A dangerous serial killer targets Elizabeth Keen as the newest Blacklister hits too close to home for Red Reddington.

On a personal note, Elizabeth is receiving cryptic letters of ominous warnings from a dangerous stalker which only adds to the threat.

She must rely on the one person her instincts tell her she can trust.

Liz finds herself inexplicably drawn closer to the only man capable of protecting her from this insidious new threat.
When in Rome...

March 26

Only his first day back in Italy and he was already reacquainting himself with the local flair, and in spectacular fashion.

Red melted back into the pillow, threading his fingers through the long lustrous hair tickling his thighs. His eyes stared blatantly, filled with repressed fire, as the brunette head attached to his raging erection bobbed sensually, sucking feverishly, licking the rigid hard on.

He loved watching those pink sensuous lips sliding down his cock. They were so full and wet and felt so damned good. This woman was well acquainted with the art of pleasing a man.

And that little fucking tongue... God

Red loved when she rolled that tiny pink muscle against him like she was doing just now. He closed his eyes, savoring the moment.

The suction this girl had was perfection.

Red relaxed totally, shifting into the activities she performed for him. She suckled, tonguing him just so, causing the head of his cock to vibrate, pulsating heavily.

Damn...

“Yes... there.” he sighed, his voice low and soothing. “Suck it.” he commanded.

He felt the muscles in his thighs flex as the owner of that phenomenal mouth readily obeyed.

She drew heavily on his flesh, slurping noisily, drawing on the fat crown on his shaft.

“If you want to fuck, you should stop,” he grunted, “or I’ll come down your throat.” he stated bluntly.

As much as he was enjoying the blow... and damn, was he ever. He really wanted more.

Apparently his partner did as well, because she drew on the rigid length, letting him go with a wet pop before crawling up on all fours, waving that sweet ass wantonly in the air.

The man rolled onto his knees, sliding the condom into place, glancing at the treasure before him, chuckling lowly, his mood high.

“You do like sucking cock, don’t you.” he crooked his head slightly, staring at the beautiful sight afforded him. “Look at how wet you are.” he praised approvingly.

He stroked the swollen folds with his warm fingers, rubbing his hard shaft against her thrumming clit.

“Come on.” the woman urged, pushing back against him.
He dipped his head into her wetness then slid deep inside, hissing his contentment. She rolled her hips against his pelvis, driving him in further until his balls pressed tightly against her sex.

“You’re always so impatient, Lexa.” his tone holding a measure of reproof, though he rather liked that about the woman in reality.

“Only when I have a big cock filling me up.” she purred. “And I do want it to fill me up.”

“Well, unfortunately for you,” he snapped his hips, bouncing her off his shaft, “I’m wrapped up tight.”

“Stop pouting.” he smiled, rubbing her little puckered hole as incentive.

He knew she was on birth control. He even knew she was clean of STD’s since she had conveniently left her test results out when he had gone to pick her up for dinner.

But to not wear a condom seemed too personal. Too intimate.

And while he liked Lexa, he wanted nothing more than this.

To blow off steam with her. To enjoy her company, then make a clean break.

She slammed back into Red as he drove forward, breaking his thought pattern. He reached for her nipple, growling angrily at the interruption...

“Pardon me, Lexa.” he leaned against her back, grabbing the phone.

“Are you kidding me?” she panted, deep within in the throes of the passion he had created.

“I’m not stopping,” he pooh-poohed such a notion, “you know how I love to multi-task.” the man hunched over her back, rolling his hips against her, making her moan in delight.

“However, you do need to stay quiet.” he whispered seductively.

She loved this sort of thing, so all was well and good.

“Yes?” Red answered pleasantly, his eyes on his activity, his hand running slowly up Lexa’s spine.

“Red?”

The man immediately altered his tone and manner, instantly recognizing the voice on the line.

“Sweetheart, what can I do for you.” he raised the phone from his mouth. “Be quiet.” he suggested strongly, gripping Lexa’s waist for leverage.

The woman clenched around his shaft, reacting to his tone, as he knew she would, falling silent.

For how long, he could only guess.

“Are you busy?” Liz asked.

“No.” he sucked in a lung full of air as Lexa tightened herself around his throbbing arousal, smiling coyly over her shoulder. She knew he loved that shit.

“What’s wrong?” he had thrown the woman a scolding glance as a reprimand.
He listened intently as Lizzy rattled off about the newest Blacklister. They wanted to know his whereabouts.

“The docks, New Jersey, warehouse Num–,” he growled carnally, closing his eyes to the ecstasy coursing through his body. Lexa had dropped to her shoulders, reaching between their legs, teasing his ball sack, “...Number five.”

“You all right?”

“Fine.” Red leaned into Lexa, tweaking her nipple, pulling the stiff peak hard, making the woman squeak her approval.

He placed his hand gently over her mouth, “Shh...” he crooned silkily.

A knock on the door caused both head to jerk to the unexpected intrusion.

Red’s face allowed his consternation. Lexa groaned piteously.

“Red, we have to leave in like thirty minutes.” Francis Holbrook’s deep voice filtered through the door.

Red’s head fell back, and he sighed heavily.

“Fine...” he called out bleakly.

“Red?” Elizabeth’s voice was laced with concern.

“I wasn’t talking to you sweetheart.” Red advised.

Lexa quaked under him, her thighs shaking against his own before her pussy slathered him in her thick cream.

“Shit...” the man’s grumbled his irritation.

“Red?” Liz’s voice held a measure of annoyance as well.

“Hey!” Francis called out, tapping lightly on the door. “I would have already been finished!”

Reddington glared at the door but smiled as Lexa’s husky voice replied for him. “And that’s why he is here and you are not.”

“I’ll get back to you, Lizzy.” the tight pussy rippled tightly around his pumping shaft. It took only seconds and his lover came again. “Someone is at the door.” he slapped the phone shut.

Francis beat out a cadence on the door facing, his face beaming. He loved giving Red the business.

“This is the rhythm I use.” he called gingerly. “Works every time, eh, Lexa?”

“Consider yourself a dead man.” Red gritted his teeth.

Francis glanced at his expensive watch. “Twenty-six minutes and counting.”

“I’m coming dammit!” Red grated huskily. He wrapped his hands around Lexa’s waist, lifting her into his thrusts, giving his concentration over to where it was needed. For several seconds he got lost in the proceedings.
“God, Li...”

Shit!

He hadn’t meant to do that. To use another woman’s name was more than bad form in his book. He knew this was Lexa.

It was just a habit that whenever Lizzy called or was near, she stayed his focus for a goodly length of time.

Apparently, no matter what he was doing.

Lizzy...

Thrusting deep, he slowly rocked, filling the condom quickly.

Lexa giggled into the pillow which mellowed his mood considerably.

Not quite how he thought this evening would play out, but as he finished emptying his cock of its load...taking everything into consideration, it hadn’t been all that bad.

He gripped the condom, sliding it free, holding Lexa in place, “Tissue.”

She reached across to the night table, handing the object over her shoulder. He disposed of the heavily filled latex sheath, inching backwards off the bed, keeping his back from Lexa’s view.

He slipped on his robe, heading to the bar for a drink.

“You must have been in need of a good fuck, Red.” the woman giggled, turning over, brushing her lovely hair out of her face. “You’ve never come that fast.”

“Well,” he glared at the door, “I was under a little pressure to finish.”

Though if he was honest with himself, his arousal had spiked when he heard Elizabeth’s voice.

Even with Lexa having prepared him, he expected it might take a good fifteen minutes to actually finish the task. But then he had heard Elizabeth, and his balls tightened in the blink of an eye.

“Then why don’t you come find me later, when you’re done,” she stroked him through his robe, squeezing his cock gently, “and we’ll give you your regular workout, yes?”

Red handed her a tumbler, letting her get a sip before kissing her pouty lips, “...Yes”

Two days later:

“Red, where the hell are you?” Elizabeth’s tone was acerbic.
“Why,” Red smiled into the phone, recognizing her annoyance, “do you miss me?”

“I don’t know.” she countered, sweetly. “Since I can’t find you, I can’t get you in my gunsight, now can I?”

“My dear Lizzy,” Red chuckled his amusement, “I am in Italy and have been for the last three days.” he scanned the enormous airplane hanger absently. “I believe I mentioned I was here when we last spoke.”

Red watched Francis Holbrook speaking with a group of men across the way, making sure the man was following his instructions to the letter.

Francis was a good guy, a smart guy. Red however, was the connection needed to make all involved feel more at ease.

The man’s experienced eyes continually returned to one individual in particular. Though Red couldn’t quite pinpoint why, the older man felt an indescribable something... amiss.

This guy was jumpy.

And why? This was a commonplace transaction both sides had conducted a thousand times before.

“When are you coming home?” Liz’s voice broke his train of thought.

“Sometime today.” Red’s scowl deepened. “... I hope.”

The youngest of the men was definitely skittish. Red’s brow rose slowly as he witnessed the boys hand dropping once again to his weapon, as if reassuring himself.

Why was this guy so twitchy? None of Angelo’s men were unprofessional, quick tempered or excitable. But this guy was different.

“Red?” Elizabeth Keen’s voice asked uncertainly. “Are you there?”

“I’m here, sweetheart.” Red muttered offhandedly.

Francis opened the briefcase that he had sat on the trunk of the car. Angelo’s right-hand man absently checked the contents, nodding his approval before holding his hand to shake on the deal.

The loud wail of a siren abruptly filled the air.

“Shit.” Red sighed, suddenly resigned to the inevitable.

He casually pulled his weapon, a little annoyed, truth told.

The “nervous” young man pulled his gun from his waist, firing blindly as he ran for cover.

Francis slammed the briefcase shut, gathering it under his arm, bolting for the stairs of the plane.

All hell was breaking loose, men pulling weapons, running for cover, cursing, shouting in general. Total chaos reigned supreme.

Red Reddington calmly watched and waited until Angelo’s right-hand man, his face grimly set, trained his gun sight on Francis Holbrook.

“Don’t fucking think about it!” Red warned the tall Italian, his tone even and unflustered.
Something in the dark eyes determined Red’s next move. He lowered his weapon, striking the other man in the leg. The guy went down, hard and fast.

Francis made a jump for cover, bailing behind a row of large toolboxes.

Red rolled his eyes, sighing heavily.

“Sweetheart, I have to go.” he fired off a shot, wounding another of the opposition. “Can I call you back?” he asked sardonically.

Angelo was going to be so pissed. Red shook his head woefully.

“Red–”

“I won’t be long, I promise.” he remarked casually. Pulling the phone from his ear, he smiled slowly, snapping it shut on her bitching.

“Francis!” the young man had not quite reached his goal before the gunfire had escalated. “Get on the damn plane!” Red turned quickly, wounding one man creeping up on Francis’ position.

“I’m about to do it myself!” Red laid down a series of well-aimed scatter fire. “Now, go!”

Francis ran for the stairs, leaping melodramatically from the third one into the interior of the plane.

Red’s face was incredulous. He grumbled his consternation, dialing the phone, waiting semi-patiently.

“Angelo!” Red growled, “Put down your fucking drink and get your lazy ass in here!”

“What in the h–” Angelo stuttered when he heard the gunfire, sighing heavily. “I’ll be right there.” he muttered dejectedly.

Red continued to fire, only wounding the other combatants. Perhaps this could yet be salvaged if no one fired a kill shot.

Angelo’s car arrived on the scene almost immediately, the slender man sliding effortlessly from the backseat even before it skidded to a stop.

“Lower your fucking weapons!” he ratted off angrily to his people. “Cease fire, dammit!”

Red waved his gun languidly in the air, signifying for his men to follow suit.

Angelo approached the men, his face almost purple with rage. “What in the holy hell happened!” he asked disgustedly, stepping over a man groaning loudly on the floor.

Red’s gun changed directions indicating the needed route. “Your man has an itchy trigger finger.”

“What the hell are you talking about!” Angelo scowled as the young man in question came out from his hiding spot, armed and panicky.

“He heard a cop siren and then this...” Red waved around the room.

“They called the cops! They’re here.” the sweaty and wild-eyed youth breathed out as he came closer. “Probably outside.” his eyed darted frantically about.
He kept Red in his sights until Angelo stalked over to him, ripping the gun from his hand and snatching him across the back of the head, hard.

“You did all this!?" he yelled, hitting the boy again. “You caused all this bloodshed!”

“I’m telling you,” the young man muttered tightly, “he’s ratted us out.” his eyes flew to Red accusingly.

“There’s no one out there, you fucking...” Angelo clenched his fists at his side, fuming. “Are you on that shit again?!” he grabbed the kid’s collar, shaking him like a rag doll. “Are you?!”

Red examined the kid closer, finally seeing the dark circles under his wild eyes. Under the sweat, his skin was pasty and flushed. His muscles jerked, tense and spastic. The kid was high as a fucking kite.

Red shook his head agitated, working the tension out of his jaw as he checked his men, making sure they were functional while Angelo handled his own problem.

“I’m dropping you in the darkest hole I can find until the very thought of that shit is abhorrent to you. Until you understand that just being in its vicinity means your certain death!” Angelo shoved the kid toward two men who approached slowly. “Because I find you like this again, I’ll fucking put you down where you fucking stand!” the young man was dragged off to an SUV, shoved roughly into the back, the door slammed with a finality that ended ensuing scene.

“Reddington, you have my deepest apologies.” Angelo sighed deeply, “I should have known... should have seen...”

“No one was seriously hurt. But, we can’t have a repeat of this.” Red warned.

“I assure you. We won’t. I meant what I said, he’s going to get clean and stay clean even if I have to keep him locked up for a year or more.” Angelo looked around anxiously.

“Are you sure your men are—”

“They’re okay. A little more awake now, but fine.”

Angelo glanced about, frowning. “And Francis?”

Red sighed, staring at the plane. “Francis?”

Francis peeked his head around the door frame. “Yeah?” He asked cautiously.

“You can come out from hiding now.”

“What the hell was that about!” Francis asked, bouncing gingerly down the stairs.

“Drugs.” Red said to the approaching man.

“We didn’t have any drugs.” Francis reminded helpfully.

“I know that.” Red rubbed his eyes, trying to keep matters in perspective. “I meant... that one of Angelo’s men was high. The one who started all of this.”

“Oh, I thought maybe they didn’t accept our offer.”

“Do you normally reject an offer by shooting up a room?” Red asked the man.

“And even with that past history, you came unarmed?”

“Oh.” It dawned on the younger man. “Well, no, actually.” he bent, taking the gun from his ankle holster. “I forgot I had this.”

Red’s mouth fell slightly agape as he shared a look with Angelo. “You have your idiot. I have mine.”

“Um, excuse me!” Francis stuck his finger up in the air. “How was I supposed to know one would start tweaking.” he defended himself staunchly.

“You sound like a Valley Girl.” Red made mention.

“Angelo, in light of recent events...” Red nodded his head in the direction of Angelo’s men, who were carrying off another of their unit who was groaning in pain. “I’d understand if you wished to set negotiations aside until another time.”

“No... no. We’ll do it now.” Angelo decided firmly. “This has been in the works for three days. Unless of course, you’d rather deal with another source.”

“This is your baby.” Red signified the ball was in Francis’s court.

Francis thought quietly to himself for a few seconds. Red knew very well all the man had to take into consideration.

The travel time, waiting for another shipment, bad feelings with Angelo and his men. He hoped like hell Francis made the right decision.

The young man’s eyes raised, “No, we’ll finish the deal. We’re here.” It was nodded with finality. “Let’s do it.”

“All right, gentlemen. Let’s get this over with.” Red smacked his hands together, pleased with the decision made. “I have a high tempered brunette waiting anxiously for me to return a call.”
“Lizzy.” Red swallowed his drink casually. “I’m sor–”

“We’re all fine. Just an unfortunate misunderstanding.” Red propped his feet on a nearby table. The hollow echo of the wind rushing around the streamline jet, relaxing him greatly. “We should be landing in DC in about six hours.” he hadn’t actually asked, but he had traveled enough to know the time references from any given location.

Francis passed by, having closed the door to the restroom, heading to the galley. “Is that your pissy brunette?”

Liz’s brow furrowed deeply, having heard the offhanded remark. “...Excuse me?” she tilted her head slightly. “Who is that?”

“This is Francis.” Red continued to sip his drink, “Not to worry sweetheart, you will never be graced by his presence, ever.”

Francis took umbrage, “Say what?” he asked highly disgruntled. “Hey! I’ll have you know I’m highly sought after.”

“By the police.” Red mumbled into the line, making her chuckle, which in turn made him smile.

“Many people love spending time with me.” Francis continued his tirade. He ticked off on his fingers, “I have an amazing personality. I’m handsome, to be sure. And... I’m... I’m... ”

“Modest?” Liz smiled gently into the phone.

“Modest is not a word that comes to mind when I think of Francis.” Red played along. “Demented, on the other hand.”

“I’ll have you know that I can be incredibly modest.” Francis insisted firmly. “Modesty is my middle name.”

“That he disclaims, not the other.” Red said enjoying the giggling coming over the line. “Would you like me to tell her your middle name?”

Francis backed off immediately, “We said we’d never discuss that again.” he warned.

Red held his smile, “Do you mind, I’m on the phone here.” he gestured.

“You’re the one who dragged me into the conversation.” Francis reminded peevishly.

Red rolled his eyes to the heavens, sighing. “Go to sleep, Francis.” he said tiredly.

The man shrugged and settled into his chair, reclining the plush seat, dragging a blanket over his shoulders, falling blessedly silent.
“Speaking of sleep, when’s the last time you had any?” Liz asked of the obviously exhausted man.

“I’m fine.” he waved the question aside.

“Are you really okay?” Concern laced her voice.

“Yes, we’re fine.” he dismissed.

“I said... you.” she reiterated.

Red was touched, his voice softening, “I’ll come by the Blacksite as soon as I return.” he promised. It surprised him to realize that he really needed to see her. When it had become a need, he had no notion.

“Okay, I’ll let you get some sleep then.” she felt better. “Get some rest, Red. I mean it.”

“I think you do.” He hung up the phone gently.

Red had been asleep a little over an hour when the phone rang. He groggily felt for the object.

“Yes.” he rubbed bleary eyes.

“Reddington. I don’t know if you’ve heard,” a disconnected voice came over the line, “Carlos and Victor have been taken out.”

Red blinked the sleep from his eyes, sitting up slowly. “By whom, anyone know?”

“If I had to guess, and I’d say it was a very good guess,” the voice continued, “Carver.”

“Are you sure?” Red shifted the kinks from his back.

“If not, we have a new loony stripping flesh from people then making a rug from it.”

“Thank you for informing me.” Red stared vacantly as he hung the phone up, lost in thought.

The new Blacklister he had in mind to hand over to the team would have to wait. A new danger was on the horizon. A deadly one.

Laying back in his seat, he willed his eyes to close. The burning in his gut increased two-fold.

Things were about to get messy and violent, and there was nothing Red could do but try to catch the son of a bitch and make it all stop.

Elizabeth Keen stared at the phone, willing it to ring. For the past hour, there had been nothing. Even though Red had been in the middle of a fire fight earlier, he had been so blasé about the matter, that she felt she had no recourse but to wait for his return call.

She was so concerned that for a moment, she even considered tapping into his chip to pull up his location which would be an abuse of power, of course.

They weren’t working a case right now. He wasn’t technically needed.

But he was her asset...
She should know the welfare of the man, shouldn’t she? She convinced herself that was the reason she felt so unsettled.

Liz sighed, kinking the tension from her neck.

One hour. She’d give him one hour and then call. If he didn’t answer, she’d have him tracked, she decided.

After having cleaned her desk of the day’s paperwork, she shut down the lights, heading out of the office, trudging tiredly to her car.

Most people would be dancing their way out to the parking lot after their workday, but she had another night of fast food and an empty house waiting for her.

Okay, so maybe that part wasn’t so bad. She was more than glad Tom was gone.

The jerk.

“Let it go, Lizzy.” she muttered to herself, backing out of the parking spot. “Great, I’m calling myself Lizzy.” she sighed. “Even better, I’m talking to myself.”

She drove down the darkened streets, glancing right and left at her food options. With it getting late, her choices were limited, but she finally zeroed in on Chinese takeout and felt her stomach rumble in response.

“I know, ‘feed you’. ” she growled back, pulling up in front of her Savior for the evening.

Elizabeth dashed in, intent on grabbing something quick, but then smelled the heavenly food and ordered enough to feed an army. But not all was lost. It did heat up really well the next day.

The woman grabbed her bags, heading home. An overwhelming desire to see Hudson invaded her thoughts, then she remembered in the next second... someone else had her dog.

“Don’t even know where my damn dog is...” she grumbled, pulling up in front of the dark house.

She grabbed her things, wearily making her way up the stairs. Either she needed to add more cardio to her workout, or these stairs were steeper than yesterday.

Elizabeth pulled up short, glancing back at the offending steps. That little excursion had been exhausting.

After pushing her way inside the doors, she dropped her purse and keys on the nearby surface. She exhaled a sigh of relief, kicking off her shoes, making a beeline for the couch.

She plopped down heavily into its welcoming cushions, lifting her feet to the table.

She sat quietly, listening to the reassuring sounds of the house for a moment before grabbing a container of food, then the remote control.

She flipped through the channels mechanically, her agitation growing until finally she recognized something watchable. The woman sighed blissfully...

“Ahh, Mr. Darcy...” she smiled, “a better welcome home than I expected.”

She settled into the comfort of the couch, nibbling at her food. Within moments she was lost in the delectable, brooding, and right now... quite deliciously wet, Colin Firth.

Maybe the day wasn’t a complete loss after all.

During a short break in programming, she put her leftovers away, then started a load of laundry before settling back on the couch.

She immersed herself into Jane Austen’s world, blocking the outside from her thoughts.

An hour later, she jolted awake and upright to the incessant ringing of her phone.

She fumbled for the object in the room, highlighted only by the light of the television screen. It seemed forever before she heard the reassuring sound of his voice.

Red...

After assuring herself that the man was fine, she enjoyed the short chat. This Francis person was an amusing character. She could hear his constant remarks in the background and Red’s genuine annoyance amused her. He always seemed to surrounded himself with the most interesting people, to say the least.

Liz had told the older man to get some rest because he had sounded exhausted. Having hung up shortly after, she was in higher spirits and ready for bed.

Turning off the tv, she stood, stretching before heading upstairs.

She stepped in under the pounding spray which felt wonderful, the hot water of the shower beating down on her sore body, easing the aches.

A few minutes later, Liz grudgingly shut it down, finishing her nightly routine before crawling in between the sheets, moaning with relief. It felt like only seconds before her body molded to the bedding, her eyes drooping sleepily.

Glancing at the clock, the woman was surprised to find that she was actually getting to bed before midnight. An anomaly this week.

She yawned, curling into the comfort of her bed, falling asleep moments later.

Elizabeth’s eyes popped open, her ears alert suddenly. She blinked her tired eyes, looking at the clock and finding only an hour had passed.

What the hell was she awake for then?

She stretched, listening to the dark, quiet house, hearing nothing but silence and the air being circulated.

That must have been it. She had just started using the air conditioner a couple days back and wasn’t used to the sound yet.

She rolled over to her side, her legs closing together, an instant twinge infiltrating her body.

Not of pain, but arousal.

She hadn’t felt that in a while.

The woman grasped her pillow closer, snuggling into it, sighing when the cloth of her t-shirt brushed against her breast. She was embarrassed to admit, even here in the privacy of her own room... that had felt really good.

“How hard up are you that your clothes turn you on?” she muttered in irritation. She wiggled into a more comfortable position only to feel her arousal heighten.

She slapped her hand irritably on the bed, sighing heavily.

She was surprised to find herself swollen and slick, her clit more than wanting of some attention.

Well, no matter. She’d just take the edge off and go back to sleep.

Liz circled the peak of her sex, inching her closer to where she needed to be then increased the pressure on the bundle of nerves.

Sliding a hand under her shirt, she pulled and pinched her nipples, jerking into her hand in response.

She closed her eyes, floating in the haze of raising endorphins and pictured Darcy, with his dark penetrating gaze and ridiculously handsome face.

He was all of those things, handsome and brooding and prideful.

He had come to Elizabeth Bennet’s defense when Miss Bingley had cuttingly diminished the other woman’s fine eyes. He was a man’s man, and yet so sensitive in that he scoured the streets to find Wickham, to fix Elizabeth’s dire family situation.

The modern day Elizabeth had thought it so chivalrous. Romantic.

Red was a lot like Darcy, come to think of it.

Red was handsome, and there was an air about him... a confidence that was very attractive. It did not detract that the man knew it.

Or at the very least, he knew he wasn’t hard to look at. With his dapper dress, confident swagger and charming good looks.

Elizabeth could see the attraction.

He was ruggedly handsome, very manly. He had very masculine features that were appealing. His eyes and lips certainly drew your attention that was for sure.

Red had the most hypnotic shade of eye color that seemed to change with his moods. When he was in a playful mood, they were the softest, clearest blue. But when he was mad, they took a hunter green hue that boarded on being black.

If his full lips weren’t spouting five-syllable words with ease, they were leisurely wrapped around a cigar, spouting articulate prose.

Sometimes they were pursed in agitation or twitching in barely held amusement, which was charming. She had learned however, when they were expressionless, holding no sort of emotion... the man was highly pissed.

Regardless of his mood, the man was fascinating.
She sensed that he was very experienced in the art of kissing and that he did it well... as everything else he attempted.

Red Reddington was a chameleon, even his physical being seemed to adapt to his surroundings in any given situation.

While he was fastidiously groomed, he wasn’t above getting dirty. She had seen him covered in dirt, blood and other grime she couldn’t specify but he looked completely comfortable in such filth. As though he and such things were old companions.

But then, he’d also been quietly seething at the time and couldn’t be bothered by social niceties.

She had been so shocked by Red’s unusually unkempt appearance, she could not look away from the sight. Which she found at once both oddly sensual in nature, and yet somehow comforting.

Liz remembered that night vividly. The man had a deep cut across his scalp which he didn’t even appear to notice.

She never thought she’d be into balding men, but it somehow worked for Red.

She imagined that’s what he had looked like in his military career. She knew he had longer hair and other varying styles throughout the years, but something about that short shorn was where he appeared most comfortable.

After Tom and his six-pack and sinewy body, the thought that Red with his little paunch and broader body would be more appealing was confusing.

She felt a measure of comfort with her former husband when Tom held her, but until Red had done the same, she noticed a decidedly marked difference.

Thinking back now, Tom had offered a token state of expected emotional support.

But Red in his warmth and bulk, spoke of safety and protection.

She had the hardest time not snuggling into Red’s embrace. She wondered if he had noticed? When she felt that urge to cuddle into him, the man always tightened his hold, muttering soothingly to her. Often she found herself craving the contact.

Plain and simple, she found Red Reddington a very sexy man.

There was something about the way he talked, walked, stood... something, that spoke of an underlying sensuality that Tom couldn’t begin to muster.

She had yet to meet a woman who didn’t adore Red. They welcomed him with open arms or at the very least, unabashed flirtation. There was a definite underlying anticipation of wanting more from the man.

Even Madeline Pratt, in spite of the apparent bad blood between them, had turned on her sexuality when Red was present. It very obvious, she was still hopeful that he would offer her a weekend escape, if nothing else.

Elizabeth was more than intrigued. What the hell was he doing, or had done to them, that he had their continued loyalty and interest?

She personally could attest that Red was supportive and focused on her abilities, even when it appeared an older more experienced team leader like Ressler should have been his choice.

He bolstered her confidence when they had worked with Madeline. He had even escorted her on his arm like a gentleman and had danced with her.

Granted, she had been stiff in his guidance, but ever the gentleman, he hadn’t made fun of her lack of grace... too much.

“What the hell am I doing?” she whispered quietly to herself. “Get him out of your head.”

She sighed, focusing back on Darcy, and how he gazed at Elizabeth Bennet.

Darcy’s regard for his Elizabeth had grown, one could see it in his eyes or the subtle tilt of his lips. When Elizabeth had wept, the need to console, to hold her close had consumed the man.

For the first time, Darcy had met a situation he was incapable of handling. It had undone the man completely, shattering his usual reserve and confidence. He had finally broke, unable to take it any longer. He had rushed from the room, lest he do something improper.

Like take her in his arms as he yearned to do.

Fitzwilliam Darcy was a man for all ages... especially if you were a woman.

Only Red’s regard for women matched Darcy’s, in Liz’s opinion.

Red could stare at her sometimes, and she felt like the very center of his universe.

Which was probably silly to believe. In comparison to Red Reddington, she was a true simpleton. He was so worldly, so brilliant sometimes, thinking outside the box... where she was just trying to find her way out of the paper bag.

He never made her feel stupid. He did teach her however, coax her, guide her, but he’d wait for her to catch up if she was lost or slow on the uptake. She was learning to piece the clues together herself. He had taught her to think beyond the linear.

His intelligence, his ability to read people... she was completely captivated by it all.

“Damn, damn damn!” she gritted in annoyance. “Mr. Darcy, hot English guy! Looks great on the back of a horse.”

She focused on that, how he had looked on the horse, then flashed on him in the long coat and how well he wore his clothes.

How he had made that ruffled neckline seem masculine, she’d never know. But he had done it and so remarkably well. Darcy was all kinds of hot. Even with the clothes of the day and that too tall hat, he looked amazing.

She had to admit, Darcy would probably look great in a fedora. But then, she hadn’t seen anyone pull off the hat as well as Red. Sure, there were some old movie stars that wore it well, but Red owned it.

She had tried picturing it on Ressler, Aram and even Tom. But they always came out in her mind as looking like some boyish newspaper man working at the Daily Planet.

“What the hell am I doing!” she muttered tightly in confusion. “Focus...” she squeezed her eyes shut, sliding a finger into her core, petting her insides.
Darcy was so gentle when he had taken Elizabeth’s hand when he helped her from the carriage. His support was steady, but his hold on her, delicate.

Red was a lot like that. He was constantly setting his hand on her back, guiding her into a room. He opened doors for her.

He offered an arm to steady her. He’d help her over slick spots or catch her from sliding in the snow or mud, depending where they were.

His hands seemed to engulf hers, his touch always feather light and gentle. Those same hands could be deadly and uncompromising to a foe.

Over the course of his illustrious career, how many women were thinking the same thoughts about Red that she found herself thinking? She didn’t know if he was a wolf in sheep’s clothing or was he truly just that gallant?

He was a paradox she found absolutely enthralling.

The woman wiggled her fingers harder against her pleasure center, increasing the attention to her breast and felt herself teetering on the edge of an amazing climax.

When he touched her, his hand spanned the entire width of her back, making her feel incredibly feminine. Though the touch was light, his presence was intense.

His hands were warm, his fingers thick and strong. How did he touch a woman? Was he as gentle as she was accustomed or was he demanding? Was he teasing or attentive?

Liz rocked her hips, aiding her hand in her goal and felt the tale tell signs she was nearing the peak of passion she so craved. She felt electric shocks intensifying, vibrating into her clit. Her nipples strained tightly against her shirt, rubbing tantalizingly against the soft cotton.

Her mind shut down as she allowed her body to dictate her next agenda...

She gritted her teeth harshly, growling into the pillow for the phone was suddenly ringing most incessantly... again.

“Damn it!” she muttered dejectedly, fighting harder for some sort of release. “Just a few more seconds,” she squeezed her eyes tight, rocking harder against her tiring fingers, “please...”

The distraction fell thankfully silent, allowing her to refocus on Red’s hand...

“Oh my God...” she gasped tightly, shoving her mound against her fingers, finally quaking and pulsing, her thighs shaking as the phone made its presence known, yet again.

Liz slapped her hand to the nightstand, grabbing the phone, her mood certainly no better having only achieved an essence of what she might have.

Her slick fingers, wet and shaking, hit the answer button. The phone dropped from her trembling hand, clattering loudly on the hard wood of the floor.

“Shit...” she panted her lost equilibrium, hanging over the side of the bed, fumbling for the object in the dark room.

“Sweetheart?” she could barely hear Red’s tinny voice.

She grappled with the phone, the damned thing slipping just beyond each attempt.
“Lizzy?” the man called again. “Elizabeth!” he called out sternly.

She gripped the phone tightly, hastily bringing it to her ear. “Red...” she gulped breathlessly, the pulsing between her legs spiking.

“Sweetheart, are you all right?” Red’s voice was laced with concern.

“Yeah...” she took a shaky breath, pushing hard against her sex, getting her nerves under control. She swallowed hard clearing her throat a little, giving herself a second to collect her breath. “I dropped the damned phone.” she stated breathlessly. “What’s up?” she asked a little too casually for one in the morning.

“You tell me?” he asked seriously. “Is something wrong?”

“What do you mean?” she asked shakily, not immediately following his line of thought.

“Is someone there with you?” he asked tightly.

“You mean like...” she blushed. “I mean...”

Oh my God. Did he think he called in the middle of her having sex with someone? Could he tell she’d just...

Oh God. What had just happened? Had she just masturbated thinking about... Red?

“Are you in danger?” he growled impatiently. “Can you talk freely?”

She jerked back into the headboard, shocked from her previous thoughts.

“I... uh...” she stammered. “W-What?!?”

“Elizabeth, no one is that winded picking up a damn phone.” he replied, his tone clipped and focused. “I called before and you didn’t answer, now this.”

“Look, I was sleeping, the phone startled me, I had... lotion on my hands...” she grimaced, for that explanation had not sounded as stupid in her head. Nor had she meant to blurt it out like an idiot, “and I dropped the phone...” she finished weakly.

“I see...” the tone was expressionless.

She couldn’t be sure, but she was almost positive the bastard was smiling.

“And you’re alone?” he repeated.

“Yes, I’m alone.” she snapped.

“You’re shaking.”

Elizabeth looked down at her hand, lifting the shaking hand.

How the hell did he know that?

“I most certainly am not?” she defended herself staunchly, clenching her fists tightly.

“I can hear it in your voice.” he drawled slowly.
“I’m fine.” she swallowed heavily. “Why are you calling?”

Red was quiet for a beat, then sighed.

“I will be at the Post Office at nine to hand over a new case.”

“Didn’t we already discuss this?” she asked.

“No.” Red smiled at her barely held vexation. “I only said I’d come to the Post Office, not when.”

“Oh...” she pursed her lips, “right. What is thi–” she stopped, falling silent quickly when she heard the subtle whooshing sound, like a door opening.

“Liz–”

“Shh...” she hushed the man, straining to hear, her nerves jangling alarmingly.

She heard a muted sound from Red’s end. Then silence.

“Sorry, I thought I heard something.” she apologized, finally allowing herself a breath. “Where w–”

“What did you hear?” he asked tightly.

“I uh... nothing, I guess.” she shrugged mentally.

“What did you hear?” he repeated, stressing his words.

“I thought I heard a door open... or something.” she shrugged it off. “It was nothi–”

“You didn’t set your alarm.” he stated, knowing very well what the answer would be. She was horrible where her own safety was concerned.

“I... don’t remember.” she confessed weakly.

“Set it.” he fairly demanded.

Liz could almost see his jaw working into a frenzy with that one expression and knew he wouldn’t let up until she got out of her warm bed to set the damn thing.

And why she just didn’t hang up on him, was a mystery. Or was it?

If she hung up, he’d just send his goons over to check on her.

But there was also the fact... that she didn’t really want to hang up yet.

But why?

She sighed, rolling from the bed, huffing her annoyance before standing.

“My feet are cold.” she complained... childishly.

“So put some socks on.” he countered, listening as he perceived the small feet clumping grouchily to the keypad. He smiled slowly because he knew she was punching those numbers as hard as humanly possible.

“Happy now?” her tone was more than snarky.
“Stop pouting.” he scolded. “Especially since all I did was care for your well being.” he turned his mouth away from the phone, nodding his consent to a patiently waiting Dembe. The large man turned on his heel instantly attending to the task assigned.

Liz’s shoulders slumped, her tone filled with chagrin, “Sorry. I didn’t mean to sound so bitchy.”

“You’re tired.” Red brushed off her rudeness, just as he always did.

Come to think of it, he very rarely ever responded to her apologies except to make an excuse for her, just as he had this moment.

“Where is your weapon?” he enquired.

“Beside me.” she reached over, pulling it closer, yawning. “Look, I think I just heard the central air kick on and I’m not used t–” she gasped, as the sound of sudden beeps disturbed the quiet, shocking her to the core.

She stared transfixed at the wide open portal of her bedroom door, her nervous system suddenly on high alert. She sat frozen, unsure of her next move.

“Lock your door!” Red demanded quickly, having heard the alarm being disarmed from inside the house.

Red’s eyes flew to Dembe who was speaking with Elizabeth’s security team on the ground. The man cursed the fact that he himself, was thirty-thousand feet in the air.

“What’s wrong?” Francis had sat up from his comfortable position having noted his friends features and body language. The young man fell silent when Red held up a brisk hand.

Liz sprang from the bed, grabbing her gun, rushing for the door, her training kicking in. She stood rooted by the side of the wall every sense she possessed attuned to the sounds of her home.

“Lock the damn door.” he directed brusquely. “Do not move from that room.”

“Someone is in my house!” she hissed.

“And security is a minute away.” he snapped. “I would rather they not shoot you.”

Liz closed the door, locking it securely, waiting impatiently. She placed her ear to the door, listening for any movement. She wrapped her arm tightly around herself, warding off the cold which had suddenly invaded her body and mind.

She went numb as she heard quick footsteps on the hardwood floor downstairs.

“Are your guys inside my house?” she whispered huskily.

“Not yet.” Red advised curtly.

“I heard footsteps.” she hoped her voice did not belie her growing fear.

“How close?” was his only concern.

“Downstairs.”

Red relayed the information to Dembe, who relayed it forward.
“Back door, Red.” Liz guided the man’s efforts having heard the sound quite distinctly.

“Back alley.” Red orchestrated effortlessly, his voice an ever calming entity in Liz’s world.

Normally, she would feel foolish standing here waiting, being an armed, trained FBI Agent. But she realized, the person had left the premises. Red’s man had a better chance in locating the intruder.

She heard a car rev its engine, then the catch of tires peeling down the street.

Red muttered aside, keeping abreast of the situation.

“What’s going on?” Liz stated.

“My man saw a car speeding away from your area, he followed, got a make of the car.” Red relayed. “He lost the car in the alleys two miles over.”

She knew the area of which he spoke. It wasn’t just a fork in the rode, it was a web of offshoots.

She really freaking hated DC streets sometimes.

“Who knows your alarm code?” the man turned his attention fully back to the woman.

“I changed the codes after Tom left.” she said. “No one knows my codes...not even Aram.”

It was ridiculously simple to break the codes on today’s security devices, especially for someone as skilled as Tom. Red knew as much, but there was no need to worry the woman at this time.

He would have the matter looked into in the morning. Along with having her house swept for cameras, just on the off chance.

“You’re about to hear your door open, it’s only security.” Red notified.

“Should I go down?” she offered.

“The back door is unlocked, Lizzy.” the man reminded peevishly. “Stay where the hell you are...they’re going to sweep the house and make sure it’s empty.”

“And I so wanted to sleep tonight.” she quipped feebly.

“And you will.” he promised. “There will be guards outside tonight.”

“Those poor men.” she sighed heavily.

“This is a normal shift for them, Lizzy.”

She sat down on the bed, stretching her legs out, throwing the still warmed blankets over herself, then stared out into the darkened room.

She pulled the blankets higher under her chin, listening to the quiet chatter of Red as he spoke to Dembe. She could hear men moving around the house, totally reassured now.

“Is her door locked?” she heard Red ask some unknown individual.

“My damn door is loc–” she narrowed her eyes when she heard the handle jiggle, then Red scoff quietly.

“I do too!” she complained around her yawn.

“Name one time you’ve done what I said the first go round.” he asked, a smile in his voice, relaxed now that his men were there, protecting her.

She opened her mouth, then quickly closed it shut. She stared off into the darkness, trying hard to come up with a suitable answer.

“That’s what I thought.” Red grinned, pleased with his results. “Put your phone on speaker and sit it beside you. I’ll wake you if needed.”

“My bill will be outrageous.” she muttered.

“I’ll pay the damn bill.” Red exhaled in exasperation. “And thank you for proving my point, again.” he chuckled quietly. “Now, do it.”

She did as asked and rolled to her side, yawning again, listening to Red’s evened breathing.

“They’re watching, you can rest.” he reassured.

“You sleep too...” she yawned.

“I’ll rest.” he smiled softly, listening to her snuffle quietly as she drifted.

“Promise?” she mumbled sleepily, zoning off into his translucent voice talking, feeling herself float into a relaxed Zen state.

“I promise.” his eyes softened. “Sleep sweetheart...” Red coaxed. “I’m here...” he whispered quietly, as her breathing deepened as she fell into a peaceful sleep.
After a four-day break, the agents had caught up on paperwork and other necessary housekeeping that kept their tight ship running smoothly.

The quiet of the last day had lifted their spirits and as they entered the late afternoon, even the dour Agent Ressler seemed in a jovial mood.

The sound of the elevator descending had some in the area tensing. All eyes turned expectantly. After Anslo Garrick had breached the site, it paid to be cautious.

After a few moments, the door opened. Then a familiar voice called out, “Honey, I’m home.”

Aram and Samar smiled their relief that it was friend, not foe. Ressler’s face grimaced, his jovial mood a thing of the past.

Liz smiled sympathetically at her partner. They all knew of his hot date tonight and had been wishing that nothing would hamper his plans.

Unbeknownst to Ressler, the entire Post Office placed bets on whether or not he would score, and any info gained was a hot topic around the water cooler.

Red and Dembe came striding into the pen as cocky and blasé as ever.

Liz scanned them both for new wounds or physical ailments, finding none, relaxing mentally and physically.

As she watched Red swaggering toward them, grinning as though he had not a care in the world, she wasn’t sure why she had been so worried after the phone call had ended yesterday.

For a brief second, their eyes met and the facade he wove about himself dropped completely, replaced by a slight scowl of concern, a questioning look appearing on the handsome face.

Liz shook off his unasked questions with a brief gesture of her hand, her eyes reassuring the man all was well. She was having difficulty holding the penetrating gaze, lowering her eyes, shifting about almost anxiously.

He inclined his head briefly in response.

She cleared her throat gently, busying herself with paperwork she had already addressed.

Reddington’s mouth curved sensually, sensing the reason behind the woman’s sudden awkward state. He gallantly gave her a reprieve putting his private thoughts aside for the moment.

Although his security team had assured Elizabeth’s safety, both last night and of course, her arrival to the Blacksite itself... Reddington felt better after seeing the woman himself.

The fact that she trusted in him to protect her, was a moment of epic proportions for a host of reasons.
The one upper most in his mind at this exact moment in time... had shocked him. Not an easy task by any stretch of the imagination.

The whole episode itself had been so unlike Elizabeth Keen. A pleasant change, to say the least.

Red replayed the events as they had happened, his mind wandering briefly.

A minute smile touched his lips.

He allowed himself just a second to imagine that he was hearing that breathy voice in his ear once again, not through the phone, but as he lay next to her.

The sweet moment was shattered by the incessant ringing of a thousand phones. He grimaced irritably, brought back all too soon from a very pleasant visual.

Reddington shifted the burden in his arms, trying to retain his train of thought.

Surely she didn’t see anything wrong with self pleasuring. Aside from being perfectly healthy and an activity he very much loved watching, it was a need.

For a beautiful young woman such as Elizabeth, just hitting her prime, it was an incessant need. Especially with everything going on in her life... the stress relief, the rush of endorphins, the high of orgasm...

It was just what Lizzy needed even if she wasn’t aware.

Its effects seemed to be filtering over into today.

They had silently communicated, and it had felt as comfortable, as natural, as it was between he and Dembe.

A week ago she would have avoided the evening’s events, acted as though they had never happened.

The subtle gesture she had offered spoke volumes. There would be further discussion on the matter, simply at a more opportune time.

He was satisfied with the outcome so far.

“She should masturbate more often...” Red mumbled to himself, but obviously not low enough when Dembe’s mouth turned upward at the corner, having heard the innocuous remark. Red shared a small tilt of his head with his friend, then shrugged as if to say, Well, she should.

The man scanned the group, frowning when he reached Ressler’s pouting features.

“How the long face?” Red pointed his chin in the strawberry blondes’ direction.

“He has a date tonight.” Aram helpfully supplied.

“You can always back out if she’s that bad, Donald.” Red looked confused, setting down his burden. “Tell her someone died.”

Liz and Samar exchanged perplexed glances over the nondescript boxes Red had sat aside, their curiosity more than piqued.

“He wanted to go.” Liz shrugged her slender shoulders. “But now that you’re here...”
“Have no fear Donald.” the man smiled, whipping the fedora from his head with a flourish. “If you’re positive you still wish to go.” Red shrugged.

Donald eyed the felon warily. “You didn’t come here to give us a new name from the Blacklist?”

“I did.”

Ressler deflated, Red held his smile. “But he will not be state side for another two days. I am merely here to give warning.”

“How do we have a name?” Liz asked.

“A killer for hire. A psychopath who calls himself Carver.” Red sat on the stool, spinning it in Lizzy’s direction. “You’ve probably seen his handiwork throughout the States, but hadn’t connected the modus operandi.”

“Then what am I looking for exactly, Mr. Reddington?” Aram asked meekly his hands poised over the keyboard.

“Carver strips the flesh from his victims, usually hanging the pieces along a handy line of rope, like putting out the laundry. Even uses the clothes’ pins.” Red’s mouth pinched with distaste, “I’m not a fan of his work. After you’ve stripped a line or two, if they haven’t talked, they’re not going to. He finishes out of pure enjoyment.”

Having seen some of the worst of which people were capable, Red was surprised to note some of the faces present, exhibited a range of emotions. Some squeamish, some disturbed, all taken aback by the information given.

“This is a man who takes extreme pride and delight in his work, who ends his ‘slice and dice’ by carving the initials, CRVR.” Red scratched his head, “I have to wonder,” he had to admit, “if you’ve gone to the trouble of going that far, why not add the vowels?” he scoffed at the stupidity of it all.

“And you know he’s coming here, how?” Ressler asked.

“He’s taken out two of my associates in the last few weeks.” Red said. “It only makes sense that he’d come for Edward.”

“And why is that?” Liz paused in her writing. “And who is this Edward?”

“Besides Edward being a weasel of a human being, it’s a food chain.” Red explained. “Edward is somewhere near the bottom but a vital connection.”

“And where are you on this chain?” Liz had to ask.

“Sweetheart, I’m always on top.” Red leered playfully.

Samar’s full lips curved into an inviting grin.

Liz tried very hard to not be amused, “So why didn’t he come after you?”

“He wasn’t hired to come after me.” Red waved his hand nonchalantly, “These men are loose ends and need to be erased. It could be a contract gone south, an action not performed to the specifications of the hiring party. Any and all of the above.”

“Who are these guys in the grand scheme of things?” Liz queried.

“Of what exactly?” Ressler asked.

“Drugs, arms, miscellaneous merchandise.” Red shrugged, giving a noncommittal shake of his head. “They moved what needed to be moved. If they were paid enough, I’m sure they weren’t discriminatory.”

Not having limited his search parameters, had slowed Aram’s success greatly.

“I think I’ve found something.” the nervous young man piped in, popping pictures up on the screen’s overhead. “I’m still running a search to see how far back this signature goes.”

Liz looked up at the grotesque pictures, grimacing. “How did no one see they were connected?”

Red studied the photographs closely, his innate sense of humanity coming to the fore. He glanced away, disheartened.

“If someone didn’t enter it into the database correctly, there would have been an oversight.” Red said. “He changes it up each time in some small way.”

“Do you know any of these people, Reddington?” Ressler demanded.

“Thirteen of the twenty.” Red refused to look back at the pictures behind him.

“But you don’t know the others?” Cooper was curious having entered the Pen a few minutes back.

“These were husbands, wives, bosses.” Red picked up his fedora, smoothing the rim. “Normal people, personal hits. They weren’t even felons or criminals.” the man’s shoulders slumped slightly as he crossed the room, “Looks like he didn’t discriminate about where the work came from either.”

“All right people, let’s get this sorted.” Cooper said, limping to the clear boards, tacking up a picture as a starting point.

Three hours later and the agents had a working time line, not that it would really be of any use in the following days.

The FBI way of doing things, the procedures, the routines, gathering evidence for court, made Red want to vomit. So much time wasted, so many resources that could be put to better use. Often, Reddington had rethought his affiliation with such people or such a system, rather.

He knew why he had done it, but he found the tedium unbearable at times.

He had sat out of the way, rereading War and Peace. It seemed appropriate, since the length of the book was equal to the amount of time misspent.

At least he had filled them with scrumptious food which everyone had seemed to greatly appreciate. Such a break fed the body, true, but also the mind.

Dembe amused himself with New York Times crossword puzzles. He originally had tried to emulate his Mentor, using only ink. Red smiled to himself, for the man now had downgraded to pencil.

Cooper’s loud voice, stilled the scurrying agents. “Now people, we’re moving on to...”
“Oh for God’s sake Harold! Let them go.” Red said smoothly, not looking up from his book. “It’s Friday night. Ressler has a hot date. How often does that happen?”

“Reddington,” Cooper objected strenuously, “we have a lot to do here.”

“All of that,” Red pointed to the pictures wrapped around three walls, “is not going to help you catch him.”

“Then why did we do it?” Cooper asked disgustedly

“I don’t know why you’re upset with me,” Red sipped at his tea. “I only said, take a look at his work, not make a book report out of it.” he shut the book gently. “Not all is lost,” he waved over the data nonchalantly, “you’ll need this for the courts,” he muttered quietly, “assuming you get Carver there at all.” he sat his book aside.

“You have no faith in us Red?” Coopers tone mellowed, having heard the remark.

“I get the feeling that he’s not a ‘take me alive’ type of guy.” Red stood, walking to the neglected boxes. Aram’s interest was immediate and focused. “You may get him, but it won’t be a walk in the park.”

Red grabbed the top package, handing it over with a flourish to Cooper. “For you and Charlene.”

Cooper removed the top of the box to reveal a slew of fresh made chocolates. The smell was mouth watering.

The others craned their head to see the contents.

“While we were in Italy, we happened upon the most amazing confectioner who didn’t seem to have one particular specialty.” Red peered in the box. “Not that it mattered, everything was so delicious.” he checked with Dembe. “I think we gained ten pounds.” Dembe nodded to his smiling friend in agreement.

“Steal a piece or two Harold.” It was advised. “Charlene won’t let you near it when you get home, and you know as much.”

Cooper gingerly pulled out a small piece, biting into the soft chocolate. “Delicious. Absolutely delicious,” the man smiled warmly. Holding out the box to share with the others. “Thank you, Reddington. Charlene will be pleased.”

“Oh... my... God!” Both women burst out in unison as they savored the delicacy. One would have thought they were having a religious experience.

Ressler and Aram had swallowed theirs whole, not understanding what the big deal was about. Both exchanged perplexed glances.

Red lips quivered with amusement watching the pair, Dembe, bowed his head slightly hiding his big grin.

Aram fingered the stack of remaining boxes, questioningly. “That’s a lot of candy.”

“Have no fear ladies,” Red stated, passing box after box to the correct recipient, “I’m not completely idiotic.”
Beautifully wrapped gift boxes of expensive chocolates seemed secondary to the larger items embossed with name brand designer labels.

Respective mouths dropped. Samar and Elizabeth did not have to be told twice. Both ripped the tops off their packages, eagerly gazing inside, having moved aside tissue paper.

Liz’s blue eyes widened, and she gasped, stunned. A silver pair of the most amazing high-heeled shoes with intricate straps shimmered in the light. If she had to classify them upon first sight, she would have said Cinderella could not have worn anything except these fantastic shoes to the Ball.

Samar gently fingered the champagne straps running her nail from toe to ankle. Red crooked his head, bending lower. “Agent Navabi,” his voice held a trace of awe, “I don’t think I’ve ever truly seen you smile.”

Liz’s eyes grew even larger as she held up for all to see, the handbag which matched her phenomenal gift, perfectly.

Samar’s voice almost squealed her delight holding up her own matching purse. “I know!”

“One simply does not go to Italy and not buy shoes.” Red nodded knowingly, again checking his facts with Dembe who stroked his chin thoughtfully, in total agreement.

The women were inspecting their gifts, feeling the cushy and supple insides of the shoes, running their fingers delicately over the beautiful lines, mesmerized.

Red playfully waved a hand under their faces and chuckled when neither woman acknowledged him in the least.

Aram held up his black shoes, a perplexed look on his face. “Uh, thank you Mr. Reddington.”

Ressler who had been just as lost, frowned hard at his own nine hundred-dollar pair of shoes.

“God, you are such barbarians.” Red punctuated the next sentence carefully and slowly, “Put... them... on.”

Aram immediately did his bidding, sitting hastily pulling the rich leather over his feet. Ressler scratched his head, looked around for a seat, found one and followed suit.

Both men stood carefully, their expressions altering drastically.

“Aweome...” Aram exclaimed, glancing at Ressler’s feet and then his own again.

Ressler looked at the shoes in wonderment. “Damn.”

Red ticked off his fingers, “I gave you the flight number, time of arrival, a very detailed description of the man...” he seemed at a loss. “And you lost him? What did you do, send Ressler?”

Ressler weakly defended himself, “Navabi was there too.”

“You two shouldn’t broadcast that fact.” Red laughed, holding his stomach. “Donald, you constantly exceed my expectations.”

He turned his attention to the business at hand. “Edward, is not as of yet, in the State. Which might buy us a couple days.”
“Carver won’t track him down?” Liz asked.

“Carver has already been paid to do the job. He’ll bide his time.” Red supplied. “If you’re lucky, he’ll take a couple days off, go sightseeing.”

“The cherry blossoms are in bloom this time of year.” Aram helpfully piped in.

Everyone glanced curiously at the man. Reddington waved his hands expressively, shutting his eyes in remembrance. “Ah, the fragrance. So wonderful.”

Cooper chuckled the tension from the room.

“You don’t think he’ll take on another job?” Liz got things back on track.

“Do you know where he might go to ground?” Ressler said.

“Who knows who could die while we’re waiting for this Edward to show up.”

Red could feel all their frustrations, especially Liz’s.

“We’ll find him.” he reassured, knowing full well there could be a high head count by the time they were done.

Red Reddington was damned frustrated.

His men were down to the last popular flop on the list, every major hiding place known to man, and they had turned up nothing.

Red was the best at making people disappear, so not being able to find someone as despicable as Carver, left an itch under his skin that wouldn’t go away.

The filthy bastard may not be in the city, granted, but his men were the best at their jobs. They knew people who knew people. With a tri-state search going on for the psychopath, they had nothing...

When he came face to face with the son of a bitch, and he would, eventually. Red knew he would definitely have the asshole questioned in depth by Brimley.
The upcoming character, Silas, is based on Baz.

Unsure if it was allowed to use a real person in fictional fanfic - I just changed his name.

But Silas for all intents and purposes, is Baz.

April 1

“Do you wish for me to call Elizabeth?” Dembe asked from the driver’s seat.

Red focused his eyes to the front, shaking his head. “I’ve grown so fond of the annoyance that flashes across her lovely face when I show up unexpectedly.”

Dembe chuckled softly as they turned the corner, inclining his head to the right of the street. Red glanced over. Elizabeth and Samar were walking down the sidewalk to a popular bistro.

“I can turn the car around so you can see these facial expressions delivered in their natural habitat.”

“Circle the block and come back.” Red’s tone changed from playful to serious.

Dembe did as instructed.

“I saw Tom.” Red supplied.

Dembe looped around carefully so as to not draw attention, coming slowly back up the street. He slipped into an empty slot, leaving the engine running.

Both men watched Tom Keen’s progress. The slimy bastard paralleled the women’s movements, stopping when they entered the delicatessen.

“I doubt, Raymond,” Dembe said, “that he will approach, seeing as Agent Navabi is with her.”

Red picked up his cell phone, punching in a number. “I think Dembe, I can kill two birds with one stone and still get that irritation I so enjoy.”

The bistro answered, Red described the two women and placed his order. He put his hand over the speaker, “Dembe, what would you like to eat?”

Dembe never took his eyes off Tom Keen, replying casually, “My usual, hold the pickles.”

Red sat back after the call, getting more comfortable in the seat. He watched the women through the large plate-glass windows of the establishment.

At length, the cashier at the counter slid a large bag across to Elizabeth Keen, waving away her attempt to pay. Red chuckled lowly watching the woman’s head dip in defeat. She turned to the window, scanning rapidly.
Having found his location, she flipped him the bird then turned away, but not before Red saw the grin spreading across her face.

Red’s chuckle turned into a genuine laugh as Tom Keen made a hasty exit down a convenient alley way.

“He thought she was flipping him off.” Red saw the humor in the situation. He leaned closer to the window to get a better view then muttered to himself.

“But that gesture was just for me.” his tone was laced with pride.

Dembe slid out into the light traffic easily, pulling up along the curb just as the women exited the restaurant.

Elizabeth grasped Samar’s elbow, directing them to their ride. She automatically headed for the backseat, leaving Samar to the front. Dembe seemed to appreciate the gesture.

“Ladies, what a pleasant surprise running into you here.” Red said cheerfully as they each took their respective seats.

“Aren’t you just the sweetest stalker ever, buying our lunch.” Liz grinned placing the large bag between them.

He smiled charmingly. “Dembe, the park.”

They sat together at a picnic table, Dembe actually joining them, sitting opposite him for a change. And of course, next to Samar.

“I’m glad we took some time. It’s nice out today.” Samar looked up, basking under the sun as she bit into her sandwich.

Dembe pulled his attention from his watchful surveillance. Red’s eyes shifted absently from this spot to that, both men always alert and cautious.

“Yeah,” Liz grimaced, picking small pieces off her sandwich, “the fresh air was needed after seeing more of Carver’s portfolio.”

“I’m only sorry that we have to go back so soon.” Samar smiled openly at Dembe.

Having cleaned up their wrappers, Red escorted the women back to the car. Each man respectively opening and seating the occupants inside.

As they neared the Post Office, Liz leaned over, speaking conspiratorially. “Is something wrong?”

Red’s eyes trained on the back of Samar’s beautiful black hair.

“Samar,” Elizabeth took the hint, “I shouldn’t be too long. I don’t think? Why don’t you go on ahead?”

Dembe escorted the woman to the door. Samar smiled up at him charmingly before entering the building.

“Tom was following you.” Red stated bluntly.

Elizabeth’s head whipped around, “I don’t know when he started or for how long he’s been tailing you.” Red answered the unasked question.
“Can’t you ask one of the guys you have following me?”

“I don’t have anyone on you.” Red pulled out his phone, dialing. “You told me to back off, so I did, against my better judgement.” the man spoke into the phone brusquely, “Resume normal operations pertaining to Ms. Keen.” he nodded shortly. “Yes, thank you.” he hung up, returning his stare to her. “I want you to stay with me for a couple of days.”

“Why would I do that?” she asked neutrally.

“Because you had no idea you were being followed.” Red continued, motioning curtly. “Because your house has terrible security.” she rolled her eyes as he continued. “Because you aren’t ready to face him yet.”

She stopped, having to confront the truth, her spirits sinking. “I don’t think I’ll ever be.”

“I think you will, but until then,” he advised gently, “stay with me until we get your security upgraded.”

He watched her battle her demons, sensing her will weaken.

“He hurt you last time. The bastard held a gun to your head.” It was reminded. “Please don’t make me come over to find he’s done worse. Especially when it can be prevented.”

She looked at him, astounded by his forthrightness, then nodded. “Okay . . . ”

Accompanying her into the Post Office, Red stayed out of her way, genuinely trying to avoid annoying the woman for a change. After making preparation to update her security system, he waited patiently about for her work day to end.

He had gained her trust, and he wasn’t going to do anything to shatter the fragile peace.

She approached him tentatively, “Everything is wrapped up for now.” she crinkled her nose, “Would it be an imposition to swing by my place to get a few things?”

He took hold of her arm, causing her to hastily grab her bag as he guided her through the hallways to the elevator. She adjusted the strap on her shoulder.

“What exactly are they doing at the house and how long will it take, do you know?”

“Probably three days, I’m guessing.” Red pushed the elevator button. “The technical side would bore you to tears. I know I had a good cry over the phone when Silas was trying to explain it all to me.” he patted her hand reassuringly, “Let’s just say, you’ll be as safe as a virgin in a chastity belt.” he chuckled happily. “Not that, that applies to you of course.”

She gave him an old-fashioned look, removing her arm from his grasp.

“What?” he asked innocently, trying to hold his smile.

Her brow furrowed deeply, a thought striking her, “What about Hudson? He’s staying with a friend, but I can’t impose forever.”

“You may bring him if you wish.”

His response actually surprised her. He didn’t seem the type to be fond of dogs or any pet, per se, “Thank you very much.” she replied hesitantly. Totally shocked.
Her thoughts returned to their previous conversation, “Three days?” She questioned. “Don’t you think that’s a little overkill for a new alarm system?”

“For what we’re up against... it’s not enough.”

Arriving at her place fifteen minutes later, Red walked behind her until she reached the top step of the brownstone. She fumbled in her purse for the keys. Red’s hand stilled her movements, she glanced up, perplexed.

Dembe stood silently a few feet away, his eyes vigilant.

A quick silencing motion to Red’s lips, quieted Elizabeth’s natural inquiry. He waggled his fingers, and she handed over her keys. The man silently placed the key in the lock, turning it quietly, easing the door open.

Dembe was suddenly at the man’s side, all but pushing the woman from the vicinity.

Both men crept inside, weapons’ at-the-ready. Red’s arm snaked out preventing Elizabeth her intended movement, holding her back behind the safety of his bulk.

The stocky man inched around the doorframe, just seeing the leg of someone fleeing the room. Rushing forward, he fired off a shot, the bullet splintering the doorframe where the assailant had been.

Red motioned Dembe forward.

Both men headed toward the back of the house, quickly but cautiously. The back door stood wide open and Dembe dashed from the premises into the silent dusk of a day just ending.

Liz whispered, “You’ve got ears like a damn bat.”

Red holstered his weapon, “Are you all right?” he asked.

She nodded in compliance.

“Look around.” Red advised. Stepping to the door, he checked the lock, then closed the door. “Is anything out of place or missing that you can see?”

The woman walked the room slowly, “I don’t see anything out of the norm.” She turned back at one point. “Was it Tom?”

The man did not bother replying, “Don’t worry about it right now. If there’s anything in here worth finding my men will secure it later.”

Dembe returned, a silent shake of his head indicating Tom Keen had vanished into the night.

Red clapped the man on the shoulder.

“You’re getting old, Dembe. You could have scaled that wall two months ago easily.” Red teased. He held his grin. “No more Twinkies for you.”

Dembe raised unamused eyes then glanced pointedly at Red’s developing waistline. It was Red’s turn to frown. “You know I can’t resist Baklava.” he turned to a pensive Elizabeth Keen, “Lizzy, do you think I’m fat?”

The woman, in no mood to reply, obviously, frowned. “Let’s get you packed shall we.”

“Aren’t you glad God created takeout?” Red handed her a bag of food, shifting about the spacious backseat of the car.

Liz took the food absently as she glanced out the window at the two-story stone facade of a beautiful Victorian house. Red stooped down a tad following her line of sight.

“My newest acquisition.” he turned his head, his mouth suddenly very close to hers. “I enjoy owning things.”

Liz felt the warm breath fan her face, his breath smelling of cinnamon. He handed over her purse, sliding out of the opposite car door. Ever the gentleman, he came around to assist her from the vehicle.

“You go ahead,” he motioned, to the well-lit walkway, “we’ll be right there.”

She nodded, stumbling a bit as she walked up the beautifully etched walkway to the inviting entryway. She passed through the two side bushes, the fragrant blooms distracting her.

She started visibly, for a long-haired, bearded man stepped out suddenly from the shadows.

“Jesus!” she reached for her gun automatically, her purse falling from her fingers, landing with a heavy thud on the ground.

She managed to keep the food bag safe and sound on her free arm. In the night air the delicious whiffs of food were washed away by the shot of adrenaline racing through her body.

“Really, Silas?” Red stepped up behind her, easing her tension with a gentle stroke of his hand down her back.

“Lizzy, this is your new bodyguard, Silas.” Red held his smile. “How’s he doing so far?”

Liz dropped her weapon to her side, sighing, exasperated.

Dembe stepped past the trio, opening the door, sending the new Head of Security a doubtful glance.

“I’m sorry, Ma’am,” the bulky man smiled gently to ease her discomfort. “I’m used to lurking about. I’ll do better in the future, I promise.”

Elizabeth clutched the bag of food placing her hand to her heart, attempting to calm her frayed nerves.

“She’s a little jumpy, Silas.” Red explained. “She had an unexpected intruder in her home.”

“Was it you?” Silas smiled at the woman, who laughed the tension away.

“How you paint me.” Red scolded with his look. “Silas, could you have someone grab the bags?”

They entered the spacious foyer, Red unburdening her load. The man crossed to a nearby bar, pouring a vintage Merlot.
Dembe reappeared from the kitchen, loaded down with plates and cutlery.

Elizabeth followed Red into the enormous dining area, her eyes settling on one interesting object after another. The man handed her the glass of wine.

“This will steady your nerves.” he took a mouthful before handing it over to her, “and mine.”

They sat down pulling out containers, Red spooned out decidedly large proportions, handing out plate after plate.

“Stop thinking,” the man held up a fork. “Just eat.”

Liz sat back looking glumly at her food for all of two seconds, concentrating fully on the gourmet selection before her, before diving in with a relish.

Throughout the meal, both men exchanged amused glances at the enthusiasm with which the woman consumed her food.

The woman looked down at her empty plate. Good grief. Had she eaten all of that?! A mischievous thought hit her.

She held out the plate, taking on a childlike innocence, bat the lashes, coyly, “May I have some more please, sir?” She asked using her very best English accent.

Red threw back his head, laughing heartedly, shoving over one of the larger containers with a careless hand. “Here you little waif... enjoy.”

Dembe shook his head in open amusement, returning to his meal.

Liz stuck her fork into the soft gooey offering, bringing a small bite to her lips, smelling the decadence long before it reached her tongue. She closed her eyes letting a sweet sound build in her chest.

“Nirvana.” she whispered sacredly. She took another bite, savoring long and hard, “My hips are going to hate me later.” she suddenly didn’t give a shit.

“That sound you just made gave me an erection.” Red mentioned in passing as he took another bite of his food.

Dembe chuckled appreciatively from the opposite side of the table.

Liz’s mouth fell open but then the woman waved her fork in the air, signifying, I’ll get to you later, instantly returning to her glorious piece of heaven.

“Who needs flowers or diamonds, Dembe,” Red wanted to know, “when you can stuff them with chocolate mousse fudge brownie cake.”

Elizabeth Keen followed Red Reddington docilely as he led her throughout the spacious luxurious surroundings. The man had explained on the ride over that this house would be their temporary lodgings for the time being.
The man opened the doorway, having bypassed three subsequent ones, stepping sideways, to usher her in.

Liz’s eyes swept her new surroundings, her mouth falling gently agape.

A gothic four-poster canopy bed centered the room. To the left was a gigantic marble fireplace over which hung a magnificent ocean scape. Liz was immediately drawn to the stormy, almost violent hues of the choppy waters and the full mast sailing vessel that weathered the tempestuous waves.

Liz had difficulty pulling her eyes from the strange beauty of the painting.

“I stole that painting... do you like it?”

Elizabeth scowled at the man, never quite sure when he was being serious. “Don’t tell me things like that... but I do love it.”

A ladies desk sat to the right of the fireplace, an oversized stuffed chair lay silently awaiting its occupant.

Red had disappeared momentarily into another room. Seconds later she heard the inviting rush of taps being turned to full on. The man reappeared instantly, a smile on his lips. He waved an imperious hand.

“Towels are in there.” he indicated a side cupboard. “Along with a nice clean fluffy robe, stolen from the Hyatt just last week.” his facade had not cracked one iota. The woman sighed heavily, her head dropping slightly for the unnecessary rejoinder.

“Dembe is upstairs, and I’m across the hall.” he closed the shutters, shutting out the night. “Divide and conquer. That’s my motto . . . actually it’s Dembe’s, but I stole it.”

The man stepped a few steps closer, his eyes softening. He placed his hands on her upper arms, rubbing gently. “Take a long relaxing bath, Lizzy. After today, if anyone deserves it, you do.”

His hands fell away. She smiled up at him. “You could tempt Satan himself.”

“I have him on payroll.” he turned slowly, halting by the bedside. Red lifted his eyes, “Drink the wine sweetheart... you’re tense.”

She took quick stock of her body language finding his statement true. She dropped her shoulders, rolling her head back and forth as her hand squeezed her neckline to ease the growing headache.

“What the hell does he want?” she had to ask the question. “Why can’t he just leave me alone?”

Red did not pretend to misunderstand. “Tom Keen is a sociopath. You told him, no.” he shrugged stocky shoulders. “His job was to get the Fulcrum, he failed. Two very wrong things in his world.”

Short and to the point. Sometimes she appreciated it, but only sometimes.

She crossed to the window, then retraced her steps. The blinds had been closed.

“I used to love that house. When I bought it. It was mine. My home. Now,” she sighed, “now I don’t want to go there. I don’t want to be there... I hate it.”

He reached out, pushing the hair off her shoulder, “No big decisions tonight. You’re safe. You’re secure. Tonight just, let it go... trust me.”
He handed her the glass of wine, pushing her toward the oasis awaiting her. “Soak until you shrivel, then sleep.”

“You don’t have to twist my arm.” she absently unbuttoned the first three buttons of her silk blouse. Kicking her heels aside, her mind already settling into a relax mode.

“Nothing can harm you here.” Red’s voice soothed her.

Closing the bathroom door behind him, he leaned into the doorframe, blowing out a breath. He shut his eyes, pushing away the vision of her half-undone shirt and that scrumptious glance of pale skin. He forced his breathing to calm, shaking his head slightly for his lack of control. He left the bedroom.
Let it Simmer

Liz awoke, surprised to find herself refreshed and rested, having slept the entire night through. She had, last night, instantly melted into the plush warmth of the most comfortable bed she had ever known.

She reluctantly sat up, stretched, throwing the back the blankets, she padded to the bathroom. Forty minutes later, dressed and famished, she headed out, fastening the watch on her wrist. She followed the smell of delicious food down the corridor and the foyer steps.

She found Red and Dembe in the kitchen. Dembe looked up from his coffee and Red, sleeves rolled up was slaving over a hot stove.

He sat a plate with a fluffy omelet beside Dembe, waving his spatula with a flourish. “An Army travels on its stomach.” he declared with a finality that she found amusing.

“Are you going to attack someone today?” she jested, taking her seat, the fantastic aroma of the food making her mouth water.

Dembe shifted his eyes in a non-committed manner. Liz’s smile slipped a tad then craned her neck searching out Red Reddington. “You aren’t, are you?”

“What time is it?” Red asked absently, sitting his pan aside, going to pour everyone a fresh cup of coffee.

“Almost ten.” Dembe answered smoothly, his nose seemingly buried in the morning headlines.

Liz bolted upright. “Oh my God, I am so late.”

Red hands cupped her shoulder gently receding the woman, “Everyone has the day off. Except me, of course.” he pointed at Dembe who had glanced up surreptitiously. “And him.”

Dembe’s scowl deepened.

“Sorry big guy, you’re needed.” Red placed cream and sugar in Dembe’s cup. “I’ll buy that new Ducati you’ve been pestering me to get.” Dembe’s frown disappeared. The man went back to his newspaper.

“And what do I do?” Liz wanted to know. “What are you gonna buy me?”

“Do you want a new Ducati too?”

Red sighed, seeing the woman’s expression had not changed one iota. “Read a book, do yoga, take up water coloring.” He exasperated. “What do you usually do on your days off?”

She pouted effectively, her tone sullen. “None of the above.”

Then Red sighed again, pulling her along, making his way to his office. Liz pulled away quickly, hastily retracing her steps, grabbing her plate and coffee.
After finishing her book, Liz toured the house walking room to room.

The place was enormous. Just on the east side of the two story building she had found two sitting rooms, two bathrooms, a game room, an entertainment room and an atrium. In her search, she found Red Reddington sitting in a semi-enclosed porch, drink and cigar in hand, enjoying the evening air.

“There you are.” she said as she neared him. “I’ve been looking all over for you.”

“What did you need?” he reached to roll the cherry off the end of the fragrant smoke.

“That smells good, please don’t put it out.”

He put the tip back to his lips, tonguing the end then drew on the cigar, blowing the smoke out in a thin stream.

“Anything new on the western front?”

“No, nothing yet.” He waved his cigar aimlessly, “Not that I mind, to be honest.”

“Tired?”

“Yes.”

She was a little shocked that he had answered her so simply.

“From what I know of Carver, when he does surface, it’ll be messy and eventful.” he rubbed his eyes tiredly, “I’m not looking forward to it.”

“We’ve dealt with worse, haven’t we?” Something was making the hair on the back of her neck stand on end.

“There are too many unknown variables in play.” he thought aloud.

“And Tom isn’t helping any.”

“He needs to get the Fulcrum and will do whatever it takes.”

“I don’t know anything about the Fulcrum.” she exasperated.

He lifted consoling eyes, “That’s enough for today, Lizzy, not to worry. I have it covered.”

“He won’t give up.”

“He’ll get it or you,” Red mumbled, puffing on his cigar, “over my dead body.”

Liz had spent the last two days with Red and Dembe. The only development so far, was that Edward Costa had been found, in New Jersey of all places. Red’s crew kept tabs on him and now it was a waiting game.

Red had scheduled a meeting with the man for the following night via an associate.
During her time with the two men Liz had smiled frequently at the lively discussions concerning books and music. Both men were well read, versed in many different subjects. Liz was fascinated by the array of knowledge Red Reddington possessed. The man had scattered a potpourri of weird facts throughout any narrative he undertook.

Liz found herself laughing out loud on many different occasions. As for Red, his thoughts often turned to Carver. The itch under his skin grew each day that the bastard was not found.

This guy was like Houdini.

Red settled back into the comfort of his dining room chair, shifting his body, lifting his chin regally. Tonight they dined on amazing Mexican dishes from one of Red’s favorite ‘hole in the wall’ establishments. And he had to say, he was enjoying watching Liz enjoy the meal. Truth told, he had enjoyed each meal with her. She had taken such pleasure in each and everyone.

“Do you have copies of the Stewmaker’s victims on your computer?” Red asked, before sipping from his beer.

“I thought I might be able to assist you with identifying a few.” Red waved his hand casually about.

“Narrow down your search.”

The woman eyed him warily, and Red saw her hesitation, perplexed by it.

“Lizzy, I assure you,” Red assured her, leaning forward slightly, his arm resting on his thigh, “I have nothing to gain by offering my assistance.” his brow furrowed slightly, “Although, perhaps I did.”

He had her full attention. “About five years ago I was having a minor rivalry with a man named Hector Pineda.” his chin heightened, his eyes narrowing into a slight slit. “We were both vying for a large deal, his supply was closer... my shipment arrived first.” he shook his head and leaned forward slightly. “Because I’m just that good.” the man leaned back totally satisfied himself. “I didn’t hear anything out of him after that.”

His mouth pursed thoughtfully, and he seemed in deep concentration for a long spell.

“You gained a financial boost from his disappearance.” It was summed up.

“A very large one, yes.”

The woman stuck her fork in her mouth as she stood, gesturing for Red to wait and took off to her bedroom. Several minutes later she returned with her laptop. Red held his smile, reaching behind him for a ream of paper and a couple of pens.

“I’ll look, you write.” He said as he pulled out the seat next to him and slid her plate across the table.

“The pictures are numbered.” She explained. “If you recognize one, I need the number and the name, I guess.”

For the next fifteen minutes the routine was unvaried. Except when they reached...

“Number thirty-two is William Kelley and he is not dead.”
“But... he’s in the book.”

“Doesn’t mean he’s dead. I saw him, a month ago in Macao.”

“You’re sure?”

“I sat across from the man at a poker table.”

“Why would he be in the book then?”

“Proof of death.”

“Again, if he’s not dead...?”

Red shrugged. “If there was a hit out on him, he could have bought his way out. Because of the Stewmaker’s reputation, his word that Kelley was dead was good enough proof.” Red smiled wryly, “There isn’t supposed to be a body left, after all.” It was reminded needlessly, “Trust me, he’s very much alive.”

Liz watched him scroll through the photos, bypassing some, hesitating on others. Red’s eyes skimmed the page moving slowly downward, then hastily revisited one photo after another, his photographic memory coming to the fore.

“Number forty-eight, Sasha Valencia.” Red frowned, then reached for his beer.

She watched his face closely, the handsome profile allowing anger at first then oddly, sadness. “You knew her.” She surmised.

“Yes, I knew her.” his tone was resigned. “We were romantically involved at one point.”

The woman mulled over such a simply stated revelation. “Maybe she’s like William Kelley.”

“No, she’s dead. I would have crossed paths with her by now.”

“I’m sorry.” And she was. It was one thing to end a relationship, another to know the woman you’d made love to was discarded in such a manner. It bothered her to see Red so upset by it as well.

“Red, out of all these people,” Liz had to ask, “how many would you consider a friend?”

“I’ve said before, I don’t have friends.”

“Dembe is more than a friend...” the simple statement seemed a form of prose coming from this man. To be considered ‘a friend’ in Red Reddington’s world was quite a concept in Elizabeth Keen’s universe.

“Would you like another beer?” He arose, awaiting the reply.

“Uh, sure.” The man returned with two chilled bottles, handing her one as he sat back down.

“... Me.” Elizabeth shyly offered.

“Excuse me?” The penetrating eyes sought her out instantly.

“Granted, I am your handler and you’re my CI, but I consider us friendly... friends.”
“Do you normally go about sticking pens in friends’ necks?”

“When the occasion calls for it, maybe.” She teased right back, “When I say, don’t drink and drive, I mean it.”

The silence came then an odd thought struck the woman, “Red, you know I don’t have any friends.”

“You do. Aram, Dembe... me.” he corrected easily. “Number sixty.” he sing-songed his head, “Well, he had it coming.”

After twenty minutes of Red throwing out names, she sagged in her chair, sliding her empty plate away.

“I can’t move.” she suddenly realized then glanced down, “I’m just going to slither to the floor and sleep right here.” the woman pointed to the Oriental rug beneath her feet.

Her phone rang, and Red recognized Ressler’s ring tone. “No sleep tonight.” he smiled around the bottle at his lips.
Red leaned on the trunk of Ressler’s car looking at the gathered crowd. He frowned at them, wondering what it was about ‘tragedy’ that called to people. And where the hell had they come from?

It was an eclectic bunch. Men and women in business suits, teenagers, parents with a stroller.

Meeting the eye of more than a few, he made a quick game of their interest in him. Staring at them until they inevitably looked away.

While nosy, people would forget what made them uncomfortable. The chance of seeing a dead body in a bag would make great story telling to their friends over the next day. A man in a three-piece suit that made them uncomfortable, would be forgotten by the time they made it down the block.

“Scaring the tourists?” Lizzy asked as she approached.

“It’s sad, Lizzy.” he pouted, “I’m number four on the Most Wanted list. My face is plastered in Post Offices across the world and no one recognizes me.”

She patted his shoulder consolingly. “Take heart,” she opened her notebook jotting down her notes, “they may think you’re in police custody.”

Red scoffed before snorting.

“Or, even with the substantial reward on your head, the danger of getting involved with you just isn’t worth it.” she finished writing her notes then looked at the man.

“You’re just saying that to make me feel better.” he dismissed airily. “Speaking of which, you have a little color back now. Do you feel better?”

“I don’t know what you mean?” she lied convincingly. When she had seen the condition of the body, it had turned her stomach.

Red had sought a trash can had she needed it, but was in a quandary. How to find one without contaminating the crime scene. He had been proud when she had pulled herself together, continuing her work in a professional manner.

“I don’t know how that didn’t bother you?” she practically accused.

“I’ve seen some of the worst mankind can do to one another, Lizzy.” he readily explained, “Adults,” he dismissed entirely, “they did something to get in their predicament.” Red’s eyes narrowed and turned ice cold, “Kids on the other hand... then you’ll see emotion.”

Elizabeth Keen shivered involuntarily. The man did not have to finish his thought.

“I can honestly hope I never have to experience that emotion coming from you.”

He thought maybe she meant that as a put down, the way it had been said, but then he realized that she didn’t want to ever see it because it would mean a child had been hurt.

“I hope you don’t either.” he commiserated.
“Keen.” Donald approached gingerly.

“Yes?” She turned to him, taking the file he held out. “What’s this?”

“Statements from the people who found the body.” Ressler settled his hands on his hips, turning to Reddington, “You sure you don’t know him?” he asked Red yet again.

“You can keep asking and I’ll keep telling you no, I don’t know…” Red stopped, turning his head slightly, as though listening for something.

“What?” Liz picked up on the change in the man.

The man hesitated for a long moment, “Carver’s here.” he spoke brusquely. “He’s watching us.”

Ressler was more than annoyed, “How can you know that?”

“It’s called intuition. I haven’t survived twenty years without trusting my gut.” Red’s tone sharpened, not suffering idiots easily at this time. “I’m telling you... he’s here.”

She hesitated to look, “In the crowd maybe?” she had picked up on his tone.

Red shook his head sharply, “He’s behind me, I can feel it.”

“This is ridiculous.” Ressler snapped, “Now we’re relying on your Spidey sense.”

Red took off his hat, scratching his head moving to the car. He threw his hat on the trunk casually. “Switch positions with me.” he instructed quietly, taking her vacant spot slowly but surely.

He focused on the two Agents, “Talk casually amongst yourselves.” They stared blankly at him, and he sighed deeply, “Something, Anything!” he exasperated instructions. “The pets you had as a child, new apps on your phone... Ressler’s love life. I need to look bored.”

Liz narrowed her eyes at Red, then perked up a bit. “How is your love life Ress?”

“Better than yours.” Ressler shot back.

“Score for Donald.” Red mumbled as he casually scanned the area.

“Hey! I only recently got divorced you know.” Liz defended herself.

“You never did tell us how that date went, Donald.” Red leaned into the car, crossing his arms. He schooled his features into the most put upon expression he could muster, tilting his head up, looking at the roof tops.

“It went fine!” Ressler replied heatedly.

“Doesn’t sound like it to me, does it you Red?” Liz snickered.

Red shook his head ‘no’ in complacent camaraderie.

“We have plans this weekend, just so you know.” Don preened. “We’re going – ”

There it was again. A slight movement on the roof top, two buildings back. Blocking out all other vision, his eyes centered on that dark shadow. Then he saw the glint.

Scope. His mind screamed.

“Gun!” Red grabbed Liz, shoving her behind the wheel well of a nearby police cruiser, covering her with his own body as Ressler dove behind his car.

Seconds later there was a pop, then a whistling fizzle in the air before a bullet smashed into the gravel where they had been standing, followed by another.

Ressler snapped out commands to seal the area. The crowd panicked, running amok, trying not to become targets. Cops and agents scattered, hiding behind anything of use, weapons drawn.

Red heard the crunch of tires driving over gravel, nearing their position.

“Stay low, lay down on the seat.” he urged Liz forward, having turned her around, shielding her with his body. The car came to a stop alongside Ressler’s vehicle. Red had a perfect shot to the now open backdoor.

Dembe’s low velvet voice came out of the night, “Raymond.”

“Get in the back.” Red commanded.

“I can’t leave.” Liz protested, pushing back at his insistent hands.

“Where the hell are you two going?” Ressler demanded.

Red grabbed her arm, pushing her roughly. “You’re going!” Red barked as a bullet hit the ground closer to their position, spraying them in a fine mist of dirt.

“Go Keen!” Ressler yelled at the pair as the bullets grew closer. “Get out of here!”

Red peered over the car, watching as the lens moved upwards.

He’s reloading. His mind clicking into gear.

“Get down.” he hissed, his palm cupping her head. The shot that followed tore through the bumper of the car they were hiding behind.

She moved up over the bottom door frame, climbing into the back.

Red crawled in after her, his body covering Liz’s smaller body completely. He glanced back checking on Ressler’s safety.

The young man was well hidden and safe for the moment. Red pulled the door with his foot, just as a shot hit the passenger window.

The car lurched forward, slamming the door closed. The tires threw gravel as they made their getaway.
A block down, Red put his leg into the floor board, then raised his chest off her back. “You can sit up now.”

“I thought you said he wasn’t after you?” Liz caught her breath, pressing her rib cage.

“You all right?” he gestured to her torso.

“Yeah, seat belts aren’t comfortable when they dig into your chest.” she squirmed aimlessly about.

“You didn’t answer me.”

“I don’t think he’s here for me specifically.”

“Well, someone was shooting at you.” she reminded.

“There’s a running bounty on my head. Maybe he thought he’d get lucky and collect on it?” he pulled his phone from his pocket. “For all you know, he could have been aiming for you.”

“Me?!” she squealed breathlessly. “What for?”

“You’re just as popular out there as I am.” Raymond reminded. “The Fulcrum, Lizzy.” he sighed lightly. “Do you not listen to me? What you have is priceless. There are a couple dozen groups out there willing to kill, well, you, just so they can get their hands on it.”

She fell silent, thinking for the first time that what he had been saying was true. She had always just assumed that he had wanted the Fulcrum for himself. And maybe he did, but he wasn’t going around gunning for her. If anything, he had gone out of his way to protect her.

He could have just killed her, ransacked her belongings and taken it. But he hadn’t.

Why? She asked herself that on a daily basis these days.

“Is Keen all right? Ressler said your car had been hit.” Cooper’s voice held his consternation. He missed being out in the field, seeing the action first-hand.

“She’s fine.” Red looked the woman over, assuring himself that she was fine.

“Ressler said the shooting stopped when you two left.” Cooper was grateful for the little things in life these days.

“I expected as much.” Reddington shifted, pulling his jacket down in the back.

“Tell me where you are. I’ll send a couple of men to bring Keen back to the Blacksite? We’ll make sure she’s sa–” Cooper took charge, as was his way.

“No, she’ll come there when I bring her in and she leaves when I do. I’m not letting her out of my sight unt–”

“They want her debriefed. Find out if she’s noticed anybody following her.”

“Don’t you think she would have mentioned that?” Red shook his head when she opened her mouth. He didn’t think this had anything to do with Tom, so there was no reason to mention it. Not in his world at least.

“They think it would be better to separate you two, in case this has something to do with your business ties.”

“That is not going to happen.”

“I told them that. So they said that a safe house with rotating guards, maybe they’ll catch this Carver character with a twenty-four-hour watch.” Cooper tried reason. “She’s become a valuable agent and they want to protect their asset.”

“She was already valuable.” Red snapped peevishly. “Who are they? Who said?”

“Tom Connolly’s people, for one.”

“I’m sure he did.” Red stated sarcastically. “It’s not happening.”

“Damn it, Red. They aren’t going to be happy about this.” Frustration poured off the man. “At least let me give you a detail, maybe it might appease them.”

“The FBI’s protection detail is bullshit.” In Red’s humble opinion. “We’ll be just fine on our own.”

“They’re going to insist.”

“Then you tell them that if they can find us, they can put as many people on us as they like.” He snapped the phone shut, tossing it out the window.

“What did Cooper say?”

“Shut your phone down.”

“Why would he say that?”

“Shut off your phone.” He sighed. She pulled her phone from her pocket, powering it down.

“Now, what did he really say?”

He repeated most of the conversation.

“What else did he say?”

“Cooper’s higher ups want to know where we are, give us a battalion of men in FBI jackets and ear pieces, see if they can catch Carver. Like that won’t draw attention. The idiots.”

“Maybe we should...” She stopped when he looked at her, just begging for her to finish her thought.

“All they’ll do is keep him from coming at us.”

“Isn’t that kind of the point?”

“Generally, it’s easier to catch someone when they’re in the same vicinity as you.”

“What now?”

He leaned his head back into the headrest, closing his eyes. “I think I might have an idea about what to do tomorrow.”

After a quiet night at Red’s place, where he had spent a good hour on the phone making plans, a time and place had been arranged to meet Edward Costa.

They had headed to the Post Office the next morning, with Liz going to her office and Red seeking out Cooper.

“No, Harold!” Red shook his head, adamant. “You and your storm troopers can’t go. You all scream ‘cop’.” He stated the obvious. “I’ve just got Lizzy to transform out of cop mode. I don’t have time to deal with the whole team.” The man disdained. “I sure as hell can’t make Ressler suave in three weeks, let alone three hours.”

“I don’t think it’s a good idea to go in alone.” Cooper stated.

“What about Agent Keen’s safety? She’s walking into a den of criminals.” It was subsequently pointed out. “Who’s to say something won’t go wrong?”

“You know, contrary to popular belief,” Red rolled his eyes. “We don’t whip out our guns the minute someone walks in a door. This isn’t Chicago in the 1920’s.” Both men fell silent, upset. “Although, I do hold a certain fondness for that Era.”

“Harold,” Red compromised as much as he ever would. “Because of my invaluable tutelage, Agent Keen has become quite capable maneuvering in the underworld.” He narrowed his eyes at the man, “Stop discounting her so quickly.” He insisted. “Besides that, Dembe will be there. I’ll be there. And you know I won’t let anything happen to her.”

The black man reclined into his seat, thinking. “All right, she can go. But you watch her.”

Red nodded, aggravated. She was going regardless of what Harold said. “Sure, and I’ll have her home by curfew.”

A discrete knock interrupted the conversation. “Come in.” Harold called out.

Liz breezed into the room, sipping her ever present coffee. “You wanted to see me, sir?” She smiled in Red’s direction as an afterthought.

“Agent Keen.” Harold broke the news gently. “I hope you have a little black dress on hand.”

Liz scrunched her face, grimacing. “Eh...yes, sir.” The woman immediately glanced suspiciously at the man to her right.

Red frowned back, a little put out by her attitude. He thought they had been getting along well lately. Maybe he’d been wrong?

“Your assignment, is simple. You’re to stay with him or Dembe the entire night.” Cooper dropped into his ‘Task Force Director’ mode. “Observe, listen, stay quiet. Let Red work his angle.”

The woman looked decidedly uncomfortable and confused.

Red sighed loudly, dropping his head into the wall before standing and walking away.

“Yes, sir.” She frowned as Red swept past her, watching his back as he left the room. “Is there anything else?”

“Reddington will give you all the pertinent information.” Harold waved her off.
Liz, who had waited for the dismissal caught up to Red as he walked down the corridor.

“Red! Wait up.” She shuffled quickly up to him, “Where are we going?”

“You don’t have to go if you don’t want to, Lizzy.”

She pointed back to his office. “But, Cooper said...”

“I know what he said.” Red interrupted. “But, I can get all you need and deliver it later.” He decided with finality. “You won’t leave the Post Office until I get back, understand?” He scolded. “Especially with Ressler, because basically... he’s an idiot.”

“You don’t want me to go?” She frowned.

“You didn’t look like you wanted to go.” Red stated.

“No, I want to go. It was the thought of heels that I didn’t like.”

“Excuse me?” Relief washed over Red.

“My feet are killing me,” she lifted her foot, showing her new boots, “breaking them in.”

Red felt a little lighter than he had a few short moments ago, when he thought she hadn’t wanted to spend the evening with him. “Wear short heels, go barefoot. I don’t care.”

Liz nodded, thinking it wasn’t such a bad idea. “So what’s this thing we’re going to?”

“I’m going to reconnect with some associates and I’m hoping to get a line on Carver and his whereabouts.”

“You think he’ll be there?” she shivered involuntarily at the thought.

“No. Not his kind of crowd.” Liz looked confused, so Red explained. “The closest he’ll come to wearing a tux is if it’s printed on a t-shirt.”

Liz snickered at the mental picture. “So it is black tie?” She pouted.

“Afraid so.”

“Wait, Red. I have to get a dress! That ‘black dress’ I mentioned is hideous and I need to feed Hudson and get ready at my place ... all my stuff is there but...”

“Breathe.” He instructed, slightly amused. “Take Samar and Dembe with you.” He had it figured out already. “As a matter of fact,” He pulled a card out of his wallet, handing it to her. “Go here. They’ll put you in a private room which will be easier for Samar and Dembe to cover.”

She flipped the card, vaguely recognizing the dress shop name. “Don’t you need Dembe?”

“I need to speak to Cooper about something important.” He ignored the question. “Tell Dembe I’ll be there at seven.”
Scent of a Woman

April 3

Red Reddington looked like a million dollars when he stepped out of the car which had pulled up to the curb seconds before.

He walked jauntily around the backside of the freshly washed Mercedes, his footsteps slowing then stopping completely. A deep frown creased his forehead. His eyes had caught the sight of a slip of paper tucked carefully beneath Liz’s windshield wiper.

He stepped forward slowly, removing the neatly folded note, his eyes scanning rapidly the typed words.

_You really are a beautiful woman. Not that I haven’t noticed before. I know that you’re going through a hard time. Just know . . . I am here._

Red’s scowl deepened considerably. He looked around rapidly for his friend Dembe who just, as if on cue, rounded the South corner of the street.

Red removed his fedora, motioning the man forward.

Dembe hurried his steps, reaching the rendezvous point in record time, sensing a problem.

Red handed the note over, waiting patiently for the large black man to read it. He motioned with his head to the vicinity of Liz’s windshield.

“This was not here seven minutes earlier.” Dembe’s scowl matched Red Reddington’s. “There has been no traffic to speak of, no people on the street... nothing of concern.”

Red touched the man’s shoulder, trusting Dembe implicitly.

“Don’t worry Dembe,” Red decided to put it out of his mind for the present. “We’ll find this ‘would be’ poet laureate, sooner or later.” He straightened his bow tie. “Tonight we’re not going to worry about anything.”

“Wow.” Samar looked at their reflection and then to the woman standing beside her, silently applauding their efforts. Liz turned back and forth, studying her body. “You look stunning.”

“Is that the word we’re going with?” She asked, unsure, turning this way and that to check her reflection once again.

“Let me put it this way,” Samar assured, “Reddington will be proud, happy and very annoyed to have you on his arm tonight.”

“Annoyed?” Liz questioned apprehensively.

“He’ll have to fight off your potential suitors all evening, so yes, he’ll be annoyed.” Samar snickered.

“Don’t do that.” Liz released the breath she’d been holding, backhanding Samar’s arm playfully. “I’m already nervous.”

Samar fluffed the small train lightly, the heavy crystals clicking on the hard wood floor. “Damn, I like this dress.”

“It is nice, isn’t it?”

Thankfully Red had told the sales woman what the evenings plans were and what type of dress might be needed, so there were gowns waiting when they had arrived. In her size, no less. How he did that, she didn’t want to know.

“I hope he likes it... since he paid for it.” She had been annoyed with him at first, having had everything placed on his account. But she figured, why not. It was his turf, he knew what was expected in his crowd. And it was expensive.

Samar hid her smile, “Why is that?” In her short time there, she had seen the way Reddington looked at the woman. He was completely infatuated with her. How Liz didn’t see it was beyond her.

“Why is what?” She threw some lipstick and other needed things into her silver bag.

“Why do you hope he likes it?”

“He’s always so put together and I’m not. Not really.” Liz believed in facing facts. “This isn’t my type of thing. I’ve only been out to these functions with him.” She worried her hands, second guessing herself. “I don’t ever know if I’m picking the correct attire.”

“Has he ever said anything?” Samar questioned, intrigued since she didn’t see the previous attempts to fit in with the ‘In’ crowd.

“No, but maybe he’s just being nice?” Liz fretted.

“He has a reputation to protect. He wouldn’t...” Samar stopped, hearing the knock downstairs. “I’ll go down, you finish.”

Making her way down, she pulled the door open, smiling. Her eyes softened at the ‘vision’ standing so gravely quiet before her. “You look very dapper.” Eyeing Red in his evening coat that allowed just a glimpse of his bow tie.

“Is Lizzy all right?” He removed his black felt hat, looking around for the woman, not having expected the agent to still be hanging around so late.
The beautiful agent beamed her approval, having noted the exquisite bouquet hanging limply in Red’s hand.

“Yes. She’ll be down in a minute.” Samar explained the questioning glance. “I’m still here because she forgot the logistics of the dress.” Red frowned, tilting his head in question.

“She needed help with her zipper.” Samar explained. “Those are absolutely beautiful.” she motioned to the flowers.

Reddington glanced down as if having forgotten the fragrant blooms lay against the side of his expensive trousers.

“Ah.” Red relaxed, minutely, gallantly offering a perfect single rose to Samar. “So she’s about ready?”

Samar brought the soft petals to her lovely mouth, inhaling the rich scent. She smiled warmly at the man.

“I’m coming, Red.” Liz called from the upstairs, hurrying to finish the last tasks required.

“Take you’re time.” He called up to her, then turned his attention elsewhere for the time being.

“Oh, you’re wearing them.” Red said, pointing down at Samar’s feet and the heels he had gifted her.

“I sleep in them.” She lifted her trouser leg, showing them off. “I didn’t say before, I don’t think?” she had been so enthralled by the shoes, “Thank you.” she smiled happily.

“It was my pleasure.” Red returned the warm smile.

Hearing Liz descending, he turned his head to see her own silver heels touching the stairs, the delicate straps shining brightly against the dim light. When he saw her leg peak through the slit of her dress, his eyes lifted ever so slowly, enjoying the trek...

“Damn...” he blinked his eyes, focusing on the woman.

Samar snickered quietly at his appreciation. Liz had just been saying how unsophisticated she felt next to Reddington. She could see how, from Liz’s point of view, Red would have no real interest in a young, inexperienced woman.

In Samar’s world, the man not only showed ‘interest’ but ‘involvement.’ He still had not taken his eyes off the young woman.

He stood transfixed.

The form fitting blood red gown didn’t have any give what-so-ever. A sash, just under her waist held in place by a tasteful flower broach, accentuated her hips and the high slit that ended mid thigh, drew attention to her leg.

The deep neckline stopped just at her sternum and straps ran up each shoulder in a halter-like style.

The gown was unlike anything he thought she would have been comfortable with. Even with him assuring her many times that she could carry it off.

“Lizzy, you are absolutely enchanting.” Red extended his hand, helping her down the last few steps. Still holding her hand, he stepped back looking her up and down. “Red definitely suits you.” he grinned at his own unintentional double entendre, then sobered slightly, his eyes mellowing. “Stunning!”

“Okay.” The other woman felt suddenly very much the ‘third wheel’. “I’m going to go ahead and take off.”

Both snapped their head to look at Samar, having forgotten she was even there.

“If you need help later...” She offered, knowing full well she wouldn’t get called.

“Thank you so much for being here, Samar.” Liz hugged the woman, then stepped back quickly, unsure the embrace would be welcomed.

“Have a good night, be safe.”

Red politely opened the door for the woman. He watched her clear the steps, and disappear across the street. He closed the door quietly, having assured Samar’s safety, hearing the car pull away from the curb. Clearing his throat gently, he returned his attention readily.

“Your wrap?” he asked.

She pointed to the long coat hanging on the door. The garment, also new, thanks to Red’s urging via the saleswoman, complimented her outfit to perfection.

Glancing in the mirror by the door, she automatically checked her hair.

“You couldn’t be more lovely. Don’t bother trying.” Red held her coat open, coming towards her.

Turning her back on him, she heard him grunt appreciatively.

“Fuck...” he whispered his awe.

“What! What’s wrong?” She looked over her shoulder at the dress, afraid she’d ripped it.

He stared, transfixed on the sight of the back of the dress hugging her, curving tightly against the woman’s backside down to her thighs before flaring out in a short train. The shimmering beadwork caught in the low light of the hall, blinking diamonds of light danced along her entire body and the surrounding hallway with her slight movement. The top of her back and shoulders were bare and warm under the low light.

Damn it all to hell! He had not planned on such a distraction tonight. This was going to be “iffy at best”.

When he saw that dress, he knew that his contemporaries, when they caught one glimpse of her, were going to circle like a bunch of foaming mouthed wolves.

In civilized company, he’d have nothing to worry about. But a room full of criminals... it was going to be an interesting evening.

“Nothings wrong.” he stepped forward, helping her get one arm then the other into her coat. “Just admiring your gown.”

Leaning forward, he captured the light scent of her perfume, inhaling deeply. “You smell just as wonderful as you look.”
He lifted the bouquet, “These pale in comparison.”

The woman flushed with pleasure, receiving the flowers graciously.

It took damn near all his self control not to bury his nose in the curve of her neck and lick the scent away until he found her natural one and even then, he wasn’t sure he’d stop.

Liz flushed brightly at the compliment, beaming, “Well, thank you, Red.” She absently grabbed her clutch. “Very much.” She smiled, her new found joy, burying her nose into the soft petals. “It’s been so long since I…” she lifted wistful eyes, her embarrassment coming to the fore. “You look very nice too.”

She blurted the faux pas, taking the time to really observe the man.

Very nice. She thought the ‘compliment’ so lame... this man looked phenomenal.

She couldn’t help but see the marked difference between Red and Tom in a tuxedo. While Tom was handsome, he always seemed to look like a little boy playing dress up in the too baggy formal suit. But Red was dashing in his tailored finery, highlighting his broad shoulders and chest and tapered waist.

One attempted sophistication while the other reeked of it, because no one swaggered in a tux and could carry it off, like Red Reddington did.

And he smelled so good. She had even started sniffing colognes at the store trying to find the elusive brand he used and had been admittedly disappointed in her search.

“And you smell absolutely delicious.” she gushed.

“Thank you.” he accepted graciously, finding her maladroit ramblings utterly charming. “I hope you don’t mind, but I took the liberty of calling in a reservation for dinner. I was sure you’d be famished. Though,” he ogled the dress hugging her tightly, “I’m not sure where you’ll put it.”

“I’ll manage.” She quipped, “Come on, I’m starving.”

“As am I, dear Lizzy.” Red tilted his head, eyeing her sensually as she walked away. The woman was blissfully unaware, to interested in her bouquet to note his interest.

It was going to be a long night.
I wanted to thank everyone who left a comment and kudos! They have ALL made my day!

April 3

Dinner turned out to be a delightful affair. Liz was very impressed in spite of herself, when Red ordered the complete course in French. She secretly hoped he had not ordered her something along the lines of ‘monkey brains’ but when the entrée arrived, it was delicious beyond belief.

Liz felt very sophisticated in her new ensemble. She found herself sitting straighter, decidedly watching her table manners.

All in all, it was a totally delightful episode.

“What’s our cover, Red?” she hated to break the moment, but business called.

“If we want all access at this gathering, the only way to achieve that is for you to arrive as my... fiancée.” he held up a restrictive hand. “Cliché, yes. But effective.”

He cut her a look, “Trust me on this.” a frown creased his intelligent brow. “I know these people, I know how they think and what they expect.”

“Fine. So why don’t I rate the lofty position as wife?” she half-way quipped, a little uneasy with the new role assigned her, truth told.

“It would have gotten around that I had married. Even if it had happened in the last day.” he stretched luxuriously. “Good news, as they say, travels fast.”

“I don’t understand why I couldn’t have just been your new accountant?”

“As I said before,” Red iterated, “if you are uncomfortable with any of this, we don’t even have to bother.” he reminded tactfully. “It is just that, people will more comfortable and not so mistrustful of my motives if I show up with a beautiful woman on my arm.”

Liz opened her mouth hastily to reassure, but the man continued.

“I can get the information needed...” he hesitated then slightly shrugged the well defined shoulders, “you are just making my job that much easier.”

“I was just interested in your accountant... Luli and her position in your organization.” The beautiful Asian woman had always intrigued Elizabeth and she found herself more than curious about any personal relationship that might have existed.

“She was a trusted part of my team, but damn any loyalties.” Red almost smiled, “I always realized, if a good thing came along, she would jump on it.” he shifted his eyes momentarily, “One grows to expect such things. Nor did I blame her.”
“But a fiancée...” Liz was still perplexed.

“In this business, you don’t get romantically involved with someone you can’t shut your eyes around.” Red leaned forward, placing his hand on the back of the seat, “They’ll talk more freely because it’s apparent that I trust you.”

Liz pondered all that had been said. “And when we don’t marry?”

“We will tell them of our intimate ceremony we have planned on the back of a camel with a Bedouin holy man.” Red’s voice held a measure of amusement. “The women will think I’m charming but the men will find me totally in character.”

She grinned at the thought of Red on the back of a camel. “And the back story?”

“We met at an art exhibit. We’ve been dating a little over a year. We’ve been engaged for four months.”

“Did that just now come to you?”

“Yes.” he seemed surprised as well. “Why?”

“No reason, just fascinated by how quickly you come up with this stuff.” she sat back grinning. “But, I have to ask, if we’ve known each other and been engaged this long, isn’t it odd that you’ve never introduced me before?”

“No, I’ll handle that part, you just follow along.”

She shrugged, making mental note of the request.

Red reached into his pocket, grasping the object inside. He opened his hand revealing an enormous diamond ring that sparkled translucently in the moonlight filtering through the car window.

Disregarding the slight gasp of awe, the man gently took her hand in his, sliding the ring on her slender finger, twisting it until the setting gleamed upward. His warm fingers gently stroked hers as he reluctantly broke contact.

The gorgeous diamond and sapphire wrapped band shimmered when she rotated her hand back and forth, as she marveled at the weight. It was much heavier than her old one. And that even while huge, the stone fit her hand perfectly, as did the size of the band.

“I could put an eye out with this thing.” She watched the light bounce off the diamond. “Probably my own.”

As they pulled into the circular drive, she had the hardest time not gaping at the enormous house.

“And they say, crime doesn’t pay.” She muttered, craning her head this way and that to take in her astonishing surroundings.

The two story house and grand porch were warmly lit. A soft bathing blue light highlighted the gigantic columns lining the gothic veranda. Guests walked up the decorative path lined by beautiful and lush gardens that were all neatly trimmed and tended.

As they glided to a stop, two valets stepped forward, one heading for the driver side, the other for her door.

Red exited first, making his way to the passenger side, waving the young man away. Offering her a hand, she turned in the seat and felt a pull on her coat.

Red looked down to see what was keeping her when he saw the slit in her dress fall aside, revealing her stocking covered thigh, followed by a patch of creamy white skin, then the elastic tie of her lacy red garter.

Good God. He desperately tried to look elsewhere, but his eyes constantly returned to the alluring sight.

Fixated on the small patch of pale skin, he didn’t feel the presence at his side until he saw movement out the corner of his eye.

Turning, he saw the young valet craning his head for a peek.

Fixing the boy with a cold stare, he blocked Lizzy from any further view. Although annoyed, he supposed he couldn’t fault the boy. He had been looking as well. But if anyone was going to see her naked thigh, it was going to be him.

Sticking his head through the door, he braced his hand on her knee then reached over, pulling the coat free with little fuss. Backing out of the doorway, he held his hand out, helping her ease out of the seat.

“Sorry.” She smoothed her coat and gown, nervously. She was beginning to feel the weight of this particular “assignment”. Liz fidgeted anxiously with new weight about her finger.

For one horrible moment, she wondered... what if she accidentally lost this thing.

“How much does this ring cost?” she whispered jerkily, leaning into the man’s sphere.

Red held his amusement, “How gauche a question.” he teased.

Her troubled eyes met his warmly amused ones. “Relax, there are no thieves here tonight... only drug runners, axe murderers and tax evaders.”

For some reason, the statement made her feel better.

She wrapped her left arm through his, casually showing the ring. Ascending the stairs, he felt her tensing with each step.

“Take a breath. You’ll do fine. The man felt the slight tremor racking her body. “Just be yourself.” He smiled absently to one of the couples ascending the stairs beside them.

“Red, I don’t belong... I don’t fit in here.” She inhaled shakily. She felt more than awkward, unsure of her own abilities suddenly.

“You could go anywhere you please and belong, Lizzy.” He felt the frustration rolling off her. Pulling her to a secluded spot on the long porch, he turned her to face him. Dembe stood a short distance away, blocking guest’s view of the private conversation.

Inhaling, attempting to settle her nerves, she stared back at him. “Do I really look okay?” She blurted out. “Is this dress all right?”

“Do you really not realize how stunning you are?” he seemed taken aback.

“I don’t want to embarrass you in front of your friends.” She drew in a shaky breath, lifting her eyes to the heavens, which in this case was the top of the magnificent porch under which they now stood. “I knew I should have picked the light blue.”

“Lizzy, you’re going to turn a lot of heads in that dress.” his hands tightened around hers.

She rolled her eyes, until he gripped her chin, aligning their eyes. “Listen to what I’m saying. Hear the words.” Red’s brows lifted significantly. “I mean them.”

“Only someone confident enough to deal with me would be confident enough to wear this dress.” He lifted her hands to his lips caressing the soft skin briefly. “And I could give a damn what the hell they think.”

“How I come across to them reflects on you...”

“It’s a different type of women behind those doors.” he pointed absently to the large entranceway behind them. “Unlike them, you’re beautiful, charming, can carry on a conversation.”

“And I can do math... up to a point.” she tried to lighten her own mood.

Red chuckled lowly, sending chills up and down her arms. She suddenly felt better. “Let them see what I see.” he held her gaze.

“Those women are beautiful, yes. But you will come to know,” he continued, “that is all that they are. There’s no substance. They are purely decorative pieces. You are more than that.”

She took a deep breath, blowing it out slowly. She nodded absently. “I am more than that.” she repeated, verbatim.

“You can do this.” He bolstered. “Just relax and enjoy the evening. Everything will fall into place. Trust me.”

The magic words. Trust me.

Liz felt the panic ease. Though he didn’t reveal anything he didn’t need to and kept her on edge all the time. He hadn’t given her any reason to not trust him. He had always come through and he would this time.

Meeting his eyes, she nodded, ready.

Entering the front door, she tried her best not to gawk at all the opulence. She had never seen so many people so obviously of the elite class. All were clothed in the best designer names, festooned with jewels that literally took her breath away. Each female she passed seemed to exude poised sophistication.

Liquor was free flowing, while unobtrusive wait staff floated among the crowd with heavy laden trays holding countless delicacies. Red gripped her hand reassuringly, before handing their coats over to a coat check girl.

Steering her into the throngs of people, he leaned closer, mumbling quietly, “There’s our host. We should make our introductions. You ready?”

Smiling wanly, but straightening her posture, she nodded.

They neared the man, Red calling out jovially. “Francis. It’s good to see you again.”
Red’s hand slipped down, catching hers in support, his free one wrapping around the other man who slapped his back with great affection.

“Red!” They each drew back, smiling before gripping shoulders. “I didn’t think you were going to make it.”

She was never really sure how Red felt about anyone. He greeted this man like he was a long lost brother, but she had seen him do that before and later turn on the person in the blink of an eye.

“Who is this breathtaking lovely on your arm?” Francis smiled genuinely at her. “Let me guess,” he said, “this your pissy brunette?”

Red held his smile, as Liz’s head spun hastily toward him, eyes narrowed suspiciously. “Francis, this is Elizabeth Scott. My fiancée.” Red stepped back, allowing the other man closer. “Lizzy, Francis Holbrook.”

Francis... the man she had heard on the phone with Red a couple of days ago. Liz smiled her recognition, offering her hand in greeting.

The younger man extended his hand taking her pre-offered one, bowing slightly over it, before laying a gentle kiss on her knuckles.

“It’s a real pleasure.” Francis artfully managed to put himself between Elizabeth and Red. Red rolled his eyes at the maneuver, huffing shortly under his breath.

Liz couldn’t help but be charmed. Sure, the man was a criminal but he was so polite and welcoming, she felt instantly at ease.

“It’s so nice to meet you.” She stepped back, taking Red’s arm. Taking her place at his side again was deeply symbolic to males. She didn’t fully understand it, but she knew some of the rules, especially in Red’s crowd.

Besides that, Red’s arm settled around her waist, calming her some. Any other day she might swat him away, but right now, he was an anchor in the rough seas.

“Where’s Dembe?” Francis looked around.

“He’s probably following the waiters around, eating you out of house and home.”

“Still the healthy appetite, eh? Don’t you feed that man Red?”

“Every minute of the day.” Red stated offhandedly. “Speaking of which, I’ve been here all of five minutes. Who do I have to kill to get a drink?”

Francis stuck his fingers in his mouth, whistling out over the din, catching a waiter’s attention, who scurried over to them.

Liz had jumped at the unexpected gesture but settled hastily, hoping no one had noticed her momentary lapse.

Ain't Easy Being Green

April 3

Floating the room for an hour had been advantageous for Red. He had reacquainted himself with old allies and made new ones. Liz stayed silent for the most part, listening intently.

She did her bit of course, occasionally speaking with another wife or girlfriend, when called upon to do so, which had been just as enlightening.

A couple of times during the evening, she had noticed Red getting quite a bit of attention from the ladies in the room. At first, she was felt lucky to be with someone so recognized and apparently, highly sought after. Then she realized they were totally looking past her.

She had subtly touched his arm or stood closer to him, until his admirer looked away. But as they moved deeper into the room, the stares continued and held. With each passing woman, her touches became more frequent until she finally looped her arm through his, squeezing it fiercely as she stared down his latest fan.

Red looked away from the man he had been speaking with, down at her tight grip, frowning. He found Liz scowling at a busty redhead across the room.

“Something wrong sweetheart?” he asked innocuously.

“You’re being eyed like you’re a pint of Ben and Jerry’s.”

“I beg your pardon.” Red chuckled appreciatively.

“You didn’t tell me you had so many in your fan club.”

“Lizzy, what are you babbling about?” he chuckled lowly.

“You could have mentioned a harem of your past lovers would be here.”

“I’ve introduced you to exactly three women since we’ve been here.” he held his amusement.

“Romance was not an issue with any of them.”

“I’m not talking about them. I’m talking about the couple dozen women I’ve had to stare down since we’ve been here.” She pointed her chin back at the redhead staring in his direction, as an example.

“You better not leave my ass here alone.”

“First of all, I would never leave you alone.” Red said, quite seriously. “And secondly, I don’t know that woman.”

“You don’t know that woman?” she repeated. “We are of course, speaking in the Biblical sense.”

“I would love to speak in the Biblical sense with you,” he chuckled a dirty laugh. “But where as that woman is the subject at the moment,” he inclined his head discreetly, “as Jesus is my witness... I don’t know her.”

“Do you have a reputation as putting out easily or something?” she was more than serious.

“There is nothing on the bathroom wall of which I am aware.” Red jested.
“You know, I am standing here.” she gestured. “Beside you.” she fumed. “They make me feel rather like a nonentity.” her good feelings about the way she looked were rapidly fading.

“I am sure they just want to talk business. That’s sort of what these parties are for. To make connections.” he countered rather coyly.

Elizabeth glared at the woman across the way, pinching her lips in annoyance until the other looked away. Red’s lips quivered when Liz smiled in satisfaction to have won the match of wills, only to be thwarted by a new admirer just across the way.

“She doesn’t look to me like she has Wall Street on her mind.” Liz informed him in no uncertain terms. “Why doesn’t she just come over here and undress you all ready.”

As if the dress hadn’t already made her utterly ravishing, Red found that stern expression on the pretty little face even more captivating.

“Are you jealous, Lizzy?” Red was slightly touched by the thought.

“Excuse me!” the woman flared instantly.

“Why do you care if they stare?”

“I-I’m supposed to be your fiancée.” she stuttered uncertainly. “Aren’t I?”

“Lizzy, you don’t have to protect my virtue.” he gently broke the news. “I don’t think I ever had any to begin with.”

“I won’t argue with that.” she mumbled. “Regardless of your impurity though, wouldn’t it be odd if I didn’t tell them to back off?” She whispered.

“I can take care of them myself.”

“Okay, Red Reddington, since you clearly aren’t understanding my point.” she faced him squarely. “If a man was staring at your fiancée, like she’s staring at you, what would you do?”

“Besides killing him.” Red replied seriously. He had all ready stared down his fair share of men interested in her tonight. Nor had he enjoyed the emotions attached with the effort.

“I feel like I should have phrased that question differently,” she mumbled to herself, “but hopefully, you get my point?”

She had expected him to say he’d stare them down, maybe even have words, if the man was persistent enough. But this was Red Reddington she was talking to.

“You may phrase it however you wish but my response will stay the same.” Red snapped. “I’ve had my own battle of wills tonight, in regards to you, Elizabeth.”

“What are you talking about?” she snapped waspishly.

“One male in particular, is not picking up on the hint in the least.” he looked over Lizzy’s head at the man in question, hardening his eyes. “As you’ve subtly hinted, there is a certain reputation to uphold, most certainly on my part.”

“That killing him thing is not an option here, okay.” she quickly established rules.

“And yet, it doesn’t negate the fact that you have gone out of your way to ward off any women who threaten your territory.” Red lifted innocent brows. “With that said, if he doesn’t stop staring at you and your ass,” the man reached around under his coat inconspicuously, “I fear, I will be forced to teach him the manners he so obviously lacks.”

Her hand hastened to halt any further movement, her eyes widening at the brazen threat because she knew without doubt, this man did not make idle threats.

“Re–”

A boisterous man approached, moving the crowd aside as he made his way forward. A beefy hand was held out in greeting, which served as a welcome distraction for all concerned.

Liz didn’t know what had just happened, but was ever so glad that someone had offered a reprieve to the tension that had been building.

Red’s protectiveness of course, had all been work related. Logically, she knew as much. But why then, had the incident that had just preceded the large man’s arrival, seemed so personal to her?

But that could not be. This surely, was all a show. Something for those gathered to see and accept as part of Red’s plan. That’s all.

“Lizzy?” The man distracted her from her thoughts. She found herself suddenly gazing into the clear eyes staring at her so oddly. She followed along docilely as Red’s arm wrapped around her waist, pulling her along to a nearby couch.

They had been sitting side by side, talking with a couple when Red had turned to her, nuzzling her neck which made her jump slightly.

Covering her faux pas quickly, she rubbed her neck gently, scolding him. “Red, you tickled me!”

She felt his soft lips curve into a smile against her neck, “Would you care to dance?”

Smiling at the woman she’d been chatting with, she excused herself. “I’d love to.” He stood, offering her a hand.

Making their way to the floor, she asked under her breath, “Did you learn something?”

“I did. But right now,” he searched for a convenient spot on the crowded floor, “ I just want to dance with you.”

She slowed, cursing slightly under her breath, her attention diverted suddenly.

“Is something wrong?” he halted his steps, waiting patiently.

“My heel strap slipped.” she sighed lightly.

Red held out his hand in offer, which she readily clasped for support. She bent slightly, readjusted the strap, the movement pushing her breasts together for his viewing pleasure.

Liz righted herself, having fixed the problem. The man stared blatantly downward, so much so, the woman’s eyes followed the same path.

Finding nothing amiss, she lifted questioning stare. “What?”

Reddington more than reluctantly left his pleasant pastime, meeting her gaze stalwartly.
Taking his hand, her arm slid gently to his shoulder but the man’s smile returned as he pulled her into his body, wrapping his arm low about her waist, fitting her form snugly to his more masculine one.

They swayed gently with the music for a long moment, Liz feeling his warmth and strength transmitted through his touch. She hated to break the moment in reality, but one thing kept plaguing her.

She pulled her head back, looking up at him. “Were you staring at my breasts?” she blurted.

“Yes.” the man nodded jauntily.

Liz’s mouth feel agape, her eyes blinking at the open honesty. “Oh...”

Red settled his palm on the small of her back, his fingers falling casually on the gentle swell of her rounded bottom. He felt her breath deeply then straighten.

“Relax.” he instructed smoothly.

“In my opinion, I can’t hold you too tight, so what’s the problem?”

“I feel any sudden movement on my part will send this zipper careening across the room like a guided missile.” she quipped, his nearness affecting her decidedly, already adding to her confused state. “It could put someone’s eye out.”

“Everyone here knows how to duck flying projectile.” he chuckled. He rubbed his thumb on her spine, sending little shivers down her back, stepping closer as they moved in time to the music, his thigh rubbing the satin dress intimately. “Are you having a nice time now?” he inquired.

“It’s not as bad as I thought it would be. I’ve met some very nice people.” she tumbled over the words rapidly attempting to maintain the same level of casualness he seemed want. “They’ve all been very welcoming.” she had been pleasantly surprised. “I believe we were speaking about...”

“Not now. Later.” he cut her off short, nodding in the direction needed. “Doesn’t look like a very pleasant chat, does it?” he had indicated the stocky man speaking with Francis over by the fireplace.

“Is that Edward?”

Red nodded minutely halting his steps. He sighed, squeezing her once before dropping a kiss to her bare shoulder, his arm gently guiding her off the dance floor.

“Could Francis be...”

“Lizzy...”

She fell silent, obeying his reminder... save the shop talk for later. “Where are we going?” she whispered.

Red guided her right into the middle of a rather heated conversation. He approached the two men gingerly, a smile on his face. “Everything all right Francis?”

The perturbed man looked over at them, “Red, tell this idiot he shouldn’t take...” He stopped, shifting his gaze to Liz, before glancing back at Red, silently asking if he should continue.

“Go ahead.” Red acquiesced.
“He wants to take the shipment through Zapopan on the way to Guadalajara. Tell him it’s insane. You know the area well.”

“It is faster.” Red glanced at Edward, who was already puffing up with arrogance. “But there is a higher chance of merchandise vanishing. You have to be in good graces with Fermin.” He looked at Edward. “Do you even know Fermin, Edward?”

“Uh, no. I don’t.” Red had to give the man a little credit for giving up on not knowing his connection. But on the other hand, he would have been a fool to have said he did, when it was something so easily checked.

“Francis, if you like, I could call Fermin and clear the way.”

“Yes, would you? You, I trust.” Francis breathed easier. “I know these hotshots have to learn the trade routes, but I wish they wouldn’t cut their teeth on my supply.”

“I’ll do it now.” he gestured to Liz. “Francis, if you could?” Francis stepped closer, picking up the cue. “Thank you,” Red took out his phone, “if you’ll excuse me.” He exited through a nearby door, away from the loud music.

“Are you having a good time Elizabeth?” Francis stopped a waiter, grabbing champagne, handing her a cool glass.

“I am, it’s been wonderful.” she forced a pleasant smile, her thoughts with Red Reddington. “Thank you for having me.”

Edward inched closer, making his presence known.

Francis inclined his head to her, “I beg your pardon, Elizabeth.” his tone was not exactly friendly, but he was the host. “This is Edward Costa.”

She shook the pre-offered hand. Smiling awkwardly when the man retained possession for too long a period.

“Francis, aren’t you going to introduce me?” A remarkably handsome young man came forward eyeing the two men, before smoothly taking her hand out of the Edward’s grasp.

“Ahh, Elizabeth.” Francis made the introductions, “This is Mark Donovan.”

The young man’s eyes hardened as he noticed the interplay between Edward Costa and Mark Donovan.

Costa had not liked the intended slight one bit, clearly.

Edward narrowed his eyes, then stood erect when Francis stepped into his space, “You’re no match for me asshole,” the man all but snarled. “Let alone Reddington... so back off.”

Any other time, Liz might feel a little embarrassed, being viewed as she was. These men viewed her as Red’s territory and regardless of that fact, Edward wanted to stake some kind of a claim.

It wouldn’t be good if she caused problems in Red’s circle of contacts, particularly on her first meeting.

Thankfully she did not have to make any decisions. Francis was standing by not only his friend, but herself.

Though she didn’t need the protection, Francis had stopped her from having to ward off the other man’s interest, which would have caused a scene.

She had been enjoying Francis’ company through out the night, but now, he was a life saver.

And the newest arrival, Mark Donovan, seemed just as determined to be of help in Red’s absence. She was grateful to both men, whether they knew it or not.

Francis smiled charmingly at her as though the incident had not even occurred. Edward Costa had relented, however reluctantly, faced with such opposition.

“She is Reddington’s, uhh...” Francis informed Mark, his face twisting comically, his eyes suddenly alight with shared confidence which the other man picked up on.

Donovan eye’s turned cold as the dark stare settled on Edward.

“Main squeeze?” Mark teased, his expression two-fold as it transferred to Elizabeth Keen.

Liz cut her eyes to Mark, sheepishly. “I am not... that.”

“Numero uno?” the man supplied another questionable adjective.

Liz held her smile, grimacing slightly. “I really prefer to be called his old lady.” she corrected. “Maybe even, ball and chain.”

“What a quaint term... my mom and dad referred to each other in the same manner. God rest his soul.”

Mark sighed heavily. “Just because they don’t claim you doesn’t mean you can go around saying they’re dead.” he glanced at Liz. “They’re in San Diego.”

“No one is in San Diego.” Francis disgusted.

“You see what we’re dealing with?” Mark asked quietly.

Elizabeth bit the inside of her cheek to keep from smiling.

“They just got engaged.” Francis piped up happily. “Her and Red.”

“I see...” Mark scowled his confusion. “What kind of grammar is that?”

“Like, what?” Francis was momentarily confused.

Liz did not miss the fact that both men were making a very conscious effort to exclude Edward Costa from the conversation.

Were she honest with herself, she would have admitted the guy gave her the creeps. Even now Mark’s eyes constantly stared a hole through the man, his gaze unwavering.

“Congratulations.” He smiled at her, literally pushing Edward aside. The bulky man’s countenance darkened considerably, and for one brief second, Liz was sure a confrontation was inevitable.

“Is there a problem here?” Red had finally arrived back on scene, thank God.
“No, just meeting everyone.” She said brightly, answering before the other two men could reply, putting a halt to what could possibly turn out to be a bad situation.

Red sized up the situation in one glance, already well aware of what had transpired in his absence.

He put a protective arm about the woman, pulling her close, nodding his gratitude to his associates. Then threw an icy stare at Edward Costa, his meaning coming through, loud and clear.

“Thank you.” He acknowledged, holding Liz close. “Francis, I told Fermin that you had a line coming through and that I would like him to provide escort. I already paid the fee for safe passage, as a sign of good faith, so you’re good to go.”

“And that is why I let you win at poker.” Francis slapped Red’s shoulder, grinning.

“You keep telling yourself that if it helps you sleep at night, Francis.” Red replied in a deadpan tone.

“Red, you really should have a signal crew preceding Elizabeth. I was about blinded by this rock on her finger.” Mark tilted her hand, making a show of blocking his eyes from the light shining off it. “Why is it I’m just now hearing about this lady of yours?” He asked.

“Because first and foremost, it was none of your business. For obvious reasons,” Red stared hard at Edward, then straight-faced at Mark. “I’ve kept her hidden from you lecherous assholes.”

Mark laughed his delight, “Ahh, afraid she’d fall for my overwhelming charm and sophistication.” He made a show of straightening his cuffs and tie.

“No, I thought she’d be bothered by the smell of bullshit.” Red explained patiently. “It clings so heavily to you.”

Liz giggled quietly at Red’s unexpected quip. It was so rare to see the man having fun, real, honest to goodness fun.

“Now my dear Elizabeth, don’t you believe everything he says. I have a heart of pure gold.”

“Oh my God, it’s news to me that he has a heart.” Pouring Mark a drink from a bottle Red had acquired from some unknown source, he handed it to the laughing man. “Here, drink that. Get the taste out.”
Promises, Promises

April 3

Red had never thought of Mark and Francis as much more than close allies. He was slowly revising his opinion having watched their efforts on his behalf tonight.

Francis had confirmed his suspicions concerning the earlier incident.

Red had never cared much for Costa. There had never been anything concrete to base his concerns on, but the man had an instinct that never failed where people were concerned.

With that in mind, they had kept a close eye on Lizzy and Edward the rest of the evening, making sure their paths never crossed again.

The night had passed quickly for the woman, and Liz was genuinely sad to see it end.

She settled back into the luxury sedan sighing blissfully. She eased the exquisitely crafted heels off her aching feet. Eight hundred dollar shoes still hurt, she didn’t care what people said. The big liars. Red sat into the plush leather, adjusting his silky black vest. “See, now that wasn’t so bad, was it?”

Liz shook her head, reluctantly. “No, it wasn’t.”

It had been a nice evening. They had danced more dances, Red even relinquished her to Mark and Francis a couple of times.

They had talked with more of the crowd and she had landed an invitation to Mark’s upcoming party, which he said was an annual event and that Red know all the details, so she could get the exact dates from him.

All in all, it had turned out to be not only enjoyable but productive. And if Liz were honest with herself, she hadn’t minded the appreciative looks from the gentlemen in the room, even if Red had cooled their interest in her quickly enough.

The big party pooper.

Tonight had been an ego boost she had not known she needed.

After the divorce, even though she understood the circumstances for what they were, she had felt undesirable, unwanted, and unworthy.

She had loved Tom, or whatever his name was, in actuality, with her whole being. After two years of marriage and sharing their lives, her love for him had only grown. That feeling had greatly waned after the emotional and physical battle had ensued between them. When he had literally held a gun to her head, any lingering emotions had died along with her dreams of a normal life.

She had to wonder what type of man Tom was, that he didn’t feel anything for her. After all that had transpired between them, how twisted were these people that they not only instilled him into her life, but had thought to have him marry her?

Had he held any sort of affection for her or, in the end, was she just a tool? A means to an end before he moved on to his next assignment?

The FBI wanted her time, her life. Red wanted the Fulcrum. What had Tom and his people wanted?
The Fulcrum? Her parents whereabouts? Red? All of the above?

Why had her life become such a twisted maniacal mess?

So many thoughts, so much mystery, so many questions unanswered. Dizzy from the turmoil, Liz dropped her head into her hand, her fingers easing the tension in her temples.

“Are you all right?” Red placed a light hand over hers, “You look…”

“Tired?” Liz filled in, having heard enough of it from her colleagues over the last few days.

Liz blinked, thrown by his astuteness. How did he always know just by looking at her?

“I’m too impatient. I want to know what’s going on in my life. I want to know…” She took a shaky breath, closing her eyes. “I think too much.” Her lips turned up slightly. When he didn’t smile back, she fell silent.

Red exhaled slowly, turning his eyes forward. “I despise sounding like a broken record. So I’m going to take a different approach this time.” He crossed his leg, shifting his body to face her. “If a teenager came up to you tomorrow with all these ideas on how they were going to run away or get pregnant, all so they could get away from home and their so called miserable existence. What would you say to them?”

“I’d tell them to wait it out until they turned eighteen. They could leave home without repercussions.” she sing-songed her head slightly shrugging her shoulders to the question. “To enjoy the freedom they have now. Nothing that’s happening in their lives at that moment will be that way forever…” Liz stopped, listening to her own words, suddenly annoyed. “Are you comparing me to a melodramatic teenager.” she sighed.

“No, not at all. I’m merely making a point.” He pushed a stray strand of hair from her face. “You will know all you want in time. And you’ll look back and wish you had appreciated the freedom, the simplicity.”

“You call this simplistic?” She said, perturbed.

“In comparison, yes.” Red rubbed his forehead, then squeezed the tension from his neckline. “Enjoy your life right now, Lizzy. When you have your answers, you’ll have a deep desire to come back to this time, when things were seemingly more complicated.”

She fell silent, suddenly afraid of her future. Red had always placated her, offering what she had always assumed were empty platitudes. But when he had described it in such a manner, she had to second guess her thoughts on the subject.

If Red was telling her these things, to enjoy what she had now, no matter how terrible and unfair it seemed, there had to be a reason.

What the hell had happened? Who were her parents, really?

She wasn’t really asking the vital question, she knew. It was fear, wondering what her parents could have possibly done, that it was still affecting her life today?

“Believe me or not, but all of this.” he waved a hand winsomely. “All of what I’m doing, is to answer those questions. Pandora’s Box has been opened, releasing all the evil into the world and now, we’re putting it back in the box one evil at a time.”

“So, what you’re saying is that all the people on the Blacklist have some connection to my parents in some way?”

“Not all of them, but most. Some have fallen into our lap and we would be fools to not pursue them.” he grimaced accordingly. “The Stewmaker for one. Whether your parents made use of his services, I don’t know. Regardless, he was someone that needed to disappear.” Red glowered.

Even though as indirect as it was, that son-of-a-bitch had ties to his life. But that was a story for another time.

“Trust me, Lizzy.” Red’s green eyes bored into hers. “You won’t like the answers, but you will have them.” he silently begged for her understanding. “You just have to be patient.” He placed his hand comfortingly over hers. “It’s the safest path right now.”

“That’s easy for you to say.” She played with a crystal on her gown.

“Did you believe me when I told you about Tom?” She stopped her intended reply, knowing full well it would be a lie if she answered in the affirmative.

“You will have to unveil these answers yourself to completely believe the truth. It’s just your way.” Red’s jaw open and closed, wanting to say more, but bit back his agitation

“There are times I want to lay it all out for you, but you would always have doubts about whether I was manipulating the situation, twisting things for my own agenda...” he shook his head stubbornly, “this way is best, for in the end... you can arrive at only one solution.”

Elizabeth considered all that had been said. She realized she would have to reconcile herself to facing her own impatience and new, unknown fears.

“All right. I’ll trust you.” Liz flipped her hand in his, lacing her fingers with the thick strong ones. “I can’t say that I won’t be a pain in the ass, but I can promise to not get so frustrated with you.” Her mouth quirked.

Red brought their clasped hands to his mouth, kissing the soft skin, chuckling. “Don’t make promises you can’t keep, Lizzy.”

Pulling up to her door, Red stilled his friend with a gentle hand on his shoulder. “I’ve got it Dembe.”

Exiting the vehicle, he made his way to her side, offering a hand to help her from the back. Looping her arm through his, they made their way up the steps.

“You truly do look beautiful tonight. I’m glad, even though it was work related, you had a nice time.” he made small talk, “And I must say, I find bare feet on a woman extremely erotic.”

The woman glanced down, her cheeks heating slightly. “I love these shoes.” she held them aloft. “Though, I feel like one of Cinderella’s step-sisters.” she made light of the moment. “I don’t think I could fit into them right now.”

Red smiled gently, allowing a genial silence to ensue.

Liz snickered lowly when they neared the top step. “What?” Red questioned, smiling at her good mood.
“I was just imagining what my neighbors think of me.” Liz turned, coming eye to eye with Red who was one step below her. His head cocked, not getting the reference.

“They can’t have missed what’s been going on in my house. With Tom gone... and now you here tonight, as we are,” she indicated his tux, her evening dress and the flowers in her hand, “I’m sure I have a scarlet letter on my forehead, in their eyes.” she laughed softly, “Oh well, to me this isn’t home anymore. So sooner or later, I will be leaving.”

Red’s jaw clenched, hard. “If they only knew what had gone on in your house.” Lizzy’s broken and rumpled form, the splintered spindle on the staircase, the scattered debris, all flashed in his mind, his rage resurfacing instantly.

“They might be greatly relieved to see you with a gentleman now.” He smiled sadly, brushing his fingertip over the place where the now faded bruising had been on her face.

Her eyes misted, knowing what he was envisioning. Blinking, a tear slowly trekked a path over her cheek, as his comforting words of that fateful night returned.

At the one of the lowest points in her life, she had never felt so cherished. So special.

Liz wondered at the man before her. He was a complete contradiction of everything she had learned at the academy.

How was it, that this man, on top of the FBI’s most wanted list... considered the embodiment of evil by some, a self confessed killer.

This same man had shown her such amazing understanding and unrelenting kindness.

The same hands that had caused so many peoples demise, were always incredibly gentle with her. Never once had he raised his hand in anger, even though she had given him ample opportunity, with her uneven temperament, unreasonable anger and outrageous agitation directed totally at him.

How was it she believed him when he said he had never lied to her? There were the times of course, when her own stubbornness barred that belief but in the end, she had always been proven wrong.

His temper was legendary and yet to date, she had never experienced it first hand. He treated her with respect and dignity. He made her feel like she had self-worth.

Ironically, she felt he was the only person she could rely on to never harm her in any way, shape or form.

He understood her like no one else. Always giving her what she needed to hear, see or understand to keep going, to not go insane.

Like now for instance, he understood her need for quiet contemplation. It wasn’t an intimidating silence. It wasn’t to punish or to hurt. He saw it for what it was... an inner need.

Waiting, Red came up a step, standing in front of her. He twirled the loose curl of hair laying along her neck.

“I would never hurt you, Lizzy.” The man stressed, his deep voice resonating with a mixture of emotion.

She wasn’t sure if he was speaking in general or referencing her battle with Tom. It didn’t matter really, she guessed.
“I know...” Raising on her toes, she kissed his cheek, marveling at the fleeting touch of his five o’clock shadow against her smooth lips. Another minor comparison between him and Tom.

Tom could shave in the morning and be fine until the next day. But Red, by midday, a soft growth shadowed his face. Not that it was unattractive, he looked quite handsome.

Maybe it had to do with his virility. Red screamed Alpha Male more than anyone she knew. A fact he had proven repeatedly tonight.

What was she saying?

She flushed a deep crimson red. She felt it creeping across her chest, her face flaming with it.

“You’re blushing.” he grinned, tilting his head, scanning her features. “May I ask why?” he laughed softly, enchanted with the change.

“No.” The brunette turned her face, embarrassed.

He wasn’t sure what it was that set her off. He wouldn’t push her, just yet anyway.

Red was more than pleased, none the less.

“I wish you would change your mind about staying at the safe house tonight. Security hasn’t finished here, it’s still not working properly.” Red craned his neck scanning the house. “I’ll be with Mark and Francis for a little over two hours, think of all the things you could snoop into.” he teased gently. “My place has armed guards and let us not forget, a whirlpool bath.”

The added enticement gave the woman pause for thought. She really enjoyed that whirlpool bath.

“All right, I’ll make a deal with you.” She compromised. “You go have your meeting and I’ll pack a few things, get some things in order here. When you’re done, come back and get me.”

Red scrunched his brow, frowning. “I don’t like it. Something isn’t setting right with me.”

“You know, I am a big girl, Red.” It was her turn to tease. “I have a real FBI badge and everything.”

“I still don’t like it.” Something was itching at him, gnawing at his stomach.

“It’s just a couple of hours. If I am staying with you for a while, I’ll need time to gather some things anyway, right?”

“All right. Two hours. Not a minute more.” he glanced at his watch. “I should go...” he pulled back, his eyes raking over that form fitting red gown which delighted him just as much now as it had when he picked her up earlier in the evening.

“And though it pains me deeply to say, let you get into something more comfortable...” he pointed a finger at her, his brows lifting meaningfully. “I’m warning you now, if you don’t answer when we get back, I’m coming in.”

“I guess I better get inside then.” She said, somewhat reluctantly.

“Wait.” Red stepped into her again, his cologne filling her space. “I almost forgot.” he slipped his hand under her coat, running his fingers along her waist, then up her back, searchingly.

“Wha...?” Liz inhaled, electrified when she felt the cloth covered arm and heavy cufflink on his wrist, graze the bare skin on her upper back.
His hand came to rest on the top of her dress, his thumb and forefinger snapped, popping the eyelet loose from it’s partnering hook. Her body unconsciously bowed to the touch.

Keeping her in place, he grasped the zipper. Tugging it, he felt her jerk, her breasts pushing into his chest as the teeth gave way.

“Samar indicated you might need help with that.” He rasped, lowly.

“Getting it zipped.” Liz rolled her eyes. “T-thank you.” she stammered as his fingers traced slowly down her spine. “I mean...for tonight, I had a good time, Red... R-Raymond.”

Smiling, he picked up her hand, kissing the palm. “Elizabeth.” He bowed his head ever so slightly, his eyes holding hers hypnotically. He had enjoyed the way she had stumbled over his name.

Red patiently waited while she fumbled with the key in the lock. He came up behind her, his warm hand wrapping around hers, steadying her suddenly shaking fingers.

He turned his head slightly, inhaling her soft perfume. The man’s mouth pulling at the corners when she exuded a small sigh of awareness, due to his close proximity as his warm breath tickled her neckline.

He enjoyed the returning flush of cognizance. He deftly opened the door, laying a hand just above her rounded bottom, ushering her inside.

The imprint of the warm hand imprinted itself on the flesh beneath the silk dress.

“I’ll be back... soon.” Red reminded, brushing his thumb over the soft rosy flush of her cheek.

“Lock it, Lizzy.” he advised silkily before pulling the door closed. He smiled through the glass when she did obeyed, without complaint, his eyes holding her’s spellbound for a long beat, before the man turned, taking his leave.

He jauntily bounced down the steps to the waiting car, ignoring Dembe’s teasing remarks as they pulled away.
April 3

Watching his lights disappear down the street, Liz cupped her flaming cheeks, releasing the shaky breath she had been holding. Not that she was relieved to see him go, quite the opposite, actually. She hadn’t wanted him to leave and already she was second guessing her decision to stay behind.

Not that she meant for anything sexual to occur, exactly.

Oh my God, why do I keep going back to that?

She clarified to herself that, what she had really meant was that... in the right setting, Red relaxed and regaled her with many different interesting topics that she found quite fascinating. She really did enjoy spending time with him.

And she was only staying with him as a safety precaution until they figured out what the deal was with this Carver creep.

That was all... she nodded with finality, feeling a little better for her lapse.

Leaning against the downstairs door, she dropped the low pumps to the hardwood floor, thankful she had chosen to wear the pair Red had given her. She bent slightly, massaging her feet absently, her thoughts with the night’s events.

She sighed, hearing the low rumble of thunder in the near distance. A good thunderstorm, especially at night, helped her sleep better.

Laying down her flowers, she stared at the colorful bouquet as she pulled off her coat, hanging it on hook. She would have to find a vase somewhere, but for the life of her, she could think of no secret hiding places where one might be found.

Lifting the heavy train of the gown, she trudged up the stairs, smiling, remembering Red’s earlier expression when she had met him at the door.

It warmed her to know that he had found her pretty. FBI agent or not, she was still a women and it was nice to be told she was attractive after so much work.

Isn’t that why they, women, did it? For the compliment? Praise, even?

Entering her room, she grabbed her night clothes, laying them on the sink. Grasping the loosened zipper, she worked it down, shivering, recalling how Red’s hand had felt when he had pulled it free. She wondered what it would have felt like if he had taken it down, all the way?

What was wrong with her? All he had done was pull it down an inch or so and she’s over here fantasizing about...

She shook her head to clear the unbidden visuals popping up in her mind....never mind!

Shedding the dress and hanging it, she hastily rid herself of her undergarments then slipped the soft cotton shirt and boxers on, relishing the freedom. Washing off the heavy makeup, brushing her teeth and combing out her hair, she felt the day melt away.
Running the brush through her hair, she caught a glimpse of herself in the mirror, “Oh, damn.”

She held her hand out, wiggling the finger that still held the huge diamond. She had forgotten to give it back.

Well, Red would be back soon enough and she could right the error.

Now though, in the privacy of her own home, she stared at the beautiful ring, fascinated by how the large stone caught the light. It really was a astonishing ring. While it was lavish, it was not ostentatious and it fit her so perfectly.

She wondered where he purchased it. Or even if he had purchased it. Why did he choose diamonds and sapphires? Better yet, how did he know her size?

Her other rings, even as light as they were, kept rotating on her finger throughout the day. This one didn’t move an inch, even though it was considerably heavier.

A bright flash of light bathed the room, followed by a clap of thunder. Liz shielded her eyes momentarily. The storm was getting closer.

Walking to the door, she hesitated, grabbing a soft button down shirt and a pair of long pants to slip over her cami and boxers. Red was coming back after all.

Deciding on a cup of tea while packing, she literally skipped down the stairs, a thought hitting her.

She should let Hudson out before the rain starts.

Rounding the corner, she instantly stilled.

Hudson.

She hadn’t heard or seen the dog since she’d entered the house. While he didn’t normally greet her at the door, he did come wandering in a few minutes after, seeking a treat, if nothing else.

“Hudson?” She whispered cautiously.

Listening intently to the house, she didn’t hear anything. Didn’t see anything. Nothing seemed out of place. But suddenly the air felt... off.

Creeping closer to where it felt most unsettled, if the hairs standing on the back of her neck were any indication, she entered the kitchen, cautiously. Her eyes raked the darkened room, seeing familiar objects here and there...

Her eyes widened with fright, a loud gasp escaping her throat.

Sitting at her bar, a large shadowy figure slowly eased himself into an erect position.

Turning, she ran, her bare feet pounding loudly on the hardwood floors, her panicked heart drowning out the sound.

A couple of blocks away, Red was still feeling the buzz in his body left over from having spent a fantastic, non-violent evening with Elizabeth Keen.
Red held the soft petals of the single rose to his nostrils inhaling the fragrant sweetness. And to think, he had second guessed himself where the flowers were concerned. While a gentlemanly thing to do, he had wondered at Elizabeth’s reaction to such a gesture.

How would she perceive the offering? Just when he was about to hide them from sight, Samar had answered the door.

But then, Lizzy had enjoyed them, much to his surprise. Only when they had left the car, did she let go of her prize. And upon returning, it was the first thing she retrieved.

A good memory.

He remembered how nice it felt when she pushed into his body when he had pulled on that damn zipper.

Now, if only he could get rid of the feeling of unrest in his stomach, everything would be fine.

He wished he could say that his insistence that she stay with him was solely for her protection, but he’d be lying. Over the few short days that she had stayed with him, he had grown accustomed to her light footfall, laughter and that she was just there, with him.

Leaving her now left him feeling agitated, uneasy. He wondered if it was because he wanted to be near her or was it something more?

He stretched further in the seat, pushing his leg into the side floorboard, hitting a small bundle with his heel.

Sitting up, he felt for whatever it was in the darkened car, finally hitting a jeweled embellishment with his hand. Picking it up, he saw it was Lizzy’s bag from tonight.

Opening it, he found the expected items. Lipstick, mints, and her badge. He could wait and give it to her later.

But... if a case should come up in the next two hours, she would need her badge, he thought. A good enough excuse.

Waving the bag in the mirror’s view, he said, “Dembe, turn the car around.” Neither man, one more than the other, the least bit put out by the five block trek back.
April 4

It’s funny, what one thinks of while fighting for one’s life.

Maybe it was a survival instinct or that she had been hanging out with Red too long and had become flippant while staring down the face of evil. But it didn’t seem normal that there were only two prominent thoughts racing through her head at this exact moment.

One being, that with her attacker’s modus operandi, her life as it was, and the occasional flashes of lightning highlighting his murderous face... all had the makings of a horror film, minus the musical score.

And the second being, that in less time than it had taken for all her new things to be delivered after her fight with Tom, she was already on the brink of having to order more furniture and other sundry. Which was a very optimistic attitude, given her current situation.

The house was tossed, her throwing everything in her wake, trying to slow him so she could get to her gun.

She felt the thin blade her attacker held, slice through her skin once again. The sudden split of her flesh feeling warm, then stinging hotly, as cool air met the fresh flowing blood seeping from the widening wound, all which was slowing her progress.

At some point in the melee, she had not only bloodied her face bad enough that she had to keep wiping the ooze from her eyes, but she had sliced a foot deeply enough that she could retain no traction on the slick floor, all which was slowing her progress further.

Stumbling to her gun box, she felt a hand grip her ankle, yanking her off her feet. Kicking with all she had, Liz fought for purchase, pulling with her upper body. Her fingertips grazed the edge of the wood, finally tumbling the box to the cluttered floor, spilling its life saving contents.

She grasped the black metal, attempting to flip, but she was stilled by a steel-like grip on her arm and wrist.

Pushing harder at the weight on her back with all she had, did little to dislodge the heavy burden which held her flat to the floor. Beefy hands suddenly became painfully tight, as the man shifted, coming heavily down on her right forearm.

The resounding snap of the bone was almost drowned out by her pained scream. The adrenaline coursing through her terrified body gave an extra push, allowing her to flip, the pain a lesser of two evils.

And at this moment, Elizabeth Keen was an expert where evil was concerned.

She kicked towards his groin, missing by mere inches. Her ankle was caught easily, grabbed harshly then yanked viciously, popping it from it’s proper place.

The combination of the arm and ankle were too much for her body and mind to process.

Liz turned her head, throwing up the evening’s meal and drink.
His engaging laughter sounding over her sickness made her stomach rebel again. This man was enjoying every second of this sick game he played.

He stood over her for what seemed an eternity as the woman attempted to regroup which only seemed to amuse the sociopath more.

He reached, deliberately tugging sharply on her injured leg, ignoring her cries of agony before dragging her carelessly towards the kitchen. Liz wondered, having read the guy’s file, if he was going to retrieve his kit.

She knew all about the contents of that kit and their purpose.

With a last ditch effort to escape, she turned to her stomach, grasping uselessly at the floor, her finger nails scraping the thin cracks, breaking as she was pulled along.

“Help!” An ear piercing scream passed through her parched, dried lips.

The man halted his movements abruptly, a latex glove covered hand going to her face silenced her effectively for a brief moment.

She bit the hand as hard as humanly possible. “You son of a bitch!” she spat her fury and frustration.

Struggling with all the strength she had left, she kicked the little table on her right, sending it crashing down the hall.

No one could hear her struggles. No one knew she needed help.

Red wouldn’t be here for another two hours, and when he did come back, he’d find her... dead. The very thing he had been worried about happening was going to happen.

She was going to die.

God, if I ever needed help, now would be the time.

With all that she had in her, she let out a loud terrified scream.
Night's Knight

April 4

Grabbing the bag, Red exited the vehicle, sticking his head back in the opened door. “Leave it running, I’ll only be a minute.”

Unfortunately, he thought regretfully.

He looked up to the sky, squinting after a particularly bright flash lit the heavens in a strobe of varying colors. He loved night time storms, they relaxed him like nothing else. Maybe tonight he would get more than his usual couple hour’s sleep.

Glancing at the house, he thought better of his decision to return for a moment. The house was pitch black. But surely she couldn’t be asleep by now? He had only left about fifteen minutes ago.

A low crashing sound drew his attention. Looking down the street both ways, he didn’t see anything out of the norm. The area quiet of traffic or pedestrians even.

As he went up the first step, his senses tingled. The hair on his neck stood on end.

Reaching for the pistol at his back, he hesitated, listening out into the night.

Dembe shut the car down, before quietly opening the driver’s side door.

Red held up a hand to still the man behind him. Silently taking the second step, he was brought up short when a bone chilling scream filled the air.

His name bounced down the brick facades lining the street in a nightmarish echo, making his blood run cold.

“Lizzy!”

The frame of the door and nearby windows shuddered with the force of the door being kicked, then a heavy crashing sound indicated the first door giving way.

Liz took heart, unreasonable hope rising in her chest. “Help!” she continued her entreaties hoping someone was now out there to hear.

Hitting out with her good hand, Liz heard a crunching sound, glad she had been able to inflict some sort of injury on the bastard.

He didn’t cry out, but it was enough for her to know he would be feeling an ache for a couple of days, or maybe not at all, if whoever the hell was at the door got in and was hopefully armed.

The sound of a body or foot connecting with the main door and shattering glass stopped both combatants in their struggles. Instantly, the heavy weight on her lifted and she was able to breath again.

The sound of his footsteps retreating to the back, allowed the woman’s brain to begin functioning again.
“Elizabeth!” Reddington searched the blackened area religiously, only able to make out a few discernable shapes and objects. His gun arm was lifted at the ready as he swept the room with a professional detachment. But in his mind one thing and one thing alone, screamed out in alarm.

She could see his silhouette lit by the street lamp in the darkened entryway, followed by that of his friend.

Dembe’s large frame was unmistakable as was the lethal weapon he hoisted.

“Here!” Liz gasped weakly, rolling to her back with great effort. She whimpered with the pain, black spots blurring her vision. “Kitchen!” she croaked out hoarsely.

Both men moved forward, scanning for unseen enemies in the darkness as they neared.

Red slipped in the wetness covering the floor, sliding the last few inches to her. He threw his hat, hovering over her protectively, his hand braced by her shoulder.

“Where?” Red spoke quickly, quietly. His eyes having adjusted enough to see her condition.

Red glanced up to see Dembe disappear out the opened back door. The house fell silent except for Liz’s labored breathing.

“Tom?” he whipped off his black scarf, pressing it against a spot where he could see blood flowing on her face in the hazy beam given by the street light.

“Carver.” she weakly whispered.

Even in the low light, she could see the grimace cross his face. “Are you sure?” The note he had found left on her windshield, flashed vividly in his mind.

“Oh, I’m sure.” She felt the dozens of cuts stinging her skin more acutely now that the adrenalin was leaving her body.

Red leaned forward, looking at the gash on her head, before adding more pressure to the wound.

“You really do come when called.” she laughed, stopping short when she felt the deep ache in her chest.

Red blindly felt for a light switch, “Where do you hurt.”

“Be better to...” she panted with the pain, having moved her leg, “ask where I don’t.”

She gasped as broken bone rubbed against a raw nerve ending, sending a searing pain twitching through her body. “I’m not sure,” she strived for a lightness after such a dark menacing moment, “but I think my arm is broken.” She sought his eyes. “It is still there right?”

Light suddenly bathed the hall in a warm glow. Red had left her long enough to find the switch.

Turning back, he choked on the air, seeing her bathed in blood, head to toe.

Her clothes were a tattered mess of cuts and holes, the blood seeping through the dozens of slashes where the bastards blade had made contact. Her arm and ankle were bent at an awkward, unnatural angle.

“Jesus...” he said breathlessly.
“That bad?” Liz, now that she didn’t feel the overpowering horror she had just moments before, continued to try to lighten the moment when a sharpness in her back left her breathless. Adjusting her position to stop the jabbing agony, a burst of air escaped her battered body.

“Don’t move.” Red brushed a hand over her drenched brow, wiping away the sweat and blood on his tuxedo pants, uncaring that he was ruining the expensive fabric. “God...” he whispered brokenly.

“Something hurts.” She arched her back as much as she could without jostling her broken limbs. She tried to move the object herself.

Gently reaching under her back, Red pulled out a piece of broken pottery, gripping it rigidly. The colored clay bit into his palm, cutting deeply into his skin. It seemed a small penance for being too late, again.

After a few moments, he hurled the piece against the wall, shattering it further.

A sound from the back had Red turning fluidly, arm up and gun aimed. His arm steady. His eyes cold and unwavering.

“Raymond.” Dembe’s soft voice sounded from behind the safety of the wall before venturing out. Red Reddington shot first, then if the person was still breathing, maybe questioned later, if he was in the mood.

Raymond Reddington was in no mood at present, it was abundantly clear.

“Call the Doctor.” Red turned his troubled eyes back to Liz, his lips pursed tightly. “You’ll be okay, I promise.” he stroked Elizabeth, feeling down her body gently.

She didn’t even mind as his large hand brushed over her breast. She didn’t even think he was consciously aware of having done so, not meaning to give an arousing touch, but a reassuring one for them both.

His touch reminded her that she was alive and breathing.

And funnily enough, as his hand brushed her bare thigh, she realized that she hadn’t put her pants on. She had left them laying on her bed upstairs. If she wasn’t hurting so much, she knew she’d be embarrassed for him to find her in only a tank top and panties.

There was something seriously wrong with her to be thinking of something so trivial, when she was laying broken and bleeding, on the floor.

“I’ll be fine... now.” Her head lolled to the side, the adrenaline having left completely, she felt the heavy weight of sleep coming.

“That’s right. You’ll have the best doctor and care.” Red attempted to smile, but his lips quivered with the effort, “Don’t go to sleep.”

“So t-tired.” Liz slurred.

“I know, I know you are. You have every right to be. You fought hard.” his hand shook as it wiped away the blood still seeping heavily out of her head wound. “Are you dizzy? Blurry vision?”

She opened her eyes with effort, looking around. “Not really.” her eyes fluttered shut. “Just tired.”

Dembe came back, crouching beside them, “He wants to meet at the safe house, cut our time in
After a few short commands to Dembe, Red turned back to the broken woman on the floor, feeling the bile rise in his throat, knowing what he had to do.

He cupped her forehead, under the clamminess, he felt the cool. Tiny tremors traversed the entire length of her body. Her eyes were glazed and fixed on his.

She was going into shock.

Liz’s heavy eyes struggled to stay open and aware. “Is he coming?” she asked almost timidly.

“Is who coming Elizabeth?” the man thought perhaps she was still in the throes of the horror she had just experienced. “He’s gone. You’re safe with us, safe with me.”

Liz’s brow furled quizzically as she shook her head slightly, “Doctor.”

His eyes watered at the reminder, what he was going to do, what he had to do to her.

“I’m going to have to pick you up.” Red smoothed her brow, then touched his forehead to hers, “And it’s going to hurt like hell, but we have to get you out of here.” Raising a few inches from her face, his tear filled eyes locked with her own. “I don’t want to hurt you.”

She reached to his face, her weak hand shaking with the effort. Touching the outside corner of his eye, a single drop fell, mixing with the ones coming from her own eyes.

Brushing away the remaining wetness, she streaked his skin red. Her blood marking him.

Shaking her head negatively, “Helping.” she panted with the effort of talking.

Taking a few deep steadying breaths, he grabbed the scarf off the floor.

“I’m sorry.” he whispered hoarsely.

She nodded, then he moved her arm to her chest. She sharply inhaled, the pain agonizing. Her face paled visibly.

“God, I’m so sorry.”

He wasn’t sure if she heard his repeated mantra as he continually apologized for the pain he was causing her, but he felt it deep in his soul, so he continued as if it would cleanse them both of this awful moment if he said it enough.

Pushing back her anguished cries to a corner of his mind, he secured the arm as best he could with the soft fabric. While under the heavy weight of pain, he swiftly wrapped a scarf supplied by Dembe securely around her ankle, holding it in place.

Red wiped the sweat from his brow with the sleeve of his tux. He fought the tremors of rage and sickness racking his body.

Swallowing convulsively, he kept down what so desperately wanted to come back up but, just barely. It’s acid burning at the back of his throat. The anger roiled inside his mind radiating from him so much, his skin actually burned.

Finished with his task, he waved away Dembe’s silent offer to take her.
“The blanket.” He pointed to one laying on the floor, near the door.

“C-Cold.” She mumbled incoherently.

“I know.” He took the blanket, wrapping it around her then hooked his arm under her legs and one behind her back, lifting in one sure motion. The small movement jostled her ankle slightly, she groaned so deeply, he felt it ripple up his arms.

There had been no strain on her part, but it had exhausted her. She sagged limply into Red’s firm chest. Her head fell back, to hold it up just too much effort on her part.

“Elizabeth!” Red’s stern voice cut through the fog. Mindful of her arm, he cradled her higher on his chest, rubbing his face against her wet one. Her blood and tears mixed with his sweat.

“Resting.” She fought to keep her eyes open. “You came.” Her head bobbed before resting on his shoulder. “You... came.”

“How did you know?” Red questioned, remembering she had called out for him during the attack.

“Didn’t,” she slurred, “only hoped.”

And with that, she blessedly passed into oblivion.
April 4

The fifteen minute drive nearly undid Red.

He urged Dembe to drive faster though the drizzling rain made the road slick and hazardous. Dembe however, used it to his advantage, sliding around the slippery surface like a pro stock car racer.

Red cradled the bleeding woman to his chest, somewhat reassured by her continued breathing and heart beat, but it wasn’t enough after repeated attempts to wake her, had failed.

He tucked the blanket and his coat around her trying to trap his heat inside with little effect. She continued to shiver in his arms, unconsciously curled into his warmth.

“I can see the doctor’s car ahead.” His friend reassured.

Shutting his eyes, Red dropped his head, rubbing his face against Liz’s, comforting them both.

Pulling rapidly into the drive, the car slid on the wet concrete. Dembe vacated the vehicle before it had been fully placed in park, the gears grinding viciously. Running to the opposite side, the man yanked open the door, stepping back hastily to allow Red to get out with his light burden, which he did with unpracticed ease.

Hurriedly making their way to the house, Red covered Liz with his body, blocking the rain as they were greeted by the doctor, who immediately began examining his patient.

The physician ran his hand over the head wound, pushing on the affected area. “Can you hear me?” His voice was raised effectively, but garnered no response. Following the two men, he kept talking, asking questions of the woman.

“How long since she lost consciousness?” Doctor Bryan removed necessary objects from his bag, placing them within reaching distance.

“Fifteen minutes.” Red gently placed his precious bundle on the bed, careful of her injuries.

“I will get hot water.” Dembe knew the routine well.

Red yelled after the retreating man. “And more light!”

The IV was readied, administered with ease. “It will help with the shock. Did she mention any specific pain?

“Specific pain! Have you looked at her?” Red knew he was being unreasonable but he didn’t give a fuck.

The younger man took no offense, pulling a set of syringes from his bag, concentrating on the matter at hand. “Antibiotic and a tetanus shot.” he explained his actions, still very much focused on his patient.

Tossing the used needles into a surgical pan, the slight man probed the cuts, carefully watching the flow. Reaching for his scissors, he pulled at Liz’s shirt, cutting into the fabric in one long slice.

“Help me get her up.” he instructed.

Red slid his hand under the woman’s neck and shoulders, pulling her lax body into an upright position. He helped the doctor remove the last of her bloody garment, holding her naked torso against his clothed one.

She felt so cold against his heat and he desperately wished he could warm her, but other things must take priority, he knew.

Dembe reentered the room carrying heated water and cloths. Averting his eyes away from only a side view of Liz’s breast and naked back, he placed the items on the closest night stand.

Turning his attention back to the doctor, “How much longer?” he asked sternly.

“She has a couple of really bad gashes back here.” the doctor snapped right back. “I know my job.”

After a few minutes, the young man finished his task.

Easing her down, Red saw the full extent of her torso injuries. Gritting his teeth, his fists clenched tightly, the man fought to control his rage.

“She’ll be fine Mr. Reddington.” The doctor said calmly, gently prodding the wound on Liz’s stomach. Grabbing the needed supplies, he immediately started closing the area.

Hearing Dembe’s return, Red placed a cloth over the woman’s breasts out of respect for her dignity.

The doctor had closed the stab wound on her stomach and was now working his way up her torso. He removed the cloth from her breasts, leaning in closer to inspect the deep cut on the upper slope of her mound.

Red watched as the man’s hands pushed at the cut, his palm grazing her nipple, lifting the pert bud.

Red stepped back, his instinct to yank the man’s hand away overwhelming. He closed his eyes, visions of snapping the man’s wrist, literally overpowering for a second.

He wondered in the days which followed, if the rage he felt at that moment was for the physician and his right to touch something Red felt so territorial about or his own unconscionable notice of how plump and soft... how very touchable the woman’s breasts appeared even in such a state.

But admiring them as a man, becoming aroused at the sight, he simply could not... would not allow such a travesty. Not right now. Maybe later when this hell was over. When he wasn’t so anxious and pissed... and terrified.

Right now, he just wanted her to be all right.
“This one isn’t bad, we’ll just bandage it.” The doctor kept his face close to the area, unaware of the danger.

“The stomach wound is deep and will have to be watched for infection, I’m afraid.” he sighed heavily, a heavy scowl on the handsome face. “Her neck is superficial, so to speak” he carefully bandaged her rib cage. “He missed anything vital in both areas. So that’s good.”

The narrative continued “They will be painful, but we’ll manage that.” it was reassured. He disinfected and bandaged the long gash on her foot. “I would be happier with an x-ray before doing this, but I can feel the damage pretty clearly. I can set it and we’ll boot it.”

“No, you’ll cast it.” Red interrupted.

“We don’t really have to do that anymore Mr. Reddington.” the doctor knew better than to condescend, but... “With continued care, we will watch for any movement.”

Red silenced the man. “I want her in casts. We’ll discuss the boot later.”

“Three weeks, then we’ll re-evaluate.” The doctor was not happy, clearly. Gently grabbing the foot, he manipulated it in his hand, hesitating when the woman on the bed stirred. Liz settled back into her slumber quickly and he returned to prodding the area.

“I can feel it here. I just need to slip it back into place.”

Red nodded, sitting on the bed. He stroked her hair, murmuring to her quietly.

“Is there anyway we can get some ice? I’d like to pack her arm while we’re waiting. Keep the swelling down.” the doctor advised.

Red inclined his head, pulling out his phone, in seconds the request was accomplished.

Placing the cloth back over her pale breasts, Red stared down at her strained features, upset that even passed into sweet oblivion, she felt the pain.

“Are you ready to set the breaks?” Red demanded tightly.

The doctor nodded solemnly.

“Give her something for the pain.”

“We don’t know if she had a head injury, Mr. Reddington.”

Red considered all his options. He leaned low, bracketing his arms at Liz’s sides. He whispered softly. “Lizzy.” he kissed her forehead lingeringly, his eyes closing to his own pain. “I’m right here... so you just stay with me and soon this will all be nothing more than a bad dream.”

From far away Elizabeth Keen left her place of relative safety for a more inviting atmosphere. She tried to force her eyes to open, unsuccessfully. The white haze pulling her back relentlessly.

Red opened his eyes, his lips brushing her cheek lovingly. His fists tightened into the cool cotton of the sheets below her until his knuckles turned white.

Liz felt a set of dry unrelenting hands grasp her leg, distracting her from the deep, rich voice cocooning her in warmth and safety. She moved restlessly on the bed, panic rising in her chest which rose and fell laboriously as the persistent hands tried to wrench her from that safe haven... from that
In the otherwise cool room, fine droplets of perspiration ran in rust colored rivulets down her battered body. The reddened sheen covering her rapidly paling skin, stained a grotesque outline of her body onto the ghostly white sheets.

Her body jerked, trying to curl in on itself in defense as the doctor held her foot stationary, causing her to cry out, red tears streaming down her face.

The doctor skillfully snapped the joint back into place.

She let out a piercing scream, the white haze melting into red fog of awareness. She coughed low in her chest, her shoulders turned inward. She gagged once, then twice.

Red turned her to her side, just in time to catch what was left of her stomach contents in one of the doctors medical trays. Bracing his forearms tightly under her shoulders, his hands bracketed her head, her tears wetting his palms.

Edging closer, he lay his warmth over the coolness of her form. He whispered reassuringly to her, reaching between them popping the buttons on his shirt open, laying his bare chest against hers in a bid to warm her, ignoring how the soft mounds of her bare breasts pressed into him.

He hadn’t meant to say that out loud, but it seemed to ease her, so he’d forgive the slip.

Red felt her slender hand grasping for purchase against his inner thigh before bunching what little fabric there was in her trembling hand.

He kept crooning softly to her and was grateful when her head fell limply into his hand as her breath evened out and the tension in her muscles eased. Which was more than he could say for his.

“Sleep, sweetheart.” he coaxed softly. “I’m here.”

Staying close to Lizzy, he stroked her hair, tracing her bloodied features with his thumb and forefinger, smoothing out the pained expression on her delicate features.

“Sir, we need to do her arm.”

Red blinked a stony gaze, his eyes never leaving her face.

“Do it quickly.” Red punctuated.

He tightened his hold on her, raising her slowly, keeping her pressed against his body. Her light weight settled into him, her head falling into his shoulder.

The doctor picked up her arm, manipulating it until Red felt a slight pulling movement. He braced his mind against Liz’s body shaking with the action.

“You can lay her back down now.”

Those were the sweetest words Red Reddington had ever heard. He released the tension and anguish he had been holding in, his stomach lurching spasmodically all the same.

After working steadily for forty five minutes putting on the arm cast and double checking wounds, Dembe and the assistant quietly and efficiently started gathering supplies and cleaning up. The doctor took his leave, instructions left behind.

Dembe returned to the room minutes later carrying a bowl filled with hot soapy water, clean towels draped over his arm.

“Raymond.” He set the supplies beside Red. “Would you like me to assist you?”

Red ran his hand over Liz’s head, nuzzling her brow once before looking over his shoulder. “No, but did you get the sheets for the bed and the heat packs?”

Dembe motioned with his head to where the articles lay waiting.

Red sat up and picked up a soft cloth, dunking it in the hot water, wringing the excess out.

Starting at the woman’s head, he worked at an efficient but gentle pace, cleaning as much of the blood from her as possible, but for now it would have to do. It was imperative to get her dry and warm.

Dembe waited patiently before finally being summoned. “Dembe, grab one of my shirts, please.”

The large man returned with a soft dark button up, then walked to the large picture window which framed the wall to Raymond’s left, looking out into the night.

Sitting Liz up, Red slipped her arms through the open sleeves, careful of the thick cast. Buttoning the shirt, hid her wounds for which he was grateful.

“I’m done.” He lay her gently back into the pillow, taking the heating pad held in Dembe’s hand, laying it on her abdomen, pulling the blankets up around her.

Grabbing the water bowl, he bypassed Dembe, heading for the bathroom. “I can take care of that Raymond.”

Ray set the bowl on the counter top, bracing his hands against the rich marble. Hanging his head, his jaw tightened. Releasing a trembling breath, he pushed off the sink and bolted for the toilet bowl. Bracing a hand against the wall and one on the tank, he repeatedly expelled the fear that had plagued him for the last two hours.

He saw Dembe at his left, a water glass in his hand. Taking it, he swished the lukewarm liquid, spitting it into the water below, repeating until the taste abated.

“I can’t lose her...” He said roughly, his throat raw.

“You won’t.” Dembe’s voice held a finality Red cherished. “She will be fine, my friend.”

Red finally nodded, knowing the truth when he heard it. Leaning into the wall, he steadied himself.

“Clean up, then I will help you with the bed.”

Red frowned, then caught a glimpse of himself in the mirror. He was covered in Liz’s blood. It even showed against the black of his tuxedo pants. Her hand prints branded on the pristine white shirt, his forearms, neck and face. His bare chest, a mirror image to her wounds, the outline dotting his flesh.

“I’ll be right out.” He swallowed another rise of bile.

Throwing the clothes on the bathroom bench, he turned on the shower stepping under the heated spray, watching the red swirl off him unto the floor.
Leaning into the shower wall, he squeezed his eyes shut against the tears threatening escape. Reaching blindly for the soap, he washed away the evidence of the evening.

Stepping out, he dried off, wrapped the towel low on his waist, then went to the closet, grabbing something to wear.

After dressing, once in the bedroom, he spoke directly to his friend, “We’ll change one side, I’ll move her, then we can do the other side.”

“Give me your hand.” Dembe unrolled some gauze before tearing off strips of tape, placing them along the dresser. Red held out his hand to the man, quietly staring at the woman on the bed until Dembe finished his task.

Afterwards, it took only minutes for the two men to change the linens and get Elizabeth situated for the night ahead.

“I’m going to stay with her a while.” Red needed the time alone with the woman. “Why don’t you go get some rest.”

Dembe nodded, “I have my phone if you should need me.”

“Goodnight and thank you,” Red thought it needed to be said, especially this night, “for putting up with me.”

Red lay flat on the bed, closing his eyes, exhaustion overtaking him. But his mind refused to shut down, replaying the images of Liz, bloodied and broken, in extreme technicolor.

Turning over, he was soothed by the rise and fall of her breast as she breathed evenly in her sleep.

He would just lay here a few minutes and rest. Then move to the chair. He just needed a few minutes.

Reaching out, he wrapped his hand around her cooler one, in time, matching his breathing to hers.

Sleep blissfully came, moments later.

Chapter End Notes

I fought my Beta for Red to say, baby.

She said it was too soon. What do you think??
April 4

Red awoke with a start, shutting his eyes forcefully, blocking out the bright light that stabbed painfully at his aching head.

There was nothing worse than waking with a headache, especially one that had fed off of extreme adrenaline.

Squinting at the clock over Lizzy’s silent form, he was perturbed to see only four hours had passed since he had lay down.

He sat up, stifling a groan, driving the heel of his palms into his eye sockets, relived by the temporary pressure.

Reaching over, he felt Liz’s warm arm. He sat for a long moment, just watching her breathe.

Throwing back the covers, the man crossed to the long closet, pulling clothes for the day, then went about his morning routine.

Checking Lizzy once more, he left the room, phone in hand.

Entering the kitchen, Red was surprised to see Dembe pouring a cup of coffee. “Did you sleep at all?”

“I woke an hour ago. I assumed there would be much to do today?” the stately man replied.

“I need to call Cooper and inform him of the situation.” Red had nodded his acquiescence, securing a cup of the strong brew for himself. “Tell Kaplan I want that fucking house put up for sale.”

Dembe looked up hastily from his coffee.

“She’s not going back there, Dembe.” he silenced any debate. “Kaplan will know what to do and what Lizzy will need.”

“Elizabeth will not appreciate...”

“Elizabeth can yell at me later.” Red rather enjoyed any heated exchange with the woman in question on any given day, but right now, he would settle for any emotion from her what-so-ever.

Dembe took out his phone. “Is there anything else?”

Red took a drink from his hot coffee, thankful for the caffeine. “Did the doctor give you the prescriptions?”

Dembe nodded, pulling out the slip of paper. “I will get food and anything else she requires.”

The large man stole a last drink of his coffee, then took his leave.
Red watched him go truly thankful for such an ally. He felt the weight of his cell calling to him from his trouser pocket.

The man sighed heavily. Often, the phone felt an extension of himself. More and more recently, he was starting to resent the hell the object. He would have to start making calls but for the present, he would finish his coffee... come hell or high water.

“Why the hell didn’t you stay with her!” Cooper’s voice sliced through Red’s already pounding head.

He should have stayed with her, he knew something had been wrong. He had sensed it.

“Suffice to say, it’s a mistake that will not happen again.” Instead of wanting to keep the peace that had come between them recently, Red should have dealt with any annoyance that would have arisen.

“Where is she now?” Cooper’s tone was curt.

“With me.” Red stared at the sleeping woman, frowning.

“And that would be where?” Cooper questioned.

“Until she otherwise specifies, she is perfectly safe and is well taken care of, that’s all you need to know.” Red was not open to compromise.

Harold sighed into the phone. “Are we certain this was Carver?”

“She resembles a fucking Picasso painting.” Red held his anger admirably. “Who else could it fucking be!”

“I’ll assemble a team and have them at Keen’s house in thirty minutes.” Harold stated. “Can you make it, we need some sort of run down about how things unfolded.”

“When Dembe returns, I’ll meet you there.” He hung up the phone, then dialed again.

Dembe remained with Liz while Red drove across town to keep his rendezvous with Cooper.

