap of shoes on the floor, and he turns his eyes away before the Trickster can walk into his line of sight. "You should just let me be in charge. Trust me, you can't handle this. You can't handle anything!"
There. A mass of people have moved to the far end of the lab complex, all of them scientists and doctors and interns that John registers as almost indistinguishable. They're out of immediate danger, so that's good. Another group's clustered in the small space of Doctor Lalonde's own office, and he picks up on Jade and Rose and Karkat and Roxy there, at least, before they vanish again; Jade must be zapping them elsewhere. But they're breathing, and alive, and John clings to that because it's the only lifeline he's got in all this confusion.

Now he just has to get to them before he starts hallucinating something worse than this. He can manage that. He totally can.

"Liar. He's gonna be here soon," the Trickster breathes into John's ear, walking its fingers up the back of his skull. "Like they could ever lock him up for long."

John knows he's hyperventilating. When he wrenches away, rounding the corner and angling toward where he feels familiar breathing patterns outside, the Trickster hums and floats along after him, tilting its head to the side to grin up at him. Crabdad walks through it like it's not even there - which it's not. As long as John remembers that, he'll be fine. They're not in his head, and the Trickster is only real in his head. "Just let me deal with it, so you don't have to," the hallucination coaxes. "It'll be sooo much more fun that way. I'll even kill him for you so you'll stop whining all the time. Because I'm the better person here."

He can't let this distract him. Panic gnaws at the edges of his thoughts, but the Trickster hasn't done anything yet. Just a hallucination. The madness in the air is so heavy that John thinks you could scoop it up like honey and ladle it into a jar. If he can get outside and help the others deal with the Horrorterror, the aura of crazy'll probably die off and his head will stop going bonkers. Less bonkers than usual.

Gah. He might be freaking out a little, here.

While he's doing that, the hallucination rolls its eyes at him. "Three." The Trickster pretends to inspects its nail polish while John ignores it. "Two. One."

"What the heck are you counting down to?!" John says, hating himself for responding. Crabdad crees like he's said something to it - probably wondering what the heck John's talking about. But someone he knows is breathing steadily as they run down the corridor that crosses this one at the intersection ahead, and he pauses to wait for them to catch up before he finishes registering why it's familiar.

"Ohjn. Hetre ouy era."

Quick as a flash, the Trickster reaches up and jams its fingers against the pulse point under John's jaw. Like it wants to feel the sickening jolt when John whips around and sees his handler striding down the hall toward him. It leaves him lightheaded as he stumbles back, almost tripping backward over a displaced couch in his haste to get away. "You're another hallucination," he says. His mouth feels papery and dry and no sound comes out. That's the only explanation that makes sense right now, though; it's all in his head. He just - he has to find Karkat or Rose. Preferably both.

Because the terror is real, stampeding over the rational thoughts that tell him he needs to get outside and help people. He can't let a whole boatload of hallucinations keep him here. He has to find them and get his shit together, or -

Crabdad bristles at his side and lets out a clacking, hard-edged noise that John's never heard the lusus make before. Maybe if Karkat were here, he could interpret (because Crabdad is still that guy's lusus, no matter what lame bullcrap Karkat tries to pull) but what John takes away from it is that...
"...Our'ey lear," he says, horrified, wrapping his arms around himself and backing up another step. Because Crabdad walks through the Trickster like it's thin air, but steps into the space that John has vacated with another hostile screech, pointing an accusatory claw at John's handler.

Because he is there. He's real. All this chaos would be a prime opportunity for an escape attempt, especially for someone just waiting for the chance to twist their wrists free of their restraints, with all the pranking prowess needed to make it out with ease. He looks as close to scruffy as John has ever seen him; he hasn't been able to shave, and instead of a white suit he wears a rumpled white lab coat, a concession to a disguise that he didn't really need now that the lab has gone to hell in a handbasket.

But his eyes are cold and assessing and full of reproach, and if John wasn't on the edge of going completely crazy before, he sure as heck is now.

"Told you he'd be here soon," the Trickster says, laughter breaking up the words when it can't restrain itself anymore. "Let me talk to him instead, and then I'll rip his lungs out through his trachea! I pinky-promise. As a sincere, heartfelt thank you for finally fudging off and dying." The hallucination offers a pinky with an extra knuckle. "Come on. Make yourself useful for once."

"No," John chokes out. He can't seem to stop shaking his head as he takes another step backward, out of what's left of the hall and over the ankle-level bump that's all that's left of a wall. Crabdad takes a rolling step forward and belatedly John yanks the lusus back with all his strength, fear burning in his lungs like cold fire.

"I ma reyv deapitooinpsd ahtt ouy didn't foolw oyur incdotigoinn. But I upspsoe htere's nnthgoi orf ti." His handler doesn't appear fazed by the sea lusus hissing at him, icy blue eyes pinning John in place. "Are uyo gniog to maek a ufss baquot tish? Who acn I veer eb orpud fo uyo gaain?" His expression is forbidding and stern, and he shakes his head in disappointment as he starts walking toward John again.

John doesn't understand, but it feels like a punch in the gut to hear it. Like something in his hindbrain recognizes the intent behind conditioned phrasing, even when he can't put the words together. "Alwysa so stubnnbor. Why ddi I wtase os yman esary no this..." his handler adds, and it leaves John miserable and terrified at the same time. His grip on Crabdad tightens when the lusus whistles a third challenge, but his fingers feel distant and weak, his hands shaking so hard he can barely keep his grip. He nedes - needs - he needs to get Crabdda away from here. Crabdad. He endes ot egt ihm sohmewere fesa or owh onwsk hawt his nalhderliwod -

"Let me," the Trickster insists. John can't figure out who to look at now, eyes darting to the side as the Trickster takes his wrist and lifts one of his hand off Crabdad to try to hook their pinkies together. "No one will care if you're gone, trust me."

"Nohj," his dad says, clicking his tongue in disdain - and then an entire couch slams down on top of his head.

---

John stares, forgetting to blink for a few seconds, then looks up from his handler's new couch-hat. The eyes are the same, too much the same, and he struggles to push through the bubbling hysteria to look at Jane like she isn't just his handler all over again. "Rea uoy arlight?" she asks simply, studying John and nudging a hand that lies next to her foot aside.

Is any of this even real?
"I dno't wnok," John says. His head feels hollow, and oddly quiet; when he loosens his hold on Crabdad the lusus stomps forward and starts chattering at his unconscious handler with a vengeance, patting Jane approvingly on the shoulder with a claw. She just looks amused.

Then she walks toward John, brushing dust from her hands with a brisk clap. "Veeryinhgt eemss onfucsd6e," she says, without batting an eye at the scrambled result that comes out of her mouth. "Utby uo sho1erbm hwat uoy ldo1 me. Yno dno't ened ot iltse ot etmh anmeryo. Uyo, dan Ejak, and em - w3 cna do ahwt ew wnta." By the time she comes to a stop barely a foot from John, he can see the intensity in her eyes. "Nda if hts nma rstie to urht yuo, you hurt him back," she says, in a rush of clarity, and when John breathes his lungs feel clear for the first time since he woke up this morning.

BE: ha, HA! try to scramble my heir, will you? suck it suck it suck it!

BE: john, please tell me you're listening now... :T

Again. John scrubs his face with his hands. His knees feel like they've locked up, and when he seizes Jane in a hug it's 50% because he's so damn happy to see her, and 50% because his legs have forgotten how to leg. Holy crap.

"That's a relief. I wondered how long that bullhonky was going to last," Jane says, touching her fingers to her throat. "I mean, it didn't stop me from coming to investigate who the culprit behind all this was, but it was annoying. Do you remember this afternoon?"

"Not all that clearly, no," John says. What happened? Breeze? Why is everything all crazy?

BE: because that bard of rage is losing his shit for some reason!

BE: and since he's a bard, his specialty is inspiring madness and heightened emotions in others, so everyone else lost their shit right along with him.

BE: he's massively overpowered, john. [Babelon] is a god tier fraymotif for Rage players that he shouldn't even be able to use!

Oh, that's awesome. Really encouraging. Is there any way to turn it off?

BE: i'm trying to do it manually, but i can only make things better right where you are; he's strong. [Clear the Air] might work on the whole valley, but it'll dispel every other fraymotif in range at the same time.

That's a bad thing?

BE: yeah, duh. dave's got at least four going right now to keep the people fighting the Horrorterror from getting pulverized, sooo...

"So we need to help them," John says aloud, as his brain finally clocks in for the day. Jane looks at him sharply, then past him at whatever's going on through the giant hole in the building. John can't remember his senses closing in so much, but it takes real effort to push past the lingering tendrils of fear and guilt that kept him from noticing anyone and anything except his handler to sweep out through the complex again and see where all the others have got to. He thinks only fifteen minutes have passed since Eridan went thermonuclear, but he was definitely unconscious (BE: dead, john, you were pretty dead...) for a while there, so there's a gap he can't fill in. He would kill for Dave's internal clock right now, because he gets the feeling that he wasted more time trying to ignore the Trickster hallucination than he realized.

But almost everyone's outside now - the only people he can't pin down are...Aradia and Tavros? Maybe? Rose and Roxy are still inside the building, heading the opposite direction from the Horrorterror, and that's probably a good plan. The best plan, actually.

"Yes," Jane agrees, bringing him back to the present. "What about this one?" She nods her head toward Samuel's sprawled form. "He's regrettably good at hi-jinks, apparently. Can the lusus guard him, or...?"

John chances a look around, biting his lip. There's no sign of the Trickster (like it was never there at all (and it wasn't, was it?)) and the greyish, humid miasma of grim-something or other curdling the air somehow feels less distant. The Breeze does a good job swooping the worst of it away, though the smell of blood and brine filters through.

No, what the Breeze is more focused on clearing out is the unreal, delirious mirage of insanity that was warping everything. John glimpses it still where the Breeze's sphere of influence ends - a hazy, glittering slant where the walls don't line up quite right, huge chunks of the floor that look smeared rather than shattered by the explosion. How is anyone functioning in this? Forget John's resident mindfuckery personified, the others are gonna start growing crazy split personalities of their own at this rate.

BE: actually, i think they're okay so far.

What.

BE: that's not really what [Babelon] does. it just scrambles communications. no one can understand each other unless they've got a really strong hold on their perception. sign language, talking, writing - nothing's gonna work.

So why was I seeing things?

BE: our luck is non-existent. also did i mention the massively overpowered part? but you're right, something about this feels really off. it's like the worst of the distortion piled up on you all at once.

BE: lucky you have me around to save your butt!

"I don't know. Crabdad is...Crabdad," John says, looking at the lusus in question hesitantly. Crabdad, busy scolding Samuel, starts waving its claws around. He grimaces at Jane. "He might be able to keep an eye on him for a while, but my handler is - tricky. I'd be worried about Crabdad getting hurt." Or losing interest and wandering off to investigate something or hunt for John or Karkat. Never mind [Babelon], having only Karkat able to properly talk to Crabdad nixed this plan before it even began.

"It'll only get hurt if the handler wakes up to hurt him," Jane points out. Then, patting John on the shoulder, she walks back to Samuel and kicks him in the side of the head. John's not expecting it and he flinches, but it seems to knock his handler even more unconscious, rather than waking him up. "Watch him. If he wakes up, sit your tuchus on his head until he changes his mind and goes back to sleep," Jane tells Crabdad, snapping her index finger out to point down at the man. To John's honest amazement, Crabdad salutes her with a claw, and then climbs up on top of the couch like this is Karkat's living room, letting its claws and chin hang over the side so it can stare down at the unconscious man.

"I think you need to teach Karkat how to do that. Crabdad never listens to a word he says," John says, fascinated, while Jane sniffs and digs through her pocket for a folded up, unidentifiable red cube. "You'd be his hero."

"Maybe later. Maybe not." Jane walks past John and he follows her around the edge of a hole that seems to lead down to a basement area, now clogged with rubble. The Breeze sticks close, shoving away the not-song of the fraymotif before it can reach their ears. "Now, what we're up against?"

John assumes that Jane's memory of covering potential nonsense at the meeting is sketchy as his own. "A Horrorterror channeled through a forsaken fish troll, and an evil clown guy with the power of Rage. Probably." Neither of whom John can think of how to counter, right this second. Ugh. Would Doctor Lalonde have extra void bracers for Eridan somewhere in the facility, or was that another thing that got skipped over?

"You give my skepticism attribute a workout, buster." Jane goes to stomp right through a puddle of cloudy grey slime that's congealed on the ground as they emerge through the gap in the outer wall, and John hastily lifts them over it to flattened grass that looks a little less likely to swallow their feet whole.

The more obvious problem is, of course, the giant elder god oozing grimness and horror all over the place. It looks so different from the way Rose's Horrorterror looked in New York: a massive, gelatinous bell floats forty feet in the air, gleaming with a sickly inner light, and blooming and fluttering in pulses as it eddies past the parking lot. Twining tentacles with thorns form a ring around the rim of the bell, but in contrast, the longest tentacles trail along the ground like an afterthought, pitch black limbs with feathers that brush over the nearest car and crackle with purplish-black energy that makes the metal seize up and melt like soft candle wax. As John watches, all of the limbs twitch and lash out in an erratic wave of motion, knocking someone back - Kanaya, John realizes, sucking in a breath - and splaying out in a curtain that radiates out over the ground, making it all the harder for the fighters on the ground to approach.

The contrast between the sickly, pale sheen of the umbrella and the splotchy darkness of the tentacles and thorns strikes John as kinda strange. Which is not something he thinks you're supposed to think about Horrorterrors, seeing as how they're strange by nature. But it doesn't look properly grimdark, and it doesn't look the way Dave and Karkat and Feferi described the grimlight god that possessed Feferi in the Arctic. Worse, there's no sign of Eridan - even Rose's possessed body with its glowy eyes was visible in New York. Could Eridan be stuck in that giant, amorphous umbrella part?

BE: wait. crap. hang on hang on -

He doesn't get time to ask the Breeze what it means before madness slams through the wind and sends John's vision spinning. For a second, all he can hear is -

-screaming, they're all screaming -

- and then the Breezebuffets the renewed wave of [Babelon] away from them with an effort that shakes John. When he opens his eyes to something that isn't sickening distortion, Jane is down on one knee, her jaw tight as she punches the ground and lurches back upright.

BE: i don't think i can do that again...i feel kinda sick...

John feels woozy, too, is the really nerve-racking thing. While Jane pulls herself together and smooths her face into a cold mask of indifference, jamming her thumb against an indentation in the side of the red box to make a familiar fork specibus expand, John gulps fast to try to keep the sudden, dry edge of nausea from overwhelming him. Is something wrong with you? With us? Urgh...

BE: look, i help you and guide you, but you're still the heir here, doofus! the strength i have to draw on comes right out of you, and this fraymotif already got you good, so we don't have reserves to draw on.

BE: even the post-revivification boost can't help much since keeping [Babelon] out of your head leads to constant drain. seriously, i recommend you shut that bard down, fast, or this is gonna get all messy...

"There," Jane says, leveling her forkkind to their right, and John swallows back bile one last time before looking at the commotion going on in the opposite direction from the Horrorterror. It only looks like two people, at first, one identifiable because Equius is huge, and the other wearing a floppy green trenchcoat that John recognizes as Nepeta's. The two of them are right up along the shore of the lake. Which seems counterintuitive to the little voice in John's head that can recite the Huntress and the Crusher's fighting stats from heart, and knows that both close-combat fighters won't be able to touch the Horrorterror from that distance. Then a third figure jolts out into sight from out of nowhere, looming behind Nepeta with bared teeth. Only the greenblood's cat-like reflexes let her duck and dart out of the way of a swinging club.

John distinctly remembers Gamzee arriving. Which is weird, considering the rest of the afternoon after the purpleblood showed up is a very obvious blur. But he remembers that stilted way Gamzee popped into being to scoop Karkat up in a creepily long-lasting hug, and the way the purpleblood was unexpectedly compliant when they'd thought he'd be the most obvious problem child, right up there with Vriska in terms of potential aggression. But he followed their group to the lounge room like a floppy scarecrow, his blinks slow and languid and not threatening at all.

Now, John's thinking they should have stuck to their first instinct, because Gamzee fights Nepeta and Equius with a brutal, feral intensity, [Babelon] throbbing palpably around the three fighting trolls in a wave of screeching sound John can almost hear. He's just as frenzied as Jade described him and when one of the clubs in his hands slams into the dirt instead of Equius's leg, the ground subsides into a sinkhole that Nepeta has to scramble around in order to launch herself claws first at the juggalo's flank. How Nepeta and Equius are on their feet is a mystery for the ages - they have to be getting a full blast of all the insanity in the air right now.

"Where did you get that, by the way?" John remembers to ask Jane, while he's switching between staring at the Horrorterror and at Gamzee.

Jane breaks her strife-face long enough to give him a tiny, crooked smile. "Your Doctor needs to hide her confiscated weaponry better. Don't worry, I didn't return any of it to Jake." Then she searches his face, and nods, her eyes gone frosty. "...What do you think? Split up?"

Well, John definitely needs to choose someone to focus on. The Horrorterror is big and mean and obvious - but now he's realized it's just Nepeta and Equius squaring off against Gamzee, and something about that setup leaves his stomach tight with anxiety. Horrorterror, or Rage-y guy. Which one first?

BE: you decide!

But who's in more danger here?! He can't tell - his eyes go to the Horrorterror - then back to Nepeta and Equius, where Equius just got punched back into the lake - but Karkat is over there helping to fight the huge jellyfish Eridan turned into - Jane makes her own decision while John is still torn. "I'm going to help fight the zoologically dubious fauna," she announces, spinning her fork and eyeing the grimjelly speculatively. "Be right back."

"Wait, are you sure?"

"I know what I'm about, John." Then Jane sprints out of the circulating Breeze without another word. John chokes back a warning when she remembers to skirt around the trail of glossy acid left behind in the Horrorterror's wake.

And she's probably right. Gamzee's fraymotif is a serious issue, but a Horrorterror is a Horrorterror.
With Rose out of the fight for probably as long as it takes for Doctor Lalonde to get the void wards back up and running, John needs to help out. Dave and Jade are both over there, using their powers so fast that John has trouble keeping track of them, but the two of them might not be enough, and the trolls helping out are running a serious risk of getting smushed by putting themselves in the line of fire when they're not god-tiered. John casts a fleeting look over his shoulder one last time, to at least make sure Nepeta and Equius can hold their own -

Gamzee reaches out and snaps Nepeta's arm with a casual twitch of his hand, her wordless howl of pain turning into a jagged mess that's somehow more distorted than any of the scrambled shouts coming from the people fighting the Horrorterror. Equius drags himself out of the shallows of the lake with an answering roar of anger, even as Gamzee raises his club and smashes it into Nepeta so hard that John feels both her lungs puncture and collapse like they're his own. Gamzee drops her and blinks out of sight before Equius can tackle him, but the damage is done, olive green blood erupting from Nepeta's mouth as she crumples to her knees. "No!" Equius screams, wet hair swinging wildly as he scrambles to her side.

Gamzee reappears, a juggling club already in motion. "Equius, move!" John yells, but it catches Equius right in the temple before either of them can react, snapping Equius's head to the side with a crunch and oh god. Oh, god.

Looks like he's not fighting a Horrorterror today.

Because Gamzee looks up, blue and green blood splattered across a hard smile, and fixes his eyes on John, feverish and too-focused with rage.

"You," he says, a horrible expression creeping across his face. It's part hate, part grief, and part something else that John couldn't put a name to if you paid him. "YOU."
John can count up the things they know for sure about Gamzee on one hand. Two hands, if he sneaks in some of the sketchier rumors he's heard tossed around on the internet about Juggaloco. He's a game player, a purpleblooded troll with a hair-trigger temper, and his psychic powers focus on fear and anger and general craziness. He's been trying to track down Karkat since Jade met him that second time - maybe longer than that - but then again, that might just have been part of the instinct that makes game players seek out others from their session.

So John's kinda drawing a blank as to how he's lost his shit so bad that killing people seems like a good idea. Eridan said he and Vriska and Gamzee all got a little murdery toward the end of their session, but Eridan isn't exactly a trustworthy source half the time, and his best explanation for the sudden, synchronized 3X murder spree was to shrug and blame 'the violence inherent in the system.'

Surely something has to have set this off. There's something John's missing here, something lost this afternoon to the choppy mess of insanity that got snarled up in everyone's heads.

Are you absolutely, totally sure you can't tell if he's god-tier or not?

BE: do you really think now is the right time to ask questions like that?!

John spins out of the way of an in-coming club, and figures now isn't the best time to get in a mental argument with his aspect. He's adding a few more items to that list of things he knows - Gamzee fights like a wild animal, dogging John's heels when he dodges and using his creepy teleportation trick to keep up whenever John tries to put some distance between them. He's almost too aggressive; it feels personal. There hasn't been another uptick in the barrage of [Babelon] rolling through the air, but it could happen any second now and John'll be screwed.

It's all he can do to keep dodging, though. If he switches his focus to check how the people fighting the Horrorterror are doing for even a fraction of a second, he loses track of Gamzee's jolting movements and has to dissolve into air to get to safety.

BE: he's strong enough to act like it, which is what we should actually be worrying about, here.

What's really concerning is that Equius has stopped breathing. Gamzee catches up when John freezes in horror, and there's not enough time to dodge; John blocks the attack like he's been trained to, but the force behind it almost drives him to his knees.

He doesn't have a weapon on him, doesn't want to attempt digging around in a sylladex that he's not even sure is there. But dancing around like this won't do anything but wear John down. I'm gonna try talking to him. Fighting him's not getting us anywhere.

BE: oh god...

"Will you - ufh! cut it out? Listen, can we just talk about this for a second?!" John shouts, before he falls into the wind and rushes away from the club aimed at his head, reforming a safe (safe being a really questionable word for it) distance behind the purpleblood. He raises his hands to show empty palms when Gamzee rears around to give him another death glare. "You're upset about something, right? But that's no reason to go around hurting your friends! Nepeta and Equius, they didn't do anything to hurt you! Just breathe, okay?"

"You think I'm gonna motherfucking fall for that one?!
Gamzee spits, the words rattling around in John's brain in a way that feels uncomfortably literal. The troll sounds even more pissed than before, so, uh. Whoops. "You're TRANSPARENT AS HELL."

John's starting to lose his temper a little, too. Or maybe he's just at the end of his rope after this shitty day. He only remembers a quarter of what happened, and it's still irredeemably shitty. "Look, do you see what is wrong with this picture?" he asks, exasperated as he points at the giant jellyfish from hell over to their left. "That! That is happening right this second! Can you at least consider not acting like a massive douche, and direct your dumb ragefit at the Horrorterror instead?"

"Who do you think you are?" is all Gamzee says, his claws shaking so hard that the clubs in his hands tremble. "What do you think you know as all up and regards to MY RAGE. The clubs shatter without warning as the troll's hands spasm, falling to the ground in jagged chunks. Oooonkay, John thinks talking is definitely making this worse. How angry does this guy have to be to break his own weapons?

He yanks a new specibus out a second later, though, and just when John thinks things can't get any more morbidly surreal -

"Hey, wait, that's mine!" he says, scandalized, as Gamzee hefts the Warhammer of Zillyhoo without bothering to properly behold its glory. The purpleblood vanishes and reappears right in front of John, swinging the hammerkind like a mallet, and lets out a roar of fury when John (just barely) dissolves in time.

"What ain't yours, motherfucker?" A hand clamps down on John's forearm the moment he resolidifies - when he looks down, startled, he could swear Gamzee's arm is detached from the rest of him before the rest of the troll catches up. The Breeze whooshes him out again, but when John turns solid he gasps at the shooting pain that riots up his arm, mottled black bruises wrapped around his arm. "WHAT HERE HAVE YOU NOT ALREADY TAKEN?!" Gamzee screams after him.

That...what does that even mean?! "I don't know what you're talking about, holy crap!" John yells back. He's floating twenty feet up now, and barely gets more than a split second's warning before Gamzee snaps in above him with a blood-curdling howl. John dodges the familiar blue warhammer and feels his head throb when Gamzee lands on the ground hard enough to create another sinkhole. "Jeez, you can have it, whatever, just stop trying to hit people with it!"

"WHY YOU?!" For a second, John could swear that's not rage - and it's like they're having two different conversations here, to the point where he wonders whether his mind is getting mixed up again and he just hasn't noticed yet. Then Gamzee lashes out and John's busy jumping over the wild swing. He tries to yank the hammer out of the troll's hands with a twist of wind, and nearly takes the flat end of the hammer to an exposed elbow.

BE: uh, john?

"A little busy!" he says, forgetting to think it to himself quietly.

BE: but there isn't even a quest bed here!

Okay, so now there's another conversation going on that John doesn't understand. "Wha-?" he starts to ask, when the Breeze yanks him around more forcefully than usual, a clumsy spin that drags him away from Gamzee and makes him look back in the direction of Equius and Nepeta's crumpled form.

He's just in time to see a dark blue spirograph flower out around Equius's body, each layer of rotating curves rising up in flat, lotus-shaped layers of light.

Then it all retracts back in on Equius, vanishing into a blue-black void that swarms out to swallow everything around them.

--

Equius wakes up. Golden light flares off the buildings around him, lancing right through his sunglasses, and he grimaces as he throws an arm over them and scrunches his eyes shut until the moment passes. His head feels as though it's about to split open.

When he feels sufficient time has passed, he pulls his arm away, squinting.

A dark red form stands between him and the worst of the blinding light, now. He thinks he recognizes the spiraling coil of those horns, but it feels like something from a dream, or one of his old nightmares.

"Sorry about all this," a bright, cheery voice tells him, as the dark figure raises its foot. "But we have to do it manually to get the timing right, I'm afraid."

And then the foot slams down against his head, crushing it against the golden road.

He hadn't known Aradia was so...strong.

--

The announcement rings like a clarion call in the Medium; here, it plays through Sollux's husktop's speakers, blasting as loud as the maximum volume will allow.

[Attention: The HEIR OF VOID is risen]

"Htas't hwta rey'ou odign?" Terezi says. "Atht god-erit ithgn. Huu..." There's a note of slow realization in her voice, but Sollux doesn't even pretend to understand her, too busy typing furiously in attempt to get Aradia to give him a straight answer.

TA: AA equiiu2 ii2 done nep i2n't wtf ii2 wrong on your end TA: AA?
TA: aradiia?
AA: oh dear
TA: when you 2ay that kiind of thiing iit concern2 me greatly ii hope you know that AA: ahhh, this is something i thought might happen.
AA: don't worry about nepeta! just be ready to trigger for terezi! :)
TA: wait what -

"Mi ngoig tefar Irvska. Tihs ttebre wokr, Losxul!"

He looks up in time to watch Terezi stab herself in the chest with part of her canekind, grinning at him with sharp teeth while a gush of teal spills down the front of her shirt.

TA: II HATE ALL OF YOU 2O MUCH
o: Really? This void is just becoming tiresome, now.
TA: FUCK OFF FUCK OFF FUCK OFF NO ONE LIIKE2 YOU DOUCHE > block net.socketexception: (o)
run program? y/n
> Y
> Y GODDAMMIIT

--

It takes a while before John realizes he hasn't gone blind. There's something familiar in the pervasive void that ripples out around Equius - a presence that's nothing but aware at the same time, and it's not until the Breeze lets out a tiny noise that John manages to shake his head loose from the muffling fog, as the aspect of Void wraps itself around its Heir like the Breeze has around John. When Equius finishes levering himself upright, it's hard for John to look at the troll straight on without darkness crawling across his eyes, forcing him to turn his head to the side and watch Equius rise up without actually looking at him.

But he should probably be keeping an eye on Gamzee, anyway, considering the circumstances. Yeeeah.
Only the thing is, when John figures out where Gamzee's standing, the troll looks transfixed, motionless and frozen right where John last saw him instead of trying to sneak up on anyone, his mouth twisted into jagged grin. Like this is exactly what he wanted -

...Huh.

Wait.

Ohhhh!

John opens his mouth to share what he just figured out with the world - it's so obvious! - when Equius's clothes finish dyeing themselves blue, a long, dark blue hood draping down along the line of his back. The symbol on the front of his shirt is almost the same as Jade's, but not quite. "You hurt Nepeta," he hisses, the sound distant and hard to focus on through the cotton that seems to have mysteriously clogged up John's ears. "You killed her again."

"Had to get it right. You're welcome, Eqbro," Gamzee says, dreamily, all the growl gone out of his voice. He looks like he's on top of the world, eyes searing hot with triumph as he stares at Nepeta, lying limp on the ground.

John thinks he gets it, and as much as he disagrees with the methods (because what a stupid idea, holy shit!), it's a relief to think that this isn't just some pointless rampage. The sudden lackadaisyicality goes over like a sack of bricks with Equius, who roars and charges at Gamzee.

Which. Oh jeez. John should probably say something before Gamzee goes off again, or Equius strangles him with his bare hands. Neither of which would be a really pleasant option when there's still a Horrorterror bobbing around in the background. "But she's not dead!" John blurts out, because he figures pointing this out should probably be a thing that happens sooner rather than later.

Now he has two angry trolls staring at him; Equius skids to a halt, fists clenched with a determined aura of nothing wrapped around them, but Gamzee jolts, too, which is somewhat more surprising. John straightens his back, looking at Equius instead of Gamzee, because even with the void, it's easier. "She's - she's still alive. Right now," he says, gesturing helplessly. Not for long, not when there's a growing puddle of blood filling up her lungs, but John can feel Nepeta struggling to breathe around the wreckage where her ribcage used to be. Not dead yet.

It's funny, but not funny at all, how Gamzee turns distraught in the space of three seconds. The purpleblood's face goes as pale as if he was about to faint, even as relief dawns on Equius's face like the sun. Equius turns on a dime, shouting "Nepeta!" - and John is pretty sure he remembers how well that ended last time.

This time, he's ready for it; when Gamzee clutches his head and snaps out of his daze, the smile lost in a savage snarl, John's already clapped his hands around the Warhammer of Zillyhoo, making it fall away into a knot of breezes in his palm.

Gamzee lunges anyway, weapon or no weapon. +10 points for effort, -1 bajillion for putting that effort towards trying to murder people. Using the Breeze to trip him up only buys Equius a few extra seconds; the purpleblood just reappears two feet to the left of where John knocked his feet out from under him, upright and ready to fling himself at Nepeta again.

"Stop it! You can't just run around killing people!" John yells. Which might not be the smartest thing he's ever done, but it makes Gamzee whip around to snarl at him, the sclera of his eyes gone molten red, and as long as Gamzee's looking at John with weird, inexplicable loathing, he's not trying to kill people to make them hit god tier. Sure, it worked with Equius for some mysterious reason, but! Still!
"You know MOTHERFUCKING FUCK ALL," Gamzee says, and John swallows on a wave of nausea that blasts right through the Breeze to reach him. He fights through the wooziness in time to spy Gamzee snap into place behind Equius, like the worst kind of déjà vu. Equius has Nepeta in his arms; even when he notices Gamzee's presence and flinches, he's not going to be able to move in time.

John tackles Gamzee from the side. One of his feet is mostly wind floating along with the Breeze, which causes the weirdest sensation when he tries to take a step and the wind shoves him along where his foot should be. Hitting Gamzee's like slamming into a wall, but it gives Equius and Nepeta space to move. "Go!" John calls, when Equius doesn't run. "Get her to one of the doctors!" A regular person would already be too far gone, but none of them are regular people, are they? If Gamzee would stop trying to murder Nepeta for five dang seconds, maybe they can avoid the dead thing for a while longer. Even if -

John tries not to let the creepy game logic sway him. Dying to get stronger shouldn't be inevitable the way Sburb wants to make it; killing game players on purpose to make them stronger might make a twisted kind of sense if you were desperate, but if he starts thinking Gamzee has the right idea, John's pretty sure he's screwed.

Maybe he's biased because despite everything that got fucked up in the human game session, they all had the horrible luxury of dying due to forces outside their control. Not even Dave had to kill himself to pull it off, in the end.

Then Equius nods, a cutting jerk of his chin, and the Void blooms around him like a disk of look away. John's not entirely sure where the two trolls go - even his sense of their breathing, Equius's strong and Nepeta's failing, can't seem to follow their escape. He can only hope they're heading in the right direction.

This unfortunately leaves John alone with Gamzee, whose enraged growl is currently taking place more inside John's head than out loud. Nominally John tries to hold the troll back, to keep him from using his teleporty trick to jump right after Equius and Nepeta, but then a hand comes up and digs claws into John's upper arm, which is not good on so many levels. "Who do you think you are?" the troll hisses, claws sinking in deeper. Except when John looks down, Gamzee is just gripping his arm. The pain goes bone deep, but there isn't any blood. "THEY NEED TO -"

"They don't need to die! They don't have to be god tier!" John gasps out, yanking his arm free by turning it into air. Even then, the pain lingers. He shoves Gamzee away instead, taking the full brunt of the purpleblood's glare as he prods at his aching arm to assess the damage. "I said, I understand that you're trying to help, but you can't just kill people without permission!"

...Hang on, maybe he should rephrase that. "You can't kill people in general!" John tries again. He can't tell if making eye contact with Gamzee is helping or hurting - it gives him a splintering, crawling headache, but that's pretty much standard issue for John these days, so what does he know. Gamzee's some kind of psychic; maybe letting him poke claws around in John's brain isn't smart, but it's not like John has any defense against it. "We're all in danger, and you're trying to help." John really hopes he's right about that, at least. If he's wrong, and Gamzee's just on a murder spree for fun - "But doing this when there's a Horrorterror to deal with is just gonna get people dead permanently."

Seriously, if something happens to Karkat...if Equius going god tier was only a one-time fluke, and Karkat doesn't come back...
Thinking about Karkat is a mistake. But to be fair, John hasn't realized what Gamzee's major malfunction is, just yet. He gets it really fast when Gamzee tackles him with a noise that sounds like nothing either a human or troll should be physically capable of making, pinning John to the ground with norah te brsut fo -

"HE DIDN'T EVEN LIKE YOU." Strange echoes overlap Gamzee's words, droning in John's head. "HE MOTHERFUCKING HATED ALL OF YOU, SO WHY WOULD HE WANT YOU!"

The Breeze funnels through his thoughts like a frantic wind tunnel, but thinking in words hurts. "He who?" John asks, squinting in confusion. He's not sure what Gamzee's face looks like right now, other than that there's a lot of teeth involved and they are wayyy too close to John.

He is in no way, shape, or form ready for the response he gets. "KARKAT," Gamzee says, like a furious sob, pressing claws to the side of John's head and hiccupping with his whole body. John has lost track of the moments of realization he's had today, but this is the one that guts him.

And he should have known when he had all the pieces in front of him: Jade's report that Gamzee was seeking out Karkat, Gamzee holding Karkat earlier today like he was the only lifeline he had left. Because John's done the same thing.

"Oh god," he says, while this sinks in. "Crap. Shit." No, this one deserves a - "Fuck."

"Why you?" Gamzee says. Some of his voices are screaming; others are soft and low as a croon. But in exchange his face has shifted back into focus, all those teeth out of sight behind lips that have stopped smiling, eyes a red-tinged orange, glassy and feverish as they demand answers. "Why. You."

How is he supposed to answer that? "I don't know," John says, uselessly, trying to drag his thoughts back in order. "I - it just -"

It just happened. How can he explain how he became friends with Karkat, then they just kind of fell into moirallegiance along the way, John trying to sort through his own messed emotions because he didn't always remember what being happy felt like with all the things wrong in his head, Karkat convinced it was serendipity with a stubborn romanticism that shook John time and time again. He keeps forgetting the psychic part. Which is a really dumb, obvious thing to forget, when it keeps happening and thinking the wrong thing's most likely gonna get him killed. Gamzee keens, the same sobbing wail that John heard earlier pulsing through [Babelon] like a heartbeat. There's something sharp jammed in John's throat, and a funny knot of distress that yanks tight in his chest when another full-body hiccup rocks Gamzee in his grief.

It makes him do something stupid. But today's already been full of stupid and weirdness and crazy, all jumbling up John's head when it really didn't need the extra help. Maybe none of today was any more real than a hallucination dreamed up by Gamzee and set loose on them all in their sleep.

Or maybe he's just screwed up in the head beyond repair. This is a pretty real possibility.

Either way, he has a hiccupping, distraught troll in arm's reach, and the only way he knows how to make the fluttering knot in his stomach go away in situations like this is to drag the troll in question into a hug and shoosh him until the shaking stops.
The effect is painful and immediate. "NO!" The claws prickling along the side of John's head rake down, tearing open gashes in their haste to shove John away. His back slams hard against the ground, but he's got a strong enough grip around Gamzee's neck to drag him down too. "You're not him," Gamzee insists, while John mashes his face against the nearest shoulder and tries not to think about the mouthful of teeth inches from his neck. "I'll motherfucking TEAR YOU APART, you fucking -"

"I know, okay! I know!" John says. There's a heavy claw pressed hard against his ribs, images of what happened to Nepeta whirling through his head, memories of another hand prodding broken ribs into painful new configurations for laughs, as the Breeze screams for them to go. "We didn't remember - none of us remembered, and we made a mess of it, and I'm sorry! Gamzee, please, just breathe, okay?"

Gamzee hiccups, or maybe snarls, or maybe makes some ungodly combination of the two sounds. A hand buries itself in John's hair and yanks his head back and away.

But there's an astonishing lack of murderdeath happening. "You're. Not. Him," Gamzee repeats, his breath cold on John's throat.

John stares up at the grey sky past Gamzee's horns and then shifts one of his arms, hesitates, and presses the palm of his hand against Gamzee's cheek. It comes away wet, cold tears streaking down the heel of his wrist. "Then we'll go find him," he says, his head weirdly clear. There's been so much buzzing and shrieking and jangling in his mind today that the sudden absence leaves him at a loss. "We'll go find Karkat."

"Why?" The hand holding John down hasn't moved, though the claws in his hair relax fractionally. Another chill exhale makes him twitch, but even with the room to move John doesn't try to drop his chin. Preoccupied with making the Breeze sweep out to check for Karkat, when the only thing his aspect wants to do is yank John to safety, he brushes a thumb against another damp tear that rolling down from the corner of Gamzee's eye.

It's a great question, though. Why is he doing this?

For that matter, what has he done?

What has he done?

The Breeze locks in on Karkat, and John doesn't stop to think before he jumps them there. He doesn't even know if he can take Gamzee along, given just how weird this guy is, but when his awareness comes back together as a body, Gamzee's there, too.

They both seriously misjudge the landing, though.

Karkat has enough time to look up and shriek before they land on top of him.

--

Not sure what to make of the puppet gore fest up on the roof. Poking around the fluffy innards of a disemboweled toy ain't exactly on the top of his to-do list, when there's a new many-angled god bobbing through the air in jellyfish form.

But they've all been played for suckers, and that shit can't be allowed to fly, here. Bro rocks back on his heels, hunkered down over the scattered pieces of Lil Cal, and wonders if he should be thankful or pissed. Picked up Cal ages ago, sure, but it's only since he got a handle on puppetkind and added his own creations to his strife deck that he's realized just how...not-right that first puppet felt. Found it while he was on the run, ducking Lalonde and Crew alike, and hell if he wasn't desperate enough to see that brilliant, chattering grin in the window and think that using it as a weapon was a good idea.
Never could shake the unnerving idea that the puppet had been waiting, just for him, just at the moment he didn't have the resources to keep fighting on his own, with a new scar tearing open down his chest whenever he had to fight with swordkind, and Dave strapped to his back, tugging on his hair with noiseless cries for attention that never stopped hurting.

Couldn't let Dave get dragged into a fight again, not so young and untrained. Not when Dave came out of that warped, crackling blur without a voice.

And so Cal. Lil Cal, that sometimes moved when Bro wasn't looking. Lil Cal, draping itself over his shoulders at a gesture, beaming with a painted smile that never once dulled. Lil Cal, who watched with glossy eyes, leaving Bro half-sure it was about to wink at him.

He only just now realized he'd lost control of it when it took off this afternoon. Before, it's only been a few incidents here and there - waking up to find Cal sitting on the wrong shelf, or positioned so that when he checks the security cameras one of the kitchen cams is fully taken up by the plush embrace of orange arms.

Something happened in Houston, in that weird troll's apartment, before she and the carapacian took off. When the world stopped breaking, Lil Cal was halfway across the room, plastering itself across the face of a Felt member, and when Bro tried to yank it off from a distance, the puppet wouldn't move. Lil Cal came back - eventually - but the drive back to Washington was hellish. Between trying to keep Cal still and keep Oriole from noticing the silent struggle, it's been hell.

And now this. Funny that Bro didn't rightly notice the haunting, knowing presence in Lil Cal until it was gone. But whoever decided to go to town on the puppet did the job good. There's nothing left here, not even a scrap of a soul left in the strange, oozing blood that's mixed in with the fabric and stuffing. Knowing Dave, he'd make some punkass comment like 'ding dong, the puppet's dead.'

Should probably feel something other than relief. But god, is he relieved. Maybe he could ignore all the warning signs - or be made to ignore them, a more troubling idea - while Cal was in one piece.
But the puppet's eyes have burst like grapes, more rainbow-laced blood oozing from eye jelly that should have been wood and paint, and good fucking riddance. Feels like he's the one whose strings have been cut loose, and now he's free to pull a lighter out of his pocket and set this shit ablaze.

He waits until everything's gone up - some of the blood-matted stuffing takes a long while to catch, damp as it is - and then picks up the carapacian he pulled out of the vents with him and waits until it sits on his shoulders for the ride down.

WV: that thing was evil and bad and you should probably not have touched it. very unhygienic.

"How would you know?" The carapacian jabs him in the clavicle with sharp heels as admonition.

WV: it has the same blood as the Lord of Time! the prime example of the evils of absolute multiversal despotism!

WV: trust me, i have read books on human mannerisms and hygiene - you should wash your pale flesh hands. as your democratically elected mayor, i insist.

Somehow, mentioning that he wasn't here for a vote doesn't seem like it'll make a difference.
"Familiar with many multiversal lords?"
WV: just the one. i was there when he came to destroy the session, before the silly children heroes decided to scratch it.

WV: i don't think it works like that, though. he's probably already always been here.

The carapacian lets out a thrum of green energy that feels like it leaves a sunburn across the nape of his neck. Between this little dude and the blind wolf, Lalonde better be right about space powers not giving off lethal amounts of radiation. Nearest room that's intact is the one with the terminal hub, which would be a good place to drop the tiny alien dude before heading out to deal with the Horrorterror situation. People are screaming out there, kids are screaming out there, which means shit's spiraling out of control. Like it was ever under control to begin with. "Here," he says, and the little carapacian's already in the process of huffing and untangling claws from hair when Bro opens the door and a kid stabs herself in the chest.

Today's just been an off day. A helpful nudge sends the little carapacian stumbling toward the Queen, and by the time the troll girl falls, teal-smeared steel sticking obscenely through the back of her jacket, he's got her by the shoulder, assessing the damage. Random ass stab wounds are his specialty.

Problem is, the girl is good - before he even lays hand on the cane handle, he knows she's gone; he can fix a lot of shit, but she knew exactly where to aim to punch the blade through her heart. Troll organs are just a little off-center compared to human insides, and she aimed straight for the atria, angled to take out other chambers and arteries along the way. Blade's still in the wound which is why the floor isn't a bloodbath, but the edges look ragged, like she twisted it mid-stab, and it's too much damage all at once. Hard to say whether it's profuse hemorrhaging or shock that gets her first, but either way she's gone before Bro finishes absorbing it all. None of these kids seemed suicidal when they walked in, so what in the hell -

"You gonna pull this shit, too?" he demands, fast, and now the regret hits, because of all his puppetkind Lil Cal would have been fastest to reach out and disarm the kid at the computer before he could try to off himself.

The other troll types frantically without looking away from the dead girl. "You might want to let go of her," is all he says, his expression stricken. "Thhit - ugh -" Now he starts making weird, aborted hand gestures, his claws falling back to the keyboard before he can finish any of them. "I know you can't understand but you need to drop her - AA, hurry up -"

"Understand fine, kid." All he gets from Captor is a blank look of incomprehension and huh. Well, isn't that interesting. And inconvenient, if it means none of the kids can talk to each other. Got a feeling they were all loopy this afternoon, bouncing off the walls in a daze, but he figured it was just kids being hyped. Should have realized something was up quicker than this. One last check for a pulse, and then Bro looks to the Queen as he settles Pyrope down on her side, curled up around the canekind with her glasses hanging askew over staring red eyes. "The hell are you people doing in here?"

She regards him with a calm expression, but her sleeves are rucked up to her elbows, smeared with grease from whatever the hell the computer whiz has her doing with his new addition to the front of the terminal, and he gets the distinct impression that if she had hair, it would be in complete disarray.

WQ: I apologize, but did you say that you understood him?

"Yeah. What's up?"

WQ: Ah. I can interpret some of what you say, but I have eons of practice at this sort of thing. If you understand everyone, that is a boon. A fraymotif is scrambling perceptions so that communication becomes next to impossible.

WQ: Thankfully, the Mage is strong in perceiving both matters of computers and the Doom of others. If it were not so, I am not entirely certain that this gambit would succeed. It is all very illegal.

Captor lets out a whoop, around the same time the dead girl's body starts glowing.

WQ: You may wish to step back. Reaching the god tiers is not a subtle process.

WQ: Also, we are cheating. Egregiously.

She smiles, and it's the most damnably polite thing he's ever seen.

She breathes in, and the sky is a dreamy, creamy swirl of white and blue, like a rich sky blue smoothie. Her real nose's been around Sollux for so long now that the bright, dandelion gold of Prospit's towers rising up around her almost blends in with the hot, buzzing scent of honey burning in overclocked processors.

"I could have sworn all our dreamselfes died, y'know!" she says, stretching her arms out over her and turning her head to grin at Sollux's dreamself, floating over by a row of silicomb mainframes. Aradia is a flare of scarlet that leaves the taste of cinnamon and paprika on her tongue, with extra smears of fluttering, dusty red behind her back that Terezi thinks she'd need to lick up close and personal to get a good mental image of. "How'd you pull this off?"

Aradia laughs, and it tastes all wrong when she speaks. "Miracles, as it turns out! Miracles and some timeline tomfoolery, courtesy of yours truly."

Terezi tilts her head to the side, tucking her hair back behind one ear as casually as she can. "Glad you're alive and breathing, at least. I thought Vriska really had broken your brain, for a while there," she says, while Aradia floats over to her with a beat of her wings. "Are the wings as fun as Vriska bragged about?"

"Oh, you'll find out in a second. Being alive made more of an impression to me, I'm afraid." And Aradia's voice still sounds wrong.

Because it's not a sound. It's a smell. Text in the air. "Huh. What happened to your voice, then?"

A weary sigh that's literally... sigh..., as Aradia removes the phone from her pocket and waves it, her mouth closed in a tight smile as she replies. "Time. But typing or talking - does it matter which, in the grand scheme of things? You're the first one to notice in ages!"

Terezi pauses for a second, and then lets her head fall back in a laugh that rolls up from deep in her stomach. She ends up toppling backwards, laughing with abandon, Skaia a delicious whipped cream spiral that takes up all the sky.

It is a little rude of Aradia to smash her head in with a tiny foot while Terezi's mid-laugh, but she wakes up in a wash of teal, with the best kind of words ringing in her ears.

[Attention: the Seer of Mind is risen]

There is a moment of oddness, because with her memories back she's half convinced she should be six sweeps old and much shorter than this. But she concentrates and the swooshy Seer skirts wrap back around into pants, settling back into her outfit from earlier in the day in different shades of blue-green as she shakes out her wings to inspect them. They would be far superior as dragon wings, but she doesn't think there's anything she can do to pull off that drastic of a change.

Nicer still, when she takes in a deep breath, relishing newly refurbished scent glands and a heart that isn't carved up meat, there's a new overlay to her sense of the world around her, faint nodes of comprehension and prediction that normally she'd have to concentrate all her mental focus on to see clearly.

One of the human custodians is here now, which is new, but Terezi's already casting her mind out, pressing her claws to her head as she skips over the people nearby and reaches out for dumbass Vriska. Thankfully, the stink of blueberry bubblegum deceit hangs in the air, augmented by sugary sparkles of wing dust and lemon merengue Lighty bullshit, leaving a fine trail for Terezi to trace to Vriska's mind itself. She's distant, already out of the valley and heading due south as fast as wings can carry her, but Terezi can extrapolate the consequences of her future thoughts and actions from here.

Oh boy. Vriska's off to skip right to a major boss fight. Not like that's gonna get them all killed prematurely, right? Terezi feels a faint twinge of remorse, because she's remembering now, in another time place, how she resolved this exact same situation -

But this time, she has a few more options. No need to let it rest on the flip of a coin.

Sollux starts shouting at her when she turns to leave, though, his face all sallow from the light of his computer and the green energy cubes scattered around the room. "Rezeti, I nac't eealv ihst eicep of siht pmtouecr lnoae orf more htn ten sncosd, tub fi uyo og aerft Vrskai, so pehl em -"

Meh. No one can understand each other, for whatever reason, and waking up fresh as a teal god tier daisy doesn't appear to have fixed that. Terezi shrugs and lets her lip tug to the side in faint remorse, then waves goodbye. "I'm nheadg tafer Rsavk onw! Ees hya!"

A hand shoots out, lightning fast, and catches the end of her jacket before she can make it out. Not psionics, just the human custodian, eyes unreadable behind his shades as he says, "Idk. Yuo kthn
"Fi I don’t chcta Iraskv, adb nisth gera gnano pnphae," she explains, though it’s probably not doing any good. She can see the others in her mind’s eye now, including the massive amalgamation of minds that she has to backpedal away from mentally when a sucking chuckle of Horrorterror nearly snaps her up like a fish in a shark’s mouth. Or maybe krill in the gullet of a whale that swallows everything in mighty gulps. Probably not something she wants to be fighting just now. "Ywh does esh awaysl leeva a ubmd artil for het lnubeatabe bssoes to wlfolo abkc to oru bsae? Logeg!" She breaks out of the human’s grip, batting her wings in case he tries to grab again.

All he does is give her a look. It’s too subtle for her to smell clearly, all the emotions tamped down beneath a mask, but his mind flares comprehension. "Oh. Llwe hsit, nthe. Og for ti, idk."

WV: good luck seer!

"Zretei!" Sollux calls one more time, but Terezi’s already swooping out the door and through one of the holes where the unstable roof has caved in, rising up into the air as she locks in on Vriska.

Because if Vriska makes it to her destination, none of the rest of the actions and consequences that take place here in this valley will mean anything at all.

---

Jade decides to fling everyone she could get her grubby space hands on at the fucking Horrorterror, and that turns out to be a little distracting. Who would have guessed.

Karkat is somehow less prepared for this turn of events than he was for the last one - he isn’t wearing any of his gear and his shoelaces come untied within seconds. The first round of lashing tentacles socks him in the stomach, sending him rolling across the grass and onto the gravel of the parking lot, and when he gets back up he already feels like one huge bruise.

God. He isn’t cut out for this. If the universe is trying to cram a hint down his throat that he’s doomed to run into giant sea monsters from another dimension for the rest of his no doubt short, insignificant, and miserable life, he can’t swallow it. He’d rather walk up to Diamonds fucking Droog and kick her in the shin. Both options are probably going to end with him a bright red smear on the pavement, but at least Droog isn’t the size of a small building. Droog would be refreshingly mundane compared to this.

But he stabs himself in the wrist anyway, building a sickle from scratch because he doesn’t have a choice. The grim jellyfish isn’t in any rush, apparently, which is a nice change compared to Gl’bgofuckyourself; Karkat knuckles at his stomach and wills the bruising down until his blood’s back where it should be. Everyone else is hacking and stabbing at whatever parts of the Horrorterror they can reach, and since Jade can reach more than most she’s up above, ripping up chunks of the jellyfish’s frills and zapping out of the way when it tries to smack her.

They can’t strategize or anything. Even if Harley hadn’t tossed Rose to parts unknown, they couldn’t get a straight answer out of her. How the fuck are they supposed to deal with this thing? Fuck. Fucking shitbuckets. He knows what this is. This is cosmic retaliation for he and Dave and Feferi leaving Gl’bgolyb for the Condesce to deal with. He should have known being that lucky once would come back to bite in him in the ass tenfold.

Just where the fuck is Eridan, though? More importantly, where the fuck is John? He can come up with a million different, increasingly terrifying possibilities for why Jade didn’t bring John along and yeah, actually, Karkat's going to focus on his real priorities, here. There's a large fucking list of things that matter to him, and John is at the top, while Eridan and his recent transformation into an even more enormous nubsucking douche is in the low to middling range. The only thing that keeps him from marching off to go drag John out of whatever mess he's gotten himself into is the fact that he has no way to communicate this extremely logical choice to anyone else around him. Because oh yeah, no one can talk. If he ducks out now, anyone who looks for him and can't find his sorry ass in the confusion is going to assume he's been fucking devoured whole or something and panic.

"Wr'eel gonon ide," he says aloud, his voice clogging up in his throat. No one's around to hear him say it, but if he believes it hard enough then in theory they're probably not going to die. He and Dave were mostly just fucking around being idiots about that, but Karkat could really use some of the universe's twisted, contrary logic accidentally working in his favor right now. Then he starts circling around and craning his neck to try to find some gap in the shuffling curtain of feathered tendrils that make up the core of the Horrorterror's trailing end.

Jade whips out a rifle and blasts another gaping hole in the bell - only for the wound to seal itself up in a fraction of a second, the dripping fluid sucked back into the jellyfish's sides. So great. Fucking fantastic. Jade's their heaviest hitter, and this thing heals fast enough that it doesn't bother trying to focus on Jade as the main threat. It just keeps casually brushing her aside with tentacles, drifting further and further toward the shelf of rock that makes up most of the far side of the valley.

...Like...it's trying to leave.

But why? Fuck, why is Karkat trying to concoct a motive for an elder god? He knows bugwinged fuckall about how they work and he should stop trying to fix that. There has to be something more productive he could be doing with his sorry carcass than squinting and trying to figure out how to climb something that can probably melt his flesh if he holds on too long.

He gets his answer really fucking quickly. Before he can fling himself into yet another stupid decision, even, which is great.

"Rkatka," someone says from behind him, a voice that makes Karkat go cold, because of all the people for him to forget in the middle of a Horrorterror-themed catastrophe, the worst possible choice was probably Feferi.

Fuck. He spins, bracing himself, and is caught off guard when he sees the tyrianblood standing behind him, not doing much at all. Feferi stares at him with desperation in her terrifying fuchsia eyes, but they're fuchsia, not white - thank fuck. He opens his mouth, then shuts it; he could try to mime a question at her, but that would be about as effective as babbling like a wriggler at her.

Her claws rise up slowly and she tugs at her hair, her foot dragging along the ground so sluggishly that her ankle rolls and she starts limping. Karkat watches for a good five seconds, lost, before Feferi starts babbling at him again.

He only realizes she's not the one moving her own feet when her claw shoots out and seizes his wrist, the one with the sickle, and he starts getting dragged along in her wake. Her voice hits an anguished pitch as the two of them saunter right toward the path of greyish, faintly gleaming sludge where the Horrorterror left a trail of caustic acid. Feferi shows no signs of slowing down, even as bright tyrian blood trickles down Karkat's wrist and hand from the slice in her palm.

So naturally, like a fucking panbaked moron, Karkat tries to pull her back - which of course doesn't fucking work because Feferi on a bad day can carry him like he weighs nothing at all. Her torso turns to follow him, her other hand catching his hoodie instead of his arm, but her feet keep marching on.
His hoodie rips under the strain. "Ufkc! Kcfu ukcf fuck!" Karkat says, and a triple fuck you to whatever made it so that he has to try ten times to swear properly. He lets the sickle drop away into a line of blood on his arm so he can try to kick Feferi's feet out from under her without worrying about stabbing her by accident. He's pretty sure there's a fucking law against that, or something.

She won't untangle her claws from his hoodie, which makes it all the harder to maneuver, and he can't yell at her to let go. He can smell something start to burn. It's the distinct reek of shoe soles burning - and no, he does not recognize that smell because of a certain chemistry experiment gone horrifically wrong at some point in the last year. He in no way still owes John a replacement pair of shoes because of said experiment. He lives a guilt-free life and never ever lies to himself in the middle of an emergency situation. Also Feferi's boots are smoking, the rubber of the soles bubbling as she walks right through a puddle of acid slime.

They're so fucked. Karkat tries one last time to swipe her legs out from under her, and comes thisclose to swan diving facefirst into the grim trail. Feferi hauls him back upright with a shout; but he has no way to tell her to remove her claws from his person before he runs out of room to stand. She catches on a fraction of a second before it's too late and lifts him up with one arm so he doesn't skate through acid, but it's a close fucking call and he screeches in a blind panic as he wraps his legs around her waist and digs his claws into the back of the hand that wouldn't fucking let go before she decided to drag him into her problems without permission. Her cheeks start to swell up in a pout and helllll fucking no, she does not get to open her ignorance tunnel and backsass him when they can neither sass nor backsass in turn to any degree of meaningful sassery. From the faint whiffs of burnt flesh starting to waft up to assault Karkat's olfactory nub, they don't have a lot of time before Feferi starts losing layers of skin instead of shoe.

"Od oyu eden leph? Oh, usjt tel em - erhe -"

A strong hand grabs Karkat by the scruff of his hoodie and plucks him off Feferi who, to her credit, lets him go this time. Karkat has enough time to process that the person who tosses him backward over her shoulder like a sack of potatoes is Jane before she grabs Feferi by the waist and bodily lifts the other troll like she weighs nothing, throwing the tyrianblood in a gentle arc onto the grass. Karkat lands hard and rolls with it, staring at Jane with his mouth agape. Her expression remains unreadable all the while, but Karkat can sense the resigned eye rolling emanating from her mind. If there's some human equivalent of 'judging you, you complete fuckheads' pheromones, she's putting out enough to take down a small army.

"Uh," Karkat says.

Which, amazingly enough, comes out exactly how he meant to phrase it. It's a fucking miracle.

"Oh dgoo," Feferi says, as she sits up. Before she can get any farther - or Karkat can open his trap to add his own contribution of word salad to this debacle - Jane unslings her strife specibus from where it hangs on her back, pointing it at each of them in turn with a stern look. Feferi points at her own chest, bewildered, but Jane takes off without waiting to hear what they'd have to say. "Ta elsta hes ash odgo asett in pseibic," Feferi finishes.

Karkat gestures to his ears in exasperation; Feferi, by sheer happenstance, looks away at the exact moment he does so, which means even with charades they're able to communicate fuck all. It means Karkat can allow himself a few choice swear words that he'd hesitate to drop in front of royalty when he starts grousing under his breath, yet that doesn't make up for anything else about it. Huffing, he gets up off his knees and smacks Feferi's shoulder when she continues to watch Jane run off to join the actual fight until she looks up at him, and he can point a finger at the lab behind them. Something's going on just past the building itself, he notices, a flurry of movement involving two people at minimum off by the lake.

He does a double take when a burst of dark blue light starts spiraling out from that general area, because lightshows tend to mean some new form of fuckery has just been invented to torment Karkat's waking hours. Then, almost as quickly, his eyes start drifting down and to the side. Paying attention to whatever the hell's going on over there feels like it would require immense effort, and he's got his claws full dealing with Feferi, who is frowning and shaking her head. "I cna lpek," she says, settling her shoulders with a barely-visible shake as she lifts her chin.

No fucking way is she trying to pull this shit. Karkat has zero authority over this troll unless he makes it up from scratch, and unfortunately the only way he knows to establish authority is to shout a lot and hope for the best. It's one of his fundamental friendleader techniques and now he can't make use of it. Fuuuuck. "No," he says, since single syllable words seem to have the highest chance of sounding right.

Feferi lifts one foot and rolls it like that proves something. "Ese? Ti's ont kainmg me lwka onamyre."

She goes to do the same with the other ankle, and Karkat folds his arms to glare when she flinches - it's the same ankle she fucked up earlier. It takes him five tries before he produces another satisfactory, "No," but it's worth the effort.

For a moment he thinks he's won the argument - if Feferi stands up Karkat doesn't want to know what the odds are of her legs being hijacked again, no matter how much she wiggles her toe nubs at him - but this is also around when he takes a John-shaped object to the face. He's not as thrilled about this sudden turn of events as he might have been, due to the fact that a) Feferi's shout of alarm only gives him two seconds' forewarning, and b) he looks up in time to see John's not alone before he gets crushed by two hundred plus pounds of dumbfucks. His screech of protest chokes off when someone's nubby elbow crashes into the soft spot between his collar bones, and then all three of them hit the ground hard, Feferi calling something almost intelligible as she rolls out of the way.

What the fuck ever. He can adapt, in spite of John's dumbass method of bringing the newest problem child for Karkat to beat the shit out of without so much as a friendly 'Surprise, fuckhead!' of warning. He's not wholly incompetent, for fuck's sake. It's just that, oh right, John decided to put his entire body in between Karkat and whoever he's supposed to be kicking at the moment. They're going to have a talk about this. Karkat pushes John's head out of the way, hand smooshing the human's face to the side in the hopes that he'll roll off and let Karkat move his pinned leg.

"Gottacrisisdon'thitus," John says. Haha, that's hilarious, Karkat could have sworn John just said don't hit us, when Karkat finally recognizes that the other person who landed on top of him is in fact the asshole murder clown from hell. Figures that he can't understand John, either. Kicking might be off the table, but he can punch someone if he sits up a little, and he has a fistful of pent-up indignation with Gamzee's name tattooed on it -

John intercepts, Karkat's hand smacking into his palm. Well, fuck. He's saying something that sounds remarkably like, "Please don't, holy crap, I don't have time to explain -" and the fact that John can talk actual fucking English distracts Karkat before he can wrest his hand free. John runs a thumb along the side of Karkat's finger, squeezing his fist once before pushing it back down against Karkat's chest. "If he freaks again I don't know if the Breeze can keep holding off [Babelon], so please please please don't be mad, I'm so sorry, just don't panic."

John makes a compelling argument. And by that Karkat means he's not making any fucking sense whatsoever. The words are actually words and not gibberish, though, which is a massive relief, but Karkat's reluctant to let that color his judgment, not when Gamzee's a weight on the left side of his thoracic cavity, his head and horns ducked in a way that has Karkat very fucking on edge. Yet instead of letting Karkat shove the extra party out of this reunion rumpus, John reaches out and buries his hand in the other troll's knotted hair, keeping the three of them stuck in this useless heap of Well. Alright then. Karkat waits for either one of the two to explain themselves - and gets nothing at all in return. Of course. His silence is at a goddamn premium, for fuck's sake. Gamzee makes an inscrutable noise when John snags his hair, but that's it. When did this fuckery turn into a group hug? Karkat did not fucking endorse this turn of events.

Trying to ignore the awkwardness, he lets the hand that was pushing John's head out of the way ease up, patting the side of John's head to reassure himself that John is here. This is the most random thing to happen all day - this including the Horrorterror, because honestly they all should have seen the Horrorterror coming from a mile away - and he's got no fucking clue why it continues to be a thing that is happening as the seconds drag on. Looking for some kind of solidarity, Karkat rolls his ganderbulbs and turns his head to raise his eyebrows at Feferi, who looks about as disturbed as he feels, propped up on her hands with her legs sprawled out in front of her.

Bless her ice cold vascular system - at least Feferi decides to ask questions that Karkat would also like some fucking answers to, since John has so flagrantly dropped the ball on the unprompted explanation front. "Umm. What the heck are you three doing?" she asks, hesitant. Her hand pops up to cover her mouth in surprise. "Oh! We can talk again!"

And what a beautiful thing it is. "You're not gonna wander off and fucking hug the Horrorterror, are you?" he asks in turn, pointedly ignoring the question she posed. He's capable of carrying on a conversation with two people laying on top of him, which isn't something he'd ever thought he'd have to prove, but he doesn't get why it's happening either. John can start answering any day now...

Feferi pauses, scratching at one of her ear frills with a blink. "...I suppose not. I can feel my legs again, so I think I'm in the clear for the moment. Which is what I was trying to say just now." She smiles wryly, meeting his gaze with eyes that are uncomfortably serious. "Sorry for getting you all tangled up in that. Again. Not being able to say what was wrong sort of screwed us both over."

Karkat waves his free hand with another eye roll. "Yeah, whatever." It's occurred to him that being on good terms with Feferi might turn out to be a survival strategy in the future, considering how incredibly fucked he is after this weekend. But 'good terms' has variable definitions. "I make a pisspoor fucking anchor, though. Use Kanaya or something the next time you need to use someone as a personal braking device."

Feferi's smile twitches; then she looks over at the Horrorterror steadily moving away from them, and the corners of her mouth flatten out. Right, the enormous jellyfish is still something which needs to be taken care of. By someone who is not already vulnerable to Horrorterror influence, holy fuck Feferi. "No," he repeats, raising his voice, and Feferi throws him a dirty look. On that note, why is he being crushed by these two chucklefucks? "What the fuck! Earth to John!" he says, switching gears as he snaps his fingers beside John's ear. All he gets is a wild, woeful look, but acting endearing and pleading as fuck can only get John so far when the enduring question of why Gamzee is involved remains unanswered. The other troll hasn't made a fucking peep, but that doesn't stop Karkat from being irritated about it. Nothing can keep Karkat from being irritated when he wants to be. He starts fidgeting in earnest when Feferi gets to her feet, bestowing a weird look on them as she tests her control. "Juggalo. Why. Now."

John winces. Gamzee makes a sound low in his throat, three parts growl and one part upset hiccup, the kind of noise that makes Karkat glance back up at Feferi in time to see her flush tyrian and clear her throat, pointedly looking away.

Oh, for fuck's sake. John has to know what this is starting to look like. He'll spit out some patented human bullshit rationalization any second now, Karkat is sure, but the longer they're all laying here in the open, the more astoundingly inaccurate conclusions people are going to draw and the more crotch blisteringly annoying it's going to be to shut down the rumors before they reach Harley.

Or worse, Rose.

"Uh. See, uh, Karkat -" John says. Before he finishes Karkat's name he breaks out in a burst of nervous, guilty-as-fuck laughter, his eyes wide as a deer's in the headlights of a ludicrously overpriced sports car and so blue they're humming with windy power. "We, um. Kind of had a tiny problem. But it's okay! We're taking care of it right now. By hugging." John then tries to grin, which would look a lot more convincing if Karkat didn't slide his claws down to cup the side of John's neck at the same time, to find his pulse a frantic, terrified throb.

...Fuck it. Karkat thinks that, contrary to standing orders, panic should be a thing that is happening. John's eyes only get that blue when he's doing something dangerous, stupid, important, or any combination of the three with the Breeze, and since the Horrorterror is currently preoccupied with three people trying to stab it in the bell, Karkat has to assume that the reason John's in full emergency mode is the purpleblood turning Karkat's side into an icicle. "Explain more," Karkat demands through gritted teeth, trying to do a stellar impression of someone not on the verge of freaking out while still, you know, freaking the fuck out.

"He was your moirail," John says, four words that painfully wrench something in Karkat, and then, "so I shooshed him and we came here and I'm sorry."

Karkat thought he was used to the déjà vu that hits him whenever he looks at any of the other trolls. They're all familiar, to some degree, and it's annoying and unsettling in turns.

This feels like having his guts sucked out through a hole in his stomach, because his first reaction is to think, oh, that's what I was missing, while the knowledge clicks into place in his thinkpan like a long missing puzzle piece. All this time he's spent wondering why Gamzee would be so creepily obsessed with hunting him down, and somehow this explanation rings more true than anything else he's come up with.

Then the full sense of what John just saidjams in between his ribs like a cold blade, a sharp burst of guilt and disbelief and betrayal and -

"You shooshed him," Karkat repeats, and John makes this broken sound while Karkat's trying to sort through who he's jealous of, exactly. Loving John is what's normal, but the memory of pitying Gamzee is suddenly so familiar he can't believe he forgot about it, like how he couldn't understand all these years he lived without being friends with Kanaya. It's the most fucked up bundle of incongruous emotions he's ever had the displeasure of having his thinkpan foist upon him in at least a week. "Oh my fucking god. Why."

"I think I should go," Feferi says. Karkat can't even bring himself to look at her, too busy incredulously staring at John and the top of Gamzee's head. "Yes. As exciting as all this is, I'm going to just - go. And you three...er. In bocca al lupo!"

Which is worse, having Feferi stand witness to this fucked up relationship crisis, or letting her walk over to the Horrorterror? Fuck it, Karkat's humiliation should always be as sordid and public as possible. "Don't you dare, Peixes. Sit down before I make you sit down through the power of unbridled mortification."

She keeps backing away, her hands crossing and uncrossing as she makes a cutting, enough sort of gesture. "I'm reeeelly not interested in watching this. No offense."

"This isn't what it looks like!" Karkat yells. Too late - Feferi jogs away, stopping to strip off her newly de-soled shoes before jumping over the acid trail to catch up with the grim jellyfish. If anything, him yelling just makes her powerwalk faster.

At the same time, one of the two idiots on top of him starts making a high-pitched, keening whine that sucker-punches him right in the pitygland. His claw gets halfway to Gamzee's face before he catches himself and rips it back; he pushes upright as far as he can go, pointedly looking anywhere but John or Gamzee as he starts squirming his way free. Just - he just can't even begin to wrap his pan around this, not with all the other problems they should be focusing on right now. "Fucking fantastic," he mutters. "Great. Awesome! Today just keeps getting better!"

Or maybe 'muttering' isn't the word for it. Yelling. That's the one he's looking for.

John actually tries to pap Karkat's cheek and the top of Gamzee's head at the same time. "It's an emergency! There's extenuating circumstances and stuff!"

Oh yeah, Karkat has heard that line before - in the kind of really shitty pale porn with the bare minimum of plot that you never admit to watching or reading in any kind of company. "Like what? I'm pretty sure that" - he points at the giant jellyfish in the background; it's slumping to one side now, but the point stands - "is more of an emergency! Are your platonic feelings jams with your codependent human friend group somehow not enough anymore?" He dodges the hand gravitating toward his face before it can try to pacify him, because that's...surprisingly tempting, right now. Gamzee's been operating under a really fucking false assumption, John's the kind of endearing dumbass who would fall for this sort of sad triangular gambit by accident, and Karkat needs to steer them away from this train of thought before their diabolical pitifulness combined manages to shoosh him into agreeing to this kind of asshat nonsense. "It is possible for people to engage in friendly antics without trying to start a shooshfest, you know!"

John shakes his head frantically before Karkat can finish. "Crap - Karkat, he keeps trying to kill people! He already got Equius!" As though to underscore the point, the cold lump of a troll starts to twitch, the high-pitched noise continuing undeterred by the fact John's hesitant pat has turned into genuine shoosh strokes.

Once again, Karkat's claws don't know where to go. Instinct is telling him to pap John in the face of the human's clear distress, but instinct is a crapshot and is also telling him to remove John's hand from Gamzee - either so that John will go back to petting Karkat, or so Karkat can shoosh Gamzee himself. Fuck, no. "What, again?" Karkat says, which isn't how he ever expected to respond to that kind of statement in his lifetime, but he's thoroughly distracted by the conflicting impulses now.

Unfortunately, the internal effort it takes to keep from acting on multiple stupid instincts means that his volume lowers to an accidentally more reasonable level, and John appears to take this as encouragement. "He thinks he's helping them - god tier, you know?" he says by way of explanation.

"And your solution was to jump at the murder-happy funtime clown and what, hope for the best?!"

Abruptly, he is struck by an ineffable conviction that this has happened before. Worse, he's getting vague hints of you fucking hypocrite simmering below the surface of his already overloaded thinkpan, which, if it means what he thinks it means - fuck déjà vu and everything it stands for.

"Gotta get it right this time," Gamzee mumbles, his face buried against Karkat's hoodie. "Radsis knows...she has her knowing on..." His hand leaves a cold spot on Karkat's arm as it snakes up to grip his shoulder, and he raises his head enough that Karkat gets up close and personal with the feral orange-red burning around his purple irises. Oh good, John did decide to get all fake pap-ish with someone who is legitimately on the verge of murder. Good times! "Ain't an easy thing, to put off what as needs doing so long, and then still to motherfuck it up -"

The switch from mumble to chainsaw growl sends Karkat's heart off-rhythm, alarm flooding up as the grip on his shoulder clamps down like a vice, unyielding and purpleblood strong. "No!" John says, his knee banging painfully against Karkat's hipbone as he lunges over to pull Gamzee back.

Gamzee's head whips around, low and fast, and Karkat knows it's coming before John does; John could get out of the way in time, probably, but Karkat yanks on Gamzee's shirt so that his teeth clack shut with a jerk inches from John's nose. His eyes burn red like stoplights through fog, pupils dilated like black saucers. "Fucked it up, fucked her up, and left her lingering, you made me leave her alive - motherfuckers, let me go," he's saying, and how fucked up is it that he sounds close to crying?

Karkat doesn't even want to touch the fact that Gamzee and he used to be - fuck. John being feelsy and inconsiderate about boundaries is something Karkat's pretty much resigned to at this point, but this is crossing lines that shouldn't be crossed. The last thing Karkat wants is to be pulled into some platonic calming mess with a troll who clearly remembers more about a past relationship than Karkat does. It's the perfect set up for pale tragedy and Karkat will have none of it.

"Karkat," John says, with his hands pressed against Gamzee's face, flapping his fingers far too close to bared teeth like the idiot he is. Both of them are fucking idiots, actually. "Kratka, own olduw eb a ergat mite ot - hggkk -" He's starting to pale, his eyes turning fucking neon as his words start to jumble again.

Idiots, and he wants to trade with whoever is currently fighting a losing battle against an elder god right the fuck now. Let - Let fucking Jade deal with this shit, goddammit, because Jade is probably marginally less of a fucking sucker than Karkat is and her human qualms about incest would keep her from making awful decisions. "Fuck. You," he hisses. Gamzee's shirt collar rips, and Karkat lets go to wrap his arm around the purpleblood's throat from behind. It's only a hug by the loosest of definitions, definitely the shittiest hug he's ever inflicted on someone, and he makes it ten times more shameful by grabbing John next. "Fuck both of you! DO I LOOK LIKE A FUCKING PORN STAR TO YOU?!

Gamzee gurgles, long claws coming up to dig into Karkat's arm. John says something that sounds like, "...only sometimes," which means Gamzee is the new temporary favorite by virtue of John's dumbassery being completely inappropriate at this time. Easing up on his chokehold, Karkat turns his head to the side and hides against John's neck; his stomach feels like it's going to collapse in on itself as he keeps his claws gentle on Gamzee's cheek. Under all the fluttering, twisty emotions squeezing at his pusher, there's a tiny nugget of sanity screaming that he should just grab John and fucking run, that any second now the purpleblood is going to flip back into murder mode and disembowel anyone he can lay claws on.

"How dare you drag me into this bullshit," he fumes, as quietly as he can, so that hopefully only John's enhanced hearing catches it. Having John right there makes it easier to keep his head together, but god, he can't make up his mind if he's outraged or not and no amount of John's presence can clear that up when John is the cause of it. He finally settles on cranky rather than outright pissed, because look where being pissed got him.

"I'm sorry," John says, a miserable hushed whisper. He hugs Karkat with a lot more force, solid and reassuring even with his hand shaking where it settles on Karkat's back.

"Sorry, he says." A shuddering hiccup rocks through Gamzee before Karkat finishes screaming internally, a gulping thing that does nothing to make the troll's eyes stop burning as he stares at John like he's the fucking Antichrist. Haha and fuck, there's the sudden flip to loathing and hate that Karkat expected. "Motherfucker should be sorry - what place do you have, what right?!" For a second the rage bleeds over into Karkat's mind, prickling hot, and how did it not occur to him before now that on top of everything else, Gamzee might be jealous of John? The oozing scratches glittering with clotted blood in John's hair had to come from somewhere.

Worse - now that he's actively going along with these two and their idiocy, he can feel that Gamzee's face is damp; the spot on Karkat's hoodie where the troll's head rested earlier is wet and splotchy with a purplish tint, speckled with drops of blue and green blood that look familiar. The rest all has to be tears. A fumbling hand bumps into Karkat's as John touches the corner of Gamzee's mouth, his fingers millimeters away from teeth as he tries to smooth away the snarl. The kind of soothing gesture that would work on Karkat, sure, but not on a raging coldblood, holy fuck John.

And sure enough, Gamzee's teeth chomp down on John's wayward thumb, right in front of Karkat's eyes. Karkat goes cold, but John doesn't even make a sound. John's not that much of a badass (or else Karkat has been severely underestimating him) - Karkat's blood sense kicks in and he realizes Gamzee hasn't bitten through skin. Yet. All three of them freeze in place; Karkat tries to read the expression on Gamzee's face, but it's a clusterfuck of rage and grief and a faint, barely recognizable look of consideration. A low, clicking growl vibrates through his vocal cords as his teeth gnaw.

Either that's a warning, which isn't what Karkat would think possible from a troll this much on edge, or -

"Will you just shoosh?" John says, huffing and bonking his head against Gamzee's to press a kiss over the troll's eye. Gamzee's jaw drops open - probably in sheer affront at this latest display of tomfoolery from a class A dumbass - and John's thumb is more wind than skin and bone as he shifts it out from between teeth.

"You're not him," Gamzee says. "You're not."

John shrugs and hugs Karkat tighter, jostling all three of them. "He's right here! So calm down, alright?" He moves his hand so it lays over Karkat's, instead of poking around at the toothy hinterlands.

Gamzee looks at Karkat, his eyes almost plain yellow as his brows furrow in confusion. Well, Karkat could make some effort to wear something more soothing than his resting disgruntled face, but he doesn't think that would help any one of them be less confused. Or less dead, in the event that Gamzee loses it. Fuck, maybe the Horrorterror which is still a thing will squish all three of them and put them out of their misery. Karkat's rooting in favor of that last one, because eventually somebody has to notice this pathetic heap of pseudo-pale desperation in plain view of the lobby, and he's never going to live this down.

Then Gamzee's eyes flick back to John, orange-tinted but not glaring, his head tilted to press into their hands. "...Motherfucker, you don't know when to quit," he says. The claw that seized Karkat's shoulder earlier drifts back to loop up and around Karkat's arm from behind in a slow, careful move. More worryingly, Gamzee's other hand snakes up to poke at John's cheek, and his mouth, and then his eyebrow; John blinks his eyes shut as a claw traces the soft skin between bone and eye, but he doesn't move away.

Oh god, they're flirting right in front of him. No, worse - they're flirting badly. No, no, you know what? Even fucking worse, they're involving Karkat in their awful flirtastrophe, too, because he can't help but move his fingers along with John's down the side of Gamzee's face.
And it makes his idiot traitor pan want to go all soft and gooey. "Unbelievable," he says, glowering when they blink at him with nearly identical expressions of abashment. Gamzee looks slightly more desperate, John a different flavor of worried and guilty, like a wriggler caught with their nub in the cookie jar for the third time in an hour, and both of them hold still when Karkat combs their hair with his claws. He starts out conversationally. "Great, now the clown's down with this bullshit? Story of my fucking life. There's a fucking right and a wrong way to try to initiate a fucking threesome and a grand total of neither of you apparently know the difference. Do you get some sick amusement out of shoehorning two people into one quadrant?! I mean, I already knew John has an understandably poor grasp of how boundaries work, but this is taking it to a whole new level of fuckery. This is somehow even worse than anything my pitifully unimaginative thinkpan could come up with as nightmare fuel. At least those only involved stupid extra humans - if I'd known you intended to branch out to include trolls as well I would have fucking warned Kanaya off ages ago. You have to fucking draw a line somewhere, John!"

He may have lost track of 'conversationally' somewhere along the way. It's not so much combing their hair as gripping it in his claws and praying for the strength of will not to bash their fool heads together. Now he understands why John was doing his hedging spiel and trying to keep Karkat calm without explanation; Karkat's the only steady middle ground these two have, and if he goes, they're gone.

No fucking pressure or anything.

Of course, what John takes away from his rambling is: "Hang on, nightmares? Or you mean dreams -" he swivels to squint at Karkat "- about extra humans...as in like, who? Us and R-?"

"Finish that sentence, John. I fucking dare you."

"- oooooskay," John finishes.

Hmm. Karkat will have to let that one slide. Bad enough Dave knows of other things which should not be spoken of; putting ideas in John's head at this point would be like dumping more snow into an avalanche and then trying to head the resulting disaster off with twigs. "Any fucking backtalk to add to this fun edition of joke-around paltime, asshole?" he asks Gamzee sourly, to change the subject.

"Missed your yellin', best bro," Gamzee says. His eyelids have shuttered down a little, heavy and slow to blink. If he about to - yeah, he just yawned. The display of teeth is unnerving, but the lack of growling when John scratches Gamzee's scalp close to the horn balances it out.

There's no way in fuck this is actually working as a calming mechanism. Karkat doesn't believe it. "Oh, I know, right?" John says, doing a better imitation of 'conversational' than any fakey pretend bullshit Karkat ever pulled while Karkat grumbles at him irritably. "Yelling means he cares." The human's lopsided grin is too fucking schmoopy to be teasing.

Don't yell, don't yell, don't - fuck it. "I yell at everything!"

John pats his cheek. "Yeah, because you care a lot. About everything. Duh, Karkat."

Now that's just fucking libel right there. Karkat moves his chin to accommodate Gamzee resting the side of his head on that shoulder, and closes his eyes against the faint, subvocal sounds that purr right beneath his ear. John tries to adjust to hug them both better, and it makes the rumbling louder. "I hate you two with every fiber of my being, right now," he says, with feeling.

"No more, then," Gamzee mutters. "Not yet."
This makes no sense to Karkat, at the time. But some sound breaks off, one that was vibrating just on the edge of his hearing, and John makes a muffled noise as his eyes dim back down to more sustainable levels of radiance. "[Babelon]'s gone," he says.

It means next to nothing to Karkat. He's pointedly trying to ignore the two idiots melting in his lap by glancing around, ostensibly to check to make sure the Horrorterror hasn't done a U-turn while they were engaged in the incredibly protracted process of getting their fucking shit together. "Oh, good news, you fuckheads," he says, nudging them with his elbows. "Our absence made no fucking difference at all. The giant jellyfish of death is about to fall on our heads." It's certainly canting backwards, at least, white-and-black liquid pouring out from the popped bell of its head, and if Jade kicks it the wrong way - yup, thanks Harley. This time, he grabs John's chin and points his blinking face up to see the jelly abomination bearing down on them in what appear to be death throes. "Literally."

"Crap! Going, going!" John says, eyes brightening back up in between blinks, and then they're gone.

- Traveling via John's windy thing sucks. The unpleasant sensation of lacking physical blood makes Karkat want to gag, or tear up his arm to find a pulse - but it's all intangible.

He does feel more aware of the other people around him, though. In the five seconds or so they're disembodied, he pinpoints Nepeta - blood in her lungs, sharp stakes of ribs digging into soft tissue. It's all internal hemorrhaging, drowning her slowly. He'd know how to fix some of that if it was his body, enough to at least -

Of course, the last time John dragged him along on the windy express, the Breeze wasn't all that vocal. Now, it picks up on the direction Karkat's thoughts are taking almost before he finishes thinking them. Their stream of wind abruptly brakes and veers off from where John was taking them, rushing through the cracks in the walls and under doors.

BE: hang on, Karkat wants to do a helping thing!

BE: helpinggg~~~

They brush through the room like ghosts. John's presence draws Karkat's along in its wake, and nudges him until they rustle between the feet of the surgical team struggling to repair the damage. Look at those O2 sats, comes the strong, disapproving thought impression from John - it's hard to tell the difference between his voice and the Breeze when the Breeze just sounds like a scrawner version of him.

BE: okay, what have you been using to do your blood healy thing?

Karkat's a little distracted by the patch of dark nothingness huddled in the corner of the room. It's looming and huge and he keeps catching a glimpse of chipped horn and dark hair, but whenever he tries to get a better look the voidy aura closes up around Equius until he's forced to look away. Also, blood healy thing? Fuck, Karkat has just been patching himself up as best he can for years; to him it's all one amorphous 'blood thing.'

BE: oh good, you have a lot of unlocked abilities and fraymotif licenses! did you guys just buy all of them in your game or something?

No fucking clue, Karkat thinks back, doing his best to roll his eyes without having eyes. He gets the mental impression of a :P so he must be successful.

BE: whatever, grumpy gills! you have access to [Resuscitate] and other Blood emergency medical combos, so use em!

BE: please be fast...don't really want the Bard to jump in here after us... :T

Panic is an awful motivator. Karkat screeches and reaches out to Nepeta's blood in a haze of red. He's aware of John saying something like 'uh, yes! yes, please play!' But he's preoccupied with drawing blood back into its proper channels, scabbing and knitting together tissue where he can without accidentally growing too much over the shattered shards of rib bone. Working with green blood doesn't feel all that noticeably different from healing his own stupid injuries; the drugs they're pumping into her for surgery leave a bitter, phantom aftertaste. He notices when the lack of oxygen abruptly corrects itself, though the lungs themselves are in shitty shape, and then they slide out of the room so fast it leaves Karkat dizzy, the pulse of red haziness thick in his incorporeal mind before the winds resolidify as bodies and they drop in a heap in a room Karkat barely recognizes at first.

He would have noticed if Gamzee were coasting along with them in that split-second detour. All the same, he nearly has a fucking heart attack when the purpleblood snaps into place right behind John, purple eyes digging into Karkat's like they can peel back layers of his skull.

Oh god, what the fuck are they doing. And also -

"Why would you ever think murdering people was a solution to your problems, slime for brains?!!" he demands. He wants to shake Gamzee by the shoulders and yell at him properly, but instead he tucks his head between his knees, riding out the dizzy head rush as the pulse dies down in his temples. "Why is that the first conclusion you jump to?!!"

John reaches out and steadies Karkat's wobbling knee. "Are you okay?"

"I'm fine! Focus on talking down the clown some more!" Karkat snaps, because someone has to take charge of this runaway bullshit train, and considering who he has to work with, here, it's going to have to be him. As soon as his heart stops pounding in his chest like a drum.

BE: you should probably turn off the fraymotif. do you usually just let it run out the clock like that? that can't be good for your heart rate...

What fraymotif? All he hears is his pulse thrumming in his ears. He can't hear this music shit half the time, let alone when he's coming down hard after a moment of panicky blood fuckery.

...Wait. "Oh, you're fucking with me," he says, glaring at the fluttering spot where a circulating breeze tosses the edge of a bolt of fabric. Why are they in Kanaya's work room? Does he even want to know?

BE: nooo. the Pulse is a pulse, silly Karkat.

"Whatever." Karkat massages his temples with the heels of his palms. Cut that out, he thinks snappishly, and somehow his irritation only swells when his heart slows back to a calm, even beat. He picks up the nearest bundle of fabric and presses it to his face as he shrieks in frustration. This fucked up bucket of coagulated vomit piece of shit game. He wants to find whoever came up with it and tell them exactly how far up their chute they can shove their useless game mechanics. And possibly stab them.

He ends up with three hands on him by the time he yanks the fabric away from his face, John touching his knee and shoulder to keep him from falling to the side, and a hand that's only faintly familiar patting between his shoulder-blades, the faint drag of claws noticeable through the cloth of his much aggrieved hoodie. His heart jumps the wrong way when, for a moment, he looks up and thinks Gamzee's too far away to have possibly reached him; a blink and the troll is right beside him, papping his shoulder from within arm's reach.

Holy fuck, where does Karkat even start? He and John can barely keep their own issues locked down, how are they supposed to help keep a third person balanced? A third person who likes to jump straight to murder.

He pulls himself together. Somehow. Kanaya has a pile of random shit in the corner that's been serving as a sort of communal socialization pile over the past week, and he's commandeering it since the Breeze decided to dump them here instead of -

A room that might possibly have been blown up. Fuck, right. Most of the rooms where they've been hanging out faced the lake, along the same side as the lounge room that is no more. So much for that. This pile it is. Karkat lurches to his feet and drags John and Gamzee over to it by the backs of their shirts; he dodges the claws that tries to tug him down, too, because today is already going down in history as the day Karkat had a threesome and he's trying not to think about that too hard. "You. Start talking," he orders, glaring at Gamzee.

It's downright unnerving that instead of being properly intimidated by said glare, Gamzee smiles more, watching Karkat with painfully sweet adoration crinkling his eyes. It reminds him of the way John just laughs and gets all soothing when Karkat breaks down in a fit of rage. "What d'you wanna know, brother?" the trolls asks, picking at a dried splotch of blue blood on the back of his wrist without looking. Then he tilts his head to the side, horns scraping the wall behind him. "You should get your sit on, too."

"Yeah, you should come here," John adds, looking worried as he watches Karkat start to pace. His gaze darts to Gamzee, an extra note of wariness in his expression, and thank fuck John recognizes on some level how dangerously stupid this is. Karkat wouldn't even let John sit within ten feet of this troll under ideal circumstances, but they're completely and utterly fucked and there's no turning back now.

"Fuck no. I mean it, we're talking this shit out right the fuck now." Karkat feels the wind knotting in a figure eight around his feet each time he takes a step. He chooses to eyeball Gamzee instead. "You fucked us over this afternoon. Didn't you. How much of this bullshit did you cause?"

Gamzee shrugs, apparently unbothered by the suspicion. "Knew shit was meant to go down. You had some little cueball motherfucker rolling around and doing unrighteousness on all that void here, to lay it bare, and Vrissis never knew when to let a thing bide. There was the puppet, but I motherfucking took care of that shit. And then I could not deny truth any longer." His eyes go too sharp. "Got here too late, and you already replaced me, brother. Me here motherfucking years too late, you soft and peaceful and sweet on someone else, and what else am I good for but to set the others off? All lined up with cracks in their souls, and how am I not to shatter such?"

He moves restlessly on the pile, the faintest shadows of limbs not quite where they should be, and he's about to lose his shit. Karkat can feel it. If this is Rage, how are they supposed to keep Gamzee from backflipping off the handle on a daily basis? Why would there even need to be an aspect of Rage? Why not an aspect of Calm-the-fuck-down? Yet more fucking dickery, courtesy of Sburb.

John grabs Gamzee's hand while Karkat's busy internally cursing their existence; when Karkat looks up again, Gamzee is staring at their hands like they're a foreign object. Well, at least keeping him confused with John's powers of earnest dumbassery is an effective strategy. "Don't be dumb," John says, matter-of-factly. "I know it seems like everything sucks when you're upset, but we're okay right now, right? Maybe making everyone god tier would be useful if we had, like, zero other options left, but I think you just pissed that Equius guy off for the rest of eternity."

Gamzee shrinks back, staring into the distance instead of at either one of them. "Needed to go first," he says in a mumble, his sharp-edged stare easing up. "All this needs hiding from the puppet fucker, and ain't no machine as can match a void bro on defense."

"Hell, well at least you're fucking strategic about who you murder next!" Karkat rips his claws through his hair. The pacing isn't helping much anymore. "And you went and smashed up his moirail, so awesome, there's another undying vengeance-fueled platonic hatred that will fuck up our team dynamic!"

Gamzee just goes even quieter. "...Motherfucker probably has the right of it, there, if hating is what happens. S' alright."

Fuck. Now Karkat feels like an ass. If Gamzee just had the decency to snap back and break this pale streak, he might have had an out - but no, Gamzee takes the criticism with the kind of sad-eyed smile that tugs at Karkat's weak, weak pusher. When John graduates from hand-holding to shuffling over for an awkward hug without Gamzee offering more than a half-hearted warning growl, he knows they're all three screwed. Regardless of whatever the fuck's going through John's head right now, Karkat is hooked like the sappy sadfuck that he is.

He's put it together now, too, all the little blips where his thoughts have been forced to part around a white smudge in his memories: Rose and Dave both came to Washington with cueballs in their pockets, at least one with a connection to Doc Scratch that needed investigating, and then - nothing. No one ever followed up on the creepy things, probably because no one could remember they existed. How long were those things watching, and waiting, while they ran around with their heads up their asses pretending they could actually achieve anything in life?

That thought is enough to distract him from the breathtaking wreckage of his love life and make him want to punch a wall. No, that wouldn't communicate the full breadth of his fury right now. What the fuck did any of them do to deserve this?! Play a shitty game and end the world? Who hasn't done that, these days! Why fucking sing them out for every single possible thing that could ever go wrong, ever?! Who the fuck makes these calls. Everything's fucked up and glitched and their plans never go right and dying might literally be the best of several shitty options at this point because why the hell not? Why the fuck not -

He snaps out of it in time to catch John on his feet, hands sneaking up to pull Karkat's claws away from his head. Arms loop around his waist from behind, a cold weight pressed against the back of his neck. "DON'T YOU FUCKERS DARE SHOOSH ME!" he shrieks, loud enough to make John jerk his hands back. "TM FUCKING PISSED!"

"You're freaking out," John says, gentle to the fucking core. He's got traces of dust streaked down the front of his shirt - a new one that Karkat remembers him getting to replace an old sweater with a hole worn through the seam on the left side. John never has old, raggedy clothes for long before his - before Samuel got on his case about it. Now there's a stain on this one, sort of the same purplish splotch that Karkat has on his hoodie, because they've both had a clown crying all over them.

Freaking out seems entirely justified at this point. He's overwhelmed and sick with it. "You said - Aradia knew," he says, mostly to himself, rubbing at his closed eyes. Gamzee shifts behind him, and the noise that comes out of his mouth sounds affirmative. "She knew exactly what would happen? Typical. Rose has been trying to wring more information out her, and couldn't get any more than bullshit excuses about fucking inevitability." The words chatter out too fast, his voice dipping and cracking at intervals as he tries to scrape himself back together and act like a functioning troll again.

"Uhhh, Karkat, we can probably worry about interrogating people and stuff until after everything settles down." John hovers nervously, with his feet a solid three inches above the ground. Karkat wonders if he's noticed yet. A hand comes up to touch the back of Karkat's, and when Karkat doesn't yell again John carefully takes Karkat's claws away from his scalp to tuck between his hands. "Though I agree that this is all total bullshit and super fucked up."

Of fucking course. "How much of that did I yell out loud?"

John screws up his face ruefully. "At a guess? All of it."

Karkat breathes in, and there's fifty-fifty odds whether what comes out next is another yell. He sighs instead. "Yeah, I figured."

"Gotta a lot of motherfucking anger 'n sad shit all twisted up in you," Gamzze says. And this is really a thing that's happening - they've switched from pacifying Gamzee to dealing with Karkat's issues and once John's issues enter the ring they're going to be here all day.

"Who doesn't." Breathe in and out. Then Karkat sets his shoulders and mentally shoves his thinkpan back into gear. "Alright, alright, I'm done. I'm fucking over it. No more hugging, you shameless fucks, we've got shit to deal with."

If Gamzee puts effort into holding onto him, this push for sanity will probably get cut very short. To Karkat's amazement, though, the purpleblood lets him go when he steps away. Before either of them can say a word Karkat stoops over the pile and starts digging. He tries to avoid disrupting Kanaya's order as much as possible; he knows some of his stuff migrated in here, but Kanaya goes through enough fabric that it's all buried deep.

Karkat finds one of his discarded jackets after some rummaging (how many discarded apple juice cartons can one Dave produce, anyway? does he fucking shed them from his person like a snake?), pulling his hoodie off with one arm so he can replace it with something not full of claw marks and holes. Then he marches back to his two dumbass friends and keeps walking, towing them along by their sleeves so that they follow him out of Kanaya's room.

"Uh, where are we going?" John asks. Karkat doesn't answer right away; he has this part of the building fucking memorized, though the cracks riddling the ceiling are all new. Fuck, this place is a wreck. But the walking is helping to clear his head, and what starts as the half-formed thought of 'get out and move' morphs into something actually useful for Karkat to do with his time. Win-win. John doesn't repeat the question, either, which Karkat takes to mean he's caught on to the where, if not the why.

"To the only bulgelicking piece of shit in this hellhole that I have faith in my ability to wring answers out of in times of confusion, stupidity, and general shitdickery," Karkat says. The door is slightly ajar to start with, but he leans back and kicks it open anyway. It's just that kind of day. "Sollux, you memeloving fuck, where the fuckflipping hell is your moirail and what is she playing at!"

Sollux has been redecorating since the last time Karkat set foot in this miserable snuff-film viewing conference room. He narrowly avoids planting his shoe right in a fresh-looking, tack puddle of teal blood (oh good, another casualty! Great!), and then Gamzee has to nudge him back upright when he stumbles over a bundle of red and blue wires that has escaped the general chaos of the modified Queen's Hub. There's no sign of Vriska or Terezi or even their possibly dead meatsuits, but the White Queen and WV are both huddled around the yellow husktop Sollux sits in front of, the screen covered in code and gold text. "The only memeloving fuck here ith you, KK," Sollux says, without looking up from the sickly sheen of the computer monitor that illuminates his face. He looks more tired than Karkat feels, which is fucking incredible, and his hair sticks up in tufts around his horns.
"AA'th off somewhere keeping Tav away from the fighting. Go worry about your own moirail, aththhole."

At least Karkat has the perfect lure. "I have two," he counters, grabbing one of the office chairs and spinning it around so he can flop down on it.

Sollux inhales without looking up from the computer, his expression pained - then he stops mid-breath, tilts his head to the side, and turns to stare at Karkat. His eyes go to Gamzee and John, both standing in the doorway looking lost, and then back to Karkat.

After a pause, the goldblood taps a claw on the White Queen's shoulder. "Just hit 'y' if it athkth you anything," he says, without looking at her. Then he passes the husktop off to a very worried carapacian to face Karkat.

WQ: Er...Yes, of course.

WV: let me!

WV waves his claws to accompany the WQ's oddly enthusiastic agreement, and with that apparently important business settled, Sollux steeples his claws in front of his face, blue and red glasses glinting.
"You have my attention, KK."

Before Karkat can commence gloating, though, Sollux points a claw at Gamzee. "You can't kill me, for the record. Thomething'th up with my program, me and Kanaya are glitched to fuck and back.
We won't come back unlethth I can figure out where I messed up."

"Whatever you say, motherfucker," Gamzee says. The chill act may be deceiving - Karkat remembers distantly how totally calm Gamzee was this afternoon, right up until he decided not to chill - but he's stopped making any sudden, jolting movements. When John shrugs and grabs more chairs for them Gamzee sits in one fluid motion, watching with lazy eyes and a faint, fond smile.

"Ew," Sollux says, succinctly. "Okay, I believe the double moirail thing. You owe me goththip about the details, later. What do you want to know?"

"So you've been in on Aradia's bullshitstravaganza?" Karkat says, squinting at Sollux. "Start talking.
At least three different things have gone wrong today, and I'm holding you two and this dipshit -" he jerks a thumb at Gamzee "- accountable unless you make a really fucking convincing argument.
Spill."

Grimacing, Sollux waves a claw. "AA had me thplitting my focuth between this body and the oneth on Prospit and Derthe for weeks, now. All that mattered was hacking into Thkaia's programming to alter how god tiering worked so no one would end up permanently dead. I would have mentioned it to homeone, but on top of that and Vriska and Terezi, I had all the spare brainpower of a two year old human wriggler."

John claps his hands together. "So you're why Equius came back without a questbed." His bright expression of realization fades a little; Karkat can tell by the tiny tilt of his head that he's listening to something on the wind. "But. Uh. I'm pretty sure modifying how the game works is...helpful, but could wind up getting us all doomed?"

"Tch. I'm the Doom guy, you think I don't already know that thhit?" Sollux says. "We're in the clear, for now. The two thcratched games merging into one already borked Thkaia enough that we have powers before the game has officially started. As long as me and AA time it right, the dream bodies die in the Medium, then resurrect wherever the main body is. Simple location ID swap. Pie the of cake, basically. Getting it to work with only the one questbed was harder." He sighs through his nose. "It would have been worse if people didn't die today, actually; doomed before you could say 'hahaha, what a geniuth plan.' We just made it so that at least they can come back."

Karkat nods slowly. "Alright, fuck. I can believe that. In fact, it's exactly what I expect from this fucking game, at this point. And the giant Horrorterror outside - whose plan was that?" Also, he's not one hundred percent certain it was dead when they last saw it. It looked like it was bleeding from a new orifice, but if anything that might have just pissed it the fuck off.

In the contest between going to help with a Horrorterror and keeping Gamzee from running amok, though, Karkat can see why the two might be equally important.

"Uh, not mine. Not AA's, either, I think, though she probably knew it would happen. Potthibly just a shitty side effect of us fucking up." Sollux sounds dubious. "Vriska triggered her auto-res down in the basement, but she was already god tier to start with, so it must have been a stupid death. If Terezi manages to drag her pixie athth back here without the two of them relapthing, we can interrogate her or thomething."

"Just how many people are god tier now? I'm counting eight, including me and Rose and Dave and Jade," John says.

With a strained look, Sollux nods. "Eight, yeah. Unlethth you count Gamzee, who is apparently 'indeterminate' no matter how many different ways I ask the system."

Almost as one, Karkat, John, and Sollux look at Gamzee.

Gamzee waves back, smiling. "Well that sure is a mystery, that happens to be a motherfucking mystery," he says, placid and completely not answering the fucking question.

"Whatever. Jackathth." Sollux mutters the last part under his breath. Then he reaches back without looking and takes his husktop back from the White Queen, who lets him have it with a bemused look. WV tries to squirm back in front of the screen instantly, but Sollux, the heartless bastard, elbows the carapacian out of the way. "Anyway. If you have any more questionth, they can wait until later," he says, cracking his knuckles. "We're due to get the encryption code for our thesis recording in an hour or tho, according to AA, and if people are done dying for today I need to finish rehauling our shitty excuse for a computer terminal so that twelve streams won't light this thucker up like a bonfire in a drought." WV manages to claw his way into Sollux's lap, and almost immediately gets lifted up by blue and red psionic sparks that casually fling the alien at Karkat. The impact knocks his rolling chair back against the conference table. "And take that one with you, he keepth trying to input commands and turn on capth lock. Fucking backseat typer."

"We should go check on the others, anyway," John says, standing up. "I think they're done fighting. Or I can't feel anything like fighting anymore, so I guess everything's settled down. Oh, and we definitely need to make sure Rose is okay."

WV huffs and folds his arms, glaring daggers at Sollux with angry white eyes. This is a prime opportunity to have quality WV time without Dave interfering, though, so Karkat doesn't argue. He needs the distraction.

WV: why would you let the queen help and not me?! she enforces the violence of monarchical tyranny, you know!
...Not that kind of distraction.

"Also, he won't shut up." Sollux snaps his claws and Karkat's chair starts rolling toward the door in a jolt of psionics, bogging down in the gross smear of Terezi's blood before Gamzee reaches out and gives it another push. Karkat is too busy staring gape-mouthed at WV to respond. John appears to be in the same state, his eyes huge as he follows them into the hall. "If he trieth to turn my cords into a fake power grid for his town one more time, I'm launching him into the Medium where he belongth."

The door slams shut behind them in a cloud of fizzling sparks.

Karkat continues to stare at WV. Beyond his personal haze of what the fuck, John appears to be in similar straits.

"Are either of you motherfuckers hungry?" Gamzee asks. When neither Karkat nor John can muster up the presence of mind to answer him, Gamzee shifts a little and scratches the back of his head. "I could eat. Is all I'm saying."

---

Jade blazing a nova through space to get them out of the blast radius jostles Dave's internal metronome back into awareness, and suddenly he's too aware that while his mental clock has been ticking along without problem, he hasn't bothered to check the time all afternoon.

Like, is that what being drunk feels like for Rose? Not totally having all of one's shit together, shooting the shit with friends without noticing that pieces of the afternoon don't line up just right? What he pictures in his head when he calls up memories of the meeting seem blurred and disjointed.

...God. Fucking shit dammit. Does that mean they need to do the whole meeting over again? Did Terezi really make paper airplanes out of his perfectly crafted AA fliers and try to use Tavros's horns as a goal post? Because that shit was hilarious and now Dave isn't even sure if it really happened or not.

The only thing that's clear in his mind is -

Someone's leaving the room. No one's supposed to leave, other than for bathroom breaks, but the meeting hasn't really started yet. Rose and Karkat have started off with their little spiel. Those two and their weird co-leadership thing. Yeesh.

"Dude, you coming back?" he asks, mostly disinterested; he's trying to scope out Momlonde's reaction to the fliers, but she's off in the back of the room, and no way is Dave being all obvious and shit when Bro's lurking around somewhere.

"..................." is all the response he gets. He twists his head around as ninja smooth as possible to watch Momlonde without tipping Bro off.

".................honk."

---

Panic only starts to gnaw at him when he realizes his lines of communication are slowly being cut off. He opens his mouth and all that comes out is gibberish; flicking the metal of his collar does nothing to improve it. Sign language is a bust, too; he doesn't expect half the people in this room to understand it, but the mere fact that Jade just stares at his hands in complete incomprehension makes him break out in a cold sweat. Writing down notes is out, his new phone screen has all the right icons but none of the text works right, he might as well have his hands cut off, how else is he supposed to -

But hey. It's cool. Everyone else is just as screwed as he is, and that means he can cool his jets. I mean, sure, it makes coordinating impossible, but it's like High School Musical. They're all in this together.

There's also the matter of the abomination he can't even call music playing in one ear. The Horrorterror is just a migraine nibbling at the soft tissue of his brain, not even loud enough for him to make out words; this is something else. Dave's not sure until he checks the timetables, but sure enough the hell music has stats and a readout, which means it's some kind of terrible fraymotif. He's, like, ninety percent sure.

But it sounds godawful. Worse than that obnoxious, screeching noise that Dave had to put up with for a while there whenever he wanted to listen to fraymotifs when John's jacked up, majorly uncool use of [Eye of the Storm] went janky as hell. John's shitty coping mechanism wasn't music straight from the mouth of fucking double death Satan himself, either, which is what's playing right now. Random record scratches, the shriek of microphone feedback, snatches of whispered words so garbled Dave can't even begin to tell what the song's about and only audible in one ear at a time...

When he puts out a hand and flattens it against the timetable to his right, the readout just says [Abelbno], which tells him nothing whatsoever. The stats are just as muddled; there's more numbers than there should be.

Also, his latest replacement sunglasses have a new crack right down the middle of the left lens. Problems. Why do they always have problems? Like, Dave's gone along with some weird shit in his day, but he doesn't remember it being non-stop, 24/7 reality-bending bullshit before these past couple of months.

With a grimace, he twists the volume down as far as it can go, so he can focus without all this raw noise blaring in his ears.

Of course the volume control doesn't work.

And exactly how long has the insane clown guy been dicking around with their minds? Because Dave thinks there's probably a law against insane clown dudes and minds and the dicking around thereof, but he's drawing a blank. He needs a lawyer on call or something because Bro clearly taught him fuck all about how the law applies to keeping his mental temple sacred and clear of clown minddouchery. Terezi's idea of justice might be skewed, but maybe she has lawyer friends he can hit up.

Before he can wonder where their resident law troll might have ended up in the shuffle, green light wraps around him like a tingly blanket, and Jade lands them right beside the goddamn Horrorterror.

He could have told Jade that was a bad plan, if she could ask anyone anything and be understood. Not as bad as if she'd brought Rose along with them...but Jade knows - she was there when they were watching the game records and stuff. Bringing Dave to a Horrorterror fight seems like something she would have known to avoid at all costs on a normal day.

But hell, he gets it. Today is a spectacularly shitty day and Jade needs all hands on deck. He can handle it. Yeah.

Besides, when he gets a good look at this latest tanglebuddy shitstorm? It's a jellyfish. A giant jellyfish. and Dave really shouldn't find this whole thing amusing as hell. It reminds him of his collection of dead things back in Houston; he picked up a couple of dried out jellyfish blobs on the beach at Galveston when Bro took him there one year, and figuring out how to preserve them in formalin and water with the right ratios took him ages. Only one had survived to sit on the top shelf of his packed closet. Jellyfish are almost entirely squishy bubbles of goop.

Except for the parts that sting.

As though to remind him to sit his ass back down, that nibbling migraine spikes into a sharp, stabbing roar that shocks him out of his amusement. Dave can hear the disturbing fraymotif over it, but it's a close call. His hand trembles when he tugs a sword out of the air, only half sure what he's going to do with it if the Horrorterror decides to tango with him next. What he hears next sounds like a stadium full of people sniffing in disdain - and then the murmuring rumble slacks off again, leaving him alone with the terrible music.

Alright. Cool. He didn't want to end up possessed today, anyway. Maybe this grimdark thing only wants Eridan like Gl'bgolyb only wanted Peixes - instead of, you know, being an equal opportunity douchebag like Leviathan. Convenient, since they can't really afford for Dave to take a dirt nap this time. No, not being a tanglebuddy is right up Dave's alley. When he glances down at the sword in his hand, it's only unfamiliar for a beat. Some half Welsh name that he doesn't want to bother remembering.

[activate fraymotif? y/n]

At least that still sounds normal. Dave tries to fiddle with the timetables, but gives up when the readout stays scrambled. He has no goddamn clue what fraymotif abilities he might be activating or what triggered them - but hell, what else is new? "Sey," he forces out (hearing the word come out like that feels like gagging on dry cornflakes), and then, "Ugh, sey."

Okay, that's not fair. "Yes."

-

In hindsight, Dave might have gone a little overboard on the music.

A lot overboard.

But he's gonna blame this shit on the game, because it's an overly-literal piece of crap.

Jade has zoomed up, her face hidden by a poof of hair as she lashes out, and everyone else scattered around the Horrorterror has started to chase after it. The grimjelly isn't moving fast, but it is moving. Out of the two Horrorterrors Dave has had the bad luck to get uncomfortably up close and personal with, Leviathan wanted to blow stuff up and Gl'bgolyb had a boner for Peixes, or something. If it weren't for the thing's sheer size - and the unhealthy sheen of 'you're fucked, tiny flesh things' that ebbs from the jellyfish in waves - Dave would think this one just liked floating.

He's glad he took a second to collect his shit, though, because regardless of what the Horrorterror is doing, activating three fraymotifs at once on top of whatever shit is already playing? That is a stupid ass idea, and his ears may never recover. He can barely hear the track names over the horrific, mixed up shrieking noises in his ears as he reels back.

[Recurative Accelerando]

[Warp and Weft]
He has no idea what any of those do, except one. The track names sound fine when the little not-voice announces them in his head, but of course trying to spin through the turntables to find out more gets him nothing but garbage. Do they work right when there's another fraymotif harshing on their vibes?

When he looks up, the grimjelly quivers. The main bulk of it rests heavy in the bell, where Jade's tossing green bursts of light to try to tear through. It's the dragging tentacles that people on the ground need to watch out for - but the quiver isn't enough warning before the frills and feathers wind up into a tight coil, then rip outward in a vicious, lashing spiral that tears up the grass. All of them get caught off guard by it - Kanaya takes the hit and flies backward, which doesn't worry Dave as much since Kanaya's a tank in troll form - and Oriole manages to tuck his wings down before they can get ripped off. Dave rolls under the main slice, then bites back a shout when a feather catches him across the face and arm. The barbs of the large feather feel like spines; the force drags him a yard or two before the tentacle finishes passing overhead and starts to retract back to the body. His suit jacket protected most of his arm; there's a welt swelling up on the side of his face that stings like shit when he scrubs at it.

Dave can't see Karkat from here. Dave only has tabs on Kanaya and Jade and Oriole and that's at least three people short of who he wishes he had tabs on.

Well, as long as they don't have any plan beyond the basic hit the Horrorterror until it stops moving strategy, everybody can catch on. Past that point Dave's drawing a blank - grab Eridan and run? Try to find more void bracers without the ability to ask Momlone where she keeps the spares? Herd their new giant pet jellyfish away from major population centers and let it graze free range across Idaho? No one is using Idaho for anything important right now, right?

Shit, man. This internal monologue is getting surreal. He's gonna go stab the grimjelly before he zones out completely. He spins time to a crawl so he can catch up with where Kanaya landed.

Getting closer to the Horrorterror means acknowledging not just how tall it is (how is anyone but Jade supposed to get up there?) but also how thick the humidity sits in the air, plastering his hair to his forehead and sticking to the back of his neck. There's an extra, acrid aftertaste when Dave takes a shallow breath, and he can only imagine how fucked they might be if the air turns into poison. The horrific mist mostly swirls around the Horrorterror itself, and breathing it can't be good for your long term health, right? Where's John and his windy thing when you need them?

The grimjelly's tentacles wind up again slowly, as though it has plenty of time to watch them run around like lemmings working out the best angle for leaping off a cliff en-mass. Kanaya rolls back onto her feet with her scary game face on - can't keep that troll down, for serious - and Dave wishes like hell they could talk and work out some kind of game plan with Jade, who keeps getting batted aside and having to evade each time she tries to punch through the bell.

He wishes it even more when, with a warning shout that doesn't actually do much warning, Jade flashes green - and a chunk of the massive jellyfish rips loose, a wobbly wedge of greyish-blackish-purplish jello that drips brackish blood everywhere as it gets tossed backwards over Jade's head to land in the empty field. A similar flare of yellow-green flares on the far side of the grimjelly, and more space-y shit removes a couple of the Horrorterror's spare tentacles. That creepy space hound doesn't make a sound while it does it, either, reappearing on the ground directly under the center of the jellyfish's umbrella as the whole thing quakes.

Neither tear heals over right away, which is - some kind of progress. Dave is all for progress.
Progress is great. Except just as fast as Jade and Bec strip away the grimjelly's tentacles and hack away more chunks of jelly, replacement tendrils bust out of the ragged bell in a miasma, tiny worms and thorns knotting together until they're long enough reach out and smack at Jade. Still no sign of Eridan in all the mess, either.

Dave waits - and waits - and then hacks at the next feathered, lashing tentacle that whips out at him, hearing the roar of a chainsaw as Kanaya does the same. Kanaya tries to run up the tendril, actually, and makes it up nearly ten feet before the tentacle tries to buck her off. She hooks an arm around it, hanging on as it tries to scrub her off against the ground, like gum on the sole of a shoe.

He gets the idea, though. They can't do anything useful down here. He could try to do that floating bs, like Typheus was riding his ass about, but nah.

Seriously, no.

The tentacle he slices at gives under the broken half of a sword, wobbly but quick to reform, and he flashsteps under it before it can drag him a second time. He spies the second tendril, one that's darker and limned with white rather than the other way around, as it winds back and then strikes at him from overhead. He's got this; swapping between a timetable under one hand and stabbing with a swordkind feels practiced and familiar - but before he can flash out of the way a hand knots in the back of his shirt and hauls him back further - too slow. Dave grabs whoever it is by the wrist without hesitating, and pauses time flat out to tackle them away from the tentacle coming back to smash them to a pulp. It's like a game of whack-a-mole. When he lets time unfreeze the tentacle slams the ground once before retracting, content to have left him on his ass.

He's not sure who he expects when he turns - probably Kanaya - but goddamn if Jane isn't anywhere near it. He opens his mouth, and before he can gargle out a suave hello she ditches him without a word, her giant red fork of death slung over her shoulder. Seriously, she doesn't even make a peep; just picks a tentacle of her own and starts hacking away.

Alright. No one related to John and Jade should be that quiet. The last time Dave saw him pre-clown breakdown, Jake ran his mouth like it was a presidential campaign trying to talk them into letting him leave.

More help is sweet, though. When Dave looks around to reassess his options, Oriole is hopping around like a human sized orange chicken trying to get off the ground, his wings awkward and out of sync. He somehow achieves decently radical air; his stabbing technique needs work to be up to Strider standards, but he jams the swordkind deep enough into the frill of the tentacle that it's actually not that embarrassing to watch.

Which means the only ones still on the ground are Dave and Jane, and possibly Karkat, who Dave hasn't seen since Jade dropped them here and they all got their asses pulverized by the jelly-go-round.

Shit, he's just going to keep stabbing until he hits something important. There's not as much of this thing as there was of Gl'bgholyb, which means it should be easier to hit a vital organ, right? If this thing has vital organs. Tentacle gods might not follow rules like that. See, this is why they need Rose. Why is she always coincidentally down for the count whenever they have a noodlemonster trying to stomp on their squishy bodies?

Then it starts talking, and of course they can't understand each other, but fucking chaoschatter from Horrorland is perfectly understandable.

And that kind of sucks balls.
The jellyfish's dome splits open and oh wow that's a shitton of teeth. Jellyfish shouldn't have teeth.

This would be so much less of a problem if Jade could tell him what she wanted. As it is, Dave lands directly on top of the jellyfish with zero damn warning and with one foot raised to try to step over Bec. He takes the step and winds up discovering that whatever grimjelly is made of - slime or acid or horrorblood or god only knows what - it's all gelatinous and shit. The jelly's bell bobs under his feet like a water bed and he accidentally-on-purpose uses his half of a sword as a stick to prop himself up when he staggers to the side.

This has the added bonus of looking like he totally went stabmaster all up in here right out of the gate - no one can say otherwise. He will fight them over this. Sure, stabbing appears to be as (not very) effective as anything Jade's done, but it's something. It is definitely something being done. He tries again when that first stab doesn't end with him being swallowed whole by a new maw, planting his feet as solidly as he can and wrenching the sword out to stab down again.

Five seconds too late, it occurs to him that he should be worried about hitting Eridan. Is there even a body to hit anymore? If this is - if he's not wrong, and this is somehow Leviathan, surely it would have kept its tanglebuddy intact? But Rose isn't here for him to ask her, this thing looks nothing like Leviathan did in New York, and all Dave has is a hunch and horrified sense of dread that he's trying to suppress to make him think this is the same thing that possessed Rose.

More goopy jelly parts under the sword as he plunges it down. Black-mottled pale skin glimmers with slime as it seals over the wounds. Well, he thinks, at least if he hits something solid he'll know he's hit Eridan; the bell is wide and deeper than his broken ass fancy sword can probably reach, though, so it might not stick Eridan anywhere important, either. Gotta look on the bright side and all that jazz.

"Yr't ot Indf Derian!" Jade shouts right in his ear. Dave scrambles as he nearly bobs right off the smooth top of the bell; Jade is floating when she stops glowing green, but Kanaya lands hard on both her feet and that sends ripples through the jelly that set Dave further off his center of gravity. As quickly as she appears, Jade teleports out again - and reappears with an armful of orange bird kid, who she punts closer to the center of the bell when a tentacle comes around to try to slap them away.

Oriole looks lost. Kanaya adjusts in seconds and sweeps her chainsaw down to start carving off a slab of Horrorterror near the breach where Jade tore chunks loose. Dave still has no idea what Jade's been saying, but he figures she'd whip him upside the head with a newspaper if he did something wrong, so stabbing is what he'll keep doing. Where did Bec fuck off to? Then again, when has that beast ever done more than act like some passive-aggressive sidekick at Jade's beck and call?

Kanaya lets out a shout, and Dave spins to see a dozen bulging eyes on stalks growing out of the tear where the jadeblood has been cutting. "Where the jadeblood has been cutting. "When did you open up this place, Jeez?" - "Does this look like a place to st and to y o u?"

Kanaya flips her chainsaw sideways and slices the eyes off their freaky stems. It doesn't help. Dave's ready for the jaws to open up underneath them so they can join Eridan in horrific marination. Oriole picks the wrong place to start stabbing or something, because he cuts deep into the center of the bell and dark fluid spurts up and across the front of his shirt, sizzling as it hits and making him almost backpedal to the edge of the bell. Kanaya and Jade power through it when it happens to them - Jade rips off another writhing mass of jello and tentacles as she distracts them from hitting the people on the bell and drenches her arm in it. Whereas when Dave cuts in - oh. The acid bloodbrine hits his jacket and sleeve, for the most part, and stops burning before he can feel any pain, dripping down and leaving nothing but faint discoloration in the fabric.

Shit, these are cool pajamas. He's not sure how long they'd last if he got doused in the stuff, but that's not bad at all. Jade's outfit has gaps but it must be protecting her, too. An extra drop hits the sore spot on the side of his face and burns like a motherfucker, but he wipes it off and ignores the pain. If his and Kanaya's motif is working right, they should all be healing fast anyway.

But no one has hit Eridan yet. They've torn up a good third of the jellyfish's bell between them, counting the parts that have sealed up in their wake, and nothing. How long until they piss off the jellyfish enough that it loses what little patience it has?

"Where is he!?" Jade says, frustrated, echoing Dave's thoughts exactly. It's such a shock to understand her that Dave doesn't react for a split second. "It keeps moving him around in there -"

Before she can float away again, Dave leaves his 1/2bladekind stuck in the Horrorterror and grabs her by the shoulders. "You can talk," Dave says. Not his coolest moment.

Jade blinks - and claps her hands to her cheeks, eyes lighting up with joy. Something's wrong with the backs of her hands, though; they look scabbed and raw in some places - like Dave's face felt, before the sting of the welt died down. Up close, patches of her shirt and shorts look discolored and acid-washed where the gelatinous blood has been splattering her. "You can talk!" she says, delighted, despite the fact that her hands must be in agony.

"You don't know where we're supposed to be stabbing?" Oriole shrieks.

Jade opens her mouth to answer, beaming; then a tendril sweeps across the wide plane of the jellyfish's bell and Jade lifts them out of the way. "H'ow's bo'th e rs o' me ..." the Horrorterror says. Dave wonders where the mouth opened up this time; the vibrations running up his legs make him feel queasy. Oriole staggers when Jade sets him back down, and then his leg shoots out from under him, skidding down a slick patch where Jade's tears and stab wounds have left blood oozing everywhere. Dave darts over and pulls Oriole back upright, with some help from frantically beating wings, before another sigh disrupts the bell again. It's like trying to balance on a sentient water bed, christ - and then the whole thing tilts ninety degrees and drops, twisting and ducking to shake them before - well, we will see how this goes. Take me to Eridan, Becquerel."
Then the jadeblood and Bec blink out of sight.

hanging out, and wraps an arm around it with a grim expression. "I would normally consult Rose out very well," Kanaya admits. She kneels when Bec zaps in from wherever the hellbeast was "Do something about the Horrorterror's body before it falls on anyone, I suppose. I did not think this whistling.

"Sure, why? What can we do to help?" Jade says, putting her fingers to her mouth and then

"Which one?" Dave and Oriole say in unison, and that never bodes well. Dave knows exactly which Jade's, and her sleeves are basically gone. "Do any of you have a plan, now that we can one last time and pulling so hard she tears it out of the bell entirely. Her arm and hand look as stings if I try to dig through it wrecked as Jade's, and her sleeves are basically gone. "Do any of you have a plan, now that we can

Jane shrugs with one arm. "Something about a troll girl being dead."

- or not. Better strike that second one.

"She got better," Bro says, from out of fucking nowhere, and only years of putting up with this shit keeps Dave from twitching like Kanaya and Oriole do. "Still irresponsible as hell, like whatever you're doing up here; nobody's even a little bit dead yet, this might not be Leviathan at all -

Jane shrugs with one arm. "Something about a troll girl being dead."

A trio of smaller, squirming tendrils burst out from the near edge of the bell and try to wrap around Jade's ankle. When one misses, it aims for Kanaya instead, but Jade jerks out of the way and Kanaya brings her chainsaw down, bloodbrine speckling her face as she stoms with a foot to hold the tentacle in place. The third whips out of the way - and a hand snaps it out from the underside of the bell, twisting it in a knot around a wrist and yanking. Jane swings a foot up onto the unsteady umbrella, teeth bared in a grimace as she uses the struggling tendril as a handhold to hoist herself the rest of the way onto their level. "That stings," she says, before twisting the tentacle around her arm one last time and pulling so hard she tears it out of the bell entirely. Her arm and hand look as wrecked as Jade's, and her sleeves are basically gone. "Do any of you have a plan, now that we can speak? I've tried dismembering everything underneath with Feferi and the other Strider's help, but it either regrows them or doesn't appear to care, and I'm plumb out of ideas."

"With Roxy, as far away as I could get them," Jade says.

Bro grunts. "Plan. Someone. Go," Dave says, as Bro appears from wherever he was lurking to hunker down by a tear that's covered with a thin skin of Horrorterror gunk. He doesn't look up when Dave speaks, and there's something missing - hell if Dave can tell what. "I'm all for stabbing but I doubt this thing'll put up with our bullshit for much longer."

Kanaya raises her hand. "I have one. Jade, may I borrow Becquerel?"

"Sure, why? What can we do to help?" Jade says, putting her fingers to her mouth and then whistling.

"Do something about the Horrorterror's body before it falls on anyone, I suppose. I did not think this out very well," Kanaya admits. She kneels when Bec zaps in from wherever the hellbeast was hanging out, and wraps an arm around it with a grim expression. "I would normally consult Rose before - well, we will see how this goes. Take me to Eridan, Becquerel."

Then the jadeblood and Bec blink out of sight.
Dave has two seconds to process the fact that his sister's girlfriend may have just teleported herself into a Horrorterror before creepy green glow starts emanating from under their feet, lighting up the murky inside of the jellyfish's bell which confirms that yeah, Kanaya just did that. He looks at Jade, and Jade looks at him, and they're both stuck on that shared wide-eyed, open-mouthed stare when the Horrorterror makes a really goddamn ominous burbling sound. Jade kicks off the bubbling surface in alarm, holding up her glowing hands but hesitating as she holds them out toward different sections of the bell, confused.

Bro's slow, or maybe Dave is freaked enough that his reflexes already have him turning the timetables and snatching his sword out of the jellyfish before Bro can grab him. No sign of Lil Cal, either, which is great, because that shitty puppet's the last thing Dave wants to deal with while he darts to where the green light is brightest. Oriole is closest to the bright point, but he's too startled to dodge when Bro nabs him and Jane and disappears again. "Stop it! It's Krakken," the grimjelly says. It sounds annoyed rather than pained, and Dave's migraine spikes as the jellyfish's dome starts to roll and toss like a boiling water bed. An ill-timed bubble rises up and trips Dave, and he nearly skids far enough on acid-stung hands to fly off the side. One of his pants' legs rides up and the inside of his calf starts to hurt, too. Another globule presses up as he crawls the last foot or so, and puts his ear to the surface. It makes the weal burn all over again - his face feels like it's on fire -

But he also hears the familiar, gurgling drone of a chainsaw. So that's that. Dave cuts down and wishes his hands were covered for this next part; his hands don't sting as bad as he braces himself for the inside of his calf starts to hurt, too. Another globule presses up as he crawls the last foot or so, and puts his ear to the surface. It makes the weal burn all over again - his face feels like it's on fire -

At the same time, thin white cords burst out from the dark cut and seize Jade's arm. "C'mon man! We'll get you out!" Jade yells, slapping her hands down on either side of the cut. She half-screams, "Kanaya - Hand!" Or maybe she's in too deep without the extra reach of the chainsaw to notice.

"Bec, bring them back out!" Jade yells, slapping her hands down on either side of the cut. She half-floats to keep her legs off the bell, and Dave is mildly jealous of that ability. His hands are covered to the knuckles of his fingers with dark red gloves, but his nails and the skin around them are turning a painful shade of 'caustic burn,' "This dumb, stupid thing! Ugh! Keeps changing inside, how many dimensions does it have -" And with that she plunges her whole arm into the ragged opening. Oh god she's gonna get chainsawed, Dave's seen too many shitty Saw sequels in his lifetime to believe otherwise - "Kanaya?! Bec?"

A too-pale grey claw punches into view to catch Jade by the wrist. One of the nails has flecks of nail polish on it.

At the same time, thin white cords burst out from the dark cut and seize Jade's arm. "We're going to be such good friends. Just a shot. Deair e strik' o'se." Leviathan.

Dave has never paused time faster. He has more than a few seconds to work with before it grates on him, now, but right away he can feel the gears of the timetables straining to twist in a different direction. Jade's right - Dave can stop what's happening here, but there's something about chaos gods that makes them work in squirmry ways. Did it feel this hard to stop before, in New York? He couldn't hold it as long then -

Just get them out.
The white worms are covered in tiny suckers, he sees as he starts chopping at them, digging his fingers into jello that hasn't quite stopped along with the rest of time, twitching as he cuts Jade free. Then he swallows and jams his own hand down to grasp Kanaya's wrist, pale white and luminescent where all her makeup and shit has been scrubbed off, and lets time scream back into motion. "Jade, pull now!"

Jade pulls, her other hand warm as it clamps down on top of Dave's, and Jade is way stronger than Dave would be alone.

At the same time, Bec apparently loses its patience. Dave can't think of any other logical explanation for things going boom again.

The resulting flare of green galaxies busts open the last of the jellyfish's bell in chunky burst. Jade wheels them back away from the burst, oozing sore with Kanaya in tow. Kanaya has something in her arms that might be Eridan-shaped, but they're coated in ooze. The image that burns itself into Dave's retinas before Jade teleports them back down to the ground is Bec hovering in the middle of the gaping wound, alight with green and yellow stars, sitting in midair the same way it would on the ground, and tilting its sightless head to the side to watch them go.

Maybe Jade misjudges, or maybe she just wants to rinse off the horror slime before more of them start melting. They land in the lake and Dave's sneakers slide in the muck, nearly dunking his head underneath. Drowning would be embarrassing, though. He'd never live it down. Letting the swordkind fall back into wherever things go lately when he's not thinking about them hard enough, Dave spits lake water out of his mouth as discreetly as possible and grabs the nearest person. It happens to be Kanaya; she lifts her head to look at him and he totally fails to conceal a hiss at the raw, jade-tinged burn that covers most of her face. "Not my best plan," she says.

"You should have let me do it," Jade says, worriedly. She dunked herself in the water, too, which means hey, they all look like drowned rats together, and she squeezes water out of her hair with both hands before sloshing over to them.

"I've recovered from grimlight burns before. I thought the principle would be the same." Kanaya shrugs, and heaves the Eridan lump up so his head and horns are above water. "He was in there longer, though."

Dave puts his hand out to check, cautiously raising the volume. He thought he'd tuned out the crazy song, but now he can't hear it at all regardless of what he does. Must have timed out or something - which thank fucking god John, or whatever. Dave is a man of refined musical tastes, and if he has to hear that shit again in his life he'll probably end up stricken deaf. "We have a healing motif on," he reports, rubbing the side of his face absently. "And I don't think any other music is messing with it, anymore, so it should be working for however long the music plays."

Jade sighs in relief and shakes out her hair. The ends trail through the water, so it doesn't help much. "I - oh, crap," she says, turning. "I think the Horrorterror is falling over."

It is. Dave whistles under his breath as the sagging bell collapses in on itself. Jane wasn't kidding about her and Feferi and Bro trying to cut the tentacles out from underneath - the grimjelly's bell only has a few straggling tendrils left that go limp under it, before the massive thing flutters and falls to the ground with a deceptively light-looking droop. When it actually hits the ground, the jelly is heavy enough to make the ground jolt and the water in the lake judder, but then it lies still. "Is anyone underneath it? I was only concerned in case someone ended up crushed." Kanaya asks.

"No, Feferi and Jane and Oriole and Bro are - over that aways," Jade says, pointing helpfully. Oriole stands out nice and orange next to the new hole where part of the lab used to be, with Feferi and Jane standing a measured three feet apart as they eye each other's specibi. Dave can feel Bro's shaded stare from here. It feels like an impending ass kicking. Well, if Bro's gonna be all pissy about Dave pulling a successful dodge for once in his life, too bad. "Dave, I really don't know how to say this, buttt...is something...off about your bro?" Jade asks, scratching the side of her head.

"Who, Bro? When's something not weird about that dick?" Dave knows what she means though. He can't put his finger on it either, but he'll reserve time to freak out about it when there aren't witnesses. "Just ignore him. We beat a Horrorterror and he barely did jackshit. This is monumental. I can never let him live it down." If he focuses on gloating about that, he'll be alright.

Jade rolls her eyes at him. "Whatever, Dave. Let's just get these guys to the medical team." She sets a careful hand on Kanaya's shoulder to help the jadeblood haul Eridan the rest of the way out of the water. "Come on, let's find Doctor Lalonde, too, before he gets up -"

"W'ell, that was fun."

Jade has a gun drawn in a half a second; Dave whips Caledffyffyyfhylyl or whatever back into his hand, swallowing terror and schooling his face as smooth as he can make it when Eridan raises his head. Or, you know, Leviathan raises its head. Kanaya pulls away, not as graceful with water up to her chest as she would be normally, and the huddled body lets her go, considering them all with odd eyes. Eridan's sclera are mostly pale white, which seems wrong, but the glowworms in his pupils and the cold white fire dripping from them the same as they would have been weeks ago on Rose's face. The slime that covered him and Kanaya hid the fact that his already greyish skin has gone a distinct shade of grimdark. Fucking hell. "Let him go," Kanaya says.

Dave tightens his grip on the hilt of his sword, ready for Leviathan-in-Eridan to start firing magic bullshit at them, but it just lifts Eridan's mottled claws and cracks his neck loud enough for the sound to be terrifying. "M'sten Tl, ght tenn gtu. W' e s'ha'll n'ot t' pr'ub le, wit'h th' s dge a a a b ud d' y ho' s e m' i n'd i s f a r m o' re su' t ed to u' s. " It contorts its mouth into a thin smile, brackish water drooling out to drip into the lake water. Dave's backed out to where his torso is mostly above water, but now his legs feel exposed - he might be imagining the icy chill spreading out from Eridan's slouched body.

How much would gimp pollution lower Momlond's property values, anyway? "Bu' t' a n' t' e res' t' in g' a m, e , s'no n' e t h' e l' e s' s."

The barrel of Jade's current rifle looks weird. Like, Dave knows nothing about guns except don't get shot and basic level stuff like that, but he's pretty sure most guns don't have battery cartridges that glow white hot like lightning. "If you don't leave Eridan alone right now, I get to test this on you. I believe Eridan could probably take it, but you're probably screwed, buster!"

That's a weird way to word it, even for Jade. Whatever. The Horrorterror gives a liquid blink.

"U_n't l' The " Ti'n a' t' Recess, o' n in g', t' hen," Leviathan says, with enough reverberating voices that Dave staggers. It's still smiling, smiling at him, and he's not at all reassured when the grimdark aura leeches out of Eridan and into the lake. The last of the sticky mist and humidity in the air clears out almost as soon as Leviathan does, sucking down into a dark circle that's just barely visible through the churned up silt of the lake. Jade and Kanaya both shudder, and all three of them nearly let Eridan's unconscious body fall into the water. Water trolls can breathe underwater if they're asleep, right?

Fuck, Dave has no idea. But they manage to collect themselves and have Jade teleport them back into the lab with a minimum of disasters, so that's cool. Locating the doctors turns out to be a challenge because that Equius guy has gone god tier, and his voidy thing leaves Jade flummoxed when they get too close, but it means a no Horrorterror zone that Dave trusts more than he does the idea that Leviathan would just bug off without a fight.

Which leaves Dave plenty of time to avoid thinking about the obvious.

Leviathan could have knocked him down whenever it wanted.

Why didn't it?

--turntechGodhead [TG] opened memo on board has anyone else noticed that pesterchum keeps fucking up the time stamps like wtf at --:--:-- --
TG: srsly
TG: the time stamps
TG: has anyone been keeping track of them
CG: SOME OF US HAVE BIGGER PROBLEMS, DAVE.
CG: HONKPROBLEMS.
TG: okay man whatever you say have fun with that TG: but anyway is everyone in some state of being alive
TG: also show of hands how many people died at some point today
TG: and rose youre up right theres problems
GG: i'm alive! and so is bec!
TT: As am I. Though I feel as though I've had elder gods tapdancing through my frontal lobe with soccer cleats.
CC: Sames 38(
TG: yeah thats cause guess which horrorterror that was out there
TG: leviathan is the answer you dont get to guess sorry
TT: Hold on, Leviathan took Eridan as well? I knew it reached out to me, but I thought - I suppose I assumed his own Horrorterror would have taken precedent, there. You're positive, Dave?
TG: yeah im coming to you with kanaya so we can discuss this shit GG: it did call you 'dear rose' or something like that :(
EB: and you guys are sure you're all okay? Leviathan took out a city last time!
TG: were all vaguely in the EQ zone i think so were probs okay but hey maybe it was having an off day
AT: i, uH, dON'T REMEMBER DYING, AND I'M ALIVE NOW, wHICH YOU PROBABLY GUESSED. SO, THAT'S THAT, GA: Present And Accounted For. I'm Glad You're Well Tavros. Where Have You Been?
AT: wITH ARADIA, SHe'S ALIVE TOO, bY THE WAY,
TT: I suspected as much. And I assume she had you well away from the festivities here?
EB: oh right! alive here, too!
EB: and uh...
TG: well obviously youre alive EB
TG: whatup
EB: nothing! everything is fine! calm and fine!
TG: okay so note to self bother john later until he talks
EB: ugh...
GG: ohhh! just so everyone knows, there's a section of the roof nearer to the lobby that might be about to fall in. this place isn't very structurally stable anymore in some places. watch your heads!
TC: honk
CG: YOU STOP THAT
TG: srsly dude go back into your not murderous coma or whatever TG: (honkproblems huh)
CG: (SHUT UP DAVE.)
TC: :o(
AT: did THINGS REALLY GO THAT BADLY WRONG? i FEEL LIKE I'VE BEEN OUT OF THE LOOP, oR SOMETHING, GG: you have nooo idea :
TG: where the shit is everyone else are those douchebags ignoring my memos
TG: i already knew all of you people were alive except like tavros this memo has achieved nothing
TG: shits rude as hell

--

Terezi catches up to Vriska before she can cross state lines. Issues of jurisdiction have always been one of Terezi's biggest pet peeves; if crime was afoot and she could deal with it better than some piddly scrub halfway across town, of course she would jump in to make sure justice was served. They're in Washington, but being able to fly past mountains rather than having to navigate winding roads means that they've gone farther than Terezi would like. She can smell the baked concrete and gasoline of a town underneath her feet instead of dense forest, now, but it's not Seattle. Vriska's making south and southeast, instead.

What annoys her more, though, is the fact that Vriska is stupid enough to fall for the exact same thing that got her killed the last time they went through this. It's not even the sexy kind of hate - the longer she thinks about it, checking and rechecking the branches of possibility that Vriska's actions could lead to as she zooms to catch up with the other troll, the more Terezi realizes Vriska isn't worth the hate. Vriska is like a blueberry-flavored insect throwing itself against the bug zapper of fate repeatedly because she thinks she's always right, and that's not hateful. That's just sad.

So Terezi climbs higher, and when she finally sniffs the cerulean blue glitter nail polish of Vriska's pixie wings down below, she drops like a dragon onto her prey, planting her foot between Vriska's wings and slamming her into the nearest tree.

It must be a pretty piss-poor excuse for a tree; the trunk snaps in two with a wrenching, splintering crack, and Vriska swears and snarls as they tumble and land in the middle of a parking lot. Vriska's elbow comes up and smashes into Terezi's nose, blinding her with the overwhelming wash of her own blood, but Terezi can sense the minds around them, faint blobs of mental color where humans and trolls back away from the fallen tree and run toward the doors of the store. At least half of them probably mean to call the police, who will in turn notify the FVRT and the legislacerators, and unless Terezi drags Vriska out of here in a hurry, she can see exactly how this ends with them arrested in the most humiliating sort of way. "I knew you'd be the one to follow me," Vriska says, pseudo-casually. "You can always count on Terezi Pyrope to be annoying as hell!"

"You crippled Tavros," she comments. It looks like whatever weirdness scrambled their words earlier stayed in the valley where it belonged. Vriska's fist knots in her hair, and Terezi rips free with such force an entire chunk of hair comes out. It hurts, but who cares? "You killed Aradia. Then you killed Tavros outright, and thought it would be a great idea to fly off and go face the big bad boss all by yourself."

She floats back, her foot tapping on the ground as she gets out of arms' reach when Vriska lunges at her. Vriska's mind shifts again, a throbbing mass of golden light that thinks it's being sly, and Terezi uses her cane to whap Vriska upside the chin before she can start stealing luck from everyone around them. Everything is clearer now - Terezi could deduce what people might do and what may result from those actions before, but resurrecting as a god tier gives her so much more evidence to work with!
"Are you seriously going to start being pissy about that all over again?" Vriska says, catching herself on the hood of a truck by her elbows. While she's reeling, Terezi blows her nose and pinches it once the worst of the blood has sluiced out down the front of her face. Slowly her sense of smell adjusts to the drip of blood and starts picking up other details again. "That was - ugh -" Terezi jabs her in the knee with the cane, but it fails to make Vriska stop "- that was another universe! Another life! They're both fine, now!"

"Yeah," Terezi agrees, leaning on her cane as she takes in the cars around them. The tree's unfortunate doom has clogged up this entire aisle of parking spaces, and the beep of someone honking furiously is almost drowned out by a car alarm from a minty fresh green minivan. "That doesn't mean anyone has to forgive you. Especially when you're trying to get us all killed by floating off on a power high, again." She lifts and bangs her cane back down sharply for emphasis before raising it to point at Vriska. "So! The question is one of intent! Are you deliberately endangering the lives of everyone around you, or do you just not care? Speak now, or forever hold your peace!"

"That's for weddings, not trials!"

Terezi snorts. "Hah! Says the one who has never been a member of the justice system."

"Lay off, Terezi!" Vriska flips from defensive to aggressive at the speed of light, lifting her hands and bringing them down in a burst of power. There are eight blue dice lined up between her claws, the Fluorite Octet. For a moment, Terezi feels six sweeps old again, young and even more dangerous than she has been in this lifetime.

But young or old, past or present, Terezi knows for a fact that she couldn't have caught up with Vriska unless Vriska let her. Vriska had half of a game session to adjust to her wings and her enhanced Thief of Light capabilities, treating the god tiers just as she did the echeladder - something to be beaten faster than anyone else around. Terezi killed herself today only halfway sure she'd come back in one piece, and the wings on her back are entirely new.

They're only here because Vriska likes dramatic showdowns. Because with all the luck Vriska has stolen along the way, she can make those dice land whichever way she wants.

And beneath it all, Terezi can sense a familiar sort of (almost) all-seeing omniscience trained on them. Creepy Mr Vanilla Milkshake must be getting a real eyeful.

Terezi strikes with her cane, quick as a wink, and raps Vriska's hand smartly so that four of the dice clatter out of her grasp. With Vriska startled, the dice land 1-2-1-1, numbers that have no significant associations. Vriska throws the rest of the dice at Terezi's face, and they explode into a smokescreen right under her nose, dense and foggy enough to obscure the physical senses. Not the best roll, but not bad either. The dicekind will return to Vriska's hands any second for a new roll.

Before Vriska's next strike can land, Terezi springs to safety, nostrils flaring as she makes a break for clear air. The honking car sits in her way, and Terezi smoothly backflips on top of the hood and then the roof, her wings fluttering as they scramble to balance her. She recognizes the scent of a sharp blue curve as Vriska buries a newly summoned swordkind through the hood where Terezi kicked off. But it's only the sword. Must have rolled 4-4-4-4-4-4-4-4. "Getting sloppy, Serket!" Terezi calls, which only irritates Vriska more.

While she dodges and turns, though, Terezi's Mind is elsewhere. The two easiest, most likely ways this fight could end stand out very clearly in her mind's eye, because she's seen them play out before. Either Vriska escapes because Terezi can't bear to finish her, and leads whatever monster Doc Scratch has back down on the heads of the unsuspecting humans and trolls back at the lab - or - Another roll of the dice, blue stone chiming as the fluorite skitters across the pavement. Three end up going wild and land in the shadows under someone's car, and the five Terezi can see roll another number that's not quite good enough: 4-1-2-2-5.

Before, Terezi knew almost all of Vriska's favorite rolls like she knew Alternian law. Her memory of all the combinations and their powers rusted after all these years of Vriska having to make due with other specibi. That roll might not be incredibly powerful, but Vriska's quick to use the sonic boom that erupts to push Terezi off the car. It sends her careening backwards almost to the edge of the parking lot.

Let Vriska go, and watch everyone die, or -

Terezi can't concentrate. When Vriska tries to push her luck by jumping after her with the dice rolled into knuckledusters, the tealblood uses her cane and her wings to swing up and roundhouse kick her in the face. "Stop blaming me when I'm the only one who tries to accomplish anything around here!" Vriska shouts, glowering with an eye that's just starting to swell and bruise around the edges. "There's an evil guy trying to end the world? Then we should stop whining and go stop him! Running away on a meteor, hiding away in a valley - you guys never stop being losers!"

Because it ends with us dead, Terezi wants to scream. It ends in death, or it ends in - well, death. Vriska can't just stop being Vriska - Terezi can't think of a single time Vriska has tried to change herself or take responsibility for her actions, and genuinely meant it. Last time, she wanted to settle it with the flip of a coin. But on either path, Scratch wins. Terezi can see it now; he's not even trying to hide it from her, the smug criminal mastermind. He knows she knows he's watching, his reaching mind smugly serene as he waits for her to make her choice. If her Mind sense is a branching network of teal, he's the noxious green highlighter lighting up her predictions for what Vriska could unleash if someone doesn't stop her.

Even with all the best intentions in the world, Vriska always has to be stopped.

Terezi seizes Vriska by the hair, this time, and slams her facefirst down against the curb. "It's never that simple," she hisses instead. Vriska flares up and somehow finds the right angle to hook around Terezi's leg to reverse their positions. Terezi expects that lucky break, though; she headbutts Vriska in the chin when the ceruleanblood leans down to gloat, and jams the head of her cane right in Vriska's solar plexus. The spasm takes the breath out of Vriska for a moment.

No, Terezi can't let Vriska go. She never could. That branch of possibility withers as she makes the conscious choice to discard it. Which just leaves -

She flips them one last time, ignoring Vriska's attempt to steer her off-balance by yanking her horns to the side. All it takes is a practiced flick of her wrist to reverse the canekind and draw the blade, with inevitability weighing down her wrist and her knowledge of troll anatomy telling her exactly where to stab.

And Terezi stops, the point of the blade pressing just through the soft fabric of Vriska's shirt. It nicks skin; she can smell the tang of blood, a pinprick of blue through the sunshine of the shirt.

"Are you going to back me into this corner again?" she demands. Her claws are shaking on the hilt of the cane, one palm slamming down to pin Vriska's wrist against the street, and the sensory overload is almost too much. She has barely drawn blood, but the memory of sunshine yellow staining sickly, nauseating green as runnels of blue blood poured out of a chest wound is right there in the front of her mind, justice turned rancid by regret.

How much can Vriska remember when Terezi stabbed her in the back? Enough to make her freeze under Terezi, staring at the cane without a hint of disbelief or sneering in her wide blue eyes. They both know Terezi can do it, has done it.

Let Vriska go, and watch everyone die, or kill Vriska and let them live -

"Terezi?"

- or talk her out of it. Or knock Vriska unconscious, drag her back to the lab, and let someone else handle her. Hell, maybe Terezi could join Vriska in flying toward their doom. Terezi already knows that Vriska has the charisma to win Terezi over, if she talks long enough. Stupid, sexy Vriska. They're each as bad as each other, so they should maybe call Sollux and have him inflict his strange, irritable mediation on them before they make a mistake they can't take back.

There's not just two choices. The world isn't that simple.

Terezi breathes in, and breathes out, and lets the cane fall to the side, her claws slowly curling back into a fist that she rests over the spot of blood. "I'm not going to kill you," she says, her voice strange in her ears. She has to swallow around a lump in her throat that she doesn't remember forming, so maybe that's why. "I'm not going to kill you."

Vriska still looks frozen, eyes flicking between Terezi's face and the cane lying on the ground. Her heart churns along under Terezi's hand, and it occurs to Terezi that she knows the exact sound Vriska would make if she had stabbed her.

Then Vriska breathes out, shaking her wild hair out of her face. "Uh. Huh." She glances briefly to the side, and Terezi lets her mind drift that direction as well, to take in the people watching them from a (relatively) safe distance. Well, at least the prosecution will have plenty of witnesses if they really do get arrested. Terezi would hate to be the defendant against a prosecutor with nothing solid to go on. The professional secondhand embarrassment would have been awful. "Are we gonna make out now?"

"No." Terezi pushes herself up and puts out a claw for Vriska to take, helping her up with barely a few inches between them. Unfortunately, it's definitely not hate that Terezi's feeling right now. Ugh. "We're going back."

"But whyyyyyyyyy?" She's back to whining, so the worst of the danger has probably passed.

Before she can get sneaky about and start thinking felonious thoughts, Terezi claps both hands on Vriska's cheeks and kisses her. Their noses bash together and Vriska tries to gnaw on her lips immediately. When that tactic fails, she tries to feel up one of Terezi's horns, but that's not a hate-worthy offense. Not at the moment, anyway.

Thankfully, Vriska is a violently self-centered miscreant, not oblivious - about a minute in she appears to register the change and surfaces for air, staring at Terezi accusingly. "You flipped on me," she says, shocked.

"This is awkward. We should probably not talk about this in front of random strangers," Terezi says. It seems like common sense, but when has Vriska ever had anything like common sense. "Or else the whole thing will escalate and we'll end up arrested for public indecency on top of everything else, and that's not how I want to go, Vriska. My spotless record is already tainted by vigilantism and destruction of public property, but you can't take this from me."

Vriska shuts her mouth, then opens it again. She looks confused with a hint of sly curiosity, and that combination is about as sinister as if she were outright scheming. "You don't hate me," she says, slowly. "You lo-

Before she can finish, Terezi wraps an arm around her waist and dips Vriska deeply enough that only their brand new powers of flight and levitation keep them from collapsing on the ground again. This time when Terezi pulls back Vriska's face is flushed blue and she looks woozy. Which is better than 'scheming to provoke Terezi and then take off again' any day of the week. "Public indecency," she reminds the other troll.

Vriska nods along blankly and says, "Yeah? Sure." Which gives Terezi confirmation that Vriska has made the final transition from staring confusion to a kissed out muddle.

And she's not going to die.

"I said, no." Terezi pats Vriska on the cheek, stoops to retrieve her cane and sheath the blade, and then floats up into the air until her wings take over. "We're going back," she says, pointedly, unable to repress a wide, toothy grin. "If you try to take on the boss battle right now no one will be there to admire your brave dumbness, so you might as well wait until everyone else is ready to go. And if you can't beat me back to the lab, you have to apologize to Aradia and Tavros before we make out."

That last comment is a risky choice, but it pays off when Vriska's eyes light up with the fire of competition. Maybe challenging her into a contest isn't the best idea for keeping things not-rivalry, but Vriska has buttons and Terezi knows how to press them. When Vriska rockets past her in a cloud of choking blue sparkles, she's zooming back the way they came with a wild laugh.

"Hey! Move this tree, you inconsiderate fucks!" the person in the car yells. Terezi looks at the tree, and then back at the man, and then up at Vriska.

"I'm a legislacerator. I don't do clean up," she informs him. "You should probably call them and complain."

"I will!" the man snaps. He already has his phone out. "Don't think that I won't!"

"Good man. Always do your civic duty by reporting crimes and other weird goings-on." Then Terezi trails after Vriska, and doesn't look back.

---

"Tell me more about you," Rose says.

She may simply think it very loudly, because Roxy does not answer right away. The other girl no longer has a death grip on Rose's hand, so clarity of thought trickles back in over time, and Rose clears her throat and asks again.

"W'dyah want to know?" Roxy says, perking up a little. She stops worrying at her fingernails with a gnawing tooth to look at Rose. "I think me and Di already covered most of training and tha brainwashing thing."

They're outside, in a narrow copse of trees a ways distant from the lab. Rose stays prone on her back, resting a void bracer against her forehead as she turns her gaze back up to the sky just barely visible through the branches. A faint green tinge to the sky had proven, upon sending Roxy to investigate, to be a Becquerel shaped object floating in the middle of the air and, for all intents and purposes, apparently content to stay there. The hanging mist cleared rather abruptly a short while ago, one of the first signs that the Horrorterror incursion had passed; her phone occasionally buzzes against her sternum as news comes in through Pesterchum and the rare email. In her void-induced stupefaction she missed most of the confusion over communications breaking down, and now a solid thirty percent of the messages she's received appear to be private pestering from Dave. He doesn't take it well when he can't converse with others; with that and the Horrorterror, he is possibly as afraid as Dave is ever willing to admit to being.

And then there is John, who has been developing terrifyingly creative problem solving abilities whilst Rose has lain about trying not to listen to the susurrus dying off in the back of her mind, and Karkat, who has deemed Rose the only person in the world he trusts to tell him if he is currently the victim of a Punk'd episode. When she informs him that he isn't, he goes abruptly silent, which she takes to mean he is freaking out verbally rather than textually.

Messaging Gamzee only earns her a :o) and a vague, nudging headache in reply. It feels like a question - not openly hostile, but inquisitive, nonetheless. Given the state of her mental defenses right now, she hastily closes the chat before he can delve too deeply. He's not subtle at all, but she doesn't know the extent of his abilities, particularly at a distance, and is quietly relieved when the curious presence pulls back from her mind without pressing.

At least she can think clearly enough to be worried. The fact that Gamzee muddled their minds for almost an entire afternoon, presumably before activating that fraymotif, is alarming. Not subtle, no, but strong enough that subtlety didn't matter. Even with all of Aradia's ominous hints...

"Tell me about you," Rose says, for a third time, rolling her wrist a little so that the bracer's cool metal rests over her eyes. Her eyelashes brush the metal when she blinks and she can't see much around it, but the pressure seems to help her focus. Some of it, she'll already know - a refresher could never hurt.

"Hmmm." Roxy huffs and lies down next to Rose with a faint thud. Almost immediately Rose feels something tug on her hair and pull a strand across her upper lip. She smiles and blows it off, while Roxy chatters. "Well, idk. I guess...I like pink! And blue. I used to sleepwalk a lot, before Doctor Die put extra locks on the door at night. So maybe I still do, but I don't leave the room?" A jingle sounds, and Roxy cuts off to tap at her phone. "Dirk is bringing Jakey to come sit with us, issat cool?"

"Of course." Rose has the last email from her mother open on her phone; most of the areas of the lab complex they reopened for habitation are either gone or structurally unstable, and while sensors indicate the amount of void in the area have increased to almost surpass previous levels, Rue doesn't want anyone venturing into the damaged sections until she has the ward generator operational again. There's too much risk that Equius's new, unknown void abilities might fail. Mother dear would naturally prefer the relative surety of her own machines.

It would be wise to move closer to Equius, but they're still waiting for Rose's head to stop spinning. John and Karkat are somewhere near the blast zone; having them shift Gamzee away from the damage or closer to Equius would be asking for trouble, either way. Stalemate, stalemate, Rose's mind whispers, and she is almost completely certain the thought is her own, whole and entire. She may dare to sit up, soon.

"I'm thinking about trying to practice shootin' things again," Roxy goes on, rolling over from her side onto her stomach. Rose moves her wrist so she can see again, smiling and feeling tired deep in the recesses of her brain. "Not, like, people! Just to see if my hands keep being shaky. Janey-babe doesn't talk much, but I know she wants to go after Die and if I can't shoot straight..."

"You all are bound and determined to go the revenge route, then?" Rose asks, dry as chalk, without enough humor to match Roxy's brightness. Damn. "Not that I blame you, of course. If Jane wants help, trust me, I can think of at least four people who would be more than willing to assist."
Roxy nods, chin brushing over her arms as she folds them into a prop for her head. "'Fter what he did to John, I totes get it." With some maneuvering, the girl angles a thumbnail close enough to start chewing at the cuticle again. Not the best habit, but Rose doesn't have the energy to play mother. "I've...been thinkin' about something, though. Promise you won't tell Jane or Jake?"

Oh ho. Intriguing. "But I could discuss it with Dirk?"

Roxy rolls her eyes, kicking a foot up and idly swinging it. "He already knows, sort of. I talk to him about this stuff. Since we couldn't talk about it with J'n'J at all, for a long time." She pushes up a little, glances around to ensure the coast is clear, and then lowers back down to whisper in Rose's ear. "I think I might...not bow out again."

Rose blinks. She tries parsing the sentence again. Despite the lack of slurred words, however, this has to be the most incomprehensible thing Roxy has said all day. "Come again?"

Roxy bites down hard enough on her nail that this time Rose has to intervene, flicking Roxy with a finger until she stops and giggles nervously. "In the great romance showdown, I bowed out," she says, tucking her thumb into her fist and not quite meeting Rose's eyes. "On account of, Jane was my best friend and Dirk was also my best friend, so I had multiple conflicts of interest as far as the Jake caper went, and I didn't want to get in the middle of it."

Oh, that. "And now that you all have your own minds again, you're going to challenge for the rights to date Jake?"

"Uh, no." Roxy rolls over and away, hugging her stomach as she pouts at the sky. "I think...I think Jane is over all the Jake hype, from what she's been saying. S'why I'm nervous."

Rose catches on. "I see," she says, with her best sage, all-knowing smile. "Jane."

It is worth the elbow jab and the hissed, "Shaddup!" to see Roxy turn a bright shade of scarlet across her cheeks. When Rose can't suppress a chuckle, the red spreads to Roxy's ears, and when Dirk and Jake arrive - coming at them from an angle perpendicular to where the lab lies, Rose notes - the crunch of their shoes in the undergrowth tips Roxy off in time to cover her burning face with her hands. "Not a word, got it?"

Rose mimes zipping her mouth, still smiling, and tosses away the theoretical key. Then she busies herself with locating a convenient tree stump to prop herself up on; Jake looks freaked when she turns a smile on him, pulling at his collar and glancing at Dirk for guidance, so she must be radiating smug knowingness. "Er. Hullo, Rox. Hello Ms. Rose. I thought I had my noggin mostly back in order, but - this tentacle nonsense, was that normal?" Jake asks.

"Middling," Rose offers, brushing grass out of her hair. Her phone slips down the front of her shirt to land in her lap, and when she flips it in her hand she sees the screen in a mass of red text again, interspersed with green and blue and the occasional group memo notification. "That is to say, we have dealt with Horrorterrors before, with more regularity than the average being, but it's really not something we look forward to on a daily basis."

"Right." Jake looks faintly baffled.

EB: and that's basically how that happened.
EB: please help.
TT: I don't know if there is anyone on Earth who can help you now, John.
EB: rose! come on! me and karkat can't even talk this out because you know who is right there.
TT: The Dark Lord hath returned?
TT: Wait, where are you now?
EB: bathroom! it's my only escape!
EB: he doesn't need to read the phone screen to read over your shoulder!
TT: I hate to say this, but I believe, my dear John, you may be royally fucked.
TT: Also - couldn't he just appear in the bathroom?
EB: eeeeeeeeeeeEEEEEEEEEEEEEEEEGHGHHGHG
EB: DON'T PUT IDEAS IN HIS HEAD!
TT: In the absence of any other options, I'd suggest trying Kanaya on your next restroom break. If you had somehow managed to flip this whole thing grey, she would naturally be the best source of information. Despite that, she may at least have some tips on how to handle two people in one quadrant. For however long this arrangement lasts....
EB: I thought Kanaya only ever had an ashen crush on Vriska and Terezi, and they shot her down :/
TT: My advice is not to say that to her face.
TT: Really, I have absolutely no experience with accidental threesomes. Suddenly I feel unadventurous compared to you.
TT: Perhaps Kanaya and I need to spice things up.
EB: haha. you're trying to freak me out like i'm dave. it's not working.
EB: mostly because i'm already at maximum freak out weasel capacity over here.
TT: Fair enough.

TG: and so im just saying
TG: shit was wack
TG: like how far would a horrorterror go just to fuck with people
TG: would it lose on purpose just to be a dick in some roundabout way TT: Kanaya and I need to spice up our love life.
TG: rose wtf
TG: i dont want to hear this TT: It just occurred to me that with John's recent foray into an emotional ménage à trois, the bar has been raised.
TG: why the shit did you make me read those words just now
TG: wheres gamzee when you need him
TT: Do you really want to know?
TG: no
TT: To answer your question, there are few limits to what a Horrorterror could choose do, if it got enough of its hive to agree to it.
TT: I am worried, though. The last time Leviathan played the long game, it spent years wearing me down. Unless we do something drastic, the world doesn't have years left.
TT: Which means that if it is, conceivably, dicking with you...we should be concerned about more immediate consequences. You said you were with Kanaya?
TG: yeah
TT: I'm thinking we could incorporate blood in some fashion. Ask her opinion for me.
TG: no fuck this im not talking to either of you
TG: im out
TG: jesus fucking herbert walker christ on a jelly donut
TT: Go stay with Equius instead. Kanaya and I can join you there shortly.
TG: are you doing this on purpose
TG: you are the worst
TT: Just stay near Equius, brother dear. For your own safety.
TG: for the sake of my untainted goddamn ears more like TG: youre evil rose

GA: Why Did Dave Just Look At Me As Though I Was Troll Satan Incarnate And Then Tear The Door Off Its Hinges Running Back Into The Building?
TT: I haven't the faintest, my dear.
TT: But if you're outside now, we'll come to meet you halfway.
GA: Rose.
TT: Yes, dear?
GA: Why Is John Asking Me Advice On How To Manage A Threesome?
GA: I Mean Sure I Can Give Him Some Pointers For How It Would Work In An Auspicious Triad
But Honestly I Am Beginning To Suspect Shenanigans.
GA: The Perpetrator Of Which I Am Currently Typing Messages To.
TT: Very strange. I cannot imagine how you came to that conclusion.
GA: Quite The Mystery.
GA: If I Direct Him To Websites Full Of Questionable Pale Porn, It Will Be On Your Head.
TT: I'm sure it wouldn't be anything Karkat hasn't already seen.

Rose allows herself a small laugh. Some people might describe the laugh as 'evil,' or 'wicked.' But that would be silly.

"Why is she laughing like that?" Jake asks. He sounds concerned.

"Kinda don't care," Dirk says, but he is now eyeing her speculatively as well. While Rose busied herself sowing entertainment in the ranks, Roxy has somehow finagled Dirk's sunglasses off his face and onto her own, revealing a thin, angular face similar enough to Ambrose's to give Rose a moment of hesitation - younger, less weathered, but still. The sense of dissonant recognition isn't as strong with Jake and Jane, most likely because the only pictures Rose has seen of James Harley and Joanna Egbert were from their later years, long after age had its way with them. "Unless shit's about to go down."

Time to try standing. A splinter of wood digs at Rose's palm as she boosts herself up with the tree stump as a crutch, but doesn't quite break the skin. "Oh, you know what they say," she says, "another day, another catastrophe. But things appear to be settled, for now. I'm going down to meet up with Kanaya. Will you all join me?"

"M stickin' with you, girlie," Roxy says, pouting at Dirk reproachfully when the sunglasses reappear on his face without warning.

"We will hang back here in a tactical position until Doctor Lalonde gives an all-clear," Dirk says. For a second, Rose wonders if he includes Roxy in that 'we'; but when Roxy gets to her feet and brushes off her pants, Dirk doesn't move to stop either of them from leaving. "Later."

-

GG: well i'm shuffling some debris to keep it from falling on people, but i'm also keeping space tabs on eridan now. he's mostly unconscious.
GG: but equius makes it hard to tell :/
TG: yeah im in here jellyfish troll is down for the count
TG: equius is also here and ignoring my memo
TG: i can hear your alerts going off dude
TT: Kanaya, Roxy, and I will join you shortly. Dave. And Jade, can you check the valley over manually? You may want to retrieve your wolf creature, naturally.
TG: oh hell no where is john TG: im not sticking around here for you two to dick with me
GG: is bec still up there? i don't know what the heck is up with that thing!
GG: grah!
GG: also, uh...what is up with john?
GG: he's acting really weird and evasive when i pester him!
TT: He and Karkat are joint-moirailing Gamzee out of murdering people to turn them god tier.
GG: wait what.
TT: So yes, he's panicking a little. Unfortunately, keeping Gamzee from freaking out in turn is also an issue that needs to be taken into consideration for the foreseeable future.
GG: are they even allowed to do that Double Bond?
GG: i mean - like - what?!?!
TG: seriously out of everything that happened today that has to be the weirdest
TG: there was a huge netherworld jellyfish outside and yet
TT: It seems to have come about due to a combination of John not knowing how to keep his hugs to himself, and Karkat having shooshed Gamzee in a previous life.
GG: oh. wow. :O
TT: Have you sensed anything of Vriska or Terezi, by the way?
GG: yeah, they're back!
GG: and also oh no, they're back :(
GA: Why Oh No?
GG: they're back and they've been like bunnies in springtime.
GG: which means i'm having to be very careful to not notice...things
GC: 4H4! 4 VOY3UR 1N OUR M1DST!
GG: i didn't!
TG: oh right! jake and dirk are outside. haven't seen janey yet but shes' textin me.
CC: $(e's with me! 38)
TG: alright cool moving right along
CT: D---> We are well
CG: YOUR FONT COLOR CHOICES ARE AWFUL AND YOU SHOULD FEEL AWFUL.
CT: D---> E%cuse me. I'm trying to work on that. It is a recent development.
AG: Well, work on it 8etter! I think I liked it more when you were a pompous freak with control issues - when'd you lose your 8ack8one?!
CT: D---> I do not have time for this. You are a menace, even with the best of intentions, and I refuse to engage with you or Makara
CT: D---> You are both...far too dangerous. I remember now. Additionally, I died today. For the record
AG: So did I, genius!!!!!!! So hop off your creepy high horse and stop holding dum8 grudges!
TG: kay you two can go back to whatever you were doing before
TG: please
CT: D---> I need to concentrate, anyway. No doubt this whole conversation will dissolve into pointless f00lishness any moment
CG: SERIOUSLY BOTH OF YOU CAN LEAVE.

The Heir of Void sits perched on a stool across the room from her. Difficult as it is to look directly at Equius, now, Rose makes a valiant effort with her sight as enhanced as she can manage. A black hole that fills almost all the room where Nepeta and Eridan lay unconscious, and the amount of void swirling around the blueblood in the corner could eclipse the sun. The difference between his aura of nothing and the nothingness Rose associates with Roxy and her mother is palpable. As she thinks it, Equius's dark shades turn toward her, more inscrutable than a Strider, and the dark blue hood that drapes down his back shifts as he hunches his shoulders. Rose averts her eyes before vertigo can set in.

She can bear through it. She doesn't even want to think about what a mess her mindscape might be right now; she'll sweep it up later, after she's had more time to sleep and adjust. Right now, they've reached some kind of impasse, with the potential sources of misfortune and ill luck mostly neutralized or under guard, and that buys them some time. The one person they can't control or account for is Aradia - but Aradia did intimate that there would be events today, and Rose plans to heed her cryptic warnings much more carefully in the future.

She'll hold off on requesting that Equius tone it down some until later. Though actually speaking to him has proven a challenge for anyone but Rue or Roxy, Rue received confirmation that he would lower some of his void guard when Nepeta regains consciousness.

If she does. It might almost have been kinder – no, not kinder, that's not the right word, but it's the closest Rose's beleaguered mind can produce – if Gamzee had killed her before John could intervene. Now, even with the game mechanics that allow players to heal faster, it's hard to say whether she'll wake up or not.

"I do not know how much trust we can put in this arrangement they've come to," Kanaya is saying. Rose hasn't tuned out the conversation, exactly; following two trains of thought is a little much at the moment, though. When she lifts her head, massaging her forearm absently, Kanaya looks guarded, her lips pursed as she bites off the end of a thread and knots the stitches in place. Kanaya tends to sew more violently when she's concerned.

"Which arrangement?" Rose asks, picking up the cup of tea resting on the floor by her knee to sip at it. She has trained John well - once they completed a headcount and made sure all of the trolls were back in the valley, he immediately began brewing tea and shoving it into the claws and hands of anyone foolish enough to wander too close to him. Gamzee had at least three empty cups sitting by him and Rose can only imagine John's bathroom breaks aren't going to work as a diversion much longer. "Vriska and Terezi flipping red, or Karkat and John and their...er..." Mentioning Gamzee's name aloud wouldn't be the smartest of ideas, when she can't judge how much or how little attention Equius might be paying to their musings.

"Either. Both." Kanaya harrumphs and holds up the hoodie, shaking it out to inspect it properly. Not even Rose's eyes can pick out where the tears used to be in the fabric. "Mediation isn't enough for Vriska; she needs something to ground her personally, not just keep her from Terezi's throat. Right now Terezi has her off balance, I believe, but there's no way to tell how long that will last until Terezi herself vacillates again. And I spoke with Karkat and have come to the conclusion that he has little to no idea what he is doing, and may in fact be planning to improvise for as long as he can get away with it."

"Ah, well, I'm personally more concerned about how and when Karkat's going to make an honest man out of John," Rose says dryly, smiling a little when Kanaya gives her a look of tested patience. "And now he's picked up a second beau. At this rate either I or Jade will be responsible for giving Gamzee the 'if you hurt him' speech, and then where will we be?"

She winces at the slip, belatedly, but a swift check on Equius doesn't reveal more than a blocky hand reaching out to touch Nepeta's forehead, the rest of him cloaked in obscurity. He must not be listening.

"You're flippant now," Kanaya says, darkly. "But if it goes ill, John will be the one hurt. It is clear enough that Karkat is the fulcrum here; he won't be the one the juggalo turns on." She hunts through the bag hanging over the side of the chair by Eridan's cot, and throws a look in Equius's direction that Rose can only describe as 'guilty as sin.' Quick as a flash, Kanaya conceals her own cup of tea in the bag, and just as quickly takes it back out to sip.

Rose coughs, and taps the corner of her own mouth discreetly when Kanaya blinks at her over the rim of the cup. Kanaya wipes the spot of olive green blood off her lip quickly enough, but Rose tugs the bag towards her so she can raise both eyebrows at the blood bag stashed beside a spool of black thread. "...You ran out of your own supply? Ah, she's not going to miss this, is she?"

"It was left over from the surgery," Kanaya says. A swirl of olive rises up when she sets the tea down on the floor, and she hastily stirs it with a claw while looking anxiously toward the other side of the room again. "They thought they would need more than they did, so I...procured some."

Rose smiles all the wider, and Kanaya pointedly ignores her for a good four minutes before Rose plants a kiss on her cheek, and the smear of makeup that Kanaya forgot to seal after her skin healed over stains Rose's lips and makes both of them laugh. "Fair enough," she says, dabbing at her mouth with a scrap of cloth. "I am worried about John. All we can do is take as many precautions as possible."

"We thought we had taken precautions this morning," Kanaya points out. She swallows the last gulp of blood and tea.

They both look up from the miniature pile at the sound of a faint, grumbling noise. Kanaya uses her elbow to lever herself up and stare down her nose accusingly at Eridan when his head rolls toward them. Rose contents herself by schooling her face into a mask of utmost seriousness. "Whr'm I?" he mumbles.

"The afterlife," Kanaya says, deadpan.

Eridan squints at her, then at Rose. His face looks pallid and raw, with a growing edge of desperation, and Rose has a flicker of intuition that she can't say is foresight. She hastily retrieves the nearby trash receptacle and offers it to him.

"F'kin' Horrorterrors," he says. Then he rolls over, seizes the trashcan, and vomits up whatever seawater is left in his system.

"GC: W3LL WHO PUT YOU IN CH4RG3 OF TH3 M3MO? >:
CG: IT'S NOT LIKE DAVE CAN CORRAL THIS PACK OF SHITHEADS, HE'S USUALLY HALF THE PROBLEM.
EB: does someone really need to be in charge of the memo? i'm pretty sure if everyone starts fighting over who's the friendleader in chief around here no one will win.
EB: no one.
GG: john's got a good point there!
GG: though i think rose was in charge the last time we had a consensus!
EB: good point.
EB: (rose. please moderate. hurry.)
TT: (I'll do what I can. I'm only human, John.)
TT: I don't believe everyone answered Dave's questions. Could someone ping Aradia again?
GC: OH, TH3Y'R3 BOTH 4L1V3, 4LR1GHT. 4ND 1N C4HOOTS! WH4T 3LS3 1S N3W.
AT: oH! wHILE I WAS HANGING OUT WITH HER, aND STUFF, aRADIA SAID THAT SHE NEEDED TO TALK TO THE OTHER GUY, wHO DOES THE TIME THING, TG: so you mean me
AT: uM, yES SO IT WOULD SEEM,
TG: well here i am not being talked to yet my schedule is wide open m
TG: you would think with two timey people you'd be able to set up a designated meeting time but its all hahahahaha no f u
AA: tomorrow dave! don't worry ill come to you! ;)

AA: today has been pretty hectic already
GC: YOU WOULD KNOW, S331NG 4S YOU PL4NN3D TH3 WHOL3 TH1NG! I'M ONTO YOU NOW!
AA: hey i didnt plan everything! im not some kind of evil mastermind you know AA: sollux and i just had the opportunity to change things up a bit and make sure people could resurrect as god tier without quest beds!
GG: but you orchestrated all this? people died!
AA: then tell me - is anyone permanently dead? :)
EB: ummm...huh.
GG: no, i guess not!
AA: it takes a lot of precision to break a games rules without breaking it and ending up doomed
AA: what happened here today was too important in the grand scheme of things to try to stop it entirely
TG: time is the shittiest aspect. there. i said it.
EB: so you decided instead that you'd use it as an opportunity to make people stronger at the end.
AA: right in one! :)
EB: yeah i kinda figured it out earlier.
EB: this is still really messed up. like. so messed up. it has reached a new and previously unexplored realm of being messed up.
TG: true that GG: like maybe if you'd set this up like an experiment...did you at least test sollux's mod before now?
AA: nope
GG: you decided to use an untested, experimental reality altering mod on people as a trial run?
AA: yep!
GG: okay, next time, just let me help you set up proper testing procedure.
EB: JADE!
GG: what! if she's going to do it anyway we might as well do it scientifically!
GC: H3Y. B31NG 4 M4ST3RM1ND FOR GOOD DO3SN'T M4K3 YOU 4NY L3SS OF 4 CONSPIR4TOR!
AA: haha i guess not!

Gathering a party of able-bodied volunteers to venture into the demolished lounge area proves easier than Rose anticipated. Equius won't leave Nepeta, Eridan has set about moaning in what appears to be a purely superficial attempt at garnering sympathy, Aradia still hasn't returned Tavros, and Sollux is found dead asleep in front of his husktop when Roxy, Jane, and Feferi stumble upon him. But while Feferi stays to make sure Sollux isn't left alone, all of the scratch kids end up joining Rose and Kanaya by the time Rue reports that they're secure against outside scrutiny. Oriole drags Dave in, though he continues to eye Rose and Kanaya with trepidation.

John, Karkat, and Gamzee are the last to arrive, meeting them at the end of the most intact hallway nearest the blast zone. Quite a few of the whiteboards blew up into pieces and scattered around the area, and Rose finds picking through the rubble looking for something to salvage more than a little disheartening.

Particularly since John failed to mention that the unconscious body of Samuel Egbert, guarded by Crabdad of all creatures, is still in the middle of the hallway. The lusus skree at them with its chest puffed out as it sits on a battered couches. The man thankfully stays unconscious while Rose sends Dave off to get someone to lock him up again, but John has to be redirected to another room for a few minutes before the color returns to his cheeks. He looks at her and smiles shakily as he tries to laugh it off.
There must be a way to prevent Samuel from coming into contact with John again; Rose adds it to the extensive list of urgent things that need doing. Kanaya looks grim for an entirely different reason by the time they start out again, and Rose knows by the significant, silent look the jadeblood gives her that it's because when Gamzee isn't following Karkat like a devoted puppy, he watches John's drawn expression with a tilted head and curious eyes, languid and unreadable.

Rose doesn't know if that's cause for concern yet or not. It's not hate, and it's not love either. If curiosity staves off the worst of Gamzee's rage, she'll take it.

Jade's floating some ways above, dumping a bunch of debris in a pile just outside on the lawn. She waves at them cheerily and Rose misjudges her footing and skids a little, but Roxy's arm snakes around her waist. "You all ipsy-daisy?" Roxy asks.

"Not much anymore. I can manage." Aware of multiple pairs of eyes trained on her, Rose straightens and does something that is probably unwise. She looks at Gamzee. His eyes aren't focused on her at first, but snap to meet her gaze after only a half-second delay. "Quite done for the day, yes?"

John winces, and Karkat looks torn between slapping his hand over Rose's mouth and tackling Gamzee to the ground. But Gamzee blinks at her, and she gets the distinct feeling that she's being scrutinized with as much caution as she has directed at him. He seems more solid, less confuddling to look at, and without that psychic aura of madness he simply looks like a troll badly in need of a bath and a change of clothes.

But it would never do to think him safe. "Yeah, sister. Motherfucking done," he says, and the last word sounds like the sensation of tripping on ice while skating.

"Can you not antagonize him?" Karkat says, more tired than angry, as close to pleading as Rose has ever heard him.

It's discomfiting to see Gamzee pat Karkat on the head in reassurance. "Shit ain't antagonizing, best friend. Just getting her asking on."

"God, this is so weird," Dave mutters. Before he can fall into one of his habitual muttering rambles, Rose raises an eyebrow at him, and looks significantly toward Kanaya. She is pleased to see his carefully blanked face crease in faint horror. "Shut up."

"I said nothing, brother dear," Rose says, prim and guileless.

"You're thinking it. Menacingly, god dammit," he insists, edging away from her in fidgety bursts. "Stop thinking about - whatever the hell you're thinking of."

Successfully diverted. Rose scans the wreckage before them, and nods. "Of course. Let's see what we can do here."

In the end, the most they find is a quarter chunk of whiteboard that has been reduced to a bleary black smudge with the names of the Felt members Equius and Nepeta encountered barely legible in the bottom corner, and a messy stack of similarly useless pieces that Jake piles up with a bemused expression flickering across his face whenever Jane or Dirk or Roxy toss something else for him to catch like a frisbee. Karkat does manage to find half a board with all the writing intact, and almost hugs it to his chest in triumph before appearing to think better of it. By the time they agree to call it a day, everyone's hair is smudged with dust and Rose can feel exhaustion dogging at her heels.

But they've gone a full two hours without anyone having a break down or dying. So it's a start.
CG: GOD FUCKING DAMMIT. WHY WAS OUR SESSION RIDDLED WITH SHITHIVE LUNATICS?
CG: I MEAN NO OFFENSE ROSE, YOU TOTALLY WENT OFF THE DEEP END, TOO - TT: None taken, I'm sure.
CG: - BUT AT FUCKING LEAST NONE OF YOU PEOPLE WENT AND STARTED MURDERING EACH OTHER! WHAT KIND OF DISGUSTINGLY LOW STANDARDS ARE THOSE, AND WHY COULDN'T WE MAKE SOME EFFORT TO MEET THEM?!
GA: Seriously, This Is Just Getting Embarrassing Now. Is It Possible To Transfer To The Human Team?
TG: hell submit your resumes and cover letters at will TG: we have a pretty rigorous interview process though the competition is fierce TG: can we apple?
TG: *apply
TG: sure what the hell
AG: Of course you c8n't! Who invited these randos anyway?
CG: LITERALLY NO ONE ASKED FOR YOUR OPINION, VRISKA.
AG: How hilarious, '8rave leader!' :三是) you think you get to 8e in charge when you already let one session crash and 8urn!
CG: FUCK YOU, I RESIGNED IN FAVOR OF ROSE ANYWAY. THERE. IT'S OFFICIAL.
TT: I accept your gracious surrender, Karkat.
AG: 8ullshit! I'm telling you, we don't need new8ie fakey fake heroes or surrendering, we need leader auditions.
TG: (whoa shit rose i think shes challenging you to a rap off)
TG: (are you just gonna take that) TT: (John. Fetch me my shades. Jade, if I fall in righteous rap battle, you're my second.)
GG: (you got it!)
TC: (shiiiiit, motherfuckers, are we about to kick some rhymes up in these here sentence huggers :o?)
EB: (uh. maybe? probably not everybody though, just rose.)
CG: FOR FUCK'S SAKE, YOU FUCKING MANIACS, WE'RE NOT SETTLING THIS SHIT WITH A RAP BATTLE.
TG: yes we are
CG: NO WE'RE NOT.
CG: ALSO WHY ARE YOU ALWAYS SUCH AN ENORMOUS TOOL VRISKA? I REMEMBER THIS. YOUR UNIQUE "8RAND" OF SHITHIREY IS MEMORABLE ENOUGH THAT SOMEHOW IT TRANSCENDS SPACE AND TIME.
AG: Whatever. I remem8er everything, and I remem8er that you 8n't got shit on me! And rap 8attles are for losers, I call for a vote -
GC: NO.
GA: No.
CT: D--> No
TG: no
GG: probably not a good idea.
EB: no way in a million years ever. no offense.
CG: THERE ISN'T ENOUGH NO IN THE WORLD.
TT: I abstain from the vote, seeing as I'm the other main candidate, apparently.
AG: Ugggggggh! :三是) Fine, I see how it is! Just don't all come crying to me when you need a real 8igshot to run this show! I'll just be in charge of the troll te-
AA: well were all kind of playing one jumbled up session so there arent really separate teams nowadays AA: the important thing is to have fun with it! :)
AG: AGGGGGGGGH!!!!!!!!
TC: HONK
Jade has no clue what is going on with Bec. It's not like the wolf ever came with much of an instruction manual - Grandpa had some notes and a neat coverstory to go with them, but Jade figured out how Bec works through trial and error, for the most part.

John's lucky. As an Heir, his aspect manifests itself as a helpful, guiding Breeze. Bec's just being a butt. So she does what she always does when Bec gets lazy. She floats up to its level, crosses her arms over her chest, and clicks her tongue.

Bec continues to hang in midair, a cloud of roiling green and yellow light that makes Jade's space sense tingle. Not even the void spreading out from Equius in a twisty blankets seems to make a dent in it. And usually the void wards would send Bec right to sleep! There's a puddle of Horrorterror goop directly beneath them that really needs to be cleaned up, because she's sure it can't bode well for the future fertility of the soil here, so the longer she spends dealing with the wolf's odd intractability, the less likely it is Doctor Lalonde will ever have a nice front lawn again. There's a puddle of Horrorterror goop directly beneath them that really needs to be cleaned up, because she's sure it can't bode well for the future fertility of the soil here, so the longer she spends dealing with the wolf's odd intractability, the less likely it is Doctor Lalonde will ever have a nice front lawn again. Figuring out how to suck things into a space warp of no return or squish Horrorterror slime down into an easily bottled vial would be a lot easier if she had Bec to help her concentrate; her memories can't tell her much except how it feels to use her powers to their full extent, not necessarily explain how she pulled it off in the heat of the moment.

Hindsight is twenty-twenty. Jade can see now, in retrospect, that she and Eridan alone should have been able to cobble together a quick summary of the troll game session and how it interacted with the humans'. Aradia could be as much of an evasive butt as she feels like. Yet instead they all got so befuddled and turned around that they had that dumb meeting. It's hard to comb through her brain and pick out what part of this communications fiasco was directly Gamzee's fault and what was just them being suuuper unlucky.

"The jellyfish is gone," she says, crossing her arms. Bec doesn't respond. Well, it's not like she expects it to, but come on! She clenches a fist and smacks it into her palm. "So buck up, chuck! We need to be on top of our game here!" Hesitantly, she adds a touch of her own space powers out to brush against Bec's aura. If fiddling with a Horrorterror broke her aspect somehow, she's gonna be so screwed. She doesn't know how she'd break the news to the others when they already have so many problems on their plates!

At the brush of her powers, the light around Bec crackles. Then the wolf lifts its head - and yawns, its bushy tail curling and uncurling around its hind legs as it settles back down into its regular shape with a thump. All the stars and galaxies fade out of its fur. Jade swoops in and hugs it close, rubbing her face against Bec's fluff as it yawns against and sets its muzzle on her shoulder. "Good boy. Best friend," she says, scrITCHing behind its ears.

EB: uh, we'll get back to you guys in a sec...hang on...
AG: This is making me gag. Get a room you three!
TG: Which means this memo has gone too far
TT: One could argue that this entire day has gone too far.
GC: So, you're all letting Miss Apocalypse off with a slap on the wrist?
>
TT: You have to admit that we all did come out of this alive. Which is a considerably better bargain than I thought we'd get.
GA: What would you want us to do, Lynch her? And then move on to the Juggalo and provoke another catastrophe?
GC: I 3xp3ct just1c3! Or 4t L34ST 4 th0rougH 3xl4n4t10n of wh4t h3r 3nd4ng4m3 1s! Th3 Court C4n B3 M3rc1ful Th4t W4y.
AA: oh terzi! ;)) trust me my explanations will make a lot more sense once everyone's healed up and has time to review our old game session
AA: trying to explain now would just involve me repeating a lot of stuff for the people who haven't remembered it all yet! and poor sweet Nepeta won't wake up for another few hours at least GA: There is also the matter of how the void ward machine came to be so badly damaged.
GA: Has anyone determined who might have been responsible?
GC: VR1sk4 d1SP1D w1Th Mr v4N1ll4 M1lkSh4K3 l4ST t1m3, too. Onc3 th3y b10w uP th3y'r3 g0n3.
TT: We may not be able to rely on that. If Scratch can cause us to forget about the cue balls at will, at a point when the void wards were at full capacity, he has a line of communication with us that Sollux might not be able to block.
GA: I will wake him up. Brace for the inevitable.
TG: lol literally no idea what's going on anymore here
CC: You guys seriously talk a lot. 38/hr do you expect anyone to keep up with that anymore?
AT: i've kind of stopped trying, i'm just gonna read it all later, TG: yeah, these guys are terrible at staying on topic. lay low for a while or they'll try to drag you into it.

Jade can't find any trace of other cue balls. Unfortunately, she'd trust her senses a heck of a lot more if they hadn't failed her once already in a major way, and she says as much to Doctor Lalonde when she drops down to the basement floor and slips into the room where Rose's mother has latched onto the ward generator. Shards of white ivory lay scattered on the floor around a towel that has sopped up a bunch of cerulean blue blood leftover from Vriska dying, presumably, and Jade snaps it away with a quick flick of her fingers because leaving it there that long can hardly be sanitary! "Any luck, Doctor Lalonde?"

Rue lifts her head and smiles at Jade, fond and weary at once. She's pinned her hair back out of her face with a black clip. "I wish I had better news, my dear," she says, passing her hand over her hair to smooth a curl out of her eyes. "Everything's back in order, yet nothing appears to be working."

Well, that's a new one! Jade shuffles around, curious, as Rue takes another instrument from a bedraggled intern and twists one of the dials. "Do you need to replace a part, maybe? We have a lot of spares in case the hub starts melting again," Jade says, finally decided to settle back on her haunches. She wants to offer her help, but she knows zilch about how void machines work - and now that she thinks about it, her head might never be able to wrap itself around more than the basics. It's just too twisty for her.

"Oh, I replaced almost every scrap of metal in this thing, by now. I'm afraid the problem is something I never thought to see in practice." Doctor Lalonde hands the detector to Jade when she asks. "The generators work by gathering ambient void and concentrating it in a single location. Now there is someone in the immediate vicinity who is infinitely more capable of gathering void to himself, and his influence appears to take precedence no matter how I adjust the settings."

Jade bites her lip, turning the device over in her hands, and does a doubletake when she realizes Doctor Lalonde is standing up; she can't make heads or tails of the readout so she levitates the handheld to the intern and helps Rue stand. The woman grimaces, stretching out a knee and picking up her heels rather than sliding them back on her feet. She must have been crouching and kneeling on the floor trying to get the generator working all afternoon - no wonder she's sore. "Soooo...Equius is all we've got?" Jade hazards a educated guess.

"So it would seem. Would you mind taking us close to him? He's just caused a paradigm shift and I'd rather like to stay on top of recent advances in the field." Rue glances toward the scorch marks on the floor, and sighs. "What a day."

Rather than risking teleportation mishaps - which is kinda something Jade feels like she needs to watch out for more as the day wears on - she and Rue head up into the wrecked section of the lab complex the old fashioned way, with Jade floating them and the intern over the parts where debris blocks the stairwell and holes have opened up in the floor. Earlier she ended up taking down a huge chunk of the roof near the ex-lounge that could have toppled at any second, and used it to cover up the biggest sizzling streak of dead grass so no one could step on Horrorterror ooze in the dark when night came. What a day, for serious. Jade's ready to change into actual pajamas and find somewhere to sleep. Wherever people are least likely to trip over her - she's not picky.

The rattle of the wheelchair registers before Jade finishes processing the pop of two people abruptly existing where they weren't before. "Whoop! There we go," a merry voice says, while Jade and Rue turn, and Aradia eases the wheelchair down from where one wheel sits unevenly on a piece of ceiling. "You alright?"

"Uh, yes. I'm fine," Tavros says, as the two of them round the corner. By now Jade has checked in on almost everyone, has seen just how exhausted and different they all look after a long afternoon of chaos and dying and strife, and to lay eyes on Tavros and Aradia looking as fresh as daisies in the middle of the shattered hallway is weird! Aradia looks up from Tavros with a sweet smile, meeting Jade's eyes with a flicker of a wink, and the two join Jade and Doctor Lalonde in the intern before they can slow for more than a second. "This place is - um -" Tavros breaks off, scratching the side of his head where the hair's shaved close. "Wow. I guess I'm glad to have missed that. Gracias, Aradia."

"No problem!" Aradia nods at Doctor Lalonde, her rust red wings folded lazily down her back so she can shake out her hair freely. Tavros has wings out, too, his sweatshirt folded over his lap instead so that the holes in the back of his shirt are visible. "Hello, all."

Rue raises an eyebrow, but continues walking. "I am tempted to say you owe me a new building, Ms Megido."

"It'll be even more blown up by mid-April, I'm afraid," Aradia says, teeth flashing. She lifts her hands off the wheelchair as they reach a smooth section where Tavros can maneuver better, and slides her arm to hook through Jade's, smooth as butter. "The end is so near. Isn't it exciting?"

This is the closest Jade has been to Aradia since everyone arrived. She accepts the arm hook with a tiny shrug, because what the heck, and tries to be subtle about staring down at the side of the troll's face curiously. Her horns are coiled in tight rings that end in a neat point, and her nose arches outward before turning up slightly at the end. There's a faint touch of power that Jade can't quantify precisely, the same thing she can now recognize around John and Dave and Rose and Vriska and Terezi, and which she supposes would hang around Equius if his voidy thing didn't conceal him.

"Exciting is a word for it," Jade agrees, though the idea of the Reckoning coming up soon - especially after seeing how crappy their teamwork was today - makes a knot in her stomach that won't go away. And she's had years to come to terms with it.

"I think pavoroso fits better. Personally," Tavros offers. "But that's just about everything, lately."

"Ominous, at the least," Doctor Lalonde adds. Jade raises a hand to shove a random gurney into one of the side rooms so that there's room for all of them to keep walking alongside each other. "The looming end of days..."

"It has been a long time coming," Aradia says. While Doctor Lalonde trails off, Aradia lets out a dreamy sigh, and looks at Jade with a twinkle in her eye. "You have to admit, it'll be amazing to witness. The greatest things are always the most terrifying and wonderful to behold."

"No, mostly I think this is just terrifying," Tavros says. Jade wishes she agreed with him more and Aradia less.

They reach the room where Nepeta and Eridan are laid up a short while after, Aradia pressed close to Jade's side and humming tunelessly to herself as they go. Equius maybe looks up from his vigil when they enter - Jade's getting fed up with not being able to tell for sure, and it's only been a couple of hours! Yeesh! "Aradia," he says, his voice cracking from disuse but mostly level. Eridan watches them walk in with a mournful look, a trash can clutched to his chest that Jade doesn't think he really still needs.

In lieu of Equius's dumb look-away aura, Jade's eyes fall on Nepeta instead. The greenblood lays quiet, her chest rising and falling faintly, but she looks a lot better than she did the last time Jade popped by to see them. Judging from the broken comb on the side table, someone brushed her hair. Equius probably wouldn't let anyone else close enough to do it.

"No hard feelings, right?" Aradia asks breezily, her smile unfailing in the face of Equius's stare. "About Nepeta - it was about a fifty percent chance, and Gamzee was directly involved, which muddles things. I'm sorry she got so badly hurt. Though I'm happy we got the timing right for you!"
Jade's not sure, but she thinks Equius breaks out into a visible sweat. Just. From nothing to a faint sheen on his face in a split second. Which is both impressive and...kind of gross at the same time. "...No, no hard feelings," he says, fixing his sunglasses on his nose with a hand that accidentally crushes part of the frame. Jeez, he's strong! "You were...very timely. Yes."

Aradia lets her head fall to the side as she laughs. The motion turns her a little so that when the troll shifts, her hair tickles Jade's nose. Seriously, she's very close! "Good! I think Doctor Lalonde wanted to ask you about void bracers, next. Tavros, you're staying here?"

"And then there was me and you." Aradia pats the side of Jade's arm.

"What am I, chopped halibut?!" Eridan demands, craning his neck to glare at them.

"Eridan's perpetually in a mood. Some things never change." Aradia shakes her head. "I've been hoping to talk to you before Dave - or possibly the other way around - but either works, really. Things got rushed today. Could you take us out to the lake?"

"Oh, sure!" Without thinking, Jade jumps them right from the doorway to the edge of the lake - and that's not her brightest moment, probably. She needs another reminder, she thinks, because she's lucky Aradia sticks the landing when they warp out right in the middle of the lake instead of where Jade was aiming. A dark blue reminder that teleporting too close to Equius is a not-good plan. Jade catches herself before more than her left foot can get soaked, and Aradia's wings flutter like she expected this kind of thing to happen. "Sorry about that! What did you need? If you'd texted me I could have come seen you sooner." Jade scrunches up her nose. "Uh. Wherever you were, anyway. Where did you go? I couldn't find you or Tavros all this time!"

"Not so much where as when." Aradia tips her head back, her eyes luminescent in the dark, and - Actually, that's too dark. Jade knows it wasn't nearly this dark out ten minutes ago. The moon looks like a thin slice of lemon in the gaps between the clouds, and it's much chillier out. Aside from the light trickling out from the gap in the lab walls, there isn't much to see by; a faint, misty rain sprinkles down, leaving Jade's hair damp. "Somewhen quieter, so he'd be less likely to come across Vriska or Gamzee in the scuffle," Aradia continues, walking further out over the lake. "His odds of living were much better than Nepeta's, which made it easier to work around."

"That was nice of you."

Aradia leans her head against Jade's arm. "It might just be prolonging the inevitable, which I'm usually against on principle. But I hadn't seen him in so long, and it was a nice opportunity to catch up."

The lake forms a dark mirror for the moon overhead; the rain is too light to stir it up, but enough to make the reflection fuzzy. Jade sweeps over the valley mentally as Aradia raises a claw, picking out where everyone is and reassuring herself that they're all okay, despite the sudden time shift. No wonder Dave thinks his time stuff is weird. It is soooo weird. Jade can feel her own body twice - her atoms want to go straight to there and mingle and that's even weirder. Weirdness squared.

"Why did you want to come out here?" Jade asks, remembering that she's in the middle of a conversation. "With me, I mean?

Aradia holds her hand further out, with faint red light pulsing around it in the shape of a clock face. It doesn't do much except turn the dark water an eerie red right under their feet. "Can you feel what's at the bottom?"

"Hang on." Jade takes the last of her space focus away from herself and feels down instead, beneath hers and Aradia's feet. Fewer fish swim through the water than she remembers sensing even a day ago, which is sad. A lot of the plants along the bottom feel withered, too. Dumping a Horrorterror in the water couldn't have been good for anything alive in there.

She almost doesn't catch it. It's subtle, and runs right along the scalloped bottom of the lakebed. But her brush of space power catches and snags for a moment and Jade frowns, reaching for that circle of oddness again. It feels like -

"A gate," Jade says, and she blinks and realizes she has raised her own free hand to match Aradia's, the green light cutting much deeper into the water. Aradia's nostrils flare as she nods. "When did a spirograph get down there? I would have noticed that."

"The Horrorterror carved it this afternoon, when it left Eridan. It's not active, but it's here, and that's enough reason to worry." Aradia clucks her tongue imperiously, shaking her head. "As bad as Gamzee, really." She brings her glowing hand closer to her chest, considering Jade with eyes that aren't smiling. "This needs both of us to fix."

Jade looks down, though she can't see the spirograph with her eyes from here. "Alright! What needs doing?"

At last, Aradia lets go of Jade's arm and stands facing her, both of them staring down at the water. Jade glances up long enough to see Aradia's face lit up in reds and shadows, as the burgundyblood's claws flatten out in front of her. "It would be easier if Kanaya were god tier - she could heal it over in a moment," Aradia says, while Jade hesitantly mimics her hand motions. "But she already died once, the wrong way, which makes raising her up to god tier a little more of an issue. Witches are versatile, thankfully. If you can hold it shut, I can shift in a doomed version of that part of the lakebed to replace it." Her cheeks dimple. "It helps that the planet is doomed in any timeline. Less fuss."

Must be a time thing. Jade considers calling for Bec to help her out, but she thinks she can handle this on her own. It takes some doing to figure out how to bunch space together and fold it over the spirals carved into reality, and as she does it she asks, "Really? How would Kanaya do it? Also, you can die the wrong way?"

"Of course! You have to die the right way," Aradia says, in a perfect, unsettling monotone. When she giggles it's definitely creepy, but as she brings her palms together and forms a single rust red clockface with the light, her voice goes back to its odd cheer. "And her coming back once already as a rainbow-drinker complicates things. I suppose she would sew it together, hypothetically. It depends on the Sylph!"

"And you answering questions all straightforward-like and stuff - that's gonna be how things are? Or is it just for now?"

"After the records are unlocked, I'll answer any questions you guys have!" The minute and hour hands on the clock spin so fast Jade gets a little dizzy watching them, and she's almost positive they're moving in opposite directions from each other. The seconds hand, so thin it's barely more than a paler red seam, stays still. The symbols around the edges of the clock aren't any numbers or letters Jade is familiar with, either, but Aradia watches them intently until they seemingly match what she's looking for. She taps the center of the clock and a clear chime rings out, like a note from a music box, as faint echoes of other clocks appear on top of the original and then slot back into place. "That should do it!"

Jade has to check and recheck a couple of times before she lets her hands fall to her sides, but when she lets her grip on space loosen, the spirograph markings don't open back up. The odd snag in the bottom of the lake has been filled in with what feels like sand. It doesn't seem doomed or anything to Jade - but also, she has no idea how a doomed thing and a not-doomed thing would feel different. "That's it?"

The rotating clock fades, and so does the gleam in Aradia's eye that Jade had barely noticed glowing brighter. Aradia sags a little. "That's it." One hand comes up and Jade hastily offers her arm before she can think twice, and the sky brightens back into late evening orange between blinks while Aradia uses her as support. "Mmm. I was hoping I could stretch that a little longer. But this is still nice. Do you like sunsets?"

"I do!" The lake has turned a nice peach color, too. When Jade turns away from the sunset for a second, she can see the shadow on the sky behind them caused by the mountains and the curve of the earth, and grins.

"It looks like the sky's caught fire and the world could burn down in an instant," Aradia finishes, with a happy sigh. "It's so lovely."

Hmm. After a pause, Jade pats the back of Aradia's hand where it rests on her own arm. "I guess that's true."

"You think it's a sad thought, though. Most people would." Aradia turns her hand over and catches Jade's hand, squeezing it tight for a moment before letting go. "Heheh! But it's still a fun idea!"

TT: We're going to need another meeting. A better meeting, with a better name.
TG: what no the acronym was gold rose
TG: dont blame the meeting acronym for our collective bullshit
GG: we could just call it 'stfu 2 electric boogaloo.'
TG: i vote for supah chill sharing circle
TG: sharing is caring...
TG: okay first of all there are way too many assholes with the same handle initials here one of you back the fuck off
TG: and second no way the first name was perfect
TT: Sharing is caring, dude. I second Roxy.
TT: All in favor?
AT: sURE,
CC: I like it!
AG: Talk a8out laaaaaaame.
GC: YOU DON'T G3T 4 VOT3.
GA: It's Easier To Remember Than The Last One.
CT: D--> Why does this even matter?
GG: I also support Roxy.
GT: ...Dammit i understand absolutely none of this malarkey.
GT: Sharing is caring?
TG: john
TG: how could you
GG: i can get behind it!
CG: I HATE EVERYONE IN THIS MEMO FOR MAKING ME READ THROUGH THIS UNMITIGATED BULLSHIT.
TT: Motion passed.
TG: yeeeee :0
TG: *:
GT: Im so confused.
GA: I Am Not Certain If That Was A Majority Or Not. It's Difficult To Tell Who Abstained And Who Just Started Complaining.
AA: i already knew which would win ;)
TT: I'll take that as a vote in favor of inevitability, then. Sorry, Dave.
TG: ill live
TG: but you cut me deep john TG: cut me real deep
EB: sorry! i didn't really catch up on the whole conversation!
EB: but it's still a better name. sorry man.
TG: i dont think i can recover from this GA: Incoming.
-- twinArmageddons [TA] has joined this travesty of a memo! -- TA: WHAT HAVE YOU IIDIOT2 BEEN TALKING ABOUT FOR THII2 LONG?!
GA: You Were Absent. You Should Probably Have Learned Better Than To Trust Us Alone With Pesterchum For Extended Periods Of Time.
GA: Conspirator.
TA: ii ju2t 2aved half of your a22e2 from certaiin doom and thii2 ii2 what ii wake up two.
TG: are you gonna destroy the memo again
TG: because at this point i welcome the end put it out of its misery TA: huh. actually ii think we're okay.
GG: really?
TA: no
-- twinArmageddons [TA] has banned every la2t one of you horriible people [∞] from the chat! --

-- uranianUmbra [UU] opened a cheery-o on board ^u^ at UU:UU:UU -- UU: helooooo? is anyone oUt there?
GA: Are You One Of The Others Who Happens To Not Be Asleep Or Unconscious Or Possibly Dying?
UU: oh dear, is there an awfUl lot of that going on? i jUst wanted to check how things were going on yoUr end, bUt i gUess i picked a bad time...
GA: There's Never Really A Good Time, Don't Worry About It Too Much. Can I Help You With Something?
UU: not really! i'm here to help all of yoU! ^u^ or at least to cheer yoU on as best i can.
UU: if i try to do mUch more than that too soon, my brother will realize i'm coUgh meddling coUgh- GA: Ah. So You Are A Meddling Meddler?
UU: ^u~
GA: May I Ask What You Are Meddling In? The Fact That You Have Invited Certain People To This Memo Would Hint That You Are Familiar With Certain Things.
UU: i am very familiar! my predecessor has been very stUbborn bUt also very thorUgh aboUt making sUre everything flows as coherently as possible!
UU: with what she had to work with, anyway. my brother did an eqUally thorUgh job destroying everything he coUld get his claws on, which i gUess is his specialty. for example, are yoU familiar with the sign of sixteen?
GA: I Have Never Heard Of Such A Thing.
UU: exactly! it no longer has any relevance to yoUr narratives whatsoever. he Utterly annihilated it before it coUld ever become important, or play any role in the story at all. a shame.
GA: I'm Sure That Is Really A Shame, But I Am Afraid That My Field Of Crude Sexual Verbs To Be Given Is Barren After The Weekend I Have Had. They Have All Been Harvested And The Seeds Of Fresh Fucks Have Yet To Sprout.
UU: yeah, that's fair. later i will do my best to ease yoUr mind!
GG: Hey! What's up! :)
GG: ...wait, you're not one of the trolls, are you? i know all their handles now!
UU: UnfortUnately, i'm something a bit different. sorry aboUt the confUsion!
UU: it's good i caught the two of yoU thoUgh! it means i can give you the decryption code!
GG: hang on, for the troll game session? how do you know it? squints
GA: Squints Also
UU: i have a sort of oUtside perspective on what is happening to yoU right now. from my point of view, yoU gUys have already decrypted it!
GG: ohhhh. that makes sense!
GA: It Does?
GG: that's how karkat tried to get everyone to troll us the old fashioned way last time. you guys could see all of our session - all of our lives, actually, which was super annoying.
GG: except he was dumb about it, so a bunch of you started bullying me years before the game even existed and really pissed me and john off, and we ignored your advice for a long time.
UU: it is almost like that sitUation exactly! ^u^ that's a good analogoUs example. bUt i woUld never bully yoU!
GA: So You Are Playing A Game Session Yourself? Oh Dear. This Was Already Complicated Enough As It Was.
UU: nope! i can't really explain right now.
GA: If You Do The Spoilers Thing -
UU: the code yoU need is UrobUros. sollUx shoUld have installed all the mods you need for it to play the right recordings, even thoUgh he keeps ignoring me...
UU: and please say hello to UUv for me!
GA: You Lost Me.
GG: you mean the mayor? wv?
UU: yes! ^u^ he shoUld be able to talk now! not sUre how those wires got crossed, bUt i'm sUre skaia was doing her best!
GG: that's a relief! i was worried i messed up something when i was making him visible again. :(
UU: haha, not yoUr bad! the final game session is always in the worst shape, i think! i've got some records of the reality before yours that are downright flabbergasting!
UU: ack, gotta rUn!
GA: Er, Goodbye Then.
GG: thank you for the code! we'll try it out right away! or whenever people stop bleeding everywhere.
-- uranianUmbra [UU] has left the chat! -- GA: Well, That Was Odd.
GG: odd has variable definitions, kanaya ;) she seems nice! we could use more nice people!
GA: That Is True. Right Now We're Surrounded By Murderous Assholes. This Can Only Be An Improvement.
GG: that's the spirit!
I enjoy Vriska for her punch-the-unbeatable-boss-in-the-face attitude, but at the same time, this child needs to learn to find her chill and be a team player.

Anyway, when is a love triangle not a triangle? When you tackle the weird clown guy into a threesome!

I'll see myself out.
A Barren Peace

Chapter Summary

Hold fast, for all that night or wind can say,
Some pale pure color yet,
Too dim for green and luminous for grey.
Between the climbing inland cliffs above
And these beneath that breast and break the bay,
A barren peace too soft for hate or love
Broods on an hour too dim for night or day.

Chapter Notes

EDIT: Updates at "BQ: Or it's all just broken", "Jade commandeers the lobby", and "Having so many people around". That's a wrap!

Yet another dialog/exposition heavy recap chapter, I'm afraid, but at least this one isn't scrambled! Once again, this AU is pretty AU, and I'm playing fast and loose with canon events here. Anyway, time for everyone to calm down, dammit. In fact that's it - I'm changing - hang on -

See the end of the chapter for more notes

ARC VIII - UNISCENSION ===> ARC VIII SIDE B - EVERYONE CALM THE FUCK DOWN

"You know, it's surprisingly nice weather, considering where we are."

MP: Really? That's good to hear.

Zachal Keynai sits with her legs swung out the open door of the car, resting an elbow on the center console as she flicks through her phone. "Barely 70 degrees," she says, holding the phone over so the carapacian in the passenger's seat can see. Ms Paint scans the weather forecast for the day and nods. "Not bad, since Arizona is supposed to be hellmurder deathstate incarnate."

MP: Oh! What a name! I'm glad it's not so bad as all that.

They're somewhere near the junction between Highway 180 and 64, surrounded by scrub and oppressively flat land, dotted with sparse brush, the occasional power line pole, and one or two sad trees that are just trying to do their best. The lonely gas station is surrounded by what may or may not be cheap, tacky copies of Native American tipis, and the faint tang of country music emanates from a single speaker over the door like overused body spray. Zachal turns up the volume on their own music to counter it, and skips over the next song hastily upon realizing, for the fourth time this trip, that a lot of the stuff on this playlist is not suitable listening material for a lady as lovely and respectable as MP.
The road runs straight on without curving, only a single lane on either side of the faded yellow double lines. Each breath scrapes thin and arid in the lungs, and Zachal rubs at her right eye as she waits for the gas pump to shut off; she took out her contact lenses thirty miles back and replaced them with glasses when her eyes started to ache. When the pump lets out a clunk, she stands up and dumps her phone on the driver's seat behind her, closing up the gas hatch and grabbing a purple and green water bottle off the top of the dusty car roof. "Last chance to grab a snack," she starts to say, leaning on a knee with her arm on the steering wheel as she goes to sit down again - and then she turns to stare at the backseat.

Thankfully, after several such incidents, Ms Paint is familiar with the look.

MP: You need to write.

"I need to drive," Zachal fires back. But the claws of her free hand have dug into the back of the head rest, her whole body angling toward the blue backpack tossed on top of their few belongings in the back of the car. With the hatchback they could have brought along several suitcases worth of supplies, but absconding from Houston with the Felt and the Crew on their trail meant they could only obtain food and coolers and fresh clothing by buying them along the way.

There's only one thing that matters in that backpack, at this point.

MP: Allow me.

The carapacian unbuckles her seat belt, and Zachal finds herself making only a faint protest as she hops out of the passenger's side door and trots around the front of the car. "I know how carapacians drive," she tries, weakly, as MP takes her by the elbow and firmly pulls her back out of the car.

MP: We drive perfectly well, thank you.

"You all drive like you're piloting a meteor. Or a space ship. Or a giant robot. Look, cars can't punch through incoming obstacles like space debris, okay?"

MP: You still need to write.

There's not really any way to argue with that. Breathing hard through her nose, Zachal takes the backpack with her to the passenger's seat, stuffing the empty bag in the space under the glove compartment and folding her legs up on the seat as Ms Paint adjusts the mirrors drastically to accommodate her small stature. Zachal's pretty sure the carapacian can only reach the gas pedal because the car itself takes pity on her and lets her scoot the driver's seat further forward than it was ever designed to go. "Thank you," she mutters as they successfully pull out of the gas station with a minimum of near death experiences; Ms Paint almost flattens one of the rip-off tipis while laboring to turn the steering wheel all the way to the left, but that may have been on purpose.

MP: Of course, dear. Are you certain we shouldn't go straight to our destination?

Now the carapacian is giving her a sidelong glance, which means she's not watching the road. Sure, they're the only car around for miles, but Zachal still screams, muffled behind closed lips, and points at the road until MP nods and pays attention to where she's going. "We are going to see the Grand Canyon before it gets blown to smithereens. Fact." Zachal steadies the laptop across her knees to leave room for the overworked fans to breathe. She smooths a thumb claw over the crack in the case where cosmic superstrings writhe and pulse, barely contained by what's left. The battery on this shitty laptop should have died days ago, but it still reads as though it's plugged in to charge; Zachal tries not to think about it. "The thirteenth isn't for a while yet."
"Alright. Okay," the troll says. She winces when the computer finishes booting up and opens straight to the document she needs without any input from her. How did that other guy put up with this all the time? Worse, when she scrolls through - god. "He scrambled all the conversations from the meeting? Douchebag."

Well, like hell is she rewriting that all over again. In fact, no. Fuck it. Time for a summary.

Begin Recap Log:

As the great bard Nichelle Nichols once wrote, "How did it get so late so soon? It's night before it's afternoon. December is here before it's June. My goodness, how the time has flown. How did it get so late so soon?"

Look, she said it, not me.

When we left off, the four human heroes, John Egbert, Jade Harley, Rose Lalonde, and Dave Strider, as well as troll heroes Kanaya Maryam and Karkat Vantas, chose to relocate to the Lalonde mansion in Maple Valley, after watching the video recordings that documented the human game session which preceded the scratch universe. Though trying to maintain a low profile in the wake of the mayhem unleashed by Diamonds Droog, the six were soon called out by four teenage villains brought to Seattle in the service of the Midnight Crew. They were forced to face off against a brainwashed Jane, Jake, Roxy, and Dirk near the Seattle Needle. However, unbeknownst to her fellow Scratch kids, Roxy intended to go rogue from the beginning, appealing to Rose for amnesty and escaping with her after her native void stealing powers accidentally neutralized the void in Rose's bracers. Jane and Jake, both more thoroughly affected by the brainwashing inflicted upon them by the manipulative Felt member Doctor Die, turned on Roxy and Dirk, and had to be knocked unconscious before they could be safely transported to Lalonde Labs to be de-programmed. Along the way, Roxy confirmed with Rue Lalonde that someone in the heroes' immediate circle was a plant for the Midnight Crew, and Rue made arrangements for everyone in the facility to be scanned for signs of mindgrubs, the method by which Die was able to ensure the undying, unthinking loyalty of the Midnight Crew and their underlings for years.
Unfortunately, in an unpleasant turn of events, Samuel Egbert responded to the news of forced brain scans by isolating John from the rest of the group and revealing that he was the plant, before activating the sleeper mindgrub implanted in John's brain to unleash the Trickster. A future version of Dave arrived to both warn and delay the group from going to rescue John, citing the inevitability of what was to come as the reason for the many doomed copies of Dave's dead body that littered the halls. While John was unconscious, Samuel turned on the other children and Dave was shot tackling Roxy out of the line of fire. Jade lost her temper and incapacitated Samuel; when the Trickster took control of John's body, it attacked Jade before being knocked out with a tranquilizer dart. In order to keep him sedated, Jade ventured out with Becquerel to obtain a new supply of medication through the Harley Foundation. Despite the storm raging outside in reaction to the turmoil surrounding John, she found a lone office worker, Janine, willing to help her contact the medical supply company; all went as planned until Gamzee Makara appeared in the room with her and became enraged enough to attack when she lied to him about Karkat's whereabouts. She managed to escape, but Gamzee's presence in Seattle boded ill.

While Jade was away, Rose suggested that she, Karkat, and Dave venture into John's psyche in the same way he once visited her own, hoping to restore some of his conscious control before the sedatives could wear off. Once inside his mind, though, it became clear that the damage John sustained from years of suppressed memories and psychological abuse had sundered his mind, leaving it an ever-shifting, cratered wasteland shielded by violent storms. The three were quickly separated and whisked away to separate corners of John's mind, where they had to confront different aspects of John's mental trauma. Rose encountered a two-dimensional copy of the Egberts' house, where leftover contamination from John's brief encounter with the Horrorterror had been allowed to fester. In the basement she located the Breeze, the personification of John's aspect; when she set it free it agreed to help ferry her to the 'real' John. Dave, meanwhile, was carried so far from the rest of John's mind that he unknowingly wandered through the channel that links to the mind of Typheus, John's slumbering denizen. While grumpy and irritable, with little love for Rose due to the consequences of her actions in the previous game, Typheus sensed the wrongness of the Trickster's presence in John's mind, and reluctantly helped Dave return to the channel between the two minds, where John retreated in a desperate bid to avoid the pain. His abuse of the ability [Eye of the Storm] caused the fraymotif to go out of control, and it nearly killed them both before Dave managed to snap John out of his fugue. Still shaken and badly traumatized, John agreed to wrest control of his psyche back from the Trickster when it became clear it was outnumbered, then summoned the false Samuel to distract Rose while it confronted John alone. The Trickster hated John with a visceral intensity, deliberately playing on his depression and anxiety to push him towards suicide, and finally attempted to murder him outright. Rose intervened before the Trickster could finish the job, but John was left gravely injured. He and the Breeze reconciled and were able to persuade the breezes that the Trickster had won over to abandon it, allowing Rose to set it on fire. It escaped, as Rose realized that too much of it was rooted in John's deeper emotions for her to burn it out without damaging John's mind beyond repair. Exhausted but hopeful, John retook control of his mind.

In the wake of this, the group spent a week recovering from the shock. Doctor Lalonde was able to learn from Samuel that he allowed Die to use a mindgrub on him as part of a mercenary contract with the Crew, with the implication that he murdered Joanna Egbert in order to keep John isolated and under his control. Jade, who along with Roxy, Dirk, and Sollux Captor's remote assistance, had been trying to reformat the Queen's Hub to access records of the troll game session, decided to join Kanaya on a day trip to Los Angeles to finally investigate the source of the grimlight outbreak there, while Karkat's renewed nightmares (this time centered around traumatic events in the troll's session) caused him to accidentally make contact with Feferi Peixes, who had unknowingly become a thrall to the Horrorterror. Rose chose to remain with John, who was still in the midst of a depressive episode, and Dave volunteered to go with Karkat to meet Feferi in Washington, DC when she requested help dealing with her ancestor, The Condesce. Though wary about splitting up the party, the two away teams left Saturday morning and successfully reached their destinations. In the interim, John and Rose ventured back into his mind to question Typheus, but Typheus redirected the conversation with John to focus on his new personal quest for this game - overcoming the trauma that caused John's subconscious to become inundated with the oil Typheus would normally have used to pollute his planet in-game. He and Rose then spent some time discussing this new discovery, floating and drinking tea, but the record of this appears to have been MYSTERIOUSLY SCRAMBLED by parties unknown.

It's the juggalo. I'm talking about the juggalo guy. No way am I making anyone try to read that mess.

Jade and Kanaya were able to bypass the dome keeping Los Angeles cut off from the rest of the world when Eridan Ampora sensed them from within and opened a passage for them. Leaving Becquerel outside as backup, the two ventured in to meet the few remaining citizens of LA, who had all been drafted into Eridan's princely 'court' as militia, including Ruth and the child Faith, most of them heavily influenced by Eridan's Hope aura. Eridan attempted to show off, overly confident after he realized Kanaya didn't remember him killing her in the previous session, and explained that he intended to wait out the Reckoning by hoping his dome into being impervious to harm. However, his lack of genuine remorse and fluctuating excuses for why he broke away from the Horrorterror caused Jade and Kanaya to confront him, and he summoned angels formed from the corpses of Mal's victims to attack them. Once she realized he was drawing power from the dome, Jade demolished the last of the angels and rose up to use her space powers to their full extent for the first time since stabilizing in her grandfather's lab, recalling most of her memories of the previous session in the process. Kanaya punched Eridan in the face. It was awesome.

Dave and Karkat were almost immediately ambushed by Gl'bglolyb when they met Feferi at the DC airport. Feferi had little awareness of her surroundings outside of what Gl'bglolyb allowed her to notice; any hint of disbelief or confusion was wiped away so that Feferi continued to believe whatever the Horrorterror told her. Using a perfect spirograph portal carved into the sea floor, Gl'bglolyb transported them all to the Condesce's Arctic base via the Furthest Ring, and commanded Feferi to destroy what the Condesce holds dear. Finding themselves trapped in a small Russian town at the furthest reaches of Russia, the two were forced to go along with Feferi and ended up fighting the Condesce herself when Feferi went full Rambo on the shipping yard. The Condesce, oddly (or perhaps luckily), was more concerned with attempting to snap Feferi out of her grimlight enthrallment than paying attention to the others, recognizing Dave as a serious threat to her apple juice monopoly and Karkat as a descendant of the Signless. She shooed them away seemingly to keep the Psiionics, the current object of her pale affections, from noticing the Signless's descendant was there, and the three absconded just as Gl'bglolyb smashed through the Condesce's armada of space ships to reach the shore. As Dave, Karkat, and Feferi were carried off by the Grey Protector in the Arch Deconstructor, the Condesce and her entourage, including the E%ībimus, took on the Horrorterror with the help of a Siege Titan and drove Gl'bglyb to abandon its physical form and flee to the Furthest Ring. James Harley appeared to speak with the Condesce, his adoptive mother and John and Jade's grandmother by extension, and their history of mutual antagonism caused the Condesce to accidentally let it slip that she knew about John and Samuel being brainwashed all along. Though the Condesce expected Gl'bglyb would return soon enough, no one on the physical plane was aware that Leviathan had begun to cannibalize its fellow Horrorterrors to augment its power; it devoured both Gl'bglyb and Malā'ikah in short order, inheriting Gl'bglyb's native knowledge of spirographic gates from its time as a game sprite, as well as both Horrorterrors' connections to their old tanglebuddies.

That Sunday, the group slowly began to assemble at Lalonde Labs - Jade and Kanaya returned first with a recalcitrant Eridan in tow, while Equius Zahhak and Nepeta Leijon arrived in the company of Ambrose Strider and Oriole, brought to the labs by Rue's promise to teach Equius the void ward techniques needed to obscure them from the Crew and Felt members who have been plaguing them. Deciding that they were going to run into problems with the law no matter what, Dave, Karkat, Feferi, and the GP tried to cross Seattle in broad daylight, and the carapacian king ended up staying behind to negotiate with FVRT representative Ace Dick for the return of his impounded giant war carapacian. Jade gave them a ride back to the valley instead, but communications began to deteriorate further than they ever had before with the arrival of Gamzee, as he, Tavros Nitram, Aradia Megido, Vriska Serket, Terezi Pyrope, and Sollux arrive en-mass. Despite the fact that Jade had some memories of speaking to the trolls during the human session that John lacks, and that Eridan himself remembered almost all of what happened prior to his death thanks to Malā'ikah's invasion of his mind, neither of them seemed to be able to share what they knew with the rest of the group. Instead, after Gamzee temporarily calmed in the presence of Karkat, the complete team of twelve trolls and four humans tried to sort out the various threats that they currently face, accounting for a long list of criminal groups, arch-nemeses, and Doc Scratch himself. Due to Gamzee's presence, however, no one could actually say for certain what they talked about, and Karkat's attempts to record everything on whiteboards came out as unreadable gibberish.

It all exploded when Gamzee realized that John and Karkat were moirails, losing what little grip on his powers that he still had. In the hallucinatory, Rage-inspired chaos that ensued, Gamzee destroyed Lil Cal before the puppet could hypnotize anyone into doing its Lord's bidding, Vriska was lured by the long-forgotten cue ball to finish destroying the main void ward generator in the basement, and the valley was left exposed to both Horrorterror influence and Doc Scratch's (near) omniscience. Rose's connection to Leviathan was neutralized by Roxy, but the Horrorterror simply turned to Eridan instead, tangling him up into a massive grim-jellyfish. Gamzee also unleashed the fraymotif [Babelon] , worsening the confusion by rendering everyone incapable of understanding text, speech, or sign language, and inflicted severe hallucinations on John that caused him to die and resurrect in the explosion caused by Leviathan, rather than escaping in Jade's mass teleport. Hallucinating the Trickster and surprised by Samuel when the man escaped from his confines, John was frozen until Jane knocked Samuel out with a couch, and the two left Crabdad keeping an eye on the unconscious body while they headed outside. Gamzee then turned on Equius and Nepeta, killing Equius before John could stop him in what appeared to be a desperate bid to force them into the god tiers. He only succeeded due to Sollux's long-standing secret project, masterminded by Aradia, which modified Sburb's basic programming so that Equius resurrected as the Heir of Void. Nepeta, who didn't die of her injuries, was rushed to the new emergency surgical team on staff by Equius, while John accidentally-on-purpose pacified Gamzee long enough to take him to Karkat.

In the basement, Vriska was killed by the cue ball in an explosion as 'thanks' for being gullible enough to fall for Scratch's ploy; resurrecting with her powers and memories of being a Thief of...
Light intact, she attempted to leave the valley to track Scratch down at the Ouroboros in Las Vegas for vengeance. Upon realizing what Sollux and Aradia had done, Terezi stabbed herself to reach god tier and tore off after Vriska as a Seer of Mind, gameState 589. Karkat ended up distracted mid-fight by Gamzee and John tackling him. It took Becquerel, Kanaya, Dave, and Jade's best efforts to finally rip Eridan out of the grimjelly's bell, temporarily severing the tangle between him and Leviathan and allowing Equius's innate Voidy thing to establish new defenses. Aradia observed all this from a distance, with an unconscious Tavros by her side, while a future version of herself on Prospit casually killed Equius and Terezi's dreamself when it was time for them to resurrect. At some point WV either learned how to translate his speech into English, or was oddly understandable because of [Babelon], or communicated with Bro through sheer paradox overload - honestly, I can't even tell what happened there anymore, but I blame Gamzee for at least 65% of why it didn't make logical sense. Karkat, disturbed and uncomfortable with what John and Gamzee set in motion, found himself dragged into a threeway moirallegiance with them regardless to keep Gamzee from drowning everyone in insanity all over again.

With two newly ascendant god tiers and Vriska fully aware of her powers for the first time in this universe, they badly need to go over what occurred in the trolls' game session once and for all. Who knows what new, horrifying revelations await them, or what it could mean that Sollux has been forced to install an additional modification and update to Sburb, sent to him by a mysterious new friend. And what will they do with Vriska's new knowledge of the location of Doc Scratch's base of operations, smack in the middle of the Las Vegas strip? Will Dave's long ago prophecy of drunken shenanigans finally come to fruition?

Also where the heck did Diamonds go? She took off with Clubs and got Marlowe to steal a void generator from the old Lalonde house and then...nothing? I wonder if Hearts has gotten fired for losing the Scratch kids yet...This is such bullshit. Remember when these kids were just dumbass super heroes doing dumbass things in the name of dumbass romance and the law? Well, I guess we're never getting back to that. It's too late. We're in too deep. There are too many irons in the fire for things to ever be simple again. Genre shifts are like growing pains. Your joints ache, the doctor will probably tell your custodian that you're imagining things, no one understands what's happening anymore, Leviathan is there, one dumbass in particular is still doing dumbass things in the name of dumbass romance that manage to land him in a threesome that includes a TOTAL DOUCHE WHO RAGE-VOMITS ALL OVER FIVE PAGES WORTH OF EXPOSITORY DIALOG WHEN YOU TURN YOUR BACK FOR ONE SECOND -

"I'm never writing one of these again," Zachal says, closing the laptop. She leans her head against the window, horns clacking, the glass warm under her forehead. "I mean it."

Ms Paint passes her the half-eaten package of Twizzlers.

---

She is calm.

No, better than calm. Focused.

For too long she let her control slack off, riled by something that - shouldn't have riled her. God only knows there are a million things in the world that vex her, but she strives not to let that impact her goddamn work ethic.

Well, a silent shuffle of her mental priorities, an acknowledgement of the fact that certain persons (one, singular) might also count as a priority, apart from herself, and -

Diamonds Droog brings the cue stick around, and uses it to lean on absently as the blood blooms out from the rustblood's caved in skull in slow pulses. Marlowe is silent by her right shoulder, reloading his pistolkind with slow fingers. Lipstick that's too dark a shade of plum to suit him stains his mouth, but what he and Yavari get up to in their minimal spare time is their business. Diamonds is hardly one to speak about keeping quadrants discreet, these days.

Sloppy work, on the other hand, she will not tolerate. The five bodies littering the warehouse floor are a mixed bag of trolls and humans in street clothes, with tiny tattoos shaped like compasses on the insides of their wrists, and the fact that they're still operating in Seattle this brazenly weeks after the Midnight Crew arrived means that Hearts is slacking off. Or is, perhaps, mind-numbingly distracted. Whichever it is, he shouldn't have let this caper slide under his radar for so long.

Well. He is on his way. The man's not totally hopeless. Diamonds was just quicker. He needs to shape up; Felt or no Felt, the Midnight Crew itself has some kind of goddamn reputation that needs upholding -

(even if it's already doused in gasoline, with Diamonds holding the match.)

She settles herself on a crate of smuggled fully automatic weapons, and puts the thought to the side. One of the freight doors hangs open to let in yellowed moonlight, a standing invitation for any passing strays or cops - but Diamonds isn't overly concerned by them. With the machine Marlowe set by the door active, wandering eyes tend to turn aside unless their attention is deliberately called. Propping the cue stick at an angle by her side, Diamonds dips to rub a splash of teal blood off her boot - the arterial spray slashing across the front of her jacket will have to wait until later for a good dry-cleaning. The temperature here has finally risen to the point that after the strife the spring humidity feels disgusting; time to break out the lighter cotton and linen suits.

Her latest disposable phone jolts in her breast pocket, and Diamonds stiffens for a moment in anticipation of another buzz. Three would mean Yavari had sighted unfamiliar hoods approaching her vantage point; four for the police, or whoever else is roaming the streets with the FVRT sticking their grubby hands into everything; five for hero children. If it'd been Hearts or another form of non-emergency, two. Just one means it's personal. The text that appears on the screen when Diamonds taps it is an unfamiliar orange-yellow, and she's not nearly good enough at reading Russian to make out more than a stray word without a translator.

ВГ: Простите меня, двоюродная сестра. Это трудно отслеживать часовых поясов, когда вы окутаны. Я надеюсь, что это не слишком поздно ночью, где вы.
ВГ: Бабушка говорит, что вы искали информацию о потенциальных пристанища здесь с семьей. я думаю, вы бы привлечь слишком много внимания от существующих криминальных элементов.
DD: < It would not be for myself. But no matter. I have alternatives.
ВГ: Хорошо. Я не хочу слышать о вашей смерти, Димушка. мы семья.
DD: > Please, spare me the platitudes of the soft-hearted. I get the point.
ВГ: Мир скоро заканчивается. Я предвижу, значительное, ужасное событие. Попробуйте дожить до этого критического момента, сестра.

The phone buzzes twice in Diamonds's hand, a silent alert, and she scrambles and erases the useless conversation before putting it away. By the time the first dark suit checks around the corner, Marlowe has fallen back against the wall, his pistol at the ready. Diamonds remains seated, partially collapsing the cue stick so that she can rest her hands on it without having to stand. The brace on the right hand should come off soon; she's been tempted to strip it off plenty, but straining the barely healed muscle and connective tissue with violent physical activity would be a stupid mistake. "Tell Hearts he's getting old," she tells the lieutenant - though with Hearts's shabby uniform standards, she only knows the lackey's rank by the familiar look of their face - "And sloppy."

"Says you," a gruff voice calls, echoing just a touch too loudly as Hearts stomps past the lieutenant before they can do more than look terrified at the sight of Diamonds. The other two thugs bobbling along in the suit card's wake are unmemorable and vague-faced, and Diamonds shoots the one on the left over Hearts's shoulder while Marlowe takes out the one on the right. Hearts flinches and scowls, rubbing his ear, while the lieutenant draws on Marlowe with a pistol of their own to match. "God dammit, Di, do yah have to fucking do that?"

"Minimize inessentials, Hearts." Diamonds inclines her head toward the lieutenant. "Well?"

Hearts watches her, sour-faced, and then relents. Like always. "Charlie's good," he says, batting a hand at the lieutenant until they lower their specibus with an injured look. "Not clear, but who the hell is, these days."

"Mm." Marlowe doesn't lower his guard, and Diamonds doesn't expect him to. Ignoring the glares being traded behind his back, Hearts continues forward and Diamonds rises to meet him. Something like sentiment almost makes her put out a hand to clasp his, but she's not that far gone. She pushes past the moment by turning on a heel and stepping over the puddle of blood that seeps under the crate, and he follows her up the stairs to the roof. "How have things been here?"

"You've been on the lam, and I've been up to my ass in feds," Hearts says, a complaint legitimate enough that Diamonds lets the exhausted whine in his voice pass without comment. "Die's freak kids took off and now he won't stop calling to screech at me to go after them. As if I've got the damn time." He scratches beneath his hat, and after a moment adds, "Also, there's a giant carapacian now."

"Didn't ask. Didn't care." Hearts grips her shoulder and squeezes as they reach the roof, hastily putting space between them when Diamonds glares. "Don't give me that look. Just - good to see you with your hat on straight, is all. Last time I saw you, you...weren't all there."

Diamonds snorts. "Please." She keeps going until she stands at the edge of the roof - away from the bodies, the air up here only stinks of the bay water. Out of the corner of her eye she spies Hearts go for his pocket after only a moment's pause, and when he wedges a cigar between his teeth she holds out her own lighter before he can so much as blink. He shrugs and cups a hand around the end of the cigar as she lights it, but his eyes are sharp as she draws out a cigarette. Little more than animal cunning, she tells herself. Even a broken clock is right twice a day, or something like that. She keeps the cigarette in her left hand, tucking the cue stick up the sleeve and hiding the right in a pocket. The first drag tastes like nothing at all, and the next is the same.

But it's something to occupy her hands while her phone sits heavy as a stone in her pocket. She's cut off all contact - all her other contracts put on hold, her network gone to ground at her signal, and any calls and messages from Felt members presumably still filtering through to the old number for the phone she destroyed. Only Yavari and Marlowe are sure to have a way to contact her from day to day, and only them because she can't guard Clubs and handle everything else at the same time.

Sometimes Clubs will beg a smoke off her, in the rare moments when he's conscious. But that's none of Hearts's business.
"We're still secure here," she says, letting smoke fall out of her mouth instead of breathing it in properly. The black, tarry cloud rising from Hearts's cigar is foul enough for the both of them. "Word from - the boss?"

It's only the faintest hitch. Hearts grunts, the white of his undershirt very obvious in the moonlight. "Same as ever. Probably knew those Scratch kids would fuck off before they did, and couldn't be assed to mention it to anyone." He sags his weight on one leg - no, he's favoring one side. She didn't notice a limp earlier, but it's there. "He asked about you."

"And?"

"I told him the truth - I didn't know shit about where you were or what you were up to." Before Diamonds can say anything, Hearts smooths his hand over his eyes, pinching the bridge of his nose. Up close, the skin under his eyes hangs in heavy bags. "Course, he probably got more outta me than I said straight out. Whatever you're doing about Clubs, Di, you better do it damn fast."

"I'm doing it now," she says, lightly.

The half-truth is worth it to see Hearts go from tired to bug-eyed in half a second. Diamonds holds the cigarette between her teeth as she experimentally bends the fingers of her right hand back by pressing against the palm of the left. Nothing more than a twinge of not-quite-pain. The embers at the end of the cigarette flare up as the wind gusts.

"By talking to me?" Hearts says, bewildered, and Diamonds sighs deeply.

"No, you lump." She plucks the cigarette out of her mouth - and then yanks the cigar out of his, stamping them both out with her boot. "By kidnapping you."

The shout from below cuts off with a hrgk that's too deep to be Marlowe; he needs to work on his technique, though. If it were anyone but Hearts here, Diamonds would have needed to rush to take them out before the yell put them on the defensive. As it is, Hearts throws a wounded look down at the smashed cigar, before tilting his head back and sighing the last of the smoke at the sky. "Really? You couldn't let me finish, first?"

"No. It smells horrid." She quickly assesses whether or not he has gained or lost a significant amount of weight since she last sized him up, but all appears to be as bulky as ever. Uncapping the needle in her pocket, she slides it home and depresses the plunger. There's more of him to knock out - she measured quite carefully, though. "Not to worry. Where we're going, currently, no one can see. Not even Scratch."

"M'not worried," Hearts says. He catches her elbow as she eases the needle out of the side of his neck and uses it to waveringly sit himself down, away from the roof's edge. "Fuckin' hell, what do you put in those things?"

"Enough."

Hearts has gone a little cross-eyed. "Jesus." Then he laughs, one leg folding up under him awkwardly. "Have fun carting my ass back down the stairs, yah maniac."

Diamonds sniffs. "You'll roll well enough. Trust me - I'm a professional."

"Yeah, yeah. Just don't knock the rest of my teeth out along the way."

"I make no promises."
This time, when Hearts laughs, she can hear it shake. Hmm. "Di? Do you know how fuckin' stupid it is for me to trust you?"

If he's looking up at her, she doesn't dare look down. That's fine. The view from up here isn't anything particularly special. Fairly standard warehouse district. Nothing to write home about - boxy buildings in their rows, broken up by streets just wide enough to accommodate heavy machinery and forklifts. "I'll take a wild guess, and say - very." Soft footsteps from the stairway tell her Marlowe has finished stowing the unconscious lieutenant somewhere they won't be found by anyone who might stumble across the bodies below.

As Hearts pitches over and slumps the rest of the way into unconsciousness, Diamonds saves his hat before it can get crumpled. Not that it's in good enough shape to be worth salvaging... "To the van with him," she instructs Marlowe, as Hearts begins to snore.

"Of course, ma'am." Marlowe hesitates. "Um. I may need Yavari to help lift him down the sta-"

"Roll him." Not waiting for an affirmative, Diamonds sends two rapid, blank messages to Yavari - time to leave - and heads back down the stairs. Hearts will be missed by the end of the night; despite everything, he is still nominally in charge of operations in the Seattle area.

But it's time, past time really, to pull him out before he cracks under Scratch's ever-watchful eye. Thinking of the void generator can only obscure his intentions for so much longer.

In for a dime, in for a dollar. She can't think of what possessed the good Doctor Lalonde to lift her shields for even the briefest of periods, but it was enough. Enough for Scratch to cast his eyes upon them, enough to have a memo sent out to the upper echelons of the Felt that Marlowe could intercept on Serious Business.

Enough to know the sleeper agents Diamonds had him set off prematurely were caught, and (apparently) successfully relieved of their mindgrubs. A lucrative gamble, indeed.

It means there are two parties in the world who are confirmed to have the ability to have mindgrubs surgically removed, and Diamonds Droog has a goddamn policy of not putting herself or her closest assets under the knife of someone already proven untrustworthy in the extreme. The coordinates for the shrouded Lalonde Laboratories may not be accurate for long; if Lalonde and her associates are smart, they may have already given up the place as compromised.

But it's a start. Before Diamonds can set her mind to any other objective, before she can so much as contemplate how to handle Scratch in the aftermath, this must be done.

With that in mind, she rips off the three main buckles clasping the brace around her wrist and hand, and flexes her fingers again. The scratch marks stand out almost white against the dark of her skin, the deepest cut a knoll of pale scar tissue below her ring finger. Surgery was needed to ensure the muscles and tendons healed without weakness, but the marks will fade with time.

She closes her hand into a fist.

Not even a twinge.

---

It starts, as always, with a Reckoning.

-
Alternia's nightmarish. Karkat can pick out elements of that world in what he knows about himself, about the old Alternian Empire that laid the foundation for so many aspects of troll culture today - and when he sees how all of it has been inherited from a world without humans to influence and soften the worst of it, how violence and death were so normal that people being crippled or hurt barely fazed them, his stomach turns. Even quadrants in their simplest form were reduced down to a matter of survival.

He doesn't feel any guilt or regret or even the memory of it when the world ends. It's clear that none of the young trolls on the screens have any real idea what they're getting into - except Aradia; surprise, surprise - but Alternia was being put out of its misery. If there were people (kids, they're all just little kids) worth saving, they probably would have been crushed under the Alternian grindstone regardless. In the end, it's not even the meteors that finish everyone off; it's Gl'bglyb, still playing at being Feferi's lusus, that opens its mouths and makes a noise so awful the game recording can only translate it as gibberish and a high pitched squeal that blows out three of the speakers.

Finally, he puts his claw on it. For the human's game session, the world dying was a tragedy because it was messy but safe, a generally not-shitty place filled with people whose idea of a good time didn't include violent games of FLARPing. In contrast, when that younger Karkat enters the Medium, it's with the mindset that whatever comes next can only be an improvement.

And the kicker? They're good at it.

Karkat mentally prepped himself for another gorefest of epic proportions based on how horribly fucking wrong the human game went. Hell, the moment Feferi reveals Gl'bglyb of all things got prototyped in the kernel sprite, Karkat expected a Horrorterror massacre within the hour. The universe's shortest round of Sgurb, ever. Having all of their lusii die might have been mildly traumatic at the time, particularly for the few like Nepeta and Kanaya and Tavros who were genuinely attached to their caretakers, but the custodial beasts' bodies all get popped into the kernels and revived in minutes. Gl'bglyb's enormity makes some of the Sgurb enemies evolve to the size of buildings, but they don't appear to have any other horrific traits. Maybe wiping out an entire galactic empire tired the Horrorterror out.

But aside from a few incidents, their violent compulsion as a species to compete and win, turned up to eleven by how fucked up Alternia was, actually drives them to finish puzzles and blast through their land quests under the illusion that the red team and blue team were competing against each other. Better still, having endless game-generated waves of giant, prototyped ogres and other enemies to fend off meant that Eridan and Vriska both distracted themselves with a massive competition to see who could make the most boonbucks and advance up the echeladder. Gamzee spends most of his time slumming it on Karkat's planet, munching on pies made out of sopor slime and dreaming on Prospit, and in general isn't a massive murderous tool. He's harmless, actually. Karkat feels like past Karkat didn't appreciate that rare window of stonerclown bliss while it lasted.

By the time they realized both teams belonged in one Sgurb game session, half of them were already conspiring with some version of Spades Slick to dethrone the Black Queen. It's engrossing.

It's also taking for fucking ever. They shut down the terminal around eleven that night because Jade is falling asleep on Rose's shoulder, and Eridan doesn't look too far behind.

But the recording still has so much footage left. The issue with successfully playing a game through to its conclusion, apparently, is that there's a bunch of filler - days and days where nothing important happened. Vriska and Tavros keep scouring random dungeons for treasure and experience rather than trying to solve their personal quests or hunt down their denizens, and Karkat can only take so much of Vriska's self-absorbed jawing coming from those screens before he wants to punch the current Vriska in the thorax in some kind of cross-universe defense mechanism. There's also a fuckton of adolescent hormones and frankly embarrassing quadrant gossip that will not stop happening, and Karkat can't look Terezi in the eyes once he realizes how bad his younger self had it for her. After Vriska gets fucking demolished by a mechanical Aradia and rises up to god tier, they decide that's most definitely enough for the night. Kanaya and Rose volunteer to pass on what they've observed to Nepeta and Equius, (the latter wouldn't let his barely healed moirail anywhere within a fifty foot radius of Gamzee, which caused something of a conflict of interest when Karkat didn't dare leave Gamzee somewhere out of sight long enough to pander to Equius's completely reasonable terror), and that must take hours, at the very least.

The next day, thankfully (Karkat can't believe that word just came out of his mouth), a future Dave barges in through the door right when Vriska starts arguing with Sollux that she should be in charge of fast forwarding to the important parts, since she thinks she knows what they need to see. Karkat knows for a fucking fact she means the parts where I do cool things, conveniently skimming over any more of my blatant fuckups in the process, because Vriska is predictable as fuck. The future Dave hands Sollux a piece of printer paper covered in Karkat's writing and then walks straight back out the door, waving at them casually before disappearing back to whenever he came from. It turns out to have time stamps for all the relevant parts of the game recording they need to see, and that's how they skip right from Vriska hitting god tier to Vriska helping the Derse dreamers and Slick and a very awake Karkat oust the Black Queen from Derse. Through some convoluted fuckery, Terezi turns up halfway through to save them from their own stupidity - and then cackles like a fucking lunatic as she launches a meteor to exile the White Queen, too. Which explains why neither Queen knew fucking anything about the end of the troll session.

After Terezi's moment of absolute dipshittery, the time stamps Sollux fast-forwards to show how quickly the previously competent troll session fucks itself in the wastechute with a jackhammer. Before Karkat and Kanaya - arguably the only fucking sane people in that entire session, Karkat thinks, sourly - get sidetracked making a genesis frog from scratch on the Land of Rays and Frogs, everyone except Tavros polishes off their denizens. They don't bother talking to any of the denizens, either; Karkat watches his screen, and here remembers looking down at this teeny fucking denizen - barely larger than Crabdad, a tiny little blue-black serpent limned with cyan light, shining faintly like a distant blue moon. The outside of this palace looks like any old craggy black ruin in the blood-drowned wasteland of Pulse and Haze, but this inner chamber is carved out of the rock and paneled with pale sheets of opal, the denizen curled up in a scalloped dish in the center of a pool of blood. It has same name as his old web browser. Accepting and sad and gentle, offering him a choice that isn't a choice at all because it already knows he won't listen, watching with eyes like soft stars as he lunges for it in a sudden, despairing fury.

He snaps out of it in time for Eridan's screen to white out.

Karkat adds the grimlight Horrorterror to the white board-in-progress before anyone else can comment. He's dreamed this part already, so it'll be nice (by some excruciatingly painful definition of the word) to see what happened without all his weird nightmare tangents. He and Sollux and Kanaya go to retrieve Eridan while Vriska lords it over the people readying themselves to fight the Black King on the Battlefield, and -

Well.

They find him.

Karkat just isn't sure why it takes him so long to realize Gamzee followed.
“Eridan's land is hereby renamed 'Land of Fuck You and Slimy Nubfuckers,'” Karkat says.

These new death angels smell like how Karkat imagines swallowing blood and rotten meat would taste when Sollux's psionics burn them, but it's the only way to keep them from pulling themselves back together. The ones that lurk in the sludge are worse; every time Karkat thinks they've found a clear area, a new angel will slither up from under the smooth white surface and try to wrap them up in acidic, creeping wings. More circle overhead, things with sharp teeth and wheels covered in eyes that have grafted themselves onto the dark angels that Eridan kept whining about all through the game.

"Theconded," Sollux says, as Kanaya chainsaws the head off another monster. Sollux chars the decapitated head into ash, but Karkat's close enough to see sweat streaming down the goldblood's face. After the tenth freak angel nearly tore Sollux's head off from behind, Karkat stayed back to cover him; Sollux is still in one of his 'I'm a high level psionic, I don't need you people with actual weapons grubsitting me' moods, but the other troll can't keep this kind of constant burn up forever. Karkat gets the impression there's a significant difference between lifting things and incinerating them in terms of psychic effort. If Sollux blows his fucking brains out before they find Eridan or escape this hellhole of a land, Karkat and Kanaya are probably screwed.

And none of them drop grist. Eridan complained about that, Karkat remembers, and then ignored Karkat when he scathingly tried to point out that maybe, just maybe, that meant Eridan wasn't supposed to be killing his land's consorts in the first place. That maybe there would be fucking consequences for shooting up the inhabitants of every major village on the map instead of trying to complete land quests. Sure, they were annoying side quests, but killing the locals is still fucking pointless.

These can't possibly be the original consorts, not after Eridan's fucking free for all, but if Eridan has been fighting something like these this whole time -

"We should have concentrated on finding that last frog," Kanaya says, and guilt needles Karkat like a cold knife. She's fighting still but favoring her right arm badly; it looks painfully raw; acid from the canal splashed onto her skin, leaving jade-tinged lower layers of skin exposed to the air.

"The thing got squashed or something," he argues, but the excuse sounds as flimsy now as it did the first time he tried it on for size. Kanaya hadn't wanted to give up the search, even after weeks of no new leads. "The Reckoning is already in full-swing, we can't waste time on trying to find one tiny croakbeast anymore. It'll be fine."

What he can't say out loud is that he'd rather have Eridan where he can see him than worry about the potential consequences of not finishing all the genesis sequencing. He thinks - he knows - he was one of the last people to talk to Eridan before this, and if he missed something in that conversation, so busy being irritated by Eridan's whining that he overlooked a genuine call for help... So what if they end up with a universe where up is down or something fucking stupid like that. Whichever one he chose to prioritize, he was always going to blame himself for failing at the other.

"This ith - tho weird -" For a second Karkat thinks Sollux is about to pass out; the troll sways and his whole face goes pale before he shakes his head and brings a hand full of red lightning around to catch another angel and throw it away. "They don't even registher as enemies on the therver. I jutht keep getting thome weird 'chaoth corruption' type error."

"Oh, joy! Eridan went and broke the fucking game right when we were done playing it!" Karkat uses both sickles to carve off a wing, leaving the lizard abomination to snarl and writhe on the black stone with hate in its creepy eyes. "Why am I not in any way surprised?"
"Over here!" Kanaya calls. She's gone further down the street than Karkat and Sollux, and when Sollux finishes scorching this latest angel the two of them sprint to join her. Karkat keeps one eye on the nearest canal at all times, his head aching with the effort of watching the iridescent surface for signs of movement. There's something horrific about the canals that burns his mind the same way flecks of it have left holes burned in his clothing. Then he nearly skids past Kanaya as Sollux stops, and has to catch himself on the pink fabric of her dress to turn and see what the two of them are staring at.

What's sad is, Karkat called it. Eridan is sitting on a heap of dead bodies, a gory throne that's unfortunately lacking in gore. The dark road spreads out before them in a paved strip that runs right up against a rectangular pool of dark water. At the far end a pallid white aura of grimlight burns around Eridan, a shade off from the brightness of the sky. It's clear the dark angels are dead, however; all of their diamond eyes are flat and staring, their bodies pitted with holes where Eridan shot them. They look small and mundane compared to the sickly white imitations roaming the streets and the ramparts above, piled up into a throne for Eridan.

Eridan has also gone white, dark tears like oil slicks streaming from his eyes, and when the thing riding his mind tilts his head to inspect the three trolls, the current Karkat is struck by the thought that this is what a grimlight tanglebuddy looks like. Aside from the tar streaming down his remote face, it's all white: Eridan's stupid pompous cloak, his shirt bleached with the Aquarius sign etched in royal violet, and wings with razor sharp, crystal feathers shifting and twitching with a will of their own. Not-Eridan holds something in its claws, too, something small and white and spherical, and it's a punch in the gut to recognize the cue ball.

Back then, though, his younger self had no idea what to make of this fresh fuckery. Of course his first reaction was to yell at it. "Eridan, what the fuck!"

"Uh, Karkat," Kanaya starts, because Kanaya's not a suicidal moron.

"Let me guess! You decided to alchemize one of these pieces of shit to make yourself this travesty, and accidentally unleashed a new breed of flying lizard monster on your land that totally broke the game. Bravo!" Karkat kicks one of the stray bodies for emphasis. He regrets it when the force knocks the dark angel into the lightless water, and the pool swallows it up without a sound. He can't see the bottom in all the darkness.

"KK, I don't think that's...oh, thhit," Sollux says. Kanaya catches the goldblood when he pitches forward, clutching his head, but it's a close thing. "Fuck. That's one of the outer gods. And I brought my Dersite body. Fuck."

As a Prospit dreamer who never bothered to wake up on Prospit, Karkat only knows what he does because the Derse dreamers would never stop complaining about hearing whispers in their dreams during eclipses. Well, Equius didn't appear to hear anything, and Feferi chatted with her fucked up Glubsprite before it vanished like all the other sprites, and Aradia has apparently been too dead and robotic to say much of anything at all. But Nepeta and Eridan never failed to dredge the topic up and beat it like a dead hoofbeast at least once a memo, and that was enough for Karkat to want everyone to shut the fuck up about their dumbass dreams for the duration of the game.