He turned the corner, slowing the car, the street congested with every sort of Federal vehicle known to man.

He had expected the fiasco which greeted him upon his arrival, but quite frankly he was in no mood to deal with bureaucracy today.

Media crews were already on site. Feds were literally combing through the bushes, surrounding the neighborhood, let alone Elizabeth’s home.

Taking a spot that obviously had been left for him, he exited the vehicle, greeted by Samar.

“Oh, they’re claiming her as one of their own now.” Red said sarcastically. “Only took some media attention and her losing a couple pints of blood for that to happen.”
“Is she all right?” Samar asked quietly.

“She’s alive.” He bit out. She frowned at the tone, backing up. “Sorry. It was a long night.” he instantly apologized.

She nodded in understanding. “Come on, I don’t want to have to repeat this twice.” He took her arm, leading her up the steps to where Harold waited.

Stepping through the threshold, Red felt a wave of nausea crash over him, the smell of vomit and blood combination, that had escaped his senses last night, overwhelmed him this morning.

“Red, what can you tell us?” Harold and Donald stood gravely before him.

“This...” He waved at the doors, “is my handiwork. I kicked in both. They were locked and she used her key to get in.”

“Is that when that happened?” Harold pointed to Red’s bandaged hand.

“No.” Red glanced at the appendage, his tone curt.

He stepped further into the entryway, staring around at the blood smeared all over the floor and walls. Broken furniture left in the wake of last night’s brawl, sprawled through out the area.

Red pulled his stare away from the spot where he had found Elizabeth. His eyes closed as he imagined how terrified she must have been, alone and hurting... thinking she was going to die.

“When I came in, she was laying there.” He pointed to the hallway.

He remembered skidding, and he could see the imprint where he had knelt next to Elizabeth, clearly outlined on the bloodied floor.

The flowers he had given her lay trampled and strewn about the room.

His eye ticked spasmodically for the fatalistic symbolism.

The Elizabeth he saw last emerging was self assured, self confident. She was beginning to believe in herself.

He now feared that her dreams for pushing beyond that self doubt, were just as haphazardly scattered and crushed as the flowers on the blood covered floor.

He knew she would see this moment as a failure instead of an achievement.

Where others hadn’t...she survived.

“There’s blood by the backdoor.” Ressler jotted the note down on his pad, having just spoken with a forensic tech.

“It may be hers.” Samar gestured to where Red focused his attention.

“No.” Ressler pointed to the men collecting the evidence. “They said the drops appeared to have fallen from a height of at least six feet.”

Red’s mouth pulled at the corner. Lizzy wounded Carver.

“So, Liz got in a few good licks.” Samar grinned. “Check area hospitals, maybe?” she shrugged.
“He would have handled it himself.” Red muttered then squatted, squinting at a piece of something sticking up from between the floorboards. “What is that?”

Samar came over, tweezing the piece, holding it up between them.

“A fingernail.”

Red swallowed convulsively, then cleared his throat. “So he dragged her from there to the back.” the man concentrated his efforts elsewhere, determined to learn all he could of events.

Donald walked the scene beside Reddington, noting each and every detail the older man supplied, good little agent that he was.

Samar stood quietly, arms folded tightly over her chest, the lovely face giving away nothing of her own emotional attachment.

“Dembe followed the bastard out the back but lost him minutes later. He had a car waiting.” Red finished his narrative. “We immobilized Elizabeth then left.”

“And she didn’t say anything else besides that she thought it was Carver?” Donald looked up from his notes.

“She was bleeding out and in shock. That she said anythin–” Red growled.

“Take it easy Red.” Harold stepped between the two men, “He’s only trying to get information so we can help.”

“Help?” Red stepped forward, threateningly. “It would have helped if you had kept this contained.” the man spewed his fury. “Plug the fucking leak, Harold. I can’t keep her safe if the Press splashes her face across every media outlet available,” he pointed to the farce taking place outside.

“We have, all records have been sealed and tagged.” Cooper mollified. “If they’re tapped, warning flags will go up.”

“Where’s Hudson?” Red inquired briskly, glancing superficially about the area.

“He’s out back, we...” Samar started to reply but Red walked away, heading for the area.

He exited the door, scanning for the dog.

Hudson cowered over by the fence which ran the length of the property. People parted ways as the man headed for the furry animal.

Red hunkered down, scratching at the scared animals head before grabbing the leash.

Samar came to his side, “I can take him if you...”

“Another hour or so, I guess.” Samar shrugged her shoulders, glancing about the chaos. “I could call...”

“Yes, I have Dembe coming to gather her things.”

“Red, are you all right?” Samar asked sincerely.

“I’m fine.” Picking up the dog, he walked away silently, leaving the woman to wonder, in his wake.
Red Reddington sat, hunched over the silent figure before him. Holding Elizabeth’s hand, stroking it, made him feel better.

Thoughts of whisking her away to some hidden place, away from people, away from the danger, wrapping her in a cocoon of safety, had filled his mind from the moment he had sat down. With all she had seen and faced, she was still quite naïve. She was capable, but ill prepared to deal with this life. His life.

A world filled with people that would fight, steal, cheat and even kill to stay ahead of the game. To climb the ladder.

With him backing her, guiding her... she could learn. Without him...

A soft knocking on the door drew his attention away from his dark thoughts, his turmoil. “Come in.”

“Raymond...” Mr. Kaplan’s voice calmed him instantly. With this woman beside him, he knew everything would be well taken care of with no involvement or input from him.

His mouth pulled at the corners slightly thinking that she actually preferred when he didn’t get in her way.

“Kate.” She placed her hand on his shoulder, a slight touch that relaxed him. He felt his shoulders loosen, the sleepiness he’d been fighting all morning making his body sag with exhaustion.

He squeezed his eyes shut, forcing the rising tide away.

Kaplan stroked his head lightly, the sensation traversing his entire form. He instinctively fought his desire to give in to the delicious emotions the woman evoked.

If he didn’t know better, he’d think she was drugging him. There were only a few people Red trusted implicitly and Kate Kaplan was at the top of that list right alongside Dembe.

“Tell me.” Her voice soothed and calmed his tattered soul.

Only two words and he unloaded it all. Everything that happened from the time he saw Lizzy in that red dress to the time he passed out on the bed next to her.

Kaplan sat quietly, listening to the past night’s events, occasionally patting his arm during difficult sequences, waiting patiently until he was composed enough to continue.

When he was finished, she asked, in her no nonsense way, what he wanted, needed of her.

“I want her out of that damn house. I don’t want her ever setting foot in there again. I want it gone.” he stated venomously, then seemed to deflate. “But I’m wrong, aren’t I? Deciding that she can’t go back there. It isn’t my decision.”

“No.” the woman finally spoke. “If you want someone to be the bad guy, let’s have it be me. The house is nothing but a noose around her neck. It needs to go... she needs to move on.”

Red was taken aback. He expected her usual humorous sarcasm, in that he was being selfish, too overprotective, impulsive. Kate hadn’t even scolded him like she had with the incidents that occurred with his ex-wife.
She even agreed with him. And no one, in his opinion, was more level-headed then Kate Kaplan.

“I will take care of everything,” Raymond already felt better. “As for you... you need to rest. So you will get in bed and stay there until I return.”

She pushed at him, making him leave the chair, urging him to the other side of the bed, guiding his sluggish movements.

“Shoes...” he kicked them off, “Vest...” he unbuttoned it, pulling it off, “Belt...” he yanked it free of the loops, realizing he was following her low commands without question.

“You’d be a great Dominatrix.” Red slurred his words sleepily as he lay back into the bed, his head landing in the cushy pillow.

“Who’s to say,” She asked, quietly closing the door behind her, “that was not my first career choice.”

April 4

Red opened his eyes slowly. The late evening sun’s rays were just now lighting the room.

How long had he slept?

Glancing at the clock, he was surprised to see four hours had passed. His internal clock was definitely off.

Damn Kate Kaplan. The thought made him smile.

He stumbled to the bathroom splashing his face with cool water, brushing his teeth, taking a leak and changing clothes.

He then felt prepared to deal with whatever awaited him outside this room.

The man checked on Elizabeth, placing a phone beside her, in case she needed him.

Walking around the corner to the sitting room, he was slightly shocked to see Mr. Kaplan sitting quietly with Dembe, both happily reading away.

His eyebrow lifted as he noted the title of Kate’s book, Lady Kaitlyn’s Lover.

His estimation of the woman rose by degrees. Dembe had ordered his special platinum edition of Downtown Abbey’s fourth season. It was more than odd to see a big grin on usually placid face.

“Were there problems?” Red questioned. It was very rare that Kaplan stayed on after finishing a job.

“Are there ever?” she looked up from her book, slightly annoyed.

“We didn’t want to disturb you.” Kate pulled out her phone, typing into it rapidly.

Dembe spoke quietly from behind his fully illustrated hardcover, “And I for one, knowing full well you were sleeping with a gun under your pillow... did not wish to die.” he glanced up too. “How would I know if Lady Mary ever finds a happy ending?”

A few moments later there was a knock on the front door. Dembe got up and headed for the source.

“Do you feel better?” Kate laid her novel aside.

“I do. But then, I did when you came in to the room.”

“Get your nose out of my ass, Raymond.” Kate got up from her seat, her services needed. She cast a slight scowl to the man as she passed.

“I don’t believe a woman has requested that of me before.” Red looked off, lost in thought. “If anything, I’ve been asked to linger a bit,” he cut his eyes to hers, a seductive lift of his brows signified his mood, “and instructed to lick t–”

“Yes, and I’m sure you complied... like the good little Submissive you are.” Kaplan sighed. “Deviant.” she stared at him, straight faced.

“Speaking of which, tell me about the book you’re reading.” Raymond teased. “Any good pages you’ve marked so far?”

The woman shifted a cool glance. “Try page one sixty seven. You might be amused... now, where do you want this miscellanea placed?”

Red stepped out on to the drive, finding two large trucks sitting there. Kate came to stand beside him.

The man moved out of the way of a large rack of clothing being wheeled past.

“Is this everything?” he enquired.

“The smaller truck holds Tom Keen’s possessions. I assumed you wanted that kept separate, so you could go through it.”

“I do, yes.” Red looked over his shoulder, finding Silas, whom he waved over. “I want everything in that truck scanned and searched... twice. See to it personally.”

“You got it boss.” Silas quipped. “What do you want us to do with it if it’s clean?”

“Donate it to a shelter. Even if the owner couldn’t do anything for society, maybe his possessions will.” Red scoffed lightly. “Did you wave her clothes?”

“We did. Picked up a couple bugs and trackers, mainly in the coats and bags.”

“Asshole.” Red mumbled under his breath, though not as quietly as he thought, when he found Dembe and Silas nodding in agreement with assessment. “What did you do with them?”

“What do you want us to do with them?” Silas asked innocently.

“Put them in his clothing. Let him chase them through the streets of DC.” Dembe and Silas grinned for the irony of it all.

“As for the other trucks, we thought you may be able to direct what stays and goes.”

They started pulling boxes and totes, Red directed most of it back into the empty truck, after it was found to be clear of any mementoes left by Tom.

The next tote that passed by, caught his interest. “Wait. Let me look at that.”

He popped the top off, staring inside at Sam’s smiling face, Lizzy beside him, grinning happily in a photo.

Lifting the album out of the box, he found a stuffed rabbit laying underneath.

His heart began beating wildly in his chest.

Clasping the album, he reached inside, pulling out the singed rabbit. Squeezing it in his hand, he felt the hardened center, furthering the palpitations in his chest.

“Raymond?” Dembe had noticed the man’s preoccupation. “Are you all right?”
“Yes, I’m fine.” He transferred the rabbit and album to one hand, closed the lid on the bin, then waved it off.

Kate stepped next to him, opening her bag. She pulled out a handful of envelopes.

“Here’s her mail. I all ready took care of having everything forwarded to the address you gave me and the utilities are transferred to you.”

“You’re so efficient.” he caressed her sensually.

“And expensive.”

“And worth every penny.” he smiled genuinely enjoying the exchange.

“If I told you to get down and lick my boots, you’d do it, wouldn’t you Raymond.”

“Would you like me to?” He leered playfully.

Kate scoffed, “Save it for her.” She thumbed back at the house and the woman sleeping inside.

A little while later, they had Liz’s personal things inside. Her furniture and decorative pieces on the truck, ready for storage.

And Tom’s things swiped and cleared of any useful items. Money, weapons, blackmail on a couple dozen people Tom had obviously been following, and keys to various banks through out the city, had been found.

But most importantly... besides Lizzy, alive and well and sleeping comfortably in his bedroom.

The Fulcrum was finally back in it’s proper place.

Raymond Reddington’s possession.

Chapter End Notes

Was oddly enough listening to Sarah McLachlan's, Possession, when I typed the last word and I thought, why the hell not.

Lady Kaitlyn's Lover, is a shout out. I read this story back when you first posted it. And after all this time, I still think Angus is weird. (She'll understand the reference)
Red glanced up, instantly laying his book aside. He had arisen, his name beckoning him forward. The man leaned slightly, concern on his handsome face.

Liz struggled to speak again, and thankfully a straw was placed gently between her parched lips. She drank greedily. Sipping the cooled liquid slowly, she tried again but the sound remained deep in her throat.

“I’m here.” He smiled sitting down next to her, smoothing her hair out of her face. Her eyes fluttered open, seeking the man’s earnest gaze. “How do you feel?”

“Like I was attacked,” she told the truth as she knew it, “by a blade wielding rabid dog.”

The man held the cool water for her to drink her fill.

“An apt description,” He chuckled, relieved to hear her voice.

She sought his countenance. “H-How long?”

“It’s Sunday. You slept Saturday away.” He checked his watch, then her person as he had the entire time he had been by her side. “What are you feeling?”

“Like I need a bathroom.” If her bladder wasn’t so full, Liz might have been embarrassed, but right now there was nothing but an urgent need.

“All right. Lets get you up...” With practiced ease and efficiency, he helped her to sit up and slide to the edge of the bed. “Let me do the work, just lean into me.”

Standing her with little pain, he righted them both, taking the weight off her leg.

“Crutches?” she glanced around groggily.

After four tiny stilted steps, he damned her pride.

“To hell with it.” Bending, he hooked his arms around her, picking her up with ease, walking quickly to the bathroom. Both worried and elated when she hadn’t protested.

Setting her in front of the toilet, he braced her hand on the bar and turned, only to be stopped by her small voice, “How in the hell am I supposed to...do this?” She gestured to her cast, then her clothes.

Coming back, he looked her in the eye, understanding how difficult such a situation was for her. He placidly set his features.

“I won’t look,” He made work of the string holding the shorts. “I promise.”

“I don’t care right now,” Liz squeezed her eyes shut, the need that pronounce, “ask me later after I’ve peed.”

His lip rose in amusement. Hands at her hips, he pushed at the fabric, moving it quickly down to her thighs. Then helped her to the seat. “I’ll just be out there...”

After a few seconds her stream started, her hand gripping the handrail, gasping with relief.

He walked away, giving her a sense of privacy.

He hoped that this didn’t embarrass her because for the next couple of weeks at least, she was going to need someone to be there for these private moments.

The stream finally came to a trickle, then stopped. He heard a long sigh, “Thank you, God.”

Putting down her toothbrush, he went back, undid the damage he had done, his manner verging on the professional.

“Thank you, Red. I’m...” She blushed a bit, but was truly thankful.

He gestured to the sink, distracting her. “You want to freshen up a bit?”

“I would kill to ‘freshen up a bit’.” After a few hobbled steps, she set her appreciative eyes on the available seat.

“You can’t take a shower yet, for obvious reasons but a good sponge bath is just as refreshing.” He handed her a soft cloth and soap, stepping back, turning around.

“This smells so good.” Liz had stopped to sniff the fragrance. “It’s just like the soap I use.”

He hesitated, his steps slowing. “I sent Dembe back with Mr. Kaplan.” He made mention. “They packed up your things.”

A scowl crossed his brow briefly. “It’s going to be difficult with that arm... isn’t it?”

Liz looked about her person, the same thought having crossed her mind.

She stiffened her resolve gingerly handing the soap and cloth over to capable hands.

“I feel so lame.” she muttered dejectedly.

“Loose the shirt.” he dampened the cloth in hot water.

“I don’t think so.” Elizabeth started to object. “I can do this.”

He waited patiently for her common sense to surface. At length she hesitantly begin to unbutton the shirt. The man shifted his head slightly when she removed it.

She bunched the garment, holding it protectively over her breasts.

Red wiped her revealed arms gently. Then proceeded to cleanse her. He continually reheated the cloth, at one point, dropping to his haunches, wiping away the last of the blood on her legs.

Her faint skin was still swirled with the now dried red fluid. It looked like a tan gone wrong.

“What happened to your hand?” Liz asked, grasping at anything to take her mind from the fact that his administrations felt so wonderful.

“Little accident.” he grimaced slightly. “It’s nothing.”

“Where are we?” she glanced around her surroundings, not recognizing the room.
“With Tom and Carver hanging around. I went ahead and moved us here. It’s more secure.”

She watched him wipe down her leg, running the cloth up to her thigh.

“Lizzy, I know you might not remember a lot...”

The woman wondered where the conversation was leading.

“Your injuries were... extensive. I just want to warn you.” He bowed his head, hesitating momentarily, cloth poised in the air.

She realized that she hadn’t even looked in the mirror. Looking up, she took in her appearance. Her complexion was so pale, the white gauze against the wounds looked dark. Her lip was split, scabbed slightly but healing.

She gasped, seeing the black threading haphazardly dotting her abused flesh.

She poked at one set of stitches, surprised it didn’t hurt as much as she thought it would. It looked so grotesque, so ugly, that you would think that it would be as painful to touch as it was to see.

“My God...” She stuttered. She could hardly count the cuts, let alone the threads.

“He will pay, Lizzy.” Red mumbled. “As God is my witness.” the man knew he was set on automatic pilot these days. While he had no concrete plans at the moment, he knew sooner or later, his natural instinct would kick in.

That was the time he was looking most forward to... a time when he would face down his demons and in this particular case, her demon.

Carver... would... pay.

Their eyes met in the mirror. She looked away from the bleakness, shivering slightly. At times she almost forgot this man was Red Reddington.

“I guess it doesn’t really matter. It’s just, to see it...” she tried to shrug the matter away. “I can do the front.” she gently gestured for the cloth.

“We’ll have to change some of the dressings. So we’re going to have to figure out how to do the front portion, sooner or later.” He stopped when her head dropped.

“Lizzy. I know you’re highly uncomfortable right now. But please, don’t be.” he stated more than asked.

“I know it might not help,” He gave her the cloth, turning away, “but I’ve been in your shoes so many times... I’ve had to have someone help me in the bathroom, my hands were such a mess. As you can imagine, it’s a bit more extensive for a male than just dropping drawers.” he crooked his brow and tilted his head back and forth. “Probably not the best sight in the world, or feeling. And no... it wasn’t Dembe.”

Red turned to the pantry to give her privacy, taking his time in gathering supplies that he would need.

“I had buck shot in my back down to my ass, how do you think that was cared for?” he remembered that time, not too fondly. “I get it, your frustration and embarrassment, really I do.”

“I understand what you’re saying intellectually, Red.” she took a cleansing breath. “I’ll be okay. I just woke up. I’m still shaky, hungry. Disoriented” Liz built up her courage. “I’m a little vulnerable right now and not just because of this, I’ll be fine.” She freely admitted her weakness for once.

With that, she removed the barrier between them allowing it to drop aside. She smiled when Red ducked his head, appreciating his gesture.

“I’ll hire a nurse for you.” It had been on his agenda. “I don’t know why I didn’t do it yesterday?”

But between Mr. Kaplan allowing him to sleep and Harold calling every hour on the hour, there hadn’t been a lot of time.

Washing up, methodically removing the red stain, she finally finished, handing the cloth back. Red shifted behind her, soothingly rubbing at her back, removing the thick gauze with care.

Shivering with pleasure, she leaned into his touch.

“Are you cold?”

“No, it feels good.” Why lie? If anyone needed something to feel good about right now, it was the woman.

His only response was to keep up the small circular patterns, which she so enjoyed.

“And you don’t have to hire a nurse.” she extended an olive branch. “It’s only for a couple of days.” Glancing back at him. “She won’t have your touch, of course.” she half-teased.

Red inwardly rejoiced, but hid his reaction well. “If she doesn’t work out... I’m your man.”

That was the problem, Liz was beginning to notice that more and more, of late. That Red Reddington was indeed, very much... a man.

The woman was shaky and weak by the end of the ordeal. Red got her situated on the small couch by the windows so she could look out on the bright sunlit day while they breakfasted.

The next hour was passed most pleasantly, at least in Red’s point of view. His narratives had brought a few smiles and Liz had eaten well.

All in all, the day was looking up.

During the meal, Liz was stumped and surprised when Dembe entered the room carrying a deck lounge. He smiled that quick smile, disappeared into the bathroom then left silently.

Elizabeth placed her fork beside her plate, a question nagging at her.

“Was that my dog?”

“Probably your former dog.” Red shrugged helplessly. “Dembe gave him a bath and treats. Now, if he’s not following our friend around, like a little lost puppy. He’s sleeping in his bed. They’ve become quite attached.”

And they had. The dog had taken to Dembe’s calm nature, staying with the large man through out the day, following him every where he went.
Red had been surprised when the dog came to him after entering the car, that day after the attack.

Maybe with all the time he had spent with Lizzy, the dog recognized his scent. He didn’t know? But he had comforted Hudson the entire trip, who seemed quite content until the moment Dembe entered the room.

From then on, it had been love at first sight on both participants’ parts.

Liz returned to her meal philosophically setting her mind to the fact, that dogs were in fact, man’s best friend.

Red had cooked eggs, scattered with cheese and bacon. Fresh artisan bread, toasted and buttered. Fresh cut fruit, juice and her needed coffee.

Either she was starving, or this was one of the best meals she had ever eaten.

And while it was all delicious, eating had been frustrating.

Predominately right handed, eating with her left was not only annoying, it was proving impossible.

Red had gallantly ended up cutting her eggs and toast for her into manageable pieces. He had even handed one of his own pieces of toast over near the end of the meal. Until that moment, she had not realized, she had been eyeing it covetously.

Red stood, gingerly clapping his hands together, smiling at her expectantly.

Elizabeth frowned. “What?” she asked cautiously.

“I have a surprise for you.”

“I have had enough surprises.” she assured him.

“Trust me.”

It had not taken much coaxing on the man’s part. Elizabeth was delighted to have found the meaning of Dembe’s earlier gift.

Her idea of heaven was coming to vivid life.

Red pulled the spout from it’s resting place, testing the water, slowly moving it over her sensitive scalp. After sufficiently wetting it, he popped a cap, pouring a generous amount of luxurious shampoo into his palm.

Massaging it into the dark strands, the man rubbed strong fingers over trouble areas soothingly. Rinsing the suds away, he repeated the process, starting from her neck line, upwards.

Liz moaned, melting into her chair. The clean feeling and how good his touch felt, made her body quiver with delicious pangs. She relaxed totally into his ministrations.

He rinsed again, when the water ran clear, he picked up her conditioner, smoothing the thick cream through her hair. He paid particular attention to her scalp since she seemed to enjoy it so much.

Her little moans of pleasure and whimpers of delight, pleased him to no end.

Often he would hit a delicate spot, which sent shivers down her back. He knew he had accomplished his mission.
He wrung out the excess, wrapping her head in a heated towel. Loathe to disturb her, he raised her, inwardly rejoicing when her face betrayed her total bliss.

“Come on. Let’s get you back in bed.” She whined piteously but obeyed reluctantly.

“I need a wheelchair.” The man had matched his steps to her slower ones as he helped her back to bed. “Or a skateboard.” she held her arm and leg aloft.

Red steadied her falling form easily. “Yeah, very amusing.” he tried to hold his smile. “It’s Portside, Ensign.” he indicated with his head, for she had listed off course.

“Ensign?” she objected.

“Who’s the higher ranking officer here?” he asked, setting her gently down.

She shrugged the play aside, turning serious for a moment. “Red, I didn’t say it before. But thank you, for everything. Coming back, taking care of me, letting me stay here.”

“I’m not letting you stay here.” Red corrected. “I want you here. I enjoy spending time with you.”

He stepped, his hands removing the towel from her still wet hair. Liz glanced up at his handiwork as he began gently dry the long tresses. His hands stopped their motion slowly.

“Now see, this is a problem.”

“I can’t do anything with it while it’s wet.” she apologized.

“I meant...” he sighed lightly. “The fact that every time I touch you or am near you, you tense up.”

He stepped back to catch her line of sight. “Do you think people don’t notice such things?”

Liz scowled slightly, a little perplexed.

“You are pretending to be my fiancée, correct?” He sat the towel aside for the moment, taking a seat across from her. “With Mark’s party coming up, taking place over the entire week, plus there will be hundreds of people everywhere.” He lifted both brows. “We have to be comfortable with each other.”

“I’m already comfortable with you.”

Red held her eyes steadily.

“Well, I am.” she was fairly certain. “I have to ask, if we did this to get me into Francis’s party to get information on Edward Costa and Carver.” the woman shifted facing him. “Once we catch him, will we really need to keep up the facade? Is it that important?”

“I don’t see the harm in getting you established as a familiar face.” Red had already the problem through. “There are rumors that I’m involved with the FBI. I’m seen with you, constantly. If you believed the rumors, who do you believe they think you are?”

Elizabeth had not thought of it in those terms.

“This actually works to our advantage on all levels.”

The woman was given pause for thought.
“If anything changes before Mark’s party, we’ll reevaluate our options.” he warmed to his task. “One of the main reasons you were invited to Mark’s party was because he found you charming.”

“That’s nice of you to say, but you were invited regardless.”

“You misunderstand. He personally asked you to attend.” he corrected the oversight. “Not all my paramours receive an invitation.”

“Oh, I see.” Liz was pleasantly surprised at first, a small scowl puckering intelligent brow. “How many paramours are we talking about?”

“One in particular was incredibly high maintenance and not in a fun way.” he pulled his chair over, bracing his forearms on his thighs, leaning into the story. “Mark took pity on me, casually forgetting to issue an invitation. I so enjoyed the break... that after the gathering, I had Dembe tell the woman that I had been shot, been seriously wounded, taken hostage and offered up to the highest bidder.” the man stopped for a quick breath. “And sold to one of my worst enemies at that time and ended up in a German prison camp.”

Liz’s face was priceless. “German prison camp?” she questioned lightly. “As in World War II?”

“This woman was beautiful.” Red defended half-heartedly. “I never said she was intelligent.”

“And you were actually... where?”

“In the Maldives with a precious little native woman who prepared the most exquisite Tortellini and–”

“Red...” the woman’s brow lifted.

“Well, you asked.” he gave the reprieve. “My point is, you should start getting used to touching me and being touched.”

“I thought I was doing okay with that part?”

“Not really.” he grimaced slightly. “They expect me to be more affectionate with you.”

“I’ll make a concerted effort, really.”

“Don’t look so put out.” He grinned. “You’ve done very well, really.” he reassured. “I’m just pointing it out, now that we have time to work on it.”

He arose, reseating himself directly beside her. “Now, what would you like to do today? Read, watch tv, sleep?” He touched her waist, chuckling when she visibly started.

“Damn!” she closed her eyes to such a stupid mistake. “Sorry.”

She glanced at the man, ignoring his smug expression, deliberately touching his arm in turn. Red’s gaze transferred to the spot. She was a little put out that the man offered no reaction, what-so-ever. Except to lean into it, as if her touch was welcomed. “Are you busy?”

“No, I’ve cleared my entire schedule. Why?”

“I thought maybe you’d like to talk.”

“About what specifically?” Red asked, anticipating the answer.
“You.” Liz shrugged, attempting to come off as indifferent as possible, in case he thought it was stupid. “Where you’ve been, the places you enjoyed the most, the foods you’ve tried, things I may need to know. That type of stuff.”

Well, that had been unexpected.

He was sure she’d try to wheedle information out of him, instead, she wanted to talk about travels and other miscellanea. A real conversation. No work, no Fulcrum, nothing of their past.

“Is this the FBI Agent asking or you?”

“Me.” She brought her good leg up, curling it towards her body, getting comfortable.

Sitting back against the head board, “Is there anywhere you’d like to start?” He smiled when she lit up with happiness.
A Long Time Coming

April 7

After Liz had fallen asleep, Red pulled a chair over near the bed, propping his legs on the mattress. He sat, adjusting the light throw over his legs, closing his eyes, a smile appearing unbidden on his lips.

The day had turned out relatively well. The woman’s appetite was good and she had finally relaxed into the questions with had piqued her interest.

The enquiries had turned progressively more personal. A fact that he had enjoyed.

It had been a long day, but a very productive one.

Settling into the chair, the man relaxed himself, slipping into a light sleep.

A couple of hours later, Red awoke to a slight jar in the mattress. Raising his head, he watched Liz unsuccessfully attempting to arise from the bed.

“Why didn’t you wake me?” He sat up, rubbing his face tiredly.

“I can do it,” she pushed against the bed, finally edging to the side, “go back to sleep.”

“Lizzy, you can’t use your crutches yet. You’re still too weak.” He got up out of chair, offering an arm.

“I said I can do it.” she practically snapped.

“I’ll just stand here until you change your mind and decide your pride means nothing when compared to pissing the floor.”

She huffed, reluctantly taking the offered arm. But after standing, pulled her arm, attempting a shaky step.

“What’s wrong?” Red held his hands out on either side of her, in case she fell.

“Nothing. I feel better now.” the pissiness had not abated. “You can go about your daily business. I can get around fine.”

“Did I do something to piss you off?” Red was lost. Yesterday had gone so well, they talked and had a pretty relaxing day. Now this.

“No, I can take care of myself.” shades of the old Elizabeth Keen had arisen.

Irritation didn’t even begin to describe what Red felt in that moment.

Annoyance was a good word, but anger was an even better one.

He was angry. Damned angry.

“I don’t know what your problem is lately, but I’ve had enough.” Red looped her arm around his neck, more carrying her than helping her, to the bathroom. “I can understand your attitude when we first started working together, for the most part, but now... you need to grow the hell up.”

“Excuse me,” she took exception, attempting to shake free of his assistance.

“You say we’re done, then call me two hours later for help.” the man was all too willing to explain. “You say you can take care of yourself but The Stewmaker, Tom Keen, and now, Carver, just to name a few... have gotten the better of you.” he was on a roll. “You go behind our backs, keeping Tom a prisoner and what do you have to show for that fiasco? An innocent man, dead.”

Leaving her standing alone in the middle of the bathroom, he turned at the sink, his expression more than vexed.

“Those were situations outside the bell curve. No one could have predicted the outcome if they had been in the same place.” she defended herself.

“That’s because no one else would have put themselves in that situation to begin with. I’ll give you the Stewmaker, because you were surrounded by your team,” he grated, facing her squarely, “But Tom... the Pavlovich brothers would have stayed had you asked them. You could have called Ressler for back up. And Carver...”

“Carver wasn’t my fault.” she practically yelled.

“It could have been prevented had you left with me in the first place. I warned you.” he reminded tactlessly. “I continuously warn you and you ignore me every single time.” he refused to back down. “I don’t know where you got the notion that you couldn’t ask anyone for help. Every one needs assistance at some time or other.”

“Well, if we’re laying cards on the table here. I wouldn’t be in any of these situations were it not for you.” she pointed out bleakly. “I was a Criminal Profiler. I was supposed to sit behind a desk for my entire career.”

“Thanks to your parents and your chosen profession, it wouldn’t have stayed that way for long,” he told the harsh truth. “It’s easier to find you now.”

“You mean like by your friends and associates?” Liz said sarcastically.

“Stop being so damned naïve Elizabeth. The world is not as black and white as you make it out to be.” and who would know that better than Red Reddington. “Those people are not what you think they are. I’m not who the Feds... who you, think I am.”

“And who are you and your friends, pray tell?” Liz dismissed, already knowing what type of men they were.

“Do you mean the men who spent a whole evening cock-blocking Edward?”

“Cock-blocking?” Liz frowned at the rude term.

“They kept him from you the whole night. Not an easy task, let me assure you.” he assured her. “There were three of us and Dembe, and that little bastard almost slipped past a few times.” He had actually meant to keep that information from her. “They didn’t even know you and went out of their way to protect you from him.”

“I didn’t know...”

“That’s the whole point. You don’t know anything. Always just assuming.” he laid it on the line.
“Or believing what you’re told by a government that’s full of cheats and liars and worse.”

Liz stood, shell shocked.

“Mark operates half-a-dozen orphanages and scholarship programs around the world. Michael and his wife, who you’ll meet soon, have fostered and adopted so many abused children, the house is a virtual jungle gym.” he warmed to his narrative. “Francis has Children’s Homes and Women’s Shelters. And I could not even begin to list all their charities.” he defended his associates. “You tell me how many in your government are that compassionate, benevolent?

“If they’re so angelic then why the criminal activity.”

“I could say the same thing about the politicians you champion.” he answered angrily. “Even with their circumstances, more influential parents, better connections, the right prep schools - they are performing the very same criminal activities, only their press agents and Government counterparts, cover their every indiscretion.” Red knew how the world operated. “And if you take into account my associates supposed criminal activities are only labeled as such for not paying taxes...”

“They’re drug runners, Red.”

“No, they aren’t.” he corrected coolly. “They take merchandise stolen by governments, meant to be supplied to the lower class, and sell it back to the bastards at a higher cost granted, but cheaper than retail.”

“They’re still stealing from the poor.”

“Are you listening to me?” he snapped. “No, of course you aren’t. What might have been sacks of grain that the disenfranchised were supposed to receive, my people have instead, turned the profits into shelters, schooling, medical aid and real food.”

“And how do you fit into all this?”

“I don’t have to defend myself to you, or anyone.” he curtly advised. “We’re only criminals because the governments are getting screwed by us financially. We know all their dirty secrets.” he abruptly waved a hand. “We skirt the rules that others obey, moving easily under the radar. We are untouchable.”

“You had a prestigious Navy career, a family.” she was still at a loss. “You chose this life.”

“I didn’t choose anything.” he corrected heatedly. “Listen carefully, because I’m not going to repeat this.”

Liz fell silent, listening.

“I’m not going to tell you much of, well, anything. You won’t believe me anyway.” Red snapped. “What I will say is that, from the time you went to Sam until I disappeared, I, along with your mother... worked diligently to bring down the Cabal.”

She suddenly realized, during his narrative, that she had been four when she went to stay with Sam, but Red hadn’t vanished until over four years later.

“I suppose we got close,” he granted, the man paced slowly back and forth before the woman, continuing his tale. “Too close. Things went sideways, quickly.”

Red waved her off. “They hid my family. They went to the press, saying I stole government secrets.
“Turned my fucking life upside down in less than a week.” he halted hastily, getting his bearings. When finally he spoke, it was in a softer tone. “I was made the patsy.”

“But you did steal secrets.”

“Yes, after the fact.” Red stated simply. “I figured I might as well do what I was accused of doing.” he explained. “No one seems to remember those secrets were sold four years after I vanished and were current Intel.” he stressed. “If I had them to begin with, why wait to sell them.”

“Okay, so you stole them four years later. Why?”

“I needed the capital and connections.” he shrugged, waving off any further questions. “So no... I did not choose this life. I am what they made me. I suppose I should thank them, being that I seem to have found my calling.”

“Why do you keep going then?” she was more than confused. “You could just stop.”

“And do what exactly. Tell them to give me a fair trial and to take me off the most wanted list because I’ve been framed?” he laughed at the absurdity. “Why do you think I’m doing what I do?” he was dumbfounded.

“It’s to find the all the people who put me here. Without them, their stories, nothing will change.” he shook his head, turning aside. “Besides, if there’s anything they taught me, it’s that I finish the job.” he said coldly. “Call it revenge if you want. But I will end this.”

“I’ll help.” she meekly offered, having realized what a bitch she had been.

“Without the attitude!” he warned. “I’m not the enemy.” he pointed an accusing finger.

“In the end, we both want answers from the people who put us in this position. So you want to be pissed off at someone, be pissed at them.” it was strongly suggested. “If that’s a problem, I can keep you updated and continue to protect you. But I can do this with or without you.”

“I want... I need answers.” she reminded herself and the man.

“Then we’ll find them together.” he turned and exited, leaving Elizabeth staring after him.
Understandings

April 7

“Lizzy, I got you a little gift.” Red state, rounding the corner into the bedroom. “And I think you’re really going to enjoy it.”

He was not truly trying to make amends for their early morning argument. Things that had been said, needed to be said.

“What is it?” She asked warily.

“Dembe’s bringing it... I think?” Red glanced back out the doorway. “He was playing on it in the drive...” he smiled, backing out of the way, “oh, there he is.”

Dembe came barreling around the corner on a motorized scooter, pulling up beside the smiling woman.

“For me?” Liz was honestly touched by the gesture.

“Yes, though I’m second guessing myself, seeing how fast that thing goes.” Red cast Dembe an obscure look, as he helped Liz into the seat.

“I won’t go fast.” She said, looking over the controls.

“Yes, and the sun won’t come up tomorrow.” Red quipped benignly.

Dembe smoothed his hand lovingly down the side of the black shiny exterior.

“This goes forward,” He showed her the movement on the handle bar, “this is backwards.”

“How cute, it’s even got a little basket.” she traced the basket happily.

“Well, try it out.” Red waved her forward. Backing himself and Dembe out of the way when she lurched forward then spun in a quick arc.

“Wow...” she was visibly impressed, “this thing does have power.”

Dembe nodded knowingly. Red gave him another obscure look.

“Yes, it does. So be careful.” another look was tossed Dembe’s way. The stoic man’s face was all smiles.

Liz eased the handles forward, smiling as the contraption moved quickly to the door.

“Ahh, blessed freedom.” She backed up hastily, grabbing her book from her table then plopped it in her basket before taking off. “Thank you guys so much. I love this.” her voice fading as she disappeared down the hall.

“I think we’re going to regret this, Dembe.” Red philosophized, sighing heavily upon hearing a loud man’s yelp off in the distance.

“Sorry...” the woman truly sounded apologetic.
“Do you have any questions ladies?” Red asked of the nurse and her aide.

“I assure you Mr. Reddington, all of Ms. Keen’s needs will be met.” the head nurse said with a confident air. “I don’t think we’ll have any problems.”

“Yes, well. Why don’t we see how the day goes.” Red lifted himself from his chair. “Elizabeth can be quiet a handful.”

He ushered the two new employees from the office. They had only gone a few steps when the man threw his arm out, halting the ladies advancement, when the unmistakable whirring sound of Lizzy’s cart had caught his attention.

Liz came flying down the hall, rushing past them.

She released the handles, her front tire squealing slightly on the hardwood when she came to an abrupt stop.

She beamed, noting the two women by Red’s side. “Oh... hello.”

Red smiled fondly, stepping closer to Liz, smoothing down her wind swept hair. “Ladies, this is Elizabeth Keen. As you can see, she has some mobility.”

The ladies looked wide eyed at Liz, then the cart. “Yes, I can see that.” the head nurse nodded a bit stunned, truth told.

Liz looked up at Red, silently asking the rhetorical question.

“These are your nurses, Helen and Diane.” Red pointed to each woman in turn as he introduced the pair. “They’ll help you with your physical therapy, errands and whatever else you require.”

Liz frowned, “I thought you...”

While the first couple days had been slightly awkward, she thought they had finally established a system. But of course, Red had other responsibilities.

He had to deal with so much. It was good that he had hired help for her. But two of them? She could hear the amount she’d have to pay Red back ringing up loudly in her head.

“Thought what, Lizzy?” he jarred her from her reverie.

“Nothing.” She smiled at the man transferring the gesture to the women. “So, where shall we start?”

Liz hit the bed with her fist, having decided on a course of action.

Red’s eyes instantly snapped open. “What’s wrong?”

He sat up in the chair, adjusting the kinks from his back.

“I can’t sleep.” she snapped.

“Are you in pain?”
“No... but you’re a pain.” she shifted directly toward him.

“Excuse me?” Red sat up straighter.

“I can’t sleep because you are sleeping in that damn chair.” she kinked her head side to side. “Just thinking about it is making my back hurt.”

He huffed, grinning. “I’m fine.” he chuckled softly. “Once you’ve slept on a muddy ground, in a desert, getting sand in places sand should never be or at my ex-mother-in-law’s house.” he waved an imperious hand. “This is a dream.”

“Whatever.” she grumbled. “This is a huge bed, get in it, so I can stop feeling guilty and sleep.”

“Lizzy, I’m really okay here.” he placated.

“Red, for once,” she whined, “just shut up and do as I ask.” the whine intensified. “I want to sleep.”

“You want some Camembert cheese with that whine?” he muttered beneath his breath.

Snatching his small blanket, he walked to the other side of the bed and sat down, kicking his shoes off.

Liz rolled her eyes when he lay down on top pf the blanket, still dressed in his slacks and dress shirt.

“It’s so nice to see you get comfortable.” She grumbled watching him adjust the throw over his legs. The man lay back, groaning.

“I knew that chair was killing your back.” She gloated triumphantly.

“My back’s fine, I forgot to remove my gun.” He rolled, pulling the holster and weapon from his back then slid it under the pillow.

“You sleep with your gun...”

“This surprises you?”

“No,” she resigned, “not really.”

She sighed, finally melting into the mattress, relaxing.

He may still be dressed and covered with a small blanket, but it was better than that stupid chair. Maybe now they could both get some decent rest.

“Good night, Red.”

“Night, Lizzy.”
Red awoke refreshed and alert, having slept very well.

The mail had been piling up, so he took his coffee heading for the office.

Dembe had arrived ahead of him and was already going through a batch. An hour later, some headway had actually been made when his damned phone rang. Red picked it up, staring at the screen, sighing.

Ressler. His world turned bleak.

“Yes?” Red said simply.

“Reddington?” Donald’s monotone voice returned the greeting.

“What do you want Donald?”

“First, how is Keen doing?”

“She’s doing well.” The older man replied. “Better actually”

“We’ve found a new victim.” with the amenities out of the way, life moved on in Donald’s world. “We’re wondering if you can ID her?”

“Send me a picture.” Red instructed.

“To where?” Ressler was momentarily waylaid.

Red covered the phone, “Send Ressler an address or a number he can send a picture, please Dembe.”

“Are you there, Reddington?” Samar asked.

He hated when they did that. The speaker phone was such a nuisance. “Yes, I’m here. Dembe will be texting you an address.”

“Is it secure?” Donald ran true to form.

“Just send the damn thing, Donald.” Red snapped. “I’ll call you back in a few minutes.”

He closed the phone waiting for Dembe to hand over the laptop. The page finally opened, so the man shuffled through the pictures rapidly.

Why Ressler had sent six, he didn’t know. But they were from every angle. Red could see in living color, what this woman had gone through. And while it didn’t turn his stomach like it used to, he did feel a great deal of sympathy for her.

Finally finding one of her face up close. He focused on different features, seeing past the horror in her eyes, the grim set of her mouth and the blood, to piece together the woman she had been.

Flipping his phone open, he dialed Ressler. The phone continued to ring incessantly. He really hated when he told someone that he’d call them right back, then they let the phone ring and ring.

Ressler was taking a play out of Glen’s handbook, Reddington just knew it.

“Ressler.” Donald finally spoke brusquely into the phone.

“I don’t know her.”

“You’re positive?”

“Yes, I don’t know this woman.” Red grated. “Though...”

“What? What do you see?” Samar asked.

“Look at her wounds, compare them to the other victims. He went out of his way to really torture her.” the words sounded hollow and empty, even to Red’s ears. “The others; their face, legs, arms, something on them is always left unblemished. There isn’t one part of this woman he didn’t touch.”

Red scrolled continuously back and forth between the photos. “Something’s off.”

“What?” Donald asked, hopefully.

“If I knew, I wouldn’t have stopped talking.”

“Yeah well, if anything comes to mind, call.” Ressler would always be Ressler. More’s the pity.

Red shut the phone, leaning back in his chair, grabbing a pile of mail stacked neatly before him.

He rifled through it quickly, sorting personal from junk. Red stopped, holding up an envelope. “Why do I keep getting these?”

He made reference to the ‘Planning for your Funeral’ leaflet. He questioned Dembe. “Did you put my name on a mailing list?”

“No...” Dembe did not even look up from his busy work, “not yet.”

Red scowled. Dembe continued, “Perhaps they think you can send them repeat business?”

“I would never undercut Kaplan.” Red threw the leaflet aside.

“That is the parcel Mr. Kaplan sent over this morning, by the way.” Dembe motioned to Red’s right. The man put down his own mail, picking up Elizabeth Keen’s.

He paid the bills with enough to carry through to the next month. Hopefully, the house would be sold by then, but he’d rather have it out of the way.

He pulled over the small stack of envelopes addressed to Liz personally, wondering what to do with them.

Red did not believe in invading anyone’s personal space, and normally he would never do so... but there was something peculiar about this set of envelopes, which had caught his attention.

The post marks were dated from approximately a week back.
Without hesitation, he sliced the first open with his knife. He pulled out the single sheet, unfolding it, rapidly scanning the neatly typed script.

His eye ticking as he read it.

I saw you with Reddington last night. You looked so beautiful, even from a distance You smiled at him, but I know it’s to keep him close. I don’t know what he’s told you, about your life. It’s probably all lies. He put you in danger. He’s the reason you were shot at. Spreading the lies he’s told everyone. Don’t trust him.

Red pulled out the second, scanning it.

I saw you walking out with Reddington with a bag and then you didn’t come home. I tried following, but lost you. I know you’re staying with him. I can’t even begin to fathom how that came about. I’m sure it’s for your job, but I have to wonder what lies he spouted to get you to agree. Don’t believe in the lies, Liz.

At least Tom hadn’t followed them or been able to keep up with Dembe’s erratic movements through traffic. So, there was that at least.

You weren’t home again last night. Remember, he is sinful, and taints those around him. No matter what it takes, I will do anything to rid you of his filth.

How long had she been receiving these and said nothing to him. The man’s ire rose. It may sound on the surface, like the ramblings of an insane man, true...but Red saw a definite threat. That Tom would do anything to rid her of Red’s filth...

What the hell does that mean!? Filth as in, the world Red resided in? Just being in his presence?

If Tom was as insane as he thought he was, if he were to do a little research on how other cultures cleansed the sinful, he’d pick the most horrid, malicious practice he found and make it his own.

It’s bad enough that you’re staying with him so long. But that you enjoy that time spent with him is mind boggling. I heard you laughing at the Blacksite when he was talking to you. Don’t lose sight of what your job is, Liz. He’s a criminal. A monster. A demon. If you give me a chance, I know we can bring him down to his knees.

The Blacksite wasn’t that populated a place, so for him to have missed Tom, meant Red wasn’t focused. That would change.

Not that Lizzy was going anywhere anytime soon, but maybe, if Red was alert and ready, he could catch the prick and take him down. Because it was very obvious, Tom had gone around the bend.
Where the hell were you going in that dress with Reddington? That dress was only fit to be worn by a whore. You should not be wearing red or something so revealing. You should wear white, the color of purity and cleanliness. Wholesome and untainted. Be the angel to the demon.

“I’ll buy her an entire wardrobe of nothing but red, you asshole.” Red seethed. He was thankful he trusted his instincts concerning these correspondence.

She had never looked more beautiful than in that dress. Elizabeth Keen outwardly, appeared confident and self-possessed. Red knew in reality, that image was nothing more than an erroneous misconception.

If she had seen these hateful words, there was no doubt in the man’s mind, that she would have believed every syllable. She would have only seen the negative comments about her appearance that night.

Which was a complete load of shit.

He had never felt so proud of her or as privileged, to have her on his arm. He had not missed the envious looks of other males. Part of him felt a surge of pride, but a larger part admitted to pure unadulterated jealousy.

Red slammed the papers down, his blood boiling. He stood, pacing slowly back and forth.

Anger was unproductive, he had to rid his mind in order to function properly.

He set about doing so, with the one person who was always capable of putting his world in order, no matter how chaotic.

He didn’t understand it, but he no longer denied it, if only to himself.
April 8

Red entered their bedroom... when it had became ‘theirs’ he had no clue. The turned on a low light before sitting on the side of the bed.

Pulling back the blankets, he scooted closer before raising the back of Liz’s shirt, staring at the black stitching.

Touching one of the small cuts, he felt the cool of her skin. Good, no infection.

He traced a longer cut, scowling gently then smiled when she sleepily swatted at his hand, scratching at the itch his activity produced.

He felt his earlier anger melting into oblivion.

Running his fingers against the threading with a more pronounced touch, she mewled softly, yawning and stretching awake.

He leaned closer, his tone soothingly low. “You want me to take some of your stitching out?” He grinned when the woman rubbed her ear on her shoulder, taking away the shiver he had caused.

It had only taken him a short time to discover one of Elizabeth’s weaknesses.

She was very responsive to the most sensitive of touches around her ears and throat.

With that knowledge, he never failed to take advantage of any opportunity presented.

Holding his position, his tone deepened, “Or do you want to wait for the nurses?”

Liz rubbed the tingles along her neck, opening her eyes slightly. “You do it.” she said around a yawn, before she really considered the implication.

She had not wanted the nurses pawing all over her personal space. And then she remembered... Red would be in her personal space.

“I’ll be right back.” the man rolled from the bed crossing to the bathroom, coming back moments later with little scissors and tweezers. “Did you sleep well?” he made small talk, sensing an awkwardness now that wasn’t there before. He was slightly amused, also sensing the cause.

“Yeah.” She stared at the covered windows blocking out the sun. “What time is it?”

“Almost ten.” Red gently raised her shirt, turning her more to her stomach. “I bet you’re hungry. You didn’t wake last night.” he began the task at hand.

“I can wait a little bit.” She hugged her pillow, rolling over, giving him a better view of her back. “Anything going on this morning.” it was her turn to make small talk. She found the situation suddenly unbearably intimate.

His hands were warm and sensitive and it was very pleasurable, to have him remove the burdensome thread.

Red knew sooner or later, Liz would start asking questions as she became more coherent.
It seemed today was that day. It was such a simple thing for her to ask, but not an easy thing for him to respond to since he promised never to lie to her.

Why he had promised that...

If he told her about the new victim, she’d fret about it all day. And the letters... should he confront her about them?

She was still weak, fatigued. Getting into an argument with her now would tire her further. Which would make him a huge asshole.

There had to be a middle ground.

Maybe there was?

The letters, he decided to hold off on. They could wait. She was safe here and would continue to be so, as long as she was with him.

Tom could keep sending his incoherent prose all he wanted because he was bound to slip one day and perhaps reveal his whereabouts.

The other problem was easy enough to fix, because she had been placed on medical leave.

“Oh, Donald called.” She tensed, until he stroked her back gently with his fingers, eliciting a shiver and an instant release of the tension.

_Annother place she likes to be touched._ He categorized, filing the knowledge away mentally.

“Oh, there’s been another victim.” He tweezed a piece of thread, pulling it free. “And before you go off and start thinking about it all day and tiring yourself out - stop. I will be helping them.”

“If I could just see the...”

“He doesn’t have to know.”

“No.” He raised the shirt further, snipping at a longer cut. “You’re on medical leave. You’re supposed to be resting and that’s exactly what you’re going to do.”

“I can help. I’m not...”

“I said, no.” He chuckled silently when she fell silent, pouting into her pillow. He freed the last of the thread. “This damn thing keeps falling in my way.” he had attempted another section of her body, only to be frustrated by the fabric. “Take the shirt off.”

Red helped her with the sleeves. “I know you’re capable of looking at notes, Lizzy. But you wouldn’t stop there.” he knew the woman well. “You’ll keep going until you’re beyond exhausted.”

He gently skimmed his hand down the curve of her spine, raising goose bumps on her soft skin. “You don’t trust me?”

She shifted her head quickly, frowning at him. “Yes, I do.”

“Then trust me when I say, I will do everything I can to find him.” He didn’t add that when he did find Carver... well, let’s just say Red Reddington believed in an ‘eye for an eye’ retribution. “Roll over.”

He handed her the discarded shirt, helping keep it in place over her breasts as she flipped. She trembled slightly as she settled.

“Are you cold?” he had noticed the fact.

She shook her head, grimacing as she adjusted her position.

“Your leg?” He grabbed a fluffy pillow, stuffing the cushion beneath her leg, sensing the problem. Liz thanked him with a silent nod of gratitude.

“I’m not asking, just wondering.” she couldn’t get it out of her mind. “Has he gone after Edward yet?”

Red leaned in, closely examining a cut on her stomach. She visibly flinched. “Did that hurt?”

“No...” she answered a little too quickly.

He grinned, “Ticklish?”

She narrowed her eyes, making him laugh. “You act as though I’ll use that knowledge to my advantage one day.”

He touched her with more pressure, before cutting the thread. “No, he hasn’t gone for Edward yet.” Her stomach tightened when she felt his breath skirt over her warm flesh.

His glanced at her, his gaze a noncommittal one. This woman was most sensitive to touch. Never a bad thing in his point of view.

Red Reddington enjoyed all aspects of women. Their weaknesses, strengths, insecurities, confidence... the whole package fascinated him.

Lowering his head, he went back to work. “Besides, I think Carver made the team following Edward.”

“Why do you think that?” She gasped when his index finger skimmed lightly against her belly button.

“With where I’ve sent him, Carver has had ample opportunity to make a grab for Edward.” Red blew across her stomach, brushing off the stray threads. And if he was honest with himself, hoping for a reaction from her. And he got one when her stomach rippled, her eyes fluttering closed.

“What are you going to do?”

“Get you dressed and fed.”

“I meant–”

“I know what you meant. Let me worry about that. All that’s important right now is you.”

Red followed more slowly behind Liz as she wheeled to the kitchen.
Liz’s favorite parts of the day were when they dined together. She enjoyed watching Red Reddington being domestic, but mostly she had grown to love the discussions that took place over the meals.

For the first couple of days, Dembe had kept his silent vigilance off to the side, as was his way.

“I’ve been trying to get him to eat with me for years but he refuses.” the man explained, having seen the situation vexed the woman to no end.

“You steal my fries.” Dembe had mumbled.

And it went on from there. Friendly banter between the two men who had known each other for years.

Both so different, but yet so similar in nature. One boisterous, the other quiet. Outgoing, shy. Impulsive, cautious. Oil and water, but they mixed together somehow just perfectly.

After Dembe had left the room one day, Liz asked Red why the large man really refused to sit at his table.

“I made the mistake of taking him with me to meet an honest to goodness, mobster.” Red waved his fork in the air. “Remind me to tell you about him someday. But Dembe saw this guy’s bodyguards sitting at a different table, eyes on both doors. So of course, he picked up the habit.” Red swallowed his food before continuing. “Occasionally he’ll join me, but it’s very rare.”

They’d been dining for about ten minutes when today, Dembe made his appearance.

Red continued his story, the narrative nearing the end, “Natalia and I had a pleasant night then Dembe and I left in the morning.”

Dembe shocked Elizabeth totally by bringing his plate and coffee, taking a place across from Red at the table.

Dembe, while cutting into his sausage, scoffed loudly.

“Dembe...” Red sighed, “I’m telling this story.”

“What?” Liz glanced between the men, one perturbed, the other amused. “Okay, what’s going on here?” she could not hold her own smile.

“Nothing.” Red sipped his tea, giving the other man an ominous brow. The muscled man smiled in return to the glare he was receiving, popping a piece of bacon in his mouth.

“Dembe. What’s he hiding?” Liz was all ears. “Come on!” she beseeched. “Now I know something happened. You have to tell me!”

Red sat back in his chair, folding his arms leisurely. Dembe immediately pulled his chair closer to the woman, eager to tell his version of the events.

Red accepted his fate with good graces.

“He’s leaving out... that another woman that had been interested in him that night, told Natalia that he had been making advances to her.” the gory details were gleefully related. “I can’t speak of the events that took place after he left with Natalia, but I do know that sometime during his stay there... Natalia left with his pants and the phone from her room.” Dembe shook his head woefully, embarrassed for his friend. “He had to walk back to our rooms in his oxford shirt and boxers... and nothing else.”

Liz giggled behind her hand, envisioning Red walking straight and proud through the hallways, half naked. She wondered if he had put on his fedora?

“Why didn’t you just call Dembe to bring you some pants?”

“She left his phone at the front desk.” Dembe was only too glad to supply that bit of information.

“Look who’s a heavy sleeper.” Liz poked fun at Red.

“We never did actually get to sleep.” Red poked right back. “When she received a call from her man in Tunisia, I showered.” He sipped his coffee. “I should have left her basking in the afterglow before making myself vulnerable or better yet, I should gone to my room.” He shrugged, then took a bite of his waffle.

“Why didn’t you?” Liz asked curiously.

“Truthfully, I was hungover. An oddity for me.” he now knew why however. “I had a splitting headache and felt like hell.” he remembered the incident but not fondly. “By the time I went walking off to my room, I could have given a damn about what I was or wasn’t wearing.” he looked at Dembe meaningfully. “Really, everyone should have been happy I got dressed as much as I did.”

“What had you been drinking?”

“The usual. Which is why I went looking for her.” Red smiled. “It wasn’t until I tracked the little minx down, that she confirmed she had spiked my drink when I was distracted.”

“So that’s why you always carry your glass or have it in reaching distance now.” Liz finally understood. “What happened to her?”

“I turned her in on a small drug charge.” he held up a stilling hand. “Had to serve only a year, but for her it was pure torture.” he offered a sympathetic face. “I imagine she’ll be at Mark’s this year trying to rebuild her contacts... and to kill me.”

Great... thought Liz, as if it wasn’t enough, she was nervous as hell to be around his friends, now she had to deal with one of Red’s old lovers as well.

She was aware that she paled in comparison to Madeline. Who knew what other type of women she would be compared to while there. This was becoming more difficult as they went along.

Dembe finished off his breakfast, then informed Red he was going to check in with the guards. He excused himself and left.

“What’s wrong?” Red stacked his dishes, pushing them to the side.

“Nothing...” She fiddled with her napkin. A sure sign to Red that something was in fact, bothering her.

“Lizzy. I promised not to lie to you. I would hope you would return the favor.” He added mumbling, “At least most of the time.”

“Exactly how many of your old lovers might be at Mark’s?”
“A couple, maybe. Why?”

“I’d like to prepare myself.”

“I will be there you know.” he reminded. “You won’t have to face them alone.”

“Yeah, until you go off for something work related or I go to the bathroom.” she sighed heavily. “Women have a weird habit of cornering one another in the ladies room.”

“I did not know that.” he confessed, holding his amusement. “Listen, most of my old paramours are more concerned with my demise and the method thereof... they probably will not even notice you are about.”

“Thanks...” the woman replied peevishly. “That makes me feel so much better.”
April 8

While Lizzy was resting, Red got busy on the rest of his day’s routine. He opted for a quick call to Dembe through the walkie.

“Dembe, did the mail come yet today?”

The large man came in a minute later, carrying a box full of envelops.

“Is Elizabeth’s in here as well?”

“Yes...” Dembe frowned as he watched Red pull out a handful, swiftly tossing aside letters, before picking up another stack. “Is there something wrong?”

“It seems Sleeping Beauty back there has a stalker.” Red shared. “A stalker who enjoys writing. I was looking to see if he sent any new delightful thoughts for the day.”

Dembe picked up a stack, searching through it, finally finding her name, typed on a plain envelope. “Is this it?” He held up the small letter.

“That’s it.” Red snatched it out of his hand, working on opening the tab.

“You know, it is a federal offense to open someone else’s mail.”

Red eyes flickered with amusement. “How ever will I live with myself?” he asked as he pulled the letter out, reading it aloud.

Where are you? I know you’ve been injured. You’re not with family or at the hospitals. I checked. No one has spoken with you. No one has seen you. Reddington seemed upset, so obviously he doesn’t know where you are either. Liz, call me. You know how to find me. I can help you.

“Seems he knows about her injuries.” Red breathed easier. “He’s a bigger idiot than I thought, if he doesn’t think I’d have her with me.”

“Raymond...” Dembe held up more envelopes, frowning. “Are these from the same person?”

“They appear to be.” He took them, looking at the post dates. “Let’s make sure there aren’t anymore.”

They quickly sorted out all the mail, finding nothing else. So Red sat back, reading them aloud as he had the first.
Your partners don’t seem upset that you may be with Reddington. They’re fools to think you are safe with him. With you weak and defenseless, I fear for you. He’ll take this time to cloud your judgement. I know you must be scared. But know I’m looking for you. I will find you.

“Have you noticed anything out of the norm lately?”

Dembe shrugged. “This is a very easy neighborhood to lose a tail, which is one of the reasons you chose it. If someone were to follow, we would know without doubt.”

Red knew Dembe was right. There were a few paths leading in and out of this location, none heavily trafficked. It was disgustingly easy to spot a tail the minute you reached this neighborhood.

I’m positive he has you now. He mentioned you. If you could somehow persuade him to bring you out. Use your injury to your advantage...I could find you and get you to safety. Try, Liz. Don’t get lost in his lies.

“When have you mentioned having her?” Dembe enquired.

“I don’t know?” Red muttered, thinking back. “Cooper and her team knew the first day, the team asked about her on one of the phone calls when we talked about a victim.” Red ran his hand over his forehead, lost in thought. “I don’t recall ever mentioning Lizzy to anyone.”

Dembe racked his brain, coming up empty.

“If I start to say anything in regards to her outside these walls or the car, slap me, will you.”

“Most assuredly.”

Red cut amused eyes to the man, “You’re a good friend, Dembe.”

“All right!” Liz Keen had reached her limit. “That’s it, Red Reddington!”

He stopped taking off his shoes and looked over his shoulder at her. “What?”

“If you don’t get on some comfortable clothes or at least get under the blankets, I’m going to hurt you.” She snapped. “And not in a good way.”

“Sweetheart...”

“Don’t ‘sweetheart’ me.” she pointed a finger at him. “Choose one, or better, both.”

He sat there, smiling at her when she narrowed her eyes and rolled from the bed, grabbing her pillow.

“What do you think you’re doing?” He asked.

“If you aren’t going to get comfortable, I’m going to share in that discomfort.” she had preordained.

The woman hopped along the edge of the bed, hugging her pillow close before reaching over, snatching the little blanket Red had been using off the bench.

She headed for the couch across the way, secretly wondering if she could make that distance.

“Get back in bed.” the man warned pseudo-stern.

“No.” she jutted her chin out stubbornly.

“Lizzy...” the deep voice held a measure of advisement.

“No,” her voice raised defiantly as she hopped gingerly from one safe spot to another.

“You are not sleeping on the couch.” the man arose swiftly, his decision cast.

“Yes, I am.” She was fairly certain of the fact until she looked up only to find her path blocked by a very imposing figure.

He leaned slowly, his warm breath fanning her upper cheekbone. “Go back to bed.” His tone sounded particularly suggestive on this occasion.

“I intend to go to bed...” she lifted perfectly arched brows, facing down her antagonist, “on the couch!”

Red yanked the pillow from her grasp, tossing it back to bed before stooping slightly, lifting the small bundle over his shoulder, his hand coming to rest on the rounded curve of her bottom when she had squirmed her discord.

“Hey!” She squawked, her hands balling into fists of frustration. “Put me down, you big as–”

“Me doth think the lady protests too much.”

“What the hell does that even mean?” she demanded. “You just better put me down.”

The man continued his swaggering trek. The large palm patted her derrière in open affection.

“Damn it!” She wiggled in his grasp, “Put me...down.”

Red fought the urge to toss the woman onto the awaiting surface, but instead, because of her injuries... lay her gently into the bed.

“Don’t you dare get up.” He pointed a lax finger down at the pouting woman.

Liz lay stiffly ruminating on the options open to her.

Red began to slowly unbutton the shirt he wore, his eyes holding hers almost hypnotically.

In the days she had been here, to see Red without his jacket was not unusual. One day last week, she had been totally taken aback when the man had entered the room, unannounced, his sleeves rolled up the burly arms, sans vest and tie.

It was so odd to see him in such a state of undress.

But now, as he pulled the tails of shirt from his pants, she blushed slightly at the intimacy implied. It did not help that his gaze had not left hers for one second.

“Was there something you wished me to wear in particular, Elizabeth?” he enquired provocatively.
She felt her mouth pinch in aggravation for his carefully controlled tone.

“You do have things you normally sleep in, yes?” he chuckled lowly, annoying her further. “I don’t care if it’s lederhosen, just get comfortable, dammit!” she laid back huffily into the pillow, arms across her chest. “I highly doubt whatever you come out in will make me think less of your normal debonair state of dress.”

“I believe how I normally sleep, how I get comfortable,” he lifted mocking brows, “would shock you.”

What the hell could be so shocking about a pair of sweat pants and a t-shirt? What? That he actually owned a pair and would dare to wear them?

She frowned up at him, finding him holding his laughter. The moment progressed as Liz tried hard to decipher the meaning behind such a knowledgeable look.

Oh... ohhh. She felt herself flush bright red, her cheeks burning.

“So, I restate. Is there anything in particular I should wear so I don’t upset your delicate sensibilities?” He asked innocently.

She almost wished she had the guts to tell the cocky bastard to sleep how he normally did, just to see if he’d back track for once.

But if he didn’t... she didn’t know what she’d do.

Though, she had to admit, if only to herself... she felt a surge of intrigue of late concerning the man’s physique. What did he look like without the thin veneer of civilized armor he wove about himself?

Red’s mouth curved sensually, his eyes lighting with an inner flame, much to her vexation. It was if the man could read her thoughts. And he knew without doubt, that he had won that round.

He gallantly ended her misery, breaking the spell, sauntering across the room... that panther like grace drawing her attention to his well-rounded posterior.

The man took his time selecting his night clothes for the taste of victory lingered with his smug smile. That was something he would have to lose before exiting the sanctuary he had chosen.

Minutes later, he joined her in bed.

She took her pills with only one lethal glance in his direction which amused no end. He took no pains what-so-ever, to hide his smile this time before situating herself comfortably.

Red hit his switch, bathing the room in darkness.

He had to admit, it felt good to be out of his suit, but it felt even better that she had inadvertently thought of his comfort over her own. She was beginning to warm to him and it felt... nice.

Relaxing back into his pillow, he grumbled miserably when the phone started vibrating on the marble top of his side table.

“Don’t answer it.” She mumbled.

He stared at the screen, sighing. “Oh goody, it’s Donald.” He flipped the phone open, his tone abrupt. “What?” he grated, listening intently all the same. “I’ll be right there.”
Liz heard him shut the phone, then saw the subtle shake in his head as he resigned himself to having to get up out of the comfortable bed.

“Call him back, tell him you’ll be by in the morning,” she suggested.

“It’s a fresh scene.” He groaned as he sat up. “He wants to see if I can identify the body and I’m guessing, play clay pigeon.”

“He thinks Carver’s there?” She sat up.

She instantly pushed back her blankets, moving to the edge of the bed.

“What are you doing?” he crooked his head around having felt the slight movement.

“I’m coming with you.”

“Like hell you are.” he snapped.

“I’ll just stay in the car.” she reasoned.

“You’re going to stay here.” he stood, turning about to face her

“I should be there, if—” she began her campaign.

“Look at my lips.” he patiently explained. “You are not going.”

“Don’t use that patronizing tone with me.”

“You’re staying.” he ended the discussion. “Lizzy, I can not go into that scene knowing you’re out in that car, a literal sitting target.” he appealed to her reason. “And you know as well as I do, that Dembe will be standing right there, trying to block access to you.”

He played on her vulnerability. Not a threat to herself, but to someone she cared for. And it worked. She hung her head, resigned to the inevitable.

“I won’t be gone long,” he patted her hand. “Stop worrying, everything will be fine.” He pulled the blankets back over her legs. “Get some sleep.”
April 9

Liz stirred, instantly awake. Holding her breath, she listened to the darkened room, only hearing silence. Turning her head on her pillow, she looked at the clock. Only an hour had passed since Red had left.

Red’s side of the bed was still empty. There wasn’t any light, the room was pitch dark. What had awakened her?

Rolling over, she grabbed her phone, dialing, her heart pounding loudly in her chest. She heard someone pick up, speaking instantly, her tone a husky whisper which sounded abnormally loud in the silence which surrounded her.

“Is that you?”

“Are you all right?” Red sat up straighter in the seat of the black Mercedes.

“I thought I heard you pull up.” the woman’s eyes darted about frantically, making out vague shapes now as her eyes adjusted. “How far off are you?

“A few minutes.” the information was given over hastily. “What the hell is going on there, Lizzy?”

A loud thumping sound hit a wall somewhere very near to her location. She jerked visibly, gasping into the phone. “Shit!”

Red grasped Dembe’s shoulder, his fingers sending a signal. The dark man instantly pushed his foot harder into the gas peddle.

“Call for Silas!”

“I heard something hit the wall.” she whispered shakily. Another loud crash and the sound of breaking glass silenced her instantly. But she sucked in a harsh breath, her hand slapping the panic button.

Red had instructed on the security procedures the day the alert was installed.

The man was actually able to hear some commotion on the other end of the line now.

“Get on the floor.” Red barked over the phone. “Under the rim of the bed, there’s a gun.” he instructed. “Move, now.”

The woman threw back the blankets, dropping to the floor. Reaching under the bed, she felt for the hidden weapon.

“Stay there.” he ordered, hearing even more ruckus coming from her end of the line. “Don’t move.”

“Red…” her voice was shaking.

Liz’s eyes darted frantically about her surroundings, seeking an escape route.

“Don’t even think about leaving that room. Get under the bed, now.”
She slid the phone under the bed, wiggling under the frame. It was so dark, she couldn’t see where the dark plastic had gone.

“I can’t find the phone.” her voice betrayed her rising panic.

Red spoke continually as she searched blindly, her fingers finally landing on the object she so desperately sought.

She gripped her lifeline, focusing on the reassuring sound of his voice.

“How far away ar—” She fell silent as a sliver of light grew wider, the door easing open.

Her eyes widened with terror, her hand flying to cover her mouth.

“Are you there.” he demanded. She heard him urging Dembe to drive faster.

Her body stiffened as footsteps slowly crossed the expanse between herself and the door.

“Calm down. Control your breathing.” Red took control of the situation. “We’re turning the last corner.”

She took deeper breath, watching the feet as they moved stealthily about the room. Angry voices carried through the open doorway. Her head flitted back and forth, her eyes wild, her heart pounding.

“I’m almost there, I promise.”

“Where the hell is she?” a coarse whisper asked anxiously.

Red heard the muffled voice of a man feeling the blood rush from his head.

“Don’t make a fucking sound.” Red stated tautly.

She tensed, watching as yet another man entered the room.

“Look in the closet.” anger laced the first man’s tone.

Elizabeth Keen shut her eyes tightly, desperately trying to halt the tremors shaking her entire frame. She lay her forehead against the carpeted floor, silently saying a fervent prayer.

“I’m here.” her prayers were answered.

Dembe pulled around the corner, shutting down the lights, coasting into the drive.

She tensed further, the voices down the corridor growing louder, the tremors in her body intensifying.

“Liz started jerkily, the man’s voice above the bed cursing vehemently. “Damn it! Keep looking for her!”

Then all hell broke loose.

The front door unceremoniously crashed open. There was shouting and indistinguishable chaos. A table flipped over, crashing it’s contents onto the marble floor.

Red’s booming voice commanded attention. “What the hell is going on here!”
Liz gripped the weapon in her hand, hearing the scuffle escalate. Angry voices and the sound of shattering glass was just too much to process for her fragile state at the moment. She curled into a fetal position, placing her hands tightly over her ears, shutting out the horror in her mind.

“Break them apart, damn it!” Red ordered viciously. The demand was carried out instantly.

The silence was deafening for all of two seconds.

“What the hell do you think you two were doing!” Red’s tone was ice cold. “You scared the living shit out of her!”

There was murmured discontent.

“Either of you two move again... or say one damn word,” Red warned, “I’ll blow out your fucking knee caps.”

Liz was vaguely aware once more, of foot steps approaching. She had heard those footsteps before... they stalked after her that night. So unhurried, so casually...

“Lizzy...”

She opened her eyes, focusing on the phone which lay directly in her line of vision.

“Red?” she was not sure where the sound originated.

“Do you hear her fucking voice!” Red barked at some unseen person. “You two idiots did that!”

A pair of hands appeared in the shadows of her safe place, beckoning her forward.

She stayed put.

“When I get her out from under here,” Red growled, “I’m going to beat the living shit out of both of you.”

Dropping his hat to the floor, the man leaned his weight onto his hand, stilling his movement, his tone reassuringly gentle.

“Don’t shoot me sweetheart.” He slowly lay flat, his eyes skimming the darkness. He saw instantly the state the woman was in... the panic-stricken blue eyes stared at him vacantly, as she pulled further away.

“Scratch that!” he turned scathing eyes to his new found nemesis. “I’m going to fucking kill you both.” He looked up at the two men angrily, then back at her, gentling his features.

“Come on sweetheart. It’s okay.” He reached under the bed, holding out his hand, waiting patiently. “It’s all right.” his tone was even and calming. “I’m here.”

The man closed his eyes to the silence.

“I’ll tell you what...” he was an expert negotiator. “What we’re going to do,” he peeked under, his eyes locking with hers, “we’re just going to sit here and wait until you’re ready to do whatever it is that will make you comfortable.” he smiled at her briefly.

Through the haze of her nightmarish state, the woman recognized the gentle smile.

“Are you cold under there?” he motioned slightly with his head and suddenly a blanket appeared by his side. He held the offering out and again... that smile.

His eyes held hers easily. “See, everything is fine. I can explain everything.” he shifted into a more comfortable position. “Just as I can see how you could have misconstrued all that has occurred.”

She had taken her meds to fall asleep and had awoken to this fucking farce. She was having trouble now, distinguishing fact from fiction. The meds had side effects... paranoia being among the top two listed.

Red held out his hand, yet again. “Take it, Lizzy.”

She breathed out a cleansing breath, her fingers inching closer until they tentatively touched the comforting warmth.

He did not force the issue and soon, the slender fingers gripped his in a tight embrace.

“Good girl...” he smiled happily. “Come to me.”

The woman slid forward until she felt a secure embrace draw her into the light.

She instantly retreated, because she was suddenly surrounded by menacing looking males. All of whom were heavily armed, dark scowls etched on their faces.

The tight hold on Red’s hand turned rigid. He halted his intended rising, sensing her hesitancy.

“It’s just Security.” he soothed, gesturing to the men. “See, there’s Silas.” he smiled down at her. “It’s just Security, I promise.”

Red studied the paled, distrustful features, noticing her dilated pupils.

His jaw tightened angrily, the man holding himself in check. “I’m sorry, sweetheart.” He sat down beside her, his arm laying casually on the bed.

“I should have never left you in the care of these...” He apologized before turning on the men. And he did so with all the force of his fury behind the statements he was about to make. “Your job is to make sure she feels safe. Does she look like she feels safe!” Red waited impatiently but no reply was immediately forthcoming. “That was a fucking question!”

Reddington checked on the woman who to his great surprise, scrunched herself into his side. He felt little tremors traverse her entire body.

Red grimaced for his loss of control, afraid he’d upset her all the more, astonished when she seemed to relax further into him.

“No, sir.” both combatants answered in unison, obviously bothered by their total lack of professionalism.

“She pushed the panic button, because she felt the need to push it. And then couldn’t trust who the hell came through that door.” he pointed meaningfully. “What does that tell you?” he did not wait for the answer transferring his ire elsewhere for the moment. “…Silas, I don’t want them any where near the inside of this house again. Do you understand me.”

“I believe what happened is worthy of termination.” Silas stated his opinion quietly. The woman’s eyes darted to the man’s handsome features, a certain type of fear showing.

“We’ll discuss that later.” Red spat the reply, then gently kissed Liz’s temple.
She closed her eyes, her free arm wrapping tightly about his waist, her head resting on his shoulder. “Right now, I want you to get the hell out so I can fix the damage you caused.” His eyes flicked their rage to the men in question. The room was vacated quickly.

“Do you need anything?” Dembe asked solicitously of the pair sitting quietly on the floor.

“No, we’ll be fine, Dembe. Thank you.” Red smiled at the man, gesturing with his eyes that he now had control of the situation. “Go, get some rest.”

Dembe nodded as he lifted from his crouched position, “As should you...” he said, walking away.

“Good night.” Red said softly over his shoulder. The door closed finally, leaving them alone.

“Termination?” the woman’s voice sounded weak and tremulous. Her eyes searched his for an answer to her fretful state.

“He meant, fire them.” Red clarified immediately, hoping at least, that was what Silas had meant. “Are you all right now?” He asked tentatively.

“Yeah...” She breathed, the tremors easing as the minutes passed.

He sat up, pulling his coat off, laying it over her. His arms embraced her tightly. He eased the weapon from her still clutched hand.

“May I take this?”

She held her hand up, watching him pull her fingers back from their tight grasp on the black metal.

“You’re okay now.” He crooned softly, finally removing the gun from her hand and setting it beside him. “It’s over.”

“I’m sorry.” she shook her head, taking a deep breath.

Red pulled his head back, looking at her, confused. “What the hell are you sorry for?”

“Talk about being a baby.” she tried to laugh the situation off unsuccessfully then looked down at her hands. “I don’t know what’s wrong with me. I can’t stop shaking.”

“Well, you just had the shit scared out of you. I can see where someone might be a little upset by that.”

“I’m an FBI agent.”

“An FBI agent that’s been injured by a psychopath and then wakened by a couple of jackass idiots fighting in the fucking foyer.” He shook his head in open agitation, placing the gun back in the holster under the bed.

“What?” She asked, for the man had mumbled something incoherently.

“I was just cussing their lineage.” he stated bleakly, halting his narrative abruptly. “Lizzy, you’re injured. You’re on medication that dulls the senses, makes you numb... heightens anxiety.” he reminded.

“You aren’t on guard,” he pulled on his suit jacket irritably, taking his frustrations out on an inanimate object, “because you aren’t supposed to be. You’ve trusted me to see to your care and believed yourself safe with me.”

He rubbed his palm in the center of his forehead, looking around aimlessly. “You didn’t know what the hell was going on. You were still on edge about what was happening on my end of things, and don’t say you weren’t.” he forewarned. “You have every right to feel the way you do.”

“Divide and conquer.” She mumbled.

“What?”

“I thought...” She exhaled, slumping against his strength, “I thought Carver got you out of the house to get in here... divide and conquer.”

“He wasn’t here.” Red assured himself more than the woman. “So, don’t worry about that.”

“What was going on out there?” Her curiosity was finally aroused.

The man sighed, “I’m sorry they frightened you.”

“It is most assuredly not okay.” Red stretched his legs out, getting more comfortable, leaning into the bed frame. “A fact I will explain to them personally tomorrow in no uncertain terms.”

“Is there a need for that?” she fretted. “They do their job well, for the most part... very well.”

“Do they? Because as I see it, you’re supposed to be sleeping right now, while they quietly guard the house.” Red’s temper was returning. “Silas is right, they should be fired.”

“I don’t want to be responsible for that.”

“I don’t think the responsibility lies with you.” he reminded.

“You took care of it, Red.” she placated.

“And had I not been here? What would have happened had I not shown up?” he demanded. “Stoned on pain pills or not, your training would have kicked in sooner or later. Silas would have checked your hiding place, I guarantee it.” he stopped for a breath. “When he knelt down next to the bed, you would have blown a hole through him.”

The woman’s eyes widened to such a realization. “I would have recognized his voice, surely.”

“All I heard was a threat.” he interrupted. “You... hell, I need to know... who’s coming through that door if anything like this ever happens again.”

Red reached up, grabbing a radio, speaking curtly into the device. “Silas, come here, please.”

“What are you doing?” Liz demanded.

A knock at the door interrupted the conversation. The large guard scanned the room hastily, seeing the pair in the same position he had left them. He approached cautiously, never certain the older man’s moods.

Silas instantly apologized. “I’m sorry, Ms. Keen.” his voice held his sincerity.

She was feeling incredibly embarrassed by the whole thing, her eyes lowering sheepishly.
I’m the one who should be apolo–"

“No, Ma’am. Absolutely not.” the guards eyes tried very hard to be stern, but clearly his heart was not in it. “I’ll not have you thinking that.” the blue eyes shifted hastily to Reddington.

“We need a safe word, something to tell her who is coming through that door.” Red stated succinctly.

Silas crouched down next to them, “I agree. When I came in and didn’t find her...” The man breathed out, controlling his own anxiety. “Totally unprofessional, agreed.” he shook his head, perturbed. “But I was so damned freaked by your absence in the bed...” he let it go. “So what did we come up with?”

Red looked at Lizzy, “Something that isn’t specifically tied to you?”

The woman looked around, searching mentally, her eyes happening to land on... her safe word.

“Fedora.”

Red smiled, pleased she chose an object relating to himself.

“Who else do you trusting besides me?” Silas asked.

“Joe.” He was the only other guard that she saw on a regular basis, so she was comfortable with him.

“All right, we will be the only two that know the word. I do not want a repeat of tonight.” Silas stressed. “If you hear either of us say anything other than that,” he pointed to the stylish object in question. “you stay where the hell you are because something is wrong.”

With that settled, Silas left them alone.

Red offered his hands, lifting her from the floor onto the bed. He watched as Liz settled into the blankets, exhaling a deep breath.

He smiled down at her. “Better now?”

She released the tension in her body, smiling wanly at him. “Are you okay?”

He shook his head slightly, amazed at such tenacity. “I’m going to get dressed. Be right back.”

Minutes later he settled beside her, watching her stifle a yawn. “What happened tonight, with Ress?”

“We’ll discuss that later. You need to rest and quiet frankly, I don’t want to think for a while.” Red turned to the light switch. “Just know, everything was as fine as it could be, under the circumstances.” the cool darkness bathed the room, and this time Liz felt only safe and secure with this man beside her.

“Now, sleep, Lizzy.”

She closed her eyes, reaching instinctively for that security. Her fingers curved about two of his, holding tightly until sleep finally came.
After their argument of a few days ago, they had come to an understanding. A routine had been developed of sorts, one both found comfortable. Red hadn’t gone any further than her voice carried, which made him comfortable. The only times he left were for quick trips to the Post Office, none of which lasted more than an hour... which Liz found reassuring.

She would have thought she’d feel awkward as hell, being in such close proximity to Red, but she hadn’t. They were all adults here and the circumstances unusual. It hadn’t been as bad as she had anticipated. She thought they were handling the situation very well, all things considered.

But one day, Dembe had hinted towards some business deal that needed Red’s attention. She noticed that the man immediately waved off the task. It was then, Liz realized Red had literally been putting off everything to be here with her.

While she had enjoyed his company, he had a business to run. Traveling to do. Carver to find. He couldn’t put it off for the next six or seven weeks.

One morning shortly thereafter, they were sitting in bed. She had her foot elevated, both relaxing, in the midst of another of Red’s fantastic stories, when Dembe entered the room, phone in hand.

Red’s brows rose, questioning silently. The man was clearly annoyed, not at Dembe, but at the phone the other man held aloft.

Red sighed heavily, waving the phone forward. Taking the offending object, he reluctantly listened to the voice at the other end of the line.

After a few beats of silence, Red spoke, “So tell them to divert the shipment. Call Edmund and tell him it will be a few hours off schedule. What’s so damn difficult...”

Nodding his head sarcastically, Red continued. “No, I can’t come out there right now.” He looked at Liz, “It’s none of your damned business ‘why’.”

Liz laid a hand on his arm, getting his attention. She nodded vigorously, mouthing the word, Go.

Red’s scowl increased. “Peter, let me call you back.” then rolled his eyes expressively, “Yes, in a minute!” He barked, slapping the phone shut.

He shot her a determined look. “I am not leaving you here alone.”

“I’ll be fine.” she humored, her tone sincere.

“A lot can happen in a day.” Red knew from experience. He silently contemplated his options. “I’ll leave Dembe.”

“No you won’t. I won’t be able to rest if I know you’re out there alone.” she presented her point of view. “There’s, how many guys running around this property right now? Men you’ve hired.” she mentally calculated. “I will be perfectly safe.”

“You won’t leave this house?” Red needed confirmation.

“Even if I wanted to..” She waved over her injuries.

“Elizabeth.” the man stated sternly. “If I left and something happened to you...” He shook his head brusquely. “Promise me.”

Liz had never seen him so troubled, well, not since Anslo had a gun held to her head. It unsettled her. “I will not leave this house. I promise.”

“Do not tell anyone where you are.” he forewarned. “We don’t want to risk them being followed and I most certainly do not want them relocating you, and Cooper will.” he ticked off on his fingers. “This is the safest place for you to be right now.”

The woman could find no real argument to debate at this point. Just getting to the bathroom was a chore. Fending off an attacker, and one as strong as Carver, would be impossible.

Red threw the phone to Dembe, “Tell them we’ll be leaving shortly.” he threw an obstinate glare at the woman. “Don’t make me regret this decision, Lizzy.”

“I won’t, I promise.” she crossed her heart, holding up ‘Boy Scout’ fingers. “The sooner you go, the sooner you can get back.”

Liz sat in the back pool area, book in hand, her foot elevated to a comfortable position. Sitting the paperback in her lap, she reached for her ice tea, smiling softly as she watched Hudson pout on the floor near the doorway.

For the first couple of hours, the dog had sat by the front door, looking forlorn and lost with Dembe’s departure. She had coaxed him with treats to follow her. Even so, it was clear how much he missed Dembe. The animal would raise his head hopefully each time he heard the door open.

Red and Dembe had been gone two days now and as promised, she hadn’t left the house nor told anyone her location. And she hadn’t wanted to.

Aside from the heavy casts, the slightly stoned feeling she carried throughout the day and the maniacal killer hunting for her, this was the most relaxed she had been in a long time.

Maybe taking a little breather wasn’t so bad.

She felt her mind clearing a little more each day. After being away from work, she felt fresh and renewed. Which probably made sense, considering she hadn’t taken a vacation since working with Red.

Not that he was to blame. Oddly of late, it seemed she had blamed him for everything wrong that had happened in her life.
She knew, without doubt, had she even hinted that she needed a break, he would have shipped her off to a private tropical island, knowing Red.

But things had been so tense at home, work was her salvation.

This break from Tom and his untimely visits and calls, had been needed.

In the quiet, she had finally taken the time to process, to reflect, on their relationship and had found, in this instance... absence did not make the heart grow fonder.

Liz had let the familiarity she had once felt with Tom, blind her to how seriously clouded her judgement had become. She needed to let the past go and move on.

It was not certain if the man would actually leave her alone, however.

He wasn’t her husband any longer. He certainly wasn’t the man she had married.

Tom Keen wasn’t even his name. He was a virtual stranger. Everything she thought she knew about the man, was a lie. The Tom Keen she knew... didn’t exist.

It was all a charade.

Red, on the other hand, had tried to be as up front as possible. And he had been right, she hadn’t always believed him. When he had taken a chance, giving her more information, she believed he had manipulated the situation. And in the end when she found that he hadn’t, she never apologized for her earlier assumption.

She was abrupt, sometimes down right rude with the man, but he was always there when she needed help. No matter if it was work or of a personal nature...

She looked around the beautiful room, sighing. And even here, he was seeing to her comfort and safety.

He had handled her tantrums about Tom with understanding patience. Then picked up the pieces left behind when her world had unraveled.

Which said a lot about both their characters.

While Red offered a shoulder to cry on, supporting and encouraging words, and in the end she, having realized the truth about Tom, being presented with that beautifully restored music box had touched her heart and in a manner of speaking... restored her soul.

While she, on the other hand, was always the first to say, I told you so. To rub salt in open wounds.

What was more disturbing, she had that character trait before Red had even come into the picture. She had been called single-minded more than once in her life. ‘By the book’, black and white, no gray areas.

That was Elizabeth Keen.

A few days back when Red had given her that tongue lashing, she now had to wonder, had he, in his own erudite way, been saying the same thing?

The muffled sound of the front door closing broke her reverie.

One of the guards was making his afternoon rounds.
There had been several changes the day following the ‘fisticuffs in the foyer’ incident.

Red and Silas had gotten into a heated exchange so intense, Liz had heard them bellowing even in their bedroom.

Dembe had finally arrived, with an explanation of sorts. He gestured meaningfully at one point, “Make him be quiet,” the large man said, “he’s disturbing my morning meditation.”

The woman wondered what the hell she could possibly do to quiet the situation. She found both men toe to toe, gesturing heatedly, hotly debating about how Security should be managed.

Liz sat quietly on her cart debating her own options. She glanced up catching Dembe’s eyes, then acted on instinct because in reality, she had no idea how to calm two Alpha Males who were determined, each to have his own way.

Dembe helped her arise as she shakily steadied herself on the handlebars of her cart. The exchange was becoming more aggressive on both parts.

She stumbled forward, very uneasy with the apoplectic words. At one point, she was so anxious to put herself between the two combatants... her foot faltered and she ended up having to grip Red’s arm to steady herself.

Both men unconsciously stepped back, which allowed her to work her way between them.

She lifted beseeching eyes, her hand gently grazing Red’s firmly set chin. Momentarily the fiery eyes transferred to her clear ones, only to return a staggering glare to a belligerent opponent.

The fact that Red was berating her guard in such a manner, due to something she felt totally responsible for, only added to her anxiety.

Liz ignored the gesture, her fingers falling softly over Red’s mouth. The man’s startled gaze was finally directed to something other than the source of his anger. He stared down at the small woman, completely focused.

The woman watched the tension bleed from his stiff posture, her touch slowly falling away from his face.

She was stunned when his hand halted her own path, the grip light. Red’s tense lips softened as he tenderly grazed the tips of her fingers. The open affection literally took her breath away.

Red breathed in a cleansing breath, taking her hand, he guided her to the couch.

Silas watched the man, his expression a wary one.

Red’s diplomatic tendencies had the situation well in hand within minutes. A suitable plan of action which satisfied all concerned, was agreed upon.

One stipulation which Red insisted be carried out, troubled the woman deeply. He wanted a guard outside their door when he was not present. Giving him peace of mind.

The first night, she had felt awkward. But in the morning, after a refreshing night’s sleep... one in which she had no worries concerning Red or herself. She was able to finally relax and accept the situation as one she could live with.

“David?” She set her book aside, glancing to the door, expecting to see the young guard. Hudson stood, wagging his tail, excitedly dancing in place.

“Two days I’ve been gone and you’re on a first name basis with the guards.” Red stepped through the archway casually, tossing his hat on the couch.

“Red!” She smiled, happy to see him again. “I didn’t expect you back so soon.” she sat up straighter, her smile widening. “How did it go?”

Hudson sniffed him, waiting for his customary pat on the head before taking off in search of Dembe.

Red poured a drink, then sat down next to her. “As well as could be expected.” he informed her. “I can’t believe I had to fly around the world for...” He took a long drink from the tumbler, rubbing his neck, “God forbid I should take some real time off. Everything would fall apart.”

“What happened?” She took the glass out of his hand, bringing it to her own mouth. Red took her chin in his hand, making her face him.

She offered him a puzzled look.

He quirked his brow, then took the glass out of her reach.

“I am of legal age, you know.” Liz’s brow crinkled, a derisive sound escaping her throat.

“You are also high as a kite.” the man reached over, substituting her ice tea, placing it in her hand. He smiled when she scrunched her nose with disdain, but she sipped the cool beverage regardless.

“Nothing happened per se.” he continued. “Shipping problems that could have been handled...” He exhaled heavily, halting his narrative.

The whole trip had been a waste of time in his opinion. On top of that, Ressler had called with a new victim. The pictures were the same as the first. Bloody and gruesome. And they still were nowhere near to closing in on Carver.

Red hadn’t known the victim, but there was something about her that spoke volumes to him. It was frustrating as hell because she was trying to say something that he simply could not hear at this point. But he would soon, hopefully.

“It doesn’t matter.” Red dismissed all else, leaning into the woman’s sphere. “I want to hear all about what you’ve been doing.”

“You’re looking at it.” she waved her hands expressively about. “They wouldn’t let me do much of anything. The guards or nursing staff... they’ve been bossy, but very attentive.”

“Were they unkind to you?” Red’s scowl deepened.

“No, not at all.” she laughed musically. “Red, I was just grabbing my water from the side table and they came running. It was ridiculous.” she pulled a cute grimace. “Oh, they started me on some minor exercises. Just keeping the arm and leg flexible, mainly. But it’s important, I guess.”

He had left instructions for the staff to watch her, make sure she didn’t fall. Maybe they had gone a little overboard with their attentions. But, she was well and there had been no accidents, so really, he wasn’t going to actually complain.

“You’ll be thankful later.” it was prophesied. “Did the Post Office make contact?”

“Yes.” she brightened. “Aram wanted to send a card, but I told him you’d pick it up when you came

“Can’t it wait? You look exhausted.” Liz noticed the dark circles under the man’s eyes.

“I want to get it out of the way and come home.”

“Is there a problem?” she was suddenly on alert. “News on Carver?”

“I have their next Blacklist name.”

“The next... but what about Carver?” she asked anxiously.

“Don’t concern yourself with him. Everything that can be done...” he dismissed airily. “This next case should be cut and dry. A couple days out at most.”

“Who are you going to give it to?”

“Who do you think?” Already knowing the answer himself, he was curious if she thought the same.

“Ressler?” she practically giggled her glee.

Red smiled his amusement.

Later that day, Silas came through, after Red had left. An easy camaraderie had developed between he and Elizabeth Keen.

They often chatted frequently of late, the woman finding the man interesting, articulate and amusing.

“Any problems today?” Elizabeth had noticed a particular twinkle in the grey eyes this afternoon.

“Just that annoying neighbor kid tossing his ball into the yard again.” Silas checked a window lock.

Liz held her smile, “What is it with you guys and that kid? Why does he bug you so much?”

“Every time he throws that ball over, he tries to scale the fence, which sets off the alarm, which someone has to go check out.”

The radio on the man’s belt started chiming an alert. Silas sighed heavily.

“This makes three times today.” He raised the radio to his mouth, clicking the button. “Anyone got that? I’m with...” the grey eyes filled with mirth as he glanced at the other occupant of the room. “Her.”

“Copy.” He received a reply, absentely hooking the radio back to his belt.

“Why don’t you guys ever say my name?” she was curious.

“Truthfully?” he asked innocently.

Elizabeth spread her hands slightly. “Of course.”

“Most of the guards forget your name.”
She gasped her shock. “But I know their names.”

“Those aren’t their real names.” he managed very straight faced. “If we told you that, we’d have to kill you.”

The beautiful mouth fell agape. Silas burst out chuckling.

Elizabeth’s eyes narrowed suspiciously, getting the jest. “Oh, very amusing, you big oaf.”

“You wouldn’t happen to know if Red’s picked up my mail, would you?” she continued, her tone less acerbic “I ordered stuff and I’m sure it’s being delivered and my bills...”

“I saw a box in the foy– ” Silas’ reply was interrupted by Joe’s deep voice bitching morosely. The radio sounded crystal clear, almost as if the man was in the same room.

“I don’t wanna do it, but I have to take this kid out.” Joe grumbled belligerently.

Liz held her fingers to her ears, grimacing slightly as the berating continued at a slightly higher magnitude.

“Hey, you little bastard!” the man screeched at his new adversary. “You want this ball stuck up your ass!”

“How many times has he set off the perimeter alarm in one day?” Liz chuckled her appreciation of the situation.

“Twelve.” Silas tried to hold his own amusement.

“Pop the ball.” She shrugged casually.

Silas laughed, but she continued, “I’m serious. He’s just jacking with you now. He knows it’s pissing you off.” The guard was directed. “Tell Joe, I said to pop it and toss it back over.”

“You’re serious?” Silas was happy.

“Yes, he’s going to keep doing it just to spite you.”

Silas shrugged, keying the mike. “She says to pop the ball.”

“Really!” Joe came back excitedly. “She said that?”

Liz waved him forward, taking the radio. “Yep, and throw it back over the fence.”

“Your orders will be followed to the letter, Ma’am.” she could hear the glee in the hardened ex-military man’s retort.

Liz smiled, when they heard a loud pop and what could possibly be misconstrued as maniacal laughter over the radio.

“That man enjoys his job too much sometimes.” Silas smiled warmly at her.

She held up the radio, thumbing the button. “If he throws anything else over, keep it. And if he tries to climb over again, call the cops on him. His parents need to step up and corral that kid.”

A round of the Security ‘copying’ her orders came in quick succession. She grinned, returning the communication device to it’s rightful owner.
“You just made everyone unbelievably happy. I’ll go check that mail for you.” the man nodded his approval, the action meaning much to the woman. “By the way... my name is Silas.”

“Your real name?” she queried.

He pulled a face, shrugging apologetically. “We can’t go there, Ma’am... remember?”

“Oh, get out.” she exclaimed, exasperated.

He came back a minute later, carrying a large basket.

“Is that all mine?” She asked aghast, clapping her hands together gleefully.

“No, I think some of Red’s is in here.” he glanced down to his burden. “You want me to sort it real quick?”

“Just bring it to me each day and I’ll do it.” she waved him over. “It might help Red out.”

“All right. I’m gonna go check on the guys, especially Joe.” he threw out a careless thumb over his shoulder. “See that he hasn’t aerated the kid.”

Liz’s shoulders shook with amusement as she sorted the stack of mail. Seeing as there were so many different aliases for Red, it took a few minutes to organize it all.

She opened an early festive birthday card from her Aunt, smiling. As expected, the inevitable gift card she knew would be inside slid from the hidden folds.

A hundred dollars for Victoria’s Secret. Not bad. Much better then whatever Gypsy outfitter her Aunt had picked last year.

Liz didn’t know what the woman had been thinking. Not once in her entire life had Liz ever dressed like a hippie/gypsy. But she had purchased some nice candles and funky jewelry, so it wasn’t a complete loss.

Elizabeth read the inside, smiling at the birthday wishes, which also included a quick update on the family. The woman was pleased to hear that everyone seemed to be doing so well.

She sat the card aside, reaching for the next letter, her thoughts still with the lovely sentiments expressed.

Absently sliding the single sheet of paper free, she automatically perused the neatly typed script.

_For someone who claims to care for you so much, I find that bastard Reddington has left you injured and alone. I’m sure he’s given you no chance to escape or even call for help. Probably surrounding you with armed guards who watch your every move. Putting you under lock and key, like the prisoner you are.

I’ve been searching, but still haven’t found you. But I will, have faith

And when I do, I will purge you of his lies. You will be pure once again, no longer sinful. We will cleanse you, redeem you, bleed his evil from you_

Scowling darkly, Liz examined both sides of the letter and envelope yet again, looking for clues as to who might have sent such a disturbing letter.
There was no address or name aside from hers.

Picking up her phone, her decision made, she dialed with trembling fingers.

Chapter End Notes

Is it Baz... is it Silas? Who the hell knows. If we did know, he’d kill us.
Red and Dembe waited patiently as the elevator did its thing.

Red glanced at his friend. “I miss elevator music.”

“No, you do not.” Dembe was relatively sure.

Red held his smile with difficulty, appreciative of the other man’s amazing delivery. The doors slid open, both men exiting in unison.

“My dear Agent Navabi.” Red removed his hat, smiling as the beautiful woman approached. “How are you this fine day?” The man literally oozed charm and sophistication.

The dark haired woman nodded a hello, more to Red’s associate than himself, Reddington noted... his amusement returning two fold. “I’m well.” she reluctantly gave her attention over. “You?”

“Glad to be home.”

“I’m sure you are.” She chuckled at the happy man.

Ever since Liz had been staying with Red Reddington, he seemed more relaxed and cheerful. Not that he wasn’t normally, but this was genuine. No façade in place.

Red’s smile widened, his thoughts turning introspective for a beat, thinking about who was waiting at home until he noticed Navabi’s lips quirking slightly.

Red smiled back, his eyes twinkling mischievously.

Dembe ducked his head, hiding his smile. Obviously, he wasn’t the only one who noticed the change in Raymond since Elizabeth had been staying with them.

“What are you doing here, Reddington?” Ressler enquired, having entered the Pen. It was odd to hear Donald actually sound pleasant for once, or as pleasant as he could. Red didn’t believe it came natural to the Agent.

“I have a new name.” Red glanced around expectantly, frowning. “Where’s Aram?”

Samar pointed at the second floor landing.

Aram glanced over the metal railing having noted the attention suddenly directed at himself. He offered a quick wave, picking up his pace, the man beside him doing the same.

As he reached the bottom floor, Aram fidgeted with his tie and straightened his hair. Red assumed he was preening himself for the beautiful ex-Mossad agent. And who could fault the man?

“Mr. Reddington, you’re back.” Aram clumsily shuffled a pile of folders from one arm to the other, holding out his hand in greeting.

Red took the offering, smiling kindly at the man. He liked this young man who didn’t put on airs. Aram was truly a kind, caring person. As genuine as they came. It didn’t hurt that the computer expert could be offhandedly amusing and was more often than not, Red’s inside man.

Red took great pains not to take advantage, or get Aram reprimanded, seeing as he often went out of his way to help or call Red when Lizzy was in trouble.

Aram put down the files, taking his seat, hands hovering over the keyboard as he awaited instructions.

A man about Ressler’s age and build, hovered in the background. Reddington had noticed of course. And now, the guy slowly approached the group.

Samar’s lovely eyes chilled, shifting her position closer to Red.

Red turned staring at the woman, wondering if there was a problem.

“Shouldn’t he be in the box?” The tall brunet man asked brusquely, eyeing Reddington belligerently.

The man couldn’t have been here for more then a couple of days and there was already tension among the troops. Red checked his theory once again, glancing at Samar whose lovely face harbored an unsociable scowl.

Aram’s eyes avoided the other man altogether, which to Red, signified a great lack of respect. Ressler had his head in his notebook, clueless, as usual.

“What do you mean, one of Lizzy’s replacements?” Red asked.

“They honored us with two new shiny fill-ins. We got him,” she stared peevishly at Moore, “and Andrew Wilson.” she glanced around furtively, “He’s somewhere around here. You can thank Liz for me when you see her next, by the way. It’s been such a joy having them around.”

“And what’s this about the Box?” Red asked innocently.

“Mr. Reddington comes in voluntarily,” Samar snapped right back, putting her lovely frame between the two would-be combatants.

“I think that as long as he’s on government property, he should be placed in custody.” Moore did not back down.

“I have an idea, Moore,” Samar countered, smiling. The woman backed up slightly, waving an imperious hand. “If you can put him in the box, I’m sure Reddington will stay there for you.”

“Or... I could just leave.” Red picked up his hat, setting it on his head. “I do have other things to do today.”

Like sleep, see Lizzy, talk to Lizzy, be with Lizzy.

“Or, you could leave when we allow it.” Moore stated sarcastically.

Red halted his steps slowly, giving over his attention. His eyes easily held the other man’s until Moore finally shifted, losing the battle of wills.
“When you lose the shrub, let me know.” Red spoke directly to Samar, resuming his steps.

Dembe cast Agent Moore a steely glare before following his friend toward the exit.

“Agents, secure that man!” Moore ordered, as two passing agents glanced dubiously to a reticent Red Reddington, obviously confused, then back at the new agent, their confusion deepening.

Dembe stepped forward, the two agents backed off slightly, still holding their open files, as they continually checked with their counterparts as to... why is this asshole causing problems.

“You said he had to put me in the box.” Red laughed his growing amusement. “No one said anything about having any sort of assistance. But still...” Red once again turned a challenging stare to Agent Moore, “I believe that’s cheating.”

“It is, yes.” Samar agreed cheerfully.

He turned to the woman, ignoring Moore completely, his hands spreading in a puzzled manner, “What the hell is going on?” he demanded. “Did no one bother to explain the rules to Agent 86, here?”

Dembe’s brow lifted slightly and Red’s hand lifted instantly. “I will explain the obscure cultural reference later, my friend.”

Harold Cooper approached, feeling the tension emanating from the group. He held out his hand in greeting, as he neared Red. “Reddington, you’re back earlier than I expected.” he smiled warmly. “I assume you have new information–”

Red took the man’s hand, “Has something changed in my absence? Agent Krycek here,” he nodded in the appropriate direction, “wants me in custody.”

Cooper shook his head no, silently asking for an explanation, his brow arching quizzically.

Dembe stepped forward fluidly, leaning slightly. “Another obscure cultural reference... The X-Files.” he explained readily before resuming his vigilant stance behind his friend.

Red’s mouth pulled at the corners in open amusement.

“He’s new.” Cooper smoothed over the incident, motioning to Agent Moore who stood fuming inwardly.

“He’s an idiot.” Red corrected matter-of-factly.

Harold shrugged, “He’s new.” he repeated, as if it was explanation enough. “Now, what’s going on?”

Red tilted his head, shrugging. “As I was about to say, I have a new name.” he finally got down to business. “Nathaniel Gage.

“What about Carver?” Ressler chimed in.

Trust me...

“Wait... you’re giving us a new name?” Ressler said. “What’s the catch?”
Red laid it all out for them. Normally, he’d add a little flourish to the narrative, but in this instance, he really just wanted to get this over with and go home.

Twenty minutes later, the task was done, and he was ready to go. But the team evidently, had countless questions to address.

_I miss Lizzy_

If he had any trust in these people, he’d just call it in, but they needed to be walked through it sometimes.

Only Samar and Aram seemed to be on the ball. Donald still didn’t quite trust him, and the new guy kept throwing daggers at him the whole time, probably not having heard a word said.

The dynamics were all off and someone would pay for it, sooner or later.

Yet another Agent approached, this one younger than the rest, about Lizzy’s age, actually. Red exchanged enigmatical glances with Dembe.

“They’re coming out of the woodwork, these days.” Red quipped.

“Like cockroaches.” the large black man transferred a willful stare directly at the young Agent as he passed.

“Director Cooper, here’s the information you requested.” the guy handed over a file, clearly intimidated by Dembe’s undue interest.

“Thank you, Wilson.” Cooper glanced at the file absently. “Red, have you met Agent Wilson yet?”

Red ignored the kid all together, before returning his interest to Cooper. “Wet behind the ears and an idiot. This is the best you have?” Red’s eyes shifted lazily to Moore.

Ressler lowered his head quickly, for some reason finding that particular remark funny.

“In their Specialty.” Cooper smiled slightly, secretly amused by Red’s disgust as well.

“And those would be, what? Finger painting and playing ‘doormat’?” Red was losing patience fast. “My God, Harold. Ressler looks like a genius next to these two.”

Ressler rolled his eyes then returned to his report. It was nothing he hadn’t heard before.

“Moore is Foreign Counter Intelligence.” Red barked in laughter at that remark, “And...” Cooper ignored the man’s disrespectful ways, “Wilson, Organized Crime, Domestic Threats and one of our best Linguists.”

Red huffed his annoyance, his jaw tensing. “Have they been vetted?”

“They have, and passed.”

“Forgive me if I don’t find comfort in that.” He pulled the quietly buzzing phone from his pocket, answering, “Yes?” he practically snapped.

“Red...”

“Sweetheart,” his tone changed instantly, “did you need something?”
“When will you be back?” Elizabeth asked quietly.

“Is there a problem?” He asked, instantly alert. Her voice told him, something was wrong. Grabbing his hat, he started for the elevator, Dembe falling into step beside him.

He ignored the calls for him from her contemporaries, continuing on his way. Their questions only irritated him now. He had other priorities.

“I...” she began uncertainly, then altered to a more sedate, “well, there is something I wish to show you... but it’s not all that urgent.”

“Fifteen minutes.” Red advised, checking with Dembe. “We’ll be home then.”

They reached the car in minutes and were on their way. “Is Silas there with you?”

“Call him.”

“Who gave you the mail?” it was demanded heatedly.

“Silas brought it to me before he went out.”

Damn it! He hadn’t told anyone not to give her the mail. It hadn’t occurred to him that she’d even ask for it.

“I ordered things, I was wondering if they had arrived.” she explained, not really knowing why. “Silas only knew about the paper mail he had seen in the foyer.” she babbled, which was her way when nervous. “And my birthday is coming up, I thought my Aunt may have sent a card.” she looked at the door as if the man would walk through any second.

“What did the letter say?”

“She said the family was good and wished me a happy birthday, sent a gift card.”

He had meant the other letter, but she was distracted for the moment, which was good. Not that he wasn’t dying to know what it said.

“What did she say about the family?” he patiently enquired.

Liz read the letter aloud, filling in the needed info when a family member was mentioned, as she went along.

Red vaguely remembered a few of the names mentioned, but not all of them. It didn’t really matter, as long as she was distracted until he got there.

When she finished, he filled the silence immediately. “What kind of gift card?”

“Victoria’s Secret.” she held a smile.

“That was nice of her. What will you buy?”

“Oh there’s so many...” Liz had been browsing the catalogues.
He leaned on the arm rest. “A new blouse, maybe?” he suggested lightly.

“You really hate that olive shirt, don’t you?”

“I do, yes.” he confirmed readily. “Fine then, a new dress.”

“I would have figured you’d say lingerie next.” He could hear her smile over the phone, which was great.

“What kind of lingerie?” He had lowered his voice suggestively, smiling when he heard her giggle.

“Maybe I’ll buy some pajamas.” she tried to match his mood.

“Well, now I’m disappointed. You got my hopes up for nothing,” he truly sounded disappointed.

“We’re pulling up. I’ll be inside in a minute.”

Setting his hat down on the foyer table, he headed back for the pool, holding out his hand for the letter as he walked through the archway. He sat beside her, while she curled her leg under her, turning to face him while he read it.

Anger crossed his features as his eyes scanned the note, his jaw ticking feverishly.

When he was finished, he sat it down beside them. “Why didn’t you tell me you had been getting these?”

“What do you mean?” she was genuinely surprised.

“There are more?” she was stunned.

“You’ve never received one of these before?” he held it aloft.

“No, I think I would have mentioned it if I had.” she was adamant and a little offended.

“You would have told me?” he needed clarification.

“You think I wouldn’t?” she was definitely offended.

“I hope you would trust me enough to, but no, I didn’t think you would.”

“I would have, just on the off chance you knew who it might be.” she took umbrage. “Do you? Know anyone that sends letters like that?” she motioned to the disturbing object he still held aloft.

“I just assumed it was Tom.” He tilted his head, as she took the envelope from his hand, rereading it.

“It doesn’t sound like something Tom would say.” she shook her head in denial, the long dark hair swishing gently about her face.

“You really don’t think so?” Red’s tone said it all.

“If I had to, I would say it isn’t Tom, actually.” She handed the envelope to him, rubbing her fingertips, as if wiping away the bad feeling holding it had given her. “But don’t take my word for it, I didn’t know him at all, apparently.”

Red looked down at the letter in his hand, frowning. If it wasn’t Tom, who the hell could it be? He Bleed his evil from you

Bleed her. It couldn’t be from Carver? Or could it?

It wasn’t his usual style. Red had never heard Carver sending letters before, ever.

But then, he’d never had a “client” get away from him before, either. Lizzy could literally be, the ‘one who got away’. A fixation now.

If Carver had been targeting her, it wasn’t impossible for him to have been following her.

Who ever it was, the letters would be stopping soon when the house sold. With no new address, what then?

The letters needed to continue if any chance of finding the creep was to be had.

Whoever was writing this shit, probably would escalate sooner or later.

Red had an idea how to solve the problem, but right now, he needed to deal with Elizabeth.

“We should talk about the letter.”

“What’s there to talk about?” Liz glanced at the white sheet of paper fretfully.

“Do you feel like a prisoner here?”

“No! Why would you even ask that?”

“Do you believe the guards would allow you leave, if you truly wished?”

“Not only that, they’d drive me where I want to go.” she lifted knowing brows.

“Do you feel like I’m neglecting you, leaving like I did.”

“I feel very cared for here.” the woman’s voice softened, as did her eyes. “And I remember... some of what happened that night.”

“You do?” Red’s own thoughts wandered back. So much had happened that night that she might deem, inappropriate, for that time and place. But his only priority at that moment, had been the woman’s welfare.

“I remember you telling me it would be all right.” she smiled. “That you were sorry you had to hurt me.” she hesitated for the man’s face allowed, that he too, was remembering that time.

Liz reached over, her hand covering his, grasping consolingly. “It’s all right, it’s over.” she smiled just for him. “I remember being cold and then I wasn’t, and you were talking to me.”

When he had laid against her. Well, that was going to be interesting when she fully remembered that little tidbit.

“Was there anything else?”

“Some little things, I get snippets in the middle of the night. They’re slowly piecing together, but not full pictures yet.” she struggled even now to recall the events. “Why?”
“Just wondering.” He shrugged. “Most of it’s a blur for me as well.”

Which wasn’t a lie. He’d only recently started playing back that night, wondering if he saw Carver’s face when he kicked in that door. He may have seen a glimpse of him going around the corner, but it wasn’t clear yet.

When he had heard his name being screamed like that, he clicked to auto-pilot. His only goal was finding and securing Lizzy.

“Don’t worry about these.” he nodded toward the envelope between them. “He doesn’t know where you are.”

“Are you sure?” she needed reassurance.

“If he did, he’d be sending them here, not to your house.” Red reminded.

“Of course.”

“Have I let anything happen to you here?” he reassured.

“No.” she was already calming.

“Has Silas been there when you’ve needed him.” it was a statement, not a question.

“Yes.” a soft smile graced her lips.

“Do you think I’d let any harm come to you?” his voice softened.

“No, but...”

“There are no buts, Lizzy. You are safe here. And will continue to be safe.” his tone brooked no argument. “Don’t worry,” he patted her hand, then lightened. “Are you hungry?”

“Getting there, yes.” She found she was adapting to Red’s constant change of topic better than she had before coming to stay with him. She knew it was his way of distracting her, and sometimes she appreciated it. Sometimes she wanted to throttle him. She wasn’t quite sure what she felt right now.

Red contacted Dembe, asking the man if he would mind picking up dinner tonight. The restaurant had an obscure sounding name which Liz instantly dismissed from her thoughts. She slid over to her cart, lifting her books into the basket preparing to take her leave.

“Stop.” Red said, his head tilting comically.

“What?” She looked around cautiously, afraid she was near an expensive vase or something.

“What are these?” He asked, tapping the back of her seat.

“Bumper stickers.” she held her giggle. “Every time I come back to the chair, there’s a new one stuck on there.”

Red perused a few, laughing as he did.

Lost your cat? Try looking under my tires
“And this?” He fingered the pole and flag sticking out high above the seat.

“It was sticking straight out, like I was a knight ready to joust someone.” She too, joined in the laughter.

Red had a pretty good guess why, but he asked anyway. “And they did this, why?”

“So they could see me coming. An early warning system.”

“Did it work?”

Red winced, thinking of where it could have gone. “Go ahead, I’ll be along in a minute.”

He went to the bar, refreshing his drink. Seconds later, a male grunt almost made him spill the contents of his mouth, for he had taken a huge sip.

Lizzy’s apologetic tone, sounded most sincere. “Sorry, Silas.”

Red raised the glass, laughing into it, finishing his drink before following his speed racer to the dining room.
Spring Chicken

April 11

After a delightful dinner, Dembe went out to do his usual laps in the pool. Lizzy’s dog sat at the edge, following the man back and forth as he swam, perfectly content to do so.

Red walked leisurely through the area, laying a fresh towel on the lounge chair, waving a ‘goodnight’ as he passed.

He headed for their room. More specifically, he headed for Lizzy.

“Who was at the door?” She had heard the bell earlier, but stayed out of sight, as directed by Silas.

“I met the neighbors.” Red smiled his greeting. “Seems their little darling was inconsolable after his ball was thrown back over the wall, deflated.” his hands went to his sides as gave his complete attention over.

Liz hid her smile, her eyes innocently following along as he continued. Red was not fooled for one second.

“The kid claimed he heard a woman’s voice telling someone to maim his toys and keep anything else that was thrown over the fence.” he exclaimed, pulling his tie free. “You wouldn’t know anything about that, would you?”

He looked at her expectantly. “Does that sound like something I would do?” she asked intently.

“Pop the kid’s ball?” Red hung his tie over a nearby chair. “The old Lizzy, no... this new and improved one, I would hope so.”

“Well, I didn’t say it exactly like that.” she lied through her teeth. “Were the parents a problem?”

“For me? No.” Red told the truth. “As a matter of fact, I don’t think they’ll be a problem at all any longer for anyone.”

“What did you do?” she was momentarily waylaid.

“Told them you were a child psychologist that said junior was troubled.” he was proud of his inventiveness. “They’re so worried about the bad seed over there, I suspect he’ll be enrolled in some private academy by tomorrow.”

“And here I thought you didn’t lie.”

“I don’t lie to you.” he clarified. “Everyone else is fair game. Well, except for Dembe and Kate Kaplan...” he quirked his brow, “especially Kaplan.”

“Why don’t you lie to me?” she asked, rubbing her hand and arm, which had been aching for an hour.

“Don’t you think you have had enough lies in your life?” he sat down beside her, lifting her arm onto his lap, massaging the sore muscle.

Liz stiffened slightly at his touch, his behavior surprising her, all of which Red ignored.
“I may not be able to tell you everything that’s happening, but I can promise to never lie to you when you need questions answered.”

She didn’t want to think about it anymore. It had been a good night and she was tired of dwelling. “What did Ress say about the Blacklist name?”

“You mean after he was convinced it wasn’t a joke?” Red took hold of her hand, massaging each individual finger in turn.

Elizabeth felt the ache ease, the man’s administrations feeling wonderful.

“Aram put the info on the screens,” Red continued, “but Ressler kept giving me sidelong glances until Samar smacked him.”

“You’re kidding?” she chortled shortly.

“No, whacked him right across the back of the head.” Red remembered fondly. “Told him to get with the program.”

“Who was it?” she probed artfully, hoping to catch him off guard.

“Who was who?” He pushed his thumb into the palm of her hand, working on the tension there from handling the crutch. “Does this hurt?”

“The Blacklist name.” she snapped, annoyed her subterfuge clearly hadn’t worked. “And no, it doesn’t hurt.” she softened her tone as Red kneaded the sore area expertly.

“No one you need to worry about.” Red sat her arm aside, before scooting down the bed. “Let it go.” He advised. “You’re on medical leave. You should concentrate only on resting.” he tapped his finger against her cast as a reminder. “Let Ressler have his moment... even if it is freaking him out.”

“How are they doing?”

“Why, what’s going on?” she perked up instantly, always ready and willing to hear any juicy tidbit of gossip.

“They brought in some replacements, Richard Moore and Andrew Wilson, to fill in while you’re gone.” he fed her the tidbit. “And I get the feeling Samar and Aram dislike Moore intensely.”

“What about Ress?” Liz watched the man opposite her, lift her leg carefully.

She balked, preventing the move. “What are you doing?” she was suddenly a little awkward having sensed his intent.

“I thought you were college educated...” he motioned accordingly. “Isn’t it self explanatory?”

The woman stared at him blankly.

“This is helping with your injuries, correct?” he smiled benignly. “Should I stop?”

Liz gave the question due process. Within in seconds, she offered her leg tentatively laying it onto his lap.

Red patted the cast approvingly, continuing his efforts.
“Ressler is focused on the job, as always.” Red had long sense accepted the other man’s foibles. “Blind and deaf to what’s happening around him.”

“What’s wrong with this Moore guy?”

“Well, he wanted me in the box, for starters.”

“If he’s new, he probably wouldn’t know—”

“He still wanted me in the box after Samar explained our arrangement.”

“What did you do?” she questioned, moaning slightly as Red had hit a particularly troubling spot, “...Yes, right there.” she was grateful.

The man dropped his head, pleased she was so easily accepting his assistance. He pushed his fingers into the area indicated, working his magic.

“Are you asking if I did something to warrant being placed in the box?” he lifted a steady gaze.

“No, I’m not asking that?” she sat forward, her expression sincere for all of two seconds. “No, wait a minute, of course I’m asking that.”

“I did nothing, was saying hello to Aram as a matter of fact, shook his hand and everything.” Red remembered things his own way. “Don’t worry Lizzy, I can handle Moore without putting a bullet in him.” he pulled a sad face, then brightened. “Samar on the other hand...”

“She really doesn’t like him?” Liz clarified to herself, then shifted about anxiously... “Right here, it aches.” she pointed to her calf area.

Red obediently kneaded the tight muscle harder until she visibly relaxed.

“I’m getting a vibe that Moore doesn’t think much of her either, or maybe women, in general.” Red disdained. “Which makes him a bigger idiot than I thought.”

“What about the other one? Wilson?”

“Young, wet behind the ears.” he had all ready dismissed the man. “Probably lives in his mother’s basement... just like Glen.”

“How young is he?” she relaxed totally into the pillows, her eyes fluttering shut. The man rubbed at her aching foot. The damned cast prevented him reaching vital areas, but what he was doing felt amazing.

“Well, he’s around your age, actually.” Red grinned, her little toes fascinating him. He had always found women’s feet sensual. He cupped her entire foot in his palms, rubbing the coolness and in seconds, the flesh was warmed.

His thoughts turned introspective for a beat, his mood altering.

How that fucker, Carver, could hurt her... could cause her so much pain... Red steamed at the reality. He sat here wishing fervently to kiss the cute little toes. How could any man wish harm of any sort to something so precious, so valued a thing?

Red clenched his jaw, pushing out the anger, instead focusing on the activity he pursued. He marveled how easily her entire foot fit into his hands.
“You think I’m wet behind the ears?”

“No...” he drawled lazily, refusing a smile. “Not anymore.”

“You thought I was!” she was more than incensed.

She pulled her leg away, the man shifting a scolding glance.

Elizabeth considered her options, settling instantly. Red smiled happily as she slowly but surely gave over into his keeping... her other leg.

He eased the sock off her foot, Liz finding the task oddly sensual in nature.

She watched warily for the man’s lips had quivered slightly, but he sat now simply looking at her appendage. She impatiently wiggled her toes, shaking her foot about, loathed to remind him... that he had a job to do.

“Well, yes, you were.” he reminded needlessly. “You had never dealt with my level of criminal activity.”

Well, she couldn’t argue with that. And really, she wasn’t supposed to, being a profiler. “And now, what do you think?”

“I think you’re still very young.”

“In other words, inexperienced.” she took for granted.

“In some things, yes. But you’re learning.” he was quick to mollify. “Lizzy, there’s nothing wrong with not knowing everything.” he motioned to himself. “Even I don’t know all there is to know.”

“Yeah well, you wouldn’t know it.” Liz muttered. “Anyway, aside from them being young and gung ho, how are they working together, do you think?”

“Someone’s going to get killed.” Red prophesied.

“That’s not funny!” she pouted, moving her foot into Red’s warm hand, curling her toes when he pushed into her aching arch.

“It wasn’t meant to be. The dynamics are all off.” he could sense as much. “Samar and Aram listen, they’re on top of their game. Donald, is getting his shit together.” Red mused to himself. “I have to see the other guys in action, but as of right now, they’re a hot mess.”

He bent his head, kissing the tip of her toe as he rubbed his thumbs along the length of her foot. The woman’s head fell back, a long purr of delight escaping her throat.
April 12

When had Red Reddington’s world turned around? The man certainly could not have answered that question.

When had his priorities shifted? He could remember waking nights, his senses tuned into his personal safety. He had become adept at surviving dangerous situations.

These days, he rarely if ever, thought in such terms.

The man turned over in bed, waking slightly as he did. It wasn’t unusual for him to wake frequently during the night; listening, aware. But since sharing his bed with Lizzy, he had been intently focused and conscious only, of the woman. If he was needed, he would know instantly.

Tonight, all was quiet.

Opening his tired eyes, seeing her slight outline in the darkened room, he assured himself of Lizzy’s comfort. Her deep steady breathing alerted him that they had finally found the correct dosage of pain meds, allowing her a deep, restful sleep.

The past few nights had been rough for her. A slight movement, a natural turn in sleep, would wake her instantly. The cast had greatly impeded her comfort. It seemed no position was the correct one, her pain level was just too great.

Each time she issued apologies for waking him almost on the hour, but no matter how he reassured her, she seemed to feel worse. In Red’s mind however, whatever he could do to make her more comfortable, to make the pain less... was his purpose.

He stared at her profile, snuggled into the softness of her pillow. She mewed softly, making his eyes soften at the sound. It was moments like this that made him miss having a full time bed partner. Those little noises only a female could make, her light scent in the bed clothes, sexy innocence cuddled in the softness.

Reaching out, he adjusted the blanket up over her bared shoulder...her body warming the cool set of sheets.

His mouth turned upward, remembering each and every night he crawled into bed with her, what he had said to Ressler when they were stuck in that box.

Have you ever sailed across the ocean Donald, on a sailboat surrounded by sea...

I want to be at the Piazza del Campo in Siena...

To feel the surge of ten race horses go thundering by...
I want another meal in Paris at the L’Ambroisie in the Place de Vosges...

I want another bottle of wine, and then another...

I want the warmth of a woman in a cool set of sheets...

One more night of jazz at the Vanguard...

The warmth of a woman in a cool set of sheets.

A slight trembling of the bed, distracted his thoughts. Sliding his hand closer to her body, he felt the vibration intensify just seconds before she released a shaky breath.

Damn, the pain pill must be wearing off.

Sitting up, he reached for the bed side table, feeling for the pills. His fingertips had just grazed the bottle when she awoke fully.

“I’m awake.” He shook the pill bottle, “I think I’ve become attuned to you.” He broke off when she hissed in pain. His smile dissipated at the woman’s hiss of pain.

Red flipped the low light switch, taking in her pinched face and trembling hand, clenched into a fist.

“Tell me.” Whipping off the sheet, he moved closer, his hand curving to her spine.

She pulled up further into herself, stopping, pushing her abdomen. “Oh, no.” she moaned her realization.

“Lizzy...”

The woman lay perfectly still, mortified. How was she going to get out of this one graciously.

Throwing back her side of the blankets, Red pulled up short, shocked when he saw blood covering the lower side of her bed. Quite a lot of blood actually. Enough that it worried him a little.

“God.” Liz hung her head dejectedly. “I’m so sorry.” she sighed bleakly.

“This is fine, Lizzy.” Red’s deep voice soothed. “Nothing to worry about.” He ran his hand over her abdomen gently. “It happens.”

She covered her eyes, embarrassed beyond belief. “Of all the things...” she was still mortified.

He interrupted, “Don’t worry about it.”

The man rolled off the bed, heading to the bathroom, coming out with a change of sheets.

“You know, this happened to my wife all the time. Not to mention the time her water broke.” he remembered fondly. “Now that, that was memorable.” He glanced at the woman who had not moved, still wrapped up in her misery.

“And since then, it’s happened more often than you’d think. In our line of work, I suppose they get mixed up on dates and forget.” He stated in a blasé manner. “I blame it on jet lag.”

He purposely didn’t mention that when the incident occurred, it wasn’t while his partners were sleeping, but more often, while he was buried between their thighs. Even then, especially then... it never bothered him.

Coming to the head of the bed, he smiled warmly when she grimaced her distaste. “Ugh. I can’t believe this doesn’t gross you out.” she moved out of the sticky mess as best she could, dismayed to see his beautiful sheets in such a state.

He chuckled under his breath. “I find nothing about the female body or it’s workings gross, as you so articulately stated. It’s natural.” Bending to loop her arm around his neck, she backed off.

“Well, it grosses me out.” she pulled the garments away from her flesh, disgusted. “My crutches are right over...”

Rolling his eyes, he bent to his original position, silencing her protests. “And I am right here.”

Walking her to the bathroom, she finally balked. “I can get this from here on... if you stay close.” She wrinkled her nose. “Sorry.”

“Stop saying that, Lizzy.” the man turned abruptly, waving his hand about, breaking into one of his colorful speeches. “I was telling you about when my wife’s water broke.” his eyes met hers for a brief second, filled with mirth.

“Oh, Lizzy. If only you could have seen me then.” he chuckled appreciatively. “You think this is something?” he alluded to her state of being. “I could have sworn that I literally shit my pants. Literally... I mean, I was running around, grabbing bags and her purse and the car keys, all the while truly believing, I had soiled myself. Didn’t know how I was going to break it to her or the doctor.” he glanced over, relieved to see the woman’s mouth quirking gently, her eyes soft and totally vulnerable in a good way.

Liz glanced to her blood stained garments. “Not really enjoying this Red.” she tried to hold her smile, feeling infinitely better now.

“We’ll all look back on it and have a good laugh.” he assured.

“At my expense.” she laughed, gingerly removing the soiled panties, her hand steadied by his shoulder. Red glanced away, allowing the woman a measure of privacy.

Liz had difficulty removing the clothing, but she was rather proud of herself once the task had been completed. She knew held the tails of her shirt, tucked modestly between her legs.

Red bent retrieving the discarded clothing, crossing to the sink, running water before depositing the clothes into the lukewarm basin.

“Oh my God, just throw them away.” She had realized his intent.

The man rinsed the blood from the dark fabric absently. “It’ll come out.” he worked the silk between his fingers. “Believe me, if it’s one thing I know about, it’s how to get blood out of clothes.”
“Jesus...” She squeezed her eyes shut, groaning her embarrassment.

“Lizzy. Stop.” He turned to her, leaning against the sink. “I’m not embarrassed. I’m not put out. I’m not anything.” Pulling the stopper, he let the sink refill, soaking the shorts. “I find nothing about this revolting or disgusting. It’s nothing to be ashamed of and I’m certainly not bothered by the sight of blood, obviously. As a matter of fact...” He broke off abruptly.

The silence was deafening.

“What were you going to say?” she was intrigued.

“Nothing.” he waved it off, continuing his task, totally focused.

“No, please.” the woman held the shirt tighter between her legs. “You were going to say something?” she entreated. “I am interested.”

Crossing his arms, he leaned back against the sink, this time, more comfortably. “I was going to say that I was never bothered by it because I find a woman, during that time, well any time really... arousing.”

“You do?” the surprise was in her voice.

He nodded, “It seems to be the only time a woman lets herself be truly feminine.” He shrugged casually, warming to the topic. “They’re so concentrated on what’s going on with their body that normally strong and capable women could care less about their weight, what they’re wearing or what anyone thinks.”

His smile was genuine. “They want to eat chocolate, cry, and read romance novels. For a week, they tell everyone to go to hell and just be. I find the simplicity of it rather refreshing.”

“You find bloated, crying, bitchy women arousing?”

“Well, there’s more to it than that. But yes, I do.” he chuckled softly.

“Oh, there’s more to it?” Liz teased, but found herself very curious.

“I’m not sure you’re ready for this conversation.” Red forewarned.

“Come on, Red. I’ve bled all over the bed. You’ve washed my panties.” She waved her hands out sideways, “I’d say we’ve reached a highlight, dare I say, milestone, in our relationship.”

“Fine,” he accepted the inevitable. “While most men would steer clear of women at this time of the month, I’d say that they’re missing an opportunity.”

Liz’s brow scowled slightly.

“They’re more open to affection and cuddling. It’s really the only time that you can baby them and they sit back and enjoy it.” he lifted his head defiantly. “Personally, I’ve always enjoyed the mood swings. One minute they’re angry as hell, the next, crying and vulnerable. There’s nothing sexier.”

“You really believe that?” Liz tilted her head, studying him.

“I do. Maybe it’s just that I enjoy women.” he turned introspective for a beat. “I saw my wife give birth to my child or I don’t like seeing women I care for in pain but... it was one of the most beautiful, moving experiences of my entire life.”
He tilted his head, then smiled. “Of course she thought she was at her worst... first thing she asked for was her makeup, then a cheeseburger.” his smile grew. “In my opinion, and I will probably be stoned for this, women should be pampered and cared for and protected... and loved.”

Silence filled the room as Liz contemplated his mood and words. “Well, I don’t feel like stoning you, Red.” she was stunned. “Most men run from the tears and the cramps, but you face it head on. That is something to be admired.”

He rolled his eyes, returning to the basin.

“So, you find it arousing?” she did not want to drop the subject just yet. “That they cuddle? Let down their barriers?”

“Well, that is a big part of it.” he conceded holding up the now cleaned linen examining it closely for flaws. “But mostly it’s because they feel different when you make love.”

“Excuse me?” Liz wasn’t sure if that was too much information.

The man turned his head to seek her out, the knowledgeable eyes resting easily on her face. “Has no one discussed this with you before?”

She was speechless for a spell.

“When you had sex with Tom, didn’t it feel different?” Red’s own curiosity was stirred. He wasn’t about to call what they did, making love, because it wasn’t. “I mean when you were menstruating.”

“We never... I didn’t... the mess...” Liz stumbled through the confession. “I didn’t think he would want to and he never asked or pushed.”

“I see...” Red said quietly, feeling his ire rise a notch. Job or not, that bastard had not been worthy of Lizzy. The man hadn’t been bothered by the mess, rather bothered by the personal aspect of it. “Did he never pleasure you, help you, in any other way besides sex?”

“He never came right out and asked to or hinted towards...” She felt her face flaming, “I just assumed he was being a guy, had an aversion to...”

Why was she even supplying this personal information? She knew why! Because she had asked the same of Red and he had answered.

“Did you ever masturbate during your period?”

“Red!” her mouth fell agape.

“I thought we could discuss personal things.” his eyes made her feel like a school girl suddenly.

“Well, I didn’t. Okay,” she was a little resentful that she was not half as sophisticated as he. “Mostly because I felt like hell.” she admitted. “Who would want to do such a thing?”

“I can think of a million reasons why you might.” he had a very difficult time not laughing at the expression on her face. “An orgasm or two would have helped with the cramping.” Grabbing a cloth, he wet it under the hot water, handing it to her.

The woman accepted the offering, reeling, trying desperately to regain her balance.

“When a woman is aroused, she warms. Her inner core heats and secretes fluid, as you well know.” He waved an artistic hand. “During her period, she’s steaming. Hot. On top of her arousal, she has the blood flow, allowing for a well lubricated ride. And inside...” He closed his eyes, envisioning the warm place. “It’s more swollen, cushioned. The clitoris more sensitive. Orgasms are normally more intense.”

He opened his eyes, staring at her, “There’s nothing like sex on a regular basis. But when a woman has her period... the experience is amplified tremendously. For both partners.” Holding out his hand, he waited for her to give over the washcloth.

“I suppose on some level, I knew that.” Folding the cloth as best she could, she reluctantly gave it back. “I guess we’re taught growing up that it’s a private thing.” she was being tutored by the master and she knew it. “I didn’t know men thought about it that way though.”

“I can only speak for myself. Most men are scared by it. I am not.” He rummaged through the cabinets, humming in victory. He found what he had been searching for. “Here, take these.” He handed over two white pills and a glass of water.

She popped the pills in her mouth, swallowing. “What are they?” she asked.

“Anti-inflammatory and pain relief.” he muttered, rummaging around in the cupboards. “Mr. Kaplan didn’t bring any supplies that I can find...” he was disappointed.

“I may not have had any.” she picked up on his meaning. “I’m short on ideas here, you?”

“I have some thick bandages that may suffice, so you have something to use until I get back from the store tomorrow.” he waved the bandages about. “I always have these on hand in case I get shot. Why are people always shooting at me?”

He tossed the bandages back inside the cabinet. “You know if anything, why don’t you just go with out anything tonight? It might be better for you right now.”

“What?” Naked from the waist down, sharing a bed, with Red Reddington. She could feel her blood pressure rising. “We’ll... uh... be right back where we started if I don’t...”

“Just trust me.” he helped her to the bathroom bench. “Do you mind if I...?” He gestured to the toilet.

“Seems only fair if you ask me. I’ve had to go in front of you.” She was proud of herself, steadying her voice like that. Because inside, she was nervous as hell.

“Sweetheart, I’ve been stripped naked by total strangers...” Liz’s expression fell drastically as she tried to assimilate such a concept. The man shook his head, grimacing slightly. “You don’t want to know. I’ve showered and pissed in front of a hundred men.” He turned to the toilet, “Nothing bothers me anymore.” With that, he did just as he had been speaking of, happily relived by the sound of it.

She hopped to the sink, searching desperately for her toothbrush, anything to distract herself. She fought the urge to glance up to the mirror for all she was worth, acutely aware that she herself... stood there in nothing but Red’s shirt.

“Nothing?” she muttered her rising panic.

“Humm?” he finished his business, turning slightly.

“Nothing bothers you?” her mind came to the rescue for once. “Not one thing?”
He flushed the toilet, coming to the sink. She rinsed her mouth, placing the brush back in it’s holder, turning her eyes to his averted profile.

“I’m thinking.” He washed his hands then snatched his own toothbrush. After a few seconds, he said, “I’m not too fond of people vomiting on me.”

“Eww.” she had not liked the turn of events. “Do I even want to know?”

“Probably not.” He said around his toothbrush.

He thought about the last time it had happened. An acquaintance’s daughter had been kidnaped over an arms deal gone wrong. In the process of torturing some bad guy for the whereabouts of the girl... apparently, electricity and exposed live nerve endings did not go well together. But he had retrieved the girl, so it ended well, considering.

A win-win situation.

Finishing up, he turned to her. “Ready?”

She nodded, holding her arm aloft, ready for his steadying aide. They hobbled out slowly, he matching his steps to her’s.

It took only a moment to change the sheets because the woman assisted. She figured it was the least she could do.

“Can I ask you something?” She had gathered the nerve. “It’s actually kind of personal. I probably shouldn’t...” she crinkled her nose, “...never mind.”

“Lizzy, you can ask me anything you like.” he threw the last remaining pillow onto the bed. “I can’t promise I’ll always have the answer or the correct one, but I will answer, no matter how personal.”

Twisting the throw blanket in her hands nervously, she hesitated, “Do a lot of the women you know really like to do that?” Her curiosity won out over her embarrassment.

“Specify?” He sat on the bed, facing her.

“Have sex during their period?”

He laughed, “I’ve had some demand it.”

“And you didn’t mind, at all?” she was fascinated.

“It was my pleasure to serve.” He grinned, having retrieved a heavy towel from the bathroom. “Now I’m going to ask you something personal. I’m pretty sure of the answer, but my curious nature demands I ask.” He folded the towel in half, placing it on the bed.

She nodded, readying herself. “All right. It’s only fair.”

“How many lovers have you had?” he pierced her with knowledgeable eyes.

She hesitated visibly, then forged courageously ahead. “Two in college... then Tom.”

“That’s what I thought and it explains so much.” he fluffed a nearby pillow.

“Well, you try having Sam as your dad and see how well you make out.” She defended herself.
Red’s lips twisted slightly for the unintentional pun. She tried to keep the irritation from her voice, but it was damned hard.

The older man smiled, knowing full well how watchful Sam had been, especially since he had Red in his corner. Lizzy had been as pure as snow until both men had agreed to back off and let her have breathing room in college.

They would have been complete hypocrites if they didn’t let her spread her wings, as it were, during a time of experimentation.

Which didn’t mean Red hadn’t vetted her dates. He had rid her of two losers before letting the one that had apparently slept with her stick around, if only because he had been good enough to actually woo the girl over a slew of dates before trying anything.

“No need to get upset. I just...” he soothed her ruffled feathers, “I have a hard time wrapping my mind around a beautiful thirty year old woman being so sexually neglected. Now I understand why.”

“What’s to understand?” she demanded, still smarting from his smug tone.

“Two of them were boys who could have found a hole in a wall and received the same gratification. And the other was hired to infiltrate your life.” He shook his head, disgusted. “Any affection or attention to your needs from any of them was minimal, I’m sure.”

“Why does it bother you so much?” she was intrigued because it clearly did.

“Because you deserve better. All women deserve better.” he snapped, instantly regretting the retort. “We can talk about this later, you need to rest.”

She settled on the bed, pulling her shirt down. Holding her breath when a cramp ripped through her mid-section, she pushed hard into her abdomen.

“I feel like hell.”

Red rubbed her hip, then leaned over, feeling beside the bed, pulling out a heating pad. “This will help.” Lifting the blankets, he placed it against her stomach, raising her knee, setting a pillow beneath it. “The pills will kick in shortly, just try and relax.”

He turned out the light, then climbed in the bed behind her, scooting forward.

Reaching out in the dark, he rubbed long strokes over her back until he reached the bottom of her spine, pushing into the tight muscle with his thumb, repeating the action even after the spasms lessened.

Slowly but surely, the combined heat and soothing massage allowed her to relax. She yawned sleepily after a time. “That feels so good.” she murmured contentedly.

He absently scratched his fingers over her back, wondering, fantasizing, what it would feel like to touch her bare skin... intimately. Or more to the point, would she ever want his for something other than that of a care taker.

And if it ever happened, how would it come about? Would she be just coming out of the pool, the one she had been staring at impatiently, wanting so desperately to dive in to the inviting depths.

He had a few depths he wanted to dive into as well.
Or maybe, he could aid her in the removal of a certain red dress after they had returned home from a party.

Just once, he would love to bed her. To touch her bare skin then kiss it, taste it. Would it ever happen for them? Would his greatest wish ever come true?

“Hey?” she mumbled sleepily.

“Uh hmm?”

“Where’s your cat?”

He chuckled under his breath, amused by her wit. A few moments later, her breath evened out into sleep.

Chapter End Notes

If there were any typos or anything of that nature in this, it's all on me. Not Miss Beta.
April 12

Elizabeth found her cart missing and her crutches no where in sight. Great... I need to pee.

She remembered she had left the crutches in the sitting room. Silas had taken her cart to change the battery. But it was right beside her bedside when she went to sleep.

“Red?” She called out. “Anybody... somebody?”

“Coming.” She heard the deep resonate voice answer from another nearby room.

The man came in, dressed in dark jeans and long sleeved black vee neck shirt. She hadn’t realized his arms were that defined. The sleeves stretched across the muscled foreclosure and biceps in a rather nice manner. As did his jeans, showing off his defined thighs.

And chest hair... Red had chest hair.

The men she’d been with and Tom, had been smooth, with just a dusting of fine hair. But Red appeared to have a wealth of the downy thickness.

She wondered what it would feel like brushing against her skin? Was it itchy? Or was it as soft as it appeared to be? Would it tickle or tantalize?

Stop it, Lizzy.

“Are you slumming it today... I mean as much as you can in two hundred dollar jeans?” her eyes flicked the objects once more, attempting to appear indifferent.

He helped her out of the bed. “You don’t like it?” he glanced down his torso.

“No, I like it. You always look great.” She caught the enthusiasm in her voice, having hoped to sound sophisticated. She witnessed the slow smile spread across his mouth, deflating somewhat.

Why was she always opening her big mouth around him. “Where’s my scooter?” she looked around aimlessly, desperately trying for a change of topic.

“Dembe and Silas have it.” the steady gaze still held his amusement.

“Why?”

“I’m assuming they’re doing something to it.”

“What are they doing now?” she instantly was wary. “You make them stop.”

“I figured they were just adding new stickers to it.” Red licked his lips absently. “Did you need something?”

“Well I have to... uh...” she motioned accordingly, the man picking up on the ‘hint’.
“Piss...” he supplied readily.

“Well, crudely put, but yes.” she tsked her disapproval.

Red crouched slightly so she could loop her arm around his neck. They made their way slowly forward.

“I hate to bother you, I know you’re busy.” she began her campaign.

“Everybody has to piss Lizzy.”

“Not that.” she sighed heavily. “I need a few things. I know it’s a hassle...”

“I already went shopping.” he halted her narrative, nodding to the bags still laying on the counter across the way.

She hopped to the counter, rummaging through the loot. “You bought all of this?”

“Why does everybody find it odd when I do normal every day activities?” Red was stumped.

“I can picture you doing a lot of things, but buying tampons in bulk is not one of them.” she smiled secretively.

“The guards may love you, but enough to make a tampon run?” he grinned at the thought. “I also got you some new books. They’re on your bedside table.”

She finished up business, returning to the sink, starting her morning routine. “Anything happening today?”

“As far as I know,” he called from the closet, “barring any unexpected crisis, I’ll be here today.”

She washed up, dressing quickly. “All done.”

Red entered, “Where do you want to go?” he waved his hands, asking her preference.

“The bed’s fine.”

She rounded the corner of the doorway, pulling up short. Her brow furrowed quizzically.

“Why is there a cat on the bed.”

Red sighed, “No, the joke goes... a cat walked into a bar.”

The woman quizzical stare transferred to the man, she lifted her brows meaningfully, crooking her head in the needed direction.

The man followed her line of vision, his expression altering drastically. “Oh my God.” he made to leave her side, but she halted the action.

“No, no.” Liz gently approached with his assistance, her expression softening. “Oh, hey...” she climbed up on the mattress, holding her hand out to the furry animal, “that’s your cat.”

“You asked where it was last night.” Red sat down beside Liz, watching the animal rub lovingly up against the woman. “Probably out whoring, if I know her.”

Liz giggled as the cat rubbed it’s face against hers. “That’s a mean thing to say. What’s its name?”
“Keres.” Red shook his head woefully for the cat’s unusual behavior.

“What a pretty name.” Liz made little kissing noises at Keres, and the furry creature licked her nose, making her giggle again. “What does it mean?”

“Evil spirit.” Red supplied, his eyes narrowing at the feline.

Liz chuckled quietly, then rubbed the cat’s belly, eliciting a loud purring sound. “Well, she doesn’t seem evil at all to me.”

Red cocked his brow, “Really?” he lifted his arm and held his palm out towards the cat.

The cat sprang from it’s relaxed position charging forward before Liz could blink. It attacked Red, wrapping itself around his arm, kicking it’s hind legs ferociously against the man’s forearm, biting the web of his hand, growling a satisfied gnawing sound.

“You little shit…” Red grumbled, grimacing slightly. Liz tried very hard to hold her amusement, her mouth tightening, biting the inner part of her lip to stave the laughter.

“Yes…” Red sighed, “she’s such a joy. So loving. Not the least bit evil.” he rolled his eyes, then pinched the cat’s neck and it stopped instantly, like he’d flipped the cat switch to ‘off’.

“Behave…” he rumbled to the animal, “and don’t you do that with her.” he scolded, pointing at Liz.

“You think she understands you?” Liz enquired.

“I know she does.” Red evil-eyed the cat. “Put your hand out.”

Liz lifted her arm like Red had done, watching the cat’s bottom start to shake in anticipation of it’s attack.

“Don’t you dare, you little bitch.” Red hissed, making the cat hunker down. “Lizzy may very well be the only friend you have.” he warned.

The man reached out, petting Liz’s hand and wrist. “You love on Lizzy.”

The cat stood up and stretched, then yawned big before pushing it’s head into her hand, accepting the fingers rubbing into it’s fur, making Red relax.

“I blame Dembe for that.” he pronounced knowingly. “He thought she needed to know how to fight, should she come up against a bigger enemy in an alley way.” Red scoffed. “But I believe she was just born evil and feel deeply for whatever she encounters.”

Liz chuckled, lazily stroking the cat then leaned into her pillows, finding the heating pad still warm.

“Hey, where did you find one that doesn’t shut off? She pointed to the warm pad. “Mine always shuts off after an hour, where did you get this?”

“That one shuts off, too.” he stretched his forearm more comfortably, settling it close beside her thigh, leaning into her. “I woke up during the night and turned it back on.”

“You did?” she was touched by the gesture.

“It helped, didn’t it?”

It had actually, though she was the one who normally had to wake up to switch it back on. For her to have slept through the night, he had to have kept waking frequently to make sure it stayed warm. Come to think of it, he did a lot that was abnormal, to her way of thinking. In a good way...

He could hit the hamper, cooked, cleaned up after himself, he even put the toilet seat down.

“Are you always like this?” she tried to keep the amazement from her voice.

“Like what?” he was genuinely puzzled.

She reiterated her thoughts to him. His smile growing as she went.

“Sweetheart, do you forget that I was in the Navy and also married.”

“Yeah well, I was married and Tom couldn’t hit the hamper even if he was standing next to it.”

“Though now that I think about it, it rarely ever worked. That woman was always incredibly high strung.”

Red ordered a substantial breakfast to be sent to Liz then got down to the affairs of the day. He set up a new business deal with the people from the South, arranged a meeting and outlined a detailed plan for the execution of what he had in mind.

Two hours later, he glanced at his watch then went to check on his Ward and was rather shocked to find Elizabeth sitting on the couch, book in hand, cheeks wet with tears.

“What’s this all about?” He sat next to her, genuinely concerned. He reached, wiping her face with his thumbs.

“Nothing...” Her bottom lip quivered, more tears leaking from her eyes.

“Why are you crying?” He asked, handing her a tissue.

“Because a fictional character in a romance novel has a better love life than I do.” she sniffled, taking the offered tissue “And I may be a bit hormonal.” she added needlessly.

Red was having the hardest time holding his grin. This is why he loved women.

She came willingly when he pulled her into his arms, “You will find a man worthy of being with you one day, Lizzy.” he soothed expertly. “Someone who loves you more than life itself. You’re beautiful and smart, and more men then you realize, do notice.” it was assured. “You just haven’t been ready to see it yourself.”

“You’re just saying that to make me feel better.” She sniffled into his chest.

“Ressler and Aram both have a crush on you. Hell, even your Barista likes you.” he raked the stray strand of dark hair behind her ear. “You weren’t ready and put off vibes to them that you didn’t have any interest in a romantic life, whether you were aware of doing so or not.”

“I did?” She did recall thinking that she didn’t want to love again, didn’t want a man smothering her. But she didn’t think she had consciously sent out any warnings to the men she encountered. “I never said or did anything...”

“Men are completely useless when it comes to remembering a shopping list, but they do know when they shouldn’t approach a woman they really like.”

“Guys approach women in bars all the time.” She laid her head on his shoulder, talking into his chest.

“For sex, not a relationship.” he corrected. “Aram and Donald are the type of men to want more than a quick fling, especially with a woman like you.” she fiddled with his trouser leg, just above his knee, her nail drawing a zigzag figure back and forth, over and over. “If you don’t believe me, ask them out on a date.”

“I’m not interested in them like that. They’re my...” she searched for the word. “They’re like family to me now.”

Red felt a flood of relief. Not that she wouldn’t or couldn’t be interested in someone else, but to see her with either man would be difficult.

“They’ll both be very disappointed to hear that.” he patted her arm consolingly. “He’ll come, Lizzy. The man you’re looking for could be staring you right in the face and you don’t want to see it yet.”

he generalized. “Maybe now, with your eyes wide open and hopeful, he’ll come to you.”

She pulled back, wiping off his jacket. “Sorry. I messed up your coat.”

“It’s fine.” He wiped the last of the tears off her face, smiling at her. “You want some chocolate now?” He snickered when she nodded morosely.

Liz had heard Dembe and Red return over an hour ago after a quick trip to the Post Office. While the man did not make a habit of coming to her directly, it was odd when he didn’t show his face within the first twenty minutes.

Something must be wrong.

Easing from the bed, she grabbed her crutch, starting off slowly but confidently as she moved out of their room and down the hallway. She hoped like hell Red was in his office because this, walking with one leg on the left side and broken arm on the right, was tiring.

She eased the door open, sticking her head in slowly. “Are you in here?” she called out softly.

She pushed the door open, finding the man sitting at his desk, his head laying on his folded arms. “You okay?” She asked, nearing him cautiously.

When he didn’t answer, she hobbled closer still, finding him fast asleep. She glanced at the pictures and paperwork beneath his reclined form.

“Red?” She touched the back of his head, stroking down the soft slope to his neck.

He jerked awake, raising his head out of the cradle of his arms. His eyes cleared instantly, something clicking behind the intelligent gaze. He stared at her silently for a long beat.

“You okay?” It was unlike him to sleep in the middle of the day.

“I’m fine.” He glanced about his desk, “I have to look these over. I promised Samar to call her back.”
“Samar can wait an couple of hours.” she was certain. “And anyway, I may need help getting back.”

He stood quickly, pushing his chair out of the way. Instantly concerned like she knew he would be, which is why she lied about needing help. Now, all she had to do was get him in the bedroom and get him to stay.

“You shouldn’t have walked this far.” he scolded.

“I was worried when you didn’t come in and hover like a mother hen.” She teased, enjoying his low chuckle.

They had only taken a couple of steps, when Liz stepped wrong, sending a hot lancing pain shooting up her leg.

She gasped painfully, her hand grasping his arm, her nails biting into the warm flesh.

“What the fuck?” He ducked his head, seeing her scrunched face, full of pain, instantly alarmed. “What happened?” he searched her person religiously for any sign of distress.

The woman gritted her teeth, her hand still locked in a death grip around his forearm. She tried releasing her nails from the bare skin, but couldn’t get her hand to function, fighting the searing pain for all she was worth.

It literally took her breath from her body. She was trying to articulate some sort of response, but none materialized.

The next thing she knew, she was cradled in his arms and they were headed down the hallway.

He turned sideways, maneuvering her easily through the door. He placed her on the bed, several things happening in succession. He placed a pillow under her foot, reached for her pills and a bottle of water, handing them both to her... all the while, his face etched with stress.

The deep ache started to fade, her world focusing into clarity.

Red, his arms braced on either side of her, was staring down at her, concern in the troubled eyes. “Is it easing off now?”

She nodded, as he stroked her temple. “You lay still. I’m going to get some...”

She grabbed his tie as he made to take his leave, “Stay.” she whispered the request.

“Lizzy...” He sighed, “We really should–”

“Stay.”

His tired eyes softened, as he remembered his promise to another woman. He found himself nodding his acquiescence, however.

He found he could deny this woman nothing.

Stripping himself of his tie and vest, he kicked off his shoe, sitting down on his side of the bed.

“You’ve been pretty tired lately.” She said, inching closer to him, rolling to her side.

“We had two back to back trips, and Ressler keeps calling me on the hour. No one has had much sleep.” He faced her. “I’m not positive, but I think Dembe fell asleep against the foyer wall when we walked through the door... he still may be there.”

“Well, come on then.” She reached up, flicking the lights off. “Let’s take a nap.”

“You don’t have to stop reading on my account.” He picked up the book that was laying between them, handing it to her. “I can, and have, slept surrounded by a barrage of bombs... and my ex-mother-in-law’s grating voice.”

She took the book, laying it behind her. “You’ve led such an interesting life. Now, shh.” She laid her hand over his arm, stroking the thick muscle.

Red smiled sleepily, closing his eyes.

Within seconds, the man’s deep breathing eased the woman’s troubled mind. She lay her head against his shoulder, her eyes closing as well.

The low vibration woke Red. Reaching under the pillows, he grabbed the offending phone, just barely holding back from throwing it against the wall when he realized it was Lizzy’s.

He stabbed the answer button, growling into the phone, “What?”

“I need to speak to Elizabeth.” A faint voice answered back, muffled by background noise.

Red became fully alert, recognizing the voice. “You know, when I told you to not see her again, that did not mean phone calls were an acceptable form of communication.”

“Why do you have her phone?”

“I want to talk to her.” Tom’s tone was adamant.

“Red, who is it?” Liz awakened, stirring slightly.

“Go back to sleep, sweetheart.” Red held the phone away, his tone completely altered.

“Was that her?” Tom demanded. “Put her on the damn phone.”

Liz looked at the man, then the phone.

“You are not talking to her.” Red stated quietly.

“Is it Tom?” Liz lifted to her elbow, her expression unreadable.

Red held out the phone, giving Liz the chance to make the decision, wondering what she would do.

He didn’t want her to speak to the younger man, but that was not his decision.

He was inordinately pleased when she shook her head negatively, laying back into the pillow.

“Obviously, you have nothing to say that could be of any interest to her.” Red felt a surge of pride.

“So what? You two are sleeping together now?” it was disdain. “I should have seen that coming. I knew you’d try and get between her legs at some point, I just didn’t realize she’d be such a—”
“Finish that sentence and I won’t hesitate to put a fucking bullet in you next time I see you.” Red stated all too quietly. “And rest assured, it will be in a most vital area.”

“If you had really wanted to, why didn’t you last time?” Tom stated sarcastically.

“I thought it might upset Lizzy, but I’m finding that perhaps, that isn’t the case anymore.” he smiled pleasantly, relaxing his head onto the crook of his arm.

“Does she know? Have you told her?” Tom asked.

“Have I told her that I hired you to protect her and that you went behind my back and started working for Berlin and then married her because you’re a heartless prick?” Red glanced over at the woman whose large blue eyes stared back at him blankly. “Yes, I just did... haven’t had the chance to before now. Thank you for reminding me.”

“You’re a bastard.” Tom spat.

“I’m a bastard?” Red nodded slightly. “I’m not the one that beat the hell out of his wife. And let’s not forget the charming moment you held a gun to her head.”

“She broke my fucking thumb!” Tom defended his actions peevishly.

“That’s not all she should have done to you.” the older man assured. “Now, what have you gotten into, from which you need her help extracting yourself.” Red held up a warning finger. “Which isn’t going to happen, by the way.”

“Damn Reddington,” Tom seethed, “put her on the fucking phone.”

“She doesn’t want to speak with you.” Red’s voice held a finality Tom disliked intensely. “And before you ask, I did offer the phone to her.” he pushed off the bed, sitting up.

“She’s done, J...” the man taunted. “Or perhaps, do you prefer Christopher?”

“What?” Tom was visibly thrown.

“I suggest you don’t contact her again.” he reached to his side, helping Lizzy into a sitting position beside himself. “And just so I’m perfectly clear. You are not to call, text, see, write or try any other forms of communication from here on out.” Red warmed to his task.

“If you so much as walk on the same side of the street as her... I will kill you.” There was something chilling about the casually stated warning. “Do you understand me?”

The sound of the dial tone in Red’s ear was the only reply given. “I’ll take that as a ‘yes’.” He set the phone aside, waiting for the explosion.

“What did he say?”

Red knew to what she alluded, be he evaded the enquiry. “You heard most of what was said Elizabeth.”

“What did he say that made you so angry.”

“Just the sound of his voice pisses me off.”

“Red...”
“He was about to make an unkind remark about you, and I didn’t want to hear it.”

“What kind of—”

“Elizabeth, let it go.” Red fumed.

Liz replayed the conversation in her mind. She could pretty well guess what Tom had said.

“Oh, that’s rich! Coming from him!” Liz laughed sarcastically. “Especially given he was screwing around when...” She clenched her fists, reigning in her temper.

“He’s an asshole. He was just trying to get a rise out of me because I wouldn’t give him what he wanted.” he cupped her head consolingly. “Don’t let it bother you, all right.”

She took a deep breath, then released it slowly, nodding.

“Why did you hire Tom?”

“To protect you.”

“Did you tell him to get close to me?”

“Absolutely not.” Red’s voice was firm. “I hired him through a mutual acquaintance, got him into the college and paid for his education.” he turned to her, his expression an earnest one. “Aside from getting an education, he was supposed to watch out for you from a distance. Not to interfere.”

“So what happened?”

“I was in Hong Kong for a couple of weeks getting regular updates that you were safe. Then he changed, was evasive.” Red told the truth. “I came back immediately and found the two of you cozy on a coffee shop couch.”

“Why didn’t you do something?”

“Well, I did fire him.”

“But that was it?”

“At first, his infatuation with you seemed genuine.” Red remembered it as a conflicted time. “It wouldn’t be the first time a bodyguard has fallen for a client.” the man shrugged. “I watched from afar, you seemed happy. I backed off.” it was succinctly stated. “Who better for you to have fallen in love with than the man I hired to protect you.”

“When did you...”

“I heard information about you that could have only been obtained in... intimate circumstances.” Red glanced away, wondering how much more to say on the matter. “I knew he had to be working for someone else. I watched him, people he met, and gained information. Finally found who he was contracted through.”

“I still don’t see why you didn’t step in.”

“I did. I stopped a lot of plans they had for you. I also stopped different groups from getting hold of you.” Red set the record straight. “Oddly, leaving you with Tom at that moment, was safer because if there was anything he had to do, it was keep you alive.”
“What changed?”

“I came into the picture.” he stated simplistically. “After I gained more allies, I knew I was in a place to go directly for who had hired Tom.” he held her eyes. “It wasn’t until I showed up that Tom got nervous. I was hoping he would foul up and go to his boss.” he cocked a brow. “And in a way, he did.”

“I want your word that you didn’t tell him at any point to get involved with me.”

“Then have it. I would never do something as distasteful as that.”

“Since you’ve given me no other reason to date, I’m going to trust what you say.” she decided.

“Please don’t make me regret it.” Liz said softly, her hand smoothed the blanket near his, then she hooked her fingers over his thicker one.

Red gently rubbed her skin with his thumb. She flipped her hand over, lacing her fingers through his. Having always been the one to initiate the contact, it meant a great deal to him that she had taken the initiative this time.

“I won’t.” his eyes softened, lifting their laced hands to his mouth, kissing the small fingers. “I promise.”

Later that night, after dinner, a lively debate ensued, over the pros and cons of whether Ressler would score with this latest conquest. Everyone at the Blacksite was gossiping about the issue.

Samar had let it slip, purposely, that the young agent was yet again, trying out his luck in the crap shoot of life laughingly referred to as ‘love’.

The camaraderie was interrupted by a communique from Silas.

Dembe shielded the radio, his bulky frame making a hasty retreat to a nearby corner of the large room.

Red watched his friend closely, his senses alert and active.

“It is nothing.” Dembe assured, smiling, as he returned to the small group. “I shall return shortly.”

Red folded his arms stretching out his legs underneath the table, his eyes trained carefully on the large man’s back as Dembe exited the room.

“Ressler will make it to second base.” the black man called over his shoulder.

Red shifted his eyes to Lizzy. “Which means something entirely different in his world than ours. Second base in Dembe’s world, is a bit further along... so good for Donald.”

The woman was suddenly tense, her present situation always called to mind. Lurking, just under the surface.

“Relax, Lizzy.” Red had noticed the change in her demeanor.

“You think something’s wrong?” she asked anxiously.

“I don’t, no.” Red reassured. “And if there is, you’ll be fine.”
“I want my weapon back.” she had been thinking along those lines for days now. “I would just feel more comfortable.”

“Don’t you think Diane and Helen will find it odd to see you strapped?”

“If they work for you, they shouldn’t.”

“I’ll get it for you before we go to bed.” he lifted his glass in mock salute.

Red tensed as a sound approached, growing louder as it neared. The man relaxed totally, the trilling of a bell bringing a smile to his lips.

Dembe came into view, grinning madly, astride the infamously missing cart.

Red shook his head woefully seeing the end product of the guards’ handy work.

Gone was the factory black and gray plastic. Instead it was replaced by flames running along the sides and seat. A bell you could thumb was on the handle bar. And of course, new bumper stickers.

Keep honking, I’m reloading
Where am I going, and why am I in this HANDBASKET?
Drive it like you stole it

“Very funny.” Liz stuck her tongue out at Dembe as she took in all the new artwork.

Chapter End Notes

My Beta mentioned that the timeline had not been established for this fic.

I’m sure you, being the intelligent people you are, have picked up that this is an AU. But maybe aren’t aware when I went AU in the series.

In my fic - this all happens during season 2 around the episodes ‘T. Earl King’ and ‘Vanessa Cruz’.

Red hasn’t been shot. Liz hasn’t killed Connolly. And Liz had never been to Red’s flat and saw his cat. In the first couple chapters, I took care of that. When Red was in Italy, he asked her to feed his cat. She didn’t know he had a cat, and out of that hopefully, came some cute dialogue.

Guess who edited it out accidentally? I did. I didn’t notice until the other night I had not pasted the entire chapter correctly.

I am now double checking everything I do to make sure what is supposed to be there, is there. Let’s hope I do it right, from now on. (Yeah, don’t hold your breath. I will most likely screw up again)

Liz awoke the following morning to find a note on her bedside table informing her that Red had received a late night call and had taken off for Boston.

Looking back to her book, she stared at the sentence she’d been attempting to read for a little over twenty minutes now, still not comprehending any of it.

She worried about Red and Dembe. When that had begun she had no idea. She had never really thought about it until she found Red asleep at his desk. But now she realized, that while he attended to his own business, he also worked the Blacklist.

A Blacklist she was no longer privy to, given that a call to Samar and Ressler had proven pointless. Everyone seemed especially evasive these days. Only Aram had been talkative, delivering the latest Post Office gossip before he had been called away. But even he had seemed to guard his words carefully.

She felt especially restless today. Either Cooper or Red was making sure that she was purposely kept out of the loop.

When she got back, she was going to give them a piece of her mind. Or, if anything, let them know that if they had been in her position, she wouldn’t have left them completely in the dark about every little thing.

Red’s voice startled her out of her revelry. “Did you get my messa...” He hesitated, frowning at her hard. “What’s wrong?”

“What makes you think anything is wrong?” She frowned right back, stubbornly crossing her arms over her chest.

“Restless?” He asked, sitting beside her, laying his hat on her side table.

“I don’t know what’s going on at the Post Office. Everybody is shutting me out. And–” She inhaled, opening her mouth once again ready to spout off her grievances, when Red gently placed his fingers over her lips.

“Why won’t you show me anything you’re working on?” she managed around the thick objects, much to his amusement.

“Because Harold forbid you to work.” Red informed her, knowing very well what she was thinking. He casually removed his fingers.

“You are so lyin–” she sighed, then her shoulders slumped. “Cooper really won’t let me work?”

“No, he said you are to take time. And you should. You haven’t taken a vacation since this started.” Red reminded her of her own thoughts. “And while it isn’t an exotic beach locale, it is still down time, which you need.”

Liz rubbed the tension from her neck and shoulders.

“No one is shutting you out on purpose or to spite you.” He pushed her hair behind her ear, smiling when she leaned into the touch. “Why don’t you call in a little bit and invite your team out for dinner?”

“You think?” she perked up instantly. “They’ll be too busy, won’t they?” she asked uncertainly.

“I think they’ll enjoy the break.” Red knew his words to be true. “Besides, it will be good for you to get out for a while.”

She studied the man’s face religiously for a long beat. The lines around his eyes seemed more pronounced and there was a grim set to his mouth that had not been there earlier.

“You’re working too hard.”

“I never work too hard.” he scoffed.

“You are. You’re gonna crash, Red.” she forewarned. “You were so heavily asleep at your desk, that when I called your name, you didn’t hear it.” the fact troubled the woman. “I walked into the room and it didn’t alert you? That’s not like you.” she knew for a fact.

“I don’t sense danger when you walk into a room.”

“Maybe you should. There were sharp objects on the desk.” she quipped, then sobered. “Take a break, before you collapse out of exhaustion.”

“I will take a break soon, Mark’s party is–”

“Is more than a month away!” she persisted. “I’m worried for both you and Dembe. You guys can’t keep up this pace.”

Red brushed the hair from her shoulder. “I’ll try, Lizzy.” he explained patiently. “But you have to understand, there is a lot I have to do before we go to Mark’s.” he smiled gently at her. “To get the time off, to keep the interruptions to a minimum, certain things must be accomplished.”

“Will you at least try to get more sleep?” she suggested. “Just give the names to me and I’ll pass them off to the team.”

“And this is you resting, correct?”

“I’m broken in a couple of places, not incapacitated.” she reasoned logically. “My mind is rested and functioning now. Let me help.”

“I’ll think about it.” he placated.

The team was just as excited about the dinner as she, herself. It took the woman longer to get ready than she had anticipated for her anxiously awaited night out.

“Do I look okay?” She surveyed herself in the mirror, checking the wounds on her neck and head. They were mostly faded, but to Elizabeth, they stood out like a neon sign, a constant reminder of a night she would just as soon forget.
“You look beautiful. Would you stop worrying.” Red chuckled appreciatively. “It’s time to go anyway. You don’t want to be late.”

As they reached the front door, she realized that she couldn’t even remember coming through it. What an odd sensation. She had only seen a select few rooms of this magnificent home. She suddenly felt out of her depth, discombobulated... apprehensive...afraid. Scared to death, actually.

Red halted his steps, feeling her hesitation.

“I’m okay, I just realized I haven’t stepped out this door since I’ve been here. I guess I’m a little nervous.” she shook her head slightly, the silken strands of her hair swishing gently this way and that. “Silly, huh?”

“Everybody feels a little out of place after a simple vacation, let alone a traumatic experience such as the one you experienced.” he said. “You’ll be fine once we get in the car.”

She leaned into him, needing the added support. Dembe stood at the car, his smile a welcoming one. She managed the steps, then glanced back at the house.

“Wow... it’s gorgeous!” She observed her surroundings, noting a six foot tall decorative iron fence and a gate blocking the drive. The two story house was lit top to bottom, light streaming from gigantic picture windows.

A cobblestone driveway stretched in either direction from the south side of the palatial residence to the north. A brightly lit entranceway welcomed any fortunate visitor.

There was a decorative wall lined by neatly trimmed shrubs, which ran the entire length of the home. Two gigantic urns overflowed with lush ivy on either end of the structure.

The house literally took her breath away. “Red, this house is simply amazing.”

Her words pleased him immensely.

Once through the gate, she gripped Red’s hand in hers, her agitation resurfacing. Squeezing her hand back, he let her fidget and fiddle with his all she needed.

He watched her in silent contemplation. He hadn’t realized until just now, as she worked out her anxiety, that he was her worry stone.

With each passing block, he felt that tension bleed from her, the grip loosened. Until they hit a populated strip, indicating the were nearing their destination, where as the slender fingers reaffirmed their hold.

He leaned closer, inhaling, his eyes closing. “You smell fantastic.”

Liz suddenly actually felt beautiful, seeing herself mirrored in the man’s gaze, her anxiety melting into oblivion.

He had bolstered her mood with one simple gesture. She took a steadying breath, smiling brightly for him as they pulled up to a intimately lit, posh restaurant.

Red went around to her side, waving away the valet, before helping her out. Leaning back into the vehicle, he grabbed her crutch, mumbling something to Dembe before closing the door.

He helped her inside, bypassing the hostess all together. Liz looked around, searching aimlessly for her friends. Her mood lowered when she could not locate them anywhere.

“I don’t see them.” She frowned.

“That’s because I got you a private room.” Red replied, guiding her through the main dining area. “I assumed that you would want to talk freely about work and what not, and you couldn’t really do that out here.”

They reached a door, which Red opened without hesitation to find her team sitting stiffly inside.

“Hi guys.” She smiled warmly, which put them at ease instantly.

The gang returned the welcoming gesture, questions concerning her health flooding the room. All moved aside, offering space as Reddington seated her at the front of the table.

A waiter came in taking orders for drinks and appetizers. Liz craned her head, a puzzled look on her face when she realized that Red had yet to sit.

“Did I take your seat?” She questioned pointedly.

Red leaned forward, speaking for her alone. “I’m going to give you some time alone with your friends, they’ll feel more comfortable if I’m not here, I think.” he smiled at the room in general.

“We’ll pick you up when you’re ready to go.”

Reddington felt comfortable leaving the woman, knowing Silas and his men were stationed in and around the restaurant.

“There’s a bar across the street if you should desire. They have some entertainment, pool tables and the like.” Red was the consummate host. “Good drinks, if you should wish to lengthen your evening. And don’t worry, you will have a designated driver to see you home, should you imbibe.”

He spoke again to her directly, “Your tab is already taken care of both here and at the bar, for you all, so don’t worry about that.” He squeezed her shoulder reassuringly, leaning in, murmuring warmly in her ear, “Happy birthday, Lizzy.”

Standing, he reset his hat and bid the rest of them a pleasant dinner before taking his leave.

Liz watched after him the entire time, feeling a little dispirited, truth told.

The hours flew by and unfortunately time to go was fast approaching. Liz reluctantly made the call for the car, then sat back to enjoy the remaining moments with her friends.

Sitting at the bar, sipping their last drinks laughing over some office gossip was her idea of an relaxing evening. Liz leaned to Samar, speaking quietly over the din.

“So, why didn’t the new guys come with you?”

“They are not part of our team.” Samar informed her abruptly. “Besides, Moore is a son of a bitch and I don’t think Wilson is old enough to drink.”

“You really don’t like Moore huh?”

“What gave it away?” Samar blinked innocently “I would have snapped his neck by now if Red would stop getting in my way.” she pulled a cute grimace. “I can’t wait for you to come back and for him to disappear. Which may actually happen if Dembe gets his way.” Samar clapped her hands happily, smiling widely.

So what Red had been saying was true. Liz had never seen Samar react in such a manner.

“And Wilson?”

“He’s all right, I suppose. Or maybe he’s less annoying then Moore, so I don’t notice him all that much.” Samar sipped her drink casually. “He gets along with Ress, but maybe that isn’t saying much, since Ress seems to get along with most pricks.”

Samar held her drink aloft, her intelligent brow furrowing slightly. “You already know Wilson,” she seemed perplexed, “he was one of the new guys that came in a couple of weeks before your accident... this drink brings out the best in me.”

“Wilson had that hideous blue and yellow tie?” Samar reminded.

“Oh! Right.” she brightened, nodding. “That thing was blinding.”

“That’s putting it mildly.” Samar snorted. “Damn thing burned into my corneas.”

Liz sniggered quietly, “Well, hopefully it won’t be long now. I’m hoping I won’t have these things on but a couple more weeks.” she held one cast aloft.

“Yeah well, don’t forget your PT and Requalification.” Samar held up a finger. “Why did Reddington leave?” She probed casually, having meant to ask hours ago.

Liz blinked at the change in conversation. Samar really had been hanging around Red too much, to have picked up his trait. The man could put one at ease so quickly then turn it around to his advantage in the blink of an eye.

“He thought you guys would relax if he wasn’t there. I’m assuming he meant Ress more than anyone.” Liz supplied. “And I guess he thought I would have more fun, if he wasn’t there to intrude.” She morosely stirred her drink.

“Did you? Have a good time?” Samar asked innocently.

“I did. I’ve missed you guys. But that doesn’t mean I couldn’t have had just as good a time had he stayed.” She punctuated, jabbing her straw at the fruit floating in the glass.

Samar shrugged, before wrapping her lips around the tiny straw sticking out of her glass, admirably hiding her need to smile.

“What? Did he say somethin...”

She felt a tap on her shoulder and spun on her stool to find Silas, not Dembe, waiting with keys in hand. “Liz...”

“You aren’t Dembe.” the woman voiced her puzzlement.

The man smiled at her, “I have a better build and much better hair.”

Liz rolled her eyes smiling in spite of herself.
“Are you all ready to go?” Silas asked amiably, including the group in his inquiry.

Aram fell forwards, hastily catching himself before sliding clumsily off the stool he had occupied.

Silas held his amusement for the man’s condition. “The car is this way.” He offered flashy gesture to the stumbling group, gripping Aram’s arm as the man passed, directing him towards the door. “This way.”

“Who’s he?” Samar asked pseudo-quietly, totally interested.

“Silas…” Liz answered, confused as to why the large guard had shown up instead of Dembe. “My bodyguard.”

“He could guard my body.” Samar whispered seductively, her eyes never once having left Silas.

Ressler looked stunned, before speaking up. “You have a personal bodyguard?”

“Red insisted I have one. Demanded, really,” Liz sighed. “With Carver still out there, he wanted someone since I can’t really do much in the way of protecting myself right now.” she glanced at her condition. “Especially for when he’s gone out of town…” She stopped talking, realizing the real reason Silas was there.

Ressler helped her into the car, squeezing her in between Samar and Aram in the back, while he took the front seat.

~♥~♥~♥~♥~♥~♥~♥~♥~♥~♥~♥~♥~♥~♥~♥~♥~♥~♥~♥~♥~♥~♥~

After an uneventful drive home, except for that one small incident which involved a hastily rolled down window for Aram to empty the contents of his stomach and that stumbling comically inept episode where Ressler tried to help the younger man to his door... finally Elizabeth was alone with her guardian.

“When did he leave?” She asked the silent man.

“About forty five minutes before you called.”

“Did he say where he was going?”

“No, he didn’t.” Silas answered dutifully.

“And he took Dembe with him?”

“He did.” Silas confirmed.

“Did he seem... okay?” She didn’t know how to ask if Red seemed upset, especially when talking to one of his employees. He may not appreciate that she had asked about a vulnerability.

“He was pissed.” the man’s eyes never left the road or the rearview mirror. “I also think he wanted to be there to pick you up himself.” Silas threw her a bone, seeing as the woman seemed upset. And he believed Reddington truly did want to be there to retrieve her after dinner.

Not that Reddington had left, exactly. He had joined Silas, silently scouring the surrounding buildings himself, until the call had come in... one he had been waiting upon.

Elizabeth fell silent, staring out at the darkened streets passing by, uninterested in the scenery.
Four days of silence.

Aram had sent a ‘thank you’ email, explaining the team had been hit with a case and that they would contact her at the first opportunity presented.

Liz felt the walls closing in around her. Not even Silas’s good humor could bring her out of the funk.

She wondered, had Red supplied another Blacklister, or had they caught a break on Carver’s location.

It peeved her that Reddington checked in with Silas instead of her directly.

Granted, all calls had come at three in the morning each day... but she hadn’t slept well since Red left. So in reality, she had actually been awake when those calls had come in and could have taken them herself.

She needed to hear his voice.

It frightened her that she seemed to be forgetting the sound of it. She was accustomed to daily calls from him, of being in his company the last two years, and not to hear his voice for some reason or other, seemed extremely odd.

She had so many questions in her mind to ask the man. What was he doing? How much longer was he going to be away? Had he been upset with her for having dinner with her team? Why wasn’t he really calling her?

But it seemed, all those questions would have to wait until his return.

With nothing else to do and her mind too occupied, she crawled into bed at eight, hoping that she’d pass out from sheer boredom. She punched her pillow into submission, sighing, heavily dropping her head into it. Liz waited restlessly for sleep to come.

Later that night the woman awoke to a totally darkened room. She bolted upright in the bed, gasping for air. Liz put a hand to her chest, willing the oxygen back into her lungs.

She gulped frantically for air, momentarily panicked, her thoughts racing a mile a minute.

Could there be a problem with her meds? She wiped the sweaty hair from her face, trying to assemble her thoughts...

No wait... she had not taken any medication this night.

Liz instinctively reached for the bedside table, pushing the panic button, alerting Silas she needed help.

With trembling hands, she grabbed a notepad and pen, scratching out a message in messy scrawl.

Silas burst through the door, weapon drawn.

“Elizabeth!” He hurried forward, hastily shifting the gun to his side, scanning the room as he neared her.
She repeatedly hit the mattress, drawing his attention, shoving the paper in his hands.

Silas was already taking out his phone and dialing as he read the one word, RED!

“What’s wrong?” He asked as he heard the line click, indicating that someone had answered. “Are you choking?”

She continued to catch her breath, her blue eyes frantically searching Silas’s uncomprehending expression.

She clutched her chest, unable to breathe.

Silas understood enough. “Tap your hand once for yes, twice for no.”

Red’s voice crackled over the phone Silas held aloft. “Talk to me.” he commanded, listening intently. Silas asked a slew of questions, receiving a negative response to each.

The woman’s face was ashen, her eyes showing her fear.

“What was she doing before?” Red needed to know.

“Sleeping.” Silas supplied.

“Put her on the phone.” his tone was quiet and calm.

“She can’t breathe, Red.”

“I know that, put her on the damn phone.”

Silas was momentarily waylaid, his instincts telling him to phone for emergency help. He found himself handing the phone to the woman, his body tense, his mind troubled.

Elizabeth’s hand shook visibly as she tried to place the phone to her ear.

“Lizzy, honey, I need you to listen to me.” Red’s voice served as a soothing balm but Liz still was trembling inside, the panic still very much prevalent. “Do exactly as I say...” the man instructed quietly, “inhale.”

She listened intently to his directions, doing as told until finally she was able to breathe in a goodly amount of pure oxygen which inflated her lungs to capacity. Relieved of the overwhelming suffocation she had just experienced, Liz found her voice.

“Red...” she croaked, her mouth and throat parched. “W-Wha...”

Silas handed her a glass of water which she took gratefully.

“Don’t talk.” Red instructed quietly. “Sip your water, don’t gulp it.”

_How did he know?_ Her eyes darting questioningly to the large guard.

“Hand Silas the phone.” Elizabeth did as he bid, concentrating hard on breathing slowly, in and out.

The man’s tone was crisp as he spoke. His instructions were short and to the point.

Silas questioned one thing. “I can stay.” he offered.
The reply came immediately. The bulky man glanced at the woman’s chalky features, his mind questioning the validity of his orders but... he obeyed them.

“He’s going to call you.” He slapped the phone closed, his own breathing a bit labored, having had to stand and watch her gasping so laboriously, both willing the damn phone to ring...which it did finally... seconds later.

Silas breathed easier then reluctantly took his leave with only one glance back to the blue eyes that followed his exit. He smiled gently at the woman before closing the door.

“Is he gone?” Red’s voice calmed her.

“Yes.”

“Breathe with me.” She pressed the phone to her ear, concentrating on his even and controlled breathing until she felt her’s even out.

“Feeling better now?” the mellowed tone held a slight hint of affection.

“What’s wrong with me?” She whispered, afraid of exerting herself.

“Why now?” She asked brokenly.

“Why now and not a couple days ago or last week?

“Yes.”

“Because I was with you then.”

She started to roll her eyes, but stopped. Could he be right? The first thing she asked for when Silas came through the door was not a doctor or an ambulance, but Red.

“You’ve left before.” she stifled a yawn, her eyes growing heavy.

“Lie down now.” he instructed. “Put the phone under your ear. Just relax.”

“I was dreaming...couldn’t remember what you sounded like...” Liz mumbled sleepily.

Red had been there in her dream, but she couldn’t hear him. He had been talking, but she couldn’t hear that deep husky voice. The longer it had gone on, the more distorted the images had become. She had pleaded with him to speak to her. But he kept drifting farther and farther away.

“Did I ever tell you about the time...” Red began slowly, listening to the sound of the woman’s breathing, “I believe it was in Tijuana or it could have been Nepal...”

He continued on, talking about everything and nothing, even after he heard her deep breathing, indicating she had fallen asleep.

~♥~♥~♥~♥~♥~♥~♥~♥~♥~♥~♥~♥~♥~♥~♥~♥~♥~♥~♥~♥~♥~♥~♥~♥~♥~♥~♥~♥~♥~♥~♥~♥~♥~♥~♥~♥~♥~♥~♥~♥~

The sound of metal jingling awoke Elizabeth. Lifting her head, she squinted at the clock, finding it was three in the morning. The last thing she remembered, was Red’s voice. She glanced about for her phone, feeling her way in the warm covers.

The object was nowhere to be found.
A slight sound behind her alerted the woman to someone else’s presence. Red sat down his watch and her phone on his bedside table.

“You didn’t tell me you were coming back.” She turned over, seeking the man out.

“You needed me, of course I would come back.” Red pulled on the blankets, grumbling. “Move your fast ass.”

“Excuse me?” Liz blinked, waking more.

“Not you, the damn cat.” He said, crawling in between the blankets.

Keres walked across the bed, flicking it’s tail at Red in open annoyance before literally climbing over the woman, settling down behind her back. The animal purred contentedly, feeling Liz’s warmth.

The brunette propped her cheek on her fist, watching Red settle into the bed.

“I didn’t want to disturb your dinner.” He groaned, relaxing into the comfortable mattress.

“I wish you would have, I’ve been...” she hesitated. “Did I do something to upset you?” she asked the unusually silent man.

_Had this exacerbated the panic attack?_ Red turned his head, seeking out her silhouette.

“You could have stayed for dinner. No one would have minded.” she shifted, the feline moving even closer, before continuing her thought. “Were you upset that I wanted to spend time with them? Is that the real reason you didn’t say anything to me before you left?”

Red rolled up on his elbow, inching closer to her. “I just assumed that you would appreciate some alone time with your friends without me hovering.” he held her eyes easily. “And I wouldn’t leave like that, even if I was upset with you. But just to clarify, I wasn’t even the slightest bit angry with you.”

Elizabeth felt better.

“I got word that Xavier Zapato was back in the states, I needed to make contact with him before he vanished on me.” he explained his hasty departure. “I contacted your team about where they could find him after I secured a deal with him.”

“Xavier Zapato?”

“Drug smuggler who more than dabbles in human trafficking. Particularly in teenage girls.” Red’s disgust was evident. “I’ve been trying to nail his ass for a couple of years.”

“Why?” she asked. “I mean, I know why.” Red didn’t like people who messed with kids, but Zapato had to have been brought to his attention somehow.

“He took an associate’s daughter a couple years ago. We got the girl back, but not before some abuse had occurred.” Red’s tone was tight. “He slipped away moments before our team arrived. I’ve been waiting for him ever since.”

“You got him?”
“We did. Official records indicate that I was also captured, if anyone searched.”

“Who got to handcuff you this time?” she teased.

“Samar.” he smiled briefly. “Speaking of which, what she said makes so much more sense now.”

“What did she say?” Liz was curious.

“She said, “you should have stayed, idiot’.” The man’s brows lifted. “I’m sorry you thought I was angry with you, Lizzy. I just wanted you to have a good time.”

“Well, next time, stay for dinner if not a drink.” she scolded superficially. “And call me, even if it is three in the morning. And don’t leave without letting me know what’s going on at least.” She reached out, touching his arm.

Red took her hand, kissing the scarring on her wrist. “I’ll try, even if it makes Donald irritable. I’ll call and I won’t leave without saying goodbye again, I promise.”

She came the last distance, hugging him. “Thank you...”

Red was startled by the embrace. Though he was upset that she had a panic attack because of a miscommunication between them, he wasn’t upset by this new development.

He rolled to his back, taking her slender form as he went.

Laying there quietly, he stroked her back waiting to see what she would do next and was very surprised when she settled more comfortably against him.

“I have to apologize to Silas.”

“Why?” he asked, his smile hidden in the dark. She relaxed totally into the touch of his strong fingers as they massaged her back.

“I hit that panic button which was a really stupid thing to do.” she had been thinking about it for hours now.

“It was not stupid.” Red informed the woman in no uncertain terms. “You were panicked.”

“Well, not because of an intruder or anything.”

“It doesn’t matter, you needed help. He came, that’s his job.”

“I still don’t want him to think I was misusing it.”

“He wouldn’t think such a thing. But if it makes you feel better, talk to him.” his fingers stroked a gentle path back and forth over her spine. “But I’ll tell you, he’s going to say the same thing I did.”

“I scared ten years off the man because of a panic attack.” she was embarrassed yet again.

“You didn’t know that at the time. And neither did he.” Red pointed out. “When I got here, the first words out of his mouth were about you. He understands a lot more than you give him credit for.”

“He’s had one before?” she was stunned.

“We all have. Men think they’re dying.” he smiled, adjusting his pillow. “We’re always relieved when we realize it’s not a heart attack. So relieved in fact,” he remembered his own bout well, “we blow off the emotional problem all together and live with the stress, then wonder why we have... a heart attack.”

Chapter End Notes

My Beta hated this chapter - said it made her start gasping for air. I gave her chocolate, she calmed down. So if you experience the same issues, a candy bar is good medicine.
April 16

Red had spent a goodly amount of time saying his farewells this morning. He wanted to gauge the woman’s emotional state, but she seemed bright and chipper, which allowed him to go about his business, his own mood greatly improved.

“Let’s get going. We have a few things to do before we go to the Post Office.” Dembe nodded and headed for the door, not wasting time today.

“Giovanni called?” Dembe asked from the front seat, hearing the excitement in Raymond’s voice.

“Yesterday. He said it was there for us to pick up.” Red grinned infectiously.

A short while later, they arrived at the Post Office.

“We should have given them to her at dinner.” Aram complained, waiting for Ressler to open the trunk on his car. “I had forgotten about it until we were at the restaurant.”

“Don’t feel bad, Aram. She had a wonderful time with you all, that was present enough.” Red glanced around the area, scanning the parking garage with the eyes of a trained observer.

“Still... she must think we forgot.” The young man was still upset.

Dembe pulled his eyes from the younger man’s nervous habits, slightly irritated for some odd reason. Being around a Type A personality such Aram Mojtabai, always made the bulky man fidgety inside himself.

“That you took the time to have dinner with her was the best gift she could have received.” Red patted the man on the shoulder. “What are we going to do with all this?” Red quickly changed the subject.

Aram craned his head around the gigantic basket he was carrying. “Ours’ should probably stay with us for the time being.”

“I see that.” Red looked over the enormous basket seeing a plethora of different gifts behind the gaily wrapped cellophane, chocolate being a focal point at every turn.

“You don’t think she’ll like it?” Donald asked, second guessing their idea now, his mood dropping slightly.

“No, I’m sure she’ll love it.” Red smiled at both men, “You know how she adores chocolate.”

Both men smiled, walking away, examining the basket’s contents happily.

“You really think she’ll like it?” Samar mumbled.

“I do.” the man smiled. “She doesn’t think anyone remembered anyway. She’ll be very pleased.”

Samar pointed at Aram, her expression bemused, “You just told him–”
“I lied.” Red admitted freely. “He seemed genuinely upset, now he’s not.”

Samar crooked her head, handing over a beautifully wrapped gift and a card, crossing her arms over her middle. “What did you get her?”

“What did you get her?” Red countered.

“A cashmere sweater.”

“She likes cashmere.” the man nodding approvingly.

“I’ve seen her check it out a couple of times online.” Samar shrugged. “Now, what did you get her?”

Red reached into his pocket as did Dembe. Both opening their gifts at the same time.

“Oh... wow.” Samar's eyes widened. “I wish I could see her face when she opens these.”

“You’re all welcome to have dinner with us.” Red offered magnanimously.

“I don’t know...” Samar whined her distress. “We have so much to go over tonight with the new Blacklister.”

“Well, if you change your mind.” He stuffed the box back in his pocket. “Give a call.”

Red and Samar went over the latest information he had to convey.

Aram approached the pair, gingerly, fidgeting, wondering if he should wait to be noticed or just speak up. If he waited, and he handed over what he had, Mr. Reddington would be extremely upset with him for not having spoken up, right away.

On the other hand... the man gave up the mental battle, forging ahead courageously.

“Oh, excuse me, Agent Navabi, Mr. Reddington?” The pair looked up, observing the nervous man, who held  a brown envelope to his chest protectively.

“Is there something amiss, Aram?” Red asked solicitously. It wasn’t odd to see the man nervous, but he seemed truly bothered on this occasion.

“This just came for us... or you, but I’m in them, so... us?” Aram stuttered, finally handing the envelope over.

Samar took the folder, pulling out it’s contents. “What the hell...”

Red peered over her shoulder, feeling his heart stop. There were pictures of Liz with her team from when they had dinner. All taken from different vantage points... on the street, in the bar.

All had markings on them of some sort, ‘X’s’ and targets were drawn over Liz’s body and head, the position changing per picture.

Red took out his phone, dialing from memory. “Silas, put someone on Lizzy until I get there. If she asks why, tell her I’ll explain when I get home.”

~♥~♥~♥~♥~♥~♥~♥~♥~♥~♥~♥~♥~♥~♥~♥~♥~♥~♥~♥~♥~♥~♥~♥~♥~♥~♥~♥~♥~♥~♥~♥~♥~♥~♥~♥~♥~♥~♥~♥~♥~♥~♥~♥~♥~♥~♥~♥~♥~♥~♥~♥~♥~♥~♥~♥~♥~♥~♥~♥~♥~♥~♥~♥~
A little under an hour later, the men arrived back at the house, arms loaded with packages.

“You’ll be on the look out for Joan?” Red indicated the ‘helper’ who would be arriving anytime now, he hoped.

“I will.” Dembe was the model of efficiency these days.

“I’m going to distract Lizzy.” Red headed back to their room, greeting the guard on duty outside the door.

The man entered the room, enjoying the domestic scene unfolding before him. The woman held her book aloft so as to not disturb the cat, who was draped across her middle.

“You like my new hot water bottle?” She smiled up at Red, laying her book aside.

“No better description has ever been made of that cat.” Red nodded. “All she does is lay around, doing nothing.”

Liz’s fingers stroked the fur absent. “Well, what else is she supposed to do?”

“Hunt for mice...” he poked the cat, receiving absolutely no response at all, “be a better companion.”

Liz chuckled quietly as Keres slumped further, molding more of itself to her body, much to the exasperation of the man beside her. “Speaking of companions, why is David lurking outside our door?”

“We were sent pictures of you from the night you went out to dinner.” he got right to the point. “You’re plainly targeted in them. I want someone standing by when I’m not here, just as a precaution.”

“Okay...” she practically whispered as to not disturb the feline. “Whatever you think best.”

Red was a bit taken back by her easy acceptance. “You’re not going to tell me I’m being overprotective?”

“No. You were right. Someone may as well be nearby in case I need help because I sure as hell can’t defend myself in the shape I’m in.” The fingers stroking the cat slowed noticeably. “Were there any of me... uh... here?” she allowed her concern.

“No, they stopped when you left the bar.”

“Do you think he followed us here?”

“If he sent pictures of you at dinner, he would have most certainly sent some of you here.” Red sat down beside her, tilting his head, smiling carelessly. “Regardless, I will be setting up extra patrols.” He braced his arm beside her, reaching back, “And you have this...” he said, pulling her gun out from beneath the pillow. “Stop thinking about it, don’t worry, you’ll be perfectly safe.”

“How did you know I put that there?” She asked, but he dismissed the question entirely as rhetorical. “May I ask you a question?” He inclined his head. “I’ve been a lot of trouble to those guys out there. Some must be starting to resent me... and your bodyguards... why would they protect me. I’m not anybody important.”

“You’re important to me.” he stated quietly.

“Still... to put their lives on the line like that, for someone so irrelevant–”
“You are not irrelevant.” Red emphasized. “Besides the fact they like you—”

“They like me?” Liz was touched.

“You aren’t high maintenance.” he readily explained. “You treat them like they matter, you talk to them like they’re friends, not the ‘Help’. They appreciate that.” his innate sense of humor came to the fore. “You let them destroy children’s toys,” he too, seemed to appreciate that fact. “And if it’s not you they’re protecting, it would be someone else.”

“Why do they do what they do?” she was intrigued.

The fact that these men seemed to value their life less than another, astonished her.

“Most of these men are ex-military or the like, trained to fight and protect.” Red stared off in a thoughtful manner. “They’re bored by everyday life, no excitement, no challenge. They try to live a normal life, and find it tedious.” he could relate. “They offer their services, see if anyone bites...”

“And you did.” she nodded thoughtfully.

“I understand them more than most people that employ them. Plus, I hire the unusual types.”

“I didn’t think any of them...” She circled a finger at her temple to indicate a certain ‘condition’, “had a blown fuse.”

“I don’t mean that they’re crazy.”

“Have you met Silas?” she smiled sweetly.

“Unfortunately, yes.” Red shifted into a more comfortable position. “I don’t care if they’re muscular, young or even clean cut. I hire men with experience. And most importantly, they are loyal.” the man stated his preferences. “And because I gave them a chance when no one else did, they’re incredibly loyal.”

“I’m sure the benefits don’t hurt either.” she assumed he was very generous in that area, because he was generous in most areas.

“I do offer amazing dental and retirement plans.” he answered seriously.

Liz actually believed him, even if he said it jokingly. She was beginning to know his ‘delivery’.

“I was wondering if you would like to get dressed and have dinner in the dining room tonight?”

“Is there someone coming...”

“I just thought you might enjoy a change of scenery, such as it were.”

“You know what, I think I would.” She smiled brightly.

“Move chubby.” Red tapped the cat but it only curled more tightly around Liz’s tummy, hiding it’s face. “You’re suffocating her, get off.” he thumped the cats bottom, genuinely annoyed when Keres flicked its tail in response as if dismissing the man entirely.

“You just don’t know how to talk to her.” Liz explained patiently. “Come on baby.” she cooed to the furry pet. The cat raised it’s head, yawning and stretching. She slithered off to the side, curling into a ball before falling asleep again.
“Damn lazy thing.” Red mumbled before helping Liz from the bed.

Dressing for dinner seemed like a special occasion tonight. Liz chose a floral print summer dress which accented her figure to perfection. She knew she had made the right choice, having exited the closet and Red’s eyes roamed the outfit appreciatively.

After helping her onto her scooter, they journeyed to the dining room where Dembe stood waiting at the doors.

Turning the corner into the room, Red was more than pleased at the woman’s reaction. Her eyes lit up, her mouth falling agape as she examined the detailed arrangements with gleeful enthusiasm.

“Did you guys do all this?” She waved at the simple, yet elegant decorations and table set up before her.

“Dembe had a little help.” Red said, taking the chair next to her. “Happy birthday, Lizzy.”

“You didn’t have to go to so much trouble...” she was delighted.

“It was no trouble. We both enjoyed planning it.” Red checked with Dembe who smiled in agreement.

“I thought the night out with the guys, was my birthday dinner?” Though no one besides Red had wished her a happy birthday, she just assumed that’s what it had been.

“It was, technically.” Red granted graciously. “Consider this your official dinner.”

After an amazing meal, Dembe went to the sideboard while Red kept her distracted until the lights lowered.

Liz swirled around watching Dembe approach holding the most beautiful cake she’d ever seen. Done in white icing and the most delicate flowers that flowed around the sides, stopping on the crystal platter which held it. A single lit candle sat in the center.

“Make a wish.” Red’s smile was infectious.

Both men watched as Liz closed her eyes tightly, her face radiating in the soft glow of the low lights.

A few moments of silence stretched into a questionable length of time. Red looked at Dembe, then ostensibly glanced at his watch, amusement dancing in his eyes.

Finally the woman’s eyes popped open. She leaned forward, blowing the candle out, her face beaming happily.

Red really loved her innocence sometimes. It took a special type of person to maintain that quality, to think that hard on a birthday wish, after all she had seen in her work and life.

While most would wish for their mortgage payment to lower or to not pay taxes that year or not even wish at all. He’d bet that Lizzy actually wished for something totally out of character for a woman of her age, if the look on her face was any criteria by which to judge.
“Aren’t you going to cut it?” He asked, watching her hover over the cake with a knife.

“I can’t do it! It’s too pretty.” she grimaced painfully, handing it over to the man. “You do it. I can’t look.” she turned her face away.

Red chuckled, but took the offered knife, cutting into the decadent confection.

“Oh... it’s all white and milk chocolate?” she had instantly noted. “My favorites.” she sounded totally joyous.

The caterer suggested dark and German chocolate, but Red was aware of Liz’s preference.

And as he watched her devour the cake, he knew he had made the correct choice. “Would you like another slice.”

“If I do, I won’t be able to move.” she sat back sated. “That was a wonderful dinner Red.” she reached over, covering the large black man’s hand. “Dembe. Thank you so much... both of you.”

“Don’t thank us yet, you still have to open your presents.” Red pointed to the packages.

“Samar asked if we could record you opening your gifts.” he remembered the conversation.

“No, no. Don’t do that.” She chuckled then shrugged. “Oh... okay.” she motioned rapidly, indicating that the gifts should be handed over immediately. Dembe pulled out his phone, gesturing that he was ready to begin.

Red brought over the huge basket. “This is from Aram and Donald. They wished you a very happy birthday.”

She squealed happily, pulling on the enormous bow, the cellophane falling away to reveal lotion, bath products, a candle, funny books, chocolate and a bottle of wine. Pulling each item out, she read the labels or covers, smiling softly with each passing gift.

Turning to the camera, she thanked the guys for their thoughtfulness before rubbing the delicately scented lotion on her hands. Red’s eyes deepened with a strange light as he watched the process.

Dembe brought the man back to the present, his expression benign, as he saved the video clip.

Liz popped a piece of chocolate in her mouth.

“This one is from Samar.” Red collected himself dutifully.

Liz pulled at the bow before ripping the paper and opening the top of the box, gasping.

“Oh, Samar!” She pulled the v-neck cashmere sweater from it’s box, holding it up to herself then feeling the soft material between delicate fingertips. “I absolutely love it!”

She folded the deep red article of clothing carefully beside her, stroking it once more before moving the box. Her brow pulled into an attractive frown.

“What’s this?” Opening the lid, she peeled the tissue paper back, her cheeks turning the color of her sweater when she saw a beautiful matching set of bra and panties inside.

“What did you find?” Red inquired, having a pretty good idea what might still be in that box, if the expression on her face was any indication.

Shooting an evil look to the camera, completely forgetting the man behind it, “Thanks, Samar.” She turned to Red, “It’s nothing.” She said quickly. “A girl thing.”

Red instantly sat another gift before her, giving her the reprieve needed. “This is from Dembe.”

She smiled warmly at the man, hesitating before opening it. “Dembe, you did not have to do this.” her sincerity was apparent. “But this is so nice.”

She pulled the bow, her fingers hovering above the beautiful paper.

“Rip it, Lizzy.” Red urged.

“I’m sorry, it’s pretty paper.” She giggled before doing as directed, finding a black velvet box underneath, her eyes lifting instantly in open awe. “What did you do?”

“Open it.” The man smiled.

She cracked the top open, gasping, placing her hand to her mouth before lifting the diamond and ruby tennis bracelet from the soft cushion. “Oh my God!” she exclaimed breathlessly. “It's simply exquisite.”

Red came to her, taking the bracelet from her shaking fingers, looping it around her wrist. Dembe had chosen something else originally, but having seen what Red had coveted, he had chosen this gift instead.

“Oh my God!” she waved Dembe to her, blotting her misting eyes.

He stopped the video and walked around the table bending when she pulled at his arm, wrapping her's around him, squeezing him tightly.

“Oh my God, I love it, Dembe. Thank you so much.” She kissed his cheek lightly before releasing him, then grabbed his hand, her eyes fixated on the handsome face. “Oh my God... thank you, really! Really!” she emphasized. “Really.”

He chuckled his amusement, “You are most welcome. I’m glad you enjoy it.”

“Enjoy doesn’t begin to describe it...” She laughed, wiping the tears of joy from her eyes. Moving her wrist back and forth, she watched the gems sparkle under the dim lighting.

Red sat another box in front of her, pleased with her reaction to his friend’s offering. “This is from me.” he said simply.

Removing the bow and paper with flourish, she again encountered a black velvet box. “You guys are terrible... but don’t ever change.” She slowly opened the lid, before her hand fluttered to her chest, her eyes widening.

“Red...” she drawled, wonderstruck. She traced the diamond and ruby Journey necklace and earrings with her fingertip, tears dropping to the plush velvet cushion upon which they lay.

“I’ve wanted one of these since I first saw...” She sniffled, accepting the handkerchief that came into view. She was literally speechless for a time, her eyes unable to look from the elegantly crafted jewels. “I love them, Red.” She said around quivering lips. “Oh my God...” the woman whispered sacredly.
Red had seen the sapphire bracelet Dembe had picked, and had to agree, it did match her eyes, but then he had seen the sparkling red jewels and couldn’t resist. Lizzy had been wearing more red clothing lately, and she looked so warm and beautiful in the items, surely the rubies would be just as beautiful.

But more importantly, he had seen Lizzy look at the necklace before. More so now, since Tom left.

Though, the significance of the necklace, the meaning behind it, had altered.

Red wondered if she had hoped Tom would buy one for her for a birthday, perhaps even an anniversary? A way to commemorate the journey they were taking as a married couple?

If so, that hope had been met with disappointment. And he wasn’t just talking about the jewelry.

Her hopes for her marriage, a family... had never materialized.

Hence the reason Red had bought it for her now. A way to mark an important moment, a turning point in her life that was going to be full of self discovery, challenges, ambitions and dreams.

Red was very pleased she liked his gift so much. Though, he had to admit, he was surprised she accepted it so easily.

Not that he was complaining in the least. He just assumed he’d have a fight on his hands.

Dembe shut down the video, quietly arose, heading for the door.

Liz pushed her chair back then stood awkwardly as she reached for Red Reddington.

She squeezed him in a tight hug, crying softly as he stroked her back. “Thank you for everything.” The woman whispered into his shoulder. “It’s been the best birthday ever.”

The man rocked her gently, rubbing his cheek against her soft hair. “I’m glad you enjoyed dinner and your gifts."

“It’s not just because of dinner and the gifts.” She squeezed him harder. “I’m glad I got to spend it with friends.”

Dembe smiled at the two embracing as he closed the door behind him, leaving them to their privacy.

The next morning, Red received a call he needed to attend to and was very pleased with the results that call had garnered. Now if Lizzy was as happy, all would be well.

Until then, he sat back in his chair, reaching for the envelope that had been staring back at him for the last hour. And only one sentence in, he wished Lizzy’s stalker would hire a ghost writer.

If the letters were going to keep arriving, the man could make them entertaining, or at the very least, less repetitious.

---

I’m pleased you tried to get away from Reddington as planned. I tried to get your attention to make a getaway, but you were distracted by that woman. She is as bad as Reddington, taking your drink away, like you were a child.

I thought your eyes had connected with mine, but if they had, you would have come to me.

I need you to know I was there, I was watching. I know you must be as disgusted as I am, with how Reddington touched you.

Know that it will not go on forever. Take comfort knowing that you won’t be subjected to him much longer. And when you are rid of him, you will be purged of his filth. I may have found a way to rid us of his presence, but you must be patient.

The man placed the letter in his pocket, shaking off the author’s insanity, pushing back from the large desk.

He went off in search of Lizzy.

As he stepped through the doorway, the woman looked up from the tv screen. “If I order this thing right now, on tv. I get a free one if I pay shipping and handling.”

Red glanced at the screen, “Do you really need a Hurricane Spin Scrubber?”

“Who doesn’t?” she held her smile. “And it’s only three payments of nineteen ninety-nine.”

“I’m glad you’re in such a good mood... because I have something to tell you that is going to piss you off, but I want you to hear me out before going ballistic.”

“Okay...” Liz drawled nervously. “But are you going to buy me the Hurricane Spinner?”

“I sold your house.” he stated bluntly.

Liz’s mouth dropped open, shocked. “You... I... what?”

“Now, before you start throwing things, I did it because too many people knew where to find you, obviously.” he held his hand out, stilling the woman. “Plus, they splashed your house across the news. Harold stopped them from showing your picture, but if anybody researched...” Reddington always thought three or four moves in advance. “You need better security, Lizzy. And you weren’t going to get it there.”

She had sat, sputtering, trying to form some sort of response, finally asking the first coherent thing to come to mind, “...How much?”

“If I told you that I got two hundred thousand more than what you paid for it, would it make you feel better?”

Her eyes bugged out, “Did you?”

“I did.”

She sat back heavily into the pillows, mentally drained for a second.

“I don’t know what to say...” she told the truth, a thought suddenly occurring, “Weird... I’m homeless.”

“No, you are not.” Red tsked, waving a hand above their heads. “I don’t know if you’ve noticed, but there is a roof on this house.”
“Uh, yeah. The roof of your house.” she made mention.

“A house that has your name on the deed.” her mouth fell agape once again, her senses reeling. “Actually, come to think of it, a lot of the properties I own have your name on the deed.” he stated conversationally.

“I need to lay down.” she was suddenly certain of the fact.

Red helped her adjusted the blankets and pillow behind her head. “You’re upset.” he took for granted.

“I think you mean, overwhelmed.” she corrected.

“Oh? Well... that’s not so bad.” he decided.

“Red, do you not realize how weird this is, putting my name on these houses?” she had to ask or die.

“Why would you say that?” he was perplexed. “I always figured that if something happened to me, you and Dembe would handle my estate, split the profits, maybe hand some over to my daughter if you ever found her.” he tilted his head, quirkily, his expression saying it all. “I know you two would do the right thing.”

“Isn’t that what a lawyer is for?”

“Oh, please.” Red scoffed. “I trust lawyers about as far as I can throw one.”

“Which isn’t saying much where you’re concerned if there’s a tall building around.” She muttered.

“No, this way is better.” he totally ignored her implication. “Don’t think about it right now. Just concentrate on what you would like to do.” the subject was closed in Red’s mind. “Shop around a bit, have fun with it, don’t settle for anything.” he forewarned. “Besides it’s not like you have to make any decisions at all, really, since technically, you’re home right now, remember?”

Elizabeth’s eyes glazed over. She could not wrap her mind around the fact that this amazing house was technically... hers.

“Did you see who bought the old house?” she enquired absently. “Was it a couple?”

“Oh, no.” Red laughed. “Francis bought it. Took my suggestion and will be making it a guest house for out of town business visitors.”

For which Red was thankful. With Francis owning the house, the letters would continue to come uninterrupted.

“I also need to know, did you see anyone odd when you were at dinner with your team.”

“What do you mean, odd?” she questioned.

“Was anyone trying to get your attention?” the man began slowly. “Did anyone approach you, brush past too close? Did you make eye contact with anyone?” his hands gestured slightly. “Anything of that nature?”

She thought the problem through slowly but thoroughly, coming up blank.

“You’re in the restaurant. Did you look at anyone, did someone look at you. Anyone other than the waitress come in?” Red watched her, fascinated as she visibly searched her memories of that evening.

“No,” she regretfully sighed, coming up empty. “nothing.”

“All right. You went across the street to the bar.” he probed gently. “Did you pass anyone on the street.”

“A couple, college students.” her eyes had automatically re-closed as she focused. She smiled softly, “Too busy kissing to notice anyone else.”

Red continued. “Okay, you're at the bar. What next?”

“We sat near the bar, ordered drinks.” the woman said. “Aram and Ress played darts next to us.” She was quiet a few seconds, then shivered, her brow puckering.

“What? What did you see?” he picked up on the change instantly.

“What was that horrendous drink you bought?” She stuck her tongue out, as though ridding herself of the long gone taste.

“I'm sorry?” he queried.

“I had just finished my drink and the waitress came over, sitting a new drink in front of me.” she distinctly recalled. “I thought she had the wrong table, and she said, the gentleman bought it, then said, I'd know who it was from.” her brow furrowed attractively.

“I took a drink and about spewed it across the table, it was sickeningly sweet and sour.” she grimaced accordingly. “I just knew you were watching for my reaction.” the blue eyes opened accusingly. “What the hell was that Red?”

“Sweetheart, I didn’t buy you a drink.”

“You didn’t?” she was surprised.

“No...what did you do with it, the drink?”

“Samar took it. Made about the same face I did, but said it was free alcohol and who was she to complain.”

“Did you look around at all, make eye contact with anyone.”

“There was a scuffle.” she did recall. “The bouncers calmed them down quickly. Then I...” She moved her head to the left, hesitating, scrunching her face. “I caught eyes with a man when we both looked away from the fight.”

“What did he look like?”

“Brown hair, dark eyes, I think. The lights were low, I couldn’t see very well. Medium build I guess?”

“Like Aram?”

“No...” She drawled.

“Ressler?”
“Yeah, like Ress.” She nodded. “He was clean cut. Short hair, but curling at the ends a bit. He was in a suit.”

“How many times did you make eye contact with him?”

“I don’t know, two, three times? Why?” she irritated. “What’s with the questions?”

He reached into his pocket, pulling out the newest letter, handing it to her. Waiting quietly as she read it.

“He ordered the drink?” she looked up from the letter.

“Sounds like it, yes.”

“Maybe it was stage one in his goal of purging me.” she quipped.

Red could sympathize her revulsion. That must have been one bad drink. “Would you recognize him if you saw him again?”

“I don’t know, probably not, not really.” she admitted. “He was just a faceless man in a crowd, you know. I mean, maybe if there was a line up of five guys, it might be a possibility.” she shook her head negatively. “But on a crowded street,” she sighed in frustration, “I highly doubt it.”

“No, I think I would have known if he was there, watching me.”

“Senses starting to tingle?”

“I knew something wasn’t right when Carver was in my house. I just didn’t know what it was.” she refused to linger on that moment. “Now I know what I feel like when I’m creeped out.”

Red fell silent, watching her face as she absently fanned the pages of her book with her thumb, apparently lost in thought.

“What are you thinking?” he asked.

“How big is this house?”

Red chuckled under his breath at the very unexpected question. The way her mind wandered sometimes was just... captivating.

“Around two hundred thousand square feet, if not more.”

The woman’s mouth fell open, her eyes widening. She knew it was large, but...

“Lizzy, it has three stories.” Red pointed out.

“But...” she drew back, envisioning the house, “it’s only two stories tall.”

“No...” Red disagreed, “the third floor is beneath us.”

“Oh, you mean, like a basement.”

“I would not consider it exactly that.”

“What’s down there?”
“Let’s see... there’s a wine cellar. There are media, exercise and entertainment rooms.” the man stared off into the room, envisioning the downstairs.

“How about an apartment for staff. I believe there’s a couple bowling lanes. A library...” he shrugged. “I can’t really think of everything that’s down there. You haven’t explored?” he asked.

“Well, I couldn’t really get up the stairs...” she twisted her mouth, “or downstairs, for that matter.” she muttered. “Not that I knew it was there.”

“So, take the elevator.” Red’s brow scrunched.

“There’s an elevator!?”

Once Elizabeth learned there was more to explore of the house, she took off on her cart, looking for the hidden treasures to be found leaving Red to his office and his call with Francis. After agreeing on a time and place to give him the keys to the house, he went off again in search of Elizabeth to inform her he would be going out soon.

He found Silas, Dembe and Lizzy, performing their workout for the afternoon.

More specifically, yoga.

His eyes instantly fell on Elizabeth, in a tight sports bra and the tiniest shorts he’d ever seen... thank the Lord above. The man began to sweat. He pulled absently on his expensive vest, craning his neck, trying to cool off.

The woman was resting on her hands and knees, then she lifted slowly, her tight bottom lowering, pushing her hips into the floor. Her torso elongated, redirecting his line of sight to her full breasts which were pushed together.

She held the pose and his complete attention for a few moments, before a softly cleared throat made him blink, breaking his focus.

He glanced over, finding his head guard staring benignly at him. Silas’ mouth pulled into a jaunty grin.

Red subtly flipped the man off, heading for the bar. He poured himself a stiff drink. His eyes absently wandered back towards the silent woman.

Liz stretched out her body, feeling the pull, her mind cleared of all recent debris.

Dembe softly called out each position change.

Red wasn’t sure how long he stood there, time seemed to have slipped away. His eyes watched Elizabeth slide effortlessly into different poses, her body at once graceful and yet vital with youthful suppleness.

What he did know, what he was acutely aware of... was with each new movement and sip of the warming liquor, he found himself slipping further into a quandary.

As he watched the tension in her body release, he felt his own increase. While she released her stress, his grew exponentially. As she became limber and flexible, he stiffened... in the most inopportune place.
He stared openly at her firm bottom as it lifted high in the air, as though for his viewing pleasure, before her legs parted somewhat. Just enough to give him, the very avid voyeur, a tantalizing glimpse of her softly rounded mound pushing at the tight fabric.

He could almost visualize the hidden treasure beneath the clingy material.

Exhaling a calming breath, he finished his drink in one gulp before lowering the glass to the bar. So focused on her pert little ass was he that he sat the glass down too heavily, making a thick jarring sound as it met granite.

Silas peered over his shoulder at the distraction, releasing a knowing chuckle before returning to his pastime.

Red ignored the exchange, slowly making his way up behind Elizabeth. He watched her strain to stretch beyond her already extreme pose, further opening herself to his gaze.

“Lizzy...” Red enquired softly.

“Hmmm?” she purred, wiggling herself into position.

Any other time, that fucking sound she just made and that amazing ass writhing in the air would be considered an invitation to mount that luscious body, in his world. At least his body seemed to think so. His shaft twitched heavily in his pants.

But this wasn’t ‘any other time’, more was the fucking pity.

“I’m going to meet Francis shortly.” his voice roughened on it’s own accord as she dipped her chest to the floor, her heavy breasts threatening to spill from her minuscule top.

Red wiped at his brow, his thumbs pushing into his eye sockets, hiding the temptation from sight. His fist clenched into a tight sphere, his hand wanting to touch her breast so badly, it was the only way to physically halt the action.

“Did you need anything while I’m out?” the words sounded so hollow.

Shit. His voice sounded strained to his own ears, who the hell knew what that bastard Silas was hearing.

“Umm,” she hummed, pushing up on her toes, she raised that perfect ass towards him once again and the man suddenly knew how Adam felt when Eve offered him the apple. “I don’t think s—”

The woman lost her balance mid-sentence, a sharp intake of breath alerting the man to her predicament.

Red lunged forward quickly, catching Liz’s light weight before it toppled to the floor.

Their momentum pushed them forward until he threw out his free arm stopping their rapid descent. His form hunched over hers, his large palm wrapped around her bare waist, yanking her ass into his crotch as they came to a sudden halt.

He easily balanced both their weights.

“You all right?” he muttered against her nape, his warm breath stirring the damp strands of hair on her neck. “Did you hurt yourself?”
“No...” she panted, “no, I’m okay.”

Elizabeth opened her eyes, finding only her feet touching the floor. The rest of her form was held against Red’s body. Getting her bearings, she reached out, laying her good hand against the hardwood, followed by her knee as he slowly lowered her.

“Good?” he asked.

“Yeah...” she reassured, her limbs finally coming to rest on the floor. “The casts... they put me off center.” she apologized.

Red’s muscled forearm supported her abdomen, making her very aware of his proximity, more specifically, the buttons on his vest which tickled her spine. His belt buckle pressed into her bottom.

She drew a shaky breath, when his thick fingers skimmed along her flesh as he released his hold on her.

“Raymond, are you ready?” Dembe enquired, disengaging himself from his prone position.

“Twenty minutes.” Red practically snapped. “I need to grab something...”

Silas snorted under his breath, hastily averting his profile to hide his ever growing amusement.

“I need the keys to Lizzy’s house and my phone.” Red clarified, giving the man a steely glare of pure hatred which only increased the guards mirth.

“You need me to get them?” Liz asked politely.

Red looked back at the woman, finding her stretching away the last of her workout. Her breasts flexed under the tight shirt, and the man’s mouth suddenly felt like the Sahara desert.

“No...” he grunted moodily, “I know where they are.” he replied, quickly heading for the doorway, ignoring Liz’s parting remark.

“What are you laughing at weirdo?”

Silas’ evil laughter echoed in Red’s ears. So help him God... he was going to kill that man.

Reddington rushed though their doorway, making a beeline for the private toilet area, slamming the door closed behind him.

He yanked at his zipper, releasing his hardening shaft, pumping it once, easing the ache instantly.

Red exhaled harshly, teasing his fattening crown with his thick thumb, slicking the taut skin with the beaded moisture leaking from the tip.

Stroking the length, bringing the erection to full mast, Red pumped the rigid flesh. He closed his eyes, his mind’s eye, supplying the needed visions for his impromptu fantasy.

He had never understood the fascination with workout gear... until today. But then, he hadn’t seen Lizzy in them yet, either. They were so damned tight, showing him every single nuance of that delectable body.

God, that ass of hers was amazingly beautiful. The sculptured mounds would fit perfectly in the palms of his hands.

And her breasts, he knew were full and soft, but he hadn’t paid attention until now how they might overfill his hands, and how tiny her nipples were as they strained against the tight top.

The rest of that wonderful little package; her thighs, arms, tummy... that back... he had fantasies about running his tongue along her spine until he could nibble on that gorgeous neck.

He focused on that vision, having no trouble what-so-ever picturing his large hands bracketing her tiny hips, before easing those tight shorts off, showing him that firm, warm flesh he wanted so desperately to see.

Hell, he’d have a damn hard time getting the shorts past her thighs, but then, that’s all he really needed. That was more than enough clearance to allow him to plunge himself into her hot, wet depths... the ones she had been so carelessly waving about earlier.

When she was cradled in his arms and her ass was pushing into his groin, the need to give her his arousal had been damned near impossible to contain. Especially when that warm bottom grazed his fattening length.

Shortening his stroke, Red increased his grip, pushing him closer to the relief he craved. Bracing an arm against the surface, he leaned into it, his fingers curling into the wall when he hit a particularly good spot.

“Oh, fuck...” he grunted, his hips unconsciously rocking, fucking his hand, spreading his fingers open with each thrust of his pelvis.

Damn, he bet she was tight. Those few seconds he had glimpsed the prize between her thighs, the outline of those succulent lips was so well defined, he thought he was going to cream right on the fucking yoga mat.

He tightened his grip further, a strangled breath escaping his throat. Pulling at his belt, he tugged it free, letting his pants drop heavily to the floor as his other hand cupped his balls, pulling them up against his body.

He wanted her so badly, it hurt. The need to touch her, to share the emotions she stirred within him.

If she’d only just fucking let him...

Tom Keen could never begin to match what Red knew he was more than capable of supplying.

While Tom wasn’t willing to give up, to stop his life of crime.

Red was.

He’d give everything he had for one moment to show Lizzy how much...

“You love her...” he breathed through his exertion, admitting out loud something he tried so hard to keep inside, hidden.

He wasn’t supposed to feel like this, wasn’t supposed to love her as much as he did. But he did and... his heart ached for want of her.
He felt tears prick his eyes at the pain, even as his balls tightened against his body. The conflict tore at his warring sides, deepening the ache, even as the sweet taste of relief neared.

“God, Lizzy, please...” he shook visibly, his orgasm upon him, “let me...”

He trembled with the release of his arousal, his emotions crashing in from all sides. They combined in an explosive force, that left him drained more mentally, than physically.

Red leaned his forehead into the wall, fighting back against the emotional release threatening, an outlet he needed more than anything.

His eyes slammed shut against the threat, feeling tears skirt down his cheeks until he tasted them at his mouth.

He drew in a shaky breath, exhaling the pent up torment in his soul. He leaned wearily back against the support offered, taking the time to compose his thoughts.

He absently put his person to rights, glancing down at the mess on his marble tile. He just didn’t have the energy at this moment.

Red groped for the stool, sitting heavily. He dropped his face into his hands, a deeply pained sound tearing at his throat before he could smother it.

“You fool.” he berated himself quietly. “Get your head out of the fucking clouds.” his jaw clenched tensely. “She’ll never see you as anything aside from Red Reddington. Face it.”

His palms pushed into his temples, staving off the looming headache he felt building behind his eyes.

If she only would believe him, believed his intentions were honorable. Would she see beyond who he had become?

Yes, he was Red Reddington. Now. He hadn’t always been this way.

Believe it or not, his end goal had been to bring those in power, those who had cheated and killed to get to their lofty position, to their knees.

But he was one man going against a virtual army, as it were. Not that the crooked politicians got their hands dirty. Oh, hell no. They hired their dirty work out. But it was still just him against a powerful establishment that had excessive funds to get what they wanted.

He wasn’t fighting fire with fire...

Which is where his fortune came into play. A fortune he could give a shit about. It was just a tool to get what he needed. Money bought silence, loyalty... people.

He had been much like Elizabeth at one point... the thought amused him in a sick, twisted way.

Trusting that justice would prevail. That the system would actually work.

What a load of shit.

That part of Raymond Reddington was gone. But the idea, that he would make those men pay for all they had done... that was alive and well.

But then, she wouldn’t see that. She would see that he had abandoned his family, left his life of military service... for money.
And why shouldn’t she. He had more money than he knew what to do with. He had houses, cars... a fucking jet.

She wouldn’t see that the man who he had been; the decorated officer, the loyal family man, the good man. He still existed somewhere. He was still in there, wanting to love her.

“Red?” Elizabeth tapped softly on the door, breaking his concentration and thought patterns. “You okay?”

Red reached forward, laying his palm flat against the door facing, and could swear he felt her warmth.

“Yes.” his answer was strained.

“You sure?” she questioned. “You took off rather fast.”

“I’m fine.” he nodded to himself. He arose, hastily cleaning the evidence of his activity, throwing the tissue into the toilet, flushing leisurely.

He straightened his tie then opened the door, smiling brightly. “Just got lost in thought.

Liz tilted her head, studying the man, her mouth drooping as he brushed hastily past her.

“I better get my shit together.” Red stared at his watch. “I’ll be late meeting Francis.” he explained his reasoning. “I have to make a quick drop by the Post Office as well.”

She stared after him, feeling somewhat at a loss. Something was not right but she could not put her finger on anything tangible.

The man bent, kissing her temple, hovering for a moment before pulling away, “If you need me...” he let it hang.

He gently stroked her arm, walking from the room.

She watched him disappear around the doorframe, her mood dropping. She could not have said why, but she could almost swear... that Red had just lied to her.

But then, he said he’d been lost in thought. Maybe what was wrong, and there was something wrong, was of a personal nature.

His thoughts were his own and none of her business, really. So maybe she had read his omission as more than what it was. But Liz found herself feeling... hurt. Hurt that he didn’t feel he could confide in her. To share some of his burden with her.

He had been a shoulder to lean on many times, allowing her to unload what troubled her. So why wouldn’t he allow her to return the favor?
April 18

In the following few days that had passed, there was an odd tension between Elizabeth and Red. Often she would find the man in quiet contemplation, his features troubled and unguarded. The minute he sensed her presence, a façade of forced cheerfulness dropped into place.

The woman did not understand Red’s state of mind. She worried that, whatever the problem was, it surely must involve her somehow. This evening, it seemed that the man had purposely been obtuse when she questioned normal everyday things.

Yes, something was wrong and she determined to find out what it was that was disturbing Red so much.

Elizabeth knew Red and Dembe were home. They had arrived over an hour ago, but after dinner, the house had fallen silent.

Where she normally was comforted by the silence, tonight, she felt unsettled. Something was in the air and it left her feeling anxious and nervous.

She reached instinctively, rubbing the necklace which had yet to be removed, since Red had gifted her with the precious stones. Worrying the gems with her fingers made her feel slightly calmer.

But nothing took away the strained atmosphere surrounding her.

What unsettled her the most, was the quality of the silence.

Something was definitely amiss.

Nearing Red’s office, Liz heard the slide of metal on metal, then a heavy click as the two pieces met. She saw Dembe first, dressed in what appeared to be all black combat gear. Aside from his black t-shirt, he wore tactical pants and a long sleeve shirt both lined in pockets. Heavy boots completed the outfit.

The man had just dropped a clip from the weapon into his hand, checking it’s contents before sliding it back into its proper place.

Coming further into the room, she saw Red dressed in the same manner, a little less put together than she was used to seeing him, granted.

His sleeves were casually rolled up and his pants scrunched down on top of his open and unlaced boots. He looked attractively lethal.

She had started noticing these little details about Red, about a month ago. It bothered her.

After a few inner psych sessions, she put it down to having a minor crush on his confidence and abilities. Now when it happened, she didn’t try to deny the attraction. It was pointless. The more she tried to distract herself from doing so, the more she thought about him.

He turned in her direction, shotgun in hand, into which he loaded, shell after shell. The muscles in his arms rippled with the action. Extra casings lined the barrel, side saddles filled to capacity.

“Isn’t that overkill for some late night squirrel hunting?” she enquired lightly.

Red raised his head, looking at her steadily. “Not if they’re also armed.”

He picked up a handful of clips, loading the pocket sitting on his thigh. He grabbed another handful, doing the same to the other leg. “Dembe. How many do you have?”

“Ten clips, fully loaded.”

“Grab more. I’d rather be over prepared than not.”

“Oh, what the hell is going on?” Liz watched them load more clips into the front pockets on their jackets. “And what’s with all the firepower?”

“We’re aiding Ressler and Navabi in their little operation tonight, apprehending their newest Blacklist member.” Red bent, fastening a .45 to his outside thigh.

“It still doesn’t explain all the...” She indicated the men and the desk littered with weaponry.
“You’ve never gotten this involved.”

“I’ve grown fond of Navabi and Ressler, and wish to help if possible.”

“Uh huh, who is he?” she demanded, her arms folded across her chest, her expression no-nonsense.
“What does he do?”

Red looked at Dembe, motioning that he could go, lest he be caught in the crossfire.

“Ah, no you don’t. Get back in here Dembe.” The man hesitated mid-step, turning around slowly.
“Aren’t you forgetting something?”

Dembe looked at Red, then the woman, obviously lost.

“I know you both look hot just the way you are,” she lifted knowledgeable brows, “but if I were you, I would put a bullet proof vest over that cool exterior.”

Red hid his grin, handing the quiet man the required vest. Dembe removed his jacket, slipping it on over his black t-shirt. Red helped adjust the torso and shoulder straps to a comfortable tightness before tapping the man on the neck, letting him know the job was finished.

Dembe slipped his jacket back on, buttoning it back to his desired height. “I’ll go load the car.”
Grabbing a few bags, he walked out.

“Red, don’t think I’ve forgotten what I asked.” she tapped her foot impatiently. “What the hell are you doing?”

“Contrary to popular belief, I used to do this on a regular basis.” she was informed. “And a hell of a sight more involved than what’s happening tonight.” the man sat in the chair, pushing his pant leg out of the way, yanking the laces on his boots, tying them tight.

He stood, letting the long pant legs fall over the boot, glancing around, checking the room to see if anything had been forgotten.
“If you don’t tell me, I’ll just call Aram. He’ll spill everything.” she came up beside him, looking up to his full height.

Red hesitated visibly, biting the inside of his cheek, his eyes trained steadily on the upturned face. “...Patrick O’Brian, an arms dealer with a very bad Irish temper, made even more so, when threatened with arrest.”

“How is this our case? The FBI?” she questioned. “An arms dealer? How did you even get involved in this?”

“This one is personal.” he nodded, his eyes staring off into the distance.

She digested that tidbit of information. “Personal?”

Could this in any way, have to do with her, she wondered.

“He shot Francis a few months back.” Red shifted his eyes back to his inquisitor. “That is something I simply do not abide.”

The woman opened her mouth to question yet again, but Red waved it aside, continuing.

“Samar thought Donald and Moore weren’t taking me seriously enough when I was explaining how dangerous O’Brian is, how well armed. She asked if I was going to be there.” He drew in a cleansing breath. “I took it to mean, she would appreciate the support.”

“Is he that dangerous?” Liz asked quietly, her head dipping slightly as she contemplated the implications.

“Yes.” He dipped his head, catching her eyes once again. “I can’t let her go into this alone. She needs someone she can trust.” He took off his button down flack shirt, leaving him in a similar black tee, one which matched Dembe’s. “The tip came from me... I’m responsible.”

“Why didn’t I know about any of this, you said that you’d let me help.” She turned around, pulling his vest, unable to pick up the heavy weight with one arm. Red came over, lifting it easily, shrugging into the confines.

“I didn’t tell you because I knew you’d worry, like you are right now.” Even though he could adjust the vest himself with his eyes closed, he stooped so she could attach his straps, giving her a feeling of control.

“Just... be careful.” She pulled the flap, tightening it. “And the minute you’re done, you’ll call me?” She asked, rubbing his shoulder to secure the velcro to her satisfaction. Her hand remained for several seconds on the warmth of his body.

The simple gesture somehow reassured her, that at least for the moment, he was safe and unharmed.

“Everything is going to be fine, Lizzy. We’ll get your team home safe and sound.” He put on his shirt and started to unroll his sleeve when Liz stopped him, straightening it herself before buttoning the cuff.

She rolled down his other sleeve, patting his arm when she finished.

His eyes softened, enjoying these little touches of intimacy that she had been bestowing on him lately such as holding his hand, a hug and now this, touching him without cause.
Touching him to feel a connection with him.

“It’s not just them I’m worried about, and you know it.”

Red smiled warmly, tracing the necklace he gave her with his finger, then grinned. “You think I look hot?” he deflected.

Her eyes filled with worry, saying more than any words could.

Red cupped her face with his large palm, smoothing her cheekbone with his thumb, “It’ll be fine.”

He leaned forward and kissed her forehead lingeringly. He nuzzled her once, then turned, walking from the room.

The man’s actions frightened her. He’d never done that before. He’d hugged her, held her hand, even kissed her temple.

But kissed her forehead... nuzzled her. Lingered like he had.

Why did he... she felt a overwhelming dread filter into her soul.

_He didn’t think he’d be coming back._

She hobbled down the long hall, hearing the man’s low voice. “Watch her.” Red stated as he passed a solemn looking Silas.

“Red...” She called breathlessly, balancing herself on a nearby table.

“Sweetheart, did they take your cart again?” he sent a scathing look to Silas who shook his head negatively, his expression annoyed.

Nodding to the two men who had fallen into step beside him, they grabbed the rest of the gear and headed out, closing the door behind them.

The man stepped, closing the gap between them, “What’s wrong?”

“Trust me, I’ll be more than alert when this begins.” he was certain. “You know Samar has a better chance with me there. Ressler has his head up his ass again.”

He purposely avoided remarking on the rest of what she’d said, since there was a good possibility that someone would get injured.

It made her angry that she couldn’t argue with him, especially since he was right. If he was this adamant about going, she knew, aside from Samar, no one was really taking Red’s warning seriously and the whole team would be in danger if Red wasn’t there.

Even still, someone was going to get hurt, somehow. _She felt it._

She took a couple of hobbling steps closer, then wrapped her arms around him, the crutch dropping forgotten to the floor as she hugged him tightly. “Please be careful.”

The moment lengthened, the woman loving the feel of his arms around her.
He squeezed her back, running his hand through her hair as he cupped her head.

No words passed between them.

She knew... he couldn’t promise anything. He wouldn’t give false hope. He wouldn’t lie to her.

She finally relaxed her hold, stepping back. She hugged herself tightly, her entire system attuned to the man’s presence.

She watched him walk away.

Red hesitated at the exit, turning, staring at her silently. Their eyes met and held, Liz’s heart turning over in her chest.

He closed the door behind him.

“Come on...” Liz growled into the phone. “Pick up.” One more ring and she finally heard the line click. “Samar!”

“Liz?”

“Is Red with you?”

“No, I’m behind him, we’re–”

“I know where you’re going. I want you to keep me on the line.”

“Gonna be a little busy in a minute.” the woman snapped her pique.

“If I can’t be there, I can at least hear what’s going on.” Liz pleaded.

The silence was uncomfortable for both parties.

“You have your vest on?”

“Of course, I do.” Samar answered impatiently.

“Just put the phone in the vest. Please, Samar.”

Samar sighed, “Fine. But if it gets in my way, I’m tossing it.”

“Thank you. I just... I can’t sit around here and not know what’s going on.”

“We’re pulling up.” Liz was advised.

“Samar, good luck.” she added hastily, as an after thought. “Don’t tell Red.”

She heard the dinging of Samar’s door as it opened, then the sound of the phone as it slid against stiff cloth.

And so it began...

“Samar...” Liz heard Red’s deep voice greeting the other woman, getting right down to business. “How many clips do you have?”
“Three.” there was puzzlement in the musical voice.

“Dembe...” Red’s own voice held his concern. Liz could hear the exchange of metal.

“You really think I’ll need all these?” Samar’s tone was tinged with surprise.

“I think you’ll need more.” Red assured glumly.

Liz heard velcro being pulled, probably on Samar’s vest as she put the clips Dembe had given her inside.

The phone was suddenly muffled and Liz knew it had been dropped inside a convenient pocket. “We’re carrying more ammo.” it was advised. “I want you to stay behind us and cover our backs.” Red directed.

“Should I remind you, that I’m the one that’s FBI, here.” Liz could hear the smile in Samar’s reply.

“I don’t care what acronym you attach to your name, as long as it isn’t DOA.”

Samar sighed, “Look, I really should go first.” she practically insisted, feeling rather foolish.

“No. You listen to me.” Red corrected sternly. “Considering there’s a very good chance we won’t walk away from this, you more than anyone else here, deserve a chance of surviving.”

“Why would say that?” the woman was both flattered and insulted. “I am no different than any man here.”

Red’s eyes raked the woman’s body. “You aren’t a man.” Reddington was not being sexist, just... Reddington.

“You’re serious...” Samar was flabbergasted.

“Very serious.” he indicated with his expression. “You stay behind us, Samar.”

They both fell silent, making Liz wonder what the hell was going on.

“We should get wired.” Samar popped the trunk on her car, then Liz heard her rattling around, obviously pulling out the radios and ear pieces.

There was a moments silence, as they adjusted their equipment.

A sharp squeal came through the speaker on Liz end, hurting her ears. She cringed, holding the phone away hastily.

“What the hell!” Red bitched.

“Just a minor interference.” Samar covered quickly. “It’s Ress.” the woman calmed her two companions at the arrival of a black SUV.

“What are you doing here?” Liz heard Ressler as he joined them.

“Now, what the hell do you think I’m doing here.” Red snapped impertinently.

“This is a FBI sanctioned—”

“Save the spiel, Ressler.” Red disdained. “You’re going to need all the help you can get.”
“Yeah, whatever. You just stay behind everyone.” Ressler instructed.

Liz vaguely heard Samar mumble something, “You stay with us, do you understand me.” She heard Red say in response to whatever she had remarked. “Dembe, get her another vest.”

“What’s wrong with what I have.”

“They have armor piercing bullets, that’s what’s wrong with it.” Red snapped. “Ressler, I hate to ask, but do you have an extra vest?”

“Reddington...”

“Damn it! Shut up and listen to me for once!” Red was at the end of his tolerance, his tone saying as much. “Tell the others if they have extra vests, to put them on.”

Liz strained to hear what was going on, “Team leader authorizes to wear extra vests if available.” She heard the team answering the call, then Dembe.

“Agent Navabi.” Dembe’s smooth voice was at it’s usual calm pitch.

Liz heard the sound of Velcro again, then the phone moved.

“No, leave that one on, wear this one over that.” Red directed.

Liz listened to the far off sounds of movement and Velcro being pulled apart and reattached.

“Can you move freely?” Red asked the female Agent.

“It’s a little heavy, but I’ll manage.” Samar seemed capable. “What about you? Do you have an extra one on?”

“We’re fine.”

“That didn’t exactly answer my question.” Samar pointed out.

“Our vests are different than yours.”

Liz’s brow furrowed. She could only hope he wasn’t bullshitting Samar. Surely not. He wouldn’t want Dembe to be caught without adequate protection. But that didn’t mean that Red took the same precautions.

“Don’t even think about it, Ressler.” Red advised curtly.

“What?”

“You won’t get two words out of that thing before they’ll start shooting.”

“I have to alert them that we’re here.”

Ressler was a stickler for rules if nothing else. In Liz’s opinion the result often was contradictory to good results.

“Do you want to get yourself killed, because I can just put a bullet in you right now.” Red suggested happily.

“Reddington, I have to alert our presence and tell them to come out, peacefully.”
“Well, that’s not what’s going to happen if you use that damn bullhorn.”

“Then what do you suggest I do.”

“I suggest you surround the building and start picking them off before they have an opportunity to do the same to you.” Reddington all too easily answered the question.

“And that is why you’re the felon and we’re the law.”

“That’s why I might survive and you won’t.” Red corrected.

“Ressler, maybe we should listen to him.” Samar was always the voice of reason.

“I can’t believe you said that Navabi.”

“I don’t mean we have to shoot up the place. I meant, maybe we should smoke the place out. Handicap them before–”

“We can handle this our own way.” Ressler’s voice was adamant.

“Fucking ‘Cowboy’.” Red murmured his derision.

“What did you say?” Liz could tell Ress was offended.

“You heard me, you little idiot.” Red was not about to back down. “You’re going to get these men killed out of some damn moral code, which none of those men inside have.” he pointed to the target building. “You know what. Do what ever you want...just stay out of my way.”

“Come on, Navabi.” Ressler grumbled.

“She stays with us.” Reddington held the woman back forcibly.

“I’m team lea–”

“She stays with us.” Red all but growled.

“What?”

“Navabi?”

“Get in position, Ressler.” Samar eased the situation in her own manner, her eyes softening for her partner.

Liz heard Ressler start organizing the teams to surround the building before he faded out, apparently having walked away.

“Damn imbecile!”

Liz could feel Red’s frustration and anger through the phone line, he wasn’t even here and she could feel him sucking the energy from the room.

“In position.” Ressler’s tinny voice came through the radio.

“We should go.” Samar said. The phone moved again, sliding into the new vest.

Liz listened to the soft sounds of them moving through the terrain. It felt like an eternity, but in reality, by her watch... it was only three minutes.

A three minutes that felt like a lifetime.
Then she heard the unmistakable sound of Ressler’s voice as it echoed loudly from the bullhorn.

“This is the FBI–”

And just as Red predicted, all hell broke loose.

The sound of muffled gunfire filled the night. Liz could make out the unmistakable reverb of M16’s being fired in continuous volleys. Red and Dembe returned fire immediately, she recognized the sound of the older man’s Browning Hi-Power .40 as it reverberated loudly out of the speaker.

The FBI’s weapon of choice answered the challenge issued. Confusion and chaos reigned, all transmitted through the chatter coming over Samar’s radio.

Liz heard the sharp intake of breath from the woman.

Liz clutched the pillow, holding her breath, the voices of the tactical team talking over one another grew louder as the already continuous shooting, grew more intense.

“Save your ammo.” Red had to be speaking to Samar.

“Is he...?” the former Mossad agent’s breathy voice allowed her concern.

“Unsure.” Red replied. “Need cover fire. Ressler is down.”

Liz was surprised Red seemed to be asking the team for assistance.

“Elizabeth?” Silas entered unexpectedly through the open door. “What the–”

“Shh!” She waved the man silent, turning up the volume on her phone.

She startled at the sound of an explosion which rocked the background, muffling the sound of the weapons fire for a moment.

“Oh my God...” her voice gasped.

It sounded like a fucking war zone. Not Washington DC.

Silas walked over, reaching for her phone. “You shouldn’t be–”

“No...” She held the phone out of his reach, her eyes pleading with him. “Please...”

Silas crossed his arms, frowning hard at her, but at length... he pulled a chair over to sit beside her, knowing a lost cause when he saw one.

“Idiots!” Red swore under his breath. “Ressler!” he barked into the comm-link. “Donald!” he tried again. “Fucking useless! He’s either not hearing me or he’s not listening, again. Come on.”

Liz lost the sound of what was happening because of all the intense snapping, cracking and popping of the fight, the spent casings tinkling to the ground, the constant barrage of gunfire shielded Red and Dembe’s movements.

The woman was lost for a goodly while. She looked desperately to her right for some sort of support, but Silas sat calmly, unaffected by what was going on around him.
“They’re checking the roof lines.” Silas muttered.

“Got him.” She heard Red’s deep, calm reply, before a shot rang out.

“Stay where you are, Samar.” he directed. “Can you tell...is he breathing?” Red asked of someone.

“Yes.” Samar replied. “Just a leg wound.”

“Give me his weapon.” Red demanded of the woman. “Whoo...” he whistled.

Silas grinned retroactively.

Liz’s brow furled, wondering what had happened. It suddenly dawned on her, however... that high pitched whistling sound she’d heard before...when Carver fired at them. It had rushed past Red in quick succession, sharp bursts, as bullets cut through the air.

Which meant, he, Samar and Dembe were right in the thick of it all.

The woman clenched her fists, her entire body tense and on alert. Somewhere in the mix she had lost Red’s voice.

“Hey, dumb ass!” she was never so glad to hear the familiar sarcasm barked. “Ressl... umph...” a dull thud of muffled recoil halted the man’s remarks briefly... the a terse, “You little son of a bitch!”

Silas sat straight up in his chair, his body tensing as well.

“Raymond?” Dembe’s voice was laced with concern.

“Ressler, you stupid fuck!” Reddington’s ire was more than apparent. “If you get out of this alive... I’m going to kill your ass!” it sounded like a promise to Silas, who sat back slightly, but was still on edge, clearly.

“We fire, you run, you fucking idiot!” Red had no problem clarifying the directions in this instance.

“Ready!” Ress yelled in reply, his tone tight with determination.

“Now.”

She jerked visibly hearing the loud rapid report of what appeared to be an M4, an assault rifle the Swat used.

“They’re wasting ammo.” Silas commented quietly, then glanced over at her. “Red likes that weapon. And don’t worry, he’s good with it.”

Red was firing that weapon?

“Dembe?” Red’s voice had never once lost the calm exterior he exuded. Well except for when he was angry with Ressler.

“Covering.” the man replied. The sound of a shotgun blasted the woman’s ear drums.

“Where the hell did you pull that from!” Samar yelled out over the din.

“Dammit!” Red’s tone was finally tense. “He’s down.”
“I need to be there.” Silas stated succinctly.

“We need to get closer.” Liz heard Red fire the large tactical weapon again. “I’ll get him, you lay down cover fire.”

Silas sat up in his chair, his leg bouncing nervously. Liz noted the man’s fingers were white where he clutched the thickness of his thigh.

“I’ll go.” Samar yelled out over the sound of Dembe racking the shotgun again.

“Stay here!” Red commanded. “Give us a fucking distraction, dammit!” the man growled his impatience. “Your stupid ass team leader is down!”

Silas shifted his eyes, silently checking on the woman’s condition.

“Samar!” Red lashed out. “Get the fuck back here!”

Liz tried to squelch the panic rising in her chest. The gunfire grew louder and more fierce, sounding like it was closing in on them.

Silas reached over laying a calming hand on her tightly clenched fists. The blue eyes darted to the reassuring grey ones.

“You’ve got to be kidding me!” Red disdained. “Shit!”

There was a rapid succession of Dembe firing the shotgun and the metallic ping of bullets hitting all around them.

“Keep your head down, dammit!” Red barked at some unseen individual.

Liz heard Samar squeak, then a male grunt followed by an even louder exclamation, “Fuck!”

“Reddington?” Samar’s voice was muffled, but clearly alive. “Red!”

“Fuck...” the man drawled softly.

Liz tensed, then heard him firing his weapon. His voice got louder, then she heard the slide as he dropped his clip, then the click as he loaded a new one.

“Is he breathing.” Red stifled a groan.

“Are you–” Samar questioned.

“Yeah...” he sighed begrudgingly.

Liz strained to hear what Samar was saying, but Red fired again. “Lizzy–” he rumbled deeply.

Elizabeth gripped the phone, drawing it closer, “Red!” she called out to the man, “I’m her–” “Shit!” Red yelled. “Get down!” A loud explosion filtered glaringly through the phone before breaking off as the line disconnected, leaving only the sound of silence in the room.

Loud, stifling, silence.

“Red! Samar!” Liz yelled into the phone. “Red!” her nerve endings were alive and thrumming. She instinctively turned to her one avenue of hope. “Silas...” She looked at him, panicked. “We need to go there.” She pleaded.

“We can’t.” he stated bleakly.

“I can’t just sit here.” She begged. “Please!”

“I want to go there as much as y–” he held his temper in check.

“Then let’s go!”

“I don’t know where they are. He wouldn’t tell me.”

“Silas...”

“I don’t know where they are.” he repeated stonily.

Chapter End Notes

I counted the pages for chapters: 31 and 32 and thought they would be INSANELY large chapters if I didn't break them up. Chapter 31 was a little over 25 pages long. And chapter 32 was a little over 50 pages long.

So that chapter 31 and 32 I've been excited about, will now be chapters 31-34. I'm hoping it's easier to read by doing that.

Don't kill me, please.

An hour later and there had been nothing but radio silence. Elizabeth sat stiffly erect, not having moved an inch since last she heard from Red.

Turning the phone over in her hand, she stared at the useless screen. She had never felt so helpless in her life. And that included the night of Carver’s attack.

She couldn’t call them in case they were in the middle of something. Couldn’t even call Aram should he be delivering them Intel.

It was a terrible position to be in. It was the worst position in the entire Universe in which to ‘be’.

Her team mates and friends in danger and her unable to offer any sort of support what-so-ever.

Growling with the aggravation she felt, she threw the phone. The impact, lessened by the pillow it hit, did little to ease her frustration. She stared at the dark plastic, frowning, before snatching it up again, gripping it to her chest protectively. This was her only life-line to Red Reddington.

Steadying herself against the bed, she hobbled a pacing rhythm, willing the phone to ring.

“Please, let them be okay.” she whispered.

She stopped her fruitless path, leaning into the bed. She dropped her forehead into the palm of her hand, rubbing the mounting tension that grew with each passing second. So many silent prayers had been uttered, so many unanswered.

“Dammit Red!” she hissed softly. “Where are you?” her shoulders slumped as the depression descended.

“Lizzy...” the man’s deep voice washed over her like a soothing balm and for a moment, she thought she surely must be hallucinating.

Liz raised her head quickly, finding the man standing in the doorway, filthy, sweaty and...

She blinked at the sudden wash of wetness in her eyes, a flood of relief releasing itself in a shuddering breath as she pushed off the bed, hobbling for the man.

Red caught the door with his fingers, slamming it closed as he quickly walked towards her.

“Why didn’t you call?” She held back tears of relief and joy, before wrapping her arms around his neck. “You promised.” she whispered sacredly.

“Ressler’s a damn idiot.” Red grumbled irritably, tossing his broken phone to the table top beside them.

He sounded so pissed. So agitated. So vital. So alive.

She gripped him around his neck, hugging him harder. Happy that he was all those things and not... she didn’t even want to think it.
“If someone doesn’t tell me what the hell is going on...” She felt herself about to snap, not above voicing the fact to any and all.

“I plan to,” he dropped his nose further into her neckline, breathing in her delicate scent, “now be quiet for a minute.” His voice was slightly muffled, the warm breath fanning her skin.

He just needed a minute, to gather his thoughts. To feel her.

Red nestled his nose into the woman’s neck, his lips brushing her silky flesh. He relaxed into her soft warm curves, so very relieved to be home and with her again.

Red tightened his arms around her back, lifting her feet off the floor slightly before walking the short distance to the bed. Her toes caught the top of his boots, at one point, as she rested her weight on the gritty leather.

The man smiled, his lips momentarily caressing the shell of her ear.

Tonight had been... interesting. A fucking joke, truth told.

This was the first moment of sanity he had felt all night. He reluctantly gave her the opportunity needed to break the embrace, hoping like hell she would not take it. But fortunately, Liz seemed to need the closeness as much as he did.

She held tightly to his form, her soft breath fanning his neckline. Elizabeth breathed in the subtle masculine scent of cigars and the mellow spice of cologne, relaxing further against his solid mass. She nuzzled her nose into his jacket, cool from the crisp night, finding the man’s warmth hidden beneath, ever so comforting.

He swayed with her a minute before she finally relaxed, loosening her hold enough that he could set her down fully. She stepped down from her perch on the boots, her eyes raking the tension in his face anxiously.

When he stepped back, once from her influence, the memories of the evening resurfaced, leaving the man fuming...an acid taste in his mouth.

“Before you start spouting off a hundred questions, let me finish talking.” He put his hands on his hips, taking a few short steps, before turning around, just short of pacing.

Liz did not like his curt tone. He had never spoken to her in such a manner.

“I’m sorry.” He apologized instantly, realizing he was taking his mood out on the wrong person. “I’m just damned... pissed.”

“I noticed.” She clamped her mouth shut when the curt glance cut her way. Within seconds, the mood seemed to pass however and the softer gaze rested on her.

“First of all, Patrick and what’s left of his armed bandits are with your people.” he began, filling her in on the events of the night.

“We went down to the warehouse, surrounding on all sides, Samar was with us, luckily, on the South side.” he thanked the God’s That Be. “Ressler didn’t even get four words out of that damn bullhorn, which I insisted he not use, before all hell broke loose.”

Red walked to the end of the bed, scratching his jaw, gathering his thoughts. Calming down.
“Bullets were coming from all directions, just as I said they would.” the man’s jaw tightened in open annoyance. “I told Ressler we were on his six, and because he never listens, he didn’t hear the call.” he cricked his head this way and that.

“We got in position and Dembe started firing off cover fire,” Red regrouped his thoughts. “I stepped out to allow Ressler to see our position, when I guess he saw movement... turned and shot me.”

“He shot you!” Liz came out of her reclined position, instinctively reaching for him, but he held up a staving hand.

“It’s not over yet.” she was jovially instructed. “I yelled at the idiot... explained what we were going to do, then started firing everything we had and what does he do?” his hands spread out before him, his expression astonished. “He ran.”

“Ten foot out, he went down. Pretty hard, it knocked him senseless. More senseless then he already is, anyway.” it was a given. “But it was enough that I had to step out of position to grab him, the men inside were purposely aiming for him or that damn bullhorn, I couldn’t tell... and about that time I thought along similar lines to be truthful.” he stepped for a breath.

She opened her mouth, then closed it quickly.

“What?” He asked, having noticed. She started to ask her question then hesitated again. “Go ahead.” he bade.

“Are they... Ressler, Samar? Did anyone...”

“They got Ressler in the back, twice. But, I insisted that they double their vests, it probably saved his life.” he stopped pacing quickly to inform her stoutly. “No, it did save his life.”

He fell silent for a moment, “The rounds went through the first vest. He’ll have a painful bruise, but he’s alive. Samar might have some minor bruising from when I pushed her down, but otherwise she’s fine.” he stopped pacing, his head bowed for a moment.

“No one died.” he waited a second for her to assimilate. “Though, there were injuries.”

“I told the other teams to distract them, that we needed to grab Ressler. At which point the North team came up with the most idiotic plan in the history of Warfare as we know it.” again his hands motioned expressively. “They stormed the building.”

“Men came pouring out all three sides of the building, shooting at everything and anything. It was hell on earth Lizzy, I tell you.” he was on a roll. “I went out to grab Donald, with Samar’s help, when one of Patrick’s men got her in his sights. I blocked her and he got a shot in on me before Dembe put a bullet in him... The End.”

“Red, are you telling me you have been standing there, this whole time, knowing you’ve been shot... twice?” she was aghast.

“Don’t panic.” He pulled off his jacket, revealing his left arm slick with blood.

“Dembe!” Liz yelled out, her voice carrying through the closed door.

A few seconds later Dembe opened the door, carrying the first aid bag, heading directly for Red.

“Why aren’t you sitting?” She pushed at Reddington. “Make him sit.” She gestured at Dembe.
All the annoyance Red had felt in the last two hours started to fade, melting away to nothing as he watched the woman fidget and bully him. Liz crawled around on her knees, following him, pushing him towards a bench at the end of the bed.

“Did I just say not to panic?” Red looked at Dembe, “She’s doing exactly what I told her not to do.”

Dembe’s mouth lifted at the corner, pointing to the bench indicating Red should take a seat. But the man shook his head.

“I don’t want to get blood on it.” it was stated. “That’s a twelve hundred dollar bench.”

“Who the fuck cares about the bench!” Liz had mentally swept the man’s frame but the black material of his garments hindered her search. “Where else were you hit?”

“Did you just say fuck?” Red held his laughter.

Liz pulled at his shirt, bringing him back towards her after having just pushed him away.

She examined every part of the man available, all areas clear except for one enormous gash running across his arm. Running her hands quickly over his stomach, she grazed his hips to the top of his thigh.

The fabric was tacky with the man’s own blood.

“Take off your pants, Red.”

“Well I guess she did say fuck.” he chuckled at his own wit, allowing her every whim. His innate sense of humor came to the fore as he watched her hopelessly fumbling with his belt buckle.

“I’ll fuck you!” she blasted with a scathing look, but then Dembe’s muffled laugh, she realized with horror, what she had just said.

“But darling... now?” Red smiled tenderly, not stopping her actions, finding them oddly endearing, “Dembe is in the room.”

“Like that would matter.” Dembe voiced sotto voce.

“Shut up.” She muttered while pulling the buckle open.

“Sorry.” Dembe apologized.

Liz looked at him weirdly for she had not heard his quiet statement. Red’s grin widened... because he had.

“They’re only flesh wounds, Lizzy.” He placed a hand over her shaking ones, not to stop her, but to reassure her. “Nothing to worry about. Really. Calm down.”

“The arm can wait until you’re out of the shower.” Dembe had made that decision, dropping the short sleeve back over the wound.

“I think I’m going to need a towel, please.” Red glanced over at the large man.

Dembe returned with a dark towel, sitting it on the bench.

As Red sat, he sensed Elizabeth crawling closer, seating herself just behind him on the bed, hovering.
How long had it been since someone had given a damn about his welfare, besides Dembe? His wife, maybe? Certainly long enough he couldn’t remember exactly. It warmed him to be thought of again as a human being.

He felt bad that she was so concerned, but in time she would see it was nothing and he was fine. He needed to enjoy this moment in time, no matter how selfish.

“Jesus, Red.” Liz reached forward, tracing the hole in his vest, her probing releasing a stray spent bullet. The copper slug fell unceremoniously to the floor. “You took one in the back too.”

“Must have been when I blocked Samar.” he imagined. “It’s fine, Lizzy. I didn’t even feel it much.” He sing-songed his head, pulling the velcro at his shoulder while she undid the sides on his vest.

Dembe took the heavy weight. Red pulled at his laces, removing his boots, then grimaced when he felt the cool air hit his wet sock. Pulling the sock off, his hand and foot came away streaked with blood... Not good.

The woman noticed immediately, gripping the neck of his shirt, balling it in her fist.

“You’re choking me, sweetheart...” He soothed, patting her fist comfortably.

The woman gasped, releasing his clothes instantly. “I’m so sorry!”

“No worries, but I want to let you know...” He wiped off his foot before popping the buttons on his black pants, gingerly pulling them down his legs, “I actually tried that once in Bangladesh.”

Dembe rolled his eyes expressively, “It was not Bangladesh...” he exasperated.

Red grinned over at him. “It all begins to blur... the lack of oxygen, you know.”

The woman’s fist returned post haste to the man’s shirt collar, this time practically strangling him. Red coughed once, easing her fingers off the material.

“A flesh wound my ass!” Liz gasped, seeing the through and through on his outer thigh. “Ressler did that?”

“The little bastard.” Red poked at the wound, pushing a fresh flow of blood from the openings, catching it on the towel. “If he thinks shooting me is going to stop the ‘Donald is a Dumbass’ jokes, he is sorely mistaken.”

He walked into the bathroom holding the towel in place, followed closely by Elizabeth who was supported by Dembe. The large man placed his ward on the bathroom seat.

Red shrugged off their intrusion, stepping into the shower. He removed his t-shirt and boxers, then threw them out onto the floor. Stepping under the hot stream, he hissed when it hit his leg.

“Why didn’t the medics take care of that on scene?” Liz asked over the sound of the shower.

“Because he did not tell anyone.” Dembe said disapprovingly. “I only found out about it when we were several blocks away.” He grabbed a couple of towels, standing outside the stall.

“It’s not like I haven’t been shot before.” Red pressed heavily into the wound, producing a fresh flow. “And I’m positive it won’t be the last.” He rubbed the soap around his body, happy to get the grit of the evening off.
Shutting the water down, he stilled. How the hell was he going to get out of here tactfully? She was sitting just out there and now wasn’t the time to discuss the past... he wasn’t ready to discuss anything besides tonight’s events.

Wiping the water from his eyes, he was grateful when Dembe’s arm enter the stall, holding fresh towels.

He breathed a sigh of relief.

Thank God for Dembe.

Red grabbed one, sloughing the water, then wrapped the other towel around his shoulders. Coming to the edge of the shower stall, he saw Dembe blocking Liz’s view, allowing him a straight shot to the closet.

He grabbed some clothes slipping them on hastily, then left the sanctuary.

Dembe pointed to the side of the tub, indicating he should sit there. “Put your leg in.” He shook the disinfectant, waiting for Red to get in position.

Liz came up behind them, placing her hands on Red’s shoulders, craning over his head to see what was happening.

“Are you ready.” Dembe popped the cap on the bottle, tipping it towards him.

“I shiver with antici...” He turned his leg for better access, bracing himself. “…pation.”

Dembe pursed his lips slightly, “Not bad.” critiquing Red’s performance before pouring the burnt orange disinfectant directly on and around the hole without warning.

“Fuck...” Red tensed, groaning deeply in his chest before dropping his head. He breathed through the shock, finally deflating when the pain ebbed.

It didn’t hurt that little hands were rubbing his neck comfortingly.

“He performed in Rocky Horror once at Summer Stock.” Dembe explained, ignoring Red’s reaction all together. “He did Magenta... of course.”

Red nodded agreeably. “And I played the part of Riff Raff.”

“Are you okay?” Liz ran her hand over his head, settling her palm on his neck, her mood much improved. She knew the ‘performance’ they gave was for her benefit.

He exhaled, then nodded that he was. “I’m going to beat the hell out of Ressler.”

Dembe came back to his side, supplies ready. Working quickly, he had the leg and arm fixed and bandaged in no time.

“Just like the Chinodos Incident.” Red remembered fondly. “We only had the simplest of supplies, but somehow he got me patched up and out the door before the shit really hit the fan.” He gave the man a ‘thumbs up’. “Good work, Dembe.”

“What is it with you guys and incidents? Does anything ever turn out to be good?” Liz’s tone was more shrill than she could account for.

“I don’t believe we’ve ever really had anything go completely South on us. It’s just that none of them have ever unfolded according to the original plan. There for, becoming the incident.” he ‘air quoted’ with his finger. “Thank you, Dembe. Why don’t you go get some rest now.”

“If you need me...” The dark man stated before wishing them a good night.

Red finished wiping off his leg and arm, then got off the tub before moving on to his nightly ritual as though nothing untoward had happened, his little shadow watching him the whole time.

“Are you all right?” He finally asked the silent woman.

“Not really, no.” She said, suddenly realizing as much.

“What’s wrong?”

They moved out of the room unto the bed, slowly but surely.

“I felt useless. I didn't know what was going on. If anything was wrong, I couldn't do a damn thing to help.” She replied in one breath.

“Everything turned out fine.” he reached, flipping the light off.

“I don’t know if you noticed or not, but you have a hole in your thigh.” She griped, turning out her own light.

“But, I’m still breathing, as is the rest of your team, which makes it a good night.” He listened to her deep breathing, almost wishing he had left his light on to read her face. She was either pissed or understood and was reconciling herself to the fact that even if he had a couple of wounds, the night had turned out okay in the end.

“I was listening.” Liz blurted.

“Excuse me?”

“I called Samar before she met you, I told her to keep the line open.” she confessed. “I could hear what was happening.”

“Elizabeth..”

“Don’t you scold me.” She warned.

“I wasn’t going to scold you.”

“You only call me Elizabeth when you want my attention, you’re annoyed or wanting to make a point.”

“I do not.” He smiled slightly, now glad it was dark in the room so she couldn’t see it.

“Well... most of the time.”

“I’m just worried for you. What if you heard someone literally go down.” he did not like to think about the psychological implications. “You couldn’t help them, you couldn’t do anything for them. It would have eaten away at you.”

“I just couldn’t sit here and not...” She sighed heavily. “Thank you... for helping them. Protecting Samar.”
“Umhmm.” He hummed his reply.

“The explosions?” she asked.

“Flash grenades.” Red shrugged. “Though, if I’m right, O’Brian’s men may have thrown a few pipe bombs into the mix.”

She groaned quietly. Red turned his head to seek her out. He could only see her silhouette, but enough that he could tell she was covering her face with her hands.

“I heard you get shot.” she stated her agony, reliving that moment in her mind. “I didn’t connect it at the time, but I just replayed it and...”

“Lizzy...” he sighed, “let it go. We’re all fine.” He lay silently, his arm supporting his head. He felt her move, the warmth of her body infiltrating the t-shirt he had donned as she snuggled close, her arm laying gently upon his chest.

“You said my name.” she whispered.

“Yes...” he remembered. “I said your name.”

“I’m really glad you’re okay.” She mumbled in his ear, before dropping a lingering kiss on his cheek.

He pulled his arm out from behind his head, wrapping it around her. “So am I...”

Because if she was like this and he was all right, what would she have been like had he died.

A question he had not asked himself since he’d been married. But like with his wife, he now had this person, this woman, Lizzy... relying on him to be here, with her.

She didn’t know and wouldn’t know, how close he came to catching a bullet, where that question would have been relevant.

It had been damn near impossible to walk away from her, not just once, but twice.

He didn’t know if he could deny her again, because he almost hadn’t tonight.
April 18

Liz sat in the gazebo, breathing in the fresh spring air, smiling at the passing guard. She kicked her feet up and cracked open her book.

Red had bought her the entire works of her favorite author and she couldn’t wait to dive into them. After reading the first, she was starting with the second in the trilogy that she’d been dying to read.

She hoped that the second part held glimpses of the characters from the first, just to know how they had progressed in their relationship.

And now, two chapters in, she was so glad she had fallen in love with this author, because the woman sure did deliver.

The characters had a baby on the way, the man showered his lady with affection and the humor Liz had gotten a glimpse of in the first novel, shined through, now that the man was overjoyed in his new life.

This was the woman’s idea of perfect holiday, these past few weeks had been a curative to the soul.

Liz raised her head from her fantasy world as Silas neared, screwing her face up and crossing her eyes as the man passed by.

“Your face will stick like that.” he quipped. “And that’s something you don’t need happening right now... gimp.”

Liz scowled harshly, making the man guffaw with amusement.

“Don’t you have a bridge to troll or something?” she sneered playfully.

Silas grinned at her, “You are becoming more entertaining.” he nodded his approval. “I didn’t expect that to happen.” he crossed his arms, leaning casually against the gazebo’s frame.

“What’s that supposed to mean!” she demanded defensively.

“You were as dull as a wooden knife.” he nodded sagely, obviously agreeing assessment.

She drew her head back, her expression most indignant. “What?!”

“You got your point across, but couldn’t cut the muster.”

“You’ve been hanging out with Red too long.” she advised.

“I’ve been watching you for a while.” the woman screwed up her face at his creepy deliverance of the statement. “While you could tell someone how to profile a killer, you couldn’t catch one.”

“I was supposed to be teaching, not catching.” she defended herself. “And was there a point to your observance, sage Jedi Master?”
“You’re growing grasshopper.” he appeared shocked. “And while you may never surpass me, I still enjoy the game.” he looked off into the distance, totally satisfied with himself.

“Yet, you’re the one who changed the subject.” she smiled inoffensively. “So maybe I did surpass you after all.” she crossed her arms under her breasts allowing her own confidence.

“Well, I didn’t think you’d take to me telling you, being the troll I am, that I’d eat you right up.” the man winked and swaggered away, leaving the woman shell shocked for a second.

Liz snapped her mouth shut, thinking quickly of a response, “Samar would enjoy it immensely though.” she yelled out after the man.

Silas turned his head, a wolfish grin overtaking his face.

Elizabeth held her smile, snorting her amusement after the man had disappeared around the corner of the house. She was so beginning to enjoy these exchanges.

The woman grimaced, slapping the book down on the seat, “Dammit!” she groused. “I should have told him to stay away from Ressler... who we all know, adores trolls.” she huffed her annoyance for the oversight, sighing. Though, on second thought, Ressler wouldn’t stand a chance against this troll.

Silas may be right, she may not always come out on top, but she did enjoy the verbal sparring.

If anything, she took to the challenge and felt herself growing with each passing duel. She had even taken to playing with Red when she felt on top of her game and he had seemed to enjoy the match of wills.

A highlight of her evenings was often when she would throw a good comeback out and Red would beam with pleasure and applaud her wit or valiant attempt, in some cases.

Even when Red, who seemed to have picked up why she was doing it, coached her on a good rejoinder. Instead of making her feel a failure, she instead felt more well informed or armed for her next battle of wits with the head guard.

Red supplied some juicy barbs to hurl at the man.

She couldn’t wait to see Red’s face when she told him of Silas’s latest comeback and it’s sexual laden innuendo.

Sometimes he would roll his eyes at the man’s vulgarity, and others, his face would wipe of expression.

Which was an expression in itself, she had come to learn.

The man had not appreciated the retort Silas had offered, and was holding himself in check.

She’d never tell anyone in a million years, that blank expression was one she most enjoyed.

She knew he was only thinking the guard had over stepped a boundary when talking to his ward.

But she liked to secretly fantasize that he was a little jealous.

She knew she probably shouldn’t daydream about the man, but couldn’t help it sometimes.

Especially when reading some of the books he had purchased her.
There was so much of Red in these characters, his face had taken shape in her imagination when the scenes unfolded in her mind.

And her little secret, didn’t hurt anyone, ‘right’?

Like this story now she was deep into, the girl was honor bound to marry an Earl who’d hired a thief-taker to find her.

The bounty hunter had found her, and in the midst of negotiating her return, he had offered a way out, which was for her to become his lover in return for his protection.

It wasn’t so much she thought Red would take the man’s path. She just thought the character’s demeanor, his outlook on life and society as a whole, reminded her very much of Red Reddington.

Even the very description of the character. His swaggering confidence, his charm, style and good looks, bespoke of Red. His vast wealth wasn’t his true aim in life. It just existed to give him the ability to focus on his goals. And his loyal underground contacts gave him information the local constabulary couldn’t begin to procure.

But most of all, he wasn’t just a bounty-hunter for hire living under an assumed name. He was heir to a title. Two different men, living in one body.

Red Reddington was a felon with an empire at his fingertips. But if what he suggested was true, Raymond Reddington, the ex-Naval Officer, was innocent of the crimes of which he was accused.

A hand curved around her mouth and rib cage tightly, stunning her from her daydream.

“Don’t make a sound.” a low voice hissed in her ear.

She fought against the assailant’s hold, struggling uselessly in the bruising grip. The man pulled her over the short wall of the wooden structure, dragging her towards a means of egress.

Elizabeth kicked out in vain attempt, wincing when her leg ached with the sudden jolting movement. She bit the hand covering her mouth, but it only caused her captor to hurry all the more.

He dropped his hand, yanking the door handle of a car, giving the woman her needed chance.

“She screamed, fighting the man’s pressuring hands which shoved her roughly into the automobile. “Silas! Help!”

Liz wheezed shakily, unceremoniously pushed hard into the framing of the car door, which knocked the wind from her.

“Shut up!” the man snapped. He jerked his head about, hearing a man’s voice repeatedly yelling out Elizabeth’s name.

Then suddenly, gunfire split the air.

Tom slammed the door shut, jamming his key into the ignition. He grabbed her, preventing her intended escape.

The young man pushed his foot to the floor, peeling away from the curb. The back window shattered in a spray of glass. Elizabeth ducked low in the seat, hoping the action would allow Silas a clear shot.

Tom spun, lifting his own weapon firing wildly. Liz hit his arm, jamming it into the car’s seat,
“Liz!” the man gritted. “Stop!”

“Let me go!” she grated in response, painfully biting into his arm.

“Damn it!” Tom grunted his growing fury, his arm swinging out automatically.

She saw the blur of his hand. The warm metal of his weapon connected with her temple and her world shifted into a black void.

Elizabeth blinked, wincing under the sudden light, the throbbing in her head eliciting a slight groan.

A voice came out of the hazy aura still clinging to her, “Are you awake?”

“I should have let Red kill you a long time ago...” she whispered adamantly.

“A simple, yes, would have sufficed.” Tom sighed, then brushed her bangs back.

She jerked away.

“Don’t touch me!” she spat.

“I didn’t mean to hurt you.”

“What did you think hitting me in the head with a gun would do?” her voice was tinged with hatred. “Oh, I guess that’s your version of a love tap, isn’t it?”

“Liz...” the man placated.

“What the hell do you want?” she interrupted heatedly.

“What the hell do you think!” he returned in the same manner. The man visibly tried to calm his responses, hoping to gain control of the situation and the woman. “I was saving you from–”

“The only saving I need is from you!” she stated disdainfully.

“Reddington w–”

“Would never hurt me!” she pushed into her throbbing temple, grimacing. “You on the other hand...”

“Reddington only wants the Fulcrum.” he advised coldly.

“And what the hell do you want. And don’t even think of saying, me.” she voiced her disgust. She had already heard all this before.

“But I do.” he sat down quickly, reaching for her hand, then frowned when she wrenched it away. “I love you Liz.”

“I’m not interested in your form of love, thanks.” her mouth twisted derisively. “The annulment should have been a dead give away.”

“If you’d just give me a chance to explain.” he soothed, moving closer to her.

“Well, go ahead.” she glared at the man, yanking on the chain holding her wrist to the bed. “It doesn’t appear I’m going anywhere.”

“Have you asked Red why he wants it? Has he told you anything about your family? Has he–”

“These sound like questions to me,” she gritted. “Not explanations,” she scowled. “If you know so much, why don’t you just fucking tell me. Because...” she nodded knowingly, “I can tell you for a fact, Red will be here any minute now.”

“Why do you have this blind faith in him?” Tom shook his head piteously.

“Why do you always skirt the issue?” she countered expertly. “Admit it, you don’t know jack shit. You just want me to tell you what I know so you can try to fill in the blanks yourself,” she jerked on the chain irritably. “It’s not gonna happen, so don’t waste my time. I want to go home, now!”

“You sold our home,” he accused.

“Because it wasn’t a home! And never was a home! It was a lie!” she snapped. “That house was nothing but a noose around my neck, draining the life from me!”

She frowned slightly, the words being familiar, but she couldn’t place where she had heard them?

She shook it off, shooting daggers at the man staring sadly at her. She huffed in a flare of annoyance.

“Just like your untimely visits are draining!” She continued her tirade. It felt so good to get some of the loathing she felt for this man out of her system. “I want to go to my new home, with Red!”

“Lizzy...”

“Don’t call me that,” she growled coldly.

“Oh, that’s his little pet name for you,” the man snarled, “isn’t it?”

“Do you want to know his little pet name for you?” she sneered. “Fucker.” she replied readily.

“That’s all he could come up with?” he rolled his eyes.

“No, that was mine.” she announced proudly.

“Let’s go away,” the man smiled disarmingly, changing his tactics mid-stream, “just the two of us.”

She gritted her aggravation, her head falling back into the wall.

The woman dropped her head into her hands, slumping in defeat. Her eyes welling in frustration.

“I want you to leave me alone...” Liz’s tone held her exasperation. “I just want to go home.” she wailed quietly.

“Where would you like home to be?” he was quick to respond. “We can go anywhere.”

“You’re like the plague.” she talked over him. “Or maybe a roach?” she had found a more apropos description. “Nothing will eradicate you, right?”

“You’ll outlive the atomic blast.” she nodded her belief. “Faster than a speeding bullet, more powerful than a locomotive. Able to leap tall buildings in a single bound. It’s Superman. No... it’s Tom, the indestructible roach...” she curled toward the wall, closing her eyes tightly.

She willed Red Reddington to come and take her out of this particular type of hell she now found herself within.

“We can break hold of him,” Tom leaned over her, warming to his narrative, “get out from under his thumb. Away from his lies. The filth he brings into our lives.”

“I don’t want to,” she mumbled, knowing he did not hear her words, “but thanks for asking.”

“Let me take care of you.” the man soothed, reaching out, stroking her hair.

The woman tensed, his touch making her cringe inside.

“What’s wrong, babe?” the man cooed tenderly.

“I hate... no, I loathe, when you call me that.” she had always hated that pet name.

Tom looked at her adoringly, making the woman’s skin crawl. The feeling intensified when he stroked her once again. “You always liked–”

“Stop touching me.” she shivered involuntarily, her voice a husky whisper.

“I don’t think you want me to,” he stated gently, “you shivered–”

“In revulsion.” she gritted hatefully.

The man sighed impatiently, jerking her away from the wall, turning her to face him. The chain snapped loudly, rattling across the concrete floor.

The sound of splintering wood, as a heavy door gave way to a force more powerful, filled Elizabeth’s heart with hope.

Liz’s head whipped about anxiously.

Tom yanked her off the bed, holding her in front of him, using her as a human shield.

The reality made the taste of bile rise in her throat.

“Let her go.” Red Reddington snarled, his weapon steady, the sights aimed directly at his target.

“Slide it.” Tom demanded from behind his shield. “Slide the gun, now.”

“No.” Red stated emphatically. “Are you hurt?”

She shook her head slowly, her eyes focused on the man before her and nothing else.

“Tom, put the gun down before you do something you’ll deeply regret.” Red cocked his head, his tone rather soothing to Liz’s ears actually. “Make the right choice, Tom. But make it fast.”

Reddington shook his head, downing it for a second, his disgust more than apparent. The light eyes were devoid of any emotion except hatred when they lifted.

“We’ve been through this before.” Red narrowed his eyes dangerously. “Only this time, when I get over there, I will take that gun away from you... and then...” he smiled pleasantly, “I will kill you.”

Tom leveled his weapon as the man stalked forward.

Elizabeth pushed her captor’s arm upward as he fired, the shot ricocheting off the cement ceiling.

The woman grappled with the man for control. Tom shoved her hard, landing her into the bed before turning back to the enemy.

An enemy which was already upon him.

Red grabbed Tom’s arm, twisting and bending his wrist, breaking the weapon free. The gun clattered to the floor. Red’s foot kicked it aside, sending it skittering out of sight under the bed.

The enraged man shoved his shoulder into the younger man’s chest, flipping Tom in the air. The man hit the floor, a resounding crack filling the room.

Tom grunted his pain, favoring his side but lunged for the loose weapon. He yelled out sharply when Red’s foot stomped his hand, halting any advancement.

Red thrust his gun into the man’s heaving chest, “I told you...” Red’s breath fanned his face, his eyes black coals of rage, “if you so much as looked in her direction again, I’d put a bullet in you.”

“But you haven’t yet...” Tom glared back, his expression wincing from the pain inflicted, as he sought out Elizabeth Keen, “and you won’t, because she’s watching.”

Red looked up at the woman, then back at Tom. “No, that was just a reminder...” he shrugged, “or warning in this case, that I always keep my promises.” the man rasped lowly, pulling back on the trigger.

Tom jerked as the bullet tore through his chest, driving into the concrete floor beneath him. He clawed at the wound, gasping and staring wild eyed at the man.

The young man instinctively sought out Elizabeth, reaching for her.

Red caught the man’s wrist, jerking it back and away. “No, you don’t get to touch her.” he shook his head. “She will not feel guilt for your transgressions.” The man shook his head once as he glared coldly, dragging the man towards the door.

Dembe waited patiently as he had through the entire episode.

“If you please?” Red asked politely.

Dembe took hold of Tom’s arm, dragging the wheezing man from sight.

Red blinked once, feeling a little of his soul melt away. Each time brought the same feeling, the same emptiness, the same apathy.

He watched the large man turn the corner down the way, disappearing from sight before redirecting his attention to the silent woman behind him.

“Lizzy...” he slowly approached, his eyes gentle on Elizabeth Keen who slumped dejectedly on the edge of the bed.

Her shoulders shook as she cried silently. Red’s wing tip shoes entered her watery field of vision.
“Sweetheart?” he frowned his concern, reaching out, stroking his hand over her small head. “I’m sorry, I had to do that, but he woul–”

She bolted from the bed, wrapping her arm tightly around his middle, weeping despondently into his jacket.

“I want to go home.” was all she knew for certain, her fingers tightening into a death grip about the expensive fabric of his coat. “Please take me home, Red.”

Red’s large hand smoothed her hair, his fingers filtering lovingly through her soft strands. He rocked her gently, his tone washing over her like warm honey, “It’s all right.”

She turned her ear into his chest, fixated on the deep comforting rumble of his voice. “Sit down sweetheart.”

She shook her head, clutching him tighter.

“I have to get the cuff off your wrist Lizzy.” he reminded patiently. “You want me to do that, don’t you?” he propitiated the woman. “So we can go home.”

She realized she was still chained to the bed, her arm stretched out tightly behind her. She nodded slowly, sniffing. She regained her seat on the bed dejectedly.

Red crouched down in front of her, making quick work of the lock, releasing the tight cuff.

His thumb caressed the abused, reddened skin. He bowed his head, tenderly peppering her wrist with soft kisses.

“Did he hurt you?” he enquired, his lips warm against her skin.

“Y-Yes.” she had come to terms with Tom Keen’s methods long ago but that did not mean she had to accept or like them.

Red tensed, slowly raising his eyes to meet hers, finding them cold and angered.

She turned her head quickly, showing the man where Tom had hit her. She wanted vengeance she found, and was not above such a petty emotion in this case.

Red reached up, gentling her hair back, wincing as he saw the raw, red welt. His concern was immediate and foremost. “Are you nauseous?”

“Yes,” she muttered, “but not because of that. I don’t think?”

He nodded in understanding. “Dizzy?”

“I don’t think so?” she edged to the side of the bed, intent on standing now.

Red stood quickly, holding his hand out for her. She clasped his hand, the strong fingers giving her strength. She pushed off the bed, trying to find her bearings.

“I think I’m okay.” she looked up at him, sighing deeply.

“Let’s try a few steps.” he encouraged.

She gained confidence with each moment spent in the man’s presence. “I’m good.”
Red looked as Dembe entered, the man’s face showing no emotion.

It was Red’s cue, that the problem had been resolved. He breathed easier, but there were still things to be handled.

Red wrapped his arm around her back and legs, lifting her effortlessly, holding her close against his chest.

“I can walk...” she muttered compliantly, all the same.

She took a deep breath, laying her head into his shoulder silently accepting his word. She relaxed totally into his comforting hold.

“Let’s go home, sweetheart.” Red soothed quietly.

Chapter End Notes

I used some dialogue from the actual show, as I’m sure you picked up on. I am giving credit, where credit is due to the writers of The Blacklist.

You'll know some of it when you see it. Hope no one takes offense. It’s my homage.
April 19

The ride home was quiet. Red allowed her to collect her thoughts, staying close to her the entire time, his arm around her protectively.

She sat silently basking in his closeness, leaned against the fragrant fabric of his outer jacket.

His touch, whether smoothing her hair, surreptitiously folding and refolding the pleats of the gauzy spring dress she wore, felt both reassuring and sensual.

It kept his mind sane. To touch her, to know she was tangible... with him again.

Liz was never so glad when they pulled into the driveway.

Red helped her into the house and back to their room, closing the door behind them... shutting out the rest of world.

“Why don’t you wash up?” he suggested, wishing to rid her of the other man’s touch.

She headed to the bathroom, leaving the door open, stripping her top and bottoms off as she cleared the room.

“Do you need help?” he asked quietly.

The woman hesitated, fighting modesty and a deathly tired sensation. The latter winning out in the end.

“Please...” she finally assented.

Red grabbed a towel and a wash cloth, wetting and soaping it before handing it to her. He turned away, offering privacy. She wiped herself down, ridding herself of the grit and grime of this horrible day.

“Your back?” he asked, his eyes sweeping the lovely plains as neutrally as possible in his present condition.

The man warmed the cloth, stepping behind her. He took his time with the task, enjoying the intimacy implied.

“Let me see your wrist again.” he held out his hand, gently twisting the arm in the light. “Let’s keep it uncovered for a while. If it starts to annoy you, then we’ll wrap it.”

He stretched his neck, craning it slightly, glancing at her temple, his eyes chilling.

“If I hurt you...” the unspoken command was heard before he brushed her hair back, careful to not pull on the dark tresses.

“The skin isn’t broken, but you do have bruising.” he sighed. “Would you like an ice pack?”
She shook her head negatively.

He smiled softly, then dipped his head, kissing her wrist again. “You’re bruised, but you’ll live.” he proclaimed, then stroked her cheek, and kissed her temple.

She leaned into his touch, not surprised to feel him cup her face and press his full lips against the bruising.

She turned slightly, her lips brushing his cheek line.

“Thank you...” she kissed him again, her lips lingering longer than necessary, “for coming for me.”

“I always will.” he mumbled against her skin, his mouth warm on her flesh.

She turned into the affection, the man pulling back, smiling gently. He brushed the strand of hair back into place that had caught on the shadowy coarseness of his beard.

As always, Red was gentle with her. He hadn’t hurt her during his treatment.

He never hurt her... ever.

And he never would. She knew as much now.

She leaned forward kissing his lips gently.

The man froze in place, his senses reeling.

She pressed into his soft lips, then reluctantly pulled back.

“What’s that for?” he needed the clarification himself but was loathe to break the spell.

His warm breath ghosted over her lips, calling her back to his full ones.

She slowly melded her mouth to his softly pliable one. At first, Red was stunned, simply allowing matters to progress as they might but soon enough his senses were pulled into the hesitant, guileless approach.

The man reached out, his hands braced on the bench, moving into her efforts. For one brief second he allowed himself to respond, his mouth increasing the pressure of the kiss, the warm moist lips causing his stomach to react chaotically.

He broke apart reluctantly, his eyes remaining closed for a long beat as he regained his equilibrium.

“Are you sure you don’t have a concussion?” he attempted a lightness he did not feel.

The blue eyes bore into his hypnotically for what seemed an eternity.

“Kiss me.” she whispered unsteadily.

The request clearly stunned the man and he took his time, his expression almost quizzical but then...

Red inched forward slowly, tracing her lips with his own, tormenting her teasingly for minutes on end, until she was breathing shakily.

“This is wrong.” he whispered against her lips. “So why don’t I give a shit?”

She leaned into him, her mouth more than impatient in this instance.
The man grunted his appreciation, sliding to his knees, increasing the pressure of his kiss. His hand slid beneath her dark hair, threading his fingers through the fine strands making her moan against his mouth.

He broke the lock, gasping against her mouth, his warm clean breath tingling her cheek line delicately.

She flicked her tongue, catching his top lip sensually, “I need you...”

“What do you need?” his voice was thick and raspy.

She slid closer to him, her mouth trembling under his expertise, “Touch me...”

His fingers traced her face gently, his arms drawing her closer. He grunted when he felt her little tongue begging for entrance into the warm opening of his mouth.

He flicked the very tip ever so slowly, enjoying her small whimper of delight.

She moaned into his mouth. The man deepened the kiss systematically, his tongue fighting hers for dominance. Liz relinquished control, allowing him to guide where her where he wanted.

This man could kiss.

She felt her body tingle in anticipation of what was to come.

Red stood, easing her along gently, his large hand spreading across lower back. A low growl escaped the man’s throat when he felt her nakedness pressing against the length of him.

A soft mewl escaped her throat when she felt the rich linen and the scrape of cold buttons brush her breasts. His large hands spanned her bare back, as his arms enclosed her securely.

She moaned her dissension, breaking free momentarily, squirming in his embrace.

“Wha–?” he breathed against her lips.

“No...” she grabbed the front of his jacket, pushing the fabric off his shoulders, or attempting the feat.

Red pulled at his sleeves, dropping the expensive garment to the floor while she worked on his tie and dress shirt. His eyes were gentle on her unskilled efforts, as he allowed her every whim.

His nose nudged her jaw line, his lips kissing her throat, his teeth nipping the fragrant flesh here and there.

His fingers grasped her hair in a firm but insistent hold, his hand guiding her gently. He groaned against her nape, his lips sending chills of delight down her spine.

Red slid his hand unhurriedly over the creamy heated flesh of her ample buttocks, his fingers curling to the supple curve. Her moans lengthened in duration as his thick fingers grazed her wet center from behind. He kneaded the tight flesh in his palm, their tongues battling in a fevered kiss.

His arm held her tightly in a prison she had no desire to escape. The woman’s fingers trailed up the muscled biceps of his arm as she tip-toed to ensure the kiss continued.

Elizabeth rocked back into his touch, opening her legs wider for his dexterous hand’s activity. “P-Please.” she found she was not above pleading at this stage.
Red skimmed her ass cheek delicately, his fingers spreading over her tingling, throbbing sex, drawing the growing wetness from her opening.

“That’s my girl...” he purred against her lips. The man cupped her ass in his palms, lifting, his jaw pulsing when her beautiful legs wrapped around his waist.

He supported her weight effortlessly making his way to the bedroom.

Stalking to the bed, readjusting his hold on her lithe body, they sank into the soft bedding.

His eyes locked with hers and for the first time she felt she was seeing the true Red Reddington.

Her stomach tightened in anticipation and she literally vibrated to his next words...

“What do you need?” he grunted against her mouth.

“You.” she gasped tremulously, boldly reaching for his belt, pulling the dark leather apart, their fingers meeting at his zipper. The sound of the metal sliding down was incredibly loud over their heavy breathing, but a most welcome sound.

“Please hurry.” she urged wantonly.

Red pushed her back, following her as their bodies melded together. He dropped kisses along the hollow of her throat, her chest bone, easing agonizingly lower until finally his hot mouth engulfed one straining, quivering nipple.

Elizabeth inhaled sharply, grasping his head, her fingers insistent on the flesh as she pressed his efforts deeper into his pastime.

She bit at her lip, arching into his wickedly talented tongue which flicked and suckled her nipples hungrily. Her mouth fell agape when she felt his clothed bulge brush against her clit.

She withered about happily, rocking up into his crotch.

Liz felt his smile around her nipple feeling the tip of his tongue lick her pale skin, tracing the heavy edge of her breast. He took his time breathing in the fragrant skin before moving downwards.

The man worshiped her tummy before settling comfortably above the mound of her sex.

Red slowed his descent, inhaling her scent in deeply, “You smell so good.” he hummed his approval. “And I bet you taste even better, don’t you?”

“Ohhh.” she gulped, tightening her thighs around his torso, making the man chuckle against her dark curls.

“Let me taste you Lizzy...” he grunted against her electrified skin.

Red grasped her knees, moving them slowly apart. He ran his hands down both thighs to the crease of her legs, his eyes taking in the beauty afforded him.

He savored, the moment causing the woman’s cheeks to flush prettily.

The man laid down, opening her further with is broad shoulders, laughing quietly, nuzzling the hand with which she had covered her sex. He boldly licked the edges of her fingers.

“Show me how beautiful you are.” he mumbled against her hand. “Let me see your pussy.”
His hot breath beat against her trembling hand. She shivered involuntarily, hearing that word from his lips doing all sorts of delicious things to her nervous system. It sounded so... dirty, the way his deep rumbling voice had purred the word.

His tongue broke her out of her revelry as it teased the edges of her folds and thighs. He nudged his nose against her hand, laying wet kisses on her fingers.

“Let me...” he muttered.

She lifted her hand slowly, his mouth replacing the trembling fingers.

“Keep going...” he practically commanded, urging her onward. His tone was thick and husky.
“Want that little clit of yours in my mouth so badly.”

He nudged her once more, uncovering her completely. He drew back, staring heatedly at her glistening center.

“You’re are so beautiful...” he hummed, then kissed the peak of her sex lovingly. “Such a pretty little pussy.” he rumbled intimately.

And then she was in his hot, wet mouth. His tongue rolled along her clit, sliding between her swollen lips, suckling the juices from her body. He grunted against her, vibrating her throbbing clit mercilessly.

“S-Stop...” she arched, pushing into his mouth, giving him added incentive.

The man cupped her ass, lifting her to his desired height, making her legs fall open wider, which pleased him immensely. His face rubbed into her wet skin, the five o’clock shadow feeling delicious on sensitive flesh.

“You taste so fucking sweet.” he snarled then drew her against him. “Love how you feel in my mouth.” he mumbled his contentment, continuing his playtime.

He wrapped his thick tongue around her rubbing and sucking on her throbbing clit. She reached down grabbing his head, rocking against him, riding his face, nearing closer and closer to release.

Red hummed against her sensually, quickening her actions. He readjusted his hold on her ass, slapping two fingers inside her dripping heat.

The sensation rocked the woman to the very core.

She cried out, rolling her hips with more determination. “D-Don’t stop.” she begged.

Red’s tongue widened, covering a broader area. His fingers pressed on a spongy hardness inside her, enjoying the small exclamation of appreciation. His other resting on her breast, his fingers deftly pulling on the hardened nipple.

She clamped her thighs around his head, arching off the bed, feeling a burst of heat rush through her rapidly convulsing tunnel.

Red snarled deeply, sucking the wetness from her. She mewedled in disappointment when his fingers slid free, only to cry out when his open mouth and tongue dove between her folds.

He slowed, easing her back to earth until she shuddered sharply in release, her thighs involuntarily relaxing.
She felt the bed move and Red shift. The man crawled over her reclined form, licking a searing trail up her body, kissing her rosy, damp skin.

His hands pressed her breasts together, licking between the valley he had made then both nipples simultaneously, stiffening the pink tips. He smiled at the tiny peaks before branding them with his ownership.

He leaned closer, resting his weight on his forearms, purposely dragging his hairy chest across her sensitive breasts. She squirmed, nuzzling into the warm scratchy surface, loving the feel.

“Well, I feel infinitely better.” the soft scent of her climax was on his breath which brought a flush to her cheeks and a tingle to her core. “You?”

Her deep blue eyes lifted seductively, her hand reaching between them as she scratched her nails over his chest and stomach.

Red’s head dropped, his eyes fluttering shut, a prurient sound rumbling deep within his throat.

“Not yet...” she whispered, gently cupping his bulge. The man growled appreciatively, grinding lasciviously, pushing hard into her hand.

His eyes opened, focused intently on hers, “You need more?” He rasped hoarsely.

“Yes...” she meekly replied.

He palmed her hand, working it into his open pants and around the rigid and hot flesh of his cock. “You need this?” he corrected almost sternly.

“Shit...” she panted, wrapping her fingers around his wide girth.

“Say it...” he demanded. “You need me.”

“...Yes.” she had no problem agreeing or saying as much.

Red pushed off the bed, thumbing his pant waist, pushing the material of his clothes down his muscular thighs. His heavy erection bobbed in the cool air, drawing her attention immediately.

She licked her suddenly parched lips, her legs opening wider in response.

His erection was long and thick, the huge pink crown pulsing under her gaze, beading with wetness.

“Touch me.” he grunted, leaning into her. Taking her hand himself, he wrapped it around his hot shaft, slowly pumping her tiny fingers. She drew in a shaky breath as he pushed against her hand, spreading her fingers with his girth.

“Does my baby need to be fucked?” he purred, absently kicking his pants aside. “Because that’s what I’m going to do to you.”

Her mouth fell agape, her eyes slamming shut when he raked his thick crown slowly along her slit, the large shaft brushing her thighs.

“You’re so...” she mewed, “thick.”

“And you’re tiny as fuck.” he growled his anticipation, pushing his cock head between her folds, the heaviness feeling phenomenal against her drenched opening. “Shit...” he hummed in approval, “gonna love spreading you open, sweetheart.”
“Oh God...” she prayed fervently that he was a man of his word.

Red inched his way forward, opening her to the pressure of his entrance, “Relax.” he drawled.

He thumbed her clit, his mouth worshiping her nipple, assisting her in the effort.

Red shoved gently, breaching her, sliding silkily into the molten depths awaiting him.

He grunted his amazement.

Liz tilted her hips, taking more of the man inside. A long breathy gasp escaped her pouty mouth, tickling his ear.

“Yes...” he encouraged, his voice a shadow of its former vitality, “open for me.” he coaxed, muttering against her lips. “Let me fuck you.”

The man delivered on his promise, pushing down insistently, opening her wide with his huge mushroomed cock head.

The slow drag of his fat erection raked erotically along her engorged clit.

“Damn...” he breathed sharply, “you feel so warm... So deliciously wet.”

She hummed in open appreciation, rolling against him until he caught her hip, stilling her.

“No...” he strongly advised. “Oh, I’m going to give it to you,” she was assured, “trust me.”

He inched his shaft deeper, growling his arousal, his downy pubic hair brushing her bare skin, exciting the woman to new heights.

“Can you feel me?” he whispered. “Can you feel my cock buried deep inside you. Can you feel my balls pressed against your tiny ass?”

“Yes..” she hissed.

He slid out, keeping his head snugly trapped in the confines of her tight body, then slid back in ever so slowly until he nestled his heavy sack back against her bottom.

“You’re so damned tight.” he sighed his approval. “Love your pussy...” he praised her. “Look how well your little body is accepting of me.” he hummed his gratitude.

Knowing that she was making him feel as good, that he was enjoying her as much as she was him, was very fulfilling. His praise made her not only incredibly aroused, but sexy as hell, sensual. And to be honest, she had never felt that before.

Red stroked her, spreading her each time, bouncing his large sack against her. The man increased the strength and speed of his thrusts.

He grasped her hands, their fingers intertwining, his weight pressing them into the bedding. But she didn’t feel trapped or controlled surrounded by Red’s large frame and his weight. She felt safe and protected, like never before.

His erection scraped against her clit repeatedly, their rhythm gaining momentum. She panted continuously under him, trying to increase the pace of their lovemaking.

But Red stayed even and steady, refusing her the tempo she craved, making sure she felt each and every nuance he had to offer.

“You know what makes this perfection?” he rumbled deeply, delicately thumbing her nipple.

“Humm...” she questioned not only the statement but the unnecessary interruption.

“I’m riding you bareback.” the mellow tone washed over her sensually.

Her eyes flew open wide as the realization hit her full force. He grinned down at her, increasing his speed, fucking her harder.

“Sto...” she gasped her shock. She knew she should push him away, but all she really wanted to do, was draw him closer. Her body craved his touch. And even though he was touching her at every possible advantage place imaginable...it wasn’t enough.

She wanted more.

Her legs wrapped tightly around him, her decision long since cast, as she willingly opened herself more to his powerful thrusts.

“It’s okay baby...” he soothed expertly.

“No it isn–” she cried out plaintively as he gripped her hip, rocking her up into his thrust, dragging her clit against his rigid shaft.

“Does that feel good?” he smiled knowingly. “Is my cock pleasing this eager little pussy of yours?” She moaned piteously in reply. “More...” she pleaded, “g-give me more.”

“I’ve wanted to come in you for so long.” he rasped unevenly. “Wanted to mark you as my own.” he moaned brokenly. “Tell me you want it baby. Tell me you want me to come.” Red’s voice shook slightly. “Tell me you need to feel my heat warm you.”

Red sat back on his heels, positioning her where he needed. His hands gripped the underside of her waist holding her steady.

“Tell me.” he commanded, thrusting hard into her opening, his eyes focused on his pastime.

He was torn, his attention shifting from the beautiful bounce of her breasts to his driving shaft.

He grasped her breast, his hips snapping the underside of her thighs hard, “Let me take care of my baby...let me give her what she needs.” he drove his shaft with short, concentrated strokes, pushing her towards the climax he needed to witness.

“Lizzy, I need to come.” he warned, his focus slightly wavering. “Tell me you want me, sweetheart.” he willed.

She fought in vain, her own orgasm just seconds away. He was in more control clearly and she resented the fact. She wanted him to be just as desperate as she.

“God baby... let me.” he leaned over her, kissing her deeply. “Let me give you what you want.”

The woman stiffened in his arms, a uniquely feminine sound torn from her throat. He felt her climax, shuddering beneath him.
“Yes! God, R-Red!” she cried out, her tunnel pulsing around him, squeezing the fuck out of his shaft.

She rippled in tight waves, rolling along his hot, wet cock. She felt her thick cream bathe his driving shaft, his large head pushing it around his length, coating her thighs and his groin in her cum.

“Fuck!” he gritted, pumping her hard, nailing her little ass to the bed, “Lizzy...” he drawled, filling her with his hot thickened streams of release, “baby...”

Red reached between them quickly, rubbing her clit hard and fast, “Come again...” he gritted. “Come on my cock.”

Red fucked her deep, bouncing her off his shaft until she clenched hard. She gripped the headboard, her back curving off the mattress, pushing her clit into his erection.

“Do it!” he snapped. “Lizzy....

Elizabeth jerked awake, her entire body humming in awareness of the sudden incessant need.

She dropped her hand between her thighs, pushing against herself to ease the ache, feeling a gush of wetness soak her panties. Gasping for air, she found herself surrounded by Red’s scent and his hand resting lightly on her thigh.

“Lizzy?” the man repeated her name, calling for her attention.

The woman’s eyes snapped open, the man’s deep voice in her ear, shocking her into awareness. She had just... Oh good Lord! And Red was...

Oh... shi–

Red Reddington had floated in light sleep state now for about an hour, something keeping him from dropping into a REM stage.

He had felt the bed moving, his subconscious alerting him to something amiss. He finally stirred, reluctant to leave the warmth of a rather pleasant dream. To find Elizabeth caught in her own dream, a rather active one at that. She was moaning and pushing back until she had ended up beside him.

A nightmare, perhaps?

“...A bad dream?” He was slightly concerned.

She shook with aftershocks, her hands trembling. “Uh...” she gasped, swallowing hard, trying to quickly acclimate herself. “No, no...” she stumbled over the words. “I’m–” she exhaled sharply, “I’ll be...” she completely lost her train of thought.

“Well something wrong?” Red frowned, lifting himself to his elbow, slightly concerned for her state.

“Nothing...” she breathed out shakily. “just because of what happened tonight.” she knew he would need a better explanation, supplying the only one that came to mind.

She threw back the blankets, unsteadily edging to the side of the bed.

“You need help?” he asked quietly, his eyes intent upon the darkened silhouette.

“I’m okay.” she whispered. “Just need a second.” she grabbed her crutch, hobbling quickly to the bathroom.

The man dropped his head back into the pillow, sighing. He shifted in the bed, fluffing the blanket and was immediately assaulted by her scent.

Only, this was a new aroma.

And one he knew well.

He had never had the privilege to experience it to date from her though. He would have remembered such a delicate treat.

Each woman, had her own unique fragrance that changed with her moods, Red knew from his many years of investigation into the mystique surrounding the female persuasion.

When Lizzy was happy, her natural scent sweetened to the freshest of bouquets. When she was pissed, the air got musky, salty, reminding him of the wispy foam coming off turbulent waves of an angry ocean.

And when she was sad... he swore he could smell rain. Cold rain on a brisk autumn evening.

No matter her mood, he loved being near her just to bask in that which was Elizabeth Keen.

Because no one could make her scent more permeating than himself. He excelled at such things, especially the anger. The thought amused him. There was a fine line between love and hate they say, he did not mind treading the area what-so-ever.

But this scent... this was the passion of an aroused woman.

His Lizzy smelled of warmed butterscotch and brandy, with a tinge of salt, that was all too telling of it’s origins.

She had gotten aroused. And wet as hell.

Damned wet.

Damned aroused.

He didn’t even have to shove his nose in the blankets, but did anyway to really breathe her in.

And God.... did he wish he was so privileged to bury himself in it.

She was fucking intoxicating.

Seemed Lizzy had a pretty pleasant dream. A dream that had ended in orgasm.

She couldn’t have helped it though. Her nerve endings were all over the place. She was between that place where pain and pleasure collided.

She would have been incapable of distinguishing where one began and the other ended. In Red’s world such a thing usually ended up sending the body into shivers of gratification.

Add to that, her pain pills heightening her dream state...

She couldn’t have stopped it, even if she had awoken before her dream climax. Pain often substituted itself for pleasure in the subconscious mind.
He had been in her shoes so many times, he’d lost count.

He remembered the first wet dream he’d had after a huge dose of narcotic drugs and was blown away by the experience... until of course the pain in his arm and chest had made themselves known. Then he was wishing for the high of the orgasm once again, no matter how awkward the timing might have been.

But this was her first experience with real pain and she didn’t know how to handle it, as of yet. Or more to the point, didn’t know to not be embarrassed by the body’s natural response to pain stimuli.

She needed another pill, that was all. Her pain was making itself known, translating into a vivid drug induced dream.

He rolled from the bed, heading to the kitchen. He grabbed a couple bottles of water and a snack for them both before heading back.

After sitting the plate down, he crossed to her bedside table, tapping out a pill when the bathroom door opened.

“Hey...” she grimaced painfully, attempting a lightness she certainly did not feel at this point.

His eyes softened as he stepped to her. “I know sweetheart,” he soothed, “I know it hurts.”

He wrapped his arm around her waist, helping her to the table, easing her down in the seat. He uncapped the water, handing her a pill. The man held the slippery bottle until she got her fill.

He sat across from her, reaching for the neglected plate. “You need to eat, just a little so you won’t get nauseous.”

“Too late.” she pouted miserably, but popped a grape in her mouth, then a cracker.

He checked the digital readout on her side table. “Fifteen minutes.” he reminded. “It’ll be better.”

She nibbled her cheese and another grape, waiting for the relief he promised.

The ensuing silence wasn’t uncomfortable. But he could feel her awkwardness. But then, and he knew Lizzy.

He knew she was embarrassed. Whether or not she sensed he was aware of what had happened, he did not know.

“You want to talk about it?” he asked quietly, letting her take the question however she wanted to. Either she would talk about her dream, confide in him or...

“I’m okay, just aching.” she sighed shakily. “I can feel the pill working though.”

Too concentrated on her pain, of course that was her focus. The other issue... well, it really wasn’t any of his business.

It was just a dream, after all.

Red watched her intently, his tension easing with hers. The more food she ate and the more the pill took effect, the more the awkwardness dissipated.

“Come on sweetheart.” he helped her from the chair and into the bed. “You need to rest.” he eased her down, grabbing her body pillow, positioning it under her leg.
She snuggled into it, sighing in relief.

He pulled the blankets up around her, bent, kissing her temple. “Sleep, you’ll feel better in the morning.”

She nodded silently before he headed back to his side of the bed, settling in himself. By the time he was relaxed and near dozing, she was snuffling softly in her sleep.

Chapter End Notes

Oh... Liz and her dreams. They're fascinating little glimpses inside her head.

"What do you want Agent Keen? What do you really want?"

Well, it looks like she wants Red to me. How about you? What do you think?
Déjà Vu

April 19

Elizabeth glanced at the books stacked neatly beside her. After last night or more to the point, what happened last night... she was uncertain whether or not to delve into any romance novels as yet.

After breakfast this morning, Red had assisted her to the back garden after she had vehemently vetoed his suggestion of the front gazebo. He had provided tea and a radio before leaving to make a few calls.

She glanced around the scenery offered, enjoying the array of glorious flowers blossoming everywhere she looked.

In the silence of the beautiful surrounding it was much easier to stave off the unsettling events of her dream.

Shaking off the sense of déjà vu, she opened her new book, but it took four chapters before she could really immerse herself into the tawdry tale.

She barely noticed Dembe passing, truth told, but managed a smile of welcome before her eyes fell back to the pages.

She got lost in the story, listening to the soft wind and birds chirping overhead, connecting with the character who was also outside enjoying the spring afternoon.

She caught movement in the corner of her eye, glancing over. She immediately recognized the intruder into her domain, scrunching her nose adorably when Silas came waltzing around the hedge.

“Hey Trouble.” he smiled in greeting. “To the sex part yet?”

“Nope, but I’m closing in on it.” she grinned, then sipped her tea. “Are you?”

“Faster than you are.” he quipped, leaning into his clenched fist and squeezing it rhythmically. “Behind the hedge is my ideal meeting place.”

She pulled her face, “Self gratification doesn’t count.” she rolled her eyes. Her brows suddenly knitted together as she covertly glanced at the hedge in question.

“Says you.” he laughed quietly, noticing her interest in his former place of residency. “Jealous?” he leaned over, tapping her cast. Indicating even if she was of a mind... her injury would hamper any progress.

“No.” her mouth curved in a catlike manner. “I don’t have to do it myself. I can get someone to do it for me.” she batted her eyes coquettishly.

“And yet...” the man tsked, “you’re here every night.”

“Yeah,” she snorted, “in pain.”

Silas sighed woefully, leaning into the bench post, “Excuses, excuses.”
“Puhlease.” she scoffed. “Eating has been a challenge. Sex... that would be a miracle.”

“Because you got any at all?” the man laughed silently, his shoulders shaking.

“No, you dolt.” she snapped. “Just the thought makes me clench–”

“You’re actually supposed to do that, you know.” he informed her knowingly. “It’s the female bodies natural response when fuc–”

“...In pain” she interrupted, then sighed. “I didn’t realize what a–”

“Devilishly handsome man I am.”

“...Depraved floozy you are.” she finished, her mouth pulling at the corner.

“Was that a compliment,” he cocked his head in question, “because it sounded like one.”

“Well, you are good at it.” she had to agree.

“I’m amazing at all I attempt.”

“And yet,” the woman sat her chin in her palm, her brow knitting, “you’re here every morning.”

“But am I here every night? No, I am not.” he taunted. “Besides, I get paid handsomely to protect your scrawny ass, so I’m sure to be here for the shift change.”

“Need that large check for those high priced girls, do ya?” she smirked.

The guard smiled in pleasure at the unexpected quip coming from her. “You’re growing Grasshopper.”

Liz’s brows crinkled on her forehead, her head tilting, a chill running up her spine.

“I’d dare to say, you cut the muster...” he grinned, “for once.”

She jerked in place, her wide eyes falling on the man, before they darted quickly around the expanse of yard.

“What’s wrong?” Silas scowled, her manner alerting him to something amiss. His hand dropped to his weapon.

“N-Nothing...” she looked around nervously. “I don’t think?”

“This is no time for secrets.” the guard gritted his annoyance.

“I-I’m fine.” she scratched at the shivers coursing down her neck, her fingers fluttering along her nape.

Silas narrowed his eyes, looking around with the eyes of a trained observer. All seemed normal.

His scowl turned critical, his instincts kicking in. “I’m going to make my rounds.” he notified his charge, suddenly wanting to run a security check but also hoping to calm her by going on with his daily activities, but it didn’t seem to help.

“Don’t go far... okay?” she asked before he got a few feet away.

“You won’t leave my sight.” he assured. “I promise.”
She took a shaky breath, but did relax some. But not enough for his liking. Something was up with her, obviously.

Something had frightened her. As her guard, Silas needed to know what the threat was.

Damn right he was keeping an eye on her.

The burly man walked to a nearby hedge, pulling the walkie from his belt. He watched the girl fidget in her seat.

She sat her book aside, rubbing her palms against the blanket over her thighs, taking a couple of deep breaths. She glanced down at the blanket then tossed it aside along with a few other items around her, as if clearing space.

“I think your presence is required.” Silas spoke into the radio.

Red came out the back, watching Elizabeth as he neared. He could tell from thirty feet away, the woman was strung out.

Correction, she was wired. She jerked her head to the right when a guard made his usual pass by, jittery as hell.

Red couldn’t fathom what the hell had brought this on.

Even after her... eventful night, she seemed perfectly fine at breakfast.

A few times, she had been unable to meet his gaze directly, true, but basically all had seemed normal.

He caught a glimpse of Silas out the corner of his eye, weapon in hand. The guard was focused intently on Elizabeth, sparing Red a glance.

Red trusted the man implicitly to do his job and do it exceedingly well. But some sort of vibe had been transmitted for him to be on ‘high alert’.

Red walked up behind the woman, laying his hand on her shoulder.

The woman screamed, jerking out from under his touch. “No!” she scrambled away quickly, backing along the bench. “Silas!” she screeched loudly.

The man in question bolted around the large bush, running for her, gun raised, scanning the nearby fences and houses as he neared.

Red scrambled just as fast, grasping her arm seconds before she fell off the curve of the seat.

“I’m not going!” she struggled in his hands, her voice tinged with hysterics, “...Let go!” she pushed frantically on Red’s forearms, screaming again as loudly as she was able. “Help!”

Guards came barreling around corners, weapons drawn, advancing on their position.

“Lizzy!” Red snapped, shaking her once.

The blue eyes darted to his face, filled with panic. In seconds, the woman crumbled visibly, her hands grasping Red’s bare forearms in a death grip.
“Oh, thank God...” she exhaled in relief, her eyes closing. “It’s you.” she was never so glad to see anyone in her entire life.

“Sweetheart, what the hell is going on?” he drew her up, surprised as hell when she clutched him, grasping his shirt in her fingers.

“Sweetheart...” she repeated quietly, dropping her face into his chest. His familiar scent and hold, comforting her instantly.

Red held the woman tightly, bewilderment in his expression as he sought Silas out.

The older man shrugged his own confusion, returning to his duty. He lifted the walkie, both men listening to the chatter as one guard after another cleared each individual area.

Even neighboring properties security gave an all clear on their sides, finding nothing amiss in the entire area.

Which left Red more than baffled by Liz’s uncustomary reaction and quick vocal exclamation.

He cupped her chin, pulling her from her hiding place, forcing her to meet his eyes, “Lizzy, tell me what’s wrong.” She shook her head trying to duck back into hiding before Red stopped her. “Tell me, now.”

“I thought...” she replied shakily, “I thought you were Tom.”

“Tom?” Red scowled. “Did you see him?” he snarled, his look speaking volumes.

Silas checked his men methodically, but the radio only echoed back... ‘all clear’. The guard hovered, protecting his client.

“No.” she muttered dejectedly. “I...”

“What happened?” Red frowned, then narrowed his eyes slightly when he took in her embarrassed expression. “Was it your dream? Was he there? In your dream.”

She blinked up at him, her mouth agape, “Y-Yes...” she nodded slowly.

“He approached you, here.” Red pointed to the covered seating area.

“No,” she shook her head, “the front gazebo.”

Red snapped his eyes towards the head of security.

Silas gently shook his head negatively, signifying no intruders had breached his security.

Red waved him off with a curt gesture, “Tell them to stand down.” the guard lifted the radio, then hesitated. “She had a bad dream last night, and something set her off. Something she saw, heard...” Red rapidly explained the situation as it now stood.

“Like déjà vu.” Silas understood.

“Yes, tell them to stand down.”

Silas spoke into the radio, calling for his men to return to their posts.

Red sat the woman down on the long bench. “What happened, Lizzy?”
She repeated her dream from the beginning, even the part with Silas, eating her up.

“That does sound like something I’d say.” the guard nodded agreeably, then scowled darkly at Red’s subtle shift of eyes.

“What?” the man threw his hands out to the side. “I only meant, I can understand why she felt it was so real.”

Red’s jaw worked in agitation, but he held his tongue, focusing his attention back on the woman beside him.

“Then what happened?”

“Tom pulled me out of the gazebo,” she frowned, “then dragged me to his car and...”

Red listened intently to each detail. She had included how Silas had leaned against the gazebo when they’d had their repartee. Several questions came to mind concerning Tom and his actions.

Something about the narrative didn’t set right with him.

It was a goodly distance to the street. Even in her dream, how had one of the guards not noticed her abduction? Did she feel that unsafe here? Did she not trust them to protect her?

“How did he get you to his car?” he interrupted her narrative.

Liz tilted her head in confusion at the odd question, but pointed to the front. “The gap between the gate and the fence in front.”

She said it like it should have occurred to him, that he should have known what she was talking about.

“Show me.” Red slid her to the scooter before following behind her. Silas walked slowly beside the him, the man’s weapon hung loosely by his side.

“You think Tom knows where she is?” the guard frowned.

“No.” Red shook his head negatively. “But I do think that her subconscious has found a breach in her security and it was bothering her.”

“A gap...” Silas replied slowly, “in the fence.” the man’s tone allowed his skepticism.

“Just like you seeing a point of entry that needs to be guarded.” Red explained. “She believes there to be a gap big enough that Tom can take her away, yes.”

Silas’s brow furrowed darkly.

“Or at the very least, she needs to see that there is nothing there, and it was only in the dream.” Red continued. “She will find her safety and security again.”

They trailed after the woman, encountering two guards along the way. “Joe, David, I may need your assistance, if you please.” Red waved them to join the parade.

The two men fell in line, stopping when Liz hit a shaded part in the fence just a few feet away from the gazebo.

“Where is it sweetheart.” Red came alongside her, looking where the stone wall met the wrought iron fence.

“There,” she pointed, “in the ivy.”

Red walked to where she indicated, lifting the lush greenery then felt his blood run cold.

She was correct.

There was a gap.

A big one, enough to fit two people. Especially when they were Tom and Lizzy’s size.

Silas’s tone was pure ice as he turned towards his men, “How the hell did you miss this?!” he demanded an immediate answer.

“How the hell did you?” Red’s tone was more than frigid.

Silas turned to Elizabeth, kneeling in front of her cart. The woman cocked her head, confused by the man’s formal stance, and even more, the words he said.

“Ms. Keen... this is entirely my fault.” his eyes and face were sincere, his expression grave. “I will see that this oversight is corrected...”

“And you will see to that, today.” Red gritted. “I don’t care what you have to do. I want it locked up tight.”

Silas glanced at the man before returning his attention. “This is inexcusable.” he shook his head slowly. “I have no explanation to give you. Hell...”

“Yes, sir.” Joe replied seriously halting any further words for the moment. “Mr. Reddington, we will see to that immediately.”

Liz looked between the men, startled by the seriousness of their tones and how they addressed Red.

“I want the rest of the grounds checked as well.” Red looked at all three men. “And I mean, all of it.”

David and Joe set off, alerting security to check their sections for breach in the property fence, leaving the three alone.

“This will be fixed Lizzy, I promise.” Red assured her and was pleased to find some ease in her shoulders. “You will be safe here.”

“You’re all freaking me out.” she frowned. “Stop it.” she stressed. “It was just an oversight. Big deal.”

Red gestured to the gazebo but hesitated in his steps. He glanced back, but the woman had not moved one iota. “Not a big deal?” he repeated her lie.

“I will not have you afraid while you are staying here. Most especially in a spot you enjoy.” Red lifted expectant brows. “Come here,” he pointed, “sit with me.”

“Get back in the saddle cowgirl.” Silas nudged her forward.

“What the hell is it with you and all these idioms, metaphors and shit?” Liz screwed her face up at the guard but rolled her cart towards Red without thought.
“I find them to be wonderful distractions.” Silas grinned finally as they edged in under the large gazebo. “A red herring, if you will.”

Liz scoffed disgustedly, rolling her eyes. Red bit the inside of cheek to keep the smile from his lips. He was in no mood to be amused at present.

“Make him stop.”

“Why?” he asked almost sullenly, having well noted the fact Silas had gotten her in a better mood faster than he himself could. “It worked, didn’t it?” he waved at the roof of the gazebo over their head.

“Oh...” she shrugged, glancing about her surrounding only now realizing exactly where she sat, “I guess it did.”

She took Red’s hand, sliding to the bench, though she did inch closer to him.

One step at a time. He thought.

“Now, what happened after you left the property?”

She told him the gory details as best she remembered. How Silas had shot out the window, how she deflected Tom’s return fire, hesitating before admitting that Tom had hit her temple with his weapon.

The man’s eye twitched.

Where Lizzy sometimes blurred the lines where Tom Keen was concerned, it seemed that her subconscious mind was well aware of what a bastard Tom could be.

“Then what happened?”

She told them of their dream conversation, or more to the point, Tom’s incessant babbling and ability to leave more questions than answers.

If she only listened to her inner voice more often, she’d be rid of the man. Red realized.

But then, maybe she was? She had screamed for help. She had said she wouldn’t leave with Tom.

Maybe she had finally seen the man’s true colors? Saw him for the asshole he was?

But it didn’t explain why she had an orgasm?

Unless...

This could go a couple of different ways.

Tom had hurt her, badly, in the dream. And because she was already hurting, it had manifested itself in her body, releasing in the only way available.

Or...

Tom had fucked her in the dream.

And he was gathering by her earlier response and attempt to flee, that maybe it wasn’t consensual.
It would also explain why she could not hold Red’s gaze for a very long period of time.

It was a strong possibility that she felt guilty because she’d climaxed due to what had essentially been rape, and felt betrayed by her own body.

Or perhaps she had climaxed for a whole other reason...

Which was, that she had wanted it. Had wanted to be with Tom intimately. Regardless that he’d hurt her.

How confusing it must be for a woman to feel such conflicting emotions.

He knew Liz was young and confused by everything happening around her. She was searching for a foundation, for solidity. How cold and empty it must be to accept that sort of comfort, from a man like Tom Keen.

But Tom was familiar, something she knew... when the rest of her world was falling apart.

They would never agree or see eye to eye on such a man.

Ever.

Unless of course, she wrote the prick off completely. Would they ever be on the same page, he wondered?

But first things, first.

Making her feel secure again.

“Did he hurt you in your dream?”

“He hit me across the face wit—”

“Besides that.” Red interrupted. “Did he harm you after that?”

“No...”

Red held her eyes, and wasn’t the least bit surprised when she dropped them to her lap, fidgeting with her bracelet.

She was either upset by what had happened or she was lying, and Tom had done more in that dream than she was telling him.

Elizabeth wished he would stop the questions because she did not want to go beyond a certain point. Her dream had taken such an unusual path...it was something personal she simply could not share at this time... if ever.

“You came.” Liz hesitated visibly, the connotation implied brought back vivid memories.

Silas shifted his bulky frame turning his head quickly to hide a knowing smile.

“I mean, that is to say...” she hastily corrected, flushing before lifting those blue eyes, to a patiently waiting Red Reddington. “You arrived on the scene,” she nodded, finding the statement more acceptable, “you shot Tom.” her thoughts wandered momentarily. “Dembe dragged him away before he... he was gasping...” she remembered.

“And then...?” he prompted.

“You got the cuffs off.”

She rubbed at the phantom feeling until Red placed his hand over hers. He frowned hard at the now chafed skin, rubbing it gently, before bowing his head, placing his lips over the imaginary injury.

Elizabeth seemed suddenly unsettled which the man did not miss.

He had triggered something, but what?

“Can you continue?”

“Y-You brought me home...” she stuttered, watching his fingers dance gently over her wrist, “you helped me.”

“I always will...”

She blinked rapidly, the words stunning her because they were the exact ones he used in the dream. She vacantly nodded, watching as he kissed her wrist yet again.

This had happened in her dream as well. He wished he knew what the hell happened after the fact. Because her reaction to his touch, the intimacy, was most telling.

Had this been Tom’s way of ‘apologizing’ for his earlier indiscretion? Most abusive males tended towards such actions.

“What made you startle awake?” he gently rubbed his thumb along her wrist, focusing on her reaction.

“W-What?” she stammered.

“Did something else happen? You woke rather abruptly.”

“You... I...” She darted her eyes away, “I-I don’t remember...”

“Focus.” Red sat forward slowly, lifting her wrist to his mouth, directly in the line of her sight. “Did I hurt you in some way?” he asked.

“You didn’t hurt me, you...” she stressed, then blushed.

“What?” he kissed the scarring again, drawing her attention back to his action. “Let me help you, sweetheart.” he genuinely urged, her cooperation needed in this instance.

Elizabeth’s mouth fell agape, her eyes large and vacant.

“Tell me what you need...” the silky proclamation shook her to her core.

_He must know! He was saying the same words! How could he not know?_

Red felt a slight change in the aura about the woman. Whether it was good or bad, he had no clue as yet. “Tell me what you need to feel safe again. Tell me how I can help you.”

She opened her mouth, then closed it rapidly. The lovely eyes held a measure of hope that had not been there before. He was on the right track. Footsteps behind them, broke the spell.

Damn it! Red dropped his head in frustration. He had been so close.

The cook was announcing lunch and Elizabeth was never so pleased to be given a reprieve.

Red watched her disappear into the house, his thoughts private.

“You know she’s not telling you everything, right?” Silas asked in the most innocent manner this man could ever muster.

“I picked up on that, yes.” Red disdained. “Leave me alone.”

“I thought you’d be a little pleased..” the burly man ignored the directive completely.

“About her having a nightmare...” Red snapped his head to the man, surprised to find amusement dancing in the grayish blue eyes.

“No, about the part where you rescued her.” the man air quoted with his beefy fingers.

“Excuse me?” Red dared him to say one more word.

Silas smiled sweetly, “You got her out. You saved her from Tom.” he explained patiently, eyeing his employer expectantly. He indicated his own person... her own personal guard as it were, with a sweep of his hands up and down his bulky frame.

“And...” Red’s tone was chilly.

“And what do you think happened after that?” Silas rolled his hand in the air, like it would help Red’s thought process.

Red’s expression was completely blank, on purpose. Of course he was following the line of thought and with any other woman... but this was Lizzy.

The guard seemed well and truly miffed that Red Reddington was not following his train of thought.

“She had a sex dream about you, you idiot.” Silas blurted, then corrected his tone, “I mean... boss.”

Red stopped in his tracks, his shoe scuffing loudly on the pavement due to his abrupt stop, his head whipping around jerkily.

“Besides the fact that it’s obvious.” Silas screwed his face up, looking at Red like he was an idiot. “She can remember everything up until that point? Yeah, right.” the man scoffed. “Plus, I read it.”

Having said his piece, the guard was ready to make a discrete exit.

Red reached out, snagging Silas’s arm, stopping him in his tracks.

Silas looked at the tight grasp Red had on him and laughed. “I can multi-task, can’t you?”

“You read what? Asshole.” Red added for emphasis.

“It’s in one of her novels.” Silas took no offense, leaning against the stone pillar behind him, crossing his legs at the ankles. “Aside from the hole in the fence, which I agree was tickling at her subconscious mind, acting as a trigger.” he agreed with Red’s initial assessment.
“Everything that happened, occurred in one of her books.” Silas crossed his arms over his chest, smiling knowingly.

“A bad man takes the woman,” he continued, “the man she trusts saves her, he cares for her, he fucks her.” the guard bobbed his head happily. “I like that part.” he confided.

“If you want to know what you did to her in that dream, it’s the book with the bright yellow cover.” the man chuckled quietly when Red unconsciously looked towards the house, the want to see that book, very prevalent in his eyes.

“I think it’s around page, two hundred sixty-nine.” the man smirked. “Which is perfect if you ask me since you, I mean, the character, eats pussy.” Silas nodded knowingly. “Yeah, I really like that part.”

The guard laughed then walked off, heading for the fence line leaving Red to his own devices.

Reddington pulled himself from his jumbled thoughts, heading inside, unsure what to say, do, or even, feel at this point.

He would prefer to believe Silas’s version of the tale. But he also knew the reality of the situation.

Liz was caught between the two most prominent men in her life. In her drugged state, her subconscious mind had taken a scene from a book and adapted it to her current predicament.

It was understandable that she had transferred himself and Tom into the roles of the characters in the novel.

The woman was embarrassed and who wouldn’t be? It would explain her reluctance to make eye contact, certainly.

She was young and inexperienced in all things, let alone life. But her reluctance to face the situation as it now stood, hampered him in his efforts to help her get through it.

No matter her feelings on it, he didn’t know how to make it better.

She obviously wasn’t ready to talk about it, and he wasn’t sure if he should approach the subject.

Red sauntered into the dining room, taking his place at the head of the table beside her. He shot her a reassuring smile.

Right now all he could do is pay attention and be available to her, should she need to unload her burden.

And be supportive, no matter the outcome.
“Lizzy?” there was no easy way to say this, so the man just said it as was his way. “I got a call that Carver was in Chicago. I’m taking the team and we’ll be flying out within the hour.”

“Red, it’s getting late...” She looked at the clock to confirm, “and do I have to remind you that you were just shot... yesterday.”

The cat, having obviously picked up on her irritation, hissed at Red when he crouched next to Liz.

“Oh hush,” he reached over, closing the cat’s mouth mid-hiss, “you pissy thing.”

He released the cat’s head and the animal smacked its chomps before licking its paw and straightening the fur Red had mussed. Liz smiled affectionately at them both, then stroked Keres’ head, helping her flatten the fluffy hair.

He placed his hand on her knee, steadying himself. “I don’t have to do much. Just hit up a few contacts and direct your team.”

“Then why do you have to go now? You should get some rest.”

“Since your team and Moore is coming with me, it’s better to arrive at night. Less eyes.”

“You really don’t like Moore, do you?”

“Not particularly, no.” he admitted freely. “How did you know, just out of curiosity?”

“You call him by his last name all the time.”

“Would you rather I call him, Dick?” he cocked his head at her, pleased with himself. “Please, say yes, because I all ready do.” he took on an innocent air. “What? It’s better than calling him asshole.”

“Is he really that bad?” Liz half chuckled.

“I expect any day now, either Dembe or Samar will slip past me and break the man’s nose.” the thought warmed the man’s heart. “At least it keeps me awake while I’m there. They’re wily.”

“Not you?” Liz was surprised. “You don’t want to break his nose?”

“No, I’m much like you, Lizzy.” He patted her knee, standing. “I go for the throat.”

He headed for his bag, which Dembe had already packed. Red glanced around absently finally finding the object in question.

He grabbed the book satchel then looked at the woman, finding Elizabeth fiddling with the cat, otherwise occupied.

Red quickly scanned the stacked books on her shelf, zeroing on a bright yellow jacket. His fingers curved to it then shoved it in his bag, heading for the door.

“I’ll check on you later sweetheart.” he threw back to the woman.
“Be safe!” she responded, wishing he did not have to go.

Red called later that night as promised. A ton of background noise making it difficult to hear him.

“Sweetheart, how are you?” his tone sounded normal enough, almost jovial.

She pressed the phone to her ear, speaking over the loud din. “I’m okay, but what’s going on there?”

“Oh, just having a few drinks with an old associate of mine, catching up.” He dropped his voice, “Can you hear me?”

“Just barely.” she admitted.

“Nothing happening on this end, just weeding out info. Donald and Samar are rabbit hunting. Just a minute.” Red muffled the phone, speaking with someone. “Baby, I have to go. I’ll call back shortly.”

“Oh, okay?” She said before hearing the dial tone.

Baby?

He had called her a lot of things; sweetheart, honey, even darling jokingly, after he had been shot. But never... that.

She would never tell anyone, let alone Red, but it was one of her favorite endearments. Well, that and sweetheart.

At first it had grated on her when he had called her that, but now, she found comfort in it. The odd thing was that she didn’t think she would like it coming from anyone else but Red Reddington. He made it fit her. Like it was a part of her, an extension of who she was.

But really, whatever endearment passed his lips, it seemed natural. Like she actually was those things to him. As much as her name was Elizabeth, she was as much Lizzy, sweetheart and now, baby.

The thought brought a warm feeling into her entire system, she found she enjoyed the feeling immensely.

An hour later the phone rang which brought a smile to Elizabeth’s lips. The caller ID indicated it was Red.

“Hello?” her tone was soft.

“Lizzy, sorry for ending our call so abruptly, I had to get back to Louis. He can be quite the pouting brat when he thinks the attention isn’t on him.” he offered an explanation for his rudeness. “I truly thought I had enough time to just check in with you but he ended his call before I anticipated.”

“No worries. I’m fine... baby.” She smiled into the phone when she heard his deep laughter.

“I thought I’d get yelled at for that one.” He relaxed in his chair, grinning.

“I’m not yelling.” She replied instantly. Regretting her quick response a moment later when it sounded like she was almost flirting with the man. “I-I mean, I understand.” she tried for sophistication. “I didn’t mind.” She squeezed her eyes shut. Could she, just once, shut up while she was ahead.

Red’s deep chuckle filtered through the phone, tickling her ear. “I’ll remember that.” he promised. “I think I may have a lead on Carver. I sent it over to Ressler and Samar, they’re checking it out now.”

“Moore didn’t go with you guys?”

“He’s here.” the man’s tone said it all.

“You mean, physically, right now, with you?”

“No, in general.” he replied. “He may be a complete idiot, but he knows better than to push, right now anyway.”

“What happened?”

“Let’s just say it was mentioned in passing, that the temptation to throw open the door at fifteen thousand feet and unload a passenger was a growing passion of mine.”

“It was that bad?” she crinkled her nose.

“Would you presume to tell someone where to sit on their own jet? That they couldn’t drink?” The absurdity boggled the man’s mind. “The tipping point came when he tried to take the phone out of my hand when I was going to call and check on you.”

“He didn’t...” Liz breathed in a stunned breath.

“Oh, yes he did.”

“And that’s what you said? That you’d throw him out of the plane.”

“Well, first I said that I was going to shove the phone up his ass.” Red picked an imaginary piece of lint off his impeccable trousers. “Then he said he didn’t appreciate me doing business with federal agents on board, at which point I said that could be rectified ... and it went on from there.”

“You didn’t tell him you were calling me?”

“Should it matter, it’s my damn plane.”

“So what stopped you?” she held back her smile.

“Ressler said that perhaps he should stop harassing me, seeing as I was so kind to give them a ride... on my plane.” Red stressed.

Liz chuckled, “Are you going to fly them back... on your plane?”

“Samar, definitely. Donald, he’s always up in the air, no pun intended.” he rubbed his temple absently. “Moore, I could give a flying fuck... again, no pun intended.”

Liz smiled, “When do you think you’ll be home?”

“As soon as they finish, I suppose.” a thought occurred to him. “Why, do you miss me?” His husky voice lowered intimately.

“I was just wondering who was going to make my waffle in the morning?” she teased.
He pulled his tie, loosening the knot. “I knew it, you only appreciate me for my cooking.” He pulled the silk fabric from his neck, setting it aside.

“Today, I did. The vegan nurse from hell, Mindy, was here again trying to shove eggplant down my throat.”

“You hate egg plant.”

“Uhh, exactly.”

“Did you tell her that?”

“Yes, the first day she was here. Keeps blathering on about how good it is for me.”

“Then fire her.”

“I’m sure she’s just trying to be helpful, Red.”

“By preparing something you’ve told her you hate.” Red slowly replied.

He’d have to teach her how to handle these things, to stand up for herself. If only to save her from being force fed a vegetable she once described as having the consistency of a rubber sole.

“How goes the house search. Find anything interesting?”

“Oh, I did find one.” she replied ecstatically. “I can’t wait to show you!”

“Tell me about it.” Popping the button on his neck, he loosened the next two then closed his eyes, listening to her voice, relaxing after a few moments into a stress free state.

“It’s three bedrooms, two and a half baths, hardwood throughout. It’s got the cutest little outdoor space for entertaining. Not that I really do much of that, but I thought when you guys came over, we’d have a place to grill and stuff.”

His mouth lifted at the corner, trying to remember the last time he actually grilled anything.

“The kitchen is beautiful, just redone. Though, I didn’t think to check if the plumbing and everything was okay?” she fretted.

“We’ll get it checked out.” He assured, then kicked his feet up on the ottoman, while his arm fell lazily over the arm rest, his tumbler dangling from his fingertips. “What else.”

“I’ll have to redo one of the bathrooms. It’s blue.” she shivered at the remembrance, totally repulsed. “Red? Who does an entire bathroom in blue? And not just any blue, aqua blue.”

She sounded so disgusted, he had to laugh. “Well, then. What color would you prefer?”

“Oh, I don’t know? Maybe a soft white or tan, have the accent pieces be the color. That way I can change it any time I want.” she had really thought this through. “What do you think?”

“I think that sounds like a very good idea.”

“Are you even listening to me?” she chided.

“Of course I am. Change the hideous blue bathroom to soft white or tan, with your accent pieces being the splash of color. Redone kitchen, cute deck where we can grill. Three bedrooms, two and a “You’re really interested?” she was mildly shocked.

“I am. Were there anymore homes that interested you?”

“Yes, but I can wait until you get home to show you.”

“If you want to talk about…” A subtle beeping in his ear made him look at the screen, “Damn it. Sweetheart, it’s Ressler. I’ll get back to you when I can.”

“All right, all of you be careful.”

Red ended his call with Ressler. He was never so glad to get off the phone and even though they would be leaving in an hour, it gave him a few minutes of private time.

He picked up the paperback, tapping it lightly against his lips, lost in thought.

He thumbed the pages rapidly. Lizzy often earmarked the corners of pages. He opened the book to one such page scanning it slowly.

It was mostly dialogue, but in that dialogue was one specific component.

In the course of his investigation, Red discovered that how the man spoke to or touched the woman, was important. Not that he did not know that himself, but to see it in print organized his thoughts better.

Certain endearments seemed to melt the heroine’s heart. He glanced up, his mind wandering.

Red had called Lizzy, baby, earlier to get a reading on her. This guy in the book had used the same term of affection.

Red had been surprised, keeping in mind nothing surprised him these days... that Lizzy had accepted the term so readily and indeed did not seem to mind if he used that endearment again.

In this day and age, most females did not like to be objectified. Reddington never thought of it like that. He admired and respected most women, truth told. Those with which he used such terms of affection, he highly esteemed.

He was so pleased that Elizabeth was woman enough to sense such a thing about him.

He turned the page reading automatically for a few sentences. A dark scowl appeared on his forehead. Within the book, two males had actually come to blows in a brutal scene that, in Red’s opinion was nothing more than gratuitous violence.

It was almost as if Lizzy’s dream played out in black and white print. Had she truly pictured him and Tom in these roles?

From the moment Tom had taken her until Red himself, had arrived on scene... everything was almost verbatim.

Reading more, he could see glimpses of that son of a bitch Tom in the secondary player and could truly understand Elizabeth’s frustration and fear.
Red had instantly put the book aside, checking on Liz’s welfare, getting lost in her talking about her house search, finding her content where she was, before returning to his pastime.

It took only a few moments for the man to fall back into the world the author had so meticulously created.

He kicked back, propping his legs on a pillow in the bed, absently sipping from the fine wine he had ordered roughly an hour before.

The story continued...

And then he came on the scene...

As Red continued the narrative, he could actually see the similarity between the guy in the story and himself.

It was him for all intents and purposes.

Worried for the girls welfare, intent on hurting the man who harmed her and acting on it with cold and merciless deliverance.

The hero had released the girl from her restraints, then carried his precious cargo from the room. What he cherished most in this world, safe in his arms.

He took her to his home, dressed her wounds and kissed the bruising on her wrist...

Red turned the page quickly, reading through the following passages and more than understood the cause of Lizzy’s wet dream and even more interestingly, her reaction to him this afternoon.

He had done so much, said so much, of what this man in the novel had, and wasn’t even aware of having done so.

He turned the page, settling more into his comfort zone, reading the first few lines of what was to come and had never loved a romance novel so much.

It was no wonder Liz couldn’t look him in the eye.

The man in the novel talked with his partner, communicated with her. He clearly worshiped the woman. He fed off her pleasure, hers became his own.

If this was her idea of a fantasy man, she really need look no further than across the dining room table, or better yet, roll over in bed and look at the man sharing it with her.

Red’s eyes lifted, a thought suddenly solidifying in his mind.

Lizzy had placed him in the role of hero.

Not Tom.

Him...

Raymond ‘Red’ Reddington.

Red pushed off the bed making a beeline for the bathroom, slamming the door closed, locking it behind him.
He pulled his zipper open, reaching in for his cock, pulling the thickening length free, stroking himself slowly, methodically. Rereading the last part, he fell into the role, thumbing his slit when the man pressed against dark curls, his face getting wet against her folds.

With as good as Lizzy smelled, he knew she had to taste good, she had to have a sweet pussy, he just knew it.

And she’d cream hard and fill his mouth, no matter what he had to do to make it happen. Damn, he would love if she came hard like that. To feel his mouth fill with her arousal, to taste her... he’d give that tiny clit of hers all the attention it needed.

But that wasn’t all she needed, apparently. Red could literally feel the small hand grasping his erection.

He tightened his own grasp around his shaft, stroking himself harder.

When his stiffness brushed not only her pussy lips, but her thighs, Red growled low in his throat.

Lizzy was a tiny little thing in comparison to him. He could envision his shaft brushing her milky white thighs without issue before breaching that pretty little slit.

Damn right she’d be wet, her pussy would be soaked with not only her arousal but the saliva from his mouth, and of course, the copious amount of pre-cum leaking from his cock head as it teased that quivering little hole.

Shit...

To spread her open with his thick width, he would tear her little body apart, and she’d fucking love it. He’d make sure to drag that clit just right, making her body accept him.

She’d take the whole damn thing, she’d want all of him to open her up, to fuck her just right. He’d nudge her cervix with his cock head when his heavy ball sack nestled nice and tight against her ass, making her pussy quiver around him in want of more.

He’d love nothing more than to take her bottom in his hands and pump her little hole, maybe even tease her ass. He bet she would love that, she’d clench hard around him, fluttering that tight tunnel around his shaft. And if he should tongue it before hand, soften her up a bit, maybe he could fuck her tiny pussy and finger her ass, giving his baby every bit of his attention.

He’d give Lizzy the fucking she so richly deserved.

To give her what only he could.

He would hold her hands, not only because it was intimate, just as much as kissing. But it was another connection between them. A connection that required trust. She would have to trust him to give up the freedom of movement.

And he would ride her bare. Not only would she feel fucking amazing. But no one since his wife had the privilege of being taken by him that way.

He didn’t love them. He didn’t want that intimacy with them. He didn’t wanted to mark them as his territory.

But he did Elizabeth.
Men could sniff at her heels all they wanted, but all they would find was his scent. He’d drench her pussy in his cum daily to ward off bastards thinking they could take his place.

They could try, but they’d fucking fail. Not only would he make love to her so damned often, she wouldn’t have the strength or want to look elsewhere.

No one would ever take care of her, spoil her, dote on her... love Lizzy, like he did.

No one...

Red tightened his hand around his hard cock and cupped his balls as she neared release, just waiting for that pussy to come, until that beautiful body arched up off the bed and bathed his thighs and balls in her arousal.

“Shit...” Red panted, pumping his shaft harder. Teasing his thick crown, he urged her to let go once more, to come around his cock again, and she fulfilled his need for her, coming hard.

“Fuck... Red drawled, shooting stream after stream of his own load. “Lizzy...” he gasped.

He fell into the cabinet, shaking with the powerful release. His hand trembled, shaking thick white drops of cum to the marble floor and his shoes, the sight bringing him down quickly.

He hadn’t just warmed her with his affection, and she sure as fuck wasn’t here.

But the idea...

The want to have her by his side in every way available to him, grew impossibly strong.

Stronger than it had ever been before.

Stronger than it was just a couple day ago.

He felt a flicker of hope, that hadn’t been there before.

Now, he just wondered if he could make it happen.

What could he do to make her see, he could give her everything and anything she could ever want or need?

He wasn’t sure...

But he sure as fuck was going to find out.
Red inched the door open quietly, catching a glimpse of Elizabeth in the soft light of the hall.

Lizzy was laying almost in the middle of the bed and Keres was stretched flat on it’s belly, it’s paws touching the edge of the mattress with her hind feet against Lizzy’s stomach.

The man rolled his eyes expressively. One day very soon, he was going to have Dembe take that cat for a one way ride. ‘Cement shoes’ was becoming a fast favorite phrase in his mind.

After he readied himself for bed, he pulled at the blankets then laughed softly when Elizabeth fought his efforts, tugging them back into place. The cold air had disturbed her sleep state.

She must have heard his amusement because she turned her head towards him in the darkened room.

“Is holding the blankets hostage your subtle way of telling me to go away, I’m in the doghouse and to go sleep on the back porch?”

She sat up slightly in bed, responding sleepily, having released the blankets and turned over to see him inching under the cover. “I didn’t expect you back tonight.”

“Well, I had to be here to make you a waffle and chase off the eggplant lady.” Releasing the latch, he removed the heavy watch from his wrist, placing it on the night stand.

“What time is it?” she stifled a yawn.

“A little before one.” he stretched out comfortably.

She moved closer to him, stroking the white bandage, “How’s your arm?” She propped her chin on her hand, looking down at him. “Leg?”

“They’re itching. But fine otherwise.” He smiled when she said nothing, just quirked her eyebrow. “Really. You want to see?” He pulled the tape holding the gauze, turning back a corner.

“I’m just checking.” she backed off diplomatically.

Red stared at her, his brow creasing. She seemed to want to say something, but was hesitating. Then she was letting the words spill out, quickly.

“I got a new letter.” She said softly.

He tensed inwardly, but to her eyes, he seemed as relaxed as he was a second ago. “What did it say?”

“I didn’t read it.”

“Where is it?” he demanded.

She rolled over, avoiding disturbing the cat, then grabbed the letter off her night stand before handing it to him.
“Shield your eyes.” He said as he flipped the light on.

Tearing the envelope open, he read, almost feeling the letter writers elation jumping off the page.

We were almost rid of Reddington
I held my breath with anticipation, excited
There was so much chaos, everyone so focused on the shoot out
I was given the perfect opportunity to take him out
When I saw him go down, I felt a burst of joy
A joy that grew to pure exhilaration when I saw him fall into and wrap himself around that woman, the thought of them both dying at the same time...
Well, you know it was a breathtaking moment
Just as the one man shot at him, I shot, but I was too low, hitting him in the back
We would have prevailed had it not been for Reddington’s man, taking down my scapegoat
I’m sure I don’t have to explain to you the utter disappointment I feel

Red rolled from the bed, going to the end, searching.

“What are you doing?”

“Looking for the bullet that fell out of my vest.” He ran his hand under the bench, sweeping the floor with his hand when he felt it. Pinching it between his fingers, he sat back, staring at the bent copper.

The man looked up, finding her holding the letter. “Don’t read it, Lizzy.”

“He shot you...” She gasped. “Red, he shot you because of me.”

Red sat the bullet on his side table, then crawled back in the bed. “I get the feeling he would have taken a shot at me regardless.”

“I should go. I shouldn’t be here.”

“This is exactly where you should be.”

“You’re in danger because of me.”

Red chortled under his breath, making her frown. “Who am I?” He asked.

“He shot–”

“Who am I?” He interrupted, asking the question again.

She sighed, “Red Reddington. Number four on the most wanted list.”

“I’m always in danger, Lizzy.” He raised his hand, brushing her hair out of her eyes. “At least this time, there’s a damn good reason for it.” He smiled softly, tracing her brow with his fingertip. “You’re not leaving.” He said with a finality.

When he lowered his hand, she lay down on her side next to him. Red rolled over, staring at her back, a pleased smile on his face.
She didn’t argue. Didn’t leave.

And now, she was laying a foot away when she had been at an arms’ length. He liked to think she wanted to be closer to him, but it was probably because of the damn cat. Whatever the reason, he wasn’t going to complain.

“Night, Red.”

He unbent his arm, stroking his fingers through her soft hair. “Goodnight, Elizabeth.”

Red awoke from a sound sleep, hearing the heavy patter of rain on the window, then the gentle movement of the bed as he felt his bed partner inching closer to him. He watched her slithering back inch by inch until she abruptly halted.

He waited to see if she came closer when a flash of light lit the room. It highlighted Lizzy scooting back a hair more as thunder rumbled in the near distance.

He quietly watched her, listening patiently. She was awake, her breathing too fast for a normal sleep pattern. And by the set of her shoulders and back, she was tense.

Perhaps she had another bad dream?

Another bolt of lightning glowed brightly in the room, showing her rigid form.

Was she afraid of storms? He had always thought she liked them, or at least, to hear Sam tell. He had the hardest time getting her to come in out of the rain.

She flinched again with the bright light, inching back a hair more.

Maybe the rain was okay, but not the sounds with it?

He sighed softly, then reached out, wrapping his arm around her waist, pulling her into the cradle of his body.

She tensed, then completely relaxed when Red pulled the blankets in around them, cocooning them in warmth, and more importantly, security.

He felt the woman go lax against him before he settled in, laying his cheek against the shiny brown silk of her hair. He closed his eyes.

She soon matched his calm breathing, falling asleep a minute later. While he wondered what was wrong, he relaxed himself, after making a mental note to ask her later, then drifted off shortly after snuggling into her.

~♥~♥~♥~♥~♥~♥~♥~♥~♥~♥~♥~♥~♥~♥~♥~♥~♥~♥~♥~♥~♥~♥~♥~♥~♥~♥~♥~♥~♥~

A low rumble of thunder awoke Liz from a restful sleep. Slitting her eyes open, she watched the gentle sway of the trees blowing in the brisk wind through the rain spotted window. Stretching away the last of her sleep, she realized that she was on Red’s side of the bed. She then remembered her late night wanderings, seeking comfort.
Rising from the bed, she grabbed the robe Red had given her, well, his robe, snuggling into it’s plush warmth. Using the facilities and straightening her appearance, she stuck her phone under the strap of her shirt and left the confines of the room to seek out the man.

Her injuries were feeling better these days and she automatically found herself forgoing her cart as she regained her strength. With the aid of her crutch, she hobbled down the hallway, calling out to both Red and Dembe.

No one answered. Perhaps they had gone on an errand?

She had awakened later than her norm. Both men kept odd hours, it wasn’t inconceivable that they had started their day early.

Her footsteps took her on a meandering path through the countless rooms of the house. Toward the back, she finally heard Red’s muffled laughter.

She couldn’t blame him for picking the pool atrium to relax, in the short time she had been there it had become her favorite spot as well.

The indoor garden was beautiful, covered in hundreds of leafy green plants and lightly scented flora, leaving the area serene and tranquil. She had spent a lot of her time in that room while Red and Dembe had been gone, reading the plethora of material Red bought her.

She couldn’t remember the last time she had felt so rested.

She did not like to admit even to herself, that now Red was home, that feeling was once again prevalent in her life.

When he was gone, she found herself unsettled and at odds. She no longer questioned the why of it... it just was.

And last night... Red had held her.

The storm had unnerved her, and she admittedly had gotten closer to the man to feel connected. She did not feel so alone if he was near.

He had pulled her into his body, lulling her into a deep, untroubled sleep. She wondered if it had been a natural instinct on his part? Had he felt her nearing and reached out to her in his sleep or had he awoken, offering silent comfort?

What ever had happened, even in his sleep he had felt her need, and delivered.

Even then, she was sure Red would crack about it at some point in the day. She would either down play it, saying it wasn’t her fault what she did in her sleep and he would let it go. Or he would ask if she was all right and want to discuss what had bothered her.

Time would only tell.