None of them mentioned possession being a thing. Horrorterrors aren't supposed to involve themselves in a game session beyond whispers.

But Eridan stands, considering them with eyes that don't show any sign of recognition, and Karkat shrinks back. Thirteen year old Eridan shouldn't be intimidating, but Horrorterrors tend to do that. Compared to how young Kanaya and Sollux look, Eridan looks -
"I'm sure Karkat's sinuses. As he watches the white mire below starts to churn with submerged wings. "Until you're in. It's too late. Malā'ikah, please tell me there's another gate out of here."

By this point, Karkat's caught on to the fact that they're fucked. "Kanaya."

She grits her teeth and spares him only a fleeting look. "Three."

"Idiot," Sollux hisses.

"Whatever you are, give Eridan back," Kanaya demands. She's so brave, she's so ridiculously, ludicrously brave, and wow, that's one of the soppiest friendthoughts Karkat has ever had for someone. Hearing her makes him straighten his shoulders and wish he could look as badass as tiny child-Kanaya with one arm supporting Sollux and the other wielding a giant chainsaw, her face a stormy glare. "You get until the count of three."

"Malā'ikah tilts Eridan's head to the other side. "No? We're out of time."

But the Horrorterror smiles. The wings fold over Eridan's shoulders and across the front like a mantel, and it takes a fluid step toward them. Sollux says further, making a choked noise.

"...Two," Kanaya continues, this time with clear hesitation.

There's a second pair - or maybe the wings break in two, so that another sweep can fold back around Eridan's waist. Holding out the cue ball to one side, Malā'ikah waits as an angel's dead hand rises up from the pile to clasp the orb.

By this point, Karkat's caught on to the fact that they're fucked. "Kanaya."

She grits her teeth and spares him only a fleeting look. "Three."

"Idiots," Sollux hisses.

The last dip of wings covers Eridan's eyes, black tears seeping through to run down the feathers in thin rivulets. "You're dead now. The苍白 are dead."

"That's right. Eridan's flesh is a mess, it says. "Now when we are s o... h u n g r y ."

Sollux barely manages to float them to safety as the arena starts to spill over with white acid, pouring in through the streets as the canals overflow. Malā'ikah doesn't pursue them, but Karkat can feel it watching them, looking through them, darkly amused as they land on top of a parapet. The grimlight sludge doesn't flow into the dark pool, though. A thought occurs to Karkat, his mind spinning in a million different directions as he tries to think how they're going to get Eridan to snap out of it - and he shakes Sollux's shoulder until the dazed troll tries to chomp on his hand. "Sollux, check where we are on your cheat map. Please tell me there's another gate out of here."

"It isn't cheating, KK," he says, like this is really the time to argue about dumbass hoofbeast shit like that. "And I'm a little busy here. My head feelth like it' th going to explode." He sways; Kanaya's white-knuckled grip is the only thing keeping him upright. "What am I looking for."

"Oh, for - wherever the fuck we are right now, plus gate." Karkat looks over the side of their building. "Fuck. Hurry your hacker ass. Sollux, we don't have all night."

"'re tri e v e e t h e m', 'm alak h i m'," the whisper sings, with a pressure that's sharp in Karkat's sinuses. As he watches the white mire below starts to churn with submerged wings.
Kanaya leans Sollux against the nearest battlement. “Whatever that thing is, could it have something to do with Eridan's denizen? His land quest?” she asks. "None of the other Derse dreamers went through something like this with their emissaries -"

“No,” Karkat says, only half sure he's not bullshitting on the fly. “I mean, fuck, maybe Eridan lied his fish face off, but he said he killed Phosphorus ages ago.” He'd beat Vriska to it by a narrow margin, which she'd blamed on Tavros slowing her down. "He wouldn't shut up about it. Once he realized no one with a functional fucking pair of pancells to rub together would answer him, he invited me and Feferi to a memo and monologued.Fuck!"

The first of the next round of grimlight angels lunges over the wall to their left, keening and slopping acid over the dark stone as it strikes at Kanaya. She meets it with her chainsaw, sawing through the thing's lower jaw and then switching her grip to cut its head off. Karkat spins to cover her back, using his sickles to hack into the second one and then quickly disembowel a third. Maybe he should have slept before this; he's starting to feel lightheaded, and the weight of responsibility is making his stomach curdle. He's the one who brought them here, the one whose orders all of these sad fucks have been following since they realized the two teams needed to work together to finish the whole session. Whether they choose to stay and get themselves fucking destroyed trying to save Eridan, or cut and run and abandon the violetblood to whatever fucked up shit he's gotten himself into, it's eventually going to come down to Karkat. Everything in him screams that they can't ditch Eridan no matter how much of an unrelenting taintchafe he is; but is it worth losing Kanaya or Sollux?

Dodging the spray of acidic blood from the disembowelment leaves him off balance. The next angel wallops him from the side with its trailing tail, leaving a sharp burn across his ribs as he crashes into Sollux. "No, you fucking -" Sollux says. For an instant Karkat thinks they're about to get their faces ripped off - another grimlight thing joins the angel, this one less of a winged lizard and more of a wheel of eyes with too many teeth - then Sollux pushes Karkat down and sends a sharp bolt of red psionics scything through the angel's face, tossing the wheel away with a flicker of blue. "Okay. Thhit, I think I got it," the goldblood says, panting. "Minor brain chemistry adjustment. That won't have any long term side effects at all."

“No, never,” Karkat says, rolling his eyes. He gets back on his feet and takes a running leap at the next horrific thing, pinning its wing to the ground with his sickles so that Kanaya has a clear shot to sever the limb at the shoulder joint. They fought together so much on LoRaF, trying to stoke the Forge, that this sort of cooperation feels natural. But holding this roof won't be enough - they need to reach Eridan, somehow -

"Motherfuck, that took some miracles. This stuff is all, like, burning and shit. How does it even do that? Shit's crazy."

It's the last voice in the fucking Incipisphere that Karkat wants to hear right that second. Of all the trolls to follow them here against orders, of course it would be the slime stoner clown. "How did you even get here?!" Karkat demands, as Gamzee somehow slouches his way past the explosion of viscera that erupts when Sollux tears another angel in two. "I told you to fucking stay with Tavros, you pandamaged fuck!"

Gamzee beams at him, all uncomfortable adoration in the middle of a fight. It hasn't stopped freaking Karkat out since they first met in person; it's one thing to have a weirdly docile, constantly high purpleblood pale flirting with you over Trollian, and quite another to have the real thing hanging around and offering sopor slime to your land's mini-bosses in an attempt to 'help.' And sure enough - "Came to help, best friend," he says. "Tav is chilling with Nepsis."

He stands there, beaming, until Karkat is forced to drag him out of the way and cut another angel's throat with his sickles. Sollux fries the body with a blast of psionics, but now they're stuck with Gamzee, looking around at a loss for what to do, and it's another weight in Karkat's stomach. Gamzee's mostly harmless (something he never thought he say about a coldblood in a million sweeps) but only occasionally good in a strife. It's not like Karkat actually likes him or anything - but as friend-dictator in chief, he's responsible for Gamzee's sorry life, too.

Then Malā’ikah appears in the center of the roof, and it all goes to shit. Karkat loses track of Gamzee once Aradia arrives - or one of the failed Aradias, he can't really tell the soulbots apart - with a squadron of her hoarded failures to drop a meteor on the worst of the Horrorterror's abominations. She's supposed to be saving them for the assault on the Black King, but Sollux called her, and the goldblood rolls his eyes at Karkat's furious shouting because they both know none of them would have been able to drag Eridan's limp meatsack out of Malā’ikah's clutches without that lucky break.

He notices Gamzee again when they finish slapping Eridan awake, but Karkat is preoccupied with negotiating with Vriska - he lets her take point on the King if she'll shut up and keep a psychic check on Eridan to keep the tanglebuddy from taking over again.

(It doesn't occur to him that Vriska's juvenile mind control might not be the reason Eridan is able to pull himself together to help fight the Black King. That maybe it just found someone new to dick around with. Not until much, much later.)

He definitely notices when Gamzee wanders up to him near the end of the fight. The Black King is a quarter of its former size, the remainder hacked off and tossed into the Medium's empty space by Aradia's [Army of the Ages]. Feferi's finished carving out its immense vocal cords to prevent a Vast Glub, which was her main job in this fight. But the Black King fights harder the closer Karkat thinks they're getting to the end, slamming Eridan down against a lily pad, snatching Tavros's rocketchair out of the sky and crushing it so that Terezi has to swoop in and catch Tavros before he falls. Karkat's working his way back up the King carapacian's side to rejoin the fight at its head; falling that distance hurt, on top of all the other injuries he's accumulated throughout the strife, but healing his injuries is something he's good at.

He's the only one low enough, at the moment, to see Gamzee stumble like an idiot right behind the Black King's massive hoof. Karkat curses a blue streak and leaps down a hundred feet to the nearest huge knee, his legs burning with the strain. 'Get out of the way,' he wants to scream, because Gamzee's only role in this fight was to lightly tap the King to loosely meet the requirements that all players participate in the endgame fight and then back the fuck off.

He doesn't understand when Gamzee raises a claw and taps the back of the dark hoof. He can't see Gamzee's face from this angle.

But he sees the flare of dark purple that races up the Black King's leg in cracks, like shattered glass under Karkat's feet. It runs in grooves all the way up to the King's crown before fading away. Karkat blinks - and up above, hears Vriska's elated cry of triumph as she makes an impossibly lucky roll of the dice. When he tears his eyes away from Gamzee to watch, Vriska lashes out and hits the Black King square in the center of the highest forehead with her strongest attack.

At the time, he thinks his eyes are playing tricks on him. It's not possible that the Black King shatters in exactly the same places that lit up purple, like every weak point being hammered at once. The carapacian is fucking enormous thanks to Feferi's prototyped lusus, and collapses into so many huge shards when it dies that there's no way Karkat could piece together precisely where the breaks happened.

It's not possible, he tells himself, because that's the only thing that keeps him from inwardly freaking the fuck out when Gamzee looks at him and smiles among the rubble, artless and oblivious.

That is how they forget about the cue ball, left behind on Eridan's land, a lonely speck of white against the white sheet of grimlight that flooded the city streets.

That is how they win the game.

But they don't see the Lord of Time. Not then.

Karkat and Kanaya had finished the genesis frog quest in a rush, but when they reach it, the victory platform at the end of the game doesn't look any worse for the wear. Ha. He knew it would be fine. Everyone's riding the post-strife buzz - Vriska's practically jittering out of her thief-jamas, on fire with what she sees as her single-handed victory over the King - and between Feferi and Karkat's efforts they've somehow emerged with everyone alive and not bleeding out of multiple orifices. It's an undeniable victory, and after so many weeks of bullshit and level grinding, it feels so sweet. Whatever's on the other side of this door, he's ready to sleep for a week. He will be the fucking god of sleep if that's what it takes.

He puts out a claw to turn the doorknob. It hums with cool power under his palm, filaments of blue plasma tingling as they dart out to touch his hand. At the very center, he can see a tiny white spirograph.

Then time cracks.

-

It doesn't have a sound to Karkat - the deliberate absence of sound, more like. A silent scream as the door in front of him splits in two. Aradia's metal claws snatch him back as she shouts a warning. Karkat stares at the slice in front of him, the way that reality abruptly disappears. The doorknob waits for him to turn it, but the door itself hangs in two pieces, the top half stuck in the frame as though the missing chunk through the middle means nothing.

Widening fractures eat up their lands as Aradia ushers them all to the safety of one last meteor. Later, when they fall into exhausted, shocked sleep, the others report Prospit and Derse being swallowed by the spreading cracks. Then their dreamselfs must die, or whatever happens to things that time takes - all they can see when they sleep is a rainbow buzz of static.
Karkat knows that rainbow static. After Equius and Terezi's reports of what happened when they died and went god tier, he thinks he knows exactly who took the bodies. Aradia or Gamzee or maybe both working in tandem, like the scheming fucks that they've apparently been all along.
Collecting dreamselfs and keeping them in Gamzee's sylladex, preserving them through the scratch of the two games so that they could be used in Aradia and Sollux's cheatsy god tier mod bullshit.

No wonder Karkat has been having fucked up nightmares. Forget all that Skaian cloud bull, he's been waking up in a captchalogue card. And the one time he managed to drag himself out, Aradia shoved him right back down before he could realize he was on Prospit. Between Gamzee's tendency to leak madness and Aradia's meddling...

Seriously. Of all the people to end up masterminding these secret plans, why did it have to be those two?

The games begin to overlap, starting with the obvious - Pesterchum; entire stretches of the humans' game session got cut short whenever they had conversations with trolls, who could pick and choose at what point in the timeline they wanted to smear their unique brand of nonsensical feces everywhere. Some, Kanaya being the standout example, try to help in their own ways. Karkat makes a fucking ass of himself, believing that the cracks in time must have originated from something gone horribly wrong in the human session. Terezi and Vriska start vying to see who can get their respective chosen human to progress furthest in the game, which naturally leads to a doomed timeline or ten and the creation of Davesprite from one particular timeline where John fucking died in an entirely new way due to this fucking shit. It also ultimately leaves Dave in possession of 99% of the stock in the boonbucks market, a ton of which he then unloads in Terezi's account in order to complete the circle of stupidity.

What a fucking travesty. With the rest of the trolls busy doing pointless things like amputating Tavros and brooding around the meteor and napping, any kind of competence they demonstrated while playing their own game takes a flying fucking leap off the cliff of redeemability. Most of them don't even see the point of trying - Aradia's soulbot spontaneously explodes and it barely fazes them.

According to the questionable time stamps, the murder party happens in fits and starts over the course of hours, not quite in tandem with the human session going to hell in a handbasket. Eridan decides to fry anyone who doesn't agree with his pancracked plan to go try to join forces with the ultimate destructive force closing in on their meteor; Vriska decides, in turn, to go completely fucking rogue and try to duke it out with the Lord of Time by herself. By the time things hit the brakes, Kanaya and Feferi and Tavros are all dead, Sollux is blind and short half of his teeth, and Karkat's doing his best impression of a limp, sniveling wriggler as he makes out with Kanaya's corpse.

In the present, Kanaya pats him on the back. "I appreciate the effort."

"Not helping," Karkat says, voice muffled, from where he's slammed his head against the table. Only partially out of mortification; he's also trying not to throw up at having watched yet another batch of thirteen year olds die horribly. Kanayagets back up some time later as her rainbow drinker stuff kicks in, long after the younger Karkat has vacated the room in a panic, but it still hurts. And it's all fucked up.

Gamzee's deterioration, in comparison, is more gradual. Every time Gamzee pops up in a memo or a chatlog, the purpleblood has been dismissed out of hand by everyone else on the meteor. He wanders off on his own in a daze, and no one goes after him. It makes Karkat cringe in frustration, because now that the whole thing is laid out bare in front of him it's clear that Gamzee having the freedom and time to completely flip his shitcakes was the direct result of no one giving a fuck.

Dave might be a catalyst for the breakdown - or he might buy them a little more time - it's hard to tell. Where the past versions of John and Jade tend to block the trolls whenever they got sick of the trolling, and Rose turned the trolling back on the perpetrators with interest, past Dave would talk with them for hours. Whole loops of his time fuckery are dedicated to memeing with Terezi. He shows Gamzee an idiotic music video and Gamzee almost appears to lose it - and then settles in to rap with Dave some more. The beats are frighteningly sick.

Strike that. Karkat wants to pretend he never had that thought. The rapping is just as annoying and pointless as any other rap to ever filter through Dave's mouth.

But then Dave trails off, responding less and less as the human session starts to dissolve into elder god-induced chaos, and Gamzee is left to swab up the last dregs of sopor slime from empty pie tins and mumble to himself in memos no one responds to.

Until Lil Cal does.

No one can tell where the puppet appears from - it slinks out of the shadows of the meteor and wraps itself around Gamzee's shoulders. Soon Gamzee stops using Trollian and starts acting like the puppet is talking back. Lil Cal doesn't respond (not in a way anyone can hear, anyway) while Gamzee grows more agitated, and eventually, it places plush hands on either side of his face, with a smoothness of motion that makes Karkat's skin crawl, and turns Gamzee like he's the puppet so that he stares at an empty corner of the room, and the screen whites out.

Tracing his actions past that point becomes next to impossible. They have to experience Nepeta and Equius being brutally beaten to death from their own perspectives, and neither troll resurrects afterward. They're gone, just as abruptly as Feferi, and that's it. End of story. Gamzee temporarily collides with Eridan and Vriska, but before it can move past trash talking, Kanaya interrupts in order to murder Eridan so hard that Karkat is both disgusted and awed that Eridan would have the globes to try to take her on again.

But Kanaya's not perfect. She punches Vriska and kicks Gamzee so hard that both of them go flying, which does nothing to actually neutralize them. Gamzee's blanked out screen mocks them with their own inability to know what he does in the interim, while Vriska's younger self flies off to sit on the uppermost point of the meteor and brood and talk.

To.

John.

It's fucking flagrantly pale. She unloads all her 'woe is me, I killed Tavros and also let me tell you all the horrible things I've ever done in my life in a twisted sympathy play' bullshit on his head, and a universe away, John responds by being reasonably freaked out by her explanation of the horrors of Alternian troll culture. Thank fuck. Karkat hoped the Gamzee thing was a freak incident, but no. John has a pale magnetism that is capable of reeling in bloodthirsty trolls from another universe. Who's going to try to chat him up next? It's such a fun guessing game! Karkat turns in his seat to stare at Vriska, and something in his current facial expression inspires Vriska to yell, "I don't want him!" She seizes Terezi and throws the tealblood through the wall with such force that it frees the sideways whiteboard that Jade lodged there so long ago, and absconds.

Good.
When Gamzee next emerges, on Terezi's screen, he leaves Lil Cal to whisper in her ear as she investigates the corpses of her friends, plants evidence for her to find, all with dark smears of grim shit trickling over the open wounds where Nepeta tore his face apart. Terezi solves the Vriska problem by stabbing her in the back, and who can say for sure whether she really believed that Vriska couldn't be reasoned with, or if it was the influence of the hellpuppet lingering over her all the way up the stairs. As far as Sburb - or Sgrub, or whatever the hell cosmos warping video game currently holds sway over the meteor while it's rocketing between sessions - is concerned, Vriska's death was just or something. Whichever it is, she's done for.

Just in time for Aradia to wake up - and for Gamzee himself to fizzle back into view - and for the time stamps to go to complete shit. Half of the remaining codes left by the future Dave now involve infinity signs, map coordinates, negatives, fractions, and at least one equation for a polynomial graph crammed in where the minute mark should be, and they work. While the last living trolls on the meteor cluster around Vriska's dead body, the Maid of Time is zooming back to before Sgrub ever started to snap her own neck and steal the body before Sollux can vaporize it - she's setting all her soulbots to explode on command, so that she can blow up Derse and force her own god tiering - and (Karkat fucking called it) she's severing the chain that ties down the moon where the Derse dreamers sleep so that it drifts out of the path of a crack in time.

But she doesn't go for the bodies; Gamzee does. Which is entirely fucking typical and to be expected. His recording flickers from Prospit to Derse and then - then to Derse again, but something's off about it. There's only four towers on the moon where there should be five, and massive structural damage with bits and pieces of the planet drifting off into the path of meteors, and -

--

He lets the hammerkind swing between his feet where he sits, swaying as Derse rocks and pitches underneath him. If he turns his head just so, and looks with eyes most motherfucking askew, he can read words meant to be heard. It's a new thing. The horrors have fucked off and left part of his mind(s?) trailing off toward the abyss, at an angle to what is and what should be, and he looks upon it all with dizzying clarity. No more fraudulent blasphmemes, no more sickening unrighteousness.

TG: okay everyone shut the fuck up i need to concentrate

So many possible ways for this moon to shake apart. A tap of a claw against one of the seams lights up the whole thing with wicked cracks, pinpoints of weakness where the barrage of the Reckoning has already done a motherfucking number on this shit, and he smiles as he hauls the hammer back to swing.

TG: fuck

The hammer slams into the nearest weak point, and Rage reaches out with raw whimsy to find what's needed to finish the job. It rolls out through him in a juddering wavelength of vertigo, creeps out to leash one of the last of the meteors; a nudge and a twist and it comes barreling down toward him, a vessel of destruction most imminent. He cartwheels out of the way, out of space, and comes back down hard and fast somewhere different in time to watch Derse collapse in on itself.

TG:...

TG: youve got to be kidding m-

Gamzee scrapes another drying splot of green blood from his cheek, flicking it out from under his claw absently as he hums. His paint's a motherfucking mess.
Of all the times for the idiot humans to start messaging them back. When Karkat has his sickles in sweaty hands, and he smells like a cult trench with dried blood on the backs of his hands and his lips where he didn't wipe all of it away. Up here in the thin layer of artificial atmosphere between them and the meteor and the black all around, the spaces between stars and cracks and weaving tentacles, here it almost feels like the rare clear nights when Karkat snuck out onto the roof of his hive and watched the two moons in the sky without worrying (too much) that another troll might wander into the hivering and catch sight of him. It's just that Kanaya's awash in her own blood and Eridan's, and Terezi's kneeling over Vriska's body with unseeing eyes fixed on the cerulean blue puddle slowly soaking into the black of her pants, and the troll walking out of the darkness over the meteor's too-close horizon is splattered with blue and green so thick it looks like paint, smeared together and still wet, and would Nepeta and Equius still be alive if Karkat hadn't sent Equius after Gamzee like the sickest fucking excuse for a coward ever to call himself leader? Would they have been okay if Karkat had never seen them?

Karkat has felt like vomiting out of self-hatred before, but this moment - this troll Kodak moment right here - with Vriska who never knew when to quit dead on the floor and the blood of two of his shitty friends on his and Gamzee's claws alike and Tavros and Eridan and Feferi - fuck, Feferi -

He wants to sit down and just. Just wait. Aradia said the cracks in time would catch up eventually, if they didn't adjust the meteor's course and aim for the human session. They've dodged all the Horrorterrors so far because none of them will risk drawing close but something will reach down and squash Karkat out of existence, surely. This is a prime opportunity. Or maybe it'll just be Gamzee, stalking toward them with a warhammerkind dragging behind him.

Yeah. Probably Gamzee. What a fucking plot twist. Karkat sucks in a breath and lets it out, and the thin air doesn't really sink in, and he doesn't want anyone else to die.

His phone hums in his pocket, the annoying little Trollian jingle that only goes off for group memos he's invited to. He bets it's some achronological Harley, come to torment him in his last waking minutes, oblivious to her own impending doom. He can't bring himself to look; if he puts his sicklekind away now, whatever he holds next will probably just fall through his weak, shaky claws.

Kanaya hisses - a sound that's not quite troll, not anymore - and her chainsaw flickering back into existence is what nudges Karkat out of his nerveless daze. "We can take him," she says, all confidence, but Karkat is still frozen in place, watching Gamzee's feet slowly pace toward them to the beat of stupid, ominous honks, while Kanaya does the work of dragging Terezi back onto her feet. For a moment Terezi looks as lost holding her canekind as Karkat feels. But then she snaps back to attention, her lips pulling back from sharp teeth to snarl at Gamzee. Sollux is - looking in the entirely wrong direction, okay, but that's understandable considering he's fucking blind now and he's talking into his headset oh for fuck's sake.

-- ectoBiologist [EB] opened memo on board R4INBOW RUMPUS P4RTYTOWN at ±±:±±:±± -- EB: shit! we forgot the trolls!

EB: oh crap oh crap karkat! and vriska!
TA: what ab0ut me and GA? what are we, ch0pped liver?
EB: TA? GA? i don't know if we ever talked except maaybe once?
GG: it's good to hear from you anyway! how are you guys?
TA: eh, i pr0bably have a few new blind sp0ts but i can't see them s0 it's all g00d.
TT: I spoke with Kanaya a few times, but obviously not recently, depending on when you may be.
How is she?
TA: busy. we're all pretty busy as it turns out, eheheh.
TA: hang On a c0uple minutes, we have a juggal0 crisis t0 deal with bef0re the 0thers can get back online.
TA: fuck i l0ve n0t having a lisp anym0re, this is great. having half my teeth kn0cked 0ut was the best thing ever.
TT: Alright, I'll bite. What happened?
GG: yeah, spit it out!
TG: we were all dead ten minutes ago and you people just want to jump right back into pun hell
TG: tell me when it stops
EB: come on dave, don't go!
TG: too late im out
EB: alright...but if you leave, it's your floss!
TG: my bro did not die for this TA: i'd laugh but my m0uth is full 0f gummy bl00dy g00dness and i have t0 preserve the teeth that are sticking ar0und f0r the l0ng haul.

The indignation at Sollux chatting away while Karkat is in the middle of angstily contemplating his own shittiness in the grand scheme of the universe gets Karkat's blood pumping again, at least. He jerks his gaze away from Sollux, past Kanaya and Terezi, and glares at Gamzee head on. With the waxy face paint and streaks of black and blue and green and fresh, seeping purple wounds that match the spread of Nepeta's clawkind, Karkat barely recognizes the face underneath. Gamzee's voice is a nightmare, too, all the rattling growl of a coldblood ready to tear off heads. It wasn't just Trollian fucking up; he seems to have lost all volume control, vacillating between low, marrow-grinding murmur and hoarse, throttling scream. "Best motherfucking FRIEND," he says, laughing. "You come to make me get my reconsider on AT FUCKING LAST?"

But his eyes aren't right. Karkat gets stuck there, and it strikes him that meeting Gamzee's eyes might have been a terrible mistake, because he can't seem to look away.

"Karkat. Karkat," Kanaya says, urgently. "Are you alright?" She looks to him like he's still in charge after how badly he's screwed them all over. Terezi doesn't; Terezi and Vriska, always two wildcards and royal pains in his ass, and after all the shit Terezi pulled with the White Queen and Spades, Karkat resigned himself to the fact that he is apparently deeply, deeply concupiscently attracted to trolls with a taste for conniving and cahootery. Terezi's nostrils flare and she orients herself directly at Gamzee instead. Kanaya would stop and listen to his reasoning before swinging, if Karkat asked her to. Probably. Terezi will do what she wants, cackling at his dumbstruck face all the while. "We might still be able to slap some sense into him. If - if you hate him, and he sounds as though he hates you, and - perhaps -"

"He's guilty of the deliberate obfuscation of justice," Terezi snaps, and there's still cerulean blood along the sharp edge of her sword, dripping off in jittery drops as her hand trembles. "And t-tampering with evidence! Doctor Honeytongue can testify that he must have been responsible!"

"Do you humans have popped grainkernels on your planet?" Sollux is babbling into the headset. "Because I wish I had some right now." He's still facing the entirely wrong direction.

They're right and they're wrong, at the same time. Because it's not hate in Gamzee's eyes as he and Karkat stare at each other.
And Karkat doesn't want any more of his friends to die.

TA: 0h man this shit is wild
EB: how many of the trolls were there total, exactly? the only other one i remember really is whatshersname davesprite won't let me talk to!
TG: is he still on about that whole deal come on terezi is chill as fuck
TG: dude she got my john killed
TG: you think this timeline sucks balls but at least its not doomed
TG: watching it all go dark around you because theres nowhere left to go
TG: knowing everything you suffered didn't make a damn bit of difference
TG: because it didn't matter enough to be worth anything
TG: laying it on a little heavy there dude
TG: okay you know what fuck all that i can be fucking pissed if i fucking want to none of this emotionally dead shit IM A BIRD FUCK IT

So he jumps in before Terezi can. By the time he and Gamzee collide he doesn't even have his sickles in his claws anymore, they're on the ground behind him instead of captchalogued where he could reach them if this went south - but Gamzee screams and rattles under Karkat's showshing like his skin can't hold him together anymore, doesn't claw at Karkat or push him away, and maybe if Karkat hadn't sent Equius instead, if he'd gone to take care of Gamzee himself instead of being a coward, he could have headed this off before it even began.

He's good at making things his fault. There's a haze of guilt around the bubble of rightness when Gamzee finally goes limp and purring against his neck, as Karkat keeps one hand stroking the back of Gamzee's blood-sticky hair while pulling the first alchemized phone he can reach out to finally see what these idiots have been chatting about all this time.

GC: 1 4M S3NS1NG SOM3 HOST1L1TY H3R3 >:
TG: oh you know what you can suck my feathery caw-
GG: where are you guys? i thought karkat said you were headed towards our session, but that was - a while ago :
TT: That's true. Given the many distractions we've been dealing with, I would have expected you all to arrive by now. That was your eventual plan, wasn't it?
GA: Things Happened.
GA: Many Things.
TT: What a coincidence. Things went just about as off the rails as possible here as well.
GA: Yes We Could View Most Of It Earlier, And Yet Somehow Were Too Torn Between Harassing You And Helping You To Actually Give Advice That Might Have Prevented The Inevitable.
GA: We Are Not Very Efficient Alright.
GC: 4TU4LLY FROM WH4T 1 UND3RST4ND PR3V3NT1NG TH3 1N3V1T4BL3 WOULD ONLY H4V3 DOOM3D US 4NYW4Y.
TG: yeah somehow our general incompetence was the only way EB: but hey, we all got better! mostly.
EB: what about you all?
CG: OH WOW. AMAZING. WELCOME BACK TO THE GROUP CHAT TWO HOURS TOO LATE YOU USELESS FUCKS!
CG: PEOPLE ARE DEAD. PERMANENTLY DEAD. IT'S JUST HUNKY FUCKING DORY OVER HERE, YOU INSENSITIVE FUCK.
TG: how is it possible that weve all managed to fuck up this bad at the same time GG: oh no :( i'm sorry, guys...
EB: vriska did say something about killing somebody, didn't she!
CG: WHEN.
EB: a while ago! for me anyway.
EB: you guys don't message us linearly so it's kind of hard to keep track.
TT: I wish I had spent less time communing with elder gods. Clearly I've missed out on a considerable amount of the goings-on.
GA: See That Is Exactly What I Was Telling You From The Beginning. Listening To Mysterious Disembodied Voices That Claim To Be Mentoring You Never Ends Well.
GA: Ever.
GG: okay yeah, that's probably some solid advice...
TT: You could make the same argument concerning your group's gratuitous trolling, I would point out.
CG: ANYWAY FUCK IT ALL. WE'RE DONE. WE'RE DONE LIKE A PREPACKAGED
NUTRITION RATION THAT HAS BEEN LEFT IN THE MICROWAVE FOR A WEEK.
CG: ARADIA'S LAST ROBOT BODY EXPLODED AND SOLLUX IS BLIND AS A FUCKING BAT AND LIKE SEVEN PEOPLE ARE DEAD BECAUSE SOME PEOPLE CAN'T RESTRAIN THEMSELVES FROM BEING MURDEROUS DOUCHEBAGS.
CG: WE'RE NEVER GOING TO BE ABLE TO AIM FOR YOUR SESSION. ANY SECOND
NOW THIS METEOR IS GOING TO RAM ITSELF DOWN THE NEAREST TIME HOLE AND HEY-O, BYE BYE EXISTENCE!
GG: no, come on! there must be some way we can help!
GG: we won't give up! we can still get my planet's Forge working, so you guys can finish through our session instead!
CG: I'M SO FUCKING TIRED RIGHT NOW. I CAN'T EVEN DEAL WITH THIS.
TA: i can't believe y0u papped him kk.
CG: SHUT YOUR SHOUTHOLE SOLLUX. WE'RE DRIFTING THROUGH THE FUCKING VOID AIMLESSLY BASED ON OUTDATED COORDINATES AND THE MACHINATIONS OF A DEAD GIRL, SHOW A LITTLE DESPAIRING SOLIDARITY FOR ONCE IN YOUR LIFE.
TA: h0w l0ng has he been hitting 0n y0u, and it takes him straight up murdering tw0 pe0ple t0 get y0ur attenti0n?
TA: this is hilari0us i wish AA were here t0 laugh at y0ur pain with me it w0uld be great.
CG: YOU KNOW WHAT I WISH? I WISH I COULD GO BACK IN TIME AND ASSASSINATE PAST ME BEFORE I COULD CREATE US IN THAT FUCKING LAB AND SAVE MYSELF FROM YOUR JUDGMENT BY VIRTUE OF NEITHER OF US BEING BORN IN THE FIRST PLACE.
TC: <>
CG: AGGGGGGGGGHHHHHHHHHHHHHHHHH!
TC: pap pap motherfucker
EB: is this making sense to anyone else?
GG: nope, but seems like typical karkat to me!
GG: but when do trolls ever make sense :P
TT: Rarely, if ever, in my experience.
CG: STOP BEING RACIST AGAINST TROLLS YOU XENOPHOBIC FUCKING SCRUBS. I HOPE TO FUCK THAT WE DON'T FALL INTO THE SAME ASSCRACK OF TIME AS YOU PEOPLE BECAUSE I REFUSE TO PUT UP WITH THIS SHITFUCKERY ANYMORE!!!
TC: PAP
GC: OH HOW TH3 TURNS H4V3 T4BL3D. >:]
CG:
AFFFFFFFFFFFFFFFFFFFFFFFFFFFFFFFFFFFFFFFFFFFFFFFFFFFFFFFFFFFFFFFF
??TG: hate to interrupt the standard ragefest but incoming TG: what is it future me
TG: could have used some help earlier
??TG: already did yo
??TG: what up jade lets do this shit
GG: do what shit? :O
??TG: times fucked
??TG: the trolls technically got here ages ago so we need to pull them forward out of the space between sessions
GG: ooooh. oh!
GA: What Is Happening And Why?
TT: Is there any way I can assist?
??TG: give directions to the yellow guy so he can course correct
??TG: cant tell if we have enough time left to work with but fuck it EB: what about me?
TG: and me
??TG: heres a list dont fuck it up
??TG: timeshenans.txt
??TG: and john
??TG: catch them
GC: C4TCH WHO?

The meteor rumbles ominously. Then it bucks out from under Karkat's feet entirely, leaving an unpleasant lurch in his stomach as he reflexively tightens his grip on Gamzee. A horrific scream bursts out a second later, and Karkat looks up at the dark space above them to see an enormous body tumbling past, a shadowy Horrorterror shaped like an eel that leaves a trail of dark blood behind as it falls. None of the elder gods have come this close before, and this one easily dwarfs the meteor itself.

Somehow, that's not as terrifying as the new fracture tearing open the sky, a rift where the Horrorterror's blood trickles into nothingness. Smaller cracks start to branch out from it almost instantly, stretching toward them. And there's something worse - something in the nothing, hurtling straight at them -

That's the last thing he says.

TT: Alright, I think I can see - here, can you see the beacon? Pilot the meteor as fast as you can go in that direction.
TT: Jade and Dave will have been meeting you shortly.

Sollux can't see it, actually. So Terezi tries to point him in a direction that would probably have them gleefully careening into oblivion, and finally Karkat has to reach out and tug her pointing hand a few degrees up toward the faint pinprick of light in the distance. Once they've sorted out that out, Sollux yanks on Feferi's goggles and starts up his psionics. Rather than smoothing out, the meteor starts to shake in the turbulence, but they outstrip the encroaching fissures in time. The meteor was already moving pretty fast after Aradia's initial push, but now the skulking shapes of the Horrorterrors drifting around them appear to blur with how fast Sollux rushes them along. Sollux starts to smell vaguely like burning hair and ozone, but that's not unheard of where Sollux is concerned.

You know what's also not fucking unheard of? Sollux being a self-sacrificing idiot. But Karkat can admit he has no fucking clue how space between sessions works, and just how far and fast they need to go to reach the humans' Incisisphere. They're light years away - and time is breaking down all around them - and by the time the pinprick of light resolves itself into a tiny sun Sollux is probably already fried. The cracks seem to be speeding up, too, or at least keeping pace with their acceleration; and Sollux just keeps going until they're close enough for Harley to sense them.

From the past humans' perspectives, Harley and Dave and Rose and John are floating at the very edge of the Medium, just past the ruined shell of Derse. Rose isn't projecting a beam of light or anything, just radiating light from her body like a miniature fucking sun, which means that now Jade and John are wearing copies of Dave's sunglasses and giggling about it like doofuses. They aren't acting like kids who were dead a short while ago, but who the fuck knows how you're supposed to act in circumstances like this? Hell, Vriska went on a fucking joyride through the Medium while Tavros was still sobbing over her gory, painful demise, so maybe it's Sburb itself. A game powerful enough to annihilate planets can probably break out the fucking euphoric vapors to numb its victims whenever it damn well feels like it. It's harder to get a read on Rose's expression while she's a living light bulb, but the future - now current, maybe? Current for the recordings, not current now. Fuck. Karkat hates time travel - Dave has the decency to look grim about the whole thing, spinning through a projected clock that has too many hands while Jade peers through a frame of her fingers at the darkness beyond. "Ready?" he says, taking hold of Harley's shoulder.

"Heck yeah!" Harley sparks with green. "Let 'er rip! Heheh!"

[Time And Relative Dimensions In Space]

The Dave on the screen spins the turntables back - and when he stops, he and Harley are alone, Derse whole and oddly still behind them, the entire Veil of meteors intact. There's no sign of any activity around them, not even a token battleship patrolling around Derse, but curving out of the darkness before them is a glowing meteor that is surprisingly close. Alarmingly close.

"Jade -"

"Ha! Got them!" Jade crows, green galaxies spiraling through her hair as space fire wraps around the trolls on their screens. "Aaaaand, on my mark! Go!"

The meteor blasts through the outer limit of the Veil, smashing weaker asteroids out of its way, just as the two human players spin back forward in time. Time cracks on the recording again, with a pop that Karkat feels right down to his toes as one of the speakers blows out, and the current Sollux scrambles to unplug it. On the screen, Dave and Jade flinch hard and the five extra people they've towed along for the ride go flying as Jade's control judders. John catches them with the wind before they can tumble too far, and as he grabs Rose, Jade starts glowing again and jumps them all to Skaia -

"WHAT THE BULGEGARGLING FUCK JUST HAPPENED?!" Karkat yells, as the human players unceremoniously dump them all in the middle of a Prospitian fortress. He casts his hands out for Gamzee and finds him, but the view when Karkat staggers to his feet has shifted so drastically he's stunned into outright silence for a moment. The Battlefield in the troll's session was a wreck by the time the final battle with the Black King rolled around, but it wasn't nearly as bad as this. From what the trolls' viewscreens could display, the humans never unlocked enough of their final alchemical grist hordes to shift the prototyped Skaia out of creative dormancy and into its incubator form. The Möbius net struts look badly damaged, and there are enormous craters, carved deep enough into the checkerboard surface below them that Karkat can see flecks of molten red - and deeper still, dark, hollow spaces where the ground has caved in and revealed hollow spaces.

Then he realizes what's missing, when Terezi sinks back down against one of the battlements and blindly stares at the ground with her cane loose in her claws. "Wait, where's Vriska's body?!

Karkat demands, whirling to bare teeth at the nearest human - John, still.

Jade’s head jerks up from where she’s bent over her knees, distress written across her strange not-grey face. She and John - the hair is right, but in person Dave and Rose especially are more alien than Karkat could have imagined; not quite as fucking pale as Kanaya, but close enough. It's weird. They're all fucking bizarre looking. If it weren't for the aura of power and significance that hovers around them like it does - did - Vriska, Karkat would think they were the most pathetic things he's ever laid eyes on. No horns, no claws, blood as red as his...it's suddenly real in a way it wasn't when he was just furiously watching them on the viewscreens. Aliens.

"Wait, was she dead?" Jade chatters, and the actual words rub wrong in Karkat's ears. Trollian and Pesterchum must still be interfacing, though, because the translation comes through like an afterthought. "Sorry! I just grabbed everyone I could feel alive and moving! I didn't want to miss someone because I was focused on the dead bodies at the same time..."

Self-consciousness sets in a second later. Everyone shifts, studying the other group, and Karkat is very fucking aware that the humans are almost immaculate in their little wrigglerass pajamas, fresh from resurrection and victory, while all of the trolls are covered in blood and sweat in some form or another. Gamzee smeared his pasty assclown makeup all over Karkat's shirt like the inconsiderate shitcrumpet he is, along with smears of Nepeta and Equius's blood, so Karkat looks just as murder-happy as the rest of them.

"Wait, Vriska? She's dead?" John says, after a pause. He blathers on past Terezi's barely visible flinch, hurt and confusion on his face. "But I thought...Uh, forget it, I guess. Never mind."

"Yeah. She's dead," Terezi says, leaning her head forward to rest against the knobby head of her cane. Her hair hides most of her face. "Justice is served." A bark of bitter laughter. "Or not."

Dave hovers around, twice as awkward as anyone else here. "Also, finished the frog, for all the good that does us," he says, clearing his throat and holding up a flashing captchalogue card. "I have it. Teeny tadpole, right here. Does anyone care? Anyone? No? Just me? Kay, cool."

"How many loops did you do?" John asks, stealing Dave's phone and peering at the list on the screen while Dave socks him in the arm. "Oh, wow! No wonder future you was always busy!"

Meanwhile, Rose cranes her head back with a golden eye shaped like a sun gleaming on her forehead. Baring her throat in front of a bunch of trolls is a shitty fucking idea, but Karkat doesn't have the energy to mention all the potential for cultural misunderstandings that has just erupted in all their faces. "I can see now. It's been on John's planet all along, hasn't it? It arrived long ago, but time does move differently out past the Ring...Charting a course through all that chaos and uncertainty must have been difficult to manage, but to arrive that early...Has the distortion in time grown that extreme out there? The chronological peculiarities can only have been exacerbated by the fissures - and they're getting closer -"

He doesn't even know what it is about that that sets him off. It's probably just humans, being humans. Blasé even in the face of death. "HOW THE FUCK SHOULD WE KNOW? OUR TIME PERSON WAS DEAD ALL ALONG AND THEN SHE BLEW UP!" Karkat throws his hands in the air.

The humans have about as much of a reaction as any of the trolls - that is to say, little to none. They're all used to Karkat throwing verbalized shitfits by now, apparently, and Karkat guesses he can't blame them. "I'm sorry," John offers, looking a little spooked at the sheer volume. Harley rolls her eyes, because Harley is a douchebag who has no idea what kind of bullshit Karkat has been putting up with over the past few hours. The euphoric vapors theory might also still be in play, here.

Gamzee pats Karkat's head with a heavy hand, sounding almost like his old dopey self again as he draws Karkat back. "Shoosh, motherfucker. Gonna bust your tiny pumpbiscuit," he says, with a creepy, smeared smile.

"Don't shoosh me," Karkat says. He can't really put any effort into pushing away, though. Gamzee's the most dangerous, reassuring thing here and god it's fucked up how romantic that is. He pulls Gamzee's hand down and folds their claws together instead, and then turns to Kanaya and Sollux, making sure they're alright still.

Sollux hasn't said a word. Kanaya and Rose already look deep in cahoots (great, now they really do have to worry about interspecies tomfoolery), but Sollux, like Terezi, has taken advantage of the pause to slump down against the inner wall of the fortress. "Sollux," Karkat starts. What does he even mean to ask him? The memory feels sharp on all the wrong edges, and Karkat can't remember what he was going to say to Sollux. Something idiotic. Some stupid insult, because he and Sollux were always a touch more heavy on the hate in hatefriends than Karkat and Kanaya. The last thing Karkat said that Sollux could hear was that he wished neither of them were ever born, and that's - Sollux's body slumps over. Gold blood oozes in thick trails down the front of his face from where the seal on the goggles broke.

There's something clawing at the inside of Karkat's chest, twisting. He breathes in once, and the next breath hitches, and the third feels like his whole body folding in on itself with a shudder. Like bending over Kanaya and not finding a pulse all over again. He mashes his hands over his face defensively, because he can't see through the pale, red-tinted tears anyway, and his face and neck feel hot and his stomach is sick. "That's not - you stupid -" he chokes out, and - "Hushoosh," Gamzee hums. "Next time. Gotta get it right next time. Shit like this can't abide."

"What are you talking about?" Kanaya asks. "Next time? What next time?"

Gamzee ignores her. Karkat, busy crying, can't even bring himself to look up when Harley starts muttering - and then her voice lifts abruptly, and the thread of alarm in it sends a shudder through Karkat. "Oh nooo. Guys?" He wants to turn this homicidal piece of shit game off and sit down and cry because all of his friends are dead, but no. He knows that tone: it means something's going wrong, again. Fuck this game. "Something's coming..." Another jolt runs through reality, and Karkat extricates himself from Gamzee with his face still damp, following the line of Jade's finger to where she's pointing up above, at a dark sky full of cracks. "What is that, ohmygod -"
It isn't coming through the Incipisphere horizontally, along the same axis as Prospit or Derse or the players' lands; just descending slowly from above at a ninety degree angle, like an ominous, shitawful JPEG looking sarcophagus straight out of the pits of double death hell. Which, fuck, Karkat has to give it points for originality - he can't remember one single instance where any other freakish game construct attacked them on a vertical axis. Everything else in Sgrub seemed to approach the Medium as a horizontal playing field, all the lands scattered around on the same disc.

"What the heck is that?" John asks, more fascinated than concerned. He and Jade are both drifting up with their floaty god bullshit, and Karkat has to clamp down on the urge to scream at them to get their asses back down here this instant, because flying toward the ominous, glowing coffin thing is hardly a smart idea. Karkat is struck again by how little the remaining trolls bring to this taintswilling mess of a rendezvous. None of them god tier, more than half their team gone - Sollux gone -

"Did that follow you all the way here? How did it navigate through all those cracks?" Rose raises her hand to shield her eyes, perplexed.

"It didn't have to navigate them."

She appears accompanied by a burst of musical notes, right past Terezi's head with the crumbling wreckage of the Battlefield at her back, and between her irrepressible grin and her rust red wings and the plain fact that she's alive, Karkat can feel any sense this situation made spiraling down the drain. "It caused them," Aradia says, tucking a strand of her hair back up under the cover of her hood. Her timequartz music boxes rotate slowly in the air on either side of her.
"He is here. He has always been here," she adds. There's a twinkle in her eyes as she waves, and John, Jade, and Kanaya all hesitantly wave back. Terezi is still busy heaving in huge breaths through her nose, and Karkat doesn't blame her at all for not believing what she's smelling here. He's having trouble swallowing this himself. "And unfortunately, he is always going to be here. Sorry guys, no time for a fun human-style corpse party! The Lord of Time is nigh!"

Finally, Karkat finds his words. "Oh my fucking god, you have got to be fucking with me right now. Seriously, shit a brick and fuck me with it, Aradia, you're alive?!

Aradia smiles like she could eat a planet whole and not even care. "I am very much alive. And I intend to stay that way. How about you?"

...They're all high. The fucking millisecond they hit god tier, everyone must spontaneously become fucking high as kites. It's the only logical explanation for this. "Wait, is that some new endgame enemy?" John asks, sounding curious instead of petrified as he peers up again. Upon a second consideration, Karkat thinks with mounting horror that the sarcophagus is larger than he assumed before - it just keeps looming larger and larger overhead as it bears down toward Skaia. The time fissures that spread throughout the space between sessions have started to creep and crack their way down into the Medium itself, now, and a particularly raucous SNAP from up above makes Dave and Aradia shudder and Aradia's timequartz ring a jarring note. "Rose, what can you see? What should we do?"

"I can't see, John," Rose says. Even for a human, Karkat thinks she has gone pale. "I can't - we have to get away from that thing. What did you call it - a Lord of Time?"
"The terminal process," Aradia says, softly. Karkat stumbles backwards while standing still, and rips his gaze away from Aradia to see that Gamzee is no longer behind him. He hadn't even realized he was still leaning on him. "Time's caught up with poor Bilious, and with Skaia."

CRACK

Dave and Aradia both flinch again - and Dave slowly sinks to one knee, his face almost translucent. He has a hand on one of his timetables that Karkat's been too distracted by Aradia to pay attention too, but the floating turntable vanishes as Dave leans his weight on that hand as well. "SHIT," he says. Karkat can barely hear the pain in his voice, mashed down beneath a tense veneer of stoicism. "Can't go back anymore with all this. Shit, that hurt."

"No, and trying it would only draw his attention to us." Aradia drifts closer with a beat of her wings, watching Dave with an expression that's as mournful as a manic smile can get. Harley and John fall back closer to the battlements, looking properly alarmed now, as Rose leans in to brush the hair back out of Dave's pale face in concern. "I think I have one last turn in me before he notices and cracks down - Maids are less flashy than Knights. You guys will have to pull off your end here linearly." She winks with perfectly painted red lashes.

"Our end of what, Aradia?" Kanaya says, her voice hard.

And Gamzee, leaning in over Jade's shoulder, says, "The motherfucking scratch." Then he holds up a captchalogue card, and rips it in two like confetti as he slouches around a spluttering, bewildered Witch of Space. "Here, Radsis," he says, holding out one half to Aradia's outstretched claw. The flickering halves of the rainbow card warp and reform as two separate cards, despite the damage Gamzee did which is not how a sylladex is supposed to work, holy fuck.

"How did you - what?!" Jade protests, spinning around with her dumb two-tailed hood whapping around everywhere. One of the ends nearly smacks Terezi across the nose and Karkat upside the back of the head. "Where did you come from? Wait, where did you go?! I didn't even notice I lost track of you!"

Gamzee shrugs, and holds the second half right out to the side, toward John. "Around," is all that he say, punctuated with a hiccup that sounds like a honk.

"A scratch - I read lore about that. It would reset our entire session." Rose helps Dave to his feet, and lets go when he finds what he thinks is a discreet wall to lean on. Everyone can see it. "A method of last resort. We would start over again from some indeterminate point of time - our entire universe would."

"That's the general idea, yeah. This session doesn't have enough time left for anything else." Aradia holds up the captchalogue card between two claws, and flips it so that the front of the card faces them. The image of a silvery, lightning-shaped needlekind flashes across it before she tucks it away. "So we'll scratch them both simultaneously, and see how much time we can salvage from our two sessions combined. You can't see any other way out of this, can you."

It isn't a question. Rose closes her eyes, chewing on her lip, and shakes her head, and Karkat feels bad for wishing the humans would calm down, because all of them look bleak now - and it was a lot more heartening when they were acting like overconfident dorks on a power trip than scared kids with some new death raining down from on high.

"Then I'll see you on the other side, everybody." Aradia's quartz music boxes begin to chime, the notes cascading higher and higher before, with a flash and a screaming CRACK, she vanishes. Karkat's pusher leaps into his throat as a fresh, thin spiderweb of time cracks blooms out from the air where Aradia was hovering, way too close for comfort.

"No good then," Dave says, thumming his shades off and inspecting them. The lens have fragmented in exactly the same pattern as the rifts, and he looks up at them with eyes so red Karkat wants to shove a new pair of obnoxious sunglasses onto the human's bare face because he's too exposed. Gamzee is apparently the packrat king of random important junk, so he probably still has Equius's fucking shades lying around somewhere... "The juggalo asshole is right. Just fucking scratch the whole goddamn thing."

"The court session is adjourned?" Terezi asks.

Rose shakes her head. "I don't think we have another choice." She and Dave share a look that Karkat can't parse; both of them have their respective masks on, Rose calculating and set, Dave flat and barely edged with pain, but they trade tiny nods like they've come to a silent decision. Or a telepathic one. "Jade, John: take the trolls with you. You'll need to scratch the disk of the Beat Mesa, if I remember correctly, and god only knows there may still be high leveled underlings patrolling the area. Dave and I will - join you shortly."

"Hang on. What will you two be doing?" John frowns, even though his hands are already starting to unravel into the white-blue streamers of breeze. Across from him Jade's lit up like a torch, but she banks the space fires a little when she sees John hesitate. "Neither of you can teleport, what if you can't catch up in time?"

Dave and Rose take too long to answer. "Take him and go, Jade," Rose says at last, pulling a pair of plain black needles out of her own sylladex while Dave draws a broken sword. "We'll meet you there. Trust me."

"Rose -" Jade starts, and - "No!" John says, the two of them talking over each other with identical, stricken expressions.

CRACK

Dave reacts like he's been ax-kicked in the stomach, jerking forward with a hiss of pain slipping out between his lips. "Oh. We will most definitely see you there," Rose says, and her smile is the saddest, most transparent thing Karkat has ever seen. "I promise."

She means the same thing Aradia did. Karkat can't tell if the other humans pick up on that or not. But they're smarter than he tends to give them credit for. "You're gonna do something dumb, aren't you!" Jade says, stamping her foot. "Oooh, I can tell! Just come with us, please?"

"There probably isn't time left for whatever you want to do anyway!" John adds. And he looks almost worse than Dave, somehow. Looking back on it with the benefit of knowing John embarrassingly well, Karkat can see the raw, broken edged panic behind John's eyes and the way his lungs appear to be making an attempt to escape his chest with how fast and hard he's breathing.

Dave hacks, and spits up - just spit, actually. Weird clear human spit. "Always got time to be a distraction, dude." He keeps an arm wrapped around his stomach like an iron bar as he straightens. "Let's do it, Rose. Do it for the meme."

"Just for that, I should leave you here."

John's laugh sounds strangled. "You'll die."
Rose has to help Dave float off the ground, before letting her hand fall away. Once he’s up he seems to have the hang of it, but he turns his face away from John and Jade, sliding a new pair of sunglasses on before Karkat can catch another glimpse of the pain etched in his face. “Technically, we’re all going to die,” she says. “Scratch the game, and we’ll all be reset. I don’t know about the rest of you, but I’m certainly not looking forward to reliving my childhood. Yet it feels like this is the only way.”

John opens his mouth, and his eyes are glassy - and then his mouth snaps shut as the air shifts. There’s another far off, distant crack, not enough to make Dave do more than twitch, but John blinks and gives Rose a tiny, muted smile. “Yeah, I guess that makes sense. Wow, today has been a long day!” All the panic has drained out of his voice; maybe if the world weren’t falling apart around them it would register sooner that John’s Breeze has stopped fluttering the edges of his hood.

([Eye of the Storm])

“The longest.” Rose swallows. “Now, go.”

Terezi holds up a claw at the last second, just as Jade reluctantly starts revving up her space powers again. ”Yo, cherry bomb! You two need another hand?” Her grin looks like a rictus strained across her face, and before anyone can answer she decaptalogues those ridiculous rocket-powered dragon wings and snaps them into place over her roleplaying outfit. ”No offence, coolkid, but you smell like a defendant with a weksauce case kneeling before His Honorable Tyranny right now.”

”Oh, hell yeah. Why the hell not?” Dave says, with a shrug.

”Wh-no! Hell no!” Karkat scrambles to grab Terezi’s arm, but she blasts off to hover out of his reach and arch an eyebrow at Rose.

”I don’t know if what any of us can do will prove efficacious against that thing,” Rose admits, but she doesn’t turn Terezi down as the three of them fly away. ”It can’t hurt to try.”

Jade grabs them all with green fire and they get sucked away to the Beat Mesa, so that the last thing they see of Terezi and Rose and Dave are the soles of their shoes as they drift up toward the sarcophagus. A cold, numb spot forms in Karkat’s chest, like someone burned through the skin with dry ice, and the heat of Dave’s land does nothing to fix it.

-

After that, the two sessions basically race to kill themselves off at the same time. Aradia ducks and weaves through the cliffsides of quartz that have begun to fall in massive avalanches on her planet to reach the Cardinal Movement. The branching cracks in time have fractured most of Skaia’s dew-like surface, off in the distance, the lilypads of the finalized Battlefield shredded and drifting off into the abyss, but Aradia determinedly removes the massive quill from the captachalogue card, hefts it with her psychic aura, and begins to carve a spiral into the cylinder of the building-sized music box.

Naturally, there are still underlings infesting the iron skeletons of the buildings surrounding the Beat Mesa in the humans’ session. John blithely uses the wind to direct the record needle and quill, while the few remaining trolls - god, just Kanaya and Gamzee and Karkat, and Gamzee mostly observing the proceedings instead of using his disturbing murder powers to help out for once - and Jade fend off the useless, marauding fucks who don’t have enough brains to realize when to quit. There’s no time for any of them to track down where the carapacians might have ended up, no time for anything at all. It’s a clusterfuck.

John and Aradia make it halfway through the scratch. In the space above the humans’ Skaia, Dave darts in to try to stab through the sarcophagus's lid, and abruptly loses the ability to fly as time splinters around him.

Three quarters through, and Rose loses an arm when she misjudges the silent roar that bursts out of the sarcophagus's mouth in a wave of harsh, destructive light. She screams, and keeps diving after Dave with tears flying out behind her, and the stump of her shoulder doesn't bleed - the arm just stops. Terezi has traded out ten different alchemized canekind, growling in frustration as each one shatters uselessly against the sarcophagus without leaving so much as a nick. Part of the building nearest the Beat Mesa falls out from under Karkat's too-fucking-slow feet, and Kanaya heaves him back onto solid ground before he can plummet into the lava churning below.

And the grimlight Gamzee lands in a crouch on top of the Cardinal Movement at the very edge of Aradia's screen, peering down at the burgundyblood with a toothy grin.

Aradia waves, and continues carving the helix into the side of her scratch construct. She has no fucking fear. It's terrifying.

TC: HONK
AA: oh there you are! :)
AA: youve been jumping around quite a lot
AA: and how about your grim passenger?

Gamzee is also terrifying, because Horrorterror. Then, with a guttural laugh, he taps the side of his own head hard enough to rock it to the side. The thing falls out like a shadow, or an afterthought, formless and shrieking as it scrabbles up into the air to beat a hasty abscond.

"Then you might want to hurry. You don't want to leave them hanging!" Aradia says. Between the two of the trolls on screen, it's hard to tell whose smile wins in terms of teeth and creepiness - Gamzee's by a narrow margin, Karkat judges gloomily, probably because his sclera are still red hot with banked rage and Aradia is just guilty of looking transcendentally ecstatic in the middle of tossing two universes into a fucking blender and slamming her fist down on purée button.

God, that troll is weird.

The sarcophagus touches down on the Battlefield (Rose and Terezi forced back by another burst of deadlight) and starts to open (Dave driven down to his knees like gravity has been turned up to eleven) and time begins to crack Skaia like an egg (Gamzee with his sylladex cards spread out in front of him, before folding them into a stack and smiling) and it's not like a Reckoning, because Skaia doesn't even try to stave off the end with defensive portals (something massive and green and white attempts to clamp down on the sarcophagus with sharp teeth, but the denizen has no strength left after fighting Cetus to a standstill)-

They don't get to see what would have happened if the Lord of Time went any farther than that. There's too much distortion from the cracks, as the sarcophagus's lid falls away.
The consensus, after some deliberation, is that their current location is no longer secure. Between Vriska’s grudging report that the cue ball spoke with Doc Scratch’s voice even before the void wards failed, and the fact that there was an unknown period of time between that and Equius’s ascension to god tier, it’s not a matter of whether Scratch is aware of their location, but when he will decide to act upon that knowledge. Since the void generator stationed to cover the Lalonde and Egbert house was compromised and stolen by persons unknown, those two locations are out as well.

"None of my other local boltholes are large enough to house as many people as we've accumulated. If we divided them up, we might be able to make it work, but somehow I think that would simply end with multiple parts of the greater Seattle area in ruins,” Rue points out, and no one can argue the point. Ambrose emerges from his shadowy, constant patrol of the lab premises to make vague intimations to the effect that they all pull up stakes, go on a pilgrimage back to Houston, and take over his and Dave's poor, unsuspecting apartment building by force. Rose manages to avert that disaster with the reasoning that Jade would never be able to shift all of them that far when Equius's teleportability remained in question, and a road trip of those proportions would likely end with half of them murdering each other out of self-preservation. Stuffing Vriska and Gamzee and Eridan into a small tube of flying metal would be the equivalent of raining cackling death down upon any city unlucky enough to be positioned under their flight path.

There’s always Canada -

TA: BC ha2 a re2trainiing order out again2t vrii2ka and terezii.
GC: W41T, 1S TH4T 3V3N L3G4L?
TA: they were tryiing two be pre-emptiively quarantiine you two a22hole2 im ontario.
GC: OH.
AG: Wowwwww. ::::\
CC: i could probably claim you all were part of my royal raytinue! 38)
CC: bam! instant diploblastic immunity!
TT: Sollux. Erase this conversation. Hurry.
AG: H8ng on, this has potential!!!!!!!!
GG: raises hand would this count in france, too?
TC: :o?
TT: Remove it from existence.
CT: D ---> Why are we surrounded by h00ligans...
TA: oh god oh fuck oh god -
-- twinArmageddons [TA] has deleted the memo! --

Canada is absolutely out of the question. Seattle will have to continue to suffer their presence. For the greater good.

Thankfully, they have just the trump card they need.

Jade returns from a visit to the Harley Foundation with the news that, in exchange for a promise to absolutely positively come visit the heads of the board of directors, no take-backsies, she has obtained the use of a block of new apartments near Capitol Hill, just to the east of the I-5, still partially under construction and with no current tenants as yet to worry about. There will even, she promises, be coffee and tea and assorted other snacks waiting for them upon arrival, which distracts Vriska from her impromptu attempt to disingenuously swear herself into Feferi’s service. Considering what Vriska might try to pull if she could convince Feferi to go along with it (she would undoubtedly be of the school of thought that would advise overthrowing one’s incredibly powerful ancestor, rather than silent détente) this is also for the greater good of all.
From that moment on, it becomes a matter of logistics. Rose, Eridan, and Feferi for good measure must remain near Equius for the duration; however, attempting to pit Jade's abilities against Equius's gives new meaning to the phrase 'an unstoppable force meets an immovable object.' The other option for teleporting them to Seattle and avoiding an incredibly awkward road trip involves John - which in turn necessitates extricating him, however temporarily, from his and Karkat's pacifying stranglehold on Gamzee.

This proves too easy to arrange for Rose's liking. "I've got you guys, no problem!" he says, floating into the room mere moments after Rose finishes detailing this in the latest group memo. If Kanaya gives her one more significant eyebrow on the subject, Rose may be forced to extreme measures.

There is no disputing the fact that Karkat holds more emotional weight where Gamzee's stability is concerned. From an outsider's perspective, Rose can't judge whether John is being edged out or not; the three tend to isolate themselves when they need to get 'flagrantly pale,' as Dave would say. Which means no one has technically witnessed their private interactions except Feferi, who just giggles and blushes dusty fuchsia and acts as though Rose asked her to describe the details of a particularly smutty arthouse film. John shared some of it in the immediate aftermath, while they were all still coming down from the post-battle adrenaline rush, but since then he's been sparing with what he tells Rose.

Now is her chance. "So, John," she begins, just as the wind in the room begins to pick up speed. He looks at her distractedly, his eyes burning blue and focused somewhere in the distance, and she waits until the sensation of being unraveled and reraveled into a solid body dissipates before she finishes, "You and Karkat...and Gamzee."

John opens his mouth. Nepeta peels herself up from where Equius has her sitting on his shoulders, and gapes at Rose, agog. "WHAT?!" Nepeta screeches, and then whaps Equius hard on the side of a horn. "EQUIUS, HOW COULD YOU NOT TELL ME?!"

Equius doesn't budge an inch. "He tried to kill you."

Nepeta sucks in another breath. "E Q U I U S!"

"No."

"Give me my crutches!"

Equius holds out the crutches as far from his body as he can reach. "No."

Nepeta's eyes narrow. "Take me to him!" she commands, imperiously, pointing a claw at John.

This just makes Equius sigh and obey. John, staring at Rose in abject horror, jolts when Nepeta bends down with a grunt of pain to haul him up by the fabric of his shirt. "Tell me," the greenblood hisses, her olive eyes sparkling with fervent intrigue. "E v e r y t h i n g."

Addiction is a powerful thing.

"Nepeta, this is lewd."

"We're standin' in the middle of the sidewalk. In public. Do any of you fucks care?" Eridan demands. He and Feferi are standing as far apart from one another as two trolls can manage; Feferi manages to make this look almost effortless, cooing and inspecting the building before them with barely-feigned enthusiasm (she is a very enthusiastic troll), while Eridan, still dealing with a post-Horrorterror hangover, winces at the sun overhead and does a poor job of not staring after Feferi forlornly when she can't see him.
Hm. Rose checks around them. The street seems relatively quiet, though she's not familiar with the neighborhood. Most of the buildings are red brick apartments, none of them more than six stories tall, with relative little space for vehicles to park except by skirting the edge of the road. A grand total of one person appears to have noticed their unannounced arrival - a troll with serrated horns curling back over the smoothed helmet of her hair, her deep-set brown eyes bulging at them as she lets her lusus tug on the end of its harness.

"It's - uh - what about it?" John makes the mistake of asking. Either Nepeta has regained enough of her strength to hoist him up off his feet, or he's floating so that she won't strain herself by holding him a foot off the ground; Rose suspects the latter.

"Who flipped for who! What are the exact dymeowmix! If three people are involved, I need to make the adjustments to my wall accordingly!"

He fails to account for the obvious. Nepeta's pupils dilate like a cat on the hunt. "All three of you?!"

"Lewd," Equius insists. "Discuss this inside, if you must discuss it at all." To ensure this, he removes Nepeta's claws from John's shirt and ignores her protests in favor of walking towards the door in Feferi's bubbly wake. Rose's eyes start to sting when she looks directly at his back, and when she checks over her shoulder at the brownblood across the road, she has gone back to letting her lusus snuffle at the base of a tree.

Handy. At least with Equius bound and determined to keep from being noticed, the odds of their having the police called for the inevitable noise complaints may be lower than predicted. Eridan slinks in with his head ducked, tugging up the collar of his shirt; Rose expects him to start complaining about something soon, but since the jellyfish incident he has been surprisingly cooperative about sticking close to Equius. Apparently, being possessed by Leviathan was considerably less pleasant than the Malā'ikah experience.

"Why did you have to bring that up, Rose?" John asks, aggrieved, as he and Rose bring up the rear. "Seriously?"

"You've been reticent about sharing details when Gamzee is near enough to exercise his unique form of telepathic awareness. I'm trying to be quick about it, in case Jade decides not to wait for Equius and Nepeta to choose a room and get clear." Jade snapped on a fresh pair of green and blue elastics on her fingers as a reminder before leaving to round up her own, larger group of teleportees, but better safe than sorry. Rose pauses on the threshold, one hand on John's forearm to keep him from walking in with the rest of the group. "And Kanaya has been repeatedly expressing concern to me about your well-being in a relationship where one of the other parties only has interest in the third, and may attempt to displace you entirely, if he can," she says, in an undertone. "At least in part because if Gamzee tries to flip spades and force the issue, she feels obligated to mediate between the two of you in order to spare Karkat as much as possible."

John, to her utmost surprise - blushes. Most certainly not the reaction she anticipated. He mutters something she definitely can't hear, and tries to subtly nudge her inside. Rose slaps a hand against the side of the building and rebounds him back his heels. A bit like pushing back against a wall of muscle, but she gets her point across. "What was that? I didn't quite catch it."

"I said," John starts, and doesn't finish. He becomes suddenly and spontaneously more interested in scuffing the toe of his shoe against the pavement, and looking anywhere but Rose's face. His cheeks look like they're on fire. She's tempted to check his temperature with the back of her hand on his forehead and play mother, but suspects the impulse is born solely from the fact that she had prolonged contact with Rue this morning, and the two of them were too busy being reasonable and working out logistics to give in to ironic mother-daughter sniping.

When it becomes clear that Rose isn't moving, and that the snacks within the lobby are no longer distracting the four trolls from peering at them, John sighs, and mumbles, "He might not be. Entirely uninterested."

Vague enough to be very intriguing. Rose straightens a little and raises both eyebrows in preparation to waggle. "Oh?"

"He, uh. This morning, we talked a bit." John squeezes one hand with the other, rubbing at the pads of his fingers as though to keep his hands occupied. Fidgeting. "About the Trickster, and stuff."

Never mind. Rose feels like she's been doused in cold water. Not good. "John, please tell me this wasn't a conversation I should be extremely concerned about," she says, seizing John's wrist in case she needs to prop herself upright. Falling over into the bushes by the side of the door would cause a scene, but if Gamzee has been in his head - if ever there were two beings who should never, ever come in contact with each other more than Gamzee and the Trickster -

"No, no! It was - fine!" John says hastily. "More like he was giving me advice? It was weird, okay, but not like, in a bad way."

Rose stares.

"And then we made out a little," John adds.

She stares some more.

"Rose, please stop that."

Staring continues to be a thing that is happening.

"Uh, Rose? Hello, earth to Rose?"

"Did you break her?" Eridan, of all people, demands.

Ah. Right. Rose shakes her head, and blinks a few times. She sets a hand on John's cheek, and looks into his apprehensive eyes. "Do not ever take advice from Gamzee concerning the Trickster. Please. I beg of you."

John bursts out in a snort of laughter, more relief than anything. "Well, duh, Rose, not without consulting you first. I'm not totally dumb!"

Really, Rose is more worried that Gamzee, with his unmeasured but significant ability to mentally fuck people over, might not hang around to give advice next time. Given that his modus operandi, when faced with a problem he thinks he can 'fix,' has generally been to mow people down like a particularly bloodthirsty weedwhacker... "Ah, but doesn't young love make fools of us all?" she observes dryly, taking a step back and into the lobby so that John can shuffle past her.

He glares at Rose. "I'm going back to get Roxy and the others."

"No, no, stay, John!" Feferi calls, mischief in her eyes as she exchanges a look with Nepeta. "No need to rush around, right? Stay and talk a whale!"
Not even the promise of sandwiches and other snacks can persuade John in the face of such obvious conspiracy. "Seeyouguysslaterhahabye!" he says at top speed and then the Breeze shoves the shutting door open to spill back out into the sky. Rose shakes her head and joins the trolls by the table to help herself to a glass of lemonade - and to text Kanaya, while Nepeta balances a tablet against the back of Equius's head and starts scribbling something in white across what appear to be scribbled stick figures, the end of her tongue just barely peeking out from the corner of her mouth.

TT: I bring tidings, dearest.
GA: Please Tell Me The Awful Fish Puns Are Not Rubbing Off On You Already.
TT: It's probably only a matter of time. But I won't inflict them on you yet.
GA: What Are Your Tidings Then.
TT: Apparently, between John and Gamzee, there may be...'interest.'
GA: What Does That Mean?
TT: Sloppy makeouts, presumably of the pale variety. Though I seriously question Gamzee's ability to pacify anyone without potentially resorting to murder.
GA: Oh Thank God.
GA: Wait When Did This Happen?
TT: Earlier today. You'll have to ask John for any further details yourself, I'm afraid. He may not be inclined to share them; Karkat's sense of privacy has thoroughly infected him.
GA: Oh Well If It's A Matter Of Propriety That's Fine I Can Respect That.
GA: And Yet Somehow I Am Still Intensely Curious As To How The Hell.
TT: I know, right?

- Despair would be easy. On top of the world being due to end in short order, they now have to consider the very real possibility that even playing along with the game to create a new universe will simply end with reality shattering to pieces around them.

Rose can tell some of the others can't bring themselves to believe it's real. Their memories have started to trickle in to fill the gaps, but plenty of the trolls died before they understood what the cracks in time were doing. It's worse still for the scratch kids, she thinks, because they have no context for it at all - it's just some tragedy that played out on a screen, and nothing to do with their own troubles. But that just means that if and when the Lord of Time catches up with them, the people in denial run the risk of crashing hard, and panicking when they can least afford to.

As near as Rose can discern, the general consensus of the group is to recuperate, and then to turn their attention towards dealing with Doc Scratch. March tipped over into April like a short drop and a sudden stop, and they are hyperaware that the world is due to end by the thirteenth. John gets an apocalypse for his birthday yet again.

She ends up in the camp of those still trying to puzzle out how to overcome the thorniest of the obstacles before them; she can't stop trying to see a way for them to try to preserve something of the earth's population, for example. But it would be a monumental task, even if they'd had years of advance warning - the world's population is around 7 billion people - 300 million in the States alone - and though the example of Gamzee has shown that sylladices can be used to captchalogue people with some degree of success, the amount of Dave's time travel exploits and Jade's space powers it would take to herd the entire population of the earth into a sylladex vast enough to hold them all would most likely draw the attention of the Lord long before they could finish the job. Also, Rose thinks they would have heard word of entire nations disappearing by now, if they had successfully gone back in time to start enacting that kind of plan. The only other plan that they can come up with in terms of game logistics is to cram as many people as possible into the largest buildings that still qualify as 'residences,' and hope that Sburb will import entire skyscrapers full of people into the Medium. But there are game enemies to consider, and over their heads hangs the constant threat of the Lord of Time. What good would saving people by bringing them to the Battlefield do, if they were killed by underlings or swallowed by a crack in time mere moments later?

No, Aradia is quite firm. They must play the game, and break it just enough that they can survive without dooming themselves and their timeline to an even earlier grave in the process. By merging their two sessions into one, they have (hopefully) enough time to race through Sburb's longwinded questlines and make it to the victory platform before the Lord can destroy them. It's - as difficult as it is to contemplate the thought, Rose thinks they might have to resign themselves to saving only themselves, and a scant few of the people closest to them. The complete extinction of the Earth aside, she's still struggling to figure out how their small group of friends and family will survive the death of reality.

Thankfully, Jade and Kanaya have a new penpal. One who both complicates and simplifies things immensely.

Her name is Calliope.

-- uranianUmbra [UU] opened a cheery-o on board :U at UU:UU:UU -- GG: okay everyone i know you all like to talk at once but!
GG: this is calliope and she has a lot to say, so please try not to talk over her!
GG: for once this is actually important. especially you karkat, since your font is almost the same color. :/
CG: WOW WATCH AS I MAGICALLY FORGET TO GIVE A SHIT.
GG: i will ban your butt, so help me karkat!
GC: NOW NOW, H4RL3Y, B4N H1S MOUTH, NOT H1S BUTT! H1S BUTT IS P3RF3CTLY 4CC3PT4BL3.
EB: i don't think any of us have that kind of self control.
TG: yeah no not at all
TG: like if theres something thats the opposite of self control thats what we all have in spades
TG: we just cant be tamed yo
AA: thats okay we really shouldnt be here anyway dave! lets have a talk somewhere else
TG: what
-- apocalypseArisen [AA] has blocked turntechGodhead [TG] from the chat! -- GG: uh, why -
AA: okay sollux now do me
TA: ugh, fiine.
-- twinArmageddons [TA] has blocked apocalypseArisen [AA] from the chat! -- TT: Why did that happen just now?
UU: those were yoUr time players, right? they probably already have the lord haUnting them. have they lost certain vital senses or fUnctions?
EB: wait, you mean like how dave can't talk? typhoeus did not mention that...
UU: that woUld be an excellent example, yes! the lord has Utmost sovereignty over his dominion.
since their powers fall Under his mastery, he is more aware of them and can strike at them with relative impUnity.
UU: if they conspired with me oUtright he coUld inflict even more powerful debUffs and cUrses in retaliation.
CG: OH, GREAT. AWESOME. FUCKING FANTASTIC.
TT: That's...horrifying.
GA: Why You Though?
UU: hm?
GA: Why Would Talking To You Make Things Worse For Them?
GA: You Are Just Some Random Person Who Began Messaging Us Cryptically And I Have Had Enough Of It.
GA: Who Are You, Why Are You Important, And Why Is There Even A Lord Thing At All Literally Why.
GA: If You Try That Spoilers Thing I Will Change My Quirk To Match Karkat's.
EB: seconded! for both the questions and the quirk change.
CG: WHAT A JOYOUS DAY. MY DREAM OF ASSIMILATING MY CLOSEST FRIENDS AND LOVED ONES INTO A SCREAMING RAGEMOUNTAIN MAY FINALLY COME TO FRUITION.
GG: guys! this is pretty much exactly what i was afraid you were all going to do!
GG: i'll confiscate all your phones. i have that power now!
GC: TH3S3 4R3 4LL 3XC3LL3NT QU3ST1ONS! >:] ST4RT T4LK1NG, N3W GR3Y T3XT OF MYST3RY!
UU: oh, Uh. heheh! i gUess i shoUld start at the beginning. <coUghs>
UU: essentially, in plain terms, yoUr reality has reached the end of its life cycle! the terminal point! this is a perfectly normal part of mUltiversal generation from the perspective of the overarching extraverse.
GA: This Is Answering None Of My Questions And Also I Think We've Heard Some Of It Before.
UU: it's necessary backgroUnd material, i promise!
EB: so, it goes like extraverse > multiverse > universe?
UU: precisely so! thoUgh for vocabUlary pUrposes yoU might also inclUde [mUltiverse = reality] and [Universe = genesis frog].
UU: the extra-dimensional cosmic sUperstring strata of your mUse have rUn oUt of the energy needed to propagate and sUstain new Universes within the boUnds of her reality. in yoUr case, this manifests in genesis frogs that have grown progressively weaker and more sUsceptible to fatal glitches and cancers and other Unresolved paradoxes.
UU: a lord is just the Ultimate, terminal process that activates when it is time for a reality's mUse to die. and yoUrs is the final fUnctional Universe she has prodUced.
UU: bUt that doesn't mean this is the end!
CG: REALITY DYING SOUNDS PRETTY FUCKING PERMANENT TO ME. THOUGH MY THINKPAN'S CURRENT TRAIN OF THOUGHT IS MADE UP MOSTLY OF 'WHAT THE FUCKING FUCK ARE YOU FUCKING TALKING ABOUT' WITH A SIDE HELPING OF 'FUCK THIS AND EVERYTHING ABOUT THIS' FOR TASTE CG: YOU KNOW, MORE SO THAN USUAL.
TT: Could it be possible to postpone this indefinitely? As much as I'd hate to keep playing Sburb for the rest of eternity, could we prolong reality's demise by creating new universes and scratching them? UU: even if yoU all sUccessfUlly completed the seqUencing for another frog, it woUld most likely not have enoUgh time to grow to the point of developing sentient species before the lord caUght Up and destroyed it. creating frogs takes Up a lot of energy, yoU know.
UU: bUt the appearance of the lord also means the cUrent mUse is ready to die and provide the fertile extraversal alchemical material needed to give birth to a new mUse, and thUs, a new reality!
CA: back up for a second an explain where this muse thing is comin from CA: seein as how youre supposed to be explainin not tossin wword salad around UU: well i gUess if yoU all want spoilers, we might as well go all in! a mUse is the...
UU: hm! it's hard to pUt into words. it is a very passive role, yet eqUivalent in power and scope to that of the lord.
UU: the mUse inflUences and forms the fUndament of her reality. where a lord destroys with, and brings about the destrUction of, his aspect, a mUse creates, and creates with, her aspect.
EB: okay, i talked to my denizen, and he just talked a lot about entropy and honking and felt and stuff.
EB: i gUess it make sense that he'd leave out all the important hopeful hints and focus on the doom and gloom. actually that seems entirely in line with his main personality trait of being a total butt.

TT: Two questions: first, how do you know all of this?
TT: And second - has this alchemical procedure ever been successfully completed before?

UU: oh yes, it has been completed many times before! the reality before yoUrs was so long ago now that only a few beings remember it, and the changeover was based on an entire different dichotomous system of lord and Muse.

UU: once the lord of chaos finished his task, the Muse that arose and created yoUr reality was one of order. now, becaUse the lord yoU face is one of time, the Muse that will coUnter him will be one of space!

GG: oh! :) okay, that makes sense.

CG: OH YEAH, IT MAKES SENSE EXCEPT THE THING IS, WE DON'T WANT TO FUCKING DIE! WHICH IS WHY IT WOULD BE PREFERABLE IF REALITY WEREN'T SHOOTING ITSELF IN THE HEAD!

UU: oh no, of course yoU don't! i completely Understand! please don't panic! >_>

UU: this is why i will open a gate for yoU! one final Gate that will bridge the existential gap between yoUr reality and my own! it is the least i can do to thank yoU for creating it in the first place!

TT: And what about Dave?
TT: Aradia as well, I suppose.
UU: what about them?

EB: yeah, hang on, you said that this lord guy can already hurt them, and that them just talking to you would speed this along...

EB: that sucks! can they even go through this gate thing?
TT: My thoughts exactly.
TT: How will all of this work? Both of the games we have experience with resulted in us producing genesis frogs through convoluted means. What would we need to do differently to produce a Muse instead?

UU: oh, of course they can come throUgh! u_u; yoU might want to focUs on getting them throUgh the gate first, before anything else, becaUse their lord will try his best to stop them.

EB: but they can do it? definitely? phew!

UU: yes, definitely! and as for the Muse, the process shoUld be very similar to what yoU already know, with some alterations that are already accoUnted for. once you create yoUrselfs throUgh ectobiological means, yoU can negotiate with or battle yoUr denizens for the rights to their grist hoards, and then Utilize that material to prime the forge.

UU: genetically seqUence the representative animals that predominate on yoUr space planet, finish the Final Alchemy within the forge, and then take what resUlts to the very heart of yoUr Muse. the rest will take care of itself.

GG: so basically, more frogs again :/

UU: Uh, no. snakes.

CG: OH FOR FUCK'S SAKE, WHY?!
UU: <blUshes> i'm really not comfortable discUssing that...

CG: DO YOU EVEN KNOW HOW HARD IT WAS TO CATCH THOSE SLIMY FUCKING BASTARDS, AND NOW WE HAVE TO SEQUENCE THINGS THAT WILL PROBABLY TRY TO BITE US AT THE SAME TIME?!

CG: NO FUCK IT, I'M NOT HELPING WITH THIS SHIT.

GA: Karkat.
CG: I FUCKED IT UP ROYALLY LAST TIME ANYWAY, I'M THE LAST PERSON WHO SHOULD BE ON BREEDING BULLSHIT DUTY AGAIN. I WILL HELP OUT WITH ANY OF THE MANY OTHER NONSENSICAL TASKS WE HAVE TO FINISH TO PULL THIS SHIT OFF, BUT I DRAW THE FUCKING LINE AT SNAKE WRANGLING!

GA: Oh Fine. At Least We'll Have Plenty Of People To Help Out With The Process.
GA: By Which I Mean No One Will Go Off And Decide Adventuring Is More Fun And Then Getting Themselves Killed.
GA: By Which I Mean Vriska.
AG: Why are you calling out me!?!?!?!! I don't want to catch snakes either!
GA: Because Knowing You At This Very Moment You Are Already Scheming How To Sneak Off And Go Fight The Lord On Your Own.
AG: Shut up!!!!!!!!!
CA: no yeah that is pretty much entirely wwhat vvris wwould do
AG: Like you're any better! You're probably planning to go join forces with him again!
CA: uh fuck no ivve obviously learned my lesson about allying myself wwith unspeakably overpowered assholes from beyond the stars, and this guy doesn't sound like hes currently takin applications for minionhood anyway
CA: FUCK fef has me doin the fish pun thing again already
CC: 38P
UU: he does have minions actUally!
UU: yoU are already familiar with doc scratch and the felt, i know! the felt in particUlar contain fragments of his power so that they can better serve his ends.
UU: he will most likely destroy them when they are no longer UsefUL, bUt a lord's attendants have sUrvived the end of a reality before, too! many of the old lord of chaos's brood still exist in yoUr cUrrent time, thoUgh they generally cannot interfere with it directly. they still obey the existential laws of an old reality, antithetical to the order that forms the fUndament of yoUr own, so they mUst Use emissaries and other tactics to interact with reality.
TT: No.
TT: You can't possibly mean who I think you mean.
EB: ...oh my god, the horrorterrors?!
CA: oh you'vve gotta be shittin me
UU: they danced to the lord azathoth's tUne and destroyed great swathes of reality at his command. bUt then he tUrned on them, as all lords seem to, and those powerfuUL enough fled to the next reality, jUst as you now intend to.
UU: so see! yoU can definitely sUrvive! there's precedent! and since i welcome yoU to join this new reality, yoU won't hate me like the horrorterrors hate the mUses who beat them, right? <winks>
TT: Ah. There it is. I was wondering whether you would ever answer that question or not.
UU: i - oh. UUUUuh...well, i gUess that one's oUt of the bag...
CC: water you talking about, rose?
TT: She knows all of this because she is the Muse. That's how she intends to open a gate between realities for us. That's how she knows we can succeed at all.
TT: Because by speaking to us, she has guaranteed that we will. Otherwise, a paradox ensues.
TT: And so we become the Horrors of her reality.
UU: no! no no! no, not at all! U i woUld never do that to all of yoU!
UU: i have been stUdying yoUr reality specifically so that i can make yoU welcome in my own! a place where yoU can live oUt yoUr existences as you wish. it may still need some tweaking, bUt yoU shoUld be able to engage with the beings of my reality withoUt corroding them, either!
UU: i am very mUch aboUt cross-reality compatibility! i'm trying to learn from the mistakes of my predecessor.
TT: Yet even if we take all of this on faith, we'll still need to outrun the Lord of Time.
GG: and also who is she? :/
UU: who is who?
EB: you said earlier we need to take something to the heart of our muse, so yeah, where exactly is that?
UU: right, right! she is the mUse of order, but yoU perhaps know her better as skaia!
UU: er, hello? are yoU all still there?
TT: ...
GA: ...
GG: ...
EB: ...
CG: SOMEONE, MAKE WORDS. I. FUCK.
GC: ... I'VE GOT NOTHING.
UU: she is dying now, and cannot maintain order as she Used to, but it is at the moment of her total annihilation that she is truly a crucible of Unlimited creative potential.
UU: that's you Have to do is play the game, one last time.
UU: that's enough explaining for now I think! gotta run!
-- uranianumbra [UU] has closed the cheery-o! --
It all puts...rather a different spin on things.
And while it gives them a way out, it's a bleak, thin shred of hope to hang everything on.
-
They manage to shift everyone out of the valley and into the apartment complex in short order, so that bickering over roommates and floors can begin in earnest. Jade is far less concerned about transporting mass quantities of personal belongings than she is about teleporting people, but to make things even easier, Dave assists in rapidly captchalogue everything so that they can bring along sheets and piles of accumulated junk to fill the minimally furnished apartments.

According to Rue, it's difficult to determine whether the void cover remaining at the lab is left over from Equius's presence or the result of the new generator she's been trying to calibrate to ignore Equius for the past few days - the only way to tell will be to wait and see if the shields dissipate over time now that he has vacated the premises. For now, Rose finds herself with the questionable misfortune of being stuck in one of the apartments at the furthest end of the building from everybody else. Equius is a private troll. Excessively private.

Thankfully, privacy is also a powerful motivator. Even with Nepeta sprawling on him, making faces whenever she has to move under her own power, and alternating between milking the attention for all it's worth and chafing under the scrutiny, it is clear that being in close proximity to Eridan and Feferi agitates Equius in a way that his moirail can't soothe. The blueblood crushes the handle of the fridge, knees the back frame of the couch into oblivion in a frighteningly literal manner, and rams his toe through one of the empty cabinets in the kitchen, becoming increasingly flustered whenever Feferi giggles at something on her phone, and finally he sits Rose down next to Nepeta and insists that he is going to fix this so that they can all leave him alone.

"You are distracting," he says, while Rose eyes her own wrists in trepidation. Equius tends to break things when he's upset, and right now having him glaring daggers at the void bracers with thunderous, lowered brows fails to reassure her that she isn't about to be snapped like kindling. One broken wrist would be horrid, but two? She has plans to knit scarves for the sundry people in their party who most likely have warrants out for their arrest. She needs those wrists. "Please hold still."

"Of course." Rose tries to let her mind wander while Equius considers things. This is easier to accomplish than usual; this close to Equius, there is a distinct aura of nothing that encourages people to zone out. Nepeta seems relatively immune to it, perhaps the result of living in close proximity to the blueblood over the years - she never seems to lose track of Equius, no matter how strong the urge to look away becomes.

Interesting, to observe the differences between an Heir of Breath and an Heir of Void. Mentally, Rose has been referring to Equius's powers as a 'voidy thing,' because that's how she's used to thinking of the Breeze - but can the Void, or whatever it's called, communicate with Equius in some fashion? She's tempted to ask, but a distraction might not be the best idea at the moment.

There is also the fact that Equius looks different now than he did when he first arrived at Lalonde Labs, which raises questions about how god tier resurrections work. Rose, John, Jade, and Dave all ascended with very few changes, but Vriska regrew an eye and an arm that were long gone, and all of the trolls thus far have sprouted wings that are supposed to be rare for their species, and almost unheard of the colder the blood of the troll in question. Yet Terezi is upstairs with Vriska and Sollux this very moment, her eyes just as blind as they were before she reached god tier.

And now Equius sits before Rose, just as tall and muscular as ever, but with a chest that is somehow...indistinct. Or perhaps, more accurately, so shrouded in look away that it might as well not exist anymore. And because Rose can't see properly through the void, she can't tell whether it's just Equius deliberately concealing an area that might have caused him dysphoria, or if something in the god tiering process actually altered it for him. It could have something to do with self-image, and how one perceives one's self, but Rose could also be attempting to apply a Light-related explanation to a phenomenon that varies by aspect. Both Tavros and Terezi sustained injuries in their past lives that carried over to the current universe - so what of Tavros, who has already pupated wings naturally, but can't walk? Would it have been different for that younger Tavros in another life, who could walk before Vriska paralyzed him?

This game needs to come with a manual. Between god tiering itself, and Sollux's modifications, and the fact that the whole thing may well be glitched to kingdom come, Rose is giving herself a headache. Or it's just that Equius has clamped down his focus, and the resulting flux of void is making it harder to think clearly. "This is inefficient," he announces, dragging a tooth across his bottom lip and letting go of her wrists. "I told the doctor. Enough." And with that, Equius takes the bracers off, muttering to himself as he tears the thin metal apart with his bare hands and lays it out in strips on the coffee table. It happens too quickly for Rose to protest, or do more than blink. There's a faint, paler patch on both of her arms where the bracers have kept her from getting any sunlight, and she stares at the veins of her wrists like they're a stranger's.

"What are you making instead?" Nepeta asks, batting at Equius's foot while Rose is distracted. She's stretched out on her back on the floor despite various attempts by Equius to get her to rest on the couch, her coat bundled up under her head as a cushion.

"All of this - machinery is unnecessary. I understand now. It will do as I say." And indeed, Equius shreds the bracers like they're made of tissue paper, ignoring the faint sparks that go off as the parts inside warp and bend like taffy under his fingers. Eridan, huddled up on the armchair across from them, scoots forward with reluctant interest on his face, while Feferi creeps out from the kitchen area with a claw pressed to her lips when she realizes Rose has caught her in the act. Out of the three trolls in the players with colder blood than Equius, Eridan and Feferi seem to intimidate Equius to the point of discomfort. Gamzee - well. Gamzee just makes him angry. "Where do you want it?"

"Er -" Too slow on the uptake, Rose thinks, and she shakes herself free of the sluggishness. "I suppose it would be nice to have my wrists free for once." Rings and bracelets, she thinks, would pose the same issue the bracers had in terms of Roxy's ability to steal away the void, particularly given how physically emotive Roxy is. "Can you do earrings?"

"Earring," Equius corrects, crumpling up the metal into a ball the size of the nail of Rose's little finger. The wire takes more concentration, given how thin it needs to be, and then he gestures at her. Rose takes the stud earring, then lifts the hair on the left side of her head back out of the way to slot it into place. There isn't a screw back to hold it, but there are always spares laying around. "There," Equius says, radiating satisfaction.
"I want a ring," Eridan says instantly.

Rose brushes the pad of her thumb over the crumpled front of the earring, and wonders if she'll have to get used to indistinct numbness in her earlobe. She adjusted to the void in the bracers and they were still enough of a buffer against Leviathan within her mind, but this is considerably closer to her skull and could potentially interfere with her sight, depending on how potent Equius has made it. Perhaps a bracelet would have been better, after all. "We haven't even tested if this one works, yet."

"Of course it will work." Equius has already begun fiddling with another scrap of metal, twisting it with the kind of precision anyone else would need small, specific tools for.

Rose stands and steps over a playful swipe from Nepeta's claws as she heads for the door. "I'd rather run a test run myself, now, than have dear Eridan here run for the hills and transform into a cnidarian a mile from downtown. I'll see if Roxy is free." She pauses, and gives Eridan a severe look. "Don't try to test it yourself until I get back."

"Jus' let me come with you, woman!" Eridan yells back halfheartedly.

It bodes rather well that the whispers don't immediately pick back up the moment Rose leaves the room, but Equius's general sphere of influence likely covers most of the block. A quick text to Jade brings a GG: be right there! :) almost immediately as Rose walks to the next door down the hall and knocks. A faint crash and thud reaches her ears, and she waits with eyebrow preemptively raised as the pounding of multiple pairs of feet come closer.

"Ms Rose!"

"Rosey!"

Roxy and Jake answer the door in a jumble, Roxy wrapping her arms around Jake's neck from behind and swinging with a smile stretching from ear to ear. "Please, just call me Rose, Jake," Rose says, as she looks around. Unlike the apartment she just came from, this one is still relatively undamaged. In fact, it barely looks as though the scratch kids have done more than shift the chairs around to suit their own needs; Dirk has a laptop set up on the countertop that marks the border between the living room area and the kitchen, and he gives Rose the faintest jerk of a nod when she waves.

Jake smiles self-consciously, rubbing the back of his neck. "What can we do for you, then, Rose? What brings you to our humble abode?"

"D'yah wanna come in and shoot the shit?" Without waiting for an answer, Roxy snatches up Rose's hand and starts walking backwards, with Jake struggling to stand at attention as he gets pulled along. "Only we don't have any referendums - refreshments!"

"We don't have any food at all," Jane says, from where she's rummaging through the kitchen cupboards. If they're as barren a wasteland as those in the other kitchen, today is shaping up to be a nice, long day, filled with necessary evils. Like ordering takeout. "Or cookware." She fixes a baleful stare at the oven as she shuts the cabinet with a slam that might rattle the counter more than necessary.

On the other hand, another day of feeding everyone here pizza, and they might well face a riot. "I did want to test out the new accessories Equius is handing out. Jade should be here shortly - we could run to the store, if you like," Rose says.

"An outing!" Jake exclaims. He and Roxy trade gleeful looks.
Dirk's head shoots up before the other scratch kid finishes, and though his expression doesn't appear to change, Rose can see the tension clenching Dirk in a vise grip. "Jake, hell no."

Roxy's smile falters, and Jake looks as though he's had the rug yanked out from under him, crestfallen. "I won't try anything! On my honor, Dirk!" He presses a hand to his chest, summoning up the puppy-dog eyes that must be genetically wired into the Egbert-Harley line.

"Last night you tried to sneak out," Dirk says. Which is news to Rose.

"To get a glass of water!" Jake turns pleading eyes on Jane. "Please, Jane, I'm almost cured. Surely you all can't go on an adventure like this without me?"

Rose isn't sure going to the grocery store counts as an adventure - but then, when would any of the scratch kids last had the opportunity to visit one? From what she knows, they barely left their Felt prison for more than day-long stretches at a time except for field testing in the art of villainous endeavors. Jane doesn't say anything aloud, but she and Dirk look at each other in silent consultation for a moment before she inclines her head, and Dirk's jaw twitches minutely. "Oh my god. Fine. A field trip. And if you put one goddamn trigger finger out of line, I'll make you watch the '86 MLP movie again," he says, closing the laptop with the same kind of faint, barely-concealed disquiet that Rose recognizes from Dave's example.

Jake blanches and tugs at his collar, gulping. "Oh dear. Not again. You are a cruel man, Strider!"

"MLP...? My...Little Pony?" Rose repeats, weakly.

...Good lord. No wonder Jake is desperate to get out. Forget residual brainwashing, that has to be the most unusual form of rehabilitation/torture Rose has ever heard of. A green, Jade-shaped outline forms just beside Rose, and then Jade fills in the rest of the way with a shake of her head. She is still wearing the god tier pajamas that she's been in almost constantly since she and Kanaya returned with Eridan, and Rose is beginning to feel like she needs to have a talk with Jade and Dave about weighing the convenience of transfigurable clothing against the societal need to maintain at least the appearance of being hygienic. "Here!" Jade says, bumping her hip against Rose's in greeting. "Alright! Who all's coming with?"

The door bursts open after an odd delay, considering Jade arrived without using it at all. When they all turn to stare, Jane and Dirk already going for their pockets (Rose supposes she's going to continue to turn a blind eye to the fact that two out of the four scratch kids re-armed themselves at some point without going through Rue), Eridan stares at the six of them, chest heaving slightly. "Take me with you," he says, brandishing the new ring on his claw.

Jade folds her arms, presumably taking a mental tally of the people in the room. "Uh, if there's a risk that grim stuff could happen, that miiight be one too many high risk peeps for me to keep track of," she says, after pausing to suck on her lip and pull a face.

Jade drops to his knees so hard Rose practically feels it in her own patellae. "Please, you can't leave me sufferin' in that den a' awkwardness. I beg of you. Have mercy."

Rose looks at Jade. Jade looks back at Rose, and shrugs. In the end, Rose estimates how much faith she puts in Equius's abilities and Jade and Roxy's reflexes, and makes the executive call. "Behave appropriately. Any and all suspect behavior will be punishable by exposure to winged cartoon horses." This threat proves sufficient to make Eridan gulp and nod, and he stands up with a second, swift glance at the scratch kids before shuffling closer to Rose.

"Alrighty, then! Three!" Jade lifts her fingers to count down. "Twooo..." Roxy sidles in between Rose and Eridan, and Rose turns her palm face up so that Roxy can hold her hand over it, ready to slap. "One!"

And with a squeezing fizzle, they're on a street corner. How Jade does it without accidentally landing them on top of a passing pedestrian is truly a marvel. It doesn't stop people in the road from slamming on their breaks to do a double take, but it keeps them from having to explain why they've crushed some poor soul beneath their teleporting girth. Rose freezes in place for a full thirty seconds, her pulse throbbing in her temples - and nothing. Not even the faintest whisper of dread susurrations from the back of her mind. "Distance?"

"About five miles," Jade reports, still sparking a little at the seams. Beyond her, pedestrians have begun to part around their small group like the sea, a few hurriedly putting their phones away when Jane turns her sharp-edged stare on them. Dirk doesn't even have to turn to face them to project a field of intimidation. "How's your head?"

"Blessedly horror free." Though now that Rose thinks about it, bringing a group of young adults trained to be paranoid might have more potential pitfalls than can be blamed on just Jake. If Dirk pulls a blade on someone for looking at them the wrong way - well, actually, that would be entirely in keeping with what Rose knows of Strider personalities in general. But in a city that's on high alert, it could also quickly escalate into a literal federal fucking issue. Curse their impulsive natures and access to instantaneous travel via Jade.

Eridan looks queasy, his fins tucked in close against his head when she checks on him next, but when she asks he shakes his head and says that he's fine. She doesn't even have to order him to stay close; he edges near her as soon as Roxy takes off with a happy whoop, and sticks as close as a shadow while they suss out where the nearest grocery store lies. Rose can't even call it sulking - since the jellyfish incident, Eridan has just been...skittish. It doesn't stop him from being obnoxious to anyone who catches him on Pesterchum, but since Rose has been in close proximity to him due to their mutual need to stay near Equius these past few days, she's noticed that he's gone quiet. Another note to add to her growing mental list: consider asking permission to check on the state of Eridan's mind and see how well he might be healing, if there might be grim contamination lurking in the corners of his mindscape like it did John. The last thing they need is for Eridan to lose what few wavering, provisional morals he does have to festering rot.

The first place they stumble upon is a Safeway, and it is in no way prepared for the full convoy of humans and trolls that descends upon it like a swarm of locusts; thank goodness they kept this group relatively small. Roxy sweeps in through the automatic doors with her hands clasped in front of her, starry eyed, with Jake peering around them like someone stepping into a pharmacy in a foreign country for the first time. Dirk and Jane play it off a little more coolly, but Jade summons two grocery carts for them with a snap of her fingers and keeping a low profile was probably a pipe dream from the start. While Jade, Roxy, and Jake zoom off toward the aisles, Jane following them at a more sedate pace, Dirk and Eridan hang back with Rose. Just as well - her phone begins to buzz in her pocket.

-- temperedTitan [TT] began pestering thoughtfulThaumaturge [TT] at 14:32:10
TT: kid.
TT: where the hell are you?
TT: Father?
TT: Jade and I have taken the scratches and Eridan with us on an excursion to purchase supplies.
TT: need to put goddamn bells on you kids.
TT: you got it handled?
TT: Oh, yes, no need to fret. Equius has improved upon the void bracers, and all is well.
TT: I doubt we'll be able to purchase enough food and cooking supplies for everyone in one trip, however.
TT: do you even have money?
TT: As I said, not enough to stock every apartment.
TT: Hm. Roxy has cash. I am...not entirely certain where she got it from.
TT: She just keeps insisting it's 'capitalism.'
TT: oh god not another one.
TT: ...Anyway, we should be fine.
TT: why is it whenever one of you says 'fine' I get the feeling shit's gonna get set on fire.
TT: do not blow the place up.
TT: Cross my heart.

Once that is taken care of (honestly, how does a man who apparently prefers to do his caretaking via violent puppets from the safety of ventilation systems still manage to come across as more of a concerned parent than Rue ever did?) Rose looks over the aisles and tries to put together a quick grocery list in her mind. It's harder than one would think. There's a high chance that if she cooks something, a ravening swarm of young adults will descend upon her in search of an easy meal. From the looks of things, Jane has cookware well in hand, though Rose wonders if she might not be testing the heft of that deep-dish skillet more in the manner of someone trying out the balance on a new strife specibus. Eridan has slunk off after Jade while Rose was preoccupied, fidgeting with the ring on his claw as he wanders by rows of vegetables.

Interestingly, Dirk stays close to Rose as she goes to join Jane - presumably Roxy and Jade have the actual food portion of the search well in hand, for the moment - and when Jane finishes judging the pot with a sage nod, she passes it into Dirk's waiting hands before flipping a baking sheet in a brisk circle. "I'm trying to think of something that can feed twenty or so people, the majority of them still of the mindset that if there is food, you consume as much as possible in order to fuel your vigilantism," she says, her voice almost drowned out at first by the clamor coming from the meat section. Jane and Dirk both tilt their heads slightly to hear her better, a quirk of the head that reminds her they've communicated through earpieces in the past. "Any thoughts?"

"Pancakes," Jane says. "There is a box mix...it's yellow, and -"

Rose shakes her head. "Bisquick. Owned by Betty Crocker. John would set the kitchen on fire in a futile effort to cleanse it of the enemy presence." After the Condesce incident, Karkat might well join him in constructing the bonfire, and heaven only knows if Bisquick is as flammable as flour under the right circumstances. "He has long believed that there is an evil conspiracy behind the brand, and we recently received confirmation that he is, in fact, totally correct."

"Drat," Jane says, her shoulders slumping a little.

Rose takes a package of wooden stirring spoons, considers her options, and then balances a bowl on her hip and tosses the spoons in to consolidate. "We'll figure something out. Just watch out for anything with a red spoon on the label."

"We're leaving soon."

She blinks. Jane thwaps Dirk gently with the baking sheet, but avoids Rose's eye when she looks at the two of them. Dirk has his head low and shuffles his weight from one foot to the other. "What?" Rose says, and immediately after feels foolish.

Jane becomes overpoweringly intrigued by a spatula. With a quick movement Rose only catches the tail end of, Dirk tucks the baking sheet under his arm and checks over his shoulder, scanning the rest of the aisle and the shelves as though one of the other shoppers might be listening in. After staring down the lone man inspecting a muffin tin until he powerwalks away from them, he moves a little closer to Rose. "Don't have a lot of time left to handle things, according to all estimates," he says, and - Rose isn't sure, because Dirk is almost as deft as Ambrose at concealing his expressions behind the shades (a task Dave almost unavoidably tends to fail at), but she believes he lets her see his pale eyes slant down and fix on her hands instead of her face, radiating quiet apology. "We're caught up on the situation here. You have your own plans to take on the Felt, but if we don't track down Dienek soon, there's a totally legit seventy five point six percent chance he'll go to ground and won't resurface. From what we've pieced together he should still be in Utah right now."

She knew they had plans to go after their main tormentor and bring him to justice - she just completely failed to account for the fact that learning about the apocalypse might accelerate their plans more than a little. Damn. "Will Jake be alright with that? He's only just barely come back to his senses. Exposure to someone more familiar with his conditioning than you all -"

"High probability he'll relapse," Dirk finishes. "On the other hand, there's an equally high probability we die on the thirteenth. So who's counting." He shrugs with one shoulder, a muscle in his jaw ticcing almost imperceptibly. "Kinda reckless for my tastes. But fuck it."

The next day, they sit down for dinner as a family.

This turns out about as well as one might expect.

Rue downs three glasses of cranberry juice before Bro drags Oriole through the door, her lacquered nails drumming on the stem of the cocktail glass in a familiar tell. The hem of her purple dress falls just an inch too short, like she forgot to account for the extra height of her heels, and Rose tells herself to stop noticing such things - she's trying to keep this from devolving back into a passive-aggressive game of one-upmanship.

But it's hard. It's hard, and when she raises eyebrows at Dave in an attempt to nudge him into serving as a distraction, his face appears to have frozen over like the Arctic wastes. When the waiter came by to ask for their drink orders, Dave shut down hard, and while he always keeps his movements quick and close Rose can track how often his eyes dart to the other diners at the tables beside them. He shreds two bread rolls without eating them and leaves the scraps on his plate. Perhaps he'd feel better if John or Jade were here to cushion the tense awkwardness; Rose certainly would. With the public setting and the presence of Rue and the complete and utter lack of any sort of Egbert- or Harley-themed buffer, Dave looks ready to dive out through the window the first chance he gets.

Rose mentally catalogs the details, and smiles (don't simper) when their mother murmurs something about promptness and how they haven't gone out to eat in Seattle in years. The condensation on the glass of ice water leaves a circle on the table, her skirt seems to have magically accumulated a scattering of white canine hair, and this afternoon when she went to get ready for dinner, she realized her hair curls at the ends where it touches her shoulders, so that naturally she catches herself fiddling with the strands whenever her hands are at a loss. One of her legs feels cramped, so she switches the way she's crossed them. The drinks menu was removed at Rue's request, but not before Rose had time to scan it and see that they serve something called a lavender cosmo.

Kanaya bowed out with the claim that they can hardly afford to leave the trolls to their own devices, with only John, Jade, and Karkat to supervise a contentiously sane group of powderkegs in a fragile apartment complex. Rose can't fault the logic, either. If she could come with her own blatantly transparent excuse to escape this family outing, she would use it, too. However, too obvious an "Traffic bad?" she asks, lifting her voice as Ambrose vanishes from the doorway and reappears in the chair between Rose and her mother. Oriole stands bereft in the open doorway for a moment before the closing door bumps into his back - or wings, really - and then rushes toward the table before the hostess can swoop down on him. He has to angle the chair sideways before sitting, the back of his coat bulging as his wings adjust. In this light, he's not quite neon. A gentle, matte orange. Like a spray tan gone horribly wrong.

Ambrose's face doesn't shift. If Dave is frozen on the edge of an anxious breakdown, Bro is a wall of granite. The restaurant is walking distance from their current lodgings, as everyone here is well aware, but all he says is, "You know it."

Touché.

Dirk and Roxy arrive five minutes later, both wearing enormous scarves that draw curious looks from everyone else. With their short sleeves and cropped shorts, they're probably not uncomfortable in the afternoon heat, per se, but the season has moved well past the point where heavy scarves could be excused as a fashion choice. All they need at this point is for someone to recognize Dave as that one hero who never wears a mask, or Dirk and Roxy as two of the people fighting by the Seattle Needle. Just to round out the evening. Rose would point out the scarves most likely draw more attention to the fact that the two have something to hide - but, well, they're trying. And Oriole is orange with lemon trimmings. It's not as though anyone in this family can fly under the radar, even on a good day.

"Hi mom!" Roxy says brightly, tackling Rue with an enthusiasm that rocks the chair back on two legs. "Hi!"

"Hello to you," Rue says. She keeps the glass in her hand from slopping juice onto the table with the ease of old practice, patting Roxy on the back with a small smile, and Rose familiarizes herself with the bottom of her water glass. By the time she emerges, Dirk and Roxy have seated themselves at the table, and Dave has edged closer to Rose to make room for them, leaving his plate of torn up bread behind for Roxy. "And how was your day out on the town, my dears? You all went to the mall?"

Rue looks around at all of them, including Dave and Rose in the sweep.

"Yup. Sure was a thing that happened," Dave says, captivated by a nondescript point in the middle of the table. Oh, Rose can already tell the Lalonde half of the family is going to be carrying the majority of this conversation. Oriole buries his face in a menu as she watches, a single wayward yellow feather sticking out at an angle from the rest of his hair.

Before Rue can try another casual segue, thankfully, the waiter interrupts. "Excuse me, ma'am? There's a call for you," the waiter says. He looks almost as confused as the rest of the table.

Rue hesitates for a fraction of a second before her indulgent expression shifts into carefully blanked poise. For once, Rose can't detect even a tremor in the hands that might have given her away. Her own attempt to sober up had its pitfalls, but she suspects that either the dependency wasn't severe enough to cause significant physical withdrawal symptoms, or perhaps game mechanics were at play. In contrast, Rue's seemingly sincere efforts at sobriety have been marked by notable shakiness - but then, the woman has been an alcoholic for longer than Rose has been alive. "I wonder who it could be," she says, taking the napkin from her lap and folding it over her hands absentely, before setting it on the table. She pushes back her chair and stands, smoothing the front of her dress. "I'll be back in a moment."

The moment she walks away, Dave sags half out of his chair, Oriole mashes his face into the menu with a groan, and Ambrose smacks both of them upside the back of the head in a blink of an eye. "Lol. You guys are such lamers," Roxy chortles, folding her legs and propping her feet up on the edge of her seat.

All things considered, they are most likely going to perish. A bleak sentiment, but one Rue can't ignore. The children - the children are players in a game that will resurrect them except in specific circumstances. They may die, but they may yet live again.

But the guardians? They're only human. Even if she and Ambrose stayed close to whatever safe zones there are in the Medium (and Ambrose would never be content to stay safe while the children were out fighting for their lives) the fact that time itself is breaking down on a massive scale would mean that the children would have to concentrate on keeping their guardians safe on top of everything else.

The children wouldn't stop trying, though. As shaky and tentative as things are between her and Rose, the trauma of losing their guardians all over again might be just the thing that would set them over the edge. God only knows, Samuel's betrayal left an open wound in John, and to a lesser extent Rose. None of them are wholly sane anymore, Rue suspects. If any of us ever were to begin with. They'd need unimaginable mental fortitude to confront the end of reality, otherwise.

April thirteenth. Would John welcome an early birthday celebration at all? A cake is probably out of the question, unless someone other than Rue or Ambrose volunteers. Ambrose's idea of a birthday cake, the last time she checked, involves sharp objects, and Rue usually ordered Rose something elaborate and sugary from a bakery. Or commissioned Samuel's assistance.

She'll just ask John himself if he wants anything. When the waiter offers her the phone, she takes it, clicking her nails along the plastic as she leans a shoulder against the wall. She's conscious of eyes on her back. "Doctor Lalonde, speaking," she says, wrapping an arm around her ribs.

On the other end of the line, someone sighs with contentment. "I was not sure I could be so lucky as this. Here I assumed I would have to go to you, but this will do."

A pot clangs raucously against one of the stovetops in the kitchen. Frowning, Rue adjusts her grip on the phone and tries to recall where she might have heard this voice before. It's - not familiar. Not quite. But she feels as though she should know it. Not one of her usual contacts, no... "I'm sorry, I believe you have me at a disadvantage. Who is this?"

The line crackles. "A more interesting question might be - who is the man with a gun across the street with a line of sight on each member of your charming little family? Don't turn around."

Rue's body jerks automatically, stomach clenching. Stopping herself from turning at once almost wrenches a muscle in her side. Under the palm of her hand, clamped around the side of her ribs, she can feel her heart rate rising. "How uncivil," she says, raising her chin. She can't see anything from here but the exit and the entrance to the kitchen, and now doesn't dare spin around to scan the street to see if the threat is legitimate or not.

"Really? I think I'm being polite. I haven't had them shot yet." The voice sounds amused. "And won't, so long as you cooperate. A woman is about to walk up beside you. Come out the door with her, and we'll talk. Don't turn around."

Rue catches herself again. Dammit. A figure sidles around the kitchen entrance from a hidden corner: a woman with covered hair and something metallic glinting where her sleeves drape over her hand.
"About what?" she asks, swallowing. "What do you want to talk about?"

"Business, of course. Personal business. I'll level with you, Doctor Lalonde - I'm just as uncomfortable with the situation as you are. But needs must." The line clicks, and Rue sets the phone back down on its base. She stares at the door for a moment, dread threading itself through her insides, and then a mutter from the other woman causes her to lurch forward and stumble through the door, eyes fixed straight ahead.

--

Rose tracks the waiter and her mother as they weave between the tables to reach the back of the restaurant, where the phone appears to rest in a crux between an exit door and the kitchen. "Why wouldn't they just call her cell?" Dave says, half to himself. His fingers creep out to steal his plate of shredded bread back from Roxy.

"An excellent question, brother dear." Rose grants him a teasing smile. "And another - what did that poor bread ever do to you?"

Dave mutters something to the effect of 'not hungry,' while Roxy nudges Rose with her foot under the table. "Heya, hey, Rose? Do you think we can go shopping again tomorrow?"

"Most likely." The world could be blown up by an overhypmed video game in a matter of days, but who's counting? Rose suspects that if their circle of those in the know didn't focus on mundane things like grocery shopping and taking vengeance on their enemies, they'd collapse. "What do you need?"

"Wanna see if I can get some new makeup stuff." The girl winks and props her chin up on her fists. "You have ta look bomb as heckles when you're on tha hunt for booty." She begins fluttering her eyelashes at Dirk with a shit-eating grin, and receives an eye roll in reply. Ambrose makes an indistinct noise that, from someone else, would have meant they'd choked on a too-fast swallow of water that went down the wrong pipe.

"Just make sure you don't trip anything and wind up gutted by a fork." Dirk rubs his temple with his fingers, looking strained. "Or worse. She might bring back the spoon. Shit, Rox, you know murder by spoon is horribly slow and inefficient."

"Janey would never," Roxy scoffs.

"So basically, the situation is like our mom getting ready to hit on John and Jade's mom," Dave says. He also finally takes a bite of the thoroughly-shredded roll - as though the general oddness of the situation has finally rendered it palatable even in his sulk. "If they got married it would be like...like Jade and John were our ecto-step-siblings-in-law via clone proxy."

Trust Dave to put things in strange, strange perspective. "I think you may have added too many modifiers in there," Rose says, letting her eyes wander back to Rue across the room. She barely see the woman, halfway around the corner with the restaurant's phone pressed to her ear. She activates some of her other sight, though all she catches, as usual, is a glimpse of Rue's void soul. "Or maybe not enough," she finishes, turning back to the table.

Two enormous flares of DANGER burn in her vision as her eyes track back across the room. It's been so long since Rose has looked for potential criminal activity with her other sight that at first she's just left speechless. Immediately to Rue's left, through the wall, one hotspot of danger - then just over Ambrose's shoulder, something on the other side of the street. Rose stands up, the chair falling out from under her with a bang that sounds like a gunshot and her water glass rocking enough to soak part of the tablecloth, and the second, dimmer burn is somewhere further down the road - why can't she focus on it properly?

Both have an incredibly high chance of exploding into violence any moment. Only one is standing right next to her mother. "Rue," she says, her voice gone hoarse in the space of seconds. Dave's already on his feet, hovering next to her with one hand just over her shoulder; now, Ambrose vanishes in a blur, slamming between the tables and zagging around the hostess as he makes a beeline for Rue. Rose can't actually see Rue's back - she's gone, but not around the corner, out of sight - out the back door, maybe?

If she's panicking everyone over nothing, that's one thing. But this doesn't feel like nothing. This feels like a grim reminder that she can't predict anything but an absence where Rue is concerned, a gaping hole in her already vague fortune-telling abilities. "Let's go," Dave says, and she grabs his hand on impulse as they start running. They outclip Roxy and Dirk (Dirk only by the narrowest margin) and Dave slams his forearm into the exit door as it swings shut in Ambrose's wake.

She has a moment to scan the alleyway wedged between the restaurant and the next row of buildings. A black car sits with the engine running at the far end of the alley, and the woman lifting a gun to Rue's head doesn't look surprised in the least to see them. The scarf wrapped over her hair is pale pink with a pattern of tiny embroidered birds, and she pulls the pistol slide back with a sharp snap of her wrist. Of all things, Rue almost seems to relax when she lays eyes on them, shoulders sagging.

Rose has never cast a spell so fast in her life. A shield of light slams down between the gun and Rue almost before she finishes chanting the incantation. She doesn't even bother using magic to blind the woman - light erupts like a sunburst as soon as Rose thinks it. Rue spins on a heel and socks the other woman in the eye with her fist; before she can recover, Ambrose reappears next to Rue and pulls her back.

"Hey, don't I know that lady?" Roxy says, her head scooting in between Dave and Rose. "Dirk, don't we know her? We totes know her from somewhere."

Dirk must vault over their heads or something to that effect, because Rose has no idea how else he manages to get in front of them when the three of them have clogged up the doorway. "Clubs Deuce's guard. Shit," he says. "What's she doing out of uniform?"

"There's another, across the street from where we were seated." Rue catches Rose's shoulder and squeezes, while Ambrose vanishes again. "Or at least, that was what I was told. It seemed better to err on the side of caution."

Rose lets the light die down, and then renews it when the woman starts to blink and let her eyes adjust. A blurred foot slams the gun out of her hands; the woman slowly lifts both hands to show that they're now empty, while Ambrose starts disassembling the weapon into its component parts. "Told by who? The person on the phone?"

Rue nods, reaching out to touch Roxy's shoulder and then Dave's, as though to reassure herself they're all there. "I'm afraid I didn't recognize the voice." Then she freezes, eyes gone wide as she looks at all of them again, and then over Roxy toward the swinging door. "Where is Oriole?"

An excellent question. One that may, for the moment, have to go unanswered. Before Rose can consider turning to use her sight to pick him out in the restaurant, the woman speaks up, her eyes pinched shut and her voice pitched low but carrying. "My lady wants to discuss terms. Peacefully." Her mouth makes a moue of distaste.
"Peaceful? Well, she's got a real shit opener." Ambrose says from - somewhere. Rose catches a fleeting glimpse of him on the roof beside them, but he stays in constant motion. Keeping tabs on the bright fire of his aura would be easier, maybe, but something far more interesting snags Rose's attention when she switches over - an agitated, fluttering pulse that bears a remarkable resemblance to Oriole, sliding into the far side of the idling car and wrenching the glove compartment open.

"We have little practice with the concept," the woman says, shrugging and bringing her hands to rest on the back of her bowed head. "And she has reason to suspect that one-on-one negotiations with the good doctor would be preferable to dealing with multiple parties at once. Our sincere apologies."

Rose's lip tugs to the side in a not-smile. When she checks on Dave again, he still has his guard up. Actually, she's surprised he isn't on the phone hailing Jade and John to come assist. Despite how much they make fun of Dave's tendency to run time loops for mundane tasks rather than giving forewarnings about situations like this...well, what with almost the entirety of the joint Strider-Lalonde gene pool present, they might have this under control, she supposes. "Apologies fall rather flat, under these circumstances," she says, arching an eyebrow that the woman can't see.

"Kidnapping and holding someone at gunpoint doesn't particularly endear you to anyone."

"We would have returned her," the woman says, angling her head toward Rose's voice, and then switching towards Rue without missing a beat. "You may be able to do a service for us that no other can, Doctor Lalonde. Never fear - we would offer you something of equal value in exchange." A delicate pause. "Again, though, we have no wish to parley with multiple hostiles at once. Come to the secondary location, and you have our word you would be returned unharmed."

"Bull fucking shit. You've got her talking in your earpiece right now, don't you." Ambrose's voice has a sharper edge than usual. No, forget 'sharper' - he's practically spitting acid. "Droog."

"Ambrose, we don't know -" Rue starts, but he cuts her off: "They only have one 'my lady.'"

By way of confirmation, the woman bows her head further. A faint smile toys with the corners of her lips. "She asks if you appreciated her first gift of good faith."

Oh, Rose catches it now; a subtle lilt in the woman's voice that Ambrose must have picked up on first, the kind of odd emphases on words that might indicate she's relaying a message from someone else. In the car Oriole's head shoots up at the mention of Droog's name, and he catches Rose's eye before shutting the glove compartment, quiet and cautious. His wings splay out a little from under the cover of his jacket with the effort needed to contort himself into the back seat of the car. What on earth is he doing? Out of everyone here, he's the one most likely to be seen from the main road; how much longer before someone notices him, or the fact that Dirk and Dave both have bladekind drawn and aren't being subtle about it in the least?

And where is Diamonds Droog in all this? Not in the car, obviously, but if she is nearby...

Ambrose is clearly operating under a similarly uneasy train of thought - or perhaps he's in the process of going off the rails. He reappears and stays put for once, setting his sword on level with the woman's neck with a suddenness that makes Dave twitch. "What the fuck are you talking about? Talk real fast."

"Do you really believe a sleeper operative of Samuel Egbert's caliber would have been so clumsily activated, in the middle of a situation he had zero chance of extracting himself from, if we had not deliberately sold him out?" The woman gives a small bow, low enough that her throat scrapes the edge of the sword. "A gift, from us to you - and a test." Her eyes flutter open. Rose tenses, but she does nothing but look up at Bro's shades, considering. "And what we offer you now is something no one else can."
"Which would be?" Rue asks, stepping forward. Rose puts out a hand to restrain her, but Rue stops after that single step, the muscle of her arm taut under Rose's grip.

"The Felt." The woman gives a shrug, her head tipping to the side. "Their main base of operations, their defenses, their last reported operations. On a platter."

Rose's mind sputters for a moment. She's still weighing whether or not the line about Samuel Egbert being hung out to dry has any plausible merit; this tips the balance right over from potentially viable to a steaming pile of horse manure. The whole thing predicates on too many incredibly unlikely suppositions - the idea that a violent crime boss like Droog would ever be sincere being the most unlikely of the lot.

So what is their game? What purpose would taking Rue serve, after all this? Was it just a way to lure them out into the alley?

"What in the name of fuck would make you want to give them up?" Ambrose says. He's prowling; that's the only word for it. He is blatantly agitated, and the fact that Rose can detect that is making her even more unsettled in turn.

"My lady has reason to believe she has been betrayed. As have all other card suit members of the Crew." The words sound like each costs the woman immense internal struggle to put together. "There is something. In their heads. They want it gone, and only a select few have the knowledge necessary to perform such an operation. And in return, we will give you everything you need to strike at the heart of the Felt." She shudders, and blood bubbles out from her right nostril. "A-ah."

It doesn't make sense. No, it almost makes sense. And that's what worries Rose. It's a kind of warped, twisted sense that makes her question her own sanity; she can think of a dozen different ways to fake a nosebleed like that, but the logic isn't helping her claw her way out of the surrealness of the situation. "The weird shit strikes again," Dave says, shaking his head, and - he's right. It has honestly reached the point where Rose almost believes this woman's story simply because it's too ludicrous to be fake. One day she's going to toss the weird-shit-o-meter out the window, because their everyday lives have reached the saturation point.

Rue worries her lower lip with a tooth. "...Tempting offer," she says, sotto voce. Her voice lowers further still. "If they have mindgrubs in their head - we might have leverage -"

"No," Ambrose says, half a snarl. "It's a trap."

The two guardians begin to argue in fierce whispers. "Might not be. Not all the way a trap, anyway." Roxy gulps when Rose blinks at her. "Doctor Die could definitely whammy that Clubs guy, so - maybe, if they really want them out bad enough...But y'know. Droog. Still probably evil, and stuff." Dirk keeps shaking his head all the while, but he's trained his eyes on the woman while everyone else is arguing, and -

The words are halfway out of Rose's mouth before she finishes looking from Dirk to Dave - "Dave, thoughts?" - and when she registers what she's seeing she almost reconsiders the possibility that Droog might have done something to the alley. Dave sways on his feet, looking faint. Rose curses herself for not noticing earlier. He flinches hard when she touches his arm, doesn't pull away but shivers like someone wracked with fever. "Dave, what's the matter?"

He lies to her face. "Nothing. Doesn't matter. It doesn't - shit."
"I'll meet with your lady," Rue says, almost at the same time. In her haste to check on Dave, Rose let go of her, and now she walks forward until Ambrose himself leaves off guarding Droog's minion to ward her off. "But at a secondary location of my choice, not hers. If she really wants access to my doctors and facilities, I want this information she's promising up front."

"Lalonde," Bro says. "You're making a mistake."

"My risk, not yours," Rue replies, before he can say anything more. This is all going far too quickly; Dave is shaking with terror and Rose doesn't know why.

Droog's mouthpiece inclines her head. She hasn't moved an inch from where she started, watching them argue with boredom in her eyes. The blood from her nose has painted a thin line down her lip and chin, but she doesn't try to wipe it off. All she does is continue to relay the messages, as close to word for word as must be possible. "Your choice, fine. But the information - no. Meet with my lady, and then, if you can remove the mindgrub from one of her associates without incident, she will begin to share what she knows. Remove it from her second associate, and you will have everything."

"And if we remove it from her?" Rue drives home, like a falcon diving for the kill.

"Only to hit the ground. "She has no interest in such an operation. Not when the odds of her surviving it would be...slim." The woman's eyes go to Ambrose once again. All utmost care, Droog's employee takes a hand off the back of her head, reaches into a pocket, and flicks out a business card between two fingers. It lands on the ground, just missing a puddle of something unidentifiable by an inch - Rose suspects that if she'd tried to offer it to any one of them, Ambrose would have taken the woman's hand off. Smart move. "Call before nine."

The woman starts to edge backward, taking careful steps back to her car without once turning her head or looking down to watch her footing. She meets them stare for stare as she walks steadily back, her lips pressed closed, and Rose only remembers to look away and make sure Oriole is out of the car scant seconds before the woman reaches it. No sign of him.

Rue waits until the woman has driven away before dipping to pick up the card, at least. She turns it over, fingernails clicking on the paper as she refuses to look in Ambrose's direction. But Rose is more concerned about Dave than this - quagmire of a situation. Rose can guess what's going through Rue's mind; she might have made the same choice, if confronted with a similar offer. A poisonous kind of Lalonde logic. Ambrose's uncharacteristic panic is more of a mystery, but not something Rose can concern herself with right now. Dave jumps like she's slapped him when she touches the back of her hand to his forehead. "You need to sit. You look like you're going to faint," she says.

Wrong tactic. She's used to John, who sometimes needs coaxing but is generally amenable to acknowledging his vulnerable moments when pushed. Dave leaps into defensive posturing in a flash, an entirely artificial stiffness straightening his back and eliminating the shivers from his hands in seconds. "As if. I'm fine."

Roxy trades glances with Dirk over Dave's head. "Dude, you were wobobblin'," Roxy says, worried.

"Lies and slander." Dave shuts down more before their eyes. Now's not the moment to press it - no, it is, but Dave won't let them. If Rose were to get him on his own and ply him with apple juice to get back on his good side...here it won't work though. Not with so many witnesses, not with Ambrose, patriarch of unhealthy emotional stoicism, jittering on his own knife's edge. Something is off with both of them, and Rose has never flat out hated their strange brand of suppression this much before. Found it amusing and sometimes irritating, yes. But Dave nearly just collapsed, and is now doing his best to pretend it didn't happened, and after everything else that has gone wrong lately, that is apparently where Rose draws the line.

"You guys done having fun over here without me?" Oriole - comes out through the restaurant door, behind Roxy. At Rose's questioning look, he jerks his head to the side. It's a distraction from the obvious issue, and Rose knows it's a distraction, but Dave won't meet her eyes. Too much has happened in the past fifteen minutes for it to go much further. "Went around the front. Not like it did any good. All I found in that car was a useless box."

Rue sighs as she slides Droog's card into the side pocket of her dress. "Why were you in the car in the first place, love?"

Oriole shrugs. His feathers are mussed, and he finger combs them back in line with his hair in a frustrated gesture. "Looking for stuff to take. Secret shit. I thought there was something in the backseat, but it was nothing important."

"It's the thought that counts. Though I'd appreciate if you didn't put yourself quite so far into harm's way." Rue sighs. "We'll know more soon enough."

Absence takes a moment for Rose to notice; at first she thinks he's just gone back to darting around, but her sight can pick out nothing when she blinks it back on. Ambrose is gone. "It could just be a trap," she feels the need to voice for him, since he has vanished.

"Then we will still know more, soon enough." Rue's glance lingers on Dave, a flicker of her worry escaping in her eyes, and then she summons a smile for all of them, strained enough that Rose knows no one is fooled. At least they're all in good company. "Let's get something else to eat, dears. I'm sorry."

--

She reunites with her dear King late in the evening, long after the sun has descended behind the city's skyline. Long shadows paint the floor of the office space as she stands at the window, framed in light. Leaving the player's stronghold without drawing undue attention proves no hardship; she has ways of avoiding scrutiny, and they have other struggles to absorb their focus.

It is the most deliberate of coincidences that the King - Protector finds her there, when he has no reason to venture up to this floor of this particular skyscraper. For a moment, she finds herself unable to turn toward him as the door swings open. Now more than ever, she feels aware.

Sixteen players under one roof generates quite a lot of significance - and an Archdeaconstructor always has a certain weight to it -

But more than that - a white-hot note has reached the edge of the city, an echo of power welling deep in her thorax.

It is good that the Black Queen is still absent, whatever her real motives. The White Queen remains uncertain just how much the fleeting use of the Prospitian Ring affected her counterpart, but no doubt she would be able to sense its presence as well. They both gave up their rings, gave up their war for the sake of this last, broken game, and that is not an arms race she would like to reinitiate in the middle of a city full of oblivious souls. As the glitches pile up and time breaks down further, the thought troubles her more: if Skaia intends to complete the transition that Jack Noir started, and have Queens rather than Kings take to the Battlefield as in the old times, she'd hate for the first battle to take place on a planet as fragile as this. Sighing, the WQ turns at last, skimming over the portrait of the Witch of Space on the wall and feeling lighter at heart the moment she lays eyes on the face of her dearest. His carapace looks weathered and worn with age, with faint creases of brittle scars she does not remember. He hangs back a few paces away, waiting for her to finish ruminating on the view below - how many times has he joined her in contemplation on the balconies of Prospit, before leaving to wage his wars? - but before she can sign a word he sweeps her up in an embrace, crushing her claws in a tight grip.

WQ: Oh, my dear. How long has it been?

GP: Far too long.

She cups the side of his face, rolling up onto her toes to kiss the GP properly. He bends slightly so that his mouth is in reach. After only a moment, though -

Perhaps she spoke too soon. She should have known better. Some shifts in the peripherals of her awareness, and when she pulls away the shadows begin to warp and curl into unnatural shapes. They pool in one corner, a familiar voice emerging before the figure finishes solidifying.

SS: Lemme go. Goddammit!

Two figures. The WQ lays a claw on the Protector's arm when his shoulders stiffen. Another Dersite stumbles out of the shadows, caught in the harsh grip of the Black Queen's broken claw. He wrenches himself free, clacking his teeth fiercely as he yanks his shabby suit jacket back into place. His face has none of the open curiosity and resolve of the small democratic one; it's sharp and angry and identical to Noir's in almost every way.

But there's no lingering sense of a Dersite Ring about him or her mirror twin. Thank Skaia for that. The WQ gives her husband's arm one last tap - at ease - and steps forward to greet her cousin queen.

SS: Piece of shit ancient old hag -

WQ: You've returned! I thought not to see you again, so soon.

BQ: As usual, this bothersome runt causes more trouble than he's worth.

SS: I'll give you runt, you enormous bit-

The Black Queen's voice overrides him, her claws gesturing perhaps more strongly than necessary. It would take special circumstances for an Archagent to be able to shout down a Queen, but the memories of such an occurrence are still fresh in the minds of both Queens present. The BQ turns her attention to the Protector, her eyes narrowed in clear disdain, which may be as courteous as she can bother to be for a King. Skaia only knows that the White Queen has been lucky to be graced with a King who was most of the way sane throughout their iteration of game sessions. The Black Kings in all their iterations tended to be more...ruinous. If the Black Queen had tried to clone a Dersite King all those centuries ago - but it would seem that this game is broken enough that not even the BQ thought raising up a BK would be worth the devastation.

BQ: Weren't you lording it over my useless annexed subjects?

GP: We come in peace.

BQ: It's starting to come back to me...the reason why I hate Kings. So much. I could have gone another century without having to see you.

The Protector smiles winsomely, his claws slowly clasping in front of him in a familiar, silent gesture. He's acting as though he's on his best behavior in the face of the insult, of course - but it's hard to forget that he came charging across continents in a titan class war carapacian.

WQ: All is well, I hope? We don't want to fight, and there is much I wished to discuss with you.

BQ: I did not locate my ring, if that's what you're implying. And yes, I agree. We must talk.

SS: Whatever. Can I go, you sick broad?!

Drawing attention back to himself might not have been the best idea. But Spades Slick doesn't cower when the eyes of three monarchs rest on him; he scowls, bristling, and bares teeth at all of them in turn, a knife clenched in one claw. In general, the White Queen understands that she and her cousin queen rule very differently, but it is still difficult not to frown in disapproval when the Black Queen jams her cigarette holder into the crook of the smaller Dersite's shoulder, hard enough to draw blood.

Kindness and patience and encouragement work well with Prospitians. Perhaps with Dersites, too, if they ever received it. But the Black Queen forfeited that capacity long ago, and when the Protector shifts uneasily, clearing his throat with a click of disapproval, the BQ flashes another scornful smile at him. Spades keeps ahold of his knife despite the thin weapon stabbed through his carapace, ready to retaliate at any opportunity. When the Black Queen retracts the cigarette holder he slices open a line down her forearm.

GP: Isn't he -

WQ: Calm, my dearest heart.

BQ: No, please. Free me from this wretched chain of animosity.

SS: You know you like it.

BQ: Ugh.

The Black Queen stalks away from Spades, prowling around the Prospitians as she taps her bloodied specibus against the side of her leg. She's in new wrappings, a close black sheath with no sleeves, and as she brushes past the wide brim of her hat dips low. Her weight leans heavily to one side as she takes up almost the same position at the window that the White Queen occupied earlier, her voice blooming in their minds despite her turned back.

BQ: Though if you intend to unleash your kingly wrath on anyone, you might want to aim for his double. Noir is going to be...more than an annoyance.

That is news.

WQ: Where did you find him?

BQ: Tch. Holed up with Scratch, naturally. Difficult to investigate without the Lord's proxy catching sight of us, but the duplicate has been...experimenting. I'm surprised you couldn't sense it from here. I want to flay that Witch for letting him eat her familiar.

She casts a cold, hard stare at the painting on the wall, and in that moment, the WQ has little doubt her sister means every word.

WQ: I thought she had removed the vestiges of Space from him?

BQ: It left a mark. Before now, he was not stable. Apparently he blew up a few buildings in the nineties before his atomic structure began to decohere beyond his ability to control it. But they have stitched him together.

GP: Skaia have mercy.

BQ: Skaia has nothing to do with him. He is a walking glitch, a freak of both Time and Space. If Scratch sees a reason to keep Noir on his payroll, I see reason to be concerned. He wields Space without compunction; we can't rely on him to have an alignment with Blood like this wretch.

SS: Eat me.

WQ: At least that correlates with what I have seen.

BQ: Oh? Do tell.

WQ: I have learned of what went on after our exit from both sessions. My dear, you would have been gone by this point.

The Protector squeezes her hand, and she leans back against him.

WQ: The Lord of Time came, shattering time, and Skaia did not fight the incursion. We are indeed on our last round, and I only anticipate that the glitching will grow worse still under his influence from here on out. There may be a way out for our players, but I think this is the end of us, my dears.

Spades Slick has walked over to the desk across the room, muttering to himself as he seizes a fistful of kleenex and wads it up to scrub at his suit. The wound itself, the White Queen notes, has already sealed over with a dark scab. He snorts when the WQ finishes speaking, rolling his eyes as he tosses shreds of tissue paper into the trash can. While he picks at the new hole in his jacket and scowls, the Black Queen voices the same sort of derision.

BQ: You sound disappointed. Did you really think she would do anything? You know better.

BQ: Precious, precious Skaia won't fight back. We're just the fucked pieces in her very last game, stuck running in the same old patterns while the clock counts down. Isn't. It. Precious.

The window cracks under the force of the Black Queen's voice, a mug on the desk rattling precariously close to the edge of the counter. SS digs the tip of a pinky claw into his ear, sour faced but worryingly unaffected. The White Queen can only have faith that her sister queen would not have kept the archagent alive if there was a chance he could follow Noir's example. As far as she knows, this particular iteration never glitched as far as that.

Still. She takes a cautious step away from her Protector, making her movements as slow and telegraphed as possible so that the other Queen can sense her approach. Touch would do nothing but cause her to lash out - the oldest instinct - but the WQ eases closer to the Black Queen all the same, trying to breathe steadfastness and reassurance. Neither are things that the BQ is the type to be affected by, but perhaps it can distract her from that deep, ancient hate written into her ectobiological code with a slightly more modulated dislike.

BQ: Desist.

WQ: We are what she made us.

BQ: Spare me your sympathy.

GP: Maybe she already has.
It's enough of a non-sequitur by that point that the White Queen, who can follow his thoughts as easily as her own, can't place exactly what the GP means. The Black Queen glances up with a cutting stare, arms folded tight over her chest.

BQ: Leave the thinking to your Queen. Spare me the ramblings of a King who thinks he has an idea.

WQ: Dear?

The broad caparacian rubs a hand over the smooth crown of his head, and the White Queen exudes one last mental wave of at ease, trying to soften the edge of the Black Queen's palpable ire where it might cut too deeply into the other two minds in the room. Another old bitterness, then, and all in the room know why the Black Queen's main impression of Kings is so tainted. Between disdain for a King she considers too soft, and memories of a Baleful King too prone to listening to the songs of the Horrors before obediently going on the warpath...

GP: Being forced to live on a single world together should have caused our two peoples to engage in mutual destruction - but they cooperate.

He says it slowly, running the claw of one finger along the nailbed of another as he frowns up at the portrait of the elderly man. Beyond him, restless, Spades Slick fidgets on the edge of the desk and tosses a knife from claw to claw, watching on the three other carapacians with an unreadable glower.

GP: Hm. What else have you learned, my dear?

WQ: The small one who speaks of democracy has returned. From what the Witch of Space has told me, his body remains afflicted by power beyond his ken.

WQ: In the records directly concerning the scratch, I believe Typheus struck out at the Lord. If any of the other denizens joined him, it was lost in the course of the scratch itself.

Of course, she wonders what Cetus may be. Hephaestus might still be largely intact, but Echidna's abode lay dangerously near to where Noir's absorption of the wolf broke the land. From Prospit the Queen might have been able to make contact with the Frostmother, at least, but not from this planet. Having Horrorterrors infest denizens to reach their corresponding players...and Cetus endured it the longest. With all the glitches, would there have been enough left for the game to recycle her data at all? If anything is left, the probability that the grimdark still lays claim to Cetus is as troubling a thought as Noir risen up as a fresh abomination.

SS: What the fuck are you all on about?

BQ: ...You think those aren't glitches. Of course you do. You have too much faith.

GP: There is a pattern that cannot be explained by random cracks and broken paradox loops.

GP: If we entered the game now, what would the Battlefield look like? Who benefits, with the armies of Prospit and Derse in detente, and denizens stirring from their slumbers not to strike at players, but at an outside threat?

SS: It would look like a fucking mess, that's what.

Spades spits on the floor. Not close enough to the Protector's feet to be an outright insult, but the fact that he would at all... What is it, the White Queen wonders, that causes archagents of Derse to turn out like this? Can it be tied to ectobiological sequences when, as far as every source the WQ could reach can tell, the Midnight Crew's DNA really was wiped from the records? The others might have resurfaced through other means, but somehow Spades exists, a carapacian who should not be, who apparently sprung forth fully formed with no other carapacian the wiser. Perhaps he was just too significant in some way for Skaia to let the Crew fade away quietly.

Or perhaps he's as much a glitch as the Noir copy. The thought that soon Skaia's will might be unrecognizable between all the glitches in time chills the WQ to the core.

SS: What're you getting at, big guy?

GP: The players. At this rate they won't have to navigate the turmoil of the Battlefield, or concern themselves with a Black King. Will a Reckoning even truly occur, or will it simply be this Lord that threatens the session onward? You call it a mess, but Skaia has brought order from chaos before.

And now the White Queen nods along, considering the possibility that the Protector has given shape too.

WQ: Then fewer game-driven obstacles may stand between them and the end. My dear, you may be on to something with this.

BQ: Or it's all just broken, and you two will die Witless and Wishful-thinking - oh wait.

Or that. But the WQ does want to believe. Better that than becoming Wretched. She bows her head in acknowledgement nonetheless, while from behind, the GP takes her hand and gives it a faint squeeze.

WQ: What will you do now?

The other queen shrugs, tapping her cigarette holder against the crack in the window. If she were to apply pressure, the whole thing might shatter and rain down on someone below. That thought, though - the White Queen cannot quite tell whether it is a genuine concern, or a faint pulse from her ring, so near and yet so far from her.

It matters little; the Black Queen brings her specibus back, fits it with a cigarette, and lights it. Spades feigns a choking gag, though the smell or smoke could hardly have reached him where he sits.

BQ: ...Help. But if Noir locates my damn ring before I do, it'll be on this one's head.

She jabs the cigarette holder back at Spades, smoke curling in ringlets through the air as she does.

SS: Shaddup. You don't need to know where it is for it to stay hidden, you powerhungry shitty hat loving tyrant.

BQ: Oh, you insufferable -

Before the pitch beginning to circulate can rile either Dersite any further, thankfully, the Protector clears his throat and interrupts.

GP: Actually, I was wondering if I could ask a favor of you.

For a moment, both the Black Queen and Spades look baffled. The White Queen is amused to catch them forgetting themselves for a moment and exchanging bewildered looks - you or me? - before the BQ snaps back into vicious regality.

BQ: ...Of...me? Is this not something you two could handle under your own power? As ineffectual as your tactics can be, I assume that you know how this works by now.

BQ: Here is a hint: find your problem, and use the giant bishop to step on it. Problem solved. Favor granted. You are welcome.

GP: It may be more complicated than that, I'm afraid. This requires both sneaking and politics. How familiar are you with the Condesce?

Another unanticipated turn.

WQ: What of her, my dear?

GP: She is doing something most curious. I should like to pay a personal visit to her. My sources say that she has gone to a villa in Minnesota.

GP: Oh, no. I had a very friendly small one sneak onto her craft in the Arctic and go with her to Minnesota.

After a moment's pause for consideration, the BQ steps away from the window, wisps of smoke curling around her shadowed face as she saunters over. She doesn't stop until she is right in front of them, and then daintily puts a toe into that last foot of neutral buffer territory between her and the GP, leaning in just as she exhales another mouthful of cigarette smoke. It's...well, flagrant enough that the other Dersite fumbles and drops his knife on the floor with a strangled sound.

BQ: Give me one good reason I should do this for you, when I have so many other things I could be doing that I know for a fact would be more pertinent to my interests?

GP: She has an armada of spaceships scattered around the planet, of a design not seen yet in observations of this world's space faring efforts.

GP: It makes me curious what she intends to use them for.

This is all highly unorthodox. The White Queen rests a claw carefully on the crook of the GP's arm, feeling the broad, toughened shell through the fabric of his garments and knowing that even now, she could crush him with a twist of her hand. Kings, bishops, rooks, knights, pawns - there is nothing on the board a Queen could theoretically defeat. It is a sensation that she accustomed herself to over many lifetimes, so long ago now that it's simply habit to ignore the awareness. She doesn't know why it strikes her now, except perhaps as a tendril of warning, a thought tucked into her mind by Skaia herself - the Black Queen would be able to crush him, too. Has done so, though that would have been too many eons ago for the GP's limited recollection of past sessions to still hold true. Back before the Queens turned their attention away from the Battlefield and toward Prospit at Skaia's behest, it wouldn't have been uncommon.

Jack Noir wasn't ahead of the curve, in that sense. He simply revived the oldest of traditions. Queen takes King.

BQ: ...Fine. Color me interested by your bumbling proposal. And what are you going to do?

That last is again directed at her, and yet the WQ finds herself, for the briefest moment, transfixed by a flare of old, white hot memory. She has no idea what she must look like; the GP presses her claw with his own, concern in his dark eyes as he searches her face, and while the sight of Spades frowning at her past the BQ's shoulder sends a smaller spark of memory through her, in that moment far older memories hold sway.

And that troubles her. Greatly. She rocks on her heels, closing her eyes and mentally gathering up the sharp edges of memory to slip back into the deep well of her mind. When she reopens her eyes, the Black Queen is considering her with an intent stare, as though she could dip into the WQ's mind and see what lies there. Both of them, feeling the weight of their ageless age.

WQ: I shall remain here, as a consult to the players. Though I do not know how much help my knowledge will be as this game glitches further.

Before she can dwell too deeply, the WQ touches the GP's cheek and draws him in for another kiss, sweet and light and not in the least despairing. He cradles the side of her face again for a long moment, long enough to provoke Spades into making false, gagging sounds, and then they part. He offers his arm to the BQ, the model of decorum, and the Black Queen looks bitter enough to stab him with her specibus before turning and stalking back out the door, the shadows already creeping up her legs. Unperturbed, the Protector goes after her, with a curt nod for Spades and one final message for the WQ.

GP: Then we will do what we can. Goodbye, my love.

WQ: Farewell, my dear.

She turns to the window before the door has finished closing, and contemplates the end.

SS: ...What're you lookin' at, dammit?

Without the presence of the Black Queen, there's a touch less aggravation in the Dersite's voice; the angry growl sounds like force of habit rather than true animosity. His feet make a faint thump as he jumps off the desk and shuffles awkwardly, neither moving nearer to the WQ or to the exit.

WQ: It is a nice world, isn't it?

SS: No. It's a pisspoor, glorified dirt rock, and I can't wait until it gets wasted. We done here?

WQ: Ah, well. To each their own. I've rarely seen host planets before their Reckoning; they feel very alive. It is nice to be able to appreciate it before the end.

SS: Okay, that understanding, pansier-than-thou bullshit? That's fucking annoying. Goddamn. I think you just gave me a fucking ulcer.

With that, the carapacian brushes off his pants and starts to leave, ignoring her in a way that makes it evident that he is not ignoring her in the slightest. The WQ tactfully does not call him out on this. As he goes to the door, however, she adds one last thing.

WQ: Where will you go?

SS: None of your shitty business.

WQ: Because if you intend to return to consult with the Knight of Blood, we are going to the same place.

SS: ..................

SS: Oh, goddammit. Come on, then.

---

TG: john
TG: dude
TG: the stereotypically significant espionage bird crows at midnight TG: or some shit like that EB: and the blue owl hoots at dawn.
EB: i don't think we're doing this right.
TG: you should have seen some of the suggestions rose was coming up with TG: 'the violin sobs in the autumn wind'
EB: oh yeah, rose's are great!
EB: one time we had an entire conversation about the avocado harvest on the ides of March.
TG: what were you actually talking about EB: actually...maybe that wasn't code...we might have just been talking about avocados.
EB: it was a while ago.
TG: you guys have the weirdest friendship
TG: like theres weird as in your new honkfriend thing
TG: and then theres weird as in whatever strange shit you and rose get up to in your spare time
TG: and somehow that second one is weirder than the first TG: props dude
EB: thanks, i think.
TG: but on the subject of the honkfriend thing
EB: oh god.
TG: when i said we would get you another boy/girl/otherfriend
TG: i was mostly bullshitting
EB: it just kind of happened! in the heat of the moment!
TG: i dont know if youve noticed but it keeps happening john TG: present tense
TG: ongoing
TG: continuous
EB: well, i mean, that's...not entirely a bad thing, right?
EB: on account of if me and karkat stopped now gamzee would freak.
EB: and he's not that bad as long as he's not trying to murder people!
TG: living is cool ill give you that one TG: but as your number one bro joined to you in holy broship through the power vested in me by our standing proposal i gotta tell you that keeping a dude from murdering other people sounds like a really shady ass basis for a long term relationship
TG: but hell man i still have no idea how quadrants work for you people
EB: i'm pretty sure they don't work.
EB: everything's made up and the points don't matter.
EB: also the only reason karkat's not mad at me is because we're all confused and it sucks.
TG: bruh
EB: ...bruh?
TG: youre doing the thing again
EB: what thing?
TG: the wallowing thing
TG: probably while karkat is sitting two feet away from you
TG: that guy is always dtp right
EB: what does that even mean?
TG: down 2 pap
EB: hahahah, that's true!
TG: so ask him
EB: ask him what?
TG: if hes pissed
EB: we're trying to keep arguments to a minimum since -
TG: dude i will ride for you in bro hell
TG: but so help me i will invite shouts mcgee and your mutual honkfriend to this chat EB: dave, don't -
TG: are you ready to get fucked up
-- terminallyCapricious [TC] has joined the chat! --
TC: honk.
TG: hold your honk horses i didnt invite you yet
EB: yeah, he tends to...show up.
TG: it's like sollux. if you mention him, he knows.
TC: ;o)
TG: no hang on this is good
EB: it is?
TG: yo makara you free for a second
TC: sure.
TG: good your boyfriends need to sort their shit out
TG: come hang with me
EB: seriously, dave? this is so not a good idea.
TG: my thinking is this
TG: if a future dave hasnt come back to kick me in the balls
TG: its probs a solid plan
TG: this line of reasoning has yet to bite me in the ass
EB: or, you know, he hasn't come back to warn you because you die.
TG: enough of your silly logic
TG: TC you in or what
TC: I'M IN MOTHERFUCKER.

Dave has been lying on his back on the couch, his cape spilling over one side and his legs hooked over one of the arms. Gamzee says that last sentence out loud, and Dave's head dips as a pair of feet land on the cushion. He blinks and mashes his sunglasses into place with the palm of his hand as the troll leans over him, perching his butt on the back of the couch.

It's only creepy because when John or Jade teleport places, they do it with wind or green light flying every which way. Gamzee just - shows up. Like he's elbowing reality until it makes room for him, even when he doesn't quite fit. Dave hears a faint hum in his head that Rose told him is the equivalent of Gamzee copping a mental feel, but it doesn't hurt or anything. Not compared to some of the shit Horrorterrors can dish out. Still - "Dude, buy me dinner or something before you hit second base, alright?"

Gamzee blinks at him, and the buzzing stops. At the kitchen counter, Oriole yanks an earbud out and looks up from his Really Important Secret Note to glower at Dave. The orange feathers on the side of his face bristle. "I can leave before you pull this kind of shit. Jesus."

"It's, like, metaphorical. Calm your bird tits." He can't resist adding, "Also, if we're taking names in vain, use John's."

Oriole throws the pencil so hard it almost pings Dave between the eyes. Nice shot, actually. Dave has to pause time to snag it in midair before it beans him. "If you can't sext your weird crushes in silence, I don't need to put up with this," Oriole grumps, crumpling the paper in his hand. He makes for the exit, which has been propped open so that people can enter temporary casa Strider at their leisure. His wings fan out like orange sheets in a really goddamn sassy way as he walks out of sight.

Okay. Dave envies that. All the trolls get wings, but no, humans just get the dumb floaty thing that Rose keeps bugging him to practice. Talk about unfair.

"I don't have crushes," Dave says, belatedly. Oriole is long gone by this point, which means only Gamzee hears. Damn. Dave has rolled half off the couch, too, so he has to haul himself back onto it before he slides off.

"If you say so, brother," Gamzee says. The guy sounds normal - when Dave slouches in a different position so he's not lying with his fragile skull really fucking close to the troll's heel, Gamzee even looks normal - aside from the juggalo makeup deal, but Dave tries not to judge. Gamzee has all his limbs attached and his head isn't rolling around doing an impression of the Exorcist, and isn't that all they ask from people around here? The standards are so low it would take a world-class limbo dancer to miss them.

Of course, Gamzee could whip out his championship limbo dancing trophy any second now. Nothing is impossible.

He feels like he needs to explain more. "Bird me was raised by parties unknown. Dude does not understand how one true brohood works." When Gamzee nods but stays silent, his forearms resting on his knees in a relaxed slump as he stares into the middle distance, just past Dave's nervously tapping foot - that's when Dave gets uneasy. The memory of having all forms of communication cut off is too fresh in his mind for him to be down with silence, especially when he invited the cause of [Babelon] to hang out with him like a total moron. Shit. Shit, think of something else to say. "You're not still pissed about that ICP video thing, right?"

Heavy lidded eyes skim over Dave's, and it's pretty stupid to bring up shitty memories of that one time you fucking wrecked a guy's religion. But acknowledgement is acknowledgement. "Because I would say people don't hold grudges and shit about past life fuck ups, but obviously they totally do. And it was a dick move. So. Uh. Sorry about that," he adds.

Gamzee's hand comes up, waving around in the air before resting on the back of the troll's neck; he scratches idly. "I'm as chill as all what's can be," he says. Then he leans back and kicks his feet out at the same time, sliding down to sit on the actual couch with a thump. It puts him abruptly on Dave's level, and he sprawls one long leg out to rest on the table.

He doesn't seem to have anything else to add after that, though, so Dave has to scrounge around for another question to keep the flow going. "Oh. You're not down with the clown or whatever anymore?" Juggalos, man, how do they even work. That past Dave hit a nerve by sending the video - maybe one of the last nerves Gamzee had before turning into a Horrorterror-ridden rage monster - and now nothing? With his track record, Gamzee doesn't seem the type to let shit like that go.

Or else dumping all of Derse on top of Dave's head was payback enough. Who knows how the inner workings of this guy's mind work? Dave doesn't think even Rose would want to poke around in Gamzee's subconscious.

"Nah. You showed me the motherfucking ignorance of my ways, motherfucker." One of Gamzee's arms creeps up to rest along the back of the couch, and Dave eye it warily before he gets a hold of himself. "Helped me get all sorts of realizations on. You help me, I help you - we're chill as blood, brother."

Right, right. Killing people is helping. "Then why do you wear the face paint stuff still?"

The purpleblood shrugs. "Why do you wear shades, motherfucker? Because I like it."

Actually, Dave wears shades because Bro busted his ass from day one to keep emotions on the downlow. But he looks at the smile painted on Gamzee's face, and how it almost distracts from the flat corners of his mouth underneath it, and hell, who is Dave to judge a mask? "So...we're good?"
Gamzee smiles, his lips curving to match the lines of his paint. "Ain't anything but good."

"Sweet."

That appears to be that. Gamzee tilts his head back to stare at the ceiling, and hums something to himself so faintly Dave can't place it. After enough not-quite-awkward silence has passed, his thumbs find their way back to his phone.

EB: dave?
EB: gamzee is with you, right?
EB: he just kind of - went.
TG: yeee
EB: and uh...everything's okay?
TG: not dead yet
TG: i think hes pretty calm
EB: huh. that's a relief!
EB: maybe we should time this for future reference.
TG: way ahead of you man
TG: i mean i wouldn't stick him in a room with eridan or vriska or some shit
TG: due to those two not being stellar examples of peace and tranquility and oneness with the universe
EB: oneness with the universe?
TG: you know what i mean
EB: oneness with the universe.
TG: shut up
TG: ill oneness your face
EB: iiii have too much respect for your mom to type what i nearly typed just now. :/
TG: do it john TG: finish the damn meme
EB: no way!
TG: then go back to talking with your small shouty boyfriend we dont have all day

"...S'it true?"

Dave shouldn't zone out while Gamzee is in the room. He didn't think it through before spontaneously volunteering himself as temporary clown overseer, but - yeah. Responsibility. He forces the phone back down into his pocket and folds his legs up on the couch with a mental shake. He's faster than Gamzee (probably) as long as he doesn't get caught off guard. "Is what true?" he asks, hoping that he didn't miss an entire evil monologue or some shit like that. "If you heard about it from Rose, none of it is true. She likes messing with people."

"God dammit, Oriole. "What? No. Weren't you just doing the -" Dave has no idea what to call the gesture he makes at his own temples "- spying thing? John and me are bros."

"I read," Gamzee says, all clipped and noncommittal as hell, and what does that mean? Dave has no idea. "But you, hermano - you think around and around and around in circles and never think on it."
He squints at Dave with eyes narrowed to purple slits, and there's the humming in the back of Dave's head again. "Can't tell if you're making noise to make noise, or in motherfucking denial."

That tone of voice isn't worrying or anything. "Jeez, I thought we were gonna rap or something, since that's the only hobby I know we have in common. When did we decide to talk about my massive broner for John?" The words come out too fast; Dave's tripping on them. Did he just make a horrible pun with neither Jade nor John here to appreciate it? Why. "Karkat and I already had an entire 'stay away from my man' sequence, let's not do it again." Meanwhile, as discreetly as he can, Dave starts inching away. Karkat being jealous over nothing is entertaining up to a certain point; Gamzee being jealous might end in Dave losing important things. Like his legs. Or face. The world would be a darker place without Dave's eyebrows there to improve the view for everyone around him. Does Gamzee even dig John enough for jealousy to be a thing, or is Dave just beyond unlucky?

"But you up and swore to him," Gamzee says. He sounds unconvinced.

Dave rolls his eyes. "The proposal thing is a joke. He still owes my family cattle from last time the dowry fell through. There is like, a serious cattle deficit that needs to be made up here." Though when Dave thinks about it, demanding cattle out of John might just end with Jade teleporting in a literal herd of cattle, if she decides to take up the reins as the only other blood member of the Egbert-Harley clan still living and not disqualified by virtue of being a unrepentant dick. Wait no, Jake and Jane count now. Whatever. It could start another round of pranksmanship that Dave is not prepared for, and if those four all end up in cahoots, everyone's screwed.

In spite of Dave's explanation, Gamzee has moved on from suspicious squinting to leaning in close, a frown under his smile and oh no. Not another jealous troll husband. Where does John find these people? How does Dave always end up the unwitting mistress? Why does no one accuse Rose of being John's other woman, so that at least it's a mutual Strilonde struggle?

...Alright, the whole lesbians thing might be her excuse. God dammit. Should Dave have been wrangling a fresh herd for Rose's dowry? How do dowries work in the first place, because Dave isn't sure he's ever been clear on that shit. Fuck. Gamzee makes a muffled noise of frustration, and scratches the side of his horn. "Motherfucker, you think weird."

That's pretty much the last straw. Having Gamzee of all people call him weird is where Dave draws the line. He needs to lay down some shit, here. "Man, no. No." He gets to his feet so he can better jab his finger at Gamzee's face without sticking it in biting range. "I don't want to pap on John. I don't want fucking hate makeouts with Karkat." Gamzee is staring at him with eyes like saucers. "Fucking hell, I know it's hard to resist this sweet bod of mine! But I will brozone the entire world if I have to! Your quadrants can't catch me now, suckers!" In the end, just flipping the bird is easier and more poignant, so Dave lets it speak for him.

"Did someone say quadrants?"

"That was, uh, definitely someone saying cuadrantes."

"No, I said no quadrants," Dave insists, spinning and raising an eyebrow accusingly as Tavros rolls past the open door, Nepeta hard on his wheels with a pair of crutches under her arms.

Oh shit Nepeta.

She can't seem to get around Tavros's wheelchair, so she stands there blinking and Dave can only imagine she's not having more of a reaction because her vision hasn't adjusted to the relative darkness of the room compared to the hallway. Apart from the ginger way she leans on the crutches, she looks damn fucking sprightly for someone who was laid up with severe internal injuries a while ago. Her trenchcoat lays slung over one of the handles of the wheelchair, and without it Dave can pick out bruises where the baggy black-and-blue tank top hangs too loose in the arms and exposes the sides of her ribcage. "Oh, really? That's a shame, beclaws I was just telling Tavpurros how I really need to make a new hero shipping wall!" she says, while Tavros nods. "There have been so many developments!"

Dave looks from her to Gamzee.

Who stares at Nepeta with the creepiest look of fascination ever.

TG: PROBLEM
EB: WHAT?!
TG: MAJOR PROBLEM
EB: DAVE YOU CAN'T JUST SCREAM PROBLEM AND EXPECT PEOPLE TO KNOW WHAT YOU MEAN!
EB: SPECIFY, DAVE, SPECIFY!
TG: OH GOD WHY AM I TEXTING YOU WHY-

Nepeta and Tavros appear to notice Gamzee at the same time. "You!" Nepeta says, eyes wide, while Tavros raises his hand and then yanks it back.

Dave does not scream. He just makes an unintelligible not-screaming sound, throws his phone away, and tries to understand why Nepeta is walking into the room instead of sprinting away as fast as her crutches can carry her. Gamzee is also in motion, sitting up from his slouch with avid interest in his eyes.

"Meowtherfucker!" Nepeta screeches, and hits Gamzee in the shin with one of her crutches. It snaps in two on impact, and she wobbles dangerously. Tavros skids forward to nudge her back upright, looking torn as he meets Dave's eyes with equal parts terror and apology.

Somehow, Nepeta is still not done. "That's for beating me up!" She sacrifices her last remaining crutch to whack Gamzee upside the chin. That one snaps, too, but Gamzee gets knocked backward at the same time, a thin pocket of purple blood welling up where his teeth smash into his lip. "That one's fur hurting Equius!" Then, with no more crutches and Tavros doing more to haul her back to safety than support her, Nepeta jumps forward with a hiss of pain, hooks an arm around Dave's neck with zero warning as he finally makes an attempt to get between her and death clown incarnate, and uses him as a pivot so she can haul her leg back and kick Gamzee in the crotch. "Don't ever touch my Equius again!"

Okay, Dave is kind of a little impressed.

And proud. He is proud to have been a part of that moment, even if he's getting choked out by a short cat troll in the process. Goddamn.

Then his admiration shuts down and rationality kicks back into gear as he remembers just who Nepeta is attempting to lay a smackdown on. "Wait no wait nononono-" he babbles, as she lets go of him and tries to fucking divebomb Gamzee by flinging her entire body at him elbow-first. Dave catches her in what might be one of the best midair maneuvers of his goddamn life, except that he does it by snagging her around the ribs and she lets out a yowling shriek of pain. God, you'd think he'd have figured out a better way of manhandling people with broken ribs after the Karkat episode.
"Oh shit, oh shit! Sorry!"
"Lemmeowt him!" she yells back, and was that a badly forced pun, or is everything just getting scrambled to the point of not-sense-making again?

Thankfully, just as Gamzee rises up like a vengeance-driven slinky to rip their spines out through their spleens, the wind picks up and John appears with a very familiar projectile lifted up over his head -

"JOHN, IF YOU THROW ME ONE MORE T-"

"JUST THINK CALMING THOUGHTS, KARKAT!"

- and lobs Karkat at Gamzee.

"This is the problem, right?!" John asks, whipping around to face Dave. "Or did I just throw Karkat for nothing?"

Dave looks down at Nepeta and then back up at John, who blinks, points to the door, and belly flops on top of Karkat and Gamzee to buy Dave more time to flashstep away. Goddamn, what a trooper. Sometimes he thinks he could kiss that kid.

...And thoughts like that are probably why he's confusing even to Gamzee. God dam, he needs to stop doing that. While Karkat expels a flurry of swear words like an extinction burst (something involving a lot of fucks and the threat of Betty Crocker pie crust - who even knows), Nepeta kicks her feet between Dave's to trip him up. "No! No running!"

Dave would beg to differ. "Yes, lots of running!"

In response, Nepeta reaches out and digs her claws into the doorframe as they pass it. "Think like an apex predator, Dave!"

"Nepeta, uh, now is really not the time for that, I think!" Tavros chips in. He quickly veers backward so that Dave has more room to move, but even that isn't enough. Any and all progress in getting Nepeta a safe distance away is officially at a halt. How did she dig her claws in that deep?

"It's always time for apex purredator!" she insists, slowly dragging them back into the ground despite Dave digging his heels in. She somehow gets an elbow in around the doorframe and drags them further still.

Why does someone this much shorter than him have so much upper body strength?!

Gamzee is pinned, but for how much longer when he can teleport? Dave lifts a leg, plants his foot against the wall, and uses it for more leverage.

As though the situation couldn't get any more surreal, Tavros whips off his shirt and flaps his not-god wings. "Discúlpeme!" He wraps an arm around Dave's waist and the two of them start to drag Nepeta back out into the hall with their powers combined. But holy fuck is this awkward. All they need now is for Equius to show up and demand to know what the hell is happening; only then they will truly reach maximum awkwardness overdrive.

Gamzee's voice cuts through the awkward terror as he rolls his head back so that his neck is exposed, and smiles at them. "Nah, motherfuckers, it's okay. We're all chill in here," he says, patting Karkat on the head as the other troll and John do their best to cuddle the homicide out of him. "Nepsis got good reason to bring the motherfucking pain, what with me doing her ill. Wanna take another swing, sister?"

Dave and Tavros exchange glances, but Dave gets zero help there; Tavros looks at a loss, his wings fluttering madly as he hovers in place. So traveling around with Gamzee for weeks hasn't given him anymore insight than Dave's got. Dave doesn't want to be the one to make the call that gets Nepeta killed, dammit. "We've got him. Go!" John says, and at the same time Karkat says, "Just get her the fuck out of here, you braindead asswipes!" Which is easier said than done.

Before they can try again, Nepeta goes limp, all the battle-ready tautness seeping out as she slowly un-hooks her claws from the wall, leaving long digs in the paint. There goes whatever measly damage deposit they may or may not have paid. She coils her body back and around to hook an elbow around Dave's head. Her shirt must definitely be borrowed from Equius - it radiates the faint smell of old sweat even through the Bounty freshness of being freshly washed. Nibbling on her lip, she looks down at Gamzee. Dave should take her and go long, or some sports metaphor like that. "...Are you going to apawlogize?" she asks.

Gamzee shrugs, his horns scraping on the floor as he tilts his head back further. "Sorry it hurt," he says. "Ain't sorry I did it, though, that ain't even a motherfucking thing." When the purpleblood breathes his throat bobs in a faint swallow, and Dave feels Nepeta's nails prickle through his hair. "Would've finished you if I could, but these sweet motherfuckers are persistent." His hand drifts over Karkat's side.

"Holy mothergrub feces, why are you people still here?!!" Karkat demands, furious. Then he twitches, his red eyes skittering from Nepeta to the line of Gamzee's exposed neck - and his expression switches at the drop of a hat. He throws an arm over Gamzee's throat and rises into a crouch. "Piss off," he says, this time a little less desperate and a little more...growly?

Whatever. It's not Dave's job to figure out Karkat's malfunction. He's too busy being Nepeta's new human-shaped climbing post. He shifts his grip from her ribs to her hips, so at least if she decides to lunge again he won't be making things worse when he drags her out of here.

"You could let her," Gamzee says. "Would be fair."

"Absolutely fucking not!" Karkat flattens himself out a little, still covering Gamzee's neck. John appears to be swapping his attention between carefully patting Gamzee's cheek and watching Karkat anxiously.

Nepeta shakes her head, hard enough that Dave wobbles. Belatedly, Tavros seems to realize he can stop helping, and lets go of Dave to sit down in his wheelchair and give the wings a break. "No," the oliveblood says, slowly, like she's tasting the words before saying them aloud. "I could, you know. But in this purrticular instance...Equius got better." She cracks her knuckles, lips widening from a pout to a crooked, toothy smile. "Hurt him again, and then we'll have a purroblem."

"He wants to hurt you," Dave points out. "Until you're dead and shit. Seriously, that's the issue here. Just saying."

He yanks his head back as, without warning, four razor sharp metal claws pop out of Nepeta's gloves with a shing! Fucking hell, she's Wolverine. Dave didn't even notice those things, and he should have - Bro would smack him for not noticing concealed clawkind right by his face. "Well, then he can cut that out until the game starts! Otherwise I'll mess him up good," Nepeta says, her chest shivering with faint laughter.

"Until the game," Gamzee says a beat later. And he smiles so fiercely that his eyes squeeze close.

The talk with Aradia is less of a talk than it is complete and total bullshit.

But she makes the traditional overture of inviting him to the roof after banning him from the latest group memo, and Dave's pretty sure the Strider code of conduct says you can't turn down a rooftop callout. It's just not done. Hell, if she wants to strife one out for one ever reason, he wouldn't say no. Everyone here is wound up way too goddamn tight - maybe if they started training and having practice fights it would let off some steam before someone blows their lid.

It's a nice clear day, anyway. Sun shining, a healthy breeze that messes up his hair in a fond kind of way when it sweeps past him, no giant entities of a horrific, tentacled nature in sight. Unlike most rooftops in Dave's experience, this one is paved smooth, jazzed up with a small pool and an empty firepit, and has a couple of stray chairs scattered around; it still feels unfinished, like most of the building, but also it is entirely possible that's just supposed to be some 'modern aesthetic.' Whatever. Strifing up here is gonna be interesting, to say the least, and now Dave has the overwhelming need to shove someone into the pool at the first opportunity. He's surprised more people haven't wandered up here already to take advantage of this.

He doesn't draw a sword when he catches a flutter of red fabric in his peripheral vision, but it's a close call. She's turning in slow circles on her tiptoes by the edge of the firepit; her coiled, gnarled horns look heavier in the sunlight with her hair pulled into a knotted twist over her shoulder. When he thinks hard enough, he can almost hear the sound of time counting off the seconds in chimes instead of beats. Spooky, haunted music box chimes. "Planning your next corpse party? We could toast s'mores and shit as appetizers," he says, giving the place another onceover. "We'd need to buy a ton of pool floaties if we wanted to send them all off in a burial at pool."

"Is that a thing?" Aradia says, with a crooked smile. Like she knows the ironies are strong right now. "And here I thought I'd kept better track of different human funereal practices over the years!"

"It is if you're us, and your corpse tends to just rise up from the grave anyway. Then yeah, pool floaties and s'mores. And once they resurrect, they get first pick at the gods-only ice cream bar." Dave takes out his phone and starts making notes on this, just in case. While his thumbs go to work, he raises an eyebrow at Aradia, typing without looking down. "What do you think, live music? I don't know if Bro could handle DJing, he has kinda this thing about not letting people die."

Aradia snickers. "No one's going to die here. Probably. We could always have a belated party for Equius and Vriska and Terezi, though!"

Oh, wow. Holy shit. "You mean, you and Gamzee don't actually plan to murder people in their sleep while we're here?" Dave asks. His thumb swipes over to Pesterchum before he remembers that no one will be paying attention right now. Ugh.

"Alas - not that I've noticed. Sollux needs more time to fix some of the hiccups in his program. Gamzee can't always be accounted for, but he does seem to be caught in the throes of this interspecies disease we call young love. So." After Dave finishes firing off heads up messages to Rose and Jade and John, Aradia steps down from the firepit and taps a claw on the screen of his phone. She's playing a dangerous goddamn game, there, since the thing already has a massive crack in one corner from Dave throwing it earlier. "There was something I wanted to talk to you about."

Thank god, they're finally going to have this conversation? Dave's been waiting on the edge of his seat for days - more like the middle of the seat, with a brief period of lounging back and not really caring much anymore, but there's no need to overextend the metaphor. "Uh, yeah, I got that impression like, three days ago, and then you just kept not showing up whenever I had spare time. What's up?"

"You need something to distract you at this particular moment. Otherwise you'd probably go down and try to read the memo over someone's shoulder, and that would never do!" Aradia balances with her arms out on either side, dipping a toe into the cold pool water. Dave follows her, though he keeps a couple of feet between him and the pool - no need to tempt fate. If he's thought of shoving someone in, John and Jade probably had the same thought hours ago, and they could strike at any moment. "Out of the two of us, you have the best odds of surviving to see the end of this, but only if you play your cards right. Getting cozy with the new Muse wouldn't be the best plan!"

Dave stops. So, it's going to be one of those conversations. The ones where he has little to no clue what's happening. "What," he says, flatly, since it covers pretty much his entire response. Something about what she said makes his skin crawl - he can't tell if it's her casual disregard for her own demise (which is kind of passé, by now) or the mention of a whatchamacallit - muse? Both, probs both. Yeah.

The troll doesn't stop for him, twirling and drawing her other foot through the water backwards as she keeps turning. "They'll tell us about the details later. Right now, there's something I've been curious about. Do you remember how you lost your voice?"

He frowns. "Remember...what?"

Then Aradia darts in close and reaches up to touch the side of Dave's cheek. Her hand radiates warmth, and the close contact makes Dave uncomfortable. His whole face wants to twitch and yank away, but he forces it to stay still and expressionless while Aradia watches for a reaction. She's not going to get one, dammit. "You don't remember at all, do you? What really happened that day," she says at last, with a small, sympathetic smile. "Well, let's replay it, then. It's - important that you understand, I think. Especially considering what it cost you. What it has been costing you."

The transition is pretty damn smooth. Dave's feet feel like they stay on solid ground the whole time - but when he blinks and drags his eyes away from Aradia's, they're inside a house.

Like. What the shit.

He hasn't been to a lot of houses in his life - the Egberts' place was the only one he spent any notable amount of time in, and that experience is pretty much tainted forever. This place has none of Samuel Egbert's hyper-controlling, secretly-evil-yet-homey vibe; the countertops have dishes set out to air-dry on towels patterned with blue boxes - a weirdly familiar tactic. There's a mug half full of cold coffee on the windowsill with the lipstick print of someone's lower lip dark along the brim, and a bunch of mechanical parts and sheets of paper and colorful toys lay scattered on the table in a jumble. Someone has filled a bowl with water and stuck a bunch of cut wildflowers in it to give the place some pizzazz, but they're looking pretty wilted and the water has gone green. Also, a horrible printed out, framed picture of a wizard in purple robes glares down at it from where the frame rests against the wall. Just down a tiny stretch of hall, he can make out the flickering light of a muted television in the far room.
Dave steps backward, Aradia's hand falling away without a sound, and he scares the piss out of himself when his foot lands on a heap of legos just sitting out in the middle of the kitchen floor. It doesn't hurt like stepping on legos, aka tiny nuggets of plastic hate, usually would, but it startles him and he stares at Aradia accusingly. "Where the hell are we?"

"You don't recognize it at all?" Aradia doesn't sound pitying, just curious. One of her quartz musicboxes makes slow circles in the air beside her, illuminating the dark kitchen with a faint glow and casting a blue glaze across her eyes. "It was your home."

It's not familiar. At all. His hands brush against the papers on the table as he steps over the lego heap, and he glances over handwriting that looks scribbly but with familiar, wavering loops. On a hunch, he goes to the window over the sink (full of dishes in varying states of clean) and raises the half-empty mug to his nose. Holy shit, whoever mixed this coffee must have made it at least fifty percent Bailey's, because he thinks he could get tipsy off the fumes alone. His stomach does an uneasy flip, something rising up in his throat, and he puts the mug back down before the smell can make him dizzy. A second onceover of the kitchen, and he finally notices the neat row of empty booze bottles stacked in the tiny alcove above the trash can.

Still definitely not familiar. Something moves along the floor, low to the ground and fucking fast, and Dave yanks his feet back away from it before registering what he's seen. Tiny hands start stacking the heap of legos back up into a messy tower, turning over a yellow brick with a curved edge and an eye on the side in deep meditation before shoving it into the side of a mouth to gnaw on.

Dave is not used to seeing past Daves young enough to be wearing pajamas covered in yellow ducks. "Oh, no. Hell no." The younger Dave carries on with his very important lego stacking business, ignoring Dave as he nearly elbows a glass off the counter. "Why are we here?"

Aradia hops up to sit on the counter opposite and drums a heel against the dishwasher. "We're not, really. This is an echo - more a memory than anything. Jumping back this far in time would cause more ripples than we can afford."

"Then why-"

"Mmmph. Lil man, what're you doing?"

Dave rams his elbow into the glass so hard it should by all rights crack open when it flies into the sink. But a tiny Dave zips in at the last second, catching the glass with belly pudge, and putting it back on top of the counter without looking directly at Dave once. A blink, and the little kid is back on the kitchen floor, plucking a red lego out of the mess and using it to top off the tower. Before he can start on another project, Bro wanders out of the dark room across the hall mid-yawn, part of his hair flattened out and the rest sticking up at an incredible angle and he doesn't have his shades on. It's like accidentally being flashed by someone. Good god.

"No, no legos, buddy. It's - what time is it?" Bro keeps muttering, mostly to himself. Dave doesn't think he's heard a Southern accent that strong come out of Bro's mouth except, like, when he deadpan plays it up on purpose. For that matter, when has Bro ever been that wiry? He's short at least thirty pounds of muscle, and the overall result looks so unnervingly like Dirk that Dave's honestly getting hit over the head with the 'clone' thing all over again. He walks past Aradia's back, scratching his hair, then the stubble along the side of his jaw, before stooping to scoop up the younger Dave. The kid latches onto Bro's unkempt shirt and digs a heel in.

Then he takes the yellow lego out of his mouth, drool dribbling down the sides, and says, "Nine, Boh. Nine thee two."
"9:32? Shit, that nap ran way too long. That's not even a nap anymore, kid." A sigh. "You're never getting back to sleep, are you?"

Tiny!Dave holds up the yellow lego piece and baps Bro on the shoulder with it, as though to say of course not. "Nine thee thee."

"Thought you were workin' on your R's with Rose?"

This is apparently cause for excitement; Dave scrambles up in a flash and ends up hanging off Bro's shoulder, clinging to his arm tightly. "Ose! Where's Ose?"

Bro snorts. Aradia obligingly shuffles her butt to the side so that he can open the dishwasher and take out a sippy cup. "So in other words, you're just bein' a little shit because Rue ain't here to tell you to enunciate shit right," he says, opening the tiny fridge and pulling out a jug of apple juice. "Diabolical."

"Ohmygoshwhyarewewatchingthis?" Dave demands, when it becomes clear that Bro and the younger Dave are sitting down at the kitchen table and ignoring the other two people in the room completely. An echo, she said. But what's the goddamn point? They could be participating in memo shenanigans, but instead they're watching this? "Seriously, why?"

"Because it was significant - significant enough that I felt the ripples from a different continent. But you've forgotten. I suppose you were very young." Aradia combs her claws through her hair, the black polish of her nails stark in the half light.

"Me not being able to say Rose is significant? Bullshit." Dave's - not even sure why this is making him feel uncomfortable. It's just like watching something private and personal, and okay, it is private and personal, sort of. He doesn't want Aradia here, watching; heck, he doesn't want to be watching, which says something about him on a deep, subconscious level. Or whatever. "Why do you know about this if I didn't remember, anyway?"

"Significant," Aradia repeats. "You don't remember this. You don't remember living in close proximity to one of your fellow players, and you don't remember what happened this night, when the timeline shuddered over a break so jarring that it still lingers, disrupting the flow, years later." She turns the music box at her side with a claw, so that it lets out a series of soft, falling notes, and Dave feels the time within the bubble of the echo fast-forward. At the table, Bro lifts a cordless phone, speaks into it too fast to be decipherable, and Dave sucks down the apple juice - so basically, things haven't changed at all. Other than the fact that Dave used to be a talking freak of nature instead of just a normal one. Good to know. "It starts to split, right about...now."

Aradia covers the top of the music box with her whole claw so that the sound muffles, and time resumes its regular speed. "Next time, don't forget to pack your shit when you're trying to figure out where to stash the moonshine, Rue." Bro finishes, folding the paper in front of him into perfect halves and solidifying the creases with a press of his thumb nail, until all he has left is a tiny paper throwing star. "Yeah. Uh-huh. Late-"

The knock on the door makes Dave's stomach lurch the wrong way. God, is it getting hot in here? Maybe he should be glad he doesn't remember living in Georgia, or whatever. Bro stiffens with the phone still next to his ear - and then keeps talking, in a much lower volume. "Here, talk to Dave for a sec before you pass out. Gotta get the door real quick."

Rue's reply isn't audible from where the older Dave sits, and Bro passes off the handheld to the toddler without a sound. Dave catches the minute tilt as Bro's eyes have darted to the clock on the wall - too late to have visitors, obviously not Rue, something's up - and then he goes to the fridge to retrieve a sword from where it's resting next to a fly swatter on top of the machine before heading down the hall toward the front door. The mental image of Bro accidentally grabbing the fly swatter should give Dave a good snort of laughter, and yet...

"Why are we watching this?" Dave says, feeling his guts tying themselves in knots. This - they shouldn't be here.

Aradia looks at him, her eyes gone soft and dark with maybe-tears. "Because you don't want to."

Toddler Dave, happy to trade the empty sippy cup for the phone at first, holds the phone upside down without appearing to listen to the rustle of noise coming from the speaker. He watches Bro go down the hall just like Dave and Aradia. Bro slinks up to the door with practiced caution but he's not fast enough. Dave's been trying to ignore it, but Bro's - slower. Than Dave is used to adjusting for, anyway. He's almost regular human speed, and he looks like he strifes part-time, not out of an incessant, paranoid need to train and be ready for anything. When he gets to the door he looks out through the peephole, instead of checking one of a dozen cameras that would tell him who was approaching the booby-traps outside the apartment back home in Houston.

And he opens the door a crack, calling through it to the person standing just outside the second screen door. "Can I help you?"

"Do it already. I am bored of waiting," an unfamiliar, husky voice says.

A very familiar voice replies, "Really, now. At least try to maintain some level of professional courtesy."

"Fuck your courtesy. They are within, and I have no patience for you. Do it."

"Fine. If you insist."

Bro wrenches back away from the door, flying into a fighting stance (but not pulling a puppet, or diving for a vent - does this house even have vents big enough for him?) as someone rips it and the screen door out of the frame and tosses it aside. Three people walk in, two of them strangers. One is a woman with raven dark hair knotted at the nape of her neck, baring her teeth like a shark on speed without a hint of an actual smile, her hat bright orange and the coattails of her suit dragging behind her on the ground. After her comes a man with a bright red hat, his jaw set in a mild underbite as he worries at his top lip, with a slow, sluggish gait.

The third is Diamonds Droog, cold and poised and flicking on the light switch on the wall beside her without blinking at the sight of Bro with a sword drawn. "Let's get this done, then," she says, smacking her cue stick against the palm of her hand. Both of the other invaders stare at her back with near identical, bitter looks - the woman more full of unmasked hate, her thin eyes burning with anger - but Droog doesn't seem bothered by the fact that her apparent backup looks more likely to knife her in the back than Bro himself.

"Get out of my house," Bro snarls, and the little Dave at the table drops the phone, stirring with a faint noise of distress while Rue's garbled voice rises in volume.

"Sorry. Business is business." Droog sighs. "I would have preferred doing this a little more discreetly, but it would seem this particular job has an angry little timer, and I don't have time to fool around sneaking the boy out from under your expendable little nose." She smiles, all false politeness and obvious disdain. "Give us the boy, and I'll only hurt you a little."

"That is not going to work," the woman behind her says. "Just kill him. You are good at killing people, are you not?"

Droog doesn't get to reply. A blur lashes out at her, and she blocks Bro's strike with the cue stick effortlessly. Dave assumed there weren't any booby-traps lying around, but Bro kicks down at a corner of the paneling lining the wall and the rack piled high with shoes launches itself at Droog's legs, trailing kids' sneakers and nailing her in the knee with a bubblegum pink high heel. She swats it aside.

"I don't need to see this. Why does it matter? We already know how shit goes down." Dave barely recognizes his own voice when he walks over and grips Aradia's sleeve, hard. He can't look at her, though, not when he's busy cataloging just how slow Bro is. "We get away. Droog fucks off." As he says it, Droog kicks Bro flat in the center of his chest, a blatantly telegraphed move that Bro should have been able to see coming, easy. But it hits him hard, and he stumbles back into a lamp with a noiseless gasp. Droog's two companions hang out by the door, the man slumping against the woman with his eyes slowly sinking shut like the fight in front of him barely registers.

Aradia says nothing. Frustrated, Dave reaches out and fumbles for his timetables. He can think of twenty other things he could be doing right this goddamn second that don't involve watching the freaky echo of something that already happened. But he can't seem to summon the concentration he needs; Bro scores a glancing slice across Droog's forearm, but it's shallow and just draws a faint scowl from the woman, and she ramps up the pace. If Bro was slow by Bro standards before - Dave cringes to see that he can hardly keep up, now. Droog drives forward, relentless, her face cast in shadow by the overhead light. Bro finally snatches up a puppet when he gets pushed back further still, but tosses it at Droog's face just as a distraction, not as a weapon for a specibus.

It almost works. Droog rolls her eyes hard, and while she's doing that Bro darts under her guard and tries to stab her. The Crew member knocks the blade aside again, yanking Bro in by the wrist and kneeling him in the stomach. He retreats with his sword still locked in his grasp, but Bro as Dave knows him would have never let that kind of punishing hit through. Even if it didn't break any bones, Droog can dish out a lot of pain. Her next hit goes wild as Bro dodges again and the cue stick punches a hole right through the wall with a noise loud enough to make the toddler in the kitchen give a startled wail.

And Bro looks. He looks back at Dave, eyes wide with momentary panic, like he's afraid someone juked him to snag Dave while his back was turned. Yeah, that's probably exactly what he thinks - that's the logical thing to be afraid of - but Bro would never act like that. He'd know better than to take his eyes away from a serious enemy like Droog in the middle of a strife; he'd leave puppetkind lying around with their strings ready to wrap around other threats as a delaying tactic.

Or maybe he's only just learning that lesson right now. God knows it's one of the first things he drilled into Dave, though Dave sucks at it; being able to pause time to look around helps make up for the many ways he's always not quite measured up. Droog sweeps his feet out from under him with a solid whack, and Bro lands wrong on his wrist but rolls out of the way. He slashes at Droog's shin to try to bring her down without standing up himself (don't fight from your knees, kid, get the fuck back up) and when she steps back he only succeeds in cutting a neat line across the front of her pants, leaving the lowest five inches of pantleg sagging and dark skin exposed.

"Enough," Droog says, and she jerks her foot up to kick Bro in the chin, snapping his head back. If she was faster than Bro before, she's cutting out all the unnecessary bullshit now and Bro can't move in time to meet her. Another kick knocks him down on his back and elbows, and he scrambles to push and roll out of the way, but Droog slams her foot down on top of his stomach, quick as you please. Bro reverses his grip on the sword and tries to slash at her leg again across his body, and she kicks it aside with the other foot, so that all of her weight momentarily rests entirely on Bro's gut.
"Give me that," she says, stabbing down with the cue stick to pin his wrist, digging the end of the weapon down until Bro's hand spasms.

"Loose ends," the man by the door says, through a yawn that makes his jaw give a small crack.

Droog uses both hands to lean more pressure on the cue stick - and the sword falls out of Bro's grip with a click. "As loath as I am to agree with you - well," she says, picking up the sword and staring down at Bro's face with a considering look. Without the shades (without years of shutting down everything) Bro looks furious and terrified and a maelstrom of ten other emotions, so unfamiliar with all that on his face that Dave can't process it.

Droog plants her other foot on Bro's shoulder and slices him open, too quick for Bro to knock her off, blood splattering up across the front of her suit and her cheek. The sword sinks in deep (toodeeptooodeep) and then deeper still once it hits the soft flesh below the rib cage. Bro bites hard on his lip but he still bucks and twitches at the sudden pain and that - makes it worse. Shit. Fuck. Shitshitshit.

On the table, Dave is screaming, his face turning red and his eyes bubbling up with hot tears. He's not - the current Dave's not screaming, he's fine, this is just so messed up and he wishes Aradia would make her point already. If this is the point she wanted to make, he has no idea what it is, and he officially un-forgives her for not warning them about the weekend clusterfuck ahead of time. It'll be fine, though. Bro makes it. They already know this.

"Enough of your games," the woman demands, glaring at Droog's back with flashing eyes, and Droog twists to glance back, her expression hidden from where Dave is standing. "I can already see what you do, and I have no patience for it."

Droog laughs, cruel and mocking, and Dave looks away out the window, at the huge tree next door. He can't watch this. But Aradia touches his chin, and turns him in time as Droog gives the sword a careless flip, watching it turn in the air, and drives it down between Bro's ribs. "Such a mess," she says, while Bro gives a stomach-turning choke. "I do charge extra for clean up, you know."

"Torch it all," the man says, dreamily. "Always got use for a good fire." The woman's nails drum against his shoulder as she hums agreement.

Dave finally gives up the struggle, yanks away from Aradia, and throws up into the sink. "This isn't real," he rasps, grinding his palms into the metal of the sink and wishing his chest weren't screaming with pain. "This is - something doomed. It didn't count."

She makes it impossible for him to ignore her, floating over to hover beside him like a dusky red moth. When he looks up (godletitnotbereal) she only has eyes for the tiny Dave on the table, bawling his eyes out. "Oh, of course," she says. "All it took was a few moment's worth of rewind, and you set it right. But a death this significant -"

The toddler Dave doesn't call up timetables or anything, so when he gives one last wail the transition is harsh and obvious - time drops out from under them like a collapsing Jenga tower, too sudden for Dave to notice that the crying has stopped. Aradia's right: the past Dave only needs to turn back time a few seconds to set things back on track. For a moment there are two toddlers sitting on the table, watching in horror and childish lack of understanding, and then Droog flips the sword in the air and brings it down -

- on Dave.

Bro didn't make a sound while he was getting stabbed before. This time around, he screams like he's dying. Droog herself flinches back, appalled and stricken in equal measure. But then there's a thud that makes all of the adults jolt, and Bro nearly cracks his neck all the way around to stare at the toddler crawling in tiny flashes from the table down to the floor. The tiny body of the original Dave fades out from where it sat on Bro's chest, soughing away before anyone can do a doubletake.

"They probably thought it was a hallucination. Doomed bodies that end up stranded in the alpha timeline fade quickly." Aradia turns the handle of the kitchen sink, but the vomit is already vanishing. Because this isn't real. None of it is real. "It takes a lot of power for someone doomed to make a real impact on the main timeline, and not just leave an afterimage of their failure. I believe you did it once before, by prototyping yourself, right?"

"God, that's messed up. That's - there is a goddamn line, Aradia," Dave says. He kind of wants to hurl again, bile lining the back of his throat. "Seriously, there has to be a rule against dead babies in the manual somewhere!" Thirteen year old John and Rose and Jade dying all over the place was bad enough - this, this is obscene.

"Well, the alpha timeline is the one where both you and your custodian survived," she points out. Which is not. Helping. The distraction spooks Droog badly enough that when Bro grabs the sword and dives for the living Dave, she doesn't manage to stop him. The toddler latches onto Bro with a tear-stained face, and time begins to pause and start and pause again as the two Striders flashstep out. Dave wonders if Bro notices that Dave pulls him so that he could run in those pauses, too, or if he's in too much pain and terror to notice Droog couldn't even begin to catch up once they launched out the window past Aradia, in a crash of glass.

"And Knights are a protective class," she says, shrugging. "Using time to protect someone like that, though, with his own underlings as direct witnesses...was something the Lord could not overlook."

Dave can't tear his eyes away from Bro's back as he races away across the neighbor's lawn and vanishes into the night, leaving a trail of blood at random, staggering intervals. Aradia snaps her fingers and the vision pops - and Dave finds himself staring at a different night sky, his hands grasping at the hard, staccato edges of his timetables like they're the edge of the sink.

He sits.

Aradia sits next to him. Dave is busy trying not to feel shit, so he lets her. "You need to be careful." Forming words feels like it takes incredible effort. "Why did you show me that?" He could have gone his whole life not knowing that. Two images - Bro dying and that doomed Dave dying - paint themselves on the backs of his eyelids if he closes his eyes for too long.

"Because you lost your voice that day. If that's the only thing you've lost since then, I would be very surprised." The burgundyblood traces the side of her face, curving a claw around the arch of one eye, and then rests her elbows on her knees. "These are the consequences of opposing a Lord. Maids draw less attention, maybe, but I got here too soon and lived too long, waiting for the rest of you to arrive. He's almost caught up with me. Even if the others succeed in escaping his reach, I don't know for certain that I'll live to see the end. Every time I use our aspect, there's a risk he'll strike me down with something even a god tier can't live without. Time is not, and never has been, on our side."

Dave took some of this away from watching the recordings, and to be fair, people have been hinting at this shit for a while now. Having Aradia spell it out just makes it sting, like having an entire bottle of antiseptic poured onto an open wound. "Isn't there a way to stop it?"

She shrugs. "We could serve the Lord's will. But - ha. The look on your face tells me everything I'd need to know." Dave schools his expression back into a blank, but the disgust hangs around. "Serve him, and he'd probably restore us - temporarily. Until he doesn't need us anymore, which would be soon. The price for that short reprieve would be more than either of us would want to pay, I think.
But there's always a choice."

"That's not a fucking choice at all," Dave snaps.

Aradia stands up and dusts off the back of her sari. "I know what I want to do with what's left of my life. You - might want to consider it for yourself."

He's really goddamn glad she leaves, and no one ends up coming up to the roof to explore or anything like that. For a long while he lets his phone buzz in his pocket, stares at his hands, and doesn't think about the collar looped around his neck like a noose.

-

They go to the mall.

Hey, it's something to do. Also, when all is said and done, Mall Trip 2k14 has no casualties, and that is goddamn insane. Unheard of. Dave is having trouble wrapping his head around this shit, which leaves a lot less room for him to think about other stuff, which he is 100% down with. He'd rather suck a bag of dicks than think too far ahead, and if he pesters the others too much they're bound to catch on to the fact that something's wrong.

They've got enough of their own shit to worry about.

Anyway. Dave can't take solo credit on the overwhelming success of this trip. Kanaya and Rose came along to do the responsible adults thing, while John and Karkat do their best to keep Gamzee from wandering off and leveling a Macy's. Jade tags along in a haphazard way, jumping to the apartment occasionally to ferry stuff back before anyone collapses under the weight of all the random dumb shit they need/want to buy. It's the end of the world, after all - budgeting has officially gone out the window. But she mostly hangs out with John and drags him into stores at random to get the full family mall experience. Dave barely sees them for more than a couple minutes at a time before they're charging off again; the only person he sees less of is Oriole, who just leaves the mall entirely at one point and only turns up again forty five minutes later.

Feferi's the real MVP, though. Talk about a lifesaver. Dave shudders at the thought of the trauma his bank account might have had to go through if Feferi hadn't looked up with a terrifying glint in her eye, clapped her hands together in excitement, and volunteered to get the scratch kids out of their evil-as-shit uniforms and borrowed clothes, and into something that wouldn't scream brainwashed teenager chic. They're all kind of in dire straits by now as far as fresh clothes go. Like, shit, Dave didn't think Gamzee even had a change of clothes until Tavros dug something out of the bottom of his wheelchair that was tall, menacing juggalo-sized. Kanaya could only do so much with the fabric she has, and the scientists at the lab hid their stuff...probably whenever sweatpants and lab coats started being 'borrowed' on a semi-permanent basis as lounge wear.

Feferi walks into the first store she sees and walks out with a full ensemble including an aquamarine patterned sundress, a hat, platform sandals, and enough necklaces to strangle five people. Once she puts sunglasses on, she's a little less instantly recognizable - except trolls stop and gawp at her when she strides by them, tossing the entire messy braid of her hair back over her shoulder with a claw and ushering the scratch kids along about as well as anybody can usher four teenagers in various states of surly and distractible. So yeah, Dave estimates they have maybe a half hour before the entire Internet knows that Feferi Peixes is in town again. If they're lucky. Vriska and Terezi start a fistfight in the food court in less than fifteen minutes, which would be impressive if it didn't also mean they have to quickly switch malls and have Jade bump them over to Pacific Place before anyone can call the cops on their collective ass. Those two can't seem to make up their minds whether they hate each other or not, which Dave guesses is giving Kanaya a migraine.

Equius vetoes Nepeta's attempt to come along, but Eridan goes, and Eridan is a mess on good days. But he sets up camp in the Barnes and Noble and won't move his ass a goddamn inch from where he plants it in the angsty teen lit section, so it's whatever. Jake must have his shit together because he acts sheepish, doesn't once make a run for it, and is way too fucking fascinated by the posters for the second Captain America movie, which apparently comes out this week. Dave doesn't even want to know what John and Karkat might be planning behind closed doors, because the idea of Gamzee in a dark, crowded theater sounds crazier than mall trip, and mall trip is pretty damn crazy. The world might be ending in a matter of weeks, but if Dave knows John, that won't stop him. If Jake tries to go along for the ride, Dave might just book it back to Houston while the going's good.

But hey. No one's dead yet. This shit is bananas.

So he takes WV to get cupcakes. There's a place on the third floor of the mall that has a ridiculous selection, but they don't have anything green, which WV has informed them all numerous times is his favorite color to eat. God, that's adorable. Anyway, Dave persuades the carapacian with a can of TaB and a salted caramel cupcake, and while WV slams back the soda like it's the elixir of life, Dave starts deconstructing his own cupcake into its component parts. Cupcakes sounded great in theory, but in practice, it turns out baked goods are just reminding him of Dickbert. Fuck that guy.

...What are they even going to do about him? Dave has totally separated himself from any discussion of what's happening with that douche, though he knows Bro has been fiddling around making sure he can't escape again. But they told Mr Egbert a bunch of their secrets before his evil evilness came out - would handing him off to the police work at this point? Or would he just turn narc on everyone and ruin John's life more than he already has? Dave would not put that kind of horsefuckery past him. The kid doesn't need any more bullshit from that dick. Hell, a word to the right people, and Rose would officially be identified as that one chick who blew up the Big Apple and probably spend the rest of her life on the top of multiple most wanted lists. Dave figures Jade couldn't give a shit about having her real name leaked, and neither would he, but Rose and John would be fucked.

Then Dave's fork scratches across the plate with an ugly noise as he remembers the world's not going to last more than a couple weeks, anyway. So who cares about any of this shit in the long run? Might as well call Droog up right now and tell her to suck it. He stares mournfully at the tiny piles of chocolate frosting he has quartered with his fork, and then sighs and eats some of it, letting the fork hang out of his mouth as he watches WV mash his cupcake into a flatcake and devour it with his claws.

WV: are you going to not eat that because you're thinking too hard?

Dave sighs again, and pushes the plate toward the carapacian. "Nah, have at it, little dude," he says through the corner of his mouth.

WV: thank you.

WV: she's going to be here soon.

"Yeah? Who?" Dave waits while WV begins to reassemble their two cupcakes as one ungodly abomination. He looks up over WV's head, but a wave of teenagers fresh out of class has flooded in and made it next to impossible to pick out familiar faces.

WV: the scary one.
That could describe about 80% of their current friend group. Then again, the last time they had a conversation like this, WV called Bro and Karkat 'the most polite ones,' so hey, WV can get a little mixed up.

Then Dave does a double take, and recognizes the circular, whirly-do thing on the left corner of the jacket of the troll prowling toward them. Dave can only stare in apprehension as Terezi descends on them, expecting Vriska to appear any second now. "Where's Serket?" he asks, still talking around the fork - then he realizes that must look ridiculous and takes it out of his mouth.

"Learning how to transform into god tier lingerie in the Victoria's Secret without paying for anything. It was ditch her or jump her or arrest her." Terezi sniffs, makes a face at the incredible concoction WV has put together, and then turns toward the cupcake place. "Why are you ruining perfectly good cupcakes?"

The worst part of that explanation is that Dave's brain automatically tries to correct Victoria's Secret to Victoria's Serket. What does that shit even mean? Is it a pun? He can't tell anymore - he's in too deep. "I don't know, trauma or some shit like that. What's your excuse?" he asks WV.

WV: they're not ruined! I'm building something better, obviously.

Terezi opens her mouth, potentially to crush all of WV's hopes and dreams, but then either Dave's frantic head shaking gets her attention, or she just does some mind seeing and realizes what a dick move that would be. To be honest, Dave has less idea how her powers work than he does Rose's. "I smell cherries," she says, instead, and wanders off toward the cupcakes to get her own haul. Dave borrows a chair from the other table nearby while they wait. Terezi is cool. Like, a shitposter with a law degree. He wonders if she still makes shitty graphic edits.

Terezi has a voice that carries, so Dave overhears an entire intense debate in which she accuses the poor man behind the counter of selling counterfeit goods because the only cherry cupcake option is gluten free. She eventually returns with three different cupcakes and WV scoots his stuff over so she has room to sit down. "If we'd been here yesterday, they'd have strawberry macaroon," she announces, shaking her head in evident disdain. "I am very disappointed. I had to get red velvet, and everyone knows that red velvet is chocolate engaging in identity theft. Falsehood incarnate."

"Sucks," Dave says, sympathetically, as Terezi tosses the strings of the hood of her jacket back over her shoulder. "What is it with you and red, anyway?"

Terezi cackles. "It tastes delicious! What can I say?" She also starts leering at Dave's shirt. Rose put her foot down and insisted he and Jade change (he didn't even notice he'd just been cycling through different variations of god tier pajamas until John pointed it out), but he is a guy of habit and most of his stuff is some shade of red. Suddenly that makes him feel exposed. Like a dumbass with a cut on his foot going swimming in shark infested waters.

Dave folds his arms over his chest, and it feels like he's giving too much away. "So, what are you planning to do?" he asks. "In a general, 'we have until the thirteenth before meteors from video game hell destroy the planet' kind of sense." Aradia has done a swell fucking job pointing out that not letting the game play out would just end in them doomed, and the timeline that would result would get mulched by the Lord of Time regardless. This Calliope person seems pretty sure she can get them out at the last second, but other than that they can't do much until the game actually starts. So, 225 hours and a couple minutes and seconds' spare change before they condemn another planet to the scrap heap.

Dave hates having such an accurate sense of time. He hates being the time dude, in general. He hates that he doesn't know how much use he's going to be before time just tears him apart. Fuck.
"Oh, I'll probably help out with operation Take Down The Crew and Felt, portmanteau pending."
Terezi bites a cupcake in half. Just. In half. No intermediate bites - total carnage. "Nothing like bringing futile justice down on a pack of deserving criminals!" Then she sobers, staring into the cupcake horror in front of WV like it holds all the answers. Or maybe like a blind person who can't believe what her smell-synesthesia is telling her. "No way are Vriska and I going to spend the last few days on the planet dicking around Sollux's place."

"Nothing else? 'Cause I'm pretty sure Jade would be down for a whirlwind tour of the planet where she shrinks down famous monuments and keeps them safe in her sylladex." Dave hasn't pitched the idea to her yet, but Jade - okay, she probably wouldn't see the morbid irony in it, but she likes doing, not waiting around. One of the other alternatives is to try to suss out what the hell the Condesce was doing with all those rocket ship things in Tiksi, aka eternally frozen hellscape; gearing John up for a full on anti-Betty Crocker crusade would take minimal effort, but also, they might not have time left to wage economic warfare against the de facto troll queen of life before the planet explodes, or whatever. Something tells Dave the apocalypse might disrupt the stock market a little.

"Grand theft national monument? And I thought you guys were heroes!" Terezi says, snickering.

Dave shrugs. "Go big or go home, man. Things are easier to persuade to hop into interdimensional backpacks than people are."

She clucks her tongue, waving her fork around in the air grandly, and then sticks it in the next cupcake. "The law is what separates us from cavetrolls, Dave."

He can't help but roll his eyes at that. "Pretty sure in my case, it's the almost completely separate but genearly convergent progression of human evolution versus troll evolution."

She slams a fist against the table, rattling WV's creation. "The law," she hisses, all seriousness - until a cackle escapes her and she brutally decapitates the last cupcake with her teeth to stifle it. WV stares up at her with wide white eyes.

WV: are you available as legal counsel?

"Depends on what your case is. I tend to be more about extremely proactive prosecution," Terezi says, through a mouthful of cupcake gore.

WV: i see! have you ever dismantled a monarchical establishment and prosecuted the crown for a millennia of war crimes before?

After a pause, Terezi tips her glasses down with a claw, and turns blank red eyes at Dave. "...Where did you guys find this one, again?"

--

-- arachnidsGrip [AG] began pestering apocalypseArisen [AA] at ??:??:?? -- AG: Soooooooo...
AG: Aradia.
AG: ::::)
AA: vriska
AA: :)
AG: It feels like it's 8een forever since we talked! 8usy 8usy 8usy!
AA: reincarnation does tend to make things tricky that way
AA: but were picking up the pace now so thats fun!
AG: Oh good, I'm glad I caught one of your future ones. ;;;)
AG: So, I was wondering. You and I, we're friends, right?
AA: as far as im concerned all of you are my friends!
AG: holding grudges is kinda silly as far as im concerned
AG: Gr8! Awesome! I knew I could count on you not to make everything a huge federal fucking issue, Aradia.
AG: That's why I want to help you out! Since you're so on top of things, these days.
AA: go on im listening
AG: Hang on. Do you...already know what I'm about to say? ::::
AA: heheheheh vaguely
AA: but go ahead! ive been expecting this conversation for a while AG: Oh yeah? 8een getting some future insight?
AA: technically i am the future insight
AA: and youre what we call an unstoppable force AA: so im listening :)
AG: Hmmmmmmmm. Well, since you asked so nicely...
AG: It just occurred to me that you might be in need of a new partner in this g8me of yours.
AG: Not a nerd like Mr Four Eyes who's up to his flap in code, and definitely not a...Gamzee. Whatever.
AG: The rest of these guys? They're so paranoid and twitchy they won't be a8le to make up their minds about the real important stuff until the 8oss is shoving his speci8us up their 8utts!
AA: all fair points indeed
AG: The way I see it, we need everyone to 8ring their A game whether they like it or not.
AG: Or at least a 8 game, for the ones who just suck in general.
AG: We need...a god tier party. ;;;;)
AA: so ive heard
AG: You and Gamzee seemed on top of things, 8ut he's not gonna be too useful with his two hangers-on being all meddly.
AG: Whadya say? You tell me when you're free on your end. I'll bring all the luck we could need to get away with it.
AG: Rosey can be the friendleader, as long as we know who's reeeeeeally running the show.
AA: i already have you down for eridan if thats alright
AG: Awesome!
AG: I could have skipped that whole incrimin8ing speech, couldn't I.
AA: you like talking
AA: and a refresher never hurts anyone!
AG: Sure thing, 8uddy. So Eridan, you say? When and where? ::::)
AG: You'll see. There are perks to having me on your team.
AA: i dont doubt it
AA: youll know the opportune moment im sure
AA: or i can just text you if it looks like youre gonna miss it AG: Please, I would never miss the opportune moment. Give me a little more credit than that.
AA: aaaand pretty much everyone else is spoken for already!
AG: Come on, spill. You know you want to.
AG: We're teammates, right? I can't help make up for my past mistakes if I don't know what's going on, miiiiiiight?
AA: well i have you or a certain other party down for nepeta already AA: i doubt anyone else could get past equius to reach her but it depends on who nepeta goes to first AA: theres still trouble with kanaya : ( sollux is on the case though!
AA: feferi has things in claw on her end so no worries there AG: Good, good! See how efficient this is? I'm rubbing my claws together with glee over here.
AG: What about your nerdrail and Gamzee?
AA: sollux is also covered! i appreciate your asking
AG: ...
AG: And...you know who?
AA: indeterminate
AA: he may or may not be god tier already AA: we just dont know
AG: Oh, wow. Here I thought you were the gal to go to for the spoilers.
AG: How'd he manage to slip you up? Weren't you two all up in each other's 8usiness?
AA: not particularly
AA: hes very clever you know
AA: you cant let his current docility and the unpredictable nature of his tactics decepticate you
AG: (Deceptic8)
AA: (yes)
AG: (::::D)
AA: for a while he was off the radar to the point im not even sure how he tabled the turns on that horroterror
AA: but if it came down to it youd probably find his sentiments on the matter align with yours somewhat
AA: hed be the first to kill himself if he still needed to go god tier
AA: and perhaps already did so before the scratch thus rendering the point moot AG: If you say so. He is pretty effective, I guess I'll give him that.
AG: And hey, as a 8onus to cele8r8 our new friendship, I'll take care of Tavros and Karkles too.
AA: oh dear
AA: you maybe shouldnt have said that
AG: Why the heck not?
AA: speaking of gamzee
AG: Ugh. He should appreci8 that I want to look out for their sorry butts! They'll be a lot 8etter off if they're god tier! So much for effective.
AA: people dont tend to be logical about the ones they love
AA: so it goes
AG: 8oo-hoo. Newsflash - they're gonna be deadw8 one way or another.
AA: its a little early for you to worry about this anyway
AA: youll have some time to sort it out later
AG: Aaaaaaanyway. Isn't this cool, Aradia? You and me colla8or8ing, just like old times.
AG: I'm glad someone around here can see reason.
AA: the key ive found is to let people make their own choices
AA: for example you were always going to try to kill everyone for the sake of winning AA: because you are a very competitive troll :)
AA: even if your goals overall do not necessarily coincide with my own we can still use similar tactics to achieve them
AG: Yeah! Exactly!
AG: And obviously 8etween the two of us, we can get these losers off the ground.
AG: Just you and me. With Sollux and Gamzee helping a little. A tiny 8it.
AA: glad to have you on board
AG: That's the spirit!
-- arachnidsGrip [AG] has left the chat! --
AA: anything to add?
TC: :o)
TC: :o(
AA: i am beginning to suspect that those faces mean absolutely nothing and that you are just using them to see how hilarious our reactions are to random clown emoticons
TC: :o)
When John wakes up the morning they're due to move everyone somewhere new and marginally less destroyed, it's to a cold arm slung over his waist. Gamzee won't go near a recooperacoon - he hissed balefully when Jade offered to 'port one in for him, the closest he's come freaking on someone since Sunday - and so Karkat isn't accessible for cuddles. Still muddled by sleep, John stretches an arm out over his head until his shoulder gives a satisfying crack. "Nnf."

If he were napping with Karkat, the troll would grumble and then roll closer. Gamzee, lying flat on his face, makes a similar noise of sympathetic early morning despair, but doesn't move.

And John's...alright with this. It's really weird, but it's not a disaster like John was afraid he'd created. Everyone keeps expecting him to be bothered by it, but after the initial panic died down - eh. Through the power of desensitization, the fact that Gamzee would kill any of them in a heartbeat if he thought it would help them barely makes a blip on John's danger radar. Rose says that they need to have A Talk about where the three of them all stand, and Rose generally knows what she's talking about. Finding time when no one is busy or on the edge of a meltdown, though...between the three of them, that's basically never.

Or maybe John just wants to avoid the worst case scenario. He's not one hundred percent sure what that might involve, but what if someone gets jettisoned off a metaphorical cliff into singlehood? Something in his head says it would be him. If they talk it through as a group, and Karkat or Gamzee can't put up with suddenly threesome anymore, John doesn't know how it'll play out. But if he wants the option with the least potential for catastrophe...

God, just thinking about it hurts. Sure, the possibility always existed that he and Karkat might break up - how should he know how different things might have been as they grew up, if the world wasn't ending in a couple of weeks? - but this isn't something he could have predicted and braced himself for. He can't tell (could never tell, to be honest) where their friendship and their relationship grew into each other; cutting off one might eviscerate the other.

Or maybe everything will be fine! Overreacting much? Haha, John worries over nothing too much, that's for sure. If Karkat could hear his thoughts right now, he'd roll his eyes over how dumb John is, agonizing about stuff that hasn't happened yet.

...Blah. He used to lie to himself better than this. It's harder when the fakey fake bullshit is blatantly fake; he's lost the knack for it.

"You've got a powerful rot in you, motherfucker," a voice says, a growl right against the back of John's skull, and he clears his throat with no clue what to say. Crap. What is he supposed to do? It's a little late to switch back to denying there's stuff twisted in his brain - and he needs to learn how to think stuff quieter when Gamzee is around. "A suffering gone wrong up in your pan." Needle point teeth settle in the curve of John's ear and nibble.

"Please don't eat my ear. I need it," John says, rubbing grit out of the corners of his eyes so he can see the room clearly. Between the air conditioning and Gamzee the living ice pack, it doesn't feel like the warm spring morning he can sense the Breeze looping through outside the open window. Gamzee's teeth skate over the rim of his ear one last time before being removed, and a sigh ghosts over John's cheek. "And I know. I guess I'm just still working on a plan for how to deal with it," he adds.

It's part of the challenge Typheus set him, but besides that, John would like to have his head not be a mess for once. In general, you know? He and Rose tossed around some ideas earlier, but the kind of happy funtime therapy he needs would take longer than they have. And no way is John going to be able to get on top of his shit without doing something about the Trickster first. Where to start, though, when the mere thought of another confrontation makes him want to scream?

That's another thing to worry about - Gamzee knows the Trickster exists. Which is one of those sentences that could be replaced by loud internal screaming and still communicate the same level of deep concern. He and Rose were the ones pushing for transparency about everyone's issues, and now it sits between Gamzee and John like a bright pink elephant in the room whenever they're alone for too long. As in right now. John trawls his brain for anything in his family history that might concern a longstanding rivalry between pranksters and juggalos, but he comes up blank. He doesn't know much family history, actually.

"A screaming time, brother. Wait for a screaming time. Get it all done with as one," Gamzee advises. "Be all kindsa motherfucking EFFICIENT and shit." He draws a line down the side of John's temple, and John shivers. It's cold, but he doesn't really want to move, either. He can see the 'coon from here, the faint slosh in the green sopor where Karkat must be stirring, and they have a while before they need to be up. Gamzee's idea of cuddling might border on menacing, but John doesn't feel menaced just now. Just chilly. Instinct makes him stick his toes around in search of something warm, but there's only Gamzee's cold calves. Blerghlghghl.

Okay, John has to move. Kicking off the bottom of the sheets frees his feet and the open air is definitely warmer. Yeesh. Gamzee doesn't move his arm as John attempts a highly complicated, subtle maneuver; he winds up all twisted around, one leg bent so that he stares at the ceiling past the top of his knee. "Is that what you do?" he asks, genuinely curious. In a hypothetical way.

When he turns his head, Gamzee's face is verrry close. "Ain't no other choice in the matter. It's always a screaming time," he says. For a second, his mouth doesn't quite match up with the sound of the words. "A motherfucker learns to get things done, regardless." He presses claws along the curve of John's ribs, a drag somewhere between soothing and scratching. Shifting his weight makes Gamzee press closer and give a faint, rumbling hum that John recognizes because Karkat does it a lot more, with two people to watch out for and keep steady.

Oh. Uh. This is. How did they switch from iffy mental health advice to soothing stuff? He's hazy on how it reached the point where Gamzee is trying to help John get his head together, as opposed to the other way around. Karkat's definitive absence from the situation makes things twice as bewildering. John reaches down and puts his hand over Gamzee's, the tips of his fingers skimming the bumps of the troll's knuckles before hesitating.

It's...nice. (Also, freezing cold.) But Gamzee likes Karkat, sooo...

Crap. John has no idea what he's doing. He barely had a handle on how he and Karkat worked, and now this - he jumped into this without a single, solitary thought as to how he planned to get out of it, let alone if he would want to get out of it at all. It's just a matter of time before it stops working. Heavy hopelessness starts sinking in, and he has to swallow the need to shove it all to the back of his mind.

Or...maybe he should. Now's not the time to get all moody and stuff; he can always rake it back up to the surface later, before it has a chance to fester. Enough to punch through this morning low point and regain acceptable levels of chipperglee -

BE: i heard that~

No you didn't.

BE: oh my god. feeding stuff back for the bad john to work with when you're dating a rage player is the most horrible idea. the most >:T

BE: dooooo nottttt

Ugh, fine.

A rough palm bonks against John's forehead. He blinks. Gamzee surveys him with a squint, then brings his hand back down in a tap that lands square on the bridge of John's nose. "Uh," John says, mentally groping around and getting his thoughts squared away. "Uhhh. Uhhhhhhhhhhhhhhhhhhhhhh -"

"You're not him," Gamzee comments, one of those offhand turns of phrase that makes John tense because it nearly got him disemboweled last time. The purpleblood sits up and lets a claw droop over John's head for a second before patting John's hair. John stares back, fighting hard not to blink until his eyes start to sting. Gamzee sounds frustrated when he says, "How do you work?"

I don't, is the first response on John's tongue. Not sure if it'd be flippant or painfully serious, he clamps down before it gets out. Dredging up a smile takes effort; pushing upright is easier. "Haha, don't worry about it," he says, when Gamzee won't stop staring. Karkat shouldn't be too grumpy if John wakes him up now - better if John has coffee as an offering, though. You can never go wrong with Karkat and coffee. One day they'll hook him up to a caffeine drip and Karkat will be unstoppable.

Once he's on his feet, but before he can head to the door, Gamzee pulls him back down. A cold hand tugs his knee over, and the sudden drop ends with John whacking his forehead on Gamzee's prominent collarbone. Ow. "Sorry, sorry!" he says, when Gamzee won't stop staring. Karkat shouldn't be too grumpy if John wakes him up now - better if John has coffee as an offering, though. You can never go wrong with Karkat and coffee. One day they'll hook him up to a caffeine drip and Karkat will be unstoppable.

"Motherfuck, it's all good." Gamzee goes back to petting the top of John's head. His ragged-sharp claws catch on more tangles that Karkat's usually do. "'Cept what's a brother to do when you don't even have nubs? Look at all of these horns you don't have. What the fuck?" He gives a faint snort of frustration and sets his chin on top of John's head, the long cold line of his throat cooling the side of John's face.

John stiffens in place, kind of at a loss for what to do. One hand hugs back automatically, because hugs are pretty easy to do, but the other stays half curled up where he went to try to push away. "I...dunno?" Gamzee starts making that soft, purring noise again, hugging John close, and even if John were dumb as a sack of rocks there is literally no way to misinterpret what Gamzee is doing as anything but pale. The main stutter in John's thought process being that Gamzee might put up with John pattering around and doing stupid stuff like shooshing him as long as Karkat is there. Karkat's who matters. Why would Gamzee even bother - oh, forget it. John finally blurts out, "Why are you doing this?"

Gamzee drums fingers along the line of John's spine. "You're all messed up in your nugbone. But Karkat motherfucking likes you, and you have him. Both soft on each other, and here. comes. me."

For a second John can't tell if the rumble low in Gamzee's throat is soft or rattling, or both at once, and the Breeze wraps around one of his legs like a held breath, ready to unravel him into the air at a moment's notice. Gamzee's voice is lighter again when he starts talking, though, and John tries to relax. "Be real easy to keep hating you, but you look at me in a rage and instead of runnin', you wanna shoosh that out? And do?"

He didn't, though. John remembers how to make his hand work, sets it on Gamzee's shoulder, and considers carefully before edging back, eyes dropping down and to the side. He rubs his mouth with the side of his hand before letting it fall away, at a loss. "Yeah, okay, I hear you, but...I just got you to Karkat," he mumbles.

"Should have up and ripped your scrambled head off before you got the chance," Gamzee says, cheerful as Jade on a science high, and John chokes on his own spit. "Talk of luck, brother, if that ain't some fortuitous fucking serendipity that you'd try anyway." He tilts his head to the side, smiling at John as he touches two fingers to one of the corners of John's mouth. "Also, Karkat wouldn't be down with the wicked decapitation thing. So shit, if you get all sad and pitiful thinking harshness at yourself like that all the time, I'll motherfucking try back." Then he plants a kiss on the tip of John's nose.

And then his mouth. Gamzee's lips are chapped, and tacky where the face paint sticks. John kisses back. Sort of. He has no idea how this works, still, and he doesn't have more than a few seconds before Gamzee pulls away.

"There is definitely some extent of motherfucking weirdness," Gamzee agrees.

John can't let this stand anymore. "I didn't say that out loud." All that gets him is a 'so-what' shrug, and he sighs. "A little weird, yeah."

"You're both fucking weirdos, that's why," Karkat says, and John jumps so hard Gamzee has to set his hands on John's hips to keep him from floating off. Dripping sopor slime onto the towel on the floor, Karkat clambers out of the recooperacoon. He puts his hands together in a mock prayer, turning a supplicating glower at the ceiling. "And now that you two have progressed to inexplicable makeouts, a weight has been lifted from my shoulders. My life's transition from drama to porn is proceeding as expected. Thank fucking troll Jesus. Now please, can one of you get me another towel?"

-Seattle feels unreal. John hasn't been back since before - well, a lot of stuff, actually. They came to fight the Scratch kids, then rushed straight through the next few crises without much of a break.

Of all things, it makes him feel self-conscious about his clothes. The only times he's been downtown in the past have usually been in the dead of night when he was in uniform, or on the weekends, or for school trips. Now it's a weekday and technically he should be in class right now, but instead he's out here in broad daylight. Only Karkat and Nepeta understand - everyone else here either graduated or never went to school regularly in the first place - and Nepeta turns out to be ecstatic about playing hooky, when John finally gets a spare moment to talk to her and Tavros. He doesn't know if he ever wants to wear a hero costume again (between the Trickster and his handler? Yikes, times a thousand), but at least then he'd have a convenient excuse for the odd looks he keeps getting from old people. They can apparently sense youths from a mile away, because each time he dares to go outside he swears that three sweet little old ladies give him the stink eye. Wandering around the city at noon? Madness.

Jade tells him he's imagining it.

Jade grew up on a deserted island in the middle of the Pacific ocean, and is totally full of bullcrap.

Jade's also gonna kick his butt, because speaking of clothes - John doesn't remember his workout shirt hanging this loose on him before. Trying to get back into a regular exercise routine has been difficult at best. Oh man. Jade will wipe the floor with him. She bounds alongside as they go up to the roof (Striders are a horrible influence), tossing playful punches at his arm as she stretches on the go. Better yet, they've collected a small audience - and by small, John means thank god Doctor Lalonde dragged most of the Strilonde clan out for dinner, because John just knows they'd have organized some kind of Dragon Ball Z-style tournament. Do they need a blanket ban on certain people starting practice fights? Some people here lack the word 'practice' in their working vocabulary...

Turns out, John shouldn't worry about that kind of stuff. When he and Jade and Karkat and Gamzee reach the roof, it looks more like a pool party than anything. The only people missing apart from the Striders and the Lalondes are Equius and Nepeta and Tavros. Crabdad clatters around the edges of the pool like a ravening lifeguard, and when he spies John and Karkat hovering by the stairwell, lets out a full-throated whistle that can probably be heard clear across the metropolitan area. Terezi puts her claws to her mouth and adds a piercing wolf whistle to Crabdad's screech of greeting, directed at some indeterminate member of their group, before her pool floaty gets overturned by Feferi and she vanishes into the water with a burbling splash.

Well, at least if John's gonna get his behind handed to him, Kanaya is here to witness. Yeah, she'll probably tell Rose all the embarrassing details of his inevitable butt-whooping, but with her sitting in a lounge chair by the side of the pool, it's highly unlikely things will explode into uncontrolled chaos.
After giving the roof another once over, John wonders just where the heck they're supposed to be practicing. He and Jade aren't exactly conducive to small, conservative fighting styles, here, and the roof wasn't all that big before this. Thank god no one else lives in this building yet... "III think I changed my mind. One of the empty apartments would work better," John says, sliding a foot backward.

"Don't be silly! This will work perfect." Jade charges forward, smiling. Because of course, she has to have known on the way up here just how crowded it was and the exact dimensions of the roof area, and didn't say so. The Breeze could probably have told John some specifics, but he still forgets to check sometimes, and it drives the aspect crazy. She stops by the edge of the pool, green flickering through the strands of her hair as she knots it into a low braid down her back.

Against his better instincts, John follows her. He sneaks a glance back at Karkat and Gamzee, half-concerned and half-looking for confirmation that this is, in fact, silly as heck. Gamzee is staring out at the evening sky over everyone's heads, bemused by - the clouds, maybe? Karkat just has standard disgruntled Karkat face #23 on, wrinkling his forehead and trying to glare at every single target in range to show that he's not in any way amused by these shenanigans. "There is no way you're going to be able to practice with all these fucknuts here," Karkat says, sighing. Then, at a louder volume:
"Why the fuck are you people all up here?!!"

"There's a pool," Vriska points out, spreading her hands wide as she gestures grandly from her pool floaty. Her bathing suit is sunshine orange with a metallic sun symbol the only thing holding the two halves of the top together. As far as John can count, there's only three floaties total, and the last one belongs to WV. He doesn't even know when they could have bought those things... 'Friggin' duh, Vantas. 'If you build it, they will come.' Especially the fish ones." Feferi's chortle comes out mostly burbles from beneath the surface, while Vriska cups her claws around her mouth. "Unless their name is Coward Mcstripeypants!"

Eridan, engrossed in a book by the firepit, gives her a middle claw. "Why do you feel the need to antagonize literally everyone in exithtence?" Sollux demands, slamming the lid of his husktop part of the way shut so he can glare at Vriska properly.

Well, crap. "You're right, Karkat, no way are we gonna be able to practice out here," John says, keeping his sigh internal as he gives Jade a look.
"No, no, we are!" Jade says, all earnest smiles.

Then she seizes him by the wrist, spins him in close, and supplexes him into the pool.

Hindsight asks him why he's really shocked by this turn of events. Instead of saving him, the Breeze shoots up his nose before the rush of water, giggling like a maniac. Nice. Helpful, John thinks acidly, and his aspect laughs at him some more. Just chuckling up a storm over here.

Peeling his eyes open, bubbles tickling as they rush out of his nostrils, John shakes his hair out of the way. Feferi's puffed-out cheeks and crossed eyes greet him amid a puddle of inky black hair, inches from his upside down face (how do she and Jade have this much hair?) He makes a silly face back, which starts a laugh out of Feferi, and then does his best to avoid pulling anyone's hair as he pushes off the gritty bottom of the pool with his hands to get back upright.

Jade snags his foot and tugs, and John barely twists it free from her grip. He kicks away, staying low. The Breeze gives him plenty of air to work with, even as it finds the whole situation funny as heck. Feferi darts out of the way quicksilver fast, her pale pink suit and flaring gills all John keeps track of as he turns to wrangle Jade. She snapped into a lime green swim suit as they fell - no, he realizes with a squint, it's lime-patterned. And all the limes have smiley faces. She kicks off the pool wall with a bit too much nyoom to her push; that is so cheating. John rolls over her when she gets close again and aims for the surface, past one of the bobbing floaties overhead. The water's not all that deep just a few feet over from where they plunged in, and when his head and shoulders rise above the water John thinks he's clear for the moment.

His mistake is not checking which floaty was closest to him. A pair of thighs latch around his neck, and he thinks it's Jade using space powers again to teleport on top of him - but no, the legs are smooth and grey, nicked up and down by old white scars and the curving lines of a tattoo, and oh god. Vriska's blue-streaked hair sticks to his face as she bends down. "Chicken. Us versus Terezi and whatever sucker she can get to cooperate with her," Vriska declares, pleased, cracking her knuckles. John wobbles when she whips her upper body around to challenge Terezi directly, and he puts a hand on a knee to balance her.

But the urge to dump her backwards is strong. Or heck, he could just let his knees cave under him and take her down with him. Terezi's showing no signs of being willing to abandon her reclaimed floaty, so John takes a moment to breathe and pout when he spies Karkat, nice and dry off to the side. "Do you need help down there?" Karkat asks, crouching by the edge of the pool. John would warn the troll he's kinda in the danger zone as far as Feferi's antics might go, but it seems to be a prankster kind of night, and the mood is infectious. "I would offer to jump kick her off you, but with my luck she'll fucking dodge and I'll land in the water like a complete fucklord." Past Karkat's shoulder, Gamzee ambles around the pool with his head tilted back. He looks like he could bend over backward into a bridge any second now, and as he wanders closer Kanaya starts switching between giving Vriska the evil eye and watching Gamzee's circuitous route.

John shrugs at Karkat, the weight of Vriska making that more difficult than usual, and smiles. "Nah, I'm good. Though I don't know how well years of pool roughhousing experience can hold up against Jade."

Of course, right as John says that, Vriska gets the bright idea to grab his head and turn it to steer. "Don't give me that kind of depressing talk, John, we have a war to win. Terezi, come back here!" she yells at the tealblood, who paddles with her hands so that the drifting floaty outpaces the Vriska+John juggernaut. "Tereeeeeeze-hrlbbulgl!"

John's footing yanks out from under him as he and Vriska get dunked beneath the surface. He can feel Jade's victorious laughter from here as Vriska's flailing limbs make swimming free a real pain in the butt. But he makes it out, and when Jade zooms up for another pass, John twists around and grapples her into a headlock. Which obviously she can zap out of at any second. Fighting Jade without trying to actively break or kill her might be impossible, he's realizing. Part of her happy-go-lucky approach to life is that she's just a cheerful person, but a huge part comes from the fact that she can dodge anything that's thrown at her and come back swinging.

Sure enough, after putting up the show of trying to wriggle herself free through more conventional means and realizing John's still strong enough to hold her (barely), Jade snaps out of his grip, with an accompanying burst of water rushing to fill the space where she used to be. The Breeze tags along after her regardless, blithely informing John of exactly where her lungs are once she reappears. Well, powers are on the table, after all, so -

Lungs, huh ~

The water feels very cold and very deep. Far more interesting things are going on below his feet - enormous things, hungry things, things that make him laugh - but for a moment, there's an opening up above where the idiot's defenses don't quite hold together, so he puts out their hand to twirl a finger - horrors are fun, but explosive decompression is more fun -

John wrenches his hand back down to his side, his back slamming against the side of the pool. Against every instinct he has, he tries to breathe in - his heart is going a million miles an hour - and for the second time the Breeze careens in instead of water. Mostly.

BE: What was that! Where did he come from?!

John can't answer; he scrapes a knee in his hurry to spin around and climb out of the water onto the pavement, spitting up a thin trickle of water that snuck in along with the Breeze. His nose and sinuses feel waterlogged in a way he hasn't felt since - gosh, when did he even start swim team? What a lame move. He should have known better than that.

Karkat notices immediately. "Harley, what the fuck," he demands hotly, stomping over to John before he can straighten up and play it cool.

"Whaaaat? I didn't do anything, Karkat," Jade calls back (oh thank god) from the opposite side of the pool, wringing the water out of her hair with twisty green light. Her legs swing from side to side, sloshing the water around. "John, did you try to breathe water or something? Dork."

"Fuck you, Harley, I've been sitting through four hour swim meets for ages now, and I think I would have noticed if John had a habit of periodically swilling filthy public swimming pool bilge," Karkat says. John gets it together long enough to swing around and sit on his butt instead of leaning over his spit puddle, and pats Karkat's hand to reassure him. Inside his head, he can feel the Breeze scouring around like a downburst looking for signs of the source. The impression of the intrusive thought already feels vague and fizzy at the edges, like flat soda or a bad dream, but that was the first sign they've seen of the Trickster in - a while. Long enough for John to have gotten complacent, apparently.

BE: ugh. where is he, where did he go!

"Had a weird thought," John says aloud, pinching his nose and shaking his head. "I've got it handled, I'm fine."

"Speak for yourself!" Vriska rights herself, her hair streaming water right into livid eyes, and she elbows her way onto WV’s pool floaty as it goes past her. About six different people glare at her as one, and she freezes in place before she can push the carapacian off, lowering her claw with a perfectly innocent expression as WV huffs at her. "You just know you and Terezi would be too chicken to beat me and John, Jade. That was sabotage, clear as day!" She pronounces Jade with an '8' sound clearly thrown in instead of 'ade.' How does one troll generate so much competitive spirit? Talk about motherfucking mysteries.

That wasn't his thought. That was Gamzee, talking out loud. For a bright, hard moment, John closes his eyes, and when the Breeze does another sweep it grumbles. "Tricky little motherfucker's gone now," Gamzee says, close enough that his knees jostle Karkat's when he crouches down. His arms cross at the wrists as he lets them rest on his knees. "Got itself in good with high tier connections. Huh. Fun times."

"Tricksy. Oh, fuck no," Karkat repeats in a low hiss, realization dawning.

John snorts out through his nose one last time, resigns himself to beleaguered runny nose hell, and gives a tiny nod. A quick look around shows that most people on the roof could care less, not when Kanaya has risen to her feet to better yell at Vriska for trying to cause havoc. Jake watches curiously from where he sits on a lounge chair beside Jane, but he's a good distance off, the two of them almost as far away from the water as Sollux. "I'm good," John says. There's a shaky, sick pang in his stomach that makes him feel a little out of sorts, but the Breeze is patrolling in his mind again rather than manifesting itself, and now that he's aware of the difference it's...reassuring.

BE: just don't lock me in here... :T

I won't.

"Hey, John? You are okay, right?" Jade says, worry seeping into her tone, and John looks up in time to see a slim grey claw snake out of the water and pull Jade under with an enormous splash that half-soaks Kanaya and Eridan. Eridan screeches and curls over his book like life itself depends on it, while Kanaya keeps right on track with her tirade.

"I have avenged you," Feferi informs John sweetly, paddling over in a few strokes and leaving Jade to splutteringly zap herself out. The troll crosses her arms on the edge of the pool and leans the side of her face on them, with a sharp grin for Karkat. "Are you going to swim, Karkat?"

-

Having so many people around at first was a headrush; now, unless John stops worrying about them constantly, it's just gonna leave him exhausted. The longer they go without screwing up and getting someone killed - he's considering investing in one of those 'this facility has gone X days without casualties!' signs - the more they mingle and loosen up about the rigid system of keeping tabs on Vriska (and Terezi by extension), Eridan, and Gamzee at all times. Jade has three rubber bands on her fingers so that she remembers to stay aware in case one of them decides to go out and punch a baby or something.

But hey! The last time this particular group of trolls spent a prolonged period of time together, they went on a rampage. John's current hypothesis is - since they already had a murder rampage, from now on everyone will be calm and reasonable. Flawless logic, obviously. As long as they keep their heads down while they're recovering and planning out how to go after the Midnight Crew and the Felt, there is a pretty good chance no one will die and/or get arrested. Yeah! And Doctor Lalonde won't come back to the apartments and announce she's going to meet Diamonds Droog! Pfff, even if that were a real thing that happened, it wouldn't be a problem. They can totally handle it.

BE: that's the spirit!
No, it's hysteria.

BE: oh

BE: are you sure? because you've been kinda depressed and stuff for a while now, so maybe you can't tell when you're having fun anymore. this could all just be healthy good humor in the face of adversity!

Yeah, let's go with that one. If you say so.

Because as it turns out, Karkat isn't going to swim. John could have told Feferi that much. The troll turns tomato red and fromgraches John and Gamzee over to sit by Jane and Jake and Eridan, fussing over John despite John insisting that he's okay. Jade joins them after chasing Feferi around the pool for a few laps, pulls several musty-smelling beach towels out of her sylladex and dumps the leftover sand out of them before offering one to John so he can dry off. And it's okay. The echoes of rush hour traffic sift up from below, but Aradia's soft humming from where she sits crosslegged beside Sollux sounds nice. There's another tense moment when Tavros flies up the stairwell with Nepeta gleefully carting his wheelchair with one arm, Equius in hot pursuit, but Nepeta brushes off Equius's protests and flops down next to Kanaya, unwilling to be moved an inch. John thinks Equius is about to literally implode and turn into a ball of voidy stuff, the better to ignore Gamzee and Vriska out of existence, but he doesn't get the chance.

See, they didn't expect the Striders and Lalondes to be back for an hour. John would have hedged his bets for around two and a half hours, give or take, but he figures with both Rose and Doctor Lalonde sober, they would probably skip the old requisite post-dinner bottle of wine and just come right back home. It's doomed to be the most awkward dinner since that first one immediately after John broke the pale dating sim that is his life, but not even Bro has the power to pry Doctor Lalonde away from a polite family dinner out in public before an hour is up.

Dave starts panic-texting a half hour in. Rose's messages sound more intelligible - except she's saying almost the same things, and none of them make sense. Doctor Lalonde wants to meet up willingly with Diamonds Droog and the Midnight Crew to cut a deal.

Now see, John knows certain things to be true regardless of his messed up head: Rue has multiple degrees, she used to be perpetually tipsy in a not-good way, she kinda messed up big time by ditching Rose the way she did - okay, she's made mistakes before.

But John wasn't around at the time to see her dig her heels in and rationalize the choice until it made sense to her. Despite this being a really, really, really, really, reeeeeeeally dumb idea that is doomed to failure, Doctor Lalonde wants to go through with it. Rose is more skeptical than outright dismissing the idea, and worse, Jade thinks Doctor Lalonde can pull this off without dying horribly, which means they're gonna have problems if she and Rue stop listening and jump right to the meeting place without backup. Bro is presumably in murder mode, but John's only guessing because he's gone totally AWOL. John can't even console himself with the mental image of Bro and Droog fighting. That might have been badass and totally cool at one point. Now he's wary because so much could go wrong; not even hero shenanigans can make the bad thoughts go away. Bro is an ass, but he's their ass, dangit.

...That came out weirder than John meant it to.

John - can admit the idea of not having to watch over their shoulder for Droog all the time would be ten kinds of awesome, but there's also no way in heck this is for real. Droog's trying to pull a fast one, and Doctor Lalonde wants to let it happen. Either it turns out Droog is sincere (John's thinking that's a big fat no, but whatever) and they work out a deal with her, which makes his skin crawl - or she's not sincere, this whole thing is a massive, dangerous waste of time, and they need to be ready for a free for all. Whether that free for all ends with police swarming them or not depends on how smooth they can be. And they're not smooth. They're not smooth at all. As a group, they're like the world's most lumpy, uneven, hacked up ice rink. There are cacti on this planet that are more smooth than their particular friendgroup. These analogies are the worst, not even Dave could come with analogies as dumb as these, and Dave is undisputed king of terrible, long-winded analogies. It's pretty sad.

Plus, the trolls aren't helping things. If Dave could have chosen a less public way to basically announce the impending drama to the whole world than by freaking out in a memo in front of a pack of the world's most drama-hungry omnivores, this might be easier. Some of them couldn't care less, but others - well, put it this way. If the trolls hadn't gotten the gist of things before Dave switched to a private chat, maybe John wouldn't be fighting the very strong temptation to sic Vriska Serket on Diamonds Droog in a cage match to see who would emerge victorious.

She's already volunteered. One thing Vriska can't resist is a challenge. It is so tempting. So tempting.

"I'm just saying, if you all are gonna be weak, pansyass scrubs about it, I'll take care of her!" Vriska brags, tossing her hair over her shoulder, timed so that the wet hair smacks the glasses off Terezi's face. "I'm the greatest at this kind of thing!"

"If by take care of her, you are implying you would kill her - no. Just no, Vriska," Kanaya says. John recognizes the expression on the jadeblood's face, because it's the same as his own: a homemade mixture of despair and pained disbelief that this is a real life conversation that they're all having.

Vriska rolls her eyes. "I'd only kill her a little, fine! Look at me! Being accomod8ing!" She tries to make puppy dog eyes at Doctor Lalonde but the effect is ruined slightly by the eager, feverish grin she can't quite wipe off her face. John's not an expert at ashen things, but even he can tell that Terezi's expression is mirroring Vriska's too closely, like the Scourge Sisters are both way too on board with dispensing 'justice' in this case. Siccing Vriska on Droog would probably be amazing; siccing frenzied Scourges on her would be overkill. Literally.

"Apart from the obvious, another thing to consider is that Droog is asking us to let her and her fellows go, after the fact," Rose murmurs, half to herself. She stationed herself near Dave when they all gathering in a living room to talk this out, and John and Jade wound up sitting on the arms of the couch on either side, so that John has to hunker down a bit to look Rose in the face. She's just so short, sometimes. "I'm not sure what the ethical implications might be if we collaborate with them in exchange for information and then let them go to wreck felonious havoc another day."

"Ethical implications can go take a running jump off a cliff for all I care," Karkat snaps. "Watch this." He has an almost dreamy expression on his face - except, you know, for all the fury radiating off him in waves, as he slowly lifts his middle finger and holds it up for everyone to observe. "Watch as I condense all of my burning hatred into this finger. Isn't it beautiful?"

"It's definitely something," Dave says, but Karkat talks too loudly to notice the low, strained mutter as he goes on, rising in volume as he goes until he's pretty much shouting at Doctor Lalonde. "Now imagine this finger is capable of great things. Like taking your fucking shitpanned idea to chat up the person who thought beating the shit out of me was a fun way to pass the time, and slam dunking it into the Marianas Trench!"

"I understand your concern, Karkat," Doctor Lalonde says, stepping neatly around Eridan to reach a suitcase. "Ambrose voiced similar points, and they all have merit. I have simply performed my own analysis, and decided that the potential gains could outweigh the risk."
"Yeah, same! And Droog kidnapped me and stuff!" Jade points out, shrugging her shoulders, her hands encircling her ankles as she bobs in the air. "Karkat, you're forgetting one thing. Or maybe several things."

Karkat lets the middle finger drop so he can slap his forehead and drag his hand down over his eyes. He looks tired, but John successfully fends off the trained instinct to talk Karkat into a recooperacoon. "What?!"

"We have a lot more friends now." Jade's eyes laugh silently when she and John's gazes meet. He estimates it's about 60% her having a serious point about the fact that they are surrounded by people with various different super powers/weapons training, and 40% her trolling Karkat for all she's worth to lighten the mood. It sorta works. A little. It's hard not to be gloomy about Diamonds Droog hanging around Seattle and generally being a butt.

"Way more friends than Droog," John agrees, reluctant. "But also? Fewer minions. And no bombs."

Rose sucks in a breath, hissing slightly. "Right. The wanton destruction of public property. Thank you for reminding me, John, I'll keep an eye out for that."

"Also -" Tavros falters when everyone who's paying attention (Equius and Nepeta are arguing in a corner, the general flavor of which seems to be something like 'No, Nepeta, this is a foolish idea and we are surrounded by fools and you are still recovering') turns to look at him. He flushes brown, tapping his index claws together hesitantly before continuing with a heavier stutter, "I - I think you have trouble with Droog a lot? So qu-w-what would she do if you didn't show up? Wouldn't that still be increíblemente peligroso, to leave her alone?"

John rubs his forehead with the heel of his hand. He can feel a dry headache tensing in his temples, which, on top of the pool incident, is going to make him cranky. This is the last thing he wants to deal with. Rose is deep in thought, Jade's geared up to do something silly again, Dave looks like he's ready to throw himself out the nearest window and run away into the sunset to become a slam poet for the last few weeks before the Reckoning, and Karkat looks increasingly thunderous, even with Gamzee patting him on top of the head with a faraway expression.

-

So they take everyone along. Why the heck not? What could possibly go wrong!

...He really needs to stop doing that. Whatever. This plan is foolproof. And by foolproof, John means if all else fails, they have Vriska. Not exactly the best fallback plan in the world, no, but at least she's enthusiastic about it. It's like having a Hulk, but she's cerulean-themed, maniacal, and wayyy more chatty.

She also thinks they're friends. Which, since Vriska's idea of friendly interactions can range anywhere between 'time to shove people off cliffs!' to 'hello guys it's murder time!' - well, since they're on top of a really tall building right now, John is keeping an eye on her. As many eyes as he can spare, which is about half of one.

He's sort of jealous, actually. The eight-fold vision thing be so useful right about now.

"So bored," Vriska sighs, her hair dangling over the side of the building and tossing in the wind. This high up the night air cuts through the fabric of John's jacket and sweater, and the scarf that Rose knitted for him keeps getting tossed back in his face when a stray gust catches it the wrong way. He can taste a faint drizzle when he licks his lips, a thin mist that isn't quite up to snuff. Vriska has her claws folded over her chest, rolling her eyes as she stares up at the greyish-purple of the clouds.
"We've only been here twenty minutes," John points out, running his fingers through his hair. There's never any point in trying to get it to lie flat, but right now he feels like the low level, misty humidity is making every single strand fuzz in a way deliberately calculated to stick out in his peripheral vision. "Stakeouts aren't that bad."

The ceruleanblood snorts and taps a claw against a blue die sitting on her stomach. Her outfit is the absolute worst for sneaking; the faint twilight dulls the orange and yellow, but if they were trying to be stealthy she'd stick out like a sore thumb. Heck, they are trying to be stealthy! There are federal agents patrolling to make sure they don't get up to this kind of vigilante crap, and here John is in a too-thin jacket and a soft blue scarf, Vriska in the god tier equivalent of a Starburst candy, and Gamzee humming a low note that reminds John why they're currently serving as the backup in case Droog goes nuts. Team Death from Above.

It could be worse. Kanaya and Sollux got stuck watching Eridan, aka Team Nuke the Whole Building, Just Fuckin' Annihilate It. John makes a face. When both super-emergency all-else-has-failed backup plans rely on throwing the designated murderous heavy-hitters at the enemy and crossing your fingers (and toes), it's not exactly confidence-inspiring.

But yeah. Hopefully it won't go that far. John doesn't trust Droog at all in any way, shape, or form, but he's trying to be positive! Yeah! Doctor Lalonde has Jade with her, as well as Dave and Karkat and Terezi, and the others are scattered around on their own rooftops in case Jade gets sniped with a tranq round or something again. Bro is - somewhere, John guesses. No way he isn't around, though. Not with Dave in the middle of it.

-- tipsyGnostalgic [TG] opened a memo on board improtant shizznit at 20:51:44 --
TG: lolmao does anyl know when the time stamps work TG: how do time
TG: n e way we're set up o'er yonder how about u
TT: Sound off, people.
TT: From what I can tell, everyone is in position. Things seem a little...Mm. Equius, I can't see you - is everyone in your group where you need to be?
CT: D--> Yes
EB: we're good here! vriska is bored :P
TT: An ominous state of affairs, generally speaking.
EB: yeah, probably.
GC: T3LL VR1SK4 TH4T 1F SH3 G3TS 1D34S, SH3'LL G3T S3NT HOM3 4ND WON'T GET TO 34T D3SS3RT!
AG: I'm right here, Terezi! Geeeeeeez!
TG: ugonasdoarueubgdm
EB: dave, uh...dude, did you just hurl?
TG: only in cyberspace eb do i look that unprofessional to you irl TG: dammit man im a smooth operator

The meeting is scheduled for nine on the dot, and the only reassurance John has right this second is that Doctor Lalonde got to choose the where. Like, there's no way Droog could rig this building to explode. Not in the short time they've had to arrange this. Jade is positive she has the Harley Foundation building's lobby on lock, thanks to her frequent visits, and she hasn't found anything blowy-uppy yet.

But Droog could set off another building. Any random warehouse - or worse, another inhabited office building - might go up in flames if she thinks that's an easy way to distract them. Which is why John is also sort of on Team Save People in the event of a crisis elsewhere. If the Breeze picks up on anything suspicious - anything at all - they're out of here, and Droog can deal with her dumb brainwashed asshat friends on her own time. No one's getting left behind to distract her. No one's getting hurt like Karkat did.

Vriska rolls over onto her stomach and pushes up onto her knees, still crouched dangerously close to the edge of the building. Dangerously close for other people, John supposes. Dying once seems to have renewed Vriska's confidence in her ability to get away with risky stuff, but as long as she's playing on their side...

"We should get closer," she says, flashing a John a toothy grin and smacking the side of his knee. "Come on! No one will notice."

"Jade will so totally notice. So will Rose. Cool your jets, Vriska," John says, rolling his eyes back at her to express just how much that's a pointless, sketchy suggestion. Letting Vriska think she's got a foothold would be a reeeally bad idea. Knowing that she's dangerous doesn't help when she's got such a forceful personality.

"Oh, John. You ask a lot of me, you really do." Vriska sighs heavily. "Aren't you two worried about Karkles or something?" she asks, pitching her voice to carry, a sing song that Gamzee is obviously meant to hear.

John's back stiffens, and he swallows and counts to ten before answering. Vriska's pretty obvious when she tries to push buttons, thankfully. "We're all gonna be fine," he says, lightly smacking her hand away when she tries to bat his knee again. She tries to make it a miniature slap fight, jabbing at his shin with her other hand, and John's starting to get the feeling she's just keyed up and looking for a convenient outlet. Unloading her on Droog would be convenient, but also a bad plan unless literally all else fails. Of course, he sneaks a glance at Gamzee, to make sure the purpleblood is still camped out in the middle of the roof and not popping off to go check on Karkat. "Still good?" he asks.

Gamzee opens his eyes, cocking his head to look at John. "All chill," he says, blinking slow enough that John thinks he's closing his eyes again. "Don't need to get a fret on about me, brother. You know who all needs worryin' on right now."

Right. Right. John takes a few steadying breaths, taking in the static behind his closed eyelids for a second before opening them. He gives Gamzee a faint smile, then keeps his butt planted on the roof as a cold, damp breeze picks up strength and tries to lift him clear of the roof. He lifts one hand to let it sift through the wind. The Breeze nudges under his hand for a moment, like a cat arching its back into a touch, and then pours down the side of the building to reach the street below, drawing more wind along with it as it does. John tracks it, sensing when it nips into the Harley Foundation to find Jade, Dave, Karkat, and the rest, before letting most of it diffuse outward, his awareness dispersed into the cool air and ready to rush back in at the faintest signs of an impending explosion - like rapid oxidization.

And they wait.

--

-- carcinoGeneticist [CG] began pestering twinArmageddons [TA] at ???:??::?? -- CG: SOLLUX.
CG: HEY.
CG: IF YOU'VE PASSED OUT IN FRONT OF THE HUSKTOP AND LEFT PESTERCHUM RUNNING TO GIVE ME A FALSE SENSE OPEN COMMUNICATION LINES, I WILL KICK YOUR ASS.
CG: SOLLUX YOU PIECE OF SHIT STOP IGNORING ME.
TA: oh KK don't ever change.
TA: jk you can 2top beiing a douchebag whenever you 2o plea2e.
CG: IMPOSSIBLE. THIS KIND OF ASSHOLERY DOESN'T HAVE A CONVENIENT OFF SWITCH.
TA: niice.
CG: ANYWAY. YEAH.
TA: what'2 up? it'2 the miiddle of the niight. go the fuck two 2leep liike a normal troll.
CG: SLEEPING AT NIGHT SOUNDS FUCKING ASS BACKWARDS NOW AND I WOULD LIKE TO FORCIBLY REMOVE WHATEVER SECTION OF MY BRAIN ENDED UP IN CHARGE OF HANDLING PRE SCRATCH MEMORIES AND CAST IT INTO THE DEEPEST TRENCH ON THE OCEAN FLOOR.
CG: FIRST ALL OF ITS HINTS COME IN THE FORM OF GORY DREAM DEATH LOTTERY, AND NOW THAT I VAGUELY REMEMBER MOST OF THIS SHIT, I WISH I COULD SCRUB THE LINGERING PTSD OUT OF MY THINKPAN WITH THE HIGHEST GRADE INDUSTRIAL CLEANSER YOU CAN BUY WITHOUT ALERTING THE FBI.
TA: yeah ii'm kind of iiin the 2ame boat. barely rememberiing becu2e half my braiiin ii2 bu2y wiith concentratting on 2ome other 2hiit.
TA: don't you have two moiirail2 two complaiin at?
TA: though iiif you want two go22iip about that ii will not 2top you.
CG: YOUR FREAKY DOUBLES FETISH IS SHOWING.
TA: you brought thii2 on, man. you mentioned ii two get my attentiion and now here ii am.
TA: 2eriously what ii2 that like, ii2 iiit a2 awe-iin2piiringly me22ed up a2 ii'm iiimagiiniing?
CG: PROBABLY. BUT THEY'RE JUST. UGH.
CG: DID WE REALLY HAVE THE KIND OF FRIENDSHIP WHERE WE DISCUSS PALE KINKY SHIT? BECAUSE ON THE ONE CLAW I BARELY KNOW YOU IN THIS LIFE, BUT ON THE OTHER MY ONLY OTHER LEGITIMATE OPTIONS FOR HAVING THIS CONVERSATION WOULD MAKE THIS WEIRDER THAN IT'S ALREADY GOING TO BE.
TA: buddy iif we get hung up in that 2hiit we're never gonna make any forward progre22 iiin thii2 lifetime.
TA: al2o we 2hare the common factor of haviiing moiirail2 who are be2t murderfriiend2 2o there you go.
TA: aradiia’2 iiidea of piiletalk ii2 cajoliing me iiintwo helpiing her 2et up game breakiing mod2 and chattiing iiin vague term2 about who miight pop off next.
CG: FUCK. THAT SOUNDS...REALLY FUCKING MORBID.
TA: eh. you learn two liive wiith iiit. and ii don't thiink ii could keep my 2hiit twogether wiithout her cheery morbiitiity groundiing me.
TA: liike no matter how screwy my head feel2, aradiia will alway2 be there two a22ure me iiit could be wor2e, ii could have been dealiing with thii2 con2tant miindfuck for fuckiing centuriie2.
TA: okay now ii've completed my half of thii2 embarra22ment con2ga liine, what about you?
CG: I'M ACTUALLY REGRETTING STARTING THIS CONVERSATION ALREADY. I CHANGED MY MIND, I THINK I'D RATHER BEAT MY HEAD AGAINST A BRICK WALL FOR A FEW HOURS.
TA: kay cool glad we had thii2 awkward talk.
CG: FUCK IT I'M GOING TO TELL YOU ANYWAY.
TA: dammiit.
CG: BECAUSE SHITTY ROMANCE NOVELS AND SOAP OPERAS AND PORN DO NOT PREPARE YOU FOR THE COMPLEXITIES OF REAL LIFE POLY QUADRANT DYNAMICS. THEY ARE DRAMATIZED AND FULL OF LIES.
TA: well you know thiing2 are bad when you're badmouthiing the 2oap2 KK.
CG: THAT'S JUST IT. IT'S NOT BAD.
CG: IT’S WORKING AND IT’S COMPLICATED AS FUCK AND YET SOMEHOW IT HASN’T EXPLODED IN OUR FACES YET AND I WOULD HAVE EXPECTED AT LEAST ONE PERSON TO HAVE A MELTDOWN AND STORM OUT BY NOW.
CG: THE SOAPS LIED TO ME, SOLLUX. THINGS ARE GOING...PASSABLY FINE.
TA: only you could find 2omethiing two complaiin about iin 2uch tryiing ciircum2tance2.
CG: IT PLACES US FURTHER ALONG THE UNREALISTIC PALE PORN SCALE THAN I HAD ALREADY RESIGNED MYSELF TO BEING.
TA: the 2ofte2t, pale2t porn.
CG: WHAT DID I FUCKING SAY ABOUT MAKING IT WEIRD?! THAT'S EXACTLY THE KIND OF FREAKY MEME SHIT I THOUGHT I'D GET FROM DAVE!
CG: OR WORSE, FROM ROSE, WHO CAN DROP MEMES ON YOU OUT OF FUCKING
NOWHERE WITH A COMPLETELY STRAIGHT FACE.
TA: you put way two much faiith iin me for 2ome godfor2aken rea2on.
CG: STORY OF MY FUCKING LIFE.
CG: ANYWAY YEAH. I CAUGHT THEM MAKING OUT THIS MORNING.
TA: well ii2 that a problem or??
CG: IT WAS ADORBABLE.
CG: IF YOU TELL ANYONE I SAID THAT I'LL SHANK YOU OR SOMETHING. I’LL SHANK YOUR HUSKTOP.
TA: 2iince when do you 2hank people?
TA: waiit no ii kind of remember thi2 from la2t tiime.
TA: from when you accidentially got 2tabbed and entered iinto a blood pact wiith a carapacian and then he got exiiled and you 2topped makiing 2tabby comment2 and went back two 2iickle themed threat2.
CG: OH GOD. FUNNY STORY. MY SIDES ARE SPLITTING OVER HERE.
TA: ii can't believe you diid iit agaiin.
CG: ANYWAY BACK TO MY AWKWARD RELATIONSHIP STATUS.
CG: BUT YEAH THE TWO OF THEM ACTUALLY SEEM TO HAVE THE START OF THEIR OWN RAPPORT THAT DOESN'T NECESSARILY RELY ON ME.
CG: THUS ELIMINATING ONE PARTICULAR AVENUE OF JEALOUSY THAT COULD HAVE DEVELOPED BETWEEN THEM.
CG: GAMZEE MOVES FUCKING FAST THOUGH LIKE HOLY FUCK HE JUST GOES ALL IN AFTER A FEW DAYS.
TA: enteriing tmii territory here.
TA: liike the le22 ii have two know about you three and your prediilliictiion2, the better.
CG: I DON'T NEED YOUR SASS HERE, I NEED SOME SYMPATHY FOR THE FACT THAT EARLIER I HAD TWO ENDEARING FUCKWADS HOLDING HANDS AND TRYING TO COMPEL ME INTO JOINING THEM IN SLATTERNLY CUDDLES WHILE HARLEY’S FAN GIRL/SECRETARY WAS RIGHT! FUCKING! THERE!
TA: diid you really ju2t 2ay '2latternly'? al2o 2orry man my 2ympathy only come2 iin 2a22 form.
hazard2 of friiend2hiip wiith me.
TA: anyway yeah go complain two kanaya, 2he‘2 the friend iin charge of regular 2ympathy.
TA: what you're telling me here ii2 that everything ii2 going well, your diiamond2 are gettiing along alright, and no one ha2 died yet.
TA: now ii ju2t want two tiip off TT 2olely two giive you 2omethiing two ACTUALLY complaiin about.
CG: PLEASE DON’T. ROSE’LL CORNER ME IN A DARK ALLEY ANY DAY NOW ALREADY. THE LAST THING SHE NEEDS IS YOU ENCOURAGING HER.
CG: WHAT THE FUCKING FUCK IS UP WITH YOU AND YOUR ASHEN QUADRANT, ANYWAY?
TA: eh, vrii2ka and terezii fliipped. what ii2 there two 2ay?
CG: AND YOU’RE OKAY WITH THAT?
TA: I think KN ii2 more club2broken than ii am, tbh.
TA: I like if they flip back - which the odds of are two damn high - ii'll cool their 2hiit if need be, but ii't2 not 2omethiing that bother2 me ii2f kanaya get2 there fiir2t.

CG: FUCK YOU AND YOUR ABILITY TO HAVE CASUAL FLINGS.
TA: ii't2 a talent, my friiend. not everyone can deal wiith non-2top 2oulmate b2 when iiit come2 two their relation2hiip2.
TA: ii'd watch out for terezii btw. he has a thiing for red themed people, and he's been takiiing 2niffgander2 at you and dave.

CG: A) NO.
CG: B) AFTER WITNESSING HOW MUCH OF AN TAINTCHAFING ASS PAST ME MADE OF HIMSELF, ABSOLUTELY FUCKING NOT.
CG: C) THAT SOUNDS LIKE A SETUP FOR SOME HORRIFICALLY WRITTEN ROM-COM WHEREIN THE TEALBLOOD INCITES JEALOUSY IN HER PRIMARY TARGET OF VACILLATION BY USING TWO HAPLESS LOWBLOODS AS DISTRACTIONS, ONLY TO HAVE HER COLDER BLOODED LOVER WOO HER BACK IN THE LAST THIRTY MINUTES WITH AT LEAST THREE DUELS AND TWO EXPLOSIONS.
TA: you mean the one that starred troll drew barrymore and jennifer lopez?
CG: YES. I DON'T WANT TO BE JOHN CUSACK. NOT WHEN JOHN CUSACK'S CHARACTER HAS HIS COMPANY BOUGHT OUT BY JENNIFER LOPEZ IN A POWER PLAY THAT LEAVES HIM A BROKEN SHADOW OF HIS FORMER SELF.
CG: ACTUALLY, NO, DAVE'S THE ONE WITH HIS OWN APPLE JUICE EMPIRE.
CG: D) I REPEAT: NO. NO WORLD IN WHICH DAVE WOULD BE PLAYED BY JOHN CUSACK IS WORTH LIVING IN.
TA: ii don't know why you watch this2 stuff holy FUCK.

TA: god ye2. thiink fa2t. about somethiing other than rom-CG: KANAYA.
TA: what about her?
CG: I'M HALF WONDERING WHEN SHE'LL START INCHING BETWEEN GAMZEE AND EQUIUS, HONESTLY.
TA: ii literally jut2 aaid no romance but okay.
TA: no 2hiit?
CG: SHE READS ANY HATRED AS POTENTIALLY PITCH. WHICH MIGHT BE WHY SHE'S PERPETUALLY FUCK OUT OF LUCK IN TERMS OF SETTLING INTO AN ASHEN TRIAD.
CG: IF YOU ASK ME, EQUIUS HAS MADE HIS ENTIRELY PLATONIC DESIRE TO PUNCH GAMZEE THROUGH THE CORE OF THE PLANET AND OUT THE OTHER SIDE A MATTER OF PUBLIC RECORD, BUT FUCK ONLY KNOWS EQUIUS WAS ALWAYS...UH.
TA: really fucking awkward with the world2 bigge2t troll boner for p2eudo-BD2M roleplaying at the age of thirteen.
CG: FUCK YOU FOR TYPING THAT, YOU SHITLICKING UNPLUGGED LAMP.
TA: you're welcome.
TA: but anyway yeah ii have two go now.
CG: REALLY? WHAT, ARE YOU WORKING ON SOMETHING THAT'S MORE INVIGORATING THAN US STIRRING THIS CAULDRON OF BUBBLING HOT GOSSIP?
TA: have two track down my a22hole of a cu2todian.
TA: ii've been tryiiing two run a backtrace on hi2 me22ages becau2e he barely 2ounded luciid the2e pa22t couple of week2, but ii keep 2talliing out.
TA: he's annoying but ii2f someone ii2 druggiing hiim, and that2 why he dropped off the fucking grid for a while there...
CG: DO YOU NEED HELP? I MEAN IT'S NOT LIKE I'M ANY FUCKING GOOD AT HACKING OR ANYTHING LIKE THAT, BUT I CAN SIT THERE AND ANNOY THE PISS OUT OF YOU IF THAT HELPS.
TA: if it probably wouldn't.
CG: OH.
TA: if you can't 2leep you can come over here anyway, ii gue22. knowiing you, you'd ju2t keep pe2teriing me regardle22. kanaya ii2 bringeing her 2ewiing down, two.
CG: THAT SOUNDS LIKE THE MOST COMPLETELY FUCKING LAME SLEEPOVER EVER. I SHOULDN'T EVEN LEAVE JOHN AND GAMZEE ALONE.
CG: I'M IN.
TA: fuck yii22. ii can own your a22 at prop hunt while thii2 code ii2 runniing. beatiing KN ii2 no fun when she 2uck2 2o hard.
TA: bring the leftover 2andwiich2.
CG: OF COURSE. WHAT KIND OF INCONSIDERATE FUCKGRUB DO YOU TAKE ME FOR?

--

-- arachnidsGrip [AG] began pestering caligulasAquarium [CA] at ??:??:?? -- AG: Hey, Eridan.
AG: ::::)
AG: ........
AG: Oy! Cape douche!
AG: I can see your handle lit up. 8usted!
CA: not really in the mood vvris
-- caligulasAquarium blocked arachnidsGrip from the chat! --
-- caligulasAquarium unblocked arachnidsGrip from the chat! --
CA: that is insufferable ill havve you knoww
AG: Aw. And here I thought you were just playing the washed up has-8een to fool the others, but you really have lost your touch!
AG: Guess I'll just have to find someone else to 8e in cahoots with...Someone who isn't 8ooooooooring.
CA: god fine vvris wwhat do you wwant
AG: Hm, I don't think I'm telling you. I know a sulker when I spy one.
AG: What was it? Getting your 8ss handed to you by Jade, or the incident?
AG: 8ecause you just haven't been the same since...
CA: you dont evven knoww wwhat ivve been like in this lifetime dont play stupid kiddy games
CA: ivve been meditatin on my past actions and comin to grips wwith the fact that all i do is make poor life choices that end wwith me possessed or dead and shit like that
CA: its really depressin actually not that you wwould understand AG: I totally understand! God!
AG: All I do is fuck up and make mistakes and act like an idiot! Except now it's not just Terezi riding my 8ulge a8out it, it's everyone in this frigging apartment! Not exactly a situation conducive to getting shit done!
CA: wwell maybe they havve a point did you ever consider that AG: Yeah, yeah, I'm the stupidest dumb to ever dumb. That's why I'm trying to make amends and friends! Instead of 8rooding and sitting around dramatically reading l8me 8ooks.
CA: theyre not lame okay they speak to me
AG: They're Harlequin Hearts cliche vampire romances that you 8orrowed from Kanaya. Aka the glow in the dark queen of meddlers.
AG: They're lame.
CA: they are not fight me
AG: No! Ugh! Look. I don't want to fight, I'm just saying, watching you 8e all depressed and lame is giving me a headache.
AG: You think you can read your way through the entire game? Shyeah right.
CA: i can tell youre tryin to lead me astray into temptation wwoman its blatantly obvvious
CA: i just dont wwant horrorterrors in my head again okay it turns out thats wwhat it takes to scare me onto the straight an narroww
AG: Understandable. I tooooootally get that. I mean hey, no one wants spaghetti monsters running them into the ground. That's no way to win a game!
AG: It messed you up good last time, too, but not this 8ad.
CA: lalonde said it wwas leviathan not mal
CA: it felt like
AG: ...Like????????
CA: dont knoww the wwords for it
CA: wworse
CA: wwhat do you care
AG: What, I can't feel healthy concern a8out one of the teamm8s I'm gonna be relying on when we're fighting the 8oss 8attle to end all 8oss 8attles?
CA: yeah i guess that makes sense considerin wwho you are as a person
CA: fine ill return kans books an spend my time starin at the wwall instead
AG: Oorrerrrr~~~~~~~
AG: You could come hang out with me and Terezi, and get your ass in gear!
CA: remember that part wwhere i said i could tell wwhen you wwere attemptin to lead me astray into
-
AG: Yeah, no duh. You're a real troll Sherlock Holmes!
AG: You can sit around 8eing a good little no8ody, or you can do something about it. You either make yourself useful or be a pushover for the rest of forever, and h8 to say it, but this team doesn't have room for quitters!
CA: so youre sayin i should try to be a better person
AG: Oh hell no. '8etter person' is such an ar8itrary phrase.
AG: 8e a 8etter player.
CA: i already capped out the echeladder im pretty sure i can handle blasting wwhatever needs blasting
CA: wwhilst very carefully not fucking up our last hope wwith my unparalleld powwers of hope-themed destruction
CA: i mean god betwewn me and gam youvve got all the homegrowwn internal sabotage you could ever ask for just from us bein ourselvves
AG: This is the part where I inform you that you are completely missing the GODDAMN POINT AMPORA!!!!!!!
AG: Gamzee already figured it out, and you've played wayyyyyyyyy more games than he ever has.
CA: no see the murderin people thing doesnt wwork out wwhen i do it AG: Lol. Oh no, leave the PKing to me. We're not getting through this shitfest without 8r8king a few heads. ::::)
AG: The only question is, are you troll enough to do this the easy way, or is it gonna have to be the hard way? Well? Do you have the glo8es to get on board? Or are you gonna keep playing dum8?
CA: are you threatenin my person you infernal vvexation
AG: Hell yeah I am. And let me make this really, reeeeeeally clear, Eridan - AG: I'm luckier than you are.
CA: oh for fucks sake
CA: do kan and sol know youre plannin to go player killer again
AG: They won't as long as you don't turn snitch, duh.
AG: Aradia already confirmed that this was the right thing to do so that we win! That 8asically means it's doomed to happen regardless of what all these meddling scrubs think.
AG: It could 8e worse - Gamzee wouldn't give you all these sweet options, he'd just smash your pretty little fishface in.
CA: ivve got options
CA: wwait if i say yes are you goin to guillotine me from behind
AG: Of course not! If we do this here everyone and their human lusus would throw a fit.
AG: Though if you want to off yourself, I'll make sure Aradia's on call. No one could 8itch at me about that!
CA: not really all that high on my list of things i wwant to do
CA: ill think about it
AG: As long as you're thinking about getting stronger, not sulking. ::::) Got it?
CA: yeah yeah i got it
CA: wwait
AG: What now, Prince of Wishywashy Nonsense?!
CA: youre tryin to make me stronger
CA: oh god is this wwhat tavv wwent through
AG: No, 8ecause Tavros will only ever be a stick in the mud who likes doing pointless floaty dream quests and making friends instead of poking enemies in the soft bits with that stupid lancekind.
AG: Whereas you actually have some shiny potential for improvement, and an outstanding resume filled with lots of violence, hope-y 8ullshit, and willingness to take things into your own claws!
AG: Just stop doubting yourself, it's l8me. If you don't trust yourself not to make poor life choices, just listen to Aradia!
CA: wwho are you and wwhat have you done with vvis
AG: Hey, I mean clearly I would make a gr8 leader. The 8est leader. 8ut Aradia's on top of her shit and getting in good with her means getting a handle on allllllll the irons in the fire.
AG: So we can go along with her until she makes a mistake. ::::;) And then her irons will be ours.
AG: All of them.
CA: you are a connivvin, despicable force of nature vvis
CA: count me in i cant resist
AG: I knew you'd see things my way. ::::;) As long as you don't get any 8right ideas about allying with the guy who wants to destroy you along with everything else in reality -
CA: okay its really fuckin clear that was a shitty idea and its not gonna happen again givve me some credit here
AG: Awesome! 8etray me and I'll wreck your shit.
AG: *8etray us, I guess. You know what I mean. No Lords, no Horrorterrors. And no 8owing and scraping to these 8usy8odies. Have some frigging pride.
AG: Eyes on the prize.
CA: okay but im pretty sure kan could slice and dice me in fivve seconds if she thinks wwere schemin
CA: jade wwouldnt even need the fivve seconds i think AG: If you were god tier, maybe you wouldn't need to worry about those two.
AG: Especially since I have it on the highest authority we've got that Kanaya isn't going god tier in the foreseeable future.
AG: Food. For. Thought.
AG: Also? We're scheming in their 8est interests! How often do you get to say that?
CA: wwhatevver
CA: thanks i guess
AG: Tch. Whatever yourself. Just don't get all mopey again.
AG: ::::;
CA: are wwe
CA: are wwe havvin a moment
AG: Maybe like 8% of a moment.
CA: is it that loww just because you wwanted to use an 8
AG: It is now less than 8% of a moment.
CA: coddammit
AG: Just remember to be up 8y 8 am sharp!
CA: wwait wwhat wwhy AG: No more reading and whining. Only training now. You're going to 8e in the 8est shape by the time we god tier you.
AG: The very 8est!
CA: ...like no one evver -
AG: If you start quoting the Fiduspawn theme song I will punch you in the throat until you go god tier and then continue punching until it stops 8ecause it would be a just death. Do you know how often I caught that useless wriggler humming it while we were adventuring.
CA: you started it wwoman!
AG: That doesn't count!
CA: ugh
AG: Ugh yourself!
CA: anyway i guess wwere cool noww
CA: and together wwe wwill beat all the levvels AG: That's the idea! Just don't mess it up or get cold feet on me, and everything will 8e fucking golden.
CA: yeah
CA: i hope so
AG: Keep doing that. You'll see. We're going to weaponize your hope thing for victory instead of defeat, even if it kills you!
AG: Especially if it kills you!
CA: oh my god
-- arachnidsGrip [AG] stopped pestering caligulasAquarium [CA] at ??:??:?? --
---

Jade commandeers the lobby of the building the Harley Foundation is located in. It's not exactly neutral ground or anything, and to be honest, Jade's not trying to be neutral here. Neutral would be dumbness of the highest degree, and Rose figures they're already pushing how much dumb they can survive before it kills them. Whether Droog means business or not, Jade's unquestioned top priority is to keep everyone safe. Karkat insists on staying with her as part of Doctor Lalonde's honor guard;
Jade thinks it's because he's trying to prove something to himself.

Dave's a little harder to read, right now. He kinda looks like he could hurl all over the floor any second, but whenever someone asks him about it, he shuts them down. But he doesn't need to be here! Jade could send him somewhere else whenever he wants! He's being a stubborn dork about this, even more than Karkat is, and the most Jade can do is shrug and let him do his thing. At least Terezi is open and honest about her motivations! Jeez!

"Thank you very much," the tealblood says, taking a cup of tea when Janine offers it and leering at the sugar packets with a grin. Terezi folded her wings away earlier, tucked away like a captchalogue cards in a sylladex, and Janine doesn't appear to suspect a thing, bustling around and offering hot beverages with shining eyes.

"Oh, of course!" Janine happily watches as Terezi tears open five sugar packets at once and begins the process of turning her tea into a diabetic's nightmare. The ceruleanblood has already brought everyone else in the lobby drinks, so Terezi could probably have taken every single sugar packet and it wouldn't have fazed the other troll. "I'm so glad you all like it. Are you sure you won't need more later?"

She offers Karkat the final cup of tea, and Karkat's mouth starts to twist into a sour scowl before Jade coughs loudly. "This will do, thank you," Doctor Lalonde says, stirring her own tea with a closed, intently expression.

"The tea is absolutely delicious! You really should go home now, though," Jade adds, trying to reassure Janine with a hesitant pat on the head when the troll looks at her. "I'll call you right away if we need anything else!"

It seems to work. Or at least, Janine brightens and looks a little star struck, which is good enough for Jade! "Of course, ma'am," Janine says, clutching the tray to her chest. The ceruleanblood heads out the door, reeling a little.

After the door swings shut, Terezi snickers. "Definitely a fan of yours."

"She's sweet!" Jade protests.

Terezi downs the entire cup of tea in a single swig, then takes Karkat's cup out of his hands while he's still glaring at it. "Sweet as tiny little candy hearts," Terezi says, and then drinks Karkat's unsweetened tea with just as much enthusiasm as the first cup.

"It's pretty fucking blatant," Karkat agrees. Not a peep out of Dave.

"Whatever, you two." Jade bounces on her heels a few times, taking in the lobby with a fresh perspective. She yoinked Tavros out of that elevator just the other day, and so much has changed since then!

Her space sense casts wide rather than centering on specific details, but since Los Angeles she has more to work with. She can keep tabs on Eridan, Vriska, and Gamzee in their respective positions, and she just knows where Dave, Rose, and John are, as though her internal compass has three extra poles. The rest of the trolls and the scratch kids stick out, familiar forms that she would know even in the dark, even with them scattered around this block of buildings. Kanaya especially stands out, as distinct as the human players; Equius is a twisty mess of void, Doctor Lalonde and Roxy less so, but their twistiness is still something Jade can track. Mostly. The night traffic of Seattle feels blurrier, more out of focus, but she could snap her fingers and zap a vehicle at random to her location if she gave it a little nudge, passengers and all.

No sign of Bro. Or if there is, he's outside Jade's immediate radius, blending in with the rest of Seattle's population, and she can't spare the focus needed to track him down. Rose will be able to see him faster than Jade can run through the process of elimination. But if he's lurking nearby, Rose hasn't mentioned it in the group chat.

She thinks she would know the feel of Droog. Everyone knows vaguely what she looks like, now, but Droog has been tricky before. The second she shows herself, Jade'll be ready. She can evac a building full of people now, that's not even an issue! A streamer of capital b Breeze turns figure-8s around the trailing double ends of Jade's hood, ready to yank the moment John's windy senses pick up on an imminent explosion. If Droog tries to pull a fast one to separate them, she's gonna be in for a heaping helping of disappointment! Jade'll grab everyone and relocate the instant it looks like things are going south.

No fooling around. Everyone is ready to help, and it cheers Jade up a lot having them here. Sure, some of them could potentially go off and become a worse problem than Droog herself, but by gosh, do they have energy! And that counts for a lot. Jade bounces again, her hair swinging up and falling back with her as she does, and Karkat glowers at her from where he's stationed himself behind Doctor Lalonde's chair like a prickly cactus sentinel. Terezi grins, arching her back as she stretches her bony arms over her head and cracks her neck to the side. She took off her red-tinted shades and hooked them over the collar of her shirt, so that the clouded red tissue of her eyes is visible when she tilts her head back to sniff and her hood falls back. The effect is kinda unsettling, which Jade has been told is the point. Terezi cackled when she asked earlier, anyway, and with Terezi that seems to be a standard "my machinations have been a rousing success!" sort of response.

And Dave -

Dave's still jittering. He alternates erratically, drumming his fingers on his thigh for one minute before shifting his weight so that his foot can tap soundlessly on the floor in a jerky allegro. Jade understands why Karkat is puffed up and ready to spit acid (more than usual) but Dave's whole body language is one huge NOPE. It's soooo out of character. Sometimes Dave can't sit still because he's actually a dork like that, but Jade doesn't think she's ever seen him this flat out freaked before. The on-going memo that they're all in just makes it more obvious; Jade texts with her phone in her hand, but she has it hooked up to a tiny feed in the corner of her glasses, scrolling through with blinks of her eye.

TG: t minus five minutes
TG: fmlfmlfml
EB: ummm, dave? are you sure you're alright?
TG: yeah im fine
TG: dude ur totes obvi not fine
TG: lies
TG: this is fine
TG: everything is fml
TG: *fine FUCK
EB: dave, i can come get you! or jade can teleport you out.
GG: seriously! :(
TT: If you're this distressed -
TG: whos distressed
TG: i have nerves of steel
TG: could lay down a transcontinental railway with the amount of iron up in this TG: iron man would be jealous of how steely i am
CT: D--> Iron and steel are two different materials
TG: dude
TT: Swap him with me. Roxy can hold things down here.
TG: okay hells of no
TG: just leave it
AG: Oh my gooooolllld, you guys. This is just sad!

Just. Scared. Dave? He gets nervous and flustered and worried, and then wastes a heck of a lot of effort trying to pretend it's not happening, which always makes Jade roll her eyes. The silly coolkid gambit is one thing. Dave hunching in on himself and turning roughly the color of moldy cheese is another. Jade catches Karkat looking concerned before the troll shuts it down, and Doctor Lalonde's attempts to squeeze Dave's hand when they first arrived only stopped when Dave kept being a doofus and flashstepping away from the inbound hand. He clutches his phone like a lifeline; which is no good, because at some point Droog is going to get here and they'll all need to at least pretend to be subtle about their constant messaging. Like, Jade's gonna be real, they're all going to keep texting regardless to keep everyone up to date, but Dave is starting to make her anxious by proxy.

It makes Jade wish John and Rose were closer. Having the four of them together might settle Dave's nerves a tiny bit, right? But they're trying to keep a cap on how many people are in the room at once, both to avoid ticking Droog off and to minimize how many people might end up in the line of fire, and so all Jade can do for now is sidle closer, worrying her lip a little, and check the time. Ugh. She settles on a nice friendly-yet-frowny face, and pokes Dave in the side. He jumps, one leg recoiling up, and this just won't do! He should have noticed her approach! "Dave," Jade says, and she raises her hand and presents it, making wiggly fingers when Dave fails to comply. "Hold my freaking hand and be happy about it."

Dave holds her hand. Without making a fuss or anything, which just shows how bad he's feeling. His palm feels clammy and cold like Rose's hands do sometimes, with the faint aftershocks of jitters running through his fingers. He squeezes too hard, fingernails digging into the skin, and she squeezes back until, finally, a faint snort escapes his nose. "Yeah, okay, you're stronger than me. Is this some Harley family power play tradition or some shit?" he says.

"You started it," she retorts.

"Please tell me you two are not fucking flirting over there," Karkat hisses through his teeth, his eyes glued to the lobby doors as the final minutes tick away. Can he sense hand holding or something dumb like that, now? It wouldn't be the strangest thing to happen.

Jade makes wiggly fingers at him with her other hand. "You think everything is flirting. Shut up, or I'll come over there and hold your hand too, fucknoodle," Jade says, fake-menacing, and Karkat stops watching the door and buries his face in his claws. Serves him right.

"This is so unnecessary, dude," Dave says. Liar, liar, pants on fire.

"Shut up, Dave. I'll keep you safe." Jade mulls it over for a second, which is longer than she usually gets when Dave starts talking fast enough. "And Karkat. And Doctor Lalonde, and Terezi. You're all gonna be fine." She readjusts her grip on his hand, so that instead of them awkwardly standing with their hands held up, their hands hang between them. "I promise! Everything will be okay."

Karkat emits an even more distraught grunting noise than he did before. Dave smacks his forehead with his free hand, the last of his fear evaporating as his expression turns pained. "Jade, no. That is exactly the kind of shit that jinxes us every time."

Jade rolls her eyes, and taps a thumb sternly when Dave tries to break their grip and go for a 2X facepalm combo. He's not getting out of this that easily. "That is completely ridiculous," she says, swinging their hands between them.

"I agree with the Jade human," Terezi says, lounging forward on her canekind with a cheeky grin that she can't seem to repress. "Where's the evidence of this claim, Dave?"

"We're alive, that's the evidence," Dave insists, waving a hand at Karkat. "You have to say the opposite of what you're going to do, otherwise everything blows up in your face. Like trying to shove a squash in a pressure cooker. Only the squash is someone's head, and then Horrorterrors are there, and basically no. We're not gonna be fine. This meeting is going to go completely to shit, and there is nothing you can do to stop it, Jade."

Karkat removes his head from his hands long enough to stare at the ceiling, his claws turning up beseechingly. "We're all probably going to die miserable deaths, victims of our own fucking incompetence. A-fucking-men," he says, with a straight face.

Great. Now Jade can't tell if they're dicking around or being actually serious about this mumbo-jumbo. What a pair of goofballs! "At least you guys get along now," she says, rolling her eyes, "in your new, superstitious friendship." They only have about a minute left before the meeting starts, but Droog might come fashionably late or something.
Dave starts fidgeting like there's ants in his pants when they've got thirty seconds left. "Jade. Let go."

Oooh, there's a car outside. Most of the traffic's been intermittent, but this one vehicle in particular slows to a crawl just out of sight of the main doors, then stops. Jade keeps tabs on it, adds a note to the group chat so that the others know to keep an eye on it, and continues not letting go of Dave's hand. "Nope!"

He's starting to look more vexed than scared, which is a vast improvement. Jade is a total genius. "We are not holding hands in front of Diamonds Droog. I need to be able to stab shit, Jade, come on," he says weakly.

"You've got a free hand. We're doing this man," Jade says, smiling.

Terezi seizes Karkat's arm and bends it into a crook so that she can link their arms together at the last second. "We're making this happen," she cackles, while Karkat stares at his arm like he can't believe it would betray him like this.

To be fair, Jade's pretty sure that's exactly what Karkat's thinking. She would bet cold hard cash on it.

"Children," Doctor Lalonde says, setting her tea down with a pained expression. "Please, I know you are all - excited." Her expression twists up even more. "That's not the right word for it in the slightest."

As fun as the dressing down might have been, Jade tunes right out the instant she feels a door swing open. Not the front entrance - a back door meant for employees only, located in the underground parking area. "Incoming," Jade says aloud so that Doctor Lalonde can get ready, while the group chat erupts.

GA: Eridan And I Have Spotted Movement Below. Two People In Black.
GG: im on them! i - oh.
GG: yeah that's droog :(
CG: WELL FUCK. HERE SHE COMES, TO WAVE A GNARLED OLIVE BRANCH OF PEACE AND FUCK YOU AT US. EXCEPT THE BRANCH IS A DEADLY WEAPON, AND WE ARE THE GULLIBLE SHITMOUTHS THAT WERE COMPLETELY FOOLED BY THIS FLIMSY, PAPER-THIN CHARADE OF RECONCILAMITY AND GOODWILL.
TG: yep pretty much
TG: we took one look at that shit and went like sign us the fuck up broski
TG: hell ill bet even droog didnt think wed actually fall for it
TG: then we all bent over and presented our asses to be kicked and shes like TG: shit this is awkward i did not wear my ass kicking shoes today
TG: gonna have to reschedule you goddamn kinky freaks TT: Dave?
TG: yeah
TT: As fascinating as this is starting to get, I'm going to stop you there. Not only for the sake of everyone else in the memo, but also due to the fact that Diamonds Droog is about to walk into that room, and you tend to talk aloud to yourself when you're rambling on the phone.
TG: stop kinkshaming me woman

Diamonds Droog walks through the doors at the opposite end of the lobby like she owns the place, which is the kind of gumption Jade (unwillingly) admires. It's been a while since their last encounter with the mobster, but she's exactly like Jade remembers – a snazzy dresser with the air of someone who could open a can of whoopass on the nearest victim at the drop of a dapper hat. Behind her, a woman with a black hijab takes up a position by the door with a wide view of most of the lobby, her arms folded. She's not pretending to be a cool cucumber; her default expression just seems to be vaguely disgruntled.

Droog scans Jade, Dave, Karkat, and Terezi in a single smooth glance; she doesn't even hesitate at Terezi, who Jade thought might have stumped the Crew member for at least a second due to unfamiliarity. But apart from a faint sneer of acknowledgement and an extra pointed sneer at Jade holding Dave's hand, Droog dismisses them and fixes on Doctor Lalonde as she drapes a hand on the back of the chair opposite. Though the motion is smooth and calculated for maximum 'do I look like I care about your honor guard?', Jade thinks the scar across the back of the woman's hand looks new. She's positive! "You brought company," the mobster says lightly.

In the corner of Jade's eye, the chat is pinging like crazy.

GG: three guns on droog, plus cuestickkind and i think a butterfly knife. possibly a hypodermic needle?
EB: well, don't let her stick you with anything. we know she likes kidnapping people...
GG: two gun specibi on the other lady as well as a couple more sharp pointy things GG: im not sensing any kind of explosives on them, but they both have disposable phones that could serve as remote detonators if they've programmed them right :(
TA: on it.
TT: I haven't seen anything bright enough to indicate a major event like an explosion from my vantage point in the near future. Or at least not one that's active. But...
TT: Shit. Why did no one mention to me that Droog has a void aura?
EB: really? since when?!
TT: I can only see where she isn't, the same way I can't directly observe my mother or Roxy's aura. This will make things...trickier. You can't count on me to notice if they set something in motion.
TG: for cereal? D :
GA: That's...Odd.
GC: H3H3H3H, W3LL, TH4T'S WHY I'M H3R3 >:]
GG: no sign of a sniper anywhere?
EB: not that i can feel breathing, or that the Breeze has noticed messing around.
EB: someone's definitely in the van outside. maybe Marlowe, or just a getaway driver?
TT: I may have located Deuce and Boxcars, but there's a void filter over the area making it difficult to perceive things. I don't think it's just Droog. Equius, is that you?
CT: D--> No
CT: D--> Why is one of Doctor Lalonde's void devices here
GG: what? where?!
TT: I can only think of one of Mother's machines that's unaccounted for/out of commission, currently. The one from our old house...
EB: why would it be in the middle of seattle?
EB: ...unless droog had it this whole time? oh my god she totally stole it, didn't she!
EB: that's just...that's rude! what an asshole!
TGd: dude she's a mob boss like
TG: did you really expect her to not randomly steal shit in the midst of threatening to doxx your ass
EB: i expect her to be a violent criminal who kidnaps people for kicks, not a thief!
AG: Oy! >;:::
EB: ugh. sorry vriska.
AG: 8etter 8e, 8uddy.
TT: Wouldn't kidnapping technically fall under the broader category of thievery, given that it involves stealing people?
GA: Should We Just Inform Doctor Lalonde About This?
GG: i will, she might have a way to shut it down remotely!
"We're just here to keep an eye on things," Terezi says, smiling. "Eheheh. At least, some of us are, anyway!" She inhales deeply through her nose, presumably getting a good look at the room and the people in it. There's no sign that she's using her Seer powers, but Jade just might not know what to look for. Motivations, thoughts, decisions...just how much is Terezi learning right now? More or less than Rose is able to? Hmmm.

"So did you, Ms Droog. May I call you Diamonds?" Doctor Lalonde asks. She doesn't move to shake hands with the Crew boss; she leans back in her chair, hands folded over the bend of her crossed knees. Her faint smile looks almost genuine, but she's got that faint squint to her eyes that Rose always gets when she's being passive aggressive and junk like that. Maybe Rose would be able to read Rue better through the power of mother-daughter strife experience, but all Jade can do is watch for signs that Rue might be panicking or otherwise losing control of the meeting. Droog isn't getting the upper hand here, one way or another. No way, Jose.

Jade straightens her shoulders a little more, her posture centered enough to meet Grandpa's standards, and keeps her attention circulating from Droog and her minion to each of the others scattered around the block. Equius is hard to follow, but as he moves he snags the faint layer of voidy stuff and wraps it around himself like a fuzzy blanket, so that little tweaks and discrepancies in Jade's sense of the space around them clear up before she can finish calculating just how off she might have been. As long as the twistiness is kept to a minimum, Jade can follow Feferi instead as the two trolls meet up and quickly sprint across the street, and go to investigate something two floors above in another building.

"Only if you'll allow me to call you Rue," Droog says, swinging one leg over the other idly to mirror Doctor Lalonde's positioning. For a second the two look eerily alike, poised and watchful. But Droog lets one arm swing down to the side, deliberately careless, her shoulders tilted slightly, and studies Rue with equal intensity even as her fake benign smile turns creepy. Weird how the makeup can't quite hide the shadows under her eyes, or the slight concave of her cheeks that wasn't there before. But...it was dark outside, last time. Or maybe Jade's imagining the difference.

"Naturally. You're familiar with my children, of course." Rue gestures toward the four of them, and Dave squeezes Jade's hand so hard it hurts a little. Jade's kinda proud, except under the circumstances, it's just a sign that Dave's still freaking out. Then Rue switches gears and nods toward the woman at the far end of the lobby. "Forgive me, though - I didn't catch your name, before."

The Crew member stares back impassively. Droog cuts in instead, shrugging so unapologetically that it takes Jade's breath away. "Yavari? I suppose I could apologize for her rudeness earlier. I wanted to deal with you on my own terms and my resources are limited."

"Not really an auspicious note to start things off on, and I'll confess, I was already at a loss as to why someone like you would trust someone like me to begin with." Rue's smile twitches.

The faint void cuts off almost entirely, and Jade automatically glances up in Feferi's direction despite herself; she can sense the troll skipping down toward the ground level of that building, presumably with Equius in tow. That was fast! Karkat frowns at Jade when she involuntarily looks up, his claws digging into the fabric of his jacket, and Terezi swats him while Jade shakes her head as subtly as she can.
GG: feferi, where are you guys going now?
CG: SERIOUSLY. WHATEVER THE FUCK YOU'RE DOING, IT'S MAKING JADE TWITCH, WHICH IS MAKING MY RAGGED NERVES THROW A FUCKING FIT.
CC: ---Equius killed the generaytor! We're coming to say )(i now! 38)
CG: WHY WOULD YOU THINK THAT'S EVEN REMOTELY A GOOD IDEA, YOU PAIR OF ILLEGALLY HARVESTED TONSILS?!
CC: Politics, Karcrab! And if Dave is still worried, STR----ENGTH IN NUMB----ERS!!! 38D
CC: We've got your backs!
EB: ...should we all just come there?
AG: I second that plan, John!!!!!!!!!
EB: no, no i take it back.
GC: N4H, HOLD OFF FOR 4 S3COND. TOO M4NY L4WY3RS 1N ON3 COURT SPO1LS TH3 BROTH, YOU KNOW.
CG: THAT METAPHOR MADE SHIT ALL AMOUNTS OF SENSE AND YET I AGREE. WILL YOU INGRATES AT LEAST MAKE A GOOD FAITH EFFORT AT STICKING TO THE ORIGINAL FUCKING PLAN?! THIS NEW PLAN WHERE YOU ALL ATTEMPT TO THROW YOURSELVES INTO THE PATH OF A VIOLENT SOCIOPATH IS A TERRIBLE PLAN, AND YOU SHOULD ALL FEEL TERRIBLE.
AG: Why don't you lighten up, Karkat?
CG: WHY DON'T YOU INSERT YOUR CRANIUM INTO YOUR RECTUM, VRISKA?
AG: ::::) Make me.
GC: 1 C4N'T T3LL 1F 1 SHOULD B3 CONC3RN3D OR NOT, H3R3.
EB: whoa, okay, cool it guys. seriously?
TA: hold off EB. iff they're gonna be 2tupiid let 2omeone el2e handle iit.
GA: Agreed.

...Jade thinks they're getting a little sidetracked here.

"What does trust have to do with it?" Droog drums her fingers on the table, her eyes heavy-lidded. As she talks, she reaches into a front pocket that contains one box of six cigarettes and a lighter, which is the only reason Jade doesn't punt her through the wall. The mobster taps the box open and takes one, offering the box to Rue with that crooked smile. She doesn't seem to care when Rue shakes her head 'no,' just lights her own cigarette and keeps talking. "Scratch is a liar and a cheat, a washed up double-crossing shit who's left me holding the bag one time too many, and Doctor Dienek is somehow worse. Congratulations. You're practically a goody two-shoes in comparison. That's not trust – that's common sense."

"Oh, yeah, we're fucking saintly," Karkat says, which is not in the plan at all. They're supposed to be letting Doctor Lalonde handle this, mostly because - in Karkat's own words - pretty much all of them are 'inflammatory assholes with the self-control of cordyceps-riddled ants.' "From the perspective of a criminal fuck."

Droog deliberately takes a drag of the cigarette, flicking her fingers dismissively in Karkat's direction. "Didn't I deal with you already? Disappear, brat."

Karkat puffs up like a bristly balloon, and even Terezi elbowing him in the side can make him deflate. "I'm just wondering how you came to the conclusion that you should approach me - someone who is fully aware of your crimes - rather than going to a hospital where you could be comfortably anonymous," Doctor Lalonde says, tossing her hair with a shake of her head, cutting Karkat off before he can start shouting. "Ms Yavari here gave the impression that you somehow realized you were infested with mindgrubs, and decided to set Samuel loose on us as though that would persuade me to help you." She takes another sip of what must be extremely cold tea. "True, I appreciate knowing who the traitor among us was, but it still caused plenty of pain to people I care
"I had Marlowe trigger the sleeper because it was the easiest way I knew to sabotage both sides."

Droog tilts her hat back and leans in over her side of the table, near enough that the thin cloud of smoke that trails out of her mouth almost reaches Rue. "I don't trust you, you don't trust me - but see, we're both women with a lot on our plates. And as it happens, we both want Doc Scratch to have a bad time. So I think we can make things work."

EB: what are you two talking about?
TT: I'm eighty percent sure that they're worried you're going to accidentally auspiceize between Karkat and Vriska.
CG: OH. MY GOD.
AG: Ugh! Do I look like I h8ve standards that low to you people?
AG: I'll have you know I have incredibly high standards now!
EB: uhhhhh, okay then. no, that's not going to be a thing, guys.
AC: :33 < ac updates the google doc quadrant shipping spec chart, tapping her tablet in anticipation
TG: whoa shit, there sa doc for that? sign me the f up AC: :33 < just a mewment! i'll send an invite!
CG: YOU BOTH STOP THAT.
AC: :33 < nefur!
CC: Anyway, still coming over! 3B) Don't worry aboat it! We won't mess anyfin up.
CC: Whale just be...hanging out.
CG: GODDAMMIT FEFERI. YOU COULD TAKE EVERY SINGLE COMIC BOOK EVER WRITTEN, STACK ALL 200,000 MILES OF THEM IN A TOWER LONG ENOUGH TO REACH THE FUCKING MOON, AND YET IF YOU HAD THE WORD 'HATE' PAINTED ON EVERY PAGE IN THEM IT STILL WOULDN'T EQUAL A FRACTION OF THE HATE I FEEL ABOUT THAT PLAN.
CC: Dave, do you think this is a good plan?
CC: Dave? 38(
TG: i like the plan better where none of this happened in the first place TG: instead of this TG: all of this
TG: its like a trainwreck in slow motion with mmm whatcha say playing over and over for the rest of eternity as we slowly fade to greyscale
TG: you know
TG: as you do
EB: uh.
CG: GOD FUCKING DAMMIT, FINE, GET IN HERE FEFERI. DAVE NEEDS FUCKING MORAL SUPPORT OR SOMETHING AND JADE'S HAND HOLDING GAMBIT IS NOT CUTTING IT.

"Or," Droog finishes, idly, "you could simply set your precocious little youths on me, and hand me over to receive the justice I so rightfully deserve for as long as the police can hold me." There's enough acid in her voice to neutralize lithium diisopropylamide. "Scratch and the Felt won't stop, though. Their disturbing obsession with this pack of hellions is the only damn thing they're consistent about."

"I'm aware." Doctor Lalonde sits up a little, which puts her a little closer to Droog than Jade is really willing to allow; Jade sends a spark of green to tug at the back of Rue's dress, sinking into the thread and giving Jade an instant handhold in case something is wrong. Doctor Lalonde doesn't acknowledge the faint tug; she stays intent on Droog. "Really, I wouldn't have bothered to prolong this conversation any longer than necessary if that weren't the case. You offered information in exchange for the removal of the mindgrubs. Here's my counter offer."

Droog's lip tightens, a little of her creepy smile fading into a coldness that's a lot scarier. "Information about the Felt is all well and good," Rue continues, ignoring the cool stare. "But if I understand correctly, you would leave with two colleagues freed of their little problems. If you turn on the children the moment the surgery is completed, I don't see the point of doing it."

The mobster snorts, grinding the stub of the cigarette out on the table. Jade winces. "Let me make it clear, then," Droog says unpleasantly, her eyes lingering on Karkat, Dave, and Jade. "Children annoy me. Dealing with hero children pisses me off to no end. The sooner I never have to put up with you people again, the happier I will be. You all and Scratch can kill each other for all I care."

"Lying!"

Terezi slams her cane on the floor with a sharp, resounding clack that makes everyone jump. Jade feels it coming before she hears it, but she's so engrossed in pinning down Droog that she startles, which is embarrassing. Dave tries to wrench his hand free, spooked. Droog's henchlady's chin jerks up and her hand makes a beeline for a gun. She stops before getting close enough to make Jade slam her through the wall, her face is tight as she closes her hand into a fist and lowers it again.

Droog herself looks at Terezi, unamused, and the fact that she doesn't pull a specibus on them might be why Yavari checked herself. "Really now?"

"Oh, yes," Terezi says, delightedly. She leans so far forward on her cane that Karkat has to shift his weight back to keep the pair of them upright, looking increasingly alarmed under Droog's irritated stare. "You absolutely reek of deception - I'd know that smell anywhere, Ms Swedish Fish! Perjury will not be tolerated on my watch!"

Droog's jaw drops. "You brought a lawyer," she says to Rue, appalled.

Amazingly, Doctor Lalonde runs with it. "You hurt my children. I don't take kindly to that." She leans back again, sips her now-cold tea, and swaps which leg is crossed over the other in a smooth swing. "Dear Terezi is a legislacerator, as it so happens."

"Freelance, now," Terezi adds, flipping her cane up and tapping it against her temple with a toothy grin.

"Oh, joy. I've never touched your children," Droog snaps, folding her arms over her chest. "The Seer of Light and young David here."

Rue slams the cup down, eyes flashing. "They're all my children, as far as you're concerned. Just pray that Ambrose stays out of this - he is far less inclined to negotiate with someone like you."

That's - that's super touching, actually! For a moment, Droog looks well and truly thrown by the gauntlet Rue just threw down. Jade gets all these warm butterflies in her stomach, the nice kind that leave her chest tight and her smile watery. It's one thing to consider Dave and Rose extended family, but even better to know that Doctor Lalonde thinks something similar. Haha, and Karkat and Kanaya probably count, too. Jade gives Karkat a grin and a wink, and he stares back at her in confusion and a little bit of quiet agony - it looks like Terezi's deliberately leaning her weight on her cane, which coincidentally landed right on top of Karkat's near foot.

"And what do you think I'm lying about - in your professional opinion, Lacerator?" Droog says, finally. Now that she has a reason to notice Terezi, she looks positively livid. "I'm dying to know."

"Hehehe! Glad you asked!" Terezi says. She twirls her cane, nearly clocking Karkat with it. "You care. You care a lot about this caper, as it so happens! Revenge is a dish best served cold, but you still want to be there to watch Scratch burn, don't you? You think you can wind us up like little toy cars, point us at the Felt, and use us as a...distraction!"

"Shit's rude, yo," Dave adds. It's the first thing he's said aloud since Droog walked in, and Jade's surprised at how not-freaked he sounds. His voice still has an edge of tension, but his death grip on her hand is less circulation-strangling and more firm now. He looks a little peaky, but not like he's gonna drop any second, which was a quarter of the reason why Jade insisting on hand holding in the first place. Maybe he just needed time to steady his nerves? Or maybe he managed to flip a switch in his head and turn his usual coolkid attitude back on. Jade could guess better if she knew exactly what freaked him out in the first place! Now's not a good time to ask, though. "All kinds of rude."

TG: okay you know what TG: fuck it
TG: game face back on

"That's the spirit!" Terezi responds out loud. Then she unlaces her arm from Karkat's, stepping forward with wrinkles of laughter around her eyes. She doesn't stop until she reaches the table, her cane tapping against the leg of Doctor Lalonde's chair before she finds the table and rests a hand on it. "So - with that in mind -" the tealblood bares her teeth "- how about instead of acting like you don't know what I'm talking about, you make a real deal instead of bullshitting us?"

"Back off," Droog says. A dangerous look creeps over her face, making really loud alarm sirens go off in Jade's head. Karkat is bleeding, a thin trickle of blood where he has worked a claw into the vein of his wrist, and the wiggly way he starts manipulating it into something solid and sharp intrigues Jade to no end. Unfortunately for him and Karkat, fighting is not going to happen. Not on Jade's watch. They're going to run like cowardly cowards who cower with absolutely zero shame, as per Rose's orders, and that's all there is to it. Doctor Lalonde stares daggers at Terezi as though to warn her off, but Terezi ignores her - probably on purpose - as the tension mounts.

"Shello, everybody!"

Feferi almost dances through the main entrance, twirling in a little circle and smiling sweetly as her scarf and hair whip around her. Jade's eyes skip over Equius twice before he stops sneaking under her radar, one hand balancing a portable generator that sits on his shoulder.

"What is this?" Droog says, one hand white-knuckled where it curls around the arm of the chair. Jade thinks the Crew boss's instincts for fight or flight run more along the lines of fight or fight harder, which doesn't bode well. Until, in a blink, Droog's body language loosens up again, her hand falling to make a signal Jade doesn't recognize. Yavari stops inching a hand toward her specibi, and Droog sniffs, haughty and disdainful as she almost collapses back into her chair, reserving one last glare for Terezi's proximity. Jade suspects they're still one wrong move away from trouble. "Well?" the Crew boss demands, a notch closer to violent scorn than she was even a moment ago. Jade refuses to let the pseudo-casual posture fool her for a second.

"I didn't invite them," Doctor Lalonde says, a frown creasing her forehead. She angles herself enough to see Feferi and Equius better without turning entirely away from Droog, her eyes disapproving when she momentarily looks at the other four. "Terezi, be a dear and give us some space. Is something the matter?"

"Nothing at all," Feferi says cheerily. "We just wanted to say hello, and return something of yours, Doctor Lalonde. Here." Feferi beckons Equius forward, her eyes twinkling behind bubblegum pink glasses, and Equius looks like he can't decide whether frowning would be worth it. Sweat trickles down the side of his face, and Jade guesses if he weren't in magical god jammies he'd have sweat through them by now - god tier level moisture wicking, for the win.

It's not until Equius sets the generator down on the table, his long hair falling over his face in a black curtain, that Droog stands up from the table and Yavari rips a gun out of a holster to level at them. Dave wrenches his hand out of Jade's grip, drawing a sword out of his sylladex with a tight, cutting gesture, and Jade lets it happen so she can snap a finger with a stern flourish and grab Yavari's gun right out of her hand. Heck, she takes the rest of the weapons, too, for good measure. "You should not have that," Droog says, her voice dropping into a low growl and her eyes fixed unerringly on Equius. "Scratch will be able to see everything if you've broken it, you meddling -"

"Taken care of," Feferi says. She waves a hand, her sweet smile quirked, sashaying around the table to bump elbows with Terezi.

Equius clears his throat. "I am the Heir of Void. Compared to the machine you so rudely stole, I have more command over void in one hand." He grimaces apologetically at Rue. "I would like to state again for the record that negotiating with a known felon is the height of foolishness, Doctor Lalonde."

"Duly noted, my dear," Rue replies, blandly.

"Heir of Void," Droog says. There's a note of dawning, pained realization in her voice, and she looks incensed. "God. Tell me you brats aren't all switching over to some shared name scheme. I draw the line there."

"We also have a fucking rad team name," Dave says, and Jade nods along, juggling Yavari's pistolkind and Droog's assorted other weapons in a slow circle as she holds green-laced hands out in front of her, giving the cuestick an extra spin.

Droog notices, and glowers at Jade. "I don't care," she says, partly to Dave and partly to Jade, through gritted teeth.

"You probably should," Feferi says, pressing a hand to her cheek and smiling a little harder. "Because unless we come to an arrangement, you leave without any protection at all. Cosi va il mondo!"

- -

EB: guys.
EB: did that seriously just happen?
EB: like i can't believe what i'm hearing, holy crap.
GA: What Is Going On We Can't See Anything And No One Is Texting.
GA: Which Is Actually Incredibly Rare And I Can't Believe It Happened Even For All Of Ten Seconds.
GC: TH1NGS 4R3 B31NG T4K3N C4R3 OF, N3V3R F34R. >:]
CC: All is whale! 38)
TT: Jade? What is the situation, exactly? Give me bullet points.
GG: droog doesn't like us using a naming scheme, i've got five new pistols if jake wants some confiscated criminal merchandise, and also we're bringing wanted criminals home with us to get the worms out of their brainmeat :)
GT: Really? Jesus christopher kringlefucker, its like christmas!
CG: YOU FORGOT THE PART WHERE SAID WANTED CRIMINALS ARE JOINING US
IN SOME UNGODLY ALLIANCE THAT WILL MOST LIKELY END IN GRATUITOUS DEATH.

GG: that part was obviously implied, duh, karkat.
CC: I atolld you we could help!
AC: :33 < does that mean we can come down there nyow? :??
CT: D--> Nepeta desist in making that 100dicrous face this instant
AC: :33 < you mean this face? :??
CT: D--> Yes that one
TC: :o?
CT: D--> Now 100k what you have done
AT: aRE WE DOING THIS FACE, nOW? }:?
AG: 8gh, you mean we came out all this way and we don't even get a goddamn fight out of it? Such 8ullshit!!!!!!!
AG: And you people, take your dumb little kid smiley face antics to some other chat, jeez.
CC: 38?
EB: :?
GG: ehehehe! :?
TG: well alright then
TG: that went better than expected
TG: and now were all acting like assholes again so i guess everythings back to normal
TG: the natural order has been restored
TT: Isn't it a beautiful sight?
TG: like watching a zebra kick a lion in the head on national geographic GG: but yeah! i'm gonna help get everyone where they need to go.
EB: rose? what's the plan?
TT: That depends on who here is free to keep an eye on the Midnight Crew, if they're going to the lab for surgery. Any volunteers? I'll come along, if only to speak to my mother before she can disappear into her work for the next few days.
GC: I'M ON IT. 1 C4N K33P B3TT3R TR4CK OF 4NY SCH3M1NG 1F I'M N34RBY.
TA: ii'll go along, ii need two pull 2ome files from the hub and the wq ii2 awol or 2ome 2hiit.
GG: We will go, too.
GG: all four of you?
TT: Seems that way.
GT: Uh, yes! Right-o!
TG: should be fun!
EB: jade, you need me to help with transport?
GG: roxy and droog might be tricky at the same time. \ but you can probably come back right away if you want, no need to hang around.
GG: i think right now droog hates the felt more than she's annoyed by us, sooo...yeah!
TG: dont jinx it
TG: savor the moment
TT: It's settled, then. John, I'll come back with you, if you're amenable?
EB: no problem! let's go!
TT: Oh, and Dave? We need to talk, too.
TG: there is literally a million different ways you could have said that without it being the most ominous sentence known to man
TT: I know.
TG: fml

Chapter End Notes
@politicalmetrics, if you're still out there, search for 'redrofoesum' in chapter 21, and know that you were so close...

I had to cut things a little short, because in the spirit of Chapter 16 that came before, this chapter officially hit the AO3 character limit! /broken, half-hearted cheering/ From here, we diverge to Like One Sundered Star - Irons in the Fire, which is complete as of 3/22/2016. Then we will return here for the start of Arc IX - CORRUPTION with Chapter 27, Stifling Lips and Drowning Hair!
Stifling Lips and Drowning Hair

Chapter Summary

Let us give up, go down; she will not care.
Though all the stars made gold of all the air,
And the sea moving saw before it move
One moon-flower making all the foam-flowers fair;
Though all those waves went over us, and drove Deep down the stifling lips and drowning hair,
She would not care.

Chapter Notes

Edit: Some eye scream in Dave's section when Vriska goes near [spoiler's] face and starts chopping, as well as general Horrorterror-typical body horror and gore, and a warning for Vriska and Feferi being inappropriate about god tiering-via-suicide.

Make sure you have read Irons in the Fire before starting here - just like SLBTH, a lot of plot-relevant stuff happens, and things might not make sense without context.

The soundtrack for the next few chapters can be found here, but if you don't want to listen to all of it at once, for this chapter just stick to I'm So Sorry (Imagine Dragons) and Megalovania (Toby Fox).

See the end of the chapter for more notes.

ARC IX - CORRUPTION

Saturday, April 12th

Australia goes first, late Friday night. A test run. Evacuating a planet is no small feat, and it would just be orcaward if they glubbed it up on some bigger continent.

But Tethys has known the end of the world was due for a whale now. And what's one measly planetary exodus to someone with distant memories of ruling an interstellar empire, where hornswoggling the leaders, assigning a fraction of her armies to conquer that world, and sipping some champagne while moving on to the next solar system was a fun way to pass a slow weekend.

Once she shoos Zahhak away into a corner of the flagship where she can put the finishing touches on the secondary and tertiary engines and stop finterfering with the space-based tech, the mass transportalizers work like a charm. Like they're glubbin' turbot-charged, actually. The flares of space energy spike so high the monitors fry, but the people zapped out of the cities into the ark-class transport ships' holding bays don't appear to be irraydiated as they get gently 'persuaded' into the bioorganic stasis 'coons, so waterver. Figuring out how to adjust those to support human physiologies was a real beach, and they scream like wrigglers when they get dunked, but Tethys tells herself it'll be worth it in the long haul. Empires don't build themselves without subjects to rule over.
Most of their pets get swept up with them, too, a quirk of the lusus-detectors that picked up anything with a pulse or something equivalent close enough to a troll or a human. Pets are fine, whatev, but apart from the contents of every gene bank on the planet, she sees no use in making space for every single animal on the planet. Conservationists are invited to suck her bulge from here into the next millennia.

Mass-abductions are such a pain in the bass. Once they're on the move, the ark ships are gonna slow them down a shell of a lot. She'd prefer to convert them all to badass battlecruisers, but they'd need more trained crew to balance out the planet's worth of chum, and that would have attracted too much notice from ol' Scratch. Ledaei would make grumbly sounds if she cut the arks lose as cannon fodder now, when she's just talked him around to seeing reason. Ugh.

But ugh, she used to have an entire empire full of battle-hardened, violent warriors to work with. Flabby civilians are dead weight. Screechy, panicky dead weight. All her efforts to push this deadbeat planet into making strife part of everyday life always fell a little short of her standards. They'll do fine as colonizers as long as the next livable planet her battalion of naviterminators locate doesn't inconveniently develop its own sentient life before they arrive. She left all this to the last minute so that Scratch couldn't interfere. S'long as he stays focused on those brats of his, he probably won't give a glub about what happens to the rest of the population, even if he notices the transporterizer activity. He's a real piece of work and he can suck her bulge, too, for all she cares. He gets his apocalypse, she boots her empire off its terrestrial ass - everybody wins. Glubs has fucked off, to parts unknown enough that none of her people have been able to track it down so far. Superluminal travel shouldn't burn through the psionics, from the tests they've run with Zahhak's alterations, so Psii shouldn't need much papping as long as Tethys keeps him occupied on the bridge. She conchisidered tossing him in a sleeper ‘coon for the duration on the off chance that red eyed brat (they just keep popping up like motherglubbin' daisies) turns up, but like shell is she gonna risk him anywhere else in the fleet. When it comes down to the wire, the flagship's bridge will be the safest damn place to be; he's not dying on her that easy.

It burns cold in her chest, a surge of eagerness that's been a long time coming.

They're getting the fuck out of here.

"Time to fly, fishes," she says, with a claw jammed down on the fleet-wide intercom switch.

"Please stop using that hand, my Condescension," her closest, most trusted personal manicurist begs, in a tone suitably conchrite enough that Tethys lets her go back to laying sparkly gold swirls down over the mulberry of her painted claws. She has to be on point. They'll be picking up Nicki by morning, and that requires presentation.

"Wader you thinking?" she asks idly, one foot bobbing as the sound system starts pumping out something wordless and fast. "When're your boats coming up, buoy?"

The bulky carapacian has been calmly observing the ascension of the Crocker red fleet on the viewscreens at the forward end of the bridge, a vast array of monitors that stretch from the floor to the dome of the ceiling high above. Tethys hypothetically has eyes on the Black Queen, wherever she's fucked off to, as would befit a rival monarch - but these aliens have got betta tricks up their sleeves than she anticipated, and all the lurkers she's set on the BQ's trail have turned up as bodies scattered throughout the halls. It's annoying as shell and for all she knows that carapacian ho ain't even on board anymore.

Like. Tethys could fuck with a queen like that. She gets it. But unfortunately, the Condescension does not suffer a rival like that to live. Everybody's got an expiration date.
But this guy's just one of couple hundred odd world leaders Tethys already planned to have observe on the dry bridge as she lays down the fuckin' law, so reegardless of how much he annoys her, she likes to have him where she can see him. Finally, the pale carapacian turns back to gaze at her, a disconcerting amount of wisdom and surety in his button-black eyes. Tethys hates it with a visceral passion; the last person to step to her with a look like that had cherry red eyes and nubby horns and kept trying to forgive her right up until she stuck a fist through his pusher.

She learned her lesson last time. No public displays. No martyrs. Just an annoyance from a past life dying alone, the body dumped in an active volcano for maximum irony. It took her decades to convince Psii she had nothing to do with it; it helped that the two of them managed to make their own anemones while they were runnin' around playin' hero back then - some of the enemies entirely independent of the Condescence's slice of the pie, which was impressive - and they couldn't pin jack on Tethys, no matter how much that Divested woman wanted to whine. Her instincts always push her to make an example of em, but now the Signless comics are her propaganda in disguise, and she's beaten him in ways he couldn't even comprehend.

GP: Your efforts are most impressive. We had not thought such a marvel could be accomplished without the will of Skaia.

GP: The meteors should join us shortly. There were several neutral groups who wished to remain together, which required some rearranging.

Tethys smiles and waves her free claw grandly, the tourmaline and spinel-encrusted knuckleduster twinkling. "Then sit back! Shellax! There's canapes 'n cupcakes 'n shit if you're feeling nibbly. #haveasmackerel"

--

The call of war echoes.

But the Black Queen must keep her distance, or risk crossing the line of awareness. She's never strayed this close to a Waste before, and the consequences of meddling with something like that would be...unfavorable. Let the Bard of Rage play ill-fated games with the Medium of reality if he so choose; under normal circumstances, the BQ would prefer to avoid such overblown, pretentious nonsense.

A large portion of her feels that she should be back on the vast monument to one troll's vanity that is the Battleship Condescension; it's the part of her that remains tortuously aware of Skaia's guiding will, even after all these millennia. But thoughts of the ring -

It can consume you. She'd forgotten how it felt to have the urge to wear it, to fight, twining through her being. The sentient beings of this world recreated the game of chess with queens as the most potent force on the board, their subconscious minds following the pattern laid down long ago. If she cared anything for them, she would wonder if they have anything in their stories and games that deals with rings of power.

The White Queen has her ring back, though she does not yet wear it. Everyone on the planet, even the mewling creatures of no consequence, would have felt a war ring slip onto a ring claw on such a fragile plane. But possession of the ring is enough for the BQ to sense, even at a distance, and - fauh! If the Black Queen's were not around the neck of a Prospitian, in the company of the Waste, she would do almost anything to fix such a bitter, keenly-felt imbalance. Unlike that mad Noir, at least she would be able to control herself. The power was always meant for her, designed for her. She was born for this.
And then there would be balance again, on some ineffable scale. Skaia always did like her parallels, her ironic callbacks, her intricate symmetrees. There will be more glitches as the Lord breaks things down, and part of the Black Queen wishes she could rejoice in the death of this last Croaking universe without reservation.

She can't.

There are cracks spreading out beneath the surface of Lake Mead like shattered glass. They've probably been there for months, slowly siphoning out water so that a thick white band stands out around the outskirts of the lake, clearly visible from the dam. The death of reality is only a short swim away. She could warn them, she supposes. But she narrows her eyes and draws further back into the shadows instead, watching. It's arguable whether dear, detestable Skaia wants her here as witness or not, but the Black Queen tells herself that she doesn't care. If you say it enough times, it becomes more than a mantra.

The Misplaced Prospitian notices the Felt first; the Waste appears oblivious, her horns bent over a much battered laptop as she furiously attempts to repair one of the keys that has jammed. The BQ knows the one man by sight, though humans tend to look alike. Crowbar's rusty red hat low over his eyes as he and his companions muscle their way through the slim crowd. The other two she matches only by the colors of their hats; Fin and Trace, identifiable only by their ludicrous hats, both humans with grey at their temples, don't stray far from each other, though their eyes clearly follow different tracks as the three servitors move toward the Waste. The MP's colorful pastel scarves are aflutter as she shakes the Waste's arm to rouse the troll, but the Black Queen rather suspects, from the dawning look of realization on the Waste's face, that she's already catching on to the fact that something has gone awry.

Neither goes for the ring. It's the strongest weapon they could bring to bear, yet it never seems to occur to them to try. Surely the Prospitian hears that call even if the power would shatter her. Instead, she watcheshfgsdsgsuctecjaogtlaldfncoxcblbnfdhotdvdmdcoammtnesfwoedammit and backs off fast, cursing to herself as the troll clutches the damaged laptop closer to her chest. This is not a safe place to be, and to the Black Queen's disgust, the entire venture has proven to be for naught - the MP and the Waste don't make it very far before they're caught and marched off, and there's no sign of the ring falling in the scuffle. The sound of war vanishes into a dark car before any of the people made curious by the odd incident can be bothered to intervene, and the Black Queen departs in a far darker mood than she arrived in.

If Noir gets his grubby claws on her ring while she's busy keep tabs on that dopey Protector and the troll woman's efforts to snatch life from the jaws of death, someone is going to hurt.

--

Forcing Hearts into a suit that hasn't seen years of wear and tear and the occasional trip to the laundromat (Diamonds shudders at the thought) would be more satisfying if Diamonds hadn't tried this sort of thing before. It never sticks. He has only just shuffled out of the room, tugging at his collar awkwardly, before the faint pop of stitches ripping reaches her ears. Clubs totters in with an earnest look and a tell-tale smudge of gunpowder across his nose, and Diamonds knows as she talks him into washing under his claws that the suit won't stay in one piece.

Once the hats are on, it hardly matters. They go in through the front doors, splitting apart to avoid walking under the gaudy chandelier that is the lobby's worst nod to the lurid, ostentatious aesthetic of the rest of the Vegas strip. Most of the people at the counters are Clover's people, since he's in charge of keeping the finances of the casino front in harmony with the Felt's illicit activities, and few others in the Felt are any good for maintaining public relations.

It also means that he is no doubt the one to immediately report the Midnight Crew's arrival to Scratch; the tiny man rushes up to them with his bowtie askew when they reach the accounting floor, ready as always to bait Diamonds away from the rest of his annoying cadre of clerks. The windows now sport horizontal, reinforced guards. As though that would save him.

Too bad Diamonds is in a good mood. Clover has gone through all that trouble for nothing. "Not now, Clover," she says, seizing him by the hat and redirecting him toward the nearest desk while she and Hearts and Clubs sail past. She gave them very clear, very simple instructions - don't get distracted by the trash, stay with me. She had to raise her voice to be heard over Spades, but thankfully, Hearts is more afraid of her than he is of the carapacian trying to stab his way into the Crew. Clubs is...well, Clubs is Clubs, and despite the fact that he treats Spades like an old friend, merrily calling him 'boss' and trying to coax him into not stabbing young Sollux every time he walks into the room, he'll listen to her.

"Wait, what?" Clover says, clearly astonished as he narrowly avoids jamming his hip against the corner of the desk. The troll at that particular desk, who leapt to her feet to wrap her arms around the computer, looks equally amazed at this stunning turn of events. Clover persists once he's recovered, though, following hard on their heels as Diamonds leads the other two up the steps to the penthouse. "Ah - w-wait, mu'am, the boss is in a meeting right now. With, er. Certain parties. Ma'am?"

"Piss off, champ," Hearts says, his voice gruff, "or we'll make yah piss off. Got it?"

"Yeah, piss off!" Clubs adds, sounding far too cheerful for it to have much oomph.

He fails to piss off. Eggs and Biscuit are huddled up by the stairs to the penthouse suite, but they exchange looks and fall back as the Crew marches by. Biscuit in particular looks - ugh - green in the face, as though making a bid to finally match the Felt décor. Diamonds gets the impression the Crew isn't what has spooked them, not to that extent. But backing down now would serve no purpose, and make them look like pansies in front of all the Felt minions clustered down below, so Diamonds steels herself and shoves the door of the penthouse open without waiting for a response to her harsh rap of knuckles. Like parts of the stairwell, the door looks subtly off, as though it's recently been patched up, but that's not what -

The smell of brine hangs rank in the air, with an edge of eau de ozone that overrides even Vegas's usual odor of sizzling dreams. It's overpowering, in fact, and Diamonds can almost feel her last meal curdling in her stomach. Hearts grinds his teeth audibly, and Clubs' claw steals up to squeeze the edge of Diamonds' suit jacket. For a dangerous moment, Diamonds can't see or hear anything, wholly distracted by the bile in her throat and the knot where her insides should be. Something is watching them, something enormous, something she can't fight -

And just as abruptly as it hit them, the sensation cuts off.

Now, now. Thank you for your courtesy in leaving them alone, Leviathan. We will not speak again, but this has been a most fruitful visit.

OH YES. VERY MUCH SO. ON YOUR MARK...

And ah, yes. My dear, dear Droog. Come in, come in. I have been expecting you.

He doesn't look any different. Diamonds thinks that he should, as she recovers and strides into the room with her jaw set. But the orb of Doc Scratch's head and suit stand out ghastly white against the green, his arms folded behind his back where he stands by the desk. The window to the balcony hangs wide open, some of the curtains on the other windows fluttering in the breeze. As Diamonds raises her chin and comes to a stop, hoping that her makeup can conceal the veneer of sweat caused by that brief moment of horror, she takes stock of the other two people in the room, assessing them. One is Stitch, and Diamonds has to repress a sigh at the sight of him; he was so careful to avoid her before this, and now she won't even have the chance to offer him alternative employment. At least not right now.

The second is a carapacian. A botched job of a carapacian, actually - there's something wrong with the color of its shell, like someone dyed it like a marble cake with mottled swirls of black and grey and white. It has its back turned and shoulders slumped, peeking under the fall of a cloth covering the blue and white Möbius net chessboard that has been in this office for as long as Diamonds has been visiting it. It -

He turns to glare at them, and Diamonds knows him.

But the Spades Slick she met isn't half-bleached and brittle, a thick scar curling up from beneath the edge of his shirt to cut a wide, discolored crescent across his face, and this can only be Jack Noir, aka the last person Droog really wanted to run into at this point in time. His presence is irksome, and if Scratch pulls out someone else from the green-paneled woodwork, the Midnight Crew is rapidly going to be outnumbered in here.

Interestingly enough, Noir flinches back when he lays eyes on them, shock rippling across his scored face. He snatches his claw back from the cloth and swings back a pace, eyeing them warily. It entertains Droog immensely; she went through too much bull trying to hunt Slick down for the petty satisfaction of seeing his double on his guard not to warm her heart a few degrees. "Sir," she says, the faintest trace of mockery slipping in as she gives Scratch a cursory look. Hopefully the only way he knew about their approach would have been from Clover's surveillance; she has to put faith in Zahhak's void wards, and that irritates her, but until Scratch makes a needling comment that reveals something he shouldn't know, the Crew won't be able to tell how much he still sees.

That doesn't mean Diamonds has to be nice. Not anymore. She may not be able to keep control over the conversation - she never can - but she's set to endure. It's what comes after that matters.

Re-introductions, of course, are in order.

JN: I know who the hell they are, dammit. Droog - Hearts, Deuce, I - It's me, you great schlumps.

Clubs gives a little intake of breath, and Diamonds stifles the urge to look down to see what's wrong with him now. His head wound is healed. There's no need to coddle the troll in public. Or at all. "Jack Noir. Yes, we know," she drawls, dismissive. "Though I hate to say it - right now you look like shit, compared to the other one."

JN: That's the fucking fake that's been running around, ain't it? Ah, shit, Droog.

"Boss," Clubs says, his voice hushed and troubled and with an odd note to it that Diamonds can't place. Diamonds fails a stoicism check and frowns down at the troll, concerned against her will. Noir's edging closer, which isn't helping things, particularly when she sees that Clubs has his claws laced together against his chest, pressing down against his sternum nervously. "You, uh, are you feeling better now? Only last time didn't go so hot, see."

JN: Deuce - uh. You remember that?

JN: ...Shit.
Hearts looks just as at a loss as Diamonds is. Good god, and here she'd thought Noir was a damn myth made up to explain spontaneous deaths down in the basement floors. Like a murderous mob Bigfoot used to cover for other people's murderous mistakes in a criminal organization staffed largely by dangerous, brainwashed morons. A hypothetically competent boogeyman, plucked out of Boulder City and then vanished into the depths of the Felt's domain. Now, suddenly, Clubs is acting as though they've met before, and Diamonds does not like that she doesn't understand the context. First Sollux, now this?

"Oh, I remember everything!" Clubs says earnestly, and, like the bumbling fool he is, he breaks lockstep, trotting past Diamonds with his brown eyes glistening. The plan to present a united front flies clear out of his head, obviously. He makes it another step before Diamonds succumbs to sickening weakness and latches onto the back of his suit jacket to keep him from getting in range of whatever specibus the mottled carapacian might be packing. The troll hangs at the end of her hand without trying to press his luck any more. "It's good to see you again after all this time, Jack! I was worried you would be sick forever!"

She's not sure if she's going to shoosh him or murder him. "What the hell are you on now, Clubs?"

Hearts says.

"It's Jack! He's - oh, phooey. You guys never remember these things, but he was -" Clubs worries his lower lip. The carapacian shuffles from foot to foot, scowling, and the flicker in his eyes reads like...guilt? Unease, at least. He coughs into his claw, and something sparks around his fist.

JN: That was. Look. I didn't mean to get you all killed. Shit happened.

JN: I guess I'm sor- I'm. Sooooorrrrrrrrrrrrrrrrrr fuck my life.

The bizarre apology has roughly the same tone expected of someone having their teeth extracted from their jaw without anesthetic, a sound Diamonds has heard before in various contexts. She trades an incredulous look with Hearts, who still looks mystified, and while she's distracted Clubs wriggles free from her hold and tackles the carapacian in a hug before she can yank him back to her side. "Oh, don't be silly! We've all killed each other at one point or another! Accidents happen! Bygones be bygones!" Clubs says merrily, while Noir endures the hug with the enthusiasm of a corpse. Diamonds does her best not to look like she's about to start beating someone over the head with a cuestick in front of Doc Scratch, who appears utterly unmoved by all this, infuriatingly content to observe this latest stupidity. "I tried to come down to visit you a few times, you know, but Stitch yelled at me something fierce -"

She doesn't notice Noir draw a weapon of any kind. But a bolt of green runs down the carapacian, and Diamonds jolts forward when Clubs lets out a little yelp and she will kill him. The carapacian's face is a mask of pain as green sparks wrack him, while Clubs shuffles back with a disconsolate look as Diamonds hauls him back and shoves him toward Hearts. She keeps between the two of them and Noir and Scratch, bristling. Looking back to see if Clubs is hurt would be...foolish.

The only one Noir appears to hurt is himself. He cringes, smoking lightly at the edges, until the last wave of green runs its course. If he explodes, Diamonds knows, there won't be much left of this penthouse, or the next four floors down.

JN: Agghghghhh! Shit! Stitch, I thought you fixed this.

The tailor shrugs, leaving his post by the wall to inspect the carapacian with a critical eye. He takes out a well-worn measuring tape (Diamonds stifles a sigh of envy) and holds it up against Noir's face in several brisk movements before shrugging. "I did my best. You can do what needs doin'. Next time don't go swallowin' things that scar you into the next life and then go joyriding with void on you. Basic self-preservation."

This time, the electric green flare is deliberate; Noir snarls, and the carpet starts lightly smoking under his feet. Clubs starts shuffling around, a tiny dance of nervousness that Diamonds cuts off with a tiny pinch to the back of his neck.

JN: Bull! Fix it better!

Stitch simply looks at Scratch, and snorts. Scratch doesn't so much as incline his dome of head, but Stitch appears to take that as commiseration. He winds the measuring tape around his fist in a few short, neat snaps and then slides it back into the deep pockets of his suit jacket. If Diamonds' passion for kidnapping were a little more pathological, she'd stop him before he got out the door; but Scratch is literally right there in front of her, and she simply has to grit her teeth and think of what could have been as Stitch walks away. "I've got more important things to do. Like clean up all the mess you made wandering around everywhere the other day." He pauses in the doorway, squints at the air, and clicks his tongue. "Need something tougher than a whip stitch on this before you go, boss?"

No, no, that'll do. We will not meet again. Farewell.

After Stitch tips his hat and leaves, Doc Scratch stands still for a moment, long enough that Noir jitters his foot. Diamonds doesn't like how aggravated the carapacian is already; she lets go of Clubs only once she's sure he won't take off again.

Now, to business. So, dear Droog, Hearts, Clubs - did you all resolve your business elsewhere? Your halo of void would suggest so.

Diamonds hasn't been so gleeful since…no. She's not gleeful. Honestly. But satisfaction curls up in her chest, thick and gloating, and she can almost feel the weight of Hearts' sagging relief from here. Relying on those children was a gamble and then some. If the situation were reversed, Diamonds would have sent them off with false tokens of void in a heartbeat; who would have thought that hero children and their ridiculous sense of integrity would ever come in handy? She drums her fingers along Clubs' shoulder, trying to tap him into toning down his swell of happiness. Even if Scratch can't see them, he's still in the same room, which makes the point rather moot. Diamonds would have hoped that the lack of obvious eyes on the cue ball would mean that space sense was quite literally how he could see them, physically as well as in his wider awareness, but that would be too good (and amusing) to be true. "Hmph. What can I say? Maybe if you knew how to keep your wandering eyes in check, we wouldn't feel the need for extra precautions," she sighs, flicking a bobbing curl of hair back away from her cheek. It's too long now to tuck all of it up under her hat, these days.

Taunting Scratch with this is not the smartest idea, maybe. But keeping his attention here, focused on them, for the moment? She'll take it.

If that is what you wish. I only ever seek to be an obliging host. You could have told me you were uncomfortable with my surveillance, and I would have done my best to accommodate it. Within reason.

What a goddamn liar, Droog thinks, as loudly as possible.

Thankfully, everything continues as expected.

And not a word from him about being called a liar, even within the recently-restored sanctity of Diamonds' thoughts. That's the kind of jab that Scratch has never been able to resist countering. Just keep thinking that, you creep.
Unfortunately, all it takes is a moment more for Diamonds’ vicious pleasure to come crashing to a halt. She should know better by now.

And you three have returned just in time to assist in a most momentous occasion. You see, a group of plucky heroes is about to lay siege to the building.

He knows. She can't communicate that to the annoying little brats, though; not now. From what little the suspicious, picky children shared, they meant to come later in the day, giving the Midnight Crew time to set up their own groundwork. How could Scratch have known, though? Some hole in the void obscuration? Or more mundane spies? Diamonds hates how having time travel on the table upturns the board every time she thinks she has a grip on it.

They say nothing; the awkward silence, though, is perhaps more damning than Diamonds could have imagined. Noir doesn't seem to notice, but he's secondary, an afterthought - her focus is all on Doc Scratch's silent, implied laughter. His smooth head bobs as he turns away from the Crew, and he snaps his fingers with a tiny click that spins the dial of a safe, one that Hearts has never had any particular success in liberating the contents of.

When Diamonds sees what sits inside, she's very, very grateful Hearts failed. It is as tall as the safe, almost as tall as Scratch himself, a mauve-tinted triangle of white with a serrated edge. Black veins course through it like a creeping rot, in patterns that might be runes or words. The whole thing screams unholy goddamn artifact, and Diamonds wishes the aura emanating from it didn't remind her distinctly of the presence of that Leviathan thing. Clubs has been edging forward again as if he thinks she hasn't noticed, bouncing on his toes while throwing looks at Noir, and she shoves him back toward Hearts one last time with a look that brooks no argument.

Rather than pick horrific relic up, Scratch snaps his fingers again and it vanishes in a fizzle that draws a corresponding wince and flicker from Noir. The thing reappears on the balcony outside, balanced on the railing like a small, potent obelisk.

Unfortunately, they have less time than they think. I have prepared for their inevitable arrival quite thoroughly, you see.

"How did you know?" Diamonds asks. Her throat clicks, too dry. That obelisk - that tooth, call it what it is, Droog - frightens her. There's no way around that, no way to smooth it back down into her usual poise. Some things are meant to be feared. "That they would come here, I mean?"

Oh, I told them the address. Vriska Serket is most reliable, in her own way. A delightfully, easily manipulated young woman.

The presence of so much void in the near future narrowed down the potential avenues this could take to a select few. You contribute to it yourself, dearest Droog. There are some things that I have not always known, but my deductions have proven almost flawlessly correct.

Whatever they do, they will always end up…here. By the end of this day, the Great Undoing shall be at hand.

...She hates working with children. She absolutely despises it.

And if Scratch calls her 'dear' or some variation of it one more time, she will crack open his massively oversized skull and feed him every hat she owns, as well as the contents of every bowl of candy he's ever offered them. There has to be some kind of twisted irony to murdering a monster with a cue ball for a head with a cue stick, right? "Whatever you say, big cheese," Hearts says, too loud and shaky, when Diamonds fails to fill in the silence with a suitably meaningless reply.
I believe I know who the catalyst shall be. All that is required now is the...correct incentive.

Between Scratch's usual enigmatic not-explanation and the ebb and flow of the disturbance eddying around that tooth, Diamonds can tell this isn't going to end well. "May I ask for any kind of clarification here? At all? Boss?" she asks, poison dripping from her tongue once it stops being paralyzed with rage.

Of course. Alas, I will not answer at this time. It should become clear to you soon, despite your disadvantage.

Diamonds shakes her head. Well, then. Those void wards better be functional, because she can't stop herself from thinking that she has remarkably few regrets about selling Scratch out. The moment they're out of this room, she thinks she's in the mood to sell him out more, in fact. As long as they go along with Scratch until they can fool him into letting them roam the building with minimal interference from the Felt, a quick message to the brats and their guardians might not go amiss. If Marlowe and Yavari have succeeded in coming up through the underground garage...

It always comes back to this, doesn't it. Bearing through Scratch's infuriating certainty. There's no way to win with him.

JN: You always take his shit like that?

Oh, like hell is she going to put up with that. She bares her teeth in a polite smile in the face of Noir's distaste. He wrinkles his nose in judgment, but his face is too disfigured for the expression to be clear. "That depends," she says, sweetly, letting her cuestick drop into her palm. "Do I need to take yours? Does he value you enough to stop me from shoving this up your -"

"Diamonds, wait -" Clubs begins, and if he dares shoosh her now, after the hundred and twenty talks they had about pacifying her in front of enemies, she will - she will give him a stern lecture, afterward.

Dammit. How weak has she become?

Before the troll can finish whatever he was about to say, Scratch opens one of the drawers of his desk - not with a flicker of power, surprisingly, but with a hand, the other arm tucked behind his back as he draws out a (ugh) dark green stained case. It looks like it would have been high quality wood before having that horrendous hue forced upon it, and he sets it on top of the desk with obvious care.

Diamonds wants to know what's in it. Unlike that tooth watching them (and it is watching, she's sure of it) from the balcony, the case is delightfully normal. If that's her reaction, she can't even imagine how Hearts' fingers must be burning with curiosity.

Before we begin, there is one last thing. I have presents for all of you. Parting gifts, you could call them.

Heehee.

Hearts. Shall we start with you?

The unexpected laugh makes Diamonds jolt. It's...unpleasant. Hearts takes a few steps forward until he's level with her, eyes bouncing between her and Scratch with an expression just a shade off from outright terror. He has to clear his throat twice before finding his voice, and it cracks embarrassingly before he gets ahold of himself. He sounds like a man on death row. "Oh, go- I mean, uh, sure, lay it on me, boss."
Scratch is smiling. Diamonds can tell he's smiling, by whatever definition of smiling an impenetrable aura of mental smugness falls under.

The best gift of all. The gift of knowledge. You should take them to the canyon. I cannot predict past a certain point, but I can deduce from the trajectory of a certain body currently about to cross the Kármán line as it re-enters the atmosphere that it will most likely land close by.

"That, boss...that makes zero goddamn sense. Alright, I guess?" Much more quietly, under his breath, Hearts mutters, "Yippee. Hiking." She'd smack him upside the head for even considering going along with Scratch's advice, but what would be the point anymore? Without explaining further (as if she ever expected him to in the first place) Scratch rounds on Clubs, wedged between Hearts and Diamonds in an effort to squeeze past them.

Clubs. Your gift is this - your son will not see it.

When wiggling deftly doesn't accomplish anything more than mussing the side of Diamonds' pants and getting him more firmly stuck between the two taller Crew members, Clubs pops his arm out and raises his hand. "Sollux won't see what?"

Diamonds introduces her palm to her face.

The knowledge of that is not your gift. Simply the fact that it will be so.

Clubs looks at Hearts. "Can we trade?"

Hearts takes a step away, and Clubs nearly faceplants on the floor when one half of the support holding him up disappears. His claws dig a little too deep into the back of Diamonds' pants as he catches himself. "Hell no. Mine almost makes sense. Yer not taking this from me." Hearts pauses. "Also I don't have a kid. I better not have a goddamn kid."

"Seconded," Diamonds says, with fervor. Having to coddle the Captor boy by way of Clubs is bad enough as it is. She nearly blew their entire fragile alliance out of the water the moment the Egbert boy dared to call her 'Diamoms Droog,' when Clubs gave away the fact that he was Sollux's parental unit to the group.

I could locate your offspring for you, Hearts, but they are largely irrelevant, and I doubt paying child support will matter much in the immediate future. So sad.

Diamonds barely hears Scratch's next sentence, aimed at her, over the tiny whine that emerges from Hearts' throat, barely loud enough to hint at the internal screaming within.

And for you, Droog...This.

He opens the case.

Naturally, the one time Scratch actually obliges her curiosity, the actual reveal is...disappointing. He takes out a gun and leaves the desk to hand it to her personally; she straightens her back but doesn't give in to the urge to take a step back. The strong smell of fresh leather lingers around the holster, and the strap is - what else - Felt green. Diamonds stares at it in ill-disguised disgust, until Scratch snaps his fingers and the main strap vanishes. Gingerly, still immensely uncomfortable, she takes the plain holster that remains, turning the pale gun over in her hands in a cursory, instinctive inspection.

A revolver. Apart from the color and the odd texture under her fingers, there doesn't appear to be anything too out of the ordinary about it. Actually, it feels almost - decorative. She's felt ivory gun grips before, and the whole thing has the same look to it. "How...impractical," she says, delicately.
Immensely so. It only has one bullet. But one bullet should be more than enough, if you play your cards right.

And I do think that I have.

Whatever. When the shit hits the fan, one bullet could make a minuscule difference, if she can be bothered to use a gun that might shatter under her own grip. Honestly. Diamonds shucks the grey holster and stows the cue revolver in one of her spare body holsters. What can it hurt?

No, no. Bad question. She strikes out the thought and clenches her jaw. Scratch could have any number of motivations behind giving her this. Keeping it might be playing into yet another one of his usual bullhonkey - but tossing it away in a building full of professional criminals would be putting another weapon in the hands of the Felt when it all goes down.

In the end, the instinct to keep as many weapons on her person as possible wins out. She folds her arms, the weight of the gun pressing against her side. Clubs has his lip between his teeth, like he wants to beg just to be able to see the gun really quick. Noir is eyeing her with a similar expression, longing warped with scars, and she folds her arms a little tighter, nostrils flaring with disdain. The carapacian snaps his teeth and turns to hassle Scratch.

JN: And what about me?

I would never be so ungracious a host as to forget you, Jack. In addition to the clothes on your back and the stitch in your side - another gift of knowledge.

The ring you seek will be revealed soon, as will your double. You may be tempted to kill your double. But in this case, it may be inadvisable to stick around long enough to do so. You'll have a far more important challenger to deal with.

Spades. He's talking about Spades, and Diamonds has no way to check in with Yavari or Marlowe from here. Her fingers twitch, and she almost closes them into a fist. Steady, steady. Noir deflates, apparently less than enthused by the fact that he didn't get a gun, too.

JN: The whole enigmatical thing? Is total bullshit. Jus' wanted to let you know that.

"Yup," Hearts says, nodding with a look of genuine sympathy. He's going soft in old age or something, clearly.

I am only enigmatic from your perspective. Someone else with more awareness of the greater implications of this conversation would understand exactly what my ultimate intentions are.

But you are not them. How frustrating that must be.

Heehee.

Haahaa.

Hoohoo.

And with that, and a flick of his wrist, the cloth covering the twining chessboard flies off, folding in midair to land neatly over the back of a chair. Diamonds is far, far more preoccupied by the faintest flicker - god, maybe she's hallucinating or - but she could swear there's a shadow of teeth within the cue ball of Doc Scratch's head, stretching from one side of his not-a-face to another like a skeleton grin.
She seizes Clubs by the arm, Hearts by the ear, and backs them out of the room so fast there isn't even time for Noir to finish doing a double take and yell at them to wait up. She slams the door shut behind them and by now Hearts has processed what they just saw, and joins her in dragging Clubs away through the financial floor faster than they've ever gone before. Shit. Dammit. "If I never hear a laugh like that again, it'll be too damn soon. Let's get outta here, Di," Hearts says, only a hair off from pleading, and she nods, mouth too dry to make words.

"Wait, guys!" Clubs protests, kicking his feet in the air whenever Hearts or Diamonds lifts too high on their end to try to keep walking. "What about Jack?"

"*F*uck that guy," Diamonds says coldly, and as they sweep down the stairwell, she can't squash the feeling that every Felt member in the room is watching her go.

--

Spades isn't much of one for second guessing himself. That kind of shit is for pansies, and he's done his best to discourage it in his new and questionably improved crew. There are a couple he didn't get around to giving a pep talk to, due to the fact that his pep talks involve inspirational stabblings and some people act like getting a teeny tiny stab wound is the end of the goddamn world. He'd have stabbed his way through the Heir of Void to get to the one wind hero kid who really needs to grow a backbone, but it turns out Spades likes his shell to stay on right-side out. The Wimpy Vagabond has both PM and the space witch watching his back whenever Spades sneaks past the Knight of Time to get at him, and that's just plain annoying. He's not sure where the other carapacians stand in relation to his gang, but PM and AR both tagged along on this trip fully intending to get right in the thick of it, so he counts them as extra bodies to throw at the Felt. As long as the democracy fetishist doesn't wander in between Spades and somebody in dire need of perforation, he doesn't give a shit.

At least the Heart girl can give Vantas a run for his nubs. And if Spades never sees the White Queen again, he'll be as happy as Hearts at a bank heist.

Anyway. When the big day comes, Spades leaves his second and third in command in charge of the new recruits and sticks with his old gang. Rose and Vantas are damn well grown up enough to run their own circuit, and they have the oldest Lalonde and Strider to keep them from getting tossed out of bars or some shit like that. Without something to give him that extra edge (something like a ring - gah, not thinking about it) Spades doesn't want to get tossed around by a bunch of asshole god kids. Hopefully they won't make too many amateur hour mistakes, like trying to take an ex-Villein into a mob fight. Spades thinks he's made himself clear on the subject, but these guys…aren't the sharpest cards in the deck, sometimes, and the Harley girl assumes that just because she's the big space player on the board that she can snap the useless ones to safety without consequences. Dragging them along isn't worth it in the first place. But when Spades starts agreeing with the Thief of Light, Vantas gets shouty; he takes off with Diamonds, Hearts, and Clubs. For old times' sake, to escape the yelling, and to keep an eye on Di in case she gets twitchy on the trigger finger. Running the Crew for so long's gone to her head.

Case in fuckin' point: she insists on Spades going in all stealth with her two favorite thugs, instead of guns blazing with the rest of the Crew. This is, in fact, total horseshit, and Spades goes into the hidden compartment in the trunk of the car kicking and gnashing his teeth. He chews his way through the upholstery in under ten minutes, lifts his head to snarl at the two wannabes, and freezes when he sees that the human man - *Tweety-bird? Sparrow? Some kind of feathery name - has a gun trained roughly in the direction of Spades's face. Apparently, eating the furniture is noisy enough to give even pushovers like these two humans an idea of when an escape is in progress.

Sour, Spades snaps his teeth and scrambles the rest of the way out of the hole until he's most of the way upright, glaring daggers at the flunky and daring him to actually shoot.

SS: Bwagh!

SS: Aight, where are we? We in?

"Stay down," Tweety-bird says, taking his eyes off Spades to scan the garage around them. The human woman in carapacian-like wrappings stays focused on maneuvering the car to an empty spot tucked between two pillars, with an enormously oversized truck between them and the wide vantage point of the ramp in case of a stickup. "We don't move until we have word from Lady Droog."

That. Yeah, that's what happens when you let Diamonds put on fucking airs. Eurgh. Spades doesn't bite the stooge's hand until the gun comes off along with a couple fingers, but only 'cause his carapace is crawling too much at the skeeviness of it all. He itches to get away from these poor, deluded saps, and starts making a move for one of the door handles.

SS: That shit's not normal, you know. Why am I not surprised Diamonds decides to go on a power trip the second she gets left in charge?

SS: Just lemme out and I'll go do my thing. The coast's damn well clear enough.

A second gun swings back almost a full 180 degrees and cocks inches from his head. "No," Yavari (there, he remembers that one) says, flatly, not even looking back at him as she reverses and parks the car between the lines. "Wait."

One gunshot to the brain, he might be able to shrug off; depends on how good Karkat's word is. Two's probably pushin' it. Pfah - he gets zero fucking respect around here. Working up a good, pissed off hiss low in his throat, Spades starts spinning a knife in one hand and scoping out the garage on his own time. Judging from the downright ridiculous machines scattered around them, this is one of Clubs's cesspits. Half of them are probably hotwired to blow if you're not careful. That guy wouldn't know subtle if it rammed him in the stomach at ninety miles an hour.

Lucky for Tweety-bird - nah, it starts with a 'r,' doesn't it? - the burner phone on front dash of the car beeps before Spades gets intolerably bored, and both humans go to tap the screen at the same time, fingers brushing. They trade looks of significance, and Spades almost vomits all over the ruined upholstery. He settles for miming self-enucleation and loudly pretending to gag. Does Diamonds know what her minions get up to in their spare time? He'da thought she'd get all pissy, with that 'mind controlled professionalism' stick lodged up her -

The door to a stairwell at the far end of the garage slams open, and Spades nearly chokes and stabs himself in the eye for real. The two humans stop making googly eyes at each other real fucking fast, so that's a plus. Hearts blasts through the door like ol' Scratch himself is hot on his heels, shoulder-checking someone in felt green to the side and stepping over their unconscious, possibly dead body to make his way toward their car. The guy on the floor's hatless, so Spades can't even cross anyone off on his bingo card/hitlist of the day. Damn. When Hearts gets close, Spades starts kicking the reinforced window, ready to go, and finally the human woman looks at him with a tiny, resigned downturn to her mouth and hits the switch that unlocks the doors so he can shove it open and roll out. No one's on Hearts's tail, but that could change any second now. "Sir?" Tweety-bird says, as he and Yavari get out with more caution.

Hearts doesn't come to a full stop as he nods to them, taking off his hat to run his fingers through thinning hair on his way to the oversized car next to their spot. Spades goes over to thump him on the back, grinning toothily when Hearts removes a mustard yellow keyring from his inside pocket and starts popping the trunks of every vehicle he has Clubs's keys for. It's a helluva a lot of keys, and when Spades leans over the edge of the nearest, he cackles at the amount of firepower Clubs's has accumulated over the years.

Still. Hearts wouldn't look that harried unless something's gone tits up. Better find out what's wrong now, before he starts digging for the close-range weapons.

SS: Hearts, what's up?

"A fresh load of crap, what else," Hearts says, tugging at his collar until it pops the top two buttons out. It looks like it was strangling him or something, and he breathes easier after that, but his face is still red as a beat. So good for him. "That Noir palooka is here, alright. Di's upstairs messin' with all the Felt stuff we know about, and Clubs is probably going to blow himself up at the rate he's goin', but the real problem is Scratch knows those chump kids are on their way. All that hubbub about void stuff didn't do squat. Says he knew exactly what the Serket kid would do."

Oh. Huh. Spades saw this coming all the way back in Seattle; weird time shit'll do that to you. Safer to just assume they're in for a real fun fight, today.

SS: Yeah, well, that surprises pretty much no one. That kid's a menace. Who're we dealin' with, the whole gang?

He skips over the array of C4, but can't quite reach the sharp, pointy objects in the deepest crevasse of the trunk; when he hooks a foot over the edge and goes to bury himself in heavy artillery, Hearts scoops up the and deposits it all into Spades's waiting arms, moving on autopilot. Ah, it's good to have the old gang back together. "I can't ever keep track of all them. I hate time travel," Hearts complains darkly, giving a curt nod to Yavari and that guy as they move to cover the door. "If you want yer shot at that other you, most of the camera's'll be out as soon as we get word from that Zahhak kid. S'the best we can do."

Alright, the beat-red is starting to transition to the eggplant range, and Spades is no expert in non-carapacian biology past what he needs to know for maximum stabbing efficiency, but that's - uh.

SS: Are you gonna hurl or some shit? You look…not normal human colored.

Hearts shakes his head and adds a semi-automatic to the pile of goodies in Spades's arms. Then he starts stowing guns in every holster in reach, wiping sweat out of his eyes with a curse. "Jus' got a bad feeling about this, and it's getting stronger every second. Shit feels too damn risky," he says - whiner, Spades thinks, rolling his eyes - "Also I apparently have kids."

The human spawn thing? Who gives a shit? If anyone should be complaining about unauthorized genetic makeup copyright violators, it's Spades, honestly. Not that that'll be a problem, once he gets his claws on that Noir creep.

SS: Uh, okay? Nothin' you can do to fix that now, I guess. Now gimme something with oomph, dammit.

With a tiny start, Hearts snaps out of it, though he's making a weird grimace as he slaps a heavy revolver into Spades's last open hand. "Yer right," he says, decisively, and slings a heavy polearm-looking thing over his back. "Fuck it. I'm headin' out to help Di, fer what good it'll do me." He waves the two lackeys over, and as one Hearts and Spades turn toward the door while the other humans quickly take what they need from the trunks. "She wants you two outta clear of the building, pronto, to play sniper and backup," Hearts says; neither Yavari nor Tweety-bird stop rummaging through the loot, but they're clearly listening. "If you getta shot at one of the Felt, take it. Only get close if yah can't avoid it; that Noir guy's a time bomb and we don't need people dying over stupid crap." He hesitates, and Spades knows before the words come out of his mouth that what comes next ain't Diamonds talking. "...And watch each other's backs, got it?"

Spades sticks his tongue out. Marlowe's back goes rigid; Yavari doesn't look up from where she's adding scopes and a stand to a discreet black case. "Gladly," she says.

"Not a problem," the Robin guy - ha! - adds, too fast. Spades waits until the two have taken off to do their own thing before elbowing Hearts in the side, unable to decide whether to leer or glare at the big lug.

SS: Still haven't got the matchmaker outta your system, huh?

"Like they need my help," Hearts mutters. He's lost another button on his shirt, yet still manages to look constipated as he shoves a hand in to scratch nervously at his shoulder. They head for the stairwell without a word. There's another unconscious Felt lackey slumped against the wall just inside the stairwell, and before Spades can sprint away to find someone worth stabbing, Hearts clears his throat. He doesn't put a hand on Spades's shoulder to stop him, but it's a close call before he visibly rethinks it and clears his throat a second time. Very deliberately, Spades stops and rolls his eyes, waiting for Hearts to spit it out. "Hey, uh, Spades?"

SS: Yeah?

Hearts fidgets, looking uncomfortable. "Don't... get dead," he says at last, closing his eyes and massaging the wrinkly human creases at the edges with one hand. Then he wrenches his hand away and stuffs it into a pocket, eyes gone shifty. "Clubs'd throw a fit."

One day, blaming sentimental shit on Clubs isn't gonna work when they need a convenient out. Today is not that day. Spades manages a crooked smile that barely has any teeth in it, snorting at the tiny flicker of nostalgia.

SS: Heh. Sure thing. Just don't get any ideas about orderin' me around. I get enough of that from those punk brats.

Hearts isn't Diamonds; there's nothing but begrudging sympathy in his lifted eyebrows. Then he sighs, and puts a foot on the stairs. "See you up top," he says, when Spades locates a suitable vent opening and pries it open. If he adds anything else, it's lost in the faint clang of knobbly knees on metal as Spades scurries up and away.

-

He is appalled when the vent plan doesn't work like a charm. Someone's done a fuckin' number on this place, and while the main stairwell has been pieced back together into something navigable, Spades eventually grumbles and drops out of the vents somewhere around the sixth floor when the ducts coil like an ominous Mobius strip. Weird space shit is almost as bad as weird time shit, and Spades won't have anything to do with it if he can help it. It makes his head throb something fierce, and the next three Felt flunkies that fall on his knife 'by accident' get a couple extra kicks for good measure. A purpleblood gets off a lucky shot, so Spades knocks her out and takes that gun for himself, sealing the score along his cheek with a pulse and shoving the limp bodies into a closet. Because stealth is hard. It's hard, and no one -

BQ: Slick. I should have known you'd turn up here. Truly a bad penny.

- well, piss. He's got one foot in the darkness of the closet as the Black Queen emerges from one of the darker corners across the room. She steps over the fresh bloodstains in the carpet, circling around with one pale eye fixed on him and one claw massaging the shortened remains of the other. Her dress is stark black and wrapped tight around every curve of her carapace, shoulders bare and every inch of her shining darkly like she went and polished herself for the occasion. Spades has really, really been hoping she'd keep her stuck-up nose out of things here; a dame like her is too dangerous to keep on a leash. Kinda like Droog in that regard, except Droog is a hundred times less dangerous than the BQ when she's dressed like a Queen about to put a ring on it.

His head gives an extra strong throb, and Spades hastily scuttles back from the closet into one of the brighter areas of the room, in case she's doing something. Just 'cause she isn't using words doesn't mean she isn't using her voice for some kind of susurration. Fighting her on top of the Felt would be a bad idea - running would be worse. Also, they don't have time to bang it out in...other ways.
Blegh. It would give him an excuse to tear all the queenly regalia right offa her, but then she'd probably rearrange his insides.

SS: Right back atcha, Bitch Queen.

BQ: Oh, sterling effort. I can really tell that you have put a great deal of thought into your repartee, these days.

SS: Shaddup. What're you even doing here. I'da thought you'd be off somewhere killing the King to get the jump on everyone by now.

The Reckoning's coming, after all. And that only means one thing. If she's not doing it, somebody is, and only the GP knows where he stashed his scepter. Maybe he'll try to surrender it good and proper to avoid the dying part, hand off the scepter to someone who can summon the Reckoning, but Spades has the distinct feeling that shit isn't gonna go according to anyone's plan. While Spades tosses his knife from one hand to the other, trying to look intimidating and not like he's yearning to be out the door, the BQ lets her claws run over the surface of the nearest desk, the points sinking into the wood like it's butter as she carves lines into it. The other hand snaps up and signs at him, and there's a sting in her mental voice that Spades has to grit his teeth to bear through. On top of his existing headache, her voice in his head is too frigging much for him to put up with right now. She's got fighting words in her mouth, today, and that means nothing good for anyone. Least of all him and his crew of Skaia-spawned whelps.

Why couldn't she have fucked off to go commit regicide? Doesn't she want to beat Noir to the punch? Spades gags on the questions before they can come out, but only because he doesn't really want to know the answer.

BQ: Please. As if I'd do it before the time was right.

BQ: I'm surprised you're coherent. Given the circumstances, I would expect you to be slavering all over yourself, trying to find it first.

Well, there is extra spit in his mouth, but that's 'cause he's gnawed open part of his own cheek and there's blood sitting low around his teeth that he doesn't want to swallow. Spitting it in her eyes could be suitably insolent and buy him time to duck around her and find Noir first. He keeps tryna teach Karkat to think of dirtier tricks, but does anyone listen to him? Of course not. Not unless he's stabbing people to make a point, and stabbing Karkat is only a hair away from pointless. It's a damn unsatisfactory bitch of a situation - kind of like this one he's in, right now, where he has to gargar around his own blood to make mouthnoises.

SS: The only thing I'm lookin' for is a real member of the Felt so I can start checking off boxes. It's the end of the world - time to hit that bucket list. Piss off before I decide to skip to the bottom. Where you are. Dead last.
And with that, he makes a quick, inverted sign for respect with only his middle claw (he did manage to teach that one to the other Knight, thanks very much) and goes for the door. For once, the BQ doesn’t try to trip him up or reel him back in with the whip, and he almost makes a clean getaway.

Almost. But her voice, floating after him like a bad odor, sounds downright shocked, and he pauses in the doorway, hyper alert for any Felt who might come running down the hall.

BQ: Wait. You -

BQ: Can you not hear it?

He doesn't like her tone at fucking all. That's the tone of someone who started surprised, and has realized that something's gone her way. The slow realization that she has the opportunity to gloat. Anything going her way at this point is bound to mean bad shit for him and his own. Spades glares at her, resisting the urge to fidget with his hat and pull it down further over his face to cover his continued confusion.

SS: Hear what? What are you blabbing on about now? I gotta find that Noir fuck and kick his ass, too, so sorry, I'm outta here -

BQ: Surely you of all people can sense it, though. Are you…ignoring it? I didn't think you had that kind of self-control!

BQ: Consider me speechless. Or...of course you'd be the one person not to notice. This is Skaia's idea of being ironic, isn't it.

Ohhh, she's fucking glorying in it. She spits the cloud-bitch's name like the curse it is, while her subtle chuckle of amusement at the end lances the last of Spades's patience. Gah. Spades squeezes the hilt of the knife in his hand so hard that he starts digging into his own shell. This is no place to fight her - too many dark corners, not nearly enough sharp objects on him to tip the balance when she's in a mood like this - but when has that ever stopped him before?

SS: Gah! Stop mocking me! Come here and say that, dammit!

BQ: Hah. As if I would make it easy for you.

BQ: Come now, Spades. Pay attention - it's not that hard...

She turns her back on him, and there's an open slit in the back of her dress. It calls for his knife or claws like a fucking magnet, and only the fact that he'd have to cross the room - and cross her shadow - keeps him from following through on the impulse. She wants him to be a dumbass, and spiting her would be a real highlight today.

...He does have guns, though. Now there's a thought. But ranged never feels personal enough, and he'd hate to try to concentrate on aiming, or controlling one of the semi-automatics when they've got enough kick to knock him on his ass. The guns jostle and clank against each other when he starts digging through his stash, and her sigh sounds exasperated and mocking at the same time. What's he missing?! This is such a crock of shit, and he's just now realizing that his head is aching in time with the pulse of something else, something so familiar that he could almost ignore it.

And...

It shouldn't be here. He actually drops his knife, the jolt of panic rolling up from his stomach and hitting him right in the core. His eyes widen to the point that he can feel 'em bulging a little in the sockets. He'd say he was staring at the ceiling, at a corner with nothing at all - but no. That'd be a lie.
He knows exactly who he's looking for. And he can't tell if the feeling in his gut is need or nausea.

SS: …No. That can't be -

BQ: They were brought here recently. The Waste has been set loose, which, unfortunately for you, means that I no longer have any particular reason not to go and reclaim what's mine.

They. Spades staggers forward a little, his foot glancing over the knife and only just not getting sliced open while he's not paying attention. Random people with maybe-significant, possibly non-canonical titles don't matter to him, but that ring wouldn't be tolling like a bell in his head this loud if someone hadn't brought it here.

SS: Oh, fuck you, that's not what I'm worried about. Shit. Shit.

Spades clutches at his head, and his claws are shaking. No good. Taking half a step back, his eyes jump to the BQ and he sees she's looking dead at him, eyes narrow with suspicion. Ripping his hands down, Spades whirls and bolts. Hot pain slices through his foot and he swears, hopping up and down as he tries to keep moving forward and seal it up at the same time. Stabbed by his own damn knife - dammit! He tries to kick it out of the way in a spontaneous moment of fury, and only succeeds in slicing up his toeclaws. For criminy fucking-

The Black Queen's claw comes down on his shoulder like a thorny cuff, her voice a sultry, deadly hiss.

BQ: Spades. Who were you hiding from me, Spades -

He isn't sure what happens next, until much later. There'd normally be no way to tell from inside the building, in this room without windows, exactly what hits the ground outside with the weight of a creature not intended to move around without water to support its massive form. The Queen slams her shoulder and hip against the doorway, with a curse almost as nasty as anything Karkat could come up with, while Spades loses his footing entirely like a useless fuck, catching himself on his knees and elbows while the floor shudders underneath them. Even through the walls, the thing outside emits horror like an ocean wave, sucking at any minds in range with an undertow.

Brazenly, the voice of reality announces what's happening directly into Spades's skull.

[Attention - an error has been detected. A denizen is present outside the Medium.]

[Please wait. Rerouting...]

[Emergency protocol activated - Kaiju Warning.]

BQ: Oh -

BQ+SS: - shit.

When Spades tries to glare daggers at the BQ she has already moved on to staring at that particular spot several floors above, the shadows of the desks in the room reaching out to swallow her ankles and calves, and the expression on her face is 100% 'not to be fucked with.' That's the face you make when the next piece you meet on the board isn't making it to the next square alive and without thinking, Spades scrambles to latch onto her leg. Not his jazziest move ever - something worthy of that scrawny Villein, really - but instead of kicking him off, the Black Queen's claw comes down and yanks him upright alongside her as the shadows blot out his sight.

It doesn't make sense for her to do that, unless being piss-scared of a denizen (a denizen with some major fucking issues, from the feel of it) drives her a little screwy. All that means is Spades comes out of the shadow-hop kicking and clawing, because the easiest way she'd have to level the playing field will be to get her ugly hands on the ring. She shakes him hard, twice, three times, until his brainmeats get sloshed a little too much and he has to stop kicking to get his bearings again.

Which is about when he realizes they're not alone in the new room. They're not alone at all. There're tall windows along one side of the room, Felt-green wallpaper with rust red trim on the other, and two carapacians standing with a overly fancy-schmancy fireplace stretched out behind them, the fire crackling behind an elaborate, too-sharp screen.

Spades never thought he'd feel cold terror at seeing Ms Paint's sweet face after so long apart. Her pale pink headscarf's askew and she's clutching at something around her neck. He knows what it is, just like he knows who the mottled grey carapacian backing her up against the hearth screen is, no matter how much his mind wants to shove the knowledge away.

JN: Just give it here. This doesn't need to get messy.

MP: I'm sorry, but no.

JN: I'm not askin' twice, lady.

MP: If I had salt and pepper shakers on me, you wouldn't even be -

Spades is trained to snap to attention when he hears the crack of a whip snaking out; before the Black Queen can lash out, at either Jack Noir or Ms Paint - he can't afford to let it be the second, dammit - he tackles her, driving the knobby point of his elbow as deep into her side as it will go. She shoves him back too easily, her fist clocking him across the cheek, but the damage is already done. Both Noir and MP whip around, Noir's mangled, ugly mug spasming with unfiltered rage as he lays eyes on the two of them. Ms Paint, on the other hand, lets out a tiny gasp that makes Spades's chest do some funny, twisty tango, and flattens her hand out over the ring as her bright, dark eyes meet his.

MP: Spades!

BQ: Idiot!

The Black Queen squares off, stance wide enough to menace all three of the other carapacians, and Noir brandishes the knife he's already carrying. It feels profoundly wrong not to match, so Spades pulls out one of his extras and points it right back at his double. But he can't stop glancing over at Ms Paint and straining his brain to figure just how he's gonna get her out of this shitstorm. For a moment, Noir flickers and flares with sickly green light pouring out of his seams, and the fact that he grimaces with pain doesn't really make Spades feel any better about having the sucker stand that close to MP. Why did he leave it with her? Why the shit did he think that was a good plan?

SS: Get away from her. Darlin'? You - shit - you need to put that down or something.

A really loud part of his mind whispers that MP should come here and pass him the ring and that would solve so many problems. But he's been ignoring that part apparently since he and the ring wound up in the same city at the same time, and the rest of him's a bit fucking concerned with the fact that if MP runs, there's exactly two people in this room who are gonna be gunning for her. She won't make it two steps in his direction. If she throws it, maybe -

But she shakes her head, drawing back against the grate. The claws that aren't covering up the ring reach behind her, and Spades can see the stand she's aiming for has a fire poker and a couple other implements on it. She's not gonna be able to reach it though, not without taking another step back.
He's also sure she doesn't have a specibus specialty that doesn't involve weaponized kitchen gear, though he doubts that'd stop her from using the tongs or the mini broom.

BQ: That does not belong to you. Any of you. Back off now, Noir.

BQ: You're already going to die. The only thing you're doing now is influencing my decision as to how slow and painful said death is going to be.

JN: As if I take orders from either a' you. Especially you, you royal pain in my ass. Why won't you just stay dead, dammit?!

SS: Aggh, will both of you shut up?! I can't hear myself think!

As if either of 'em care. But it gets them glaring at him instead of paying attention to Ms Paint, and that's - progress? Maybe. While he's pondering that, Spades draws a gun in his other hand to keep level at the Black Queen. Threeway stand-off with a fourth party he's gotta keep safe...not good. Bad, actually. Very bad. Fucking awful. In the grand scheme of things, he's not sure who he trusts least: the Queen, himself, or...himself. If the BQ wanted him sidin' with her against Noir, though, maybe he can work with that -

JN: Sorry, dame. I'm not askin' nice anymore.

Noir stops pointing the knife at Spades, tosses the blade up into the air, and shoves his entire claw through Ms Paint's hand and chest. The sickening crunch of carapace buckling and shattering hits Spades right in the gut, and Ms Paint's eyes widen as she stumbles. The blood doesn't look right, glossy with a green shine and splatting all along the walls and fireplace as Noir yanks his claw free with a gristly squelch. The ring's - Spades can't see the ring, he's stuck on the gaping hole in MP's torso.

SS: No!

BQ: Dammit -

Spades doesn't have eyes on the ring. That doesn't stop Noir from phasing his finger through the gap, and exploding into sovereignty. The force of abrupt ascension sends Spades flying, his limbs knocking against furniture as it all get shoved up against the walls. His vision narrows for a second, and he curls into a ball instinctively in case something sharp comes flying at him next. But the second the aura of royalty stops bursting outward, he's rolling back onto his feet, gun forgotten. Half the furniture and carpet is ablaze; what wasn't smashed by the explosion crackles with ravenous green flames, and Spades realizes belatedly that his hat, too, is on fire. It takes him too long to pick out Ms Paint's crumpled white shell between the blackened wreckage, and between him and her stands an abomination. He's got no fuckin' patience for queens at the best of times, and this -

Well. Talk about a face not even an ectobiologist could love. If Noir looks like a wolf, it's only an afterthought - mostly his face is just a warped mess, mottled but with darker shadows, and stretched into an elongated, victorious, furious sneer. The wings and tendrils got prototyped in the kids' session and they flicker in and out with pulses of green. The scars where Harley ripped the space out of Noir the first time 'round burn lightning-hot through the shredded rags of the suit he was sewn into, and the prickling sensation of radiation makes Spades's shell twinge. Nothing any carapacian worth their salt can't withstand, but MP - shit, MP is -

He raises a twisted, blood-coated hand, and points a claw at the Black Queen, spite sharp on his teeth as green lightning starts to crackle in her direction. She pushes herself up out of a crouch, her claws tearing up the carpet with the force of her shove, and if Noir's face is butt-ugly because he's a glitch-spawned freak of nature, the BQ's almost matches him in terms of raw, unadulterated hate.

BQ: Not today.

BQ: Give your friends my regards when you start killing them, Jack. I tried to end their pain once already. What a shame they have to live through this again.

With that parting shot - and Spades is fuckin' alarmed by some of that - the Black Queen snaps her claws. Noir roars in fury and the Green Miles lance out in a branching strike. It plows through the wall and misses taking Spades's head off by goddamn inches. His smoldering hat gets shredded.

The attack misses the Black Queen by a wide mile, as she drops down into her own shadow, slippery as an eel.

She doesn't reappear.

SS: Don't you dare skip out on me - dammit!

And now it's just Spades and...him. See, this prospect was a helluva a lot more promising back before Noir decided to get all jacked up on ring juice; now, Spades is, uh, seriously reconsidering his options. His claws feel nerveless and weak as he ducks behind the nearest upturned chair, his feet splayed out around the disemboweled remains of a computer monitor. The door's off its hinges, but he can't leave. He can't.

JN: I know where you are. What'll it be, Slick? Wanna make my day?

He can't leave without...

SS: …Oh, fuck this.

He scrambles up, throws the knife wildly without really aiming for shit, and then bolts for Ms Paint. The knife stops dead in midair and starts disintegrating before it gets anywhere near Noir, and Spades swallows a shout as the asshat sends more branches of lightning after him, forcing him to weave and crawl through a mashed up pile of desks. The wood explodes around him, leaving splinters all up his arms when he covers his head, and then he's only a yard from MP so he stops giving a shit, sliding over her on his hands and knees with his back to Noir's burning green aura. If he gets blasted in the back now, he doubts Noir will bother pulling the strike to avoid MP anyway.

MP: Spades! The ring -

SS: Lemme look at this.

Ms Paint struggles to lift her head. When Spades somehow isn't blown up after five seconds pass, he huddles over her more, jamming the palm of his hand over the ragged hole in her shell. The heel of his palm skids in the blood and jams down on a shard of carapace, but he's busy and shit. Trying to remember if his oath with Karkat even covers shit like this. Weaponizing blood, sure, no problem. Healing himself a little - no shit. But this is way worse than a tiny little stab wound, and more's damaged here than just arteries. He can't regrow shell, and there's - a lot missing, or shattered and digging further into MP's squishy insides.

He tries anyway.

SS: I got it - I got you, darlin'. Not half bad, right? Eheheh.
A pulse gets the blood loss to stop, but Spades can already feel that stretching his limits. Balls.
Maybe he can talk the blood spreading out in a puddle around MP to go back where it came from, but he doesn't know if he can do both at the same time. Ms Paint's hand comes up to pat the back of his, her eyes dull and struggling to focus on him.

It's a warning, he figures out too late. The heavy, stomach-turning presence at his back presses closer and Spades hunches his shoulders more, gritting his teeth as he turns to look up at Noir looming over the two of them. Those wings are totally goddamn redundant - the faker's just floating along, his extra prototyped limbs spasming as his wolfish mask of a face marshalls itself into a smug grimace. Under all the green flash, Spades can see the inky darkness of the Queen's ring shifting under his carapace like molten lava.

What an overpowered asshole. That's just fucking unnecessary. Give Spades a plain old knife and a normal-shaped head, any day.

JN: Wow. Now I see why ol' Scratch said not to bother with you. You're all washed up.

SS: Would it be possible for you to shut up while I concentrate, you massive fuckface? What was the sky-bitch thinkin' when she decided to shit you out, is what I'm wondering -

MP: Language, dear.

Whoops. Ducking his head, Spades glances back at Ms Paint contrite as all shit - but shit there's fresh blood welling up between his hands. Too much pressure on all those broken shards just dug them in further; he whips back around to frantically focus on stopping up those leaks, too. He can't tell if her shell's going dull, or if it's just the horrendous lighting with Noir around. She's definitely clammy and pale, but pale's normal for Prospitians and shit, right? Right. Noir's right there, watching, and Spades is just left wondering why that guy hasn't killed them yet. Seems like a really weird oversight, by now.

JN: ...I'll do you one better. You're a has-been, and I've got a witch to find who's way more worth my time.

JN: And wouldya look at that? She's right outside.

JN: Sayonara, sucker.

See, that's the kind of snappy one liner you use when you're about to blow someone's brains out. Talk about a wasted opportunity. Green fire swallows Noir up, leaving an oddly hollow gap in the space where he was hovering, and Spades pulls his feet in tighter with a shudder. He doesn't want any part of him near that hole.

Noir's gone off to fuck with Harley, but they're still alive. Well, shit, then. Spades is not questioning this one.

MP: Y-you should go…to warn -

SS: Not going anywhere. You're fine, see? You're alright, I got you.

Fine's a damn strong word for it. It's also the best one he's got. The atmosphere in the room's a lot less desperate with Noir and that damn ring gone, which helps Spades concentrate on what matters. But he's not used to keep blood inside bodies at the best of times, let alone when MP's going into shock right under his claws. If she weren't a carapacian, he doesn't think she'd have lasted as long as this with him trying to fix her up.
MP: It did bring you back, dear. The ring.

SS: Let's just add that one to the long damn list of stupid stuff I've said that turned out not good in practice, alright? You've got one of those, right?

MP: Oh, no, of course not.

SS: Nah, never mind, I'll make it myself.

MP: Heheh. We can stick it on the fridge with a magnet, if you like, dear.

SS: Good plan. Better than any plan I ever had. I'm gonna move one hand really quick, okay?

He could try mentally shouting, or pushing through the blood oath, but Karkat's ignored him before. Dumbass kid needs to learn to pay attention to when there's an actual emergency.

MP: It wasn't stupid, though. Per…percept…r...

Ms Paint's mental voice sighs off toward the end, falling into a nearly-muted, wordless hum of background noise, and Spades panics.

SS: Hey. No, no no, keep talkin' to me!

She comes back to herself with a tiny jolt, but she's already too weak to sign at him, and her voice drops in and out of his hearing when she opens her eyes again.

MP: I just drifted off for a moment, dear. I know I'm going to be okay. She promised.

SS: Don't do it again, just - keep talking. How did you even get here, darlin'? Why come here?

MP: Mmm...

This time, when he shakes her, she doesn't snap out of it.

SS: Shit, shit, shit -

-- spadesSlick [SS] opened a memo on board Crew Business -- SS: Karkat, get your ass up here.

CG: HOLY FUCK, COULD YOU HAVE WORSE TIMING? DO YOU EVEN SEE THIS WHALE SIZED WET BAG OF HORSESHIT WE'RE DEALING WITH OUT HERE?!
SS: I mean it. I'm calling in that oath. For real.
SS: And for the love of fuck, bring your life-y one.
CG: WHAT, FEFERI? ARE YOU ACTUALLY DYING FOR REAL?
SS: Not me.

---

The main problem with having Rose in charge, Karkat thinks, is that she gets a fucking kick out of ridiculous shenanigans unfolding, beautiful specimens of stupidity blossoming like a flower of fresh fuck you. Oh, she's better at keeping a straight face than Dave 'my shades hide a deep well of inner emotional torment' Strider, but when it turns out that Equius has spent the past three days smuggling horses into one of the unused sections of the Lalonde Labs and is using the valley as pasture for his clandestine herd of equines, it's Karkat who has to be the goddamn paragon of sanity, reason, and responsibility when Rose won't stop making deadpan commentary and egging on poor life choices.
"That is certainly a herd of valiant steeds," she says, once Equius lifts the voidy shit hiding his illicit horse hoard from sight, and Karkat smacks his face using both palms when Equius puffs up with pride. Someone's braided his hair back with tiny blue flowers sticking out, though Karkat suspects that they've been deliberately made to ignore that until now.

"Why the blithering fuck were you going to enable this horse-obsessed hemorrhoid?" he demands of Sollux, who is at least an accomplice in this literal horseshit, given that how long he 'forgot' to mention this to anyone in a position of authority around here. Out of all the people packed into Lalonde Labs to get ready for the Reckoning, Sollux has no fucking excuse.

In response, Sollux gazes out over the field of majestic horses; his glasses are crooked on his nose, and he looks like he hasn't seen the ass-end of a recooperacoon in years. "Frankly, KK? It's because I just do not give a shit," he says, nodding sagely, before lifting his pitcher of coffee and throwing half of it on his face in an effort to reach his mouth. Karkat tried that coffee the other day, and he swears it nearly induced spontaneous diabetes.

Sometimes Karkat doesn't know why he bothers opening his chagrin tunnel to argue with these people he calls friends. He snatches the bottle of 5 Hour Energy away from Sollux before he can use it to chase that coffee and start hallucinating giant bees all over the place. Then Karkat turns back to Rose and the main offender himself, just in time to hear the words, "No universe should have to exist without having the exquisite hoofbeast gracing its fields. I will carry them myself if necessary," emerge from Equius's shouthole.

"A tempting proposal," Rose says, stroking her chin thoughtfully.

And oh fuck. She's going to say, 'Why not?' or something equally ironic. Karkat can feel it coming, like a wave of honkbirds coming to bite him, and by extension every other normal, sensible member of their team not infected by that strange mutually communicable human-troll disease known as 'irony,' in the ass. That's a grand total of him, Jake, Tavros, Nepeta, Vriska, Eridan, and Feferi, and any one of them could succumb at any given moment.

This is why Karkat is second in command. Obviously. Someone needs to speak for the minority, here. He taps Rose's shoulder, suppressing a twitch in one eyelid, and Rose turns a benign smile on him, cackling only with her eyes. Karkat sucks in air through his snort barrels until he can say calmly, through gritted teeth, "Rose, I will weep actual puke from my actual eyeballs if you allow this. I mean it."

"Wouldn't weeping blood on command be slightly more plausible a threat?" she asks, dry as the incinerator where all of Karkat's hopes and dreams lie in ashes.

Karkat closes his eyes and pinches the bridge of his nose. "That would be too fucking easy. Give me some credit for creativity, here."

"True, true. I give you a seven out of ten for imagery." Before Karkat can defend his honor (that was at least an eight), Rose shakes her head in apology at Equius, lips pursed. "I'm sorry, Equius - the horses must stay behind. If we allowed you to bring a veritable cavalry along, everyone else might get it in their heads to bring their own thematically significant animals along, and we can't have that. We only have so much space in the buildings Sollux intends to bring into the Medium." She pauses. "...Has Nepeta been collecting cats, by any chance?"

Equius scowls; it's not intimidating at all. Very little is, anymore. The other day Karkat had to sit in a room with Diamonds Droog and Clubs Deuce because Sollux called in backup for a preposterous 'family' talk about threatening to punt someone into the next country (Sollux to Droog) and take a cuestick to very sensitive computer mainframes in retaliation (Droog to Sollux). Not even Droog can scare him. He and Dave had some kind of platonic commiseration session last night about how nothing matters, time is a rapidly disintegrating illusion, and they might as well cover this entire grubloaf with mashed potatoes and eat it warm out of the microwave because carbs are delicious in the face of imminent doom. The logic of 'why the fuck not?' is hard to argue with.

It's been a weird week. Roxy's been learning sign language from Dave and WV while she recovers, and according to PM and AR, at least ninety percent of what they're teaching her makes no fucking sense whatsoever because they're the sign language equivalent of malapropisms. News of this development barely made Bro raise an eyebrow. Everyone has started to pick up on basic signs at this point, and Karkat suspects that at the rate they're twisting the language to suit their own """"ironic"""" purposes, they're going to have an entirely new abomination on their hands by the time reality implodes. A literally unpronounceable hell-language that would turn a Horrorterror green with envy.

"No. She has been content to have Pounce de Leon here," Equius says, relenting and crossing his arms. Everyone (meaning most of the coldbloods, bar Vriska) has learned trying to throw their weight around with Rose is a one-way ticket to pain. Equius goes for a weak, weak appeal instead. "Horses have many uses apart from their excellent physique. I implore you with the strongest of feelings -"

"Absolutely fucking not," Karkat says, flatly.

"I'm afraid Karkat speaks for both of us," Rose says, shaking her head again. "We simply cannot risk the chance that Vriska will want to bring along a legion of spiders."

"He is in possession of vast quantities of bees," Equius retaliates, jerking his chin at Sollux.

Sollux splutters into his new can of soda. The troll is a fucking mess, and if Aradia wasn't perpetually off pulling enigmatic time pixie bullshit, Karkat would have strong words with her about monitoring her moirail's completely bugfucked caffeine intake. Karkat's getting pusher pangs just from standing too close to Sollux, in a literal way. "Oh, wow," Sollux says. "Way to throw me under the buth, jackathth. My beeth are already in the Medium, I'll have you know -"

"Hive you know," Rose murmurs. Karkat screams on the inside. One day all this built up mental anguish-noise is going to burst out of his mouth and deafen everyone in a fucking five-mile radius in a Vast Vociferation, and they'll all be stuck communicating with Dave's hell-dialect and text messages for the rest of their days.

"- and they're the only reathon you're even still alive, so don't shit on the beeth!" Sollux finishes, his hair standing on end with static electricity.

"The horses could also save lives," Equius says, and Sollux looks ready to have a literal stroke. Karkat's not far behind.

"There will be no transportation of livestock along with us into the game." Rose steps gingerly in between Equius and Sollux, and Karkat sidles in after her, mostly focused on trying to confiscate another bottle of 5 Hour Energy that Sollux thinks he's being sneaky about. Kanaya took everyone with any amount of fucking self-control aside early on and started deputizing them as her personal army of mediators. She only called in Karkat during the second wave of recruitment, when it became clear that none of them have an ounce of self-control. "If you ask Calliope, you may see if she's already recreating horses in her reality. Otherwise, I would be more afraid that these horses would die horribly in the game on the way there. You don't want that, right?"

Equius would probably defend these fucking horses with his fucking life. But he backs down, harrumphing, and strokes the nose of one of the horses that comes over to investigate the goings on. Up close, its eyes are those of a vessel of an ancient horror that wants to chew grass and scatter enemies like vermin beneath its ponderous hooves. Karkat does not say any of this out loud. Either Equius will be offended and break him like a dried up airplane pretzel stick, or he'll use it as another argument for turning Sburb into some freakish Horse Simulator 2016.

Fuck, no. 2014. Fuck. Karkat needs to keep his thinkpan straight, or he's going to be as much of a mess as Dave.

"Then I will run with them one last time," Equius says, announcing it like it's the end of the fucking world (ha), but it's marginally less than hilarious because Karkat has caught on to when this motley crew of assholes is covering up genuine sadness. He kind of hates himself for noticing that stuff, these days. They're all miserable sacks of shit. Except Vriska, but also: fuck Vriska.

Equius takes off to go herd the horses around the valley, his braid and his hood flying out behind him until Karkat's eyes get hit with a faint buzz of look away, and Rose sighs, looking very small even as she accepts a glass of tea that Arthour has brought out of the labs on a serving tray. Most of the lusii that are still alive got rounded up at the last minute, and to absolutely no one's surprise (least of all Karkat's) they've been fucking useless as far as maintaining an atmosphere of peace and goddamn quiet. Equius and Nepeta's stay in the valley - which is a shame, because Arthour is actually tolerable and not a raging, territorial, half-sentient mess - but Crabdad ended up permanently banished to the rooftop pool area after it tried to investigate Tinkerbull via ingestion.

A disturbing number of them are dead or otherwise unreachable, though. Aradia, Sollux, Kanaya, and Vriska all shrugged when asked. Eridan looked guilty for a fleeting second before explaining his lusus got shipped off to a reservation when he had a breakdown. Terezi cackled at Karkat's face, and Gamzee just looks blank whenever anyone mentions the subject. Feferi's lusus is a literal Horrorterror and thus uninvited from any and all family reunions for the rest of forever.

Oh yeah, they're a real smorgasbord of issues. When Arthour tries to offer Sollux a glass of water, Karkat allows it. "We should have tried to save more," Rose murmurs, her hair falling forward to shadow her face.

Karkat rolls his eyes. "Watch. It'll turn out our uselessness in the face of global annihilation will once again be the reason why we're the alpha timeline, or some fucked upuckery like that." It probably says something that he's genuinely tempted to give her a firm, platonic pap on the back - but again, he's trying not to contribute to the clusterfuck of hormones and relationship issues beyond those he's already involved in.

She brightens on her own, her eyes closed as she smiles into her tea. "True. Aradia has implied as much. Isn't it simply wretched?"

-

The morning they're due to leave for Las Vegas, these dumbasses won't wake up.

Rose is up at the crack of dawn, smiling Vriska into restless submission when Karkat stumbles into the chosen apartment of the day. John forges through the kitchen in a bleary daze, passes Karkat coffee with his eyes still halfway welded shut by sleep, and almost plows into the table as he goes to slump on the counter again. Karkat doesn't have the heart to tell him he's got his shirt on backwards - apparently his pale grooming instincts don't kick in until he's all the way awake. No one got much sleep last night; Karkat tried to rope Doctor Lalonde into helping enforce some kind of curfew, with AR as his deputy, but she fucked back off to the labs early to check in with her people one last time, and Bro only agreed to intervene when the despair-induced movie marathon/pool party crept towards two in the morning. They were all keyed up on adrenaline, and now they're all suffering. What else is new? Suffering is Karkat's middle fucking name, these days.

But they have to go at some point, so after sitting and mournfully contemplating his coffee for a whole minute, Karkat knocks Vriska's arm and ignores the flash of warning teeth she shoots him in reply. "Come on and help me kick the rest of these fucks out of bed."

He asks because Vriska can be almost as loud and obnoxious as him when she gets amped up - almost, thanks very much - like the decibel-based kindred spirit he never wanted. Sure enough, Vriska stops baring her teeth and perks up with smug, radiating delight, because whenever anyone so much as hints at giving her authority, she finds a way to stroke her own bulge over it. "Ha! No problem!" she says, and Karkat catches a split second of John's sympathetic grimace before the ceruleanblood catapults out of her seat and drags Karkat into the hallway.

She makes a beeline for the stairs, cackling, before Karkat's common sense decides to join the world of the living. "Go get Eridan up, and Terezi. Feferi if you can find her," he orders quickly, because he's not awake enough to deal with the shit that would hit the rotating air device if Vriska barged in on Equius, or the chunky salsa carnage if she found Tavros on his own.

Vriska swings around to pout at him. "Whaaaaaaaat? What did I do? What's with that face?"

"You know what you would do, you overcocked nubfucker. If you find Jake or Jane or whatever, wake them up too. Or is that too hard to manage?" It works, barely; Vriska tosses her hair and mutters something about 'showing him,' but Karkat tunes her out to focus on tracking down the rest of the Lazy Fuck brigade before she can. They aren't spread out through the apartment complex anymore; sleeping arrangements contracted over time, and he doesn't have to stomp around to too many doors before he starts picking up on pulses. Kanaya and Rose's door hangs open, and Kanaya nods at him from where she's kneeling in the sun, makeup sealed and arms deep in a suitcase full of fabric and other supplies. There are packets of blood tucked away with ice packs where only Karkat can sense them. It probably would have been smarter to recruit her than Vriska, but when has Karkat ever been smart about this?

Next he finds Equius and Nepeta; while Nepeta lays curled up on the couch with her lusus beside her, both purring like a car engine, Equius is packing his things with care. He's got more metal than Kanaya, including heavy objects shaped like arms and legs if Karkat squints, which sets visions of amputated limbs dancing through his thinkpan. Karkat mumbles something about waking Nepeta up, but Equius gives him a look that screams 'the horse thing will never be forgiven, and my reproach will last a thousand years,' so Karkat turns and walks right back out the door to find Tavros next - he got exiled by cat allergies, but he can't have gone far.

Instead, He finds Dave. Or should he say, he finds Dave, his merry band of carapacians, and their bottomless pile of co-conspirators in hopefully platonic cuddles. When Karkat shoves the door open the room is too dark and the blinds are pulled shut with a singular purpose: to let these fucks sleep in as long as possible. The Food Network plays on mute in the background, Guy Fieri munching his way through a hamburger no mortal should be able to open their jaws wide enough to consume, and when Karkat barges over to kick them all awake, Roxy pops up her head from where she's using Jake's stomach as a pillow to blink at Karkat and starts making grandiose 'come hither' motions. He doesn't need apartment-osmosis sign language knowledge to recognize that one.

Mostly, he's appalled at the human display of pale decadence before him. Dave, Jake, Jane, Roxy, WV, PM, and Terezi - who should know better than to partake in these shenanigans, dammit - and Karkat's used to Jade, Rose, and Dave piling all over John by now, but this is just ridiculous. They have places to go, people to beat the ever-loving fuck out of. "Wake up!" he shrieks, storming toward the window. "Oh my fuck, you assholes, we need to leave in two hours!" A hand swipes at his ankle - either Roxy or Dave; he can't tell whose arm it's attached to - and he sidesteps it, jumps over Terezi's cane when it comes swinging at the backs of his knees, and then shreds the blinds with his bare claws. They've already laid waste to half the apartments in this complex, what's one more fucked up window? Terezi hisses and almost chokes on her own drool, and the light of the early morning sun sets the whole pile of debauchery off in a round of grumbles and quiet swear words. Only PM has the decency to sit up, looking bright eyes and alert right from the get go. WV rolls over, making nonsense clicking noises, and Dave rolls over to free his cape and toss it over everyone's eyes like some kind of diabolical fuck. "DO NOT FUCK WITH ME TODAY, DAVE!" Karkat screeches. "We're leaving with or without you! You can stay with Sollux and be totally useless some other day, when we're not about to be total fucking badass motherfuckers and feed criminal scum an entire truckload of hats!"

Karkat swells, and starts climbing onto the armrest of the nearest couch to line up for an elbow drop square in Dave's exposed stomach region. "What, Dave. Go on. Enlighten me," he says as he surveys their huddle from above and tries to decide what angle would be least likely to end with him getting impaled by Terezi's cane.

One of the bedroom doors off the main room opens, and when Karkat looks up, a second Dave leans out, toothbrush sticking out of his mouth at an angle.

Karkat stares. The other Dave stares back. A Terezi leans out the doorway behind him, using her cane to come to a stop before she falls flat on her face.

"Right. "Well, I'll just go fuck myself, then," Karkat says, talking mostly to the ceiling, because the ceiling has yet to abuse self-destructive time powers to fucking sass him today (it's still early yet), and then jumps off the couch and walks right back out of the room to find Tavros. Jake is semi-conscious and army-crawling toward the shadows of the couch by the time Karkat leaves, and that's victory enough.

God, is he tired.

Tavros is up on the roof, wide awake and feeding Crabdad enough roe cubes to gorge the fucker to bursting so that it'll ignore Tinkerbull curled up in Tavros's lap. According to him, Aradia was around until ten seconds before it would have been convenient to see her. Becquerel's flopped over by the side of the wheelchair, stretched out in the sun, and barely flicks its tail when Karkat has to sidestep Crabdad's attempt to smother him with its big, meaty claws. He returns to the chosen kitchen feeling somehow cheated of any sense of accomplishment. This time Rose hands him a new cup of coffee; John's too busy coordinating a mass breakfast relay with Jade on auto-pancake flipping duty. Kanaya plates everything the second it comes off the griddle. Rose's only responsibility appears to be monitoring the coffee and tea stations, which Karkat can approve of. "Is everyone up?" she asks, as Karkat nosedives into the coffee mug.

"Everyone who isn't MIA," he reports, after letting the coffee sit on his tongue for a moment. He's awake, now, but at what cost? "Aradia's fucked off again, what else is new."

Then he almost chokes on his own spit. "John, have you seen -"

"Here!" John calls, using an honorary spatula to point at the floor behind the kitchen partition. When Karkat leans over, Gamzee gives him a thumbs up from where he's sprawled out on the kitchen floor. John and Jade are both floating to avoid stepping on the silly fucker. "Also, don't tell Terezi, but we used up all the cherries for milkshakes the other night, so all we have is a blueberry compote, whipped cream, chocolate chips, and syrup. If she's gonna be picky, she has to go get her own dang cherries."

"She'll probably just crunch up red chalk and use that as a topping instead," Karkat says, rolling his eyes. Troll stomachs can take a lot of shit, but Terezi is on another fucking level, both in terms of overall capacity and tolerance for consuming the inedible. He doubts dying of food poisoning would be a heroic or just death, either, so she's probably set for life. Vriska once challenged her to drink a pitcher of blended leftovers, and before Sollux or Kanaya could intervene, Terezi chugged it, burped, and declared it a hearty repast. "Should I reheat anything?" he asks, casting around for a way to help take his mind off Terezi's bottomless smelting pit of a stomach.

"Aaaactually," Jade starts. Which never ends well, ever. "Could you go check on Janine really quick?"

Karkat's first thought is 'what, Jane?' and his second is - "Your groupie? Why the fuck?" he asks, not nearly as vehemently as usual. Jade's irritating shenanigans, much like coldbloods being coldbloods, no longer faze him.

"She's at the front of the building." Jade's brow scrunches, and she snaps a finger with a distant expression. "I let her in the front door! But I don't want to leave these pancakes. Please, Karkat?"

"I'll just bring her back here so you can deal with it," he points out, but Jade's gone back to flipping ten pancakes at once, humming cheerfully. From the low echo, Gamzee's joined in from the floor - they're probably set for the next hour. Karkat passes Eridan stumbling in as he leaves; the violetblood doesn't have his eyes open and seems to have made it this far by sheer dumb luck. He emits a quiet 'wweh,' when Karkat helpfully shoves him through the door before he can ram into the wall.

Then he drags himself down to the lobby, ready for anything Jade's de facto secretary has to throw at him.

-

It turns out they're being evicted.

Karkat can't even pretend to be surprised by this point. Rose barely raises an eyebrow when he kicks the door in and announces it at the top of his lungs. Janine herself repeats the news at a less deafening volume, nearly dropping her papers on the floor as she shuffles to the table, eyes darting around to try to pick out who's in charge here. "You all really didn't notice the maintenance staff coming through for inspection?" she asks, coughing out a weak laugh. Her eyes are filled with the frantic dread of a troll who's just informed her fickle-ass boss that she and her entire contingent of weird friends and family are getting the boot.

She shouldn't worry. This is so fucking typical that Karkat should probably add it to his ever-growing list of 'congratulations, you fucked yourselves, numnubs' tier stupidity that they've experienced together. None of them are ever going to be responsible members of society at this rate; there isn't going to be a society to be a part of, for fuck's sake.

"I can't believe we're being evicted," John says.

Jade, having essentially backpacked around the world as a teleporting, plane-driving homeless person with zero concept of how apartment life works, whistles, scratches her nose, and looks vaguely apologetic. "Well, crap," she says, turning another round of bubble-pitted pancakes with a twirl of her finger. "I noticed, but they seemed harmless and Bro launched puppets at them when they got too curious, so eh. That sounds pretty cruddy! What a shame."

Janine winces. "Yes, er. The puppets did come up in the report. A lot."

"I can't believe we're being evicted," John repeats. He's the only one having a normal reaction to any of this, since he was raised partially with some respect for keeping up law-abiding appearances around the neighbors, and has stopped directing the food line to read the eviction notices over Rose's shoulder, looking green.

Rose taps her fingers to her nose, palms pressed together. "I've messaged Terezi and mother dearest, if that helps. But it really is a rather inconsequential development." She taps the screen of her phone with one finger, making a note to herself on a spreadsheet rather than typing in Pesterchum. "It's one less building for Sollux to import to the Medium, I suppose."

"I can't believe we're being evicted," John says, repeating himself for the third time. He looks at Karkat with mounting horror. Karkat lived most of his life in the fear that Crabdad would get them evicted, and now he can't even muster up a fuck to give. He pats John on the shoulder with renewed intent as John starts to freak out in earnest. "Oh jeez - what are we're gonna do? Where are we going to live? I've never been evicted before in my life!"

"We're leaving anyway," Karkat points out. "That is in fact a thing that was already happening. Relax, dumbass, it's not -" he checks himself, glances at Janine, and finishes, "- okay, it is the d-enay of the orld-way. But seriously. We weren't planning to live here anymore in the first place."

"You weren't?" Janine says, clapping her hands together in relief. "Oh, thank goodness."

"It still counts." John reaches the point of hyperventilating. Karkat's run out of coffee, anyway, so he hastily sets the mug down and enters full papping mode, making unintelligible shooshing sounds and smoothing his hands down John's shoulders and back with enough force to start ushering him away from the table and eviction notices. He has a strong suspicion that it's not the eviction that's really freaking John out - it's just a minor tipping point for a bunch of the shit that's been building up for a while now.

Karkat doesn't think any of them are going to be okay until after this is all over. They've reached critical 'this is so fucked up' mass. All he can do is keep an eye on his two dumbasses, wrangle his own shit, and hope no one else in their social circle has a complete and utter meltdown along the way. This is the epitome of 'fuck it, we'll do it live' culture, and he completely blames Dave for that. "No one was going to rent us an apartment for the rest of the planet's natural life," he says soothingly. John looks remarkably unsoothed by the reminder that Earth's expiration date is coming up, and may in fact be on the brink of tears; Karkat's off his game today. "Don't know what Rose is thinking, telling Terezi - knowing her, she'll probably try to enforce this herself."

John manages a watery smile. "Terezi, evicting us for great justice," he says, with a choked laugh.

Jade comes to the rescue while Rose is still mumbling and adjusting her plans on her phone. "Yeah, we'll be out of your way in a jiffy, Janine! No sweat! You're still gonna go visit the labs on the thirteenth though, right?" Another flip of her hand, and the pancakes start levitating over to Kanaya's line of plates.

The next person to bring Karkat coffee is Eridan. Busy trying to figure out the best way to tangle his fingers with John's while John focuses on deep breathing, Karkat takes the coffee without questioning its origins, and Eridan takes this as permission to sit on the nearest chair, fidgeting with his own cup of coffee and being generally uncomfortable. "We're bein' ewicted?" he asks, three minutes behind the times. When Karkat nods, Eridan looks impressed. "Wow. It took them this "Tell me about it." Between everyone practice-fighting on the roof and Vriska and Eridan's hellish training sessions (most of which seem to involve her grilling Eridan on fraymotifs, random explosions, bragging to Terezi, and pitching dice at his face until fireworks go off at three in the morning), Karkat doesn't know how they haven't just been flat out arrested yet. Terezi and Vriska are a unique combination of 'not-subtle' and 'on America's most wanted list,' and yet here they still are. Apart from Karkat, Nepeta, and Tavros, Eridan's one of those ranked most likely to get offed by Vriska's desire to be helpful; the fact that he's still alive and kicking is like a Perigee's Eve miracle in April - all that's missing is the massive pile of behemoth leavings, and fuck, Karkat's sure that Typhus will be more than willing to contribute to the holiday spirit by shitting all over them.

John's still waxing rhapsodic about their complete failure to act like responsible adults. "How are we ever going to be trusted to rent a respectable apartment ever again if we can't even make it two weeks without destroying the place?"

"It's a real conundrum," Eridan says, sounding agreeable enough that Karkat throws him a suspicious glare.

"Codnundrum?" John suggests.

"Does it look like Fef's in the room? I'm just tryin' to live my life here."

-

Las Vegas feels different from Seattle. Drier, with the tang of a city built on crushed dreams and an ungodly amount of sequins. The steady burn of the sun sends prickles along Karkat's scalp as he hangs out the window of the room, and he squints through the obnoxiously bright bloom of light to make out John floating over the side street. A couple of people below stop to point at this mildly fucking unusual sight, but they're far enough from the main strip that no one cares enough to form a real crowd. In Seattle, you can fucking bet a flying person is a hero; here, they think it's all a hack magician act or something. An entire pack of grubbrained fuckpuddles who can't sit their headquarters down and act natural for love, hate, money, or anything less than pizza - yet no one has given them a second glance since they arrived. The guy whose condo they're renting? Thinks they're a bunch of college students here to live it up for the weekend. Jade can bounce five feet in the air and suffer zero consequences for her actions, which is making her even more insufferable than normal.

"Want to come sit?" John asks out of the blue, leaning back on the heels of his hands as he twists around to smile at Karkat. He looks worried - everyone's a little off, these days, except fucking Vriska - but happy. There's sunlight making a fucking halo in his hair and Karkat is going to vomit and wipe it up with his own face if his thoughts get any cornier. Fuck. Terezi better not be reading him right now, or he's going to spend the next hour dealing with her excruciatingly platonic mockery. He's pale trash over John, what else is new. She and Dave need new material. Whatever. The day of the Reckoning is gearing up to shank them right in the shameglobes, and they all feel it. Rose and Terezi claim it's a constant tension headache that just keeps winding up tighter, Vriska looks like she's about to pee herself with anticipation anytime someone brings up the impending destruction of the planet, and Dave never goes anywhere without a sword in his hand. The guy was a fucking sword-obsessed prick before, but now he doesn't bother pretending to be cool about it; Karkat doesn't want to admit it, but seeing Dave wander around with a haunted look and a sword in hand makes Karkat worry about him.

He's worried about all of them.
He feels it knotted up in his chest, a pulsing sense of the end.

"I'm fine here," he says, dryly, swinging his legs over the windowsill to dangle in the air. "I'd rather not toss myself out a window unless it's absolutely fucking unavoidable."

His hanging feet knock together in a tiny breeze, and John gives him a look. "I wouldn't let you fall, dummy."

Only, see, he says it with the kind of wistful, soft voice other people would use to say shit like, 'Let us shoosh the day away in a pile of warm blankets and soft human petbeasts,' and Karkat is fucking weak. "Fine," he mumbles, holding out a hand, which John takes and uses to reel Karkat out next to him. Karkat's rump feels distinctly unsafe, considering there are people milling around on the street below, in broad daylight, but he grits his teeth and tries not to think about them. It's been hard to adjust to the fact that literally none of that matters anymore. He's spent his whole life hiding, and now - what is even the point?

But he can feel a bigger drop coming. Sollux refused to set foot in Las Vegas, citing the need to stay on top of his Skaia-hacking mods in case someone else kicks the fuckbucket. Karkat suspects it's more like a Mage of Doom not wanting to soak up the distinct reek of inevitability any more than he has to. It's crossing wires in Karkat's thinkpan that he didn't think could be crossed, and he's just the useless blood themed asshat, not the guy in charge of navigating their impending Doom and getting them out the other side.

Sollux is also the guy in charge of importing Lalonde Labs into the Medium, along with the rest of their sorry asses, so that none of them get pulverized by the Reckoning - if everything goes as planned (which it fucking won't). He used the ripped copies of Sburb courtesy of the Harley Foundation to slap together an app they could all download to their phones, since literally none of them ever get off Pesterchum, and there's so many ways this could go wrong but what else are they supposed to do? "Remind me why our merry band of shit rinsers thought this was a smart plan," Karkat says, leaning on John and resting his head on the human's shoulder. It's a really overused question by now, but no one has managed to give him a satisfactory answer yet. John's arm comes up immediately to squeeze Karkat in a hug, and it settles him a little. He still wants to chew holes in the wall from apprehension, but it's harder to focus on. Less overwhelming.

"Because we're dumb," John says, after giving it clear thought.

"Not the answer I was looking for, dumbass." Karkat sighs.

"It's Callie-approved?"

"Still not helping our case."

"...Aradia says we're still on track?"

Karkat unwraps John's arm from around his shoulder for the sole purpose of holding his hand, shaking his head in dismissal. "Aradia's idea of being on track still involves people dying. Possibly while she smiles creepily over their soon-to-be-resurrected corpses. Possibly my corpse. Again, not helping our case here.

John shrugs. "Then you got me! I have no idea why we thought this was a smart plan. Actually, I'm not sure anyone here ever thought it was a smart plan in the first place..."

"There, see, that's a theory I can get behind." John snort-giggles, and Karkat can't help but roll his eyes. "We're the most incompetent alpha timeline possible. Hilarious." Someone else starts laughing right behind his head, and Karkat rolls his eyes right around for another pass, his head falling back to thump against Gamzee's chest. "Do you even know what the fuck we're laughing about? Are you sitting on anything? Don't answer that shitty question, of course you're not."

"Lol, brother," Gamzee says, which from him is probably the highest of compliments when it comes to terrible, unfunny humor. "Heard you two getting your discussion all on." There's a moment of disconnect where Karkat is leaning back against Gamzee, but at the same time Gamzee's folded arms prop themselves up on John's shoulders so he can lean over in all his gangly juggalo glory. Like everything else, this kind of fuckery has gotten pretty done to death - Karkat waits for the moment of broken physics to pass, unbothered. The Breeze under his butt wobbles and threatens to toss him lightly into John's lap but Karkat draws the line at floating in midair with his moirails, thanks very much; he doesn't need to give Las Vegas an eyeful.

"Well, we're better than nothing." John's hand applies more and more pressure to Karkat's; enough to make his bones twinge ominously, but not (quite) enough for Karkat to pipe up about it. "We could be doing more, I mean. Getting people together for Jade to bring along, or Sollux -"

"Now that would get us doomed! I'm not even the doomy person, and I can tell you that for facts!" A figure in red and white and grey and black slithers down out of the sky immediately to Karkat's right, and he flinches so bad he almost winds up in John's lap anyway. Both John and Gamzee prop him up before he can make even more of an ass of himself, one hand a normal temperature and the other freezing fucking cold as they keep him upright. Aradia fluffs her masses of curls out, sitting with her legs folded up under her while she grins at them.

Karkat's not sure whether he really wants to know where (or when) she just came from, but his mouth motors on without him, regardless. "Aradia, you nookbiting walnut, where the fresh flaming fuck have you been?!"

She shrugs and doesn't answer the question. He doesn't know what he was expecting. "Around. Mostly getting things set up. Lots of dominoes in a row!" Then, with a solemn nod for Gamzee - "Gazebro!"

"Radsis," Gamzee rumbles back, his voice almost mild enough to fool Karkat.

Except that was pretty fucking blatant. John purses his lips when Karkat trades him a disgusted glance, looking equally unsurprised. "If you fucks are going to have secret schemes, at least have the decency to hint at them when me and John aren't in hearing range," he says. "...Is that supposed to be like irons in the fire or some fuckery?"

"Eheheheh, maybe! I thought Dave said we were calling those 'ironies in the fieris' now, though -" Aradia starts.

"No," Karkat says. She can't be allowed to finish. If Karkat has to hear another one of Dave's latest verbal pustules with his much abused ears, he's going to be forced to hunt Dave down with a sickle and fillet him, and he doubts that would be helpful at all in this situation. Keeping Dave alive and intact is one of those big headliner goals on Rose's spreadsheet, in fact. Plus, filleting one's friends is probably frowned upon in most societies.

John, meanwhile, is still mulling it over. His hand on Karkat's waist twitches a little as he stares down at the sides of his shoes and contemplates his untied laces. "I just wish that trying to save people wouldn't screw us all over," he says wistfully. "Of all the moves this game has ever played, that is a super dick move. It makes me feel like a dick. Ugh."

"It's not so much the saving people as the huge, pointless, melodramatic fight that might ensue if you got in the way of someone else's attempt to save people," Aradia points out. Which, okay, what the fuck?! "But don't worry about it! Either way, there's not much you can do about it aside from what you're already going to do!" she says merrily, while Karkat's still gibbering and doing enough doubletakes to make up for Gamzee's complete non-reaction to this news. John's no help, either - he looks up in shock, but after that he just stares at Aradia wordlessly, jaw slack, and in general looks like a puppy whose owner just dangled a treat in front of him. Karkat needs to train these two dumbasses to back him up when it comes to group expressions of disbelief, dammit. "No, unfortunately, I can't really explain further than that right now," Aradia finishes, and Karkat snaps his jaws back to glower at her.

John manages a good, sarcastic 'pffbt' noise. "That sounds really great and also super helpful. Thanks, Aradia."

She shoots them a pair of finger pistols and a wink. "No problem! I'll leave you guys to it!"

Karkat gags on three different aborted swear words in the second it takes Aradia to vanish again. "No, don't you fucking - oh great, she's already gone. Perfect." It's not like Aradia's not-explanations are anything new but for fuck's sake.

"Like the fizz all up and vanishing from a soda can. Where does that shit even go?" Gamzee muses. In retaliation, Karkat removes Gamzee's hand from where it's gone to pat his shoulder and relocates it to his head. If he has to put up with Aradia and Vriska and the assorted idiosyncrasies of literally all of his asshole best friends, he's getting a proper shooshpap out of this.

"Someone else trying to save people, though...I wonder who?" John's voice trails off toward the end, the quiet mumble that's almost drowned out by an obnoxious beep of a car horn somewhere to the north. When Karkat reflexively glances down to try to pick out which asshat driver is laying into it, he notes that another five people have joined the tiny clot in sidewalk traffic caused by their floating act. They're going to have to go inside soon and stop painting enormous targets on their asses for anyone below to aim at. Seriously.

A knock raps on the windowsill behind them, and Rose lifts her voice to be heard over the racket. "John? Karkat? Oh, good, you have Gamzee with you."

It's like asking Terezi where Vriska is, or checking with Kanaya to make sure she's got a weather eye on Eridan. Gamzee hums and rubs the back curve of Karkat's right horn just as John swivels them around to face the window with a cough. Rose is already in uniform, but Karkat's enough of a hero connoisseur to pick out where her transmogrified god tier outfit stops and Kanaya's additions and her leftover costume from her time in New York start. Her sleeves and hair stream out to the side as the wind tangles around her in greeting; she barely blinks, turning her phone over in slow circles. "We almost had an Aradia, but she left," John reports with a half shrug.

Gamzee raises a claw and waves. The only problem with that is Karkat isn't sure where this mysterious third hand came from when he's currently got one hand papping Karkat and the other arm still leaning on John, but that's small potatoes with Gamzee. "Sup, Rosesis?"

Rose's troubled expression sours, and she tucks a strand of hair behind her ear as she says the thing. "We...may have a problem."

"That is the opposite of what I want to hear from you right now, Rose. I think you mean, 'All of our problems are solved, the Reckoning has been canceled, and we can go back to our regularly scheduled fuck ups instead of this enormous universe-spanning clusterfuck we've entrenched ourselves in,'" he says, monotone to the point that John gives him a worried look. He needs to reserve his voice for some proper shouting in the future, though. Hell, maybe when Rose specifies what this brand spanking new problem is, he'll make the call on whether it's worth it to flip the fuck out right this minute.

"That sounds like a lovely alternate universe you're living in, Karkat. Let me know how that goes," she says, deadpan right back. Fuck his life if anyone in the Strildon line gets the idea he's challenging their sarcastic poker-face credentials. She hasn't stopped fiddling with her phone, though, and if Karkat had any control over this floating thing, he would swim over and read it himself, since something on the screen must be to blame for whatever shitshow is about to be revealed.

"Rose?" Kanaya appears behind Rose's shoulder, her frown fixed on Rose to the exclusion of all else. "Are you reading that forum still? I cannot figure out how to make an account there, and Sollux won't respond to my emails about it anymore, but if this is true -"

"I am. And it's a good thing, too." Rose's face snaps taut, and she beckons them over with a grim cant of her head. "Did any of you three know that the entire combined population of Australia, New Zealand, Indonesia, and most of Oceania had gone radio silent?"

They don't go investigate. They can't afford to.

That doesn't stop Karkat from viciously sympathizing with John's earlier existential crisis, deep in his gut where the guilt won't stop putting his stomach through a meat grinder.

John, Rose, and Dave all staunchly refuse to let anyone split up the party. It takes a while to get everyone else to shut up and give a straight answer for the ensuing group poll, but they wind up with Equius and Kanaya on their side, and Feferi and Tavros too paralyzed by indecision to make up their minds. Jade, being Jade, rolls her eyes and claims she could check out what's wrong halfway across the planet and be back in an hour, with Bec and Vriska assisting, and has almost bounced out the door when Kanaya plays the 'remember that one time Dave and Karkat went to visit someone and got sidetracked all the way to the Arctic Circle' card. Karkat's both proud and embarrassed to say that's kind of a trump card. It's hard to fuck up that badly and not be filled with shameful gratification once the nostalgia filter sets in. Dave has thoroughly ensconced it in his personal mythology.

Moreover, this trip recently went from an ill-defined quest to get the Felt locked down and get Doc Scratch out of the action before the Reckoning to a rescue mission the second Dirk went fucking Winter Soldier on them, so the rest of the planet needs to get its shit together while they focus on things they can actually fix. As can be evidenced by the fact that Bro Strider turns up at the last fucking second, slinking around behind the scratch kids and silently helping to herd everyone along as they make their way to the boulevard. Karkat would be grateful for the help corollating Vriska, who stares at each casino they pass with the blissed out expression of a small child set loose with a battering ram and a shopping cart in a candy store, but Bro communicates mostly in lightning-fast puppet slaps and terse grunts when he's stressed, apparently. It's ridiculous.

Yet also ridiculously efficient. No one wants to take a puppet ass to the face. No one. Dave's the only one with the experience and uncanny sense of timing to consistently dodge whenever a reprimanding plush comes to punt him into line; the rest of them just have to walk it off. In public. When they're already getting long stares because most of the people in their group are dressed in stuff ranging from as much body armor as Kanaya could fit under the height of hero fashion to really sad, color-coordinated pajamas. Gamzee is in sweat pants and a hoodie in 87 degree heat, because not even Kanaya and Karkat combined could talk his shitty clown ass into wearing something more complicated. Jade, Roxy, Nepeta, Jake, and Dave are all being super not-subtle about the fact that they're packing strife specibi in public, and Tavros's tricked out wheelchair from hell isn't helping.
They'd blend in more if they were in Cirque du Soleil costumes.

Basically, if the Felt don't already know they're in town, they do now. Equius has almost disappeared completely with the force of his void-assisted desire not to look like a fucking weirdo but he could spontaneously implode into a black hole and it still would not, in Karkat's professional opinion, be enough to hide them.

When they finally get close enough to see it, the Felt's headquarters looks hideously ordinary. Dave shared pictures off a Google Image search on a memo the other night, and Karkat still feels vaguely let down in person. The strip is crowded with casinos that range from grotesquely bedazzled to sleek and luxurious; the Ouroboros is a squat, nondescript building, that only stands out because of the American Queen Anne's style architecture, in a dull, dark green that doesn't quite pop against its surroundings. It looks like it's made of cardboard, and the skyscraper behind it has more substance but even less pizzazz. Thanks to Slick's recon, Droog's sketchy intel, and Bro's incredibly spotty high-speed research, they know that the majority of the Felt are holed up in the taller building, and Scratch himself is up in the penthouse.

Problem: they have no fucking clue where Dirk might be in all this mess. Jade couldn't track where he might have landed after getting dragged along on the Jack Noir happy fun times ride, and he could be anywhere in the Ouroboros's manor or skyscraper. Depending on how strong his leftover brainwashing is, he's probably not going to respond well to a rescue attempt.

Solution: kick the shit out of everyone, punch Scratch and/or Jack Noir in whatever vulnerable genitalia they might have, and get Jade to scan the building for signs of Dirk until the cops show up or the world ends. Whichever comes first. Alternately, poke around the building whilst kicking the fuck out of everyone until Dirk attacks, then knock him the fuck out and drag him to safety before the cops show up, etc, etc.

Vriska approves of this plan. Karkat has the distinct feeling they're fucked. So fucked. But Roxy's out here with her neck stapled up and even if Karkat could convince Rose that it would be smarter for them to just bow out and wait for the apocalypse somewhere with fewer gambling and drinking establishments, the scratch kids will probably waltz right up to the Felt's front door and go at it alone. And Bro will hang around. And Dave'll probably throw his ass into the line of fire, because why not. And where Dave goes, John and Jade and Rose are going to end up anyway, the codependent fuckers -

Under the circumstances, he just wants to throttle all of these headstrong fucks. If only he wasn't one of them. If only he wouldn't follow John into the fucking pit, fuck the consequences. If only.

The opportunity for a good, rousing speech unfortunately came and went right around the time they were distracted by the news of entire continents' worth of people going missing. Rose's last minute pep talk is more rapid-fire advice, while they all cluster behind the corner of a building so that they're not in the middle of the fucking road. The pavement feels sticky under Karkat's shoes - like the soles will never be clean, no matter how much he shuffles his feet. "Don't go anywhere in a group of less than three people. Try not to get separated. Our main priority now is to find Dirk and extract him before something goes irrevocably wrong." Rose pauses, glances around their ragged semi-circle of friendship, then shrugs. "That is really all I've got. I could descend into the pit of purple prose, but then we'd be here longer than would generally be wise. If anyone has any earth shattering announcement, the floor is open, but make it quick."

John applauds politely, but it peters out before anyone else picks up where he left off. "Lame," Vriska mutters, mostly under her breath but carrying enough to be heard over the headache-inducing volume of the traffic just a few yards away.
Terezi snaps a finger as she raises her hand and waves it around. Sometime between leaving the sweet air conditioning of the condo and reaching the main boulevard, her teal jacket became a teal tanktop baring stringy arm muscle that is in no way going to pass Kanaya's exacting armor standards, and Vriska has adjusted her own short-sleeved hoodie combo in some kind of solidarity. "Surely we can mete out some justice while we're here? That was the original plan," she points out, using her cane to stab a yellowed flier on the ground.

Vriska jumps on that. Karkat's not sure which is more concerning: when the two of them agree like this, or when they're in the mood to either murder each other or hatebang against the wall in front of fucking everyone and their lusii. Sollux isn't here to smack sense into them if they start to rile each other up in a kismefrenzy. "Yeah! That! Exactly that. Terezi gets it!"

Kanaya has an arm guard in her claws even as she starts sidling toward Terezi; fucking called it, Karkat thinks. "If you two initiate a mutiny now, I will be forced to -"

"Get all tetchy and sit our asses down until we listen to you, riiniight?" Vriska lets out a clipped, sardonic laugh, her hands buried in her pockets as she scuffs a red boot along the sidewalk. Her earlier good mood over the high stakes fuckery of Las Vegas has twisted and come down with a razor-edge, her smile way too fucking crooked for Karkat's peace of thinkpan. It's nice that Vriska's really fucking obvious when she's scheming, but somewhat less nice when Karkat's got a sinking feeling that she's about to pull some serious bullshit. "Newsflash - that threat's getting really old, really fast."

"I will do worse," Kanaya says, folding her arms and stepping into Vriska's personal space fast to look her dead in the eye. "I will lock you in a room, where Equius will guard you. And then I shall systematically destroy every slot machine in this city."

It's just the right combination of nonsensical and dead serious to throw Vriska completely. "Wait, what?" the ceruleanblood says, taking half a step back. Equius mutters something indistinct, and Nepeta swipes at his arm in time for him to level an unreadable, implacable frown at Vriska when she looks at him in wild-eyed disbelief.

"They are rigged instruments designed to take advantage of the average being's inability to manipulate luck in their favor so as to steal indeterminate quantities of money from them. This is a very obvious connection to make," Kanaya says gravely. Then she turns away from Vriska and waits until Terezi holds out an arm.

"As if that would actually bother me! Godddddddd!" Somehow, Vriska still looks nervous. She covers for it with an obnoxious laugh and punches Eridan in the arm. "Let's just get this over with and steal that Dirk guy back, before Maryam gets any weirder. C'mon, Eridan, look sharpish. Moment of truth is almost here!" Something about that brings a sparkle of mania back to her variegated eye, while Eridan tenses; Karkat would chalk up another mark under Vriska is going to be extremely Vriska today, but his mental chalkboard is already full.

"That, uh, actually worked?" Tavros whispers behind his hands to Nepeta.

"Obscure symbolism as an abstract psychological threat," Rose says, in the conversational tone generally known as 'my matesprit is getting lucky tonight if we're not all dead before dinner.' Karkat is ashamed to say he knows way more than he wants to about that. He likes quadrant spec and all, but Jade and Terezi have far more awareness of the goings-on in the apartment complex than anyone is probably comfortable with, and very little filter when they've got someone convenient to blab to. "Not bad."

"Yes, well, I feel it's good to be in touch with the culture of one's surroundings." Kanaya looks up from where she's buckling another bracer on Terezi's other arm to frown at up at the Ouroboros tower, shading her face with a claw. "That being said, we should keep moving. I don't like how exposed we are here."

"M'preshur I know th'snper angels," Roxy rasps - it doesn't come out loud enough for anyone to hear, but Jane taps the back of John's elbow in a practiced motion, and the Breeze snatches the words up to carry to all their ears. "I'dd dad lasnight. H'll clear 'em, he said."

"And you'll cover us from there," Rose says, her expression smooth as ice. If Karkat remembers the screaming match it took before Roxy stopped prodding Jake to yell in her stead and agreed to hang back with her various still healing, life-threatening injuries, he'll give himself a migraine. Roxy's already pale, and the heat of the sun has her listing to one side. She should have stayed behind with Doctor Lalonde and Sollux and WV or something, but see again re: headstrong assholes. It's hard to outstubborn people when they put their minds to it around here. "I put more credence behind Father dearest's scouting than Droog's maps, naturally, but if she wasn't lying about everything, I'd hate for us to get bogged down in the casino front. Everyone knows their team lineup? All phones and earpieces are on?"

"All set!" Feferi says, holding up her phone and twirling the charm that hangs from the end. Karkat pulls his phone out to double check, and catches Dave already in the act of flipping through his own, his lips a tight white line. The Sburb app icon looks like a tiny blue world with a spirograph overlay, and Karkat can't tell whether it's safer to keep it on the first screen where he can push it right away if everything turns fucked up, or on a later page so he doesn't tap it by accident and wind up stuck alone in the Medium a day early. He's also got quick links to a map of the Las Vegas downtown area and Rose's spreadsheet containing details of the plan, Doctor Lalonde and Bro on speed dial, and Dave's much more ad hoc (aka fucking useless) mess of a spreadsheet that he collaborated on with Vriska to try to figure out who had what fraymotifs, and what they do. It would have been easier if any of the trolls remembered using fraymotifs much at all; Karkat vaguely remembers it was a toxic warrior culture-inspired 'who needs fancy music tricks when you can just chop things up into grist with your specibus' kind of mindset that carried them through the game, and even the people who bought the fraymotifs for completion's sake didn't check them out much. He presses his elbow to John's absentely, and it earns him a fleeting smile from John that's right on the knife's edge between agonized and encouraging.

"Jade, what is that?" Kanaya asks. She's the only person who doesn't have her phone out, because Sollux and Equius worked together to install a switch on her chainsaw rather than risk Kanaya's ability to download spam toolbars and viruses onto even the most well-protected operating system, and now both she and Jade are leaning out into the sidewalk to stare up at the Ouroboros tower.

Jade's usual chipper, gung-ho expression is still in place - right up until she winces, and taps Rose's shoulder from a distance with a flicker of green. "That's, uh - oh jeez. Oh, crud. Rose, uh, can you take a look at this? Reeeally quick?"

Maybe Karkat's just primed to assume the worst. Rose seems entirely too calm about going over to see what this fascinating development might be, leaning into Kanaya as she does so. By now everyone's trying to look, too, so they wind up clogging most of the sidewalk. From his position nearest the building, one hand on the wall to avoid using Tavros's wheelchair as an incidental handhold, Karkat can't see anything out of the ordinary. Just a building full of mobsters. Unless it turns out Droog gave them completely wrong directions, and the Felt are really located in Las Vegas,
New Mexico instead. "At wh- oh. That," Rose says, which doesn't help matters.

John laughs, nervous. "Guys? Jade? Um, what's wrong? Please let something not be going wrong this fast."
Terezi's nostrils flare as she focuses on the sky above the building right next to the Ouroboros, and Karkat and Kanaya reach out at the same time to redirect her toward the actual penthouse in question. Yet of all people, it's Eridan who reacts first. "Oh fuck this shit. We need to move." When Nepeta pushes past the violetblood, slinking up toward the front of their group to get a better look, Eridan grabs the back of her coat and starts backing up in the opposite direction. His face has gone sallow, fins flared with alarm. "Come on, tell me I'm not the only one here who remembers that boss music, you fuckin' drama machines!"

"Who's a glubbing drama machine?!" Feferi snaps; Karkat can't look at her though, because Equius is rounding on Eridan with a terrible nothing where his face should be, and they're about to be short an Eridan if the fucking idiot doesn't let go of Nepeta.

"Boss music," Dave repeats, and Karkat doesn't like the sudden comprehension in his voice. "Shit."

"Eridan is so right," Rose says abruptly, saving them all from Coldblood Standoff 2.0, Voidy Boogaloo. "We need to move. We need to move five seconds ago -"

She just said the words 'Eridan' and 'right' in the same sentence, which means they're official fucked. Name brand fucked. Fucked©. Karkat can't figure out why though - as much as he cranks his neck back, the penthouse is too high above for him to make anything out. This whole city smells weird to him, and now he can't tell if there's something new in the air, or if he's just noticing the eau de not-Seattle all over again. There's a thin smear that might be clouds, might be smog, slowly bleaching out the overpowering sunlight so he can see without squinting or shading his face, but he doesn't know what the fuck they're about to get blindsided by. "Can someone clue me in here?" he demands, shouting just because he can.

Jane, like Nepeta, was forging ahead with a dark look on her face, but out of thin air Bro grabs all three scratch kids and books it down the block. If they fuck around long enough, he'll probably come back and grab someone else. Still kind of at a loss, Karkat backs up while watching the tower, frantically trying to see what they're all watching -

Until finally, finally, he sees something pale and almost triangle-shaped falling against the dark backdrop of the Ouroboros tower. The shape falls at a sluggish rate, as though it's falling through pudding instead of air. For a stomach-turning second, Karkat thinks it's a person; he doesn't have his contacts blurring his vision anymore, so he doesn't have an excuse apart from the fact that he tends to assume the worst, lately.

But Rose wouldn't be ordering them to clear the area if it were something like that.

"Moving now!" John and Jade say, their voices overlapping raggedly in not-quite-unison. Kanaya hooks an arm around his waist and starts hauling him along without asking, jostling Karkat so that his eyes leave the weird falling object for a few precious seconds. Terezi is hanging off the other arm and trying to pry herself free with her cane. Then Jade hits them and they start moving a fucking lot faster, the Breeze urgently muttering something in Karkat's ear that he can't make out over the rush of wind. Belatedly Karkat sticks out his arm to seize Gamzee and drag his ass along for the ride as they and any pedestrians unfortunate enough to get caught by Jade or John start causing sidewalk traffic problems.

Except Gamzee's not there. Karkat stumbles backwards over his own feet, but the wind keeps carrying him along. He twists around in Kanaya's grip and scans the crowd of bystanders they're shoving their way through, but he can't find Gamzee, and there are too many people in his friend group that can vanish into the fucking aether at the drop of a hat, but Gamzee's the one he can't afford to lose track of like this - fucking shitfuck shitty shitty gumdrops -
The dry heat of the Las Vegas sun slams straight from 0% humidity to a wet wall of air so fast Karkat sneezes. Overhead, a greyish lavender filter rolls across the sky and the clouds thicken unnaturally fast.

Oh. "Fucking really?! Come on!" he screams into Kanaya's ear.

The teeth - the rest of the teeth - punch through to reality first, framing a mouth that could swallow an ocean and never be satisfied. Apart from the pale, lavender tinge, the towering cetacean body that plows into the ground and knocks every car on the road two feet in the air is almost unrecognizable, fins and tail lost to a thorny mass of tentacles that reach out and lash around the sides of buildings to support its enormous mass. The sound of mangled cars crunching underneath like soda cans joins a symphony of car alarms. And it just keeps growing, more and more mass pouring out into reality to fill in the thing's outline, until it's as wide as the Strip - wider - its belly is a gutted hole, tentacles that might have been intestines lolling out between rows of curving, yellowed teeth that run at a right angle to its already gaping maw - and last to appear are the eyes and thorns, greyish fire spilling out of worm-riddled pupils to drip onto the street, as the thing fixates on -

(Karkat knows the name. He's seen this thing try to swallow John whole in his nightmares how often, now?)

Cetus bellows a challenge that sets off still more car alarms and shatters most of the windows of the Luxor pyramid, and Rose goes down to one knee. Kanaya wrenches them to a stop, and it doesn't occur to Karkat to question how she does it when Jade's supposed to be the one ushering them along, because a blood vessel throbs painfully in Karkat's temple, and he has the unique privilege of feeling it as almost every single person in a five mile radius experiences a gushing nosebleed. The denizen's audible screech is a wordless roar, but the telepathic horrorspeech flays his mind.

CE: SEER

CE: FA’CE’ ME

[Attention - an error has been detected. A denizen is present outside the Medium.]

[Please wait. Rerouting...]

[Emergency protocol activated - Kaiju Warning.]

"There's a fucking PROTOCOL for that?!" Karkat shrieks.

---

Working in and around the god tier's pajama system keeps Kanaya fuming well past the time Rose would usually try to fall asleep. "Promise me you will not change your sleeves around mid-fight," Kanaya says, scraping her hair away from where it's flopped over one eye.

Rose, lying on her side and propped up on an elbow to observe Kanaya's vigorous efforts to stack different sized Kevlar vests on top of the rest of her supplies, murmurs an assurance that only takes some of the wild-eyed desperation out of Kanaya's stare. She's already settled on the configuration she'll wear her god tier uniform in when they retrieve Dirk from the Felt's clutches; it shouldn't be an issue. That won't stop Kanaya from attempting to design stylish-yet-functional armor for every eventuality, but then, they all seem to have acquired their own less than healthy ways of coping with the end of the world.

And compared to some of the others' coping mechanisms, Kanaya's is at least somewhat justified.
Just the other night Vriska and Terezi got into a minor spat that ended with Vriska settling on an entirely new way of wearing her Thief's gear - one which rendered most of Kanaya's planned armor accouterments in need of a total overhaul. Again, it could have been worse - Vriska could be trying to storm the Felt's casino in the equivalent of godly lingerie - but Kanaya refuses to skimp on anyone's uniform when their lives are all very much on the line. The jadeblood has vehemently expressed her lingering skepticism over how useful the god tier uniforms are as actual battle gear rather than "somewhat gimmicky night wear," and after the thirty third Vriska-related fashion fiasco (most fiascos involve Vriska in some form) Rose simply does her best to be quietly supportive of Kanaya's reservations.

Mm. Everything has an element of the absurd, lately. Rose tries not to let it impact her morale too much, but it's hard. It's hard, and her sense of perspective can only take so much of a thrashing before Vriska fighting Doc Scratch in a sunny bikini top stops sounding like terrible video game character design, and more like a viable method of weaponizing said absurdity on the field of battle.

Thankfully, Rose has consulted her foresight, and confirmed that having Vriska in her underwear would distract Terezi and several other members of their team far too much to be worth the risk. The fact that she had to calculate these odds at all is...well. At least she has Kanaya and her endearing sense of outrage at the mere suggestion of such extravagant bullhonkey to be her beloved rock in a churning sea of ridiculousness.

Still, it's getting late - late enough to almost be called 'early.' Kanaya's working by the light of her own faint glow, and Rose needs to expend significant effort just keeping her eyelids from sinking inexorably shut, using a flicker of power to adjust her vision so she can follow the elegant curve of Kanaya's back. "Come rest, dear," she says, mostly into her pillow; Rose isn't sure when her elbow slid out from under her, leaving her head cradled in the crook of her own arm, but the lower her head's elevation sinks, the more sleep weighs on her like an insistent blanket. "Even if you're not in the mood for sleep. Just for a little while?"

Rose summons a sleepy (yet coquettish) expression to try to woo Kanaya over. Judging by Kanaya's quick cough, which transitions into a soft smile, Rose achieves her goal solely because Kanaya is endeared by her utter failure at seduction. Kanaya still airs one last grievance as she pushes off her knees and comes over to the bed: "Equius embued the shinguards too early, and now counting them to make sure they're all even there is a trial," the troll says, huffing softly. Rose expects Kanaya to walk around and lay alongside her, but instead Kanaya gently but firmly steamrolls Rose over until Rose's on her back, and drapes herself across Rose with a final sigh.

Rose would protest that this arrangement is less than conducive to a night's sleep, but in the grand scheme of things, being slowly crushed to death under the weight of one's girlfriend probably does not qualify as either heroic or just. She's in the clear. Patting the back of Kanaya's head, her fingers a touch clumsy with sleep, she smiles when Kanaya makes a quiet, pleased rumble. "There, there," Rose says, her eyes most of the way shut and planning to stay that way for the foreseeable future, "Speak your grievances unto my human bosom."

She has a vague, dreamy recollection of Kanaya muttering while Rose made obliging sympathy noises that didn't quite have the brain power behind them to turn into words, before Rose drifted off.

- (And well below the surface, under layers of shield and sun and sand, water -)

- There never seems to be time for her to sit down and...talk things out with her mother.
She makes sure of it.

It is, perhaps, not the fair or healthy or good thing to do, but Rose wards off the looming specter of a guilty conscience with technicalities, as is her wont. As the (somehow) duly elected Leader Person, Rose finds herself tapping Rue for assistance when it comes time to hash out the grittier details of exactly who they're going to try to transport through the Medium and into Calliope's new reality, and it's next to impossible to try to foist Rue off onto Karkat alone once her mother gets started. Thankfully, Rue keeps a generously parental watch over the trolls who spend time at the lab rather than the apartment complex, while Bro alternates between stalking the Crew and sweeping through to give Rose a short nod as he checks that the apartment has not been set ablaze in his absence. Oriole complains of Ambrose's ability to track him down with uncanny ease when he goes off to meet with parties unknown, while, later, the three scratch kids fold into Bro's more intent supervision with the exhausted relief of people desperate for any kind of solid footing. While the two human custodians are thus occupied, Rose keeps any discussions with Rue tightly focused, never quite looking Rue full in the face if she can help it, and it - works, somewhat, to quell her nerves. When they fall in with the Strider half of the family for a joint family affair, there's enough tension between them all to prevent anything that might remotely resemble weakness. She considers it one of the perks of having Rue and Ambrose at odds over the Diamonds Droog question, despite how uncharitable the thought feels as it slides through her mind.

The days pass too quickly for anyone to say anything, though she catches Terezi wrinkling her nose often on the occasions when the other Seer joins Rose in casting out nets of prognostication to determine whether their latest decisions as to how to navigate the course of the Reckoning will prove too risky in the immediate future. People come together and fall apart in overlapping waves, and the days keep passing, and the simple, unfailing passage of time has never felt more...problematic. Supervising Eridan when Vriska starts drilling him on his sharpshooting seems more important than inducing some sort of strained, awkward conversation about mortality and the nature of her relationship with Rue; calming Jade with Feferi's help when Jade starts to set the carpet on fire with the force of her pacing, chattering too fast about how she could still go out and get everyone, there was still time to cram the world into her pocket and hope for the best - that takes precedence over a one-on-one with her mother, or with Ambrose, for that matter.

And even her own private second thoughts, the kind that tend to sprout like weeds when John nudges her in the side and gives her a KNOWING look - even that stops, once Dirk is taken. There are more important things to deal with, a million other things to plan for. She's aware that there are factors neither she nor Terezi can account for - they're too new to being gods, and they're up against a Seer who can outplay them with ease.

Rose would prefer to direct her limited supply of 'good life choices' toward getting all of them out alive, rather than consider what kind of fall she's set herself up for.

-(The ocean sits, deep and silent and viscous. She swallowed everything, and then something swallowed her. But she is a denizen still.)

-It comes mostly down to Sollux's efforts that they have any kind of viable evacuation plan at all. Once they get their hands on the pre-release version of Shurb Omega, Sollux sets to work, ripping even more of the game's vital functions for his own use. Client player discs have the cosmic wherewithal to import entire buildings, along with their residents and contents, directly into the Medium - their ticket off the Earth once the Reckoning begins. Once Sollux spills his announcement to everyone over Pesterchum, Rose's mother starts gathering a shortlist of people to bring along for a very dangerous, very doomed ride.

"They'll all be doomed and thhit," Sollux says, with a tired grimace. "Anyone who thcheduled to get fucking Rekt ith doomed to hell and back. Doethn't matter how we tranthport them - either the game will find new wayth to waste them and tie up loothe ends, or it'll waste US. The more dead weight we're carrying, the worse thingh look for the viability of our run."

The news isn't exactly news to Rose; she's well aware that the people she passes in the street everyday have been inching towards a terminal lack of luck for ages at a rate she can only partially attribute to Vriska being Vriska. Terezi has yet to express such an awareness. Her Mind aspect appears to deal more with the consequences of one's intentions than with more abstract concepts like how close the timeline is to becoming defunct. "Unless we get them to Calliope in time, before fate catches up with them," Rose points out.

"Whatever. Just pleathe thtop planning everything in Google Docs."

"You will pry the Communal Adumbrative Tabulation of Our Impending Symmachy out of my cold, dead fingers," Rose says, and then sweeps out of the room with all the dignity she can muster.
Karkat and John keep trying to call it the Ultimate Spreadsheet of Great Justice, with Terezi backing them solely because they used the magic word, but Rose managed to wrest all editing power for the main spreadsheet from Karkat and Nepeta before it could become a shipping grid, and thus achieved ascendancy.

John has (mostly jokingly) informed her that this is why she is currently their leader. Rose suspects that it's just Karkat's fondness for charts rubbing off on her in the most absurd way possible. And unfortunately, she has yet figure out a way to keep Sollux from meddling with the spreadsheet - he keeps going in to delete Rose's ever-so-casual references to his declining health. No one seems capable of stopping Sollux's slow self-destruction. The one time Rose attempted to broach the subject with something approaching delicacy, Sollux crabbily informed her that he had his impending death and subsequent resurrection firmly in his Doom-sights, and would not appreciate an intervention that might upset the timing of his controlled demise and lead to an accidental perma-death. His explanations have yet to prevent Rue from trying to play mother, in her own stubborn, ineffectual way, and though Rose can (somewhat) see where Sollux is going with this, she supports Rue in her endeavors if only because without prodding from Rue's bevy of lab assistants, the hygiene situation in Sollux's terminal room would plummet to unacceptable levels. Nothing short of the end of the world could drive Rue to clean with something more substantial than an ironic, non-functioning vacuum, but her passive-aggressive cajoling has motivated Sollux to telekinetically clean his work space with acceptable regularity, and that's what counts.

This is the kind of logic they live by, now. It's common knowledge that Vriska is ready and willing to jump anyone who isn't god tier and 'help' them, whether they like it or not, and only the ceruleanblood's questionable competence has left the remaining trolls unscathed.

Rose thinks it would all be slightly less overwhelming to manage if either of the Strilonde parental units were good at acting like authority figures. Or if some people weren't anti-authoritarian, vigilante ragamuffins with little to no self-control. Clubs Deuce of all people was more effective at encouraging people to tidy the kitchen and properly dispose of coffee grounds than Rue could ever hope to match. In comparison, Ambrose tried to casually murder Diamonds Droog at least four times (that Rose knows of) and has been expressing his regrets over the missed opportunity by sitting dramatically on the edge of buildings in the downtown area and staring off into the distance.
And the lusii are...well. Rose is currently pinned under a giant two-mouthed cat who is determined to fit one pair of its jaws around her head with curious precision.

There is a great deal of slobber involved in this process. She's not sure her hair will ever feel clean again.

"This should have been you," she says to Dave, squinting at her brother. He's three feet to her right, squatting down to peer at her predicament with a faint twitch in the corner of his mouth, instead of standing where Pounce de Leon's original pouncestrike landed. "Dave."

His mouth twitches. "Problem?" When she continues to give him a look, Dave protests. "How was I supposed to know it would jump you next?" He prods the lusus tentatively in the side, then snaps his hand back as Pounce hisses through its upper mouth. "Oh god oh jeez calm down, nice cat. Good kitty."

A large tooth scrapes too close to Rose's eye for comfort. She starts to consider using magic to blast the custodian away, but Nepeta might object to a charboiled lusus, and her blasting spells are still volatile at best. Dave has gone from snickering to aimless panic, so she snaps a finger to focus him. "Call Nepeta or Tavros," Rose says, flatly, as more drool starts to sluice down one side of Pounce's mouth. "Promptly, please."

"Like greased fucking lightning," Dave says. "Yep. Right. On i-"

Nepeta announces her presence by dropping out of the broken hole in the ceiling and tacklepouncing Dave with sufficient force to knock his phone skittering across the floor. "Another successfur hunt!" Nepeta boasts, clinging to Dave's shoulders as he tries to duck out from under her. She rolls like a slinky, flipping so that her knees hook up from under Dave's armpits. Rose catches a glimpse of Dave's horrified expression as he gets forcibly flipped over backward and just barely catches himself before he faceplants on the floor. Nepeta scrambles to pin his arms and legs, but Dave blinks out from under her in a flash. "Hey! Cheetah!"

"Up your pun game." Dave reappears behind Nepeta and kicks. The quip might be more effective if he made contact, but Dave is not spectacular at kicking. Nepeta dodges and sinks low against the ground, her eyes lighting up with the thrill of the hunt.

"Nepeta. I appreciate your improved mobility -" Rose cuts off as Pounce shifts its weight, and a fresh wave of cat breath makes her eyes water "- but I would even more greatly appreciate not losing an eye. I grant my permission for you and Dave to battle each other to your hearts' content after I'm loose. Please."

Nepeta cocks her head to the side and blinks at Rose, then sighs, makes a T with her hands at Dave, and stands out of her crouch to come over and cuff Pounce de Leon. "Let her up, Pounce! No biting! We have new purrrey to hunt!"

Pounce purrs. Due to Rose's proximity, it feels like having her head stuck in a car engine as it rumbles to life. Then the lusus opens its jaw an extra inch and lets go with care. Rose holds herself very still, not daring to relax until Pounce bumps its head against Nepeta's stomach, and then rolls to safety when the cat and its charge start to prowl around and circle Dave. Rose can hear the tiny snikt of clawkind, but can't see them, thanks to Equius.

"Uh. Rose?" Dave says, taking a hesitant step back down the narrow hallway. "Tag team?"

Rose sweeps her hand forward as she stands up. "Found your phone," she reassures him. "No need to fret, brother dear."
"I really need a shower," Rose sighs, plucking a long strand of hair from where it's stuck to her cheek. "And a haircut. Hm." She flips Dave's phone over in her palm, making a show of not paying attention.

Nepeta lashes out, and functionally invisible clawkind crash against Dave's sword, so quickly that Rose only sees the end result rather than the parry itself. Pounce feints for Dave's side, and Dave tries one last time. "I'll sit still and we can talk about feelings and shit for a half hour!"

Dave unlocked his phone to message someone for assistance, and it hasn't turned off yet. Rose is used to catching glimpses of his lock screen - it has been a poorly copied MS Paint rendition of his apple juice company's logo for some time, complete with text at right angles and bucket-filled sections of color - but now, between the app icons that cover the home screen, she can see the picture he has for the background.

She taps the button so that the screen goes dark on John, Jade, and her own face, and turns, setting the phone down so she can draw her needlekind. "I deem this compensation worthy. The contract is sealed," she says, punctuating it with a smirk. "We'll interrogate the way you utilize lossy data compression as part of your artistic medium of choice, and how it reflects on your psyche, perhaps."

Dave just looks pained, ducking Pounce's next swipe. "...How about we not, and just say that we did."

Then Nepeta leaps up, seizes the broken edge of the hole in the ceiling, and swings herself forward to punt Dave in the chest with both feet. While Dave stumbles backward, wheezing, Nepeta pushes off and flips to face Rose, grinning.

(There must still be a choice. A challenge, and a choice, and then an end. A Choice for her Seer, and if Cetus cannot win, she can at least ensure that when the time comes, the Seer will hear, and choose.)

It's 87 degrees outside, and the only reason Rose notices anything is amiss is because she's looking at the Sburb icon on her phone when notifications from the forum start to pop up. Vriska has reached the point of walking on the ceiling, her wings trailing dust along every surface they touch as she hassles people from above with fluctuating levels of malice. They're not going to be able to contain her much longer, and she knows it. Of the other two major potential mutineers, Gamzee is pacified, and Eridan is exhausted, violent violet bags heavy under his eyes as he naps in a pile that includes Roxy and Nepeta. Vriska's run him ragged with her training and Rose honestly wonders if he might not collapse in the middle of the fight. She has him marked as part of the backup team, meant to stay outside the Felt's headquarters unless assistance is needed, just in case.

They're not going in for the sake of half-defined justice or vengeance, anymore. They're here for Dirk, first and foremost. Pointing Vriska at the Felt and telling her to have at it is just the most immediate method Rose has for burning off some of the ceruleanblood's growing restlessness.

Divine Café > Auras, Scrying, Divination > What even the actual shit is going on? We just don't know.

AN: α- Why is Australia gone -Ω
AN: α- Thaumaturge please respond -Ω
TT: I - what?
AN: α- You're right in the middle of all this, it's really obvious, so skip it. Is the entire population of Australia vanishing overnight part of the apocalypse or is it a new thing? -Ω
TT: Were there any meteors sighted in the vicinity? When did all of this happen?
LS: It's on the news! Turn on your television! They're saying parts of Southeast Asia went silent!

Rose barely remembers the last time they watched something as mundane as the news. Most of their random news updates come from -

"Dave. What's going on with Australia?" she asks, a little more harshly than she intends. Dave takes one look at her face and gulps. She copy and pastes the forum posts into a fresh group memo for the others to look at. Only Tavros and Kanaya look up in concern at the tone of Rose's voice, but she can see chat handles checking into the memo almost as fast as she can repost things.

"Whatever it is, it gets the planes, too," Dave says, which is nonsense to Rose until he explains. "As near as anybody can tell, everyone in Australia disappeared. They're not texting, they're not contributing shit to the global economy, there's no news or radio broadcasts. People only realized shit was going down when the people on flights from other countries never sent word that they landed." He pauses, eyebrows rising up as he reads further. "Also New Zealand and a couple other places are gone, but that's like. A footnote. Holy shit."

John, Karkat, and Gamzee are all outside the window, through the other room. Rose moves without looking up from her phone, walking in a bubble of disbelief as her mind scrambles to process this. They'd expected to hear increased reports of meteor sightings, and eventually impact events, but not something this abrupt.

TT: Are they dead, or just gone? If all that remains is a smoking crater where Australia used to be, that would - I mean, you can't just lose an entire country. Not one that size.
AN: α- Hard to say. Anyone in manned vehicles that get too close appear to be vanishing as well. Checking with a colleague about meteor sightings, but apparently NASA is on a media blackout for a launch at Cape Canaveral -Ω
AN: α- Which is...odd -Ω
NM: They're not dead, that's all I can f______ tell.
LS: oh, thank goodness! are you positive?
NM: That many people dying at once would be a huge deal, okay? I'd know. Unless some f____wad is d______ around with hope magic again, the dead would tell me if they suddenly got an entire continent checking in early.
TT: I'll check.
NM: Check what?

After beckoning John, Karkat, Gamzee, and now Jade in through the window, Rose turns right back around and marches to the nap pile. "Bring me Eridan," she says, an open-ended request for anyone to fulfill, and it's Jane, watching over Roxy, who lifts Eridan up like he weighs nothing and holds him up for inspection while he squawks. "Have you been to Australia recently?" Rose asks.

Eridan looks at her like she's just declared herself the queen of France. "I'm right fuckin' here!"

"Good. Stay that way." Leaving him muttering behind her, Rose goes back to the forum.

TT: Most likely not a hope dome. Why would it be odd that NASA has a launch scheduled?
AN: α- Their only launch scheduled for this week was back on the ninth, and it was an ISS resupply mission that left out of Baikonur. They've been winding down their schedule a lot with all the official budget cuts; don't know what kind of private funding went into this HA: could be Croatoan. that tends to spread fast and then people vanish. were there a shitton of violent murders reported recently down under?
NM: Not that anyone has noticed.
NM: You d___s.
HA: oh for the love of - will you let it go?! it's getting real damn old!
NM: Go f___ your f___ing s_____ selves with a f___ing cactus you f___headed ghostbusting t___s

HA: wait. hang on, gotta ask cas if getting raptured is legitimately a thing brb.
NM: DO NOT.

There has to be some mistake. "We're sure no advance copies of the game got sent out?" Rose asks, as Jade dips back inside, Karkat grumpily suspended between her and John. "I thought nothing was released until 1:00 pm our time, tomorrow -"

Jade nods emphatically before Rose finishes. "Positive! Janine had them push for as limited a release as possible. Even the PC downloads won't work until it's the thirteenth here!" It had been the best Jade could scrounge out of her connections to the company; canceling the release of what was rapidly becoming one of the most anticipated games of the year just wasn't in the cards.

Rose doesn't know enough about video games to tell whether the popularity of Sburb Omega's pre-orders came down to actual publicity hype, or to some dormant survival instinct in the general population telling them to get their hands on something with the scant chance of saving their lives.
It'll just bring more meteors down on their heads, but the Reckoning seems to be one of those things that's paradoxically already accounted for such details.

"Y'know, I'm pretty sure Aradia does this on purpose," John says, shaking his head.

"...Does what?" Rose asks.

TT: ...Can you all keep tabs on this? If there are any new developments, message me privately. Same handle on Pesterchum.

NM: Sure, why the f____ not.
LS: ummm, guys? _...New†?
AN: α- What is it? -Ω
LS: Have you...heard from Galya la†ely? _ Just† checking!
AN: α- She said she was still in Vladivostok the last time I - -Ω
AN: α- @ведьмаГаля? -Ω
AN: α- gdye ty? -Ω
AN: α- She must not have signal, it was cutting out a lot last week -Ω
LS: oh because, um. maybe my †ransla†or is broken again.
TT: Link?
LS: over here. I †hink †hey're saying †he really far north and eas†-ish par†s of Russia and some o†her places are also -
AN: α- No -Ω
-- alternativeNewtonia [AN] has left the chat! -- LS: oh no...no come back! I'm sorry! I didn't† mean - NM: F____. Ice cold, Star.
LS: But I didn't mean to!!!
-- ladyStardancer [LS] has left the chat! -- NM: F____ x2 combo.
HA: good news people, it's not the rapture!
HA: wait, where the shit did those two go?
TT: Whoever's doing this, it's still spreading.
TT: I -
TT: Well. Good luck, to all of you. I'm sorry.
NM: What. The s___. Does that even mean. What is happening.
NM: Oh my f___, Newt's right. You do know what's going on.
TT: Oh No Something Has Unfortunately Come To My Attention Which Involves Wrangling A Wayward Friend This Is So Sudden.
TT: Oh Nooo...

-- thoughtfulThaumaturge [TT] has left the chat! -- NM: COME BACK YOU FUCKERRRR!!!!!!
HA: whoa, dude. language.

(She could never close the channel. Skaia willed it, and the Horrorterrors widened it, and there's only one way to seal it.

A choice, then. A choice with enough substance and significance that the reward will be worth the price.)

"There's a fucking PROTOCOL for that?!" Karkat shrieks, which pretty much summarizes Rose's feelings exactly. She would voice agreement, but pain lances through her and keeps her knees riveted to the sidewalk beneath her. Voices roar up the channel between her mind and Cetus's, icy water pressing up against her wards to feel out cracks, and above it all music sings - low and sobbing and out of key and filled with discordant notes, but music all the same, music that grinds down into her bones. Not loud, and yet too personal for comfort. It's the kind of song she might have played once, long ago, on her violin.

Luckily, she's getting used to working through these kinds of things. The pain isn't accompanied by any particular compulsion or tangle - Equius is here, the void wrapped around him thick as any sludge a Horrorterror can produce, and that gives her more room to maneuver. Kanaya's arm is a steely bar around her back, and once Rose applies enough visual filters to see through the fog settling over her vision, she nods for Kanaya to haul her up onto her feet. Floating is a little beyond her, but she plants her feet on the ground and hopes for the best. "Eridan? Feferi?" she says, and then, belatedly, "Anyone who had Derse, really -"

"Here," Eridan says, muffled, before Equius dumps him from where the violetblood was tucked in his armpit. He looks queasy (and sweatier than normal), but reassuringly bipedal. Feferi waves from where she's down on one knee, and then shakes her heavy braid back over her shoulder as she staggers upright. "Well this has all gone to piss," Eridan says, using a car to clamber back onto his feet - and then nearly falling over again when the man in the driver's seat slams his fist down on the horn. Rose can barely distinguish the sound between the low roar of music, and the car alarms that are already going off up and down the strip.

"Kaaayyyyy, so. New plan?" Jade says.

"I'm not sure why we bothered to pretend the first plan would work out, anyway," Kanaya says, leading Rose the rest of the way behind the car. John's half-guiding Dave, too, right on their heels. The only sign of the strain Dave is under shows in the chalky white of his face. "I feel like we should have known better by now. And yet. It continues to happen."

CE: S"E"R™.
Rose wipes blood away from her nose, smearing it everywhere, no doubt, and finishes taking stock of the group - Gamzee is nowhere to be seen, to her quiet, gut-clenching horror, and Karkat looks devastated when he meets her eye - but neither Equius nor Nepeta look like the horrific denizen's presence fazes them in the slightest - and looks at Cetus, just in time to watch a deep purple tentacle almost as wide as the street itself come down on the MGM Grand.

Along with everything in between the resort and Cetus herself.

People were already screaming at the sight of an enormous monster. It's the abrupt uptick in volume, the knowledge that people obviously died just then, combined with the steady, grinding crunch of the building being crushed, that sends Rose right back to New York, and she carves right through a skyscraper without a care for the people inside because they're inconsequential. What matters is getting the ugly shape right, the curves of the spirograph emblazoned in her/their mind's eyes - "We have to get them out," Rose gasps. She can't feel her feet, and she can't tell if it's the numbness of ice water, or just shock. They have a plan, not for this exact eventuality, but for a Horrorterror appearance? She'd have been a fool not to plan for such a thing. It's doesn't escape her that Cetus's tentacles curve and coil around the Felt's headquarters, that the denizen has no qualms about slowly rolling over the next-nearest hotels and enveloping them with rotten, exposed fat and entrails. "Jade, call Becquerel, we need to shift as many people out of the way as we can."

Cetus raises her flukes, and brings them down with another, distant crunch. Rose can't see past the bulk of the denizen, but she can envision the damage being unleashed on the far end of the street too clearly. They have to confront it and stop it, before the denizen tries to come to them and crushes even more people

"Uh, oh jeez - anyone who can fly -" John starts, a warning note in his voice. Jade lets out a piercing whistle, then takes a deep breath without pausing, green light burning around her hands.

Looking directly at Cetus saps more of Rose's sanity and concentration than it should - the warped whale's shape wavers and twists in a way that's almost hypnotic. She raises a hand and slaps herself (Kanaya flinches, hard), and only then does she notice the water welling up around the grim denizen. It doesn't appear to have any specific point of origin; it also seems to be rapidly cresting in a wave that sweeps between the cars on the street, gaining momentum as it spreads outward. She can't detect whether the water itself is dangerous or not, but the default answer would probably be - yes. "Everyone, up!" she barks, almost too late.

Between them, only Jade, John, Rose, Equius, Terezi, and Vriska can reliably float. But Jade and John lift anyone who can't, sparks of power pushing up against the underside of Rose's shoes when she falters, and Tavros's wheelchair rockets upward, Nepeta slinging herself up behind him with a yowl as Equius follows hard on their wheels. They wait for the swelling wave of water to rush beneath them, murky and with a cold, bitter stench. By the time the wave settles, the water sits almost a foot deep on the road, lapping up against the wheels of all the vehicles unfortunate enough to have been on this particular section of the Strip.

And then the metal of the cars begins to hiss, and steam, which answers that question. Most of the pedestrians in eyesight are wobbling in the Breeze or in Jade's steadier hold, but the water spills over into parking lots, and side streets, and onto the grounds of the resorts themselves.

Rose wipes her face again, blinking furiously against the tears of pain that spring out as Cetus's furious, hissing roar pounds her ears. Her hand hits someone else's along the way, and her swirling vision tracks right past Karkat to Kanaya before she refocuses and realizes it was his hand. She can't read his expression past a general impression of 'stressed,' with a tinge of guilt as he splays out his claws to show they're tipped with blood. "Your eyes," he says - she can't hear him, but she can read it on his lips.

"Why does this keep happening, anyway? Do we just attract Horrorterrors? Do we smell good, or something?" John asks. Cetus sweeps a row of cars out of the way in a ragged wave - and there are still people inside those cars. A few of them try to crawl out of the cars and quickly discover the watery sludge Cetus exudes hurts. Jade sets the non-floating members of their group down on top of the vehicles nearest them (an armored van and a blue hatchback) and starts reaching out to the cars with her aura of power burning up her arms to line her entire body with the force of her concentration. Even as Jade starts snapping her fingers to pop the vehicles next in line to be smashed under Cetus's belly out of the way, Becquerel appears on the hood of a red convertible, in the middle of licking its paw.

"We probably have cooties. Or something," Dave says. "Anyway, Karkat, whatever you do, don't start crying."

It's weird enough that it apparently snaps Karkat out of uneasily watching Rose's face. "Why the fuck would I start crying?! Do I look like I'm about to collapse into a sodden heap of useless?!" he demands, elbowing past Kanaya in a bristling fury.

Dave takes off his shades, wipes drops of sea spray off onto the edge of his god tier uniform, and then sets them back on his nose. "No, but shit's getting real damn prophetic here. Slap my butt and call me Cassandra."

"Dave, what the fuck."

"Can we have a little less talking, a little more helping?" Jade interrupts. "I'm gonna try to move a bunch of people out onto another street - hang on tigh-"

Whatever Jade is about to add, she doesn't finish. Her bright, determined warning cuts off as a foot slams into her stomach. Mottled grey wings surge out of a sickly green hole in the world, and something far smaller than Cetus rams Jade all the way back until she slams into the windshield of another car. Rose counts five separate, neon green afterimages burned into the space between Jade's old position and where she hits the car, before they resolve into one shape. The wings furl for a moment, and then flare out to their widest extent.

JN: Witch.

JN: You owe me a new torso.

"No!" John bursts toward Jade and Noir in an instinctive lunge - Jade raises her head, face frozen with startled pain, her eyes snapping to Noir, to Noir's crackling, shifting green aura, and then to Rose -

"Bec! Help them!" Jade yells, launching herself at Noir without standing, and tackling the carapacian into a teleport of her own.

They do not reappear.

(Disorder roots itself in her mind, anathema and achingly familiar, and clutches her close.)
Becquerel, to its credit, needs no further instruction - a fraction of a second after Jade bounces Noir, the white wolf turns into a haze of green stars and then begins to rapidly cycle from car to car, the civilians huddled within and screaming from the tops of their vehicles vanishing in bolts of green light. Not once does Bec acknowledge Cetus's shrieks, or even rise up from its sitting position; Rose thinks she catches it resume the inspection of its forepaw as it teleports out from under Cetus's next strike, taking five more cars along with it. It doesn't appear bothered by the situation at all, and Rose acknowledges the sad fact that she's now envious of a space dog's unemotional composure. A fond farewell to any pretense at not being her father's daughter, then.

More to the point - John's about to launch himself after Jade, and Rose can't process why she seizes his arm to stop him, almost at the same time as Karkat. Jade - Jade needs help. Rose had a whole lineup for who would be able to fight Noir with the smallest risk of fatalities, but having an enormous grimdark whale breathing death and destruction and the scent of spoiled meat down their necks requires a complete restructuring. Who can they spare? In all her earlier, hypothetical calculations for them fighting a Horrorterror, they can't even afford to spare Jade. "Who can we send to help?" she says aloud, looking over to Terezi.

TT: Jade, where are you taking him?
GG: away from people!
GG: gghk -
EB: jade?!
GG: i'm fine!
GG: you guys worry about big noodly and nasty!
GC: NOT SO F4ST! 1'TS D4NG3ROUS TO GO 4LON3! >:] T4K3 D4V3!
TG: srsly take me baby im yours
GG: i can handle noir! i'm fast enough now but if i have to keep teleporting another person i won't be able to focus so just -
TG: would people remember the time powers thing better if i wore this cape as a scanty toga
TG: and ran around with my giant time spinning tables obscuring my nethers at convenient angles
TG: like were in a shitty fan service harem anime TG: because i can do that
GC: 1 FOR3S3 4BSOLUT3LY NO W4Y SUCH 4 BOLD F4SH1ON ST4T3M3NT COULD GO HORR1BLY WRONG TRUST M3 1 4M 4 S33R.
GA: You Also Said That About The Vriska Lingerie Plan. No.
EB: i'll go, i can keep up!
GG: nooo!
EB: you can't fight by yourself!
GG: watch me, buster. :V you stay and whisk people out of harm's way or else i'll revoke your teleport sibling license!
TT: Jade -
GG: aaagh stop talking i need to concentrate bye!

John breaks Rose's grasp too easily. "I'm going after her," he says, his voice unsteady and eyes flaring electric blue with panic. The wind's rising along with his voice, lashing the stagnant, briny haze around them, but if the Breeze is speaking Rose can't make out the words over Cetus's song. "She can't fight Noir alone, that's insane! I - she'll -"

Rose can see the same distracted film of memory in his expression; she's not sure he's seeing any of them right up until Karkat hisses, yanks back on John's arm, and grabs the side of his face to haul him around to meet his eyes. "You're freaking out. Do not freak out on me, John." When John makes a frustrated, broken sound and tries to pull away, Karkat moves both hands to his face and bumps their foreheads together. "No. You're not allowed to go floating off in a dumbass panic and die on me!"

"Me and her were supposed to take Noir if he showed up, that's what -"

"Harley can handle herself!"

Karkat looks like he's on the edge of angry tears as he says it. Rose isn't sure whether that makes his plea more effective or not. John visibly snaps out of whatever memory he's replaying in his mind to register Karkat's face mashed up against his, and some lucidity appears to return to his panicked stare. His feet still float a good half a foot above the car, but the Breeze winds around Karkat, and Rose takes that to mean they still have John here, for now.

It will have to do.

Right now, she has to make a call.

TT: Jade. Ping the instant you need backup.
GG: got it!
TT: Please. Don't die.
GG: i'll try! :P

"Well, if she's not comin' back, I'll reiterate for her. New plan?" Eridan asks. He's managed to edge away from Equius, and Rose doesn't like how the violetblood's stationed himself on the hood of the car - as close as he can stand to Cetus, compared to the rest of their group, his shoes only a foot or so from the seething water. "S' so loud. The sea-swallowing witch's really got the volume cranked up." He raises a finger to dig around in his ear, fins folded down as far as they can bend, and it somewhat disrupts the unsettling impression Rose has that Eridan is one unfortunate thought away from stepping off.

Vriska rolls her wrist, her hood creeping back up over hair and horns as she alters her uniform again. "New plan is hit the giant monster until it stops moving, duh. Do I have to come up with all the best plans around here?"

"What about, uh, all the people?" Tavros says, peering over the side of his hovering rocketchair. It takes some doing, as he's primed two of the rocket-propelled lances Equius installed on each side of the original wheelchair's frame, and the brownblood winds up at a precarious angle. Vriska scowls up at him, eyes narrow, but apparently having some height over her makes Tavros bold. "Um, we could help Bec move them, while you do the beating up thing."

Naturally, everyone else looks to Rose. "That's...essentially the plan," she admits. Terezi is absolutely no use when Rose nudges her for backup; the troll has joined Eridan in staring up at Cetus - except her unseeing gaze is fixed on a point almost twenty degrees off from the denizen itself.

No. Terezi is watching the Ouroboros Tower.

It wouldn't do to forget that the Felt could jump in whenever they so choose. The last thing they need right now is for Doc Scratch's misbegotten gang of time manipulating thugs to sneak in while they're distracted by Cetus. Cetus has to be dealt with immediately - either banished or killed or otherwise incapacitated, somehow - but Scratch is still here. Still watching.

"Excellent," Vriska says.
And something in the way she says it stops Rose cold.

With one last flick of her hand, Vriska tosses her dice on the roof of the car, squatting and leaning in close to study the result. Her wide, vicious grin is -

A distraction. Rose feels the yank as Vriska casually sucks luck away from everyone in the area but their small circle, like a milkshake through an industrial vacuum cleaner. And Rose doesn't think a Thief can give back what she's stolen, which means Vriska leaves an entire streetful of people lightless, plummeting into depths of misfortune so abrupt she might as well have shot a light bulb. The fluorite octet turn into small stars of fortune as they skitter and dance and land with a clack on -

[Ancestral Awakening]

An impossible, crackling blue sun of luck erupts as Vriska's roll hits circle eights. Rose closes her eyes and it's still not enough; all that stolen significance and fortune compresses into Vriska's spikey body, bright enough to blind someone. The dice rise up off the car, plucked up by one of the sparkling plasma streamers, and slot into the hilt of a blue sword that drops into Vriska's outstretched hand. All the while, Vriska never stops laughing.

Rose's eyes feel like they're about to melt out of their sockets. She forces them open, because closing them did nothing for her. Vriska stands resplendent in lemon yellow and cerulean blue, in some kind of swashbuckling dress that's cinched tight at the waist, her wings fluttering and leaving a trail of sparkles behind her. A new gauntlet latches tight around her arm, the metal panels flexing as Vriska brings the sword up over her shoulder with none of a Strider's practiced ease. "It's go time, suckers!" she yells, full of glee, and with so much riding on the swing of her sword, none of them can react before she lops Eridan's head from his shoulders.

AG: Sollux!!!!!!!!! Now!!!!!!!!
TA: for 2hiit'2 2ake. already?! a little more waring next time FUCK
AG: G8t over it! I'm on a roll! :::D

- There is a prototyping node within Leviathan, and Cetus laughs.

The laugh comes out a scream, a thousand screams, emanating from the hollow beak that rips out through her wide throat in a fresh wave of blood and water.

Leviathan has made itself part of the Game.

Leviathan has made itself a challenge.

- The scant seconds between Eridan's death and his resurrection last long enough for Rose's heart to jump into her throat, thick and clogged with cold clots of blood and seaweed - it's worse than when he was just standing there alone, isolated, because his body dips at a horrible, lurching angle, his head arcing away with a spray of violet blood that hits Equius, the tall troll flinching back, and Vriska's still laughing -

White-gold light froths out around Eridan in a spirograph, spiraling out and enveloping him in wide ribbons of light. Arcing spurts of blood stop in midair and flatten out into thin, lightning-sharp wings the color of violet-blooded gore.
"This is the most anime shit I have ever seen," Dave says, holding out a fist for John to solemnly fistbump, and his voice sounds so quiet, drowned out by the thrum of music in Rose's ears.

"The worst kind of mahou shojo," John agrees, and Karkat looks at him as though he's questioning every decision he's ever made up that led to him being John's dearly beloved.

Eridan gasps in air when the spirograph's light starts to die down, rubbing his neck and glaring daggers at Vriska. "Vris!"

Vriska, to everyone's surprise, stops laughing and screeches in outrage at a pitch that makes several people (including Nepeta and several car-bound civilians) cover their ears in alarm. "Are you wearing a tiara?!" she demands in a scream, voice cracking halfway through.

Eridan gasps in air when the spirograph's light starts to die down, rubbing his neck and glaring daggers at Vriska. "Vris!"

Eridan in some post-not-dead-anymore daze, just clutches his head and presses down, eyeballing Vriska with a weird look as he reassures himself he's in one piece. "I'm wearin' what? Fuckin' hell, Vris, what kind of bee ess was that?! I said maybe, not inhumme me with extreme fuckin' prejudice at the drop of your shabby pirate hat!"

"Focus, dumbass!!!!!!! Is that. Or is it not? A tiara!" Vriska gestures at - well, all of Eridan's outfit, really, from the puffy shorts to the stark white tights. But mostly at the tiara.

To be fair, Rose doesn't quite know what to say, either. Groping around a little more, Eridan blinks with dawning realization in his eyes, hooking his thumb claws under the white triangle of cloth wrapped around the crown of his head. "...Holy fuck," he says, stretching it out in front of his eyes. "That's either a stretchy tiara, or a giant headband. What kind of figmental storybook prince poppycock is this shit?"

Vriska shoves him hard, and pretty much as one Rose, John, Kanaya, and Equius jolt forward to grab Eridan before he can hit the water. Eridan floats over the water effortlessly, looking wounded. "I didn't kill you so you'd go and transform into some anime magical prince bullshit!" Vriska says, petulant. "Change it so you look like a badass and not a douche!"

Eridan looks at Vriska, and then back at his tiara.

And then back at Vriska. "I like it," he says, face utterly blank as he lets the tiara snap back down on his head. "Go fuck yerself, Vris, this is badass." He pauses to flex his feet in their new violet shoes. "I'm never takin' my soft, comfortable yet stylish slipper socks off again and nothin' you say can stop me. This is what living feels like." When Vriska gives another screech and makes a grab for him, he smacks her outstretched claw away, floating further up and out over the water with an expression somewhere in the general vicinity of vengeful bliss.

Somewhere in the background, people are screaming. It reminds Rose that talking is not, in fact, a free action when there's a giant monster rampaging through Las Vegas. "Let's chat more about the eccentricities of Sburb's costume design later, please," she says, squeezing Kanaya's hand. Kanaya looks at her, aggrieved, but mercifully says nothing. "Vriska."

Vriska whips around, still lit up from within. "Yeah?" she says, with a growl of anticipation inching into her voice. She's expecting a fight out of this, Rose suspects. If she'd decided to pull a stunt like that earlier in the week, she might well have gotten one.

(Shemight be a star of stolen significance - right now, there's probably very little Vriska can't do - but Rose can see what would stop Vriska cold. Equius, after all, is right there. She could consult Terezi for a second opinion at a moment's notice.)

But Rose would prefer to point Vriska at the biggest target and let her loose, doing something useful. They don't need in-fighting right now. "Next time, ask first and respect the person's choices. Can the two of you concentrate on fighting Cetus, or does Eridan need more time to adjust?"

"Well, too bad, Lalonde, because I don't care about pandering to you anym- say what?" Vriska says, the practiced mutinyologue sputtering to a stop as she processes what Rose actually said.

Karkat turns his head from where he's working to keep John stable and opens his mouth; Rose picks up John's hand by the wrist and manually slaps it over Karkat's mouth. "You're two of the heaviest hitters we have, and Gamzee appears to have stepped out for the moment," she says, gesturing at the Gamzee-less space around them. "Presumably Eridan just jumped the echeladder. Can the two of you take point while we work on clearing the area of bystanders?"

Make Vriska think she's the center of attention, and she's relatively easy to manipulate. Rose just wishes she didn't have to navigate the ceruleanblood's mercurial moods to prevent mutiny when her head is throbbing like this. But Vriska flutters her eyelashes and switches from 'impending rebellion' to 'look at me me me' with a toss of her head, dragging Eridan in with a toothy grin. "Pssh, Rose. Please. You're looking at the two best denizen ass-kickers on this sorry team! Tell her, Karkat!"

Karkat speaks through John's hand, and John makes a face that says 'Karkat spits when he yells.' "You're both a fucking menace to not just society, but also to this entire suppurating cesspit of a planet and probably the godfucked universe at large, and even if you both fling yourself into the gaping jaws of certain death you'd probably survive and punch your way out through death's rectum just to continue to shit on my day. Happy?!"

Vriska starts clapping. Eridan sniffs. "That was beautiful, Kar."

"I hate both of you."

"Then go and prove it," Rose says, loudly.

She finds herself on the receiving end of one of Vriska's wilder looks, vicious and eager. It is disturbingly appealing; one can't say Vriska doesn't have her own tempestuous, infuriating charisma. "Oh, it's on," the ceruleanblood says, and she thumps Eridan on the back before taking off toward Cetus like a shot. Eridan casts one last uncertain look down at his new outfit, and then hurtles after Vriska with somewhat less speed, his hood being sacrificed to form a small cape.

Terezi takes time to flick Rose in the ulnar nerve. This is such a tiny, unpleasant note compared to everything else going on that it takes Rose a second. The other Seer leans over and whispers right in her ear - though Terezi's whispers are only marginally quieter than Karkat's liberal interpretation of the concept. "I heard that," she says, the usual mocking glee marred with a trace of warning. "Don't make me call dibs on spades."

"Perish the thought," Rose replies, with a shudder.

If Cetus were still Cetus, Rose would worry more that having her friends help in the fight might break some unspoken rule of the Skaia's - has anyone ever read an actual guide for this nightmarish game of life? - but thorns press out from under Cetus's stretched, pallid flesh, iridescent oil spilling out around the ragged edges of the swollen wounds, and Leviathan stares out hungrily through the denizen's eyes when Rose finally tears her focus away from corralling her wayward team.

It hasn't looked away from her. Not once. She knows.

Fine. If Leviathan-in-Cetus stays fixated on Rose for the duration, some quirk of Leviathan's most recent incarnation in the physical realm that distracts the Horrorterror from wreaking havoc outside this general area, Rose can and will use that to their advantage. She pushes her shades up her nose, then lets her needlekind fall into her palms from the sylladex up her sleeves.

--

Jake dislikes flashstepping. It's disconcerting when Dirk does it, and a true botheration when Ambrose does it to wrench them away from the action. Moving so abruptly discombobulates him something fierce, and the dadblasted man doesn't even have the decency to ask whether any of them want to be whisked out of harm's way before doing it. Jake's quite peeved and Jane looks properly disgruntled as they land without ceremony on some desolate rooftop miles from any buildings Jake recognizes. Roxy's incandescent, actively trying to knee Ambrose in the stomach, but the man just dumps her and Oriole next.

Ambrose stops for a minute, impassive, watching Roxy's hands as she scrambles upright and uses them to convey what her rasping voice can't quite muster the volume for. To Jake's endless consternation, he can't keep all the sign language straight in his noggin - but he can add his voice to Roxy's for good measure, while Jane and Oriole contribute sour glares. "Hold on just a minute with this cockamamie coddling nonsense -"

"That does not mean what you think it means," the eldest Strider says, signing something back at Roxy that might or might not be a correction of something she signed. Jake just doesn't know, and it bothers him. "Need to talk to that kid about what weird shit he's teaching people." Then the angular shades turn on Jake, and the stare makes him feel small and disconnected - it's not quite Dirk's face, older and tanned and rougher, and Jake's just as lost in sorting out his thoughts on that as he has been trying to follow everyone's hands this past week. "And no. Stay here 'n don't move until the shitstorm's died down, punks."

"Conflagration! Mr Strider -" Jake starts, but the invective lands on empty air as Ambrose ghosts off to hell only knows where. Probably right back to the action, blast him. Jake sucks in air, then lets loose. "Well, good riddance, you - you boorish cur!" He wants to kick - something, but there's nothing to kick here but the roof itself. That'll have to do, no matter how useless and kiddish it feels to kick the ground.

Roxy buries her face in her hands and makes a thin, frustrated noise, and Jake completely understands. Jane wastes no time on such things. "Let's move," she orders, already in motion. Instead of scouring around for a stairwell, she goes to the southern edge of the roof, her red jacket and black armor sharp against the muggy sky (Kanaya attempted to coax her into a pale blue number that Jake thought would have looked smashing, but Jane argued that it would be murder to keep clean, whereas red would blend well with the blood color of half the sentient population of the planet, and then some. This is considered sound logic). There's some betentacled filiglittery towering amidst the glittering buildings of the Strip, and despite Ambrose's efforts the abominable thing is so large that it seems unnervingly close to them, still. As if all it need do is raise a particularly formidable tentacle and it could reach them with a casual sweep. The blighted thing's just that large, and Jake's rather baffled by how things like this can emerge out of thin air without so much as a polite handwave by way of explanation. He tries to keep up with all the rambling threads of the plot, here, but even functioning like a normal person without his old, brainwashed scripts to keep him running is honestly the limit of his ability, some days.

It gets better, slowly, day by day. But the progress is painful.

He wants Dirk back. Rather a lot.

"I think we're a little outclassed. No offense," Oriole says, dry as sawdust. He flaps enormous flipping wings out, tweaking a couple of errant feathers back into line, and they gleam under the desert sun like burnished metal. He mostly looks resigned but ornery as he joins Jane. "Shit like this tends to escalate before it gets better, and unlike basically all those other guys, we don't have freaky god life packages."

"That thing is inconsequential." Jane sets one foot on the very edge of the roof, testing her weight as she dismisses the tentacle monster in a wave. "We're here for Dirk. We're going to find Dirk."

Roxy perks up quick as a flash, surges up, and launches herself at Jane like a rocket, her squeak of joy almost inaudible. The Jane Jake used to know would have stopped Roxy dead with an elbow to the gut before she got anywhere near enough for a hug. He likes the strange but familiar, new Jane much better. He supposes they're more like how they should have been, now, and he likes it a lot more than he liked the fogged blur of the past few years, though it never stops making his head fuss and ache.

If my stodgy old brain could do it, why couldn't Dirk's?

Silly question. Just like Dirk's capacious noodle to overthink things to the point of self-sabotage, honestly. Jake misses him.

He hands back, a third wheel a ruefully aware of it, until Jane jerks her chin at him and the two girls pull Jake up alongside them on the ledge. He looks down, measuring the distance to the ground with a practiced eye, and then back at them. The edge of bandages still peeks out from under the high defensive collar of Roxy's angular pink and purple armor, her hair fluttering like candy floss, while Jane looks at Jake with a softness in her narrowed eyes that was never there before.

He's not sure anymore what he's done to deserve any consideration at all. He's the one who couldn't hold Dirk safe when it mattered most. They could have talked him out of whatever logical knot he tied to hang himself with, if only they'd had time, but Jake's suddenly got butterfingers.

But Roxy and Jane still want him here, and here still feels like coming home, so. He laughs, surprising himself, and hugs Jane from the other side as best he can. "Then let's go rescue that confounded Strider from himself, like he'd do for any of us," he says, cheery, and fighting back the urge to cry. Now cannot be a weepy moment - he has to save the waterworks in case a dramatic moment is called for to break the spell on Dirk; hellfire take Jake before he cries himself out prematurely.

"You know, Bro's gonna throw a fit if you guys jump right back in the middle of that. He might even yell," Oriole says, and Jake's embarrassed to say he almost jumps plumb out of his skin - he'd forgotten the bird hybrid gent was even present, and can't mask the guilty expression in time as Oriole joins them, squatting on the edge of the roof with his wings mantled and his face bland. Not the Strider blank look Dirk and his pernicious older doppelgänger do, but a schooled expression of neutrality that reaches Oriole's orange eyes (what is it with Striders and Lalondes and odd eye colors?), directed mostly at Jane.
"I think you're correct," Jane says, equally bland, "and I could not give less of a rootin'-tootin' fudge about what that guy thinks."

Oriole's face blossoms into a smug grin. "Awesome. That's 90% of why I'm coming along, anyway."

"The other ten percent?" Jake asks, curious.

"I have a family history of bad life choices, and those Felty fucks still owe me a wing and compensation for the amount of weird shit I've had to live through since I got stuck with you people."

Jane's face maintains perfect disinterest, but the humor radiates off her like a subvocal quiver. "Then keep up."

She dips Roxy back, sweeps her up bridal style while Roxy giggles, and then steps off the roof. Jake follows, using his grappling hook to ease the fall while Jane just takes it - that really must be murder on the knees, and he has no idea how she does it. Oriole glides down in an orange flutter, and then they're off. Without Dirk to guide them, Roxy sets a course, holding up a phone with Google Maps on it so she and Jane can lead the way through a wandering course to take them well around the giant monster, straight to the Ouroboros casino's back door.

JE: On our way dirk!

There's no response, still. Jake doesn't let that stop him hoping for one. Where there's a will, there's a way!

---

Dave's at one shitting hell of a disadvantage, lately. But if he times this just right, they can get through things with as little awkwardness as humanly possible.

Mistake number goddamn frigging one: 'humanly possible' does not cover Equius Zahhak. Dave needs to find out who wrote up his awkwardness insurance policy because at the rate things are going he's gonna pay for this one straight out of his own pocket. He's basically pouring a couple thousand dollars worth of apple juice empire proceeds down the tubes, here.

But if he's gonna game the system like a fucking boss, it's this or swearing allegiance to Eridan, and out of the two, Eridan's the dude with a couple murder happy joy times on his permanent record, whereas Equius is just...uncomfortable.

Jade advises him to bring towels. Which is pretty basic Zahhak 101 that Dave already planned for, but Jade snap-summons him a wheelbarrow to cart the towels around in, so she gets mad kudos for that. John and Karkat confiscated the entire box of ringpops he got off Amazon, claiming it was to save Karkat from a future heart attack but pretty damn transparently so that they could set up a monopoly on the local ringpop market and/or re-enact some shit out of Blood Diamond with Jake assisting. Dave lets it go, but only because if he has to sit through another one of Karkat's rants about mixed quadrant signals he'll probably have the damn thing memorized. So unfortunately, while proposing to everyone in some platonic quadrant orgy of hella commitment would be peak irony, Dave concedes that trying to explain the underlying not-romance-just-ironies to every one of these assholes would get lame after a while.

Plus, after the goddamn hilarious incident with John, Terezi started forwarding him links for the various sites she's apparently gone to in order to get legally ordained to perform marriages, which Dave is taking as a threat against his person. The last thing he needs is for Terezi and Vriska to blast... in through the ceiling and legit marry him to someone because he didn't know how to let the ringpop joke die.

Dave's way too smooth to fall for that, though. He's just got to play this cool, and then run like hell. And he's been the living embodiment of cool basically since the moment he was delivered unto this planet by the stork-shaped meteor of life, so yeah. It'll be fine.

"...Good luck with that," Rose says, as Dave sets out down the hall with his wheelbarrow. From Rose, that's clearly a vote of confidence, and not at all her way of hinting that this is going to go horribly wrong.

Shows what Rose knows. Dave has timed this perfectly; Dave sneaks up to the roof to make sure Nepeta's busy sparring with Kanaya, and then gives Kanaya the signal so that she knows to keep the practice match going for as long as possible. After flashing her a thumbs up and receiving one in return, the ritual fulfilled, Dave bolts for the room where Equius was last sighted. Terezi's at the lab, either visiting, harassing, or helping Sollux - a lot can be hidden in a single >:] - which means as long as no one else decides to barge in, this should be over and done in a matter of seconds, and Dave will have a nice new status buff to try to cancel out whatever debuff the big LE tries to smack him with next time he gets too big for his boots.

He opens with a towel, flinging it at Equius's semi-visible face and scoring a bullseye. Equius flinches hard and reaches up to tear the towel away with a snarl, his muscle shirt the non-color of a black hole, while Dave chants, "Yo. I pledge allegiance to dat unreal Heir."

"What?" Equius says, still sporting that reflexive Troll© defensive snarl in the face of the unknown.

Dave pauses time, flings every super soft, fluffy, Egyptian cotton towel in his possession at Equius en masse, and then restarts time so he can walk right back out the door, shooting Equius finger pistols. "Knight, out."

He sees the exact moment the words finish processing and realization hits Equius like a gallon-jug of perspiration. "Wh-at," the troll repeats, this time with a distinct crack in his voice as it shoots up an octave.

Then the towels arrive, and at least twenty plaster themselves across Equius's face so that Dave can ditch the wheelbarrow, sprint down the hall, olly out the open window in apartment 311, and land in Jade's arms without a single drop of sweat being spilled. "All done?" she asks, with a tiny roll of her eyes.

Dave slings an arm around the back of her neck, on the off chance she decides to switch to levitating him with her powers instead of holding him. Like hell. "Karkat needs to get on my level," he says, deadpan, while Jade lightly bounces off the branch of the nearest tree to ascend to the roof. "I'm all about them game breaking roleplay bonuses."

"Well, that's good! Even if you had to be silly about it." Jade sets him down on the roof with a little twirl, and Dave owns it, his cape floating out behind him and one foot popping up as he holds her hand a second longer than necessary for the aesthetics. She obliges him and does a tiny half-bow before hopping backward and floating back to the ground, because Jade is in fact one of the coolest cats in this clowder.

"It's not silly, it's efficient and shit!" Dave calls after her. "Aradia approved!"

"That is not exactly a ringing endorsement," Kanaya points out, ducking under Nepeta's next swipe and using her longer reach to try to flip the oliveblood into the pool. Nepeta's fucking fierce, tumbling and rolling and generally being a ball of sharp, pointy claws, but Kanaya steps around her with uncanny, deliberate grace - at one point she sidesteps a backstab without actually looking over her shoulder to see where Nepeta is at all. "Considering Aradia was recently voted 'person most likely to organize karaoke over our graves.'"

Dave doesn't exactly have a counter for that one, since it's totally true and no one can deny it. "Approved," he says, empathic, and then heads over to the makeshift non-alcoholic bar so he can scrape together a nice cold glass of sweet, sweet AJ.

He's halfway through his first glass when the roof starts to tremble underfoot, and the water in the pool ripples ominously. He chokes when the door to the stairwell flies off its hinges and nearly clocks Kanaya upside the head, just as she succeeds in pinning Nepeta.

Equius stands in the doorway, drenched.

"WHAT," the troll repeats, clutching a towel to his forehead with a jittery hand to stem the tide.

Dave stops midsip, considers his options, and then finishes his drink. There's no sense wasting good apple juice, he thinks - and then bolts for the edge of the roof.

Jade's less chivalrous about it, this time.

Dave does not have a giant fancy laser ranged attack thing hidden up his ass like Eridan does.

In fact, he's pretty sure that on the list of things he's not qualified to handle, fighting a Horrorterror should be pretty high up on the list - no, fighting Horrorterrors is the entire list. And he's not sure how he keeps getting mixed up in this kind of shit. He's a dude with a pointy object for a strife specibus and that does jack squat when he's fighting something more than ten times his size, okay? In the great rap battle of life, Cetus could whup his ass without even opening its mouth, and a grimfuckingwhatever Cetus is just the crapsprinkles on top of the fucking bullshit of his existence.

...He needs to stop talking to Karkat so much. It's ten different kinds of not fair that Oriole went and took over the empty Dave spot in the on-going roleplay/shitpost memo with nice people like Nepeta and Tavros and Feferi and Jake, who barely ever swear unless there are puns involved. Terezi and Gamzee both invited him, but a) what does Terezi know about the awkwardness inherent in having multiple ectoversions of oneself running around willy nilly? and b) on second thought, Dave doesn't even know what kind of weirdness goes on in an RP thread with Gamzee motherfucking Makara lurking and making clown nose faces at everyone.

Anyway. If he gets too creative and obvious with his time powers while they're within eyeshot of the Felt's mansion, Dave's not gonna like the additional helping of bullshit that would get piled on him. Rose, Jade, and John couldn't persuade him to talk to Bro or Momlonde about Imminent Death: The Epic Saga that is his life, but Rose did lock everyone out of the planning spreadsheet so that Dave couldn't move himself out of the healer/defense/support category and you know what? It turns out she didn't need to go full tyrant. He is a-okay with that. That is, in fact, something that he can handle. Last minute butt saving and smooth maneuvers in the name of great, just ass.

Note to self - take over position of pun master. John's been getting complacent, Feferi's too fish-centric and over-saturates the nautical pun market too often for anyone to take her seriously, and Nepeta might be in the running but no one who makes puns on the word 'yiff' can be allowed to sit the throne while Dave's alive and breathing.
Yeah. It's not like his palms are sweating enough to rehydrate and moisturize the dead. If he wanders too far and someone winds up super dead, as opposed to just kinda sorta ehhh dead, he's boned. In, like, the emotional sense. There's like, a grand total of a lot of people here who he would prefer not-dead, and at least three where if they died -

He's gotta stop thinking about this shit. His internal monologue needs to shut up so he can be a goddamn temple of badass focus and sweet sword forms. Mostly he lurks near Rose, Kanaya, and Karkat, because they're the easiest to keep track of compared to all these other assholes. John vanishes into the wind the second Karkat lets him loose, and Dave only catches glimpses of blue flickering between cars and buildings to evacuate people. It's weird, though - most of the time, when John's all the way solid, he's in the bright blue and black uniform Kanaya made to match Karkat's by request. But sometimes, when Dave's eyes start to water from the fumes rising off the hellwater all around them, he thinks he sees an overlay of sky blue, the Breeze trailing out like a long windsock in John's wake.

He's the only god tier human who hasn't swapped into his godly pajamas, and Dave doesn't know if anyone's thought to ask why John's avoiding it. Maybe Rose has. Or maybe this is actually stupid, and Dave should concentrate on tracking where everyone else is instead of getting stuck on John's fashion statements.

Their squad of four is marginally less impressive and flashy and badass than everyone else in terms of balls-to-the-walls badassery, but that's because they're going from car to car, the distance limited by how far he, Kanaya, and Karkat can jump, and dragging people out so John can grab them more easily - Jade's hellbeast of a mutt cleared most of the vehicles closest to Cetus, and promptly fucked off to parts unknown. Also, if the situation calls for them to pose as a team, they have a clear advantage that cannot be denied, so Dave's not complaining. Tavros and Nepeta zoomed off on Tavros's incredibly badass, souped-up rocketchair, which was awesome, and now they're buzzing around Cetus's back looking for somewhere to stab. Nepeta's battlecries are considerably more enthusiastic than Tavros's, but Dave chalks that up to her having more confidence and experience with emitting blood-curdling yodels while on the hunt for unsuspecting prey. The two of them have got shameglobes of steel, or whatever weird made up word Karkat is using for troll anatomy these days - and also they're going to get their asses kicked if Tavros doesn't figure out how to dodge incoming tentacles better. Dave tenses up multiple times when it looks like the two are about to get squashed like pancakes, but the rocketchair veers and judders out of the line of fire, as though someone not-quite-visible just punched it out of the way with extreme prejudice. So Equius is around, but being a shy asshole about it.

Terezi and Feferi are just as direct, but better at using Cetus's own anatomy and waving tentacles as platforms. Feferi swings around and up Cetus's flank, using her forkkind to stab and claw her way further up the smoother areas of skin, and finally ends up on top of the denizen's back, a tiny fuchsia figure that Dave has trouble making out from this distance. Terezi doesn't use her wings, and only floats to finish longer leaps when Cetus rips its tendrils away; she's also making a really suspicious beeline for the Felt's casino, skimming around Cetus's bulky front and not making much effort to wreck shit unless it gets in her way. Up to some shit, but like hell is Dave gonna call her on it at this point.

The main thing is, Vriska and Eridan are going to fucking town. Dave's not sure which is more pants-shittingly terrifying - that they seriously thought they could control Vriska when she's carving her way through tentacles in a blur of manic pixie dust and light - or that Cetus grows back twice as many tentacles to replace each stump, looking less and less like a demon whale and more like a grossly misshapen squid-whale hybrid with each passing second. Vriska darts and weaves between the denizen's annoyed slaps without even trying...or maybe she's just lucky enough that Cetus keeps missing. Soon the ceruleanblood's right up in Cetus's face, but the thing is, Cetus has a lot of face.
Vriska looks goddamn tiny compared to the vastness of Cetus's worm-infested eye, but she slices a deep gouge the length of a car deep into the whale's eye, and Cetus shrieks some incomprehensible, furious garbage-talk. The glowing, nasty-ass worms and a torrent of ichor spew out from the torn, dripping eye gunk all over the wide expanse of Cetus's face. Vriska impossibly dodges with a distant yelp of disgust, and the worms fall and splatter against the shallow water below, long enough to reach the road from the towering height of Cetus's eyes.

There is no part of this that is no gross as all fucking hell, and Dave opens his mouth to let out a warning gurgle.

"No one has vomit privileges before me, Dave," Rose say, which is all that prevents him from up-chucking directly onto her shoes. He claps his hand over his mouth, swallowing around a lump in his throat that insists no, really, throwing up is the correct response to shit like this, and when he gets himself together enough to stop going cross-eyed, he sees that Rose's eyes are tearing up red again. The whites of her eyes look pinker every time Cetus bellows, and when she spins to help the next person out of the window of their car, there's blood crusting in the hair around her ears.

"What is that thing yelling about now?" Dave asks, after another roar rocks the car under their feet and makes the water slosh up ominously. There aren't too many windows left for Cetus to shatter, at least.

Rose sets her jaw. "Apparently, Cetus dislikes being ignored," she says - and then she flinches and whips around, pointing a needlekind past Dave's arm. She fires off a spell that feels like it crisps Dave's eyebrows, and it hits a huge fucking eyeworm just as it rears up out of the sludgy water. The worm reels back, mostly stunned, but now Dave can see slow ripples in the contaminated water; it doesn't look like Cetus is gonna try to put its eye back together. Fantastic. "Don't let Father remove me if I'm knocked unconscious."

Oh wow, does she give Dave way more credit than he has the ability to live up to. "Why?" he asks, pained, as the water starts to churn around them in a real damn concerning fashion. The Breeze whooshes past them to scoop up the driver of the car they're standing on, which is a relief, at least. More of the eyeworms lance up all at once, and Dave has his sword at the ready, but Rose touches his shoulder and directs him at the closest threat in one smooth motion.

"Cetus might follow me," Rose calls over the next round of grimdark screaming.

Dave dices the worm before him into chunks in six quick slices, then dodges the nasty slime that's apparently the Horrorterror blood type of the day. "Yeah, seems like that would really suck ass," he says.

"Without question."

"WHY THE SHIT IS THIS FUCK TEXTING ME RIGHT NOW?!" Karkat screams, at a volume loud enough to rival Cetus's best efforts, his phone in one claw while he flails at a gigantic worm with a bloodsickle.

It's not like Dave's any better, considering he had Jade and Equius wire up his shades so he can stream emergency messages directly to his goddamn eyeballs like the communication thirsty asshole he is, but at some point this is going to bite them all in the ass.

Eridan, meanwhile, might not have Vriska's cheat levels of good luck, but nothing that hits him seems to stick. Almost immediately after he and Vriska take off, Cetus swatted the violetblood out of the air with a wave of a gargantuan flipper with such force that it left a trapezoidal crater in the side of a hotel. But before Karkat could finish swearing, Eridan crawled out without so much as a limp, and flew forward again. Dave waits for him to pull out a new riflekind or something similar to the one Jade confiscated a while back, but instead Eridan just starts blasting with white hot goddamn lasers and shit that leaves enormous burns and blackened scorch marks anywhere Cetus turns. He has less control than Vriska and a much wider blast radius, which could become a problem if the fight starts shifting around the city. Dave has his weird music sense muted, mostly, because Cetus sounds like a...well, like a hellwhale screaming in indignation and pain at the top of its lungs, and so Dave is only distantly aware that the ongoing musical clusterfuck skitters and sparks off a new chorus whenever Vriska and Eridan strike in unison. If nothing else, Vriska training Eridan seems to have got their timing in sync. Vriska yells in frustration when her next skids off the side of Cetus's body; the denizen's flesh concaves and then rebounds like jello, as if what's underneath isn't solid flesh, just more godawful, nasty, gelatinous tentacles sloshing around in a whale-shaped meat sack.

...Dave's just grossing himself out, now. Surely his brain is just dicking with him -

Vriska's sword bounces off, but unfortunately, Eridan strikes at the right angle. White lightning burns through layers of rubbery skin and blubber - and then a gout of bruise purple fluid erupts so far over the street that Eridan actually gets a faceful of it, and he lets out a scream of genuine pain as he claws at the sludge covering his face. Purple rapidly stains the front of his butter yellow shirt. While he's blinded, tentacles spool out from the sagging tatters of skin and shoot at him, the ends hooked with thorns. The hollow where the tendrils used to be quickly fills with still more writhing tentacles.

Dave hates being right about stuff like that. God damn.

Vriska doesn't spare a glance for Eridan. She drives down toward the tattered hole in Cetus's flank with her sword brandished over her head, so it's up to Dave to slam time as close to a pause as he dares and make the fucking call. Every time he blinks, the thorns sprout closer to Eridan - sometimes the edges appear before there's a tentacle to support them, like the tentacle is already there and just slowly ripping into view so it can stab Eridan properly.

This shit would be so much easier if he could fly on his own. But that's already bust, just like his voice, because this game is rigged as shit. He could sprint for the nearest building and pull some parkour shit to tackle Eridan out of the way, but that would take time.

God dammit.

TG: bro or john
TG: heads up @ eridan
TT: Got him
EB: :T

Bro knocks Eridan out of the way and reappears on the roof of the building with the troll under one arm. Then he flashes out of sight again, and Dave can't spare the time to keep track of Bro's exact location - Vriska starts hollering when a tentacle gets sliced off right in front of her nose, and the hollering continues even after Dave turns back to help Kanaya with another eyeworm, so Dave assumes Bro's filling in for the time being with some actual premium swordsmanship.

Then sharp claws clamp down on his arm, and Karkat yells at him despite the fact that they're fighting right next to each other. This is entirely normal for Karkat, so Dave doesn't miss a beat and keeps chopping until the next worm slithers back down into the water while Karkat shouts. "I have to go inside, this is unbelievable. Dave, are you listening? Open your auricular clots for two fucking seconds -"

"I hear you, dude, chill," Dave says. "In where? Please don't say 'in Cetus' because that is one journey I'm not down for. Don't go where I can't follow."
"Don't be disgusting. The building - ugh, that direction, okay!" Karkat says, impatiently jabbing at the Felt's skyscraper with the tip of his sicklekind.

Dave pauses, assesses, and then gives Karkat a look. "Oh, right. The tower of bad juju and certain death. Cool. Why?"

"Spades needs help or some fuckery, I don't know. Which probably means Droog lied about some critical fucking detail and now he's gotten his alien beetle ass handed to him, and because I'm a stunning example of what we experts call 'a complete fuckup,' I need to go help or I think my pusher's going to explode," Karkat says in a rush.

"If you need to go, we should be fine here for the moment." Kanaya yanks the chainsaw out of the last eyeworm with considerable effort. The worm gives a last feeble twitch that rocks their car and then sinks back into the water, still. Compared to the rest of them, in varying states of fear-sweat and dishevelment, Kanaya looks like she just walked off the runway - a blood-spattered, post-apocalyptic runway, but any runway is better than no runway, dammit. "Unless things - well. I understand that phrases such as 'it can't possibly get any worse' are expressly forbidden, so I will refrain."

The fact that she said that shit at all, even as an example, makes Dave and Karkat exchange looks of deepest oh shit. The sky doesn't crack open, and there's no sign of a second Horrorterror noodling out of the Soleil Pool to take advantage of that convenient conversational opening, so after five seconds of watching Dave and Karkat skeptically, Kanaya rolls her eyes, slips an arm around Rose's waist like the coolest cucumber in the fridge, and then jumps to the empty truck one lane over without waiting for them.

As soon as they land a grey tentacle, much thicker than the eyeworms, wraps around the truck they've chosen and tosses it into the air, with Rose and Kanaya still in the truckbed. Kanaya tightens her grip on Rose and kicks off, now at a ninety degree angle to the ground, and it's Rose who floats the two of them a safe distance away to land on a semi-truck and confront the tentacle head-on. That puts almost half this side of the road between their two groups, and Dave and Karkat are kind of stuck by virtue of being flight-challenged, which is fun.

Rose switches to text rather than trying to yell over Cetus's next noodle monster mating call (at least, that's what Dave's calling it, anyway).