Entering the arch way, she saw the man in question, reclined comfortably on the high backed couch, swirling his ever present liquor. The man was truly in a time zone of his own making.

“Re...” Liz trailed off, when a man sitting with his back to her and hidden by the tall chair, turned in her direction.

It was Edward.
She forced a smile, falling into character. “I’m sorry, honey. I didn’t know you had guests.”

Red rose from the couch quickly going to her side. “It’s all right, baby.”

He held his smile when she ducked her head, hiding the quick smile that passed over her own face.

The man instantly knew by her attitude, that she really was not adverse to that particular endearment. The knowledge amused him greatly.

He had tested his theory and was very pleased with the results.

“What are you doing walking?” he had noticed her unsteady gate as she approached. “Why didn’t you use your cart or call?” He complained, tapping the phone sitting against her chest.

“My butt was falling asleep, I had to move.” She gestured to the door, indicating she should go. “I didn’t mean to interrupt.”

“You aren’t.” Taking the crutch, Red wrapped an arm around her, bringing her towards the couch, “You shouldn’t be up like that without someone there to help you.” He scolded. “Come and sit down.”

Reaching the divan, he took her weight, easing her onto the seat. The woman gripped his forearm when her ankle jostled, her vision swimming for a moment.

He stared at her in open concern until her grasp loosened, her equilibrium returning. She nodded, indicating she was okay.

“You remember Edward?” Raymond gestured to the man.

Liz turned her gaze to the pensive man. “I do, it’s a pleasure to see you again.” She smiled brightly, thinking he was one creepy bastard in her mind.

“Elizabeth.” The man inclined his head in greeting. “I do hope you’re feeling better. Red told me of your accident.”

Having no idea what Red had told the man, she replied generically. “I’m better, thank you. It’s good to get around... some anyway.” She smiled impishly.

She leaned into Red’s side as if she had done it a hundred times, hoping she was acting the part expected of her.

She relaxed quickly when his arm came around her waist, helping her adjust to a more comfortable position.

When she settled, his hand fell naturally to the curve of her hip, his thumb stroking her side soothingly, “Did you sleep well?”

He knew, that when he had stopped thinking and allowed himself to just let her sleep and not ask questions, he had slept well. Very well, in fact.

Dembe’s early morning call had broken the spell. The fact that this man, Edward Costa was the last person he wanted to see... did little to improve his mood.

He would have preferred to stay with Elizabeth.

Liz smiled, nodding. “I did...” She placed a hand against his chest, feeling the gentle rise and fall of his breathing, “but you know I always do when you’re home.” She replied honestly.

Red’s sharp green eyes focused intently on her, his strong arm tightening around her waist. “As do I, sweetheart.”

After a beat of silence, Dembe came with a low stool upon which to prop her leg, “Thank you, Dembe.”

“Do forgive me, Edward.” Red turned his attention back to his guest, “As you can imagine, I miss her terribly while I’m away.”

“Understandable. She’s a very beautiful woman.” The dark haired man eyed her suggestively. “She must get very lonely while you are away.” Edward’s gaze openly traveled her form, hesitating over certain areas.

The man’s scrutiny unnerved her.

Elizabeth suddenly realized that she sat there in only her boxers and a tank top, an outfit Red had seen numerous times. She instantly pulled the robe closed, a coldness gripping her stomach. She found herself sweating under it’s warmth, the reptilian aspect of Edward Costa’s stare making her stomach churn.

Leaning further into Red’s solid chest, she felt the ripple of muscles tensing under her fingers.

Edward continued as if nothing was amiss. “A wise man would take her along on their journeys, lest someone snatch her away.” He grinned amiably before casually tipping his glass, as though he hadn’t just tread into very dangerous territory.

The man was either a consummate idiot or just that damned sure of himself... either fact, could get him killed very quickly where Red Reddington was concerned.

A fact he proved a moment later.

The atmosphere in the room changed so suddenly, a power radiating off Red so potent, his dominance and rage left her rigid with the intensity.

Dembe stood behind them, an alertness permeating the room, clearly sensing what the woman had sensed.

Red’s fury-filled eyes hardened at the blatant challenge. Pulling his arm from behind her, he sat forward, making to rise.

Grabbing his arm quickly, Elizabeth tried to get things back on track, shifting the focus elsewhere. “Uh...” she damned her shaking voice, “so, what were you two discussing before I interrupted?” she asked idly.

Red’s cold, unblinking eyes never wavered from the Italian across the way. The enraged man’s arm tensed further as he pulled it but she tightened her hold leaning into his field of vision.

“Edward is going to run an errand for me, that is all.” The older man’s jaw tightened, his eyes sheets of crystal glass. “Isn’t that right, Edward?” Red’s tone dripped with ice.

She had to calm him down. It wouldn’t be good to kill the man when they needed him to find Carver.
Stroking her finger over his tense jaw line, ignoring the volatile aura surrounding them, she fought to gain his attention. “I thought maybe you were talking about our plans. Is he attending Francis’ dinner?” She asked airily, tracing his neck, down to where his tie sat.

Red broke his angered gaze from the inconsequential man, focusing on the woman at his side, his eyes softening. He wrapped his arm back around her, settling it on her hip. “I’m sure Edward will be far too busy for such frivolity, baby.”

Liz nuzzled the freshly shaved skin on his jaw line and neck, inhaling the familiar and very pleasant scent.

The man drew in a breath, relaxing slightly under the unexpected touch. He sensed her ploy, reluctantly allowing her tactic.

Imagine his surprise when the woman went a step further, nuzzling his nape.

All thoughts of the other man evaporated to Red’s chagrin. He didn’t know what she was up to, but he had to admit, he was enjoying the hell out of it while it lasted.

“Dembe will supply the pick up address within the hour.” Red rumbled, his voice deepening further when he felt her full lips graze his skin.

From her hiding place, she felt the rich bass in his throat vibrate against her nose and lips as the rigid man exhaled slowly, calming further.

“That is all, for now.” That came out a bit hostile and brittle, but it was to be expected. He was Red Reddington, after all.

Red nodded to Dembe to show their ‘guest’ out. Hearing their footsteps retreating from the room, Liz exhaled and slumped visibly, relief flooding her body.

“He’s gone.” Red soothed. “It’s not like you to let someone like Edward get to you.”

“Yeah, well. Don’t hold it against me. I’m still stoned on those pain pills of yours so I’m not on top of my game.” Liz quivered in revulsion, “Plus, he’s creepy. I hate when people stare at me like they’re stealing my soul.”

“It wasn’t your soul he was interested in, trust me.” Red finished off his glass, then poured another.

“And you were about to snap his damn neck, which would secure him in one location, yes?” she reminded tactfully. “But if he is in the morgue, it wouldn’t lead us to Carver. You do remember he is the key to finding Carver.”

“But he is the one closest to us, right now.” she stated. “Speaking of which, I thought we agreed to have him at dinner so we could watch him?” She asked, her voice slightly muffled.

He suddenly realized that Lizzy was still resting against him, her head crooked under his chin while she lazily played with a button on his vest. It was a shame that the position would change in a minute.

“I don’t want him anywhere near you.” he proclaimed. “Not after how he looked at you...” there was something deadly about the easily stated observation but what came next caused a chill to traverse
“...I didn’t like it.”

“Red!” Liz sputtered in embarrassment. “First of all, how he looks at me shouldn’t be of any consequence...” She pulled back, matching his frown.

He missed her warmth instantly. Then his attention was directed to her hand braced on his thigh.

“No, if he’s going to talk about my fiancée like that, so brazenly to my face and be that forward, twice now, who knows what the hell he’s doing behind my back.”

“Okay...” she was confused. “How are we supposed to keep tabs on him and find Carver if you don’t want him at the dinner?”

“I’m not even sure I want him for the job, to be frank.”

“... And now you’re not wanting him to do this job.” she pointed out, exasperated.

“I can have my people track him regardless.” Red’s anger was resurfacing. “I only really brought him in so we would have his actual locations. We could just as easily slip a tracker on him.”

“This is just silly, Red.” she placated. “Just because he made some backhanded remarks and freaky eye contact, does not make him a real threat. We--”

Red interrupted, “He’s a very real threat.”

Liz rolled her eyes, and in this instance it annoyed the hell out of the man. “Lizzy, you understand that this man is a criminal, correct?”

“Yes, I know that!” She replied patiently. “But, not to point out the obvious, so are you.”

“I would never hurt you. He will.” he stressed. “So believe me when I say, he was very serious in his comments.”

“You’re kidding?” Liz scoffed.

“No, I’m not.” he grated. “Do not let him get you alone.”

“What, you think I’ll cave to his charm?” Liz asked in disgust.

“No, I’m thinking of what he’ll do when you don’t give into what he wants!” He snapped as a clap of thunder shook the room.

The combination of the thunder and having never heard Red raise his voice like that, startled her. Her entire body jerked in place, as she blinked rapidly.

Red’s brow creased. Had he frightened her? The thought left him more than unsettled.

He knew very well, Edward’s reputation. Or the rumors, at the very least. That the man had an obvious interest in Elizabeth, bothered Red greatly. Sickened him, actually. He reached for her, his hand dropping away at Dembe’s entrance into the room.

“Is he gone?” Raymond barked.

“Yes. I dislike that man, intensely.” The dark man sat at the bar, eyeing his friend’s tense back. “I’ll send him the required info later.”
“Not yet, Dembe.” Red shook his head defiantly. “I may see if the Stuart brothers are available.”

“I know it’s obvious as to why,” Dembe hated to remind, “but I thought you weren’t going to use the Stuarts’ after what happened the last time...”

“Red, just have him do the job. Let’s stick to some sort of plan, if only so Ress and Samar have an easy go of it, all right.”

“Fine.” Red nodded to Dembe, “Send it.” the man arose, turning his back not only to the room but its two occupants. “But he’s fair game after... and I’m gonna kill him.”
Red Reddington felt odd, like the world was sitting off it’s axis.

When he had breakfasted with Elizabeth about an hour ago, the tension was still very much prevalent between them. Afterwards, he found it difficult to concentrate on anything. He could not forget her face after he had shouted at her.

Perhaps he had been too hard on her but he felt he had just cause. Elizabeth hardly ever listened or heeded his warnings. Much like Donald Ressler. He knew he should not have raised his voice, some said he could be rather overpowering at times.

He had a second sense about these things however and the feeling about Edward had intensified since the man’s departure and with Carver on the scene, matters were looking bleak.

He arose, too agitated to sit any longer, heading off in the direction of the woman’s favorite room.

He approached slowly testing the waters, starting off with small talk. Something he personally hated.

“Good book?” He tilted his head, glancing at the cover. It was one of the many tawdry romance novels he had bought her.

“I’m enjoying it. It’s about a Bow Street Runner.... and a whore.” She snickered. “Well, she’s a Courtesan, actually.”

He felt a bit of the stress slip off his shoulders, when she smiled and laughed. More importantly, she moved over on the couch to make room for him to sit.

Red snatched the book from her hand, turning it on it’s side as though looking at a nude centerfold. “I want this book after you’re done with it.”

Liz giggled into her tea glass. “I never took you for a Playboy type of man, Red.”

“Well, I’m not, not really.” He casually leafed through the book, noticing she marked some of the pages. “If only because my subscription keeps getting lost in the mail.”

Glancing quickly at one page she’d mark, he found it to be a romantic scene.

Well now, this was interesting. It appeared that he would never have to search for these things again. Red found that he was suddenly, one happy individual.

Everything marked and mapped out all for his pleasure and hers...

“Our out of curiosity, what kind of man did you take me for?” he queried quietly. “If not the Playboy type.”

“I don’t know, I guess I saw you maybe being into burlesque.” She shrugged.

“I do enjoy a good burlesque show, but I have also been known to appreciate a very good lap dance.” He chortled low in his chest when her eyes showed her shock.
“You’ve gotten a lap dance?!”
“You sound shocked.”
“I guess I am.” she admitted. “You seem so refined and gentlemanly.”
“Lizzy, I do business all around the world with all types of people.” he warmed to his tale. “Often that work has taken place in Clubs. If a service is offered, sometimes you have to partake, to avoid insulting your host.”
“But, you’ve never touched?”
“I didn’t say that.” he corrected. “If it makes you feel better, I have never touched a woman with out her first placing my hands somewhere on her body.”
“What does that mean?” she was a little put out.
“In some Clubs, there are no touch policies. In others, there aren’t.” he explained. “Regardless of their rules, I don’t touch dancers unless I’m directed to do so.”
“And what? You just keep your hands on her breasts until the dance is over?” She asked, clearly annoyed.
“No, if I’m there on business, I’ll drop my hands to her hips or stroke her back.”
“So you visit strip clubs for pleasure too?”
“No, not really.” he was having a difficult time keeping a straight face, for the woman was clearly jealous. “Again, even when it’s supposed to be personal time, it’s still business.”
“I don’t understand.” she said peevishly.
“I was invited to an associate’s bachelor party at a Strip Club.” Red waved his hands, explaining. “It may have been off hours, but it’s still business.”
“Oh, I see. So you and Dembe don’t hit the circuit on your own.”

The tip of Red’s tongue played with the inside of his jaw, his eyes sparkling mischievously. “Dembe and I prefer to play cards or read.”

“Do you enjoy going?” she snipped.

Red tilted his head and quirked his brow. “Sometimes,” he sighed, “once in a while, you’ll get a dancer who is having fun and enjoys what she does.” he lifted impressed brows, one particular ‘dancer’ coming to mind. “She’s always nice to watch.”

Red leaned back more comfortably, continuing. “The others are there to pay off student loans or to make ends meet. They don’t really want to be there, but then, they don’t want to be flipping burgers either.”

“Do you have a type?”

Red laughed, “Are you asking what type of woman I prefer to look at? Or what type of show I prefer watching?”

“I-I don’t know what I’m asking.” She blushed.
“I prefer women with natural breasts, however there are some beautiful fakes out there.” he nodded thoughtfully. “Though, I’ve always been a firm believer that all women are beautiful, no matter their breast size.”

Red smiled, amused when Liz unconsciously looked at her chest, then reddened when she realized what she had just done.

“As for what show I prefer, I’d have to say the lap dance.” he decided. “The dancers have a very bad habit of spilling house secrets while they dance and don’t even know they’re doing it half the time.”

“You’re getting inside info on their boss?” she couldn’t believe what she was hearing.

“Of course. A lot of the girls know the inside track because the men don’t think to keep their mouths shut around them.” he shifted more comfortably. “They’re just dancing girls after all.” he lifted one hand slightly. “Never underestimate a woman, they know all the good gossip.”

“Have any of them been hurt because of the info you pry from them.”

“No, because the bosses never think it comes from them. They’re always convinced one of their men has turned on them.” he smiled pleasantly. “Now, tell me about this book you’re reading.”

Liz looked at the man and for a moment, it was touch and go whether or not she would allow the evasive maneuver. She relented, deciding it really wasn’t any of her business... besides, for some reason the topic pissed her off.

She picked up one of the novels, sighing mentally as she moved on.

“Oh, I noticed that this is the first in a series of three. I’ll have to get the other two, because what I’ve read so far it’s bound to get mysterious and steamy.” she smiled happily again. “Out of all the books you gave me, I’d have to say this has been my favorite author.”

Red made note of the author's name, intent on buying all of her books by the afternoon. Anything that put steamy thoughts into Lizzy’s head had a ‘thumbs up’ from him.

“I’ve read one of her other books and now I’m into this one and I just realized that her men remind me of you.”

“Really?” he was stunned at the admission. “I don’t recall the last time I was in the company of a Courtesan.” he hesitated, a far off look suddenly appearing on his face... “No, wait–”

“I think.” She interrupted, “I meant more along the lines of them being over protective, dominant, sometimes conceited, pompous maybe?” Her eyes lit with amusement.

“You say that like it’s a bad thing.” He scowled slightly. “May I ask a question?”

She nodded, taking another drink from her glass.

“If you dislike the men, why read the books?”

“I didn’t say I disliked them.” she stated. “Who wants a man that kowtows to you all the time?” she defended her stance.

“When the conversation and activities are always what the woman wants, it gets damned boring and tedious always making the decisions.” she recalled her evenings with Tom when the subject of dinner would come up and the man invariably always answered the same...
“Even when you ask seriously, you always get the same answer in return...whatever you want babe’.” she warmed to the diatribe.

There was no doubt in Red’s mind to whom she referred.

She shook her head piteously. “You can’t get a good argument out of them, so there goes any make up sex. Too much sweet makes my tooth ache. I...” She halted abruptly, realizing she had said too much. “…I’m sorry, I don’t know where that came from.

“No, please. Continue.” Red replied seriously. “I’m finding this most enlightening.”

The man was spellbound.

He watched her tilt her head, deep in thought. Somewhere in her vilification, she had gone from talking in the third person to the first. This was personal. She was describing the man she wanted.

He was more than interested in hearing what she had to say.

“I don’t dislike strong men. Alpha males are challenging, exciting... opinionated. Keeps you on your toes.” she had given it much thought of late. “A dominant male can be incredibly affectionate, caring... sensual. They understand that fighting and making up is good for a healthy relationship.”

She hesitated, forming her words carefully now, “And a little over protectiveness never hurt anyone. I may have taken a defense course but that doesn’t mean I can always take on a two hundred pound maniacal killer about to boil me in acid.” she smiled at Red. “It’s nice to know someone’s coming for you.” she inclined her head slightly toward him. “They’re not all bad.”

“And the men in all these books you’ve read are...?”

“Opinionated, bull headed, and strong willed. But on the other side, they have been gentle, affectionate and caring. The perfect male.” she shifted her eyes playfully. “That was of course, written by a woman, so they’re fictional.” she sighed heavily. “No one can be perfect, but there are traits, characteristics that she has written,” the woman admitted, “that some men do have in real life, that women find attractive.”

“And you are one of these women?”

“Yes. I like a good argument, a man that doesn’t back down in a fight.” she rationalized. “But can apologize if he’s wrong. A man who has an opinion and isn’t afraid to share it.” She hesitated, reddening slightly.

Whatever she was thinking, was even more personal to her than what she had shared. He couldn’t think of what it might be... and then it came to him.

Her own personal fantasies.

What she had shared was telling of what kind of man she needed. But how she envisioned him treating her, touching her and even how he looked, was a deep personal secret.

All women had fantasies.

Sex, well, good sex anyway, probably wouldn’t happen without the help of romance novels filling women’s heads with perfect fictional men rescuing them and romantic love scenes.

Red appreciated the help.
But he had always been a firm believer that women weren’t completely focused on their clit like men, their dicks. You had to arouse the mind as well as the body.

Oh, she’d climax with out the mental stimulation eventually, but she’d have a better time with the added effort. And to be honest, he enjoyed playing with them. He liked filling their heads with all sorts of things he wanted to do with them. He liked fulfilling their fantasies.

After running a raid in Afghanistan, he finally met a female associate, who up until that point, had been a long distance contact. He and his men had come in, dressed in desert fatigues. She eyed him all evening like he was a walking dick.

Turned out she had a thing for men in uniform.

The raid had been a bitch and needing to blowing off some steam, he had enjoyed immensely, playing the man in uniform to the hilt. She had eaten it up and he had the claw marks on his ass to prove it.

It had been a hell of an evening.

Red Reddington never shied away from a challenge... especially if it made his partner horny as hell. Throw any sort of sexual fantasy his way and he’d do his best to deliver.

It had to have been difficult for her being married to Tom. She had tried to be vulnerable, but it had always backfired on her. Trust had to be an issue with her.

There was something about Liz that wanted to be able to let go at night, to trust her partner to take care of her in any circumstance.

She needed a man she could run to, that would hold and comfort her. As essential as it was for her to be strong, the need to cuddle, to be weak and not be taken advantage of, was just as necessary.

And he knew without doubt, that she had been neglected in the bedroom. Just a loose description of her past lovers had told him that much.

Hell, for the simple fact alone that she’d never had sex during her period, said a lot to him. She may have wanted to, but didn’t trust her partners enough to ask for it.

While most women in their thirties knew what they wanted and how they wanted it, Lizzy was still wondering what it was all about. He’d bet she’d never had one toe-curling, mind bending orgasm in her life.

She needed someone with which she could explore possibilities. She was a curious sort, always wanting to learn and try new things.

She was slowly finding her voice, asking questions, wondering about relationships and the world in general. Her appetite was voracious. There was so much she needed, some of it she wasn’t even aware of just yet.

“You don’t have to tell me, Lizzy. Some things are too personal to share.” he brought the conversation back to the present. “I didn’t mean to pry.’”

“I’ve never really voiced any of that before. I guess I was just caught up in the question and got carried away.” she was still fighting her blush. “Did I say something... too personal?”

Shit! What had she said!?
The woman felt a flash of anxiety, replaying the conversation in her head. Aside from thanking him for helping her when the Stewmaker had taken her, what else had she said?

After a moment, she breathed a little easier recalling how generic everything sounded.

It had been, right?

No, no it had not been generic. Not at all.

For God’s sake, she had essentially described Red Reddington. At least to her own way of thinking.

But maybe it was only noticeable to her? He couldn’t know what she was thinking, right?

Or could he?

He seemed to know about her dream.

Oh God...

Did he know how she felt? More importantly, did he know what she thought about him?

“No, you didn’t.” he broke her train of thought. “Fantasies are meant to be kept secret until you can share them with someone you trust and who might just fulfill them.” he crooked his head slightly his eyes resting quietly on her face. “But for future reference, you can discuss anything you wish with me. I doubt I’d be shocked by what you reveal.”

She breathed a little easier. He had brought the conversation to a finish, himself. Or at least, to the point, where she didn’t have to say another damned thing, lest she incriminate herself.

“Thank you...” Liz said quietly.

The statement puzzled the man. “For?”

“For last night.” she continued. The least she could do was thank the man for not only being a gentleman, but for not making fun of her.

Red smiled softly, inclining his head. “I just wanted some of the blankets back.” he jested, making her smile, which had been his intended goal.

“I am not a blanket hog.” she protested.

“I am perfectly capable of walking up those stairs by myself.” Elizabeth was both embarrassed and frustrated as she scowled at Reddington.

While he enjoyed her petulant face, he did have a point to make. “I am not taking the chance you’ll fall.”

Liz eyed the steps dubiously. “I am not going to fall.” she hoped she sounded more certain than she felt.

“Why can’t you just accept my help and be quiet about it.” he tightened his jaw, keeping the smile at bay. “It’s obvious you’ve been injured. What’s the problem here?”

“I just think that if I’m playing your fiancée,” she eyed the magnificent mansion critically, “I should be able to handle myself in any situation.”

“Considering most people would have rescheduled, I’d say you’re doing better than expected.” he dismissed her concerns. “Now stop worrying. It’ll be just like the first time we were here, everything will be fine.”

Dembe waited patiently, as was his way. “Just pick her up and carry her.”

“Dembe!” Liz gasped her disgruntlement. “I would never have expected that from you.”

“I missed lunch.” the man frowned over and a frown from Dembe, spoke volumes. Even Red was slightly taken aback. “I am hungry.”

The woman bounced to the bottom of the stairs, shooing Red off then sighed more than heavily when the man inched in beside her, bracketing her.

She tightened her lips, shooting daggers at him before gripping the banister determinedly. She took the first step, just tightening her grasp on the wrought iron railing, when the entrance to palatial building swung open unceremoniously.

“What in the hell happened to you?” Francis asked as he came to the top step, hands on hips, an incredulous look on his face as he examined the scene.

Liz scrunched her nose, smiling slightly. “I had an accident.”

“I’d say.” Francis folded his arms, watching her gingerly set her foot down on the third step. “Well, aren’t you being patient...” he smiled at the man hovering over the woman, “for once.”

“Stubborn little...” Red muttered, then reached out quickly to keep her steady.

“What did you say?” she frowned at him, reaffirming her grip which had slipped slightly.

“I called you a stubborn little shit.” Red stated succinctly.

She gripped the banister with both hands, her mind setting stubbornly. “I am not!” she hissed.
“Yes.” Red disagreed. “You are.”

“I can do it...” she breathed, exertion slowly but surely overtaking her, truth told.

“Look back Lizzy.” Red instructed. She looked down at the five steps she’d taken, feeling a surge of pride.

“Now, look up.”

She glanced up at the enormous climb ahead of her and Francis leaning against the stone pillar, grinning down at her in open amusement.

It had already taken her at least four minutes do take five steps. Dinner would be over by the time she got to the top.

She resigned herself to the inevitable, slightly depressed over the fact, her face showing as much.

Red stepped once, his intention clear. Liz balked instantly, turning, her hand slapping at the man’s expensive jacket. “Not you!” she proclaimed defiantly.

The man offered a mocking laugh in his throat, lifting the woman in his arms, walking easily up the stairs with his bundle in tow. Elizabeth’s face pouted prettily.

Francis chuckled, opening the door wide for Red. Dembe came up the stairs two at a time, catching up to them easily.

“Would you put me down...” she hissed, wiggling in his grasp.

The man complied, keeping a firm hold on her waist to aid if need arose. “Where are we gathered?”

Liz’s small fist balled into a frustrated smack against his chest. Red ignored the action, hard pressed to keep the smile from his lips. “You know how I love that, baby,” the man teased, “but not now... later.”

“Huh?” she was totally lost unlike their host, who laughed right in her face...

“We don’t get kinky here until after dinner.” Francis grinned at the vexed woman. “We’re all in the dining room.” he offered a hand in greeting, “Dembe, good to see you again.” Francis smiled for the man.

They headed for the dining room.

Elizabeth was stunned by all the people present as the young man threw open the heavy doors, introducing the new arrivals.

“Everyone knows Red and Dembe?” Francis waved a dismissing hand. “And the beauty on Red’s arm, is his lovely fiancée, Elizabeth.”

She waved wanly, a little embarrassed that the attention immediately became focused on her.

After they were seated, dinner was brought out shortly thereafter. Easy conversation fell around the table, some discussing travel plans or new items they had bought.

A woman across from Elizabeth admired her jewelry. She hadn’t worn the earrings tonight because it was supposed to be an informal setting. But Liz hadn’t taken the necklace or bracelet off except to bathe.
These were gifts for my birthday.” She showed them off proudly, swiveling them under the light. She reflectively placed her hand over Red’s, her small fingers intertwining with the strong, artistic ones.

The man halted his narrative mid-sentence, his eyes dropping to the contact, before lifting to the lovely profile. He enjoyed the feel of the warm flesh pressed so intimately to his hand.

Liz relaxed more after that, feeling like she fit in again. She even forgot momentarily, about the heavy casts she wore.

After dinner was cleared, those around the table started talking business. Elizabeth busied herself with her dessert. Red slid his over, hiding a grin, having noticed how delectable the woman found the treat.

She could not really follow any of the technical aspects being discussed, so she lost herself in the delicious cake and wine she sipped. She was not even aware of any dissension, until the raised voices startled her.

“Good God! Stop bickering!” Red’s powerful voice resonated over the others, instantly quieting the table. “Anne, if you want to take your business through there, that’s fine. But don’t expect us to follow suit, not at this time.” he was emphatic.

There was a chorus of consensual agreement on the debate. “It’s not only a good way to loose your shipment, but more importantly, your men.” Red censored. “I, for one, am not going to risk my men over a few dollars. And you shouldn’t either.”

The woman fell silent, frowning.

“I have to agree with Red in this.” Francis leaned on the table, his hands linked under his chin. “Some of my men have been with me for years. Their continued loyalty and their lives are more important... you go in,” he advised the woman, “you go alone.”

Talks continued on to other matters, nothing having really been decided in Liz’s opinion. Into the next hour, new business coming out of Japan was discussed.

Red felt Liz lean into him, absently wrapping his arm around her. He smiled softly realizing that she wasn’t leaning against him out of affection, but because she had fallen asleep.

Adjusting his arm, he shared a small smile with Francis when she settled more comfortably against him.

“I didn’t realize how boring we were.” Francis frowned his concern.

“You were the one who was talking.” Red reminded.

A little while later, they finished their discussions. Usually Red would stay and socialize, but he had more important matters to attend to, one of which was leaning against him, fast asleep.

Red gently touched Liz’s cheek, rousing her. She opened her eyes, raising her head off his shoulder, looking around with bleary eyes. She made contact with the man’s gaze, finding him grinning at her... as was the rest of those seated at the table.

“I am so sorry.” She whispered her mortification.

“It’s all right, Elizabeth.” Francis smiled gently. “Those pain pills throw you for a loop. I broke my leg skiing a couple years back and fell asleep before a speech I had to give at a charity dinner.” he remembered fondly. “Red had to slap me awake.”

“I didn’t have to, but I enjoyed the experience all the same.” Red stood. “Well, ladies and gentlemen. It’s time I get Sleeping Beauty back to the castle.”

“I’ll see you out.” Francis arose, following the trio close behind.

“Dinner was amazing, Francis. Thank you for inviting me...” Liz reddened, “even if I did miss half of it.”

“To be honest, I wish I could have taken a nap myself.” the man shook his head woefully. “That last hour was dreadfully painful.”

“I think more than a few of us would have liked to have drifted off.” Red nodded in agreement. “I don’t envy the rest of your evening, Francis. You’re welcome to come with us.” he grinned.

“Who’s to say they wouldn’t be here, bitching at each other in the morning when I came back for clothes.” Francis opened the door, guiding them down the stairs.

“I thought you had the new guest house?” Liz asked of her old house, the one Francis bought.

“Oh, I’m still working on it. I’ll have it done in a few days time, of course, too late to be of any use now.” he whined miserably. “I’ll tell you what though, if I don’t get them out within the next half hour, expect a knock on your door.”

Francis opened the back door of the car, stepping out of their way as Red got Liz situated before shutting the door and walking to the other side.

Looking over the roof of the car, “My door is always open.” Red replied, quite seriously.

Once Elizabeth was done with her nightly ritual, Red helped her settle into the mattress. As he reached for her laptop, she grabbed his wrist, alarmed, “You’re bleeding, Red.”

He glanced down at his once pristine white shirt, watching the blood seep through the rich cotton fabric. “Well, damn. I liked this shirt.” he grumbled.

“Go get some supplies and I’ll change it for you.”

“I can do it.” He craned his head, looking to see how far the blood ran down his sleeve.

“I want to see it, check that it isn’t infected.” she argued. “Don’t make me get up and do it myself.”

“Fine, I’ll get it.” He went into the bathroom, returning with the needed supplies a minute later, handing them to her, unbuttoning his shirt.

“Just soak it when we’re done,” she eyed the material critically, “it’s still wet, maybe it’ll come out.”

“Maybe.” But he doubted it. For a man, he knew a lot about when he could and couldn’t get blood out of fabrics.

“Sit down.” She moved her leg over, making room for him. “Roll up your sleeve.”

Red pulled up the sleeve of his t-shirt, holding it out of her way while she worked the soiled bandage off. “You can just yank it off.” he reminded.

“I could, but then that would hurt.”

“I would not classify that as pain.”

“If I can do it without making it hurt...” She left it hanging, letting him fill in the blanks. “I’m starting to wonder if you’re a masochist. The way you don’t shy away from pain.”

“I expect pain, so when it happens, I’m able to keep going.” he watched the proceedings calmly. “If you go into a gun battle expecting to get hit, it’s not as shocking to you when it happens. While it hurts like hell, you’re able to feed off the adrenaline and survive.” he had cultivated the art over the years. “There are no time outs when you get a wound.”

“Try yelling out, Uncle.” She muttered, making him smile. She pulled back the last bit of bandage, exposing the gash. It was seeping, but still closed, for the most part. “I knew you strained your arm carrying me.”

“I did not. I felt a pull before we even went to Francis’.” he informed her. “I just didn’t have time to deal with it then.”

“You don’t think maybe you aggravated it by toting me around like a sack of potatoes?”

“Haven’t we established that I do not lie?”

She dabbed the area with disinfectant, not surprised that Red didn’t react to the sting. She blew on the area, drying it while she ripped off pieces of tape, sticking them to Red’s fingers.

“Oh, I forgot.” She touched her lips underneath the cut, feeling for heat. The area was cool and dry. She finally pulled back, glancing up at Red, realizing what she had done, finding him grinning at her.

“I was checking for fever.”

“There is this wonderful new invention... a thermometer.” he glanced upward. “But on second thought, I like your way better.”

She dabbed the area again, cleaning off her germs then added some ointment and clean gauze. “See, that wasn’t so bad, was it?”

“Didn’t hurt one bit. When I get wounded again, you can do the bandaging.”

“I hate when you’re so blasé about that.” She patted the tape to secure the ends to his skin.

“When you’ve been wounded as many times as I have, you can’t think of it any other way.” He wadded up the trash, and pushed off the bed. “If I started dreading where or when the next hit would happen, I’d never leave the damn house. You can’t live your life in fear.”

“How many times have you been hurt?”

“Pick a weapon.” he quipped.

“Knife, gun, electricity—”

“You’ve been tortured?”
He shrugged it off. “Are you getting on with the guards now?” he asked.

Liz’s brow furrowed at the change of subject, sighing. “Obviously.” she screwed up her face. “Silas and his innuendo is evidence of that.” she chuckled quietly. “Why?”

“Well, I wanted to make sure you were comfortable with them and getting around better before I got out of your hair.” he explained.

Liz sat up straighter, a frown overtaking her smile. “What?”

“I wanted to make sure you were settled before going to the safe house.”

“What the hell are you talking about?” she scowled.

“I have overstayed my welcome, don’t you think?” Red chuckled lightly, then sighed. “Sweetheart, three days is an acceptable houseguest, five days is pushing it. I’m going on almost twenty days.” he advised. “I am the terrible, dreaded houseguest that never leaves. Sort of like Francis.”

“But... it’s your house.” she reasoned. “I’m the intruder.”

“No, remember, your name is on the deed.” he joked. “I don’t want to...” Red turned serious for a moment, “I’ve enjoyed this truce, for lack of better word, we have maintained.”

He had dreaded this conversation all day. “Perhaps I should not push my luck.”

Liz pulled at the pillow in her lap, twisting the fringe. “You’re not in my way.” she managed. “And I... you’re not annoying me at all, as a matter of fact, you’ve been very helpful.” she smiled brightly. “I could not have managed without you.”

Did he want to go because he wanted away from her?

“I...” she hesitated, “have I given you the impression I want you to leave?”

“Well, no.” Red tilted his head questioningly. “I just thought since you are better now and your doing well with Security, you didn’t really need me around anymore.”

Liz got lost in thought, wondering what she should do. She had enjoyed Red’s company, but maybe she had been too needy? Was this his way to get some distance? To get away from her?

“This is a huge house, Red.” she tried again. “It’s not like we’re right on top of one another.” she fiddled with her ring, her mouth falling open when she realized what she’d said... her dream instantly coming to the forefront.

“I-I mean...” she stuttered, “it seems silly to bounce from one safe house to another, when there’s a perfectly good place, right here.”

Red fell silent, drumming his fingers against the bed.

“Besides, I still do need your help sometimes.” she reminded. “You know, like when the guys have my cart and stuff.”

She bit the inside of her lip, knowing that was a lame excuse the minute she voiced it. She could get around pretty well now and he knew it.

“You can’t leave!” she reminded quickly. “If Francis comes by...”
Red lifted his head nobly, watching the woman attentively. If he didn’t know better, he would think she didn’t _want_ him to leave.

Not that he wanted to go. He had been thinking how he could possibly extend his stay, but had come up empty in his search for a legitimate excuse.

But it seemed, Lizzy had an abundance of them.

“All right...” he quietly agreed, holding his joy. “But when you’re ready for me t–”

“Oh course, yes.” She nodded happily, smiling. “I’ll let you know.”

After breakfast the next morning, Red left Liz in the capable care of her nurses before heading to his office.

He’d been checking on his investments, pleased when he saw all of them doing well. So pleased in fact, seeing Ressler’s name splash across his phone screen did little to damper his good mood.

“Reddington, we’ve had another one.” Ressler informed the man without preamble. “If you could come down and take a look at the pictures...”

“Can’t you just send them?” Red sighed into the phone.

“Aram said they were running some systems update for another hour or something. I wasn’t really listening, to be honest.” Donald confessed.

“I’ll be there soon.” Red closed the phone, his head falling back into his chair, his mood dampening somewhat. He forced himself up, heading down the hall. “Lizzy?”

“Yeah?” She called out from the closet.

He followed her voice entering the area after a few steps, focusing on her activity. “What are you doing?”

He stared at her, half hidden in the clothes hanging on the rack... well part of her, at least.

His eyes immediately fell to the rather fetching sight revealed. The only portion visible of the woman was her bottom. Her ever present companion, the demon cat, sat there beside her, lazily batting at a string attached to a pair of Liz’s pants.

“How do you get up if no one came in here?” He glanced about, confirming they were alone. “Where are the nurses?”

“Helen ran to the store.” she said from inside her makeshift fortress. “And Diane is getting something from her car.”

She backed out of the clothes, brushing her hair out of her face before sitting on the floor. “I was going to eat a candy bar before Vegan Mindy got here.” She held up the candy bar, pointing to the clothes. “Dembe gave me a secret stash.”

She rolled to the chair, pushing with her arm trying to get off the floor unsuccessfully while Keres rubbed herself against Liz’s thigh. “I guess I didn’t think that far ahead. Silas usually gets it for me.”

“I see.” He bent over, helping her off the floor. “You don’t have to worry about Vegan Mindy, I fired her yesterday.”

“You did?” Her voice rose shrilly. The man crooked his head, eyeing her quizzically.

“I did. She didn’t make you happy.” he walked her slowly back to the bedroom. “They’re sending over an older Southern woman, that I’m sure, will fill you with chicken and dumplings and cherry cobbler.”

“No more eggplant or weeds?” Liz’s voice bubbled with joy.

“No, and since their employees have trouble following vocal warnings, I’ve given them a complete list of things that are off limits around you.” Red further stated. “Eggplant being at the very top.”

She smiled, giddily. “Thank you, Red.” a thought occurred to her. “Oh, why were you looking for me?”

The man explained the situation to her. “But didn’t want to leave without saying goodbye.” He smiled absently at nothing in particular.

“All right, I’ll save you some cobbler.”

“No dumplings?” He asked, heading to the door.

“I make no promises!” She called out to him.

Red and Dembe entered the main area of the Blacksite, stopping slowly in their tracks. Computer techs bounced from one station to another, their expressions bleak, their actions harried. Agents littered the floor as usual, but it appeared several more had joined the fray.

“Samar?” Red took off his hat, having finally reached the woman.

“Reddington, good timing.” She pointed to the new photos taped to the boards. “We just got these printed a couple minutes ago.”

He neared the offensive items, his eye ticking slightly at the vivid pictures. This victim was worse than the previous two. She was literally torn to shreds. Only hunks of skin were left hanging haphazardly on her poor, mangled body.

“Do we have a name as of yet?” the man enquired quietly.

“I just pulled this before you came in.” She handed over a driver’s license photo to him of what the woman originally looked like with her face intact.

Taping it up beside the other normal photos of the two previous victims, Red Reddington scrutinized them intensely. He filtered back through people he knew from associates to the occasional Barista he may have encountered. No one came to mind, none resembled any of these women.

“I don’t know her.” His jaw tightened slightly. He wasn’t being of much help to the team or any of these women... or future victims.

“I didn’t think you would but it never hurts to check.” Samar’s tone was grim. “The thing is, I’ve researched these women and they were normal. I mean, completely every day boring, normal. Why anyone would want to harm them…”

“Did you know her.” Ressler interrupted.

“He didn’t.” Samar answered. “I was just explaining to him that they had good work records, steady relationships, no debt, not even so much as a traffic ticket.” the woman was at a loss. “Who would want these women dead, is a complete mystery.’”

Donald and Samar turned to look at Reddington who had fallen silent. An oddity where the man was concerned. He was standing in front of the three pictures, scanning them repeatedly.

His eyes moved slowly, his stare focused and intent and then... he stiffened. Turning on his heel he made for the door, Dembe following closely behind.

“Reddington!” Donald yelled at the retreating man.

“Reddington? What did you see!” Samar hurried after the man, skidding to the elevator. She just caught it as the door was closing. “What?” she demanded.

“They all look like Lizzy.”

The door closed with a finality on the man’s foreboding countenance.
April 21

Red sat tensely throughout the drive home. He knew that Elizabeth was safe, but that didn’t stop the anxiety he felt.

His footsteps hastened up the stairs to the front entrance, as he searched the house methodically, finally locating Elizabeth in their bedroom.

He breathed a sigh of relief, grinning as he watched Lizzy poke a pen under her leg cast.

“I didn’t hear you come in.” She poked her tongue out the corner of her mouth, jabbing the pen in further.

“Itch?” He walked slowly through the room, heading for the closet.

“I swear ants are under this thing.” She jabbed the pen in further.

The man came out carrying a long handle back scratcher, holding it aloft, “Try this.”

She snatched it out of his hand, jamming it under the cast, groaning with relief.

“Thank you.” She moved it back and forth under the heavy plaster, sighing. “So are Ress and Samar following Edward again?”

“Yes, they started tailing him at the pick up point.” He trailed his finger over the top of the cast, surprised when she jerked away. “Is it hurting? Tender?”

“No. It’s fine.” She placed her hand over the area he had felt, rubbing the pale skin, crinkling her nose in open distaste.

He went to touch her other leg but she pulled that one away as well.

“Oh, hello Mr. Reddington.” the nurse placed the freshly laundered towels she carried to the other side of her hip. “I didn’t know you were back.”

“Okay, what’s going on?” he sighed his annoyance, his body tensing instantly alert. Out of the corner of his eye, he had caught a movement, his hand instinctively reaching for the weapon on his gun holster hidden beneath the back of his jacket.

“Red!” Liz sat up quickly, sensing his intentions. “You remember Helen.” she smiled brightly, hopefully covering the faux pas.

“Oh, hello Mr. Reddington.” the nurse placed the freshly laundered towels she carried to the other side of her hip. “I didn’t know you were back.”

Red stared at Liz for a few seconds before transferring his now composed features to the newest occupant in the room. “I only arrived a minute ago. Just checking on our girl.”

“Well, we were getting ready for her bath.” the woman seemed genuinely fond of her patient.

“Then, I’ll let you get to it.” Red patted Liz’s knee, very aware when she pulled the leg out from under his touch.

Something was amiss. Something was up with the woman.

But evidently his questions would have to wait. “I’ll be in my office if you need me.”

Minutes later in the quiet of his office, Red ruminated on the now existing problem. It now appeared he was not allowed to touch her, in any way shape or form.

He relived the day’s activities in his mind, searching for some feasible reason the woman might have changed so drastically in such a short amount of time.

Nothing seemed out of the norm upon consideration. He had sensed a sort of cloud hanging over Elizabeth. But for the life of him, he couldn’t think what had brought about the change.

He was stymied.

“Mr. Reddington?” Helen tapped lightly on the other side of the door.

“Yes, come in.” He said, straightening in his seat. “What can I do for you?”

“We’re having a little trouble with Elizabeth, sir.”

“I’m shocked.” He said mockingly, pushing away from his desk, standing erect. “What’s wrong now?”

“She’s insisting on a bath, which is fine...”

“But...” he urged gently.

“She’s impatient. She wants in now. We haven’t wrapped her casts—”

“Go get some bags.” Red gestured for the woman to go. “I’ll handle her.”

As he entered the room he could already make out the heated argument emanating from behind the closed bathroom doors.

Swinging the doors open wide, he was assaulted with the steamy fragrant air. His eyes instantly swept Elizabeth Keen’s scantily clad form.

“Red!” She gasped indignantly, clutching the towel to her breasts with age old maiden modesty.

Red ignored the modest chagrin, addressing Diane directly, “Give us a minute. Helen is in the kitchen.”

The woman retreated quickly, pulling the doors closed behind her, leaving the two in silence.

“I’m getting in that tub.” Liz muttered.

“After you get your casts wrapped.”

“I’m more than capable of keeping them out of the water.” She grated, annoyed.

“Maybe,” He walked behind her, shutting off the water, “but you’re still getting them wrapped.”

She huffed angrily, moving past him when he caught her.
“You’re going to sit down, get wrapped like a good little girl or–”

“Or what!” Liz fumed, her eyes flashing fire.

Red stepped in closer, until she had to tilt her head to look up at him. “Or I’ll put you in that tub and dunk you under the water until you stop being a brat and tell me what the real problem is.”

“Well, that would get my casts wet.” Elizabeth gloated.

“Sit down.” He said sternly.

The woman found herself sitting quickly, gripping her towel in place, her eyes still defiant.

A tentative knock on the door interrupted what might have been.

“Come in.” Red almost barked.

The nurses came in, armed with the supplies needed.

“Proceed ladies.” he cast Elizabeth a warning glance as he passed. “Watch out... she bites.” it was silkily advised.

Red rolled up his sleeves, cooling slightly in the steamy room, watching the nurses make quick work of the casts.

A philosophical discussion commenced on the best way to get Elizabeth into the tub. Neither woman noted their charge inching closer to the water.

“Stop, right there.” Red’s tone brooked no argument. “Ladies...” his tone brooked no argument his hands going to his hips, “go take a lunch break”

Both women quickly did his bidding, leaving him alone with Liz again.

She backed up, uneasy under Red’s unwavering scrutiny.

“You’ve been difficult all day. Why?”

“Is it a crime to just want to shave my damn legs!”

“No, but that’s not what’s wrong.” he stepped once. “Tell me.”

“I’m tired of feeling dirty.” she blurted. “I need to wash... I need...” she floundered.

“Need what?”

“I need to get that night off me.” her voice held a note of hysteria. “I can still feel the blood. I feel the tackiness, the itch... the stench.” her hands clutched the towel in a death grip. “I need to feel clean.”

He finally knew what she meant.

He still felt it, even after the numerous showers he’d taken himself. When he was away from her for more than a day, the feeling of her warm blood on his flesh was just as real as the night in question... just as overpowering as when it had been fresh and real.

He was scalding himself under hot water continually, trying to wash the hurt away.

It hadn’t worked.
He didn’t think he’d ever truly wash her blood off his hands.

Red walked the last few feet to her, whipping the towel away, ignoring her shocked protest. He picked her up, moving over the tub, lowering her slowly.

As she hit the bubble covered hot water, she tensed, gripping him tightly.

“I understand completely.” She still held his arms in her grasp, her manner hesitant, uncertain. “Let’s get that bastard’s filth off you, Lizzy.”

She relaxed in his hold, unclenching her fingers around his arm, allowing him to gently sit her in the steamy water.

Reaching behind him, he grabbed a towel, rolling it as a prop for her leg.

“Would you like something to drink?”

“When was you’re last pill?”

“This morning.”

Red looked down at her, relaxed into the contours of the tub, eyes closed, practically purring with delight.

Bracing his hands on the tub, he bent, nuzzling her brow with his nose, his lips lightly kissing the soft skin. Pushing off, he was stopped by a soapy hand gripping his tie.

Red looked at the contact. “And another tie bites the dust.”

“You can afford it…” She let go of his tie, blowing the suds off the tip. “And Red,” she halted his intended retreat, her voice more than sincere, “thank you.”

“You’re welcome.” he lifted noble brows. “Now, don’t drown before I get back.”

“And you can get here in the next thirty minutes?” Red enquired, nodding minutely with the answer given. “Yes, that’s fine. We’ll see you then.”

Red closed the phone, entering the bathroom with a half full bottle and a glass. “You still awake?”

“Barely.” She left her eyes shut, still melted into the warm porcelain. “Was that the Post Office?”

“No, I have a surprise for you. It will be arriving in,” he looked at his watch, “twenty nine minutes now.” Uncorking the bottle, he poured a generous amount into the glass, handing it to her.

Smiling, her bubble covered arm came up out of the water, taking the glass. “A surprise, for me?”

“Yes, so soak away. I’ll be back when it arrives.”

The numbers in the ledger blurred for the umpteenth time.

Red Reddington rubbed his eyes, trying to focus again. It was times like these that he missed Luli most. It wasn’t that he couldn’t run the numbers, it was that he didn’t want to. Well, most of the time, anyway. Sometimes he enjoyed watching everything ticking along. He had this morning...

But not right now.

The sound of the doorbell ringing saved him from pursuing the task further. Pushing the ledger away, he headed for the door.

Dembe came out of the South wing just about the time Red hit the main foyer as well. He acquiesced to the man who subsequently opened the door.

Two women waited patiently on the other side, arms loaded down with supplies.

“Good afternoon ladies. You’ve certainly come prepared.” After acquainting themselves, he gestured toward the back. “If you’ll follow me, she will be very pleased to see you, I think.”

“You mentioned that she has a broken arm and leg, sir?” the smaller in stature ventured after a few steps. Dembe had taken most of their burden, walking slowly alongside.

“Left ankle, right arm. Very unhappy with her limited mobility.” Red’s supplied evenly. “If you’d like to set up anything... I’ll alert her that you’re here.”

The man did just that, entering the bathroom unannounced.

“Lizzy?” he clapped his hands together once, his eyes gentle on the submerged woman. “Your surprise has arrived.”

“Is it someone to take off this ten pound weight?” she shifted awkwardly, the cast on her foot hampering her intent.

“No, but I think you’ll enjoy it all the same.” Red handed her the baby lotion she had desperately sought a few seconds before. “I’ve brought in some ladies to help you in your cleansing process” She shook her head, his meaning lost on her.

Red caught Dembe out of his peripheral vision. He nodded slightly, stepping aside. “Ladies, she’s ready for you.”

The two walked in, carrying their bags and a table.

Liz sat up as best she could, sensing what those bags held, brightening with excitement.

“This is Elizabeth.” Red made the introductions. “Lizzy, this is Hannah and Katie.” he stepped further out of the way, motioning theatrically. “Do to her what you will. She needs a good pampering.”

Red felt a warmth seeing her so happy, especially over something so simplistic.

“Once you ladies have worked your magic, you’ll need assistance getting her out.”

Dembe waited patiently. Red acknowledged the man. “Call me when my services are needed. And you,” he pointed at Liz, “everything you want done... do it.”

Liz nodded joyously. She eyed the women expectantly, grinning widely.

The last he heard on his way out was a plaintive but heart felt, “Oh, please. Someone wash my hair.”
Red returned to the journal, better able to concentrate now. The ruckus in the bathroom did not break his concentration even though the two beauticians made multiple trips in and out, carrying various female accouterments... and talking a mile a minute about every subject under the sun, including the dubious validity of the male species.

Red hid his amusement, continuing his pastime until finally his services were needed. Rising from his chair, he pushed up his sleeves, walking the distance needed.

“You ready to get out now?” He asked, seeing the bench padded with sheet towels and a couple folding tables set up in a line.

“Yes, we’re moving on to step two of twenty.” Liz sounded almost giddy.

Bending down, he ran his hands under the water, finding the wet outline of her body. He courageously controlled his instincts to crawl in with her, clothes and all.

The man gathered her in his arms, breaking the surface of the water, holding her out and over the tub. The water cascaded off the lithe body, before he brought her to his chest.

“I guess we didn’t think of the logistics of this.” Liz touched his wet shirt, apologetically. “I’m sorry about that.”

She didn’t seem all that sorry to his way of thinking, which amused him... only anxious to be on to ‘step number two’.

“It’s all right.” he smiled over at the patiently waiting beauticians. “I’ve always enjoyed a ‘wet’ woman.”

The older of the two grinned for his audacity. The younger blushed. And Liz threw him a ‘behave’ scowl.

Setting her on the padded bench, he was unceremoniously pushed aside as Katie swooped in, swaddling Liz from head to toe in warmed towels.

“I’ll be making a few calls, if you need anything, just let me know.” he made a discreet exit.

Settling back into his chair, he pulled the wet shirt and tie away from his body. He let go of the fabric, grimacing as it slapped back into his chest.

Pulling his phone from his pocket, he hesitated, hearing a muffled moan from the bathroom. He shook his head slightly bemused, then focused on the call he had just put through.

“Michael.” his voice held a genuine warmth. “How are things in Milan?” he waited patiently for the news. “No, no. I didn’t hear anything, I’m just checking in. Making sure...” he held his smile, the conversation amusing him. He chuckled appreciatively, answering the question asked. “Yes...”

“Damn!”

Red glanced at the bathroom doors impassively, his mind wandering for a beat, “No, I’m here. You were saying?” he apologized sincerely. “And they’ll be picking up the shipment tonight?”

“Shit!”

“Yes, that’s good, Michael.” the man fought the distractions around him, trying to concentrate on the matter at hand. “No, continue, I’m very interested.”

The door swung unceremoniously open, Hannah exiting hurriedly.

“Everything okay in there?” Red asked pleasantly.

“Oh, yes.” the woman chuckled. “Waxing.” She shrugged, grabbing a bag, disappearing back into the sanctuary.

“No, I was talking to the beautician.” Red explained his lapse, grinning retroactively. “No, she’s not here for me.” he listened for a beat. “Funny, asshole. My fiancée broke her ankle and arm and they’re here helping her.”

Red rubbed his neck absently, then snapped, “No, I didn’t drug her, get her drunk or ply her with money to get her acceptance. Which is more than we can say about your wife. The poor woman.”

“Ow! No, I’m fine. Ow!”

Red scowled darkly at the closed barrier.

“Yes, she’ll be at Mark’s.” Red settled back in to the conversation. “I wasn’t sure you were attending this year. Good, then I’ll see you there.”

“Holy... did that take skin?”

Red chuckled, dialing the next number.

He finished his phone calls having finally figured a way to phase out Lizzy’s low cussing in the background.

After what seemed an eternity, Hannah finally emerged from the bathroom.

“I think she’s ready to come out now, Mr. Reddington.” the woman was all smiles.

“It sounded like she was ready an hour ago.” Red quipped, following the woman into the bathroom. He sought out Elizabeth, who sat on the bench beside the huge tub. “Feel better, sweetheart?”

“I would give a years pay to have that experience again.” she nodded amiably.

Katie stepped back, allowing him the first real glimpse of Elizabeth.

She looked rosy, coifed and extremely content.

“Did you cut your hair?” he stepped slowly, filtering his fingers through the dark strands. His eyes admiring the end product. Lizzy smiled widely, pleased he noticed the slight change. “It’s very soft.” He crooked his head towards one side, his fingers continuing the excruciatingly pleasurable past-time.

“We just trimmed it. Maybe a few layers.” Liz shook her head this way and that, swinging the softness around. “You like it?”

“I do, very much. You look very pretty and more importantly, relaxed.” He dropped his hands to his sides, turning his attention elsewhere. “Ladies, she looks very happy now.”
The women started packing up their gear. They instructed Elizabeth, giving pointers on what products to use and more importantly, which ones not. The woman demanded their card for future use.

“Thank you, really. I feel so much better.” She gushed, touching her hair and checking her makeup every few seconds. “I didn’t know my eyes could look like this. You did an amazing job.”

Dembe came in to help them with all the equipment, then escorted the two women from the room.

Hannah eyed Dembe appreciatively, then blushed when her friend hit her arm smartly, sending a warning with her eyes... all of which Hannah ignored.

She smiled brightly up at the dark man. Reddington caught his friends eye, gesturing to the cute beautician, with a knowing smile.

Dembe exchanged an enigmatic glance, grinning his appreciation.

Red smiled widely, feeling Elizabeth’s eyes on him.

The women exchanged farewells. Elizabeth was one big smile.

“Thank you for making her feel better.” Red pulled his wallet out, tipping both women a few hundred each. “I do hope we can call on you again?”

“Anytime!” Both replied in unison, more than happy with such generosity.

It was rare to see a man fawn over his girlfriend in such a manner. Plus he had made it well worth their while.

Red had followed silently, as the women made their way to the foyer. At one point, he discreetly nudged Dembe in open camaraderie.

The black man pulled his eyes from the saucy swish of Hannah’s backside, dimpling a response.

The two men exchanged a universal contemplative look.

Patting the large man on the back, Red smiled happily. “Good man.” Turning, he bowed slightly. “Ladies, have a pleasant evening.”

“Do you feel better now?” Red sat beside the woman, his weight indenting the bed slightly.

“Yes...” Liz hesitated, faltering over the words. “I’m sorry I–”

“All of that could have been avoided, if you had just told me what was wrong.” he linked his fingers together across his thighs. “Did you think I wouldn’t understand wanting to feel clean again?”

She honestly found herself wondering, if the man could feel any specific way after all he had experienced in life. But perhaps there had been a time that he would have felt like she had.

“Just talk to me.” his hands gestured aimlessly, his eyes on her averted profile.

She nodded dejectedly, then pulled a Reddington, changing subjects. “What was up with you and Dembe a few minutes ago?” her curiosity was piqued.
“Hannah was looking at him like he was a piece of Godiva... he should be asking her for a date, even ask we speak.”

“So you played Wingman?” Liz hid her amusement well. “And we’ll be flying solo tonight?”

“You think she’ll say yes?” Red was allowing the diversion.

“Ahh, yeah.” She scoffed. “Dembe’s hot.”

“Remind me not to leave you alone with him.” he clapped his hands on his thighs. “I’m going to rinse off now, if you don’t need anything?”

“I’m good. Take your time.” a playfulness overcame the woman. “If I do need anything, I’ll just call Dembe.”

“You leave that innocent man alone.” Red pulled at his tie. “I don’t want you corrupting him.”

“Oh wow...” she beamed, having absently ran her hand over her newly waxed skin. “It’s so soft.” she grabbed his hand, running it up her leg. “Isn’t that amazing! I don’t think my legs have ever felt so good.”

Red felt the velvety flesh under his palm, the warmth delighting his senses. He fought the urge to further the exploration.

This felt just like he had imagined a few days ago.

His heart was suddenly thumping hard in his chest, a fine sheen of sweat collected on his upper lip as his finger tips grazed her short shorts.

She lifted her hand hastily, suddenly realizing the intimacy implied.

“I-I’m sorry!” she apologized profusely, stammering... “I–”

Red’s lips twitched with amusement, his free hand hiding the fact. She was so fucking adorable when she was mortified.

Liz’s cheeks were tinted a pretty pink, the blue eyes completely lost and vacant.

“Well, I guess you’re comfortable with me now.” the man chuckled.

Inwardly, he felt a surge of adrenaline pump through his body. He had never felt so close to her. That meant a great deal to him.

“Well, I guess I am.” she winced painfully. How gauche could one person be.

“We’re making progress.” he grinned, patting her thigh soothingly, oddly pleased when she didn’t start at the unexpected touch.

He stood, heading for the bathroom, then stopped mid-stride, sniffing at the air. “What is that amazing smell?” he enjoyed the fragrant aroma, then remembered his manners. “Besides you, of course.”

“Oh, that?” Liz grinned, thankful the moment had passed. “I asked Nora, the new cook, to make chicken and dumplings and cherry cobbler for dinner.”

Red placed his hand on his chest, his face, blissful. “Lizzy, I could kiss you.” He shook his head
Once, tilting it to the left before shutting the door behind him.

The woman found herself suddenly breathless, uncertain as to the cause. Her eyes stared transfixed at the closed door, her mind wandering freely. Within seconds another blush colored her already heightened cheeks.

Red shut the door, leaving the outside world behind. He let his head fall back into the thick wood, his eyes closing to the lascivious visions dancing in his head.

He had to pull her naked, out of the tub. Lizzy, herself had run his hand up her silky thigh.

And not just her thigh, but her inner thigh. Just inches from...

He stripped clear of his shirt and pants, tossing them carelessly before stalking into the shower. The man automatically reached, turning on the jets, stepping under their pounding spray.

The steamy air felt delicious, his eyes closing tightly as he freely allowed the images to come.

He remembered the feel of her heat increasing the further she moved his fingers up her leg. He had been just a hair away from touching her crotch and could have sworn he had felt the damp humidity of the secret place between her beautiful thighs.

How would it feel to have her smooth thighs wrapped around him? Would she spread her legs wide, or would she hug them around his body?

Red leaned unto his forearm, balancing against the warm stone of the shower wall, drawing in a deep breath, breathing in the scent of Elizabeth which permeated the entire room. Her scent invading his senses, blocking all else.

“Son of a bitch.” he muttered tightly, willing his growing erection to recede.

What the hell was going on with him? More to the point, what the fuck was his problem!

He snatched the soap from the ledge, washing himself off quickly, bypassing the stiff length of his erection.

“Talk about fucking objectifying...” he sneered. “She’s not like the others and I’ll be damned if you think of her in that manner.” he chided himself severely.

Red rinsed off, yanking his towel off the bar, “Fucking asshole.” he wiped away the water and agitation. “Stop acting like Silas with a centerfold.”

He needed to stop pussy footing around. He needed to grow a set of balls, more like it.

Just ask her to dinner, maybe dancin–

No, she couldn’t go dancing yet. Maybe a movie? Which was the biggest cliché of all time...

He should know what the hell to do. He had done this a few times in his day. Besides that, he was Red Reddington.

If his associates knew the trouble he was experiencing over this situation, his reputation would be
He knew what he would like to do, but it was like the old adage, at least buy her dinner first.

A date...

Jesus.

He hadn’t gone out of his way to actually meet anyone... to date in years.

The women he had encountered since becoming the Concierge of Crime, he had met in a bar or it’s equivalent. He had of course, been a gentlemen, buying their drinks and what not.

But most usually, they approached him. They had a plan in mind for the evening, one of which included himself.

They would have a few drinks, maybe a dance or two... then fuck.

Even Josephine had started that way. But there had been something about her that kept calling out to him. She was beautiful, unassuming, gentle, a wonderful lover.

Why she hadn’t trusted him to help her... to get her to safety. Damn her family!

Red slammed his eyes shut, shaking off the rising anger. He took a deep breath and then another until his rage settled. He would have to take care of that matter soon, until that time...

Perhaps Lizzy would enjoy a play?

“You don’t even know if she’ll say, yes.” he muttered quietly to himself.

Yes, that’s what he would do. Ask first. Plan, later.

The man wrapped the towel around his waist, heading to the closet, closing the door behind him. He leaned into the dresser, breathing out his vexation and anxiety before yanking down a suit.

He’d put his armor on and feel focused again. That was all he needed to do.

Once that was in place, he’d be normal.

He reached for a shirt, then hesitated when he heard the doorbell ring.

He set to work dressing, pushing aside all else. He’d have to just deal with everything later.

Chapter Notes

I meant to attach this to the last chapter.

I just wanted to take a moment to give a big THANK YOU to all the readers for leaving reviews and kudos. Also, thank you for following and subscribing to my story.

And to the ladies who mentioned my story on the Lizzington page. You not only made my day, it shocked me to see a thread for my fic. I thought Beta was lying to me when she told me about it. I was so sure you were talking about another 'Focal Point' fanfic. So you can imagine how amazing it felt when I finally got to see the comments.

Thank you all for making this a hell of an experience.

April 21

Liz had vacated the bedroom heading for the living area.

She sat now, staring sightlessly at the book in her hand, her thoughts ruminating on her previous actions. She did not know what had possessed her, but ever since she had dreamed that damned dream... more specifically, of how it had felt when Red had gone down on her, she felt confused and disoriented.

In that dream, Red’s hands had felt phenomenal but how they felt in real life... paled in comparison.

His lightly callused hand was so hot, and much larger than she had expected. The touch against her leg was electrifying.

She had felt his fingers instinctively curve against her inner thigh. His touch was feather light and gentle but she had felt the power in his hand.

He had dragged his fingers slowly across her heightened, sensitive skin. She had heated to her very core.

She knew she had a crush on the man, but the emotional onslaught had staggered her.

The chiming of the doorbell interrupted her train of thought.

Odd? It was very rare that anyone made it to the door without being sidelined by Security. Even UPS and the occasional pizza delivery boy was stopped in their tracks.

Picking up her walkie, she keyed it, “Silas?”

“Only.” ‘Mr. Holbrook’ questioned haughtily.
Minutes later, Silas and Francis walked through the door. Liz beamed a sincere smile, “Francis. I’m sorry I couldn’t come greet you properly.” she motioned to a seat nearby. “Won’t you sit down?”

“I hope I’m not disturbing you?” the young man enquired, doing her bidding.

“No, not at all. Just waiting for Red to get finished.” She asked, raising from her seat. “Would you like a drink?”

“Oh, yeah, sure.” He waved her back down, “No, no. I can get it.” He walked to the bar, pointing at her. “Would you like something?”

She sighed softly, smiling. “No, thank you. I’m fine.”

Francis nodded, grabbing his drink, bringing it back, sitting down beside her.

“Aren’t I the best hostess ever.” she quipped.

“I’m just so put out by the stress of it all.” Francis shook his head woefully, taking a drink from his tumbler. “You must know I’ll spread this vicious gossip in our entire circle, you’ll never be able to show your face in public again.” He forewarned, straightening his tie arrogantly.

“Hell, I would have thought there was enough ammunition against me all ready, for falling asleep at a dinner.” She said.

“Yes, well... true enough.” he allowed amiably. “Don’t feel too badly, given that I did the same thing about forty minutes after you left.”

“You didn’t!”

“It was either that or drown myself in the gravy boat.”

“That bad, huh?” She laughed.

“It was terrible. With Red there, they tend to stay on their best behavior, or at the very least, civil.” he shrugged. “Well, as civil as our type will ever be... after you guys left, it was nothing but bitching and moaning, and worse yet, groveling.” he whined. “Keeping in mind, I was the one doing the most of that... but what the hell, it’s my damn house.” he reminded himself.

“You should have come over here.” she reminded the invitation had been extended by Reddington himself.

“I know what Red said, but he’s such a liar.” the man teased. “Besides, I didn’t want to intrude.”

“You would most certainly not be intruding!” the woman insisted. “You are welcome here, anytime.” And she meant it. This man was the first one to make her feel welcome and comfortable, she’d be a complete bitch to not return the favor. “If he didn’t mean it, he wouldn’t have offered. You know that.”

She honestly believed that.

Red didn’t seem the type to just offer his home to anyone, so for him to have extended an open invitation to Francis had to mean something.

The man in question merely shrugged, then smiled. “Are you feeling better?”
"I am, thank you. I’m down to a lower dose of pain pill today, so I’m a bit more lucid.” she was pleased to report. “Which Silas assures me, is a novelty in itself.”

The conversation was interrupted with Reddington’s arrival on the scene. He extended his hand, “Francis? What are you doing here?”

“That matter we were discussing at dinner…” Red nodded, understanding to what the young man alluded. “Well, it happened. Anne didn’t listen and lost the entire shipment.”

“And how many men?” Red asked, pulling down a clean glass, pouring himself a drink. He automatically refilled his guest’s tumbler.

“Six.” Francis reported gravely.

“I told her…” Red shook his head in open consternation, sitting next to Liz. “She never fucking listens! Why don’t people listen to me?” he snapped.

“What do you want to do?”

“I’m going to do what I should have done in the first place.” Red sat his tumbler aside, pulling out his phone. “I’m going to block all business coming to her for a while until she pulls her damn head out of her ass.”

“Won’t that upset the status quo?” Francis scratched his head aimlessly.

“Francis, this is the fourth time she’s put her men at risk, and by my total, that puts her death toll up around twenty one men.” he punched the send button on his phone, putting it to his ear, waiting. “I’m tired of this shit.”

He directed his attention to the voice on the phone, “Yes, it’s Reddington. I’m sure you heard about the dust up… yes. That one.” Red snarled. He listened momentarily, his face masking over.

“What do I want to do?” he lifted noble brows. “I want you to give me all the shipments she has lined up within the next hour.” he consulted his watch.

“No, I’m going to fill every order and deliver them myself before hers has a chance to arrive. Which shouldn’t be too difficult, seeing she doesn’t have a fucking team anymore.” the man fell silent, listening politely then replied curtly.

“No, I’m quite serious and perfectly aware how many toes I’ll be stepping on.” he cut the reply off. “Just do it, I’ll call back shortly.”

Francis sat back having watched the Master work. Red had turned the table on someone half a world away with a simple phone call. Very impressive indeed.

“I would say, I’m warning you that this is going to get dirty,” Francis made mention, sipping his drink casually, “but I’ve always thought you appreciated a challenge.”

“Those were good men, Francis.” Red’s hand held his drink tightly, his knuckles white from the exertion. “What’s worse, I’m betting they told her of the dangers, and she didn’t listen to them either. They didn’t deserve that shit, and you know it.”

“Oh, I completely agree. And I’m totally on your side…” Francis shifted comfortably. “But that doesn’t mean it still won’t stir things up a bit.”
“Maybe that’s what we need. Besides her killing perfectly good teams off right and left, she’s cutting into the supply, and demand is rising,” the man made a cutting slice with his hand in the air. “Enough is enough. Maybe with a few less dollars going to her tacky shoe supply, she might damn well get the point.”

“Whispering on the wind is that Conte isn’t happy with her lack of delivery, again.”

“Any other time, I might bail her out, but not this time. Let her be the hunted for a while. See how she likes it.” he lifted a cold stare. “And don’t even think of going in and fixing it for her, Francis.”

Francis held up his hands in the universal sign of peace. “I think she needs to be taken down a notch. She thinks she’s too pretty, too...” he cast a quick glance at the woman sitting beside Red.

“Desirable?” Liz aided.

“Yes, that, exactly.” Francis pointed excitedly. Liz had hit upon it. “She relies on her charms and the men fall for it. I’ve had enough of it, personally.” He crossed his legs at the ankles, his arm draping the back of the chair. “Either you can do the job, or you can’t. And so far, I’m not impressed.”

Liz looked at Francis with a little more respect than she had a few minutes ago. Granted, they were both speaking about the possible death of a woman they associated with, but they had a point.

If this woman was going to play with the big boys, she had to step up to the plate. It was that way for any woman, regardless of her occupation.

Red was annoyed with the woman true, but Liz didn’t think he’d let anything happen to this Anne person. He may let the woman fall on her face for the next couple of weeks, but if she knew Red, when the crap hit the fan, he would smooth the situation over.

The discussion would have to wait for another time. The new cook had discreetly entered searching for the correct moment...

“Miss Elizabeth?” Nora smiled, speaking directly to the other woman. “I’m sorry to interrupt...” her eyes had fallen on the new guest. “I didn’t realize you had company.”

“It’s all right, Nora.” Liz held her smile, waving him off, as though “the guest” wasn’t really all that important. “It’s just Francis.”

“Hey...” Francis instantly protested. “They don’t get more “important” than me.”

“Uh huh.” Elizabeth mollified. “Is it ready Nora?”

“Whenever you are.” the older woman’s smiled returned.

“You’re welcome to stay, Francis.” Red offered.

“Shall I fix an extra setting?” Nora asked.

“Nah, he can get it himself.” Liz teased. Francis feigned injury. “We want him to feel at home after all.”

Nora smiled, “Well, then, it is ready and waiting.”

Francis arose hastily, practically pushing Red out of the way, making a beeline for the new employee. He caught up to the older woman easily, hooking his arm around her’s, his hand patting Nora’s arm with open affection.
“Where have you been all my life?” the young man charmed. “Are they paying you enough here?”

Red chuckled as he watched the other man work his magic.

“If you’re as good as I think you are...” Francis’s eyes roamed the still attractive figure unobtrusively, “you would be much happier working for me.”

“You want to wait until I get out of earshot?” Red asked pleasantly, helping Liz arise.

“No...” Francis called back over his shoulder. “Let me take you away from all of this.”

“I’m so glad you made him feel at home.” Red teased Elizabeth.

“He’s trying to steal our cook.” she pointed out. “Blatantly.”

“Well, you better put a stop to that.” Liz frowned superficially.

Francis had stopped in the kitchen to assist Nora and was even now, unashamedly flirting with the woman.

“Tell him to stop that!” Liz demanded. “Red, you do something...”

The man only chuckled sensually, continuing on their way.

After an amazing lunch, Red and Francis adjourned to another room.

At dusk the men re-entered the sitting room Liz had found to be very comforting and quiet. She found herself in a very contemplative mood today.

“Invite me to dinner.” Francis approached the woman gingerly.

Liz cut her eyes up and under, her expression totally annoyed. “Why? So you can continue your efforts to steal our cook?” she accused.

“Where ever did you find her?” the young man took no offense. “I think I’m in love.”

“What, again?” Red stood by patiently as Elizabeth arose on her own as she apt to do these days. “Remember that agency I recommended for your dinner.”

“All I got was a bunch of new wave, vegan freaks.” Francis complained, as they headed for the dining room.

“Let me guess,” Liz asked, laughing, “one was named Mindy?”

“How did you know that?” Francis was puzzled, watching Red seat the woman.

“She’s the one Red got rid of for force feeding me eggplant. He got Nora for me instead.”

“I hate eggplant.” Francis shivered voluntarily, finding his own seat across from Liz.

“Dinner was perfectly fine, Francis.” the older man’s hand rested comfortably along Liz’s chair, his fingers stroking her shoulder. “Why are you complaining?”

“I’m not complaining per se.” Francis complained. “Dinner only turned out as well as it did because I threatened to take their tofu and shove it up their ass. I ordered them, specifically, to make what we had. And it was like pulling teeth.”

“I’ve never had a problem with them.” Red shrugged.

“Well, no shit.” Francis was mystified. “Are you going to argue with Red Reddington when he says he wants a steak?”

Liz was amused by how put out Francis seemed to be. No one it seemed, would ever be on par with Red.

After dinner a relaxed atmosphere infused the room. Both men seemed totally at ease, immersed in their brandies.

“Who do I have to hit before I get access to this little black book of yours?” Francis grinned. “Because, consider it done.”

“Commit an act of treason, throw in a couple of felonies and get me an invite to Papa Guido’s pizzeria in Jersey... and you’ll get your wish.” Red mumbled around his cigar. “But only do it if you’re serious. I do have a reputation to uphold. If I start letting every little two bit hustler on my list, my street cred will be shit.” He rolled the cherry off his cigar.

“Well, we wouldn’t want that!” Francis was mockingly appalled, before beginning to clear the dinnerware.

“Francis, I can do that.” Liz protested, even as Red started gathering theirs.

“You told me to make myself at home.” Francis smiled, picking up the stack, following Red into the kitchen.

Liz made her way slowly to the door facing. She was fascinated at the domestic scene which unfolded before her very eyes.

Francis rolled up his sleeves, rinsing the plates before handing them off to Red, who put them in the dishwasher.

“Now, aren’t you two efficient.” Liz shook her head, totally impressed by the men's performance.

“You should see me iron.” Francis preened.

“You don’t iron.” Red countered. “You send it out to Manny just like I do.” he rolled his eyes.

“Regardless, I can iron a pleat that could slit a throat wide open.”

“It’s the Italian in him.” Red explained helpfully. “Always going for the throat. Much like someone else I know.” the man smiled, stroking Liz’s neck in the approximate location where she had stabbed him.

She ducked her head, blushing. That moment had certainly not been one of her finest, although he seemed to remember it fondly, which just confused the hell out of her.

For heaven’s sake... she had jabbed a pen into his carotid.

Most normal people would have filed a restraining order. Red saw it as a shared moment of fond remembrance.

Oddly, she would have to accept that they had grown closer since then. They had become a team.
The clock in the hall chimed, drawing their attention. “Damn, is that the time?” Francis glanced at his watch. “I better get the show on the road.” he said. “What is our plan of action?”

Red stood as well, “We need to stay on top of this and fill the cracks. Anne will try to wrangle something up, and I intend to block her every which way I can.”

“So when the shit hits the fan, somebody has pulled their head out of their ass.” Francis put it in a nutshell.

Red’s brow furrowed slightly, “My God... that actually makes a perverse kind of sense.”

“Well of course it does.” Francis was understandably confused. “Thank you both for a wonderful time. I really enjoyed it, especially the company.” he smiled at them both then frowned hard at Red for some unknown reason of which the man was aware.

“You’re welcome,” Liz smiled, sincerely, “come back soon Francis.”

“I’ll walk you out.” Always the consummate host, Reddington motioned his guest to the outer sanction of his domain. “I’ll be back shortly, sweetheart.”

The man sauntered back a few minutes later, loosening his tie. “I have a feeling sleep will be transitory tonight... do you mind if I try to get in a few hours before it all starts?”

Liz got up out of her seat. “I’m coming.”

“You don’t have to go to bed on my account, it’s still a little early for you.”

“I can help.” she offered. “There must be something I can do?”

“Or... I can sleep in another room tonight, so you’re not disturbed.” the man iterated. “You need to rest.”

“Or... you can shut up,” she suggested sweetly, “and sleep in our own bed tonight where you will be most comfortable. And I want to help.”

Red had stopped listening after the statement, our bed.

He had never heard her refer to it as such before. It threw him completely. Not that he objected to the phrase, as a matter of record, he liked the sound of it.

“You okay?” the woman’s voice brought him from his reverie.

“Just thinking.” he smiled down at her, then took her arm, helping her along. “Well, my little secretary, would you like to use my Dictaphone?”

“What the hell is a Dictaphone?”

Red suddenly felt his age, but smiled, chuckling sensually.

“Was that a metaphor, Red Reddington?” she chided.

It wasn’t long afterwards, the woman came waltzing, well, hopping out of the closet, just finishing buttoning the last button on the shirt she wore.
Red noted with some interest, that the garment just happened to be the same shirt he had discarded minutes before. His brow furrowed slightly, but she looked so damn cute in the oversize fabric.

Red stared at his shirt, hanging to her thighs, hiding what she may or may not be wearing underneath it, which captivated the man.

He had never enjoyed the sight of a woman wearing his shirt as much as he did, right now. He stared at her shapely legs and that one little foot not wearing the cast, smiling softly. She looked damned sexy.

“What?” she asked, hesitating herself. She looked down, then bit her lip, “Do you mind?”

“No... no, I don’t mind.” he shook his head, “Would you rather have a fresh one?”

“No...” she answered simply, then grabbed her lotion, smoothing it over her hands. “So, how do we proceed?”

“Uhm.” Red cleared his throat, watching her gingerly hop on one leg, before seeking his assistance which was instantly given. “I’m sorry?”

Liz giggled having looked up, finding the cat sitting prominently and proudly on Red’s pillow, staring back at him defiantly.

Red grunted in annoyance. “I hate fucking cats...”

“You do not.” she corrected.

After settling in the bed, Elizabeth tapped her left side and the cat ambled it’s way to her, staring at Red the whole time. The man shook his head, his jaw clenching and unclenching. He flipped his pillow, grumbling something about the smell of, cat ass, much to her amusement.

The woman settled back, notepad in hand, “Where do we start?” she asked, pen ready.

“First, are you sure you want to do this?” he checked. “Technically, this is contraband we’re dealing with.”

“Is it drugs?”

“No. Not tonight, anyway.”

“Why not?”

“I don’t particularly enjoy working with dealers, they’re too high strung. Their paranoia is annoying.” his features showed as much. “Most dealers, unless it’s a specific order, normally deal with it themselves because of the bad vibes.”

“What does that mean? Specific orders?” she questioned.

“Well, if a client asked if I could get him cocaine, opium or pot for a private party. I could send it with what ever else he ordered.” it was elucidated. “But, a lot of my counterparts, myself included, have a max volume sent.”

“Which means?”

“Only a certain amount of kilos are supplied. You want more than that, get it yourself.”
“And you’ve supplied for private parties?”

“I’ve not only supplied, I’ve attended.”

“You’ve really done drugs?”

“Yes.”

“L-like what?” She stuttered.

“Opium, cocaine, marijuana...”

“What are they like?” she was more than curious suddenly.

“It depends on the drug.” he shrugged nonchalantly. “Pot, is a relaxant. Opium, a pain killer. And cocaine, a stimulant.”

“That’s very clinical.”

“You asked what they were like, not what I felt.”

“What did you feel?”

“On pot, I felt very relaxed. Contemplative. Hungry. But still able to function.” he ruminated. “It didn’t impair me, just relaxed me. I could protect myself while high.”

“And the others?”

“In the early days, when I was so exhausted, I thought I’d drop where I stood,” he remembered back, his brow deeply furrowed, “a couple bumps of coke kept me going but the downside of course, was I couldn’t stop.”

“Instant caffeine?”

“Instant adrenaline, more like it.” he rubbed jaw thoughtfully. “I can honestly say, if it wasn’t for the safe havens I hit along the way, where I could actually rest, that one would have killed me.”

“And the opium?”

“The best and worst of them all.” he sighed heavily. “Total pain relief in body and mind, but the most incapacitating. You have to have an extreme trust in who cares for your well being while under such a spell.”

“Then why did you take it?”

“I was in pain.”

“Who cared for you?”

“It depended on where I was.”

“How many times have you taken it?”

“Enough that it became a problem at one point.” he confessed. “It’s the drug of choice for those wanting to be pain free.”

“What happened to—"
“Lizzy...”

She closed her mouth, frowning. It really was none of her business. But she couldn’t help but be intrigued. The most she had ever done was smoke one of Sam’s cigarettes, until he caught her red handed.

She would have never pegged Red for having used drugs. But she wasn’t sure why, exactly. Since he never seemed to be opposed to doing much of anything at all.

Elizabeth remembered one woman in particular. Lawrence Dechambou.

Red had mentioned to Ressler one time, and she quoted in her mind... “bend over any available piece of furniture and let her slap you on the ass.”

There had been such reverence in his voice, such genuine fondness.

Who was this woman to Red? Had he been messing with Ress?

Had Red really allowed her to do... that? And if so... had he enjoyed it? And what was that like?

He was like a puzzle within a puzzle that she knew she could never solve.

Shaking away the thoughts, she got back in the game. “Weapons.”

“Yes.” he answered quietly.

“Who receives them?”

“Oddly, most of all weapon orders end up in the Constabularies' hands.”

“Because of a bust?”

“No, because ordering new weapons underground is cheaper then factory direct.” Her face must have shown her confusion. “To arm a police department is expensive, especially if it’s in a small township.” he supplied. “To order say, three guns, from the factory. It would cost, two thousand dollars. To buy from us, would cost maybe fifteen hundred, if not less.”

“Why so cheap?”

“Because they’re stolen property. And I don’t mean off the back of a truck, per se. Let me see if I can make this simplistic?” he shifted more comfortably into the pillow. “Say I took down a group of my enemies, I would clean out their cache, taking all their arms and other goods.” to the man, it wasn’t brain surgery. “I take those weapons and sell them off, most usually, to cops. Gaining profit from something I received for free.”

“You steal guns from bad guys, then sell them to cops?”

“Yes, I do.”

“Do they know they’re buying from you?”

“Yes, they know.”

Liz blinked, trying to wrap her mind around that logic. It was weird how it almost made sense.

Where the cops couldn’t touch these bad guys, because of lack of inside intelligence or man power...
Red could, and did. Ridding some underworld terrorists of the arms they needed for the war they were waging, on the surface seemed almost good and decent.

It was brilliant idea in fact, she had to admit begrudgingly.

She nodded that she understood, jotting notes quickly. She made columns of his requirements then set the pad aside.

“Now what?” She asked.

“Now, we rest before the calls start coming in.”

It was two hours later when the phone began to ring. Information on each shipment was detailed, precise and complicated. How the man managed to do all this alone, boggled Elizabeth’s mind.

She was struggling to keep abreast of the man’s rapid speech patterns. The shipments moved across the globe and boundaries with such simplicity... one headed for Hong Kong, one Brisbane.

“Good girl.” Red had noticed the woman’s efforts, complimenting her for her diligence.

She reddened a bit at the pat on the head, but was pleased in spite of herself, a little proud truth told.

Out of the forty some shipments going out, they filled twenty five of the double or triple loads quickly.

As the single shipments were handled with such speed, it flabbergasted Elizabeth. But she kept up, not stumbling once in repeating the info she had been given.

He finally shut the phone, laying back into the pillow.

“Now what do we do?” she was wired.

“We get a little more rest and wait for the receiving end to get their shit in order.”

“You have product coming in as well?” she was a little winded to say the least while the man seemed perfectly at ease.

“Yes, I do.”

“Then what happens?”

“I’m hoping that there will be another break before what I’ve done to Anne starts taking effect.” he put his hands behind his head, linking his fingers. “There’s going to be a lot of angry people out there, looking for her and quite possibly, me.”

“What does that mean!” she was alarmed.

“It means, I’ve just stolen a lot of business from competitors,” he rubbed his eyes absently, “and then the game begins to see who the receivers want to do their business with in the end. Me or her.”

“What does that mean!” she was alarmed.

“It means, I’ve just stolen a lot of business from competitors,” he rubbed his eyes absently, “and then the game begins to see who the receivers want to do their business with in the end. Me or her.”

“Do you really want to take her business away?”

“Right now, yes. Francis was telling the truth that she’s become sloppy.”

“What is it about these men’s death that troubles you so?” she realized how that sounded, trying again. “I mean, of course any death is...”
“They’re like Silas. Retired soldiers making a living.” he took no offence. “I’ve worked with a lot of these guys in the past and while she’s sipping champagne on a yacht, these guys are doing as she ordered and dying for it.”

Liz had grown quite fond of Silas and Joe and a lot of the other men walking the property. To think that their counterparts were facing such a difficult situation without someone like Red backing them, pissed her off too.

“Let’s nail the bitch.”

“That’s my girl.” Red said, relaxing into the pillow, turning out the light.

The shipments started coming in around three in the morning.

Francis kept Red apprised of each and every delivery that was accepted.

Lines were moving faster trying to beat Red’s cargo but with his head start, they were all going to fail miserably.

Red seemed pleased by the end results. And as the totals of payment received started coming in, he brightened considerably in the waning night.

Especially after Francis called, informing Red that he had just hung up with a very pissed off Anne. The woman had been seething, trying to figure out who was cutting into her business.

“She knows it’s me.” Red laughed quietly, laying relaxed in his bed. “She’s going to use her feminine wiles, which have always worked in the past granted... and there still might be some idiots out there who will fall for such shit.” he conceded. “But she made one mistake all ready.” he smiled briefly. “She called you.”

“But Red,” the younger man’s tone was sincere enough, “everyone knows, I am the very sole of discretion.”

Red chuckled appreciatively, “Get some rest while you can. The next wave should hit in a couple of hours... and Francis,” the man had no trouble with the next words, “thank you.” He hung up the phone then turned to Elizabeth. “You all right?”

“Yes, why do you ask?”

“Because I care.”

“I’m okay,” she smiled warmly up at him. “This was actually a lot more fun then I thought it would be. And oddly, fulfilling.”

Red turned his head, looking at her oddly. His eyes asking for an explanation.

“I’m just happy to do my part in remembering the guys who lost their lives in this farce.” She shrugged. “And I’m glad that you treat your guys, so well and with respect.”

“They damn well deserve it more than anybody.”

“What did that mean?” she thought back. “What you said to Francis? About Anne making a mistake in calling him?”

“We go back a long way.” the man stifled a yawn. “Lizzy, I will tell you more, but right now, you need to rest.”
She slowly nodded, then laid back down, snuggling into the covers. Smiling. She had learned a lot about Red tonight, and while she didn’t know him as well as she would like, she felt the playing fields somewhat evened up this evening.
April 22

Dembe artfully dodged a four year old little boy who was scampering around the desks playing hide and go seek with a little blonde headed girl about the same age.

The large man held a toddler in his arms out of harm’s way, his smile for the children at his feet.

Red Reddington could not hear himself think above the din but he found in this instance, he did not mind the noise at all.

“Aram.” Red stood quietly behind the man, looking over his shoulder, amused when the dark haired man tensed, nearly spilling his coffee.

“Yes, sir, uh,” Aram cleared his throat nervously as he straightened his tie, “Mr. Reddington.”

“I need you to give this to ballistics and find out where it came from.” Red presented the bullet, the plastic bag dangling from his finger.

“May I ask where you...?” the computer specialist took the small bag, looking at it curiously. He lifted questioning eyes.

Reddington remained silent, his gaze a steady, unrelenting one.

“I mean, to maybe help narrow down the uh...” Aram closed his mouth, lamely pointing behind him, “I’ll just take it to ballistics.”

“Aram, someone shot me.” Red explained. “I want to know who.”

“You were shot!” the lanky man looked Red up and down, searching for unseen holes.

Red smiled, warmed by the obvious concern. “I’m fine. But I would like to know where that came from. Discreetly, of course.”

“Yes, sir. I understand.” Aram sprang up like wind up toy. “I’ll get on it right away.”

“It can wait until we’re finished here.” Red put a reassuring hand on the man’s arm. “Just if you have some time in the next day or so.”

It had waited this long, another day wouldn’t make much difference. And with the full schedule they had today...

“I think we should call Liz,” Samar came up beside him, “she can help out.”
“Absolutely not.” Red countered. “She gets one whiff of this state of affairs, she won’t stop. And I’ll have a house full of the little demons running around, finger painting on my priceless art collection.”

Not that he would really mind. He looked over the forty some odd children dotting the floor across the way.

“Then, when she has to give them back...” Red shook his head woefully. “Is another kettle of fish all together. Do not call her under any circumstances.”

He knew, beyond a shadow of a doubt, what was on the horizon, if Elizabeth ever made contact with any of these children. Sooner or later, inevitably, she would be upset.

The matter, as it would stand, would be a no-win situation. The woman would get attached then, be forced to return the child, to it’s rightful parental units. Then the tears would come, the heartbreak.

And he hated when she cried because she had cried enough for a lifetime. Perhaps, in this one instance, he could avert such a catastrophe.

Thankfully, processing the kids was moving along like a well oiled machine.

The older children, handed over their names and other info to the waiting agents. The smaller ones were being photographed for facial recognition.

Red did not know where these children... how any children maintained the level of energy they exuded.

Considering these were scared, tired and most likely, getting hungry. The children seemed to be fairing well. But then, having been rescued from being sold to the highest bidder... this must seem like a cake walk.

Having secured a few precious hours sleep, Aram had called in the early morning hours to update Red. Agents Ressler and Navabi had lead a team to secure these children, and in the process, had taken down their newest member of the Blacklist.

Not one child or agent had been hurt in the scrimmage. So both Agents had not only done their job, they had done it exceedingly well.

All the agents on the floor had been up for hours, running on the adrenaline rush of having taken down a despicable man. Sooner rather than later, they would start crashing. One by one as the excitement tapered off, the reality that they were only human would sink in.

But until the other teams arrived, they had to keep going.

Red himself, had been on site for a while now, assisting where he could. Even before he had arrived, his people were working on identifying the children as well. They had done eight to the Bureaus four, so far.

So, all in all, the day was shaping up well.

“Dembe...” The dark man looked up from the sleeping toddler in his arms, as Red continued. He walked over, glancing over the tiny face, his smile a genuine one.

“We should start ordering pizza. It’s going to get ugly otherwise.” Red glanced around the blank faces of the young children present. He momentarily wondered what could be in their heads after such a harrowing experience.
He found it impossible to empathize or understand such a situation. He sighed mentally. “It’s been a long damn day.”

The insistent ringing of the phone awakened Elizabeth from a deep sleep. She searched the linen for Red’s warmth, but the man had already left. She reached for the annoying phone groggily.

“Yeah?” She muttered.

“Liz, hey.” Samar’s warm voice eased the irritation. “Sorry, did I wake you?”

“We have a little situation here...” Samar’s voice was muffled for a moment. It sounded as if lovely woman was shushing someone.

“What’s wrong?” Liz sat quickly, fully alert and functioning now. “Is it Red?”

“No, not exactly.” Samar scratched her head aimlessly. “We followed the lead he put us on to and made the bust, but now we’re stuck with a little problem.”

“Well, you know. He’s not telling me much about the Blacklisters,” Liz grumbled, “so I’m kind of in the dark. I don’t know if I’d be any help. Isn’t Red answering his phone?”

“No, he’s here actually. He’s doing all he can...” Samar glanced at the man in question, turning her back slightly. “Look, he didn’t want us to call you. He didn’t want to upset you. But we really could use the help right now.”

“Just tell me what’s going on.”

“Off the info Red gave us, we raided an operation late last night and found a little over forty displaced kids.” the Agent got right to the point.

“Oh, God. That’s awful.” Liz felt the words and emotion. “Are they okay?”

“They’re in mint condition. Seeing as they were being sold out to the highest bidder.” Samar glanced hastily back over her shoulder. Red Reddington was otherwise occupied. “Based on descriptions of missing kids, we’ve confirmed quite a few of them so far and we’re readying them for transport.”

“You need help finding the other parents?”

“Well, the problem is, we have an infant here.” Samar smiled gently down at the baby in her arms. “I’m guessing it’s around six months old, and the descriptions are so vague for a child this young...” she dangled her necklace for the greedy little hands that reached up.

“So, you need me to look at the database?”

“No, we need someone to watch him.” Samar corrected.

“I don’t understand. Isn’t someone watching the other kids?”

“We have a handful of volunteers and child welfare sent down two that are watching the others, but they’re older.” Samar pursed her lips, sending the baby an air kiss. “Forty kids plus... they’ve got their hands full.”
“I’ll take him.” Elizabeth did not hesitate one second, attempting to keep the elation from her tone.

“Are you sure?” Samar drawled.

“I’m assuming we’ll need supplies?” the woman was already planning.

“We only have one bottle for him here and a couple diapers.”

“Give me an hour and I’ll be there.”

Agent Navabi hung up her phone, smiling. “You do know Mr. Reddington will most likely kill us both.” Aram wrung his hands nervously. “You know that, right?” he looked around for the dangerous felon, totally on edge.

“No he won’t.” Samar smiled at the sleeping infant, stroking it’s small head. “He’s gonna have his hands full for the next couple days, at least.”

“And after that?” the computer expert needed specifics. “Then what?”

“He’ll have moved on to the next distraction.” Samar shrugged, unconcerned.

“Yeah, sure. His next distraction.” he nodded sagely, the man’s face a mask of pure unadulterated terror. “Which will most likely be where he can hide our bodies.”

“Oh, Aram,” the woman laughed musically, raising the baby to her shoulder, patting it’s little back lovingly, “he doesn’t do that menial stuff.” It was scoffed.

Aram’s tension eased a little and he exhaled, thankfully.

“He hires it out.”

“Absolutely not.” the large security guard stood, arms folded over his burly chest, his head shaking negatively, his expression set. “No way in hell... not gonna happen.”

Liz moved closer, standing toe to toe with her adversary. “How can you be so mean?”

“Practice.” Silas shifted a lazy stare.

“This is a tiny little baby... helpless, alone, terrified, starving, did I mention, he’s totally alone in this world?” Liz presented her side of the issue.

“The kid’s smelly, loud, whiney... much like you.” the guard shook his head, his features set. “And I have no desire to die so young, simply because I allowed you to talk me into something for which my boss and your boyfriend, is going to kill me quite dead for.”

“Young?” she could not help herself. But at Silas’ flinty look, she hurried onward. “And he’s not my boyfriend.”

“Yeah, sure... whatever.” Silas was unmoved. “There’s no way in hell you are leaving this place except... over my dead body.”

An hour later, Liz had finished up the shopping needed, steering her motorized cart down one last aisle. Her eyes softened, her fingers gently rubbing over the incredibly soft fabric of the baby blanket.

She showed off the tiny baby giraffes to her companion.

“That’s exactly how my neck is going to look after the boss gets finished with me.” Silas predicted gloomily.

“Oh look...” Liz’s eyes brightened as another object caught her attention. She steered the cart in the direction needed. Silas sighed, pushing the heavy laden shopping cart down the appropriate aisle.

The woman searched the hundreds of stuffed animals lining the shelves, indecisively.

“How about the beaver?” Silas offered helpfully, then grinned at Liz’s expression.

She continued her search.

“If you pick Barney,” Silas had seen her hesitate over the hideous purple thing, “I’ll use it for target practice.”

Liz retracted her hand quickly, scowling slightly then came up with something that made her coo lovingly.

“I’m going to blow chunks.” he sighed heavily, tucking the enormous cat under his free arm as there was no more room in the cart. Silas halted his steps, staring quizzically at the animal for a few seconds, “Hey, I’ve seen this cat before.”

“No, you haven’t.” Liz quickly denied, moving hastily to the check out line.

Silas stepped in front of her, loading the line with her treasures then halted her attempts at the card machine. He slid one of the several credit cards allotted him by Reddington.

“Oh, I don’t want to do that.” Liz grimaced slightly. “He’s going to be upset with me as is.”

“No, he won’t.” Silas predicted philosophically. “He’ll take it out on me... as well he should.” the man cast her a grumpy glance. “Why do I let you talk me into this shit?”

“It’s a defenseless baby.” Liz reminded. “I can pay him back. And did I mention–”

“...The baby is all alone in the world.” the man finished up for her, sneering his discontent. “Red will get his revenge, one way or another.” the guard mumbled dejectedly. “I’m just trying to decide which of my nuts I can live without.”

Twenty minutes later, found them parked outside the Post Office. Liz with phone in hand, “Samar? I’m here. Can you bring him out?” she smiled. “Okay, I’ll be waiting.” the woman fidgeted about anxiously, the wait interminable.

“You do realize Red will probably kill us both for this.” Silas grumbled, wringing his hands on the steering wheel. “Why do I let you talk me into this shit?”

“Don’t swear around the baby.” Liz snapped. “Just tell him I coerced you, I’ll take all the blame.” she did not see Silas’s expression which was foreboding at most. “It’s just for a couple days.”

She craned her head, glancing this way and that. Finally Aram emerged, followed by Samar who was holding a small wrapped bundle in her arms. Aram carefully guided his charges down each step.
Silas had come around the vehicle, holding the door open, “Where’s Reddington?” he questioned Aram Mojtabai.

Liz took the baby in welcoming arms, Samar leaning half in, half out of the car.

“He’s still inside, with Ressler.” the female Agent answered absently.

“Does he know?” Silas asked tightly.

“No. Like I said, he didn’t want us to call.” Samar watched Liz struggle with the buckle on the car seat, trying to open it unsuccessfully. Silas opened it for her, his features grim. “Maybe he was right. Are you sure you can do this?”

Liz took the sleeping child, steadying him with her right arm as she laid him in the car seat. “I can do this.”

With Silas’s help, they secured the boy, locking him in place. “When do you think Red might be home?” Liz asked.

“I’m not sure what his plans are.” Samar told the truth. “He’s made his plane available to transport the kids safely back home. Whether or not he was going with it...”

“I’ll talk to him later.” Liz shrugged the matter aside.

“Thanks for helping us out, really.” Samar smiled warmly, the gesture still apparent as she included the large guard in the compliment. “It’ll take a load off everyone.”

Aram noticed the exchange, for the guard had smiled back. The tall thin man, suddenly felt uncomfortable.

Liz watched the baby snuffle in his sleep, shifting more comfortably in his seat. “It’s no problem, really.”

“Where do you want... it?” Silas asked, holding the car seat. He had engaged the assistance of several of his men, who stood loaded down and waiting instructions.

“In our room, of course.” Elizabeth directed which bags went where, organizing the situation within moments.

She hobbled back to their room, the crutch starting to irritate and annoy. Silas stood by the baby, gently rocking the car seat back and forth on the bed.

“You need help getting him out?” he reluctantly relented, his manner still very much disapproving.

“Maybe unlocking the buckle.” He popped it effortlessly, then stood back. He studied the woman meticulously for a long beat.

“You don’t have a clue, do you?” he enquired amiably.

The woman’s eyes almost misted over as she looked from the baby to the man, “No...” she confessed.

Liz sat down, looking over the sleeping baby, adjusting the thin blanket over him. His little hands felt cold. She stretched across the bed, grabbing the new plush blanket she had purchased, before placing it over him.

Keres hopped up on the bed, sniffing the carrier.

“Be good Keres.” she warned and the cat backed off, sniffing at the baby with interest before laying down next to the carrier.

“I bring food and baby booze.” Silas said as he returned, carrying the bags from the kitchen and other supplies. “I found the electric kettle and some jugs of water.” Joe came in, carrying four gallons of water, sitting them beside the marble top bureau.

“Won’t it be too hot for him?” Silas sighed ever so heavily. “Okay,” he instructed, “see this line?” he showed her a low point on the bottle. “Fill it to here, then mix it with cold water.”

“How do you know all this stuff?” Liz was mystified.

“I am the oldest of four.” the man filled the kettle with water, letting it heat. “This thing only needs a few minutes to heat, so when you aren’t using it…” he unplugged it from the socket. “Okay, you’re set up. When you run low on water, give a yell.”

“Thank you, Silas,” she smiled warmly over at the man as well, “Joe.”

“Okay, we’re going to go make our rounds, if you need anything…” Silas left the sentence unfinished. “Oh yeah, and one more thing… I want roses for my funeral, you know the one I’m going to have as soon as your boyfriend kills me?”

Liz smiled. “He’s not my boyfriend.”

“Yeah, sure… whatever.”

Liz shifted her eyes, scowling slightly. It had not been Silas who had made the remark, but Joe. Silas hit the man’s shoulder roughly, both sharing in the private joke.

“Get out… both of you.” she pointed towards the door. “Buttheads.” she murmured her belief.

Which again, seemed to amuse both men greatly.

The silence of the room after the guards departure was deafening. Liz stared at the infant at once both beguiled, and yet terrified.

Taking Silas’s suggestion, she got up, unloading her bounty where she thought it would best serve her. After a little rearranging, she lined up the bottles, formula and baby food on the bureau.

On her night stand, she laid out a thick towel, some diapers, baby wipes and as an after thought, some powder she had seen in the bathroom.

Sitting down, she turned the car seat toward her, pulling the warm slumbering body from it’s nest.

“Hey there, little guy. You gonna wake up for me?” She sat back against the pillows, settling the baby on her bent legs. The dark blue eyes slowly opened. “Hi, there…” She smiled at the sleepy blueness.
His little face scrunched up unhappily as he fusses, but she was ready, stroking his lips with the bottle. He latched on, suckling hungrily.

“Wow, look at you go.” she made an impressed sound. “You were hungry.”

Perhaps she should have made another? She second guessed herself as she watched the bottle emptying pretty rapidly. But as he got down to the last bit of it, the baby slowed, then stopped, sighing.

“All done?” She crooned. Turning him on her legs, she supported him with her right arm, while tapping his back gently, gaining a hearty burp.

She chuckled at the sound, stroking his back soothingly. After a spell, she felt warmth on her stomach where his bottom was settled.

“Somebody needs a diaper change, I think?” She lowered her legs, working him over to the edge of the bed then lay him on her makeshift changing table, pulling the snaps between his legs.

As she removed the tabs on his diaper, she vaguely remembered that you should be ready to cover a boy in case he peed again, so she readied herself. And with good reason... suddenly a strong stream filled the air and Liz found herself giggling with delight.

“And Silas thought I wouldn’t be prepared.” she quipped.

Making quick work of drying and changing the little one, she snapped his onesie back in place. She laid the baby back into the soft covers of the bed, perusing the new outfits she had... well, Silas had bought this afternoon.

She decided on the one she liked best, struggling with the now wide awake baby to fit the squirming little bundle into sleeves and legs that just did not want to cooperate. The baby was cooing, gurgling and trying so hard to say... something.

Once dressed, she beamed happily, not only that the fit was perfect, but that he looked so damned adorable.

“Red’s gonna have to let me take care of you, he can’t possibly turn you away when you look so sharp.” She giggled at the little sailor suit he was wearing.

The baby kicked his legs, smiling. “Give me your feet, don’t want your little toes getting cold.” She kissed the bottom of the pudgy foot before slipping on the white sock. “There, now, would you like to play?”

She sat with the baby for the next two hours, playing with him, talking to him.

“I have to call you something.” she finally decided. “The baby just isn’t going to cut it.” She cocked her head, looking down at the little guy. He was making a good effort in his attempts to scale the huge stuffed cat purchased today.

All at once the little head jerked around, the blue eyes making contact with hers, a big gaping smile was offered then rather unceremoniously, a loud poot echoed in the silent room.

Elizabeth laughed out loud, rubbing the little guy’s back. “If your name isn’t Sam, it should be.”
Sam used to do the same thing, grinning big before letting one rip. She had always taken it as a warning to run from the room when she saw that mischievous grin.

Sometimes she made it, sometimes she didn’t.

After the baby fell asleep to her soft crooning lullaby.

She sat reading her book, rubbing the tiny back absently. All of a sudden, just out of nowhere, he started fussing.

Liz looked around instinctively for help then dismissed the notion. She hopped from the bed, plugging in the kettle. Just about then, all hell broke loose.

That baby had a set of lungs on him. She stuck a pacifier in his mouth, which held him for all of thirty seconds before he pushed it out with his tongue.

She checked his diaper, finding him dry, but the kettle had finally warmed up.

Mixing a quick bottle, Liz brought it back, sticking it in the wide open mouth. Lifting the baby with difficulty, she swiveled him about, shifting comfortably into the pillows.

“You can be pretty loud when you want to be, huh?”

Sam sucked the bottle ferociously, clenching his hands into tiny fists. “Now was there really a need for all that noise?” Liz stroked the small hands then his furrowed brow. “No need to be so upset. I don’t know your schedule yet, but I’ll figure it out.”

He finished off his bottle, letting out a satisfying belch. Seconds later, he got fussy again. Liz cocked her head, staring at him. “You can’t be hungry still, can you?”

A thought occurred to her. “Oh, hey, how about some dessert?”

She laid him down, a little upset when he started crying harder.

“How about some bananas?” She grabbed a spoon, a soft cloth and went back to him, opening the jar when she got them both situated.

Spooning up some of the creamy mush, she stuck it in the wailing mouth, stopping his crying. “You like that?” He smacked his rosebud mouth, which opened wider when the small spoon came back into view. “It’s pretty yummy.”

They had made it through half the jar when he turned his head. “Full tummy, gotcha.”

The baby settled against her stomach, kicking his feet oddly, his little face grimaced in a pout. Seconds later the baby began crying in earnest.

“Well, you’ve got a full stomach, you’re dry, I’m cuddling you. What’s wrong?” She asked as he let out a wail. The woman held the baby closer, rocking him soothingly. “I don’t know what’s wrong.” she admitted her failings, feeling miserable for the little one. “I wish you could tell me.”

She shifted over to the edge of the bed, holding him more upright, letting his feet kick freely as she bounced him. Feeling his diaper again and finding it dry, she was at a loss.

“Sam, I don’t know what you want.” She rubbed her cheek on his warm head, frowning.

“Lizzy, what have you done?” a male voice startled her for a second, so focused her efforts had been elsewhere. But it was unmistakable, that low silky accusation.

Red Reddington stood at the doorway, his head shaking back and forth, his tone more than exasperated.

“I don’t know?” she bounced the baby, frowning at the man across the room, “I fed him, changed him, cuddled him. I don’t know what I’m doing wrong!”

Red came further into the room, his manner clearly perturbed. “That is not what I meant and you know perfectly well.”

Liz sat up straighter as he got closer, holding the baby out for him to take. Red took the squalling infant, looking it over objectively, his brow furrowed deeply.

He patted it on the back, only garnering a small burp. Nothing to cause this much ado.

She gripped Red’s arm, looking down at the upset child. “What’s wrong with him? Is he sick?” She frowned, kissing the baby’s temple.

Red laid the small head in his hand, cupping it’s bottom in the other. He bent over, feeling Sam’s forehead with his lips. “He’s warm, but not too bad.”

He readjusted the baby, setting him against his chest, walking away. Liz hopped after him as he entered the bathroom.

Red washed his hand, then reset Sam’s head in the palm of his hand, resting the tiny bottom on his stomach.

Sticking his finger in the wide open mouth, Red pressed on one part and Sam bit down. “No wonder you’re pissed.” Red chuckled. “He’s teething.” The baby grabbed Red’s finger, biting down on the thick digit.

He gummed it like a dog with his favorite bone.

Liz craned her head over Red’s arm watching the baby chomp down on the man’s finger, “Doesn’t that hurt?”

“Him, yes.” he curled his finger, letting the kid bite to it’s heart’s content. “Go sit down, I’ll be right back.”

She went back to the bed, waiting anxiously for the man to return. She could hear him speaking softly to Sam.

“There,” the soothing tone calmed her nerves as well, “now does that feel better?”

The child had quieted, the room silent again.

“What did you do?” she demanded as Red came into view, baby in tow.

“Gave him some crushed ice in a damp cloth.” he swayed the kid gently, then looked at her. “Now, you want to tell me how you got your hands on him?”

“Samar called...”

“I explicitly told her not to involve you.”
“Why would you do that? He’s just a baby, Red!”

“A baby that’s going to need to depend on you for everything, that you’re going to get very attached to,” his face darkened somewhat, “then have to give back to the parents.”

She dropped her head, frowning. “Even so, they needed help.”

“I was going to hire someone, Lizzy.”

“That’s so impersonal.”

“Exactly.”

“How can you say that? He’s so alone, so defenseless...”

“Yeah, Silas told me.” he halted her tirade. “One thing is for certain, he won’t remember this time, but you will.”

She looked away, folding the baby blanket. “Did you find his parents yet?”

“No, there are more missing babies than you realize.” he looked down at the content infant. “And at this age, they’re hard to distinguish, especially when they’ve disappeared from the Post Office and you can’t stare at the kid to match them up with the descriptions.”

“When did you figure it out?”

“Ressler and I went off in search of him. One of the sitters said that an Agent had taken him.” Red’s brow crooked upward. “Which explains why Samar suddenly vanished... the little coward.”

“Why were you looking for him? Did he match a description?”

“I don’t know, since he wasn’t there.” Red set the kid down, about to pull the snaps on his outfit when he stopped, really looking at the baby but more so, it’s outfit. “Well, ahoy there, Sailor.”

The baby kicked his legs, grinning wide, showing his pink gums as if he knew how adorable he was.

Liz smiled, straightening the necktie on the baby’s chest. “We thought you might like this outfit best.”

Endearing the kid to me, no doubt. Red pulled the snaps, unveiling the diaper.

“What are you doing?” she questioned, totally confused.

“The baby that matched his description wasn’t circumcised.”

“I didn’t even notice, to be honest.” She lamely admitted, then defended herself. “I was trying not to get peed on.”

He pulled the tabs on the diaper, uncovering then hastily re-covering the area. “New diaper.” he instructed.

Liz held her grin, “I have a changing table set up.” she offered.

Red placed his thumb over the top of the diaper, cradling the baby in his large hands as he moved Sam. Lifting the diaper cautiously, he pulled it back completely. “Damn.”

“No, he’s been snipped.”

He pulled the soiled covering away, drying the tiny bottom, then diapered the baby. Closing the snaps, he handed the little boy back to Liz. “Here, I’m going to change.”

“You’re not going back out are you?” she panicked.

“No, they were going to finish feeding the kids then put them down for the night before we start transporting them tomorrow.” He pulled the tie at his neck, heading for the bathroom. “I’m going to try and get some sleep…” He glanced at the baby, “I hope.”

A few minutes later, he reentered the room quietly, stopping in his tracks. He watched her for a long moment, cradling the boy.

She looked natural with a baby in her arms. He listened while she talked quietly to the infant, all the while damning Samar.

“I told you he’d like this outfit, Sam.”

“Sam?” His low voice rumbled.

“I couldn’t keep calling him ‘the baby.”

“Why, Sam?”

She stroked the downy hair on the tiny skull, smiling, “He’s got a gas problem.”

Red chortled, well remembering grown Sam’s ‘gas problem’.

“Did you have dinner?” she asked, sparing him a glance. “I could heat up some–”

“We ate at the Blacksite.”

“I’ll pay you back, Red.”

“For what?”

“Silas put all the equipment today on your account, I’ll pay you back for your trouble.”

“Like hell you will.” He held up a silencing hand. “We’re not going to discuss this.” Pulling back the blankets, he climbed inside, then stared at the pair. “Lizzy, let me hire someone.”

“No…”

“You’ll have to give him back at some point.”

“I know…” She kissed the tiny forehead, nuzzling the baby with her nose.

He knew she did, and it didn’t really matter now, the damage was all ready done.

He inched closer to them, wrapping his arm around the hurting woman. Liz rested her head on his shoulder, playing with the small fingers.

Red stroked his finger over hers, hesitating when he saw how large his finger was against hers and Sam’s. He felt her smile against his shoulder, even as she sniffled.
The woman grabbed his finger, slipping it under the baby’s hand, the small fingers instinctively curling over the large thick one.

She chuckled wetly, “His fingers can’t wrap around yours.”

He squeezed her, kissing the top of her head. For the time being, he would leave her be.

If she needed to cry and just spend this moment with the baby, he would allow it. He silently prepared himself for the fallout that he knew was coming.
My father is having surgery on Monday the 30th, so I may be a little spotty on the updates next week.

I'll try to get some more editing done this weekend, so all I'll really have to do is post.

April 23

A movement on the bed and a small cry awoke Red instantly. In the low light, he could make out Lizzy’s silhouette. Her back was turned and she was sleeping peacefully.

Red looked at the baby who was squirming about, face scrunched up, fists waving frantically about like a samurai warrior fighting off an invisible foe. Red’s eyes shifted back to the peacefully sleeping woman then again to the tiny ninja.

He nodded knowingly, his gaze trained steadily on the enemy. “So this is how it’s gonna be, is it?”

The baby mewed irritably, the tiny ninja feet kicking viciously about in the air. “Careful kid... I know people.”

The man reluctantly arose, stifling a groan. He had seen the object needed upon his entrance hours ago. He picked up the baby, heading for the bureau.

Red worked the pacifier into the quivering pout of the mouth. “Stop with the face, I am totally unaffected.” he measured the formula absently. “I could tell you stories... what the hell is this?” he studied Silas’s make shift “stove”, quickly figuring the ins and outs of the situation.

The baby pushed the pacifier from it’s mouth. Red deftly caught the object, reinserting it determinably.

“We’re going to have to come to an understanding.” he poured the warm water into the bottle, absently bouncing the baby with his free arm. “Let’s pretend for everyone’s sake, that I’m the boss here.” he glanced down at the baby then frowned hard for the child had stopped squirming and fidgeting, staring at him expectantly. “I’ve got more money, I’ve got more power, I’m taller, I’ve got more... well, no, you’ve got more hair, actually.”

Red shrugged the moment away. “The point is,” he pushed the nipple through the unresisting lips at which point the kid suckled noisily, the large blues eyes trained and steady on the man’s face, “if we do things my way, we’re all going to be happier in the end.”

The man found a comfortable chair, settling back with his charge. He watched the baby suckle for a long moment. “This reminds me of a story...”

The baby let out a long exaggerated sigh when the warm liquid hit his empty tummy.

“Have you heard this one before?” Red could take criticism well. “That’s okay, I’ll relate it to Dembe in the morning. He gets paid to listen.”

He moved the infant closer to his warmth, gently caressing the tiny back in circular motions. He listened intently to the tiny mouth working so diligently on the bottle. In the quiet of the room, with this miniature human being in his care, Red suddenly felt a surge of total contentment.

He could not remember how long it had been since he had felt such emotions. He thought back many, many years ago. He had spent so much time with his baby daughter in the same setting.

The man glanced down at the little boy in his arms, marveling when the tiny fingers curled tightly about the heel of his hand. The blue eyes sleepily watched his every move. An unbidden smile curved Red’s lips.

Red tapped the baby’s bottom, bouncing it soothingly and in doing so, found a measure of comfort himself. The baby finished the bottle, and was subsequently lifted unto a convenient shoulder.

Red’s massive hand dwarfed the pint-sized body as he gently patted, coaxing the excess air from the little tummy. What came out, however, was anything but diminutive.

The man crooked his head away from the sweet smelling little face. “Now that was more like a beer burp, to me.”

The woman stirred instantly at the exaggerated sound, awakened fully from her peaceful slumber. She sat up hastily, blurting the first thing to come to mind.

“I’ve got this.” she struggled to a sitting position, pushing her hair from her face, frantically searching about the empty bed.

“Now, see what you’ve done?” Red lifted the baby, crossing to the bed, laying the infant into the comforting coverlet. “You’ve awakened the dragon.” he teased. “Let’s hope she doesn’t eat you alive.”

“That’s a fine thing to say to a baby.” the woman was flabbergasted, until she glanced down to the peacefully sleeping child. She lifted amazed eyes. “What are you... the baby whisperer?”

“We have come to an understanding, and it’s private.” Red headed for the door. “Just suffice to say, I am and always shall be, a master manipulator.”

Liz looked at him sideways, “He just likes your voice.” she stated shrewdly.

The man stopped in his tracks, cocking his head sideways. “How about you? Do you like my voice?”

“Where are you going?” she side-tracked hastily.

He came back a minute later with an ice bucket in tow, complete with a bottle of Merlot.

“What are we celebrating?” she was stumped.

“It’s for the kid’s gums.” he disdained, pulling the tabs on the diaper having already taken care of the snaps on Sam’s onesie.

After a successful operation, Red poured himself a glass of wine, motioning to her.
“It’s three o’clock in the morning,” she pointed out, refusing his kind offer.

The man shrugged, finishing off the wine in one gulp. “There’s no time set for a good glass of Merlot.”

Red made himself comfortable beside the warm little bundle, crossing his arms, and his feet at the ankles. He stared at the ceiling, his thoughts private.

“Thank you.” the woman ventured lowly so as to not to disturb his private moment. “But please, next time,” she asked more than told, “you can wake me up.”

She moved closer to the baby, her arms enfolding Sam lovingly. Liz closed her eyes, drinking in the scent surrounding her. This was rapidly becoming her most favorite fragrance in the universe... besides Red Reddington’s cologne.

The man shifted his head in the pillow, taking in the scene for quite a while. He finally closed his eyes, drifting into a deep, restful sleep.

The soft light filtering behind the curtain awoke Liz. She found Sam sleeping peacefully. Red looked as if he had not moved a muscle since coming to bed.

She smiled gently at the picture presented. The baby had shifted sometime in the night and now lay crumpled happily against the man’s lower waist.

This man seemed such a natural with children. Liz felt a momentary lump in her heart, thinking about what it must have been like when his daughter was the same age.

“Somebody better start making a bottle because the demon seed is going to be pissed when I move.” Red stated lazily, startling her. The clear aquamarine eyes opened slowly, his head turning towards her.

“How long have you been awake?” she accused.

“About thirty minutes, I guess?” He shooed her with his free hand, pointing to the bottles.

“I’m going.” She grumbled, rolling out of the bed. “What is on your agenda today?” she stared back at him as the water heated.

Red propped his head on his arm, watching her movements, his fingers massaging the baby’s feet. “My agenda today involves a feisty little con-artist,” he glanced down at the peacefully, undisturbed child, “and a masochistic FBI Agent who sees herself as Mother Teresa in her spare time.”

“Oh, you are so amusing.” the woman crossed the space, bottle in hand. “I am not masochistic.” she grinned at him. “Just for that, you feed the kid.”

“I’m going to get dressed.” he corrected in a rather superior tone.

“Coward.” she accused playfully, the baby boy stirring unhappily halted the repartee. When Red had moved, Sam’s comfortable world had been disturbed.

The man reached, lifting the tiny bundle into capable arms. “All right, Petty Officer Sam Whatever... this is not how we behave aboard the USS Reddington.”

Liz’s mouth quirked threateningly but she managed to hide her amusement, just.
Red wiggled his fingers and the woman slapped the bottle into the outstretched palm. The man found his favorite chair, settling back.

“I thought we had this settled last night.” he chided gently.

The baby ignored him completely, concentrating on the food placed before him. Red’s mouth worked back and forth the indentures along the side, dimpling deeply.

“What it is, I don’t understand, see... is why I do not get the respect afforded me?”

Elizabeth turned away hastily to hide her grin. The baby gurgled happily around the nipple, sucking noisily, the large eyes watching the man’s every move. At one point, Sam reached grasping his foot, waving it about haphazardly.

Red watched the action benignly. “I’m not really the bad guy they make me out to be. I mean, you will learn in this life, Petty Officer,” the man broke for a dramatic pause, “that things are never black or white.” he glanced down at the baby, who waved his foot in a wider arc. “I’m one of those gray areas you will hear so much about.” he nodded sagely.

“Oh my God...” she tried to keep the giggle from her voice, “you have a captive audience. Isn’t there something about this in the Geneva Convention bylaws?”

Red drew in an even breath, choosing to ignore her completely, his expression almost but not quite, annoyed. “Where was I?” he asked the baby.

Sam babbled off a long stream of unintelligible gibberish, “Yes, I know.” it was conceded.

“Something else you will learn in life. Women must always have the last word.”

“We do not.”

“See...” Red gestured accordingly.

The phone on the bed side table interrupted the pleasant camaraderie. Red transferred a put out look to the object in question.

Elizabeth reached over the bed, answering the call. She gestured but he indicated she should take the initiative.

The woman listened attentively then grimaced slightly, seeking him out. “They need you at the Post Office.”

“The hell you say?” he drawled, arising. He reluctantly handed over the baby. “Tell them I’m on my way.”

Red nuzzled the small neck as he placed Sam in Lizzy’s arms. “You got him?” he asked, adjusting the pillow supporting her arm and the small weight.

“Yes, I’m good.” She cuddled the warm bundle in open affection.

“I’ll send in breakfast after I dress.” he chucked the baby’s chin, “Petty Officer Whatever,” the man put on his most staunch face, “you will obey orders given from Lieutenant Keen in my absence.”

Liz lifted impressed brows, “Oh, I just got a raise in rank.”

Reddington shifted indulgent eyes. “Careful, Lieutenant... those ranks come and go so quickly around here.”
She stuck her tongue out, pulling an endearing face.

The man left for the Post Office thirty minutes later, but around lunch time, he was back and headed to the kitchen.

“Good afternoon Nora.” he threw his hat on the kitchen counter. “Has Lizzy and the drool machine had lunch yet?”

The woman frowned slightly, her eyes remaining on the offending object just thrown on her freshly cleaned cooking area.

Red glanced at his hat, sighing deeply before lifting it in capable hands. Suddenly Nora was all smiles. She went back to stirring something on the stove.

“I checked on them about ten minutes ago but they were still napping.” she chuckled. “Playtime was hectic this morning, I think.”

“Was there any trouble after I left?” Red leaned over the pot, humming appreciatively.

“We had one or two meltdowns...” the woman had hesitated to rat out her new found friend.

“Him or Lizzy?” Red smiled.

Nora chuckled, then gathered some bowls. “He needed ice for his gums.”

“I’ll get them up and about.” the man was a decision maker of the finest quality.

“Bring Sam with you, and I’ll feed him lunch.”

“I can do that Nor–”

“I don’t mind.” she smiled warmly. “He’s such a darling little thing.”

Red headed back to the bedroom, finding the two napping. Or at least one of them was.

The baby was quietly biting on his teddy bear while Keres laid next to him, licking the kid’s bald head.

“Cleaning it before you eat it, Keres?” Red muttered, then turned his attention to Sam. “You’re a good man Petty Officer, letting Lizzy nap.” he reached for the baby, settling him against his hip. “Come here, you little bundle of catnip.”

Red pinched the chubby little cheeks ever so gently, he could see just poking out of the pink swollen area, a minuscule white nub.

“What in God’s name...” Red’s nostrils rebelled, “is that horrendous stench?” he glanced at the baby accusingly. “As if I didn’t know.”

He laid Sam on the table, pulling back the diaper, grimacing. “Okay kid, bath time for you.” He pulled the diaper off, wiping away the mess. “You could certainly use one.”

He finished undressing the boy and took him into the bathroom, his hand cupped over a very vital area. The baby sucked on his fist, glad to be rid of the yucky stuff.

Red filled the large sink, testing the water before settling the child into the welcoming liquid. He glanced about, his hand supporting the bald head, finally spotting the baby soap.

Sam slapped the water, soaking the front of his shirt and vest through and through, all of which Red ignored. He lathered the baby from head to toe, rinsing with slow mellow streams.

“Sam?” Liz’s frantic voice beckoned from the bedroom.

“You think he’ll answer you?” Red found the thought amusing.

She came stumbling into the room, holding her chest. “You scared me to death.” she accused, her eyes falling instantly on Sam.

“Calm down and be careful.” He scolded, then smiled when the baby babbled, slapping the water harder. “Someone smelled of putrid bananas... what are you feeding this child?”

“Not that I’m complaining,” she watched him soap Sam’s head, the large hand carefully blocking the huge blue eyes as he rinsed, “but what are you doing home?”

“We placed all but five of the children.” he supplied the answer to her question. “I was redundant, so I left.”

“And Sam?”

He blotted the baby’s face, then lifted him into a warm fluffy towel, wrapping the small body snugly.

“Nothing yet.” he replied quietly.

“Wait a minute..” Liz had noted something peculiar. “Is that a birthmark?” she pointed when the man seemed puzzled. “There... on his bottom.”

Red draped the baby on his forearm, tummy down. Sam kicked his legs in his new position, chortling, perfectly content to be upside down and dangling.

Red smiled, stroking his little head, before glancing at what the woman had indicated.

“It is, yes.” He pulled his phone out of his pocket, hesitating.

Her eyes beseeched him, but he shook his head firmly. “I have to, Lizzy.”

“I know.” She held the baby still while Red snapped a picture of the small mark. Liz took over drying duties while Red placed the call to Ressler.

When he was finished, he took the child, carrying it to the changing table. Liz took over the duties from there.

Red sat on the bed, trying to read her face, but she kept her attention focused on Sam, her expression carefully neutral.

“Can you hand me that red onesie and the overalls please.”

Red handed over the small garments, “I’m sorry, Lizzy.” he stated simply.

She sniffled silently, keeping her eyes averted. “No, it’s okay, he needs his mom and dad, it’s good he’ll get to go home.” she swallowed the lump in her throat, her eyes filling with unshed tears as she slid the suspender in place.

The man watched the scene unfold, his mood plummeting. He had foreseen this very moment, having thought he was fully prepared for it, but in the end the woman’s pain hurt like hell.

He closed his eyes instinctively reaching out, his arm gently surrounding her waist. He pulled Liz closer, enfolding her into his arms.

She sat on his lap, sobbing heartfelt gulps of sorrow, her face hidden in his neckline. The baby played with his tie, unaware of the pain around him.

The phones incessant ring tone jarred the moment, the woman tensing visibly, staring transfixed at the offense communication device.

Red knew she was preparing herself mentally for the news, good or bad.

The man listened intently for some time before offering a curt goodbye.

“Did they find his parents?” she blurted shakily.

“No, but they’re narrowing it down now.” he relayed. “But they’ve placed the other kids.”

“When will you be back, do you think?” she lifted a tear stained face.

“I’m not going.” he wiped the tracks gently from her cheeks. “They don’t need me, you on the other hand...”

“We’ll be okay.” she tried to sound optimistic.

“I’d rather not find out if that’s true from a couple hundred miles away.”

Liz fell silent, nodding into his neck, relief flooding her entire being.

The baby laughed heartily as he pulled the tie from behind Red’s vest. She could not prevent a chuckle, watching the chubby hand grip the expensive fabric, then chew on the end.

“Stop it.” She scolded, gently pulling on the tie.

Red took the tie, shaking the drool off, his expression surly. “Really?” he questioned offhandedly. “It’s not like this is Italian silk, kid.”

Liz did not think she would be smiling today but in spite of herself, she found her spirits slightly lifting.

“Nora has lunch ready for us.” the man stood, taking his lap companions along with him. After getting her settled on her cart, Red adjusted Sam on his arm, letting the infant look after Liz as she rolled along.

After lunch, Red took Sam and Lizzy to the sitting room for a change in scenery.

Dembe came in the sunny room, the look on his face alerting Red. The man nodded, turning to his charges.

“Will you be all right here?” he asked as he stood.
“Sam likes it here.” the woman smiled up, from her position on the floor. “And so do I.”

“Don’t forget to do his ice soon.” it was reminded.

Red stood looking down at the scene. Before he knew what he was doing, he had bent, kissing Liz’s pert nose.

He raised, his features carefully masked. He then joined Dembe, the two exiting in unison.

Red rounded the arch way, running a hand over his head, an odd emotion churning inside himself.

That little moment had felt so... domesticated. He found he missed moments like that in his life.

The baby, playing on the floor. Kissing the girl good bye.

It felt so familiar, but yet so strange. Mostly because Sam was not his baby and Lizzy was most assuredly not his wife.

That much was obvious, for so many reasons.

It had been such a powerful episode, truth told, it almost overwhelmed the man.

That few seconds had felt so real... so right. He hadn’t felt such a strong emotional attachment since his wife and child. The reality hurt like hell, because he knew it was just an illusion.

“Raymond?” Dembe questioned, holding the back door open for him. The large man had felt the quietness, concerned for his friend.

Reddington waved the unasked question aside, “Let’s go.”

Two hours passed, but it had felt like an eternity until the man finally was allowed to come back to the world he preferred.

Red’s hand massaged his neck and the tension in his body as he walked the halls of what he now considered, home.

Lizzy’s musical laughter floated on the air, lightening his spirit. He followed the sound which led his footsteps to the back of the house.

Coming on scene the man halted briefly, a gentle smile coming to his lips.

The woman was holding Sam on the first step of the pool, the tiny feet kicking and splashing so fast that Red was hard pressed to follow the activity.

“Oh, hi.” Liz beamed up at him as he came further into the room.

Red was pleased to see both her hand and leg were wrapped in plastic. Silas was sitting just behind her, flipping through the latest publication of Gun World.

“Are we having a pool party?” the older man smiled at the ecstatic pair, taking off his shoes, rolling up his pants legs. He slipped his feet into the warm water, sitting close beside Liz and their tiny guest.

“We are...” she giggled happily.

Red stared down into the water, pointing. “What is that?”
Liz lifted Sam slightly, showing a trash bag fastened into a diaper. “Nora thought, if he should have any accidents...” she said meaningfully, before lowering Sam back down into the warm water.

Dembe walked to the far end of the pool, diving gracefully into its depths.

Sam clapped his chubby little hands at the show, then blinked in awe, smiling a huge toothless grin when the man popped up a few feet from them, as if by magic.

The baby started clapping his fingers quickly as though motioning Dembe closer, then stood on the first step bouncing jerkily in the buoyant water. The sound of the little laughter peeled through the room and truthfully into Elizabeth’s heart.

All at once the infant practically leapt for Dembe who had been gently splashing the little tummy with water.

Red quickly reached out, catching the anxious little body, “Whoa there, lightning.”

He held Sam out, smiling at the rapidly kicking legs. Dembe closed the gap, taking the infant in capable arms.

Red and Liz watched as the child smacked the water, splashing water in Dembe’s face but unfortunately, Sam got a little of the backlash, his eyes blinking rapidly at the unexpected occurrence.

Liz smiled, waving to the baby as he passed by, making cooing sounds and impressed faces of delight.

“Look at you swimming all by yourself.” she clapped her hands energetically. “What a big boy you are.”

“Dembe.” Red called out a warning, before tossing a float in beside the man.

Dembe maneuvered it beside him, laying Sam on his belly, allowing him to float around much to the delight of the small human.

Dembe dodged the flailing arms and legs as best he could, chuckling his amusement.

“Did you have a good day?” Red asked the woman beside him.

“We did, he tried apple cinnamon oatmeal today.” she beamed happily. “He ate the whole thing.”

“I had the same thing in mind for dinner.” the man quipped.

“He was just a little piglet.” Liz chuckled quietly, “He really loved it.”

“I’m happy to hear he had a nice day, but the question was directed at you.”

Liz sighed, then wiggled her toes in the water, “I’m... dealing with it.” she replied quietly then scrunched her nose when Dembe came floating up to them with his sleeping passenger.

“Waterbeds have the same affect on me.” Silas mentioned to no one in particular before returning to his magazine.

“Well, I guess if he has trouble sleeping, we can just sit him on a raft to knock him out.” Red shrugged before reaching out and taking the sleeping baby from his impromptu water bed.
Dembe arose out of the water, like a Greek God, offering his assistance to Liz who gladly accepted.

“Red, I can take him,” she pointed to the bag leaking water everywhere, “you’re pants are getting all wet.”

“Like that hasn’t happened before.” he tore the bag free with Dembe’s help, situating Sam in his arm. Dembe caught Liz’s puzzled look, delivering a dead pan... “Army-Navy game.”

Liz sighed her frustration because she had noted Red’s instant grin of camaraderie.

Silas had stood, laying his book aside coming alongside the woman.

“Red, put the baby into the towel, he might get cold.” Liz advised, whereupon the little one was instantly given over.

The older man looked down, watching as the baby was swaddled into a warm, dry cloth. His fingers absently trailed slowly back and forth over Liz’s nape.

“Isn’t this the most adorable baby you’ve ever seen, Silas? Admit it.” Liz crooked her head upward, catching the skeptical features of her guard. “You know you like him.”

“Little germ carrier.” the bearded man retorted. “I think I’m coming down with something.”

Dembe shook his head dolefully. He lifted his weapon off the towel where he had carefully placed it, having dried off his muscular frame.

“He is not!” Liz instinctively took up for the child. “He’s just the most precious thing ever.” she murmured lovingly over the baby, kissing his little forehead. “You take that back!”

Silas rolled his eyes, “Getting a little nauseous here.” he pulled a ‘gag face’. “He’s drooling.”

“And you haven’t?” Red spoke up instantly sharing a knowing glance with Dembe. All three men spoke in unison... “Army-Navy game.” Silas nodded grudgingly.

“Damn fine game.” the brawny guard had to agree in spite of everything that went down that fateful day.

“What the hell happened at that game?” she was mystified. “Sam’s teething!” Elizabeth defended staunchly, letting the other subject go, not sure she wanted to know any of the specifics.

“Did the kid shit his pants, because I absolutely smell... something.” Silas wrinkled his nose at the abhorrent odor.

“Red...” Liz’s eyes hardened perceptibly, “shoot him in the ass.”

Red’s grin was halted instantly by the sound of a loud pop.

Silas instantly placed his bulk over that of Elizabeth Keen and her charge, his large arms encompassing both small bodies.

Dembe dropped his towel, grasping his weapon, pointing it in the direction of the source.

Red turned, blocking the three behind him, his own weapon raised and at-the-ready.

Another two shots rang out, almost simultaneously... Red glanced over to Dembe, a fixed scowl on his face.

If they were under attack, someone was taking their sweet time.

Silas’ radio was alive, squawking information to the Head Security Guard.

Dembe’s scowl was even darker than Red’s because all posts were reporting no breech of property... no activity on the grounds what-so-ever.

Silas soothed Elizabeth, glancing around hectically for any means of escape offered. Finding none at the moment, for they were surrounded by a glass enclosure... he continued sheltering them with his own body.

Red’s arm swept slowly across the horizon, his eyes alert and active, his weapon still raised searching for the threat.

A gigantic pane of glass shattered close by the large black man to Red’s left.

They now knew the location of the assailant.

Red tapped Silas’ back, signaling it was time to vacate. Silas’ beefy fingers pushed the cart’s control forward as he slowly walked the vehicle toward the opened French doors in front of them.

Red followed, his body a shield as well, his weapon trained at the appropriate location. Dembe was close behind and soon, all exited the area... Liz and the baby, safe and sound.

Silas arose finally, his face an angered mask of rage. He jerked the radio to his lips, secure in the knowledge, Red and Dembe were rushing the only ones who mattered, from the scene.

“Somebody better tell me what the fuck is going on out there!” he advised icily.

“Be advised...” Joe’s voice came back calmly, “shooter is secured, danger eliminated.”

“Who the hell breeched our security?” his rage was barely held in check.

“No one breeched... it was the neighbor lady... and I use the term loosely, to our South.” Joe hurried on with the explanation before Silas could get any more upset. “Husband supposedly cheating, woman got soused, started shooting up the guy's man cave.”

Silas looked at the radio as though Joe had suddenly gone off the deep end, his face comically askew.

“We have the weapon... and the woman in our custody.” Joe glanced at the person in question, ignoring the disparaging remarks concerning his birthright. “She’s still a little under the weather...please advise as to what the Captain wishes us to do at this time.”

Silas leaned heavily against the wall for support, his hand wiping across his brow. “If I had my druthers,” he uttered quietly now, “I’d put a bullet in her fat ass.”

Joe glanced at the woman in question, who practically fell out of the chair. Fortunately, David was there to prevent just such an occurrence.

“You’re not usually so unchivalrous to a woman.” Joe was finding the remark amusing however.

“She could have killed that baby!” Silas’ tone was a little tremulous, the reality having set in a goodly while back.
“You okay, boss?” Joe was a little concerned.

The silence was telling.

Silas calmed himself mentally and physically. The professional finally re-emerging. He drew in a deep cleansing breath.

“All right...” he exhaled slowly straightening to his full height, “I will get back to you once I speak to the Captain.” he crooked his neck back and forth, easing the tension from his body.

He had smelled the baby’s scent, the little thing having remained quiet throughout the entire fiasco. At one point, the blue eyes had trained on him full of trust and innocence.

At that moment, Silas had truly felt the weight of the responsibility bestowed upon him. And while he was concerned greatly for Elizabeth Keen’s safety, he would have to admit, if only to himself... that little boy was his priority. He would have given his life, gladly, to ensure the safety and well being of that tiny human being.

His esteem had heightened greatly as well for the woman who had put her own body over the baby’s the entire time, Liz’s softly whispered assurances calming the infant as nothing else could have.

“Sober up that psycho.” the man blocked the emotional onslaught determinedly. “The Captain will want to speak with her... personally.”

“Wouldn’t want to be her...” Joe shook his head woefully. “Has the Captain ever capped a woman?”

“In this instance...” Silas snapped, “I wouldn’t blame him if he did.”
April 23-24

Elizabeth slipped into a somber mood once back into the privacy of the bedroom. She sat on the couch, flipping through a magazine, trying to calm her frayed nerves.

Her eyes constantly checked on the sleeping baby, who lay in the middle of the huge bed.

Red had disappeared a few moments after the incident... oh fine, now she was beginning to think in those terms. The woman constantly checked on the time, wondering what was taking the man so long.

Silas stood calmly by, his own temper barely held in check at the woman’s constant abuse.

“You people have no right keeping me here, like I was a prisoner or something.” The still inebriated neighbor was not shy about voicing her displeasure. “When my husband gets home, you will be very sorry, I can assure you of that.”

Red Reddington allowed the verbal diatribe, his manner calmly collected. He leaned over the desk, hefting the silver plated .45 in capable hands. His eyes shifted coldly.

“Barry is an upstanding pillar in this community that.”

“Fucks around behind his old lady’s back?” Silas stated so off-handedly that, for a moment, Red thought the man was making some sort of weird small talk.

He glanced over his shoulder at the fuming individual, his expression unreadable.

“How dare you!” The woman’s face turned a crimson red. “I will not stand for that vulgar, uncouth speech from the likes of..”

“What I find ‘vulgar and uncouth’...” Red stopped her in her tracks, his look a deathly quiet one which sent a warning signal even to Silas’ seasoned brain, “is a rich bitch who feels it’s her ‘right’ to fire off a weapon, right in the middle of Suburbia, destroying property, not to mention...”

He lifted himself upright, suddenly towering over the seated female. “Almost killing a six month old child and a young woman whose only crime...was to try to enjoy a moment’s relaxation in our own fucking pool.”

Silas shifted a wary scan Red’s way, sensing the tension emanating from the older man.

The woman in question blanched visibly. “.W-Wha..” The related news stunned her. “I..I d-didn’t..I wasn’t a-awar..”

“You know what I would like to happen now, Silas?” Red ignored the useless apologies, turning leisurely, checking the whereabouts of his Chief Security Officer.

“No, Sir..” Silas answered dutifully, uneasy with his contemporary’s mood. “But, whatever it is, I will try to accommodate your wishes.”
“Take this fucking idiot out somewhere...oh, I don’t know...” Red mused openly. “Do you remember where we dropped that slime bag, Archie Dunbar?”

Silas finally ‘got’ where the ‘Boss’ was headed, his face keeping a carefully neutral expression. “It’s a long drive, Boss.”

“You got somewhere else you have to be?” Red asked pleasantly.

“W-What are you talking about?” The ‘Neighbor Lady’ was beginning to sweat and Silas didn’t think it was from all the booze she had ingested. “Are y-you insane?” The light blue eyes darted about the burly individuals surrounding her, a new-found terror found within. “Who are you people?!” She demanded shrilly.

Red simply glanced back at her, remaining silent.

“People will miss me.” her voice had begun to shake.

“I highly doubt it.” Joe mumbled under his breath.

“My husband knows, I just wouldn’t up and leave.” the woman tried again, her desperation showing.

“Oh, like he would give a shit.” Silas scoffed. “Hell, he’ll probably send us a thank you note.”

“The police will–”

Red held up a silencing hand, then offered a curt motion.

Silas nodded to Joe, who instantly lifted the woman from the chair, manhandling her roughly to the entrance of the huge office they now occupied.

Red and Silas ignored the pleas and shouting, watching calmly as the woman was ushered into a corridor which led to the garage. Soon enough, the silence returned to the room.

“So what do I do with her?” Silas wanted to know. “Because I have no idea who this Archie Dunbar is... do you?”

“He was a very dear friend of mine.” Red supplied the answer. “Too bad I had to kill him.”

“You want me to kill this woman?” the man was confused.

Red looked at him oddly. “Would you?”

“An hour ago, sure.” he confessed. “But even I have some scruples left...” the man thought the statement through, for all of two seconds, “oh, who the hell are we kidding.”

“No, Silas. I don’t want you to kill her.” Red shook his head exhaustively. “Just take her out to the ‘wilds of New Jersey’, and drop her off.”

“You mean like, Paulie and Chris on the Soprano’s, ‘wilds of New Jersey’?” Silas needed clarification, yet again.

“Exactly.” Red nodded contentedly. “I want to scare the hell out of her.” and he did. “But make sure, some anonymous do-gooder calls in a tip to her location a few hours after you drop her off.”

“What about the husband?” Silas asked. “If he comes snooping around.”
“Handle him.” Red lifted an exasperated hand. “Now, I’ve got places to be. And I do not want to be disturbed the rest of the evening, for any reason.”

“What if I get stuck in the ‘wilds’ with her?” Silas face was perfectly serious.

“Send David and that new kid... Kevin.” Red waved the issue aside. “They have a better sense of direction.”

Silas held his smile. “You can be a hard man, Reddington.” it was mentioned in passing. “You know of course, I’ve had Survivalist Training.”

“You’ve taught it.” Red smirked disdainfully.

Silas’ smile finally broke through. He watched the man saunter away before tackling the task assigned him. A task he was going to enjoy.

When Red returned, he found the baby had awakened and Elizabeth playing with the little boy by blowing kisses on his tummy.

“You should put him on his stomach for a while.” Red suggested, having watched the interaction for a long moment.

“Oh, right.” Liz lay out a soft blanket, tossing Sam’s toys down haphazardly around the square. “Tummy time,” she placed the infant down face first.

Red held his smile. Liz got down on the floor, opposite the baby, cooing and encouraging the little one to crawl by her actions and words.

The little boy was very animated but getting no where fast.

“Show him a toy.” Red motioned with his hand, his arm resting leisurely on the pillow beside him. “He might try for it.”

The woman picked up Sam’s teddy bear, waving it back and forth. The blue eyes beamed with joy, the baby kicking his legs frantically, his tiny toes catching on the blanket.

His tummy was to full and too big, no progress was being made what-so-ever. Sam was fast getting frustrated, his little face scrunching up accordingly.

Red sat his paper aside, getting down on the floor with them. He put his hand behind the boy’s feet, providing the purchase for which Sam had been looking.

“Look at him, Red!” Liz beamed, watching the little guy drag himself across the surface of the blanket with his arms and Red’s help.

Red rubbed the little feet with his thumb in silent encouragement, “Bring it closer now, he’s worked enough. Let him grab his prize.”

Elizabeth grinned madly when Sam grabbed the bear with his tiny fist. The toy instantly headed for the mouth. The baby diligently chewed on it’s nose.

She clapped enthusiastically, “Good job, Sam!”

The baby looked up from his toy, grinning furiously, pooting, loudly.
Liz lay face down in the blanket, her shoulders shaking with her laughter while Red rubbed the boys back, chuckling. “You do live up to your namesake.”

A pleasant hour passed, before it was time for the baby’s feeding. Red did the honors, his attention caught by the commotion behind him.

Liz was singing softly, playing a game of sorts. She pumped the chubby legs in time with the song she sang.

“There’s more to that song than what you’re singing.” he sort of chastised, handing the bottle over.

“Well, who remembers the words to “The Wheels on the Bus”.” she kissed the baby’s feet, sparing the man a disgruntled glance.

“I do.” he supplied, readily. “And Dembe.”

“You’d think we never feed this kid, to watch him.” the woman commented offhandedly.

“He’s been a good eater.” Red nodded approvingly.

“What did you get?” She motioned to the jar.

“Ahh, yes.” he checked his choice. “A favorite of even the fussiest of palates... apple sauce.”

Cracking open the jar, the man spooned some of the pale mush out, placing it in the waiting mouth.

Sam, unsure of the texture, pushed it around his mouth, some falling outside his pursed lips.

Red caught it with his thumb, wiping it off on the cloth, before spooning the rest into the small mouth.

“You’re so good at this.” Liz smiled warmly, watching him spoon over another small portion. “With him.”

“He’s an good baby. Good natured. Easily distracted.” Red got the kid’s attention again, tapping the soft spoon on Sam’s messy lips.

“Oh well now, look.” Red wiped Sam’s cheek off with his finger, offering a disgruntled expression. “Look what you did here.” he showed the baby the food. The blue eyes widened, the little mouth opening wide like a little bird.

Elizabeth placed her hand quickly over her mouth, stifling a chuckle.

“He turns his head right when I’m going to stick the food in.” Red enjoyed her mood, hiding the fact well, keeping up the façade. “What’s that all about?”

A few more bites and Sam was full. Liz leaned over, grabbing a baby wipe, cleaning off the dirty face.

“Have you ever thought about having more kids?” She asked.

Red sat back slowly, his thoughts turning introspective.

“For a very long time, after I had been branded a traitor,” he began slowly, “all I could think about for a few years was survival.” he glanced at the sleeping baby between them, his arm coming to rest along the back of the couch on which they sat.
“I thought that what had occurred, couldn’t possibly go on forever, however,” he mused, “that sooner or later I’d get some semblance of my life back.” he felt his way along. “But as time went on, that hypothesis became blurry, so the thought was pushed to the background completely.” he shrugged mentally. “Then I got comfortable in my new lifestyle...”

“And that was it?” she queried.

“While I was traversing the underworld,” he confided, “I met a woman who didn’t know who the hell I was.” Liz looked at him slightly befuddled.

“We didn’t have Google like we do now,” his hand lifted slightly off the back of the couch. “She either had to go to a post office and happen upon my picture, or get hold of an American newspaper that was running low on headlines that day.”

“So what happened?” Liz was intrigued.

“I fell in love with her. Or at least, the idea of her.” he contemplated. “She was sweet, kind and beautiful. Incredibly naïve. Normal.” the man had welcomed such a concept at that time. “She wanted to have a child, and I grew to embrace the idea, until I came over one day, finding my rival sitting in her front room, conversing with her.”

“She was a traitor?” the woman was flabbergasted.

“No, as I said, incredibly naïve.” he shook his head slightly. “She thought him to be one of my close associates, allowing him inside the house. He could have snapped her neck anytime.”

“He didn’t hurt her, though.” Liz was somehow relieved.

“No, it was a message.” Red’s face hardened. “He didn’t have to draw a picture. I couldn’t stand the thought of putting her in danger, so I left.”

“She must have been heartbroken.”

“We both were.” he lowered his eyes for a beat, then lifted his head and his spirits. “But, she’s alive and married with three beautiful children. A price well worth the payment.”

“You say that so easily.” she hesitated visibly, not having meant to be so forward.

“No Elizabeth.” his eyes allowed his pain for a second. “Not easily.”

Quiet entered the room for a goodly spell, the only sound Sam’s soft snoring.

“So you never thought about it after that?”

“Well,” the man glanced up at the ceiling, rubbing his chin thoughtfully with his thumb, “after I killed the son-of-a-bitch, it started a chain reaction that required clean up, which took place over the next couple of years.”

“This is the man in the living room?” she clarified in her own mind.

Red nodded. “Well, he just had to die.” the quiet returned for a brief second.

“Then what happened?”

“I turned myself into the FBI.” He smiled warmly at her. His phone rang in his pocket, breaking the spell.
Red sighed heavily, answering the call. “Oh,” his eyes shifted to the woman’s profile, "...hello, Aram.”

He felt Liz tense next to him, rubbing her shoulder comfortingly.

“I see. And you’ve confirmed...” He broke off, jotting down the information Aram was conveying. “Tell Cooper I will take care of it personally. Good night, Aram.”

He shut the phone, squeezing her shoulder. “They found his parents.” he announced without preamble.

“Okay...” she managed a reply of sorts.

“I’m sorry, Lizzy.” he reached for her hand, rubbing her fingers tenderly.

“When do we leave?”

“In the morning.” he was pleased when the woman leaned over, supporting her head on his shoulder. She needed comfort and had sought it with him.

“You know why babies are so cute and cuddly?” he asked quietly. The woman lifted her eyes, seeking his. “So we’ll take care of them. Love them.” He squeezed her shoulder gently. “You were just doing what came natural to you. You protected and nurtured Sam but now you have to give him away, which goes against your instincts.”

The woman listened earnestly.

“I also think once you see him with his mother, you’ll feel comfortable letting him go back where he belongs.”

“I hope you’re right.”

“Do you want to hold him?” He asked.

“He’ll wake up.” She warned.

“You’re forgetting, I’m the baby whisperer.” Red shifted, lifting the child placing it in capable arms.

Sam never stirred once, until his head was settled between Liz’s breasts whereupon, he sighed contentedly.

The woman felt a range of emotions, as she held the tiny bundle protectively close. She tried so hard not to cry... but in the end, the tears slid down her pale cheeks.

Red wished things could have worked out differently. He wished it with all his heart. But the reality was, he was not a miracle worker... no matter the general consensus.

So he accepted what was. All he could do for the moment, is to be there, be supportive.

He could truthfully say however, he did not think he had ever dreaded an approaching morning more.

~♥~♥~♥~♥~♥~♥~♥~♥~♥~♥~♥~♥~♥~♥~♥~♥~♥~♥~♥~♥~♥

True to form, the day was an overcast dismally cloudy affair that somewhat matched the atmosphere inside the mansion.

It was early morning still, but all was set for the pre-arranged meeting.

“Go ahead, I’ll be right there.” Red motioned to Dembe, who was loaded down with baby paraphernalia. Liz tried a smile which failed dismally before she preceded the man out the door.

“What ever was left in that room, regarding Sam,” Red informed Silas, who had accompanied them from the room, “needs to be gone by the time we get back. We’ll be about two hours.”

“Sure, no problem.” Silas nodded. “She’s taking it hard, huh?” the two men watched the baby and the woman being loaded into the SUV.

“She is.” Red fixed his hat, fingering the rim. “Most of the gear is gone... I didn’t really want to do the rest in front of her.”

“I understand. All traces of Sam will be gone by the time you get back.”

“Thank you, Silas.” the man nodded shortly, using the only coping mechanism he ever allowed himself, gently biting the inside of his mouth twice. It was a habit he had acquired over the years which often served him well.

It was either that minuscule gesture, or just go ahead and follow his body’s dictates, which would be to allow the rage that always simmered just under the surface... to erupt.

They drove for fifteen minutes, Liz playing with the baby’s toes the whole time. They finally pulled up alongside a replica of Red’s plane.

“Whose plane is that?” the woman craned her neck, taking in the sleek jet from front to back.

“An associate of mine.” Red answered glancing at the aircraft absently. “He’s here visiting family and won’t need it for a couple of days.” he unbuckled Sam from the seat, handing the carrier over to Dembe, before helping Liz from the car.

Dembe traversed the stairs, carrier in hand, before disappearing through the jet’s portal.

Liz blinked the tears away, walking to the steps slowly. Red matched his steps to hers, his head tilting as he watched her progress.

“You’re doing better.” he commented offhandedly, nodding approvingly, as the woman managed the steps slowly but steadily.

“Better than what?” Liz kept her eyes glued to the portal, her hand gripping the rail tightly. “A Galapagos turtle?”

“Oh no, you’re not that fast yet.” Red managed with a perfectly straight face. She halted at the top of the stairs sighing, slightly amused in spite of herself.

“You’re such a smart ass.” she held her smile with difficulty.

“You should make him a bottle for the flight.” He suggested evenly, nodding amiably.

The woman hobbled to the galley, mixing the bottle quickly.
“We’re leaving in a few minutes.” Red came back from the cockpit, checking on the safety of the baby. He reached in his pocket, pulling out a pacifier. The man wiped it once against the fabric of his slacks, just about to stick it in Sam’s mouth.

Liz made a disgruntled sound snatching the object, with only one lethal look in the man’s direction, went to rinse the pacifier of any supposed germs.

Red lifted his brows, he and the baby exchanging enigmatical looks. “Little does she know, that you’ll be eating sand in a couple of months.”

“He most certainly will not.” the woman snapped her belief.

Red shared a moment with the baby that bespoke volumes. Sam’s mouth was suddenly filled with baby toes. He gurgled happily around the soft warm socks he now chewed upon.

Red smiled approvingly down at him “We good to go?” he asked the rhetorical question.

“Oh my God!” Liz clasped the bottle to her chest, her face aghast. “Stop that!” she hurriedly pulled the toes from the baby’s vicinity.

Red glanced up to the stricken woman, smiling benignly.

“Sammy, honey...” she allowed Red to seat her, then buckle her belt. “We don’t eat our sockies. We just don’t, ‘kay?” she asked sweetly.

“In my country,” Dembe chimed in helpfully, his expression most sincere. Red closed his eyes, sensing the direction the statement was going to take. “Children often eat crickets.”

Liz’s eyes widened in horror, a visible shudder racking her entire body. She offered the most disgusting sound she could express, her features echoing her distaste.

“Oh, stop it!” she practically screeched. Which brought a soft smile from Red and a wide one from her antagonist who sat across the way. “Bleh!”

“Well once actually,” Red leaned back into the tale he was about to embark upon, “when I was in Columbia...”

“Don’t you even go there!” the woman warned, covering her ears with her hands, shutting her eyes tightly. “Blah, blah, blah!” she chanted repeatedly.

Red held his smile, glad that they had managed to lift the woman’s doldrums slightly.

He felt his own ears adjusting as the plane lifted higher into the sky. The baby began to protest the change in altitude.

“Here.” he handed the bottle to Dembe. “It will help pop his ears.” Red said as they started leveling off.

The flight was uneventful thereafter.

Liz held the baby the entire way until the pilot directed his passengers to ‘buckle up’.

Red glanced out the window as they taxied into Dekalb-Peachtree Airport. The Airport Security was already on-site, awaiting their arrival.

Sam’s parents were to come on board, so they could reunite with their baby in private. And hopefully, ease Lizzy’s worries about leaving the baby.

When the plane stopped, Dembe lowered the stairs, waving the parents forward.

The couple jogged quickly to the plane, as the Press pushed hard at the arms holding them back.

The security were doing the job well.

The young couple ran up the steps, into the plane, searching breathlessly about, before finally zeroing in on their baby.

“Oh, Sam!” A young woman, crying brokenly, rushed for the infant. The mother lifted a confused Sam into her loving arms, showing her prize to an anxiously awaiting ‘dad’.

The tall man stood by, his arms encompassing his small family, his face a rapturous beam of contentment.

The woman laughed and cried her joy, touching her baby at every possible advantage point. She kissed the little one repeatedly, anywhere Sam would allow.

Finally, the moment was broken, the father having noticed the small audience. He looked up teary eyed, staring directly at Elizabeth Keen.

“Thank you, thank you so much.” He clasped her hand, then noticed her casted arm. “Oh my God, did you get injured?” there was instant concern on the boyishly handsome face. “Rescuing him?”

“Oh, no.” Liz blinked back her need to weep, clearing her voice gently of the throaty lump of emotion welling inside her heart. “His name is Sam?” she had picked up on that anomaly instantly, totally amazed by the coincidence.

“Samuel Christopher.” The man smiled happily, smoothing his hand over the baby’s head. He had barely taken notice of the two men on board, smiling at them wildly now before his expression sobered slowly.

“I know you.” he tilted his head. “You’re Raymond Reddington.” his tone had cooled decidedly, his eyes hardening perceptibly. “Are you the one who did this?” he accused heatedly. The niceties of seconds before fading into oblivion. “Did you take my son!”

Liz stepped before the accused, scowling angrily. “No!” she defended staunchly. “He’s the one who saved your son!” it was snapped right back. “Red would never harm a child! Apologize to him this instant!”

“Lizzy...” Red chided, fully understanding the emotions playing out.

“No! You saved him, Red!” she turned her fury on an unsuspecting co-hort. “You took care of him. Kept him warm and comfortable and safe.” she pointed at nothing in particular, but she had meant to point to the one in question. “You made his gums stop hurting.” She cried plaintively. “You don’t deserve this!”

Red pulled Liz into his arms, soothing her. “It’s all right.” He murmured.

“I-I’m sorry.” The father stumbled. “I didn’t know.”

Red nodded, his embrace tightening about Elizabeth’s frame. He glanced at Dembe, his expression speaking volumes.
Dembe gestured the two young people to the door of the jet, picking up the baby supplies Liz had brought. The couple moved slowly away from the solitary figures, feeling horrible that they had accused the one person who had actually been the catalyst for saving their infant son.

The woman halted her steps uncertainly before turning about, “Thank you for bringing my baby home, Mr. Reddington.” She hesitated, totally befuddled suddenly. “...There just aren’t any words to express.”

“No.” Sam’s father echoed the sentiment. “No... there isn’t. How do we possibly...”

“You’re welcome.” Red mumbled into Lizzy’s soft hair, his hand gently rubbing a peculiar circular motion on her back.

“Hey..” he halted the intended departure, “he’s teething. He likes a damp cloth filled with crushed ice to chew on.”

The mother smiled warmly, hugging the baby close. “I’ll do that.” the smile reached her eyes. “Thank you for taking such good care of him, both of you.”

Their steps echoed inside the now empty plane. Liz broke completely, sobbing into his chest, collapsing into him. He took their weight effortlessly, easing into the couch.

Red murmured soothing inanities, his arms tightening consolingly.

“Shh, it’s all right.”

“How could he s-say something so horrible?” she stuttered, gulping for a semblance of control. “You s-saved that little boy, you saved m-me.” she blurted sub-consciously, her hands tightening on the front of his lapels.

Red startled against her, looking down at the crown of her head. He had not expected that statement.

“He didn’t know, Lizzy.”

“He couldn’t see how well taken care of he was?” her anger would not be silenced. “He couldn’t see you had flown here specially to deliver Sam to them?”

“He was just scared, relieved, thrilled.” Red fingered the strands of hair caught on her wet cheeks, liking the feel of silky mass. “We can never really know what those two were suffering.”

She lifted her head, staring at him oddly. If Red Reddington did not know, who could? His own daughter was still missing.

Liz knew that was a subject for another time.

“Well, he had a piss poor way of showing it.” she sniffled, wiping angrily at her eyes with her sleeve. “I am so sorry, Red.”

“What are you sorry for?” he smiled down at her, offering a handkerchief.

“You saved over forty kids and don’t get your just dues.” she was suddenly on a roll. The injustice of it all was simply too much to bear. “The Feds get the slap on the back and all you get is... that!”

“Lizzy, I don’t care about the back slapping. I care about the kids going home to their parents, where they belong.”
Red settled more comfortably beside her, his eyes mellowed, filled with gentle humor.

Dembe came back into the jet, his expression a foreboding one. “I hate the Press.”

“They got to their car okay then?”

“I gently persuaded a few of the more persistent reporters, the meaning of the word, privacy.” Dembe grinned evilly. “Where to now?” he asked pleasantly.

Red tilted his head, enquiring of the woman.

“I want to go home.” she sniffed quietly.

Red settled, locking his hands together, propping his feet onto a convenient table. In the ensuing quiet, his thoughts turned introspective.

It was good that Liz had seen how very much Sam’s parents loved him.

He had not anticipated her jumping to his defense, acting as a shield... not that he had ever needed one.

It had been totally unexpected, but left him with a warm feeling inside. Perhaps it wasn’t beyond the realm of possibilities, that one day, she might actually see him as a friend.
Old Insecurities Revisited

April 24

Hours later, after they returned to the mansion, matters finally got back to normal.

Liz went to take a nap because leaving the baby had drained her emotionally. On the other hand, her anger over how Red had been treated, had bolstered her spirits in spite of the sadness she had experienced.

Red knew she was emotionally and physically exhausted and was glad when she finally went down, listening to the dictates of her body for once.

He stood for a moment in the darkened room, watching her sleep, his own mind finally at rest, then went directly to his office.

The first thing on the agenda, was to check the mail. Shuffling the stack, he finally found the one thing he hoped would not be there.

"Reddington was at the Blacksite today. But then, so were you. Guarded by his security, of course. He’s certainly doing everything he can to keep you under lock and key, isn’t he? What was he thinking, loading the responsibility of caring for an infant on you when you’re still injured. I have to confess, you look natural with a child. Perhaps, maybe we can have one to call our own. Liz, keep believing."

“Like hell.” Red mumbled as he read the latest letter. If anyone was going to get her pregnant—

Red jerked in his chair, unsure where the hell that thought even came from.

He chastised himself severely for such a lapse. But filed it for the moment, more important issues at hand.

He thought of her the way a man thought about a woman, yes. And most definitely wanted to share his bed with her, more intimately than he all ready was, granted.

That little moment yesterday, when he had kissed her goodbye... when she’d been playing with Sam. That was a sweet memory that he found most palatable.

But that... getting her pregnant, had come completely out of left field.

It had never once crossed his mind. Perhaps it was a hold over from baby Sam or it could have been that fucking last line of the letter he now reread.

The thought of this person touching her, agitated him. This whole business was aggravating him, truth be told.

Plus, he was still upset that he had not been informed that Liz was going to visit the Blacksite.

Had he known, he would have taken the proper precautions and in doing so, perhaps he would have been able to ferret out this creepy son-of-a-bitch who was obviously watching her every move.

Every day he walked into the Blacksite, he felt out of sorts, something was off. There was nothing concrete to which he could apply his theory.

Which was pissing him off, royally. He had pinpointed Carver so easily that night... he had felt the danger, sensing the brush of death.

He and Death were old friends by now.

Most people feared that Entity. There were times in the past, Red welcomed it like a source of comfort. The man pulled his thoughts back to the present determinedly.

He was looking right past this stalker which was so unlike him. The fact that Elizabeth would most likely pay for his distraction, was totally unacceptable.

“You rang?” Silas popped his head around the door, interrupting his wool-gathering “Oh, you got another one?” He gestured to the paper in Red’s hand, his tone off-handedly neutral.

“She did and it mentions her arrival at the Blacksite and some other interesting little tidbits.” Red frowned, tossing the sheet over. “Did you notice anybody lurking about?”

“No, I didn’t.” the large man scanned the neatly typed print, before returning his attention. “But then, I was too worried about you cutting my balls off for aiding and abetting her.”

“Not this time.” Red snorted lightly. “But I have a long memory.”

“So, you want to increase her security?” Silas asked politely, glad to pass over the other subject.

“I want every building in at least a block radius to be manned.” Red handed over an updated photo of Tom taken by Dembe the last time they saw him. “The Blacksite is to be considered a hot spot.”

Silas scanned the photo, then let it dangle loosely from his fingertips. “And if we find our little double agent?”

“I want the bastard caught and held... so I can beat the hell out of him.”

“No it won’t, because there aren’t going to be anymore of these unexpected side trips like the one you two made.” Red lifted a cold glance.

“When she wants to do something–”

“She can wait.” the words held a finality.

The guard was visibly impressed. “Oh, she can wait.” Silas tone said it all. “And she’ll go for that?” he smirked. “And you are the one who is going to deliver this news?”

“I’m going to have a talk with her, make her understand why this needs to be done.” Red went back to shuffling the mail on his desk. “She may disregard her safety, but she won’t yours. Besides these letters scare her.”

Red returned the latter to his files.

“It’s nice to be so highly thought of...” Silas scratched his cheek slowly, trying desperately to keep his grin under wraps.

“It’s that high regard that she has for you, that’s keeping your people and you... alive.”

A loud crash interrupted the conversation.

Both men rushed from the room, even before they heard a muffled shriek coming from down the corridor.

Red smacked the door open to the bedroom, getting a big surprise when the door swung heavily back, almost hitting him directly in the face.

He poked his head quickly around, noting a heavy potted plant blocking the entrance.

Silas had pulled up short, almost crashing into the man’s bulk.

Red put his entire frame against the object, pushing past the obstacle. His heart skipped a beat, sensing the woman was safe and unharmed... for the moment.

But all hell was breaking loose in the room.

Hudson had somehow gotten into the area, which was normally not allowed for one reason and one reason only.

Keres the cat stood on the bed, haunches lifted, head down, attack mode in progress.

The dog pranced happily back and forth at the foot of the bed, squishing Elizabeth’s feet, having the time of his life, making the cat’s life more than miserable.

Red noticed under the covers, a hunched form giggling and moving every which way, in order to avoid the commotion taking place directly over her.

“Help...” Elizabeth giggled deliriously, her voice muffled under the blankets.

Hudson dove forward, almost but not quite reaching the cat... who in retaliation, scratched the hell out of the poor dog’s nose.

Hudson whimpered momentarily but soon enough regained his momentum, his agenda resumed... which was, in Red’s humble opinion, to kill the cat.

While the man could sympathize, the shambles of the room was something he simply was not going to ignore.

Silas’ throaty laughter coming from behind him, reminded Red of his mission.

“Son of a...” Red grumbled, stalking over to the bed, swatting at the rowdy animals, “get out of here, you little bastards.”

Keres jumped, avoiding the large hand, running smack into Liz’s head, which had poked out momentarily from her hiding spot.

The woman gleefully laughed, resuming her former position.

Missing the cat by inches, Hudson ran into the same spot except he decided to sit and rest a spell.

Liz’s laughter increased as she staunchly attempted to remove the dog’s butt from her blanket... covered face. Which only made Silas double over, joining in the fun and melee.

“Some fucking bodyguard you are.” Red grumbled, wrangling the cat, avoiding yet another deep scratch on his forearms. “Take this fucking thing and drown it in the lake.”

“We don’t have a lake, boss.”

“Then fucking find one.”

Silas took the cat good naturedly, “Come on poor baby.” he crooned softly. “Let’s get you away from this grumpy old bastard.”

“Excuse me?” Red’s tone dripped ice.

“Let’s get’s you away from this understandably disgruntled gentleman.” Silas corrected silkily.

“Hudson!” Dembe stepped through shambles, calmly beckoning the dog.

Hudson snapped to attention, running over Liz to get to Dembe which increased the muffled giggling even more so.

Red walked over, holding the door ajar, his look saying it all.

The room was hastily vacated of both human and beast. The man released a heavy sigh, closing the door firmly, before finally unearthing the amused woman under the blankets.

Red glanced at her stalwartly, sitting next to the woman, before smoothing the disheveled hair from her face. He smiled affectionately at her infectious giggle.

“Nice nap?” he enquired.

Red had visited the Blacksite, later that afternoon. It had been a productive operation. The bottom line being, all the children including baby Sam, were safe and sound after such a harrowing interruption in their young lives.

Red picked up his hat, ready to take his leave but was waylaid by the computer specialist.

“Mr... uh... Reddington.” Aram stuttered as he normally did when addressing the imposing man.

“Yes, Aram?” he answered pleasantly.

“The ballistics came back from that bullet you gave me and uhm...”

“Yes...” Red drawled patiently.

“It was government issue.”

“Whose weapon?” was the question of the day.

“Uh, that they aren’t sure of, uh, sir.”

“Why not?” Red was fast losing patience.

“Well, they had it narrowed down to the type of weapon, well, really the—“ “Aram.”

“The bullet’s gone missing.”

“From here?” Red pointed, pointedly.

“Well, no. They don’t think so anyway.” the young man had begun to sweat. “It, along with some other evidence, was being transported to the lab to help with the backlog and sometime between here and there - it vanished.”

“Was that the only item to go missing?”

“Uh...” Aram turned to his desk, rifling through papers until he pulled out the one he wanted. Handing the sheet to Red, he pointed to it. “As you can see, there were quite a few things missing from the manifest pertaining to the raid you went on with Agents Navabi and Ressler.”

Red scanned the sheet, finding the statement to be true.

So it could have been O’Brien’s men tainting the evidence against their boss. It could have been an oversight, a large one and not unusual when dealing with the government. It could have been Tom, being the sly weasel he was very adept at being.

Or they had a rat in their midst.

Any of the options were plausible.

It was also plausible that while it had been government issue, it could have been a case of friendly fire, all most gone horribly awry.

In one of the letters, the writer had taken credit for the shot in the back. This guy was a highly delusional man, needing accolades for a shot he probably hadn’t actually delivered.

The stalker was obviously trying to impress Elizabeth, though it had failed to kill Reddington.

That the man had supposedly taken the opportunity in her honor, may be enough to feed his twisted ego.

Too many questions and not one damn answer. Not even a hint of one, left Red annoyed.

“What about the copies of the data they did get off the round?”

“It was on the truck.” Aram said, rolling his eyes at the stupidity.

Red shook his head disgustedly, “Thank you, Aram.”

He didn’t know why he bothered.

These people routinely took the ‘I’ out of FBI.

His gut had said to take the bullet to his own people for analysis, but had the round been a Fed’s, Cooper would have to be involved at some point. So he decided to cut out the middle man and cut to the chase.

A decision he was very much regretting at this point.

In trying to please Lizzy, by doing things by the book, he had lost a lead to her stalker. And it pissed him off to no end.

He clung to the notion that it could have been a friendly fire incident.

It had been rather chaotic that night. The shot could have come from a couple dozen agents he’d come to know in his time here... or even Ressler’s weapon. It would have been an accident.

Something he’d hang over Donald’s head until the end of time, but written off and forgotten.

But what if it hadn’t been?

Granted, he knew of a dozen places where you could get a Fed issued gun. It wasn’t inconceivable that one of O’Brian’s men had tapped him.

But then again, one of them wouldn’t be writing to Elizabeth boasting of the fact.

And if what the letter said was true. That man, a man with a government issued weapon, had purposefully shot him in the back with the intent to kill.

Red scanned the room and the Agents it held, vowing to listen to his own gut from then on.

“Mr. Holbrook is here.” Silas informed over the communication device... “I'm sorry.”

“Well, excuse me!” Liz smiled widely at Francis’ rejoinder. “What am I around here? A fucking leper?!”

She rolled up off the yoga mat, grabbing her own radio. “Stop being mean Silas. Let him in.”

“Red here?” the young man came around the corner, jauntily flipping off the guard who had been so ‘mean’ to him.

Elizabeth ignored Silas’ hearty laugh, “He went out to run an errand, but I expect he won’t be long, if you’d like to wait.” she pointed to a chair. The young man collapsed in the chair, groaning.

“Well you look rough.” she observed.

“Maybe, but I’m still pretty.” he gave a lopsided grin. “Your fiancé really rocked the boat, and while it’s been enjoyable watching everyone scrambling,” he nodded agreeably, “one must remember that I have to have eight full hours of beauty sleep if I want to keep looking as good as I do... and really, who does not want that?” he was confused.

“Is it calming down any?” she wanted to get things back on track.

“Not particularly. But Red was right, it’s shaken things up pretty good,” he brightened considerably, “in fact, it might have helped the business. No matter what anyone says.”

“I don’t understand?”

“You know when the holidays come along and production slows?” She nodded, knowing even at the Blacksite, they all hoped, that whatever case came in, was cut and dry, little paperwork. If only for the promise of time off.

“Well, it’s like we’ve been on some extended holiday. It was just a bit... stagnant.” he corrected sagely. “Boring, I guess.”
“And now it’s not?”

“No, it certainly isn’t.” he brightened again. “I haven’t seen the routes or production of supply running so smoothly in a long time.”

“But you implied people are not happy?” Liz was puzzled.

“Some of the older cronies are pissed. Anne, definitely.” he rubbed his hands together gleefully. “They are set in their ways, which is fine, but they have to understand supply and demand are at an all time high.” he motioned slightly. “And if no one is working to fulfill their end of the deal... people are going to pay for it with their lives.”

She still didn’t quite understand the process, but maybe it didn’t matter. Francis obviously didn’t mind explaining until she got it.

“Back in Capone’s day, if someone in New York wanted a shipment of liquor, it was just accepted that it would take two days for delivery. Live with it.” he elucidated. “The truck could only go so fast with contraband on board and the drive was long.” he rolled his eyes for such a system. “Now, with the advent of jets, faster ships, and what not. Two day delivery just isn’t acceptable on most supply.”

The woman listened intently, truly interested.

“Fed Ex has nothing on Red.” the man crossed his arms leisurely. “He freaks me out sometimes,” again, he nodded sagely. “I think on purpose.”

“What do you mean?” She laughed.

“I was in Canada a year ago and needed a cache of weapons, pronto.” he motioned with one hand. Elizabeth realized the man spoke volumes with his hands.

“I told Red as much over the four minute phone call I had with him and by the time I was crawling into the back seat of the car, bending over to kiss my ass goodbye... “the man frowned hard at the remembrance, “I got word that my cargo was on it’s way to the meeting place... damn show off.”

The conversation was momentarily interrupted as the still beautiful woman entered the area unannounced as was Nora’s way these days. Nora now felt comfortable in her surroundings and with these people.

Elizabeth beseeched the older woman forward.

“Oh, I’m sorry Mr. Holbrook.” Nora smiled, seeing the man, hesitating visibly to interrupt anything important.

“Nora, my love.” Francis immediately stood, closing the space between them, taking the woman’s hand in his warm palm. His thumb rubbed hers in an overly familiar fashion, his eyes suggestively running the length of her attractive figure.

“How many times have I told you...” he scolded superficially, lifting the warm hand to his lips.

The woman permitted such familiarity, her eyes filled with a gentle humor. “Francis,” she corrected herself immediately, “I see you are just in time for lunch.”

“Oh, goodness.” Francis laid his hand over his chest in mock surprise, then looked wide eyed at Liz. “Am I?”
Liz exchanged prudent glances with her cook. “Gee Francis, would you like to stay for lunch?”