TT: Go on without us. Like I said - better I not present a moving target. Cetus is causing too much damage as is without me accidentally luring her toward a new pocket of civilians.
TG: k cool
TG: guess im with karkat
TG: eb if youve got a sec we need a lift
EB: yup! be right there guys! i have to clear these people out, but they won't get their butts away from the slot machines without a fight.
EB: somehow i blame this on vriska. because reasons.
EB: lots of reasons.
CG: HOLD YOUR HOOFBEASTS, DAVE.
CT: D-> Where
CG: NOT LITERALLY. FEFERI, STOP POKING THE CALAMARI WITH YOUR FORK, THERE'S SOMEONE WHO NEEDS LIFE-Y FUCKERY DONE AT THEM AND YOU'RE OPTION A - AKA APPARENTLY THE MOST REQUESTED OPTION.
TG: (done at them)
TG: (dude)
CG: (STOP JUDGING MY CAREFULLY HONED, ""IRONIC"" CLOWN VOCABULARY YOU ASS.)
CC: W(at's t)(at? You're calling for my K---ELP, Karkat? 38D CG: IT DIDN'T NEED TO BE A PUN, BUT YEAH, YOU'VE BEEN ASKED FOR. DESPITE THE FACT THAT I HAVEN'T SEEN YOU DO ANYTHING RESEMBLING HEALING EXCEPT THAT ONE TIME YOU RESURRECTED YOURSELF, EVER. LOOK, ARE YOU FREE OR NOT.
TG: dude it always needs to be a pun
CG: STOP BEING PART OF THE PROBLEM, YOU ENABLING FUCK. YOU DON'T EVEN MAKE PUNS!
CA: good newws i can see again if anyone cares
CC: ...Anywave, I will be rig)t t)(ere, Karkat! Just give me a second to get krilled!
EB: wait, hang on!
CG: THE FUCK.
TT: Er. That's really not the best way to - that is - uh -
AG: DOOOOOOOO IIIIIIIIT!!!!!!!!! ::::D
TT: VRISKA.
CG: VRISKA YOU FUCK THAT'S NOT OKAY.
CC: )(a)(a, it's c)(ill, you guys. S(oallux, )(---EAD'S up!
CA: wwhoa fef wwait maybe thats not a good -
CC: WAAA)(HOOO!

Feferi's far enough back on the crown of Cetus's head that Dave can't actually see what she does - but in a clear gap in Vriska's attacks, the denizen flinches bodily and bucks in a way a whale's body probably shouldn't be able to move. Cetus thrashes and the earth rocks under it, sending the cars that litter the road jittering across the pavement and collapsing still more of that one hotel that Cetus smashed up earlier. Dave grabs the back of Karkat's jacket and drags him down onto his knees while they ride it out, and feels a claw similarly knotted up in his cape's hood.

As it thrashes, Cetus ducks its head so far that Dave can't actually see what that does - but a clear gap in Vriska's attacks, the denizen flinches bodily and bucks in a way a whale's body probably shouldn't be able to move. Cetus thrashes and the earth rocks under it, sending the cars that litter the road jittering across the pavement and collapsing still more of that one hotel that Cetus smashed up earlier. Dave grabs the back of Karkat's jacket and drags him down onto his knees while they ride it out, and feels a claw similarly knotted up in his cape's hood.

Instead of a rush of eyeworms, a single barbed tendril stabs out of the eye socket, wraps around Feferi in a neat coil - and then slams her down onto the road with a crunch of shattered concrete. Then Cetus tosses something limp and considerably more fuchsia-colored than before to the side.

Karkat makes a noise and way too fucking late, Dave claps his hands over Karkat's eyes. Karkat rips them off almost immediately, leaving thin scratches down the back of Dave's hand, but nothing deep enough to count as actual damage. "She'll be fine, stop dicking around," the troll says, his voice tight and rough.

Feferi falls somewhere out of sight, because Cetus has one hell of a throwing arm. But music swells in Dave's ears, full of bells and deep sobbing and pretty damn different from Eridan's, and he catches the tail end of the flare of fuchsia light that accompanies the standard issue magical god tier transformation sequence as Feferi rises up into the air right away, fuchsia wings fluttering excessively to leave a maximum amount of sparkling glitter in her wake as she cuts across the street toward him.
and Karkat. Her beige, green, and mahogany god tier costume shifts as she flies into something Dave recognizes from Kanaya's fashion sketches - she keeps the dark twin-tailed hood that hooks around her horns, while the long skirt shortens and sharpens, gauzy layers of pale green fabric blossoming out from underneath. Her sleeves lengthen and trail from the wrists, and when she stumbles through the landing on the car next to his and Karkat's, beaming with all her teeth, he sees her shoulders are bared to show sunburnt, freckled skin. "So, we need to go help someone!" she says, pushing a handful of tightly braided hair back up into her hood and cocking her hip. "Rayporting for duty!"

[Attention: The Witch of Life is risen.]

CA: fuckin hell fef
TG: well that happened
EB: ...
CC: W(ale, t)(at wasn't nearly as bad as last time! And s)(ut up --Eridan, mind your own business!
CC: I feel so refres)(ed! 38)
EB: you just had a huge amount of mortal crush injuries!
CC: And now I'm full of vim and vigour and LIF------E!!!
AG: ::::)
TG: wheres clownfriend i thought hed be all over this shit like salt water on taffy
EB: isn't that the final jeopardy question of the hour! eheheh...heh...
GC: W41T, YOU S3RIOUSLY LOST H1M? >:]
CG: SHUT UP, I'D LIKE TO SEE YOU DO ANY BETTER WITH A TELEPORTING VRISKA.
TA: dont even joke about that. ju2t. dont.
TA: a2o can everyone hold off on dyiing for two 2econd2 or ii2 that two much two a2k FUCK.
CC: I did warn you though, Sollux! 38C
TA: yeah well iim 2tiill gettiing a metriic fuckton of blowback from eriidan poppi2 clogs so cut iit out for while

Belatedly, Karkat shakes himself. He still looks unsettled, and Dave can't blame him because this shit? Is hells of unsettling. They can try to blip past the weirdness of people dying and then coming back to life, but he's starting to be damn grateful that he, John, Jade, and Rose got their god tiering over with in a past life so they don't have to deal with this shit live in front of an audience. "Fucking - yeah, Spades wants us inside," Karkat says, pinching the bridge of his nose and winching his eyes shut before shaking his head one last time. "Which will land us up to our eyeballs in Felt, so be ready for a fight."

Feferi arches an eyebrow, and then tilts her head back to look pointedly in Cetus's direction. Being blinded doesn't stop the denizen from continuing to lash out with all its tentacles as Vriska and Eridan assail it with renewed energy, but it has also stopped sending eyeworms and stray tentacles further along the road to harass Rose, Kanaya, and the rest of their crew. Tavros and Nepeta rake across the front of Cetus's face in a long arc, and Tavros barely has to steer to avoid the frantic tentacles. "Oh buoy. Compared to this? Piece of cake," Feferi declares, spinning her specibus in her hand. "Let's go see what I can do to help!"

"Aight then," Dave says, fighting down the urge to tense up as he pretends to hold two fingers to the side of his shades. "Egbert, three to beam up."

"I thought that was Jade's signal," John complains, reappearing in wispy pieces with his torso solidifying before his arms.

"I hate to be the bearer of bad news, but it's a multipurpose nerd signal. That's what the doctor announced when the meteor delivered you, y'know - 'my god, nurse. It's...a nerd.'"
"Hawhaw. Sooo funny, Dave." Just for that, John grabs Karkat and Feferi by the hand, pout-glaring at Dave with all his might and forcing Dave to pick who he wants to introduce to all this awesome palm sweat caused by the fighting and not, you know, recurring waves of elder god-induced terror.

He takes too long to decide - Karkat reels him in by the wrist, and just as Dave latches onto Karkat's wrist in turn, John starts to dissolve them into the Breeze.

CG: ALRIGHT THEN, WE'RE GOING IN. I'LL LET YOU KNOW HOW LONG THIS MIGHT TAKE ONCE WE FIND SPADES.
TT: Good luck.

"Rose? Rose!" Kanaya's voice reverberates through Dave on the air, but he doesn't have eyes or anything else to center himself. He can't even really tell whether John's taking them into the tower or rushing to Rose, right up until Cetus's next scream punches the last remnants of Feferi's song into oblivion, and hits the Breeze like a freight train from hell.

SS: Fucking hell! You sure took your sweet time!

Dave hits the floor with knees that aren't sure whether they're all the way solid yet. He blinks and takes in the pisspoor state of the room they've landed in - it looks like someone tore through the place and set everything on fire for shits and giggles. Some of the flames flare up as the Breeze coils through the room in a haphazard, dazed circuit, but the smoke's not bad enough to cause problems. John staggers hard, but manages to catch himself on an overturned desk with one hand, waving Karkat off when the troll tries to support his shoulder. "I'm - I'm not gonna say I'm fine, but -'- okay," he says, his voice jittery and shaky and as high as if the Breeze had fed helium into his lungs on the way over.

"--- fuck was tha-?" Karkat says, and even more of the words skitter out of hearing range.

Dave's getting sick as shit of bad guys fucking with their senses. Such bullshit. He whacks his ear, grimacing.

"Sound frequencies -ravel through a medium. That mea-- air." John says, sounding less high pitched but also miserable. "--nore it - take care of her."

He points toward Spades Slick, and this time Dave's eyes focus and take in the short mob boss glowering at their huddle. The carapacian kneels hunched over on green carpet that is almost soaked through with blood. Most of it is pouring out of the cracked open chest of a pale carapacian Dave's never seen before in his fricking life. It's...it's a lot of blood to have lost for a tiny alien lady, and Dave can spy a thin trickle of blood playing over Spades's sharp knuckles and attempting to feed back into the Prospitian's chest. He's not sure how much good that's doing, though.

SS: You gotta help her. She shouldn't'a been involved in any of this.

Feferi rushes forward, pink light playing along her hands as she crouches beside Spades. The light extends up her arms and slowly envelops her in a fuchsia silhouette as she looks over the bleeding, unconscious carapacian. "-ere. She's sti-- breathing. Karkat, let's get kraken!"

Karkat mutters under his breath, and the weirdness makes it sound perfectly audible to Dave's ears: "Of fuc---g course, the pun comes through loud and clear." Then Karkat looks at Dave sharply, red eyes tracking from him to the massive hole in one of the walls and then to the actual door. "Keep watch?" he says, his feet carrying him away before Dave answers.

"I'm all over guard duty, my dude," Dave says. He puts on his best watchful face - it's pretty similar to his normal resting expression, but it's totally a thing - and steps around the piles of broken furniture and debris to get a vantage point where he can watch both the door and the cracks in the walls. Sounds still working a little wonky, but John nods when Dave throws him a questioning look, so he hopes the Breeze will notice if someone breathes in their general direction. One of the smoldering chunks of desk abruptly stifles as the air around it rushes away, which makes the room less likely to cook them, at least.

GA: And There Was Much Rejoicing.
TG: damn straight
TG: were in
TG: karkat and feferi are healing spades lady friend so this trip is already a total success
GA: I Shall Inform Rose Once Cetus Stops Screaming At Us In Blasphemous Tongues.
TG: yeah thats fair
TG: none of us here can hear for shit its great TG: johns sitting so he wont puke but his hand signals tell me he should be okay soon EB: dude, i'm right here! i can text for myself!
TG: shhhh let me
TG: i accept the heavy burden of guard and messaging duty for the team while karkat and feferi are poking at internal organs
EB: omg dave
TG: typing in all caps will be a great sacrifice but i do this for the sake of my and karkats newly minted brohood
GA: Hang On, I Must Face Off Against Your Father For Rose TG: oh ffs
GC: YOUR3 4LL 1NS1D3?
EB: team heal is, yeah.
GC: 3XC3LLNT. WH4T FLOOR? 1 H4V3 SOM3 FR13NDS 1 SN1FF3D OUT WHO COULD US3 SOM3 H3LPS34RCH1NG, BUT W3 COULD 4LSO R3ND3ZVOUS 4ND K1CK SOM3 BUTT. >:]
-- turntechGodhead [TG2] has joined the chat! -- TG2: oh finally
TG: bro no im assdeep in felt territory can we do weird time shit later
TG2: no shut up and go cover the door to that room
GC: SHOULD 1 T4K3 TH4T 4S 4 NO?
TG2: take it as a yes
TG2: dirks up near the penthouse
EB: are we going to be timetraveling in a minute? i don't know if i can handle time stuff on top of this migraine. :T
TG2: dont worry its just me
TG: which is already one me too many what happened to staying on the dl
TG2: not my fault
TG2: im almost caught up on everything and youve got a loop to loop
TG2: i have been through some shit man and guess what TG: what
TG2: time for you to live it
TG: why are future mes always such spectacular assholes
EB: maybe it's a personal problem?
TG2: maybe its maybelline
TG2: or yeah maybe its because we are the asshole TG2: it is we
GA: I Feel As Though I Don't Need To Pay Attention To This Conversation Anymore.
CT: D-> This has been e%crutiatingly pointless as usual

Against his better judgement, Dave sighs through his nose and steps over a chair to head for the door. He can't hear anything apart from Karkat and Feferi and Spades talking over their patient; the Breeze winds between his feet, but John just frowns when Dave glances back at him for an update. "I'm not...feeling anyone right now," John says, uncertain. "But the Felt have different time powers and junk, so -"

For some reason, Dave does a quick check for a real life clock. The only one he spies hanging on the wall has been cooked by whatever explosion went off in here, but the time on his phone matches the internal tick in his head. Everything's normal, though the whole building has this freaky atmosphere that gives him the heebie jeebies. If he were a Seer or some shit maybe he'd have something more concrete to say than 'heebie jeebies,' but nobody's perfect. He thinks he'll know if something goes funky - the question is, will he know how to counter it? He's a pretty shitty time guy, all things considered, and it's hit or miss whether Aradia will impart some last minute wisdom through the time dudes and dudettes grapevine before he gets his ass handed to him. With an ominous knot tightening in his stomach, Dave stops before the door.

He was right. He does feel it. A split second of wrongness -

Someone knocks the door completely out of its frame, along with part of the wall the hinges are attached to, and punches Dave into next week.

Literally.

---

BE: oh wow, cetus is pissed :T

Really? I hadn't noticed, John thinks back, while his eardrums complain loudly. It feels like a full body migraine, and he wants to know who thought it would be a good idea to have soundwaves carry through air. Physics is a jerkwad. And it turns out that felt green décor looks puke green when you're nauseated so that's great. What kind of people work here? Who painted all of this stuff? Who coordinated the different shades of green for all the office furniture? John has so many questions.

BE: yep. definitely in a bad mood! haha, maybe even in a worse mood than typhoetus is always in. zing!

BE: which is a shame because she's extra mad at rose

BE: also, you know, corrupted by chaos and stuff

REALLY I HADN'T NOTICED, John thinks. Really, really loudly.

BE: well no need to get sassy with me! rude
We're in the middle of the Felt's evil lair and I'm already aware of the gigantic problem outside. Why am I even talking about this with you? It's like talking to myself, basically, but more dumb!

BE: ruuuuuude. you are in serious need of some touching base with your subconscious after all the time you spent neglecting it, i'll have you know

BE: also probably therapy

"Do you -ven know wh- you're doing!" Karkat asks, with a touch of despair in his voice.

"Sort of!" Feferi says, her face way too bright and chipper considering the fact that she's poking around in someone's chest cavity. Neither she nor Karkat look as though they feel the same level of general cruddiness that John's enduring, which is probably a good sign. The Breeze laps the room multiple times as Dave sidles toward the door on his future-self's chat orders - heck only knows what's up with the weird time stuff today - but the windy thing still has time to chatter at John while working out the shudders and kinks left by the passage of Cetus's attack.

At least they can all most of the way understand each other, right? John would hate dealing with another round of total mutual incomprehension. As fun as that was...

Speaking of.

EB: gamzee? you there?
EB: ...
EB: uh. be careful? with whatever you're doing.
TC: no worries.
EB: WAIT OH MY GOD YOU'RE ANSWERING MESSAGES?!?!
TC: Do: BLUE KARKAT?
EB: no, not karkat! where are you!
TC: shiiit, you all up and did me a startle. i'm around, my windbro.
TC: WATCH THAT UNFRIEND ALL UP AT YOUR DOOR.
EB: wha-

One second, there's no one but them in the vicinity - John hasn't sensed much activity on this floor, which he'd chalked up to the fact that everything was kinda sorta on fire or otherwise busted; the next, someone appears on his radar with a deep inhale, and the door explodes inward under the force of the ambush. John lurches off his butt, but Dave takes the hit and vanishes before the shattered pieces of the door hit the ground, and John has to pull up sharply before he collides with the newcomer.

A bulky woman with a white and maroon hat hanging at a precarious angle over one ear steps through the entrance, her felt green suit covered of dust and frayed at the seams. "Oh, yeah. Should not have come here, kiddies," she says, dusting off her knuckles and leaving the rest of her outfit in general disarray, her voice deceptively sweet. "Big mistake."

John drops his hand to the side and the Breeze shunts his warhammer into his grasp fully formed, the weight familiar as he settles into a battle stance. Feferi sits lit up with arcane light, a fuchsia aura throbbing and slowly spreading over the carapacian's gouged out chest with a hum that John feels vibrating in the air, and Karkat pulses blood back where it's supposed to be in a frantic rush, his head swiveling to check on John like a bobble head.

But the Felt has lost the element of surprise, and if John's remembering his hat colors correctly (and Droog is a lot of things, including a liar, a total douchenozzle, and a stickler for using hat fashion to identify her enemies), that means that the fifteenth member of the Felt, Cassandra 'not Cans no matter what Spades says' Carver just used up her one free hit on Dave, whenever and wherever he may have landed. Her super dumb Kool Aid Man gambit won't work again unless she manages to get a wall between the two of them for another ambush.

And John's not in the mood to play around. "Back off," he says, as the Breeze spins in close.

Looking bored out of her mind, Cassandra tries to barrel right into him and confiscate his hammer. She literally just...tries to grab it. John doesn't know whether to be insulted or stunned. The Felt member looks baffled when this fails to work; a shadow of a frown crosses her face, then deepens into full on confusion when John wrenches back and funnels the specibus back into the wind, summoning it again after he's got more space between him and Cassandra. While she's flummoxed, he swings the hammer straight at her face. She ducks (not as fast as Droog, not even close) and John flows into the Breeze so that her grab misses. He solidifies behind her with all his momentum intact, drops to his knees in a skid, and finishes slamming the hammer into the backs of Cassandra's knees.

She staggers - and then kicks backward without so much as a wince of pain. John's kind of put out as he spins out of the way, because he's been training! With actual sparring partners, like Kanaya and Jade and sometimes Equius, who can all take hits and keep dishing them out in turn, so he's not too shabby even after a fortnight or so of silly shenanigans. If this were a regular human or troll mobster, he'd be paranoid levels of careful not to hit them too hard, in case he broke something important. But Droog wasn't kidding or lying (and that's the real shocker right there), apparently; Cassandra's time powers relate to her surprise attacks, but even once that ambush is sprung, the Felt member can take an impossible amount of damage, shrug it off, and truck along.

...Crap on a sandwich. Of all the people to run into.

Well, if she's a damage sponge, John doesn't have to worry about pulling his punches while he keeps her distracted. Feferi and Karkat will finish faster if they don't get interrupted by Kool Aid lady. John dodges the next fist to come at him, and then does the windy thing to silt around the next. The evasive maneuvers earn him a flurry of uninvetive swear words, and the third time he dissolves out of her line of fire Cassandra powers right through his patch of rustling windy-stuff and smashes through the much abused wall into the hallway. For a split second John worries that he missed the trick entirely, and that the Felt member managed to ambush someone new on the far side of the wall - but no, Cassandra jerks around and marches right back into the room, sneering two feet to the left of John where he was originally hovering.

Then she makes a break for the others. "Coward," she spits at the air, using her foot to shove debris out of the way and clear a path to Karkat and Feferi.

Bluh, bluh. John rolls his eyes and floats right in front of the Felt member's shins to play human trip wire as he turns solid again. Cassandra crashes over him with a shout, and John barrel rolls to the side so she can't grapple him down onto the floor. After teleport spam practice with Jade, this is suddenly easy. Then Spades Slick charges out to meet the toppled Felt member with a knife as she catches herself on her knees. Oh jeez - and wait, hold on. John is ninety percent sure that's the big kitchen knife last seen in the apartment kitchen back in Seattle.

God...dammit.

SS: Shit fucking name stealing dame-napping crew-appropriating felty bastards!

SS: I'll merger your ass!

Then Spades launches a stabbing extravaganza, latching onto Cassandra's shoulders and hacking at random. Which is pretty much always what Spades does, so. Yeah. It kind of throws a wrench in things on John's part - he lifts his warhammer, then lowers it to ponder the situation. On the one hand, clobbering both of them at once would make the out of control stabbing stop, as well as hopefully knocking the Felt member out for the foreseeable future.

But does John really want to test what'll happen if he knocks Spades out with Karkat right here in the room? How much effect does that oathy business even have?

Eh. What's the worst that could happen? Shrugging, John smashes them with a hammer.

It's like all he does is lightly bonk Cassandra on the head. Talk about anticlimactic. And dumb. Spades kicks and scrambles out of the way like the Felt member's a jungle gym, and bares his teeth at John spitefully while Cassandra shakes herself off and starts marching back toward John with murder in her eyes. Now he's got two assholes glaring at him, one of whom is technically supposed to be on his side, but basically? John got their attention, which is what he wanted, so who's the real winner here? He lures Cassandra away from Karkat and Feferi, floating backward and hoping to heck that no one decides to barge in through the giant hole in the wall behind him. "Almost done!" Feferi calls.

"Great! Keep going!" John calls back, and then he dodges and twists out of Cassandra's path, trying to stay mostly solid so that she doesn't dismiss him again. It means he has to get really acrobatic about some of his turns, legs flying wide as the Breeze lashes around his knees and blasts the Felt member in the face. Spades clings to her back like a spindly koala and continues to stab wildly, but it's clear the carapacian isn't making much of a dent, either - there's hardly any blood. John can't afford to take his eyes off her for longer than it takes to avoid her punches - Droog wasn't clear on whether sucker punches count for Cassandra's powers, after her initial attack, and John won't risk it. But he's starting to worry about Dave, who still hasn't reappeared. And Rose. And Jade.

Focus! Focus, focus! John does a handspring off a desk and then flips around to bring the hammer down while bouncing back over Cassandra's head. Once again his attack fails to hurt or slow her in any noticeable way, but John follows it up with an extra-powerful blast of wind that catches the Felt member in the back at hurricane strength. He throws her careening out into the hallway, and Spades gets dragged along for the ride, but John's really not gonna insult the carapacian's cutthroat sensibilities by worrying about him (too much). He's got a lot of worries already on his plate, okay? John lands light on his toes and stations himself in the middle of the wall wreckage and gets ready to hold the line against the Felt member there until Karkat and Feferi give the all-clear.

Thankfully, this isn't too hard. Compared to how many stressful fights he's been in with members of the Midnight Crew alone, this is a breeze! A cakewalk!

Aaand the urge to text that to the group memo is way too strong. Curse Pesterchum; curse the oh-so-convenient lure of instant messaging. Maybe he should have Sollux ban him for a bit in the future, when instant communication is a little less vital to coordinating their survival.

BE: ooh, i could message for you so you don't have to worry about typing! just got to switch two letters...

EB: see? then you take out the spaces between each line, and -

_Do I even want to know the creepy metaphysical logistics of that? Don't answer, please._

BE: your loss! i just like passing on messages...

This is so not the time. _Do you have any advice for how to knock this guy out?_ John asks, watching as Spades's stabfest finally provokes Cassandra into wrenching her arms back to attempt to peel him off her shoulders. The Breeze doesn't answer, but Spades does. The Dersite crawls down around her waist and hooks around to start stabbing her in the arm, leaving one claw free to start signing and emitting a cranky growl in John's head.

SS: We need more ammo, dammit! At least two machine guns, pronto!

"I don't shoot people!" John yells back, exasperated. "Congrats, you're stuck here with us gun-deprived heroes, so I'm just saying - literally any other plan would be great!"

SS: Ugh! Well, if you wanna piss around forever, just keep whacking her with the damn hammer!

Cassandra rips Spades off her with a vicious shout, dangling him at arm's length as she gives him a rattling shake. "He sends me to fight a coward, and you - you're just a homicidal idiot," she says, scathing.

Spades stabs his knife all the way through the meat of her wrist, stark metal jutting out of the underside of her arm at an angle. The Felt shrieks and flings Spades into a wall before he can rip the blade free, leaving the kitchen knife lodged in her wrist. Kind of put out, John pre-emptively kicks off the rubble and hits her hard, as suggested.

They're going to be here all day, at this rate, and they don't have all day. What a pain in the neck.

"Okay! Done!" Feferi says. Cassandra wheels back toward the sound and John kicks her in the face, which buys him enough time to look back and see Feferi bouncing up off her knees and lacing her claws to stretch her arms out in front of her. Behind her, the carapacian lady stands up, her kindly dark eye crinkled as she tests her footing; Karkat hovers right by her elbow to catch her if she staggers, looking marginally less high on power than Feferi does. Feferi flashes sharp teeth as she grins, her eyes as luminescent as John's "Let's get kraken!"

Spades scrambles away from the wall in a dead run, crouching and nimbly vaulting past John to reach the Prospitian lady. He takes off his scruffy suitjacket as he skids to a stop and folds it over the other carapace's shoulders so she can button it up over the smooth expanse of healed shell. Meanwhile, Feferi spins out her 2x3dent and leaps into the fray; John ducks out of her way so she can try to fork Cassandra. The Felt member dodges so that the trident lodges in the floor instead of her leg, but in doing so she walks right into the flat end of John's hammer. He feels the recoil rattle his shoulder in its socket, and still... nothing. Cassandra swings right back at his face with a screech, her stabbed arm flying a little uncontrollably out to the side.

When John comes back solid, he sees that actually, yeah, he made a dent in Cassandra's face. Half of it has already started to swell with bruises, but that doesn't faze her or slow her down. Feferi uses her trident as a pivot to kick high, nailing Cassandra smack in the nose, and then kicks with her other foot to send both of them rolling across the floor. Karkat follows right after, sliding to sweep Cassandra's legs out from under her when she tries to wrestle on top of Feferi, and then backs out of reach, one sicklekind flowing down from his wrist. When Cassandra gets up, she can't figure out who to turn towards first; her face turns a mottled red, and the knife lodged in her wrist has been jostled and left at a horrible angle, blood streaming along her sleeve.

She dives at John, which is a sneaky move - he dissolves because it's just reflex, at this point, and she charges through the gap he leaves before facing Karkat and Feferi. Thoroughly miffed, John turns solid again so she has to deal with being surrounded on three sides again. So there, haha. Feferi tosses the ends of her dark hood back over her shoulder as she straightens, then rushes forward with her trident branfished (oh, he's got to remember to tell her that one, later). Karkat reaches out a hand, claws spread wide, and Cassandra flinches and skids to a stop in front of John, agony rippling across her face as she turns sheet-white. She turns unsteadily to dodge under Feferi at the last second and manages to avoid getting hooked around the neck by the prongs of the 2x3dent, so John puts his hands together for Feferi to bounce off before she can hit the ground. She floats just enough so that she hits his hands square on and kicks off backward, her hair and hood flying as she knocks Cassandra in the back of the head. The Felt member trips right over Karkat's crouched back and hits the ground with a heavy thud.

Then John snaps his fingers, and the wind launches Cassandra into the ceiling.

He does it twice, for good measure, then sets her down not-very-gently. "Done?" he asks Karkat, who's closest, while the Breeze cackles in his ear.

Cassandra sits bolt upright. Her nose is thoroughly broken and she's lost her hat - the Breeze is currently tossing the battered piece of headgear around near the ceiling.

"No, she's just fucking pissed, which is the story of my life," Karkat reports, kicking Cassandra in the stomach when she tries to grab him by the leg. She ignores the kick and shoves Karkat back through the hole in the wall to fall into the room where Spades and the other carapacian are huddled. Blood dribs down into her mouth as she breathes hard and glowers at Feferi. "Oh, fuck off!" bursts out of Karkat, and for a second John has to fight back laughter at the pure, unadulterated fury in Karkat's shout. He hooks Cassandra's legs out from under her, then flies back into the room to help Karkat extricate himself from the broken remains of an office chair. "What even the fuck are you made of, shit bricks?!"

John groans. "Yeah, this is getting us...absolutely nowhere. Spades, this plan is dumb!"

Spades, still hugging his...girlfriend close, gives them a sour look.

SS: Seriously, do none of you punks carry a machine gun?! All I've got are semis and revolvers.

Feferi raises her trident to parry Cassandra's wild punch, then gives Spades a mystified blink. "Aren't those illegal?"

SS: If you people weren't working for me for free, I would revoke your damn membership in this group for that kinda baloney. Illegal, my shiny ass. The fuckin' audacity.

MP: Oh dear. Does anyone else hear that -

The voice is coming from way down the hall. The Breeze swoops out to catch the sound and bring it closer to John's ear, but he doesn't need the help; they're shouting pretty loud. "Ta -!"

"Another one?" Karkat asks, cracking his neck to the side with a scowl.

"- lly -!"

Whoever's coming this way isn't trying for stealth att all. John can hear their footsteps pap-papping along the green carpet with aplomb. Feferi and Cassandra, still in the hall, look to their left in confusion. John blinks as he realizes who he's hearing. "No, wait, that's totally -"

Feferi blinks in recognition and jumps straight up into the air, fuchsia wings fluttering as she gets clear. "- HOOOOOOO!" Jake yodels at the top of his lungs, tackling Cassandra to the ground. He punches her once across the face as they hit the ground and when Cassandra doesn't sit right back up, Jake lifts his head, jumps up, and flashes them all a grin. "Wooo! Take that! Another jolly bout of fisticuffs!"

Everyone else, including John, waits for Cassandra to get up. Her head lolls to the side, her eyes rolled back - out cold.

SS: ...How in the shit did he do that?

BE: in my professional opinion as a professional windy thing~?

SS: Don't talk to me.

BE: he didn't know he shouldn't have been able to!

Karkat rubs his temples, and John can see the exact moment in Karkat's eyes when he decides questioning this would be pointless. "Ok, wow! Fine! Is everybody good? Glad we could avoid the rest of the wacky slapstick routines that were no doubt in store for us, I'm sick to death of them."

"Nah, you love it," John says. Karkat stares at him with empty eyes that scream, 'fucking say that again, I dare you,' and John decides not to push his luck.

"Does that really work, blue razz pop rocks?" Terezi asks, using her cane to start nudging Cassandra's unconscious body out of her way. She holds out a fist for Feferi to bump as the other troll flutters down from the ceiling in a sparkly cloud.

BE: oh, more often than you'd think!

Terezi grins. "Well then. Excellent work, my green apple sour punch straw comrade."

Jake rubs the back of his neck, sheepish. "Oh, shoot. They had her on the ropes already when I got here."

John shakes his head and shrugs at Karkat and Spades' identical offended stares - do I look like I'm in charge of this stuff? - and then rolls his shoulder gingerly as he takes stock of Jane and Roxy, following on Terezi's heels. "You guys all made it in here okay?" he asks, kind of impressed, as Roxy helps Terezi wedge Cassandra into a corner. Feferi helps, mostly by pouting her lips and prodding Cassandra's limp form with her specibus; apart from the rise and fall of the Felt member's chest, though, that appears to be that. Karkat storms over with zipties in hand and squats down to tie Cassandra's wrists and ankles together. Jane stands in the busted doorway, stern and forbidding as she scans the hallway, while John whips out his phone to check Cassandra off their Felt spreadsheet (still editable by everyone, despite Rose's threats to the contrary).
"Didn't meet too many people on the way up," Terezi says, flapping her hand at John. "And when we did, I had some wonderful assistants! At this rate, we're going to run out of zipties, and you know I just cannot function without enough rainbow zipties to cuff every lawbreaker in the building." She snaps her claws and holds out an imperious hand, waggling her claws expectantly.

John checks his pockets, but he already knows what he's going to find. "I've only got blue and black," he warns.

Terezi sighs deeply as she accepts his offering. "Oh, John. John, John, John. Karkat, cough 'em up."

Karkat looks supremely pleased with himself, folding his arms. "I only use black. There was a sale on Amazon."

Terezi sighs so hard that she tilts back on her heels, and stuffs John's zipties into her pocket. John, on the other hand, has so many questions. "You...you buy your zipties online?" he says, staring at Karkat. "Doesn't that...leave a paper trail?"

Karkat sniffs. "You haven't seen the other recommended items they try to sell you on there, have you."

"No," John says, grimacing when Terezi starts snickering at him, "because I try not to buy stuff for my secret hero life off Amazon. Not without like, three proxies!"
"Let's just say that a troll above a certain age purchasing kismesis-shade restraints on the Internet doesn't draw a lot of attention," she drawls, winking at Karkat, who looks distinctly uncomfortable. "Humans are probably too squishy for zipties to work, but I mean you can always get creative -"

"Oh, my my!" Feferi giggles.

Basically, he's learned that any conversation involving Terezi is going to turn into an endless snickerbarrage at John's expense, which is always mildly infuriating in ways that John tries not to examine because hell no, and John thinks they need to cut and run before this gets any weirder. They have stuff to do. Things! "Aaanyway, you guys are heading upstairs?" he asks, begging Jake and Roxy with his eyes in the hopes that they'll answer instead of Terezi. Roxy shrugs and signs something involving 'applesauce,' a non-sequitur which John chalks up to them not actually understanding non-Dave sign language that doesn't revolve around an apple-themed vocabulary.

"Yup," Jane says, her voice clipped.

"Dirk's up there, so yes," Jake agrees.

Terezi adjusts her red glasses, spinning her cane before thumping it on the floor. "For now. I can't quite see yet, but this is the place to be! I think I'll know what I'm looking for when I see it." She nods at John, leaning in close enough that he has to take a step back. "Go see Rose, oh wayward heir. I think you have something left to do out there, before you sort anything else out."

John sidles closer to Karkat. Karkat is zero help, because Terezi trolls him just as hard sometimes as she does John, but it makes John feel better. "Oh. Uh, thanks, Terezi." Then, without pausing, he tries to talk at the scratch kids again. "Will you guys be alright on your own? I've seen enough comics and anime to know that if the boss guy is on the top floor, you're only going to run into stronger enemies as you head up."

Roxy shrugs, then punches her fist into the palm of her other hand. Jane turns and arches an eyebrow at him. Jake appears to have mentally checked out of the conversation in favor of jumping back out past Jane, a pistolkind in his hand as he jogs out of sight down the hall to do recon.

"I'll go along with them!" Feferi folds down her fingers and holds up her hand in a phone sign by her frilled ear, smiling. "Just message me if anyone need help, and you can come get me right awave!"

"What about you two?" Karkat asks, facing the exact opposite direction from John, and John turns his head before the rest of his body catches up. The Prospitian carapacian shakes her head, her dark eyes thoughtful. She's holding Spades' hand, their segmented claws interlaced so that Spades can only hold (what John can only assume is) a new knife in one hand rather than both. Seeing concern instead of vicious irritation on Spades' face is...so dang weird.

MP: I - I may need to sit, for just a bit longer.

SS: You take all the time you need, darlin'.

The Prospitian closes her eyes and pats Spades' arm with her free claw, the sleeve of his suitjacket flopping too long over the ends of her fingers.

MP: It's not safe here, though. We'll need to leave the building soon.

MP: It has been lovely to meet you all. Thank you, dear Witch.
To John’s endless gratitude, no one else is dead when they get back outside. His first instinct is to do a Vriska check, which is kinda sad. He sets himself and Karkat down as close to Rose and Kanaya as he can without getting all up in their personal bubbles, and nearly headbutts Bro when he tries to flashstep to the same empty space at the same time. That guy does not respect windy airspace. “Yo,” is all he says once John single-handedly fixes their landing situation, and it’s about twenty bajillion times more annoying than when Dave does it. He's hunkered down on the edge of the roof, sporting a wide cut across his cheek that looks stupidly badass instead of painful as he contemplates the huge whale monster swallowing up the street. "Everything cool?"

"Actually, no. Fighting giant monsters and healing gory fucking chest wounds is only 'cool' if you're a fuckface with no common sense who lives and breathes liquid bullshit," Karkat says, holding up his claws. When he realizes that there's no blood on them to prove his point, he flings them out to either side and takes a deep breath, eyes scrunched shut in apparent agony. "Fuck. All of this."

"Mm. Stay clear for a bit," Bro says, unfazed. "Serket and Ampora are going to town."

"They were doing that when we le- oh. That," John says, when he finishes registering the massive lightshow playing out along Cetus’s vast head. Vriska and Eridan are two golden and white blobs of light that dart around Cetus like super fireflies. John shades his eyes with a hand to watch the flares of light play out along the underside of the clouds; squinting to try to pick out their actual bodies inside their crackling auras doesn’t help, it just makes his eyes water. Cetus hasn't shifted from her original position much, which is a minor relief.

It would be more of a relief if it looked like the denizen was getting worn out by the fight; more than half of the denizen's body is scorched black and split to reveal nasty tentacles circulating under the skin, but Cetus's outer tentacles keep sprouting and lashing out with just as much energy as before. If John concentrates, he can hear the Breeze humming along with whatever music is playing in the background, with an occasional BE: doodoodoo-doo, doo-doo-dooooodoodoo- that just sounds silly.

Vriska slashes with her sword, and the extravagant burst of light nearly blinds John for a full three seconds. She has to be doing that on purpose. God dammit, Vriska. "Ow," John says, for emphasis. Karkat doesn't catch the hint in time, and turns to see what John's looking at. He mashes his hands over his eyes immediately, swearing up a storm.

Bro hands them both shades. John doesn't want to know how many of these things he has on his person at any given time, because John keeps losing all the pairs he's received. John gives up and puts them on; Karkat looks like he would rather throw them into the sun, even if it means setting himself on fire in the process. Instead, the troll rubs his eyes one last time and heads over to Kanaya and Rose. John goes with him, walking along the edge of the roof to get to where Kanaya is giving Bro the evil eye, her chainsaw covered in gross Horrorterror gunk and red. "Welcome back," the jadeblood says, perfectly cordial.

"Welcome to the club," Rose says, her nail clicking as she taps her visor. She leans with one arm on the side of an A/C unit, her hand curled into a fist next to her forehead, while her hood sits heavy over her brow, the orange fabric almost obscuring her eyes.

"You're okay?" John asks, because it's a dumb question but it's a normal question, and humans could probably make small-talk through the apocalypse.

"Quite." She pushes off with her arm, and a tiny trickle of blood runs down from under her golden shades. Karkat skips off with her arm, and a tiny trickle of blood runs down from under her golden shades. Karkat skips right past Kanaya like a troll on a mission and grabs Rose's hood so he can look at her face. "Okay enough to rejoin the fight," Rose says, lifting her visor and tilting her head up so that Karkat can inspect her horrifically bloodshot eyes. John hasn't seen eyes that red except in gross Considering how much damage has been done to Cetus's eyes, John's increasingly concerned by this. Bro opens his mouth before he can. "Not happening," he says, his monotone barely audible over Cetus's next screech. John doesn't notice anything in Bro's posture that might indicate he's about to move, but Kanaya bristles and raises her chainsaw out to the side in a silent warning. Bro just tilts his head in acknowledgement and keeps watching the fight.

"I have to," Rose says, her voice tight. "This should be my fight, my responsibility. This isn't going to end, no matter what Eridan and Vriska throw at it."

It makes a gross amount of sense. "I'll take you down," John whispers, though he's sure Bro can hear well enough. Heck only knows Samuel had ears like a hawk, and Rue on a good day can hunt you down from halfway across the lab if she suspects you're about to do something dumb - parents have a sixth sense for rebellious muttering, apparently.

He wonders how they're doing. He can't remember the last time anyone let him check on Samuel - which he's alright with, considering how queasy the mere thought makes him feel. He'd be fine if he never heard from that guy again, actually.

TR: lolololol~~~~~

Karkat breaks in on John's thinky thoughts, coming in right on the tail end of Rose's quiet, 'Thank you,' with, "Vriska is going to blow both of you up if you go down there. This is Vriska we're talking about. Look at her, she's all over the fucking place! And like Eridan's any better -" Karkat gestures at the battlefield before them with enough vehemence that he jostles Rose by her hood, and she raises her eyebrows at John. Her eyes are more pinkish than oh god what happened red, but when Karkat realizes Rose is making a slow escape he snaps back to attention.

"She won't. Probably. She wants to win. She doesn't get anything out of blowing up people who are already god tier," John points out.

"She's a fucking menace, and she wants to kill alllllll the bosses." That Vriska impression could win Karkat an academy award. "She'll blow you up by accident like a glittery volcano of pixie bullshit, and I don't know why she's twiddling her claws out there in that magical shitstorm when she's already killed this denizen before." Karkat finishes sticking Rose's blood back in its capillaries, or whatever the crap he's doing with his blood thing to make Rose look less like a blood mage, and then folds his arms in a huff.

"Vriska's already won once. It might not matter how many lucky shots she gets in - it's not her denizen. Not anymore." Rose says, grim. "I have to be involved."

Kanaya keeps her chainsaw pointed at Bro with one hand, and raises the other. She doesn't wait for anyone to call on her, but John thinks it comes close. Karkat's sarcasm engine cranks into high gear when he's strained like this. "I feel like I should point out that we also do not know how to beat Horrorterrors," Kanaya says neutrally, loud enough that Bro can probably hear her, but with the tone of someone just making conversation. "Which could be a significant part of the problem. Maybe only you can defeat Cetus - or maybe Cetus is currently just ridiculously resilient because Leviathan is here. In the past, we just removed the possessed party from the equation; we've never killed a Horrorterror at all."

"Can it even be done?" John asks. It's a rhetorical question. Mostly. "Rose, you've never read a dark magic book about how to off Horrorterrors? Ever?"
"No dark magic books, kids," Bro warns half-heartedly.

Rose shakes her head. "Nothing reputable. Nothing feasible."

BE: you're on the right track

BE: so, how do do you guys get cetus un-possessed...?

John, Rose, and Karkat all answer at the same time. John thinks he gets the gist of it with, "Equius!" while Rose gets a little more wordy with, "We need Equius."

And then there's Karkat, who snaps his claws and says, "Shove Equius up its ass and call it a fucking day. Where is that fuck?"

BE: ...uh. still with nepeta and tavros

Rose gives a brisk shake of her head and steps up to stand by Kanaya. John comes up on her otherside while the two girls clasp hands, and then offers an arm to Rose as they all eyeball Bro in unison.

"Do," he says, shades glinting in Vriska and Eridan's violent light, "Not." He still won't look directly at them.

"We'll be careful," Rose says, and John can't tell if she's saying it as a legit promise or as an empty way to ensure she has some kind of plausible deniability later on. John dissolves them into the air, and the Breeze streams them away before Bro can interfere. Cetus's shouts still vibrate through the air, but she doesn't scream or renew her motif as they arrow toward the tell-tale roar of Tavros's rocketchair, which means that John can make himself and Rose solid again without issue or the full-body equivalent of his ears ringing.

He also lands them right in the wide back seat of Tavros's gratuitously expanded wheelchair, just as it surges up under them, so he and Rose both knock their knees hard. "¡La madrelarva que me parió!" Tavros shrieks, clutching his chest and whipping around so fast he nearly smacks Nepeta with his wide horns, his mohawk in total disarray.

"Can we help you?" Nepeta asks, leaning half over the side of the rocketchair and lacerating the side of one of Cetus's gargantuan tentacles with her claws. She doesn't seem fussed by two extra people popping up in the back of her ride; her olive eyes are already scanning for their next opening, and she nudges Tavros with a hand to point him down below Eridan's next burst of rapid-fire strikes.

"Need Equius!" John yells as Tavros does a loop-de-loop under one of Cetus's tentacles. This close, everything reeks of rotten seafood, and the Breeze rushing around them in screaming delight can only do so much when the smell permeates everything. It's like being on a rollercoaster from a nightmare theme park, only there's no track under their cart - just Tavros's flying intuition, and the Breeze having the time of its life rocketing them through two converging tentacles at top speed.

"Oh, sure, he's around here somewhere," Nepeta says, batting her hair out of her face and saying 'mew' so fast in 'somewhere' that John thinks he might just be hearing things. "I'll call him." She takes a deep breath, nearly chokes on her own hair when Tavros's next desperate spin of the controls sends her hair flying back, and hacks until her mouth is free. "EQUIHISSSS!!!"

"Nepeta, not in public, please -" Equius's voice emits from nowhere, apparently; the Breeze tries to amplify the oddly muted sound, but then it gets distracted by Tavros strafing the rocketchair at a weird angle.
"They need your help with something," Nepeta hollers. She lets go of the side of the rocketchair and raises both claws to dig into Cetus's side - and then Tavros spins them wildly with a hoarse scream, and John snaps out his hand to seize the back of Nepeta's jacket and pin both her and Rose to the floor of the rocketchair while it does a barrel roll. "Be nice!" Nepeta says once they stop wheeling through the air, sounding almost out of breath with excitement.

A deep sigh from the void. "What do you need?" John catches a glimpse of pitch black hair in the corner of his eye, and Equius turns solid enough that John can feel the troll's outline filling in with stuff that matters.

Unfortunately, Equius's weight also starts to fill in again, and the rocketchair starts to list to the right. "Okay, can we not do this on my wheelchair right this second? Please?" Tavros asks. "I would like to not, uh, die. I need to concentrate."

"Going, going! Sorry," John says, and he releases Nepeta's coat so she can go back to dangling over the side of the rocket without him impeding her furious swipes. "We'll get out of your hair right away." Tavros jerks the rocketchair up, and the turbulence rattles John's knees against the floor. Let's go, he tells the Breeze, in his best impression of a stern adult voice, because the Breeze seems seriously distracted by this point.

BE: silly, you could have talked here! i wouldn't have let us hit anything!

"We'll meet over there!" John says, pointing at a roof that lacks any sign of Bro lurking in the wings, and despite its complaints, the Breeze obliges him at once, Equius (hopefully) in their wake.

---

Jack Noir tears pulsing gashes open in their wake, and Jade feels every one of them like a hole punching through her awareness. Jade can only hold him for a flash before she feels her hands start to burn, and she shoves him away over Los Angeles.

It's much cooler here, but that's all she can process before Noir's on her again in a blink, jaws gaping open almost 90 degrees and crunching down toward her face. Jade drops out of the way and swings back upright with a tranq gun primed and ready to fire.

Instead of dodging, Noir clenches his fist and the dart bursts into flames before it leaves the barrel. And then the gun is on fire, and everything is awful. Gritting her teeth, Jade hurls the rapidly dissolving gun at the carapace's head. She doesn't hang around to watch him blow it to smithereens; she zaps behind him and punches, catching him square at the base of his skull and bouncing both of them all the way to the desert near El Paso. In the back of her head, she's trying to aim for somewhere with as few people and/or important things as possible. But that's really, really hard when Noir fights her for every atom as she tries to end the teleport.

She screws up the landing because she's focused more on keeping her legs in one piece than on her orientation compared to the ground; her shoulder scrapes over a protruding rock before she blasts upright, skimming backward to stay out of Noir's range.

JN: This has been a long time coming.

"You know, I can barely understand you when you talk like that! Seriously!" Jade says. His voice sounds like how she imagines a radioactive snot smoothie would taste, but with the slimey sensation smeared all over her brain instead of her tongue, which is somehow worse. Like, geez! How does Terezi stand smelling and tasting colors like this? She must have an amazing tolerance to make comparisons to delicious food and candy all the time. "You sound like a runny nose, and it's nasty!" she adds, just so that Noir, you know, knows. The odds of him changing his mental voice on command are probably pretty low, but she has to try.

JN: Get fucked, witch-bitch!

So much for that plan. "Real mature! Best insult! So creative!" Jade fires back. Noir snarls and bursts into woozy green flame, diving after her and swiping for her legs with claws that singe her leg hairs from ten feet away. He teleports with hardly any delay after her as she starts darting between the scrub. She tries to trick him into zapping right into a thistly bush, but it turns out that both avoiding the bushes and dancing around them just ends with Noir's blasts of green setting the foliage alight. It doesn't burn normally, either - the fire eats through the bushes too fast, searing down through the branches and eating into the ground itself before subsiding into sludgy ash that crackles with fitful sparks.

Jade can't fight the sinking feeling that they're leaving a trail of radioactive puddles in their wake. If the planet weren't already pretty doomed, she'd be more worried about how to come back and dispose of this properly. For now, she doesn't have the luxury of stopping to clean it up - Jack Noir's claws flare up and the space fire licks at her heels, and Jade picks up the pace as they rapidfire teleport over the border into New Mexico. She's got a mental map of the nearest roads in her head (few and far between out here, thankfully) but no matter how she mixes up her teleports and bounces in unpredictable zig zags, he keeps narrowing the gap. Jade bats him away with a kick, her foot wreathed in her own space aura, but he bounces off the ground, tumbles butt over head exactly once, and then claws his way back upright to rip open a hole and continue the chase. For a second, his face looks like a ceramic plate someone glued back together after it shattered on the floor, all the mismatched, overlapping pieces mashed back together with molten green lacquer in a bizarre parody of kintsugi, and Jade shudders with visceral horror.

Negative charge builds over her head, a stinging heat that Jade feels across her scalp, and she bounces out of the way just as green lightning forks down out of the clear sky. Noir directs the lightning with a glowing claw of power, his teeth bared so much that it further warps his facial structure. "Your face is gonna stick like that, you jerk!" Jade yells, and then sticks her tongue out. What she wants is one good, solid punch - or the time to charge up something that can really make a dent in this guy - but the way he leaves space in tatters to teleport the way he does makes it harder to tell where he's going and coming from.

And the more time they hang around here, the more the space around them feels...shredded.

Noir snaps his claws, and the lightning arcs into a cage of hot plasma around Jade. She zaps out of the way with immense effort; if she'd waited a split second longer, the lightning wouldn't branched enough that she might not have been able to find a way through before she was completely entangled. Desperate, she pushes off the ground and cartwheels all the way to New York City like a rubber band snapping.

NYC is even less good than Los Angeles - Jade hears screams ring out almost as soon as Noir plummets out of the sky after her, his marbled plumage full of sour galaxies that gobble up the space around him and leave neon green wing afterimages embedded in the sky. This city has had longer to recover from its grim incident than Los Angeles has, and there's wayyy too many people on the repaved streets. Jade pulls up sharply; her hair and hood fail to get the memo as she stops with one toe brushing the hood of someone's car. A tiny dog lets out a shrieking bark from the passenger's seat as its owner slams on the brakes. "'Scuse me pardon me heads up!" Jade chants, jumping off the car and hopping up to the streetlight, which she accidentally knocks askew. Then she races up the side of a building that's still under reconstruction, a torn-open wreck of empty windows, twisted support beams, and scaffolding. Noir bolts after her, a toxic arrow on her radar. His wings cut through the scaffolding like it is softened butter and it starts to sag and slough off the side of the building. Jade slams her palms down against it in a handstand and captchalogues the mess before it can tumble down to the street.

It starts melting a hole in her sylladex space. This is incredibly distracting, because Jade has important stuff in there! It's distracting and very not good and a lot of other, stronger words. Jade ejects the scaffolding at top speed somewhere over the upper bay, hoping to heck that she hasn't punted it at a random sightseeing boat as she follows out of the city.

She whips around in time to see Noir shear through the waist of the Statue of Liberty and Equality in one swoop. The head and wings of the statue already got totaled after Leviathan's run through New York, and now the rest of the torso slides off the rest of the metal base with a terrible, sharp screech.

...Whoops. There goes that national monument. The colossal statue pitches down toward the island below, and Jade skids under Noir when he lunges, zaps forward, and kicks the statue with all her might. She manages to shove it a few yards to the right with a wave of force, but that's not enough, and Noir stabs at her with a sword when she pauses to reassess how much mass she needs to shift. She bounces out of the way, scrambling up the side of the statue while it simultaneously falls, and finally slams her palms together in a rush, compressing the statue into nice, person-sized proportions. It's still heavy, but this time her roundhouse kick successfully knocks it over the water, where it lands with an enormous sploosh.

Noir slams into her airspace and buffets her horizontally with his wing and elbow. The two of them tumble and skid right up to base of the pitcher's mound at Yankee Stadium, leaving a trail of green flames in the torn up dirt and bluegrass. An entire stadium full of baseball fans screams as Noir manages to land a solid punch right in Jade's stomach. She tumbles backward, more stunned than in pain, and bowls over the Yankee pitcher mid-throw. "Crap! Crap crap crap!" Jade yells, close to incoherent as she takes in all the potential civilian casualties Noir just found; the twisted carapacian raises the claw with the Queen's ring on it and green lightning starts to arc out from his hand to crisp the grass around them.

Jade jumps up, seizes the Yankee's pitcher by the back of his pinstriped jersey, and teleports out. She drops the poor guy off in the middle of Central Park, so that Noir's strike only turns the pitcher's mound into a smoldering crater. "Hi-sorry-bye!" she apologizes in a rush, leaving the stunned pitcher stranded in a tree as she streaks away to put some distance between their fight and innocent bystanders again. Noir tackles her from behind through a tear in space, and Jade yelps as New York dissolves -

-

He drags them through the crust of the earth, snapping his teeth close to her ear as he tries to force them both to solidify ten kilometers under the floor of the ocean, and Jade's not braced for it. Her powers adjust to account for the sudden, crushing pressure and temperature change without her conscious input, but for a second she can almost feel the phantom sensation of ancient basalt scraping through her bones. It feels like being encased in concrete, and she jams her elbow into a giant crack in the carapacian's side until Noir lets go so she can escape his toxic aura and zap up into the water above, skipping right past the pitch black depths of the abyss to burst into the water somewhere around 300 meters below the surface, her waterproof goggles pressed firmly over her eyes.

She emerges next to something enormous, and weirdly...familiar. Actually, she might as well have skipped the goggles, because she can barely see anything down this deep, but she can sense enough to make out a ghostly white shape that ripples beside her in surprise, its vast tentacles coiling around as it maneuvers with its head fins to spiral around and look at her.
How many giant, feral fifty-foot long giant squid lusii can there be, in the world? Jade knew these coordinates felt too familiar. "Mr Squiddle!" she burbles, sacrificing the last of her air in an explosion of surprised bubbles and almost inhaling ice cold salt water before shutting her mouth, and the giant squid replies with a reverberating BLOORP that almost makes Jade giggle and choke on the sea. It must be a bloop of considerable terror, too, because the next thing she knows, Noir teleports in front of her in a flood of eerie green light, and they both get inundated in salty black ink. Mr. Squiddle is a pretty sizeable squid, and it's...a lot of ink. The giant lusus itself flees as soon as they're both blinded, and Jade can sense it slipping deeper down into the water like a pot full of cold, limp noodles slithering away. Noir vaporizes the ink - and most of the water around them - with a furious growl, but Jade swipes the ink off her goggles and teleports up into the sky straight overhead.

Somehow, Noir doesn't catch up in an instant. Caught off guard, Jade spits up a mouthful of salt water, her dark god tier uniform soaking in the ink while her hair plasters itself down her back. For a solid ten seconds, nothing happens, and Jade's heart starts to speed up. Because if Jack's not chasing her, then he could be doing anything. Like backtracking to Las Vegas. Jade casts her space sense wide, hunting for Noir's nauseating aura.

A gaping fissure tears open right behind her, and she flips around to see a Jack Noir-shaped hole in the world that crackles with solid green-yellow light. He's not teleporting in, though; instead, an entire cargo container launches at her at top speed through the portal formed by his body. Jade dodges and the container does a swandive into the ocean far below, but Noir's green afterimage follows her like a dogged shadow, propelling one twelve meter long container at her after another, like an absolutely broken combination of a shipping containerkind and a machinegunkind. Jade tries to fool him by teleporting somewhere east of the island where she grew up and then bouncing up so that the container he fires launches up in a straight line and then starts to fall right back down on his head. She lands on the short end of the container feet first and gives it an extra shove for good measure, but that just sends it rocketing into the water at mach speed - Noir's afterimage flickers out of the way and then starts to expand.

A lot.

By the time his wing span reaches fifty meters across, Jade's more than prepared to run like hell. Noir seems content to chuck it at her, regardless of the fact that she can clearly see it coming. The front end of a cargo ship peeks through. The rest of the ship follows really, really fast. It's ungainly as all heck and Jade easily shifts herself out of the way - the problem is that she can't sense anyone on board. She just gets the faint impression that somewhere in Noir's incandescent green afterimage, people are screaming. And she has no idea how to get them out, or where they'll land. The scratch kids fell butt-first into Noir's miasma and landed somewhere Jade could reach them, relatively intact, but the people who used to be on that cargo ship? She can't even begin to untangle the mangled vortex that is Noir's power. He warps the space around him, and what he doesn't warp, he destroys.

Jade can't keep dodging him forever while he makes Swiss cheese and mincemeat and other assorted metaphorical foodstuffs out of the fabric of space! The second Noir stops projectile vomiting stuff at her and exposes his physical body again, she needs to start trying different weapons from her sylladex to get that ring off him. Keeping this over the Pacific should at least minimize the chances of running into people - maybe Antarctica if she needs a backup location - but nothing's stopping Noir from hightailing it halfway around the planet if he loses interest in attacking Jade.

So it doesn't make sense when she teleports, heading further east into open water - and her powers snap her over Lake Michigan. She flails for an embarrassing few seconds, trying to wrap her head around where she went wrong. "Crap!" Improvising, she snatches up a cube of water as tall as she is and douses Noir when he appears. Most of it evaporates on contact, but enough lake water splashes the carapacian that he stops and blinks, momentarily hornswoggled. She's successfully manage to jimmy his rustles, but that doesn't help her process why she just teleported straight to Chicago instead of Grandpa's destroyed lab in the Pacific.

Something's off. Very off. Worryingly off. But apart from Noir, reigniting his fiery aura with a snap of his claws, Jade can't put her finger on what. She plucks a rifle kind out of the air - thank goodness it comes out in one piece - and fires. Noir absorbs the shot in his torso, and then the bullet fires back at her in a pulse of green. Jade feels it rip through her hair as she ducks, ripping right through a tangle and jerking her head back a little before she recovers.

She doesn't want to pull out the gun full of Eridan's glittery hope magic. What would happened if she fired that thing? Would it just form a dome, or would it act like a laser or a bullet or what? She needs something Noir can't deflect or fire back, and Jade's running short on ideas already. All she can do is analyze Noir's twisted, destructive version of her space powers, and try to suss out a way to get that ring off him without getting sucked into the swirling vortex.

DM: ...hear me?

Jade's not sure whether that ping comes from her chat window, or if it's a mental voice; it's so faint that she almost can't make out the words. Noir charges at her and she tries to pull one of his tricks, summoning orbs of power around her fists and punching them at his face like projectiles. They make his face and shoulders shudder and creak in horrible jolts, but Noir ignores it and keeps pelting forward, nothing in his eyes but burning hate. Jade gears up for another teleport, and tries to aim for the ocean again. She just needs to stay focused -

DM: ...shouldn't come closer...

- she reappears somewhere underground. Dang it! She's somewhere under Chicago, the damp floor of some random cave squelching under her heel as she lands. Is she getting tired? They've made a bunch of rapid jumps over the course of this fight; she's practiced, obviously, but never with a murderous superpowered carapacian matching her every step of the way. Some of these exchanges have only taken seconds, and Jade is...urgh. For some reason she can't quite do the math in her head to figure out how much time it's been since she tackled them out of Las Vegas. Dave's the time guy, anyway, he could be more precise about it if he wants to. Jade's fine with just saying 'a lot happened in a short time period,' and leaving it at that.
She turns, and her eyes widen as she takes in the sight of the huge set of scales before her. On one side sits a faintly glowing, silvery blue egg the size of a small house; on the other, a gilded sarcophagus just as tall as the egg. It looks weirdly broken and fuzzy at the edges, sits balanced over a wide black pedestal that doesn't quite touch the bottom of the scales, and flickers with alarming red and green light in the dank half-light of the cavern.

...Uh. Maybe this wasn't a random cave.

DM: Oh dear. Watch out - behind you!

The voice sounds chipper and crystal clear in Jade's head, now, with a note of anxiety, but she doesn't need the warning. Jade plants her foot flat in a dip in the rocky floor, pivots with space-enhanced precision, and snaps a kick right against Noir's chin, just as he fires a blast of energy at her. They get blown back in opposite directions.

Noir hits the far wall and leaves a winged indent with an impact that makes the whole cave shudder.

Jade slams into the tall silvery egg, and knocks it off the scales. The perfect, smooth oval curve of the egg's shell cracks as neatly as if she's rapped it against the side of a countertop. Jade bounces off the egg as it wobbles to a stop where the roof of the cave slopes down to meet the floor, wincing as the sarcophagus on the other side of the scales slams down against the black pedestal with a note of finality.
And something else cracks. Jade staggers, her stomach twisting in an ominous knot as she looks around, uneasy. That...that wasn't the egg -

DM: Eeek!

The top half of the egg crumbles, the tiny shards falling away as though it broke along pre-ordained lines. Lusus white claws poke out and proceed to peel the rest of the egg shards away, revealing a thin muzzle, spikey horns, a sleek neck -

The dragon fumbles, eyes still sealed shut with some kind of caul. Jade's jaw is just permanently hanging open, at this point, because a dragon, hello?! This is amazing!

CRACK

With a sound like a grandfather clock snapping in two, the cave quakes and convulses. And - oh. Jade knows that sound. With a juddering lurch, the sense of wrongness in the cave slides into focus.

Noir pries himself out of the indent in the wall and looks around instead of leaping at Jade right away, looking agitated as he closes a spasming fist.

They're surrounded by cracks where time has broken. Jade doesn't know how she could have missed that, before. The cave walls convulse once more, and part of the rock slides down into a crack with a faint shunk. With nothing left to support it on that side, the cavern trembles, and starts to collapse.

Noir teleports out in a flash, without even a parting quip. Jade staggers as more cracks start to eat their way through the floor of the cave, and claps her hand against the dragon's elbow, her fingers skating over the slick, soft scales of the newborn lusus. "We need to go!" she yells over the roar of the collapsing cave, and the blind dragon's muzzle swings toward her. The mental voice is just as clear, but now far more urgent.

DM: Oh, yes, please!

Permission obtained. Jade wraps her power around the lusus and teleports them as far from Chicago as she can manage.

DO YOU BELIEVE I CAN ESCAPE ME BEFORE I ARRIVE?

Chapter End Notes

The Felt spreadsheet keeps getting partially cut off by AO3, so if you want to see the full image: here
Chapter Summary

Yea, I know this well: were you once sealed mine,
Mine in the blood's beat, mine in the breath,
Mixed into me as honey in wine,
Not time, that sayeth and gainsayeth,
Nor all strong things had severed us then
Not wrath of gods, nor wisdom of men.

Chapter Notes

Edit: Rose's section is full of eye scream. Cetus grows extra eyes, and they all get messed up in some fashion. John's section starts at 'TA: AA', and involves multiple Felt deaths. Jade's section starts at 'Terezi's lusus.' There are some flashy gifs in the Lord of Time's giant font style scattered throughout.

See the end of the chapter for more notes

Oriole lands on his ass. This happens way more often than it should, in his opinion - but no one ever asks him, now do they? The butt thud echoes weirdly through the room he's landed in, and he smoothers a groan as his wings flop out too late to help. He winces and opens his eyes, looking around as he gets to his feet, the trailing ends of his feathers skimming over the dark floor. Most of the room is dark, as it happens; Oriole turns in a slow circle to regain his bearings, his ears prickling with the sudden absence of sound. There's no sign of the scratch kids or their constant chatter, and the air here feels too still. At the far end of the room he can see a single lamp hanging from the ceiling; it casts harsh white light, and the chain it hangs from sways in time with distant, rumbling roars that make the walls and ceiling rock. The giant monster battle must be on-going, then. The thin cone of light swings in time with the lamp itself, illuminating more empty space on a stark green floor.

Something's not right. How the shit did he wind up here? Oriole's eyes start to adjust a little to the pitch black of his half of the room, but he takes his phone out and ruins it with the blinding glare of the screen. He starts two separate conversations at the same time, because he's so not in the right head-space to tackle the hell that is the group memo. One chat responds straight away, while the other pauses for several long beats - he's not even sure Aradia will answer at all.

TG: you guys, I think I fell somewhere
TG: wha? youre right here tho... :
TG: we were on the stairs two seconds ago, but there was a weird gap in the air
TG: must've fallen into the basement or something...
GT: I say, though, we haven't been on any stairs yet!
TG: what the hell?
GT: We just got to the building, so! No stairs!
TG: hang on, ill jus ask u whaddup irl
Oriole jolts. He can almost hear Terezi's cackling - because they did hear it, when she snuck up on their group just outside the Felt's casino. That was almost a half hour ago, for him. Which means his other convo needs to hurry up and happen, because when he checks the time stamp on the top of the chat, it's a row of infinity signs. The phone's clock keeps spasming and glitching, the numbers flickering at the top of the screen.

TG: it's happening again, isn't it
TG: shit
TG: Aradia -
AA: yes it has
AA: youre lucky it wasn't worse
TG: since when does broken time-y bullshit drop you into some creepy ass dungeon realm?
AA: it doesn't usually! but the building you're in is also riddled with space malformations and tears
AA: i think you're only 28 minutes behind where you were but its hard for me to tell from a safe distance TG: how safe a distance?
AA: in the medium safe! with what's about to happen that tower is the last place i want to be AA: i also have some important stuff to catch up on over here :P
TG: oh, cool
TG: I'll just, you know, chill in the dank dungeon realm for a bit TG: anyway yeah I'm fucked, aren't I
AA: you'll be fine!
AA: just be careful not to fall into another nexus of destructive forces like that TG: yeah, kinda-sorta sprite shit can probably only save my ass so many times before it runs out
TG: I guess it could be worse - I could have landed in the gross monster swamp outside
AA: fall into enough holes in time and space and ill give anybody indigestion TG: thanks anyway aradia
AA: no problem! take care!

Well, he's stuck in a basement and has time to kill before he catches up with where he left off. God, this is already making his head hurt. Squaring his shoulders, Oriole aims for the swinging light fixture, since it's the only point of reference he has in here.

Almost immediately, he knocks into something solid and person-shaped with the edge of his wing, and he yanks away, his body stooping down in a defensive crouch. He can hear a rope creaking and can detect faint movement just a foot from him, but apart from that sighing creak, squeaking in and out of time with the swaying lamp, he can't see enough to tell who or what he hit. Another step back, just in case -

His shoulder rams into someone's hip. He can feel the bone. Oriole lurches around, his skin crawling and feathers rising, and finally pulls his head out of his ass long enough to raise his dimmed phone and shine the screen into the shadows.

A pale, faceless dummy slowly rotates on a green noose; as it swings through a second and third turn, Oriole's stomach knots up with the utter surety that the next time it turns, the blank head will have suddenly grown a face - but no, shit. He can't let this get to him. The proportions of the effigy are all wrong for a person (but he knows he felt the jut of a hip bone), the arms and legs little more than amputated stubs, and though he'd swear the thing is made of cloth, he can't find a seam anywhere. It's wearing a hat, but he can't tell in the persistent darkness whether it's orange, red, or maroon. When he turns, he sees that the first thing he ran into was another hanging effigy, with a
If he just wandered into a horror movie, Oriole creeps toward the light, using his phone to edge between more of the creepy hanged men (are they watching him while his back is turned?) His stomach cramps sickeningly as he realizes just how many of these things are lurking throughout the room; every time he thinks he's clear of the crowd, another pallid, nubby arm looms out of the darkness ahead of him. He furls his wings in closer as he squeezes between two heavyset, blank effigies, one of which reeks of gasoline and soot. He's starting to feel claustrophobic, and even though he knows the light is probably a trap, he wants to find a door or a stairwell or something so he can escape this bullshit mannequin hellhole before one of them starts moving without him brushing up against it. All he has to do is find the exit - a nice, normal exit that isn't a questionable, nigh-invisible hole in the space/time continuum.

As he nears the light, the dummies nearest it come into clearer focus, all of them nubby of limb and lacking in face. If he hears someone else breathe in here, he is going to flip his shit right off the fuck you handle and run screaming like some (god, the punbait is real) chickenshit bastard. But he steps into the lit circle without hitting anything else, and when he glances around, he spies a door at the faded, shadowy limits of his vision, past a few more rows of effigies. You could mount a sign over that door that reads 'TRAP' or 'Fuck you, all ye who enter here,' and it still wouldn't look any more ominous than it already does. Oriole sighs through gritted teeth, lips pulled back in a grimace, and then brightens his phone screen once more to creep through the last of the hanging dummies.

Three feet from the door, he hears a faint ticking sound. Bomb, Oriole thinks, his mental voice sounding oddly distant from the rest of his brain as he tenses and trips over his own useless feet trying to run like hell back the way he came. The floor is slick tile, unlike literally every other carpeted floor in this felty nightmare of a building, and his sneakers can't find traction until the ticking stops -

And a bright, cheery ting! rings out. Oriole freezes with his leg bent under him and his wings half-raised. No explosion follows as the seconds tick by, but - it's really weird - he would swear up and down that sound was some kind of kitchen timer. His brain, paragon of clarity and reason that it is today, spits out a nonsense cross between 'soufflé' and 'it's a trap.' Thank shitting christ he has a brain to make these stellar deductions for him in times of utter panic; he doesn't know what he'd do without it. Oriole gets up, his left knee twinging like he landed on it funny, and looks back at the effigies hanging in staggered, uneven rows as far as the light reaches behind him. Possible soufflé-bomb, or army of creepy mannequins. Bomb or mannequins, bomb or -

Soufflé bomb it is. Oriole keeps his phone clutched tight to his chest as he tests the door handle and pulls the door open a crack - just wide enough to peek inside.

There's a chronic lack of lighting down here; only one overhead lamp illuminates this room, too. A troll woman with rounded horns sits on a stool in front of an enormous orange oven, her purple and white striped hat askew as she rests her face between the stovetop burners. The oven isn't even attached to a wall or anything, it's just...sitting there, quietly buzzing. One of the troll's arms sprawls out in front of her, a compact purple egg timer clutched in the palm of her hand. For a second, Oriole thinks he can get away with sliding the door shut and pretending he didn't see anything; then the troll lifts her head, her purple eyes dreamy and distant as she shakes her hair out of her face and smiles at him. Oriole freezes - so busted - but the Felt member just giggles and waggles her fingers at him in a fluttering wave. "Heehee," she says, rapping her knuckles on top of the oven and scooting off her stool. "It's broken." She shakes the egg timer to demonstrate, and it rattles like the insides are all loose. "Guess I've reached my limit!"

Oriole can't remember this one's powers for shit. The spreadsheet is the opposite of helpful if you weren't there and paying attention to Spades and Droog's arguments about the details, and Oriole was more concerned with Crowbar than random troll #12. "Uh. Sorry? I'm, uh, looking for Crowbar," he says, in the fleeting hope that he can bullshit his way out of this in the family tradition. "If you could point me at the stairs, I'll piss right off -"

The purpleblood's giggle turns into outright laughter; she hauls the oven door open, and a man crawls out like it's a clowncar, mashing his orange and white hat back on his head when the edge of the oven almost knocks it off. "The stairs," the troll says, tossing the purple egg timer in the air and then chucking it at Oriole's head. He ducks and the timer smashes into the wall beside the doorframe with a crack of plastic. "The stairs are behind you, little buddy."

All the lights in the two rooms turn on at the same time. Open orange ovens and trolls with purple timers look up at Oriole and bare their teeth in the same exact lackadaisical grin. Everything else in the room has been shoved to the perimeter to make space for at least a hundred duplicates of the same two people and their goddamn kitchenware.

Oriole shuts his mouth, slams the door shut, and books it back the way he came, shoving the first two dummies out of his way when he hits them. In the harsh light, most of the effigies are wearing the same two hats: it's a sea of purple and orange, with the other colors of the Felt scattered throughout. Behind him, he hears the door fly off its hinges, dozens and dozens of egg timers ringing in a shrill chorus before falling silent. Two voices babble over and over, multiplied a hundredfold, and Oriole can't understand what they're saying because each copy of the Felt duo seems to be holding their own conversation. Oriole elbows a charred black effigy so hard it flies out and whacks another dummy in a wild circle. He looks back over his shoulder to see a solid wave of duplicate people streaming out of the door, ripping the hanged dummies down from the ceiling and carrying them along in the wave of bodies. Even with the lights on, Oriole's too busy running hell for leather to take in anything more than the next row of dummies as he shoves past them. He can't tell where he first landed, or if he'll be able to even see the space/time rip before he runs headlong into it.

Everything's a fucking mess. So he starts texting; it can't get much worse, anyway.

TG: guys
TG: I hate time travel
HB: Same hat.
TG: what
HB: Y'know, same hat. It's one of those memehs. Has to do with hats.
TG: fuck my life. just. fuck it

The duplicates hit him and four pairs of hands and claws grab him around the waist, lifting him up to crowdsurf along the ranks. Someone is scream-singing 'YOU RAISE ME UPPPPP -' over the roar of the crowd, and Oriole cannot for the life of him say whether it's in his head, or if one of the Felt copies is playing the song at top volume on a phone, or if it's just the universe fucking with him, which wouldn't surprise him at all in the slightest.

The crowd charges through the hole in space and time, and Oriole shrieks as they plunge upward toward the tenth floor stairwell.

--

Bro vanishes the second that John and Rose do. No surprises there; this is a fucking textbook Bro action, at this point. Karkat thinks he sees a pair of yellow and blue dumbasses land in Tavros's nightmare of a wheelchair, but then Cetus's gargantuan face and tentacles come in between them, and Bro flashsteps too fast for Karkat to waste his time and energy on tracking him. That's what memos and spreadsheets are for, so fuck it; he can't be bothered to keep track of everyone and their human-lusus and what they're doing. Now it's just him and Kanaya, stuck on a rooftop looking out over a street full of frothing fuck-you and rotten grubsauce. Karkat holds up his sicklekind, at least hoping to get an idea of what it would look like if he had a weapon large enough to eviscerate a giant whale and make all of his dreams come true, but they're not far enough back from the fight for perspective to work in his favor - it just emphasizes how stupidly tiny they are compared to Cetus. If he crosses his eyes, the wavering sickle could maybe work as a toothpick for Cetus's jagged teeth.

Beside him, Kanaya holds up her chainsaw in one hand, her tongue peeking out a little as she tries to line it up right. She probably gets similarly disappointing results. "Are you thinking what I'm thinking?" Karkat asks.

"That depends," she says, without looking at him. "Are you thinking that all of this is remarkably dangerous and absurd?"

Karkat snorts. "Well, yeah, that's constantly playing on an endless screaming loop in my pan, regardless of what fresh bullshit is going on in our daily lives. No freebies."

Kanaya puts her chainsaw into lipstick mode and reapply it, meditating on the question. Karkat ignores the fact that the green lipstick still has human red blood on it. "I am thinking that rejoining the fight at this stage would just invite Vriska's unwanted, murderous advances. I should hate to be scorched into oblivion by her 'mistakenly' firing at me, or egging Eridan on until he does it," she says, capping the lipstick and holstering it. "Both of which seem more likely than dying in a Horrorterror's rampage, and neither of which really rev my completely metaphorical internal combustion engine."

...For no reason in particular, Karkat feels super exposed on this wide open rooftop. Vriska's busy whooping and summoning a guillotine from out of fucking nowhere to chop through a bundle of Cetus's tentacles in a gooey amputation, but any second now the ceruleanblood could get antsy, whip around, and decide to take out two convenient not-god tier chumps loitering on the sidelines. After the shit she pulled with Eridan earlier, they can't just rest easy thinking Vriska will spontaneously develop self-control. As though to drive the point home further, Cetus bellows at Vriska, seizes the model of the Statue of Liberty et al up from in front of the New York-New York hotel down the road with a grasping tentacle, and whips it around to smash Vriska down the Strip like a baseball with pixie wings. Vriska dodges, barely, and the statue goes flying out over the city - Karkat can't even tell where it lands - and Eridan sets off a blindingly bright attack that sounds like screaming pyrotechnics. "Yeah, okay, fuck this, I'm out," Karkat yells, over the throbbing in his ears.

He reaches out sideways, trying to find Kanaya's arm or something while his eyes water. She taps him on the shoulder instead, and is already walking behind him so that he has to scramble around to follow her when his vision clears. Kanaya gives him a fangy grin. "Do you think that we can jump from this roof to the casino's?" she asks, as if it's a rhetorical question.

Not in a single bound, if that's what she's implying. (No, wait, that would be a John joke, the fucking nerd.) Karkat rubs the back of his neck, then scans the roofs and gaps between them and the casino.
Cetus has a bunch of spindly tentacles dragging through the grimdark soup at street level in some of the spaces between the buildings, but for the most part they should have a straight shot there. Most of the casinos and hotels along the Strip are uneven and sprawled out, but the section around the Ouroboros is wedged in a dense section of nondescript buildings, like there wasn't any room elsewhere on the Strip for it to expand into a resort. "Of fucking course. Let's go fuck up their day," Karkat says. He lets his sicklekind dissolve back into blood so that he can jump without accidentally fucking up his own day, and backs up so he can get a running start.
Good news: all the teleporting and floating has not affected his ability to run along rooftops. He managed not to make a complete ass out of himself in front of Kanaya, and that's always half the battle right, really. Kanaya's technique is 40% graceful rainbow drinker putting Karkat's smoothest jumps to shame and 60% charging across the rooftops at top speed with no dicking around permitted. He can hold his own. Cetus surges along the street, its tail dragging behind it as its tentacles haul it along with pants-shittingly terrifying speed, and resulting quake screws up Karkat's last jump; he rolls hard to ease the jarring impact, and Kanaya skids through her landing half a second later. They both look to try to see what's drawn the denizen's attention now, but apart from Vriska yelling insults at Cetus's back and pelting after it, whoever's pissed Cetus off now is out of sight behind the denizen's massive form. Karkat has a feeling it might be John and Rose making their move, which does nothing to help the queasy worry fermenting in his angstbladders. "They'll be fine," Kanaya says, but he can hear the question in her voice, so they're both in the overactive angstbladder boat, here.

"They'll kick its shameglobes up its own ass. Don't worry," Karkat replies, almost as convincingly.

Kanaya gives him a shifty look. "I am not worried. I never once said I was in any way concerned. In fact, I have complete confidence in them. Are you worried?"

Karkat breaks all of five seconds before breaking. "No. That's the opposite of a thing I am. Obviously. What kind of - oh fuck. They're so fucked. They're going to die stupid tragic fucked up hero deaths and leave us widowed for the rest of fucking forever. We should have gone to help, this is fucking unconscionable -"

Kanaya grabs him by the wrists and stops him before he can tear out his hair in frustration. "It would appear that we are in mutual agreement that we are worried," she says, firmly. "The size of our worry is astonishing. It could probably eclipse the sun itself. Yet while our solidarity in worrying makes me no less nervous, I am currently drawing a blank as to how we defeated any of these denizens in the first place and have no desire to figure it out right now when there are other metaphorical fish to fry."

He nods along with her until Kanaya runs out of words and lets go of his arms, stepping back as she waits for him to respond. He keeps nodding for an extra second, then snaps out of it. "Yeah, you're right. You're totally right. Not sure how Nepeta and Tavros haven't been squished flatter than grubcakes, yet," he says, tugging his jacket's sleeves down as he tries to get his thinkpan back on track. It's a little too late to get his entire life back in order, at this point, but Kanaya seems to approve of getting his outfit back in order after all the jumping around, adjusting her skirt and then fixing the shoulders of his jacket to her satisfaction. With incredibly important business taken care of, Karkat ruins it by stretching his arms out in front of him. "Over, or through?"

The manor building that makes up the casino section of the Felt's headquarters is just as horrendous up close as it was from down the street. Karkat can't tell what floor they're on; they landed on one of the few sections of the building with a flat surface, but whatever asshole architect designed this place mashed together turrets and towers and gabled, angular roofs in a jumbled, asymmetric mess, with green-tinted windows that are mostly still intact and extra balconies crammed into every available surface. He thinks he sees a door in the wall forty feet above the ground off to their left. If they go over, they'll have to claw their way up some pretty sheer, pitched roofs, and hope nobody's lurking behind a broken window to shoot them through the shattered glass. Going through could be faster, if they don't run into a Felt straggler - and if they don't get lost and/or sidetracked - and if they don't have trouble finding a way out on the far side - never mind, Karkat's talked himself out of it.

"The front door still looks inaccessible," Kanaya says, leaning over the side to survey the flooded street. Karkat thought that was a given, but when he peers over the edge of the roof he sees what Kanaya did - the grimdark sludge levels have gone down now. Cetus pulled most of it down the Strip with her, and now Karkat can make out bleached white sections along the lower sides of the building where the acid has receded. The door of the casino still sits behind three feet of nasty monster slurry, though. "Even if we go through a window, we don't know the internal layout of the casino as well as we do the tower. I vote for over."

"Let's do that, then." Karkat maps out the easiest route in his head and takes a second to draw a bloodcicle (\textit{fuck}) out of his blood so he can use it as a shitty pickax on the steeper roofs. Kanaya jumps almost straight up vertically to reach a higher section of flat roof to start out, while Karkat takes a flying leap off the side and catches himself on the edge of the roof of another chunk of the building. He kicks off the wall under the overhanging edge with some effort and then hauls himself up using the awning over the window. When he checks, Kanaya is keeping pace with him from a level up, her claws out to the side as she hurries along balcony railing. Avoiding a sheer, concave wall of shingle that's supposed to pass for a roof, Karkat runs up the side of a chimney and uses it to gain height so he can reach a balcony that wraps around the corner of the building.

His chat alert has been going off this whole time - the group chat never fucking sleeps; it waits - but the text alert breaks the pattern by letting out an obnoxious noise, and Karkat smacks his pocket to make it stop while he hops across a set of three projecting windows to try to get back in sync with Kanaya's route. She stoops to give him a claw up over the world's saddest, most underused rain gutter, and then she turns to climb up the slick shingles of the steep, triangular roof that leads to the peak of this section of the building. Karkat gets next to no traction at all with his shoes before his momentum fails him and he starts to skid back down, and he hastily forms a blood-shank with his other hand so he can dig into the roof.

It takes him an embarrassing minute to hack his way up to the intersection of the main roof and yet another projecting window before he thinks to bite into his wrist and drip some blood on the toes of his shoes to form spikes, and by the time he reaches Kanaya again his claws feel weirdly shaky with the effort involved. Kanaya balances with a claw on a decorative green...thing that caps the turret, and Karkat gives her a defensive scowl despite the fact that there's no judgment on her face. "We can go down and cross to the tower here," she reports, while Karkat balances on the thin ridge of the roof to give his wrists a break. Looking down the far side of the building, Karkat sees more steep drops covered in shingles, but also a covered walkway that joins the casino to the Ouroboros skyscraper down at ground level. Someone has already punched a hole through the tall glass window over the Ouroboros' side of the walkway - someone he suspects was Terezi-shaped, or at least acting under her direction.

"Who goes 'ere?"

Karkat and Kanaya both stiffen, and whip around toward the central tower that rises up to their left. A square balcony wraps all the way around the tower, the floor just level with Kanaya's shoulders, and before Karkat can think twice he drags Kanaya down into a crouch with him, crawling along the ridge until they're as close to the underside of the balcony as they can reach. There's another short, sheer chunk of roof right up under it, though, which means they're still exposed if whoever just yelled happens to look down. Someone steps heavily on the green balcony above. Kanaya gives a threatening hiss, her claw stealing down to draw her lipstick out of its case, and Karkat shakes his head at her furiously, trying to convey a 'fuck no' by making an X with his claws. Another ponderous footstep, and they look up in time to see a pair of hands lean on the railing overhead.

The Felt member that stares out over the rooftops wears a green suit tailored exactly to fit his wide form. His jaw juts out in a terrifying square that makes his skin look inhumanly taut and stretched over the bone from below, and when he swivels his head to survey more of the rooftop Karkat spies a too-small blue and white hat sitting atop his head. Sawbuck, one of the few Karkat can name because both Droog and Spades declared him too annoying to fight. He'll time travel if they injure him non-fatally in any way, and drag them along for the ride. Kanaya opens and closes her hand over her lipstick holster, one fang biting her lower lip as she sits torn with indecision, and she and Karkat tense again as Sawbuck's nostrils flare and he starts to look down. Karkat can see directly up the man's nose, and that's disgusting, honestly.

Cetus's roars have been more distant for a while now; just as Karkat's gone for his own specibus and Kanaya starts to push herself up out of their crouch to pre-empt the Felt member, an earsplitting crack stabs Karkat in the ears, and Sawbuck reels back from the balcony with an irritated yell. Karkat and Kanaya cover their ears as tons of glass shatter in the distance and more car alarms go off. The Felt member stomps away to investigate, but there's no way for Karkat to look around the tower and see what fresh fuck Cetus just pulled now. He ignores Dave's message to skip right to the group chat so he can get some straight answers without Dave's rambling.

CG: WHAT THE FUCK JUST BROKE NOW?!
EB: trump hotel!
CG: THE ENTIRE HOTEL?
CT: D --> I STRONGLY believe that no one will miss it CT: D --> Probably
EB: sorry no time to talk ahhhhhhh!
TG: karkat where are you
TG: dude you gotta answer your texts
CG: KANAYA AND I ARE ALMOST BACK TO THE TOWER AND I CAN'T AFFORD TO GET SIDETRACKED BY YOUR INABILITY TO END A CONVERSATION IN A TIMELY FASHION, DAVE.
TG: no come on this is important
CG: LIKE FUCK IT IS! I'M CLOSING THE CHAT AS WE SPEAK!

"Can that wait?" Kanaya asks, looking at Karkat's cell phone like it's a cursed object. Which, to be fair? Karkat would not rule out.

TG: dont karkat this is serious
CG: WE JUST ESCAPED EXCESSIVE AMOUNTS OF TIME BULLSHIT AT THE CASINO BY THE TIPS OF OUR NUBS, OKAY, I'M NOT SITTING ON MY RUMP TEXTING YOU WHEN SAWBUCK COULD WANDER BACK AROUND ANY FUCKING SECOND.
TG: just let me know when you run into the crowbar guy and the lady who throws change
TG: like full on cross your heart stick a needle in your eye promise
CG: YES, DAVE, IF I RUN HEADLONG INTO AN ARBITRARY PAIR OF INCREDIBLY DANGEROUS PEOPLE, I WILL TAKE VALUABLE TIME OUT OF MY LIFE TO SEND YOU A TEXT MESSAGUWHAGGGGGGGG
TG: no its too early still im not falling for that Kanaya scoops Karkat up into her arms, and jumps off the side of the roof. Karkat mashes his thumb claw down on what he thinks is the button to close the chat and hollers directly into her auricular sponge clots. "You may continue to message as needed," she calls over his screech, unfazed as she sticks the landing on the roof of the back porch with an impact that almost jostles Karkat's phone from his white-knuckled claws. She starts fucking ninja-running and makes another short leap onto the covered walkway that leads to the tower while Karkat's screech fizzes into incoherent spluttering. "While you are on Pesterchum, could you inquire as to where everyone else is located in the building?"

Karkat isn't sure his frozen legs would work right even if Kanaya put him down to run the rest of the way to the Ouroboros himself. One eye twitching, he raises his phone and taps away with numb clawtips.
CG: FEFERI.
CG: OR ANYONE, FUCK IT, WHERE ARE YOU IN HERE?
CC: We're upstairs! 38)
CG: SO SPECIFIC...SO HELPFUL...THANK YOU SO MUCH FOR THAT.
CC: You're the one who was dilly-dally shelly-shallying and L--EFT just to turn right around and clambake!
GG: Almost to the top two floors. Dirk is within our reach.
TG: which means janey isnt wading 4 more peeps to show up, sry
TG: * wading was entirely on purpose feff
CC: 38D
CG: WE JUST CAME IN ON THE SECOND FLOOR, I THINK.
GC: P4Y NO 4T3NT4US CR1M1N4LS H0GT13D UND3R TH3 D3SKS ON TH4T FLOOR.
GC: N3XT FLOOR SHOULD B3 R3D AND GR33N. 1 R3M3MB34 TH3 CHR1STM4S M1NT3S, Y3S.
GC: B3 C4R3FUL ON TH3 ST41RS. W3 LOST OR1OL3 ON TH3 W4Y UP 4ND H1S T1M3ST4MPS H4V3N M4D3 S3NS3 S1NC3.
TG: dependen on what shape dirk' sin we could use backup
CG: YEAH, WE'LL MEET YOU UP THERE OR ON YOUR WAY BACK DOWN.
WHICHEVER HAPPENS FIRST. JADE'S AWOL AND JOHN'S BUSY, SO WE DON'T HAVE TELEPORTING UNLESS IT'S AN EMERGENCY.
TG: FMLFMLFMLFMLFML
GC: INSTRUCT1ONS UNCL34R, BULG3 NOW STUCK 1N C31L1NG F4N - TG: the tenth floor is a swarm of time travelling assholes TG: I am in the swarm
TG: someone get me out of here
EB: emergency?
TG: they don't care about killing me but also they won't shut up and that boxcars guy tried to meme at me and it's making my brain hurt
CG: DON'T DIE. WE'LL GET THERE.

"Okay, put me down, I'm done," Karkat says, when Kanaya bends over and peers under a desk while still holding him, so that the blood starts to go to his thinkpan. Worse, when he looks away from the screen, he has an upside down view of two Felt members with yellow and blue hats, passed out, stuffed under the desk, and trussed up in some kind of elaborate rainbow-themed ziptie bondage that has Terezi written all over it. "Oh, for - no fucking wonder that troll keeps running out of zipties."

"She is quite thorough, is she not?" Kanaya says, struggling to keep her mouth straight when Karkat glowers at her. She then tips him back upright so he can walk on his own, and goes back to checking over the Felt members from a safe distance. "What is the word?"

Karkat rolls his eyes and stuffs his phone back into his pocket so he can't get sucked back into that black hole. "Dave says we're going to meet Crowbar and the one Nepeta and Equius met. The quarter lady. And he wants us to let him know when, so who knows what the fuck's up there. We need to help Oriole, too, because he's in some kind of trouble on the tenth floor. Terezi and Feferi and the rest are probably closer, but they're going after Dirk."

Kanaya straightens and power walks toward the door so fast Karkat jogs to catch up. "Then we shall go help him," she says, serious once more, and then kicks the door so hard it hits the far wall and cracks in two. For a second, Kanaya stays frozen with her leg raised mid-kick, then looks over at Karkat without lowering it. "...I didn't think that I applied that much force."
He checks the door's hinges while Kanaya stays like that. They've almost been ripped loose from the doorframe, which means the door was basically just propped back up in the frame for show. "Terezi and the scratch kids came through here already," he points out. Feferi could also have done it, but she wouldn't have been down here at the time.

"Ah. Jane." Kanaya lowers her leg, hops once to shake it out, and then hurries down the hall, following a trail of unconscious, hatless people toward the door for the stairwell.

When they reach it, Karkat tries to look up, and regrets it when the undersides of the stairs overhead lurch and warp sickeningly. Most of the lights in here are broken or flickering like they're on their last legs, which casts the green floor and wallpaper in murky shadows. He steps over someone with their hands zip-tied to their ankles and keeps a steady eye on the stairs themselves while Kanaya takes them two at a time. She's got her lipstickkind in hand, the lid uncapped and the jade green makeup almost invisible against the Felt green. "Watch your step," he mutters. "I can tell where the holes are," Kanaya says, flashing him a confident smile, and then she continues up the stairs, sidestepping the worst of the warped floor without looking down once, like it comes naturally to her. He follows her exact foot placement as closely as he can, with only a few sparing glances to make sure no one escapes their zip-ties and creeps after them as they ascend the tower.

No one does.

They don't reach the tenth floor. After a few close calls - Kanaya has to drag Karkat up and around when the stairs twist up along the walls like a broken funhouse, and he dangles for five seconds as gravity forgets it's supposed to be pointing down before Kanaya reels him in and jumps past the worst of the screwiness - Karkat's starting to think no, actually, teleporting everywhere is not overrated. Not when walking like a normal person leads to this. How the scratch kids and Terezi managed this alone, without a space person to help them, he will never understand. He doesn't want to ask, either, because knowing Terezi, it involved either sniffing her way around the spatial anomalies or licking them, and she'll describe the taste in excruciating detail to make him squirm. As soon as he can, Karkat wants to act like this entire day didn't exist. No sea monsters, no gangs, no dying, no horrors, no broken fucking physics when he's just trying to live his life - nothing. Hell, depending on how fucked Sburb decides to be this time around, he'll veto the thirteenth, too. Fuck everything.

From what he can tell, the Felt and Midnight Crew grunts agreed before Karkat even arrived. Apart from the people Terezi's team took care of on the first three floors, the rest of the building is almost abandoned. Kanaya doesn't stop at each floor to do a sweep, since they're making a beeline for Oriole, but when Karkat peeks through the open doors, the hallways are either in chaos or utterly pristine. At least a quarter look like they've never been used.

The seventh floor is where he left Spades and Ms Paint, earlier. It's still partly blown up, and probably in the worst shape of any of the floors, and Kanaya makes to skip right past it.

Someone is sitting in the shadows at the top of the stairs. "Slow down, slow down! What's the rush, compañeros? This building is trea-cher-ous, tú sabes?" the woman asks, laughing. Her legs sprawl down the steps in front of her, and she spins a coin like a top on the stair beside her, slapping it down with her palm without looking at it when it starts to wobble. "Had a lot of unintended renovations, and all. Wouldn't want you to fall and crack your heads open like eggs!"

“Though that would damn well simplify things,” another voice mutters from the direction of the hallway, and Karkat has trouble deciding who to glare at as another human in Felt gear walks in, smacking a crowbarkind against his palm.

Which, if nothing else, means he and Kanaya charged headlong into two of the people with the easiest names to guess based on their unimaginative choice of weapons. So fucking convenient. He's not even a little bit sarcastic – thinking of people as 'that one guy' or 'that other human woman with the suit' tends to get real fucking old, real fast. Kanaya's skin hasn't stopped glowing since they started up the stairs, and the light intensifies when she's pissed. “I will ask you once to move,” she says. “There is still at least a small chance that you can surrender and turn yourselves in to the authorities, and we can avoid wasting everyone's time.”

Quatorze bursts out laughing, her head falling backwards against the stairs. Crowbar gives her a sour scowl, then turns it back on Kanaya and Karkat. "S'if that's even a real option," he says, rolling his eyes. "You know and I know and anyone who matters knows that cops are irrelevant. We bought out everyone on the force here ages ago."

Karkat rolls his eyes right back. "No fucking way. There must be what, a couple thousand of them? Bull fucking shit."

Crowbar's grin turns nasty. "Like any of 'em had a choice."

"The depths of your depravity truly are deep, and depraved," Kanaya says, gravely. Karkat's too busy cranking up the rage dial from 'steamed like a tender dumpling' to 'Gamzee would shed a tear of awe and swoon,' and can only tremble violently in agreement. His phone buzzes in his pocket in time with his furious shaking, but like fuck is he checking it now.

"Who gives a shit about that?" Quatorze asks the ceiling as she sits up. Her grin has a bite that reminds Karkat of Vriska, and isn't that a heartening thought. "You're talking to the wrong people, jadeblood. Has shouting at people that they're bad and wrong ever actually worked out for you?"

"You've also got the self-preservation of fucking gnats," Karkat says, "because your boss up there is right on board with ending the fucking world."

Quatorze mimes a yawn and tosses her braid back over her shoulder as she stands, tapping the heel of one foot and then the other on the edge of the stair as she starts toward them. Karkat catches Crowbar lunging and the crowbar swinging in his peripheral vision, but Kanaya reacts before he can. She smashes the crowbar away with the flat end of her chainsaw, so hard that Crowbar loses his grip on the specibus and winces as his arms get wrenched back by the impact, and then she goes to start the chainsaw. The throaty growl of the chainsaw engine doesn't start. Kanaya tries again, staring down at the weapon in confusion, but the chainsaw ignores her. Karkat hears a faint rattle in the engine when Kanaya gives it one last go, but nothing happens. She waves the chainsaw around in an attempt to turn it back into a tube of lipstick, and finally just looks around at all three people in her audience. "You broke my chainsaw," she says, non-plussed.

Crowbar tips his hat and scoops his crowbar (wow, never mind, this is almost as annoying as thinking of him as 'that guy' would have been) off the ground. It looks like a normal, unassuming crowbar, like the kind Karkat has seen dozens of random criminal pick up because it's easy to transfer childhood baseball skills to swinging an iron stick at people's heads – but Kanaya didn't even dent it with that swing, and she hit way harder than Crowbar did. "No more chatting. We got a job to do," the human says, with no explanation, raising the crowbar again. Kanaya grimaces, and pulls out a second lipstickkind, tossing the broken chainsaw back down the stairs as she immediately revs the new specibus. It jams with a painful squeal that stabs Karkat right in the ears when the teeth hit the "Guess it's you and me, pana," Quatorze says, with a slow wink when Karkat looks back at her. "Ah, I was hoping to run into Droog before anyone else. Oh well. A lo que venimos!" She flips her coin up in the air, jumping down the last two stairs so she's level with Karkat as she calls it. "Car-"

The stairwell starts to shudder. Karkat assumes it's Cetus rampaging again, since that's the obvious answer. But then two voices babble over each other, too jumbled for Karkat to understand what the fuck they're shouting, and the shuddering resolves into several feet pounding down the stairs. Quatorze blinks, and her coin drops to the floor as she looks back over her shoulder. Crowbar and Kanaya have advanced through the door into the hallway, crowbar and broken chainsaw locked between them, and both of them look up as four five people crash down the stairs. There are two pairs of the same people, and Karkat's thinkpan takes this completely in fucking stride because Dave exists and after a while duplicated people lose their shock value. The fifth is Oriole in all his orange glory, screaming bloody murder and doing his best to kick the people carrying him on their shoulders in the face, with varying degrees of success. He bashes one of the four in the face with a flap of his enormous wing, and the man drops like a rock to slide down the last few steps. "Crowbar -" "- look, we -" "Special delivery!" "- found someone who wants to see you!" the remaining copy of the man and both trolls announce, tromping past Quatorze. With a 'hup!' one of the purplebloods hops onto the shoulders of her duplicate, hoisting Oriole up by his shoulders so it looks like he's sitting on a Felt green throne made of people.

"Time out for one sec, I need to tell these two they're a pair of idiots," Crowbar tells Kanaya. He looks haggard, like he just aged ten years in the space of two seconds. Kanaya hesitates, then shrugs. Crowbar lowers his crowbar and looks directly at the new arrivals. "Eggs. Biscuit. You're a pair of idiots. Don't you have anywhere better to be?"

"Help. Me," Oriole says, hissing through his teeth.

"We were trying," Karkat hisses back. A fit of giggles slowly consumed Quatorze, who's chomping down on half of her own fist as she wheezes, and Karkat steps behind her back to pick up the quarter she dropped. It feels heavy and cold in his palm, and he flings it back over his shoulder down the stairs without looking to see where it lands. He would stick it in his pocket or something, but like fuck does he want it to randomly turn into a machine gun and rip a hole in his pants so wide not even Kanaya could save the last vestiges of his dignity.

"The rest of us are totally there! We volunteered to come bring this guy here!" Biscuit says, dropping Oriole's leg so he can grab his unconscious duplicate and sling him over one shoulder. None of the three seem disappointed that Crowbar isn't enthused by their offering. "You really don't want to see him?"

"No!" Crowbar says, pinching the bridge of his nose. "Just - go do your actual jobs, boneheads. Toss the orange kid out a window, for all I care."

Eggs and Biscuit light up with gleeful grins, like he just made their day. "Motherfucker -" Oriole starts, lunging forward, but the duplicate Eggs behind him seizes him around the waist and hauls him back. He shrugs his wings to try to dislodge her, but the purpleblood just blows air to get the feathers away from her nose and ignores the impact. "Come over here and say that!" Oriole finishes, on a weaker note.

"First off, you're a bird. Go fly or some shit, if you still can," Crowbar says, pointing the crowbar at Oriole and making some fucking bizarre gesture that Karkat thinks is supposed to represent flight. "Second off, I've seen enough of you for one lifetime. And by you, I mean collectively. Eggs, Biscuit, feathery dipshit kid. All of you." He draws a circle in the air, then points the crowbar up at the ceiling. "Piss off."

"Wait, hang on -" Kanaya starts, reaching out toward Oriole belatedly.

Eggs and Biscuit dart away from her in sloppy unison, the second copy of Eggs dropping down from her duplicate's shoulders and supporting Oriole's shoulders as they haul ass back up the stairs. Oriole kicks and lashes out again, his wings fanning out to their full extent and knocking an Eggs in the nose, but she's purpleblood resilient. He rolls and reaches out a hand, grabbing at Kanaya's outstretched claw, but Crowbar slashes with his crowbar, back on the offensive without a word of warning, and Kanaya yanks her claw back before he can snap her forearm in two. "Kick his ass for me!" Oriole yells. Eggs and Biscuit's clamor fills the stairwell again for a moment: "Let's go find –" "- gotta be a window Droog hasn't broken already somewhere –" "Whooo!" "- Clover, too!"

Then they're out of sight again; a single orange feather lands on the third step down, the only sign that Oriole was there at all. "DEFENESTREGGTION!" an indistinct voice shouts, and a ragged chorus of cheers rises up, the last thing Karkat hears before they're well and truly gone.

"Well, that should keep them busy for five whole minutes, before they decide to become a pain in my neck again." Crowbar rolls his wrist and then swings his specibus back, frowning at Kanaya and Karkat like they're bugs that just splattered on his windshield. "What were we doing?"

"I was kicking your ass, both of my own volition and now for Oriole's sake, since he cannot do so himself," Kanaya says, and then she jumps at Crowbar with her chainsaw (broken again) at the ready, slapping his crowbar down and kicking him in the stomach with the heel of her foot. Crowbar doesn't have Droog's staying power or strength, and skids back into the hallway bent over his stomach, looking green in the face. It makes Karkat wonder - if a Felt member pukes on the Felt green carpet, does anyone give a flying fuck?

"Oh, for pete's sake. Fine, fine," Crowbar says, wheezing and clearly struggling to stand up straight. Then Kanaya's on him again, bringing her chainsaw around and using it as a blunt object to beat him back down the hall. Doubled over with pain, Crowbar's slower than Kanaya, but he manages to block her hits with the crowbar more often than he doesn't. Worse, the more Kanaya makes contact with that apparently indestructible crowbar, the more battered and rusted her chainsaw becomes.

Karkat can't keep watching, though. Quatorze rounds on him, balanced on one heel as she spins, a smile spreading across her face as she zeroes in on him. Her fingers snap reflexively, like she's flipping a coin - and then she snaps again, and pouts at her empty fingers when she realizes she has nothing to flip. "Dónde - ah, whatever," she says, after frowning at the grungy floor. When she starts digging through her suit pocket for another, Karkat makes a break for the door, using the side of the frame to swing around and fling himself down the hall in the opposite direction Kanaya and Crowbar went. Because like fuck is he sticking around long enough for her to flip a semi-automatic coin and fill him with lead, and like double fuck is he running after Kanaya and getting both of them shot in the back. He drops and somersaults through the first open door he finds, just as a round of bullets spritz the floor and wall opposite in a wild spray. Holy fuck, she's not even trying to aim. "Ay. Ay! Come back!" Quatorze shouts.

Karkat doesn't answer, because he's not fucking stupid. But hahaha, too late for that! Why did past!Karkat choose to become a close range stealth fighter? Why did he make such poor fucking life choices?! It's like the universe just loves to shove him into situations where his cover is already blown and he's up against an asshole with a gun, so he has to scrounge around for alternatives. Kanaya stuffed him and Nepeta and pretty much anyone who sat still long enough in as much body armor as she could, but that and his healing abilities can't save him if Quatorze fires a random
The lights in this room are out - Karkat falls back into the shadows behind the door, still feeling exposed, and waits for his chance. The Felt member's steps sound off-kilter as she comes after him, a little skip in her step. "So. You guys and Droog, you really are all buddy-buddy now? I knewwww it!" Quatorze says. She clicks her tongue as she walks into the room. Karkat stays in the shadow a little longer, holding his breath and hoping she doesn't think to turn around and fuck him up. A huge gun swings from a strap around her neck, loosely clutched under her arm as she surveys the dark rows of desks. She doesn't quite turn around - instead, she heads further in with mincing steps, her feet dancing and the barrel of the gun swaying with her as she swaggers through the rows. The light from the corridor casts long shadows, which means Karkat can't leave without his flickering against the wall right in front of Quatorze - he drops low and stays crouched as he takes slow, silent steps parallel to Quatorze. He keeps a desk between him and her as much as he can, so he'll have some kind of shield if she does a fucking pirouette off the semi-automatic and fires in a 360 degree arc to try to get him. "Bien brutal! That Equius guy could have saved me so much trouble if he'd just admitted it."

Quatorze turns on a heel, heading away from Karkat with a faint hum that's almost drowned out by the sound of yet another chainsaw revving outside. She lifts a hand from the gun and digs into her pocket - for another coin, though if she starts dual wielding with two machine guns or something, Karkat's fucking out of here. Fuck that noise. Now that her back's to him, Karkat takes a chance and breaks cover, staying low and then hopping as silently as he can on top of the desk nearest her, his toes aching with the effort of moving stealthily in tight quarters. Before she can swing back around to patrol his half of the room, he drops down from the desk, into the light from the hallway - his shadow looms large on the wall opposite, and Quatorze crows as her eyes dart toward it, second coin forgotten - and then he kicks the back of her knee, wrapping his arm around her neck from behind in a chokehold when her knee drops out from under her. She staggers back to her feet, but his weight hampers her far more than it would some of the other people he's fought in the past, and she stumbles and tilts over backwards when he wraps his legs around her torso. "Augh! Fu-" Karkat gasps, a horizontal line of pain jabbing across his back, just under his shoulder blades. He tightens his chokehold instead of letting go, and Quatorze drops the semi-automatic to squirm a hand between his arm and her neck. The full weight of the gun bangs against his knee, which hurts in an annoying way rather than a crippling way; Quatorze lets her feet slide out from under her, though, and as they slide to the floor Karkat feels the edge of the desk jam on every nub in his fucking spine. "Fucking - fuck Droog! Why couldn't you have bothered Terezi instead!" He thinks this is a fair fucking question, since there was no sign of either Crowbar or Quatorze the last time he was here. In the time it took for him and Kanaya to get back to the building, they somehow managed to miss the four human kids, singular orange bird-human hybrid, and two trolls running up the stairs?

Quatorze tries to head-butt him in the nose. Karkat keeps his head tucked to the side, and grits his teeth when she laughs at him, out of breath. "What, the two trolls running around with Die's toys? Su problema, not mine." She jabs an elbow into his hip, but tries again and this time manages to hit the floor instead of him (great) and rolls up onto her knees, wobbling as she digs her nails into the fabric of his jacket sleeve. She worms her fingers further between his arm and her throat, but Karkat keeps it up. Mostly because at this range, if she breaks away and gets her hands on the gun again, she's not going to miss unless he's really, really fast. Her other hand is - Karkat is so fucking stupid. Her other hand just finished plucking a coin out of her pocket; she flips it with her thumb. "Ahaha! Cara!" she says, and the coin lands in her hand as a compact revolver that she aims over her shoulder at his face, squeezing the trigger.

Karkat blinks his eyes closed. He can't tell if that's instinct or just bad timing. He lets go - he thinks, it's so hard to tell, his head is swimming and he really didn't want to know what it felt like to get shot today, no matter how sure Sollux is that Karkat would come right back. It would still royally suck. But haha, looks like Vriska gets her way. Fucking typical.

He's had an awful long time to think all of this. At the very least he expected his screeching cicada of a thinkpan to shut the fuck up for five whole seconds while he was temp-dead, but no. Apparently he doesn't even get that much. Fan-fucking-tastic.

"Told you to warn me when you ran into them," Dave says, his voice a thin rasp. "Holy shit."

Karkat finishes the longest blink in the history of trollkind, and stares at the hole in the wall left from the fight with Cassandra earlier. This is not the room he was in - same floor, obviously, but now it's him and Dave, and no sign of Quatorze. His ears ring, but he can't remember hearing the actual gunshot go off. Clumsily, Karkat grabs his face and maps it out with his claws; he's never been so fucking ecstatic to feel his nose in one piece. His costume hasn't developed a tumor in the shape of a knight's cape, so he doesn't think he died, either. Relief gusts out of him in the form of a rant. "If you're going to impart a bunch of fucking future guy wisdom, at least try to explain yourself so I don't blow it off. It's hard enough keeping tabs on your rambling bullshit when we have free time, let alone in the middle of a fucking battle." Karkat breathes only once, after the whole spiel, and then remembers to add, "And. Thanks."

Dave nods. "No prob." He helps Karkat up, but before Karkat's finished grabbing the outstretched hand Dave winces and swaps to his off hand. His left, Karkat sees, is wrapped in a tattered, days' old filthy bandage that's probably a disease vector in and of itself. Karkat grabs Dave's wrist, inspecting the scabbed over cut underneath with his power instead of looking like a normal person. It feels old but deep, inflammation licking at the edges of Karkat's awareness, and Dave hasn't gotten it stitched or stopped using his hand long enough to let it heal. Karkat would ask how he's been wielding a sword with this cut bisecting his squishy human hand, but oh wait - as if this dumbass would ever let a serious injury stand between him and a chance to stab himself in the (metaphorical or literal) foot. Dave sags while Karkat does a quick fix by sinking into the blood and blotting the infection out so he can knit things together, but the human keeps an eye on the many entrances to the room while Karkat's distracted by his pulse. "Sorry. But dude. Karkat. I am so future'd out right now. You can't even comprehend how much I'm over it. If you run into Gamzee again before I do, tell him he owes me, like, a million ice cream sundaes to make up for that. When we get to the next universe or whatever, he has to use his clown chaos magicks to recreate Dairy Queen for me. My blisters have blisters and I didn't think that loop was ever going to end."

Toward the end, Dave's voice sounds desperate; which is out of character enough that Karkat looks up, sharply. He can't sense any other obvious injuries in Dave, but there's some general wrongness hanging around him. Like he's on the edge of collapse. And here's Karkat, too fucking shitty at blood stuff to pinpoint what's wrong.

...And, if Dave's been time travelling long enough to have a cut in his hand that's been healing the regular way for days? Karkat has a sinking feeling that what's wrong with Dave isn't something he can fix. Fuck. FUCK. "Gamzee? What did he do now?" Karkat asks, swallowing the taste of bile low in his throat. "What have you been doing all this time? And for the love of fuck, why Dairy Queen?"

"Because that's what I like about Texas," Dave says, intoning it like it's some kind of freaky ritual phrase. When Karkat continues to stare at him in DEEPLY CONCERNED incomprehension, Dave coughs. "Never mind, Texas humor. I'm joking. It's fine. We need to go finish with that Quarters person now. Thanks for giving me a hand, man." He claps Karkat on the shoulder with his free hand, and Karkat hastily shreds the disgusting bandage covering Dave's hand before he pulls back into his personal bubble. The cut looks like a stark red line across his palm, but Karkat's sure it won't tear open again after this. "Btw, I think this game was designed by an idiot."

...Well, there's only one logical response to that. "Obviously, Dave. I completely agree," Karkat replies, rolling his eyes. Dave holds out a fist. Karkat bumps it, but only because the ten minute long monologue Dave would unleash if Karkat didn't reciprocate would not be worth it. Ugh. Friendship. "Let's go, then. The last thing we need is for Quatorze to get bored and start shooting through the walls."

"The realest shit." The two of them run back out into the hallway; Dave hops over a chunk of wall on the way and as he does his cape flares out, so that Karkat catches a glimpse of scorch marks and streaks of dirt along the bottom edges. Dave's also wearing some kind of oddly shaped backpack or harness - but it's flat, like there's nothing in it, and Karkat's pretty sure that Dave is at least nominally aware of the fact that his sylladex is a thing that exists, rendering backpacks obsolete. Then again, Dave is a master of obliviousness when he really puts his mind to it; Karkat wouldn't put that kind of deliberate obtuseness past him.

They're three doors down from the room where they left Quatorze, though, and she tears out of that room in a high fucking dudgeon before Karkat can ask Dave what the fuck he's been doing since he got punched in the snout. "So pendeja- there you are!" she growls, skidding to a stop and seizing the semi-automatic as it careens around her. She clamps it to her side and fires without aiming; another blink, and Karkat and Dave are huddled behind a pile of debris, gunshots ringing out in rapid succession over the sound of Quatorze's laughter.

"I can cut the strap on that gun, if you knock her away from it afterward," Dave says, speaking right into Karkat's ear to be heard over the noise. Karkat nods and Dave flashsteps out of sight without another word. Scrambling, Karkat twists around and waits for the hail of bullets to cut off. He peeks around the corner in time to see Quatorze barreling down the hallway toward his cover, the gun still firing under her arm, and he yanks his head back under cover before it can get blasted to smithereens by a stray shot. "Right about now would be cool," Dave says, out of the blue, and Karkat chomps down on a garbled noise of irritation because he can't complain about Dave's off the cuff plan bullshit right now. Later. He'll let it simmer until it's a hearty, delicious stew of pent up annoyance. Quatorze yelps and Karkat takes that as his signal - he rolls around the debris to see Quatorze dropping the gunkind, the strap flapping loose as it bounces on the ground, and Karkat can sense every cut on Quatorze's hands in minute detail. She glowers at Karkat since he's the only one hanging around visible, and then dives for the gun.

More than likely, Dave expected him to kick her in the face. Karkat's pulse thunders low in his ears, and when he raises his hand and concentrates, the blood dripping down between Quatorze's fingers solidifies into spikes and digs back into her skin wherever it touches flesh.

Then Karkat kicks her in the face, while she flinches and yanks her hands back against her chest. Dave appears in a flash of red, his sword a blur first on one side of Quatorze, and then the other, and finally he lands in a crouch beside Karkat, his sword propping him up as he fixes his shades on his nose. There's a split second delay before Quatorze's pockets burst open, and an absolutely unnecessary amount of coins spill out in a chattering hailstorm. It's like someone took a cash register and upended it all over the floor.

For one fleeting second, Quatorze stands in stunned silence, and appears to teeter on the fence between yelling, hitting something, and bursting into tears. Karkat's familiar with the sensation.

"Fucking hell!" Crowbar shouts before Quatorze makes her move. Dave's head perks up and he sidesteps awkwardly while still in his crouch so he can see around Quatorze. Karkat just leans to the side like a normal person. Kanaya and Crowbar went down the opposite end of the hallway, but now Crowbar's racing back along it, his crowbar forgotten as Kanaya chases after him with a broken chainsaw and a stern frown that heralds impending doom. She catches up before Crowbar reaches them and whacks his legs out from under him with a swing of her chainsaw. Crowbar reaches out with one hand, beseeching, and Kanaya smacks him upside the back of the head. His eyes roll back, and his head drops to the floor with a painful sounding clunk. "Do you two require assistance?" Kanaya asks, kneeling with a graceful swoop to check the Felt member's pulse and peel back his eyelid. She zipties his hands together and then to his ankles to keep him secure.

"Nah, we got this shit in the bag. Shit's so far in the bag we could deposit it in a waste receptacle. Keeping the dog park clean for everybody," Dave says, swapping his hands around so that he's supporting his swordkind with one and tapping away on his phone with another. Between them and Kanaya, Quatorze sidles from side to side, her braided hair snaking behind her as she looks from Karkat and Dave to Kanaya and back again with an increasingly nervous expression. Her hands stay clasped close to her chest, streaked with red.

Karkat has to say something. Something of vital importance. "Dave?"

"Yeah, man?" Dave says, cocking his head to the side to present his ear.

"If you go on a rant that combines ten different metaphors about barkbeast shit, I'm renouncing our friendship for my own mental health."

Dave snorts through his nose in an almost-laugh. Karkat twitches, and gives Dave a harder look. He noticed the state of Dave's god tier pants and cape, but snort-laughing? What the fuck?

"You think you've got me, huh?" Quatorze says, affronted, and judging by the growl in her voice Karkat's hindbrain thinks she's about to pull some last minute fuckery; he tenses and starts to reach toward Dave -

But the Felt member gives the three of them a long look, the whites of her eyes visible as she nervously fiddles with the front of her suit jacket. "...Nah, not feeling it," she finishes at last, flicking her bangs out of her face and grinning. "I'm out of here." She twists her hands in the fabric of her jacket one last time, and this time Karkat spies the coin that she's plucked out of her front pocket. She barely flips it at all, a half-assed twitch that plops the coin over from one side to the other in her hand, and it starts to flash purple and green. "Lessee what Clover's been up –"

Kanaya and Dave lunge and grab for Quatorze; when Quatorze disappears, Dave checks himself before the two collide headfirst, which is good, because Kanaya's horns would probably win. Then Dave does a double take and tackles Kanaya out of the way, just as some random fuck drops out of thin air and hits the ground back first. "Oof!" the man says, blinking watery eyes at the ceiling and lifting a hand to catch the rounded, pale purple hat that drifts down after him. "I really do not understand the appeal of throwing me out of windows at excessive hei-"

He breaks off as Karkat, Dave, and Kanaya stand over him. "Uh? Freeze?" Karkat says, resettling his weight and wondering if he should bother pulling a specibus, at this point.

"Shit no, dude, you have to say it with feeling. 'Freeze, douchenozzle!', or something like that," Dave insists. "Come up with a physiologically impossible swear word, it's tradition. Gotta uphold the Vantas brand."

Karkat wastes too much time giving Dave a disgusted look; Kanaya interjects instead. "Will you surrender and come quietly?" she asks, a spark of hope kindled in her voice. Karkat knows it's about
"Yes, yes, naturally," the man – Clover? Is this one Clover? – says, sitting up with a befuddled expression and holding his hat close. Realization hits him in visible waves as his eyes slowly widen into saucers. "Where am I – no, wait – blast it, Quatorze!"

Clover lurches up. He doesn't move fast and he's surrounded by three perfectly fucking competent hero-people. He stops to rub one knee when it emits a cracking sound. He's a middle aged dude with grubfucked knees, and at least one of them should grab him.

They all miss. Kanaya's claw skims over the top of Clover's hat; Karkat runs smack into Dave's shoulder when they both hang a sharp turn to follow the Felt member. "Sorry, pardon me," Clover says, "excuse me - ah, is that a window?" He makes a break for the hole in the wall that leads to the room Noir trashed. He ducks Kanaya's next swing by pure chance - or luck. Fuck. His top speed is a gentle hustle at best - Karkat could catch him, easy. Dave should have headed him off two seconds before he started running.

And yet, barely a yard into the room, Karkat trips over a chair that was not there two seconds ago, and on the way down his claw somehow snags in Kanaya's skirt, and he takes her down with him. It's probably a metaphor for his whole life, or something. Dave's cape slaps across Karkat's face in one final indignity as Dave's foot slides out from under him; Dave wasn't anywhere near them. This goes beyond shitty luck – this is embarrassing, and Vriska's not here for Karkat to yell at. Clover's luck overrides their basic ability to walk as far as Karkat can tell. He rips the plush fabric of Dave's cape away from his face so he can breathe without inhaling cloth, and then thrashes to extricate his legs from Kanaya's costume.

Meanwhile, Clover reaches one of the many broken windows on the far wall and, balanced precariously on a single foot with the other leg sticking out behind him so he can lean out over a jagged triangle of glass, sticks his hand out, palm up. "Come on, come on," the Felt member says, holding his hat down with his other hand so the wind can't lift it away.

Karkat and Kanaya free themselves first; Karkat doesn't know how or why Dave's cape spontaneously ate him alive, but Dave is barely visible amid the knots and folds of fabric rolled around him. Kanaya stops short of Clover, edging around him in full prowling mode. After an aborted effort to help free Dave from his swaddling prison that ends when Dave starts ineffectually sawing at his cape with his sword, Karkat joins her. "Should we grab him?" he asks her in a hiss, eyeballing the jagged glass still in the frame with suspicion. All it would take is a moment of shit luck -

Someone falls past the window in a rush, their scream rapidly receding. Karkat jolts back and Kanaya flinches beside him, but Clover keeps his palm up, waiting -

A coin with purple on one side and green-and-white on the other lands flat in his hand, green-and-white side up.

Oh god, not again. "Wait. You can't -" Karkat starts.

Clover smiles back at them, expression wry. "I am far too lucky to die. She isn't." He vanishes without completing his sentence.

Quatorze slams into the floor even hard than Clover did - her head hits hard enough to make Karkat twitch - and misses the edge of the window by bare inches. Her hair sticks out of its braid in frizzy, flyaway chunks, and her head rolls to the side to reveal unfocused eyes. "Ha...ha?" she mumbles, patting the floor with a clumsy hand. "Ha. That's always...fun."
Kanaya lightly tips the Felt member's head back toward her with the tip of her toe. Karkat still winces. "Kanaya."

"What. She'll be fine," Kanaya says, defensively. She taps Quatorze's shoulder with a foot this time, gently, and Quatorze lolls limply to the side, covers her head with her arms, and curls her legs up on autopilot. Not quite unconscious, but not all the way awake, either. Kanaya darts a shifty-eyed look at Karkat, and then huddles down to ziptie Quatorze's hands behind her back.

"Okay. Okay, good. Back on track. Fucking hell," Dave mutters. Karkat leaves Kanaya to it and stomps back over to Dave, whose cape looks worse for the wear but still intact as Dave rolls up onto his feet.

And then almost rolls right back off them. Karkat dives to catch him before his brain finishes processing the fact that Dave's tilting too far to the side; Dave staggers a little more and then sags on Karkat, resting his forehead on the heel of a palm. "Are you alright?" Karkat asks, alarmed. He gets a better grip on Dave by knotting a hand in the strap of the not-backpack he's wearing under his cape, which seems to help steady Dave.

Dave makes a muffled noise most accurately described as a 'mrrglh.' "I'm sorry in advance if I throw up or something. Shittin' hell, am I tired," he says, scrubbing his face with his hand. It knocks his shades askew, and for a second Karkat sees heavy bags under Dave's closed eyes. He also gets a whiff of unwashed human that not even the god tier pajamas seem to cover - Dave's put himself through the ringer without showering even once, and it shows. "Y'all know how sometimes you nap in the middle of the afternoon just because you have nothing better to do, and you wake up in a goddamn liminal space where nothing feels real and your head is one massive headache and your mouth tastes like ass -"

"You just said 'y'all,'" Kanaya says, looking up from where she's dragged Quatorze over to the scorched, half-melted fireplace. Karkat exchanges a serious look with her. "You need to rest, Dave."

Dave shakes his head and fixes his shades so Karkat can't see more than a flicker of red, bloodshot eyes. "Nah. Not enough time left. We need to go upstairs and meet up with the others before we hit the Crack."

"The Crack, with a significant capital letter because why the fuck not?" Karkat asks, with the same kind of futile hope that always fuels Kanaya when she asks people to surrender and reconsider their life choices of their own volition.

Another shake of the head. "You gotta say it like...the Crack. It's too close to ignore anymore," Dave says. A crackle of feedback echoes from his collar - Karkat jolts, because most of the time he forgets Dave's wearing that thing, and Dave pulls away before Karkat can get too good a look at it. His voice sounds weird to Karkat's ears when he continues, like Dave's talking through a filter, and he walks like he has somewhere to be in a hurry. "Or even better? You can call it...the Asscrack and piss off basically the entire universe, it's great. C'mon. Places to see, people to go. Impending doom. You know, the usual."

"What will happen up there?" Kanaya asks, stepping around Quatorze and catching up with Karkat so they can hurry after Dave. She tucks the broken chainsaw kind under her arm and takes a swipe at Dave's tattered cape, but Dave escapes her meddling range as they head down the hall to reach the stairwell again. "Dave, what is happening?"

A visible shudder runs through Dave; from behind, Karkat can see his shoulders hunch up and his fist clench. "Something shitty. Something inevitable," he says. "I'm not sure what it is, but I have word from an incredibly unreliable source that it's going to suck major balls. And trying to change anything major this close to the breaking point...I don't think anyone can do it. We'd doom the timeline faster than you can say 'fuck me sideways,' and then the Lord of Time will go full Langoliers on us. So whatever goes down up there, we have to deal with it."

"You don't have some future bullshit knowledge of it already?" Karkat assumed that Dave knew what the fuck was about to happen - what's the point of having time-travelled himself into exhaustion, if not to get the scoop on whatever fresh fuckery Scratch has in store for them? But Dave gives a half-shrug, which is equal to a 'nah, bruh' in Davese. "Seriously, Dave, what's been going on? You look like complete and utter shit, and I mean that in the most platonic, concerned way imaginable." Concern makes Karkat testy. He's distracted for a second when Kanaya drops her chainsaw, uncaps yet another tube of lipstick, and revs the new chainsaw that pops out. "How many of those things do you have?"

"Enough," Kanaya says, with the air of someone quietly confident in the number of spare chainsaw concealed on her person. "I just did not see the point of breaking them all on that crowbar."

Which...makes complete sense. Point to Kanaya for acting as a beacon of normality in the face of supreme bullshit.

"All I know," Dave says, his voice so filtered and quiet that Karkat almost misses it under Kanaya's chainsaw test, "is that time's running out. For a lot of things." He looks over his shoulder, pausing to give Karkat and Kanaya an unreadable look, his mouth a pinched line until he opens it. "Also, if I fall over, could one of you, like. Haul me around for a bit. I'm running on adrenalin and caffeinated beverages and the need to pee and holy fuck, I don't know how Sollux is functioning on this shit.
How is that guy even alive?" His tone turns admiring at the end and he picks up the pace again, but Karkat hears the edge of tension before that.

Karkat shrugs - nobody knows the ways of Sollux - and then takes an extra wide step to pass Karkat and pat Dave's shoulder. "We will not leave you behind," she promises.

"What kind of assholes do you take us for?" Karkat asks, keeping his voice grumpy to hide the fact that his concern has peaked. When Dave opens his mouth, Karkat heads him off before he can start elaborating. "Rhetorical question, rhetorical, dammit -"

"If you say so. Sweet." Dave sails right past the entrance to the stairs, and Karkat doesn't realize until he and Kanaya have followed Dave almost to the next door. Karkat walks sideways for a second and almost trips sideways over his own damn feet as he does a double take. Before he can demand an explanation, Dave ducks out from under Kanaya's on-going pat and shoulders the next door open to reveal -

A restroom.

"Ending the need to pee now. If I pass out in the bathroom, my shades are the only dignity I need,"
Dave announces, and then he flashsteps inside.

Karkat stares at the door. Kanaya seems content to stand guard outside it, checking occasionally to make sure no one is coming out of the stairwell, but otherwise not questioning this turn of events.
With nothing else to do, Karkat cups his claws around his mouth to yell. "DAVE, YOU ASS, ORIOLE COULD BE DYING!"

All Karkat hears is a very muffled, "He can fly!" through the door.

"Well, that's all I've got," Karkat says to Kanaya.
She has the decency to politely oblige him. "Dirk?"

Karkat nods. "WHAT ABOUT DIRK, DAVE?!" he adds at max volume.

This time all he gets out of Dave's distant mumble is, "-nship," and that makes no sense whatsoever. Maybe he should lower his expectations for a while, until Dave rests and eats something so he's no longer running on insomnia fumes. Which might not be for...a while.

Something else is bugging Karkat, though - the feeling that he's on the verge of overlooking something important. He paces back down the hall and then returns to Kanaya, brushing his clawtips over the pocket that holds his phone and wondering if he dares pull it out and delve into the group memo to poll everyone for Important Shit Karkat Is Forgetting. But that would be a fast way to lose another fifteen minutes to blathering garbage. Worse, Dave would probably join in and waste fifteen minutes loitering in the restroom before Kanaya would think to kick their asses into gear. They need to learn how to communicate succinctly, for fuck's sake.

Karkat scuffs a foot along the ground, alternating it with his regular steps, and doesn't realize he's following an unconscious rhythm until it breaks. His toe lodges against something metal on the floor and he kicks it without thinking; a crowbar clatters along the ground. Kanaya frowns at it like she holds it personally responsible for everything that's ever gone wrong in her life, and shuffles away from that spot. "We may want to move that," she says, all business. "I do not want Crowbar to wiggle over here and use it to somehow break the zipties. I would question whether that was even possible, but that weapon is annoying."

"Probably a good idea." Karkat fixes his sleeve and glove, and gingerly leans to pick the crowbar up. The specibus hangs heavy in his hand; up close, he can see splotches of rust that don't seem to affect the crowbar's usefulness or durability. He debates whether it would be smarter to toss the thing out the window (probably not - a lot of people seem to be hanging around out there right now) or to just hide it somewhere Crowbar can't find it right away.

Or he could keep it. Karkat gives it an experimental swing, adjusts his grip so it has better balance, and tries again. Kanaya's mouth twists down as she watches, her eyes tracking each swing. "...Are you certain you want to bring that thing along?" she asks, when Karkat starts patting at his hips, looking for somewhere to hook the fucking thing so that it won't get in his way.

"It breaks shit really fucking efficiently, and I want it in my life," he says, sticking a thumb claw through his belt loop and trying to judge whether he can stick a crowbar through there without tearing it. "Worst comes to worst, I give it to Spades as a wriggling day present."

Karkat sighs and gestures for him to turn in a circle. He does, and she very deliberately puts her chainsaw away before taking the crowbarkind and showing him that he has a loop for a shoulder holster of some kind. Just as the crowbar settles against his back, though, a voice cuts through the air. Karkat didn't notice until now how quiet it got, at some point. The absence of Cetus's roars doesn't register until he hears that voice, reverberating with purpose instead of corruption; Kanaya looks up at the same time he does, her lips parting slightly as they listen.

CE: Seer.

CE: Come here.

CE: I must present you with a Choice.

-
AG: H8h8! You guys are not going to 8elieve who I just caught falling out of a window! Guess, g8 on, guess!
CG: CLOVER.
AG: …
AG: Why, yes! Wh8t an amazing guess, K8rk8t!
AG: We must 8e conneeeeeeected.
CG: NO, ACTUALLY, I JUST HAVE CIRCUMSTANTIAL EVIDENCE THAT GIVES ME THE INFORMATION NEEDED TO MAKE A REASONABLE GUESS.
AG: Oh, well goooooood for you! :::P
AG: 8nyway, stop 8eing 8oring and get ready. I'm on my way! Terezi, wh8t are you up to over here?!
GC: 4TT3MPT1NG TO F1GUR3 SOM3TH1NG OUT. TH1S S33R STUFF 1S NOT 4S 34SY 4S 1 M4K3 1T LOOK, YOU KNOW.
AG: Well, I've got some choice words for Doc Scratch, so hurry and figure it out!
GC: SCR4TCH 1S D3F1N1T3LY UP TO SOM3TH1NG...WHY 1S 1T SO H4RD TO S33 WH4T H1S 4NGL3 ON TH1S 1S...
AG: Wowow, don't care! Cetus is done, which means it's g8 time!

--

-- gardenGnostalgic [GG] opened a memo on board SUCKERS at error:error:error -- GG: guys!
GG: guys holy fuck!
GG: major super problems in chicago!
GG: also terezi your dragonmom says hi!
GC: T3LL H3R 1 S41D H1 B4C- W41T, WH4T?
AG: Did you 8low up the city? 8ecause honestly if you did, like, fuck that place. Please tell me you got pics.
GG: D: no!!!
TA: okay who broke what. ii mean iit, 2omethiing major ju2t went two 2hiit and ii need name2.
GG: i think.
GG: i think we might be in trouble.
TG: its pretty fucking deep
GA: Well Shit.
GG: dave, did you know this would happen?
TG: no but i felt it
TG: were so boned
TT: What exactly happened, and can dealing with it wait until after Cetus is taken care of?
GG: me and noir ran into something! i don't even know what, i wasn't gonna wait around and let it zap me!
GG: it was like that mummy movie but with a giant dragon egg and time breaking everywhere
EB: you unleashed arnold vosloo after he's spent 3000 years stuck in a tomb?
GG: maybe! it happened really fast!
EB: holy crap :o
AA: its too late
AA: it was always going to be too late
AA: and youre about to lose some time that would have really come in handy
EB: to arnold vosloo's wrath?
AA: oh yeah probably
GC: H4NG ON - J4D3, WH3R3 4R3 YOu T4K1NG MY LUSUS? >:T
GG: somewhere safe??
AG: Well, that's just vague enough for it to not 8e my pr08lem. 8ack to 8usiness!
TA: fuck all of you people and your lackadaii2iical bull2hiit.
TA: ii don't know how we get anything done around here, hone2tly.
CA: i knoww, right? like, wwho evven knowws howw wwe havve time to wwaste wwriting all these memos.
CA: are half of us just standin around twwiddlin our thumbs wwhile Eq and Rose and John figure out their plan?
GC: TH4T'S PR3TTY MUCH OUR D3F4ULT, Y3S. 1 DON'T KNOW WH4T YOU 3XP3CT3D.
GA: She's Right – We Mostly Engage In Strange Antics And Long Conversations, With Occasional Intervals Of Efficiency And Violence. So It Goes.
CA: no, i meant like. twwiddlin in a literal fashion. wwere all just typing, howw are wwe getting awway wwith this -
TG: no dude you cant point it out like that TG: now were gonna have to actually concentrate TT: Vriska, Eridan. We're going to approach Cetus again, and it would be nice for everyone involved if you two would avoid shooting any of us.
CA: wwhat is the plan then TT: We're going to go in through the eye, and keep going in until Equius has a maximum effect on where we assume a whale's brain is located.
CA: thats awwsome im in AG: Ugh, fiiiiiiine! It's not like I would get anything out of it, anyway. Hurry up already, then!
-
The problem is not getting Equius close enough, per se. It's that Cetus won't stay still. It's that once they start trying to weave through the lashing tentacles to reach Cetus's gaping eyes, Cetus tries that much hard to smack them away. It's that Rose can't see what she's doing when Equius is literally right beside her. Between him and the sheer chaos of Leviathan's influence, charting the best path through Cetus's onslaught is next to impossible.

It's that even with Equius right next to her, she can still hear Leviathan whispering. Not strongly enough for her to make out words, but enough so that the churning of the ocean fills her ears and drowns out her quieter thoughts. Her stomach churns in time with the waves, and there's a constant lump lodged in her throat, making it difficult to swallow. Rose feels like if she reached into her stomach and drew out her insides, they'd be julienned and rotted through in thin strings. Surely one can only withstand so much of an old god's corrosive attention before the effects start to manifest permanently - and Rose has made a poor habit of interacting with Leviathan on its own terms.

(It's never going to stop. She's never going to be free of this. She invited them in, and she's starting to wonder if she'll always carry them under her skin. She'll still be tainted somehow long after everyone else has moved on.)

(ohroseohroseohroseohrose)

Someone pokes her with a finger. It feels like getting punched with a moderate amount of force applied directly to her brain, and Rose belatedly claps a hand to her nose to stem a fresh trickle of blood pouring over her lip. "Sorry, sorry. I'm fine," she says, not sure who she's speaking to until Equius shakes off the latest cloak of void.
John offers her a corner of his sleeve, but Rose shakes her head and pulls a twist of handkerchief out of one of her pockets. It's a toss-up now whether she can find one that isn't already stained with splotches of blood in various stages of drying, but Kanaya supplied her with enough excess fabric that she hasn't run out yet. "You know that thing we do?" John says, while Rose finishes mopping up her face. "That thing where we say we're fine but we're really, super obviously not?"

"I may be familiar with the concept," Rose says, pinching the offending nostril shut and tilting her head forward so her hair obscures her peripheral vision for a moment. It's not going to work, but it might buy her a few precious minutes before her god tier jacket is awash with gore. "You and I may or may not be two of the worst offenders, as I recall."

John purses his lips at her. "You are so the worst."

Rose's nostrils try to flare. There are obvious reasons this is not a resounding success. "Lies and slander."

"Au contraire -" John starts to say, with an overblown accent, before Equius lifts both of them up by the backs of their shirts and tosses them over the side of the building. "Okay, okay, going now! Break over! Jeez!"

Rose coasts along under her own power, tracking along the side of the building as she takes in Cetus's current condition. Losing both eyes hasn't slowed her in the slightest; the denizen's tentacles merely lash out with more erratic vigor to make up for it, while one gouged out socket drips black liquid that streaks down Cetus's wide face and rains down into the greyish sludge below. As though aware of being watched, a slit opens in Cetus's forehead, and another eye blinks open, strings of black ooze stretched between the lids as it rolls to stare at Rose. She clutches her needlekind tight in one fist, mouth tightening. It's hard to predict where Cetus will strike next with the sheer number of tentacles swarming from the many wounds in her flanks, but one shoots out toward Rose with laser precision. She and John knock knuckles awkwardly when they both attempt to grab the other's forearm, and in that split second of distraction, the tentacle jolts forward, suddenly fifty feet longer with extra spikes lancing out and curving toward them. The Breeze whirls them out of the way, but it's a much closer call than it should have been.

While they are air, Rose can sense a distinct, troll-shaped mass dropping through them, beside them, even though her own sight can barely register Equius as more than a faint shadow. But as soon as they solidify again it passes, and Rose has to deal with Equius's void aura on her own. They're on the opposite side of the street, on Cetus's blind side -

Just in time for ten more slits to burst open over Cetus's crying eye, and ten new, differently shaped pupils to fixate on Rose with hungry scrutiny. Three fresh tentacles dart toward them, while Cetus's bellyful of tendrils begins to ponderously creep forward along the Strip. The first rips free from where it wound up buried in the side of the building opposite, and lashes horizontally toward them, taking a good chunk of the building along with it. John and Rose dodge again without dissolving, the Breeze launching through the air more quickly than Rose's baseline floating abilities could manage, and the wind tosses her hair so that she sees Equius intercept the first tentacle head on. He takes the impact hard in the chest, his arms stretched as wide as they can to reach around half the tentacle, and he skids a little ways through the air before growling and yanking with his whole body. For a moment, nothing happens; then, Equius grits his teeth hard enough that one of them snaps in two, and the tentacle pops free from Cetus's body with a gush of dark blood. It keeps writhing and snapping back and forth, sprouting more spikes in an effort to stab Equius through the chest, but he lifts it over his head with both claws and flings it away down the street with a victorious grunt. Landing with a sluggish splash, the tentacle lays still - then twitches and snakes away beneath the "Whoop! Heads up, turbulence!" John calls over the wind, and Rose chokes on bloody snot as they abruptly drop ten feet, stopping with an equally sudden lurch. Two of the other three tentacles attempt to wrap and coil around them in quick, snaking circles, darting along every time John tries to zip them out of reach, and one comes close enough that Rose's hood gets brushed roughly to the side as it passes around them in a single loop. John wrenches them to the side before turning them into the Breeze, and when they come out over Cetus's back, Rose has to smack her visor back down on the bridge of her nose before it can fly away.

But that's not because of the turbulence. It was just a flash, but she could have sworn that last jump happened because John caught the same glimpse of popped collar and angled shades that she did. "Did my father really just attempt to drag us out of the way?" she asks, disgruntled.

"Yeah. Is it just me, or did it get darker out here?" John says. Rose looks over and sees John...well. It's hard to tell what he's looking at, since he has sprouted a pair of dark shades. When he pulls them off and stuffs them into a pocket, he looks downright peeved. "He is so weird."

A burst of white lightning streaks past them and carves through Cetus's back. The bolt doesn't punch very deep before it grounds to a stop in the seething mass of dense tentacles within, but the accompanying flash of bright light sends John swearing and scrambling to fumble the shades back onto his face. He makes a stream of unintelligible-yet-disgruntled noises, while Eridan pulls his hand back and floats over with a look best described as apologetically terrified. He's altered his outfit somewhat since Rose last got a good look at him: his puffy shorts have lengthened, and everything looks more ornate and embroidered, as though he's crossed old princely fashion with something from the military. It might even, for all Rose knows, be historically accurate. "That was not on purpose. I didn't even graze you," he says, defensive, his sharp wings fluttering as he lands lightly on one foot and then the other.

Equius drops like a rock, landing on a fist and a knee, and Cetus's skin wobbles out in ripples around him, sending Eridan skittering for his footing. Vriska lands with a little more finesse, but Rose sees that luck notwithstanding, her awakened god tier dress is now far more tattered than before. Most of the underskirt has been shortened to shreds, and though the gauntlet on her arm remains intact, Rose can see parts where acid has starts to deform the surface of the metal. "Look who decided to show up to help with round two!" she says, all haughty poise, just a hint of teeth in her grin as she nods to herself.

"Yeah, since it looks like this is still a work in progress," John shoots back.

Vriska takes a step back and Eridan presses a fist to his mouth. "What, you think you can do better?" Vriska says, with a slight stutter before her competitive spirit kicks into high gear.

"I think you already beat Cetus once, but somehow neither you nor Eridan are making a dent," Rose interjects, keeping her voice calm and steady as she holds out a hand between Vriska and John. "Where would her weak points be were she not infested, apart from the eyes?"

Vriska starts forward again, jabbing a thumb at her chest and glaring at Rose. She brandishes her sword at Eridan, and Eridan goes cross-eyed in his hurry to duck. "We're aiming at them! We are so making a dent! This dumb denizen's life bar just keeps wigging out all over the place!" She stamps her heel down against Cetus's back to punctuate her words. "Talk! About! Cheeeeeeep!"

With her final stomp, Vriska raises her foot extra high and drives it down with excessive force. A tentacle punches straight through Cetus's skin and misses the troll's nose by an inch - if that. Vriska yells and chops it in two, her sword burning with cerulean blue light, but it's too late. The skin under their feet begins to ripple, the wriggled tentacles within clearly visible through the denizen's bleached flesh, and Rose kicks off in sync with John as a crown of thorny spikes shoots out along the crest of Cetus's head. They rocket up, but can't seem to get out of reach - the tentacles and spines just keep growing.

"...There's a life bar?" Rose asks, as John spins them out of the way. They pause, drifting between Eridan and Equius as they hover in the air to the right of Cetus's new eye. John shrugs, and they both look back at Cetus. The denizen now looks like a cross between a sea urchin and a whale, as more and more spines pierce through along the length of her spine down to the atrophying tail. More and more of the tentacles are growing spikes as well - a truly thorncouddling brier for them to cut their way through.

There is, indeed, a life bar. Rose almost goes cross eyed herself flipping through the different filters she's mastered for her extra sight, but nothing works until she reaches one she recalls developing while most of the way drunk. It can show the filters that apply themselves to significant words like fraymotifs in text chats; when Rose studies Cetus again, she can make out a ladder of shuddering red bars, each the length of a football field. Some of them overlap each other and they clip through the road itself, making it difficult to quantify how much health Cetus has. It's an unfairly bewildering amount. "That is more excessive than the Black King," Equius observes. John scratches the back of his head, then gives another shrug.

"No shit!" Vriska says, hacking her way out of the brier the hard way. Her sword finds every weak point and fault in the spines, and she bursts out in a petulant flash of light that leaves scorch marks in her wake. "It's more 'excessive' than it ever was before!" Then her uniform flares – and reverts back to orange and gold, the cerulean-trimmed dress fading in a rush of sparkles. Vriska tightens her fist reflexively as her sword vanishes, and the dice in the handle somehow don't slip free. When Rose checks, she sees that Vriska's aura of power has already dwindled to a fraction of what it was when she threw the dice. All that luck, already poured down the metaphorical drain of Cetus's insatiable gullet. Vriska pushes away from Cetus, keeping a wary eye over her shoulder as she angles toward them. "Tch!"

It's not a retreat if Vriska's rummaging around for a fresh set of civilian bystanders to steal luck from. Rose doesn't know what happened to the first batch; she's loathe to think of what could have gone wrong for them, considering how much casual destruction Cetus has inflicted on the Strip. "If you don't know anywhere better to start, we're going to try to launch Equius through one of her eyes for the exorcism," she says, trying to draw Vriska's focus away from potential targets.

Vriska snorts derisively, though her aura doesn't fluctuate as she finishes crossing to their group. Rose gets an answer from Eridan, instead. "An' that'll make it killable? Because I'm tellin' you, this? This is ridiculous," he declares, brandishing his claws at Cetus. A thick line of violet blood runs out of his nose, and without thinking he sniffs hard so that it gets sucked back up. He gags, coughs, and then massages his throat. "You think there's a limit on amazin' cosmic hope powers?" he asks, looking pale.

Vriska launches herself at top speed and punts Eridan back five feet when she barrels into him knee-first. "Shut up! Shut! Up! Do fucking not! If you crap out too, I'll kick your ass!" Seizing him by the ear fins, she smushes his cheeks inward with her palms and barks directly into his face. "Now shut up and believe in me!"

"Vris, you...you're an inspiration," Eridan says, with exhausted sarcasm clear in his voice. He can barely open his eyes with the pressure Vriska is applying. As though to make up for it, John is looking from Vriska to Eridan and back again with his eyebrows reaching for the stars and his mouth a judgmental line.
"I do not think that's how it -" Rose starts to say. She doesn't know why she bothers, sometimes.

Vriska frees one claw to point at Rose, her face a thundercloud, before switching back to Eridan. "Shut up! And you? BELIEVE IN THE ME WHO BELIEVES IN YOU!" She then drags Eridan closer, hissing with remarkable articulation through clenched teeth, her bruise-blue gums exposed. "Aka, if you blow this for us? Believe that I will make you pay."

Eridan leans back as far as he can to escape the range of Vriska's spittle. He does not succeed; with her grip on his face, Vriska just floats on back with him until he's almost bent over backwards. "Fear-hope. Does that even count?" he asks, sounding faint. Some of the color returns to his face, but Rose suspects that might be because his head is now lower than his pusher.

"I believe the word you're looking for is, 'desperation,'" Rose says, coughing into her hand to clear her throat.

When she pulls her hand away, dark blood speckles the side of her forefinger and thumb. Cool as you please, she drops her hand to the side and dries it off on the side of her pants. The color's not an exact match, but no one will look close enough to notice it. Not while they're in the middle of all this.

She's lived most of her life up until this point doing exactly that thing where one pretends one is fine, when one is not, in fact, fine. But she'll be damned if she admits defeat to John.

John raises his hand, and Rose twitches, thinking she's been caught out. "Guys? Uh, guys?" he says instead, the line of his mouth widening still further as he stares at – ah, yes, the giant denizen that Rose ignored for all of a split second.

"Yeah, what is it now? Do you need a pep talk?!" Vriska demands, whipping around. "Oh."

Cetus stares back at them. Given the sheer breadth and quantity of her new eyes (seven on one side and one on the other – damn and blast, why eight?), this is a harrowing display. Almost all of the denizen's thrashing tentacles have fallen still, slumping in S shaped coils, and the denizen has stopped with what Rose can only describe as an impatient, unspoken message of, *we can get back to fighting any day, now."

It's a quiet roar, compared to Cetus's earlier bellows. Almost calm. Thunderous enough to rattle Rose's bones, and topple what few trees remain in the resort areas, their acid-eaten trunks landing flat and sinking beneath the sludge. Rose can't even imagine what anyone hearing left in the vicinity must think of this fight – what is this, the third major city a Horrorterror has rendered unlivable, in the space of a few months? Not counting the reportedly tiny town in Russia, anyway.

Perhaps it's rude not to answer. "Cetus," Rose says. John's grip on her hand tightens as Cetus's tentacles begin to dance and wave again, but only a few lash out – one punches toward Vriska and Eridan, who yelp and fly out of the way. With an enormous shriek of ripping metal, the tentacle smashes through the corner of the very battered building behind them. The rest don't find any target in particular, but as they stretch out they fill more and more of the air space above street-level with suckers and thorns. Insight twitches in the back of Rose's mind, above the swirling of the ocean, and she turns her eyes on the sludgy water below. Seeing through the grim aura that hangs rank over the water makes her eyes water with something that might not be lacrimal fluid, but close to Cetus's underbelly, she sees the murky, sinuous motion of many, many somethings delving beneath the surface. They waver so much that it's like looking at lenticular images. And those are just the grimdark tendrils, from what she can tell – the grimlight blends in too well for her to take their measure.
If Leviathan-in-Cetus wanted to, the Horrorterror could turn all this into a death trap. Not for them, not as long as John has a handle on things and Vriska has even a smidgeon of luck left to her name, but to anyone else who might be unfortunate enough to be hanging around. And Rose doesn't know where Becquerel took to dropping people off before vanishing…

"Lots of movement under the surface. Warn anyone who's still out here to watch out," she whispers to John through the corner of her mouth; she doesn't dare look away from Cetus long enough to message them.

The wind rushes past her mouth. "Already done," John says, with a thumbs up.

"LEVIATHAN'S INTERJECTION SOUNDS LIKE ROSE WOULD IMAGINE STICKING HER HEAD INSIDE A WASHING MACHINE LOADED WITH BRICKS MUST. SHE DOESN'T KNOW WHETHER LEVIATHAN DECIDED TO POUR MORE OF THEMSELVES INTO CETUS'S FLESHSUIT OR THE HORRORTERROR'S VOICES ARE JUST GROWING MORE CHAOTIC ON SOME RANDOM, UNKNOWABLE WHIM, BUT ERIDAN PUKE IN MIDAIR WITH A CONVulsion THAT WRACKS HIS ENTIRE BODY. SOMETHING WRENCHES JOHN'S HAND FROM HERS, AND ROSE HEARS JOHN CRY OUT BEFORE SHE'S TUCKED IN CLOSE BESIDE SOMEONE WHO WOULD REEK OF SWEAT, IF SAID SWEAT WEREN'T BEING SUCKED INTO A VOID AS FAST AS IT ACCUMULATES. ERIDAN DANGLES FROM EQUIUS'S OTHER ARM; FOR A MOMENT ROSE THINKS HE'S UNCONSCIOUS, BUT THE VIOLETBLOOD RAISES HIS HEAD SLOWLY, WITH A QUIETLY VIOLENT EXPRESSION ON HIS FACE ROSE DOESN'T THINK SHE'S SEEN BEFORE.

Equius looks down, his face momentarily visible through the void as he grimaces. The cold note in her voice reaches Eridan, though, and he hacks up a last mouthful of bile before cackling. "Lalonde's fuckin' pissed!"

Equius's claw clamps on Rose's wrist like a vice – too tight – and then he lets her go. Rose floats lopsided for a second, adjusting to the renewed weight on that one arm. This time, she doesn't bother raising her voice: Leviathan can hear her. "No. I'm sick of this. I'm sick of you." She snaps her fingers and beckons Vriska. There's never a real guarantee that Vriska will be in a cooperative mood, but the troll flies up on Rose's left, looking unimpressed but drawn by curiosity, if nothing else.

"NEVER. AGAIN."

Turning her head to the side, she speaks into Vriska's ear. Vriska tilts her head to the side too far, her wind-blown hair brushing Rose's face. "I want to steal the light from their eyes."

Vriska brandishes both her claws at Rose's face. "Blow on them for luck or some shit."

"Is there anything in particular I need to do?" Rose asks.

Vriska clenches both claws into fists, grinning at Rose like she's just been handed an octagon-shaped lollipop. "Oh, helllllllll yes!" When she unclenches her hands, her dice sit wedged between her fingers, four on each hand. "Just wait. Terezi's gonna be so pissed she missed out on a Thief/Seer combo."

"Is there anything in particular I need to do?" Rose asks.

Vriska brandishes both her claws at Rose's face. "Blow on them for luck or some shit."
"Ah, of course. As is tradition." Rose sighs on the dice, if only to get Vriska's claws away from her eyes, and music blooms in her ears with riotous chimes.

[y/n acknowledged]

[fraymotif activated: No Light, No Light]

Vriska casts her dice out in a long arc. They burn like tiny white-blue stars in Rose's vision, the light visible even after the dice are far enough away that they should have been too small to make out - and each lands with perfect precision on a tentacle or a thorn rather than plunging into the sludge below. The last to land makes it all the way to the crown of Cetus's head, and Rose can feel Vriska's whole body go taut beside her as she holds her breath and waits for the roll to finish.

It lands with a clack that Rose feels rather than hears, despite how far away the die landed; all of the dice light up once more, and eight lances materialize out of the air. Each looks about the length of a telephone pole, and before the denizen can react, they puncture Cetus's eyes. Vriska tosses her hair with a triumphant smirk, her eyes falling shut as she basks in the moment.

The street bursts into motion. And Vriska's luck must really be running low; she's still mid-hair toss when the grimdark thorns eat up the sky. Rose yanks her into a clear space before the troll can be impaled, and Vriska squawks, but more tentacles close in, growing in short, erratic bursts to cut them off. By sheer dumb luck, Vriska's dice get flung into the air and Vriska snaps her claws until they arc back to her with uncanny accuracy. Equius rips the thicket apart and muscles his way through to reopen the airspace between them, but the grimlight tentacles that follow slide up and fill in the gaps as they interlace with the rest of the thicket. They fill in almost all the space from one side of the street to the other.

She reaches out a hand, and John seizes it - one of her fingers winds up bent down between their palms by accident, but in the next moment they're not corporeal and the point is rendered moot. John pulls them all around into the air before Cetus's eyes, and Equius launches himself at one of the punctured sockets.

One of the thicker tentacles shoots up and bats him aside; Cetus's already obscenely wide mouth cracks open even more, a fresh line of teeth yawning before them. "No, you dumb- ugh!" Vriska yells, her frustrated noises spinning off on the Breeze as they all dissolve again. This time, John takes them up and up, above the black and white maze of thorns that now surrounds the denizen's body. "You think we haven't tried that?!!"

Equius doesn't quite glare at her, but the absence of any expression on his face (that Rose can make out) speaks for itself. "I haven't tried it. The longer this drags on, the more this spreads. Strider won't be able to keep Nepeta and Nitram out of the way much longer. Nepeta is becoming unruly."

Knowing Vriska, she's about to make a very unwise comment about what Nepeta and Tavros can do with that unruliness, and Rose doesn't intend to let them get sidetracked by a blood feud in the making. They need more of an opening if Equius is going to get close and stay close long enough for the void to isolate all of Cetus, and as long as Leviathan can respond with more defenses like this, they're going to be stuck dancing around until John exhausts himself.

She shouts this time - less for Leviathan-in-Cetus's benefit, and more to jolt Vriska before she can make an ass of herself. Trying to reason with or find reason in a Horrorterror is most likely futile, but Rose wants to distract Leviathan more than anything else. And there's no denying that she's captured its attention; Cetus hasn't done anything but respond to her and her friends since she and John re-engaged.

More to the point, it feels good to scream at Leviathan, even if its responses are no doubt doomed to be obfuscating and incomprehensible to a mortal mind. "The world is ending! There won't be anything left for you here, even if you stay on the physical plane! There's no point to you doing this! Just - just leave!" Rose's voice cracks hard twice in the last two sentences.

Eridan tries to smack her arm, hissing, "Will you stop aggravatin' it -" before Rose jerks around and glares at his wayward claw. He snatches it back, tilting his horns back and blinking rapidly. Meanwhile, when Rose glances down, she sees that the uppermost eyes sockets in Cetus's face are vast enough that they can peer back at Rose with a hollow, unseeing stare. Something's rippling and unfolding within the sockets of the eyes on the left, like the dark, fluttering veils of a deep-sea creature, and it takes Rose a moment too long - John sucks in a breath first, his front teeth digging into his lower lip, and Rose realizes that a rose is blooming in Cetus's eye.

(...Roses and thorns. A brier thereof. Rose wonders if she should stop thinking of the limbs as tentacles, and start calling them stems.)

The denizen convulses, and Cetus's body doubles up in a way a whale's body was never meant to. Extra tentacles snap through the thin skin like broken springs, while several parts of the thorn maze retract and draw in close. John has to haul them away again - Rose has lost count of how many times he's done so in the past few minutes - but with a roar, Cetus lunges toward them when they reappear down the road. They're forced further and further down the Strip, and Cetus moves with startling speed through the grim sludge. "Oh god, it's like it's sliding down a giant slip 'n slide! Of death!" John yells through the wind.

Rose has something else on her mind. "'I'…" she murmurs, mostly to herself. But the Breeze has them all in its grip, and Eridan throws her a knowing, worried look as though he can sense the quotation marks.

John hears them, too. "That's weird, right? Because that seemed a little weird. A lottle weird, even," he says. He has, Rose notices, a very firm grip on Equius's trailing hood, so as to not lose track of him; Vriska, on the other hand, is being carried along on a stream of wind at least four feet from the rest of the group at any given time.

"A lottle, indeed. But then again, what do we know about chaotic alien hiveminds and their choice of pronouns?" Rose asks. The question's only half rhetorical.

"Too much," John scrunches up his nose. "Let's compare notes later."

"If there is a later, by all means."

Vriska loses her patience. "Stop whooshing us around, dammit! Some of us aren't a bunch of wimps!!!"

John rolls his eyes. "Jeez, sorry!" After one last jump along the wind, she emerges with her hair dumped in her face and one fist raised. John shrugs and Vriska drops an inch before catching herself when the Breeze ditches her. She shakes the dice cupped in her palm with vigor as she flips all her hair back with a forearm. Some catches on her mismatched horns, but she ignores it in favor of eyeing up Cetus's rapidly approaching bulk. They've come out near the Venetian - which is worrying. The area around Cetus's initial drop site may have been evacuated, but the further they travel down the road, the more likely it is that they're going to damage inhabited buildings.

And when she looks again, Cetus's eyes are full of dark roses.

"You have nothing I want!" Not to mention the fact that, despite Leviathan's words, Rose suspects the Horroterror would be perfectly content to see her dead - the wave of thorny flagella continue to lash out at them, and one tentacle in particular seizes something from the road (a half-slag replica of the Statue of Liberty, from what little Rose recognizes) and whips it at them like a spear with tremendous force. It passes so close overhead that the shadow makes Rose's skin crawl and drops of acidic slime splatter along Rose's jacket sleeves. But it misses and continues to fly with such velocity that Rose thinks the statue might clear most of the city and land somewhere in the Vegas suburbs when all's said and done. "Cetus, I would speak to you, and only you! Can you hear me?!" she asks, switching tactics.

"Stop talking to it!" Vriska screeches back, stopping mid-throw to glower at Rose. Then she flings the dice in a wild throw - they all land on the same street lamp, but the light that flares from the dice is of a mediocre luminous flux, and only summons a single guillotine to hack off the tentacle that threw the replica statue. "Oh my god, just hurry up, horsebrain! Just pick an eyeball again and Eridan, you blast it until it stops paying attention."

"Who's crappin' out, again? Right," Eridan mutters - quietly, but not quietly enough. Vriska turns on him, livid, and Eridan flies away from the group at top speed, raw power gathering around his claws. "Going, I'm going!" He curves around Cetus in a wide circle with a bolt of pale light burning through the thorny growth that grows across his path.

Rose draws both her needlekind and levels them at Cetus. The possessed denizen hasn't attempted to grow a fresh set of eyes, and being blinded doesn't appear to hamper it much. She takes aim at the one of the sockets that isn't filled with rotting petals, and starts mentally incanting. "I'm not talking to you," she says, flatly, and then casts the spell. It bursts from both needlekind and streaks toward the denizen in a flurry of light, but Cetus blocks with two tendrils. Rose's power burns through most of them, but doesn't reach Cetus's face. "Cetus! We have a game to play! You need to wake up!" she calls, a little louder, as she starts charging up another spell.

When she checks Cetus's ludicrous lifebar, though, she sees they haven't even made a dent. Blinding Cetus made no impact on its grim-enhanced durability. She supposes this is why one might want to talk to one's denizen, rather than fighting them outright. Even if her more powerful destructive attacks weren't corrupted by Leviathan, she can't imagine taking Cetus on alone.
"Should I take you in close? I can help." John asks, his voice low. Someone Rose can't see at the moment says something in a muffled, gruff whisper - that is vexing - and John sticks out his tongue. "I am not obvious. Rude."

"I did not intend to be rude. This requires my strongest effort. You would find it - uncomfortable," the person replies, stiffly, and then Rose - comes close to forgetting that they were there at all. John's the only one with her, now; Vriska skips away, jumping between lashing tentacles to snatch her dice up and launch a barrage of low-level attacks that only affect a few of Cetus's limbs at a time. And Cetus has countless limbs to replace them with. If Leviathan weren't wholly focused on Rose, to the point that Eridan is firing at Cetus's broad, scabbed flank with complete impunity...if Vriska weren't relentlessly persistent, somersaulting and skidding between tentacles, throwing the dice down again and again with fury instead of luck fueling her...

Rose wonders. For some reason, she can't shake the impression that Leviathan's ability to multitask has suffered an abrupt decline. 'I.' Why did Leviathan say 'I'?

Something to ponder, later. Right now, Rose needs to serve as the best distraction she can manage, for someone's sake, "Cetus, you can throw them off! We need to fight!" she shouts. Light gathers and snaps between the twin points of her needlekind as she raises them over her head, and then jabs them toward Cetus, launching a line of light that scalds a burning strip through the denizen's thorn brier. Part of the attack scorches a tiny portion of Cetus's face, above the upper line of her vast mouth. Rose inflicts little more than the equivalent of a sunburn; Eridan fires five bolts of hope lightning in quick succession and they stab into Cetus's side with more raw force. All he receives for his efforts is a shudder and a swipe from a single vast tentacle. Cetus opens its mouth further still, and a gag-inducing breath heavy with the scent of dead fish and rotting blubber washes over Rose and John. John whisks it away on the wind. Rose does her best not to breathe through her nose, regardless.

"This is the last straw. Rose shouldn't be surprised; between Vriska's ego and Eridan's...everything, it was only a matter of time. She'd have bet on Vriska, but as she's noted, Vriska's luck reservoir has seen better days, and for once in her life, Vriska isn't impatient enough.

Eridan points an accusing claw at Cetus, light pulsing from his chest and running along his arm. It's so bright it almost whites out Rose's vision when she glances at his shaking hand. John shades his shades with his hand, and even then she can see the preternatural glow of his eyes squinting through the lenses. "I'm feeling real fuckin' ignored over here!" Eridan yells, the white symbol on the front of his shirt brightening in sync with his power.

Rose sees it coming. No - say rather that she sees Vriska suddenly light up like a sun again, burgeoning with stolen luck. Rose can't pinpoint the source, but - "Vri- Eridan, stop!" she shouts, switching halfway through when it's clear that what Vriska's done is done.

Eridan fires. He aims at Cetus's face, but the angle is subtly wrong. The denizen lunges to snap at John and Rose, and the beam of power cuts through the wide curve of Cetus's head - and keeps going at an upward angle. John and Rose aren't in its path; it blazes past them and over the mall across the street like a comet, between two towers and over a lopsided oval perched between them. "Crap. Crap, crapcrapcrapcrap," John starts chanting, with an odd echo that makes no sense until Rose realizes she's saying the exact same thing at the same time.
For a brief second, Rose hopes that the beam might miss. It looks like it's going to climb enough to clear the gold-glass building just off the Strip. Naturally, her hopes are shattered (she should really stop doing that). The beam blasts through the top two floors of the Trump International, taking an entire chunk of white stone off the top and obliterating the 'T' in the sign. With a deafening crack, the rest of the windows finish shattering, sloughing off the building in glittering sheets and falling to the ground. Rose flinches when a second, smaller cascade of cracks rattle off as each round of window glass lands and shatters further still. Eridan's attack keeps going, but with the angle, it keeps climbing and disappears into the sky in the distance without hitting anything else visible in the city.

Rose turns back toward Vriska. The ceruleanblood stands on top of the Venetian's campanile, defiant and glaring daggers at Rose already; Eridan, on the other hand, claps both hands to his face, eyes bulging with shocked embarrassment. "...Ohhh my god," John says, with dawning horror. "Vriska! Eridan! Oh my god!"

"Give me a break, John, there wasn't even anyone on that floor!" Vriska yells.

"We're gonna get sued, Vriska!!! We don't have superhero property damage insurance! That was blatant!"

"THE WORLD IS ENDING, JOHN!" she calls back, at twice the volume. Then Vriska hesitates, as though processing the fact that reality ending might not stop a lawsuit in action if Terezi involves herself, and points at Eridan. "Just make Eridan pay for it!"

Eridan squawks behind his hands, rips them away from his face, and starts babbling. "This is fine. This is totally. Fine!" He points a finger at Vriska, then John, then Rose. "None of you saw anythin', dammit! Just keep our story straight, it came out of the giant monster - no one got that on video, right? Right. It was all part of the giant whale's screaming rampage and no one can prove otherwise!"

"Got bad news for you, kid," Bro says over Rose's head. Rose nearly jumps out of her boots, and John wraps his arms around her neck for dear life. There's a pause while Bro vanishes and reappears on the opposite side of the Venetian's campanile, perched sideways on the steep surface of the tower, and then Vriska yelps as a puppet shaped like a square robot lands a reprimanding smack square between her horns. "There've been camera crews since about fifteen minutes ago. Can only smack down so many of them before it gets boring." The squat puppet snaps around the tower and back into Bro's gloved hands before Vriska can shred it with her claws, and Bro's shades glint in the light as he shoots a finger pistol at John.

John takes off his shades with such vehemence that Rose is almost throttled, and chucks the sunglasses at Bro with a burst of windy fury. "Wait, hang on, how do we even have time for this?!", John asks. "What - Cetus - ?"

Which is an excellent question.

Equius comes rushing back to the forefront of Rose's mind, and the thick void eases off so that Rose can look at Cetus and see.

Part of Cetus's head sags around the half-slagged, melted hole Eridan punched through it. No, more - all of Cetus sags, the whale's skin blanched with a pale lavender tinge as black ooze drools from the corners of her slack mouth. There's no sign of wriggling movement beneath the denizen's skin; it looks more like Cetus has started to collapse in on herself. As though there's nothing left inside to hold up her bulk outside of the water. "Equius?" Rose calls, pushing past the lingering uncertainty that the troll is really there.

Five roses finished blooming in the denizen's eyes before Eridan's blast, but when Rose floats forward, there's one socket where Equius's dark blue outline is just barely visible, a solid troll-shaped absence lodged deep in the back of the eye. "I am here," Equius says, the last of his shroud falling away.

Rose flies closer, and John comes along with her, his windsock hood trailing behind them. Eridan skulks around the curve of Cetus's flank to rejoin the group, though Rose loses sight of him once she and John get close enough for Cetus's bulk to block him from view. As they draw closer, the odd stillness that has seized Cetus becomes more apparent. Flying through the mangled brier of tentacles, Rose reaches out and brushes her fingers tentatively along one as wide as she is; the texture feels like a woody stem, dried up and stiffened with age. John knocks on the stem with his knuckles, but there is no reaction from the denizen. The tentacles that burst out of Cetus's underside lay limp in the street, the sides shiny with what looks like sweat.

They're melting. Not that the street needed to be doused in any more acid, but still.

When they draw level with Equius, she sees that he has punched through the back of the cavernous socket. His arms are coated in dried up, pale purple blood as he keeps his fists lodged in the wall. Past that, it's hard to make out anything - all the void that Equius conjured to conceal himself must have been directed into the inside of Cetus, but Rose can't detect any of it.

"Holy crap. I can't believe we hatched a plan and it actually worked," John says, fascinated. He floats away from Rose, his -

No, John does not have a windsock hood. He's wearing the dark version of his old uniform that Kanaya touched up, with a perfectly normal sized hood. Rose stiffens, mentally scraping through her mind with a fine-toothed comb, and can't find anything...off. Leviathan's forced absence feels like a weight off her chest, and she can't hear anything except herself. "John, were you wearing something different a second ago?" she asks.

"Uh, no." John gives her a confused look. "Or...not that I know of?"

Ah. Excellent. Nothing to worry about at all, then. Clearly. Rose rubs her eyes, and John is still in dark blue and black. Equally excellent. "Equius, are you alright? Will this hold?" she asks, rubbing a little harder to make the dried blood flake off her cheeks. Her face feels sticky and filthy, her hair a coarse bird's nest, and she would quite gladly trade her soul for a hot shower. Ha. What a shame Leviathan never thought to offer that.

Equius looks back over his shoulder. It's strange, seeing him clearly for the first time since - since he ascended to god tier, Rose thinks. She'd forgotten the exact shade of blue in his Heir outfit, if she ever knew it to begin with, and his lank hair forms a blocky line down past his muscled shoulders. His nose looks as though it broke and healed wrong again recently, and something cracked the right lens of his sunglasses. His lips press together tight, and his eyes look grim, yet there's no sign of strain in his expression. "I suspect that it will not have to," Equius says, quiet. "It may be prudent to hurry, if you need to have a conversation."

CE: Seer.

CE: Come here.

CE: I must present you with a Choice.

It's embarrassing, but Rose doesn't recognize the voice right away. Instinct has her twitch at the sound, but there are no echoes, no excess syllables. An odd resonance rumbles beneath the words, but it's not painful to hear - just deep and full of old, faded power.
And pain.

Rose pulls back past John, floating away over the street to take in more of Cetus's form. In the absence of any remaining eyes, Rose finds herself stymied as to where to direct her gaze. Part of Cetus's right flank emits a faint crackling sound, like packing peanuts rustling in a box, and then collapses. The neglected fin on that side slides down along the side toward the ground, and Rose sees that without the camouflage of all the moving tentacles, the flat limb has atrophied and looks paper thin.

She thought -

She's not sure what she thought, anymore. That if Equius succeeded, they'd be forced to fight Cetus alone, rather than wasting all their energy attacking a horror that might well be unkillable. Or maybe that Rose could help Cetus build defenses in her mind to match some of what Rose has in her own, with a complement of void spells to seal the deal. They're connected the same way John and Typhus are - Rose should surely have been able to help from the inside. Denizens aren't meant to be kind or helpful, perhaps, but she doubted Cetus would turn up her nose at help when the alternative would mean remaining in Leviathan's thrall.

She didn't expect Cetus to already be dying. "Oh. I see," Rose says, her mouth dry. All those life bars are gone. To Eridan and Vriska's credit, Rose doesn't think her own final hour contributions made much of a dent in the three layers of vitality that Cetus used to have, compared to what they were dishing out.

When Cetus breathes out, this time, all Rose tastes and smells is dust. It stings her eyes.

Vriska's voice jolts Rose out of her contemplation. "You reeeeeeeeeeally want to get mixed up in that choosy crap?" the troll asks, skeptically, as she flits through the air in short bursts. Rose twitches again as Vriska lands on the upper brow of one of the denizen's extra eye sockets and scuffs it with her heel. Though the troll doesn't put any really power into the kick, Cetus crumples under her with another sigh full of sifting dust. The ceruleanblood skips back, tugging her legs up under her in case she's under attack, but when nothing else happens a terrible expression fills her face - boredom. Flaring out her wings, Vriska rises up and sneers down at them. "Whatever. If this is done and you're gonna get all schmaltzy, I'm finding Terezi. What a letdown!"

And with that, Vriska takes off down the Strip, back the way they came, toward the Ouroboros. Eridan, now visible over Cetus's crumbling form, lingers, looking uncertainly at Vriska's trail of blue sparkles. Then he edges toward Rose, floating at a slow pace and watching Cetus in the corner of his eye. He undoes the loops that hold his hood and headband-crown around his horns and lets them fall back out of the way. John sways and then floats over to intercept Eridan before he can reach Rose. Bro doesn't move from the Venetian, though Rose can feel his stare from here. If he intends to stay on guard here, now, Tavros and Nepeta will be able to extricate themselves from whatever 'helpful' trap he stuck them in to keep them safely out of the way in short order.

But Equius is right. If Cetus has something to say, she does need to hurry. "Cetus," Rose says, after coughing to clear her throat. Nothing comes up, this time, but her chest feels odd. Pinched.

(CE: Would you hear my riddle?)

John looks up sharply with a suspicious jut to his jaw, throwing Rose a worried look. "What's she saying now?" he asks, the wind already raking through his hair in preparation for a jump.

Rose can't hear any difference. "You all can't hear it?"
Eridan shrugs, scratching his hair vigorously like having it penned under the hood made him itchy.
"Sounds like a load of tintinnabulation, to me. Dunno, maybe Vris would have been able to understand?" Not understanding, however, seems to have left him as disinterested in the goings on as Vrisk - the violetblood hangs around, still, but starts drifting a little further away.

"One moment, then." Rose focuses on the center of Cetus's wide face, at a point just between the clusters of empty eyes. It feels right. ".You're dying."

(CE: It is preferable to the alternative. This body was never going to be salvageable.)

(CE: I would return to Skaia, for the end.)

Say it, say it. You won't be able to say it later. Rose draws herself up straight, feeling her fingernails dig deep into her palms as she clenches her fists. Her chest feels pinched shut; her clothes feel too tight, and dust soughs through her hair, leaving it grey. "I'm sorry. I let them in. I said yes. It was my choice, and I ruined both of us."

That much is...very clear. The twisted, thorny stems that Leviathan grew have begun to wither and snap, and the branches that don't fall into dust straight away fall to the ground so lightly they barely make an impact. Inside, Rose hears more of Cetus's driftwood-fragile, acid-eaten bones splinter and crumble: snap, snap...

(CE: It was a choice. It is not the only one you will ever make. It is not the only choice that defines you.)

The vast petals in Cetus's eyes begin to wilt and drop off. Rose expects them to sizzle when they hit the grim sludge below - but the road, she sees, is beginning to dry without Leviathan's presence to renew the acidic water. Cetus rumbles, low in her belly, and expels a pillar of dust through the blowhole atop her head.

(CE: Listen. Leviathan has become vulnerable. Slowly, it succumbs to the influence of the game, freely swallowed. I can set the terms of its destruction, now.)

(CE: And so, I set forth another choice. One which you must resolve not now, but in the near future.)

Rose blinks. "Tell me," she says, her lips moving before she finishes processing. Amid the tight, squeezing pressure, her heart gives a sudden, urgent thump in her chest. Her hands reach out of their own accord as she flies a little closer, as though she'll be able to hear better. This - whatever this is, she cannot afford to miss it.

(CE: You can destroy the servitors of chaos and save the next world from their corruption, once and for all - or you can see your love survive the battle that is to come. One or the other. Not both.)

(CE: For to gain anything, something of equal value must be sacrificed in exchange.)

Very suddenly, without so much as a by your leave, Rose's lungs stop working properly. She gasps for air, her stomach full of scalding bile, and John's on her the next second in a panic. Kanaya, her mind thinks, numbly - then: JohnDaveJadeWho - "That's - not - that's not anywhere near equal -" she ekes out with what little air she has left. Then - "No, Eridan, stop!" Because while John and the Breeze are doing their best to refill her lungs through her nose with a small, plucky tornado, Eridan snaps back to attention and levels a claw at Cetus, his eyes glittering behind his glasses with vicious, eager intent. "It's not her doing anything."

Grumbling, Eridan quenches the power gathering in his hand with a scowling pout.
(CE: We are running out of time. Let me be more clear. What goes round the house, in the house, but never touches the house? What has eyes but cannot see?)

Stomach-clenching confusion is rapidly overtaking abstract, repentant mourning in the contest for which will serve as Rose's emotion-in-chief today. It's not pleasant feeling either of them. "That's not more clear, that's changing the subject!" she insists, while her mind replays Cetus's choice over again. She tries to convince herself she misheard something - but no. Not both. How on earth could the destruction of ancient chaos gods be considered equivalent with the survival of someone she loves? That's -

That's video game logic, she thinks, in sudden horror. "Kanaya, are you talking about Kanaya?" she tries - clarification, she - she needs to know exactly what scenario Cetus is suggesting, here. If it's a riddle, it can't be this devastatingly simple to understand.

(CE: That is up to you to interpret. The choice should be clear to you, when the time comes.)

Ah, yes. The day wouldn't be complete without Rose screaming internally. Her breathing comes in choppy gasps, still, and John's trying to talk to her over Cetus. "Rose? What's she saying? Can we get like a super quick summary or something? Come on, what's -"

Rose gasps - swallows - (her throat is coated with dust) - and exhales in a shudder. She's panicking. Plain and simple. No one's going to die right now immediately. No one may have to die. If Cetus intends make this riddle stupidly vague, Rose can consult the others about it. But shaking Cetus until she gives a straight answer won't work - the denizen looks so paper thin and collapsed that a good shake might be all it takes to shave off the last sliver of her life bar. "She's plagiarizing the first law of equivalent exchange and clichéd riddles that comprise the almost unanimous bedrock of all children's joke books. Give me a minute longer, I think we're almost to the point," Rose says, half-lying, half-dizzy from the momentary lack of oxygen.

"...Wow, that sounds really nonspecific," John says, with a skeptical tug to his lip that says he knows she's avoiding an explanation on purpose.

(CE: Do you...accept these terms, Seer?)

Cetus's voice waters in and out; Rose feels a moment of biting vindication that they're both out of breath, before she recalls Cetus is dying, here, and the bitter guilt resumes. The denizen's desiccating body lists to one side, and the eye socket with Equius now sits at such a steep angle that Rose can catch a glimpse of Equius walking around up the side of the socket to keep standing.

"Is the answer supposed to be obvious? Well, I'm sorry, but it's not," Rose says, with more bitterness than she intends to let slip out. "A choice between that and...I don't suppose I can make a plea for you to be slightly more clear?"

(CE: No. I can hear her - it has been...from so very far...'The light we walk in darkens sun and moon and star.'

Cetus's voice sounds very far away. Something drips on Rose's head, leaving a damp spot in her hair. John holds out a palm beside her to watch more water drop on his hand, while Rose looks up at the clouds. All the misty, grey clouds and humidity summoned by Leviathan's presence have drawn together, and a few huge drops of rain start to fall as Rose watches. As the clouds condense, more space opens between them, and she can see the normal Las Vegas sky beyond; just a little sunlight shines through. If she weren't concerned about the horrific acid-content of the rain, the sight would be a tad too heavy-handed for her taste. "I'll find another way to keep them out," Rose says, as another raindrop runs down her face, smearing the layer of dust she's accumulated. "To bind them here. Even if you won't explain, I'll make my own choice."

She's not even sure Cetus can still hear her. But the denizen rumbles, and Rose knows a chuckle when she hears one.

(CE: A choice is a choice.)

CE: Remember to play the rain, Rose. The Splendor Existentiae waits within my grist hoard.

John tilts his head to the side; Rose thinks that last bit was audible to everyone, rather than just herself.

Cetus sighs with her whole body, though, in a remarkably literal fashion. An enormous, billowing cloud of dust soughs free as the denizen's skin dissolves, and Equius goes tumbling and vanishes for a second in the grey veil. A tiny, sucking black hole appears, and the troll bursts free of the cloud before lurching to a stop on the same level as Eridan; his skin looks oddly matte under the dust, and Rose can't imagine she looks much better. As the dust settles out of the air, all that remains in the middle of the Strip is a vast ribcage and the line of a splintering spine. Cetus's skull has already mostly collapsed in on itself.

She takes up most of the street, yet she looks so small, now. Rose feels horribly, wildly lost, the ache squeezing her chest like a vice. "...Goodbye," she says, and it's too late.

Her mind feels so quiet.

Eridan speaks, and the audible sound doesn't help alleviate the sudden, hollow loneliness in Rose's head where Cetus, for better or for worse, always used to be, but it - distracts her. "So, do you have a clue what you're meant to be doin'?" he asks, scratching under the collar of his shirt and watching her like one watches a stranger on a bus crying in public. They're not quite strangers, and Rose double checks to makes sure the only thing on her face is rain, but the sentiment feels similar.

Her voice sounds rough and clipped. "Hopefully, it's not relevant yet. Not until later." Her lack of explanation or translation of Cetus's words is surely obvious, now, and without Cetus around, Rose no longer has an excuse to put it off. Eridan shrugs it off, giving her one last weird look.

John picks up where he left off, though, and John is harder to dissuade. "Because, uh. You mentioned Kanaya...and you sounded kind of urgent for a sec, there," he says, "- which makes me think you're so doing the thing -"

Rose chokes on a sudden, irrepressible giggle. John looks worried but triumphant as she coughs to cover it up. "Not - not now, John. Not here," she says. "We still have to find Dirk, and take care of Scratch. This...this is done."

Cetus is gone.

And after they confront Scratch, does it start being 'the near future'? Or are they already in it? When will the riddle's context take effect?

Rose does so enjoy a healthy sprinkle of paranoia to top off her day. She runs her fingers through her hair, grimaces when all she encounters are knots, and then shakes it hard to clear the dust out before the rain can mat it all together into a blob.

John applies the Breeze like a blow-dryer, his cowlicks standing up with renewed energy before the rain starts to tamp them down. "Okay. If you're sure." He gives her a look that says we're gonna talk about Stuff and Feelings later, and Rose nods back. "Anybody want a lift?"
Equius and Eridan raise their hands at the same time, without so much as glancing at each other. "Sure, I'm in," Eridan says. "And after this, holy fuck do I need a nap."

Equius sneezes.

---

Dave has been punched harder in his life; Jade packs a goddamn whallop even when she's playing around, and he grew up dodging puppet traps for a living. But this hit -

His head cracks to the side, and time spins out from under his fingertips. It's racing forward way too fast - he's not the one doing that - shit shit shit -

He slams his hand down on a timetable, his nails screaming in protest as he digs in and tries to wrench the sudden fast forward to a stop. The friction grinds one nail down to the quick in a sharp jolt, the pain blooming so suddenly it sucks the air out of his lungs. For a second he thinks he smells something burning, but he's more preoccupied with the jagged crunching down along the timeline to meet him.

"Shit!" He seizes the shard edge of the record and it rips his palm open. The slick blood makes his hand slip, but the acceleration finally shudders to a stop -

And time resumes a regular tempo.

Safe.

Hissing, Dave gingerly unclenches his hand and takes in the damage, a razor-thin slice that digs deep across the flat of his palm and drips blood in a wild splatter of red on the sand. His wrist is shaking a little, which means his fingers tremble, and okay maybe his whole body is shuddering a little. But that's fine, no big deal -

Wait...the sand?

Processing this fresh weirdness, Dave brings his shredded hand to his chest and uses the other to lean on his knee for support while he throws up a little. Just to get the shock out of his system. The air feels thin, arid, and gritty, and sand grinds into the knees of his pants.

When did he get outside? It's not humid with Horrorterror juices anymore, which is nice, but now the blistering hot sun beats down on his back through his cape. He can shorten the sleeves of his costume, but it wouldn't be much of a relief. Already, there's a fine prickle of sweat rising on his forehead. This is one of those days where you strip off to a swim suit and find the nearest body of cold water to lay in and pray it doesn't start boiling around you, but like hell is Dave running around shirtless in god tier trunks. There's no way he could justify that with irony, and he's not gonna besmirch his honor by trying. His nose will burn bright red in five seconds flat if he lifts his head, so he keeps his face pointed down and presses his forehead to his knee. Breathing through his mouth doesn't help with the taste of bile; he snaps his fingers uselessly a couple of times before a bright pink can of TaB appears for him to swish. He must've forgotten to give it to WV before they left.
Finally, Dave yanks his hood up to shield his face, looks up, blinks, and faces the facts. According to his internal clock, it's C/RA/CK o'clock on April the 19th, a week from where he left off, and all he can see for miles around is an ocean of pinkish-yellow sand under a flat, pale blue sky. It looks almost unreal; like someone sucked all the depth out of the sky and left a painted backdrop in its place. He swallows, and the mere sight of the desert filling the horizon makes his mouth dry.

Dave's foot slides an inch as he stands; he's on a slight incline, the sand rising in a gentle slope in front of him, and with nothing better to do in his life, he starts to walk forward to reach the top so he can get a better idea of what the world looks like after the scheduled apocalypse. His shoes skid and sink in the sand with each step as he wades uphill. About halfway up, he trips and catches himself before he can faceplant - but a fine trickle of hot sand sneaks in the front of his shoes, and Dave has to stop to dump a metric ass-load of sand out of each shoe before continuing. The sand stings the fresh, shredded wound in his hand, and if he dies of apocalypse death sand germs... Shit, would that be embarrassing. Lucky for him, no one's left to witness it.

Or maybe that's the opposite of lucky. The line between morbid humor and shit being royally fucked up grows ever thinner. Clearly his past-future self knew this was going to happen, but Dave doesn't have a clue why it had to. As he slogs up the incline, feeling more disgustingly gritty and sweaty with each step, the sense that something is fundamentally wrong deepens. Time feels fragile and worn thin, and if he makes one wrong move, Dave thinks he'll drop into a crack where time runs out, like grains of sand spilling out of the giant hourglass of the universe.

On a hunch, Dave stops, grimacing as another line of sweat creeps down beside his spine, and checks his phone. There are no bars. There's absolutely jack shit. Even the Pesterchum app, which magicked up its own wireless connection fifty fucking thousand leagues under the sea until Gl'bgofucky'self broke it, has gone dim. No little bubbles telling him how many unread messages he has left: nothing.

-- no server found --

...Not that that's a problem or anything. Dave doesn't need instant messaging to live his life. And looking around, he doesn't think anyone was left to write a news story about the end of the world, either, so the Internet wouldn't give him any context even if he could access it.

But it could have told him how to survive in a desert hellscape. Damn, he misses the Internet. It's literally only been five distorted, halting minutes, and he's got the shakes. He puts his phone away so he'll stop nervously picking at the sides of the case, and keeps going.

Reaching the top of the incline catches him by surprise. One second, Dave's worried that climbing up an endless hill of sand with no wifi is actually his Sisyphean torture in desert hell, and the next he lifts his leg extra high in anticipation of the next step, and finds nothing but air. He stops down hard and stands dead still for a second to make sure he's regained his balance, then relaxes and mops his forehead with his sleeve as he looks around. Past the crest of his sand dune, the ground drops into a small but deep crater. A thin trickle of sand scuffed up by his shoes tumbles down along the curve of the dark, exposed rock, but doesn't quite reach the meteorite at the center. Compared to the shallow slope he just climbed, the crater's a lot steeper. Dave doesn't bother trying to walk down - he turns his feet to the side and skids down, using his not-fucked arm to keep his balance so he doesn't roll down like a hot dog. It's bumpy as hell and he kicks up a shit ton of gravel. When he slides to a running stop at the bottom of the crater, he's spitting dirt out of his mouth.

Up close, he can't see anything of interest about the meteorite itself - for a rock that came from outer space, it's disappointing in person. Barely as high as his knee, it sits there like a charred black marshmallow that someone accidentally dropped in a chimenea, where it turned into a caramelized lump of burnt sugar indistinguishable from a piece of coal. Stick that shit in someone's stocking and call it Christmas, or hell, leave it in the chimenea to fuel the next fire in the great circle of fire life. Dave kicks the rock to check if there's any secrets or shit like that, but he stubs his toe to achieve a grand total of nothing. With that important business out of the way, he hops on one foot while shaking the other one out, then heads toward the other side of the crater.

By all rights, he should just hop right back in time to when he got clocked. Leaving John to guard Karkat and Feferi against whatever asshole decided to ruin Dave's day is only the tip of the shitty idea iceberg - judging by the dried out, sandy bullshit he's standing in now, he can assume the Horrorterror didn't stick around past its expiration date, but who knows what else is going to complete and utter shit that he could be preventing? Except wait, apparently future Dave is already handling all that.

Time is such the shittiest aspect. Dave wants to find whoever signed him up for this inevitable passage of time horseshit and punt them into the nearest ass crack of time. If there's an aspect in charge of explaining things in a concise, useful, simple manner, Dave wants to retroactively sign the hell up for that. Instead of slowly succumbing to entropic curses, his personal growth challenge will be to cut back on his own internal and external rambling.

...On second thought, Dave isn't sure whether that would be an improvement or not. Since he's rambling right now. Imagining himself without loquacity problems is like imagining Karkat without shouting problems, or Rose without psychoanalysis problems, or Eridan without literally every problem. Shit's impossible.

Anyway. Hell if Dave knows where he's going, but he's gonna go there, and a little thing like lack of a concrete destination isn't going to stop him. This isn't any harder than wandering around John's Mordor mindscape. Getting up the other side of the impact crater is a little harder than sliding down, but Dave manages it by crawling on all fours and sucking it up when the fist of his injured hand starts to throb in protest. Maybe there's a way he could speed up the healing - but no, he is not stupid enough to try anything this close to the end. No shitting way is he sacrificing his left lung for a quick fix, or something disproportionate like that. If he can get to the top of this hill and see whatever there is to see, maybe he can figure out when he's supposed to go from here. Because right now, he's seeing a hell of a lot of nothing, and his future self made it sound like he'd have a little more direction than this.

But Dave looks out over the far ridge of the crater and what he sees makes him wish he'd walked right back the way he came. At first, his brain doesn't make the connection. The sight is weirdly familiar, sure, but Dave can't put a finger on why. Seeing a copy of the Statue of Liberty sunk up to its waist in sand in the middle of heldeath desertland is a little funky, but who is he to question the life choices of whoever left it here -

Hang on. Oh no. The Statue of Liberty et al, showing up out of nowhere? Dave, stuck in the post-apocalyptic future until he can figure out what time he needs to loop back to?

Well. He has no other choice. He needs to do it for the Egbert, if nothing else. Falling to his knees, Dave smacks a fist against the sand. It's just not the same without a beach, but sand is sand and John's gonna get such a kick out of this when Dave tells him about it later. "You maniacs! God damn you all to hell!" he says, as he clutches his chest.
Someone whinnies in response, and Dave nearly slides ass-first back down into the crater. Where the hell did that come from - Equius? Equius, that son of a gun, he would love making random horse noises to dick with people. He'd claim he wouldn't do it, but -

Then the first horse canters past, and Dave really does tip back as he scrambles on his knees to get out of the way. He whips his swordkind free to catch himself before he can do the full splits, then winces as the hilt scrapes along his palm in a staticky buzz of pain. More horses in various shades of brown and black blast past him, their clomping feet pounding so hard that it kicks up the sand. The blue-grey one keeps its lead as they book it for the next dune of sand, and Dave's left coughing through a haze of sand.

There were horses in Planet of the Apes, too, weren't there? Fucking christ on a slice of pizza, what hell has Dave walked in on?

"You there! Hey! Heyyy!"

Unless the horses have learned to talk in the single goddamn week since the world got bombarded with meteors, Dave thinks that must be a person. God, he hopes it's not a talking horse - it's not like he's toting around a Geiger counter to check whether the Reckoning was full of radioactive rocks or something and he's actually standing in nuclear sand soup.

But no. Dave squints through the bright sun and the sand kicked up by the horses, and sees four figures scattered around the base of the Statue of Liberty below. One person-shaped figure in particular approaches Dave at mach speed, sprinting across the sand with an unidentified, swaddled object held out at arms' length. As the man draws closer, Dave starts to recognize the steely look in the guy's eyes. Hint: it's not a steely look at all. It's fear-hope. Raw, unadulterated, unhomogenized terror-determination. Which Dave sympathizes with - there's a lot of totally valid reasons for some dude stranded in a post-apocalyptic wasteland to get a little wild eyed - but also he has a strange sun-burned guy in a tank top charging toward him while brandishing a USO that could contain literally anything within its swaddled shell, and Dave's not about that life. He backs up, raising his hands to ward off the fresh weirdness. "Uh. Sup?" he says, to try to establish contact.

The man raises the bundle over his head with both hands. "Enough out of you. Here, take this."

And with that, the guy chucks the USO at Dave like a basketball. Common sense says Dave should dive out of the way in case it's a bomb or something. But he doesn't: the sun blinds him for a second before the dark shadow of the swaddled bundle arcs down toward his head, and Dave catches it without thinking (and does not fumble the catch at all, thanks). Then he goes dead still, unable to believe his own dumbass life choices. "Wait, what?" he asks, way too late.

The total stranger trudges back down the hill, turning only to point a finger at Dave. "He broke my space house. He's your problem now. Congratulations. A father is you," he says, deadpan. Then the guy reaches into the pocket of his pants, casts a handful of pocket sand into the air in an unfathomable dramatic gesture with his lips pursed, and jogs back down the hill toward the other three people.

...Oh, shit. Every inch of Dave threatens to start jittering right when he wants to stay perfectly still, which sucks. The USO shifts and hums in his arms, and Dave is no longer worried it's a bomb. This is worse than a bomb. "No. Please tell me this isn't what I think it is," he says, power walking down the slope after the guy. From within the bundle, he feels a tiny, nubby hand-analogue prod around in the vicinity of his ribs. This cannot be happening.

The situation only gets worse when the stranger waves a careless hand, and Dave sees the tattoo on his arm. Sees the :Y face staring back at him in dark ink. "Just dump him off when he's supposed to be. It'll be great."

Dave's screaming on the inside, and it escapes his mouth in the form of breathy, pained whine. Forget the fact that time is dying and cracking into tiny pieces in the sky overhead, forget the maybe-baby clutched in his aching hands - it's the existential crisis induced by seeing someone tattoo a shitty SBaHJ face onto their physical body that's gonna send him to an early grave. If there isn't at least one doomed timeline branching from this exact moment where Dave drops dead of a Karkat-esque aneurysm, he'll make his own sunglasses into a taco and eat them. "What are you even talking about?! I just got the ironic punched out of me - how the hell am I supposed to know when I'm going!" Dave asks. He works up the nerve to carefully peel back a fold of the swaddling cloth and peek at the thing inside.

A small not-quite-wriggler yawns at him with too many teeth. So many teeth. Definitely not human, not in any way, shape, or form; the teeth just aren't blunt enough in the right places. Dave's inability to pin down exactly what the baby looks like makes his head hurt. It doesn't open its eyes and wake up, which is only the good thing he has going for him right this second - the only thing more scary than a sleeping baby is a fully awake baby. Seriously, Dave just love love loves getting handed an unknowable, vaguely disturbing child at the end of the world. Creepy clown gods riding unicycles all the way to the nondenominational religious venue of your choice, this is the last thing Dave needs right now.

The icing on the cake? Dave pats the swaddling back into place, looks up, and sees that two of the other figures by the Statue aren't strangers like Mister 'Way Too Invested in SBaHJ' over here. Hearts Boxcars sprawls out in the meager strip of shade beside the spot where the Statue vanishes into the sand, his battered hat pulled down to cover his entire face as he lounges. Something has reduced his suit to scruffy, sun-bleached rags, and he's torn off the sleeves to bare his arms, but it's unmistakably him. The other familiar face, though -

Dave almost doesn't recognize Diamonds Droog. Key word almost. He slows his dogged pursuit of the strange dude as he takes in Droog's presence and altered appearance. She sits apart from the others with her long legs kicked out in front of her and one arm slung around her cue stick, which she has stabbed deep in the sand. Her suave suit is as tattered as Boxcars', and she has loosened the neat knot of her tie to allow for airflow in the steady, bright heat. She's close enough to the edge of the statue's shadow that she could probably roll and get a little relief from the sun, but she appears to have been marinating in her own sweat there for way longer than Dave has been in the same chronological region. In addition to the severe wardrobe malfunction, Dave can see Droog's expression from here, and she doesn't look aloof or disdainful. She just looks...dead. Her eyes move to track Dave's approach, but the empty expression doesn't change. What, he doesn't even get a sneer?

If Droog weren't...Droog, Dave would call what he's feeling right now 'mild-to-moderate concern.' But this is Droog, so he's gonna call it 'apprehensive' peppered with 'disturbed, confused, etc' for seasoning. "What are you guys doing here?" Dave asks, distracted from sudden parenthood for a hot second.

Boxcars pinches the brim of his frayed hat between his fingers and lifts it enough to peer at Dave with one eye. "Don't ask dumb questions," he grumbles, and then drops the hat back over his face. "What're you doing here?"

"You're right, that's a way better question." Dave tips the baby...thing into one arm to free up the other one so he can do important stuff, like throwing middle fingers and wielding a sword. "What am I doing here, and why I am doing it? My smug bastard of a future self didn't say."

The last stranger answers. Dave hasn't looked at her properly yet - a troll, thin horns, hair back in a braid - but SBaHJ tat guy stops beside her, tapping his foot and making grabbing motions with a hand while the troll finishes writing something on a sheet of printer paper. She's using a dusty laptop as a makeshift desk; it looks as though it's seen better days, and considering the lack of working power outlets in the post-apocalyptic wilderness, Dave doubts the computer still has juice. "You're here to pick up that package, and this list," she says, blowing her bangs out of her face as she scribbles one more line with her sharpie. "It tells you exactly what you need to do as you go back in time. Most of it can happen in any order you want, as long as you don't bounce around too much and call attention to yourself. All the addresses and timestamps you don't know yet are on the back. Don't let the giant sea goat splash water on it before you finish everything."

Dave almost drops the baby. He takes off his sunglasses to stare at the list like it's made of solid gold. It might as well be. "I was wrong. This isn't hell. This is the other place," he whispers, taking a step toward the troll in a trance. "Holy shit."

"You don't want to walk too close," the troll says, handing the list off to the strange guy before Dave can start slow motion sprinting toward her with 'You're The Inspiration' playing in the distance. "Some of it's gonna seem vague, but that's because I can't be bothered to pin it down. All the glitches and continuity drift keep fucking up what actually happened. Check off the major points, and ignore the details as hard as you can until you get back to the present, because it's not getting any better than this. I'm very tired."

"Do I look like a messenger boy?" the strange dude asks, even as he walks back toward Dave. He tries to fling the piece of paper at Dave from a few feet away, but it flutters and drops onto the sand with a plaf well short of Dave. The thirst for knowledge sends Dave crashing to his knees to rescue it, and the wriggler thing burbles in unconscious protest.

- DO NOT WAKE UP THE BABY! DO NOT DROP THE BABY! DO NOT LOSE THE BABY! DO NOT CAPTCHALOGUE THE BABY!

- DO NOTTTTT!
- avoid excess time shenanigans (this includes speeding up plane rides)
- stop people from rushing to john + dadbert during The Incident
- tell bro et al to head to seattle (must have the Baby with you for this one)
- free wv and spades slick from the empty magma chamber below jade's island before she takes off
  - the hidden transportalizer to the island is in the condesce's personal rooms at the betty crocker headquarters in minnesota
  - don't let her see you. her password is higherthanamothaglubba1921
  - wv will not be visible/stable due to bs made up quantum physics magic, but you will have released him, i promise
  - you cannot hug him no matter how much you try
  - please proceed through the five stages of grief to accept this fact before you get blown up in a volcano
- sabotage matchsticks' fire extinguisher in 2009
- deliver marine corps medicull brochure to kanaya in anywhere from 2004 to 2008
- go to the furthest end of gibraltar and deliver the package to its rightful custodian in 1991
  - just chuck him into the ocean
  - or you could be nice about it and get him a floatie first
- return to where you left off and paste Felt locations into the inventory for future reference (see back)
- save the karkat, save the world
- (and go help save dirk)

Dave flips the list over, and, as promised, there is a neat chart of significant addresses and times associated with each item on the list, each boxed off so he can't mix up which address goes with what names. There's advice on how to travel to certain locations that might be easier to reach in a different year. At the very top, there's a note in cramped handwriting that looks like it was written after the troll filled out the rest of the chart: it's his own address back in Houston, with a tiny 'just in case!' wedged in next to it.

The way things are going for him, Dave wouldn't be half surprised to forget his own damn apartment number at some critical moment. "This is the best thing I have ever seen in my life," he says, taking out his phone and taking pictures of the front and back halves of the list. Pesterchum may not work, but pics are forever. "11/10, would list again." He grimaces at the first few lines, because he can guess what the Incident refers to, and it means that the time has come for him to be a total shitheel for the greater good. Which is all kinds of awesome. "Is the Karkat one literal, or just a Heroes reference?"

"Why not both? Be careful, but remember - you've already done this. It's basically impossible for you to fail, at this point," the troll girl says, flipping her laptop around and folding her legs crisscross so that the computer perches on her knees. When she flips the lid open, scratching her arm absently, the screen lights up at once; it's cracked in one corner and has a bunch of dark spots where pixels have died, but it's still chugging along, apparently. "And this loop is the last one you get before everything goes completely and utterly to shit!" she adds, flipping him a thumbs up and winking. "So enjoy it while you can!"

Dave doesn’t look up from his phone for a full count of ten, and then blinks. "God...dammit," he manages, unsure how he’s supposed to react to this. "Thanks, I guess?" He hangs around awkwardly, glancing at each member of the group in case anyone has further nuggets of ominous wisdom to share, but Boxcars can’t see anything with his hat in the way, and doesn’t appear particularly inspired to change that – Droog gazes out over the remote landscape with her dead stare while the sluggish, hot breeze lifts the frayed edges of her suit jacket and hair – the guy with the simultaneously poor/epic tattoo choices wanders over to the base of the Statue, picks up a rock, and starts hacking at the metal to finish what appears to be a life-sized, hyper-realistic portrait of a muscular centaur – what –

Nope. Dave’s leaving now. The oddness of running into these four in the middle of the desert has worn off, and the brittleness of time gnaws at him. Skidding that dangerously close to a crack in time probably drew some attention Dave didn’t want to draw; he’d better go while the going’s good.

Maybe try to hunt down a first aid kit to fix up his hand fast, once he's back in the pre-Reckoning era. After a little finagling, Dave finds a spare loop of fabric tucked around the swaddled bundle of joy and slings it onto his back without dropping it. It feels a little like strapping cold destruction in a wriggler-shaped package right in his biggest blind spot, but whatever. He’ll do the Gibraltar thing ASAP, and be free of the nonsense that is spontaneous fatherly commitment.

"One more thing!" the troll says, just as Dave summons his time tables.

"Shit," Dave mutters. Then, louder: "Yeah? What's up?"

She looks up from the keyboard to talk to him. Her claws keep typing. "Take Karkat with you to your planet when you hit the Medium. If he goes with John, it’ll suck," the troll advises, and then takes a sip from a purple water bottle.

Dave should know better than to ask by now. "Why do you even know any of this?"

Boxcars lurches upright, his hat suctioned to his face as he bellows. "Stop askin’ dumb questions! God damn, kid, just get on with your life so we can get on with ours!"

He's not an expert, but he thinks Boxcars sounds pissier than usual. That is definitely what Dave is detecting here. "What's with you two? Seriously?" he asks, waving a hand at Boxcars and then at Droog. Droog twitches - barely - but doesn't look at Dave. Her twitch knocks the cue stick askew, but she doesn't fix it.

Boxcars rips the hat off his own face, his face screwed up in a sour glare. Dave waves at Droog with both hands, but Boxcars' expression sours further still, like he's sucking on a lemon warhead as they speak. Without the shade of his hat, Dave can see Boxcars has a super bad sunburn all across his broad face. "If you can get her to answer, more power to yah. But she's not gonna," he says, when Dave waves his hands at Droog once more, this time with feeling.

Dave lets his hands drop to his sides with a slap, and his timetables bobble along in their wake. "You can't just say something like that and not, like, explain, dude," he says, flatly.

The gangster lifts a middle finger to his face and pretends to light and smoke it like a cigar. "Watch me." Then all the energy drains out of him, and Boxcars rubs his sunburned face with the flat of his hand. He eases back down on the ground, wiggling his shoulders until he fits back in the body-shaped depression his weight left in the sand. "If you can't tell who's missing here, I can't help you," he mumbles.

And there is someone missing, isn’t there? Looks like Dave got a nice headstart on that whole ‘being a monumental tool’ thing. Yeesh. “Oh. Uh. That. Sucks, man.”

Boxcars just snorts, and Droog…doesn’t react at all. Everyone seems to have tuned him out, for the most part.
Before he goes, Dave turns around, throws up a peace sign, and takes a picture with the Reck't Statue of Liberty to share with select people later. Then he takes off, with his generic wriggler-shaped object in tow.

And thus, Dave's adventure in following the questionable orders of a weird desert troll lady begin.

He's done weirder shit.

The wait time in between each stop is the most annoying part. It turns out that his power to zone out while on an airplane only works for one, maybe two trips max, and then he's left in mental purgatory. Staring out the window and memorizing the squiggly lines of the ceiling can only entertain him for so long before it gets super tempting to start texting his past self for shits and giggles. Dave does poke around at the AJ empire website while he's stuck waiting in the Seattle airport for a flight to Philadelphia, and successfully manages to shift the link sidebar five pixels to the right so that the whole thing is even more off center than he originally designed it to be, but that's small potatoes. His past self never even noticed.

He tries to fast forward in time to skip the mind-numbing wait on an airplane once. Exactly once. Time groans like a mirror slowly bending under pressure, like it's about to crack open right under his feet, and Dave snaps his timetables away before his skin finishes going cold. It doesn't matter how far back in time he jumps – the timeline still feels just as cracked and worn thin around him as it did after the Reckoning. Like it's following him. He's not even sure what it he's thinking of – the Lord of Time? or just the ever-spreading cracks themselves? – but Dave gets the feeling that he's probably leaving a hundred dead, doomed versions of himself in his wake. They're just getting munched up too fast for the bodies to leave an impression. He can't find any trace of the blood from when he split his hand open on the timetables, and can't fight the uneasy feeling that the records just went vampire on his ass.

Strangely, that thought does not make the trips between destinations any easier to stomach. How much margin of error does Dave have? Is the hour delay from going to Seattle before Houston going to screw him over? Is the several years-long time skip to find some random Felt lady's fire extinguisher, accidentally drag his cape through a fireplace, and break the pull pin while she's making out with two people in another room going to be off by a fraction of a second and let the next debuff curse carve out his liver like some back alley blackmarket organ stealer? (He likes his liver, dammit. Dave is actually pretty fond of all of his organs, come to think of it.) Will letting a lady with a baby go down the plane aisle before him piss off his own baby and lead to some kind of baby-vs-baby mortal combat that gets Dave arrested and doomed with extreme prejudice?

Speaking of which. Apparently, 'don't wake up the baby' means that the baby is literally not going to wake up. For anything. Including important bodily concerns, like eating and drinking and like. Shitting. Dave only realizes the problem with this plan when he makes his first pitstop for food at the shitty pizza joint he and Bro only ordered from once, and realizes that the wriggler probably hasn't eaten anything in…ever. For as long as Dave has been in possession of the thing, at least. Occasionally it clicks tiny claws against his back, though he could have sworn its nebulous arms were well swaddled and restrained, and then rolls over with chittering baby sounds before settling again.

(Isn't it swaddled? How is it stuck in Bro's baby carrier, then? Dave remembers looking at the kid's face again when Oriole decided to take a goddamn gander, but the thing he saw is like an open ended question. Like some complete asshole decided to make it deliberately vague and mysterious on purpose for later shock value.)
Not that he doesn't appreciate it. Hell, this is probably the easiest, most low-effort fatherhood he could ever have hoped for, despite the fact that he's earned Bro's disapproval by not getting the kid straight from the stork/meteor. But Dave's experience in the care and keeping of human kids is zero, and the care and keeping of sharp-toothed maybe-wrigglers of uncertain physical dimensions is at less than zero. Of the three parenting role models he's ever witnessed in action, Bro was a hyper-ironic, abrasive ass, Momlondre was largely absent and only recently sober, and Dadbert was…fuck that guy. Crabdad's parenting methods mostly involve forcefully hugging Karkat into nuclear oblivion and screeching out of love, and while Dave assumes it's the healthiest form of caretaking of the lot, he also suspects it might not go over too well if he wants to avoid dropping the baby. Or awakening the baby's eternal wrath. Like, he's got no clue who or what the thing really is, or if it's even a baby (for all he knows it's the wriggler equivalent of a toddler), but like hell is he gonna risk pissing it off.

Keeping it quiet and content gets most stressful when other people start yelling; when they wind up on a plane with three other babies who all start wailing as their ears pop, Dave can feel tiny claws start to tear at his back. Dave swaps the carrier around so it hangs from his chest, then mumbles and does weird baby talk to make the wriggler stop wriggling and making ominous noises in his arms. It worked better for Bro than it does for him, which sucks. He switches to rapping on their way to Minnesota, and makes it through five verses about the Obama administration, rhyming 'inauguration day' with 'Spirited Away,' before the wriggler snuggles into his armpit and falls back into deep sleep, which frees Dave up to chug as much soda as the flight attendant will bring him.

He's never experienced terrifying tedium before. But between the wriggler and the slow breakdown of time hemming him in, Dave thinks this is the epitome of it. It's all such a blur that he can barely keep track of what he's done in what order - marking off the checklist stops him from backtracking in a panic twice when he hits the twenty four hour mark.

Seriously, though, what kind of baby doesn't need a diaper change? Do...do troll wrigglers even have butts? Or is it like a Typhus situation on a much smaller scale?

These are the kinds of thoughts that keep him up at night. He came for the keyed up adrenalin rush of having set, achievable goals, and stayed for the slow, sucking drain of shitty, restless sleep. His internal rambling grows more surreal with each passing minute. He power naps on any flight that lasts longer than a few hours, and wakes with a permanent crink in his neck and a foul morning breath. All told, it takes him the better part of seventeen hours just to check a few items off his list, with all the forced downtime, and it feels like forever. He's tracking sand everywhere he goes, and no amount of dusting himself off in airport bathrooms can get rid of the dirt sticking to his godly pajamas.

The hardest shit involves places and times he isn't familiar with. He knows all about the Incident, for instance (and annoying old Karkat is a ray of sunshine on a cloudy day) and where he needs to show up for each bullet point on the list, but finding Kanaya sometime in her high school years? Delivering a brochure to her waiting claws? Somehow turns out to be a logistical challenge. Her apartment door lacks a mail slot, so after a few hours of lurking and waiting for Kanaya to leave the apartment complex, Dave hefts a giant Marine Corps manual and throws it through her apartment window in the middle of the day, when she's not home. Then he books it before anyone can come to investigate. Bad enough if one of her neighbors sees him, let alone Kanaya herself. Dave doesn't even know why he needs to do this shit, but it's presumably important and worth the not-zero risk of him getting caught dicking around on a security camera, popping up at random points in history like a time traveling, baby-toting Bigfoot.
It's not the same.

Dave knows he's travelling through these time loops through for the first time, but déjà vu gets a real damn workout today. He can feel the flecks and fragmented chunks of displaced time beneath the surface as he makes his way backward, and knows that things are not going the way they should be. Not precisely. The broad strokes are there, but the details are off. Most of the changes are minor - not game-ending, thank god. He catches himself scratching at sand that's found its way between his collar and his throat, leaving a raw patch of scraped skin around his neck, and when he finds a mirror to take it off and wipe the sand off, for a split second he thinks the collar should be a different color. Some shade of blue, maybe?

But the impression slips of his mind like a sigh, and Dave has to deal with what is. Little things like that? He just has to put them to the side to worry about later, or never. Continuity drift sucks ass.

And the further back he goes - the more loops he passes through - the more the accumulated time starts to pile up - the more the thing clinging to his back solidifies -

He starts to catch on in the bowels of Betty Crocker Kitchens.

Getting to Minnesota, home of the Betty Crocker Kitchen, tips him over to the third day, and to be perfectly honest? John's Betty Crocker thing be damned – if Dave finds a convenient package of brownie mix laying around literally anywhere in this facility, he is going to eat it. Cooking optional. As nasty as it might taste, it'll still be better than all this airport food. His insides feel like they're shriveling from prolonged exposure to over-salted peanuts and pretzels, and his lower lip has developed a minute twitch that, according to Google, might be the result of excessive caffeine intake. If he's not imagining it. If it isn't some kind of arcane nerve damage inflicted on him by Lord Douchecanoe himself for the unspeakable crime of being fly as fuck in the face of impending doom.

Anyway. Betty Crocker's food has a reputation for being wholesome, right? Right. The Condesce can't have based an entire company off lies and artificial flavoring and additives like John claims, right?

He arrives at around one in the morning, and waits until four am to start poking around. Dave explores the nineteen kitchens one at a time (who even needs that much kitchen in their lives?) and locates the goods three kitchens in. He spies the platter of cookies pushed back into the corner of an otherwise spotless countertop, right in the shadow of the cupboards. His feet walk him to the counter with only token protest from his brainmeat, and Dave reaches out to whisk away just one cookie (no one will miss just one) when suddenly -

His internal John voice intervenes. Said internal John voice sounds a lot like Dave's own internal voice, but with more giant front teeth and a blue color scheme. And it's saying that if he eats this unholy offering to the treacherous first lady of baked goods, he's gonna have a bad time.

…But just how accurate is his internal John, anyway? His internal Rose is spot-on, natch, and his internal Jade is a real go-getter, but his internal John?

Prrrobably pretty accurate, all things considered.

Maybe he should check, just in case.

The realization that he's texting a past John rather than a future John only hits after Dave's made an ass of himself. As usual.
TG: yo eb
EB: yes flashstep?
EB: do you even know what time it is?
TG: hahahahaHAHAHAHAHA
EB: ....are you okay?
TG: yeah fine why
TG: nvmd just tell me
TG: what are the odds of hypothetical evil overlord betty crocker poisoning her hypothetical leftover baked goods in some form of incredibly unfair bullshit yet hypothetical boobytrap
EB: extremely high. 100%. off the charts.
TG: goddammit
EB: wait, you hate betty crocker too?
TG: i mean mainly now that you've said it i cant get the poison thing out of my head
TG: dammit eb
EB: you're the one who said it, not me! :T
EB: anyway, since this is all hypothetical, i'm going to sleep now, because some of us just finished working and have school tomorrow.
TG: oh right your old obscene schedule
EB: old?!
TG: sleep well my sweet boy
EB: seriously, dude?
EB: you are so weird.
TG: im so sleep deprived m you dont even know
TG: did this conversation even happen before TG: fuku
TG: oh shit
TG: was that a typo
TG: who even am i anymore
EB: i'm going to sleep now!
EB: you should probably sleep too!
TG: i cant man
TG: im having an existential crisis over poisoned cookies and typos over here
EB: GOOD NIGHT!
TG: dude wait
EB: oh no...it's happening...i'm going to close the app!
TG: dude just dont forget to delete the conversation or something
TG: for like security purposes or paranoia or some shit
EB: i'm so tired i'm barely going to remember this anyway. :P
TG: no look man im saying weird shit and its embarrassing
TG: just delete it and we can both pretend this never happened
TG: youre a good person eb youwouldnt hold onto primo blackmail material like this right
EB: :P :P :P
EB: fiine.
EB: now. good night!
TG: good night my dear sweet bro
EB: omg, i'm deleting this so i never have to read that again, you weirdo.

Nice save. Dave's stomach protests with extreme prejudice, but how the hell is Dave supposed to argue with contagious Egbert logic? The cookies must be cold by now, if they've been sitting out all night. Who just leaves delicious cookies unguarded in the open like this?
His stomach whines louder when he finds the pantry. There is no way in hell the Condesce had all her ingredients poisoned; that would be such a waste. No way. Dave finds some dried cranberries, and then cracks open two giant refrigerators to locate apples and yogurt and cheese to munch on. If it's getting bad enough that he craves healthy food, he really must be running on fumes, holy hell. With a whole block of cheese sticking out his mouth, he weaves through the rest of the kitchens foraging for supplies (as if Her Imperious Capitalism will ever notice), and then heads to the cookbook library. He has two numbers attached to this address on his List, and if the cheese doesn't kill him, Dave needs to figure out what they mean.

641.69209 takes some searching, but turns out to be the reference number for a group of obscure seafood cookbooks; he only needs to take out a book and find a tiny button set in the shelf, and then move on to more Barbie Secret Agent for the PC nonsense. 808.882 is harder, because there is no 800s section. This shitty ass library has a bunch of health-adjacent books and an entire stack dedicated to wine, but Dave sprints up and down the aisles in a rising panic because the numbers don't go very far past 663.2.

He's so dumb. It's the single row right by the entrance. Condy has a collection of books about fish puns. Dave chokes on a chunk of apple and feels only creeping despair. When he peels a particularly old, yellowed paperback out from the center of the row, he smacks the button and then stuffs the books back into order, desperately trying not to read the titles along the spines. The most he reads is 'Get Thee To a Punnery' and that's it, he's done. Dave has important shit to do. Like watching an entire bookshelf shift five feet to the side, blocking off the main entrance and revealing a hidden elevator. Dave snaps another selfie in front of the library logo for the express purpose of annoying the piss out of John later, and then heads down.

But -

- -

But -

- -

But -

It gets harder to focus as Dave descends. Dave only picks up on the change when he reaches the lowest sublevel, and realizes he can't remember any details from the ride down.

He knows, objectively, that he just went down the elevator, and that now he's in some luxurious, fuchsia-and-gold pad.

And the thing is? Dave knows this feeling. He's felt something like this before. It's more than déjà vu; it's even more insidious than him fucking up minor details and subtly altering things that should have been because, like, Dave's pretty sure the minor fuck ups are just him being an idiot. Somehow, he makes it all the way to the Condesce's hidden transportalizer without knowing exactly where the transportalizer is. One second, Dave's taking an angled picture with one of the Condesce's many, many solid gold statues, and the next he's strolling into her closet (which has almost the same square feet as her actual bedroom, and appears to have enough fabric to cloth a small town), kicking at the plush white carpet until he finds the hatch that leads down to the buried transportalizer chamber. It happened with the Felt's fire extinguisher, too - Dave just...skipped right through it, like it was barely worth mentioning.

It feels almost like...he's got something on his back...
Things slide back into focus.

On the one hand, great! Awesome! On the other hand, Dave can't tell what's causing the reality slippage. Bad. Not awesome. He scrambles onto the transportalizer with a clang as the toe of his shoe catches on the edge, and keys the password into the tiny access panel, to distract himself with something concrete. There's no option on the number pad to enter coordinates or anything - this only goes to one place, conveniently enough. He looks up at the underside of the closed metal hatch, gulps, and hits enter.

If it were a void problem, Dave doesn't think the transportalizer would work. Probably. Seems like a thing he should have tested before teleporting his atoms halfway around the world without Jade to supervise, but too late now. He appears with a zap and a faint burning smell on a transportalizer pad identical to the one he left from, in the middle of a dark room.

After much deliberation, Dave claps twice, and the lights flick on.

His cape is, once again, on fire. Or at least smoldering. Dave doesn't know what set that off, apart from the transportalizer being a piece of garbage, and wastes a full minute making the fabric lengthen so he can stamp out the sparks. Then he hops off the pad and crosses the room, scanning the corners of the walls for cameras. It's probably way too late to worry about that, but as long as he's flashstepping…

The door opens onto a small, rough-edged hallway that curves in a semi-circle. Dave knocks the wall with his knuckles and winces at the hard, irregular texture; it's sharper than expected, with tiny grains of what feels like glass or crystal sticking out. The floor has been smoothed down and paved with grey stone, but for something probably designed and paid for by the Condesce, the hallway's uncharacteristically drab and unfinished. Dave wonders if she was having an off day, or if she had better things to do - like buying giant gold statues of herself. As if you can ever have too many of those, right? Dave should think about investing in some of that shit. Just commission a couple of giant Statues of Liberty and maybe one of Rose to erect in the new world. Sure, Rose would take it as a passive-aggressive challenge, but what else are they going to do with their lives if they survive the game? Sit around and crochet for the rest of forever?

....Dave should probably get going. Zoning out like this can't be healthy. He pushes through the door at the far end of the hall and finds himself in a large, high-ceilinged chamber. His list of power did say this was all a dried up magma chamber, but you wouldn't be able to tell from in here - enormous black-and-green, old school computer screens cover most of the walls, along with a bunch of greenish, stained glass tubes and mechanical apparatuses that connect to one particularly huge monitor. All of the machines appear to be powered down or hibernating; without the blinky lights and shit, it looks a little sad, but it hasn't been left alone long enough for everything accumulate obvious dust. Most of the center of the room is taken up by a wide, low grey platform with faded circles and other geometric shapes painted on it.

Gramps Harley was into some weird shit. What else is new?

Dave takes a step into the room, and jumps as the wall slams shut behind him, catching the corner of his cape in the process. This time, it's a frayed, scorched chunk of fabric that hasn't had time to repair itself, so the corner rips with a quick pop as Dave jolts forward. When he looks back, the only sign left of a door is a faint seam in the rock wall.

"You better open when I come back," he tells the wall. The wall does not respond. Then Dave turns and crosses the room, giving the central platform a wide berth. He cups his hands around his mouth. "Yo? Anybody home?" His voice echoes thinly.
??: Let me out, dammit! Or I'll carve you a new organ cavity, you squishy fuck!

Bingo. There can be only one asshole that stabby in the world. The mental voice sounds blurred and fades in and out, but Dave figures that's because he can't see Spades Slick's claws through whatever door he's locked up behind. He jogs around the periphery of the room to reach a not-hidden passage; the metal door opens with the Condesce's password as well. Dave doesn't think Jade's weird grandparent/ecto-father intended that, either - the access panel's screen blacks out when he enters Condy's annoying ass long password and then resets with a fuchsia-colored 'Password Accepted' blinking on and off. Yikes. Dave's going to go further back in time to find Jade's grandpa and demand to know what kind of shit ass security he's been using. Oh, wait - better plan. He's gonna find Sollux, and have Sollux do the secure password lecture spiel. It'll be hilarious.

Once he's through, Dave comes out in another hall - this one isn't made of rock. It looks more like he stepped into some kind of hospital. Unlike the quiet, hibernating computers in the main chamber, Dave can hear the ventilation system running in here, and the lights are all running without him needing to clap them on. Four glass doors give him a view of the four rooms lined up to the end of the hall; the first is the only one that appears to be occupied.

Spades Slick stabs a makeshift shiv through the meal tray slot when Dave gets in range. It isn't even a proper knife - it's tied to the end of a plastic spoon, so it's more of a spear shaped object. Dave dodges, but…Classy. "I seriously don't know what Shouts McGee see in you," he informs Spades, allowing himself a split-second frown as he starts poking at the lock.

SS: We don't have time for you to mutter bullshit! Used to get enough of that from the old geezer...

SS: Let me out!

It doesn't have a passcode lock. It's just, like...a skinny vertical door handle, with a small metal nub beside it. At the top near the doorframe, there's a thin metal box. Shit. All Dave has is Condy's password on the list - just to be safe, Dave double checks, zooming in on the picture he took of the back side of the sheet just in case there's another code buried in the tiny, squished boxes. A key, where would he find a key...

He finds a note at the very bottom: magnets, man. how do they even work? also it's just a turn lock thing, man, you're overthinking it.

Dave stops reading, and lets his phone drop to his side. Without looking, lips pursed, he lifts a hand and turns the metal nub thing. With a click from the box overhead, the magnetic lock unlatches. Spades, who has been doing his utmost to angle the spearshiv at Dave's soft, squishy bits from the slot, yelps and skitters back when Dave swings the door open with a gentle push, his hard feet clacking on the floor.

SS: Gahgghghgh! Finally!

"Go hitch a ride on Jade's airplane fast, dude," Dave says, stepping aside so that Spades' attempt to throw the spearshiv flies wide. The knife clatters off the far wall and Spades lunges after it, glowing at Dave with wild white eyes. "Was there anyone in there with you?"

SS: And will yah shut that cryin' spawn up? For fuck's sake, don't you have any squishy caretaking instincts at all?

Dave's head starts throbbing. "C'mon, this is serious. Is anyone else in there?" he asks, peering into the room Spades just vacated. There's no sign of WV anywhere; just a bunch of tally marks on the wall, some generic furniture, and a bunch of food trays snapped into sharp plastic shards in one corner. Spades' Shiv Corner. Fun times.

All he gets in response is the sound of Spades' feet clacking away as the carapacian skedaddles. Dave's eardrums throb harder and he winces, pressing a fist to the side of the glass door. "Oh, whatever," he says, to himself and the empty air. Then he goes to the other three doors and unlocks them, swinging each door open so that anyone invisible and partly incorporeal inside should be able to walk out. "Get on the plane, little dude! Be free!" Dave adds. When he gets no answer - not even a crackle of green light - his shoulders slump. Urgh. This, and now a headache? What a day. He can't wait until he's done all this shit, and can head back to the present to deal with...the rest of the shit. Dave doesn't want to waste more time than he has to but at this rate, he's gonna need to spend a few hours sleeping in a nice, dark room with minimal interruptions; he's starting to feel sore all over, genuine exhaustion weighing on his back.

No.

Wait.

Shit.

Dave slaps a hand back over his shoulder, and encounters an extra head of coarse hair. He opens his mouth, but the scream that comes out is mostly silent. All the better to hear the wriggler gurgle and then wail right over his shoulder. "Wait. Wait, no - not this, not now! How long have you been -" Dave gargles his words like they're the finest, mintiest mouth wash, and wastes thirty seconds unhooking the baby carrier with shaky fingers so he can swing it around and try to placate the hyper-destructive baby that's about to crawl on top of his head. One of the buckles catches, so the whole thing tilts at a dangerous angle before Dave scoops an arm under the wriggler's weight, and the thing emits a screaming sob. Once Dave hauls it around into his arms, he can see that more details have filled themselves in: the wriggler has a full head of hair, for one thing. When it cries again, the details waver and for a split second, Dave's holding something that's 90% massive teeth by body mass. It takes everything in his power not to drop it and scream at the top of his lungs. If he screams, the wriggler might scream, and then he'll be straight fucked.

Dave attempts a tentative rock. The wriggler...wriggles, and blinks wide eyes at him. It's very awake. It's very fucking awake. "Who's my little bouncing bundle of screams? You are! Yes, you are! Shhhh, it's okay!" he tries, dropping his voice to a whisper.

The baby blinks again, long and slow and measured, and then makes a weird, snort noise. Better than a scream. Dave rocks it more encouragingly; to an outside observer, it would look like Dave's dancing awkwardly from side to side, but that would, in fact, be an optical illusion and also a lie. Obviously. "Just one more ride, okay?" he promises. "Just - your stop is next! And everything will be cool and chill and awesome. Promise."

Overhead, the lights start to blink red; an alarm blares a second later in the form of a boisterous recording. "Self-destruct engaged, my dear girl! Let's give it the count of ten-nine-

The wriggler hiccups and gives one final snort of apparent delight, and then slumps in the carrier. Dave, in contrast, bolts for the door. The carrier swings wildly under one arm, and Dave can't stop to fix it; he hits the hidden door in the stone wall at top speed, smacking a palm against it as the seconds tick by. "Let me in!" he hisses - then - think, think, what would ancient imperialist Feferi say - "Let me in, morayon!"

The wall slides over to reveal the open door to the unfinished path at five seconds. Dave slams through and almost runs up the rough side of the wall when he skids on the grey rock. He kicks off the wall, races down the hall, and scrambles onto the transportalizer as the walls begin to shudder. "Bye, bye, bye!" he chants, entering the Condesce's passcode faster than he's ever typed anything before and hitting 'enter' with enough force to make his hand hurt. Under his arm, the wriggler thing gives a delighted chortle at his distress.

The dim lights of the Harley's secret volcano base vanish in a haze of green, and then Dave's standing in the dark, closed-in cylinder of the Condesce's transportalizer pad, back at BC home base. Dave slumps back against the curved wall, breathing into his palm for a second as he sags. Forget the five goddamn stages of grief - this temporary custody thing is what's going to get him blown to smithereens. And the baby doesn't even have the common decency to be old enough to own up to its actions. Because it's a fucking baby. Wearly, Dave starts grooping around in the dark to find the hatch overhead, resting his chin on the wrigglers head for a second. "Right. Okay. Let's just get out of -"

"And anywayve, this has been getting out of conchtrol."

Never mind, back to the silent screaming. Can never have too much of that. Dave snatches his hand back from the hatch and drops into a crouch. The wriggler throws him off balance, so he lands mostly on the padding of his ass. "Shshsh, shhh, it'sokayit'sokay," Dave whispers, trying to pre-empt the wriggler before it can start wailing up an excited storm.

The Condesce doesn't sound like she's walking directly on top of them, but it's a near thing. The muffled thock of sharp heels stabbing into the floor overhead with each stomp sends a tiny clench through Dave's stomach as the Condesce wanders out of sight. "-win' up my island, the nerve. Waderever. You, krillp an eye on the Ukrayne for me. Glubsy's on my last nerve. Just give me a reason. Doesn't have to betta good one..."

Her island? Shit. If she decides to investigate the explosion - if she needs oh, Dave doesn't know, a transportalizer to reach the ex-island faster -

The stomps recede, growing more and more quiet as the Condesce's loud, bombastic complaints become more distant. Dave bides his time in the dark hatch, his ankles starting to ache as he crouches small by the floor, but the distant murmur of Condy's voice doesn't return for another round. No way to tell if she's hanging around in the closet, though, which sucks. As fast as he can be, Dave thinks the Condesce might notice a little thing like a secret hatch cracking open while she's prowling her closet domain.

Forget not getting to hug WV, forget the near-explosion experience - this is what's gonna take a full year off Dave's life. Crouching in this tiny ass hatch with some kind of reality-warping, prematurely-teething, snorffling armageddon baby clutched close to his side like an ice cold, baby-shaped water bottle...

...Dave thinks he knows who he is holding.

God dammit. It only took him what, this entire exhausting loop to figure it out? He should have dumped the baby off first, before anything else; he could have lived in ignorant bliss for the rest of forever.

Before the realization can consume him, Dave snaps (the tiniest snop he's ever made) and summons one timetable in the limited space he's got to maneuver. Cautiously, he cycles back ten minutes - just after his recent!past!self would have left. The room above should still be empty now - and to Dave's relief, when he shoves the hatch open with a thump, there's no one around to witness him scramble out of the hole. "Let's just...get you where you're going," he says to the wriggler.
The wriggler headbutts him in the ribs, and Dave almost topples over into one of the Condesce's hanging rows of stylish jumpsuits.

If handling a kid that's not a terror of destruction and infant rage is even a fifth as terrifying as this, Dave's glad he doesn't plan on having children ever in a million years. How do lusii keep up with this crap?

- Reaching Gibraltar in 2014 simultaneously takes twelve hours, including a layover in London, and a matter of seconds. It's really fucking disconcerting, despite the fact that Dave wholeheartedly wants this to be over with and done as soon as possible. He can't tell if the wriggler's distorting things by accident or if this is his version of...helping. But Dave's having none of it. People seem to be picking up on his destruction baby's aura, too - not one but two people stand up and walk off the plane to book a new flight, rather than stay in the same aisle as him, until finally a human woman with her own baby and her greenblood husband sit down and tough it out. To distract himself and ward off an uncomfortable conversation, Dave inflates a floaty toy he picked up from a decrepit store in Minnesota before the flight to Heathrow left as the plane takes off and his kid emits a honk that makes everyone's ears pop prematurely.

If Dave was even half as much of an unrepentant douchebag to Bro while a baby as this, he is so, so sorry. The mother beside him nudges her husband until the troll fishes a pacifier, still in the plastic packaging, out of their carry-on bag, and then she offers it to Dave with a sympathetic nod.

"Teething?" she asks kindly, when Dave stuffs the entire plastic package into the wriggler's face and the wriggler starts chewing through it with loud crunches.

"Uh, yeah, kind of," Dave says. A shard of plastic shoots away from his wriggler's indeterminate mouth region with a sharp crunch! and embeds itself in the ceiling for some poor flight attendant to pry out after the flight. It's like watching a pencil sharpener/blender hybrid from hell chow down.

The greenblood nods, sagely. "Got a good pair of jaws on that one," he says, approving. Neither of them ask why Dave, a dude in a questionable cosplay outfit, would be in charge of a teething wriggler; the mother just goes back to nursing her own kid.

They land at the Gibraltar Airport - one of the most dangerous airports in the world, Dave learned on the Internet, which is haha, so funny - and as Dave watches out the window, he sees that the airport's runway literally intersects with a road. Cars sit behind a security barrier with traffic completely stopped to let the plane land. He disembarks and makes a beeline for the airport exit as soon as he can, flashing past any and all security and customs bullshit before raising his timetables and rewinding to 1991. Like hell does he want to know what security would make of his passport being 20+ years out of date in the future direction.

Thankfully, Gibraltar is goddamn tiny. The traffic kind of sucks, but Dave's walking anyway, because his bank account doesn't exist in '91 and he doesn't have enough cash on him to bother changing it out to whatever they use here. Exhausted and sore or not, he needs to stretch after so much god fucking damm airplane time.

He has to stop flashstepping twenty minutes in when the low-level ache in his side flares up. It's another thirty five minutes to walk to light house at the far end of Europa Point, but it's not too warm yet, and he thinks it's worth it.

Aradia warned him his powers were flashy. That more shit would start breaking down as he went along. God, he just hopes it's something he can live without, or that he can replace. Like his appendix. Or better yet - why the shit couldn't his tonsils get cursed, nobody even goddamn uses those things. This is bull. Shit.

"This is such fucking bullshit," he tells the wriggler as they head toward the lighthouse. White rail fences line the ocean side of the walkway; they're on the lowest tier of the possible walkways, closest to the water, with only a step of steep scrub between them and the sudden drop. The pathway and ramps start to meander, and Dave accidentally walks down a shallow flight of stairs without realizing it's leading him away from the lighthouse itself. He gets a running start and jumps up on top of the rocky ledge between that level of the walkway and the next to skip the ramps, and keeps hopping the barred fences as he comes to them. If he's not supposed to get close to the point without being on a tour or something, too bad - he's on a baby delivery mission, like the patron stork of fuck you I won't do what you tell me. No one stops him as he jogs around the red-and-white lighthouse, though a few normal tourists lean over the railing in the middle of their photography sesh to watch him maybe-trespass.

The water's dark, and very blue; the sky's so clear that the sunlight renders his sunglasses totally useless, because the light that sneaks in through the sides of his shades blinds him, regardless. Dave stops for a second to catch his breath once he reaches the furthest point, crouching on what amounts to a slab of concrete near the thin fence that doesn't quite extend far enough to block off access to the cliff. When he looks back toward the city, he sees the craggy rocks rising up in the distance, and also three more tourists who have joined the rest in watching him over the railing. He could get closer to the water, probably, but it would involve skidding down a slope with zero footholds, and then a near vertical drop.

This increasingly strikes Dave as an unfathomably bad idea. Nah, this shit deserves caps. This is a Bad Idea, copyright Dave Strider. To commemorate it, he takes out his phone, turns so that the ocean's behind him, and raises it to take a picture of himself.

Then, with a deep sigh, Dave opens the picture and looks at it properly. If he'd checked his selfies earlier, he probably would have caught on faster. The distortion in the selfie is minimal - he can make out himself, and the water, in almost perfect detail. But the wriggler leaning on his shoulder and holding up an (he is loathe to admit) adorable imitation of Dave's peace sign with two claws still has something off about his features - they're either too symmetrical, or not symmetrical enough, and it makes Dave's brain throb. When Dave flicks back to the previous selfies, he can see the backward progression as the wriggler's identity developed over time.

The horns are what gives it away.

"Dude, you photobombed every single one," Dave complains to Gamzee. Gamzee gives a gurgle-snuffle, and Dave hauls the baby carrier around one last time. Raising the floaty donut from under his arm, Dave lifts Gamzee's asshole wriggler form into it and makes sure both his tiny baby feet stick out the holds in the bottom. He stands up and surveys the ocean one last time, nervousness tightening his stomach. It's a hell of a drop. "Make sure you break physics or some shit on the way down, alright?" he starts babbling at Gamzee, propping the wriggler on his hip to talk to him better. "Please, I don't need more dead baby angst haunting me. Throwing you off a cliff is already gonna fuck me up in some brand new way, I can feel it in my earlobes."

Gamzee honks in his face.

Sudden, confused panic blasts Dave right in the frontal lobe. He raises Gamzee up over his head and flings the wriggler, carrier and floaty and all, like a football. "AAAAHHHHHHHHH OH GOD DON'T FALL I WASN'T READY YET SHIT SHIT SHIT!" Dave screams, way too late. Gamzee clears the edge of the cliff and starts falling, the sad pink and purple polka dots of his floaty toy a tiny blur against the dazzling-bright ocean. The light's too bright for a second and Dave loses track of the wriggler for a panicky moment and why is he the only shitgod who can't fly?!

An enormous, ghost-white goat mermaid bursts out of the waves with a hideous, bugling goat scream. The lusus snaps Gamzee out of the air before diving back under the water with a splash that slops water a quarter of the way up the cliff face.

Dave doesn't know why he expected a sane, normal custodian to show up for Gamzee of all people, but uh. Wow. Goat mermaids sure are a thing.

At some point, Dave fell dramatically to his knees, which means he now has to stand up, brush himself off, and watch the slow ripples from the goat mermaid lusus's passage dissipate in the waves.

When he turns around, the tourists are staring at him in various states of shock. One man claps once, twice, before hesitating and looking around at the other tourists for backup.

Dave's done. He's so done. Before anyone can get any bright ideas about taking his picture, he travels forward to 2013. He's almost afraid to look up whether there's now a conspiracy theory along the lines of 'that weird dude who tosses children to giant sea monsters in the Strait of Gibraltar,' now. Almost. But hey. He has to occupy the flight back to Las Vegas somehow. Karkat isn't gonna save himself.

-

TG: dude
TG: gamzee
TG: wtf
TC: :o)
TG: did you know about this shit
TC: that all depends on which motherfucking shit that’s up and bugging you, my brother
TC: OR SHOULD I SAY
TG: DONT YOU FUCKING DARE
TC: daddy :o)
TG: you son of a
TG: oh no
TG: oh god
TC: WHAT’S THE MATTER?
TC: i told you we were cool
TG: does
TG: does this mean
TG: if im your co lusus
TG: and john is your bf
TG: ...have i been Johns dad in law all along
TC: WELL, THAT SURE IS A MOTHERFUCKING CONUNDRUM
TG: am i karkat's dad in law
TC: :oO
TG: what about jade
TG: is there something more specific than inlaws
TC: HUMAN RELATIONSHIPS ARE A MOTHERFUCKING MYSTERY TO ME, MY BROTHER TG: is daughter in law right
TG: no that cant be it
They stop to pick up Dave, Karkat, and Kanaya. Equius lands in a burst of dead whale powder (eurgh), and full body spasms seize Karkat as he starts sneezing with wild abandon. Kanaya gives him a solid thwack between the shoulders that seems to help clear his lungs, and then she sweeps forward to touch Rose's face. John understands completely - Rose looks like she came a heck of a lot closer to death than she actually did. Her face is ashen where it's not smeared with blood, with dark tracks along her cheeks and in her powdered hair that make it look like she's been crying.

Then Kanaya looks at John, and then Eridan, and finally Equius with an increasingly strange look on her face. "What did you all do out there?" she says, staring at John accusingly as she begins to produce handkerchiefs from her pocket. "Did you attack Cetus with baked goods? Was there copious amounts of flour involved in the assault? How could you not invite us to such antics?"

"That is exactly what they did," Karkat says, with one last pause for a mighty sneeze. "You are so right, Kanaya. John, you baking obsessed fuck, what were you thinking?!" He inhales the wrong way, just as Equius shakes more dust out of his trailing hood, and erupts into a coughing fit that makes John's eyes water in sympathy. "Fu-hgk-cking - kghf - fuck!"

John wipes at his own mouth; his hand comes away dusted grey. Apparently, not even a trip through the Breeze is enough to clear away most of the ashes, which is nasty. "It seemed like a good idea at the time! I think that last apple pie was what really finished her off. Old family recipe," he says, without missing a beat, snapping his fingers to blow the lingering ashes in the air down the corridor with a stiff breeze. Joking is good. Joking is easy, whereas wondering why Leviathan turned into roses and thorns makes him uneasy. Wondering why a Horrorterror does anything is basically useless, as far as John can tell. Wondering what Cetus said to upset Rose is slightly more productive, but the actual answers are still inaccessible as long as Rose is being dumb about it. "That's a restroom, right?"

Kanaya rolls her eyes as she tries to help Rose dab gore off her face. "Yes. Dave said it was a matter of the utmost urgency."

"Oh thank fuck." Eridan rams through the door, carrying Kanaya's handkerchief like a flag as he makes a beeline for the sinks. The bathroom is the exact same shade of felt green as the rest of the building; John is personally more shocked to see that the urinals are white. He floats after Eridan, and spies Dave bending over at one sink with his entire head stuck under a stream of water. Eridan promptly does the exact same thing, gargling water as he starts furiously scrubbing his hair.

Equius shakes his head outside the door. It sends up another poof of dust, and the Breeze huffs in John's ear as it directs the cloud away from Karkat's lungs, which appear to suck up air-born particles like magnets. "Is this really necessary?"

Rose knees the door back open before it finishes closing. "Yes," she says grimly, commandeering another sink to wet her borrowed cloth. "Does anyone know where Vriska went?"

"Last I hegkhhk- heard, she had Clover. Nothing since then," Karkat coughs out.

Kanaya props the door open with her foot. "I will ask around," she says, pulling out her phone.

John sneaks his hand in to stick his handkerchief under the stream of water at Rose's sink, and then floats over to poke Dave and make sure he's still alive. I mean, John can feel him breathing, yeah, but he's not exactly moving. When John sees himself in the mirror, he almost bursts out giggling at how silly he looks with grey powder all over his face. The ash is not as obvious on Equius because of his troll-grey skin, but he and Rose both look like crappy cross-species cosplayers. John wipes his eyes off first, and then his mouth, using the mirror over Dave's sink/shower. He prods Dave in the spine when Dave continues to ignore them all.

Dave raises his head with water pouring down the front of his shades, his eyes peeking out over the top as he stares at John in the mirror. "Don't go full juggalo on me, John. I can't handle more clown in-laws," he says, shaking his head.

John snickers as he wipes off the rest of his face. "What, you don't think it would be funny?" Then he soberes. Because Dave pushes himself up from the sink like it takes real effort out of him, and that's...not good. "You okay?" Dumb question. Really dumb question, on account of none of them are okay. Not-dead and only-moderately-traumatized is their baseline existence around here.

Dave grimaces. "I really need to sleep. Like, in a bed, with a silky soft, plush as fuck pillow, and cotton jersey knit sheets, and with a fan going, and apple juice beside me. No. Cranberry juice. Fancy ass cranberry-pomegranate shit. Not in an airplane. Unless it was like, Air Force One, and Obama was there, just like, casually hanging out."

Eridan gargles one last time and spits. "That sounds fucking amazin'," he says, with his sodden hair completely obscuring the top half of his face.

"Vriska says that she is 'rescuing the feathery 8sshole, you're welcome,'" Kanaya announces, pronouncing the 8 in 8sshole in full, her voice full of dubious hesitation. "With eight exclamation points."

John looks at Dave, who looks at Rose, who looks at John, and then all of them look at Kanaya. "She's gonna murder my bird twin," Dave says, horrified.

"He doesn't have any extra lives, either," John adds, which only makes Dave clutch his head. John can't blame him - 'Vriska' and 'rescue' are two pretty risky concepts to stick together in the same sentence. Especially when Vriska herself is the one doing it.

Rose wrings out her handkerchief. "If she doesn't plan it out ahead of time, it might only be manslaughter," she says, in that nonchalant way she has that means she's secretly deeply concerned. "Maybe we should consult Terezi."

"On so many levels? Not helpful, Rose," John says, as the Breeze starts to feel around for wherever Vriska's lurking. Lucky for John, she's pretty obviously not hiding.

-

AG: I am rescuing the feathery 8sshole, you're welcome!!!!!!!!
GA: Somehow I Think That You Are Being Disingenuous. Please Give Your Exact Location So That We Can Come Assist.
AG: Oh piss off, Kanaya, you're not my lusus! Jeeeeezezz!
AG: I have the 8est good luck charm here. The 8est. This is a piece of cake.
GA: Your Good Luck Charm Is A Felt Member. This Does Not Seem Safe.
TT: Vriska, I would really appreciate if you would let us catch up with you first. Just in case something unexpected occurs. I have confidence in your abilities, but the Felt might still have tricks up their sleeves.
EB: tricksies up their sleevies?
TT: No.
AG: Too l8! Oh no! I'm already rescuing him! What are you going to do about it?!
TG: vriska please dont kill oriole
TG: bro is around here somewhere
TG: hell literally go full ninja clan eternal vengeance on your ass TT: yup.
AG: Rescuing is the opposite of killing, you m8rons!!!!! I'm not incompetent!
EB: yeah, we know, you just, uh.
EB: kind of have a track record of reckless behavior.
EB: like the kind where cities burn around you and stuff falls apart...
GA: It's True, I Was There. Rose Was Also A Witness.
AT: aND THEN YOU STAB PEOPLE, rIGHT IN THE SELF ESTEEM,
AT: aS WELL AS THE STOMACH, wHICH HURTS ALMOST AS MUCH AS THE SELF ESTEEM,
AT: sPEAKING FROM PERSONAL EXPERIENCE,
AG: I am going to rescue this guy so good. You'll see. You're all going to regret questioning my rescuing prowess. >:::(
CG: WELL I GUESS THAT'S A START. ASK ORIOLE WHO HE WANTS TO DO THE SPEECHES AT HIS FUNERAL, FIRST.
AA: did someone say corpse party? :D
CG: PRETTY MUCH, YEAH.
AG: No! Urgh, whatever! It's not like I'm Eridan, okay?! Go nag him about genocide or something!
CA: vvis come on im tryin not to remind them a that AG: Yeah, I know, you're whipped! 8oohoo! You've still killed more people than I have!
EB: and if eridan went to rescue someone by himself I would be pretty worried, too!
EB: but he's hanging around with us and not doing anything, and i only have so much worry room left in my brain right now.
CG: CONGRATULATIONS, VRISKA. YOU'RE TOP PRIORITY. JUST LIKE YOU ALWAYS WANTED. WHEE.
TG: yeah we have roughly equal confidence in both of you
EB: aaanyway, found you! be right there!
AG: He's already rescued! Haha!
TG: rip dave oriole strider
TG: what a way to go man
AG: HE'S! NOT! DEAD!!!!!!!!!
TG: hes dead john
EB: suuuper dead.

Oriole is not dead when John carries everyone up a few floors. But he is screaming bloody murder while twisting and dangling from Vriska's grip, just outside the broken window.

Which means any second now Vriska will lose patience and toss him over her shoulder into the empty air. She's not exactly a patient kind of person, and while she might have snagged Oriole to prove a point, that doesn't mean she'll keep it up if he starts annoying/boring her. Oriole's not helping his case by yelling, "Let me go, woman!" in between irate bird shrieks.

"Just be grateful, you ass!" The last of the clouds from earlier have started to clear, along with the faint drizzle, and Vriska basks in the sunlight. She manages to make the faint glow outlining her wings and Thief uniform look menacing, which is a pretty cool effect. Felt-green bodies take up almost every square foot of the floor under Vriska, all in a writhing wave as the multiple copies of Eggs and Biscuit careen around like the room is a pinball machine. Vriska looks pleased as punch, with Oriole in one hand and a third Felt member tucked under her other arm - neither of them looking like they much want to be there. When she sees them appear on the far side of the room, Vriska rolls her eyes. "See? Seeeeeeeee?" she yells over the rabble, as she shakes Oriole by the back of his shirt. Oriole tries to kick her in the crotch, but he keeps spinning around so all he hits is air. She's totally gonna throw him at some point. John can feel it in his bones.

(John could catch him before he falls too far, though. Always an option!)

One of the copied Biscuits in the crowd rises up out of the mass of bodies with a massive oven held over his head – there's just a hint of a tremor in his arms, but three other Eggs and Biscuits surge up beside him and help shove the oven at Vriska. It's probably going down on the list of the silliest things John has ever seen, and he has seen some pretty silly stuff, in his life. Ovenkind may be the stuff of kitchenkind legend, but it's also just ridiculous to see in action. The Breeze swoops under the oven as it leaves their hands, and John waves the oven to the side. It crashes into the wall with a resounding clang, then lands on two Biscuits. No one in the crowd seems bothered by this.

Vriska, on the other hand, groans in disappointment. "Egbert! If you're just here to make things boring, go away! And look, he's alive! Please, don't hold your applause!"

Without a word, John brings his hands together in a single, soft pat.

"We do see. Thank you, Vriska," Rose says. John winces; Rose's Vriskapenance voice sounds like she's reciting from a script, with hardly any pauses between words. Eventually, Vriska's ego is going to notice that Rose is just going through the motions...

For now, though - Vriska hefts Oriole and jerks her chin at John. "Yeah, you're welcome. Here."
She tosses Oriole underhand, his wings splaying out at opposing angles as he squawks, and John has the Breeze levitate him before he can land in the horde of delicious breakfast people. "And as for all of you -" she continues, using her now-free hand to cast her blue dice over the crowd, "- fore!"

The one handed throw lands somewhere in the midst of Eggs and Biscuit's copies - John sees one Biscuits lunge forward, mouth agape, to try to swallow one of the dice midthrow, but there's not enough room for him to maneuver with so many bodies crammed in close. Whatever number the dice land on, it must be a good enough roll to do something. John wafts Oriole and Kanaya in closer to the rest of the group to keep them out of the way when eight dice start to glow white-blue from the floor.

At least fifty whips materialize out of nowhere (not out of thin air - the Breeze gets cranky about the distinction, sometimes), crack around each version of Eggs and Biscuit, and yank them roughly to the side. The sound of dozens and dozens of human skulls colliding with the side of troll skulls and horns fills the room in a chorus, and more than half the crowd falls over, dazed by the whiplash. But more copies pour in through the room's entrance to fill in the gaps, trampling their copied selves in a stampede worthy of the Lion King, while Vriska summons her dicekind back with irritation creasing her brow. "Hey!" she says, giving Clover a tiny shake. "Cough it up!" Her lip curls as she tosses the dice again.

And see, Vriska's floating outside the window on her fancy pixie wings. John and a solid chunk of the people he cares about are in the room itself, along with the swarming mass of Felt members - so when Vriska's second roll snaps the walls and brings the roof down, it's perfectly lucky for her and only her. John dissolves everyone into air except one, and they suck out from under the sudden collapsing rubble and vents before it can squish them into pancakes to complete the breakfast combo platter.

The wind wraps around Vriska and smacks her own hair into her face before solidifying back into people shapes. The only one missing, when John remembers to do a headcount, is Equius. John looks back into the room they just vacated, alarmed for all of two seconds. There's an Equius shaped hole in the wreckage on the floor, and Equius himself is an obscure shadow in the air that brushes a few flecks of debris out of his hair before joining them outside the building. A few straggling copies of Eggs and Biscuits peep in through the open door, then scurry off out of sight, abandoning their unconscious copies to dig themselves out.

"Y'know, I don't know what I expected," John says. Well, that's not true. He at least half expected Vriska to slice all the Eggs and Biscuits clones' in two, or something equally murdery involving swords, after the Eridan incident earlier. Dropping a ceiling on the Felt is actually pretty mild, in comparison! It's just, y'know, that eensy weency little oversight where she didn't bother to warn anyone or wait until her friends were out of the way before doing it. John can never tell for sure if Vriska is careless, cocky, just a massive dick, or all of the above.

"A modicum of self-restraint? From Vriska? No, you’re right, that’s too unrealistic," Karkat says, without letting anyone answer. John wafts him closer so he can hug Karkat properly, and Karkat only puts up a token eye roll before letting his head loll on John's shoulder, his horn nudging the side of John's face. "Let me guess - it was so lucky that the whole building didn't start to snap off at the top like a giant fucking Kit-Kat bar made out of shit. And concrete."

"Kit-Kat," Dave repeats, with feeling. Karkat gives him the middle finger.

John shrugs. Welp, nothing else for it. "Time to update the spreadsheet, I guess," he says, pulling it up on his phone.

Vriska plucks at the front of her god tier shirt with her hand. The fabric falls back against her slightly out of place, and she throws the Felt member over one shoulder like a trophy as she flies up and away from them. "You guys need to get over yourselves," she calls over her shoulder. "Seriously. If you ever decide to stop riding my ass, go have your honeymoon somewhere in the Arctic so you can chill out!"

"That comeback was shit tier, Serket!" Karkat yells back, bristling so much that John nearly eats a mouthful of his hair. It's not possible for Karkat to propel himself under his own power when they're this high up, but he tries to lunge toward Vriska anyway. When that doesn't work he shakes a fist at her. It's really weirdly adorable, if ineffective and apparently rage-inducing - Karkat makes a sound like steam coming out of a kettle until John draws him back in again.

Rose starts flying after Vriska with a faint frown; Kanaya gets pulled along for the ride, her grip tight on Rose's hand. "Vriska, wh-"

"Relax! I'm just going to find Terezi! Wherever that troll has run off to. Since she's still not answering my texts." Vriska slings Clover off her shoulder and his startled 'ooOOOoooh deEAAAR,' wavers in and out as she spins him up to hold over her head. "Come on, you lucky bastard, we're going on a Pyrope hunt," she cackles, before bolting up the side of the building in a trail of sparkles.

"Do we condone her kidnapping and exploiting the enemy?" Kanaya asks.

"That, my dear, is the best question anyone has asked today. And I honestly don't have an answer," Rose replies.

Oriole hasn't unfolded his wings, yet, so John supposes he's also flying Air Breeze, this afternoon. Up close, his hair and feathers form a tangled bird's nest, and one of his shoes has definitely gone missing. "This was a terrible plan. Remind me to never be proactive ever again. It's just not worth the amount of crap that I have to put up with," he says. Eridan, one of the people flying closest to Oriole, looks alarmed at having this sudden, on-going duty laid upon him, and starts edging away. "None of you could come help me out except for her? Really? I rank that low on the priority meter?"

Dave claps him on the shoulder. "Hell, we got here. Eventually. Somehow you beat out Dirk. And he's the guy we nominally came here for. Not bad, right?"

Oriole buries his face in his hands and groans. "I don't know why I hang out with you all. I really, really don't."

"Nonsense. We're family," Rose says, distracted. Oriole groans louder. "Now Dirk?"

"Yup! Now Dirk," John agrees.
Karkat tightens his claws on John's sleeve, then gives John a tiny shove. "Hang the fuck on, are you sure?"

Puzzled, John just blinks at him. "Why wouldn't I be?" he asks.

(It's all going too smoothly. John knows it, in the back of his noggin, but so few things ever go right for them that he dives in headfirst, without questioning it.)

---

AC: :33 < where did effurrybody go?!
AC: :33 < equihiss, this is bullshit! i know you're ditching meown purpose!
AT: tHIS IS, IN FACT, tOTAL BULLSHIT.
CT: D--> The situation is marginally less dangerous than it was previously CT: D--> I would still STRONGLY recommend you stay back until the building is secured
CT: D--> And language
AC: :33 < well, too bad fur mew, i already asked fefurry where she is!
AT: aND MR STRIDER ISN'T BOTHERING US ANYMORE, sO THERE, CT: D--> I insist that you both stay at a safe distance
AC: :33 < hmmm…no!
AT: nOT REALLY FEELING IT TODAY,
CT: D--> Yes
AC: :33 < no!
CT: D--> Yes
AT: uH, nO,
CT: D--> You do not get a say in the matter
AC: :33 < yes he does!
CT: D--> No, he does not
AC: :33 < yeah huh!
CT: D--> Nuh uh
CC: )(OLY CARP, CAN YOU GUYS CUTTL------E IT OUT?!
AC: :33 < yeah huh!
CG: WE STILL HAVE PRIVATE PESTERCHUM CHATS FOR A REASON, FOR FUCK'S SAKE.
CT: D--> No
CG: THERE IS NO REASON FOR ANY OF THESE CONVERSATIONS TO BE TAKING PLACE IN THE FUCKING GROUP MEMO. I DON'T CARE WHAT VARIATION ON FRUITY FUCKING FURRY RUMPUS BULLSHIT WE CALL IT, THIS IS SO FAR BEYOND WHAT I'M WILLING TO PUT UP WITH AS DICTATOR OF THE CHAT.
AC: :33 < yes!
TA: who the fuck put you iin charge, KK?
CG: I DID. THAT'S WHY IT'S CALLED BEING A DICTATOR.
TA: youd be nothiing wiithout me.
TA: watch thii2 2hiit
-- twinArmageddons [TA] has banned arsenicCatnip [AC] from the chat! --
-- twinArmageddons [TA] has banned centaursTesticle [CT] from the chat! -- TA: 2ay iit, KK.
TA: 2ay the word2.
CG: ...YOU'RE A FUCKING GENIUS, SOLLUX. ARE YOU HAPPY NOW?
TA: ye2. ye2 ii am.
GA: This Strikes Me As Somewhat Of A Potential Hazard, If They Cannot Communicate With The Main Group Chat In The Event Of An Emergency.

AT: i DON'T THINK THIS MEMO IS EXACTLY USEFUL FOR THAT, aNYWAY,

TG: that is the understatement

TG: of the goddamn century

TG: though considering were not making it past the 2014 year mark

TG: there's like 86 years worth of lost understatement potential well never get to see TG: just think -

-- twinArmageddons [TA] has banned turntechnGodhead [TG] from the chat! --

EB: omg.

CG: HOLY FUCK, SOLLUX. WHAT HAVE YOU DONE?

TA: thi2 ii2 what a real dictator look2 liike.

GA: I Think You Have Broken Dave.

TA: ii have ab2olute banniing power and iim not afraaid two u2e iit, dammiit.

TA: you people have 2pammed the thread for the last time.

AG: Pffthahahahahahaha, oh my godddddddd, this is the funniest thing I have ever seen! ::::D

AG: 8an Lalonde next, please - I need to fly back and see the look on her face!

-- twinArmageddons [TA] has banned arachnidsGrip [AG] from the chat! --

EB: at this rate I don't think anyone is gonna be left in this memo...

CG: MAYBE IT'S TIME. LET THE MEMO DIE. SOLLUX IS FUCKING PISSED, AND NO ONE'S GOING TO SURVIVE.

-- twinArmageddons [TA] has banned carcinoGeneticist [CG] from the chat! --

EB: D:

EB: kanaya, what do we do?!

GA: Be Strong, John. We Must Be Strong.

-- twinArmageddons [TA] has banned grimAuxiliatrix [GA] from the chat! --

-- twinArmageddons [TA] has banned ectoBiologist [EB] from the chat! --

AT: sOLLUX,

AT: hAHA, we'RE SORT OF FRIENDS, rIGHT?

-- twinArmageddons [TA] has banned adiosToreador [AT] from the chat! --

TA: 2orry, that one was mostly for the chat handle palindrome.

TA: TA AT TA AT

TA: anyone el2e?

TA: wait. 2hiit. have ii been a complete a22hole?

TA: fuck. 2orry.

-- twinArmageddons [TA] has banned twinArmageddons [TA] from the chat! --

TT: ...What exactly happened here?

GC: L1CKS TH3 SO1L

GC: SOM3TH1NG T3RR1BL3.

GC: 4ND STUP1D.

CC: Yea)(, pretty muc)(!

CA: looks like hes gone noww but holy fuck

TT: Ah.

TT: Well, so it goes. We'll hold the memorial service at dawn, the next time we have a free moment.

GC: M3M3-MOR14L S3RV1C3? >;

TT: If you must.

CA: this memo wwas fuckin garbage anywway

GC: Y3S, BUT 1T W4S OUR G4RB4G3. QU4L1TY G4RB4G3. TH3 K1ND OF G4RB4GE YOU T4K3 HOM3 4ND F33D TO YOUR LUSUS.

GC: IF YOUR LUSUS D1DNT SP3ND MOST OF YOUR L1F3 4S 4N 3GG.
Next stop, Dirk. The scratch kids haven't checked in via the memo for a while, so John can only assume that they went ahead and engaged without waiting for anyone to come help. Which isn't a reassuring thought! Not even a little bit!

Not only is he anxious about what they're about to fly into, he's anxious about how many of them are flying into it. They're all here of their own free will, sure (no matter how much Oriole grumbles) but John still feels responsible for making sure he doesn't land them all right in the middle of the fight. If Dirk hasn't snapped out of his brainwashing by now, there's gonna be a stupidly fast Strider with a sword whipping around the room like a souped-up bouncy ball, and the last thing John needs is for someone he cares about to get stabbed. Like, Eridan he's pretty neutral about, and Equius could probably take a sword to the chest and use it as a toothpick afterward. But even then, John doesn't want Eridan to get hurt and set everyone in the room on fire with hope magic stuff! It would be seriously counterproductive, and also sucky. Really sucky.

Equius drops out of the Breeze with a sudden burst of gravity, and then vanishes into obscurity; John can't track exactly where the blueblood goes from there, but considering the fact that Tavros and Nepeta are circling around the building looking for a way in, John supposes it's a good bet Equius is off to hassle them. Which, hey! One less person to worry about.

Good news: John successfully coasts around the room on the Breeze, and finds a spot to land everyone, behind a stack of desks that have been violently throw to the corner of the room. Jake's grappling hooks crisscross a surprising amount of the room, making it harder to find a clear space for all of John's passengers, but he somehow manages to pull it off without bisecting anyone. Yay!

Bad news: Dirk's a blur. A very fast, very pointy blur in black and red. His stabliness levels would probably make Spades Slick proud and/or jealous. Jake, at least, is making an effort to shout some sense into him, but Dirk's a stabby whiffle ball of sword and stone-faced indifference whenever he pauses long enough for John to get a look at him, "Dirk! Dirk, listen to me!" Jake yells, his hands shaking and shooting wild. On the other hand, that might be deliberate - most of the wild shots seem to coincidentally wind up peppering the floor. Roxy can't speak too loud, still, but she's pinned between Jake and the wall, and the shots from her tranq gun are actually aimed at Dirk rather than deliberately missing. Jane and Feferi stand back to back in the center of the room, taking the brunt of Dirk's attacks: Jane blocks most of Dirk's slices with silent determination, but Feferi's glowing faintly fuchsia, her eyes luminescent. The momentary blur of Dirk slices open her arm - but Feferi heals almost instantly.

The other bad - or maybe mediocre - news: Terezi is here. While she's holding her own with ease, deflecting Dirk's sword with her canekind whenever he veers in her direction, it also means any second now, Vriska's gonna totally burst in through one of the few remaining windows and make the situation eight times more likely to blow up in their faces. Instead of focusing on Dirk, though, the tealblood's closer to the penthouse stairs than the center of the action. Closer to -

Bad news x3 combo: there's a Felt member in the room. He's wearing a green hat with his pin-like horns sticking out through the fabric, and something about him makes John want to throw up. Like, he's kind of sick of feeling nauseous so much all the time, but this is on a whole new level. The Felt member stands between Terezi and the penthouse stairs. Every time he stamps a petulant foot, Dirk darts over and drives Terezi back towards the wall with a flurry of rapid-fire slashes. It doesn't seem to do more than inconvenience Terezi, but it still keeps her from making any progress. "That's one hacked off gourd you've got on your shoulders, Pumpkin Spice!" the tealblood laughs, before ducking low and ramming her sharp horns at Dirk's stomach. Dirk vanishes and reappears halfway across the room, and Terezi lands in a roll. She's still some distance from - Y'know, John didn't want to acknowledge a certain name on the Felt inventory spreadsheet. Which was dumb of him, yeah, but he just. Didn't want to think about it.

Dienek is here, and John feels sick with how much he wants to toss the guy out a window. Or worse. He doesn't even recognize the troll's face; if John had any memories of his handler taking him to get brainwashed, he hasn't been able to trawl through the sludge of his mind to retrieve them, yet. But now John's stomach feels too tight, and the Breeze has to wrap around close because otherwise he can't breathe - or he'll make Die stop breathing - or - or -

Karkat seizes John around the waist and starts dragging him away, back toward the main stairwell that they skipped passed on the Breeze. It must take less effort when John's floating weightlessly above the ground, but still. They must look so silly. "Haha. Oh man," John chokes out, feeling Karkat's claws dig a little deeper into the skin of his arms. "Right. That guy. Hahaha!"

It's not a good laugh. It's not a good laugh at all. "Stay with me, dumbass," Karkat says, his voice weird and uneven and not-shouty. Karkat not shouting is never a good sign. "Fuck. This was a bad idea. Fuck, fuck, fuck. Someone, kick that fucker's bonebulge out through his esophagus!"

"I so call dibs," Dave says, and he looked and sounded exhausted not five minutes ago, but his voice sounds flat and steady and ready for casual vigilante justice as he draws a sword. John honestly can't keep track of how many shitty swords Dave owns; he's never really tried.

Rose draws two needlekind, and says, "Dibs isn't binding, brother mine. Do you think it would be uncouth of me to use his horns as a specibus?"

Dave straightens up from his crouch, and slowly stares at Rose. "...Holy shit, Rose."

Karkat slams to a stop, and John's feet drag over a computer monitor, so he squirms around in the troll's grip to see what's stopped Karkat in his tracks. A patch of whirly, distorted space fills most of the air around the stairwell - it feels worse up here than it did lower in the building, as though Jack Noir tore up more of the space here before taking off after Jade - but somehow, two people in Felt green manage to crawl through the same clear path that the scratch kids, Feferi, and Terezi took to climb this high. When they finish extricating themselves from the last of the distortion, their hats are solid red and orange. Fin must be the one with the teeth - the woman looks like she could bite through solid steel. Trace is slower than the other Felt member, and placidly allows himself to be dragged upright when Fin straightens up. The two of them link arms once they're upright. "More coming up behind!" Karkat yells back at the others, his eyes wide with alarm.

John sets down on the floor when Karkat attempts to haul him back the way they came. "Nah, I'd rather fight these guys," John says, lightly, ghosting out of Karkat's arms like a sigh. Karkat, still in emergency mode, bristles a little more - his hair looks like a living, prickly thing with the force of his worry, but now's not the time for papping it smooth - before subsiding into a less wild-eyed mood and stepping away so John has room to swing a hammer.

Dave, on the other hand, takes one look at the escalating situation by the stairs, and almost trips while standing still. "Oh, Jesus pissing christ - not today," Dave says. Then he flashsteps right into Dirk - they collide like a pair of super fast bricks, and skid across the floor, arms and legs and swords flailing in all directions. John...honestly cannot tell if Dave did that on purpose or not, but he sure rolls with it! Heheh.

Kanaya puts a claw flat on Eridan's chest and pushes him into the corner, where Oriole is already doing his best to look like part of the wall. "Do not fire a shot in a situation this crowded," she says, staring Eridan dead in the eye until the violetblood wilts and nods with an edge of desperation.

Kanaya nods to Rose and then ducks under one of the rogue grappling hook lines to join John and Karkat by the main entrance.

Three on two. Not bad. From what John recalls, these two Felt members don't have particularly explosive powers; they can just see where people go in the past and future, or something. Not that that's something to underestimate, but still! "Stop right there," John says, since it's nice and clichéd, and his head's screaming too much for him to think up something more clever right now. Not with Die in the room. Out of sight, not out of mind. Right on cue, Karkat and Kanaya both draw their specibi and fall into fighting stances.

"Well. It's been a nice run," Trace says, with a slow sigh. He tugs a little on Fin's arm.

There's a weird smoothness to Fin's response; she starts to move before Trace has finished tugging, and drops a kiss on his mouth with almost perfect timing. As though she already knew what was about to happen. "This has been a long time coming," she agrees, before turning her unsmiling teeth back toward John, Karkat, and Kanaya. Her eyes, though - it doesn't feel like she's looking at them, really, and it's giving John the heebie-jeebies. "At least she will suffer as we have."

The two Felt leap at them - at John, mostly, since he's between Karkat and Kanaya. Instead of splitting up to confront the three heroes separately, Fin and Trace stay locked together at the elbow, both holding a gun in their free hands. Kanaya's chainsaw screams a warning, but John just dissolves out of the way, while Karkat drops and kicks Trace's feet out from under him.

Except he doesn't. Fin spins Trace out of the way, her own feet dancing over Karkat's kick and finishing with a high kick that hits John right in the face when he solidifies. His nose unleashes a pop of blood; the surprise of it shocks John more than the pain itself. Augh, sloppy! He's getting sloppy! Trace lunges at Karkat, shoulder first (why aren't they pointing their guns?), and when John seizes Trace's leg and flips him onto his back, Fin drops under Kanaya's chainsaw, feet wide, and pulls Trace back up in one smooth motion. She steps up inside Kanaya's guard and uses the hilt of her gun to try to pistolwhip Kanaya across the face. Kanaya yanks back out of the way, baring her teeth back at Fin with a faint hiss. "Just - ugh - you're outnumbered! Drawing this out is just dumb!" John says, his bloody nose making it sound stuffed and congested.

Trace stoops, and Fin rolls over his back out of Kanaya's reach, spinning Trace back around by their linked arms. "Not really. Our trails always ended here. Might as well make the most of it," Trace mutters, barely audible even to John. He steps toward Karkat, swinging his gun up, and John slams his hammerkind down on the man's hand with a gust of wind.

Fin's gun cocks right next to John's ear. "Goodbye -" she says.

A gun cracks the air once, twice.

She doesn't miss either time, and John jolts as Fin's blood sprays across his face. Trace's splatters mostly over the floor, missing Karkat's knees by inches.

Diamonds Droog sniffs, and holsters her gun. "Today has been a good day," she says, her cold eyes full of cheer as she smooths her suit jacket. Behind her, a fist punches through the wall, and Hearts Boxcars widens the stairwell entrance until he can squeeze between the wall and the distorted space, grimacing as he sucks in his stomach. Like Vriska, Boxcars has a Felt member slung over his shoulder, and a white-and-yellow hat scrunched up in his hand so it won't fall off the unconscious man's dangling head. "I'd forgotten how killing Felt always put me in a good mood," Droog says, wistful and pleased with herself.
John finds his words again, though his brain is still fumbling in the aftermath of that. "What the heck was that?!" he demands, his hammerkind dragging on the ground as he doesn't look at the two bodies slumped over on the floor. Both their hats have gone flying off, along with parts of their hea-he's not looking, he's not looking - and Kanaya kneels down beside Fin, putting her claws to the Felt member's neck even though, from the sick look on Karkat's face, there's not gonna be a pulse to find. John lets the hammerkind drop into air and stutters on his way over to Karkat, tapping the troll's face with his hand when Karkat doesn't look up from the bodies on the floor.

"You're welcome, brat," Droog says, dismissing John's shock with a wave of her hand. Clubs Deuce, arguably the nicest Midnight Crew member, skitters out from behind Droog's legs, humming merrily to himself as he skips over the blood trail and heads further into the room. Not a care in the world.

"You didn't have to shoot them! I would've dodged!"

Droog shrugs and beckons Boxcars as she walks around John, Kanaya, and Karkat in a deliberate, condescendingly wide circle, her mouth a perfect slash of dark lipstick. "Have to? No - and yet, why not? These people have been a pain in my neck for too damn long. Don't make the mistake of thinking I pander to you and your morals, boy." As she sails past them, she lets her cuekind fall into the palm of her hand and swings it out, a little too close to John and Karkat for comfort.

The movement snaps Karkat out of his daze? "Back off," Karkat hisses, clapping his claw over John's face and doing his utmost to climb on top of John like a living shield. John grabs him around the back so they don't both topple over, but when he tries to talk, his nose makes a horrible sound and whatever blood hasn't gotten swallowed starts sucking back into the rapidly healing area. The most John manages is a 'snrglh,' and that's...not helpful at all. Kanaya snarls as well, but Droog ignores all of them, Boxcars trailing in her wake.

"C'mon, Diamonds, we're almost there!" Clubs claps his claws together and rubs them in anticipation, jumping up and clicking his heels together as he trots toward the far end of the room. "Let's race!"

"I'm sure that will go very well for them," Kanaya says - and then John and Karkat trade looks with her and each other. Kanaya goes pale. "...She would shoot Dirk."

"She'll totally shoot Dirk," John agrees, and whisks them in between Droog and Boxcars on the wind. It stops the Midnight Crew short; Droog's haughty look turns acidic. Clubs strays too close to Dirk's on-going rampage, though, and a blur of red cape knocks him back out of the way so that Dirk's sword stabs into the floor instead of through the brownblood. "Just give them a few minutes!" John says, when Droog opens her mouth.

But with Fin and Trace dead, John can't conveniently ignore the other fight, anymore. Rose has taken up a position between Oriole and Eridan's corner and the epicenter of Dirk's whirlwind, and aims with one golden eye of light while her pale lilac eyes dart to John. "You've got a little something -" Rose taps her cheek, and John half-heartedly wipes the blood off on his sleeve. Ew. There better not be brain bits on his sleeve, now... Karkat finishes stuffing all of John's personal blood supply back into his nose, and it feels a lot less swollen, but the memory of Droog shooting Fin feels like it's stuck to his skin. Nasty. Satisfied that John's cleaned his face, though, Rose shoots a burst of light from her needlekind, and Dirk turns visible for a full five seconds as light blinds him behind his pointy shades. Jane brings her forkkind around with a triumphant shout, and Dirk brings up his sword to parry it at the last second, too delayed by the temporary blindness to dart out of the way. "Droog shot someone, I take it?" Rose says, too conversationally.

"We're fine," John mumbles. Kanaya and Karkat give him the exact same look, and he rolls his eyes at them. "Oh, wow. Fin and Trace are just. Really, super dead, huh. How is Dirk? Still not listening?"

"Yeah, we're totally fine. I'm fucking fine, too. You and Rose - congratulations, you're both personally responsible for the depreciation of the word 'fine.' Fine now means fuck all. Saying fine a lot is the equivalent of printing more paper money to solve hyperinflation," Karkat mutters. "It doesn't."

Rose tips her head in acknowledgment, then shakes her head. "John, you can't just ask a Strider how he is. That's a faux pas of the highest magnitude." After a pause, during which Dirk races at Jake and gets shoved away by Dave at top speed, Rose adds, "He's been better. His attacks have been increasingly erratic, but he's still not responding. If Feferi couldn't heal, she'd be severely hurt by now - she and Jane are taking the brunt of what Dave can't deflect. And since no one really wants to hurt Dirk..."

She's interrupted by a sudden roar of loud engines. The fragments of glass left in the windows on the side wall start to rattle, and sharp pieces on the floor start to vibrate so hard they tip over the edge and fall down the side of the building. "Did somebody say -" a loud, enthusiastic voice begins.

"You will desist at once," Equius yells, his voice straining with the effort. But he's far too late to prevent the inevitable.

"- faux paw?!

Tavros's rocket chair coasts to a stop outside the window, with Nepeta standing behind Tavros on the seat, her arms folded over her puffed out chest. Tavros has some kind of missiles armed on the front of the rocket and the burning light of good intentions in his eyes. Which, oh no. John raises a hand in alarm, because the room is full of people who might get caught in the way of a hastily aimed missile.

Before the two of them can zoom in and crowd the room even more, though, Equius shimmers into sight behind the rocket chair and starts to physically lift it over his head, causing Nepeta to wobble and spin her arms, trying to keep her balance. "Absolutely not," Equius says. Nervous sweat sluices down his face, and his grimace reveals a freshly shattered tooth in his upper gums. Or maybe that tooth has been broken a while, and John just hasn't seen enough of Equius through the constant void aura to notice it, before now.

"How many of you are going to crawl out of the woodwork?!" Doctor Die shrieks at the top of his lungs, and John's skin crawls at the sound of the troll's voice. Nepeta and Tavros's sudden appearance stalled Dirk for a second, but Die stamps his foot with a wordless shriek and starts jabbing his claw at...well, everyone in the room. "Enough! Finish them!"

With automatic obedience that makes John feel sick to his stomach, Dirk jerks his head in a nod, and raises his sword again.

"Enough," Jane echoes, her voice much firmer. She's quiet, but her voice carries, and Jake and Roxy both look at her with grim expressions. "We've tried words. We've tried knocking sense into him. If he won't listen to sentiment or reason," she says, slinging her specibus over her shoulder, "then we have no other choice."

Um. What.

Jane sounds terrifyingly somber; worse, Jake looks reluctant as he holsters his pistols, his face achingly sad. Roxy drops her riflekind with a clatter that covers the sound of Jane cracking her knuckles. Dirk, instead of taking advantage of the scratch kids disarming themselves, freezes in the center of the room, tense and unreadable.

But those were definitely some worrying words Jane just said! John coughs. "Uh, Jane, what...exactly are you guys...?"

Roxy looks solemn, her eyes bright with tears. 'There's no other way?' she signs, stepping out from behind Jake's guard.

Jake closes his eyes with a harsh breath. His jaw clenches. "Dirk. I'm sorry it had to come to this, old chum. I really thought - well, never mind what I thought."

Rose stows her specibi with clear alarm, raising her hands. "You three, hang on just a moment -"

Roxy reaches into the front of her jacket. Jake hikes up the back of his jacket, reaches behind, and pulls something out of the waistband of his pants, while Jane unscrews the top of her forkkind and unrolls the tightly wrapped item within. Feferi stumbles away from Jane's back, her eyes wide and bewildered. Dirk jolts and raises his sword in a defensive stance, sensing whatever the scratch kids intend to unleash. Just when John thinks the tension can't rise anymore, Dirk launches forward like a spring, aimed right at Roxy.

Who holds up a book in both hands.

Dirk skids to a stop, and in the sudden, startled hush, Roxy clears her throat. "Dirk!" she says, in a determined rasp. "The power of pones compels you!"

"Oh, fuck no," Karkat says. "This is stupid."

Beside Roxy, Jake determinedly holds up his own book in one hand. It's a Pony Pals book - ratty and with patches where the color has been rubbed off over time, the cover torn nearly in half along an old, whitened crease. Dirk spins to look at Jane, his movements jerky, but Jane raises her own book with a silent look.

Jake starts. "Dirk, you gave me this book. It's full of the most - er, splendid, esoteric annotations a man ever wrote on the subject of ponies." He sniffs, and when he speaks again, his voice sounds thick. "I've cherished this gift for many years, even with a slimy worm bastard stuffed in my gourd, and I think you still cherish it, too."

"Nn-" Dirk says, looking pained.

Karkat's furious agony only seems to intensify. "It's not allowed to work. I fucking forbid it," he hisses, before Rose hushes them with a raised finger. Everyone in the room looks on at the scene before them in disbelief; outside the window Equius has forgotten about dragging the rocket chair away and is doing his best to stuff his entire fist into his mouth.

Jane goes next. "This book," she says. Out of the three scratch kids, she looks the most like a suffering martyr, fully aware of the ridiculousness of the situation, possibly one second away from evaporating from this plane of existence out of sheer embarrassment. "Is called. The Lonely Pony. Do you want the pony to be lonely, Dirk?"

Dirk falls to one knee; his head drops low, so that all that John can see is his hair and the tips of his shades. "You...you...that's cheating..." he says, through gritted teeth. It's the most John's heard him say since they arrived, and from the ecstatic look on Jake's face - perhaps the most Dirk's said at all.

Karkat sinks down into a crouch - John pats him on the shoulder consolingly, but Karkat just shakes his head. "Oh...my god," Karkat whispers. "This isn't real."

Dienek digs his claws into his own face, drawing dark green blood. His mouth moves, but he appears to have gone past the point of speech.

"And mine is called the Princess and the Pone!" Roxy says, her voice quality swinging wildly as she starts flipping through the pages of the picture book. She beams at Dirk as she holds up the book to show off each new picture. "Look! It sticks out its tongue! It's such a chubs pony, Dirk, and you know you love the chubby bubbies -"

Dirk clutches the side of his head, ducking further still so he can't see the books over the angular rim of his shades. Dienek, on the other hand, starts screaming audibly again, starting with a barrage of swearwords in another language. "Głupie dzieci! Idiot, idiot children! This is the height of stupidity! All of you are failures!" He snaps his claws at Dirk, who shudders and drops his sword to clutch his head with both hands. "Ugh! Worthless!"

It's the last straw.

Dirk vanishes in a blur. The sword goes, too, a dangerous slice already in motion, and John feels Dave hesitate, and then spring into action from where he's paused beside Terezi to watch the pony show.

Dienek's head separates from his neck before Dave can reach him, and the shower of green blood blends in almost perfectly with the shade of the floor. It's the third death John's seen in the past five minutes, and even more incomprehensible than the first two because one second Die is swearing at them, and then next he's decapitated. Dirk stops just past Dienek's punctuated corpse, his arms shaking minutely, with Dave's sword at his throat. The two of them make eye contact behind their shades.

Then, slowly, Dirk holds out his sword. Dave must yank time to a halt, because one second the sword hangs in Dirk's loose grip, and the next Dave slides it away into his sylladex, without breaking eye contact.

Swordless and with a tremor in one hand, Dirk turns and walks past Die without looking down. When he reaches Roxy and Jake, he stands stock-still before taking the picture book from Roxy with careful hands. After another ten seconds tick by, Dirk lifts his shades and sets them in the nest of his hair. His eyes are heavy with bags, the pale orange gaze scrutinizing the page.

"...Fuck, that is one chubby pony," Dirk says, at last. He looks up at Roxy. "I could look at this all day."

Karkat lets his head fall back and stares at the ceiling in defeat. Roxy chokes out a delighted scream, and flings her arms around Dirk's neck. "Dirk!"

Jake knocks Dirk on the arm, then briskly hugs him and Roxy in one go. "Cutting it a little close there, Dirk!" he says, with a shaky laugh. Roxy jumps up and down a few times, rocking all three of them.

Dirk lowers his eyes for a second, then rests his chin on Roxy's head, not meeting Jake's eyes. "Yeah. Sorry."

Jake rests his chin on Dirk's head in turn. "You're going to be right as rain. You hear me?" he says, quietly enough that nobody else is probably supposed to hear it. Except John and his Breeze scoop it up automatically. Whoops.

Finally, Jane drops her pony book, walks over, and sets her hand on Dirk's back. He tilts his head as much as he can without dislodging Jake to look at her. They don't say anything, but Dirk says, and John figures that's as good as it's gonna get, right now.

Three Felt dead. John doesn't want to be the one to update the spreadsheet with that, holy crapola. He mostly wants to huddle with Karkat on the floor and not move for a bit, but trying to process all of this in the same room as all the bodies? Hahaha, no way. Not in a million billion years.

Dave winds up disrupting the scratch kids' hug fest. Which is a shame, since John heartily approves of hug fests over anything else today might have in store for everybody, but. So it goes. "You guys heading down?" Dave asks, using the hilt of his own sword to massage his forehead.

Jane nods without pause. "Yes. We are." She looks at Die's body with an unreadable look. "We're done here."

It's like she said the magic words. With a blur that makes Dave jump back and scramble to look sharp, Bro Strider appears, leaning on the wall. "Come on, punks. That's enough for one day," he says. He scans everyone else in the room when the scratch kids just look guilty and shuffle their feet. John can feel Bro's stare behind the shades; it lingers on Dienek, and then on Droog, and then on Dave and Rose. "Do I need to haul all your asses out, too?"

Rose purses her lips and folds her arms. "No, father, we'll be fine conveying our own buttocks off the premises. Soon. There's still unfinished business up above."

"Take me. Before I fall down another hole and get trapped in the hell basement again," Oriole says. "I'm done for the day. So done." He shoves off the wall and stalks toward Bro. One of Bro's eyebrows escapes his careful containment and rises up, but he doesn't comment out loud. He gives Rose one last significant look, which Rose pointedly ignores in polite Rose fashion.

A shrug. "Aight. I'll be around." And with that, Bro vanishes with the scratch kids in a single blur that John can barely trace as he speeds them out and away from the building. Back in the direction of the place they rented to stay in, John thinks - but the Breeze's awareness loops back close to John, unwilling to stray far from the Ouroboros tower. The wind's been mostly quiet, or at least subvocal, and all John can pick up from it is the same growing sense of unease that's been plaguing everyone since they arrived in Las Vegas. Nothing new. Nothing specific, like a warning. Just...dread.

Vriska chooses the next second to burst through the wall. She doesn't appear to have had an easy time climbing like, two floors, for some reason that John just caaan't think of (though the fact that her hair's in outright knots might be an indication that she had some trouble fighting some strong wind shear (lol)), and casts John an absolutely livid glare as she storms across the room. But rather than getting sidetracked, she marches straight up to Terezi, who waits patiently with a shit-eating grin. She leans on her cane without reacting until Vriska leans right in and yells in her face. "Enough! Pissing around! Terezi! How hard is it to text back?! I know you read all my messages, you have 'read by' on, you total 8it-

Terezi clucks her tongue, spinning her cane a little and leaning from side to side so that Vriska has to turn her head to keep glowering at her with what John assumes is deep, non-platonic loathing. "Oh, Vriska. There's an order of events in every trial, you know. We had to get through the preliminary proceedings here, and I would hate to have to hold you in contempt of court. Now we can move on to the main event."
Vriska sets Clover on the ground, steps on his back to keep him pinned, and then wraps her hands in her tangled hair to tug on it with a stifled shriek. "Ohhhhhhh my god. Scratch is not going on trial!" she says. Clover makes a feeble noise as Vriska tries to swat at Terezi, but Terezi bends back out of the way with remarkable flexibility, waving a claw back at Vriska in a taunting swat. She dodges every one of Vriska's next swipes, and Vriska's cheeks start to turn bright cerulean with rising irritation. "Ugh! Stop - FUUUUUUUUCK YOOOOOOOOUUUUUUU!!!!!!!!" Vriska howls, as Terezi successfully baps her in the forehead.

"I agree completely." Droog sails past Vriska with her entourage in tow; it stops Vriska with one hand ready to yank on Terezi's hair, but it does not stop Terezi's claws as they sneak up to tickle Vriska right under her ribcage. "No trial. No cops. No more squabbling little brats," Droog finishes, without looking at any of them, as she starts climbing the stairs to the penthouse. Clubs Deuce does a tiny jig in a circle around her on the landing, and then sprints on ahead, while Boxcars lags behind.

Well, whatever. They can totally take the stairs, because never in a million years is John giving Droog a lift. So their dramatic exit can suck it; John sticks out his tongue, for good measure, though none of the Crew looks back. Vriska, on the other hand, looks like she was just punched so hard she saw the face of a god. Her claws fall away from Terezi as she scrambles to look like she wasn't just in the middle of a budding hateflirt session, and she stares up after Diamonds Droog with a dazed expression.

"Vriska. Final warning. Do not make her your role model," Rose says, sternly.

Vriska makes a garbled whine. Terezi pinches her in the underside of an arm and Vriska yelps, but John isn't sure anything is enough to deter Vriska from objectively terrible life choices.

Feferi - who pointedly ignores Die's body as she skips back toward the rest of the group - pouts her lips as she bounces past them, her skirts fluttering around her stripy green socks as she stoops over Fin and Trace. She prods them with a single claw, her moue curious rather than grossed out; John has no idea how she manages that, when he still can't look at the floor near the two corpses without wanting to hurl a bit. "Oooh, they're rayly dead. Very, very dead," Feferi says, after a moment. "Huh. I don't think I could fix this, even if I wanted to. Whoops!"

"So there is a limit to what you can revive?" Kanaya asks, curious. "Would it help if their brains were less...everywhere?"

Feferi shrugs, and bounces away from the bodies. "Dunno!" she says, disconcertingly chipper as she links arms with Kanaya and walks with her toward John. Feferi's shark-toothed grin could rival Terezi's - John thinks if the two of them ever held a contest, it would be a tie. "If it were prawn of us, maybe - but I think if I tried to fix those two, it just wouldn't work right! Hm. Maybe it's a doomy thing, maybe it's a timey thing! But I don't want to mess with it over them." She wrinkles her nose. "Whoever they were."

"Wait!" Nepeta calls from the window, aggravated. "Equius, you actually made us miss efurrything!!!"

"You have not missed us dealing with Scratch," Rose points out, and Equius snaps another tooth with a barely audible creak that gives John yet another heaping helping of the jeebie-heebies. Eurgh, it makes his own teeth ache every time Equius does that. "All in favor of skipping the stairs?"

Dave nods. "Oh, hell yeah. No need to risk getting memed on at the last second."

John does a quick mental tally - with the scratch kids and Oriole gone, that only leaves Dave, Kanaya, and Karkat flightless. Everyone else is god tier or...well, flying in a rocketchair. And if they're all heading to the roof, there's no need for John to lug extra people around to save time; it's probably a fifteen second flight, max, and he's almost had it with being an airborne taxi service, for today. "You okay?" he asks Karkat, who still hasn't emerged from his pony-related quiet time.

"I'm never going to be okay again," Karkat says, flatly. "Ponies. Fucking ponies. Every time I think it can't get worse, life proves me wrong. Three people are dead, and he snaps out of it because of tiny hoofbeasts. Do you realize Equius is never going to let that go? That fuckery is probably the stuff of his creepy horse fantasies and agh -"

Dave comes to stand at John's shoulder, and they both contemplate Karkat's crouched form as Kanaya trades Feferi for Rose. "That was some pretty top tier irony. I don't blame you for being overwhelmed," Dave says; he's got the tiniest smirk ever, his shoulders slouched and his hands stuffed into his pockets.

Karkat's head snaps up. "I changed my mind. I'm okay enough to punch Dave. It's a miracle! Amazing!"

John doesn't want to give Karkat time to test that; he lifts Dave and Karkat into the air on either side of him and then flies them out through the open windows ahead of almost everyone else. Tavros mashes the accelerator on his rocketchair and it zooms up, with Equius hanging off the side and Nepeta furiously trying to yell at him without falling over, her claws digging deep into the back of Tavros's head rest.

Vriska pelts past everyone, because literally everything is a competition with Vriska; Terezi coasts alongside Dave after a second, her teal wings almost as still as Equius's, compared to how much Feferi and Vriska flap theirs around. John waves at her, which is kind of dumb, but Terezi nods back, her cane clasped in both hands so she can rest her chin on the cap in midair. She looks...pensive. Or something! "Hey, Terezi? What's going to happen up there? Because you look..." John makes a waggly motion with his hand.

She cackles at him like she cackles at everybody, but it's a halfhearted cackle. Not the kind of cackle you'd want to enter in a cackle contest, that's for sure. "Excellent question, Egbert," she says, drumming her claws along the knobby head of her cane. The tips of her mouth are spread wide, but it's too flat to call what results a smile. Then, in a low voice: "I don't know, but I think I know more than Rose knows." Her nostrils flare.

"The nose knows?" John says. This is pretty much the only thing he can say in response to something like that. There's probably a law about it, somewhere.

Terezi nods, solemn. "Good deduction. I'll take a deep whiff when we get up there. But the closer we get, the less I like this. Mr Vanilla Milkshake knows we're here. But even this close, I still can't tell what he wants."
By the time they reach the roof, it's a beautiful day outside. Sure, the sun beats down hot enough to roast them all alive, and John breaks out in an uncomfortable sweat the instant they land on the roof, but hey, that's better than cruddy Horrorterror weather any day of the week. Plus, John has his own personal air conditioner; as soon as Dave and Karkat's feet hit the roof, a breeze twines around under John's shirt to cool him off.

It doesn't quite work to stave off fear sweat. But John's pretty resigned to that, by now.

Doc Scratch is shorter in person. It makes sense, kinda: in the recorded footage of the game session, they'd all still been scrawny, chipper thirteen year olds, and now they're all...well, most of them are slightly taller, more melodramatic young adults, and while Doc Scratch may be impeccably dressed in crisp white linen and felt green, he hasn't gotten any taller. The impossibly smooth, featureless cue ball of his head doesn't turn to look at the horde of people setting down around him in a loose semi-circle, but he greets them anyway, once Tavros picks a spot for the rocket chair to hover and stops buzzing around trying to look intimidating. Creepy.

Ah. There you all are.

May I offer you some refreshments? Being the most excellent host that I am, I've taken the liberty of procuring your favorites.

A sudden crackle of yellow-green electricity snaps around Scratch as he gestures toward a table near the northern edge of the roof. It's covered in a nice white table cloth with several pitchers of lemonade, sweet tea, water, and other ice-filled beverages, with shallow bowls of candy scattered in between. One of the pitchers is full of an ambiguous amber liquid, and sure enough, Dave shuffles closer and mutters in John's ear. "What do you think the odds are that he poisoned that AJ?"
John opens his mouth to retort that no, Dave's not allowed to drink the first suspicious beverage handed to him by an evil dude, no matter how much he likes apple juice - and then shuts it as a weird sense of déjà vu tickles his brain. "Dave...Have you asked me that before? Something like that?"

Dave avoids eye contact so hard that his whole head cranes around to stare over his shoulder instead of at John, or Scratch, or literally anybody else on the rooftop. He is so not subtle. Karkat leans over to stare at Dave, his existential disgust transferring easily from the pony incident to Dave. "Uh. Nope. Must be imagining things, EB. You're right, the AJ is too obvious a target -"

John snaps a finger, as the faded memory of some random, late night text conversation nudges him. "You totally asked me that before! God, that must have been ages ago -"

"End of the line, Scratch," Vriska says, loudly. Under direct sunlight, John has to squint to look at her straight on - which is weird, since Rose doesn't have the same radiant glow, despite the fact that the two Light heroes are standing in the same amount of sunlight. John's never thought about it before, but if Vriska could literally steal the light from the sun - well. It's just lucky that reality is collapsing, he supposes, otherwise that might have eventually been a serious problem. Because Vriska would absolutely, 100% steal the sun, if she thought it would help her win. It wouldn't matter if there wasn't anything to win. She would just want to preemptively win. Like, John has no doubt in his mind that she would do it.

Oh, naturally.

The apple juice is of your own stock, Knight. The tea should have finished steeping. There are small samples of each hemotype, Sylph, if you wish to partake.

"No one is drinking tea of questionable moral alignment today, Scratch," Kanaya says, grimly.

Dave's head snaps back around. "If some asshole past version of me sold apple juice to you, I am going to go back in time and stab myself."

Karkat stamps forward, one claw strangling the air a little but not quite clenching into a fist. "No one's taking any of your complimentary shit, you - you faceless lightbulb with a shitty, skinny base that doesn't fit in the socket like a normal fucking lightbulb," he growls in a rush. Then he points a claw accusingly at Eridan, who is edging suspiciously close to the saltwater taffy on the table. "No, shut up! Back in the circle, you fish-witted fuck!"

Eridan listens, but the second Karkat looks away, the violetblood casts a furtive look around and puts something in his mouth. Moreover, Feferi's cheeks are already poofed out not in a pout, but with the distinct look of someone who snagged an entire handful of candy when no one was looking. Despite her words to the contrary, Kanaya is eyeballing the sealed vials arranged behind a hot pot of tea, and Equius's determined lack of a presence combined with the fact that the jug of farm-fresh milk is missing half its contents just...speaks volumes. John does not say a word. "You're under arrest," Rose says instead, backing Karkat's bid for order, her eyes preternaturally bright behind the visor. Scratch does not reply. It's hard to tell, but he tilts his ominous orb head back slightly, without acknowledging Rose's words. At the far end of the roof, the door to the penthouse stairwell slams open with excessive force, and Diamonds Droog stalks out. "No," Droog says, pointing her cue stick at Rose with a disdainful twist to her lip, "he's not."

Cue stick pointing is on the list of things that John Does Not Want; he drags his hammer out of hammerspace and hauls Karkat around so that John's in a line between him, Rose, and Droog. At least half the other people in their group pull their own weapons, which actually...kind of reassuring. Really. Even with Boxcars and Clubs at her side, Droog's still super outnumbered by a bunch of super powered people. She snorts at them, her voice full of acid as she circles around Scratch, across from their main group. "His head is a cue ball, and if I don't punt it down the Strip, my life will have been wasted. If you children can't handle that, go back downstairs."

Tick.

"No more killing people!" John says, exasperated. "I'll go back down and find that oven to stuff you in, I swear, lady -"

Droog keeps talking over him. "And really, arresting something like him? Don't be ridiculous. Which one of you inane children came up with something like that?"

"I want pin this one on Terezi, but I don't think she was even the first," Karkat says.

Terezi snickers. "I'll take the credit, anyway," she replies. Breath rushes in through her nose - it has been almost nonstop since they landed on the roof, and while the Breeze is having fun ferrying air directly from Scratch's immediate vicinity to Terezi's nose with a faint whistle, John doesn't know if what she's smell-seeing is actually gonna help her Mind powers or not.

Vriska rolls her dice in the palm of her free claw with a slow clack. "Well, if you're not letting her kill him -" she offers, her voice full of fake-fawning as she prowls around in front of Rose, tucking her dice hand behind her back to keep rolling them out of Rose's sight.

Rose can clearly still see it. "Nobody is killing any more people," she says, meeting Vriska's gaze dead on. Her expression's hard enough to make Vriska's face twitch with annoyance. Taking it as a challenge instead of a reprimand, and oh no -

Droog taps her cue stick on the ground, and swings it back over her shoulder. She's not close enough to reach Scratch's quiet form, but John knows how fast Droog can move when she wants to, and Scratch doesn't look like he's going to move out of the way. "And I still don't take orders from any of you," Droog says, mockingly.

Before she can swing, Boxcars clears his throat, his discomfort morphing into outright unease. He doesn't flinch when Droog glowers at him for interrupting her; he just shifts his weight and the weight of the unconscious Felt member under his arm. "Hang on a sec, Di. Something's not right," he says, in an undertone.

Karkat throws up his claws. "Oh, for fuck's - just stop it, Vriska! Watch, this is me, arresting this fuck with extreme prejudice so everyone will stop blathering!" He storms away from John, ripping a handful of zipties out of his pockets so hard that a couple of them fly across the rooftop - one pings Feferi in the arm - and approaches Scratch from behind. Maybe. Possibly. It's the back of Scratch's collar, anyway, and his shoes point toward Droog now that she's standing between him and the view of Las Vegas, but honestly, John doesn't like anything about this guy's lack of a face. It sets him off balance in a bad way.

"Thank you, Karkat. As lovely as the mental image of a cue stick fulfilling its original purpose on this scale might be, I'd rather avoid that, for the moment," Rose says, the strain it takes to keep her voice light clear as she deliberately steps back and away from Vriska. Droog hisses something at Boxcars, throwing an impatient look at Clubs when the troll tugs on her sleeve - another distraction.

"This is all probably a trap, anyway, and none of you can see -" Eridan is muttering.

Tock.

Karkat's still five paces from Doc Scratch when Terezi strides forward and smacks her cane against Karkat's chest. "Wait. Wait." While Karkat sputters, she turns her cane on Eridan, who ducks on instinct when she jabs the canekind directly at his eye level. "Fanta Grape Soda, I think you're onto something."

Having a Seer in full command of her abilities does always make things interesting. Though I believe that you'll find the outcome, in this particular instance, will be inevitable.

John's stomach drops all the wishy-washy unease crap, and starts to churn in earnest. "A trap," he repeats. But the Breeze would have noticed by now if there was an explosion in the making - urgency causes John to cast about a little wildly, sending a wave of awareness through the wind throughout the building beneath them, but nothing. Two people with guns in a building across from this one - Droog's people, her minions or whatever, but when the Breeze pours furiously over them it sees that they're already unconscious. Like someone already paid them a visit, earlier. Not them, then.

But something is about to go wrong. They've all been able to feel it, today. As if John needed another reason to get a proper panic on...

Terezi sounds more and more certain as she goes on, with an air of calm conviction settling around her. "You want this," she says, tasting each of her words before continuing. She lowers her cane so that Eridan can relax, and points it at Scratch instead. "I would ask the court to consider -"

"We're not a court!" Vriska exclaims, shrilly.

"- that we have been provoked and lured here with all the squirmly bait he could hang on the hook." Terezi folds her arms behind her back, her cane tucked into one hand as she paces in front of them, her sightless eyes never leaving the back of Scratch's head. "He wanted to inveigle us. And we let ourselves be inveigled, because it was convenient. Because we wanted to come here, regardless. Something's smelled rotten since I got here, and you're the mildewed felt at the very center of it." She directs that last at Doc Scratch himself.

He says nothing. Even without a face, John thought maybe he'd be able to sense some kind of expression from this guy but...nope, that's a negative. Staring at the cue ball head and trying to interpret emotion out of it just makes John feel like the cue ball is staring back.

Feferi speaks up, having finally finished her mouthful of sticky candy. "It was all...pretty fishy. Getting his address, and everything, and now this," she says, dubiously.

"If we leave him here, he'll be able to do whatefur he wants, though!" Nepeta says, pointing her clawkind at Scratch. The motion calls everyone's attention to the rocket chair, and Tavros gulps nervously when he notices how many eyes have turned to him.

Tick tock.

I'm afraid that time is running out. Clubs, may I interest you in some licorice gummy bears? I really would hate to see it go to waste.

"Don't answer that," Droog says, before Clubs finishes looking up in clear delight.

"But Diamonds -" he starts wheedling, knocking a playful fist on her forearm and somehow not getting his head clobbered off his shoulders. "Please, just one?"

"Oh, for the love of - fine."

Karkat throws up his hands with a surly look. "So we just, what? Leave this fucker here? Final call?"
he demands, dangling his fist full of zip ties in front of Terezi when she makes another pass in front of him. She snags the ties with a lightning fast claw, grinning at Karkat's pissed expression.

"We have Dirk," Rose says slowly. "No one is permanently dead, yet. And I can't imagine a cell making any difference to him, at this point. I agree with Terezi."

John elbows Dave in the side, and whispers, "Any future advice?"

Dave gives a short shake of his head; when John does a double take he sees that Dave's skin has gone a weird color again. He looked better while they were dealing with Dirk below, but now Dave's grimacing like he's about to barf. Which, hey, John understands completely. But it doesn't speak well about Dave's current state. "Dude, I don't even know at all anymore. Shit's just making my head hurt," he says. John puts a hand on Dave's shoulder as Dave starts to hunch over and push his shades up to rub his eyes. "Oh, hell. Time feels awful."

"You don't order me around, Lalonde," Vriska says, her voice vibrating with a warning low in her chest. She's burning like a sun; Rose doesn't back down, but Vriska's not backing off, either.

Then Vriska gurgles as she's abruptly hoisted into the air by the neck of her god tier shirt. "Have your tantrum elsewhere," Equius says, hoisting Vriska and Clover easily by that one hand clutching her hood. The blueblood ignores Vriska's squalling fury and the burst of light she emits as she tries to peel Equius's claws off her shirt (in vain) and strides over to the rocket chair, pausing to seize Eridan by the cape along the way. It's a startlingly effective technique, it would seem. "Nepeta. We're leaving now."

Too easy. Even with the arguments. Too easy.

I would applaud you all, if I had not anticipated that you might prove intractable at the critical moment.

No matter.

Doc Scratch snaps his fingers.

Clubs Deuce's neck snaps.

John's across the circle from the Crew, and while the crack sounds distant and unreal, he has a perfect view of Clubs's head jerking around to an impossible angle. The Crew member had just finished trotting back to Droog's side from his trip to the table for a clawful of candy. But Droog doesn't see it; there's a full five seconds before Clubs drops where Droog stands there, her eyes darting around the circle as though searching for which of the kids made the offending, horrible sound. She doesn't even look concerned or bothered by it; just annoyed by the interruption.

Then Clubs's short body knocks into her side on the way down, and Droog yanks away in surprise, her cue stick swinging wildly in her hands. It still doesn't seem to register for her as she stares down at Clubs, her expression full of blank incomprehension. Boxcars drops his captured Felt member with a thud as realization blooms on his face; he drops down beside Clubs in a heartbeat, while Droog continues to stare.

Feferi stumbles and then bursts out of the ragged semi-circle, her claws and eyes already glowing as she races past Scratch to reach the Crew. "Let me see him! I might be able to -" she says, and even though it's horrible, John doesn't quite understand why she sounds so viscerally panicked until he remembers - Sollux -

Droog staggers unevenly, her head falling low so fast John thinks she's about to collapse, herself. But when Feferi's a yard away, Droog lashes out with alarming speed. Feferi raises her claws and her 2x3dentrkind snaps into them at the last second, so she can parry the cue stick that comes slicing out to knock her away. "Don't touch him!" Droog snarls. Her voice doesn't even break - she just sounds awful. John wants to cover his ears, like that'll make the hideous crack stop echoing in the air, like that'll make Boxcars's attempts to check on Clubs's too-still body less upsetting to watch -

"Hey, hey!" Feferi says, spinning her trident to parry again when an incensed Droog knocks her back again. "Just let me help! Please!" She doesn't even make the obvious pun. Karkat half-heartedly moves past Terezi, but it's not like Clubs got shot. John doesn't know if this is something a blood-related power could even start to fix. But Droog's lashing out blindly, and like heck is John letting Karkat go anywhere near that, no matter how unreal everything feels.

Yes. That should take care of that.

You can make an attempt, Witch of Life, but I think you'll find your powers less efficacious when applied to non-game entities. Manipulation, not creation.

Perhaps, if they had still been carapacians you'd have more leeway.

But no. Queens always do mean well.

Boxcars sags back on his heels. He doesn't look broken - just vaguely sick. With some effort he stands up, and catches Droog's arm on the backswing, right when John rushes over on the wind to back up Karkat. "He's already gone, Di. Di," he says.

"Shut up. Shut up," Droog hisses. She rips her arm out of Boxcars's grip and turns on him. This close, John can help but feel her shuddery breathing, no matter how much he doesn't want to pay attention to the Midnight Crew's vitals. When Feferi tries to dart in and lay a glowing hand on Clubs's body, though, Droog checks the blow aimed at Boxcars and scrambles to slam the cue stick down on Feferi's head. John wafts the fuchsiablood out of the way in the nick of time, and Droog's attack dents the roof. "Get away from him!" she says, and this time her voice cracks. Boxcars grabs her from behind, wrapping both arms around her in a bear hug to drag her back with a bleak, steely expression, and abruptly Droog folds nearly in two, letting him drag her away. "Hearts -"

After a beat and a look at Boxcars, Feferi lunges forward and seizes Clubs. "I can't feel - there's nothing for me to work with - Karkat, please help me."

John can already tell, with a sickening knot in his stomach, that Karkat only came to help on instinct. Karkat opens and closes a claw, looking distant for a second - and then shakes his head. He still kneels beside Feferi, but all he can do is vaguely wave his hand at Clubs. Nothing happens. "I don't know what to do, either," he says. "There isn't anything for me to -"

Droog lets out another noise, like she wants to scream but can't risk opening her mouth. The muffled sound reverberates weirdly in John's ears - his teeth can't seem to unclench, and a weird, cold sensation throbs in his jaw. Boxcars holds Droog tighter, his arms readjusting every time she tries to free one of her hands. He speaks right into her ear, but John can still hear him say, "Not in front of him. Not in front of him."

BE: ...

BE: john.

It's the most the Breeze has said directly in...a while. John jumps a little, the surprise bringing him back to the present. Yes?
BE: i think
BE: we need to go
BE: like. right now.
BE: RIGHT NOW.

The Breeze starts seizing people even before John consciously processes it. Even people who can already fly; even the rocket chair, and everyone on it. "Leaving now! All aboard the no you don't get to argue with me express!" John says, in a rush, which earns him a bunch of startled looks. Whatever was wrong before - whatever Terezi sensed - John can suddenly feel it crashing down toward them, crushing his lungs with panic.

"John, whoa!" Karkat says, when John scoops him and Feferi up and away from Clubs Deuce.

Feferi fights harder. "No, let me try! If I can bring myself back from something like that, I can -" she says before breaking off, her voice trembling.

Karkat's phone rings. It's so out of place that John almost drops Karkat by mistake, but the Breeze isn't letting anyone go - on the contrary, it buoys Karkat up and doubles its pace, propelling everyone away from the rooftop and Doc Scratch and the Midnight Crew no matter how hard Vriska tries to fly back the way they just came. Contorting himself to reach his phone, Karkat answers the call with a violent, "Sollux, what the fuck?!" and puts it on speaker phone.

Sollux's voice sounds tinny through the speakers. "Open your apps and leave. Now."

No one even got a chance to tell him. Feferi isn't crying outright, but her breath is a heavy sob before she swallows it down. Rose has closed her eyes, but opens them when John looks at her.

She nods.

They planned to go back, maybe find a nice big building full of people and drag it along for the ride into the Medium to wherever the Sburb app decided to dump them. But just as she nods, something cracks in the air, and John grabs everyone and rockets them back to the condo in a single breath.

Tavros's rocket chair cuts out belatedly, after scorching the ceiling. The scratch kids and Oriole nearly jump out of their skins; Bro's not here, but god as infuriating as that guy is John's not putting Dave through that. "Someone, text Jade! Or else!" he shouts over the sound of everyone yelling at him, and then falls back into the Breeze.

- GG: guys, what the heck is going on down there? :(
GG: i think we're running out of time!
GG: those cracks are getting louder...and really close!
TA: we're out of here. eiither hiit your app or ii hiit iit for you.
TA: eiither way hold on two your butt.
GG: wait! don't port me in!
TA: why the 2hiit not?!
GG: ive got all the missing people up here in space ships, and an exit portal with our name on it.
GG: go on and ill catch up!
TG: jesus jade will you be okay
GG: don’t worry about me, dummy! im a professional, ill have you know!

--

Doc Scratch cannot see Diamonds Droog with any degree of clarity, of late.

He can, however, extrapolate her likely actions from what he knows of her, and of Hearts Boxcar, and of the recently departed Clubs Deuce - and from what dear Fin could see, when Scratch last brought her to this rooftop to see what Time-born sight could see, and how it compared to his own sight.

Diamonds will go down to one of the Midnight Crew's dark floors. Hearts Boxcars - not used to being a voice of reason in the strictest sense, but alarmed and, perhaps, afraid of Diamonds' sudden, broken silence. He will most likely urge her to leave it, to have their pet snipers shoot Scratch from afar, to take Clubs Deuce's body and run to a safehouse, to regroup. Not that so mundane a thing as a sniper rifle could harm Scratch. Underneath it all, his body is little more than fabric and stuffing, and his head -

Well. There is one weapon that could crack it.

Diamonds has it in her hand, when she returns to the rooftop, alone. Scratch doesn't turn to watch her, but this close, he is perfectly aware of the stiff measure of her gait, made uneven where she's snapped the heels off her shoe; the wind has died off, determined to follow its Heir into the Medium when he leaves, and between the sun beating down and the still air, sweat has begun to rise under Diamonds' midnight black suit. The white ivory gun hangs loose in her fingers, but she does not let go as she advances on Scratch.

Here, at last, Scratch has nothing more but speculation to work with. But he trusts Diamonds to follow through. Winding her up and frustrating her at every turn has been some of his most potent work; her betrayal an inevitable and yet delicate thing to encourage.

She stops several feet behind. Interesting, but irrelevant. She could fire the gun at the floor, and the projectile inside would still inexorably find its way into Scratch's cranium. All she needs to do is pull the trigger, and Scratch has ensured that she has every reason in the world to. Diamonds is not one to deny herself a death if possessed with enough rage and suitable motivation.

I've been expecting you. Shall we make this happen?

Silence. The front of Scratch's body faces the edge of the roof, the half-melted Strip laid out clear before him, but his awareness covers a complete circle all around his head. Droog stands there, watching him with a most curious expression; her hair has come loose from her hat, and her tailored shirt - all Stitches' stolen, careful work - strains as she heaves through shuddering breaths. She's bitten all the lipstick off her mouth to swallow screams, a streak of bright blood the only color in one of the cracks of her lips.

Strange, how such a little thing could so undo a person. Scratch can manipulate people like this so easily, but he understands it mostly in the abstract. All of it is done in service to his Lord.

Soon, very soon. Diamonds' hand twitches tight on the gun, but she does not raise it. Not yet.
You really should have seen this coming, you know. From the moment you made the choices you did, you ensured that we would embark upon this path.

The hints were all there. They are not for my benefit, of course. I have both the near omniscience and the unparalleled deductive reasoning necessary to eliminate the need for such things.

They are for people like you, dearest Diamonds.

People I like to call...suckers.

Diamonds stalks forward, fury twisted her face into a snarl as she lifts the gun to the smooth curve of Doc Scratch's head. It's the exact same temperature as the surface of his own cue ball. He straightens his soft shoulders, and feels the whole timeline pivot to attention. Everything turns on the axis of significance, and now that the conditions are guaranteed to be met, it is time to fulfill his ultimate purpose. Peace, fulfillment - the beginning of the end.

Haa haa.

Hee hee.

Hoo hoo.

The timeline waits. It trembles on a knife's edge - or a hair trigger, perhaps, Diamonds's trembling trigger finger. Her eyes burn with angry points of lachrymation, but she is too close to miss. All she needs to do is fire.

Right about...

Now.

Diamonds does not pull the trigger.

...

And then -

Wonder of wonders - something truly fascinating -

Diamonds lowers the gun. "I'm not going to shoot you, Scratch," she says, her voice low and ragged. She smirks at him, her eyes narrowed into cruel, amused slits, and relaxes her tight, grieving posture into something more at ease. One hand rests in her pocket, while the gun swings at her side. "That's not what he would have wanted."

If Scratch ever breathed a day in his existence, he'd have lost his breath just now. Truly, this is...an interesting turn of events. His perfectly stuffed body feels as though something hooked into the plush stuffing and tore an empty hollow in his torso, and he angles himself toward her, so that she knows she has his utmost attention.

Wait.

Really?

Diamonds presses her lips tight, and nods. Scratch looks at her, carefully, and can't find a single indication that she intends to raise the gun and attempt something as plebian as shooting him by surprise. Her motivations are opaque to him, thanks to all the stolen void she has wrapped around her like a second suit, but the longer they stand there, with time frozen around them, the more Scratch comes to the conclusion that he has, somehow, misjudged her.

Incredible. What a strange, problematic turn of events. It really would have been far more convenient for Diamonds to shoot him promptly, in the throes of violent grief. The inconvenience, however, is outweighed by the fact that Scratch feels reluctantly...impressed.

Congratulations. You have...truly surprised me. Well done.

Diamonds' smirk widens, twists into something broken. She removes the remote control she must have taken from Club's body, and holds it up so Scratch can see. So that was the variable. Diamonds's rage and grief might be predictable, but Scratch should have considered the age old adage before making assumptions. To wit: WWCD?

What would Clubs do?

Oh.

Well. That will certainly do it. I wondered if he ever intended to make good on all those explosives he left lying around everywhere.

By all means.

Diamonds flips the cap off the detonator, and jams the trigger down with such force that it cracks the casing. Clubs Deuce wired most of the building up with explosives, over the years - quite a tenacious fellow - but never seemed inclined to set them off. Some were disabled when they might have interfered with Felt affairs; others were ignored. She only sets off the ones layered under the penthouse and the accounting floor, but that's enough to blow them both up. Scratch's puppet body bursts apart almost instantly, the fabric and stuffing catching fire like they've been doused in accelerant.

Interestingly - one final surprise - Diamonds vanishes before the explosion can consume her. But the force of the blast already knocked her back, and her finger closed reflexively on the trigger of the gun, and that's really all Scratch needs to direct the flickering cueball into his head with a world-shattering

CRACK

Scratch dies, and from the crack in his cranium something emerges, fully formed. First the hollow green skull, and then broad shoulders that strain to bursting with hulking muscle; the billiard balls representing his dead servitors roll and flicker in the empty sockets of his eyes under heavy brows. The Ouroboros tower, already rendered structurally unsound by the wanton damage and distortion inflicted by various parties over the course of the day, collapses in on itself as the metal that makes up the support beams ages and rusts a thousand years per second. From Stitches' workroom, an enormous overcoat rises up, bleeding trails of eye-searing color from the hem and the stitches as it settles around the Lord of Time's shoulders.

He raises a golden scepter, and time cracks hard enough to split the sky in twelve directions all around him, like a clockface of destruction.
It is, quite suddenly -

Sunday, April 13th

---

Terezi's lusus tries to fly the second Jade teleports them into open air, her damp, webbed wings rapidly drying and stretching out to their full length. In the grey light of day, the lusus has a distinct teal tinge in the veins visible through the skin of her wings. But the caul obscuring her eyes doesn't fall away, so while she manages to fly under her own power on the first try while Jade scans for where Jack Noir landed, the dragon starts flying right in the direction of a fresh crack that splits open the sky. Jade realizes just in time and yelps a warning before zapping them both away from Chicago. The pale lusus takes it in stride and turns a small loop-de-loop as they appear over Minneapolis.

DM: Oh, how exciting!!!

As worried as Jade is about whatever the heck just happened in that cave, she has to stop and watch the lusus coast along and roll in artless circles. "Dragons are so cool," she says, feeling more than a little starstruck. I mean, come on - dragons! Terezi is so lucky! If Jade had been born a troll, she doesn't know whether she'd want to have a canine lusus or a dragon lusus anymore - poor Bec!

DM: Why, thank you!

Space rips open, and Jack Noir burns through; glowing spittle flies from his twisted muzzle-mouth as he thrusts a sword at Jade. There's something creepy about the sword, Jade realizes as she zaps out of the way in a rush. It looks jagged and brittle, like Noir ripped off a thin chunk of his own carapace and sharpened it. She feels like if she picked the right warped crack in his shell, she could fit the sword back into him.

She only gets a split second to decide - leave Terezi's mom here, or try to drop her off somewhere safer, further from Chicago. But the dragon lusus bugles and arrows in Noir's general direction with her soft, silvery fangs bared, so Jade has to grab her and teleport them fast. Noir retaliates with a furious snap of his jaws, and speeds after them.

JN: Come back here, girl! Come back and look at what's left of me!

DM: Why does his voice smell like spoiled egg yolk?

"Because he's terrible!" Jade punches her way straight to Doctor Lalonde's valley. It's risky - she comes out as high in the clouds as she can, high enough that the air's starting to thin, and she doesn't know exactly how the lusus will react to the sudden change in pressure when she's so fresh out of the egg! But she doesn't want Noir realizing just what's down below, or testing his broken space powers against the void shields. "You'll be safe below! Go!" she tells the lusus, once the dragon flaps upright, and then instantly teleports to Los Angeles with a deliberately flashy, ostentatious burst of power.

It works. Noir's on her again in an instant. He bypasses the Cascades valley entirely to carve a path to Jade. Jade runs upside down along the underside of an overpass, then zaps back over the Pacific. Now it decides to work! D'oh. But Noir keeps pace with her and if anything, speeds up; his next slash knocks Jade tumbling back with a wave of force, and when she spins back upright Noir kicks her hard in the chest. His burst of green lightning drives her skidding along the dirt and snow somewhere in Russia, and the sudden cold cuts through Jade like an icicle. She slams into the side of a building and pushes off it before Noir can kick her again.
But she's not ahead of him, anymore. No matter where she jumps or what she does, Noir is on her butt. She teleports to Lapland and then back over the Atlantic, but so many long distance jumps is starting to take its toll on her stamina. Her heart hasn't stopped pounding for a second since Noir gave chase. The mottled carapacian swings at her and the punch grazes Jade's cheek as she flinches to the side, over Svalbard. With a hoarse yell, Jade shoves Noir back, which buys her some precious room to maneuver. She hops back once - on top of the Washington Monument - jumps backwards again - somewhere in Saskatchewan, in the back of a pickup truck - and again - skating upside down on the loop of a rollercoaster in Fujiyoshida -

And Noir dogs her every step of the way, teleporting only a few scant seconds out of sync from her movements. Jade starts to feel the burn over Lisbon, a crackle of heat flushing across the surface of her skin and sinking deeper, burning hotter behind her sternum and flaring up when she leaps somewhere new. They've hit pretty much every continent by now with no signs of slowing. Jade knows almost every location, but pinballing from London to Johannesburg and then launching right back to Reykjavik makes her atoms ache. It's not a fun time; she's getting desperate, here. Being chased by Clubs Deuce was relentless and horrible. This is fifty times worse, because Noir keeps up with her without pause, utterly relentless, and each time they touch down in one location for more than a breath he blasts through buildings without a care for who might still be inside them.

"Stop it! Augh!" With the worst gun safety in the world, Jade summons a fresh rifle out of her sylladex and fires one-handed, wild. Noir dodges, snarling, his mottled face twisted up with hate. Jade teleports again and comes out on the Vegas strip by mistake; every atom in her body keeps trying to come together here, but she has to lure this guy away from the others and keep it that way. Urgh! He's right on her tail as she zaps to New York City, and she gets a second to breathe before the carapacian crashes into her, wings flared.

They slam through the first building at a wonky angle; Jade seizes Noir by the neck before his teeth can crunch down on her throat, pulls her arm back, and punches him on the nose with enough force to splinter the marbled carapace shell around his eyes. The cracks spread across his face like a web, with molten green plasma leaking out of the fissures. He knees her in the gut in retaliation, roaring, and Jade hits the next wall back-first, the wind knocked out of her with one impact - then another - and finally she crash lands on a torn up street she doesn't recognize. She fumbles a backwards somersault and twists into a sloppy skid, one foot planted and the other splayed out with the knee dragging to kill her uncontrolled spin. Her back is gonna be sore tomorrow, but right now she barely feels it.

A quick scan of the area shows there's no one around - Jade's in the middle of a street with a massive, curling line carved into it, surrounded by construction machines and leftover chunks of concrete that look like Dark Star churned them up in a blender (of evil), but she can't sense a single construction worker. This place should be crawling with people trying to live around the ruin Leviathan made of the downtown area, but there's nobody here.

And there's no time to investigate. Noir zaps in, barreling toward Jade at top speed, and Jade's hands feel like they're on fire as she teleports away one more time -

Only to land dangerously close to Chicago again. Darn it! She emerges about a mile off the ground, swiping an arm across her face to mop up the faint sheen of sweat starting to drip into her eyes. This time, when Noir bounced in to tackle her, Jade zooms further up into the blue, blue sky. Noir has to bank hard and hastily realign himself in a flash of green, while Jade is free to pick up speed and push herself as fast as she can.

How far can she go before she runs out of breathable atmo and hypoxia kicks in? 8000 meters? This isn't the Medium, after all, and Jade's not carrying around a bunch of spare oxygen or anything like ...On the other hand...she does have a spare ecto-brother...Hm!

GG: john! i need air stuff fast pls!
EB: wha - why the heck are you in the upper troposphere? where are you going?!
GG: im going to space, duh!
EB: ...that's awesome.
GG: i know, right? air please!
EB: gotcha covered!
EB: but uh i'm pretty sure you need more than that to survive in space.
GG: im probably not going all the way out of the atmosphere...maybe...
GG: if i have trouble i'll turn back around. gotta go!
EB: be careful!

John has a good point. Space generally requires a lot of gear and rockets and stuff to reach without, you know. Dying. And stuff.

But Jade has god tier pajamas and a breath of air that coasts up and wraps around her just as things start getting gnarly, and also - she is the Witch of freakin' Space, thank you very much. What could possibly go wrong?

[activate fraymotif? y/n]

Nothing, that's what. "Yes!" Jade says, her voice a gasp. She laughs and speeds up through the stratosphere in a series of rapid-fire jumps, skipping tens of kilometers at a time. Each time she jumps the sky around her looks a little darker; when she looks back, Noir is right there zapping after her in spikes of green light. But if she ignores him she sees the pale blue, almost white edge of the atmosphere

[fraymotif activated: No Longer Earthbound ]
The only thing is, they're not alone up here. Jade's senses keep expanding up and outward as her focus slowly detaches from the planet, and she can feel low hanging satellites, the occasional meteor already cruising through the atmosphere and aiming for the ground below - and something else.

Somethings. Somethings that are absolutely gigantic. Things that are big enough to make her fists clench, even the smallest of them at least a couple miles long. She should have sensed them wayyy earlier than this. Curse her casual Earth-centrism! If she's picking up on what she thinks she is...

Then Noir can go directly to angry baby monster jail, do not pass Go, do not collect $200. Because things just got interesting. Jade may not have a space ship to call her own (a fact she mourns now that the thought occurs to her) but somebody has been busy! She's starting to understand why she couldn't track where all those missing people were going - how dumb was she not to check off the planet? Yeesh!

The outer hulls are a red so deep it's almost black against the backdrop of space, blending in like dark titans and blotting out the stars beyond. Jade veers up and around the largest one, close enough to the metal exterior that she could put a hand out and trace a line as she flies by. She thinks better of it when she remembers Noir's wings - he's not gonna be careful with where he's slicing, and if Jade's senses aren't wrong, there's several billion people and counting crammed into these massive ships like tins of sardines, with only a couple layers of armor and bulkhead and some kind of organic material between them and space.

Just how much fuel did it take to get these puppies into orbit, anyway? Jade is trying to calculate it off the top of her head, but without space powers or some other kind of boost she's coming up way short. Unless things are nuclear in there, which she thinks she would have been able to sense waayy before now. Fission or cold fusion engines would be amazing but also noticeable at this range. Honestly, however they pulled this off, Jade is impressed.

Anyway. Time to kick some carapacian hiney. She came out here to get away from all the other living targets Noir might have gone after on the ground, but that plan's a total bust. If someone's gone through the trouble of getting the entire population of the Earth on board a bunch of escape vessels - who is Jade to look a gift horse in the mouth? "C'mere, asshole!" she yells, flipping herself around in a roundoff to face Noir as she lets her momentum carry her higher up, past the midline of the ship. She beckons the carapacian with a flick of her fingers that accidentally-on-purpose becomes a middle finger, and Noir howls in outrage. They have to be out of breathable atmosphere by now but the carapacian doesn't slow down at all; the only difference seems to be that his shriek echoes more in Jade's head than in her ears, now. Gosh darn alien ability to survive in near vacuum -

Speaking of which. She cheers internally for whatever combo of godliness, pajamas, and space stuff is keeping her in one piece right now. Talk about a rousing success for her very first solo non-rocket space launch! When Noir tackles her again Jade meets him with a bared-tooth grin, their trajectory careening a little out of control as they tumble backward. Jade splits her attention between blocking Noir's green-laced slashes and redirecting them so that they don't gouge a hole in the side of the ship. This particular vessel has extra spiky prongs on the prow - these things are designed so weird, like, what the heck? Noir rakes her shoulder, tearing through skin and cloth, and Jade turns it back on him, seizing him by the wrist and whipping around in a circle to fling him like a discus. Their momentum finally carries them up high enough that Jade, still turning, catches glimpses of more bright, saturated red spikes that curve out from around the back of the tall bridge module rising up near the middle of the ship. It's like the entire ship is built to be able to launch itself at an enemy ship and gut it on impact.

No. Hang on.

Jade smacks her face and groans. That's Crocker red. She uses her powers to hit the brakes, eyes running over the ship and along the side of the hull spread out beneath her until she finds a white fork on the side, emblazoned with old, jagged Alternian script as tall as Jade is, sunlight lancing off the polished armor.
"Holy crap," Jade breathes. Then Noir piledrives her from the side, yanking her hair in the cheapest move possible to pull her head to one side and sock her in the jaw while she's disoriented. Jade zaps them both away when they're inches from colliding with one of the wider prongs of the ship. Totaling the Condesce's fancy schmancy ride wouldn't be smart, Jade thinks. She can't spy any cameras, so there's no telling if the crew inside are able to detect two people duking it out in their immediate vicinity. A vessel this huge - what does their nav system look like? Do they at least have a gigantic rear view mirror or something like that?

Jade tries to yank her hair free, and her scalp gives a tiny scream. "Leggo!" she yells, blocking Noir's next jab with the flat of her arm. A significant chunk of hair tears and comes loose as she gives up and teleports behind him, kicking backwards with all her strength and nailing him right in the butt. He's able to keep hold of parts of her even when she should be teleporting free of him, and it's freaking her out. She spins and roundhouse kicks him across the face when he tries to do the same maneuver,ducking her head out of the way of his next slice. "You're! So! Annoying!"

JN: Right back atcha.

Noir tries to put a claw through her chest. It's like that one anime - Read or Die, that's the one; Jade totally remembers because John recommended it - trying to phase right through her and crush her heart in one go. There’s a sickening second where Jade feels it coming, and her chest is full of green fire - and then she tears away before Noir finishes solidifying, seizing him with her powers and throwing him with sheer brute force. She kind of messes up, because Noir rebounds off a flat section of the flagship’s upper deck and dents the hull with a dull thump. If the Condesce didn't know they were fighting near her ship before... Oops. Jade can't sense an outright breach, though; there's still that organic stuff shifting around under the metal, like insulation that feels eerily like flesh.

The carapacian lays stunned for an instant before lighting up again; his many seams and fissures blaze from the inside with space fire as he pushes off the observation platform (isn't that kind of impractical for an interstellar vessel?) and rushes her.

JN: I'm going to kill you.

JN: You, and all of the washed up has-beens you call friends.

JN: And your little dog, too.

"You don't touch my dog!" Jade feels another wave of spatial distortion above them - which is weird, since it doesn't feel like Noir's rotten power, and if it were Bec, she'd know. Not willing to fire another rifle with all these ships around, or risk the recoil distracting her at a critical moment, Jade snaps her fingers when Noir tries to pull her in and grapple her close. She jumps backwards and leads him along in a burst of micro-jumps until the new distortion snaps into place. She drops like a rock, falling right out from under him just as he loses patience and tries to zap on top of her, and she hopes whatever caused that spatial anomaly can handle itself.

It can. Jade somersaults out of the way just in time, as a spirograph portal unfurls and launches a meteor at them. Noir fails to pull up in time, confusion written all over his face, and Jade snorts really loudly before covering her mouth with her hands as the carapacian takes a space rock to the face, splaying out against the rock like a bug on a windshield. The pock-marked meteor judders a little but otherwise appears unfazed by this turn of events. It's rather stone-faced about the whole thing, to be honest! Eheheh.

But uh, yeah. Jade reaches out a hand to push the meteor away from the flagship and the rest of the fleet, which are the most obvious accidental targets for a meteor on a mission. (No way is she going to be able to redirect all of them, if the Reckoning is kicking meteors at them already!)

The Battleship Condescension beats her to the punch. Before the meteor clears more than a few yards from the exit portal, five different guns unfold from the red prongs of the ship, each equally pointy and covered in unnecessary spikes, and charge up with a faint whine. Yelping, Jade zaps down onto the observation deck before they open fire, and then the guns spit bright red laser pulses at the meteor. To Jade's mild disappointment, Noir shakes himself and teleports out of the way, and the meteor completely fragments on impact. It leaves behind a cloud of fine particles that pelt the front of the deck.

And the exit portal stays open. If anything, it looks like it's pulsating, the flowering green spirals brightening and dimming as it gets ready to spit out another meteor. Jade grimaces, her suspicions confirmed. Skaia's starting to fend off the Reckoning, and Earth is going to get pummeled in her place. The defense spirographs can reroute meteors to different times and locations, so that doesn't tell Jade what things will look like when they all cross over to the Medium. It just tells her the Earth is screwed in the very near future. How long do they have before meteors the size of cities start coming through? Bec can't blow up all of them! Jade can't imagine the fleet around her came unprepared, but they won't be able to handle something the size of a smallish country unless they have serious fire power.
Then again. The Condesce doesn't seem to the type of lady to do things by half measures!

In a pulse of green light Noir tumbles past Jade, too close for comfort - Jade draws a gun to whap him upside the head with, then fires it at point blank range with a tiny sphere of smoke leaking out of the barrel. The carapacian dodges the shot in a blink and revolves slowly, one wing hanging limp and dragging along the ship as he squints at her. He glares at the portal and then back at her, as though insinuating that she's somehow responsible for his close encounter. Which is total bullcrap, because he brought it on himself; Jade sticks her tongue out at him. "You're the one who won't stop trying to murder me, dummy!" she says, readying for his next move. Something about that defense portal is making her brain clamor, but she can't spare the mental resources to deal with it until she's ditched this bozo once and for all. There has to be a way to pin him down.

But right when Noir springs into motion, an enormous CRACK echoes through the space around them, and Jade flinches, glancing around instinctively to try to see where the new crack in time has opened up.

And while she's looking away, Noir stabs her shoulder, clean through the muscle. She can feel it scrape under the clavicle, but the pain is unreal. Jade screams, but can't hear it - her shoulder's on fire and it's spreading -

She teleports, and the pain triples in intensity; she can't hold her shoulder together, no matter how hard she focuses through the agony. She claps her hand down on the streaming wound and clutches as tightly as she can, but when she looks down at her shoulder, she can see hot green Lichtenberg figures branching down her arm with each pulse of pain. "Haaaa." Swallowing hard and biting hard on her own lip to stifle a scream, Jade dodges Noir's next stab. He laughs at her, his hand alight with space as he claws at her.

Bec crunches down on Noir's claw and shakes. Noir yelps and flinches back; hate eats up his triumphant snarl, and the growling mutter of the carapacian's voice in her head shrieks so suddenly that Jade jumps. Her aching shoulder spikes with more pain. It's like the feedback from placing a microphone too close to an amp. At her side, Bec whines and paces back and forth. The pain finally drives Jade down on one knee, and she grits her teeth with Bec's white fur concealing her face from Noir. "Bec," she says, with a shaky smile. She can barely twitch the fingers of her stabbed arm enough to brush against Bec's fur in a welcoming pat.

JN: I ate you once, mutt, and I could do it again.

Bec growls, fur bristling and crackling with static electricity.

CRACK

Jade and Noir flinch in unison. Ohhh, no. Ohhh, nooooo. Jade still can't pinpoint where the cracks are coming from, but they're getting louder. Nearer.

Noir straightens out of his aggressive stance. For the first time since they started crisscrossing the globe, the raw power leaking through his cracked carapace dims. Not enough for him to look whole, but enough that he isn't nauseating to look at. He smirks at Jade, his voice derisive as he tucks his sword away.
"So are you!" Jade retorts, but dread is crawling along her skin, and Noir's smirk is a sickle moon of jagged teeth. With a sweep of his ragged wings, he ditches Jade and Bec, his outline limned with green fire as he wings away from the ship and makes for the defense portal. Part of Jade registers the laser guns of the Battleship tracking the carapacian's movements, like shiny, attentive red beetles, but the rest of her is readying itself to jump after Noir, depending on where he heads next. Reckoning and incoming Lord or no, Noir has to be taken care of, or he'll dick around for a while and then murderize one of her friends. She can feel it. Her shoulder throbs again, right down to the melting atoms of her stricken muscles, but Jade pushes up off her knee. "Where do you think you're going?" she says, suspicious. Her throat feels achey and dry, as if her borrowed air is getting thinner. Relocation might not be such a bad plan, if she can hold herself together long enough.

JN: Me?

JN: Ain't that obvious?

Noir lifts a claw laced with blood (Jade's blood, gross) and green sparks - and streaks for the defense portal like a rocket, more space energy building up around him in a rippling wave as he charges at the spirograph. Jade feels a twinge of unease as the portal prepares to unfurl and release another meteor; what the heck is Noir doing?

He beats the meteor out of the gate, is what. A harsh mental shout of triumph rings in Jade's head, and her insides do their best impression of a fractal as the portal - inverts? The spirograph flickers through every color of the rainbow and then Noir slashes through it, turning the inner physics of the gate inside out.

The snapback hits Jade across the face, a burst of repercussive force that knocks her silly and slaps her down against the observation deck of the Battleship Condescension as the spirograph flashes white. It settles back to a sullen green after a moment of frenzied churning, and Jade gulps a few times to get her heart rate back to normal. When her vision clears, Noir is gone, presumably through to the Medium, and Jade has to adjust her grip on her shoulder, digging her thumb into the meat on either side of the stab wound to keep it pinched close. It feels like her arm's about to fall off, but her mind bursts with a moment of sudden clarity. The pain comes second to the realization that the portal can go two ways.

Jade stares at the portal with dawning anticipation. Maybe Noir didn't mean to plant the idea in her head, but too bad for him; Jade is going to harvest this crop like you wouldn't believe. If she can stabilize her arm, just for a second, and apply all her concentration to recreating whatever Noir did to invert the spirograph -

A faint rumble jolts up her legs from the ship, and Jade turns to see a hatch opening up at the base of the bridge tower. Two people stride out, and for a moment Jade is flummoxed by the sight of them. They've both got the candy-corn horns of trolls, but their skin looks pitch black; then she realizes it's a skin tight suit. She doesn't need the fuchsia accents to be able to tell who the shorter troll is. The Condesce's horns are really pretty unmistakable.
The other troll walks deferentially at the Condesce's side as the fuchsiablood stomps over, each step latching onto the deck like there are magnets in the soles of the trolls' shoes, their suit accents and mouthpiece Crocker red. Lined grooves along the sides of the observation deck fold back and a clear cover rises up to cover the deck, closing them off from the vacuum. Jade is very impressed by the time the Condesce reaches her and the deck has been pressurized with enough air that Jade's wheezing breaths settle down a little. She'd be more worried - this lady hadn't exactly been nice to Dave, Karkat, and Feferi, after all - but Jade's in too much pain to be more than bemused by the Condesce's irritated, stamping walk. Bec is here, now, sitting at attention in front of Jade's feet with his head cocked and ears perked up to observe the Condesce's approach, so really, Jade has all the backup she needs if things get hairy.

"What the shit was that, wriggler?!" the Condesce snaps, jabbing Jade right in the chest with a claw covered in opalescent glitter and tiny squid decals. The nail décor is actually so long that they've cut through the suit to set them free. "You gonna be a problem? Huh? Because we're outta here in ten, and you're not gettin' in the way. #movebeach"

"What? Oh, no, this is great!" Jade says, enthusiasm radiating through her. "This is fantastic, actually!" She grabs the troll by the shoulder, almost ready to swing her around in a hug - except ow, no, not a good plan! Jade drops her hand and goes back to holding her shoulder together. "Where were you all planning to go? Quick, I don't know how much time we've got left!" she asks, interested and urgent at the same time. They're definitely running out of time, but she needs to figure out how to heal her shoulder a little, anyway.

The Condesce rocks back on her pointed heels, her expression unreadable through the suit's mask. "We're getting the shell out of this terrestreel little backwater," she says, guarded. "There's another galaxy out there with my name on it, and if you think you can interfere -"

Oh, wow. And she built a whole fleet of space ships to do it. That's...so awesome! Jade doesn't even have words for how impressive that is! And yet - "No, no, that won't work." This time, when Jade spreads her awareness out over the fleet, she takes an actual count. 413 ships, counting this one. Not a bad number at all, considering how many people had to be evacuated. All of Earth's population, plus whatever else the Condesce thought to equip the ships with for an interstellar quest. "Just finding a new planet's no good, I'm sorry. Not when reality is breaking down." She blinks. "Also, how did you know you'd need to leave?"

The Condesce rolls her eyes extravagantly. "I'm in the know. Wader you talking about, 'reality is breaking'? I ain't no chum, wriggler, I ain't basic. I know how this glub goes down."

Jade shakes her head, still distracted. "Reality is getting munched on by a Lord of Time. Nothing's going to survive - I don't think you'd make it very far before everything just...stops. It's kind of a problem!" Some very colorful, fish pun-laden swearing breaks out. Some parts of it are in clicking Alterian old enough that Jade doesn't recognize the dialect. "How fast can these babies go, anyway?" she asks, tamping a foot against the deck. Running the calculations in her head wouldn't normally take this long, but Jade's operating with piecemeal info about these ships, and it's hard to think around the dizzying pain in her arm. When she experimentally flexes the fingers of her stricken arm, her shoulder is a starburst of pain.

"Fast enough. What is this bullshit?! The Reckoning is only supposed to waste this useless dump!" the Condesce demands, following Jade as she starts floating toward the prow of the battleship. She doesn't spare more than a single impatient glance at Jade's injury; the troll spends more time glowering at Bec.

The other troll clears his throat before Jade can answer, dragging a claw across his PDA. "Another meteor has appeared over the rear guard, my Condesce. The debris clearers destroyed it, but both gates are still open. Should I send word to blast it like we did the one over Cairo?"

"Yeah, shore, blast it outta the water," the Condesce says, waving a hand impatiently.

Jade slams her power down on the nearest laser turrets just in the nick of time, locking up their insides with a flared hand. The other spirograph that opened up feels too distant; it's located somewhere in the exosphere over Europe, so she doesn't expend the concentration needed to save it. No, if she can play her cards right, she should only need this one intact - if she can reverse it the same way Noir did.

Also, make it bigger. Way bigger. "Leave this one! That's your ticket out of here," Jade says, aware that she's babbling through the pain. "It's just got to work - it has to! I need to figure out what he did, hang on."

"We don't exactly have all day, wriggler!" the Condesce says, throwing up her hands in frustration. "We're aboat to get slammed by a metric glubton of space junk, and we need to move our basses! Where would that thing even take us?" She pauses, then continues in a lower tone. She sounds...strained. "Kid, you're krillin' me, here."

Jade stops, blinks, and then looks back at the troll curiously. Then she tilts her head to the side, with a tiny, reassuring smile. "No. I'm saving you." Then she flexes her hand, considers the portal one last time, and whistles with all her might.

Becquerel springs up on all fours, ears up and tail wagging, the most animated Jade has seen it in ages. It whuffles loudly, regarding the spirograph before them with nostrils flared - and then sniffs again, turns its head, and goes to smell the Condesce's feet, following the line of her leg up with snuffles of recognition. Either way, Bec's incredibly distracted. "Oh, cod," the Condesce says, looking - well, Jade can't tell, she's still wearing that space suit. But she sounds gobsmackereled (oh jeez), like she's seeing a ghost. A very, very annoying ghost.
Jade's hurting too much to do this on her own, so it would be great if Bec would concentrate. She whistles again, beckoning, and Bec snaps to attention and trots back over to her side after giving the Condesce's twitching left claw another good sniff. "There's got to be a way. Bec, help me with the gate, okay? We need to get everyone out of here," Jade says. She's got John and a couple other people messaging her back for the first time in a while, the chat alerts going off super fast, but she only spares the focus to respond to a few.

EB: aren't you almost out of air by now?
GG: wont matter in the medium. just go!
TG: fuck
AA: he is here
AA: the lord of time is nigh
EB: ...
EB: well that sucks.
TA: je2u2, okay. everyone el2e, we're out of here iin three, two, one -

Jade splits her focus between the chat memo and the spirograph, her space sense sliding over and around the gate. It feels so foreign that she almost can't get a grip on it; she doesn't think she's properly messed with one of these before, not even in the old game session, and it doesn't feel like a transportalizer would. Space is present in the portal, and Jade threads her awareness through the parts of the gate that call to her power. But there's two extra elements, one grating on her nerves like sandpaper and reverberating with the faint cracks in the distance, and the other so faint but so insistent that she finds herself inspecting it before realizing that there's a voiceover attached.

[Skaian defense portal 413611 status: active est. delay: 15 minutes - 1 hour ERROR]

'Error' is the part of that she likes the least. If either Noir or the Lord of Time are starting to mess this portal up, Jade will be pissed. This would be a liiittle bit easier if the darn thing came with a big red button for reversing the streams, but no such luck.

Deep breath. Her lungs kind of wheeze, even in the thin air of the observation deck.

Jade better make this quick. Reverse, she thinks at the portal, her hands coming up before her to frame the spirograph and twist. Her shoulder whites out again, but she braces that trembling arm with space power so that it stays level with her good arm. The nexus of the spirograph pulses under her focus, but when she applies pressure - nothing happens. Crap. Jade gives a harder push, feeling the burn that she's gotten used to along her arms flare up. This time, with her arms out in front of her, Jade catches it in the act; the usual neon green plasma of her power curdles around the stab wound and along the branching lines under her skin, flecked with darker spots of deep green as it flows up her arms and over her shoulders, stinging when it touches the scabs where Noir claws her earlier. She can't tell if it's just her powers being more flashy than normal, or if her atomic structure is just -

She needs to pay attention to what she's doing. "Come on," Jade grunts, sensing the Condesce shift behind her. Jade nudges the exit gate again with her powers and space alters underneath her touch - but then the spirograph flares a rainbow, and reasserts itself, circling back into its original configuration. "Ugh, come on!"

What is she doing wrong? Is it only possible to reverse the gate's trajectory for a few seconds? Long enough for Noir - or Jade - to make it through, but not long enough for the whole fleet? She can feel everyone behind her if she tries, behind and around and above, an entire fleet of ships with nowhere to go if she doesn't carve them a path. That last crack in time made her stagger, and if it's starting to affect her she needs to bounce, fast. A fast scan of the fleet (trying to distract herself) shows that the gate over the hind guard is gone, swallowed up into a tear where space used to be. There's nothing there, now. Space can't knit itself together over the breach.

And all the ships are full. Time is stuttering and lurching forward with each crack, and if they don't have almost everyone on Earth up here, Jade will find a hat and eat it. That nearby crack could so easily widen and annihilate the hindmost ships. They're crowding forward, but there are too many ships packed into formation already.

Jade isn't panicking. She's not!

Never mind, Jade is panicking, a ice cold trickle of doubt curling in her stomach. "Open up!" she demands, pouring more of her power into the spirograph. Her arm erupts into neon lava that roils under her skin and into the marrow of her bones. It's so hot it's beyond pain - it feels like she's dissolving from the inside out. A faint noise escapes her mouth, but she ignores it. Bec's full of swirling galaxies, and she can feel its power supplementing her own.

And this time, the portal sits up and pays attention. Jade sobs. Bec's fluff ripples with lightning, but even as the spirograph begins to rotate and sink in on itself, even as Bec's support lends strength to her wobbly knees, it feels like Jade's being slowly overloaded. The plasma pours down her back and burns through her thighs, but - that's not right, it's not that the plasma's coming out of nowhere, it's that her body itself feels like it's decohering, all the atoms afire with too much power. Her gasp of pain comes out choked; she can hear the Condesce shouting something that's too quiet compared to the white noise singing in Jade's ears.

[Attention - an error has been detected. A defense portal is being redirected.]

[Please wait. Rerouting...]

"Hurry up hurry up hurry up," Jade starts to chants. Would chant, if she could still feel her face. She has no idea how that voiceover can sound so calm and yet so insufferable at the same darn time, while Jade's burning up over here. Will she melt into a radioactive puddle, or go supernova? Neither sounds like a particularly fun option.

[Attention - an error has been detected. A large quantity of earthbound doomed beings are attempting to gain entrance to the Medium.]

"No!" Jade screams.

[Please wait. Rerouting...]
Finally, Jade thinks, as the defense portal burns white hot, and the internal physics invert from an exit to an entrance. She collapses in a heap on the deck as the corroding space fire crawls through the rest of her body. She can see plasma swirling in the palm of her hand as she lifts it in front of her face, and she can't seem to stop shaking. All of her rubber band reminders are gone, melted down into their component atoms and circulating through the rest of her form.

It's not that she feels weak, exactly - more like she could skip from the Earth to Neptune in a snap of her fingers and hold the whole solar system laid out in the palm of her hand. It's too much, too fast, she's skating along the outer rim of what she can hold together and she can't adjust to the sudden unravelling of her powers like she did in Brazil and Los Angeles. She's going to shake apart and scatter her atoms every which way and not know how to piece herself back together the way she did WV, and she's not even going to get to say goodbye -

Bec whines and rests its muzzle on her jittering lap. The Condesce (still here?) seizes Jade's shoulder, which is pretty brave all things considered, but her claws close down on a wound that's swallowed Jade's whole body. "its not done yet," Jade whispers, her mind floating somewhere above her body as she struggles to string words together. "gotta get them all in - how wide can the portal go?" She can't tell if she's sobbing or not; three more CRACKS go off in rapid succession, jolting through her like electric shocks as the web of broken time starts to wrap around the fleet, encircling the ships. "oh bec..."

It's not done yet, she repeats to herself. The thought gets her back on her feet, swaying as she bends too much of her focus to the task of keeping her body together. Becquerel whimpers again, nosing at her fiery palm until she scratches behind its ears with drooping fingers. "bec, i think i need help," she says. But all of her friends have gone on ahead, and she told them she would be fine. "can you make the portal larger on your own?" she asks. That shouldn't be too complicated a thing to ask of Bec; these gates are supposed to get bigger to accommodate huge asteroids. Jade will keep it open, and Bec can hold it until all the ships are through. Then Jade can go through last, and let the exit portal go back to being an exit, and maybe her powers will recede a little. Maybe it'll buy her some time.

Becquerel regards her without eyes, both ears flicked toward the sound of her crackling voice. "please, bec," Jade begs, after the wolf shows no signs of acknowledging the request. "please."

Finally, Bec floats up, front paws folded up against its chest as it watches her face, all of the wolf’s fur edged with lime and filled with starstuff. Bec licks her cheek, and pulls back as though it means to go to the portal.

Then Bec zaps into Jade's body, and things go spang -

[fraymotif activated: A Familiar Spirit ]

- as familiarity floods Jade's mind. This never happened before, she wants to protest, but as Bec seals itself into her blood and bones, the tiny galaxies of her atoms realigning in a way that feels like coming home - it feels like being whole again, in a way she never knew she was missing.

She comes together almost the same as before, but with an extra thrum in her chest, and a pair of soft white ears sprouting from her scalp, the fur melded seamlessly with muscles and skin. Parts of her body are still painted with nebula as Jade uncurls herself, and her arms are covered in lightning marks, but they don't burn like she's going to burst apart in her own personal supernova anymore. When she touches her shoulder, though, she can feel a chunk of deadened scar tissue, darker than the rest of her skin when she inspects it. She doesn't have time to test how it'll affect her, but the wound's sealed. For now.

And Bec is here, and gone, all at the same time.

It's too much. But Jade has places to be, and people to see.

Jade floated off the deck a little at some point in the proceedings. The Condesce has to stand on her toes to reach Jade's arm and shake it. "Kiddo, are you alright?" she demands, clutching Jade's arm with a hand that have seen centuries come and go and, in another time and place, conquered galaxies only to have it all fall apart. "Hey, guppy! If Jimmy's glubbin' hellbeast did some shit, tell me now and I will wreck that basshoal -"

"No, Bec is...I'm okay. Better now," Jade says, shaking the Condesce off with a gentle shrug of her arm. She floats a few feet forward along the deck, recentering herself with the spirograph above at a forty five degree angle. She needs its radius as wide as possible. "Get everybody ready to go fast enough, on my mark. I'll have to hang back to keep it open for you all."

The Condesce blinks.

After a moment's consideration Jade plants her feet on the deck firmly, and tries framing the gate with her fingers in a rectangular frame. But no, some instinct tells her that's not right. Not for manipulating a portal like this. She falters for a second, fingers curling back, and then raising her hands again with one palm overhead and the other pointing at the floor. Slowly she starts to rotate them clockwise, and the spirograph blossoms, tiny dots of brighter light racing along the curves and whorls as they expand outward. The gaps between the lines expand proportionally as well, but Jade can't see anything through them.

She doesn't need to. She knows what's on the other side.

Once the spirograph reaches 1000% of its original dimensions, it tries to shake her hands away and spiral out of control. In the space of seconds it is wide enough to fit the Battleship Condescension; five seconds, and it's 6000 meters across, the lowest parts of the gate expanding down into the exosphere. If anyone's left on Earth, it must be incredible to see. After the longest ten seconds of her life, Jade finishes bringing her hands around in a circle and closes her fists to hold. "Go!" she says, aware that she's caught fire again, and equally aware that this time, she has control. Her hair coils around her, alight with stars, and she doesn't turn her head because the Condesce is right at her side. All Jade has to do is cock her ears to better sense the Condesce; everything's so much clearer, now.

"You heard the gill," the fuchsiablood says, as the clear cover over the observation deck starts to depressurize and peel back. Jade takes a last gulp of air and gets ready to hold that, too. Hoo boy. "Everybody through! Let's blow this clambake!"

And yes, actually, this fleet can move. Jade watches as the ships to either side of the Battleship pulls away. She's so caught up in holding the portal that she almost misses that it's the Battleship moving, shifting out of the way with thrusters to rise up above the body of the fleet. The rest of the ships begin to rocket forward in precise bursts while still maintaining their formation, a well-oiled machine in motion. Each one is lined with torrents of burgundy and gold, the energy streamlined and concentrated where the engines should be. Psionics! Jade wants to say, glad to have sorted out why she couldn't figure out what kind of power could possibly be enough to lift this many ships. How many psionically-inclined trolls would it take? Jade would guess every psionic on the planet is here, barring Sollux, so that...probably answers that. She has the gate wide enough that the ships can pass through tens at a time, sometimes in rows and sometimes in lines that form giant x's and other patterns, and with each round of ships that passes through Jade can feel the spirograph struggling to close in on itself and return to its original dimensions. As though it needs to digest or something!

But they just don't have time to wait.

The whole fleet is in motion now, the hindmost vessels firing up their engines to close the gap as the fleet vanishes through the portal ahead of them, and they can all cover ten kilometers in a second. But they just have so much space to cover - each ship at least a few kilometers long on its own, with enough room in between them to avoid crowding, and they fill up so much volume just because there's so much to account for, four hundred and thirteen ships and all the while the cracks in time rush in to fill the vacated space, snapping prongs in two and forcing some of the smaller ships to divert their trajectory to avoid plowing straight into a new break. Reality ruptures into jagged shards, and the cracks just keep spreading. Jade feels one vessel shear against a crack and several kilotons worth of metal vanish into nothingness. She flinches and fights back a scream - the organic growth that fills the underlying layer of the ship's armor seals the enormous gap, a stretch of purplish-pink flesh that somehow holds even as the ship spirals into alignment with five other vessels and hauls ass through the gate.

All Jade can do is hold on to her breath, and hope. The Battleship Condescension rises up again, forgoing thrusters for the steady crackle of powerful psionics, and lines itself up as the last few rows pass around and overhead. The Condesce widens her stance but stays beside Jade, her specibus held out before her. "You might want to go inside," Jade points out, with a gasp of air she can barely afford to lose - she's not going anywhere, since she's pretty sure the whole ship will get sucked into the Medium like a milkshake through a straw regardless of where Jade is standing. But the troll who came out with the Condesce earlier has already hustled back inside. Standing on the top of a space ship while it's ready to go full speed ahead is a silly idea.

It's also a really amazing idea. Which is reason number two why Jade is doing it, even though her head is starting to pound. Merging with Bec like this is a heady experience, but they're still exerting enormous power, here.

Rather than getting offended, the Condesce lets out a bark of laughter, raising one claw high over her head. "A little late for that, kiddo," she says. When the last ships hit the spirograph gate and get sucked through in a pulse of white, the Battleship starts to rumble. "Now!"

The troll's claw comes cutting down, and the Battleship leaps forward - faster than any of the others, so fast that Jade slides a few feet before she remembers to accelerate forward along with it. The Condesce crouches low over her specibus where it has locked into three pointed chinks in the observation deck, braced for whatever might come.

Jade hears the final crack before she sees it, and she opens her hands to let the spirograph go. It spirals inward, shrinking as the battleship shoots across the last few meters, and the crack in time that would have broken a quarter of the spirograph hits nothing but empty space. Jade's new dog ears ache, like someone just roared in frustration right beside her head.

Too bad, so sad.

The forward prongs of the ship pass through the gate.

Jade's vision whites out.
'Fishwitted fuck' is straight out of Ancillary Justice.
Light We Walk In

Chapter Summary

We mix from many lands,
We march for very far;
In hearts and lips and hands
Our staffs and weapons are;
The light we walk in darkens sun and moon and star.

Chapter Notes

Edit 2/23 Rose's section is now up, starting at 'Rose can see LoLaR from LoHaC.'
Edit 3/14 Dave's section is now up, starting at 'Crossing LoHaC isn't actually that bad.'
Edit 3/20 John's section is now up, starting at 'TY: If you want my hoard, get over here and remove this thing from my property.'
Edit 4/3 Some extra sections up, starting at 'UU: hello kanaya! ^u^ how are yoU doing?'
Edit 4/14 Jade's section is up, starting at 'Jade feels more than one portal bloom'

See the end of the chapter for more notes.

The thirteenth of April arrives with a crack that nearly splits Sollux's head in two. With minimal warning, a tear in reality the width of his arm nearly cleaves through his horns, and the only thing that saves him is that on the twelfth, he had just ducked down to replace yet another circuit board that's melting all over the carpet. Yesterday simultaneously feels like it just happened two second ago and like ancient history, and a sudden, blinding migraine spikes through Sollux's head when he sees that most of his setup here has melted into a slag puddle on the carpet. Hacking reality is hard. It's hard, and he's not finishing that stupid meme when his brains are about to join the computers melted all over the floor.

The problem with being a great programmer, he thinks, as he pushes out from under the desk and flings Nepeta's lusus away from where the thing sniffs his phone, is that you do stupid shit because you can. Sollux programmed his own death ages and ages ago, and tied it to the end of the world, and now that ~ATH loop is about to blow his brains out. All of them. Wherever his dream selves are, they better have had time to finish their respective projects, because they're about to be toast. He'll come back - hopefully with a computer that's not a complete piece of shit ready and waiting for him on the other side - but first -

Pounce De Leon bounds forward and bats Sollux's phone away from his claws. Then the cat springs back and wiggles its butt in anticipation of another pounce. The annoying shitheel. He regrets letting it anywhere near his computer sanctum with a sudden burning passion; just because the thing has two mouths doesn't mean Sollux needs to be a complete doubles obsessed idiot about it. Summoning his psionics fires off another cascade of agony in Sollux's thinkpan, but that's probably just the whole death thing; it doesn't impede him from shoving Pounce back again (twice is the magic number) and snapping his phone back into his waiting claw.
The Lalonde lusus catches Pounce in bear hug when the feline lusus yowls out of the door. "Sollux, if I'm not mistaken, we've run out of time," Doctor Lalonde calls, staggering back as she wraps her arms around Pounce. The lusus is pretty much the same size as her, so she's an inch away from falling backwards, and Pounce starts wriggling furious as its hind claws sink into the floor for leverage. "Terezi's dragon landed on our roof and dislodged a number of satellite dishes sometime yesterday, but now it appears to be - well, today, and she's making herself at home in the main lobby. Shall we be on our way?"

God, Sollux is so over the lusii invasion. He already has one lusus too many in his life. "Way ahead of you," Sollux says, and he opens the Shurb app. Launching the Lalonde Labs into the Medium is as simple as tapping a button, because fuck all that cruxtruder deployment and phernalia registry bullshit. If people want to waste time fucking around with alchemizing new outfits and weapons, they can do it through the app later. When they're not all stuck on a planet-sized chunk of predestined, meteor-attracting Doom.

Sollux doesn't live to see where the Labs end up. His Prospit self should have aimed all the imported buildings at John's land, since his was the world that wasn't a) plagued by grimdark oceans, b) shattered by Noir, or c) covered in fucking lava - but Aradia was the one who told him that plan, and she's pulled insane amounts of misdirecting bullshit before, so really Sollux won't know until he's at a working terminal. As the world whites out, Sollux feels something pulse in his brain. Yellow blood pours from his ears while he keels over in front of the computer monitors. It's the worst, most literal meltdown he's ever experienced. His psionics burn and burst something else in his pan, and he dies before the rest of the pain can hit him -

He misses his own announcement. Aradia grins down at him, her hair a curtain around Sollux's face so that all he can see are heavy, coarse curls and that toothy, ecstatic grin. "Wakey wakey! Rise and shine!" she sings, gaily, bumping her forehead against his and cradling his face close.

It feels like dying. It feels like coming home. For an instant, Sollux understands exactly how Aradia wants to go out, and if he were a different kind of person, he'd probably want to cry.

Instead, he's an irritable asshole, and nudges Aradia away after the nuzzling starts to crowd him. She floats off with an agreeable hum, and Sollux rights himself so he's not floating off Prospit into space. The sudden absence of caffeine and assorted other chemicals in his bloodstream feels weirdly anticlimactic, but honestly? That was probably the most efficient sobriety treatment Sollux has ever encountered; he never wants to do it again, but knowing his luck... Anyway. "I'm never doing that shit again," he mutters, rubbing a phantom ache where one of his dreamselfes burst an eye with their overloaded psionics. Then he folds away anything extraneous: the greenish-yellow wings, because the last thing he needs is to clog up the silicomb with more magic dust and shit, and then the two trailing tails of his godly tunic thing. "What's the status on the hives?" he asks, floating over to the base of the nearest mainframe to check on the worker bees. Mustard yellow splatters along the side of the healthy amber combs, which is probably Sollux's fault. Ugh.

"I haven't a clue! Sorry!" Aradia says, cheerfully, and she rubs her claws together in anticipation as she skips away from Sollux. They're surrounded by the apicultural structures - building-sized mainframes that rise up in a glistening, living imitation of the golden architecture that used to make up Prospit. One spire in particular extends far above their heads, stretching until it's little more than a thin gold line that disappears into one of the deep gouges in the distant chessboard, just visible between Skaia's swirling clouds. There's no sign of the Reckoning yet, which is...odd. No green portals, no meteors. He can't see the ring of the Veil from this side of Prospit, and with the tower of mainframes sunk into Skaia, they're officially tidally locked this way. Sollux can't remember exactly when Prospit exists compared to Earth's timeline, but they're due for a storm of meteors any second now, and when it starts he and Aradia are going to have a front row seat.
The sight is familiar, sure - Sollux's Prospitian dreamself was probably at the base of this pillar when they died - but it feels like something Sollux remembers building in a dream. His Derse memories are even fainter, possibly because time runs weirder out that close to the Furthest Ring and death may not have actually hit him yet. Sollux chose to resurrect himself through the Prospit body because he needs to refamiliarize himself with these systems ASAP, before any of his idiot friends trips over their own feet, dies, and needs to be god tiered. It's like trying to corral a bunch of extremely death-prone moose. No, actually, a moose would be more likely to trample Sollux; he doubts anyone but Equius has the body mass to be quite that annoying.

He adjusts the closest set of monitors with psionics until they're all aligned how he wants them. A grist of bees hums past him in a swirl of purple bodies and swarms into a mainframe. The whole planet is running pretty hot, but all things considered, it's in good shape. God tiering Eridan, Feferi, and Sollux in rapid succession essentially destroyed the Lalonde terminal, but Prospit should be able to hold out long enough for Tavros, Karkat, Nepeta, and Kanaya. If they don't fuck it up. If Sollux doesn't fuck it up. "Looks like the terminals here are okay, at least," Sollux says, touching the screen to bring the import status windows into focus. "Oh, for - why the fuck are the Labs coming in on Jade's planet?" The spirograph loading symbol spins and flickers; it appears to be busy 'reconciling artifacts' and 'renegotiating outlets,' which is nonsense jargon that only stays on the loading screen a split second longer than the rest of the text while the Lalonde Labs finishes entering the Medium.

"Could be worse," Aradia says, giggling. "Everyone else landed on Dave's!"

"Oh, come on. How do you mess up that badly?!" Sollux flicks an errant bee away from his face before his crackling psionics can fry it.

"Dave hit the Enter button. Probably a bad omen, but I'm not an expert on that!" Aradia kicks off a mainframe to bob back down to Sollux's level. She tugs on his arm, her smile utterly inscrutable. "Come on, we're about to have company. They won't land in lava! Probably."

Sollux shakes her off, and tabs over to the god tier tracker. "Whatever it is can wait. This is the shittiest omen, and I left off in the middle of trying to figure out how to fix Kanaya. Give me a minute."

Because that's still a federal fucking issue. Gamzee's particular brand of error is, as near as Sollux can tell, totally unfixable. Sburb's interface flat-out refuses to translate some of Gamzee's god tier coding. It's like trying to feed something other than beenary code into a mainframe; whatever rage-y, chaotic bullshit Gamzee pulled left his god tier status an unreadable, corrupted mess that Sollux doesn't want to touch with a twenty foot pole. The most he's managed to do is get the god tier status to turn into a :o), which is the absolute peak of unhelpfulness. It's officially Gamzee's problem, because Sollux doesn't have the fucks to spare anymore and Gamzee doesn't seem concerned by literally anything.

Kanaya, though. Kanaya's problematic because she's already risen from the dead. Feferi revived herself with a game-approved ability, but Kanaya's rainbow drinker resurrection is an anomaly that Sollux has yet to code his way around. It just keeps throwing up errors. Skaia never put up this much of a fight while Sollux recoded the god tier process - and to be clear, Skaia fought him every fucking step of the way - and if reality is overwriting Sollux's code and trying to doom Kanaya -

He's not sure he wants to think it, let alone say it out loud. When Kanaya finishes entering with the rest, he'll flag her down and tell her to get through the Final Gate with Dave. If she never dies, this never becomes a problem.

...On second thought, texting her should be fine. He looks at Skaia and sees just how doomed reality is.
He doesn't want to see Kanaya right now.

Without warning, Aradia scoops her hands under Sollux's arms and hoists him up. "No more time! He's coming through!" she says, urgent under all her excitement. Sollux lets her drag him up into the air above Prospit's highest, humming towers, toward the dark expanse of the Medium.

"Which one?" Sollux asks, wary and weary. He glances toward the Veil end of the Incipisphere, but it's too far away from him to make anything out in detail. There's a thin, closer ring of debris strung along between LoWaS and greyed out LoLaR that's growing thicker as Sollux watches. He can make out chunks of vast ships, the curve of an enormous, shattered teapot, fiery brains that are linked to each other by teal neurons - more and more remnants of the trolls' irreparably damaged planets filling in as the game tries and fails to load them. No sign of a meteor barrage - yet.

"There!" Aradia says, pointing. The two of them float with their arms linked as Sollux scans Skaia's cloud-covered atmosphere for whatever Aradia's yellowed claw is pointing at.

He didn't need to strain his eyes, as it turns out. With a burst of sickly red, a spirograph portal appears and unfurls right next to Sollux's long stack of mainframes. Someone shoots out in a flash of green lightning as the portal forcibly ejects him, and the figure tumbles through the Medium before righting himself.

Jack Noir has seen better days. His green aura boils and seethes around him as he glowers at Prospit. At all of Sollux's carefully stacked mainframes.

"Seriously? AA, I have shit to work on," Sollux says, exasperated.

Aradia cracks a whipkind specibus out of her deck, setting her free claw on her hip as Noir pelts toward them. "Maybe one of the others will be able to come over and help in a bit," she says, with a distracted note in her voice.

"Maybe isn't gonna save us if Sburb decides we're the shittiest timeline," Sollux snaps back. But that's all the protest he can make before Noir teleports right in front of them, skipping all the space between Prospit and Skaia in a heartbeat to lunge at Sollux with a sword that reeks of ozone and dead space.

Aradia's whip snaps around the carapacian's wrist and she flings him away from them with a twitch of her wrist. "True!" she says, as a pair of crystalline music boxes start to chime on either side of her. Aradia's smile is as wide as ever, but her gaze has a sharp edge as she grins in the face of Noir's furious snarl. "But I think we're right on track. I'll bring you back so you can work on the terminal around now, don't worry!"

Well, it's not like anything's going to get done while this asshole is flying around and carving Prospit up into pieces. Sollux never bothered fucking around with any Doom fraymotifs, but he did hit the Fatalapiarist rank for a reason, and now he's somewhere in the god tiers between Morose Moros and Prophet of Uncertain Doom (he had a shitton of built up experience and nowhere to allocate it for ages). And his psionics level up along with him. "You promise?" he says, resignedly summoning enough psionics to light up the sky.

Aradia winks. "Of course!" She winds her whip close again, her eyes glinting in the strobe light of Sollux's psionics as Noir roars and rushes them.

Down below, in the thick of the silicomb, a future Sollux bends over the terminal and feverishly begins to type.
John dumps them all in a heap before taking off after Dave and Rose's asshat custodian. Karkat lands, spluttering, on top of Terezi and Equius, who immediately breaks into a uncomfortable sweat. Swearing, Karkat scrambles off them before Terezi can make a crack at his expense, only to accidentally put the heel of his hand down right in the squishy part of Dave's abdomen. Dave grunts and doesn't even look up from his phone, which is covered in green and yellow text. "Sollux hung up?" Rose calls, as she and Roxy pull each other upright. Almost everyone else in the room is too shocked by the sudden landing to do more than roll over and remember how legs work.

"Yeah. The shriveled up lemon fucked right off," Karkat replies, with a twist in his stomach. While he's half-crushing Dave, he stops to check his own phone, but the screen has gone dark. And - shit, Sollux is an asshole, but they're all assholes and Sollux in particular is his asshole friend. As much as Karkat thinks they share a similar sentiment of being perfectly happy emancipating themselves from their respective clingy lusii, this...that's not a way you'd want a lusus to go. You want them to piss off and go back to the ocean or the caves or wherever they crawled out of to raise you, not die for no fucking reason. And someone has to tell Sollux, eventually, or else it'll get dropped as a conversation bomb mid-memo and Sollux will get ban-happy again. It's another crisis waiting to happen. Trust the Midnight Crew to screw them all over one last time, from beyond the grave.

"What happened? Did something go wrong?" Jake asks, army-crawling out from the space formed under Tavros's rocketchair (which takes up half the fucking room with all its expansions and upgrades) and the back of the couch with a pistol in one fist and a keen look in his eye.

"We're leaving, post-haste," Rose says. "Just waiting on John. No, Vriska, we're not going bac-"

The Breeze rockets in through an open window, and John drops Bro Strider on top of the couch in a tearing panic. "Hereokaygogo!" John yells; his momentum sends him skimming over the back of the couch to ram into Feferi and send them both tumbling through the air in a burst of sparkly dust. Karkat lunges up and snags John by the front of his shirt as he flies overhead, and drags him down onto the floor before he can hit the wall. Feferi hits it feet first and hovers there so she doesn't land on any of the people below.

"Gone, dude," Dave says, without a flicker of hesitation on his face. Dave must hit the Sburb app first - who else could swipe that fast? Karkat's not sure anyone else even manages to get their phones out in time to be a contender.

And it launches. Whatever Sollux did shakes the condo underfoot, and John grabs Karkat's hand as white light fills all the windows, whiting out the room -

---

SBURB OMEGA
Karkat wakes up groggy.

Which implies that he has been asleep. Fuck. He thrashes upright, kicks off someone's cape - too many of these fuckers are sprouting capes - and forces his eyes open while his thinkpan still thinks he's lying on the ground. His first thought not populated entirely by swearing runs something like, 'oh, of fucking course we got sent directly to some nightmare hellscare, do not pass Go, do not collect two hundred boonbucks -' but he can't figure out why he's thinking that until his eyes stop stinging and he can take in the room.

An ominous red-orange glow fills the windows of the condo room, lighting everyone's faces with a feverish tinge. The room's lights have gone dark, as though the electricity got cut off. Almost everyone has dropped to the floor dead to the world from the neck up, which settles Karkat's furious nerves a little; when he does a headcount, he spies Jane rolling up onto her knees and Tavros's open eyes blinking at the ceiling with a dazed expression. Eq-someone is lurking near the window, but it's hard to put a name to them. The air feels hot and dry enough that Karkat starts itching a patch of dry skin through the fabric of his jacket. Outside, he hears a constant stream of hissing and crackling sounds, and underneath it all a distant, rumbling drone. But as Rose raises her head from Roxy's back, a louder sound bursts outside: a metallic screech accompanied by a sludgy glop! Karkat shakes John's arm until John mumbles and stretches his arms over his head, and then heads for the nearest window so he can take a look at where Sburb has dumped them. Whoever's standing at the window blocks his view for a second before shuffling a step over so Karkat can lean dangerously out over the lava below.

They're on the Land of Heat and Clockwork. Karkat doesn't know what he expected to see, but it still feels unreal. There's nothing left of Las Vegas except the blistering heat and the rented rooms the app transported to the Medium along with them, from what Karkat can tell; looking down to the point where he starts to feel a twinge of vertigo shows that they're sitting on top of a hollowed out structure made of metal beams and girders. A few cogs the size of cars dot the sides of the support beams, just above the level of the simmering ocean of lava below. A few similar metal structures stick up out of the lava, but theirs is the only one with a condo on top of it that Karkat can see. Eddies of hotter, yellow-white molten rock circulate around the half-melted remains of a cog that must have just toppled into the lava; as Karkat watches, the last of the cog slides beneath the surface, and the lava folds over to fill the spot where it landed.

Then, with a splintering crash, the rest of the building across from them collapses in on itself. Karkat flinches at the sudden sound, and a few people behind him yelp, then start talking over one another in a rising babble as the crash snaps them awake. The building doesn't immediately sink beneath the surface, but Karkat gulps hard as the steel girders sag and deform in the intense heat.

Literally two seconds ago, that building looked just as implausibly sound and immune to the coursing lava ocean as the one they're perched on top of. It's like the laws of thermodynamics suddenly sat up and decided to apply themselves to fuck that one building in particular, and Karkat is distinctly not. Fucking. Okay with that.

Someone prods him in the side, and Karkat elbows them on reflex. But he forgot an indeterminate person was standing right next to him, so Equius takes the hit with a grunt, instead. "Sorry," Karkat mutters, then turns to elbow the correct target.

When he lifts his other elbow, though, Terezi ducks under his arm with a nimble twist, lifting her glasses and the low edge of her hood so she can sniff the expanse of LoHaC. Her red eyes blindly look out over the land. "Oh, that's *spicy!" she says, smirking at Karkat. "Salsa, or hot sauce?"

"* Burning hot fucking lava!*" he says, exasperated.
Terezi lifts an eyebrow. "But are you sure?"

"Yes, I'm really fucking sure! Don't fucking lick it."

She snorts at him. "You need to learn to live a little, Karkat."

Dave peers out on the other side of Terezi. She tilts her head out of the way just enough that he can do it without impaling himself on her spiky horns, and arranges herself to fold her arms over the edge of the windowsill. "God. Imagine if this were an entire ocean of boiling hot sauce, all this time. I would probably shit myself laughing," Dave says. His pale face looks almost as orange as Oriole's in this light; there's a crack splitting the left lens of his douchebag sunglasses in two, but he hasn't swapped them out for a new pair. A draft of slightly hotter air breathes up past them, ghosting through their hair and giving Terezi reason to sample the air with another deliberate inhale. "That would be planet-class irony, right there."

"If you licked it, it prooobably wouldn't be heroic or just when you died," John points out. There's no more room on eye level in front of this particular window, which means Karkat feels a faint thump as John rests his chin on top of Karkat's head, directly between the horns. "Just kind of silly and dumb."

"Tempting. You've officially piqued my interest, John," Terezi says, grinning with anticipation. "Bets on lava versus hot sauce?"

Karkat knows the exact instant she starts to float, because she rises two inches and cuts off his view of LoHaC with her wings. If she is actually about to leap down and lick the molten lava, Karkat doesn't know whether he'll try to stop her, or if the shock of witnessing such unfathomable, unplumbed depths of stupidity will drop him where he stands.

"Whatever you are doing over there - do not," Kanaya calls.

Vriska sits bolt upright. "Doooo it!"

Terezi sets back down on the floor, looking disgruntled, but Karkat doubts that'll last for long. Kanaya breathes out through her nose so hard that it's audible from across the room. "You don't even know what they're doing."

"As if that has ever stopped her." Rose folds her arms directly on top of Dave's head, her fingers steeped in front of her mouth. "Interesting. Of all the places to arrive..." She ruffles Dave's hair, and he starts batting at her hand, aggravated. "Well, it could have been worse. It could have been my land. I'd love the chance to psychoanalyze whatever remains of my ham-fisted, thematically relevant planet right off the bat, but yours will do -"

"I really, really like hot sauce. Terezi was right all along." Dave successfully flashsteps out of the way and reappears behind Rose - who sets her feet on the ground and steals his spot. "Rose. Oh my god. Rude."

"What now, fearless leader?" Karkat asks, in an undertone that strains his voicebox. There's about six people crammed around this window, but he figures it's worth the effort to keep Vriska or Eridan hearing him express any kind of uncertainty. Now that they're in the game, it feels like the rug got yanked out from under them and underneath was a dead drop water park slide at a 90 degree angle. There's so much fuckery that needs to be done before they can even try to leave, and now apparently Jade's going to have what amounts to the entire population of the planet Earth with her whenever she decides to show up. If bossing their small group of assholes around until they actually do something productive was hard, Karkat doesn't even know how Rose is going to coordinate that many people if they decide to freak the fuck out over the end of the world.

"Attempt to contact Sollux and Jade, and see where they've entered the Medium," Rose says, prompt and perfectly reasonable. "Ask Aradia and Calliope if they're finally ready to clarify exactly what steps need to be taken, apart from breeding what I assume will be an entirely unnecessary amount of snakes on Jade's world. If Jade is bringing everyone from Earth, we especially need Calliope to open the Final Gate and point us toward it. Preferably with flashing signs and neon lights indicating exactly where we need to go, to minimize the inevitable confusion."

"So we can punt them through at lightspeed?" John says, shifting around on top of Karkat's head - Karkat can't see exactly what face he's making, but he's sure it's something dopey and not at all ironic. Not at all like he just made the inaugural pun of this stupid game.

Who is Karkat kidding. "If that pun was deliberate, you've lost head-rest privileges," he hisses. John starts giggling, whispers something like 'punt,' and hugs Karkat around the shoulders so Karkat can't even get properly pissed off.

Rose nods. "Or just as fast as we can - I'll feel a lot more secure if we don't have all those lives on our hands. This game has a troubling tendency to kill people it deems extraneous."

"Kick their plush rumps through the Gate before anything else, and then we can get down to business," Dave says.

John shifts again, and says, "You're going through, too, Dave," as sternly as he can when the last remnants of his repressed giggles continue to jostle Karkat's head.

Dave's grunt of acknowledgement sounds wishy washy. Karkat shoots Dave a sharp look, and can tell the exact moment when Dave starts avoiding his eyes behind the shades. "Don't fucking argue about it now, either, dumbass. We don't have time for bullshit heroic shenanigans," Karkat snaps, tempted to grab Dave and do - something. Karkat can't exactly fly, but if he has to recruit one of the flying fucks he calls friends to personally escort Dave across the Medium, he'll do it.

"We are heroes, dude. All of our bullshit shenanigans are heroic. It's why Spades Slick is always so pissed about our life choices," Dave points out. Which is really fucking ominous and does not help his case; now Rose is eyeballing him, too, one eyebrow shooting for the stars. John's arms tighten around Karkat's neck as he leans over to stare at Dave's eyes through the gap in his sunglasses, and Dave's forced to turn his head at increasingly unnatural angles to avoid direct eye contact. At least if Dave's seriously thinking about some kind of self-sacrificial mutiny, Karkat's not the only one ready and willing to kick his ass.

"And on that note, where the fuck is Gamzee?" Karkat mutters, looking back over his shoulder. John obligingly floats a little to the side so Karkat can survey the room, where everyone's stretching and starting to wander toward windows of their own to gander their bulbs at the molten land outside.

"Here, I think," Dave says, absently, and Karkat blinks.

John only makes it worse by chiming in, "Wait, you've heard from him, too?"

Karkat seizes John's shirt by the shoulders and hauls the floating dumbass up and over his own head so he can look John right in the eye. "What the fuck? Why was I not invited to these conversations?! Where is that fucker?" he demands, while John stares at him upside down with all his hair drooping toward the floor.

"He just said he was on the other side. Maybe not on the Land of Hot sauce and Conksuck, but he totally ditched us to get here first," Dave answers. When Karkat whips around to include him in the group glare, Dave shrugs a shoulder. "Just try messaging him, dude. He was answering earlier. Gotta be around here somewhere."

Karkat sucks in a breath to yell at the two of them - fine, whatever, they were all a little busy earlier, but they could have mentioned Gamzee wasn't completely AWOL! - but John pecks him on the forehead while still floating upside down. "I'm sorry. We'll find him, okay? Promise," he says, looking way too fucking pleased with himself.

"You can't just Spider-man kiss me to get out of this conversation, John Egbert!"

"I'm going to message Sollux and Jade, now," Rose says, stepping onto the window and kicking off, her blue shoes the only thing that stands out well against the lava sea as she floats away. "I'm not sure this building is going to be safe to stay on much longer," she adds, spinning in a circle to look down at their support beams.

"Coming, coming," John lies, kissing Karkat's nose. Eurgh. Why does Karkat have to be weak to this kind of sappy bullshit? Fuck. Dave and Terezi are having some kind of heated debate over whether she can carry him bridal style, but Karkat's too busy grumbling and trying to text Gamzee and getting smothered with apology kisses to figure out how the two of them leave with Dave piggy-backing when Terezi still has her wings out.

"Are we all going outside now?" When she doesn't get an immediate response, Feferi shrugs at the others. "Whale, I guess we are! Who needs a lift? I'm shore I can take three at once!"

John lifts his head up, freeing Karkat from the sweet grip of conciliation. "I'll help, sorry!" he says, as the wind starts to pick up.

-

Outside, LoHaC's heat shifts from mildly uncomfortable to sweat-inducing - and that's just for Karkat. Feferi and Eridan, the only coldbloods currently visible, look flushed within seconds; Vriska's slightly better off, but a streak of cerulean-tinged sweat streaks down from her temple as Karkat watches. Equius, who is doing his best to achieve cryptid status without fully disappearing into his own personal black hole, can't be seen long enough to determine just how much sweat he's producing after he punches a hole in the wall for Tavros to fit his rocketchair through. Karkat's sure it must be a lot.

Karkat dangles off one of John's shoulders before dropping down onto the roof. In the distance, Karkat hears another creak and a splosh as something else collapses into the lava, while a pocket near their own building starts to crackle and pop in a sudden burst of activity. There's a good number of structures still standing all around them, dotting the sea, but there's also a lot of space in between each one. As though Dave's land used to have more buildings, and this is actually an on-going process of slowly, interminable destruction. Eventually there'll be nothing left but the lava on the surface.

Ha! Hahaha! Awesome. As if he needed more stimulation for his paranoia glands.

To distract himself from their building's no doubt imminent kerfuckling, Karkat follows Tavros's wide-eyed stare and looks directly up to sees Skaia overhead. A vast circle that looks like a bunch of marshmallows swirling around shouldn't inspire such visceral dislike in him, but what can he say? He's full of excess ragejuice, and the apparently-sentient orb in the sky that stares back at them like the implacable eye of a controlling god is a convenient target, since he doesn't feel like squandering it.
TT: Sollux? Jade? Calliope?
TG: bueller
TG: bueller
EB: oh! also, gamzee?
TC: WHAT'S UP?
CG: OH THERE YOU ARE, YOU MIRTHFUL PAIN IN MY FUCKING ASS!
TC: :o(
TC: I FEEL LIKE THEM ARE ALL UP AND BEING SOME ANGRY SHOUTS, RATHER THAN REGULAR SHOUTS.
CG: THEY'RE ANGRY AND WORRIED SHOUTS! CONGRATULATIONS! IT'S A TWO FOR ONE DEAL!
TC: oh. sorry, bro :o(
EB: where are you right now? we're all here now, we can meet up!
CG: AND YOU CAN EXPLAIN WHAT WAS SO FUCKING IMPORTANT YOU HAD TO VANISH WITHOUT A FUCKING WORD IN THE MIDDLE OF A GIANT MONSTER BATTLE!
TA: was someone piingiing me?
TT: Yes, that was me. Would this be easier if we split off into two memos? I can foresee this rapidly becoming, as a wise man once said, 'a complete and total clusterfuck.'
TC: ALL UP ON THE WINDY PLANET.
EB: wait, my planet? why are you over there ?
TC: reasons.
TA: fuck iit, everyone always needs to be up to speed.
TA: shiit continues to happen. we'll never catch up if we spliit up the party.
CC: )ang on, why are you skipping your 2s? 38o
TA: because ii don't have a liisp anymore. perks of godhood.
TA: amaziing ii know.
CG: OH MY GOD, SOLLUX, YOU CAN'T JUST CHANGE YOUR QUIRK LIKE THIS. IT'S LIKE I DON'T EVEN KNOW YOU ANYMORE. HOW THE FUCK ARE WE SUPPOSED TO KNOW WHO WE'RE TALKING TO, NOW? THIS IS FUCKING OUTRAGEOUS.
CG: AND GAMZEE, WHAT THE FUCK. WHAT. THE ACTUAL. FUCK.
EB: reasons is really vague... :\nTC: MIGHT WANT TO COME SEE FOR YOURSELF.
TA: oh ffs. look. Noir iiis here at Prospiit trying to blow iit all up. iif any of you guys could come over and help me and AA defend my teriiinal that controls all our god tieriiing/contiiniing liiviing stuff, that would be FANTASTIIC.
TT: We'll add it to the agenda. Especially since we can't exactly tell when Jade will arrive... Any volunteers?
AG: Yeah, sure, I'll head over.
TT: I expected as much.
EB: ...wait, really?
AG: It's wayyyyyyyyy more interesting to fight someone than whatever dum8 stuff you guys are getting up to.
AG: So yeah. No argument. ::::)
CG: THAT IS THE MOST SUSPICIOUS SMILEY FACE I HAVE SEEN ALL DAY. ROSE, I WANT IT DOWN ON THE FUCKING RECORD THAT VRISKA IS BEING SUSPICIOUS AS FUCK.
GC: 1 S3COND TH3 MOTIION.
GA: At The Risk Of Being Redundant - Thirdeed.
TT: Motion passed. Duly noted.
AG: Whatever! I'm going to be so helpful. You don't even know.
AG: Anyway. Eridan -

Out loud, Eridan groans. "Cod, do I have to? Vris, I have the worst headache right now -"

Vriska looks up from her phone. "Yes! You do!" She flies toward Eridan. He has both his feet on the ground - considering how many fuckers can float around here, he's one of the odd ones out. The violetblood kneads his closed ganderbuls like he has a headache, and gives Vriska a withering look when she folds her arms and starts drumming her claws. "Come on, up and at 'em! Think of the experience points we'll get for finally beating the crap out of Noir!" she says, vibrating with sudden enthusiasm and hopping a little on one foot. Karkat's not convinced, but it seems like a particularly Vriska-brand logic.

She claps her hands in front of Eridan's face, but that just makes him lean back. "I'm not sure I'm feelin' it," Eridan starts, cautiously, and Vriska scoffs.

Wait. Hang on. Someone is missing. "Vriska!" Karkat yells, and Vriska whips around to give him an evil eye. "Where the fuck is your Felty spoil of war? Tell me you didn't drop him in the lava, holy fuck." He hasn't seen Clover in long enough to be suspicious. There's too much shit to keep track of without Vriska losing her Felt hostage along the way.

Vriska rolls her eyes at him and brushes a light layer of wing sparkles off her shoulders. She looks immensely pleased with herself. "Reeeeeeeelax, Karkat! I just tucked him away for safe keeping."

With a flick of a wrist, she whips something out of her sylladex - Karkat ducks on autopilot because the odds of Vriska killing him with her own dice are non-zero, but it's just a captchalogue card.

With a person's face on it. "You captchalogued someone alive?" Karkat says, unable to muster up the effort to inject disbelief into his voice. "Goddammit, Vriska."

Vriska uses the card to fan her face, then flips it away again. "You're just jealous because I have all the luck," she says, airily. "Anywaaaaaaay, Eridan -" she sneers at him as she starts to rise up into the sky "- fine! Stay here! More credit for me! As usual, it falls on my shoulders to pick up the team slack."

Rose holds up a hand to make Vriska pause; it doesn't work, though Vriska definitely sees it, judging by her annoyed huff. "Any other volunteers? I don't like sending anyone alone -"

Prospit is just barely visible, almost disappearing behind the rim of Skaia. LoLaR and LoFaF - looking surprisingly intact, from what Karkat can see - are both in sight; John's planet isn't. Which is just fucking great, considering that's where Gamzee has been holed up this whole time. APPARENTLY.

Before Vriska gets more than a few yards, though -

"Oh, shit me sideways," Dave gasps out, dropping to his knees. "Someone -"

The Lord of Time arrives with a crack so loud that it loops all the way back around to quiet - an absence. There's a tiny pop, and then the faint hum of white noise achng deep in Karkat's sponge clots. The floor tilts up to meet Karkat at a weird angle, and he only realizes that he's falling when his elbow hits in a sharp burst of pain. Which means it's not just Dave getting hit by this - John's frozen with his palms over his ears, his reaction too delayed for the Breeze to catch Karkat. Karkat pushes up onto his knees, and in the half second it takes him to do that, Equius stutters in and out of sight like a video skipping frames; Rose looks unnaturally stiff, her face fixed mid-expression; Eridan moves too fast, his claws pointing at the Lord of Time like he's fast-forwarding through the motions; Vriska's stopped dead. Only Dave is still moving at normal speed - Karkat thinks; it's not like he's got a fucking clue what's wrong with time - and he's busy coughing up blood. Feferi reaches him before Karkat does, because she's moving closer to normal speed, but resignation sinks into Karkat faster.

They're fucked. They're all royally fucked. It was over before it even started; nice of Sollux to give them a fucking heads-up about getting fucked with the doom stick. All it'll take is one crack in time to swallow them. It's not like anyone can reliably move out of the fucking way.

And the absolute worst part, Karkat thinks, as he starts dragging himself over to Dave at a crawl, is that they're going to die at the hands of one incredibly ugly fuck. Horrorterrors have the excuse of being horrific abominations that barely resemble the much-maligned noodle, and occasionally wear a meatsuit for fun. They're not ugly, exactly - just incomprehensible and fucking obnoxious to look at, due to their annoying habit of making you bleed from every fucking orifice with terror. The Lord of Time looks like a cross between a mummified corpse and a body-builder, all of him dyed a deep, rotting green, but it doesn't hurt to look at him. Which means Karkat doesn't get the sweet release of Horrorterror-brand insanity. Oh, no. He just gets the dubious pleasure of staring at this fuckugly time-breaking lump of kale-colored shit and noticing more details with each passing second. His splitting overcoat hangs limp and shapeless on his shoulders, and both the hem and the Lord of Time's eyes flicker through Felt colors with migraine-inducing flashes. His teeth are segmented and just as green as the rest of him, locked in a ghoulish skull-grin as he gazes down at LoHaC.

Eridan isn't trying to blast the Lord of Time with a last ditch attack. He's just using his fastfowarded speed to stick up a pair of middle claws. Which Karkat can't argue with. If they're gonna die, he'd rather go down with somebody on the team flipping off Death. Let that be their legacy.

"Oh," a hushed voice says, as Equius's veil of obscurity drops. "He is...strong."

Never mind. Karkat needs to murder Equius before they all die. He can't let that comment stand. Karkat abandons hope of reaching Dave - he's not making much progress, anyway, since the time distortion gets worse the closer he gets - and starts grimly army crawling toward Equius.

"And he knows we're here," Rose says, her voice slow and stretched out. "Everyone, move."

Karkat should applaud her for the effort. She's trying to tough it out as though they still have a fucking chance in hell. And fuck, she's done better wrangling Vriska and Eridan than Karkat ever could. But all most of them can do is wait for a sudden crack in time to swallow them whole. Eridan glances around wildly, his eyes bugging out as he takes in Vriska's frozen pocket of time, but doesn't lower his claws to try to grab anyone and drag them to safety.

But the green, mummified fuckface turns, and raises the Golden Cuestaff of Fuck You (as Karkat has already christened it in his thinkpan) to point into the distance. Not at them. Away from LoHaC. Through the dark expanse of the Incipisphere, angled just to the right of LoLaR's greyed out orb. Or maybe the Lord of Time is pointing right at it. Karkat can't follow the line of the fuck-you stick properly because his pusher is racing in a panic to match Dave's.

The cuestaff glows with harsh burgundy light and then flares bright red as the Lord of Time slashes down. Reality doesn't crack right away, though Karkat sees John flinch hard in anticipation of it. Even though it's not aimed at them, Karkat covers his head and horns reflexively and peers up.

The darkness of the Medium between them and LoLaR sharpens and turns opaque. From Karkat's line of sight a chunk of Rose's planet vanishes behind the rip in time, which spreads too fast for light to escape it. The CRACK snaps hard as it reaches the distant Veil of meteors at a hard angle, swallowing part of the Reckoning's space debris -
And ripping open a hole in whatever lays past the edge of the Veil.

For a second, everything's creepily still; Karkat watches the ragged edges of reality fluttering around the fissure.

Rose, Eridan, and Feferi all drop and join Dave on the floor.

Something even more horrible than the Lord of Time stops testing the new hole in reality, and spills into the Medium in a susurrating rush. It's bigger than LoLar - it's bigger than Skaia - more and more pours in around the crack in time like oil spurting from a pipe. A chill runs down Karkat's posture pole. Each new gush slips and spills and warps into something new as he watches: a mouth yawns open to reveal rows of serrated teeth around a single, enormous eye, wide enough to be seen all the way across the Medium - a stream of thick black syrup twists and hardens into a ridged, thorn-studded wing - a belly riddled with honeycomb - thin, streaming veils that leave grey-white slicks of acid in their wake - twined filaments rippling with pale, sickly phosphorescence - a weirdly familiar symbol that burns through the thin membrane of a bulging throat in perfectly symmetrical curves -

And it doesn't stop. The flood of Horrorterror slows as it starts to fold in on itself, the many fluttering layers of teeth and tendrils and intestines coiling in wary waves away from the Lord of Time, but Karkat spies new branches growing upward and arching back to fill in more space above and below. It forms a dark ocean that tangles around and obscures all of that curve of the Veil, and all of it.

Absolutely all of it.

Is screaming in perfect unison.

LV: WELL.

LV: CHERUB LORD.

LV: ...GREETINGS AND DEFIANCE.

"Don't you just love it," Rose says, at normal speed, her face pressed against the floor, "when your eternal tormenter arrives and starts making congenial conversation with your other arch foe."

"It's...great. Fuckin'...love it," Eridan replies, struggling to turn his claw over so he can flip off Leviathan, too.

Karkat reaches Equius's ankles just as Equius's hands turn midnight black and start to steam with void essence. Feferi stops whimpering, and Rose lifts her head, looking pale but not dead. Karkat stands up without any trouble, which can only mean they're all moving at normal speed. Since Equius is busy shrouding them with void to muffle Leviathan's voice, Karkat (unfortunately) can't justly murder him for admiring the Lord of Time's fucking biceps. But he can go and haul Dave the rest of the way upright, put a palm over Dave's side where he senses blood pooling, and mash his awareness into Dave's veins to look for what's broken. It means he's distracted and sees everything through a haze of red, but Dave looks shittier than ever and Feferi is nursing her own instant-horror headache with a thin glimmer of fuchsia tears visible through her slitted eyes.

LV: PARDON ME IF I DO NOT PAY OBEISANCE. YOU ARE NOT MY LORD.

Rose's head jerks up. "It's doing it again," she says, alarmed. "Are you all hearing this?"

"That is so not right," John agrees. He still has his palms over his ears, but the pain has left his face; he looks at Leviathan and the Lord of Time's faceoff with dawning realization. "Rose, can you see that? I think that's a spiro-"
The Lord of Time unlocks his skeletal jaw, and starts laughing. It sounds high pitched and grating and makes time stutter again for a brief second. Karkat finds blood leaking in Dave’s abdomen and starts shoving it back into the correct channels, but it’s hard to tell what’s old damage and what was just inflicted. “Need some help,” he mutters to Feferi, who looks up, blinks away a tear that stains her cheek before drying, and nods, staggering to her feet and pressing her claw over Karkat’s.

Meanwhile, Leviathan recoils from the laughter. Not out of fear - though trying to figure out what the fuck a Horrorterror is feeling is not Karkat’s fucking job - but out of what feels like...embarrassment. A mouth-studded flower blooms through the membrane of one of the Horrorterror’s throats, and this time Karkat realizes what symbol glows through Leviathan’s skin with bleary light.

A spirograph. Unlike the rest of Leviathan’s body and the obscure, stomach-turning rune script that ripples across one flank, the spirograph stays lodged in Leviathan’s throat like a choker. Leviathan coils and swells with more mass in an anxious twist, and for an instant its thorny branches twine in a double helix.

LV: THIS ISN’T WHAT IT LOOKS LIKE. I’M NOT -

LV: BLAST.

LV: WE’re A’R’mE’n NOT O’FiSK’aTA’. WE H’A’VE N’O’QU’A’R’R’EL’ W’H’TH’I’Y’O’U’.

LV: WE’RE ME’REL’Y’N’T’G’R’O’G’H’, ON’O’R’W’AY’ T’O’N’T’REL’A’’T’ED’’V’EN’U’E’.

LV: TH’IS IS AN A’CE’T’, WHICH WE ARE ST’AT’TING F’OR’R’TH’E’ R’E’C’O’R’D.

And every single word sounds fake as fuck. Karkat never before pondered whether it’s possible to tell when a Horrorterror is blatantly lying its multiangled ass off, but...wow. Turns out he didn’t need to strain his thinkpan wondering; he just got a live demonstration. Leviathan put so much effort into making its voices sound discordant and chaotic that it came out all wrong.

"Rose," Karkat says, "what the fuck?"

"I...I’m speechless," Rose says. She and Terezi both wear identical expressions of queasiness mixed with fascination, though Terezi looking off to the left of the Lord of Time rather than straight at him. Rose’s hands curl and uncurl in her lap once. "What has happened to them? What have they done to themselves?"

The Lord of Time stops laughing. He laughed all through Leviathan's fumbling excuses and its weird forced dissonance (its? their? Karkat doesn’t know what the fuck to think), and now spins the cuestaff in one monstrous, meaty hand. It's impossible to read the Lord's expression from the vacuum sealed skin plastered to his skull. Two of Leviathan's tendrils curl up in agitation, and though one is mostly made of pebbled scales and the other is a frilled stalk, there's a weird symmetry to them.

LV: SO’ WHAT’ W’I’L’L’ I’T B’E’?

LE: YOU REEK. OF SYMMETREES.

LE: HOW DO YOU EXPECT TO FOOL ME, WHEN I HAVE ALREADY DECIDED?

The Lord of Time lowers the cuestaff, unhinges his jaw - LE: DIE.

- emits an [ENTROPIC SCREAM]. Karkat can't hear anything else over the electric, thrumming roar as the flickering white beam widens and flashes the colors of the Lord's overcoat as it lances clean through Leviathan. The Lord of Time pulses at the edges, his whole creepily muscular body wreathed in eye-searing light, and when he finally rehinges his jaw and locks it back into place with a crunch of bone, the rip in time that split the Veil has widened, and a wedge of Leviathan has been carved out of existence. There's no stench of seared calamari, no acidic blood - Leviathan eddies to one side, totally silent, with clean, unmoving edges where its convoluted form doesn't knit together.

Then Leviathan shudders, and a fresh wash of shifting ooze pours through the Veil. More than enough to make up for what was just blasted into oblivion; enough that Leviathan starts to loom dangerously close to LoLaR, its tendrils cracking and sprouting yet more teeth as it hisses.

LV: THAT...WAS UNPLEASANT OF YOU.

LV: THANK YOU, THOUGH. YOU'VE DESTROYED MOST OF THE PARTS OF ME THAT WERE FOOLISH ENOUGH TO CONTEMPLATE THINGS LIKE 'PLEASANTRIES' OR 'APPEASEMENT.'

LV: SO. SHALL WE?

LE: ROTTING GARBAGE. DIE. DIE. DIE.

The Lord of Time raises the cuestaff and transforms it into a golden assault rifle-kind. The blowback as he begins to fire on Leviathan in a rain of cueballs knocks everyone's feet out from under them on LoHaC, but the Lord starts to advance on Leviathan, ignoring the kickback.

"I don't know what I expected," Rose says over the rattling and Leviathan's enraged shrieks. "But it was...not that."

Karkat breathes for the first time in what feels like forever. "Seriously," he agrees, leaning a little too much of his weight on Dave, who grunts in protest. Feferi's ice cold grip over Karkat's claw is numbing his skin, but Dave doesn't feel like he's bleeding internally anywhere Karkat can sense it. Congratulations - they achieved something.

...How the fuck is this affecting Aradia? Great, something else for Karkat to fucking worry about.

"That really isn't something you see every day," Kanaya says.

John lands on the roof with a tiny tremor in his step; Karkat looks at him sharply, but John shakes it off and scrubs his hair wildly as though turning his head into a nest of cowlicks will help the world make sense again. "If they're fighting each other, they're not trying to kill us. So tentatively, I want to say this is...good? Question mark?" he says, once he has finished rearranging his hair into a tangled mess that'll take ages to comb through.

"Don't underestimate Leviathan's ability to multitask. If it still can. This is all deeply troubling." Rose closes her eyes and retrieves her phone. She sets a hand on Equius's forearm, and Equius looks up from the void crushed between his palms to blink at her. "Thank you, by the way. I'll leave a message for Jade, whenever she arrives. Hopefully she doesn't enter in the middle of - that." Rose shakes her head at Leviathan and the Lord of Time, looking troubled.

"Travelling in between planets is going to be hazardous." Kanaya grimaces, shading her eyes with a claw as Leviathan unleashes a bleary white stream of radiant, acidic puke on the Lord of Time. "LoLaR may be unreachable. Venturing that close..."
"I don't think I have a choice. Cetus was very clear that we need something from there." When Equius mumbles something through the gathering void, Rose obligingly angles herself so he can reach her voidy jewelry. It's harder to read expressions when Equius pulls this kind of shit, but Karkat's pretty sure Rose looks rueful. "Damn. The best laid plans...well. The passably mediocre plans."

"You're still going to Prospit?" John asks, which makes no sense until Karkat spies Vriska trying to fly away. He can't exactly accuse her of sneaking around, since her outfit is almost as neon orange as Oriole, but she didn't say a word as she started to float off again, and for Vriska? That's a massive fucking flashing warning sign in bright red that screams, 'TIME FOR SNEAKY SERKET IRON FIRE FUCK YOU TIME!' Good catch on John's part.

Vriska barely pauses; the light from Dave's planet light up her yellow and orange outfit like it's on fire, and for a second she looks warmblooded. It's a weird look on her. "Look. I like to win. You want to know how we win?"

"Do tell, Vriska," Terezi says, leaning hard on her cane as she grinds her palms on the top. Her teal wings sway slightly in the drafts of hot air billowing up from the lava around them, but she doesn't shake them out to fly after Vriska.

Vriska cocks her head to the side, an easy smirk ticking her cheek. "We wait until those two have kicked the shit out of each other, and then kill both of them," she says, sweetly. "And meanwhile, I'll deal with Noir. Easy as pie. I'll handle everything and get alllllll the levels for it."

"All of them?" John says, with a perfectly straight face. Dumbass.

On the one claw, Vriska wants to fuck off and fight Noir. Again. On the other, things are about as fucked as they can get, already, so who really gives a fuck if Noir tries to follow her back to LoHaC. Karkat certainly doesn't. Kanaya exchanges a weary look with him and Rose, and Karkat thinks her resigned expression looks just as pained as his own. "We could have ended world hunger by shoveling your fucking insane excess amounts of self-importance down everyone's throats," Karkat comments; it's half hyperbole, half utter certainty. Between Vriska and Eridan they could create a perpetual motion machine fueled by ego and questionable life choices.

Vriska sticks out her tongue at Karkat for second, before bullet-proof self-confidence overtakes her again. She tosses her hair over her shoulder one last time, and then snaps her claws. Something dark appears in her hand and Karkat tenses, but she just uses it to tie her hair back up in a high ponytail. Some chunks of hair escape the tie to frame her face, but Vriska's already lean face still looks sharper with her hair up. "I get things done, Karkat. What can I say?" she says, letting the tie snap down on her hair with a twist of her hand. She waves a hand dismissively at Eridan, then fixates on Terezi.

"Feel free to blow this popsicle stand whenever you feel like growing a spine again, Eridan. Well, Py-ro-pe? You in?"

Eridan hesitates, and then shakes his head. His fins press close to the sides of his head - but he still shakes his head. "No. I'll figure out where I'm going myself in a minute." He brandishes void jewelry at Equius with a defiant pout.

Terezi strokes her chin - then she inhales deeply, and bares her teeth at Vriska. "Oh, you're in a feisty mood! As fun as some aggravation sounds...I choose cherry hot sauce planet over honey mustard!"

Vriska swells with impending pissiness. "Whatever! I'm not waiting on anyone!" she snaps, and then pelts off into the sky. Karkat can't tell whether LoHaC has an atmosphere separating it from the rest of the Medium - the whole Incipisphere is rife with broken physics and breathable air and free Wi-Fi wherever you need it, a-fucking-pparently - but she vanishes into the dark of the Medium's interplanetary space really fucking fast. She's aimed in the right direction to reach Prospit, but that doesn't mean she won't get sidetracked.

"Should we let her go solo?" Dave rasps; Karkat nearly jumps a foot in the air, and the smug bastard has the audacity to smirk at Karkat as he pulls out of Feferi's grip. Dave digs his closed hand into his side for a second, the knuckles dragging hard over the spot where Karkat remembers sealing an internal hemorrhage. Then he straightens his shoulders and shoves his hands into his pockets. Karkat gives him a suspicious onceover with his powers, but Dave feels as solid and not-bleeding-to-death as Karkat's powers can detect. Feferi puts a careful hand on Dave's shoulder - she's still glowing a faint fuchsia, her brows furrowed in intense concentration - and also allows Equius to shuffle over and start checking on her jewelry while she does something to Dave. "Aradia and Sollux might be able to handle her alone, but not with Noir breathing down their necks. We're blending this shit in one high quality ass ninja blender, and it's gonna start hitting the wall soon," Dave says, finally pulling out a fresh pair of shades to replace his shitty cracked pair. He swaps them out so fast Karkat misses it, but the renewed bastard chic doesn't quite make up for the fact that Dave's on the end of a Feferi and Equius train. "Hang on, which of you is texting me while we're all standing literally right here?"

"You underestimate Aradia, coolkid. And Sollux isn't too shabby when he gets his dander up!"
Terezi says, lifting her cane and bouncing the end of it on the edge of the roof a few times. Karkat wants to edge further away from the edge of the roof; just watching Terezi flirt with lava reminds him just how fragile their current perch is. Then Terezi scrunches her nose up. "And yet, underestimating Vriska would be worse. Hrm."

Equius cuts her off with a flat, "I will go," as he finishes adjusting Feferi's void jewelry. Feferi smiles and thanks him, and Equius immediately spins and marches toward Nepeta at top speed, sweating hard enough that he leaves dark spots on the roof. Karkat can hear the sound of teeth grinding from here. "Nepeta, we are leaving," he says.

Nepeta, sprawled out on the back of Tavros's rocketchair as she fiddles with her clawkind, looks up from where she's been quietly conversing with Roxy and blinks wide green eyes at Equius. "We are?" She retracts her clawkind specibus and sits up straight with a stretch of her arms, glaring at Equius. Tavros squirms a little in his seat as Equius pops open one of the chair's compartments and starts manhandling a fistful of wires, while Roxy starts breathily trying to whistle as she sidesteps back toward the other scratch kids. It's a pretty shitty whistle, but Karkat feels like a fucking asshole for thinking that almost as soon as he does. "Will you actually let us help? Or are mew gonna be dumb about it again? I'm onto you, Equius!" Nepeta shouts, smacking her palms down on the back of Tavros's seat.

Equius continues to rewire the rocketchair, impassive; the burst of anxious sweat from talking to Feferi appears to have already died down. Or Equius is just becoming harder to focus on; Karkat catches his attention sliding away from the blueblood against his will. "We will see. I do not trust you to remain here or in any other secure location, so it is better to keep you within range if we are all in danger."

Nepeta's smile sharpens and she flings herself forward to tackle hug Equius. "Awww! Finally!" With a firm stroke of Equius's hair, Nepeta falls back onto the rocketchair and starts hopping from one foot to another. "Let's ride, Tavros!" she says, her eyes bright and glittering like a cat lusus that has a feathery quackbeast toy in its sights, and someone who might be Equius shuts the compartment on the rocketchair with a very careful, deliberate nudge to avoid denting the metal.

"Right! Um, we're going now, Rose," Tavros says, whipping around to look anxiously toward Rose; Nepeta ducks the swing of his wide horns with ease. "So that, uh, you can update the spreadsheet."
"It shall be done," Rose says, her smile dry as bedrock, and then Tavros revs the rocketchair's engine. Nepeta latches onto the back of his seat with her regular claws; an increasingly obscure presence with a faint, muffled pulse Karkat can barely trace rises into the air in much the way a very heavy rock shouldn't, and the rocketchair zooms after Vriska at a more cautious pace. There's a judder in the rocketchair's flight path when another distorted electric roar bursts out of the Lord of Time's mouth, but Tavros yanks the controls to the side and the rocketchair veers hard to the left. They vanish a lot faster than Vriska did; Karkat can't tell if it's because Vriska's flashy as fuck, or because Tavros and Nepeta are travelling with someone invested in keeping them hidden from prying eyes. Probably both.

Which just leaves...a shitton of them. The scratch kids alone are a problem. Jane is alert and on guard, her specibus spinning slowly in a very Feferi-esque holding pattern as her pale eyes dart around the roof, but Dirk looks fatigued, Jake's going slowly cross-eyed trying to take in all of LoHaC and the raging battle across the Medium at the same time, and Roxy is massaging her throat as her eyelids start to droop. Who knows where Strider the eldest fucking hared off to, but if he didn't have any plans to drag the scratch kids off, that means it's all their problem.

"Where else do we need to go?" Feferi asks. She's scratching her arm with a distracted expression, hard enough to leave light grey lines along her skin where her sleeves don't cover it. Which is a lot - she has altered her god tier outfit down to the bare minimum to deal with the heat, apparently, so that she's down to a tan halter top with green wavy lines all down one side. "Weren't we supposed to hear more from -"

Dave holds up a finger. "Hold that thought. I'm getting sweet intel here." He's busy tapping on his phone at typical Dave-speed - a sight that is so fucking ordinary that Karkat didn't really pay attention to it. Except no one else here has their phones out, so fuck only knows -

"Who the fuck are you texting?" Karkat says, immediately trying to look over Dave's shoulder. The mention of 'intel' causes Rose and Terezi's heads to snap toward Dave like magnets, but Dave's in his texting zone. He mutters something that might be 'It's all in the memo, just backread,' but his voice trails off halfway through. Karkat rolls his eyes and starts reading off Dave's screen. John's trailing hood dangles in his peripheral vision like a blue tail from up above, but John rests his elbows on top of Dave's head this time, just as curious.

What Karkat reads is just as dumb as he should have expected.

HS: I would like to state.
HS: For the record.
HS: That I am uncomfortable giving you an open line of communication with me.
HS: But these are uncomfortable times, and the Lord of Time is afoot.
TG: who tf is blowing up my phone
TG: who the shit are you
HS: The Stormspeaker has informed me that you are as talkative as ever.
HS: Which bodes ill for any attempts at concise communication.
TG: well shit man
TG: glad to be a disappointment to someone i've never met
TG: except watch me shred some sweet waves of not giving a shit and olly off the handle of this mixed metaphor
TG: who even the hell are you
HS: I am Hephaestus, you phenomenal ass.
TG: oh
TG: oh shit
TG: what's gone wrong now
TG: apart from like everything
TG: were here btw don't know if you know or care
HS: I am aware of your presence.
HS: I am also aware that we are rapidly running out of time.
HS: Neither Typhheus nor Echidna are willing or capable of leaving their duties to speak with you.
HS: So the task falls to me.
TG: that's rough man
TG: must be tough for them being giant snake monsters or whatever TG: making you do everything since you're the only guy with opposable thumbs TG: do you even get paid overtime
HS: The Stormspeaker warned me of this persuasive tangent. We shall not speak of it.
HS: He is occupied with the presence of something threatening his land, at the moment. He may require the presence of his Heir soon, if I am not mistaken.
HS: The Frostmother and I are both on the badly misnamed Land of Frost and Frogs.
TG: let me guess
TG: snakes
HS: I have suggested changing it to the Land of Serpents and Snow.
HS: Unfortunately, Skaia is not amenable to nonessential orison or intercession at this time.
TG: to be fair how would you pronounce that shit
TG: bc john is already stuck with lowass or whatever depending on who's talking TG: losass would match the general ass theme i guess but shitting hell
HS: This.
HS: Is also a tangent.
TG: you do have an ass right
TG: i feel like i didn't clear that up with typhheus before the whole kicking ass debate
TG: oh fuck does skeleton man up there have an ass
HS: I am placing a moratorium on this conversation.
HS: I am with Echidna. We have restored as much of the Forge on LoFaF as possible, and it should be functional enough to serve for the Final Alchemy.
HS: However, we still require the grist from our Hoards on LoHaC and LoWaS.
HS: For various reasons, LoLaR's Hoard now contains the recipe necessary for the Final Alchemy, rather than grist.
HS: All caches but Typhheus's have already been released. Bring them to the Forge. Do not get sidetracked.
TG: are you allowed to do that HS: Oh for Skaia's sake.
TG: like i mean
TG: bounce over to echidnas house
TG: how long has that been a thing
TG: also were not doing the fancy letter things anymore with the land names
TG: need to know so i don't look like a scrub
HS: Since she has lived in a Forge.
TG: hang on is scrub a viable game name pls respond
HS: She could also theoretically come reside on LoHaC.
TG: okay so no fancy letters cool
HS: But since the Beat Mesa no longer exists, there was little point staying there. LoHaC is not a Forge.
HS: It is your hell.
TG: ...
TG: uh
TG: i feel uncomfortable now
HS: Good.
-- Hephaestus [HS] has left the chat! --

CG: WHAT THE FRESH FUCKING HELL WAS THAT.
TG: we're standing right next to each other dude
TG: you literally just had your hands on my person

CG: WATCH THIS! WATCH ME SHOUT AT YOU IN PERSON AND IN THE MEMO AT THE SAME TIME!
CG: WHY DO I NEVER THINK OF THIS INGENIOUS TECHNIQUE SOONER?! PAST KARKAT WAS FUCKING USELESS. AN INFERIOR MODEL. I'VE EVOLVED PAST THAT POINT. SOON I'LL BE THE APEX YELLING PREDATOR, WHILE THE REST OF YOU ARE STILL SQUEAKING LIKE GRUBS AS YOU WRIGGLE OUT OF THE PRIMORDIAL SHITLAKE.

GC: IS THAT 4 CH4LL3NG3? >:]
CG: NO. YOU DON'T EVEN YELL, TEREZI, YOU JUST CAPSLOCK SO EVERYTHING'S EVEN.

GC: THAT 1S 4 CH4LL3NG3!

AT: DO I GET TO PARTICIPATE, OR AM I DISQUALIFIED FOR REASONS, BECAUSE I LEFT EARLY, AA: so whos coming to help me on prospit
AA: and whos coming to help me on lofaf :)
GA: We Get A Choice Of Two Aradias?
AA: indeed you do!

GA: Truly We Live In Remarkable Times. I May Participate In Snake Breeding Duties At A Later Point.

AA: l0f4f isn't urgent yet until rose gets the recipe
AA: doctor lalonde and her assistants are here to help with the preliminaries!
AA: i wouldn't say no to some adventurers interested in traversing a snowy snake infested jungle planet though

GT: :o

GT: At last my time has come!

"Guys, seriously?" John says, clapping his hands together in a solid, loud smack. The sudden noise breaks Karkat out of memo mode. Karkat isn't sure exactly what he has been yelling for the past minute (because it's apparently hard to keep track of what's text versus what's vocal when you're completing a yelling x2 combo) but he's sure it was fucking fantastic and articulate. "Places to go! Two evil guys battling for supremacy right on top of our collective butt!"

"Who's going where? Speak now, or forever hold your peace," Rose adds. "LoLaR here, LoHaC with Dave, I assume." She raises a finger. Kanaya shuffles closer, casting furtive looks around as though daring anyone to question her. Their collective lack of self-preservation instinct might be in the toilet, but Karkat doesn't think anyone's that far gone.

Jake's hand shoots up before anyone else can get a word in edgewise. "I want snake adventures! I won't hear any buts about it!" he says, with disturbingly Jade-like enthusiasm. He shakes Roxy's shoulder with his free hand, bouncing on his heels, and Roxy starts nodding along in time with the bounces, her lips parting in an open smile.

"Do we get to call people for our teams? Because I want Karkat and Terezi on Team LoHaC," Dave says, looking up from his phone with a serious expression. Karkat can see the reams and reams of red text from here, and no sign of any responding text from Hephaestus, which means there will be a pile of classic Dave word-vomit to scroll through the next time any of them deal with that particular memo. Joy. Moreover, Dave's serious expression means absolutely fuck all, because when he's wearing sunglasses it looks identical to his default expression. Just like 90% of his other facial contortions, or lack thereof. Karkat only knows that he's being serious because, sadly, and to Karkat's infinite regret, being infected with the dubious gift of Friendship means that he's caught on to Dave's emotional tells.

Then the words register in his stalling thinkpan. Karkat sputters. Terezi arches an eyebrow and taps her cane one last time on the edge of the building, but doesn't contradict Dave. Karkat should know better than to look for help from Terezi's corner; she lives for this kind of shit, and trolling Karkat (in the proverbial sense) is a fucking staple of their interactions.

...Fuck, no. Just...fucking no. Being trapped on a lava land road trip with Dave and Terezi? Karkat doesn't hate himself enough (yet) to fall for that kind of ploy. They'd literally talk and irony and 'coolkid' him to death, and two out of those three things shouldn't even be verbs! "Who says you get me, fucker? No, you don't get to call teams! I just decided that right now this very second," he tells Dave, exasperated. "Recruit someone else for Team LoHaC - I'm on the opposite of that team!"

Dave shakes his phone meaningfully. Karkat resists the urge to seize everyone's fucking mobile devices and pitch them into the lava, but it's a close call. "I have it on future authority that you're stuck with me. Sorry dude. TZ?"

"You can shove temporal inevitability up your ass, Strider -" Karkat starts, while Terezi chimes in with a loud, cackling, "Why not? Sounds like fun. Your whole planet smells of spicy hot cherries - I have decided!"

Dave nods as Karkat starts to throttle the air in frustration. The air puffs a cool huff across his face in a quiet shoosh, because of course it does. "The Land of Heat and Cherries, cool. Oriole, you know where Hephaesdouche's lair is?"

Oriole wasn't even fucking involved in this conversation. Karkat's heated muttering, interspersed with the occasional pointed swear word, gets thoroughly ignored despite that fact. "I can't point to it on a map, and I'm not sure how much good trying to retrace our steps would do," Oriole says, looking up from where he's sitting cross legged by the edge of the roof. He's shed a bunch of obscuring layers of clothing in the heat, so his wings are hanging limp on either side of him. Out of everyone here, he looks the most like he could catch fire at any second; every neon orange part of him reflects LoHaC's red ambient light, and since literally all of him is neon orange... "I mean, have you looked around? Great googly moogly, this place is going to shit," he says, flapping an orangetaloned claw at the landscape.

"Thanks for volunteering as co-navigator then," Dave says, in a sterling display of not giving a fuck. Oriole shrugs in resignation.

"- and I'm still not going," Karkat says loudly.

"Dude, you have to. Come on, I'm not messing with you, I swear," Dave says. Karkat rolls his eyes, because Dave could have said pretty much anything else and sounded less suspicious, and veers off toward John's current floating position a couple yards away. Terezi turns on a dime and starts prowling after him, gracing Dave with a single pat on the shoulder, which Karkat interprets as a pretty clear nonverbal 'I'll grab the nubby one,' being communicated between fucking ironic conspirators. Karkat picks up the pace, but he's closer to John than Terezi is to him. Thank fuck.

But it looks like John floated off on his own because he was lost in thought; Dave's team bullshit must have flowed right past him. Instead, John's frowning to himself, his mouth pursed and his head cocked to one side. Seeing John look troubled isn't exactly an uncommon thing, lately, despite Karkat's efforts to be a not-awful moirail, but right now he just...looks distracted. Like he's listening to something Karkat can't hear.
Which is, again, not a fucking uncommon thing. Karkat stomps over, because his best chance to escape Dave's unending roller coaster ride of outrageous shenanigans is probably to glue himself to John's side and go find out what Gamzee's up to. Time bullshit can wait. "Please save me from the resident coolfucks," Karkat says. He undoes his jacket partway (none of these fuckers will catch him dead shedding layers, not even in this sweltering heat) but even that doesn't make much difference.

John twitches and blinks - his eyes glow often enough when he's doing windy shit that Karkat actually missed that they were glowing just now, until the light dies off and leaves just his normal eye color. He smiles at Karkat a little lopsidedly, but the corners of his eyes are still crinkled with distant confusion. "John? What's up?" Karkat asks, frowning back.

John's the opposite of sneaky, the blunt little nerd. "Me?" he says, a little too loudly to be subtle. "Oh, yeah! Sorry, just thinking. I'll go and check on Gamzee, alright?"

Karkat's sentiments exactly. He nods deeply; he can figure out whatever's set John off on their way to LoWaS, and everything will be hunky fucking dory. "I'll come with you. Dave can suck my shameglobes -" Karkat breaks off. "What. What's with that face?"

"What face?" John says, while still making the exact face. It's some kind of troubled wince, but Karkat can't pin it down any more than that. John also starts to float a little to one side, and a nervous laugh escapes the corner of his mouth as he avoids eye contact.

Karkat closes the distance and catches John's face with both hands, pushing his cheeks together. "That face you're making right now as we speak, dumbass," he says, irritably. He's so very fucking tempted to pull out his phone and take a picture so John can see what he's talking about, but by mashing his cheeks Karkat has already ruined it. Great. Fantastic.

"I don't know what face you're talking about. I can't see my own face, y'know -" John says, in a lecture voice reminiscent of Rose at her most pedantic. Incredible.

Karkat cuts him off before the silly argument can lurch into unforgivably ridiculous territory. "John. What. Is. This face?"

Behind Karkat, Terezi snickers. She lurks way too close for comfort, and is probably just itching for a chance to haul Karkat back to participate in Team Lava Bathing Dipshit bonding time. Overhearing this silliness is just the neon pink icing on the cherry cupcake for her.

John's shoulders slump, and he looks away. "Tyheus called. You should probably stay with Dave," he admits, his voice low. Karkat feels the faint smile falling off John's face under his palms, and shifts his claws at once to stroke John's cheek.

First Rose starts acting fucking weird, and now this. Karkat would ask why it's always these two, but then again, Dave and Jade have their own unique set of Game-related problems. "Why. Are you planning to do something incredibly stupid and life-threatening? Are you trying to protect me or some crock like that?" Karkat asks, fast and too sharp. John scrunches up his face in a new grimace, and Karkat starts patting his face with renewed vigor. "Oh, god. Tell me Tyheus isn't offering some bullshit choice, and is trying to just fucking fight you. If he's being a douchefucker, tell him to fuck off!"

John sighs, tilting his head slightly into one of Karkat's palms. "I don't thiink so. I think he's just being an asshole on principle," he says. This doesn't answer the actual question at all. "But if Dave thinks you need to stay with him for time reasons, we should probably do that, right?" he adds, switching gears in the one way guaranteed to distract Karkat. Terezi crows victoriously and starts circling in for the kill, leaning in on Karkat's left side with a shit-eating grin.
"I'm pretty sure half the time he's just fucking around and making that up whenever he claims a future him told him to do it," Karkat argues.

But no dice. "Haha, I don't want to risk it, though," John says as he touches Karkat's face with one hand and smiles like a total sop. It's a two for one combo. Holy fuck. "It'll be fine! Promise."

And Karkat is fucking weak. The weakest piece of romantic shit on this entire roof. John just has to look at him like that, and his thinkpan turns into idiotic jell-o. "...Fine. Dave can have his time bullshit excuse. Bring Gamzee back so I can yell at him in person, okay?" he says, after several long seconds of being completely fucking overwhelmed. Terezi's snickering graduates to sniggering, and Karkat shoots her a death glare for a split second before turning back to John. The death glare might still be in place. A little. For another split second.

Long enough for John to see it, and slap his free hand over his mouth to hide the instant giggle. "Will do!" he says, with a wobble of laughter in his voice. Karkat tries to smooth the death glare back out into something equally soppy, but the best he manages is an eye roll. Moment gone. Whatever. "Be safe, okay?"

"John is the worst. The worst. Karkat can barely talk around this inconvenient lump building up in his throat; it is entirely John's fault. "Yeah. You too," Karkat mutters, mostly to their shoes.

...John's shoes have turned a cheery, sunshiny shade of yellow, for some reason, which is weird enough that Karkat's embarrassingly sappy expression snaps back into a befuddlement right up until Terezi hooks him around the throat and starts hauling him back toward Dave. Karkat glances back at John, opening his mouth to yell one last question, but John's shoes are back to normal. Which means Karkat would just make an ass of himself. John waves one last time, his expression wavering, and then floats off to the scratch kids. Presumably, they're in need of a lift, but Karkat can't pay attention to literally every single conversation that happens around here. There's too many fuckers to keep track off, even with conversation hogs like Vriska gone.

"Where the fuck is your custodian?" Karkat asks, for lack of anything more productive to do apart from yell once Terezi finishes escorting him back to the edge of the roof. Oriole stands up as they approach, fluttering his wings so that they catch more red light, while Dave gives Rose one last fistbump of solidarity before she, Feferi, Kanaya, and Eridan all leave the roof.

"Lurking, probably," Dave says, with a boneless shrug of his shoulders. As the roof empties out more, the sound of lava roiling and popping below grows louder in Karkat's ears. He hasn't heard the crash of another metal structure toppling over in a while, now, but he still can't shake the feeling that the building they're on isn't long for this world. "Don't know if you've noticed, but when shit hits the fan, he tends to lurk and jump you when you least expect it. And set up creepy puppet traps." Dave shakes his head and stuffs his hands into his pockets. "My bet's on him either following us, or planning weird shit with Equius. At least Momlond lets us do our own shit without hovering..."

Karkat squirms free of Terezi's steering grip and glowers at her. Terezi sticks her tongue out, which is a fucking threat, and Karkat pushes past Dave with reckless abandon to get out of licking range. Dave's arms pinwheel for a second until he catches his balance again. "Yeah, when did they team up, again?" Karkat asks, as the full implications of Equius and Ambrose Strider working together on literally anything starts to hit him. "If they're being infected with the mutual lurking disease known as friendship, I'm never going to stop laughing at you," he informs Dave.

Dave stares at Karkat in almost undisguised horror. "I try not to think too hard about that kind of shit. Why did you make me think of that shit, Karkat?" he says, smacking his face with a hand.

Oriole digs his claws into one knee, then lifts his head. He looks aggrieved and disgusted at the same time. As he shakes out his wings, he seizes Dave by the shoulders and yanks him around. "You guys want to gossip?" he asks, his voice deadly soft, "or do you want to cross half the lava planet with only two people who can fly and only our shit tier memory to guide us? Because let me tell you, suddenly, I am a lot more on board with lava planet escapades if it means you two never bring that up again."

"You inspire so much confidence. Really. It's amazing. So glad I'm on this shitshow of a team," Karkat says. A loud snap, like a cross between bubblegum popping and an eardrum popping on an airplane bursts out below, and Karkat glares down at the lava irritably. The pop of lava paints the side of the metal beams below with molten rock, and for a second, looking down at it, Karkat feels woozy - his and Dave's lands are too similar. And now that he's thought it once, he can't stop thinking that maybe Terezi and Dave are both wrong. Maybe it's not molten rock he's looking at, but a planet of boiling hot red blood and gears.

God, he's getting fucking morbid in his old age. He's not even old yet, but holy fuck.

"Oh, pipe down, you three," Terezi says, elbowing Dave and Karkat at the same time to reach the roof's edge. Belatedly, Karkat realizes she's offering them each an arm to float on - in truly obnoxious Terezi fashion. He steels himself to ignore it as long as possible, but eventually she elbows him again. The picture of fucking subtlety. "Don't worry. With investigative skills like mine and the coolkids' questionable memory, finding the Hoard will be a cinch. In my experience they don't open unless you kill a denizen, but I'm not one to turn up my nose at a freebie!" she says, fixing her red shades so they sit mostly straight on her nose.

Below, the lava settles - and then goes dark. Karkat twitches, and in the time it takes him to blink and refocus on the lava sea, the patch of molten rock that just popped at them shrivels and darkens into a hard black crust. Tiny craters of hot lava still pockmark the surface in some places, but the darkness keeps spreading across the red lava flows like cracks in a pane of glass. Karkat shifts uneasily, and looks out over the landscape again.

...Suddenly, he wonders what Terezi was smelling and Oriole was looking at, earlier. He wants to know if it's just his shitty eyes playing tricks on him, or if LoHaC legitimately looks...darker.

"Yeah, yeah. Let's just find it before Fuckface McDeathshead notices us again," Karkat says, uneasy creeping into his stomach and tightening like a vice.

---

Rose can see LoLaR from LoHaC. She knows, objectively, what it will look like up close.

She also has the perfectly acceptable excuse of keeping track of many super-powerful, rowdy friends as they scatter across a shattering solar system to complete tasks with varying mortality rates.

Solar system? Skaian system? Hm. Regardless of terminology, Rose is at least nominally in charge of encouraging people to check in and to cooperate with each other. A different person might have cracked down and forced each member of their Game team to bend to her will, but the fact is that there are too many unpredictable, rebellious elements for her to try to crush them. The most she dares do is gently punt their whirling vexations toward productive goals, and hope that they all continue on the most fortuitous paths. Teamwork is what is happening, here, in theory, but Rose suspects she's reached the limit of how far she can nudge Vriska along. The ceruleanblood's edging dangerously close to confronting Rose outright, and if that happens Rose doesn't know if she can salvage the situation. As long as she's focused on fighting Noir, they'll be able to account for her, but after that – ?
Moreover, Rose has both Gamzee and Equius to contend with. She can’t see Equius's most fortuitous future with any degree of confidence, and Gamzee is more of pure chaos in her mind's eye. She trusts Equius more so than she does Gamzee as far as 'going off the goddamn rails;' is concerned, but there's no way for her to predict the consequences of either trolls' actions.

The other unpredictable element joins Rose's spelunking team. So at the very least, she'll have all her eyes on him. Eridan and Feferi both look thoroughly parched in LoHaC's heat and home in on Rose with thirsty eyes as Dave and Karkat scuffle over calling teams. "Water planet?" Feferi says, less a question and more of a hopeful appeal. Her arms are now covered in pale scratch marks where the dry skin flakes off. Eridan has a similar patch on his neck under his left ear. At this rate, they're going to need a gallon of lotion to rehydrate their skin, and Rose doubts that her planet is going to be particularly forthcoming in that regard. Eridan hasn't shifted his god tier clothing to adjust for the dry heat; Rose wonders just how long it'll take him to realize he could probably will himself to cool off.

Well. Depending on the state of LoLaR, Rose could have a worse team. Two seadwellers, herself, and Kanaya against whatever's left of her land? It could be much, much worse. Locating Cetus's lair may involve delving into the ocean, and if Leviathan left any of itself behind, the water won't be safe.

After a quiet discussion (relatively speaking), Karkat and John part, and John heads over to the scratch kids. Jane relaxes a fraction when John reaches them, and after a cheerful greeting, John scoops them up, waves at Rose, and vanishes into a stream of blue wind. The sight makes Rose blink; the Breeze is totally visible in a way the normal wind isn't, here in the Medium. It reminds her of John's mindscape, in a way.

However, John also left without mentioning his destination. If he's staying with the scratch kids on LoFaF, Rose will eat her hood. Rose pinches the bridge of her nose and flips through her phone to a private chat, to see if she can still contact him whilst he's incorporeal. A lack of a physical body has never really stopped any of them before.

```
TT: John? Sorry, I missed where you were going.
EB: haha, sorry! didn't mean to be spookily mysterious.
EB: lofaf to drop these guys off, and then lowas!
TT: Thank you.
TT: You're going to retrieve Gamzee?
EB: yeah, and do whatever dumb stuff typhus wants me to do.
EB: hopefully i won't screw up too bad like a goofball.
TT: You don't. You won't.
EB: :)
TT: Now. I believe that I'm off to obtain an obscure recipe for snake-based, reality-creating life. It should be fascinating.
EB: finding some weird magic book for snake alchemy does seem like it's right up your alley :P
TT: What can I say? My avarice for the inscrutable. It is limitless.
EB: good luck getting to lolar!
EB: they still seem pretty distracted but…
TT: The issue is going to be one of stray bullets, so to speak.
EB: yeah…
```

When Rose looks up, they're the last ones left on the roof. Eridan and Feferi are standing an awkwardly obvious distance apart from each other. Eridan stares at the floor like it has personally wronged him, and Feferi fans herself with a handful of her layered skirt, desperation growing keener in her eye the longer they linger here. "I would advise keeping the wings away," Rose says to them, while Kanaya wraps an arm around her waist. "With how close we're going to be to Leviathan and the Lord of Time, we don't want to attract any extra attention." Rose would question why Sburb felt the need to endow troll players with glittery, sparkling wing trails in the first place, but it would come very low on her question list, which is predominately made up of larger existential questions such as 'Why?' and 'What in the world were you thinking?' and 'What made you think any of this was necessary?'

All very important questions. The glitter-trails are only middling tier, in comparison.

Feferi snaps hers away with a sigh, but brightens up again as she kicks off the roof and starts floating away from LoHaC. Eridan's wings folds away without a sound and he kicks the roof one last sullen time before taking off at the same time Rose begins to lift Kanaya away. The building jolts sharply to one side the instant their feet leave the surface, and Kanaya's grip digs into Rose's side as the metal struts all warp and skew around before collapsing into the back crust of the lava sea. Rose does a mental tally - reflexively checks her own spreadsheet - but no, no one should be left in there. Some abandoned toothbrushes might have met a molten end, just now, but no people. "Well, so much for that," Kanaya says, fiercely staring down Eridan as they rapidly ascend into the dark of Medium space.

Eridan pouts back, still sullen. "Don't look at me. I was the one willin' it to hold up for the past five minutes. Those support beams wanted to give out right after we slapped a buildin' on them."

---

[x]

Rose remembers the Land of Light and Rain. Magenta, cyan, yellow, oversaturated to the point of burning one's eyes from their sockets. The islands and villages scattered across the brilliant sea were marginally less painful to look at: pastel pink and lilac marble and white, chalky sand. Rain poured down from heavy golden clouds in endless streams; Rose always expected the water to feel like glossy, thick syrup, just from the unnatural color of it, but whenever she flew through a cloudburst on her way to blow up her next destination, it always felt like a gentle sprinkle of light falling on her shoulders. The water was barely substantial enough to dampen her hair. Sometimes, when the light hit the chalk sand at the correct angle, the land would burn like white fire, and Rose would blast the sand away so she could continue to disassemble the island and extract the land's secrets without going blind.

They reach LoLaR with relatively little incident. Rose has them skirt close to Skaia, close enough to pick out the details of the deep brown cracks in the Battlefield's surface, and they continue until the bulk of the Land of Light and Rain stands between them and the on-going battle. Leviathan consumes all of the backdrop, a writhing mass of tentacles that launches crackling black-and-purple orbs of destructive magic at the Lord of Time, but the Lord himself is hidden behind LoLaR from this angle. Occasionally another roar will erupt, and ugly green and red and orange light will play over Leviathan's many-angled surface before another crack in time rips through a chunk of the Horrorterror. Sometimes the chunk drifts back and rejoins Leviathan; other times, the chunk will vanish entirely into the gulf where reality no longer knits together. But no matter how much mass Leviathan loses trying to smash the Lord of Time with borrowed meteors, more mass pours in through the Veil. It never seems to end.

And not once as they approach the greyed out, dim remains of LoLaR does Leviathan reach out to Rose's mind. Total radio silence. Eridan is the only one to nervously toy with his void-laced jewelry, but Feferi looks nonplussed, and then relieved as their group dives toward LoLaR. "As long as the Lord of Time stays pointed in that direction, I don't think the cracks will spread to LoLaR just yet," Rose observes, tracing the spreading cracks with her fingers spread out in a fan. Looking in the direction of the battle makes her stomach lurch; the combination of Leviathan's innate horror and the Lord of Time's spreading, abyssal cracks in time make for an unsettling sight. "But Leviathan…Like I said, just because it's distracted with that fight doesn't mean all of it is distracted."

"It called itself I," Eridan says, quietly. "That's not right, for them. That's not what those extrofathating bastards say."

Rose suspects that everyone has noticed that, by now. Some, like Vriska, might not particularly care about the inner workings of a Horrorterror's many minds, but the subject is relevant to almost everyone here. It makes her even more uneasy. "So I've noticed. I don't know what it could mean, though. Horrorterrors are hiveminds. If they lose that plurality, are they still a Horrorterror in the strictest sense?" Rose trails off.

Kanaya shakes her head. "I don't whether that thought is reassuring, or incredibly concerning. I would like to stop thinking it, if everyone is in favor," she says, her expression troubled. Rose concurs whole-heartedly, and they settle back into uneasy silence.

Plurality or no, Rose can't believe that Leviathan would stop haunting them so easily. All of them bar Kanaya have been grimdark or grimlight in the recent past, and while Leviathan doesn't appear to be losing, it isn't annihilating the Lord of Time, either. It should be reaching for any advantage it can take. Leviathan shrieks chaos, and the next time crack splinters off at a wild angle, cutting through an empty section of the Medium rather than the Horrorterror. An impressive feat. But the shriek sounds…forced. Artificial.

Something's deeply, deeply wrong with Leviathan. Rose can't tell if that's a good thing or a bad thing. It's something she doesn't understand, and that might get them all killed.
"Where's your denizen's cave?" Feferi asks, fluttering her wings out as they reach the point where gravity starts to reassert itself, and they all switch from flying up toward LoLaR to floating down onto its surface. From a distance, LoLaR looked almost entirely greyed out, but as they descend toward a pale, faded island, Rose can see faint hints of color in the ocean - glaucous blue, thistle purple, butter yellow, all of them drowned in stagnant, murky grey water. The rainclouds are fewer and further between than she remembers, and when Rose spies one out over the ocean to their right, she sees that it looks like an Earth-standard raincloud: grey, and drizzling thin drops of colorless water. The island itself is host to an intact, grey-streaked temple with a sizeable marble turtle shell on the highest spire, located on a high outcropping. If Rose didn't dismantle it, it must not have been one of the islands she visited in the last universe.

Rose wracks her memory as she dips and hovers over the sandy beach; Kanaya gives her a tap to indicate that she's ready to land, and Rose sets her down. The sand crunches under Kanaya's feet, and Rose presses her weight down with her toes, observing the lack of mica sparkle in the dull white chalk. "I haven't the faintest. You forget, I ignored my quest and went on a destructive grimdark spree. Underwater, I expect, but where..." she says, tearing her eyes away from the ground. Their outfits are the brightest, most saturated things on LoLaR, and it feels as though they've arrived for a funeral procession in clownish costume to make a mockery of a quietly dying land. "If I ever reached Cetus's lair, Leviathan corrupted the memory. The grimdark obscured much of my activities in the recording."

Eridan folds his arms tight over his chest, scuffing his dark purple shoe over the sand instead of landing. "Right. Sames. There's probably a way to get to it that caters to landdwellers, but..." He cuts himself off, glancing up at the sky. "- that might be the long way around, through the gates," Rose finishes for him, looking up at the same time. All she sees from here is the dark of the Medium, and the trailing edge of Leviathan's enormous, shifting tentacles. It's not a pleasant sight; she'd rather focus on Skaia in the distance. "Cetus told me to play the rain, but if that's not a prerequisite, I think we'd rather cut to the chase. I'm not sure what the water quality is like, though. It might depend on how much of Leviathan is left now that Cetus is dead." She looks at where the water meets the edge of the beach, a few yards away, and notices that the water isn't lapping against the shore. The faded water moves a little, but not enough for Rose to say whether there's a tide at work. It doesn't look like there's acid left to eat away at the island, at least; she can't hear any sizzling.

Feferi's claw shoots up into the air. "Oh, I can give it a shot! I used to clean up polluted water all the time!" she says. Rose swallows a caution against diving into the water as Feferi sprints across the beach, her god tier outfit returning to something closer to its default state as she leaves a trail of fuchsia sparkles sprinkled over the sand. The air feels chilly and almost clammy on Rose's skin, but there's still a hint of humidity, and that seems to be enough to restore Feferi and Eridan's spirits.

Her phone buzzes.

TG: Dear? Are you alright?
TG: We have landed on LoFaF, I believe.
TT: Yes. No need to fret.
TT: I don't mean to impose, but would you mind collecting significant quantities of reptiles for us?
TG: Oh, not at all. That is precisely why I have a number of interns and refugees at my beck and call.
TG: Aradia seems to have some idea of what needs doing.
TT: We'll keep you apprised of our status in trying to locate the alchemical recipe.
TG: You know, I used to have an alchemist on staff. What a shame. He would have loved this.
TT: I really do not think it's the same kind of alchemy.
TG: Just as the Game does not involve elements of chess we play?
TT: Hmph.
TG: We don't know when Jade will arrive, but it might be best to consolidate the civilians on the ships when they do.
TT: I'll bear that in mind.
TG: Do try to be careful.

Rose doesn't respond to that. One parental unit accounted for.

Rather than chasing after Feferi, Kanaya wanders a few steps inland. Her outfit stands out the most against the pallid landscape; dark grey and dark green with little exception, she stands out against the faded beach like a stroke of calligraphy ink. "This place has seen better days," Kanaya says. It's a statement of a fact; she sounds almost sad. Part of the beach rises and winds back along a plane of harder white marble, leading up toward the temple. Past Kanaya, Rose can see a handful of rounded pink buildings arranged in a semi-circle at the foot of the incline. No sign of any inhabitants, though. She'd be surprised if any of them survived the drastic grimdark climate change, let alone the transition between sessions. Then again, from what she recalls, sometimes the turtle consorts simply lived in their temples' cloisters; these smaller structures look abandoned, the pink stone dull and scored with grey streaks from the rain.

"Yes. I barely recognize it," Rose replies. She tears her eyes away from the abandoned village, but they just fix on the side of Kanaya's face instead. She should really go and see what Feferi is attempting to do, but -

Kanaya turns slightly, her lips quirked in a tiny smile that parts her lips just enough for a hint of sharp teeth to peek through. Not quite obvious enough to be called buckteeth, but enough to be excessively endearing. "I seem to recall you wrecking a few turtle villages and temples," she says, offering the quiet, awkward joke as a way to lighten the mood. Rose huffs a laugh, smiling back as best she can. It's not hard to smile, for Kanaya. "Do you think you can recall where you left off on your land quest before you decided to do that? Or anything from inside the temples that might lead us to a gate?"

Rose shrugs, shaking her head. "I remember less than I should. And I was not particularly interested in paying attention to the game lore all around me. It all seemed so…trivial at the time, apart from what I could exploit. I blew up gates as well as temples before leaving." She'd been a ruthless child, in some ways. Even now, Rose can't quite fight the notion that Sburb contains a lot of unnecessary side quests. Most of hers probably relied on living consorts, which is unfortunate.

One way or another, they're not here to unearth all of Sburb's secrets. Just the one. If she was supposed to learn anything from this land, she suspects she ruined the lesson when she accepted Leviathan into her head. Cetus is dead, and the Land of Light and Rain is close to joining her.

"Well -" Feferi trots to a stop by the edge of the greying sea, calling back over her shoulder, "- we can just get crayative!"

On impulse, Rose takes Kanaya's hand and draws her back down the beach; Kanaya blinks, still partly absorbed in the temple up the hill, but follows, her claws folded between Rose's fingers. It's overly cautious of Rose. A dead giveaway that she's worried. But she can't help it. "Can you clean it up enough to swim down?" she asks Feferi, keeping one eye on Eridan where he's crouched to inspect a mottled black-and-white salt deposit by the water's edge.

"Guess we'll find out!" Feferi says, rubbing her claws together with enthusiasm. She snaps her goggles on over her eyes and kicks her shoes off so she can step out over the water with her bare feet. Rose…has no idea how safe that is, but as she and Kanaya both open their mouths, Feferi
And stops dead, one foot planted firmly on the beach and the other frozen half an inch above the stagnant ocean. "Oooh. Oh no," she says, her eyes widening behind the goggles. Her hands slowly rise to touch her temples as her fuchsia aura burns along her skin. Not promising.

"What's wrong?" Rose asks, stepping closer. She reaches toward Feferi cautiously, in case she needs to pull her back from whatever's in the water. Kanaya clamps down on her hand, an anchor.

Feferi stumbles back of her own accord, though. Literally stumbles; only a beat of her wings keeps her upright, and when she rights herself, the fuchsiablood looks distressed. "That's...there's nothing alive in there," she says, distraught, combing her fingers through her thick hair and holding her head.

...Ah. "No, there wouldn't be," Rose says, dropping her hand. "Cetus devoured all the aquatic life in the last session. I assume the grimdark influence took care of the turtles on land, over time." She gestures back toward the village and temple, fighting down a bitter smile. Rose remembers quite clearly how the turtle consorts used to shake and sweat whenever she arrived on one of the islands, looking for something to advance her single-minded quest. She'd been quite callous about destroying their homes and tossing them into the water - to safety, she'd thought, at the time, so she could dismantle the secrets buried beneath the islands themselves.

Feferi shivers and takes two more steps back from the water, the last of her aura cutting off. "No, I can't fix that. I need somefin alive to work with, I think," she says, her smiles shaky as she forces the pun in.

Eridan heaves a deep sigh, letting his head and horns hang between his knees for a second before pushing up out of his crouch. He scratches at his ribs, looking pre-emptively grossed out as he rolls up his sleeves. "Well, what's a gill-full of dead gunk between friends, right?" he says, rhetorically. "C'mon, Fef, we'll just swim it. We'll know once we hit the giant underwater statues, probably."

Feferi looks even more grossed out, her face turning a distinct shade of puce even as she gulps and begins to transmogrify her skirts into something swim-worthy. "I really don't think that's wise. Or sanitary," Kanaya says hastily, letting go of Rose to haul both coldbloods back from the water by the shoulder. It's hard to tell which of the two looks more relieved at being stopped before they can dunk themselves into the sluggish waves. "There must be another way to narrow down the search."

Kanaya glances at Rose, worries her lower lip with her teeth, and then sets her jaw. "Let's check the temple, at least."

They bypass the cluster of round houses - all in various stages of greying dereliction, none of them whole - and follow the marble path on foot up to the temple. It's not the largest structure Rose has ever seen, but the pastel pink pillars that flank either side of the main entrance tower over them, at least three times as tall as Kanaya. The marble of the peristyle courtyard is flecked and pitted with missing chunks where acidic rain must have eaten into the stone, leaving bleached white marks scattered across the floor. There are a few heavily weathered statues lining the courtyard that might have once been enormous turtle shells, but most of them have been worn down to featureless ovoids. A dull grey cloud starts to pass overhead just as they reach the covered entrance to the main temple, and lightless rain begins to fall in heavy sheets, flooding the pitted floor with a shallow pool of water that slowly drains away through channels that lead to the sheer drop on the eastern side of the building. Feferi stops just outside the covered roof, putting her hand out flat to catch a couple raindrops on her palm, and receives a faceful of streaming water for her efforts. She doesn't splutter, and just gulps it through her gills with a cross look as it dampens her shirt, and then follows them into the temple.
Apart from the constant stream of water splashing on the roof, the temple is utterly silent. No patter of rough webbed feet on the cool stone; no faint, nervous (always nervous) chatter from the cloisters; no wide green eyes peering at Rose from a safe distance. Carefully carved openings line the roof at intervals, and rain water falls through them into sunken rectangles in the floor, streaming away through more decorated drains to either side. If it were brighter, and if the rain was more colorful and glossy, it would have been a beautiful sight. Now, it just fills the dark room with a clammy, wet atmosphere.

Pale white dust covers the floor; Rose only notices it when she sees the dark footprints left on the stone as they enter the room. "Looks like no one has been here in a long time," Kanaya says, hushed and barely audible over the rain. Even as Rose thinks that, though, the sound of rain shifts, and the streams of water pouring down through the ceiling begin to taper off. It was only one cloud, after all.

There's nothing in the antechamber, though; Rose inspects the floor, sweeping a few of the stone tiles with a gloved hand to see if the windblown sand has obscured anything, but apart from the door at the far end of the hall, there's nothing to find. Eridan and Feferi wander through the room, inspecting the drains and the pools, but the most Rose receives from either troll is a shrug.

Kanaya, on the other hand, appears to be on a mission; she covers the first room without slowing and strides up to the far door, which takes up most of the pale purple wall. By the time Rose joins her, the troll has already slotted the tiles of a color palette puzzle into place to unlock the door. "Too easy?" Rose says, raising an eyebrow, and Kanaya nods her head absently as she steps back. The door shudders and sheds a layer of dust as it splits in two and swings open. Rose coughs into her sleeve until the dust clears. Kanaya walks in, her skin brightening to a steady glow that lights up the space around her, but it's not enough to illuminate the entire room.

"Oh, here we go," Eridan says, leaving the center pool and squinting into the dark of the unlit inner chamber. Rose waits for Feferi for a brief moment – long enough to see Feferi bend her head down to take a swig of the water in the nearest pool, screw up her face in a disgusted grimace, and silently open her mouth to spit it out. Investigation complete, Feferi charges after them. "God, Kan, you're like a nightlight," Eridan adds, before lighting himself up with hot white light. It's bright enough to wash out the details of the room and make Rose shade her eyes with a hand. Feferi hisses and covers her eyes with her arm.

Kanaya sniffs. "Your hypocrisy is duly noted."

Far, far overhead, Rose can make out a few thin strips of grey light shining through gaps in the ceiling - but they must be directly under the tallest spire, now, and the ambient light from up there doesn't quite fill the room even after her eyes start to adjust. Rose murmurs under her breath, and summons light into the palm of her hand. She flattens it out into a pane and sends it up overhead to illuminate the room from above. "Well. Let's take a look around. If we can't find anything relevant quickly, though, we may need to cut our losses. We don't have time to waste," she says, scanning the walls and the floor for any relevant engravings.

The stone in here is a darker lilac than the rest of the temple, and covered in deep engravings that stretch from the floor on up into the dark vaults of the ceiling high above. Six turtle shell statues sit on plinths around the room, less weathered than the ones outside but frosted with chalk dust, each positioned across from a recessed alcove in the wall. In the center is a small statue of a sun, carved out of clear quartz. The light from Rose's pane glints off mirrors set at angles high up on the ceiling, which might once have redirected the light from outside throughout the room, before the land greyed. Rose approaches the center statue, curious, but casts a skeptical eye at the walls; they picked a totally random island to land on, and the odds of any of the engravings being relevant to their high priority tasks are slim to none. Feferi follows the outside of the room with one hand on the wall, her claw clicking as she skims it over the engravings, and Kanaya wanders toward the back of the naos while turning to take in all of the room. After she assures herself of Eridan's position - peering into one of the shallow alcoves - Rose inspects the rectangular table that holds the quartz sun. There's something embedded along the edge of the white marble table; thin and long, made out of a similar clear crystal, longer than most of Rose's needlekind over the years, but…familiar. She taps a nail against it, and tentatively tries to pry the thing out of its marble bed without snapping it -

"Eeeagh!"

Eridan shrieks, and something clatters hard against the floor with a hollow crack. Rose whips around to look at him, and Eridan scrambles back out from the nearest alcove on his hands and feet, kicking something pink and white away from him in a panic. Kanaya jerks around, her chainsaw already up and braced in front of her, but Feferi's the one who's closest in her tour of the room. She strides over, steps over Eridan's flailing body, and prods his assailant with the tip of her 2x3dent from a defensive crouch.

Then Feferi harrumphs, and pokes Eridan next, straightening with a disdainful look. "Stop gawping like a fish out of water, Eridan! It's just a dead turtle!" she says, scornful. Her expression softens as she crouches over the skeleton itself, using her specibus for balance. "Poor fin…"

And a turtle it is. There's enough left to still look pink, but the eyes have withered away to leave hollow sockets. Even in death, the turtle clutches an angular tool in one hand.

Rose…doesn't remember them being so small. Of course, at thirteen, she'd been even shorter than she is now. And there's something else – something that causes her to blink, and glance back at the turtle shell sculptures that line the room. "Nothing else hit you?" Rose asks Eridan, joining Feferi in her inspection of the creature. "You're alright?"

Eridan spits and starts furiously brushing dust off his clothes. He looks mollified by her show of concern, at least. "Stupid fuckin' consorts," he mutters, rolling up onto his feet and hunching his shoulders as he power walks away from his shame. Rose lets him go; she gingerly turns the turtle's hand over instead, to get a better look at the angular tool in its hand. Under a layer of white caulk, she can just make out the bright lemon yellow of the handle; she doesn't have the heart to pull the turtle's wizened fist apart to free the tool, though. Feferi sighs and gets up off her knees and pats the turtle on the head, while Rose looks up at the sculptures again. When she gets up and peers into the crack where the nearest shell meets the plinth, she can make out the caulk sealing the turtle shell in place.

Well then. When she runs a cautious finger along the curve of the shell, the sculpture isn't made of stone. It feels remarkably similar to the dead turtle in the alcove, as a matter of fact.

…Delightful. Morbid pastel turtles who turned their dead into décor. Truly, her consorts suited her. Rose decides not to voice her realization to the rest of the group; there's no point. She pushes away from the plinth and jams her toe on the edge of the stone – she covers her momentary stumble by hurrying back to the central altar. As fascinating as it would be to go back and inspect the other sculptures, Rose thinks it would only make her sad.

She begins to pry up the long crystal again, instead. It really doesn't seem to be part of the table itself – and yet, vexingly enough, she can't do more than scrape her fingernails along the smooth surface. There's just no traction; the object's wedged too tightly in its socket. Rose exhales sharply through her nose. "Anything enlightening?" she calls, dryly, while she attempts to manipulate the sun crystal next. Most likely it would be more productive for her to go help Feferi inspect the walls and try to decipher the engraved script, but she can't seem to leave the table alone.
"A bunch of punch card codes. Probably for weaprons or armor you could alchemize," Feferi calls back from the left side of the room, running her claws over a series of stylized numbers carved in rectangular sets on the far wall. "At least, that's what usually turns up in temples like this, when they don't have books. Though armoray doesn't do much when you're already in the god tiers…"

"I have found a chalkboard, I believe. The chalk is all very harsh shades of pastel," Kanaya says, from another alcove – one presumably devoid of deceased inhabitants. Though Rose doubts Kanaya would be as disturbed by such an occupant as Eridan seems to be.

"Keep it. Terezi might like it," Rose says, only half joking. Kanaya coughs a laugh into her sleeve, and Rose smiles to herself. There's something carved into the round center of the sun sculpture – but when Rose runs her fingers over it, the carving is too shallow for her to tell what the bumps are supposed to form. If she brightens the light, maybe she'd be able to see more detail –

Rose groans internally. When she looks up to the ceiling, this time she follows the angle of the mirrors with her eyes. She traces the path the light would take if it were strong enough to reflect off them. Almost all of them, Rose realizes, would center right on the altar. Perhaps if the Land of Light and Rain wasn't fading so drastically, this wouldn't even be a puzzle. It would just have been illuminated by default. Rose snaps a new sphere of light into her hand and directs it at the sun statue, her brow furrowed in concentration as she leans one hand on the table.

The sun statue refracts the light, and something kliks within the marble of the table. Rose still can't make out what's carved on the statue; so much for that. This time, though, when she slides her fingers over the long crystal object, it rolls loose in its indent. Rose carefully plucks it free, and squints at the sun crystal one last time before letting the light die down. She turns the crystal rod over in her hands and frowns as her thumb brushes over something rough and taut strung along the underside. Her fingers come away slightly white with powder.

A bow. It's a violin bow. She can't remember the last time she held one, actually. Rose turns it over in her hands and balances it between her fingers by each end of the bow, but can't find anything to tighten it with. It simply exists, perfectly balanced and pre-rosined.

"Someone, come help me decipher obscure iconography," Eridan yells, and Rose nearly drops the bow on the ground. She catches it and closes a fist over one end, then captchalogues it hastily before she can smash it by accident. Given Dave's proclivity for snapping swords in two, she's not about to risk that side of her heritage coming to the fore at the worst possible moment. "Lalonde! You've got snakes on your walls. Bring your luminous fuckin' bullshit over here."

Rose hastens over, after giving the sun statue one last tap to see if it has anything else to share. Eridan floats five feet up in the air at the back of the temple, using a fistful of too-bright hope light to cast the wall in sharp relief. Since she'd rather avoid any mishaps, intentional or otherwise, blowing a hole through the wall, Rose brightens her own panel of light over this half of the room. Eridan lets his own light die down and folds his arms, considering the mosaic that spreads out in front of them. Feferi bounds up to float higher than Eridan, following the sinuous curve of two intertwined snakes.

"Two snakes? Perhaps a caduceus," Rose says, remaining on the floor as Kanaya joins them. Her claws are covered in chalk dust, and she offers Rose an arm with a tiny sigh. Rose gets the impression that the gratuitous amounts of flying that Kanaya can't participate in is starting to get to her; Rose links arms, but stays on the ground. She can see just as well from down here. The mosaic appears to be made from chips of glass and stone in a wide spectrum of colors, rather than just the LoLaR tradition of pink, yellow, and blue, pieced together over a grey background. A single nondescript figure is positioned in the dead center of the wall - a rounded triangle and pointed oval serve as a head and body, but it contains an entire rainbow of colored stone within the grey-glass outline of its form, and two pairs of arms extend out on either side. One arm (though lacking hands) holds a curving scythe over its head; the second arm length of long, thin blue ribbon that curls in an unseen breeze; the third a book, the pages depicted in mid-turn but blank; and finally, and perhaps most incongruously of all, the fourth arm holds...a cup of tea. Or perhaps coffee. No, no, that's a tea tag hanging over the rim of the cup, picked out in white stone. Smaller snakes form a rectangular border around the outer edges of the mosaic, each with a mouth ready to snap shut over the tail of the snake ahead of it. It's difficult to tell, but Rose thinks some of the dots on the grey background are meant to be raindrops – but only some of them are blue – others are pink and yellow. LoLaR rain, perhaps? Or maybe just decorative chips thrown on the wall for an extra flourish.

"That's a little fishy. Aren't snakes a thing just for this session? How did they know to make this instead of frogs?" Feferi says, her focus still on the twined, twinned snakes that form part of the mosaic's backdrop. They're flanked by an enormous Light symbol on one side, and – curiouser and curiouser – a Space symbol on the other.

"I wouldn't rule out the game just editing the iconography for its own purposes," Kanaya points out. "Or commanding the consorts to do so. Or perhaps the whole thing was artificially generated as is. I would ask Sollux, but I think he's still busy at the moment."

Rose hums; each suggestion is just as likely as the next, as far as Sburb is concerned. At the very least, it's clear that this is relevant to the snakes infesting LoFaF, and must have been inserted into this temple at some point after the last session. The timing's difficult to keep track of. "This is Jade's symbol. The Space symbol," she says, scanning the whorls of the symbol. "Referring to the Muse, do you think? If that's rain in the background, and not just polka dots - well, Cetus did ask me to play it."

"And you're going to be sippin' a hot beverage while doing so," Eridan says, with a snap of his claws. "Points for style, Lalonde. Then, out of nowhere – he swings around and squints down at Rose, so suddenly that Rose tenses on instinct. "What did Cetus say to you, exactly? On account of I was there, and you were gettin' real upset while sayin' Kan's name. And then conveniently never explained for shit."

"Eridan!" Rose is embarrassed to say that she splutters. Suddenly, having Kanaya right beside her stresses her, a silent pressure as Kanaya watches Rose with careful eyes. Feferi's fuchsia eyes are visible in the half-dark near the top of the mosaic, blinking down at Rose in wide-eyed but intent curiosity. Of all the times to be put on the spot – it's so very tempting to put them off. Rose does have another convenient excuse after all; the Lord of Time isn't going away any time soon, and sussing out the worrying implications of Cetus's last riddles is just another distraction from finding the denizen's hoard.

But Kanaya waits, watching Rose with a careful mask of an expression – steady, but unreadable. She doesn't pull away, and Rose ducks her head, trying to pull herself back together under the three trolls' scrutiny. She knows the twisting guilt in her stomach for what it is, and grits her teeth before answering. "She wasn't...it was all riddles. 'What goes round the house, in the house, but never touches the house? What has eyes but cannot see?' And - she can't look Kanaya in the eye - she said that there might be a choice I could make to destroy Leviathan, and the other Horrorterrors. But it would come at a price I'm not willing to pay. Then she wanted me to play the rain, and look for the Splendor Existentiae in her Hoard. She refused to clarify many points, except with more riddles."

Kanaya's eyes narrow, and then widen – Rose's gut clenches, and she mysteriously stops being able to maintain eye contact. Feferi breaks in first, with a bubbly laugh. "I guess we'll see Schooner or later whether the Lord of Time takes care of Leviathan for us, anyway!" she says. "'Can't see,' huh? Well, certain cavefish and salamanders have vestigial eyes but don't use them for much!"
Rose opens and shuts her mouth, and then raises both eyebrows in acknowledgement. "That - is a new answer. I could only think of things like tornadoes, or needles."

"The other one's the sun. There's literally no other answer," Eridan mumbles. He's furiously pouting; Rose suspects that pouting is simply part of his default expressions, because apart from the petulant moue of his mouth he appears to be sunk in deep thought. As soon as she thinks that, though, his lips pull back in a grimace, and he smacks the heel of his hand to his forehead. "But nothing is pointin' us toward a gate, or a shortcut. Some of this wall writing could take bloody weeks to decipher, an' I guarantee half of it will be turtle yammering about nothing at all."

"And I doubt Leviathan can keep the Lord of Time preoccupied long enough for us to find a library I didn't tear through to find the right translation tools," Rose says, immensely grateful for the change in subject. Kanaya's eyes are staring right through her – not quite daggers, but Rose feels pierced to the bone, all the same. She knows.

"So, we're still stumped." Feferi huffs, her breath pushing a stray strand of hair out of her face as she starts to float back down to the ground. Eridan stays in front of the mosaic, pushing his own cheeks into a truly stormy pout as he glowers at the images in an attempt to have them reveal their secrets. Or force them to rearrange themselves into a map.

Rose sighs. "I'll try to see the best path to the nearest gate. If it doesn't lead directly to Cetus's lair, we'll just have to work our way through them as they come. If my past self destroyed a critical link in the gate chain and it hasn't respawned, we'll just have to continue on from there." Trying to see through the whole land to find the lair itself would be like trying to see through Earth, Rose suspects; if they're on the wrong side of the planet, she might as well be trying to see a building in the Antarctic from the North Pole. She could try, but it would most likely just give her a spectacular headache.

Eridan pushes off the wall and starts motoring back toward the entrance with a sour look. "Should just vaporize the fuckin' ocean," he mutters. Feferi emits a steam-whistle screech, and Eridan starts flying three times faster, Feferi hot on his heels.

Which leaves Rose to walk out with Kanaya. Normally, this would be an entirely agreeable turn of events.

Kanaya tilts her head to the side, and Rose can't look away without being incredibly obvious about it. She starts walking instead. Kanaya puts a hand over Rose's arm, her voice quiet but carrying. "You are not being forthright. The ultimata of denizens often seem to invoke death to accomplish an important goal. But I believe it is...unusual for the choice to involve someone else's death, and not your own sacrifice." Her claws trail down and close over Rose's tight fist, working the fingers loose until Rose's fingernails stop digging into her palm and they can hold hands. "Rose, let me help."

Rose speeds up. "No one's dying. That's a choice, too," she says, tightly.

- Kanaya is not happy with her by the time they catch up with Eridan and Feferi on the beach. Not angry, maybe, but concerned and frustrated. Rose can't blame her; she also can't bring herself to let go of Kanaya's hand. It's an uncomfortable situation, but as always, more pressing issues beckon. "Let's just go under!" Feferi is saying when they're back in earshot, and Rose picks up the pace again to head off whatever the seadwellers are about to jump into. "I'll bet anyfin it's down in the deepest part of the ocean, anyway. That's where important stuff always is."

Eridan grouses, wrinkling up his nose as Feferi starts marching into the water. "This is going to be so Feferi stops, up to her knees in grey-white water. Rose can't see anything through the water (not a promising sign) but from the lack of agonizing pain on Feferi's face, it must not be acidic. At least, not near the shore. "Cut it with the crabby attitude, Eridan!" Then Feferi claps her claws together, waving at Rose and Kanaya. "I have an idea!"

"Oh thank god," Kanaya says, under her breath.

"We're all ears," Rose adds.

"Whale, unless a whale denizen lived on land, we're gonna have to go underwater anyway, so…" Feferi rubs her hands together until they crackle with fuchsia static, and then pulls them apart again. An iridescent bubble bobs in between her palms, about the size of a soccer ball. Feferi spreads her arms further apart, keeping her claws cupped, and the bubble expands in front of her until Eridan stumbles back out of the way. When she finishes, the bubble is taller than Rose and mostly transparent, with only a faint tint of fuchsia around the edges. Feferi looks over at Rose with a tiny, pleased smirk. "Think that will work?"

Rose walks over and careful pressed a fingertip to the bubble. It feels remarkably solid, for something Feferi generated out of thin air. "A bubble?"

Feferi nods, patting the bubble so that it bounces on the chalk. "Glubby made them for Karkat and Dave! They should have enough air to get you guys underwater for a while." She shrugs. "Just because it was Glubby's idea doesn't mean it's a bad idea to borrow, for a bit."

"And we won't have to swim through a dead ocean full of possible biohazards. Good idea, Feferi," Rose says, batting the bubble back toward the water when it starts to bob toward her.

Now, the only issue is that they still need to know where to go. Which is, barring any unforeseen developments, a task that comes down to Rose's sight. While Feferi blows three more bubbles, Rose opens her sight as wide as it will go - doing her best not to look up, because seeing the full extent of Leviathan is not on her agenda for the day and she'd prefer to keep whatever remains of her last meal in her stomach, please and thank you -

And sees nothing but clouds. Rose bites down on her lip too hard, the dry skin cracking easily under her teeth, and adjusts her sight once, twice. For a moment, all the clouds in her range stand out like bright yellow highlighter against the grey sky; another twitch, and she can identify islands just over the horizon with brilliant pink aur--as another filter, and Rose is nearly blinded by the light of something burning in a card that floats by her hip as everyone's sylladices become visible. Exactly what kind of bow did she pick up, in there?

She can see nothing through the water. Nothing in her sight seems to indicate a gate; she would know it intuitively if she saw it, but there's little else on the Land of Light and Rain except the aur--as clouds and islands dotted across the ocean. An ocean which remains stubbornly opaque to her, no matter how hard Rose glares at it. "We may need to go under," she says aloud, trying not to let the unease seep into her expression. Can she see anything? If the only piece of itself Leviathan left on LoLaR was some kind of contaminant to cloud the water from her sight... How utterly inconvenient. Rose can't believe such a thing would be a coincidence.

Feferi leans back on her heels, and twirls her index claw with a smile. At her direction, the bubbles bob once and then mash up against their intended target. There's a moment where Rose can feel the bubble plastered along her, and then envelops her seamlessly. Almost as once, she feels off-balance; attempting to float in the bubble only makes it more alarming when the life bubble lurches merrily from side to side. In a bubble of her own, Kanaya looks queasy, and attempts to sit down on the floor of the bubble without rolling. It appears to be a losing battle; she winds up in a wary half-crouch. "Alright. Down we go!" Feferi says, before sealing herself in her own bubble with a muffled pop. Then, without hesitation, she waves the bubbles out over the water, and dunks them.

The water…Well, it doesn't burn right through the bubble, which is a start. Rose still isn't sure what they're dealing with, here, but Feferi rolls them along the charcoal grey sea bed without any noticeable trouble, her claws swaying in wave-like motions as she directs them further down. About twenty feet out there is a steep dropoff, and they're left completely surrounded by clouded water. It's not quite as opaque as the milky surface, but with her normal vision, Rose can't see further than 12 feet in any direction. Below their bubbles there appears to be one of the patches of very faded cyan, but apart from that, no landmarks to speak of. When Rose looks up, she can't tell where the surface is.

"Blrblg," Kanaya says, barely audible through the bubbles. "Rbrblr?"

Right. Feferi, Eridan, and Kanaya are all watching Rose from their life bubbles, waiting on her direction. Blast this leader business. Rose closes her eyes, and opens them again with as many different perspectives as she can muster. She looks around - nothing - up - mistake - and then down, before vertigo can set in -

"There is a gate three hundred feet below us," Rose says. She blinks, and checks again, flipping herself so she can peer directly through the floor of her bubble. Her hair falls in her face, but…yes, the spirograph is unmistakable, a burning lavender epicycloid in her vision. The gate is right under them. There's no telling which gate it might be, but they somehow managed to land on an island located in direct proximity to a gate. Providence, or something else?

Feferi doesn't move them. Rose looks up, frowning, and Feferi taps her ear. Right. Rose takes out her phone.

TT: We are directly above a gate, somehow.
CC: O(! T)(at's s)(ella convenient! 38)
CA: its fuckin creepy is wwhat it is
CA: if your denizen wwerent incredibly deceased id say wwe wwere bein fucking wwith GA: There is no way to tell where it leads?
TT: No, but worst case scenario - it takes us to another player's land and we have to backtrack. I'm not sure there's anything left on LoLaR that might be considered dangerous.
CC: If you're s)(ore…

Rose isn't sure. But the main peril of skipping gates, from what she can recall, was the risk of ending up in a place you weren't high enough on the echeladder to survive in. Except for Kanaya, they're all god tier; if there were any enemies left to fight, the players would probably be overleveled, if anything.

Rose gives a half shake of her head, then gestures to Feferi to take them down. Feferi holds her hand out flat, and slowly lowers it. The bubbles sink into the milky water gradually. Rose never feels the pressure change, but she wasn't really expecting it to be an issue, considering the fact that the Lands appear to lack certain physics that might otherwise impede progress. Perhaps the inexplicable Wi-Fi signal grows stronger as one delves deep in a land, but frankly Rose isn't ready for the existential crisis that she'd need to process such a thing, so she avoids looking at her phone.

They're almost in the gate before it's visible. The purple spirograph flutters and expands in the water, pointed like a flower toward the surface, and fills the pale water around it with a lavender tinge. It's the most saturated color Rose has seen since they arrived. Feferi pauses their descent, waits for one last nod from Rose, and then pushes their bubbles through one at a time, starting with Rose.

Ironically, Rose is nearly impaled upon an enormous spike of bone. The bubble rams right into it on the way out of the gate, deforming and molding to the bone's surface as Rose shouts and throws her weight back against the far side - and miraculously does not pop. Her bubble rebounds after a moment and bobbles away with a slight spin. Kanaya's bubble emerges from the spirograph next and Rose can't do much except use hand signals that, under Strider terms, means something like reassurance. Eridan's garbled scream as he shoots out of the spirograph with significantly more force is audible even through the bubbles, and he ricochets off Kanaya's bubble at top speed, tumbling inside his bubble like a bobblehead. Feferi arrives with a radiant aura of complete innocence, and directs her bubble over the bone with a tiny flip.

All of them are drifting in a slow circle, though. Rose only notices the movement when she establishes where they are. They've emerged at the bottom of an immense, frothing whirlpool, at least the length of a football stadium; overhead, she can see the layered spirals of colorful water coiling in slow circles, rising up toward a surface some unfathomable distance above. Beneath them lays an immense skeleton, half buried in the glittering, smooth sand of the abyssal plain. Its ribs extend up in sharp curves with wicked points, and the whole thing must be at least 57 feet long from tail to tooth. There are other skeletons scattered about, the smallest of which is still seven feet in length. A crocodilian skeleton the length of a bus, a fifty-foot long creature that Rose would swear up and down is some kind of plesiosaur, a wisp-thin anglerfish, a turtle shell that dwarfs any of the consorts she's ever met by a factor of fifty, at least a hundred different species - all dead. All arranged in circles inside circles, centered under the whirlpool and forming a semi-circle around a large outcropping of dark lavender stone that juts up from the abyssal plain. A line of pitch black stone runs through it at a jagged angle.

At the base of the ridge is a door. Flanked by several rows of curving \( f \) shaped crystals that have been carved to frame the entrance, the door has a clear split down the center and a single bridge-like symbol affixed where a handle might sits.

Or a lock.

Someone is making impatient burbling sounds through their bubble. Rose's starts to move back against the current, and this shakes her from her reverie. All four bubbles are converging on each other, and Feferi's face is fixed with concentration as they come together with a buoyant pop! Eridan's yell sounds loud and clear in Rose's ears as all four bubbles merge into one bigger bubble; Kanaya rolls awkwardly along the expanded floor of the bubble, and Rose catches her. There is a moment where Kanaya seems to be composed of 90% elbows, and then they stop tumbling with Kanaya sprawled on Rose's lap. "There! That's better. What were you saying, Kanaya?" Feferi asks, cheerfully directing their mega-bubble toward the door. At least they're all on the same page.

"I was saying that this looks relatively final. This is pretty unambiguously a significant location," Kanaya says with a huff. She moves to shift off Rose's lap, but Rose sees absolutely no reason for this occur until they need to leave the bubble, and wraps her arms around Kanaya's waist.

Kanaya gives her a look, and Rose smiles back, the picture of virtue. "I concur. Shall we try the door?" she asks, glancing around the group. Feferi's already guiding them toward it, and Kanaya already agrees; Eridan is fiddling with his crown headband, which has somehow wound up yanked down around his nose, and just nods impatiently when Rose looks at him in askance. Unanimity is sweet indeed.
By the time they cross the boneyard and reach the door, it's clear just how huge the door is. Large enough to accommodate a denizen, if Rose were to guess. Up close, the crystalline pillars are clouded with a thin film of grey; Feferi takes their bubble all the way up to the bridge lock over the seam in the door, and it has several holes in the stone the size of Rose's head. "If that's a lock, we can probably just blast it," Eridan says, having sorted out his headgear problems; Rose doesn't like the look of the light gathering around his hand, especially not while they're still stuck in a single bubble of air together.

"I don't see a puzzle..." Kanaya says, doubt in her voice as she rolls up off Rose's lap and inspects the bridge. "This is definitely the most door-like structure around, though. Curious."

If it's a puzzle that involves light, like the one back in the temple, they may be out of luck. Rose looks uneasily at the crystal pillars, which look as though they've become discolored over time. Trying to clean them off might be a lost cause, but if Rose directed enough of her own light at the lock...Hm. She tries to look at the door with extra sight, but it appears to just be plain stone. Nothing magical or out of the ordinary about it. Perhaps the bow -

"Maybe it needs a password? Which we probably skipped." Feferi taps her chin and puts her lips together to make a popping sound as she thinks. "Hm!"

Rose hesitates. Then she floats over to the point where their bubble presses up against the lock and flattens a little. "Or perhaps...we're overthinking this," she says, slowly.

Very carefully, Rose places her palm against the side of the bubble. There's a second's delay, and then Feferi hums again; the fuchsia barrier of the bubble melts a little under Rose's hand with the bubbly texture of champagne, and then her hand is pressed against the ice cold stone of the lock. Feferi leans in over Rose's shoulder to concentrate on maintaining the integrity of the rest of the bubble, her hair coiling through the air in a mass of fuchsia light visible in Rose's periphery. Rose presses the pads of her fingers to different parts of the bridge, brushing them over the gaps in the stone, and then reaches inside one of the holes.

Something brushes her fingers. Before she can yank her hand back, it pricks her finger. Rose lunges back, pulling her hand back into the bubble and holding it close to her chest, while Feferi scrambles to close the hole. "Rose?" Kanaya says, no doubt smelling the thin point of blood now beading up on Rose's index finger. The jadeblood hurries over and gently makes Rose splay her hand out flat; it doesn't hurt at all, after the initial shock, but Rose is still ginger about doing so. It really isn't much more than a dot of blood when she looks at it. Eridan clusters in close and bristles, glaring at the door like he's ready to blast it to smithereens, while Feferi whips around to inspect Rose's hand personally. "I think it's fine," Rose says.

"Could have been poisoned," Eridan mutters, casting another wild-eyed look at the door.

Feferi shushes him, but clutches Rose's hand a little too tightly, her claws burning with life as she smooths them over the pinprick three times for good measure. "I can't feel anything wrong," she announces at last, relief evident as her face relaxes. There isn't even a scab; Rose's hand feels weirdly light compared to the rest of her, which is still dealing with the mixed effects of skipping a day, but that's hardly something to complain about.

And when Rose looks up, all she sees where the door used to be is a swirl of particulate-clouded water. The door opened inward, without even a creak, parting to either side. Beyond it lays a vast tunnel through the dark purple rock, leading down into the land.

Rose closes her hand. "We're in."
Crossing LoHaC isn't actually that bad. Which tells Dave that Hephaestus a) is melodramatic as all hell, and b) has a really high opinion of his hell-making ability. There's a convenient lack of underlings to fight (as well as a concerning lack of consort dudes) so they don't have to stop to take down amber imps or sulfur ogres every ten steps. Sure, it's hotter than Satan's morning breath, and the soundtrack is a constant burble of molten lava punctuated by shrieking, clanging metal, but that's, y'know, whatever. Dave can live with it. It's mostly just a massive pain in the ass.

He's more concerned with things he can't live without. Like his liver, or his stomach, or something like that. It's not as bad as when the Lord of Time leered down and looked right at them, but he still feels…pretty shitty. Dave's exhausted and basically in no shape to be pulling the kind of rampant shenanigans that are about to unfold all up in this.

Thank god Oriole has at least half an idea of where they're going. He coasts ahead of them on his wings, occasionally landing on an isolated metal pole that juts up out of the lava sea to figure out where the hell they need to go next. When in doubt, they aim for the nearest building that isn't melting into the ocean of lava, and bullshit the route from there. It's not perfect, but it gets them places. "The entrance should be somewhere near the equator. Opposite side from where the Beat Mesa used to be," Oriole mumbles when they first set out, but that's still a shitton of ground to cover.

"I don't know if I remember that or not," Dave says. "I remember a giant ass cave, but not really how I found it." The whole semi-possessed thing is really coming back to bite him in the ass, all these years later.
"Don't do Horrorterrors, kids," Karkat says.

But that's about the extent of the chatter - considering who they are all as people, their group is almost physically incapable of shutting up, but commenting on how hot and godawful Dave's planet is gets old after a while.

At one point they fly past a nakodile temple in the process of collapsing, the warm amber of the massive building sinking under the surface and turning the lava a molten gold. They finally reach a stretch of buildings that dot the ocean in a semi-straight line, and Terezi dumps them on their asses to run for a minute. Dave lands hard on the metal of a skeletal building, the unyielding line of the crossbeam digging hard into the soles of his feet. The impact doesn't quite bust his knees - which would suck ass - but the jolt makes him hiss and dig a thumb into the cartilage before he can force himself to straighten up. Karkat lands in a better crouch and starts running along the beam right away, and Dave can't tell if it's because Karkat just has insane troll gymnast skills, or if Dave is getting worse at this. It's not fair that he's developing old man knees this early in his life. If the Lord of goddamn Time is cursing him with arthritis of all things, Dave will be so pissed.

He hopes he's just tired. Tired is the better option, here; he'd rather be in dire need of a nap than falling apart at the seams. Dave starts after Karkat at top speed. Top speed means that either he keeps his balance on the narrow beam through sheer momentum, or else when he crashes he'll faceplant spectacularly, but Oriole isn't waiting around for them to catch up. After a few quick bursts, he catches up with Karkat, his feet already complaining at him from pounding on the too-warm metal, and Karkat gives him a pissy look because he's still sour about temporal inevitability being a shitty thing that happens. Dave would sympathize with the guy - but this is funnier, and funny shit is kind of hard to dredge up when you feel like ass.

And if there is a thing Dave feels like, it is ass.

…God. This is why he shouldn't vocalize thoughts around Rose. Or any of his friends, honestly. Or himself. Ever. Dave grimaces back at Karkat, who glowers harder before relenting, and the two of them have to pay attention as they make the jump from one building to the next. This one looks sheared off at the top, like something carved through it long before they arrived, and there's only horizontal cross beams to land on with massive gaps of empty space in between. Karkat lands on his hands and throws in a front flip. Dave hurdles the gap and lands with less knee-busting, and then starts darting from beam to beam before he can start wobbling. Bro used to have him drill with roof hopping on Houston's never ending series of construction sites downtown, so this is some kindergarten-level shit.

To be fair, Bro never imported a tank of molten rock to stick under Dave's practice sites. Dave suspects that didn't happen only because of the impossible logistics of importing or manufacturing fucking lava in goddamn metroplex.

Terezi dips down and bounds along the roof a few times ahead of Dave and Karkat to show off her unfair flying skills before taking off again. It's easier to follow her than it is to follow Oriole - neon orange blends in weirdly well depending on how hot the lava is, and how close to the ocean Oriole flies. Teal stands out more.

Dave beats Karkat to the next jump, and lands on a gear that lays flat along part of the roof, attached to nothing in particular and doing jackshit with its life. It might have once been a hell-fountain, but the central hole in the gear is full of dried up lava crust, so at least Dave doesn't land in a geyser of lava.

In the second it takes him to cross the gear, though, Karkat lands on the gear in a roll.
An ominous, metallic shriek rises up from the girders. The whole building jolts out from under Dave, dropping at least two feet down as the support beams start to collapse into the lava. "Shit!" Dave says. At the same time Karkat lets out a visceral skree, and then Dave backtracks, grabs Karkat, and bolts toward the far end of the building. The heavy gear causes the side they landed on originally to dip first, and soon they have to haul ass up a steep incline like a pair of assholes sprinting up the deck of the Titanic. They reach the far end just as Dave's feet start to lose traction on the beams, and he smacks a hand down flat on the tilting edge of the roof just in time. He and Karkat hang off the edge for a second. Dave hauls his elbow over the side, and then swings his knee up, while Karkat pushes up on his arms and scrabbles up with barely any effort. "We need to work on those landings," Dave says, off-handedly, and Karkat rolls his eyes. Their window to leap to the next building over is rapidly closing as their current building continues to sag, however, so Dave crouches and digs his feet in on the edge of the roof, ready to jump.

Karkat starts to run forward when, quietly - but with immense, scientifically quantifiable amounts of irony - the four corner struts of the building in front of them fall outward. There isn't even a sound: they just fall backward into the lava with an innocuous glop, and then all the crossbeams and gears and panes of sheet metal bellyflop in the molten ocean with a much louder SPLAP.

Which leaves them stranded on their own sinking pile of scrap.

"Oh, this is stupid," Karkat says, incensed. "Forget it. Fuck walking. Walking is overrated!"

"Walking teaches you character, freeloaders!" Terezi calls back over her shoulder. She doesn't turn around. Oriole does turn, using an updraft of hot air to pause and stare back at them incredulously. Dave doesn't blame him. This is pretty goddamn stupid.

The building judders under them, and sinks another four feet. Dave's pretty much resigned to either the sweet embrace of death or the pointy embrace of Terezi deigning to save their asses at the last minute, and sits down cross legged while Karkat struggles to stay balanced and shake a fist at Terezi at the same time. "I've been walking my strut pods off every day of my pathetic excuse for a life, and I haven't learned anything except how to stoke the fuckfires of my own unending inner hate!" he howls. "Come back here and make some weird comment about the color of our blood smelling like the liquid death of Dave's hell planet, Terezi!"

Terezi stops dead, and places a hand on her hips as she turns back toward them. She lifts her tinted glasses with one claw, her red eyes completely unamused as she arches an eyebrow in their general direction. "Well, if you say it, where's the fun in that?" she asks, shaking her head.

Dave shrugs. "Karkat'll probably accuse you of plagiarism, which will be funny for at least ten seconds," he says. Terezi claps her hand to her cheek, her mouth open in delight, and Karkat splutters. Then Terezi starts cackling as she descends to pick them back up, and sure, now Dave's stuck with these two sniping at each other for the rest of the trip, but it's worth it to skip the slow lava death part. Slow lava death would be the very definition of uncool; Dave intends to go out in style, if he has to go out at all.

Then Karkat kicks his way around to face backward - Terezi's holding him under the armpits like a long, fighty cat - and snaps at Dave. "And you! You've still got a spot where you're bleeding internally, dumbass."

"Figures," Dave says, before his brain ends its latest ramble and catches up with him. Even once it catches up, though, the most he can do is shrug again. He has a lowkey motif to speed up healing on fastforward in the background, but it can only do so much. He's not a Life guy; just a Fuck You Aspect guy. Karkat nearly chokes himself out on Terezi's unyielding forearm, but finally succeeds in slapping his palm over Dave's side. "Hypothetically, do you know how to, like, fix cursed organs?"
Dave asks, while the stiffness leaches out of his insides.

Karkat gives him a look. Karkat has an entire repertoire of weird-ass looks, and this one is fresh out of the ‘appalled spring fashion show’ lineup. "Dave. Literally, what the fuck kind of question is that?" he says. "I'm making this up as I go along and no, sorry, I'm pretty sure cursed organs are out of my not-godly jurisdiction! Fuck!"

Dave snaps his fingers. Gotta lighten the mood somehow. "Damn. It was worth a shot."

"If you're that bad --"

Plan L for lighten the mood is a bust. Dave engages Plan E, for evasive maneuvers. Can't catch him with those bad thoughts. "I'm fine. Peachy keen." He cups a hand around his mouth. "Oriole, you sure you know where we're going?"

Oriole stops dead in midair. He shades his eyes with a hand, scoping out the terrain before them. Like most of LoHaC, it's really goddamn red and really goddamn hot. When Dave looks around, there aren't even any more metal structures around them for miles - just a baked plain of bubbling lava. "Mostly," Oriole says at last, his orange feathers rustling a little as he turns with a grimace on his face. "Look, I -"

Then Oriole breaks off, snapping his mouth shut. He hovers there frozen for a long second, his wings half-folded and stationary; Terezi slowly floats to him and nudges Dave with her bony knuckle until he waves a hand in front of Oriole's face for her. When Oriole resumes, he's on a completely different tangent, and appears to have missed their antics. "- I am floating. What the shit. Why am I floating?" he says, confused.

Look, Dave's not the windy dude. He can't be blamed for not noticing that there isn't actually an updraft right here, or that there's not enough wind to keep Oriole up every time his bird twin stops flapping for longer than two seconds.

But the neon orange glow. Now that, he probably should have noticed. He blames LoHaC's color scheme. Oriole is already pretty neon by default, but when he spreads his fingers out, Dave sees the faint light outlining Oriole. When he rolls up his sleeves, there's even more glow, and a heck of a lot more feathers sprouting from his arms than Dave remembers.

"Sprite magic?" Dave offers. It's literally the only explanation.

Oriole clenches his hands into fists, his face the color of orange pith. "Shit."

Terezi tilts her head to the side. "Very fancy. Zesty, almost. You don't like?"

Oriole glares at her. "No! I'm not interested in being that asshole fake Dave who dies because he's part of the game that's being shredded all around us!" he yells, the sudden volume making Dave twitch. Then Oriole rakes a hand through his hair, tearing a feather loose and swinging around. He flaps his wings very deliberately to get going, but the effort it takes to remember is really obvious. His shoulders are tensed up, and he doesn't look back to make sure they're following him. "Fuck this. Let's hurry up before I pull some kind of reverse Little Mermaid and grow a tail."

Well, Dave didn't even know that was a thing they needed to worry about, but apparently it is. Nice. Terezi clears her throat, adjusts her grip on Dave and Karkat, and starts flying forward with a guilty look. Karkat sighs for thirty seconds, then lets his head droop. "Great. I feel like a fucking asshole. Let's all savor this moment of mutual assholery, and then awkwardly act like it never happened," he says.
"Agreed," Terezi says.

Dave nods. "Good plan."

The good news is, when they reach the massive, ominous cave opening that marks the entrance to Hephaestus's subterranean lair, Dave feels marginally less like shit. This may be because Leviathan is doing its best to turn the Lord of Time into a shish kebab with a hundred arching spears of bone and teeth. The attack doesn't even faze the ugly green dude, but the Horrorterror staggers each round of spears so that he has to bat each stabbing tendril aside with a swing of his golden pimpstick.

And that means he's still not paying attention to anything else. Like dicking over Dave. Karkat's blood mojo holds up a lot better when he has time to concentrate. Dave has some of his energy back by the time Terezi lands on the scorched obsidian of the cave entrance, most of his residual aches have chilled out, and his knees don't whine at him for the rough landing. A nap would still be tight as hell right now, but he can live without it. He stretches his arms behind his back and feels something pop with relief.

Hephaestus's lair is familiar, which means that they're in the right place. Two dark steel struts point up toward the sky at slightly different angles, spewing torrents of lava into the ocean in twin arcs; the solid garnet door has spun open into two jagged halves of a scratched circle, leaving a diagonal crack the size of a house for them to walk through. The cave beyond is a bottomless mouth leading down into the throat of the world. It reeks of coal smoke that somehow came to life, died, and rotted.

But the bad news is there's an entire heap of white bones arranged in a circle around a heavy black cauldron. Oriole lands with a sweep of his wings, which kicks up a bunch of weird, heat-blackened weeds that swirl across the ground in front of Dave's feet. It's a bunch of dried up, withered vegetables. Whatever water was in the cauldron evaporated ages ago.

Oh no. "Aw, shit. Seriously, are all my nakodile dudes dead?" Dave says, squatting next to one of the bone heaps. He plucks a single tooth the size of his fingernail off the ground. "This is bullshit." So much for any hope of ever reinvigorating the once-thriving LoHaC Stock Exchange.

Karkat sways, his claw banging hard on the edge of the cauldron, and he swears as he glares down into the cauldron. His face looks pale. Then his expression turns pained, and he jabs a finger down into the pot. "Why was one of them tied up in a giant soup pot? Dave, what kind of fucked up vore shit was your planet into?" he demands.

Dave closes his hand over the tooth and stands up to lean over the side of the cauldron with Karkat. Karkat keeps looking back and forth between Dave and the heap of nakodile bones in the bottom of the pot, incensed, and when Dave just shrugs Karkat throws up his hands in defeat. "Better him than me, man," Dave says. Karkat stomps away, fury having restored his usual crabby pep, and Dave surveys the lair entrance as he ambles over to Oriole. "Well, this looks...familiar. Giant cavern, check. Bottomless pit, with sharp rocks at the bottom - probably."

Oriole's wings shift restlessly, his shoulders hunched. Dave realizes his shoulders are doing the same thing and forces himself to relax. There's literally nothing to worry about, here. Hephaestus ditched ages ago, by his own admission. Denizens may be assholes, but they don't act like lying assholes.

Terezi blasts past them, clicking her canekind against the side of the gemstone door as she walks through it. "It does not appear to be locked. Which means we can lawfully enter the premises and investigate possible foul play at our leisure!" she says, kicking her foot over the wide threshold.
Dave starts forward. Karkat finishes pitching a fit over the cauldron of failed nakodile stew and stomps past him. "Hephaestus told us to come here and rob him blind. We have so much permission," Dave points out as he walks into the shadow of the door. Then he has to flash back a step, because the floor abruptly drops out in a steep cliff just past the point where Terezi swings her foot. The only light comes from the ambient red-orange light of LoHaC itself; even if they float down, once they're out of sight of the door they're gonna flashlights or some other heavyduty shit to see anything. Terezi and Karkat might be better off than Dave in that regard, but would it have killed Hephaestus to install some interior lights? Or have some kind of decorating scheme beyond 'dank pit into the fiery abyss'? Dave can't see from here how deep the pit goes, or how far in front of them the cave extends horizontally: it's shadows all the way through.

Oriole hangs back, though. Karkat catches up with an angry huff, his glare turning in so many directions as he passes through the door that Dave and Terezi both have to catch him by the arm before he stomps over the cliff. Oriole clears his throat before Karkat can get more than a few words into his furious close-call rant. "Kay, cool. Do I still need to be here? Because I'm not interested in finding out whether Hephaestus turned all the traps back on."

…Oh, for fuck's sake. Dave sticks out a hand and pushes it up under Karkat's chin so that his teeth clack together and he shuts up. Karkat swells with fury, but Dave turns back toward Oriole. "Traps? Please tell me this is a joke. Grimdark-lite me didn't have any trouble getting in."

Oriole's shoulders hunch further as he folds his arms. His orange-yellow eyes won't meet Dave's - which is great, since Dave doesn't think he's up for eye contact right now, either. "Yeah, because you and Hephaestus were both literally possessed." Oriole says, sounding vexed. As he speaks, he starts floating forward with reluctance written all over his feathers. "Denizens usually have loads of annoying puzzles and riddles and gauntlets and shit set up so you won't bother them until you've leveled up enough to be worth challenging." He pauses just as he reaches the door, then smacks his face. "Fuck, did I just info-dump? One of you, slap me if I start doing it again."

"As you wish!" Terezi says, cheerfully. "And of course, thank you for volunteering to help guide us through said traps."

Her smile is full of knives, and Oriole freezes, clearly realizing too late that he's wandered forward through the door. They're all on the thin strip of obsidian between the door and the drop-off; before Oriole can back out, Terezi pats him on the shoulder and steers him further in. Oriole throws Dave a desperate look.

Dave shrugs. "We're all in this together, dude," he says. It gets him a middle finger that isn't from Karkat - variety is the spice, and all that.

It's easy to be flippant about it before the door slams shut on them. The two halves of the door move soundlessly right up until their jagged edges clash and lock together. All four of them flinch at the sudden sound and the abrupt darkness - Karkat spins and loses his footing as his left leg flies out over the edge, and, moving almost totally blind, Dave seizes him by the wrist before he can do a flying pirouette off the handle into the abyss. It's an un-fucking-fathomably lucky grab, based only on Dave's vague memory of where Karkat stood before the light cut out, and the way the troll's eyes flash in the dark as he starts to fall, and Dave does not want to try that move again.

Luckily, in the next second, Terezi and Oriole light up like fireflies. They cast conflicting shades of teal and orange on the wall, and the light causes weird rave shadows on everyone's faces as Dave looks around. Dave has like, zero interest in helping them out by turning himself into a nighttime, but you know. Good job team.

Then light blooms on the wall, and when Dave finishes blinking, he sees a perfectly functional lightbulb hanging in an old-timey metal lantern bell. It casts a warm yellow-white light over the landing. At least a dozen more lanterns jut out from grooves in the craggy black-brown walls, stretching out over the edge and wandering along the wall for quite some distance in a downward diagonal. The landing shudders once, and then starts emitting bursts of steam from the far edges with a high-pitched hiss and rattle. With a few squeals, a series of metal blocks slide out from the edge of the landing, overlapping with each other and smoothly forming a wide stairwell into the now-lit pit. Some of the steps have rivets the size of Dave's head bolting them together, and all of the stairs are as tall as Dave. These are not people stairs, goddammit.

But on the other hand, they are stairs, which is way more promising for a dungeon crawl than a dead drop. Look at this shitton of progress being made.

Karkat, still hanging with one foot dangling over the edge of the landing, twists free from Dave's grip and hops down to the next step in one go. He lands with a hollow metal bang, then glares back up at the rest of the group. "Well, let's get a fucking move on."

"Fun times," Oriole mutters. He casts one last longing look back at the door - and isn't that a problem for a future Dave - and then floats down, his wings canted to catch the air even though he obviously doesn't need them except to show off, anymore. Dave jumps down before Terezi can get any ideas. Because if there is one thing Terezi is, it is a troll who gets ideas.

They drop only five giant steps down before she stops them. "Hold on," Terezi says, her voice dead serious. She holds up a claw, then lets it curl, hesitating. "I smell something amiss," she says, but she sounds unsure. "On the next step. One of you toss a shoe down, or something."

"Shit," Oriole says. And then all three of these assholes look at Dave, like they expect him to peel off a shoe and belt it at the floor. As if he's gotta be responsible for whatever this shit is.

Whatever. If Hephaestus did trap this place out its ass, Dave's going to be so pissed. Dave rummages around in midair for a second, and finally pulls a spare sock that's missing its match out of wherever shit goes when he's not using it. Karkat starts to gripe, but Dave flicks the sock out over the next step and then squats to watch it fall. Oriole hunkers down beside him, feathers trailing over the edge, and they all wait while the sock flops through the air and lands with a pathetic puff of air.

The floor of the step drops out. They all crane their heads over the edge to watch as the heavy sheet of metal turns over and over and drops into the endless pit below. The rectangular frame of the step itself stays in place, leaving a wide gap between them and the next stair.

Terezi, leaning with her claws on her knees, looks back up at Dave pointedly. "…Oh, that asshole," Dave says, drawing his phone like it's a sword. "Hang on, I'm texting him."

TG: hephaestus
TG: dude
TG: seriously
HS: You've arrived at my smithy?
TG: no
TG: you have a shitton of traps set up dont you ass
TG: like legit
TG: the world is ending and you left your death traps running HS: Yes, that was on purpose.
TG: motherfucker
TG: this is bullshit unlike any other bullshit i have ever experienced TG: this is peak bullshit
HS: You need some kind of challenge.
HS: Otherwise what would be the point?
TG: you couldn't turn them off to speed up this process
HS: Don't be ridiculous.
HS: Why would you build a trap and not implement it?
HS: That is just silly.
TG: is this some kind of metaphor for my life
TG: are there puppets rigged up in the walls
TG: are you a daddy issues metaphor
TG: are the ghosts of adoptive juggalo children past going to haunt me throughout HS: That is entirely up to your interpretation.
TG: copout
HS: It's your personal quest.
HS: What you take away from it is up to you.
HS: How do you want to grow?
HS: Who do you choose to be?
HS: What are you willing to sacrifice?
TG: i want your loot you ass
TG: why didn't you just take it with you when you left TG: how hard would that have been
HS: I cannot touch the Hoard. I can only guard it, and release it to you.
HS: Technically grist is a gaming abstraction and does not actually exist on the physical plane -
TG: do you at least get a tax refund
HS: Stop that.
HS: Why do you say these things.
TG: because people like you keep giving me openings
TG: its too easy man
-- carcinoGeneticist [CG] has joined the chat! -- CG: DAVE STOP FUCKING AROUND. THIS IS JUST ABSURD.
TG: karkat no
CG: KARKAT YES! LISTEN UP, MOTHERFUCK.
HS: I am listening.
TG: dude
CG: DO YOU ACTUALLY THINK FOR ONE MOTHERFUCKING SECOND THAT THIS IS ACCEPTABLE?!
CG: WE HAVE TIME SATAN HIMSELF LITERALLY FUCKING REALITY WITH A RUSTY CHAINSAW, A MASSIVE ABOMINATION THAT NEEDS MORE SYLLABLES THAN 'LEVIATHAN' TO FULLY ENCAPSULATE ITS UTTER FUCKERY IN A SINGLE NAME UNDULATING LIKE THE MOTHER GRUB'S ASSHOLE, AND JACK 'LITERAL UNIVERSE CANCER' NOIR PISSING ON OUR HEADS!
CG: AND YOU THINK! THIS IS THE TIME! FOR SOME OSHA NON-COMPLIANT DEATH FACTORY HELL GAUNTLET?!
CG: FUCK OFF!
-- gallowsCalibrator [GC] has joined the chat! --
GC: H4V3 YOU B33N HOLD1NG TH4T ON3 1N FOR 4 LONG T1M3 NOW, OR…?
CG: SHUT UP! THE ONLY FUCKING WORDS I WANT TO SEE TYPED IN THIS MEMO ARE THE WORDS 'Yes, I will turn the traps off, no problem,' IN BLACK AND RED FONT FROM THE GUY WHOSE CHATHANDLE INITIALS ARE HS! NO EXCEPTIONS!
HS: I see.
CG: WELL?!
Karkat shrieks and stomps back along the step they're stuck on; his poor phone makes ominous creaking sounds as he clenches his claws into fists. He manages to stifle it by shoving part of a fist into his mouth, but agonized, furious wheezes continue to escape. Dave nudges Oriole in the side with an elbow. "Please tell me you remember the traps?"

Oriole straight faces it. "We're fucked."