“Well, now. I wouldn’t want to intrude.” he returned his attention immediately to the other woman, whose hand he still held captive.

“Yeah, I’m sure.” Liz hobbled forward awkwardly, halting when no assistance was offered. “Francis?” she enquired pleasantly.

The man’s attention was still riveted, “Yeah?” he answered offhandedly, again lifting Nora’s hand to his waiting lips.

“You want to help me with the crutches here?” Liz asked civilly.

The man sighed heavily, reluctantly releasing his prey. “Oh when are you going to get better?” he asked peevishly.

Walking over, he bent unceremoniously, lifting the startled Elizabeth over his shoulder. “Which way Nora, my love?” he asked solicitously.

Elizabeth had squealed her shock before hitting the man’s shoulder playfully. “Put me down, you idiot.”

Francis sniffed at the delicious aroma filling the air, ignoring Liz all together.

“Yes, you idiot...” Red’s voice, laced with annoyance, also suddenly filled the air.

Elizabeth compressed her lips tightly to conceal her need to laugh right in Francis’ face. She waited patiently now, for the fireworks to begin.

“...Put... her... down.” Reddington finished frostily.

“Oh like this is my fault.” Francis was instantly on the defensive. “Where is her cart... do you know where? I’ll tell you where!” he sat Elizabeth down decidedly, steadying her in the process, his attention focused entirely on Red Reddington.

“Those guards you hired, especially that one, that looks like an overgrown gorilla...” the young man warmed to his tale, “they have the cart. And do you know what they’re doing with it? No, you don’t know...” it was smugly declared, “they are putting on stickers that say obscene things that a person can do when alone in the privacy of their own room.” He sought comfort in Nora’s understanding eyes. “What kind of people do that?”

Nora shook her head sadly, in empathy.

Red walked over, handing Elizabeth her crutches. “Do you have a death wish?”

“My psychiatrist thinks so, yes.” Francis shrugged carelessly. “Was there a point to the question?” the man was truly at a loss.

Liz patted Red’s shoulder sympathetically. “I think you’re going to lose this one, honey.” she sympathized. The endearment alone served to nullify Red’s mood.

“Yeah, and anyway, you’re in the way here.” Francis griped, “lunch is ready.” he navigated himself around Red, walking purposefully into the dining room.

Red bit the inner part of his jaw, his fingers drumming slowly along the tightening muscles of his thigh. But in the end, he let it go, to Liz’s great amusement.
Francis called over his shoulder, a perplexed look on his face. “Did you guys see that woman on the news today?” he queried. “They found her wandering around some State Park in New Jersey... spouting off about someone kidnaping her and leaving her stranded.”

Red glanced away, his expression blank.

“The idiot... all she had to do was turn around and look at the lights of the city.” he pulled an endearing grimace. “How do you get ‘lost’ in New Jersey?”

“I did see her, actually.” she nodded conversationally. “She looked so familiar for some reason.” she sought Red out for some sort of confirmation.

“Maybe she just had that kind of face.” Red shrugged off the topic. “Lunch is getting cold.”

It was about two hours after lunch before Liz saw the two men again. Francis was on his way out and Red seemed in a good enough humor now.

“Again, thanks for lunch.”  Francis said, tapping the door with his fingers, paused to exit. “What time is dinner?” he asked innocently.

Red closed the door in his face. Liz chided such an action. “Red! Why did you do that?”

But on the other side of the door, she had heard laughter, “So, like seven?” the young man obviously could not resist the taunt, before she heard retreating footsteps and more laughter.

“How long had he been here?” Red asked, watching the woman’s face carefully.

“Oh, I guess about thirty minutes before you came home. Why?”

“No reason, just wondering.” Red enquired. “Did you have a nice visit?”

“I did actually. He helped me understand how your business works.” she rolled up her yoga mat, stowing it under the couch. “It was interesting.”

A discrete knock interrupted anything more he would have asked. Red opened the door, expecting to find Francis on the other side.

Joe sat there patiently, having driven Liz’s cart from the garage.

“Didn’t mean to interrupt, boss. Just wanted to get your cart back to you.” the man arose, motioning accordingly.

“What was wrong with it?” Red enquired.

“Battery connection was fried.” Joe reported. “New battery and she was as good as new.” It was pronounced proudly.

Red’s eyes narrowed at the man, for he had been searching the cart meticulously for some seconds now. “And this?” he pointed out the newly acquired bumper sticker which read:

I have sex daily, I mean dyslexia, Fcuk!

Joe looked innocently about, shrugging his massive shoulders. “I don’t know nothin’ boss.”

Red just stared at him.
The man became a little uneasy. “It was Silas, boss.”

Red dropped his head slightly, his look one of amazement.

“Okay! So I caved.” Joe muttered, unhappy with himself, clearly. “I don’t want to lose my balls.”

“Thank you, Joe.” Liz called out after the quickly retreating man.

“Anything going on at the Post Office?” she quickly changed the subject, watching the man guide the cart into the room. She tried not to notice the new bumper sticker. She tried very hard.

Red shrugged, “Still the same tension.” he walked over, taking the seat beside her. “Samar can be wickedly funny when she cuts you off at the knees.”

“So Moore is still being a jerk?” Liz smiled.

“I don’t think he knows how to be anything other than that,” Red surmised, “with women especially.”

“So, he’s old school, ‘boys’ only’, mentality.” Liz shrugged. “They were at Quantico. If you can’t handle them, you can’t handle the bad guys you come up against.” How many times had she been confronted with such men. “She’ll be fine.”

“Oh, she’s more than fine.” Red reassured. “I think she’s starting to enjoy knocking him down, every chance she gets, more than she thought she would.”

“And he doesn’t give it back to her?”

“He tries, but fails miserably.” Red glanced around for a cigar, finding none. “As I said, she can be quite cutting, when she wants to be.” he settled back accepting his lot in life. “It’s like watching a live action play, unfolding right in front of me. I even spontaneously applauded her quick wit a time or two.”

“I’m sorry I’m missing it.” she winced, glancing critically down at her person.

“What’s wrong?”

“I feel grungy.” she suddenly did. Perhaps it was the fact that Red spoke so highly of Samar. Who really was a beautiful woman and now the man had evidently noted the dark beauty’s other virtues as well.

“Have a sponge bath.” he suggested.

“You know what, I think I will.” she pushed off the couch, moving to her cart, disappearing from the room.

He sat in the quiet of the room, thinking back over the last few hours.

To the outside world, to Francis, she was his fiancée. But that didn’t mean things didn’t change, even in his world.

Liz had seemed perfectly comfortable in the younger man’s company earlier, finding amusement in Francis’ quick wit and charm, as most women did.
They even looked good together. Both young, energetic, eager. Excited still by the world around them.

There was something going on there between the two of them, an easiness...a camaraderie, that had taken Red two years of careful handling and patience to achieve. Francis had managed the same status quo in two short visits.

They might not see it yet, but Red did.

While it might be... awkward for a while, he couldn’t and wouldn’t begrudge her or even Francis a chance at something vital, if it came down to it.

They both deserved happiness, even if it meant they were together to do it and Red was left out in the cold. It was not as if it was a place he was unfamiliar with.

He’d watch and act accordingly, no matter how much it hurt.
April 25-27

Elizabeth Keen awoke to the sound of a terrible hacking cough.

She sat up immediately, seeking the source in the darkened room.

“Red, are you okay?” She enquired instantly, her voice allowing her concern. She snatched a magazine off her bedside table, frantically fanning the man’s face.

With the cool air, the coughing fit eased, finally. “I’m all right.” it was croaked, the man’s voice more hoarse than normal.

Liz moved closer, shocked to feel the heat radiating off his pale skin before she even touched him.

“Uhh, no,” she corrected impetuously, “you’re not.” her cool palm felt wonderful on the man’s feverish flesh. “You’re burning up.”

She hastily rolled out of bed, making her way to the bathroom, coming back a minute later with a couple of damp cloths.

Reaching out, he stopped her from touching him. “Don’t. You’ll catch–” he broke off, coughing harshly.

“What ever.” She rolled her eyes, wiping his face with the cold cloth. She gently pushed him back into the headboard he had been leaning against.

His eyes slid shut, relaxing under the gentle touch and cooling relief.

“I told you this would happen.” She scolded, running the cloth over his cheeks.

“It’s just a cold.” he croaked.

“That’s been exacerbated by exhaustion.” she tried to keep the vexation from her tone. “I won’t be the least bit surprised, if I find that Dembe has contracted this stuff too.” she made up her mind. “You’re taking a couple days off.”

“I’m fine Lizzy.” He coughed fitfully, groaning his misery when the episode passed.

“No, you aren’t!” her tone was a little sharper now. “You’ve been running non-stop, pushing your body and do I have to remind you, that you were shot, twice... and didn’t even take time to recuperate.” she sat her features. “You need to rest.”

“They were just flesh wounds.” he dismissed, sneezing spasmodically.

“There was a hole in your thigh.” Liz gritted her teeth, feeling his face again, checking for the intensity of the fever. “You should take a lukewarm shower.”
There was a soft knock on the door. Red, himself, bid ‘enter’.

Dembe stuck his head around the door, phone in hand. Reddington beckoned him forward.

Elizabeth held out her own hand, demanding the object.

“Go, now.” She pointed to the bathroom.

Dembe stepped forward, really looking at his employer and friend. “You are sick.”

“That’s been established, yes.” Red groaned. Dembe entered the room further, his instincts to assist the man.

“Damn, I’m sore.” Red straightened his back, wincing from the pain, every muscle in his body rebelling against such an unwise move.

Elizabeth heard whoever was on the other end of the line speaking, bringing the phone to her ear as she watched Dembe enter the bathroom with Red.

“Red can’t come to the phone right now, may I help you?” her brows knitted together at the rather impolite rejoinder. “I’m his fiancée, why?” she listened patiently, then not so much so for the tone had turned more acerbic in nature.

“I don’t care who you are. I don’t care what you need.” she could be just as blunt. “If you can’t handle anything without Red fixing it for you, I’m sure he can fill your position when he’s back in three days.” her mouth fell slightly agape at the downright rude reply.

“Because I want him in my bed for more than a night at a time, not that it’s any of your damn business.”

She shut the phone down forcefully, listening to Red hacking his lungs out in the shower. She started as the phone rang again.

“What?” She snarled in the phone, relaxing slightly, recognizing this voice.

“Ressler. No, he can’t come to the phone.” she half heartedly listened, more interested in the sound of Red’s distress. “Why does everybody keep questioning me?” her temper flared.

“You’re a damned FBI Agent, investigate the lead!” she lost patience. “Listen to me and listen well... Red is taking the next three days off. When I end this call,” she explained calmly, “I’m shutting the phone down, so you better get your shit together because as of right now, you’re on your own!”

She pressed the button until the system shut down completely. Red came out of the other room in a comfortable shirt and pants. The man was pale and had a pasty pallor. His gait was slow, as if he measured each step carefully.

“Lizzy, all I really need is a couple hours re--” He broke off, coughing again.

“Get in that damn bed right now, Red Reddington.”

He got on the bed, collapsing into it, grinning his amusement.

“You’re hot when you’re cranky.” Red smiled sleepily up at the woman, before closing his eyes.

Liz pulled the blankets up around him, before turning on Dembe, her expression saying it all.
He rose his hands in self defense, grinning as well.

“You get some rest, too.”

Dembe bowed his head in deference, heading for the door. “Yes, ma’am.”

Liz spent the entire night, caring for Red. Wiping him down with cool cloths, fetching ice packs and medicines... anything to make him more comfortable.

She awoke first with a start, from a fitful half sleep. She sought out the man, gently caressing his forehead with her lips. He had cooled some, she was pleased to note.

He appeared completely exhausted, however.

She flipped on the overhead fan, hoping it would help the fever some, before heading off to dress for the day.

Red’s eyes opened slowly, staring after the woman until the door shut behind her. His mouth pulled at the corner, before he turned on his side and dozed a bit.

Elizabeth made her way down to the dining area after having ascertained that Red was sleeping still.

She didn’t feel much like eating, for she was very worried about the man. He had passed a restless night and clearly felt terrible.

“Good morning, Miss Elizabeth.” Elizabeth smiled at the woman warmly, “How are you today?”

“Oh, I’m pretty good.” Liz acknowledged the older woman, glancing at the plate Nora placed before her. She inhaled the delicious scent. “And yourself?”

“I’m well. Now, young lady” Nora stepped back, clasping her hands primly before her. “What is on our menu today?”

“Well, actually. Mr. Reddington is home sick.” Liz informed readily. “I was wondering what would make him feel better? Any suggestions?”

“My long shot coming in at Belmont.” Red’s voice was rough and gravely.

“Oh, sure.” Liz huffed, turning slightly in her seat as the man entered to her left. “Like that’s going to happen... why aren’t you in bed? You sound terrible.” Although secretly, had circumstances been different, the woman would have thought the husky quality to his tone was quite sexy.

Nora frowned her concern, pulling out a chair for Red. “I have to agree with your lady there, you sound horrible.” She rushed to set a bountiful breakfast before the man. “Now, you eat up and we’ll get you feeling better in no time.”

Red frowned hard, at the solicitous ‘pat’ the woman offered on his shoulder.

Liz chuckled for his mood. “You have to try to eat something, Red.” she picked up her own fork as incentive.

Red did just that, though not tasting very much.
Nora sat a cup of steaming tea to his right and cold juice to his left.

He looked at her questioningly, “Where’s my coffee?”

“Oh, sir.” the woman tsked. “Coffee is the worst thing for your cough.”

Both Liz and Nora looked at him pityingly.

“Give me my damn coffee.” he insisted.

Liz lifted apologetic eyes to the other woman. “He’s a terrible patient.”

“I had two boys and a husband, I’m used to it.” Nora nodded knowingly. “Big babies, all of them.”

“I’m not a terrible patient, I just want my coffee.” Red’s voice was a little perturbed. “Who do I have to kill to get it?”

Liz reached over, patting his hand consolingly. “We’re just trying to make you feel better.” her tone hardened a bit as did her expression. “Besides, you don’t need the damned caffeine... obviously.”

Red folded his arms over his chest, his expression set.

“Please, Red. You really have to eat more.” she crinkled her nose. “For me?” she tried another tactic seeing the first was not working.

Dropping her hand to his fork, she stabbed a chunk of the food then held it out, waiting for him to take it.

Red’s eyes narrowed slightly, the blood shot orbs holding hers stubbornly.

“You want me to make an airplane sound, like I did for Sam?” She asked pleasantly.

The man’s tongue flicked the inside of his cheek, as the humor of the situation hit him, his eyes softening.

He reluctantly conceded victory, taking his fork back with but one lethal stare for both females.

He looked at the plate for a long moment, then lifted a small bite to his mouth.

“Drink your juice, dear.” Liz said, smiling brightly.

After breakfast, the man wanted to dress for the day.

“After my shower,” he walked ahead of her, his gait lacking his usual swagger, “I’ll need a few hours out of the house.” He held out his hand. “Where’s my phone?”

“I’m not giving it to you.” the woman informed him blithely.

“Lizzy...” his tone chilled a bit.
“Red, if you don’t get back in that bed and take the day off,” she pulled alongside of him, staring up at the set features stubbornly, “I swear, I’ll call Mr. Kaplan and have her come sedate your ass!”

With that said, the woman zoomed her cart down the corridor, disappearing rapidly into their bedroom.

The man shook his head, slightly befuddled and he did not know, if it was from the woman’s actions or his present condition. He had to admit, if only to himself... he felt like hell warmed over.

He reluctantly followed her lead, glancing around the empty room when he arrived.

The woman came out of the bathroom, her cart loaded with paraphernalia.

“What are you doing?” He half laughed, intrigued.

The woman stuck a thermometer in his mouth, silencing any sort of protest he might think to make.

He stared down at her, his glassy eyes looking at her fondly. She ignored the effort, putting a hand under his chin, keeping his mouth shut, holding the thermometer in place until it beeped.

“See! It’s one hundred and one degrees.” She held it up for him to see.

“I’ve been worse, Lizzy.”

“Oh my God!” the frustration was palpable. “Get in that bed!” She pushed his shoulder, turning him around. “Go...” she shooed him, hopping right behind him, her cart all but forgotten.

He went to the other side of the bed, grabbing his pillow and book... casting her an annoyed glance.

“What are you doing?” Liz interrogated.

“Well, Agent Keen...” the man held his smile, “if I’m going to stay here, I should be in one of the other rooms so you don’t–”

“Red, I’m about to knee cap you.” she threw back the covers angrily. “Get in this bed, right this minute!”

Red glanced at the bed, then back to his little Nurse Ratchet. He reluctantly retraced his steps, at length settling into the comfort provided.

“Now shut up and read your damn book.” She growled, throwing the blankets back over him before handing him some pills and water. “Take these.”

Red coughed quietly, “The Warden at Sing-Sing has nothing on you.” but he took the offered drugs and water, downing the pills.

“Should I check under your tongue to make sure you took them?” she narrowed her eyes.

“I took them, you little despot.” he assured, before relaxing back into the pillows, at length, opening the book.

She hopped around to the other side of the bed, huffily tossing her laptop onto the soft coverlet before climbing up herself. Liz threw him a nondescript glare.

Red leafed through his book, not seeing any of the print. He was inwardly amused and after all, it was only one day.
He’d do as she wished to make her happy. And truthfully... he really did feel like shit.

They were both silent for some time, comfortable enough to enjoy their separate activities. Red’s interest was taken from his reading, he glanced over at a disgruntled bed partner.

He sat his book on his lap, asking the rhetorical question. “What?”

“Show me.” He leaned over, staring at the screen on her lap. “Good God...” he winced at the hideous phot. “What is hell is that? French provincial meets the Seventies?”

“You’re just being kind.” Liz was certain. “‘Ugly ass bathroom’ describes it well enough.”

He chuckled, then coughed, he held a staying hand. “You’re going to get sick.” The woman had instinctively slid closer.

“We’ve been sharing this bed for a while now, if I have it, I have it.” She made herself comfortable against him. “What do you think of this one.” she clicked another image.

“Is it a double-wide?” he quipped.

“You’re such a snob.” she moved on to another, interested to see inside the ones he would chose.

Twelve houses later, he tapped the screen. “Now, what’s wrong with that one?”

“Uh, it’s a hundred thousand over my price range.”

“There is nothing outside of your price range, because you don’t have a price range.”

“Gee, I’m pretty sure that there was a dollar limit that I was given when you sold my house.”

“If you find something and love it,” he was adamant. “I don’t care how much it is, you’re going to get it.”

“Red, I can find something well under my price range and fix it up.” an idea occurred to her. “I don’t need a lot. It’s just me, really.” She tilted her head, thinking. “Actually, if I do this right, I can use the rest of the money to pay off my credit card debt.”

“About that...”

Liz let her head fall back into the pillow, all ready knowing where this was going. “You paid them all off, didn’t you?”

“I did, yes.” he freely admitted. “It was just one less thing to worry about.”

“Either way, I can still find something cute and make it mine. All within my budget.”

“Aren’t you tired of settling, Lizzy.” His tone held a tinge of discouragement. “Find something that speaks to you, that makes you happy. And if it’s beyond your “price range”, he mockingly quoted with his fingers, “let me help you.”

She just kept her mouth shut, knowing arguing with him was pointless. She had one thing in mind, he had another. There had to be a compromise in there somewhere.

And why there needed to be one at all, confused her.
It was her house, her money. But even with that thought in mind, she would still try. She’d take suggestions on security and what not too, if only to show him, she did appreciate his input.

They looked a little bit more, when she realized he had gone quiet.

She looked over, smiling warmly, finding Red had nodded off. He appeared quite comfortable too, if his peaceful expression and even breathing meant anything.

She busied herself with the computer, continuing her search.

She heard a familiar sound, hastily setting aside the computer. She reached even more hastily for Red’s arm.

“Don’t you dare shoot my cook.” she whispered harshly.

“Are you ready for lunch?” the cheerful voice echoed from outside the door.

“That would be lovely.” Liz forced a brightness to her reply.

She felt the man’s arm relax, hearing the ‘click’ of his automatic weapon as the safety was pushed back on.

“We will be in shortl...”

“Now, you stay right there.” Nora directed breezily, walking away. “I’ll bring it to you.”

“You really have to set up a camera in the hall.” Liz suggested strongly.

“It wouldn’t be half as much fun.” Red’s reply was muffled by the pillows.

A minute later, Dembe and Nora arrived, carrying trays laden down with food. Nora set up the small private table across the way, by the large picture windows.

The sun was shining today, the weather was wonderful. She thought it might brighten the man’s spirit.

Red thanked both participants for their kindness. Lizzy made her way to the table.

She looked over the delicious array, seating herself, then realized her companion had not yet joined her. She cast a quizzical glance his way.

“I’m waiting for an early release, Warden.” he quipped, clearly pleased with himself.

“How does solitary confinement, hit ‘cha, jailbird.” she lifted noble brows.

Red shrugged mentally, having enjoyed the exchange. He lifted his weary body, trudging over to his self appointed keeper.

Red blinked the hazy fog from his eyes trying to focus on the surrounding area. Lizzy stared down at the man, her face a mask of concern. She wiped him gently with cold wet cloths.

“You temperature spiked.” she answered the unasked question. “You think you can get some more pills down?"

He inhaled shakily, nodding.

She disappeared from sight, but was back seconds later, offering him more drugs and water.

He sat up, shivering with the intense fever. Liz placed a wrap about his shoulders, her lips grazing his cheek.

Red leaned into the touch, both wanting and needing the attention. She moved to his forehead, laying her lips against his fevered brow. She drew back, her concern deepening.

“You feel hotter than before.” the back of her hand wavered gently across his forehead, lingering slightly.

He dutifully took the other pill, his forehead falling weakly to her shoulder for support. His breathing was short and labored.

“How are we going to get this fever down?” she fretted, her fingers trailing soothingly against his head. “You think you can shower?”

“Yes.”

He leaned back into her, enjoying the light massage as she rubbed his back absently.

He was hot, trembling with fever... and so quiet. When he’d answered her, his voice was weakened, shaky.

She had never seen Red Reddington so vulnerable before.

He was usually so animated, even when wounded. You could shoot the man and he waved it off, making a smart ass remark.

But now, he leaned against her silently, his muscles shaking with exhaustion.

This was not good.

She reached for the radio, calling for assistance.

It only took seconds but it seemed hours before Joe pushed through the door, coming to her aide.

“What’s the problem?” he looked his boss over, frowning at the unresponsive man.

“Elizabeth?” Dembe had followed the guard, having heard the call for help.

“Dembe, he’s burning up.” Liz’s voice was laced with anxiety, her eyes beseeching the men for help.

The large man came to their side, grasping Red’s arm, frowning at the heat coming from Red’s body.

“Start the bath.” Dembe directed the other guard.

Liz backed away, noting Red’s shaking had intensified without her support.

Dembe grasped the man around the torso, sliding his slack frame from the bed.

Both men maneuvered Red to the bathroom, lowering him into the half full tub.
“Should we call Kaplan?” she wished desperately to follow her instincts.

“Let’s see what this does,” the large man suggested. “If his fever breaks, we will be fine.”

Both men methodically doused Red in the lukewarm water. Any attempt at communication failed to garner a response.

“Has he ever been this bad before?” she paced restlessly about the large space, watching the proceeding, feeling utterly helpless.

“I have seen worse.” Dembe’s quiet voice was somehow reassuring.

“You think he has an infection?” which was what she was most concerned about.

“No.” Dembe assured. “There was a particularly nasty virus going around Europe while we were there.” The man continued his efforts to cool his friend’s body. “He may have contracted it... it only lasts forty eight hours.”

“Why don’t you have it?”

“My exposure was limited.” he explained patiently. “Raymond did more face to face than I.”

“Cold...” the man in the tub muttered quietly.

“Red?” Liz hastened to the man’s side. “You want us to call Mr. Kaplan?”

“Already feel like shit.” he groaned miserably. “Don’t make it worse, please.”

She smiled at the man, brushing his face gently, “You big baby.”

“I’m cold.” he repeated.

Liz stuck the thermometer in his mouth, waiting. “It’s ninety nine, now.” she nodded at Dembe.

Red pushed up slightly, then stopped when Liz sat her hand on his shoulder.

“I can do it.” he snapped.

The two men ignored the ‘suggestion’, hooking his arms and legs, sitting him on the side of the tub.

“I’ll get him something dry.” Liz hobbled to the closet, picking out one of Red’s favorite lounge clothes.

Red’s head swirled slowly, as he mumbled something indistinguishable to Dembe.

Joe lay some fresh towels beside the man, blocking her view momentarily. “We’ve got this, ma’am.”

He smiled pleasantly. “If you would give us a moment’s privacy.”

Liz blinked, waylaid by the request. “But–”

“We’ll get him changed.” the man, while supposedly an employee, suddenly made Elizabeth feel that her only option was to obey the recommendation.

“Thank you, you’re very kind.” he smiled softly at her to ease the rebuke and it worked.

Liz peeked around the large guard, her view totally obscured, indecisive as yet whether or not to leave Red.
"You little voyeur." Joe quirked his brow in forced amusement. "Come on now," he took her arm, guiding her gently into the bedroom, "Red wants you to rest, get warm."

She took one last look around the large man’s frame. Dembe was pulling on Red’s shirt sleeve, and then the door was unceremoniously closed in her face.

She headed for the bed, a little annoyed at the obvious brush off before stopping dead in her tracks.

"Ice packs." she turned quickly, only to stopped by her muscled guard.

"I will get the ice packs." Joe’s pleasant smile was in place. "You get in bed." he pointed behind her. "Now, go." he shooed her. "Everything is under control."

"Were you always this bossy..." she grumbled, but did as bid, "or is it hanging out with Silas?"

"I’ve always been like this." he assured. "I’ll be back in a minute. You stay out of there." he pointed towards the bath.

Elizabeth crossed her arms over her chest, sitting back into the pillows with a huff. Joe smiled down at the vexed woman, before heading for the door.

"He likes the big blue one," she called after the man, "with the felt covering."

Joe waved a dismissing hand, disappearing around the doorframe.

The master bath doors swung open, as Dembe navigated Red to the warm bed.

"Joe’s getting your ice pack." the woman rolled up on her knees, pulling the blankets back for Red. Her eyes were filled with concern.

Red nodded silently, sitting heavily. The man’s usually ramrod straight posture, was slumped over, his head bowed. He was so quiet, exhausted... so unlike the boisterous, self assured man she knew.

Everything about him bespoke of how ravaged his body was being by this insidious virus.

"Lay down Red." Liz pleaded.

Red eased back into the bed, laying down slowly, pushing the heel of his palm into his forehead.

"Dizzy?" she enquired solicitously.

"Headache." it was corrected.

Joe arrived on scene, ice pack in hand, handing it over gingerly. Liz slid the cool pack under Red’s neckline.

"Raymond." Dembe held out a pill and water.

Red rolled to his side, swallowing the pills then laid back, winded by the small activity.

"Let him rest. He will be fine tomorrow." Dembe stopped in the doorway, looking back at Liz. "If you need assistance, do not hesitate."

And with that, he shut the door behind him.

She reached, shutting the lights down, scooting close to the man, curving her body closer. Her fingers gently kneaded the fine hair by his temples, easing down to the tight muscles of his neckline.

“Can you roll to your side.” she asked, whisper soft. “I want to rub your neck.”

Red considered the consequences. She might inadvertently touch his scars.

“You don’t have to do that.” Red decided, replying quietly.

“Just...” she sighed, “let me help you.”

The man lay there debating his options before listing to his side, reluctantly giving her access.

Her hands worked miracles on the tension in his body. She was pleased at the soft sigh of relief which escaped his lips.

She massaged her thumbs into the nape of his neck, kneading the tightness.

“Too hard?” she asked quietly.

“Huh uh.” he muttered sleepily around his yawn.

It was funny that something so simplistic could bring her such joy. Red had helped her so much, in so many different ways... so to return the favor, as small as it was, and for it to be so well received, was very gratifying.

She was pleased to hear his breathing deepen minutes later. For a long moment, she continued her efforts, believing him to be asleep.

“Thank you, Lizzy...” Red’s deep voice somewhat startled her coming out of the night, as it were. “That is helping tremendously.”

She leaned forward, kissing him tenderly behind the ear, “You’re most welcome.” she whispered.

She felt horrible that he was ill, but in some way, she also felt vindicated.

Red had given so much of himself to her lately, that in this minuscule way, she felt she had repaid him just a tad.

She found she enjoyed the task. It was no burden what-so-ever.

She genuinely cared for this man. How it had come to such a state, she could not have said.

Somewhere along the line, he had become more...

At this point, she would not label any of the emotions she was feeling for Red Reddington. She did finally realize however that those emotions existed.

Red had been relaxing... truly relaxing for three days. Thanks to his little no nonsense nurse. He almost felt his old self again.

He had truly been enjoying the down time. His favorite part of the day was rapidly approaching.

He and Lizzy had established a routine of sorts. He found she enjoyed when he read aloud passages from a couple of his favorite books. They would find a secluded spot and in this instance, today... was to be the sitting room and he would do his thing and the woman appeared utterly enthralled.

Quite the ego boost, he had to admit.

It was with a light spring in his step that he journeyed to the prearranged spot now.

But Lizzy was not alone... she had a guest.

The woman sat facing the door way, her eyes closed and she was totally reclined on the couch.

Francis sat in front of her, positioned between her legs. Red could not see exactly what was taking place but whatever it was, put a serene smile on Elizabeth’s face.

Red’s first instinct was to back away and give them privacy. He hesitated, fighting against that instinct.

Liz raised her head, opening her eyes, the blueness focusing on him.

She grinned widely, motioning him forward then pointed downward.

Red inched into the room, staring over Francis’ shoulder as he came closer.

His brows rose in mock surprise, finally seeing what Francis was working on.

Where once there had been a plain white cast, there was now a plethora of color covering most of her leg in a beautiful peacock design.

“He thought I needed something.” She sniggered.

“Oh, hey Red.” Francis concentrated hard, filling in the feather he had drawn. “I didn’t hear you come in.” he sat back, critically analyzing his work. “We may have a little problem.”

“It looks okay to me.” Red tried to keep the elation from his voice. He thought the little asshole had been giving the woman oral... to say he was relieved was a great understatement.

“No, no.” he replied impatiently. “Conte has Anne.”

“Ah, damn.” Red finally understood. “All right,” his sigh was genuine, “...I’ll take care of it.”

Both men adjourned to Red’s office to begin arbitration.

After an hour of careful negotiation the problem was solved. Conte released Anne with the understanding that she would never cross his path again.

When Red hung up the phone, he groaned audibly.

“You think you made a mistake?” Francis asked.

“We’ll see in the next couple days. I probably shouldn’t have bailed her out, but she has had her uses.” Red was already beginning to second guess the nature of the problem, however. “If she screws up again, she’s on her own. I’m just hoping she’s learned her lesson.”

“I’m not holding my breath.” Francis chuckled humorlessly.

“You and Elizabeth are getting along, it seems.”

Francis glanced around hastily, searching for someone else the man might be speaking to... but the room was empty.

“You talkin’ to me?”

“Well, I’m not talking to Robert De Niro.” Red confirmed.

Francis had always prided himself on his ability to go with the flow, so in this instance... he went.

“Yeah, she’s nice. I like her.” he shrugged mentally. “Much better than Madeline. You picked a good one this time.”

“You didn’t like Madeline?” the statement had surprised Red.

“Hell no. She was evil.” the man shivered slightly. “I always expected to turn around and find a knife in my back when she was around.”

Red chuckled, “Why?”

“I don’t know, she always had that sly grin thing going on.” the man scrunched up his face in open distaste. “Like she was the cat and you were the mouse about to get pounced on, and not in a fun way.”

“But you don’t find that with Lizzy?”

“Nah, she’s laid back.” the young guy roamed the office, snooping in this thing and that. He held up a finely crafted sailboat from a shelf over by the large picture window. “Isn’t on guard, though, maybe she should be if she’s hooked up with you.”

The young man shifted a sly up and under look to his host.

“With Silas and Dembe a radio call away, she’s finally relaxing in a way she never has before.”

“Getting used to the guards, huh?” Francis examined a pocket watch meticulously. “How she can, is beyond me... Neanderthals.”

“She’s adapting to the life quickly.” Red tried to keep the pride from his voice.

“Which isn’t easy, I know.” the man put down the watch, moving onward. “Hence, one of the reasons I haven’t seriously dated anyone in... ever.”

“But you like Lizzy?” Red kept his tone carefully neutral.

“Sure, but she’s a rare type.” he picked up a metal shell casing which was one of many in a wooden container on the man’s desk. “What? You too cheap to buy news ones?”

Red let it go. Francis shrugged, continuing. “And of course, she has you to help guide her along.” it was granted. “You’ve been at this a long time, you’re a pro. Who better to help you adapt to this weird ass lifestyle?” he sighed heavily. “Maybe I’ll get lucky one day and find someone who can handle it as well as she does.”

Francis put a glass paperweight back into place. “I hope she can cook.”

“Francis, are you listening to me at all?”

The young man sat down in a chair, his face twisting in confusion. “Uh, I think so?”
“Do you like Lizzy?” Red repeated slowly.

“Well, like, sure.” the guy hated repeating himself and then something dawned on him. “Oh... wait. You mean... like her, like her?”

“...Yes.” Red’s tone was quiet.

“How can I answer this and you won’t kill me?”

“I won’t kill you, no matter what you say.” the eyes turned slightly cold. “Unless you threaten her, then you’re dead.”

Francis inhaled shakily, “Okay. I like her, but not romantically. She’s your girl, for God’s sake.”

“And if she wasn’t?”

“Is this a trick question?” he was becoming agitated. “I don’t know. I guess I could, but really I haven’t even...” He arose, his expression an earnest one. “Red, I would never move in on your girl.”

“No, you haven’t done anything wrong.” Red tilted his head slightly. “I’m just curious. Checking.” he shrugged well defined shoulders. “She’s young, your young.”

“I’m also Caucasian, like romantic dinners, horseback riding, long walks on the beach and funnily enough, the missionary position is my favorite.” The man’s speech patterns tended to run together when he was unsettled. “What the hell does that have to do with anything? Is there something wrong? Has she...”

“Made suggestive remarks about you?” Red tested the waters.

“No!” it was emphatically denied. “Has she?” Francis’ tone was definitely interested... then not. “I meant, has she cheated on you or something before?”

“No.”

“What? You’re bored with her? You don’t want her anymore and you’re looking for a new home for her? What’s going on?”

“No, nothing like that. I just saw you two together and how comfortable you were getting, and I thought I should ask.”

“What the hell for?” the kid was beside himself for such an outlook.

“I don’t know if you’ve noticed, but I am a little bit older than she.” the fact grated on the man. “I’d be an idiot if I didn’t think she might want to move on to some younger stock someday.”

“So what,” Francis squeaked, “you thought it would be me?”

“Well, I don’t see why not. You’re charming, handsome, you make her laugh.”
“You’re going to make me blush.” Francis disdained. “Red, I wonder about you sometimes. I may be those things... God knows it’s the truth.”

Red rolled his eyes at the younger man’s boasting.

“But you... you’re all that, plus some. You may be older, but you wouldn’t know it. You make us young guys look like pussies. You speak of power, experience, and stability. And don’t think she doesn’t see that.” he shook his head despairingly. “We all pale in comparison to you.”

It was true that Red did have power, experience and stability. But he had become cold and merciless to gain those qualities. He had enough blood on his hands, that the thought of touching Lizzy with them sometimes, troubled him greatly.

His Past... haunted him. And in turn, would do that same to her. Would he ever be able to tell her the truth about who he really was? What about her mother? Her father?

Would she even believe him if he did?

He had rolled those facts around in his head so many times, tried to think of the best way to deliver the truth. But without concrete proof...

It sounded outlandish in his head sometimes. And he knew it wasn’t. So who the hell knew what she would think.

“Even if I did have romantic intentions towards Liz, which I don’t,” Francis was quick to reassure,” not only because the threat of death cools my ardor,” he waved irritably, “she wouldn’t give me a second glance when you’re standing there blocking everyone else out.” he shook his head woefully. “And if you don’t see that or know that to be a fact, then you’re delusional.”

Red knew he could give Liz everything she could ever desire. He could be a better man. Because damn it, he was a good man.

He had just been caught up in this damned fiasco for so long now, all he could do was fight back. Fix what was wrong, one step at a time.

“If you haven’t seen how she lights up when you enter a room, then you’re either blind or don’t want to see it.” Francis philosophized “But I suppose, I should be flattered that you would see me as a replacement for you.”

“Yes well,” Red’s eyes glazed over with that thing he did which sent shivers down the most stout of spines, “I’m not dead yet.”

Chapter End Notes

Okay, my little readers.

My Beta... the troll... played a little joke on me.

I let Beta name some of the OC’s since I was concentrated on future chapters.

She has named one.... Daniel Courtland. She did give an option to call him Danny or Court, but has pretty much filled it all in with.... Danny.
She said: Hey, he’s a lot like you in some respects, so why not? And then she laughed maniacally.

He plays a pretty large part in the fic later and to change his name would be time consuming (and the troll knew it) but I could edit it as I go.

It is a pretty great name, I have to admit.

So should I change his name or what?
April 27

“If I don’t get out of the house, for even a little while, I’ll go crazy.” Red broke the news to anyone who was listening.

Dembe looked up from his morning paper then went back to perusing the same.

Nora stopped tidying up, smiling at her employer understandingly.

Liz was pleasantly surprised, finally sensing the man was actually, truly feeling better. “What would you like to do?” she asked amiably.

“Something normal people do.” Red had long since decided.

“And what is it that normal people do?” Liz smiled at the seriousness of his proclamation.

He pulled on his ear, thoughtfully. “What about checking out a few of those houses you’ve been searching online?”

The woman’s face masked instantly. “Maybe that’s too soon...”

“I won’t tax myself.” he replied gruffly. “We’ll just see one or two.”

Liz checked with Dembe who had secretly ‘checked’ with Mr. Kaplan throughout Red’s three day convalescence.

The woman was thrilled to see a subtle nod of approval from the large black man.

“Well, I guess...” she began uncertainly, “it would be okay... for just a few hours. I mean, if you really want?” excitement bubbled up inside her.

Red was just as pleased she had accepted his offer.

An hour later, found them on site for the first house Elizabeth had checked off for her list.

Somewhere in the process, they had picked up a small entourage.

They traversed the small winding sidewalk leading to the front entrance.

Silas looked over the small two story townhouse, his gaze a critical one. “Is this the dodgy part of town?” he wanted to know, checking out the surrounding buildings absently.

“I don’t even know what that means.” Liz told the truth.

“He’s just being snobbish.” Francis dismissed airily. “He forgets, I’ve seen his digs.” the man exchanged belligerent glances with the guard. “This is her house. We have no input... how many bedrooms does it have?” it was instantly questioned.

“Well, in case I come to stay. And of course there’s Dembe,” he reminded helpfully,” and you’ll need somewhere for security.” he added.
Liz frowned hard, looking back over her list. “He’s right, maybe three bedrooms isn’t enough?” she looked soulfully in Red’s direction. “You could just stay in with me if we could manage four, I think?” she said for his ear only.

She reworked her search parameters on her tablet, completely missing Red’s face go through a plethora of expressions.

The man was stunned, one part of him pleased as hell, she was interested in accommodating his friends, but more specifically that they continued to share a bedroom. On the other hand, pissed that she would change her own plans to do so.

“Hello, I’m Janet, the realtor.” A woman waited patiently for their arrival, immediately handing over a print out of the pertinent information concerning the house to Red, who scanned it quickly before passing it on to Liz. “I didn’t expect so many visitors today.” she gushed enthusiastically.

Not that the woman really objected, for all four men were quite handsome, each in their own way.

“If you or your husband have any questions...” The woman smiled brightly, freaking Liz out for a host of reasons. “I will be close by as you tour this lovely find.”

They all filed in orderly to the small foyer, which seemed infinitely more so by the bulk of Silas and Dembe. Each man shouldered the other for a proper place of residency in the limited space.

“That woman’s cheerfulness in beyond ‘Stepford Wife’ creepy.” Francis whispered aside.

Liz held her amusement, more interested in touring the house.

“Is this a bedroom?” Silas asked, scowling slightly.

“That’s the living room.” Francis corrected before walking over and kicking a baseboard.

“What the hell are you doing?” Silas bitched. “You’re not checking air in a tire.”

“It is the formal dining room.” Dembe had guessed correctly.

“Get out of town.” Francis was appalled. “How many will that seat... four?”

Liz heard, her insecurities coming to the fore.

“Shut up.” Silas suggested evenly. “You’re making her feel bad.” he had noticed the stricken look on the woman’s face.

“Why, she didn’t design the house.” Francis was confused.

Red threw the entourage a lethal glare. “When she wants your input, I’ll ask for it.”

Francis took the news in his stride. Silas grinned. And Dembe, checked out the backyard through the French doors which opened out unto a small deck.

“Hudson would enjoy the back yard.” Dembe nodded his approval.

“Maybe this isn’t the right house?” she confided to Red. “It looked bigger online.”

“Everything looks bigger online.” Silas leaned over, confiding in Dembe. “Especially those nude pictures I send out.” he shared the joke, gleefully.
“It would have to...” Dembe responded effortlessly.

“Burn!” Francis laughed heartily. “Score one for Dembe.”

“Let’s check out the upstairs.” Red ignored the byplay completely, guiding the woman with a gentle hand on her back. He turned, his expression saying it all. “And we will do so, alone.”

The next two houses had been duds... according to the entourage.

The neighbors in the first, were too nosy. They had greeted them upon arrival, even going through on the tour.

Perhaps they were a nice couple, but considering Liz was planning on hosting the FBI’s Most Wanted and friends, they were a little too interested in every aspect of her life.

Thankfully, Red was so charming and friendly, the couple didn’t pay much attention to anything else.

The second house, the neighbors were the complete opposite. Halfway through the kitchen area, loud raucous music suddenly filled the air.

Liz lifted a helpless shrug whereupon Red excused himself briefly.

Within a few moments, the noise had abated, the man returned, an amiable expression in place.

“I think they will keep it down now.”

Silas grinned maniacally, sensing the course of action which had been taken.

“Some people...” Francis tsked knowingly. “And that music... reminds me when I was in the Monastery in Tibet.”

“They let you in a Monastery?” Silas screwed up his expression.

“It was a money laundering operation.”

“Excuse me?” the realtor had heard several interesting comments from these gentlemen, but that one was deserving of a response.

“What I meant to say...” Francis had caught Red’s hasty shift of the eyes, “we had to do our own laundry while there, as a penance for all our sins.” he pulled a sad face which charmed the hell out of the woman.

“I bet you did an ass load.” Silas was relatively sure, but he had kept it for Francis’ ears only.

On the way to the next house, Liz could not contain her curiosity. “Red, what did you do to make those people shut off the music?” she shifted him a scolding glance.

“He got cocky.” he shrugged. “I just brought him back to reality.”

“Made him shit himself, you mean.” Francis translated. “Been there, done that.” he elbowed Red in open camaraderie.

Red shifted away, his expression saying it all.

Dembe pulled up to the last house.

Red set his hand on the back of the seat turning towards the woman. He lay his hand on hers, his eyes mellow. “You’re going to look at this house by yourself.” she was informed. “There will be no unwarranted, unsolicited advice.” he glanced at the peanut gallery.

Silas grinned, suddenly concentrating on the scenery outside the darkly tinted windows. Francis seemed genuinely put out by the proclamation. Dembe pulled out a crossword puzzle.

“You know what you like, you can see the possibilities.” he had complete confidence in her. “You know what you want. You know what you don’t.”

“I don’t see why she can’t just live at the house?” Francis piped up.

“If it was any of your business, which it isn’t...” Red stated. “She wants her own place.”

“Oh, I get it...” Francis finally did, “it’s for when you get in one of your pissy moods, the one where no one can stand to be around–”

“What he means, boss.” Silas helped out. “You know when you go off the deep end and even Dembe here wants to get out of Dodge...”

“Shut up, both of you.” the discussion was ended. “She wants a place to decorate, a piece of real estate on which she can make a profit, her own money.”

“Women...” Silas mumbled to himself, “What the hell do we see in them... oh, wait.” it dawned on him. “Never mind.”

“Can you come with me?” she asked plaintively. “I value your opinion.”

“Oh, and you don’t ours.” Francis was ‘hurt’.

“No.” she said succinctly. She waited on pins and needles, for Red’s reply.

She instinctively knew that the man wanted this to be special for her, a moment to be remembered.

_Her_ first home.

He understood the importance of that connection.

His understanding meant more than he realized.

Usually, searching for a new house, was a process a husband and wife should make together. Not that Red was “her husband, but she knew now, that he would be a good one.

If he should ever remarry, the woman would be lucky to have gained his acceptance.

But if he did remarry, what did that mean to them? Would he stop seeing _her_?

The thought disturbed her. She had become so accustomed to Red being there, just a call away. She found herself feeling... agitated, that he might become romantically infatuated with another woman.
Because if she were romantic with Red, she would want him within reach and certainly not constantly hanging around another female.

“Come along darling...” Red’s voice was laced with something she could not read, as if he sensed the direction of her thoughts and found them mildly charming perhaps, “let’s see if this will be our new love nest.”

Minutes later they had walked the small property, Red watching her face as she looked things over.

So far, he had picked up that Liz loathed the color of the walls, wasn’t crazy about the kitchen cabinets, hated the back yard, and wasn’t pleased with the placement of the laundry room. But, she did like the powder room.

And she hadn’t said a word.

Come to think of it, she hadn’t said anything since leaving the car. He wondered what was on her mind.

“Did they really bother you?” he motioned to the men in the waiting car.

She downed her head in lieu of an answer. “Not bother per se, no.” she lifted those eyes. “They were just trying to be helpful.”

“Then what?” he persisted. Again she fell silent. “Was it the fact that the Stepford Wife referred to us as husband and wife?”

She flushed slightly. “Of course not, that was just an oversight on her part.” she managed a weak smile. “I wasn’t sure what to do, to be honest.”

“I rather enjoyed it.” he stated bluntly, while watching closely for her reaction.

“Y-You enjoyed it?” the statement through her off balance. “Why would you say such a thing?”

“Because it’s true.” he said simply. “What were your thoughts on the matter.”

“Well I...” she was flummoxed. “Well, I mean, that’s the part we’re playing, right?” she felt him out carefully.

“Maybe I’m sick of playing a part.”

She tried desperately to read his face. “What does that mean Red?”

“What do you want it to mean, Elizabeth.”

His gaze rested on her, as he stepped back once, cocking his head waiting patiently.

“I..I’m not sure what you want me to say?”

He nodded agreeably. “I see.” was all he offered.

The silence was deafening.

Panic arose in the young woman’s mind.

“Shall we continue.” he lifted his hand, hat held firmly between two fingers.
“Wait...” she caught his arm as he had stepped forward. He resumed his former position, again falling into his patient vigilance. His gaze stealing her soul from her body.

She reacted instinctively. Liz leaned closer and for a brief moment, as she scrutinized the taciturn obliqueness staring back at her... time stood still.

She found herself inexplicably drawn into wondrous depths of the complicated individual in front of her.

Red stood perfectly still, willing the woman forward. He could smell the spearmint on her breath, she was so close.

Her eyes pleaded with him for assistance but in this instance, he knew, it must be her choice and hers alone.

Not that he couldn’t help in other ways. His eyes softened, his head tilted, his lips parting ever so slightly in open invitation.

Liz was out of her depth, knowing as much but she found herself brushing away that line in the sand, one grain at a time.

Her arm lifted of it's own volition, her fingers feather light on the curve of his lapel as they traced a gentle path to his shoulder.

Red’s eyes dropped meaningfully to the full pout of her mouth, his breath grazing her cheek.

Liz’s fingers tightened slightly into the muscles of his shoulder, as she stepped fully into his warming aura.

Her breasts brushed the rich linen of his suit and suddenly his scent surrounded her. She closed her eyes, lifting her lips in anticipation.

Red’s lips trailed a tentative path from her forehead, across the sculptured pertness of her nose, to the pink freckles of her cheek, lingering for a breathless moment.

Liz’s breath escaped in light pants of anticipation. Her fingers curled tightly into the fabric of the man’s collar, urging him closer.

Red’s mouth brushed the very corner of her parted lips.

A discreet clearing of the throat alerted the two that they were no longer alone.

Elizabeth started visibly, her cheeks flaming a rich hue as she guiltily moved away from Red’s vicinity. She lowered her head, hiding her embarrassment.

Red’s look spoke volumes as he checked for the intruder’s whereabouts. His entire focus had been with Elizabeth Keen.

“I’m sorry, Raymond.” Dembe clearly was. “There’s been an... incident.”

Reddington was instantly alert, his features showing as much.

“Your friend, Anne.” the dark eyes said the rest.

Raymond was stunned. “When...?”
“Francis said that her body was found an hour ago... in her hotel room.” Dembe delivered the news.

“Oh my God...” she stepped up close to Red, her hand unconsciously seeking the security he always afforded her.

“What the hell happened?” his steps hurried to the source of information he trusted.

He guided Liz gently to the waiting SUV.

Francis and Silas were outside the car, both wearing serious expressions. Francis approached as the trio came on the scene, phone to ear.

“It was not Conte.” the young man advised hastily. “What we know so far... no signs of a struggle, no forced entry, so she must have known whoever...” he glanced at Liz.

“How was she killed?” Red demanded.

“They set it up to look like an overdose, boss.” Silas said. “Needle in the arm, coke spread out on the tables, yada, yada, yada.”

Francis nodded, “Yeah, we know... she didn’t use.”

“But it wasn’t Conte?” his eyes hardened.

“Air tight alibi, boss.” it was Silas’ turn to shake his head. “I had my guys check it out.”

Red sighed heavily, dropping his head for a second. “Well, just... shit.”

“We’re running our own tox, Red.” Francis gave some hope.

“Kaplan?”

Francis confirmed. “It was one of ours who found her. So we have a head start on the cops at least.”

“Was she still in New York?” Red asked quietly.

“That’s an affirmative.” Silas verified.

“Make arrangements for the flight out.” he had turned to Dembe. “By nightfall, Dembe, if you will.”

Red breezed through the doorway half an hour later.

An impeccably dressed woman followed close behind, her arms full of what looked to be catalogs and several samples on rings hanging from her fingers.

“Lizzy, this is Karen. She’s here to help you shop.” Red called on his way through to the bathroom.

“Shop?” Liz set up instantly, her head jerking from one person to the other.

“Since we’re on a time schedule here,” Red stuck his head out of the closet, “I thought I’d bring it to you.”

“Red?” her expression was more than guarded. “With what has just happened...” she hoped he would pick up the clue. “I don’t think this is the perfect time to shop.”

Liz thought he referred to clothes for the funeral. “Oh, of course. I’m sorry.” she apologized. “I didn’t know I was going along.”

“Well, you are.” he motioned with his head to the woman. “So if you would please...”

An hour later, Red came out of the bath, refreshed and looking like a million dollars.

She had only just finished with the woman she had dubbed, ‘Miss Perfect’.

“Red...” she was about to burst. “I told that woman I only needed a simple black dress for the funeral and stuff, not that I said funeral... but she insisted I buy all these gowns and shoes and...” she stopped for a breath, “I kept telling her and she kept saying, ‘Mr. Reddington said you would need these’. I just...” her eyes were large and befuddled.

“And she was right.” Red nodded his satisfaction.

“I can’t afford those things.” she argued. “News flash, I am a lowly government paid employee.”

“Who is playing the part of Red Reddington’s fiancée.” He reminded, fixing his tie in the mirror. “Why is it that you keep forgetting that, Elizabeth.” his eyes caught her’s in the mirror. “Is it Freudian.”

She fell silent, having no reply. She was still feeling slightly depressed over this ‘Anne’ person’s death. She had not known the woman personally, but she still felt bad.

“Now,” he turned to fully face her, his eyes running her body inoffensively, “we have a little under an hour before the flight... let’s go get those casts off.”

Liz forgot all about the poor woman’s death for a split second, her face beaming her joy. But then she remembered, feeling horrible again for her lapse.

Still, getting these heavy weights off her body was like getting them off her mind. She could not truthfully say she was regretting it.

“How are you holding up, Lizzy?” they had arrived at their destination.

“Oh, I’m so good.” She said, wringing her hands anxiously. “I’m really, really good... a little nauseous, but in a good way.”

“This should not take long.” He held his smile. “We’ll go to dinner afterwards to celebrate.”

She looked at him oddly. “Getting casts removed?”

“No, it’s our anniversary.” he teased.

“Anniversary?” she was totally confused.

“You’ve been with me for a month now. It was actually a couple days ago, but I was sick.” Red explained. “I think the occasion calls for a celebration.”

“Not that I’m going to turn down free food...” she tried to say what she needed to say correctly. “This poor woman just...”
“Forget about the poor woman, Lizzy.” Red suggested. “She would not think twice about you. Besides, in our business... it happens.”

“You seemed upset.”

“I am upset. But I live in the moment.” he waved his hand about in a dismissive manner. “We will celebrate her life, we will avenge her death and the matter is closed for the moment, all right.”

She nodded thoughtfully. “If that’s how you want it.”

“After a month in the same house... I would have figured you would have tried to kill me at least once, by now.” he shrugged. “You haven’t... something to celebrate.”

“Sam always told me, don’t bite the hand that feeds you...” she replied solemnly.

“Sam also said, life is like toilet paper, you’re either on a roll or taking shit from some asshole.” Red sighed, then raised a finger to his forehead, suddenly remembering another gem. “And boobs are proof that men can focus on two things at once.”

“So what?” she finally giggled. “Are you saying I shouldn’t listen to Sam’s advice?”

Red tilted his head, lost in thought for a moment, “Actually, I’m not quite sure what my point was, exactly.” he shook his head, clearing it of ‘the world according to Sam Milhoan’.

“But I think the point I was trying to make was, don’t hold back from doing what makes you happy.” he waved about his hand with flourish. “Even if it means you end up maiming me.”

A short time later, they exited the doctor’s office.

Lizzy was practically dancing due to her new found freedom, having lost not just one, but both casts.

Granted, she had soft casts for a couple weeks, but as she grinned up at Red, it was evident that she was more than happy to be mobile again.

“Let’s go eat.” Red tipped his hat, settling his hand on Liz’s low back, escorting her to the car.

Elizabeth should have known when in Red Reddington’s company, one should expect the unexpected.

After a quick stop by the house, they found some of the garments Liz had ordered waiting for them, along with new luggage. After quickly packing, they were loaded back into the car and bound for New York before she could even process what was happening.

After their arrival, Red sent Francis on ahead to the hotel to meet Mark, leaving them to hit a favorite spot of Red and Dembe’s for dinner. And Liz had to agree, it had been quite an adventuresome outing.

As they finished, Dembe went across the way to take care of a quick errand, leaving Red and Liz to enjoy coffee and a small treat.

After relating a story about two sisters who both had an unhealthy infatuation for Dembe, which terrified the poor man, something Red had never witnessed before in his entire time with Dembe... he left Liz laughing at their table, while he went to see what was taking so long with the damned bill.
He waited semi-patiently, looking out the large bay window just as Dembe slid to the curb in the black SUV. He glanced back at the table, to note Elizabeth gathering her bag.

“Raymond...” a woman’s voice purred softly behind him.

He turned towards the source, pulling up short.

“Lexa...” he glanced hastily to check on Liz who was headed his way. He turned back, making a leisurely transition. “What are you doing here?”

She smiled flirtatiously. “I did not expect to see you here.”

“The feeling is mutual.” Red took the card the attendant handed him, shoving it in his wallet. “I don’t mean to be rude, but I have to...”

The woman put a stilling hand on his arm, “I’m in town for a few days.” she stepped into his space, stroking his tie with her fingertip. “If you would like to– ”

“I don’t think that will be possible this time, Lexa.” Red pulled back a hair, smiling charmingly at the woman.

He needed to keep Lexa in his good graces, for so many reasons. Being his top ‘go to’ source for money laundering and a reliable contact with the underground in Italy, she was a very valuable resource.

“You don’t appear busy now.” the woman sidled cozily up against him.

Dembe glanced to the restaurant, taking in the developing scene. He grimaced slightly, seeing Liz step around the corner just as Lexa drew her lips sensually across Raymond’s chin.

Red winced slightly, tsking under his breath for the unfortunate timing with which he was cursed.

“Red?” Liz’s tone was a cross between total disbelief and hopeful anticipation that there was a perfectly logical reason why this woman... this absolutely stunning woman, was sucking on Red Reddington’s face as if she had every right to do so.

The man stepped back leisurely, gently clearing his throat. “Elizabeth, this is an... associate,” he explained, “... Lexa.”

Liz’s brow furrowed deeply. She stepped, taking her place at Red’s side, looping her arm through his, territorially.

The two women sized each other up.

“Lexa, this is Elizabeth.” Red gestured to the steely eyed woman beside him. “My fiancée.

Lexa swiveled her head jerkily towards Red, her expression incredulous then hastily masked.

“So, congratulations are in order.” the woman smiled pleasantly. “And how long have you two been engaged?”

Liz laid her hand over Red’s arm, flashing her ring. “Four months.”

Lexa’s brow rose, staring silently at Red, long enough that an uncomfortable silence ensued. “I see.” she replied evenly, then smiled. “I’m very happy for you.”
Red glanced out the corner of his eye, finding Dembe, who now stood a few feet away, rubbing his temples methodically.

Red on the other hand found himself very hard pressed, not to laugh at the absurd situation they found themselves in.

The tension was so thick right now, you could cut it with a knife. And for what reason?

Because he was literally stuck between a woman he had fucked, and one whom he would give anything to fuck.

Both of them, with their own little thoughts about the man between them.

And he was positive none of them were pleasant thoughts.

He was sure Lexa thought he played around on Elizabeth.

And Lizzy, was playing her part as Red’s fiancée... to the hilt. She was savvy enough to pick up that there was some sort of past between him and Lexa, and what that past entailed.

Just not the exact timing of said... dalliance. Not that it seemed to matter.

Elizabeth was making her displeasure very well known, staring down the woman opposite them for all she was worth.

Shit...

“Thank you, Lexa.” Red replied amiably.

Lexa looked at her watch, breaking the stalemate. “I should go.” she stated, smiling widely at nothing in particular.

Never a good sign, in Red’s opinion.

“I’ll be late for my meeting.” She leaned up, gently kissing Red’s cheek. “I’m at the Four Seasons.” she whispered before discretely pulling back. “Have a lovely day, and congratulations, again.” she smiled genuinely at Elizabeth before taking her leave.

Red directed Elizabeth out the door and to the waiting car, before going to the other side where Dembe waited.

“I’m sorry, Dembe.” the man said to his friend.

“If she pulls her weapon,” Dembe warned, “I’m leaving your ass and calling Uber.”

“Chicken shit traitor.” Red chuckled before opening the door, climbing in beside Lizzy.

“What the hell was that?” the woman asked peevishly.

“Awkward.” Red replied simply.

“Who was she?” Liz crossed her arms over her chest, scowling when Red just smiled. “And what the hell are you smiling for?”

If he didn’t know any better, he would think she was jealous.
“As I said, she is an associate.” Red said. “I work with her.”

“That’s not all you did.” she muttered heatedly.

The man turned his head to glance at the beautiful profile, his thoughts private.

Liz looked out the window, sighing. She didn’t know why she was so upset. Red was entitled to a past.

Or present, it seemed.

“What did she say to you?”

Red watched the woman’s foot tap impatiently, awaiting his answer.

“Excuse me?” Red enquired lightly, knowing very well what she was asking.

“When she kissed you.”

“She didn’t kiss me.” Red corrected. “She only–”

“You’re skirting the issue.”

“She told me where she was staying.” he replied evenly.

“She...” Liz’s mouth pinched irritably. “After we told...” she huffed in irritation. “Bitch...” she whispered, though not softly enough, since Red heard her quite clearly.

The man glanced in the rearview mirror, his head cocking lazily when he found Dembe staring back at him with humored eyes.

“And I assume you’re going to pay her a visit.” the woman retained her window vigil.

“No.”

“But you’ve been so clearly invited.” she bit out.

“And I’m clearly not interested.”

Liz turned her head, frowning. “You’re not?”

“No, I’m not.” Red said in no uncertain terms. “I’m right where I wish to be.”
Red’s eyes slit open, slowly blinking away the last of his sleep.

“Damn...” he whispered softly, scooting his hips back, away from Elizabeth.

He rolled to his back, urging the ramrod erection to recede, as he often did these days, more often than not, since he awoke just about every morning with his cock nestled against Lizzy’s soft ass.

He sighed heavily, rolling from the bed, heading to the shower, hoping for a private moment to deal with this very noticeable issue.

_This was getting old fast._ Red was not accustomed to denying himself anything, let alone sexual release.

As he relaxed under the heated spray, Lizzy had come in to use the facilities and ask about the agenda for that day. After which, she busied herself with her morning routine.

Red could smell the feminine soap she used. She had left the cap off the bottle after her shower the night before.

The woman’s musical voice had a pleasing lilt as she related an amusing incident between her and Francis. Red zoned off into, not so much the words, but her soothing tone.

He had no trouble at all, relieving himself of the rigid erection under such conditions.

This cock tease he’d been on the receiving end of for the last month had been wearing him thin. He realized, as he gasped the last vestiges of the primal urges away...

He really needed to get laid.

He hadn’t been with anyone, in that way, since Lizzy had been staying with him.

He had been propositioned, but coming back to Lizzy seemed more important. He had been on the verge of taking Bridget up on her offer for a tumble, when Silas had called the night Lizzy had been in such distress.

The handjobs in the shower were holding him off, but that didn’t mean he hadn’t been and wasn’t feeling the itch for a good fuck.

Normally, when he went to Mark’s for the week, if he didn’t bring someone, he always seemed to end up between a woman’s legs. His very favorite spot to be in the entire universe.

But this year, that might prove to be difficult, seeing as he had a guest, a very important one at that, with which to occupy the time.

He shut the water down, dried himself and made way for the closet, donning his clothes for the day. Maybe after seeing to Lizzy’s needs and getting her settled in for the night... he’d have a little free time to scratch that itch.

He pulled his shoe on, tying it when he realized he was scowling darkly.

It felt wrong to go fuck someone when Liz was with him. But then, it seemed wrong to jerk off in the shower while listening to her talk on the other side of the wall, but he had done it.

Face it Red, your morals are shot to hell.

Maybe when he got to Marks, he’d feel differently, hopefully he would find a toy to play with. But right now, the thought of leaving Liz alone to go fuck, set him on edge.

“One thing at a time, Red.” He sighed and pushed off the bench. “Deal with it later.”

“Deal with what later?” Liz said, stepping inside the closet, holding out a coffee to him.

He took the hot cup, sipping it, pleasantly surprised to find it to his liking.

“I made it correctly, right?” she asked.

“You did, thank you.” he took another mouthful, humming in pleasure.

She held her hand out, taking the warm cup then took a drink. “Now... deal with what later?”

“Nothing, sweetheart.” He looped his belt, pushing it through the buckle before taking his coffee back from the thief who had stolen it.

Red and Francis were just about to hit the phone lines, touching base with contacts, getting the low down on Anne’s activities in her last day.

When he was waylaid by a most pleasant surprise.

Liz stepped out of the bath area, her face slightly grimaced. She held her arms out from her sides, shaking her head slightly.

“Too much?” she held her breath for his critique because she secretly adored the creation she had donned.

The gown she wore was one that Red himself had suggested for the upcoming weekend.

Red halted his steps, as did the man beside him.

“Hot shit...” Francis’ mouth fell agape, but he sensed Red’s cool glance. “I mean... goodness, that gown is lovely.”

Red took in the deep purple silk with it’s black gossamer webbed overlay. The woman looked like a medieval fairy princess come to life. The train fell in sheer folds around her bare feet.
There was something disturbingly sensual in the image she evoked.

“Elizabeth,” his eyes said so much more than his words, “you’re absolutely ethereal.”

The woman suddenly felt beautiful and all warm inside, her smile alluding to the fact.

“Well... I’ve never been that.” she practically giggled. “But I simply adore this gown. It’s almost too sinful to wear.”

She retired to the other room, while the men continued on with their task.

An hour into their investigations, Red slapped his phone closed with a finality that bespoke of his mood.

“That little bitch!” he fumed.

“It was Natalia.” Red pushed off the couch, heading to the bar, pouring himself a stiff drink.

Liz entered the room, securing the tie around her robe, surprised at the venom in the man’s tone. She remembered Red mentioning that name before... it was the woman who had spiked his drink.

“How can you be sure?” Liz crossed, taking a seat by the picturesque windows which offered an amazing view of the city behind them.

“I told you, I turned her in on that drug charge?” Red reminded. “This is her little way of ingratiating herself back into the fold.”

“You mean she...” Liz gaped, “she killed Anne to get her business contacts?”

“Dog eat dog.” Francis muttered, before taking a drink from his own tumbler. “Or in this case, bitch kill bitch.” he swiveled his head towards Red, shrugging. “Sorry...” the man sighed. “What are you gonna do?”

Red huffed irritably, pouring another finger. “What the hell can I do?” he leaned back into the bar, crossing his ankles. “Why Anne even got involved with her, is what I don’t understand. She thought Natalia was trash.”

Francis’ phone ringing broke Red’s reverie, for the moment.

“Red, do you have a copy of that list from Anne’s room?” Francis asked.

Francis pushed out of his chair, leaving the sitting room.

“Should I call Ressler to pick this Natalia up?” Liz whispered.

Red shook his head, negatively. “Not yet. She’s up to something, and I’d like to know what.” he explained. “Don’t worry though, Silas is putting a team on her, so we’ll be tracking her movements.”

The man’s jaw pulsed with his aggravation. Red closed his eyes, scratching at his neck, which Liz had come to learn, was as close as Red came to having a nervous tick.

“It’s not your fault.” she muttered softly.
“It is.” Red disagreed. “If I hadn’t—”

“She drugged you Red.” the woman interrupted, checking on Francis’ whereabouts, finding him still on the phone. “Don’t take this the wrong way, but considering who you are, you didn’t have to go easy and just get Natalia jail time.”

Red lifted his eyes, staring through her. The woman winced, knowing she should have found a way to word that differently.

“Dammit, Red. You know I didn’t mean anything by that.” she hissed. “I just meant, by rights—”

“My kind would have killed her.” Red gritted. He had wondered if Elizabeth would ever see him as anything but her CI... but it was moments like this, that clarified that thought with a resounding... no.

Liz arose, sensing the man’s mood. He stood, swirling the amber liquor in the glass, his thoughts and focus completely on his actions.

She placed her hand over the top of the glass, fingering his chin gently, demanding his attention.

“That was a rotten thing she did, dangerous...” it was stressed. “Even being who I am, I would have been hard pressed not to kill her.” she continued. “You didn’t, where so many others would have.”

Francis came out of the bedroom, stilling in his steps, feeling the tension in the room. More specifically, the stand off beside the bar. He eyed the two combatants warily.

“What did Mark want?” Red asked, holding the woman’s gaze dispassionately.

“He uh...” Francis tried to ignore the strain exhibited by both parties, “got a request from someone who supposedly had worked with Anne, Mark wanted to confirm if they were legit.” he looked between the couple, scowling. “What the hell is wrong with you two?”

Red broke his gaze, looking over to the young man. “Nothing.”

He pushed off the bar, grabbing his phone and wallet. “We have business to attend to.”

He left with no further word.

It took Francis and Dembe several drinks and calm, rational reasoning to get Red in a better mood.

Francis’ idea of rational reasoning, having heard the reason behind the man’s sour mood was to rationalize... “Well Red, you do kill people. Let’s all be honest here.”

Dembe cut the man a severe chastising glance, putting it much better. “You mistook her intentions, Raymond. Perhaps what she was saying was that she admired the fact that you are attempting to react differently to situations than you have in the past.”

Red could accept that and he secretly wondered if he was really upset with Elizabeth or the fact that he was the cause of what Natalia had done.

After dinner that night, Red found himself relaxing a little bit. Francis and Mark were relating different versions of their misadventures over the years, each poking fun at the other.

Some of the tension that was blanketing him and Lizzy abated with the good humor and jovial atmosphere. A time or two when their eyes met, she seemed to sober a bit, her smile losing some of
She was still upset by what happened earlier.

He wondered if she was upset with herself for what she had said or his reaction to it?

She excused herself at one point. Red watched her trek across the hotel dining area, his scowl transferring to the large guard beside him.

“She’s being followed.” Silas assured, his own eyes trailing the guard he’d placed on the woman.

“You haven’t apologized?” he assumed.

“I don’t think he should.” Francis said.

“When’s the last time you had a serious girlfriend?” Silas quipped. “Hell, when’s the last time you got laid?”

Francis pulled an endearing ‘denial’ face. “And when have you?”

“This morning.” Silas’ face was perfectly composed.

“Oh...” Francis’ face fell.

Mark snickered into his glass for the exchange.

“Now, go see that she’s safe.” Silas pointed to the two men sitting across from him.

“You have a guard on her.” Francis screwed up his face, pointing the man out.

“Okay, you can’t take a hint.” Silas leaned into the table, eyeing them. “The adults are talking for a moment, get lost.”

Red gestured for the two young men to give them a moment, turning his attention to the head guard, as the two men reluctantly scooted back from the table.

“What about Dembe?” Francis squawked.

“Dembe...” Silas gritted his request.

The man followed suit, smiling at Silas’ vexation, leaving not because he had to... but because he respected the need for privacy.

When they were finally alone, Silas glanced over at his boss, his friend, sighing heavily.

“Are you pissed because of what she said or because you feel like it’s a step back?”

“Isn’t it?” Red replied curtly. He hadn’t meant to answer that quickly, nor that honestly.

“No, because unlike before, she tried to correct her error.” Silas clarified. “She hadn’t meant for the words to be taken as an insult, but that she noticed a change in you...” the man shifted his weight comfortably, “that you reacted differently than your reputation would suggest.”

Red’s brow knitted, remembering Dembe had said something similar.

“She doesn’t just see you as her CI anymore.” Silas continued. “Do you really not see it?”

The large guard’s head dropped meaningfully to one side as he realized that the other man actually did not see the reality.

“Besides the two of you sleeping in the same bed, being more hands on and–”

“It’s for work.” Red countered.

“Don’t give me that shit.” Silas scoffed. “You two do not have to sleep in the same damn bed for work.” the man tossed his napkin on the table, leaning on his elbows. “Since when has she valued your opinion at work, let alone when hunting for her own home?” Silas scoffed. “Stop bullshitting me and quite frankly, yourself.”

Red sat back in his chair, folding his arms over his chest, his expression benign.

“I know about your little aborted kiss as well.” Silas knowingly admitted. “Was that for work too... because I didn’t see anyone around to impress.”

“If we go to Mark’s we have to keep up certain appearances–”

“You’ve gone this long without sucking face.” Silas pointed out.

“She’s hung up on Tom.”

“No she isn’t.” Silas disgusted. “Her reaction to that damn dream was proof enough of that.”

“She’s confused.”

“And Liz’s reaction to Lexa?”

“What the hell?” Red scowled. “After you and Dembe are done gossiping, do you paint each others nails before or after the pillow fight?”

Silas shook his head, irritated at Red’s diversion. “I’ve never known you to be afraid of anything, Red.”

Red’s eyes connected with the guards, the heavy silence saying enough.

“She’s giving you signals, hints that she’s interested, and you aren’t seeing them,” the man told the truth, “because you’re too afraid of her rejection.”

The stocky man pushed back his seat, standing. “That is not the Red Reddington I know.” Silas stated bluntly.

“You need to get your head straight, both of them.” Silas strongly suggested. “Either grow a set and make your move, or get on with it and go fuck someone else.” the handsome face hardened slightly. “You’re turning out to be a real bastard...”

“I apologize for upsetting your sensitive nature.”

Silas leaned into his fists, resting them on the table, glowering at the man across from him. “You told me to protect her. That’s what I’m doing.” he reminded. “And since you didn’t specify, I’m assuming that it was to shield her from all harm.” the man’s tone had hardened as well.

“You’re being a major dick. Stop speaking in fucking riddles and be straight with her for fucking once.”

Silas took a few steps, then hesitated, looking back at Red. “I know which path you’re going to Red could not truthfully answer that question at this point and he secretly wondered how Silas could possibly do so.

About an hour later an orchestra arrived and couples filtered slowly to the dance floor.

Red’s expression spoke volumes as he sipped his drink, his eyes following the path of his friend.

“What?” Liz turned in her seat, watching the muscular man approach a lady a couple of tables away. Dembe leaned into the woman’s sphere, his smile almost lighting the room.

“Well now. That is unexpected.” there was total approval in Red’s tone and manner.

“Lizzy, he’s only asking the woman to dance, not mother his children.” Red pointed out.

“Who is she?” Liz was more than curious.

“I believe her name is Sarah,” Red tilted his head slightly, as the two made their way to the dimly lit dance floor, “she’s Rebecca’s right hand woman.”

“Like Dembe is to you?” Liz was surprised.

“You sound shocked.”

“I guess I just think of yours as being a mans’ world.” Liz realized how sexist that sounded, once said. “I’m not sure why, I’ve met Madeline. And then there’s always Mr. Kaplan.”

“You’d be surprised who’s lurking behind the scenes.” Red smiled secretively.

“Do they have a history?” she stuck to safer subjects.

“Not so much a history, more like two ships passing in the night.” Red saw no harm in confiding as much. “They’re always exchanging glances with one another but never had the time to get it together. I’m surprised he got the balls to finally approach her.”

“So you’re saying Hannah should be worried.” Liz stared at the handsome couple, dancing closely.

“I wasn’t under the impression that Hannah and Dembe were serious.”

“I guess they aren’t. She just really seems to like him,” Liz felt rather disappointed at the moment, “And I like Hannah.” She mumbled.

“Stay out of it, Lizzy.” Red advised. “Perhaps all they really want out of the relationship is nothing more than sex.”

“You think?” Liz tilted her head, wondering if it could be a possibility.

“Dembe, while being a good man, is mostly an absent one. Some women are fine with the constant travel, some aren’t.” Red could speak from experience. “I would imagine that Dembe would make sure of any problems that might arise before solidifying anything.”
“I guess he would.” Liz wondered what it felt like to have a ‘friend with benefits’. She herself, had never had a one night stand.

“What are you thinking about?”

“Honestly?” She smiled wickedly.

“Of course.”

“I was just thinking, I’ve never had casual sex. I wonder what it’s like?” Instead of him spitting his drink across the table like she expected him to do, he turned serious eyes to her.

“It’s empty and lonely. There’s no affection.” He replied evenly. “The sex feels great, sometimes. Afterwards, that’s the let down. Someone inevitably leaves at the end of the night.”

“But you’ve had a couple stay, haven’t you? Madeline?” she openly fished.

“My partners and I took care of a biological imperative.” he stirred his drink methodically.

“Partners?” Liz was intrigued and though she would only admit it to herself, maybe a little jealous. Red pursed his lips, side glancing her before continuing, “We had a cat nap or two before the next round. But a whole night together... no.”

Liz was stuck on his choice of words, next round. How many rounds could he do in a night?

“You’re the first woman I’ve slept with since my wife.” He confided. “If only due to the fact that you won’t stab me in the back while I’m sleeping,” he held a small smile. “Or at least, that is my impression up to this point.”

Both fell silent.

He wondered if he had over shared. He looked at the world and relationships one way, she another.

Everyone had a past, some more than others. While parts of hers, he would rather forget, they still made her who she was. He wouldn’t hold anything against her, ever. Nothing he learned about her was too much.

How she viewed his past, he wasn’t sure.

“It’s their loss.” Liz finally spoke.

“Excuse me?”

“That they didn’t ask you to stay. It’s their loss.”

“And why is that?” He smiled, waiting for the punch line.

“Because, when you’re there I can sleep.” She glanced out over the dance floor, sipping her wine. “I’ve never felt so safe.”

Red stared at her, slightly shell shocked. It was the last thing he had expected to hear.

The silence returned, but this time it was not uncomfortable.

Red pushed his drink aside, standing, his decision cast.
He held out his hand. “Would you care to dance?”

“I can’t do much with the boot.” She distastefully waved at the bulky thing.

“We can sway.” He took her hand, leading her to the floor. “It’ll be just like prom.”

She giggled her response.

He pulled her into him while she wrapped her arms around his neck. Slowly they began swaying.

“Yep, just like prom.” She laughed at the silly picture they must paint, being surrounded by people dancing correctly.

“No, you can’t see the moon between us.” Red quipped.

“I hated when the chaperones said that.” Seemed stupid rules applied everywhere.

She remembered back, dancing with Chad Krakow and a chaperone had split them up, saying almost the same exact phrasing.

“Like people weren’t having sex later on that night.” she smiled gently with the remembrance, a thought suddenly occurring to her. “Wait. You went to prom?”

“I keep shocking you, why is that?” he questioned lightly.

“It doesn’t seem like your thing.”

“I wasn’t always the Concierge of Crime, you know.” he shrugged slightly. “And you’re right, it wasn’t.”

“Then why did you go?” she enquired. “Did you have a date?”

Red looked at her, his expression saying it all.

“Of course I had a date. She was Prom Queen!” Red stressed, the importance of such a roll. “She had to go.” rolling his eyes dramatically. “I just wanted to fuck down by the lake... I was such a romantic back then.”

She giggled, “Were you already dating her?”

“Yes, terrible woman that she was.” he sighed bleakly.

“Red...” Liz chuckled.

“Not that I was much better.” He granted philosophically. “We both drank, heavily. It was toxic.”

“Then why did you two date?” she was stumped.

“She was dramatic, bitchy and had an evil streak wider than mine. It certainly wasn’t boring.” he looked off into the distance. “I detested being idle, she kept me busy.”

His mood changed, becoming darker. And as much as she was dying to delve more into who Red was and where he came from, she sensed, now wasn’t the time.

“Did you wear a powder blue tux?”

“Never!” He grimaced disgustedly. “I was debonair, even back then.”
“And modest… I bet you were quite handsome.” she eyed him speculatively. “What I would do for a picture of the high school you.” She shook her head, the tendrils around her face swaying hypnotically. “Please tell me you had long hippie hair and followed the Grateful Dead.”

Red laughed at the thought, “Unfortunately, no. I believe that my father would have actually made an appearance had I done that.” Liz frowned, wondering what that meant, but he continued speaking. “I was one hundred percent Preppy asshole.”

“So, not much has changed?” Liz surmised, her lips quivering in amusement.

“Oh, believe me. I was a darling compared to when I went into the Navy.” the man thought back on those times. “That’s when I became the huge asshole you know today.”

“Why do you say that?” She asked, intrigued.

“Besides having joined up only to piss my father off. I went in with a chip on my shoulder.” he wasn’t proud of that time. “I pushed boundaries and got away with it since I was good at what they threw at me. I enjoyed the challenge and wanted more.” he guided her gently back and forth. “I wasn’t above pushing buttons of those around me to achieve my goals.”

“Why did it piss your father off, you joining the Navy?”

“He wanted me to go into the Army, follow in his footsteps.” he shared. “I had wanted to be a Marine, but my love of the sea won out, so I joined the Navy.”

“I didn’t know that…” She said.

“Not much of who I was before I disappeared makes for good reading material,” he conceded, “except that I was being groomed for Admiral, a rising star at the Pentagon.” He mimicked the reporters perfectly. “It adds dramatic flair when speaking of me on CNN.”

He looked down at her, his expression more than serious. “They are so fair and unbiased, you know.”

“Were you, after working so hard, disappointed when you didn’t reach the goal of Admiral?” she ignored his quip.

“Contrary to popular belief, I didn’t want to be Admiral.”

“You didn’t?” she was mildly shocked.

“No. While the paycheck and prestige, stature, would have been a feather in my cap. Being an Admiral would have put me behind a desk.” his head lifted proudly, almost defiantly. “I wanted to be a SEAL.”

“How did you end up being set for the promotion then?”

“Because I moved up the ranks so quickly, that’s where everyone thought I was headed. And maybe I was.” he shook his head once slightly, almost jeeringly. “All I thought at the time was with rank, comes privilege and I wanted my choice of assignments.” he licked his lips thoughtfully. “Who knew it would lead me here.”

“How—”

“Raymond.” Dembe interrupted, quietly. “Mark needs to speak with you, he asked that I see if you are available."

“I’m busy.” He gestured to the woman in his arms. “We’re waiting for the last dance call.”

Dembe was slightly lost.

Liz slapped his shoulder lightly. “No we aren’t.” She pulled back with a smile. “Go ahead, I don’t mind.”

But Red tightened his hold on her waist.

“Go on or he’ll just come looking for you.” she predicted. “Duty calls, Sailor…”

God, he hadn’t been called that in a long time and found he almost missed it.

Red sighed, “Tell him I’ll be right there.” Liz took his arm as he led her back to their table. “I’ll be back as soon as possible.”

“Take your time, I’m not going anywhere.” she pointed to Francis who was sauntering toward their table.

The man nodded, both to the arrival of his friend as Francis seated himself by Elizabeth and the woman, indicating his farewell.
Red followed Dembe down the long hall, nearing the conference rooms. “Did Mark say what he wanted?”

“He was approached about taking on a new shipper earlier. He would value your input, seeing as you frequently do business in the area.”

“And did he say who it was that approached him?”

“He did not.”

They rounded the corner, finding Mark Donovan waiting at the door for them.

He smiled at who ever was in the room behind him, closing the door before walking down the corridor to greet Red and Dembe.

Mark was a remarkable young man with piercing green eyes and an intelligent brow. He had the physique of a Roman God, and swagger of a man who was confident in his abilities.

“Who is it?” Red asked.

“A woman, Ariana Sanchez.” Mark began the tale. “She came to me earlier about taking on Gabriel Ramirez.” he explained. “He was to begin shipping for Anne, but...”

Red’s brows rose, his interest immediate.

He’d heard about Ramirez, but had not worked with him as of yet. He had relied on Fermin to handle most of his shipping needs, but Fermin handled the Western portion mainly. And since Red had not been in need of the Eastern portion at that time...he had put off securing anyone.

Until now.

Ramirez and his bunch were quite good at their jobs. Red had heard in passing, that not one shipment had gone missing or was damaged and these men were very serious about product arriving intact and on time. No matter what they had to do to ensure that scenario.

“I want to meet her.”

“You and the rest of the hotel.” Mark mumbled, flashing a quick grin before beginning the route to the Conference Room he had booked. “She’s quite beautiful.”

The three men entered the room, Red’s eyes zeroing in on the woman immediately.

She was indeed stunning. A true Spanish beauty with bronzed skin, soft and delicate features, long flowing brown hair down to her waist and an amazing figure.

She sat straight in her chair, holding Red’s gaze as though she was used to being ogled. And while he did enjoy her beauty, he was looking past that, seeing beyond what others focused on.

While she held a dignified air, she was definitely nervous. And grew more so under his unwavering
She adjusted in her seat, moving her large natural breasts in a bid to break his scrutiny, but it only seemed to heighten his awareness.

“Ms. Sanchez.” Red greeted, holding out his hand to her. “I am Raym–”

“Raymond Reddington, yes. I know.” she smiled engagingly.

He had to give it to the girl. She was holding it together well.

Her hand had been slightly damp and her posture a bit rigid, but it certainly could not have been the dozen pair of eyes undressing her.

Men were often swayed by her voluptuous figure, shapely legs and flowing locks. She was used to it and paid them no mind.

It wasn’t until Red walked into the room that she put up her front. If he was new to the game, he might have missed it, but when you had been on his side of things for twenty plus years. He saw her for what she was.

Someone was playing messenger.

The others were too busy drooling over the girl to hear much of what she was actually saying anyway. Red pulled the seat out opposite her, focusing her attention where it should be...

On him.

“What is it that we can do for you, Ms. Sanchez?”

“Oh, please,” she smiled warmly, “call me Ariana.”

Red smiled in return, though not for the reasons for which she assumed. He would let her fall back on what made her comfortable, until it became a distraction. But if it helped her get some confidence back... it didn’t hurt anything. Yet.

“All right, Ariana.” the deep baritone rumbled almost intimately, leaving the woman wondering what he sounded like in the bedroom after a good tumble. “Tell me, what is it that you’re here for?”

She gave a quick background on Gabriel Ramirez and his crew and answered some of Red’s questions until they were interrupted by a phone call.

“Excuse me for a moment.” she batted long lashes charmingly, stepping a couple feet away.

Red turned in his chair, staring off vacantly, totally focused on the one sided conversation. She spoke quickly and fluently in her native language.

As her conversation continued and a quick check of the room assured her no one was listening, she assumed that no one understood her language, speaking more freely.

Apparently not one of them had paid attention in high school Spanish.

She hissed into the phone, then lowered her voice. But Red had heard enough.

“Mark, clear the room.” he requested sotto voce.
Mark questioned the man with a look.

Red pointed at the others talking amongst themselves. “They’re holding back our deal because she can’t talk freely. Get them out.”

Mark gaped, then pointed at himself in mock consternation.

“If you would just me a few moments alone with her, I would appreciate it.” Red smiled unassumingly. “I’ll find you later and fill you in.” he assured.

Mark shrugged, pushing back from the table. “Gentlemen, why don’t we go visit the bar, maybe have a smoke?” he gestured to the door. He threw Red an amused smirk when not one of the men present, questioned why they were leaving.

Red pushed back his own chair, conferring quietly with his friend. “Dembe, if you would check on Lizzy for me.”

Dembe offered a slight incline of his head, the dark eyes transferring to the still occupied woman.

“I know what she wants. You know what she wants.” Raymond sing-songed his head. “I’ll secure the deal and be with you shortly.”

Dembe left the room, leaving the two remaining occupants alone.

Red sat back in his chair, listening as Ariana finished off her conversation, summarily clicking the phone shut.

“I do apologize. Business you know.” she smiled charmingly, retracing her steps to her former seat.

Red enquired, in her own language, if there were any problems with which he could assist.

The bronze complexion paled visibly. Red simply smiled.

“Now, tell me. What proposal is Gabriel offering?”

She deflated a bit in her chair, then gave him the run down. Gabriel was in trouble.

There hadn’t been many shipments lately of any real cash value, with others cutting into the supply. Gabriel was worried because he had a crew to keep employed and more importantly, fed.

“Are they limited to the East?” Red asked.

“No, they will deliver where product is needed.”

“And how many are in his crew?”

Ariana sighed, “We had twelve in the compound, but now there are only nine, plus Gabriel.”

Red waited patiently for her to finish the story.

“The others left. Unhappy with lack of production.” she frowned at their lack of loyalty. “We live well, but they wanted better.”

“I’m not traveling down that way for a couple weeks, and when I do, I’ll be on vacation.” Red explained. His eyes softened when Ariana bit her lip anxiously.
She was certain she had screwed up securing her people work.

Red set his fingers under her chin, raising the beautiful face, “I planned on taking seven days off... but after that time, if Gabriel is so inclined, I would like to fly him there to discuss more with him and finalize a deal.”

Ariana took a deep breath, her eyes lifting immediately, hope shining within the dark depths. “Really?”

“Yes, now, why don’t you call him back and see when it would be a good time for him to meet.”

She snatched her phone off the table, dialing quickly. She spoke excitedly, relaying the information, until Red gestured for the phone.

Gabriel had a few jobs lined up and would be free after that. He would have a better understanding of his time frame when Red headed South. The man was very pleased about the upcoming meeting with Red Reddington.

After swapping information, Red bid the gentleman a good evening, before ending the call.

Ariana was practically vibrating with enthusiasm by the time he sat the phone down. She had done well by her people and Reddington seemed like a good associate to have on their side.

He stood, smiling down at the woman then helped her from her chair. “Thank you for taking a chance on us, Mr. Reddington. We will not let you down.”

Imagine the man’s surprise, when the Latin beauty impulsively leaned into him, the full lips latching securely onto his unsuspecting ones.

Even more of a surprise, she kissed as good as she looked. Normally, that wasn’t the case. The more beautiful the woman, the less she put into it, thinking her looks were enough.

But Ariana gave it her all.

Red inclined his head, allowing the physical pleasure for a long moment. Wrapping his arm around her small waist, he pulled her tighter into him. When her tongue flicked his lips seductively, he opened for her.

The dance continued, both teasing one other until the woman herself, moved his hand down to the curve of her shapely ass.

Cupping the supple flesh, Red effortlessly lifted her to the Conference table, deepening the sensual kiss.

Spreading her legs, Red stepped between them, more than pleased to feel her hook a leg around his ass, pulling him into the cradle of her thighs. Raking his bulge against her center, the woman moaned, her legs opening wider.

Her hands stroked him, giving Red exactly what he had been needing. The sensual and sexual touch of a female.

Ariana gasped, baring his chest, skirting her fingers through the wealth of soft down found there.

Red freed her bountiful breasts, his darkened eyes taking in the supple flesh, his palm flattening against her warm skin as he lay her back unto the table.
He surveyed the beauty unveiled, his hands cupping the firm mounds, his fingers pulling the pert nipples. The sensation sent a jolt to his pulsing cock.

He gently kneaded, squeezing the firm plumpness experimentally. A soft whimper from her beautiful lips urged him on. He grasped her hips, dragging her roughly into position.

“I’m going to fuck you so hard.” he snarled, reaching under her skirt, palming her full ass cheek as she moved into his touch.

Red grunted his approval. Her small hand cupped the crotch that had been teasing her so effectively, massaging the quickly hardening length.

Her fingers pulled at his belt and zipper.

Red reached under her full skirt, removing her panties in one effortless move. The woman’s deft fingers slid into the expensive silk of his boxers, stroking his erection, teasing his thickened head.

“God...” he hissed, pushing hard into her touch.

He grabbed at his jacket, pulling a condom free just as her warm fingers released him from his confinement.

Yanking his arms free of his jacket sleeves, he dropped it carelessly to the floor. He tore the foil packet open, rolling the protection in place with practiced ease.

Palming her tiny hips in his hands, he yanked the woman closer, catching her cry of desire in his mouth as his erection brushed her slit.

Leaning his weight into one arm, he laced his fingers through hers. His other hand grasped the hem of her skirt, bunching the soft material up around her waist. Ariana’s hips rocked up in open invitation just as his cock lined up with her moist offering...

The scent of aroused female filled his senses...

Shit... his jaw clenched tightly, the man’s entire system shutting down.

What the fuck Reddington?

“I can’t...” Grunting painfully, his body shook, his craving increasing when he felt her damp, wet heat rake his cock head.

Ariana massaged his erection lovingly, her hand halting uncertainly when she felt his abrupt retreat. “Is something wrong?” her voice shook with the emotion he had evoked.

His eyes shut tightly, his jaw clenching inflexibly. “I can’t do this.”

Squeezing the small hand in his, he fought for control until he finally had the will to pull away. Taking a deep shaky breath, he lifted off the delectable little body, releasing the grip on her hand, instead curling his fingers tightly into the hard wood of the table.

“Did I do something wrong?” Ariana stroked him harder, desperately hoping to please him. His shaft was hot and thick, she could feel him throbbing through the thin sheath of the condom.

He shook his head with undisguised turmoil. “You did nothing wrong.” he panted. “I did... I’m wrong.” he shuddered when she stroked him, teasing his sensitive head.
He placed his hand over hers, halting any further movement.

_This felt wrong._

But he was so confused. Why should it feel wrong?

What the _fuck_ was his problem! There was a insanely beautiful woman right here, with her legs opened, more than ready for him. So why had he stopped?

_You know why you stopped._

Ariana smelled wonderful. Her arousal was more than enticing.

But Lizzy...

Elizabeth was captivating...alluring...mesmerizing. He kept close to her all night, because he couldn’t get enough of her scent. He awoke periodically, just to nuzzle her neckline... to inhale that womanly aroma.

He had never smelled anything so sweet, so pure.... he had never wanted anything more than to make Elizabeth his, to claim her as his own...

Elizabeth is all he wanted.

_Lizzy was all he needed..._

Red stepped back, gripping his cock, urging the ramrod erection to recede.

“Dammit!” Red pulled at the unused condom, flinging it into a nearby trash can.

Ariana hurriedly arose from her prone position, raking the long hair out of her face. Her expression was one of concern. She modestly rearranged her clothing, the dark eyes never once leaving the man’s face.

Red sensed her distress, feeling bad for the woman.

“It’s not you.” he breathed his relief, as his erection finally started to ease, “I’m a bastard. A fucking rotten bastard.” he trembled visibly, the pain finally making itself known.

Had he been having regular sex, it would just be a mild annoyance. But after the ever present ‘cock tease’ he’d had for the last month and being denied real relief, the man was left with a deep ache in his balls.

“What can I do to help?” she was genuinely sincere.

He waved the issue briskly aside, bringing his breath under control. “I never should have allowed...”

“I started it.” she admitted freely.

“I’m engaged.” he blurted, as his erection slowly deflated, allowing him to slip it back inside his pants and it would damn well stay where it belonged.

Ariana inhaled sharply, “Oh! No one told me. I hadn’t heard.” she felt horrible.

“She was hurt and I...” Red didn’t know why he continued to talk. “We couldn’t... and I guess I just got caught up in the moment.”
“It’s okay. You didn’t do anything.” Ariana smiled softly, further adjusting her person. “Trust me, if I thought you were an asshole, I’d tell you.” she laughed shortly, then sobered. “You just miss touching her and being touched. And you slipped a little.” she shrugged slender shoulders. “But you stopped yourself.” she reminded encouragingly.

Well, that much was true at least. He sure as hell had ‘slipped’ a little.

He had to figure this out. He either had to tell Elizabeth how he felt and accept her rejection so he could move on, once and for all. Or just push her to the private little corner of his brain, fuck someone and deal with how he felt after that.

Neither option sounded ideal.

Red buttoned his shirt, “I apologize, Ariana.”

“No need, as I said. I started it.” she smiled understandably. “I didn’t realize how... riveting you were in person.” she chuckled softly, striving for a lightness she did not feel. “I do hope this doesn’t change your plans for–”

“No. No,” he assured her quickly, “I want to speak to Gabriel.”

He was just fastening the last button on his shirt when a knock on the door interrupted the conversation.

Francis peeked his head around the corner. “Oh... I was looking for... you.” his voice trailed away as he took in the scene.

Red thanked God he had stopped. If he hadn’t, he would have been balls deep in Ariana when Francis just blithely waltzed in, as was his habit these days.

Francis slowly stepped into the room examining the two occupants critically. He pulled a handkerchief from his pocket, slapping it into Red’s chest.

“You better wipe that lipstick off before Lizzy sees it.”

Shit... Red took the white cloth, rubbing his lips clean.

“Please do not say anything to her.” Ariana pleaded. “I kissed him... I didn’t know he was engaged. It is my fault. I was just so excited about...”

“Ariana...” Red halted the stilted explanation, his mood dark.

Francis looked between the two, then bent over, coming back up, casually tossing Ariana’s panties on the table.

Fuck... Red looked at the tiny scrap of cloth, his thoughts stagnated.

“Please, he did nothing wrong.” Ariana begged Francis to understand, balling the flimsy material in her clenched fists quickly.

“Ariana, I will handle this.” Red’s tone stopped the woman from speaking further. He was the one at fault, not her. He wouldn’t let her take the fall for his mistake.
“If you would be so kind as to inform Gabriel I will expect his call.” he smiled gently at the woman. “The details will be worked out later.”

She nodded solemnly, taking her leave, with but one look of total remorse before closing the door behind her.

Well, she was certainly loyal. Red could appreciate such a virtue.

“What the fuck, Red!” Francis snapped. “What the hell did you do!”

Red braced his arms on the table, breathing out his stress and relief. “I know you and Lizzy have become close friends and I appreciate your concern here, but it was just a kiss.” Red glanced over, his eyes issuing a warning.

“A kiss wasn’t all that just happened!” Francis pointed to Red’s disheveled clothes. “How can you have fucked someone else when she’s... what the hell! Lizzy is just right out there!” He jabbed his finger towards the dining area.

“I didn’t fuck Ariana.” Red stood upright, tucking his shirt back into place almost casually.

“Really?” Francis pointed down at Red’s belt, scowling. “Then what the hell did you do? Get a blow?”

“No...” Red zipped up, then buttoned his pants, his manner stiff and unyielding.

“What the fuck is wrong with you!” Francis was beside himself.

“It just happened, Francis. She kissed me and it just got carried away for a minute.” Red gritted, fastening his belt. He threw another warning glare. “Let it go.”

“Is this why you were asking if I was interested in Liz? So you could have a rationale to fuck around?”

Red narrowed his eyes at the man, “No.” he growled. “I told you, let it go.”

“Yeah, I heard that.” Francis replied sarcastically. “Oops, my mistake. So what do I tell Liz when she asks... oh, it was no big thing. Red just accidentally fell into another woman’s pussy.”

“Damn it, Francis!” Red’s tone dripped ice but the man only absently continued fixing the knot in his tie as if it were the most natural thing in the world to do at this moment.

“How far did you get?” the younger man questioned heatedly. “And don’t you dare tell me nothing happened. Because the guilt in your eyes says enough.”

Red’s temper flared, ever so glad to have an outlet for the emotion he was feeling. “Don’t you fucking judge me... don’t you fucking dare.”

Francis’s eyes narrowed into slits of fury, “You son of a bitch!”

The man drew back quickly, punching Red directly across the jaw, that fury transmitted into his action.

Reddington staggered slightly, turning slowly, wiping the blood from his mouth. His eyes were suddenly cold stones of empty darkness. “I will give you that one, because of Lizzy. Don’t ever raise your hand to me again... because you don’t know shit.”
“Maybe not, but you did fuck Lexa the whole time we were in Italy.” Francis growled an angry reminder.

Shit! What could Red say to that?

He had fucked Lexa over those three days, a lot. While Francis was in the next room.

But he and Lizzy were not playing this charade then. A charade to which Francis was not privy.

He could understand the younger man’s frustration and anger on one hand, but on the other... he was not accustomed to anyone speaking to him in that manner any longer.

“Who the hell else have you fucked when you’ve been gone?” Francis snapped. “While I was keeping your fiancée company, who were you fucking!”

Red stood perfectly silent, debating his options.

“Lizzy is the best thing to happen to you in a long time, you idiot!” Francis seethed quietly.

“I know that...” he stated deathly quiet.

“I don’t think you do.” Francis stalked to the door, “And you sure as hell aren’t worthy of her.” he flung open the door.

“Oh, and not that you probably care,” the man needled, “but Edward is out there, hitting on Liz even as we speak.” the man gritted, slamming the door closed behind him, leaving Red alone.

“Fuck!” Red spat, punching his fist into the hard oak table before hurrying out the door.
April 28

Red stalked the hall, rounding the corner into the ballroom, searching for Elizabeth.

Among the myriad of people crowding the opulent area, he finally located her over by the bar and sure enough, just as Francis had said... that bastard Edward was clearly making his move.

The little weasel overtly moved closer, pushing Francis aside without seeming to do so, totally disregarding a patiently watching guard, who smirked openly at some remark Elizabeth had made concerning Edward’s advances.

Reddington pushed back a primal urge to stalk over and slice the man’s throat from ear to ear.

His confrontation with Francis was bad enough but seeing the scene unfolding before him now, his anger reached a boiling point.

And for so many other fucking reasons.

He was sick and tired of this shit!

Enough!

“Look man, she’s not interested.” Francis snapped. “What the fuck aren’t you understanding.”

“I haven’t heard her say anything, actually.” Edward countered. “Since you won’t shut the fuck up and mind your own business long enough for her to do so.”

“I’m not interested.” Liz sighed her annoyance. “Besides, I know you are well aware that I am in a relationship.” she held up her finger in proof. “I am perfectly happ–”

“Are you sure he still wants you?” the weasel of a man questioned, moving closer. “I mean, I don’t see him coming out to defend his property.”

Red’s eyes blackened, focusing on his target as he reached out, snagging Francis’ collar, yanking the young man out of his way.

“What the fu...” Francis bitched, stumbling back, only to be caught in the sure hands of a chuckling Silas.

“Look who showed up.” Silas mumbled, steadying Francis on his feet. “I guess he does want her...”

Francis pulled at his collar, loosening his tie, watching the show begin.

“That remains to be seen.” he muttered tightly.

Silas glanced over at Francis. “We have front row seats.” He was so excited to see the master at work... finally.

“I’m here, asshole.” Red forced himself between Elizabeth and Edward, his bulk moving the other man to arm’s length.

“I thought I made it perfectly clear last time we spoke, all that was required of you.” Red stepped into the man’s space, forcing Edward back yet another step. “I see I wasn’t clear enough.”

He jabbed his fingers into the man’s chest, shoving him back. “You are not to speak to Elizabeth.” he grasped the front of the man’s shirt, jerking him forward. Red’s face, inches from the other man’s.

“Don’t look at her... don’t come near her... don’t even fucking think about her.” Red gritted, his thumb suddenly pushing in on Edward’s windpipe, focused intently on the quickly bulging veins of the man’s neck which was now in his grasp.

“...If you so much as breath in her general vicinity,” Red tilted his head, his eyes void of any real emotion, as was his tone which somehow made it more chilling, “...I will kill you.”

The silence was brittle.

“Do you fucking understand me, now?” it was pleasantly enquired.

Edward glanced over the broad shoulders, his eyes falling on Elizabeth Keen, a small smirk playing about the thin line of his mouth... openly defying such a threat.

Red’s nostrils flared at the blatant brush off, his blood surging through his body drowning out the sounds of reason.

“You fucking prick.” Red grated a snarl.

The enraged man landed a series of vicious punches to the younger man’s face, one such blow fracturing the bones inside the other man’s nose. A horrendous gush of blood covered Edward’s mouth and chin, dripping down the front of the man’s pristine shirt.

“Red!” Liz gasped, mortified.

Red’s foot swept out swiftly, knocking Edward to the tile floor. He crouched over the bastard, his face enraged, his arm drawn back for yet another series of assaults.

Edward feebly fought back with a intended right hook, which was blocked easily by Red who had clear advantage.

Red stared murderously down, increasing the tightness of his grip on the front of Edwards’s clothing. He shifted his weight hard, his knee sinking into his victims chest.

Edward gasped for air, but Red’s hand tightened systematically around the fucker’s throat.

Red’s expression was totally without emotion.

“I am.” Silas replied lazily. “I’m staying out of it, and so are you.” he reached out, snagging her arm, dragging her out of harm’s way, sensing the direction the slight debate would take.

Having wiggled his way to the wall, Edward put his foot against it, flipping both men to their sides. He struggled to overcome his opponent, but Red had worked his leg up against the man’s chest.

One strategic shove, containing all Red’s brute strength, sent the other man crashing backwards, careening into the hardwood bar.

The crowd gathered around them, having come to watch the spectacle unfold, cheering loudly now.

Francis noted the guy next to him was taking bets right and left, cash in hand, jotting names and numbers into a slender notebook.

Silas grappled for the young man’s attention. Francis pulled it momentarily away from the confrontation. The guard was waving a hundred dollar bill, wanting his own wager recorded for posterity.

But Francis was in no mood, waving the money aside.

“Take this you little asshole.” Silas warned. “Or we’ll be the next one they’re betting on.”

Francis sighed heavily, absentmindedly obeying.

Liz watched her surroundings, slightly shell shocked. Silas kept the crowd at bay, so she still had an excellent view of the horrible thing taking place before her.

She was jostled unceremoniously, having tried to forge her way forward a bit.

“Get your ass over here, dammit.” Silas pulled her back into his embrace, his burly arms protecting her on all sides. “Isn’t this cool.” it was the first time the woman had ever seen the man so animated.

Red regained his dominant position, delivering several punishing blows to Edward’s lower stomach.

“Let me go...” she struggled against Silas’ firm hold.

“Hey, the boss needs to work off some frustration.” the tall man winced as Red rammed Edward’s head into the wall. “A lot of frustration.” he clarified. “Besides, the little prick deserves it and more.”

Liz flinched as Red threw Edward towards a nearby table. The younger man spun around, grabbing a glass.

She opened her mouth to warn Red but a large palm silenced her. She tried biting the hand but Silas shook off the effort, laughing gaily.

“Behave, you little minx.” the guards attention to the center ring.

The stocky man hurled the tumbler at Red, but Reddington jerked his head slightly to the left, avoiding the projectile.

“Do not distract him.” Silas warned, scolding the woman. “Red does not need your help.”

“What the hell is wrong with you!” she gaped. “I meant you, you idiot!”

Silas grabbed her, quickly dragging her out of the way of several men who came tumbling toward them, having unfortunately been caught as a byproduct of the fight.

“He doesn’t need my help either.” Silas seemed a trifle upset by the fact, clearly wishing to join in the melee. “I think he would prefer I stay the hell out of it.” he tsked his disappointment.

“You’re a bodyguard!”

“You bodyguard.” he reminded. “Not his... per se.” he rolled his eyes with great exaggeration when the woman turned the full force of the precious pout upon him directly. “He’s defending your honor, you numb skull.”

He would have laughed in her face, if it hadn’t been for that pout. For anyone to be concerned over Red Reddington in a fight was beyond ludicrous.

“You look like a confused puppy.” His smile faded quickly enough as he noted four men entering the bar. Silas zeroed in on them, his Spidey senses tingling.

Silas’ hand went to his weapon just as the new arrivals reached for theirs. The tall man leading the way held up a stilling hand, his interest clearly caught by the identity of the participants of the ruckus.

Elizabeth was taken aback by the difference in her guard. The fun loving, carefree, flippant personage of a second ago, had been replaced by a coldly calculating individual that she had never met before.

Silas glanced back and forth between both sides, hyper vigilant, ready should his services be required.

“It’s Anthony.” Francis sidled up beside them, explaining the situation as it now stood. “It’s his hotel.”

Silas half nodded, checking the whereabouts of his charge.

Liz was meandering her way through the crowd, pushing and shoving into a spot that she could maneuver to the front.

“That little ingrate...” Silas gritted, bolting forward with Francis right beside him. “Who ever gets her first, takes her out and spanks her ass hard!” the man growled angrily. “And not in a good way.”

The woman pushed hard at the gathered crowd, breaking through to the front just as Red stalked towards the other man, drawing back his fist yet again.

Edward Costa looked as if he had been through hell. His clothes were ripped and bloodied as was his face and hands. He was bruised and clearly broken in more places than one.

Liz stepped between the men, her face allowing her fear, her eyes pleading for some semblance of sanity to prevail.

Edward took the opportunity presented since Red’s focus was now elsewhere. He looked around for any weapon available, finding it instantly, turned on its side, laying there just begging to be used.

He hefted the metal seat, his intentions more than apparent. Never mind that Elizabeth was between himself and his former assailant.

Silas’ hand gripped the leg of the barstool that Edward was just about to smash into Reddington.

Red saw the danger immediately, choosing to bring the woman into his arms, turning hastily to protect her from any harm.

He shielded her, his arms bands of steel. He waited for the impact which never came.

He had not seen Silas’ intervention.

Silas’ large hand engulfed Edward’s face, shoving hard. The force landed the smaller man clear across the length of the dance floor.
Silas grinned as loud booing and hissing was directed his way. He had after all, broken up a perfectly good fight. The guard held his hands up apologetically, his grin firmly in place.

Red slowly turned his head, then lifted his body, bringing the woman along with him.

He straightened, searching for the little prick who had been the focus of his murderous rage.

Red watched as the ‘prick’ was unceremoniously escorted from the area by the Security detail of the hotel in which they resided.

He nodded his gratitude to the man Francis had earlier identified as Anthony Burke, owner of the establishment. Tony grinned back at him sheepishly.

Red turned his attention to a very anxiously awaiting, Elizabeth Keen.

“Are you all right?” she measured his physique critically, zeroing in on his bloodied knuckles. The only marks she could visibly see at the moment, was the blood of the other man on Red’s clothes and a slight bruise forming to the left of his chin.

“Oh, he’s fine, as usual.” Francis finished off his tumbler, letting the empty glass thump heavily into the bar. “He always lands on his feet. Everyone knows that.”

“Why don’t you go fuck yourself.” Red returned in kind and for a moment, Francis’ face lost it’s belligerent glaze, but soon enough it was back.

“If anyone would know about fucking... it would be you, right Red.”

Silas was completely perplexed by the change in the men’s attitude.

Red shifted his own dark gaze, finding Dembe staring at him with furled brows. He waved aside any unasked questions with a curt motion of his hand.

“Get the hell out of my sight, Francis.” Red gripped the corner of the wall so tightly, his fingers turned white.

“Red!” Liz had never heard Red speak to Francis in such a manner.

Francis glanced at the woman, feeling for her. She was in the middle of something she could not possibly understand. He thought to make it better for her by easing some of the tension, if only for appearances sake.

“Let’s keep this somewhat civil, shall we.” Francis directed his statement to the older man. “We have to work together remember.”

Reddington lifted a cold stare. “No, we don’t.” he cut a meaningful look in Silas’ direction.

The guard could not believe what was being asked of him... asked hell, demanded.

Francis smiled wanly in encouragement to Elizabeth before Silas directed him away from the immediate vicinity.

Elizabeth was completely lost. She watched the young man literally being escorted by her own bodyguard, her friend and confidant suddenly persona non grata, apparently.

What the hell was going on?
She turned expectant eyes to a patiently waiting Red Reddington.

“We have a problem.” Red bleakly announced. “Well, two problems, really.” he conceded.

“When are you going to share this with me?” she asked plaintively, reaching out to touch the slight bruising on his face but his hand prevented the move.

She slowly dropped her arm, a chill traversing her body. He had never denied her access to any of his person before.

“Red, what’s wrong.” she had to know.

“Francis hits like a girl.” he muttered his annoyance before turning his attention to the real problem.

“Yes, but more importantly, he thinks I’m fucking around on you.”

The woman took a few moments to digest that statement. “Okay, why?”

Red hated to have to do this, but his former colleague had left him no choice. Either he told the story or Francis would. It was infinitely better coming from the source.

“When I was away with Francis on a business trip,” he began slowly, “I reacquainted myself with an old lover and when I wasn’t with Francis, I was with her.”

Liz closed her eyes, making the connection. “And we’ve supposedly been together for over a year.” her head whipped around aimlessly. “Is she here?” she squeaked her dismay.

“She was here.” the man admitted. “She left.”

She waited with bated breath.

“An associate kissed me and Francis saw evidence of it, tonight.” he furthered the sordid tale.

“Oh.” she was a little deflated. “So he knows about this lover and now this woman tonight.”

“Yes.” he verified. “When I asked if he was interested in you...”

“You asked what?!?” her tone was particularly shrill at this latest development.

Red held up a silencing hand, “He thought I asked because I wanted him to cover my tracks. He’s understandably pissed, in your defense.”

She was touched that Francis was such a good friend, even going up against Red for her. She gathered her thoughts, one most prevalent coming to mind.

“Did you have sex with her?”

“No...”

“But you were going to?” she needed confirmation.

“Yes.” he answered quietly.

He saw it coming, allowing it to take shape, taking the full brunt of her hand as it connected to the same cheek where Francis had hit him earlier.
Liz gasped her shock, having no idea why she had done such a thing.

He turned back, his eyes devoid of any emotion.

“I-I don’t know why I—I” she was flabbergasted. Stumbling through her churning emotions, attempting to find a logical explanation. “Oh my God!” her eyes grew wide as the stain of her hand print reddened his cheek. “I am so sorry.”

The words sounded to hollow and nonsensical to her. This entire night had been one big cluster fuck in her opinion, and she had just made it so much worse.

Why in God’s name would she do such a thing? “Red, I am so very, very sorry. I don’t know why I did that. I just don’t.” her hands covered her mouth, her fingers tremulous.

“It’s all right, you hit like a girl too.” he turned serious for her stricken face, touched his heart. “I’ve put you in a hell of a predicament?” he acknowledged.

Liz was still reeling, trying to figure out exactly what was going on here. She had no right to feel the feelings that his story evoked inside her.

Was she jealous again. Because if she were honest with herself, she had felt that particular emotion after their encounter with Lexa.

She had been thinking about it and that was the only answer that made any sense. And now, her actions tonight.

They weren’t dating. They weren’t engaged. But... she had about kissed him yesterday.

She had wanted to kiss him. She could freely admit that.

To think of him having been with this other woman tonight, touching that woman how she wanted Red to touch...

Her cheeks flamed and she turned away so the man could not see her conflicting emotions.

“I know that we’re here, playing roles. But I should remembered that they don’t know that.” He explained as best he could. “And for that, I do apologize. I didn’t mean to embarrass you.”

She glanced around the quiet enough bar now, watching the staff put things to right. She did not know exactly what to say or do, so she allowed the man to continue without interruption.

“You are my main priority and that I let my libido get the better of me...” he growled, angry with himself. “I let my judgement get away from me and I have probably fucked up a good relationship between us all because I—”

“We can fix this.” she hastily interceded, sensing where he was going. “Just let me handle this my way, I have an idea.” she advised quietly. “I am more concerned at the moment, for this thing between you and Francis.”

“I don’t give a shit about Francis.” he snapped. “I understand his alliance to you, hell I even commend it... but there is a line, and he crossed it.”

“You’re just angry right now.” she suddenly saw the humor of the situation. “You know what I think is really bothering you?” she leaned closer, lowering her voice and Red could smell that scent he had been thinking about all afternoon. “I think that Red Reddington has found out... that he is human after all.”

She turned thoughtful for a moment, remembering her own humanity. “We all have our little frailties, Red. Myself included.”

Red’s brow furrowed slightly, impressed with her maturity.

“You have needs, you’re a man.” she lifted knowledgeable brows. “God knows you’re a man. A very attractive one that women flock to. It would be unnatural if you did not... respond occasionally.”

“This is just a little hitch in our plans that can be rectified.” she touched his lapel tentatively. “Will you trust me to do that?”

Red looked at her in a different light. He had expected something entirely different, more than pleasantly surprised at how she was handling the situation.

A situation entirely of his making.

“I jeopardized what we’ve built and I’m very angry and disappointed in myself.”

“We all make mistakes once in a while, even you.” she smiled up at him. “You just needed to blow off some steam and as you said, it’s perfectly natural. A biological imperative.”

“Need or not, I promise it will not happen again.” the man never lied... to her. “I truly didn’t mean for it to happen, Elizabeth.”

She about laughed out right, but caught herself, when she realized how serious he was.

“It was a huge mistake. She wasn’t what I wanted.” he got lost in the narrative. “I wanted y–”

“They’re headed this way.” she whispered urgently, putting on an innocent face.

The man’s head fell back, the frustration apparent on his face. God, he had been so close.

Mark and Francis approached somewhat warily, unsure if they would be welcomed at this stage. The man only had eyes for Red’s face. He and Silas had a long talk on the merits of loyalty and misunderstandings.

It was Silas’ considered opinion, an opinion Francis valued regardless of how their relationship seemed on the surface... that the young man had acted hastily in his judgement where Red was concerned.

Besides the fact, that Reddington was the father figure that Francis had never had, when Red had said what he had said before, about their business association being terminated... Francis had totally been thrown a loop.

It was the very last thing he had expected or wanted.

He did not know how to get back into the older man’s good graces, but he did know, he was damn well going to try.

“We’re meeting within the hour.” Mark stated without preamble.

“We’re bidding on Anne’s holdings, apparently.” Francis explained. “Via the terms of her Will.”
“Where?” Red’s tone was short.

Mark’s brow crinkled at the man’s clipped tone, but he pointed across the way to a Conference Room.

Mark and Francis, having delivered the needed info, took their leave. Both sensed there was something left unsaid, which needed to be continued, between Liz and Red.

Francis nodded his farewell, regretful an opening had not arisen to make amends.

Liz called out after his retreating figure. “Francis, wait.”

He halted his steps, glancing at Red expectantly.

The man looked away. Not a good sign.

“Red told me what happened and while I’m not happy about it...” Liz scolded the individual in question with a look. “I do understand it.”

“Excuse me?” Francis immediately questioned, then caught his reaction, regretting it.

“When you went on that trip?” Francis nodded slowly, letting her know he was following along. “Red and I had an argument, well, fight actually. We didn’t speak to each other...” she checked with the man who brooded silently beside her, “for what, a couple of weeks?”

Red lowered his eyes, not sure he wanted to be a part of this.

Francis kept his opinion to himself this time.

“It’s no excuse, I know.” Liz placated hurrying on with her story. “But to be honest, I had...” she managed a guilty look, “I mean...when Red was gone...”

Red snapped his head around sharply, feeling an instant flare of anger.

This was handling it her own way! he seethed inwardly. Where the hell was she going with this?

Francis blanched visibly, thinking he knew where this was going.

Red stepped closer to the woman, his gaze fixed and heated. “What the hell are you saying?”

Liz thought he was playing his part very well. So well in fact, she backed away slightly from such intensity.

“I-I think it’s evident.” she thought an addendum was needed however. “You can do it, but I can’t?” she asked innocently.

Red’s rage erupted incandescently. He knew she was playing the part expected or at least she had damned well better be. He knew it was damned hypocritical, given he had been with Lexa.

But it didn’t negate the fact that he felt... an outrage so deep, it was coloring his perspective completely.

Had somebody touched her? Had someone fucked her? How the hell would he have not known?

She better be playing a part.
He grasped her arm tightly. “Who?” he demanded gruffly.

“It doesn’t matter.” she waved it off nonchalantly, mentally preparing the next phase of her agenda.

“Who, dammit!” Red growled out, hissing venomously.

“Red you’re hurting her.” Francis gripped his arm slightly as a deterrent.

“Fuck off, Francis!” Red clenched his jaw tightly, jerking away from the hold. He glared down at the unsuspecting woman. “Elizabeth...” he warned furiously.

The woman certainly thought he was playing the part well. This guy could be an actor if he wanted, a damned good one. She wanted to match his intensity, hanging her head shamefully as she blurted the first name to come to mind.

“...Donald.”

“You fucked Donald!” Red snapped his disbelief.

Francis closed his eyes wearily, feeling for both parties.

Red turned away, leaning his arm unto a convenient wall, trying desperately to calm himself.

How the hell could she fuck Ressler! Of all damned people!

Red tried to wrap his mind around such a concept and then he remembered... this was an act, then why he wondered... did it feel so damned real?

Why did it hurt so much?

She was lying, she had to be. He had to get his head straight... she was just making up a story to sell the relationship.

That’s all this was.

“Maybe I misunderstood everything tonight.” Francis tried to mend fences for all concerned. “If you’ve forgiven him, who the hell am I to make waves?”

“He wouldn’t push me to resume relations because of my incident and I thought maybe he had turned off to me.” Liz used her profiling skills to her advantage. “He saw me at my worst.” she grimaced. “We had some major mis-communication going on.”

“So, you forgive him?” Francis was more than relieved.

“I forgive him, but that doesn’t mean we’re done talking.” Liz stressed.

“All right then. Well... I’ll leave you to talk.” Francis leaned in, kissing her temple, hugging her gently. “Red... maybe we can talk later, too?”

He didn’t receive an answer, but he thought that the woman could get Red in a better mood. Female persuasion and all that.

When Francis was a good length away, Liz blew out a relieved breath.

“Well, that was stressful.” she laughed shortly, pushing off the wall she had leaned against, only to be dragged back to her original spot by a well placed hand against her chest. “Wha—”
“Did you?” Red’s tone was barely civil.

“What the hell are you–” she pushed at the contact, his palm burning her skin beneath the elegant gown she sported.

“Did you!” Red hissed angrily.

Red knew he was being completely unreasonable. What the fuck was his problem... why couldn’t he get the images out of his head of the woman and Donald Ressler intertwined in some ungodly, erotic scene.

“Lower your voice dammit!” she snapped irritably. “Francis will think–”

“Fuck Francis!” his eyes blazed irately. “Or maybe... you already have.”

“Excuse the hell out of me!” she was more than incensed at such a ridiculous accusation.

“Is that why Francis hung around so much?” He spat the allegation.

“Red Reddington, I’m about to smack you again!” Liz was beside herself, not understanding his passionate outburst. “What the hell are you talking about!”

Red stared down at the woman glowering up at him, his own eyes pinpoints of suppressed torment. He could not stand this a moment longer.

“Fuck it!”

This thing between them... a turning point had just been reached, at least to his way of thinking and this shit needed to be settled.

He was unintentionally hurting her, in so many ways.

He was hurting.

She might not admit that something significant was happening between them. But that did not negate the fact, that it was.

He needed something concrete, dammit! Some sort of sign, that she needed him as much as he needed her. That she fucking wanted him as much as he did her.

He would give her time to acclimate herself. To become comfortable with him... he could be patient, if she was his end goal.

If she would just open herself to the possibilities, to allowing him to love her... he could wait.

He just needed... something.

And he needed it... now.

He was tired of waiting, he was tired of this cat and mouse game.

But Elizabeth was reaching her end game too.

She pushed hard at his chest, sliding away from his bulk, only to be caught by a firm hand pulling her back under his influence.
“Do you want to be with Tom?” Red locked his arm low around her back, holding the combative woman in place, until she eased her struggles to get away from him.

“What?” she shook her head in confusion.

“Do you love Tom.” he stressed the words.

“No!” she scowled her confusion.

The man stared at her silently, jerking his head in a curt nod, furthering her confusion.

“I don’t love To–” she began, only to be silenced by the firm press of his lips against hers.

Carding his fingers through her hair, Red cupped the back of Liz’s head angling her slightly, capturing more of her pouty lips against his own demanding ones.

Without thought, she found herself tip-toeing, leaning against his solid frame, increasing the pressure of their kiss.

Oh my God... she was kissing Red and it felt... right.

Who the hell was she kidding? It felt... perfect.

His lips were so soft, so warm, gentle but experienced. She mewled softly as his large hand spanned the width of her back, drawing her even closer into his warmth.

Sighing in contentment, Liz caught the subtle scent of his cologne as it engulfed her, making her feel as though the only safe place in the entire Universe, was right here... enfolded in his arms.

She exhaled shakily, inching closer into his embrace, obviously pleasing the man. She’d never heard Red issue that low gravelly sound before. She found that she liked it and very much wanted to hear him do it again.

It made her tummy flutter chaotically.

She inched her hand up his chest, her fingers clawing at his collar, in a bid to gain more connectivity with the large man.

His manner had softened with her compliance, the kisses becoming more sensuous in nature. His lips conformed to her’s erotically, the tip of his tongue flicking gently against her own from time to time.

Her senses reeled, a gnawing hunger growing inside her. She felt a definite dampness moisten the heat between her legs.

Red had never felt anything as wonderful as what he was feeling. Elizabeth... finally in his arms.

He wrapped her tighter in his hold, drawing her closer, feeling the soft feminine curves of her body meet his more masculine solidity.

Her firm breasts pressed into his hard chest as his hand slid down, settling along the curve of her hip, his fingers reaching for the swell of her rounded bottom. He curled the appendages into the fullness of her buttocks, spreading them slowly outward.

The woman moved up against his ever hardening arousal, encouraging such familiarity.
Her waist was so small in comparison to the circumference of his hand.

He felt his blood heat as it coursed through his veins.

Just this simple touch of lips, the feel of her body against his... and he felt the change.

_This_ was what he needed. That glimmer of hope.

She was not only kissing him back, she seemed to be enjoying it as much as he.

It was almost as if she had needed his embrace, his touch. As much as he had needed to touch. He was experienced enough to sense that need went deeper for the woman.

Her hands clung to him wantonly, her lips hungrily devoured his mouth.

He had no problem with returning such emotions. Even though he was fully aware of the public display they must be making of themselves. But they could just go fuck themselves.

Just as much as he had felt her need for him, he felt his for her, grow exponentially.

A fierce protectiveness flooded his system like never before.

He needed to shelter her little body safely with the bulk of his own as he made love to her. He needed to crawl between her beautiful thighs and stake his claim. He wanted to flood her body with his arousal, which grew even now, to unbelievable proportions.

He allowed her to feel his involvement.

To love her... like she needed, like he wanted, suddenly felt within reach. It was so close, he could almost taste it, just as soon... he would be tasting the essence of her.

The thought made his mouth water.

Elizabeth was his, whether she knew it or not.

Now, it was just a matter of time, before he made her understand it, completely.

April 28

Red kissed Lizzy’s little mouth to his heart’s content, because she sure as hell wasn’t going anywhere.

Besides the fact that he was enjoying this too damn much to let go, she was damn near crawling under his skin, craving more, which he was more than happy to provide.

Her small tongue tentatively stroked his, eliciting a deep rumbling groan of approval from the man. There was something about that sound that sent jolts of awareness into the essence of Liz’s being.

Red adjusted his hold on her, bringing her body flush with his, allowing her to feel his growing arousal.

Red was too experienced, sexually, to be reacting like this to a simple kiss. He had to get in better control, but dammit... he had waited so long.

He broke the kiss, allowing her a full breath. His lips teasingly brushing hers, withholding just enough contact to make the woman want more.

“Lizzy...” he muttered, a raw plea issued against her soft mouth.

She had never felt anything as sensual as this. Red didn’t just kiss with his mouth, his whole body was involved. He nuzzled her nose with his own, touched cheeks, the prickly days growth reminding her of his masculinity.

She did not mind in the least, that the coarse fuzz chaffed her skin slightly.

His hands could not be stilled, not that she wanted that, in the least. He was exploring her body inch by inch, his fingers deft and probing into secret areas that even she did not know existed, until his touch awakened her.

She fell into the world of sensual delirium he was creating. She had never been so involved, so concentrated on a kiss... until this moment.

Liz ran her hands up under Red’s jacket, feeling the man’s warmth, curving her fingers into the muscles of his back.

He tensed slightly, breaking her concentration. He cursed softly under his breath, slowly releasing the pressure on her lips.

“What?” she asked breathlessly, her confusion genuine, her flesh needing his particular brand of abuse to continue.

“Dembe...” he grated the explanation, his eyes seeking out the intruder into their suddenly private world he had so meticulously created.

“Oh...” Liz’s cheeks flushed as she tried to disengage from the man.

Red gripped her quickly, holding her in place as he looked over her shoulder. “Get Silas.”
Dembe nodded his assent, taking his leave.

“We need to talk.” his eyes reassured her.

She nodded slowly, lowering her face to hide the flush reddening her cheeks. “All right.”

Red lifted her eyes to meet his. His fingers stroked her cheek intimately, his gaze holding hers almost hypnotically. He slowly lowered his mouth, his lips parting hers erotically.

Liz’s tummy flipped as she felt a surge of excitement.

This was so much better than her dream. She didn’t think she’d ever say that, but to actually feel the heat of his kiss... the demanding standard this man expected.

That dream had been erotic as hell, had even made her orgasm.

But to actually feel Red Reddington’s hands on her, to feel his lips...

It felt better than she had ever imagined. There were no words that came to mind to describe the experience.

Red finally broke the kiss just second before Dembe arrived with Silas.

“This shouldn’t take too long.” he reluctantly released the hold he had on her, both physically and mentally. “Silas will watch over you.” he directed her towards the large guard with a gentle urge of his hand.

“I’ll be along shortly.” Red handed her over to Silas begrudgingly.

Silas noted with amusement, the new air of possessiveness in Red’s tone.

“Come on Trouble,” he crooked his head accordingly. “Let’s see what kind of mischief you can get into before your Old Man comes back.”

Liz looked at the guard, her expression confident. “He’s not old... not at all.” she headed for the elevators as directed, with but one lingering look back to her “old man”.

“Now, if we’re talking about you...” she held her smile, her mood high.

Silas’ brow furrowed slightly. “Hey, don’t let this gray hair fool you.”

“Of course not... daddy.” Liz was suddenly having the time of her life. She could feel Red’s eyes the entire way to the exit. She found her hips swaying provocatively. She even found herself hoping that Red was some what moved by the gesture.

She felt absolutely sinful, and it felt wonderful.

“You know, when I’m normally called that, it’s followed by me, spanking bare ass.” Silas replied seriously, bringing her back to the present.

“I bet that costs you a pretty penny.” she quipped, stepping into the elevator.

“I’m not charged for my spankings.” the guard boasted. “I’m asked for them.”

Liz tsked her disappointment, “And here I thought a man of your advanced age would know what he was doing in the bedroom.” she looked at him pityingly. “That they have to ask for more... really Silas.”

The guard pulled his ear, grinning slowly. “Okay,” he conceded good naturedly, “I’ll give you that one.” he seemed impressed. “Red must have kissed some good sense into you. Because you sure didn’t have it before.”

It took longer to secure the portion of Anne’s estate than Red wanted. He headed back upstairs. Anticipation heightening the closer he got to their room.

He was still having difficulty believing that he and Lizzy had kissed tonight.

He wanted to taste that sweet little mouth again, so damned badly. He had to hold himself in check, from literally running the last stretch of hallway which led to their hotel room.

Silas waited outside the door holding his grin with stressed difficulty.

“Oh, shut the hell up.” Red disgusted, opening the door, entering with but one disdainful glance backward.

Silas waved another guard into position as he himself, went to make his rounds.

Red had Security throughout the hotel, and Silas periodically and faithfully checked each and every position.

Finding the main room empty, Red crossed the space to the bathroom, tapping gently.

He shoved the door open, his eyes tracking across the room quickly, before falling on the vision in the tub.

The blissful woman was submerged in the steamy waters, completely relaxed in a way that had been unavailable to her for so long. A pile of bubbles was threatening to cascade to the floor and the scent of roses, permeated the air.

“Enjoying your bath, sweetheart?” Red grinned, stepping closer, staring down at her serene face.

“Uhm hmm.” she sighed. “I’ve refilled it... twice.”

Red took off his jacket, tossing it on the nearby stool before rolling up his sleeves, enjoying the small respite from the humid room.

He leaned over, brushing his lips over her forehead, caressing her damp curls.

He sat on the side of the spacious tub, trailing his fingers over the mountain of bubbles.

She sat forward, handing him a sponge. “Would you?”

“Would I what?” he took the offering. He noted an amused smile playing on her lips for his quip.

“Do my back.” she answered innocently.

The man soaped the sponge liberally, stroking her back in generous swirls. He smiled softly as she moaned her appreciation, her long naked back, erupting in a series of goosebumps.
“Your back...” he watched his handiwork, his gaze heating slightly. “Your front...” his tone held a wealth of hidden meaning. “Whatever it takes.”

She chuckled appreciatively. “The meeting went well, I assume?” she glanced back at him slightly. “You’re in a good mood.”

Red got lost in his activity, slowly working the sponge in a circular pattern until she trembled with the good feeling.

“I’m always in a good mood when I’m with you.” he dropped the sponge into the steamy water, his palm taking over. “And yes, I got what I wanted.” he shrugged.

“When have you not.” she was curious.

“Well, the night is young.” he philosophized. “And I’m trying my best to get my worst critic in a better mood, even as I speak.” he drew shapeless designs on the silky flesh.

“Well, what ever you’re doing... it’s working.” she closed her eyes to the delectable touch of the man. “Tell me about your meeting.”

“I don’t want to.” it was the last thing he wanted right now.

“But I insist because,” she teased, “I am your worst critic. Something interesting must have happened... I don’t want to hear it on the streets or from Silas.”

He thought back over the evening trying to think of something that might amuse her, his hands spreading over the small of her back, disappearing into the water, his middle finger easing a searing path down the indenture of her bottom.

“Pissed a rival off.” Red spread his fingers over the slight bulge in either direction.

“W-Who? Why?” she tried not to stiffen at such an unexpected invasion of her privacy, finding herself lifting slightly for any further exploration the man might think to attempt.

Red found her reaction not only encouraging, but slightly amusing. “A man named Charles DeCarlo.” he allowed his finger to remain stationary for a long beat. “I find the man annoying and will do anything to return the favor.”

The small talk helped the woman gather her equilibrium. She gently removed his hand from her backside, casting him a scolding glance.

Liz shook her head, slightly exasperated, flicking bubbles at him.

The man grinned down at her as he arose, “I’m going to make some quick calls.” he informed her. “I do not want to be disturbed tonight.”

Liz was left wondering exactly what the night would bring.

The woman’s heart was thudding in her chest. She wondered if the man had felt the slight vibration his touch had caused throughout her body.

Her cheeks tinted, knowing that she had risen into that touch, clearly wanting more.

Did Red think she was brazen? She felt she was. She was reacting to this man like no other before him. At times she felt like a schoolgirl in comparison to his worldly personification.
He had not made any other overt move and yet, just that one simple gesture on his part, had turned her insides to mush. She would have done anything he would have asked of her and what’s more... she truly thought Red was aware of the fact.

She toweled herself off, her thoughts still on the subject. She could still feel the imprint of his hand on her bottom. The woman looked at herself in the mirror and for the first time, actually liked what she saw.

She always thought her hair was mousy brown. Tonight it looked to be a deep dark chestnut, the soft damp curls framing her face seemed to highlight the blueness of her eyes.

She always wanted green eyes. Why was it women especially, wanted something other than what God had given them. But tonight was different.

Red Reddington had made her feel desirable in that tub. She glanced at the object in question. It was just a tub. Why then, was she smiling so broadly.

She dressed with the utmost care. She thought about make-up even, but decided against such measures.

She crossed to the door, her hand hesitating on the knob. She took a deep breath, stilling her racing heart.

Walking from the bathroom, she found Red propped up in bed, reading. His pajamas matching her black satin gown.

The man glanced up, his eyes running the length of her figure with masculine appreciation.

“That’s a pretty robe.” he smiled gently at her approach.

He watched her move across the room, his brows lifting slightly as she tossed the outer garment to the end of the bed.

“Turn around, let me see.” Red’s eyes followed the curves of her shapely figure, the unveiling had revealed.

She glanced over at him, hesitating.

Doing as he requested, she turned slowly, her arms slightly lifted from her sides.

It was a very beautiful, figure hugging, ankle length gown, with slits up to her thighs, edged in the most delicate and baby soft lace she had ever felt.

Thin straps and a sweetheart neckline trimmed in more lace, completed the top. The satin rippled like dark water when she moved. Besides being lovely, it was incredibly comfortable.

“You like it?” She asked breathlessly over her shoulder, awaiting his verdict.

If she was wearing anything under that slip, Red couldn’t tell. And believe me, the man was looking. But there was an absence of any lines, so that said a lot. It was suddenly very warm in the room.

“Very much.” Red nodded minutely, turning back the covers, inviting her in. Again, his gaze was saying so much more than his words.

Elizabeth felt her heart begin the old familiar thudding, the one she had determinedly stilled in the bathroom.

She hiked the satin to her knees, climbing in with his help, before settling with her good leg comfortably beneath her.

Red had to admit, he felt a shit load of tension he’d been carrying around all evening, vanish into thin air.

He hoped this meant that the woman had forgiven him for his transgressions with Ariana Sanchez.

He had embarrassed her tonight.

The man was trying to formulate an articulate way to get back into the woman’s good graces when she spoke...

“I’m sorry I slapped you.”

“I’m sorry you slapped me too.” he moved closer to her, his eyes dropping to the cleft of her breasts. “Have I told you how much I like that gown?”

“Not in so many words.” she leaned into her hand, laying a soft kiss against his mouth.

The woman pulled back after the most fleeting of contact, unsure of herself and of the man’s reaction.

Red instantly followed her retreat, his arm encircling her waist, his weight pressing her form back into the cool sheets of the bed.

His mouth parted hers hungrily, his tongue entering the warm moist mouth without invitation. He pressed his body closer still, his arms tightening. His free hand filtered into the hair of the nape of her neck, his fingers gently holding her from any supposed escape, as he completed the kiss to his satisfaction.

Liz lifted her arms about his neckline, her fingers massaging the area of the base of his scalp, her mouth responding amorously.

Red shifted his weight over the lithe frame, his leg parting hers, wedging into the heated space. He could feel the dampness of her center infiltrate the satin covering his thick thigh.

The man nudged the area insistently, attempting to feel more of the steamy cove.

Liz felt her nipples harden against the satin gown, her breasts swelling with the need to be touched. She lifted into the hardness of his chest, pleading for his attention.

Red’s fingers teased the small of her back, encouraging any closeness, his mouth working feverishly on the sweetness of her lips.

His free hand eased the strap from the warmth of her shoulder, his mouth breaking away, leaving Elizabeth gasping at the coldness his departure caused.

He kissed a searing path, his teeth gently nibbling the lobe of her ear, as his mouth traveled the curve of her neck unto the beginning swell of her breast.

The man’s fingers grasped the satin gown, bunching the material as he dragged it up her thigh and in doing so, easing his leg further into the heated patch of her middle as his lips covered the pert nipple of right breast.
He sank his teeth gently around the throbbing little peak, nipping playfully, before soothing any supposed pain with the coarseness of his tongue.

Even through the cloth, Elizabeth was amazed at how good the sensation felt. She grasped his head, holding it to the pleasurable pastime, lifting into his demands.

A soft mew of contentment escaped her throat.

The woman tugged at the flimsy strap, exposing the full plumpness of one alabaster breast.

Red lifted his head, his eyes taking in the visual beauty for a long moment. The soft lace had inadvertently caught on the tight peak, causing the voluptuous mound to bounce erotically before being completely unveiled.

Red palmed her bottom, dragging her up against his thigh, pulling a sharp sound of enjoyment from the woman’s throat. She pushed into the touch, rolling her hips against his muscled thigh. She felt her clit throb deliciously. His thigh was suddenly replaced by his cloth covered shaft.

The man pushed against the rapidly wetting satin, feeling his own nightwear being saturated. He flicked her straining nipple, tightening the peak against his tongue.

Liz wrapped her leg around Red’s waist, giving her the leverage to ride the man’s offering with more determination. She held her breath, feeling the height of orgasm quickly approaching.

She had never felt this lustful before in her entire life. She found it exhilarating.

Liz allowed her emotional state to evolve naturally, not once thinking of stemming the tide of overwhelming passion she was experiencing, uncaring as to its ramifications.

She felt the onslaught begin, closing her eyes to better experience each stage of what was to come.

Red religiously watched her face, the ecstasy beginning.

He felt her hips jerking quickly to the tempo her body dictated. Her breath was being released in quick, ever increasing, sharp short bursts.

Her pouty lips panted breathlessly, her hands gripping his shoulders more intensely with each moment she neared her release.

The woman stiffened, curling her fingers painfully into his arms, as she held her breath, convulsing moments later, shattering with the intensity which washed over her.

Red dropped his mouth against her’s, catching her cry of release, her thighs trembling against his own. Her shaky breaths beat sensually against his kiss swollen mouth.

His shaft jerked eagerly in response, his body tensing, his muscles flexing in salacious anticipation of his much needed climax.

He barely heard, let alone paid attention, to the discrete tap on the door of their room. But his mind was screaming out against any such invasion.

He acted on instinct.

He felt his hardness flex painfully. He took Liz’s hand, guiding it downward, until her small fingers trailed uncertainly over the tender flesh. The satin only added to the effect.
He could feel every nuance of her touch. He lowered his head, his mouth gently teasing her nipple, his tongue suckling her zealously.

He curved her fingers tightly to his cock, rapidly stroking his turgid rigidity. Within seconds, despite the distraction, Red reached his own pinnacle.

The man groaned soulfully, his cockhead throbbed achingly, streams of cum pulsating from the tender slit.

His fists curled tightly into the sheets as he keyed his body down to a more normal state. He ground a hoarse rejoinder...

“What!”

There was a momentary pause on the other side of the door and then a hardly suppressed smirk from the opposite side. “Hey boss...” Silas’ amusement tinged voice reported almost joyously, “it’s all clear out here. How you guys doing in there.”

“Fuck off, Silas.” Red snapped his dissension. His head jerking angrily to the closed door, his eyes allowing his annoyance.

“Aye, Aye, Captain.” the man laughed heartily as he walked away.

The woman sighed blissfully, tugging the man’s lips down to her waiting softness. Red instantly forgot all about the slight nuisance of the unexpected distraction, preferring to concentrate his full efforts where they belonged.

The evening hadn’t quite turned out how Red thought, but to have shared this new intimacy, a closeness with Lizzy... it was all he ever wanted.

He knew the rest would come in time. Now he just had to be patient. Not an easy task, mind you. Especially after tonight.

But for her... to be what she needed. He could and he would.

Red took a quick moment to change out of his soiled clothing before hastily returning to the woman. He looked down for a second on the beautiful features.

But then, he still had this.

She was laying against him now, snuggling with him. So, that was something. Definitely something.

Stroking her hair, he kissed the top of her head, getting lost in the feel of her fingers lazily stroking over the buttons of his top.

Listening as her breathing deepened, he enjoyed the hypnotic feeling of her fingers.

Red quickly followed her into sleep.
A small, lazy smile worked its way across Red Reddington’s face, his thoughts instantly focused on one thing, and one thing only.

Last night... he had made Lizzy come.

More to the point, she allowed herself to come.

More surprisingly... Lizzy helped him to that eventuality.

It hadn’t happened per his usual style when with a lover granted, but Liz hadn’t seemed to mind, and God knows, he certainly had not either.

Regardless of the specific mechanics of their lovemaking, it had happened and had felt damned good.

And had been very much needed, at least on his part. He hadn’t felt this relaxed, this serene, in quite a while.

But it was the emotional peace...serenity, that astounded him the most. An aspect he had very much missed in his life.

It was as he once stated. Sex can feel great, but if it’s lacking emotion attachment... the emptiness in your heart, overwhelms the orgasmic high soon enough.

The need for that emotional connection... the love from your partner was an essential desire which needed fulfillment.

Red could have fucked Ariana and had a decent enough time, true. Eventually, his euphoric elation would have crashed, leaving him empty inside and yearning for more.

Yearning for the one he truly desired.

Lizzy...

He loved Lizzy.

What had ended up being a more sensual, and a damned sight more comfortable, version of back seat petting... left him satisfied in ways he hadn’t felt in years, because of his love for the woman.

He had been sated, not only physically... but emotionally. And it was an intensely wonderful feeling.

Red rolled from the bed, answering nature’s call. After which he returned, then stood for a long moment, simply staring down at the peacefully sleeping woman.

He hesitated, torn between duty or pleasure. He should get dressed for the day, that’s what he should do.

The man pulled the covers aside, laying back down beside Elizabeth. He propped himself up on his elbow, resting his hand on his forehead, just watching her sleep.
He knew instantly, staring at the pretty profile, that duty could wait. The business could wait. He had made the correct decision.

While he would have loved to have completed their late night activities, he could see now, in the light of day, that it was better for her... that they had not.

There was a part of him that would love to wake her right now by crawling between her silky thighs and bury his face against her folds before sliding into her wet warmth.

Before that eventuality, he realized, he would first have to deal with the emotional fallout of what had occurred between them.

They had went from a kiss to orgasm within the span of only a couple hours.

Liz had to get her bearings. She needed to come to terms with what had happened.

She would most likely feel guilty.

Why did women always feel guilt after something so incredibly beautiful.

She was an FBI agent, and had essentially, slept with the enemy.

Red tilted his head slightly, scrutinizing the tranquilly slumbering female.

Would she be embarrassed?

Lizzy was not the ‘one night stand’ type of person. Not that this was by any means, a one night stand, but she didn’t do ‘reckless’.

Elizabeth Keen was not in the running to be the next, ‘Miss Fuck Number Four on the Most Wanted List’.

She was comfortable in making lists, planning, having the answers at her fingertips.

And for her to find comfort in any involvement with him, she would need answers.

He had been preparing himself for the eventuality. Now that time was nearing, she would expect him to supply those answers.

He suddenly felt suffocated. The knowledge that he carried, was almost choking the life from him, because to hurt her, would hurt him more.

They hadn’t communicated last night... except on one level.

And they should have.

But they would, today.

He didn’t want to tell her about Katarina, her father, because there was only so much emotional upheaval a person could take in one day.

Unless she asked about them specifically, he would hold off until another time.

Now, he only had to make her understand that while he wanted more out of their growing relationship, there was no rush, no expectation... no pressure.
He was rather fond of the idea of wooing the woman, truth be told.

They had missed some important milestones along the way.

He had yet to ask her on a date. An event that, even after last night, made him a bit apprehensive.

He hadn’t bought her flowers. Well, he had, but not while actively dating her. They hadn’t experienced a weekend holiday together. They hadn’t held hands while walking through a park, gone to a movie. Hell, they hadn’t even swapped keys, he thought with a smile.

While he would in no way, turn down having sex with the woman at any time, he needed to make her understand a few basic edicts. Such as, those moments were just as important and essential to their relationship becoming more... intimate, personal... loving.

He knew a lot about Lizzy. How she took her coffee, that she teared up during Hallmark commercials, that she loved the ‘find the object’ in a child’s Highlight magazine.

But he wanted to know her favorite color, flower, movie, book. Who was her first crush? What did she dream about? What were her secret passions? Her fantasies?

He had a great need to find out all about the beautiful, vibrant woman who lay beside him.

What the hell made Elizabeth Keen tick?

The information about Red was all contained in a file. A file of facts only. There was nothing personal about the man himself, which was the way he wanted it.

Anything she wished to know, of that nature, he would supply directly.

The woman in question stirred, stretching her body with feline grace before snuggling back into his side.

He waited patiently, for an awareness to set in. It did not take long, he felt her tense, then slowly open her eyes.

“Good morning,” he stated soothingly, lifting the small strap back unto her shoulder. “Is this awkward or what?” he kept his tone light. “I bet you give just about anything at this point... to go freshen up.” he gallantly gave her the opportunity she needed.

Liz instantly rolled from the bed, glad for the momentary reprieve. She needed to get her thoughts in order. She walked quickly to her retreat.

This moment was a crucial turning point and Red knew he had to tread carefully.

Moments later, the woman emerged from her hiding spot, uncertainty written on the pretty features. She ventured slowly into the area, standing staunchly in the middle of the room.

The blue eyes, while able to meet his unwavering stare, were full of doubt and insecurity.

“Come here...” Red patted the bed. “We need to talk.”

She crawled up on the high structure, wrapping her arms tightly around herself.

Red watched for a moment, gauging that reaction.

She was cold. That was all.
He wrapped the blanket around her, before resettling himself.

“We did nothing wrong.” he wanted that made perfectly clear.

She raised her eyes slowly, a wealth of meaning in the cool depths.

Red smiled softly, stroking a large hand through her tangled hair. “In fact...” he lowered his voice to just above a whisper, making the conversation very private, “I believe we did it just right.”

His fingers danced delicately over her pink cheeks. “Don’t you agree?”

“I’m...” she was reeling from the man’s nearness and the reality of what was... what had been. “I don’t...”

“You’re nervous.” he surmised. “Scared.”

Liz opened her mouth, then hesitated, “... Maybe a little, but I don’t know why.”

Red watched her pulling at the lace on her slip, “Well, I don’t know about you, but I’m extremely exhilarated.”

She stilled her distraction, her eyes flying to his hastily. “You are?”

“Beyond scope.” his eyes told her he did not lie.

She flushed slightly, well pleased with such praise, truth told.

“Can you tell me what you are feeling?” he fished.

“I’m not sure exactly.” she knew how she felt, she just didn’t know how to verbalize it.

“Do you regret what happened?” he had to know.

“No.” It was the one thing of which she was certain. And she answered without hesitation. Her eyes held his easily this time.

“Nor do I, not one moment.” Red dismissed the idea entirely. “With that said. I want it known right now, Lizzy.” he iterated.

“I do not expect anything. There is no rush or pressure for a repeat performance.” he clarified. “But also know, I would very much enjoy the opportunity to be with you again and when you’re ready... I would like to explore more with you.”

Liz quickly raised startled eyes, “You would?” She asked breathlessly.

“Very much so.” Red’s voice held a tone of finality. “I can honestly say, making love with you is very... satisfying, not to mention, gratifying in every aspect of the word.”

The doubt in her eyes returned, but faded slowly, seeing the truth in his own.

“But we really didn’t...” she reminded sheepishly, “...make love.”

“It is making love when you care deeply for your partner, no matter the activity.” Red disagreed. “And when you’re with the one and only person you wish to be with.”

“But earlier...” she did indeed, have questions. “You and that woman...”
“Lizzy, have you ever been aroused to the point that nothing will satisfy, but another’s touch?” she nodded slowly, his meaning clear. “Perhaps it’s crass of me to say, but she was a means to an end.” he felt his own inadequacies deeply. “A tension relief, a purely sexual release.” he explained.

“I let my sexual tension and frustration get the better of me, and it almost cost me dearly.”

“I don’t understand?” she frowned.

“If I had sex with that woman, I would have lost something of far greater importance.” he reached, taking her hand in his. “And that was... being with you.”

The woman’s eyes blinked rapidly, as though it would help her thought process.

“I truly would love to be given another opportunity to be with you.” Red continued, before he lost his rhythm. “If you are ever so inclined... do not hesitate.”

With that, he stood, giving his words a chance to settle in.

Red traced her earlobe with the tip of his finger, leaning in to kiss her forehead.

The woman lifted her chin, capturing his lips with her own. The kiss both warm and intimately suggestive. He held the moment as long as he could, his mouth responding passionately.

He kept his senses about him, not wanting to frighten the woman away so early on.

This was a romantic kiss. Not a carnal one.

A very important distinction needed to be conveyed here, to his way of thinking.

His need and want for her went far beyond sex.

Of course, he wanted Elizabeth as his lover.

But his determination to have a partner, a friend, a confidant... someone with which to share his life... that was of the upmost importance to him.

If he was so privileged to share it with Elizabeth... then all his hopes and aspirations would become a reality.

He pulled away hesitantly, reluctant to be about his business.

“I’m going to dress.” he headed across the plush carpet. “Room service should be here shortly with breakfast and your coffee.” he turned with his intended exit into the other room. “Oh, and the Service pressed your dress, for the funeral.”

~♥~♥~♥~♥~♥~♥~♥~♥~♥~♥~♥~♥~♥~♥~♥~♥~♥~

Liz watched Red as he retreated to the bath, leaving her stupefied and a little more than stunned.

If she understood correctly, Red had enjoyed their evening. His words had indicated, very much so, in fact. He even said, he would like the opportunity to have another go at it... with her.

She had no idea what to think, or feel, at this point.
She had really enjoyed last night. Red had touched her in a manner no other man had done. When he looked at her, she melted. Red Reddington was addictive. He was like a drug and she really wanted to experience that high again.

But there was an underlying fear. Was she was making a terrible mistake?

Last night did not feel like a mistake. He had made her feel desirable, cared for and cherished.

But Red was who he was. A very complicated, complex man who very few were privileged enough to be included into his inner circle.

After Tom, she was afraid to trust her own instincts again. He had treated her so badly, he had turned on her so quickly... was she getting involved in a similar situation?

How could she compare the two men, however?

Red had been up front and open with who he was. Red always helped her in some way or another.

Red respected her work. He understood her unusual hours, when she would have to take off at a moments notice. He had never made her feel guilty for doing her job.

Red would never raise his hand to her and God knows, she had given him enough provocation in the past.

But what would it mean to involve herself with someone of his caliber? He had an abundance of friendly acquaintances around the globe, but he had just as many enemies, and most of the latter were deadly.

What would that mean to her... to them? He could be taken from her at any time, without warning.

But really, couldn’t the same be said for an accountant driving on the 395, getting into an accident on his way to work.

How would any romantic association affect their work? Would it cause strain between them?

And the FBI would never sanction such a relationship.

But on the other hand, why should she give a damn what they thought?

She had turned in Tom, choosing the Organization over her own husband, and the FBI had made her out to be an enemy, or stupid or... worse yet, a fool.

Red had been with her every step of the way.

He had been so incredibly kind and caring during her convalescence.

He respected her space.

He had respected her moral ethics...

Hell, he had even slept in a chair for several nights to that ends.

It was his damned bed. She was the intruder, but he put her at ease, making her feel welcome.

The man had truly made her recovery, stress free. Taking care of every aspect of her needs, so she could rest her body and mind.
What if they had a child.

She felt her stomach flip crazily at the thought, and it wasn’t necessarily in a bad way. What the hell was she thinking, but then again, things happened.

And what else was she thinking except having a physical relationship with this man, which could lead to that very thing.

But Red was so experienced. He must know ways... even though, Liz had an uneasy feeling that if the man was sexually involved with a woman, he would probably forgo contraceptives.

She herself, had not been on the Pill since Tom.

Perhaps she was worrying about nothing.

There were other aspects to consider, however.

With what they were up against, a child would be their biggest vulnerability. But also the most loved child on the entire planet.

She had seen Red interact with kids before, her heart warmed every time she saw the man interact with a child.

One day, not long ago, they had been standing in line, for what seemed like hours... waiting for her much needed coffee.

Without coffee in her system, Liz knew that she would be like Ultron on a very bad day.

A mother and her fussy baby were ahead of them in line.

While Liz hated to admit that she was damning the Universe, getting stuck behind the fussy infant before her caffeine fix.

Red had taken it in his stride.

He reached out, tickling the little sock covered toes, asking the baby what his ‘issue’ was. The baby’s interest was immediate and focused on that deep soothing voice.

In that one instance, a camaraderie of sorts, had been established.

The baby found his soul mate.

The little guy was clearly enthralled with Red; smiling, chortling, and playing, the entire time they waited, much to the mother’s everlasting relief.

Not only had Red’s apparent fondness and patience with the baby been sweet. That he didn’t give a damn that anyone was watching as he played peek-a-boo with the child, had been charming as hell.

The mother as well, had fallen under his spell. To top it off, Red had ended up paying for her order as well.

Number four on the Most Wanted list, confessed killer, the Concierge of Crime... my ass. The though still brought a smile to Liz’s lips.

He was the only one who commiserated with a harried mother and a worn out little boy.
Red would be a wonderful father. But then, he was already a father. A father who worried for his daughter on a daily basis. What must it feel like to live under such a dark cloud?

Would he even want to have children again? They had discussed it before, when baby Sam there. But there was a definite abstract to the question now.

They hadn’t made love in the traditional sense, true. It had been just as satisfying.

Liz had enjoyed Red’s attention last night, plain and simple. She had needed his gentleness and was surprised at how very passionate a lover he had turned out to be.

Her cheeks tinted slightly as she recalled the time in his arms. She was not the type to kiss a man, then fall into bed with him mere hours later.

But last night, it was if she was another person. She had felt comforted and fully at ease almost as if they had been intimate before.

Which was absurd really, that was how she had felt as if being in his arms was the most natural thing in the world.

This morning, Liz was shocked that the man hadn’t pushed for more.

Part of her appreciated such a chivalrous action on his part. But another found herself resenting it somewhat.

Why hadn’t he simply pushed her slip out of his way and made love to her. She felt a little irked because she knew she was on that level last night.

It was almost as if Red was in total control, something Liz was not.

Maybe he knew she would do this. That she would question and analyze everything down to the smallest of details.

She had to admit, she was intrigued. What would it be like to make love to Red Reddington? A man who had the admiration of woman spanning the globe.

And if she did, what would it mean? Was she just another notch in his bed post?

No... she got the feeling that this was not a one time thing.

If she slept with Red... this could lead to a romantic entanglement. She was sure of that.

And she found herself... wanting to take that chance.

She needed to see where this would go...

Elizabeth Keen had just opened herself up to the possibilities.
After the funeral and reception, Red and Dembe were called away to finalize the details of Anne’s estate.

Liz headed down to the corner bistro, her bulky guard regaling her with anecdotes from his time spent in the Orient. One such tale involved a Geisha girl and a disgruntled Marine and platoon of MP’s from a nearby Army base.

“A platoon?” Liz had to question that part, her expression amused.

“All right, so it wasn’t a platoon.” Silas granted. “More like a division.”

The revelry was interrupted by a somber enquiry.

“Are you allowed to talk to me?”

Liz looked around, finding Francis coming up on their rear, his expression a prudent one.

“Why would you even ask such a thing?” she frowned having entered the café.

She directed the young man to a nearby table.

“I’ve been shunned.” the man leaned into the chair instead of taking the seat she had offered, his eyes darting to the patiently waiting guard who had taken a stand at the end of the bar. “Or hadn’t you heard.”

“Whether you have been or not,” she began, “it has nothing to do with me.”

Francis once again lifted wary eyes to Silas who was sitting on a stool just behind the woman, his burly arms crossed over his chest, his expression unreadable.

“Look at me,” Liz scolded, “not him.”

Silas’ brows lifted slightly for the ‘slight’.

“You really don’t understand how this works, do you?” Francis’ smile dimmed.

“I don’t give a damn.” the woman was adamant, throwing a peevish glance over her shoulder to the other man. “You’re my friend.” she stressed. “If Red doesn’t like it—”

“I no longer exist.” the younger man chuckled, then outright laughed at the stunned expression on Liz’s face. “Now, do you get it?”

Liz nodded slowly, before turning on her guard. “You do not touch him. Do you understand me?”

“I take orders from you now, do I?” Silas smirked.

“In regards to Francis, yes.” she took a stand. “I will deal with Red, personally.”

Silas stood, sauntering to where Liz sat. “I have a better idea,” he began, “why don’t you discuss this with Red first, then you guys can get back to me.”

“Fine.” Liz grumbled, then smiled at Francis. “Are you going to sit, or not?”

To Liz’s vexation, Francis checked with the guard once more, waiting for Silas’ permission.

“Sit down, you idiot.” Liz gritted, shoving the chair out with her foot.

Silas inclined his head, gesturing for the man to sit before retaking his own seat. His eyes returned to his normal scan of the surrounding area.

“And you, eat.” Liz had glared her demand over her shoulder.

Silas rolled his eyes, settling more comfortably into his stool, making the woman’s lips pinch in open aggravation.

Francis held his smile as he watched the power play.

Silas studiously ignored the fuming woman.

Liz felt her annoyance turn into trepidation. She had never really been at odds with Silas before. She felt the ground shift slightly under her feet, not liking the feeling one bit.

The guard’s solid frame sensed as much, losing a bit of it’s rigidity. He pushed off the stool begrudgingly, trudging forward yet again.

“What’s up your ass...” he grumbled quietly, as he neared, “cause I know it ain’t Red.”

Liz gasped, her mouth falling agape. Francis chuckled quietly into his hand, hiding his amusement behind the façade.

“You got her a minute?” Silas gestured his request to Francis.

“Yeah... uh, sure.” Francis nodded, his surprise more than evident.

Liz scowled, watching the guard walk to the small line of waiting customers.

Two men instantly stepped out of Silas’ way, indicating he should take their place. The man shook his head silently, stretching his hand forward. Clearly however, the other men were more than hesitant to piss off such a imposing figure.

“He’s even a bully when he’s not trying to be.” Liz screwed up her face, turning her wrath on a more receptive individual.

“What’s wrong with you?” she asked cantankerously.

“I just...” Francis shrugged, “I didn’t expect that.” he told the truth. “I guess at least, Silas still trusts me.” the man’s voice lowered dejectedly, his fingers folding the edges of his napkin over and over in an unconsciously perturbed manner.

“Red trusts you. He was just upset.” Liz pacified. “It’s been a rough couple days for him, whether he admits to it or not.”

“I suppose.” the man sighed. “I should have stayed out of it though.” he blurted after a moment. “But I just couldn’t, you know.” he lifted enquiring eyes. “You’re... you’ve been,” he threw his napkin aside, restlessly sitting back in his chair. “Well dammit, I like you... you’re almost like a friend or something.”

Liz smile widened, reaching out to grip Francis’ hand. “I like you too.” She let the other part go.

A delightful afternoon passed quickly and then it was time to return to the hotel.

Francis walked abreast of her, but Liz noticed Silas kept a professional air as he held back a good four or five feet.

“Do you think you can sneak away...” Francis glanced back at Silas, “not sneak away per se, no not that at all.” he placated. “Get away, shortly for a quick swim at the pool?”

Liz’s acquiescence was cut short as she noted Red coming out of a side room, Dembe in tow, a few meters down the foyer. He was distracted momentarily, by a man Liz did not recognize.

Soon enough however, the arresting gaze fell on the woman and her companion.

Red focused on them intently, his smile fading slowly.

“Shit...” Francis whispered his distress.

“Shit.” Silas whispered his annoyance, because he knew he was going to catch hell for his little lapse.

Liz laid her hand on Francis’ arm in open support. “We’ll fix this. I promise.”

Francis sighed, watching Red closely. The man laughed, shaking hands with the attorney.

“Now go change,” Liz suggested, “and I’ll meet you at the pool.” she smiled.

Francis half nodded, knowing the chances of her being there were slim to none, but did as she asked.

Silas trailed after Elizabeth, walking to the elevator banks, “You really think you can change Red’s mind?” he asked, pressing the button for their floor. “When he gets something in his head...”

“He’ll just have to get it out of his head.” Liz jutted her chin stubbornly. “Francis is my friend, anyway. Who I choose to associate with is...”

“Red made you come, didn’t he.” Silas interrupted rudely.

“I...I...” Liz stammered, totally flustered by the question of course, but more so, by the smug knowledge presented.

“You don’t even have to answer, I know the answer.” he disdained. “So trust me, little girl, who you associate yourself with from here on out, is very much Red’s concern.” Silas smiled knowingly.

Liz was just about to question the validity of such a statement when she felt Silas stiffen at her side, his entire focus suddenly for three men who had stepped up behind them.

“You... are with Reddington.” one of the men stated without preamble.

Liz turned, nodding. “Yes. But he’s back off that way,” she pointed back up the hall, “if you need him.”

Silas maneuvered himself between the men, pushing Liz behind him. The woman stumbled slightly, unsure of what was transpiring.
“I don’t want him.” the man replied, motioning the two huge individuals forward. “He took something from me that I wanted,” the man continued, “so I will now, take something from him.”

Silas punched out, his beefy fist sending one man careening into the opposite wall. The other charged him.

“Run!” Silas grunted lowly, blocking two blows aimed at his head simultaneously. “Now!”

The man who originally spoke, made a grab for Liz.

She yanked her arm away, falling back into the elevator, only to be caught a moment later and dragged forcefully from the steel box.

Silas tossed the man he was fighting aside like a limp rag doll, sending him rolling in an awkward heap, down the hall.

He reached out, gripping the other man’s arm, breaking his hold on Liz, before slamming the man’s bulk up against the slowly closing elevator door.

“Go dammit!” Silas urgently snapped. The first assailant was on him again. “Go to Red!

Francis rounded the corner, having heard the sounds of a struggle and Silas’ raised voice. The young man had discreetly hoisted his weapon, rushing to the location.

All he saw at that exact moment, was one man pulling his weapon, the gun pointed directed at Elizabeth Scott.

Red had seen Francis rush past, his second sense kicking in.

He jerked his head, silently asking Dembe to check out the situation.

Red bid his farewell to Anne’s lawyer, his eyes following Dembe’s retreat.

Seconds later, the sound of gunfire echoed throughout the enormous lobby.

Red pulled his weapon on his way before he knew exactly what he was running into.

Francis hit the man who was coming up behind Silas, with the butt of his weapon, leaving the large guard to put himself between Elizabeth and her struggles with DeCarlo.

Dembe was just now rounding the corner, trying to take in all that was occurring.

Seconds later, Red came on scene, his brain rapidly taking stock of the immediate danger.

That bastard DeCarlo raised his weapon towards Elizabeth.

“Elizabeth...” Red whispered his agony.

Everything slowed to a crawl. He watched the woman turn jerkily in his direction, her eyes meeting his.

Francis leapt towards Elizabeth, throwing himself between any danger and the woman.

He caught her waist, the momentum of his speed, spinning her around. He tucked his muscular bulk around her smaller frame.
Francis’ legs crumbled, taking Liz with him as they slid haphazardly along the marbled floor, their rapid movement coming to an abrupt halt as they crashed into a solid wall.

DeCarlo followed their trail, Dembe’s volley just missing its target as both men once again, took aim.

Francis hunched over Liz, blocking any avenue of entry to the flying bullets around them.

Red lifted his arms, his hand steady as he locked onto his target, firing his weapon in rapid succession. He was however, off balance, having been unwilling to slow his pace upon his arrival.

His shots missed DeCarlo by a fraction of an inch.

Silas broke his attackers hold, jamming his weapon into the man’s gut, firing twice. The sound was muffled by the man’s suit as the projectiles exploded out the man’s back in a spray of blood and cloth before he dropped heavily to the floor.

Silas spun rapidly, training his weapon, just as Decarlo lifted his own, zeroing in on his target.

Red’s weapon spewed forth a lethal volley just as Silas emptied his last remaining rounds. Each man hit his mark with deadly accuracy.

DeCarlo’s body jerked in rapid succession, as bullets tore threw him. The man staggered back under the onslaught, sliding against the wall, leaving a slick trail of blood on his descent before landing with a thick thud, as he fell in a crumbled heap on the floor.

Silas turned, watching Dembe take down the last remaining threat.

As Red approached Elizabeth, he felt a surge of fear and panic, seeing the wall just above where both Francis and she lay crumpled, streaked with blood.

He could not really see the woman at this time because Francis’ body obscured the smaller body.

“Elizabeth!” Red gasped in horror, sliding down hastily beside the two.

“Francis...” Liz’s soft voice shook. “Are you all right?”

The man grunted, nodding against her shoulder. “Yeah...” he grumbled dejectedly.

Oddly, to Elizabeth’s ears the man’s reply reminded her of Eeyore asking about his missing tail.

“Move, Francis!” Red gritted, trying to shove the man aside. “She’s hurt, dammit!”

“Francis.” Red gripped the man’s shoulder, easing him up slowly.

“Shit....” the younger man hissed, sitting upright. “That fucking burns!” He winced, quickly grasping his side. Francis leaned into the wall for support, exhaling sharply, before gaining a semblance of control.

Liz spun on her knees, reaching for the man.

“Call 911!” she yelled, pressing her hand over the large blood stain on the man’s shirt.

“Ow! Dammit!” the man yelped in pain. “You’re killing me here, Lizzy.” he gritted. “I think I’m gonna die.”
Dembe had been examining the wound, mindless of all the present chaos around him. The hotel security had arrived, already in the process of cleaning up the scene.

Another contingent was assuring the ever growing crowd of onlookers that it was only a movie company doing their thing.

Red was astounded at how easily people would believe something they wanted to believe. Already people were walking away and/or taking selfies with the supposed ‘actors’.

“It is only a flesh wound.” Dembe reported to Red.

Francis looked down, his expression deeply troubled. “Really?” he was disappointed to say the least. Elizabeth hovered around anxiously. “There’s so much blood.”

“I know!” Francis agreed whole-heartedly.

Red pulled at the man’s shirt, examining the wound himself... or should he say, wounds. Francis had taken two to the side.

But Dembe had been right, they were only flesh wounds. They would sting like hell, but that was about it.

“He’ll be fine, Lizzy.” Red assured, reaching to check on the woman herself.

“What do you care,” she knocked his hand aside. “He’s not worthy of being in your presence anymore.”

Red bit at the inside of his cheek, controlling his sudden ire.

“He could have been killed.” she trembled with her anger and fear, her fingers shaking over Francis’s side. “And would you really care? All because he called you on your fuck up!” she tried to stop her words, because the man’s face was giving away nothing. “All he did was stand up for me and you turned on him!”

“Stop it, Liz.” Francis did not like the anger between his two friends. And whether or not Red returned the sentiment, did not matter. “I screwed up... not him. Let it go.”

The woman looked at him, suddenly speechless.

“You were loyal, dammit! To me!” Her lip quivered. “No one has ever done that for me before. And when they do, they get punished for it!” she wiped angrily at her eyes. “You just saved my life!”

Red sat back surveying the problem analytically. No one could say, he could not take constructive criticism.

She was right, on all counts.

“You stood by me, again, when you didn’t have to...” she cried into her hands, before lifting teary eyes to Red. “They wanted to take me away from you...”

Red’s eyes darkened, staring hatefully at the dead man they were quickly carting away.

“Francis put his life in jeopardy... for me.”
Red jerked, the words hitting home. He now realized why DeCarlo was here.

“Liz...” Francis put his hand out in an attempt to calm her. “You’re saying shit that you’ll regret.”

“Doesn’t this mean anything!” she looked around lost, seeing the blood on the wall where the young man braced himself. “You were loyal to Red, and he needs to comprehend that!”

“I butted into business that wasn’t my own.” Francis’ tone grew firm. “End of story.”

“Then maybe I don’t want to be a part of the story,” She countered, “because I don’t understand and I never will... that type of loyalty.”

“I apologize, to you both.” Red’s deep voice washed over both, silencing them. “It wasn’t any of Francis’ business, true,” he began, “but he only did it for you.” he focused on the woman. “The last thing I ever wanted to do was hurt you.” he bore his eyes into hers. “And you know that.”

Liz blinked hard, sending tears skirting down her cheeks. She nodded shortly, rubbing her hands against her thighs in agitation.

“I am sorry, Francis.” Red turned his attention to the man. “Elizabeth could have been taken away, hurt or worse... killed.” he felt a wave of nausea roll his stomach. “But you saved her, at great risk to yourself.” Red reached out, grasping the man’s shoulder. “You have my eternal gratitude for keeping her safe.”

Francis tensed under the touch, upsetting Red greatly.

He had known Francis for so long, had been through so much with him... always had a open and easy camaraderie with the man. He had to wonder now, could it all be thrown away so easily on both parts.

What a fucking mess.

Red increased the hold on the younger man, dragging him into a tight embrace. He only breathed easier when Francis’ head fell against Red’s shoulder.

Francis had done the same thing when he found out his mother had cancer and when his father practically disowned the boy.

And now, that he found his friendship with Red was still intact, the young man felt his world fall back into place.

Red relaxed into the gesture himself, comforted in the knowledge that he had finally been forgiven.
April 29

Red put out his hand, shaking Anthony Burke’s gingerly.

“Tony, I’m so sorry for all this...” Red looked around the area as each member of Burke’s team did his or her job, so efficiently.

Burke’s eyes twinkled slightly, but he managed to keep a straight face. “Yeah, Red,” the man remarked, “last night at the bar, oh and by the way, thanks for two hundred I bet on you,” he nodded agreeably, continuing, “and now today in the hall?” the man waved his hands around expressively, eyeing the area just as the floor cleaners arrived on scene. “You’re going to get a bad reputation if you don’t slow it down.”

Red managed a small smile. “Well, we wouldn’t want that. I do appreciate your discretion, I wanted you to know.”

“It’s all her fault.” Francis looked up from his seated position, finally pulling his attention away from the cute medical assistant that had bandaged his side.

Liz gasped, astounded to be sudden center of attention. “You little weasel! And I was concerned for you.”

“Red’s got himself a girl.” Silas shook his head, grimacing his distaste. “Dames, they’re too much trouble.”

Francis nodded his agreement. “Ouch!” he jumped, pulling away from the doctor’s less than gentle handling.

“That hurt! I want her back!” He pointed at the cute medical assistant, smiling charmingly at the woman.

“What do you mean _dames_?” Elizabeth took exception.

“Hey, I just saved your ass. Show a little respect.” Silas suggested.

“For the elderly.” Liz snapped.

“Hey, I saved her ass too.” Francis corrected indignantly.

“All right all ready!” Red put an end to the bickering with his raised tone, having noted Tony’s delight at his predicament.

“Lively group you have there.” the man nodded perceptively.

“They’re all idiots.” Red stated his opinion.

“Hey...” Liz really took exception to that statement.

“Except her.” Red corrected instantly.

“Well of course you’d say that,” Silas stretched his shoulder this way and that, an old wound acting up after the battle today, “you’re sleeping with her.”
Elizabeth was simply stunned, the blue eyes darting frantically to Red for assistance. She could not believe these men were turning on her so quickly.

Again, Francis nodded knowingly. “That’s right, that’s what’s going on here.” he continued to nod. “He’s boning her.”

“Oh my God!” once again she looked to Red with a ‘aren’t you going to do something’ look.

Red met Tony’s eyes easily, his head lowering once before he shook it shortly, meeting the guy’s eyes again before shrugging his assent.

“Oh... my... God.”

Red sent an apologetic glance the woman’s way. “Is there anything we can do here today to help out?” he offered politely.

“You can do something right now, for me!” The man was informed in no uncertain terms. “You can inform your goons here, that our private life is just that!”

“He started it.” Silas pointed at Red.

Red crooked his head sharply once, a crisp snap helping to ease the tension building inside his temples before returning his attention to their host.

“We have it covered.” Tony was just as pleasant. “This sort of thing happens all the time.”

“Well, you certainly have it down to an art.” Red glanced around to the pristine area, his senses slightly askew.

“Why, thank you Red.” Tony took the compliment well. “We pride ourselves on our professionalism.”

Elizabeth glanced around the area herself, flabbergasted. One would never have known that anything nefarious had taken place, let alone that two dead men had recently lay sprawled on the gleaming marble floor just below her feet.

“I’m going to have Mr. Kaplan come in to look at Francis, not that I don’t trust your...”

Tony waved the issue aside. “I can’t wait to see Kate again.”

“Can’t I keep her instead?” Francis moped, watching the doctor and the aide pack up the last of their gear.

Red glanced at the cute little intern. “No.”

“Then can I have some of the good stuff before Mr. Kaplan arrives.” he whined. “She thinks I should man up and...”

“Two flesh wounds! Two...” the young man held up two fingers. “I’m hungry.”

Silas shook his head sardonically.

Tony’s expression shifted a tad, but he was always the consummate host. “I have a private dining room.” he suggested.
“Does it have a bar?” Silas needed to know.

Tony seemed offended. “Of course...”

Elizabeth stifled a yawn. Red noted as much. She had a long day, she needed to rest.

The man glanced down at her blood spotted clothing.

“Well gentlemen, on that note, I believe it’s time for us to retire.” Red lifted his hand, and Elizabeth instantly placed her fingers into the warm palm. “I need to get you in the shower.”

“Well, of course you do.” Silas simply stated the facts as he knew them.

Red cast the man an warning look. “Please, stay, enjoy drinks on me.”

“Don’t we always?” Silas quipped.

“Yes, but this time I’m actually offering.” Red’s eyebrow arched as he led Lizzy to the elevators.

“Hey Tony,” Silas perked up somewhat, a thought occurring, “we’ve been through a lot today.” the man explained his next statement. “You know that little blonde waitress,” he held his hands before him indicating, “the one with the...”

“Oh, I like her.” Francis perked up as well.

“Yeah well, I get first dibs.” Silas pointed a silencing finger.

Francis did not seem waylaid by the problem though. As a matter of fact, the young man arose on his own, brushing his clothing, preening his hair back into place.

“What say,” Silas continued, “if you assign her to this private dining room, say.”

“You all ready said that.” Francis pointed out.

“Said what?” Silas was confused. Francis waved it aside.

“Have a good evening.” Red drawled, shaking Tony’s hand once again before the man took his leave with but one grin of camaraderie to all concerned.

“I’ll check with you two later.” Red nodded to Silas and Francis.

He checked for his ever present shadow. “Dembe, if you could call Mr. Kaplan? She’ll get you in top notch order in no time, Francis.” he ignored the other man’s mournful moan.

“I’ll join you when I can.” Red stated aside to the large black man. “I want to show you all my appreciation, but in a more substantial way.”

“Raymond, there is no need.”

“There is a great need.” the man leaned kissing Liz on the temple.

The woman released his fingers hastily, rushing back. She threw her arms around Francis, hugging him dearly.

“Thank you.” she whispered. She quickly transferred her gratitude to Dembe, whose face lit with a brilliant smile.
She hesitated visibly when confronted by the large bulk of her bodyguard, who stood formidably before her.

But in the end, she threw her arms about the massive shoulders, holding tight even when she felt the tenseness rack the solid frame.

Red lifted an incredulous brow. Slowly but surely, the tension eased in the other man’s rigid frame, Silas’ arms lifting to embrace the woman. His head dropped, as he took in the scent of her hair, his eyes closing in open relief that she was truly safe and sound.

For most he protected, it was merely a job, but in this case, somewhere along the line, it had become personal.

He thought of the woman as a younger sister and God forbid anyone should ever mess with his baby sister.

Francis stared after the pair, as Red and Liz took their leave. He could still feel a slight tension emanating from the older man. He sensed however, it had nothing to do with himself any longer.

Red was having a difficult time forgiving his lapse in judgement where the woman was concerned. DeCarlo had come out of the blue.

Red had put all the necessary precautions in place, and they had succeeded. But to the man, Liz almost died.

Red Reddington would never forgive himself for such an oversight.

Once they stepped through their door, Red pulled Elizabeth into his embrace. He held her tightly, basking in her warm scent.

So many times in the past, he had wanted to hold her like this.

So many times she had been in mortal danger. When he had finally retrieved her from Stewmaker... his relief that he had made it in time had overwhelmed him.

Tipping that bastard back into that swirling mire of filth, had somehow cleansed his own soul.

Then later, Liz had called him a monster himself.

In some ways, perhaps he was. But he had almost welcomed the hateful words, because it meant... she was still alive to say them.

“I’m all right.” she assured, her voice muffled against his suit jacket.

“I’m not.” he told the truth.

Watching DeCarlo, knowing he had the control of life or death over Lizzy. And that it was his fault, made him physically and mentally sick.

He had been playing the game as they always did in this business. He swept the rug out from under someone, they’d try to exact some sort of revenge... Red would win in the end.

Only this time, he hadn’t taken into account that he had a vulnerability. That his enemies would attack what he loved most.
He knew it happened, but he was never a participant in the disgusting practice.

Only someone who was weak, would attack a wife or child. He should have seen it coming, because DeCarlo was weak.

Red took a calming breath, his arms tightening, holding as if he never wanted to let go, but in the end, he forced himself to do just that. “Get ready for bed.”

Liz straightened her exhausted body, grateful for the suggestion. “I think I will.”

Red followed, set on automatic pilot. Going through the motions as he did every night, only this time, he suddenly realized that Liz was right there beside him.

They had never done this before. It was their established routine that once the bath was free, the next would enter.

But not tonight.

“Thank you...” she muttered softly, putting her toothbrush aside.

“For what?” he was stymied.

“Forgiving Francis,” the blue eyes shifted to his, soulfully appealing.

“I thank it should be the other way around.” Red disagreed.

Liz was a little taken aback by the declaration. The woman stepped closer, reaching for him, though hesitantly. So much had happened today and she was trying to wrap her head around it.

“He’s a good friend to you, and I almost jeopardized that.” Red lifted his head, staring back at her through the mirror. “I am sorry for that.”

A soft smile lit her face as she laid her hand on his shoulder. She watched him breathe in at the touch, his shoulders losing a bit of their tension before he turned to face her.

“I’m also sorry that I didn’t take into consideration that the deal I made would have such dire consequences, to your life.” his jaw pulsed erratically. “You have always been my vulnerability in dealings with the Cabal, never in regards to one of my business deals.”

“Is there really a difference?” she asked.

“Most people I outbid have the same outlook as I do.” he turned her around, taking the brush from her hand. “You win some...”

“You lose some.” she concluded, wondering what he was about.

“Yes, but there are also DeCarlo’s in the world.” he continued, lifting the long strands of hair as he stroked the brush through the silky maze. “And I know that.” he sighed, smiling gently at her heartfelt moan of appreciation. “But this is my first deal where we have been... intimately involved, so to speak.”

Liz stood perfectly still under his administrations, but a slight flush graced her cheeks.

“I know what we are, but they don’t...” he concentrated on his efforts, enjoying the feel of the soft strands filtering through his fingers. “But that doesn’t make you any less a target. I will take proper precautions from here on out, I promise.”
“And what are we?” she asked quietly, redirecting the path of their conversation.

“That remains to be seen,” he halted his hand, his eyes meeting hers in the mirror once again, “doesn’t it?”

He lay the brush aside much to her dismay, disappearing into the closet space for a spell, leaving the woman to her own thoughts.

After he changed, Red fixed a quick drink at the bar, heading towards the bed. He sat a glass of wine on Lizzy’s bedside table.

She came out of the bathroom moments later, having taken her time, paying particular attention to her state of dress this night.

Red raised, having plugged up his computer, his attention immediately caught and held. In fact, he had offered a double take the moment he saw her.

And if he didn’t know better, he would think she was purposely teasing him.

Like her gown last night, this one ended at her ankles, had long slits at the side and flowed with her movements. The soft red material plastered to her skin as she walked, showing him little glimpses of what lay beneath, which made his damn mouth water.

“Oh, do you like it?” she asked all too innocently, having noticed his attention was still riveted and direct.

“Yes...” his eyes drifted slowly over her form, hesitating on the empire waist, highlighting the fullness of her breasts.

“Good...” she smiled, taking a sip from her glass, “because you bought it.”

Red felt a smile working it’s way across his face.

“I did, did I?” he queried, settling back into the soft pillows, his computer all but forgotten.

“Yep.” she nodded. “In my defense though,” she began, as she crawled up on to the mattress, “I saw it in one of the shops downstairs,” she explained, “Silas was blathering on about his many exploits with members of the opposite sex and my head was about to explode.” she sighed. “They asked my room number...”

“And they charged it to our room.” Red concluded.

“Yeah...” she winced. “They said, because I tried to pay for it myself... “

“That it’s a long entailed process that will take months on end to correct.” he nodded knowingly.

“Trust me,” he looked over the gown once again, the nipples tightening under his penetrating gaze, “I do not mind.” his eyes focused pointedly on the small peaks, his mouth pursing. “Are you cold?” he finally lifted his stare to hers, finding her lips quivering in barely held amusement.

“A little...”

Red pulled back the blankets, laying his arm out in invitation.

“You’re not gonna offer to turn the heat up?” she asked, sliding closer, laying against him. She hooked her leg over his, relaxing blissfully into his solid form.
“I’m perfectly capable of keeping you warm.” he said, adjusting the sheet over them. “Don’t you remember?”

The woman felt an electric shock course through her at the blatant flirting... finding she very much enjoyed it.

She had never thought of herself as a femme fatale, but this man made her feel every inch the part and she enjoyed it, immensely.

“Yes...” she snuggled into his heat, sighing happily. She took a steadying breath to slow her rapid heartbeat. Which was all for naught when the man’s large hand swept a searing path down and across her back.

He leisurely stroked her bare skin, getting lost in his own thoughts.

Everything that had happened in the last two days, left him exhausted and wired as hell.

Liz leaned up into his lips, kissing him, holding it for a moment before she pulled back slowly.

“Do you mind me kissing you?”

“Why should I mind if a beautiful woman kisses me.” he smiled. “Unless you are practicing for something? Were you afraid you’d forgotten how?” he reached up, tracing her lips with his finger. “Because I have to tell you, you’re doing quite well.”

She giggled quietly, “Which is always nice to hear.” she played with a button on his shirt. “I seem to do this a lot... it’s almost as if, I wish you didn’t have clothes on or something.” Liz could not raise her eyes, the bold remark surprising even her.

Cupping her small face, he pulled her towards him, “Which is always nice to hear.” he murmured, kissing her sweet lips, grunting appreciatively when she rocked her pelvis forward against his thigh, getting more intimate with him.

_God please, don’t let me screw this up._ He prayed, wondering briefly if God even knew his name anymore.

Liz laid back, laying her head on chest, getting comfortable. Red listened to the quiet room, his mind refusing to shut down. The events of the day recoiled sharply in his brain. He unconsciously gripped the small frame tighter.

“Stop feeling guilty,” she mumbled, “it’s keeping me awake.”

Red snorted quietly, “Even if I were, how could it keep you awake.”

“You’re thinking too much...” she whined. “Disturbing the room aura or something.”

“Go to sleep,” Red kissed her brow, “you’re delirious.”

“You’re demented.” She countered, her mouth curving into a smile.

“No, that’s Francis.” Red corrected, rolling towards her slightly, wrapping his arm lower about her waist.

“Fine, deranged.” she had no problem with the adjective.
“Still Francis.” he murmured contentedly.

“You’re gonna be dead in a minute if you don’t let me sleep.” Liz warned playfully.

Red ran his hand down the slope of her spine, getting lost in the satiny feel of the fabric laying over her feminine curves, his hand stopping just above the slope of her ass.

“If you’re checking for panties,” she muttered, “you’re wasting your time.”

Red chuckled quietly into the crown of her head, “Thank you for that very valuable information.”

He lay there a moment, formulating his plan.

“What are you doing?” she mumbled into his neckline.

“My curiosity is now peaked.” he rumbled softly, humor clearly in his voice. “Not that I think that you’re lying.”

His large hand swept across her bottom, clearly finding her statement to be true.

“Are you happy now?” she sighed.

“I don’t know...” he hesitated, his fingers tapping against her bare, satin covered bottom.

“Well, there’s not that much there.” Liz informed him. “Unless you you’re talking to Silas. Who says I have a big ass.”

“First of all, what’s he doing looking at your ass.” Red looked at other places, like the deep cleft between her ample breasts.

“He and Francis were making comparisons a couple days ago on my merits as opposed to a little Barista down at the coffee shop.” Liz watched intently as the man lowered his head gently kissing the swell of her mound. “There was nothing personal about it.”

“Seemed pretty damn personal to me.” Red’s hand ran over the gown, a gown that didn’t leave much to the imagination. “I have to be honest with you, I’m rather shocked that your drawers are missing.”

He palmed her ass, his fingers naturally curving to the rounded bottom.

She giggled against his chest after a second, tilting her head up to look for him in the dark.

“Drawers?” she tittered.

He smiled at her apparent dismissal to his invasion of her space, patting her bottom. “Skivvies?”

“I am not wearing drawers or skivvies.” she politely corrected herself, if only for the man’s sake.

Red bunched the satiny fabric in his hand, baring a bit of thigh to his touch. Liz found her breath suddenly tremulous and she could not prevent herself from arching into his thigh.

“Sweetheart, I know I said there was no pressure to further along relations...” he began tightly, “but I am only a man unfortunately, one feeling a definite pressure in a certain area of my anatomy at this particular moment in time.”

Liz bit her bottom lip, trying desperately to hold her smile.
“With that said,” he breathed out calmly, “unless you had another agenda in mind to which I am not privy...perhaps we should simply... go to sleep”

Liz winced a bit, hearing the discomfort in the man’s voice. She did not pretend to misunderstand his statement.

Was she ready? Her body certainly wanted to further things along. Even now, she was having difficulty silencing a slight throbbing between her legs.

“Sleep, sweetheart.” Red muttered tightly. “If it’s meant to be, it will be.”

She cuddled close into the man, still trapped in her thoughts, wondering what she should do.

Because her heart was telling her to take a leap of faith.

April 30

Liz startled awake, her eyes slowly opening as she listened to the familiar sounds of the dark room.

Red was laying behind her, sleeping.

She lifted her head slightly, finally recognizing the sound of one man berating another. Someone else chimed in from down the hall demanding the revelers be silent.

After a few seconds, quiet prevailed.

The woman yawned, stretching slightly. She wondered what would have happened if the man behind her had been awakened from a sound sleep by such a disturbance. She dismissed the thought, cuddling back into her warm spot.

She sighed happily, settling more into the curve of Red’s body. She stiffened instantly, instinctively rubbing her bottom closer to the amazing sensation she had just felt.

The stiffness of his body pushed against her backside, the heaviness of the erection very apparent.

She rolled her hips back once more, breathing shakily, enthralled by what she was feeling.

A hand gripped her hip, stilling her movements.

“Elizabeth...” Red’s tone was a warning one.

He had awakened, having heard the people in the hall, when Lizzy had startled awake.

Imagine his surprise when the woman rubbed that tiny ass across his dick... purposely, not once but twice.

She stilled for a moment before pushing against his hold, intentionally.

“What are you doing, Elizabeth.” he rumbled his discontent.

“I need to be close to you.” she whispered, raking her ass cheek against his rigid length.
“Why...” he grunted shakily, grasping her once again, stilling her.

“I like when you touch me.” she readily confessed.

“Have you decided on...”

“I don’t want to talk about that.” she felt the rigid length throb against her backside. “I’ve never felt you like this.” she rocked her hips against him, sighing.

Red inhaled sharply, holding her hard against his straining flesh, almost sliding his cock between the crack of her ass.

“Dammit, Lizzy.” he gritted through his teeth. “If you aren’t ready, you need to stop.” he firmly stated.

Her hand reached about, her fingers sliding his length, her thumb rubbing over the rounded head beneath the satin of his pajamas.

“FUCK.” he growled low in his throat, the word both a description and a vulgarity.

His fingers curled tightly into the silk on her hip, holding his emotions in check.

There was no way in hell he could just touch her and not fuck her? Last night had been hard enough.

His brain rapidly shifted the pros and cons of what she was asking.

“Show me how you feel, Red.” Liz moaned, delirious to be close to the man.

“You aren’t ready...” he began, “I told you to take a couple days to think about this.” he urged. “If we do this and you regret...”

“I won’t regret anything.” she convinced herself, her raging hormones dictating her actions.

“Yes.” He ran his hand around her front, his frustration transmitted to his touch. “You will.”

“I know what I’m doing.” she whispered.

If he had a nickel for every time he heard that phrase, but Red had priorities as well. He knew at this point, he could not simply turn over and go back to sleep.

He had allowed it to go too far.

Red’s thumb rubbed the underside of her breast of it’s own volition, brushed her nipple, raising it into a peak within two strokes.

The full mound pushed into his palm, wanting more.

Red rubbed the hardening nipple between his fingers, causing a raw moan to escape from the woman’s throat.

His fingers curved into the shiny fabric, pulling the cup down, exposing her to the warm air and his touch.

Liz gasped, rolling her head into the pillow beneath her, exposing her neck for the man’s pleasure.

Licking and sucking the long nape, Red tugged, gently rolling the crinkled peak of her breast, palming the hot flesh, before biting softly into the pale skin.

His groan vibrated along her nape, the creamy mound overflowing as he cupped the voluptuous breast with an experienced touch.

“God...” she panted quietly.

Red rolled Liz to her back, his mouth eager on the her already swollen lips.

Dropping his mouth quickly, he suckled the giving flesh hungrily, grunting his approval as the pink tips hardened to tiny pebbles under his tongue’s guidance.

Liz clutched the back of his head, pressing her breasts together, allowing him to suckle them both alternatively.

He sat back, the sight of the heavy breasts displayed in the cups of her gown, the wet nipples in the low light filtering from behind the curtains, making his blood heat.

Red gripped the center of the gown, effortlessly yanking the silk apart. He even enjoyed Elizabeth’s slight gasp of shock.

“I’ll buy you a new one.” he rasped shakily.

Her loose breasts bounced with the motion, driving Red nearly out of his fucking mind.

Sitting back on his haunches, he pulled at the fabric once more, freeing her flesh to his heated gaze.

He could only see so much in the darkened room, but it was enough to know she was already glistening.

He crouched over her, the tip of his tongue licking a searing path up her middle to between her breasts.

The woman groaned her disappointment when he bypassed her sex completely, but then his hot mouth was devouring her lips, his shirt brushing against her body, tantalizing the woman even more.

“Tell me what you want, Lizzy.” he muttered against her mouth, already knowing the answer. He had, after all, worked diligently to put her in such a state.

“Jesus, Red...” she raised her hips invitingly.

His fingers danced teasingly over every inch of her flesh except... where she needed it the most.

His hot fingers, drew shapeless designs down her body until they teased, sifting through the soft hair at the apex of her sex.

Red’s fingers instinctively curved around the small mound.

The little muff was more than damp and slick to his touch.

And he was fucking touching it against every instinct in his body which cried out for him to halt this madness, he still continued his endeavors.

Pressing in gently, he massaged her vaginal lips, causing the ache in Liz’s center to throb painfully.

Her breathing heightened, as she pressed the taut flesh of her breasts into his willing mouth.
He purposefully teased her, feeling the wetness increase with each stroke of his fingers about the slick vulva.

His mouth worked ardently on her pouty lips causing the woman’s tummy to quiver deliciously.

“Does that feel good?” his deep voice purred against her mouth.

Her only reply was a shaky sigh of contentment.

He slid his fingers down, barely touching the top of her slit.

His eyes focused on that little face, which showed each and every nuance of the emotion welling inside her.

“Open your eyes.” he commanded, his voice rough and raspy. The blue eyes openly hazily, unable to look away from the mesmerizing contact.

He ever so slowly slid his fingers alongside her swollen clitoris, smiling as he felt her tremble under his frame, her legs dropping wider in open invitation.

He felt her moistened folds, dragging his fingers along the dark curls of her opening. Spreading her gently, the pale tissue was slick with her arousal, smoothing his way to her inner heat.

Circling the lubricated tunnel, he breached her opening, pushing a thick finger slowly inside the molten depths.

Elizabeth cried out involuntarily, passion building in her core.

It was the sweetest sound the man had ever heard.

_Jesus._

She was so tight.

Her body gripped his finger, closing in around his digit, trapping it in the confines of her heat. She felt so good, so wet, so damn snug.

He had imagined how she felt a thousand times, but he had never thought she’d be this fucking tight.

_God,_ if she felt like this around his finger... what would she feel like around his cock.

Red slowly stroked her tiny tunnel, working his finger in a little at a time until he was knuckle deep in that sweet pussy.

“You feel so good.” he praised the woman. “Do you like this, sweetheart.”

“Oh, shit, Red.” she bounced rhythmically against his hand, caught up in the emotional upheaval he was inflicting upon her flesh.

Red grinned at her honest reaction. Her body naturally needed to fuck... something. He had made sure of it.

“Do I make your little pussy feel good?” he rumbled softly in her ear.

“Red...” she mewled, gripping his arms tight as she rode that finger harder. “Don’t stop...”
He watched his finger disappearing into her wet depths for a few seconds before clutching her hip bone, slowing her progress.

Elizabeth groaned piteously.

“Now, sweetheart.” he soothed. “I’m only giving you what you want,” he reminded, sliding another finger in alongside his other, stretching that hot hole open, “Let’s take this slowly, shall we.” He cooed, then began an agonizingly disciplined tempo, pumping his thick fingers in an out of the sensitive little pussy.

He watched the lithe body squirm and fidget, the woman unable to find any release because he would not allow her to do so.

And she was drenched. He could feel her wetness pooling in the palm of his hand.

He leaned over, kissing her mouth, tonguing her sensually, matching the rhythm he had established below.

“I want to feel your pussy come so badly, Lizzy.” he whispered intimately. “Are you gonna do that for me? Are you going to come around my fingers?”

In response, he felt the first small fluttering indicating, that she was nearing orgasm.

“Fuck yes...” he urged the woman on, “let me feel this beautiful body come... just for me.”

She clenched hard around him twice, then held it.

Red rubbed her clit soothingly, curling his fingers, tapping a spongy hardness inside her which caused the woman to clamp her thighs hard against his own, which now spread her open wide.

She pulsed hard around his fingers, the tight tunnel convulsing sensually.

“Shit...” he hissed, very much enjoying the damned show. “God baby, that feels so good.”

“So good...” she moaned pitifully, her hips slowing their erotic movement, shaking uncontrollably. Sharp jolts of electricity spiked in her clit, leaving the woman quaking beneath him. “Red...” she mewed softly.

Red slowed his hand, feeling the aftershocks of her orgasm pulse through her body. His mouth connected with her’s throughout, the kiss deepening with each passing second.

“I love making you come.” he purred against her mouth. He gasped then stiffened when he felt her little hand wrap around his thick erection, bunching the material of his pants to do so.

“Stop.” he panted, the blood surging through his veins rapidly. “Enough...”

He had wanted her to climax but he personally did not wish to get involved anymore than necessary until all the logistics was worked out between them.

Her fingers tugged gently on the hard flesh as she had done last night, making him grow impossibly hard.

“N-No...” he grunted waspishly, even as his hips pushed into her touch.

Red closed his eyes to the sinking sensation, reaching down to still her hand’s movement.
“I said, no.” he released her grip. “No more tonight.” his voice held a finality she did not like.

He pushed off to her side, falling back into the bed forcefully. The man dropped his head into the pillow, gritting his teeth, willing the throbbing erection to subside.

Liz rolled her naked body unto his rigid form, her lips searching for the man’s.

He instantly responded, his fingers threading through her thick hair, pulling her closer. His mouth was suddenly demanding and rough.

Liz wantonly ground that perfect little ass against his crotch, wiggling suggestively as it settled directly over his painfully engorged shaft. She linked her fingers with his thicker ones, spreading his arms out into mattress.

Her free hand pulled at his shirt until she felt flesh against flesh, the soft hair on his chest very arousing and satisfying on the sensitive skin of her breasts.

Red snarled his growing anger, but it was not directed at Elizabeth or her actions.

Pushing against the hand in his, he rolled her over easily, pinning her to the mattress.

“Stop...” he breathed harshly against the mouth seeking his. “Before I do something you don’t really want.”

Her hand trailed down his chest, her fingers scratching luxuriously through the soft down which disappeared into the band of his pajamas over the tight, taut belly. She managed slip from his grip, sliding her hand under the elastic waist, grasping his erection before he could think to stop her.

“Fuck...” his head lifted as the man prayed to a benevolent God. He panted heavily, attempting to get his libido to settle down.

Liz stroked the fat length experimentally, teasing the head of his cock.

“Do you really need these.” she tugged at the offending material, her tone an affecting pout.

She readjusted her hold quickly, lengthening her strokes on the turgid rigidity. She liked the feel of him in her hand, gently teasing his fat crown every few strokes.

All of Red’s good intentions were rapidly evaporating. He pushed the cumbersome pants down to his thighs, out of his way. His erection bobbed heavily.

Her fingers caressed his neck, drawing him close to her breast. He latched hungrily to the offering, suckling her tempestuously. Their bodies intertwining sensually.

His fingers tightened around hers, holding her to her lascivious pastime, guiding her instinctively.

He thrust against the wonderful feeling, pumping her hand faster, feeling his cock head brush the softness of her heated tummy. His slit dribbled pre-cum on her white skin.

He watched her hand fuck his cock, the sensitive crown pushing into her stomach. His eyes darted frantically to her face, mesmerized to note, that she was just as intently watching the same scene play out.

“Holy shit...” he groaned his relief at the erotic sight.

He felt the build up of tension and release forming inside his body. He readied himself for the euphoric ride he knew he was about to take.

Kaleidoscopic hues danced just behind his eyes, a wave of pure unadulterated lust washed over the man as he gave himself up to the wondrous feeling.

His crown expanded, the slit oozing a thick wetness before thick jets of cream exploded from the tip, covering her flat stomach and breathtaking breasts in his hot, white cum.

“Oh god...” he panted shakily, attempting to come down from the incredulous high he had just experienced, “...Lizzy.” was all he could manage, his body too sated... his mind serenely still.

Rubbing the underside of his cock through a drop of the slick liquid, he got lost in the feeling of how her heat felt against his frenulum.

His body quaked responding to the sensation.

He shivered hard with the last push of ejaculate from his over sensitized cock.

His head dropped heavily into her chest, as he gasped for some semblance of control. Shivers ran up and down his back in waves, especially when the woman’s nails scratched his neck in gentle arcs of sensual degrees.

The silence was uncomfortable for the man, extremely so. Evidently his partner did not share such a feeling.

“Well...” Liz blew out a contended breath, “I feel better, you?”

Raising his eyes slowly, meeting hers. “Elizabeth...” his tone held a wealth of meaning as did his look, “we can’t keep doing this.”

She was stunned. “Why not.” she questioned timidly. “Didn’t I do it right?” it was one of her worst fears.

“Did I not make it clear that I would enjoy more from our relationship than just this?” he waved a meaningful hand, his brows furrowed deeply. “Sex.”

Liz felt a small smile working it’s way across her face. She thought he had hinted towards that subject, but to hear it from his own mouth was quite thrilling.

“I want you so much it fucking hurts!” he clamped his mouth shut, his lips pinched tightly. “I want to please you, I want to make you feel good.” he explained. “But...”

“But what...” she felt a small trepidation.

“But I want to do this right.” the man’s shoulders stiffened with his resolve. “You deserve so much better, Lizzy.”

“Better than you?” she questioned such a statement.

“Maybe, yes.” he replied truthfully. “But I meant, you deserve to experience the excitement, romance, sensuality... affection, from your partner. I want to give you those things, in their due time.”

“So you do regret wh–”

“I do not regret making love to you.” Red replied sternly. “I only want to do right by you. I want to take you to dinner, a walk through the park, dancing...”
“I’ve done that stuff, Red.” she tilted her head in confusion.

“With someone who wasn’t hired to do it?” he gritted angrily.

She felt her smile fall a little, truly understanding what he was meaning to convey for the first time.

“Unlike that fucking bastard, I want to be here.” Red pointed a finger into the bed. “I want to give you those things because you are worthy of having them!”

She stared up at the man, listening and finally comprehending what he wanted, truly.

“This is not just about the sex, dammit!” he tried to explain yet again. “I want to build something with you. Something meaningful. Something special.”

Liz’s lip quivered, her eyes misting.

“If you aren’t ready...” he warned with a look, “and I don’t think you are...I will wait, Lizzy.”

He turned on a low light, rolling from the bed, adjusting his clothing before disappearing into the bath. She heard the water running. Her confusion growing until the man came back, sitting beside her on the bed.

He wiped the hot cloth across her skin, washing away the evidence of their activities.

She was so beautiful. For the first time, the man witnessed the perfection of her body, sans clothing.

On one hand, the sight of her torso marked, by himself, made him feel a primal wave of ownership.

On the other hand, he had no right to feel that... yet.

“I want to make love to you, Elizabeth.” he clarified, his eyes masterfully holding hers.

There was no way she could misinterpret that statement. The fact made her heart thud loudly in her chest.

“But I would much rather do that when we’re together, in every sense of the word.”

He wanted her. He wanted to stake claim to her. Women did not understand such things. Most today would brand him archaic. Red only knew what he felt. He did not label things.

They had so much against them at this point. So many obstacles standing in the way.

He was trying his best to work through those barricades plus keep a young impetuous, and he was learning quickly, a highly sexual woman... happy and content until such a time as those blockades were no longer an issue.

And for the first time in his life, he was coming up blank.

While he was in his twenties and even up until before Lizzy came to stay with him, he had no problem falling into bed with an associate when the deal was made. Or even just a woman he met at a club, say.

He could get sex anytime he wanted, he was not being immodest.

But this. Her hesitant touch, her soft kisses, cuddling with her.
That was an anomaly. That was something he rarely allowed himself to experience, if ever.

Anyone else and he’d all ready be between her thighs, fucking her.

But Lizzy... there was something special going on here.

He enjoyed a good tease. He enjoyed hesitant touches and kisses of a innocent lover.

It took Lizzy to reach him, to reach that thing that had been dormant for so long. But it was there, like it or not.

Now, if she would only let him deal with it properly.

“This may come as a shock to you, but I enjoy being romantic.” he continued. “I would like to have the opportunity to be that... with you.”

“I want to make a life with you, share my secrets with you.” he confided. “I want to lay claim to you... be given the right to call you mine, the correct way.” he held up a hand. “Yes, there is a correct way.”

She listened carefully to him, trying to comprehend all he was saying. She understood the words, she heard them... but never in a million years, did she think any of it would apply to her.

“I don’t want a fuck buddy, a one time thing.” He stated succinctly. “When I make love to you for the first time,” he moved closer without seeming to do so, “I want it to be with the understanding, that I’ll do it again the next day, and the day after that and a year from that day.”

The woman had never heard anything stated so articulately before. It moved her deeply.

“While I would give anything to make love to you at this moment,” he hated to say the words, “There are issues that must be addressed before I can do so. And having the option to make love to you ten years from now, is of far greater importance to me, Elizabeth.”

The woman felt her old insecurities coming to the fore.

“I want to love you...” which was an understatement. “But having your love in return is priceless...”

Liz felt infinitely better now.

“I want something better for us.”

He turned up her face, forcing her to look him in the eye. He wiped away the tears trailing down her cheeks, kissing the wet tracks.

“What ever you decide,” he reassured, “I will still give you the Blacklist names.”

Liz hadn’t thought about that at all. She didn’t care about any of it right now. All she cared about was making the right decision for them...

“But if do you want the same things that I do, then we’ll make it happen.” he advised. “Have I made myself perfectly clear?”

She nodded silently, hugging him tight.

“When you’ve decided...” he let it hang. “I will be waiting. I promise you that.”
April 30

The night passed uneventfully. The next morning, as they followed the bellboy down to the lobby, they found the others waiting for them.

Francis was speaking as they approached. Dembe nodded slowly as he listened politely. Silas on the other hand, was shaking his head sorrowfully, a look of disbelief on his handsome face.

“Where’s Mark?” Red asked as he and Liz neared the group, his expression more than guarded. “And what’s wrong?”

“Mark is staying another day to finalize a deal with Anthony Burke and Ms. Toscani.” Dembe replied.

Red’s expression slipped a tad, grateful that Dembe had the good sense to not use the woman’s name.

Lexa.

“As for what’s wrong...” Silas sighed, “he’s telling us about...” the guard searched for the proper description, “how he fucked up.” the man spared Francis an impatient scowl.

“What did you do?” Red feared the worst, his tone saying as much.

“I met a girl online, see...” the young man began what Red was sure would turn out to be, the longest story in the History of Man. “She said that she’d–”

“Francis...” Red gritted his teeth, “is this going to be Great Expectations or the Readers Digest Condensed version?”

Francis seemed totally confused by the question, so Red waved the man to continue.

“Right, so she met me for drinks,” Francis explained slowly, “we had a couple and we went back to my room...” he winked, his brows waggling, “one thing led to another...”

“Didn’t she ask about your wounds?” Liz had to wonder.

“Well, yeah. But it worked in my favor.” Francis smiled happily. “She pampered the shit out of me. But, I assured her I was in proper working order.” he stated, unconsciously cupping the package between his legs.

Red glanced around the hotel lobby hastily to ascertain if anyone was paying any real attention to his companions.

Liz rolled her eyes at the display, but found herself waving the man on just as Red had a few moments ago.

“Get on with the story, please.” she encouraged.

“So anyway, we started fucking...” Francis was more than happy that someone at least, was interested in his adventure.
Lizzy giggled behind her hand, a little shocked at the man’s forthrightness, but stalwartly attempting to maintain her perspective on the matter.

Her amusement grew by leaps and bounds however, when she noted Red’s reaction. The man stood, head cocked, shaking slowly back and forth, as he exchanged pained looks with the head guard.

“... and while we were...” Francis hesitated a moment, thinking of the proper euphemism, “in fragr, no, in flamingo...”

“In flagrante delicto?” Red presumed, though he didn’t think the definition quite applied to what had happened here, but the boy was on a roll, which meant he would finish the story more quickly. So Red kept his mouth shut.

“No,” Silas followed Red’s train of thought, holding up a stilling hand, “in flagrante delicto actually applies, I believe.”

Red’s brow furrowed, his puzzlement sincere.

“Yeah, that.” Francis pointed excitedly. “I... well, you see, the thing is... I ate salsa. They had it last night, in the bar, instead of...”

“He farted.” Silas replied blandly, cutting to the chase.

“I was telling it!” Francis complained.

“Thank you for that painful reminder.” Silas replied.

Liz turned away quickly, slapping a hand over her mouth to silence her desperate need to laugh out loud, right in the young man’s face. Her shoulders shook, as did the rest of her body as she unsuccessfully tried to hide her ever growing amusement at the sordid tale.

Not only was the Francis’ story telling technique animated, to Red’s point of view, it was downright painful to experience.

Red sighed heavily, removing his glasses, rubbing the building tension behind his eyes.

“Anyway, as I was saying.” Francis stressed. “I farted mid-fuck.” the guy stopped mid-sentence, his hands going to his hips as he contemplated the events of the preceding evening. “Well actually, it was more towards the end, but it’d been hanging there for a while, you know.”

Red looked at Dembe, finding the man nodding understandably, clearly sympathizing with his compatriot. Silas merely looked at the man, his mouth slightly agape.

Liz’s face was red and flushed from trying to hold back her overwhelming need to laugh out loud.

Red kept silent for that fact alone. It was so rare to see her having such unbridled fun.

“And then what happened.” Red asked, figuring he had heard this much, he might as well hang on until the end. “We all wait with bated breath...”

“I think she got pissed. Or disgusted, I couldn’t really tell. I was a little busy after all.” Francis pumped his pelvis to show just how ‘busy’ he had been.

“I mean, it is my fault? I was using some stomach muscles, quite well, mind you.” he nudged Liz as if she understood his meaning, making her laugh harder. “It was either lose the tempo she seemed to like so much, to go rip one in the privacy of the shitter...”
Liz broke, spewing her merriment. Red glanced down at the woman, airily brushing the results of her action from the sleeve of his suit. He was suddenly hard pressed to keep his own amusement in check.

“What’s wrong with her?” Francis demanded, slapping her back quickly, his touch none to gentle, as if she was choking. “Anyway, it was either that, or let it go a little, while I tended to business. I don’t see what her problem was, she came... pretty hard too.” he was proud of that fact until...

“Faked it, you mean.” Silas corrected meaningfully.

Francis drew back, frowning. “It sure didn’t feel like she did.” His concern was apparent. “You think she did?”

“Would you if a chick farted mid-fuck.” Silas queried, interested by the answer.

“Well, no.” Francis shrugged. “You don’t see me freaking if there’s some queefing going on, either.” Francis was once again proud and happy.

Red dropped his head back, looking up to the heavens to deliver him to his next existence.

“So, what’s a little man queef, as it were.” Francis demanded to know.

Silas shrugged minutely. He didn’t mind them either, truth told.

A woman beside them scoffed disgustedly, grabbing her bag before walking away in a huff.

“What?” Francis scowled. “Are you disgusted that I farted or what I said about queefing?” he called out after the woman whose high heels clicked on the expensive marble of the lobby as she made her getaway. “Because if it was the second one, you knew what it was!” he taunted. “So don’t act all high and mighty with me!”

“Francis.” Red snapped, drawing the boys attention.

“What?” Francis threw his hands to his side. “She was eavesdropping, then had the gall to judge me, for what?” he questioned, then it dawned on him. “It had to be the queefing, because she didn’t say anything after I farted.”

“Must you be so crude?” Red scolded firmly.

“You want me to be technical instead?” Francis dismissed such a notion. “How do you explain a queef?” the man threw up his hands questioningly.

“Expulsion of air from the vagina.” Dembe replied stoically.

“Oh... well, yeah, that works.” Francis shrugged. “My way is faster though.” he looked lost in thought for a moment, then sought them out. “Does queefing extend to ass fucking too. You know what I mean?” The young man was suddenly overly concerned. “When you get going, and push out air... is that a fart or a queef?”

Red ran a hand over his face, “Jesus Christ....” he whispered

Liz fell into the wall, leaning into her shoulder for stability. Her laugher rang out loudly in the massive exterior of the grandiose hotel. Dembe reached over quickly, steadying the woman, as he continued listening politely to Francis’ tale come to it’s conclusion.

“Anyway...” the young man took a breath, finally, “I made it up to her, I think, with a little post-coital cuddling. I like cuddling.” Francis’ face softened slightly.

“Or you gassed her, rendering her inert so she couldn’t escape.” Silas stated his belief.

“May I ask why you’re relating your evening activities to us all?” Red asked, rubbing at his forehead, completely mystified as to the ‘why’ of it all.

“Well, you asked what I did?” Francis screwed up his face. “If you didn’t want to know, why did you ask?” he asked slowly, as if Red was an idiot.

“Get in the car, Francis.” Red replied just as slowly, returning the favors.

Silas shoved the young man in the proper direction, he and Dembe trudging off behind.

Liz collapsed into Red’s chest, cackling her repressed amusement into the lapel of his suit. Red smiled down at the little head bouncing off his chest, patting her back until she started to calm down a little.

“H-He’s s-such an i-idiot!” she snorted breathlessly, pushing away from Red, dabbing her eyes, stumbling about haphazardly in a giggling fit.

Red, ever the gentleman, which was more than he could say for some others...he lifted a staunch glare at Francis who was just now entering the car which waited at the curb. Red handed the woman a handkerchief to use instead, as Liz was trying to dab her eyes with the palms of her hands.

“Which is an insult to idiots...” Red replied, before taking her arm, leading her from the hotel.

A good forty-five minutes later, after fighting down town traffic, they boarded Red’s jet heading for Washington D.C. Liz and Francis chatted amiably, during the flight.

Silas took the opportunity to catch up on his sleep. Red and Dembe manned the phones. Each lost in their own activity for half the flight.

Francis headed to the bar to refresh everyone’s drinks. Red had a brief conversation with the man, before returning to his business call.

Liz quirked her head as Francis approached, drinks in hand but felt their descent begin. She settled back, accepting the refreshment graciously.

She buckled her belt, taking a small drink from her glass.

“You wear your seat belt?” Francis disdained. “You little pussy.”

“Red’s orders.” Liz shrugged. “One you should follow, you big pussy.” she hastily looked over, checking on Red’s whereabouts. That word had never passed her lips before and it felt odd to say it to anyone but this idiot here, who she felt ridiculously comfortable with.

Francis was looking at the ends of his seat belt, completely lost.

“Don’t tell me...” Liz shook her head, “you’ve never worn one.”

“They’re for pussy’s.” Francis held up each end as if to explain the obvious. “Besides, the fucking plane crashes. What’s a little strap gonna do?”
“You don’t wear them in the car?”

“They wrinkle my swanky threads.”

Liz gave it up as she watched the guy try to figure out the mechanics of the simple seat belt.

“What was that about?” she changed the subject. “You and Red?”

“Oh, he was just asking me if I was available for the next couple days in DC.” Francis beamed her a joyous look as he completed his objective. He had buckled the belt and felt as proud and happy as when he had taken down the Baroffio Brothers.

“Why?” Liz ignored his euphoric state.

“Oh, he’s... fuck!” Francis squawked when the plane hit a patch of rough air, making the man lurch forward. He stuck his arm out, steadying the glass in his hand, grinning triumphantly when he didn’t lose a drop.

“Now, aren’t you glad you were wearing your belt?” the woman smirked, as they once again dropped quickly in altitude.

She chanced a quick glance to Red, finding him as cool as ever, as though nothing was happening. His feet were kicked up on a nearby table, phone in hand, but his attention was on her.

He inclined his head towards her, silently asking if she was all right.

She smiled softly, nodding once. His sighed heavily, returning his interest to the call, but was clearly bored out of his mind.

He rolled his eyes as he caught Dembe’s attention, raising his hand eye level, flapping his thick fingers together indicating the person was blathering on and on.

Dembe arose, walking to the cockpit. He had received confirmation, from the other man, that the plans had just changed.

Liz’s mouth quivered with amusement. She had noted the exchange between the two men and Red’s gesture had tickled her. There was something so human sometimes about the man, that she felt her heart soften toward him.

It was a feeling that was becoming more and more prevalent these days. Needless to say, she couldn’t wait to get back into the comfort of their own home... their own bed, to see where these feelings would lead.

Francis tapped her arm, nodding his chin towards Silas. The turbulence had not disturbed the man in the least. He still slumbered peacefully, though the skies through which they flew, were still tempestuous.

If anything, it appeared the man relaxed even more into his sleep state, molding further into the leather chair. His stocky frame cuddled up to the posh leather interior as if to a warm lover.

Liz looked out the opposite window, watching the scenery blur past the windows. They slowed on their approach, allowing her to see buildings and cars below more distinctly.

Though their descent was bumpy, their landing was superb.

As they slowed and rolled to a stop, Red dropped his head dramatically. “Oh, Miguel, I’m about to head into a tunnel, I fear I–” he slapped the phone shut before flinging it to the table top.

Francis chuckled quietly at her side, then frowned at Red. “You’ve gone through tunnels while speaking to me...” he narrowed his eyes. “Have you been doing that the whole time.”

“No.” Red finished off his drink, then looked at Liz, instant communication passing between them, which meant in reality, of course Red often had done just that.

She snickered quietly, then whipped her head towards Francis who had jerked back into his seat, his feet flying out from under him. The man had attempted to stand having forgotten he was still snuggly buckled in.

“You can unbuckle the belt now, sport.” Liz pointed out helpfully. “Do you need instructions?” unbuckling her own to demonstrate.

“I know how to do it!” Francis struggled with the belt frantically, but the mechanism refused to give way.

The woman stood up, stretching luxuriously, noting the man beside her. She reached, meaning to shake Silas awake. A hand came out of no where, gripping her wrist to prevent such an unwise maneuver.

She looked at the owner of the hand, frowning hard. “What?”

“Don’t touch him when he’s sleeping.” Red warned, then transferred his attention. “Dembe, if you please.”

The large man shrugged nonchalantly, picked up an umbrella then lightly touched the slumbering giant.

Liz startled when Silas turned, gripped the umbrella, weapon aimed and ready, before she could even think to blink.

“Never touch him while he’s sleeping.” Red reminded sotto voce. “He’ll wake if you say his name.” he directed. “Silas.” he demonstrated, dropping his voice soothingly, cutting through the man’s REM state.

Silas sat up instantly, rolling his neck to get the kink out, his expression slightly confused as he noted he now held an umbrella.

“Is it raining?” he enquired, laying the object aside. He did not note Dembe’s sudden grin.

“Lizzy was about to touch you.” Red explained.

“So you probe me with an umbrella.” he yawned, looking around. “At least buy me dinner first... have we landed?”

Red’s head swirled around quickly at the distinctive sound of a switchblade knife opening. “... Don’t you even think about it.” he warned.

“Then get me out of these fucking shackles.” Francis was wiggling back and forth in his makeshift prison.

“Oh, for God’s sake.” Red reached, his fingers deftly snapping the release on the belt. Francis breathed a breath of exhilaration. “A monkey can do this.”
“Oh yeah right... they have opposable thumbs. It’s easy for them.” Francis defended himself, hastily lifting out of the seat.

Silas shook his head to clear it. “Did he say what I think he just said?”

Dembe lowered his head sheepishly, feeling bad for his friend.

“What?” Francis was as usual... lost.

Red handed Lizzy her bag. “Francis... get off the plane.”

“You don’t have to tell me twice.” he pushed ahead in line, almost knocking Liz back into her seat which brought another round of giggles from the woman.

“Do not encourage him...” Red threw a stern look her way, which only brought on more giggles. “Lizzy... get off the plane.”

The woman dissolved into a fit of laughter. Silas arose slowly, a concerned glare on his face.

“Boss, is there something wrong with her?”

“Yes. It’s the associations she keeps.” Red replied lazily.

Silas shifted a wary stare. “You talkin’ ‘bout me or Monkey Boy down there?” he jerked his head towards Francis who was headed for the red auto parked on the tarmac, even though Joe stood by the large SUV, hands out stretched in a ‘what the hell’ manner.

“But your name is ‘Red’.?” Francis snapped his pique, glancing around expectantly. “Oh! Hi, Joe. You’re late.”

Joe searched for some kind of meaning in it all, receiving no ‘answers’ from anyone departing the plane.

“Black is less conspicuous.” Red played along because that’s all he could do at this point.

Silas bounced down the steps, his expression a wry one. “Yeah, Joe..where ya been?”

“Hey, a man can lose a few hours without even trying.” Francis defended staunchly. “Cut him some slack. He’s here, ain’t he.”

Red tried to ignore his surroundings, helping Liz to navigate the steps of the plane, careful of her injuries still. “Ignore them, maybe they will just go away.”

“Wishful thinking on your part.” She tried hard not to giggle again because if she did, Silas threw her a mystified glance.

“Does Silas...” Liz had a burning question bothering her. “I mean..how does he..eh..” She thought how to put it. “If he’s with a woman and ...falls asleep, afterwards..I mean.” She lifted hopeful eyes to an amused companion.

“We’re very aware when the naked female form is laying cuddled up to us.” Red replied. “The mode we experience upon waking is... less acerbic, shall we say.” he smirked.

“You do that too? Wake like Silas did?”
“Yes.”

“But you don’t do it with me.” she countered. “And I’m not naked.” she teased.

“I’m very aware of you, no matter your state of dress.” Red’s eyes dropped to her shapely form, remaining far too long to be decent. “Besides, I have seen you in all your resplendent glory...finally.”

The woman held the arresting gaze, determined to do so. “So you have...”

The crew pulled off the luggage in no time, loading it into the waiting SUV. Liz realized the jet had yet to power down.

“Are they going somewhere?”

“I am.” Red guided her to the car door, reaching around to open it.

Liz stepped in front of the action, preventing it. “What do you mean,” she scowled, “you’re going somewhere?”

“I’m going to London for a couple days. Check out what I just bought from Anne’s estate.”

Red craned his head, finding his men otherwise engaged. They were giving them some privacy.

“Why didn’t you tell me?” she practically accused.

“I wasn’t sure I was going until about twenty minutes ago.” Red explained. “But actually, I think this is a good idea.” he nodded minutely. “It will give you some space.”

“Space?” she frowned. “What for?”

“Without me underfoot, you’ll have time to think, get your feet back under you.” Red laid it out carefully for the woman. “Instead of thinking with our hormones, perhaps we may think with our hearts.” He rather liked the poetic reference. “Besides, as they say, absence and all that...” he smiled.

Makes the heart grow fonder. She concluded.

The woman was suddenly befuddled. She had assumed they would have time together, to discuss any issues they had with each other. The thought of him leaving unsettled her completely.

There seemed so much to say, so much to iron out.

“Francis is going to stay with you while I’m gone.” he informed her. “I thought you might appreciate it, since you enjoy his company.” he smiled.

She nodded silently, unconsciously playing with Red’s tie.

She wrapped her fingers around the fabric, pulling on it gently. Red followed her directive, stepping in closer until they were mere inches apart.

Liz felt her heartbeat increase, feeling his warm breath skirt across her lips. She leaned forward, pressing her mouth to his.

Red’s fingers curled into the top of the large vehicle rack to maintain control of his senses. He tightened a free arm around her waist, pulling her up against him.

Her little tongue darted out, teasing his lip. He willingly submitted, opening for her gift. His lips lazily explored the sweetness offered.

Liz lazily rubbed her tongue sensually along his. The man issued a deep groan from his throat, before pushing her form against the car, as Red deepened the kiss further.

She stretched up into his efforts, humming her enjoyment. He ran his fingers through her thick hair, softly rubbing the tips into her scalp. The other hand settled around the small of her back.

She gasped in his mouth, as his fingers pressed into that bundle of nerves, making shivers course up her spine.

Liz sighed her contentment, relaxing into Red’s handiwork.

The man enjoyed tremendously, the feel of the soft, warm body pressed so intimately to his.

Red stared down at her half closed eyes, wishing she would ask him to stay.

But even if she should ask him to stay, he knew it was best to go.

He wanted to do this right. Because she was worth it.

“I will miss you, Lizzy.” his deep voice enveloped her.

Liz fiddled with the knot at his neck, suddenly, intently focused on her distraction. “Do you have to go?” She asked quietly.

Red felt his heart still for a beat, shocked to have actually heard the words.

They were closer, the trust and bond between them was stronger. He should be grateful for that. They had moved their relationship onto a more intimate basis.

And now this...

She wanted him to stay.

A first, and a revelations of sorts.

“No, I don’t have to go,” Red softly brushed his lips against her, “but I’m going to, because you need this time, Lizzy.”

“I think I know what I need, Red.” she stated, a little indignant that he thought otherwise.

“Ah, the innocence of youth.” Red sighed softly.

“I meant...” she huffed.

“I know what you meant.” Red stilled her. “Tell me, Lizzy. Are you ready to commit to me... fully, completely?” he watched her face carefully.

Liz stared moodily at his tie, concentrating hard. There was so much at stake. But maybe just as much to gain?

“Are you ready to warm my bed...” his voice dropped sensually. “Are you ready to make love, with me? Because if I stay... I will fuck you.”

Liz inhaled shakily, her mouth going dry for the declaration.

She was torn. A part of her wanted to tell him, yes. Another part of her was hesitating, but she didn’t know why?

Everything was moving too quickly? Maybe he was right? But she needed Red to touch her again, so badly.

Last night he had said so much and she was still trying to sort through all the chaos in her mind.

She didn’t want to hurt him... she didn’t want to hurt either, come to think of it.

Red offered a reprieve because he could sense the turmoil inside the woman.

“You think about it, Lizzy...” Red suggested, “if something should change. If you can say for certain you want me in your life,” the thought made his mouth water, “you only have to call and I will come to you immediately.”

“Well, aren’t you eager.” she strived to lighten the moment and her own mood.

“When I’m coming home to claim what is mine,” Red brushed his lips over her parted ones, “yes. I am very eager.”

“And if I don’t call?” she asked nervously, afraid that he might actually answer in the negative.

“Then it isn’t time yet.” Red simply stated. “I’ll be here when you’re ready.”

“But what if you’re not here?” she feared that he would lose interest if she hesitated too long.

“Then I’m most likely dead,” Red replied, “because that is the only possible circumstance I can fathom that would keep me from you.”

He was not making this easy, at all.

Red heard the jets engines warming up again for departure, glancing at the plane. Time was getting short. He looked at the woman, memorizing her features, then did what came naturally.

He leaned in to kiss her.

Francis poked his head around, a disgruntled sound alerting them to an unexpected intrusion. “Aren’t you two done yet?”

Red waved off the interruption, peppering Liz’s flushed face with small kisses.

After a few moments, Red raised his head, finding Francis still standing there, staring at them.

“What?” Red scowled.

“Nothing. I don’t think I’ve ever seen you two do it before...” he hesitated. “I mean...” he grimaced. “I haven’t seen you do it at all, which is to say... I wouldn’t mind seeing it. I’ve just never been invited.”

“And you never will be.” Red mildly advised.
“Well, that’s not very nice.” Francis was mildly hurt. “I would do it for you. And have.” he testily reminded.

Liz looked at Red in a different manner suddenly. Did he like to watch such things? She blushed fully at the thought.

Red chuckled sensually, reading her mind. “Ahh, the foibles of Age, eh, Lizzy?” He turned on the young man. “Francis... go away.”

“How far?”

“Far enough to give me a moment in private with my fiancée.”

Francis grinned as he held up his hands in surrender before taking his leave.

Red turned his attention to Elizabeth. He spoke over the noise of the plane engines.

“I would like to do more than just kiss you...” Red stressed. “You do know that, right?”

Liz’s hands held tight to the man’s tie, the blue eyes filled with open concern. “You’ll call when you–”

“I’ll call.” he assured.

“Be safe, Red.” she whispered.

He kissed her again, a bittersweet brush that left her wanting more. He pushed off the car, running his thumb gently over her swollen lips before turning away, walking toward the waiting plane.

Liz watched him leave, feeling a roiling in her tummy that left her shaken and feeling slightly ill.

Silas opened the door behind her, gesturing for her to enter. After a few seconds, he cleared his throat. “Liz?”

She glanced at the guard, her expression blank before returning her interest to the back of the long swishing coat and hat walking away from her.

Pushing hastily away from the car, she trotted quickly after that retreating figure.

“Red...” she called out after him. The man turned, his foot on the stairs on the plane.

His head tilted questioningly, a welcoming smile playing around the corners of his mouth.

“Go ahead, Dembe.” Red gestured the man to proceed him, turning back to the woman. He stood patiently waiting, his gaze resting intently upon her face.

She tiptoed, quickly wrapping her arms around his neck, capturing his lips with her own.

Red pressed into the unexpected affection, his heart thudding hard in his chest.

He had not expected this at all...

The large black car rolled up behind them. Neither seemed to notice. Red broke the kiss when he heard the subtle whoosh of a window being rolled down.

“Hey!” Silas complained, “I’d like to have lunch sometime today!”
Red raised the finger at her back, plainly telling the man what he could do with himself.

“I'll see you when you get back.” Liz said quietly, her lips brushing his.

Red smiled against her mouth, embracing the small promise.

“I’ll be back soon, Lizzy.” he staunchly declared. “I promise you that.”
April 30

After arriving home, Elizabeth sat quietly at her Ladies desk, sorting through the mail Diane had left for her before they departed for New York.

She smiled, finding another letter from her Aunt and two from her cousins. She owed her Aunt a letter. She opened a birth announcement which made her smile. The other was a wedding invitation.

Liz tapped the card against her palm, wondering how she should respond. Surely Red wouldn’t want to go. Hell, she wasn’t even sure she wanted to go.

She sat it aside, making note to get a wedding gift if anything, along with a present for the baby.

Tossing the junk out, she hit on the last correspondence, recognizing the type on the front. She immediately tore into the plain white envelope, her fingers shaking slightly. She read the single sheet of paper.

Reddington will destroy you, like he did your mother.
Keep that in mind. Stay in his company and he’ll take you down like he did her.
Hell, your whole family is dead because of Reddington.
Get away from him, Liz, before he does the same to you.

Whoever was sending these, she had to admit, raised questions in her mind.

What was Red’s relationship with her mother? How had they met?

Had they been lovers?

And if so... what the hell did that mean to her? And why should she even care?

If it did happen, it happened over twenty-five years ago, she reasoned.

She looked out the large bay window, enjoying the sunshine filtering through the opened drapes. She allowed her thoughts to wander.

She couldn’t even remember the woman really, except for small flashes of fragmented memories in the night.

What ever connection Red had with her mother, did not seem all that important any longer.

She was her own person, a fact which Red pointed out to her on a regular basis.

Surely, the man would have told her had he been intimate with her mother. If it was one thing Red Reddington was, it was forthright.

Often he would tell the truth, when a lie would serve him better.
Brushing aside the thoughts of her mother for now, Liz instead, concentrated on something more important.

She was seriously considering a relationship with the man. There was no longer any doubt as to that. But if they did this thing, what would the ground rules be?

How did she feel about him with the others? When he went out of town, could she trust him not to visit other women’s beds? Red had been free for so long, how would he feel about any encumbrance or restrictions.

She did know one thing, if they did do this, she wanted commitment. She wanted better than what she had with Tom and... she deserved it.

Liz sat back in her chair. Where had she heard those words? A small smile danced on her lips.

Red wanted to give her those things and thought she deserved them. That’s where she had heard it.

Red did care about her... truly.

Red wanted the whole package. He wanted her. He wanted to build a life together.

When she had heard that statement, she had difficulty believing it to be true. But now the question was... how did she go about letting him know she was just as interested, that she was open to having a closer relationship?

If she were anyone else, she could ask a friend, a coworker for advice.

They wouldn’t be supportive. They would warn about the dangers of involving herself with a known criminal... it was their job and they would think, that they were merely protecting her.

And the other people she knew, believed her to already be in a relationship with the man.

All except Silas and Dembe.

She really had no clue how Dembe viewed her attachment to Red. The man would do anything if Red said to do it.

And Silas would only tell her to grow a set.

Liz suddenly felt all alone, like never before.

There was one person she could talk to, but the thought made her damn near break out in hives.

The next fifteen minutes passed at a snail’s pace as the decision was debated over and over on an endless loop.

Gripping the phone, Liz flipped it nervously in her hand for the hundredth time before sighing.

“You want to know...” she mumbled to herself, “so ask.”

She dialed the number quickly, drawing in a steadying breath, preparing herself mentally having heard the first ring. She even thought of hanging up hastily but a loud click negated that choice.

“Mr. Kaplan?” Liz asked nervously.

“No problem, dearie?” the calm, oppressively somber tone replied immediately.
“Well... no.” Liz admitted. “But...”

“Yes...” the older woman urged impatiently.

“Did Red sleep with my mother.” the younger woman blurted out before she lost her nerve.

“So this is a social call.” her tone altered only slightly.

“I’m sorry, I didn’t mean to...” Liz stumbled over her words, “I just...”

“Have you spoken to Raymond about this?”

“Well, no...”

“I wish I could answer that question for you...”

“But you won’t because of your loyalty to Red.” Elizabeth surmised.

“No, that’s not it at all.” Mr. Kaplan brushed such nonsense aside. “I just believe that this is a discussion you should have with Raymond, so that there are no questions left unanswered.”

“I don’t understand.”

“If you ask me, and I say ‘no’,” Kate began, “you may feel a sense of relief, but still some doubt.” she stated slowly as if speaking to an errant child. “But if you ask Raymond and he says ‘no’...”

“I know it’s the truth, because he doesn’t lie to me.” Liz repeated what she thought the woman wanted to hear.

There was a moment of silence, before the older woman sighed brusquely. “Look, you discuss this with Raymond.” she began. “If he doesn’t answer your questions to your satisfaction, you call me back.”

“I don’t know how to say this...” Liz didn’t, “so I’ll just say it.”

“You want to know what to do concerning the proposition that Raymond has presented you with.”

Liz was momentarily stunned, unable to form a proper reply.

“I believe Raymond cares for you deeply.” Kate began slowly. “And you would be a fool to not accept him in such a capacity.”

Elizabeth’s mouth gaped, one part of her rejoicing another rather stupefied.

“I can assure you,” Kaplan continued, “it isn’t every woman who receives such an invitation.”

Liz wanted to say so much but was quite frankly, intimidated by the woman to whom she was speaking.

“Raymond is an extraordinary man.” Kaplan had said her piece. “Consider yourself fortunate that he has taken notice of you.” she hung up with a finality that Liz found slightly insulting.

An hour into the flight, Red sat glancing out at the billowy clouds below the jet’s windows. He felt the weight of the world sitting on his shoulders.

What the fuck was he thinking?

How could he even consider getting involved with Elizabeth. And yet, how could he not?

Red Reddington was a felon. One with a murderous past and present. It could be argued that he had only killed people who deserved it, but in the eyes of the law... and God, the semantics blurred considerably.

Elizabeth Keen was an FBI agent. A woman much younger than himself.

But the real fact was, he was only a man. He enjoyed life, lived large, bet big, and took ridiculously dangerous chances, for the simple fact... he no longer cared if he lived or died.

Or at least that was how it used to be.

He had a daughter... somewhere.

And Elizabeth... who meant a great deal to him... had changed his entire outlook on the world.

But what the hell kind of life would she have being tied to him?

Hell, what kind of life did she have now, just because she was born to the wrong parents?

Which led him to other aspects of their lives, ones he had shoved repeatedly to the back burner, simply because he did not have the courage to face them.

Red dialed the number quickly, drawing in a steadying breath, preparing himself mentally having heard the first ring. He even thought of hanging up hastily but a loud click negated that choice.

“Kate...” Red breathed out.

“What’s wrong, Raymond?” Kate Kaplan’s tone was entirely different when speaking to this man.

“I think I’m in trouble.”  He rubbed his forehead tightly with his thumb and forefinger, concentrating hard on how to exactly put his feelings into words.

The silence was deafening. Red tried to force his emotions to the surface but he had been suppressing them so long...

“You love her.” Kate’s tone was filled with sympathy.

“.... Yes.”

“And what, you don’t want to?” the woman cut to the chase. “Because that’s a load of–”

“There are so many...”

“You think because you’ve protected her since she was a child, that you can’t love the woman she has become.” she stated in that monotone way she had about her.

“...Yes.”

“Raymond...” Kate Kaplan sighed fitfully. “You failed her mother, or at least, you seem to think you did. When it was really Katarina who failed you both.” even though she could not see the man, she held up a silencing hand. “Regardless of the situation, you’ve made it up to that woman by providing a comfortable life for her daughter.”

“My point exactly, I’ve been like a...”

“Good family friend.” Kate finished. “You did not raise that girl, Raymond. Sam did. He’s her father, not you.” she put it on the line. “You only helped Sam financially from time to time.”

A sharp thud interrupted the flow of the conversation. It sounded vaguely like the fall of an axe... it disturbed the man that he could distinguish such a sound so easily.

“Kate...” he sensed the worst. “What are you doing?”

“Cutting celery for my chicken soup.”

The man breathed out a sigh of relief. With this woman, one just never knew.

“I love your chicken soup.”

“What ever.” it was drolly dismissed. “Elizabeth is a woman now, quite capable of making her own decisions. If she wants to sleep with you–”

“I didn’t say anything about–”

“Please, let’s not even go there.” she waved the butcher knife about aimlessly. “As I was saying, if she wants to be intimate with you, she obviously does not look at you as her father figure. I doubt she ever has.”

“She asked me if I was her father.” Red arranged the napkins on the table before him in an intricate pattern.

“Well, what the hell did you expect?” the woman poured the celery into a colander, running water over the fresh vegetables. “You appear out of nowhere, integrate yourself into her life for reasons unknown... an enigmatical man such as yourself.” the woman grimaced her distaste for the whole thing. “What did you think would happen. And who the hell would not be attracted to someone like you... except me of course.”

“She said she hated me.”

“You’re a big enough man to take a little constructive criticism.” the woman dismissed. “She doesn’t hate you. Let the past go, she has, for the most part.”

“The past can never be put behind us.”

“My God, Raymond. Don’t be so dense.” the woman snapped peevishly. “Why must you hang onto your misguided guilt.” the woman chided. “When all you’re doing is denying not only yourself, but Elizabeth.”

“Denying what exactly?” Red skirted, sitting back heavily in his chair.

“I really hate when you side step the issue.” the woman sighed her annoyance.

The silence came again as Reddington prepared himself to face his demons which he would much rather do than this woman to which he now spoke.

“I’m hurting her...” he confessed bleakly.
“Yes, you are.” Kaplan pulled no punches. “Tell her about her parents. How they were connected to you.”

“Kate...” Red balked instantly.

“There is only one part about her past that interests her right now.”

“Now probably isn’t the best time.” the man bit his lip repeatedly.

“You’ll never think it’s the right time.” the woman scoffed. “When all you’re doing is wasting time.”

“So much has changed for her.” he reasoned. “Her house is gone, her marriage over, her–”

“I know that you’ve made her orgasm.” she stated bluntly. “And don’t lie to me and tell me you haven’t, because I know when you’re lying.”

Red frowned, glaring at Dembe. “Is that all you people do?” he threw out an incredulous hand. “Gossip about my love life?”

“We take bets on it, if you really want the truth.” the woman’s dead pan voice remarked lazily, as she picked up an onion, inspecting it religiously for flaws.

“What the hell does any of this have to do with...”

“You know very well what I mean, so don’t play stupid.” the woman grated. “It’s annoys me.”

“She wants to make love...” Red obediently responded as Kate wished. “But...”

“You’re worried about the scars.” the woman surmised.

“Wouldn’t you be.” Red’s tone held more than a hint of anger.

But Kate knew Red well enough to hear the insecurity underneath the false bravado. “Do you think so little of her?”

“I beg your pardon.” Red was getting irritated.

“You think she’s that shallow?”

“Well... no.” Red didn’t think Lizzy shallow at all, but she hadn’t seen...

“Dammit, Kate!” the man seethed, then sighed. “I can’t take that from her.” the man whispered painfully.

“It’s time she knew the truth, Raymond.” Kate gritted. “It will allow her to move on, don’t you understand?”

Red stared down into his tumbler, frowning hard.

“Raymond, the truth will out one day.” Kate responded sternly. “Do you want her to hear it from you or some reporter.”

He breathed in shakily, swallowing hard around the lump in his throat. “...Me.”

“Stop being so damned secretive and give her something.” Kaplan smashed the onion down on the cutting board with a finality which boded ill if Red did not heed her advice. “Tell her who her mother was to you and everything you want will be right there at your fingertips.”

“I can’t do that, Kate.” Red hissed.

“When she asks that question, you better answer her, Raymond.” Kate tired of the conversation and Red’s tap dancing. “Now tell her. Or by God... I will.”

Red heard the line click, then silence. Kate had hung up on him. The air left his lungs in a rush.

He had to tell Liz something now or Kate would assuredly take matters into her own hands.

He couldn’t stop Kate Kaplan and he knew as much.

Why the hell had he called her?!

Had he hoped that the woman would veto any involvement with Elizabeth straight out? Take the decision from his hands... well that was exactly what had happened, except... it had worked out the other way around.

And did it even matter anymore? The damage was done.

He began rehearsing in his head scenarios he planned on how he would break the news which had to be conveyed but nothing was good enough.

There was a mental block the man could not overcome. One he had to overcome and damned soon, if he knew Kate Kaplan.

He needed a starting point from which to work. He racked his brain, which ticked away feverishly at the new problem presented him.

“You would be better off telling her, Raymond.” Dembe said quietly from across the plane. “I think you are underestimating Elizabeth.”

“I didn’t ask for advice.”

“You should have.” Dembe retorted. “About a great many things.”

“You used to be so quiet.” Red muttered tightly as he walked past the man to the bar. “It was so much more enjoyable, peaceful.”
Am I Interrupting

Chapter Notes

It was pointed out to me in a review that some of this chapter sounded familiar and I had to agree. (Thank you, thank you, thank you! I would have never noticed had it not been for your help!)

(If you want to know how I screwed up, read the review section below. I explain how I think I did it. And it was entirely my fault. Not Beta.)

I was going to delete this chapter, but thought some of it might be enjoyed, so I’ll go ahead and leave it and hopefully get everything back on track in the next chapter.

With that said... I will not be posting the next chapter today (Thursday), as I planned.

I’m going to take a couple days and reread what’s coming up to make sure that everything is correct before posting.

Thanks for reading and reviewing!

Your feedback is VERY much appreciated!

May 2

Much to Liz’s surprise, Red had called with a Blacklister the night he left. After gathering the info, she had called her team, giving them the preliminary information.

The next afternoon, while Silas tended to Security upgrades, he grudgingly allowed Liz to leave with David and the new kid, Kevin, to take Samar to lunch. They also, after lunch, hit a store to grab some odds and ends before returning home.

When Liz arrived, a large truck was parked out front.

A couple of guards and delivery men were off loading the rest of the clothes ‘Miss Perfect’ had chosen for Liz before their trip to New York.

She watched load after load rush past her, her guilt and recriminations growing by leaps and bounds.

Why had she allowed that woman to convince her she actually needed all this... wait a minute. She did not remember ordering all of that.

After the men left, Liz went through, trying to make heads or tails of all the bundles and boxes. She finally achieved her goal an hour or so later, having sorted through the bulk of the clothing.

With that complete, she fell exhausted, unto the small divan. She had enjoyed her afternoon and now determined to put Red Reddington out of her thoughts for a while and attempt her first dip in the pool. An oasis which had been calling her name since she’d been here.

She changed into her bathing suit, only to find herself staring at her phone, again. Wondering, for the hundredth time, what to say to Red. Everything that she had come up with sounded so trite.

Sure Red, I’d like to date you. What woman in her right mind wouldn’t?

She scowled slightly, cringing inwardly. That was so articulate, so profoundly moving... bullshit!

He had been so up front, almost eloquent, everything had sounded so perfect in her mind. When he said it.

She felt like anything which she decided upon, paled in comparison.

Maybe it was just that ‘over the phone’ seemed so impersonal? This was an important step for them. And to her, it felt like she needed to say what needed to be said, to his face. Mainly to gauge his reaction, of course.

She snatched the phone off the table, grabbing her towel, marching from the room... intent on burning off some stress.

Stepping out into the hall, Liz pulled up short, hearing men’s voices. She looked down at herself fighting her inclination to wrap herself snuggly in the towel.

No! It was something Red Reddington’s woman would not...Red Reddington’s woman! The phrase made her tingle inside.

If she played her cards right, could she really lay claim to that title. She fought her inclination to continue such a line of thought, lifting her head proudly, trudging forward.

She would have to get used to feeling more comfortable in her own skin. Her body was okay... right? She could work this bikini just as well as the next woman... couldn’t she?

She was still debating that question when a familiar voice broke her train of thought.

“Hey...” Francis called from down the corridor, taking in her state of dress, or undress, “hot ass.”

Liz did not find any offence in the man’s remark, as a matter of fact it bolstered her confidence somewhat.

“I didn’t expect you back so soon.” she smiled at Francis. The man had only been a couple hours at most. She had wondered at his absence. He had left rather abruptly with no explanation at all, but she wasn’t his keeper and knew how to mind her own business... for the most part.

“You going swimming?” the young man asked.

Liz looked down at her bathing suit, then back at the man, her face saying it all.

“I meant, are you tanning or swimming, you little shit.”

“Swimming.” she smiled. “And you, stop hanging around with Silas.” she suggested evenly, a thought occurring to her. “How about getting changed, swim off some of that stress clinging to you.”

Francis rolled his neck, the sound of cracking plainly heard even at her distance. “Sounds like a plan...”
Liz waded through the water, feeling the drag against her body, pulling at her legs and most specifically, her ankle. She was glad Red had suggested the water therapy. If anyone knew how to work away injuries quickly, with the best results, it was Red.

“Feeling the strain, huh?” Francis dove into the deep end of the pool. He broke the surface, wiping the water from his face. “It felt like it took forever to feel normal after I broke my leg. But really, I think it was about three weeks.”

“I’m just tired of feeling... tired and winded.” she could feel the stress even now.

“Here, let me show you some exercises that helped.” Francis lifted a warning finger. “Don’t push yourself.” He scolded. “You can’t make it all better in one day.”

“I’m fine, let’s keep going.” She panted, pushing off the wall. Francis sighed heavily, shaking his head for such folly.

He followed, gliding up next to her. He kept the pace easily all the way into the deep end. He hit the wall with his hand, turning expectantly.

Liz was no longer next to him. He scanned the pool rapidly, panic rising in his chest.

Breaking the top, he inhaled a lung full of air, as he pulled Liz the rest of the way up, clutching her against his chest. She sputtered, coughed and gasped for air.

He brushed the hair out of her face, concern etched on his boyish features. “Are you all right?” He demanded to know.

The woman jerked her head once in affirmation, grasping his shoulder for support.

“Just relax, I’ve got you.” He patted her back, loosening the water she had swallowed. “Wrap your legs around me, hon.”

“Am I interrupting something?” An ominous voice enquired all to pleasantly from the side of the pool deck.

Francis kicked, circling to face the new arrival. There was no doubt as to what was in Red’s mind, his tone leaving little to the imagination.

The dark eyes stared coldly at the younger man who held Elizabeth so tightly pressed up against his body.

Red’s expression froze as he hurried closer to the pair. He hastily examined the situation more closely, his concern now apparent as well.

The woman coughed spasmodically, finally clearing her lungs and throat. “I’m okay...”

Francis caught her eyes. “Better?”

“Yeah, I’m good.” She nodded. He relaxed his hold, knowing her feet could now reach the bottom. He had guided her far enough to safety.
“You’re back earlier than I expected.” she lifted a surprised glance to the man in question, wading slowly forward. Glad to have solid ground beneath her feet once again.

“That’s all you have to say?” Red snapped. “You don’t think what just happened deserves an honorable mention at least?”

“It was just an accident.” she glanced back at the deep end of the pool and then the young man coming up beside her, subconsciously asking for support.

“Elizabeth.” Red fumed, his mood certainly no better for such an evasion.

“I got tired... I couldn’t...” She sighed.

“You pushed too hard and had Francis not been here, you would have drowned.” Red tracked her movements through the water, walking beside her as she made her way to the steps of the pool. “You told her as much too, didn’t you.” Red directed his attention to the young man who waited patiently for the storm to pass.

“I did, yes.” Francis wasn’t about to go against Red again. “She’s just anxious, Red.”

“Anxious to get herself killed.” At Francis’ look of consternation, Red was reminded to calm himself before speaking again. “You’ll get better, it’ll just take some time... unless you fucking kill yourself.”

Okay, so maybe he wasn’t as calm as he should be.

“Red...” Francis groaned his disappointment.

Red grabbed Liz’s towel, striding to the stairs to help her out.

When she reached the deck, he pulled her against him, uncaring that her wet suit was saturating his clothing.

“Are you okay?” He mumbled into her neckline, squeezing her tightly against his straining form.

“Yes, don’t be mad at me.” She asked quietly in his ear.

Francis exited the pool, grabbing a towel as he passed them.

“Thank you, Francis.” Red grasped the young man’s hand as he passed, his look speaking volumes.

“No problem,” Francis grinned for the one sided apology, “I’m just glad I was here.”

“Why don’t you take a shower and join us for–”

“Ah, I understand now.”

They turned in unison, to see a tall, well dressed, handsome man, smiling widely and eyeing Liz appreciatively.

Liz looked puzzled at Red for the unexpected intrusion.

“Elizabeth, this is Ben Gilchrist.” the older man made the introductions, his hold tightening on the woman’s waist. “Ben is here to finalize some business we have.”

Francis held out his hand, greeting Ben, while Red turned away, holding the towel open, blocking any view of the woman.

Stepping in, Liz held the material to her body, rubbing away the wetness.

When Red turned back, Ben was craning his neck to get a better look, his face allowing his smile.

“On that note, I am going to take a shower. See you all shortly.” Francis grinned. “It was nice knowing you, Ben.” he sniggered, walking past the still gaping man.

Red pulled Liz possessively to his side, staring hard at the newest arrival, scowling darkly.

Francis stopped in his tracks, his face bemused. “Man... take a hint.” he lifted his hands slightly. “Do you have a death wish... literally.”

The other man almost laughed his amusement until he really looked at Francis’ face. His enthusiasm dampened considerably.

“Ray, I’m all wet.” Liz tried to pull away from his expensive and now, dripping suit.

“A fact of which you will never hear me complain,” Red quipped, the sexual undertone quite clear, “and which I plan for you to enjoy on a regular basis.”

Liz managed to control her vexation, not responding to the innuendo. But Red continued to needle her, taking it one step further.

“But only with me.” he nuzzled her damp hair in open affection.

Opening the towel wide, she stepped into him, hugging him close. The warmth of her wet body melded with every part of his. Tilting her head, she nuzzled her nose along his chin, “You know I always do, Ray.” she purred.

Now if she was only chewing gum to complete the vision she had in her head of the floozy bimbo she was portraying, the picture would be complete.

But dammit, the man wasn’t annoyed at all, as she had planned.

He ran his hands under the towel, wrapping his arms around her waist, molding her entire front to his, completely ignoring the fact, that he was almost as wet as she was now.

Dropping his head, he kissed her cheeks, before rubbing his own nose against hers. Kissing the side of her mouth, his eyes twinkled with amusement.

Ben cleared his throat, reminding the two they were not alone.

“I can see why you so desperately wanted to get back, Red.” Ben chuckled.

Red suddenly scratched at the back of his neck, avoiding her eyes.

“What?” Liz tried to read the man’s face. “Did something go wrong?”

“It went better than expected.” Red smiled charmingly at her. “There wasn’t any real point to stick around.”

“Yeah, and now I know why.” Ben snickered.
Red shook his head minutely as a deterrent, but Ben ignored him completely, blithely supplying Liz the run down on what had occurred in Red’s absence.

“You have to know, these meetings normally take up to two days to complete.” the man began his narrative, warming as the tale progressed. “So Red walks in, takes off his hat, stands at the head of the table, pointing at each man in turn,” the man held up his hands, as the picture unfolded, “in less than twenty minutes, each of us knew what, when and where we were shipping... what our cut would be, and what accounts the money would be deposited in.” Ben looked at the man in question with admirable eyes. “Then he says, in that inimitable way he has about him, so... are we done here?”

The man laughed appreciatively.

“I didn’t see the point of taking a whole day to discuss the logistics. It’s pointless.” Red defended his actions. “I didn’t hear you complaining.”

“I had just taken a drink. By the time I was finished,” the man chuckled infectiously, “so was he.”

“And have I heard a thank you?” Red admonished. “No, I have not.”

“Red?” she whispered her growing concern. “Did something go wrong?”

“Dembe, could you take Ben to the bar.” Red directed his one time friend with a none to gentle hand, which made the man laugh all the more. “Get him another drink, since his last went by so quickly.”

Ben chortled, moving towards Dembe. “Please, do take your time, Red. I wish to enjoy this one.” the man called back over his shoulder.

Once Ben had left, Liz checked with Red. “Is there something going on I should know about?”

“I don’t know what you mean?” He hugged her close, looking down at the contact.

“Why did you come back so quickly?” she feared the worst. “Is it Carver?”

“No, he’s out of the country at the moment. I didn’t see the point of wasting a whole day on something that could be taken care of so easily.” he dismissed. “Maybe I just wanted another day off.”

“Are you lying to me?” She pulled back, shocked.

“Well, we know that’s not possible.” He pulled the Velcro of her boot apart, reaching for her leg. She sighed, waving him off. “I’m gonna take a shower you know.”

“You still have to walk through the house.” He set her foot in the black cast, tilting his head, his eyes examining the area in open amusement. “I see Hannah and Katie were here.” He pointed down at the flaming red nail polish on her toes, smiling. “Nice color.”

“You’re evading.” she scolded.

“Lizzy, I’m tired, I’m burnt out. If I could, I’d go to Mark’s tomorrow.” After running his fingers along the top of the cast to check it’s tightness, he helped her stand. “I missed you.”

“You did?” her heart sped up a beat.
“You sound surprised.” there was a melancholy to his voice.

“Maybe a little.” she admitted.

“I’m finding I can’t sleep without you near…” He smiled when she looked shyly back at him. “I’ve grown accustomed to your snoring and now I can’t do without the white noise.”

Liz laughed lightly, slapping his arm playfully as they headed back to the master bedroom.

“Take a couple days off Red.”

“I wish I could, but I don’t see that happening yet.” he confessed. “I’ll be here tonight and tomorrow, I think.”

“Can I help?”

“The Blacklister I gave your team has moved off into Canada, so I may have to take them up there to get him.”

“Why do you have to go?”

“To find him,” he explained patiently, “I have to meet with contacts there, face to face.”

“If you keep going at this pace, you won’t make it to Mark’s.” she forewarned. “Because you’ll have dropped dead.” she complained.

“It’s like I said, I know this little get away is coming and time seems to stretch the closer it gets.” He sat down on the couch, collapsing into it wearily. “I think we’re all feeling it.”

Red glanced over, finding the woman staring at him worriedly.

The man dropped his head back, then nodded wearily. “All right. I’ll try to take a couple days off.”

Liz smiled happily, leaning to kiss his cheek. “Thank you.” She clasped his hand, pulling on it relentlessly, “Go change, you’re all wet.”

Red looked her over, taking in her lack of clothing. His glance caused her skin to flush.

“Speaking of wet…”

Controlling her rapidly beating heart for the man’s very apparent appreciation, Liz bolstered herself, “Do you think we can get a minute when you’re finished with Ben?” she asked. “I wanted to talk to you about–”

“Raymond?” Dembe knocked softly.

Red sighed, then straightened his posture, tugging on the back of his vest, turning to the new ‘intruder’ into their world.

“Come in, Dembe.” Liz gestured the man in. “I’m just going to change.” she smiled at both men before making her exit. She threw Red a cautious look. “We can talk later.”

After the woman shut the door, Red rolled his head towards his friend.

“Is this your little way of telling me you want a raise?”
Dembe’s mouth pursed, barely containing his amusement at his friends ire.

“You just wait outside that door, don’t you?” Red evil-eyed his friend. “Just waiting there for your cue to come in and interrupt at the worst possible moment ever.”

“Not the worst ever…” Dembe grinned, holding out the paper he came to deliver.

“I swear to God, Dembe.” Red’s jaw worked furiously. “If you ever interrupt me when I’m fuc–”

He heard an abrupt crash from the bathroom which interrupted him momentarily. He stood hastily, making his way forward.

Liz’s soft murmured curse amused Dembe.

Red took a couple steps, then halted, pointing a warning finger at his friend. “I won’t stop, I’m warning you now.”

The man pushed open the door, “Are we having a small apocalyptic disaster in here?” he viewed the broken disarrayed contents of the shower caddy which lay strung across the tile floor, with open amusement.

“You could break your neck with one of those things.” he quipped before closing the door soundly in Dembe’s face with but one calamitous look for the man.

Dembe chortled quietly, heading for the exit. He knew he would try in the future to exercise more discretion, as Raymond Reddington… always kept his promises.

Liz had felt stupid, having clumsily knocked the shower caddy down. She was grateful for Red’s assistance in righting the mess. She had been in the shower, soap on her face, naked as the day she was born and just about to shampoo her hair when her arm caught the damned thing, sending it flying.

She had forgotten all about her lack of clothing in her efforts to right the situation, until she arose from her stooped position, finding Red’s eyes resting placidly on her nakedness.

The moment lengthened, Liz feeling like the proverbial ‘deer in headlights’. Red finally looked away, breaking the spell.

“I’ll get that for you.” was all he said.

The simple statement eased her awkwardness instantly. She didn’t know why it did, but she arose thinking only, that she was cold and needed the warmth of the shower again. She stepped back inside, resuming her shower as if the man seeing her sans clothing was the most natural thing in the world.

Red sat the items aside, turning his head to watch blatantly, as Liz continued to wash that appealingly beautiful body.

His gaze traveled over the soapy bubbles cascading down the slope of her spine, watching her hands move languidly over the heavy mounds of her breasts, then slowly slide down the taunt stomach back to the sculptured arms and shoulders.
“What did you want to speak to me about?” he managed to pull his attention away long enough to sound somewhat normal.

The woman hesitated, her hands halting their motions. She had lost her nerve when confronted with the reality of the man.

Red glanced back, raking the sweet curve of her bottom, wishing with all of his heart, that she would turn around to face him. But that did not happen.

“Oh, it wasn’t that important.” Liz’s tone held a lightness she did not feel. “I know you have people waiting.”

“Let them wait.” he advised quietly. “No one is more important than you.”

The woman turned slowly, her eyes locking with his. She suddenly felt all warm and fuzzy inside, beaming him a brilliant smile.

Red carefully kept his eyes forward, sensing this was not the moment to push the subject, he had in mind to push.

He nodded minutely, taking his leave more than reluctantly. The vision of her neatly trimmed pubic hair covering that luscious little pussy, making his cock throb with anticipation.

After Liz dressed, she found the men drinking and smoking cigars in the glass enclosed veranda.

Someone had opened a couple of the huge doors, allowing the smells of their cigars and fragrant early spring flowers to combine, in a pleasant sweet aroma that drifted around the cool room.

A soft breeze blew in bringing a heavenly scent from the kitchen as well.

“Are you cooking?” She asked Red, taking her place next to him.

He shook his head, before blowing out a heavy stream of smoke. “No, I hired out before we landed.”

“No?”

“No, remember she had her grandchild’s recital tonight.” She nodded that she did. “I hired a different crew.”

She didn’t think she’d ever get used to Red’s life. Don’t feel like cooking, hire it out. Don’t want to clean, bring someone in. Want authentic Baklava, get on a jet and fly to another country.

She tracked Ben as he walked back and forth at the edge of the enclosure, phone glued to his ear, a serious expression on the earnest enough face.

“Something wrong.” She gestured to the man, her senses tingling.

“No, just confirming last minute details.”

She watched Red’s tongue flick against the end of his cigar, his lips wrapping around the tip.

“Mmm,” He hummed around the cigar, leaning over to reach into his jacket pocket, pulling free an iconic Robin’s egg blue box. He presented it to her.

She flipped it over so the bow was on top, reading the block script. “Tiffany…” She scolded, lifting awestruck eyes. “Why do you do these things...”
“Why do they always sound so scolding when they hold that box in their hands?” Ben grinned, taking a seat. “Knowing very well that they’re going to keep whatever’s inside.”

Red chuckled around his cigar, watching for her reaction as Liz pulled the lid off. His smile widened as the blue eyes blinked her amazement, her mouth suddenly agape.

“Oh my God...” she reverently removed the platinum and diamond necklace carefully, holding it up to her neckline. It draped elegantly over the warmth of her full bosom.

The single strand of delicate round diamonds broke off into two strands mid-way, mimicking a cowl.

“Oh my God.” Francis ‘mimicked’ the woman’s awe having seen the gift in all it’s glory.

“See... she’s going to keep it.” Ben snickered, watching the woman stare mesmerized, at the sparkling strand of jewels.

Red reached, rolling the cherry on his cigar into the crystal ashtray, his amusement growing exponentially.

Lizzy unexpectedly threw her arms around his neck, hugging him tightly.

“I bet she wouldn’t have done that if you just gave her a box of chocolate.” Francis nodded sagely.

“Usually, she’s more excited about chocolate.” Red felt the woman giggle against him.

“Well, not today I’m not.” he was assured as she pulled back, kissing his cheek lingeringly. “How do I thank you for something so beautiful?”

“Oh, let me count the ways.” Francis piped up, rolling his eyes dramatically.

“We’ll negotiate a deal...” Red traced her brow lovingly, his tone dropping a notch, “...later.”

But his ‘negotiation’ was interrupted by a server standing in the doorway, “Sir, dinner is ready to be served.”

The men adjourned to the dining area but Liz had more important things to do. She fumbled with the clasp of the necklace, her brace inhibiting the task.

“Here, let me help you.” Red took charge, hooking the two pieces together easily. He gently turned her shoulders. “Let me see.”

She turned around, tracing the edge of the diamonds with her fingers. “Isn’t it magnificent?” She moved her chest slightly, making the diamonds shimmer under the light.

“Very...” The man was not looking at the necklace at all, she noted.

“I know this is meant for a special occasion.” the woman could not stop touching the fabulous stones. “But I tell ya...”

“Any occasion that a beautiful woman wears diamonds, is special.” Red took her arm, linking it with his as he followed the others from the room.

“Sometimes Red Reddington,” she had to admit, “you take my breath away.”

“Not yet,” he causally mentioned, “but that day is on the horizon.”
He enjoyed the quizzical glance she offered.

He had actually worried that she might not like the necklace. She was a simplistic type of woman. Usually gravitating to small charms, delicate necklaces, basic watches.

But maybe it was because no one had ever gifted her with something better?

Tom certainly wouldn’t have gone out of his way to give her anything that wasn’t given to him by his handlers. Red knew well, where that wedding ring of hers had come from, and it certainly wasn’t chosen by Tom.

She deserved better... any woman did. But in Lizzy’s case, Red was the very person to give her the very best.
Negotiations

May 2

The house was busy for hours with Red constantly in demand from one person or another. At one point, Elizabeth thought she had cornered the man for a private moment but Francis pulled him away, for a last minute bet on some game everyone seemed involved in.

Red said to put five on the under dog where as Francis laughed gaily, dismissing such folly, before rejoining the guards and Dembe in the larger entertainment room.

“You just bet five hundred dollars on a game you haven’t even been watching?” Liz was a little numbed by the fact.

Red steered her to a convenient couch in a nearby room. “Actually I bet five thousand.”

The man smiled at the sharp intake of breath from the woman.

“Sweetheart, if you’re going to bet, bet big. Makes the winning so much more rewarding and watching so much more exciting.”

He raised his arm, settling it behind Liz, surprised when she leaned into him, resting her body comfortably against his.

When did this start to feel normal? It had been a fluid movement, as though they had done it a couple hundred times before.

He glanced at the top of the shiny crown of her head. “We seem to have a moment alone here.” he checked the empty room as she cuddle closer. “I believe you wanted to speak to me concerning something important?”

“I... uhm...” she hesitated now that the opportunity had presented itself, “well, you see,” she began, “I thought a lot about what you said.” she fidgeted with her necklace. “I mean, before you left for London.” she clarified.

“Yes...” Red tipped his glass, sipping the warm liquid, waiting patiently. He could sense the tension in the small frame.

“Well, I just thought, maybe....” Liz took a shaky breath, trying to calm her nerves. “I’m not quite sure how to...” she sighed her disappointment, when Francis and Dembe entered the room unannounced, laughing over some shared joke.

The woman drew in a deep breath, trying hard to squelch her vexation.

Red sensed again, the woman’s mood. “Could you give us...” he began, catching the attention of the wayward intruders.

Liz squeezed Red’s thigh, hushing him. “We’ll talk later... or something.” she mumbled, before kissing his soft lips briefly.

“Are you staying tonight, Francis?” she asked politely, directing her attention to the man.

“Actually, I think I will, if you don’t mind.” Francis started walking the room, as was his usual modus operandi, searching through anything that could possibly be misconstrued as ‘private’.
“Mitch is still at my house and I just know he’ll have the ‘flavor of the day’ there. And really, I would love to get some sleep tonight.”

“Flavor of the day?” Liz questioned.

“He’s had a different girl there the last four nights he’s stayed. And they’ve all been...” Francis searched a polite word.

“Enthusiastic?” Red assisted.

“That’s putting it mildly. I went home today to pick up some clothes and thought I walked into an episode of Wild Kingdom.” the younger man examined the fine leather of a novel he had taken from the shelf. “This is heavy.” he shot a questioning glance to his host.

“Well see, Francis,” Red smiled pleasantly, “all my novels actually have pages in them.”

Francis’ brow crumpled disapprovingly. “The hollow ones are much lighter and just as nice looking... you can hide lots of...” he glanced at Liz, altering what he had intended to say, “neat things inside.”

He looked at the floor trying to decipher if he said anything amiss then realized everything was fine. He decided to change the subject. “You two don’t swing from the vines, right?”

“We’ll keep it down, just for you, Francis.” Liz managed tongue-in-cheek. “Why not put them in the guest house?”

“Funny you should ask.” Francis nodded agreeably. “Why didn’t you tell me about the secret room?”

The woman looked at Red, the statement confusing her completely. “Sweetheart, can we have a moment here?”

Red was already helping her arise, directing her gently from the room.

“Oh, I get it. It’s guy talk.” she disliked being dismissed if she were a child but she could feel a tingle where his hand had met flesh. “I don’t have to be hit in the head.”

“Yeah, why does she have to go?” Francis championed her cause until Red’s lethal shift of his eyes changed his outlook. “Yeah, it’s guy talk, get out.”

Liz sighed heavily, shaking her head as she exited in a huff.

“Well, you’re gonna sleep on the couch tonight.” Francis predicted.

“What... secret... room?” Red practically growled.

“There was a fake wall in the office.” Francis spread his hands defensively. “My contractors found it when they were remodeling the East wall.” he shrugged any concern away. “You didn’t know about it?”

“I bought the house from an associate. He didn’t mention it.”

“Why did you buy it for her? I thought she was here.”

“None of your business.” Red stated. “And put down that vase, it’s priceless.”

Francis sat the artifact aside carefully, stepping far away from the vicinity.

“Was there anything in this hidden room?” Red got matters back on track.

“I haven’t seen it yet.” Francis was still more interested in the vase. “How much is priceless, exactly?”

“I want to see that room.”

“Yeah, okay.” Francis started wandering around again, looking for something else to catch his wandering attention. “We can go by tomorrow morning...”

“I want to see it now.” Red stood, finishing his drink in one gulp. “I’m going to tell her we’re going out.” he nodded to Dembe who exited to ready the vehicle.

“Can I come?” Francis asked excitedly.

“Do you have the keys to the house? Because I don’t.” Red sighed heavily.

“Oh, right.” the young man smiled happily.

Red headed back to their room, just as Liz was coming around the corner.

“Now, can I have a minute of your precious time.” she asked, her gaze shifting past the man, her lips pinching in open annoyance.

Red’s brow furrowed, looking over his shoulder to see what the problem was. Silas and Joe were sauntering down the corridor, focused on Red.

“No...” Liz jabbed a finger at them, stilling the men in their tracks. “Go away.”

Silas ignored her completely. “We need him to–”

“You need to take a hike, take a long walk off a short pier, hit the road Jack, you need to leave...” she informed the men in no uncertain terms. “What ever the hell you want can wait, dammit!”

Red clenched his jaw tight, staving his amusement because the look on their faces was... priceless. If only Francis were here now, he would understand.

The guards looked at him, awaiting his decision. He shifted his eyes to the woman.

This was her home. They were her guards. She had a perfect right to tell them to bugger off.

“Did you hear me?” she drawled. “Go... away....” she pointed for them to go. “It’s my turn!”

“You need to get your ass tapped.” Silas grumbled.

“I’ll tap your ass, you little son of a b–” the woman reached for Red’s weapon, only to have the man’s large hand still hers.

“You heard the lady.” Red held his grip on Lizzy’s hand. She struggled harder however, when Silas crossed his eyes at her. “Follow her orders...”

Red knew the men were screwing with Liz and would listen to her if the shit hit the fan, but she needed control right now, and they needed to give it to her.

Liz stuck her tongue out before slipping it back in her mouth quickly when the head guard reached out to snag it between his fingers.

Silas’ reflexes were in remarkable working order and he was just an instant from catching the slippery little nub which shocked Elizabeth if her reaction were anything by which to judge.

Red hid his amusement admirably, even when he heard Silas mumble under his breath as he passed... ‘kiss ass’.

While Red normally would have retorted... he was much more interested in Lizzy right now, than having a verbal sparring session with the Head Guard.

Red chuckled quietly as the woman manhandled him into a nearby room. He leaned against the dryer as Liz firmly shut, then locked the door behind them with a flourish.

She stood there a moment, glaring at the door. She glanced behind her, blue eyes meeting a patiently condescending pair.

“Alone at last.” he glanced around his surroundings. “I love the ambiance of this room.”

“Oh, shut up. I mean... not shut up...” she stepped closer, her hand held aloft. “You don’t have to shut up.”

He inclined his head graciously. “Are you nervous?” He asked solicitously, folding his arms over his chest, his leg crossed at the ankle.

“I’m not nervous.” She almost knocked over the fabric softener bottle with the unsteady shake of her hand. “Okay, I’m a little nervous.” she admitted fitfully, angry with herself for being so.

He pushed off the dryer, coming closer to her, his bulk seeming to fill room. “Talk to me, Lizzy.”

She took a steadying breath, clenching her trembling hands at her side, opening her mouth to speak...

A horrendous knocking on the door made the woman actually start, it was so loud.

“Dammit, Francis, go away!” Liz voice shook. “He’ll be out in a minute!”

She waited a spell, shocked when only silence prevailed. She looked at the door in something akin to wonderrment.

“Lizzy?” Red questioned softly.

She braced her hand on his jacket, kissing him softly.

She knew now, beyond a shadow of a doubt, that all she had wanted to feel was... this.
To confirm what she had felt in New York, was the real deal.

She had felt an instant connection when his lips touched hers.

Being kissed and held by Red Reddington, felt right.

He smiled against her lips, inching closer, just feeling the tips of her breasts brush against his chest. Red rubbed his nose along hers, his mouth parting sensually in response.

Liz would be lying if she said she didn’t enjoy these spontaneous acts of affection. A hug, cuddling and even a kiss now and then, made her feel cared for and connected with another human.

Other’s would not understand how this man affected her. When she was near him, her heart would race, her tummy flutter erotically. Just the scent of him, excited her in a way she hadn’t experienced in years. This could not be wrong.

Red knew he should probably push to find out what the problem was with this woman, because he sensed there was one. But right now... he just really wanted to be alone with her. He’d been without this beautiful mouth for days and missed the sweetness of her kiss.

Liz drew back, her eyes searching his pleadingly. Red wanted to help, to answer any questions she might have, but she had yet to ask any.

“I know that you are a little...” he began to search his way, hoping to alleviate any concerns or worries she might conceivably harbor.

“I want to date you...” she whispered quickly, before another interruption could occur or she lost her damn nerve.

Red’s mouth snapped shut, his senses stagnating.

“We can start off slow.” Liz spoke hurriedly, starting to pace quickly back and forth before the man. “...Spend some time together, alone.” she suggested. “Maybe we could take a drive down the coast. No wait, there’s a coast here right?” she had a vague vision of some coast somewhere. “You know what this is like, it’s like one of those dating sites.” she looked at him plaintively. “I like long walks on the beach, horseback ri—”

“Lizzy, stop.” Red reached out, gently taking hold of her arm to slow her pacing. “What did you say?”

She looked down at the towels beside her, unstacking the perfectly stacked column. “I said it was like one of those dating s–” she could feel the man’s stare burning into her.

“What did you say, Elizabeth...” the man repeated the question, his gaze unwavering.

“I mean...” she sighed shakily, “if you’re still interested, that is, of course.” she licked very parched lips, with her very dry tongue. “I-I mean, I didn’t call when you were gone, but I thought it would be better to talk to you, face to face and then you got home...”

“Elizabeth...”

“I accept your offer... to date...” she clarified, then added quickly, “each other, of course.”

Red focused on her mouth moving, the words filtering in his brain... before he fully comprehended them. It must have taken a while, because when he snapped out of the fog, the woman in front of him looked very self-conscious.

“Really?” he asked quietly.

“... Yes.” she nodded once.

Red controlled his growing excitement, just barely, since it was very obvious the woman needed something more.

“This will be a...” she traced the line on top of the washer meticulously, “a monogamous relationship?”

Red smiled instantly. This is where negotiations began. Fortunately, he was amazing at negotiations.

“I would like it to be.” Red was pleased to see she seemed relieved by his answer. “I take it that is a prerequisite for you.”

“Yes, I would prefer that.” she breathed easier. “That may be old fashioned or not up to today’s standards.” she realized, grimacing slightly.

“In some things, Elizabeth,” Red philosophized, “the old ways are best.”

“I also know, you get busy and stuff.” She shrugged agreeably. “I won’t take it personally or anything if you have to go at a moment’s notice. As a matter of fact, I’m getting used to that.”

“That will have to change.” Red disagreed.

“I don’t want you turning your life upside down because of this thing between us.”

“I call it rearranging.”

“That’s another thing.” she remembered. “I know you have to keep up appearances, so I will not stand in your way of doing your job.” she declared.

“All right...” he let the idea settle, “we’ll work on that.”

“Nothing is changing per se, except we will be more... affectionate?” she questioned hopefully.

“I would hope that we would become more... affectionate.”

“And I understood you correctly?” she needed it clarified for her sanity’s sake. “You won’t have sex w—”

“I only want to make love... with you.” Red clarified. “I don’t want to be with anyone... other than you.”

Liz smiled softly, very pleased with his response.

“And you?” Red questioned. “Will you belong to only me?”

Liz pouted sternly up at him. “Of course I’ll be faithful to you!”

He knew that of course, but that was not in essence, what he had asked. Though it was damn nice to hear her say those words.
Liz moved closer once again, leaning into his embrace which he offered gladly.

The woman primly straightened his tie, her eyes lifting questioningly.

Red was experienced enough to read the invitation. He drew in a deep breath, exhaling slowly.

“Lizzy you just intimated that you would understand about my job.” he was at a crossroads. “Even as we speak, I have two men waiting for me to accompany them on a very important matter. I don’t want to go.” he explained his point of view succinctly.

“I would rather stay with you, but to do so might conceivably put you in some sort of danger. Danger to which I have yet to determine the parameters.” he shrugged. “But danger all the same.”

He looked at her earnestly. “Now, you tell me... what do I do?”

Liz was slightly off put by such honesty.

“When we make love, I want it to be because it is right for us,” he desperately wanted that, “because the affection we share, naturally led us to that moment.”

He was the most romantic man she had ever met. And while she could appreciate that fact, all she wanted to do truthfully, was fall into bed with the man.

There was also something about anticipating how that special moment would come about.

What would lead up to them being intimate?

She was sure if she pressed him to make love to her at this very moment, he would. Right here, probably on top of the washer and somehow he would even make that romantic and sensuous and exciting and most of all, memorable.

But that he was willing to wait... and she knew he told the truth in that aspect.

_Really_ made her want to sleep with him.

Oh, the irony of it all.

“You’re not making the wait any easier, you know.” she grumbled quietly.

Red chuckled, hugging her gently. “I never said we couldn’t fool around until that time.”

He smiled, pressing gently against her neck as he felt her giggle in response to his quip. He leaned slightly, catching her gaze.

“You know what I would really like?” he asked seriously.

She glanced at the washer mischievously. “To brazenly take me here.” she pointed to the lid. “We have to start it first though.”

He chuckled appreciatively. “When I _take you_, I won’t need assistance from the spin cycle, trust me.”

“And do you plan to...” she was suddenly more than curious.

His tone left little to the imagination. “Sooner or later... hopefully the former.”
“I thought this was all going to be natural.” she lifted stylish brows.

“That refers to the first time. Everything after that, is cart blanche.”

“Oh, I see. Thank you for setting that straight.” she held her smile.

“May I take you out to dinner tomorrow?” he asked.

The sudden change of venue was becoming easier to adapt to.

“Like a date.” she teased.

“Exactly like a date.” his tone had dropped slightly.

“Do you expect me to put out on the first date, because Silas says it is expected.”

“Silas is a slut, and you are not.” it was emphasized.

“Then I would like that, very much.” she nodded amiably. “Casual or formal?”

“We’ll wing it.” he placed his lips softly against hers. The heated touch ignited an ember inside the woman’s overactive libido.

Slowly caressing his bottom lip, Liz curled her fingers into his hard chest, pursing her lips sensually against the curve of his mouth.

“This is nice.” she sighed contentedly.

“Nice?” his fingers curved into her hips, easily lifting her to the washer. Stepping between her legs, she slid even closer of her own accord. “If that’s all I rate, I should take a little more initiative.”

He slid his fingers up the inside of her thigh, lifting the dress as he went. Red hooked his index appendage inside the flimsy silk of her panties, rubbing enticingly over her throbbing little clit.

Liz squirmed about helplessly under his guidance, her mouth devouring his eagerly.

“You know what I would really like?” he repeated almost soothingly, his thumb teased the tiny nub religiously. “To taste this little morsel I’m playing with right now.”

Liz moaned brokenly.

“I can’t wait to taste you.” he moved in close, spreading her legs with his flanks, holding her open to his exploration. “Do you want my tongue on your pussy, Lizzy?”

She moaned, gasping his name feebly.

“I can’t think straight some days, wanting so badly to put my face between your thighs and lick you until you come.”

He felt her fingers clutch helplessly at his shoulders as she held tightly, the rising tension racking her body, causing her to shudder uncontrollably.

He grasped the back of her hair, holding her mouth for his pleasure as he finished the kiss to his satisfaction.

He drew back leisurely, inspecting his handiwork.
“‘Nice’ my ass.” Red Reddington never backed down from a challenge and although the woman did not know she had issued one, she could not deny his abilities.

She leaned against him breathlessly, her senses straining, her emotions raw.

Her fingers sought some sort of stability, curling into the soft cotton on his shirt where the material stretched tightly over his lower back area.

Red stiffened immediately, her touch reminding him of an issue as yet undisclosed.

He drew back slightly, breaking the moment. He would have to approach the subject sooner or later. Kate Kaplan had seen to that.

He, in truth, was dreading the disclosure.

“There’s something I have to...” he shook his head slightly, lowering it. Shit, there had to be a better time, a better place.

Red was never so glad to hear his friend’s voice filter through the door. A voice that offered deliverance.

“Raymond, we are ready.” Dembe’s deep tremor filled the other man’s mind with relief.

Red breathed out shakily, accepting his reprieve gratefully... guilt eating away at him.

She laughed quietly, kissing his mouth. She could see the humor of the situation finally.

“Go ahead.” she nodded. “We can talk more later.” she smiled for him alone.

“I’ll be out in a minute.” Red told the man, then heard Dembe’s footsteps retreat.

She giggled quietly into his chest, hugging the man endearingly.

“What?” he muttered against the crown of her head, pleased that she was apparently content now. Whatever demons which had plagued her, now seemed gone.

“Are you my boyfriend or significant other or...” she tightened her thighs around him, hugging him with her legs, just moments before Red cupped her bottom, sliding her from her perch.

He turned with her artfully, pressing her against the doorway, his hands cupping the firm cheeks possessively. He leaned suggestively against her vulnerable middle, moving just so every now and again in a most rhythmic manner.

“You can call me anything you like.” his mouth feasted on hers ravenously.

“What are you going to call me?” she whispered enticingly.

“Mine...” he replied gruffly, before claiming that beautiful mouth of hers once again.
May 2

As they drove to their destination, Francis related a story Mark had told the previous day.

It was difficult to follow the tale because, knowing the punchline, Francis belabored the telling by laughing after every other word.

“So the cop says, ‘sing’.” Francis’ hands were very animated, “and ‘Tony Twitchy Eye’ says, in that Irish accent he has,” the young man mimicked Tony’s accent perfectly, “...‘I’ll sing, I’ll sing’.

He started a fit of laughing again.

“And did he... sing?” Red was interested in spite of himself, his expression one of pure indulgence.

“Yeah,” Francis laughed heartily, “he breaks into this rendition of Copacabana whereupon the Coppers proceeded to make the canary regret the day he was hatched.” the hysterical laughter began anew.

“Yes,” Dembe’s droll voice piped in from the front seat, “quite the knee slapper.”

Red exchanged enigmatical looks with Dembe in the rearview mirror. “Francis, have you been reading Mickey Spillane novels again.”

“Yeah....” the young man’s laughter died a natural death. “I love that man.”

“Why did I forgive you again?” Red questioned the validity of that particular decision.

“Because life without me is boring.” Francis smiled happily.

“Life without you is serene.” Red corrected.

“Oh, look who’s talking.” Francis scoffed. “You don’t see my face plastered on a FBI Most Wanted Poster.”

“Yet...” Dembe sighed from the front seat.

Red chuckled, as they pulled up in front of the dark house. Following Francis inside, he nodded in approval, seeing the work that had been done so far to the house.

“It looks nice, Francis.” Red praised the improvements. He was glad to see the house so changed, especially after the images which lingered still of the last time he was here.

Francis pointed the way, while Red and Dembe followed.

“East wall.” Francis glanced about, getting his bearings. He started off but Red put a restraining arm out.

“East.” the older man pointed the actual direction out as the younger had headed South.
The men stood before the wall, searching for any sign of a ‘hidden room’.

Francis held up a staying hand, stepping, hitting the last panel at the end of the mantel.

The door slid open of it’s own volition, revealing a darkened interior.

Red pulled a flashlight from his pocket, scanning the space. The light danced across the eerie silence, revealing flashes and segments of fragmented images.

The entire room was covered in pictures.

Of Elizabeth Keen.

Red stepped into the area, his focus on the disturbing photos.

There was Elizabeth, getting coffee, on her morning run. There were several stills of the woman sitting with Red on a park bench.

“What is it? What did you find?” Francis stepped inside, his brows raising. “Whoa, what the...” The images rendered him speechless.

Red spun slowly, the beam of light revealing more recent photographs. More specifically, Liz at the Blacksite the day she picked up the baby.

He saw none which would reveal her present location thankfully, but that did not stop him from pulling his phone out, dialing Silas.

“Dembe, shut down the lights.”

In a few moments, the house was once again bathed in darkness aside from the hazy beam from Red’s flashlight.

“Silas, check on Lizzy, please.” Red stepped aside, allowing Dembe to pass into the small space.

The large dark man began taking the photos down, keeping them in order as he neatly deposited them in an empty plumber’s box.

Red watched the progress. “Nothings wrong. Let’s just say, I’m unsettled.” He dropped the phone from his mouth, waiting for Silas’ confirmation.

Red glanced around the room, silently fuming. So this was how Tom knew Lizzy was staying with him.

When Red had come to speak with the team after Carver’s attack, that little bastard had been hiding in this room, listening to every word said.

How long had he been there? Had he been hiding in here when Carver attacked Lizzy and done nothing to help her? Probably... the damn coward.

“Red,” Silas’ voice was reassuring, breaking the man’s thought patterns, “she’s fine.”

“Extra vigilance, please.” Red snapped the phone shut. His mood dropping a degree.

“What the hell is going on here?” Francis was lost.

“Well, would you like to clue me in?”

“Before she was with me, Elizabeth was married.” Red yanked down a photo himself, keeping his infamous temper in check. “To an asshole, that doesn’t seem to know when to let go.”

“You mean the ‘asshole’ did this?” Francis gestured to room itself.

“He’s the only one that comes to mind.” Red’s tongue played with the inside of his jaw, a nervous tick he had never mastered. “...he’s been sending her letters.”

“So now he’s escalated to shrines?” Francis was trying to wrap his head around such a mentality.

“It would seem so...”

“How did he get in here without her, and more importantly you, knowing.”

Red knew he had to tread carefully here. Francis didn’t know who Lizzy was, really. Red had to keep the story simple. He would also have to update Lizzy on this... farce.

“She is notoriously bad about setting alarms.” there was a brittleness to Red’s tone. “And I was out of town so fucking much...”

How long had Tom been in this house, was the question of the day. Had he stood over Lizzy while she slept, watching her, the creepy bastard.

“Hey, she’s okay. She’s with you now.” Francis placated. “Are you going to tell her?”

“Of course I’m going to tell her.”

“I think it’ll scare her.” Francis warned.

She was already scared. A psychopathic serial killer had targeted her, not to mention, the damn letters.

“But that is what Silas is for, right?” the young man remembered. “So she doesn’t have to be.”

“Silas is the best there is, but even he isn’t invincible.” Red had seen a lot of good men in his day taken out by unexpected circumstances. He himself, was a victim of such incidents.

“There’s no need to panic her, yet.” Francis held up both hands to signify he had he problem in hand, so to speak. “When you aren’t there, I can be.”

“She doesn’t panic so easily.” Red stated. “She’s been taking care of herself a long time.”

Red patted the man’s shoulder all the same, pleased to have such a friend for Elizabeth.

After the makeshift shrine had been dismantled, they found other miscellanea in the shelves. Weapons, money, fake ID’s.

A room by room search netted yet another hiding spot but it was the one Red already knew about.

“What the hell? Is this guy a fucking mole?” Francis shook his head negatively.

“More like a rat.” Red arose, dusting his hands. He suddenly felt dirty and it had nothing to do with the drywall dust.
“Well, one bright point, the work will be done in a couple days.” Francis said, sitting his box of paraphernalia in the back of the SUV.

Red frowned, “So?”

“So... the Torello brothers are coming in for a visit.” Francis grinned. “I thought I’d let them stay here.”

The Torello brothers were ‘shoot first, hide the evidence’, type of guys.

Red thought for a minute, “Why are they coming?”

“They have some business with the Engraver. I offered the place for their use.” the information was supplied. “Is it important, because if so... I could get them here tonight, within the hour actually.”

The three men sat quietly in the car, parked inconspicuously among the rows of many similar vehicles lining the street outside the brownstone buildings.

Francis continually shifted his eyes to a very silent companion. It had been about forty minutes since they had vacated the newly renovated home.

Dembe sat, meticulously scanning the darkened spaces of the neatly kept street. Francis beat out any number of songs on his thigh from time to time. In reality, the young man was trying to get some kind... any kind of response from Red.

He knew, the more contained Red Reddington became the more dangerous the man was.

Not able to stand the silence any longer, another song came to mind, one that would annoy anyone. Francis not only started the rhythm on his thigh, but began singing along with Copacabana.

Red’s hand moved with lightening speed as he cocked his weapon, placing the tip of the barrel against Francis’ thigh which halted both the singing and any further action from the young man.

“Worried?” Francis smiled finally, relieved to have received a reply.

“That’s a damn understatement.” Red replaced his weapon in it’s holster, returning his interest to the outside world.

“I should have killed him a long time ago. I should have stepped in and...” the bitterness laced the barely contained fury. “She has the worst taste in men,” Red laughed shortly, gesturing to himself, “obviously.”

Francis was slightly confused over the statement. “Red, I think you’re the best thing that ever happened to her.” He studied the older man for a long beat. “You’re worried he’s escalating... and there’s something you’re not telling me.”

“He hurt Lizzy.” Red gripped his phone, rubbing his thumb over the buttons. “If I get my hands on him, I’ll fucking kill him.”

Francis shriveled under the glare and it wasn’t even directed at him. “Hurt her how?” his jaw tensed at the news.
“He beat the hell out of her.” Red closed his eyes to the images the statement conjured. “I came in an hour too late. The house was tossed, looking like a damned War Zone.”

Red fell silent for so long, Francis thought he would not continue the sordid tale.

“She was sitting on the couch.” Red would never forget, the image burned in his brain. She seemed so broken, so vulnerable, so alone. “Just sitting...”

Francis watched the man’s face carefully. At that moment, Red Reddington seemed broken and vulnerable and...alone as well.

“If I meet the man, I’ll take great pleasure in killing him myself.” Francis did not like to see his friend in such a state, offering the only kind of support he knew would be appreciated. “What’s this prick’s name?”

“Tom Keen.” the icy cold eyes shifted, meeting Francis’ waiting ones. “You find him, you let me know.”

“You didn’t mention what condition he should be in.” Francis suddenly needed to inflict a little injury and mayhem.

Red studied the back of Dembe’s noble head. “Just alive.” he muttered. “Or a close facsimile there of.”

Both men fell silent, lost in their own thoughts.

Dembe stiffened, his eyes on the side mirror. He motioned with his head.

Francis was suddenly all smiles, twisting about, noting the approaching car coming down the street as it shut down it’s lights.

Red watched as the car smoothly slid into a parking space several vehicles behind them.

“Show time?” the young man’s hand was already on the hilt of his weapon as his smile grew. “You think it’s him?”

Red shook his head, his attention focused squarely on the car, his hand tightening on his own weapon as the car doors swung open.

Three very large men unfolded themselves from the other vehicle.

Francis voiced excitedly, “It’s just the Torello’s.”

Red and the others exited their vehicle as well.

All participants met up, gathering behind the relative security of the SUV. Red subconsciously checked his surroundings as old acquaintances were renewed.

Having explained the situation, Red was not surprised when the new arrivals offered their services gladly, especially salivating at the idea of taking out a wife beater.

Dembe shared several of the photos found in the room, catching the Torello’s up on all pertinent information.

“This your woman, Reddington?” The older of the brothers, a handsome Italian with impeccable style, jutted his chin towards the woman in the photographs.
Red’s eyes lifted, sending a message that any male could read.

“She’s pretty enough, I guess, if you like them skinny.” Frank nodded approvingly. “Got a nice rack, and I just bet,” the man brought the photo closer, purposely focusing on Liz’s posterior knowing it would rankle his friend and comrade, “you bare that ass every chance you get.”

The man chuckled lowly, reading Red’s expression. He had worked hard for that stony stare. “Just paying the lady a compliment, Red.”

“That’s my department, so stay the hell out of it.” Red advised quietly.

“Aren’t you going to introduce me to her?” the man grinned, continuing his razzing.

“When hell freezes over.” Red stated, drawing the lines in no uncertain terms.

“So you want us to make sure he can’t ever add anything else to his... collage.” Paulie, the middle brother soothed ruffled feathers. “Or you want we should just hold him for you?”

“I would like to speak with him, but if that isn’t possible...” Red shrugged nonchalant shoulders.

Dembe interrupted the flow of the conversation, touching Red’s arm. All the men turned watching as a large dark car rolled slowly down the street.

“Well, son of a bitch!” Red had recognized the vehicle even as Dembe, whose relaxed stance indicated as much.

“Isn’t that...” Francis pointed animatedly at the approaching car.

“There better be a damned good explanation.” Red fumed his annoyance knowing who was inside the SUV.

Francis nodded his agreement as Red stalked his way towards the car which stopped in it’s tracks as the man approached.

Reddington jerked the driver door open, his ire more than apparent. “What the hell are you doing here?” he grated the enquiry.

“The little snot was trying to sneak out.” Silas bitched right back, his own mood sour. “Said if I didn’t bring her, she’d just keep trying until she succeeded.” he threw a lethal glare to the darkened back seat area. “She about made it too... I stopped Nora at the front gate and guess who was in the backseat, hiding.” his tone sharpened. “What the hell, Red.”

Red stepped to the back of the car, opening the door bending to peer inside. His expression foreboding for any recipient on the receiving end.

“You’ve been gone so long,” Liz made her way to the man, “I missed you.” she reached her arms out in an effort to appease him with a kiss.

Red’s anger softened at the sight of the purposely innocent face and the large blue eyes which searched his so genially.

“Who the hell are they?” Silas bitched, having tried to identify the darkened faces a few feet away. Then it dawned on him. “Oh...” he recognized the bulk, if not the faces, “The Torello’s.” the man shoved his arm out the slit between the open door and windshield, flipping off the brothers, especially the elder.
Muted laughter met his efforts.

Red stepped back, spreading his hands wide, glancing up to a benevolent God. What else could go wrong?

A loud crack rang out in the still of the night, and Red felt a piercing pain rip through the outer part of his left thigh.

He grunted lowly, his legs giving out from under him as he went down into the middle of the empty street.

Silas was up and out of the car in an instant, headed for the man.

Silas watched Red jerk hastily to his right in anticipation of the kill shot which was surely to follow.

And true enough, another shot sizzled the air. A dark stain blossomed over the light fabric of Red’s jacket, seemingly over the man’s heart.

Silas threw his bulk over the man, hunching Red closely into the protective sphere he was creating. The man could hear rounds issuing from multiple weapons as he waited patiently for the inevitable.

He did not have long to wait.

A searing bolt of red hot lava perforated his flesh, drilling through the soft tissue of his shoulder, passing through completely as it sparked off the cement of the road directly in his line of vision. It missed Red’s head by a fraction of an inch.

Liz quickly climbed over the seat, frantically searching in the glove box for the weapon she knew would be there, as two more shots followed.

Francis and Dembe were returning fire as two of the large men that had been with Red, started off at a dead run down the street... toward the unseen assailant’s position.

Lights were flicking on in the houses down each side of the street but none were brave enough to venture anywhere near the windows.

Sliding the car into gear, Liz pulled over, blocking Red and Silas from any further attempts on their lives.

“Get in!” she yelled over the din of gunfire.

Silas was attempting to assist his friend into the back seat of the car.

Liz hid behind the shelter of the door frame, firing the large weapon over the roof of the SUV in rapid succession, in the general direction everyone else seemed fixated on. She winced with each volley because the jolt from the weapon jarred her injured wrist painfully with each shot.

Silas lifted her bodily, shoving her into the passenger seat, climbing in, jerking the car in reverse. He sped down the street backwards, taking a curve dangerously sharp as he exited the field of battle.

Liz climbed into the backseat, desperately searching Red’s torso for injuries.

Dembe and Francis walked backwards in unison, continuing their cover fire. Both men jerked at the cutting sound of a bullet passing between them, followed by the sound of shattering glass from a nearby car window.
Frank Torello stood his ground, not bothering to seek shelter of any sort as he took aim on a second floor window. Flashes of muzzle fire had given away the idiot’s location shortly after the second shot.

Silence fell over the brightly lit street just as quickly as it had begun, the gunfire halting. Torello grinned widely, knowing his brothers had done their job.

In the distance, police sirens signified their arrival shortly upon scene. Torello waved Francis and Dembe off as he slid into the seat of his car, heading to his brothers’ location.

Dembe pulled a neatly executed U-turn, his foot heavy on the gas as he and Francis vacated the vicinity as well.

“Red got hit.” There was an anxiousness to Francis’ statement.

“He has been hit before.” Dembe’s calm demeanor served as an example to the younger man. “Silas will have put out a Code 77. We will know shortly the location.”

Francis sat back, breathing easier but he knew the tenseness would not leave his body until he actually saw Red’s condition for himself.

Liz’s hands fluttered shakily over Red’s blood splattered jacket, gently easing the material aside.

Silas tossed a wadded up sweatshirt from the front seat. Liz pressed the fabric hard against a gaping wound in Red’s shoulder.

She moved closer, her jeans feeling a wetness against her thigh. She reached, feeling about, her fingers instantly covered in sticky warmth.

She ascertained the problem instantly, pressing her knee into the seeping hole in Red’s thigh. She felt Red’s fingers curl stoutly into her thigh, holding the pressure she exerted, his face twisted with the pain.

Silas was breaking every speed law known to man and the woman had no idea where they were headed but she did know, that Mr. Kaplan was on call and would handle what needed to be done.

Liz glanced down, finding blood seeping through the fabric of the sweatshirt at an alarming rate. She leaned harder into the wound, grimacing for Red.

Silas took a sharp corner, and momentarily, Liz lost pressure on the wounds but quickly enough, she had situated Red on his back and found the familiar points once again.

“Are you okay?” Red asked the woman, his eyes blurry, unfocused.

“I’m going to kill you.” she whispered, half laughing, half crying.

“Silas?” he coughed spasmodically, trying to arise.

“I’m functional.” the man hit the straightaway in front of him, the speedometer going into the red.

“You’re gonna be fine.” Liz assured. The man sweated profusely, his skin a chalky pale hue.

There was so much blood.

He reached up, curling a hand around her head, pulling her down to his lips. She held the affection for a moment, before pulling back slightly offering him a soft reassuring smile.
Liz looked up, out the front window as they approached a building. Silas pulled inside an open overhead door. Liz was so happy to note Joe was there waiting and ready.

It meant everything was going to be fine. She had to believe that.

She breathed easier the deeper they drove into the darkened building, seeing more of their guards on site.

And finally, Mr. Kaplan... flanked by people in Surgical gear.

Silas slid to a stop, as the guards flung wide the doors.

Red was extracted expeditiously.

“Ah, fuck....” the man hissed as he was lifted to a waiting gurney.

Liz kept pace with the rapidly moving cart, not once releasing Red’s hand as he was wheeled into a plastic covered room. Unusual things were becoming the norm in Liz’s world and she had a sneaky suspicion, she had better get used to it.

She winced under the bright lights of the room. A man had straddled Red’s body on the cart, but Liz could not take her eyes from the ever growing blood stain under the attendant’s hands as he applied pressure to the chest wound.

Liz could not keep track of all the activity taking place around her, so much was happening all at once.

Red’s expensive shirt was cut open, revealing the extent of his shoulder wound. Someone had hooked leads from a machine to the man in order to read his vitals.

The reassuring ‘beep’ from a heart monitor was something the woman fixated upon instantly.

She stood back, out of the way, her hands clenched tightly at her sides.

She noted Kate Kaplan standing on the opposite side of the gurney, the woman’s expression giving her hope. There was no sign of strain or stress what-so-ever, simply a calm countenance displayed at all times.

Red was still conscious, his eyes searching aimlessly about. “Dembe...”

“I am here, Raymond.”

It took a moment but the words finally outed, “Francis?”

“Oh, like they can get me... can I have your LP collection if you croak?”

“Stand in line.” Red’s lips twitched slightly for the black humor.

Francis grinned joyously, knowing Red Reddington was still there, kicking ass, as usual. “Okay, I guess I can wait.”

Mr. Kaplan’s expression hardened and she stepped around all the activity, finally coming face to face with the much taller individual which had caught her attention. The stern expression did not bode well for it’s recipient.

“Are you that stoic?” she questioned a silently waiting guard. “Do you think your heroics endear you
Liz glanced, only just now noticing that the entire front of Silas’ gray cotton button down was covered in blood. She gasped her shock, all of which the guard ignored.

“No, Ma’am.” Silas responded politely to Kate’s enquiry, uncrossing his folded arms coming to military ‘rest’.

Kaplan snapped her fingers with but one lethal departing glare and the man was instantly led away to another medical station for care.

Francis noted Liz’s concern. “It’s probably just a flesh wound.” the young man had not forgiven Silas for the hotel incident apparently. But even he glanced after the retreating man, his eyes allowing his own concern after a fashion.

“I need to see the back.” the doctor working over Red, instructed his assistants. “The wound, hopefully, is a through and through.”

Reddington instantly balked, pushing away any attempts to touch his person. “Kate!” he barked raspingly.

“Raymond, stop struggling.” Kaplan advised stonily. “You’re making the bleeding worse.”

Red knew he would get no assistance in that arena. Turning his eyes to the one person who had never failed him.

“Dembe...” he batted away the attendant’s attempts to secure him, for they were concerned for the amount of blood he was losing.

“Red, let them help you.” Liz was confused and frightened for the man’s inexplicable behavior.

The doctor waved his hand, indicating he needed a sedative which was instantly delivered with professional haste.

Red locked eyes with his counterpart. Dembe’s eyes softened then fell pointedly to the blood stained streaks running down Reddington’s chest area.

Red felt a wooziness overtake him, his vision blurring, a lightheadedness descending.

The nurses sat him up, slowly gaining some ground against Red’s combative nature.

“Don’t do this...” he whispered bleakly, weakly trying to stave off the inevitable. “I haven’t... there wasn’t time...” his thoughts rambled as he fought a losing battle. His consciousness wavered in and out.

Liz darted her head about, seeking explanations for Red’s uncharacteristic behavior but all she received in return was a stoic stare from Kaplan and inverted eyes from everyone else she knew.

Francis shrugged helplessly, just as lost as the woman. “Maybe he’s delirious?” was all he could think.

The woman’s eyes widened, her mouth dropping agape as the horribly scarred flesh of Red’s back was revealed. She shifted stunned, questioning eyes to Kate Kaplan.

The woman’s expression remained unreadable as she returned her interest to the operating site.
Liz felt the blood drain from her face. She could not pull her gaze from the horrific sight revealed. What horrible accident had befallen this man. And why had he never even mentioned the incident. Her heart filled with sadness and pain for what he must have suffered.

She wanted desperately to go to him. Her eyes met the bleary stare Red held across the room. A lump arose in her throat but Liz fought down the urge to cry. She smiled for him alone, her eyes shining brightly with new found admiration for the man.

“I was going to tell you...” he whispered, his throat too parched to speak above that volume.

She stepped slowly forward, grasping his hand. “It doesn’t matter.” the fingers of her other hand trailed a exquisitely tender path across a portion of the scarred flesh. “Nothing matters but you getting better.”

He tensed, his body stiffening at the touch. The drugs were doing their thing but the man felt a wave of nausea overtake him, not for the effect, but for the fact she now knew one of his darkest secrets.

“I need to tell you...” he fought the drowning blackness descending.

“Tell me later.” she brought his hand to her lips pressing her mouth tenderly to the cold flesh.

“Lizzy...” he whispered painfully. “I meant to...” the man was not ready to surrender to the darkness just yet.

“Raymond,” Kate Kaplan stepped close, her tone now a soothing one, “I will watch over her.”

“Have to tell her...” he slurred, his hand frantically grasping for a stay hold of reality.

“And you will, when they’re finished.” Kate assured, waving Liz forward. She grasped the younger woman’s hand, pulling her along side the bed.

Red’s drooping eyes finally focused on Liz’s lovely features. Blinking heavily, he pushed hard against the developing haze.

Kate mumbled something to the woman, then moved aside.

Liz leaned over, her eyes misting. “Stop fighting,” her mouth trembled visibly, “sleep...”

Red’s eyes glistened with the threat of tears which he quickly blinked aside.

He breathed out harshly, lifting a shaky hand to cup her chin, his fingers gesturing her closer.

The woman followed the directive, laying her lips against his.

“Sleep, Red...” she whispered against his mouth. “I will be here when you wake up.” she stressed. “I promise.”

His breathing deepened, feeling the pull of the drugs finally take him under.

His hand loosened on her face, going slack as he passed into twilight sleep. An oxygen mask was quickly inserted over his face and the race began.

Kate pulled Liz out of the way, directing her from the room.

Liz looked back uncertain whether or not to leave the man but Kaplan’s steady gait urged her to follow. She exchanged a hurried glance with Silas as she passed the man. He sat quietly, as medical personnel stitched up a nasty looking wound in his right shoulder.

The gray-green eyes followed the women’s exit before Silas returned his attention to the commotion taking place inside the sealed off Surgical area.

“What happened to him?” Liz questioned anxiously.

“I think you know.” Kate replied, gesturing to the scar on Liz’s wrist.

“...Fire.” Liz inhaled shakily. “But...”

“Let it go for now.” Kate sighed. “He was going to tell you himself.” she stressed. “Just... give him a chance to explain.” the older woman’s eyes indicated the arrival of someone else on the scene before taking her leave.

Liz nodded curtly. Francis approached, chair in hand. Liz sat, her legs suddenly feeling too numb to support her.

“Why does she get to go back?” she watched Kaplan enter the operating room.

“Nobody questions that woman.” he stated the facts of life. “You look like hell.” Francis observed the woman’s bloodstained clothing and chalky features.

Liz’s face suddenly fell as the emotional onslaught began. She buried those emotions behind her hands, weeping brokenly, releasing the adrenaline, fear and stress of the past thirty minutes of hell she had lived through.

It felt like two lifetimes.

She could not count how many times, as an FBI agent, she had followed this same pattern. Especially after a horrific escapade. Once, she had even noted Samar, alone...shoulders shaking violently as the other woman stood among the row of silent lockers in the Blacksite arena.

Each Agent handled the release of stress in their own fashion, apparently.

Francis knelt before her, laying a comforting hand on her shoulder. “He’s a strong man, Liz... he’s been through worse.”

“I’m scared, Francis.” she whispered.

“I know.” he drew back a little, looking at her. “But Red Reddington is not going to leave you, trust me on that one.”

She smiled wanly, swallowing the bile in her throat.

That wasn’t the only reason she was terrified, of course.

Francis didn’t know she was FBI. He only knew her as Red’s fiancée. Of course he would try to make what happened less scary. And she loved the man dearly for caring.

Joe came up to Dembe who stood just outside the draped area. Words were exchanged that she could not hear.

Liz arose quickly, covering the space in seconds. “Has something happened?” she lifted worried eyes.
“There is no news.” Dembe stilled her fears momentarily.

She glanced inside the blurry containment area, seeing Silas standing erect so she knew the man was ‘functional’.

Dembe relayed some of the news Joe had delivered. “Frank Torello and his brothers are on their way here,” he glanced at Elizabeth. “They have the shooter and are assuming you will wish to...” again Dembe sought the woman, “speak with him.”

Francis nodded agreeably. “Yeah, I want to speak with him.”

“Well, I don’t want to speak to the bastard.” Liz grated her fury. “I want him dead.”

All three men glanced her way, their expressions differing.

Francis grinned, “Now if that isn’t Red Reddington’s girl... I don’t know who is.”

Dembe’s expressions, as always, was unreadable. Joe nodded approvingly.

“I want to see that son of a bitch face to face, Francis.” she stated succinctly. “Do you understand me?”

Francis raised his hands in a defensive position. “When I’m finished with him, he’s all yours.”

Then the long wait began. The men left her to tend to their business and she returned to the chair, sitting morosely.

She didn’t know how long she sat there, listening to the muffled chatter coming from the medical staff across the way, but it was long enough that she began to feel stiff and cold... and totally lost and alone.

Her thoughts rambled from concern for Red to the fact that she had seen the horrible scars on the man’s back.

Liz tried so hard to remember the events of that night, the night of the fire. She knew Red was there but in what capacity. Her father had saved her from the fire but she had a vague recollection of a man laying on the floor of the burning house as they passed into safety.

Was that man Red? Had he managed somehow to escape as well?

She wrapped her arms across her chest, warding off the chill. A warm blanket came out of nowhere, falling gently about her shoulders. She glanced hastily up.

“You all right?” Silas asked, sitting on his haunches beside her. He adjusted the sling around his neck, nodding his gratitude as Liz helped smooth the transition.

“No...” she whispered brokenly.

“Tell me.”

“I don’t know where to begin.” she threw her hands out lamely.

“He’s no different than he was before.” Silas reminded sternly.

“He was scared, Silas.” she had never seen the man anything other than in complete control and it was scaring the hell out of her to think something could phase Red to that extent.
“Yes...” the man nodded in agreement, “of your rejection.”

“I don’t even know what that means.” she almost wailed. “I would never reject him in any way, shape or form.”

“You’re a young, beautiful woman.” Silas reminded. “And he’s not perfect, obviously.”

“Does he think I’m that shallow?”

“You know as well as I do, most women would be turned off by...”

“Well, I’m not most women.” she snapped, glancing down at her hands, suddenly very intent on the ring on her hand.

“Look, I know you’re chomping at the bit to know what the hell is going on.” Silas began. “Just... let him get his shit together before you start the first degree.”

“You don’t think much of me, do you?” she felt the pain of the reality.

“I think you constantly over react.” he did not pull any punches. “I think you act without thinking shit through. You’re always going off half cocked.”

“I do not!” she over reacted, knowing as much.

“Do I really need to list examples?” the man arose to his full height, his face allowing the anger he felt. The only thing was, that anger was probably more for himself this night than the woman before him.

Unfortunately she was going to get the brunt of it.

“Your loving husband...”

The woman’s face blanked instantly, concealing her shock that the man would get so personal.

“You should have let Red kill that fucker.” Silas gritted. “That son of a bitch held a gun to your head.” he seethed. “And you let him live... why?”

She didn’t know why she didn’t kill Tom, at the time. But now, without his steady influence, she did understand and was glad she had broken the cycle of abuse. Something this man would not probably appreciate or understand, granted.

“That psychopath was going to put a bullet in your skull.” Silas looked off to the makeshift room, his jaw pulsing. “While that man,” he jabbed his finger towards Red, “would take a bullet for you.”

Joe gestured for him from across the darkened area. Silas held up a staying hand, continuing.

“Would Tom Keen ever do the same thing?” he asked the burning question. “Fuck no. Because he’s the one pointing...”

“I’m past Tom Keen!” she arose, her anger matching the large man’s fury.

Silas fell silent and she could not tell if her words had reached him or not.

He slowly turned, his stare a steady one.

The guard took a couple of steps before hesitating.
She watched the man’s back, holding her breath expectantly, praying he would turn around.

“Look, you’re not going to like a lot of what Red is going to tell you.” he stated slowly, his eyes averted. “But instead of blocking him out the minute he says something that upsets you,” the cool green stones shifted, steadily holding her gaze, “hear the man out all the way.”

“You know what he’s going to tell me, don’t you?” she felt a foreboding.

“I do, yes.” Silas nodded. “And it’s probably gonna hurt.” he promised. “But Red... would never hurt you unless there was just no other fucking way.”

Liz looked after the man as he walked towards the other guard, the harsh and hurtful words rattling around in her head.

But then, the truth did hurt... didn’t it?

She clung desperately to the one thing said that gave hope.

Red would never hurt you...if there was any other way.

Her attention shifted hastily. The doctors were walking from the room, all disheveled and appearing exhausted. All except of course, Mr. Kaplan and Dembe who had followed the medical team more sedately.

Liz was moving before she knew what was happening, crossing the space rapidly, shoving her way through the heavy plastic. The woman slowed her movement, her eyes instantly falling on Red’s bandaged chest and leg.

She approached him cautiously, ever so quietly. She gently took his hand, standing, staring down at the sleeping man.

She saw him now, in a different light.

As Silas had said, Red had consistently placed himself between her and danger. Obviously, at great risk to himself.

If the man was willing to give his life for hers, he surely would go out of his way to avoid hurting her.

Silas had just told her a different type of truth. One she needed to hear and to heed.

And she knew in that instant, regardless of what Red would say, no matter how much it hurt... she still wanted this.

She still wanted him.

It was early morning when Red finally awoke having slept the night peacefully. Elizabeth had slept fitfully beside him, awaking frequently to check on his condition. Francis was a frequent visitor as was Dembe, so the three of them kept vigilance over the resting individual.

Red was in a bad mood, but considering all that had happened, he was relatively agreeable.

Liz balanced the tray artfully as she entered the room, a genuine smile on her face as she noted the patient was awake and alert.

“I hope there’s some bacon on that tray.” he practically growled, attempting to arise.

“No, no...” the woman held out a staying hand, “don’t try to get up, at least on your own.” She hurriedly set the food aside crossing hastily to assist.

“Like I haven’t been shot in the leg before...” the man’s tone was downright surly. “What? Two weeks ago, by Ressler, wasn’t it?”

Elizabeth grimaced slightly. “No bacon... Mr. Kaplan left strict instructions. Poached egg, fruit crepe, toast,” she looked the plate over, “umm, and some tea.”

“I want my fucking coffee, I want some fucking bacon.” the man folded his arms, his expression more than set. “And Kate Kaplan can kiss my rosy ass.”

Elizabeth bit the inside of her jaw to keep from smiling. “Well, you can tell her that, but I think I can smuggle you in some turkey bacon.”

Red’s eyes shifted frostily.

The woman sighed mentally. “Coffee and bacon, coming up.” she turned dutifully, but the man’s voice stopped her.

“I need to tell you about the relationship between me and your parents.” the man minced no words, facing the dreaded task head on.

Liz tensed slightly, turning back slowly. “I think maybe, that can wait until...”

“I will just give you the cliff notes. We can discuss the rest later.” He steeled himself, shifting his aching body, preparing himself mentally.

Vowing to take Silas’ advice and hear Red out, the woman drew in a deep breath. She took a seat beside Red, lifting her countenance.

If she needed a minute to process what he was saying, she would tell him. It was just that simple.

She would not run away.
“It must have crossed your mind a thousand times,” he began stalwartly, “why was it, I invaded your life.”

“Did you love my mother? Were you her lover?” Liz asked point blank, blurring out the enquiry.

“Where the hell did that come from?” Red was more than stunned, he was mystified.

He lifted his eyes to hers, holding them steadily. “I was fond of your mother but I did not love her romantically. We were never intimate.”

He had to give her something...he was about to make her life hell.

“I was her handler, like you are mine.” he patiently explained, ignoring the pain he was in, his pills having worn off an hour ago.

“My mother was a criminal.” Liz said that like she had been expecting it.

Red opened his mouth, hesitating, “She was a traitor against her own country.” he amended. “One must understand the circumstances under which she was operating. I was sent to assist her.” he gathered his thoughts for a moment before continuing. “We gathered intel and long story short, we had to get out of Russia fast.”

“And my father?” Liz asked hopefully, grateful for the small amount of information she had garnered.

“Your father was... complicated.” He couldn’t tell her who her father was, there was too much at stake right now.

“He wanted political change.” that much he could say. “He wanted so many things. We were all working towards that end, but he got fed up with it all.” Red sat back, easing his shoulder this way and that, wincing from the experience. “We all did at one point or another.”

“He took the Fulcrum, didn’t he?” Liz had figured that much out.

“Yes.”

“Why does everyone think I have it?” she exasperated. “Why does everyone think he would place something so obviously dangerous, with a child?”

Red’s expression went cold, devoid of emotion. “Because he did.”

“You know this, for certain?” she felt she should defend her father but she had no idea why.

“I do.” it was bluntly stated.

“It could have burned in the fire or he could have~”

“I found it, Elizabeth.” Red put an end to the speculation.

“What...” she breathed out her shock.

“When I closed out your house,” it almost felt good to get so much out in the open, “I found it, in your possessions.”

Liz looked up at the man, in total disbelief... shock.
Red had the Fulcrum all this time and he...

She had been so sure, once he had it in his possession, he would do whatever the hell he was going to do with it and leave.

But he hadn’t done either thing.

“Have you...”

“No.” he stated simply. “I have not used it in any capacity.”

“Why not?” she questioned breathlessly.

Red’s eyes softened, understanding the question for what it was.

He reached out, brushing his hand over her cheek. “I had more important things on my mind.”

He lifted the tea cup, glancing at the creamy liquid, grimaced then sat it back on the tray. He was giving her time to process but not at the expense of his taste buds.

How does one wrap their head around the fact that a parent entrusted something so damning, so dangerous, to a child.

You don’t.

Hell, he had a month to think about it and he still couldn’t believe her father had done something so stupid... so distasteful.

What the hell was the bastard thinking, leaving that kind of target on his own daughter’s head?

“I have to get up.” he threw the covers aside and the woman arose automatically staring at his activity.

“What are you doing?” she was numbed, his actions not making any sense to her right now.

“I would like to use the facilities.” he made mention, continuing on, arising slowly to get his bearings.

“Facilities...” she repeated vacantly, then it dawned on her. “Oh! You need to piss.”

Red’s brow lifted meaningfully. “You have to stop keeping company with Silas.”

He made his way past the woman, around the bed.

“Should you be up?” Liz held out a cautious hand.

Red turned, his own hands lifting in a ‘what the hell, I’m up already’ gesture.

She followed after him hastily, but the man was already by the sink preparing his toothbrush.

“I thought you had to piss?” she was confused.

He pointed at her, “No more Silas.” then crossed to the enclosed facilities.

So many things were going through her head, that she didn’t even notice, she had not given him any privacy what-so-ever until the man re-entered the room, returning to the basin.
He brushed his teeth methodically, waiting for the questions to come.

“Kaplan says the bandages have to be changed.” she blew him away by the change in subject. He shifted his gaze, putting the mouthwash aside.

She must have a hundred questions rattling in her head and instead of voicing them, she picked that statement to say. He smiled slightly, shaking his head.

The man was given pause for thought.

“You want to be the one that, first of all,” Liz was perfectly serious, “ pisses her off about the bacon and now you won’t let me change the bandages?”

“Kate Kaplan doesn’t scare me.” he advised. “I’ll call Dembe...”

“Stop pushing me away.” she cut to the chase. “I already saw them.” she reminded. The woman stepped the space separating them, her hands lifting to unbutton the first two on his shirt.

Red’s hand bunched the fabric below her efforts, his eyes steady on hers.

“I’m still here.” she met his gaze unflinchingly. “Take a hint.”

He glanced at the pile of medical supplies waiting on the counter. His hand fell away slowly and Liz continued to undress him.

The cool air hit his bare torso and for a moment he felt panic.

Maybe in the light of day, she’d feel differently? Or maybe he was kidding himself and it was really him that felt insecure.

After everything they’d been through this past couple weeks, all the privacy she had lost, he’d be a damned coward if he did not take the shirt off.

And there was one thing Red Reddington wasn’t and that was a coward.

Red made the decision, and in the end it was his own hand who pulled the shirt from his torso.

The woman’s eyes scanned the visible scars before lifting innocuously. She picked up a sterile package, peeling the outer package away.

The man felt years of insecurity figuratively and literally, roll off his back.

She stepped behind him, hanging the shirt on a hook. Turning, she took in his newly bared skin, staring openly.

The scarring was... extensive.

She felt a moment of empathy which she quickly squelched, because she was more mesmerized by his broad shoulders, strong arms and the slope of his neck.

Red turned his head seeking her out as the silence had stretched into infinity.

He startled when he felt the light touch of her fingers skirting along his back before she placed the warm palm flat against it’s surface.

She closed her eyes, as visions of fire suddenly overwhelmed her. A hand pulled her close before she was lifted in strong arms. The heat had been so intense, followed by bitter cold.

She vaguely remembered her hands feeling so cold, they felt like they were on fire.

A complete paradox that had suddenly been overshadowed by a deep, pained voice... soothing her. Telling her everything would be all right. She had been wrapped in warmth, her bunny tucked securely in the makeshift blanket.

Elizabeth’s eyes opened quickly, a clarity in them that hadn’t been there before. Understanding dawning on her.

She lay her cheek just under Red’s shoulder blade, wrapping her arms around his waist, her finger nails curled into his stomach just above his waist. She burrowed into him.

He heard her faint sniffle, wondering if it was pity she was feeling, hating the idea.

“It was you...” she whispered tremulously, “not my father... you saved me.”

He hesitated, uncertain as how to answer.

“You lied?” She stated, no venom or malice behind the words.

“I couldn’t take that away from you.” He took a shuddering breath, “You needed to believe...it was the only good memory of him you had.”

The silence was uncomfortable for the man.

“Is there anything you wouldn’t give up for me?”

“No.” He answered without hesitation.

She ran her hand from his stomach up over his pectoral, threading her hand through the hair on his chest. Resting her hand over his heart.

She hugged him gently, mindful of his fresh wound. She leaned away, guilt racking at her psyche.

“I’ve been so unbelievably cruel to you. How can you have been so patient with me?” she was stupefied. “How can you not resent me, hate me?”

“There are many things in this world I hate, Elizabeth.” he turned to face her. “You are not listed among them.” he smiled gently at the wetness on her cheeks.

He cupped the back of her head with one large palm, petting the silky strands of her hair.

“It’s their fault that I’m in this mess.” she voiced her grievances. “Not you... I should have seen that, I should have instinctively known.”

Red shook his head disagreeing with her assessment. “There is no way you could have known the twisted mess your parents and I had gotten ourselves into.”

He took a deep breath, getting things back on track. “Let me say this while I still have the rocks.”

She lifted luminous eyes, waiting patiently.

“Your mother and I took you to Sam, for safety purposes.” he began. “We worked the next couple years together, trying to...” he sighed, “fix the impossible.”
Liz began the ritual she had watched Dembe preform so often. She busied herself with antiseptically cleansing his wound.

“Your father was many things, but he adored you.” Red stated quietly. “He had been visiting you at Sam’s frequently. There was a lull in our issues and your father felt it was safe for you to spend the week with him.” he recalled the time. “Everything was fine, until Katarina arrived.”

Liz kept quiet, holding her questions for now, her hands gently administering to his injuries.

“She came for the Fulcrum.” Red remembered vividly the details. “They argued, then your mother’s husband showed up with his assistants.”

Liz felt this is where things became... strained, for lack of a better word.

“The argument escalated.” Red scoffed, remembering how heated things became, then of course... Elizabeth’s part in the fiasco.

“Constantine saw you, with your father...” he sighed, “the resemblance was unmistakable.” he explained. “He had suspected, of course, but now, he had proof of Katarina’s infidelity.”

Red sing songed his head. “Things went sideways, somewhere in the fracas, someone started a fire, or a fire started... I don’t remember that part clearly.”

He looked at that beautiful face, staring at his so openly and he just... couldn’t tell her that in the confusion, she had shot her own father. Not right now, not with so much being thrown at her.

He gripped her hands tightly, his eyes gentle on her features. “When the fire started, Katarina told you to get out, to run.” Red distinctly remembered the shrill scream coming from the beautiful woman’s lips. “But being a child, I don’t think you understood. You ran, yes. But you went to your safe space.”

Liz stared off into space, seeing a quick vision of clothes hanging on a bar. Then smoke billowing in through the slats in the door.

“The closet.” she concluded. “Is that when you came for me?”

“I heard you screaming.” he remembered those screams in his nightmares. “I came back in, but the house was... an inferno by that point.” his countenance darkened. “I finally found you but the house was literally giving way underfoot.”

Red rubbed his thumbs hard into his eye sockets, trying to erase the images. “I reached the nearest window...” he stroked the raised skin on her wrist, his expression foreboding. “I can’t recall much after that, to be honest.” He had even tried hypnosis. “All I remember is trying to get out of that damned house.”

He could still smell the burning flesh sometimes at night in his nightmares.

“The next thing I knew, I woke up,” he recalled looking into those blue eyes that had been so terrified, “you were shivering uncontrollably but still piling snow on my back.”

“I was finally able to push past the pain,” he cocked his head slightly, his eyes constantly on her face, “I got you in the car, driving as far away from that damned place as I could, then called Kate.”

Liz could not recall any of what he was relaying.
“They had left us.”

Liz swallowed past the lump in her throat, listening to the raw pain in Red’s voice, which was replaced by searing anger.

“That bitch left you in that fucking house!” he snapped. He gripped a glass, hurling it across the bathroom, which shattered into a fine mist of sparkly dust on impact.

Liz started, feeling the fury emanate from the man’s very being. She stepped in front of him, before he could continue the carnage.

“All that matters is that you didn’t leave me.” She said evenly, cutting through his growing rage.

“How could she have left you!” he hissed quietly. “After everything we did trying to protect you! How could she leave her child!”

“Perhaps she didn’t have a choice?” Liz tried to explain away her mother’s actions. “Perhaps she was forced away before she could...”

It did not sound feasible even to her own ears.

Red dropped his head, leaning into his fists on the sinks counter top, his mood certainly no better.

It was a possibility. Though, he couldn’t imagine anything keeping him from saving his child.

He would have rather eaten a bullet and died along with his child, rather than leave without her.

He was not present to offer such a service to his own daughter but had he been...

“Your father loved you more than anything in the world, Elizabeth.” he stressed.

She secured the bandage to his back, keeping her eyes averted. “You mean, where my mother didn’t.” She assumed he meant.

What could he say? That her mother did love her? Because now, after all this time, he wasn’t so sure.

“I don’t remember anything but tiny flashes.” she admitted. “I wonder why?”

“You were terrified. Almost catatonic.” he tried to find an explanation himself. “After a couple days, you still hadn’t come out of it, so Kate suggested replacing the night with a different memory.”

He pulled away from her touch, more troubled by the fact than he would like to admit, but in the end... “It worked.”

“It’s very complicated Elizabeth. So damned complicated.” there were times, he himself, could not sort through the mazes of deceit. “There are so many layers, besides you wouldn’t believe me, even if I told you.” he muttered. “There are some times, I don’t believe half of it myself.”

Odd, her heart didn’t feel as though it was in pieces.

She moved closer to him needing the security. He turned towards her, as he always did, looking down at her.

Liz wrapped her arms around his neck, hugging him tightly. She felt Red tense, before relaxing against her, enfolding her in his arms.
Today had been... a revelation. For them both.

She found out a little of her past and what he had physically hidden for so long.

And he realized what he had subconsciously hidden. What he had denied for so long.

Katarina Rostova had only cared about herself.

He wondered now, had he built Katarina up in his mind? Had he been as blind to Katarina as Lizzy had been to Tom?

Did it even matter? The damage was done.

Liz sat her hand in the center of his chest, gently stroking him with her thumb.

She leaned in, kissing the scarring that showed on his shoulder. The man startled at the unexpected touch, his head turning slightly.

She laid another soft kiss to the side of his arm, gauging his reaction.

She stared openly at the hard chest covered in a wealth of hair, scanning the tight muscles of his arms.

Placing her palm flat on his abdomen, she felt the ripple under her hand as he reacted to the unexpected touch.

Liz mapped the rough area of his flesh, one particular indentation catching her attention. She tapped the spot gently with her finger, her eyes lifting questioningly.

“Russia, 2001.” Red stated roughly, answering the silent enquiry. “Gunshot.”

Moving the tip of her finger over an inch, scratching her fingernail across his warm skin which caused a rise of goose flesh over his body. She traced a thin white line about an inch in length.

She traced a jagged scar on his side, faded with time, but still visible.

“California, 1984. Surfing.”

She lifted a quizzical expression, her brows furrowing.

“Got caught up in a wave, was thrown into rocks. Got that and a couple broken ribs.”

“And possibly a lifelong fear of surfing.” she quipped.

“No, I was out the next day.” he dismissed such an implication. “It hurt like hell, but I loved it.”

Liz traced his torso and arms, mapping out each one. Red supplying the place and incident for each, his voice never changing pitch.

She traced the small round scar at his neck, the last one she hit upon.

“I’m sorry.” She apologized readily. Those blue eyes stealing his heart when they were that soft and only for him.
“No you aren’t.” He chuckled. “I’m sure there have been days you wished to repeat the action.”

“Okay then, I’m sorry for the reason I did it.” She grinned. “I have wanted to knock sense into you, but not stab you.” she shrugged minutely. “Not lately, anyway.”

“Well, that’s a relief.” he took it as a good sign. “I have enough enemies, I don’t need one sharing my bed.”

“Red...” she looked at him oddly, and he prepared himself for the worst.

“Um hmm?” he humored her anyway.

“Are we still going on our date tomorrow?”

It was his turn to look at her oddly. “I’ve just been shot... twice.”

“Francis said,” she lifted warning eyes, “they’re just flesh wounds.”

“Oh he did, did he?” Red held his smile.

“That’s what he said.” she nodded vigorously.

“Well then...” he contended, “Damn right we are.”
Red’s eyes opened slowly, the sun bathing the room in a cheerful light. He stirred slightly, grimacing as the pain in his shoulder and leg made itself known.

He lay back carefully, then chanced a look at the clock. A little after eight. He was usually up around six. Damned pills...

He glanced at his bed partner who was still fast asleep. Elizabeth would never be a morning person. The covers were tossed every which way. Most of them wrapped around her body.

The dark hair was splayed against the pillow, the pretty profile snuggled into the blankets, half hidden.

Red looked down at his own body, which was only partially covered. He lay very still so as not to disturb the woman’s sleep. His thoughts wandered back to the night before.

Liz had taken the news he had to relate a hell of a lot better than he expected. She had even cuddled to him before falling asleep. Which surprised the hell out of him.

He had not expected that she would stay. Let alone be receptive to any sort of intimacy. Red had been amused when the woman brought up the ‘date thing’.

A date for which he had no concrete plans... as yet. Although, ideas were taking shape, quickly.

He found himself looking forward to such a simplistic event. He was grateful this morning to be alive. Quite a contrast to some mornings when he awoke. Before Elizabeth, he could remember awakening in a very different mood.

The man arose quietly, making his way to the bathroom.

A short time later, he heard the door open over the shower spray which pelted his skin to a rosy red.

_Ahh..._ the man smiled, replacing his soap unto the ledge, _Sleeping Beauty awakens._

He rinsed off, grabbing the towel off the low bench before drying off the excess water from his body. He tucked the damp towel around his waist, exiting the stall.

The woman was brushing her teeth, blue eyes meeting his in the mirror. He smiled at her, a little self conscious concerning the scars but instead of heading for the closet as he was inclined to do, he forced himself to come stand alongside her.

To make himself feel less awkward, he busied himself with finishing his morning routine.

Liz closed her eyes as the sensual whiff of his cologne drifted into the misty spray, which still clung to the air after his shower. She shifted her eyes to the man, noting the deep slit in the small towel he had tucked around his waist.
A muscular thigh peaked out tantalizingly, the reddish blonde hair very masculine in its appeal. She rinsed her mouth, trying to concentrate on something sophisticated to say.

She stood, her satin robe gaped open, showing the beginning swell of her breasts as she was leaned slightly forward. Red pulled his eyes from the beautiful sight, determined to keep things on an even keel this morning. After last night, he wanted everything simply to return to normal, as quickly as possible where the woman was concerned.

His first instinct had been to comment on such a lovely vision, but he had kept his mouth shut, forcing normalcy.

Liz flicked his body again, this time her eyes remaining transfixed for a goodly spell. She leaned her hand on the sink, the other placed to her hip as she made herself comfortable, facing him fully.

“Not that I’m complaining, because you always look so good in what you wear.” she hadn’t even tried not to say it. “But why do you feel the need to cover up...” she waved her finger up and down his form, “all that.”

The man halted his busy work, his head swiveling to the woman. “Pardon?”

“You’ve been hiding that under those suits all this time?” She held her grin, blatantly flirting with him.

He glanced down his torso, making sure he was properly covered.

“I understand why Lexa asked you to ‘visit’ her.” her eyes traveled his frame speculatively.

The man was momentarily confused by her approach and then he wasn’t.

“Lizzy, you don’t have to make me feel better. I’ve made peace with the scars... for the most part.” It was nice of her to try to make him feel better, but to go out of her way to lie...

“I wasn’t talking about that, you dolt.” she bristled suddenly.

“Then what the hell are you talking about?” Red asked just as shortly.

“Is that how you identify yourself? By your scars?” Liz questioned. “Is that all you see when you look in the mirror?”

“Wouldn’t you?” The man snapped.

“Maybe, I don’t know.” It was answered honestly.

She knew she felt horrible after the Carver incident.

“Well then, I guess that answers your question.”

“But maybe I wouldn’t...” she reconsidered the issue.

“Oh, and why is that.” Red was more than skeptical, disliking the turn of the conversation immensely.

“I’m a woman, and all I noticed as you walked out of the shower,” she cocked her head slightly, her expression benign, “was that you have a great body.”

Red’s expression slipped a tad.
“So if a man said the same thing to me, I would hope that maybe, I would believe, that I had been placing too much emphasis on the negative which was shaping what kind of person I had become.”

Red wasn’t buying any of it.

“And who said it?” she questioned, almost flippantly. “Chicks dig scars.”

“There’s scars and then there are scars, Lizzy,” the man was beginning to get a little angry. “Forget the back, you saw how damaged the rest of my body is.” he gestured curtly.

“All I see right now,” She replied cheekily, “is one hot guy.”

Reddington sighed heavily, shaking his head, his mood dropping considerably from moments ago. “I don’t need you to pretend...”

“Raymond Reddington, I am not feeding you a line of bullshit.” she tossed the hand towel aside angrily. “You’re hot, plain and simple. Either accept the compliment or don’t.”

Liz turned away, walking stiffly to the closet.

Red stood, frozen to the spot. For a moment he was unsure of what action to take. Obviously, he had hurt her feelings, essentially called her a liar because that was what he believed her to be, but now...

He debated his options, then followed her steps slowly.

He silently watched as Liz yanked drawers open, pulling out her lingerie for the day, before slamming the drawer shut. She grasped a shirt, pulling it off the bar, sending the hanger flying.

The man ducked the projectile’s course as it barely scrapped his injured shoulder. He drew in a cleansing breath, man enough to apologize when the need arose.

“I’m sorry...” He swallowed gently, clearing his throat.

She said nothing, not ready as yet, to forgive and forget.

“I’m sorry.” He repeated, stepping closer, barring any exit route she might intend to take.

She dropped her head, squeezing the clothes in her hand tightly, “I don’t lie.” She kept her gaze averted from his, her voice low and intent. “I’m tired of lying, liars.” she amended quickly.

He stayed silent, waiting.

“I can see beyond the façade and know that there’s more to Red Reddington than what people see.” She stated stoutly. “You are generous and kind and incredibly patient.” she practically stamped her foot. “You’re charming and handsome and incredibly stupid at times, like any man.” She disgusted.

“There’s more to you than those scars, Red.” she poked him hard in the shoulder that wasn’t injured. “I see it. Me, of all people. Why can’t you?” she spat.

“I haven’t received a compliment such as yours,” the man had taken a minute to reply, “or one that wasn’t backhanded at least, in such a long time, I forgot what sincerity sounded like.”

The woman digested all the man had said, her mood lessening.

“In a woman’s mind, Red,” she tried to explain, “we never feel good enough. We constantly worry about our weight, our hair, the way we present ourselves to the world in general.” Liz knew she wasn’t putting it correctly. “Don’t think for one second I don’t understand what you’re trying to say. I do, I swear.”

Red knew women were often self conscious about their bodies. Never feeling attractive enough.

“I want you to feel, at least around me,” Liz was suddenly aware that the man still stood before her in nothing more than a slip of a towel. She tried very hard to keep her eyes level with his, “you can be yourself. You can relax and get comfortable... be comfortable.”

The man shifted his eyes thoughtfully and all Liz could think at the moment was that he had very sexy feet. She had been glancing down, around, anywhere but where she really wanted to look.

“Okay.” she exasperated, trying to extract herself from the situation gracefully, “so what’s this?” she motioned to his upper bicep because the area had caught her wayward attention.

He dipped his head absently, looking at what she was poking at. “A tattoo.”

“I know what it is.” she exasperated. “I mean, I saw them before, but...” she waved her hands about aimlessly. “Tell me about them.”

The man’s scowl increased. “What do you want to know?” he was a little taken aback by the turn of conversation.

“Well, this for example,” She traced her finger over the classically depicted mermaid intertwined, sitting on an anchor, which graced his upper left arm.

Leaning closer, she took in the fine details. How the wispy hair waved around her body, baring one breast, the other covered under the dark silky drape.

Her fins, dancing in the water, floating, tickling at the bottom edge of the anchor she was wrapped about. The intricate detail of each and every scale on her tail was amazing. She was actually very lovely.

Delicate features, small pretty breasts not overly done as so many men were apt to do, muted colors. This was done by a true artist, worthy of being put to canvas.

“First year Navy.” his eyes roamed his ‘old friend’, a secretive smile touching his lips. “We were all drunk, of course. My shipmates chose something about the Navy. Flags, skulls and crossbones. I wanted something a little less... traditional.” Red lifted amused eyes, “It’s a way we have of bragging but still reminding us of what we had achieved at one time in our life.”

“And this one?” Underneath the mermaid, only slightly smaller in size, was a ship’s wheel fashioned into a Victorian compass. A long spindle pointed north to the mermaid. Again the inner detail of the compass face was amazing. The sixteen point star in the center pointed to every imaginable direction, the fading, making it look three dimensional.

“Done by the same man when we got back from our first tour.” It had taken Red weeks to track the man down. “It can be taken a couple of different ways, I suppose. A sailor looks for the northern point or is always looking for a lady.”

“And you are...?” she queried tongue-in-cheek.

“Looking for the beautiful woman.” He indulgently supplied.

“This one?” Red brought his right arm forward, glancing down at the two snakes, wrapped in the symbol of infinity, eating one another’s tail.

“Done in Japan. Traditionally, the Ouroboros is one snake eating it’s own tail, representing a renewal of life for eternity,” she was informed. “I’m a representation of two different people. Raymond Reddington, the man that had a family and Navy career. And Red Reddington, the criminal. Two distinct personalities in one man, destined to eternally reinvent himself.” He grinned at his own folly.

“This one?” She pointed to a small flower in lilac, the letters JR underneath in flourishing script. “Aren’t these flowers normally blue in color?”

“A forget-me-not.” His tone mellowed as did his eyes. “Her favorite color was purple, lilac specifically.” There was a softness to his tone Liz had never heard before. “She called it baby purple.”

“Jennifer Reddington.” Liz placed her hand on his chest, kissing the small flower softly. He inhaled sharply at the gentle touch for it was totally unexpected.

“Baby purple?” She smiled.

“Baby blue, baby pink.” He chuckled slightly. “It made sense to her that it would be baby purple.”

“You can’t argue with that reasoning.” Raising up, she inclined her head towards his, pulling him down to her, kissing his lips softly. “Thank you for sharing that with me.”

They stood there, silently wrapped together in a comforting embrace long enough that her leg started aching, but she wasn’t about to say anything. It felt good to be held. It felt good to know a little more about the truth. To know more about Red.

“Raymond?” Dembe’s voice called out through the suite.

Red deflated into her. “What?” The man bemoaned his lot in life.

Liz chuckled quietly, hearing Red’s pitiful whine coming from her neckline.

“Jackson’s on the line.”

“I don’t care.” He mumbled into her neck.

Patting his head condescendingly, Liz called out from the confines of the closet to the waiting man. “Tell him Red will call back shortly.”

She stepped back, openly ogling him. Which he had to admit, was something he hadn’t experienced in a while.

“It’s a shame you can’t go around like this in your everyday dealings.” She smiled offering another scan of his body, hesitating visibly on the bulge under his towel. “You’d probably get better discounts on your shipments.”

She was being honest. She liked how he looked. Very much so, if the way she stared at him was any indication.

“Hussy...” He hugged her close, grinning when she giggled. “I have to dress, so go shower,” He stepped back, reaching for the towel, “Or you’re going to see a lot more than you bargained for.”

She stood rooted to the spot, her expression almost petulant.

He lifted enquiring brows.
“I’m thinking!” She grinned impishly.

“Well, you better think fast, sweetheart.” He reached for the towel, pulling the knot.

The towel dropped on one side, allowing her a quick glance of the top of his groin, “No!” She squeezed her eyes shut hastily, her hands lifting of their own volition as she searched aimlessly for the door.

She was still giggling in a fine spirit as she exited the area. “I want to be surprised.” she called back over her shoulder.

Surprised?

What the hell did that mean?

He watched her, mesmerized as she stripped down completely, seemingly not a care in the world before she climbed into the shower.

A slow smile spread across the man’s handsome face.

He now understood completely her parting remark.

She had not seen him in his entirety before.

When she finally did see him naked, she wanted it to be on her own terms. She wanted the intimacy to be finalized to her satisfaction.

A day he hoped fervently was fast approaching.

Chapter End Notes

We know James Spader/Red has a distinctive tattoo, but seeing that this is an AU, we decided to have a little fun and play with his character.

Hope you don't mind...
May 4

The Torello brothers had done a fantastic job of softening up the supposedly hardened criminal that had taken the shot at Red the day before.

Red had to admit, if only to himself, he was surprised that Tom had not taken the shot. While the sniper gave a general description that could have been Tom, which had ordered the hit, Red did not believe Tom would hire someone as unprofessional as this guy was turning out to be.

On the other hand, Tom could be fucking with him. Was that his subtle way of telling Liz, even Red could be taken down, or was there even more to it than that?

Reddington was getting a headache thinking about the possibilities so he ended the uncertainty, by turning his would-be assassin over to the trusting, capable hands of the Torello brothers.

It was one less worry off his plate.

Liz was doing face time with her team, as had become her norm so Red left her to her own devices.

While he caught upon correspondences and the Estate bills.

A day like every other day, except this one was filled with stolen kisses and long embraces before one or the other was called away for whatever reason.

When Elizabeth was done with her team, Cooper surprised her by a monumental announcement, at least to the woman.

The Assistant Director for the Behavioral Analysis Unit had requested that she profile for them, at least until her medical leave was over.

Seeing that she was indisposed for a yet to be determined time frame, perhaps she could help lessen the workload that had piled up on them in the wake of losing two agents. One to maternity leave, the other to retirement.

Liz had jumped at the opportunity of course, pleased to feel productive again.

She still had to be on call for the Blacklist first and foremost, but the BAU’s cases, compared to what they had been dealing with at the Blacksite, would be a piece of cake.

She could do this.

Liz excitedly went to tell Red her news and was pleased that he was happy for her. He had not only understood, he was very supportive.

“I think it will be good for you, sweetheart.” Red encouraged. “I need to speak to you about something.”

She sat aside the file she had been carrying, turning her attention to him, waiting patiently.

“You haven’t found a house yet, have you?” He asked the rhetorical question.
“Uh, no.” she frowned, “I’ve been looking, but–”

“Wait, before you read something into what I’m saying.” Red forestalled her. “I wanted to make sure you hadn’t found anything before I offered my proposal.”

“All right...” she was hesitant, not knowing where this was headed.

“Since we’ve been established here at this house and you have taken a liking to Francis,” he began, “I think you should just stay here.”

“Red, that’s very nice of you but I can’t just–”

“Listen to me.” he halted her protest. “We’re supposed to be engaged, Francis visits frequently. If you move out now...”

“I thought, whenever Francis is here, I’d make an appearance.” he had given this much thought. “Otherwise, I’ll just be at one of the safe houses or more likely, out of town.”

“Why can’t you just stay here?” she frowned. “It’s not like there isn’t enough room.”

“Sweetheart, I haven’t even taken you on a date yet.” Red smiled. “Don’t you think I should do that before shacking up with you?”

“I think you’re being silly, quite honestly.” she replied honestly. “We’ve managed well enough this last month without killing each other. Unless there’s some problem you aren’t telling me about.”

“Elizabeth, I just want to give you space.” Red stated seriously. “We go on a date, you come home that night to analyze what was said or done, in the privacy of your own home.”

“I’ve had time to think. To clear my head of the garbage.” she was grateful for the fact. “I am not the same person I was a month ago, let alone six months ago.”

“And you don’t think that has anything to do with the fact that you’ve been in my company?” he countered.

“No, I think it has everything to do with me not being in Tom’s company. I think it has to do with the fact that I’ve taken a break from work and rested.” she was adamant. “I think it has everything to do with taking time for myself.”

Red had to consider her point of view.

“I could have left here anytime, you know.” she pointed out the obvious. “I could have rented a small apartment and got around just fine.” she hesitated, then forged ahead. “But the fact is, I enjoyed your company.” Once said, it was easier to continue. “I’ve enjoyed everyone’s company, Francis, the guards, Nora.” She slowed, the next statement not as easy to admit. “I’ve lived alone for almost a year, and it was boring as hell.”

“It had to have some bright spots.” Red was stunned at the words.

“Not particularly.” she shrugged. “I like my quiet time, but I’ve also found that I like companionship.” she motioned accordingly. “I get that here.”

Red was pleasantly surprised to hear all being said.
“If I’m sitting in the front areas, the guards chat with me. If I’m in our bedroom, they do their check and move on.” she smiled gently. “I think they get that I sometimes need the solitude.”

The man was pleased to hear Silas and the other’s were doing their duties so well.

“Living alone is the same, day in and day out.” she gestured, grimacing. “Go to work, order take out, go home, watch a movie, pass out of the couch.”

“Why didn’t you go out?” Red was curious. “You’re a young woman, in the prime of her life.”

“I did go out, with Samar, Aram... sometimes Ress would join us.” she corrected. “The bar scene gets old, fast.” she opened her computer while she talked. “I tried dating and checked out some sites,” she turned the screen so he could see, “but they were so dull and uninteresting, it was a relief to get called into work.”

“You still have an account?” he was amazed, smiling his amusement.

“I check it once in a while, out of morbid curiosity.” she sighed heavily. “Or when I don’t think things can get worse... these prove me wrong.”

Red scrolled through the messages, she showed him, his features showing his disbelief. Out of the ten he opened so far, seven of them only contained one word, Hello. Three said, I'd fuck you. Txt me.

“Charming.” Red twisted his mouth distastefully.

“Aren’t they.” Liz rolled her eyes. “Aside from avoiding the dating pool, at all costs. By the time we got to the Kenyon Family, I was more than burnt out.” Red’s eyes softened in understanding. “I needed this time away from everything, Red.” she confessed.

“I don’t think I’ve told you, thank you, for letting me have it. For giving me the chance to not worry about a damn thing.” she felt genuine remorse “I also haven’t thanked you for giving me the Blacklist names again, after I said I was ready, regardless of what Cooper said about not letting me work.”

She leaned forward, kissing his cheek. “Thank you for giving me the chance to find my clarity again.”

“I don’t think I had anything to do with it, Elizabeth.”

“You had everything to do with it.” she disagreed. “With that said, I’m a grown damn woman.” She reminded almost peevishly. “If I want to shack up with someone before an official date, it’s my business and no one else’s.”

Red felt a smile tug at his mouth. “Why don’t we just see how things go.” the smile grew as the blue eyes rolled in exaggerated annoyance.

“Just for a little bit.” he compromised. “We’ll go on a couple dates, then open this back up for discussion.” he used his arbitration skills to his advantage. “For all you know, you could think I’m a waste of time like these other dumbasses.” he waved the tablet about, before tossing it to the couch.

“Well if you’re not here, I don’t see why we can’t downsize to something smaller.”

“I picked this house because of the secure grounds and guest house.”
“I don’t really need a guest house.”

“The guards do.” he reminded. “Since that’s where the sleep.”

Good point. Liz had forgotten about that.

“Even still, I really only need, what, two guards?” Liz reasoned it out. “For God sake, Red, this is a 20,000 square foot house. No one needs that much space... how can you afford...”

“Have you forgotten about Francis?” he bated.

Again, he had a good point. Not that she minded Francis, she loved Francis and would love for him to stay when ever he wished.

“You’re comfortable here.” Red prodded gently. “And admit it, you know you love the pool.”

She did love that pool. “Well, at least let me give you the money from the sale of–”

“No, I want you to keep that for emergencies.” he absolutely refused. “As a matter of fact, I would like it, if you set up an offshore account with it, should something happen.” he continued. “Now, I have contingencies in place in the event the shit hits the fan, but I would still like it if you had a back up.”

“I don’t feel comfortable, Red.”

“The way you talk,” he reminded, “it’ll be our house again in no time, so this should be a nonissue.”

Liz blushed slightly, gesturing for the man to continue.

“The house suits your purposes. You have enough rooms for your team, should you need them. You’re maybe ten minutes from work.” he ticked off on his fingers. “Security has their own dwelling. Nora loves that kitchen.”

“I don’t think I could keep Nora.” she laughed lightly, already crushed over the reality.

“You’re keeping her. Trust me on that.” he put down his foot. “Lizzy, you love this house.”

She did love it.

Besides being beautiful, she had grown accustomed to sitting in the big picture window that was in the atrium to read. She did enjoy the privacy gates. She liked that there was separate areas for visitors and entertainment. She liked the master bath... a lot. She liked that the closets were so huge. She loved walking the gardens. She did love that pool.

She found peace here with it’s light colors and warmth. For such a large home, it was quite... homey.

She really loved this house.

Red watched her weighing the pros and cons, and knew the pros were winning. Her face had taken on a serene quality as she mentally catalogued the rooms, her favorite spots.

“And you?” she questioned quietly. “Where will you stay?”

“I’ll be close by...” she was assured. “Very close...” his face took on a quiet intensity. “Will you invite me over for a play date?”
Liz’s eyes shifted warily. “What kind of ‘play’ are we talking about?”

“Leap frog...” Red’s eyes twinkled, “see, it’s where you bend over and I get behind you and—”

“I get the picture.” Liz sighed, instantly visualizing what the man had said. A bubble of laughter escaped her otherwise dour mood.

Red’s expression was total innocence when she checked.

“If this thing between us doesn’t work out,” the woman’s face fell a little as Red continued, “we’ll find you a new place, all your own.”

“And if we work out?” she was ready for the challenge.

“Then we can make this our home or find a new one together.” he was open to compromise. “Stay where your heart is, Lizzy,” he suggested. “That will be your home.”

“You’re not talking about leaving again, are you?” Francis scowled, having walked breezily through the door without so much as a knock or a ‘by your leave’.

Liz looked at Red wide eyed. How much had Francis heard?

“She wants to downsize.” Red saved the day.

“I love this house.” Francis pouted, plopping down in an oversize chair. “Are you crazy woman?”