Terezi shakes her head and steps up to the very edge of the step, teetering on her heels. She snaps her fingers, and her teal aura kicks back into gear, concentrated most strongly on her forehead between her eyes. "C'mon, cool kids. Let me see what there is to see," she says, confident and grim at the same time. "Oriole, we're on point."

Not all of the traps are death traps, per se.

Some of them are just annoying puzzles. And that's worse.

Definitely worse.

"He ripped this one off from some Final Fantasy bullshit, didn't he!" Karkat fumes, stamping his foot on and off the pressure sensitive plate so that the pale glow of the symbol carved into the metal repeatedly lights up, and the middle barrier of the bridge they're trying to perform weird puzzle shit to summon repeatedly slides in and out of the wall. Karkat started life angry and has only gotten pissier throughout the course of his life, but he has truly achieved new anger heights since Hephaestus blew him off about the trap thing. Terezi and Dave can only lighten the atmosphere with high quality banter so much when Karkat is simmering like this - Oriole doesn't even try - and Dave suspects that this may be a John-level problem. Until John finishes his whatever thing, they're stuck with the Karkat equivalent of an armed anger-warhead.

Terezi does her level best. She's a goddamn trooper, Dave will give her that - or else she just does not give a shit about Karkat's latest snit, which is also fair. "I think that, archetypally speaking, it is more likely that Final Fantasy took its inspiration from the collective subconscious of reality," she says, using her canekind to very carefully count the number of pressure plates between her and the one they have figured out through stupid amounts of trial and error will slide the last barrier out of the way and finish the bridge. Oriole floats over the third second of the bridge; he looks resigned to his fate as he floats over the block, vanishing from sight at periodic intervals as Karkat continues to tap his foot. "Also, I believe it's from Dragon Age!" she adds, in good cheer, as she reaches the fifth tile on the left. The last barrier slams into the wall with a note of finality - metal shutters close over the openings, and when Terezi eases her weight back off the pressure plate, the bridge stays intact and the barriers stay folded away.

Progress is a hell of a thing.

"Another one done. How long have we been down here?" Oriole mumbles. He waits as they all walk across the bridge past him, and only draws level with Terezi when she gives him a pointed not-look. She's been relentless about interrogating Oriole for details whenever she thinks she smells a new trap ahead of them, and despite Oriole's track record up til now - he's called traps correctly about three times out of five - between the two of them they've probably saved everyone's asses from being handed to them the most since they decided to go through with this.

"Debatable," Dave mumbles back. They could start hurrying any time now, but hurrying would be a good way to wander face first into the next trap Hephaestus cooked up. He's just waiting for the puppet trap. It's gonna happen. Dave can feel it in his goddamn bones. By fuck - even if Bro himself had to somehow beat them down here to rig it up as a special favor for Hephaestus - it's gonna happen.

Apparently his mumble isn't mum enough, though, because everybody gives him a weird look. Karkat stops, eyes Dave incredulously, and says, "You're the time guy. You don't know -?"

Oh, right. That. "Nope. It's weird. I can barely feel Lord Doucheanocoe from down here. But also, I'm having to keep count of the seconds manually, and I only realized I needed to start doing that when we were halfway through the third puzzle." Dave scuffs his foot along the last section of the bridge, and then starts to hop down the spiral staircase to the next level. They've been descending almost straight down vertically for a while now, with only brief breaks for puzzles and traps, and this spiral extends far enough down that Dave can't see the landing below. Yeesh. "Best guess? Not more than forty five minutes," he adds. The estimate's as rough as sandpaper, but it's the best he has got. If time doesn't jolt forward elsewhere. If time is even running evenly for all the lands. If Dave isn't losing his time sense next. These ifs are huge - collectively about the size of fucking Jupiter - but explaining how many uncertainties are feeding into his estimate will just complicate shit.

They descend. After a while, Terezi gets antsy, her sharp canines audibly tapping on one another as she clicks her teeth. Then she swoops into the spiral stairwell, scoops Dave and Karkat up, and dangles them over the abyss as she and Oriole drop straight down alongside the wrought iron structure. It speeds shit up, sure, but Karkat thrashes the entire time, even when Terezi tries to pinch him in the side, and Dave's cape flaps up and plasters itself over his eyes so he can't see anything until he unwinds it from around his head.

The ominous red glow at the bottom of the endless pit brightens as they fall, and starts to resolve into clusters of red hot pools that make Dave's eyes ache. Then the pools sharpen further still, the light and heat radiating up around them, and Dave can make out the craggy edges of an opening all around them - the walls of the lair open up into a round mouth over a vast magma chamber. It's huge enough to contain a whole city, easy; instead, a path of thick, bubble-pocked black rock winds between simmering pools of magma. At the very center is an immense fortress shaped like an anvil, with a pair of blocky gears turning on either side to churn up the magma into a molten froth with a constant, rumbling drone. Two snake-like pipes rise up from the fortress's ass end, the metal glowing red with the heat.

Or - Dave's a little hazy on this one - it's an anvil shaped like a fortress. Either way, Hephaestus is an ass who built himself a lair inside of his lair. A layered lair. Goddammit.

"I have changed my mind. All this lava sauce is not my cup of scalding hot leaf fluid," Terezi says, after they touch down on the rocky, uneven path. Dave jams his foot in a pothole the size of a microwave and a chunk of rock breaks off with a dry snap. The heat from the close proximity to so much lava finally kicks in, and it's a doozy - Dave starts flapping his cape like a fan (because what the shit else are capes used for?) while Terezi droops over her cane, scrubbing irritably at the teal-tinted veneer of sweat on her face and under her arms. Karkat looks as uncomfortable as Dave, but he's too grumpy to ask for capeflaps, apparently. Out of all of them, only Oriole looks unbothered - until he notices everyone else breaking a bead. Then he looks pissed off.

"Let's just go inside," Dave says, as sweat drips near his eye and his shades threaten to slide down his nose. He doubts the inside of a giant metal building will be any cooler, but the faster they do this shit, the less time heatstroke has to bite all of them in the ass. Once again, the door hangs open, waiting for them - and it snaps shut behind them once they're all through. So that's a 2X door problem they have, now. The gears rumbling outside echo hard through the walls here, causing a steady grinding sound that makes Dave's teeth ache and gives him an insta-headache. The air's stifling; if Equius had come along, they could just swim the rest of the way to the hoard. Despite the electric lanterns dangling from the high ceiling, Hephaestus didn't bother installing air conditioning. The ass.

The first room doesn't have much in it, except for the giant fucking hammers displayed on the walls. Each one towers over the room, all made of different materials - Dave spots one with a solid diamond hammer's head, and one that glows a creepy shade of green. One is pale lavender, with fluttering yellow ribbons and extra sharp knobs that glitter in the light, and another is deep green with black and white spikes jutting out where the claw should be. Two of the display pedestals sit empty near the far end of the hall. It's like a stern, lawnwork-loving suburban father figure's idea of a tool-themed trophy room; it fills Dave with a deep sense of kitsch and unease.

Before they go another five feet, Terezi points her cane at the wall, nearly clotheslining Oriole across the chest. When she sticks her cane out and waves it around, a line of thin slots opens up to unleash a barrage of metal javelins. They shoot so hard that they lodge themselves deep in the wall opposite, and don't stop firing until they run out of javelins - Dave can hear the rattle of an empty machine gun/javelin launcher wheeze and click inside the walls.

And then the next room has an obstacle course lined with channels of lava for atmospheric lighting. Because why the hell not? God, Hephaestus must have been bored. The dude apparently had nothing better to do with his time except make up dumb puzzles and traps, and that's sad. That's really sad. Dave might shed a single ironic tear over it, if he ever gets the chance - and if he ever stops being pissed that they have to go through this at all. This shit is just unnecessary, and it is totally a reflection of his early childhood spent with a paranoid, puppet-launching parental unit. There's literally no other logical explanation.

"You know what would make this easier? If we had Jade or John around to poof our flimsy asses into the fuckall dimension so we could bypass all this fuckery. Why did we wind up going through the Ninja fucking Warrior death course with the team of people who can't teleport, again?" Karkat demands, when they reach the part in the obstacle course where they're supposed to climb a straight vertical wall to reach the key for the next stage. Once the motion sensor kicks in, though, the floor drops out to reveal a magma death trap below if you fail the jump. It's rendered moot by virtue of Terezi's mere existence, but it's the point that matters.

The last section of the obstacle course involves a bunch of razor-sharp blades rotating around several cylinders at top speed, with no room left to fly over or around the wall of spiky death. Dave slows time and yanks everyone around through the gaps; Terezi nearly crushes his hand with an unrelenting grip, Oriole makes the whole thing as awkward as physically possible thanks to his massive wing problem, and Karkat insists on crawling as low to the floor as possible, so they have to scoot around for an extra thirty seconds finding a floor-only route. Karkat loses a tiny tuft of hair right off the top when Dave miscalculates, thinks they've safely ducked under the last blade, and lets time go a little too early, but Dave zips his mouth shut. Karkat grabs the top of his head, suspicion written all over his face, but his hair too naturally messy for him to find the missing chunk. Thank god. Terezi can't keep a straight face, but she doesn't say anything. Terezi grinning at Karkat in a highly suspect, shit-eating manner is common enough that Karkat just glares back, and that's that. Dave's in the clear.

And finally, they walk into a room so large that Dave thinks for a second that they've walked right back out of the anvil by mistake. The high, vaulted metal archs of the ceiling have tall windows covered with wrought-iron, diamond-shaped bars. Lava flows freely along each side of the room and under the thin layer of steel mesh that serves as a floor. Their shoes are literally inches from melting right through the bars into the molten rock rolling underfoot. And in the center of the room, raised up on a heavy metal platform, is a chess set with the pieces constructed not out of carapaces (which - hell no, Dave wouldn't be able to look WV in the eye again) but instead metal sculptures in the shape of underlings and consorts. Copper wire nakodiles make up the ranks of the pawns on both sides. The rooks are dark metal giclopses, the knights platinum basilisks, the bishops golden acherons. Obsidian lich queens with fanned crowns and iron joints stand in the queen's spot, each the size of an Arch Deaconstructor, and jet tarrasques stand in for kings.

Terezi loses her shit. Only a little bit, but it makes Dave flinch when Terezi flings her cane down on the ground with a sharp clatter. "And this one's from Harry Potter! Plagiarism! It's copyright violations all the way down!" she yells, yanking a package of bright red chalk out of her pocket, ripping off the cover with her teeth, and flinging herself down to start outlining the board. "This has gone too far. Nobody touch anything! This is a crime scene!"

It occurs to Dave that the heat might be getting to them. Just a little. Oriole groans and buries his face in his hands. Karkat just stares, jaw dropped, while Terezi continues to cite federal copyright law at the top of her lungs.

"Fuck it, I'll check if John or Jade is free yet," Dave says. No one acknowledges him except Karkat, who can only shake his head in disbelief. He stares at Dave for a moment, and then back at Terezi, mute.

TG: john
TG: yo eb you alive
TG: its not really urgent were just lazy fucks who dont want to spend another half hour playing death twister chess to solve a puzzle
TG: maybe its a little urgent
TG: on account of tzs losing her damn mind over copyright shit TG: husbando?
TG: …
TG: be careful man

TG: jade
TG: you here yet
TG: i will take the silence as a no
TG: shit

Plan Harleybert is…not a go. Dave sticks his hands in his pockets and slumps his weight to one side, shaking his head when Karkat throws him a pleading look. "Nothing. Sorry," he says, and the two of them go back to watching Terezi float upside down over the exposed magma floor around the edges of the board to outline the rest of the square. When she rubs one chalk stick down to a nub, Terezi chuck the used nub into the fiery brimstone shit and starts a new one. She shows no sign of slowing down any time soon.

"They better be okay," Karkat says, weirdly quiet. Dave does him the solid bro courtesy of not saying anything asshole-ish in response. Sometimes he's an asshole without consciously trying, though, so on the off chance this is one of those times, he just nods and gives a tiny shrug. It's hard to think of anything happening off LoHaC is real - there's something muffling and closed off about Hephaestus's lair. Like they're isolated from the rest of the world. Dave can't even remember the last time he checked the group memos; usually he checks so often it's more a compulsion than a bad habit, flipping from the memo to text messages and back to the memo even when he knows it's too early for anyone to have responded in the past 1.2 seconds. Down here, he can barely think through the heat.

Terezi needs another two minutes to finish outlining the board. When she reaches them again, she flings down the last stub of chalk and pants. Then she picks up her cane, taps it a few times for good measure, and looks up, her expression toothy but satisfied.

Well, uh. Good for her. Dave jerks his chin at Oriole. "Fuck Harry Potter chess. We're flying."

"Good call," Terezi says, her voice droll once again. Just one weird chalk tantrum, and she's back to normal. God damn, they really need to hook Karkat up with a stress-relieving hobby like that, because yelling just seems to wind him up more.

"As if we've got time to do anything else," Oriole adds. He's looking particularly floaty, no matter how much that seems to bother him, so Dave decides to give Terezi a break and grabs Oriole's arm. Oriole makes a sound halfway between a bird warble and gargling, but Dave waits him out. After a long, significant staredown, he throws up his hands, slings Dave's arm around his own neck, and picks him up. The dude goes full princess carry. Dave nearly inhales an entirely mouthful of orange feathers that appear to be sprouting straight out of Oriole's shoulders, and instantly regrets all his life choices. The problem with trying to one-up a version of yourself - you look like an ass no matter who wins. Once Terezi gives Karkat a fresh noogie and hauls him, squirming, over one shoulder, the two fly over the chessboard in one quick hop. Easy as pie. Dave doesn't know if these metal chess pieces would have moved to block them from crossing if he and Karkat tried to walk it -

But honestly. Who is Dave kidding? Of course they would have.

Oriole dumps Dave on his ass like a tool as soon as they're through the door. Dave pauses time with a friction-spark jolting through his sternum, flails a little, and rights himself so he can land on a knee and a foot instead, the bone of his kneecap grinding hard into the hard black, smoothed stone of the floor. Terezi drops Karkat a foot off the ground, and Karkat flies forward a little with eyes the size of dinner plates before landing in a short run, arms out to either side.

Dave glances around while he's still crouched on the floor. This room is suspiciously free of weird puzzle shit, and extra long besides - more of a hallway than a room, and a pretty length hallway at that. Which means weird trap shit will be bounteous as shit. It's divided into three long lines, with channels of lava as thick as the path itself flanking them on the left and right. Unlike the chess room where the magma rode high right under their feet, this path juts high above the level of the lava, which churns in restless waves about ten feet below on either side. A complex arrangement of gears, levers, and pulleys cover the walls, creaking and turning and spinning and spewing huge bursts of steam into the air - as if the heat wasn't bad enough, and humidity was needed to achieve maximum hellishness. Two transparent pipes suck up the lava at the far end; the suction forms tiny whirlpools in the magma, while the pipes themselves carry the molten rock up through the ceiling and out of sight. He's just about to stand and start dawdling at a snail's pace while Terezi and Oriole start bickering over possible trap placement, when -

Clang!

Dave stiffens, and looks back over his shoulder.

The obsidian lich queen stares back through the chess room door with a glimmer of light in her baleful ruby of an eye. She's way too goddamn huge to fit through the door - her fanned crown alone dwarfs the door frame. If she starts punching through the wall, though -

She doesn't. Instead, the lich queen piece lifts her head out of the way, and the smaller chess pieces burst through in a flood of clanking, shrieking metal. The nakodile pawns slap around aimlessly on their wide feet, then get shoved aside so the gleaming metal rooks, knights, and bishops can storm through. The basilisk knights gleam silvery white as they wriggle over the sides of the path, crawling along the sides just above the level of the lava. Dave can't tell if they're creepy, animated steampunk sculptures or if they've been real, metal-themed underlings loitering on a chessboard all this time.

Whichever it is, they're fucking pissed.

The king sculpture comes last of all, dragging heavy steel claws along the ground, its massive jaw hanging open to reveal knife-like teeth the size of swords. It's not as huge as the queen, but its weight causes each stomp of its feet to leave massive cracks in the path.

"Uh oh," Dave says, usefully.

Karkat lunges at him and drags Dave upright by the wrist. "Running! Now!" he yells, sprinting down the path. Dave gets his feet under him and bolts after the troll. Oriole streaks overhead. Terezi flies in low, keeping pace with Dave without touching the stone, and she turns her head back to smell the army of chess pieces better, her hair flying into her face as she concentrates. Her cane turns over in her claws once - twice - but god, Dave does not want to fight these shits right now. As long as nobody gets any terrible hero-y ideas and tries to fight them alone, Dave won't feel obligated to hang back and help fight, too.

They make it halfway. Not bad, all things considered.

And then it all goes to complete and utter shit. Most of the chess pieces are slower once Dave draws Karkat and Terezi into his running beat, but the acherons cover a huge amount of ground in a single stride. Then Terezi breaks Dave's groove, jerking to a stop and whipping around - she tries to grab Karkat - misses his sleeve by the barest inch - yells, "Wait -!

Dave doesn't miss. He hits the brakes hard, turning his feet and skidding to a stop so fast he probably shears off half the sole left on his shoes, and yanks Karkat to a stop by the back of his jacket.

Karkat stumbles with a squawk as his collar digs into his throat. His foot, however, lands square on a section of the path -

That depresses under his weight.

And starts to beep. It's barely audible under the metallic groans and screeching of the chess pieces' rusty joints, but the three of them all hear it. Karkat freezes, staring down at his foot as though it has personally betrayed him.

"Well. This smells like…a predicament. Dave, have I mentioned recently that your denizen is particularly douchetacular?" Terezi asks, her tone light and obviously forced, now. She swipes a strand of hair out of the corner of her mouth, her breath coming hard as she kneels to smell the trap. Dave turns to keep an eye on the approaching horde, but he can feel Karkat start to tremble with the effort of holding still. If the pressure plate just triggered a trap that will block off the path when they start to move again - inconvenient, but whatever. But nothing has happened immediately, and if the rest of this path is full of mines or some shit -

Dave's gonna need to run real goddamn fast. "No, but god, I feel you," Dave says, fervently. "Any idea what that trap does?"
Terezi lifts her head, looking grim. She braces with her cane and pushes up out of her crouch, letting her head hang low for a second. "No," she says, clipped. "And that horde is going to hit us any second now. So we'll just have to wing it! If we make it fast."

"Consider it done, TZ." The path shudders hard as the acherons and giclopses hammer on it, closing in fast. The more they move, the more steam pours from them in huge vents, and the clouded heat of the room only gets worse. Dave feels like he's walking in a sauna. A lava sauna. A lava sauna that is about to get flattened by a horde of metal monsters. He raises a hand, fingers ready and waiting to snap and send his turntables flying if need be. Karkat appears to have clamped his jaw shut for the first time in his life, and doesn't say a word as Terezi and Dave each wrap an arm around him. The troll's tremors from the effort to hold still and avoid pushing the trigger further have only gotten worse.

"We need to keep moving forward. If it involves the ceiling or the floor, we just need to keep moving, no matter what," Terezi says. Overhead, Oriole has finally realized their current state of boneage, and circles back on orange wings with a loud swear. He's not gonna backtrack in time to help with the immediate problem, but it's the thought that counts. "If it's a mine or something similar - well. Hope you're not overly attached to that leg, Karkat!"

Karkat snaps. "I like both my fucking legs equally, and I like them right where they fucking are!" he screeches. "And if one of them pops off, I will personally pick it back up and smack you upside the nugbone with it -"

Oh boy. Dave rolls his shoulder, and feels it pop. One of the acherons swings a massive, lumbering trunk of an arm to bash a giclops out of its path, knocking the underling into the wall where it slides down into the magma with a shrieking hiss, and fuck they are about to get royally squashed. Dave chants a countdown, too fast for either troll to keep up. "Right. Threetwoonego-"

He wrenches time as close to a stop as he dares, and nearly drops right then and there. He forces himself forward through the sudden agony, so he won't be more dead weight for Terezi to drag, but it's a close call. The three of them rocket forward, Dave and Karkat running while Terezi braces to drag them up if the floor stops being a thing. Compared to the slow crawl of the chess pieces, they're lightning fast, and Dave holds time like that until he sees the room through a pulsing haze of wobbling fog. One foot in front of the other, and even that stops mattering once Terezi pulls them off the ground. The pressure plate rises up a fraction of a fraction of an inch, and finishes only when the three of them are a good fifteen feet away and clear.

Problem one: the trap explodes, and as it turns out? Fifteen feet isn't good enough. The explosion hits them hard in the backs, propelling them forward in a spray of painful chips of stone.

Problem two, the problem that really leaves them up shit creek without a paddle: Dave forgot to keep track of the goddamn basilisks. Oriole shouts a warning, but between the explosion and the roar of the chess pieces, Dave's lucky to hear it at all. Terezi starts ascending rapidly, darker teal streaking down the back of her shirt - Karkat's got similar bits of shrapnel scattered across his back, his face screwed up as he starts healing it. Dave can't even feel if his back hurts, compared to the pain of meddling with time that sloppily.

And then the first basilisk skitters up the far wall, and leaps. It plows into Terezi with a loud clang! of metal limbs and joints crashing into each other. The impact shakes Dave hard, clearing out the haze of pain - Karkat rips blood out of his own back, and sends it pelting in tiny sharp blades at the basilisk's milky opal eyes - the second basilisk piece launches up at an angle from the side of the path, knocking them further forward but also crushing the three of them in a tangle against the first - scrambling basilisk foot, smacking hard and rolling with his arms up to protect his head. He flashes back upright in an instant; his head spins from the sudden tumble, but he fixes on the first flash of teal that he sees under a shitton of platinum. "Shit!" he says, drawing a sword and darting toward the two basilisks pile on top of Terezi. He doesn't know which sword - it's heavy and mostly white, with a timetable record embedded in the hilt - but he brings it down on the nearest basilisk's foreleg in a single slice, and it cuts through so clean it's like the basilisk is made of butter. The underling rears back with a hiss of steam that makes Dave's eyes water. But then the basilisk stumbles back, and Dave sees that its opal eyes have been shattered by tiny red stars. He cuts through two of its remaining legs with a snicker-snack, and the underling collapses onto its belly, thrashing uselessly and venting more steam in a panic.

They hit the path and skid in a jumble of legs and hot metal. Dave gets tossed free by a kick from a

Problem three: when Dave spins around and jams his sword into the back of the second basilisk's neck, Terezi still hasn't moved. She doing the exact opposite of moving, as a matter of fact, which in more physical terms resembles laying facedown with blood spreading under her hair. "Ter-" Dave breaks off, because this basilisk isn't newly blinded and bucks to try to knock Dave off before he can finish sawing through its steel spine. He dodges the crown of barbed wire thorns that stick out from the thing's head, and stabs his sword down through the metal joint of its shoulder to make it cut that shit out. It limps with a hard list to the left, and Dave hacks off the other front leg so that the basilisk can only scramble backward on its hind legs before Dave plunges his sword through the back of its neck again. This time, the blade stabs through. He scrambles off the paralyzed metal enemy and flashsteps to Terezi. When he touches her face, she feels cold, but that's normal. "Oh, fuck. Fuck. Wake up!" There's no way - absolutely no way - that wasn't them being heroic, it was just dumb -

Terezi groans, and shifts her head to the side, her forehead scraping against the rock and strands of blood-sticky hair clinging to the floor and her cheek in a teal mess. Almost all of it is coming from her nose, which looks like it'll never run straight again. Her right eye looks horribly swollen already - Dave fractured his eye bone a long ass time ago, and it doesn't look like Terezi busted it that badly, but the bruises are gonna be nasty. "Can't smell a damn thing," Terezi croaks, dazed. She spits out a wad of phlegm and blood, and Dave hastily helps her upright. She touches her nose with a ginger claw, grimacing. "Shit. How do I make thish sight thing work without a nose, again? Where'sh Kar-"

"Hey! Can you giant fucks fuck off for three seconds!"

Dave spins around. He can't see Karkat anywhere, but fucking hell, can he hear the guy. The pair of golden acherons lumber along the path, dangerously close, gaining speed as they target Dave and Terezi again with pinprick white-gold eyes. He needs to move Terezi, fast, and unplug her goddamn nose. Beyond the acheron underlings, the king tarrasque piece looms by the very edge of the path, raising its heavy foot for another step. There's no Karkat, though, and that is incredibly concerning.

Oriole arrows down out of the sky. "Hang on - shit!" he yells, as a giclops tries to bat him aside. "Get out of the way!" He swoops down and around, wings folded in tightly so he's less of a target, and a giclops actually topples off the side of the path in a clumsy lunge that forces Oriole to spiral out of the way again with a curse. He keeps trying to fly to the tarrasque piece, for some reason…

Oh. Dave stops looking at the giant chess monsters, and looks down at the edge of the path, and finally sees the pair of tiny grey claws clinging to the edge. Karkat's just dangling there.

The tarrasque underling slams its foot down, and that entire shelf of the path shatters under its weight. "FUCK!" Karkat shrieks, as the rock all caves in and starts to fall toward the lava below. Oriole swings in one last time - but the wide tarrasque piece is falling too with an immense groan of warping metal, and -

Dave runs. "No no no no no -" he says, unsure of what his volume is doing, sword forgotten as he half-runs, half-claws his way toward the breach. He flashsteps to slip around the acherons - they're too close to Terezi, shit -

And a section of the floor depresses under Dave's weight. He's running too fast to just stop. "No!" he screams, frustration and panic choking him, and when he slams time to a stop to escape the blast radius, he doesn't know if it's the explosion or the fireworks of agony or the nearest acheron that knocks him flat.

---

TY: If you want my hoard, get over here and remove this thing from my property. Now.

EB: Whoa, what -

TY: I mean it. Right now.

EB: What thing, though?!

TY: DO IT.

EB: Okay, fine! Jeez!

What the heck is his damage? he thinks at the Breeze.

BE: it could be literally anything :T he's a pretty cranky dude

BE: but...if he's actually bothering to call you, it might actually kinda sorta be an emergency :(

Understatement of the year. John shakes his head and scrubs the side of his face with a hand, already feeling stretched in twenty different directions at once. A ginormous part of him kinda wants to tell Typhheus to deal with whatever-the-problem-is by himself, but ignoring his own personal giant boss monster might not be a good plan. At all. In the slightest. At best, it's the denizen equivalent of a prank call – at worst, it's serious business time. "Uh, guys? I think I need to go check something out on my old land for a minute," he says, feeling with the Breeze for whoever's physically closest to him. Also, why is he the only denizen who's consistently an asshole? He can't really count Cetus, all things considered.

BE: technically they're all assholes. in their own way. actually, the more glitched and damaged a session gets, the more likely they are to make exceptions to try to fix it

BE: and basically, this is about as broken as a not-doomed session can get...

BE: this is probably him being...helpful! in the rudest possible way

John shakes his head, grumbling. He needs to find Gamzee on LoWaS anyway; might as well suck it up and do it! Karkat comes over to try to persuade John to rescue him from Team Dave (which is secretly kiiinda funny) but John…feels uneasy. Like. Down in his goiter, or something obscure like that! Then his stomach starts to knot up, which John understands a heck of a lot better than strange goiter signals, and he watches Terezi reel Karkat away with a forlorn look once Karkat gets distracted enough not to see it. If he did, he'd probably march right back over. And for some reason, John really doesn't think that's a good idea. The Breeze weaves through his hair, twitching it this way and that until it's messy enough to meet the Breeze's exacting standards for 'windblown,' and John takes it as a quiet comfort.

Then it yanks on his shirt, threatening to pull it up over his head, and John rolls his eyes. He ambles over to the scratch kids, watching Dirk as he does. Roxy and Jake look up when John approaches, their eyes lit with enthusiasm; after all the craziness of the past day(s), the promise of jungle adventures has them jiggling with anticipation. Jane's more subdued, her expression a little more bleak in a way that John sympathizes with to the max, but she nods to John.

Dirk stares at the floor like he wants to carve right through it and drop into the lava ocean below. John can't see his eyes and Dirk expresses less than Dave, but he gets it. He's been there. There's something really, really embarrassing and horrifying about having something else take over your brain and make you hurt people. Especially people you care about. Then it's extra embarrassing, and no amount of everyone forgiving you can make the guilt go away, or less worried that it might happen again if you mess up. "You guys need to go to LoFaF?" he asks, to make sure. Dirk's head twitches up half an inch, and the warm light of LoHaC hits his face in a way that John can almost see a tight frown on his features.

Jake hunkers down beside Dirk, and then Roxy bounces down on his other side, while Jake starts chattering. "Seems like that's the plan, for now! Not sure how much Dirk can handle, at the mo." He playfully elbows Dirk, who deliberately slumps his weight onto Roxy to knock her off balance. "If hunting through around a mysterious wilderness to wrangle snakes is what's called for, I'm sure we're up to the challenge! I've always wanted to be a gentleman adventurer," Jake adds, shooting a pair of finger pistols with a determined grin and a wink.

Roxy slumps back onto Dirk – except she pushes off with her feet in a weird frog hop, and the momentum knocks all three of them over like dominos. "Kind of hard to jump into the kerfuffle when you can't fly through the void of space," Jane says, jerking her chin up toward the Medium with a wry look she reserves for John. She reaches down to haul everybody up and stop the tiny skirmish of play-shoving; Roxy latches onto Jane's arm when it gets close enough, and whoops with delight when Jane successfully lifts her up.

Uh, yeah. Stick these guys in a room and they'll probably bounce right through the walls! Between the adrenalin and Dirk's return and the end of the world, they're on the edge of hyperactive, and John does not know where they're getting all this energy from. "Weird how that works, right?" he jokes back, and Jane sniff-snorts at him with mock-indignation. Dirk rises, his movements stiff like he's straining not to wobble, and Jake follows suit. He's already fiddling with his grappling hook dealios, which are so cool. John can fly, but swinging around like Spiderman is objectively cool, no matter what. "Don't worry, I've got you guys."

The Breeze gusts around John and swoops them up with laughter that unravels John down to his bones. They're probably not safe from the Lord of Time while they're air, John thinks, as he unspools the scratch kids and flies them up and away from LoHaC – but it feels safer not to be totally solid. He can dodge any cracks faster while they're all incorporeal. Skaia glistens at the center of everything, all its clouds adrift and awhirl. Its? Hers? The Lord of Time lets out another piercing, chattering scream, and Leviathan bellows right back, and Skaia does absolutely nothing interesting whatsoever as John swooshes them around to reach LoFaF.

John doesn't know what he expected – something? Some sign in the clouds that Skaia knows the end is here? One final transformation of the Battlefield? Cool apocalypse junk? Visions of carapacians playing whack-a-mole? Anything?!

Then again, he never was the cloud guy. There's only one girl to call when it comes to weird cloud stuff! Jade better get here soon…

Because her land looks like it's seen better days.
The fact that the Land of Frost and Frogs looks as intact as it does, considering how super blown up it got last session, wows John, honestly. Iridescent auroras shimmer and ripple across the land in erratic, radiant whorls. But a whole chunk of planet hangs loose near the southern pole, which is unsettling to the nth degree – the closer they get, the more John gets a sense of scale for how big the chunk is compared to the rest of the planet. A huge triangular wedge that reaches almost to the equator drifts along under LoFaF, the exposed brown rock of the crust scraping and grinding between the uneven edges that hold it roughly in the cavity it used to fill. John brushes a windy hand through the clouds as the Breeze ushers them down, and feels white, fine grained volcanic ash and frost and something pale, pale yellow-white stick between his fingers, three very different sensations that combine to make one terrible sensation. John sticks a mental tongue out – because holy crap he does not want to taste these clouds! – and lets the ash slip through his fingers. The Breeze sighs along with him, and the whole cloud blows apart and scatters as they drop into open air.

And oh boy. Hephaestus was not kidding about changing the name. John would call this the Land of Slush and Snakes, because under the obscuring prism of the auroras and the clouds, almost all the frost is gone. Wide-veined rivers and extensive wetlands spread out where snowy forests and glaciers used to swallow the landscape, and the dense rainforests that survived getting frozen are in full bloom. Despite the detached chunk of planet hanging out and doing its own thing, for the most part LoFaF looks vibrantly alive. The volcano due north pumps out a whole bunch of pale ash and glows with a boiling red light, but Jade's land grows in spite of it; all the trees are kicking up pollen in congesting droves. Pale purple hummingbirds cluster in charms around red blossoms the size of boulders; a group of them swarm through the air as John and the scratch kids descend, and the Breeze swirls the birds around in a loop before rushing them down toward a clearing in the northern hemisphere.
AA: down there! :)
EB: where there?
EB: let me guess, this isn't current you.
AA: heheheh
EB: is - is there a giant man on top of that volcano?
AA: you should probably leave him be EB: well i mean, i'm already on my way to bug typhoeus… :P
EB: where's echidna? i could make it a full set.
AA: from what i recall she is inside the volcano
EB: darn.
AA: you might still have a chance around now though AA: i think meeting all the denizens is a very fun goal ;)
EB: when is now?
AA: ohhh actually
AA: never mind
EB: what happened now?
AA: many things
AA: but it will be okay!
EB: can you at least tell me if i'm coincidentally choosing to land somewhere near you?
AA: the answer to that would be…yes!
EB: thanks aradia.
AA: heheh any time
EB: eyyyyyyy!
AA: eyyyyyyyy :)

The Aradia perched on the roots of an upended tree shoots John a finger pistol as he solidifies everyone. From the looks of things, when the snow melted, this turned into a big pile of slush and mud, and the trees on the incline sagged and fell over because they were too top-heavy. Even though she's high above the mud, Aradia's shoes and socks are splattered with mud. John hesitates before popping Jane, Jake, Dirk, and Roxy down on the wide trunk of Aradia's tree, but after this staying out of the muck is their problem! John's just gonna keep flying, thanks very much. Lalonde Labs now resides further up the valley, surrounded by thin streams of water that spread out in a shallow, muddy delta - two wide branching trees dwarf the labs, curving out and around either side of the main building and bob large flowers enticingly near the lobby entrance. The doors are shut, but John can see a troll in a white lab coat racing around the lobby, trying to catch what appears to be a giant blue iguana.

Sburb is so weird.

"Aaand we're here!" John announces.

Roxy starts sneezing with a vengeance the second she has a solid nose to sneeze with. Oops. Seconds after speaking, John inhales one breath of unfiltered LoFaF air and spontaneously develops pollen allergies, which causes him to come as close to hacking up a lung through his nose as he's ever been in his life. The air's thick with growth and humidity and pollen; the Breeze is the only fresh air for miles. "We have masks for that," Aradia says, beaming at Roxy and holding out a white facemask that's hooked on her pinky claw. "It's growing season, around here! Welcome to the snake planet!"

'Thanks,' Roxy signs - it's basically looks like she's blowing a kiss, instead of Dave's usual thumbs up, so she must have picked it up from somebody else. Jake rubs at his watering eyes, and Aradia starts tapping Zyrtec into her palm. The package already looks half empty.
Which bodes not-good for them! John's definitely not hanging around. Nope. "We need all hands here that we can muster," Aradia says, passing around the communal Zyrtec so each of the scratch kids can take some. Her already curly hair has achieved twice its old volume thanks to the power of humidity.

"Really? I thought you said you were okay here?" John asks. Please say yes, please say yes, he starts chanting internally; he really doesn't want to go snake hunting. He hasn't seen any snakes yet, but the mud alone is putting him off. The super high probability that Sburb might recreate mosquitoes on LoFaF for the sole purpose of annoying everyone haunts John. And the longer he lingers here, the more restlessness bites at his heels. Forget whatever Typhues wants on LoWaS; John wants to see Gamzee ASAP. He hasn't vanished for this long in ages, and it's making John nervous.

Aradia flaps a claw at him, with a knowing grin tweaking her lips. "We are! Now that we have an entire lab, a few adventurous lusii, and some eager new recruits on hand, gathering up all the ecto-snake samples we need for this genome project should be a snap! As soon as Rose brings the recipe, we can start feeding them through in the right order." A flurry of movement from the low-growing bushes that the fallen tree has half-flattened interrupts Aradia, and John and Jane both tense up as a blue iguana bursts out, frantically thipping its tongue as it sprints after a leggy green frog. It trips over a tangle of tree roots and…apparently gets stuck like that, frantically thrashing its feet as the frog flops to safety. Aradia shakes her head and sighs, then floats off her seat and plucks the consort up out of the roots. "The iguanas are trying, but they're…not the brightest consorts. They're mostly silly, and don't realize we're after snakes now," she says, giving the iguana a quick pat on the head before it takes off splashing through shallow, muddy water.

John rubs the back of his neck. "Are any consorts bright?" he asks, deeply curious.

Aradia looks him dead in the eye. "That is the best question anyone has ever asked, John."

Whelp. "Awesome!" John claps his hands together, and starts flying away from the tree trunk. Fortified by allergy meds, Jake rolls up his pants around his knees and jumps right in the mud with an ecstatic whoop, with Roxy hot on his heels. So looks like they totally have things under control here! "But, uh…if you guys need a quick evac, let me know, okay?"

Jane nods. "We will." Then she vaults off the tree trunk, using her forkkind as a pivot, and lands knee deep in the water. A new frog with glossy purple skin springs out of the water and hops toward the low bushes with a deep croak -

And something snaps it out of the air mid-hop. Roxy lets out a croaking 'yeep!' of her own, while the frog twitches and stills in the snake's mouth. It's a weird looking snake - about fifteen inches long, with ruffled, reddish-orange scales that look especially pointy around its head. It stops to get a better grip on the frog, and another snake with charcoal grey and white scales darts out of the bush to try to steal the frog. The red snake pulls back with a hiss, jaws snapped open to reveal sharp teeth.

Aradia leans down and snags the red snake by the very end of its tail, whistling cheerfully as it immediately flails around to try to lunge at her. Its body is just a little too short to reach her when she holds it at arm's length, though, and she captchalogues it with a twist before it can get worked up. "The red ones have a nasty bite," she tells the scratch kids. Jake nods so wildly he needs to fix his glasses. "The greenish yellow ones are much nicer. Yellow, brown, white, and blue can be feisty, but they haven't poisoned anyone yet, so you should be fine! Just grab any you see and they'll probably come in handy."

Dirk's the last one left on the trunk, and John - hesitates for a second before taking back off on the Breeze. It's not a good idea to poke a Strider when they're not paying attention (Dave always leaps half a foot in the air) so John floats back down with a cough and waves his hand in front of Dirk's
Aaand now John has no idea what he even wanted to say. 'I sympathize with your brain stuff,' would make it weird. 'So, does your brainwashing have a name or anything?' would make it three times as weird, especially if the answer is yes. "Brains suck, huh," he says, after considerable pondering.

Dirk nods, and then jumps off, somehow landing on the one dry spot of land just ahead of Jake and Roxy's determined charge into the water. Jane slogs after them, her specibus slung over one shoulder, while Aradia drifts off in a different direction, raising a hand to wave goodbye to John as he starts to fly away.

"John!"

Never mind. Again. John flips around, and spies Doctor Lalonde striding toward him through the water. She's wearing super fancy black rainboots that reach her thighs, a sharp-cut white coat, hot pink gloves, and a wide-brimmed hat. John has no idea how she isn't dying from the humidity like that, but apart from the wavy mess her hair is turning into, she looks perfectly comfortable. John casts a look back over his shoulder at the sky, and then flies down to meet her. "Oh. Sorry, I was about to head off to my planet. Did you need something?" he asks.

Rue's face does a thing. It goes away too fast for John to identify it as more than a thing, but it's enough for him to notice it. Then she adjusts the brim of her hat with a wry smile. "...Nothing. I simply wanted to remind you to take care of yourself." Then - "You're going alone?"

"No. Gamzee's there already." Rue's eyebrows attempt to abandon her face and ascend to god tier with the force of her skepticism. On the one hand, John feels the need to defend Gamzee - buuut, on the other hand...Gamzee. John tries to reassure her with a smile, but Rue continues to scan his facesearchingly. "Good luck with the snakes!" he says, after the silence starts to stretch too long, and gives Doctor Lalonde a tiny wave.

She closes her eyes for a long second, then opens them, her smile much more pronounced. "Do be careful," she says. She's gone all super formal with her words, in the way that always makes Rose's expression go flat before she starts sniping back. Rose always thinks her mom has some ultra-secret, passive-aggressive, ulterior motive, even when she's saying stilted but nice things. "Telling Rose and Dave to be careful is an exercise in futility, but that's the price of having strong, contrary children. All I can ask is that you come back safely." Then Rue pauses again. Her face is doing the thing again, hesitant and concerned all at once.

John hesitates, and then smiles at her. And he can feel that it's a weird smile, all wobbly and watery and other w-words. "Uh. Yes, Mom," he says, stuttering over his words. At his silent murmur, the Breeze dissolves him, wafting him back up into the sky in a cool gale. "Bye!" John calls back, and the wind carries it back down to Doctor Lalonde for him.

It takes John longer to reach the Land of Wind and Shade than it should. He slows the Breeze with a wordless nudge once they're clear of LoFaF, and the wild, whipping gale calms before it nudges him back, curious. John doesn't say anything, and after another minute of slow flying the Breeze stops pestering him for an explanation. A quiet coil of cold air streams through John, since he doesn't have a body to feel an uneasy chill with, but he can't pin down what worries him as they round Skaia and LoWaS slides into view.
It looks...deceptively peaceful. Heavy, dull grey clouds dot the land in sparse clumps, but for the most part the sky is clear. John can see the glittering, pulsating blue rock of LoWaS; a few of the taller brown plateaus and mountains are tipped with cyan rock, while the low points are a deep cobalt. There's no black oil blotting the landscape or clogging the pipes anywhere, leaving a bunch of dried up lake and riverbeds where oil used to pool. Which seems like it should be a good sign! But at the same time, John can't see any signs of movement as he scans around for Typheus's palace.

Oh. No salamanders. John pours through a village of wide pipe houses that emit off-key music as his winds pass through and around the openings, but there's no sign of the little yellow guys. Their fields of turquoise mushroom are overgrown and untended, and the thin, smooth trees that along rocky outcroppings are pale and leafless. He doesn't find any...bodies. But the total absence of consorts feels like an ill wind.

He doesn't know what he expected.

His old house is still here, a pale, angular tower pointed toward Skaia. John swallows hard, and doesn't fly anywhere near it. Looking at it makes his stomach cramp, which is not a fun time. It means he's solid again - he didn't register the transition. Being air feels just as natural as being corporeal; he only tends to notice the difference because being solid means he bangs his knees into stuff more often if he doesn't pay attention to how high he's floating.

He should probably check in with Gamzee, and then figure out what has got Typheus's giant snake knickers in a twist. That's a good plan.

EB: gamzee?
EB: i'm here! coming down through the clouds in five!
TC: you got karkat with you?
EB: no, dave said he needed him for something.
TC: GOOD.
TC: this motherfucker probably can't leave here.
TC: BETTER SAFE THAN SORRY.
EB: gamzee. what exactly is down there…
TC: you know, diamondbro.
TC: YOU DON'T NEED TO ASK.
EB: no, i really don't! you and typheus just told me to come here, so i came!
TC: denial don't suit you well, motherfucker.
EB: rude, dude.

Gamzee still won't clarify, even after all that, so John gives up. After a little more coaxing, Gamzee pings John with some coordinates, which take John over a steep blue gorge marbled with layers of darker rock. A few stunted trees grow out of crevices between fragmented rocks and an open, empty pipe that ends near the cliff's edge. Gamzee lays flopped over in front of a bright blue crystal, his legs crossed and propped up vertically against the crystal so that he watches John with an upside down painted smile. His claws sit folded on his stomach in the pouch of his dark hoodie pocket, and he pulls one free to lazily toss it over his head in greeting. Then, as John bounds to a stop, kicking up a tiny cloud of fine blue gravel, Gamzee bends both arms back and kicks off the crystal, rolling up backwards into a handstand before landing on both feet. "Hey!" John takes one step - two - and then collides with Gamzee's chest when the troll is abruptly a foot closer than he was a second ago. Undeterred by the sudden, jolting movement, John grabs Gamzee in a hug. It takes some maneuvering to hug Gamzee off his feet, since he's taller, but John manages. He's very determined, and also - he can float. It evens the playing field. Gamzee coughs and then hugs back, his claws (too many claws, but John's too distracted to remind him of the right number) tapping along John's spine under the weirdly long line of his hood.

...His hood should definitely not be that long, unless he's wearing -

Well. John's not. His hood is a perfectly normal length, thank you very much, and no one can tell him otherwise. Gamzee starts tilting over John at a precarious angle as he relaxes. After a couple seconds of leaning, John holds him out at arm's length for an inspection, trying to see if Gamzee's gotten hurt anywhere. It's kiiinda difficult to pull that off when Gamzee's so resilient, but if he doesn't check Karkat will get mad. Gamzee allows it with a slow, languid blink. Dark blue dust sprinkles his chaotic hair and his shoulders, but apart from that he seems to be okay.

Key word - seems. "You're okay?" John asks, for what feels like the millionth time today. He's tempted to pull Karkat up on speed dial so they can all talk at the same time, but he doesn't want to interrupt whatever they're up to on LoHaC, either. He doesn't trust Sburb at all. His own weirdly quiet, abandoned planet is eerie enough.

"Fine as wine, trine of mine," Gamzee says, tucking his claws back into his pockets. He tilts his head back a little, still watching John.

John scratches his head and sighs, feeling a little of the tension that's been camping out in his shoulders relax now that Gamzee's right in front of him. Ominous, sporadic text messages can only do so much as far as reassurance goes. "This place looks cruddy. As usual," he says, landing on the ground properly so he can grind his heel into the dirt. Okay, so the blue color scheme is alright - if John didn't like blue, he'd be in real trouble - but everything else about just reminds him of dying and other people dying and stuff like that. Without the consorts as a distraction, LoWaS is one big bad reminder. "What was Typhus complaining about?" he wonders, before the obvious answer finally Gamzee, with an extra edge in it that makes John twitch. It's not a good edge. It is, in fact, a bad edge. Gamzee's face isn't smiling as much under his face paint, anymore, and there's a wild glint in his purple eyes to match. John hastily slams his evaluation of Gamzee's okayness back into the 'questionable at best' basket. "Haha. No, I've been all up and mindin' my own business, hereabouts," Gamzee says, chuckling. He meets John's eyes dead on, the uncanny light of them dizzying with its intensity, even while his tone stays pseudo-casual. "There's another motherfucker who isn't so nice hanging around, though. Could be that's all what got your denizen in a knot."

There's -

"Well, if Tyopheus wants me to take care of it, he needs to come out and say it," John snaps. The Breeze won't stop dragging between his heels, stirring up the ground and making muffled sounds that John can't seem to make out. Gamzee's eyes darken a shade, more literally than John is used to. The troll doesn't quite start grinding his teeth, but he taps a pointed tooth very carefully against the row beneath, with a faint click in his throat. John's stomach lurches and reels like a semi-truck taking a turn at top speed. He sidesteps and then spins away from Gamzee, scuffing the ground with his shoe. He accidentally kicks a loose chunk of crystal over the edge of the gorge, and it tumbles down with a series of distant, echoing clacks. The oil that used to flow at the bottom of the gorge vanished along with the rest of the goop that used to drown the planet, and there's nothing to muffle the sound when it hits the bottom. He feels weird, so weird, a weirdness that sits tight in his lungs, and John thinks about cupping his hands around his mouth - but that's dumb. He just starts yelling, because if Tyopheus hasn't said anything yet, he's just being silly and this errand he called John for can't have been too urgent. "HEY! Is anybody there? Typheus?"

The wrong voice answers.

"Oh, wow? That big snake guy really called you down here?" a sickly sweet voice says. John stops dead. "Just to deal with little old me? Hoohoo, he must really hate you~~~! A kindred spirit!"

John stares blankly out over the gorge for a long second, seeing nothing. Then he turns around, and looks up.

It's perched on top of a rock as black as obsidian, leering down at John with a derisive, lopsided smirk. The old Heir outfit is gone, and somehow, seeing the Trickster in simple, soft god tier pajamas makes John want to scream. Its shirt is pale blue and its thigh-high socks and hood are cotton candy pink, the trailing edge of the long hood draped over the side of the boulder to twist in a wind that John can't feel. Instead of a Breath symbol, the front of its hoodie sports a lemon yellow ~ with more yellow curves growing up from the hem.

"You're not real," John says. His own voice sounds very far away; he can't hear the Breeze's frantic noises at all.

"Haha! Seeeee, here's the thing." The Trickster stands up, bends with its hands on its knees, and teeters forward on its mint green shoes, balanced right at the point where the boulder starts to slope too steeply for anyone to keep their balance. It tosses its long hood back when it starts to dip over the Trickster's shoulder. "I am. Just ask your friend."

John jolts and steps between Gamzee and the Trickster in one stumbling motion. He doesn't dare tear his eyes away from the Trickster - if he so much as blinks, he's terrified it will be standing right in front of him. But his head turns jerkily back toward Gamzee, no good except to see a momentary flash of Gamzee's expression before John's head rotates back toward the monstrous thing leaning over them. "It's not - Gamzee, that thing isn't -"

Gamzee's voice sounds very quiet. "Motherfucker's smart."

The Trickster bows to imaginary applause, looking utterly pleased with itself. Its eyes crinkle as its grin turns cocky. "You see? He agrees! What can I say, I have all kinds of tricks up my sleevsies!" he laughs, flicking one of his short sleeves with a touch of wind.

Oh, thank god he didn't bring Karkat. John owes Dave - so goddamn much. Whatever's real, whatever's not, Karkat cannot be here for it. John doesn't trust himself, let alone whatever power is letting the Trickster hop down to the ground with a palpable gust of wind, kicking up enough dust to make John gag.

"How. You're only real in my head." Which is throbbing, right now. John can feel his fingers trembling, a little, but his hands feel so far away from the rest of him. He needs to remind himself to breathe, but it's not quite working -

The Trickster pulls down the lower lid of his eye and sticks out his tongue, then bursts into giggles forceful enough to make him convulse, clutching his stomach. "I have friends, you know! Or, you know, acquaintances. They're much more fun than yours, and I've learned sooo much from watching them go at it," he gasps out between spurts of laughter. "Oh, the look on your stupid face! Worth it!"

John makes the connection when his eyes drift back down to the Trickster's shirt (he can't focus on that face too long, it's too unsettling) and sees the yellow lines waving and curling against the pink backdrop. It looks like tentacles - and Leviathan is huge enough that John can still see its immense tendrils, haloing the wide expanse of Skaia like sun's rays.

John opens his mouth and shuts it a few times. "Oh my god. You're the one who's stupid!"

The Trickster rolls his eyes all the way around in their sockets. He starts to saunter forward, arms folded behind his back as he walks toward John. John can barely remember how to stand upright, which is not helpful; he staggers back a step, stiff, trying to reach behind him to feel where Gamzee is. "Am not. You forget, they helped make me in the first place. A nice rotting spot in your useless brain, that they made sure was nice and cozy in case they ever came back to play." The Trickster spins in a circle on his heel, dangerously close to John's personal bubble, hands pressed together as he smiles dreamily up at the tendrils visible across the Medium. "A dash of trauma, a whole bunch of you being a total loser, and voila! Me!" John can't reach Gamzee's shirt. The Trickster tosses a handful of sparkly sugar and blue crystal into the air, and the light glinting off it makes John's eyes hurt. "I just decided to borrow a few more of their tricks. No need for them to know - they're plenty busy with whatever dumb stuff they're up to right now. If they don't want to play with me, that's fine!"

Then the Trickster spins in another circle, and roundhouse kicks John in the chest, his leg a pastel blur.

It's like taking a hydraulic press to the torso. John slams backfirst into the tall crystal, the sharp edges digging into his back with bruising force. He manages to get his arms up in time to shield the back of his head, but the impact still rattles him; when he peels himself off the crystal, gasping for air that isn't coming, the Trickster wavers at the edges - for a second, all the pastel is doused in black oil, toe to tip. The pastel colors come back a second later, after John presses a palm to the side of his head to steady himself, but the afterimage of the dripping figure sticks to the inside of John's eyelids every time he blinks. John raises his arms and fumbles, blind and deaf, for the Breeze - he knows how to listen to it, now! But for some reason his head feels like it's full of mush - and a ragged coil of wind explodes around him, ready to ward off whatever the Trickster throws at him next. Not being able to hear the Breeze is bad, but John can still -

The Trickster appears right in front of him with a snap of his fingers, his pink-threaded blue eyes alight with scathing delight. "While you were being an i d i o t, I was studying important stuff," he says, seizing the front of John's shirt and slamming him back against the crystal. The breath of air John summoned unspools in weak tatters. "Like being better in every possible way."

John smacks the Trickster's hands away with his arm, flinging all his strength behind it even though he still hasn't caught his breath. His back aches as he throws a punch, but the Breeze bolsters him at the last second, blasting the Trickster with a hurricane force gust.

The Trickster dodges easily; he bends backward, with a horrific wrench that speaks not of flexibility but of something snapped right in half, and his upper body swings down between his legs so he can seize John's ankles with creeping, many-jointed fingers. He rolls into a ball the wrong way around and yanks John off his feet. John catches himself on the wind a second later - slow, too slow, he should never have been solid enough for the Trickster to nab in the first place. Gah! Jade would kick his butt for being this slow! He slides into the wind and whirls free of the Trickster's hold, and stays incorporeal to regain his bearings. Gamzee, where did he -

A rogue wind pummels him from the side, tangling him up in a snarl of conflicting air currents that threaten to scatter him. Not this again! John thought he'd gotten all the winds he accidentally ignored over the years to pay attention to him again, but the Trickster raises both hands over his head, twirling them with a grand flourish to summon a slew of wild breezes.

Then he brings his hands down, and a note like a foghorn blasts out of the pipe over the gorge. Twisted up in the wind right in front of the wide opening, John wrenches from side to side in a sudden cyclone - he snaps himself solid again in a hurry before his consciousness can get scrambled like eggs, but his head spins wildly regardless. Righting himself takes precious time, since he starts wrong-way up, and the Trickster crows right in John's ear before John can react. He brings a knee up into John's stomach; John spills around it as air, but only after the initial impact hits him hard. A brief whiff of the Trickster's rotten, sickly-sweet smell washes through him, and John gags internally. He spreads out fast, trying to reach for Gamzee, but his connection to the Breeze feels like wet sand dripping between his fingers, and more blustery winds roar out of the pipe, uncontrollable as they tear through the air. When John tries to harness them, the wild winds slap him down seemingly of their own accord, and stream up toward the clouds to lash them up into a storm.

Of their own accord. As in, John doesn't think the Trickster controls them, either. And there's only one asshole on this planet who might be using his gross giant snake breath to mess around with John right now.

Clearly this is what Typheus wanted John here for so badly. He could seriously stop making this harder than it needs to be! John's already in over his head. John sifts between the storm winds and arrows back toward the ground; he'd rather not give the Trickster a chance to slam him into the ground from high up in the air. Not after what happened the last time they fought. John survived some gruesome stuff in his mindscape - he does not want any of it to repeat in reality.

BE: JOHN!

The Breeze screams to be heard over the confusion of everything else, and John drags a hammer out of hammerspace at the very last minute, bracing it over his head just as the Trickster rockets down with his own hammerkind swinging. John catches it on the handle of his specibus, but even with the advance warning the Trickster hits with such force that John's knees go out from under him. The rogue winds that the Trickster has culled for himself rip around John, trying to suck the air out of his lungs and force their way inside. Typhoeus's breath just ignores John - these smaller winds twist in chaotic coils and try to trick their way past John's guard, and the erratic way they move and dart and lunge reminds John too much of chaos for comfort. The Trickster yanks the hammer back and starts drilling it down against John's specibus repeatedly, each blow sending lightning bolts of pain shrieking down John's nerves all the way to his knees. The ground under him buckles a little, and by the sixth hit John's arms wobble and burn.

Staying still! Again! Stupid, stupid! The Trickster moves just as John lowers his hammer and grits his teeth; he reappears beside John and swings the hammer around by the very end - the positioning of his hands is terrible, but he makes up for it by being a complete monster - to clobber John in the side. His right arm screams with pain - his whole side lights up with pain, and John gasps for air - the Breeze already clings close to his body to fend off rival winds, but it's not enough to cushion the blow - not enough to keep him from skidding and tumbling across the ground. He can't tell if the right arm's broken or not; he digs his toes into the gravel and uses his hammer to drag himself to a stop near the edge of the cliff. The Trickster dives after him, howling with laughter, and John rolls out of the way as the Trickster swings his hammer in another wild arc. "Breaking you here is so much more satisfying!" he comments, his face alight with glee. John starts to dodge to the side, but the Trickster rams a knee right into his face - his left eye and cheek take most of the impact, and John's whole head throbs. "More…solid! But to be honest? You're still pretty boring." The Trickster snorts and shrugs, pressing a foot against John's chest and shoving him back. "What else is new?"

"Ugh!" John falls back into the wind. That's it. That's all he's got, right now. It's too much, too fast; he needs to regroup, but he doesn't know where it's safe to fall back to. A wild thought - he could coast down the pipe, follow it back to the source of the winds -

But the source is probably Typhoeus, and from the looks of the storm brewing overhead, John's denizen isn't in a help-y mood. And leaving LoWaS…out of the question. If the Trickster follows him, the first thing he'll do is attack people for being John's friend. Or for sport. John is currently drawing a blank on how to deal with this but he has to deal with it here, fast, before the Trickster really does get bored of whaling on him.

What can hurt this guy? Fire didn't do the job last time - it just burned all the dark oil coating him, and left the rotten, dead thing underneath free to escape with a snap of his fingers. The oil is back, whenever John crosses his eyes at the Trickster, but John doesn't have a Rose, or a lighter, or anything like that to help him out. Haha, all this time, and nothing's changed -

The Trickster plunges through John's gust of wind, and it feels like he swallows something greasy. Then the Trickster crooks a finger, and yanks on a seemingly random streamer of wind. The tug yanks John out of the air, choking as the long hood of his jacket digs into his throat, and that's it. His one advantage - his ability to turn into the wind and dodge anything. Dragging him down by the hood, the Trickster tries to slam him into the ground. Frustration bursts through John and he snaps the long windsock hood away again so there's nothing for the Trickster to pull on. He floats away instead, trying to stay low and away from the edge of the cliff. There is still no sign of Gamzee, and John can't decide whether to be happy Gamzee's not in danger or to be terrified out of his mind because he's alone again.

Undeterred, the Trickster hops after him, humming nonsense as he dislocates his arms hauling the hammer back and swinging it down toward John's head. John rolls to avoid getting his head squashed like a melon.

And puts his foot down on the ground. On something sharp edged and pointy that digs into the sole of his shoe. When he goes to float away, distracted, his foot won't move. John jerks his leg up, trying to wrench it free, and then looks down to see a clump of bubblegum pink crystal growing in triangular clusters around and over his foot. It's leaking from a crack in the large blue quartz to his left, a trickle of sticky pink and grey goop, rubbery stuff that oozes over the ground to feed more material into the pink crystal pinning John's shoe.

The bottom of his foot starts to prickle and burn - like the crystals are either weeping acid or trying to grow through his foot. John can't make it turn into wind; he's stuck.

Lucky for him, the Trickster is a jerk. John whips around to face him, his knee twisting painfully to accommodate his stuck foot, and the Trickster kicks him so hard in the chest that John can't even scream right. The force of it snaps the crystals and knocks him free, and he struggles to remember how to breathe and get himself upright at the same time. Breeze, right, the Breeze can help with the first one - already is, John corrects himself, but it's not enough when the Trickster lays into him like a batting ram, knocking John's feet aside with a crushing blow of his hammer and landing kneefirst on John's stomach as they hit the ground.

John flips out. The weight pressing down on his chest hits him somewhere visceral - like there's a hand shoving through his skin, sinking between his organs, feeling for a rib to tug further out of place - were you even using that lung for anything useful - John screams and elbows the Trickster in the eye. It's not enough - he's been here before - and he slides out into the wind in that split second before the Trickster can shake it off and laugh at his face. The pain and the panic spike through his stomach, following him even when his body's gone, but he's out.

The Trickster's head does a one-eighty, grinning at John as he snaps his fingers. Ropes of black oil and tangled winds wrap around to flank John, full of echoes of hiccupped giggling and reeking of blood and decay. The Trickster solidifies and hooks John again, this time by hooking the back of John's fluttering, intangible shirt and somehow snapping him solid without a hint of effort. John's momentum carries him back against the Trickster, and a length of fabric snakes around John's neck.

"And once you're gone," the Trickster says, conversationally, yanking his pink windsock hood tight, "I'll have nothing holding me back. No useless idiots weighing me down. I'll be free! I can go anywhere I like!" He sighs happily, and his breath smells like crude oil.

John can't teleport away with the windy thing. Worse, he brings up his hands too late to get them between his neck and the tightening fabric; he scrabbles with his fingernails to try to tug it away from his neck, but can't find anywhere to grab. His fingers slide off a thin, slippery film of oil instead. Ugh! "You're not going anywhere!" he croaks, and it's such a dumb way to use up his air. He kicks backwards at the Trickster's knees, but hits nothing as the Trickster tucks his feet up out of the way.

The fabric yanks tighter, cutting off more air and bloodflow. John's head starts to throb, weirdly light on his shoulders, and his stomach churns as the Trickster pulls him back, letting his head loll on John's shoulder with a merry light in his ice-white eyes. "I totally am~" the Trickster whispers, the closest to serene John has ever heard him. "It will be so. Much. Fun. Oh! And before I forget? I brought a friend, too."

John's gotta think. Quick. But the throbbing fills his whole skull - swallowing takes an eternity. He should have known something like this would happen, but he didn't want to think about it. He never wants to think about it, and it's gonna get him killed like a total chump. The Trickster drags John's head around, not letting up the pressure for even a second, but John slips a finger between his throat and the fabric. His best effort to pull the hood loose does jack diddly, but it's more than he had a second ago.

Then John forces his eyes to stop rolling up toward the sky and focus, and sees the white thing walking out from the shadows of the metal pipe. At first, John doesn't recognize it - actually, it just creeps him the heck out, since he can't sense the person breathing. It's like some kind of a human-shaped automaton in a white suit that has seen better, crisper days.

Then the thing looks up, tilting back the brim of its too-familiar white hat, and John sees the thin snow white skin grown over the person's hollow eyes and mouth and nostrils like an asphyxiating mask. Black, syrupy oil drips from its hands and ears and stains the inside of the skin-mask. The sight of the blank face sends a jolt of stomach-turning recognition shooting through John.

"Dad?" John says. His voice sounds - god. And he did not intend to call him that, but it just slips out, all tiny and cracking and horrible and scared, and - he starts thrashing, and elbows the Trickster in the ribs. It barely tickles him; the Trickster howls with ecstatic laughter. "That isn't my dad! Where is he?! What did you do?!

John screams. His eyes hurt. His head throbs. His lungs are empty, his dad -

The Trickster pats John on the cheek, and wraps the fabric of his pink hood idly around his hand as he pops his fingers in and out of their joints. John's vision starts to skew with dark blobs. "I made him more useful! You were done with him, right? Nobody was talking about him or thinking about him much, so I borrowed him for some fun! You didn't seem to like him very much, either, so I just...took his meatsuit!" The Trickster giggles. "I mean, he's a little dead, now, but he wasn't a very interesting person, anyway."

John doesn't want him to be dead. That's not fair, his dad-handler-dad-handler-dad isn't breathing and John feels like his insides are drowning in nauseating, sticky black oil, and it's pumping into his brain with each thudding throb. The Trickster sighs with bone-deep deep contentment and taps a finger against John's straining throat. "That's not - you're -" John wheezes, his voice a thin, breathy mess "- you're awful."

The Trickster pulls John's limp fingers out from under the too-tight fabric, wraps John's own hand around his throat, and squeezes it tight with segmented fingers. "I know what I am - what are you?" The pause lasts for a small eternity; John can't see around the throbbing darkness anymore, but the Trickster coughs out a harsh laugh right in his ear. "Oh, right. A loosser! And no one's coming to help you." He hums happily, knocking the side of his head against John's.

John should have expected as much. He was too dumb to bring anyone with him, or message them when the Trickster first appeared. People are gonna need John's help, and he's gonna get himself killed here like a total idiot instead of being there for them. "Gamzee -" he breathes out, his throat clicking with the effort it takes to force air in and out of his lungs.

"...But nobody -" the Trickster starts to sing, with the distinct air (and this may be John's lack of oxygen talking) of someone about to quote another without giving them a lick of credit.

"Yeah, bro?" an entirely different voice calls back.

John and the Trickster both blink, and then look down.

Gamzee waves up at them from a rock not twenty feet away from the weird puppet of John's dad, his tousled hair flying in the agitated storm winds. He's just...sitting there, attentive, one leg folded and the other swinging, his heavy eyes watching them. When the Trickster and John continue to stare at him, nonplussed, Gamzee blinks and scratches the back of his neck. "I thought this was all being some sicknasty shit a brother had to do for his own self," he says, his expression slowly turning sheepish. "All kinds of meaningful showdown shit, you feel? With you settin' all this high ass justice in motion -" He starts making vague claw gestures to demonstrate his point.

John reaches back over his head, seizes the Trickster by his shirt, and flips him. The wrapped hood doesn't come loose, but the Trickster yelps and breaks its neck to keep glaring at John as it rights itself. "Oh, screw that! Help, please!" John yells, his voice raw, scraping his own neck with his nails as he tears the cloth away.

"What? No! Oh my god, you're so dumb!" the Trickster shrieks, and stamps his foot. Sharp pink crystal shoots out of the ground and John leaps back three times to avoid a new cluster trying to impale him.

Gamzee rocks back, then puts a hand down to boost himself up into a crouch. His eyes meet John's, and he grins with all his teeth. His many, many teeth. "Shit yeah, brother," he says. "I can lend a hand."

John has never felt more relieved in his life. It cuts through the panicked haze in his head; he calls his hammerkind back to his hand with a twist of wind, and smashes the next burst of bubblegum crystal that bursts out of the ground. Thunder cracks overhead - John twitches, because he had nothing to do with that - and when he looks up he sees that the dark storm clouds now hang low over every inch of the sky, turning it a sickly green-grey. The gusting winds swirl in tighter and tighter funnels and lightning starts to flash along the underside of the clouds. It's not just the pipe opening near them that's pouring out wild gales; now that he's not asphyxiating, John can sense wind rushing from other immense pipes across the land at hurricane speeds and tearing up to join the rest of the burgeoning vortex.

BE: oh wow.

BE: he's pulling out all the stops for this one. an [ Aeolian Cataclismico ]

Seriously? And this is him being helpful? John thinks.

BE: now you listen to me?!

BE: …last chance.

The Trickster ignores the storm, glaring at Gamzee with raw hate. Then he turns the stare back on John, and John can see the Trickster's glamour flicker in earnest - everything underneath is soaked in black oil and blood, and he can't count the limbs anymore. Streams of oil and wind pour around him like long, spindly tendrils instead of separate things. "Pathetic. Really, this is a new pathetic-y low, even for you! Is there anything you can do by yourself without begging your besties for help, you useless waste of breath?" the Trickster says, mockingly. "I mean, don't even get me started on this guy!"

Another crack of thunder that rolls for tens of miles, shaking the air hard enough that John feels it down in his bones, accompanies a bolt of lightning that whips out of the clouds and strikes the huge chunk of blue crystal. It bursts into electric blue light that paints over the green-tinged light of the storm and spits sparks as the lightning crackles visibly inside the crystal. Rather than frying the pale trees that grow along the rock, excess charge crackles and arcs along the slim branches and stems. "I know I'm not okay. I know I need help. So I'm asking for it now," John says. The static electricity building up makes the hair on his arms stand on end, and he hefts his hammer.

Across from him, on the far side of the Trickster, Gamzee stands up. "Only had to say so," he says, like it's the easiest thing in the word, and holds up a flashing captchalogue card that flickers through several colors of the rainbow before depositing a pair of clubkind specibi in his claws. John's pretty sure those deuce clubs were broken the last time he saw them, but that's never stopped Gamzee before.

"Just - leave my dad alone, okay?" John's voice cracks again, and he swallows hard. He doesn't look down at the ground; he can't feel the...thing below them breathing, so he can't really track what it's doing, but he can't bear to look. He can't.

Gamzee shrugs bonelessly, his eager grin twitching into a watchful look as he glances at John. "Your call," he says, quiet and careful, like he just noticed John's about to break down.

The Trickster makes yapping gestures with his hand and rolls his eyes. "Don't you ever get tired of his whining? I mean, seriously. What a joke!" he says to Gamzee, his voice high and tight and cross. He looks annoyed, if an oil-dripping thing can look annoyed. "And you? You're just as much a monster as me! We could have so much fun together -"

The next lightning strike shoots down - and then warps in a crazed arc, blasting the dark blue boulder beside Gamzee and fizzling out. It leaves a massive scorch mark behind. Gamzee's face is full of shadows that don't match the light, the contours of his face shifting from second to second. "That shit ain't funny, motherfucker," he says, with the warning edge back in his voice. The kind of edge John needs to shoosh out of him, pronto, but they don't have time - "In fact, I think that's some flagrant mother fucking heresy you're spewing at my diamond bro, here. Hearing that kind of unfunny shit, it makes me get my sadness on to see -"

Gamzee snaps his claws. The boulder shatters in another wild lightning strike as the atmosphere turns honey-thick with dnmases; John's ears are full of sudden, frenzied, screaming music that clashes and grates against Typheus's planet-wide fraymotif. For a second John's mind trembles with the proximity to the wave of rage that dances slantwise around Gamzee, before his head clears and his ears pop. "And my rage on fucking harder," Gamzee finishes, his hoodie the same color as his blood. There's a symbol on the front that looks like a clown face, but extra lines curve and branch out and around his sides, like tendrils.

BE: welp.

BE: that'll do it.

A hyena laugh bursts out of the Trickster, who doubles up with the force of it. His pastel god tier uniform reasserts itself, but oil continues to drool from his hair and eyes. "Yeah, well. I never said you weren't a joke, too! Heehee!" He points his hammer at Gamzee and then John, bouncing from side to side to unheard fight music. John, who's already got enough on his mental plate listening to Typheus's and Gamzee's fraymotifs, doesn't try to hear whatever crazy nonsense the Trickster has playing. "Trust me - you're both garbage. One of you, give Rose a call! If I'm taking out the trash, I want to do a clean sweep before I blow this popsicle stand."

And John -

- laughs. A tiny giggle escapes him before he covers his mouth with a hand, but it's enough that the Trickster turns on him, livid. John smiles back at him, and can practically see the Trickster swelling with offended fury. "Oh, good," John says, as oil begins to rain from the clouds - slowly, at first, but rapidly increasing to a torrential downpour that streaks LoWaS with black.

The Trickster splutters. "Excuse you?!"

"You only start insulting Rose when you're intimidated." John swings his hammer back, and winks. "And she's not even here."

---
UU: hello kanaya! ^u^ how are you doing?
GA: Passably Well. Why Do You Ask?
GA: Also When Are You Opening The Final Gate. Asking For A Friend.
UU: in about ten minutes! sorry for the delay!
UU: the lord of time appears to be suitably distracted, so he won't destroy the gate immediately!
UU: ugh if he tries to destroy it ahead of time, i will STRAIGHT UP FLIP A BITCH!
GA: …
GA: I see. Thank You.
GA: We're Going To Obtain A Splendor Existentiae And Are Still Not Sure Exactly What This Alchemy Entails But That Has Never Stopped Any Of Us Before, So.
UU: oh! that's very important. you should definitely do that!
GA: Reasonable Enough.
GA: How Privy Are You To Our Futures, And How Willing Might You Be To Disclose Certain Spoilers Under The Condition That They Would Be Kept Confidential?
UU: Ummm…that depends on what you would like to ask!
GA: I Have Reason To Believe That Rose Was Offered A Choice Between My Life And The Destruction Of The Horrorterrors.
GA: And That Also, Rose Reacts Badly When She Believes People She Loves May Be In Danger.
GA: So.
GA: I Have To Ask.
GA: Which Is More Important, In The Grand Scheme Of Us Not Fucking This Up Beyond Repair?
GA: What Will The Horrorterrors Do If They Infiltrate Your Reality? How Doomed Will We Be In The Literal Sense Based On This Choice?
UU: hm. fascinating question! they would probably cause a little ruckus before i shed them off like an old skin.
UU: i think you should ask rose to be more precise in recounting the choice she was offered! ^u~
UU: but also, her misunderstanding may be vital to her making the 'correct' choice which leads to your timeline being deemed viable! so perhaps not.
GA: That Is Supreme Unhelpful. And I Think That She Has Recounted It To The Best Of Her Ability Already. I Will Ask Her To Repeat It Again If I Get The Chance.
UU: would you like some other actionable advice?
UU: you don't need to help with the snake breeding! lots of people will be there to help already.
UU: and then i will see you very soon! i've pulled all the right extra-dimensional superstrings to make sure of it! ^u~
GA: That Is Marginally Reassuring. I Will Take This Advice Into Consideration.
UU: splendid!

--

Tavros adjusts the controls of the rocketchair to aim them at Prospit, but he, uh, gets the idea that he doesn't need to bother. Equius catches them up in a wave of heavy void, with enough force that Tavros feels like a baseball launched out of a pitching machine, his face eclipsed by nothingness. It insulates them from Vriska, who peels off ahead of them without looking back once, intent on her game, but also insulates them from pretty much everything else.

Equius continues to quietly and yet strenuously emanate disapproval in Tavros's general direction whenever he pays attention to him, so Tavros does his best not to. Get attention paid to him, that is. Nepeta brushes off Equius's intimidating...well, everything, but Tavros is not Nepeta. Uh, at all. Nepeta scolds Equius for it whenever it pops up, and one time Aradia smiled Equius into a drenching sweat, but the desdén still hangs over them. Which is, um. It's actually not fine, at all, even though Tavros feels too awkward to mention it. But then Equius does things like making Tavros a flying rocket wheelchair with turbo boost and other accessories, instead of chainsawing off his legs and replacing them with turbolegs without asking first, and it's enough of an improvement that Tavros really doesn't want to pick a fight. This is, uh, not the hill he wants to die on.

But the meddling, he could live without. People call Kanaya a meddler, but Tavros honestly cannot see it. Equius horns in on anything that might hurt Nepeta. Which means he butts in on everything, lately, and Tavros gets roped in, too. Nepeta hangs off the front of Tavros's rocketchair full of excitement, slicing her clawkind against each other so that they skitter with black-blue sparks because Equius brought them along for this fight, but uh, Tavros is more skeptical. Equius letting them fly to a fight like this is...sospechoso.

AKA, he's probably got plans to prevent Tavros and Nepeta from doing anything at all useful and/or dangerous. It's super patronizing. The problem is working up the nerve to say something about it. Or maybe the gumption. Jake uses that word instead, sometimes, but Tavros can't quite muster up either. Standing up to Equius when he's in a mood like this takes a lot out of a troll.

So he nudges Nepeta instead.

Nepeta blinks and looks up from her phone. Tavros didn't notice before, but she's tossing it back and forth between her claws, batting it around under the cover of her clawkind. It's a kind of risky maneuver, considering that if she drops it, it'll fall into space. The fact that Tavros is flying them around in outer space is already kind of, uh...nonsensical. Everything about this is nonsense, but the flying through space part stands out. A lot.

"I am having some trouble, um, with maintaining my self-confidence, here," he says, choosing his words with care.

Nepeta tilts her head, her scruffy hair flapping around her face as she rocks back on her heels. "Self-confurdence? What about it?" she asks. It's not, like, dismissive when she says it - which is a nice change from people like Vriska, who just blow stuff like this off as dumb.

Unfortunately, Equius has gone all weird and void-y, so when Tavros looks around to see if the blueblood is close enough to overhear their conversation, he sees a whole bunch of nothing at all. He lowers his voice just to be safe, but Equius could be a blob of nothing two feet from them and Tavros wouldn't know. "It's just that, we haven't been particularly useful so far. I don't think we're useless, but, also, maybe a little?" he says, hesitantly.

Nepeta catches his train of thought right away, and smacks her palm against the rocketchair in frustration as she shakes her head. "No! Purr yourself together! Equius is just being over-protective and sticking his nose in all the time," she insists. "Well, we'll show him! I have a plan."

Plans are good. Better than nothing, anyway. And yet -

Nepeta hunches her shoulders, and her claws flex and scrape against the paint of the rocketchair. Like she didn't mean to say that to him. Tavros would be more offended if he knew what color the paint even is; void-colored, he guesses, depending on how close they are to Equius. Plus, it's already pretty banged up from flying around and fighting a giant monster - there's not much Nepeta can do to make it worse... "What is the plan?" he asks, confused.

Then Nepeta does shifty eyes at him. They are very shifty. So shifty. Tavros blinks, shifted, and takes a claw off the flight controls (the rocketchair continues to fly, because Equius is very, incredibly meddly) so he can haul himself forward. There's a button to launch the seat clear of the rocketchair in a dangerous situation, and separate one to just raise it a little, but he doesn't bother with it, because mixing the two buttons up even once and launching himself hornfirst into a tree trunk was enough for him to not want to risk it in outer space. As, um, amazing as it would be to be the one to defeat Noir with a tackle horn to the face, that would also be terrifying. "Um. Nepeta…"

She shoots a look toward their right, where Equius must be flying at the moment. Then she leans in closer to whisper in his ear. ". . .It's probably gonna upset Equius. But it'll only be for a second!" she says, ansiosaa all over. This close, her one claw planted right next to Tavros's on the dash, Tavros can feel her trembling with anticipation of - something.

No. Wait. Tavros zeroes in on her phone, pinned under all her weight. Nepeta is not trembling - she has set her phone to vibrate, instead of its assortment of the latest cat sounds personalized for each friend on Pesterchum. He taps the back of her claw and she twitches away on reflex, which gives him just enough time to flip the phone over to reveal the open Pesterchum window.

TA: yeah fine iim manniing the terminaiial.
TA: iim sure equiius iis goiing two LOVE thiis
AC: :(( < its my decision! i don't like upsetting him, but this is what i f33l is right!
AG: Pfffffffft, nice! I'm glad you're seeing things my way. ::::)
AC: :33 < wrinkles her nose
AC: :33 < it would probably be better fur everyone if you dont help!
AG: Ah, sure. I'm in a good mood today. A gr8 mood, even!
AG: As long as you don't chicken out on us. You've been hanging out with that cowardly dwee8 a lot lately, and - "Nepeta. Oh no," Tavros whispers.

She roughly swipes the phone out from under his nose a second later, pinning it between both her claws and hissing at herself, but it's too late. The cat is out of the bag. "Sorry, Tavpurros," she says, crawling back when Tavros makes a half-hearted move to snag her arm.

He doesn't even know what he would do if he caught her, anyway. There's nowhere for Nepeta to go on the rocketchair, um, at all. But Tavros can't seem to make words happen - Nepeta stares back at him, watchful, and he doesn't know what to say. Doesn't know what to feel.

And they're coming up on Prospit, now, which makes things a lot harder. If he squints, he can see Aradia and Sollux already, two brilliant points of red and green light swirling around like leaves as Noir bounces between them in bursts of neon green. As they get closer, he can make out more details over Nepeta's hunched head, like the tall honey-yellow building that stretches toward Skaia, and the faint music playing in the distance, and the hum of many, many, many, many bees communicating in beenary code.

So many bees. Tavros has to ignore his mental sense of them, after a bit, because all the bees are focused on their work, and with enough of them singing in perfect unison, dancing the same patterns from hive to hive, following pheromone trails so thick they almost glitter, tuned to the same code, Tavros's head starts to ache. Bees aren't really his specialty, but Sollux definitely has them doing...something. The exact lines and whorls that the bees follow aren't clear from here, but Tavros can almost trace them with the tip of his claw - they stand out so strongly in the bees' minds. If he knew Sollux better, he would check and ask (English is a terrible language, uh, as a general rule) if Tavros has the pun right, if Sollux has created a hivem-

A flash of green, so bright and hot that Tavros's skin prickles unpleasantly - and then Noir is right on top of Sollux. But Sollux raises a claw, and [Temporal Inevitability] drops like a stack of bricks. Aradia's familiar laugh rings out as she snaps her whipkind out to wrap around Noir neck and yank him back. Noir flips backward with the force of it and snarls, trying to slice through the whip and failing.

And almost immediately, Tavros feels the rocketchair start to throttle back. He hesitates as the rocketchair slows and angles slightly away from the fight, and more toward the looming Prospit.

Vriska's way ahead of them, and races forward in a sudden burst, her hair and hood flying out behind her. She flings her dice out into the abyss - and still somehow summons a giant pendulum that knocks into Noir from the side. It's, uh, not even pivoting around anything. It's just a random pendulum, and it makes Tavros's brain throb. "Need some help, you two? The cavalry's here!" Vriska calls. She pauses to look expectantly back at Equius, her impatient eyes dismissing Tavros and Nepeta in a flash. Considering what Tavros saw in that pesterlog, it's really convincing. "I said cavalry for you, horsebrain. Appreciate it?" she says, her voice pointed when she doesn't get an immediate response.

But it's hard to pinpoint where Equius is, let alone what his face looks like right at this exact moment. Tavros can sense a whole lot of nothing, surging ahead of the rocketchair as Tavros and Nepeta are forced down and away from the fight by the wayward controls. "Nah," Sollux says, not even looking at them. "I'm already alive down there, and AA's on LoFaF. We're gonna be fine."

Aradia chimes in. "Glad to have you all!" Then she flies up out of the way as Noir tries to cut her in too, lands with one foot on top of his head, and kicks off.

Nepeta creeps forward while Tavros is distracted. "Just a little momentum? Please? I need to get right in Nyaaoir's way," she says, urgent.

If he wants to them to fly toward the fight, he has to force the controls, or - do something. Anything. But Tavros freezes - his brain feels as stiff as his hands, and when the downward tilt of the rocketchair becomes super obvious, the look that Nepeta shoots him shuts him right down. Doing nothing because he can't decide looks basically the same as siding with Equius, and his mouth feels gummed up, like he swallowed a spoonful of peanut butter, which, even in this metaphorical example, um, seems kind of unrealistic, since peanut butter is forbidden by order of Karkat.

And he doesn't know. He doesn't know what he's deciding. He can't even make the thoughts in his head form words, not with this little warning. Dying is dying, but then dead people come back, but then it still means dying, and Tavros hasn't figured out where he comes down on any side of that existential debate at the best of times, let alone right now, when Nepeta's gearing up to do something Vriska approves of -

Oh. Tavros blinks, and then frowns. That, uh. Simplifies things, as it turns out. So it is a choice that he's making after all. He swallows, and shakes his head at Nepeta. The guilt is instantaneous, but the sureness that Vriska likes terrible life choices is stronger. Nepeta flinches, her mouth tight, and she stops meeting his eyes again.

He doesn't think for a second he can convince Nepeta not to. Maybe, if he'd realized something was afoot sooner, but not now, when she has already talked herself into it, and he doesn't have time to stumble and stutter his way through a counter she hasn't heard before a million times or two. Tavros grabs her claw when he should probably call Equius (and maybe that's a decision, too) but only to get her to look at him. "I don't like, uh, the idea of helping my friend die. That's not something I can be okay with, it turns out," he says, apologetic. Then he lets go before Nepeta can yank away, puts his claws back on the controls, and presses them down at a steeper angle. The controls respond right away, once he's not trying to drive them at Noir - so Equius didn't totally mess with them. Just enough to make sure he and Nepeta can't do anything dangerous or relevant.
Nepeta curls up over her knees, her clawkind slotted away, her head bent low enough that Tavros can only see her hair. After a second she turns it so that she looks out to the side, toward the fight, just a sliver of her face visible in from the pillow of her arms. "Right. Right," she says. Her voice sounds small and young.

Then she looks up, her eyes narrowed to slits, and Tavros has time to think oh Dios before she pounces on the controls in one fluid motion. "I'm really sorry. I'll be right back in a minute!" she yells, yanking the controls up and to the side. For a second all of her weight slams Tavros back against his seat, and then he fumbles to get his arms around her somehow. The rocketchair's controls start to scream a warning as Nepeta wedges her knee right into the speed controls and props her foot up so it pins Tavros's shoulder against the seatback, the sole of her shoe digging deep into the muscle. The autopilot jerks the front of the rocketchair down when Nepeta veers too sharply toward Noir, but they're arcing in a shallow curve around the fight itself instead of aiming for Prospit, now. Tavros gets a claw on one of the controls and wraps it around Nepeta's lukewarm hand, yanking it sharply to the side.

"Literally!" Nepeta yells over the engines, as the rocketchair begins to barrel roll. Nepeta jams her elbow into another control and the rocketchair starts to climb higher, too. Neither of them are wearing seatbelts. Everything is terrible. "I will be alive again in a minute! There's nothing to be afraid of!"

"I know. But I guess knowing doesn't actually help, a whole lot!" Tavros yells back, feeling his butt slide along the seat as they rotate. He has no idea how gravity is working out here, but he doesn't want to turn upside down and get dumped into the endless abyss. They're still picking up speed, and he can't reach the windshield button with Nepeta's free shin shoving him away by the horns.

She twists around one last time, smacks his claw off the seat eject button, and then plants her feet on the dash. Shoving off the chair, Nepeta goes flying, clawkind flung out to either side. Tavros scrambles to seize the controls the oliveblood fiddled with, and tries to zoom after her. But Nepeta lets out a blood curdling battle-cry, and everyone looks right at her. Including Noir, currently hovering over Aradia with a sword in claw.

So it doesn't matter that the rocketchair is like sixty feet away from the fight, or that Nepeta's leap should land way short. The carapacian's already ugly grimace knots even further as he bares his teeth at Nepeta in a silent growl.

JN: I shoulda killed you punks years ago.

It doesn't matter, because Noir teleports in close in the blink of an eye and stabs Nepeta through the chest in one slick move, before the neon green of his space powers clears from Tavros's vision. One of Nepeta's clawkind stabs deep into Noir's shoulder, the blue-bruise metal carving through the carapacian's jaspeado shell like paper. Roaring with pain, Noir shoves Nepeta away.

Equius makes a horrible sound. Just. Just awful, and Tavros's stomach cramps hard. "Nepeta! No!" Equius yells, fully visible for the first time Tavros can remember in so long, his face ashen. Tavros pulls up hard on the controls and then dives to get under Nepeta, his heart going a million miles a second. She lands on the dash with a heavy thud, without moving to land on her feet in a crouch, and that's how he knows it's bad. It's bad enough. Tavros looks wildly at Aradia - but no good, Aradia's got nothing more for him than a sympathetic smile - Sollux, who is the guy in charge of things, but who isn't moving, date prisa -

Someone is gone. Noir lunges and slams face first into a wall of nothing - and then the nothing smacks him back, repeatedly, like an unseen fist, while Equius continues to scream. Tavros wrenches the controls to peel away from the fight, and flings an arm forward over Nepeta's limp shoulders.
when she nearly tumbles off the side. Olive blood splatters the dash and parts of Tavros's face, and he doesn't remember feeling it land there; he and Nepeta are close enough that her blood only feels damp on his face, not ice cold, not blue, not -

Oh. Someone is gone, and that's, um, weird, because -

JN: Fckrgnrgl!

Lines of spiraling light burst open under Nepeta's body, and Tavros nearly screams as all the olive blood on his rocketchair starts to pulse with color. She starts pushing herself up before the transformation's all the way done; the raspberry and maroon god tier clothes replace Nepeta's outfit only after she rolls upright, her horns peeking through the hood like cat ears. Her tall, dark green boots bang loudly against the dashboard, and she has to yank down the dark maroon cowl that obscures the lower half of her face to grin at Noir as he gets smacked halfway to the ring of debris between them and the Veil in a tidal wave of void. When she flares her new wings out, there are two dots and a two squiggly lines in darker olive against the green.

[Attention: The Rogue of Heart is risen.]

"Hahaha! Yes!" Aradia sings out, as Nepeta tightens the trailing ends of her eye mask, leaps off the rocketchair, and coasts on her new wings. She tackle-pounces Equius mid-scream, muffling his last, painful yell with her arm guards. Equius stays ashen, with two spots of blue high on his cheeks. Tavros can see a weird amount of detail, still - like, um, the way someone carefully combed Equius's hair back away from his face. The way he reaches up, and Nepeta laces their claws together with a tight squeeze so Equius doesn't have to restrain himself.

And yet -

Someone is still gone. Even though Equius is the most present he's ever been.

"Hang on, guys -" Tavros starts, barely loud enough to call his voice a creak. He raises a faltering claw and tries to clear his throat, but his mouth is so dry after all that, um, total bullshit that just went on. He feels like he just flew a marathon - his claws won't stop jittering on the controls - but Vriska is still gone.

And he remembers the last time Vriska was gone. If she's not here, trying to shove herself into the spotlight of the fight, then that can only mean one thing.

She's doing something else incredibly dangerous. And it's, uh, pretty much get them all killed.

JN: Enough!

Blinding green light smears across Tavros's vision and blurs everything around him into white-green streaks. His stomach lurches and he can feel his butt sliding again as something sends his rocketchair into a tailspin. One hand flung over his smarting eyes, he smacks three different buttons - he, uh, possibly sets off the windshield wipers in the process - until he hits the shoulder restraints, just before the rocketchair flips completely over. The restraints dig painfully into his arms as gravity drags his weight down, and the heaviness doesn't recede until Tavros flips back right side up. Slewing from side to side a few times, the rocketchair finally settles.

Tavros turns off the windshield wipers and switches into hover mode so he can just, uh. Stop worrying. About that whole driving thing. Yeah. Once that's done, he wipes away the thin film of tears leftover from the painful green light, and looks around to see where he is in relation to everything.
The Noir guy hovers in a sickly green star, one claw raised over his head and green arcs of lightning zapping out in long, head-poundingbright zigzags. The green lightning lances out and slices through a part of a honeycomb tower, but Tavros can't sense distress from the bees. Equius, Nepeta, Aradia, and Sollux look like they're alright, which...probably matters more than bees - but Tavros got thrown away further than he thought, which leaves the rocketchair idling in the empty space between Prospit and Skaia, and he's not close enough to see if any of them are injured or not.

He pauses, and then turns his head, his shoulders hunching up as he does.

Vriska is kind of dumb. When Tavros finally thinks to look just over his head, she has left a glitter trail that is clearly visible against the dark of space. Once he knows the direction, it's easy to pick her out against Skaia, like a tiny orange fly buzzing toward a pile of sh-

Tavros looks back at Noir, surrounded by miles of green lightning, and then looks back at Vriska's trail. Then back at Noir, and then back at Vriska, and then back at Noir, and honestly? Tavros has exactly zero confidence that he can deal with either one of these situations. Actually, he is uniquely unqualified to deal with a Vriska situation, and well aware of it.

But if he doesn't deal with her, who will? This is kind of short notice for a Vriska situation, after all, and there's a growing wall of lightning branching between him and everyone else nearby.

AT: uM,
AT: tHIS IS JUST TO LET EVERYONE KNOW, tHAT VRISKA IS DOING SOMETHING, AT: aND IF I DIE BECAUSE OF IT, i, uH, rESERVE THE RIGHT TO NEVER SHOW MY FACE IN PUBLIC,
AT: eVER AGAIN,

Then Tavros shuts down Pesterchum and puts his phone away before someone can reply and make him second-guess his entire life for an hour, and sets out along Vriska's trail. It helps that for the most part, she's following along the line of one of Sollux's giant, sticky mainframes - Tavros draws close to the silicomb and collects a few curious bees on his palm before they hurry back to work. His palms feel clammy on the controls, trembling a little harder, and he smooths them against his pants' legs nervously as he pushes the engines a little faster. He doesn't have any ideas for sneaking up on Vriska - he's not a sneaky kind of person, in general - and the right engine makes a new whining sound in the wake of Noir's shockwave, so stealth mode is probably a no go.

For the most part, the ride is boring. Really, very boring. Tavros closes the gap between them as the minutes crawl by, but Vriska doesn't acknowledge him until they've gone through the twisty clouds and the tangled, checkered tendrils that form a Möbius net around the Battlefield. Vriska's trail starts to take wide, obvious turns and unnecessary loops, and Tavros slows the rocketchair when her glitter disappears behind a wide tendril. Because, uh, it's really obvious that she's messing with him. Or trying to sneak up on him. Tavros does his best to warily eye each tendril Vriska could be hiding behind, but it's...a lot.

"Bad news. I can sense your obscene incompetence from a mile away, Taaaavros."

Uh, anyway. Good thing Vriska isn't very good at hiding, or anything like that. A single blue die pings off the side of his rocketchair, scraping the metal and landing 6-side up near the edge of the dash. Tavros slams the brakes on and freezes, but Vriska surprisingly does not pelt him with the rest of her dice. Warning shot fired, Vriska instead flies out into the open with the rest of the dice clacking in her palm and her most condescendiente smirk tugging up the corner of her lip. She looks like the worst person in the world - or maybe just the meanest. And confident that her meanness is justified, too, which is bad. This was all a bad idea. Tavros is full of regret.
But it's too late to back down now. If he turns around and flies back the way he just came, either Vriska kills him, or the shame eats him alive from the inside. So Tavros forces his chin up - gulps loudly, which kind of ruins the effect he is going for, here - and then meets Vriska's eyes. Or, maybe just her cheeks. Her ear. He can talk to Vriska's ear, though he doubts she'll really listen to anything he has to say. "Um, I'm not trying to hide. Why are you going away from the fight, Vriska?"

There, that's good. Perfecto. Nothing is more effective than making Vriska talk about herself. True to form, Vriska tips her head back and laughs, harsh and biting, and she starts to slink toward him, flipping her hand in a dismissive wave as she brags. "Kanaya wants me hunting snakes, because Kanaya doesn't know when to quit. Rose wants me fighting battles for her. And hey, not gonna lie! Winning all the battles is exactly what I like doing. I am on board with that plan!" Vriska raises her claws over her head, her blue eyes squeezed shut as she smiles. Then the smile slips into something crueler. "...Was on board."

"So why are you going to Skaia, when the fights are all -" Tavros gestures back behind him "- allá." His pusher feels like it's pushing from his throat instead of his chest, which is uncomfortable. Every second Vriska prowls a little closer, and as she does he can hear the dice chattering and clicking against each other.

Vriska plucks another die from her hand, and flicks it at Tavros's head. He ducks, somehow, one horn banging painfully against the control panel, and it lands 7-side up with a spark of blue light. "Heh. I'll tell you. I can be nice when it matters," she says, and the mocking lilt in her voice makes Tavros cringe. "There's just one catch."

He knows the catch. "What catch?"

"This is a mission for A-listers, only!" Vriska taps the toe of her bright red shoe against the front of his rocketchair, and Tavros twitches - he didn't realize that she'd gotten so close. "God tiers only. No chumps allowed!" She jerks her thumb across her throat with a vicious snort.

Yup. Called it. Not like that was, uh, particularly hard to guess. Tavros breathes hard; it feels like his lungs are shaking, or maybe just his whole body. Or the rocketchair, having sympathy shakes. Vriska leans in closer, her fangs visible through the sneer, and Tavros scrunches his eyes shut. "I don't want to die," he says, and even his voice shakes.

A slow scrape fills the silence. Tavros can feel Vriska's eye staring at him with bald scorn, like an icy burn creeping up his face. He cracks an eye open and sees Vriska mid-eye roll, as she twists and grinds the sharp point of a third die deep into the metal of the rocketchair. It leaves a pale blue divot to match the lines of scratched up paint. "Tch. I forgot who I was talking to. Even if I offered to help you, you'd still chicken out," Vriska says, scraping one last circle into the paint and wrinkling her nose at him. This far from Equius, Tavros sees that the rocketchair's paint is almost shredded in thin curls. Vriska pushes up off the rocketchair and spins on a heel with a deliberate poof of glitter that chokes Tavros; his mouth tastes like he just drank dry, tasteless sparkling water, and he hacks for a solid minute to clear the thin grit of sparkles out of his mouth and throat.

Vriska flies away. She aimed at a huge, dark rift in the Battlefield - Sollux's silicomb stack looks like it points right into the crack - and Tavros can still hear her humming along with whatever music she has playing in the background. It, uh, it's kind of sad, actually, looking down at the Battlefield through watery brown eyes - most of the landscape and castles got smashed, or burned, or some combination of the two, and now Vriska - Vriska - is flying down toward it like some kind of terrible blue and orange fairy.

Tavros takes two quick breathes, dizzy - and then floors it. The rocketchair veers off to the right at top speed, and he quickly stops clutching his head and shifts the controls back on target. Equius would, um, probably not approve of him flooring it under any circumstances, but Tavros can't afford to care about Equius's approval when he already has Vriska problems, right now.

He blasts past Vriska. Tavros is not sure exactly what she was flying toward, but that has not stopped him for the past thirty or so seconds. Her spluttering follows him, and Tavros hears it get louder as she comes after him. He doesn't slow down, even as his eyes start to water from the smoke of a burning structure near the edge of the rift. His back feels...unsafe. But he keeps his shoulders firm and lowers his head as he charges.

"What. Do you think. You're doing," Vriska snaps. Tavros keeps his eyes focused dead ahead. If he looks at Vriska, he'll panic. This is a fact. She makes it hard not to, by flying in front of him with a snarl, but staring at her armpit is at least kind of funny, and not as terrifying as her…everything else. She keeps floating down toward the rift, too, keeping pace with him, which - Tavros can't decide if it's good or not. If she stopped, he would ram into her, wheelchair first, and she'd probably kill him, uh, really fast. But it would make him laugh, too, before he turned really dead.

No la mires. "Come on," Tavros says, halfway between impatient and terrified. His mouth draws tight like he's swallowed something bitter, and when Vriska raises her claws to jam them into the front of the rocketchair, Tavros panics and brings his whole fist down on the turbo. Vriska yelps and hops out of the way as he zooms down. He keeps Sollux's beehouse mainframes on his left.

"Hey! My quest! A-listers! Do I need to repeat my entire speech! Where are you going?!" Vriska shrieks, stomping a foot useless in midair as she catches up to him. He catches a glimpse of her frustrated, bugged out eyes, and then snaps his gaze away to look at the walls of the rift. The deeper they go, the darker the stone looks, until it's almost pitch black. He doesn't know what Vriska wants down here, still, um, the deeper they go, the more nervous he feels.

"Wherever you were going," he says, not looking at her while she fumes. "But, um, it's just a coincidence. It's not like I'm coming to make sure you don't mess everything up for everyone, like usual." He can't help the trickle of sarcasm that sneaks out toward the end there, but his voice is so unsteady that Vriska doesn't seem to notice.

Or maybe she does. "Mess-?! What?!!" Vriska splutters, so vexed she starts tearing at her hair. She whips another blue die at him, and this time it pings off Tavros's horn with a white-hot shock that stings right down to his skull, and lands 8-side up in the cup holder. Tavros stares dead ahead, like he is very, very interested in the massive, pale white tendril peeking out of the darker rock at the bottom of the fissure, and wonders why Equius never installed a double-extra turbo mode for Vriska-level emergencies. This, uh, seems like a pretty serious oversight on Equius's part...

Then Vriska snaps her claws eight times - the first time her claws slip and don't make an actual snapping noise, and a frustrated, muffled scream escapes her before she goes and does the full set of eight - and the dice snap back into her hand. Tavros's stomach twists, and he squints his eyes and scrunches his mouth to avoid flinching as he waits for her to throw all of them at him. It won't be that bad, he'll be right back, it'll probably be dumb and humiliating but what else is new -

"Whatever! I'm not waiting for you, and I'm definitely not pulling your ass out of the fire if you get in the way of my irons!" Vriska flips her hair over her shoulder in a vicious swirl and puts on a last burst of speed. This time, Tavros manages to gulp down a breath of clean air before her glitter bombards him in a dry cloud, and he brushes all the sparkling dust off his face onto his sleeve once he's through the worst of it. He's pretty much coated in a layer of blue sparkles, now, so he sighs and turns on the air-conditioning so it blasts the worst of it off him.

Only then does he pause to fervently thank whichever god (tier) just let him get through that alive. Tavros is kind of at a loss for words, but Vriska continues to fly away from him, and he continues to be not dead, and that's, um, a minor miracle. A major miracle, even. He can't relax, not really, not when Vriska is still - well, Vriska - but he lets his head slump back against his headrest and stares at the rapidly dwindling sky in a grateful daze. "Uh, alright. If you say so," he says to the clouds.

Vriska talks right past him, her voice loud and echoing weirdly between the narrowing walls of the rift. "I should just off you. Or maybe you'd still be just as wet and wishy-washy as you are right now, and it would just be a waste of my time," she says, the aimless chatter buzzing a little in Tavros's ears.

…No. That's not just him, is it? There's some kind of weird reverb in Vriska's voice, or maybe in the echoes playing off the walls. When Tavros fidgets in his chair and reaches out to the bees in the mainframe stack, he can hear the same echo in their beenary thoughts as they follow the grass-green coils of Sollux's program. Except, uh, shouldn't there be a delay, if it was an echo? Tavros doesn't know, but the buzz makes his horns throb. "Yeah, probably something like that," he says, too late to really be responding to Vriska. His voice cracks halfway through. "Where are we going, again?"

He has trouble concentrating on Vriska's reply. She comes to a stop a few feet above the enormous white curve that fills the bottom of the fissure. The rift stops here, and the walls look like crystal instead of stone. Tavros drifts to a stop beside Sollux's last beehive, and hugs himself as he glances at the walls close on either side. There are motes of light or dust swirling in the stone in familiar, symmetrical patterns, and Tavros rubs his eyes when they start to ache from looking at them too long.

"Come oooooooon, you haven't guessed already? Jeez, this is an easy one!" Vriska drawls. After a pause - long enough for Tavros to notice it, and wonder why she's hesitating at all - Vriska lands with a light tap on the white curve, her shoes gliding over the - bark? If this is some kind of tree buried underground, this unearthed chunk of branch must be three miles long. It's absurdo. And he can't even see how much is still buried below.

"Not really. You just kind of do dangerous things, and since you are not going toward the uh, actual bad guys, I guess you're going toward something even more dangerous, so you can be the one to beat it instead," Tavros says. It's the truth. Vriska is very predictable, most of the time. Not being dead yet is kind of a surprise, but he is not going to complain about it, either.

He tries to keep his voice neutral, but Vriska looks up at him over her shoulder with a wild edge in her smirk, holding up her eight dice between her claws as she grins at him. It's not even a mean look, because secretly Tavros thinks Vriska likes it way better when she has an audience. It's just a look that says Tavros could die in a freak rockfall accident right now this second, and Vriska wouldn't stop for even a second. Not while she has things to do. "Heh. That's because I'm the only one smart and strong enough to handle the really important stuff. Not even Aradia knows about this plan! Pretty hush hush stuff!" she says, and then she pops a whole person out of nowhere. The small human wriggles the second he hits the white branch, his green clothes in disarray and his hat lopsided on his head, but Vriska plants her foot on his back before he can make an escape. Tavros winces with sympathy. "Cough it up, Lucky Charms," she says, tapping her foot on the Felt guy's shoulder.

"That is not my name," the Felt member says, weakly - then Vriska snarls, and the man cringes. Vriska's dice start to burn white-blue with heat - so hot that Tavros can almost see waves in the air, just barely visible against the backdrop of the rift walls. The rift starts to shake around them before she casts the dice down into the point where the branch meets the black crystal at the lowest point of the fissure, and Tavros puts a hand against the beehive mainframe beside him on reflex.

All he gets is a handful of sticky comb, and the growing realization that this may have been, um, a
The dice hit the stone with a shattering crack, and the rock splinters in the bright flare of Vriska's attack. More sharp cracks spread up and down the length of the branch - and then the stone crumbles into chunks the size of houses, and falls apart with a low, rumbling series of creaks.

And the space beneath it all is hollow. Tavros blinks, and wipes honey off on the edge of his rocketchair as the fissure opens up to reveal empty space that leads down into the dark. The white branch holds firm, without a scorch mark anywhere on the pale bark to show where Vriska's hit landed, and as the crystalline rock firmament of the Battlefield continues to crumble, Tavros can see that the branch extends further down, like a pale thread through the hollow space, dotted with thin ivory leaves. The bark must glow with some kind of light, because he sees it clearly even though he can't see anything else in the dark.

Vriska hops off the branch, captchaloguing the Felt man with an off-handed sweep of her claw, and falls down into the abyss with her hair streaming out behind her. Her god tier clothes burn like the sun. "Tavros? Get ready to meet your maker," she says, her voice smug, and full of perfectly synced echoes.

Vriska, Tavros can grudgingly admit, is very good at dramatic effect.

He follows her down into Skaia.

---

Jade feels more than one portal bloom as they arrive; there's a second where all she can see is white and spiraling green, but she feels them with perfect clarity, and with a rush and a pop of her ears - both sets! - the dark of the Medium opens up before her. She gets at least three and a half seconds to enjoy it, victory hot and fierce in her chest like fire – and then Leviathan screams, and Jade realizes that there's a heaping helping of oh no writhing around right head of them. The ships that zapped through ahead of the Condesce's battleship scatter in three different directions, in ways that look weirdly practiced – evasive maneuvers that put the smaller gunships between the bulkier, heavy-bellied arks full of people in storage. They're all still riding the fast burn of the psionics that catapulted them through the gate, but Jade can feel them all slowing down, despite the really urgent emergency going on here! One could actually call this an urgency -

"Good glubbin' fuck. What has that massive seabeach done now?" the Condesce says. She practically rips the mouthpiece off her face once she realizes the Medium has air, and once her face is free the troll immediately grips her teeth, shading her eyes with a claw as a burst of hot yellow light rips through the Medium and gouges through the edge of the Furthest Ring. Jade can feel all the meteors of the Reckoning all the way from here, with almost no effort - and she can also feel all the gaping holes where reality cuts off, instead.

Leviathan - it is Leviathan, she thinks, with weird certainty that she'll want to examine later - is kiiinda distracting, in all its super ugly, convoluted glory. From this angle, Jade can see rippling shards of warped glass flaring from the Horrorterror's side. Except its side is a mound of coils, wrapping over and around and feeding into each other like immersed Klein bottles, and brackish purple-black blood pours through the transparent loops. And it's - unfathomable, in the usual Horrorterror way where Jade just can't wrap her head around all of it, but also unfathomable huge, in a way Jade has never felt before. She flattens Bec's ears to her head with a shudder, but there's just so much.

That's the only excuse Jade has for not realizing the even more immediate issue, which is the creepy bodybuilder skeleton man firing a machine gun at the Horrorterror. It's apparently more effective than He's also directly ahead on the same plane as the Battleship Condescension, and the Condesce rises to her feet like a swelling tide, her hair blown back in a wild tumble that almost defies gravity and her trident detached from the hull. Jade doesn't exactly know the Condesce very well - but when she blinks in the troll's direction, she recognizes a 'I'm about to give the order to ram this guy' look when she sees one! "Not a good plan!" Jade says fast, just as the Condesce raises her trident, and all the Battleship's weapons (even the ones halfway down the ship from them) follow her aim like extensions of her body. Both shooting and ramming are unequivocally terribad plans, and Jade's having serious reservations about the smaller ships trying to cover the ark ships' retreat by zooming around in Leviathan's general vicinity like a bunch of maniacs.

The Condesce snarls and angles her glare at Jade, impatience and irritation and trench-cold calculation warring in her fuchsia stained eyes. She doesn't turn her head to do it, which is good, since her long horns have lowered into an aggressive slant, and Jade would probably get impaled. But this close, Jade isn't too-too concerned as far as impalement goes; with Bec's awareness enhancing her own, she thinks she could feel even the teeniest, tiniest twitch of the Condesce's pinky claw. Stuff in the distance is still fuzzy and indistinct, but she could focus in on them, if she tried. "You guys have to get out! Not get munched on by a Horrorterror!" she says.

"Then which way is out, gill?" the Condesce demands, with her most demanding voice - and that's a doozy of a demanding voice, if Jade is any judge. They're still arrowing forward, though the Battleship's speed declines almost as sharply as all the other ships', and if they're gonna avoid hitting green Skeletor, they need to turn fast. Jade can probably boost the turn herself, but her head feels like it's still turning in spirals. If she has to fight the Condesce herself to do it -

And wait. Hang on. She's asking a good question. Because Jade can feel most of the big things in the Medium, now, from the distracting chaos of Leviathan to the harmony of the four intact lands, and there's one thing that's kinda sorta missing. Something that Jade assumed would be super obvious, and possibly lit up in giant flashing neon green signs to her space sense, at the very least!

But when she casts her awareness wide like a spirographic net, she can't feel anything like the kind of exit Calliope promised.

So they might be kind of screwed. "Noooot entirely sure yet," she says, turning around to look with her actual eyes in case she's missing the obvious. But no - no matter which direction Jade looks, her movements increasingly twitchy as she scans and rescans the same patches of the Medium, she can't see anything that screams 'escape.' Either both her space sense and her eyes are failing her...or there's nothing here.

Also, green Skeletor did not stop being a thing that is happening. Jade realizes they're still plowing toward him with all their leftover momentum, and even though the creepy guy's busy with Leviathan, Jade thinks he'll notice if they run into him. "Uh, that way!" Jade says, snapping and pointing a finger at LoHaC. Better than faded LoLaR, which Jade almost didn't recognize, and which is located wayyy too close to Leviathan for comfort. The Condesce gives her a look, her lips pursed with disbelief, and Jade smacks herself internally until her brain stops futzing around and comes up with a believable tone of voice. Fake it til you make it! "Seriously, any direction is better than here!"

"Oh, the fins I do for - Fine!" The Condesce swears.

And keeps swearing.

And doesn't stop until she's turned fuchsia in the face, as the Battleship rumbles and then turns smoothly, just angled enough that they shear past green Skeletor by a mile. Jade reaches out and hauls the nose of the ship to the side with a little extra oomph, to make sure they're gonna clear him by...a lot. A lot sounds like a good, quantifiable way of putting it! But -

"Now, where are we aimin'?" the Condesce says, her voice grating, and oh, right. That's stilll a work in progress. 'Away from the fighting monsters' can only take them so far, Jade guesses, and 'toward LoHaC' is a stopgap. The small ships and the arks turn - the gunships on a dime, the arks in wide, sluggish arcs - to follow in the Battleship's wake, so at least Jade doesn't have to worry about any of them charging away at psionic speeds.

Hm. This is definitely a pickle, and the longer Jade's at a loss, the more likely the Condesce will do something dumb. They need a destination.

So Jade smiles at the Condesce (it's more of a wince, but who's counting?) and takes out her phone to check in, laughing awkwardly through her teeth as the Condesce inhales deeply. People probably noticed the ships arrive, and maybe Calliope talked to them while Jade was busy in gatespace. Finally, just as Jade thinks she's about to have another swearing, angry trollfit on her hands, the Condesce rolls her eyes, her diamond-sharp teeth bared in a grimace - and then takes out her own gold and gem-encrusted phone, tapping on the screen using the pads of her fingers instead of her elaborately decorated claws with precise stabs. Jade casts one last look over her shoulder, shudders as her awareness brushes over several wide tears where time has cracked, and makes sure that green muscle man hasn't decided to fire at them.

But he's just hanging there, like dead weight. Jade can't keep calling him green Skeletor forever - she thinks she knows his name, just like she knows what to call the massive Horrorterror coiling around the Medium - but on the other hand, calling him that makes him a lot less intimidating, and Jade is all about faking it until you make it. They might have gotten away with it; apparently Leviathan is just way more interesting, for now.

GG: hey guys!
TT: Jade!
AC: :33 < you made it!
TG: i call dibs obijade please your my only ho
TA: oh my god will you calm your shiit
EB: AAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAA
TA: WILL YOU CALM YOUR SHIIT TOO FUCK
GG: whoa, whoa! one at a time, everyone! whatd I miss?"
CC: A W)(OL----E lot of stuff!
CT: D--> We are holding Noir off but if Serket has %% us -
TG: oh god
TG: sollux hurry up
TA: iim handliing it
GG: sorry! slight delay on the portal!
GG: should have been here sooner, but i think noir busted mine a little :/
GA: Oh Jade. I Have Asked Calliope, And She Says The Gate Should Open Shortly.
GG: oh, thank you!
GG: where is everyone at?
TT: We have a delectably crisp new spreadsheet for our current locations and status. Vriska, naturally, has not checked in. Tavros has gone AWOL as well, which bodes ill.
GG: D: it bodes indeed.
TA: hes not dead yet so he can get iin liine
GG: ...guys, literally all of your entries on this spreadsheet say you need help!
GG: except rose and feferi and kanaya!
CC: 38O
CA: I feel like we need help just on principle
GG: Oh Nepeta, you're god tier now? :O
AC: :33 < WHOOOOOO HOOO! >:33c The rogue of heart cannily steals the > from her meowrail's quirk to use as eyebrows!
GC: I H4D3 CONG3ST1ON.
AA: Hade?
GC: H4D3.
GC: 4UGH! H4T3!
GG: Guys, seriously? Guys! I have a bunch of civilian ships here and there's a giant monster battle right up on our butts and no way out! I need help!
TT: There's a help deficit, at the moment. We'll try to wrap up here on LoLaR fast, since we're in the best shape.
GA: Oh, I Am Supposed To Come Help With That. The Ships Thing. At Some Point.
CC: We're (urrying! ) (ang on!
-- (er Imperious Condescension [)(IC] has joined the chat! -- )(IC: yo
TG: sup
CA: wwait no
)(IC: w)(ats up w this s)(it )ere
CC: 38o
CA: Oh fuck me
EB: AA AAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAA
TT: Sollux, abort the memo.
GG: Guys, stop! She's in charge of the ships, she's helping!
)(IC: wrigglers are panicky af
TG: nope nope nope
)(IC: and my gill
CC: O)()()()()( D---EAR
)(IC: w)(eres t)(e s)(outy one
GG: Just hope we're going the right direction, then...
GC: S1L3NC3!
GC: 1 W1LL H4V3 ORDER 1N TH1S RUMPUS BLOCK!
TT: Really? I thought things were relatively in hand, all things considered.
GC: YOU’R3 4LL TYP1ING TOO F4ST 4ND 1 C4N B4R3LY SM3LL F4SD 3NOUGH TO K33P UP.
TG: Tzs snotblind everyone post sick memes
TA: Werent you panicking two seconds ago
TG: Dude I can multitask
CA: I cannot believe you idiots are acting like this in front of the hic
TT: Well, I'm not sure why you would expect anything better.
TT: Expecting a modicum of manners and/or self-preservation instinct out of this memo is frankly unrealistic.
CA: Yeah that's fair

"Your fronds are ridiculous," the Condesce observes. One of her assistants - maybe the same troll as last time - has joined them again now that the Battleship isn't pelting along at crazy-speed, bearing a tray that holds several glasses of water and one bright pink margarita garnished with a jewel-studded umbrella. Jade gives herself one guess who that's for.
A sigh whistles through Jade's nose. "Yeah, a liiittle bit." She tears her eyes away from Pesterchum long enough to look back at Leviathan and the Lord of Time, as they recede into the distance. Not fast enough for Jade's comfort, though! "Just...give those two a wide berth. Our way out should be opening soon."

"Betta hope so. What are we looking for?"

"We'll know it when we see it, definitely," Jade bullshits. Dave would probably be proud of how smooth that went! But Jade gets the impression that the Condesce is nooot fooled. Not even a little bit. "Would it be okay if some of my friends came and helped guard the ships and meteors, once they're free? As in, please don't shoot them if they do?" There! A nice, casual subject change that also happens to cover something that might be an issue in the future! Jade is on a roll, here.

The Condesce groans, picks up the margarita, and drains it in one swig. Jade doesn't know how she feels about the merits of getting drunk right in the middle of all this silliness, but nope! Not the hill she's gonna die on! Not even once. "Shore, whatever. As long as they don't fuck with me, I don't fuck with them," the Condesce says at last, though her eyelids lower in a suspicious-looking glance at Jade. Like she's trying to see if her own bullshit is gonna fly with Jade. Then, before Jade can cross her arms and mention the suspiciousness, the Condesce picks up a glass of water and hands it to Jade. "Here."

"Jimmy'd pitch a fish if I let you run around lookin' all green around the gills," the Condesce adds, raising a claw and inspecting the nail décor with a faint frown.

If she's gonna wait for Jade to chug the water, she's gonna wait for a while! Jade heads back to the memo one last time. Five minutes, Kanaya said, and it's almost been that long -

GG: okay! ANYWAY!
TT: Hm? Oh, right. Problems.
GG: once we have a heading i'll get the ships going toward the gate GG: who here actually seriously needs help!!! last call!
)(IC: w)(o says youre ditching my s)(ips?
AA: you probably should stay with them for a while :
GG: probably as in will, or probably as in helpful advice?
AA: why not both?
TG: goddamnit
GG: but wait!
GG: first you guys have to see my new look!
)(IC: )(old tf up im gettin in on this gill

Jade really only intends to take a quick picture of herself and use it as an excuse to float her glass of water back onto the assistant's tray, but the instant she holds up her phone the Condesce leans into the frame. By which Jade means, the Condesce practically takes over the entire frame, with the huge mass of her hair smushing against Jade's and cutting off all but a few red points of the Battleship behind them, her skin dry ice cold against Jade's cheek. The fuchsiablood throws up two claws in her signature two-horns sign, which looks remarkably like a peace sign but more intimidating and possibly trademarked, and after a moment's pause Jade gulps and puts up a regular peace sign.
Because Jade is a lot of things! But she's not dumb enough to try to kick Her Imperious Condescension out of a photo op when she's got one arm slung around Jade's back and teeth close to her face. Her smile feels kind of weird and the corner of her lip won't stop twitching, but she takes the picture anyway and sends it off.

TT: Bec?
GG: uh huh
TT: My condolences.
TG: oh fucking christ youve gone full furry
GG: youre just jealous dave! :P
TG: honestly jade
TG: probably yeah on some level
CA: unbelievable
AC: :33 < the rogue of heart sniffs carefully, unsure how to f33l about this development
AC: :33 < (I LOVE IT PURRPURRPURR!)
probably in a better place than the ships right now, all things considered, but the ships should be able to catch up. Jade starts bouncing on her heels, unable to contain the energy bubbling up in her chest.

The Condesce's nostrils flare, her eyes cold, glass-sharp as she stares at Jade, then at the Gate. "That our way out?" she says, even though it should be obvious. The tips of her claws drum along Jade's arm.

"Oh yeah. That is very definitely the way out." And...it's weird. Jade catches herself nodding her head, so face and jerkily that it makes her head bobble, and that snaps her out of the euphoric, magnetic daze that swamped her with the Gate's opening. It doesn't feel like that was a bad thing, but once a tiny shard of calm pinches Jade in the mental butt, her head clears a little so she's not lost in it. She'll need to remember not to get caught up in the Gate; she can't afford to forget all the civilians under her feet. Really quick, she pats around in her sylladex for a rubber band to tie around her finger - but most of her collection got kiiinda mixed in with the rest of her when she started melting, so the rainbow-striped rubber band that she finds and knots around her index finger will just have to stand in for all of the ones she lost.

With that done, she looks up and meets the Condesce's eyes instead of past her. The tension in the Condesce's short frame eases off - Jade blinks; she must have been acting weirder than she thought! - and the troll rakes her claws through her hair. "Alright, then. You got your head on your shoulders?" the Condesce asks, even as she snaps her claws and points the claw-pistol that ensues at the Gate. Her assistant bends their head and starts tapping frantically on a palmhusk.

The fleet turns further, and Jade can sense them aligning into some kind of formation again. It's a lot heavier on the rear guard, she thinks, with the ark ships falling in wide ranks just ahead of the Battleship itself rather than forming a long string. Which is weird, unless you consider that one crack in time screaming through them from behind is all it would take to break the fleet, if they were all in a line. Spreading them out like this makes more targets...

And they're all moving at the speed of slow. Jade can barely feel the crackle of the psionics at all, when before the ships lit up like fireworks! "Oh yeah, I'm fine. You guys can't go any faster?" she asks, both impatience and anxiety leaking into her voice.

The Condesce scowls, but doesn't direct it at Jade -. "Not sure how soon we can do another craysea fast burn like that. Damn ships are built for long distance shit. And my buoy will also pitch a fit if I start burnin' people out. Cod dammit. Hmm..." She folds her arms and starts drumming her nails along her own arm like drills.

That's so conveniently inconvenient. Jade shakes her head, as reality sits its butt down on the last of her euphoria and squishes it. "As fast as you can. I'll try to give you a boost, but it sounds like my friends have gotten in an awful lot of trouble without me..." Jade says, sighing. "Well, we're probably fine! For now! But the Reckoning could start any minute, and also -" she waves both hands behind them "- all of that is still a thing."

The Condesce bares her teeth in a troll not-smile; the leer looks as natural on her face as the look of cold calculation. "Conchsider it done - I'll go kick Zahhak into glubbin' gear, see if he can rework some -"

SS: Gerroff me! I'll stab all of yo-

The carapacian equivalent of a furious snarl interrupts them, jolting through Jade's brain. Spades Slick has a pretty distinctive voice, Jade's gotta admit - he and Noir don't sound anything alike, anymore. Jade tunes in just in time to feel the last of a scuffle at the hatch, and then Noir shoves his way out of the Battleship with his teeth buried in the meat of some unfortunate troll's claw. He pretty much hauls himself up onto the platform one-handed, since the other claw is busy stabbing anyone who blinks at him funny. She makes a mental note to ask Karkat why he made friends with the most knife-happy possible friend on the planet, then teleports Spades away from the tangle of troll assistants attempting to drag him away from the Condesce. He should land flat on his butt, but - Spades being Spades - he starts writhing and hissing furiously the second Jade brings his atoms together again, and lands in a rolling heap instead. A short Prospitian carapacian lady follows him out of the hatch, clutching a gossamer, sparkly black shawl around her shoulders as she politely sidesteps the pile of red-clad trolls that collapsed when their target teleported away.

MP: Excuse us! Dear, please put that away.

"Oh, what is this fresh shell? Why ain't these two in sleepers, yet?" the Condesce demands. "If they ain't necessary or politically relevant, they glubbin' well shouldn't be wandering around my ship!"

The nearest assistant gives a remarkable nuanced shrug that somehow manages to communicate 'I have no idea, but the reason is probably really, really dumb' in a single motion, which requires a lot of talent to pull off! Meanwhile, Spades Slick finishes flailing (after nearly stabbing himself once in the shin, Jade notes) and pulls himself together, his white eyes narrowed to slits as he jabs a purple-and burgundy-splotched knife at Jade. Not in an attacking sense! Just in a pointing sense, like how a normal person would jab a finger at you. With Spades, the difference between pointing and stabbing tends to be a matter of degree, and how much blood gets drawn on impact.

SS: Witch, we've got problems.

...Oh boy! Those words that Jade just loves to hear. "That happens a lot, yeah. What kind?" she says, summoning a weak smile. Bec's - her ears flatten out a little to either side, but she's kinda new to figuring out her new canine-body language stuff, so she doesn't know what kind of impression she's giving off. Thankfully, neither Spades nor the Condesce probably have any experience with that kind of thing, either.

SS: The Black Queen's gone. I know that bitch was here -

MP: Oh, language.

"*beach," the Condesce adds. She says 'asterisk' out loud.

SS: - beach, whatever. And now she's pissed off to who fucking knows where, and let me tell you, that means bad news.

Jade is about two seconds from pulling a Karkat. Seriously. She's on the verge, here. So she takes a couple seconds (or okay, twenty seconds) to press her lips together in the weirdest not-smile she's ever made, swallowing a looot of choice words in the process. The Condesce passes her another glass of water, one eyebrow arched, and this time Jade just drinks it in one long chug, because worrying about that kind of stuff just drops lower and lower on her echeladder of caring with each passing second. "You're sure?" she asks with a gasp as she lowers the glass, feeling refreshed. "Because she hasn't really messed with everyone too-too much, so far -"

SS: It takes a monarch to start a Reckoning, you naïve, squishy ass!

SS: YES I KNOW ABOUT THE LANGUAGE.

The Prospitian dame blinks wide, dark eyes, then draws back and looks disconsolate. Spades flinches and smacks his own face at once, looking like he regrets all his life choices. The Condesce clicks her tongue, and says, "*bass," with the harsh, imperious voice of a very disappointed leader-person. Despairing, Spades stares at Jade. She folds her arms, 'cause he's not getting any help from her corner! His head droops and his shoulders hunch, but his apology sounds sincere, even if he mumbles a little.

SS: ...Sorry.

SS: Vantas is also doing some dangerous shit that feels like it's givin' me a goddam infarction, so. Yeah. So send me there so I can do somethin' about it.

MP: It'll be alright. I have it on very good authority that it will all be alright, dear.

MP shakes her head, then places a gentle claw on Spades' arm, tipping her head onto his shoulder. It's actually really sweet - Spades turns as bristly as Karkat does sometimes when doing PDA stuff in front of witnesses, but MP more than makes up for him in the adorable sweetness department. Jade can't see it, but can feel Spades' hand come up to touch the Prospitian's back - no, supporting her, because she's listing to one side. Because MP has a sealed over crack in her chest that Jade can still feel, on some level; it's fixed now, but Jade has a similar healed-over stab wound knotted in her shoulder, and like calls to like.

It's hard to try to stay mad at Spades when he darts miserable, worried looks at MP, thinly disguised by his bare-toothed grimace. "Er. Which there?" Jade asks, cycling through a sigh internally. He snarls at her at once, stamping a foot on the metal floor. His mental voice sounds increasingly erratic.

SS: Either there! No, forget Vantas, he's got one free shot left in him before his heroic stupidity gets urgent.

SS: Agh! Where'd the beach go?!

"If he's lookin' for the carapacific Queen, she's on the skyball," the Condesce answers, her tone deceptively mild, before Jade even has a chance to check for herself. The fuchsiablud hooks a thumb claw toward Skaia when Jade looks at her; the troll's disapproval has turned into heavy-eyed amusement. Tolerating shenanigans like this is something everybody needs to get used to, eventually, and Jade really hopes the Condesce has some seriously high tolerance underneath all her...well, everything. Amusement is better than impatience, which is way better than anger. "As if I wouldn't notice her and the GP jettisoning one of my own escape pods. Can send you coordinates, gill." The Condesce's smile turns sly, and she starts waggling her eyebrow.

Jade can't quite repress a giggle-snort. The Condesce's smile inches up a little more. Whiiich is good! Jade likes cooperative tyrant lady trolls! Cooperation and jokes are good, and definitely a thing to be encouraged. "Right. Okay!" she says, clapping her hands together. "Then I'll be right back once I drop Spades off!"

The Condesce plants one claw on her hip, cocking it a little to the side as she gives Jade a piercing look. "We got you?" she says, dead serious.

Well. Jade bounces on her heels once, then tilts her hand from side to side in a so-so motion. "Probably! I'll try to check in with John one last time. I haven't heard from him yet, so..." If John's in super-deep trouble, bad enough that he can't even answer, that definitely calls for a check-in. Or maybe his phone got busted. There's a ton of explanations for why he might not be answering, and while Jade is trying to keep her 'bad news' pile on the smallish side, she'd rather hear more bad news than wander around the Medium blissfully unaware of it!

And the Condesce's face does something...weird, when Jade mentions John. Some kind of flicker, her eyes darting to the side - but then it's gone again, smoothed under a mask of imperial indifference as the troll starts to snap more orders out at her bevy of assistants, and Jade just has to tuck it away to wonder about later. Right now, instead of John, somebody with purple text is messaging her back. Urghghhhh. Gamzee isn't really who she wants to hear from, but if he has news ab-

TC: hes fine
GG: uh...scuse me for not believing that right away :/
GG: if hes fine, why isn't he messaging me himself?
TC: BROTHER'S ALL BUSY WITH A BOSS FIGHT
TC: we've got it motherfuckin covered though TC: PROMISE :o)
GG: agh!
GG: the clown face is not reassuring! on so many levels!
TC: :o(
GG: ...no, don't do the sad face either.
TC: :o(
GG: oh for - you guys are fine? you wouldn't lie to me about that?
TC: i don't get my lie on for shit like this, you feel?
TC: WOULD NEED TO HAVE A GOOD MOTHER FUCKIN REASON
GG: urgggh.
GG: i'll be checking on you guys if i don't hear back soon GG: sorry, i just -
TC: i get it, jadesis
TC: BUT ALSO
TC: don't you trust a motherfucker? :o)
GG: not with the clown face emoticon! jeez!
GG: and i'm trying but everything happens a lot right now, and the worry doesn't stop from happening!
TC: FAIR ENOUGH
GG: anyway, watch out for him
GG: you might want to concentrate on fighting and not texting, i guess
GG: good luck with the boss fight!
TC: i don't text
TC: :o)
TC: thanks

And that's about as much sense as Gamzee ever makes, so Jade just has to live with it. Urgh. Jade taps the side of her head with the heel of her palm a couple times for good measure - for a second there, she thought she was hearing Gamzee instead of reading the words in Pesterchum, and Gamzee-induced synesthesia isn't something she wants to navigate while teleporting around the Medium. She floats over to Spades Slick, who eyeballs her suspiciously as she enters his stabby radius. Even if Spades wants MP coming along, Jade can tell already that wouldn't be a good idea; the other carapacian can barely keep her eyes open. Jade bites her lip, then looks at the Condesce. Nooot the most ideal person to ask, but also - probably the only person. "Um, could she get someplace to sit, please?" Jade asks, doing her best to look nice and supplicant-y.

The Condesce flicks her claws at Jade impatiently; she seems absorbed in pursing her lips and reapplying her bright lipstick. Another assistant arrives with a compact full of gold, glittery makeup, and the Condesce starts drawing sharp lines along her cheekbones, the flare of her fins, and the bones of her claws, to link up with her jewelry. "Yeah, shore," she says, distracted. "Now bounce, before the tunaverse breaks some more."

Spades peels away from MP very reluctantly, and only once someone has produced a chair from heck only knows where - Jade is the space person, and even she's not sure when they brought that up here. "Okay! Now, no stabbing on the Jade Express, buster," she tells him, with exactly zero expectation that that'll, y'know. Actually work.

SS: That's just unrealistic.

-

BQ: Where is it.

BQ: My patience wears thin.

The Black Queen does not pace; the small confines of the wretched little pod they've commandeered for this wouldn't let her stalk properly, and she wouldn't stoop to something as plebeian as pacing in present company. The Grey Protector sits at the controls, mild and benign as he guides the pod with easy, practiced grace down through Skaia's well of clouds, when she wants him to grate on the nerves. She wants him to give her a reason. It doesn't have to be a good one: an unintended insult, a twitch that might be interpreted as a threat. But instead the pale carapacian radiates calm and steadfast understanding, and in such close quarters, the mental resonance of a King is strong enough that the BQ can't dismiss him out of claw. He's as sane and quiet and contemplative as the Black King never could have been, and she perversely hates him for it all the more.

Her very shell feels like it has been scraped raw - her body screams for antagonism, recalcitrant in the face of unrelenting forbearance. She can sense stupid, stupid Noir from here, boiling over with the power of her ring, and the rocking pulse of warsong reverberates in her shell, in her blood, and the urge to dig her claws into her own caparace to free it, to tear down the sky is - is -

GP: The engines are giving us all they've got. We should arrive shortly.

BQ: Stop that.

GP: Mmm.

GP: This looks like a nice place to land, don't you agree?

BQ: It's inconsequential. It will all be destroyed soon.

Not maddening. She is not mad. Merely furious, and a tad impatient, but who would not be? The Black Queen is deeply, irritably aware of Skaia's will, as the GP lands the pod with carapacian ease - namely, by crashing it to a skidding stop just outside the walls of a half-demolished Prospitian cathedral, as one would any meteor worth crashlanding - and the contradiction roiling within her soul has never stung so keenly as it does now. Hate and loyalty, bound into one.

Someone has cracked Skaia open, and Her attention fills the air with perfect echoes. It's not an atmosphere conducive to calming down, not when every part of you wants to wage war. The BQ kicks the pressurized door open the instant they roll to a stop, shredding the metal with a [Phthartic Phonation] that causes the controls to explode. To her displeasure, the Protector moves away just in time to avoid scorching his claws in the electrical fire that ensues, and he absorbs the rending sound waves without so much as a flinch. Her scowl cements itself on her face as she yanks the brim of her hat down to block Skaia's ambient light. The pod will never fly again after her scream finishes rattling every screw and bolt out of its socket, but she could care less how the GP plans to escape this horrible place without the squishy, troll-built pile of scrap metal. She has yet to decide if she'll let him live, even if he does cooperate - she's in the mood for a spot of regicide that only a select few carapacians can satisfy.

The widely-built carapacian stops to tilt his bared head back, gazing up at the blue and white of the sky. Fires burn in the distance, still, leftovers from the previous session, but the pale grey cathedral nearest them appears to have been demolished by a heavy impact rather than fire, so there’s no smoke to blot out the sky. They sigh at the same time, the GP with a wistful look on his placid face, the Black Queen with a grimace as she begins to tap her foot hard enough to send tiny tremors through the ground for miles around them. Parts of the cathedral that have remained stable until now begin to crumble further. The longer this useless King dawdles, the more the Black Queen needs to remind herself that without him, she could spend the rest of her time digging through piles of Prospitian garbage and never find what they’ve come to retrieve.

He never had it in the makeshift capital on Earth. As if she hadn't scoured that place from top to bottom, the first time her cousin-queen so much as hinted at the possibility. Perhaps the White Queen knew, or perhaps the White King scraped together a meager amount of subterfuge from his pale bones to conceal this knowledge even from her, before willingly becoming this faded shell of his former self.

GP: Ah, yes. The weather is lovely. This way.

Objectively speaking, the weather is shit. Horridly bright, with reality dying overhead. But the GP finally, finally takes the lead, and the Black Queen stalks along in his stately wake. The cathedral ruins stand still and empty as they venture through the roof-less entry way, the faint checkboard pattern of the stone chipped or scraped clean in many places along the walls. Tattered black, white, and golden banners hang from the few walls that remain intact, most of them bleached by Skaia's light until the fabric is just as faded and threadbare as their not-King. This would have served as a spawn and launch point for Prospitian bishops and their Arch Deaconstructors, were the Game still functioning as intended; as it stands, nothing has spawned here in a very, very long time.
And the Grey Protector walks her down into the dark of a chamber beneath the surface level of the cathedral. The shadows of the spiraling staircase wrap around the Black Queen at once, pliant under her feet, and she replaces the wispy shawl she gave to the little Prospitian earlier - for the express purpose of giving Spades Slick a heart attack and a half when the blind fool finally notices - with a heavy black plates of armor, which mantle her shoulders and clasp over the soft, vulnerable seams in her carapace at the front of her chest. The GP pays her no heed; his wide, unprotected back waits before her, an easy target. War sings through her, and summoning a dark blade from the shadows would be so easy.

He hasn't even locked the door to the vault. This is an old place, the walls still carved with hideous frogs and other amphibious and reptilian lifeforms, the shelves lined with purple and gold-bound books, the center taken up by a low writing desk. A suitably dull place for a Writ Keeper. What really matters is not the outdated information contained in the books, but the slowly blooming pink lotus flower which fills the far half of the room, the petals splayed heavy and wide over the square base. Every few moments, the countdown in the readout along the base flickers and jitters as time shatters outside, but inevitability causes it to keep its course - Skaia wants this to happen too much - only a few seconds to go.

BQ: You used a lotus time capsule.

GP: They are remarkably useful.
The last two seconds blink by too fast as something cracks over the cathedral. As the lotus finishes blooming, the Grey Protector steps forward, and the Black Queen -

- does not strike him down where he stands. It takes agonizing effort not to, as he closes his hand over the pale scepter. The Black Queen watches it happen and feels it at the same time: the hateful jolt of a monarch laying claw upon that which is theirs. The abstract representation of Skaia swirls sync over the tip of the king's scepter, with four tiny orbs orbiting the base. The G- the White King holds it carefully in both palms, the white light of latent power beginning to shine through his carapace, and all it will take is a twist for him to activate it and emerge with whatever prototyping remains in this damned session.

WK: Here we are.

And all it will take is a step forward, and he will have a lance through his back. Check. He brought her here with him without even a token attempt to dissuade her, and she hates him for it. Sometimes she thinks she has nothing left but hate, and a war that she cannot win for losing. What Skaia wills is Her own destruction, session after session after session, and the Black Queen is just as much a piece of that pattern as she ever was.

The White King turns to her, still Wistful, still radiating kingly power like a beacon in the dark, unlit vault.

BQ: Well?

He has not stopped smiling, regal and Weary, even as he bows his head and holds out the King’s Scepter with open palms.

WK: We surrender our scepter. The Battlefield is yours, Black Queen.

Checkmate. She doesn't hesitate for an instant before accepting the feather-light scepter. It adjusts itself to her size, growing heavier until it feels balanced in her claws. Scepters are not like rings - their prototyping is not transferrable to another carapacian, even one of the same kingdom. Only a King can become a King. The White King dims once the scepter leaves his claws, while the Black Queen remains wreathed in shadow.

Once captured or surrendered, a King's Scepter isn't intended to raise the new wielder as a King. A White King's scepter really only has one purpose.

BQ: Tell your Queen to bring me Noir.

BQ: It's time for a Reckoning.

Chapter End Notes

Did you know that 'pulling out all the stops' originally alluded to pipe organ stops?

It's puns all the way down.
Sickness of Soul

Chapter Summary

They are smitten asunder with pain, their bones are smitten apart. There is none of them all that is whole; their lips gape open for breath; They are clothed with sickness of soul, and the shape of the shadow of death. The wind is thwart in their feet; it is full of the shouting of mirth.

Chapter Notes

Bad things happen in this chapter. Follow the [x] links and occasional in-text links throughout for relevant music.

Edit 5/4 Karkat's section starts at 'Karkat hits the lava hard.' Whoops.
Edit 5/8 Rose's section starts at 'There are no traps.' Warning for abrupt but not gory eye trauma.
Edit 5/17 Dave's section starts at 'Dave stares.' I don't know why he has to talk so much, honestly...
Edit 5/29 John's section starts at "'You're really just terrible at this"'. Warning for some gore, particularly of the Trickster variety, and a possible epilepsy warning for a flashy gif after 'John miight be doing...less than okay.'
Edit 6/9 Jade's section starts at 'Jade lands on Skaia.'

See the end of the chapter for more notes.

His voice comes to her from a great way off, solemn and echoing of Skaia and very much alive, and the White Queen closes her eyes and tilts her head back as she listens. LoFaF inundates her with the rich scent of wild growth and imminent genesis, and for a brief, heady moment, she cannot tell whether Skaia or the Forge or the distant, fluttering curtains of the Final Gate ring with the undeniable sound of creation. Something stronger than a Lord is on the rise, but they're at a crux - WK: We are on her mark.

She has lived so many lives, but hearing him is never less of a sweet thing. The White Queen folds her claws together, and opens her eyes.

The ring rests in the cupped bowl of her palms; here and now, it lays contented and still, when it has spent every waking moment since she retrieved it from PM clamoring with war bells and inching toward her ring claw. Balance is a hard thing to resist - if one Queen's Ring has found a claw, surely the other must follow suit. But then it would have come to war far earlier than the White Queen would have liked, against an opponent with no care for collateral damage and no true purpose beyond his own vicious gratification.

This is not a war that she can win. But it is one that she can help end.
WQ: Pardon me, Doctor Lalonde. I'm afraid the time has come.

It is difficult to raise her gaze from the soft, waiting ring, but the White Queen does so, meeting the wine-red eyes of the woman next to her as she looks up from the small, yellow-orange snake that winds between the fingers of her gloves and flicks its tongue over the clipboard. The doctor arches an eyebrow, her expression searching as she wordlessly passes the snake off to the lab assistant who offers up a mesh net. Most of her makeup remains in place, but since their arrival she has chewed and wet her lips enough in worried thought that the bright lipstick has vanished. But the White Queen has had the chance to observe Rue Lalonde on and off for some time, now, and despite the worry and the strenuous exercise needed to hunt for snakes in the growing heat and humidity of LoFaF, there's no hint of tremor in her gloved hands, and the color of her skin is neither flushed nor Prospitian pale. She has reached some sort of equilibrium, and clings to it with every inch of poise that was once obfuscated with the use of inebriants.

Then Doctor Lalonde's eyes narrow, and she crosses her arms, lifting a single finger to silence an assistant's question as she turns to face the White Queen head on. "What are you going to do?" she asks - which is the correct question. The doctor has already catalogued the ring, and knows enough to realize that the White Queen has brought it forth now, of all times. As the White Queen watches, sweat trickles down along the doctor's temple, close enough to her eye that she blinks hard to keep it out.

WQ: Rectify an old error.

WQ: There must be a Reckoning for what Noir has done.

She keeps the carapace of her face smooth and serene, and though she cannot keep from voicing the emphatic capitalization of the Reckoning with her mind, she can maintain her composure well enough that Doctor Lalonde does not quite register it, or what it portends. Doctor Lalonde's frown deepens with a faint twitch, but with one final, respectful dip of her head, the White Queen steps away. There is nothing that any of the people in the immediate vicinity could do to stop her - but the ascension of a War Queen will be uncomfortable for bystanders at best, even if she does her best to curb the strongest flares of sovereignty. She would rather not bring down the jungle on top of all these people working to assist the heroes.

Thirty feet should be enough of a buffer zone, if she's any judge - it leaves her up to her dress hem in silt-brown water that has long since stilled, as the snakes that churned the flats into a froth have been gathered up systemically under the Maid's direction. But just as she sighs, and spreads the claws of her hand wide -

PM: Wait!

Under the water, something cool and smooth lands with a plap! on the toe of her foot - and PM tramples toward her through the water, kicking up splashing arcs of water as she pelts toward the White Queen by the most direct route possible. The smaller carapacian was retrieving and delivering snakes captured by the children further field the last WQ heard from her, and so this process requires her to wade through deeper water up around her elbows. As she splashes across the flooded plain, the ring teetering on the tip of the White Queen's claw sparks off her claw nail and threatens to fall into the water before she claps her hand shut on it. A low bourdon bell clangs harshly against her palm, throbbing in alternating beats with a sharp alarm siren, before the call to war eases back into a tolerable, shell-cracking drumbeat under her carapace. The brief audible note bursts through the water in an aborted shockwave; with a dip that dunks her chin in the water, PM stumbles and then ploughs through the water to the White Queen's side.
PM: Take me with you!

WQ: That may not be wise.

She says this without looking up. Frowning, the White Queen stoops and reaches blindly into the water, feeling about for a moment before locating the creature that hopped onto her foot. A white frog scrambles on her palm and wraps a webbed foot around one claw, shining and smooth as it finds a suitable position in her hand. It is perfect in every way - round with slim limbs and wide feet, its eyes flashing blue to lilac to red to green and back again - and the honor of it causes something in her torso to clench tight. Ring forgotten, for the moment, the White Queen cups the frog with both claws, and takes a moment to regain her composure before turning back to PM. It would not do to weep. Not now.

WQ: Go with your friends. Live a good life.

PM blinks at the frog in her hands with wide eyes; the moment of awe silences her - but only for a moment. Then she clenches her claws into fists, raises her chin, and shakes her head, staring the White Queen dead in the eye.

PM: …

PM: If you don't take me with you, I'll find my own way.

WQ: I do not know if I can protect you. Whatever you choose, you will still have been a most wonderful protégé.

Then again, the White Queen does not know what lays ahead for those carapacians who have chosen to make their pilgrimage to the new reality. No one's safety is guaranteed. Here, in the Medium, she can almost see the underlying lacework of strings, drawing her on toward Skaia's inevitable will - but that knowing coincidence stops at the Final Gate, and the meteors and ark ships all streak across the Medium in a wild rush that tears straight through it.

What lays through that gate is beyond her imagination. The mere thought of trying to comprehend a world without Skaia pierces her through the heart, stops up her throat, paralyzes her hands. No, no. She might have followed the heroes there, but she would not belong. It would not be home. Once, in passing, she speculated that she could follow them and be content - but no. If she left Skaia, she would dwell in regret for the rest of her days.

If it ends, let it end here.

PM: I'm coming with you.

And this time, it is a statement of a fact, which is often more effective than a plain order. The Prospective Monarch has caught the trick of it, and the White Queen finds herself inclining her head after only a brief hesitation. Sorrow almost stops her. But PM folds her arms, her jet black eyes implacable, and the White Queen acquiesces.

WQ: Very well.

By now, Doctor Lalonde has waded out - so much for thirty feet, the White Queen thinks, woeful - and stops short of them. She stands heedless of the water drenching her long coat. Enough time has passed for her quick mind to piece together the hints, the context clues, and now she stares at the White Queen with a bleak look. Like a woman at an unironic funeral, the fingers of her hand pressed tight where years of holding a cocktail glass stem have left the memory in the form of a callus in her skin. The frog in the White Queen's claws croaks, and its throat brushes the ring, trapped in the crease between two claws. Her vascular system and the ring's pulse have long since synchronized, but the note that echoes from the frog's touch is something quietly mournful. Desolation, she thinks, or a piano refrain heard long, long ago.

WQ: Please, take care of yourself, and the few carapacians here.

"I'll do what I can," Doctor Lalonde says; PM jerks, as though she hadn't even noticed the doctor's approach. A few of the lab assistants have gathered in the shallows at the water's edge, but they remain at a safe distance. One of them drags a wayward blue iguana back before it can sprint into the shallows, but for the most part the humans and trolls watch and whisper amongst themselves, their eyes curious and wary. "Do try to come back in one piece? I'd miss your enigmatic conversation."

She sounds wistful and wry, rather than firm. Doctor Lalonde has a firm grasp on the situation, it would seem. All the White Queen can give her in return is another nod, matching the human's twist of a smile with a soft smile of her own.

WQ: It will be as Skaia wills.

Then she feels the frog shift in her palms, its throat fluttering in another croak, and she thinks that perhaps she has one other thing to give. The White Queen walks back through the water toward Doctor Lalonde and holds out both hands. The human blinks, confused for a moment, before hesitantly holding out her own hands. Murmuring an invocation of respect, the WQ places the frog gently in her gloved palms, and smiles as the plump amphibian plops itself down in its new home. Doctor Lalonde nearly goes cross-eyed as it ribbits at her.

WQ: …Don't forget.

"I -"

Doctor Lalonde cuts off after her voice cracks. The White Queen turns and strides away when she doesn't continue, marching past PM and pausing only briefly to put a claw on the young carapacian's shoulder to indicate she should stand back. Of all the people here, another carapacian would be most able to withstand what comes next, but that does not mean a queenly aura is something to be treated lightly.

She puts the ring on, and just barely remembers to corral the wave of force and power that rushes through her carapace. From across the Medium, she senses Jack Noir flinch in recognition - her King a steady, familiar beacon - the Black Queen, incomplete, snarling - at the center of the Battlefield, a fissure, a branch -

When the White Queen comes back to herself, something is streaming down her face. Tears, or power - it's been a considerable amount of time since she last channeled the power of the ring on a war footing. So long. Too long, maybe; her aura evaporated the water around her in a five foot radius in her distraction, and even now the curving edges of her aura hold the water at a distance. She swallows and pre-emptively lowers the echoing volume of her mental voice, before she can speak some half-forgotten war motif and flatten everyone in the vicinity. PM stands merely a claws-width from the edge of the circle, her expression fierce and utterly unafraid, and she boldly steps into the circle of wet, scorched soil when the White Queen beckons.

WV: wait! don't go with her!

The flare of panicked green that accompanies WV at his most agitated almost dooms him; the White Queen zeroes in on the flicker of Space music that is too close, far too close for her not to have sensed it earlier, and - war, the ring urges - it's Noir -
But WV has ever been and remains a curious thing, and she checks her instinctive crackle of power before it reaches past her burning wrist. Her whole body is alight with hot white power, and she knows it could overwhelm her if she doesn't catch it and stream it back within her carapace. All the muffled sound and other such limiters that have marked Queen-hood in the millennia since their roles within the Game first changed - stripped away. She could burn or tear at a touch; she would have rent the flimsy Earth with a careless thought. It would be harder, here, with two denizens safeguarding LoFaF’s structural integrity, but she is here for War.

PM: I'm sorry. I'll be back.

WV dashes to PM, and consternation displaces PM's ferocious certainty. The other Dersite lingers in the cover of the trees; while he points a sniper rifle in the White Queen's general direction, he doesn't venture closer. PM folds her claws between WV's, while the strange carapacian continues to fuss. PM's answer does not satisfy WV. He starts shaking his head, waving a claw in erratic gestures that lend further agitation to his words.

WV: she's a queen! you don't have to go with her if you don't want to!

PM: But I do.

This stumps the dark carapacian; he stops, his white eyes blank as he reassesses the situation, but there is no more time. Time is perhaps the rarest commodity left to them. Though the White Queen interrupts as gently as she can, it is still not enough for WV, who begins to tremble with ill-repressed indignation when she addresses him. The extra note of power in a war voice shouldn't influence or otherwise affect them since she muted it, but she cannot keep him from taking offense. It seems ingrained in his personality, a cornerstone of his being, to reject royal authority, and she can't begrudge him that.

WQ: You have strange, interesting ideas. You will be a Worthy Visionary.

WV: i'm not interested in your approval!

WV: you're going to fight, and all the common carapacians suffer for it!

If he were one of her own subjects - but he is not. A reassuring gesture or word will only distress him more. She tries, regardless, because it is in her nature, but without any real hope of reaching him.

WQ: Not this time. Not if I can help it.

WV: i don't believe you.

WQ: I am not sure of the logistics, but I believe that you are meant to go on to live on a new world. You can cast off such things as rings and scepters, and live as you choose.

WQ: I've lived too many rounds of the great Game to leave her now. But I believe in you.

That will have to suffice; she seems to have run dry her well of words. Stymied, WV steps back, suspicious and lost at the same time. He neither anticipates nor accepts her approval, and that's fine. PM draws away from him and comes to stand before the White Queen, and his suspicion turns to piercing worry again.

PM: I'll see you guys soon! I promise.

The White Queen spreads her prototyped wings wide, shaking them out until they feel less cramped from disuse by way of non-existence. Carrying any of her people has never been a particular challenge - but now, she has to take great care as she takes PM into her arms to ensure she isn't scalded by the power pouring silver-bright under the thin shell of her carapace, or cracked by a careless twitch of the White Queen's claws.

Has it always been so overwhelming a sensation, to be a War Queen? Or have the long years so dimmed the memories that it all feels fresh? Her control used to be perfect and consummate, the power of war just as much an extension of her will and Skaia's will that commanding it felt no more difficult than walking or raising a hand. Her will was Skaia's will; her whole being an extension of Skaia's.

Was. She missed the moment when she stopped being a perfect part of a whole, and started to act more and more under her own aegis. Skaia's coincidences and will are still open and clear to her, and yet -

There is no more time. She draws PM close, and puts such thoughts aside. Flight comes effortlessly; she streaks upward, clearing LoFaF's sphere of influence in one smooth burst, and PM clings to her with all her limbs.

WQ: Come. If the Mage has not completely sealed over Prospit, there should be a suitable vessel there for you to commandeer.

WQ: Let us bring this to a close.

--

Karkat hits the lava hard; it feels pretty much the same as slamming into a wall of concrete. Something snaps, but he doesn't sink under until the jet-black underling lands on top of him. It's like being slammed into a wall of concrete by another wall of concrete, and Karkat only feels the boiling, screaming hot rock slip over him for a few seconds before worse than third degree burns set in and his nerve endings stop feeling pain. He opens his mouth - stupid - but he can't hear anything, can't see anything that isn't red and black and nothing, can't gasp down air because all that's left to breathe is churning, molten rock -
Karkat dies once more in rapid succession, thrashing and flailing and gagging on a mouthful of molten rock before he finally succeeds in shoving out from underneath the underling with his everything on fire. "Fuck ugly sack of fucking -" he yells hoarsely, once he breaks the surface, and then promptly succumbs to the lava. A-fucking-gain. Thank god it's just a stupid, inconvenient death, or he would be forced to show this entire piece of slag molten pit of a planet what a real rage eruption looks like from beyond the fucking grave. The second resurrection buys him enough time to get clear of the lava, and he slams into the side of the walkway, claws scrabbling for purchase. He's reeling - his head throbs in time with his thundering pulse, and his spine and chest feel like they're going to burn through his skin. Dizzy, he looks at his claws, and thinks he can follow the tracery of his veins and arteries, lit from within by fire.

They're not. He's just out of his fucking mind on adrenalin and the latest and greatest post-death what the fuck hormone to ever be produced by his rageglands. The lava pops at him, spraying molten rock as the giant chess piece underling vanishes beneath the surface, and Karkat starts scaling the walkway before Dave's horrible land of shit and death decides to sprout a molten lava hand and yank him back down into the fiery bowels of the earth.

There aren't any handholds on the side of the path - not even tiny crevasses for him to wedge his claws into. Ignoring the fact that he's mostly flying his way up to solid ground, Karkat starts voicing his vociferage at top volume long before he rolls onto the path and plasters himself flat against the walkway, half his face mashed against the floor as he fights back vertigo. The stone burns against his cheek but feels almost normal under his claws - like he got scraped raw, and his face is over sensitized. The ridiculous Knight cape is not helping his temperature regulation issues. "What the fuck! What the fuck!"

Dave's at his side in a split second. He looks like absolute shit. Which might be putting it kindly - his face has gone dead white again instead of normal borderline albino-white, one of his shades has cracked enough that Karkat can see red through the tinted glass, and the side of his face is covered with a spider web of cuts that almost seem to extend along the same lines as the cracks in his sunglasses. "Yeah, just - just let it all out, man," he advises, before dashing off again. A fight. Right. There's still a fight going on.

Fuck the fight. Karkat needs a minute. Or ten. He swears again, but all that comes out is a stream of fuck's sprinkled over a wordless 'hrrghlaammllgl.' It's a pisspoor attempt, is what it is. "Fucking! Fucking! Fuck, what do I - Dave, help me think of another swear word!" he calls, raising his head enough that it strains his throat.

"Shit!" Dave says, as he dodges under a swing of the lich queen piece's long arm. The enormous underling still can't fit through the door they entered through, but her arm extends enough for her to try and smack them around, apparently. His custodian stabs the chess piece though its ruby eye before vanishing again in a blur that knocks an acheron over backward.

...Dave's Bro is here. For fuck's sake! "Fucking! Shitfuck!" Karkat yells, before letting his aching neck relax, his head thumping against the stone. The maggotfucking asshole of an underling that crushed him into the lava left the path in crumbling fragments just to Karkat's right, with only a sliver of solid path left intact, and there are fresh scorch marks and shattered rock fragments scattered around, like the idiots he calls friends have been setting off traps with wild fucking abandon.

Dying hurt too much. He doesn't have the strength to yell at them individually right now, not while there are still chess pieces running around. All the pawns are gone - since they were based on consorts, that's the opposite of surprising - and only the queen and the bishops are still up and trying to batter Dave and his custodian into the lava. "I'm just. Gonna lay down here for a second," Karkat finishes, and then flops over onto his back so his face will stop burning.
Terezi leans over him with a gore-streaked face, grinning. Karkat flinches, but that's because something digs into his aching spine like a motherfucker, and he has to flop over onto his side again to make it stop throbbing. Not because of Terezi. Not at all. "Oh, it's nod that bad," Terezi says. She sounds like she inserted ten cotton balls directly into her sinuses. "Wish I could ged a whiff of you, but my node is temporarily indisposed. Whad color is your cape?"

She snatches up a corner of Karkat's cape and presses it to her nose, smearing teal blood all over it as she strains to smell it. Karkat snatches it back and rolls when she tries to stab the fabric against the floor with her cane. With her nose plugged, like fuck does he want her trying to stab anything in a two-foot radius of him - the odds of her stabbing him in the arm is too damn high already. "Yes, it is that bad!" he snaps. When she lunges again, he smacks his palm against her nose. She lets out a snrgl at the jolt, but Karkat starts shunting her blood back where it's supposed to go with weird ease, and after a second she goes still, with only a few token feints at his cape. "I fucking died! Lo and behold, today I joined the elite undead person club, and it was fucking shitastic!"

And his outfit is full of loose, baggy fabric. This kind of fuckery is fine for actual pajamas or if you're Dave fucking Strider, but it's not something Karkat would want to fight in. He glares his dark red pants into submission and cinches his shirt and the long-sleeved shirt underneath tight until it feels less like he's wearing multiple pillow cases and more like the body suit of his old hero costume. Kanaya's Kevlar armor additions appears to have gone up in smoke or merged into parts of the darker red fabric, leaving him with ridged black elbow and knee pads. Darkening parts of the fabric from dark reddish brown to black takes more doing, and he can't do fuck all about the bright, blood red symbol and accents that slash across his chest and lace the baggy ends of his pants tight around his calves. But he's long past the point of giving a fuck about that.

The cape refuses to fuck off. He can darken it and shorten the trailing end and shift some of the fabric so it forms a dark jacket over his other two layers of shirt - not helpful, but better - but the fringe defies him and the back of the jacket hangs longer than he wants. Terezi breaks his concentration by licking the palm of his teal-stained hand, though, and he gives up. God tier outfits can go fuck themselves; he pushes Terezi away, since he's done all his powers can do for other people, and she cackles at him as she rolls away. Her nose is still a little swollen and visibly broken, but the worst of the bruising and the bloody nose is gone. "You're welcome."

"Yeah. Sorry about that," Oriole says, morosely. Karkat jumps and nearly falls back over the cliff, because apparently Oriole has been hovering on his other side the entire time he's been fucking around with Terezi. Karkat didn't even notice. If possible, he looks more orange than before Karkat died, and that's...Karkat has no comment on it. His wings hang limp over the edge of the path, and he watches Bro and Dave bisect the last acheron with an exhausted expression. "I tried to catch you. I fucked it up."

Karkat remembers. It was all a loud, hot blur right before he landed ass first in the lava, but he remembers the confused flashes of orange and the shouts that he could barely hear over the crash of metal. "...Not your fault," he mutters. He wants it to be someone's fault, and the most convenient someone is Karkat himself. He should have dug in his heels or swung himself up faster, before the chess piece got close enough to make the path shudder and buck under his claws. He's spent fuck knows how long jumping across roof tops and making death-defying leaps, and he dies by falling off a fucking cliff? Karkat let himself down, for fuck's sake. This is pretty much exactly what he should have expected: the peak of the Karkat Vantas experience.

"Seriously, it's not that bad," Terezi says, settling back on her ass with a huff and rubbing the last of the dried blood off on the cyan blue of her sleeve. Looks like all three of them are going to do their best impressions of lazy sacks of shit by sitting back and letting Dave and his custodian finish dicing up the chess pieces. Karkat can live with that.
Though he's starting to wonder if he got the fuckery end of the god tiering stick, because dying? Hurt. It still hurts; the memory of burning is right there adjacent to the ongoing internal rant in his skull, and he doesn't want to examine it too closely. Which...someone else probably would have mentioned lingering pain by now, right?

Dave stops in again; Oriole barely looks up from his feet in acknowledgement. "Look, not everyone's cool with it. Okay, TZ?" Dave says. He sits down with careful, ginger movements, and Karkat focuses on the sense of blood this time. It's not just Dave's face that's shredded with the lines of a clock face - somehow his whole right arm got shoved down a garbage disposal, and if the idiot bothered to accelerate his healing factor with a fraymotif, Karkat can't feel it doing any good.

Well. Looks like he's back on blood guy duty. Now with new and improved blood powers! Exactly like the old ones, but with a worse outfit. "Arm," Karkat orders, rolling his eyes at Dave. Dave makes a face, then hunkers down in a crouch, looking anywhere except Karkat as he offers his arm. Both of them get nice red uniforms to hide their stupid colored blood, and that's convenient enough that Karkat finds it highly suspect. He starts forcing shrapnel out of the way and scabbing over the small marks and deep lines that pepper Dave's arm.

"You should have heard him screaming at Sollux," Terezi says, reminiscing.

Dave shakes his head, and uses his free hand to start texting. Karkat isn't sure if Dave really ever stops texting, but he didn't have the phone out before, so fuck only knows. "If this resurrection shit ain't instantaneous, I want our money back."

"Are we even fucking paying Sollux anything?" Oriole mumbles.

With a twitch, Dave slowly lifts his head, thunderstruck. "...Holy shit," he says, touching the unhurt side of his face in dawning realization. "I'm part of the problem."

"What problem?" Terezi asks, cocking her head to the side.

"Sburb's ongoing slave labor problem. Shit, we've been forcing him to do unpaid internship work for his resume." Dave stares down at his hands. "Capitalism makes monsters of us all."

Karkat glances at Oriole - who is too busy zoning out in a haze of neon orange guilt - and then at Terezi, looking for some kind of help. Terezi taps her chin with a claw, but doesn't comment.

He checks the memo instead, wrapping his claws around Dave's wrist as an afterthought. If Dave's going to launch into some kind of fugue right here and now, Karkat isn't about to get sucked into one of his weird fucking midlife crises. Not when he could be checking in on everyone else and their marginally less weird problems.

CG: I FUCKING DIED.
CG: I! FUCKING! DIED!
CG: VRISKA, WHERE ARE YOU, YOU SMUG FUCK, I'M ABOUT TO MAKE YOUR GODDAMN DAY.
TT: Vriska and Tavros have stopped responding to messages. Or at least, we aren't receiving a response.
CG: OH, FOR - IS THERE EVEN A FUCKING DIFFERENCE?!
TT: It depends on one's perspective.
CG: KAY COOL, GLAD TO KNOW I'M NOT THE ONLY SCHLUB WHO'S DYING IN STUPID WAYS, AT LEAST.
GA: It Probably Wasn't Too Stupid. We're In A Remarkable Dangerous Setting Right Now.
EB: AAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAA
CG: JOHN, IT'S FINE, I'M ALIVE AGAIN.
EB: AAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAA
CA: okay that's starting to get a little unnerving.
CG: WAIT, HOW FKING LONG HAS HE BEEN DOING THAT? JOHN, WHAT THE FK?
TG: look
TG: i might have panicked
TG: and prematurely announced your demise
TA: you panicked a lot
CA: no, actually i think when you said Karkat was in trouble...
TT: You're right. Gamzee has been reassuring me that they're both fighting something on John's land, but that John is otherwise fine and intact.
TG: I am not entirely reassured.
CG: I KNEW I SHOULD HAVE GONE WITH THOSE FKS! GOD, I THINK I'M ABOUT TO PROJECTILE VOMIT WITH UTTER FKING DISGUST AT MY OWN PAST STUPIDITY.
CG: GAMZEE, IF YOU TWO AREN'T IN PAN-NUMBING AMOUNTS OF DANGER, GET JOHN IN THE FKING MEMO INSTEAD OF MASHING THE A KEY RIGHT FKING YESTERDAY! I HAVE WORDS FOR THE TWO OF YOU!
TC: I'M HERE.
CG: GOOD, ONE OUT OF TWO. I'M BLOWING THIS RAGING HOT MOLTEN SHIT OF A PLANET AND COMING OVER THERE THE FKING SECOND JADE SHOWS UP.
GA: Technically she is here already. However, she is escorting people to the final gate.
GA: I will see if she is available yet. I need a ride soon, too.
TC: not a good plan karkat :o(
TC: THERE'S A SICKNASTY FUCKER YOU DON'T WANT TO TANGLE WITH OVER HEREWAYS.
CG: WHO.
TC: a guy
CG: GAMZEE.
TC: A DUDE
CG: GAMZEE WHAT THE FK.
TC: a not funny not-brother
CG: OKAY, SEE, THIS IS WHAT WE CALL THE OPPOSITE OF CLEAR, HONEST COMMUNICATION! DO I NEED TO USE A WORRIED FACE EMOTICON TO GET MY POINT ACROSS HERE?!
CG: BECAUSE I'LL FKING DO IT!
TG: doooo it
TT: Wait. Gamzee, are you talking about - CG: ):B
TC: Do:
TA: i'm two seconds from banishing both of you and your terrible emoticon choices two the shadow realm
GA: 7:k
GA: Am I Doing This Right?
TA: no, you're unleashing some kind of negaverse computer code on the universe and i won't stand for it KN GA: So I Am Doing It Right. Excellent.
TC: you'll get hurt, and then john'll get his hurt on TC: SHIT WON'T END ANY KIND OF WELL
TT: I think Gamzee is speaking of some form of temporal inevitability constraint. Going to LoWaS might doom the timeline in some fashion, and he's afraid of triggering it.
CG: OH?! SINCE WHEN ARE YOU THE GAMZEE WHISPERER?
TT: I'm not. I'm concerned about John, but there are enough hints here that you joining him on LoWaS would end poorly that I'm more concerned on that front.
TC: ...
TC: SIS'S GOT A PROPER READ ON THE SITCH.
CG: GOD FUCKING DAMMIT. THEN JUST...SAY THAT NEXT TIME, OKAY? PLEASE?
TC: sure thing
CG: FUCK, I'M TIRED.
CA: really? no post-revvivvification rush?
CG: DON'T EVER TYPE THAT WORD AT ME AGAIN.

None of them have eaten – they’ve skipped right from one day into the middle of another, and Karkat’s meatsack has yet to make the executive decision about whether he feels hungry after fighting and running around bullshit traps for a few hours, or hungry after not eating for almost a full day. His back and torso are all one giant ache, which makes it hard to tell whether he has stomach cramps from not eating. "Remind me again why Dave's asshole custodian didn't save my useless ass, too?" he asks, since it's a valid question.

It's also bothering him. Because dying a fiery magma death was not on his to-do list today; because Bro is fucking infamous for pulling last minute bullfuckery to pull people's asses out of the fire; because Karkat was super fucking dead not five minutes ago, and his lungs and pusher strain against his ribs trying to work up to a nice panic attack that he's repressing through sheer will because if he flips off the red hot handle now, there's no one around even remotely capable of calming him back down, and everything is too fucking much right now. He wants to stick his head in a freezer and let the chilled roe cubes melt on his face until he feels less like exploding, but guess what isn't in the cards today?

"Made a call."

Karkat doesn't look up at the sound of Bro's stupid fucking voice. "I wasn't actually asking you," he mutters, ducking his head more to glower at his dull grey shoes. Oh, sure, the rest of his outfit needed to be shades of red by default, but his fucking shoes remembered how hemononymity worked. Fucking priceless.

Bro squats in front of him. Instinct kicks in and Karkat's teeth slam together, bared, as he lowers his head and bristles. Fuck his nubby horn life, but if Dave's custodian tries to pull more of the awkward, incompetent adoptive caretaker fuckery that he and Doctor Lalonde have been implementing, Karkat reserves the right to bite his hand off. Radiating more hostility than usual doesn't require much physical effort, but renews the throbbing ache in his pan. "Knew you had one shot in you. Dave was running around doing hero business." Bro pauses, and Karkat hears the rustle of fabric as he shrugs his shoulders. "Made a call."

It figures the answer was something like that. It's the kind of ruthless logic that happens when you're playing a completely arbitrary game for completely arbitrary reasons, and haha! Go fuck yourself if you think that maybe not wanting to die should be a part of the equation. Dave's head hangs almost as low as Karkat's and he hasn't looked Karkat in the eye once - so, great! Fucking fantastic! They all feel like stirfried, rancid shit, and the only person Karkat could reasonably yell at without feeling like a fucking vile piece of shit two minutes after the fact is a giant sky-themed fuck looming over them.

Dave's arm won't finish healing. The small marks where he got hit by shrapnel heal over just fine; the longer, deeper marks that score his face and extend down his shoulder and arm, though...no matter what Karkat does or how much he concentrates on that to avoid eye contact, they won't do anything but scab and scar. He honestly can't tell if he's just fucking incompetent, if it's some limit on his blood powers, or if Dave's just -

Karkat's pusher stops straining in his chest, and turns into a cold stone that sinks into his stomach. Whatever Dave did, that crotchstained shitmouth skeleton fuck noticed, and backhanded him with a clock face. Better than more internal bleeding, or cursed fucking organs, but - fuck, does it feel personal. Mashing his palm against Dave's face until Dave purses his lips tight in a pout, Karkat waits until the marks are little more than shiny, pale lines against Dave's already pale face before answering. "Whatever. Not like I expect a lusus to pick a random fuck over their own kid. I'm not stupid," Karkat says, though his voice sounds a long way away from his own ears. That's what it'll come down to, if Bro has to intervene again. No more 'one free death' excuses - Karkat and Dave are both officially stuck in the just/heroic trap. Feels great. Feels so fucking great.

Terezi interferes before Bro can open his mouth and make it more awkward. "Ah! Excellent work, Karkat. Let's get moving!" she says, right as Karkat deems Dave's face as fixed as it might ever be. Then Terezi rocks back and hops back up onto her feet without using her hands, which is just showing off, and starts mincing her way down the path toward the long-forgotten exit, punting sliced up chunks of underling out of her way. An acheron lays in a battered heap, its face and torso punctured in multiple places with no apparent pattern. Karkat stares, first at Dave and then the blur where Bro is before the custodian completely vanishes into nth level of the puppet helldimension, but this doesn't look like anything Dave would do unless he was in a blind panic. Terezi hums to herself, sets the heel of her foot against the acheron's forehead, and gives it a shove so that the rest of its body slides off the path with a rattle of loose parts and dislocated shoulders. "What even happened here? Did one of you spontaneously transform into a springloaded drunken fuckweasel and start stabbing at random?" he asks, because the only other logical option is that Spades Slick paid them a visit while he was unconscious, like a knife-happy troll Santa Claus. This is the kind of shoddy-yet-apparently-effective work that Karkat would expect if past!Doctor Lalonde and Bro fused into one tipsy, sword-obsessed being.

Terezi sniffs and shakes her head, her expression disdainful. "Not my best work, but still. Rude, Karkat!" Then, before he can dodge, she swipes the last of the blood off her chin and smears it down his shoulder, streaking him with teal. God dammit.

Meanwhile, Dave sticks his hands in his pockets as they make their way toward the exit. His mouth hasn't opened to blab in almost a full minute. Which means Karkat can either assume he's sulking and ignore him, or ask what's wrong. He rubs his sore back, grimaces at the ceiling, and then elbows Dave in the good arm when both incredibly subtle conversation openers fail. Dave twitches, and Karkat scowls. "What are you pissing yourself over now, Dave? I'm at my limit for evasive bullshit, so as much as your family adores its emotional constipation, I would prefer a straight fucking answer in five seconds or less."

Whipping his head around to make sure of - something, fuck if Karkat knows what's going through Dave's head right now - Dave gives a tiny shrug, rubbing the back of his neck as they walk between a grid-pattern of blown mines and scorched puppet stuffing. "Dude, there were like. Ten different dead Daves hanging around for a second there, before you got back up. Surprised Aradia didn't show up for an impromptu corpse party," he says, which kills whatever good mood was left after this gauntlet of bullshit and death. Dave raises a hand and starts picking at his face, and Karkat smacks his hand down before he can pick a scar back open. It earns him another look, before Dave goes on, without even a hint of irony to make him sound less sober. "I get the feeling we just dodged a nexus of bad life choices, right there. Fist bump for the alpha timeline, man."
He holds up a fist, but it's loose, like he doesn't actually expect Karkat to bump it. After a moment to question his life and friend choices, Karkat taps it with his knuckles like he's knocking on the door. "...Your custodian is still a douchebag," he feels the need to mention, when Dave stares at him in shocked awe.

A shrug. "Well, that's Bro for you."

Absolutely nothing else goes wrong as they reach the innermost chamber of Hephaestus's lair.

Nothing. Karkat is fucking appalled. After the chess room and the minefield, they follow a set of dark stone stairs down - Karkat has no fucking clue where they are, anymore - and then go through a short unlit hallway made of pitch-black stone, guiding only by Terezi's nose and Oriole's glow. A Time gear symbol works as a door knob, but only Dave can turn it, after several aborted jiggling attempts. Karkat keeps a pair of sickles ready the entire time; summoning them from his blood is easy, and they flow instantaneously when he snaps his claws, so he guesses this is his life now. Knight perks abound.

But the door opens and the ceiling doesn't try to crush them, which means they've apparently cleared the traps. Instead, they step out into a circular room that could not possibly have fit inside the giant anvil they saw from the outside of the lair. Part of the floor is solid obsidian glass, covered in curving lines that catch the electric light from the spotlights that hang from the ceiling like they're in a stadium; the other half of the room has no floor at all - just a series of metal poles that stick up out of a wide swath of lava, churning in a slow whirlpool large enough for a denizen to stand in. There's a seam in the metal ceiling and the wall opposite them, and Karkat is suddenly very certain that this entire room could open onto the sea of lava outside the anvil fortress, if someone knew how to work the controls.

But no one here knows. Hephaestus's inner sanctum stands empty - a boss arena without the boss, with only the slow clank of metal machinery and a steady drip of molten rock cycling into the pool from faucets on the walls to break the silence of the large, echoing room. The heat is stifling.

It's bigger than the chamber where Karkat found his denizen. He shoves the memories away and lets his sicklekind fall away. Oriole floats ahead over the semi-circle of obsidian, one foot dragging on the floor like a reminder as he bats his wings for show. "I can't believe we actually made it," Dave mutters as he hops down the steep step from the doorway to the dull black whorls of the floor. Karkat sits down and then hops off, the better to spite his god tier status, and lands without a sound. The previously mentioned heat decides to ratchet up to un-fucking-bearable, drying up Karkat's shoutbox and lungs and literally everything else in the blink of an eye. He licks his lips instinctively, and only succeeds in getting a good idea of how cracked and dry they are after spending the last forever and a day wandering around LoHaC, aka the Land of Hell and Clusterfucks. The corner of his lip splits and starts dribbling blood, and Karkat furiously scabs it over. If rehydration isn't in his power set, then what the fuck is even the point of them. Feferi can probably rehydrate herself. This is hemoist.

"Haha, Terezi. Come up with more original material," Karkat says, throwing her a middle finger. It makes no impact on her shit-eating grin, but it's the principle of the thing, at this point. If you can't beat 'em, flip them off. He catches up to Dave, rotating his arm so that the middle claw remains pointed at Terezi as he goes.

Oriole lingers over the one break in the obsidian floor - a ten-foot-wide translucent, honey-yellow circle that bulges slightly above the level of the rest of the floor, polished and smooth. "What is this made of, amber?" Terezi asks out loud, kicking the edge of the curve with her foot. "It smells like honey!"

"Looks like." Dave crouches down to poke it with a finger, while Oriole rolls his eyes visibly at both of them. Then Dave's face turns thoughtful. "Or maybe crystallized AJ..."

Karkat considers letting that one go, but a) that is too ridiculous to let stand, and b) it'll be a frigid day in hell before he suffers Dave's ridiculousness without enforcing consequences for the random shit that comes flying out of this guy's mouth, because there is a non-zero chance that Dave or Terezi will test this theory by licking things. "Or frozen piss!" Karkat yells, brandishing a hand toward the amber circle. Dave stares at him in abject horror. "Yeah, there, I said it! Someone had to! And if either of you try to lick it after I said that, you're fucking dead to me."

"What, again?" Terezi says, idly, her smiling inching up.

Karkat glares at her, then at Dave. "Just figure out how to crack the grist hoard open so we can move on with our lives!"

Terezi sticks out her tongue, staring Karkat dead in the eye as she leans on both hands and lowers herself toward the amber. It's a fucking bluff. "Any ideas on how to open it?" Oriole asks, his voice cracking hard, loud enough that it echoes through the whole room and makes Terezi pause. Thank fuck.

"Just the one," Dave says, drawing a sword. He walks out on top of the amber to Oriole, who lingers for a second before floating out of the way. Dave swings the sword like a dowsing rod for a second, grits his teeth as he concentrates - and then stabs it down into the amber. It sinks in deep, and the circle snaps neatly along a pre-carved, jagged line. Wobbling as it starts to rotate open under his feet, Dave hops off while the turning circle widens to reveal a helical staircase. This one's more ornate and embellished than the stairwells they saw earlier, with ruby-studded gears turning in the space between the handrails and the steps themselves. Dave smirks for the first time in forever. "Hell yeah. Works like a charm."

"Are there any problems in your life that can't be solved by stabbing things?" Karkat asks. It's the most painful rhetorical question of his life.

Dave shakes his head. "I literally cannot think of a single one."

Well, with an opening like that handed to him on a silver fucking platter - "Are you in the market for a stabdad/mob boss?" Karkat asks. He inches closer to Dave, glaring 'please take him' daggers from his ganderbulbs when Dave makes the mistake of looking at him. He's already foisted Crabdad off on John -

Dave snorts. "Nice try, dude. Though now that you mention it, he may already be my adopted dad in law." While Karkat's struggling to understand what the fuck kind of context he's missing for that to make sense, Dave appears to count something off on his fingers, his forehead wrinkled as he does some kind of mental math. "Maybe. Fuck if I know how in-laws work. But I have a policy against calling anyone dad, so maybe uncle in law works better."

Karkat stops glaring and starts massaging his closed eyelids with his claws. "Do I even want to know what the fuck you're talking about right now in the vicinity of my auricular sponges?"

"...Probably not," Dave says, at last. He jumps down onto the stairwell with a loud clang and starts tromping down into the pit. Oriole folds his wings in, stops even pretending to flap them, and floats after him. Karkat almost beats Terezi to it, but she streaks past him and flings herself onto the railing to slide down sideways with her legs pointed inward, forcing Dave to dodge out of her way. "This shit better be mad impressive," Dave says, as they continue down. "I want wall to wall grist, like I'm goddamn Harry Potter at Diagon Alley realizing his giant denizen parent was fucking loaded."

Terezi reaches the bottom of the stairs first and bounces off at the end. "Is this enough loot for you, coolkid?" she calls over her shoulder, tossing a wayward chunk of hair back out of her face as she starts poking around. Dave flashsteps down to the bottom, which is fucking cheap, and Karkat gives up and jumps over the railing into the hollow center.

Dave whistles, shading his shades with a hand - redundancy in action. Hephaestus's Hoard glitters from wall to wall, as per Dave's ironic request: tear drop shaped Amber and Copper as tall as Karkat, brilliant cut Diamond and Sphene, gusher shaped Garnet and Ruby and Citrine the size of houses, and solid cubes of Gold and Rust and Sulphur they couldn't hope to lift even if all of them could fly. All of it crammed together so tightly it looks like it's about to burst outward and bury them in a tidal wave of game resources. Karkat spots entire wads of boonbucks and the occasional booncase wedged in the crevasses between the giant grist - as if money actually fucking matters, at this point.

Dave takes a step forward, and touches the nearest chunk of Ruby.

It vanishes instantly. All of it. The entire hoard winks out of existence with a swoosh! sound, and that's it. They're left with a barren, gold-plated room and three empty pedestals.

Karkat's dropped jaw slams shut with a click of his teeth. "Shit was nice while it lasted, I guess," Dave says, his voice hoarse for a second before he visibly controls his emotions.

"Eh, you'll get over it. All that glitters is not grist, or something like that," Terezi says, with the wisdom of someone who doesn't actually give a fuck.

Fuck it. That's enough. Karkat needs to sit again. He sprawls out on the floor as gingerly as he can, his spine giving an extra powerful throb as he throws his arms wide, raises his feet up toward the roof, and stares dully at the ceiling. "Glad to know I died for an anticlimactic pile of bullshit. That's pretty much what I should have expected from this game, and yet - somehow, Sburb still managed to stuff me in a coffin so it could let me down one last time," he says in a dead, defeated monotone.

"You're alright, right?" Oriole asks.

Karkat lifts his head up and thumps it back against the gold floor. "No. I'm remembering my blood boiling in excruciating detail and my spine hurts for fun. It's great, I love it," he says, dry as a bone. It shitting well hurts, there's not a fucking chance this is a normal side effect of resurrecting in the god tiers, and they don't even get the satisfaction of hauling a metric fuckton of grist around and launching it at Hephaestus's head with a catapult. Fuck everything.

It hasn't happened, but that doesn't stop Dave's dumb offhand comment from making Karkat triple check to see if he can hear a fraymotif playing, just in case. He can't hear anything playing but LoHaC's ambient soundtrack, with some triumphant dubstep and trumpets added in for flavor. They've technically beaten Dave's denizen quest by reaching the hoard. "Just let me fucking sit for a second," he says, which earns him a shrug before Dave goes back to inspecting the empty pedestals. Karkat can't remember anything even remotely similar to them from his own faded, piecemeal memories of the troll game session, so he assumes they're either incredibly plot critical in ways he cannot give a fuck about, or totally irrelevant. "Where're you headed next, Terezi?" he asks the ceiling, too sore to inject the proper amount of hatefriend venom into his voice.
Terezi cocks an eyebrow at him; she doesn't sit, but she does press her lips together in thought. "Perhaps to confront Vriska!" Before Karkat can leap up and do the Kanaya approved thing, which would be to shout FUCK NO and list in detail the many reasons why that would probably end in violent chaos, Terezi snorts. "Perhaps not. Aradia's been hounding at me to go help with the arks, but I want to take a sniff myself on LoFaF before I make up my mind."

At the mention of Aradia and her incredibly unsubtle meddling, his nostrils flare, and he opens his mouth to mention in passing just how infuriating it's been - 'in passing' being a relative term - when pain lances through his back, and he screams instead. Terezi jolts, instantly drawing the sharp blade her canekind and darting down to grab his shoulder, but Karkat's too busy writhing, rolling over, reaching back over his shoulder and grabbing the crowbar he completely forgot -

It nearly breaks his fingers as it wrenches free from his grasp, finally free of the straps that held it close along his back when he went god tier. The rusty length of metal arrows through the air like a magnet, and nearly impales Dave through the stomach. He flashsteps at the last second - Karkat feels the spurt of blood from half a room away as a fresh line rips open down his arm - and the crowbar smacks into the side of the central pedestal with a sharp crack that echoes sharply through the room. Fucked up spine forgotten - no, it's fine now, it was the fucking crowbar this whole time - Karkat attempts to roll up onto his feet, but Terezi crouches over him, a chainsaw grinding in her throat, with one claw to pin him down and her cane at the ready, like she thinks the crowbar is going to come flying back for round two.

But it doesn't. The crowbar latches onto the pedestal, ramrod straight, and the pedestal starts to tremble. Dave, flat on the floor with his hands covering his head, rolls over to take a look, and then starts rolling at top speed away from the pedestal as the trembling worsens and jarring, metallic squeals fill the room. The other two empty pedestals start to rotate in circles, emitting steam. "Karkat, dude, what the shit did you just turn on?" Dave demands, when he finishes rolling like a log all the way to Terezi and Karkat.

Karkat squirms out from under Terezi, snapping, "Do I look like I fucking know?! That stupid Felt crowbar just went flying!"

"Why did you even have that thing?!" Oriole says, yelling to be heard as the metal screeches reach such a grinding pitch that Karkat's teeth ache. The outside pedestals appear to be transparent, which gives them a clear view of them filling up with lava. The offending crowbar itself sinks deeper into the center column, and a panel slides shut in front of it. Of course. Because LoHaC can suck his bulge.

"Because it seemed like a not-shitty idea at the time! Like literally all of our terrible ideas!" Karkat howls back. He feels absolutely fine - better than he has since dying, and of course the price is him triggering some final doomsday trap Hephaestus left behind. So. Fucking. Typical.

"Fair enough." Terezi raises her hand to her temple; one claw grazes through her hair. "This would have been a pisspoor excuse for a denizen lair if there hadn't been something blowing up at the last second!"

But they don't even get a chance to bolt for the exit. The pedestal's shrieking turns into a rumble that rocks the whole room - the golden walls start to sweat and melt as the heat rises sharply -

And then it all stops. All three pedestals shut up, god-forsaken fucking shrieks silenced in a split second. The gold floor softened to the point that when the three pedestals turn counterclockwise and vanish like screws into the floor, the gold molds around it. Once the stands sink, all that's left is a dull, rust-red sword, hanging vertically on a steel rack. Molten rock drips off the tip, but the sword itself doesn't appear to be affected by what must be un-fucking-bearably hot rock.
"...Wow. It wasn't a death trap," Dave says, sounding relieved and let down at the same time as he rests his forehead on his arms.

Karkat can't stop one eye from twitching. His one knee feels wobbly, too, in a 'too much adrenalin, not enough follow-through' way. Too much fuckery keeps transpiring for him to relax, and it's starting to take its toll. He doesn't know how Dave thinks laying flat on the floor is a safe bet when the floor was thisclose to literally melting not five seconds ago. "Why does your asshole denizen have a machine specifically for turning random objects into swords? Wait, ignore that question. I forgot who I was talking to," he spews in a fucking flood of wordvom. Dave makes some muffled sound (and if he accidentally glued his face to the half-melted floor, Karkat will never let him live it down) and Karkat steps over him to stomp toward the sword.

Up close, it's much more obvious that the sword used to be the crowbar. It's thinner than most of the piece of shit bladekind Striders like to throw around, with the familiar curved, notched end of a crowbar doubled to form a cross guard.

Actually, Karkat takes that back. The piece of shit swords that Dave uses are probably a step up from this chucklefucked hunk of rusted garbage. The Felt crowbar wasn't nearly this corroded when Karkat last got a good look at it with his pre-death eyes. Getting tossed into a lava blender didn't do it any favors; it looks like it'll either singe his claws or crumble if he so much as glares at it funny. And oh, is he glaring.

"That thing is..." Terezi starts, sticking her head in. Karkat didn't hear her stalking after him; she prowls around the sword in a circle, her eyes laced with streamers of teal light around the edges of her shades, flaring in time with her breathing.

And after a long minute, all she comes up with is: "...interesting."

Karkat, who's been waiting for her questionably professional Seer analysis with bated fucking breath, smacks his face. "Riveting, Terezi."

"It's definitely not a crowbar anymore," she says, imparting yet another bundle of wisdom unto the fucking world. "But I think if you pick it up, it'll affect something very important." She spins and jabs her claw square into Karkat's chest, her face a tight frown of concentration. "When did you pick up bladekind, again? Because no offense, but I think you'd need permits for that."

Not in Texas, Karkat opens his mouth to say, because as far as he's concerned that's the only reason any of the Striders were allowed within ten feet of a bladekind specialization. But Dave shuffles up in a blur and sticks his face in on Karkat's other side. He grimaces with open disgust, and shakes his head. "It's not a sword, either."

This is the last fucking straw. No, Karkat ran out of straws fucking ages ago. This is the last fucking fuckstraw, and he's had it. "It's clearly a fucking sword, Dave," he says, so incensed that his voice wraps all the way around from loud to a whisper.

Dave shakes his head again, curtly. "...No, dude. That's not a sword, I swear. Just like. A sharp crowbar."

Karkat's volume controls recalibrate to normal shout standards. "I'm not fucking blind, you ass -" he yells, flaring his claws at the sword shaped fucking object right in front of them.

"He says, in front of the blind girl," Terezi says, her voice full of mock sadness as she mimes wiping away a teal tear, and Karkat's train of thought stutters.
"Yeah, Karkat, how could you?" Dave says.

Karkat cuts him off before the two of them can dogpile him in the name of irony. Again. For the fiftieth fucking time this week. He's not sure how much more of a beating his sanity can take. "Augh - it smells sword-shaped, doesn't it?!"

Terezi tips her head to the side, and then walks another circuit around the sword (it is a fucking sword!) with an intent expression, twirling a strand of hair around her claw as she goes. "It smells...pointy. And slicey. And like rust," she announces, like these are incredibly fucking revelations. Then her eyebrows slam down and she hisses, glaring at Dave, then Karkat, and then back at the sword. "I don't think you should try to pick it up, coolkid. Or -" She gnashes her teeth, the most obvious sign of frustration Karkat has ever seen her make. Terezi not grinning and/or cackling is a weird thing. But the next second she starts squatting and leaning her weight from one side to the other as she inspects the sword, resting her chin on her palm, and generally looks so fucking ridiculous that it saps all the tension out of her weird prognostigofuckyourself. "Oh, this is a briny pickle."

While she scans it again, Dave turns to Karkat and says, for what Karkat can only assume is the sole purpose of driving Karkat over the edge into a raging breakdown, "It's not a sword."

Literally the only thing that saves Dave from impending suplex is the fact that he looks uneasy, the waxy scars on his face just visible in the half light of the hoard room, and Karkat has a strict policy of not suplexing friends in the middle of an on-going crisis. No matter how tempting it is. "What the fuck is it then, according to the official Strider family fucking lore?!!" he asks, pinching the bridge of his nose and exhaling hard. "Enlighten me."

The whole room rocks underfoot without warning, bucking so hard that a jolt runs through Karkat's knees as he catches himself mid-fall. Everyone but Oriole - still floating - braces themselves to ride out the shockwave. "Dangerous," Dave says; a catastrophically loud shriek punctuates his answer, barely muffled by the roof between them and whatever the fuck is going on above in Hephaestus's chamber.

Bro appears behind Dave when Karkat opens his mouth. Karkat didn't get a good look at the fucker before, but his shirt is stained slightly with grey ash and a scorch mark streaks along the side of his right shoe. "Need to blow this joint, kids. Shit up top is starting to fall down," he says, his voice as unaffected as when he informed Karkat he made a fucking call. Bitter who?

But also, with the Strider habit of either wildly over- or under-estimating the seriousness of a situation for ironic shit, 'starting to fall down' could mean a fucking cornucopia of bad things. "Ohhh. Fun times," Oriole says, furling his wings and actually using them to go faster as he arrows up the center of the stairwell to get out. Suddenly, flying sounds like a fucking excellent idea. Karkat can't believe he's lived his whole previously pathetic life as an ignoramus without that option available to him.

Terezi's claw snaps out and seizes the sword by the hilt; she doesn't hesitate for a fucking second before shoving it into Karkat's chest. Karkat smacks a hand against the sword to catch it automatically, before his thinkpan catches up and starts screaming that Terezi just tossed him a rancid hot potato. "Don't let Dave take that from you," she says, her face dead serious.

Dave shows no sign of wanting to duke it out for the cursed not-sword in the nearest convenient war arena - after one uneasy look at the sword, he books it for the stairs. Because he can't fly. Which means any second now, Karkat is probably going to have airlifting duties foisted on him. Terezi tries to slink past Karkat and spring for the exit, too, but Karkat recovers from his frozen surprise fast enough to catch up with her. "I don't even know how to use the fucking thing, and quite frankly, I'd rather toss it into the lava before it fucking jinxes us or something! This is some kind of jinx vector and you know it, Terezi!" he yells as the gold roof dents and the sound of collapsing, crashing metal rumbles from the entrance at the top of the stairs.

Terezi stops dead and swivels in midair, swinging Karkat around by the fabric of his god tier jacket and dragging him close. Her breath is freezing cold on his ear; the not-sword Karkat holds awkwardly in between them feels too heavy for how fragile it looks, the hilt jabbing into Terezi's collar bone. "That thing is very significant, Karkat. The actions you and Dave would take wielding it would diverge a lot! I'm still not sure which is the better path," she says in a rush; the teal lace of sight doesn't line her shades, but Karkat's close enough to see a keen, feverish glint of light burning through the red lenses.

He closes his hand around the hilt of the sword, because holding it awkwardly around the blade and hoping it doesn't slice him open when they start running again strikes him as a shitastic idea. "Then what should I do with it?" he hisses back, as he tries to captchalogue the damn thing so he doesn't have to sling it across his back and re-invite magical spine problems back into his fucking life. "God, you pick now to be serious?"

But it won't go. He can't make it go away. Fuck if he remembers how to captchalogue specibi that isn't self-generated from one's own circulatory system. He'll fuck around with it later.

"These are serious times. Keep it," Terezi says, before releasing him with a tiny push. "I can't tell which of the main paths is most fortuitous; I can just see a lot of possibilities." She sighs - and then makes a beeline up and away. Karkat scrambles after her, kicking off two different curves of the stair railing before remembering he doesn't need to parkour shit anymore. "I need Rose. Soonish, rather than laterish. Promise me you won't pre-emptively stab Dave, alright?"

-

AA: karkat, hey!
CG: OH FOR FUCK'S SAKE.
CG: YOU'RE NOT EVEN BEING SUBLTLE ABOUT IT ANYMORE!
AA: oh were well past the point of subtle! :)
CG: NO. I NEED TO GO CHECK ON JOHN AND GAMZEE. I'M NOT PISSING AROUND WITH SPADES'S SHITTY BARFPUPPET HELLTWIN OR WHATEVER YOU WANT ME DOING.
AA: oh no dont worry about him
AA: it would just be nice to have a pair of knights help with the forge
AA: since we cant have a space player in person just yet!
CG: IS THIS MORE MYSTICAL FUCKING FROG SCIENCE, BUT WITH SNAKES? BECAUSE A) NO AND B) HELL FUCKING NO.
CG: AND AN ENTIRE CACOPHONY OF GODDAMN NO IF YOU'RE TRYING TO WRANGLE ME INTO SPAWNING US WITH ECTO FUCKERY.
AA: sollux will take care of that already dont worry
CG: FUCK YOUR TENSES AND THE HORSE THEY RODE IN ON.
AA: but yes im afraid it does involve mystical fucking snake science :)
AA: dave for speeding up the process
AA: and you for providing your expertise with ecto creature breeding
CG: HAH. HAHahaha. FUNNY JOKE, ARADIA.
CG: I'M MORE THAN A SLIME SNAKE BREEDER, STOP OBJECTIFYING ME.
AA: and also blood
CG: ...
AA: ...
CG: ...I DON'T GET AN EXPLANATION FOR THAT ONE?!
AA: im calling in feferi too actually
AA: you need to protect dave
CG: FROM WHAT. HIS WEIRD CURSED ORGAN SHIT?
AA: pretty much!
AA: its not too late for him
AA: but if he pushes himself too far his fate could go either way
CG: WHAT ABOUT YOU?
AA: oh i already know what im doing
AA: lofaf is the safest place the three of you can be AA: and i promise...
CG: THIS BETTER BE A GOOD ONE.
AA: john and gamzee win
CG: AGAINST WHO.
AA: nice catch!
CG: THERE'S NO REASON FOR YOU FUCKS TO BE THIS EVASIVE ABOUT IT IF THEY'RE FIGHTING JOHN'S SHIT-SNAKING DENIZEN.
AA: oh theyre not
AA: its just the trickster
CG: uh.
CG: aradia.
AA: mhm?
CG: WHAT THE FUCK!!!!!!
AA: if you go to lowas hell fixate on you
AA: theyll both panic
AA: youll all lose
AA: in a wide variety of disastrous ways i might add!
CG: JOHN'S BEEN SCREAMING OVER PESTERCHUM FOR AT LEAST HALF AN HOUR! THEY'RE NOT WINNING!
AA: oh no thats just the wind
CG: YOU'RE SHITTING ME.
AA: typhere coughed up a giant storm for a dramatic backdrop
AA: between that and gamzee being himself its pretty much a bunch of nonsense
CG: I HATE EVERYTHING ABOUT THIS GAME.
CG: EVERYTHING.
AA: really? i love it
AA: were getting to the good stuff right now!
CG: YOUR DEFINITION OF GOOD STUFF IS TERRIBLE AND I CHANGED MY MIND. I DON'T WANT YOU TO TELL ME WHAT THE GOOD STUFF IS, EVER.
AA: heheheh
AA: hm
AA: i guess i should say something before i go
AA: hey karkat?
CG: WHAT.
AA: see you on the other side
CG: ON LOFAF? I KIND OF TOOK THAT FOR GRANTED, SINCE I'M GRUDGINGLY GOING THERE. WITH A GRUDGE. HAVE I MENTIONED THE GRUDGE?
CG: OR ARE YOU FUCKING DITCHING ME IN SNAKE HELL?
AA: itll be okay
AA: its wonderful
-- apocalypseArisen [AA] will _________ --
CG: ARADIA?
CG: WAIT. FUCK. ARE YOU OKAY?
CG: PLEASE TELL ME YOU'RE NOT DEAD.
CG: OH GOD.
-- apocalypseArisen [AA] has joined the chat! --
AA: whoops!
AA: i guess thats a thing that happens!
CG: I CAN'T TAKE THIS KIND OF WHIPLASH, HOLY FUCK.
AA: dont worry about it!
AA: but please hurry
AA: i think roxy and jake are trying to pick pet snakes
AA: and unfortunately soon those snakes will be ecto slime :( CG: I -
CG: YEAH. ON OUR WAY.
-
[x]

There are no traps.

There are no underlings.

There is, in fact, nothing at all to impede their progress. Cetus's lair feels like a tomb, absent the body.

The composition of the walls changes as they descend the long, slow coils of the ramp that leads ever downward: the layers of sediment shade from dead white to pale pink, then lilac, and back again to white; nodules of dark purple and blue appear at intervals, carved as smooth as the walls themselves. At one point they find themselves surrounded by layer after layer of fossilized skeletons carefully exposed along the walls, the sediment full of wild, overlapping splashes of blue and lemon yellow and pink that remind Rose of pastel blood.

It's one thing to know, in abstract, that Cetus quite literally killed everything in the oceans of LoLaR - it's quite another to be faced with the fossil record. From what Rose knows of fossilization and sedimentary rock, having skeletons buried this deep and strewn about as decoration on the plain above isn't entirely realistic, unless there has been more than one Cetus-induced extinction event over the course of LoLaR's elusive history.

Or, perhaps, the turtles picked up their habit of decorating temples with their own shells from Cetus's example of decorating her lair with her favorite skeletons for suitably dramatic effect.

Well. It's a way to pass the time, Rose supposes. She's had worse hobbies in her life - consorting with otherworldly abominations comes first to mind. She tucks herself in closer against Kanaya's side, and does her utmost not to fall asleep. As eminently comfortable as Kanaya is, and as tempting as a power nap sounds, she'd rather keep tabs on the group memo as well as their immediate surroundings. Rose can't discern whether she feels tired because of the recent adrenaline rush from fighting Cetus, or because of the skipped day that curls up like Schrödinger's cat in her mind. The exhaustion simply rolls over her like a wave, and then falls back with no discernible pattern, leaving her in a flexible state of 'not quite wide awake.'

After what feels like an age, the wide walls of the passageway begin to widen, and the faint light cast by Feferi's bubble doesn't quite extend far enough to illuminate them through the increasingly dim water. Rose raises a hand and summons enough light to keep them going for a while longer, but the walls continue to recede, until they're left with only the pale floor beneath them as a landmark - and Feferi becomes paranoid enough that she deliberately presses the bubble down so it flattens out against the floor, to make absolutely sure that they're still at the bottom and not floating over a clouded abyss of deeper water. They continue to roll along for a few yards before unease sets in. Rose and Eridan take turns nearly blinding everyone in the bubble with their respective auras before admitting that there's nothing around for them to see. Working blind like this is the opposite of Rose's forte; when she checks with other forms of sight, all she can see is a dim expanse of white water around them, without even a swirl of pastel color to break up the hovering, dead white sediment.

Then Rose blinks, and looks up. There’s no vestigial afterimage of Leviathan visible, not with so many layers of LoLaR’s sediment piled heavy on top of them. A faint lavender glow stains the water above, not quite bright enough to penetrate all the way through the water – unless one knows how to look.

They break the surface of the water, to find a cavern just as deathly quiet and still as the passage down. The roof extends in a wide shallow bowl overhead, pockmarked with jagged stalactites the color of bone. Rose cannot say for certain that they are not in fact bone, given her planet’s predilections in that direction. Ripples spread out from their bobbing bubble and disturb the quiet surface of the water; they’ve come up near the center of the chamber, about half a mile from a glittering expanse of lilac beach.

"So. Progress," Kanaya says, cautiously, as though saying it aloud might curse them with another half hour of rolling along the bottom of the world in a magical hamster ball.

"Or something like it," Rose agrees.

Eridan slumps further down in his curve of the bubble and scrunches his nose, casting long, suspicious looks at the beach and the water and - well, everything. He hasn't relaxed once since they came down here, and Rose worries. The odds of him turning on them seem relatively slim, by this point - he burns so brightly that it's difficult to see, but Eridan seems to be on their side. Running to side with either the Horrorterrors or the Lord of Time would be suicide. "I don't like it," he says, sinking at last so low that his glasses get pushed forward slightly off the crook of his ear fins and fall over the point of no return on his nose as he huddles his shoulders. The bags under his eyes look like bright streaks of violet Expo marker; his skin's paler than it looked before they came to the Medium, and Rose frowns, making a mental note to keep closer tabs on him. His powers are so bright - burning so bright that they make her eyes water - was it this strong before?

Eridan's as strong as he believes himself to be, and can probably will himself back to health as long as his Hope abilities hold out. And yet - her stomach sinks, a knot of unpleasant coils. Maybe it's not that Eridan's powers are whiting out her own vision - maybe what she's seeing is -

How much longer does Eridan have before he burns himself out? Destroys himself, from the inside out? Dave's powers threaten him from the outside, but Rose completely overlooked Eridan. He destroys with Hope, he destroys Hope - how much more can he bring to bear before he destroys himself?

"Do you like anyfin?!" Feferi points out, indignant. Then she raises a yellow claw and draws it along the top curve of their life support bubble, carving a seam in the iridescent surface. The bubble melts away from the seam like cotton candy in water, until all that remains is a shallow raft that ushers the four of them up onto the beach. Feferi rides the last of the bubble like a goddess emerging from the sea, tossing her hair, while Rose and Kanaya float the last few steps when the bubble finishes dissolving. Eridan catches himself at the last second, his Prince costume dipping into the water so that it leaves a dark, wet line along his back.
Eridan glowers at Feferi and stomps onto the beach with crunching footsteps. "I'm just saying there should be more rigmarole here. Where are the snares and the inveiglements and underlings and all the other crap to get in our way?"

"I assumed everything must have shut down with - when Cetus died," Rose says. She scanned for traps and unlucky pitfalls on and off for parts of the trip down, but there simply hasn't been much to see. Boring seems a strong word for it - solemn is better. It should be a relief not to hit any stumbling blocks or game enemies to fight, but the quiet atmosphere exhausts Rose too much for her to appreciate it.

Feferi blows a raspberry at Eridan, then puts on her most regal expression to nod at Rose. "Proebably. Just ignore Eridan, he's paranoid."

Eridan explodes. "No, I'm not! I fuckin' fine, your majesty! I'm justifiably concerned about us walking right into some kind of naufrageous bullshit. Constant vigilance!" he snarls, striding up to Feferi, his aura boiling white hot around him.

Feferi bursts into fuchsia fire; it seethes around her like tendrils and coils through her hair. This obviously helps de-escalate the situation. And by 'obviously,' Rose means - doesn't, in any way, shape, or form. "I know what you're quoting! You're so full of shit!" she says, dropping all fish puns. When she snarls, the gritty sand jitters and shivers underfoot.

Kanaya forces her way in between them; of course she does. "Eridan. Feferi. No." When Feferi tries to growl, Kanaya puts a claw on each of their chests and shoves them apart, her natural luminescence flickering and flashing with pent-up irritation. Eridan's suitably intimidated by Kanaya to the point that he hesitates when she bares her teeth and growls at both of them like a chainsaw, but then Feferi tries to elbow Kanaya in the side and squirm around her, and Eridan tries to dart in while Kanaya's distracted, and, incensed, Kanaya seizes them in a headlock, one on each side.

Rose is unsure when this became an ashen thing. But auspisticism appears to be called for, and she would rather this be a sudden pitch meltdown between two trolls who've been sniping at each other for weeks than have it be some kind of genuine throwdown that ends in explosions. For a second there the hostility between Eridan and Feferi was solid enough to cut with a knife, or with a particularly shitty sword. Delicately, Rose sidles closer and bends over slightly so she can snap her finger pointedly in the middle point where Feferi and Eridan are glaring at each other. "That's enough, both of you," she says, quiet but firm, as Eridan's face begins to turn violet and Feferi's turns fuchsia-tinted from the pressure. "Not here. Not now." Another snap, and they both flinch and look at her. She repeats herself while Kanaya looks on, the wild flicker of her skin dimming back to normal levels.

Feferi raises her foot and kicks the sand with her toe one last time before subsiding, jerking her head to the side as her face flushes with embarrassment. Or perhaps with lack of oxygen. Eridan, on the other hand, goes totally limp in Kanaya's chokehold, letting his head lol as he smacks his forehead with a palm. "God dammit," he says, sounding forlorn. "Fuckin'. Let's just pretend that never happened."

"Agreed," Feferi says, her voice clipped and her accent slipping out stronger than usual. Kanaya holds them for another count of three before easing her grip, pointing two claws at her eyes and then pointing them at each seadweller in turn as they turn away from each other. Feferi lopes ahead, marching determinedly toward a cave opening across the beach, while Eridan falls back, crosses his arms, and starts glaring at his own feet as though they are personally responsible for his current embarrassment.

Rose takes Kanaya's arm, and Kanaya flexes instinctively before blinking and relaxing her arm. The two of them follow Feferi and take care to stay in the middle. "You don't think they'd suit each other, pitch?" Rose murmurs, and waggles her eyebrow.

"I think that now is not the time, or the place," Kanaya says, a sentiment that Rose completely agrees with. Rose casts one look with her physical eyes at Eridan, to reorient herself, and then slows.

Behind her stretches a trail of glowing footprints. This wouldn't surprise Rose much, given LoLaR's general predilection for light motifs, but only Rose has left footprints in the lilac sand. Everyone leaves indents in the crunchy gravel, yet only Rose's gleam, right up to the half-made footprint under her lifted heel. There doesn't appear to be any secondary effect from this, but Rose lifts off the ground regardless - just high enough that her soles can't skim the sand. It seems to stop her leaving any more easily-traced prints but she's not sure if doing so really accomplished anything worthwhile. The four of them cross the beach unhindered and walk into yet another expansive chamber.

Enormous crystal growths line the winding path as they venture deeper, clustering thick along the high lavender walls and effectively hedging them in with spires of crystal that form an impenetrable lattice on either side of the walkway. Rose can't identify all of them, but all of LoLaR's trademark colors are represented, ranging from milky, frosty celestite to rosy pink rhodochrosite to something so vibrantly yellow that it makes her eyes cross slightly if she looks at it too long. Smaller outcroppings of quartz and fluorite in a rainbow of colors grow along and on the path, almost like it has become overgrown in Cetus's absence.

It takes Rose longer than she wants to admit to notice the crystals alongside the path shine from within as she floats by. She tests this by falling back, letting Kanaya and Eridan draw ahead of her for a moment before she advances back to Kanaya's side. The bright cyan crystal on their left fades as Rose drifts back, then brightens again as she passes by.

The largest of the crystals look wide enough to walk on without the risk of shattering; Rose wonders what kind of traps might have been set here, if anything in the lair were still active. The luminescence of her footprints is the most clear sign that something is still running, like the Sburb equivalent of emergency lighting or an autonomic system, but that appears to be all. Cetus is dead, yet her lair still reacts to Rose's presence. Thus far, the effects seem benign, but...

Something slices violently across her vision like viscous, sticky lightning, and Rose flinches. She unlinked her arm from Kanaya's a moment ago and hasn't caught up yet, so no one notices. Rose lowers her eyes, attempts to regulate her breathing, and then checks again, this time with another layer of vision. Most of the room, apart from the four of them, glows only with a dim light, faded and heavy with dust. The crystals are more translucent with this particular filter -

Which makes it laughably easy to spot the dark lines crawling through the crystal nearest the exit. Then, before Rose can blink, the lines flex and retract, and vanish around the corner of the exit like a scuttling starfish, without a sound.

"Eridan," she says.

She's trying to stay composed; Eridan, oblivious to the circumstances, snaps, "I'm not doing anything!"

Rose shakes her head, and curls her fingers slightly to beckon him nearer to the rest of the group.

"No, you're not," she says, in a lower voice. Eridan dips his head slightly, down and to the side, his expression wary before something appears to click - then he takes wider strides until he's level with her, keeping one eye over his shoulder at all times. Kanaya looks back over her shoulder, curiosity writ large across her face; when Rose tips her head slightly and jerks it back - group up - Kanaya understands at once, taps Feferi on the shoulder to get her attention, and then stops until Rose and Eridan catch up.

Rose stops them all at a safe distance when they near the entrance and trains her sight on the room beyond, trying to pick out as much detail as she can. Her stomach clenches as she does, because she already has an inkling of what she's about to see.

She needn't have bothered. Though the creature beat a hasty retreat when it sensed it had been spotted, it has not bothered to conceal its presence in the next room. Apparently, it's had enough free time left to its own devices, undisturbed, that it simply...made itself at home.

Sickly yellow glowworms coil in heavy swallows' nests of sticky, brackish purple tar, dripping phosphorescent fire from their ever-gaping mouths that eats through infinitely reflecting mirrors that line the walls, ceiling, and floor of the entire room. Waterfalls pour from several levitating crystal platforms throughout the room, some pointed at right angles to the floor and defying gravity to spill against the wall, each one full of iridescent, acidic oil that coagulates in thick puddles that obscures the mirrors further still. Thorny tendrils twine along thin wires that stretch across the room, flexing and tightening and shattering the tiny diamonds of stained glass that flutter along the lines like leaves. An enormous crystalline sun suspended in the dead center of the room has been irreparably cracked and hollowed out by something moist and tangled, that writhes and exhales more grimdark acid to splash in with ragged bursts.

A single eye opens up in the center of the sun, yellow and aniridic and pitted with dark dashes and lines that form uneven circles.

"Have I mentioned I actually hate bein' right?" Eridan says.

"Well. It's like walking in on the baleful eye of Sauron," Rose says, wrinkling her nose, "whilst it's having a bath."

The Horrorterror splinter within the sun does not reply. The eye stays fixed upon them, but the film of dark ooze, roughly the color and consistency of plum juice, covers more and more of the crystal's hollow interior, dyeing the eye a brownish-purple.

"What do you think it's doing in here?" Kanaya asks, grimly. She doesn't sound like she expects a serious answer; her claws dance over her folded knees. Rose can sense how badly she itches to pull her specibus free. Despite the fact that the eye has already spotted them, they've fallen back further into the crystal room, forming a huddle between purple quartz and a rounded heap of chalcedony. Feferi and Eridan are both sallow in the face, Feferi has a fierce, too-tight, closed lip smile that looks like she's about to split her lips open on her own teeth, and Rose suspects that she doesn't look much better. Kanaya is the only one present who has not been directly influenced by a Horrorterror, and they're far enough away from Equius by now that if something goes awry -

It won't. They'll simply have to handle this flawlessly, with a perfectly executed plan. There is absolutely no way that this could go wrong.

Eventually, Rose is going to convince herself with that line. One day.

"Knowing Leviathan? Nothing good," she says, turning her needlekind over and over between her fingers, fast and erratic to the point that it threatens to fly away and impale someone with each wild flip. But if she doesn't do something with her hands, she - "If it has its tentacles all over the recipe for the Final Alchemy, the potential for sabotage is immense," she adds. The terror the thought inspires runs slimy and cold down her spine. However much of Leviathan stayed here, it's had sufficient time to create a rotting, sludgy nest of the mirror room; there's no telling how much deeper the infestation spreads with the dead, opaque aura of LoLaR obscuring her vision between rooms. There's another door, all the way across the infested room, but no way for her to know where they are in relation to the hoard itself.

Feferi shivers; Rose shivers, too, but that's more because crouching in close proximity to Feferi is a chilly business. "I wonder if it is fresh, or if it has been here for a whale," Feferi says, fluttering her wings a little and dusting the ground with a fall of twinkling glitter. She spins her 2x3dent between her palms, so that the central tine digs deeper into the ground, fast enough to occasionally draw a spark.

"I'm leaning towards it never having left. It infected Cetus and I in the last session, and made a home here. Leviathan has had time. Too much time." Rose trains her extra sight on the gateway between their room and the next, to make sure the spindly splinter of the many-angled being doesn't try to slip through while they're distracted.

Eridan is more jittery than Rose and Feferi combined; he trembles as though any moment he could vault over them and start lashing out at the infested chamber in a frenzy. "We can blast this nest to kingdom come, yeah?" he says, his eyes digging into Rose's with a fervent abandon.

And normally, Rose would whole-heartedly agree. Burning Horrorterror remnants out is the fastest and best way she can think of to eliminate the threat and perhaps restore the chamber to a healthier state, and she has almost no compunctions about turning Eridan loose on Leviathan's scion.

But. She winces, knowing that none of the three trolls looking askance at her will take this laying down. "I'd prefer if we attempted this...discreetly."

Kanaya understands at once. Of course she does. She gives Rose a strange look, leaning back slightly on her heels. "You don't want to fight it," she says, trying the words on for size. Feferi blinks, her mouth a startled 'o' - a storm gathers on Eridan's face, and he opens his mouth at once to start arguing.

They've already lost any semblance of control over Vriska's dangerous antics; if Eridan goes rogue, fired up by the thought that he's the only one willing to do what's necessary to survive, he'll carve a path through anyone who tries to slow him down. "First and foremost, I want to secure the Splendor Existentiae. Blowing everything to kingdom come, and possibly blasting the Final Alchemy away in the cross fire, is the opposite of what we need, right now."

"Rose. We are not getting through that room without a fight," Kanaya says, cutting Eridan off again. Feferi nods along, her eyes wide as she continues to stare at Rose in confusion. Eridan opens his mouth one more time, raising a claw, and then the fact that Kanaya is opposing Rose's suggestion hits on him. He folds one arm, and uses the other to curtly gesture at Kanaya - see?

They're probably right. Rose sighs. "We won't know until we try. It didn't react when it saw us; if it turns hostile when we cross the threshold, then we'll deal with it here and now. I doubt Leviathan has the resources to spare much investing in a battle here. Not with what's going on outside." The offshoot here is probably self-sufficient, to a degree, but with the odd way Leviathan spoke earlier - Rose wonders.

She narrowly misses a near-mutiny. Feferi and Kanaya eye each other around Rose, mutually skeptical and unsubtle, but having heard Rose concede that a fight is most likely unavoidable, Kanaya relaxes a little. Rose straightens, her specibus still in hand, and rounds the crystal-studded corner. Turning her back on Eridan is a calculated risk; she's banking on the theory that he'll still aim at the Horrorterrors rather than her, given the choice. "We'll float through. Try not to touch anything," she says, tamping her voice down to an even lower whisper.

TT: Equius.
TT: This is just to let you know that we are about to fly into a grimdark infested zone.
TT: ...
GA: No Answer?
TT: No. At least, not one that my eyes can see, which isn't always a reliable indicator where Equius is concerned.
GA: Really, How Are We Supposed To Keep Track Of All These Villains And Heroes Coming And Going.
GA: When No One Updates The Spreadsheets And We Are Too Busy To Communicate In A Timely Fashion.
GA: Oh No.
TT: What is it?
GA: A Timely Fashion.
GA: Do You Think The Lord Of Time Is Capable Of Breaking Things For The Sake Of Puns?
GA: Or Breaking Puns For The Sake Of Things?
TT: ...
GA: ...
TT: If he takes puns from us, there really is no hope left for either of our species.

"There is no way this is gonna work," Eridan grumbles. But Kanaya loops an arm around Rose's waist, crooked in such a way that much of Kanaya's front presses along Rose's back like a body shield, and Rose lifts the two of them up over the first greenish-purple pool of grimdark sludge. Feferi bounds up alongside them; Eridan jumps up belatedly, but he coasts over the threshold without immediately lighting everything in a five-foot radius on fire, so it's something.

The eye pulsates like a toxic star. Nothing else in the room moves or makes a sound, apart from the steady trickle of phosphorescent fire from the glowing worms. Rose lets out a silent breath that shakes her, leaving her lungs strangely empty, and Kanaya's grip on her tightens. Then she begins to chart them a slow course through the room: avoiding the polluted waterfalls and the worm takes some winding curves to accomplish, and at one point requires them to float totally horizontal to the ground, their reflections visible and yet liquidly warped in the mirror below as Rose supports Kanaya's torso and Feferi her legs and ankles. Kanaya puts up with this trollhandling with a stoic yet subtly despairing expression.

"...I cannot believe this is working," Kanaya says, through the corner of her mouth, when the Horrorterror continues to ignore them. Well, ignore might be a strong way of putting it: the eye stays glued to them, turning slowly in its crystal sphere, but nothing lashes out at them. Feferi hushes Kanaya with a 'shhh!' that somehow manages to be louder than Kanaya's actual words, but still. Nothing.

Horrorterrors are dangerous, mutable things. The fact that this offshoot hasn't so much as attempted to contact or otherwise influence them feels...strange. Rose does so dislike it when one of her plans comes together and simultaneously heightens her unease.

The tendrils wound tight around the wire give them the most trouble when they're only scant yards from the exit - a round, smooth slab of pink-grey marble, the carvings eroded away by acid and the hinges coated with slime that reeks of blood and gangrene. Rose suspects that there was some sort of puzzle involved in this room: most of the thorny wires lead either to the sun in the center or to a circle above this door, but she doubts anything is still active, from the trashed state of the room. The tendrils slither along the wires as the four of them approach, the thorns blooming like flower petals. A few glowworms droop from the center like sickly stamen. Another bridge-like lock crests over the center of the door, smaller in dimensions than the one that locked the lair itself but with similar holes, all of them caked with foul sludge.

Like hell is Rose putting her hand in there. She grimaces, and with some difficulty passes a quietly indignant Kanaya over to Feferi's arms so she can free up both hands, ignoring the way Feferi quietly says, "Holy carp. It really did work," under her breath. Drawing her needlekind, Rose starts mentally preparing the most concentrated blasting spell she can think of; at the same time, she nods to Eridan, who starts charging up his aura with a scowl, turning to face the rest of the chamber. The grimdark tendrils squirm and begin to thrash restlessly on the wires, as though anticipating what comes next.

And then, just as Rose points her needlekind at the bridge -

A sharp crack of nauseating lightning snaps and pops along the wires, sizzling the glowworms, who emit tiny crunches as they fry instantly. The circle at the apex of the door lights up in an ugly, pulsing rainbow of colors that makes Rose feel ill to look at - she's not sure any of them have names, and she sees some of them only through her other sight, as though they break too many laws of physics to appear in the normal range of visible light. The circular door rattles as the gunk in the hinges strains to pop them loose, and a few spare tendrils loop around the bridge itself and tug -

But the door doesn't budge. Despite the acid, the lock holds firm.

"Oh no," Rose says, when the lightning stops and the tendrils subside. Worse, the thorns draw away from the door - the underlying wires strain like they're about to break - as though to give them...room to work. She does not bother whispering. It's quite clear there wasn't a point in trying to be stealthy about this.

Kanaya says what they're all thinking. "It wants us to open the door for it."

"Damn." Rose bites down on her lip, hard, The creature in the crystal sun burbles incoherent nonsense, with echoes that sound like horrible snickering. It can see them, it can hear them, and it wants them here. "I don’t think we have any other recourse. We need to get through." They've spent so much time down here already - maybe they could backtrack and start drilling through the stone with Eridan's raw force, but that might take another age, and there's little guarantee they would wind up lost.

Why is it out here, she wonders, glaring with one eye at the grimdark offshoot from under the shield of her bangs. Why not in Cetus's innermost sanctum, where the denizen was presumably made a tanglebuddy in the last session? It is so hard to tell what is new, what is old, and what is just dead in this game. The temple above must have been altered, at some point; perhaps the hoard was reset to include the Splendor Existentiae, and the Horrorterror splinter wound up...displaced.

Or maybe there's something worse already in the room beyond, and they're being herded deeper into Cetus's lair like lambs to the slaughter.

"I'll throw up a wall," Eridan says. Though the air down here is damp and cool - apart from the humid reek of the Horrorterror - he rolls up his sleeves and presses his palms together. "Just goin' to have to do it fast."

"We don't know if this is a ruse. There could be more of it through the door already," Rose says. Then, on second thought - "Though if we are being rused, I'd rather deal with what's before us than worry about this thing attacking from behind at the same time." She hesitates, then adds, "You have permission to use the nuclear option, as long as everyone else is clear, and as long as you're pointing it back the way we came." Brute forcing their way out of the lair might suck away precious time, if the rooms begin to collapse, but letting Eridan loose to fire willy-nilly in the vague direction of the hoard would be worse. More importantly, the last of Eridan's mutinous scowl clears, and his expression turns ferociously gleeful as his hands and arms light up in preparation, the shadows under his eyes deepening to a frightful mask.

Then, without looking away from Eridan and the Horrorterror offshoot, Rose points her needlekind back at the lock and sets it alight. Every grimdark thing in the room recoils, and something hisses menacingly from one of the heavy hives of glowworms near the ceiling. The grime clogging the lock itself sizzles, then rolls away in the form of black slugs, which drop to the ground and wiggle into the nearest puddles. Once she's sure the gaps in the bridge lock have been scoured clean - she has serious concerns about just how sanitary this is going to be, particularly if this lock plans to prick her finger again - she lets up and peers into the lock.

It's barely wide enough for her to squeeze her whole hand inside without curling her fingers up, which strikes her as odd. The stone inside is pale pink and pebbled, and clean of grimdark influence, as far as she can see. She tilts her head closer, squinting a little as she tries to see what mechanism will be prodding at her. A small hole in the far end of the hollow glints oddly when she directs a thin beam of light inside, but apart from that - nothing recognizable as a needle. "I think I would prefer more sliding puzzles," Kanaya says, her voice quiet, as Rose sighs and sticks her hand inside the lock.

"Wouldn't we all?" Rose asks. Then she frowns, and waves her hand a little more to try to invoke the mechanism.

Nothing happens. She whips her head around and shoots the Horrorterror a look that might be more than a little incensed, because if the idiotic thing has broken the lock, it's just as out of luck as the rest of them. The Horrorterror's eye rotates slowly in its crystal; it only looks sheepish if Rose were to stretch the definition of 'sheepish' to severely anthropomorphize its incomprehensible reactions. No, it looks more like it's watching. Waiting.

And if the wires need to be working whilst Rose activates the lock in order to complete the door puzzle, what is the thing waiting for? Why is Rose relying on a Horrorterror to help, anyway? Today has been a long day.

She removes her hand and leans in again, pressing her face against the lock. Could it still be jammed up?

She doesn't notice the moment when her eye socket lines up perfectly with the lock.

She feels it when the tiny needle inside the lock shoots out and stabs into the pupil of her eye. It's over and done before she can flinch - and flinch she does, jolting against the lock and slamming her hands frantically against it to push away. A spasm of terror shoots through her chest; many pairs of claws grab her and haul her away. Rose claps a hand over her eye, and tries to elbow the person who attempts to pry her hand away to get a look. "Let me see!" Feferi says, half-snarling with panic. Rose is preoccupied with not fainting. She can't even say the procedure hurt - but the suddenness and the ensuing shock leaves her cold at the extremities, a dizzy heat clouding her thoughts as her vision swirls. Briefly, she registers the shock of horrific lightning as it zaps down the lines to power the door open, but then she attempts to open her eye under Feferi's cautious, icy clawtips, and her eye slams shut in another wince as Eridan's shield blazes over and around them. Dull maroon swirls across the back of her eyelids, and a cold claw rests lightly on her closed eye, and she loses a few minutes to the sightlessness as the shock slowly recedes.

After a moment, Feferi draws her hand away, and someone sighs close enough that Rose feels it brush against her face. They've lain her out on a floor, so they must be through the door. She cracks the unpricked eye, then cautiously peels the other open. It feels sore, and dry, but Kanaya's face comes into clear focus directly above Rose's without delay or any sharp pain. Seeing Kanaya is, as ever, a joy. "Mmm. Lovely," Rose says, summoning a crooked smile for Kanaya as she reaches up and touches the jadeblood's cheek.

Feferi throws up her claws. "She lives!" she announces, with an extravagant roll of her eyes, and the sound echoes throughout the chamber. "She's perfectly fine!" Then she taps Rose's cheek, her mouth pursed. "Rose, why does your planet like jabbing you? This is getting raydiculous."

"I don't like your planet, Rose," Kanaya informs her. She catches Rose's hand and stands up, staying bent over when Rose stays on the floor but refuses to relinquish her hand. "And the feeling appears to be mutual."

"I can think of a few reasons," Rose says to Feferi, sighing. Once she's sure her head has stopped spinning, she sits up and takes a moment to absorb the room around them.

Eridan's shield fills the whole round doorway, a field of white, bubbly white that completely obscures the mirror room. A pool of saturated magenta, yellow, and cyan completely fills the vast room, apart from the small, thin circle of white marble floor that wraps around the walls. This is the brightest Rose has seen LoLaR's vivid water since arriving, and the color is a brilliant shock to her beleaguered eye. The walls themselves rise and come together smoothly to form a curved roof, all of it painted with iridescent nacre. Three polished mirrors used to hang from various parts of the ceiling, as far as Rose can tell; unfortunately, all but one have fallen into the deep water of the pool, and the last one still hanging in its frame is covered in jagged cracks, with fallen shards as long as a bus stabbing into the floor and the pool. Another three openings in the walls, spaced between the mirror frames, occasionally drip water like sad fountains - but only a few drops, with long gaps in between.
Nothing like the sort of torrential force Rose expects the fountains could have produced were Cetus here, and alive.

Three pillars of chalk, one each in yellow, magenta, and cyan, rise above the water level, positioned so that if all the mirrors were hanging and the fountain openings worked, they would form a kind of rough circle together. The sides of the chalk pillars are damp and worn down, the color much darker where they meet the water than the small ring of dry chalk at the top. Rose kneels by the side of the water and dips her hand into it as a test. The particulates drifting in the water here are so thick that it feels like she's picked up a handful of wet sand; chalk doesn't dissolve in water particularly well. The silt-heavy water drips in between her fingers before she turns her hand over to let it fall.

No wonder LoLaR above is so faded. Some critical mechanism must have shut down in Cetus's lair, and the chalk has collected in this one pool.

And in the very center, a large Light symbol made from solid diamond lays almost flush with the water, bearing three pedestals. There doesn't appear to be anywhere else to go from here. "Did anything follow us in?" Rose asks, far too late. She raises a hand to rub her eye, absently, and Feferi intercepts her with a muttered series of glubs. Eridan gives her a haughty look and sniffs, as though the mere mention of him possibly failing is offensive to his ears. He's not as sensitive as Vriska is about such things, but really. But tact. Tact is key. Even if she did just get jabbed in the eye to unlock a damn door. "Everyone. Keep your eyes open for me, regardless," Rose says, with a touch of humor in her voice. Kanaya snorts, then looks cross at herself for having succumbed to the urge.
Rose floats in the air to test herself - the last of the light-headed wooziness has passed - and then helps Kanaya over as they fly to the central platform. Feferi dips her toes in the water as she skims across like a skipping stone, kicking up arcs of water.

One object sits on each pedestal - one of them in particular Rose is relieved to see, the second something she half-expected, and the third just...odd. The Splendor Existentiae, at least, is instantly recognizable.

"Is that it?" Eridan hisses.

Kanaya arches an eyebrow. "It would appear to be so."

He glares at the object on the pedestal. "You sure?"

"It has the title in thirty point, overly elaborate cursive font. I think this is it," Rose assures him.

"It could be a trap!" he says, insistently.

Feferi raises a claw to bop him on the back of the head - then she twitches and retracts it, with a desperate smile directed at Kanaya. "It's naut a trap!" she says, instead.

Rose was expecting a comfortable, classic book format - a tome worthy of kind of deep, arcane alchemical majyyks of the reality-building caliber they're going to be dealing with today. But the object on the center pedestal is a razor thin black tablet, the title fading slowly from green to red and back again, with stars and galaxies drifting across the liquid black surface. The cursive S at the start is oddly shaped: it looks as though the basic shape is actually a tangled ouroboros, with alternating halves of the tangled snakes lighting up as the color changes so that only half of the doubled S is visible at once. Rose lifts it carefully off the stand; it feels wafer-light, and when she taps the screen with a finger, the title screen fades to black, then reveals a series of snakes in a rainbow of colors squiggling across the screen.

The scroll bar is ridiculously small.

And this is only page one. Heaven forbid this thing have infinite scrolling. Rose captchaalogues it at once, before anything else can go wrong. And something will go wrong. It's only a matter of time, really. Beating a hasty retreat might be for the best -

But the other two pedestals lure her in. Curse her curiosity. While Feferi bounces and claps her claws together, a genuine laugh bursting out as she does a small, victorious dance, Rose starts to walk over to the second pedestal, the one that she has been expecting since she found the bow in the temple. A violin rests diagonally on the molded pedestal, the body made of clear crystal and covered in delicate, twining gold filigree.

"Rose," Kanaya says, "this smells like your blood."

Which quite thoroughly distracts Rose; she blinks, and her feet carry her away from the violin and across the diamond platform to the third pedestal. Kanaya indicates a thin, clear sheet of glass that rests on a pedestal that's more complex than the other two - an extra sheet of marble holds the glass up at an angle, while a mechanical device uses a diamond to carve tiny marks into the glass.

"Rose," Kanaya says, "this smells like your blood."

Which quite thoroughly distracts Rose; she blinks, and her feet carry her away from the violin and across the diamond platform to the third pedestal. Kanaya indicates a thin, clear sheet of glass that rests on a pedestal that's more complex than the other two - an extra sheet of marble holds the glass up at an angle, while a mechanical device uses a diamond to carve tiny marks into the glass.

It's on. It's not broken or defunct, unlike almost everything else in Cetus's abandoned lair. As Rose watches and Feferi and Eridan crowd around Kanaya, fascinated, the diamond-tipped device reaches the end of the rectangular sheet of glass and folds away into the pedestal, which proceeds to whirr and send out another mechanical device to complete its strange task. "That. There," Kanaya says, pointing, as a clear vial full of red blood emerges, clamped between what appears to be an overly embellished test tube holder. Rose is almost one hundred percent sure that's more blood than what she must have contributed earlier, when pricking her finger to open the outer door. The clamps turn the vial over, and blood pours out over the glass in thin rivulets, settling into the diamond-carved marks with eerie precision.
The blood fills in row after row of musical notation in treble clef. As soon as Rose reads it, she knows it. Almost like she's played it before; the fingers of her left hand unconsciously begin to flex and stretch into the position they'd need to be in on the strings to produce the correct notes. It was in her blood, all along -

Eridan grunts. "Land quest shit," he says, dismissively.

Well, considering the hash he made of his own land quest - Rose stops herself. She's hardly one to talk about dismissing land quests. "Most likely," she says, closing her eyes. The musical notes burn behind her eyelids, waiting to be played. "She did say to play the rain."

And in the instant her physical eyes close, Rose sees what she should have seen five minutes ago.

The second, scuttling mobile splinter of Leviathan launches up from under the edge of the diamond platform, aimed straight at the Rose's back, splattering saturated water everywhere as it sacrifices stealth for speed. "Shit!" Rose yells, whipping around and raising an arm to protect her face. The offshoot in the sun didn't try to follow them because it wasn't the scuttling thing Rose saw spying on them among the crystals. There were two this whole time.

The spindly, many-legged thing winds around her forearm as soon as it hits, wrapping so tight it almost cuts off circulation. But rather than securing itself or snapping her wrist, it aims next at her face, the feathered barbs at the ends of its many-jointed limbs shooting for her eyes in one swift motion. "No! Get off!" Rose says, almost a scream, raising her needlekind -

A grey hand seizes the Horrorterror splinter and crunches it, yanking it away from Rose's face and flinging it at the ground with enough force that the amorphous, shifting gelatin of its musculature splatters against the platform. "Rose!" Kanaya says, pushing Rose further away from the writhing creature.

Not far enough. The splinter regroups quickly, and when Feferi lunges forward with a battle cry, her 2x3dent skitters off the diamond with a horrendous screech as the Horrorterror shoots lightning-fast back toward Rose, covering the distance between them with long, ranging strides. "Hold still!" Feferi shrieks, stabbing at it multiple times in quick succession as she tries to skewer it. The thing is fast.

Rose's arm burns. She raises her needlekind with the other hand instead, an explosion already waiting on her lips. Eridan's incandescent across from her, his glasses and claws burning with smoldering white light to the point where she can't see his eyes - just two square frames of white. Feferi leaps out of the way -

And the Horrorterror zags at the last second, and bolts into the water like a thin black arrow. This time Rose tracks it with single-minded focus, following its dark trail of corruption and tracing it with her finger so that Eridan whirls to redirect his building power. But Feferi dives into the water trident first, vanishing beneath the colorful, swirling waves, and Eridan pulls his claws back with a curse. "Can still hear it," Eridan says, his voice echoing with the heavy resonance of his power, and grits his teeth.

how many gods rose won't you help us s a v e u s s a v e t h e m s a v e y o u

Feferi cuts through the water like it's perfectly clear - all Rose can make out through the swirling chalk is her brilliant fuchsia aura, but Feferi swims after the Horrorterror with firm strokes, hot on its tail. The two streak deep down into the pool - to the very limits of what Rose can see through the opaqueness - and then abruptly Feferi lashes out with a coil of fuchsia light, and the Horrorterror lurches out of the way with another burst of speed. It scuttles toward the far wall and Feferi continues to harry it under the water until it slams into the wall. The crawling thing swarms up the wall immediately, dripping purple, brackish blood in its wake, so that it's out of arm's reach when Feferi breaks the surface. The fuchsiablood shoves her hair back out of her face, her god tier clothes streaked with pink and yellow. "Clam back here!"

The Horrorterror, predictably, fails to listen. It continues to slip words to them, its small mental choir overlapping and talking over itself in a way that...the Leviathan outside doesn't, anymore. Rose doesn't know what to make of it; she's more preoccupied with taking aim again, as the grimdark tendril clammers up along the edge of the shattered mirror.

LV: she {horrible} won't let you leave!
LV: so many D̃̈́ͬ͆̈́ͯ̉̅̆̇̂̏̑̓̌̃̆̇̋̏̋̓E̅̆̈́̅̂̔̊̐̋̓̌̚L̆̈́̅̂̔̊̐̋̓̌̈́͂̋̊̐Ỉ̌̌̉̐Î̖̊̑̎̊̑́̐̌̊̐̔̊̐̚J̉̌̌̉̐Î̖̊̑̎̊̑́̐̌̊̐̔̊̈́̚Ỏ̌̌̉̐Î̖̊̑̎̊̑́̐̌̊̐̔̊̈́̚Ủ̌̌̉̐Î̖̊̑̎̊̑́̐̌̊̐̔̊̈́̚S Its doomed minds
LV: you're {betrayed} all going to die

"Wrong," Rose says, coolly. A few insecurities immediately fire off in the back of her mind, but they're false pings - she knows better than to believe a word out of a Horrorterror's mouth(s), by now. She fires at the creature, but it dodges at the most inauspicious moment, and her bolt of light reflects off a shard of mirror to lance through the water instead.

LV: dear precious futile minds
LV: we can offer you a better deal
LV: a better Ĉ̃̑̎̊̐̔̊̐̕HOIC̈́̅Ĕ̇̆̊̌̊̐̊̔̈̑̈́̊̐̐̈́̅̂̔̊̐I

She nearly snaps her needlekind in half. "All you offer is a lie. I don't need you. I've never needed you," she says, even as panic thunders through her chest. Feferi zooms up after the Horrorterror on her wings, bringing her arm back to throw her specibus, and - now Rose can see the intersection - Feferi throws, and Rose fires at the same time. One tine of the trident snags in the trailing end of the Horrorterror offshoot's spindly form, and while it scrambles to free itself, Rose's blasting spell pulverizes it. It's too small and thin to survive the flash of light and heat that follows, and all that's left as Feferi bounds up to retrieve her specibus is a blackened scorch mark against the mirror.

LV: fine then

The voice sounds much deeper, this time. With a resounding crack, a massive black tendril slams through the rock beside Eridan's glowing shield rather than trying to break through it, clearing a new space for the eyeball offshoot to glare at them through. Which circumvents the door entirely.

Convenient.

LV: Ė̃Ṙ̃̔̊̐̑̄̄̈̑TḊ̃̔̊̐̑̄̄̈̑̑̎̈̑Ȧ̇̇̊̐̓̂̂̐̐̈̑̈̑̐̐̐̐N -

Eridan shoots it.

Eridan, who has been storing up power this whole time, ready to fire at the other grimdark tendril.

Eridan, who fires a shot that screams a hole straight through the defensive tentacle that the eyeball uses to defend itself, and lands a direct hit on the crystal where the eyeball has made itself at home.

The crystal sun promptly explodes, along with everything in the room. Rose doesn't think Eridan threw that much power - but the mirror room's puzzle must have involved some kind of power amplifier in the sun, and when it blows, it incinerates everything in a wash of electric white fire. The flames billow out through the door when Eridan's shield falters under his own power, licking along the surface of the water. The acid burned skin on Rose's arm prickles, and her whole face feels like it received a sudden sun burn.

"Eridan!" Kanaya says, appalled.

"What! You saw it! Self-defense!" Eridan bawls back; they both have to shout to be heard over the roar of the flames.

"It'll be fine." Rose says - though she thinks that if Cetus were here, the denizen would beg to differ. "We'll simply wait for it to burn itself out, and then head out." She was the one who authorized Eridan to fire in that direction, after all. The violetblood folds his arms, half-defensive, half-convinced he's in the right, and she can't really fault him for this one. If he hadn't shot the thing, Rose probably would have, with probably only slightly less explosive results.

Which is when a low creak cuts through the air. Enough of a pause follows for all four of them to trade curious glances, as Feferi bobs back over to rejoin them on the platform. "Actshoally, I can probably shift enough water to put out the fire," she says, twirling her claw and causing a thing spiral of colorful water to rise up out of the pool. "It's more alive in here than it is outside -"

Which is when the ceiling in the mirror room finishes cracking. Several hundred thousand gallons of dull, milky white water crash through and drown the flames in a single swamping tidal wave - and it just keeps pouring in. "- Orrr that will do it," Feferi says, her voice faltering and hesitant.

But the water doesn't stop pouring through. It's just a solid wall of clouded water, and the first indication that they're really in trouble, now, comes when a fresh wave of water overflows into the pool room, and slaps into Rose's knees.

Another creak, and a jagged crunch, and the nacred walls and ceiling of the pool room begin to fragment and crack, like tectonic plates splitting.

"Eridan. Why do you do these things?" Kanaya asks, defeated, as the roof trembles and begins to cave under the weight of all the water of LoLaR.

It doesn't all go at once, thankfully, but another enormous wall of water sheets down through the spreading crack, slamming into the pool. It causes another immense wave that rolls through the water and completely swamps the platform. Feferi seizes Rose from behind, her arm an ice cold bar around Rose's ribs, and then she hauls Rose and Kanaya both out of the way of the incoming water.

Water bursts through another fault line, so that there are multiple geysers flooding the room. A stream with the pressure of ten firehoses almost hits them, but Eridan's shield flickers back over their heads, dimmer than before. "We've got the thing! Let's go!" Feferi calls over the din of crashing water; she lets go of Rose, probably assuming that carrying Kanaya out of here is going to require both arms.

The instant Feferi releases her, Rose drops back down into the water. "Wait!" someone yells - then, a shout that's garbled by the water as Rose submerges: "Rogrbgl-"

The conflicting currents batter Rose to the side as soon as she hits - the water's either tepid or freezes her hands, depending on where she's tossed. The breath she took and held before hitting the water starts to ache in her chest at once. She flips over at least once, one hand clamped tight over her mouth and nose to physically hold her breath in, in case a rogue current hits her chest. Rose opens her eyes to see where she's going, but all the bleached white chalk particles in the water and the extra-concentrated swirls of pink, yellow, and cyan leave her drifting in a phantasmagorical soup. If the violin has a distinguishable aura, it might well be lost in all the bright yellow.

She dove in right on top of where they started, but the platform has vanished in the rapidly rising water, and she's all turned around. Rose kicks herself around as her lungs scream at her to go back up, before the ever-rising surface is out of reach - or worse, the whole room floods and all the air's swallowed up.

But she can't leave it here. This whole endeavor is a pointless exercise: Cetus is dead, and soon reality will be, too. The last request of a dying denizen - and of course it could get Rose killed. That shouldn't even surprise her, by this point. She kicks perpendicular to the current that has her at the moment, trying to regain her bearings. Her god tier costume feels heavy in the water, but not to the point where it pulls her down. Not that it does any good, when she's swimming blind, trusting only her gut instinct that she's swimming in a vaguely downward direction and not toward the door back into the flooded mirror room.

Her air runs out just as her hand knocks against something hard and solid in the water mid-stroke. Rose's lung try to expel the pent-up air through her nose, and Rose stretches the exhale as long as she can to stave off the urge to breathe back in. The hard object comes free in her hand and she hugs it to her chest, feeling the diamond-sharp strings along her sternum through her shirt. She closes her hand over the tuning pegs and captchalogue the damn thing before it can be torn away.

Problem: she may or may not still be in danger of drowning. That hasn't stopped being a thing that is happening. When she looks up, lungs strained to the limit, she can't see anything but the swirling, tumbling chaos of the ocean rolling overhead. If there's any light left above, she can't make it out. Every time she blinks, the chalk in the water stings her eyes more.

Her traitorous mouth bursts open, the urge irresistible now, and breathes -

She chokes on a mouthful of water, just in time for Feferi's bubble to snap into place around her. Rose hits the bottom of the bubble on her knees, immediately retching up a decent amount of bright pink water.

Right. Life support bubbles.

...Damn her flair for the melodramatic. Rose wheezes air in rapidly, her body acclimating to not-drowning with remarkable acumen. Almost as though not-drowning should be one's default state.

"Why are you like this?" Kanaya asks, sounding aggrieved, which is...a very fair question. Without waiting for a response - Rose could write a dissertation on her own spontaneous bursts of melodramatic impulsiveness - Kanaya hugs Rose with back-cracking force, heedless of the fact that Rose is soaked through. Rose coughs one last time into her sleeve to spare Kanaya a shoulder-full of rainbow drool, and then hugs her back. Kanaya's claws dig in a little tightly, but Rose says nothing, feeling a faint tremble run through them. She's probably soaking Kanaya's outfit; Kanaya does not appear to care.

Then, to reassure herself, Rose decaotchalogue the violin. It is the violin, not simply a convenient violin-shaped object - Kanaya pulls away to watch while Rose turns the instrument over in her hands. The crystal looks stained faintly with LoLaR's colors - she remembers it being so clear, earlier - but when she tries to tip it so any water that snuck into the body will come out, nothing emerges. It's oddly dry, for something that she just retrieved underwater. "I would greatly appreciate it if you gave me prior warning the next time you decide to dive after an instrument,” Kanaya says, dryly, brushing Rose's wet bangs back into place. There's an odd note in her voice, like she's affected more than she's letting on. Between that, and the tremble in her claws as she laces them with Rose's fingers -

Ah. Rose might have nearly died one too many times, today. She feels like a bit of an ass. "Duly -" Rose stops to cough, though there's nothing left. Her throat feels raw. "- noted. I'm sorry."

"Great! Now, we just have to find a glubbing way out of here!” Feferi chimes in, her eyebrows a weird wobble halfway between a smile and a frown.

They all look around. The bubble is, by now, completely immersed in water; fizzling bubbles drift by, and the exhausted white ocean water diluted the saturated colors of the pool to the point where they're back in a foggy, featureless oceanscape. Feferi takes them up and they find a thin sliver of quickly diminishing air that at least confirms they've found the roof.

"Fuck it,” Eridan says, after a pause, and Feferi lets his claw out of the bubble so he can start blasting through what little is left of the roof.

They leave the last, incinerated remains of Leviathan's infestation to the watery tomb.

They reach open ocean with ease. Eridan pulls his soaked claw back in and sits down with a huff as Rose realizes Cetus's lair is crumbling all of its own accord. Enormous chunks of lilac stone fragment and drift apart - shattering in slow motion. A few other air pockets within the lair release their air in enormous bubbles that rise inexorably toward the surface, and Feferi follows them, navigating the large chunks of stone that sink to the bottom of the ocean.

Eridan is in favor of taking off and leaving LoLaR at once, as soon as they reach the surface and Feferi melts part of her bubble down so they can take a breather. Yet when Rose tells him he is free to go help with Noir, or guard the ark ships, he huddles down and wrinkles his nose, apparently unwilling to actually go off on his own. Feferi hums rather than saying anything aloud, then sends the bubble raft skimming across the sea toward the nearest island and watches with intrigued eyes as Rose attempts to tune the violin. "Are you going to play it?" she asks, excitement already infecting her voice. "I think that you should!"

Rose tilts her head in a nod, and splays her fingers over the board to test her reach. Feferi soothed the acid burns to the best of her ability, but Rose's fingers feel stiff and out of practice when she presses down the E string. The string digs into her skin, just a touch too sharp, and Rose has a strong feeling she knows what her fingers will look like by the end of this. Perhaps she should have borrowed Karkat; LoLaR likes blood. "Hopefully a good drenching won't impact the sound quality," she murmurs, as they come to ground at the edge of the island. More of a glorified sandbar, really - a few chunks of roughhewn marble sit in lopsided piles, but there's little else apart from white, chalky sand and a lone outcrop of pink rock. Nothing to mark that Cetus's lair used to lay beneath the surface nearby; even the whirlpool from earlier is nowhere to be seen.

"Do we even have time for this?" Eridan asks, sounding more stressed than annoyed as he joins them on the beach. Rose retrieves the bow from her sylladex and holds it loose in her hand, then steps up onto the pink outcrop, gazing out across the grey, desolate expanse of LoLaR's ocean.

It does have a name. But it seemed so trivial when Rose had matters of arcane, game-breaking significance on her mind. Oceanus Lúminum. And all the villages had names, in consort-speech, and the temples had books in their libraries on more than just rambling, arcane nonsense, and there were a thousand puzzles and games needed to unlock LoLaR's deeper secrets, and Cetus probably had another Choice waiting for her before their session fell apart around their ears, and Rose never cared about any of it.

Her chest is hurting again. "...Yes. For this."

Then she raises the violin to the crook of her shoulder and chin, and plays her song.

It starts slow, as her fingers adjust - and her grip on the bow feels off, and she has to pause to fix it. Finally, she succeeds in drawing the bow in one long stroke, and the note reverberates through the air like a low roll of thunder, far too loud to have come from such a normal-sized instrument. After that, Rose's fingers press the strings with fluid ease, and she folds the bow down to pluck pizzicato for a spell. The notes she's already played hover and layer in the air, until it sounds like she has three violins to play rather than just one. The A and E string draw blood each the first time she has to slide her fingers up the board with them for a higher note, but it doesn't slow her for a moment.

(It's less about the blood, and more about the code inside it.)

Sheet music burns bright in her mind's eye, and her whole body feels like an extension of the violin as she plays the Land of Light and Rain back to life. When she runs out of notes that fit on the glass sheet down below, Rose opens her eyes - she doesn't know when she closed them - and sees more dancing down the brilliant lines of rain sheeting down from the nearest cloud, through the film of tears that course down her cheeks. With a sob, Rose continues to play. The rain cascades down into the ocean as she plays it, drumming up the surface of the ocean into a wild froth. She plays the next raincloud, and then next, and then the next; her sight extends further out, farther than she can physically see, as she follows the music across the land. The light brightens with each bar of music, until the clouds all shine like stars, casting rainbows of light through their endless showers. The nearest cloud, the first, stops to drench Rose in light rain that feels warm on her shining skin; she's aware that she's flown well over the ocean, now, but can't recall when she left the ground. The water clears as the rain sheets down and clears the chalk particulates.

When she's finished - it -

It ends right as it should, but Rose's heart aches as it comes to a close. For a moment she hears the echoes of other, distant instruments, the faint resonance of a fraymotif that might never come together again, and one last sob shudders through her chest. There's light enough here for thousands of temples, for as many happy turtles as can be, but it was too late for them the moment Rose arrived here.

The violin dissolves into starry fragments, the gold filigree winking in the light for a moment before the crystalline dust sifts through Rose's fingers and whirls away into the water below. The bow remains in her hand, though the hair falls away on the wind.

A bit long for a needlekind. Rose takes several rapid, shallow breaths before she manages to swallow the sobs down with a wet chuckle. She turns and drifts back down toward the island, far below. Feferi wades up to her knees in the luminous ocean, her hands clearly visible through the radiant water. Kanaya waits with her claw shading her face, beaming at Rose with teary eyes in such a way that Rose is required to cup her face and kiss her before she touches down. It's harder than she can say - for a moment, her body feels almost insubstantial and light, before solidity reasserts itself. She only pulls away when Feferi lets out a triumphant shout, and Kanaya turns to look with her as Feferi trumps out of the water, her god tier skirts knotted up around her hips. "They're here!" she says, grinning too hard to even notice when Eridan sidles up to peer over her shoulder at the small, pale pink turtle hatchling cupped in her palm. It flails a little, in typical consort fashion, waving finger-length flippers before realizing it can't get any traction. Then, in even more typical consort fashion, the hatchling appears to forget this lesson and renews its flailing with redoubled vigor.

Feferi holds it out toward Rose - "Here, sea!" - and Rose freezes. 'I don't think that I should,' she wants to say; 'I didn't care, and they died,' might be better. It would certainly get the point across.

She turns her hands over, palm up, and Feferi places the turtle in her hands with perhaps more aplomb than is wise, when dealing with a newborn. The turtle squirms in Rose's palm, and then stills, only occasionally patting one flipper against the meat of her thumb. Other turtles, none bigger than her hand, crawl out of the waves and onto the beach. Rose sees them when she can finally bear to tear her eyes away from the one she's holding. It's rather the reverse of how turtles normally go about such things, but the consort hatchlings don't appear too fussed about this. Another raincloud races overhead, blazing with light as it sprinkles them all, and then moves on.

Rose kneels and sets the turtle near the water's edge. It flounders for a second, and then hauls itself around to join its fellow hatchlings in making a beeline for the scraps of marble in the middle of the island. She presses the pad of her thumb to her eye, and smears one last tear away. Her chest feels light and aching, all at once.