“See, another selling point.” Red mentioned in passing. “Francis loves the house. We can’t possibly move now.” the man said sarcastically, making her chuckle. “Don’t you knock?” he asked the younger man.

“You were expecting me...” Francis drawled, leaning forward, his interest caught by something totally private and personal laid out in front of him, like an unsolved mystery he could not overlook.

Red sighed, rubbing at the sudden tension in his forehead. “You’re right,” he conceded, “I was. But not for another half hour or so.”

“I’m too early, he bitches. I’m too late, he bitches.” Francis fingered the edge of Liz’s file. “What is it with you and being so damned punctual?” he slowly lifted the corner of the folder, crossing his eyes at Red. “You aren’t in the Navy anymore.”

Liz’s mouth gaped, sitting forward quickly, but not in time to intercept Francis’ intended inspection.

Red’s palm slammed the manila folder, keeping it closed tightly.

“Lizzy...” Red called out after her retreat, causing the woman to hesitate.

Liz smiled happily as the man inched closer, wrapping his arms around her waist. Red nuzzled her neckline, softly kissing the warm skin. Which simultaneously tickled her but also, turned her on a bit.

She released a breathy giggle, leaning into his affection.

“Is seven all right for tonight?” his breath scent tiny shivers down her spine.

“...Yes.” she sighed, arching into his touch. Liz inhaled sharply, feeling the man’s tongue flick against her heated skin. Clutching his back, she lifted bodily, his warm mouth stirring her emotions amorously.

Red’s own emotions stirred, and he could not prevent his hand from cupping the luscious bottom.

He thoroughly enjoyed the woman’s slight moan of approval as his fingers spread searchingly about the ripe young flesh.

Pulling the woman into his thigh, Red grinned when she rubbed against him, trying to ease the sudden ache he had purposely caused.

He squeezed the tiny cheek once, curving his fingers inward, just teasing the seam of her pants.

“Your wounds.” she reminded breathlessly, her ass squirming in his palm. “I mean, your leg...” she mewed softly when the man pushed her harder into his leg, increasing the ache between her thighs.

“Are you questioning my health or my abilities?” he challenged openly, his eyes holding hers hypnotically.

“You aren’t hurting?” she frowned up at him.

“Oh, I’m hurting.” he pacified readily. “Make no mistake about that. But it has nothing to do with my ‘wounds’.”

“I’m perfectly fine.” he assured. “I promised you a date, and a date is what you shall receive... among other things.”

He heard footsteps coming down the hall, his mouth quirking slightly at Liz’s obvious disappointment.

“I’m going to make a quick call, then leave with Francis for about an hour.” he disengaged himself artfully.

“All right...” she smiled up at the man as Dembe pushed through the door.

Red kissed the woman, patting her bottom in a more than friendly fashion which caused Liz to chastise him with a look, if for appearances sake only.

“Could you tell Francis I’ll be out shortly?” he asked sweetly.

She nodded, heading for the door, glancing back at the man, finding him staring at her bottom.

Liz exhaled Shakily, feeling the wetness between her legs increase. She pulled up short just outside the door, blowing out a steadying breath. She winced slightly, squeezing her thighs together, staving off her sudden spike of renewed arousal.

She really hoped they’d make love soon, because these petting sessions were driving her insane. Maybe that was his intention. The need to experience Red was so overpowering, she wanted to pull him into an empty room and just...

“Good grief.” Francis said behind her, startling the woman from her reverie.

“What?” she muttered absently.

“Someone’s horny.” He munched at the cookie in his hand.

“Shut up, Francis.” she snapped, stalking towards the front of the house.

“That’s the third time someone has said that to me since I’ve been here.” he wasn’t overly upset by the fact.

“Then perhaps you should take the advice.” she retorted.

“Is Red neglecting his baby cakes?” he cooed playfully, “Because it sure smells like he is.” he made a show of scenting her. “Though, why he would, is beyond me.” he replied honestly. “You are quite intoxicating... if you like scrawny, oversexed brunettes.”

“I’m about to push you in the pool and hold you under.” she seethed, promising the threat. “And no, he isn’t neglecting me.” the woman bitched. “He’s just been busy.”

Francis snagged her arm, dragging her to an empty room, shutting the door behind them.

“What’s wrong?” he asked seriously.

“What are you talking about?” she furled her brow.

“You’ve been grumpy for days.” Francis said. “Are you two not...”

Liz sighed, leaning back into the wall behind her. “It’s none of your business... I know you don’t understand that phrase, so let me explain it in detail.”

“Is he still pissed about...” he waved his hand aimlessly, “that Donald guy?”

“No.” she answered too quickly. “We just... keep getting interrupted.” she threw him a lethal look. “He had to go to London...” she ticked off another reason, and why she was explaining in the first place, she had no idea.

“I know Silas was giving you the business in New York, but surely since Red got back...” he hesitated, seeing her frustration build. “How long has it been since you two made love?”

“Okay, read my lips...” she iterated, “stop sticking your nose–”

“This is bad.” Francis shook his head woefully, then brightened. “I can fix this.”

“How long have I been in the casts?” she replied, making it as simplistic as possible. “And we had that fight before that...” she remembered the story when Red had been in Italy.

“You mean, you guys still haven’t...” he was aghast.

“If you must know!” she gritted. “And it seems you do... No!”

“Why?” he gasped audibly at the revelation. “I mean, are you in pain or...?”

“No, the only pain I’m feeling is one in the ass!” she indicated the source.
“Well, evidently not. If all you said is true.” he defended himself. “Have you told him that you’re more than ready?”

“I am not!” Liz denied the truth.

“Oh right.” he dismissed airily. The man sighed heavily, then really looked at the woman. Liz’s bravado melted into oblivion.

“Maybe he’s just not there yet.” she finally voiced her doubts and fears.

Francis looked down at the small woman, his frown matching hers. He suddenly pulled her close, hugging her gently.

“He wants to be with you Lizzy.” he understood the uncertainty. “Don’t think he doesn’t.”

“Then what’s going on with him?” she looked up at Francis, her expression hopeful. Maybe being a guy, he could explain.

Maybe Red wanted to take it slow because he wanted to see if he really wanted to be in a relationship with her? Maybe he would feel guilty if he had sex with her and it didn’t pan out?

“Maybe he doesn’t really want–” she couldn’t even finish the sentence.

“Don’t even go there.” Francis scoffed. “The way he stares at you...” he chuckled. “He really wants to make love to you.” he smiled softly, stroking her pink cheek.

“You know what I think it is?” he said. “I think he wants to make it special, seeing that it’s been a while since you two did make love.” Francis bolstered. “And with the calls and people interrupting, he thinks the moment has been spoiled.” he explained. “When you two reconnect, I’m sure he wants the attention focused solely on what you two are doing, and not the next interruption.”

“I hope so.” Liz hung her head, sighing. “But you know, I’d do anything for a quickie right now.” she raised a flabbergasted expression. “Well, not with you, I mean. I didn’t mean... that.”

Francis sniggered against her hair, squeezing her once before stepping back.

“Just be patient. And remember, when it does happen, it’s going to be really good.” He flicked her chin with his fingers. “Okay?”

She nodded, then leaned against his side as he guided her out of the room. “Now, let’s go bug Nora.”

May 4

A short time later, Red headed out with Francis to meet with a prospective client. The meeting had gone well, so well in fact, they not only had another shipment to be handled, but they had padded their pockets with a sizable amount of cash.

As they were headed to the car, Francis reached out, pulling gently at Red’s sleeve.

“Can I talk to you a moment,” he asked, gesturing his head to a secluded spot, “alone.”

Red’s brows furrowed slightly, for the young man seemed in a serious mood for once. A novelty in itself. “Dembe, could you call Louis and get that shipment rolling, please.”

Dembe inclined his head, leaving the men to their privacy.

Francis walked a few feet, then sighed. “I was wrong to stick my nose into your private affairs,” the man began, “and I promised myself I wouldn’t do it again...”

“But?” Red baited artfully.

“Are you still pissed off at her?”

“Okay,” Red sighed, “I know this has to do with Lizzy, but I’m completely drawing a blank here.” the man had quirked his head to emphasize his growing frustration.

“I know it’s none of my business,” Francis held up ‘wait hands’, “but...” the younger man began to pace restlessly back and forth on the concrete pavement.
Red watched the man’s lack of progress and felt as annoyed for some obscure reason as he did whenever he spoke with Glen.

There was no rhyme or reason, he just was.

But the more he watched Francis try to pull his thoughts together, the less he felt the aggravation.

He truly understood how difficult this was for Francis to come to Lizzy’s defense again.

“Francis, just say it.” Red urged impatiently, then altered his tone at the boy’s devastated look. “I promise, I will hear you out.”

Francis built up his courage, taking a couple of steps. The steady gaze pulled Francis up short. He returned to his pacing for a spell.

Red’s arms lifted from his sides in a ‘oh my God’ gesture which the young man caught.

“Why haven’t you made love to her yet?” he blurted the question.

“Not that it’s any of your business–” Red’s tone was more than cool.

Francis held his hands up in open defense, “I know but...” he grimaced, “when my best friend is hurting. When she’s second guessing her desirability, I...” Francis rubbed his fingers on his forehead hard, shaking his head, knowing he was stating it badly. “She thinks you don’t want her anymore.”

Red was momentarily stunned. The statement came out of the blue, shocking the hell out of him. He had expected some sort of concocted story Liz had woven for the sake of their ‘cover’. While there was often, a bit of truth in every lie they told, this truth hit far too close to home.

“If that’s the case...” Francis scratched nervously at his neck, his gaze never leaving Red’s face for any real amount of time, so anxious was he to read the man’s reactions, “then just tell her.”

“I want her Francis.” Red disliked airing his private business before anyone, but he did take into consideration Francis’ motives this time.

“Then what’s the problem?” Francis was stumped.

Red remained silent for so long, Francis began to squirm. He knew he was in dangerous waters here, and Red’s final explosion proved him right.

“I’m not about to fuck her against some fucking wall.” Red snapped angrily, all the frustration of the last few days coming to the fore. “You asshole people won’t give us...” he broke off knowing he was putting the blame on other’s when he could have put a stop to the interruptions anytime he really wanted.

“There’s a reason there’s a ‘do not disturb’ sign and locks on the door.” Francis bitched right back. “And turn off your fucking phone. There is nothing that can’t wait until you give her the attention she needs from you.”

The man resumed his pacing, unaware of doing so.

Red’s arms lifted yet again, his annoyance back ten fold.

“And what the hell is a little interruption?” Francis wondered aloud. “I mean, if you have a kid, you think they’ll knock?” he turned earnest eyes Red’s way.
Yes, the man did have a point. Red couldn’t count how many times his daughter had ‘interrupted’. He and his wife took care of Jennifer’s issue, got her back to bed and picked up where they left off.

So what was his problem now?

“Man, she’s dying for you to touch her.” Francis advocated sincerely.

Red sighed heavily, slumping back onto the wall behind him for support. He gathered his thoughts, allowing the silence to stretch. “...I wanted to make it romantic, for her.”

“And you can do that.” Francis’ tone softened slightly. “But right now, let her know you want her and give her a good fuck.” he stressed and looking at Red, really looking at the man, “And quite frankly, I think you need it more than she does.”

Red lifted a chilly glare.

“I honestly don’t know how you couldn’t have taken that pussy by now.” Francis shook his head, genuinely confused. “She’s so damned hot, even I get a hard on sometimes.” he smirked, until he realized Red’s dark and territorial eyes zeroed in on him.

“I mean...” he quickly amended, “I don’t know how you haven’t got a hard on...” he laughed lamely. “Because I’m sure you have, not that that’s any of my business, but come on... what man would not get a... not that I have. I was just joking about that.” he laughed heartily again, stepping to gingerly hit Red’s shoulder in open camaraderie.

But the man’s expression had not changed one iota.

“I mean, I think of her as a slightly older sister.” Francis continued, mentally slapping himself upside the head, wondering when this ability to not be able to shut up had become a common occurrence. Then suddenly realized... he was still fucking talking.

“Not that she’s older than me, she isn’t. And boy, does she look younger, not so young that it’s unfashionable or unseemly that you two should be involved.” Francis closed his eyes, just realizing what he had said. “Not that you’re too old for her, they’re not thinking that, I mean, why would they?” he poo-pooed the very idea. “Look at you.” he motioned accordingly. “I mean what man doesn’t want to be Red Reddington?”

“Shut up now, Francis.” Red advised quietly. He had to think.

Francis winced inwardly as Red’s fingers curled tightly into his arm, and just knew, he was most likely about to get belted.

Really, really hard.

Francis fell silent, wondering what other stupid shit would come pouring out of his big mouth when Red ended the silent debate.

“Get in the car.” Red gritted, pushing the man toward the vehicle which sat waiting, across the parking lot.

“What?” Francis held his breath, thinking maybe he’d gone too far overboard again and had lost Red’s friendship... forever.

“Get in the fucking car.” Red snapped, his head jerking toward the auto. “I need to get ready for our date.”
Francis walked stiffly ahead of the man, wondering where the bullet would enter. Before he got in the car or after. Probably before. Red wouldn’t want to ruin the upholstery.

“Are you mad at me?” he asked, checking behind him, relieved not to see any weapons drawn. “No...” Red’s tone had not altered in the least, however. “You just made me realize something.”

Francis opened his mouth to comment but shut it quickly enough when Red transferred a steely look in his direction.

“And that is none of your business.”

Both men climbed into the car. As Francis took his seat beside the man, he craned his neck, searching Dembe’s hands out.

No weapons there either. Francis threw Red a disturbed glance. What was going on here?

“Thank you, Francis.” Red begrudgingly drew his attention from the outside scenery as Dembe pulled out into a heavy traffic flow on the Interstate. “For letting me know.” the light eyes shifted lazily to the chalky face, staring at him so expectantly. “...You can relax now.” it was summarily advised.

Francis smiled hesitantly at the man, unable as yet to breathe a sigh of relief, not trusting Red or his instincts any further than he could spit at the moment. Which wasn’t saying much, as his mouth was as dry as the fucking Sahara.

“You’re welcome...” He replied politely, sitting back stiffly.

Dembe pulled up alongside the curb in the downtown section, directly in front of Francis’ office building. The young man craned his neck up the tall building, watching the busy sidewalk absenty.

“Get out of the car, Francis.” Red instructed.

Francis looked at the man dumbstruck. “I never come here unless I have to.”

Dembe’s head shook woefully in the front seat. Red’s look of incredulous disbelief reminded the other man that he should probably just quietly take his leave.

“Okay...” Francis nodded agreeably, pointing to the outside world that suddenly seemed like a refuge from a very bad place he might go, if he did not... “I’m just gonna go.” he shot out of the car like a rocket, calling out as Red pulled away. “Good luck on your date!”

Elizabeth transferred her gaze back and forth a hundred times, having made her choices for tonight’s special occasion.

She shook her head negatively suddenly hating every article of clothing she owned. She stepped once, selecting a long gown only to hang it back in it’s original spot.

She dropped her head into the dresser, her frustration complete. She tugged at the radio on her hip, hesitatingly rubbing her thumb over the call button, before finally pushing it.

“Silas, could you come here for a minute?” she asked hesitantly.
“Copy...” the man returned immediately.

A short moment later, she heard tapping on the main door and the guard call out her name.

“I’m in the closet!” she shouted back.

Silas walked around the door frame, chuckling. “Are you trying to tell me something?” he smirked.

“Shut up and help me.” she grumbled her dissension, waving over her wardrobe selections. “Please.” she added as an afterthought, hoping to buy the man’s good grace.

“Do I look like I read Cosmo?” he folded his arms, leaning into the doorframe. His look saying it all.

“No,” she turned away, running her fingers along the satin of her robe, “but you are a guy.” she lifted a warning gaze, scowling at the man. “Don’t make me look trashy.”

Silas studied her for a long beat. “You’re nervous.” She had expected him to be amused, but his expression was a somber one.

“Yes.” she admitted. “I mean, it’s been years since I’ve...” she felt the pressure of the moment acutely, “with Tom,” she thought how to phrase it, “the fanciest I got was a new sweatshirt.”

Silas shifted his eyes for a beat, sizing up the situation. She wanted the night to be memorable.

“Show me what you got.” his decision was cast.

Liz turned quickly, before the man’s patience wore out, holding up each choice against her small frame.

She sighed wearily, feeling her mood drop with each dress he vetoed. She looked back at her choices which were dwindling quickly.

“No, that one’s too long.” Silas grimaced his distaste.

She sat it back in line with a finality, tears misting her eyes.

“What’s wrong with that little black one there?” Silas jabbed his finger at the one in question.

“It’s a little low cut for dinner, isn’t it?” she hadn’t even considered it to be honest but she wasn’t about to share that information at this point.

“No.” he stated bluntly and at her doubtful look, “I’m not bullshitting you.” and he wasn’t. “It’s pretty modest for where you’re going.” he assured.

Liz looked at the dress, indecision in her features.

“You want Red to make a move on you?” he asked seriously.

“W-Well... I..” Liz stumbled over the question, let alone the answer. Why was it people around here were so blunt in their observations and statements? “Yeah, I guess.”

“Then wear that one.” it was advised. “It’ll give him easy access.” Silas took the dress off the rack, holding it up to her body himself. “It’s low cut and short, so it won’t be in his way when he–”

“Yes, yes. I know all that.” She stopped the narrative abruptly.
The man grinned as her nervousness turned into vexation. He leaned back into the wall, watching her flitter around grabbing shoes, nylons...

“Matching lingerie.” he reminded.

The woman hesitated, tossing the blue set back into the drawer, choosing a black set instead. She bunched them in her hand, hiding them from sight, then sighed heavily before holding them up for Silas’ approval.

“They’re good.” he nodded. “Red will like them.” he sing-songed his head. “But more importantly, you’ll feel confident in them.”

She took a shaky breath, tossing them beside her nylons.

“Why are you so nervous?” he asked. “It’s not like you haven’t done this... done him... before.” the man grinned at his own wit. But to his surprise, the woman’s brow did not furrow in anger, but open concern.

He stopped grinning, shifting his tall frame upright, his amazement apparent. “You two haven’t...”

She held up a hand, “Why does everyone think it’s okay to,” she halted abruptly, licking her lips which were suddenly dry. “Oh what the hell...No.”

To say she was nervous about sleeping with Red was a damned understatement. She had only been with less than a handful of men. And Red... he had a damn Harem of women after him.

She didn’t think she was all that bad in bed, but how would she rate among his other lovers?

She could feel the pressure returning with a vengeance.

But Liz couldn’t push aside the pure exhilaration of experiencing the man.

She found herself in quite the little quandary.

“Taking things slow, eh?” Silas shrugged, giving her an out and breaking the tension. “That’s fun too.” he grin had returned slowly.

Liz cocked her head, intent on the man’s every utterance.

“The anticipation has it’s rewards.” Silas stated simply. “Especially when you get to be our age.” he explained. “Nothing surprises us anymore. Nothing shocks us.” he continued. “So the build up, the challenge... it gets us off.”

“What do you mean.” the woman was suddenly more than very interested.

“I’m not saying Red won’t come when he’s with you.” the man stated bluntly. “But the foreplay, the suspense of what you’ll feel and taste like. How you’ll react when he fucks you...”

Liz blushed from head to toe but she managed to hold the man’s eyes unwaveringly.

“That is very much on his mind. He’s fucking aching to take you.” Silas smiled knowingly. “He’s holding back for you, but he’s also enjoying the hell out of the chase.”

“God, I hope so...” she breathed her anxiousness aside. “You think?” she asked hopefully.

“I know.” It was corrected stoutly. “Everyone he’s been with is so quick to fuck, gives it up too easily...” Silas did not judge the women, merely stated the facts. “There’s no intrigue. No challenge.”

Liz’s mood heightened a tad. “Really?”

“When you deny him a little bit, make him have to play the game, it’s rewarding.”

“Rewarding?”

“Oh hell yeah.” the guard nodded. “If he has to gain your interest...”

“Gain my interest?” she questioned immediately.

“If you make him get to the point where the urge to throw you against a wall becomes a need.” he explained. “He’ll enjoy the hell out of that.” he spread his hands widely. “He’s been enjoying the little touches you two have been sharing, the flirtation, the build up.”

“Are you creeping around in the shadows or something?” she instantly regretted the retort. “I’m sorry, I didn’t mean that, keep saying things.”

“You two were making out in the hallway earlier before he left.” It was reminded.

Oh, right. They had been. She had forgotten they were where everyone could see them.

“With that said... he doesn’t expect me to put out...” she grumbled, remembering Red had called Silas a slut for the same offense. “In fact, I think he would rather I didn’t on a first date.” she worried her hands. “So I think if I did push for more...”

“And you really want to push for more.” Silas assumed correctly when the woman cast him a full flush of her cheeks. “If it makes you feel any better, this technically isn’t your first date.” Again, an out was offered. “You two had something going on long before this, you just had to get your shit together.” he put it in an eggshell. “This is just your official first date.”

“What’s the difference?” Liz was not only lost, she was feeling a growing trepidation.

“Red just wants to make sure you have no questions as to his intentions towards you.” Silas explained. “By asking you to dinner, it just signifies that you’re officially dating.” he shook his head at such innocence. “He’s staking his claim, as it were.”

Liz’s mouth gaped a little, understanding dawning on her. “Oh...”

“Shit...” the man bitched when the radio on his hip squawked. He answered the call, his eyes lifting to the woman. He would have to take the call, it was understood.

“Look, let me just say this...” the radio squealed again, he snatched it angrily to his mouth. “Are we about to be attacked! Is death knocking on the door!” he bitched at whoever was on the other end of the line.

“Uh, no.” a tinny voice replied. “We need your approval on a security measure.”

“I’ll be there in a minute then, dammit.” he snapped, then smiling gently at the woman replacing the offending object to his belt. “Red won’t turn you down. But the tease does hold it’s merits. Consider it foreplay.”

“Thank you, Silas.” she nodded her thanks, smiling softly. “For everything...”

She hadn’t thought about it like that. And she should have, being a woman. Foreplay was a good thing.

So maybe what Silas said held some merit after all.

Unless he was screwing with Red, which the man was known to do. Her doubts resurfaced hastily enough.

But as she replayed the conversation in her head, the man had truly seemed to be putting her at ease. Offering sound advice as he knew it.

Liz set about getting ready for a very eventful night, hopefully. She was a little more secure in her choice of dress now.

But more importantly, she pushed aside her decision to have a ‘game plan’. She intended to sit back and enjoy the ride, where ever it took them.

Elizabeth studied her reflection in the mirror for the hundredth time, checking on her hair and makeup.

Her eyes were constantly drawn to the inexplicable box of condoms which had been left on her night stand.

Silas must have brought them in when she was getting ready, leaving them in plain view. Like an idiot.

“But it never hurts to be prepared, right?” she muttered to herself, hastily ripping the box open, dropping one inside her purse.

She sat the box down, closing the latch on her bag, looking back down at the box.

“Oh, what the hell.” she impulsively grabbed the object spilling it’s full contents into her purse. She started visibly, not to mention guiltily, hearing a knock at the door.

“Come in!” she called out cheerfully, dropping the box, kicking it under the bed as she snapped her purse closed.

Red suddenly stood there, larger than life, his eyes slowly scanning her attire. A sensual sweep started at her feet lifting agonizingly slow.

“You look rather...” the man’s tongue rolled along his lips, his eyes sweeping her form once more, “... delectable.”

Elizabeth looked down at herself on the sly, breathing a little sigh of relief that her tightening nipples were hidden under the lace of her dress.

“Thank you.” she smiled softly. “You look very handsome... as usual.”

And he did. The gleaming band of his watch seemed startling against the classic dark suit, crisp white shirt and bold geometric tie in dark blue. A blue that seemed to darken the hue of his eyes.

Though... upon closer inspection, perhaps it wasn’t the tie, perhaps it was the intensity of the look he was giving her, causing his eyes to seemingly change colors. With each passing sweep of those penetrating orbs, the pupils of his eyes seemed to darkened almost hypnotically.
Red allowed her a release from the carnal trance he wove, slowly stepping towards her.

She felt like prey being hunted by a hungered beast... and didn’t mind one bit.

Liz knew she should take exception to such behavior, but the reality of it was, she had never felt more like a woman.

Silas had been right, she felt amazing in this dress. There was something wickedly sinful that brought out the feminine side of her, one she had never explored before.

She often had envied Samar her beauty and self poise but tonight, she could admit if only to herself, that she actually felt sexy and beautiful too.

And the man’s appreciative gaze did nothing to belie that belief.

“For you...” he replied smoothly, holding up a small bouquet of orange roses.

Liz’s face lit with pleasure, taking the small gift. She took in the fragrant bouquet, inhaling the divine scent.

“Thank you...” she smiled up at the man, “they’re beautiful.”

“Shall we?” Red gestured to the door.

She took his arm, leaving the quiet of their bedroom.

Liz tried to contain the excitement bubbling inside her. Surely, the man could feel it course through her body.

They were finally taking the first steps on their new journey... together.

Silas must die a slow and painful death, Red decided. Just like he was at the moment.

He just knew the man had something to do with that dress Liz had picked the evening. Little subtle hints invaded his thoughts, like when they had exited the house, the head guard’s big shit eating grin when he had seen the woman. And Silas’ suddenly innocent expression when Red had thrown him an ‘I’ll get you for this, if it’s the last thing I do’, look.

Red’s eyes drifted to the swishing little derriere as Liz walked before him down the well lit pathway. That dress was suddenly his most favorite thing in the entire universe.

It was low cut and short... giving him easy access to every part of that pretty package, should he want it.

And God, did he want it.

Every part of him cried out in distress because... he wanted it.

Red held out his hand, pleased when she took it without hesitation, following his footsteps unquestioningly.

“Are we meeting Dembe in the–”
“No.” Red pulled her along, his steps slowing to hers. The two seated Mercedes sat there before him in the driveway, it’s engine purring like a kitten.

Liz had been wanting to take a ride in the sleek car. She showed her appreciation with Red’s choice by an enthusiastic squeeze of his hand, her expression allowing her delight.

“Oh, I love this car.” he was so fortunate to own such a treasure.

Red opened the door, helping her into the low seat. He got more than a tantalizing view of the warm valley between her legs before the woman could modestly pull the short dress down somewhat over the creamy thighs.

He straightened with difficulty, his dick reacting to the sight before taking his place on the opposite side of the car.

“Can you drive?” she asked, absently buckling her belt, her tone somewhat surprised.

Red rolled his eyes towards her, then smiled. “Yes, I can drive.” he put the car in gear, rolling down the driveway. “Dembe just never let’s me.” he pushed the button, opening the gate. “Says I make his ass clench to the seat.”

She chuckled appreciatively. As they approached the moving gate, she glanced over her shoulder, checking behind them.

“We’re going alone?” she was stunned.

“Yes.” Red confirmed. “I’ve had enough interruptions for a while,” he threw her a cautionary glance, “you?”

“Agreed.” she smiled, settling back into her seat.

Throughout the drive, Red had to check himself habitually to keep from reaching over, instinctively laying hands on the exposed thigh.

As they sat down to dinner, his eyes had focused on the deliciously displayed breasts and long legs wrapped in silky nylon...

Throughout the meal, he found himself enraptured by her good humor and animated delivery of any story told. Some of her college experiences were downright amusing. He had not known much about that period of her life because Tom entered it.

Several times that evening, he enjoyed the flush on her cheeks as he purposely focused his entire attention on the woman. He loved how her eyes lit when she laughed. That laugh... he loved that laugh. She had the sweetest giggle when she was truly tickled. And a throaty breathless chuckle, to which he was becoming quickly addicted.

Finally their dessert plates were taken away, their glasses refilled one last time. Red knew at that stage, he truly didn’t want the evening to end.

He could not prevent his hands from gravitating towards her person. He needed to touch her, somehow, someway and in their present situation it was the only ‘decent’ mode of contact afforded him.

Not that he did not make it ‘personal’, he did. He caressed and stroked the warm palm intimately.
And even in the midst of the playful stories and dramatic sagas... with which she regaled him, he made sure that she was aware of his presence as a male. And in the end, as he watched the waiter pour the last of the wine, he knew Lizzy’s hands as well as he knew his own.

She had a little freckle on her thumb and a tiny scar on the other. Her nails were smooth under his own fingers, the polish slick and even. She had a slight callous on her right index finger, most likely from handling her weapon.

And when he held her hand in both of his, it vanished completely.

Red consciously played with her ring, rubbing his thumbs over the large stone, watching the woman’s eyes grow heavy.

He lifted the small palm of her hand to his mouth, softly kissing the sensitive skin, hearing her breathing falter.

He couldn’t help but wonder what her hands would feel like on his body.

“Are you ready to go, sweetheart?” he knew he was. He wanted out of the suddenly stifling atmosphere. He wanted to be alone with the woman, clear and simple.

Elizabeth shook out of the trance like state the man had placed her in, breaking her gaze on Red’s mouth as he softly kissed her hand.

She looked at the clock on the wall, surprised as hell to find three hours had passed since they sat down.

Three hours had passed so quickly and pleasantly.

They walked from the restaurant, hands still clasped. She could feel the heat of the slightly callused palm against hers.

“It’s so pretty out tonight.” she smiled up at the tall buildings surrounding them. “It’s difficult to see any stars in town.”

“It is.” he agreed, smiling down at her happy face.

She leaned into the car door, delaying the inevitable as long as she could. “Do we have to go home right now?”

“No...” he muttered softly, “I wasn’t planning on taking you home. Elizabeth.”

“I’ve had a really nice time...” her tone lowered, matching his.

They stood quietly, listening to the city move forward around them. The people and the sights blind to the two lost in their quiet solitude.

Red’s fingers tenderly brushed away the soft strands of hair caught by the wind, intently focused on the woman, lost in his own personal thoughts for a moment. He smiled gently realizing she was staring silently up at him, waiting.

Red blinked, breaking the stalemate, reaching around her to open the door. As he walked to the drivers side he informed her, “I had planned to take you to a play,” he began, “but upon reflection,” he slid into the seat effortlessly, “I find I would rather have you all to myself.”

The woman’s cheeks flushed in delight, “That sounds about right.” she was past being coy for the moment.

He pulled the sporty car out of the parking lot, taking to the streets quickly, until they hit the Interstate. He flew down the busy highway, slipping further and further from the city until the roads were tree lined and the stars came out, twinkling brilliantly against the black sky.

Red drove silently for a spell allowing the woman to take in the beautiful night sky. He pulled the car into a hidden alcove off to the side of the small two lane highway upon which they drove.

Liz questioned his actions, but did not object to them.

“I need to talk to you.” the man shut the car down, turning in his seat.

“By my calculations,” she interrupted hastily, “we’ve had a little over four dates.” she held up her fingers to signify, the ring shimmering in the distant light of the moon.

Red was a little thrown, going with the flow however. “...All right.” he wasn’t sure where she was heading.

“We’ve been to dinner, made out a couple of times...” she ticked the items off. “All very date type activities, yes?”

“I suppose you could say that, yes.” Red agreed, still a little in the dark. He hadn’t thought about it, but he guessed there were some instances in New York that could have been considered ‘dates’.

“After our discussion in the laundry room,” he stated just as bluntly, “I was under the assumption that you were open to more.” he shifted more comfortably in the seat, facing her more squarely. “Which is what I wanted to talk to you about.”

“You do want to have sex with me, don’t you?” she had gathered her courage, forging ahead.

The man hesitated visibly, then tackled the problem head on. “Yes, I do. Very much.” his eyes held hers easily.

“Don’t typical couples have sex on the third date?” She hid her trembling fingers from sight, her façade of sophistication wearing thin under the constant scrutiny he offered.

“I... suppose so.” he allowed.

“Then why haven’t we?” she blurted.

“I didn’t want you to feel rushed.” he told the truth, finding her candor refreshing.

“Well, I don’t feel that.” The woman beamed her relief, crawling across the seat, sitting in his lap.

Red stiffened slightly, the heat emanating from her center, feeling deliciously arousing on his instantly stiffening shaft. It didn’t help in the least that the woman was squirming excitedly about, eager to share her point of view.

“I would very much like to have sex with you.” Liz was so happy to finally say the words out loud, to share them with the man.

She tightened her thigh around his leg, rubbing intimately into his zipper. Red quickly caught the small curve of her ass, stilling her movement before he lost his focus completely.

“Just to be clear, you are ready to make love...” the man got things back on track, he hoped, clarifying his original intent, “to be completely committed to one another?”

“I am.” She replied quietly. “I would love to do more... be more.”

“How much more Elizabeth.” his tone was semi-stern as was his gaze.

“I don’t understand.” she frowned slightly.

“So I’m understood, without question,” he reached, lifting her left hand into view, “I want this...” he held up her finger, the diamond gleaming in the low light, “at some point. With you.”

Liz’s mouth fell agape, her eyes widening with shock.

“I want to make a life with you Elizabeth.” he continued. “I want you to belong to me. In every way possible.” he was more than firm on the matter. “If you don’t have that end goal in sight, or aren’t at least open to it...” he swallowed heavily, “I don’t think I can do this.”

Liz was stunned.

She hadn’t expected this, at all.

He laced his fingers through hers, pleased to feel her squeeze his hand in return, if nothing else.

“I want to be that one person you turn to, Lizzy.” he explained. “I would love more than anything in the world to be your friend, confidant, lover... eventually... your husband.”

He fell silent, just as she had been over the last few minutes, feeling his heart hammer harder in his chest each minute that passed and she remained that way.

But judging by her expression, she hadn’t expected this revelation, at all. She had a lot to process, so he gave her that time.

Her career, what she’d worked for, was in jeopardy. He wasn’t what she dreamed of, he was sure, when she thought of her future lover or dare he say it, husband. She was younger than he. She might be thinking of having a family one day, could he provide her with that.

Her very way of life could turn upside down, just because of any decision cast this night.

And he knew it.

And after Tom, would she want to get involved permanently with... another criminal. And one as notorious as Red Reddington.

Fuck...

He hadn’t quite taken that into consideration, because he knew why he was in this predicament.

She didn’t.

To have an affair with him was one thing. They could keep it low key.

But what he wanted. Commitment.

She’d have to take a huge leap of faith to get involved with him. And that was a fate, he wouldn’t wish on anyone.
“Okay...” she inclined her head almost regally.

Red raised his eyes, locking on to hers. “Okay... what?” he was totally lost after such a long break.

“I would like to work towards the same goals.” Liz confirmed her feelings on the matter.

God... his fingers curved tightly into the steering wheel, his knuckles white from the exertion.

She had actually fucking said it.

“If you’re still offering?” she looked uncertain for a moment, wondering if he had second thoughts. She had been quiet for so long, maybe he had...

“Most assuredly.” he confirmed. “Are you certain Elizabeth?” he questioned her rationale. “I know you must have some reservations.”

“If you’re referring to my work or Tom.” she hesitated, sensing, “I’m not going to explain this very well without it sounding—”

“Just say it, Elizabeth. I’ll follow along well enough.” he hastened her words.

“First and foremost,” she began, “I know Tom was probably one of the first things you had come to mind. That I wouldn’t want to get involved with you because of him.”

“Yes,” he admitted as much.

“Big difference between you two.” she had come to realize. “I know that even if you don’t think I do.”

“As for work,” she twisted her mouth slightly aggravated, “I’ll just tell everyone to mind their own damned business.” she said quietly. “How about what I want? And that is, quite frankly... you.”

She placed her finger to his lips to halt his intended rebuttal. “A career is a wonderful thing, but it doesn’t keep me warm at night, it doesn’t hold me, kiss me or make love to me.” she whispered.

“But you can...”

“Yes Elizabeth, I can.” he replied just as quietly.

“Then give me those things.” she leaned towards him provocatively. “A career lasts a short while, but what you’re offering...” she brushed her lips against his, “can last a lifetime.”

Red cupped her face, finally seeing the truth in her eyes.

Elizabeth wanted this, just as much as he did.

He softly kissed her, letting what she just said, settle in his mind.

He pulled back, staring at the beautiful blues eyes, then nodded minutely, his decision cast.

Running his hand along the small curve of her ass, he reached around her, starting the car.

The woman frowned critically as the man helped her slide back over into her seat, “Where are we going?” she was more than vexed. Silas had promised this would work.

Red backed out of their makeshift parking space, heading for their original destination.
“Somewhere private.” he stated, reaching over, taking her hand.

Chapter End Notes

Beta convinced me to go ahead and post, since it's a pretty long chapter. She'll be finishing off ch 65 while I'm in surgery. She's printed it off to make corrections and will type it when we get back. We hope we can get it all finished by Thursday/Friday.

Oh, and in case you were wondering, why orange roses?

They not only signify the beginning of a new journey these two are embarking upon.

They also signify Red’s desire and passion for Elizabeth.
At Last...

Chapter Notes

I actually had the working title listed as 'Lets Get It On' and even listened to the song (Marvin Gaye) quite a bit as we wrote this.

But I thought, 'At Last', was so fitting a title.

Don't you think?

May 4

Red Reddington’s thumb cupped Elizabeth Keen’s knee in an agonizingly slow caress, his fingers ever so gently soothing a searing path over the already sensitive skin.

He kept his eyes on the road they traveled, easing the expensive vehicle along the ever darkening lane.

At one stage, the flimsy material of her dress was eased high up Liz’s thigh by warm, confident strokes of the man’s questing exploration.

Elizabeth fought her instinct but felt her legs part involuntarily in response to the touch of those probing fingers.

Red skimmed the silky nylons, finally finding rich, heated flesh just above the thigh-high scalloped lace border.

He rested his hand on the toned area, allowing his fingers to lay quietly for a goodly spell, already feeling the heat emanating from the scented valley he so longed to approach.

They rounded a bend, white cottonwood trees filled with blooms, shown by the powerful beams of the headlights, loomed just ahead.

Elizabeth clutched the door handle for dear life as those thick digits lightly caressed the inside of her leg, refusing to move one inch to the right or left. They stayed stationary, perfectly still.

Red deliberately baited the woman, refusing any further advances, hoping it might increase the pleasure of the moment for her.

He knew the denial was making him climb the fucking walls. His dick already swollen and aching, truth told, for what he knew awaited him.

He withdrew his touch completely, fighting the urge to simply pull the car over under the fast approaching spreading oak tree which graced the lane on which they traveled, and...fuck the woman raw.

Elizabeth had literally gasped at the totally unexpected move on the man’s part, the cold air hitting the steamy alcove with his abrupt withdrawal, feeling like a dash of cold water in her face.
Red slid the car to a halt, making his way out and around the latter, his hands grasping Liz’s in a no nonsense grip as he tugged her up and out of the low seat. He forced her back to the front of the auto, his lips having descended with ferocious intensity.

Disoriented, the young woman tried to find her bearings, pushing the intoxicating scent of his cologne aside as best she could with him so intimately pressed against her.

“Allone...” The sensual tone cascaded over her senses. His breath, which held a hint of the sweet wine of which they had partaken earlier in the evening, wafted across her cheek as he nuzzled her lovingly. “...At last.”

Tease him!

Red upped his game, spreading both arms out, enclosing the slight body on either side as he leaned on the still warm hood, easing even closer to his prey.

Liz eased back, finding support, the slick paint of the car something familiar under her finger tips, finally.

She seized the opportunity, gathering her wits enough to place a gentle palm against his strategic maneuvers.

Red’s mouth caught her lips, parting the full pout with practiced expertise, entirely ignoring her feeble attempt to waylay his intentions.

Elizabeth fought back determinedly, breaking the impassioned kiss, replacing it with a more sedate series of gentle, probing ones, which traveled his cheek and jaw line until she was able to nuzzle his ear enticingly.

Her soft breath heightened Red’s awareness of the woman. Every inch of his skin suddenly burning with unadulterated need for her.

He threaded his fingers through her hair, bunching his fist in the silken mass, tugging at the dark strands.

Liz’s sharp inhalation of breath for the slightly rough handling, delighted Red. A sudden wave of shivers coursed down the woman’s spine.

Red’s lips ran over the fragrant skin, just grazing the delicate line of her throat. He caught the lobe of her ear, having pushed aside the sparkling diamond earring she wore, his teeth nipping provocatively.

The man’s tongue flicked the curve at the base of her neck, as he suckled, marking her pale skin. The pink muscle flicked out with warm healing to soothe the already darkening spot of undeniable affection.

Liz’s body tried to assimilate the intensity displayed.

Her nipples tightened painfully when Red repeated his assault on the other side of her throat. He could feel the tiny imprints through the soft cotton of his shirt.

Liz hid her flushed cheeks, seeking the sanctuary of the man’s neck, breathing in the alluring scent, a heady mix of crisp cologne and fresh, clean male.

The man’s response to her was more than interesting. Red’s breathing had heighted considerably, his touch not so gentle any longer but boldly inventive as it moved over the plains and curves of her body.

Searching for her mouth yet again, the man met further resistance.

Which he found, he damn well liked.

Her hazy eyes stared back at him, the lust in them heavy. Her tongue flicked against her dark ruby lips, leaving them shimmering softly in the dim moonlight.

“Are your lips...down there...” He motioned minutely, his gaze holding hers masterfully, “as fucking beautiful as these?” His finger traced the top curve of the luscious mouth possessively.

His tone was raw and edgy.

Liz titled her head slightly, the tip of her tongue flicking the end of the thick appendage, the blue eyes softening for the man.

Red’s gaze fell instantly, filling with unbridled lust for her efforts on his behalf.

“You’ve seen them.” She reminded boldly.

“Only in fucking shadows!” He growled, a situation he planned to rectify, lifting off her abruptly.

Elizabeth was stunned by the move, but followed docilely, finding herself seconds later, deposited firmly back in her seat as Red sped down the lane which abruptly ended around a gentle curve in the road.

A sprawling one story home lay before them, spread out over a gentle rolling acreage. The woman was still reeling from the interrupted episode of before, not really taking in any of her surroundings at present.

Red slammed the car door hard, his frustration taken out on the object. “My purse.” she hastily grabbed the bag before being literally dragged from the car.

He led her up the dimly lit pathway to the porch. The sensor on the lights activated, as they approached. Red released her hand long enough to unlock the door.

Liz glanced around the darkened landscape nervously, rubbing her bare arms, not so much out of the chill of the night, as expectation of what was to come.

Red closed the door behind him, throwing the lock with a finality. He set the alarm, then pulled his phone free, powering it down.

Her mouth fell agape slightly as she watched him fling the phone to the table. She stared at the object as if it were an alien thing, the wide eyes transferred to the man in much the same fashion.

She lifted her gaze to his face which transmitted his intentions clearly. She instantly knew what was going to happen, without doubt, feeling her body respond accordingly. Her nipples hardened in anticipation.

Red stepped the few feet separating them, his hands reaching out. He pushed her into a convenient wall, allowing her to feel his ardor. The man’s large hand pulled up on her dress, palming her bottom as he dragged her against him, kissing her zealously.
Oh, so this is what Silas meant... Red had never acted like this with her before. She was enjoying the hell out of the man’s mood.

Liz tried to remember all the large guard had said but her mind was completely preoccupied by other matters suddenly.

Red’s hand slipped down the back of her panties, the touch electrifying. Liz’s hand swiftly reached behind her, but Red shook off her minimal efforts as he slid over the creamy flesh in a rather territorial fashion, the light eyes mellow and focused on the pretty face.

“Don’t think I don’t know what’s going on here, Elizabeth.” His tone, while almost conversational except for the definite edge behind it’s velvet timbre, lulled Liz into a sense of false security.

“Well, I should hope you do.” She strived to be as sophisticated and stylish as he but his palm was burning an imprint on her ass cheek, one that caused her nerves to flutter incandescently. “You’ve done it enough times, right?”

“Someone...” He ignored her completely, continuing his interrupted thought pattern, “has advised you on how to react when with me on this auspicious occasion, which is in a manner totally alien to your normal mode of behavior... I think we can both agree to that, yes?”

“Can we?” Liz moved her hand, her fingers inching over enticingly, one tapered nail ‘auspiciously’ running the left ridge of his hardened erection.

Red’s body jerked visibly, his breath sharply exhaled at the woman’s antics, his cock pulsating longingly even as it elongated once again to it’s furthest abilities.

“I’m just...” The woman innocently felt the evidence of his arousal, warming to her task, “trying to please you.” The slender shoulders shrugged any concern away, as she flattened her palm over the entire length of the man. Which was impressive in itself, but his girth intrigued her completely. It sparked her imagination to wild flights of fantasy.

So much so, she found the courage needed to wiggle out of her present situation, away from the man’s damnable influence and his skillful hands.

Liz flattened her palms on the front of the dark, expensive slacks as she gracefully slid... downward.

Red quickly put an abrupt halt to any further shenanigans, realizing her intent.

But he was too late.

Elizabeth’s mouth covered the straining front of his attire. The warm moisture of those sweet lips, her hot breath, infiltrated the fabric, surrounding his penis in a loving embrace.

Red’s fingers tightened almost painfully on Liz’s upper arms, an inarticulate sound escaping his throat.

He closed his eyes as a wave of sheer ecstasy washed through his body but the man fought the delirium descending, his mind setting rigidly.

“Like fucking hell!” He lifted the slight body effortlessly, straining his shoulder wound in the process, all of which he dismissed as an afterthought. He had more important matters to which he must attend.

“I need my prospective.” She was summarily informed. “So unless you want me to come in that sweet little mouth after the first ‘blow,’” He pulled no punches in his attempt to convey the urgency of the matter before them, “you’ll settle the hell down and allow me to get this thing right for a change.”

“What about me?” She had to question, not liking his tone one bit, never having heard it directed toward herself before. “You’re always getting it ‘right’...I would like a chance...”

The blue eyes held just the correct amount of petulant annoyance, twisting him inside out, truth told. There was no damned way she would ever know the effect she was having on him if he had anything to say in the matter, however.

This was not going the way Red had envisioned. He would have to alter his mode of communication.

“You ever use...devices, Elizabeth?” Red could out maneuver anyone on the Planet. If he couldn’t divert this little she-demon, he wasn’t worth the reputation awarded him.

The languid eyes lifted to his expectant inquiry.

Liz didn’t know exactly where the man was going with that one but she did realize she was in some sort of negotiations. For a moment, she felt out of her depth but she wasn’t about to back down before this man.

“...Like..IPods?” She purposely misunderstood, thoroughly enjoying the ‘give and take’ of this session even though she sensed she might be out of her depth.

“No.” The man was not fooled in the least. She wanted to play ‘hard ball’? He could do that.

He still held her arms even though his hands had lessened their hold a bit. Which forced her into a ‘face to face’ confrontation.

“Devices, as in...vibrators, sexual toys.” His eyes deepened considerably at the turn of the conversation. “You know, the ones that issue forth that lovely warm cream if you push the right buttons.”

Liz determined not to react to the lovely images he conjured, keeping her facial expressions unreadable, much as Red often did.

“I have...indulged on occasion, I suppose.” She lifted innocent brows. “Is there a reason you...”

“Oh, I know you...indulge.” The sensual undertone and his knowing look was almost her undoing. “I’ve seen the objects in your overnight bag.”

“You...wh...”

He failed to mention, the invasion of privacy had been entirely innocent on his part. He had been in the closet one day searching for something she required and happen to glance down at the opened bag. The objects were clearly visible care anyone glance, which he had.

“Not to mention the night you got off directly before I called you on my way back from Italy.”

She flushed slightly. “...What if I did?” She fought back. “I’m a grown woman!”

His eyes raked her almost insolently. “You most certainly are that.” He could not allow himself to concentrate on that right now, however.
“The point being,” he continued, unfazed by her supposed indignation, “I took the liberty of purchasing a select few,” He jerked his head to indicate. “They are awaiting your pleasure in the night stand by the bed.”

Liz glanced through the darkened rooms, the light from the French doors illuminating the area enough that she could see the opened doorway of the room he had indicated.

A large four-poster bed with a comfortable looking top cover which appeared invitingly soft, welcomed any would-be visitor.

She could even see the mahogany night stand to the left of the gigantic structure.

“Did you think you would need the assistance?” The woman countered easily this time.

Red blinked, not shocked, but certainly...something by the retort. “The point I am trying to mak...” He suddenly found himself on the defensive.

Red’s tone caught her attention. “Don’t use that patient tone with me.” She advised.

“Elizabeth, if you will only stop and react to me as you truly wish to do,” he tried reason. “No matter what Silas told you,” he ran his hands gently down her arms. “And, no... he didn’t steer you wrong. I do enjoy a challenge, I do... truly but..”

He sought the correct way to phrase it. “But, you were already a challenge. You didn’t have to alter one thing about yourself.” He smiled down at her. “You had me at ‘It’s my first day... nothing special about me.” He remembered verbatim.

Elizabeth’s memory was suitably jogged. She remained silent, uncertain what feelings he was evoking or what ones he wished to.

“Silas aside..” Liz painted her point of view. “I don’t see anything wrong with what happened between us tonight.”

“I never said anything was wrong.” He shook his head stoutly in denial of her words.

“Well, what are you saying?” She asked plaintively. “I did react as I wanted to for once, truly... wanted to.” She spread her hands. “I have needs that I would like to think, I can fulfill with you.” she sighed morosely. “Red, I know you may have had expectations, how you wanted this thing to unfold, but it doesn’t have to be perfect, just as long as it happens.”

“I wanted this night to be between just you and me and I didn’t...” He faltered slightly, “I didn’t want Francis or Silas or ...anyone to interfere with the natural connection we might establish.” He had stated it incorrectly, trying again. “I wasn’t sure if you were doing what came naturally or maybe Silas’ influence...”

“That was me.” He was assured, the blue eyes boring into his, a truthfulness contained within. “I thought about what Silas had said and it gave me the strength to... actually do some of the things...” She hesitated and then wondered why she was, forging ahead. “I fantasize about.”

“You fantasize about me?” He was shocked by the revelation.

“I’m probably just one in a major league of a lot of other women, but yes.”

“I don’t know of any such group, but if they exist, I, personally am invested in only one.” His look told her just who was on top of that list.
Elizabeth lowered her eyes, feeling suddenly elated.

“Baby, what are we fighting about?” He asked wearily.

Liz took heart that he was using her favorite endearment once again. He had said it so offhandedly that it seemed natural coming from his lips.

“I have wanted you so badly now for what seems an eternity...we have the time to ourselves... we have the whole fucking night.” He shook his head at the absurdity of it all. “You turn me on just by ‘being’.”

Liz lifted watery eyes.

“You are the most desirable, sexy...funny,” he smiled finally, “amazing woman I have ever encountered.”

“I hate you when you make me cry.” She sniffed slightly, her arms opening as she rushed into his waiting ones.

Warm lips met and clung together, the tip of Red’s tongue easing past Liz’s unresisting one, the sensual dance beginning.

His hands searched every curve of the voluptuous form, eager in their exploration. He had planned a slow build-up, a strategically sound advancement worthy of any General down through the Ages, leading a note-worthy charge.

All those carefully conceived thoughts went out the window as he savored the feel of the woman in his arms. All warm and giving and loving.

She was denying him nothing. But he found himself wanting more and more. This was turning into one of the most erotic kisses he had ever participated in. Red’s stomach tightened pleasantly, his shaft plumping into hard rigidity of it’s own accord.

She mewed quietly, the hard shaft poking into her belly, an undeniable incentive for the woman to respond in kind.

Liz tip-toed, wrapping her arms around his broad shoulders, getting lost in the passionate kiss.

Nothing was moving fast enough for the man now. He broke the kiss but not the moment to utter, “What about, taking this..” he looked over his shoulder, “in there... but Elizabeth,” he added because he needed the assurance, “alone, right?” His eyes told her a wealth of things he could not verbalize at this moment. “Just you... and me.”

The woman didn’t give a shit where or how, but she wasn’t adverse to ‘comfort’ by any means.

She nodded slowly in reply. “...Whatever you want, Red.”

His mouth reconnected with her wanton lips, as they blindly stumbled down the darkened corridor. Will and sheer determination guided their journey and in seconds, they had finally arrived at their destination.

Red flicked the switch, bathing the room in a soft light then kicked at the door, his foot slamming it closed behind him. Elizabeth’s hot breath against his cheek fanned the ever growing need inside his groin. His breathing was already labored and shallow. He didn’t give a shit.
He reached behind him blindly for he had felt the edge of the bed hit his calf muscles, grabbing the coverlet, tossing it plus several throw pillows to the floor.

He lifted the woman in his arms, his shoulder burning like fire but it didn’t match the one in his mind.

Elizabeth gasped softly. “What the hell, Red.” She squirmed slightly, grimacing for the man. “You’ll open your..”

“Not now, baby.” He waylaid her fears. “Work with me here.”

She allowed him to lay her into the lush sheets, welcoming his weight when he pressed intimately down on her more slender form. He shoved the short dress out of his way, revealing the lace panties and the thigh-high stockings to his penetrating gaze.

He deliberately raked his straining zipper along her panty covered slit, producing a steamy release of wetness from her core. The woman tried to move from the incessant overload of sensations because the more his rigid erection stroked her the more it pushed her closer to orgasm.

Red slid a hand along her leg, lifting her knee against his side. He removed her shoe, tossing it carelessly as he felt her other leg wrap around his back. She grabbed the other, before she too, threw it aside.

Her tiny feet rubbed against his thighs. He kicked at his own shoes, allowing them to fall in a loud thud on the floor.

He ran his large palm along the zipper of her dress, grasping the warm metal in his fingers. The sound of the catch releasing, mingled with her moan, both combined in one long drawn out sound which made his cock stir.

His warm palm stroked her overly sensitized back inside the fabric of the dress, her lithe body withering under his endeavors. Grasping the shoulder of her dress, he slowly and gently revealed the lovely flesh to his view, the cool air teasing her warm skin as she was bared to him.

As he pulled her dress down to her waist, he arose, pulling his jacket off his broad shoulders, tossing it carelessly aside. It landed on the corner of the bed unnoticed. He rid himself of his tie, his eyes never having left the woman’s beautiful form. The shirt dropped from his fingers unto the floor.

Laying back down against her, Red couldn’t help but focus on how warm and cushioned her semi bared breasts felt against his chest. The full and taut peaks pushed against the soft hair found there.

His hands joined in her effort to push the skirt down the shapely legs. Liz kicked it off, leaving her in lacy lingerie and stockings only.

Red found the sight erotic as hell.

“You are so damned beautiful.”

Liz’s hands restlessly explored his body, her eyes taking in the stocky build. He had a defined chest, which was covered in a fine mist of blonde hair, somehow heightening his virility. She noticed the tattoos gracing his biceps. There was nothing more dangerous than a boy with charm.

The woman held her smile, the lyrics absolutely fitting the moment to her way of thinking.

He had situated himself between her legs and she felt open and vulnerable to him.
She could feel his eyes, a soft flush covering her entire form. She instinctively squirmed a bit trying to find neutral ground. In doing so, she inadvertently moved from his vicinity.

He gripped her hips quickly, dragging her back down, closer than she was before.

“You’re not going anywhere.” he rasped roughly, covering her once again with his body. He pushed her hard into his growing thickness.

She mewled softly as his mouth dominated her own unresisting one. The sound she emitted, echoed in the man’s mind like a beautiful aria he once heard sung by Montserrat Caballé.

He slid his hand down her body, his thumbs brushing the side of her breasts and feminine curves.

“Spread your legs for me.” he whispered silkily against her neck.

Her clit quivered for the masterful command and the woman instinctively tightened her knees against the indentation of his waist line to stave off the wondrous feelings he evoked inside her body.

“Let me see what’s under that little slip of cloth, Elizabeth.” he stated directly into her parted mouth, having misunderstood the action.

“Oh, you’re so masterful.” the woman pushed gently on his injured shoulder as the man winced away from her touch. She used the momentum to continue her attempt to arise.

Seconds later, she had positioned herself astride the man who had followed her lead instinctively, laying back into the mattress.

“Am I hurting you?” she asked breathlessly, looking down into those hypnotic eyes.

“You will tell me if–”

“Right now, I would give you the codes to the Ballistic Missiles in China if you asked...” he gasped, entranced on the rocking motion of her hips as they brushed against his palms which tightened systematically against the silky flesh.

He watched her movements for a moment, the flame in his eyes deepening. He reached, popping the catch on her bra. The full mounds strained against the now gaping fabric.

Elizabeth placed her hands just so, holding the heavy cups together, her look a seductive one.

“I would give quite a bit to see...” he motioned accordingly to the work of art before him, “I mean, if you are strapped for cash or–”

The witty retort turned to ashes in his mouth as Liz gripped the straps, slowly easing the lace down her arms, watching Red’s reaction as she bared herself to him.

One simple look, and her breasts swelled and tightened under his lascivious gaze.

She didn’t think she had ever felt this beautiful, this empowered before, in her entire life.

The man stared openly, completely captivated by her gorgeous breasts.
“My God,” his head shook minutely, the man unable to take his eyes off the woman. Nor could he prevent himself from touching the alabaster flesh. His hand reaching out, his fingers tracing the supple curve of one breast.

“You are like a Grecian Goddess.” He raised his head, nuzzling the full mound, his lips teasing the tight peak tentatively. He wrapped lips and tongue hungrily around the rosy tip of her breast.

The puckered flesh felt amazing under his tongue’s languid strokes. He suckled her and the woman pressed closer, filling his mouth with the succulent flesh. The sounds she was making... lustful, arousing, passionate sounds, enchanted the man.

He never thought he would be privileged to hear his name being said like that.

Lizzy liked her nipples suckled. Which was fantastic, because he loved them in his mouth. She tasted so sweet, smelled so fresh. Her skin was like silk under his roughened tongue.

He could stand the tension no longer, artfully dislodging the young woman, delegating her to a position he preferred for the moment.

Running a hand up her spine and palming her tiny ass, he rolled her beneath him.

He leaned, placing a small kiss directly over her belly button, his tongue flicking once into the tiny indentation. The man used the subterfuge to divert attention as his fingers caught the edge of the lacy strap of panties.

He eased the fabric down the shapely hips, slightly amused as the woman lifted to helpfully assist in their removal. He kissed a path down her legs, following the route taken until he flicked the offending clothing off her ankles.

Red’s eyes ran the length of the thigh high nylons meeting her naked thighs, his finger running beneath one lacy edge.

“These are amazingly sensual, but...” his eyes sought hers, “I want to feel you.”

Liz lifted her own hand, stroking his erection boldly through the cloth of his slacks. “And this is very... evocative,” she lifted a sensual stare, “but I want to feel... you.” she countered.

A slow smile spread across the man’s face. “You do, huh?” He was more than pleased, catching her thigh highs with deft fingers, pulling them agonizingly slow from her shapely legs. “Well, let’s see what we can do to honor my lady’s wishes.”

He reached between them, pulling at the leather of his belt, watching the woman as the latch clinked lightly to signify the completion of the act. Liz’s brow puckered, her breathing increasing at the sound... the implication of which, heightened her excitement and quite frankly, his.

This wasn’t playing out exactly how he planned it. There wasn’t romantic music, flowers or candle light.

But damn, they were both so ready.

He was so fucking hard he could drive nails with is cock. And she so wet, he could feel it through his slacks.

He needed to fuck her so badly.
To claim what was rightfully his.

Red ripped the belt from it’s loops, snarling harshly when he could not get the button on his pants undone quickly enough. For the first time in as long as he could remember, his fingers would not cooperate.

He finally released the damned thing, shoving at his pant waist, dropping them around his thighs simultaneously reaching into the night stand, fumbling in the drawer.

A growl worked it’s way out of his throat, as he hung his head in open dejection.

At the sound of pure frustration, Liz asked the proverbial question.

“What’s wrong?” she looked from the man to his dilemma.

“I’ve never brought anyone here...” he rasped the confession. “I didn’t bring anything.” he gritted through his teeth.

He had forgotten in his eagerness to get between her beautiful thighs... that he had never had female companionship in residence and hadn’t thought to stop by a store to gather supplies...

And now, it was biting him in the fucking ass!

She pushed at his chest, scrambling up.

“Son of a fucking bitch!” the man snarled angrily at his own fucking stupidity, hitting the mattress with his fist as hard as he could, falling face first into the pillow, growling his aggravation.

“I have some!” Liz turned over quickly, bending face down over the side of the bed, her pert bottom, raising in the air.

“What?” Red raised his head out of the pillow, finding that gorgeous ass waving around, showing him her assets in all her glory. “God damn...” The man’s mouth fell agape at the succulent sight. His nerve endings suddenly alive and straining.

“I brought some with me.” Liz leaned into her forearms, “Because I did want and expect... hoped this would happen.” She smiled happily back at him. “Honestly, Red. You bought sex toys, but not condoms.” she tsked playfully.

She snatched her purse off the floor, literally spilling the contents on the bed up by their pillows.

Red stared raptly at the couple dozen condoms laying scattered haphazardly on the sheets, and then to the totally nude woman who was carefully placing her purse on the opposite night stand, her back still turned.

“Lizzy, I fucking love you.”

She giggled at the proclamation, totally missing Red’s face as he realized what he’d just said... out loud.

The woman moaned as she felt the man lean in over her, brushing his chest against her back as his hand cupped her breast. She closed her eyes when his calloused fingers pulled at her nipple and his hardened length pressed into her backside.

He grunted shakily, his hand petting her soft skin, his fingers dancing between her ass cheeks teasingly.
She jerked at the contact, raising her bottom higher. His fingers touched her swollen lips.

He pushed at his boxers, his heavy erection springing free. He delicately brushed her ass cheeks with the heavy object, teasing her methodically.

Her breathing accelerated.

Red laid over her back, his one hand supporting them both, as the other enfolded her small waist. His muscled thigh moved her legs farther apart, spreading her slowly.

He allowed his erection to slide along her sodden folds. The soft damp muff raked across his cock, making the crown glisten with it’s own moisture.

His hand fell heavily to the bed, landing on hers. He gripped her fingers to steady himself.

He grasped his cock, rubbing the head several passes over the steamy little hole he so coveted.

“I have waited forever to give this to you.” his voice was low and deep, stirring the embers of desire relentlessly. He moved back ever so slightly and the woman felt the chill of his withdrawal and his movement off the bed, her mind screaming in denial.

“But I did not envision making love to you the first time without seeing every nuance on your lovely face...” his voice dropped even lower, “turn around and face me.”

Elizabeth slowly turned, her movements halting all together as she watched the man undress fully. She was enthralled by the slow deliberate movements he exhibited.

She reached out, her fingertips grazing the soft pelt of hair tapering off into his light pubic hair framing his heavy thickness.

The sight was arousing as hell.

Not only was he big. Larger than she was used to, in length and width. The impressive erection weighed down, instead of upwards towards his belly like the men she had been with.

She grasped his warm flesh in her tiny hand, and he pushed into the touch, groaning brokenly.

He was so hot, so hard. His soft skin, the rigidness of his flesh, felt so good. She shook with anticipation, wondering how that heavy weight would feel dragging in and out of her body.

But first, he had to spread her with that cock head that was shimmering with wetness. Red ran his thumb around the engorged crown, the sight making her thighs quiver. His thumb didn’t even begin to cover even half of throbbing bulb.

“Lay the fuck down...” he instructed tightly and at her compliance, his eyes raked her young ripe body possessively. “Show me what I want.”

Liz blushed slightly but was too turned on to play the part of the modest maiden at this point. She slowly complied, opening her legs for him, watching the man’s face religiously, finding him staring darkly down at her.

“Give me that fucking thing.” he pointed to the condoms laying scattered beside her.

She plucked one off the bed, eagerly handing it to him.

Red tore at the package, as she watched him expertly rolling it over his hard length. It molded to his impressive size in seconds.

There was no awkward fumbling or hesitation on his part. She on the other hand, felt her anxiety ratchet up a notch or two.

“I need you so fucking badly.” His voice thrilled her no end as did his brooding stare. “Do you want to make love with me?” he asked tightly, needing to know without doubt, this was what she wanted. Because he was damn well craving it.

“How can you doubt that?” she was appalled.

She needed him to fuck her so badly. She was unable to control her erratic heart or still her chaotic brain.

He stepped once, his weight indenting the bed. She felt his warmth engulf her as his body blanketed her now cool flesh. Laying his erection along her folds, he pressed against her clit, stroking the throbbing flesh. The pleasurable torment was too much for her to assimilate.

Her stomach dipped pleasurably, the high more intense than any thrill she’d experienced before. Each jolt of adrenaline thrummed deliciously in her sex, leaving her feeling swollen and tingling in anticipation of his entrance.

His girth teased her, brushing her thighs. She reached, grasping the underside of her knee, spreading wider for his intrusion.

Red dropped his eyes, hypnotically entranced, as his shaft was embraced between her tight, slick folds. Though he couldn’t feel her as he wished, the sight of the condom, stretched tightly around his erection was enough to stimulate his psyche to new heights.

The visual itself, a reminder he was a breath away from being intimately coupled with Elizabeth Keen.

A connection he had often dreamed of building.

Leaning slightly, he took his cock in his hand, placing the sensitive head directly against the giving lips of the healthy pink pussy which beckoned him forward. He pushed gently, breaching the incredibly tight opening. Her body caught the large bulb, grasping the tip in her heat.

The man issued a heartfelt groan of appreciation, popping the large crown a bit further, sinking another inch into the molten depths.

He dropped his mouth to her breast, suckling her taut nipple as she felt him slowly penetrating her.

She gasped, her eyes closing in ecstasy, as she cried out piteously. The man stilled.

His eyes were full of concern as he studied her face.

“If you stop now, I will finish the job myself.” her expression did not bode well. She pointed meaningfully to the night stand full of the promised toys he had previously offered.

“I would pay to see that,” Red’s mouth quirked slightly. “but not tonight. I finish what I start.” he pushed slightly, the quivering tunnel pulling his senses into it’s succulent depths.

Red’s eyes fluttered shut, the sensation incredibly intense. Her body quivered around him, drawing on the rounded head, pleading for more. Which he more than gladly provided.
Liz’s fingers curled into his shoulders, exhaling shakily as she felt Red’s erection spreading her open. The exhilarating pressure grew the further he slid into her warmth, opening her slowly to his very welcomed invasion.

Oh, God.

They were really doing this.

They were actually making love.

She concentrated on the hardness, the ripples, the thickness of his cock head. She could feel him spreading her wide... taking possession of her and it felt... unbelievable.

Red released a shaky breath, slowly pushing against her as she grasped him tightly, wrapping her arms around his neck, kissing him feverishly the more he ventured forward.

“Jesus...” he groaned, watching his shaft sink deeper and deeper into her welcoming body.

He was going to savor every damned minute of this, he didn’t care how long it fucking took.

He could literally feel her body giving into his, allowing him to take control of her.

It was an overwhelming emotion. One that left him feeling powerful and possessive as shit.

Even wrapped in the thin sheath, the man had never felt anything so wonderful in his life.

He was going to mount her every fucking chance he could, knowing it was a feeling that would never fade.

“This feels phenomenal, baby.” Red praised the woman lavishly in a more than giving frame of mind.

Cupping her face with his hands, he brushed his thumbs against her cheeks, watching her expressions as he entered her body inch by inch, damned glad he had turned the lights on.

It was safe to say, Liz was enjoying this as much as he fucking was. He couldn’t recall the last time he had been with someone so wholly invested in the act they now preformed.

“God, baby. Open for me, please.” He pleaded as she opened her legs wider for him, “Yes...like that.” he moaned as his shaft slid further inside. “Oh, shit...” he cursed vehemently. “Shit...”

The further his mushroomed head spread her, the more she moaned her delight, releasing the sweetest sound he’d ever heard from a woman.

He had missed this, so fucking much.

“Does my cock feel good, baby?” he actually needed the confirmation in this instance.

“Y-Yes...” she moaned breathlessly, her body rippling around him as it tried to accommodate his girth. “Oh, yes...”

“Fuck... you’re so damned tight.” he growled his satisfaction, giving one last push into her body. He strained further, rubbing her clit with his pelvis, snarling as the cushioned walls of her pussy contracted spasmodically, squeezing him tightly in the wet heat in response to his tease.

The realization hit Red head on.
His cock was deep inside Lizzy. He was making love to Lizzy.

Liz tilted her hips, driving him deeper. She could not wait for the large organ to begin the ancient rhythms of lovemaking.

God, this was perfect. Better than she had ever imagined.

The connection between them was heated and growing in intensity. The way she was feeling, this interlude would be over long before either of them expected.

He cupped her face, dropping soft kisses against her lips, watching her face as he drew back slowly, dragging along her swollen clit. The woman’s blue eyes fluttered shut, her body trembling in his arms.

Liz’s face glowed with the ecstasy she was experiencing. Red’s heart rate increased along with the hardness of his erection.

“I like what I’m doing to you.” he cocked his head, watching the proceedings unfold.

Liz wrapped her legs around his back, hooking her feet together, rolling her hips towards him on his down stroke.

“Lizzy...” he gasped, tightening his ass cheeks, increasing the speed of his strokes. His thighs bumped against her silky ones.

Her soft moans and the steady rhythm of their flesh meeting filled the room. Red’s primal grunts equaled, if not surpassed Liz’s melodic sighs.

“D-Deeper.” she breathed the request tremulously.

He pressed his lips against hers, tonguing her mouth open, catching her whimpers of delight, feeling them vibrate along his tongue as he increased his depth.

“That feels so good...” he rasped the realization.

The small hands brazenly cupped Red’s ass, squeezing the tight muscle in time with his thrusts.

The woman’s touch silently encouraged him. Red wrapped an arm behind her knee, pulling it up beside his shoulder, as he dragged his pelvis across her clit repeatedly.

“Oh fuck...” her stomach knotted deliciously.

There was no longer any need for words.

As their arousal increased, the primitive sound of the wet slide of Red’s thick hard shaft filled the woman’s ears. Liz’s impatience grew, as she felt her need increase.

The man changed his angle slightly, bring her closer to the edge of completion.

He dropped his mouth against the swollen peak, suckling her feverishly. In response, she cupped his head, stroking him lovingly, holding him to his excruciatingly pleasurable past time.

He reached out, grasping her hand, threading his fingers with hers. His mouth became an extension of his own. Sharp spikes of gratification shot through his body. He was thoroughly enjoying the woman’s feeble cries of surrender.
“F-Faster.” she begged, her kiss deepening, the pouty mouth drawing him into a world of sensual delights. “F-Fuck... me.”

“Is that what my baby needs?” he crooned softly against her lips. “Because that sure is hell what I want.”

Elizabeth fought for breath, the emotional onslaught the man caused wrecking havoc with her equilibrium.

Tightening his fingers with the more slender ones, he cupped her ass with his free hand, drawing her up into his quickened thrusts, feeling his own orgasm nearing. Her long drawn out breathy moan shivered along the man’s nerve endings, rippling into the very tip of his cock.

Damn... he loved that sound.

Her cries of passion were escalating with each passing second.

Her thighs trembled violently as she worked hard for her release. Soft sounds of distress escaped her throat. He reacted involuntarily to the feminine whimpers, wanting desperately to give her the relief she craved.

“Fuck, baby... he panted shakily, “fucking come, baby.”

Her fingers curled tightly around his, as she tensed, her pussy fluttering wildly.

“Oh...God!” Liz’s body arched with the intensity of her release. Even through the condom, he felt a hot splash of wet warmth encompassing his cock before he pushed it out with a powerful thrust, the thick cream wetting his thighs.

“Holy shit...” he snarled gruffly, enthralled completely by the sight of the beautiful body surrendering itself to the powerful rapture of her orgasm.

“That feels so fucking good.” he gritted as his shaft was massaged by the gratifying waves of her climax. “Don’t stop, baby.”

He sat back on his haunches, grasping her hips as he went. Whipping his pelvis quickly, driving his drenched shaft into her willing body, furthering her along. He watched the gentle bounce of her breasts, the sight pushing him over the top.

Liz gripped the headboard frantically, bouncing hard and fast off his driving thrusts.

Working on instinct the man dropped his fingers against her clit, massaging the peak of her sex with determined strokes.

Liz’s ragged breaths melded with his own. It took only seconds until the woman was once again on the same level of sexual intensity as her lover. Her moans allowing the man to surrender to his baser needs.

He dropped his head back, totally immersed in the turbulent euphoria which staggered his mind, shattering his usual self confident composure.

“Fuck...” a throaty growl issued from his parched throat. His cum exploded into the condom, filling the latex quickly, the friction of his thrusts eased slightly by the hot cream.

He slowed the rhythm, coming down unhurriedly from the incredible high on which he had just been.

Red leaned over Elizabeth, his mouth devouring hers lazily. He felt her arms come about his neckline, as she weakly returned his affection.

His finished the kiss to his satisfaction, searching out those baby blue eyes with their dusky dark lids. He leaned back slightly, cocking his head to one side, holding the mellow stare.

His lips parted in a soft grin, which widened into a throaty chuckle. “Look what we just did...”

The lovely full lips pulled into a reluctant but indulgent smile for his mood. He returned to her embrace, neither wanting to break the spell as yet.

They cuddled close. Red closed his eyes, savoring the contact. Liz nuzzled the crook of his neck, reveling in the masculinity encompassing her protectively.

Minutes passed, and finally the man felt his erection wane. He shifted slowly, only to be stopped by the pressure of her thighs holding him stationary.

“No...” she muttered, cuddling closer to him.

“Houston...” he kissed her lovingly, “we have a problem.” he smiled warmly at his own wit, knowing she would not understand at the moment.

She frowned, tightening her legs around him, wiggling closer still. “Stay...”

He smiled affectionately, his mouth grazing hers seductively, as he reached between their still intertwined bodies. In doing so, the back of his hand inadvertently brushed against her clit. The woman clenched involuntarily, moaning softly.

“Lizzy, don’t fucking move.” he quickly ran his finger along his shaft, touching the top of the condom. He pushed up to his elbow, unable to accomplish the task he needed.

“Son of a bitch.” he grunted as he slid free of her quickly.

“What’s wrong.” she lifted to her elbows as well, his tone alerting her.

“The condom slipped.” he replied without hesitation, spreading her legs wider, gently slipping his fingers inside her vagina.

She felt Red’s thick fingers delving deep inside, closing her eyes to the sensation. It felt so good.

“Baby, you have to relax.” he urged, his hand pushing further into her wet flesh.

“Can you get it?” she asked breathlessly, inhaling sharply as his knuckles brushed her swollen lips.

“Yes.” he replied, pulling the object free. “Not that it does any good.” he grimaced, holding up the spent condom.

The woman stared at the deflated condom, her mind stagnating.

“Lizzy, I’m clean.” Red stressed quickly.
“Huh?” she shifted her gaze to the troubled one.

“I’m tested monthly.” he explained. “You looked...”

“I wasn’t... I’m not worried.” she replied quickly. “But thank you for telling me.”

“When’s your period, baby?” he asked, suddenly drawing a blank on what day it was.

“Oh...” she glanced about aimlessly, “in a couple days, isn’t it?”

“There is no way in hell I could do math at this moment.” He confessed. “Let alone remember what day it is.”

She chuckled quietly at his honesty, then giggled. “You don’t want me to have your baby?” It was her turn to quip. “The song assured me you did.”

The man fell silent instantly. Liz sought him out, hoping she had said nothing to offend or transgress his feelings.

“I think the better question is,” his eyes bore into hers as the man leaned in close, his face hovering very near, “do you want to have my baby?”

She knew that was a loaded question. He was asking, if she’d had any further thoughts on exactly how far their relationship might progress. Would they get to a moment when having a child seemed a natural progression to make, as a couple.

She was shocked to realize, just how exciting such a thought was.

But more importantly, right now, he was asking... if she had any regrets.

She reached a tentative hand out, threading her fingers through his chest hair. “I’m not opposed to the idea...” she replied evenly, her eyes his earnestly, “if you aren’t.”

His eyes were carefully guarded.

He was older. He had already had a child. Maybe he wasn’t interested in such things any longer?

But he answered her questions in the next breath by capturing her lips in a passionately searing kiss.

“I’m happy to hear that it’s open for discussion.” he replied, his voice thick with emotion.

Just for a split second, Liz wondered what it would be like to be with the man protection free. To feel that hard, hot shaft moving freely inside her. She flushed slightly.

The man chuckled lowly. “What’s that for.” he teased.

She smiled, shaking her head. “You don’t have to know everything, Red Reddington.” she scolded.

He nodded agreeably, shifting more comfortably against her. “Well, I do know one thing,” he advised readily, his eyes dropping to the bare breasts, “laying here next to you,” his gaze traveled the naked form appreciatively, “my rocket boosters have reactivated.” he lifted a somber gaze. “So if you are agreeable, we can resume docking procedures anytime in the near future.”

She giggled retroactively, her mood suddenly high. “I can’t believe that turned me on.” the man chuckled his amusement into her neckline, nuzzling the soft skin.
Liz moved her body, her abdomen melding to his. She felt the gush of his fluid wet her thighs. It eased out of her opening, enthralling the woman.

Red Reddington’s cream was inside her. She wondered if any other woman besides his wife could claim such an achievement.

Red shifted artfully, his arms about the small waist. Liz squealed, not having expected the move, finding herself soundly deposited across the muscular thighs.

She looked down to Red’s smug features, the man’s eyes dancing devilishly.

“I thought, on this outing...” he held his smile with difficulty, “you could do most of the work.” his gaze heated as he raked her lovely breasts, his hands cupping the heavy mounds experimentally. “I’m easy, so it shouldn’t be too difficult a task.”

The woman’s eyes rested on his already engorged penis, her interest already caught and held.

“And if I don’t want to?” she flirted openly.

“Humor me.” his finger lightly traced the outline of her clit. The confident stare took her breath away.

“Do you always get your way?” she was curious.

“I don’t know,” his thumb joined his fingers in their sensual dance over her overly sensitive flesh, “do I?”

Out of nowhere, he produced a condom. He waited patiently for her decision.

Liz rolled her eyes, reaching for the protection, then leaned over, her lips parting his smirking ones seductively. The man gave himself up to the churning emotions she could evoke.

Red had a sinking feeling he had won the battle, true... but he just might just lose the fucking war.

The feeling became more prevalent as he watched Liz slowly unroll the condom over his turgid dick.
I would like to thank you all for your patience and understanding, and most importantly, your personal messages to me during my recovery from surgery.

The kind words, well wishes and hopes for a speedy recovery really meant more to me than I can express!

Beta and I feel terrible that we haven’t been able to get as many chapters up as we had wished during TBL hiatus, but with things calming down now, I can only hope that Beta and I get back on track and start pumping out the chapters as we did before.

Thank you again for being such a wonderful support team. You truly made this easier to get through.

May 5

Red awakened, finding himself wrapped around Elizabeth’s naked form, her breast cradled warmly in his hand.

Tightening his embrace, he pulled the woman closer, smiling softly as he recalled the previous evenings activities.

Her soft perfume filled his head with visions that stirred his nether regions. He could not believe how erotic the woman had behaved in their lovemaking session.

He had allowed her to take the reigns at one point, laying back, watching raptly as she used him for her own gratification.

His thumb lazily eased over the coarse nipple he fondled, remembering the supple breasts as they had bounced against his hands. They had felt so full and heavy, a very sensual experience indeed.

It had been a hell of a show.

He hadn’t left the cradle of her thighs until they finally reached the point of exhaustion. Not that he had wanted to, even then.

She was addictive as hell. The whole evening had been raw, sultry and a release of pent up desire. The culmination of weeks of foreplay reaching its maximum peak, leaving them both sweaty, breathless and spent.

Laying in her arms afterwards, the anticipation of taking her again, making her come, made his dick fill fast and hard.

She was so damned beautiful to him. Her skin so soft, her breasts so full and voluptuous and that treasure between her legs was not only captivating...
But in his opinion, his territory now.

He may have not marked her in his preferred method, but that time would come. He could afford to be patient now.

After each session of lovemaking, one would think he would have his fill. But then she would move a certain way, or a certain part of her anatomy would touch his, and the cycle would begin again.

She had told him at one point, she could feel how hot he felt inside her.

Usually Red was not a silent lover, quick to praise or encourage at the slightest provocation. With Elizabeth, he often found himself at a loss for the proper words to describe the emotions she could stir inside him.

The man hoped he made his feelings manifest in his actions.

He wasn’t ready to share her with the rest of the world as yet, that much he could verbalize. He hoped when he did, she would feel the same.

Red moved slightly, gaining a better perspective. He watched Elizabeth sleep.

He vowed he would allow her to rest, but the sight of her partially naked form, for the covers had fallen slightly askew... waylaid all his good intentions.

His hand slid down her tummy, his fingers playing over the soft tuft of pubic hair he so loved to play in.

The woman stirred, turning toward him, her legs parting slightly. Red took the opportunity presented. He rubbed her little clit, gently awakening her passion. Elizabeth arched like a graceful feline, a secretive smile playing about that pouty mouth.

Her hand covered his, encouraging his ministrations.

“Best date ever...” she whispered roughly, the blue eyes opening sleepily, her body suddenly attuned to the man’s every demand.

She didn’t think anyone had ever awakened her in such a manner before. In this instance, she hadn’t minded the wake up call one bit. This was much more pleasant than her asshole ex-husband’s method of throwing open the curtains and letting the dog run all over her.

Red chuckled, dropping a kiss to her neck before grudgingly removing his hand from it’s exquisitely warm nest.

“Where are you going?” she pouted, noticing the man’s very impressive erection, as he rolled out of bed.

“Nature calls.” Red replied honestly, walking around the corner of the bed, only to stop in his tracks. She lay there, partially covered, looking exactly like an Edgar Degas painting.

She was wet, sated and naked.

In his bed.

It was all he could do, not to retrace his steps, to follow his instincts and spend the next few hours hopelessly lost in the passion she could arouse.
The truth of the matter was however, while he knew what he wanted this morning, women often had different notions after a night of heated lovemaking.

Red knew, it was best to follow her lead in such a case. It did not help the throb in his cock, granted. But in the long run, perhaps his decision would net better results.

He determined to do his business and get about the activities of the day.

The man did not plan however, that Elizabeth would pad into the bathroom, stark naked and begin going about her usual routine... sans clothing.

He shaved absently as he watched the woman’s every move. Her breasts were absolutely breathtaking and that cute little ass drew his attention as none before.

She brushed her hair, the long fluff falling in cascades around her shoulders. The movement was almost hypnotic, the dark strands catching the light just so.

Before he knew it, Red had stepped behind the woman, his hands engulfing the slender hips. The blue eyes met his in the mirror, instant communication passing between them.

He watched the woman hungrily attacking the plate before her. “Did we work up an appetite last night?” he teased gently.

“Well, I had to do most of the work.” she lifted playful eyes.

“I can take constructive criticism.” he shrugged, enjoying the turn of the conversation.

“I can’t.” she didn’t think she could at least, at this point. “So change the subject.”

“Just let me state for the record,” he topped off their coffee, sitting back, “I have absolutely no complaints.”

Liz felt infinitely better, reaching over taking a piece of bacon from his plate, then another.

He watched her devour the meat which was somehow oddly sensuous in nature suddenly.

“Baby, if you wanted protein...” he offered magnanimously.

“Still eating...” she ate the bacon with a relish, “and still my shirt.”

Red held his amusement, steering the conversation elsewhere... for the moment.

“What are you plans for the day, sweetheart?” Red asked buttering a fresh piece of toast.

“They finished with the last Blacklister you gave them, so I have a free day.” she carefully cut into the delectable omelet the man had prepared.

“I thought you had the files from the BAU coming?” Red sat back in his seat, stretching his legs out comfortably.

“Not for a day or so.” she shrugged. “They said they were prioritizing them.” she waved it off.

“What are you doing today?” she asked, sipping her orange juice, glancing around for his phone.

“Nothing...” he shrugged nonchalantly.

“Dembe hasn’t spoken to you yet?” she was a bit shocked.

“My phone is off.”

Was this his subtle way of telling her, he wanted to spend the day with her?

“Would you like to spend the day together...” he asked quietly, “alone.”

She felt a smile work it’s way across her face, “Whatever would we do?”

“Is there anything in particular you would like to do?” he asked. “We could hop on the jet and go to Italy or...”

“Nothing...” she interrupted happily.

“Excuse me?” Red wasn’t sure he had heard correctly.

“Let’s do nothing.” she pushed out from her seat, settling herself across his lap. “Am I hurting you?” she looked down to his injured thigh area, making to rise.

The man’s hands ran along the legs straddling him, more intent on the silky flesh than any supposed wound.
“No...” he muttered, “though I am starting to feel a slight ache in one my of my joints.” his eyes held hers steadily.

Liz felt the slight beginning bulge against her mound. “That’s not a joint.” she corrected coyly.

“We’ll discuss that in a moment. Please, continue.” he was interested to know her thoughts.

“Let’s lay around and snack, watch movies, read the paper...”

“I don’t have the paper...” his eyes twinkled.

“...Make love?” she questioned innocently.

“Are you a nymphomaniac?” Red questioned, pulling the straddled woman closer. “Even if it’s a lie, please tell me you are.”

Liz’s lips trembled with her open amusement. “Given the right incentive,” she brushed her lips against his, “I can be.”

“Promises, promises.” he muttered slightly disgruntled, then continued. “While I find no reason to disagree with your day plan...” he began, “I should point out that we are running low on supplies.”

“Condoms?” she questioned instantly, much to Red’s amusement.

“A among other things, yes.” He cupped her small bottom in his hands, squeezing the bare flesh. “But we have more than enough for right now...”

He stood, taking his giggling passenger along with him as he made his way to his chosen destination.

Readjusting his hold on the firm little bottom, Red smiled indulgently for her mood.

Elizabeth tightened her arms about his neckline, her mouth parting his hungrily. The man stopped his steps, responding fully to her ever growing demands.

They had made it only as far as the formal dining room, when all his good intentions evaporated in a haze of rapacious requirement.

Laying her into the dark wood of the shining mahogany table which was the centerpiece of the large room, Red pushed at the decorative arrangement in his way. The ships lantern with it’s azure blue candle gracing the center of the glass lined object, crashed to the floor at the man’s rough handling.

“Red!” Liz protested vehemently for she had loved that display.

His mouth worked diligently, his teeth nipping her breasts through the fabric of the shirt she wore. “Don’t worry,” he nudged insistently into her vulnerable mound, his hand holding her thigh wide, “I got it at the Pottery Barn.”

Elizabeth laughed infectiously forgetting about the mess he had made in the next instant.

Red pushed his pants down, the material sliding down his well defined thighs. He freed his erection from it’s confinement, instantly seeking out her wet warmth.

He fumbled for the foil packet which was housed in the pocket of his pants, which were unfortunately now, slid down to his calves.

He cursed his stupidity in every language he knew until his fingers latched onto the elusive item. He sheathed his rampant erection, simultaneously flipping the buttons on her top.

Red slid Liz easily forward, having grasped her hips, the shirt aiding his efforts.

Like a homing beacon, his cock found that succulently drenched target of hers with little assistance from himself, sinking in one long continuous stroke, until he was deep inside her amazing little body.

“We are definitely going to have to make a store run...” Red panted, thrusting tirelessly into her receptive orifice.

“God, yes!” she agreed wholeheartedly, her hands restlessly fondling her breasts, running down the taut stomach occasionally to feel his hardness as it pounded against her swollen lips. Red’s coarse pubic hair felt so good scratching against the sensitive area.

The man’s hand joined her smaller fingers as he kneaded the plumpness of her mounds, his thumb and forefinger gently pinching the dusky rose nub.

He continued his rhythmic assault, his eyes pure flame as he watched Liz play with her own body.

He lifted his knee to the hard surface, pushing up onto the shiny tabletop, driving deep inside the quivering little hole. His hungry mouth latched onto the luscious peak, suckling vigorously.

Liz frantically searched for an opening, his shaft blocking any avenue. She needed desperately to touch the throbbing hood of her sex.

“No fucking way.” the man pushed her efforts aside. “That’s my job.” he stated gruffly, moving even closer, as he fixated on the area in question.

He pumped her faster and harder, flexing muscles he hadn’t used in a while. He would probably regret this later, but he sure as hell was not holding any regrets at the moment.

“This is so f-good.” she panted heavily. “I can’t believe this is so good!”

“Like I said,” he closed his eyes to the rising emotions cascading through out his mind and body, “that’s my job.” He lifted her perfect ass up into his thrust.

“Yes, shit...” she moaned sharply, raking her folds along Red’s erection, “don’t you dare stop.”

Liz clenched hard around the driving shaft. The man’s head dropped forward as he completely lost himself in his pastime.

“Why the hell would I.” he was dumbfounded. Stopping was the furthest thing from his mind.

“H-Harder...” she demanded vehemently.

Red stared down at the woman, his eyes taking in the visual beauty. He felt his own orgasm nearing having suddenly reached the point of no return.

Holding her legs wider for him, Liz lost all inhibitions, giving herself over completely to the overpowering sensations driving her body.

“Oh...oh...” she panted shakily, “oh God...” She arched off the table, her entire frame trembling from head to toe.

The raw unfettered sounds of her cries of release, drove the man crazy.
“Shit...” Red hissed his lost equilibrium, the show she performed for him captivating him as nothing before.

“Damn...” he groaned brokenly, pummeling into the bruised, volcanic depths until his entire body tensed in preparation for what was to come.

“Elizabeth...” he whispered hoarsely, feeling the first hot release of cum coat the crown of his shaft. He answered in kind, an animalistic grunt escaping his throat.

He rode the ebbing waves, as the lovely crest faded into oblivion.

Locking his arms on the solid wood of the table, he panted harshly above her. Lowering himself, he kissed her lovingly as they slowly came down from the passionate high to which they had ascended.

Red lay against her, snuggling the woman close. He took a moment, allowing his body to adapt to his present surroundings. He gently kissed her, feeling her body go lax, then shiver with contentment.

She settled back against the cool surface, her legs easing apart slightly.

He quickly grasped the woman’s hip, stilling her... but it was too late. “Son of a bitch!” he grumbled.

Lizzy pealed with laughter as he slid free of his entanglement. She helpfully opened her legs wider as he slid his fingers in deep searching for yet another lost condom.

“You know, if it just keeps slipping off,” she stated the obvious, grimacing slightly for the discomfort, “why keep wearing one?”

Red raised dark eyes, looking up from between her legs. “I’m going to pretend I didn’t hear you say that.” he muttered moodily. He searched aimlessly for a good disposal spot for the used prophylactic.

“Why?” she asked quietly, unable to take her eyes off the man’s handsome face. He had hastily replaced his pajama bottoms, so that area of scenery was now off limits. But the woman never tired of looking at the myriad of emotions which could play across his features at any given moment.

“Because if I don’t,” he threw her an impassioned glance, “we’re not leaving this fucking house... ever.”

Red leaned into her, capturing her lips in a warm embrace, in the next second, playfully slapping her bare bottom as she slid from the table. “Go take a quick shower.”

She took a step only to feel Red’s hand grasp her wrist, pulling her back, flush with his frame. Her bared breasts pressed intimately into his chest.

Red gripped the back of the loose shirt, pulling it free from her body, leaving her gloriously naked.

Stepping back, he openly swept her womanly curves in the soft light of day, a smile working it’s way across his face.

“You are beautiful,” he stated, his eyes raking her body possessively, “so amazingly beautiful.”

The woman’s flesh flushed under his scrutiny, before her brow arched, a thought occurring to her. She crossed her arms beneath her breasts, lifting the plump mounds, unabashedly presenting them for his viewing pleasure.
“You took my shirt.” she lightly accused.

“I most certainly did.” he cocked his head, his gaze totally approving of her nudity.

The woman gave the matter up for loss, turning to flounce cheekily away.

Red watched that beautiful ass swish saucily past, chastising his wayward cock for reacting.

Eventually he followed to the bedroom, the sound of the shower kicking on, alerting him to her location.

He stood very still for a moment, indecision wracking his mind.

He had just made love with her. Why then, was he wanting to go into that bathroom and have another bout with her? Was he pushing too hard?

Red determined to allow the woman a moment’s privacy. He would set out his clothes for the day, wait patiently to use the shower and try very hard to ignore the fact that Liz evidently now felt very comfortable in her own skin.

He was a mature male well accustomed to the female form and all it’s infinite beauty. One hot little number running around naked in front of him was just one more challenge he would overcome.

“You know Red,” that sweet little voice raised over the hiss of the shower spray, “I think there’s something wrong with this shower head... could you come and take a look?” she asked innocently as she continued soaping her breasts.

Red’s head jerked around, his senses reeling. “Well, I’ll be damned...” he whispered his awe. He stepped towards the shower, then hesitated, grabbing a condom off the counter, just in case...

The billowy steam felt good on his now naked form, the only sheath of clothing he wore, now laying discarded on the floor behind him.

The spray hit his front as he stepped further into the large walk-in cubicle. His eyes watched the suds skirt down the plains of the woman’s back. He felt himself harden in response.

He looked down in shock at his stirring cock, slowly but surely raising to the demands of it’s owner.

“I’m too old for this shit...” he muttered his belief.

He stepped in behind Lizzy, letting her feel what he had to offer.

She giggled appreciatively stepping back to rub enticingly against the large shaft.

“Apparently not...” she turned, her arms lifting about his neckline. The blue eyes watched him in open anticipation.

Red glanced down to where their bodies melded. “What’s this about the shower head?” he played his part expertly. “You know, if you set it on ‘pulsate’, you might just get the desired effect.”

She pouted up at him. “Could you show me how that works?”

He took the wand from her unresisting fingers, sighing heavily. “Neophyte...” he disdained, pushing her gently up against the heated wall. “Assume the position.” He used his best Command Voice.

She brightened considerably. “Oh, I know how to do that.”
Red held his amusement, dialing the wand to the appropriate setting.
May 5

“They say the little black dress is good for any occasion,” Liz absently towel dried her hair, “but not really suited to a grocery store. What am I going to wear?” she frowned, glancing down at the oversized towel tucked between her breasts. “I suppose I could make a dress out of the drapes.” she lifted amused eyes.

“Well, Scarlett,” he motioned with his head, splashing a small amount of cologne to his face, “there are clothes in the closet, lambikins.” Red used his very best Southern accent.

Liz found herself enchanted by his abilities.

She went to the directed place, finding what he said to be true. Clothes lined one entire side of the closet and as she examined them, some dresses, jeans, t-shirts... which were all the correct size, she marveled at the man’s abilities.

Searching further produced drawers full of lingerie, stockings, socks, any and all paraphernalia any woman would ever need.

“What the....” she gaped, rummaging through the amazing assortment.

“In case of emergency.” Red stated, coming up behind her.

“Emergency?”

He shrugged nonchalantly, crossing to his own side of the closet. “It’s bad enough leaving on a whim, but not to have anything with you when you go...” he sighed, “it’s a terrible feeling. One I hope you never have to experience.” He glanced her way, continuing.

“I have a ‘go’ bag for you with some basic essentials to hold you until our next destination.” he blithely informed, choosing a light cream shirt with small blue striping.

“Knowing you, it will have everything but the kitchen sink.” she stood in the midst of the closet still reeling from all the choices afforded her.

“I had the kitchen sink,” he quipped, grabbing a matching pair of cream slacks, “but Francis needed it for his camping trip.”

Liz chuckled sensually, but to the man, everything the woman did these days held an undercurrent of sensuality.

“I have one in the car.” he jerked his head towards the front of the house replacing the tie he had automatically picked up. He threw the offending object back to the rack.

“A kitchen sink?” she half joked, because you just didn’t know with this man.

It was Red’s turn to chuckle. “No, but I have a dust buster.”

The woman looked at him oddly, but let it go.

On the way out the front door, Liz noticed, he picked up his phone, dropping it in his pocket. She also noticed, that he had not turned it on.
She wasn’t about to question her good fortune. She watched him disarm the alarm, following him out the door.

“Hey, ladies first.” she reminded him of his manners.

“Larger targets first.” he corrected, almost sternly.

“Oh well, in that case.” she motioned for him to proceed.

“Aren’t you going to turn it on?” she gestured to his unseen phone, the question having nagged her all this time.

“No...” he dismissed airily, not pretending to misunderstand.

She bounced down the stairs, a spring to her steps. Red matched his steps to hers, slipping his arm around her waist, his mouth tickling her neck.

“Hey, hey!” she pushed him slightly. “Get in front of me.” she chastised. “Target here!”

Red’s laugh was genuine and throaty. “What happened to the good old days when people like Bonnie and Clyde made a suicide pact?” he questioned the validity of the world in general, taking his place in front of the suddenly wary woman.

“I’m too young to die.” she could barely contain her glee, when the man pulled up short, casting her a malevolent glance over his shoulder. “Well... I am.” she batt ed her eyes coquettishly at him. “And admit it, you could never play the part of Romeo.” she once again, took a shot at the ‘age thing’ which she knew rankled him slightly. “While I, on the other hand,” she spread her arms out aimlessly, “would make a perfect Juliet.”

“Yes, you would.” He smiled pleasantly at her, leaning in the car, producing a small bottle from the glove compartment. “Here, drink this.”

Liz laughed musically, seeing the offering. “Where did you get that? You have your own private jet.”

“What’s your poison?” He motioned to the liquor she held aloft. Liz had taken the miniature sample, reading the label absently. “Lucrezia Borgia has nothing on you.” She had to admit. “Jack Daniel’s at ten in the morning could kill the stoutest of men, arguably.” It was shrugged.

The woman threw the bottle back into the glove compartment as she took her seat, waiting for Red to traverse the auto. He slid into the comfort awaiting, firing the sports car to life, a smile still lingering from their previous exchange.

“It’s in the trunk.” he muttered, changing the subject, his eyes on the road.

“The dead body?” she cast him a carefree look, nothing was going to spoil this day for her.

“Next to the dead body... your ‘go’ bag.” It was supplied. “So before you go spending my money, check it.”

“Francis was right.” she glanced at the beautiful scenery around them. “You are cheap.”

Red tried very hard not to smile, but in the end, he lost the battle.
As they drove into town, the man listened to the weather report. He continually glanced at the other occupant of the car who was relaxing in the warm morning sun. Lizzy’s hair blew carelessly in the wind from the rolled down car window, giving her a disheveled look which he found most becoming.

“Would you like to go out on the water today?” he asked, pulling the sleek car into a convenient parking spot.

“On a boat?” she pulled her thoughts from the quaint little town they had just passed through.

“Contrary to popular belief... I do not walk on water.” he smiled. “Yes, on a boat.” he chuckled.

“I haven’t been on a boat in years.” she beamed, nodding. “Yes, I would love that... Jesus.”

He rubbed his chin thoughtfully, “I’ve been demoted. Last night it was, ‘God’.”

She rolled her eyes expressively, exiting the car.

“Target.” he reminded jovially.

Liz hesitated visibly, checking her surroundings hastily before casting the man a disparaging glance.

With their day plan in mind, the cart was loaded with snacks and a cooler, which amused Red greatly. “I don’t think we really need...”

“I have been on a boat before.” Liz interrupted, throwing more Dorito’s into their cart.

Red nodded sagely. “I can see that.” he glanced at the loaded down basket.

He looked over the at the various selection of beverages, smiling his amusement. There was no wine here over twelve dollars. He suddenly realized, he had become a snob.

He picked up a twenty four pack of beer, adding it to the treasure trove.

He hadn’t done this in so long, planned for a relaxing day on the water... he found the task very enjoyable.

Of all the things he could offer her, Elizabeth wanted to picnic on a boat.

Elizabeth...

He looked up, not finding her anywhere, a frisson of panic overtaking him. He navigated his way through the small store, feeling that rising terror clutching at his chest until finally finding the woman scouring an aisle.

“Lizzy?” he breathed out shakily, calming his heart as the apprehension eased.

“Now which ones do you think?” she asked, holding up a couple different boxes. “This one says it’s ultra thin, but this one says it has the most natural feeling.” she held up another box, her mouth quirking at the corner.

Red’s hand fluttered to his temple as he tried to assimilate the light hearted feeling overtaking him after such a disturbing adrenaline rush.
“Or a female condom. I’ve never used one but...” she looked down at the other in her hand, sighing, “and this one is ribbed for my pleasure, but you don’t seem to need help in that department.” she shrugged, tossing that package back.

Red looked up the boxes she was holding and the serious, indecisive expression on her face, feeling his heart strings pull.

The woman had no idea the fear he just felt, looking up and not finding her. And she wouldn’t know. He was being silly. He knew that.

But after the time they had spent together, he knew he would do anything in his power to protect her. Not that he would not have before, but now it was entirely personal, and more.

Pushing away all thoughts of everything except this moment and their plans for the day, Red took the boxes from her hands, looking them over. The man tossed the female condom aside without thought. He hated those fucking things.

“I think this one would be best.” she tapped the box of lambskin. “It’s the closest thing to not wearing anything at all.” she nodded decisively, having read the box and it’s promotional proclamation. “If we get these instead...” she gestured to some spermicide behind her, “you don’t have to wear anything at all...” she looked up at him hopefully.

Red tossed the box of lambskins in the cart along with the rest of their purchases, chuckling softly at her fallen face.

“Baby, they don’t taste that great.” he gestured to the spermicide.

“Well, you aren’t supposed to really eat...” she hesitated at the look on Red’s face, a flush covering her own.

Red laughed quietly as he watched understanding dawn.

“Oh...” the vivid red of her cheeks brightened.

“Why don’t we try a sampling of different types,” he gestured to the display beside them, “for now.” he consoled. “When we get more comfortable in our present circumstances, we will revisit this discussion.”

Liz fought the indecision plaguing her, staring back and forth between what would allow her to feel Red naturally, to the dreaded condoms.

Red wrapped his arms around her waist, pulling her against him. “Don’t think for one minute I don’t want to go that route,” he cupped her bottom, drawing her closer, “I am not saying that at all.” he traced her full lips with his fingertip, wondering how long he could wait to use one of the objects of their present discussion.

“A condom is one step. I slip it on and make love to you. Those,” he gestured to the other boxes, “I may have to wait up to ten minutes to be with you. And I just don’t have that will power right now.”

She giggled quietly at his honesty, then nodded her complacency. She looked back over the selections, picking small packs for them to try, before throwing another large box of the lambskins in the cart.

Red looked down at the dozen different brands, “You have great faith in me, I see.”
She threw him a quizzical look before heading for the checkout.

Once on the road, the woman became so interested in the good company and fascinating storytelling, Liz had lost all sense of direction and time, until she saw an approaching sign.

“Annapolis?” her eyes widened anxiously. “Red, my God.” she whirled her head jerkily about, seeking out the calmly serene man.

“Don’t worry.” Red soothed quickly. “They’re too distracted by their toys to pay me any real attention.” he gestured to the hundreds of boats lining the pier. “Besides, it’s not as if I’m going to the Academy itself.”

Liz relaxed somewhat, sitting uneasily back into her seat.

“Though, I did visit an outpost, last year.”

“You, what!” she bolted upright, her face incredulous.

“You needed assistance on a case.” he shrugged, turning the car onto the pier. “When Cooper was held by The Judge.” he reminded.

“And what happened?” she was still aghast by the news.

“Nothing.” he lifted noble brows. “I went in, got what I came for and left.” he almost seemed put out by the fact. “Again, they were too preoccupied to notice who was among them.” he sighed. “They really need better security.” he rolled his eyes as they pulled up to a dock and parked.

His face took on a tranquil expression, his smile genuine. “There she is...” he almost cooed.

Liz looked up, finding the most beautiful... “Red, that’s a yacht.”

“I guess so, yes.” he sounded proud, climbing from the car.

“I thought you said ‘speed boat’.” she said clamoring out of her own side, coming up to meet his arrival.

“She is a speed boat.” he grinned. “She’s very fast, actually.” again the pride was in his tone, but at her expression. “...Is something wrong?”

“No, I assumed it would be just us.” she was a little crestfallen to be honest.

“It will be.” he assured readily. “She’s only one hundred and sixteen feet long.” he began, following up with specifications she didn’t even begin to act like she understood.

“Trust me. And I can handle her just fine.” he helped her onto the back deck when he felt her hesitate. “What?”

“You christened her...” her words trailed away as she read the embossed nameplate.

“What else would I name something so beautiful.” he questioned seriously, guiding her across the gleaming deck.

Liz’s mouth fell open at the opulence. It was just gorgeous. Hard wood and soft furniture dotted the deck. Decorative doors led to the inside. The Captains chair was more like a lounge, the plush leather seat looking as if it belonged behind the helm of a business empire. To the left was a wet bar, stairs led up on the opposite side to a deck she could not as yet make out.
Red pushed through to the inside cabin, showing an open floor plan of hardwood floors and comfortable seating, plus a full kitchen that shined of stainless steel and ultra modern appliances.

“Holy shit...” Liz muttered under her breath, following after the man. “Jennifer...” she said after a few moments silence.

“What?” Red stopped in his tracks, slowly turning to face her.

“You could have named her, ‘Jennifer’.”

“I have a boat docked in Italy named after Jennifer, well, it’s the Cordelia II.” he replied. “I lost the first one with the...” he sighed.

“Cordelia?”

“It means, daughter or Jewel of the Sea.” Red sat his bags down, smiling softly at the woman across from him, clearing his throat. “We’ll stow this and get out of port then I’ll finish giving you the tour.” he grinned, taking the bags from her hands. “I’ve got this if you want to look around...” he offered.

She smiled back, nodding her understanding. He needed a minute.

Liz walked around the spacious quarters, taking in all the nooks and crannies. Occasionally looking back at the man, finding him busy with his preparations.

She shouldn’t have said anything. She hadn’t meant to hurt him, the day had been going so well and she had to go and bring up painful memories.

After assuring himself that all was ship-shape and having double checked the condom supply, he located the woman standing beside the large hot tub, her expression more than bemused.

He stepped up behind her, his lips caressing her neck.

She motioned helplessly to the gigantic spa before her, then to the surrounding area. “You have a hot tub and God gives you an entire Bay.” she sought his eyes plaintively.

“God didn’t heat the Bay.”

The woman lost her mood quickly enough, replaced by her previous one.

“I’m sorry.” she apologized instantly. “I always seem to...” she hesitated, unsure of how to state it. “I didn’t mean to hurt you.”

“I know you didn’t.” he soothed. “And you didn’t.” he assured. “I just worry for her. Wonder if she’s all right.” he confessed readily. “Sweetheart, I may hesitate when it comes to my previous life, but it has nothing to do with sharing it with you.” he reached up, stroking her cheek, “Nothing is off limits with us, do you understand.”

She nodded grudgingly, before being pulled into his chest. “It’s just hard to talk about sometimes.” she thought she understood, “especially when you’re blind-sided by it.” she winced.

“Sometimes I just need a minute to gather my thoughts.” the man replied. “It has nothing to do with you having brought it up.”
“If I ever ask anything too private, I want—”

“Nothing is too private, not when I’m speaking with you.” he stressed “Never feel like you can’t talk to me about Jennifer or even my first wife.”

Red leaned in, kissing her sad little mouth until he finally felt it tilt into a hesitant smile.

“Now, come with me.” he took her hand, leading her to the front. “You need to learn how to work the controls and navigate your way around, in case something happens.”

“What could happen?” she pulled up short.

“It’s just a precaution, Lizzy.” Red soothed expertly. “I taught my ex-wife and daughter the same thing, just in case of emergency.”

He lead her to the controls, showing her how everything worked and what their uses were, before gesturing her to come closer.

“And you can handle all this...” she faltered visibly, resisting his beckoning. “It’s so... big.” What the hell was she saying? He had been in the Navy for heaven’s sake.

“You handled bigger last night.” he quipped.

She hit his shoulder, truly aggravated. “I’m going to kill us... we’re going to die.” she was relatively positive.

“Come on.” he slid her gently between himself and the controls. “Let’s take her out.” he leaned to whisper seductively in her ear. “And if you’re a good little girl and don’t kill us...I’ll give you an extra special reward.”

Liz waved such prattle aside, her eyes scanning the multitude of buttons and screens and telephones and gadgets that didn’t even have a name in her head.

“We’re going to die.” she was totally resigned to the fact.

Liz listened carefully to all of Red’s instructions as they were given, and as soothing as his voice was and no matter that the man was standing right behind her, she still felt her hands shaking as she maneuvered the very long, very expensive boat from the dock.

“I saw the Titanic... this is just like it.” her voice quivered as her eyes darted to and fro, the harbor seemingly closing in on her from all sides.

“Not at all, honey.” Red reassured. “I have plenty of lifeboats.”

Under Red’s careful guidance, Liz turned the boat out to open waters, finally able to breathe as they cleared anything she could possibly run into except a very few boats entering the harbor which were few and far between.

“You did great, baby.” Red beamed his pride. “My first wife ran into the pier.” Red’s brow crooked. “Actually, she broke the deck off, scratched a gouge in the hull and hit the neighboring boat.”

“Well, can you blame her!” Liz yelped. “This thing is...” she gestured wildly, then frantically grabbed the wheel in a death grip again.
“That boat was only about twenty five feet long.” Red corrected. “Just over the size of her SUV she was driving at the time.” he shook his head woefully. “She wasn’t the best driver. Land or Sea, she was a menace.”

Liz had to admit, she suddenly felt proud of herself. That she had handled this boat, twice the size of Red’s other boat and didn’t put a scratch on it, by the Grace of God.

She looked down quickly, tapping the wood counter beside her for continued good luck. Her eyes flying back to the open sea, as they navigated past other boats in the harbor, ruminating on his choice of words.

His first wife. He had said that twice. A label he had never before used when speaking of Carla... Naomi... whatever name she was using these days. Always his ex-wife.

Was that to imply he was now thinking along the lines of another wife? A second wife. He had indicated he wanted to work towards that goal with her but Liz found herself doubting, just a shadow, if she could ever fulfill such a man’s needs.

She did know however, that she wanted to try with all that she was. She moved closer to the man in question, feeling better.

They coasted down the open waters, as Liz listened to what Red had to tell her about the navigation and other technical side of the boat until they hit the end of Chesapeake Bay.

And she suddenly felt even more nervous than before. It was one thing to coast down the bay, with land all around you.

Another when you hit the open sea.

“I don’t remember you having a fear of water before.” Red said conversationally.

“Well, I wasn’t at the helm of a boat before either.” she countered.

“You’ve done an amazing job.” Red bolstered. “And you know I would tell you if I thought otherwise.”

She reluctantly admitted that he would. Besides the whole, not lying to her, thing. She felt that regardless of what he said, a little bit of his Naval training stuck with him, taking over any time he was in the water.

“I’m going to grab a beer, you want one?” he asked lightly.

“Excuse the hell out of me?” she gripped the wheel in her hand nervously, her knuckles suddenly white.

“You can do this, sweetheart.” he squeezed her around the waist lending support. “Just follow the course I told you, and you’ll do fine.” he kissed her forehead. “Besides, I’ll be gone just a second.”

“Yeah, did you see Galaxy Quest?” she asked. “They had a gizmo that allowed them to relive thirteen seconds, just long enough to correct a single mistake.” she babbled.

“You’ll do fine.” he reassured, patting her waist as he backed away.

Her eyes fell to the gauges quickly, following the course without blinking.

“Baby...” Red chuckled, “you have to look out once in a while.”
She lifted her eyes instantly, only to have them widen when she saw a fishing boat just ahead.

Red watched her steer the boat smoothly, changing course easily around the other boat and breathed a sigh of relief that she hadn’t panicked, before easing back into line.

“I’ll be right back.” he held his smile with great difficulty.

Looking back and forth between the gauges and out to the open waters, Liz felt her shoulders loosen finally the further she went. But she could not truthfully say she was not happy when she felt the man come up behind her, holding up a cool can and glass.

“You want me to take her for a while?” he offered.

She jerked her head agreeably, more than ready for a break as she took the pre-offered alcohol, stepping aside hastily.

Red took a swig of his own beer, smiling. “Let’s see what she can really do.”

Liz smiled as she watched him play. The boat sped up, gliding over the water as though they were on a sheet of ice.

She’d been on boats before, with Sam when they went on vacation, but had never felt anything as smooth as this.

She relaxed into her seat, stretching away the kinks. Twenty minutes later, Red slowed the boat until they came to a stop.

“Are you hungry?” he asked.

“Getting there.” she pushed off her seat, following him into the kitchen.

He went about preparing their steaks, wrapping them before setting them aside. “I’ll let them marinate a few minutes.” he shut the fridge door, grabbing their bags. “Would you like to see the deck below?”

“There’s another deck?” she shifted her eyes this way and that. “I thought I had seen everything.”

She followed him down the small flight of stairs, opening doors Red gestured to, finding a bedroom, a bathroom, even a small exercise area.

At the end of the hall, the man threw open an expansive door with a flourish.

Liz eased forward, peering into the spacious room.

“Oh, Red...” she gushed, “it’s just lovely!” she smiled happily, taking in the soft muted colors in the master suite. “It’s very nice.”

Red had brought their luggage down, tossing one in particular, on the bed. “And very private...” he muttered softly in her ear.

Liz shivered at the roughened tone, her body humming in response.

“It is, isn’t it?” she smiled back over her shoulder at the man.

“Very...” he stepped up behind her, brushing his groin against her bottom. He turned her towards him, dropping his mouth against hers ravenously, gently backing her towards the large bed.
“The steaks...” she said breathlessly.

“Will keep...” he muttered, “I won’t.”

His arm snaked around her waist, lifting her back on to the bed. He followed closely, his hands deftly catching the bottom of her blouse, tugging it over her head. The dark hair fell loosely about her bared shoulders.

“You know what I want.” he stated quietly, removing her bra with a expert flick of his fingers. “Give it to me, Elizabeth.” he mumbled against her breast, taking the perk nipple in his mouth, suckling the warm flesh lovingly.

Liz felt her center heat to vivid life. She did not resist as he pulled at her shorts and panties, removing them quickly.

At this moment in time, she was not adverse to giving the man anything he wanted.

“This is my favorite place in the entire universe.” he whispered roughly. “It’s so beautiful,” he stroked her swollen lips, teasing the smattering of hair, “so damned welcoming of me,” he slid his fingers inside, slowly pumping the already quivering hole, “I bet it tastes so fucking sweet,” he slid down the bed, parting her legs, a warm palm aiding his endeavors, “Let’s test that theory, shall we?”

Liz’s hand dropped between her legs, a myriad of doubts plaguing her. She had not showered. She had not prepared... down there. She had not expected this so soon.

“Stop thinking.” the man demanded her undivided attention.

He had planted himself between her thighs, his broad shoulders opening her wide. He gazed longingly at the sight before him, tracing her pink lips with his fingertips.

Dropping his face, he scented the soft pubic hair, just nipping the peak of her sex. He breathed heavily, the hot breath brushing across the sensitive tip.

Liz tensed at the sensual sweep.

“Relax...” He mumbled, gently licking the crease of her leg.

“Y-you don’t have t-to...” She moved into the soft touch of his tongue unconsciously.

“I don’t have to fuck at all,” He bit gently into her thigh, kissing the love bites until he pulled back, staring openly at her, “but I rather enjoy the sensation.”

His stare made the woman shiver uncontrollably. But she was also as nervous as hell.

Was she pretty enough? Did he enjoy what he was seeing? Would she taste as good as he anticipated?

Red made himself more comfortable for he intended to stay here for a while. He could not believe he was privileged enough to be in such a situation. He intended to take full advantage while he could.

He ran his thumb up the side of the pouty little opening, smiling secretively as he noted her response to his touch.

“Such a pretty little pussy...” his tone traveled into the pit of her stomach, eliciting a heartfelt moan.

Liz remembered the man had said the same thing in her dream.
He tilted his head, his gaze remaining fixed and focused on her little muff.

He preferred women who did not shave completely. There was something disturbingly primitive about that dark patch which aroused and titillated. The sight had always turned him on and he enjoyed the way it felt. He could not wait to feel the downy texture scrape along his shaft.

Red focused on her tight folds, her clit becoming more pronounced under his ardent gaze.

It was like being denied water that was right in front of him. And he felt as if he hadn’t quenched his thirst in months

“Let me taste you, Elizabeth.” She felt his hot breath and rumbling voice brushing against her tingling lips.

She looked down at him, as he stared longingly at her center.

He lifted a sultry gaze, holding hers compellingly directly before he lowered his head, placing his hot mouth against her vulnerable flesh. He was unwilling to wait one second longer.

Red sighed contentedly the minute his lips touched her. He had been waiting to do this since he had first seen her walking down the stairs at the Blacksite. And if he had known how good she would feel in his mouth, he would have never let her out of that box.

Not that she would have wanted to go. He would have made sure of the fact.

Just after a few seconds, her tiny pearl clit was pulsing, begging for attention. Red flattened his tongue, massaging her, tasting her arousal on the tip of his tongue.

“Oh dear God,” she mewled softly, lifting her bottom for him, “that feels so g-good.”

She tasted fucking amazing. Her salty sweetness reminded him of either freshly made saltwater taffy or creamy butterscotch.

She truly was breathtaking. She was so delicate. So appealing. Her taut rosy lips glistened in the low light and that adorable clit peaked out for him.

He lowered his mouth, kissing it adoringly before tonguing it gently.

If she wasn’t an artists dream, she certainly was his.

He kissed the small tuft of hair, looking up at her through hooded eyes. “I could spend all day exploring—”

She moaned softly, quickly reaching down, directing his face back to his pastime.

Red chuckled, the sound vibrating along her core causing the woman to moan melodiously. He loved that she was enjoying this, because he couldn’t think of anything he’d rather be doing right now other than making love to her in the most intimate way imaginable.

She lifted against the mouth pleasuring her, her fingertips moving erotically over his head as she totally relaxed under his ministrations. She could not stop the contented sighs or sharp intakes of breath as the man worked his magic.

Wrapping his hands around her hips, he grunted carnally, unable to quench the insatiable desire flooding his body.
Red apparently adored this part of foreplay. She had never had a better lover, and not because he made her come so quickly. It was because he cared enough to try anything which might please her.

“Please...” she asked breathlessly, “don’t stop.”

She was so close to climax, her thighs were quaking with the intensity.

She pushed harder, her head falling back into the lush coverlet. She refused to allow him any reprieve, her fingers clutched tightly against the back of his head.

“K-keep doing t-that.” her voice shook.

Red smiled against her wet flesh as she rode his face, loving that her natural inclination took over. In fact, she was damn near smothering him. And he couldn’t think of a better way to go.

He was proud he could bring her to this stage of excitement. She sought only her pleasure and knew instinctively, that he could provide what she needed.

“Oh shit, oh shit....” she could not catch her breath, buckling into him, “oh shit!”

Son of a bitch. He’d never heard sweeter damn words in his entire fucking life because he knew what they signified.

Reaching around her hip, he cupped her breast, rolling her nipple as he dropped a slick finger against her ass, pushing against the taut skin.

“Fuck...” she cried out, her hips swiveling on their own accord. No one had ever done that to her before. It felt so fucking good. “Don’t s-stop... God don’t stop!”

And then he was suckling the bundle of nerves which immediately put her over the top.

A burst of vibrant brightness exploded behind her eyes, a feeling so ethereal... so deliciously pleasurable, she was at a loss to actually find words to describe it. Instead she simply... enjoyed the hell out of it.

She had climaxed with Tom, but it was never this intense. Her entire body had responded to Red’s expertise. He had touched her soul in a manner she had never experienced before.

“Oh my...” the raspy exclamation was torn from her throat as she tried unsuccessfully, to calm her hammering heart, her thighs still quaking uncontrollably. “Oh, fuck...”

Red pulled back slowly eager to see the look on her face before she had a chance to mask her true emotions. She was literally radiant, a soft glow emanating about the beautiful features.

Red lowered his head, dropping a kiss to her still throbbing clit.

“I love watching you come.” his voice held a measure of reverence.

She arched up into him, her back coming off the bed with a sharp jolt from the last embers of her orgasm.

Red stripped himself of his shirt, as the woman blindly grasped for the bag beside her.

“The lambskin, baby.” he urged, dropping his pants hastily, kicking the offending material aside.

Liz tore at the box, sending one shooting towards him. He grasped the square mid-flight, his reflexes in perfect working order. He tore at the foil package before rolling the sheath into place. Red crawled slowly forward, his eyes boring into hers.

The woman was electrified by the way he looked at her. Her tummy flipped, adrenaline coursing through her veins.

“I’m going to fuck the hell out of you.” he wasn’t above a little boasting.

Elizabeth fought her blush and won. Slowly opening her legs in open invitation. She motioned him forward, her eyes seductively beckoning him.

The man’s light eyes filled with raw desire. As he continued his trek, a new determination apparent on his face.

Reaching the woman, he bent slightly stroking his thickened shaft against her wet center, before sliding slowly inside her welcoming body.

“Oh, fuck...” he drew out the exclamation, his eyes closing rapturously after just that first push. “So much better...” he breathed out his relief, this condom his favorite so far.

He could feel her heat so well, it was almost as if he was wearing nothing at all.

Liz moaned her delight, opening herself more to him. “I can feel you.”

“I wanted to do this to you, so many times in the past.” Red sighed as his pelvis met hers intimately, yet again. “The ache became unbearable.”

Liz tightened her hold, her arms embracing him tenderly as she lifted into his slow slide. Listening to the words he whispered intimately into her ear, left an ache in her heart when she thought of how much time they had wasted to get to this point.

In only one day, Red had managed an emotional connection that she had never felt in her marriage with Tom.

The man’s lips parted hers provocatively, making Liz wish to give everything she had held back for so long with others.

And she truly understood what had been lacking in her relationships, for lack of better terms.

Admiration. Respect... Love.

Did Red love her?

He seemed to hold a great affection for her. It felt like something she had never experienced before.

And she loved the sense of fulfillment.

Red Reddington was deeply incased in her body... it felt so good. So right.

She was making love with... Red Reddington.

His thick shaft spread her deliciously wide, filling her cavity to capacity and beyond. His mouth suckled her breasts adoringly.

He looked down where their bodies joined, watching his bulging shaft disappear between her legs, his lighter shade of hair meeting her darker.
Liz relaxed, basking in his lovemaking. Her silky legs caressed his hips, her hand stroking his back caressingly.

Her breathy voice repeated his name over and over.

A couple months ago, the woman barely tolerated him. Now, he was buried in her body to the hilt, loving her as none before.

It was surreal. Yet, it was the most natural feeling in the world.

“Damn, Lizzy,” he praised lavishly, meaning his words, “you feel so incredible.”

“Deeper...” she keened happily, loving the feel of him inside her.

“You want to see?” He wanted to share this with her.

Liz struggled to her elbows, anxious to see, as Red lifted away slightly. She was instantly riveted by the sight of the man’s hard length vanishing back into her body.

“Oh my God...” she gaped, avidly watching the show.

Red took his time, inching slowly forward allowing the woman to feel the sensations he himself, was experiencing.

Red Reddington’s cock was the most amazing thing she had ever felt.

“Isn’t it amazing...” he watched the show himself, fixated on his wet shaft pumping her heated body.

She reached out, laying her fingers on her own lips, feeling his penetration glide along a deep, probing path before sinking into her opened depths.

He bounced his shaft, only withdrawing an inch or two. Liz dropped her head back into the pillow, groaning loudly as overwhelming sensations flooded her core.

Red increased the tempo of his thrusts, his movements intensely calculated. He was deeply gratified when he felt her lift into his physical adoration.

“Yes, baby...” Red hissed, “I like when you do that.”

His hand bunched her silky curls in his fist, his mouth devouring hers fiercely.

She had forgotten how much she missed this. She knew instinctively, that the man was just as invested in the moment as she herself.

Add to that, Red was a hell of a lover. All his attention was focused on her. She could honestly say, this was by far, the best sex she’d ever had.

It... he felt fantastic. His words were... so sensual. That wonderful raspy moan he emitted... made her tummy react chaotically.

The urge to dominate this woman was suddenly overwhelming. And Reddington knew how to get he wanted in life.

“I need you Lizzy.” He uttered, his tone guttural in nature.

Red gripped her hips, sitting back on his haunches, driving his shaft harder into her drenched cavern.
Liz watched his erection pummeling her body, feeling her depths ripple with pleasure.

“God,” she gritted, the heaviness between her legs feeling like an old welcomed friend “right fucking there...”

“Come on, baby,” he crooned softly, rubbing his thumb against her clit, “come for me.” he whispered enticingly.

Reaching, she grasped the headboard, curling her fingers tightly around the wrought iron, riding out the explosive release.

Red engulfed her in his arms, feeling her tremble with the intensity of her orgasm. “Shit, Elizabeth...” his voice was filled with awe.

Raising her hips, she met his demanding thrusts, eliciting those sounds she so loved.

“Jesus...” his voice shook with intensity. "Lizzy..."

Smoothing his hand over her tight abdomen, up between the valley of her breasts, he watched hypnotically as the sides of her luscious mounds brushed against his hand with their movement.

Liz she cupped the pliant flesh, trapping his hand in the warm alcove.

Suddenly, the vision of fucking her breasts, coming on her white skin flashed in his mind. It was a fantasy he had for days.

A few of his fantasies had been fulfilled just in these short few hours. He knew he could make this one, tit fucking her, a reality. But he had to wonder how long he could hold out before pushing the boundaries of established decorum.

Red could not take his eyes from the woman, completely enraptured. She was so impassioned, so fucking sultry. Her heavy breasts rocked gently with the motion of their lovemaking.

A delicious shiver settled at the base of his spine, as his cock swelled with fluid. She cried out, her pussy fluttering around his thickness as he pumped his steamy load into the condom.

He trembled as she clenched tightly, the thick ejaculate warming his cock head instantly. For a fleeting second, in an illusive flight of imagination, he could almost feel her cum heat the crown of his shaft.

Already having lost more than enough condoms, Red quickly grasped the top, pulling free. He smiled softly at her groan of dismay.

“Don’t sound so disappointed,” he rasped roughly, “It’s not like I won’t visit again...soon.”

Liz giggled quietly, seeking the warmth of his embrace. “You mean, you’ll come again... soon.”

“That too...” he delicately smoothed her disheveled hair, his eyes gentle on her face.

“I like your sex voice...” she smiled contentedly, snuggling into the crook of his neck.

“My sex voice?” he chuckled his amusement.

“I love your voice, any time of day.” she explained. “But right now, it’s deeper, sexier...” she tried to classify it, “you sound very relaxed...” she smiled impishly, “like...”
“I’ve just fucked the hell out of a ravishing woman.”

She blushed slightly. “I was going to say,” she corrected demurely, “like you just finished one of those fabulous cigars and drank a glass of your favorite scotch.

“I enjoy nothing more in the world than making love to you, to be quite honest.” he pecked her nose affectionately. “The other pastimes are nice, but nothing compared to what passes between us in such a moment.”

“You don’t say.” she loved the sentiment, planting a suggestive kiss on his mouth.

“Oh, hell yeah.” he reached between her legs, petting her velvet slit. “I dare say,” his teasing voice tickled her ear, “this is the best pussy in the entire world.”

“Are you about to come again?” she played openly, licking her lips invitingly.

“No,” he smiled knowingly, rubbing her in just the right spot, “but you are.”
May 5

It was late afternoon when Red awoke after a nice catnap. A gentle lapping of the sea against the side of the boat reassured him that all was right with his surroundings.

Slipping quietly off to the bathroom, the man rinsed his face with cool water in the double basin which lined the north wall of the yacht. He smiled into the palm of his hands allowing the water to trickle between his fingers as he heard Lizzy pad barefoot into the bathroom.

Turning his head, his smile widened as he grabbed a nearby towel to dry his face. His eyes took in the visual beauty afforded him.

Liz scratched at some imaginary itch, her hair more tossed and wild from the action. Her lips, swollen and red, reminded the man of a sweet berry. The love bites and beard burn on her neck, breasts and thighs, were a pleasant reminder of time spent in his arms.

Tousled was a good look on her. As was the dreamy, far away look in her eyes.

“You look,” his gaze swept the luscious body, hesitating on certain feminine curves, “...sated.”

“Do I look hungry too?” she yawned the suggestion aside.

“Are you implying that I’m slacking off in my hosting duties?” He tossed the towel on the counter, watching the woman step closer. He looked down at her rosy complexion, his eyes mellow.

She pressed her warm flesh against his, tip-toeing to kiss him softly. “I’m saying,” she corrected the misconception, “you better feed me before this becomes the ocean version of the Donner party.”

“That wasn’t much incentive.” Red mumbled into her neckline. “While I would love to dine on you once again... I have absolutely no objections to you returning the favor.”

“I fell right into that one...” she muttered quietly, nodding sagely, “didn’t I?”

“You did, yes.” Red agreed, pleased with his own wit. He patted her bottom affectionately, walking back to the bedroom. He grabbed his bag off the floor, pulling some light clothing free.

Liz followed him, watching as he slid a light blue cotton shirt onto the muscled arms. She glanced around for her own bag, rummaging through the interior.

She found a couple sets of clothes, some basic toiletries... and photographs. The woman sifted through several images, one of her with Sam, making her hesitate. The blue eyes shifted to the next in line. Her entire team smiled happily out from the crisp memory.

She looked up, seeking out the man, her mouth agape.

He frowned over at the winsome features, finding the woman near tears. Closing the space between them quickly, his troubled eyes held her wet ones.

“What’s wrong?”
Unable to find the words, Liz gestured to the case and it’s contents, her lip trembling visibly as she tried to master the conflicting emotions she was experiencing.

“I’ve been through this countless times...” he had glanced at the photos dangling in her unresponsive fingers. “Uprooting from familiar people and things can be... painful.” he motioned absently. “It may only be a short while, until we get things straightened out...” He offered a noncommittal shrug, hesitating visibly before continuing, “But it could be...longer.” his heart hurt for her. “Whatever the time frame, I want you to have something from home.”

She suddenly felt the gravity of their situation, like never before. And while it was scary, that he had done this for her... that he had the forethought, cared enough...

“I will do everything in my power to make it right, Lizzy.” the vow was in his tone and manner. “You won’t be alone, I promise.”

Liz wrapped her arms around the strong neckline, squeezing it tightly. Knowing that Red would be there with her, each step of the way...

She knew the decision she made last night, was the correct choice. Red gently kissed her tear stained cheeks, before wiping the evidence of her emotional state away. “Now, we’re going to eat, enjoy each others company and relax.” he quickly changed the direction of the conversation.

Laying her head into his chest, Liz listened to the reassuring rhythm of his heartbeat. “I don’t want you to think anything more about it.” he soothed. “All right?”

She took a steadying breath, then straightened. Her hesitant smile became genuine the more she witnessed the unwavering support behind the eyes which regarded her so solemnly. And for the first time in her life, aside from her Sam, she felt an unrelenting trust in someone else. Liz finally, truly believed... that this man would do anything to support her in every imaginable way.

Hugging him again, she cuddled into his warm embrace. That feeling she always got when he held her, of safety and protection, was there. But along with it, was a new type of intimacy. Which admittedly, frightened her. Was she becoming clingy, too fast? Relying on him too much after just half a day.

“I feel it too, Lizzy.” Red’s deep voice washed over her comfortingly.

“Feel what?” she mumbled evasively.

“Holding you feels different.” he replied honestly. “But it’s a difference I like, very much.”

She relaxed in his embrace, feeling much better knowing he felt the strangeness as well. Lifting her chin, he forced the blue eyes to his. “I will always be there when you need me.”

“If this doesn’t work out—”

“Nothing will stop me from protecting you.” Red shook his head, brushing away the thought. “Do you believe me?”
Even after this short amount of time, it hurt like hell to think of...whatever this was between them, not working out. She wanted to make it happen, to make something of this thing between her and
Red.
“You know what I think?” he asked, his fingers lightly tracing her lips. “I think we’ll be just fine.”
“You do?” she asked hopefully.
“Yes...” he replied without hesitation. “We’ve been gravitating towards one another for a reason, Lizzy.” he continued. “I think for a very good reason.”
“Which is?” she wasn’t sure she wanted to question anything at this stage.
“We’re supposed to be together.” he stated, as though it was obvious.
She had to confess, hearing the man say that with such belief, made her feel less awkward. She had to wonder if she should be feeling this deeply so short into the relationship, which in reality, had been such a short period of time in the making.
“Call it fate or God’s Grand Plan...” Red began, “but there had to be a reason I was placed in your life and you in mine.” he thread his fingers through her hair, cupping her small head in his palm.
“Time, fate, God...” he continued, slowly rubbing his fingers into her scalp, making the woman sigh,
“He knew I needed you, and you needed me.”
“You need me?” she questioned quietly.
“You keep me sane.” he replied easily. “One small smile, laugh or touch from you...” his lips grazed her forehead lightly, “and all is right with the world.” Red held his expression, letting her see the truth behind it.
Liz tilted her head, looking at the man curiously. “I feel that too.” she only just realized the fact.
Her tummy rumbling hungrily broke the spell, but brought a small smile to Red’s face.
They had a lifetime to explore their feelings for one another. They didn’t have to hit on all of it in one day, but this had been a start.
He kissed that little mouth he so loved, then smiled.
“Come along my little cannibal, before this situation gets out of hand.”

“We should have picked up some take out.” Liz said, dropping the sliced tomato into the bowl.
“I like cooking.” Red smiled, dropping a kiss to her shoulder. “Especially if it’s for two.”
“Why, because it’s easier.” Liz asked, tossing the salad with a flourish.
“No, because it means we’re alone.” his tone had dropped suggestively.
Liz’s mouth pulled at the corner as she sat the bowl in the fridge to chill. She sought out the man’s position, wrapping her arms around his solid bulk from behind.
“Are you always like this?” she questioned, settling her chin on his shoulder watching him prepare their steaks.


Red blocked a pop of boiling grease, turning down the flame. “Like what?” he was curious.

“Romantic.”

“I like to think so.” he chuckled. “Though honestly, I don’t see myself as that.” he sat a lid down on the grill, leaning into the counter beside it.

“It doesn’t matter how you see it,” she informed him, “it’s how the woman sees it.”

“That’s the way of the world.” he muttered to her amusement. “If the female is content, then the male has done his duty.” he glanced her up and down, taking in the faded blue jean shorts and the already tanned legs. “Have I done my duty to you?”

“To some extent.” she let him know the way of things, an up and under seductive glance added as she walked away, careful to swish her hips just so. “I’ll let you know when your next shift begins, Sailor.”

“I’m the Captain here.” he reminded pseudo-peevishly. “I get to call the shots.”

“Not if you don’t want a mutiny on your hands.” she smiled sweetly.

“I would have you keel-hauled...but it went out of fashion in Medieval Times.”

“More is the pity?” she questioned playfully. “You could have me walk the plank.” she brightened.
“They did that to Captain Jack Sparrow.”

Red straightened the position of his own ‘plank’, the conversation having taken a different turn for the man. “I wasn’t thinking about you ‘walking’ the plank, per se.” it was reluctantly admitted.

Liz giggled appreciatively, pointing to the now smoldering food. “Your plank can wait.”

Red sighed heavily, pulling the steaks off the grill. As they sat, Red poured wine he thankfully, had onboard.

A light hearted conversation ensued thereafter.

Liz told him of a trip when Sam had taken her to Louisiana and they spent an afternoon on a fishing boat. After twenty long minutes, Sam had finally reeled in a huge fish only to have it fly on board, smacking him in the face so hard, it made him fall from his seat.

Red laughed quietly, shaking his head, sighing. Much like he did when Francis spoke on any subject.

“Idiot...” Red muttered jokingly.

“Have you ever had anything exciting happen while on a boat?” she corrected hastily. “Or do you call it a ship?”

Red had more than his fair share of excitement on board boats and ships alike. None of which he thought were stories to be shared during a romantic outing. Most, if not all, were mood killers since the majority of them contained killing incidents.

Granted, most of those tales happened when he was in Service and legally within his rights. But then, most of them were from his time as Red Reddington.
Really, both topics in his opinion, were for another time.

Not today. Not when they were still lethargic from a tumble in bed. Which actually was an answer to the question. And a truthful answer at that.

“My most exciting moment on a boat has been... today.” he lifted confident eyes, holding her gaze steadily. “Being with someone I have wanted in my life, for a very long time.” he reached across the table, curling his fingers around her smaller ones.

She blushed prettily, squeezing his fingers in return. “I know there was truth behind that.” she allowed. “But I also hear a cop out.”

“Maybe,” he granted, “but it is the truth, for the most part.” He sipped his wine, letting it settle on his tongue for a moment. “Everything that has ever happened to me on the water is nothing but a jumbled mess, but you...” he raised her hand, kissing the delicate flesh, “and what we shared, that will always be a very vivid and incredibly memorable event.”

She couldn’t disagree. This was turning into one hell of a day, a day she wouldn’t soon forget.

Liz lay down her knife then chuckled. “Red...” she answered without hesitation.

“Before I went down on you, what was your favorite color.” he sat back in his chair, supremely confident.

Liz giggled quietly, really enjoying the carefree and open conversation. One of which she had never experienced before.

“Purple.” she shrugged. “You?”

“Blue.” he replied, staring directly at her eyes.

Her lashes fluttered under his attention, a small smile overtaking her face. “Favorite food?” she lifted an intense gaze.

“Italian.” he said, inclining his head awaiting her own response.

“Italian, with Mexican a close second.”

“Your most embarrassing moment?” he took a shot in the dark.

“Just one?”

He knew that was her way of saying, not yet.

“What do you dream about?” he tried another route.

“Walking planks...” she held his eyes steadily, inclining her head minutely.

“I dream about that too...” he teased. “A recurring dream.”

“What’s your favorite type of music?” she got things back on track, hopefully.

“Hip hop...” he managed straight faced until she gave him an old fashioned look. He shrugged slightly. “You probably don’t know it... Big Band.”
“Glen Miller, Benny Goodman.” she scoffed. “I’m not a complete plebeian.”

He chuckled sensually.

“I like hip hop.” she answered the unasked question.

“No you don’t.” he was relatively certain.

“My tastes are eclectic.” she had to admit.

“My most favorite sound in the world is a soft, melodious sigh coming from the lips of a completely aroused, blue eyed brunette who answers to the name... Elizabeth.” he licked his own lips as the memories surfaced. He read her face like a good book.

“You’re so full of it, but don’t you go a changin’.” She had loved the compliment in spite of her better judgement.

“Favorite author.” he persisted, a twinkle in the light eyes.

“Tolstoy.” Liz replied quickly, taking a bite of her salad, saying what was expected of her.

“Tolstoy...” Red repeated knowingly, his head bobbing slowly. He stared at her a moment, his lips twitching as he fought his amusement. “Charlotte Brontë.” he corrected quietly.

Liz sat a little straighter, her brows furrowing. “Your favorite author is–”

“No, she’s your favorite author.” he interrupted. “Or... she’s at the top of the list, anyway.”

“How did you...” her mouth fell agape.

“It was the book on your shelf with the most wear.” he replied. “Jane Eyre.” he made the connection. “She’s strong, independent, passionate...” his eyes softened, silently finishing the comparisons to Liz’s heroine in his mind.

_Orphaned..._

“She introduced me to a whole new world.” Liz admitted. “It was difficult to understand sometimes, but as I grew older and revisited the story, it made more sense.” she fell silent, then looked at him and smiled. “Plus, the romance wasn’t bad either.”

“You went from Brontë to romanticized porn.” he tsked playfully.

“Oh, hell yeah.” she agreed vehemently. It was because of that romanticized porn that she had seen Red in a different light. Not that she would tell him that.

Not yet anyway.

“I now have a thing for older more sophisticated men.” she teased. “Especially those who wear a fedora.”

Red’s tongue ran around the inside of his cheek, the look he gave her sending shivers of delight down her spine.

“What about you?” She questioned. “No, let me guess.” she looked off into the yachts canopy, lost in thought a moment. “Orwell, Faulkner... Dostoevsky?”
Red ran his finger around the rim of his glass, smiling as she listed some heavy hitters, that he did admittedly enjoy on some level.

“It’s actually a toss up between...” he began, gaining her complete interest, “Jules Verne or H.G. Wells.”

Liz sat down her utensils, actually at a loss. She would have never guessed Red would prefer science fiction over the deeper subject matter covered by the other authors.

“Really,” she leaned into her fist, intent on the man’s every utterance, “why?” she was more than intrigued.

“They were the first ones to stir my imagination.” Red proclaimed. “They made me want to travel and see new people and places.” he remembered fondly the feelings the stories had evoked.

“And you have traveled, extensively.” she pointed out the obvious. “Was it because of the books?”

“Partly.” he admitted. “And as I may have mentioned before, I hated being idle.”

“So I take it that I won’t be getting many quiet nights at home with you?” she teased.

“I don’t feel that with you.” he divulged.

“Don’t feel what with me?” she was ready to take umbrage.

“The restlessness,” he pushed back his seat, his look oddly serene. “...You calm my heart.”

He arose, crossing the immaculate deck. Turning on a radio, he let the soft sound of “Moonlight Serenade” wash over them. Red held out his hand, pulling her from her seat when she took the offering.

“How are you still single?” she gaped as the man swayed them slowly in beat with the low music.

“Well, I’m not now....” he glanced down into the beautiful eyes. “Am I?”

“Well... no.” she sighed, then hastily stiffened slightly. “I mean--”

“I know what you meant.” he turned her, smiling as she followed his lead without thought. “I was waiting for you.”
Dancing in the Moonlight

May 5

Liz looked out over the horizon, her head laying on Red’s shoulder. They danced quietly getting lost in the sensual sway. Their silhouettes cast a dark image against the setting.

Brilliant hues of red, pink, blue, and soft yellows streaked the calm skies as the sun set lazily behind them.

The music playing transported Elizabeth back to another Era. The dreamy melody was at once both nostalgic yet timely. A song for all ages. The haunting refrain touched the hearts of generation after generation.

Liz was torn between watching the hypnotic sunset and closing her eyes to better feel the sensations the moment evoked. She wondered how many couples fell in love to this very song. It certainly wove a spell about the two figures highlighted on the deck of a boat seventy five years after it’s original recording.

The man’s large hand encompassed her back, stroking her spine in a slow sensuous rhythm. Her arms lay loosely about his neckline as she took in the smell of his cologne and the sea air about her.

The warm southerly breeze coming off the bay whipped her hair playfully. The fine darkened strands caught on the new growth shadowing the man’s cheeks.

The song ended but immediately segued into another romantic piece which predated Liz’s knowledge of any known composer.

Nat King Cole always put Red in a particular mood, and “Unforgettable” was one of his favorite all time recordings. He smiled slightly, “Before your time?” he questioned lightly.

“I know Natalie Cole.” Liz took exception.

Red chuckled his amusement. “Do you know her dad?”

Liz’s brow furrowed slightly, “He was the guy in the video with her.” she was proud she knew the answer. “I like this song.”

Red leaned slightly, his fingers spreading over the gauzy linen of her blouse, his lips nuzzling her neckline. “And I like you...”

Tightening his embrace, he stepped decidedly closer. She felt his erection through the soft cotton of his pants, leaning into the wondrous sensation. His hand slipped beneath the light fabric of her top, teasingly dancing along her skin.

His free hand glided effortlessly downward, curving to the roundness of her bottom. His lips gently captured hers in a kiss that was light and evasive, leaving the woman wanting more.

“We’re alone.” he assured quietly. “No one around for miles...” his clean breath fanned her face. Liz was momentarily startled from her dream state. She absently scanned the area of open water surrounding them.

He was right, there was no one in sight. The blue eyes returned to his, he seemed to be waiting for a response of some sort.

“It’s very nice out here.” Was all that came to mind. She knew instantly she had disappointed in some way.

The penetrating gaze shifted momentarily before returning somberly.

“Make love with me, Lizzy.” he whispered softly in her ear.

Something told the woman he was not asking for the normal mode of interfacing.

“Here?” she gulped uncertainly, her head swishing about her surroundings anxiously. She never had sex outside, let alone in the open like this before.

“But if someone should come...” was her first thought.

“The only people I care about coming... are you and I.” Red muttered intently.

Liz studied the academic features religiously for a long moment, weighing the pros and cons of the situation.

He pulled at her top, slowly lifting it, giving her the chance to bolt if needed. He was pleasantly surprised when she lifted her arms, allowing it’s removal.

“That’s my girl.” he praised seductively, removing his own shirt, tossing it carelessly as he artfully guided them to the place of his choosing.

“Did that just go overboard?” she giggled, suddenly feeling light hearted and free. Something she had never felt before. His hands pushed at the band of her shorts and panties, easing them off the shapely hips. They fell in a heap around her bare feet.

“Who the hell cares.” he muttered gently into her neck, smiling as her giggling increased.

His arm stretched across her back, holding her waist close to his abdomen. His mouth parted hers libidinously. He pushed hard into her mound, rubbing persuasively to and fro, the friction adding incentive to his already powerful proposal.

“I am having such impure thoughts.” his fingers ran along the plump ridge of her bottom, massaging intimately.

“You should be ashamed of yourself.” her hand worked its way down the front of his slacks, her fingers easing around the hardness of his flesh.

The man unzipped his pants, giving her more room to play. “I am...” his hand covered hers, encouragingly, holding it to its antics, “I will go to confession... later.” his tongue melded with her more timid one, as he spoke directly into her mouth.

“Are you Catholic?” she pulled away slightly confused, her hand halting its excruciatingly pleasurable pastime.

“No.” he replied bluntly, forcing her hand back into the slit between his stomach and trousers. She smiled appreciatively, returning her interest where it was due.
He shoved the offending material down his legs, his erection bobbing free of all restraint.

The sudden touch of his hardness against her naked flesh, very much reminded Liz of where they were and what could be seen. She looked around nervously once more, only to have her chin caught with thick fingers.

“Look at me.” he commanded roughly.

“Stop letting them come between us.” he held her face gently, his gaze boring into the azure depths. “For the next hour... no one exists but us.” he said, sitting into the lounge behind him, his shaft more than visible in the rising moonlight.

She looked at the large straining organ, forgetting all about her earlier worries, suddenly too intent on the possibilities the night held.

“I want you to enjoy yourself.” He patted his thighs, grinning.

“I always enjoy myself with you.” she tried to adopt the same ‘fuck it’ attitude.

Moving forward, she took his pre-offered hand, awkwardly maneuvering around his muscled thighs. She settled comfortably across his thighs attempting to ignore the obvious impairment between them.

Red’s sultry gaze swept her flushed body. The man’s eyes darkened watching the woman hesitantly lean back as she opened herself to his inspection. Liz felt the lovely sensation of the fresh air on her exposed vaginal area. It felt deliciously sinful.

Red’s fingers tightened methodically into the velvet flesh of her thighs taking in the visual portrait she presented.

He lifted his hand to touch the warm smooth flesh, pressing his palm between the valley of her breasts, his thumb easing over the beginning of a plump mound.

Liz loved the masculine possessiveness of his touch. She surrounded the thickness of his wrist, her fingers lifting insistently as she guided that touch.

Red’s hand engulfed her breast, lifting the heavy weight, kneading gently. His thumb skimmed over a nipple, bringing it to life.

Liz leaned into the administrations, encouraging such familiarity. She gasped approvingly as his tongue teasingly flicked about the taut peak.

Closing her eyes, she basked in his adoration before drawing her short nails over his length. He groaned against her nipple, sending an electric jolt to her center. Grasping his stiff flesh in her hand, she set a slow tantalizing rhythm before swiping the creamy fluid at the tip around it’s pulsing head.

“Baby...” He groaned piteously, nipping the pink bud, having enjoyed the contact of the heated skin pressed so intimately to his arousal. Seeking her lips, he parted her mouth expertly, drawing a response instantly.

At the conclusion, the woman’s breath was coming in short gasps of compliance.

Reaching between her legs, Red traced the very edges of her opening, refusing to escalate his efforts one iota and after a few seconds of such torment, Liz was literally squirming with need.

Her grip tightened on his shaft, urging him to her way of thinking.
“Permission to come aboard, Captain?” She panted heavily, her arms embracing him eagerly.

Red chuckled appreciatively for the unconscious display of wit. The sound causing her tummy to flutter tremulously.

“Permission granted.” the man sheathed himself with practiced ease.

“Where the hell...” Liz hadn’t even seen where he had pulled that from. He must be somewhat of a magician.

“I was a Boy Scout.” Red lifted her hips, directing her movements. Liz felt the heated tip of him at her entrance.

“Go slow.” His hands grasped her hips, waiting.

Liz sank down unto him, his thick head stretching her tightened muscles proficiently. She sighed happily feeling the stretch only he could provide.

She trembled with anticipation, wanting to shove his whole length inside her. But he was right, she should go slow, adjust her body to his thickness. Her brow puckered as she dropped lower, the spread uncomfortable for a moment.

“Easy...” He had felt the resistance.

She opened her eyes, staring into his. “...For you to say.”

Once again the throaty chuckle met her efforts. “Am I hurting you?”

She leaned forward, capturing his bottom lip with her teeth, suckling the pout. “Deliciously...” She lowered herself an inch, her breath catching, “I ache... and it feels so damned good.”

His fingers circled her clitoris, relaxing her muscles, opening her wider. She dropped the last couple of inches, drawing a deep grunt from the man.

“Did I hurt you?” her voice trembled, full of arousal and a little discomfort that was gradually easing. She had remembered his wounds too late.

“Fuck no...” He panted his breath fanning her breasts. Her tunnel fluttered helplessly around him, adjusting to his sudden intrusion. The experience was mind altering.

There was something very carnal about watching her assume command, feeling her barriers completely vanish minute by minute.

“Experiment.” he growled his instructions. “Do what feels good to you.”

Last night, she had been more open and relaxed with him. The position they now held, was something new and exciting for the woman. He wanted her to explore her options.

He wanted to watch her, learn her likes and dislikes. Each woman was different. Each unique. The best part about sharing intimacy with a female was just that... with this woman it was imperative that he know each and every nuance of which she was capable.

Liz put one foot on the floor, rising up only a few inches at a time. Red could tell it felt good and it seemed like the place she wanted to be for the end result. His shaft sank deeply, sliding along her clit perfectly.
Settling back on her shins, she raised high off his penis, sinking back down slowly. Her face told him, something was lacking in this technique. Tightening her inner core, she rose again, “Oh...” keeping her muscles tight, she lowered in agonizing increments, “Ohh...”

“Like that one?” he liked it as well, even more so knowing the movement had elicited that low, sultry moan.

“Mmhmm.”

Bracing herself on his shoulders put her breasts within kissing distance of his mouth. The man took full advantage of the fact, nibbling the dusky pink tips languidly.

Liz dropped her hands back to his knees, leaning her weight on them, undulating her hips in such a manner as to bring the man almost to full climax.

He steeled his mind, refusing to escalate matters at this stage.

“What do you like best?” she managed between gasps for breath.

“Watching you.” His eyes scanned her lithe body. She moved like an exotic dancer, and his body was responding of it’s own accord.

She blushed, though continued her motions. “I want you to enjoy yourself, too.” she glanced down where their bodies intertwined. “Does any of this feel good?”

He jerked his hips into hers, his erection just as hard as when they started.

“Baby, watching you get off is just as arousing as you stroking my cock.” he cupped her bottom, aiding her in her endeavors. “Now, ride.”

After a few miss-strokes she finally gained a rhythm that satisfied them both.

Her head fell back, the tips of her hair grazing his hands which supported her back. But his hands could not stay idle. He found himself exploring her body, cupping her breasts, touching her ass, his fingers stroking the peak of her sex, gripping her hips, tracing her thighs.

The man caressed her. Loved her.

Giving her the affection she damn well deserved from her lover, the adoration she damned well was earning.

Red stared at the woman sexually pleasing herself, totally fixated by everything about her.

The little frown on her brow as she concentrated, fascinated him. Her pouty lips quivered when she hit a most delicious spot. The agile tongue wetting her lips, excited him. She unconsciously touched herself, her breasts and sex. The whole picture was encapsulated by how unashamedly she took to her activity, which was breathtakingly beautiful.

She sat forward, capturing his lips. The kiss was wet, messy and undeniably sexy.

What a complete fool Tom Keen had been, for not experiencing all she had to give.

He didn’t think she knew how truly sensual and provocative she really was. The movements of her body mesmerized him. Watching her was watching an Art form come to life. Graceful beauty in motion.
He felt her breasts dragging across his chest, her slim hand at his neck which clenched in rhythm with the gentle sway of the boat and her hips as she rode him. Red realized fully just how damned seductive Elizabeth Keen could be.

The moonlight cast a soft halo which surrounded her dampened skin. Her hair danced about her shoulders, kissing the alabaster flesh intimately. She looked like a sea nymph breaking free of the ocean spray.

A sea nymph that beckoned him to a most certain peril. A danger and uncertainty that seemed well worth the risk when given a gift such as this.

There were just some things in life worth fighting for.

He would give his life for his child. He had always known that.

And now, for this woman, he was willing to make the same sacrifice.

Some may see him as insane, to gladly give his life for Elizabeth.

But then, they would never see her as he did.

Elizabeth was his lover. That they would see, that they would understand.

But he saw her as his future wife. Possibly, even the mother of his children.

His soul mate.

If he had his way, he’d marry her right this minute.

He knew he wanted her. He knew the life they could make together would be a good one. He knew they would have a wonderful marriage.

Now, he just had to wait for her to catch up to his vision of what they could be.

She slowed, rutting against him. Her swollen lips kissed his feverishly, sharp little exhalations beat erotically against his own mouth.

The man breathed his excitement, glancing down where they were joined, his eyes deepening. “You’re so damned enthralling.” He found himself needing to praise her efforts, “...enchanting...addictive.” he was loathe to admit.

He grasped her hips, helping her bounce that little body off his erection. “No one has ever captivated me as much as you.”

He drew his head back, watching the woman nearing orgasm, completely entranced. His need growing for her every second spent under her influence.

Liz gave into her own need, increasing the tempo of her movements two-fold. Red groaned, losing himself in the breathtaking sight.

Liz reached back, clutching his leg, as a counter weight, her free hand gripping his shoulder for support. A long drawn out moan escaped her throat, as she felt his large thumb rub her slit just where she needed it.

“There...” Her eyes squeezed tight feeling the stirring in her sex, spark with electricity. She shook visibly, as her core tightened convulsively around him.
Red’s jaw clenched tightly, his eyes smoldering pockets of irrepressible desire.

Words escaped him for once, so intent was he on the beautiful woman quivering in his lap. Her unbridled passion was accompanied by a feral moan of release.

Finally collapsing into him, Liz rested her head against his shoulder, her mouth issuing small heated bursts against his neck, heightening his own pleasure.

Wrapping his arms around her, he pivoted, keeping himself encased in her warmth, laying his pliable lover against the soft cushion.

His need for her grew exponentially and at this moment, a pervasive urgency overtook him. For the first time in his life, Red’s baser instincts overrode his normal tendencies for temperate behavior.

The intensity of his lust was uncontrollable, watching the woman open and relax for him, her teeth catching a swollen lip erotically as he pushed against her... hard.

Red gripped the side of the couch, his knuckles white as he found the rhythm he needed to establish, easily bringing her along with him as he strove for his own release.

The man readjusted his stance, hooking her leg over his arm, lifting her into his invasive thrusts. He purposely tapped that swollen nub inside her, bringing her along on the tumultuous ride.

Red had never been this rough before, surprisingly, Liz found she did not mind in the least. It was almost as if, he had forgotten himself completely, acting on instinct alone.

Lowering his foot to the floor, he released his hold on the couch, his fingers searching out her mound. He massaged the sensitive lips relentlessly, building the woman to her pinnacle of release.

“Oh, shit...” he closed his eyes, the vertex of his climax hitting him full force.

Bunching her hair in his fist, he drew her into a bruising kiss. His mouth dominated hers effortlessly.

The woman clutched the soft cushion above her head, arching into his next thrust, convulsing around his driving shaft just moments before she felt his heat through the thin condom.

“Oh, shit...” she whimpered brokenly.

He grunted laboriously, his body jerking hard, the last of his release filling the condom full.

“Soon, baby.” he vowed his conviction more to himself than the woman. “These things will be out of the fucking picture.”

He suddenly disdained the thin sheath which separated them.

He knew she could feel his essence so much better with these condoms, just as he could hers. But their instinct to feel one another naturally, was an overwhelming force against which they were fighting a losing battle.

They had to find a common ground, and soon.

He slowed, gripping the offending material as he slid free from her warmth. Discarding it quickly, he pulled the woman from the bench, embracing her tightly.

Liz smiled softly at the man, brushing her fingers gently over his face as they slowly came down from the high upon which they had ascended.
“I’ve never done that before.” she confided in a husky whisper.

“Did you enjoy it?” he enquired, kissing her fingertips gently.

“I’ve always wanted to, but...” It was so easy to talk to this man. “But you make me feel like... it’s okay.”

“It is more than okay.” she was stoutly assured.

“...So, you enjoyed it too.” There was always, in the back of her mind, a little insecurity. But more and more these days, she felt the playing field evening up.

“I loved every minute of it.” He replied without hesitation. “I’ve loved every minute I’ve spent with you.”

“You have?” she beamed her elation.

“Very much so.” he admitted earnestly, his hand covering hers in a warm embrace. “I have never wanted anyone as badly as I have you, Elizabeth.” he brought the small hand to his lips, lingering over the fragrant flesh. “No one...” he lifted sincere eyes.

“Let’s get some rest, hmm?” his roughened voice soothed the woman. “Come on...” he cajoled, “I want to cuddle you.”

Her lips quivered slightly, before lifting into a smile. “You are a professed criminal... who likes to cuddle.”

“Francis borrowed my teddy bear for the weekend.” he grinned, brushing a finger over her smiling lips as he tugged on her unresisting hand. “You’ll have to do.”

“I’m learning new things about you all the time, Red.” she tried to keep the amusement from her reply. “Some of them are downright scary.”

She did not see the quick grin cross his handsome features. Nor did he miss the fact that she hadn’t balked as he walked her across the deck, totally naked.

Chapter End Notes

We’re easing into some more sexually explicit areas now. The scenes will probably become more graphic as we go along, depending of course, on what you all have to say about likes and dislikes.

Hope you enjoyed this one. It was actually a lot of fun to write.
Elizabeth Keen tossed about aimlessly in her sleep, the dream she was having a disturbing one. Her eyes popped open, fully awake finally, her mind filled with vivid, crystal sharp images.

She searched about, finding her bed partner peacefully asleep and unaware which upset her all the more. She reached out instinctively, slapping the man’s bare chest angrily.

Red Reddington jerked awake, his mind a little fuzzy.

“You idiot!” Liz raised her hand again, her intention quite clear.

Reacting without thought, Red reached out, grasping the hand coming at him. He pushed at the hand and the person attached, easing his bulk over the unsuspecting foe. The man blinked the sleep from his brain, finding Lizzy under him and fuming.

“What the hell!” he released her only to have the woman attack him immediately once again. He caught the attempt easily, his brow furrowing darkly.

“I know I’m on drugs,” he hissed his annoyance, “what’s your problem?”

“You actually think I fucked Ressler!?” she snapped peevishly.

“What?” he drew back, startled at the accusation. Was she even awake? Was she dreaming?

“How can you think I’d sleep with Ressler!” it boggled the mind.

“In New York, when Francis caught you fooling around.” she began the explanation. “I bailed us out, told him I slept with Donald and you got pissed.” she admonished heatedly. “You think I slept–"

“Did you?” Red had caught up now, the anger resurfacing post haste.

“No!” she pulled against her restraints for he had yet to release her captured wrists. “I told you I don’t think of him like that!”

“Then why did you chose him!” he snapped right back.

“Because I thought you would remember it, if need be.” she bit out the retort. “And maybe find it amusing.”

Red let her know in no uncertain terms, “Well, I didn’t.”

“Of all the asinine things for you to...” she shook her head, the aggravation she felt coloring her judgement. “You didn’t hear me bitching about your little fling!” The fact still rubbed her raw, were she honest with herself.
“How many times do I have to tell you,” he released her abruptly, sighing heavily. “I didn’t have sex with Ariana!”

“I wasn’t talking about her!” she disgusted. “I was taking about the one in Italy!”

“Lizzy, we weren’t even involved then.”

“It doesn’t negate the fact that you were pissed off at me,” she was only too happy to point out, “for supposedly having sex with Ressler.”

Red knew what he had said would come back to bite him in the ass, he just didn’t know it would be completely out of the blue and at three o’clock in the morning. And while completely naked.

But then, he should always expect the unexpected when it came to this woman.

“Francis...” she was unable to believe that accusation. “You accused me of sleeping with your best friend.”

“He isn’t my best friend.” Red disdained, although admittedly the younger man was in the top five of what he considered his most trusted allies, but she did not have to be made aware of that fact at the moment. “He’s at the house all the time, and I mean... all the time!” Red was happy to air his grievances. “What else could I think?”

Once said, the words sounded petty, even to the man’s own ears.

_For heavens sake_ Reddington, the man chastised himself. _Why can’t you learn to keep your mouth shut?_

“You think I–” she gasped audibly.

“Have you?” His jealousy outweighed his common sense in this situation, however. “You two seem taken with each other all of a sudden, to my way of thinking.”

She struggled under him, fighting his grasp. “If I were a man, I’d punch your lights out!”

All right, so he was escalating the incident, but then, she hadn’t answered the question either.

“Why won’t you answer me?” He baited artfully. “Because you have? _Did you fuck Francis?_”

“He’s your friend! He’s my friend!” the woman was aghast. “I can’t _believe_ you would think I–”

“You’ve had ample opportunity to sleep with him.” It was debated moodily.

“I wouldn’t do that, for a host of reasons!”

“Name one.” Red could name fifty to the opposite direction.

“I...” she stammered, trying to filter through the hundreds of reasons why she wouldn’t, before blurt out “I wouldn’t abuse your hospitality.”

Of all the reasons she could have picked, that’s the one that she blurs out? _What the hell?_

“Nice to know you wouldn’t fuck my friend in my bed.” Red was at his best when he was being sarcastic. “So where did you do it? The entertainment room?”

Liz fell back into the sheets, rolling her eyes expressively. “I liked _you_, you moron!” she snapped, averting her eyes. “Past tense!”

The room fell suddenly quiet as the man processed the words. He had arisen in the bed, turning to face his foe but now, relaxed slightly, as he contemplated her mood...but more importantly, his own.

She refused to look directly at him, focusing on the Seascape painting on the opposite wall.

“You are so incredibly stupid.” she sighed, deflating a little, “How could you not know that I was attracted to you? That I was hoping for...”

“What?” he questioned yet again, looping it over and over in his mind, trying to make sense of it. She wanted...what? Him...okay, in what capacity?

“What did you want, Lizzy?” He exasperated.

“Well, if you don’t know, I’m not going to tell you.” She was relatively sure.

The man fell back into the mattress, his hands lifting in mid-air to signify...women!

“I wanted you to touch me...” She yelled at him, having arisen to her knees, and once again, lashed out, hitting his shoulder...hard. “Intimately! As in, slip tab A into tab B...insert repeatedly! Do I have to draw pictures?”

_Holy hell..._

“Is that why you didn’t?” Liz had her own point of view on the matter. “Because you thought I was having sex with Ressler and Francis!”

“No!” he grated brusquely. “I didn’t think–”

“Why Francis of all people!” she interrupted, not giving him time or opportunity to answer the question posed.

“I was jealous dammit!” Red exploded furiously.

Liz was taken aback by the statement and emotion involved. “Jealous? Of Francis!” she squeaked. “Whatever for?”

“Because, you accepted him!” Red was on a roll. “You enjoyed his company. You laughed with him. You touched him. You snuggled up to him.” Bitterness edged his tone. “Two years I tried to get a genuine smile from you. And Francis got it in two days.” He held up the fingers to prove as much. “I try to help you and get the third degree and distrust. Francis gets your gratitude and a hug.” He disdained. “I get scorn, hatred, and coldness. Francis gets playfulness, teasing and affection.” He slowed his diatribe. “...You tolerate me. You love Francis.”

Red squeezed his eyes shut, turning sharply away, pushing off the bed putting distance between them.

The quiet of the room was deafening. The man felt the alienation he had caused. He stared briefly at the same wall with the Seascape, not seeing anything but his lack of finesse. Falling back into his pillow, he cupped his forehead, scratching at an non-existent itch, sighing more than heavily.

_Fuck! Good job, Red._ The man ran his hands over his face. Less than one day in and he’d already fucked up the thing he wanted most in this world.

He had been making love to her and now, she sat quietly beside him.
Stone silent.

And it had taken him less than a few hours. He was efficient if nothing else.

First the anger. And after that, the scorn would follow. The hatred. The distrust would return, in spades.

The usual emotions she had held for him would be back in place.

He hastily sat, swinging his legs over the side of the bed, hiding his face.

His pain.

He thought he knew what it felt like to hurt before, in regards to Elizabeth Keen.

But he hadn’t, not fully.

This was gut wrenching.

To have been so close to having more with her. Loving her, in every way conceivable to him.

His whole body ached with the loss. His throat felt like it was closing off, leaving him without oxygen, choking the life from him. Though his heart beat rapidly, it felt empty and cold.

He felt her move on the bed behind him and wondered where she’d go tonight? Would she find another room? Or was she putting distance between them before telling him to leave?

“Francis was easy.” she whispered. He turned his head slightly, surprised to find her on her knees just behind him. He could only see a sliver of her silhouette, but she was there.

“There was no past, no hidden agenda. No secrets.” she explained quietly. “He was the only one who didn’t want anything from me, but to know me.”

“I didn’t want anything from you, Lizzy.” he replied just as quietly.

“You wanted the Fulcrum.”

“I don’t want the Fulcrum.” he gripped the mattress, leaning into his rigid arms. “They do.” he snarled softly. “And in turn, you.” he shook his head, “And that is not going to happen.” his face fell into his hands, exhaling heavily. This was going nowhere fast.

“Personally, I wish I never heard of the fucking thing!” his fingers pushed into his temples, easing the sudden tension headache.

“There were so many secrets, Red.” the woman wanted to reach out, touch him... but she didn’t. “I didn’t know who I was or who you were. I thought you and my mother had...I thought what I felt was... wrong. I couldn’t get close because...”

“If I had made love to your mother, been in love with your mother.” he followed the train of thought. “Could I really be in love with you, or was I transferring how I felt about her onto you.”

What had he just said? Was he in love with her? Focus! One thing at a time.

“Yes...”

“Well, you know the answer to that question.”
“Yes, for all of five days.” it was reminded. “God Red, if you had just told me...”

“If it wasn’t for Kate threatening me that she would do it herself.” he lifted his head, staring off into nothing. “I don’t think I would have.”

“Don’t you get it!” she moved slightly, needing to be near him. “Learning about the scars, brought us closer. You telling me about my mother, brought us closer.”

“And what if it had done the opposite? What if it had hurt you?” he turned his head. “If it had gone the other way.”

“Red, you can’t protect me from everything.”

“Maybe not, but I’ll still try.” he vowed sacredly.

“What the hell happened to her that makes you carry this overwhelming guilt?” she had to ask the question.

“Elizabeth...” his tone warned, “don’t.”

“After two years, I know better than to ask for what I want to know.” Liz slipped into her profile mode. “So let me take an educated guess instead.”

Red cradled his head in his hands, just wishing it would all stop.

“You promised her that you’d help her get out, and you did.” she began. “But the government didn’t hold up their end of the bargain and sent her back.” Liz watched his reaction and got nothing.

“You promised to help my mother hide, but they found her.” He tensed slightly, making her heart hammer in her chest. She was close to something.

“You worked together, maybe even defeated who they sent, but she knew they’d keep coming no matter what you two did. They wanted the Fulcrum.”

Red’s fist curled painfully into the bed, the color draining from his fingers. “Did she run away from you? Hide where you couldn’t find her? Turn herself into them and accept her fate?”

He kept the same pose, not moving one iota.

“Did they kill her?” she tried again.

Still nothing.

That left... oh God...

“She knew they’d never stop looking for her.” it was the only logical explanation. “I’d always be in danger...”

“No more.” he stated succinctly.

“She killed herself.” the horrible realization had dawned on the woman.

Red curled his fingers so tight, she swore she heard them pop under the pressure, confirming her hypothesis.

“She thought her death would throw the scent off. Freeing you. Freeing me.” she laughed
Red stared off into the hardwood floor sightlessly, his mind’s eye too full of visions... painful memories.

“And so do you.” Liz stated quietly.

He looked over his shoulder slightly, silent. Waiting.

“When you trust me. Open up to me.” the woman placed her hand on his shoulder, the warm fingers lightly touching his flesh. “I think we’ve proven time and again, we work better as a team.” She inched even closer.

“I don’t expect you to start spilling your guts, Red. But as you can see,” at least she hoped he did, “I found out about my mother and didn’t wilt.” she slid up behind him, pressing her bare breasts into his back, wrapping her arms around him. “I found out that you saved me, not my father and it didn’t crush me.” She lay her head on his shoulder.

“And if the next revelation does crush you?” he dreaded, knowing secrets he wished he could keep forever.

“Then you’ll be there to help pick up the pieces.” she lifted her head, studying his profile. “Won’t you?”

“Do you want me to be there?” his eyes finally met hers, a depth of pain so deep contained within, it took her breath away.

“Will you stop thinking I’m sleeping with everything in sight?” she smiled softly at him.

“Yes.” he stated so simplistically, it served to nullify any and all former animosity.

She crawled beside him, slipping into his lap, facing him. “Will you start talking to me more, being more open to me?” she read the hesitation on his face. “Not everything, Red. I just need you to–”

“I’ll try, Lizzy.” he negotiated.

Well, it was better than what he normally said which was either nothing or a complete change of subject.

Red felt her soft lips press to his, then her breasts tickle his chest hair before flattening against his pectoral muscles.

She still wanted to try. Still wanted him...

They had their first real disagreement and had come through it, nothing but a little worse for wear.

He still hurt inside, determined to get past the feelings. But he had to wonder, if next time, he would be so fortunate.

He’d give anything to just go away with her, leave it all behind and whisk her off to a secluded island. Hide her away.

She’d be alive at the end of it all, at least.

Or better yet, just use the Fulcrum, get the ball rolling and end all of this shit. Once and for all.
And while he technically could do that, he really wanted more allies to make sure no harm came to her when the shit hit the fan.

But he needed this time with her before he could face what his gut was telling him to do.

“What started all this shit anyway?” he tightened his arms around her, enjoying the embrace they shared.

“I had a dream.” she sounded like Martin Luther King Jr., even in her own mind. She shook the notion, continuing. “I guess I was replaying what you said in New York, though it actually made sense this time.”

Red chuckled softly, “You had a dream, woke up and hit me?” he reaffirmed his hold, his palm resting on her thigh. The woman shrugged, slightly embarrassed now. “What if what you had been dreaming didn’t really happen?”

“But it did.” she countered quickly.

“I’m asking if it didn’t.” he persisted.

“Then I’d have to make it up to you.” a soft smile highlighted her face. “Wouldn’t I?”

“Well, I should hope so.” He stood, letting her slide to the floor before heading for the bottled water. “Given that I had just been minding my own business, peacefully asleep.”

She playfully rolled her eyes, disappearing into the master bath.

It was only three thirty, but he was pretty much awake now. Maybe if he laid back down for a little bit, he might get lucky and gain an hour or two of sleep. If not, he could always read upstairs. He was no stranger to a sleepless night.

He always enjoyed the quiet of the ocean, it calmed his soul.

Though, he wished his sleepless nights had more to do with the naked woman who now walked towards him and not because his mind wouldn’t shut down.

He rolled to his side, watching her come closer until she was at the end of the bed. She stood silently, her eyes staring into his openly. She turned, heading for her side of the bed.

“I want to touch you.” he rumbled, stilling her in her tracks.

If they were really okay, she’d let him.

He extended his hand in open invitation to come to him, giving her the option. And she did.

The woman crawled up the bed, sliding under his arm, her nipples grazing his skin. Red dropped the appendage about the feminine indentation of her waist, drawing her closer.

He grasped a handful of fragrant tresses, dragging her mouth gently forward. He kissed the soft full mouth fleetingly, as she tilted her head to better feel the sensation of his lips.

Her small hand crept in between them, touching his rib cage, her slim fingers curling into his flesh. His hand kneaded her cooler one suggestively, his eyes staring into hers boldly, his free fingers caressing the soft skin of her bottom.

“Have I told you how attractive I find this?” his expression was as innocent as the driven snow, as those deft fingers elicited a decided wetness from her center.

The woman slid her hand over the round perfection of his own derriere. “Back at ya...” she lifted stylish brows, enjoying Red’s sensual chuckle to the fullest.

“You hussy.” the chuckle died a natural death. “I like my women brazen and bold.” those eyes deepened in intensity. “I find myself hoping your intentions are less than honorable.”

“Quid pro quo...” she murmured seductively.

“You’re really turning me on.” he advised readily.

“Oh, I can do better than that.” she lifted slightly, bracing her hands against his shoulders. The beautiful full mounds were presented for his pleasure. Liz’s head fell back as the heat of his mouth engulfed her nipple. She moaned melodiously as he suckled the tiny nub.

His palm spread over the small of her back, gently pushing her closer. She felt his hardness fall between her thighs as she shifted, her leg hooking over the depression of his waistline as she lay her weight upon his body.

Her clit rubbed along his length increasing the strength of her arousal. A rush of heated fluid wet her center.

Red could smell the delicious aroma of her excitement. He reached around, inserting his fingers into the sodden cavern.

His length slid along the fine hair of her lips, the bulbous head bumping against his wet fingers as they played.

He parted her mouth eagerly, his tongue slipping into the hot hollow, melting erotically.

Flames leaped to vivid life inside Elizabeth’s body. She whimpered in distressed anguish, pressing ardently to his warmth, feeling the hard muscles of his thighs against her velvet ones.

Red flicked his tongue leisurely about the sweet mouth, his stomach reacting to the erotic stimuli.

Blindly rolling the sheath in place, the man wasted no time, pushing against her opening, sliding easily into the molten depths.

He watched her face as he connected fully with her, getting lost in the hazy blue eyes blinking languidly back up at him as he completed their union. He moaned his pleasure.

Elizabeth returned his kisses wantonly, her senses straining. She was not thinking at all, just feeling. She was drowning in the sensual delight of his touch, his nearness... the very essence of the man.