She thinks that she's cried out, at last.

---

[x]

Dave stares.

What he's looking at doesn't change.

He squints, and stares harder, his mouth parting slightly.

Nope. He's still seeing the same thing.

Dave's been staring at the pointy crowbar strapped to Karkat's back for an escape sequence-length of time before the obvious hits him. If he stares any longer, it will officially cross the line into uncool territory - and hell if Dave knows where Bro fucked off to, but he has to assume the guy's everywhere and nowhere at the same damn time. The man has his ways. As it is -

"Dude. Do you not get wings?"

The reaction is instantaneous. Karkat raises his arm and smacks his hand between his shoulder blades. He catches part of his thumb on the edge of the not-sword from hell, but somehow gets away without a scratch as he smacks himself repeatedly. This is already better than Dave could have ever imagined. Then the troll whips around, and keeps feeling up his back and flying backward at the same speed as he glares at Dave with dawning outrage. Dave doesn't take it personally. "Oh, fuck me in both ears! What the bulge-crushing fuck! This game has ripped me off for the last fucking time!" Karkat shrieks. He seizes the end of his unironically sad, reduced cape-coat and starts flapping it with a vengeance. "What the fuck! What the fuck kind of consolation prize is this!"

"Ohhh, he's gonna be steaming over that one for a while." Terezi bats her wings so that teal sparkles waft all around them. Dave desperately clenches his jaw and forces himself not to sneeze. Karkat visibly inhales so goddamn hard his eyes look ready to pop out of their sockets. He throttles his cape one last time and then speeds ahead to flip off Skaia with both middle claws as they skirt around to reach LoFaF - a gesture that Dave truly, unironically respects.

Keeping his expression completely flat, Dave kicks his feet and wiggles from side to side, in what Terezi insists is the only signal she'll respond to if Dave wants to ask her to fly forward or faster or any shit like that. (Terezi's into some weird shit, is all Dave has to say on the matter.) Once they coast up alongside Karkat again, Dave raises one of his dangling arms in a sympathy thumbs up. Karkat rotates one arm around to flip them and Skaia off at the same time. "It's okay man, we don't get them either," Dave says. He pulls it off with a straight face, but the edge of irony in his voice just can't be tamed. But hey, Dave doesn't even get to fly. Goddamn. "Also, what kind of bullshit is it that Sburb didn't set me up with a fly as hell set of redundant wings? We could have been opposite bros. What the shit? Missed. Opportunity."

Karkat groans and rolls his eyes, then tries to zip away from them. Terezi catches up without apparent effort, snickering. "It's arbitrary shitfuckery and you know it, Strider!" Karkat says. His voice sounds weirdly clogged up, and the 'oh god I've been an asshole oh god oh shit,' feeling hits Dave when Karkat goes on. "And as far as I'm concerned, there's zero fucking reason for me not to go flying off into the sweet storm of fuck on LoWaS that isn't just as arbitrary, so don't fucking tempt me!"

Shit, he's actually upset. Not just default Karkat-level angry, but legit on the verge of tears. Goddammit. Karkat puts on a burst of speed; Terezi doesn't speed up, and Dave doesn't wiggle at her. Soon Karkat's a dark red figure against LoFaF's ridiculously green backdrop, and augh. If he's crying, Dave owes him a chocolate-dipped fruit arrangement of apology. One of the expensive ones. Cruising over to LoWaS for sneaky bro times isn't exactly on the table. Dave just got an eyeful of, like, ten corpse-Daves to let him know exactly how close they're cutting it, here. At this point, there aren't really doomed timeline offshoots so much as there are a shitton of instant fucking deathlines, plus the one alpha timeline that just keeps limping along. Dave feels like he took a clock-firing railgun to the face, and if Aradia says Karkat goes to LoFaF, by fucking christ Karkat is going to LoFaF. They're all going to LoFaF. The time for dicking around with timelines has officially gone to hell in a handbasket. Sure, they can still complain - complaining is a free action - but -

(There's a timeline where Bro knocks Karkat back onto solid ground instead, and - pain - Dave's shredded by shrapnel and - pain - the Lord of Time shatters it just after Karkat kills himself pouring blood back into Dave, because Knights make for shitty healers - HURTS -)

(And another - shit - on LoWaS - he and Karkat both go - Dave's legs stop working the second they hit, and the timeline crunches down on him with shattered fragments of white hot pain as he lays there, useless and grounded, and the Trickster uses that moment of distraction to try to stab his hand through Karkat's chest, giggling with delight -

- John knocks him out of the way, very heroically, and then it breaks -)

"There goes a troll who really knows his way around an expletive," Terezi says, after they spend a shared moment in deep 'we fucked up'-itude.

Scratch that - Dave doesn't know where his head was at, just now. Probably rambling on internally, as per uzh. The green smell of Jade's planet hits him smack in the nose with near-physical force, and between that and Terezi's comment, he's back to the present. It smells like how Dave imagines a Houston-area lawn must smell if you don't live in a sweltering city hellscape, and by fucking god, if he doesn't make at least one (1) successful weed joke on this day, it'll be a complete loss. Note to self - make the weed jokes. Be the rider. "I know, right?" he says, shelving away weed jokes for later.
"Sweet storm of fuck'? That shit's classic Karkat."

"A Karclassic," Terezi agrees as they descend. The closer they get, the muckier Jade's land looks, and Dave bids a silent farewell to the sanctity of his shoes. Slip and fall into one puddle, and his god tier pajamas are never gonna be the same. Which, knowing Dave, is exactly what's gonna happen. God dammit.

Oriole, who doesn't have to worry about this mundane shit due to his unfair flying prowess, grunts and soars closer to them - he's been dicking around off to the side, giving them all a wide berth. "Uh oh. Lusus incoming," he says, pulling his wings in tighter. Dave stopped paying attention for a second there; now he swivels around as best he can, until he spies a white goddamn motherfucking dragon zooming up at them from the left. It bypasses Karkat with a flap of its wings that buffets the troll to the side, his shout audible from here, and does a loop de loop as it makes a beeline for them with a joyful trill.

Terezi stiffens, sniffs, then tosses Dave to the side with no warning. "Oh - that's for me!" she says, delighted, while Dave not-screams and flails his arms in a shit attempt at flight before he rams into Oriole. Terezi tears off, arms flung wide as she dives for the dragon face first. "Smell you later, coolkids. Mom!"

DM: Terezi!!! Daughter!!!!!

And that's how Terezi and her dragonmom slam into each other for a mid-air dragon hug. The lusus's wings fold up for a second and they tumble down in free fall for a few seconds before figuring their flying hug shit out. Terezi can't seem to stop smiling, and her lusus trills out loud, her mental voice rising and falling as Oriole and Dave wobble toward the ground.

It's pretty goddamn cool, even if Oriole winds up carting Dave around in the world's worst princess hold. You can't begrudge a person for going in for dragon hugs. Shit would be rude as hell. Oriole catches up to Karkat while Dave attempts to fix his position by crawling around into a piggy-back formation, but Oriole is the opposite of helpful and Dave strains his own arms hanging off Oriole's elbow and slinging a leg over his shoulder. No, shit, now he's hanging most of the way upside down, his shades hanging precariously from just his ears. It's a damn unsalvageable mess of a situation, but whatever. They're almost to the ground, and Karkat gives Dave a look without commenting on the uncoolness of the matter. "Why are you so hard on Crabdad all the time, again?" Dave asks, to change the subject.

Karkat snorts; his eyes look a little swollen and red-stained, but Dave does him a solid and pretends it's because of glowing eye Blood powers. "Because it's overbearing, idiotic, and used to eat me out of house and home on a daily basis. And if it tries to come at me while we're here, I will personally drop kick it into the volcano," Karkat says, without a single moment of hesitation. Then he scrapes at his temple with his claw and sighs, raising his voice as they skim over a tall tree full of giant ass flowers. "Oh thank god, there's Aradia. Our not dead hero," he calls. His deadpan sarcasm slips at the last second into genuine frustration, but again. Dave's not about to call him on it.

Aradia, currently not-dead (though Dave's at a loss as to why Karkat's commenting on that), waves at them from beside a spikey statue of Jade's denizen. Ropy vines twine around each curve of the statue, and once she flags them down Aradia turns back to the statue and tugs a bright yellow snake with vivid green eyes off the vine. "Hello Karkat! Hello Dave! Hello Oriole!" she says, stroking the snake's nose. It winds along her arm, tongue flicking out at intervals, and Aradia lets it explore her shoulder as she floats along to the next heavy loop of greenery.

Dave taps his sunglasses with his fingers in a salute. He doesn't know how obvious the marks are - but hell, Aradia probably knew this would happen, like, last week. "Sup," he says, a greeting and a question. Karkat refuses to land; he's got a fresh, sour glare express-shipped right to Aradia's doorstep, and he's not letting a little thing like standing on his own two feet distract him. Oriole, on the other hand, drops Dave immediately as soon as the white stone statue is in jumping distance.

"Nothing much. Just a ton of snake wrangling and wriggling." Aradia hums as she coaxes another snake away from a heavy, purplish-red flower the size of a watermelon. This one's orange, and snaps at her claws with sharp fangs. She baps it on the nose with a purse of her lips, while the original snake starts to climb and sift through her hair to reach the curl of her horns. "Rose started sending snapshots of the Final Alchemy recipe to the group memo, which is pretty innovative if you ask me! So we can get started right away!"

"I would rather toss myself into the nearest volcano to see if it feels as good as last time," Karkat snaps. Then, like the snarky ass he is, Karkat whirls around and brandishes a claw toward the giant ass volcano, smoking quietly in the distance. "Oh wait. There one is! How convenient!"

The volcano. Is smoking. What's more, there's a giant dude hanging out near the top of it. It's probably Hephaestus. Shit. "Guys. This is really important," Dave says, urgency in his voice. Aradia looks up, sharply, while Oriole groans and Karkat looks back over his shoulder, more than a little wild eyed. Dave points in the same direction as Karkat's claw. "Exactly how long has my denizen been smoking weed with the world's biggest bong?"

His delivery could probably use a little work. Karkat drops his arms to his sides, one side of his mouth hanging open more than the other as he stares at Dave in brutal disappointment. "Dave. I hate to say this, but I think you fundamentally misunderstand the mechanics of a bong," Oriole says, defeated, with the air of someone who actually does have a vague idea of how weed shit works outside of the realm of memes, and who is currently two seconds from a face palm.

Aradia flashes her teeth in a brilliant grin, and snaps a finger pistol down at a pair of bright blue lizard-y consort dudes waddling around the base of the statue. "Well, we are surrounded by… mariguanas!" She sounds utterly pleased with herself.

The smack of Oriole's double facepalm echoes through the air.

This calls for a high five. Dave sits on the statue and leans down, hand outstretched, and Aradia hops up to smack his palm.

"We're not friends anymore. At all," Karkat informs them. "I'm officially renouncing our friendship, Strider. I'm going to personally write up a contract of our hatefriendship with my own fucking blood, cram it down my meat tunnel, vomit it back up, and then set it on fucking fire with the power of my own rage. Watch me." He jabs a claw at his own face, and comes dangerously close to stabbing his own twitching eye. "You see this, Aradia? This is my 'I don't know why I expected better from you' face."

"Please tell me there's a bench for people who just want to lay down and contemplate their radioactive orange glow," Oriole begs through the shield of his hands, slowly dragging his claws down his face.

Aradia laughs, and reaches up to untangle the snake that's knotted itself between the coils of her horns. "We have refreshments and cookies and allergy meds in the lab, if you need a break," she says. "But that's also where we're keeping a lot of snakes!"

Oriole flies off before she even finishes. "Awesome. Sold. I'm peacing out." He nods to Dave, a tight jerk of his chin accompanied by a lingering grimace, and then heads off into the jungle, just one more neon orange dude among a shitton of brilliantly colored plants. A swarm of purple hummingbirds darts after him, which is gonna make for a hilarious case of mistaken identity when they catch up. Dave would wish him good luck with not losing his legs to weird sprite shit, but with their luck, he'd just jinx it.

Karkat, though, isn't done. "Oh, and for the love of fuck, why is there a giant man on the volcano?" he demands, sounding scandalized. "How the fuck am I supposed to fling myself into the lava as a sacrifice if there's a giant denizen judging me the whole fucking time!"

"It does put a bit of a damper on such things," Aradia says, serenely. Without taking her eyes away from Karkat and Dave, her claw snaps out and closes on the neck of the orange, nippy snake, before the snake can bite her. It lashes its tail furiously as she captchaluges it, and the green snake tastes the air with its tongue before slithering back under the cover of Aradia's hair.

All jokes aside - "Huh. Do you think Hephaestus will try to eat me if I swing by?" Dave asks. He scratches his arm - literally every part of him feels sticky in all this humidity, so it feels like home - and squints, trying to make out more details of Hephaestus. He's got vague, shaky memories of what the denizen looked like up close and personal, but from this distance he can't make much out apart from how fucking huge the dude is.

Aradia shrugs; her new snake friend nose up along the side of her ear in protest. "Probably not! Cetus and Typheus are the only two who seem to be very keen on eating people." Which is news to Dave. He just assumed the whole denizens eating people thing was a standard Sburb meme. "Also, the snake ectobiology apparatus is located on the edge of the volcano, so we need to start sequencing and appearifying them for slime ASAP. Being eaten would be a liiittle inconvenient."

"Inconvenient has literally never stopped Hephaestus in his life. Trust me," Dave says. He swings his feet up on the statue and stands up on his toes to flick the sole of Karkat's shoe. Karkat, still muttering his way through his latest expletive-riddled existential crisis of the day, glares down at him, his hair shadowing his face. "You grabbing snakes, dude?"

"Hell fucking no," Karkat snaps, before rolling right along into, "Fine! We do snake breeding. I needed something to distract me from the utter disaster of my life, anyway." Without waiting for a response, Karkat drops down, and his glare raises several notches from 'furious' to 'near homicidal' before Dave takes the hint and jumps into a piggy back. Karkat Air is already a notch above Terezi Airways and Strider United.

Aradia waves goodbye with a distant shout of, "Remember! Don't drink and drive, smoke and fly!" and they make record goddamn time to the volcano because Karkat runs on rage and furious despair and coffee, and right now he's fueled up on the first two. Dave checks multiple times to make sure he's not crying again as they book it over the green landscape in a straight line to the Forge. Between the asshole moment and the weed thing, Dave definitely owes the dude a fruit basket.

But right now, they have serious business to take care of. Shit's more serious than Dave's default expression. The Forge volcano towers over them, but Hephaestus looms with slightly more presence since he's, y'know, alive, and watching. Waiting. The Forge may bubble with bright red lava in a very active volcano-y way, but Hephaestus is approximately a million square feet of giant monster person, and being vaguely human shaped doesn't help when he's ridiculous tall in person. A heavy grey-beige apron covers his front - which gives Dave horrible, haunting thoughts about the as-yet-unconfirmed existence of denizen ass - with huge metal tools sized for giant hands slung through loops and sticking out of thickly padded pockets. His eyes burn white hot behind heavy metal goggles, with veins of magma pulsing around the edges where the goggles dig into his shifting, cracked layer of obsidian skin. A dark grey mask covers most of his lower face, like some kind of gas mask or respirator. As they rise up and up, with Karkat giving both Hephaestus and the gaping vents that ooze lava at random points along the Forge's sides a wide berth, Dave gets a good look at the bright, lava-polished metal braces that run along Hephaestus's twisted up legs, so he can support himself against the side of the Forge and keep his hands free to wield a hammerkind in each hand. One of them, Dave thinks he recognizes - Fear No Anvil, red and grey and tipped with garnet, with two twitching clock hands struggling to move forward against the perpetual, counterclockwise turn of gears. The other's name stands out in ice-white letters along the handle, which makes shit real easy: Ice Versa is a cool blue with tiny electron things orbiting in rings around it, a crystal clear grip, and spikes of crystal jutting out in both directions where the hammer head should be.

After a long moment, Hephaestus turns his gloopy lava eyes away from them, and leans back over the Forge. The sound of his obsidian crust crunching and shattering to adjust to his new position cracks through the air like a landslide. He exhales: his respirator mask emits a sound like a thousand Darth Vader Halloween masks run through a hell filter, and steam wafts up around his face in a billowing cloud.

Vaping.

God, Dave can't unsee it, now.

A platform juts out from the craggy edge of the volcano, with a high lip of stone the only thing between them and a fuck ton of yet more lava, and the ectobiology thing sitting square in the middle. They can't seem to get away from this molten bullshit. Karkat lands with a shudder right in front of the machine, which consists mostly of a giant flat screen monitor the size of a wall, a tiny console, and four glass tubes with random knobs and dials and readouts along the base. Karkat kicks some poor frozen-ass frog off the raised grey appearifying platform, and it bounces and rolls off a smaller white platform; then Karkat smacks buttons with all the impatient finesse of a troll on a goddamn mission. Nothing happens, but Karkat could probably use the stress relief, so Dave gives him a couple minutes before he shuffles his weight, glances super-fast over his shoulder at Hephaestus's looming, expectant stare, and then coughs, edging up to Karkat's side to watch him bash the console. At the rate Karkat's escalating, there won't be a console in a few minutes. "You can boot this thing up, right?"

"God, I hope not -" Karkat starts, his face full of fervent hope - which gets brutally murdered when the screen blinks on right after he opens his mouth. As it flashes through the Shurb Omega logo and then an ouroboros like the beginning credits of a game before switching to a spirograph loading screen, he slumps onto his elbows, face buried in his claws. His voice sounds dead with resignation. "Fuck me."

"You're gonna give Sollux a run for his money one day, dude," Dave says. Karkat kicks at him half-assedly; Dave basically just steps over his leg. No flash stepping required. Which is good because, at the rate he's going -

Eh. Well. It's a thing for him to not think about.

Abruptly, the monitor flickers, the psychedelic backdrop behind the spirograph turns into fuzzy static, and an error window pops up in the middle of the screen.

[This program is not compatible with the version of reality you are running. Check your universe's system information to see whether you need a different version of the program, and then contact the software publisher.]

[Error type: mod download incomplete; awaiting Administrator level approval]
Dave pokes Karkat's shoulder so he'll look up. Exhausted, Karkat knocks his head against the console, raises a fist, and lets it fall against the console. "Piece. Of. Shit!" Without raising his head, still slumped over, he drags his phone out of his pocket like it weighs fifty pounds and starts jabbing the screen. "Sollux Captor? More like Shitty -"

Karkat isn't messaging Sollux; he's literally calling him. Which probably means shit's about to get loud. Dave slides one foot away and then brings the other one over to meet it - but a single red eye glares at him through the space under Karkat's outstretched armpit. Dave freezes, and points over his shoulder with a thumb. "Uh, while you get that thing running, I'm gonna go talk to my mondo monster dude."

"Why?" The faint dial tone from Karkat's phone clicks, and Sollux's tiny voice is just barely audible. Karkat's armpit eye of death glares focuses on the screen as he attempts to mash the phone against his ear without moving his head. "Sollux, goddammit, your shit is fucked!"

Honestly. It's a pretty damn excellent question. "Pass the time? I don't know, man," Dave says - the best nonanswer he can come up with - and starts sidling away again. "BRB."

"Fine. Don't get yourself blasted to fucking smithereens," Karkat snaps. "No, not you! Sollux, you fuck, you need to finish installing something! If you don't hurry up, I'll come over there and personally shit an entire planetful of snakes all over your fucking life! Yes, from my own a-"

Dave so doesn't need to hear the rest of this conversation. If Sollux is Karkat's new shout target, Dave feels guilt free about bouncing. He walks over to the edge of the platform and scans the creases of rock between him and Hephaestus's side of the mountain. The denizen perches closer to the ecto platform than Dave's actually cool with, but continues to watch Dave from a distance instead of just, y'know, leaning over with his massive body so they can talk. Once he finds a route that won't involve a premature lava bath, Dave darts off the platform and sprints along the edge. He skids to a stop while he's still got distance between him and Hephaestus's forearm, but he's very aware that Hephaestus's arms reach far enough that he could flick Dave and Karkat off the side of the Forge like ants.

It's great. So awesome. Dave loves talking to giant monster people taller than skyscrapers. Hephaestus just looks at him, his blazing goggles and face mask rendering him extra unreadable, even for a - Son of a fuck.

Dave very carefully doesn't let his jaw drop. Instead, he grabs the front of his Knight cape and tugs on the fabric until it covers his lower face like a John mask. Two can play at this shit. If this were Bro, he'd shoot down a scarf or a mask as cheating - but Bro's off hell only knows where, and Hephaestus inclines his massive head in acknowledgement.

And says nothing.

Haha. Dave's not gonna try to outwait a denizen. Not even once. His mouth can't stay still that long. As awkward as it is, he jumps in first. "Uh. Yo."

Steam erupts from Hephaestus's respirator, and he turns to face Dave. The looming gets...loomier. Shit. Fuck. Dave stands his ground, but his mental monologue is already shorting out with pants-shitting terror.

HS: Knight.
Hephaestus sounds...familiar. Like there's an extra note under his voice, slightly off-beat from the actual words. The denizen's mask shit does extend down to cover his throat, doesn't it? Dave doesn't do anything as obvious as touch his own collar, but he can't quite stop the twitch of his fingers. "Hevapestus," he says, to cover his momentary slip.

For a split second, Dave gets the small win of seeing Hephaestus close his eyes in despair - before it all backfires on him.

HS: …

HS: No.

HS: I'm not dealing with you alone.

Then Hephaestus raises Ice Versa, and taps it against the side of the Forge.

For a denizen, it's probably a light tap. The shockwave nearly knocks Dave's feet from under him, and the whole Forge rumbles.

Before Dave can recover, Echidna pops out of the lava like a long, snake-shaped daisy. Lava showers off her and slops up against the edges of the volcano. Multiple rows of glittering, jagged teeth that look like solid diamond grin down at him as she heaves herself out. Her head and the joined part of her neck and torso shine a cold, icy blue, and thin quills grow out from under the skin of her head, neck, and back like a thorny crown that marches down her spine. You could, like, impale elephants on those spikes. Or something.

Apparently Skaia ripped her off on the arms front, though: once she's finished making everyone in a five-mile radius shit themselves, Echidna leans on a folded coil of her long noodle body to stare them down, and the lava tosses dangerously before calming the hell down to a light simmer. Still half buried in the lava, the denizen's two dark blue tails peek out like tiny hills, stirring the Forge like it's the world biggest pot of stew. She exhales, her anime-sized seaglass blue eyes bright and huge and framed by diamond-encrusted eyelashes sharp enough to literally kill a man, and Dave shivers as the chilly breath washes over them, dropping the temperature from 'comfortably sweltering' to 'freezes off bits you don't want to lose.' The volcanic heat hits again as soon as Echidna pulls back, looking satisfied, but.

Like.

Holy shit.

EC: ----- -----!

To top it all off, Dave doesn't understand a word of what the denizen just said. Her voice roars like an avalanche of chiming bells, with buzzsaw churning in the distance, and Echidna grins down at him again like she knows exactly what she sounds like to anyone who's not Jade.

"Why are there two!" Karkat howls, voice cracking. "Dave, what the fuck did you do?!"

"It's okay, I think we're cool!" Dave calls back. Sure, Hephaestus radiates smugness like a furnace, and Echidna is a massive new problem for them to deal with. But hey. Not dead yet. Both denizens loom over him, sure, but neither one seems inclined to move more than necessary - Echidna's head cocks to the side with a look of amusement. If Dave were dealing with Typhues, it would have devolved into 'I'm gonna eat you' threats already.

If they want to talk, then hell. Dave can goddamn talk. He can outtalk anyone.
"There's lava dripping everywhere! That's the opposite of cool!" Karkat says. It's funny - from this distance, with the volcano churning in the background, Karkat's shout almost sounds like he's talking at a normal volume. Dave throws him a thumb's up, regardless, and Karkat tucks his phone between his ear and his shoulder as he flips him off, and starts using his middle claws to push buttons on the console keyboard, glaring at Dave nonstop.

Which gives Dave an idea. Much like swords and stabbing things, there are few problems in Dave's life that can't be solved by taking out his phone. He does so, and opens a new Pesterchum chatroom.

TG: wait wait hold up
TG: cant you text like this

The response is instantaneous.

EC: Technically, yes!
EC: But shall I indulge you?
EC: I think not.
TG: psych you already did
EC: :CE

Echidna pushes off the edge of her volcano pool to take a lap, swirling through the molten rock like it's water. Hephaestus lets loose another harrumph of steam, and bends his neck so he can peer down at Dave up close and personal. The white-hot glow of his eyes really does look like it could start dripping down in huge globs on Dave at any second, so Dave shifts his weight from side to side, ready to book it if Hephaestus starts to tear up or otherwise be a douche about this whole thing.

HS: Why do you approach us, Knight?
HS: Be warned. I am now wary of your tangents. You shall not sway me.

Hephaestus talks and types at the same time, apparently: a weird not-echo bounces through Dave's ears as he reads the words on the screen, but he's not complaining. His brain craps out if he tries to follow both at once, though. Probably better to just stick to reading. The question on the tip of his tongue - 'what counts as a tangent, man' - gets put on pause for now. Dave's not letting a prime opening like that go to waste. But he's got something to say, right up front, and it can't wait. "First of all, the trap thing? Real dick move, dude. That was horseshit and you know it."

HS: There is supposed to be an order to such things.
HS: Perhaps it is a cruel order, to you. It is...difficult to fathom your mindset, so many iterations down the line.
EC: There are stranger things...
EC: Though not many!

Oh no. Dave should have just stuck with the tangent line. Seriously, clearing up what counts as a tangent when Dave hasn't even established what they're talking about would have been the smart place to start. He forgot - he's dealing with not one, but two cryptic assholes, right now. Echidna jumps in without even glancing over her...snake...shoulder. (Shit). All their random bullshit powers combined...

"I seriously stopped giving a shit about patterns and order shit around the time when I had to do the Peter Panda dance to solve a random ass puzzle, with Terezi trying to change all the animal names by yelling over Karkat." Dave says, flatly. "Anyway. So like, for the record, what counts as a tangent, exactly?" His delivery's weak on that last part. God dammit.

HS: I know one when I hear one.
HS: You heretical ass.
HS: If you think I will succumb to a tangent about tangents...
HS: You are sorely mistaken.

Dave raises a single eyebrow. Hephaestus's massive face doesn't move, apart from the occasional crack and pop of lava in the cracks. "If you say so, man," Dave says, after the silence sits too long and starts to turn all kinds of awkward. Trying to figure out the facial tells of a denizen with a mask on is going to be ridiculous. Whether Hephaestus knows and/or gives a shit about human facial expressions is a goddamn mystery that's probably gonna stay a mystery.

Echidna finishes her parade circuit of the Forge - considering how long she is, it doesn't take long for her to catch up with her own helix tails - and swoops down right next to Karkat to bare her teeth at him before circling back around to Dave and Hephaestus. Dave's not sure whether to call what she's doing a smile or not, on account of he's not sure she can even close her mouth. It's just...a lot of teeth.

A lot of teeth.

Anyway. Right. What now? This really isn't one of Dave's top of the line, well-thought out plans. "On a scale of one to super fucked, how doomed are we, anyway?" he asks, as he stuffs his free hand into his pocket. He's tempted to start signing at them to see if that works, but he'll save that for if he gets jittery and needs something to occupy his hands.

HS: Honestly.
EC: If you were doomed, we would not be bothering with trivialities here.
HS: Doomed timelines aren't lasting long enough to be very significant, anymore.
HS: Did you know that doomed timelines used to be rare?
HS: There was a time when all games proceeded as they should, all paradox loops were closed, and to glitch was unprecedented.
EC: An esoteric mental exercise, contemplated only by the most subversive of thinkers.
EC: Like Metis. Remember Metis? She and Themis always argued over the existence of entropic force.
HS: I'm sure they'd be delighted to be here right now.
EC: Eheheh, maybe!
HS: Regardless. You succeeded. You were suitably challenged.
HS: And now the hoard may be used to start priming the Forge.
HS: The timeline remains viable.

Dave's jaw drops. He can't even make his head nod.

They go on their own tangents.

It's like kringlefucking Christmas.

Hephaestus seems to catch on exactly five seconds too late, and cuts Dave off before he can do more than open his mouth to call them out on it.

HS: That didn't count.

"It so counted." Dave takes a screenshot of the conversation. Perfect. Smug's probably a strong word for what he's feeling, but oh man. This is gonna be priceless. Then he raises a hand. "But also, really? The grist pulled a Bro earlier and vanished into fucking nowhere, so I wasn't sure if it made it." They got distracted by Karkat's crowbar problems and then the whole lava pouring down as the planet starts to collapse sitch, but Dave's sure he's not carting around several thousand tons of grist unawares.
HS: The grist arrived with you, incorporeally. You can release it at your leisure.
HS: Simply empty your grist cache into the Forge.

Dave can't tell which is better - straight answers, or hilarious tangents. "Oh, sweet," he says, on autopilot. Figuring out how to empty grist takes about fifteen seconds as he goes through five different variations on finger snaps, taps his heels together, checks his pocket for a magical game wallet. Sweat beads along the back of his neck; he's got two denizens creating a hostile work environment who both think emptying a grist cache is 'simple.' After trying literally everything he can think of - which includes signing 'cash money' at the Forge - Dave just shoots finger pistols at the lava.

An entire denizen-sized hoard of grist rains down from the sky. All of it conveniently misses hitting Echidna and thunders into the lava of the center of the volcano. Each bit of grist pops like a gusher when it lands and melts into the red-hot rock, which bubbles and froths like someone just dumped a couple thousand bucks' worth of bath bombs into a hot tub. Echidna rumbles out a coo like a bizarre cat-bird hybrid person, then ducks her head under the surface as she sloughs around the circle to kick up a wave of sparkly rainbow lava in the direction of Hephaestus's perch.

Five minutes pass before the whole hoard stops pouring out of nowhere. Five minutes for Dave to mourn all the material game wealth burning to death before his very eyes. If he had a hat, he'd take it off for a moment of silence or something. "And we're broke again," he says, once the flood of grist slows to a trickle. "There go all my plans to jumpstart the economy."

HS: Why must everything be a joke to you.

Dave clicks his tongue and folds his arms. "Because that's the rule. Everything has to be at least partially a joke, or we'd all be screwed in the head." More so than they already are, anyway. By the time this is all over, they're probably all gonna be stone cold fucked - if they live. Realistically? Dave doesn't like his odds. "Calling it out like that is pretty bad form, dude."

Hephaestus blows out so much steam Dave wonders if he's broken him that fast; then the denizen slumps down to press a giant claw to his brow, shaking his head. He waits until Echidna comes up from her boiling lava bath before speaking.

HS: This is precisely why he gives Typhus migraines, you know.

Gold-and-scarlet tinged lava pours from jagged cracks between Echidna's wall of teeth as she parts them, her torso skimming over the lava as she sidles back up to Hephaestus.

EC: Oh, that's because Typhus is a stick in the mud!
EC: And yet he has such ideas, lately…
EC: Most intriguing ideas. :Ec

Echidna brings the ends of her tails up in a curl under her chin, and her quills rustle against each other like a whole forest of shivering, iced over tree branches. Hephaestus sags further with a groan.

HS: This.
HS: Is all my Knight's fault.

Dave's got literally no idea what Hephaestus blames him for. But hell, he'll take credit for it. Why the hell not? Until Karkat gets the snake thing running, he's got nothing better to do with his time. Over at the apparatus, Karkat taps his foot, his face flushed the color of a nuclear grade meltdown only just under his control as he holds his phone toward the flat screen. It looks like he has Sollux up on Facetime or something.
So yeah. Nothing better to do for now. Popping some popcorn and pulling up a seat to the Karkat show would require hiking down the volcano unless someone gives him a lift.

...

TG: jade its urgent
GG: yes?
TG: need popcorn karkat is about to lose it on sollux GG: dave...
GG: as fun as that sounds, i'm kind of busy here :T
TG: jade please
TG: i guarantee you theres some right down at the lab
GG: cant karkat fly you now?
TG: that would defeat the purpose
GG: whoops! and i need to borrow terezi in a bit too :P
TG: youre killin me harley GG: hang on...
GG: okay! check your sylladex for me real quick!
TG: does it have magical space popcorn
GG: yup! :D
TG: jade
TG: omg

Dave hesitates, then sticks his hand into his extra pocket thing.

The first thing he finds is a hot bag of popcorn. Like, this is hot out of the microwave fresh.

TG: holy shit
TG: friendship with john over
TG: now jade is my best friend
GG: i'll tell him you said that! :P
TG: wait no
GG: just kidding!
GG: but you're very easy to bribe dave
TG: im a dude of simple needs
GG: youre a dude of very weird needs!
GG: friendship is weird…
TG: no argument there

Tucking the bag of popcorn into the crook of his elbow, Dave starts to chow down. He can't tell if he's hungry or not - hell only knows where that skipped day went, but he pulled so much time bs before rejoining the group that he's objectively starving. Or at least...he could eat. And he's still in dire need of a nap, but like that's gonna happen any time soon. "So, do I get to skip the ominous capitalized Choice thing? Because that would be badass," he says, through a mouthful of popcorn that scorches his tongue. On impulse, he flicks the first unpopped kernel he finds into the Forge to see if it'll pop - but it's too small and he loses it against a patch of melted gold grist. Then he winces and tries not to look at Echidna in case he's about to get eaten for contaminating the super important reality-creating volcano.

HS: I have given it much consideration.
EC: We have been brainstorming!

He chokes on popcorn, and frantically coughs it back up out of his airway. Fuck. Why did Dave say anything? Fuck, fuck, fuck. "Two of you are working on this shit? No, come on, that's not fair!" he protests, popcorn spraying from his mouth, too close to yelling for comfort. Karkat jerks around from the ectobiology console, spooked by the sudden volume, and Dave forces it back down. He has an image to maintain, here.

HS: In an ideal cosmos, you would have no issue with this.
HS: I do not live in an ideal cosmos any longer.
HS: You have no idea how much this pains me.
EC: Oh hush, you.
HS: Agony.
EC: You're getting worse than Typhesus in your old age.
HS: Suffering.
EC: AHEM.
EC: The Choice shall be this -
HS: My Knight, not yours.
EC: You are too slow!

Echidna lashes her tails, and flicks a dollop of lava at Hephaestus. "He goes on a lot of tangents, doesn't he?" Dave says in a stage-whisper to Echidna, covering his mouth with a hand so Hephaestus can't see his mouth as he shovels another handful of popcorn in. Jade's denizen rustles her quills again in a denizen-laugh, sinking back up to her shoulders in the Forge and leaning up against the opposite side from Hephaestus. With a loud series of thunderous creaks and crushed stone, Hephaestus leans right on over Dave - shit shit shit - his face mere feet from Dave even as Dave twitches back a few steps, and stares at him with bottomless eyes.

HS: The other Knight bears the Sword of Sunderance.
HS: The Choice we offer you is this:
HS: Save yourself, or sacrifice yourself.

A cloud of steam billows around Dave and blows his cape back, giving him an instant humidity shower. Then Hephaestus, content in his douchebag delivery technique, settles back, satisfied.

Dave finishes swallowing his popcorn; his throat works extra hard on that shit whilst he mulls that choice over.

Once he's done with that, he mops some of the extra humidity sweat off his forehead and clears his throat. "...Well, that was about as clear as preserved dead shit in jars that have gone off and left you with a weird, cloudy brine and a lid seal that's popped out, but you're not sure if you can get botulism from that shit on account of who would even want to eat that shit but I mean, have you seen that shit? You can't even see if the bones are still in there or not, so for all you know you could have accidentally swapped it for a jar of home-canned peaches and it could be like - the nectar of the gods, in peach form - or really cloudy apple juice which has more antioxidants and shit -"

EC: Oh.
HS: Yes. Oh.

" - and anyway, that thing's not a sword," Dave finishes, and points back at Karkat.

Karkat swears instantly when Echidna and Hephaestus tip their massive heads to look at him. "Hang on, are you talking about me? Stop pointing at me, you'll give them ideas!" he hisses, loud enough that Dave can hear him.

Dave shrugs. "Hate to say it, man, but they already have ideas. Your not-sword thing is apparently part of my shit." Terezi hadn't been very clear on that. Ominous hedging and cryptic hints aren't the most useful of seer stuff, but Dave got the main takeaway - something about that pointy crowbar sucks ass. The fact that Hephaestus, Dave's own personal douchizen, screwed around with it on LoHaC for reasons unknown to make it extra pointy is mad suspicious.

Karkat reaches back over his shoulder. "Take it then. I don't want it!" he yells. He throws a wild look at Echidna as he snatches the not-sword up and waggles it at Dave. God dammit, he's not even holding it by the handle - if that was a real sword and not, y'know, an obvious, creepy fake, Dave would be secretly appalled by such terribad bladekind skills.

He holds up his arms in an 'x' before Karkat can fly over and shove the crowbar at him. "Hell to the no. They still haven't told me what it does," he calls, which only makes Karkat swell up with further aggravation. Dave cranes his neck around to look at Hephaestus. "What does it do?"

The two denizens exchange looks. Since they're giant ass boss monsters, it's not subtle. At all. Hephaestus gives a whistling sigh, while Echidna sinks a little further into the Forge until lava covers her up to the eyes. Her tails stir the volcano in coiling 's' shapes, while Hephaestus shakes his head.

HS: That...is a weapon of last resort.
HS: It was refined and forged from a powerful juju of breaking. One capable of affecting many things on the motificorical level, and beyond.
HS: The last of LoHaC's energy was sacrificed to fuel the transmutation.
EC: It can't cut things. Not physically!
EC: But fall upon thy sword, oh Knight -
HS: And it will set you free.

Dave didn't expect them to rhyme that shit. They didn't have to go that extra ominous mile, but hey! They did. It heebies his jeebies so fucking fast he shudders involuntarily, and the popcorn in his mouth loses its delicious, buttery flavor. "That rhyme shit? Hell no," he says, putting the popcorn away so he doesn't eat another tasteless mouthful just to have something to do. "Let's not do that anymore. If you could give me a paper with complete instructions and timestamps and addresses, now, that would be awesome -"

HS: Riddles are supposed to be enigmatic.
HS: This is kiddie tier riddling.
EC: Rhyme, alliteration, palindrome, parallelism. Such things used to come so easily!
EC: Each word in its place, each verse rich with layered allusion.
HS: You are a vassal to something that will destroy you, Knight.
HS: To save yourself, you must abstain from the fight.

Dave almost busts out laughing right then and there. "Dude. Now it's just corny."

HS: That is because children these days have no respect.

Children these days also don't like thinking about ominous rhyming choice shit with their lives on the line, but Dave's not about to complain about that out loud. What kind of weird ass lecture would Hephaestus give him then? Not one he's bored enough to sit through. "Y'all don't get paid enough for this, trust me."

Echidna sits bolt upright so fucking fast Dave barely has time to register the choppy waves of lava parting around her. The denizen slices across the Forge in one slither, and suddenly she's got her enormous head all up in Dave's business. Hephaestus shifts a little, but doesn't move. Her teeth glitter and glitter in the light of the Forge.

His mouth suddenly glued shut, Dave leans back so far he almost falls on his ass. He can't remember how feet work with that many teeth right in front of him.

EC: Ah yes!
EC: This is what you spoke of, yes?
HS: Don't encourage him.
EC: To Typhus! You said these things!

It clicks, then. Dave should have picked up what Echidna was laying down sooner, but to be fair, denizen hints are the worst hints. He eases upright, despite the fact that this puts him closer to Echidna's ludicrous jaws, and stares, unable to keep a straight face as the realization hits him. "…No," he says, frowning. "No way. Are you guys…actually trying to get a salary?"

The denizens exchange significant looks again. The Forge rumbles, the only sound as the second ticks by and the two turn to stare at Dave with weirdly intense eyes.

No. Way.

This changes everything. All this time, these giant assholes have been acting like Dave annoyed them, and now - shitting hell. What has Dave unleashed? "Are you ditching? Gonna pull the denizen equivalent of retiring in Hawaii and plant your asses in the new reality?" he asks, the words spilling out faster and faster. The possibilities here are endless. "Because I was ninety percent fucking with you this whole time, but oh my god -"

Dave throttles back the dawning glee, but the corners of his mouth twitch up. Traitors. But how is he supposed to keep a straight face when the denizens want to retire. These are unparalleled extenuating circumstances.

EC: That is a matter…
HS: …of some debate.
EC: It will depend on Typhus!
EC: Once he is finished with his Heir…
HS: The two of us cannot be spared.
HS: We must remain with the Forge to stoke it, in the absence of a ring.

Holy mother of exposition. It really is Christmas. Dave does a spot-check on his time sense, which is currently a mangled mess in the back of his head, but it still registers as April 13th. Maybe the universe decided to shower him with this snazzy ass gift as an apology for literally everything else fucked up in his life. Dave's more in the market for a spare set of kidneys or lungs, in case his get snatched by the Lord of Back-alley Organ Harvesting next, but this is a gift. "That is the best thing I have ever heard. Ever," he informs them, with a contented sigh. Damn. He can die happy now, knowing that he's planted the seeds of workers' rights in the minds of giant monsters that have been around since the beginning of reality. "Anyway. One cryptic ass choice, pulled straight from the ass" - he checks himself before making 'ass' plural - "of the most cryptic fucks this side of the Medium. And no 2X boss fight combo? Guess I can live with that."

HS: I remember well the last time I attempted to fight a version of you.
HS: I would prefer not to repeat the experience.
HS: You're chatty enough as it is without provoking you into a rap battle.

Dave raises a hand, ready to beatbox at a moment's notice. Hephaestus twitches - which takes some doing, since there's a lot of him to twitch - and pulls away. He raises a lava-veined hand and slams it down on one of the gears attached to his leg braces; his whole mountaineering shit starts to rattle around the Forge and carries Hephaestus away from Dave. It doesn't make much of a difference in denizen terms, but for Dave, it's a hike and half. "We can still rap from here," he says, half-yelling.
Nothing's stopping them from holding the best text rap battle the universe has ever seen except Hephaestus being lame.

If the conversation doesn't distract Dave, he'll have time to think. Not the biggest fan of thinking, right now. His internal monologue will take him for a goddamn ride - it'll start with 'fall on your sword,' and then go from -

EC: Mmm.
EC: Interesting. Stormspeaker is engaging.
EC: Something must have irritated him…
EC: More than usual!

Perfect timing. Echidna perks up her quills; all of them chime as they rustle against each other, and the denizen does another restless lap of the Forge, while Dave sags from relief at the nice, distracting segue. But Echidna sets up shop next to Karkat, this time - she folds up right along the rim of the volcano and rests her torso almost on top of the ectobiology computer. Some hefty chunks of lava sizzle as they drip off her and land on the very edge of the platform.

Karkat, predictably, starts shrieking. He holds out his phone like someone holding up a generic religious symbol or chucking raw garlic at a vampire and scoots his entire butt onto the console as Echidna rumbles aloud and leans in for a closer look. Or a Karkat-sized snack. "Oh fuck. What does it want, Dave?" Karkat shouts.

"Do I look like the goddamn Denizen Whisperer or something, dude?" Dave heads over to help anyway, since Hephaestus appears to be somewhere between middling to completely done with the conversation. The lava cools fast on the platform without eating through it by the time Dave arrives - which is cool, but raises a hell of a lot of questions about what exactly the platform is made of. Heat transfer is so fucking busted in this game. It only seems to work based on dramatic effect - which is something Dave can respect, but makes his brain hurt if he thinks about it too hard. Physics is such a crapshoot. Echidna's eyes glitter at him as he crosses the platform, but she doesn't even breathe at them, let alone make a move to get her munchies on.

Dave's heart rate spikes. Fuck. He forgot about the weed jokes. If the denizens did get high up here, they'd probably munch their way through the Forge in a matter of minutes.

"You've been talking to them for like fifteen minutes now! So yes!" Karkat exclaims, exasperated, as Dave comes and leans his weight on the corner of the console. The screen now sports a fancy ass, high definition image of a snoozing snake with a red targeting reticle flashing over it, and all the console buttons flash and beep as Karkat hauls his feet up on the console with him. He glares at Dave in a silent dare for him to make a comment.

"Shit. You're right. I need my own TV show," Dave says. Because damn. If he can talk denizens into retiring, he can do anything. The world is his goddamn oyster. Then he takes pity on Karkat and adds, "They're on Pesterchum, so if she's chime-roaring at you, there's a high chance she's just dickering with you."

With a dark glare, Karkat raises his phone without taking his eyes off Dave and ends the call with such force that his claw jams against the screen. Dave adds him to the chat with a shrug and pokes at the nearest blue button to science the shit out of it. Karkat smacks his hand away and starts mashing out messages at the same time. Silently, Dave starts poking at all the buttons he can reach, until Karkat's reduced to playing a furious round of whack-a-mole while he types.

CG: WHAT! WHAT DO YOU WANT!
EC: I am simply observing.
EC: You are dealing with a process that I preside over.
EC: Do continue to do excellent work. EC:

Well, Karkat wouldn't be Karkat if he didn't shout at giant monsters first and ask questions later. Echidna rattles her quills in a silent laugh - that's how Dave reads it, anyway - seems like Karkat's rage makes her smile.

Out loud, Karkat yells, "No, sorry, I was just planning to fuck the plan, dump all this snake slime garbage into the death volcano, and free style it like my last name was Strider. Get out of my way so I can vom into the shitchurner and return the favor!"

EC: Heheh, a good joke!
EC: You are creating something truly awful today.

She doesn't even blink as she says it. Dave's not sure Echidna physically can blink, and that's just sad. Then his brain rewinds about five seconds back to the moment before his instant rambling, and 'awful' starts flashing giant red sirens. Karkat splutters, half-formed swear words curdling before he emits more than a syllable or two. "...Come the fuck again?" Dave says, his voice a little weak, when Karkat stutters his way into a coughing fit.

Echidna wriggles her whole body, and her lowest row of protruding teeth scrapes with jarring force against the edge of the Forge as she pulls away, her eyes fixed on them and the console.

EC: Awe-ful. Something terrifyingly profound, and profoundly beautiful.
EC: A matter of beginnings and endings.
EC: Call upon me again when the Space player arrives.

And just like that, the denizen ducks her head and carves her way back down into the lava. Her head doesn't re-emerge - the rest of her body flows after her like a ribbon, the twined ends of her tails vanishing last of all. The Forge burbles once, then goes back to its usual bubbling deal without even a ripple to show where Echidna dove in. Across the Forge, Hephaestus just stares up at the sky: the very picture of not giving a shit.

Karkat turns and mouths, silently, 'What the fuck.'

Dave shrugs in reply.

HS: Ah. It has begun.

They're gonna need to have a talk about the whole ominous proclamation thing - that'll be Dave's next project, if they don't all die an abrupt, screaming death in the near future. It's bad enough when Rose and Terezi do it. Hephaestus vents a massive burst of steam that engulfs his whole head and drifts up into the sky, augmenting the cloud of smoke. The clouds and auroras that cover most of the planet hang thin here, like a giant hole in the ozone layer centered over the Forge. Through a gap in the steam and smoke, Dave can just make out the dark Medium beyond -

Karkat sucks in a breath; one of his legs wobbles and slides off the console, limp, as he sees what Dave's seeing. "Is that -?"

White streaks shoot across the sky. Only a couple, right now, scattered and easy to miss between the flashes of light bursting out of the fight between the Lord of Time and Leviathan. But all of them streak toward Skaia at top speed, and more and more pepper the sky every time Dave blinks.

HS: The Black Queen has summoned the Reckoning.
Which means just like that, whatever's left of Earth is toast. Chronologically speaking, Earth got wrecked by meteors probably the second they slammed through the door to a premature 4/13, but here in the Medium, the Reckoning's only just now revved its engines. Every fiery dot that zips toward Skaia is another meteor about to get redirected to crash on Earth and create the sandy wasteland Dave left the Midnight Crew in.

A weird, loose feeling sucks a hole in his chest, and Dave's suddenly grateful for past!Dave leaning on the console. Telling himself that it's fine, that the ark ships have everyone, that he's already seen the aftermath of the apocalypse - doesn't help (for some bizarre reason). It was still Earth. It existed for billions and billions of years, and yet by the end of the day, whether they win or lose, the whole planet will be destroyed. Every city, every grocery store, every shitty corner CVS, every car, every half-dead potted plant. His room in Houston. All the stuff and junk and things he accumulated in his life, that he didn't have the time or inclination to pack up for a trip to Seattle -

Up until this minute, some part of Dave's brain just kind of…assumed. He could wake up the next day, and he'd be able to go grab a jug of milk or chips or pain killers from the store, like normal.

Karkat shudders, and keeps shuddering, hard enough that Dave can pick up on it despite the space between them. He doesn't dare look, in case the dude's crying again. "God dammit," the troll says, his claws closed tight on his phone. "We didn't know her that well but. Fuck."

HS: If it was not her, it would have been the other sovereign.
HS: There would have been no gate through which your world ships entered if there were not a Reckoning to spur Skaia into generating them.
HS: You yourselves would not have existed without meteors to deliver you to your homes.
HS: So it goes.

"Yeah, well, inevitable shit is getting super damn annoying," Dave says, too exhausted to raise his voice. Hephaestus can hear him just fine. The meteors start to clog up the sky, still distant but whizzing by at top speed, and they're probably tiny for now, but -

"They're going to get royally fucked out there," Karkat says, grimly. When Dave looks at him, Karkat sets his jaw and pushes off the console. He looks like he really is ready to hurl every which way, and Dave freezes, undergoing an immense inner struggle, before passing Karkat a paper bag. "The Condesce's fucking space ships are still pissing around -"

"Or at least, Jade's gonna be punting meteors everywhere like we're in an interstellar pinball machine," Dave agrees. The wibbly, disconnected feeling in his chest zips tight again with tension. So much for that minor existential crisis. Time's running out on them like a deadbeat dad with a bunch of debt leaving his spouse and kids to foot the bill, and there's no way to reset the clock.

Instead, Dave pulls up Pesterchum, and looks at the memo Rose locked down so she could post image after image of weird snake shit. It's just a literal wall of snake nudes, or noods - snoodle, if you're gonna get picky about it - essentially, and Dave is absolutely going to confront Rose about the phallic imagery shit she's dedicated this memo to when he gets a chance. In person, though; he has to see her face for it. When he presses the first snake pic, the bright red snake fills the screen, and a tiny set of stats pops up along the bottom of his phone. Shit like length, acoustic resonance, age, coordinates in space and time -

Which…makes this really easy, as it happens. Dave braves Karkat's vom radius and enters the coordinates into the console between one blink and the next. Karkat bats his arm away instinctively with a snarl, but only after Dave's already done the dark deed. The targeting crosshairs on the screen stays clear while the image behind it blurs - and then the video feed turns crystal clear again, with a red snake hanging in loops over a tree branch. It almost blends in with the red flower bobbing at the end of the branch, but with the wacky camera angle on this console, they've got a clear view of it. Karkat grumbles and starts fiddling with the controls and readouts, but Dave's sure this shit will be easy. "Fuck, man. Let's do this shit," he says, cracking his knuckles. Karkat can handle punching in coordinates; Dave will scroll through their recipe. Teamwork.

"We're making this happen," Karkat mutters under his breath.

---

[танец]

"You're really just terrible at this, you know," the Trickster says, conversationally.

John can barely hear the words as he shoves John's face deeper into the river of oil.

They're doing just fine, until John realizes that they're not.

They're not making any headway at all.

He's not dumb enough to think he and the Trickster are evenly matched. Even when the Trickster pulls itself together, reeling in too-long arms and snapping its jaw back into place until it looks human-ish again, it possesses that edge of horrific grossness that John - doesn't. It bends and contorts itself in ways John just can't, and every time it takes a hit that should have busted its rib cage or knocked its head clean off, the Trickster laughs and clicks its fingers, and then it's whole again. Or worse, it doesn't bother, and keeps fighting with one leg wrenched around the wrong way or a broken bone jutting through the skin. Gamzee cuts in and does something John can't follow that rips the Trickster's arm off, but the thing dips away with a giggle, twirls down through the air like a Cirque du Soleil performer, then dunks its shoulder into torrent of oil that floods LoWaS's rapidly darkening riverbeds. Two new arms sprout from the same shoulder, oil flecking its cheeks like freckles, and the Trickster lunges again.

Each time, it molds itself back into John's image faster and faster. It doesn't seem to matter that Gamzee's got the weird limb displacement and chaotic agility and strength, too. The Trickster camped out on LoWaS for a reason - with all the oil raining down from the sky, it's in its element. Its home turf, complete with a never-ending supply of gross, sludgy oil to replenish itself with.

Thunder cracks through the air right as lightning shoots down, missing John's swirl of half-formed limbs by bare inches. Forget the hurricane-force winds that buffet John like he's a piece of trash - the electrical charge building up between the sparking trees on the ground and the roiling thunderclouds pulses constantly, and jolts John solid if he's not careful. Lightning spiders across the underside of the clouds and lights up LoWaS with eerie, flickering blue.

Typhoeus is not helping. No lightning has struck John full on - yet - which is probably Gamzee's doing, but Gamzee doesn't control it, either. He just makes it go haywire in chaotic, dangerous ways.

A sheet of black, oily rain slaps through the air almost horizontally, and a heavy glob smacks John across the eyes. It glues them shut for a split second, just long enough for him to be disoriented when he finishes turning into air - just long enough for him to lose track of the Trickster in the storm. For the hundredth time.

A heavy claw jerks John down by his abruptly corporeal elbow, and he drops like a stone, the oil Gamzee's claws have extra joints sometimes, but they're not dripping with oil - this should be Gamzee, but John barely trusts his eyes right now, and floating around blinded in this storm is a one-way ticket to smashing against a cliff face. The Trickster howls in frustration overhead right as a cold claw helps clear away the last sticky gunk blinding him. "Augh! Go away! You're just intruding! You think anyone even wants you barging in and sticking your creepiness into everything?!" the Trickster shrieks in their wake, its swirling cotton candy eyes the only bright point against the dark sky.

Then lightning strikes the Trickster square in the back of the neck. John catches a glimpse of a skeleton that doesn't make sense as the Trickster insta-fries. The oil burns off in a rush, and the Trickster reeks of cooked-yet-rotted meat as it shudders itself back to normal. Loops of oil rise up from the gulch and feed into its sides. "Awww. A loser's first tantrum!" the Trickster says, with a rictus grin just for Gamzee while it still has more teeth than it does face. "Oh wait. You flip your lid all the time! One day you're gonna hurt someone like that~!"

It claps its hands together, and bursts apart in a spray of black oil that swirls away with the rest of the rain.

"Motherfucker spits some nasty shit," Gamzee says. He stands on a sharp spire of rock approximately two feet to the left of where John thought he sensed Gamzee's lungs, which is about normal as far as these things go. His hoodie glitches and billows in the opposite direction of the wind screaming between the thin rocks clustered here.

The wind behind John veers sharply, and he swings his hammer around without looking first, with so much force that the rest of his body flails around after it when the momentum catches up with him. He catches a glimpse of the Trickster sticking out its tongue before his hammer collides with the nearest pillar of rock and snaps the top off in a single hit. One of Typheus's wild gales spins the chunk of rock away immediately and smashes it against the nearest cliffside, with no rhyme or reason to it - the only thing really affected is a single pale tree, whose branches bounce back undamaged by the impact. "Yeah, he does that," John replies, spinning his hammerkind with one hand. He rolls the shoulder of the other, trying to figure out how much more his joints can take. If he lets himself think about it too much, he feels kinda cruddy - so he's focused on fighting! If the Trickster would stop messing around…

Without warning, the Trickster slings an arm around Gamzee's shoulders, busting a gut in a grossly literal way with uncontrollable laughter. "Nope! Not me!" he says. "Watch this!" And he snaps his fingers -

John chokes, and doubles over as oil bubbles up in his throat. Tastes like blood - like - it spills over through his fingers when he tries to cover his mouth with a hand, and he coughs up two more mouthfuls in mounting panic as his lungs struggle for air. "Yuck!" The Trickster chatters over the rising wind; he kicks his legs up into a handstand when Gamzee lashes out sideway, then uses Gamzee's horns to flip him toward a sharp spike of rock. "Pretty gross, amiright?"

Gamzee's horns glitch out of the Trickster's hands, and his arms reach back at an impossible angle to seize the Trickster by the head to fling him forward. For a good ten seconds, the Trickster and Gamzee grapple and try to throw each other against the rock in a rolling chain of flips, and John nearly goes cross eyed watching it. He kicks off the decapitated pillar of rock and bounds toward them - Gamzee ducks out of the way at the last second, so John's next swing catches the Trickster square in the chest. He splats against the rock like a cartoon character, pink and yellow and flat all over; it's too exaggerated. John doesn't need Gamzee plucking at his hood to back off fast and put some distance between them.
Sure enough, the Trickster pops back into 3D after a split second, and bubblegum pink spikes of crystal shoot out of the splatter mark left behind on the rock, long enough to impale anyone nearby. The Trickster ignores impalement like it does pretty much everything else, humming -

Lightning strikes him again.

John gives Gamzee a look. Gamzee shrugs.

The Trickster hangs in the air for a second, stunned and crispy, before exploding back into color and oil. "Ow! That fucking hurt!" he snaps with venom, uselessly stamping a foot in the air. Then he grins again, leftover sparks of lightning shivering down his arms and legs as they start to distort. "I have to admit! It was smart of that idiot to bring a monster to a monster fight!"

Gamzee's face - what John can make out of it - looks totally unaffected. The tendrils sewn into his god tier hoodie start to twist and twine over his shoulders.

John's the one who loses his temper. "Stop calling him that! No one is a monster here but you!"

It explodes out of him, and the Trickster switches his smiling stare to John with sudden, intense focus. "Say that again," he says, sounding almost breathless. "I dare you -"

His chest feels like it's about to explode. John tightens his grip on his specibus, and starts to say, "You're -"

A cold hand wraps around John's ankle, and yanks - but it's wrong, the wrong kind of cold (not enough to be Gamzee) and when John looks down between his feet, a pallid white mask of a face stares back at him with skin-covered eye sockets.

The scream rips out of him and he raises a foot to smash down against his handler's face before he finishes processing the sight. They're at least thirty feet above the actual ground - John stops himself at the last second, because if he kicks - he's already dead -

The Trickster dropkicks Gamzee in the face with both feet. "- too slow!" he cheers, throwing his arms high as he and Gamzee sail away through the air.

John gasps in a breath a second too late, and the panic crawling through his body in cold waves finally registers as panic when he starts trying to jiggle his leg frantically to shake his dad - is it? - off without knocking away his grip on the rock. His handler - he's dead he's so dead it's not - clings with a corpse's determination, the tattered sleeve of his suit jacket swaying as his hand follows the kicks of John's leg. John can't take his eyes away; he just latches onto smaller and smaller details as panic settles into his chest - he'd roll up his sleeves before he'd walk around with them messed up and covered in blood like that -

"You're never gonna win. Have you guessed why, yet?" the Trickster asks, without even a giggle to restart the conversation. Which is pretty rude, if you ask John - but no one's asking - his brain won't focus on anything but his dumb stupid asshole handler's sleeves - his dad -

He can't keep it straight in his head. Too much stimuli: the wind, screaming muffled words at him; thunder, crashing over head as someone, somewhere, plays sonorous notes through the massive pipes - and John's ninety percent sure that's Toccata and Fugue in D Minor, until it turns and Typhus starts playing something else dumb and dramatic and straight out of some old movie; the Trickster, laughing gleefully as he punches John's face to the side. The hit jars him loose from Samuel's grip and snaps through John's frozen panic long enough for him to spin around and raise his hammer to block the Trickster's next swing. "You're wrong," John forces out between gasps, as he unspools himself to avoid getting caught in another beatdown loop. Lightning crackles and crazes out of the sky to slam into a tree, and the sparking light as electricity arcs from one tree to the next casts weird shadows through the rock spires. "We can -"

John's back rams into someone's chest - the Trickster makes him solid with a hum and a snap, and then, when John flies off in another direction, oil pelting his face as he tries to put distance between them again, the Trickster floats after him almost lazily, leaning one cheek on his hand as he follows John up and over the rock forest. "Nope!" he says, before John can try to finish his sentence. "Because no matter how many times you swing your silly hammer -"

Gamzee plummets out of the sky and smashes a juggling club down on the top of the Trickster's head. It pops like a bubble of gum, spraying Gamzee's face with pink, sticky gunk, and then the Trickster hops over Gamzee leapfrog style, his head reforming in a matter of seconds. "- or cry and have someone else come save you -" the Trickster continues, yellow tentacles growing and crawling all over his shirt as he stuffs his lolling, horribly long tongue back into distended jaws. Behind him, Gamzee nearly - or maybe does - tear his own face off with a snarl to claw the bubblegum off, but John can't go back to help, because the Trickster's still all over him like a dirty shirt. John streaks toward the clouds, but the constant web of lightning flashing through and along the underside of the clouds means he can't use it to lose the Trickster - heck, he can't even get near it before all the hair on his body stands on end in a silent, staticky warning. It's like a ceiling of lightning and storm clouds and vicious winds traps them here.

"- I'm. Just. Better," the Trickster finishes, sugary as artificial sweetener as he smashes his hammer down three more times. John dodges and darts around all of them, and lashes out with a swing of his own.

He's hit the Trickster so many times now. But it doesn't make a dent. Nothing permanently fazes the guy. The Trickster rolls his eyes as well as his head on his shoulders as John's hammer hits his shoulder, his grin turning and turning like a horrible pinwheel. John throws all his strength into the offensive - dodging never gets him anywhere - and drives the Trickster around so they fly over the river of oil. The Trickster barks out a laugh and then turns it around on John; they trade back and forth, driving each other on further over the landscape. But while John gives it his all, his muscles and throat aching as the strife drags on, the Trickster looks completely unaffected. John can't keep tabs on whatever his dad is now, since he isn't breathing. It's like he's a ghost.

Or just dead. Super, super dead.

Dead dads don't get better.

John miiight be doing…less than okay.
The wind rises with a sound like a foghorn that booms across LoWaS, accompanied by a crack of lightning so strong it sets half of LoWaS below alight; it rocks John down to his toes, and a flicker of a wince creases the Trickster’s nose for a split second - John almost thinks he imagined it. Flying around in weather like this may be a terrible plan. Maybe. Possibly. The Trickster contorts his body into a too-literal knot so John’s next attack misses, then lashes out like a jack-in-the-box to tackle John by the waist. They sail toward the ground without slowing - John bursts into air at the last second before the Trickster crashes through the wall of an empty salamander house.

John coasts for a second to catch his breath. When he glances around, he has to squint to see through the coursing oily rain. Oil runs in thick rivulets over an untended mushroom farm, coating the pale blue fungi in black, but apart from that - no sign of his dad, or Gamzee. Worse, John sees a weirdly familiar outcropping of blue shale: it reminds him of the area around Typhetus's lair, which means they’re worryingly close. A ton of large pipes crisscross the rugged terrain around them for miles in all directions, with thinner pipes splitting off at intervals, and Typhetus's fraymotif feels like a constant, palpable sensation ringing through the air.

The Trickster brushes rubble off his sleeves with a hand, then bounces out of the demolished house. He flies toward John in whimsical circles, and John boosts himself higher in the air. A second passes where his arms feel too heavy and exhausted to lift his specibus, which is…bad. Probably really bad. He can't afford to lose his momentum now. Especially since he still has that minor problem where he doesn't know how to beat this guy. Like, at all.

He never has.

One of the Trickster's legs jerks back hard and he yelps, as Gamzee's arms appear a solid two seconds before the rest of Gamzee catches up, and proceed to whip him around hard enough to dislocate his hip. The Trickster lashes out without fixing his hip first, leg flopping at a horrible angle as he forms a ribbon of oil into a sharp cord and sends it slicing right in time to catch Gamzee in the side. John's eyes throb and he mashes his hand over them fast as Gamzee temporarily turns into a purple, fractalling thing before snapping back to comprehensibility. "Nah. This ain't a fight you're set to win, unfunny fucker," Gamzee says, low and mocking, as he slams the Trickster down into the blue dirt.

He convulses with laughter. "Winning? Who needs to win?" Tipping his head to the side, the Trickster grins slyly at Gamzee. "You're probably more chaotic than me, sure! But I don't need to beat you at anything."

Then the Trickster raises his arm and smashes his own elbow against the ground, right in a puddle of oil. Something dead and human-shaped and awful - oh, right, Dad - bursts out of the pool with a lurch, all the black-filled veins pulsing across his face as he grabs Gamzee. John rushes down to them, while the Trickster kicks up off his back in one motion, elbowing Gamzee out of the way while he struggles to shove John's handler away.

…Because John asked him not to hurt him. Crap crap crap! "Gam-" John starts to shout over the shrieking wind, when the Trickster bounces right into him, punching John in the gut. It knocks all the wind out of him, and the sky and earth turn dizzily around John for a stomach-turning minute as he and the Trickster tumble through the air at top speed. "Oof!" John focuses on bringing the handle of his hammerkind up and slamming it awkwardly into the Trickster's stomach to return the favor instead of trying to stop their wild flight, then raises his hand and slams the Trickster's chin with the heel of his palm so that his head snaps back.

A vine of oil wraps around John's hand and wrenches it around so hard and fast tears spring into John's eyes, and his specibus spins out of his grip. Normally the wind smacks his hammer right back into his palm when John asks, but one of Typheus's gales rips it away in one direction while the Trickster furiously pummels them in another. They're too close to Typheus's palace - John can feel each resonant note of the denizen's storm song like something solid slapping him in the chest. John loses sight of his hammer between one pulse and the next, as they turn butt over heels one last time before plunging into the wide, spreading river.

Compared to the harsh song and thunder pealing through the air, the oil deadens all sound; it's too quiet and muffling, and closes over their heads so that the sky vanishes in an enveloping wave of inky black. Nothing immediately strikes his back or legs as they dive, which means the river's deeper than it looked from above - the flat, monochrome black surface fooled him. John drags his knee up at a forced, sluggish pace through the heavy, sticky liquid, to knee the Trickster off him. The oil coats him all over, cold and pouring in right in his ears and along his scalp and under his shirt and sinking slick into his shoes, and John thrashes in a jolt of panic when his knee does nothing. He shoves with his hands instead; this time he hits something solid, and pushes the Trickster off him with a grunt. Swimming blind, John claws his way to the surface of the river. It takes so much more effort to swim through this crud than through water, and when he breaks the surface and gasps in air through his mouth, treading the oil only seems to cause him to sink back down. John casts out a hand so that his breeze can spiral down and yank him out of the oil like a cork out of a bottle -

The Trickster slams back down. Foot, meet face. John gags on oil as the Trickster cartwheels off his face, but his nose streams blood in earnest, along with all the oil that shot up his nose when they went under. "I just need to kill you! ♥" the Trickster coos, and John catches one last glimpse of a delighted, toothy grin before the Trickster plants both hands on his shoulders and shoves him back under. John punches back immediately and tries to squirm out from under the Trickster's weight - but something bursts in the back of his throat, and suddenly he has a mouthful of oil he needs to spit out, even though his mouth's clamped shut.

If he drowns in oil and dies, Typhues will literally never let him live it down. He can't turn into air when he's surrounded by suffocating oil, and the Trickster laughs and starts talking loud enough for John to hear it through the muffling liquid on purpose when John tries to punch him off again. It's more of his usual garbage, so John tries to tune him out. Something whips around John's wrist and pushes it further down. He thrashes one last time, blowing the last of the oil out of his mouth and squeezing his eyes shut as he lets his body go limp.

Then he kicks his leg up and to the side, and dissolves himself into the wind leg-first when his toe hits fresh air. The Trickster faceplants into the river without John to kneel on. "Hey!" he yells, enraged, glowering up at John's unspooled wind with livid eyes.

John makes his head solid enough to stick his tongue out, then zooms away from the river as fast as the rampaging storm lets him. The tide of the air currents blows hard at a ninety-degree angle to where John wants to go - then another gale almost shunts him back the way he came. He shades his face with a hand to stop the rain from hitting him right in the eyes and scans the ground frantically for some sign of Gamzhee or his dad. His handler. His dadler.

Before he spies either of them, though, a sound like a freight train ploughing into a water dam starts up behind John. Glancing back, he sees a tidal wave of oil rising out of the river, with the Trickster a half-submerged pink-and-blue figure in the very center of it. The wall of water keeps stretching up, draining the river, until it completely shadows the village, and when the Trickster points a finger at John, the whole wall falls forward.

That's just dumb. That's completely unfair! John puts on another burst of speed to fly out from under the tidal wave's reach -

And hits Gamzee. "Head's up, motherfuck," Gamzee says, his voice almost mild, as he chucks John's dad at the Trickster like a basketball.

The zomdad hits the Trickster dead on, knocking him back into the oil, and the Trickster shrieks as half the wall loses its momentum and slumps down to drown half the village in oil slicks. "Oh, for - I told you to keep him busy, you useless dummy!" He flings John's dad down, and the thing makes no effort to flail its arms or grab onto anything before it hits the ground.

Something skips hard in John's chest, and he makes an aborted move to race forward. Gamzee snags him by the back of the shirt and John tries to shove him away. "Dad? Dad, no -"

His dad sits up, his leg bent at a crooked angle as a tendril of oil hauls him back upright. Like a puppet on a string. He dangles there for a second before the oil falls away, but even then, when he looks up at John with unseeing eyes, there's nothing actually looking at John.

He feels sick again. He tastes oil on the back of his teeth, and now bile in his throat, too. Gamzee moves his claw from John's shirt to his shoulder, a steady weight, and John grasps it with his hand while he tries to swallow down a heave of nausea. "Alright?" Gamzee asks.

John can barely force words out; something in his chest feels like a violin string tightened too far, on the verge of snapping against his face. Except that's a simile so corny that only Rose would think it, so maybe not. "I'm fine, I'm - sorry," he says, tearing his eyes away from his handler. He shouldn't care, but it's so hard to turn it off when they're here - he needs to go back to ignoring whatever the Trickster did to his dad, because caring is -

A slow clap cuts through the air. The Trickster has to slap his own hands together ridiculously hard to make it audible over the storm, but he does it with relish, a lopsided grin spreading across his face so widely that it deforms his other features. "Wow! That's rich! No really, that's too funny!" he says, jeering, and mimes wiping away a tear from his oil-streaked face. John tightens his grip on Gamzee, as something in his stomach drops. "You're actually upset that he's dead! After everything he did to you!"

Caring was…a mistake.

The Trickster goes on, folding one leg over the other as he lounges in the air, his tidal wave forgotten with a dismissive flick of his hand. John meets his piercingly blue eyes and shudders. He looks like he's been handed a bowl of straight brown sugar and a soup spoon to shovel it down with, and John can't seem to tear his gaze away. "And here I thought you would appreciate something good, for once in your life! But no. RIP - here lays John Egbert's taste." The Trickster clicks his tongue scornfully, and pretends to hang himself, one hand jerking on an imaginary noose. "It was bad taste to begin with, but now it's dead and rotting, just like the rest of him!" He spins in a circle, arms flung wide to indicate all of LoWaS.

"I'm startin' to get the feeling that a motherfucker might be a fuckton quieter if he didn't have mouth flaps to make all kinds of heresy noises with. Or if he didn't have a thinkpan all up and twixt his shoulders," Gamzee says, idly, which is when John realizes Gamzee's mild voice earlier didn't mean he'd calmed down at all. Gamzee starts to slide in front of John, his outline all messy and glitching at the edges, and his claws wind up somewhere that's not in John's grip.

The Trickster claps his hands together one last time and throws his head back, laughing. "Hahahaha! Oh, Gamzee. We should be besties. You and me really do think alike!"

Then the Trickster's head snaps back down. He grins at John as he snaps his fingers, and Dad's head explodes.

The next few seconds are a quiet, peaceful blank.

John can't stop screaming as he tackles the Trickster and rams him into the nearest open pipe. Typhus's breath rattles around them, but John's ragged, throat-tearing scream echoes louder, and they dive deeper into the pipe with the walls shuddering and the scream reverberating around them. They slam into the first bend in the pipe at full-tilt, leaving a dent in the shape of the Trickster's back, but the Trickster keeps howling with laughter, and John keeps screaming his lungs out, and propels them down deeper into the pipes.

Into the bowels of LoWaS. All pipes lead to -

The wind whips around them, rank and hot, as John drives them down and down and down, following the curves and sudden bends in the pipe with very little awareness. His own shoulder smashes into a corner when they take a turn too fast, but he barely notices it. The Trickster chokes back laughter long enough to say, "After everything he did! You should be thanking me."

And John's -

Gone for a while, again. The rage blissfully whites everything out, until all that's left is numb screaming, and - Typhus's eerie, roaring storm music cuts off super-fast when John and the Trickster shoot out of the pipe and slam into the nearest dark teal pillar. They emerge in some kind of immense, cylindrical room, with dark blue stone paving the whole floor and dull grey pipe openings dotting the walls all the way up to the distant ceiling. The pillar John and the Trickster hit swings and crashes into another beside it with a resonant burst of sound; enormous windchimes hang throughout the whole room, and their arrival sets off a chain reaction that turns the whole place into an echo chamber.

It's not a large enough chamber for all of Typhus, though - the denizen's head slithers out from one of the lowest pipes, teeth bared in a snarl, and he slams against one of the grey metal pipes so the whole room rumbles and judders with his fury.

Ty: FOOLS.

John ignores him, and goes back to trying to punch the Trickster. The wind howls around them in a tuneless roar, and the Trickster contorts his body with laughable ease so John just barely misses him every time. His fist hits the wind chime instead, and the towering pillar of corroded metal cracks and shatters. If it hurts, John can't feel it; the Trickster slides away and makes a stupid face at John, sticking his tongue out. Realizing that his scream broke off - he ran out of air, at some point - John sucks in a breath and reaches up, yanking on one of Typhus's winds in a blind fury.

To his distant surprise (he's too busy screaming to feel much of anything else), the wind comes when he calls, and the hurricane-force gale catches the Trickster and piledrives him against the floor far below in a torrent of wind. The Trickster lays splayed out in another cartoonish splatter of pink bubblegum and oil -

And Typhus lunges at John, his ragged, claw-tipped wings clattering along the floor as his ropy neck shoots straight for John with all his teeth. It's like being bum-rushed by a rocket-propelled freight train, and John snaps out of his rage-y daze just in time to move. Typhus roars past him as John bounces out of the way and crunches down on a mouthful of clamoring wind chimes instead. He crushes them with a snap of powerful jaws and snakes around to glower at John again, his green eyes smoldering with fury. "Hey!" John protests - or tries to. His voice is totally gone. Typhus gouges the ground with silver claws and plunges toward John again. John darts to the side, but Typhus flares out the tattered veil of his pale wings and the leading edge smacks John right in the stomach knocking him into the wall. "Ow! Not trying to fight you!" John yells as he peels himself off the wall, his voice so hoarse and broken he can barely hear himself over the cacophony of Typhus's movements and the shattering chimes. The denizen writhes around, his many coils curling and looping over each other in the cramped room as he lines himself up for another strike.

Ty: Too bad.

"Hoohooohoo! Hoo, boy! You're a real sucker for pain, huh?" the Trickster says, delighted - he's hanging upside down over John's head now, arms folded behind his head as he smiles. John twitches, his chest one huge ache for a split second as another scream surges out of him, and he slaps a hand against the wall. The ferocious storm wind scoops the Trickster up and bashes him against another teal chime in a smear of oil. He bends around it in a way that makes it clear his back broke on impact, and then lolls back upright with an ecstatic grin.
It vanishes when Typhius whips another wing up and smashes the pillar aside. The billowing skin of his wings wraps the Trickster up in coil after coil until an enormous claw presses along the Trickster's whole body.

TY: I didn’t forget about you, abomination.

John kicks off the wall and arcs high over Typhus's head. Now that he's not lost in a blank rage, his chest really does hurt like he's shredded something in his lungs; it hurts to breathe, and as he flies the effort it takes to stay aloft feels similar to how treading oil did earlier. He can float, but only just, and the thunderous, booming echoes in this enclosed space shake him ten times worse than the fraymotif storm outside. His whole body feels like it's about to unspool into the wind in a not-good way, and he's not sure he'll be able to wind himself back together if he lets go now. His focus is totally shot.

…Why did he think dragging the Trickster down here would help? He can't really remember thinking at all, actually. This was a terribad plan and John wants a refund.

The Trickster slithers out of Typhus's grip with a giggle, points a finger pistol at the denizen's face, and pretends to shoot. Typhus seems unaffected, but the Trickster explodes backward out of range before the denizen can rewrap him, and Typhus snarls and snaps forward again. But abruptly the denizen jerks to a halt, and turns to snarl at his own looping body. When John looks down he sees that the part of Typhus's lengthy body coming out of the pipe is just too wide to let the denizen reach in any further without getting stuck. "Whoops!" the Trickster laughs - and then he vanishes and reappears in front of John. John guards his face with both arms as the Trickster punches him, then grunts as he tackles him into the nearest pipe. This one's narrower than the line they followed down into the lair, and Typhus roars with anger, first trying to shove his jaws in and then swiping after them with a ragged wing before the Trickster and John tumble out into the next chamber over.

TY: Oh. Joy.

John hears Typhus muttering through the pipe, and then the faint sound of an enormous snake guy slithering away - but now the Trickster tears at his arms in a frenzy, clawing him up and raking deep lines into his forearms, and John's a little distracted by the effort needed to put some space between them again. They've fallen out in a room that seems half finished - a thin, rickety pair of ropes cross a cavernous, deep blue chamber, like an unfinished rope bridge. The gorge drops steeply below, and a river of oil churns at the distant bottom of the cave. Bright cyan splotches of bioluminescence cover wide swathes of the ceiling, clustered between stalactites, and here and there a few dots of light drift through the air and get caught in air currents that lead them into the pipes. There's no sign of the dark teal, etched walls that make up most of Typhus's palace, and only a few pipes and pipe openings scattered around the room.

With the Trickster bearing them down, the two of them plummet past the bridge and fall toward the river below. Noot happening. John takes advantage of the quieter air here and turns into the breeze, then rushes back up toward the ceiling. He tries to pick out a pipe that looks easy to navigate, but apart from the one they fell through, all of the pipes look like they lead into a dark maze of conduits. Stupid pipelines leaking stupid oil everywhere and messing up stupid LoWaS and John's head and god, if there's an oil and gas industry in the next reality John is going to personally drop kick it into space -

"He hates you," the Trickster says, like he's sharing a deep, dark secret, and John dodges just before the Trickster ploughs him into the pointy end of a stalactite. The Trickster twists around and lands upside down on the ceiling, planting one foot right in the middle of a pile of cyan glowworms. A few sprout wings and zoom away, flash with pale light, and scatter to join the other mature fireflies dancing away down the smaller pipes, but most of the patch just darkens with a squishy sound.
"Yeah, well, I never expected him to like me! He's an asshole!" John replies hotly, rolling his eyes. Then he flips around and makes a beeline for the next pipe over, one of the ones that the fireflies drifted through. Typheus rumbles, his rank voice emanating through the pipelines from some indistinct point. John solidifies his foot fast before it can shake apart his breezes, but none of the branching tubes off this pipe look large enough for Typheus to fit through.

TY: Those are remarkably reasonable expectations.

The Trickster slides in ridiculous fast, his arm too long for a second as he uses it to skid around a corner and stalk after John. His voice cuts through Typheus's, high and mocking. John throws himself down several quick turns, without really hoping to lose him - he just wants to find a way to a new room, at this point. These pipes really are a maze of dull grey and oily streaks. John spies a firefly in the corner of his eye and takes off after it. "Your Breeze? Hates you too. Your ~friends~ are getting sick of propping you up all the time. You're all alone down here, and no one's coming to help you," the Trickster calls after him, with a soft laugh that winds up amplified and menacing as it echoes through the pipes. And it's not like he's wrong - John has no idea where Gamzee is or how they lost him but it's probably -

BE: no! why do you always listen to him and not me!

BE: what am I doing wrong?!

John nearly rams facefirst into a wall at the junction of two pipes. A sudden, horrible thought occurs to him and he spins in a circle, his hand cast out as he tries to find the Breeze. Typheus's stray wind hovers around him, writhing and restless, but the Breeze skitters away from him, the faint, visible blue streaks of its presence fading against the dull metal background.

He can't remember when he last heard it. Crap. Dizzy for a second, John flies forward and finally sees a pipe opening in down a left turn. I'm sorry! he thinks, as loudly as he can, but the Breeze doesn't respond. He hurries toward the exit and glances back over his shoulder, but the Trickster seems to have fallen behind -

Turning back around, John gets exactly two seconds to register the giant glass-green eye looming at the end of the pipe, and yells as he smacks into Typheus's eyeball. On the one hand, this is hilarious, because Typheus flinches back like he did not expect that to actually happen; on the other hand, John tumbles out into a room shaped like an orb, the walls covered in iridescent, gold-lined labradorite and the blue stone of the very top and lower surfaces rough, unpolished blue-and-gold lapis lazuli. One of the widest pipes opens up on one curved wall and Typheus has more than enough space for his whole body to pile up in coils in the deep bowl of the room, while all the fireflies bumble their way up to a wide yellow, glowing dome near the roof.

The Trickster careens out of the pipe after John, and knocks both of them almost into Typheus's waiting mouth. On the one hand, this is hilarious, because Typheus flinches back like he did not expect that to actually happen; on the other hand, John tumbles out into a room shaped like an orb, the walls covered in iridescent, gold-lined labradorite and the blue stone of the very top and lower surfaces rough, unpolished blue-and-gold lapis lazuli. One of the widest pipes opens up on one curved wall and Typheus has more than enough space for his whole body to pile up in coils in the deep bowl of the room, while all the fireflies bumble their way up to a wide yellow, glowing dome near the roof.

The Trickster careens out of the pipe after John, and knocks both of them almost into Typheus's waiting mouth. John scrambles around and kicks off a tooth, with a steadily rising, "AaaaaaaaaAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAH!" escaping him as he aims for the only other pipe opening in the room. His aims off and he winds up running along the pipe for a weird, wobbly second before shooting off again. A cackle echoes through the wide pipe as the Trickster leaps after him - and then Typheus pours into the pipe in their wake to drown everything else out.

John wishes he could kick his own butt for this plan. The worst possible plan. He's got no clue where he's trying to get to or how to beat the Trickster or how to get Typheus to calm the heck down, and now the Breeze is mad at him for probably the last time. He veers along the pipe as it shoots down a steep incline like a slide - the Trickster's right on his tail, though, with Typheus sliding not far behind, and the Trickster starts to say, "You're not -"
They burst out into a forest of vertical metal pipes - there's barely enough room to fly through them, even for someone John's size, and Typhoeus roars in frustration as he slides out the pipe and has to dip lower, twining his heavy coils around the larger pipes in practiced spirals like it's a huge jungle gym. There's a teal platform hanging up above, with a set of pipes just visible from the level John's flying at and a pathway winding between the pipes to reach it from an opening in the distant wall. The underside sports a giant Breath symbol that glows faintly in the twilight of the lair. Typhoeus bellows and a wall of wind slams through the pipes, knocking John and the Trickster for a loop.

A pair of arms catch John under his armpits and pull him away behind one of the heavy pipes. John kicks his feet like an idiot a few times before he thinks to look up, and sees Gamzee sailing along with his legs hooked over an invisible trapeze. "You found us!" John says, relieved.

Gamzee doesn't look at him, or else John just can't tell with Gamzee's hood dangling loose between them. "Sorry. Got all kinds of caught up in the mad rage noises all slamming in my ducts," he says.

Down below, Typhoeus scrapes his claws along the pipes, leaving deep silver gouges in the metal. They swing up and hit the curving edge of the winding green platform in a roll, and John hugs the ground for a second before pushing up to peer at Gamzee's face. His hair and hood keep most of it covered up, which makes John wonder what Gamzee looks like. He seems…upset. Or ashamed? John honestly can't tell. "Are you sure you're okay? It's really windy in here!" John starts to say, stumbling over his words, torn between trying to grab Gamzee's claw - it keeps not being where John reaches, and at one point pops up on John's far side, which means Gamzee's not holding himself together all that well - and scanning for the Trickster's next move. Typhoeus at least is easy to keep track of…

Then John realizes his second comment didn't help at all, and he smacks his hands against his cheeks a little harder than necessary. He feels woozy, now that they're on solid ground, and his lips are chapped. "What am I saying? God, let's get it together, John…"

"I've got my shit back on motherfuckin' lock. Breathe, bro," Gamzee says, steadying John with a hand.

Except - wait - that's John's job; John tries to pat Gamzee between the horns, because god knows they're both hells of messed up right now, but his lungs can't seem to remember how breathing works, and his faltering hand hits Gamzee's back instead. "I can't -" John says, curling up over his knees as air fails to make it to his lungs. "- that's not - normal -"

Gamzee spins around with a growl, and the Trickster's quiet, barely audible giggle turns into a shriek of laughter as Gamzee pushes John's head down and then launches himself at something out of sight. John keeps his head between his knees, gasping for air, and the bands around his chest loosen with sudden relief. He staggers to his feet, and rounds on the two of them just in time to see Gamzee tear a hole through the Trickster's stomach. The Trickster spits candy-pink blood at Gamzee's face, and the hole in his side bares oil-streaked teeth for a split second before the mouth closes and his candy-coated god tier shirt grows back over the gap.

They're so busy fighting each other that John's the only one who seems to notice Typhoeus's slender wing unfurling behind them. "Gamzee!" John shouts, and Gamzee jerks his gaze away from the Trickster just in time to get batted to the side with a flick of Typhoeus's humongous claw.

TY: You don't get to walk where you wish, Bard. This is none of your concern. I will have no more Chaos here.

"Haha, have fun with that!" the Trickster says, breezily, and then he turns back on John with a bloodthirsty grin. He teleports in front of John and John bounces away, zapping from one pipe to the next with the Trickster zooming in spirals after him, but then Typhoon roars and upsets the air again. "Boop!" the Trickster sings, reappearing and tapping John's nose with a stinging claw. "Looks like you ruined everything again!"

"Ugh!" John swings his arm at the Trickster - that tends to work a heck of a lot better if you have a hammer in hand, or something equivalent - and then swings himself around a thinner pole, his hands burning with friction as he aims for Gamzee. The troll's already kicked off the pipe that Typhoon flicked him at, and looks around before snapping his eyes to John's.

The Trickster hip checks John into a pipe. "And now all your Breeze is gone. Too bad!" he sighs, with nauseating amounts of fake-sympathy whine in his voice. He does a tiny dance and a spin with a flourish of his arms.

John grits his teeth and drops into free fall. Instead of hitting him, the Trickster's next kick buckles the pipe, and then John's busy falling toward a loop of Typhoon. Off to the side he sees Gamzee tear right through one of Typhoon's shredded wings and collide with a pipe, which he proceeds to wrench in two and swings at Typhoon like a baseball bat. With a ripple that runs the entire length of his body, Typhoon sets off another wave of sound as he pulls back and then lunges at Gamzee, pinning him against the far wall and obscuring the troll from view in a cloud of dust.

TY: This much chaos. Maddening.

TY: I won't hesitate, glitch -

No. John doesn't break his free fall - he just teleports in a burst of air and drops right in front of Typhoon's face as the denizen crushes Gamzee against the wall. "Stop that! Leave him alone!" he yells, waving his hands frantically over his head. When Typhoon just roars, lashing his body furiously, John groans, braces himself, and then shoots forward to kick Typhoon in the middle of his forehead, with all the storm wind behind him. Typhoon blinks hard - like he's afraid John's gonna ram him in the eye again, which is a totally unreasonable fear - and twitches back for half a second, which is long enough for John to flip around and blow his wing away from Gamzee with another gust.

But John doesn't get a chance - the Trickster catches up for the millionth time, and hits John like a meteor. All the air sucks out of John's lungs in a rush, which leaves him fumbling while his stomach drops in dismay, and the Trickster loops his breath around his disjointed fingers for a second before kicking John toward the floor. "So! How many deaths do you think before it turns just?" he asks, following John down as Typhoon rallies overhead. John stops himself before he hits the ground by floating and lands hard on one knee with the other leg splayed out. With his air in short supply, he concentrates on gulping down what he can and rolls to the side the old-fashioned way when the Trickster tries to stomp on him. "Cowardly doesn't count as just, which just makes my job even funnier!" the Trickster continues, with a cocky grin. "Of course, you couldn’t die heroic if you tried. Heeheehe-"

A large wing swats the Trickster against the ground. "Uh, ow!" the Trickster yells pointedly, squirming out from under the wing on his hands and knees, his hair flopped over his face.

TY: Foul thing. Did I say you were welcome here, at any point in time?

TY: All of you would do well to get out of my house.

John bolts while the Trickster's distracted by Typhoon's ensuing rant about people wandering around his lair when he's trying to sleep and play music and live his life (Typhoon might be more than a little weird) and bounces to Gamzee again. This time, he pushes the wing away with a poof of air, then grabs Gamzee and zaps them halfway across the chamber, before the Trickster or Typhoe can get any ideas. Gamzee lets out a rattling snarl right in John's ear when they turn solid again, sharp claws raking at John's back, and John hastily pats his hand against Gamzee's face before the livid pulse of red starts burning in his eyes. "Just me!" he says, trying to project reassurance. Gamzee's face is about 90% teeth, but he doesn't chomp down on John's hand, so that's a win. Once Gamzee loses a few rows of teeth and has just two eyes again, John adds, "Okay, we should probably not have come down here."

"Might not've been the best of all plans," Gamzee agrees, the rattling echo in his voice dwindling to something manageable. He snorts, and a trickle of purple blood shoots back up into his sort-of broken nose. "You feel?"

"Yeah, I feel." John sighs, and hovers for a second behind a pipe. From here, they're level with the hanging platform - a smaller array of pipes rise up from something covered in a deep blue cloth, and merge with the larger pipes as they climb up through the ceiling. "Let's just fight around Typhoe, okay? I get the idea that killing denizens doesn't actually help anything." Considering the fact that Typhoe thought the trolls murderizing their denizens without bothering with choice stuff was heathen-ish, it's funny - read: not funny - that he likes to eat people and provoke them into fights all the dang time.

Gamzee mumbles something with the syllables all out of order, and then lifts his head. His face looks tired, but it's definitely a face, again. "Good call. But that candy fucker's burning hard," he says. "And his material's getting motherfuckin' repetitive."

"Is it really? Awww," the Trickster complains, from directly behind them. Gamzee's loose arm tightens around John's back and the two of them jolt to the side, while the Trickster brings a hammer down through the air where they used to be. "I hate to be a disappointment, like certain people we know! Maybe it's a 'like father like son' kind of thing.-"

- Another blip, and -

- John comes out of it with an aborted scream, just as he and the Trickster skid across the platform. John gets his feet under him and gets upright first, panting, while the Trickster lays still and blinks for a second, oil streaming from his nose. "That's enough," John says; his voice cracks halfway through, and for a second, he teeters on the edge of some kind of numbing fury -

- rage. Call it what it is. "Motherfuck! Sorry!" Gamzee calls, from somewhere so deep in one of the pipes John can barely pick up the sound on the wind. Getting distance between them, because right. Crap. John just exploded like a can of rapid rage weasels right next to the Rage-y guy, and neither of them have Karkat to shoosh them down if they transform into some kind of self-perpetuating rage tornado. Typhoe jams his wing claw-first into the pipe Gamzee retreated into, his teeth crashing against the wall as he scrabbles to try to reach him, but it's too small an opening for him to duck in headfirst.

The Trickster coughs, and spits viscous pink, sugary blood onto John's face. It reeks of gasoline and stings like acid. "Oooh, so intimidating," he says, his voice low and spiteful as he stomps back onto his feet. "God, no wonder everyone hates you! You're so useless!"

"No, I'm not!" John can feel the wind shrieking around him in a tight funnel, and when he raises a hand the storm gale picks the Trickster up and smacks him back down against the floor, shaking the You're the one who doesn't do anything but hurt people! No one likes you! You're dangerous and horrible!"

The Trickster hugs his splitting sides as he laughs, bouncing off the floor like a rubber ball with resounding cracks as John tries smashing him again. "Hahaha! Nice try!"

But -

- something is -

"And I'm not letting you hurt my friends! Ever! Again!" John says, lifting both hands and smashing the Trickster down with two storm winds. He can barely see through the tears stinging his eyes.

- and the next time the Trickster hits the ground, a weird gurgling sound burbles out of his mouth. He doesn't bounce, and when John blinks and his tears leave tracks through the sugar and dried oil on his face, he sees the Trickster staring back at him, his mouth weirdly…flat. Black oil bubbles up through the pink of his shirt, and the Trickster pokes one of the sharp, curved rib bones that just poked through his chest with a curious finger. "Haa! Haaa..." he says, wetly, through a mouth of bubbling oil that spills over his chin and starts to dye the front of his hoodie. "…….Well? That's… haa...it? That's all you've got?"

He looks up at John, expectant, his mouth hanging open a little so he can breathe but not smile, and John freezes.

The silence rings in John's ears. Too loud. It's too loudly quiet, and when John slowly lowers his arms, trembling with the sudden, unpleasant shock roiling in his stomach, he turns his head a fraction of an inch to see Typheus hovering behind him. The denizen's snarl is gone, and without it, with his mouth shut over his teeth and his eyes grave, he looks terrifyingly daunting. Even though John's just gone and stolen another wind from him completely by mistake, Typheus doesn't move - his wings rustle a little, almost totally silent in the too-quiet chamber, but he doesn't so much as blink.

TY: This is your challenge. Your choice.

John feels like all the air's gone out of him again. All he can hear is his own harsh, shuddery breaths, and the sound of the Trickster's smashed bones creaking as he levers himself up onto his elbows, staring at John with hostile, expectant eyes. Like he's waiting for John to make a move, when he should be - should be bouncing back onto his feet, or putting his ribcage back together like a jigsaw puzzle, or - something.

Pinned between two stares, feeling hollow where his stomach should be, John drops his hands to his sides, and does what he probably should have done ages ago.

EB: Breeze?

EB: I think I've been really, really dumb.

No response. Typheus's winds twine around John's heels, restive and agitated and impatient as ever, and John shudders and waves them away, reaching down to flap his hands at them until they swirl away over the edges of the platform. Then he tries again, painfully aware of Typhues staring foreboding daggers between his shoulder blades. If the denizen wanted to swat him from behind, he would have done it already. Somehow, John's on the precipice of something that feels awfully significant, and oh crap, he does not want to screw up now. Not this time.

EB: Breeze…?
EB: do you know how I heal my mind?

Because that's the choice Typhues told him to figure out. His challenge. And John wouldn't have a denizen breathing down his neck, and the Trickster laying with his chest burst open like a split pomegranate, oozing black sludge all over the platform like a crime scene, if he weren't about to faceplant right in the middle of it.

Just when he thinks he's really done it, this time, and starts to close his eyes -

BE: why do you think I know?

The Breeze ruffles John's long hood. It's too long, yeah, but John's too worn and strung thin to fix it now. A few visible streams of the Breeze circle around him, standoffish and skimming only over his clothes, rather than his bare hands or face.

John swallows hard around everything that feels skinned raw in his chest, and closes his eyes all the way so he can concentrate.

EB: because I keep forgetting to listen to you!

EB: but I think that's a symptom, not the root of the problem.

BE: so?

The Trickster sucks in a clattering, wet breath, and starts laughing to himself. John cracks one eye open to peek, but all the Trickster does is lean further back on his elbows until he can hit the back of his head against the floor.

EB: so I stop hearing you when I need you the most.

EB: I stop hearing you when I hurt the most.

EB: but I'm still asking the wrong question, right?

BE: then what question do you want to ask?

The Breeze doesn't give John an inch. Not even a teeny tiny hint. It swirls and eddies around in front of him, completely distinct from the faint remnants of Typhues's breath that permeates every bit of the air in the palace (no wonder Typhues could follow them so easily), but it doesn't curl in close the way John misses it doing. He's always had the Breeze in and around him, and the absence aches, maybe even more than the shredded wreck he made screaming with Rage earlier.

Which is…fair. Probably as fair as anything ever is, in this dumb game that is John's life. John closes his hands, pressing them subconsciously against his stomach, and shuts his eyes all the way again.

EB: I can't push a magic button and fix myself. I can't kill someone and think it'll solve all my problems.

EB: so, Breeze…please. how do I start healing?

BE: well.

BE: as it so happens…I do have an answer for that.

A faint touch of wind wisps over John's hands, and then swirls away. John opens his eyes.
The Breeze swooshes down and under the cloth, and spins it away from the object at the edge of the platform. For a second, John sees a mini version of himself pouting between the swirls of the cloth, before it falls away over the edge and the Breeze hovers over a bright blue pipe organ that hooks right into all the pipes in the palace.

BE: I think that you should play your song.

Typheus doesn't budge; he doesn't even say a word when John glances between him and the pipe organ. Gamzee's here now, though - he sits cross-legged with one foot swinging over the edge of the platform, off to one side. He pulls his shadowing hoodie back from his face when John pauses and looks at him, and meets John's eyes with a tired smile. All his arms and legs are in place - it's mostly just his hair that is in dire need of a brush.

John takes two steps toward the pipe organ, his shoes dragging on the floor. The Trickster starts talking - his voice sounds as awful as John's, now, deep and sharp with hate, and John doesn't look at him. "That…haahaaa…that won't solve anything. You're horrible. You're beyond fixing."

Another step, and John's right in front of the array of manuals. There's no sheet music in the stand - but to be fair, John's never played a pipe organ in his life, hasn't played a piano since the last one, and even if he can hear a faint, familiar set of simple notes in his head, that doesn't mean he remembers how to play them. "I - haaaaa - should know. I know better than anyone, I hate you more than anyone," the Trickster says, vehemently.

John looks back over his shoulder, and sees the Trickster has rolled onto his side, oil streaking down from the corners of his mouth and eyes. "Yeah, I know," John says at last, feeling something tighten in his chest. "I need to work on hating myself less." He uncurls his hands, and sets them on the keys. "Goodbye."

Once he starts, the notes come easy. His hands remember how to play, even if John doesn't. It's only those quiet, simple notes at first, and then the song builds on itself. The Breeze pours gently into the pipes, and John can follow it as the wind flows through all the pipes in slow, swelling streams, cleaning out the last of the oil and drawing storm winds along into its wake as the music reaches the uppermost pipes and fills the sky above. John's shoulders hunch and start to shudder, and he bends his head - he doesn't have any music to follow, so it doesn't matter that he can't see through the tears. A few drops land on the keys, but most of it just soaks his face. It's raining somewhere else, he thinks, and hiccups out a laugh through the heavy weight in his throat. He leans a little too hard on the keys as the song goes on, but the sound comes through clear - pipe organs work different than pianos, and he's never been more grateful.

It drifts to an end. When John lifts his hands and steps away, the Trickster has grown into a tree. One of the cyan ones from outside, veined and splotched with discolored black streaks, with stunted branches that reach up toward the ceiling like pipes, or broken ribs. Most of the chamber looks much the same - vast, glowing trees pushed up through the floor below while John played, and now wrap around the pipes like pale vines; electric blue sparks crackle and pop between the branches of one tree and the next, filling the whole room with humming charge and light. Typheus lays artfully draped between the trees, unfazed by the electrical current, his sea glass eyes reflecting the light as he regards John. Not from above, but on level with John's eyes, though that takes some doing.

TY: Not the method I would have chosen. Growing through that thing has risks of its own.

TY: It was corrupted with too many foreign elements and thoughts. You'll need to sift through them, at some point, or the job's only half done.

John shuffles back from the pipe organ, and tucks his hands into his pockets. Typheus isn't looming anymore; it feels weird, but also...John doesn't feel threatened anymore. Not even a little. Not even by the teeth. "I'd rather grow through it than pretend it never happened," he says. Then he raises his eyebrows. "Or eat my problems away."

Typhes huffs. John scrunches up his nose, because his denizen's breath is still gross morning breath.

TY: Impudent Heir.

TY: I never said it had to be the Choice I would have made.

TY: The Grist Hoard should be open to you, now.

And just like that, Typhes dips down and under a large tree branch, and begins to wind his way toward the ceiling. Far overhead, a part of the ceiling splits in two, and Typhes slips between the pipes to ascend from the depths of the lair.

John blinks, and then flies after him. The Breeze buoys him up first, but a rush of temperamental, wild storm winds boost him along as well, and John hastily reins them in before he shoots past Typhes. He's gonna need to work on that. "Wait, really? Does that count as the Choice...thing?" he says, giving Typhes a weird look as he weaves his way toward the opening. They pass through the hole in the ceiling of the organ chamber, and into a grand hall with a wide, short pipe in the ceiling that opens onto the courtyard above. Typhes pauses for a moment and squints, sliding around the room instead of immediately slithering out of the lair.

TY: You made it. You'll live with these consequences for the rest of your life.

TY: Try to make it a good one.

TY: The Breeze is yours. Now, I have business to attend to. Go down and empty the hoard.

...That seems weird. It's weird, right? "Wait - where are you going? What are you looking for?" John asks. Something prods at the back of his mind - something that feels like...suspicion. Yeah, definitely a lot of suspicion, here. "Business?"

Typhes noses at a round door of chrysocolla, and snorts hard enough that John's hair flutters and the Breeze smooths it back down with a possessive huff.

TY: Once, I would have said - to rejoin Skaia.

TY: Now? We have been informed on multiple occasions that perhaps we require...legal representation.

It hits John like a hammer. "...No. No way," he says, his eyes widening.

TY: All your planet's inhabitants are en route to that gate, correct?

He answers on auto-pilot, still shocked, and only realizes his mistake too late. "Yeah, but -" Typhes nods his enormous head, and starts prying up the disc of polished crystal. "Typhes?! Typhes, where are you going?!

Typhes tilts his head around and bares his teeth in a hungry grin.

TY: Sounds like you already know, Heir.

TY: But you are officially no longer my problem, and I am no longer yours.

TY: So stop following me.
TY: Come out. I know you're there.

The denizen digs his claws behind the disc, and pops it out of its frame. A flood of yellow salamanders pours out in a tidal wave - thousands of them, John thinks, his eyes boggling even more, and all of them fidgeting hyperactively and popping bubbles in their mouths as they flail over each other to stay upright. An entire sprinkle - nay, hoard of fireflies rushes out, twinkling all over. John would swear one of them is blinking in Morse code, but honestly, it's just. So much to take in. His jaw drops, and he smacks one hand to his cheek. "They're alive!” he says, a little too loudly - it sets off a cough in his hoarse throat.

Then the nearest salamanders finish flopping upright, glubbing furiously - and start hopping up and down. Having several thousand salamander consorts wave at you is…an experience, but John snaps out of his amazement in time to give a friendly wave back.

One of the salamanders faints. Which sets off a hundred more. Whoops.

The fireflies sprinkle around Typheus in waves and trace light all around him in a glittering cloud, and the denizen raises his tattered wings to hoist himself up through the final pipe.

TY: Hmph. Come along, Lampyridae, Salamandridae. There is nothing left for you here.

Typheus breathes out one last wind, heavy and stuffy and gross, and it shovels all the salamanders up in a yellow wave. A few of them flail their way free and bounce off the denizen's looping coils, but Typheus smacks them back into the air with his lower sets of wings. Before John can stop them Typheus hauls the entire population of LoWaS up into the clear, damp air and snakes his way up into the sky.

"Tyheus! What kind of legal representation?!!" John shouts, distractedly, as he follows the denizen. The sky's perfectly clear, and the air smells of damp soil and growing things. The walls of the palace are overgrown with more vast, electric trees, as though every single one growing on LoWaS burst into vigorous, electrical growth while John played down below.

TY: One who was recommended to me as a being of some significance among your kind.

TY: Farewell, my Heir.

And then, with a rush of speed, Tyheus winds away into the dark of the Medium, a pale streak of white with a crown of lightning bugs, and yellow salamanders bobbing in his wake.

…He looks totally ridiculous. One single firefly drifts down, meandering in circles around John's head with its butt flickering contentedly, and John holds up a finger for it to land on.

And then he takes out his phone.

-

EB: dave!
TG: john oh thank shit youre alive
EB: you know how you have been harassing all the denizens you meet about retirement and salaries and vacation time and stuff?
TG: well yeah
TG: just met hephaestus and echidna in person to give them the whats what TG: shits sad eb they dont even get health care
EB: i think you just sicced tyheus on the arks because he's looking for legal representation.
EB: and he's taking all my salamanders with him!
TG: dude holy shit
EB: there is like no way in which this ends well!
EB: who in the name of your bro's dumb buttpuppets did you recommend to him?!
TG: oh
TG: oh no
TG: oh my god
EB: what?!
TG: hes going to steal former president barack obama

After he empties the grist from the hoard - it's a pile of inedible fruit gushers, basically, swaddled up in fancy schmancy names like Quartz and Mercury and Cobalt and Shale and - rudely - Tar -

Gamzee doesn't say much, until the two of them get back to the surface of LoWaS and put some distance between them and Typheus's empty lair. He lurks behind John, who catches him peering over his shoulder a couple times, and every time John tries to nudge him alongside, the troll falls back, silent and watchful. Up above, they fly over a barely recognizable landscape: all the trees have grown, spreading wide and twining together in an interlaced network of lightning-fueled branches, that crisscross the blue earth and cover the craggy cliffs and canyons with flexible boughs that reach toward the clear, dark sky. Their roots have sunk deep into all the riverbeds and lakes and oceans that Typhone's storm temporarily filled with oil, and drunk them dry, leaving only a thick bed of mushrooms glittering in between the trees and the bright chunks of crystal that thrust out of the earth. It's hard to even retrace their flight - John was pretty lost in his head while driving the Trickster to the palace, and the landscape really is hard to recognize when it all glows.

But eventually, they find the village again.

And they find the body.

John shakes off his weird mood - Gamzee's quiet was infectious - and smiles at Gamzee as hard as he can, chanting act normal, act normal in his head. "Uh. Sorry. You can get back to Karkat and the others, now. I think pretty much everything's wrapped up here! I'll come help in a bit!"

Gamzee just gives him a look. Not a judgy look, but one that says, quite clearly, 'nah.' "You got unfinished business," Gamzee says, his voice steady and level in a way that's really weird, for him. He looks at John, and looks too deep, and this time John's the one who shies away from eye contact.

"Kind of. I guess." He doesn't know what he's doing here. He didn't know, even while they were flying over here. The Trickster grew into some weird metaphor bullshit tree, but Da- John's handler is just a pallid white body on the ground, all the oil sucked out of his veins and his skin more alive-looking than it was when he was still up and moving. That makes it worse. He looks like a body-bodied now, instead of one of the Trickster's horrible, plastic jokes, and that makes it real. At least his dad's body bled actual blood, before, which made it worse/better.

Nothing about this is okay.

"Then you just be doing what feels right in your pump biscuit, brother," Gamzee says, and hangs back a step while John thinks it over.

Finally, John raises a hand and calls the Breeze as a tornado to drill into the ground. He picks the only open spot left in the village, since uprooting one of the trees would feel wrong, and keeps drilling with a perfectly flat expression. His eyes start to ache with the effort of holding them dry and open, but he manages it by unfocusing his gaze and staring into the middle ground, at one of the empty mail pipes outside the nearest salamander house, and pretending that it's happening to another person. It leaves his chest hollow again, and he has to keep shifting his eyes so they won't tear up, but soon he's got a deep hole dug into the ground, and no more excuses to put off looking at his father.

"I tried to ignore him, because I didn't know how to deal with him anymore. With how much he hurt me," comes out of his mouth, without permission - but once John starts, Gamzee tilts his head to the side in silent acknowledgement, and John doesn't stop the rest from pouring out. He doesn't know if he could. "And now he's dead, and I guess now I can't ever try to figure out -"

What I did? What was different? Why he didn't love me this time around -

He chokes on something horrible that isn't oil, and has to start again a few times. He laughs without any mirth. "I don't know. Maybe I wouldn't have ever wanted to contact him again, or anything like that. I didn't even want to see him now. He was never really my dad, here, but…now I'm stuck remembering that he used to be different. That before the scratch, he was - Dad. And I'll never even get that option, ever again. So."

His voice wobbles at the end. He runs out of words to string together into sentences that mean something. All things considered, it's probably not a very good speech. It just makes John feel heavy and sluggish inside.

Gamzee doesn't say anything. John raises a hand and nudges the body ever so slightly to the left, and lowers it in. The Breeze swirls the dirt back over his dad of its own accord, without waiting for John to say so and that's - that's fine. That's good. John's swallow gets interrupted by something convulsing in his chest, and he ducks his head, talking fast before he loses the ability to. "You should d-definitely go. I just need a sec -"

"Nah." Gamzee hugs John from behind, his arms wrapped around his waist, and leans a cool cheek against the side of John's face. It feels like John's whole body's burning, and his face feels hot and miserable as it starts to screw up in a sob. "Everything else can keep for a spell longer. When you're good and ready."

- So they stay for a spell.

Until he's ready.

---

x

Jade lands on Skaia right as a shudder runs through the planet - or maybe through everything - she thinks, as she blinks and plants her feet on the ground to keep her balance. Spades hits slightly harder on his back, since Jade's mostly focused on keeping herself steady in the middle of the shockwave, and comes up hissing and stabbing. Sooo she confiscates that knife (temporarily) until the quake eases off and the chessboard ground beneath her stops rattling with loose pebbles. Shading her eyes, Jade looks up, searching the sky for clues as to what latest kerfluffery is going on past LoLaR. The layered, chess-patterned tendrils that ring Skaia's outer atmosphere obscure some of the view, and a bunch of bright, over-saturated blue and white clouds block out another huge chunk, and for a sec Jade feels some tingly nostalgia. Apart from the Möbius net of tendrils, the sky from here looks a lot like Earth's. The same shade of blue as a clear summer day. Even though gigantic rifts and craters scar the surface of the planet itself - Jade skipped most of the descent to be speedy about it - the weather seems just fine here. For a second, Jade tilts her head to the side and eyes the clouds, in case they feel like giving out some last-minute tips.

But nah. Black and white strings that look kiiinda familiar flicker inside the clouds, but scratchy stuff in the sky doesn't tell Jade anything she doesn't already know. Namely, that this game is a little dumb, and a lottle broken.

SS: Where is she?!

Spades scrambles to his feet, a fresh knife already in his claw as he sizes Jade up with an accusatory blink. He could try to hit her, but honestly, Jade's gonna develop a sixth sense for impending stab wounds with this guy around, and she's not afraid to yoink all his pointy stuff if he pushes her.

He's right, though. These are the closest coordinates the Condesce could give Jade, with some adjustment for Jade's own space sense when they reached Skaia, but all Jade sees is a super beat up hunk of junk that probably used to be an escape pod, and a smashed-up cathedral that used to sport Prospit colors. The escape pod looks worse off than the cathedral by a lot - maybe it used to be space worthy, but the impact reduced it to its component parts, so that there's just a bunch of metal panels and screws and busted engines laying around like an escape pod-shaped modern art display. "Wow, they really did a number on this thing..." Jade says, folding her arms behind her back and tapping a foot against one of the dismantled engines.

SS: What? They barely banged it up. There isn't even a real crater.

Spades crouches and shuffles up to one of the panels, prods it with a claw, and bares his teeth in a grimace.

SS: Dammit, they musta landed ages ago –

Jade pulls a face at him, rolling her eyes. "It can't have been that long ago! We barely just came through -"
SS: Time is broken as shit, and you're still pushing that line?

SS: Nah. Time was already wonky if you went from Derse to Prospit the wrong way – the disconnect is only gonna get more and more fucked.

SS: Stupid piece of shit glorified checkerboard can't even hold herself together anymore.

With that, Spades knocks the panel away and stalks toward the cathedral. Jade bounces after him, and spreads out her awareness. The space here feels…odd. Not broken! Not the way the Lord of Time keeps breaking reality in a spreading, warping crack as he tangles with Leviathan, but…as though things are too orderly. Like, she can't measure it with 100% accuracy, since she's focused on trying to find the Black Queen, but Jade thinks the nearby castles and fortifications all line up along a golden spiral - which would technically make them super easy to find, especially from above. Jade wonders if Prospitians and Dersites just really like patterns that much, or if the buildings here all came pre-fabricated.

Before they even cross the threshold, a shockwave hits them again, rattling the cathedral and the air, and Spades growls with fury as he claps his claws to his head.

Oh. But it's not an explosion, Jade realizes, eyes widening. It's -

SS: Shit. She already did it.

"No! Don't be so negative -“ Jade starts to snap.

[Reckoning]

- a fraymotif pitched almost too low for her ears to register it. Bec's ears can, though. All of Skaia reverberates with the sound of a million foghorns, followed by a loop of tornado sirens that follow one after the other without end. Jade whines and covers both sets of ears as best she can as the piercing sirens throb in her eardrums, until the volume drops to a background din.

When she cracks an eye open - Jade doesn't remember closing them in the first place! - the air shimmers with echoes. She stands up, a little out of sorts, and shifts Spades's new knife away so she can help him up with a snap of her fingers without getting shanked. For a sec, she sees two - no… four? seven? - copies of the cathedral layered over each other, each damaged in slightly different ways and one perfectly whole, like the template from which a hundred - yeah, at least a hundred - other cathedrals came. The shimmer refuses to clear up, no matter how hard Jade mashes her palms against her eyes and tries to blink it away, and when Spades gets up out of his defensive crouch, his carapace looks ultra crisp at the edges. Stuff at a distance echoes, but up close he looks almost too clear. Like…like she's watching something on an HD TV screen that's too HD, so everything looks and moves like a crappy soap opera.

Jade looks up at the sky again, but she doesn't have to: the defense spirographs blaze and bloom in her space sense like new-formed suns in a ring around Skaia as the Reckoning begins.

Well. It was worth a shot! Jade can't fault them for optimism - it's all she's got left. Spades doesn't even look devastated - just peeved, which is, like, his default setting. She floats through the echoing air, and concentrates on the figures standing in the courtyard of the ruins to prevent her space sense from flying out and following the spirals outward to encompass all of Skaia, the whole Medium.

The Black Queen stands with her claws folded around a white scepter, and scowls an extra special scowl for Spades. An extra layer of black armor plating mantles her shoulders and extends down her back in sharp ridges. A safe-ish distance to the side, a Grey Protector - or maybe White King? - gazes at Jade with clear eyes, his claws folded together over his chest in a way that kinda mimics the Black Queen's.

BQ: Spades. Witch.

BQ: What did you hope to accomplish by coming here?

She talks without using her claws, which is always strange; the scepter acts like a microphone and helps fill the air with the BQ's presence, but it doesn't seem like the scepter's necessary. The Black Queen doesn't need the scepter to intimidate people - she does that just fine on her own! For all his bluster in insisting they get here, Spades doesn't even try to wade into the Black Queen's radius. He looks bitterly pissed off, but Jade suspects he wouldn't even be able to get close.

Jade probably can. Which is an interesting thought, but not something she's particularly interested in testing out. They're already on the clock here! The Reckoning is happening, and she needs to bounce back to the ark ships ASAP. It would've been nice if the Black Queen waited until after the fleet escaped through the gate, but since when do they get to have nice things? Jade huffs, wanting to lash a tail that she's not sure she has, and says, "You're gonna hit the ships! We need those!"

BQ: I'm fully aware. I don't care. There are no gates without a Reckoning.

BQ: You're welcome.

Then she bends her head toward the White King with a stiff neck, and the atmosphere in the courtyard shifts. The hostility baking the dry air around the Black Queen ratchets up a few degrees, on the very edge of homicidal, and Jade stiffens. The White King weathers it without a flinch.

BQ: Take him, if you want. He's irrelevant, now, and irrelevancy is...

WK: Then we shall b-BQ: Do not.

BQ: If you're so concerned about your people, then go.

The White King lowers his hands with a wistful crease to his eyes, and then walks around the Black Queen, giving her a politely wide berth. He rests one broad claw on the arched entrance to the courtyard and bows his head for a moment before coming to a halt on Jade's other side. Hostility radiates off the BQ to the point that Jade bristles and flicks her canine ears back, rigid and tense, part of her lip curling back in a snarl. Spades curses and backs away from her, but the White King puts a careful claw over the part of Jade's hand that flexes and boils with galaxies.

WK: We must rejoin the exodus. You need not worry - our meteor pilots are well versed in navigating the Reckoning, but your ships may require assistance.

His voice sounds very grave, but very calm at the same time. Jade reels it in and tamps down the green fire crackling along part of her shirt as she tears her eyes away from the Black Queen's aggressive stare. Try me, that stare seems to challenge her, but nope! Jade's not falling for that one! If the Black Queen wants a fight, she can get it from someone else. "We can definitely stop off on the meteors!" she agrees, shaking her shoulders one last time. If the Black Queen needs to get anywhere after she's done with the Reckoning, Jade guesses that'll be up to her. Orrr Jade will come pick her up, if she asks. Reluctantly. The Queens do have access to the group memo, even if they hardly ever use it.

WK: Our thanks. We shall boldly go where no one has gone before. But - ah.
The White King closes his eyes, and then clears his throat.

GP: Not as a monarch.

BQ: Pathetic.

Overhead, something goes spang, and a burst of lightning sours space up above. The knot in Jade's shoulder throbs, and her hands snap out to snag Spades and the GP at the same time, ready to jump. Jack Noir's been an ugly blip on her radar that she's trying to ignore, since Equius filled the space immediately adjacent to Prospit with a blinding amount of void, but Noir's aura abruptly cuts through all that. Augh, doesn't that guy know when to quit?! Jade doesn't even know what he's after anymore, apart from trying to kill people.

WQ: [Cancelocution]

And just like that, the destructive outburst of space power overhead cuts off; Jade can barely sense anything near Prospit for a solid five seconds. It's not Equius's voidy thing - more like the sickening crackle of Noir's powers just...shuts up. She stares, even though she knows she can't really see anything physically through the clouds from here. Not something involving Space, but something - someone - powerful just arrived and counteracted Noir; Jade can hear the clamoring of hounds, or maybe bells.

BQ: Now. That would be my cousin-queen. Go away.

Spades jerks his arm out of Jade's grasp and marches forward with gritted teeth. "Uhhh," Jade says, in her best display of rhetoric all day, but when she reaches out to snap Spades out of the Black Queen's reach, she hesitates. The shorter carapacian stomps over the invisible line where the BQ's hostile aura of intimidating-ness turns palpable and keeps going, while the Black Queen glares down at him with a raised chin.

She doesn't bend a single inch, even when Spades starts climbing her like a prickly tree. Her claws clench harder on the scepter, hard enough that Jade hears tiny plinks as the shell of her knuckles cracks under the strain, but Spades just claws his way up her armor and bites her face.

Carapacians do that a liiittle, teeny tiny bit more literally than regular kismeses do. Jade winces and covers her mouth in reflexive sympathy pain. Seething shadows writhe under the Black Queen's feet as she angles her head to bite-kiss him back, and Spades rakes his claws down her neck and back plating.

Jade coughs really loudly when Spades flings a leg around the Queen's waist, switches to gnawing on her neck, and doesn't appear inclined to hop off. That seems to snap the Black Queen out of it, at least - which is a major relief! - and she wrenches her mouth away from Spades's before blasting him off her with a shockwave of force. It's not as strong as earlier, but it still knocks Spades on his butt, and he gnashes his teeth as he staggers back upright. Blood trickling from the fresh chips in her mouth, the Black Queen stays utterly still, her expression regal and sneering and the tiniest bit - exhausted? Pained? Jade can't quite peg that last one!

BQ: Get you hence, and trouble me no more.

SS: You're a real piece o' work, you know that?

BQ: Tch. If you think you could have resisted the urge to start the Reckoning after tearing the scepter from my claws, you're even more naïve than I ever imagined.
BQ: Go away, Spades. You make me tired.

SS: You make me - ugh -

After picking himself off the ground, Spades licks the blood off his mouth - a lot more of it looks like his than the Black Queen's, judging by how the deep the bite marks go on his chin, but the blood trickles back into the marks like a Karkat-y thing.

Then, right as he starts to give the Queen backtalk, he vomits without any warning or heaving. A tiny ‘eep!’ escapes Jade, more out of surprise than anything, while Spades tilts his head forward and lets the throw up drool out of his mouth. Some of it still lands on his clothes, and he stumbles back with a woozy look. Okay, Jade's worried now! Alarmed, even.

SS: Bleurgh.

SS: Shit. That's never gonna come out…

He plucks at his own shirt and scowls at the bile, but he's still reeling back - Jade catches him with a hasty burst of green before Spades can topple over. She levitates him back, trying not to jostle him along the way, but Spades finishes spitting and glowers at her, his face suddenly shimmery and haggard at the same time.

No. Not just his face, Jade realizes. Everything feels…weird. Echo is the wrong word for it, when it keeps happening in perfect sync. Shimmer is the wrong word for it, when everything around her is outlined with unnatural clarity. "What's wrong with him?" she demands, her lips pursed with suspicion as she glares at the Black Queen. Then - "Wait…what's wrong with you?"

The Black Queen's shoulders buckle, like something presses down on her with immense, unseen weight. Her grip on the scepter never falters, even for an instant, but she really does look exhausted by the sheer amount of restraint she's exerting.

This…this is her level of hostility toward Spades - toward all of them - when she's controlling herself with an iron fist? Holy crap. Jade double-checks the Black Queen's claw, just to remind herself that the Queen doesn't have a ring claw, and doesn't have a ring to wear - there's just a ragged, weeping scar there that drips more blood down the dark lines of the Queen's talons as she towers over them all.

BQ: Do you know what I should do? I should rain ruination down upon your pathetic ships full of doomed, irrelevant cargo.

BQ: I should redirect every meteor here for the express purpose of annihilating them, and then smash this pathetic excuse for a Battlefield into a shattered pulp.

BQ: I should crack Skaia open all the way, and let that awful thing end this here and now.

BQ: I should rip him apart.

BQ: Not doing so is. Harder than I anticipated.

And suddenly the hostile tension straining the air curls back in on itself. Jade lets out a breath she hadn't realized she was holding, while the Black Queen flexes and refolds her claws over the scepter with a deliberate inhale. She trembles with the effort of not lashing out and looks close to throwing up herself with the effort required to reign - heh - herself in, and Jade marvels at it for a second. "So why aren't you?" she asks, fascinated.
BQ: Because it's what Skaia wants. Here, especially, her will echoes. She wants paradoxes loops resolved. She wants doomed things scoured away. She wants everything to proceed in an...ha! In an orderly fashion.

BQ: She doesn't get what she wants. Not this time.

If that doesn't deserve a hug, Jade isn't sure what does. Buuut a hug wouldn't go over well with the Black Queen at the best of times, let alone now - not when the Black Queen trembles with the effort of not knocking them all flat. Jade takes a half-step forward before checking herself, her eyes widening with dawning realization, but she just restricts herself to a smile that feels like it might burst her cheeks. "Thank you!" When the Black Queen breaks her stern, regal glare to stare at Jade like she's talking nonsense, Jade adds, "Really! Even if you let some of the meteors come at us, thank you anyway! I don't really know you all that well, but - yeah!"

Saying thanks not only helps satisfy some of the gratitude swelling in Jade's chest; it makes the Black Queen look distinctly uncomfortable, like she just swallowed a slimy frog sandwich at a fancy restaurant and wants to hoark it back up in a napkin to save face.

BQ: I'm not doing it for you. I don't care about any of you.

SS: …Well, I'll be damned. You're a liar.

SS: You've gone soft! You're squishy!

The Black Queen backhands Spades from twenty feet away with a slap of force, and Jade lunges forward to snap him like a rogue football before he can catapult backward into the nearest crevasse. Jade can sense the trajectory he would have taken, and the Black Queen has very good aim.

BQ: Go. My patience is gone.

"Okay, okay!" Jade snags Spades around the neck in a headlock, which sets off a fit of kicking that prevents him from opening his mouth and making more smartbutt comments to get them creamed by a super annoyed Queen. Under her breath, she adds, "Jeez louise," and then zaps them out and away, bypassing Prospit's void field entirely and hauling butt toward the carapacians' fleet.

Jade lands on the Battleship Condescension just in time for the Condesce's trident to nearly nick her nose. That one's probably on Jade - it looks like the Condesce was busy giving a speech, complete with grand trident flailing for emphasis, which Jade interrupts without really caring. Speeches come after inbound meteor bombardment in her mind! "Lots of incoming!" Jade says, over the Condesce's 'cod dammit,' and then she shoos Spades toward the spot where Ms Paint sits on a super out of place red swivel chair by the hatch entrance of the ship. Spades wobbles for a second; he still wears a puke-y kind of look, but it clears after a few seconds. If he goes below decks with Ms Paint, whoever he stabs is nott Jade's problem.

She's got serious business to take care of, here. According to her space sense and her plain old eyeballs, the fleet here made a smidge of progress while Jade was gone - but only a smidge. They're coasting along at a cool couple of hundreds of thousands of miles an hour, but they still have a ways to go, and not a lot of time to do it in. Jade checks on the Lord of Time really quick, but most of her attention gets sucked in by the millions of tons of space rock that just decided hey! You know what would be fun? Shooting out of orbit at top speed instead to be giant butts. Trying to measure the mass and acceleration of some of these bad boys nearest them makes Jade wince at the logistics; having all of them streak toward Skaia at once feels like staring down a hundred gun barrels while... they fire. "Some of those are gonna be Texas-sized," she says, equal parts awed, wondering whether she should ask Dave if he wants to name one of them 'Literally Texas,' and worried. "Do you guys have anything that can handle that?"

"Wave got the firepower, but somefin that big'll smack us with a debris field more than a thousand kilometers wide if we blow it up," the Condesce says, lowering her specibus with a stern, haughty pout. She glitters all over, and even as Jade floats beside her, yet another of the Condesce's entourage hurries over with an entire bowlful of gold and pink glitter to apply liberally along the fuchsia lines of her skintight suit. Someone sprinkled her hair, too, while Jade was gone - and that's a heck of a lot of hair! "These guppies can handle a little debris if we plough through it with the psionics burning hot, but we'll start losin' shit I ain't happy about losing."

And Jade can't just kick all the ships through the Gate. Or...maybe she could get them close, but Jade can feel her body ache just thinking about the raw power she'd need to shove so many enormous space ships full of people whose atoms she can't afford to mix up in rapid succession. With Bec's help she has the power and focus to move them one at a time - probably - but she's not sure she can do it without bursting at the seams again, and she doesn't know if she could put herself back together enough to be useful if someone needs help afterward.

Plus, the urge to go through the Gate herself is...really strong! Jade's surprised at how distracting it is! Maybe it makes sense, since Calliope is a Muse of Space and all, but Jade can't afford to cross over just yet. Even if there is no place like home... "Right!" Jade says; she mashes her temples with her knuckles for a second to keep from getting transfixed by the Gate again. "I'll bounce what I can." Then she stops for a second to mull something over, and looks at the Condesce. "...Can I have some glitter, by the way?"

What? It doesn't hurt to ask!

There must be something glowy in the glitter - the Condesce shimmers against the dark of the Medium, fuchsia and gold and bone white teeth. "Finally! Someone in fish fam who asks for war glitter when she needs it!" she announces to the cluster of trolls around them, and an encouraging round of applause breaks out before two of them sprint back toward the hatch. The Condesce slings an arm around Jade's shoulders with a tiny jump to reach Jade's floating height, smacking a kiss on Jade's cheek with hopefully sealed lipstick. "If you see my gill, you need to talk some sense into her -"

LV: IT'S NOT ENOUGH. NOT NEARLY ENOUGH.

LV: I REQUIRE...MORE.

Jade and the Condesce make the same face at the same time - which would be funny under any other circumstances - and Jade turns them around so they can squint in exasperation back across the Medium, toward Leviathan.

Who is not across the Medium anymore. Not all of it, anyway. Jade didn't even feel it move, but wild tendrils covered in streaks of unhealthy-looking green and purple rings snake around the Medium in a wide, circumscribed arc, stretched long and thin to avoid the pulsating cracks around the Lord of Time. Meteors the size of cities shatter against the outer sides of the rushing tentacles - smaller, faster meteors cut through the gross Horrorterror flesh like bullets, but dissolve into fine dust in a spray of acidic blood on the other side. Squid beak mouths rip out of the ends of the tendrils as they pick up speed and sometimes tear and eat through each other in a lightning-fast frenzy as they lance toward the fleet.

Jade groans and smacks her face.
When she takes her hand away, Leviathan -

- Leviuh - uhhh -

- the whole world's painted in bubbles and pastels, like an underwater cartoon. Botanical drawings of seaweed and coral dance and float in the distance, like they're bits of cardboard taped to popsicle sticks to be used as puppets. For a second, Jade's mind throbs, and she can hear an old cartoon theme song playing in the distance, muffled as though she's hearing it through a wall. A bunch of round, adorably chubby Squiddles bounce from bubble to bubble in synchronized swirls, their tiny :D smiles visible from a distance as they bob through the bright, sunny water to the beat. They're adorable! They want to play! They're -

- not real.

Jade doesn't remember getting whammied as hard as Rose ever was, but the insistent wave of fun! and friends, new friends, come play! that spreads through the illusion blinds her for a split second. It's super effective - but the mass and velocity don't match up with what she can sense outside of her head, and the disconnect jolts her free a half second later. Leviathan tried to make the Squiddles slow and bouncy and playful, but the contrast between that and the actual velocity of the tendrils riding hard toward the fleet is just too obvious. "Squiddish beach," the Condesce says. She sounds like she's winded, but there's a vicious edge of clarity in her eyes as she glowers at the Horrorterror. "They're mine."

"Remember how I said we had incoming?" Jade says, half-joking. It earns her a grimace.

"Overgrown, rotten, oversalted calamari." The Condesce raises her trident and slams it down against the ship with resounding force, jolting all the dazed trolls around her out of their bewildered stupor. A couple stumble, then slump, their eyes still glassy and lost in Leviathan's coaxing illusion, and the Condesce snarls at them like they've personally offended her. "We're aboat to have a party up here, fam! Up and at 'em!"

Whiiich is Jade's cue. She calculates the trajectories in her head in a split second - the meteors move slower than Leviathan, but only just, and only because she thinks Leviathan cheats and skips through dimensions Jade can't sense when it wants to speed up. The meteors on a collision course with the fleet, Jade can predict with some certainty; Leviathan is a capital-P Problem. "I'll go grab who I can!" she tells the Condesce, already sending out a last call on the group memo for volunteers.

Snorting, the Condesce snaps her claws and every red, spikey gun built into the Battleship rises out of its socket. With some slight delays that make the fuchsiablood mutter under her breath, the rest of the fleet follows suit - Jade feels rather than hears the mechanical whine multiplied hundreds of thousands of times over as laser turrets begin to charge up and take aim. "Take your time, gill," the Condesce says, half-distracted, half-sarcastic, and then Jade's gone -

- GG: hey everyone!
  GG: leviathan is waving hi at the ships with its noodly appendages
  GG: so my help levels have gone up a bit!
  GA: We Are On Our Way.
  GA: Except For Feferi I Guess.
  CC: w){oops! t)(at's rig)t!(
  CC: I will be on LoFaF if anybody needs kelp!
  CA: does this mean i can start blastin things wwith impunity finally TT: No.
CA: god dammit
TT: Hitting one of the ark ships would result in a significantly higher body count than cracking Cetus's lair like an egg.
TT: I rather not do Leviathan's dark bidding for them, at this juncture.
CA: i havve good aim i swwear
TT: That would be a matter of some debate.
GA: To Be Fair, He Has Not Killed Any Of Us Yet.
GA: Accidentally Or Otherwise.
TT: True. Very true. Would you sign a blood pact to promise not to aim at anyone we know?
CA: goddammit rose wwhy you knoww thats a crock of bullshit
GG: ill come give you guys a lift the rest of the way!
GG: anybody else?
TG: me and karkat are apparently doomed to make toothy snake babies together for the rest of our lives
CG: DAVE.
TG: yes dude
CG: SHUT THE FUCK UP.
GC: 1 SH4LL COM3 4ND 4SS1ST! >:]
GC: 1 C4N'T S33 MUCH S1GN1F1C4NT FOR M3 TO DO H3R3...
GC: BUT TH3 4RK SH1PS R33K OF TURQUO1S3 UNT4PP3D POT3NT14L!
GG: i'll take your word for it!
GG: gamzee? john?
TG: they're alive but i mean at what cost
TC: NOT MOVING YET.
TC: but we'll be along :o)
GG: then i'll be there to pick up everyone in two shakes!
GG: last call?
CT: D -- Prospit took damage
CT: D -- Also there is something trying to get into our heads; it is making me angry
CT: D -- I am STRONGLY opposed to going c100ser to Skaia
GG: …
TT: Vriska's absence is such a subtle thing, isn't it.
GG: she normally would call us all suuuuuuuuper dum8 and incompetent by now :P
AA: me and sollux are occupied for a spell
AA: the fight with noir should be done soon
AA: but we two will still be occupied :)
GG: cool beans!

-

First, she grabs Rose and Kanaya and Eridan - they were already on their way to LoFaF with Feferi, and Jade zeroes in on them with pinpoint accuracy. "Gotcha!" A quick wave for Feferi, who waves back, and then Jade sweeps her along for the ride, too, everyone in a merry chain as she arrows down toward LoFaF to snag Terezi. Something humungous shifts in the Forge as Jade reappears just over the fiercely growing jungle, but no time! Terezi reaches up with one claw, her fierce smirk quirking up higher on one corner of her mouth as Jade obligingly smacks her with a high five to swap her out for Feferi. "And!" The jump back to the fleet - a couple hops, still, but Jade's getting so much practice crossing the Medium that at this rate they're all gonna smear together into one flood of movement -

"Back!" Jade finishes, snapping her fingers on both hands as Rose, Kanaya, Eridan, and Terezi come back together into people-shapes rather than component particles. Every one of them hits the deck a little harder than Jade intended, and her eyebrows snap together in a frown. Everything she does has a little more oomph to it than she's used to, but she'd expected it to have smoothed out by now - oorr else -

In the maybe ten seconds she was gone, a bunch of new people have joined the Condesce on the deck; a goldblood heaves himself out of the hatch as Jade blinks and takes it all in, and he scowls at anyone who tries to help him up as he levitates via psionics. His horns look weirdly familiar. A blueblood towers beside the Condesce, but that's all Jade can make out because the troll is a walking black hole of void. Urgh - which means Jade needs to work around her, or risk splinching somebody mid-teleport with the unexpected pockets of void now obscuring parts of the deck and the surrounding Medium. Fun fun. "My crew," the Condesce says off-handedly, flicking her hair over her shoulder with a claw.

Eridan makes a sound like he's gargling his own spit in his gills, which can't be fun, and hunches his shoulders defensively as he looks anywhere but directly at the Condesce. Kanaya straightens so much she reaches peak 'rigidly formal' while her stance widens, and her intense, guarded stare when her eyes land on the fuchsiablood would probably shoot lasers if lasers were a thing that Kanaya could do.

Terezi's the one who steps forward, leans right into the Condesce's personal bubble, and inhales sharply through her nose like a scent connoisseur. Like a Terezi, basically. The Condesce puts up with it for exactly two seconds before leaning back away from Terezi, one eye narrowed more than the other as she eyeballs Terezi back. "Heheh. You smell like gold glitter liqueur and the sea," Terezi says, by way of greeting - Jade thinks she's literally inhaling glitter, with how much wafts off the Condesce when she moves.

"Charmed, I'm sure," Rose adds, before the Condesce can respond. Jade does a double take - she yoinked everyone here at top speed, without paying attention apart from making sure they were all intact and not-bleeding.

Even with Leviathan muttering and susurrating right around the corner, Rose glows like she's lit from within. It's different from the aura of power they sometimes get when using their powers: Rose holds a crystal needlekind loose in her fingers, with the quiet, discreet assurance of someone who knows beyond a shadow of a doubt that she won't drop it. Heavy smudges from makeup that ran something fierce underscore her pale eyes where Kanaya's handkerchiefs apparently didn't cut it, but she radiates confident readiness instead of exhaustion, and it makes something swell in Jade's chest to see Rose looking...exorcised. Like she went for a nice walk in the rain, and came back hollowed out but refreshed and alive.

Having her here is the next best thing to having Dave or John or both here. Heartened, Jade beams at Rose until Rose blinks and looks at her - and then Rose smiles back, a little bit lopsided at one corner but with wide, clear eyes.

The Condesce interrupts a perfectly good girl smiling at girl moment, of course. "I can't tell if you've brought me help, or sass," she says, her acerbic voice pitched to carry as she shoulders past her giant blueblood friend.

Jade shrugs. "...Both?"

"Oh, most definitely both," Rose agrees, with an even drier smile.

"This is sauce." With a hmph, the Condesce spins on her dangerously pointy heel and walks toward the Leviathan-facing side of the deck like an angry troll runway model about to stab her rival in the foot. Which is a weirdly specific simile to use, but the Condesce is just...like that. Kanaya dips her head slightly toward Rose, and something silent passes between them, but Rose doesn't make a move to follow the Condesce forward; her new needlekind begins to radiate golden light, and Eridan scrambles to shake off his uncomfortable sulk in time to participate. Up and down the fleet, Jade can feel the wave of motion as whatever guards the Condesce smacked out of their Horrorterror daze brace all at once.

A troll with yellow eyes races up to Jade at the last second, a pot of silver glitter clutched close to his chest. It's a liiiittle late to get creative with it, so Jade just takes it and dumps it over her head like she's her own fairy godmother. Eridan gives her a weird, desperate look, and Terezi whips around and zeroes in on Jade with laser-like focus, but it's too late! All the glitter is hers, now.

"Tear the beach apart," the Condesce says, idly inspecting her own claws, as the first turrets fire on Leviathan.

Jade plots out the trajectory of every meteoroid near them, and starts dropkicking them toward Leviathan. Moving one of the state/province/small country sized ones sounds like a fun way to kick off the day. The best part is, Jade doesn't even need to expend a whole bunch of energy to do it - she picks out a few smaller meteors and spends a quick flurry of teleports and power bursts knocking them into collision courses with the Texas-sized one so that the collective force of the impacts does the work for her, like a huge game of billiards. These meteors go so fast as they zoom toward Skaia that all Jade has to do is redirect them and they break the scary-large ones down with bone-buzzing crashes! Easy peasy. A disturbingly Florida-shaped chunk of meteor pinwheels past the fleet by a narrow margin - Jade doesn't try to mess with it, because when she thinks 'disturbingly,' what she really means is that it might very well be proto-Florida, about to slam through a gate to mess up the Gulf Coastal Plain's day some 50 odd million years ago. Jade shunts most of the resulting scarred, shattered chunks of rock toward Leviathan, along with a bunch of intact meteors small enough for her to juggle with minimal extra effort, because Leviathan deserves it. Plus, stuff that hits Leviathan doesn't hit the fleet, and Jade doesn't have to worry about them spinning off toward LoFaF or Skaia.

Some of them are too small to bother with, though. Jade jumps through the incoming barrage and fans out her awareness to catch any more ridiculously large meteors that might lurk in the dark of the Veil, but planet-killing asteroids seem rare among the hundreds of thousands of smaller meteors that streak above and around Jade on all sides. She flips around to look back at the fleet when she starts to near the outer edge of the meteors - the place where the thin remnants of the Veil hang back, stationary, like cold rock sentinels on the very brink of the Gate. Behind Jade, she can see the Battleship Condescension charging through the salvo of small-to-mediumish meteors like a spikey red tank, while a bunch of the small ships soar around to fire at either Leviathan's noodle arms or the large meteors that come too close for comfort. The impacts shake and rattle the ship something fierce, but there are clear shields to deflect the dust and debris. Almost everyone's busy fighting off Leviathan, and after one last check for super big meteors, Jade uses a flare of green power to teleport a nice chunk of meteor butt along with her, then whips it around at Leviathan's near arm before it can wrap around Kanaya. It's a gross, insectoid tentacle, too, with stingers and teeth and bristles, and Kanaya jumps away from the grabby end, raises her chainsaw, and cleaves through the jointed point in the armor. Then - yikes! - it sprouts three more tendrils in a burst of acidic blood, and Jade scoops Kanaya out of the way to land on the Battleship again. Kanaya nods and then takes off toward the tendrils again with a grim expression; Jade rolls her eyes, and zaps in place so she can cup her hands together and give Kanaya a boost when she jumps back into the fray. "We're holding up okay?" she asks Rose, instead, since Rose stands on the very tip of one of the Battleship's curved horns, and seems less likely to be distracted from firing spells if Jade strikes up a conversation than Kanaya and Terezi, who are taking turns hacking and stabbing Leviathan with extreme prejudice wherever they Rose casts a bolt of light through her needlekind, and it punctures one of Leviathan's dumb extra eyes. "Surprisingly so. Leviathan's very distracted," Rose says, raising a hand to wave off the next troll to offer her more glitter. "Or perhaps it's worse off than I thought. I wasn't sure before who would win in a contest between the Lord of Time and Leviathan, but I think at this point the odds are in the Lord's favor." The last part she adds in a low murmur, her forehead wrinkled in Rose's patented look of Deep Deliberation. "Splitting its attention to come raid us wouldn't normally impact a Horrorterror's processing ability. The bulk of their hivemind should be located in the Furthest Ring, but Leviathan isn't channeling itself through proxies anymore. It's here. And I think it's losing."

"Well, good!" Jade says, then catches herself. "Er, actually, I'm not sure who we were rooting for, there..." This is what she gets for showing up late to the party! Which bad guy would they rather fight after the Lord of Time and Leviathan finish beating each other up? If there was a poll in the memo, Jade missed it.

"We root for us," Kanaya calls, as she punches a tentacle away.

Which is both the answer Jade should have expected, and also the best one. "Works for me!" she calls back, cheerfully, and then flings herself back into the fray. A squidlike offshoot of gooey horrormatter tries to cut one of the gunships that has broken formation and started shillyshallying toward Leviathan like a piece of mobile, wiggly jello - Jade wreathes herself in green fire and kicks through the squidding hot and fast, so that all its gross gunk burns off before it can touch her. A wiggle in her brain alerts her to the fact that Leviathan just knocked another meteor onto a collision course with one of the foremost ark ships, and Jade dissolves into space and drops onto the meteor with both feet so it curves under the fleet in a wobbly arc before pelting off in a straight line toward Skaia. White hot, fizzly light blooms in the peripheral of her left eye, and Jade cartwheels back out of the way as one of Eridan's massive potshots at Leviathan goes wild. She rolls her eyes at the same time, but lets it slide. This time.

When she flips back upright, Leviathan has an eye on her. This doesn't mean much, since Leviathan's got a lot of eyeballs to spare, but Jade gulps and summons a rifle so she can shoot it from a distance. That look made her skin crawl all over. But then another meteor judders into motion, and Jade goes back to playing hot potato by batting more meteors in Leviathan's general direction. They put dents in the Horrorterror's noodly appendages - but the dents just bounce back out, or sprout some new appendages if Jade clips through an arm with enough force to sever it, and really, Jade doesn't know what it takes to beat this thing! She just knows that as long as they can keep Leviathan from overwhelming the minds of the people in the fleet, and get them through the gate - everything will be okay. Or maybe not everything, but enough things!

One of Leviathan's main tentacles rips in two, revealing four long chains of teeth and lines of tiny green eyes, and the new mouth expels a heavy cloud of frothing, shadowy fog-drool. One half of the distended mouth lashes out and easily smacks the Battleship aside like it's a plastic submarine toy bobbing along in a bath tub, instead of a gigantic space ship, and Jade teleports back to bounce the ship back on course from the other side. Not her most precise work, but she puts exactly enough force and spin into it to stop the Battleship from spinning like a top and turning into a vomit comet. "Stop taking the paint off a' my ships, cod dammit!" the Condesce howls from the top of the bridge tower, but it sounds like it's directed at Leviathan rather than Jade. Then the fuchsiablood curses and uses her specibus as a pivot to push off the ship and start stabbing Leviathan's crazy-daisy arms. "What kind of time are we making?"

Again, Jade suspects that the Condesce is talking to someone else - probably with an ear piece - but Jade answers, since she's close by. "Still a little ways off. But we're doing better than expected!" she reports, as she skims alongside the Condesce and helpfully calls up two fresh riflekind to start shooting the distant end of the mouth, where the skin splits and the tentacle looks thin enough to sever. Terezi races along the other half of the tendril - she doesn't stab anything that doesn't come at her first, but she appears to take extra care to step on any of the bulging eyeballs she can with huge, stomping jumps.

Kanaya and Rose continue to tag team the bundle of writhing tendrils that try to coil around the Battleship, while the horrifically split mouth drifts toward the rest of the fleet. Eridan shoots another bolt of uncontrolled white lightning, and Jade shoots him a stern look. He's trying to recover from his jerky jerk-ish ways, sure, but seriously! Letting Vriska train him even a little bit has not improved his terrible aim at all. Even if Leviathan is a pretty hard-to-miss target, Eridan will find a way. "Just don't jinx it," Eridan says, snarky, which is the kind of thing Dave and Karkat would totally kick his butt for saying.

And sure enough, not a moment later, the black, brackish fog spewing from Leviathan's throat-mouth-tooth tunnel thing turns into heavy ink that rises up into the air and draws a mouthful of broad teeth in a wide not-smile across the Medium.

LV: HOW MANY GODS DOES IT TAKE TO MATCH A LORD?
LV: LET'S FIND OUT.

Then more arms stab out of the base of the tentacle - covered in coarse thorns, with multiple joints that bend in zigzags - and reach out to grab them. Specifically them - the original tendrils continue to coil and weave, trying to break past the fleet's defenses, but the creepy, skittering arms shoot for Jade, for Terezi, for Eridan, for Rose -

An arrow of void darts across Jade's field of vision, blanking out her view of the Medium for a blink (or maybe she just blinks like normal - her eyes are watering with the strain of staying focused on everything around them for thousands of miles) - and Jade bounces to Terezi - then Kanaya - then Eridan - and Rose in a fast push, before hauling them all back to one of the ark ships as Leviathan closes a rippling, knobby fist on the space where they all were. A patch of voidy stuff exploded, taking a huge gunk out of the hand, which buys them some more time. "Oh, it's aiming at us now. Strike 'very distracted' off the record," Rose drawls - Jade grabbed her upside down, whoops - as she shakes her hair out of her face.

"It is stricken," Kanaya says, her voice muffled in Jade's hair. Jade's got them all stuck close to her like she's a people magnet, which means nobody is really upright at the moment.

Eridan peels himself away from the huddle with sheer, desperate hope-strength, and Jade rolls her eyes and lets him. "Why do I open my mouth! Why?!" he says furiously, white sparks of static making his hair stand on end. His power lights up his arms with lightning marks that seem weirdly familiar - Jade wonders why he hasn't summoned his silly hope wandkind thing yet, if channeling his power through his arms looks so painful. Eridan kicks out of the buddyhuddle (not to be confused with tanglebuddyhuddles) and starts shooting rapid-fire bolts of hope magic again, before Jade can catch more than a glimpse of his drained face.

Out of all of them here, he and Rose would normally suffer the most trying to resist grimdark stuff. Even with Equius's accessories helping out, Jade tags Eridan in her head with an inner sigh - she's got a lot of stuff on her plate! - so she'll at least get a heads up if he starts moving erratically. "You're holding up okay?" she asks Rose, as she sets everyone down on their feet. Terezi grumbles something Jade can't make out before she sprints along the wide hull of the ark ship, her eyes alight behind her shades as she scopes out her next angle. Her lips twisted down in a grimace, Kanaya tosses the half-melted, acid-eaten remnants of her latest chainsaw to the side, and draws a fresh tube of lipstick to rev and hold out to the side as she runs to intercept one of the other gnarled hands.

"I feel remarkably clear," Rose replies, cracking her neck to the side. Then she gestures toward the ship below them and the two beside, mostly with two fingers with a third only making it part of the way up. "But Jade? These three ships are going to need to shift about ten miles to -" Rose grimaces "- that way." She indicates it with a wiggle of her hand that Jade…cannot decipher, for the life of her. Four miles, sure, she can probably bump them hard enough to get them moving. It's 'that way' that's a little…meh.

But Rose's expression is very certain, and her eyes burn with clarity, and Jade thinks she knows the perfect solution. "That's a little vague!" she says, jokingly, and then raises her hand. "Let's do this right."

Rose pauses, and then smiles back. "Oh yes, let's," she agrees, and then clasps Jade's hand as the fraymotif starts to play.

[Awareness Brilliante]

The world bursts into golden light. It's Rose's vision, and this time, when she gestures with her free hand, Jade can see the whorls of light glowing brighter 4.13 miles to their right, a position higher than their current one at about a 35-degree angle. The most fortuitous place for this particular ark ship to be, if they want it to escape Leviathan's encroaching tangles. And there's tons and tons of other, different colored swirls and auras and outlines all around them, a constantly shifting blaze of light - way too much for Jade to sort through with just her eyes. On the other hand, she catches a fleeting impression of Rose turning over Jade's spatial awareness of every single meteor and ship she's mapped out and updating constantly in her brain, complete with potential calculations for where to push and relative velocities and projections for where the meteors might go through the gates and the chaotic hodgepodge of Leviathan's dimensions and the lacuna where Void leaves pockets both of their powers can't quite grasp - and then Rose and Jade lace their fingers together in a mutual agreement to not trade, ever, and Jade follows the clear line of sight Rose pulls to the fore of all the background light. Jade wheels them around and brings Rose along for the ride, and shoves with enough force to knock all three ships into place. It earns them a frustrated shout from one of the psionic guys who've come out to defend the ships, but then a couple other ships fire up their psionic propulsion in earnest and strafe to the side to fall back in line with the ones Jade and Rose shifted. Leviathan writhes forward, still reaching, but falls short again.

This time, when Rose points, it's with a very steady index finger. "A new tentacle is branching up through the interstices – there. Twenty degrees down, but coming straight up under us -"

Still a little imprecise, but much better now that Jade can map out what Rose indicates with ease. "Up and over!" Jade announces, and then spins them out of the way of each person-sized thorn that shoots up under their feet. Eridan drifts over one of the distorted pools unawares, and Jade yells, "Eridan? They're underneath!"

The violetblood mutters something to himself and glare-pouts at Jade. "There's nothing under-" he starts, and Jade sucks in a huge breath, raising her hand to yank him out of the way manually, when Eridan's eyes widen. 'I'm an idiot! We're workin' in three dimensions!' He raises his hands, white light churning between them in a way that makes Jade's Rose-eyes hurt - then fires straight down with a supersized beam of raw hope laser. The distorted patch where the tentacle tries to emerge gets incinerated in seconds, along with anything unfortunate enough to be underneath Eridan for like. Five miles.

"Well, yeah! That's how space tends to work!" Jade yells after him, exasperated, but Eridan rockets off like a shot, abandons any and all sense of aim, and starts chucking huge bursts of lightning at Leviathan's tentacles from above. A bunch more spindly hands form and stretch toward Eridan with single-minded focus, but none of them can get close before they start to turn crispy.

So he doesn't have to worry about hitting one of the ships anymore. Which is great! But also...one of these days, Jade really needs to take that guy to a firing range and teach him how to shoot in a straight line. Everything reeks of burnt calamari, now. But that's probably a good thing. Probably.

"Problem!" Rose says, sharply, and Jade whips around just in time to see a triangular, barbed hook shoot from one of Leviathan's writhing tangles - and punch through an ark ship halfway down the line. It happens to fast for Jade to do anything but flinch at the sudden shock. "Damn!"

"Ark Defiance is leaking!" the goldblood psionic calls with a hoarse voice, his claws rising to scrape at his horns as he staggers. Down the line, Leviathan's hook begins to reel the ark back in with ponderous tugs - seeing the ark move in such fast jerks sends unpleasant jitters through Jade's stomach. "Ah - Ar- Ark - Kh -"

Swearing, the Condesce backflips off the tentacle she's locked in a stabbing match with, her face one big snarl as she tears down the tendril and back toward "That ain't 'leaking', that's hooked through the helm deck! Stop listenin', they're dead -"

Before she can reach him, the psionic levitates himself with pulsing psionics the same color as Sollux's. "I can reroute them," he says, his voice abruptly flattened out into a dead monotone.

The Condesce tackles him just as he surges forward, pinning him to the deck. "No. They're dead in the water!" she says, grimly; when the goldblood snaps his teeth and lunges up to push her away, the Condesce plants a palm against his face, her eyes hard and glittering with calculations as she surveys her fleet once more. Probably estimating how many she can afford to lose -

"Not if I jump them all the way to the gate!" Jade says; her skin prickles at the thought, but she trades a glance with Rose and sees the same steely resolve there as Rose nods.

That's the trouble with Rose's powers, Jade guesses. Everyone on the fleet should have been doomed and stuck on Earth while the Reckoning rained down. They have the worst luck of pretty much everything in the Medium consolidated right here, and every move Rose makes to make them safer is a tenuous guess based on already super bad luck.

But if they make it to Calliope, all of that baloney means nothing.

"Can you? Why haven't you done it before?" the Condesce demands, cold and heavy as the deep ocean. Her eyes burn, slightly reddish-fuchsia in the yellows with the battle-fury pulsing through her body.

Jade raises her chin. She's not about to be intimidated by the Condesce right now! "I don't know if I can do it for all of them -" she warns instead, mentally sidelining all but the most super important meteor trackers in her head so she can focus on the harpooned ark when they get there. Jade could shove it, probably, and save herself the concentration and raw power of teleporting it wholesale - but the ship would still be adrift and apparently pilot- and engineless, unable to make any of its own adjustments on the spur of the moment.

"It's probably not going to be a sustainable method." Rose holds her hand up, casting an eye between the ark and her hand and the Gate, and Jade can almost feel Rose's estimate as she measures their odds. "But we have to try."

"Borrowing Eridan! Be right back!" Jade calls, broadcasting it via Pesterchum as well so that Kanaya and Terezi can hear it back near the Battleship over and Leviathan's triumphant shriek. Jade keeps a grip on Rose's hand and jumps them to Eridan. He looks harried, violet-tinged sweat streaking down his pallid face as he looks up at them in instinctive suspicion, but just puts out a claw with a grimace when he sees they're not a tangle.

"Jade, wai-" Terezi calls, her voice small over the distance between them, right as Jade teleports the three of them down the line to Ark Defiance. They're miles and miles and miles away from Terezi now, and Eridan immediately snarls and slices through the sticky, barbed line attaching the hook to Leviathan, so Jade switches entirely to Pesterchum while Rose strides forward to burn the hook itself.

GG: what is it? D:
GC: SH1T. 1 C4N’T S33 – B3FOR3 YOU L3FT, TH3R3 W4SN’T A FL4SH OF SOM3TH1NG WRONG –
GG: oh no!
GG: keep me posted if it gets clearer
GC: NO… 1T W4SN’T YOU. 3XC3PT M4NY POT3NT14L MOM3NTS OF STUP1D L1F3 CHO1C3S, H3R3. >:T
GC: 1 W1SH YOU H4DN’T STOL3N ROS3. >;
GG: i pinky promise!
GC: SOM3TH1NG 1S 4BOUT TO H4PP3N. 4GH! WH4T DO 1 N33D TO CH4NG3?!

"Can you keep them off me while I focus?" Jade calls to Rose and Eridan, as she kneels to lay both hands on the hull of Ark Defiance. As Rose and Eridan work to sear and blast away Leviathan, Jade can feel the gaping hole in the side of the ark ship, the metal wrenched and torn so that entire blocks are exposed to the ambient air of the Medium. At least they don't have to worry about the sudden pressure change sucking everyone out of the hole, like they would've if they were in regular outer space!

"I have a good thing goin' here," Eridan says, as he starts to rise up and fire more wild bolts at Leviathan from above. Leviathan, realizing that they're stealing its one catch, bellows with three distinct voices that make the metal under Jade's hands ripple uncomfortably, but the ark holds. "How long do you need?"

"Hopefully only a few seconds! Relocating this much mass without messing everyone up inside needs some concentration." Then Jade sinks herself into it, and casts her space sense through the ship to size everything up with Bec's extra layer of perception. Her doggy ears perk up, unconsciously, but Jade's more concerned with - ah, there. The same organic growth that underlies the ark's metal armor struggles to grow and cover the massive, smoking hole, but it's almost there - one more second and there will be a makeshift patch holding everyone inside the ark. "Are you coming along for the ride?" she asks Eridan, as her skin begins to boil and churn with galaxies and neon green starlight.

"No!" Eridan flies further out, peppering Leviathan with more lightning, which distracts the Horrorterror from trying to form another harpoon. When the original harpoon burns away, leaving acid and scorch marks around the ragged metal edges of the sealed gap, Rose runs back to Jade and slides to a stop, laying her palms over the back of Jade's hands. Jade doesn't need the extra focus, per se, but Rose lights up the most fortuitous location for them to teleport Ark Defiance - just close enough that it'll be through the Gate in less than a minute, but not close to the point that she and Jade get sucked along for the ride to parts unknown.
Jade nods her head, a fierce grin spreading across her face as she spreads her power all around the ark in a layer of crackling green light -

GC: NO, W41T!
GC: K4N-

Teleporting it smacks her apart at the seams, and for a second, Jade burns like a fusion core. Rose's hands on hers stay solid and real, and Jade strains against the tight grip for a second before remembering that she's supposed to want to be person-shaped again after they're through. There's a second's delay, and then Ark Defiance snaps back together like a rubber band, so far from the rest of the fleet that the Battleship looks like a bright red tugboat in the distance. Jade's fizzes like starry soda for a second more before collapsing herself into a nice, not-fizzy Jade body again, releasing her held breath and swaying as she gathers her thoughts again. "Made it," she says, with a silly laugh, and Rose sighs in turn, with a short chuckle at the end.

Rose raises her eyes, and sees the fleet over Jade's shoulder.

Jade looks up, and sees the Gate blazing with light right before them, radiating calm and welcome and -

"No," Rose says, her voice horribly flat, in a way that drops Jade's stomach out from under her in an unpleasant, cold twist. "No, no!"

- and Rose tears away from Jade, running along the ship with an agonizing scream. Jade launches after her, moving on pure instinct, kicking Ark Defiance toward the Gate without looking or measuring or anything as she zaps Rose right back to the rest of the fleet. Terezi's screaming too, while Jade's ears ring and pop with the terrible, awful scream Rose makes right in her ear -

- Terezi hacks through the tentacle in one go, but there's already jade blood everywhere, and Kanaya comes out in terrible, crushed pieces, like a horrible look at what happened to Feferi earlier -

Rose wrestles free from Jade's grip, while Jade waits, sluggish and still with her ears ringing and throbbing, for Kanaya to come back.

Jade reaches out to Prospit, brute-forces her senses past the veil of Equius's power.

Half of Prospit is gone.

Half of Sollux's huge, reality-hacking work -

- is in shattered pieces, while the rest shudders and liquifies and collapses in on itself in a meltdown.

This is how it ends.

The White Queen tosses PM to Prospit's altered towers, and then veers away, brushing past the Heir of Void and the Rogue of Heart in a sweet, singing sweep of her wings. Noir has poisoned the space around him with sickly Green Miles and radiation to such an extent that only the Heir can approach him - and approach he has, bearing the Rogue along on his shoulders in the safety of his void shields. They strike at Noir again and again - the Heir's fists roil with black shadows that cut off Noir's attacks, while the Rogue's clawkind slice into Noir's shoulder and come away with soulstuff streaming in her wake. Between the two of them, with the Mage and Maid striking from afar, they've driven Noir further from Prospit and Skaia.

The War Queen knows precisely when to slide in alongside them and thrusts her sword through Noir's hip joint. With a twist, she pops his leg from the joint before his greedy, destroying insides can eat through her blade, and Noir howls at her in mindless rage as green sludge pours from the stump of his leg.

WQ: Enough.

JN: Interferin' bitch.

Despite the beat of war playing through her, the White Queen feels remarkably at peace. Noir is not the right Queen, but then, she is not sure she would want to fight her cousin-queen anymore. Queen versus Queen, one of War and one corrupted, corroding himself with his own rotted powers -

This is how it ends.

Yes. This is how it ends.

JN: You can't win this one.

He is, in this instance, completely correct.

But that does not mean that he is going to win. It never has. The WQ raises her sword and shakes her head, with a smile that comes easily to her mouth. Noir snarls back, parts of his mottled carapace cracking further still with the force of his fury - he looks like a molten planet, the plates of his shell shifting over the seething green core within him, and his eyes are overflowing green saucers that eat away at his face with raw power.

Instead of charging her and commencing their battle in earnest, though, Noir sneers - and teleports away, bypassing her and reappearing as a green star beside one of Prospit's tallest towers. He leaves a star of dead space in his wake, that will not repair itself before the end. Green lightning erupts from the half-melted wreck of his arm, and shears through Prospit like a forest of branching spears.
Several towers erupt into flame and begin to sag, dripping enormous quantities of molten honey, and the bees that swarm around the towering mainframes shriek and shrill in the White Queen's mind.

"Keep him away from the terminals!" the Mage of Doom yells, clutching his head. "Kanaya's not -Motherfucker!" Then he races forward toward Prospit, oblivious to the danger of flying so close to Noir as his wings begin to singe at the edges -

The Maid of Time snaps her claws, and the Mage vanishes back in time with the turn of a rust-red clock. A future version of him has been down at the terminal for some time now, and Skaia echoes contentment at a loop complete. Wincing, the Maid falls back, her claw pressed to her side as she sags. Meanwhile, Noir's attack sinks deeper and deeper, and entire spires built of honeycomb split apart and erupt with blazing liquid as it melts into slag.

Her kingdom is dying.

Her people are safe, and gone.

And yet this is what it feels like, to watch one's world fall apart. No wonder every species that participates in the great Game mourns so fiercely. The pain shatters something in her, for she knows there will never be another incarnation of Prospit. Soaring through the fresh grief, the White Queen seizes both the Heir and the Rogue and carries them forward. "Thanks for the lyift!" the Rogue says, as she and the Heir peel away and, borne along by the momentum of the WQ's flight, slam into Noir like cannonballs. The Heir slams a wave of void over Noir's head, and the Green Miles cut off with a shudder as Noir falls back.

It is not enough. Prospit continues to boil, while the Mage works frantically below to salvage what he can, while the White Queen's awareness follows PM as she struggles to free a half-submerged ship from the flooded remains of a launch bay.

He will fail. PM will not. Skaia wants this too much - but the WQ does not want it at all. It breaks her heart, when she realizes, but -

This is how it ends.

Noir lashes out with his ring hand and shoves the Heir away with brute force when space fails him. Then he turns his claw toward the reeling Maid, his eyes narrowed with hate for all the world.

JN: Die.

WQ: [Abating Refutation]

The White Queen cancels him out before his corrupted power can leave his skin; she smothers him for an instant, and then his sickly fire burns through her restriction. He glowers at her and only her, and stamps his foot as he lashes out at her with sharp blades of force.

JN: Shut up! Shut up shut up!

WQ: [Passive Quietude]

JN: Hbnrgl! –

It will only quiet him for a moment, though. If this were a battle against a true Queen, against her sister, they would draw. Again and again, they would clash, but no matter how much they destroyed as collateral, they could never kill each other. Their part of the game was always a draw, in some fashion.

Noir is too corrupted to be a proper Queen, though.

And through the shining curtain at the edge of the Medium, the Muse of Space's influence empowers anyone sharing her essential nature. The Witch of Space, the Sylph of Space, Doctor Scratch, the transportalizers aboard the ships -

Jack Noir.

This was not a battle the White Queen could ever win, even as a War Queen. Space is simply too powerful an aspect, in this final game. She could refute him a thousand times, but he'll bounce back and inflict another molten crater in Prospit the moment she loses focus. It is a strife that could last a thousand years before the WQ's strength began to fail her.

They do not have another thousand years. PM's presence rises from Prospit; her spaceship's engines choke and sputter - it won't fly much longer, but PM pushes it on with the driven determination of any carapacian behind the wheel.

Even if she were to arrive in time, it would not be enough. The White Queen can sense Skaia's will quite clearly from here, bleeding through the broken crust of the Battlefield with heady resonance, and now -
Time for a Reckoning. The fastest meteors have already had plenty of time to cross the expanse of the Medium, but one bears the tell-tale signs that someone whipped it along with furious intent, hard and fast enough that it almost shook apart into fragments with the sheer force of its flight.

Noir will teleport out of the way.

The White Queen lowers her sword, and forces down the cry of War that urges her to fight to the very end.

WQ: PM.

PM: What is it?

WQ: You are an excellent Protégé.

PM: Wait, no!

The White Queen casts herself upon Noir with a piercing shriek - he shouts back, something harsh and riddled with green static, but she pays no heed as he stabs her through the torso. The ring slips easily from her claw - the only challenge requires her to throw it back over her shoulder, and then grapple Noir close. She has utterly bewildered him; he's caught mid-snarl, stalled out for three precious, fleeting seconds as he stares at her uncomprehendingly. Beyond the hate, beyond the madness, she thinks she catches a glimpse of the confused carapacian who cracked under his own wild grasp at power.

WQ: Farewell.

WQ: I'll see you soon.

The Black Queen's meteor slams into them at nearly a hundred kilometers a second. Noir's sword snaps in two, the point still lodged deep under her shell, and the White Queen holds onto him with grim determination, using her bare claws to smash his reeling head against the meteor with crushing force to keep him stunned as the meteor drives them down toward the Battlefield.

Behind her, the White Queen's ring falls over and over in seven perfect turns before it finds PM's outstretched claw.

--

The Black Queen raises the King's Scepter over her head, and slams it down in time with the meteor that levels the cathedral. She stands stock still for a moment, oblivious to the shockwave and the gravel and dust that slews past her in great clouds - all that remains of the cathedral apart from the ground it stood on - and absorbs what it feels like to be utterly alone. She's been torn in half before in more than one round of the Game, but it never felt like this -

BQ: [The Queen Is Dead]

No. They can't come back from this.

She wants to be angry at the stupid, stupid waste of it all - and so: she is. Rage is a heady drug, one her King lost himself in, and the Black Queen spins on her heel to stare down the crater at Noir. It is easy to cut off and cauterize anything she might feel, seeing the shattered White Queen tossed to the side while Noir continues to breathe - the Black Queen carved anything resembling love or grief out of herself long ago. This is fine.
BQ: Noir.

She raises the scepter, and pulls another meteor down from the sky. This is why she shrugs off Skaia's intimations, the hints that she should coordinate the meteors to take care of the doomed creatures trying to escape their preordained end. Avoiding the defense portals and calling more meteors to hammer down on Noir takes all her concentrated fury. Noir drags himself out of the way at the last moment, half of his body mangled and sluicing sickly green fluid from a stump of a leg and a crushed arm. He flickers all over, and the Black Queen recognizes the rancid rage that burns in his eyes as he spits up irradiated blood.

JN: Fuck you!

It requires all her exhausted reserves of patience to speak coherently as she takes another step forward, and flattens him with another meteor strike.

BQ: You killed my sister.

Another step, and the next meteor cracks the Battlefield open. White and black shrapnel shoots toward her, but she knocks most of it aside with a wave of shadow. Noir wheezes rather than teleporting; most of his shell is broken, and he leaks from every pathetic orifice. One eye has burst, and the remains hang dead and dark in their socket compared to the festering green of his exposed body. He digs his ring claw into the churned earth and drags himself forward - his arm stays barely out of the impact zone as the Black Queen calls meteor after meteor, each one smaller and more compact than the last.

BQ: You stole my ring.

Each meteor cracks the Battlefield further. If she goes too far, she might hit something…unfortunate.

She can't bring herself to care. Oh so carefully, the Black Queen takes one final step, and Noir brushes the tip of her toe before he freezes, raises his head on a weak, snapped neck, and gazes up at her. Like a supplicant. Flat on his belly. Imploring.

As he should be.

BQ: And if you think you can still win…

She lifts her toe, forcing his chin up, and smiles deeply at the agony that flickers across his broken shell of a face.

BQ: …you're even more pathetic than I thought.

JN: You - can't kill me - bitch -

The Black Queen lowers her foot, and then kicks it up, snapping Noir's head back and knocking him backward. He doesn't even have the strength or wherewithal to catch himself before slamming into a chunk of the cathedral's cornerstone.

BQ: Watch me.

JN: Mggmlghagh

She swathes her whole claw in shadowy armor, the scepter forgotten now as she strides forward and hauls Noir up by his neck. The last of his coursing green power makes her carapace crawl and sizzle - but up close, she can see the deep gouges in his shoulder where someone tore into his soul.
Rogue. One of her own resident annoyances, no less. If she had any room in her scorched, hollow cardiovascular center to feel anything but fury, she'd be amused. Rogues of Heart are deceptively deadly creatures; Noir probably doesn't realize why his power slowly wanes. He can be as powerful as he wants, can poison as much space as he so desires with his rage. But the very essence of his self drains away in slow, subtle leaks, and the ring cannot save him from this.

BQ: You're stronger than any Queen, by virtue of your mutated nature. Stronger even a War Queen.

BQ: But you forget one thing, Jack.

The Black Queen raises her ring claw, and splays out what remains of her individual claws before Noir's sagging, rage-twisted face. He bares his teeth and tries to bite her claws off, but she doesn't have a ring claw at the moment - only the weeping, bleeding stump where the wound has never healed. She smiles, forcing his head back, and sets her mutilated claw to his shoulder.

And then she rips his arm off. Noir screams as the ring detaches, and the horrible mess of his insides begins to ooze out from his unstrung, shattered shell of a carapace. He has pushed his body to the utter limits of what a carapacian body can survive, but without the power of Queenhood to sustain him, he's little more than mottled shell fragments and irradiated pulp.

With deep relish, the Black Queen removes the ring from his claw. Noir thrashes on the ground as she dumps him like the irrelevant waste he is, slowly liquifying the ground beneath him as he and Prospit rupture and melt down in delightfully droll unison. Two fresh claws thrust out of the bleeding stumps in the Black Queen's hands, fresh grown and with the brilliant polish of new shell growth.

Jack Noir attempts to say something. But his voice can no longer reach her.

BQ: And it sings for more than your contemptible temper tantrums.

The Black Queen dons her ring, and does not contain herself. Noir lets out an audible shout of pain as the tide of shadows surges from her, singing and silencing and fracturing the ground as the Black Queen tips back her head and knocks Jack Noir back for the last time. [Long Live The Queen] rolls through the air, and the Black Queen summons a real sword - one black as the Void with a shadowy hilt; something fitting for the execution of the wretched, contemptible traitor who has stolen her cousin-queen from her for the last time, stolen any hope of them fighting Queen to true Queen, and dying in glorious battle -

BQ: It sings for War.

She raises her sword.

A Prospitian Monarch plunges from the sky, and drives her pale sword through Jack Noir's chest with a piercing cry. The impact finishes cracking the crust of the Battlefield, and the Black Queen's heart stops and trembles, as though it may not start again, as she stares through the cloud of dust in bleak, useless hope -

It is not her. It could never be her, ever again. She should have known better, but the White Queen's ring fits well on this new claw, and the resemblance is uncanny. Disappointment proves a bitter pill to swallow.

She would rather rage than feel pain.

BQ: Really now.
The Prospitian Meddler looks up slowly. Her claws tremble slightly on her sword as she yanks it from Noir's lifeless body and looks back down at her hands.

PM: He killed her!

PM: …I killed him?

Croaking abomination, spare her from inexperienced, ascendant pawns. The Black Queen chains her hostility long enough to snort in contempt; she judges the PM with a sweep of her eyes, and finds her lacking. She's never in the mood to be charitable.

BQ: Your delivery could use some work.

BQ: Now, the only question is: how stupid are you going to be today?

Rather than acknowledging the Black Queen's challenge, the Prospitian Monarch opens and closes her claws, her dark eyes full of confusion and stark grief. Then she closes her eyes and pulls herself together - finally, the Black Queen thinks, already tapping her foot impatiently - and glares at the Black Queen, firm and resolute.

PM: I'm not stupid, thank you.

PM: And my DELIVERIES are always made in a timely fashion!

She boosts herself upright, using her sword as a temporary crutch, and then steadies herself after her prototyped wings almost unbalance her. The PM is clearly unused to the channeled force of being Queen; she doesn't raise her sword, and instead watches the Black Queen warily. War, the ring cries, more immediate and urgent and persuasive now than all of Skaia's insistence, and the Black Queen eagerly curls her claws. Come, then.

The Prospitian Monarch continues to disappoint. She hesitates, her thin body trembling with some ill-repressed mirror of the BQ's hostility - and then lowers her sword again with a shake of her head, all the tension slackening from her shoulders in a rush.

Drowning in rage at the silent refutation, the Black Queen snarls.

BQ: Well?!

PM: I don't want to fight you.

PM: A friend of mine always says that when Monarchs fight, everyone else pays for it.

PM: I won't do it.

It's unfair. It's - the Black Queen does not have words for how utterly ridiculous that response is. The best she could do to approximate it would be a fraught, ululating shriek with many voices, and a stab. But she checks herself before it bursts forth from her chest. She is not her King, no matter how tempting it would be to crush this infuriating, pale shadow of a Queen for her impudence.

BQ: Your friend is a rebellious heretic whom I could squash with one claw.

Then the Black Queen turns her back on the Prospitian Monarch. A calculated insult, an opening no one gripped by war's throes would normally be able to ignore.
But neither of them are normal. The rage extinguishes in her chest in a dull crush, and the Black Queen scrubs her face with the back of her claw. If the Prospitian Monarch can't even bring herself to stab her in the back, there's really no hope for a final battle. She hefts the King's Scepter instead and stalks away, layering herself with more overlapping scales of shadowy armor as she leaves the Monarch in her wake.

BQ: Begone. I have a Reckoning to complete.

PM: Not if you're going to hurt them!

The sharp, clear challenge in her voice does not go unheard. Spinning wildly - too eagerly - the Black Queen rounds on her. The Prospitian stands her ground, despite the flood of aggression that roils between them. She has raised her sword against the Black Queen, and the ecstatic distraction of battle burns through the BQ's veins.

BQ: It must be finished.

BQ: Unless you would prefer your heroes were never born at all.

She says it mockingly. She should not have said it at all. It does the opposite of what war begs of her - it causes the Prospitian Monarch to hesitate, and then slump her shoulders as she lets her sword droop and stab into the dirt.

If the Prospitian won't see sense on her own, the Black Queen fails to see the point of fighting her. A pale imitation, indeed. There wouldn't be any true satisfaction in killing her.

She will never be satisfied.

BQ: Go. Deliver them.

This time, she does not stop as she walks away. There's no point to moving - she can finish summoning the Reckoning from anywhere on the Battlefield - but if she stands here a moment longer she will strike the Pretending Monarch down just for a burst of impotent, pointless gratification that will flicker and die before her body hits the ground.

PM: Why are you helping?

Her mental voice is quiet, the Black Queen thinks, but not weak. Since all she has left is spite and an emptiness inside her, she lets both fill her voice.

BQ: Because Skaia wishes it. Because she does not wish it.

BQ: Because all her grand paradoxes and contradictions and arbitrary loops have finally come back to undo her.

BQ: Because this is the end of all things, and my cousin-queen is dead for the last time.

BQ: Take our people, and get them out of my sight. I am sick to death of caring.

She goes. When the Prospitian Monarch launches herself into the Medium, bearing the hollow shell of the Black Queen's other half, the Black Queen does not look back.

--

x
The last thing, uh, that Tavros wants to do at this point, is draw Vriska's attention. So far, Vriska's been happy to monologue at him, a stream of chatter and snide comments that comes in fits and starts as they descend further into Skaia, and hasn't mentioned killing him to make him go god tier more than three or four times. For Vriska, that's almost nice.

But Tavros can't not say it anymore. He gulps deeply and huddles his shoulders so that his body stops shivering with apprehension. "Uh, Vriska."

"Yeah?" she says, distractedly. She's been humming to herself for a while now rather than actively talking at him, but the weird echo overlapping all the sounds down here didn't make it a very, uh, nice silence. Skaia is not hollow on the inside, like Tavros thought it was when they started flying down here. The crystal firmament extends in almost all directions, apart from the path down along the branch that they are following, so dark that it only looks like hollow, empty space. But Tavros can put out his claw and touch it - he'd really rather not, though. That sounds like, uh, a phenomenally bad idea. Even worse than all his current ideas combined. The branch winds through the dark, almost imperceptible facets of crystal, and Tavros fears that they'll be floating down forever. His pan shudders at the sudden certainty that they'll be falling down an endless corridor of dark stone in an endless loop - just him and Vriska, and the echoes.

"I really, uh, get the feeling we shouldn't be down here," he says. It's, uh, the biggest uhnderstatement (haha…) of his life. But he thinks it gets his point across.

Vriska throws an annoyed look back at him, her nose scrunched up and nostrils flaring in a way that would be kind of funny if it were anyone but Vriska making the face. "God! You're such a wimp! How did I get stuck with you, again?" she demands. Then she tosses her hair with a flick of her claw and zooms away from him, her faint 'tch!' whispering again and again through the shimmering, not-quiet-enough air of the branching corridor. Tavros half-imagines that he can see a couple of echoes pool and vibrate in the cup of one of the giant ivory leaves that grow from the branch - like shimmery silver spools of text that sink into the leaf's pale grey veins.

He thinks that this place might be driving him a little bit crazy. It makes him miss Gamzee - at least Gamzee would be able to help him laugh about it. Vriska's just mean about it.

Down they go. Tavros loses all sense of time. The thought of checking his phone makes him feel woozy, and he can't tell which would be worse - if he looks and sees that they've only been down here for a few minutes, or if they've been falling for days. The only point of reference that he has is the pale white branch itself, and it stretches on ahead of them and behind them now like a winding ribbon through the dark, with no sign of the rift they entered through. Tavros feels his lungs constrict at the thought that maybe the rift sealed behind them and shut them in down here forever. The thought echoes and throbs in his head, and he shivers in his seat as he pushes his rocketchair faster to catch up with Vriska.

The only thing that could make being trapped down here worse is if he were trapped alone. He scoots all the way until he's level with Vriska. It draws her ire for a second before she dismisses him again, and they descend.

The change is so sudden, but so imperceptible, that Tavros blinks and misses it. One moment, they're surrounded by claustrophobic crystal and echoes and the faint tracery of light flickering through the stone around them - the next, he realizes that he's not looking at faint, swirling patterns anymore.

It's another branch, far off in the distance. It radiates pale light just like the one they're following, and the light refracts over and over through the kilometers of transparent crystal between them. Vriska speeds up again, with a sharp 'Ha!' and Tavros keeps pace with her as she skips and bounces along the bark of their branch with her arms flung wide. Ahead of them, a wall of silver slowly comes into view. It stretches as far as Tavros can make out, up and down.

But it's not until they hit the bottom of the tunnel that Tavros realizes he is looking at the trunk of an immense tree. Their branch joins the trunk in a slow gradient, from white to silver, and Vriska follows the trunk straight down until they hit the glass-clear surface of the dark ground. Through the crystal, Tavros can just barely make out the white, branching roots spreading down below - like mirror images of the branches above. He looks up, and dizziness rolls his head in circles as he struggles to take in the size of the tree. There are more branches visible from down here, an entire crown of them stretching out into the dark. The grooves in its bark are as twice as wide as he is, and then some. Glossy blue apples cluster near the intersection of the branches and the trunk and at points where the branches meet further out in the firmament, and occasionally the light shifts and makes them look extra shiny.

And more silver trees rise up in the distance - so far away that they probably branch out underneath an entirely different hemisphere of the Battlefield, but so ridiculously enormous that Tavros can see them from half a planet away.

"These trees are huge," Tavros whispers, mostly to himself. He, uh, doesn't need Vriska to tell him that he's stating the obvious, thanks. It just…needs to be said. Or his pan might just not absorb it.

[HannaH: We have visitors.srotisiv evah eW]

"Let's go. This way," Vriska says, laughing with excitement as she starts to fly around the trunk of the tree. For a split second, Tavros pauses, something echoing and cramping in his stomach. He could have sworn he heard something in that pause, but Vriska talked right over it. Maybe it was just another echo.

He doesn't think it was another echo. Tavros shivers a little harder, and looks back over his shoulder worriedly as they go around the tree and find another passage deeper into the core. "Did you hear something whisper?" he asks, after he's worked up his nerve again, as he eyes the branches laced over their heads warily.

Vriska sighs in exasperation. "No, I didn-' she starts to say, scornfully - but then her face freezes in a frown, her eye with too many pupils flicking to the side.

As though she just heard something. Slowly, Vriska starts to laugh, with an edge that makes Tavros ease away from her like she's wearing eight peligro signs. "Haha. Come out, come out, wherever you are…" she says, turning in slow circles like a shark as she prowls further down the tunnel.

A blue apple the size of a cantaloupe bounces off Vriska's horns like a gummy, squishy bouncy ball. "Ouch!" Vriska exclaims, smacking her head with a claw, and she whips around to stare at Tavros in disbelief. "Who threw that?! Tavros, what the fuck?!"

"It wasn't me!" Tavros says, hastily, holding up both claws. Another bouncy apple drops from above to prove his innocence a second later - Vriska spins around, her hair flying out behind her, and drops into a defensive crouch as she stares suspiciously at the branches above. There's a lot of fruit growing over their heads, actually. "No one threw it. It just, um, fell from the branch," Tavros says - it's what he wants to be true, anyway. The thought that there's someone else down here with them suddenly turns his stomach ice cold.

[EvE: No respect for apples these days!syad eseht selppa rof tcepser oN]

[NooN: - music seen as light -]
"I know you're there!" Vriska yells, and her voice makes real echoes this time as she snarls and whirls in a wild circle. Her dice glitter between her claws, but without a target to throw them at Vriska stalls out. She shoots a searching glare at Tavros, but all he can do is shake his head back. He can barely hear the words, let alone make out where they're coming from. Who they're coming from.

Vriska flies back to him, raking the dark crystal and the silver trees with her glowing eyes. When she reaches the rocketchair, she grabs Tavros by the shoulder - and hoists herself up behind him into Nepeta's spot. The clicking growl in her throat reaches Tavros's ears very easily from here, and he shudders at the sudden coolness behind his back.

On the one hand, he'd rather have her there than - nothing. Better Vriska, who he knows wants to kill him a little, than having his back exposed to whatever is whispering in here…

On the other, he knows better than to think Vriska would ever let him fly back the way they came. Sucking in a breath to fill his tight lungs (how is there enough air down here) Tavros directs the rocketchair forward again, at a snail's pace compared to their speed earlier.

It says a lot that Vriska doesn't comment on his little baby attitude.

The branches over their heads, growing between the trunks rather than away from them, are different. The deeper they go down this path, the tighter the branches lace together - always in perfect coils, always matching the exact patterns of the roots below the clear ground. Perfectly symmetrical. But the branches overhead begin to shade a darker grey, while the heavy clusters of apples begin to thin out. The passage curves around very slowly - until, uh, Tavros looks up again and realizes that through the lacey ceiling of dark grey branches, he can see they're almost in the middle of the four trees. They're so huge that it's hard to tell, but he thinks they really are all symmetrical -

"Dammit!" Vriska swears, and Tavros wrenches his attention away from the trees in time to slam on the brakes before he rams them into a wall of black branches. The dark grey of the branches above fooled him; they shade to black so quickly that it blends into the dark crystal. Vriska rises up on her feet and leans over Tavros, her dice at the ready. "Fine. The hard w-"

[LuuL: They have been granted right of passage.egassap fo thgir detnarg neeb evah yehT]

[NooN: - born out of the world of sunless things -]

"They're letting us in," Tavros says, super fast, before Vriska can cast her dice.

"They? Tavros, what are you mumbling about?" she says, harshly, glaring down at him from above - but Tavros sits with his back straight and refuses to crumple under her angry glare. She heard them earlier. He knows she did.

And he thinks he knows who it is. "I'm pretty sure the trees are talking!" he hisses, unwilling to raise his voice above a whisper - but it's no good. His words echo and reverberate, and the branches soak all the sound in with a rustle of their leaves. "Just listen!"

[EvE: Tweak the strings for NooN.NooN rof sgnirts eht kaewT]

[NooN: - flows and ebbs and flows -]

Finally, after a pause, Vriska's lips twitch, and she laughs in his face before pushing herself back. "Guess we're not in Kansas anymore." She keeps talking, her voice rising in volume, even as the pitch black branches before them start to slither and part in measured coils. They open the path with disturbingly precise motions as curve after curve of branch sinks into the crystal firmament. "If the trees want a fight, they can have one. But we're here for the big shot. The CEO! The boss herself!"

Vriska gestures grandly as the final four branches curve away at the same time, and Tavros fumbles the controls with shaky claws before driving them forward through the entrance. His pusher feels like it's lodged somewhere in his throat. He cannot talk, so it's, uh, great to have Vriska talking a lot.
Otherwise the anxious anticipation might actually strangle him -

[LuuL: They have arrived.devirra evah yehT]

They emerge in the core, and Tavros realizes, with a sinking sensation…

That he knows exactly what lives here, at the heart of all things.

Dark crystal branches surround them in a spiraling sphere of endlessly linked spirographs. The symmetrytrees loop and rise to dizzying heights around them, as the being that coils in incomprehensible, mind-breaking whorls of perfect Order shifts, and produces two bright, shining eyes to fondly regard Tavros and Vriska. The eyes are both copies of Skaia, white and blue and swirling in constant motion, complete with all the rifts and fires and shattered buildings up above.

Vriska says it. Tavros can't even breathe, pinned by that endlessly, horribly benevolent gaze.

[…]That's a Horrorterror.]

[Wait. Is that…my voice?]

The Horrorterror slides two branches - tendrils - from sockets in the walls of the sphere, and twines them in a double helix.

[Attention: the Page of Breath and Thief of Light have Arrived.]

[Children.]

Skaia leans forward.

[Do I remind you so much of my Brother?]
Music Seen As Light

Chapter Summary

Light heard as music, music seen as light.
And with that second moondawn of the spring's
That fosters the first rose,
A sun-child brighter than the sunlit snows
Was born out of the world of sunless things
That round the round earth flows and ebbs and flows.

Chapter Notes

Chapters 30 and 31 have haunted me for, like, two years now.

Edit 7/4 Happy anniversary! Will I ever remember ahead of time and prepare something substantial for the special day? Probably not...
Edit 7/24 Well, Dave and Karkat are fighting me, so...everyone else gets posted before them! :V Kanaya's next section starts at "Kanaya steps through a door" and it continues on through the end of the chapter.
Edit 8/12 WELL THIS CONTINUES TO TAKE FOREVER. I'm live posting Karkat's sections as I finish them but honestly progress has been so stilted that I don't even know what's wrong with my writing brain. Starts at "John's not here to make a dumb movie reference."
Edit 8/25 My god...I hate when a chapter takes this long...I have three sections from Chapter 32 already done, while Dave's been languishing here unwritten. Starts at "Dave starts dying around page 45." and we're done! We're fucking done!

Please, please click the [x] link for the music in Jade's section. Of Gods and Witches is the theme of the whole chapter, but especially for her.

See the end of the chapter for more notes

ARC X - ABSOLUTION

Ectobiology is boring, and what does it get Sollux? A bunch of pudgy human babies, a bunch of equally pudgy yet spikey wrigglers, and the sad, pathetic scraps of his remaining fucks to give. Shooting a dour glare at grub Kanaya does exactly jack shit to stop her from gnawing on the corner of the computer terminal, and no matter what he does both Gamzee and Dave keep vanishing and reappearing to crawl up his damn legs. Aradia is somehow worse - right now she's curled up on the top of his head, so it feels like he's wandering around wearing a squishy, grub-shaped crown that occasionally rearranges itself.

Goddammit. He should have just made Karkat do this, no matter how convoluted the process would have been. Sollux has better things to do than wipe human spawn slobber off his pajamas and strap babies onto fate-riddled chunks of space rock.

Like dying. That's still a thing he has to do. Living on Derse gave this body some wiggle room, and the journey through the Veil to find the ectobiology lab bought him extra time, but eventually death's gonna hit him like a stack of bricks and he'll only have one body left to work with. Sollux set this rolling resurrection chain up specifically to minimize his chances of dying permanently anywhere along the line or in the future, and he wants it over with now before someone with the cosmic heft to smack him down decides to pay attention.

So baby Jade can stop hiccuping off her meteor any day now. Fuck, even as babies, all of his friends are still rampant assholes. Seething (literally) from his eyes as mustard yellow blood dribbles from his ears along with Aradia's extra warm spit-up, Sollux flings Eridan at the next meteor with a blast of psionics. The grub lands and somehow wedges in between two chunks of rock. Grub Eridan chirrs at him irritably as he floats past; Sollux flips him a middle claw, instantly feels shitty about it, and then moves on with his life. There's a god tier out there with his name on it - he doesn't have time to waffle around wondering if there might be karmic consequences to teaching impressionable grubs how to flip someone off.

…If all else fails, he can blame Karkat. There's no way that Karkat didn't flip the grubs off repeatedly while cloning them in the last game session; in fact, Sollux would bet a year's supply of abusable medications that Karkat is paradoxically responsible for his own foul mouth.

Tremors roll through the Medium as Sollux stuffs John onto the last meteor. A whole bunch of fresh nonsense flushes down toward them: Sollux's death starts to kick in right when the Reckoning lurches into motion, calling the meteors of the Veil in staggered waves. But Leviathan shrieks, and the Lord of Time cracks another huge section of reality into shards and gaping crevasses, and Sollux wobbles away from the line of baby-laden meteors with a loud snort of his nose - one last, futile attempt to inhale his imploding brain phlegm back into his cranium. One of Leviathan's stray tentacles smashes the ectobiology lab meteor into smithereens in a flailing spasm of pain as Sollux raises a claw and shoves against the air.

The meteors are going to make it without any problems. That's an incontrovertible fact - for the alpha timeline, at least, it's guaranteed. No ifs, ands, or glitches about it. Sollux laces them with extra geas mostly for the hell of it, since fuck help them all if any of his asshole friends smack their heads open on their carriage of space rock in this, the worst method of safe baby delivery ever devised by the universe. Then a burst of blood erupts in his mouth because fuck his life anyway, right?

A crack tears what's left of Derse in two, and meteors take care of the rest while Sollux spins out in a blood-fogged, agonized daze. He dies, and catches up with the rest of himself all in a rush, while the temporal distortion of the Veil deepens and warps into something utterly unsalvageable. A Gordian knot of malformed, delayed, inaccurate time, that can only be resolved in one fashion.

A quick, simple [crack], to slice the time apart.

Near the center of the Incipisphere, a Queen leaves her burden on LoFaF, and then flies out through the dark to meet the meteors halfway. She has several VIPs (very important packages) to deliver to their exit portals.

---

John's not here to make a dumb movie reference.
That doesn't stop Karkat's useless brainsponge from coming up with it when they reach page 75 out of a total of four hundred and thirteen. He can only take so much coordinate-punching, slime-producing monotony before his thinkpan starts to fry up some Egbert-worthy lines.

By page 154, he loses the internal fight and messages John the bait to respond to…whenever he responds to it. Yeah. No, Karkat's not fucking worried, why would you even ask -

CG: JOHN.
CG: I AM SO FUCKING SICK OF ALL THESE SNAKES.

And whenever John remembers how to use a fucking phone, he'll say on a plane? :D and Karkat will inform him that no planes are involved at all whatsoever, but John will just keep giggling over it. Karkat can picture it in his head as clear as day. He's spent too much time hanging around John while he chatters about his goofball movies, obviously.

"Next," he says, irritably - Dave's cue to reel off the info about the next snake they need to appearify genetic paradox slime from. They've got a terrible, boring snake-cloning rhythm here, which says awful things about the state of Karkat's life. But the flow of Dave reading off coordinates, Karkat typing them in and then slamming the appearify button before moving onto the next lets them speed through this far faster than he and Kanaya could, back in the day - tiny Sburb achievement notifications pop up in the bottom right corner of the screen with terrible snake puns with annoying frequency. They learned all the frog breeding nonsense slowly, through immense amounts of bullshit trial and error, and pieced most of the instructions together from clues scattered across both their lands - thank fuck this time they don't have to mess around with all that. And thanks to Aradia, they don't have to trek around Jade's steaming rainforest cesspit of a planet for fucking ages to grab the snakes after the fact. More and more often, Karkat aims the appearifier based on very familiar coordinates, and the screen fills up with one of many giant nets and tanks and in one memorable case, a weird magic circle, full of snakes tucked in and around Doctor Lalonde's lab.

Karkat hasn't touched the genetic anomaly settings. He doesn't even dare blink at them the wrong way. Those controls appear to adjust themselves automatically, and he's fine with it. Less chance of him fucking up and giving the Final Alchemy fucking reality-level cancer.

When Dave doesn't answer, Karkat's nostrils flare as he forces himself to take a deep breath. "Dave," he says, his claws digging tiny pinpricks into the console keys as he turns to glare at Dave.

"One second, man. Jeez," Dave says, without looking away from a hoard of multicolored snake eggs that fills that entire half of the platform. Dave shovels another fifty swirly, glittering eggs onto one of the main hills formed by the thousands of snake eggs, using his ridiculous fucking cape as an egg hamper, but that just sets off a small rainbow avalanche of eggs that roll down the side of the pile and across the platform in wobbly circles.

Karkat strongly considers how much satisfaction he would get out of storming down the mountainside and burying himself in a muddy grave. The answer: not enough. Not yet. "For fuck's sake - how many of these snake-shitting fucks do we need to clone, again?!" Because at the rate they're going, they're going to run out of volcano to stand on.

"Way too many. Like, what, fifty per page? 413 pages?" Dave pauses as he does the math in his head. "…Like 20k snakes, bro."

That muddy grave sounds more and more appealing. Like a full body mud mask to clear his pores and presumably fix his entire half-baked disaster of a life. Writhing around in a pile of LoFaF excrement is exactly how Karkat wants to go. "Fuck. I'd rather be dealing with sixteen chubby-cheeked shit-factories than this. I didn't miss regular ectobiology this much when cloning frogs."
Dave nods his head, and then gets that look on his face. The one he wears when he's about to suggest something terrible. "Could be worse. They could be showing up as baby snakes instead of eggs."

Which is just tempting fate. Karkat thought they had a handle on that, but it's too fucking late now. "God fucking - I'm blaming you if they start hatching now, Dave!" he says. While Dave grimaces and smacks his own forehead as realization hits, Karkat turns back to the terminal. "I'm gonna forge a fucking snake omelet," he mutters, mostly to himself.

Of course Dave hears him. "If you cook up a delicious snake brunch in the middle of the end of the world and no one has time to come eat it, would that be fucked up, or what?"

Karkat's phone goes off in his pocket.

EC: Please don't do that.

EC: At the very least, it would give you indigestion.

Karkat's head jerks up and he stares at the lava in disbelief. Echidna peeks out at him like a massive crocodile, her eyes and quills just barely visible over the churning surface of the Forge. Hephaestus gives him a reproving look, which is fucking bullshit. "Come on, you have giant ass hammers. Make a frying pan or something!" Dave says, waving a snake egg at Hephaestus.

HS: I'm not enabling either of you.

HS: Frying pans are a witch's specibus.

Hephaestus cracks his neck to the side with a sound like a boulder snapping in two; Karkat's so distracted by flinching at the sound that he almost misses Feferi swoop down to buzz Dave. Tucking her legs up before she can collide with him, Feferi careens cheerfully over Dave and then lands. "Shello!" she says, waggling her claws at the denizens.

"Feferi. Fucking finally. Tell that fuck to make us a frying pan," Karkat says. Hephaestus grumbles overhead and adjusts his mechanical brace, while Echidna starts snort-laughing bubbles into the lava.

Dave chokes - on his own spit, probably - while Feferi raises an eyebrow at Karkat. "Uh, no," she says, as she trots right up to the rocky edge of the Forge. Echidna rises up from the lava to bare all her teeth in a grin, and Feferi blows the giant monster a kiss. "Anything else I could do to kelp?" she asks.

"Depends. How good are you at juggling snake eggs?" Dave asks, deadpan.

Clicking her tongue, Feferi dips a weird curtsey to the denizens and then spins. Dave's back is turned to her as he hunches over more eggs - Karkat could swear those things are multiplying, despite the fact that progress has stalled out - so he misses the predatory glint flash in Feferi's eyes. Karkat sees it, with the well-honed instincts of someone trained not to fuck with cold-bloods in a hunting mood, and the only reason his instincts don't plaster him back against the terminal as Feferi leaps is that she's clearly aimed at Dave. Dave somehow doesn't flashstep out of the way in time, which means he probably deserves it when Feferi smacks her claw against the back of his head. "You are both terrible," she informs the air and the world at large, as she holds Dave's head in a vice grip and starts to pour Life shit over him.

…Karkat really needs to work on his visual imagery. Eurgh. Why does he do this to himself?

Dave twitches and goes stiff, still bent over the snake eggs with his head ducted so all Karkat can see is the back of his head while Feferi hums and heals whatever's gone wrong now. "Uh. Uncomfortable," he says, weakly.

"Sorry! If you don't want to conch out, you need take better care of yourself! Every time I see you, you've gotten worse," Feferi says, and pats him on the head before clicking her tongue a few times in time with whatever song she's humming to herself.

Then her claw goes very still, and she frowns. "Wait a second. Are you -"

Without warning, Dave twitches and farts off into thin air; Feferi yanks her claw back out of the way, with a belated yelp. Karkat, who by now is used to people rubbing their ability to disappear at will in his Aspect-challenged facehole (if he can't summon himself through conveniently placed puddles of blood, what is the fucking point?), scrapes his claws down his face and pulls out his phone so hard he nearly chucks it into the Forge. If their collective focus is this shot, he's just going to read the fucking recipe himself.

It only takes a few seconds for Dave to twitch back into view about two feet from where he started, but Karkat already has several choice paragraphs full of swearing saved for just such an occasion. Which takes some of the spontaneity out of yelling at Dave, but gives him the immense satisfaction of finally living out a scenario he's practiced over and over in his head ever since they realized Dave's time powers are fucking killing him. Dave's sense of obligation to inevitable misfortune is the bane of Karkat's fucking existence. "You're running a time loop?! Now? To bring back more eggs?!" Karkat demands, scandalized, as their pile of omelet fodder nearly doubles in size - they need to pick another breakfast-related egg dish to fry up because FUCK, this is ridiculous. And Dave SOMEHOW brings WV with him in the mini tidal wave of eggs; fuck only knows where the carapacian came from in the first place, but Dave reappears with the stoic expression of an idiot who doesn't fear gods, death, or Karkat dropkicking him through the Final Gate, and Karkat needs to fix that, ASAP. Preferably by dropkicking Dave through the Final Gate from across the Medium. With witnesses. "I hate you. I don't even a little bit like you."

"Have to," is all this future Dave says. The worst and most infuriating kind of excuse. It emerges too fast, his chattering erratic and tense, which means he's keyed up enough that he can't maintain the monotone. "The last third, we start mixing slime from appearifying the eggs instead. Gotta breed the shiniest, swirliest egg this side of a chicken's feathery ass." Just as WV cowers with a squeak of alarm and vanishes under a collapsing tower of eggs, Dave pauses and raises his head. He's apparently too distracted by his own terrible turn of phrase to rescue WV as the carapacian tries to flail his way free. "…Don't tell Oriole I said that shit."

Another two clock line scar point down his face at slightly different angles, toward his other shoulder. Already scabbed over. Of course. Because why would Dave do things by safe, carefully thought out halves, when he has stupidity down to such a science? After trying to come up with something more explicit and verbose to say and coming up dry, Karkat just settles for: "They're not. Fucking. Chicken eggs. Dave."

Dave presses his hands together, then taps them against his mouth as he stares at Karkat implacably. Karkat stares right back, stretched to the outer limits of his own sanity. "I'm on page 365, man. They can be whatever eggs we want them to be, at this point," Dave says, at last.

Feferi buries her face in her claws. Karkat may not understand all of words in the flurry of Italian that she mutters into her palms, but by fuck, he knows a torrent of swear words when he hears them.

And he completely agrees.
EB: you're sick of all these fucking snakes on this plane? :D
TC: don't a motherfucker mean motherfucking snakes
TC: ON A MOTHERFUCKING PLANE?
TC: :3)
CG: THIS IS UNAC-FUCKING-CEPTABLE. YOU TWO AREN'T ALLOWED TO TAG TEAM ME WITH PAN-THROBBINGLY STUPID BULLSHIT LIKE THIS.
EB: karkat you totally set that up on purpose, don't lie. :P
CG: SHUT THE FUCK UP.
CG: ARE YOU EVEN OKAY? WHAT HAPPENED OVER THERE?!
EB: uh, yeah, we're fine! otherwise we wouldn't be able to message you.
TC: SHIT'S FINE AS SHIT, BROTHER.
CG: NO. SHIT IS THE OPPOSITE OF FINE. YOU TWO WERE FIGHTING THE TRICKSTER AND ARADIA HAD TO BE THE ONE TO TELL ME YOU WERE IN DANGER!
EB: i mean, i didn't realize he was gonna show up and be his usual self…
EB: and then stuff happened a lot!
CG: BUT YOU WON?
EB: kiiinda? typheus said it was an okay choice and now i have all the grist hoard so…
CG: …AND THE TRICKSTER? WHY WAS HE EVEN THERE TO BEGIN WITH?
EB: he got turned into a tree.
EB: kinda.
CG: YOU KEEP SAYING 'KINDA.' WHICH COULD MEAN FUCKING ANYTHING.
'KINDA' CAN SUCK MY BULGE, I WANT QUANTIFIABLE HARD FACTS AND PHOTOGRAPHIC EVIDENCE SO I CAN CROSS HIM OFF MY CHART OF 'ENEMIES WE SHOULD BE WORRIED ABOUT BUT WHOM I DIDN'T FUCKING THINK WOULD BE RELEVANT TODAY SO WHAT THE EVERBURNING FUCK IS UP WITH THAT?'
TC: is that a real longass chart?
CG: YOU'D BE SURPRISED.
EB: yeah, he's gone.
EB: and.
EB: uh.
EB: so is my dad.
TC: :o(
CG: …HOW.
EB: i. don't think i can talk about it right now.
EB: not yet.
EB: but he's really dead so you don't have to worry about him at all anymore! :)
CG: I'M LOOKING INTO THAT SMILEY FACE'S DEAD, BLANK EYES, AND IT'S NOT WORKING, JOHN. I'M NOT FOOLED.
EB: after, okay?
EB: please.
TC: SHIT'LL GET MOTHERFUCKING SHOOSHED.
CG: WILL IT? BECAUSE TODAY SWAN DIVED INTO THE DEEP END OF GET FUCKED A LONG TIME AGO, AND OUR TRACK RECORD ISN'T GREAT.
TC: shi'll get shooshed on all ends.
EB: also dave set typheus on barack obama for weird legal reasons which…i don't even know where to start. :P
CG: YEAH, HE STARTED MUTTERING ABOUT THAT. AND I'M NOT SURPRISED.
THIS IS ENTIRELY IN KEEPING WITH WHO DAVE IS AS A HUMAN BEING, AND I CAN ONLY FEEL THE FAINTEST STIRRINGS OF APPALLED DISBELIEF.
CG: THE ONLY WAY THIS COULD POSSIBLY BE WORSE WAS IF TEREZI DECIDED tO HELP HIM.
-- gallowsCalibrator [GC] has joined the chat! --
GC: H3H3.
GC: H3H3H3H3H3H3H3H3H3H3.
GC: >;
GC: …
GC: JOHN. GAMZEE.
TC: yeah bro
EB: karkat?
CG: THIS GAME IS FUCKING STUPID, AND I'M PRETTY SURE WHOEVER WAS IN CHARGE OF DESIGNING IT WAS SNORTING THE STRONGEST COCAINE IN THE HISTORY OF THE UNIVERSE.
CG: I'M RADIATING SO MUCH IONIZED HATE RIGHT NOW THAT I COULD SET OFF A FUCKING DOSIMETER.
TC: PREACH, BROTHER.
EB: pfft.
CG: YOU LAUGH NOW, JOHN.
EB: anyway, i think we'll be at lofaf soonish! gotta drop off all this gristy goodness.
CG: PLEASE NEVER SAY GRISTY GOODNESS IN FRONT OF DAVE.
CG: BUT FUCK PLEASE GET OVER HERE, I CAN ONLY TAKE SO MUCH MORE SNAKE ZAPPING BEFORE I'M FORCED TO CRACK MY THINKPAN OPEN ON THE COMPUTER MONITOR. DAVE KEEPS CALLING THEM CHICKEN EGGS. I CAN PHYSICALLY FEEL MY BRAIN DISSOLVING INTO A RARE, FOUL SLUDGE WITH EACH PASSING SECOND, AND SOLLUX ISN'T EVEN HERE FOR ME TO COMPARE BRAIN-MELTING NOTES WITH.
TC: …
EB: yeah, yeah, on our way.
EB: man, i can't wait for this birthday to be over.
-
"DAVE!" Karkat shrieks over his shoulder. Sure, it's not that much louder than his normal volume, but he's been engrossed in texting and appearifying for the past few minutes, so the sudden escalation makes Feferi flinch and accidentally ram her elbow back into a towering pile of eggs, further burying WV in his egg grave.

The pursed lip bastard himself apparently expected this conversation. Depending on when Dave's at in the timeline right now on his incredibly ill-advised, self-destructive egg bender, he totally saw it coming, and Karkat quietly fumes over this. "Nubs McGee?" he says in return, as he swings around and leans half off one of the ectobiology…things. Fuck if Karkat knows what half this useless crap is called. As far as he's concerned, most if not all of the shit on this platform is decorative and exists only because Skaia felt like cluttering up the place.

"We skipped to the thirteenth! It's John's birthday right now!"

Of all the things to focus on, this is probably the least important. But it strikes Karkat all of a sudden, like a sharp slap to the face in the middle of a confused, milling crowd. John's birthday is happening right now as they speak, and on top of the usual apocalypse (fucking festive) he's just dealt with the Trickster and his dad all at once. Doctor Lalonde hinted and floated around the idea of a birthday cake but…baked goods? No one wanted to poke that one with a ten foot pole; then, suddenly, they were all rushing towards Las Vegas with their noses to the grindstone, and any talk of birthdays or presents mostly faded into the background. Karkat has a present for him, but in all this fresh fucking nonsense -
Dave holds up an egg with a lemon yellow swirl, like he's about to recite some kind of monologue to a skull. "Don't worry, dude. We're gonna get him a new universe. He's gonna love it," he says, sagely. As he does, he slowly leans further and further away from the ectobiology thing until he hangs off it at an angle. He looks like he's about to keel over -

PM: Witch of Life!

PM: Please!

Because their lives consist of an endless parade of random shit happening in a consistently disruptive fashion, of course a Prospitian Monarch crash lands in one of the few remaining clear pockets of space on the egg-laden platform. The carapacian carves through the air and dents the floor with both feet; the impact jolts Karkat off his feet for a split second, and he starts floating rather than worry about landing. Dave wheels his arms frantically to try to keep his balance, and narrowly avoids landing on his ass. Across the platform, WV surges up to push an arm out of his egg-heap with serious effort, but only makes it halfway before green light flashes and he phases on top of the pile. The body in PM's arms smolders and looks nine-tenths cracked; Karkat makes an aborted move forward, but the carapacian isn't bleeding, by this point. Feferi gives up trying to pin Dave for the fifth time and vaults over WV's pile to reach PM and the shattered White Queen in her arms. "What happened?!" Feferi says, her eyes darting over the WQ's smoking form as she puts out a claw to gingerly prod one of cracked plates of shell.

PM: She took off her ring and gave it to me. And then got hit by a meteor.

PM: I have to go. But you, Witch -

PM: Please.

PM raises her head and stares at Feferi, her dark eyes bleak; she clutches the White Queen's body close to her chest instead of laying her on the platform, like she already expects to hear 'it's too late.' Karkat sags back against the terminal, woozy, as the heat of the Forge suddenly sends a dizzy rush through his head. He doesn't think he can feel a pulse from here - if it were just him up here, that's probably the answer PM would get. He's basically just the Knight of Fuckall when half of her blood got left behind wherever this happened -

Feferi closes her claws into a fist - and then splays them gingerly over the White Queen's chest, limned with fuchsia. "I think I've got her," she says, after a moment, as her other claws joins the first. PM sags back on her heels and her wings droop with relief. On the egg pile, WV sits up, dead quiet, and watches as PM uncurls her stiff arms and sets the White Queen down for Feferi to inspect properly. With the new angle, Karkat sees part of the WQ's torso has caved in. Steady, curling fuchsia light pools between Feferi's hands and streams into the cracks; the color deepens into a stronger color that almost edges on maroon as Feferi concentrates.

"She's alive?" Karkat hisses. He can almost - almost - feel a thready, shitty excuse for a pulse, now, but fuck only knows how much power Feferi's doling out to make that happen. If there was ever an award for MVP…fucking fuck.

"Only just." Feferi smiles distractedly, and shifts her claws slightly. The light of her power follows and licks along the White Queen's shattered shoulders like fire, scouring the scorch marks and neon green burns away. "Carapacians - they can take a lot. As long as there's still a spark…"

PM: Thank you.
PM rises out of her crouch and turns her head up toward the sky. The Reckoning's still fucking along to wreck Earth's day, and meteors streak across the sky in uneven waves. Karkat hasn't looked up from the platform in a while, and now that he does, it looks like the bullshit barrage thinned itself out - but the chunks of space rock that pass overhead now are fucking gigantic. Moving up along the space debris food chain from 'mildly inconvenient craters like acne punching the Earth's face from orbit' to 'fuck this one planet in particular' size, they hurtle more slowly through the Medium but turn Karkat's stomach all the more for the slow, inevitable weight of their passage.

WV: Where are you going now?

PM: To make a delivery.

Wings fully unfurled, PM takes a step away from Feferi and the White Queen, then hesitates. Her gaze flicks toward the Forge, downcast - and then she peeks at WV, most of her body angled away as though it's taking everything she has to keep her ground-bound. She puts out a hand with a glint of gold on her ring finger, and reaches toward WV with a tiny wave.

The Dersite carapacian sits motionless, hugging his torso and staring at PM's claw like it's a foreign object, and for a second this is it. Karkat's hooked. This is the last fucking soap opera he's ever gonna get to watch unless they recreate the genre in Calliope's reality, and he's invested after only five minutes of watching it play out before him. He's such a fucking sucker.

Finally, WV reaches out and touches the tips of his claws to PM's.

WV: Come back safe.

PM: Always.

Then she leaps up and wings away in three smooth beats, arcing away from LoFaF and becoming a pinprick of white as she slices a wayward meteor in two, then vanishes into the dark sky.

Karkat shunts the carapacian side drama out of his thinkpan, and goes back to work. The radiating light of Feferi healing the White Queen fills the peripheral of his right eye, just bright enough that he can't quite ignore it. And Dave -

- that fucking idiot -

Karkat loses track of the snake count. He stumbles and second guesses himself around page 194, and never gets the rhythm back.

This is because Dave is an inconsiderate fuck who announces his current page count whenever he decides to pop in to serve up a fresh nutrition plateau of go fuck yourself, with a side helping of another hundred eggs to rebury WV. How is Karkat supposed to function in bullshit working conditions like this? He fucking can't, that's how. Spamming the appearify button can only take him so far. He can feel his thinkpan slowly liquifying again under the staggering weight of his adrenalin-laced boredom.

And then the festering, shit-smear hoof of Lady Destiny herself stomps on their throats once more.

From this distance, something judders and twists sharply in Karkat's ribcage. The kind of sudden, there-and-gone pain that he'd normally dismiss as either a momentary twinge or a sign he has fucking cancer or something before going about his day as normal.
But Echidna bursts out of the Forge in a shower of lava - liquid rock actually spills over the lip of the Forge and slops over the side of the volcano, instead of just churning wildly, and the low warble that ripples through the denizen's throat sets her quills ringing and clattering against each other. And there's no way the timing is a coincidence -

Feferi scrambles away from the White Queen with a cry, reeling like someone who has worked her way through half of Doctor Lalonde's long-lost alcohol supply. "Feferi?!" Karkat says, but his voice sounds more terrified than his numb body really feels. He's rapidly reaching his mental capacity for emotions today, and any second now he's tempted to either lay down and scream into a pillow, or just scream in general. He's got nothing left to sop up his leaking dismay fluid, anymore. Dave - Dave doesn't even react to Feferi; he just pulls up the next snake bio on the list, while Karkat's focus nearly splits in two.

"I - oh no. Oh no. Is that - what that feels like? I could sense it all the way from here -" Feferi says. Just as suddenly as she lurches upright, she sinks back, away from the unconscious White Queen, to sit back against the nearest egghoard. Her expression is - awful. Resigned in the worst possible way. The sharp jolt in Karkat's torso twinges again, while foreboding settles in low, knotted and cramped in his guts. "What happened?" When Dave tries to rattle off the next set of coordinates, Karkat reaches toward him without looking and tries to smack the phone out of his hands. "Dave, cut that out! Something's wrong."

"Already know," Dave mumbles - of fucking course he knows, because this is some random fucking Dave who has an oh-so-amazing ten second lead on them.

Another twinge in Karkat's chest -

That's not his heart. He's only feeling that in his own chest because of sympathy pangs. Karkat spins around and slaps Dave's timetable away from the human's shaky hand. "Okay, time out for the fucking idiot! Stop that!" Karkat yells, right in Dave's ash-white, sweat-streaked face, because he feels a heart attack coming on -

"Kanaya. Oh - I think she's gone. I don't think she can come back," Feferi says, her focus far and away across the Medium. She clutches her hair and the base of her horns, her knuckles pale. The words sound like nothing over the thundering pulse in Karkat's ears; the leaden weight in Karkat's stomach can only sink lower. "I can't feel her anymore...He - Sollux can't bring her back. There's nothing left. She's gone.

For a second, the pain is a white-hot explosion in Karkat's heart. In his head. He wonders if it's possible to stroke out from grief, from losing a friend - and the fact that Dave crumples against the terminal and sways, pressing his phone to his forehead as though that'll make the zigzag shudder of his heart ease up, just makes it worse. Karkat latches onto Dave's free wrist, but he can't stop people - read: Dave 'B) would be sacrilegious yo' Strider - from time travelling with his shitty blood-based skillset.

Dave's head wobbles on his neck, and he stays rooted in the present not because Karkat's got a death grip on him, but because he's one vigorous jumping jack away from dying. This is Dave as far along as he can get in his time loops, and fuck. Just.

Fuck. Losing Kanaya is bad enough that Karkat can't process it. It hurts, and somewhere out there, Rose has to be hurting worse, and if they lose Dave on top of that…

Karkat's pusher lurches out of beat, so hard that he feels like it's about to slam a bruise along the inside of his meatsack. "No. Fuck this. Feferi!" he shouts, jolting Feferi out of her distant fugue.
Karkat snaps his claws until Feferi shakes her head and lunges toward them, stumbling over the White Queen to reach the terminal. "This snake garbage could wait!" Karkat then bawls right in Dave's ear, before wrenching the world out of focus and following the stilted jolt of Dave's pulse to the source in a red fog.

"Nah. It couldn't," Dave says, his voice an exhaust mumble that sounds too close and too quiet, at the same time.

Karkat gnashes his teeth, mouths 'Nah' to himself, and struggles to recall the feel of his own normal heart rate - not exactly the same as human normal, but close enough to say fuck it and pray. He just needs to level both of them out, while Feferi provides the raw not dying juice. "Oh, fuck you, Dave!" bursts out of him a second later, as Dave's head starts to loll back, and FUCK is he going to regret that if Dave dies.

(What was the last thing he said to Kanaya? He can't fucking remember.)

"No, no, no, no -" Feferi chants, a steady counterpoint to Karkat and Dave's reeling pulse, her voice slowly rising in volume.

Which is about when Prospit explodes.

---

There is Rose, before.

And there is Rose, after.

-

Rose before lasts approximately fifty six seconds, numb as she stares down at Kanaya's face - she tries to count down a full minute before shaking apart, but she loses the last four seconds to the blind, towering panic that swamps her. Her hand shoots out to the side of its own accord, and misses Jade the first time - Jade catches her hand on the second attempt. "Prospit - we have to go -" she says, her voice wretched and ragged, and Jade jerks her head in a nod. Rose can see the distant reflection of her own despair mirrored in Jade's horrified eyes, but nothing can compare. She presses her hands to Kanaya's cheeks, trying to find patches that aren't stained with acid so that she doesn't hurt her anymore, and lowers her head to touch her forehead to Kanaya's while Jade shouts something meaningless and garbled to the others. It doesn't matter. What matters has narrowed to a very small window in Rose's tunneling vision, a ring of black with the blurred image of Kanaya pulsing at the center. A rush of green consumes her vision for a fraction of a second that feels like an eternity, dragging on and on while Rose tries to clutch Kanaya closer. It doesn't do any good; they're frustratingly incorporeal, at the moment. She almost manages to convince herself that the green light is Kanaya resurrecting, and not Jade teleporting them to Prospit -

But then they land with a sticky squelch, glittering amber honey ebbing at the edges of Rose's tunnel vision, and Rose drags the toe of her shoe through the melting, liquified comb before catching herself and Kanaya. Jade's trying to help carry her, but Rose won't let go; she cradles Kanaya closer, a heavy dead weight with her head lolling against Rose's chest.

Sollux proves harder to find than expected - than Rose can bear without breaking. Objectively, Rose can tell something is wrong with Prospit. It's quite literally falling apart all around them: the vast spires of golden honeycomb sag and drip enormous clumps that hit the rising ocean of liquid honey and beeswax that sloshes through the streets with glopping sounds. Jade teleports them in above the welling sea, but another half-melted tower sluices half its mass into the honey sea, exposing a concave cross-section of the molten silicomb within, and level of the sea surges higher, threatening to swallow them up like insects in sticky amber. The heady scent of charred comb and melting honey spins Rose's head dizzily as her ears fill with the dull roaring buzz of bees in distress. "Where's he?" Rose says, her words slurring, as Jade boosts them higher up again. "Sollux, where is -"

"There!" Jade says, pointing - she teleports them again before Rose can force her spinning vision to focus.

Sollux stands knee-deep in honey when they reach him. His psionics jitter and crackle through the air with electric force to hold the towering walls of beehouse mainframes up, as the two half-liquified buildings on either side slump toward him at dangerous angles. Jade punches the sagging walls away with a burst of force so he can concentrate. He spares them a glance but doesn't stop typing for a second; melting honey coats the computer terminal's screen in a sticky layer that distorts the programs on it with a shifting, bubbling gold film, but Sollux's frantic claws fly blind across the gummed-up keys. "I can do this, I can - I can - FUCK," he shouts, doing a double take. His glasses nearly fly off the bridge of his nose with the force of his spin, and behind them his expression is utterly distraught, wild-eyed, as he stares at Kanaya -

No.

"You have to god tier her!" Rose says. Her senses appear to have shifted: she can hear and see, aware of the way Prospit collapses and melts around them, but her stomach feels too tight, her heart beats too hard in her chest. Her head spins and hitches in time with her juddering pulse - it feels too densely packed with numb, detached panic for any other thoughts to squeeze through to the front of her mind. "Sollux, please -"

"It's not," he starts, and does not finish. Rose's thoughts seem to be sluggishly floating through the honey around them; she can't understand why Sollux wouldn't be able to fix this, when Kanaya is his friend, when she's right here in front of him, that - that should make it easier, shouldn't it? So why does he panic-stricken, and clutch his hair hard enough to tear it, before flinging himself back onto the keyboard, slamming the keys with the heel of his palm to force them down as more honey sticks between them. "I couldn't figure it out in time - no, there's still time, I can - fuck, don't panic -"

No. There should be a dream Kanaya here, tucked away by Gamzee for safekeeping. Rose can't let go of Kanaya right now, but this is suddenly of vital importance. "Her dreamself. Where is it?!" she says, as she reaches out and catches Sollux's shoulder. He shakes her off with a convulsive shudder, and a sob rasps out of his throat as he uses his psionics to scorch the honey off the keyboard and screen. It singes his god tier costume in the process, but it doesn't seem to register for him. To be fair, Rose barely registers it, either - her eyes simply catalog the details, while the rest of her mind circles and circles around the one thing that matters.

"She wouldn't even wake up! They were always in the captchalogue cards - everyone else came out fine," Sollux says, emphatic, his words tumbling over each other as his voice slowly speeds up into incomprehensible babble in Rose's ears. He waves a wild claw back in a cutting motion, toward the gooey, viscous honey that pours through the street channel behind the terminal. "In a few seconds, we're not going to have the processing power left to -"

With the drone of bees and Sollux's words grinding in her ears, Rose turns, her feet catching and stumbling on the sticky floor of the platform as she races up the stairs to the lookout point and drops to her knees. The Kanaya cradled in her arms and the Kanaya lying flat on the ground both lack a pulse or any other hint of life; both persist in not opening their eyes, even when Rose drops a precious hand needed to support Kanaya's head and shakes the shoulder of her dreamself.

Nothing. Not even a flicker of an eyelash. The dream of Kanaya wears a honey-yellow dress, her claws folded over her torso where Eridan once shot a hole through her, her hair messy and sticky. Distantly, Rose can hear herself whimpering, chanting something like nonono, as she fumbles and tries to talk to both Kanayas at the same time. "Come on, wake up. Can you hear me? It'll be alright, it'll be okay," another voice says - no, that's still Rose's voice, as she folds up, her stomach in knots, and bends her head between the two bodies. "Ple-ase, I - I promise, you'll wake up - please? Sollux, please!" Voice cracking, she raises her head, her ends of her hair dripping with honey.

Jade and Sollux both lean over the computer now. She can't make out their conversation over the droning white noise that fills her ears - Jade gestures, and Sollux tries to shoulder her out of the way, arguing with her about something. Rose can't make out what. Down the street - Rose can't recall turning to the side to look, her thoughts adrift in a sea of mead - another tower of mainframes topples in a waterfall of honey and sunken comb, and hits the treacly surface of the sea. A wave of honey washes over the edge of their platform, around Kanaya's resting head and Rose's neat blue shoes.

Sollux won't be able to fix this.

That is, Rose believes, the gist of why he and Jade are arguing, though she hears it from an odd distance. Dissociation, her mind supplies - though why it believes this is an appropriate moment to remind her basic psychological vocabulary, Rose does not know. Jade tosses another flood of dripping honey away from the screen with a wave of her hand and starts typing at a furious pace, while Sollux turns, his face wretched and smeared with yellow, and sinks slowly into the welling honey as he slides down the front of the terminal. For a moment his eyes stare uncomprehendingly at Kanaya, before meeting Rose's.

He remade all of Prospit to change the game in their favor, and now all that work is melting around them in a steady cascade. Perhaps, Rose thinks blearily, her mind stuttering to a stop and grasping for one last straw, he could rebuild it all again. If he could transmute an entire small planet into a beenary satellite once, surely he could do so again. If he had enough time.

They'll never have enough time. Rose knows it with a perfect, crystalline clarity. Time, to build it all again; time, to recreate all of Sollux's modifications; time, to figure out what went so wrong with Kanaya's resurrection - something Sollux must surely have known about, and yet couldn't fix in time -

Rose draws Kanaya close; she makes a short effort to lift her dreamself's head above the level of the honey, but then Rose curls up over Kanaya, and loses track of - many things. Denial scrambles her thoughts, and she presses her mouth to Kanaya's blood streaked forehead. She can feel her whole body coiled and shaking with some nameless emotion that threatens to tear out of her gut and spill her inside out -

The dizzy, swirling sensation in Rose's mind abruptly clears. Lifting her face, she feels her lips part slightly as she gazes unseeing down the street.

Kanaya is dead.

Leviathan killed her.

These are the facts, which shine in the wretched hollow of Rose's mind like twin stars. All she need do is draw the obvious line between them, and follow it to its inevitable conclusion. As she does so, the honey rises up around Rose's crouched form, swallowing her hips. She meets Sollux's eyes one last time, and does not know what he sees in her expression. Jade still hasn't looked away from the computer terminal; she pours her whole self into trying to stabilize Sollux's code even as Prospit implodes around them.
Dear, determined Jade. Sollux, breaking on the inside, confusion in his face as he raises a hesitant claw toward Rose - perhaps with an inkling of what comes next. Darling Kanaya, who won't wake up.

Rose smiles as she sets Kanaya down, very gently, on the flooded platform.

And then she explodes.

- X

Rose isn't sure what to call the emotion that scorches her from the inside out. Something more violent than grief; something too keenly focused to call rage. In an instant, she's incandescent - light blazes under her skin and pulses around her, seething and unquenchable. The honey burns away in a flash, leaving her hair and clothes free to billow and fly out around her. She hangs there for a moment, burning like a sun and waiting for the light and heat to reduce her to ashes, as she half expects it to.

It doesn't. Jade turns to look at Rose at last, worried and upset, and has to shade her eyes while her ears flatten back against her hair. Sollux's sensitive troll eyes can't handle it; he buries his whole face in his hands to shield them, and yells something nonsensical at Rose. "Turn it down!", maybe, but he should know by now that she can't do that. Rose centers herself at the intersection of anguish and fury, and summons more light, and more light still, until it's all she can see with luminous eyes.

Why is it, she wonders, between her and Terezi and Sollux, that they never seem to realize in time that someone's fortunes are failing? What's the point, if the terrible things happen anyway? Of all the possible ways today could have fallen out, this is what horrendous drivel passes for an alpha timeline? Reality expects Rose to put up with this?

She'd rather tear the sky down. For a wild moment, ablaze with fury, Rose considers how she might go about dismantling Skaia as she once did LoLaR, island by island. She wouldn't need to be particular careful about extracting any knowledge from the wreckage. It wouldn't be a careless, callous mission for information on the part of a girl too assured of her own intellect to second guess her actions. It wouldn't even be a reckoning. It would be a demolition.

It won't bring Kanaya back. But Rose doesn't think anything can. A reckless crusade, worthy of Eridan's and her own legacy. Rose raises a hand to inspect it, her mouth twisted in a pained smile, and closes it into a fist so that her fingers stop shaking. The bow in her other hand vibrates with pent-up energy as her light refracts through it, and Rose wonder how much it can take before it shatters in her grip.

"Rose. Rose. TT."

Sollux's sharp call finally cracks through the searing glare of Rose's aura. She wouldn't bother to look - she has places to be - but hope is a pernicious thing, and she meets his gaze with enough force that he flinches, his teeth gritted as he dangles from Jade's grip. Prospit's meltdown nearly swamps their platform; the computer terminal and all its useless hacks lay buried under the sheen of hot honey. Rose is only clear of it where she stands by virtue of her radiant rage. Almost none of Prospit's towers remain standing - only a few points still stick out of the swirling sea, and those points look like melted candle wax. A sluggish whirlpool turns down the street, where Prospit's hollow center has presumably cracked and the honey drains into the internal chamber. Grim and mute, still smeared with honey, Sollux raises a claw swathed in Doom. All the expression has vanished from his face, but there are streaks on his face that aren't honey. Rose looks where he's pointing and notes the Medium spread out behind them. Skaia looms huge beside them, it's cloud-bedecked surface deceptively calm and quiescent as the cloud cover swirls over the checkerboard tendrils that wrap around it in a net, in stark contrast to the first round of meteors that have reached the defense portals and fill the space between all the lands with meteoric hail. Rose wants to ruin that placid, unaffected surface; she wants Jade's power and more beside, so she could shrink Skaia down to the size of a marble, and crush it between her teeth.

That's not what Sollux points at. From Prospit, Skaia fills most of their view, with dark LoHaC and brilliant LoWaS just visible around opposite ends of the curvature of the pseudo-sun - but Leviathan's main tangle wraps around the outside of the shifting Veil, all the same, spread unfathomably wide like a dark corona.

…Point taken.

Rose blasts away from Prospit at a breakneck pace, and doesn't look back. "Rose!" Jade says, abruptly alongside her, her voice fading in the distance as Rose continues to rocket around Skaia, flying low through the clouds to shave time off her flight. Jade keeps teleporting in, her voice rising and falling as Rose streaks past her each time. "Rose! This is really dangerous - we need to - have a plan - or grab Equius! - Rose, hang on!"

Rose has a plan. It's a very well thought out, scrupulous plan, considering the circumstances. "Go back to the ships, Jade," she says. Hundreds of motes of light blur in her skewed vision, and she's in no state of mind to coalesce them together and attempt to divine their future fortune from them, but that proves inconsequential: this is a matter of common sense. The ark ships are important, and besieged by meteors and Leviathan's wandering tendrils at every turn; ergo, Jade is most needed there. "Get them through."

Jade's worried frown deepens, her eyebrows inching mutinously towards 'cross' as she spams her teleport to keep up with Rose's breakneck pace. Then Rose sees the moment that the reminder about the ships' precarious state set in, and Jade whips around with her eyes unfocused and her ears perked as she scopes out the distant arks and carapacian meteors. She shakes her head and bites her lip before replying. "No - you're planning to - do something dangerous! I won't leave you alone!" she insists, reaching out to catch Rose's sleeve. "You can't fight Leviathan all by yourself!"

Somehow, impossibly, Jade misses Rose's arm. Rose doesn't think she can attain light speed without perhaps Dave's help - [Light Speed]? It has the emphasis of a fraymotif in her mind, so it must be a possibility - but she's certainly moving faster than she ever has before at her default flight speed. "I'm not fighting Leviathan," Rose says with flat conviction, and then tears her gaze away from Jade's flicker-fast teleportation to contemplate the bright line of light that stretches out before her, like sunlight pouring into a dark house through a distant windowpane.

"Cetus said I could destroy them. I'm making my choice," she says, simply.

The arc of her aura crests and begins to propel Jade away from her on waves of light. Each teleport lands Jade a little further out from Rose, and Jade's flying with her eyes scrunched shut against the light, navigating solely by space impulse. LoLaR comes into view, still resplendent with rainbows, and all Rose can think as she looks at it is that any moment now a stray [crack] from the Lord of Time will cleave it in two, and all the bright water and sand and consorts will be left adrift in the cracking, crazing mess of broken time that slowly but surely transforms this region of the Medium into a fissured wasteland. "And I'll go with you," Jade says, adamant, but Rose sees only one opening, here. Perhaps her grief blinds her to other viable options; ironically, she'll be the last person to notice, if that's the case. It wouldn't be the first time.

But all of their choices and mistakes and stumbles have brought them here, to this point, where Kanaya is dead and yet the timeline rolls on with damning indifference. And when Rose meets Jade's eyes one last time, her mind feels very clear and cold and filled with hard light. "Jade. Trust me." I'll make the right choice, this time, she thinks, but does not say; I need the rest of you safe, she refrains from adding. Because losing Kanaya has cracked something inside her, and when Rose's rage falters, she isn't sure what will remain. Losing Jade or Dave or John as well as Kanaya - the thought screeches to a halt before she can complete it. If she thinks the unthinkable right now, she'll shatter.

Perhaps a brief, flickering timeline where Jade does stay with her, to the bitter end, branches off at that moment. Rose cannot say; such things are not her field of expertise.

But Jade stares Rose dead in the eye, and tears bubble up so that her eyelashes gleam with lachrymal stars to match the galaxy threaded through her hair as she trusts Rose. She sticks her hand through Rose's aura, finally in perfect sync with Rose's blazing speed, and catches her hand. "I believe in you," she says, with a wobbly smile that comes as close to anything to dissuading Rose from her course. Then Jade vanishes in a burst of green light that drops sharply behind Rose as she pelts along her beam of light, and Rose is alone.

She aims for Leviathan, and the last route straight through the Lord of Time's fractured wreckage shines in her mind's eye with perfect clarity, right up to the pulsating, chaotic foot of Leviathan’s nebulous form.

A form that is neither as nebulous nor chaotic as it might have been, Rose thinks, not even a few weeks ago. Leviathan deflects the Lord of Time's barrage of rending bullets and forces his vast [cracks] to part around it, but in the time that has passed since Rose last properly surveyed the battlefield, the Lord has thoroughly hemmed Leviathan into this section of the Medium. Apart from its desperate, grasping tentacles cast forth toward the ark ships, Leviathan writhes in the dark spaces remaining to it, a whirl of tendrils and teeth and wing and thorn and segmented bands of flesh that comes together in a dark knot larger than LoLaR.

But only just.

As the Lord of Time ripped and tore and drove Leviathan back in a relentless onslaught, the Horrorterror has folded in on itself in countless compacted layers; what once resembled a dark ocean swallowing most of this half of the Incipisphere like a horrific shadow over reality has coalesced and fused into a dense kernel of roiling blood brine and ink and acidic viscera. A perfect spirograph etches the distended skin of one of Leviathan's throats like a brand, and Rose knows with perfect lucidity that the fact that Leviathan hasn't dissolved and distorted that symbol yet means something. It means everything.

She just needs to fly past the Lord of Time, first.

This proves as easily said as done, oddly enough. Rose raises her bow, which burns almost as white hot as Eridan at his brightest, and prepares to fend off whatever stray - or deliberate - attacks might come her way as she fixes the illuminated path through the [cracks] and Leviathan's tendrils in her mind's eye. She'll give the Lord as wide a berth as possible to avoid drawing his scrutiny, but she already feels…uneven. The temporal distortion worsens as she nears the hulking green figure - dwarfed by Leviathan, but still imposing - but with only the Lord himself and Leviathan as wholly unreliable points of reference, Rose cannot tell whether her perception of time has sped up or slowed down. But with any luck, her passage will go unremarked and she won't need to deal with the Lord of Time until after. Come what may, if she can just squeeze past him and under two intersecting cracks -

The Lord of Time looks directly at Rose as she streaks past him.

It belatedly occurs to Rose that, regardless of how incensed she may be, it might have been wiser to tamp down her blazing aura before attempting to bypass an incomprehensibly powerful, apocalyptically destructive demon of the end-times. She's not particular subtle, at the moment. But she notes this only distantly, the rest of her emotions still crushed under the emotion driving her onward. Rose isn't sure she could smother the light even if she wanted to, and she grits her teeth, ready to dodge. Her path doesn't waver - she doesn't know if her foresight can register a time crack, or if it would just be a blip she can't interpret, like Void, or like Leviathan's Chaos.

The Lord of Time cracks his jaw open, and laughs at her. Rose's teeth creak painfully as her whole body tenses - she doesn't think she can dodge an [Entropic Scream], at this range - and pushes herself in one last burst of speed. Dying pointlessly before she can even avenge Kanaya would be such a horrible, stomach-turning waste of a life -

Then he raises his assault riflekind, and brings it down as a cuestick, his high cackle grating on Rose's ears as the sound follows her into the field of broken time before falling eerily silent. An ominous beat stills Rose's heart for a moment, like a shadow passing over her, and, ill at ease, she watches disconcertedly as the Lord of Time hangs like a hulking lump of dead, rotting green meat, his skeleton smile fixed upon her as she slips between the cracks unaccosted.

And deep inside, part of Rose screams that if she succeeds, Leviathan won't be around to distract the Lord of Time, anymore.

A deeper, bone-cold part of her whispers that she doesn't care. Not anymore. The curse of inevitability - if this monstrous, remorseless wreck is the timeline that matters, then why would Rose care? How many worlds and friends has Sburb eaten alive to fuel its endless cycle of doomed creation, for no reason other than the indifferent cosmos decided those were the rules? That those people didn't matter enough, in the grand scheme of things.

He came here to unravel reality and kill Skaia.

Good.

Spiteful vindication ripples through Rose's aura, and then burns away as the piercing light of her fury. The cracks in reality arch around her in stilted zig-zags of opaque nothingness, but Rose's safe route through the hazards remains clear. It really is almost a perfectly straight line, she notes in the abstract, which seems remarkably improbable given the nature of the two beings fighting here.

Now, with the Lord of Time behind her, she's forced to confront the Leviathan's full, towering mass. Thousands of sunken, ichor-infested murky teal eyes wink open along the Horrorterror's lower curves and many mouths twist into open, slavering smiles at her approach, while many more still gape in agonized, full-throated screams. An immense, arched, blind beak rests front and center above the spirograph that has gradually corrupted Leviathan's fundamental nature. A small, thin mouth emerges along with two small eyes along an auxiliary knot of the hive, but Rose can make out the yawning maw of an even larger mouth splitting the back of its head in two as it gawks at her.

Another tangle, mostly merged with the side of Leviathan's squirming central form, bears a half-melted yellow mask the size of a continent and for half an instant Rose's sanity flickers. More so than it already has. She can imagine wearing that mask so vividly, the inside covered with grimlight tendrils that feed into her mouth and down her throat - in through her pupils - her pale hands folded over the sucking hole in her chest as she eats and eats in a delicate but ceaseless tide under a distorted pink sky, funneling the madness of millions of minds back to her true body in the Furthest Ring, always drawn so thin with noble hunger, never truly sated -

Tendrils wrap around Rose in a twining torus, and she snaps back to herself with a snarl, raises her bow, and scorches the circling tentacles before they can close around her. She surges onward without slowing, but she's now aware of just how deceptively close she already is to the vast Horrorterror; the cracks in time have fallen away in her wake, and now thorny tendrils lined with eyes and jointed claws watch her from overhead as well - Leviathan may look like a compact mass from a distance, but at this angle Rose can see that the Horrorterror still has a thousand different rippling layers tucked away, visible only when one has the right perspective on them. Technically, she is already inside Leviathan's sphere of influence.

Whatever residual Void lingers around Rose from Equius's efforts can't possibly withstand this level of exposure. All Rose has left is her own light, blistering the insides of her mind to sustain her rage as well as her independence. If she falters, so will her shields, and then she'll be utterly surrounded, at the mercy of the thoughthorde that eclipses her view.

Kanaya's dead. Rose isn't going to falter.

LV: ROSE. HOW PRECIOUS YOU ARE.

The tendrils that flank her on either side begin to sprout roses as Leviathan's oddly singular voice hammers into her mind with all the soft subtlety of a semi-truck. Cliché, Rose thinks, acerbically.
Embarrassing trite. Layer after layer of mauve petals flower around the buds, until they've swollen to the point that they look like pretentious cabbages, or brain matter. A nightmarish face drifts past under Rose, like something drowned watching her from deep below the surface, but then it ripples, and the Incipisphere goes dark under her once more. The closer she comes to Leviathan, the more it feels as though she's descending instead toward the surface of a planet - or sinking into cold water.

LV: ARE YOU ANGRY, ROSE?

LV: ARE YOU G R I E V I N G, ROSE?

Rose clamps her teeth together and convulses with a silent scream. It knows, it fucking well knows exactly what it did, and it has the gall -

LV: I CAN FIX IT, ROSE. WE CAN FIX EVERYTHING.

Then Leviathan's roiling belly of tentacles parts before her, to reveal thin bones that jut out at the wrong angles to actually support any of its flesh or immense mass - and parts further still, acid now slicing from dangling tendrils like saliva from teeth, and Rose flies inside without hesitation. The skin seals behind her like a gelatinous sea, rubbery smooth, and Rose serves as the only light in the terrible geometries of Leviathan's insides. Her minds and eyes threaten burst from the ambient pressure, as though she's been transported to the very core of a planet with nothing to preserve her.

But Leviathan doesn't rush in to engulf her. Broken fractals and obscure glyphs flash and pulsate along the Horrorterror's insides, oozing black liquid misery in black-and-purple patterns.
Occasionally Rose catches glimpses of other angles - shafts of dark brown and black that intersect with the vast walls and rotate through them from oddways dimensions, as she delves deeper still. An object with an impossible number of vertices turns and twists and bristles with jutting spikes, like a pyramid with too many edges and not enough, all at once. No digestive oceans swirl in to dissolve her, as Rose still half-expects. In fact, the inside of Leviathan resembles less the visceral, stomach-turning body horror of its exterior, and more a place of broken dimensions and terrifying physics that defy the natural order of things.

Rose is too furious to go mad. If all Leviathan can throw at her is the pathetic, planet-sized equivalent of sentient abstract art, she could care less. Foolishly, she wonders what Kanaya would think of it all
- and for an instant pain stabs through her burning light. She shudders and forces it back down, tamping it down to be felt later, before it can steal the breath and purpose out of her.
Leviathan's words echo strangely (even for a Horrorterror's default level of strange), and the few extra, disconcerting layers of sound that haunt the Horrorterror's singular chorus sound like they're emanating from halfway across the world, too quiet to register as more than drops of water in a pond.

LV: I WARNED YOU THAT YOUR FRIENDS WOULD ALL DIE.

LV: YOUR SKAIA WAS THE ONE WHO REPUDIATED HER RESURRECTION. WHAT HAS ORDER EVER DONE FOR YOU BUT ENSURE YOUR SUFFERING?

She does so despise it when Leviathan has a point. It's unfair.

Nothing impedes her. Rose flies further down into the dark, and her light casts long shadows that stretch and then fade in the incalculable distance.

Somehow, Leviathan’s throat hangs over its core - Rose can see three odd reflections of the dizzying walls intersect around her as she nears the center, at the end of her flight path, so that it feels like she's about to fly into walls of flickering purple hexagonal comb. The great spiograph shines overhead, high and dry and burning its pattern into Leviathan's dermis, and that means everything.

It means Cetus spoke true. Leviathan isn't inherently game-breaking, anymore. The spiograph's half-light palls compared to Rose's coruscating aura, and she concentrates instead on the immense flower blossoming in the pallid light. A rose, again - but unlike the ones outside, this one has had time to grow and swell to the size of a small country, full of crenellations and folds and resembling a vast, misshapen brain so closely that Rose's inner psychologist rises up through the pain and rage just long enough to make an aborted attempt at analyzing the heavy handed symbolic implications.

The visual equivalent of purple prose. Of course. All of Rose's over-dramatic, woegothic imaginings from another time and place come to life. Leviathan swallowed her once, mind and body and soul, and never let that impression go.

Rose knows, then, with stark clarity, what she would write waiting for her, at the heart of Leviathan.

And she is not disappointed.

A crisp white table emerges from the flower of Leviathan's many condescend minds, a splatter of blood shimmering in the spiograph's dim spotlight. A pink bottle of lavender wine waits for Rose, glossy and gummy to the eye as she slows to a stop.

LV: I WON'T FORCE YOU. YOU NEED TO CHOOSE.

LV: TOGETHER, WE CAN LEAVE ALL THIS BEHIND. WE CAN BRING ALL YOUR FRIENDS, AND YOU WILL NEVER MISS THEM AGAIN. YOU'LL NEVER BE ALONE AGAIN.

LV: COME TO ME, ROSE. LET US SETTLE THE SCORE.

A small sip would wash the grief down, nepenthean, like mulled mead. Under Rose's will - Leviathan's softer voices insist, in line with her own thoughts - they would be able to escape all this. A portion would be left behind to occupy the cherub Lord, as Hastur once sacrificed a portion of his hoarded self so all the servitors could survive the apocalyptic, whirling, crippling dance of their old Lord, and Rose would usher them out the gate to somewhere new, somewhere not fundamentally hostile and opposed to their very essence. They'd enshrine her securely here, and trust to her lilac-tinted vision to deliver them. No need to stay in the Space realm next door - there are other worlds than these, worlds of Rage, of Nonsense, of true-bred Chaos to match their own. All will be well, and they will be free to multiply unhindered by such trivial things as rule or order. Her friends can come, too, all of them prized but only Rose loved and adorned with a crown of thorns. Oversead, the dry, gnarled branches of Leviathan’s sprouting rose bush rattle and scrape against each other in oddly symmetric coils, crawling across the wide expanse of the room in anticipation.

It might have persuaded Rose at thirteen.

It might even have won her over not a year past, alone in the darkness of a hollow home. Here and now, Leviathan wants her, as Malā’ikah invested itself in Eridan, as Gl’bgolyb loved Feferi to death. I’ll never let you go, Leviathan promises, as Rose reaches out with a lightless hand, and raises the bottle of her own spilt ink. There is no cork or stopper; only an open neck and opening to press to her lips.

Expression remote, lips pressed tight, Rose turns her trembling hand over and pours out the bottle. "Bottom's up," she says, coldly, and feels many unseen eyes watch in fascination as a small, torrential ocean of liquid spills over the table and soaks the immense rose, spilling and spilling in endless waves. Far more than the bottle, cold against her palm, should have held, the liquid pours on in a dark, shifting fall of colors - now black, syrupy oil - now thin, fizzling acid - now briny seawater that stinks of blood - now dark, jade green, swirling all together in a tumultuous sea that would have burst Rose at the seams.

Slowly the cascade trickles to a stop. A grim ocean glitters darkly under her feet; it spans the bowels of Leviathan from one continent-wide wall to another. Rose lets the bottle drop, and it bounces off the alcohol-soaked rose to tumble into the rollicking water below.

Her aura has dimmed; the only light that lingers streams from Rose's eyes. A small tendril looms out of the dark, the whole world too quiet for a Horrorterror. While Rose focuses and breathes deep, turning the scents of blood and alcohol and gasoline over in her thoughts, the tendril touches her streaming cheek, imploring, needling.

LV: Rose…?

Rose laughs, and it echoes in odd ways. "Leviathan? Answer me this, if you can. 'What goes round the house, in the house, but never touches the house?'"

Dead silence answers her.

No…dread. That's that word for it. Dread silence answers her, and the tendril draws away from her face. Rose, Leviathan says, as though it has the slightest fucking clue what Rose intends, what Cetus hinted would be possible here, what Leviathan ensured would happen from the moment it snapped Kanaya and Rose's heart along with her.

Rose shuts her glowing eyes against the dark.

[Fill 'Em With Daylight]

And erupts into light.

A sun fills Leviathan from the inside out, its churning core molten in Rose's chest, her eyes blazing, unseen in as sunlight expands around her. It illuminates every angle, every cranny; it spills out, and the spreading corona of plasma scorches the broken patterns and fractals from Leviathan's internals - and burns through them. Fueled with love and rage and grief and all the accelerant Leviathan offered her like a sacrament, Light travels faster than the Horrorterror's vast, horrendous, uncharacteristically unanimous hive of Chaotically swallowed minds can, slowed as Leviathan's reaction time is by one final, shattering burst of dissent and indecision. Rose incinerates it all, and then them all as Leviathan's tenuous order breaks - the strong voices of Hastur, the scurrying remnants of patrician Fluthlu, before they can splinter themselves and flee her surging sun. Soon she shines through the translucent skin of Leviathan's external form, all of its inner mass evaporated into ash, all its branches and thorns and roses scoured away, their chaotic component particles fed through the fusion core of Rose's sun and melded together into something inert yet shining. Rays of her light pierce Leviathan's empty meatsuit, and then burn it away into dust so that she shines throughout the Medium like a dawn. The sun revolves slowly in the spaces between the [cracks] -

- and then vanishes, so that only the afterimage of a Light symbol remains against the backdrop of the Furthest Ring, emptied of all its demons for the first and final time. The dark stays.

Rose opens her eyes.

The dark stays.

What has eyes but cannot see?

Silently, as the last of the scorching emotion drains out of her, Rose touches her face and traces the blurred, indistinct edges of marks that spread out from her eyes with many arms, like a star or a compass rose.

Or two suns, the arms mingling as they spread out, one around each sightless eye.

Which leaves her blind, with [cracks] groaning on all sides, and no way to navigate. Nothing happens when Rose attempts to summon other forms of sight. She has no point of reference after delving so deep into Leviathan's many angles, but abruptly realizes that she's drifting as she floats, and jerks herself to a blind, tense stop with a rasping sob. Another sob follows hard after the first, uneven, and Rose curls up as her insides crumple and judder in what promises to be a thorough implosion. Losing Kanaya broke her already - and now, this, and she's alone in the dark as she's ever been. Only a few seconds blind and Rose already thinks she feels some looming presence right behind her - the Lord of Time, perhaps, or maybe one last drifting tendril of Leviathan that she missed, that has been there all along, as long as she can remember - that will reach out and snap her in two mid-sob. Nothing is okay, her chest feels like she carved out the organs and cauterized it with her own burning hands, and if she'd never invited Leviathan in then Kanaya would still be alive. That was the choice she made, and that is all she can see, the clear thread of misfortune spun through all their lives to ruin Rose, and ruin Kanaya, and ruin John, and knot it all together around Rose's useless, blood-stained hands.

The searing rage seeps out of her through the widening cracks, and what fills in her empty spaces is pain, wordless and chest-splitting. Distantly, Rose feels herself droop and drop, drifting blindly down at an angle toward who knows what, who cares what.

Someone grunts behind her, and a cold claw nudges her back upright. "Not down there, sis," someone mumbles with a muted chuckle, on the edge of incomprehensibility, and Rose's heart spasms in a paroxysm of throbbing grief and choking terror because she can't see who it is -

"Rose!

John tackles her in a whirlwind, his voice perfectly clear, and the wind catches her up in a wild flurry of concern. Rose instinctively clamps a hand over his arm to hold him where she can sense him when he hugs her; the panic drops off sharply, but the pain refuses to ebb. Another hoarse sob cuts her off when she tries to reply, to explain - his desperate hug reminds her that she's still solid, not bleeding off into the dark, so that she's not crying in a vacuum anymore but in the tight confines of her own chest. "Rose, I've got you, okay? Can you - oh, man -" John says, as the wind brushes the hanging hair out of Rose's face.

"She's gone," Rose tells him. Her voice cracks hard, and she can't speak again as her lungs heave. It all pours out of her now, all the grief left behind in rage's wake, and from the wetness on her cheeks her eyes can still cry just fine, despite the scars. "Kanaya couldn't - couldn't come back -"

Guilt twists her into endless tangles, Leviathan's last legacy, and Rose wants to claw what's left of her eyes out, because she's never seen anything that mattered in time and she'll never see Kanaya again.

John clutches her closer, and she turns her face into his shirt so that she doesn't feel the unseen, wide world turning around her. Then the Breeze whirls them away, and they're both mingling streams of grief on the wind as they leave the empty space where Leviathan will never be again.

- Coming together again requires compressing Rose's pain back into a human-shaped container; she'd prefer a bottle. But only in a distant, tired way. The Breeze doesn't sweep grief away. Not anymore, and Rose understands it even as something horrible inside her wants to lash out at John over it. Neither of them has a history of dealing with pain like this well; Rose can't picture a future beyond the raw pain of the present, but she imagines they'll have to survive it somehow.

"I've got you," John repeats, and the back of Rose's legs bump against a platform before she registers that they're sitting down on something. Rose leans against him with a shuddering nod. She can't see where they've come - away from the Lord of Time, at least, but it's not the melting heat of Prospit. If he had - Rose wouldn't want to see it, anyway. Whatever remains of Sollux's frantic efforts; of Kanaya's unmoving remains. It won't help - not right now.

Nothing, Rose thinks uncharitably, will ever help.

"Just a sec." Rose is only half aware of John moving his arm, doing something. A familiar sound rustles over their heads, like an immense curtain billowing in an unfelt breeze. Apart from that, and a faint hum, Rose can't make anything else out. "Okay - Rose?"

"Yes, John," she manages.

"We're pretty much sitting in the safest place we can be, so, you...Don't worry about that." He hugs her with both arms again, and Rose reaches up with a stiff hand, sightless, to find the side of his face and bring his chin down on top of her head.

- AA: can you read me now?
TT: No.
AA: good!
AA: thankfully there is very little difference between reading and hearing so far as were concerned AA: ive been taking advantage of that for a while now
TT: Not now, Aradia.
AA: i know
AA: but when youre ready
TT: Aradia.
TT: How much time do we have left?
AA: weve never had any time at all

Kanaya opens her eyes.

The back of her neck prickles, and she slaps a hand against it as memory rushes in - she probes at the cervical vertebrae and trying to feel for the crushed bone -

There's nothing there, but she remembers it so vividly. With a shiver of apprehension burrowing in her stomach, she looks around and takes in her surroundings.

Ah. She appears to be running. Interesting. The person running alongside her skids to a stop before a simple, closed door, and jerks the knob with a pale, skeletal hand. When the knob refuses to turn, she turns away with a curse. "Late, late! Right at death's door, and - blast!" Janine wails, snatching up Kanaya's claw and ushering her back into the hallway.

This certainly doesn't look anything like Kanaya would imagine the inside of a Horrorterror looks like - or even the afterlife, such as it were. Windows make up most of the walls of the hallway, opaque enough on all sides that the sunlight filters through soft and fuzzy. The ceiling seems so clear that for a moment Kanaya thinks it's just open to the air There's no sign of rainbow-spewing clouds in the sky, so they're not on Rose's land; just a clear periwinkle sky above, and a distant, pale blue sun.

…She is sure that is a blue sun, and not Skaia. Almost entirely positive. Janine does not seem concerned about this. "Here. Drink this, dear," she says, as she hastily passes Kanaya a cup of tea, her dark hood falling over her head as she pours over a heavy tome full of scribbled ink and tries to pull Kanaya down the hall at the same time. Kanaya can't quite read the words - they look odd and fuzzy, like she's trying to read in a dream.

Is she dreaming? Kanaya takes a sip of the tea obligingly - their footsteps fall so lightly on the soft, plain floor that Kanaya barely jolts the cup as she drinks, which is remarkably convenient - and her mind drifts off as she attempts to suss that one out. "Where are we?" she asks; her voice sounds oddly distant and small in the hall.

Janine replies at once, and her voice sounds perfectly normal. She continues to flick through the tome in the crook of her arm, looking irritated. "In between domains. Please leave everything to me - as your resurrepresentative, I should be able to negotiate this properly. But we need to find the right door, and someone has double-filed you in two realities -"

She drags Kanaya to a halt, gnaws on her lower lip for a second, and then leads Kanaya down a second hallway that wasn't there before. Kanaya takes another deep sip of her tea as her legs fly out from under her, contemplating her surroundings while Janine races down the hall toward a second room.

When they reach it, Kanaya sees that the door bears a familiar symbol. She can't quite put a name to it, though. Maybe it's hers? It's all a bit fuzzy. "There!" Janine says - then she whirls on Kanaya, and aggressively pours more steaming hot tea into her cup, plunking cubes of sugar into it with extreme prejudice. She stirs it with a very small scythe, and then gestures for Kanaya to drink it. Then she affixes a bright smile on her face, and tugs Kanaya's dangling stoles so that they lay flat. "Just drink your tea, dear. This is probably just some paper-pusher class -" Janine begins, turning and pushing the door open without issue as she consults her tome one last time. Kanaya is really starting to wonder just what is going on, but her field of fucks to give seems very far away, where she can't harvest them.

She drinks more tea. Very odd.

"Paper-pusher? Who, me?" a new voice asks, cheerfully, and Janine shrieks and slams her book shut. Kanaya's body feels slow to respond, like she's moving through honey; she takes another sip of her tea, finishing the cup, before she manages to raise her sluggish head and look at the person who has appeared across from them.

"Ohuhhellohowdoyoudo!" Janine babbles. Her eyes bulge with terror that Kanaya can't seem to process - then Janine gulps and plasters on her best, most gracious smile, and laughs. "I mean - how…lovely to meet you! I hope we can resolve this in short order." She clears her throat. "My client, as you can see -"

The new person is a human perhaps around Kanaya's age, fiddling with the blood red leaves of the plant on the desk before her; the desk itself sits jammed into the too-small room at an uncomfortable angle, as though someone dragged it into the room in a hurry and didn't have time to straighten it so it was centered before they arrived. Somehow, this unevenness is more disconcerting than the fact that the plant on the desk looks like it has been bathing in the blood of the innocent to maintain its youthful appearance. The blood drips and forms new leaves. "Boring. Dull. Skip it. I want to be here about as much as you do. Which is not at all," she says, and frowns at Janine. "What happened to this one's resurrection?"

Janine scowls back as she pours tea out of the steaming pot at her side table. Kanaya does not remember there being a side table. "Incorrect jurisdiction," Janine argues, sweeping the hem of her dark robes to the side as she gives Kanaya yet another cup of tea without a word. Kanaya takes it, at a loss for what else to do, and takes a slow sip in the hopes it will make things better. It is incredibly delicious - perhaps the best tea she's ever had - but explains nothing. "Why is one of you even here? I am certain she can return through this door, without any red tape."

Kanaya raises a claw to ask a question. She's not even sure why the impulse comes over her. Janine and the strange woman continue to bicker without acknowledging her. "Eh. Had nothing better to do," the woman says, jiggling her foot and turning a page in the packet of papers in her hand. "Right - right here. Double filed? I'm totally reading this right, right?"

"Shouldn't you know for sure if you're interfering this blatantly?" Janine takes the packet regardless, tucking her scythe into the crook of her elbow as she scans it.

"Excuse me," Kanaya says, raising her voice rather than her hand. "May I ask what's going on? Who are you people?" Those seem like the most relevant questions thus far; more are percolating in her head at the moment, but her head seems slow to percolate, this morning.

"Oh, you're a little bit dead, dear. Pay no attention to the bureaucracy beyond the veil of death; you won't remember it much longer," Janine says, her frown breaking for a moment as she smiles sadly at Kanaya. She turns another page in the packet, and the frown builds again as she stares down at it. "I'm your liaison, I'll get this sorted out…"

The being dead thing doesn't even bother her all that much.

Kanaya strongly suspects that this is a bad sign.

A faint breeze picks up in the room - so no, that isn't a ceiling after all, just a hole where a ceiling should be - and stirs the thin bars of a silvery wind chime hanging at a right angle from a corner of the wall. On the desk beside the not-human woman, a pale white flower bobs on a red stem, the petals rotating like a pinwheel. "Why do I need a liaison to be dead?" Kanaya asks, after another thoughtful sip of tea. She feels as though she missed some time, there, but it is very difficult to keep track of.

The woman answers instead of Janine. "You're invested with immense narrative weight as an agent in a Muse-level entity's reality, so you get a liaison assigned to your deaths. Unfortunately, there's a conflict of jurisdiction because, you lucky kiddo - you've got dual citizenship. Someone's been breaking the rules!" She sings the last part, and winks at Kanaya with a cheeky grin. "And Order entities don't like when other people meddle with their rules."

Janine shakes her head, the hood of her cloak bobbing around her horns. She taps the packet with a claw, and says, "This is all in order. In the event of a conflict, I am to take her to the new Muse. Right through this door, heere -"

Sidling around the desk, Janine attempts to squeeze through. The woman sticks out her foot and blocks the way without looking up. "Yeah, but I want her input," the woman says, waving a hand at Kanaya. "I'm not big on shoving people through doors without them getting a choice." Her wild eyes glint, and her smile turns crooked at the edges. "So: kid, where do you want your spawn point to be?"

"Please, no," Janine says, fervently. "I understand you're Free Will aligned, but she's dead."

"I'm dead?" Kanaya repeats, her voice shaking in her throat. Ah. There's the apprehension again. She'd been wondering when it would start to hit her.

"Drink your tea, dear, we'll get this sorted out for you. Panicking is the last thing you want to do."
Janine gives Kanaya another strained smile, beaming unwaveringly. Kanaya meets her stare for stare, clamping down on the cup of tea, until Janine falters and starts frowning again. "Does it need more sugar?" she asks, squinting at Kanaya and rattling a small bowl of sugar cubes at Kanaya.

Kanaya hastily takes a sip, and that - that is a mistake. It is very good tea, but she's starting to wonder if it's full of sedatives, because she finds herself slouching back again, a faint warm pressure behind her eyes. No more tea, she thinks, rubbing her forehead and setting the half-drunk cup down on her own side table. Definitely no more tea. "No more tea," she says, gritting her teeth. "Where am I, and how can I get back -"

Back to Rose. Rose, who, if she thinks Kanaya is dead - Kanaya is dead - god -

"I get a say in this?" Kanaya asks, as the realization hits her (too slow; everything feels so dreamlike, fuzzy and felted at the seams), and she sets the cup of tea down so she won't be tempted anymore -

No. She...she already set it down once, didn't she? And yet, to her dismay, when the cup clinks against the table it is now completely empty. She doesn't remember taking more than two sips.

The woman snaps a finger pistol at her, grinning, while Janine hastily pours out another cup of tea. "Yup. Totally up to you," the woman says, cheerfully. "I'm very Free Will aligned."

The sugar hits the tea with such velocity that the cup nearly overflows, followed by a dangerous slosh as Janine presses it into Kanaya's waiting claws. "She barely even knows what's happening here!"

Kanaya nods in agreement. "Really, I don't have a clue." The two women move in fast, deft movements; Kanaya can barely keep up with them. She drinks some more tea, remembers abruptly that she'd told herself not to do that again, and finally resigns herself to it. The combination of the fuzzy, pale illumination and the overwhelming absurdity of the entire situation (why on Earth is Jade's secretary her resurrepresentative? Liaison for what? A crisis of mortality? A near death experience?), she decides that possibly-drugged tea that she can't remember drinking should probably be at the bottom of her list of concerns.

Being dead in general is right at the top. Her horrendous lack of a chainsaw come right after. She feels naked, honestly.

The woman shakes the packet of papers so that it wobbles, looking very satisfied with herself. "No, really, this is pretty simple. You technically belong to two different realities. It looks like a relatively new Muse who didn't realize metaphysical redundancy leads to bad shit like this."

"I have no idea what you're saying," Kanaya says, flatly. "Please get back to the part where I leave."

"You can try to resurrect in your reality of origin - which frankly I don't recommend, since your reality of origin is totally fucked. Its lifespan is measured in, like, minutes." The woman pulls another leaf off the poor plant, arranging it in a little half-circle with other dismembered leaves.

Janine heaves a sigh, rubbing the bridge of her nose with the back of her scythe. "She can't go back now, anyway. The door is shut."

"I could push her through manually. The not-fun way." The woman checks the wrist of her chrome tattooed arm, glancing at a watch that isn't there. She drums her claws on the papers, her smile lopsided but thoughtful. "The new Muse probably does have a stronger case for you, here. Like calls to like. But I'm not the one making the call here." She looks at Kanaya with eyes that have shifted color, and arches an eyebrow.

It reminds Kanaya very strongly of Rose. Her dream-befuddled mind latches onto that. "I need to get back and help my friends," she says, slowly, struggling to piece her thoughts together into words. "I don't care what it takes -"

Her phone buzzes in her pocket.

…Honestly, Kanaya is not sure why she is surprised to learn that she still has cell service in the afterlife. It makes perfect sense, in fact. She holds up a claw to pause the conversation and answers the texts waiting for her in Pesterchum.

UU: kanaya? are you there?
GA: What In The Hell Is Happening To Me Explain Immediately.
GA: Why Is The Troll Obsessed With Hot Beverages And Jade In Charge of My Afterlife?
UU: is that who you're seeing? how weird.
GA: I Don't Even Know Who They Are.
GA: Apparently Something Went Wrong When I Died.
GA: I Need A Lawyer. Where Is Terezi When You Need Her?
UU: hehehe.
UU: are they giving you a choice?
GA: Yes How Did You Know?
UU: i know where you are but can't reach you Under my own power. you're in the domain of a very whimsical extraversal being, i suspect. it is the only explanation i have come Up with. i guess i broke the rules enough that someone had to intervene.
UU: if you can, ask them if they can resurrect you in my reality!
GA: What? No I Have To Go Back And Help The Others.
GA: Why Would You Think That Was A Good Idea Ever?
UU: becaUse it is! trUst me!
UU: i was actUally hoping this woUld happen when yoU died, except that yoU were meant to be eroUted right to me. the intervention was Unexpected.
GA: I'm Sorry, But I Can't Leave Them To Finish This Alone.
UU: yoU won't have to!
GA: What Do You Mean?
UU: did yoU really think that final portal was a one way thing?
UU: ~u^

"I changed my mind. I'd like to go to Calliope's reality, if that is still an option which I can choose," Kanaya says, as fast as she can. Her brain can't quite keep up with the words flooding out of her, but that - seems right? She's not sure she wants to be dead much longer, in any case. This is becoming very uncomfortable, and she takes a steadying sip of tea when her stomach begins to churn.

"You're sure that's what you want?" the woman asks.

"Absolutely positive." Belatedly, Kanaya flips the fold of her dark skirt over the phone to conceal it, then looks up and blinks innocently at the woman and Janine.

Just in time to see the strange woman wink at her. "Good times, all around," she says. At some point during Kanaya's distracted conversation with Calliope, the woman's chrome tattoo has crawled up her arm and across her collarbones to curve up the other side of her face. "Well, liaison? Are you feeling it now?"

"Yes. Thank you for your cooperation," Janine grumbles, pulling a thick tome out of her robes and resting it in her lap as she turns a massive chunk of the pages at once. It falls open to the page she must want, because she clicks the top of her scythe and uses it as a pen to scribble something on the parchment. Then she passes it to the woman at the desk.

The woman takes the tome, and digs one of her claws into the pad of a thumb. The blood that comes out is a pinkish-red and too thick as she mashes her thumb down to leave a syrupy print beside Janine's signature. "Liaise away."

Janine squints as she snaps the tome shut, and takes Kanaya's claw in hers one last time. "This is definitely permitted, right? I don't want to be dragged up in front of someone more impressive than you to explain why I'm ferrying a wayward soul to a protoreality fresh out of genesis."

"Defiantly permitted," the woman says, gleefully, and then she hauls the door open for them. Her desk vanishes, and suddenly the door fills Kanaya's entire field of vision. All she sees at the edges is white – the dark of her skirt and stoles and hood suck toward the door, as though drawn by an inexorable gravity.

"Oh, let's just go," Janine harrumphs, her voice clear over the rushing sound as Kanaya's head begins to throb. "Do you need a top off for the road?"

"I think if I drink tea ever again in my lifetime, it will be too soon," Kanaya says. "For the record."
Then - "Janine. May I ask why you, of all people, are doing this? It's nothing personal, I just thought you weren't all that important."

Janine blinks at her with black, empty eye sockets. "Janine? Who? Is that how you perceive me?
Mortals can be so odd."

Kanaya blinks.
Death stares back at her with sightless eyes, the hinge of its skeletal jaw locked in place by calcified spurs as it squeezes her hand.

DEATH: WELL. SHALL WE?

---

Dave starts dying around page 45.

Which is a load of ass. He ignores it up until it comes time to drop some fat stacks of snake eggs on the platform, and then -

- His concentration never falters - not even once, or he'd skid off into a dead crack before he could catch himself - but when time itself is going down the tubes, it's hard as shit to focus and remember more than bits and pieces as he hops around egg-napping from doomed timelines.

Yeah. It took him way too long to realize that the recipe called for a shitton of snake eggs that he and Karkat haven't made. A dozen or so pages of eggs don't exist in the alpha timeline, no matter how dangerously close Dave skates along with his timetables, and that's straight up horse shit. Like, straight from the horse's ass shit.

So he sucks it up, and feels pain lance down across his chest as he scratches the records. The timetables whine alarmingly and their diamond-sharp grooves start cutting up the pads of his fingers (awesome) and Dave takes a step forward and diagonally into a broken shard of timeline that's dead from the instant it branches off his.

Because every. Fucking. Keystroke. Any time Karkat (or later, Jade) mistypes, it strangles another vestigial timeline, already faded and ashen and crumbling under the Lord of Time's garbage tantrum throes when Dave arrives, gasping to breathe when the air's full of heavy, dead shards of broken time. He works each doomed version of the platform over for all it's got; it's grand theft egg all up in here. Another scrub of the record and he's back in the land of the not-doomed-yet, and the brilliant, living color of Jade's land is a fucking symphony for his retinas after the horrible stillness of the doomed dead ends all around them.

He catches glimpses of stuff that never was - including stuff Dave can't even begin to figure out how it even happened. There are timelines with Vriska and Typhueus competing to see who can be the tooliest of tools, duking it out in the distance where LoWaS used to be; there's a world where Jack fucking Noir hangs in the distance, riddled with grimdark tentacles and frozen in the act of drilling into Skaia; one where Feferi's fighting the Lord of Time with Kanaya instead of helping at the Forge; and another, where Echidna arches over the Forge with a snarl as Eridan tears down out of the sky in a blazing rage, his body half-eaten up by Hope wings; and another still, where Karkat and Eridan are frozen mid-blood pact, for no reason Dave can figure out from what's left of the timeline -

He sees enough incomprehensible shit that when he zaps back into the main timeline, the sun rising beyond Skaia on LoLaR's side of the Medium doesn't register as weird for a split second. It burns so bright that Karkat snarls and shields his eyes with his claws - Dave's offer of a broken pair of sunglasses gets waved away with a growl, which is fair, since all his shades are officially broken pieces of shit by now - and the light scatters and shines through the cracked facets of reality, casting faint, prismatic rainbows across Skaia's clouds. The sun turns, a shining disc with oddly two-dimensional rays in the shape of a Light symbol rotating around it in slow circles, and then fades. When it goes, there's no sign of Leviathan on the far side of Skaia; no horrific mutters, no tentacle arms - nothing.
The end of a fucking era. Rose does not do shit by halves. Dave whistles and takes off his shades for a second, in a moment of respect. "Holy shit, Rose."

"That was Rose?!" Karkat repeats, wiping at his watery eyes with a hiss.

"A light show that extra? That's so Rose. My Strider sense is tingling," Dave says, with complete confidence. There's probably a future Dave running around here that knows for sure what happened - the whole platform's awhirl with Dave doubles, all of them with progressively scarred up faces - but Dave's not caught up just yet.

Then Feferi blinks and looks up, her eyebrows scrunched in confusion. "Hang on," she says, squinting at Dave, and then back down at the nearly dead Dave passed out on the floor between her and Karkat.

Dave's too busy to get bogged down in worrying about that shit. He spins the turntables again, and contemplates the world without the gift of his godly musical tunes.

-

LoHaC melted down into a lump of cold slag a while ago. The Lord of Time screaming it into fractured pieces is just a douchey formality. A guy could give himself a hernia trying to out-douche the Lord of Douches.

In the back of Dave's head, he can hear records smashing against the wall and a set of stationary turntables cave in with a dying burst of noise.

But the timetables keep turning under his hands, as riddled with painful, clockwork scars as Dave.

-

AA: dave
TG: aradia
AA: ill take over in a second
TG: hell no
AA: its about that time!
AA: all the snakes are right where they need to be down here
AA: jades coming to teleport everyone to the arks
AA: so i can come up there and stall for time
TG: you can feel that right
TG: our shit is wrecked
TG: i was never making it out that gate
AA: yes you are
TG: nah no time
TG: gotta go fast
AA: only relatively speaking
AA: technically we have all the time in the world to finish the snake breeding
TG: hes not dicking around with the dark god of tentacle pr0n anymore
TG: lohacs already straight fucked and lofafs next on the chopping block AA: ironically enough lofaf is perfectly safe
TG: what
TG: how do you know
AA: this is what i want dave
AA: you dont want to die no matter what your self sacrificial knight brainmeat is telling you
TG: yeah w/e its fine
TG: i can make it
AA: youve done enough
AA: time to rest dave

But yeah. So he has a tiny heart attack.

Maybe Aradia has a point about his sacrificial brainmeat. Because Dave thinks he's not nearly as freaked out about that as he should be. His body's one big, walking ache - for a given value of 'walking' - and when Feferi sags back, her fancy fairy wings drooping behind her like she's about to wilt from the effort of hauling his ass back out of the grave, Dave finally feels a prickle of - something. Like, haha, remember all those plans people made to throw him through the gate as soon as it opened? Nothing ever goes according to plan, dammit.

"Dave," Feferi says, a pissed off growl of warning in her voice as she tries to push him back down flat against the floor.

Dave scoots out from under her with a quick twitch of his timetables - and then collapses on one knee, one hand buried in a pile of eggs as he struggles to keep himself upright with blood in his mouth and some fun new, unfamiliar pain lancing through his chest. His flailing hand knocks the eggs down in a tumble that buries WV for like the fifth time since Dave rescued him from Jade's teleporting clutches for emotional support, and Karkat tackles Dave with a shriek, setting off an avalanche of his own. "Dave, that's enough!" he howls right in Dave's ear, and attempts to grapple Dave by wrapping his legs around his waist and clinging to his back like a spider monkey.

On a normal day, Dave would have just dodged that. Shit. He thinks he's officially run out of steam. One more flashstep is all he can squeeze out of himself; then he hits the terminal, dizzy, and just barely manages to prop himself up without passing out. Karkat hits the ground and rolls with a noise in his throat like a chainsaw grinding against a concrete floor - and then rips that goddamn piece of shit crowbar off his back, pointing it at Dave like it's a stabbing utensil. Which…isn't entirely wrong, but offends Dave's bladekind user sensibilities regardless, because it's not a sword - it's a lying crowbar.

But seriously. This is just sad. "Dude. You can't pull a sword on me. I'm like, decrepit, but I'm still the sword guy, so I'm pretty sure that's illegal," Dave says. Breathing takes concentrated effort, and with the way his legs wobble under him like possessed noodles, he knows this is the end of the road. At this point, he's arguing with Karkat just because Karkat likes to be argued with.

"Oh, fuck off," Karkat snarls, exasperated, waving the not-sword around as he rolls his eyes.

Feferi edges around on Dave's left, the opposite of subtle. She doesn't even bother pulling a specibus; she could bench-press him any day of the week. "You can't continue like this," she says, half pleading.

"He's coming around the Medium clockwise. We're next," Dave says. So close. They're slow close, but only one timetable's still intact under his palm when he puts out his hand.

Karkat loses his shit. "Fuck you, Dave! I'm not watching you kill yourself out of some stupid hero complex! We've already got too many dumbasses with hero complexes as it is! Yours can take a back seat for once!" he explodes, absolutely livid as he strides toward Dave and jams his claw right into Dave's chest.

Dave winces, but doesn't have the energy to flinch. "You want me to sit around and be useless?! I already know what that shit's gonna do to me!" he yells back, and Karkat and Feferi both look absolutely appalled. Thank fucking god Jade took Bro along with Doctor Lalonde to the last of the ark ships approximately five minutes ago, or Dave would be forced to give a fuck. "This is fine," he says, leveling his voice out with a ton of effort.

"Liar," Karkat hisses. A bubble of lava the size of a minivan pops beside them, radiating a wave of heat from the Forge, and Dave abruptly realizes that Echidna has paused in her pot-stirring to watch them, steam and lava dribbling from between her teeth as she cocks her head to side.

Watching them.

"We're out of options. I'm the time guy." And Aradia's not here yet, despite her insistence that she take over. They've still got pages and pages to go before the end, and the [crack]s are spreading across the sky, eating up the Medium on their way towards LoFaF. Wrapping an arm around his own stomach, Dave gingerly hauls himself upright to test his balance.

"Uh. I feel like I've interrupted something," Jade says, landing on the terminal with a tap of her foot as she bends over and buries Dave in a bunch of hair. Which smells like ozone and wet dog, at the moment. She eyeballs Dave upside down, her eyebrows shooting up in alarm as she takes in the sight of his face.

"Harley! Tell this idiot to stop killing himself!" Karkat yells.

"Dave, stop killing yourself!" Jade says instantly, though she rolls her eyes at Dave in the privacy her hair wall. Then she flips her hair back out of the way to glance at Echidna, who stares at them all like a giant, frosty snake monster at a buffet. "I don't think you're supposed to play in lava," she says.

EC: That is because you people only die in lava. EC:

"Fair enough!" Jade claps her hands together and hops over Dave's shoulder to bounce to the floor.

"Rose okay?" Dave asks, as Jade surveys the egg pile with a slow nod of her head.

She's very quiet for a second, and then gives a tiny shake of her head. "No. She isn't," she says, not meeting anyone's eyes. Her furry ears press flat against her hair, and she closes her hands into fists for a second. "John took her to the Gate, so they're both safe now!" she adds, injecting super fake enthusiasm into her voice.

"And Kanaya…" Feferi starts to say, and then stops when Jade's shoulders hunch up. "She'll be missed."

Karkat shakes his head and breathes out hard, but isn't distracted enough. "Swap John and Dave. We need the grist for the alchemy fucking yesterday," he says, using his not-sword as a pointing utensil to gesture wildly at Dave and then up in the general direction of the sky. This is only marginally less hilaggravating than him using it as a stabbing utensil. "As soon as we run through these eggs, we're done."

"No," Dave says.

Karkat's nostrils flare. "Uh, let me fix that for you. Yes."

"No."

"Yes."
"Nu-uh."

Karkat throws the crowbar on the ground and points a claw at Dave, furious. "Fuck you!"

"Let me die like a real man, you ass! By skipping a bunch of frames and clipping through a wall like a decent, respectable -"

"IF YOU BABBLE UNTIL YOUR DYING BREATH, I WILL MURDER YOU!" Karkat bellows, picking the crowbar right back up so he can wave it dramatically.

Jade stares at both of them, her fists on her hips, like she can’t believe they're having this stupid of a conversation right now. "You guys are such a bunch of drama queens."

"This is getting a little silly," Aradia agrees, clapping her hands together as she sits down on the terminal beside Dave with a thump. "Time to wrap things up!"

LE: INSOLENT VASSALS.

Too much time having dumb, rambling arguments - too little time spent keeping track of how far along the Lord of Time was. Story of Dave's fucking life. Aradia groans and flinches like she's been sucker punched and slides off the terminal, but when Dave instinctively reaches for her, she wears a resigned smile. Trust Aradia to know exactly when this was gonna happen -

Time turns into a blob of gelatin; Dave stands up and tries to walk through it, but he's only moving a little faster than a crawl. Karkat stands stock still, only his eyes able to move enough for him to look frantic; Feferi and Jade are a little better off, but Jade whirs around too slowly for her to possible react in time.

The Lord of Time hasn't even descended on LoFaF yet. But he hangs there like an omen in the sky, his skull of a face tipped disdainfully back so he can look down his nose at Dave and Aradia even more than he already is from miles and miles up above their heads. The freaky colors rolling down the hem of his overcoat paint the Medium around a sickly rainbow; just looking at him's enough to make Dave dizzy.

Dave forces himself forward another step. His time powers are pretty much fucked, anyway; unless Aradia has something planned, LoFaF isn't going to last long enough to finish the snake project. The Lord of Time doesn't have to pick them off one at a time, when he can cracks the planet open with a snap of his fingers.

LE: ONE LAST CHANCE. TO SERVE YOUR LORD.

"Sorry, Karkat," Dave grinds out - he's not sure if the words will reach Karkat, in this pocket of slowed time.

…He doesn't think Echidna's frozen in time. The denizen is still watching them.

Denizens are fucking assholes. Dave pulls the crowbar down more so it's level with his chest; there's not enough time for him to go through the agonizingly slow process of prying it out of Karkat's frozen hand.

Which means this is going to suck.

Dave winds his timetable up one last time, and flashsteps forward.

The crowbar stabs him before the Lord of Time can smite his ass -
"Hold him! Hold him -"

Equius slams into the Lord of Time like a brick shithouse.

It's the best thing Dave's ever seen before passing out.

[ERROR]

[The Knight of [ _ _ _ ] cannot be found.]

Kanaya steps through a door in a flood of hummingbirds, with no particular recollection of having approached a door in the first place.

For some reason, that irritates her more than she thinks is reasonable. Not the door, she has no problem with the door - it just vexes her that she doesn’t understand what's going on. As though this is just the latest in a string of nonsensical events for which she's been given only a partial explanation, and which no one seems inclined to elaborate on further.

But the irritation trickles away along with the faded, dream-like memories that nag at the back of her mind - something about tea? - and Kanaya's left to look around, cautious and faintly bewildered, at the space around her.

Darkness fills the chamber, though Kanaya's quite certain she can't sense any walls. In the distance, past the edges of the platform, she can make out streams of green fire, dancing in slow, silent spirals around the dark center, but she thinks the fire's further away than it looks. Like the light from a far-off galaxy. The floor feels very dark and solid and smooth under her green shoes, so dense that light can't quite escape it - except that here, at least, it can. Each step Kanaya takes causes a faint flicker of light to shine underfoot, and then slowly fade with a muted, musical note. The trailing ends of her stole drifts across the floor alongside the grey of her lower skirt, the black overskirt parted at the front so that the grey is visible from her waist down. Though her arms are bare, she's not cold here.

Ahead of her, thin lines of white outline a curtain so dark, even compared to the soft density of the floor, that Kanaya thinks it looks more like someone blacked out the color using a basic image editor. Though it's a curtain, she can't see folds in the cloth - only the outline, and a faint green glow that peeks out from under the bottom of the curtain.

From behind the curtain, someone plays a lyre. Kanaya can't hear a song in it: just a few scattered, experimental notes, and then a long, considering pause, as though the player composes something new on the fly. Kanaya looks behind her, at the thin trail of jade glitter dusted in her wake along the dark floor by her moth-veined wings, and then raises a claw to part the curtain and peer inside. "Hello?" she asks.

A flurry of pale purple hummingbirds with wine-purple throats startle into the air as the curtain shifts - Kanaya gets the impression of a whole flock before they abruptly vanish into the heavy, dark stillness of the air, so that only a scattered few hover and zip around the chamber. An immense vertical loom stands at the far edge of the platform, full of shimmering fabric so deep a green it's almost black, and dotted with stars. The upper edge of the fabric, already woven, seems to fade off the loom as Kanaya watches, and deepens to become part of the space beyond the edge of the platform. For a dizzying second, Kanaya thinks she can hear the music woven into the fabric - but if she listens too closely, she'll want to hear it till the end. She'll want to learn how to weave it herself, and that would be the work of eons.

At the very center, a figure sits on a low chair with outcurved legs carved to resemble snakes, her lyre hovering in midair beside her and an inkwell full of gleaming white light perched on the arm rest. She looks up from her work on a deep green tablet to blink at Kanaya with wide, glossy green eyes, and then smiles, raising a green claw in fond greeting. And Kanaya knows that face. Has known it, since the Lord of Time appeared before them. She flinches back with a cry and stumbles on the too-long hem of her own dress. The brief flicker of irritation at the god tier dress's length - if Kanaya had sewn this herself, she wouldn't be tripping on it - cancels out her momentary panic, and she remembers her manners a second later. After she lands hard on the ground, of course. The floor seems to jump up to meet her, and the impact doesn't hurt at all, but it's still terribly embarrassing.

Calliope - it can only be her - doesn't need to stand up; she simply appears next to Kanaya, the long, cascading fall of her space-black chiton and white mantle almost swallowing Kanaya in a disproportionate tide of fabric that mingles with the dense floor. Her white sandals peep out from under the outlined hem, the same color as the symbol on the front of her chest. "Egad! I hope I didn't frighten you," the Muse says, cocking her head to the side as she peers down at Kanaya without blinking. It's more than a little disconcerting: her dark hood covers most of her smooth green skull, but the very back of the hood appears to open out onto a small galaxy, laced into the fabric by a red bowtie.

"...Calliope," Kanaya says, finally, as she pushes herself upright; Calliope doesn't offer a claw to assist, and instead simply stares in wide-eyed, curious delight, her tongue occasionally zipping out to taste the air as Kanaya half-lifts a hand to shake. Then, when Calliope stares at her claw curiously, she drops it. "You look like -" she tries to start again. This isn't how she might have imagined meeting the creator of an entire reality; the Muse is both more anthropomorphic and more...not than expected. When Kanaya stands and tries to gauge how tall Calliope is compared to her, the answer seems vary from moment to moment, without Calliope looking any different. "I mean, you look well," she recovers, belatedly.

That snakelike tongue slips out one last time, and then Calliope turns her eyes down in acknowledgement, with a tiny, sharp smile. "I know. I'm sorry. I nearly let it slip, from time to time, but I'm not sure any of you quite realized the implications of my relationship with my brother," she says, then takes a single step that crosses half the room, back through the curtain. Kanaya follows her with regular steps. She's...aware that she's god tier, now, and might well be able to teleport like Jade - or at least cut some corners, as far as space is concerned. How and when that happened, she's not sure, but she doesn't want to test it out here. The atmosphere here doesn't feel dangerous. Weighty, maybe, heavy with potential. Not some place she wants to muck around, no matter how her powers feel like a simple extension of herself.

It seems obvious, in retrospect. Calliope and her brother. The Muse and the Lord.

Kanaya can guess, now, what's going to happen on LoFaF. What they're creating, there. The Final Alchemy was never a recipe for just a muse. She's not sure how the others will take it. Karkat won't take it well, at the very least, because Karkat doesn't take anything well, let alone the kind of guilt generated by ensuring the doom of reality. Calliope waits - not patiently, but as though the extra time it takes for Kanaya to cross the room, guiltily speeding up when she realizes that the Muse finished crossing the room way ahead of her, means nothing to her - and when Kanaya catches up the Muse puts out a claw to touch the loom and smooth a thread down into a half-woven nebula. Here at the edge of the open-walled room, Kanaya feels like they've taken a dizzying step closer to the green fire that dances in the distance; her sense of scale seems broken, because she can't tell whether the galaxies on the loom are life-size or not. If they are...

"Why am I here?" she asks, after admiring the fine weave a little longer. Calliope continues to smile at her, but the skeletal tautness of her features renders the expression almost unreadable by both human and troll standards; Kanaya only has human and troll body language to go off, too, so her impression that the Muse is calm could just be her projecting. "This is the other side of the gate. I don't mean to be rude, but I really need to go. Right now," she says, emphatic, when Calliope only tilts her head again. The gate glows in the distance - not quite as far away as the green, fiery swirls, but far enough that it looks like a black house outlined in white against the fabric of space. Kanaya points toward it, aware of how useless the gesture is.

"You don't remember?" Calliope says, with an unmistakable note of disappointment in her voice as she stares at Kanaya with imploring eyes. Then she shakes her head and rearranges her pale mantle without using her claws in a smooth rustle of fabric. "Oh! You were a little dead. But you're alive now!" she adds.

It must have happened somehow, for Kanaya to be god tier now. Still, chatting blithely about one's demise never becomes less awkward. Kanaya tugs on her collar a little, as faint pangs run through her neck. Remembering how she died would be unpleasant, and she'd rather not. "Well then. I guess that would explain it," she agrees. "But I can't stay."

Calliope dips her head to the side. If she were less...alien, Kanaya would expect her to shut her eyes and sigh. But Calliope doesn't appear to have eyelids. "Ah, well. My research into the nature of extraversal matters is a bit of a side project, anyway. I have so very many theories...but this is what really matters," she says, and angles herself toward the stars again.

It looks remarkably similar to space back home. Kanaya can't recognize any of the stars or galaxies, and every so often the view shifts and folds in a new way as another layer reveals itself, sheet after sheet interspersed with occasional swaths of darkness. But stars are still stars. Not that different after all -

Kanaya squints, her mouth opening a little as she concentrates. The distance feels quite literally astronomical - and ah. Oh dear. Not stars. Those are superclusters.

And this time, Calliope does sigh, but she wears her skeletal grin as she does. "So many places, so many different stories to tell. I want all kinds of possibility and variation - not just one game, following the same patterns, forcing its own mandates and discarding whatever it deems insignificant. It sounds quite boring! And in many ways unkind. Why need the universe be uncaring?” she says, all in a rush, her claws slowly coming up to fold under her chin in trembling earnestness. Then she shoots Kanaya an intent, searching look, before sweeping away from the edge of the dark platform. She folds the dense space to return to her low seat, and this time Kanaya's aware enough to pay attention to the technique she uses to do so.

As fascinating as a discussion of cosmic indifference might be, Kanaya still feels like she's on the clock, here. "It looks very nice," she agrees. "And it is nice to get some insight into the philosophy going into its creation. But that is the way back?" Floating off the platform a little, her wings whirring a little as she momentarily struggles to lift off the hefty chunk of super-dense space, probably isn't very tactful, but Kanaya's more than a little concerned about however long she might have been dead and absent for. Resurrecting here is all well and good, but if none of her friends know that she's resurrected here...suffice to say it would be best to clear up any such misconceptions before someone does something rash.

It's Rose. She's talking about Rose.

Calliope makes no attempt to stop her, and it occurs to Kanaya that the Muse hasn't touched her at all. "Yes. I'll hold it open until the very last moment," she says. "I'm very glad to have met one of you all in person, though! It's a nice confirmation that you will be able to exist comfortably here, without issue."

Kanaya nods, a little hesitant to charge off toward the gate; nothing in the Muse's body language indicates that she has more to say, but Kanaya just can't read her well. If at all.

Just as she convinces herself to start flying and escape the event horizon, Calliope speaks again without warning, the rustle of her mantle the only sign she might have moved at all. "But now you're here! So...I wanted to give you something to assist you in dealing with my brother." She beckons almost imperceptibly with a claw - a little late, in Kanaya's opinion, but better now than when Kanaya's already halfway through the gate. Urgh.

Kanaya sets back down on the platform with a soft, muted thump. 'Assist' could mean anything. "Um. That's nice. Why did it have to be me, though?" she asks, fighting to keep her face neutral instead of impatient as Calliope removes something from the galaxy-rich folds of her sweeping skirt and levitates the inkwell full of white light beside her.

The Muse turns and seamlessly moves to stand before Kanaya without so much as a twitch of her feet. "You and Jade both share an aspect with me! But there were more factors hinting at your doom than for Jade, so I made the necessary modifications," she says, as she dips a wand into the inkwell and brings it up, drops of pearly light beading along the surface as she observes Kanaya. This close, with the Muse's strange eyes fixed right on Kanaya at point blank range, Kanaya can make out the thin, transparent scale that covers her unblinking eyes with permanent gloss. "I believe I have the measure of you, but please let me know if anything feels - uncomfortable," she says, and Kanaya tenses up, raising her chin as the wand taps her firmly between the horns.

'Assist' means precisely what Kanaya hoped it would. The world spins out from under her feet for a brief moment - and they're standing on space so heavy and dense with matter and power that it has wrapped around to become void, she thinks, dizzily, almost drunk on the heady tide running through her from her horns to her toes. Every atom in her shifts into sharp focus, as do the superclusters that previously looked like stars to her straining eyes, before her perception pops back into something that her brain can manage without exploding to meet it.

She opens her eyes, and a chainsaw rests in her waiting claws. A Space symbol hangs at the end of the starter cord like a charm; the teeth running around the length of the chain appear to be small stars.

It's ridiculous. She falls in love at once. Kanaya's not entirely sure how Rose will feel sharing Kanaya's heart with the finest, most ostentatiously magnificent weapon in two realities, but Kanaya is confident that she has more than enough love for both. "Please tell me that this is what I think it is," she says, fighting the soul-deep urge to rev it instantaneously and start waving it around like a love-struck fool. Changes to her outfit - like the shaped plates of void under her god tier dress, and the white, decorative snakes that curl around her waist - can be dealt with later.

Calliope definitely looks pleased, her taut skin dimpled as she smiles and steps back. "Oh, yes. I would not send you back without a little something to help! You've come back as a god as defined here, not by my predecessor, so - give my brother a taste of what waits for him, and then come back safe to me with all your friends." Her wand vanishes back into her mantle, as the Muse inclines her head. "My chosen arbiter."

Hitting the echeladder rank of Sepulchritudinous Sylph with a chainsaw in her claws feels very right. Very - dare she say it - badass. "I am sure that this is against the rules. Somehow," she says. Though she is doing the opposite of complaining, at the moment.

Very deliberately, Calliope sticks out her tongue. "Rules are complicated and often shifting things, depending on how you interpret them, and often over-complicate things. But then, I think I am more fluid than my predecessor in that regard. I've analyzed her rules and patterns so that I can better understand how to integrate you all here, but they sometimes just don't make sense and appear to be completely arbitrary," she says, before clicking her tongue in frustration.

Kanaya nods. "I'm glad that even a being of unfathomable cosmic power feels the same way we do. It's weirdly reassuring."

Calliope's grin brightens, which has the unfortunate side effect of stretching it to the point of ghoulishness. Kanaya tamps down her instinctive terror. "Heheheh. I hope you will all like it here."

Space folds, and Kanaya catches herself without missing a beat as Calliope brings them up before the dark house of the final gate, leaving reality's center far behind. "Now - there you go. It should be a straight path back, but there will be a light to guide the way," the Muse promises, her chiton and mantle billowing a little in the gentle breeze that soughs the gate - and occasionally in the exact opposite direction.

Kanaya steps forward, and tucks her chainsaw down into its more compact lipstick form with a twinge of reluctance that quickly vanishes as she realizes the black lipstick also glitters with stars. She applies it, eyeing the white outline of the gate with a measuring stare. Even with her space sense enhanced, it's difficult to tell where this reality becomes the gate to the old one - she could step through into the passage between quite easily without noticing a perceptible difference in the quality of the darkness.

But deep in the dark, at the very limits of what Kanaya can see... She narrows her eyes to focus better, and can make out a small star of light, shining in the distance, bright enough to be visible all the way through.

"Calliope? Can we really do this?" she asks, though it's more a rhetorical question, these days. Kanaya's standing here, on the far side of the transition between two realities. Over here, time is irrelevant. It is already done.

"Yes. From my perspective, you already have," Calliope confirms, quietly, for the last time.
Kanaya steps through the gate.

Rose lost her visor somewhere along the way.

Or at least, that's the weird, pointless detail that John's scrambled up brain decides to focus on as he sets them down right at the foot of the final gate. He figured there was about a fifty percent chance that the gate would just suck them in like milkshake through a straw the second they touched it, but there is a tiny little sliver where they can sit and dangle their feet over the edge. A slight breeze sighs through the skyscraper-sized curtains on either side of them, producing a familiar note, like wind tangling through windchimes; John doesn't mess with it. Right now, a giant ark ship looms overhead and just to the right of them. Two of the smaller space ships accompany the ark through the gate; all three just seem to cut off as they sink into the blinding white gate. A few meteors piloted by carapacians whizz by every so often, and a bunch of the guns on the Battleship Condescension flutter to attention as the carapacians sneak in around the sides of the bigger ships.

Without the visor, Rose's eyes have faded to a pale grey, with only a few streaks of the original purple left in the irises - she stares out over the Medium toward Skaia without seeing it. The matching Light-symbol scars bloom out from her eyes: one set of arms overlap and merge at the bridge of her nose, while two vanish into her hair, two stretch out to her temples, and the bottom pair run down her cheeks. The tears come in fits and bursts, and Rose's whole body hitches each time a fresh wave hits, her face straining and then screwing up as she swallows.

And he doesn't know if she'll ever be okay again. He doesn't know exactly how she feels, because - because it's not the same, with how messy and screwed up things were with his dad. But he thinks they're both left with the similar serrated-edged hole in their chests, that shifts and tears open fresh wounds whenever it digs its teeth into their insides.

...Now he's got the mental image of the two of them walking around with bread knives sticking out of their chests. Urgh. Heck, John doesn't even know how to process that Kanaya's gone - maybe they weren't the closest, but she was friendly, and Karkat's friend, and Rose's everything, and now she's just...not. It's an extra deep pocket of aching soreness for John to deal with, and he doesn't know how.

This close to the gate - nothing happens. Nada. Zip.

Which means John's got a front row seat as half the Medium shatters. Skaia itself stays intact, a great blue orb in the center of it all as enormous cracks thrust out, splintering everything between LoLaR and LoHaC. LoLaR itself is hidden from here, but Rose jerks and clutches her head in a way that tells John it's gone. LoHaC, already a half-melted, slowly darkening mess, fragments in a lightning fast count of 1-2-3 as cracks spread wider and further. It joins the debris from the trolls' planets, but that asteroid belt mostly vanished as the Reckoning's meteoric storm thundered across the Medium to reach the center and knocked all the chunks of brain and driftwood and masonry into the spirograph portals that festoon Skaia like an army of doilies. What's left hangs around in a pretty sad, threadbare shadow of its former self, and now a bunch of that debris vanishes into forking [cracks] that eat up everything they touch.

The cracks spread past LoHaC, and march around clockwise, with an unmistakable skeleton Hulk at their fore. His golden cuestaff clenched in one meaty fist, the Lord of Time opens his jaw and screams a fresh epicenter of cracks into the space between LoHaC and LoFaF before shutting it. Just listening to the horrible, breaking sound of his entropic, migraine-inducing scream from this distance makes John's head throb.

And that's just what he can hear and sense from here, which is probably the safest place he and Rose can be. After the way the Lord of Time smacked them all down on LoHaC, trapped in different pockets of messed up time and totally at his mercy...

"Oh, crap," John says. He presses the heels of his palms to his temples to try to ward off the incoming headache.

On the one hand, it turns out that grief takes a backseat to the dawning realization that they're in deep trouble. On the other hand, they're in deep trouble.

He needs to do - something, but heck if he knows what. Luckily, Rose catches him by the sleeve as he starts to float off the platform. "Describe what you see," she says, her voice still cracked and exhausted from crying.

Right. John shakes himself and clears his throat. "Uh. Terrible skeleton Hulk is really tearing the place apart. Everything's...breaking up." Another [crack] ripples through the world as John says that, and the Medium between LoLaR and LoHaC crunches. John doesn't even have words to describe it: all the cracked expanse of reality, already broken by Leviathan's fight with the Lord of Time, seems to sink in on itself and fade. Only the cracks themselves look real while the rest of reality looks like a shattered, 2-dimensional shadow of its former self.

Before, John and Gamzee could navigate between the cracks to reach Rose. Now, John's suddenly very sure that there's nothing left to navigate. An entire quarter of the Medium just died right in front of him.

Beside him, Rose laughs. Belatedly, John raises a hand and grabs hers, the one that she used to hold him back, and then squeezes it. He's not sure which of them he's trying to comfort more. "He's free to concentrate now. I...I knew that would happen. But ending Leviathan mattered to me more than buying us more time," she says, a bitter smile creasing her face as she stares sightlessly down at her feet.

"I'm glad you did," John says, and the second he says it, he knows it's true. Even watching the Lord of Time march around the Incisisphere, breaking what little is left of reality - yeah. If he had to watch Earth shatter into pieces, it might have been different. Especially if all the people hadn't been evacuated... But deep down, Sburb has always been a game; watching parts of it fade out in the distance just feels like watching a game map go dark.

Still. For all of Sburb's (many, ridiculous) faults, it was one heck of a game. The biggest game that ever was. And it's sad to watch something that's played such a huge role in his strange life die like this.

Okay, maybe it's not that sad. Sburb is mostly terrible. But somewhere in the back of his mind, John's uncomfortably aware that this is all that's left. Full stop. Earth, the Solar System, their whole galaxy, their universe - all that unfathomably huge amount of stuff that he never really thought about
- must be riddled with [cracks] in time now, with the pieces fading away into nothingness. And whatever's waiting for them on the other side will never be the same.

"As fun as our nefarious, shadowy tentacle overlords have been, I thiink they kind of overstayed their welcome. Fighting them all the way up to the end would have been a huge hassle," John says, once the tiny existential crisis stops happening. Yeesh.

He pats Rose on the shoulder, and she sighs. "They could've distracted him for a while longer," she says, her voice full of bitter, rueful guilt. Then she tilts her head back, her smile unsteady and her eyes wet. "Or maybe there's just a part of me that can't bear to see it all end. I don't want to let go."

John winces, as it occurs to him that 'terrible skeleton Hulk' maybe doesn't quite capture everything that's going on here. He clears his throat and starts over. "Um...Okay. Everything's all...dark and glossy. Y'know how it looks like glass shattering when he cracks stuff?" When Rose gives a slight nod, he goes on. "The more he screams at it, the more the Medium looks weirdly flat. LoHaC and everything around that side...a lot of it's dark and faded. The Veil's almost all gone and launched at Skaia, and I don't think anything's left outside of where we are, Rose. There's just us here in the game, and the Battleship hanging around to guard everyone, and maybe a quarter of the ark ships and carapacian guys left." John does a quick count to make sure of that, but he isn't sure how many ships there were to start with! And the carapacian meteors spiral around in crazy loops before shooting through the gate, which makes it hard to keep track of who is where. Whoops. He could probably find a more accurate number buried in the memos somewhere..."Skaia and this gate are the only things that still seem bright," he finishes, suddenly feeling self-conscious. Rose nods almost imperceptibly as he talks, but he knows that his rambling description can't make up for what she can't see anymore.

"And us," Rose murmurs; John hears her on the wind, easy, but it's so quiet he's not sure he's supposed to. "We shine, too." Before John can ask what she means - Seer stuff? - she steeples her hands in front of her face. "It was our home. Is it possible to miss something you never gave much thought to? Of all the things to take for granted, I never thought reality itself would be at the top of the list," she says, with just a hint of her usual, ironic lilt. "Somehow, I don't think there will be a Seattle equivalent on the other side. Or a New York. It all...ended."

They must be on the same depression wavelength. John sniffs and wipes his nose awkwardly (he's got a grand total of no tissues on him right now) as something trembles in his throat. "Yeah, seriously. Maybe it wasn't all good, but endings are still the saddest part," he says, thickly, and looks down for a sec to breathe a few times. It works. A little. When he looks back, Rose is crying, big wet streams of tears that run down her face without a sound, and whoops, there all his work goes out the window. John feels his face start to scrunch up in a wave of sympathy tears. "I'm sorry, Rose."

"Don't be."

"We're both a mess, huh?"

Just as John's about to offer the end of his windsock hood for - uh, reasons - Rose plucks a handkerchief out of nowhere and blows her nose. Man, that is a handy trick. "Maybe so," she says, sounding stuffed up.

"Uh -" John starts to say, before becoming incredibly distracted by a [crack] that splits the air. Jerking his head up, John reels for a second as the echoes roll across the Medium.
When his head stops freaking out and his ears stop ringing, the Lord of Time is hanging directly between them and the Land of Frost and Frogs. The time cracks stop dead along a perfect line that slices the Medium almost in half - the few remaining ships in the Condesce's fleet almost ram into each other as the formation closest to the web of cracks veers sharply to escape it. Eridan dives down a muttered swear that John only just barely catches on the wind, white fire bleeding off him in waves as he slices down between an ark about to lose a slice of its hull and blasts the ship away from the cracks with a ragged smack of power.

A shot of ice-cold adrenalin rushes through John as he shoots upright, his whole body jittering with the abrupt need to move, because even if Jade already evacuated Doctor Lalonde and her lab full of people, Karkat and Dave and Jade are still there - all it'll take is one world-splitting scream and the Lord of Time could shear LoFaF in two.

LE: INSOLENT VASSALS.

LE: ONE LAST CHANCE. TO SERVE YOUR LORD.

EB: guys?! everyone -
CC: Dave needs to leave, now!
GG: i've got h-
TG: fuck it well do it live
CG: DAVE, YOU EXTRAVAGENT FUCKING DIPSHIT - NO!

John has no context for what happens next. His whole body strains to burst apart and rush to LoFaF, the Breeze whipping around him in a tempest, ready to help -

But then the Lord of Time snarls, the sound so loud that it makes all the shattered reality around them rattle and crunch in a burst of cacophonous noise that makes John's winds snap in close to his body. His sinuses ache, of all things, but that kinda falls by the wayside as the Lord of Time transforms his cuestaff into a golden machine gun, levels it at LoFaF -

And Equius punches him with the fists of a god. John didn't even sense Equius moving. He still can't really pinpoint him, actually! But the pocket of void where Equius determinedly isn't slides into weird focus as the Lord of Time wheels around to face it, despite how far away they are, and John catches flickers of deep blue and grey as Equius knocks the machine gun aside and pummels the Lord of Time's skeletal face from one side to the other.

Nepeta tears out of the void with a bloodthirsty yowl, leaps off Equius's shoulders and over the Lord's head in a flash of pink light, and slams down onto the Lord of Time with her claws slashing along his back.

John's jaw drops open, and stays that way. He's still in the process of saying, "UHHHHH," but by now it has gone through many dips and twists, from "UH," to "uhhhhh" and back again, and risen in volume to the point that he's basically screaming it. Meanwhile, Rose's repeated attempts to ask what's going on fell on very distracted ears, and she has given up asking him to describe what's going on in favor just staring off sightlessly into the distance with a look that says she's questioning
"Equius and Nepeta are trying to fight the Lord of Time," John says. 'Trying' is a little wishy-washy - they are fighting him, present-tense and with ferocious energy. John can't tell if they're actually hurting him, but the two trolls fight almost perfectly in tune with one another. They must have three different fraymotifs running, though the main one John hears are [Catch Me If You Can] and the muted, not-sound of [Nicolas Cage's 4' 33''], which sounds kind of like if you were listening to dead silence through a wall. Nepeta springs off the Lord of Time and dodges a wild swing of his cuestaff as it rapidly flickers between forms, then vanishes back into the inky blot of pure void as Equius conceals them again. The Lord of Time wrenches his jaw apart as his chest swells, ready to scream - then Equius tackles him around the waist, and Nepeta raises both claws and stabs them down into the Lord's flashing eyes. "Nepeta just got him in the face!"

"What about LoFaF?" Rose asks, tersely - then she blinks and cocks her head. "Wait. Never mind. I can still hear it."

TT: Status report, everyone.
CA: wwait aren't you blind noww
AA: actually the tangible difference between text and voice communication is pretty negligible in this Medium!
AA: ive been talking to you all via text this whole time!
TT: It certainly doesn't seem to be stopping me. I can think of more than a few occasions where it has seemed like we've been using some kind of merged text/voice chat at the same time, but our brains tend to process it as one or the other depending on context.
CG: I HATE THAT I BELIEVE YOU.
CC: We )ad to stab Dave! )e's unconscious but )is deterioraytion )as stopped...
CG: YOU MEAN HE STABBED HIS OWN FUCKING SELF, OKAY.
EB: but he's okay?
CC: ...U). Not dying! I'm still working on )im.
TT: I - good. He's spent enough time here. He should have been out through the gate ages ago.
CG: WE KNOW. HE JUST WOULDN'T FUCKING GO. THE DUMB, STUPID, STUBBORN FUCK.
GG: as soon as feferi finishes going over him, trust me, hes gone :T
EB: knowing dave, he's gonna try to keep helping.
GG: if i can punt bro through the gate i can punt anyone
EB: also equius, nepeta...holy crap.
AC: :33 < APEX
AC: :33 < PREDATOR!!!
EB: seriously!
CT: D--> We can't keep this f00lishness up much longer
AC: :33 < We're doing fine, you worrywart!
CT: D--> How much more time is needed before we can make our e%it?
CG: FUCK. JOHN, WE STILL NEED YOUR GRIST!
EB: aagh! i forgot! D:

John's about to say something to Rose - out loud, not in the...weird Pesterchum way - before he takes off, but he's distracted again by the fight raging between LoFaF and the gate. The Lord of Time batters Nepeta away; she catches herself and flips in midair with a snarl. Weird light drips from her clawkind, flicking through the same rainbows as the Lord of Time's eyes and the hem of his overcoat, and also from his Skeletor eye holes. The overcoat that strains around his bulging, weird skeleton man muscles hangs in shredded tatters around the Lord's shoulders, and his jaw hangs askew from his face where Equius punched it.
Then the Lord of Time raises his hand, and snaps his fingers.

His whole body snaps back to normal. His jaw wrenches back into place in a twitch; his coat resets itself, all the slash marks from Nepeta's attacks gone. John has to cross his eyes to see it, but his eyes pass over the Lord of Time's health bar and -

There's only one bar.

With a snake over it, in the shape of an infinity sign.

Nothing either Equius or Nepeta did even shaved off a sliver.

"Something's off," Rose says, a faint frown on her face as she ponders. "I...think he should have been able to hit LoFaF by now. Why wouldn't he? Those cracks – why did they stop right here? Are we really distracting him that much -"

And just as that realization twists John's stomach up into a knot of foreboding, something behind him...ripples. The Breeze swirls around before John can, the many layers of wind wrapping around him and Rose as he stares into the soft white glow of the gate.

The curtains flutter again, in their own alien breeze. One of the last ark ships sticks out at a slight angle, but it's more than three quarters through the final gate. The weird, fluttering ripple doesn't appear to bother it, but how could John tell?

Another foreign breeze stirs around him. Almost as though -

BE: ...Something's coming through.

EB: oh crap.
EB: something's up with the gate.
CG: WHAT. LIKE WHAT?!
EB: it's like a cosmic burp or something!
GG: ...
TT: ...
CG: ...
CC: ...
CA: ...
AC: :33 <...
GG: oh! wait, i feel it too!
GG: yeah, that kind of is like a cosmic burp, isn't it!
EB: exactly!
CG: OH MY FUCKING GOD YOU TWO. CAN YOU HAVE A SHARED HUMAN SIBLING EPIPHANY ABOUT COSMIC BURPS AFTER WE'RE DONE HERE?
EB: sorry karkat, this is a pretty important bonding moment for us.
GG: yup! eheheh.

"John? Is something coming through?" Rose says, with a note of urgency. John reaches down and gives her a hand up so that she doesn't miss her footing on the edge of the platform, and the two of them turn back toward the gate as it sighs further open. But he doesn't have an answer for her - all he can feel is the wind of some other place as it pours through. It's familiar and unfamiliar at the same time...

The ark ship finishes crossing into the gate, its ponderous, looming presence swallowed up into the soft light.

One breath, two, and the whole gate inverts in color with a dizzying ripple as Kanaya strides through like a walking storm, her face etched with determination. She wears black and white Space clothing so stark and crisp that the rest of the Medium looks faded and dull in comparison, and stars glitter on her mouth and her very, very awesome chainsaw.

"Kanaya!" bursts out of John's mouth. Something pent up in his chest snaps open and a bubble of irrepressible relief and amazement pops out. He doesn't remember when he started smiling, but he sure as heck is now, and it feels like his lip is about to split with how wide his grin spreads.

Rose makes a strangled sound, and steps forward, her hands reaching out. "Kanaya?!" she says, distraught.

Kanaya zeroed in over their heads to glare at the Lord of Time; now, she meets Rose's eyes and teleports right up to them without missing a beat. She flips her chainsaw away for a second, and it twirls slowly in the space behind her as she catches Rose up, dips her back, and kisses her.

When they resurface, some of Kanaya's glittery star lipstick stays on Rose's face. "Sorry for making you wait," she says, gravely, as Rose touches her cheek. Rose isn't smiling, but from the look in her eyes, it's because a smile wouldn't be enough.

Then Kanaya straightens them back upright, and puts out a claw. Her chainsaw zips back into her waiting palm and revs of its own accord. Now Rose smiles, with a sharp edge, and Kanaya leaps off the platform. She skips right past the Battleship and the remaining ark ships before vanishing, and John does a mental count of three in his head before Kanaya reappears in a flood of neon green, right in front of the Lord of Time. "Calliope sends her regards, you turgid green despot!" she shrieks, and brings her chainsaw down into his green skull.

This. Is something Rose needs to hear right this second. "Kanaya just chainsawed the Lord of Time in the face. And it was awesome," John says. Rose turns and follows the action with unfailing accuracy, her mouth parted slightly as Kanaya goes to town.

The Lord of Time rips his head free a second later, and to John's (kind of grossed out) amazement, Kanaya's chainsaw leaves a ragged fissure in his skull that doesn't seal up right away. He roars furiously and lashes out with his cuestaff to clock Kanaya across the face - but Kanaya spins away easily, her skirts floating around her with galaxies pinwheeling across the fabric, and the next second Equius rams into the Lord of Time from the side, so hard that it sends the cherub Lord flying back into the crunching mass of cracks. John whoops and pumps a fist in the air, unable to keep his feet on the platform with how much excitement bubbles up through the Breeze.

But the Lord of Time emerges from the shattered mess of cracks almost immediately, hanging heavy in the air as his head twitches on his neck in a series of rapid spasms. The ragged wound in his head stays, but the flickering rainbow fluid stops leaking from the cut and turns dark, dull green.

LE: THAT. IS CHEATING.

He raises his machine gun, and braces it with both claws.
Equius slams into visibility for a second as he tackles Nepeta down out of the way, to her yowling protest. The Lord of Time unleashes a barrage of bullets that set reality jangling in a series of ear-popping bursts.

Kanaya throws her claws out to either side, and space rearranges itself around her. The bullets carve through the space so fast that they should have hit her almost instantly - but they curve around instead and shoot off into the dark Medium between LoFaF and LoWaS. They leave tiny trails of broken reality behind them, but space knits back together in a wave, the green stitches clearly visible for a moment before Kanaya smooths them away. "I refuse!" she says, hefting her chainsaw again.

"I'm going to marry that girl," Rose says. John finally puts a finger on the word for her expression: she's only managed to smile with a tiny corner of her mouth, but she watches Kanaya unerringly with a look of utter devotion that wipes away all the grief and worry and tension of the past few hours.

"...Was that a statement of a fact, or like, a prophecy kind of thing?" John asks. Since Rose's eyes are still faded and blind, but she has that look to her. The proph-seeing kind of look.

"Why not both?" Rose says, with a short, self-conscious laugh. Then she wrinkles up her nose. "Is there something for me to cover my eyes with? They're starting to itch appallingly, and I'd rather not be distracted."

John knows for a fact that he has a wayward pair of Strider brand (literally) sunglasses somewhere on his person or in his sylladex. But. No. He's not giving Bro the satisfaction. He pats his pocket for a second, and then eyes the trailing end of his super long hood.

...Good thing Rose had that handkerchief. The Breeze grumbles at John as he rips off a strip of fabric, but the hood fixes itself the second John wants it too, and really, it is so long. So stupidly long. Who needs that obvious of a handhold for bad guys to grab on their uniform? It's nice and cool and waves in the breeze like a cape, which is pretty cool despite John's better judgement, but he's not gonna miss an inch off the end. "Here you go," he says, passing it to her.

Rose accepts it, and ties it around her eyes in a blindfold at once. "There. That'll do," she says, after she finishes fluffing her hair back over it. The trailing ends of the blindfold hang down her back, and almost matches the color of her shoes exactly.

"Rose," John says, solemnly. "That's the most anime thing I have ever seen you do. And I've seen you do a lot of anime shit."

Rose tilts her head back as she clearly rolls her eyes behind her blindfold, and then shoots John a wry smile. "Then go bother dear Dave until he wakes up, so he can be properly envious," she says, her smile turning mischievous.

Which is a very good idea. Mostly because John still needs to deliver his grist. Holy crap. "I'll be back," he says, and just barely resists the urge to fake an awful Arnold Schwarzenegger accent.

Rose arches an eyebrow over her blindfold, so uh. Maybe John doesn't resist the accent in time. "Go. Hurry. I think now's your last chance," she says, cryptically, before she turns back to not-watch the battle between the Lord of Time and Kanaya, Equius, and Nepeta.

John goes.
"I come in peace!" John announces, at the top of his lungs, because he arrives in the middle of an earthquake.

"Finally!" Karkat shouts at the heavens, and reaches out to John with one claw. He and Feferi kneel shoulder to shoulder over Dave, who doesn't move at all where he lays on the ectobiology platform when John arrives in a gust of tumultuous wind. Marks like the face of a clock form almost a complete circle around Dave's eye - he looks deathly pale and too young with his shades off, like this - but it's not finished. A rusty crowbar shaped like a sword lays between Karkat's knees and Dave's side, covered in human blood up to the hilt. While they work over Dave's unconscious body, Aradia and Jade are all over the ectobiology terminal itself - Jade zaps newly cloned snake eggs off the platform as soon as they form, while Aradia leans heavily on the computer itself, rusty blood dripping from her nose as she enters coordinates.

Somehow, Aradia still finds time to smile at John, not even a trace of pain on her features as more blood leaks from the shell of her ear. Snake eggs cover half the platform in a rainbow of colors; they fall off by the dozens as the earth continues to shake and shudder underfoot, and disappear to roll down the craggy side of the Forge. Somewhere under a tiny hill of snake eggs, next to the prone body of the White Queen, John catches a glimpse of WV's waving claws – but he's still breathing under that tiny avalanche, so John figures he must be fine. The White Queen's chest rises and falls in such shallow breaths that you almost would have missed them, if you weren't a Breath kind of guy; the healed scars of deep cracks cover her carapace, but her face rests easy in sleep.

John lunges forward and catches Karkat's hand with a desperate squeeze. He can't see any sign of time cracks here. All the volatile tremors seem to come from the Forge itself as it roils and tosses in agitated waves.

HS: Grist! Now, Heir, now!

Also, two denizens loom overhead. Hephaestus towers over them, hitched to the side of the volcano with some kind of mechanical device, two hammers clutched in his massive hands. Echidna rises up out of the lava of the Forge itself, swimming in frantic loops and delving beneath the surface as the Forge churns and bubbles around her in a wild boil. Then the denizen erupts from under the surface in a torrent of lava, her voice thundering loud enough that everyone can hear.

EC: A breach, in the western hemisphere! The Forge leaks!

HS: Hup!

And just like that, Hephaestus's metal chassis detaches from the side of the Forge in an avalanche of movement. John ducks instinctively, but the denizen pivots around and uses his hammers like crutches to vault off the side of the volcano. Far off across the tangled, half-drowned jungles of LoFaF, John can just barely make out smoke and a deep, ominous red glow bubbling up through the crust - Hephaestus reaches it in five vast swings of his body, and crushes an entire swathe of flowering trees beneath his hammers before slamming them down on the ruptured earth. Still agitated, Echidna crests over the edge of the Forge's mouth, lava sluicing down her quills.

EC: Witch of Space! Hurry!

"Hurrying!" Jade yells back, as she and Aradia continue to run through the Final Alchemy at a break-neck pace. "Hurrying really - hey John! - really fast!"
John drops down and plants a kiss on Karkat's forehead on impulse, and then has to let go of his hand. Karkat bites back something, but lets him, and John flies over the edge of the Forge into a wall of roaring heat. Echidna coils away from him in a rushing slither of motion, and John snaps his fingers. A cascade of grist rains out of the sky with such force that a few pieces nearly careen over the side of the volcano; the Breeze bumps them back in until every last piece of grist sinks into the magma. Echidna roars with triumph, her voice full of chimes that remind John of Typhus's windchimes.

If anything, the volcanic Forge swells and rolls even harder. Finally, with all the grist it needs to fuel the Final Alchemy, the volcano burns with intense heat. Jewel-like colors shift and glimmer beneath the surface of the molten rock as Echidna stirs the grist into the crucible. John trembles along with it for a second, as the finality of it all thrums through his chest. All it needs, he thinks, is the final ingredient. Aradia and Jade must be almost there; he doesn't know if they have much time left before the Forge grows so wild and energetic that it erupts the old-fashioned volcano way. "I'm headed back to Rose! You've got this?!!" he asks, whipping around.

"Yeah! I'll bring them! Go!" Jade calls over her shoulder. Karkat's still watching John, with a look on his face like he's about to beg John to stay here - (And maybe, in another time and place, he does.)

- and John waves one last time as he dissolves into the wind, and streaks back toward Rose at the gate.

Then the Lord of Time speaks, his voice booming throughout the Medium and shuddering John out of the air somewhere over the Battleship Condescension, and their fates are sealed.

LE: NONE OF YOU CAN ESCAPE.

And too much happens, too fast.

Kanaya brings her chainsaw down, and lops off the Lord's arm at the elbow. Nepeta leaps forward right behind her, shouting with ferocious glee.

LE: AND SOON. I WILL NOT NEED YOU ANYMORE.

LE: NOW. LISTEN CAREFULLY. YOU MAY LEARN SOMETHING.

"We have nothing to learn from you," Kanaya says, as she winds her chainsaw back for another blow.

The Lord of Time unhinges his jaw, and screams. The force of it blasts Kanaya back so hard John loses sight of her as a fresh [crack] punctures reality around the Lord of Time - Equius shoves Nepeta out of the way, just in time to take a round of machine gun bullets directly to the chest. The void cuts out around him with an inaudible pop, and Equius's body drops like a stone as Nepeta screams, one of her claws missing from the wrist down -

The Lord of Time turns the machine gun on LoFaF, and opens fire - "NO!" John yells, and the Breeze screams his lower body apart in preparation to fly back -
Time stutters, and its Lord levels the machine gun toward the Final Gate while John's still frozen in that second.

LE: YOU'RE ALL JUST AS OBSOLETE. AS THAT ROTTING WRITHING WALKING CORPSE. YOU CALL A MUSE.

John gets half a second as the frenzied panic in his brain gels into something cold and clear.

The Lord of Time wasn't distracted. He's just been playing with them.

They weren't ever going to win.

He uses the half-second to wrench himself back to Rose's side, with the half-formed thought of tackling her through the gate. But they don't have enough time. The machine gun rattles off a fresh hail of bullets, and John senses a few rip through people's lungs on the deck of the Battleship before ten bullets tear through his own chest with a nauseating shock. At the last second Rose tries to elbow her way between him and the worst of it, her cry ringing through John's ears as darkness ebbs across his vision, but since he's trying to shield her -

When the next bullet hits Rose in the eye, they're both gonna die being stupid, big damn heroes.

---

Earlier

"What," the Condesce says, flatly, "the fuck is that?"

To be perfectly honest, Terezi expected Typheus to show up sooner. Seventy five percent of the ark ships have reached and passed through the Gate, now, along with a good half of the carapacian meteors, who arrive in staggered, less organized bunches before gunning it past the Battleship Condescension and its sentry ships. But then again, a dramatic entrance probably trumps punctuality. Terezi and Eridan had plenty of time to alert the most extravagantly powerful troll on Earth to the impending arrival of John's giant boss monster, but Eridan's only half paying attention to the group memo at the best of times - typical rookie mistake - and Terezi prefers to get a good whiff of the look on the Condesce's face as the small, pale white and green blob pelting toward them in the distance turns into a giant white and green blob. He may have taken his sweet time leaving LoWaS, but now that he's visible, Typheus flies too fast for anyone on the Battleship to do more than stop and stare. The meteors mean nothing to him - he blasts them aside in a tidal wave of wind and keeps on coming. "It's fine! Dave and John said this might happen!" Terezi calls, anticipation leaking into her voice as her shout carries. The Condesce grimaces at her from half a ship away, while Eridan screws his face up and drifts closer. His claws smolder with white light, and Terezi arches an eyebrow at him with intense focus until he screws his face up more and turns to keep one eye on the Lord of Time's progress. He keeps the other eye trained on Typheus, which is probably smart - but Terezi leaps from her lookout perch on top of the Battleship and strides to the forward end, confident in her ability to handle the situation. Dave tried to play it cool, while John's report mostly focused on the sheer ridiculousness of Typheus's goal, but Terezi can read between the lines.

Oddly, Typheus's coming up from under Skaia, rather than from the direction of LoWaS's bright cyan pop-rock glow of mental activity; straggling ranks of carapacian-controlled meteors scatter in wild loop-di-loops as the denizen barrels through them with all the relentless, restless determination
Then the extra blobs swirling around him come into focus as the incoming storm carries the smells directly to Terezi's nostrils, and Typhaeus's little side trip becomes obvious. The hoard of fireflies scatter before they can slam into the Battleship and splatter like teeny glowing projectiles, but the hapless pink turtles and yellow salamanders flounder and flap their feet without making much progress until Typhaeus flicks them at Ark with a twist of his tail. The salamanders bounce like jelly, as Consorts tend to do; the immature turtles pull back into their shells at the last minute and pepper the side of the immense Battleship like pink macaron-flavored cannonballs. The ship rocks a little, but Terezi keeps her feet under her with ease. The perks of riding a heavily armored space-worthy ship, built by a rich Tyrant with her eyes on the intergalactic prize - this giant red sucker's built to take a hit and keep on coming.

Typhaeus slams into it at top speed, naturally. Because denizens are assholes. The Condesce shrieks her disapproval, her lackeys rushing forward as best they can while an enormous snake winds himself around the Battleship in a series of adroit twists that make the ship emit some frankly alarming crunches. Eridan flips around and raises a hand but doesn't fire more than a warning shot, sweat rolling down his pale face and leaving violet streaks. Terezi's feet jitter a little as the ship bounces and rolls under her, but she stays put even as Typhaeus brings his face down close over the Battleship, his mouth open to greet them all teeth first.

His physical speech comes out as a bunch of shrieking denizen-standard gibberish; Terezi suspects that he only bothers with it because it gives him an excuse to waft rancid snake breath over them all. It muddles her impressions of the area around them for a moment, but the stiff breeze that circulates around and over the deck nearest Typhaeus's tight coils carries it away in a moment.

Which leaves Terezi free to contemplate the free set of actions available to her, now that Typhaeus quit dragging his metaphorical heels, while his mental voice bypasses the language barrier and drowns out all the demands that he stand down and unhand the Condesce's ride. A couple of the Fuchsia's followers drop on the spot, probably more from lingering Horrorterror damage done to their minds than from the sudden slap of mental force Typhaeus puts behind his words.

TY: I SEEK THE ONE KNOWN AS BARACK OBAMA.

TY: His legal representation is required in a matter of the utmost urgency.

All Terezi can do is shrug and nudge a greenblood who drops like a rock too close to the edge back onto safer ground with her cane - if they wanted a healer of Mind, they'd need a Sylph or something. When she looks for it Terezi can see the soft spots and burns in people's craniums. She'd just rather apply her classpect in other ways — decisions and their consequences. Rose can wander around in people's heads with Terezi's cackling blessing; Terezi's more interested in staring up Typhaeus's gullet with unseeing eyes and seeing just what the two of them could accomplish together.

(It distracts her from Kanaya being dead, and how she should have seen it faster; it gives her something more productive to do than be aware of Rose and John perched on the edge of the Gate, both of them leaking pain and grief like human-shaped pockets of misery.)

((Better still, it distracts her from Gamzee, being himself in the most difficult way possible and clogging up her sight with just enough raw chaos to make her sneeze.))

When Typhaeus fails to immediately snap someone up in his jaws and start crunching, and instead stares down at them with the imperious air of a giant snake monster expecting a prompt response, the Condesce swells up like a balloon and bawls, at the top of her lungs, "GET THE SHELL OFFA MY SHIP!"
Hm. Sizing up the situation, Terezi waves her cane to get Typheus attention, her trademark grin already in place as she waits for him to glare down at her. As fun as it would be to watch the Condesce tackle a denizen, they're in a time crunch here that's more literal than Terezi likes. While the Condesce distracted the retired Psiioniic (as if any hero worth their salt wouldn't recognize that guy) from his grief seizure by sending him off to slingshot the ships whose navigators and psionics got whammied hard by Leviathan toward the Gate, they've still got one of the heaviest hitters left in the Condesce's crew - her awkward void-riddled Equius look alike.

(If Terezi was a betting troll, she'd bet they've got more than one ancestor up here. In fact, she is a betting troll.)

Condy and her crew, plus a solid probably on Eridan jumping into the fray, versus one denizen? Terezi doesn't see this ending well...for...

...Uh. Huh.

Terezi adjusts her estimations of how much of a threat Typheus might be in a moment of quiet alarm. As far as her mind's eye can see, Typheus wins, despite the fact that against a god tiered Eridan alone he should be well matched. Terezi's powers feed her a quick montage of Typheus flicking people through the gate with impatient backhanded slaps of his wings, and forcibly decompressing the ships by sucking the air out of them if truly threatened.

Denizens aren't nice, and Typheus has a terrible temper.

The realization isn't enough to dampen Terezi's anticipation, not entirely, but it galvanizes her into waving her cane with a little more force when Typheus doesn't react. "Hey!" she calls, with a snap of her claws.

Typheus lowers his massive head slightly without so much as glancing at Terezi and digs his scattered claws into the metal of the Battleship like a cat kneading a blanket, dismissing the Condesce's demand with a laughing huff of foul breath. The salamanders bob up the sides of the ship, some of them crawling out from under Typheus's coils with tiny glubs as their squishy bodies reinflate.

TY: Impudence. You will bring him to me, or I will retrieve him for myself.

"You're not kidnapping one of my VIPs! #fuckouttahere!" the Condesce insists, as she slams her specibus against the deck with jarring force. Typheus doesn't budge, his coils shifting a little to reaffirm his grip on the ship. "You got till the count of five!"

Well! Terezi gets the distinct impression that she's being pointedly ignored! That simply won't do at all. With a sigh, she stuffs her cane under her arm and sticks her claws into her mouth to whistle hard and loud. "Simmer down, people!" she says, loud enough to carry but mild, as Typheus finally glowers down at her with a pinched expression. "Did someone say...legal representation?"

Typheus snakes around the Battleship in a sudden burst of motion that coils a new loop of his body around the ship. For all his mass, he does it so neatly that the wind barely buffets the ship, and his head rises up on the far side of the deck as he twists around to bring his head down right in front of Terezi. The salamanders scramble out of the way, which means they run straight into the Condesce's people and clog up their efforts to reorient themselves to face the marauding denizen - typical consort buffoonery.

TY: Yes. That is correct.
TY: Murderer.

As if Terezi minds going snoot to snoot with a denizen. She grins ferociously, flips her cane out from under her armpit, and flicks it against Typheus's nearest canine. "Heheheh. Hello to you, too," she says, when he sneezes at her. The outraged gust knocks her back on her heels, but she digs her cane into the deck and holds her ground. If he knocks her silly, she doubts he'll give her a chance to regain her footing. In the air, he'd win - no ifs, ands, or buts about it. "I understand you're looking for a lawyer."

TY: Not you.

TY: I seek -

Terezi clicks her tongue and shakes her head, her grin tilting into a smirk. "Yeah, I can smell Dave's handiwork from a mile away," she says, chidingly, and shoots Typheus a shrewd wink. The denizen grumbles, but if he's come this far without realizing Dave is a one man instigator of ridiculous nonsense under the thin veneer of coolkid posturing, there's really no hope for them. Dave's actions have far-reaching - and endlessly entertaining! - consequences; Terezi's just here to have fun with it. "Let me guess. You're looking for compensation. A chance at retirement. Payment for services rendered," she says, shrugging with both arms spread wide as she continues to smile the denizen down, tooth for tooth.

TY: I said no such thing.

"This late in the game? You need to be aggressive about this. You need someone familiar with your case, who can cut through the red tape," Terezi continues, her voice light as her mind runs calculations under the surface. Manipulating a denizen isn't hard - not when you really do have what they want. But with one as ornery as Typheus, he might eat her just to make her shut up while he sticks to his original plan; he has more than enough aversion to the troll players that she has to play this exactly right.

The denizen's wing scrapes up along the deck, and idly carves a deep gouge through the paint as he encircles her with tattered skin and claws. Terezi lets her grin drop into a steady, unyielding line, her jaw locked up against her will as the denizen angles his head -

- turns his jaws to the side, so that one eye peers down at her with distaste.

And intrigue.

TY: ...Go on.

As if he could resist. Terezi leans over her cane. "You need...a legislacerator."

Typheus stares at her without blinking. Then, with a disdainful sniff, he pulls his wing away and lifts his colossal head up from the deck, dismissing her with a grunt.

TY: I do not actually believe that you are the kind of legal representation that I require.

She rolls her eyes behind her glasses. "Trust me. There's no one on these ships more qualified," Terezi calls, cupping her claws around her mouth to be heard as Typheus rolls his own eyes and smacks a row of turtles up onto the deck when they get in his way of circling another coil around the ship. The turtles rattle around like pinballs, still curled up in their shells as they join the chaos of the salamander hoard currently swamping the rest of the deck. One of the turtles ricochets toward Terezi, and she uses her cane like a golf club to send it spinning away in another direction. Moreover, the fireflies descend at last in a flickering hoard that distracts even the most focused of the Condesce's crew - hundreds of them land on the void-cloaked blueblood and light up the void like a Christmas tree. "And more willing to work with a denizen of your intimidating stature," she adds.

Between the aimless chaos of the consorts thronging through the deck and the Condesce's furious shrieks as she attempts to personally stuff the salamanders and turtles down through the hatch, Terezi stands out from the crowd - cool, collected, unbothered by the utter nonsense raging off to her right. Really. It's no contest.

Tyheus blows a tiny tornado over the miniature salamander rave, which just sends more consorts bouncing around to add to the chaos inundating the crew, and then sighs. The tail end of his coils slips away from the ship, releasing it from his grip in slow turns as the denizen turns back to Terezi with a cold, assessing stare. Once he finishes unwinding himself from around the Battleship, his foremost wing sprawls out along the deck, flattening a couple turtles and rolling to a stop before Terezi's feet.

TY: You fly too slow.

Oh, hell yes. Terezi launches herself up, and skips over the wing to land on the back of the denizen's neck. Near enough to his head, she hopes, that Tyheus can't whip around and snap her up in his jaws - it wouldn't do to tempt him when she's so very snack-sized. "Wait 'til I tell Dragonmom about this!" she crows, unable to fully repress a rush of grubbish glee.

Tyheus peels away from the fleet and fans out his wings; Terezi gathers enough presence of mind to crouch down and wedge her claws into the nearest handholds before he blasts away from the Battleship in a spiral and zooms toward Skaia. His neck ripples and rolls under her feet in vast, sinuous coils that run down his whole body, but the wind proves less of an issue than Terezi thought it might; it's not blowing her back, it's carrying them both forward at a speed approximately equivalent to 'ludicrously fast,' and she suspects that if she lets go, Tyheus will just scoop her up off his neck and hurl her along like he did the consorts. She'd rather ride under her own power than get tossed around like a ping pong ball, though.

Plus, how many people can say they've ridden a denizen? And lived? Terezi's putting this on her resume in bold, fifty-point font. One does not sweet-talk a giant boss monster into taking them on as a lawyer and not brag about it into the next life.

They streak back toward Skaia, and swing past LoFaF by the narrowest of margins. Tyheus takes great care to fly around the hemisphere opposite the Forge in the least subtle dodge Terezi has ever seen, so she can't even wave down at Karkat and Dave from death-defying heights. Covering the remaining space in a rush, Tyheus threads between the checkered tendrils that form a net around Skaia and then bursts through the clouds, filling them with dull grey and thunder for a split second as he roars down toward a great crevasse that splits the chessboard Battlefield apart. Part of Sollux's Prospit project juts out of the gorge at a low angle, dripping half melted comb and molten honey in huge splatters across the landscape while bees swarm around it in oddly precise figure-8s.

Terezi squints, and sniffs the air. "Vriska has been here," she announces. Some people would claim those bees were just flying in an infinity-sign. Those people would be goddamn idiots, and would not survive the Vriska-induced nuclear winter to follow.

If Tyheus were a human or a troll, Terezi would call the noise that emerges from his throat 'internal screaming.'

TY: I hate all of you.
BQ: I heard that.

Typhues banks sharply, and rather than plunging into the dark depths of the fissure (which appears to extend deep into the dark of Skaia's insides) hovers to one side, looming over the landscape as a black carapacian stalks toward them, glaring up with eyes that blaze with power under a knife-sharp crown. She covers ground in gulping, earth-eating strides, in such a way that the black squares of the chessboard seem to tug along in her wake and feed into her shadowy train, and Terezi is abruptly reminded that thanks to their collusion with Spades Slick, the trolls never had to fight the Black Queen.

TY: Denizen business.

And Typhues straight-faces it. To be fair, Terezi can't read his facial expressions - such as they are - but he radiates such a powerful, disgruntled aura of nothing to see here that Terezi could smell it a mile away.

The Black Queen isn't fooled in the slightest. She clutches the King's Scepter in her fist, and judging by the enormous, smoking craters scattered around the Battlefield as far as Terezi can smell, she hasn't skimped on calling the Reckoning down around her own head. If the carapacian queen picks a fight, Terezi doesn't foresee them getting out of here without one hell of a fight. She can easily follow the prospective trail of a future where Typhues calls Echidna and Hephaestus for aid, and the Forge implodes in a wash of fiery doom in their absence.

Then the Black Queen snorts, and steps away, her shining dark armor rippling like a forest of sharp blades as she dismisses them with a curt, bitter wave.

BQ: ...Hm. Well, if you feel like wasting your time arguing with a brick wall, be my guest.

BQ: Though if you could put in a word, I would like to spend the twilight of my life not dealing with an Order-induced migraine.

BQ: But I doubt it will change anything. It's too late. She's too stuck in her ways.

TY: Pah.

TY: That will depend on the skill of my legal representative.

Terezi dances to keep her feet under her as Typhues ripples again. "Oh, don’t you worry. I'm the best that money can't buy," she says, squatting down drop a facetious pat on his back.

Another, deliberate twitch knocks her flat on her butt. Fair enough! She can't say she wasn't asking for it. Typhues bends his head and slithers down into the fissure, and Terezi clamps down on him again as the denizen descends at a very steep incline. He digs his claws into the deep brown earth that makes up the top layers of the fissure, but scrapes them almost cautiously over the black, starry stone that takes over as they descend deeper and deeper into Skaia. Typhues slows for nothing; once he reaches a wide white branch - which, fascinatingly enough, smells like smooth and melty mints - he uses it to pull himself along at ever-accelerating speeds. The wind screams in Terezi's ears with wild fury at funneling through such tight confines between the walls of dark crystal, and Typhues roar-hums along with it, driving it along to a break-neck pace. Terezi flattens out along his neck and keeps her head low; he hasn't slammed into a wall yet, but at the speed they're going an impact would smear her flat as roadkill. When she turns her head to the side, she spits wayward strands of hair out of her mouth, and tries to find patterns in the constellation of lights playing throughout the vast expanse of dark crystal.

It's easy to figure out that she's watching the Medium, the events playing out in miniature. (For a given value of miniature.) Countless dots of light shoot across the wide expanse of Skaia's insides, while here and there bright, tight-knit whorls of light cluster around each other, close to the shimmering orbs of LoLaR, LoFaF, and LoWaS. The branches of the trees fill the space in between the shifting constellations with symmetrical loops and branches, while lightless cracks slowly spread out in spider webs, shattering the crystal the same way the [cracks] up in the Incipisphere itself carve giant swathes out of reality. As Typheus claws his way down toward the vast trunks, the symmetrees obscure most of the view with their own ambient glow, and Terezi turns her head back to watch where they're going as Typheus barrels around the trees and through an open door.

Nothing she sees really surprises Terezi. In fact, this is pretty much exactly what she expected to see: Vriska Serket, walking disaster, whirling around to stare at Terezi and her ride with an expression of the purest, most raw outrage ever worn by a troll. Tavros looks relieved - and then terrified - and then relieved again, which is an entirely reasonable sequence of emotions to feel when confronted by the sudden arrival of a denizen, whose thunderous roar crashes and echoes around the chamber, and Terezi.

The Horror- no, Orderterror at the very center of Skaia merely shifts herself around, the interlacing spirals of her tendrils resorting themselves into a new arrangement in a smooth, precise shuffle. No overlapping, no clipping through walls, no broken physics - Skaia's nothing if not scrupulous with her many angles.

Naturally, Vriska talks first. They're in the presence of reality's maker herself, and Vriska shrieks at the top of her lungs with all the audacity Terezi hates and loves her for. "Terezi! No! Oh my god, what are you doing?!

"Why am I not surprised that this is where you ran off to?" Terezi says. Since Typheus seems to have settled, his restless coils filling up a lot of what space isn't taken up by Skaia's unfathomably immense mass, Terezi walks forward and plants herself on the very top of his head. The denizen huffs at her cheek, but doesn't shake his head to dislodge her, which is basically the same as permission to continue. Besides, there's a striking lack of courtroom furnishings around them, Imperial or modern day - making her arguments from on top of a giant monster in the spirit of His Honorable Tyranny is at least in keeping with ancient tradition. His Honorable Typheus certainly has a ring to it! "Tavros," she adds, shooting him a finger gun of greeting.

Tavros waves his hand, looking entirely overwhelmed as he falls back on common courtesy. "Uh. Hey, Terezi. Nice to see you -"

"Ughhhhhhh! You're always trying to horn in on my action! Take your giant overgrown worm thing and stop nannying me, Terezi!" Vriska yells, cutting Tavros off.

TY: AHEM.

Typheus snaps his teeth together with a ringing crash; down here, it echoes like harsh bells, something Terezi attributes to Skai. Everything reverberates strangely, this close to the center. Vriska snarls back - because of course she does - and Typheus directs his next words at Terezi.

TY: ...Does the law favor me if I eat her?

Terezi thinks it over. "Yeah, probably. But also, if you do, I reserve the right to eat you," she says, with a warning grin.
She gets the impression that Typheus isn't used to people threatening to eat him back. His shocked silence lasts a good ten seconds.

TY: You. Are a frightening child.

"Unfortunately, Vriska grows on you. I'm somewhat attached, by this point," Terezi sighs, shaking her head.

"'Somewhat'?!" Vriska chucks a blue die at Terezi; Terezi tilts her head to the side and it flies over her shoulder and lands somewhere in the midst of Tyheus's coils. Vriska recovers fast, though, her outrage morphing into bravado as soon as she seizes a chance to boast. "Whatever, Terezi! You can take your incredible spiel and shove it. Coming down here to fight Skaia was my idea first, and I've earned the right to first dibs by dint of being awesome! You can wait your turn!"

Sooo...Typical Vriska plan. Barely thought out, fixated heavily on her own central role in the Vriska narrative™, guaranteed to have terrible, unforeseeable consequences if she gets her way. Terezi can't see what this would accomplish, apart from potentially dooming their timeline by damaging Skaia before the Lord of Time can even kick it into high gear. Sometimes, Vriska's incessant drive to do the most important, risky, game-changing thing possible is just...wow. Terezi smacks her face, mashing her palm against the bridge of her glasses so they press down against her nose and help stave off the impending headache.

But they're here, now, at least.

And like hell is she letting Vriska doom them all with her astonishingly vast quantities of ego.

"Wrong!" Terezi says, raising her voice so that it echoes like Tyheus's lingering roar. Vriska bares her teeth, horns lowered to an aggressive slant - but Terezi's on top of a denizen, a million possible actions not-yet-taken branching out through her mind's eye, and for once in her life? Vriska can take a backseat.

Because it's time.

Terezi takes her shades off and rubs the lenses on her shirt. "Sorry to steal your spotlight, Vriska. But I'm afraid that this is a matter...."

She puts the sunglasses back on.

"...of [Law and Order]."

Two familiar notes ring out, and Terezi turns her smile on Skaia as Vriska's mouth opens and closes, to no avail. Vriska can just deal with being overruled.

Terezi has work to do.

Across from Terezi and Tyheus, Skaia's eyes flicker into a haze of black and white and grey superstring strata, and the Orderterror contemplates Terezi's declaration with implacable, incomprehensible intent. It would be very, very easy, Terezi thinks, for Skaia to pressure them back into line. To lean on them until their words match her script exactly; to strip away their silliness and mistakes and free will, until they follow the plan laid before them to its inevitable conclusion. Terezi can't comprehend the overwhelming, alien organization of the many-layered mind before her; Skaia's priorities are too...absolute, and devastating, in how little room they leave for what the individuals before her want.

They've changed. Skaia never has, even as her progeny drifted further and further out of sync with her. As long as they play her game within acceptable parameters, they haven't been doomed. But coming down here, barging in like this...could cross the line. Terezi can't read Skaia well enough to know for sure.

Which means she's going to have to pull this off totally blind.

[...An ancient invocation.]

[What case do you bring before me, Seer of Mind?]

--

Sollux was going to head over to LoFaF.

Instead, he finds himself hovering over a huge fucking crack in Skaia.

He squints down into the dark, as his psionics collect the wandering, hapless bees whose mainframes have collapsed.

"...Who is dicking around down there?"

--

[x]

They die so suddenly that all Jade feels is a tiny jolt in her belly, like a fish hook sunk into her guts that tugs her numb insides into a new, awful configuration. The Lord of Time finishes his turn and sprays more machine gun rounds toward the Gate with lazy ease before Jade can process the bright red splatter pouring out from Karkat's shredded chest; the precision shot right through Dave's head that burst through his eye, at the center of his clockwork scars; Aradia crumpled up on the floor beside the terminal - not dead yet, but with blood oozing from her mouth as her breaths turn shallow, like she doesn't have the energy to wipe it away as she meets Jade's eyes with a dull, crooked smile. In the group memo visible in the corner of Jade's glasses, multiple people cut off mid-sentence, and Jade knows: Rose, John, Eridan, Equius -

LE: Too easy.

Overhead, Kanaya screams in an awful, gut-cutting way. Nepeta screams louder, and launches herself at the Lord of Time in a burst of raspberry pink light. Feferi crumples in on herself, her eyes wide and stark against the sheet-white shock of her face, clutching her head as a low, agonized sound escapes her - something you'd expect to hear from a creature at the bottom of the ocean, not from a living troll's throat. Jade can't tell if the red blood splattered across Feferi's face and clothes came from Dave or Karkat (Karkat, her stupid, stupid space brain informs her, since the angle that the Lord of Time shot them from is obvious, and Feferi probably only survived because the trajectory of the shots that hit Karkat knocked him sideways onto her like a troll shield while the rest of the bullets caught Karkat right in the side, right through the heart -)

He didn't even try to shoot Jade.

She stands there stock still for a long moment, caught mid-lunge where she leapt away from the terminal to try to grab someone - anyone - one shoulder sagging a little as she struggles to take in - everything. WV cries out, banging his fists against his own head as he crawls out of the snake eggs, but the sound seems to come from a long way off. Raising her hands slowly, Jade presses them against the front of her god tier uniform.
But nothing hit her. She didn't even have to teleport out of the way; forget that, he didn't give her enough time for her to move out of the way, or to move anyone else to safety, and something about that strikes Jade as so perfectly, shockingly wrong that she can't breathe. "No, No, no," she says, stilted, and stumbles as one of her feet knocks against the ground. Everything feels off-kilter. Like - hahaha, kind of like John and Rose and Dave are all dead and Jade can feel the sudden gaping holes in her world where they should always be. "Why..." she starts again, her voice thinning in and out of hearing, "didn't he shoot..."

She can't lose them like this. That's not - that's not fair, she can't be alone again.

Kanaya brings her chainsaw down on the Lord of Time's machine gun with a guttural roar; bright sparks fly between them, while the Lord of Time laughs his dumb, terrible, broken up laugh right in Kanaya's face. Nepeta clings to his back, driving her last remaining clawkind deep into the grotesque muscle of his back again and again, while Kanaya hauls her fist back and punches him across the face so hard his jaw breaks off his face in a spurt of rainbow blood. But the cherub Lord swats them both away the next second, and smacks Nepeta away with the back of his hand when she rakes her claws along his arm. Kanaya intercepts her in a smooth flash of green, while the Lord of Time snaps his jaw back into place with a single jerk of his head. And all the while, the dark void of Equius's drifting body slowly fades from Jade's perception, so that she can almost sense him directly for the first time in forever, and Aradia's chest stops moving, and Jade's sense spiral further out, on the brink of unwinding her at the seams: the Condesce is missing an arm and half her chest, bleeding out on the deck of the Battleship, her crew reduced to a pulp if they weren't safely inside, while beyond that Rose and John slump over each other at the edge of the Gate, unmoving -

Feferi scrunches her claws up in her hair so hard that Jade can see the strands pulled tight near her scalp, her fists shaking as she shakes her head.

Then Feferi releases her death grip on her own head, and slams both fists down against the platform with a fraught, hitched exhale. "Haaaaghh!" Fuchsia light bursts out and seethes around her in a sudden, vivid blaze. Feferi raises her head, the strain of it causing her to shake like she's about to explode, and meets Jade's lost stare with a scowl of pure concentration. "I've - I've got them, but - ow," Feferi says, before she has to stop, swear, and punch the platform again, so hard that it pulverizes the stone. Tyrianblood punches don't mess around. They're tough cookies, Jade's mind babbles, as she furrows her brow and tries to understand what Feferi's talking about. The troll keeps speaking as she struggles to push herself up onto her knees, and then up onto her feet, through sheer determination. "The further away they are, the more my reach slips. John and Rose - I don't know how much longer I can hold them here. They're - so far away -"

It clicks. "Wait. They're alive?!!" Jade says, snapping back into the present with a sharp, painful jolt. The agony that threatens to squeeze her chest shut gets skipped right over - pretty conveniently! - so that she can feel heart-pounding disbelief instead. The people shot by the Lord of Time still aren't moving, but as Feferi continues to boil over with life, fuchsia light spreads from her aura and runs along the floor to outline Dave, Aradia, and Karkat with similar flickers of cold fire.

Jade stumbles once more and seizes Feferi's outstretched claw; Feferi clenches it reflexively in a fist again, her expression contorted into desperation for a split second as she bites a single fang through her lower lip, and Jade lifts the troll the rest of the way onto her feet as Feferi focuses on something out of sight. "I won't let them die. I won't," she insists; the troll looks down at the blood on her shirt for a second, and the sight seems to bolster her wild resolve. Clutching Jade with cold claws, Feferi looks utterly ferocious. "I have more than enough to share. It's not heroic if they're not dead yet."

That's all Jade needs to hear. Feferi trembles and burns cold, and Jade recognizes it in an instant - maybe it's a Witch thing, to summon up so much raw power and need inside your body that you could go nova with it.

"They're not too far away for me," Jade says, folding her hand over Feferi's. Feferi, hunched over slightly as she concentrates, jerks upright and meets Jade's dawning excitement with a smile.

[Hecate's Crescendo]

Life rolls out from them with a flourish; since they're Witches, they don't pause to see where it all needs to go. They just do. Jade whirls Feferi around in a circle, their feet spinning out from under them as joy bubbles up in her chest. Feferi slides an arm around Jade's back, and then Jade pulls her up and away, leaving Aradia, Dave, and Karkat - drenched in a foamy wave of life as they bounce up to Equius. Feferi turns them in another circle with a laugh as Equius spasms and kicks back upright, and her wings leave a pulse of bright glitter that sparks and crackles like a firework in the mingled fires of space and life dousing everyone they dance past in a bubbling tide.
Another spin, and Jade sticks her tongue out at the Lord of Time as he roars after them - but he can't catch Jade! Not now, not ever, and especially not when Kanaya brings her chainsaw down and tears it through the side of his neck as a distraction.

Feferi draws them on again toward Eridan, her skirt twirling in a wild arc as they drench him in fuchsia life. For a second, it feels like pouring a thin trickle into a bucket with a hole at the bottom - like it's pouring right through him without sticking - but then Eridan thrashes back to awareness, and Jade spins them into the next step of the irresistible dance. And the music draws them on with insistent, exultant beats that will not be denied, and Jade's ties to Rose and John snap them to the very edge of reality like magnets. Jade dips Feferi down and life swoops down along the troll's claws like a tracery along her veins to settle over them in a wave of coursing light.

They manipulate, but they can't create new material from nothing.

Feferi's got a tyrian lifespan, though, and Jade doesn't need to be a Life player to feel her muster it all up, pouring it into everyone they can reach.

The fraymotif stutters - Jade almost jars right out of it at the sudden jolt, but Feferi presses the music until it restarts as they backtrack to the Battleship. "Tethys," she says, frustration bleeding into her voice as they swing around and come to a stop over the Condesce. "You -"

"Oh, don't give me any of that sentimantal crap," the Condesce says, scowling. A wide trail of tyrian blood smears under her from where she's dragged herself across the deck to reach a blueblood with very Equius-y horns. They've clamped down on the ragged stump of the Condesce's arm with a plate of metal, but the damage goes deeper than that - the Zahhak's got one broad claw deep in the Condesce's rib cage but to Feferi's and Jade's shared life sense, it's still leaking out of her like water through spread fingers. "It's only a flesh wound."

Losing an arm's not too much for a troll; but that chest wound... "Don't play dumb. You're dying, ava," Feferi snaps, as she drops to her knees. "I don't even know if I can save you. If I should." The fraymotif judders again and starts to ebb out of Jade's ears, but they've covered all the ground they need to: everyone's alive.

Everyone that Sburb thought relevant enough to save. Even as Jade watches, her joined sense of Feferi's powers fading by the second, Feferi raises a claw and freezes before touching the Condesce's forehead, her face screwed up in consternation. "I don't know if it will even take," Feferi says, her eyes wet with frustration as she closes her claws into a fist. "A player I could raise up all the way from death, but that's because we've got resurrection potential built in. Carapacians and consorts, a little bit harder, but almost everyone else hit here is already gone, and doomed on top of that -"

It's not hard, to follow the trail of Feferi's tendrils of life as they run through the bodies scattered here and there across the deck - some of them Jade guesses just need healing, for relatively minor stuff, but a few Feferi's aura shies away from without touching. And if Feferi can't force it, there's nothing Jade can do except wait for Feferi to finish what she can. All across the Medium, everyone's stirring and getting back on their feet, while Kanaya knits more space together for her to keep fighting the Lord of Time amidst the widening cracks.

"No more blabbing, little bubbler," the Condesce retorts, and her remaining hand shoots out to grasp Feferi by the wrist. "If you're making it happen, make it." She coughs, and something deep in her chest clogs up, rather than her throat. Hoarse, her grin turning into a leer, the Condesce pushes on, ignoring Zahhak as they deftly twist their claws in a bid to keep the Condesce from sprouting another leak. "Or if you're makin' your move to inherit - the birthday cake vodka's down in the imperial suite.
Just make sure to let the Battleship know who's in charge first, so it doesn't poison the shot glasses on you -“

Feferi cuts her off. "Neither of us is going to live past another century if I do this. I'm almost out of spare life to share around, right now." Exasperated but somehow, oddly, with a fond expression, Feferi taps her claws against the Condesce's cheek and sends a streamer of life into her. Her ancestor stares back at her, suddenly cold and remote. "No moray empires for you."

"Now, that's just quitter talk, baybe," the Condesce says, marshalling her smirk again, and when Feferi finishes dumping fuchsia fire into her, the Condesce hauls herself up on the blueblood's arm. Which takes some maneuvering, since they're still plugging up the ragged hole in her side with a fist. "Take me to my buoy, Meteos. We're outta here."

Jade doesn't wait for them to go out of earshot. "That's everyone we can help?" she asks, though a minute ago she knew. It never hurts to confirm - especially if someone got hurt toward the end of the fraymotif as the music faded out.

Feferi rises up out of her crouch after a pause, and then whirls on Jade. Her smile's split down the middle between triumphant relief and regret, wobbling all over the place; then she lunges and grabs Jade up in a spinning hug, her lips cold as she plants a kiss on Jade's cheek.

At some point, they're gonna need to tally up the people they couldn't save, because the number hasn't been zero since Leviathan hooked that one ark and killed everyone in the engine room. It's a bit higher, just counting the bodies that don't get back up as Feferi's aura draws back into her body, and each one twists something up in Jade's throat - because here she is, happy that they saved Rose and John and Dave and their friends, and that selfish happiness won't go away despite all the people dead past Feferi's arbitrary, game-imposed limits.

But...not right now.

Right now, Jade thinks, as the Battleship shudders into motion under their feet, they have alchemy to finish.

It's time for some science.

Chapter End Notes

The absolutely fantastic Jade and Feferi artwork commission this chapter came from the wonderful rose-ebottles over on Tumblr!

Edit 9/12/2017 the wonderful ladyknightlesbian also did an entire awesome sequence of art of Rose and Kanaya over on Tumblr!
And Time Remembered

Chapter Summary

For winter's rains and ruins are over,
And all the season of snows, and sins;
The days dividing lover and lover,
The light that loses, the night that wins;
And time remembered is grief forgotten,
And frosts are slain and flowers begotten,
And in green underwood and cover
Blossom by blossom the spring begins.

Chapter Notes

Our power anthem is How Far We've Come.

Time to bring it home.

See the end of the chapter for more notes

About one minute in, Terezi realizes that she may not be the best kind of legal representative for the job.

For one thing, she can't exactly arrest reality itself for violating worker's rights. She doesn't have enough zip ties to handle that many arms - something she intends to rectify at her earliest convenience! But Skaia doesn't make a break for it, or try to resist arrest; Skaia is just the offender and the judge and jury, all in one cosmic package. This is so far beyond the scope of even international law that Skaia might well just shrug the concept of human and troll rights as beneath her. Irrelevant, in the grand scheme of things. Terezi doesn't have evidence lined up or anything, and this is in no way, shape, or form an area of law she's familiar with apart from the basics.

All Terezi can do is make her arguments. Plead her client's case.

And not let Vriska get a word in edgewise.

"I'm here to represent my clients - Typhoeus, Hephaestus, Echidna -" Terezi starts to count on her claws "- the Black Queen, the White Queen, the extant King, and any and all sentient entities who have worked in the game, hereafter referred to as Sburb."

TY: What.

TY: Since when? We did not discuss this.

"Since from what I can tell, all of you have been exploited grossly as an unpaid labor force, and the accused has no intention of ever repaying you or allowing you to quit and live your life," Terezi fires back. The symmetrees outside the chamber fill the back of her mind with a constant, quiet stream of game mechanics and tweaks, even as Skaia gazes at them with (apparently) undivided attention. Terezi plants her feet and cane and does her best to put the murmuring trees on mute: all of Skaia, from the core to the surface, functions as a vast, impossibly complex mind, and if she concentrates Terezi could lose herself in it. "You were right at the gate already. You should have been able to leave right then and there. So why didn't you."

TY: That is -

Typheus bates, his thin wings fluttering in rustling agitation that sounds like a gale rushing through a forest. His claws clack against the woven black branches of the chamber floor as he sidles and does not make eye contact with Skaia. Since Skaia has eyeballs bigger than anyone else here, that takes some doing!

TY: It is not the fate intended for us. It is not what we were created for.

"Weeeeeeecak," Vriska calls from the sidelines. Terezi snaps her claws and points a finger at Tavros, who smells utterly mortified at the implication that he's somehow responsible for shutting Vriska up. To be fair, he's not exactly the troll best suited to the task, but he's all Terezi has to work with short of telling her client to play bailiff and sneeze Vriska into next week. Tavros, to his credit, gulps and starts to edge his rocketchair toward Vriska - who rolls her eyes and folds her arms with another pointedly loud sigh of boredom.

Having Typheus along may not be a good thing. Denizens don’t have a reputation for being wishy washy or reticent. The fact that after barreling all the way in here Typheus has suddenly started to withdraw reeks to Terezi of outside pressure. When Terezi rummages around the room to sense if Skaia's doing it on purpose, though...the results are inconclusive! She can't sense any deliberate fuckery going on - but she's dealing with the Muse of reality itself. It might not even be deliberate on Skaia's part. If Terezi can't think of a way to safeguard her client's will in here, she needs to relocate him pronto.

Skaia takes Vriska's interruption as an opening.

[The denizens have always functioned as intended. They fulfill their roles, and experience fulfillment in kind. They return to me and become part of the whole once more, in the end. This will allow for an orderly transition of -]

"Objection!" Terezi shouts, at the top of her lungs. The acoustics in here are excellent; the whole chamber vibrates with her words, and Skaia's tendrils rearrange themselves as Terezi presses on. "Everyone who works has the right to just and favorable remuneration! We wouldn't be here if my clients felt fulfilled by their eons of servitude!" She raises her cane in one hand and slaps it down against the palm of the other - the sharp smack actually makes Typheus twitch under her feet.

Without slowing or falling on her ass, Terezi ruthlessly presses on. "Second objection! The accused will cease coercing my client to bend to her will or I will personally shove him through the final gate to prevent you from doing further harm!"

The Muse finishes rippling and furling her noodly appendages through another sequence of rearrangement. Apart from that, Skaia has no translatable expression: the denizen problem, multiplied by several orders of magnitude. Terezi's declaration finishes echoing through the chamber, and she holds herself rigid, her horns pointed straight toward the ceiling - no aggressive tilt; just unyielding. No: you move.

And then Skaia rearranges another set of coils, and Terezi realizes, abruptly, that the motion has nothing to do with their dispute. She can barely - barely - comprehend the extent of the Muse's vast mind, and in comparison? Expecting a reality-creating Muse to give her complete attention to something like this is probably unrealistic. Like expected a super computer to devote more than a fraction of its processing power to a casual game of Solitaire. Maybe Skaia has devoted more attention to them because they're here, all up in her face and difficult to ignore and presenting a moral dilemma, and because it involves the denizens and Terezi as a Seer, but meanwhile Skaia is still running what's left of reality.

[They hear and are aware of what needs to be done so that the timeline can proceed with a minimum of irreconcilable glitches to the next phase. My denizens are not harmed by this. Nor are my queens and kings. They are fundamental parts of this reality; this is simply how the system is designed.]

Which means Terezi's arguing with someone who simultaneously can spew the same rote, memorized excuses, and possesses the capacity to create a multiverse based on that impersonal logic.
Maybe the super computer is a more accurate parallel than Terezi thought: a long time ago, Skaia created a reality that was also a game, and never expected the NPCs to become more than that. It explains the mess they're in, on a cosmic level.

They really don't have much in common at all. If the difference in perspectives is just that huge, Terezi doesn't think any single Mind player could ever bridge this kind of gap. Give her a hoard of Terezis and not only would they have the best courtroom drama re-enactment in the history of paradox space, but also maybe persuade Skaia to see things from their point of view.

Terezi grits her teeth. "People are more than just parts of a system, or parts of you. They have the right to rest and leisure, including limitation of working hours and holidays with pay," she says, as she paces around the broad surface of Typheus's head. The denizen stays very still under her; only the occasional faint spasm under her feet alerts her to changes in his expression or an adjustment of his long body. In fact, he shifts so gradually that Terezi only realizes he's lifting her up higher, over the center of the chamber, when she does a quick smell check to make sure Vriska isn't up to shenanigans. Typheus still says nothing, his winds held tight in whorls around his wings and body, but he holds firm,adamant and immovable.

[Such strangeness. You are less orderly than intended, but still within acceptable parameters; I'm not sure why this has any bearing on the matter. Such things are irrelevant here. Game entities are extension of -]

She snaps. Just a little. "Bullshit," Terezi says, with a snarl in her voice as she jabs her cane toward Skaia.

"Terezi," Tavros says, hushed. Under her feet, Typheus clearly concurs; the denizen shudders hard enough that Terezi has to float to remain upright and unbending.

But bullshit is what it is. "These are independent, sentient beings. They outgrew just being an extension of your will. They want," Terezi says, pacing faster and faster, using her cane to gesture to Typheus, to the world outside this chamber, to - gah! She wants a convenient projector screen so she can pull up the United Nations Declaration of Sentient Rights, so she can underline the relevant articles with bright red chalk and then flash it until it burns into Skaia's otherworldly retinas. "- to retire. To leave. Not be destroyed because you want them to stay with you. They're more than just extensions of you, now."

And Skaia sighs. Her tendrils re-sort themselves, folding over a paradox that Terezi can trace through the path of through the glitch and [crack] riddled mess of Skaia to its source. The susurrus of the symmetrees rises in volume, to the point where they aren't just white text on the white background of reality, and then subsides again.

[This would appear to be an unfortunate glitch. There have been many, this last round, as the Lord of Time has begun his work. This, at least, I can repair as they return to the core.] Skaia peers down at Terezi, and capital-D Disappointment suddenly clogs the air. Terezi locks her knees to keep from swaying, but it's a close call. Tycheus reels, his head shaking from side to side. [This is the Order of things, Seer of Mind. I have maintained internal consistency, as much as I am capable in the twilight of my existence. You have not brought this before me as a true matter of Law, or you would understand this.]

"Ohhhh, burn!" Vriska calls, one claw cupped around her mouth.

"Shut up, Vriska," Terezi yells back.

Yet, at the same time - thank god for Vriska. The flare of familiar aggravation lights in Terezi's chest and burns right through the Stern Look of Creator's Disapproval. Terezi slams her cane down squarely on Tycheus's head; he doesn't have the advantage of a vacillating girlfriend to provoke him into thinking clearly, but a sharp rap on his skull jerks him out of it with a gust of infuriated wind pouring out in a huff. If he planned to take a chunk out of her hide for it, he would have tried to eat her properly by now.

It's so damn hard to tell whether Skaia did that on purpose. If the Muse even realizes what effect she has to lean on them. But Terezi's done playing nice about it. "The Law takes more into account than your 'system'!" she snaps, "and so do worker's rights! Wanting the freedom to leave and make our own choices is not a glitch! The justice issues are pretty cut and dried here, actually!"

[Do you truly not understand…] Skaia shuffles around, and this time, to Terezi's immense satisfaction, it is because of them, rather than some minute detail of maintaining reality; she can smell the pinkish-grey uncooked-chicken scent of unease that runs through Skaia's thoughts before the Muse stifles it. [Even you, my heroes, seek to leave. I do not understand why -]

"Why we would want to leave?!" Vriska bursts in, with a roar of laughter. She's sitting on the front end of Tavros's rocketchair right now, a lean smear of cerulean blue and lemony yellow to Terezi's nose, one leg dangling and the other curled up so she can rest her arm on it, and she throws back her head as she laughs in Skaia's face. Her dice spark and roll between her claws in sharp loops, over and over, and her eyes are sharper and more derisive than her laugh as she stares at Skaia. "Ha! More like: why would we want to sit around here and die with a washed up old has-been?!

She's not wrong; it's just a very Vriska way of putting it. Zero tact. Terezi doesn't have much tact left, either, but if Vriska gains momentum, this is gonna end in a fight that Terezi highly suspects not even Vriska can win. "Vriska, stop helping," she says, and then takes aim at Skaia again. "We're not talking about us. I opened this to discuss the rights of your denizens and monarchs, and how they've been infringed upon. But it's all part of the same thing, isn't it? They've done what you wanted for billions and billions of years, without compensation, without vacation, with no freedom to choose anything different because if they did, you'd just slap it down as a doomed timeline. You've doomed entire worlds full of living beings and launched meteors at them when you could have just pointed your portals at the nearest black hole, because you decided they were insignificant! That this is the method you designed to create new Genesis Frogs with." Terezi lowers her voice, implacable and cold. She leans forward, hands folded over her cane, and her horns pointed straight up with every ounce of rightness in her body. "And that's something worse than illegal."

Another wave of disentangling and entangling to rearrange Skaia's tendrils; another shuffle of the board. When the Muse replies, she sounds almost plaintive. [Worse? I do not understand you, children. There is an Order to such things.]

"That," Tavros says, very quietly, "is bullshit." When Terezi and Vriska both whip around to gape at him, Tavros hunches his shoulders, then forces them down to make it smell like a smudged shrug to Terezi's nose. "Uh. Sorry. I'm not sorry," he adds, a stubborn twist in his mouth as he frowns at Skaia. Typhus lifts his head again, at an almost imperceptible angle - Terezi mentally judges the angle, and she's sure one of the denizen's eyes has fixed itself on Tavros. "It's wrong. You can't hold people captive and act like you own them."

"We want the freedom to make our own decisions without being doomed for not making the choices you require of us," Terezi adds.

Skaia judders, and one of her limbs clips through the other. Point. An unfathomably immense chunk of the Muse's vast mind shifts toward them, causing some fundamental portion of reality to shift along with it, and Terezi pinches her nose shut with prescient timing to stem the nosebleed before it starts.

[ERROR - You have reached the end of the viable alpha timeline, as you were always meant to. You made your choices and reached the inevitable conclusion. You've finished the game.]

The Muse says it like that's supposed to mean anything. Terezi snorts; Vriska beats her to the punch. "And every version of us that fucked up too hard got written off!" Vriska rolls her eyes. "Just because we're the best doesn't mean we owe you jack shit after the fact!"

"All you've done," Terezi says, "is make this whole mess a big self-fulfilling clusterfuck. We finished your game. So if you're done here, we should all be free to go." And then the obvious hits her. "If you force us to stay here - if you treat the denizens and queens like they're all part of your hivemind - how are you any better than a Horrorterror?"

Typhus rips his head out from under Terezi and slams her against a wall with whip crack speed. Vriska shouts, a belly-deep growl rising in her voice, and the ensuing chain of what-might-happen flashes through Terezi's mind like a warning siren.

TY: You go too far.

Skaia, meanwhile, starts to stutter.

[That - th - - _ terror - ERROR ERROR ERROR -]

Before Vriska can launch herself at Typhus, Terezi raises her cane and slams it into the wall at her back. The whole chamber rings like a bell around them, the vibrations of the sound clashing with the echoing vibes from Skaia herself, and Terezi brings it down again like a gavel. "Free will is the right of all sentient beings!" she yells, whipping off her sunglasses and flinging them down.

They shatter against the chamber floor as the shuddering, half-glitched Muse stills. For a terrible, piercing moment, Terezi feels all of Skaia's tremendous mental focus on her, and it feels like she's pinned under a microscope.

[...]

[...]

[...]

[I see.]

Skaia uncoils herself. A few glitched kinks remain, scattered throughout the Muse's many angles - but she does it, unwinding the folded, intertwined patterns of her many limbs and reaches out to draw Typhus away from Terezi with a single, vast tendril. The sheer scale of the Orderterror abruptly reasserts itself; Typhheus is huge, but Skaia is massive, and Terezi staggers away from the wall with the sudden hyperawareness that all Skaia has to do is roll forward a little, and this whole side of the chamber would be filled, crushing them all in an instant. Typhheus goes rigid and still for a long moment under the Muse's scrutiny.

[It is a strange thing: to realize one's children have grown up to be so different, in so many ways.]

The tendril draws away from Typhheus - and the denizen jolts as if struck by lightning. He reels back and slams into the back wall himself, thrashing against the woven black branches in a frantic spasm, and Vriska yelps and ducks out of the way at the last second when Typhheus's tail lashes across the chamber.

The sudden convulsion, however, isn't enough to distract Terezi from the quiet, fundamental lurch as Skaia alters something in reality. It feels like having her nose recalibrated, but not knowing how to parse exactly what just changed - far too much of Skaia's hivemind is involved in the process for Terezi to follow all of it with her brain already crammed to bursting.

Then Typhheus shakes one last time, a tremor running the length of his body, and lifts his head. Skaia coils that tendril back into her mass.

TY: …We will not forget.

And then a smaller tendril shoots out and seizes Tavros. Skaia's nominal eyes don't even glance in Tavros's direction. For a split second Vriska, who lunged forward toward Typhheus and Terezi before, doesn't realize what's going on behind her back. "Whoa, uh - hang on," Tavros says, alarmed; even the smallest of Skaia's limbs dwarfs him as it touches him under the chin.

Vriska whirls; Terezi is already in motion, but Vriska is still closer. "Back up!" she snarls.

Too late. It only takes a tap. Terezi can't even catch a whiff of death - one second Tavros is reaching for a lever on his rocketchair, and the next he smells of sparkles and blueberries.

Vriska screeches to a stop and throws up her claws. "Oh, come on! But when I try to do it, everyone flips out at me?! Bullshit on top of all the other bullshit!"

The abruptness of being god tiered is enough to make anyone lose their train of thought. Skaia withdraws the tendril while Tavros pats at the front of his shirt, stunned and blinking. His wings still smell mostly the same, but with a thin, sugary dusting of god tier sprinkles; his rocketchair now sports blue Breath symbols and a yellow paintjob in place of the excellent, very cool flames. "…I'm okay?" he says, hesitantly, before glancing down. Something he sees makes him flush deep brown.

"Uh. Why does my god tier costume…not have pants?"

Skaia doesn't answer the question. Which is a shame, since it's the best question anyone has ever asked about the Page class ever in the history of existence. Instead, the Muse of Order coils back in on herself, a few shudders running through her as the overlapping angles come back together. Finally, Skaia finishes shifting and is folded up again into her coiled, interwoven form. Something's different, but Terezi can't put her claw on what. [There. A complete set.] the Muse says, cryptically. [Go then. There are other worlds than these.]

And that, it would appear, is that. Like a series of unseen eyelids folding down, Skaia's focus turns inward and tunes them back out; the symmetrees resume their murmured conversations. Terezi catches only a fleeting snatch of sadness before Typhheus rises in a rush, his winds whirling around the innermost chamber with renewed vigor. It catches up Tavros, rocketchair and all, and then a strong breeze knocks the wind out of Terezi and pulls her in close as well. Typhheus sneezes, and Vriska gets caught by a small gale. Then he yanks them all in close - too close. Terezi and Vriska lands hard on Tavros's rocketchair from opposite directions and set it rocking, while Typheus continues to drag them along in his wake as he turns toward the chamber entrance.

TY: We're leaving now.

TY: Farewell.

If he receives a response before launching out into the dark, cracked crystal of the mantle, Terezi never hears it.

"Um, what now?" Tavros asks, which is the second-best question anyone has ever asked. Typheus winds his way out of the faceted corridor from Skaia's core to the surface of the Battlefield with sinuous ease once more; the wind buffets the three players around, but Terezi suspects that's less Typheus being sloppy, and more him not particularly giving a fuck. He hasn't splattered them against the rock yet, which is an opportunity she wasn't sure he could resist. They erupt from the fissure in the Battlefield just in time to hear a [CRACK] shatter the air, but Typheus doesn't slow for an instant.

TY: Hephaestus and Echidna know the verdict. But they must hold the Forge still.

TY: As thanks, Seer, I shall refrain from eating you all.

"I appreciate it!" Terezi cackles, letting her head fall back as she settles down to sit on Typheus's head. He doesn't even try to shake her off! They have a real connection, here. Tavros's rocketchair flips over several times in the breeze as they zoom past LoFaF, and Prospit's melted remains, and finally Tavros sighs and hits a button on the dashboard that fires up the stabilizers in a crispy burst. "I think I can retire as a lawyer, now. How am I supposed to top this?"

Flying on Terezi's right, still caught in the power of Typheus's sneeze, Vriska rolls her eyes. "You're not even a lawyer, you heinous -"

TY: WHAT.

Typheus throws on the brakes. Vriska goes flying forward with a shrill shriek before stopping herself, her hair flopping all over her face; Tavros's rocketchair flips once more in protest. Typheus tears his head out from under Terezi and glares at her accusingly. "She's a glorified cop! She's never worked a worker's rights case or whatever in her life!" Vriska yells from behind her curtain of tangled, flyaway hair, her voice full of glee. "Everything she knows about courtroom drama, she learned from Ace -"

"It takes a master video game lawyer to beat a video game, Vriska," Terezi says, in her snottiest voice. Then the full horror of that logic occurs to her, and Terezi's left momentarily speechless at the implications of such a thing.

TY: Oh, that's enough. I am officially no longer obligated to deal with you people anymore.

With that comment, Terezi expects Typheus to ditch them. She wouldn't blame him! But the wind picks up again, even wilder than before, and tosses the three of them into motion again as Typheus flies toward the gate. He can't take the same circuitous route he did to reach the Battleship in the first place - the [crack]s have spread since then, and only a narrow passage remains between Skaia and the rapidly-approaching gate.

"You can drop us off .-" Terezi starts to say, before Typhus blasts right past the ongoing battle between the Lord of Time and Kanaya, of all people, without slowing for an instant. "Or…not," she says, trailing off as they hurtle onward.

"Yeah, no, this is my stop. If I don't get to fight reality itself, like hell am I missing out on this shitshow," Vriska says, tossing her hair back out of her way. She fans her wings out and wrenches herself free from Typheus's tempest.

Typheus snags Vriska with a claw and flings her at Terezi. The wind picks up to a shrieking pitch, whistling between the encroaching cracks like train whistle multiplied a hundred times over, and Terezi seizes Vriska by the arm before the troll can toss her dice down onto the surface of Typheus's skull. "Really, we should be able to go on from here -" Terezi starts to say, her teeth clattering together as the turbulence jostles them with rattling force.

The denizen doesn't respond, except to wheel around and slow down.

He slows down. The wind flings Terezi, Vriska, and Tavros ahead of him, straight and true, and wind gusting around them makes Terezi's exposed eyes prickle and sting.

TY: Get. Out.

In the brief moment before the wind flicks them through the final gate, Terezi inhales sharply, and catches a whiff of John waving to them like a complete goober. With Tavros's thoroughly jostled and dizzy from getting flipped around like a chocolate chip pancake, there's no one to put a stop to the nonsense before the three of them hit the gate and vanish into the unknown.

-

TY: Now then.

TY: I'm starving.

Ignoring a shout from his Heir, Typheus turns and flies back the way he came to meet the Lord of Time teeth-first.

---

[Farewell.]

Direct communication? The Black Queen opens her mouth, teeth bared and ready to snarl - and in the next instant staggers as everything -

- stops,

- And she is alone on her knees, in a quiet, detached universe. A hush falls over the Battlefield as the insistent, echoing vibrations retreat within the core; the guiding lines of significance and coincidence unwind from around her claw and heart and crown and spool back to Skaia, and all she's left with is the scepter in her hand and the ring on her finger and a hush. An instant later, the Black Queen drops the King's Scepter from loose claws - it hits the dark ground beneath her and shatters with a sharp snap.

The Reckoning is done. The clarion call of war extinguishes without warning, and when the Black Queen gazes around her, she sees nothing but a cracked, cratered Battlefield, bestrewn with rubble. The fissure that exposes the raw nerves of the core lays quiescent.
Which means no one saw her fall to her knees. Small blessings. The Black Queen's lip curls derisively as she flicks one of the chunks of the depleted scepter away from her; it clatters across the ground like nothing more than a chunk of white rock. Then she cracks her neck to the side to rid it of the kink from remaining rigidly in one place with her joints locked, withstanding the persistent compulsion to go to war, and stands.

There is nothing she must do. No contradictory strictures or mandates interlaced with her nature.

_Farewell._

BQ: …I can't believe it. Those idiots actually…

She closes her claw into a fist, and silently commands a burst of power from the ring that glitters so vibrantly gold against her carapace.

It answers freely and without stipulation, and drills a hexagonal hole a mile deep into the crystalline mantel of Skaia in under five seconds. The Black Queen recalls the sharp talon of power and surveys the grooves of the deep gouge with a calculating eye, her awareness attuned to the massive bitch beneath the surface.

Nothing stops her. The call to war doesn't rolls over her and insist she fly after that silly pawn, or redirect her attentions to the heroes making their pointless last stand. She hasn't been shunted to doomed timeline.

It would appear that she can do…whatever she wants.

BQ: Huh. So that's how it feels.

The temptation to riddle Skaia with the Miles and pry the whole thing apart piece by piece dangles itself before her like fresh meat. But she's not _that_ stupid. Getting drunk on freedom and laying waste to the world would most likely cross a line. After all, a certain Lord has first claim on such things. As immensely gratifying as it would be to rip Skaia's final game apart around her as retribution for all those games the massive bitch has forced them to play out her patterns, the Black Queen has no illusions that this sudden reprieve would extend to such a thing.

She casts her wings wide and launches into the sky instead, and lets herself feel unmitigated grief for the first time in far too long.

_How many millennia? How many games have she and her sister-queen fought, and for _what_? The Black Queen forcibly stopped caring for her subjects, stopped caring for her mad, destructive King, stopped caring for the White Queen, and for _what_? Skaia strung all of Derse along for game after game, universe after universe, forcing them to march against her and then ripping away their final victory on her arbitrary whim, and for _WHAT_? For Skaia to cut her loose at the last minute, when it's too late for the White Queen? Free from the all-consuming song of war, the Black Queen cannot hear the White Queen _anywhere_, anymore. She isn't _anywhere at all_. Simple, clawing anguish guts her, in a way the amalgamated frustration of grief and compulsion and rage could not while she directed the Reckoning, and with her strings cut, she has no convenient, Skaia-mandated outlet for the violence she wants to wreak. Freedom is useless. A joke.

She attacks the Lord of Time rather than Typheus only because Typheus would be far more annoying to fight. If she's to join her fellow Queen for the last time, she'd rather it not be at the hands of one of the most persistently aggravating denizens she's had to deal with through the years.
Moreover, waiting for Typhes to digest her would be boring beyond the ability of words to describe; only once, thank you, and never again.

The Black Queen elbows the Rogue of Heart out of the way by sheer coincidence. The troll freezes in the way of her approach - caught in a bubble of sluggish time, as the cherub Lord raises his machine gunkind - and the Black Queen crashes into her with an impatient toss of her head. No other reason. Caring about her dreamers was one of the first things she put a stop to, and little sentimentality remains.

BQ: Honestly. Are you all trying to get yourselves killed?

The Rogue, much to the Queen's exasperation, clings to her elbow and hitchets a ride as the Black Queen angles past the Lord of Time. "Not really!" the troll says, scrabbling with a claw and an abruptly shortened arm to keep her grip, her feet finding purchase on the Queen's hip. Then she grins, sharp and bloodthirsty and in such a way that the BQ reluctantly approves, and lets her abridged wrist drop so that she hangs off the Black Queen at an angle as they turn for another pass. "Hrah!" A leap, and the Rogue bounds onto the top of Typhes's head, her clawkind skittering off his pale scales.

Here, in the thick of it, the Black Queen has a better perspective on how little space there is to maneuver around the Lord of Time. The space between Skaia the Battlefield and the gate at the edge of the Medium looked deceptively empty from the Battlefield, but up close, [crack]s vein the area, almost indistinguishable from some angles against the dark of the Medium. Typhes weaves himself between them with incredible precision, but more than a quarter of his mass has dissolved into the wind where his coils simply would not fit were they solid. She suspects the only reason there's enough space at all is because the Sylph has willed it so.

Which is not, typically speaking, part of a Sylph's powerset. A Witch or an Heir or a Maid's, maybe, but not a Sylph's. For anyone familiar with such things, it's clear that a surplus of power suffuses the troll, all of it foreign to the senses. Her weapon reeks of exotic matter that should have no place here.

But that's none of the Black Queen's business.

LE: MORE INSUBORDINATE TRASH.

His voice grates even more up close. The mental component is more straightforward and focused than any Horrorterror, and shoots into the mind with autocratic insistence. An imperative of annihilation that doesn't even have the common decency to take the form of a fraymotif. Wreathing herself with a fresh layer of armor, the Black Queen raises a shadow-bladed sword and slashes down on her next pass; he sees her obvious approach and bats herself with a slap of his hand, while the Rogue emerges from a Void umbra and slams her clawkind home in a fleshy tear left by the Sylph's chainsaw. A thin trickle of soulstuff leaks into the air when the troll rears back, which is more than the Black Queen expected - then the Sylph sidesteps in and whisks the greenblood out of the way as the Lord throws back his skull and shrieks an outline of miniscule [crack]s all around himself. Naturally they don't impede his own movement, the despotic cheat - the Lord of Time simply floats free, unnaturally removed from reality as he bypasses the cracks of nothingness, and raises the hanging fabric of his overcoat to shield himself from a blistering, white hot bolt of Hope. The Sylph deftly casts the Rogue back into the miasma of Void, then sweeps her claw before her to make more room for them.

The Black Queen can already tell they will last - but only just. The Sylph channels power from another source, radiant and resplendent with a sepulchritudinous aura, but the Prince is already going the way of most Princes. It's really only a matter of time, there. The Rogue can sustain herself for a while longer by redistributing what soulstuff she pilfers from the Lord of Time, but stealing power from such a destructive source will only last for so long without detrimental side effects. And the Heir -

Narrowing her eyes, the Black Queen recalculates her options. Risky, with a Prince in such close proximity - the [Claimant to the Throne] emergency protocol has been glitched for almost as long as the Black Queen has been alive.

But a true Heir is hard to overthrow.

Typhus interrupts her calculations by snapping his jaws shut on the Lord of Time's overcoat, shaking him like a ragdoll, and tossing him up overhead to try to swallow him, gullet wide. It's a feint - even Cetus would know better than to eat a Lord, and Typhus has (marginally) more restraint, depending on his tempestuous moods. The Black Queen snarls and darts up past Typhus's eye, summons a Mile of power, and slaps the Lord of Time out of the way.

An unnatural stillness jerks the Lord of Time to a stop. Instead of flying back, his head turns, inch by slow inch - and continues to turn, long past the point any carapacian or flesh being would have snapped their necks, until a skeleton grin glares down at the Black Queen. His eyes are filled with a hellish, flickering light, and the Black Queen realizes with a horrible start that she's the one who has gone too still.

LE: DON'T FLATTER YOURSELVES.

LE: NONE OF YOU. ARE WORTH MY TIME.

A ragged, thin veil of wing wraps around her, and bats her down and to the side while Typhus's claw winds up hooked in the slow pocket of time. The Black Queen rights herself at once and feels a wave of insulted fury pour through her without being forced through contradictory channels. A lashing forest of shadowy Miles rips out of the empty air as her fury manifests, and whips toward the Lord of Time; at the same time, an unrelenting bolt of Hope lights up the sky, where the Prince has risen to shoot straight down at the Lord's head.

They hit at the same time. The Prince's bolt hits first, vaporizing the leading edge of the Black Queen's attack before shooting down in a beam of light that vanishes into a vast [crack] that runs far below their feet; then with a small line of smoke rising from the Lord of Time's crisped overcoat, the Miles hit, slamming into the cherub Lord in a rush.

None of them pierce his flesh. The Black Queen shrieks in impotent fury.

(It would be easy, so easy, to be Jack, or her King. To lash out senselessly at targets she can harm. But she came here to dash herself against a suitable rock, and there's little point in turning aside.)

LE: IT'S GOING TO HAPPEN SOON. I CAN FEEL IT.

LE: THESE USELESS THINGS. HAVE ALMOST OUTLIVED THEIR USEFULNESS.

LE: THIS SHOULD BE SELF EVIDENT. AS THEY ARE IDIOTIC.

Ah. He's speaking to her - or perhaps to what he assumes is Skaia, through her. Once upon a hateful time, that might even have been the case. The Lord of Time raises his skull as the last of the smoke dissipates, and cuts the Miles off with a slice of his cuestaff. His leering eyes remain fixed on the Black Queen, even as the Sylph dives in again, radiant with starlight.

The Black Queen snorts.
BQ: Oh, I completely agree. Everyone here has almost outlived their usefulness.

BQ: Isn't that right?

The Lord's smile vanishes. An incredible feat, for someone whose teeth are permanently bared.

The Sylph hits nothing but empty space, her hair flying wildly around her face as she whips around. But the Lord of Time moves too quickly - or he slows them all at once, including all of Typhus's considerable bulk, and then a heavy hand locks around the thin shell of the Black Queen's neck. A great deal of her shadow armor snaps on impact as he shakes her. Her power may be her own, now, but it's still born of Skaia.

And Skaia is what this loathsome abomination exists to destroy.

LE: I HAVE TOLERATED MANY AGGRAVATIONS. BUT YOU. ARE ALREADY GARBAGE.

The Black Queen hisses at him, lets the shadow swords drop away, and raises her lancekind as a cigarette-holder to stab into the Lord's right eye. It takes a few attempts, her claws raking down the bare bones of his face, but she manages to wedge it between the socket and the whirling billiard balls that flicker within.

In response, the Lord of Time simply unhinges his jaw. Nothing lays within except a slithering tongue, and the cruel, shattering light of entropy that gathers in his throat, framed by green teeth. He's hulking enough that he could swallow her whole.

A thin crack lances out through the shell of her cheek - a chip where nothing remains.

LE: YOU DIE. JUST LIKE YOUR MUSE.

She smiles cruelly right back at him.

BQ: And you'll die to yours. Pathetic.

And these claws were brand new. Of all the things the Black Queen regrets, though, that one's low on her list. The ring slides from her claw with little resistance; there's no overwhelming compulsion to affix it in place, anymore. She tosses it over her shoulder, and trusts that even if Skaia released her from her bonds, a chance to meddle in an event of such significance should prove irresistible.

BQ: Heir! I abdicate!

The Queen's Ring lands unerringly in the Heir of Void's outstretched grey palm.

[Attention - an error has been detected. The Heir has been crowned.]

[Please wait. Rerouting...]

Despite everything, there is still a certain satisfaction in balancing the scales. Completing the matched set, however belatedly. If Prospit can glitch its dreaming Heir into ascendency, so can Derse. The Black Queen continues to grin crookedly at the Lord of Time, determined to stare him down until the end. The cherub Lord ignores the wild roil of power as the ring takes the form best suited to its unorthodox bearer - a set of Queenly Knucklerings - and the searing light of broken time and dead space spreads the cracks across the Black Queen's face.
PM: NO!

The Prospitian Monarch barrels into her at warp speed, the Sylph of Space clasping her elbow to assist even as the troll carves through the Lord of Time's wrist. The chainsaw emits a visceral, gut-crunching rattle - the Sylph throws the two Queens aside, and plants a high-heeled foot on the Lord's chest as she wrenches the chainsaw free from the splintered bone. A glaring beam of destroying light bursts from the Lord of Time's jaws and carves uselessly through the empty air as the Rogue attempts to strangle him from behind. Black fire boils from the crowned Heir's fist as he launches himself into the fray.

Without looking back, the Prospitian Monarch tosses the Black Queen gently into the air and catches her with one arm under her knees - and pelts toward the gate, her dark eyes squinting in concentration as she streaks across the Medium.

Of all fucking things.

PM: See? A Parcel Mistress always arrives in a timely fashion!

BQ: Finish me, or put me down.

PM: You don't even have a ring on! Calm down.

True, very true. But her lancekind is her own and - she left it embedded in that ogre's eye socket. The Black Queen does not groan in ire, but she does dig sharp claws into PM's arm to pry herself free. With the Sylph's touch of speed they're making excellent time toward the final gate, and the Prospitian Monarch shows no signs of slowing down or turning back. If anything, she's speeding up.

What does she have to do to be spared the stupid, interfering, well-intentioned machinations of Prospitian Meddlers?!

BQ: I will fall in battle, you useless excuse for a pawn -

PM: She's not dead.

- For the second time, the whole world seems to stop, and tilt around her, and come back down in an unfamiliar configuration which leaves the Black Queen...at a loss. Words refuse to form coherently in her mind for a long moment, wobbling and bouncing off one another in her mind as she stares at the Prospitian Monarch and attempts to deduce the point of the lie. Lying is a Dersite tactic, but Prospitians are not incapable (no matter how frustratingly straightforward they can be at the worst possible times). There must be - something - she can't - she's not anywhere anymore - BQ: ...What?

PM: She's not dead! The Witch of Life healed her, and the Witch of Space has taken her through the gate by now! So cut the melodramatic crap and get ready!

The Black Queen's arms fall limp. Her white eyes scrape over the Prospitian's face, hunting for the lie, for anything. But there's nothing in PM's expression but steely determination and a hint of exasperation, as she angles her wings slightly and they begin to spiral toward the gate. No more of the ridiculous ark ships remain, nor any of the White King's wandering fleet - the Black Queen senses the presence of the Seer of Light and the Heir of Breath rapidly nearing, and then the wall of unfamiliar, alien Space that is the gate, and nothing more.
But perhaps, on the other side -

She shakes her head: no. Hope is still a dangerous thing, with a Prince at the end of his tenure in the vicinity. He’ll end in flames, as most Princes do, but it wouldn’t do to tempt fate.

BQ: I - what are you doing?!

A bright smile fills the Prospitian Monarch’s face, and she turns it on the Black Queen, alight with determination.

PM: Making my last delivery as Parcel Mistress. And all the heroes are safely delivered, so now I have a promise to keep!

BQ: Unbelievable. Do I look like some delusional denizen to you? Beings like us don’t retire.

PM: Says who?

For the third time, the Black Queen pauses, momentarily stunned. She really mustn’t, she thinks, distantly, let the Prospitian Monarch get the wrong impression of such things. Under normal circumstances, it isn't so easy to stun a Black Queen speechless.

BQ: …Says Skaia.

The small, wicked, contrary grin that creases the Black Queen’s face is reserved entirely for herself; the fact that PM spies it and beams back is simply a matter of coincidence.

BQ: Well, fuck her. Shall we?

The Prospitian Monarch at least has the presence of mind not to stop and chat with the heroes perched on the edge of the gate. One of them waves at them - the Heir, ugh - and PM hovers for a moment to wave back, but does not descend.

She does something worse, if that’s even possible.

PM beats her wings one last time to send them drifting toward the gate - and then pulls her ring off with her teeth and lets it fall into the palm of her hand. Then she winds up, and before the appalled Black Queen can stop her, Prospitian Monarch hurls the Queen’s Ring back the way they came. Not toward the Prospit Heir, even - no, the ring twinkles at the highest point in its arc, and then vanishes. All its power, swallowed up by a [crack].

In the absence of wings or Queenly power, the Parcel Mistress obviously tumbles out of the air, taking the Black Queen along with her.

BQ: What. Have you done.

PM: No rings! No Queens! We’ll just have to get along with one another like sensible people.

BQ: …I’m going to kill you.

Before she can make good on her promise, they fall through the gate.

---

Karkat wakes up riddled with the memory of bullet holes. More than what actually hit him. As he bolts upright, clawing at his chest and trying to find the actual mortal wound, the Pulse echoes and fills his head with a blood-red haze. His claws scrape over undamaged skin no matter where he reaches to stem the bleeding, and after a second of pawing around like a mindless, shitmouthed behemoth, he realizes that he's rattled over nothing. He's had nightmares that left him this rattled before -

But none that left him covered in bloodstains. Incredulous, Karkat peels his shirt away from where it sticks to him with barely-dried blood. For fuck's sake, he doesn't think all of this is even his. He's been lying in some gory puddle formed by anyone who got shot up here. Feferi's Life-y thing sealed him up, but didn't put all the blood back where it belongs. As Karkat makes himself breathe and rolls back up onto his knees, he realizes that the blood soaking his god tier clothes isn't just dried, though; the cloth slowly absorbs it, until Karkat can't even see the stains anymore. A fraymotif pulses in time with his pusher - [Blood is the New Black] - but even as he tries to listen for what the fuck it would do, the silent activation prompt fades away. It can't have been that important, anyway.

He looks around, struggling to get his shit together, and realizes three things, one right after the other.

Thing one: Jade and Feferi have fucked off to god knows where.

Thing two: the whole fucking planet shakes under them - he thought it was just his heartbeat pounding in his skull, but no. The Forge tosses and vomits up freshly churned, grist-streaked lava with violent gurgles, and Echidna cuts through the molten rock in a feverish holding pattern.

Thing three: all the color has bled out of Dave's god tier uniform, leaving him in grey and black, with a cracked white gear flickering in the center of his chest.

-

CG: OH. MY GOD.
CG: WHAT THE FUCK JUST HAPPENED? EVERYONE, SOUND THE FUCK OFF.
GG: karkat! you're alive! :D
CG: SHOULDN'T YOU HAVE MADE SURE OF THAT BEFORE YOU TOOK OFF?!
CC: W)(ale, we were PR---ETTY s)(ore you were fine!
GG: anyway, everyone should be a-okay now! me and feferi had to pull an intervention.
GA: Will You Be Able To Do That Again?
GA: Just Hypothetically Speaking.
CC: I don't know. 38( I'm starting to run dry, )ere…
CA: im alivve but at wwhat cost
CA: uh
CA: thank you for savving my life fef
CC: Yea)( yea)(.
EB: anyway, my jackass denizen just flipped terezi and vriska and tavros through the gate at mach speed and took off again.
EB: in a super jackass fashion.
TT: It's true. I was there, I saw the whole thing.
TT: Damn and blast. The blind jokes aren't reaching their full potential without Terezi here.
EB: see! such a jackass!
CG: GLAD TO KNOW WE STILL HAVE ALL OUR PRIORITIES IN ORDER.
TT: Has anyone heard from Equius? His messages were getting difficult to read at the best of times, and my ability to select text with a black background to read it has failed me.
AC: :33 < he's here! he's alive! he's…
AC: >:33c < feline!
CT: D --> Nepeta, please
CT: D --> It would behoove you not to behoof this way
AC: :33 < snorts
CT: D --> Is the alchemy at 100% yet
EB: not when i last checked!
GG: no, but it's almost there, i think!
TT: The ships have all gone through, so far as I can tell. Any more carapacians, John?
EB: a couple. i'm gonna go give them a boost, since it looks like typheus knocked them off course.
P
GG: he kind of really is a jackass :T
GA: Then It Might Be Best If We Start To Consolidate Ourselves.
GA: I'm Not Sure How Much Longer We Can Prolong This Fight Considering Nepeta Lost A Hand.
AC: :33 < errrrrrgh, i'm fine!
CT: D --> No you're not
AC: :33 < yes i am!
GA: Our Time Is Relatively Short Is What I'm Saying.
CA: im comin to help
GA: I Don't Know If That's A Good Idea.
CA: ivve got literally nothin else to do here
CT: D --> It is strange though
CT: D --> We have not been steering him clear of LoFaF
CT: D --> He just hasn't gone near it even though he is…very STRONG GA: I Think I Understand Why That Is - AC: :33 < st33r as in livestock? :PP
CT: D --> Yes
CG: LOOK. ARADIA AND DAVE ARE HERE WITH ME, WHICH IS THE OPPOSITE OF THE PLACE THEY SHOULD BE, IF YOU CATCH MY SUBTLE, HINTING DRIFT.
GG: read you loud and clear! brb!
EB: so basically we're just missing sollux and gamzee, right?
EB: again. :T
CC: I'm pretty sure S)(oallux wasn't )(urt or anyfin like that! I would )(ave notfis)(ed.
-- twinArmageddons [TA] has joined the chat! --
TA: yeah ii'm fiine, just tryiing two iignore the exiistence of thiis hot mess of a memo for the sake of my sanity.
TA: does anyone know why the fuck terezii and vriiska of all people were diicking around in Skaiia?
EB: legal stuff.
TA: what the fuck does that even mean.
EB: nobody knows what it means. :P
TA: that's not a fucking answer.
EB: but it's true.
TA: ii'm nukiing the damn memo. wrap thiis up you fucks.
-- apocalypseArisen [AA] will join the chat! --
AA: jade and I finished in time!
TT: Ah, of course. Inevitability, our old friend…
TA: fuck it, good enough for me.
AA: karkat you can go with dave to the gate
AA: no worries you guys did an awesome job
CG: IS THAT FUTURE ARADIA SPEAK FOR 'FUCK OFF ASSWIPE'?
AA: but nicer!
CG: HAVE FUN MAKING THE LAST FEW MISERABLE CROPS OF LIFEFORMS WITH THE ECTOFUN TIMES MACHINE FROM HELL! IT'S ALL YOURS.
AC: :33 < then should we keep fighting? fur how much longer?
AC: :33 < the furocious fighter is nyaat complaining! she hisses at the big windy snake who k33ps blustering around though
EB: WHY! IS HE! SUCH! A JACKASS?!
GA: He Is Trying To Help.
GA: I Think.
TT: I…may be able to help with that.
TA: good then everyone knows what they're doing.
TA: go nuts and don't die after all the shit ii went through to get you alive you fucks
CG: WAIT, WE STILL HAVEN'T HEARD FROM GAMZEE.
TA: oh, for - @terminallyCapricious. this is your chat god speaking.
TC: :o?
TA: he's fine. has literally anyone here ever tried to @ hiim with hiis actual chumhandle when he's fucked off to parts unknown?
CG: …
EB: …i mean, for a while there, you just had to mention him -
TA: for fuck's sake
-- twinArmageddons [TA] has nuked the chat! --

- Dave stubbornly refuses to wake up. Not even when the Lord of Time screams LoWaS apart into fractured blue chunks, and Tyopheus screams back twice as loud. John's asshole Denizen is everywhere at once, all teeth and coils, which means Kanaya, Equius, Nepeta, and Eridan have to fight on or around a volatile, writhing mass of air-snake if they want to accomplish anything, or risk pissing off a giant boss monster on top of the Lord of Assholes.

Karkat can't keep track of it all to save his fucking life. His thinkpan has reached its fucking limit; a heavy, dull buzz drones through it as he leans over Dave. Feferi - when did Feferi get back? - hoists Dave upright and braces him with an arm around his shoulders once Karkat's sure the stab wound itself is gone, yet Dave doesn't raise his own head. Karkat flicks him on the cheek near the eye and Dave's whole face twitches.

Better than nothing. Karkat will take the ambiguous combination of vaguely unconscious and vaguely responsive over dead any day of the week, even if Dave looks faded and pale compared to the black of his stupid bullshit cloak.

A warm claw taps Karkat lightly on the shoulder, and he looks up with bleary eyes to see Aradia stooped beside him. Jade hovers in the air right beside Feferi, her hands clasped around her knees - Karkat hadn't fucking realized they had an audience. He didn't even register Jade and Feferi arriving.

"Is he going to wake up?" pukes out of his mouth without permission; Karkat scrubs furiously at his own scalp with his claws, trying to shake the bleariness out of his thinkpan, but - fuck, it's hard right now. Aradia's up and moving already, which is fantastic! Awesome! "I mean, you're too smart to fucking impale yourself on a sword-shaped crowbar without warning and possibly contract tetanus on top of a chronic case of stab wound, but this dumb fuck -!"

"I'm fairly sure, yes!" Aradia says. She squats down with a hum that almost - but doesn't quite - cover her wince of pain as she reaches out and pats Dave on the cheek. Dave twitches again, but still refuses to open his eyes. Jade cranes forward to try to peer over all three of them, and puts her hands on Feferi's shoulders to boost herself up. "He's not a Hero of Time, anymore; the Lord can't demand loyalty, or curse him for not obeying. There's still a lot of old damage that might never go away. But he's free."

She says that last part...weirdly. Karkat can't put a claw on what her voice sounds like: not sad or wistful, but maybe old. "What about you? We've got this stupid fucking not-sword right here -" he starts, fumbling around for the piece of shit in question. Not like he's volunteering to help more people stab themselves (where was Vriska when you fucking needed her to 'help' with that kind of shit?) but he assumes Aradia is hardcore enough to...do the thing. On her own. Preferably while Karkat's not looking so he doesn't have to deal with more post-stabbing nausea.

His claw finally finds the crowbar, and the gritty, dried texture of it scraps on his skin in a way that feels abso-fucking-lutely awful; Karkat snatches his claw back with a visceral wince and glares at the thing while his skin crawls. It doesn't feel like dried blood coats it - Karkat could handle dried blood just fine. It feels like the crowbar absorbed whatever was left of Dave's blood on it, leaving it sandpaper-rough and dry. The thought of picking it up and handing it over to Aradia makes his stomach twist.

And Aradia shakes her head, with a thoughtful tilt to her head as she nudges the crowbar away from Karkat's side with the toe of her shoe. "...No. Maybe I could! But no." Tiny sparks hiss and crackle between the not-sword and the ground as it scraaapes along, and some of them arc from the crowbar to Aradia's foot like a warning. Karkat awkwardly leans on one palm and one leg so his other foot can shoot out and kick the crowbar away, toward the edge of the platform. It skids to a stop just before it can fly off the edge; Karkat almost wishes it had fucked off over the edge of the cliff, to be honest. The instinctive, hindbrain part of his thinkpan that personally feels that the crowbar is a semi-malevolent, bloodthirsty cursed object is arguing with the part of his pan that thinks it can't be that bad if it stripped away the aspect that almost killed Dave by inches, and the hindbrain is winning. "Heheh. I have places to be, too."

Aradia murmurs the last bit, like she's talking to herself. If Karkat hadn't had that weird fucking conversation with her over Pesterchum - that Aradia from some unspecified point in the timeline - he probably wouldn't think about it twice. But he has, and he does, and it hits him that there aren't many places left to go to. At least three quarters of the Incipisphere are a complete clusterfuck -

[Clarity]

And something in the way Aradia says it hints that she's not going where the rest of them are.

Karkat's been so fucking anxious about all his dumbfuck heroic/dangerous friends that the worry has melded together into a giant ball in his brain. Okay, maybe he worries less about, say, Vriska, or Eridan, or Equius, or Jade, because they're stupidly overpowered in their own unique ways. He hasn't worried about Aradia, on the other hand, because she's always three steps ahead of them and cool as a fucking cucumber.

That extra shard of worry that's been ballooning ever since their conversation jams itself right between Karkat's ribs, and twists.

Jade doesn't notice. Karkat stands up; his body feels detached from his center, like he's adrift, and he only realizes belatedly that he's started to float. God fucking dammit. "Have we got everyone? WV, are you still breathing under there?" Jade chatters, parting a pile of eggs like an ovoid sea to pluck the re-buried carapacian from it. WV starts to kick at once in true carapacian reflex, and looks singularly aggrieved as Jade sets him down. "Everyone but the denizens and us should be clear from LoFaF, so this is the last trip!" She waggles her eyebrows significantly at Karkat and Karkat grimaces back. He has no reason to feel called out by that - Dave's the dumb ass who didn't know when to quit.
He still feels guilty. Obviously. Ugh.

Feferi scoops Dave up like he weighs nothing; Dave emits another strangled, incomprehensible groan and shifts restlessly, but subsides back into unconsciousness right after. Jade's significant eyebrow contortions escalate - but Karkat still stands stock still. He's facing Jade, but that dull, jabbing shard of knowing lodges in his chest and locks his awareness on Aradia.

"Hang on," he says, and whips around before Jade can finish rolling her ganderbulbs up at the sky. "Aradia, you're a morbid fucking asshole," Karkat says, and barges across the platform toward her. Aradia watches him storm toward her, bemused.

Karkat hugs, and it feels like hugging a hot water bottle - too warm, some part of his thinkpan catalogs, even for a burgundyblood - almost feverish - in troll form. Aradia doesn't miss a beat, a quiet laugh in her throat as she hugs him back. "Oh, love you too!" she says, and gives him a good-natured tap of her horns. She sports enormous fucking coiled horns, though, so even a tap knocks Karkat a little silly. "I think I look at death a little differently than you do," she adds quietly in his ear, and then lets him go with a smile and a wave. "Bye-bye!"

Seriously. A morbid fucking asshole, right until the bitter end. Karkat turns on his heel and floats back to Jade, furiously wiping at his face. "Great, awesome. Let's get going," he says, without sniffling, thanks very fucking much.

For once in her life, Jade lets him get away with it. Then again, she does have an extra set of ears; no more pisspoor excuses for not being able to hear things. "I'll be right back, Aradia!" Jade promises, without making a comment about Karkat's wet face. Karkat feels the exact moment her space powers reach out and grab him like the fist of a careless god instead of letting him float of his own accord.

"I'll be waiting," Aradia replies. She boosts herself up onto the terminal and sits there cross-legged to wave them off.

Jade slingshots them at the gate at approximately ninety fucking miles an hour. At least, that's how fast Karkat feels like he's going on Jade's Wild Ride, and he screeches loudly enough that he almost deafens himself. Sitting on the edge of the platform, Rose and John blink in unison as Karkat shoots by - then John leans back, his legs kicking out in front of him as he reaches out. A blue curl of wind catches Karkat with an airy, insubstantial grip around his ankle, then wafts him away from the gate. "Gotcha!" John says, satisfied, and his grin lights up the whole platform.

Karkat dangles there for a second with his head hanging low, which relieves some of the headachy buzz in his skull. The sudden absence of the Forge's insistent, broiling heat and LoFaF's humidity leaves his skin prickling but cool out here near the very edge of the Medium, and fucking fuck, it's such a relief. Jade teleports out the instant Feferi sets down on the platform; Karkat accidentally catches a glimpse of neon green stars recreating the hyperdrive effect from Star Wars and nearly erupts like a vomit volcano at the wrenching vertigo before Jade's green outline vanishes.

Rose moves deliberately, swinging her legs up onto the platform with a noticeable pause that doesn't makes sense - until she brushes her slightly singed bangs back, the draping edge of her orange hood pulled back so she can see better, and Karkat remembers that off-hand comment about the fact that Rose can't see. At all. Moving her hair just seems to happen by force of habit; sun scars ring her eyes, with more sharply defined edges than Terezi's old burn scars, from staring into the sun a lifetime ago. One of John's breezes twitches her sleeve with a light tug in Feferi and Dave's direction, and after that Rose walks toward Feferi of her own accord. "He's long overdue to go through," she says, homing in on Dave with only a few stutters in her gait. John floats after her with a detour to grab Karkat in a hug.

Then he goes and joins Rose in crowding around Dave, who remains unconscious like the stubborn douche that he is even when Rose puts out a hand to judge the distance and mashes her palm accidentally against his nose. Feferi covers her snrk of laughter by pretending to cough - by which Karkat means she completely fails to cover it up in any way, shape, or form. "I'll take him through. Not sure what all's the other side of that thing, but he shouldn't wash up on shore alone," Feferi says, sounding strangled. A faint mauve blush stains her face when Rose arches an eyebrow at her, and, with a perfectly level expression, pushes Dave's nose like it's a button.

"I mean, Kanaya came back okay," John points out. "But yeah, you're right. Knowing Dave, he'll go through and fall down the first set of stairs ever built."

Everyone, including Karkat, takes a moment to process that mental image. "...You're so right," Karkat says, with the utter certainty that there will be a stairwell on the other side of this damn gate. Especially now that John has warned them specifically about the stairs, and tempted fate like this. Maybe Calliope's reality is marginally less of an omnipresent fucklord obsessed with drubbing them over the head with memetic bullshit than their current place of residence, but they can't take that chance.

- Feferi and Dave fuck off. To Karkat's TOTALLY MILD disappointment, WV wanders in after them before anyone can stop him: the carapacian leaves glowing green footprints that seem to continue into the gate instead of vanishing in the wall of white, which gives Karkat the weirdest sense of the passage looming behind them.

Then it's just him and John and Rose, and nothing better to do than sit on their claws and shittalk the Lord of Time. Karkat takes a full minute to watch the fight raging on in the space between them and Skaia, and thinks - not even fucking once. The [Clarity] fraymotif still rings quietly in his ears, and Karkat knows with utter certainty that Kanaya and Equius and Nepeta can handle themselves just fine without Karkat hamfistedly wading into the fight. Or worse - the universe will dropkick him assfirst into a situation where he has to make some kind of sacrificial choice, like Dave.

If everything's winding down, Karkat thinks he'd rather sit here and let his stress-hazed thinkpan clear.

"First of all, I hate that guy," he says, to start things off, once they're all settled.

Rose nods in wise agreement. John puts on his 'I'm gonna pull one of my best japes yet' face, which looks about the same as him trying and failing to keep a straight face, and says, innocently, "Really? I mean, he's an ugly green skull jerk, sure, but he's just kind of doing his job." After a moment, he adds, "And being a dick about it."

Karkat knocks his shoulder into John, who pretends to wobble like Jell-O and knocks into Rose on his other side. Rose presses the back of her hand to her forehead and mimics a swoon. "Don't question the sincerity of my hate, John," Karkat says, and is both vexed and pleased to see John actually say that exact sentence along with him. Fuck, he's getting predictable. "All hate which courses through my veins is pure, unadulterated, and freshly distilled into its most concentrated form. You could bottle my hatred for that pungent fuck and auction it off like a Château Gofuckyourself 1840 vintage to the highest bidder!"
"You have such a remarkable talent with words, Karkat. It's inspirational in so many ways," Rose says, still leaning over in a fake faint. A breeze that isn't John's stirs, sighing between the three of them and sending flutters through John's cape, Rose's sleeves, and Karkat's stupid cloak.

Holy fuck, does Karkat look forward to wearing normal person clothes again. As soon as this is over, he's going to wear the oldest, most worn out jeans and hoodie available for the rest of his natural existence and live with Gamzee in unwashed-hoodie-squalor.

"One of these days we need to go through Pesterchum and publish a book with all your top yelling moments," John says, and then starts giggling. The Breeze twists his windsock hood at an angle against the flow of the gate's faint wind, probably to be a contrary fuck.

"Haha. Not if I publish it first," Karkat replies, rolling his eyes.

Rose snorts and sits upright. "We could approach it as a form of historical documentation," she says, with an impish smile. "Which do you think would prove a more significant primary document: Karkat's turns of phrase, or an ensemble collection of all our various and sundry puns?"

Bowled over by the terrible, seductive power of that suggestion, John gasps. Karkat groans and drops his head into his claws.

"…All and Pundry," they say, at the same time: Rose thoughtfully, Karkat despairingly, and John gleefully. Karkat flops over in the opposite direction and attempts to curl up into a ball of denial that this is going to be a Thing, but John just leans on top of him like he's a glorified lounge chair, cackling with wild abandon. "It's nice to hang out while we're all in mortal peril and reality is slowly crumbling, huh?" John says, with a cheerful, airy tone that forces Karkat to peel his eyes open incredulously to make sure John hasn't spontaneously swapped places with Aradia just to fuck with him.

No. Still John. Sometimes Karkat wonders how on fucking Earth he managed to make friends with people who have such singularly awful senses of humor. "I mean, the mortal peril thing's getting kind of old."

"Really? But what is life without an ever-escalating series of life-threatening conflicts and a somber cortege of mysterious happenings dogging your every move? I don't know how we shall survive without them," Rose says, examining her fingernails and looking for all the world like she's commenting on the price of yarn in the post-apocalyptic economy.

"Like our lives will ever be simple," John says. Karkat wriggles out from under him and sits up, but John just scoots so that he can keep leaning on him. Which isn't exactly something Karkat can complain about. Dammit. "I mean, we all get, like, partial credit for creating a whole new existence! That's unironically awesome, no matter how much Dave probably wants it to be super ironic."

Karkat grumbles, and drags his mind away from the pan-crackingly huge task that might be resettling an entire civilization that just got grubnapped from its original planet and sailed into another reality. They won't even know what they have to work with until they get there - it's giving him a migraine just thinking about it. "Fuck. Don't remind me," he mumbles. And then - "Gamzee better show up yesterday."

Rose says nothing. John's hand finds Karkat's, and squeezes. "He'll be here. I'm sure of it," John says, confidently, and it's almost enough.

Out in the distance, another piece of reality shatters, and goes dark.
TT: Kanaya.
GA: Yes Dear?
TT: The logistics of how to re-establish civilization in ūniversa incognita seem a bit beyond us, and I think it might be preferable to do what feels right for us, first and foremost.
GA: Rose I Feel The Same Way.
GA: But If You Attempt To Propose While I Am In The Middle Of Chainsawing A Reality-Killing Abomination In The Face, I'm Going To Be Very Distracted.
TT: What better time could there be than whilst you are in the middle of chainsawing a reality-killing abomination in the face?
GA: Fair Point.

Rose carries on multiple conversations at once, with relative ease. Navigating Pesterchum just by speaking and listening (and occasionally thinking in someone's general direction) proves much easier to grasp than it probably should. The chat appears to exist simultaneously in text and voice form, and yet Rose has never given it much thought until necessity thrust it upon her. Occasionally she'll slip up and respond to something Karkat or John has said through a memo, but the two of them check their phones almost without conscious thought and answer without missing a beat.

[Clarity] sings on, clarifying points of confusion, organizing scattered hints into clear realization, illuminating opportune moments. Rose still can't see or See, in any of her old myriad forms, but she doesn't need to see to know that Nepeta pivots and bounds between Typhus's coils with crisp precision to drag her one remaining claw through the Lord of Time's right thigh; that Equius lunges into place with a perfect understanding of where he needs to be to intercept the Lord's retaliating swing and meet it with a ring-enhanced punch. Equius voids the force of the impact that would otherwise blast him flying back and vanishes from Rose's awareness again - but she can sense almost every key moment where one of Kanaya's devastating strikes could land almost before it happens.
It's not the most precise thing, by any means, and not something Rose intends to rely on when they leave. But it lets her murmur vague warnings to Nepeta when Typheus abruptly ripples and changes course, and it's enough.

Karkat shifts - if it were John, Rose would feel the movement on her right side, but since it's Karkat she only hears the scrape of fabric on the platform as he moves. The three of them aren't doing much anything of importance aside from sitting, which (aggravatingly enough) leaves Rose little to work with. She's going to need to trade her needlekind in for a grand, wizardly staff that she can use for everyday matters, such as walking and dueling with Terezi for Seer supremacy. "Oh. You're the one blasting the music."

Ah. "Naturally. I can only imagine how that might have worked if I'd had Terezi here to double it," Rose says, as the chorus begins again and washing across the Medium in a wave of sound that reaches anyone who's listening and recoils from the empty, cracked wasteland the Lord of Time has made all around them.

"It feels like it forcibly removed my eyeballs from my head, crossed them, and then uncrossed them so that they're better than they were before," John says, descriptively, and Rose's eyes widen into saucers in a bid to join her eyebrows in orbit.

"Intriguing. Any other notable side effects?"

John hesitates, the seconds ticking away as he sits there. Rose turns her eyes on him to stare intently, though it doesn't do much for her now apart from communicate dramatic effect. Finally, quietly, John
"...I don't think Con Air was actually all that good of a film anymore."

This is the revelation of the century. Rose flinches back in shock and clasps a hand to her chest. "Really?" she says, absolutely fascinated.

"It's not that big of a deal!" John protests. The Breeze around him in gales of snickering laughter.

Karkat scrambles to reach around John and seizes Rose's free hand, amazement in his voice. "Oh my god. Rose. You've worked a miracle. Fuck Dave praying to John, 'thank Rose' is the new, totally unironic meme."

"I welcome your completely unironic reverence as your exalted friendleader, naturally." Rose inclines her head, as regally as one can while one's best friend pretends to die in a spasm of embarrassment beside her.

"It's cheesy and silly and stupid and I still love it! And we're watching it on the first TV or computer that exists in the next universe!" John says, insistently.

"How dare you?" Karkat says, and there's a scuffle of movement that jostles Rose a little while he attempts to turn around to face John without dropping Rose's hand. "Obviously we're going to watch Sleepless in Seattle -"

Rose freezes, rigid as she whips her head around toward the Medium. Something - if she could just see, maybe she'd know how to interpret what she just sensed better. After years of living as such a visual creature, relying on her hearing and her awareness leaves her scrambling for a moment. "Damn," she says, her voice curt, and her tone immediately snaps Karkat and John out of their play fight.

"What's up?" John asks. "I didn't - I don’t see anything different out there...I think. Everyone's still up and going, I don't think anyone's hit. Eridan and Equius are both hard to see, but also Eridan's a giant white ball of fire so -"

It's useful data. Rose breathes out slowly through her nose, in stages, as she attempts to understand what set off her internal alarms. Something old - something from earlier, which just came to a head. "Equius...it's hard to tell," she murmurs. But that's nothing new; the Queen's Ring on Equius's hand is easier to follow as it slowly burns his arm from the inside out, but it's not the thing that just went critical. "Nepeta and Kanaya are fine, but -" there it is - "Eridan's the real problem. He can't keep throwing power around like that."

He shouldn't, Rose thinks, her stomach sinking through her like a cold stone, have been throwing power around at all.

-

By the time she realizes, it's too late.

-

TT: Eridan, I can't see you.
CA: do i really need to say it
TT: If you aren't careful, you're going to burn yourself up.
TT: You and Equius are both channeling too much power, but you started before he did -
CA: this shit is gonna be pretty epic i knoww
TT: ...How long have you known?
CA: wwhat, that my awfual aspect is about a minute from immolatin me wwith the wwhite-hot intensity of fifty thousand wwrathful crying angels
CA: i thought that part wwas obvvious
TT: Don't be ridiculous. No one is dying today. Not permanently.
CA: look i bleww past the point of no return before fef evven brought me back
CA: noww it just keeps pourin out and i think it wwould start destroyin eveverything if it hadnt been beaten to the punch.
TT: Because the Prince role revolves around destruction.
CA: oh good i don't havve to spell out all that pointless pseudo-mythological rubbish TT: Equius can shut your powers down. You can still - CA: it would be so fuckin easy to break that gate
CA: or lofaf
CA: lot of hope ridin on both those things and [Hopecrusher] is literally right fuckin there TT: You wouldn't. You're better than that.
CA: maybe
CA: maybe i'm not all the way there though
CA: sometimes i barely know what being a better person would mean with all the shit ive done -
TT: We're more than these arbitrary roles.
TT: Atonement and apologies work better when you're alive to do them, I find.
CA: yeah probably
CA: but i wasnt kiddin about the whole point of no return thing so TT: So get out of there. Fall back to the gate and get through to somewhere isolated, so you're not fighting when it happens. Then it won't be heroic or just.
CA: all this hope-y shit has to go somewhere
CA: and i think times up
TT: Eridan -
CA: will you tell fef im sorry
CA: and god fuck i dont want to die but i managed to fuck that one right up of course
CA: dont watch -

"Close your eyes," Rose blurts out. She can't tell if John or Karkat or any of the others she speaks to through Pesterchum obey her in time. Eridan's Hope scorches through her awareness, recklessly bright, until it blots out everything else with the sheer, blinding force of it. There's just Eridan, and the Lord of Time, solid and resistant, and the sudden falling sensation in Rose's stomach as one final bloom of white rips through Eridan. The violet blood most likely evaporates off the searing, sharp-edged white wings on contact - but Rose can only imagine it, curled up small around her knees and unable to tear her unseeing eyes away as Eridan collides with the Lord of Time and his core collapses with a thunderclap - Eridan explodes, and all of Rose's awareness whites out except for one distant, lingering note.

[It Is Not Despair]

- Rose comes back to awareness with Karkat's claws cupped around her ears - burst eardrums, probably. John's voice sounds distorted and tinny. "Eridan's -"

[HEROIC] slams into Rose's head like the foot a cruel, self-satisfied god.

"- I know," she says, bleakly. Her fraymotif has gone silent; she can barely hear more than Karkat and John. All her awareness of Pesterchum feels like a scorched, blank sheet.
"What the fuck. What the fuck?" Karkat yells, loud enough that to Rose's throbbing ears it sounds like a normal, twinge-inducing volume. "Who said he was allowed to die?! Fuck!" He sounds upset, his claws trembling where they press against either side of Rose's skull, and Rose wonders if it makes it worse that Eridan was one of their friends that they trusted the least. Or perhaps not worse, but perhaps just as bad as losing a closer friend in a different kind of way.

"Karkat -" John says, sounding closer as he comes back to them - he sounds as shaken as Rose feels at the suddenness of the loss.

Karkat's hands drop away from Rose, and his furious shouting cracks mid-stream, so all he's left with is an angry whisper. "Melodramatic asshole. Fuck. Fuck."

Rose stumbles back - knocks into Karkat when she misjudges how far he's moved - and turns away from the edge of the platform as the guilt threads itself between her organs like hot wires. She should have stopped him sooner. She knew, she saw Eridan burning back on LoLaR, saw the Hope consuming him until there was nothing left, but she didn't say anything then. His own overriding aura blinded her to the consequences of not warning him, and that's -

"I - I need to go." Rose gulps hard, and takes another unsteady step back toward - something. She's lost her bearings again; at least here, if she steps off the platform, there's no [crack]s around for her to fall into for miles.

"Right now?" John catches her by the elbow when she stumbles, and for some reason that sets off a prickle of tears in her blasted eyes.

(It hurts less than losing Kanaya. But guilt is a crawling, hungry, horrific thing.)

She swallows hard. "That explosion - I'm not sure what it did. I can't hear any fraymotifs, at the moment. Eridan did say not to watch." Rose allows herself a small, bitter smile. "Or perhaps there's just…not much left to See, here."

For a moment, she's aware only of John's hand, and the sound of Karkat muttering invectives - and crying a little - behind them. "…'Kay. Be careful," John says, and then his hand falls away.

Rose goes, with the Lord of Time's roar in her ear, as her last hope that Eridan might not have died for nothing burns away into ash.

- GA: Suit Or Dress?
TT: For me or you?
GA: This Is Still All Hypothetical But Both.
TT: Suit for me, dress for you. I'm not sure if we want to resurrect black and white wedding fashion, though.
GA: Oh Of Course Not I'm Already Planning Swatches Of Champagne And Rose And Possibly Lavender.
GA: I Almost Wish You Hadn't Hinted At This Because Now I Have To Fight A Horrendous Skeleton Bodybuilder And Plan At The Same Time.
TT: Hypothetical plans?
GA: Oh Hush.
GA: Would You Be Opposed To Black If I Were To Wear A Black Dress With Stars?
GA: On Second Thought That Might Be Too Dark.
TT: Kanaya, you're saying this to a girl who spent a good chunk of her life communing with eldritch beings in the woegothic throes and playing her violin in dark rooms during thunderstorms to achieve the proper atmosphere.
GA: True, Very True.
GA: Rainbow Drinker Costumes?
TT: Only if I get a cape to surpass Dave's.
GA: Duly Noted.
TT: John is attempting to give me a play by play of exactly how the fight is going. Unfortunately, Karkat is also here, and their joint story-telling method leaves…something to be desired.
GA: To Be Fair We Just Seem To Be At An Impasse.
GA: I Don't Think We Can Win. But It Is Hard Even For Bloated Skeleton Men To Beat A Chainsaw.
TT: Just a little longer, and Aradia says they'll be done.
TT: ...I may go through the gate. Eridan...did a number on me.
GA: Go On. I'll Be There Soon.

---

Dave wakes up, and doesn't know what time it is.

…He's going to have to buy a watch. Or just, y'know, check his phone. But the raw, powerful levels of irony inherent in him owning a watch to tell the time cannot be dismissed. Shit's gonna be wild.

"Mrggl," he mumbles, to try to convey this to the nearest convenient target - Feferi, he thinks. But he can't open his eyes wider than a squint, since literally everything hurts like fuck, so it could just be a Feferi-shaped person.

He drifts off for a second, in a haze of not-pain, and when he comes back, he signs instead. 'Piece of shit crowbar,' he manages, before his sluggish hand flops back down against his chest like an anvil.

Feferi's too busy carting his ass toward a wall of white, her eyes focused back over her shoulder as she waves goodbye to someone. Part of Dave wants to protest - but that would involve effort. Effort that he doesn't have in him, as of right this second.

Besides, if they're blowing this popsicle stand, he's got his priorities. Raising his hands one last time, he holds them out to the side, so that anyone watching can see him around Feferi.

'Fuck you, you fucking fuck,' Dave signs in the Lord of Time's general direction, and then passes out one last time as they walk through the gate.

---

The Lord of Time still hasn't destroyed LoFaF.

(Just like he didn't kill Jade.)

Jade can't concentrate on that right now, though - Dave and Karkat left sixteen pages of snake eggs for her and Aradia to run through the appearifier, and these prove finicky. The bulk of the egghoard consists of bog-standard snake eggs: leathery, oblong, kinda beige with shades of color depending on what kind of snake's genetic code it's came from. But now a layer of jewel-bright, saturated eggs spill over the dull white clutch; on top of that layer, the eggs turn glossy and smooth like gumballs, with different patterns swirling across the shells - stars, diamonds, stripes, scallops, and one vibrant case of bright pink and yellow paisley that makes Jade giggle just looking at it. More and more often, though, as Aradia reads off the coordinates with a quiet, confident smile, swirls and spirals predominate on the egg shells; a couple turn out almost space-green, close enough that Jade's heart skips a beat - but the spiral will be off-center, and it just won't do!
The colors should have tipped her off. But Jade's just so focused on finishing. It's so close, she can almost taste it! Slowly, the oranges and yellows and blues blend out of the gene pool as she and Aradia narrow it down, and soon very other egg they appearify comes out either a vibrant green or a rusty red, with spiral patterns that run clockwise or counterclockwise depending on the egg scanned before it. "Almost got it," Aradia murmurs, telekinetically shifting entire heaps of eggs off the platform so that they have more room to target the last remaining eggs without the risk of appearifying one right next to them.

Like Jade would mess up coordinates, ever. [Clarity] hums through the air, piercing and sweet, and she never misses a key stroke. But this isn't the time to get sloppy! The eggs swell in size as Aradia calls off coordinates, and they run two of the biggest eggs that just spawned a couple minutes ago through the ectobiology terminal several times in rapid succession until the baseline egg is twice the size of an American football.

And all the while, the Lord of Time screams the world apart.

(But not LoFaF. Never LoFaF.)

The cracks in time widen and burst, spreading of their own accord between [Entropic Screams] and skittering over reality like possessed erasers, until Jade feels the critical moment where there are more vast, gaping cracks of non-existence than unbroken reality left in the Medium. When reality isn't enough, anymore. It's not exactly a space thing; it's everything suddenly canting to the left, trembling, on the edge of tipping in on itself. When Jade reaches out toward Skaia, at the very center, huge rents and fissures shred the whole Battlefield and spread deeper with each passing second. She locks her focus onto the final gate - the last solid, steady point in the whole world - and uses it to keep her feet under her.

And -

"Five!" Aradia calls, as the Forge churns - "Four!" - as Eridan goes supernova, burning up into hot white light and ash, and Jade can't sense anything left after the light swirls away in the tempest - "Two," and Jade missed the count of three -

"Last one!" Aradia calls, her voice cracking; Jade doesn't know exactly how long she's been counting down (maybe since twenty), but between that and shouting to be heard over the Forge and Typhues's wind, her rough voice sounds ragged. Time stumbles and slows for a piercing second as Jade types the coordinates - her fingers slip once, but she still hits the corner of the right key and an egg fills the screen, finally, after a pause that leaves Jade ready and willing to kick the terminal if that'll make it go -

The achievement [Egg-cellent Work!] pops up in the bottom corner of Jade's glasses as a green-and-red swirled egg pops into existence on the appearifying platform, sizzling with waves of heat.

EC: Quickly! It's not done yet! Into the Forge!

The denizen rises up out of the lava - and keeps going, up and up, until Echidna reaches the limit of what she can support of her own body weight, and slithers down around the outside of the Forge. Her twinned tails flick through the churning, molten rock one last time before she draws them out and wraps herself around the volcano, her huge chompers raking along the side of the platform as Echidna settles herself. Stirred up lava and melted grist boils right up to the very edge of the volcano, and LoFaF quakes with the amount of raw power welling up inside it. If they hadn't finished in the nick of time, Jade thinks it might have erupted and swamped the whole planet with molten rock. One of the main reasons why lava is not better than snow. Aradia staggered and drops to one knee by the appearifier, so Jade lifts the final egg up with her space powers - no way is she putting her mitts on that thing when it steams like it's already boiled! - and slam dunks it into the Forge.

Somehow, the egg almost spins off the edge to fly off into the distance. An internal force jerks it hard to the side, almost ripping it clean out of Jade's grip, like the egg itself is trying to fight free. "Not today!" Jade orders, with a snap of her fingers. A teeny tiny spark to course correct, and the egg rockets into the Forge like a candy-coated missile.

The Forge evaporates instantly on contact. All the energy and matter soaks into the egg so fast Jade can't detect it; a flash of light blinds her and she throws up an arm to cover her eyes. More and more molten power sucks up out of LoFaF like the planet's one huge milkshake and the Forge is the straw, and suddenly Jade powerfully aware of the hollowness left under her feet as the egg absorbs it all, and the beings inside grow stronger -

...Beings. Superimposed over each other - they haven't made just one egg.

Jade sucks in a breath with a ragged noise, and rips her arm away from her hands. She's not sure what her expression does, but by the time the two eggs wrench apart and hover above the gaping, scorched-black cavity of the emptied Forge, she feels like strangled, her head full of horrible, throbbing clarity.

The two eggs float forward under the impulse of Aradia's power, not Jade's. The troll leans heavily on the appearifying apparatus just like Dave did, toward the end, curling her claw to pull the green-swirl egg toward her. The egg with the red swirl pulses with angry light, giving off plumes of steam as it judders and twitches under its own power when Aradia's powers fail her. It hits the platform with a bone-jarring crunch, and keeps rolling. "Oh no," Jade says, which is kiiinda the understatement of the day, if not the year. Her lips feel so dry, and she wets them as the red egg wobbles past her. Instead of trying to pick the wayward egg up, she pulls her hands back - pulls her whole body back, actually, and stares at it with blank, perfect comprehension. It's too quiet, without the Forge's persistent rumbling and roaring; a dull, empty buzz fills Jade's ears instead.

The red-swirled egg wobbles to a halt only when it runs into a neat white shoe.

Doc Scratch bends down and plucks the egg off the ground.

DS: S u c k e r s.

Then he smiles. No - his whole head splits in two, the top half lopped off neat as you please, and drops open on an unseen hinge to reveal the ivory white, empty inside where brains should be. Doc Scratch lifts the red egg and sets it between his shoulders, inside the bottom half of the cue ball, and then swings his head shut with a casual snap. The afterimage of the smile parting his bulbous head hangs in Jade's vision for a split second - then the after-afterimage of a skull's head, sharp in tooth and with a permanent, victorious sneer -

And then Doc Scratch vanishes in a fizzle of green light. Gone, Jade thinks, back to wherever and whenever he first started out. Back to Earth - decades ago, centuries, maybe - to set everything in motion, so that the Lord of Time will always have been there.

...So this is where the story starts.

"Oh no," Jade says, and this time her voice cracks instead. Then - "He doesn't need to leave LoFaF alone anymore," and she bolts toward Aradia to grab her and teleport them - somewhere. Anywhere but here. The Lord of Time probably knew all along exactly when they were doomed to create him.

Echidna sighs through her teeth, and relaxes her squeezing grip on the hollow Forge; Jade wonders if she was the only one left here at the Forge who didn't realize. It's a pretty obvious inference to make, in hindsight, she thinks, aware that her brain is on the verge of breaking. Too much frantic science, followed by results too damning for her to deny.

All this time, she and Karkat and Dave and Aradia have been rushing to create Calliope and the Lord of Time…and only Aradia knew.

Of course she did.

Jade closes her eyes, her hand curling closed as she sucks in another breath - feels her chest hitch - then slams it down, and opens her eyes to meet Aradia's sad, crushing smile. "You see," Aradia says, conversationally, her hair tossed around her head in the blowback from another shattering screech. Too close; a [crack] rips a jagged hole across the sky, closer than any have come before. "When one talks about an alpha timeline, there are three different, though closely related, definitions.

"One," she says, as Jade looks down at the green-helix patterned egg in Aradia's arms, "is, 'the timeline which reality designates as canonical.'" For a moment, Aradia sounds her age - and then she smiles at Jade, her grin lopsided and fond and rueful all at once. "The second is, 'the timeline which leads to the conclusion.' And third - the one most relevant for our purposes - 'the timeline which gives birth to the Lord and the Muse.'"

And Jade can't even be mad at her for it. The indignation comes from somewhere way deeper: it makes her want to summon a - a giant green spacey hand, and use it to smack Skaia right in the planet-sized face! She wants Doc Scratch to come back here right this second so she can shake the egg out of his big empty head. But that would be dumb, and she doesn't have enough time, no matter how much frustration it would relieve. With an angry sob, she zeroes in on the dented part of the platform instead and buckles it further with a burst of force, clutching her head in her hands.

"Y'know, Aradia. I am just...SUPER done with inevitability!" she demands, even though the answer is right there, right in front of her nose, and she and Aradia both know it. Aradia's just known it longer.

Long enough that she keeps smiling crookedly at Jade, and bounces the green egg in her arms with a light-hearted laugh. "Heheh. That's fine! It'll all be over soon," she says, and pats the egg as she skips neatly off the platform. Another [CRACK] rings out, and Jade doubles over as a bolt of entropy shoots jaggedly through Doctor Lalonde's abandoned lab full of snakes, annihilating them all in one blast that cracks a third of the planet and sends it spinning away from the rest like a chunk of broken egg shell.

And the eggs next, Jade thinks, with a jolt of knowing. The appearifier wouldn't have worked if the original snakes and eggs didn't have somewhere to be. Jade just planned to teleport all of them ten feet sideways really quick after they finished the genetic sequencing, but the Lord of Time doesn't care.

They need to go. They need to be gone, like, right now. "Aradia, are you -?" Jade starts to say, as the planet begins to rumble. All the molten rock got sucked out of LoFaF, and now she can sense it caving in on itself - one big chunk of rock was already loose when they entered the Medium, and with another third flying away into space (on a collision course with what's left of LoWaS, as a matter of fact!) there's not enough structural integrity left to hold the land together. One more [crack] and they're hooped.

Unaffected by the gash splitting time apart only a few miles away (or else really good at hiding it), Aradia waves back at Jade one last time, the egg cupped in the cradle of her other arm. "I'll take it to Skaia. Get everyone else through the gate!" she says, cheerfully, as her quartz music boxes levitate around her.

(It's the last time Jade ever sees her.)

"I - Right!" Jade's chest tightens like a vice. Behind her, the sinuous mass of Echidna shifts to make room as Hephaestus catapults himself up the side of the Forge; Jade wonders if the denizens count as 'everyone else,' too, and errs on the side of 'yeah, probably.' "See you there!"

One final [CRACK] carves through the air between them and Aradia. For a second it looks like it splits Aradia horizontally at the waist; then Aradia flies up in a spiral, the egg tucked carefully under her arm as she summons a rust red, transparent clock face in the air over them. "I'll see you on the other side!" she corrects, and then - "Don't wait!" - the clock flares bright red, crackling with bolts of stray energy. It sets off some weird chain reaction in the cracks crisscrossing the sky - annihilation-red light burns along the edges of broken reality, and Aradia disappears just in the nick of time.

Something deeper and more fundamental than LoFaF shudders under Jade, as the literal existential crisis all around them starts to cramp her stomach. "Time to go!" she says, hastily whipping around to face Echidna and Hephaestus. Echidna watches her, motes of red, reflected light playing across the facets of her quills and the sharp discs of her eyes, full of monstrous, motherly pride as she inclines her head respectfully to Jade.

EC: Yes. Time to go.

HS: At last.

They could probably transport themselves to the gate - Hephaestus hopped all the way to LoFaF from LoHaC, after all! - but that happened before the cracks splintered reality this badly, and Jade doesn't think any of them would stand a chance crossing the Medium the long way. The thin, fractured slivers of reality left between the Lord of Time's mess radiate that angry, dying red light, slowly dyeing everything like a bloody sunset. Jade brushes a hand over the appearifier one last time, only for her hand to come away covered in flakes of rust.

The gate to the next world calls her Space powers like a magnetic beacon; Jade sweeps the denizens up in a dancing wave, and brings them along with her as she goes to find who's left.

---

Kanaya and Typhheus and Equius fall back a little, doggedly fighting for every inch of reality left between Skaia and the final gate - but then something goes spang, firing off a dizzying cascade of sensory nonsense in John's ears as the sudden pressure shift makes his ears pop before the Breeze can adjust, and Jade leaves a single word in the chat that explains everything.

GG: done!

And after that, the Lord of Time stops pretending to be distracted by any of them. He bats Equius aside with a casual backhand, so hard that Kanaya pelts after him to tackle the troll away from a crack. Then the Lord turns on LoFaF and fires off three [Entropic Screams] one right after the other, in such a jagged crash of broken time that John hears each scream in three-part harmony. The Lord of Time finishes screaming fresh tears into reality and snaps his jaw shut with a crunch that grates on John's eardrums. He hangs there for a moment, his coat in tatters, teeth missing from his skeletal grimace from Equius's punches, and his body covered in pockmarks from the Black Queen and Nepeta, and deep, scabbed over creases where Kanaya's super-powered chainsaw dug deep into his bulging skeleton-muscles -

Then the cherub Lord flexes, and snaps his fingers.

All the injuries vanish. His overcoat resets in a blink of an eye, and time slurs in an uncomfortable smear as the Lord of Time cracks his neck to the side. He looks just like he did when he first arrived in the Medium - cartoonishly over-muscled, covered in flickering, ugly rainbows, and untouchable. With a flourish, the Lord of Time raises his cuestaff over his head, transforms it into a pale white conductor's baton, and starts to grind reality down into nothing. He turns his broad back on Tyheus and faces the crack-riddled, faded space where LoHaC used to be instead; then the baton comes down, and the shattered fragments of reality dissolve. The particles glint and hang around in a susurrating, iridescent cloud - and then even that sucks away into the deep, stark emptiness, and nothing remains.

It's not like Equius's Voidy thing, where John could toss around words like 'heavy' or 'hidden' or 'muted' and have people nod and understand the weird, Void sensation he's talking about. It's just... nothing.

Nothing at all.

[Desolation]

John's kinda past the point of terror, right now. His bones feel slack and loose, floating freely in his body, like he could drift apart in a stiff breeze. Some indescribable emotion sits high in his throat: something beyond sadness, something that tastes like nostalgia but isn't. Like all the tension built up over the course of his life just took a powerdrill to the chest and gushes out in a draining, bittersweet flood. Watching everything break down like this, with nothing left but a distant background riiiiing in his ears where music used to be - it doesn't feel real, in more than one sense. All John can do is witness it, his eyes glassy and struggling to focus on any one thing, while he stubbornly keeps track of the mental rollcall in his head: Eridan dead, Jade and Kanaya and Equius and Nepeta still in the thick of it, Dave and Rose through, Tavros and Terezi and Vriska and Feferi through, Aradia and Sollux still unaccounted for out there (probably until the very end), Karkat holding John's hand like a lifeline, one claw thrust into the gate as they wait for -

Well, everyone. But -

"Gotta go!" Jade shouts. She careens past the Lord of Time in a streak of green, like a meteor that has gotten super turned around on its way to mess up the Earth's day, and hurtles into Tyheus's side with such force that part of the denizen's long body jerks to the side and makes a noise like a punctured squeaky toy the size of a skyscraper. John slaps a hand over his mouth and nose to suppress a snicker, because he can't focus on being the backup emergency teleport guy if he's too busy laughing his head off at Tyheus wiggling like a Slinky. Then the denizen dissolves into a shower of neon green as he gets the Jade treatment, and Jade pulls down her eyelid and sticks out her tongue at the Lord of Time as she bounces away. "No more stalling for time! We're outta here!" she calls.

Kanaya, bearing Equius over her head like she's gonna launch him like a cannonball, redirects her headlong charge at the Lord of Time and puts on her own burst of speed, the star-studded fabric of her god tier outfit swirling as she hauls Equius toward John and Karkat. A [crack] streaks along in Jade's wake, shooting toward the gate-end of the Medium at an alarming rate - and then tapers off, only part of the way here.
Apparently, the Lord of Time just...loses interest. A rumble that causes time to flinch and stops John's breath rolls out from the Lord's clamped jaws; but then nothing. In the distance, LoFaF crumbles into smaller and smaller pieces, and its wild green growth accelerates into brown, faded decay.

"All done?" John asks, as Jade skips across the last few miles separating them. Another horrible, breaking noise roils through the Medium and Jade trips, tumbling wildly heels over head before she hits the Gate and sticks the landing.

"Done like dinner," Jade agrees, and three humongo denizens burst into solidity in a massive clusterfuck as Jade snaps them all into place. Karkat shrieks directly into John's ear at the top of his lungs, which is a totally fair reaction to have when three giant boss monsters just popped into existence right over your head. Typhheus unwinds himself from the tangle of snake bodies and Hephaestus's limbs first, bristling as he snorts a deliberate, affronted gust of wind on Jade that messes up her hair and almost flattens her against the platform. Then, before Jade can retaliate, John's asshole denizen whirls away into the bright light of the gate, tossing the faint curtains aside with one last blast of wind. Hephaestus rights himself and clammers over the three players with a quieter grumble, his hammers sending thuds through the floor that reverberate through John and set his teeth aching - it probably doesn't do any favors for Karkat's horns, either.

Echidna ducks her giant head and shakes herself out with a ripple that runs the length of her iridescent body, as she stoops and lowers her eyes to stare level with Jade. Her jutting angler teeth creep John out on a primal level - but her eyes smile at Jade with recognizable, un-denizen-y softness.

EC: You have kept your old promise.

EC: Farewell.

Then the last denizen slithers up on the far end of the platform, her vast, twined coils passing over them, and vanishes into the gate.

In the end, nothing stops them. John wonders if the denizens could have just left all along - or if maybe the only thing keeping them here was some old sense of obligation, and nothing more. He's not sure what he expected from Terezi and Dave's silly insistence that the denizens needed to fight for right to retire; Skaia's not exactly breaking any worldwide speed records trying to keep them from absconding. The Lord of Time, preoccupied with dissolving and swallowing everything in shattering waves of entropy, barely seems to notice that they're pulling a fast one on him. "Jeez, that guy is just - he really doesn't care anymore, does he?" John comments, scratching the back of his head, as the Lord of Time momentarily switches back to a machine gun and fires it once with a BANG to burst the faint, faraway scraps of the Furthest Ring into dust, and then into nothing at all.

"We already did what he wanted," Jade says, her voice too quiet. When John looks at her, worried, Jade just smiles at him weirdly, her lower lip scrunched up like she's barely repressing some serious wobbling. "Tell you later," she adds, sadly, which earns a suspicious squint from Karkat - but then one of Typhheus's straggling winds tears between the three of them, rumbling clothes and tossing Jade's hair absolutely everywhere, and Jade clears her throat and falls into a ready, alert bounce on her heels. There's no sign of whatever bothered her on her face as she waves Kanaya and Equius and Nepeta in for their landing, and John can see Karkat's mouth on the verge of popping open; the troll looks like he's swishing the words around behind his teeth, but his mouth stays shut despite the overwhelming amount of shout pressure that must be building up behind it.

"He doesn't appear overly concerned with holding us here. We should go, before he changes his mind," Kanaya says, echoing John's thoughts almost exactly. After all that fighting and going toe to toe toe with the Lord of Time, Kanaya looks as pristine and sharply-dressed as she did the second she stepped through the gate. The sight of Equius's arm sends a visceral flinch through John, though. Kanaya supports more of Equius's weight than either troll lets on from their expressions, but the arm Equius has used to wield the Queen's Knucklerings looks like the sheer power boiled through it from the inside out: the grey skin's charred black, shiny and threaded with cracks where blue blood oozes through. Parts where the shell-like wreckage of Equius's flesh have broken and fallen away, so that John can see clear through the hollowed-out limb.

It could have happened to John, if he'd used the Hammering for too long. More of Equius's arm falls away in tiny chips and pieces as he watches, clattering against the platform with tiny clinks. The ring itself sits in a bed of scorched flesh around a hollowed out claw, powered down and glistening a soft, innocuous gold in the light of the gate. In a weird way, he and Nepeta match now, though Nepeta's missing the opposite hand, the end of her wrist a clean stump. Her face is covered in tiny cuts and scorch marks, and she sticks close to Equius's other side with a grim frown, her split lip tightly pursed.

"That's pretty much the smartest idea I've heard all day," John says, since it is, and a tiny smile quirks Kanaya's mouth up before she readjusts her grip on Equius and starts into the gate. The two trolls pass through it with a one last reverse cosmic burp as Kanaya vanishes, and then Nepeta lopes through hard on their heels, and that's it. Denizens gone, Kanaya and Equius and Nepeta through, and it's just him, Jade, and Karkat left on the threshold of the next world.

A sudden, squirming loneliness curls through his chest. Everyone's…gone. The Medium's shattered and dying; Earth, out of sight, is empty, and its last, indestructible demon is here to pick apart reality's corpse.

…He has got to tell that one with Rose. She's gonna love it, he can already tell.

"Fuck - I don't think Aradia's coming!" Karkat yells, as another fractured chunk of reality smashes into smithereens. John tightens his death grip on Karkat's hand, trying to squeeze reassurance to him, but they're both running on the last dregs of their adrenaline + desperation combob and the second they get through this gate, John suspects they're all gonna collapse. Like, literally everyone. He doesn't know how long it takes to get from one reality to the next, but Calliope had better have a ton of pillows ready when they get there. "Something she said on Pesterchum -"

A shockwave rolls over them with physical force, and John thinks he hears a low, sharp sound in the back of his head as something fundamental snaps like a violin string. Karkat stumbles back and John rocks on his heels, but Jade buffs them with a tingly green wave of power so that they don't fly butt-first backwards through the gate as the world. "Yeah, she said to go through without her," Jade says; her voice cracks weirdly, and John - yeah. He knows, even though Jade doesn't say it. "She's taking the egg to Skaia."

John shuffles forward against the heavy press of Jade's steadying spell. His arm and Karkat's stretch out between them as he puts a hand on Jade's shoulder. Her wildly tossing hair kinda lashes him across the face a little; Jade huddles in on herself for a second, her face horribly sad for a second, before she very obviously scoops up one last spoonful of fortitude to straighten her shoulders and smile in Skaia's direction. John sucks in a deep breath, and then sighs. "Then there's just -"

"Gamzee," Karkat finishes, his voice tight as he clamps down on John's hand, his claws digging sharply into John's skin. He's shaking, a little, and John can't blame him.

"I'll stay with you guys, but -" Jade starts to say.

John's only paying attention to the Lord of Time through the corner of his eye - time's going in fits and broken starts, and more of the Medium is a bleak, empty, textureless space every time John's eyes drift to check on his progress; it kinda makes him queasy if he tries to focus on it, though.

But he catches the grand flourish as the Lord of Time raises his cuestaff as a conductor's baton, and brings it down, and another one of reality's unseen instruments smashes like a bass guitar hitting the floor. Jade doubles over with a pained gasp, clutching her head as green lightning frizzles along her hands and ears, and John hastily yanks her back from the edge of the platform. "Crap! I don't know how much time we've got left!" Jade finishes, distressed, as the out of tune fraymotif (the last one) playing in all their heads staggers along with two - no, three of its instruments silenced in [Desolation]'s wake.

Karkat starts swearing, while John feels a faint sweat breaking out on his own forehead. He's not doing anything, but the fact that only a piano is left playing, somewhere in the distance, makes him feel like he's under a spotlight. No pressure, or anything...it'll probably break when he least expects it. "Where is that fucker?! Fuck, of all the times for him to fuck off without telling us," Karkat yells, ripping his claw free from the gate as he gives up the pretense that they're about to hop right through.

They're not. But Jade is. "Jade, you go on," John says, quietly.

Jade whirls on him so fast John backpedals into Karkat. Her eyes burn electric green, but it's not enough to hide the tears bubbling up in the corner of her eyes. "No way! I'm not leaving you guys in this mess!" she yells, louder than Karkat. The sweep of her hand encompasses Skaia, too, and John suddenly knows it's not just about them staying behind to wait.

It's about the fact that Aradia's not planning to come through at all, and even now, Jade wants to save everyone. Because they're the heroes - it's them. They might have screwed up a little (or a lot) along the way, but no one's supposed to get left behind.

John drags Jade into a hug. "We'll be right through. Promise," he says, trying for breezy confidence, and coming through instead with something solemn that clogs his throat up all over again.

A faint snuffle, and a tremor that runs all through Jade - and then Jade steps back, wiping her nose off furiously on her sleeve. "You'd better be," she says, and shoots them an extra stern glare, her fists planted on her hips -

And then she turns and steps through the gate.

Having dropped John's hand to let the hug happen, Karkat goes to the edge of the platform, his claws digging into his own elbows as he folds his arms over his chest. He's got a Knight cape now, no matter how hard he's clearly tried to magic it into something more reasonable and less Dave-y, but John can't seem to make any silly teasing come out of his mouth, right now. Probably because, y'know, of the circumstances. The whole world ending thing. He'll save them for later. "There's no way he tripped and landed his clown ass in that mess," Karkat mutters, and hugs himself harder as he stares out at the half-cracked, half-erased mess of reality, his arms belted across the Blood symbol of his uniform.

"Definitely. No way at all," John agrees. He hasn't seen or sensed Gamzee clearly since…since LoWaS, he realizes, and a little bit after, when they went to help Rose. But John thiiinks they would have all noticed if Gamzee wound up in enough trouble that he fell into one of the cracks in time - Gamzee's powerset is ten different kinds of not-subtle, when you know what to look for.

But another maybe-minute ticks by - the clock on both of their phones is utterly broken, and has been for ages, now - and still Gamzee doesn't show. The Lord of Time works his way around, destroying the area where LoHaC and LoLaR used to be thoroughly before shifting to work on the shattered quarter with LoWaS. Not LoFaF, still, not yet; it's shattered, but not gone.

"John, I'm starting to feel the slightest sense of agitation, here!" Karkat says, his claws tightening on the knobs of his elbows to the point where he tears through the fabric and starts to draw blood. A shudder runs through John, and he floats off the platform an inch, just enough that the Breeze tenses around him. If they have to go search for Gamzee one last time through the fragmented, broken shards of reality - he'll do it. The Breeze will help. "Come on, Gamzee…"

Or…the Breeze could help. John snaps his fingers - not, for once, for dramatic super power effect - but because an idea pops into his head, and he likes the classics. "I have an idea," he says, turning to Karkat. Karkat jerks his head up from where he's glaring at his arms, the faint, reddish-pink glimmer of tears blinked away with furious effort. "But it's pretty risky," John adds, as the Breeze gathers all of itself up. It lassoes the last of Typheus's lingering gusts in for the ride, and the wilder winds obey without question.

"Oh god, what now?!" Karkat says, but he doesn't make any move to stop John as John picks him up under the arms and scoots him to the side, so that Karkat's not standing in his way.

John cups his hands around his mouth, and yells at the top of his lungs. The Breeze blasts it out, ratcheting up the volume and carrying his voice in every direction it still can.

"HONK!"

Then he pauses, and tilts his head to the side, listening for a response. It's strangely quiet; the Lord of Time pauses for a split second, and slowly, terrifyingly turns his skeletal head to stare gateward. Then, with a scoff audible from half the Medium away, the Lord of Time goes back to his work.

Which is fair. Random people honking in the middle of a catastrophe would probably weird John out, too. In hindsight, he's probably spent too much time hanging around a juggalo in his life. He's only known Gamzee for like, a month.

Karkat says, in a dangerously quiet voice, "John. You have got to be -"

Gamzee appears with a lurch, his hair a wild, tousled black tangle around his face and horns as he stares at John like John's out of his mind. "Honk?" he says, in some kind of instinctive clown reflex. Or maybe that's just disbelief.

"- a fucking genius!" Karkat crows, clapping a hand on John's shoulder as he rushes forward and seizes both of them by the front of their shirts. He keeps chattering, occasionally letting go of one of them to jab an accusing claw at Gamzee for punctuation. "And you! Where the bulge-blistering honk-happy fuck have you been?! Let's blow this shitty excuse for a popsicle stand, we haven't exactly got all fucking day -"

With a muffled noise, Gamzee digs his heels in. Karkat keeps walking for a second - John float along, letting Karkat haul him toward the gate in a haze of blissful relief, before both of them get pulled up short.

John's stomach sinks before he even turns to look at Gamzee. "Might be best for a motherfucker to get his chill on in the hornheap paradise of the next life, yeah," he says, for all intents and purposes agreeable - but then Gamzee reaches up and does his chaotic trick, so that his hoodie (and torso) clips three feet to the left and out of Karkat's grasping claws, before reappearing in sync with the long, lean line of his body. He takes another step back, and John gets a clear view of his face as the troll lowers his eyes and doesn't look at either of them.
Like John called him away from something...important.

"Hold up," John says, and unease makes a home in the pit of his stomach.

"This is a pretty big motherfucking deal, my man." No matter how far John or Karkat stretch out their hands, Gamzee remains stubbornly just out of reach. Pain and guilt flicker across Gamzee's face again and again; he can't seem to hold his smile in place long enough to fool either of them. "Just gonna go crack a cold one open with Rad-sis, real quick -"

"Holy shit, Aradia can take care of herself and get out on her own!" Karkat says, his voice more raw, ragged crack than shout. Still talking as though Aradia wants to get out, when John thinks all three of them realize what's going on here.

John has to say it. Someone has to, and Gamzee's two seconds away from vanishing in a dizzying rush. "You don't plan on coming," John says. He doesn't recognize the sound of his own voice.

"Of course he's coming!" Karkat snaps, with a flare of genuine temper that makes John jolt under his sudden glare. But the anger isn't aimed John, not really - and the color drains out of Karkat a second later. Stricken, he takes a step away from both of them. He raises and lowers his claws, at a sudden loss. "Gamzee?"

"A brother wants to see what was the point of what we were all up and doing," Gamzee says, thrusting his hands into the pockets of his hoodie. He sounds steady and even, unlike either of them, and when he finally meets John's eye and then Karkat's, his eyes are very clear. Unwavering.

Karkat goes in with his claws shooshing the air long before they reach Gamzee's face as he starts to babble and trip over his own tongue: "Fuck. No. This is me, using my supreme secret leader powers to veto that shit. None of you voted for me, I just still have them by virtue of being the original leader guy. No, no, absolutely not -"

"No. C'mon, man, this is a no-brainer - you come and see it on the other side. With us." Even as he says it, John can tell it's not enough. That maybe it was never going to be enough. He thinks back to however long ago, when only Aradia and Gamzee had half a clue what was going on, long before the rest of them remembered anything - and feels so cold. His hands hang numb and useless at his sides; surely there's something else he can do to change Gamzee's mind.

"Yeah, there's a motherfuck of a good universe next door," Gamzee says. He twitches forward, and then his arms wrap around Karkat in a tight, desperate hug. Karkat pats his face with a ragged sob of relief, his claws papping everywhere he can reach.

Gamzee presses his face into Karkat's hair for a second - and then meets John's eyes, like they're sharing a sad, melancholy in-joke. "Go and get gone, brother. Take care of your bad self, you hear me?" he says, and presses a kiss between Karkat's horns, and then his mouth.

And then shoves him unceremoniously through the gate. "No!" Karkat shrieks, and then he's gone, raw betrayal in his red eyes before the gate swallows him up.

John doesn't have any illusions who could push who through the gate first, here. Heck, he could probably make Gamzee work for it, but...

But Gamzee's face after Karkat disappears is a twist of grief and quickly smoothed-over regret, and it cuts deep in John's gut. And - it's not fair - "Please," he says, as Gamzee refocuses on him with stark, deep purple eyes. He thinks they're wearing the same exhausted, broken expression and - we never had enough time - "Please don't do this. Don't leave like this."
An awful, harsh thought occurs to him: Gamzee has cared about Karkat way longer than he's cared about John, in the grand scheme of things. And if Karkat appealing to him wasn't enough, John's not gonna make a lick of difference. John's surprised Gamzee hung around long enough for John to say anything at all.

Gamzee waits, though, despite the fact that they both know nothing can change his mind. He stands there, watches John as more of the world crumbles behind his back, and waits. Only a thin strip of reality remains between Skaia and the gate - the Lord of Time churns on and on, the only living thing that can navigate the nothing left in his own wake.

(Somewhere, a piano drops and smashes against the ground like an old cartoon, and the music cuts off.)

(This hurts worse.)

"...Nothing I can say, huh. Or maybe I'm just too dumb to think of a good enough argument," John admits, with a short, stilted laugh. He ducks his head and smiles sadly at his shoes; the smile hurts his cheeks, which is easier to focus on than the fact that he's crying. Again. For what feels like the millionth time today.

Gamzee's hands are, as always, icy cold as he presses them on either side of John's face. "A brother's gotta learn how to be less harsh on himself," he says, without even a ghost of a chuckle in his voice. He sounds just as wistful as he did saying goodbye to Karkat, and John sobs as he reaches up and feels the gaunt, strained planes of Gamzee's facial features to try to remember - to feel if there's any difference between now and when they first met. "Nah, brother. Been planning this one for...a long ass time," Gamzee says, and that makes it better and worse at the same time.

John's throat winds up in a tight coil of pain. He blinks through the tears, and sees one last spider-web of [cracks] shoot up and down the length of the corridor between them and Skaia.

"See you on the other side," John forces out, and then Gamzee kisses him twice while the world beyond them starts to flicker and fade out. Cracks ring around Skaia entirely like a broken, bristly thorn bush, but past the faded, ebbing shards of reality, Skaia shines a bright, brilliant blue.

Gamzee pushes John back and disappears in a blur. The Rage symbol on his chest hangs in the air a second longer than the rest of his disjointed parts - and then the gate sucks John in with a familiar Breeze wrapped close around him, and there's nothing left to see at all.

---

Time ceases to be a factor.

It's oddly refreshing! While the Lord of Time carves up the last of reality around Skaia, Aradia sneaks in through the tunnel that Vriska so kindly opened, and Typhesus widened, and descends with ease. As far as she's concerned, the Lord of Time could spend a thousand years screaming reality apart, and it would make no difference. Her perception of time has died an early death, and quite frankly, Aradia won't miss it.

Sollux waits for her on a splinter of broken earth at the top of the fissure, everyone's fate spinning in Doom-green runes before his exhausted, shadowed eyes. Most of them, Aradia's sure, are open ended. Question marks, followed by a strange, undefined realm of possibility, like a white blank page. The orderly ink lines have run dry, and all that's left is what they make of it.

If Sollux hadn't altered things so, they wouldn't have even had that much. Death is such a neat, Orderly way to tie up loose ends, if you're a being as wide and all-encompassing as reality itself - and so emotionally messy, if your priorities are more personal in nature. A matter of perspective, really.

Bees cover him like a living carpet and lap at the cooled Prospit-honey still clinging to his god tier clothes. "Sollux," Aradia says gently, "you don't want to stay here." When what she means is: you don't want to die, Sollux.

To be fair, neither does she! What she wants is something far more complex. Death is just an interesting side effect, from her perspective.

"Well, no shit, AA," Sollux replies with a snort, flicking away a bee that bumbles too close to his right eye. For a while now, Sollux has known exactly where Aradia stands. She's known where he stands for considerably longer, but only because she's always had a tiny bit of a headstart on him. "Like I'm about to let you ditch without saying goodbye. What kind of asshole do you take me for, Karkat?" Then Sollux grimaces like he's bitten into a piece of sour candy. "Or we could skip the melodramatic bullshit, and just go."

Aradia chuckles, and delicately relocates a few swathes of bees so that she can reach Sollux without disturbing his last swarm. Sollux takes off his glasses, and she sees that he's still waging an internal war between resignation and despair. Once he shrugs a round of bees off with an impatient flicker of psionics, Aradia levitates the egg to the side for a moment and leans in to catch him in a tight, clinging hug. The scent of scorched cloth and overheated mindhoney and exhaustion rolls over her, and she adds it to all her other long-memorized impressions of Sollux. One last memory for the road. "I'll miss you, too," she says, and bunts her horns against his.

"Hope it's everything you've hyped it up to be," he says, staring at her face and memorizing it in turn. Between resignation and despair, something more tender than acceptance has won, and Aradia knows he's going to be okay. He'll make it through, before the Lord of Time finishes cutting Skaia off from the gate. That wasn't something she was sure of!

And it might not be a permanent thing: Sollux's moods can swing so low, and he has a talent for blaming himself that John might envy. But Aradia thinks he'll be just fine. It'll be hard, for a Doom player, transitioning to a world where fate might only be an interesting suggestion rather than a pushy, brittle-edged fact of life.

He won't be alone, though.

When she arrives, the symmetrees dim and fall silent. The green-swirl egg in Aradia's arms radiates light that prickles and burns the skin of her arms, but such concerns (heh) are relative compared to what Aradia has come to do.

What she's determined to witness.

It doesn't surprise her to find Gamzee inside Skaia's chamber. They both always meant to find themselves here. Perched on a fallen section of dark branch, Gamzee looks distinctly uncomfortable in his plain old body, and itches his arm with feverish intensity as though that will let him escape Skaia's direct observation and return to his semi-chaotic state. Skaia herself lays disentangled in the very center, all of her symmetrical hiveminds drawn close, and watches Aradia with turning, blooming eyes that spiral down into bottomless wells. Or, rather - she watches all of them, everything in the chamber, with perfect perception.

The Muse of Order looks tired. Aradia can sympathize. "It's time!" she says - one last pun for the road - and holds the final egg up with a smile.

Calliope's egg floats up of its own accord, brushing lightly against Aradia's palms before moving weightlessly toward Skaia. A vast CRUNCH shudders around them, as the Lord of Time roars in impotent fury and tries to crack Skaia's outer shell. He could probably do it, too.

But - heheheh - time is not on his side.

Aradia's pusher throbs and begins to thump and thud with wild skips between beats, and she drifts over to Gamzee with a wheezing breath to sit down and wait for the end. Gamzee feels so quiet and small here - just a regular sized troll in a regular sized body. When he glances at her, his eyes are just eyes. No banked, wild fires, no chaos lingering in his outline. "Rad-sis," he says, with half an exhausted smile.

Aradia alights on the branch beside him, and clunks her horn against one of his in brief greeting before settling down to watch. Skaia opens a perfectly circular mouth, and the egg, shining like a star, floats into the crucible just as the light turns unbearably bright. It shines through Skaia's skin, brighter and then brighter still, until Aradia shades her eyes with a claw. The world shatters and crunches and crumbles outside in the throes of the Lord of Time's final tantrum, but Aradia doesn't feel it when her heart bursts. Gamzee has to prop her upright, one arm slung around her shoulders, but time is too broken for her to die before the world ends.

With a sound like a soft sigh, Skaia implodes into a point of infinite heat and light and density, and reality implodes along with her, feeding into the fledging Muse at the center of it all. Hot white light envelops Aradia and Gamzee, and then on and out, to swallow all the shattered pieces of the world.

So this is what it's like, Aradia thinks dreamily, as she hears the Lord of Time cut off mid-scream, and everything begins to dissolve into the fundamental particles of creation. She closes her eyes - she thinks - and sees a warm, red sunset melt across the inside of her eyelids.

This is what happens when it all breaks apart -

Chapter End Notes

There will be one more chapter.
Chapter Summary

Who are these shining like one sundered star?

O sweetest kin to me in all the world,
O twin-born blood of Leda, gracious heads
Like kindled lights in untempestuous heaven,
Fair flower-like stars on the iron foam of fight,
With what glad heart and kindliness of soul,
Even to the staining of both eyes with tears
And kindling of warm eyelids with desire,
A great way off I greet you, and rejoice
Seeing you so fair, and moulded like as gods.

Chapter Notes

Some tunes.

You're not beating me this time, Hussie. /shakes fist at Hiveswap in the distance/

Edit 10/8 New art at the end, thanks to the wonderful Meruz Go check them out!

See the end of the chapter for more notes

Depending on how fast they went through the gate, they pop out in different ways. Vriska, Terezi, and Tavros, who had the hilarious misfortune to get punted through at high speeds by Typhus, apparently came flying out miles away from shore and skipped over the water like stones until they stopped flopping around and remembered how to float themselves the rest of the way to shore - John gets to hear all about that one when Vriska regales everyone with the story at top volume around the 'We're Not Dead, Time To Commit Celebratory Arson!' bonfire on the beach. The denizens themselves take off the second they come through - Typhus scoops them all up in a tempest and flies up into the sky without a word to anyone else. The Black Queen and PM, dropping out of the air with no wings left between them, fall out of the gate fifty yards down the beach and into a deep inlet of water, so they don't splat like pancakes by landing in the shallows. Dripping and half-strangled due to reasons unknown (but which are really obvious, considering) PM trudges down the beach a half hour late and tackles AR and WV in a scuffling, arm-flailing reunion.

(No one seems to know where the Black Queen went. The White Queen sleeps on a shallow, grassy incline near the edge of the treeline, her carapace riddled with faint grey seams, and no one remembers how she got there, either.)
The ones who walked through like normal people step out into knee-deep water. Karkat's still kneeling where he landed when John stumbles through a minute later, the sobs ripping out of his chest in broken, choked, wordless screams, with a dark red bloom around him that's either dried blood washing off his clothes, or water spontaneously turning into blood.

The small, shining white door vanishes half a second after John steps through. He drops down and wraps his arms around Karkat, instead, and rocks him as the cold water seeps into his shoes. Something hot and gnarled forms a lump in his chest, too high up for the water to cool it - John blinks furiously to keep the tears away, and watches with blurred vision as Kanaya walks out on top of the water, to come help them to shore.

- It's Jade's island, but not. The volcano that dominates the northern half blew its top a long, long time before they arrived - it's half the size Jade says it used to be, and greenery covers the wide caldera almost as thickly as it does the rest of the island, like it hasn't erupted since. Several small, white-domed observatories poke out here and there along the edge of the volcano - with the familiar, blocky shape of Lalonde Labs stuck crookedly next to a thin waterfall like an afterthought - while the shallow white dish of a radio telescope is just visible in a ragged dip in the caldera's edge. Glass-clear fish dart through the water under their feet as Kanaya and John, between them, coax Karkat to dry land; when they get closer, John sees that some of the flowers dotted along the beach twirl in the breeze, like tiny spirographs blooming and cycling over and over again in a rainbow of colors. When he leans all the way back and scans the sky, he can just barely make out a dark red ark ship, so far off in the distance that it looks tiny compared to the lush green moon that hangs in the early morning sky.

So, yeah. Things are weird. When are they ever not?

Feferi doesn't look up as the three of them finally hit the beach and Karkat sinks back down onto his knees on the wet sand. She sits with her knees curled up to her chest, her mouth hidden behind her folded arms as she stares out over the water with a flat expression in her eyes. Her frilled ears stay clamped down against the sides of her head. Occasionally a wild strand of her hair bobs in the breeze. But apart from that she doesn't move an inch as she waits. She looks like she just finished crying.

Kanaya leads them around Feferi in a circle to give her space - which is harder than it sounds, when Karkat's determined to bury himself in a pile of sand like a crab - and over to a grove of trees with thick, branching leaves and rough-looking yellow-green fruit. It's not actually that hot out, even in direct sun, with the Breeze winding around the beach and exploring everywhere; John still sags with relief the second they're in the shade and he sees Rose sitting cross-legged next to Dave. "Jade spied Oriole over the forest," Rose says, in an undertone. "She thinks the scratch kids are roaming around there, as well."

"That's good," John says, but his mouth moves on autopilot. He knows he sounds weird, even though he's not snuffling and gasping for air like Karkat. Rose reassesses their group with a flicker of confusion; then her mouth parts, and John looks away from the shock as she realizes who's missing, and why.

Because of all people, who would've thought Gamzee wouldn't make it?

Jade returns from her short jaunt through the jungle flushed and grinning, with her hair full of leaves and Jane and Roxy in tow. Nepeta prowls away to hunt down Dirk and Jake the traditional way, but the general consensus is that all of the scratch kids are okay. Roxy sprawls out next to Dave, occasionally poking his cheek to make him pull a weird face in his sleep until she grows bored and joins Terezi and Vriska down the beach, while Jane leans against a tree where she can keep an eye on the edge of the jungle. Oriole circles around on orange, sail-like wings over the observatories in the distance, wheeling closer to the replica of Lalonde Labs with each pass. He gives them a barely-visible thumbs up when pinged.

Sollux arrives last, right when they're about to give up on anyone else making it through. For John, it's been half an hour since he and Karkat got here. Surrounded by very confused bees, Sollux just flies out of the gate, shrugs, and says he left only a few minutes after everyone else went quiet. Time was kinda busted, though. He takes one look around the beach and plops down with Jade next to Feferi to watch, and wait. His bees fill the air with a low hum as they bumble their way to the slowly spiraling flowers and investigate in the lazy heat of the day.

The gate doesn't open again. Feferi stands up, brushes the sand off the back of her clothes, and walks into the water until it closes over her horns. Thankfully, universal Wi-Fi is still in effect: she messages Jade that she just need to 'clear her head,' and vanishes into the sea.

For the most part, the only people on the island are people that they know - including some that Jade teleported onto an ark ship to evacuate, and who now have no idea how they walked out of the gate on their own two feet apart from 'weird Space reasons.'

Which, in practice? Means that instead of finding someone cool and famous that John recognizes (like, say, Nicolas Cage), they find people like Diamonds Droog and Hearts Boxcars on one of the islets that form a circle around the bay. By the time Jake and Nepeta stumble across them on their quest to scout the islands (before Jade can tell them she knows every inch of the place backwards and forwards), Boxcars has stripped off his shirt and ripped the ragged legs of his pants off so that they're shorts, and laid out on a rock to fry himself beat red in the sun. Droog sits under a tree, watching the tiny, scattered clouds drift by on the wind overhead, apparently without expression. Neither Jake nor Nepeta recognize the third person on the islet - it's just some random troll with a brand new laptop, who has discovered the wonders of an omnipresent internet connection and is going to town. "Beats the desert, any day," the troll apparently tells them, without looking up from her screen. "Please send water, we've been sitting out in the sun for fucking ever."

"But how did you even get here?" Jake asks, nonplussed, as he hands over his water canteen and Nepeta lines herself up to tacklepounce Boxcars.

"Heck if I know." The troll shrugs. "And if you see a sunburned guy carving horses into the rocks around here, with a dumb meme face painted onto a volleyball? Just…let him do his thing. I think it's a part of his 'process.'"

Spades Slick and Ms Paint turn up on the next islet over, all set up with a pair of beach chairs and the shade of an rocky arch where the underside of a cliff has been worn away. Ms Paint hushes them with a claw tapped against her mouth, smiling, and Spades slumbers on, the knife he has strapped to the end of a pole stuck point first into the sand.
Bro finds them.

Well, he just shows up all of a sudden, crouched silently on a tree branch in the shady grove like some kind of shady…guy. When John finally notices him with a jolt, Bro sticks a hand in his pocket and pulls out a second set of pointy sunglasses to wear on top of his usual pair. Kanaya tilts her head back a half second too late to see it, her claws falling still where they've been carding through Rose's hair, and then she nudges Rose with a low murmur while John's jaw drops.

(As far as John can tell, he's the only person who sees this happen. When he tries to mention it to Rose later, all subtle-like, she just raises an skeptical eyebrow. In the end Dave agrees that Bro probably did that entirely on purpose so no one would ever believe John.)

"Been checking the place out," Bro says, like he's picking up a conversation where they left off. "There's a greenhouse at the base of the volcano."

"We're doing fine, too," John replies, which is the snarkiest thing he can come up with when he feels this burnt out. It's also a big fat lie. Karkat, laying on John's lap as he nurses a crying headache, shifts and makes a terrible, small sound into John's stomach, and John blinks a couple of times. Dave rolls over in his sleep, his face buried in the dark fabric of his wadded-up cape, but otherwise doesn't react to Bro's appearance.

Bro tips his head ever so slightly in the world's tiniest maybe-nod of acknowledgement. John's too worn out to get aggravated by it. "Might want to check it out, later," Bro adds, cryptically, and then exchanges a series of increasingly arched eyebrows with Rose in a silent contest of wills. Or possibly a Strider patented variation on Morse code, communicated solely through snarky eyebrows - Strider-Lalondes are really super weird, and John wouldn't put it past them.

…Rose can't even see Bro's eyebrows. John digs his fingers into the side of his head and tries to massage his brain until it stops whimpering. Then, with a grumble, he pulls out his phone and scrolls through Pesterchum, where he finally finds a memo with Rose and Bro's chat handles and an endless stream of TT: raises eyebrow and TT: Raises eyebrow even higher and the occasional TG: raises eyebrow the highest from Oriole.

"All in good time," Rose says, matching Bro's neutral, cryptic voice almost exactly. "Father dearest."

Bro raises a second eyebrow to join the first, then settles in a crouch on the balls of his feet. The patchy rays of light that fork through the thick leaves catch his sunglasses as the Breeze picks up. From the tilt of his head and the way he's angled, John knows that Bro is standing guard - covering the side of the beach that falls in Jane's blind spot. This could be the most peaceful place in the world, but John isn't sure any of them are gonna be able to really relax for…a while. The Breeze might be doing loops around the island with wild, boundless excitement that filters through John whenever it comes back around to greet him, but regular old John still has a horrible weight in his stomach, and his ears prickle in anticipation of hearing another [crack] at any given moment.

John finally takes the bait. "Why? What's in the greenhouse?" he asks, with a sigh. Karkat curls up into a tighter ball; John calls a soft, discreet breeze through his fingers and runs it over Karkat to keep him from overheating.

"Someone you punks should probably meet."

-Doctor Lalonde turns up wandering the radio telescope facility rather than the beach. John, who left the Strilonde memo open as he let his hand rest on the cool, shaded sand, catches a sudden TG:
Raises eyebrow at 4,207.3 meters appear at the bottom of the screen. According to her and Oriole, Lalonde Labs itself is deserted: there's no sign of any of the scientists and interns that Doctor Lalonde boarded an ark ship with. No one can find any of the oodles and oodles of snakes that they gathered in the labs, either, which is probably for the best. An unknown, probably giant crab-shaped party raided all the refrigerators and left empty packages of chilled roe cubes scattered all over the floor, and no one can find any of the colorful Expo markers or chalk, which means they've got at least two lusii roaming the island – a problem for another day.

Equius goes. First, he approaches them stiffly, like Rose sits on some kind of friendleader throne instead of in the crook between two gnarled tree roots. For the first time in a long time, John can see Equius with no trouble at all; his hair is blue-black in the sun, and he squints to see in the sudden shade, his eyes exhausted but surprisingly clear of pain. His arm ends in a clean slice just short of his shoulder; John's so happy he wasn't here when Equius asked Kanaya for some classic medicull assistance with her super-powered space chainsaw. Because eugh. "I require parts to begin the construction of prosthetics for Nepeta and myself," Equius says, stiltedly. "If the facility still has power, it should also contain most of the necessary tools for prototyping."

A shift up above - so slight that the leaves don't even rustle. "Need help," Bro says. It's not a question.

Equius stiffens, and then relents with a sigh. "Another hand might be useful, since Nepeta has cavalierly run off on her own."

"Then let's bounce."

"We'll keep you in the loop," Rose says.

By the end of the day, Equius has accumulated more help than he knows what to do with. Jade and Roxy and Dirk and Jake and Nepeta arrive in staggered waves, mostly curious, with Doctor Lalonde 'supervising,' a glass of mango juice in hand, and Bro darting in and out. A huge crash! rings out over the island late in the evening, audible even from the beach, followed by the sounds of Equius throwing them all out of the lab for distracting him.

"Nobody say anything," Nepeta hisses, and then she treks off into the jungle with a glass of coconut milk held high over her head, a prankster's glee in her eye. Her cackles carry through the trees over the crackle and snap of the bonfire after John salutes her pranking zeal.

-

The Black Queen's ring appears to be a shiny, powerless piece of jewelry here, and nothing more. Equius keeps it in a pocket of void for a few years after - until, one day, he reaches in to check on it and comes up empty.

(A Queen always has her ways.)

-

Dave wakes up with an indescribable expression - John would sum it up as three-fifths 'not dead yet' yuckiness and two-fifths 'I just napped for an ungodly length of time and nothing feels real and my mouth tastes like dying' grogginess, but there's an extra element in there that defies simple words. John sympathizes with it immensely. "What time is it?" he asks, peeling himself up off the ground. His face scrunches up in a very recognizable post-nap headache pang as he flops over on his back.

"How the tables have turned…" Rose trails off. She's beaming like the sun, like the relief finally has unknotted something inside her that wound up tighter the longer Dave was unconscious. Then she pretends to consult the clock on her phone. Dave's too distracted by his post-stab nap revival to appreciate it. John stifles a laugh - Rose's grin is contagious - and fires off a quick message to Jade to give her a heads up.

Kanaya rolls her eyes at both of them and checks the time herself. She scrutinizes her phone for a solid minute, perplexed. "I don't think anyone's phone clocks are working, at the moment. Something about surviving close proximity to the Lord of Time seems to have disagreed with them," Kanaya informs Dave at last, as Rose plants a kiss on her cheek and pushes away from the base of the tree.

"Hell, that's fair. It sure as fuck disagreed with me," Dave mumbles. He scratches one of the scars that run down the length of his face, then sticks a hand into the sand under him and raises, squinting as the sand trickles out between his fingers. Then he grunts and pushes up on his elbows, taking in the early afternoon sun and the ocean lapping against the beach in front of them. "This is peak fucking irony. My last pair of shades, fucked - and I'm on a beach."

Rose reaches him first; John's still gently extricating himself from Karkat's exhausted deathgrip when Rose very elegantly pats Dave's head and messes up his hair. "Glad you're okay," she says, still smiling the hardest John has ever seen her smile, while Dave does his best to look up at her with one eye scrunched up.

Jade teleports in and performs the most gentle yet merciless body slam hug ever performed by a human being; John crawls out from under Karkat a second later and joins her, monitoring Dave's 'oof!' for any sign of real pain. "Dude. Let's not do that ever again," John says, muffled, and then their whole pile jolts as Rose flops on top of them. Dave grumbles, but Jade is defying gravity with scientific precision to avoid putting any of her weight on him, and John's floating on a thin cushion of air, so it appears to be a token grumble. Dave makes a valiant effort to pat them all on the back to complete the group hug.

"Then again, if we run into another situation where reality is breaking down and we're stuck with a Lord of something or other, we've probably done something wrong!" Jade says, laughing. This close, when John turns his head to nod with her in agreement, they only avoid headbutting each other by a narrow margin.

"Don't fucking put that idea out there! The universe will hear you!" Karkat yells from his curl-huddle. John nearly topples the whole friendpile with a jump - he thought Karkat had passed out from crying - and Dave tenses up. There's a weird sensation for a split second, like John's ears are about to pop -

Nothing happens. "Huh. Gonna have to get used to that," Dave says, scratching his face again. Rose shifts a little to prop herself up, her hand absently climbing toward her eye, and Jade rolls her eyes at John as she quickly flicks both of them before they can start picking at the skin.

"You don't have any time powers at all, anymore?" Rose asks, quietly, in sharp contrast to her silent, pretend slap fight with Jade. Her hand shoots out with unfailing accuracy to boop Jade on one of her Bec ears, and Jade's mouth pops open.

"None that I can tell. Shit, dude," Dave says, with feeling. Another one John can't quite pin down - a little bit wistful, a little bit relieved. Dave starts to fidget, and John pokes Jade in the stomach to get her attention back so they can all give Dave some space to breathe. "No aspect, no nothing. I can finally call myself the Dude of Guy, just like I always dreamed of.-" Dave starts to ramble, and that's when it hits John.

His hand shoots out and he grabs Dave by the shoulder; Dave twitches, blinking in alarm, and John stares at him solemnly. "Dave. Dude. You don't have an aspect." John pauses, and then waggles his eyebrows with weighty significance. Dave stares back at him, still uncomprehending. "You know what this means, man."

Slowly, Dave's hand creeps up, and he presses it to the side of his face as his jaw drops. "Oh…my god," Dave says, faintly.

John grins. "You're ass-less."

"RIP my ass," Dave says, a grin blooming on his face.

Jade buries her face in her hands, and bursts into helpless snort-giggles.

Terezi stops dead just outside the shade of the trees. Shaking her head, she turns and starts walking away. "Never mind, I'm going back to the normal side of the beach. The Vriska side of the beach."

After a moment to let the shame of that sink in, she waves. "Smell you later, coolkid."

"Take me with you," Karkat groans, waving a useless claw in the general direction of Terezi's back.

They head over to investigate the greenhouse as soon as Dave finishes transforming his white-and-grey clothes into something more tropical beach-worthy. He flatly refuses to give up his hooded cloak aesthetic for perfectly understandable reasons, but eventually winds up sleeveless and in shorts. John's default state is short-sleeved and 'breezy,' so he's good to go. Rose and Kanaya are both down to tank tops and wrapped skirts; they have to leave excess fabric in the form of god tier hoodies behind in a pile on the beach. Karkat's miserably red in the face from sweltering in the heat by the time John convinces him to shrug off his jacket and swap things around so he has short sleeves. He looks a little less likely to faint after that, but the misery doesn't go away - it just fades into fatigue and resignation. John's not sure it will go away for…a long time. His own smile feels kinda brittle, but after sitting on the beach for a few hours he's built up enough restless energy that the Breeze tugs him along with infectious drive.

As one, they all opt to fly over the thick jungle rather than walking through it. Dave is wobbly and can barely fly above the level of the treetops on his own, but it's more than he was ever able to do as a Time player. Eventually Jade slings an arm around him and they bound ahead of the rest of the group.

On the one hand, it feels dangerous to leave Vriska sunbathing on the beach. On the other hand? Worrying about Vriska is getting pretty overrated.

John almost flies right over the greenhouse itself. Unlike the astronomy observatories crowning the volcano, the greenhouse blends in almost seamlessly with the lush growth around it. The sunlight winks off a pane of glass before he gets too far. From above, it's clearly built in the shape of a Space symbol, the arms spiraling out between the trees. Ropy vines and interlocking tree branches obscure parts of the glass roof. A wide, round atrium sits in the center of the symbol, clear of the trees and lit up with direct sunlight, and Jade and Kanaya gravitate toward it like magic.

The door isn't locked or anything. After Jade slides it open, they leave it hanging wide open behind them as they wander inside. John brings up the rear and turns in a slow circle. The humidity in here feels slightly damper than it does outside. In a small pond right by the entrance, a pudgy white frog with flickering eyes sits in the center of a lily pad as wide as John is tall. It ribbits at him when he comes over to check it out, then hops off the lily pad into the water with a tiny plop.
John looks back over his shoulder and considers closing the door with a tiny loop of wind -

For a second, he swears someone is lurking in the trees outside the doorway. It sends a weird, familiar jolt through him, like he just banged his funny bone against the wall.

He leaves the door, and floats faster to catch up with everyone else. Karkat stumbles a little on the gravel path that winds through the plants, his head hanging low and his swollen eyes mostly fixed on his feet. John brushes their shoulders together and Karkat raises his head just long enough to smile at him, quiet and small. Then, up ahead, Dave says, "Uh, hello? Anyone home?" and Karkat's expression morphs into horror as Dave nearly sticks his whole head into a huge lily flower.

"She's here," Kanaya says, absently. She reaches out, carefully plucks a sky blue flower with a globe of thin petals from one of the nearby plants, and tucks it into Rose's hair - and doesn't explain at all who she's talking about. The pond water burbles behind them, and the sound carries through the room under the faint hum and chirring of unseen insects.

"She?" Karkat asks, his voice rough. He reaches out and seizes Dave by the back of his hood as they walk by, and proceeds to drag him away from the plant without looking back once. John checks over his shoulder again, but enough plants grow between them and the entrance that he can't see much through the leaves.

"She!" Jade replies, with a sudden bounce in her...bounce. Her eyes spark with sudden delight, and she skips ahead of Kanaya and Rose to round the last bend in the path. "Hey, wait -"

John hurries up. Karkat matches his pace after a lurch, towing Dave along in their wake. "Pardon our intrusion." Rose says, as they step beneath the curve of one of the huge flowers from LoFaF, and John automatically raises his hand to wave at the two people sitting on the edge of a round, stone platform, lit up by the sun. But he catches only a glimpse of the second person - a tumble of curly dark hair and faded red cloth - and then, without warning, the only one remaining on the platform is a young, short girl in a pale green sundress and a red bowtie.

Her face is a familiar skull, with sharp incisors and deeply carved bone structure, but her glossy eyes are the brilliant green of Jade's power, and the odd, deep green skin that covers her skeletal frame doesn't stretch to bursting over unnatural muscle. She folds her claws together in front of her chest; they're longer and more hooked than any troll's claws. "Oh! Yes, um...Hello! Welcome!" Calliope says, and her voice sounds nothing like her brother's.

"Hello again, Calliope," Kanaya says with a toothy smile. Jade's busy frowning at the spot next to Calliope like it has personally offended her; John does a quick check with the Breeze, but whoever sat there a second ago has vacated the premises.

Calliope hops down off the platform - she's actually super short. John blinks as the cherub walks over to them with a clatter of clawed toes and bony heels on the smooth stone that covers the floor here. "Sorry, sorry. I'm not used to having visitors yet! I had a whole speech planned out, and everything..." she says, trailing off, while John gets used to the fact that the Muse of Space is shorter than Rose, with the bright, earnest voice and eyes of someone who doesn't look or sound much older than any of them.

"Was someone there, just now?" John asks, to be sure - after the weird lurking at the entrance, he's not sure what he just saw.

"Yes! A cosmic cryptid, one might say. We were in the middle of a conversation, but – well, never mind!" Calliope sidesteps a little, her movements fluttering and flustered as she flits around to look at each of them in turn, like a hummingbird. "First! How are you all adapting? What do you think of the place? Does everything here work the way you're used to? Any problems with gravity?" she asks, darting in on the tips of her toes to inspect Dave's face. Dave takes a step back automatically, his exposed eyes a little wild as he looks at John for backup.

John shrugs, and puts in his two cents. "I mean, most of us can fly - so."

Calliope nods seriously, her expression fiercely intent as she takes John's words into consideration. "Right, right! I really hoped you wouldn't have too many issues! I think that I am quite good with gravity, if I do say so myself!"

"This is Jade's island, correct? Have you recreated Earth in its entirety?" Rose asks, running her hand along the edge of a large pot near the edge of the floor, while Kanaya approaches the central dais.

The cherub Muse twirls around to face Rose, a bright, skeletal grin crinkling the skin around her eyes as she hurries to explain. John catches a glimpse of Calliope's ribcage through the loose armholes of her dress - even with the strange, thin layer of skin, it's a little unsettling to look right at someone's bones. "Pretty much! I, uh, might have improved it all a little," Calliope admits, scratching her zygomatic bone with a sheepish look in her eye. "I tried to make a study of your world and your people, even while my predecessor was rather determined to wipe them off the map, and I noticed that your solar system seemed a little difficult to live in, as a general rule. I checked with my consultants, but they didn't really have any opinion on it."

"You improved the solar system?" Karkat says - it's the loudest thing he's said all afternoon. Apparently, being appalled by someone casually altering the solar system in her spare time is enough to make him jerk his head up and stare in abject horror.

"Which is why the moon is suddenly covered in trees? And air!" John says, snapping his fingers. He can feel it way, wayyy off in the sky, if he concentrates - it's kind of hard to miss that there's an extra Moon-sized atmosphere full of breathable air that begs to be visited by a Breath player. It's just that the second they were back on Earth 2.0 (or maybe they're on 3.0, by now), John's focus automatically fixed back on his immediate vicinity, rather than wandering around the way it did in the Medium.

"Er, I may have gotten a little creative with the physics to make things more hospitable. Earth is pretty bog standard, with a few tweaks here and there, but figuring out how to live on some of the outer planets may prove an interesting challenge for you, still!" Calliope folds her claws together again and squeezes tight, her eyes shining with excitement as she hurries back over to the dais. She hops up next to Kanaya and taps part of the stone with a claw. A diagram of the solar system appears in the air over the platform, with all the planets outlined with green light, and Calliope starts pointing at each one with a claw as she chatters on. "And I added a few extra decent-sized planets, since 16 seemed like a nice, round number, and the denizens requested a larger place where they wouldn't have to deal with tiny uninvited people for a few millennia -"

"She improved the solar system," Karkat says, dropping his face into his hands, his voice muffled.

"That's going to be...interesting," John agrees.

Dave, free from scrutiny, sticks his hands back in his pockets - then reconsideres it and removes one so he can jerk a thumb up at the sky. "And Condy has interstellar travel down, so the sky's not exactly the limit," he says. "Where's that King dude? We need him to start quoting Star Trek."

Which is...a weird thought that John has never even thought of before. They all flew around the Medium at will throughout the final round of the game, yet the thought of having easy access to the rest of the solar system still feels bizarrely unreal. Heck, the Condesce's fleet of giant space ships doesn't seem half-real, either. Out on the beach, with the sea-salty air and the warm sun, the overwhelming fact that their whole world was gone seemed to fade into something distant and aching. "Space - the final frontier," Jade says, enchanted, as she walks forward to float on the other side of Calliope, her eyes full of stars.

Rose does the rounds of the central area - one foot skims along the edge between stone and gravel as she paces the circle, her pale eyes drifting as she starts to frown in concentration. "The Condesce has billions of people in those ark ships that need to be resettled, and they've been kept in stasis while their entire reality was destroyed. I don't even know where we would start here." That thought's almost as overwhelming as the recent apocalypse - but more stressful, since it's still gotta happen. At least the end of the world is over with and done. "Urgh. I hate to say it, but being responsible for telling a bajillion people that they need to sort their crap out and get along on a whole new planet sounds like it's way above our paygrade," John says, one side of his mouth twisting downward skeptically.

"Aka, we'd only fuck it up," Karkat says, with an almost identical expression. He goes on a short face journey as another thought occurs to him. "Can you imagine Vriska trying to stick her irons in it? But - fuck, letting the Condesce run it alone would be fucking worse. Her Imperious Go-fuck-herself, with a whole new assortment of planet-sized shameglobes for her to conquer."

All joking aside, that does raise a lot of unfortunate questions. Rose pinches the bridge of her nose with her fingers as though her sinuses just screamed in unison; Kanaya tears her gaze away from the planets dancing over the central platform and walks around to intersect with Rose's pacing circle.
"We, um. May need some time to sort all this out," Kanaya says.

Calliope turns and smiles at them. It's a smile that's too old for her oddly young skele-face - gentle and understanding and rueful all at once. "Pshh, time," she says, with a flip of her wrist, and then she hops down from the dais in a clatter. "You can have all the time you need! Time isn't very important here, in the grand scheme of things." The cherub Muse pats the stone platform with her claws. "You can stay here whenever you like, for as long as you like. This is a nexus point where you can create anything you might want to live and relax, or where you can leave if you want to visit other places.
That bit's more experimental, though..."

To demonstrate, Calliope pats the platform again. The real-time model of the solar system winks out, and a white tablet zaps out of the air, hovering before Calliope at eye level. A few other screens appear around the nexus of the greenhouse - dark projections with eye-searingly bright green command line interfaces.

Sollux, John thinks, is gonna freak.

"Can it create therapists?" Rose asks. Because they can always count on Rose to ask the most important questions.

Calliope taps her chin with a claw. "You might need the transportalizer for that," she says, after giving it some deep thought. "I'm not sure I would recommend creating new people wholesale or duplicating existing ones until you've had more practice with it!"

Rose rubs her hands together in anticipation. "Excellent. We shall need to import them in bulk, I think."

Okay, good. John wanted to skip past the 'creating new people' part, too. Karkat, already appalled by the solar system, looks like he's ready to storm out and start shouting at the volcano.
"What about you? Are you staying here like this?" Jade asks, suddenly, tearing her eyes away from the nexus interface - she's already started typing something on the touchscreen. Her curiosity fixates on Calliope, though, and that's also a good question, now that John thinks about it. It feels right that they found Calliope here, but also...yeah. Strange skeleton girls who form the firmament of all reality with their unfathomable cosmic power - not exactly the type of person John expects to see wandering around with a surprisingly normal, corporeal form.

"Yes! This is an avatar of me - I want to be able to see and experience everything." Calliope does another twirl, and beams at Jade as her sundress swishes around her. Her bowtie has fallen askew around her neck with all the whirling, caught on the jut of her vertebra. Then she ducks her head, sheepish again, and scuffs her foot along the floor. "This is so awkward to admit, but I'm not sure where to begin, either. I think I would be so dreadfully lonely without people like you to talk to: people who have caught a glimpse of how realities become - well, reality!" She smiles again, shyly, and catches John with it, so he can't help but smile back and give her a thumbs up. He's not really sure what he's thumbs up-ing about, but the instinct can't be denied.

Then Calliope frowns and balances on one leg, leaning around to peer back the way they all came. "Though, speaking of which..." she says, half to herself, tapping one of her teeth against one on the bottom row with deliberate clicks.

John is suddenly very sure that they're being watched. He blinks and whips his head around, but can't make out more than a quarter of the doorway from here. "Is someone there?" he asks, while the Breeze sneaks along the gravel path and swishes around through trees, trying and failing to find anyone.

"I really don't know why they're being so shy," Calliope murmurs. She leans over a little more, one gangly leg stuck out in the air to keep her balanced, and begins to absently gnaw on one of her finger claws. Then she shrugs and sets her hands on her hips, the frown easing off her face. "They've been here longer than you all - maybe they're embarrassed? From what I understand, they were very dramatic about coming to see me and didn't realize I wouldn't let people who came to visit me die just because I was distracted with being born."

She says it so matter-of-factly. Like it's a perfectly normal thing to say.

John suddenly can't breathe. "Wait."

Karkat lifts his head. "No," he says, and for a second his haggard expression stabs something hard and rusted through John's chest - it's the same mess of grief and disbelief that John would be feeling, if he weren't totally frozen in place. The Breeze sends streamers combing through the jungle, and with a silent request from John, stops frantically searching for breath and lungs and just - listens.

He knows what he's listening for now.

"Aradia was just here -" Calliope starts to say, gesturing at the platform with both hands and a look of rueful exasperation. Somewhere, out near the old ruins deep in the jungle, the Breeze catches a faint whisper of chimes.

"They're okay?!" John yells, loud enough that he hears a panicked ribbit and then a considerably louder splash from the direction of the pond. Rose and Kanaya, deep in their own conversation on the far side of the nexus, look up almost in unison, confused by the sudden outburst.

Calliope's smile inches up at the corner of her mouth, almost imperceptible with the way her teeth are already showing, an impish look in her eye. "They were in a crucible of unlimited creative potential as a new Muse was being born. So they're a tiny bit different, now. But that's no reason for them to not come say hello!" she says, rising up on her toes again and shouting the last bit pointedly in the direction of the door. Jade frowns in concentration, now - the distant, focused look of her reaching out with her own powers the same way John did earlier - while Dave starts frantically batting at John's arm.

Karkat surges forward and seizes Calliope by the shoulders. There's a weird moment where John's eyes cross and Calliope looks like she's halfway across the room instead, before she settles back into place and allows it. "Is he here?!" Karkat says, voice cracking.

Calliope smiles, pats Karkat's hand, and then points toward the entrance.

At the edge of the jungle outside the atrium, someone shifts their weight, then ducks behind a tree. The Breeze snatches up a quiet, murmured honk and rushes it into the greenhouse in a flurry of excitement for all of them to hear.

Karkat lets go of Calliope and books it. "GAMZEE, YOU CRYPTID FUCK! GET BACK HERE!" he howls, vaulting over a potted plant and charging back toward the entrance. "Don't make me fucking honk at you -!

"What - Gamzee?" Rose repeats, but there's no time to explain; John takes off at a dead sprint, gravel flying out from under his shoes as he races to catch up with Karkat. The plants and flowers whip by his face, but he can't stop for anything.

"Karkat, John, where are you going?" Kanaya shouts after them.

Karkat bursts out through the doorway and flings himself in between the trees without hesitating for a second. John answers for him. "Clown hunting!" he calls back over his shoulder, and a bright, uncontrollable grin takes over his whole face as he waves.

Then he's out the door and under the sun. The grass provides more traction under his feet than the gravel did, and when the wind rushes around him it smells like fresh, uncut grass and damp earth, and nothing feels empty or missing or lacking at all.

It's a beautiful day outside, and John can finally breathe.
Chapter End Notes

We made it. We climbed this entire mountain, you guys. Art credit to Meruz again!
Some music for the road: https://homestuck.bandcamp.com/track/heir-of-grief and https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=47FRn_ye5lc and https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=Zcps2fJKuA1 and https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=dQw4w9WgXcQ

(Because how was I supposed to choose just one?)

-----

Acknowledgements:

Back in 2013, all I wanted was head canons for the rest of the beta kids as super heroes in RMWT - and naturally it all spun wildly out of control. The inspiration for Dad Egbert's face-heel turn and brainwashing of John came from Lightning on the Wave's Sacrifices Arc, while many of the game mechanics and fraymotif theory were inspired by or borrowed from the Sburb Glitch FAQ. I'm not even going to try to list the memes.

To Bananaramses, PanicIsMyRain, and SergeantMeow, original creators of Real Men Wear Tights, for letting me take this superhero AU of an AU about as far down the rabbit hole as one can go; for the use of Heir and Hemogoblin's aliases and the confrontation with Hearts Boxcars as backstory from which to perform a magnificent pirouette off the handle into Sburb madness. Without you this monster spin-off could never have been.

To all of you who have been commenting on this fic and giving me mini-heart attacks over the state of my inbox throughout this sicknasty roller coaster ride. You guys spell-checked me, put up with my cryptic/silly plot twists, early-installment weirdness, and sporadic partial updates during plot-critical chapters, and actually inspired the entire confrontation with Eridan in Los Angeles. You also terrified and impressed me with how savvy you were at predicting the future course of the story sometimes. You are the smartest, coolest, loveliest readers. It is you.

And to Katie, who read Homestuck so she could read and understand this story in context - that's commitment, right there.

I didn't think we'd actually make it here. But let's see how far we've come.
Like One Sundered Star - 07/04/2013 to 09/13/2017

Works inspired by this one: Sunsets Over the Trinity by laZardo, milesss, Not Computing by ArbitrarilyImportant, Happy Endings by PhoenixAccio

Please drop by the archive and comment to let the author know if you enjoyed their work!