Red growled his appreciation of her efforts, his hands running about the soft curves and delightful plains of her form whenever the mood struck him.

“Fuck, you smell so good...” He grunted, settling into the heated valley he so loved, his strokes strong and vital.

Liz’s mouth connected ferally with his neck line as she marked him repeatedly. The man closed his eyes, savoring her antics.

He unhurriedly made love to the woman. Taking his time, enjoying the rhythmic sway of her hips meeting his lunging ones.
She was still his and it amazed him that he could share this intimacy just because he could.

Because she allowed it. Because she wanted it just as much as he.

He hadn’t felt this unwavering devotion to someone since he had been with his first wife. And regardless of what anyone said or his reputation as a ladies man...

All he ever wanted... was this.

Commitment. One man, one woman. And the devotion they shared.

His deepened breath mingled with her own as their bodies connected once more. It became difficult to articulate anything but a deep gratifying sound of his eternal contentment.

The man rolled artfully, settling atop the slight form, taking control of the situation. He sank deep inside, moving this way and that in a sedate tempo. The hot moist surface of her pouty pink lips colored his judgement.

“This is how matters should be.” he voiced almost gruffly, continuing his deep even strokes. “And so seldom are.” he knew as much. Arguments sometimes cleared the air and paved a way for a better understanding. Communication was the key. “It’s my hope that we can always find a way to bridge the gap.”

“Find a way to bridge it now...” Elizabeth panted, “right now.” It was strongly suggested.

He chuckled, appreciating her wit, even though at this moment, she did not know she possessed any. He kissed her swollen mouth, nudging her nose adoringly, “I just want you to be happy...”

“I am happy...” she rasped, moaning when the man slid in deep, bumping the peak of her sex.

Red’s lips quivered gently, “Are you now.” he questioned lightly.

“So very...” her voice quivered as the man sped up, “very happy.”

“Are you even listening to me?” his mouth pulled at the corner, his finger tracing her pursed brows.

“Yes...” her lips pursed, accepting the kiss bestowed upon them, “fill the hole, make me happy...” she moaned appreciatively.

“Well, we got that hole filling thing down pat.” he glanced downward. “I believe I said...”

“Yeah, yeah...” she waved a dismissing hand about, “I’m hanging on every word. Could you go a little to the right.” It was not a request.

Red gave the matter up for lost, concentrating his efforts where they would most be appreciated.

He quickened his strokes, filling the room with the sounds he had quickly become addicted to hearing when making love with this woman.

The soft impact of his body against hers and those panted whimpers as he pleasured her, pushing her to the brink of climax.

“I’ll always give you what you need.” his thickness convulsed sharply, the electrifying response he received, most gratifying.

Liz’s fingers curved tightly into the sheets at his words, as he pumped faster into her, pushing the sound from her throat in sharp bursts that tickled his neckline.

Red’s eyes glazed over, her lust filled cries echoed softly in the room, releasing a measure of the frustration he was experiencing.

“Only I can give you this, Elizabeth.” he thrust heavily into her, fucking that little body just how she wanted... just how he needed.

His muscles strained from the exertion of the act they preformed and he knew he would regret it in the morning. But he had no regrets at this particular moment in time.

“You’re mine.” he stated simplistically, grunting hoarsely as an overpowering urge to possess her became too much to assimilate. “I’ll do whatever I feel is necessary to ensure that end.”

Normally Liz would not have enjoyed such a proprietorial attitude, but coming from a man like Red Reddington, it only made her feel more confident in their relationship. But at this moment, the need to release the forces converging in her body was overwhelming.

His own release came upon him unexpectedly, his body trembling over her writhing one, both lost in the throes of passion.

Liz felt the expansion of his girth as he gave into the ecstasy. The pulsing heat and sudden spread of his shaft opened her invitingly and the woman was able to finally experience the exquisite rush of completion.

The quiet of the room was somehow reassuring. It was beginning to feel comfortable and familiar to be held in Red’s arms.

Red returned his attention to Elizabeth, his thoughts very private as his eyes took in the visual beauty afforded him.

She stretched her leg into a more comfortable position, jostling his penis in the process.

He sighed more than heavily, reminded of the duty he had yet to preform. He slowly slid his length out of her warmth, maintaining eye contact with her the entire time.

Elizabeth watched the proceedings, a small smile gracing her lips. “You aren’t gonna bitch this time?”

The man disposed of the offending object returning his attention post haste.

“I’m living for the day that you seriously ask to have nothing what-so-ever between us.” he tilted his head ever so slightly, his gaze almost making her blush.

“You want to be with me like... that?” She had so many questions she wanted to ask him about... that. When was the last time and with whom? How long had they been dating? What were the circumstances that led to it happening?

At the height of orgasm, what would it be like to feel Red’s warmth fill her?

“More than anything in the world.” he confessed. He was of the Old School Way of thinking on the matter. “It is the most intimate moment a man and woman can share, in my opinion.”

“I agree.” she was excited at the prospect.

“When you are ready to share that with me,” he stated, “I’ll answer the questions rolling around in “Yes, I’m psychic.” he teased. “You didn’t know?”

Liz looked at him askew for he always did seem to know what she was thinking, but in a larger sense, how much really did anyone know about the man. He was a very mysterious individual.

Red was very pleased that she seemed so intrigued by sharing that particular intimacy with him. Damned intrigued.

He couldn’t wait to play with her a little, get a reading to see if what he hoped was correct, was in fact a reality. If he happened to have his cock buried in her while performing his research, it would be all the more fun.

It had been a hell of a wonderful day in retrospect.

He and Lizzy were still together and they had made love repeatedly.

And it had been really good sex. Damn good. He loved how uninhibited she was becoming. How she got lost in the moment.

But more importantly, there was a lot of emotions running beneath the surface as yet to explore.

While he had not told her his true feelings for her, because that would put way too much pressure on the woman. He had been able to convey those emotions for her physically.

“I love how this day turned out.” Liz smiled, snuggling closer to him, lacing her fingers through his, settling his arm back around her waist.

“For a moment, I had my doubts.” He confessed. “But let me tell you something...I will always do my damnedest to ensure that every day we spend together... will turn out just fine.”

After a relaxing morning and breakfast on the deck, the satellite phone had interrupted their quiet time. Red’s hushed tone alerted Liz to a problem.

“What’s going on?” she was naturally curious, sensing their time together was at an end.

Red sighed, his fingers dancing along the mahogany of the table. He hesitated uncharacteristically as if attempting to put the problem into acceptable words.

“Mark’s been shot.”

In the end there had been no acceptable manner to deliver the news. The woman’s gasp was cut short by a reassuring, “He’s out of danger for the moment.” he held up a stilling hand. “The particulars can wait.”

He arose gracefully looking down into the troubled blue eyes.

“How long will it take us to...” she was naturally concerned for his friend.

“Nothing we can do for the time being.” An odd look came over his face. “Mark is in good hands.” He took both her hands in his, kneeling, his forearms resting on his thighs. “Can I be perfectly honest with you?”

She was slightly taken aback. “When have you not?”

“This might put me in a difficult light.” he realized. “While I see the necessity of ending our time here, I have to tell you... I wish things were different.” A dark scowl crossed his brow. “I need more time. I know it’s selfish, I know it’s insensitive...”

Liz brought his hand to her lips, kissing the back of the virile appendage. She stood, holding her hand out.

He took it, the strong fingers intertwining with the slender ones as he arose.

They eventually gravitated back towards the bedroom, eventually falling into a mess of trembling and tangled limbs.

They made love, each feeling the bittersweet melancholy lovers feel, knowing their time together would shortly end. Lazily stroking one another afterwards, his fingers danced along her spine as they slowly came down from their high.

Liz’s thoughts were varied, as she gently played in the soft down covering his chest.

“Spending time with you, is of the upmost importance to me, Elizabeth.”

The deep rumble of his voice thrilled her. The words, pleasing her beyond measure.

“You don’t have to say anything else.” her breath tickled his chest.

He enjoyed her touch more than anything these days. “Had the damage not already been done...” he still tried to explain what surely must seem a callous gesture on his part. “Our taking the time to make love wasn’t going to make a difference, one way or other.”

She glanced up at him, sighing, before grudgingly nodding. “I feel the same way.” she did. “And I feel the same guilt.” she smiled at him. “But I don’t regret one minute of our time together.”

Red had needed to hear those words.

They lay together, quietly relaxing in their sated bliss until the lethargic feeling tapered, leaving them both rested and calm.

The woman reluctantly put an end to their idyllic moment, arising begrudgingly. She sighed heavily, forcing a smile.

“I have to pee...” she wrinkled her nose playfully.

“I will never get tired of these romantic moments.” the man rolled himself out of bed, beginning the arduous task of readying themselves for what lay ahead.

He watched the woman disappear into the adjoining bath, realizing he felt a sense of contentment with their new found emotional and physical connection.

Pulling up the driveway, Liz noted a contingent awaiting their arrival. Dembe and Silas met them as they rolled to a stop.

“What happened?” Red asked for the particulars as he opened his door, before heading to the other side of the car.

“Francis arranged a meeting between Mark and the O’Sullivan’s.” Silas watched the man help the woman from the vehicle. “When Francis arrived, he found Mark, along with some of his men, wounded.”

“You didn’t say anything about the men.” Red threw Dembe a questioning glance for the oversight.

“We didn’t know at first.” Silas went to bat for his friend.

“They are in good hands.” Dembe reminded. “Although admittedly, it was touch and go for a while.”

“They’ll make it, Red.” Silas assured.

“Did Mark say what happened?” Red threw his hands out to his sides, exasperated.

“They were discussing the deal and the next thing Mark knew,” Dembe relayed, “Francis was standing over him.”

Silas’ jaw worked irritably. “He got it in the back.” his tone was grim.

“In the lower back, mainly muscle.” Dembe corrected, checking with the large guard to confirm his facts.

“And Francis? Where the hell is he?” Red snapped.

“Looking for the O’Sullivan’s.” Dembe replied, his eyes locking with Red’s conveying a certain
“Is the idiot alone?” Red demanded, knowing how short the young man’s fuse was when he felt betrayed.

“His guys are there.” Silas shrugged apologetically. “Joe and David went along with them since Liz wasn’t here.”

“Well, she’s here now.” Red said, ushering Liz up the stone path. “Tell them I want them back.” The man’s intense eyes focused on the head guard, a look that told Silas things had changed in Red’s world.

“I understand.” Silas replied to the unspoken demand.

Red dipped his head quickly, content in the knowledge Lizzy was cared for before turning his attention to Dembe.

“Get Francis on the damn phone, please.” he stilled on the first step. “I want to make sure he doesn’t shoot himself or worse yet,” the man felt a tension headache beginning, “start World War III.”

Red gestured for Liz to head for the house, and made to follow her until he felt a slight tug on his sleeve. He hesitated, finding Dembe holding up a couple of envelopes. The large dark man’s eyes darted towards Elizabeth’s back.

The woman was blissfully unaware of the exchange for the simple fact Silas had maneuvered his bulk between the pass off.

Red sighed angrily, taking the offerings, shoving them into his inner lining of his jacket before continuing on his way.

While they were burning a hole in his pocket, he was already very aware of what the content would be. He just wondered what transgression was a point of interest this time.

Until he could read them for specifics, he was secure in the knowledge that no one could get within a hundred yards of the woman.

“What do you think happened?” Liz asked, as the man closed the door behind them shutting out the rest of the world for the time being.

“I haven’t the faintest idea.” Red admitted. “It’s pretty much a rule, that anyone can turn on you in this business in the blink of an eye.” he shrugged such concern away. “But sometimes, moments like this happen and it doesn’t make any sense, at all.”

“What do you mean?” she was more than interested.

“I can’t think of one reason why the O’Sullivan’s would turn on Mark.” And he couldn’t. “Let alone shoot him in the back.” he stated distastefully.

“Was there bad blood between the two?” she questioned.

“No, nothing.” Red was genuinely at a loss. “They have been doing business for years. There has never been a problem. It’s not adding up.”

“But you just said, anyone can turn on you in the business.” she shrugged. “Whose to say that Francis wouldn’t have—” Liz trailed off, realizing how stupid the remark was.
“The last person to turn on you would be Francis.” Red had picked up on her meaning. “And even if he was going to, he would have mentioned it to me first.” he shook his head at the absurdity.

“Whatever for?” She was totally stumped.

“Loyalty.” Red stated succinctly.

“I don’t think Francis would do anything... like that. I don’t even know why I...” she hastily attempted to correct any misconceptions.

“Francis will never turn his back on me.” Red said with absolute conviction.

She wanted to know more about this blind faith he had in Francis, but was waylaid by Dembe’s arrival.

The man’s expression was actually readable for once as he held the phone out.

“Where the hell are you?” Red snapped before he even got the object all the way into position to speak. “...Chicago?” he questioned, a frown on his face. “Don’t you dare go in there alone.” he warned. “Stay back and I’ll be there in an hour or so.” he took a deep breath, his head shaking back and forth as he listened impatiently to the agitated young man.

“Francis....” Red chewed the inside of his cheek, a nervous habit he had formed long ago, “don’t make me kill you when I get there.” he gritted. “Just watch them and I’ll be there as soon as humanly possible.”

Red nodded again, his shoulders losing a bit of their tension. “Watch your back.” he reminded before hanging up the phone, tossing it to Dembe. “Ready the jet, please.”

Dembe inclined his head, raising the phone as he walked from the room.

“Should I...” Liz hesitated wondering at her part in the situation.

“No, not yet.” Red shook his head, walking to the closet. “Let me see what the hell is going on first.” he said, pulling down a couple articles of clothing. “If the Feds are needed, I’ll let you know.” he threw the clothes in the bag, zipping it shut.

“I’m sorry.” he stated simplistically, turning to her.

She shook her head, perplexed.

“We needed more time.” Red crossed to her, his arms embracing her. “If the circumstances were...” he pulled back slightly, searching the lovely face.

“Mark got shot.” she frowned. “Of course you have to deal with this.”

“For Mark, maybe.” Liz replied seriously. “I’m perfectly happy with our time away and... you know.”

Red’s eyes lit with an inner lightness that was not there a second before, “No, I don’t know.” he leaned in, brushing his lips against hers. “Why don’t you expand on that for me.”

Liz fought the smile creeping it’s way across her face, to no avail. “I think your ego is big enough without me stroking it.”
“Baby, you can stroke anything you like... ego aside.” Red teased. “But I have to tell you,” he inched steadily closer, his gaze anything but neutral, “you are very praise worthy... ego aside.”

Liz felt that ‘ego’ lift by degrees. She tiptoed slightly placing her mouth suggestively to his. “I hope,” the blue eyes held his steadily, “we can pick up where we left off when you get back?”

“Of that you can be sure.” she was assured. Hell, he’d take a shot at her right now, if he wasn’t worried about Francis getting killed.

He walked to a closet shelf having released her reluctantly, checking the contents of another bag before closing it tightly shut.

Liz had seen a Glock, some clips and another couple weapons she did not have time to categorize. She watched contentedly as he changed into a suit.

Dembe gathered the bags, heading to the car to await his friend’s arrival.

Trailing after Red carrying his book satchel, Liz listened intently to the information he gave. The man’s steps tapered off as they reached the front door, a comfortable silence falling over them.

Red watched the woman absently twisting the ring on her finger, wondering over her thoughts. He had a few of his own that he would like to share but he wasn’t sure if this was the time.

“I'll miss you.” Liz confessed quietly.

Red broke from his thoughts, a small smile twisting his lips. He should have trusted his gut apparently. That was the exact thing he had just been about to say. He hadn’t wanted to appear too zealous after so short a time.

“I'll miss you too, sweetheart.” he dropped his bag at his feet, wrapping his arm around her as she willingly came into his embrace. “I'll call...”

Liz raised her mouth, capturing his lips in a sweet kiss, holding it for a moment. “I'll talk to you then.” she smiled softly before hugging him tightly.

“Please be careful, Red.” she muttered quietly in his ear.

“I’m always careful.” his hand squeezed the indentation of her waist possessively.

“Oh, really...” the doubt was apparent.

“Yes, really.” Red grinned against the side of her neck. “There’s so much left to be explored with you, I can promise with absolute certainty... that I have no intention of not returning to you.”

His mouth coaxed her lips into a warm passionate response. The moment was thwarted when the man heard the car fire up outside the ornate entrance doors.

“I'll be back soon.” he whispered, his tone rough against her kiss swollen lips. “If you go out, please take the guys with you.” he instructed. “And don’t overwork yourself.”

She nodded silently, accepting his mouth in a bittersweet kiss before the man stepped back. Dropping a kiss to her wrist, Red turned for the door, his look a rather dour one, before closing it behind him.
Liz sat at her desk, booting up her computer. She glanced over at the untouched sandwich, her appetite nonexistent since Red’s departure.

“Nora, I love you.” she muttered dispiritedly. “But I think your efforts are wasted today.”

Sitting aside her sandwich, she blew out a breath, opening the first of many emails awaiting her. Aram relayed that he had begun setting her up to receive files via a secure network. She had to contact him to finalize the setup.

During the call, while Aram completed the link, they caught up on office gossip. Ressler had a new girl, of course. Everyone was placing bets on how long the relationship, for lack of a better term, would last. Samar was still having showdowns with Moore, many of which, Aram had caught on camera, just for Liz.

“I’m taking over your computer for a minute.” the man said just seconds before pages with scrolling code started filling Liz’s desktop. She watched her mouse move about the screen erratically.

“What’s new with you?” the computer specialist enquired as he typed happily away.

Liz sat up, smiling brightly, excited to share her news. “Well, I...” she hesitated haltingly.

Could she tell anyone of her relationship with Red? She wasn’t the least bit embarrassed by it. But, what would it mean to the Task Force? Would they try to split them up?

If she wasn’t part of the team, Red would leave. It was as simple as that.

It was a stupid idea to try and break apart the team anyway. Which meant, that is exactly what the higher ups would do.

Red hated Bureaucracy and all the red tape that came with it. And quite frankly, so did she. It wasted so much time and effort focusing on the wrong issue, while Blacklisters roamed free.

A part of her was dying to yell it out from rooftops... that she and Red were now an item.

She would talk to Red about it first, get his point of view, then take it from there.

“Agent Keen?” Aram questioned.

“I have to finish off my PT and re-qualify before I can come back to work.” she stated brightly. “Which shouldn’t take too long.”

“Oh! That’s wonderful news!” the man beamed. “I can’t tell you how much we miss you around here.” Aram had lowered his tone, glancing hastily about to ensure no one was listening in.

“I heard...” she chuckled.

“It will be nice to have things back to normal.” he confided. “Speaking of which, how is Mr. Reddington?”

“I...” she hesitated, “what do you mean?”

“Uhm,” the man looked off across the bullpen, controlling a sudden need to stammer. Anytime he thought of the older man, his natural nervousness arose. “We haven’t seen him in a couple days. Just wondered if he was all right?”

Liz steadied herself, blowing out a long, controlled breath. Aram was just making small talk, that’s all. She would have to stop being so paranoid.

“Oh... yes.” her lips pursed into a small smile. “He’s all right. Just away on business.” she confirmed. “Should be back tomorrow, I would think.”

“That’s good to hear.” the man gave a genuine smile. “Okay, I believe you’re all set up.” she was informed. “If you could input your user ID and password to make sure everything is operating correctly.”

“What is my user ID?” she asked.

“Whatever you want it to be.” Aram replied. “Well, it has to be at least six characters.” he quickly corrected. “Random alpha-numeric are the best, if that’s helpful.” he suggested. “Just make sure you can remember it, of course.”

She thought for a moment, choosing something simple to type. She chuckled quietly to herself, flashing back to high-school when she wrote her boyfriend’s name on her notebook as she typed out... LKRR504.

“All right, and now your password.” the computer genius prompted.

Liz thought long and hard for a moment, wondering what to choose. So many people knew so much about her. She couldn’t use what normal people might. A family member’s birth date, anniversary, or even the day she joined the FBI.

She looked about the room aimlessly then smiled rather coyly, quickly typing out, R069172R.

Even if they did know her, it didn’t mean she had to conform to any set rules about password entry.

“Well, there you go Agent Keen.” Aram smiled into the phone. “You’re all set up.”

After ending the call, having promised to meet for drinks later that week, Liz dove into the files handed over by her team. An hour later, she had signed off on each, then moved off to the BAU files.

It had been a while since she profiled a regular, run of the mill, psychopath but after a few minutes reading over the notes, she quickly fell into the groove and completed one outline before she knew it.

Quickly submitting it to the BAU, she sat back, lifting Nora’s scrumptious sandwich to her mouth, absently reading the next file.

Maybe this wouldn’t be so bad after all.

A couple hours later, she sent off another completed profile. This was actually going a lot faster than she thought it would. Much faster than her first year with the Bureau.

But then, she had been hanging around with a Criminal Mastermind for almost two years, having learned a lot more about how the human psyche worked.

More to the point, she had learned to think ‘outside the box’.

It was funny to think how much Red annoyed her in that first year. He called at the most inopportune times. He was flirtatious. He pushed, prodded, poked...

He had driven her crazy, but what he had actually been doing was... pushing, prodding and poking at her... to think, which she had been doing all afternoon.

And that was to look beyond the straight and narrow.

He had believed she had the capability to be more... she was so glad he had encouraged her to take the fork in the road, off the beaten path.

“Well...” a voice slightly startled her from her reverie.

Liz turned, finding her guard swaggering into the room. Silas never entered a room, he dominated it.

“Well... what?” she rolled her eyes, already knowing where this was heading.

“Did you enjoy... your time away?” his look told her he had wanted to say something more crass.

“Yes....” the woman felt her cheeks flush embarrassingly.

Damn, that was annoying. Something else she had to work on.

Silas chuckled, pulling an ottoman between his legs, sitting leisurely. “You do know that your security will now be increased, yes?”

Liz tilted her head, confused by the divergence of conversation. She had been positive the man was going to ask what sexual positions she and Red had assumed.

“Yes?” she scrunched her nose.

“It’s one thing to be under Red’s care,” the man began, “another to be his lover.” He had a knack for stating facts all too bluntly.

The heated flush returned with a vengeance, though this time, Silas held his smile.

“I just wanted to warn you of what was coming.” the man said seriously. “Your life will change,” he shrugged the massive shoulders, “probably for the better.”

Liz took a deep breath, resigning herself to the fact. Then took exception. “Hey, my life,” she began, second guessing what she had begun to say, “well, maybe... a couple times...”

“I also want it made clear, the added security, in no way means... he doesn’t trust you.” Silas interrupted.

The woman frowned deeply, needing further explanation.

“Red has a lot of enemies that will stop at nothing to take what he cherishes in this world.” he stated in that matter-of-fact way. “And you, my Little Charge, are what he treasures most.”

Her cheeks took on a rosy hue, this time not of embarrassment, but pleasure. She had forgotten how much she enjoyed being with someone, being part of a couple. And if she were honest, she suddenly felt rather territorial herself.

“He feels it’s his right now, to do what is best in regards to you.” it was put succinctly. “Do you understand?”

She mulled over the news silently, trying to visualize what life with Red would entail. Processing the reality took a few moments, but in the end she nodded thoughtfully. Though, she was sure she was just seeing the tip of the iceberg.

“How do you feel about Red?” the man enquired candidly.

“I...” she hesitated, unsure how to answer the question. Her feelings about Red were private and if they were to be shared, they would be shared with him first.

“I’m not asking you to declare your love for the man.” Silas sensed her reluctance in discussing her feelings, at this time. “I only meant, do you fear for his safety?”

“Yes, of course.” she nodded.

“How has that feeling changed in any way?” he prodded artfully.

Elizabeth focused on the feelings in her heart. Visions of her time with Red flashed in her mind’s eye, a warmth encompassing her.

As their day had progressed, the touches had become more affectionate... comforting. The talks, more personal.

She felt a smile form on her lips, recalling how they had cuddled in bed this morning after having made love.

She hadn’t realized until just now, how important it was to Red to have that moment, regardless of the fact that he was needed elsewhere.

For the first time, in as long as she could remember, her feelings, her happiness, had been a factor in someone else’s choices. Put above anything else.

She felt an overwhelming surge of affection, her heart constricting painfully as she fought back tears, for the man’s actions had touched her deeply. Red had wanted to give of himself, to her.

And with that, came a sudden fear that it... he... would be taken away.

Liz sat up straighter in her chair, her fingers curling tightly around the armrest.

“...Yes,” she admitted freely, “my feelings have changed.”

Visions of having watched the man take two shots to his body. The blood that had poured from him had been startling and very real.

“He’s in just as much danger as I am.” her voice shook with the realization. “Even more so.” she declared. “He should have extra security.”

“I agree with your assessment.” Silas had watched her body language, already sensing how she would react. “Which is why I came to you now.” he stated one of the reasons. “I’m not sure how aware you are... just how scared shitless Red was when that... man broke into your home.” Silas had his reasons for bringing up the past. “He was powerless, unable to get to you fast enough, which bothered him for days.” he understated. “Then Carver happened...”

Liz tensed at the name, a sudden rush of adrenaline seizing her up tight.

If she felt like this now, safe in her own room... what had Red truly felt at that time? She felt the physical pain and emotional upheaval. And Red must have felt... responsible. That he had the ability to stop it and had been hindered by his decision to keep the peace with her, which had almost cost her, her life.

He must have felt very conflicted.

“I want to explain about that night.” Silas had been meaning to for some time now.

She waved the issue aside, but he continued purposely.

“We had been given the night off.” he had remanded himself countless times. “Red assumed... hoped, you would be going back home with him.”

“I was going to...” she replied quietly. “I wanted to...” it was getting easier to admit such things, especially to this man who never seemed to judge and accepted what was so readily.

“He knew something was wrong.” Silas further explained. “That’s why he turned around. He had been looking for an excuse, and found one, but I think his gut was gnawing at him. He would have found a way regardless.”

“But he still blamed himself, didn’t he?” she now realized as much.

“He did...” Silas nodded. “I don’t want you to experience that if you don’t have to.” the man shrugged nonchalantly, though Liz could see the truth behind the flippant attitude. “At some point we will probably be out-manned, out-gunned. We won’t win every time. No one does.” He had to be honest. “But I can at least give you both some assurance, that there will always be a fighting chance.”

She had to admit, when Red’s guys had shown up that first time with the intruder into her home, she had slept peacefully knowing that they were there and someone had her back. And of course, Red had been right there beside her, so to speak, on the phone, which was equally as comforting.

“Let’s do this.” Liz made an executive decision, then second guessed herself. “How much will it cost? And how many guards will he need to be safe?”

“I think we can work it into Red’s budget.” Silas grinned.

“I can do it.” Liz scowled unsure in her own mind if her budget could cover such an expense, truth told. She had savings however.

“Why should you?” Silas was at a loss. “Take advantage of Red’s corrupt way of life... I know I do.” he patted her knee, standing abruptly. “I will see to the details, immediately.”

He hesitated at the door, having promised himself that he wouldn’t give her the business. “Was it everything I said it would be?” the man laughed quietly at the woman’s brightened features. “That good, huh?” he seemed overly impressed. “The old guy’s still got it.”

“You know,” she straightened papers to hide her fluster, “we could have just talked.”

“That is not the face of a woman,” he pointed to her rosy cheeks, “who spent the day just... talking.” he grin widened as her blush deepened. “...I’m happy for you, both.” the man replied seriously, to her surprise. “I’ll get to work finding your guards.”

Liz watched Silas go, a little thrown by the change in atmosphere. Something seemed... different.
She couldn’t put her finger on it but it made her happy.

That sense of accomplishment she had been feeling since the early afternoon, suddenly flourished and she realized, while she didn’t need Silas’ approval... she did appreciate that he seemed genuinely fond of her now. He had taken one of her decisions seriously and actually acted upon it.

The day had not been a total loss even though Red was not here to share it with her.

She would have preferred the man’s presence of course, but she felt a new found strength realizing the source... Red Reddington’s absolute encouragement and his constant belief in her abilities.
Reflections

May 6

We lost track of Reddington, then found he had gone to New York
What was surprising was that you went with him.
What was unbelievable was that you stayed with him in a single room suite.
And then you were seen kissing him.
What the hell is he turning you into Liz! What other evil has he corrupted you with?
I never thought you would become his whore.
We have to get you away from him. He is filling your mind with lies...

What were you thinking!
Why the hell did you shoot back?
We could have been rid of Reddington with that next shot.
Your mind has been distorted from staying with him too long.
Or perhaps, you didn’t know it was the assistance that you needed to escape.
Maybe all you saw was a threat?
Forgive me angel. Of course you fought back.
You were not forewarned of the attack.
You only did as your training demanded.
We will try again. And when we do, you take cover while we dispatch his evil from the world.

Red scanned the letters once more, before tossing them to the ledge beside him.
Shaking his head with annoyance, he lifted his drink, sipping the liquid. He felt his blood pressure lower as the alcohol burned a warmed path down his throat before settling pleasantly in his stomach.
“Does he still sign his name with an ‘X’?”
“Why would you assume that?” Red inclined his head to the pages. “Reading his endless blathering grows tiring.”
“Silas?” The man’s tone said it all. “The man who still signs his name with an ‘X’.” A disconcerting brow was lifted.
“I’m sure that is for security reasons.” Red was relatively sure. Then second-guessed his statement. “He does it for a lark…” No, that didn’t sound kosher either.
“Do you want Silas to secure him?” Dembe asked, sipping at his tea.
Red shook his head, getting lost in thought. There was so much more to take into account now, besides the usual precautions.

He and Lizzy were... dating. What an archaic word. A couple. He tried again. No, that sounded vaguely... what century was he from exactly?

Whatever the label, much had taken place since he last read one of these ‘loon’ letters as he was beginning to categorize them in his mental processing.

Made very apparent by the events that had taken place between them.

He had made love to her. Finally.

Repeatedly...

And it had truly been worth the wait.

She was... beautiful, amazing... responsive to his touch, to his affection.

He felt at peace. A part of him had been missing and had suddenly been given over to him, leaving him feeling whole... complete.

When he’d been married, there had been a certain component missing. And he hadn’t been aware of what it was, until just now.

There hadn’t been a sense of unity. He and Carla had never been... a team.

He had done his thing. Worked, moved up the proverbial ladder, provided a comfortable living for his family. She had raised their daughter, made a comfortable home, made daily life run like clockwork.

But there hadn’t been any real passion. Over the years, he had wondered if there had ever been any love, to be honest.

About the only thing they agreed on was Jennifer. Their daughter.

Other than that, in retrospect, he thought maybe Carla married him because it was expected. She was supposed to get married, have children and be Susie Homemaker.

And while he had been fine with that, providing for her and doing what came natural to him, which was taking care of his wife and child.

He had to admit, he had craved sensuality, passion and affection from his wife. He knew they couldn’t make love in every room like he wanted, not with a small child in the house, but it was sometimes weeks before she would be intimate with him.

Understanding that she was tired from housework or taking care of the baby, he had hired a sitter and housekeeper, to take the load off... but still, she didn’t seem receptive.

Until that is... talk of making another baby was laid on the table.

He wasn’t opposed to another child. What he had been opposed to, was that he had been relegated to sperm donor and not lover.

He had been so angry, so hurt. Not to mention Red had a rough couple days at work, enough that his CO had noticed.
The man had pulled him aside and pushed until Red had snapped and let loose, ranting about how pissed off he really was with the matters at home.

His CO had smiled, gestured for him to sit and in the course of talking with the older gentlemen, had ended up with an appointment to see a marriage counselor.

Carla had grudgingly attended, and the relationship had strengthened somewhat overtime. Instead of focusing on sex, they’d cuddled, held hands and made an effort to reconnect over a couple of months period.

It had been hard not making love to her, not pushing the issue, but the adult time was appreciated. Then they had been given the clear to make love... which ended in a heated argument.

She wanted to go bareback, he wanted to use a condom.

They were not in a place to have a baby brought into the fold.

All the hard work they had done, had been thrown out the window in one split second.

Even the psychologist had asked if Carla had placated Red, to get what she wanted. He remembered Carla’s face very vividly when the Doctor, a female herself, had asked his wife if she loved Red anymore or was she simply doing what family expected of them.

The questions had been met with silence.

A silence that said enough.

Red had moved out that very night.

Not with the intent to divorce, but to give space, to really focus on what each wanted out of the marriage. The plan had been to spend time just communicating on every subject under the sun, not just their sex life.

It had been working well. He saw his daughter over dinner, played with her, they had bath time and then he’d read her a story while his wife got ready for their date before the baby sitter would show up, leaving them to spend the rest of the evening together.

They’d been dating somewhere close to four months, when after their date that night, they had gone back to his apartment to retrieve Jennifer’s book bag he’d forgotten after he’d picked her up from school.

In the course of gathering Jennifer’s things, they had made love.

And it was just as it had been in their first year of marriage.

Not only had it felt amazing, touching her again. They talked to one another throughout. Not words to arouse, but of affection. The touches and kisses were affectionate.

Needless to say, he was very excited by their future dates. They’d had two dates a week and over the next two month period, everything was working splendidly. Until their planned date in the second week of November.

Which turned into a disaster.

Both had forgotten that they were expected at a family dinner for the holidays, but went with the flow, agreeing to go, have dessert and coffee together afterwards in lieu of their dinner date.
In the course of the evening, there was a smattering of talk between the sexes as there always was, until Jennifer had spilled milk on her dress.

Going off in search of his wife to find the baby bag, he’d come upon her talking with the women, asking if she was pregnant yet.

She said she was trying and hoped the next test would yield a positive result.

Something about the way she had said it... set off warnings in Red’s head.

Pulling her outside, she’d confessed she took the birth control for a month, then stopped... and hadn’t told him.

It had felt like such a betrayal.

It was not so much that Carla had stopped taking the birth control. It seemed to him, that her only goal, her true goal... hadn’t been to make their marriage work, but to please everyone else but her husband.

He had turned around without another word, kissed Jennifer goodbye and left.

He continued the routine established with his daughter, but that was all. If anything, Red had gone out of his way to take Jennifer to the park or library, anywhere that was away from her mother.

He had spent Thanksgiving with them, wholly fixated on his Jennifer. He made sure to be there every night to have play time and read her a story before leaving, all without having said a word... to her mother.

And then he was informed that Katarina was in trouble.

On his way to the airport, he stopped by the house, telling his daughter that he loved her and that he couldn’t wait to see her dance in Swan Lake before kissing and hugging her goodbye.

She had skipped off to her room to play, leaving him alone with his wife.

They had stood in silence for a moment, before Carla sighed, sharing her thoughts. She thought a baby would strengthen their relationship.

His response had been to ask for a divorce.

He could still remember the look of shock on her face. She hadn’t been expecting it, at all.

Which to him, said even more about their relationship. The woman seemed obsessed with the fact that telling the family such a revelation would not only be embarrassing but that everyone would know their marriage was not the happy one she had presented it to be.

That Carla had just assumed that he’d live with it... to live without love or at the very least, admiration, left a very bad taste in his mouth.

Red quickly outlined visitation with Jennifer, alimony and child support ideas he had in mind, advised her to speak with an attorney, saying they would discuss the details further when he returned.

He wanted to be as amicable as possible, if only for Jennifer’s sake.

Over the course of dealing with Katarina, he had kept in contact with his lawyer and finally agreed to stipulations just before he returned for downtime. He had an early Christmas with his daughter and had loved spending the time with her. Before he set out to leave again, he met with his wife and signed the papers with out a second thought.

Surprisingly, Carla had hesitated.

“You don’t love me.” he had said. “I don’t think you ever did.” he sighed. “But we love our daughter and that’s all that’s important. When you’re ready, sign them.” he had given her a nod, before walking out of the office, intent that day on getting Jennifer from school.

It wasn’t until all the dust settled, and he was completely assured that everybody was in secure, though separate locations, that he learned Carla finally signed but hadn’t filed the papers.

He had offered to file them himself, when Carla had the gall to ask if he was having an affair.

At that time, Red had let her know, in no uncertain terms, he had never strayed in all the time they were together, and hadn’t even now, considering they were still married.

She looked so stricken, that he had a momentary lapse. “Okay, I will make a bargain with you.” he was willing to actually reconsider his position. “If you can tell me, to my face, if you can say the words... I love you Ray,” a part of him couldn’t believe he was still willing to make such a compromise, “we will go on as before with the understanding there will be no additional child at this time.”

But she couldn’t. Couldn’t even form the words that she may have loved him at one time. It even appeared she was choking on the thought.

By that time, the pain had lessened and watching her fighting to attempt to voice her affection for him, didn’t hurt him at all. He already knew what he was to her. All that was left was loving his daughter, and he was more than fine with that.

He never saw either again until a chance case with Lizzy and a meeting with Berlin. His ex-wife had grown even more cold and bitter, than he remembered.

All that mattered now was that through her childhood, Jennifer had been safe. He was glad Carla and she had been placed in WITSEC.

If only for his daughter’s protection.

He may not have any idea where the hell she was, but she wasn’t tied to him in any way, shape or form which meant she was completely off the grid.

One day he hoped to find his daughter. One day he would. But in the meantime, there was Lizzy.

He was very excited to see where their relationship would take them. She was like him, in a sense.

She may have been married at one point, but all she had been was an assignment. She wasn’t loved. She wasn’t shown true affection.

She may have thought Tom loved her, but was slowly coming to the realization that she had loved Tom so much, she had unconsciously, been filling the gaps in their relationship to make it seem as if the love was there.

But she would find out soon enough what it felt like to be the center of another’s universe, via him. Because Red loved Lizzy, whether she was aware of it or not.
She didn’t love him yet, that had to grow. But it would be nice if she was fond of him, which he sensed she was.

He was waiting for her to catch up to the intensity of his own feelings.

They had grown closer over the last few weeks.

He sat up, zoning off into the bulkhead, thinking back over that time.

He had been preparing for a trip to the frozen tundra, and in the midst of packing, Lizzy had given him a new pair of leather fleece lined gloves and a scarf because she knew it would be cold.

She said she had purchased them for a Christmas gift and had forgotten in the course of the very hectic week, to present them to their new owner. Regardless of when she purchased them, she had still thought of him. And a Christmas gift, at that.

On his return home, he found Lizzy had changed the bedding from a jewel toned to a soft blue quilt and fleece blankets that he thought were comfortable as hell.

He realized the reason which became more important because she was finally comfortable where she was. She felt like she was... home.

She had not only purchased the quilt because she knew he hated comforters, she had specifically bought him a new pillow with cooling properties because she had seen him rubbing his neck quite a few mornings. It felt amazing and his neck pain had eased considerably.

He loved that pillow.

To him, even though they hadn’t been dating per se, that one change alone was the equivalent to exchanging keys in his opinion.

And then it dawned on him.

_Had_ they been dating and hadn’t been aware of doing so? Not in the conventional sense, but had they turned a corner somewhere, even before New York, and didn’t even realize it?

“Oh my God...” Red muttered quietly.

“Raymond?” Dembe snapped.

Red blinked, finding his friend staring in that thoughtful manner Dembe had about him.

“I called you three times, you didn’t respond.” Dembe explained. “Are you unwell?”

“No, no. I’m fine.” he waved off the concern, then leaned into his thighs, lacing his fingers between his knees.

“Just woolgathering,” Red assured, “it’s nothing. Where were we?”

“I asked if you wanted me to instruct Silas to pick Tom up?” the man replied slowly, somewhat amused by his friends preoccupation.

Red shook his head, “Not until we get back.” he squeezed his hands together tightly, cracking the tension from the long thick fingers. “I want to be assured of Lizzy’s security before they do anything.”
Dembe nodded slowly, as if comprehending the words before a small smile worked it’s way onto his face.

“What?” Red sat back, taking another sip of the amber liquor.

“Has Elizabeth not been secure all this time?”

Red rolled exasperated eyes to his friend, knowing very well what the man meant. He was also fishing for confirmation.

“Okay, you meddlesome voyeur.” He sat the tumbler down, straightening his vest before leveling his eyes with Dembe’s. “Lizzy and I are dating... a couple...” he tried again, each adjective sounding so juvenile. “We’re together.”

Dembe smiled slowly, “Yes, I know.”

“Francis told you?” Red grumbled, knowing the young man couldn’t keep a juicy tidbit like that to himself for very long.

“No...” his friend grinned, his brow lifting as though waiting for Red to make the connection.

No, of course Francis wouldn’t have said anything, since he already thought they were engaged. Then understanding dawned on him.

“How long Dembe?” Red asked quietly.

“I think I first noticed the changes after the guards fought in the foyer.”

Red sat back, bouncing once against the expensive leather, staring at the man in bewilderment. “Why didn’t you say something?” he exasperated.

Dembe chuckled into his tea glass, tickled by not only the question, but the higher tone in Raymond’s voice.

“I thought you knew.” he chortled as he watched his friend lean back into his elbows.

Red dropped his face in his hands, muffling his voice. “That was a stupid fucking question.”

“Yes.” Dembe confirmed. “You are excited.” it was stated placidly. “Perhaps a little frightened of the future.”

Red sighed, “Yes,” returning for solace to his drink.

“It wasn’t solely your fault your first marriage failed, Raymond.”

“I hate when you do that.” Red grumbled when Dembe smile knowingly, further irking him that the other man had followed along easily with his esoteric thought

How Dembe knew what he had been thinking, he’d never know. Though, they had spent enough time together, and the subject matter at hand, he supposed, was easy enough to guess.

But it didn’t lessen that he hated the man’s ability to read his mind.

“You are aware of your flaws, and own up to them. You also know your strengths and how to apply them best to serve her.” Dembe bolstered. “You have both done this before.”

“Tom Keen...” Red scowled.
“You are not Tom Keen.” Dembe stressed. “You love Elizabeth.” he stated the facts as he knew them. Facts that Raymond didn’t deny. “You also respect her, care for her.”

Red nodded silently, listening.

“She needs your support, understanding and patience.” Dembe said.

“I will always give her those things.” Red stated without hesitation.

He knew that it wasn’t always going to be picture perfect. He would face the obstacles when they came. He was very adept at overcoming obstacles.

“But she also needs the romance, affection and love only you can give her.” Dembe added.

Red fell silent, so many thoughts crossing his mind. He felt comfortable voicing the most condemning to this man. “Dembe, how can she ever love the man I have become?”

Dembe frowned, setting his tea on it’s saucer, staring at the man in confusion.

“She already does.”

The plane had fallen silent after Dembe stated what he believed to be a fact, knowing very well, Raymond did not yet believe it to be so.

But then, Elizabeth may not have come to that conclusion herself.

Though her actions spoke louder than words, if anyone asked him.

Red felt the plane begin to make its final descent just as he finished off his drink and locked his thoughts away for the moment, getting his head back in the game. Readying himself for what came next.

Finding out what the hell happened, and why.

He needed to get home to Lizzy. He had promised he would come back.

And this was one promise he intended to keep.

As they hit the runway, he glanced out the window, finding Francis there waiting for him, as requested. Much to his surprise.

He would have thought he’d have to hunt the boy down, he had been on such a tear earlier, wanting to enact revenge on those who had hurt his friend.

They coasted to a stop, and as per their usual procedure, Dembe headed for the door while Red gathered his bag. Both men made their way down the stairs.

“Tell me what you know...” Red said as he fell in step with the younger man.

“The O’Sullivan’s claim they had nothing to do with it.” Francis gritted.

“And they left Mark there, why?” Red asked, before taking a seat in the back of the car.

“That’s what I wanted to fucking know!” Francis snapped.
Red set a steadying hand on Francis’. “Calm down. We’ll figure this out.”

“Whatever the outcome, I will no longer be using their services.” Francis seethed.

Red side glanced the young man. “Keep your perspective.”

Much like himself, Francis didn’t take kindly to back stabbers. Only time would tell how Francis would handle what he considered a great act of disloyalty.
May 7-8

The next couple days passed in a flurry. Liz whittled down her case files while Red, Dembe and Francis worked to find out what happened with Mark.

Liz had visited Mark herself, seeing if he needed anything in particular. She found the man affable, amusing and in good spirits despite what had happened.

It was late afternoon when Red had called to inform her that they were close to settling matters once and for all.

Liz hadn’t wanted him to go, but knew he had to. Red’s sense of loyalty would allow nothing less. Word had spread he was on the hunt for these men, he would lose face if did not follow through on the perceived threat.

Even with assurances from Silas that a team was now following Red, the woman felt uneasy when Red reached his final destination. Especially listening to how pissed Francis was in the background, despite Red’s calming influence.

Adding to the dilemma, she hadn’t known what to say or do before they had ended the call. There was an awkward silence for a few seconds on both parts. Simply saying that she’d see him later, didn’t seem enough somehow.

“You have that fedora on?” she questioned lightly, an under hint of sexuality in her tone.

He laughed throatily, “What?”

“I really like you in a fedora, so bring it home as soon as humanly possible.”

The man’s smile softened as did his tone. “Is the fedora the only thing you like?”

“Yeah, so don’t get it messy or anything.” she tried for flippancy, but her heart constricted slightly and instantly dismissed the images her statement had conjured. “I’ll expect you soon.”

That intimacy she had been missing, had come back with a vengeance.

There were no words of adoration, but it had felt personal, private. Something just for them.

There had been a moment of silence, before he gently severed the link that had both worried and calmed her. Had he been as reluctant to end the conversation as she?

Liz had wandered restlessly through the house for a little bit, wondering what was happening on Red’s end of things.

“You can’t do this.” Silas stated quietly, making her jump out of her skin, his bulk suddenly barring way of her incessant pacing.

“Do what?” she frowned, rubbing the cell phone in her hand methodically.

“Let the worry eat at you.” his expression darkened. “Red knows what he’s doing.” she was informed. “You pacing the floors isn’t helping him or you.”
“...I know.” she looked up at her guard, hiding her shaking hands, folding them beneath her breasts. “But this is the first time I...”

“There’s a different dynamic now.” he acknowledged.

Liz sighed heavily, leaning back into the wall behind her, nodding. “Yeah...”

“Have you ever dated someone in the Service?” the man enquired, bracing his arms on a table behind him, relaxing into his newfound stance.

“No...” she shook her head.

“Well, you need to get it in your head, that you are now.” It was advised. “Red may not be in uniform, but what he’s doing is no different.” he tilted his head slightly. “He’ll go out on an operation and come back when they’re finished.” his brows raised slightly. “It’s as simple as that.”

“Maybe it wouldn’t be so bad if I could be like other girlfriends and write to him, to pass the time.” she strived for lightness.

“Who says you can’t?” the man’s brow furrowed.

“Doesn’t it seem a bit redundant.” she half laughed. “He will be home before I could send anything.”

“No, because you’re getting something off your chest,” he spoke slowly as if to speaking to Francis. “I’m not angry with him or...” her brows crinkled, showing her confusion.

“Think of it as a diary, it’s just in letter form.”

Liz hadn’t thought of it in those terms. She had never been really good at keeping a diary, but she was really good at writing letters and it would be an outlet to express her feelings at any give time or situation.

“He feels the same about you, you know.” Silas broke her reverie. “He just expresses his emotions in another outlet.”

“You mean, he worries about me too?”

“Well, you are younger, not as experienced.” he allowed. “We all know that.”

She couldn’t argue with him, though she very much wanted to. She had been afraid a couple times, granted. Unsure what her next move should be in a dangerous situation where seconds counted.

Wondered if she was going to die.

It all happened within the span of a split moment. But it still happened. Seconds of distraction.

“He doesn’t writes me letters,” she allowed a teasing smile to touch her lips, “so what does he do?”

“He calls to hear your voice.” Silas hesitantly confided.

Though Red had never divulged any personal information such as that, after the man had assured that Liz was alive and well, Red had smiled every time he glanced at the phone the rest of the day.

Silas was a trained observer and he had observed such things.
“You’ll figure out the balance between home and work soon. Don’t worry.” Silas bolstered. “Do your job, go on with your day... Red will be fine.”

“And if he’s not...” she questioned softly.

“We’ll handle it.” again Silas’ brows took on that disapproving ‘look’. “We always do.”

She startled visibly when a trilling sound came from her phone, a sound which usually annoyed her. But right now, it was the most beautiful sound in the world.

She looked down at the screen, tensing. “It’s Dembe.”

Silas stood straighter, readying himself to take action if need be. “Answer it.”

Taking a shaky breath, Liz brought the phone to her ear. “Dembe?” she heard her voice shake, chastising herself.

“Baby...” Red’s low voice eased her panicked heart, her breath escaping in a tremulous rush.

“...Red.” she lifted relieved eyes to her guard, setting a bracing hand on a nearby chair. “Are you okay? Is everyone—”

“Yes, we’re all fine... for the most part.” he glanced around the dockyard at the heavily armed men. “We’re in the process of cleaning up and—”

“You’re not telling me something.” she narrowed her eyes, her hand gripping the phone tighter.

“Then you don’t need to know.” Silas piped in helpfully.

“He’s my boyfriend.” she snapped.

The man’s throaty chuckle tickled her ear, instantly making her press the phone closer to hear it more clearly.

Red was really enjoying this new aspect of their relationship. She seemed truly relieved, for once, to hear his voice.

“I miss you.” that voice dropped into a sensual caress.

Liz’s eyes softened, her shoulders relaxing as a slow smile graced her lips.

“Whatever you said,” Silas called out loud enough for Red to hear, “just turned our resident FBI agent to a pile of gooey mush!”

Though Red’s soft laugh returned, Liz shot the guard an evil glare, throwing a pillow at him, which he caught easily much to her annoyance.

“I know something isn’t right.” she stated emphatically, shooting the guard another dirty look.

“Francis got a flesh wound.” Red chuckled.

“It is not a flesh wound!” the younger man groused in the background. “A tank could drive through this thing!”

“You couldn’t even get the head of a needle into ‘that’ thing.” Red corrected.
“Is he really okay?” Liz wanted assurances.

“He’s fine.” Red grumbled. “Because it is just a flesh wound.”

“Look at this!” the young man had obviously stepped closer to show off his boo-boo, “Look at this!”

“What happened?” she asked, having heard Red’s melodramatic sigh.

“The O’Sullivan’s were being framed by the Ashcroft’s.” Red turned his back on Francis who was clearly favoring the minor wound.

Red secretly thought the boy was more upset by the fact the bullet had ruined his new, expensive leather jacket. Francis was sticking his finger through the holes, wiggling it somberly, showing it to anyone who would pay attention.

“Another faction who wanted the business.”

“And now they are...” she winced physically, having a pretty good idea where this was going, but some morbid sense of morality made her ask the inevitable.

“Probably going to be facing ten to twenty in the Federal Penitentiary.”

“You didn’t...” she hesitated, unsure how to voice her thoughts, especially after how she upset Red in New York.

“Kill them?” he supplied for her. “No.”

Red quickly outlined what had happened, how they involved the police and were now cleaning up the mess left behind.

With no loss of life on either side.

“What can I say,” Red’s warm voice washed over her, “a good woman has a way of changing a man.” his voice muffled for a moment. “Just a minute, sweetheart.”

She frowned a little, thinking about what he had just said. Was he purposely changing his modus operandi to accommodate her feelings? If that were the case, it could prove disastrous for the man. It was an issue that must be discussed and hastily.

“When will you be home?” she asked quietly.

“Could be a couple hours, could be in the morning.” he could not give a definitive answer.

“You will keep in touch?” Liz needed him to.

“You know I will.”

May 9

Red called again twice, once to update her and then just before she went to bed, to wish her goodnight.
A couple hours into reading the new files she and Silas had picked up from the Blacksite, Liz was surprised to hear the doorbell ring in the late afternoon.

Sliding the radio closer, she waited for Silas’ forthcoming information. She hoped the intruder in this instance, was the ever reliable pizza guy.

She was more than pleasantly surprised to hear Red’s voice echoing in the spacious foyer. It took only seconds for the familiar footfalls to resonate down the long corridor.

“You’re home.” she brightened as the man walked briskly into the bedroom.

“So I am...” he grumbled, rolling his eyes to find her sitting on the bed, going over a file, Keres in her lap. Crawling up onto the bed, he unceremoniously sat the cat aside. “You are not the pussy I’m wanting.”

Her smile widened as he flicked the brim of his signature fedora.

“Should I keep my hat on?” he teased, moving into the giggling woman’s sphere, gingerly kissing that smiling mouth, pushing aside her work files as he centered her on the bed.

He fixed her securely in his embrace, his knee subsequently pushing her unresisting thighs as he settled his weight half on, half off, the curvaceous form. “...I missed you.”

She lost herself in the passionate kisses for a brief moment before drawing back slightly, a frown on the pretty brow.

“Did you ring my bell?” she moved her head, allowing the man to kiss her neck to his heart’s content, before gasping as his large hand cupped her crotch.

“You can ring my bell... later.” she opened her legs wider for him to play with the area he seemed so intent on. “But I meant, my doorbell.”

“I did, yes.” he replied, nipping her earlobe.

“Why?” she drawled.

“Because it is proper etiquette when visiting someone’s home.” he mumbled against her soft skin, his fingers deftly plucking at the buttons on her top.

She rolled to the side, aiding in her shirts removal, scowling. “You’re my boyfriend... significant other,” she rolled the other way, losing the shirt completely, “...whatever.”

Red smiled against her mouth listening to her struggle, as he had, trying to label what they were. They really needed to find something that described them... their relationship. Whatever the hell was going on between them.

“Yes, I am.” his attention focused hastily on the sight of the newly bared flesh as he removed her bra.

“You know...” she sighed happily as his mouth engulfed her nipple. The woman gently removed the fedora, laying it aside, “you can just come in.”

“Oh, I plan to...” his gruff voice assured her as he pulled at her pants, revealing little blue panties to his view.
“I meant...”

“This is your home, it is only polite that I knock first.” he kissed her hip bone, as he artfully lowered one side of the offending object in his way.

“I don’t want those conditions between us.” she sighed softly.

“I don’t want anything between us at this moment.” Red pulled the skin tight pants free of her feet, tossing them carelessly. He bent, gently licking her ankles, kissing her shins, her knees... until he heard her giggling infectiously yet again.

He looked up, sighing heavily. “Really?” he questioned moodily. “Fucking cat.” he grumbled, watching Keres settle comfortably across Lizzy’s bare chest.

“Is this a new kink I’ve never heard about?” Silas asked from the doorway, his stocky frame filling most of the void. Behind the man, the soft light of the hallway filtered around his bulk.

Red snapped his eyes towards the wide open door and the large guard.

“Something you’ve never heard about...what the fuck...” Red gritted. “Don’t you knock?”

“Not normally.” the large man shrugged. “The element of surprise normally works better for my kind.” he clenched his jaw quickly, holding off his smile when the veins in Red’s neck bulged.

“In this case though, I was just making my rounds...the door was wide open.” he gestured to the open door as exhibit A. “Now I find my charge being... manhandled.” Silas again, gestured to exhibit B.

The woman in question giggled further when Keres flicked it’s tail, smacking her in the face.

Red scrubbed at his face hard, removing his jacket. He grabbed the cat off her breasts, tossed the jacket over her partially nude form before stalking towards the door.

He shoved the cat into the guard’s waiting arms. “Skip your checks... until summoned.” Red directed harshly through his clenched teeth. “She’s covered.”

“Well, she is now.” Silas laughed, backing up quickly as Red slammed the door in his face.

Red glared at the door, tossing the lock for good measure before heading back for little treasure awaiting him on the bed.

He lay beside the woman, who had unearthed her face, the blue eyes peering mischievously out from behind the stylish jacket.

“Well, that was embarrassing.” she winced through her smile. “How will I ever live it down?”

Red gripped the jacket, yanking it free. He stared contentedly at the half naked woman laying beside him.

He loved the way she caught her lower lip with her teeth and batted those enormous blue eyes, the demure appearance was sexy as hell. But when she breathed in, pushing her breasts forward... it beckoned him back to his original intent.

He forgot all about his ire, preferring to concentrate on more pleasant matters.

Their mouths connected, the rest of the world slipping away. His hands roamed the curves of her body. He allowed her to remove his tie, his shirt, then felt the latch on his belt release.

He worked his hand under the rim of the skimpy panties she wore. Massaging her gently, he felt that little nub quickly respond to his touch.

“Did you miss me?” he rumbled deeply.

She nodded sharply. “Shit...” she lifted urgently into his hand, “yes, I missed you.”

He kneaded her breast affectionately, his eyes deepening involuntarily.

She wiggled into the touch, watching his head lower. “Say it again...” she whimpered breathlessly, her hand holding him to his excruciating indulgence.

“Say what again?” he muttered around the nipple in his mouth, not opposed to placating her in any manner.

“That you missed me.” she lifted to his intense exploration.

“Damn right I missed you.” he groaned, feeling the rush of wet heat on his fingers as he pet her opening. “You’re so wet...”

She gasped, her eyes flying open, as a realization hit her full on.

“Oh shit!” she struggled to move him aside, before hastily scrambling off the bed.

He rolled to his side, following quickly behind her, as she bolted for the bathroom.

“Shit! Shit!” she bitched, her movements quick.

Red stopped at the tiled floor as he watched her race to the toilet, dropping her panties in the sink as she passed, the answer to his questions more than apparent now.

“Please tell me I didn’t get anything on the bed...” she groaned.

Red walked to the sink, automatically running water over the stained panties. He left momentarily, checking her precious quilt and sheets and found nothing, not even a speck.

Hearing the toilet flush, he headed back to the bathroom to resume his task. He had just rinsed the remaining blood from light blue fabric when he heard the door open on the adjoining bathroom cubicle.

He glanced over his shoulder to find her standing there without a stitch on. Her flushed body, tousled hair and hazy, sparkling eyes captured his attention exclusively.

“Red, I’m so sorry.” she grimaced, having seen the remaining blood on his hand.

He frowned, then realized what she was looking at. “Oh, would you stop.” he flicked his hand under the running water, washing up quickly. “I was having a wonderful time. Were you?”

Their eyes met in the mirror, a slow smile overtaking his handsome face. He traced her body down as far as he could see, before returning a sultry stare.

Dropping the towel in his hands, he turned on her. “Well...” he walked slowly forward, his hand reaching out, snagging her bare bottom, persuasively dragging her closer.
The woman felt her naked body press intimately to his half naked one before relaxing into his touch. She placed her palms flat against his chest, enjoying the warmth.

“Admit it,” he prompted, his look more than confident. “Before this happened,” he glanced down in a perfunctory manner, “you were not adverse to having me between your legs.”

Liz wrapped her arms around his neck, burying her face into the crook of his neckline. Red settled his other arm around her back, embracing her tightly. He had his answer.

“Then, that’s all that matters,” he muttered, his breath fanning her temple. He lifted her face, his lips touching hers almost reverently. “Have you been taking those pills I gave you?”

“Yes, which is why I kind of forgot I...” she gestured lamely to her person, “I haven’t been...you know.”

“Cramping?” Red smiled.

She rolled her eyes expressively. “...Yes,” she shrugged it off, looking back towards the bedroom. “Did I get anything on the bed?” she questioned, then cupped her abdomen, wincing slightly, said pills wearing off.

“Nope...” his smile fell away, instantly replaced by a frown. Deftly grabbing the needed medication, he placed them along with a bottle of water in her hand, then jerked his head back towards the bedroom. “Shall we?”

She smiled at him, nodding eagerly. She reached for the cabinet for her supplies, only to have Red put a hand out, stopping her.

“Go...” He kicked off his shoes, urging her to the bedroom. “Go on, I’ll be right there.”

She looked at the tampons, then shrugged. She walked towards the bed only to feel a strong set of arms capture her seconds later. He pulled her into his body, letting her feel his naked skin.

“This seems so familiar.” she smiled, cuddling back into his embrace. “Do I know you.”

“Better than anybody I know.” he rubbed his hand over her abdomen, soothing her aches and pains.

Red drew back the blankets, laying out a towel before she crawled up on the bed. He closed the blinds, shutting down the lights, leaving the room in a soft comfortable glow. The late afternoon sunshine filtered along the edges of the wood slats casting a intricate pattern on the ceiling.

He slid in behind her, resuming his earlier actions, gently massaging her abdomen. She got lost in the hypnotic and soothing affection, relaxing totally.

“Does that feel better?” he whispered.

“Yeah...” she sighed languidly, feeling Red’s flaccid length rub against her bottom.

She suddenly became very aroused.

The thought the man had completely set aside his earlier need to wholly concentrate on her instead, was more appreciated than he would ever know.

She gripped his hand, directing it over the flat mound of her tummy, settling it on the top of her sex.
“Baby, we don’t have to do anything.” he assured quickly. “That’s not what this is about.”

She moved his hand lower, feeling his fingers instinctively brush at the trimmed hair of her mound, “I’ve been curious,” she brought the subject up for debate, “since our talk.” she moved closer to him in every possible way. “What all the fuss was about this period thing.”

She felt his lips curve into a smile at the edge of her hairline. His fingers dropped suggestively against her clit, picking up where they had left off.

She leaned back into his chest, spreading her legs a little to accommodate his probing, quickly feeling her body respond to his expertise.

“Is that how you like it?” he asked quietly, slowly working a finger inside her.

“...Yes.” she replied breathlessly, fixated on how his thick finger masterfully stroked her.

He established a gentle rhythm, his free hand lifting, palming her breast sensually.

Liz found herself moving in time with his efforts, her breathing heavier, her moans soft and contented.

Red moved his fingers in concert with her movements, inching the woman closer to release when she suddenly pushed at his hand, halting all activities.

Before he could question the abrupt cessation, she turned quickly, kissing the man fiercely.

“Well, don’t stop now,” she whispered silkily against his mouth, “it’s just starting to get good.”

Red’s breathy laughter made her smile widen, as he obeyed the request. He was more than pleased with the new position since it gave him better access to her mouth and breasts.

Picking up the pace, he vibrated his fingers in and outside her body. He was captivated by the woman’s new found free spirit.

He dropped his mouth to her breast, flicking her nipple before capturing it with his tongue, drawing eagerly on the crinkled flesh.

“That’s good...” Liz directed his movements, “so... so...so good.” she chanted, bringing another small smile to the man’s face.

He would never tire of watching this woman in such a moment. There was nothing more enchanting than listening to a woman when she was sexually aroused. He had dreamed of hearing Lizzy make these very sounds.

Yet, in all the fantasies he had about her, he never imagined he would have such a wonderful time. Oh, he knew it would feel amazing as hell.

But he had always visualized passionate and heated encounters. He had admittedly fantasized about her sexually after one of her turbulent exchanges with him.

He hadn’t been aware she could be so vocally open once she became comfortable or so... playful. It was a quite a delightful surprise.

Concentrating on keeping his movements steady and sure, he watched avidly, waiting for the right moment to give her the incentive needed. A moment that came shortly thereafter.
Increasing the speed and the pressure on her clit, pushed her to climax. She shuddered, falling back into the bedding, softly crying out her release.

He stared at the breath taking sight for a few seconds before breaking the spell.

“Feel better?” he smiled warmly.

“Getting there...” she smiled lazily, her arms reaching for him, pulling him closer.

“You’re just a little glutton aren’t you?” he settled himself between her open thighs. “I’ve always liked that about you.”

“Hey....” she raised her hips, groaning melodiously as his large shaft slid slowly along her wet slit, “still taking notes here.”

Red grinned, his mouth fitting to hers perfectly. He absently reached into the drawer. “I hope like hell you’re not expecting ‘cliff notes’,“ he pushed the crown of his shaft against the peak of her sex, teasing her mercilessly. “I so want you to get an ‘A’ in this course.”

She quietly giggled, enjoying this other side of Red, “I thought you promised I’d get an ‘A’, Professor.” she traced his collarbone aimlessly, taking on a wide-eyed, innocent quality.

Red lined himself up , pushing gently at her opening. “Did I?” he watched her transform into a gullible college student, right before his very eyes.

“I distinctly remember it.” she answered breathlessly.

“When did I say that?” he circled his hips, opening her to his intrusion, waiting with baited breath to hear what the woman would come up with next.

“When I was sitting in your lap and you removed my knee socks,” she mewled, the blue eyes searching his with open vulnerability, “you said if I let you see what was under my skirt...”

Red’s dick throbbed painfully, instantly visualizing Lizzy in knee socks and her bare ass poking out from underneath a pleated skirt, sitting astride his lap.

“Shit, baby. “ he grunted as he breached her, sliding into the molten hot body.

“Oh God...” she drawled, opening her legs wider for the man. Liz gasped, moaning brokenly as the man slid in deep, bumping her tender cervix and clit at the same time, making her thighs tremble.

He quickly established a workable rhythm, kissing her ardently between the raw animalistic sounds they emitted against one another’s kiss swollen lips.

“Am I pleasing you...” she panted, grasping his bulging biceps, the beautiful breasts prominent displayed, “P-Professor.”

“Hell yes...” the man groaned deeply, the relief in his face apparent. “Best student body, ever...”

“I...” she hesitated briefly, her fingers curving into his shoulders when he hit a sweet spot, “I like you... a lot, Mr. Reddington.”

“The feeling is more than mutual... Miss Keen.” he voice lowered intimately, curling his fingers around her hip. His large hand dwarfed the small area.

“Oh, I hope that’s true.” she smiled softly, her focus split between the man’s gentle eyes and touch.
“To the depth and breadth and height,” He quoted Browning, “let me count the ways.” he took a long deep breath of her sweet scent. “I love your scent,” he lingered for a moment, “I’m captivated by your intelligence.” he traced her temple adoringly, his eyes skimming the curves of the shapely form, “And what can I say about this that any poet has not already said more eloquently than I ever could.”

Liz traced his mouth with her finger, listening to the exquisite words, a surge of happiness filling her heart.

She embraced his neckline, gently stroking him with her fingers, “God please tell me you don’t say things like that to just anyone.” she would be crushed otherwise.

“I have never said that to... another living soul.” he was somewhat perplexed by the fact that no one had touched him so deeply before. “And don’t you think that’s a damned sad fact.”

Liz was suddenly lost in the man’s eyes, the emotion overwhelming her.

The game they played was suddenly set aside for the moment. Red became quietly introverted.

“I’d be content to just hold you the rest of my life, Lizzy.” he muttered distractedly. “But that I get to do this, to actually make love to you...” his eyes slid closed, a sound of contentment welling in his throat, “is something I will cherish... for the rest of my life.”

She felt tears prick her eyes, blinking them back.

“I don’t think I’ll ever be able to express the joy I feel,” he slid in, completing their connection, tightening his hold about her tiny frame, “that I’m the only one allowed to share this private intimacy with you.” He shook his head minutely, words escaping him for a moment. “My God, feel what I’m doing to you, Elizabeth.”

His stare dropped and held to where their bodies connected. He felt the small hands ease over his hips, her palms brushing along his flesh as he gently thrust against her.

The movement, the visual it conjured, was turning the woman the hell on.

“I’m the only person that will ever do this to you again...” he rasped roughly in her ear, sending a jolt of shivers down her spine.

Liz curved her fingers into the tight flesh of his hips as he increased his tempo, a sound of pure enjoyment escaping her lips.

She grasped his ass cheeks, raising her hips into his thrusts, loving him back.

He grunted, pushing hard against her. “I’ll make damn sure I’m the only one you will want doing this to you.”

Red’s brow furrowed as he felt her pussy seize tightly as it quivered around his shaft. Stroking her hair out of her face, he softly encouraged the woman to find her pleasure. She finally fluttered along his length, allowing him to join her in the intense feeling.

He caught her outcry in his mouth. Liz felt the intense warmth of his release, treasuring the unity.

Red smiled slowly, feeling the tension in her muscles loosen with each breath.

“That was so much better than Midol...” she whispered breathlessly against his neck line.
Red chuckled quietly, rolling to her side, grinning lethargically as she came along, snuggling into him.

“Maybe I should advertise my services?” he held his smile, his spirit soaring as the woman frowned up at him, her eyes sparking fire.

“Like hell you are...”

“All ready so territorial...” He lifted her hand, kissing her fingers, beyond pleased, hearing the possessive quality in her tone.

“Damn right I am.” She cupped his cock, stroking the length. He groaned, pushing into her palm. “You’re going to be too busy dealing with me to have time for anyone else.”

“Is that right?” He smiled when she nodded defiantly.

“Well, I mean,” she said suddenly unsure, losing her bravado, “if you want to, that is.”

He liked hearing the words himself, so he understood her meaning.

“I want to.” He leaned down, kissing her softly. He glanced at her rosy cheeks, brushing a gentle finger over them. “I hope, Miss Keen,” he brought their earlier play back to the table, “that you gathered enough information for your thesis.”

She stretched with catlike grace. “It was quite... enlightening.”

She raised up on her elbow, stroking his jaw line, smiling coyly back at him. “But I feel that more research is needed.” she continued, a meticulously manicured finger sliding the length of his dick. “When are you free for more... detailed instruction, Professor?”

Red’s brows quirked, his cock stirring much to his surprise. The woman’s slim fingers circled his crown teasingly.

“It just so happens that I have some time for a little one on one, Miss Keen,” the man consulted his expensive Rolex, “at this exact moment.”

Liz smiled happily taking his pre-offered hand as she assumed the dominant position, straddling his thighs provocatively.

“I never thought I would enjoy your class, Woodwind Instruments and Their Impact on Middle Class America, this much.” she seemed amazed by her good fortune.

Red’s throaty chuckle echoed cheerfully in the ensuing silence.

“I got something you can blow.”

After a quiet dinner, they retired to the sitting room. Liz had wanted Red’s opinion on a few of the more difficult case files the BAU had sent.

She was surprised that Red had known two of the men, just by the few clues in the case notes.

What was even more an ego boost for her, she had been moving in the right direction in her profiles on the last three, Red had just given her a good solid lead to follow on each.
She sent them through, before closing down her computer.

“You like consulting, don’t you?” he asked, settling into the couch, picking up his book.

“I didn’t think I would.” she admitted, sitting next to him. “But it hasn’t been half bad. I kind of enjoy it.”

Red tilted his head, looking at her steadily. “Are you saying that you would rather be working behind the scenes as opposed to doing field work?”

She edged the rim of her book with her fingers, sighing. “Would you be disappointed if I did?”

“No.”

She smiled softly, looking up at the man. “You don’t want me working in the field anymore, do you.”

Silas had implied, Red would not like the thought of Liz being in constant danger. Perhaps he never had.

“I didn’t say that.” he corrected her assessment. “I just want you to be happy, Elizabeth. If this is what you want to do, I will support you.”

“What about the Blacklist?” she questioned softly. “Would you still do it? Could you keep giving the names to Ressler?”

Red drummed his fingers slowly on his book cover, shrugging. “I suppose I could.” he replied, his tone vague. “It’s been etched in the back of my mind that our situation wasn’t permanent, that you would be back to work eventually.” he told the truth.

“And while I could continue to work with your team. I do have an objective…” he trailed off. “I would have to see how it would work without you before I could commit to a definitive answer.” he waved his hand about.

“Regardless of my decision, you have my complete support in what you decide to do from here on out.” he stressed.

She nodded understandingly. Like Red, she would have to give the matter serious thought. They both got lost in their own worlds, enjoying the quiet solitude for a goodly time.

Liz eventually sighed, laying back into the couch, settling her head on Red’s lap.

Red smiled warmly down at the woman, raising his legs to the ottoman to make her more comfortable. He moved the book to his other hand, threading his fingers through her hair, massaging her scalp soothingly as he read.

A short time later, he heard another sigh. Liz lay her book aside before rolling over, playing with a thread on the pillow beside her absently.

He sat his own book aside, taking a sip from his tumbler. “What’s on your mind, Lizzy?”

“I want to change my name.” she took his glass, sipping the warm liquid.

“Elizabeth is a beautiful name.” he pushed his fingers through her hair, his mouth lifting as she leaned into the touch.
“I don’t mean that one, though, now that I think about it, that’s not even my name.” she reached for the bottle beside them, pouring more liquor into his heavy glass. “I meant my last name. It’s a fake name, that belonged to a fake marriage and a fake man. I don’t want it.” she took another sip of the amber liquid, before holding it out for him.

“You’ve been Elizabeth far longer than you ever were Masha.” He took the offering, taking a quick drink. “As for Keen... if changing it is what you wish, then do it. What would you change it to?”

“You mean Sam’s name?”

“Yes.”

“I haven’t decided yet.” she laid her head back down, looking up at him. “What I have decided is that isn’t who I am anymore. And it’s a weight I don’t want to carry with me any longer.”

“Well, think about it and we’ll take care of it when you’ve decided.”

“You don’t have to do anything, you know.” she said, her brow raising.

“I know people who can make it happen quickly.” it was advised. “And I know you. When you get something in your head, you want it done post haste.”

She couldn’t argue. Especially about that.

“Okay, I’ll let you know.”

Red smiled, scratching his fingers through her hair, chuckling quietly when the woman purred happily, then yawned. Having voiced something troubling her, seemed to have lifted a weight because her eyes suddenly became heavy.

“I think it’s bed time for you.” He grinned, helping her up. The man guided her down the hall as Elizabeth yawned sleepily.

“You’re staying, right?” she threw back over her shoulder.

He halted their trek, backing her into the wall, “Was that an invitation?” his voice lowered huskily.

“I don’t know...” she played with the collar of his shirt, “do I get morning sex if you do?”

Red tugged on her hand, continuing their previous journey. “Does the rooster rise at dawn.” he replied almost cryptically.

Liz pulled up short, scowling, “Is that Navy code talk?” she scolded superficially. “Or was that just your way of telling me your cock rises to the occasion at dawn?”

Red’s gentle chuckle made Lizzy’s full sensuous lips curve into a responding smile.

May 10

The incessant jarring of his phone awakened Red at three in the morning. He groaned, moving to answer, but was stopped by a light weight on his chest.

He smiled softly at the small body holding him down, stretching for the ringing telephone on the night stand.

“If that’s Ressler, I’m gonna kill him.” Liz bitched sleepily.

Red sniggered softly, opening the phone. “Hello?”

“Rogers here, Sir.” one of the new guards announced himself. “You told us to inform you of trespassers—”

“Is he still there?” Red interrupted.

“No, Sir. He bolted when we gave chase.” Rogers told his boss. “One of the men is following him now.” Red was informed. “He did leave some pictures behind.”

“I’ll be over...”

“Red...” Liz mumbled dejectedly.

His mouth pulled at the corner when she snuggled closer, her intent clear.

He wasn’t going anywhere.

“I’ll send one of the men to collect it shortly.” Red shut the phone and tossed it to the table, “Dammit..” he sighed.

“He got away?” Liz muttered into his chest.

“Yes.” Red grumbled.

“Let it go.” she yawned. “Go back to sleep.”

He looked down at her and chuckled silently when she dozed.

“Stop thinkin’...” she muttered. “Keepin’ me ‘wake.”

“I seem to do that a lot.” Red smiled softly down at the woman snuggling into him.

“I have my gun in my hand Red.” she warned, even as she rubbed her cheek against his chest, getting comfortable.

“Don’t drool on me.”

“I don’t drool...” she pouted.

“Yeah, and you don’t snore either.” the man rolled his eyes, his fingers lazily stroking her back.

He got lost in the repetitive motion, drifting languidly. The woman’s soft purring filtered through the otherwise silent room.

“So much for not snoring...” he laughed silently, his chest bouncing the small body laying draped over him.

Liz’s brow furrowed, her hand sleepily swatting the annoyance for the man had disturbed her.
Red clamped a hand over his mouth, hoping it would aid in holding his laughter until he finally settled.

He looked down at the little head settled on his chest, stroking a large hand over her soft hair, leaning his cheek into the fragrant tresses.

He inhaled her gentle scent, feeling himself getting drowsier with each breath, drifting into a peaceful sleep.

So very happy he stayed.
May 16

The last few days had been relatively quiet.

Liz was finally, medically released from her casts, though she had already gone without them most of last week. She had appointments lined up for more focused physical therapy to strengthen her muscles, a process designed to reinstate her to desk duty at the Blacksite.

In the meantime, she continued pumping out the profiles for the BAU and was pleased as hell to learn, that one profile had actually helped in the capture of a fugitive.

Francis had come over the day after their return and did indeed only have a flesh wound. A fact Red made a point of mentioning, when he gestured to the Iron Man Band-Aid the young man was sporting.

Shortly after having lunch together, Red had been called away on business. Liz and Francis watched some movies, then had dinner together. Liz fancied it was only so he could see his beloved Nora.

He also made an excuse, the fact that his wound, which clearly... Francis had pointed out, was far more than a flesh wound, was giving him trouble. He could not possibly drive himself home. Liz took it to mean, her friend wanted to spend a few days in house which was fine with her.

During the several days when Red would only occasionally pop in and out, Francis’s visits were always a bright spot. Liz had grown quite fond of his company.

As for Red... when he wasn’t handling his business. He would stay with her... in her new home.

The thought of leaving her bed after having made love, did not sit well with either of them.

The need to hold one another, to bask in the aftermath of their lovemaking, was an essential part of what they wanted from their relationship.

The outside world interrupted and demanded they do their jobs, so any private time was of the utmost importance these days.

In past relationships, Liz had never minded moments of solitude. It was a time to be by herself where she had room to breathe and examine the intricacies of any given situation she happened to find herself within.

Even with Tom, her space had been very important, but with Red... she was astounded to find herself missing his absence. She liked when he was here.

When she had started at the Blacksite... working with Red, Tom had become pushy, needy. The strain on them, on her, had become quickly exhausting.

She was now aware that Tom had been attempting to drive a wedge between her and Red.

Moments of sitting in the quiet of the living room, in the middle of the night, was well worth the loss... of sleep because she was able to maintain her sanity.

Now, the solitude felt different. She still enjoyed it, reading a good book, taking a long bath, or simply letting her mind wander. It was good for her.

But she found she didn’t need it as much as she once had. Liz no longer felt like she was barely hanging by a frayed thread, ready to snap.

And she knew why. Tom had gone out of his way to push her off the deep end and hold her under, drowning her. While Red was wading through the muck to pull her back to the surface.

Which made his presence now so addictive. So many men before him had essentially been like Tom. Maybe not as manipulative, but damn near close.

She had been guilted into doing things so many times, she had lost count. They had never seemed truly supportive of her goals. And a little part of her had always felt dissatisfied after sex.

With Red, she hadn’t felt any of that at all. He was always supportive. And the sex. She in no way felt neglected in the bedroom. She never had a lover’s undivided attention such as Red provided. So much so, she suddenly wondered if perhaps she had neglected him?

She made a quick mental note to rectify that as soon as possible.

One thing she had put to rest was that she had felt a bit too clingy, but Red seemed to appreciate the time spent together just as much as she. He was as quick to cuddle and kiss. And in their quiet time, they shared an endless array of topics which ranged from amusing to the serious.

And when they fell silent, it was comfortable. They didn’t feel the need to fill the silence, their shared breathing and closeness enough to fill any void.

She hadn’t felt this comfortable... been this happy in so long, she honestly couldn’t pinpoint when it had happened last. If at all.

A tiny sliver of doubt, and she supposed it was only human nature, left her wondering if everything was too good. Would some horrible twist of fate take away that contentment.

Liz quickly dismissed such disturbing thoughts, refusing to dwell on the negative.

She would like to have a chance to spend more time with Red outside of work.

She was painfully aware that most of their conversations started on that particular subject.

But she really wanted to see if they could find that balance between home and work. If they could be like every one else and be... normal.

Red came in, phone to his ear, breaking her thoughts. He was nodding his annoyance, his head hanging dejectedly.

A small smile graced her lips, watching the man almost get to the point where he was banging his head against a wall.

She hadn’t realized his features were so expressive while on the phone. She wondered what ‘expressions’ he used when speaking to her in those private moments. Or did he keep his face perfectly neutral so as not to give away any unguarded secrets.

He was saying his farewells. She brightened, snatching up her own phone, dialing the man quickly.
She could tell when it rang through, his head turning a little at the sound.

“I’ll call back shortly, I have another call coming in.” he clicked the button without a care, switching the lines. “Yes?”

“Hi...” she smiled into the phone, hearing his gruff voice in surround sound. Her smile grew wider when his eyes instantly softened, a small smile taking the place of the frown that had been present for most of the day.

Is this what Silas meant when he mentioned Red had called to hear her voice? Is this what the guard had seen the man do?

“Hello to you...” he purposely kept his back to her just enough that she could still see his face in profile. She was amazed to see the tension bleeding from his shoulders.

“Is there something I can do for you?” his voice lowered sensually, making the woman’s cheeks plump with an enormous smile.

“You could walk that fine ass over here and kiss me.”

She watched his shoulders shake with silent laughter, but also watched him openly nodding at the request.

“What’s in it for me?” he asked, his tone even.

Liz’s eyes danced hearing the playfulness in the question, before adopting the same attitude. “I’ll let you stick your tongue in my mouth.”

She snickered quietly when Red’s forehead thumped into the wall in front of him, a low chuckling filling her ear.

“I can live with that criteria.” he snapped the phone closed, striding towards her, his face lit with undisguised happiness.

She loved that she could make him smile like that. That she made that tension he felt moments ago, fade away. It made her feel... really good. Like she was the only person who could get that honest reaction.

Especially since he was the only one who could make her feel that way, as well.

He pulled her up from her chair, delivering a kiss that made her toes curl before the need for air surfaced.

He peppered her mouth with little kisses, before settling his forehead against hers. “I have to go to Vegas shortly—”

“Can I go?” she asked, surprised by her own brazenness.

He stepped back, smiling down at her.

“Feel like gambling a bit, do we.” he stated, heading for the closet.

“Maybe...” she muttered, following after him.

If they couldn’t find that precarious balance she was so concerned about, what would it mean to them.
“What?” he called back over his shoulder sensing something.

“Nothing.” she smiled, walking into the closet.

“I was actually going to ask if you wanted to join me,” he returned his interest to selecting several stylish suits. “Aside from handling some business. I’ve been invited to an associate’s wedding.”

“How long are we going to be there?” she tried to keep the excitement from her voice.

“I would imagine about three days.” he replied, pulling down a smaller bag for her. “If it’s longer, we’ll go shopping.” he grinned.

“Those are the nicest words you’ve ever said to me.” she absently took the bag from his hand.

“Is something wrong sweetheart?” he halted his activities having noted a certain vagueness about her.

“No, just lost in thought.” she smiled, setting some shoes aside. “Oh, I did remember one thing I forgot to ask.” Red’s brows lifted, waiting. “What was that phone call about the other night?”

Since he had to leave unexpectedly the morning after for a quick trip, she had forgotten all about it.

Red’s mouth twisted disdainfully as he opened a drawer behind him, pulling out a manila envelope. Liz took the offering, finding a series of photos of the night Red was shot. They documented from the moment Red was first hit, to when Silas had driven them backwards down the road, exiting the perilous situation.

“Did you get fingerprints or...”

“All we could get... “ Red shook his head negatively, “was a trajectory of where the photos had been taken.”

“My old house, the rooftop?” A chill ran through her slight body.

“The neighbor’s.” Red corrected before handing her another folder. “These were delivered today.”

She opened another manila folder, extracting the photos. “This is the Blacksite.”

“It is, yes.” Red agreed as he looked at the pictures of her and Silas waiting in the car.

“Tom would know where the Blacksite is.” Liz stated the obvious.

“He would, yes.” Red nodded, taking the folders back. “Now, you finish packing and let’s not think another thing about it.”

Liz raised doubtful eyes.

“In the larger scheme of things,” he lightened their moods, “this new revelation rates about 134th down the list of things we should be concerned about.”

“What’s 133?” she was curious.

“If they really use MSG at Pei Lings.”

She bit the inside of her lip to keep from smiling.
Before heading off to what was formerly his office in this house, Red threw a cryptic remark over his shoulder. “Don’t forget the black lace teddy.”

“I thought you preferred the red one.” she pseudo pouted.

The man was extracting the infamous black phone surgically attached to his person, “I prefer you without either... but pack them anyway.”

Red was anxious to check the mail which had overrun the large desktop. He had a sinking feeling when he found the familiar type on the white envelope.

The letters were arriving more frequently of late, same threats, different day. Though this time, the idiot writer was demanding to know Liz’s whereabouts. Never mind that the fool had not given her a way to reply, even had she wished to do so.

If this were Tom however, perhaps they had adopted a ‘special’ spot which only they would be aware.

When Red had asked Carla to marry him, he had taken her back to the spot where they met. It had held special meaning for them, or at least it did, until things had fallen apart.

So maybe Lizzy and Tom had such a place. A place that Tom thought Liz would instantly go to meet with him. Red would have to ask her soon, if only to set up a sting to catch the rotten bastard.

Red tossed the new letter aside, having noticed the time.

“Silas, come to my office please.” Red had spoken into the walkie.

“Copy.” Silas reported.

A minute later, Silas tapped on the door before walking in. “Are you guys naked in here?” he queried, perfectly straight faced. “I did knock this time.”

“I’m going to the Blacksite in a few minutes. I want you to bring Elizabeth to me when I’m finished there.” Red was suddenly all business. “We’re going to test our security measures.” he sauntered around the desk. “And then we’re going to get naked.”

“Orgy?” the man brightened. “I get dibs on Agent Navabi.”

Red looked at him blankly.

“Or...” Silas altered his flippant reply, “if you meant you and the Old Ball and Chain... thanks for the warning. I get nauseous easily these days.” Silas didn’t miss a beat. “The men are on standby.” he hooked a thumb behind him. “We’ve been practicing. We’re down to ten minutes to get into position, but since you’ve given us ample time, I’d like to get there earlier and see if we can spot the fucker before your Old Lady gets on site.”

“That’s fine.” Red tossed something as he passed which Silas caught easily. “It helps with the nausea.”

The guard hid his amusement admirably as he fell in step behind the exiting man. “You think he’ll be there?”

“He was the other day when you visited.” Red reminded. “I think he’s trying to get a tail on her to follow her back here.”
“Not while I’m driving.” Silas’ deadpan delivery, while slightly egotistical, actually made Red feel better knowing the guard would go above and beyond, if only to keep his reputation intact.

“And if he’s not,” Red shrugged, “we were going to the airport anyway.” he headed for the master bedroom.

“What ever happens, you remember your first priority is to keep her safe. Don’t go taking off with them to catch Tom if he is there.”

“She won’t leave my sight.” Silas’ voice echoed down the corridor. “Even if she’s naked... especially if she’s naked.”

Red threw him a nondescript glare. “I’m going to hire someone to kill you one of these days.”

“You’re not gonna pay him more than me, are you?”

Red’s arm came back around the doorframe, his middle making his statement loud and proud.

Silas grinned infectiously before taking his leave.

Red and Dembe stepped off the elevator at the Blacksite, raised voices greeting them, as they rounded the corner. They found Samar and Moore in each other’s faces.

“Cunt.” Moore sneered.

“You don’t know me well enough to call me pet names.” Samar countered. “So, kiss my ass, Moore.”

“I’m sure you say that to a lot of guys, Navabi.” Moore snapped his irritability.

“All right you two, back off.” Donald intervened, stepping between the two combatants.

“Frightened by the competition?” Samar baited. “I’m telling you now, Aram is mine.” The computer specialist perked up, smiling. “Keep your hands off his ass.” Samar needled.

Aram opened his mouth, then frowned, then smiled again, looking a little lost, but pleased.

“I’m not into guys, you bitch.” Moore was definitely on the defensive.

“The betting pool says differently?” Aram stated simplistically, pleasantly shocking Red. He grinned at the man’s gumption. He glanced over to ascertain Samar’s state of mind, finding the woman offering a rather rude gesture which pleased him even more so.

Dembe’s brows lifted slightly because the woman’s antics could only mean one thing. It was a very articulate way of saying, in the American vernacular... blow me.

Moore shoved Aram aside angrily, then all hell broke loose.

Samar stepped forward, her hands braced against Moore’s chest, pushing the man into a tall table. The computer and other objects on top, teetered dangerously as the two kept shoving against one another, shouting out obscenities.

Ressler tried to step between the combatants, attempting a voice of reason. Moore pushed at Donald, both men losing their footing on the slick floor.
In hindsight, Red realized, it had probably been an accident.

In their bid to gain dominance over the other, Moore’s hand broke free, catching Samar across the eye.

And that’s when he and Dembe got involved.

Red caught the woman around the waist, pulling her from the fray while Dembe manhandled Moore easily, literally setting him aside. Samar swung a good right hook, which almost landed on the wrong victim.

Ressler ducked as the fist came his way.

Red chuckled as Samar’s other fist lashed out, connecting soundly with the solid jaw of her enemy.

Moore’s knees buckled slightly and Red would have swore the man would have gone down except Dembe had placed him in a hold, his arms looped under Moore’s, his hands linked behind the other man’s neck. Even though Moore struggled valiantly, he was no match for Dembe’s strength so the guy sort of hung in mid-air, twisting about to no avail.

Red allowed the feisty woman her due, his continual amusement barring any real interference.

She kicked expertly, missing Moore’s crotch by a fraction of an inch.

“Samar...” Aram held up his hands to calm the woman, his earnest expression clearly concerned for her well being. He seemed relaxed, as though he knew with absolute certainty, that she wouldn’t hurt him.

Red was surprised to see the woman’s anger fade by degrees.

“What the hell is going on here!” Cooper barked, gesturing to the scattered papers and other miscellanea.

“A slight misunderstanding.” Red gently released his captive, ready to dodge if need be.

“What the hell kind of misunderstanding could have possibly caused... this?” Cooper pointed between both sides.

“A simple difference of opinion, Harold.” Red soothed.

“What happened to her eye.” Coop pointed at Samar's reddening eye. Aram unconsciously glanced back at Moore, glaring his disapproval.

“You did that?” Cooper questioned heatedly. He scowled deepened when Moore could not hold his eyes. “Both of you,” his tone brooked no defiance, “my office, now.”

“I don’t believe they should be sharing space right now, Harold.” Red could still see the fire in the beautiful Agent’s eyes. “Besides, I need to speak with Agent Navabi.”

“Fine...” Cooper sighed. “Moore!” the man’s anger seemed to be growing by leaps and bounds as he pointed a stout finger in the direction needed.

Dembe released the hold he had on the Agent, shoving him hard towards the stairs. Ressler scowled darkly at Moore before the men headed upstairs.

“Are you all right?” Red asked, pulling a handkerchief from his pocket, blotting the little split by Samar’s eye.

“Yeah, I’m fine.” Samar smiled. “That was fun.” She chuckled, then grimaced when Red pressed in on the small cut. “What did you need me for?”

“Nothing.” He smiled, folding the cloth in his hands before handing it to her.

Samar snorted under her breath, smiling. “Then why are you here?”

“Well, I did come to deliver a new name to Ressler, but it can wait.” Red shrugged.

“What am I? Chopped liver?” Samar questioned, waggling her fingers for the information.

Red smiled charmingly, giving her the name and all the information he had on hand at this point in time. He was just finishing up as Dembe approached.

“Did he give you any trouble?” Red asked.

Dembe looked at his friend placidly. Red smiled at the face, knowing that was as close as Dembe would come to scoffing in the presence of others.

“Dembe, call Silas. Tell him to bring her.” Red returned his attention to the lovely Agent. “I must take my leave.”

“When do you think Liz might be back to work?” Samar asked hopefully, trailing after the man’s retreating form.

“It won’t be long now.” Red replied. “She misses you too.”

He of course, remembered Lizzy’s conversation about a possible change in occupation, but kept that information to himself. First of all, it was not his news to tell. Secondly, Elizabeth had not as yet decided on any course of action.

“Raymond, they’re a couple of blocks away.” Dembe summarily reported.

Red pulled up short, his brow furrowed. “I told Silas not to leave until I called.”

“He took her around the park.” Dembe shrugged minutely. “She was... antsy. Wanted to get out.”

Red pursed his lips, both amused and annoyed. But no harm was done. It was a beautiful day out, of course Lizzy would want to enjoy it. And to her, moving around in the car, as aimless as it was, still put her a step closer to leaving for Vegas. He hadn’t been aware she would be so excited by the prospect.

She had been cooped up for the better part of a month, aside from the one small trip to New York.

“All right.” Red automatically checked his weapon. “You ready to go?” Dembe had already inspected his own gun.

“What’s going on?” Samar asked, ready to be invited in on any possible fun which might appear on the horizon.

“Nothing to concern yourself about.” Red said, sliding the weapon into the slot of the holster he wore on his back.

“Uh huh.” the woman’s tone said it all. “Something’s going on and I want to be included.”
“Really, it’s nothing.” Red smiled charmingly.

Samar checked her own weapon.

Ressler approached, halting mid-step when he saw her actions. “What’s going on?”

“Nothing.” Samar replied as she re-holstered her weapon.

“Something’s going on and I want to be included.” the man demanded.

Red sighed theatrically, spreading his hands out slightly. “Lizzy is on her way here.”

“So...?” Ressler drawled. “She’s been here before.” he stated the obvious. “She even works here.”

“Where to begin...” Red headed for the elevator, Dembe and their two unexpected guests, tagging along. He filled the Agents in on all the gritty details as the doors closed, sealing them off from eavesdroppers. “...Now, these letters are coming. Saying things about purging my lies from her head and cleansing her soul.” he completed ruefully.

“That sounds, ominous.” Samar’s beautiful brow furrowed deeply.

“Yes, it does.” Red continued. “And we received a series of photos from when she was here the other day.”

“You should have told us.” Ressler was annoyed. “We could have set up a perimeter.”

They reached the ground floor. “Just act natural. Like you came out to say hello.”

They stepped out unto the parking lot, waiting as Dembe headed for Red’s Mercedes. “My men are all ready out here. They’re covering a couple block radius on roof tops and the street.” Red mentioned casually.

“Should we bring reinforcements.” Ressler tried hard not to glance around the secluded area.

“Your guys aren’t exactly stealthy.” Red advised. “They’ll be running around in their SWAT gear, throwing around hand signals and Tom’s on a rooftop watching it all happen.”

Red smiled and waved when he saw the large SUV come around the corner just as Dembe pulled up along side them in the gleaming luxury sedan.

Silas slid to a stop, exiting the SUV. Samar noticed that he moved with the fluid gracefulness of a panther. She also noticed that he looked really good in those tight jeans he wore.

The gray-blue eyes connected with her dark ones, the man issuing a sultry smile for her alone. Samar’s heart actually sped forward a bit before she chastised the reaction but she could not halt the returning grin which graced her beautiful features.

“Hi guys!” Liz smiled brightly, as Silas held the door for her exit. “I didn’t expect to see you.”

Samar and Donald smiled stiffly, covertly looking around.

“What’s wrong.” Liz was instantly alert to something amiss.

“Nothing we can’t handle.” Red took her arm, helping her to the other car. “They’re just looking for Tom.”
“Is he–” she snapped her head about jerkily, hearing the unmistakable sound of gunfire pinging off structures which towered above them.

She was unceremoniously pushed back into the alcove created by the door and body of the SUV. Red’s body blocked any access to her person. Silas’ weapon was drawn and aimed but as yet there was no discernable target. But the large bulk of the man sufficiently blocked any and all attempts to harm his charges.

“I guess that answers my question.” She called out over the suddenly loud barrage of gunfire.

Red lifted the slight body easily, pushing Liz into the seat of the SUV. She scrambled over to make room for the man.

Red lifted his leg, pulling a weapon from his ankle, handing it to her. He motioned for Samar to take his place as he made his way around to the other side of the vehicle.

He could see through the black tinted glass, both women poised and ready to return fire if indeed the occasion arose.

Ressler and Dembe ran across the expanse lot, searching for some sign of the shooter. Silas stood silently beside Red, weapons at the ready, both sets of eyes scanning the rooftops.

Red dropped his arm, his aim landing on a door being flung open, the sound alerting him. A shadowy figure emerged in a nearby alleyway, running in the opposite direction from where Dembe and Ressler had headed.

Trailing and aiming, Red let off a volley of shots, alerting the others to the man’s location. The one in question stumbled jerkily after one carefully aimed shot. The guy righted himself with difficulty after having slammed into a nearby brick wall.

He’d hit the prick somewhere...

Dembe and Ressler hurried down an adjoining alleyway hoping to block any exit the perpetrator might attempt. Silas stood like a Sphinx, his handsome features set in a darkly menacing scowl.

Only seconds had passed but it seemed longer. Liz was glad to see Cooper and a group of agents come bursting out various doors armed to the ‘T’.

“What the hell is going on!” Cooper quickly assessed the situation.

“Nothing.” Red called out, keeping his weapon trained on the building to which Tom had been heading. “It’s just a simple case of one ex stalking another.” Red leisurely dropped his weapon, opening the door of the SUV. “Say hello, Lizzy.”

“Hello, Sir.” She smiled wanly, she and Samar striving for a semblance of propriety.

“Keen...” Cooper nodded his greeting. “Now, what’s going on out here?”

“I just told you. Tom was here.” Red sighed heavily, helping Samar from the vehicle. “Honestly, Harold. Do you ever listen to me when I speak?”

“He was shooting at her?” Cooper was genuinely surprised.

“Oh, who’s to say.” Red philosophized.

“It sounded like a damn War Zone out here.” Cooper advised.
“My men are rather zealous at times.” Red allowed.

“Comes from all the sugar they consume.” Silas managed dead pan.

“We were trying to capture–” Red began the tale.

“Kill, you mean.” Cooper corrected.

“...Wound, Tom.” Red smiled pleasantly.

“Why is she even here.” Cooper glanced at a silent Elizabeth Keen.

“We’re going out of town for a couple days.” Red smiled cheerfully, like nothing untoward had happened. “Ah, Dembe. News?”

“He went down a grate in a drainage ditch.” Dembe reported. “We are still tracking.”

“You see Harold, everything’s under control.” Red spread his hands expressively before turning his attention elsewhere. “Sweetheart, are you ready to go?”

Liz smiled excitedly, nodding enthusiastically. Cooper was struck by the woman’s attitude.

“You do realize that your ex-husband just tried to kill you.”

“Well, these things happen.” she made reports on them almost daily. Liz tried to contain her smile but in truth, she had always wanted to go to Vegas. The prospect filled her with imminent joy.

“She’s excited because I’m footing the bill.” Red grinned at the happy woman.

“Oh, stop it.” she scoffed coyly, playfully hitting his thigh.

Cooper watched the interplay between the two, baffled. Donald came along side him, breathing heavily.

“I think you winged him. There was blood in the alley.” Donald panted.

“Well, that will make things easier.” Red’s mood was lifting. “We should take our leave. We’ll be late for our flight.”

“You have a private jet.” Cooper replied sourly.

“So I do.” he slid into the comfortable confines of the SUV.

“Have fun, Liz.” Samar called out before the door closed and the vehicle pulled away from the curb.

Silas trailed behind them in Red’s car. It was one of the perks he most enjoyed about this job. The array of exotic automobiles available for his use.

Before he squealed out, he sent a very purposeful ‘air kiss’ in Samar’s direction. She winked lasciviously in return her lovely brows lifting in open approval of the man’s sexist ways.

Silence met their departure as each individual stared after the rapidly disappearing motorcade.

“Was that weird, or was it just me?” Donald asked the rhetorical question.

“I’m starting to think abnormal is normal. And normal... so very boring.” Samar stated her opinion. “So, everything seemed okay to me.”
“She seemed so different.” Ressler searched for the right phrasing. “Toward him, I mean.”

“She’s just becoming comfortable with him.” Samar said. “It’s all that forced time together.”

“I guess.” Ressler scratched his head, something still nagging at him. “You don’t think they’ve, you know—”

“That is none of your business, Agent Ressler.” Cooper practically snapped.

“I’m sorry, sir. I didn’t mean to imply—”

“Well, don’t…” Cooper trailed off, questions arising in his own mind. The man walked away, the issue closed to his way of thinking.

Ressler and Samar stared after the rapidly moving figure. “You got a right hook, girl.” Ressler’s mind had moved on as well. He glanced over, a grin spreading across the boyishly handsome face. “Remind me to never get on your bad side.”

“What makes you think you aren’t already.” the woman swished her hips saucily away leaving Donald to ponder her mood and statement.

A half hour later the SUV pulled along the tarmac, as Dembe taxied up to the waiting jet. Liz was always amazed when other people appeared out of no where, seemingly, to do the menial tasks such as unloading luggage. She scrambled out of the seat fighting the guilt as she watched two large men lug her stuff towards the plane.

Silas skidded up with a screech across the way, exiting Red’s car with a big grin on his face. He tossed the keys to a waiting staff member before joining the others.

Liz shook her head in a scolding manner as their eyes met. “You are such a delinquent.”

“And I get paid to be one.” Silas was inordinately pleased with himself.

“I didn’t know you were going to be here.” a familiar voice caught her attention.

Liz swirled about, a big smile instantly gracing her face. She rushed up the stairs, hugging Francis at the top landing.

The man had a soda in one hand and a bag of chips in the other, but he managed to squeeze her tightly. “And you keep turning up like a bad penny.” she teased.

“Red thought my ties might help smooth the upcoming deal.” he shrugged. “And you know, without me, you would be bored to tears.”

“I had such an exciting time on the last trip…” she quipped as Red boarded the plane, casting her an oblique glance. “Flesh wounds abounded.”

“Is Mark on his way?” Red asked.

“He should be there by now.” Francis confirmed.

Red scowled, halting mid-step, turning about. “He’s already meeting them?” his tone was censored.

“No, he wanted to check out a property.” Francis handed Dembe his bag of chips because he had already taken them anyway. “He wouldn’t meet them until you gave him the go ahead.”

“Where are we staying?” Liz squirmed in her chair finding a comfortable spot, the excitement shining in her eyes.

Francis chuckled, crossing to his own seat. Liz had a perplexed look on her face. “He hates the Mirage because of Nicole.”

“Nicole?” the woman frowned.

“The man we’re going to meet, Christopher, owns the hotel. He hired Nicole to greet his special visitors.” Francis grinned, glancing out the side window. “She has a thing for Red.”

Red sighed again, this time with a hint of annoyance.

“She grates on the nerves. Especially his.” he hooked a thumb in the older man’s direction.

That was unlike Red to be so ungracious. And it must have shown on her face.

“You’ll understand when you meet her.” Red grumbled.

“Hey,” Francis perked up, “maybe she’ll back off since Liz is with you?”

Red’s head tilted slightly, a disconcerting lift of the brow told Francis the other man harbored little doubt as to that eventuality.

“Yeah, I really didn’t think so either.” Francis shrugged. “Just thought I’d boost your spirits.”

“I’ll protect you, Red.” Liz reached over offering a consoling pat to the man’s thigh.

“I hope to hell you do.” Red replied seriously.

They had been in flight for about an hour. Red finally sat back, half listening to the conversation happening around him. He had been too intent on business matters before to take much note.

Liz was laughing at whatever the hell Francis had said, but more so perhaps, Dembe’s reaction to it.

Silas snoozed happily away but Red half suspected the man was only pretending to be semi-unconscious.

Red was happy to see Lizzy integrating herself so well with his counterpoints. They seemed genuinely fond of her. Not that he gave a damn about what Mark or even Francis thought, but that their acceptance was so important to her, made it important to him.

Liz wasn’t even aware, he didn’t think, that she needed the approval of others still.

He understood that it was a product of her childhood and the feeling of abandonment which still troubled her subconsciously. It had carried over into her adult life. Her decision, her chosen profession into the Old Boys Club, was a result of those insecurities.

Females had integrated into the Bureau decades back, but they still had to prove themselves daily and yet, it still was never good enough. Which is probably exactly why Liz went for the job.
She was good at it. And even the smallest pat on the head was monumental... a big deal, to her.

And now since Red had entered her life, she had even more to prove.

Her own colleagues didn’t trust her, due to her relationship with him.

Ressler still gave her a hard time about it, friendly and supportive one minute, back stabbing in the next. Meera had seemed kind, but she was just as two faced as Ressler when it came to Lizzy.

Samar, Red could not pin down as of yet. Lizzy had grown to trust her, for the most part. He really hoped in the end, that Samar would not break the trust they had built.

The only one she had been able to depend on at work was Aram.

And at home, she had Francis. Her one true friend. Her only friend.

Liz didn’t have any girlfriends. Outside of the computer geek and Francis, she had no one.

The thought made Red sad.

Lizzy would always have him, no matter how angry she got with him. She could share anything with him, but she needed a confidant for certain things. Everyone did.

His ex-wife’s best friend knew Carla was pregnant before Red had. Back when he had a regular life, his buddy had known about him returning on a tour of duty before Carla did.

You had to have someone to share your fears and joy with besides your partner, someone to act as a sounding board.

Red shifted his eyes, watching as Liz shared a secret smile with Dembe. What ever the man saw, had him chuckling.

Maybe she had found that sounding board with Dembe?

Who better to understand her life or her current situation?

Dembe may be the only one who truly could understand. Red had watched the relationship grow over the last month. Dembe knew what had happened between them in the last week. If Liz allowed herself, got past her innate shyness, she could spill her guts to Dembe.

He supposed she could go to Francis in a pinch, but he wasn’t sure how much the young man could stand hearing, especially if Lizzy needed to speak about something intimate.

And Red knew she would eventually need to talk to someone along those lines.

Which made Dembe the ideal choice.

Given enough time, they would become thick as thieves. And Red was okay with that. If anything should ever happen to him, he knew Liz and Dembe would be together. The thought comforted him.

Lizzy stuck her tongue out playfully at Francis, and the man return the gesture, only Francis had cashews on his.

Red closed his eyes, shaking his head woefully, but in the end he knew such juvenile antics was just what the Doctor ordered for Elizabeth Keen who oft times took herself and the world, far too seriously.
Francis was inching his way further into Red’s life than he had ever before.

With a fatalistic aplomb, Red suddenly realized that even as independent as these three were, they would always look to him for guidance and support whether they were aware of doing so or not.

What they did not realize, was that they were just as important to him. They kept him grounded. Oft times preventing him from making rash decisions. Well...most of the time anyway.

But in hindsight, normally when he went ahead and did as his conscious dictated, it was only because he had done harm to whoever had hurt one of them.

That was one part of himself he couldn’t shut down and really had no desire to do so.

For those three, he would literally burn down the world.

He stared at Lizzy who looked so pretty and fresh today. To look at her, no one would have guessed of their late night activities.

She was so vibrant and alive. Laughing at what ever Silas had just said. Her face animated and relaxed. It seemed Red had been correct in his assessment. The guard had only been pretending to be asleep and was now sharing that charming side he could call upon whenever the mood struck him.

What a different side Liz presented here with these people as opposed to her coworkers. She was totally free in this atmosphere.

He had to wonder how the news of their relationship, when it became public knowledge, as it must eventually, would affect her general well being.

She would need his people to be supportive, because no one else would be.

He wasn’t ashamed of what he felt for her. He was older and there would be speculation. He could not protect her from people’s thoughts. He didn’t give a damn about anything but her and what she thought. He had her affection and she warmed his bed at night, and that’s all he cared about.

But Lizzy... the ridicule that was on the horizon, would hurt her deeply. But maybe Francis and the boys could cushion the blow.

And maybe, with him there to love her... it might balance the hurt she would feel.

He rested his chin on his thumb, curling his fingers against his mouth, staring at her... making no pretense of doing anything else.

She glanced at him, smiling prettily. He winked at her, his smile half hidden behind his fingers.

Her cheeks turned pink under his scrutiny as she smoothed her hair, a very feminine gesture. His smile increased slightly.

A couple weeks ago, she would have rolled her eyes at him.

Today, she had the memory of what he did to her last night... and this morning.

His eyes deepened and he shifted slightly annoyed that his penis reacted accordingly. He was however, becoming accustomed to the sensation.
May 16

Liz loved flying at night, but to see Vegas, lit up in all it’s glory was a sight to behold. As they came in for the final approach, she looked out the window, beaming.

The jet taxied for a while before they came to a final stop. Dembe opened the flight door, letting the dry desert air inside.

Liz inhaled deeply, almost swearing she could smell money, sin and Pina Colada in the air.

Red headed down the steps with her in tow. It was a new sensation, but Liz thought she could rapidly get used to him holding her hand. As they descended the narrow steps she watched as their luggage was transferred to the waiting vehicle.

“What are we doing tonight?” Francis asked as he slid into the limo, patting the seat next to him. Liz slipped into the spot. “Did they say?”

“We’ll have time to get settled in our rooms, then have a meet and greet.” Red replied, straighten into the rich leather seat beside Lizzy and opposite Dembe and Silas. “Then maybe play some tables.” he got an affirmative grin from all concerned.

Liz craned her head this way and that as they drove, taking in the sights of the Vegas streets, feeling her excitement grow. There was so much to look at, the buildings, the people...

“Or perhaps we should go sight seeing a little.” Red smiled softly at the woman’s apparent interest in the outside world. As they pulled up to the hotel, his smile dimmed a bit.

“Just don’t let go of Liz.” Francis cheered him on. “It’ll be fine.”

When the vehicle stopped, the valet opened the door. Francis nearly fell out backwards at the unexpected action for he had been examining the amenities inside the posh car.

“What ever happens in there,” Red coached semi-seriously, “just be yourself.”

Liz giggled at his mood, before taking his hand as they walked through the lobby.

“The dragon nears.” Francis muttered playfully, gesturing to a nearing woman with a slight jerk of his head.

Liz slid closer to Red, wrapping her arms around the man, laying her head against his shoulder. Out of the corner of her eye, she sized up her opponent.

A tall, svelte blonde with impeccable style and grace approached their party, a stylish brow lifted in a scolding manner. Nicole Master’s steps slowed, a crease appearing on the obviously Botoxed forehead as the woman took in the spectacle before her.

“If you keep this up,” Red mumbled aside, having seen the usually unshakable façade Nicole held in place, crack slightly to his amusement, “I’m going to buy you something really expensive while we’re here.”
Liz sensed her act was having the desired effect.

“Mr. Holbrook.” Nicole greeted the gathered group cordially enough. “...Mr. Reddington,” her voice cooled somewhat as her eyes shifted to Elizabeth Keen, “...and guest.”

“And guest.” Francis repeated sotto voce. Silas shrugged nonchalantly. He had never understood the workings of the female mind. Their bodies... yes.

“If you’ll come this way.” Nicole gestured elegantly to the front desk.

While Red gathered the itinerary left by their host, Liz didn’t leave his side, as per instruction.

Nicole seemed to have lost interest having crossed to greet another guest who had arrived at the door.

“I’m going to grab a couple of those pamphlets, for tomorrow.” Liz pointed to an array of leaflets which featured area attractions, now that the other woman was off the scene.

“All right,” Red kissed her lips gently before returning to the sheet of paper he perused, “stay with Silas.”

Liz crossed, leafing through of the brochures, suddenly distracted by a strong whiff of perfume as it wafted her face.

“We do not allow Working Girls in this hotel.” Nicole intoned evenly, the lovely eyes cold and disdainful. Liz thought she was seeing the real woman behind the ‘mask’ for the first time.

“I beg your pardon?” Liz hissed, ignoring Silas snickering behind her.

“If you leave now–” Nicole’s tone was pure honey.

“I’m not going anywhere!” Liz gritted, her shackles rising.

“I will call Security.”

“Call whoever the hell you want.” Liz’s voice dripped ice.

Nicole gestured to some unseen person, before staring back at Liz triumphantly.

“Something wrong Liz?” Francis asked, approaching the standoff, finding his friend throwing daggers at Nicole, much to his delight. There was nothing Francis liked more than a good old fashioned cat fight. Except maybe mud wrestling.

“No problems, Mr. Holbrook.” Nicole smiled. “If you would like, I can have someone assist you to your accommodations.”

“No...” he grinned, just knowing a fireworks show was on the horizon, “I’ll just wait here.”

Red slid the paper back into it’s envelope, just as Christopher appeared from one of the back rooms. He nodded his greeting as their host approached, hand out.

After quick pleasantries, Red gestured to the vicinity needed. “Come meet my fiancée, Christopher.”

He glanced over at Liz...

What in the...
He made his way hastily across the spacious foyer. Silas had come out of his relaxed stance, placing himself in front of Lizzy. He stared down the approaching Security detail, his presence emanating a certain type of danger.

“Baby, is something wrong?” Red had arrived on scene, asking the rhetorical question.

“We’ve been asked to leave.” Liz replied stonily.

“I believe I said, you need to vacate the premises.” Nicole corrected. “Not Mr. Reddington.”

“I beg your pardon?” Red enquired quietly, his manner and tone adjusting accordingly.

“Would you like to explain yourself, Ms. Masters.” Christopher’s own brittle tone made the already tense situation, that more unstable. “Mr. Reddington is a very special guest here along with his–”

“She thinks I’m a prostitute.” Liz interrupted, her tone more than chilly.

“...Excuse the hell out of me?” Red’s voice had iced over. He snapped a quick glare at Francis who was trying rather unsuccessfully, to contain his glee over the impending situation.

“She told me to leave, that they didn’t allow working girls in the hotel, I told her to stick it and she called Security.” Liz replied in a nutshell.

“I can testify to all of that.” Francis chortled happily. He checked with the other witness on site but Silas was admirably holding any emotion for the moment except one of exceedingly vigilant awareness.

“Why didn’t you tell her who she was?” Red indicated to his companion. Francis immediately took on an innocent air which at any other time would have been laughable.

“I shouldn’t have to explain myself!” Liz snapped angrily.

“No, you should not.” Red’s voice equaled her intensity.

“I am only doing as my job dictates.” Nicole defended herself.

“This is Red’s fiancée, Elizabeth Scott.” Francis gestured happily, for he was really enjoying this moment.

“Ms. Masters, go wait in my office.” Christopher replied evenly. “Now.”

The woman’s mouth pinched in open anger, the dark eyes flashing an inner fire. She pulled her frame erect, opening her mouth to offer a defensive retort.

Christopher gestured abruptly to the waiting Security. Nicole Masters was removed from the scene post haste.

Christopher turned quietly to his guests. “Please let me express my deepest apologies.” he stressed. “I am terribly sorry for the way you were treated.” he quickly tried to smooth over the embarrassing incident. “If there is anything I can do to make this right...” he honestly asked of the woman.

“Just keep her away from me while we’re h–”

“Fire her.” Red snapped. “That was completely inexusable.”

“Yes, it was.” Christopher concurred. “I will see to it immediately.” the man assured. “I’ve set you and your entourage in the Villa’s for your stay.” he waved a staid looking gentleman forward. “Timothy will see that you are delivered there immediately, while I handle this issue.” he offered, before waiting to see if Red took him up on the extended olive branch.

The others waited to see what Red would do. “I do not want to see her again, is that clear?” Red responded quietly.

Christopher offered a curt nod, spun and stalked away.

“That was so much fun.” Francis slapped his hands together smartly. “This is going to be a wonderful adventure, I just know it.”

“Okay Peter Pan,” Silas reigned in the perennial man-child, “let’s get you back to Never Never Land.”

“That was one hell of an assumption.” Liz scrutinized her choice of clothing. “Granted, everyone has to make a living, and I’m not judging, mind you, but... come on.” she once again doubted her choice of clothing.

“Stop it, Elizabeth.” Red grumbled, leading her aside as they fell in behind Timothy, who in reality was their in-house Butler for the Villa’s.

“Well, I look just fine.” Elizabeth was partially sure.

“Nicole was just pissed off with me and took it out on you.” Red settled his hand on her back, ushering Liz to the car. “You look beautiful.” he leaned down, kissing her pouty mouth until she smiled. “As always.”

They slid into a sleek SUV, driving a short distance to a gated property where they were met with better hospitality, glasses of champagne and Mark Donovan.

The man smiled upon their entrance, holding out his hand in greeting, reserving an affectionate hug for Liz. Though, he had read some tension in the group, most specifically, from Red Reddington.

“Nicole...” Francis grinned in response to the unasked question.

“Ahh,” Mark nodded knowingly, “even with Liz here, she put the moves on him, eh?” he chuckled.

“No... well, not like she usually does, anyway.” Francis tittered his amusement, before recounting the story of what had just occurred.

Liz felt a smile working it’s way across her face the more Francis embellished the tale, until she finally giggled herself. She smiled up at Red, finding the man looking down at her with vexed affection.

“So, how are you?” Liz asked Mark, taking her place beside Red on a ridiculously scrumptious sofa.

“I’m better.” the man nodded. “Still sore, but since it’s an obvious indicator I’m not dead, I’m fine with it.”

After looking over the itinerary Christopher had left for them, some minor business discussion entailed.

“We’ll meet in an hour.” Red held out his hand for Liz, ushering her to their rooms.

The rooms were amazing. No, they were astounding. Liz could very well get used to traveling with Red, if this was any indication of the luxury he was familiar with.

Not only were the rooms opulent, they had their own private pool, Chef and Butler.

Red guided her to the bedroom, a smile tugging at his lips when the woman hesitated at the doorway. A bright flush reddening not only her cheeks, but her entire torso.

“I hope we can make use of them.” Red muttered in her ear, gesturing to the mirrors above and behind the bed.

The woman let the implication set in, her tummy fluttering in anticipation. “Did Francis put you up to this?” she responded breathlessly. “I just couldn’t watch it happening... could I?” she looked at him hopefully.

Red felt his dick stir at the thought. He walked up behind the woman staring transfixed at the very inviting bed, wrapping his arms low around her waist.

“You couldn’t watch me make love to you, baby?” he rumbled intimately in her ear, enjoying the shiver traverse her body. “Watching me slide in this beautiful pussy.” he cupped her little mound in his large palm, rubbing her gently, watching her face in the mirror.

Liz’s eyes fluttered shut at the visual he painted for her, her bottom rubbing against Red’s crotch unconsciously. Then with added pressure as she felt his shaft strain against the zipper of his trousers.

He turned her around, latching hungrily to the woman’s mouth, enjoying her gasp of arousal as he roughly tugged at her skirt. Freeing her from the nuisance, he pushed her back into the bedding, wasting no time covering her body with his.

“You make me fucking crazy...” he snarled against her mouth as he curled his fingers in her panties, pulling them over her shapely hips, before tugging sharply, ripping the thin strings blocking his way to what he wanted.

Liz lifted, her eyes glued to the mirrors overhead, watching Red’s large hands divest her of her clothing.

He reached between them, pulling at his belt and zipper, releasing his throbbing shaft. Suiting himself up quickly, Red wasted no time pushing himself into her saturated tunnel.

“I crave this... you.” he whispered hoarsely, driving his shaft into her wet core.

Liz lifted her eyes, watching the man’s large erection disappear between her thighs. The sensation and the sight, mesmerizing.

His eyes closed, his heavy weight sliding part way from her body, before his large cock instantly missed her warmth.

“I need you so damn much,” he rasped the fact, “I ache when I’m not with you.”

Liz curled her fingers into the man’s shirt, drawing herself up to suckle his lips. Sliding her agile tongue into his warm mouth, she hummed as his danced erotically along hers.

“You are so good at this.” she mewled breathlessly, rocking her hips into his down stroke. “I don’t mean the sex, well of course I mean the sex... God, yes the sex.” she tried to explain her faux pas. “The talking, I meant the talking. You talk really good... well, you talk well, oh shit.” she sighed more than heavily, upset with her lack of communication skills.
“I speak the truth...” the man murmured intimately through his half smile, the woman’s ramblings endearingly engaging.

She lifted hazy eyes back to the reflection, watching the man fuck her. Working her hands under his waist band, she pushed at his trousers greedily, showing her a glimpse of his amazing ass flexing as he drove home. The sight sent a jolt of sexual awareness through her body causing her pussy to flex spasmodically around the thick shaft.

A deep growl of satisfaction rumbled in the man’s throat as the woman’s warm breath brushed erotically against his neck before she bit into the sensitive skin in between her breathless pleas.

He broke away from her embrace, standing erect. He cupped her small ass in powerful hands, yanking her across the rich cotton coverlet. He tilted her hips upward, fucking her hard and fast.

Red’s eyes fell on her slender fingers, pulling at her taut nipples, massaging the sensitive little peaks methodically. The pink buds, reddened under the abuse.

“Touch your clit, baby.” he demanded roughly.

She quickly slid her fingers down to the swollen peak, rubbing herself. She moaned brokenly, enjoying the action immensely.

“I love watching you get off.” he encouraged, releasing one ass cheek to assist her. His large finger slid alongside hers, teasing the pink muscle covered in her creamy arousal. “There is nothing more beautiful in this world.”

She fluttered around him in response, the sensation making his knees buckle for a moment.

“....Damn.” he drawled shakily.

Liz bit hard at her lip, jerking up into his movement, tensing more with each passing second.

“That’s good...” he praised lavishly, “come on my cock, baby,” he urged as she tightened her core further, trembling beneath him, “let my beautiful little pussy come.”

She seized suddenly, her ass raising high off the bed, bucking hard against him. Her thighs shook violently as she cried out sharply, gripping the breast in her hand. Red slowed some, raptly watching the show.

“Don’t stop dammit!” she exclaimed, bouncing her ass harder against him.

Red readjusted his grip quickly, resuming his earlier speed... nailing the gorgeous woman laying in front of him.

He looked down at the sight of the give and take of her vulva as he pushed at her body with his glistening shaft.

The need to posses her made his blood surge. Especially when the woman’s responded so well to his demands.

Red leaned into her, as his climax neared. His parted mouth mingled with her breathy sighs, their tongues flicking about sensually.

“I’m gonna come so hard, Lizzy...” he breathed hotly against her ear, very much enjoying her cry of arousal. “Come with me...” he nipped at her lip, and was pleased as shit to feel her tensing in preparation. “It feels so fucking good...”

Palming her head, he deepened the kiss. Reaching back, his fingers expertly teased her ass, as he moaned brokenly into her mouth as she joined him. His crown pulsed heavily, oozing jets of hot cream that warmed her steamy cavern deliciously.

Slowing the movement of his pelvis, Red eased some of his weight into the woman, smiling as she wrapped her arms and legs tighter around his body, hugging him close.

“Damn...” she released a shaky breath, brushing her hair from her face, as Red gently kissed her neck, “I love watching you work.”

The man’s muffled chuckle tickled her oversensitive flesh, making her giggle in response.

“With that said,” he sighed, settling his body comfortably against hers, “will I be afforded the pleasure of watching you?” he questioned.

She smiled up at him as the man cupped her breast, testing it’s weight. “Well, it is only fair, isn’t it?” she fought the blush for her own boldness not sure she could live up to such bravado.

“I will hold you to that.” His eyes told her, that in this instance, he would brook no argument.

A short time later, after an invigorating shower, the conversation turned to the mundane.

Liz was contemplating her choice of evening wear, this time with extreme prejudice. She was having trouble deciding between the sedate blue and the always reliable ‘little black dress’.

Hearing Red’s deep chuckle from the other room, she stepped around the decorative door facing to see what humored the man.

“I do so enjoy ‘full service’ hotels.” Red picked up one of the items from his bedside drawer, examining the object critically.

“What do you have there?” She tried to see but his bulk was in the way.

“A variety of condoms, single packets of lube, some mints... a bible.” Red chuckled, dropping the condom back in the drawer, along with his reading glasses.

Liz came out of the bathroom, fastening her earring, before presenting the back of her dress to the man.

Red gazed at the long expanse of bare back, before grasping her zipper, pulling it up slowly.

“Is there anything I should know?” she asked.

He snaked his arm around her waist, pulling her back into his body when he finished. “We’re just seeing who’s involved tonight, for the most part. You need shoes.” he noticed, patting her bottom, sending her back to the closet.

She came back, holding her shoes. Red held out his hand, steadying her while she got one in place, then the other. “I can’t believe I miss heels.” she sighed, looking at the little flats she wore.

“You’ll wear them again.” he promised. “Then wish you could wear these.” he gestured to her shoes. “As for dinner, have a few drinks, play a few tables. Have fun.”

She gave a little spin, confident she looked presentable as Red looked her up and down, smiling, before the man pulled her to the couch.

“I wanted to speak to you about something.” he began without preamble.

“Yes?” she was attentive.

“Are you pissed at me for what happened at the Blacksite?” he enquired. “You have every right to be, if you are.”

“I’m not mad.” she assured. “I want to find out just as much as you do who’s writing these letters. And the fact that Tom was there, says a lot.” at least in her opinion.

“I didn’t warn you because I wanted you to act normally.” he explained. “I wouldn’t let anything happen to you, Lizzy.”

“I know that.” she dismissed the rhetoric.

“Are you upset, that he’s following you.”

“Well, I’m not pleased.” she pulled an endearing grimace. “I’ve kind of resigned myself to the fact.”

“He won’t get what he’s after and he won’t be your shadow forever. Trust me.” Red seemed to read her mind.

Liz smiled, reaching for her bag. Red’s hand covered hers gently.

“Lizzy, you do know that you can talk to Dembe about anything, yes?” He stressed.

She cocked her head, looking at him oddly.

“He would never betray your confidence, even to me.” he emphasized. “You need a confidant. Someone you can trust.”

“I don’t think Dembe would be all that comfortable listening to me go on about my feelings for you or about what happens,” She turned pink, smiling to herself, “...in our bed.”

“Dembe understands a lot more than you think.” He shook his head, when she went to ask what that meant. “I’m just saying, don’t discount him.”

“All right...” She nodded, not quite understanding his mood, but accepting it.

“I was thinking today,” he shared his concerns, “you don’t really have any friends to talk to, especially about us.”

“Francis would be supportive...”

“Francis is, yes. But he also doesn’t know who you really are.” Red reminded. “Dembe is the only one who knows our situation, fully.”

Liz stroked his cheek, smiling at the man. “Thank you for worrying about my well being and happiness, you dear caring man.” she teased to lighten his mood. “I’ll keep him in mind if I feel the need to have some girl talk.” She chuckled. “Though you know, I’ve been speaking with Silas a lot. And with his long hair... it’s almost like having a girlfriend.”
“Please tell him that.” Red insisted, pulling her up and off the couch. “And when you do... make sure I am there.”

They walked in comfortable silence into the casino to a private VIP room. Red and Liz took the lead with Silas and Dembe taking flanking positions on either side.

Red offered his arm, pleasantly surprised when Liz stepped closer, taking his hand instead. He looked down at their clasped hands, smiling when she readjusted her grip, taking two fingers instead of the whole hand. The fit, better in her tiny grasp.

He gave her a reassuring nod as they entered a noisy area, with people milling about in the foyer and dining entrance, chatting and drinking.

Liz straightened her posture self-consciously having scanned the room with all it’s beautiful jet setters.

“Relax.” his hand tightened systematically. “It’s just a bunch of criminals.” he grinned at his own wit.

She scanned the room, her eyes landing on a friendly face.

“There’s Francis.” she gestured to the table beside the large windows overlooking the city.

“Speaking of criminals...” Red voiced to himself. “Were you wanting to sit with him or avoid him.” he questioned. “I couldn’t quite tell by your tone.”

She rolled her eyes, dragging Red along after her as she made her way determinedly. The crowd parted, all eyes falling on her companion. A fact Elizabeth missed in her haste to find a safe haven.

“Who are they?” she pointed to the women beside Francis and Mark, as Red came alongside her.

“I haven’t a clue.” Red set his hand on her back, ushering her to the table.

Dembe and Silas seated themselves at a nearby spot. Both men instantly raised a hand, immediately gaining a waitresses’ attention who seemed only too glad to serve such interesting specimens.

“Oh, hey.” Francis smiled, standing as they neared. “I was wondering,” he leaned in, kissing Liz’s cheek, “when you’d get here.” he held out his hand to Red, shaking it. “Using the mirrors were we?”

Liz flushed a vibrant red, as Red chuckled quietly beside her, pulling out her chair, offering his hand to Mark Donovan as well. Always the gentleman, Red nodded discreetly to Mark’s companion.

“We were using them correctly, unlike you.” the man gently teased.

“I was using it correctly,” Francis corrected, his tone a rather haughty one. “I just happened to be using them alone.”

“Who’s your friend, Francis.” Liz grated hastily, hopefully directing the conversation to a more congenial subject.

“I’m sorry.” Francis apologized instantly, sincerely sorry for his lack of etiquette.

“Red, Liz,” he gestured to the couple, then to the woman beside him. “this is, Lia.”
Red shook his head, sighing. Leave it to Francis to find himself a girl after only two short hours... and a masturbatory session.

Mark made the compulsory introductions as well, clearly of a different mind set than Francis.

Liz smiled at the new additions, welcoming them with a genuine smile. It would be really nice to have someone to talk to tonight while Red and the others did their thing.

Plus, she was enjoying how cute Francis and Lia looked together.

Francis was taller than Red who measured five foot ten, while the little brunette pixie at Francis’ side couldn’t be more than five foot three. They really were quite a striking couple with their dark hair, mischievous eyes and sly grins.

Aside from that, Liz finally got to see how Francis treated a lady. She knew he was affectionate as hell, always quick with a hug or a shoulder to lean on.

But with a romantic interest, Liz was pleasantly surprised to see how aware and attentive the man was with his date.

If he wasn’t holding Lia’s hand, he had his arm wrapped about her waist. Occasionally, he would whisper something to her, making the woman smile. He was constantly checking on her comfort every few minutes.

But Lia seemed to be holding her own well enough. She was very sarcastic, quick to deliver a wise crack and had a very infectious laugh. Even Red had warmed to her quickly, laughing openly at the good natured barbs the woman hurled at Francis.

While Francis looked at her winsomely, his heart stolen with each slice of Lia’s quick wit.

Which was more than they could say for Mark’s date. After Amanda excused herself to the powder room, for the third time, Lia accompanied her.

Francis’ brows knitted together as he sought out Elizabeth.

“What?” she questioned his rhetorical gesture.

“Don’t you normally travel in packs?” he indicated the women walking across the room.

“Maybe, if I had to pee.” she drawled.

Red shook his head at the candid conversation, before leaning back and wrapping an arm over the back of Lizzy’s chair. Liz scooted her chair closer, leaning comfortably into Red’s chest.

Francis turned his scowl elsewhere. “What’s up her ass?” he jabbed a thumb towards Mark’s retreating date.

“She doesn’t want to be here,” Mark sighed, “anymore than I want her here.”

Liz startled at the blatant honesty.

“I apologize, that was incredibly rude of me.” Mark tossed his napkin to the table, frowning. “Her Uncle set us up. Wanted my stay to be... pleasant.” He twisted his mouth distastefully.
Liz’s eyes widened at the implication.

“Antonio?” Red questioned. It didn’t seem like the older man’s style. Red had known the old mobster for ages.

“No, his brother.” Mark replied sourly. “I couldn’t turn him down, you know.” he explained.

“He’s Old School mob.” Francis piped in helpfully.

Liz looked to Red for an explanation.

“To offer her to Mark, suggests a trust.” Red muttered quietly. “A bond.”

“Sounds like a pimp to me.” Liz scowled.

“Did you tell her you have no interest in,” Red began, “...trade relations.”

“No...” Mark leaned into the table, his own interest piqued, “you think I should? I mean,” he looked over his shoulder, “I don’t want to offend her.” he shrugged. “Any other time, I would find her very attractive. But this...” he sought the word.

“Tell her exactly what you told us.” Red suggested sagely. “Takes the stress off.” he waved the man off, giving him the excuse he needed.

Mark pushed his chair back, rising diligently. “If you will excuse me.”

Liz smiled as Lia returned to the table, an instant camaraderie established once again between the young girl and Francis Holbrook. She stole a hunk of chocolate off the top of Francis’ dessert.

Francis grinned, running his finger through the chocolate frosting, swiping it across his upper lip.

Red and Liz chuckled quietly when the woman leaned suggestively, kissing the chocolate away.

Their plates were cleared shortly after, leaving them to enjoy drinks and quiet conversation.

Mark and his date came back to the table, hand in hand, smiling. The tension a thing of the past.

A few visitors stopped by to offer congratulations to Red upon hearing Lizzy’s status as his fiancée, though more than enough female associates made it clear that their congratulations were given half-heartedly.

Such two faced behavior had once troubled Liz, but now she could see a perverse humor in the situation.

The men arose shortly there after, making their excuses.

“This shouldn’t take too long.” Red brushed a gentle hand over Liz’s dark hair. “You have an account with the hotel. Just tell them where we’re staying.” he further added. “And if you want to play,” he pulled his wallet free, handing her a wad of cash, “...good luck.”

“Red...”

He stared down at her, shaking his head minutely, making her fall silent. His meaning clear.

The walls had ears.
She side glanced the others, finding Mark and Francis doing the same with their dates before coming to the head of the table, waiting on Red.

“Thank you.” she smiled up at him, kissing him softly.

Liz craned her head, watching the men stride purposefully across the room. Their matched steps and confident swagger, imposing.

And apparently, attractive. More than a few heads turned to admire the testosterone as it passed.

They were all very handsome, that was for sure. Add to that, they were powerful. It was a heady mix that really drew the attention of more than enough ladies.

Liz’s scowl melted away seconds later when Red turned back, his eyes for her alone. The intense gaze locked with hers for a brief eternity.

She smiled bravely for him directly before he disappeared into a glass enclosed room at the far end of the room.

The women settled into an easy fellowship. They loosened up by first, rating the dresses in the room. They shared a few laughs about the men in their lives, some men they had known and some they wished they had not.

It was not long before they gravitated to the slot machines to try their luck.

Francis came to join them a short time later, much to Liz’s confusion.

“I thought you were supposed to smooth things over?” Liz whispered.

“I did.” Francis leaned in, speaking only to her. “I made the introductions, vouched for them.”

“Vouched for Red?” she questioned, then smacked Silas’ hand when he tried to steal coins from her bucket.

“As I said, they’re Old School.” Francis sighed. “Unless you know a guy, who knows a guy...” he rolled a hand as if to continue the train of thought.

“But they’re safe?” she questioned. “Without you there.”

“Oh, yeah...” Francis nodded slowly. “My reputation does precede me sometimes in a good way.” the man shrugged. “Not always, but sometimes.”

Silas leaned in close to Liz’s ear, “Do you believe it?” the disdain was in his tone. “That woman has the same exact dress as you.”

While Liz was distracted, he dipped a large handful of coins from her bucket. Her mouth fell open, a little girl pout directed his way.

“That doesn’t work on me.” Silas set down at the next slot. “Save it for your Sugar Daddy.”

Liz hit his shoulder...hard. “He’s not my Sugar Daddy.”

Silas looked pointedly at her bucket of loot.

“Well, that’s different.” Liz defended herself... sort of.
“Let’s go play the tables.” Francis rubbed his hands together briskly before offering to lead the way. They bounced a couple tables, before finally settling at a Blackjack game with a witty dealer and a good waitress.

For the next hour, Francis sulked noticeably. The women won round after round... and he didn’t.

“How the hell did I...” he gaped, pushing aside his drink, refocusing on the new cards headed his way.

Liz chuckled under her breath, before checking her card, silently ticking off the amount in her head.

“Elizabeth?” a man’s voice interrupted her concentration.

Liz checked with Francis, amused to find him using her given name.

“Elizabeth Scott?”

The woman twisted around to find an oddly familiar face.

Silas appeared out of nowhere, in truth she had lost him in the excitement of the game. A silent shift of her eyes let him know everything was under control.

“...Yes?”

The man smiled, pulling up a seat beside her. “You don’t remember me,” he chuckled, “do you?”

Liz’s brow rose, suddenly remembering that laugh and the car salesman smile. “Brad Parker.” she sighed, smiling wanly.

“And who is this, Brad Parker when he’s at home?” Francis questioned flippantly, the game forgotten for a moment.

She looked at her friend then her guard, the same sickly smile on her face. “It’s all right.” she responded quietly. “An old boyfriend.” she confided unobtrusively.

Silas turned his bulk slightly aside, remaining steadfast however. He pulled his phone free tapping the screen quickly, running a check on the man.

“You look fantastic.” Brad smiled charmingly. “Is this your uh,” he gestured to Francis, “your husband.”

Francis snorted under his breath, tossing his cards back to the dealer.

Lia moved closer sensing something amiss and not above eavesdropping on occasion if the circumstances called for it.

Francis threw a nondescript glance at Silas, at which time, both men checked on the whereabouts of Red Reddington.

The man in question glanced casually in their direction, as he had done most of the evening, checking on Lizzy. He turned his head lazily back to the conversation at hand before offering a slow double take as if something clicked in his brain.
“No, this is a very good friend of mine.” Liz smiled at Francis, continuing the introductions. “Francis, this is Brad.”

“Hello... Brad.” Francis smiled all too pleasantly.

Silas sighed heavily and the younger man sensed the way of things. He turned to check his instincts, seeing Red had arisen even though having smiled at whatever the man across from him had said.

“Is this going to get ugly, because I have a hot date here.” Francis could see the night taking a turn for the worst.

“Why should it?” Silas seemed unperturbed by the developing situation.

Francis pointed a finger, “That is Antonio Crocetti. Do you know what he would do if his dame sat down with another guy? And now Red has been put in a rather precarious position. Don’t you think?”

“Dame?” Silas sized up the old man whose steel blue eyes were trained directly on Elizabeth and the man sitting beside her.

“Oh, shit...” Francis whispered under his breath, before straightening in his own seat, “we’re all going to die. And I’m not gonna get laid.” he looked wistfully at the cute little number beside him who had just hit twenty-one... again.

For a split second he wondered if that sweet little squeal of delight was how she sounded in that ‘special moment’.

“Are you here on business or pleasure.” Brad continued on mindlessly, settling in his chair, getting entirely too comfortable.

“I’m here for pleasure.” Liz smiled pleasantly, very aware of the vibes the men beside her were putting off. Red was watching. “My fian–”

“I’m here for a wedding, so I guess you could call that pleasurable.” the man interrupted. “Say, would you like to get a drink,” he gestured to the bar, “catch up on old times?”

“Lizzy, we should go.” Francis stood abruptly, pulling her chair back as he did so. “Now would probably be a really good...”

“Elizabeth...”

Francis grimaced at the sound of Red’s voice rumbling dangerously behind them, nearly jumping out of his skin. Francis checked hastily to see if Red was alone, ever so glad to see that he was, except for Mark Donovan.

Liz sighed quietly, arising hastily. “Honey...” she greeted Red brightly, “already finished?”

“Aren’t you going to introduce me?” he questioned, his eyes unreadable as they swept the man behind her.

“Oh, yes.” she cleared her throat softly. “Ray, this is uhm, Brad Parker.” she looped her arm through Red’s, “he’s an old, uhm...”

“We dated.” the man filled in quickly, holding out his hand in greeting.

Red looked at the offering, hesitating briefly before extending his own hand.
“It was a long time ago...” Liz corrected. “College.”

Red remembered the little asshole well. If only because he had cheated on Elizabeth.

He waited patiently for her to continue the introductions, more than anxious to see how she would label him. And if she didn’t do it soon, Red would have no compulsion what-so-ever in fucking reminding all concerned of his place in the unfolding melodrama.

Gnawing nervously on her lip at the awkward silence, Liz looked up to find Red staring back at her silently... waiting. She winced inwardly, feeling the pressure of the moment.

“I’m sorry.” she smiled at the two men. “Brad, this is Ray, my fiancé.”

Brad’s brows furrowed darkly as he stared at the competition, then the sparkling diamond on her finger.

“I see...” he adopted a beaming smile once more, pumping Red’s hand more enthusiastically, “congratulations are in order then.”

“Thank you.” Red’s voice lowered dangerously as he systematically increased the pressure of the clenched hands seconds before Brad winced openly.

Francis looked from one man to the other men, scratching at his neck, grimacing. “Tension...” he muttered to the guard. “So much tension.”

“Grow a set, pansy.” Silas muttered moodily.

The younger man broke free from Red’s grasp, shaking his hand gingerly to get the blood flowing again.

“I saw Liz, thought she might like to get a dinner.” Brad smiled charmingly at the woman. “Catch up on old times, as it were.”

Francis rubbed his hand over his brow nervously when Red remained stoically silent. His gaze quietly introverted.

Which was a huge warning sign to Francis. When Red got like that, and his fingers twitched at his sides, as they were doing right at this moment... someone usually died shortly there after.

“Oh, I don’t think...” Liz stumbled over the words, the tension so thick she could feel her tongue drying up, making it damn near impossible to speak correctly.

“Actually, we have,” Francis stepped up, adopting the same charming smile as Brad Parker, “reservations, for dinner.” he heard Lizzy release a soft breath of relief beside him, beyond thankful for the assistance. “We really should get going.”

A group of men across the way, cheerfully called out to the problem at hand, waving him over.

“I gotta go.” Brad gestured, pulling his wallet free. “Here’s my number if you get a free moment tonight.” he handed her a card, smiling that ever present sleazy grin. “Maybe we can have breakfast in the morning.”

Francis quickly put his hand out, preventing Red from advancing on the unsuspecting male. Silas deftly reached under Red’s jacket, artfully slipping the pistol from the man’s holster. The weapon was discreetly disposed of in seconds.

Liz frowned at the strange request, “Did you just say–”

“Elizabeth will most assuredly be occupied with me in the morning,” Red interrupted coldly, the undertone of the statement, quite clear, “and has a full schedule for our stay.” he held out his hand, and was pleased when the woman reached for it, grasping it tightly. “Now, we must be going.”

“Fuck...” Francis whispered his awe.

Mark Donovan’s mouth fell agape at such audacity.

Red placed a restraining hand on the other man’s polyester shirt front, putting himself between the woman and her want-to-be suitor.

“I think you need to join your party.” Red directed frostily.

Francis and Mark, took an involuntary, unobtrusive step back at the icy tone. Silas impeded Francis’ intended escape, slyly gripping the young man’s sleeve, holding him in place.

“If I’m going down,” the guard murmured playfully, “you’re going with me.”

“I’m too young to die.” Francis pulled fanatically on his captured sleeve. “And far too pretty.” his voice held a hint of hysteria.

“Pretty stupid...” Silas corrected the misconception, holding firm.

“I’ll see you later, Liz.” Brad clearly had not taken the warning seriously.

“No, I don’t think you will.” Red replied, stepping forward menacingly yet again, this time with more intent behind the gesture.

“Red, we really should be going.” Liz stressed feeling the tension emanating from Red Reddington. There was something singularly disconcerting about the man. “We’ll be late.”

“Elizabeth...” there was a definite hint of warning in the low voice.

“Yeah, sure.” Brad smiled, giving a small wave. “We’ll catch up soon.”

Red followed Brad’s movements with his eyes, his face expressionless.

“What an idiot...” Silas declared sharply, also watching as the man joined his group. “Take a fucking hint, you twit.”

“Now hold that temper, Red.” Francis asked respectfully. “Liz was just minding her own business and the asshole...”

“I am aware.” Red intoned quietly.

“Why don’t we get something to eat,” Mark suggested quickly, the tension unbearable.

“We already had dinner, dumbass.” Francis rolled his eyes. “Let’s go to the bar,” he suggested instead, “have a drink... relax.”
“Come buy me something sweet, cinnamon roll.” Lia tugged on Francis’ arm, she too having felt the dynamics of the situation, having a natural instinct on how to smooth over a difficult situation.

Red transferred the all too quiet gaze to Liz before shifting a lazy stare to Francis.

“She thought I was sweet...” Francis shrugged, “so she started calling me cina–”

“Go away.” Red replied darkly.

“Okie dokie...” Francis had no problem with that suggestion. The young man extracted himself from Silas’ forceful grip offering a comical, ‘ha, fuckhead, I get to go...you have to stay’, expression.

“Pussy...” Silas called out after him, causing several of the ladies surrounding the gaming tables to glance over with a stern look which softened considerably when they saw who actually stated the crude remark.

Several actually smiled understandably at the handsome guard.

“Who was he?” Red asked stonily, his attention fixed and direct.

“I just told you.” Liz blew out a cleansing breath as some of the tension lifted. She wrinkled her nose endearingly. “He’s harmless.” she waved the subject aside.

“Lizzy, you forgot your winnings, didn’t you?” Red nodded toward the appropriate vicinity.

“Oh my God!” the woman was off immediately, excitement on her face with Dembe close behind.

Red directed his attention to Silas the minute the woman was out of earshot.

“Not much on his record.” the bulky man murmured, scrolling the screen of his phone. “But then, his daddy is a prominent Attorney, so who knows what may have been expunged.”

“I don’t give a fuck who his daddy is.” Red grated. “I don’t like the million dollar smile and over played charm.”

“Jealousy becomes you...” Silas jibed, “but I didn’t like him either. He wasn’t exactly the brightest bulb in the package.” he shook his head at the boy’s stupidity. “Plus, he acted like a sleaze ball.”

“You keep your damn eyes on her, you understand me.” he snarled quietly as they caught up to the woman. He gestured to the other girls who were at the bar, laughing with Mark and Francis. “I don’t want him around anyone in our party.” The cold eyes had not lost that ‘something’ that distinguished Reddington from another man. “Keep him away... period.”

“Yes, sir.” Silas replied seriously.

Dembe returned the woman to Red’s side at which point, they joined the others in the bar.

Red’s mood improved gradually as the evening wore on, though not by much.

“Were you jealous?” Liz murmured quietly, having gathered the nerve to broach the subject when the others got up to dance.

“I was...” Red admitted freely. The emotion easier to express now to the woman. “I am...”

“Well, don’t be.” she asked more than told. “Besides the fact that I have no interest in Brad what-so-ever, for obvious reasons.” she looked at Red pointedly. “There was a reason I dumped him.”
Red listened intently. “Which was?”

“He’s a bore.” she shrugged carelessly. Red narrowed his eyes, obviously needing her to enlarge upon the statement.

“He was... I don’t know,” she sighed unevenly, searching for the correct wording, “he was just smug, egotistical. He came from money and thought that was a big enough selling point...” her lips twisted up into a smile, “to make up for his other shortcomings.”

“If he comes back around,” Red said, knowing very well the little bastard would come sniffing around again, “you let Silas handle him.”

Liz rolled her eyes, “I can handle him on my own, thank you.”

“Elizabeth...” Red practically snapped.

“I don’t know why you’re letting him bother you.” she tried easing his worry.

“I recall a little brunette becoming a little ‘bothered’ when confronted by an old lover of mine.” Red suitably jogged her memory.

Liz straightened, her eyes narrowing a bit. “I did not get... ‘bothered’. ”

Dembe half chuckled under his breath, pulling the lever on the slot machine at which he sat, and had now for some few minutes. He ignored Liz’s meaningful look completely.

Silas sipped his beer casually, offering a minute shake of his head at her blatant lie.

“Yes, you did,” Red corrected.

“Well, I was supposed to be playing a part.” she defended herself.

“Are you suggesting that you wouldn’t feel threatened by a past lover of mine,” Red leaned in, lowering his voice, “now with the change in our relationship.”

“I trust you.” she replied stoically.

“My trust in you,” he locked eyes with her, “has no bearing on my wanting to cause Brad extreme physical pain.”

Liz lips pursed slightly, before quivering as she tried to squelch her growing amusement. “He just said hello, Red.”

Red shook his head for such innocence. Silas balanced his chair on two legs, laughing silently.

“What are you laughing at, you goon.” she scowled at the man.

“Your naïveté is charming.” the man’s tone almost held a chastisement “That man wanted more than just to say hello, you gullible little thing.”

Liz sighed heavily, rolling her eyes at her guard. “You are so jaded.”

“He was planning to fuck you tonight and have breakfast in the morning.” Silas cut to the chase, shocking the woman.

“He was not!” she gasped.
Red blew out a controlling breath, drawing the woman’s attention back where it belonged. “Yes…” he corrected, “he was.”

“Well, it’s not like it’s going to happen.” she scoffed openly.

“Damn right it won’t happen.” Red growled. “Don’t meet with him again, Elizabeth.”

“I wasn’t planning to.” she laughed merrily, hoping to improve Red’s mood, though it didn’t seem to help.

“Like you weren’t going to meet Tom.” Red’s jaw pulsed, another time coming to mind.

“Shit.” Silas’ head dropped back at the Liz’s sharp intake of breath. Her smile fell away, her mood falling drastically. “Was there really a need for that?” he questioned setting up to the table, his eyes holding Red’s easily.

And while it was true, she had met with Tom after promising she wouldn’t... Silas saw no advantage to bringing up the subject at such a time.

Red glared at the head guard, “Mind your own business.”

“I am minding my own god damned business.” Silas hissed under his breath, jabbing a finger at Liz. “Protecting her, is my business.”

“You did a fantastic job earlier.” Red snarled right back. “And she didn’t answer the damn question.”

“Stop hanging Tom over her fucking head.” Silas arose to his full height, having no intention of backing down in this instance. “And while you’re at it, stop being a major asshole.”

“Red’s right.” Liz whispered distractedly, just wanting the tension to stop this evening. She had hoped for such a good time tonight. “I did see Tom after I said I wouldn’t.” it seemed so long ago. “And how can Red not hold him over my head when he keeps interfering with our lives…” she hung her head, fiddling with the napkin in her lap.

Silas eyed Red angrily, his expression foreboding.

Red closed his eyes, pinching the bridge of his nose. He hadn’t meant to upset her to this extent. And it was all because he could not control his fucking temper.

“Explain why you do not wish for her to see him.” Dembe’s soft voice eased Red’s anger a notch, his hand aloft on the slot machine crank.

“I don’t trust that little shit anymore than I do Tom.” Red blurted his contention. “He’s up to no good, Elizabeth.” he warned.

It hurt like hell for Lizzy to have checked with Silas for confirmation, but then... he had only himself to blame.

Red had hurt her with his veiled accusations, and damn well knew it.

“That prick was purposely pushing Red’s buttons tonight.” Silas explained in his own inimitable fashion. “Most likely with the intention to cause,” he waved a hand between them, “…this shit.” he sat back down, leaning his burly forearms on the table. “You two argue,” he pointed between them, then to Liz. “You call a ‘friendly’ face... Brad consoles you over a few drinks, you wake up in a very
Liz scowled angrily, remembering that was almost the exact phrasing Brad had used when he had been caught cheating when they had dated.

“Elizabeth...” Red tried to find the words to apologize, “I shouldn’t have said–”

“No...” she held up a restraining hand, “it’s all right.”

“No, it isn’t.” he disagreed. “Tom was a rotten thing to have thrown in your face.” he had known it at the time he said it. “I could have handled it differently.”

She nodded quietly as she cleared her throat, accepting his apology. She hoped soon, things would be back the way they were.

She looked up, smiling weakly before sliding closer to the man.

“There’s no need to be jealous, you know.” she leaned over, kissing him languidly.

Red looked down at the little face, understanding what she was attempting. She wanted to replace the last few minutes with what probably should have happened, instead of the hurt they had just both felt.

“Is that right?” Red’s deep voice settled in her core, electrifying her pleasantly.

Liz took a deep breath, the anxiety she had felt easing gradually as Red tried to find the lightness with her.

“It is.” she brushed her mouth against his slowly. “I am far too invested in someone else to pay Brandon...”

“Brad.” Red corrected.

“... any attention.” she continued. “In fact, I’m hoping I can find someone else to keep me occupied while I’m here.” she reached out, adjusting his tie a little.

Red felt the anger dissipate by degrees at her veiled attempt to placate him.

“You wouldn’t happen to know anyone that’s available...” she scowled seriously at him, “would you?”

“Come here, baby.” She surprised him entirely by foregoing his intended ploy to cuddle her close, by moving sedately, sliding into his lap.

All the tension he was feeling disappeared as he now noted their present situation. His hand eased about the curve of her hip as he held her stationary.

“And how would you like to wile away the hours?” he asked, much preferring this version of events. She sighed her contentment, wiggling into a more comfortable position.

Liz stilled quickly, gasping quietly.

Red’s eyes darkened as her thigh moved softly over his bulge. He stilled her movements, centering her just where he needed her to be.

“Well?” he repeated the question softly.
“W-What?” she had lost her train of thought.

“How do you want me to keep you busy?” he whispered roughly in her ear. “Shall we go shopping? Or perhaps we could take a tour of the city?” an eventual smile played along his lips as the woman moved herself against the plumping organ in his pants, completely ignoring every word he said.

“We could go see the white tigers?” Red nuzzled the length of her neckline.

“Can’t we just stay in bed and have sex?” she whined softly.

Dembe paused in pulling the handle on the slot machine he was playing. Silas, while admiring the blatant honesty, would always be Silas.

“Get a fucking room.” he disdained.

“Or... we could do that.” Red smiled softly, gently kissing her jaw line, casting Silas an appreciative ‘thank you’ nod.

“I’m perfectly happy with what we have Red.” Liz ignored their surroundings completely. “I don’t want or need anyone else.”

“You don’t know what that means to me.”

They had tried and succeeded in rewriting what could have been a terrible evening, to make it better for them both.

He was also pleasantly surprised to find how open she was with her emotions. He was sure, in such a surrounding with the crowd of people, that she would be shy and introverted as in the past. But she had put his feelings above such rhetoric and now seemed more than content to be sitting here in his lap sharing intimate kisses now and again.

“I’m sorry.” he whispered softly in her ear. “Silas was right, I was a major asshole... don’t tell him I said that.”

Liz shook her head, smiling gently at the exchange before kissing Red’s nape gently.

The matter forgiven, all but forgotten.

May 16

“But Sugar Plum fairy,” Francis was earnestly confused for once, “I could have sworn you said you wanted an ‘Afternoon Delight’,” he glanced at the bartender who still held the offending drink aloft having tried to sit it before a slightly miffed individual.

“I said,” Lia corrected mournfully, “I liked ‘Sex on the Beach’.” her pout turned genuine.

“Oh,” the young man was suitably chagrined, “I’m sorry... I thought you were simply stating a preference there.”

Liz’s hand hastily covered her mouth and the grin the conversation had produced, swiveling around nonchalantly looking for something to take her mind off the shenanigans taking place at the bar.

She noticed Red, down the way, leaning casually, speaking with a man. He had been waiting for their drinks for a few minutes as the area was bustling and busy this time of night.

She watched the man for some few moments. He was comfortable in any atmosphere. Red could talk to anyone without issue. He made friends where ever he went.

She wondered what that was like? To have that kind of magnetism. To have people naturally drawn to you.

She had always had a hard time making friends herself.

Maybe people just knew a good thing when they saw it?

In the beginning, she had fought her natural attraction to Red Reddington. She had felt like a traitor, feeling so fascinated by a criminal. Evidently one could not lie to the heart just like it was impossible to lie to a child. They always saw through the bullshit. Her heart had known the truth.

Her heart swelled with emotion thinking of all the abuse Red had taken from her in the beginning, when it must have hurt him so much. It would have hurt her terribly.
Red rested his leg on the rung of a stool, leaning further into the bar, laughing at what ever the man next to him had said. She felt a smile spreading across her own face.

That smile quickly melted into stunned disbelief when two arms wrapped around Red from behind.

Feminine arms.

A dark scowl graced Liz’s forehead immediately as she leaned around Mark’s bulk to better see a beautiful blonde with a great figure moving into Red’s back, draping herself over the man like a silk kimono on a Japanese Geisha.

And Red Reddington was not doing one single thing about the unwarranted intrusion.

“Uh, oh.” Francis mumbled, having halted the bar pretzel half way to his lips. “Honey lips, I sense a darkness in the Force.”

Lia glanced over to see what all the fuss was about, her own pretty mouth tightening irritably. “Intruder alert, Princess Liz.” the woman leaned across Francis, her hand patting Liz’s consolingly.

Liz jerked her head to her companions, her scowl increasing before returning her interest to Red and the blonde octopus wrapped around him.

“I’m sure she’s just wanting to say... hello.” Silas innocently remarked.

Liz glared at her guard.

Red stiffened visibly as if suddenly realizing the woman accosting him was not the one he would have preferred. He instantly pulled at the arms around his middle, dislodging the contact.

Raising from her seat, Liz addressed the group in general. “Excuse me a moment.” She stated sharply.

“Lizzy, are you gonna kick some ass?” Francis stood instantly, digging for his wallet.

Liz turned back to him, shooting daggers his way before sticking her tongue out, softening the dirty look.

Silas and Mark instantly lay down a bet even as Francis had shoved the money over to a bipartisan party. The bartender counted out the money nodding his consent.

“That is just so tacky.” Lia snapped.

Amanda agreed, “You are absolutely correct... men!”

Lia slapped a twenty dollar bill that she had extracted from Francis’ wallet onto the bar, sliding it over. “On the brunette.” her eyes flashed excitedly.

“I am so turned on right now.” Francis admitted.

Approaching the bar, Liz heard the other woman whining quietly in a seductive tone. “...aren’t going to hold that little indiscretion against me, now are you?”

“Red, who’s your friend.” Liz asked the man sweetly, her smile one of astringent tartness.

Red glanced at the new arrival, holding his assailant at arm’s length. He released the woman, stepping back and away. He tried to gauge the depth of Liz’s emotional involvement.
“Lizzy,” he decided on discretion, “I’m sorry it’s taking so long with the drinks.” He was as pleasant as he knew how to be. “Natalia—”

“Red, are you going to come visit me later?” the woman in question reached out to touch his lapel. Liz’s arm snaked out, halting the effort mid-way, her grip vice-like.

“Only if he wants a painful castration...” Liz stepped slowly between the two, dropping the arm she was holding.

“Natalia, Elizabeth is my fiancée.” Red wrapped his arms around Lizzy’s waist, smiling benevolently.

The tall blonde looked her opponent up and down derisively, a slow smile crossing the lovely curve of her mouth.

“When you change your mind...” she purred sympathetically, “I’ll be waiting in the Penthouse.”

Liz’s eyes narrowed dangerously.

Red inclined his head respectfully. “As I said...I am otherwise engaged and have no plans to change my present circumstances.” he locked eyes with the woman, his meaning clear. “At all.”

“But if you should so wish to hold your breath until such time that he might have a change of heart...” Liz suggested sweetly, “by all means, do so.”

Red dipped his head, hiding his silent laughter.

Natalia took the slight graciously, giving Liz one last sweep of the violet eyes before turning on her heel without another word.

Liz artfully removed Red’s grasp about her waist, spinning to face his smug expression.

“What a bitch...” She looked over her shoulder at a slowly retreating antagonist. “I’m gonna kick her ass.”

Over at the bar more money was laid down as all concerned watched with eager anticipation.

“Let it go.” Red gathered her against him, molding his body to hers. “Look on the bright side, it didn’t happen in the ladies room.” He reminded her of her prophetic words.

“The evening is young...”

Natalia had made herself comfortable at the other end of the bar. She held Liz’s angry gaze easily, a slight smile curving the luscious lips.

Red ran his fingers lightly along Liz’s chin, turning her attention back to himself.

“You are a fiery little thing, aren’t you?” He teased to lighten the moment.

“Did you see that?” Liz hissed her indignation. “She acted like I wasn’t even here, like I wasn’t good enough for you or something.”

Red was fascinated by this side of Liz’s character.

“I can be just as pretty as she is.” Liz smirked her belief. “I could wear that dress she’s poured herself into just as effectively.”
“If you were going for the harlot look, I guess.” Red placated, hoping to get things back on a more positive track. “You’re more beautiful than she ever thought about being.”

“And I am so good enough for you.” She declared indignantly.

“It might amuse you to know,” he corrected soothingly, “You are too good for me.”

She pouted up at him, much as Lia had Francis. “Why didn’t you pull out of her choke hold sooner?”

“In my defense, I thought it was you at first.” he told the truth.

“I don’t have that fake rack.” her hands came to her hips.

Red chewed on the inside of his mouth a moment, controlling his amusement. “Well, she hadn’t pressed them into my back at that point. I noticed her perfume before anything.”

“Oh, the Musk o’ Slut?” Liz asked pleasantly.

“When I realized it wasn’t you, I immediately broke the contact.” he reminded. “That’s when she pushed—”

“Her cheap silicone...” the woman asked innocently.

“Closer.” he finished.

He found himself truly relishing this moment. This was the first time that Lizzy truly made him feel that they were a real couple and he was enjoying it immensely.

“And I’m sure you didn’t mind a bit...” Liz rolled her pretty eyes expressively.

Red silenced her, placing a finger against her pouty mouth. “I prefer how you feel against me.”

“Y-You do?” She sounded surprised.

“I do. You’re all soft, warm and natural.” He ran his hands over her curves, before settling them on her hips. “And she doesn’t smell nearly as good as you do.” He rubbed his nose along her neck, inhaling her delicate scent.

“Sir? Your drinks.” The bartender slid the full glasses across the bar, a cocked eyebrow indicating there were some dissident wage makers at the end of the bar.

Silas was shaking his head woefully which indicated he had lost a considerable sum because of Red’s meddling. Dembe’s face was one big smile, as he wagged his fingers expectantly. The large guard continued to count out the appropriate winnings with but one deadly glare in Red’s direction.

Lia and Francis were having a tug of war over a twenty dollar bill. The young woman lifted to her tiptoes, grazing Francis’ mouth with a sultry kiss. The man released his claim on the bill, the distraction having worked.

Mark and Amanda seemed the only congenial participants of the whole sordid mess.

“Thank you.” Red politely accepted the liquor. “Come with me.” he turned his attention elsewhere. “You’ll feel better after—”
“I’d feel better if I could punch her in the face.” Liz was pretty positive.

Red bit his lip to master his amusement, steering Liz to their table, purposely blocking her view of Natalia.

“Aww, why’d you stop her, Red?” Francis whined. “We could have thrown Jell-O or mud at them, made an evening of it.”

Lia nodded her agreement, sipping her drink delicately.

“You wouldn’t have had time, Francis.” Mark piped up. “Our little feral kitten would have ripped Natalia to shreds before you could make a Jell-O shot.”

Amanda piped up instantly, her hand lifting graciously into the air to signal a passing bartender.

“Jell-O-shot!” She pointed to the top of her head, holding up four fingers. Lia hastily put in a thumb for her order and the bartender nodded compliently, a grin gracing his face.

Francis shared an amused glance with his two cohorts. Silas was suddenly in a grumpy mood but Dembe was just the opposite.

“Breeding will always show.” Dembe allowed his approval for how the entire matter was handled.

“Why don’t you suck a fart out of my ass.” Silas suggested evenly. Dembe quirked his head, his amusement growing.

“As I said...” he iterated, “breeding will show.”

“You’re such a poor loser.” Francis observed.

“He is.” Lia agreed, sucking down the shot noisily, “but he’s also kind of cute.”

Francis was suddenly devastated.

“Oh, not as cute as you, my little cherry cobbler.” Lia hastily soothed any hurt feelings.

Red drew in a deep breath, exhaling wearily. For a moment it felt like he had a bout with Glen.

He could still feel Natalia’s eyes from across the room. He palmed the top of Liz’s head, swiveling her attention back to the table at which they now reposed.

Silas had the grace to forgo his mood in lieu of something more entertaining. He had watched Liz’s reaction for the past few minutes to the perceived threat across the way.

“My, how the tables have turned.” he philosophized.

“I know what you mean,” Mark nodded his agreement, “it seems only minutes ago that the shoe was on the other foot.” he glanced at Red meaningfully.

“Yeah, it’s like that ménage a trois thing.” Francis agreed whole-heartedly.

“Ooh, ménage a trois.” Lia’s eyes glazed over wistfully.

“That’s Deja vu.” Dembe corrected, his expression comically awry.

“Noo,” Francis said patiently, “that would be...” his expression glazed over, much as Lia’s had, “no actually, you're right, Dembe.”

Red hoped that the end results would be as favorable as they had been earlier.

Liz abruptly pushed her seat back announcing unceremoniously. “I’m going to the restroom.” she groused, before stalking her way across the room.

Red arose hastily, waving Silas off before following the woman’s path.

He waited patiently outside the door for all of one long arduous minute before pushing against the door facing as he heard the click of the lock being disengaged, startling the woman into taking a step back.

“Oh!” Liz gasped as the man shoved his way inside, locking the door behind him.

“Are you jealous, Elizabeth?” he demanded in a low, rumbling tone, his eyes allowing no measure of escape.

She stood straighter, crossing her arms over her chest defiantly. “...And what if I am?”

Red’s mouth pulled at the corner, as he stepped closer into her space. “Are you mad... at me?”

“...No,” her chin jutted out stubbornly, “...well, maybe.”

“Well now...” he advanced closer, backing her into a wall, stroking his fingers down her arms.

“What can I do to make it better?”

She went up on her toes, kissing him softly. “You don’t have to make anything better. I’m a big girl.”

“What if I want to?” his hands went to her hips, his eyes devouring the low cut of her dress.

Liz’s mood mellowed somewhat as she lifted her lips for yet another sensuous kiss. She sighed happily, a soft feminine sound escaping her throat. She lifted her arms about his neckline deepening the kiss.

Time suddenly seemed a variant, the annoyance of the past few minutes fading into oblivion. The next thing she knew, one hundred and ninety pounds of aroused male was pushing her into a convenient wall.

She felt the cool surface filter into her clothing until his arms enfolded her in a cocoon of warmth.

“Lizzy...” Red breathed against her mouth, his voice rough and inflamed.

There was something incredibly thrilling about eliciting this sort of reaction from a man like Red Reddington. It was a powerful and exhilarating feeling.

“I love the scent of you.” he muttered tightly, running his large hands gently down her back, his fingers curving to the taut rim of her bottom.

His tongue slipped past the sweetness of her lips the very tip flicking hers erotically. Their breaths mingled, his smelling of scotch and cool mint... hers a fruity, earthy cinnamon mix the man found intoxicating.

It was astonishing to him, how each woman had her own taste.
He situated himself more comfortably between her legs, having lifted a slender thigh which now ran the length of his outer hip.

“I love the feel of your skin...” his fingertips eased over the revealed flesh of her leg, reveling in the silken feel of the thigh high stockings he had discovered. “So warm...” he squirmed his hardness against the heat of her panties. “So soft...”

Liz pressed closer, as the man hiked the dress even further. She could feel Red’s stare, sensing his total approval of her choice of undergarment.

The visual of the lace top of the stocking laying so delicately against her pale flesh was evocative of every Forties pin-up the man had ever seen. There was something inherently forbidden about those models that every man aspired to obtain.

“If I don’t get this dress off you soon...” Red growled his desperation, running his hand up her thigh, his index finger moving the lace of her panties aside, as he rubbed overtly over the nub of her swollen hood making Elizabeth gasp her appreciation, “I’ve been climbing the fucking walls all night watching that little ass tease me.”

Red stepped closer still, bumping his groin insistently against hers when she moved her leg higher on his waist.

“G-God...” the woman trembled visibly.

“I want you so badly.” he hissed brokenly.

His deep voice was so tinged with lust, it shook the woman to her core.

“...Yes.” she whispered wantonly, reaching between their bodies, her hand rubbing against the front of his pants.

His hand rasped roughly along the netting of her stocking, as he pushed provocatively into her touch. “Son of a bitch.” his hot breath brushed against her neck. He couldn’t remember the last time he had become so aroused, so quickly.

She went up on her toes, as Red lifted her bodily, bracing her legs about his waistline. The dress was completely out of his way now, and he wasted no time in searching out the front of his expensive trousers. His fingers hesitated as they slid the offending zipper down because the door behind him rattled jarringly.

He released a heartfelt curse, a sound both pained and enraged, accompanying the vulgar expression, for the man had despised the interruption.

“Dammit...” he gritted through his teeth, the moment broken.

He eased her down slowly, stepping back, deliberately cooling his ardor.

Liz’s cheeks were rosy and beautiful, her lips wet and swollen, her eyes bright with suppressed desire.

He was all about teasing the fuck out of her, but fucking her against a wall, in public, was not exactly his modus operandi.

A larger part of him was hastily revising his thoughts on the matter. A second ago he felt like nailing her wherever the hell the urge struck, should be on top of his priority list.

Pushing against the prominent erection in his pants, he adjusted it before dropping his jacket, hiding the impressive bulge.

The blue eyes had watched him absently then lifted to allow him to see that he still affected her. She smiled softly for him alone.

Cupping her face, Red lowered his mouth slowly, parting her lips sensually. “We’re going to continue what we started...” she vibrated to the depth of his voice, “in our bed... as soon as humanly possible.” his brow furrowed critically. “Fuck everybody else, is that all right with you?”

“As long as you fuck me...” she nodded slowly in response.

Red grasped her hand in his, pulling her towards the door. “Oh, don’t you worry your pretty little head about that.” he advised crisply.

He literally dragged her out through the bar, Liz stumbling to keep up. The man threw a couple bills on their table as they passed, to cover the tab ignoring completely Francis’ eager enquiries about their plans for the evening.

Dembe had reluctantly pulled one last time on the handle of his slot machine before falling in step beside a glowering Silas... both men hanging back a discrete distance from the amorous couple.

Silas’ frown momentarily lapsed as he witness Liz’s sickly sweet smile of triumph and curt wave of her fingers to a begrudgingly brooding Natalia before the ensemble exited the hotel entirely.

The tension in the car was palpable, but neither man seemed to mind in the least. They far preferred their friend’s present state of restlessness to his usual quiet mode of introversion.

As the car slid to a stop at the entrance of the Villa, Red shoved the back door open, grasping Liz’s hand as he exited. She moved alongside him gracefully, muttering a quick goodnight to Silas and Dembe before being escorted through the doors.

“No interruptions.” Red demanded quietly, throwing a lethal glare over his shoulder before following.

Silas grinned, pointing lazily back at the hotel they had just left. “What about–”

Red’s look stopped the man in his tracks. “No...” he stalked off in a fine huff, “interruptions.”

Silas rolled his eyes towards Dembe. “No, interruptions.” Silas mimicked Red perfectly.

Both men chuckled appreciatively for such wit.

“I wonder what they’re going to do in there?” Silas turned a serious as he was going to get this night.

“Raymond always enjoys a good game of chess.” Dembe managed straight faced.

Silas turned his head questioningly. “Is there such a thing as, strip chess?”

“Only in your universe, my friend.” Dembe nodded sagely.

“This is way more entertaining than I thought it would be.” Silas slapped Dembe on the shoulder, before heading to the bar on the South wall of their accommodations to replace the drink he’d just left behind.
Dembe glanced off towards the back of the Villa, smiling his happiness, hearing the muffled giggle of Elizabeth and Raymond’s gruff rejoinder before the door slammed shut on the outside world.

“I am just glad he is finally content.” Dembe replied seriously, before taking the offered bottle of beer.

Both men sat at a table, dealing out cards for a quiet game of poker. Silas looked up suddenly, a gleam in his eyes.

“Strip poker?”

“You are so pathetic.” Dembe surmised.

“Just lonely.” Silas shrugged stocky shoulders.

Dembe’s throaty chuckle filled the comfortable silence of the room.
Red slammed the door shut, locking it behind him before turning on the woman. Liz found herself backing slowly away from the man, something in his eyes alerting her to possible danger.

She suddenly stopped dead in her tracks sensing the type of danger Red would inflict was the type she could absolutely live with.

Hundreds of visions of what he wanted to do to Lizzy flashed in Red’s mind, each one equally satisfying in their imagery. Though picking one in particular to chose from at this stage, proved impossible.

All he was certain of was that he wanted to sink himself in her body and fuck her until she trembled with desire.

Liz slowly pulled the dress over her head, leaving her in the tiniest lingerie imaginable. The blue eyes held his easily, a provocative look on the beautiful face.

Red’s previous thoughts suddenly became a god-damned need.

He reached out, snagging her small waist with confident fingers. He could not wait to drop his face into the fragrant ample swell of her cleavage, his arms encircling her small frame possessively.

He breathed in deeply, his tongue exploring the plump crevice on either side of her breasts.

The man reached around as he straightened his stocky frame, his eyes giving her that look that made her stomach lurch expectantly.

His arm tightened about her waist as he leaned ever so slightly, “Climb...” his palm smacked the firm little bottom smartly to ensure she obeyed.

Liz hopped on her tippy-toes, assisted by the man’s strength, quickly wrapping her legs around his waist. Her ass stung deliciously from the unexpected swat.

The man walked leisurely across the room with his burden, his knee indenting the lush bedding as he confidently laid her negligible weight across the spacious area.

He joined his lips to hers in a breathlessly passionate encounter. With one expert flick of his fingers, he unfastened her bra. The man broke the kiss because he needed to see his next action.

His thick appendages curved along the edge of the bra, as he tugged the material off the pale breasts. He tossed the object aside more interested in what he had revealed.

No matter how many times he saw her nudity, every time was like the first. He did not think he would ever get his fill of gazing upon such breathtaking beauty. For instance, this time he took note of a small grouping of freckles just beneath her right mound. He had never noticed the charming array before.

The woman pulled at the end of his tie indicating her preference. His eyes held hers steadily as he slowly tugged at the silk knot. He shrugged out of his jacket, holding the deep gaze stubbornly.
Red unbuttoned the top of his shirt his eyes lightning with amusement as the woman assisted from the bottom.

His eyes swept her form with masculine appreciation, his index finger traveling an agonizingly slow path from the slight indentation of her throat down through the pert little breasts, over the flat of her stomach before hooking into the lace of her panties.

He halted for one agonizing moment, his gaze dropping meaningfully once again. Red took his time in revealing the soft patch of down, his thumb raking gently into the wet curls to playfully tease her clit for a brief moment.

His tone was involved and husky as he stated his growing desire.

“...Lift.” the silken roughness washed over Liz like rolling thunder in a turbulent rainstorm.

She basked in the feeling until rudely drawn back to reality by yet another firm reprimand, the man’s palm a little more insistent in this instance, the smack a resounding one.

Liz gasped her appreciation of his technique, her hips lifting of their own accord.

Red lackadaisically removed the small strip of cloth covering the mystical valley he so loved to explore.

The large hands captured the crease of her legs tugging aggressively, until he was able to softly grind his ever growing erection into the wetness between her legs.

Liz drew in a sharp breath when he pushed her knees apart, his hands holding her open and vulnerable. Red was in no hurry to speed matters along. He leisurely went down into the giving carpet, getting into a comfortable position.

He blew gently, his hot breath easing over the tiny nub of her sex, drawing it out of hiding. He leaned, the tip of his tongue grazing it sensually.

He dropped small adoring kisses to the little peak, teasing his lover, but more so, perhaps... himself.

Inhaling deeply, he sighed his contentment, catching the delicate scent of ocean spray as her arousal grew with each tormenting flick of his tongue.

Rubbing his nose into the downy fur of her muff, he allowed the honeyed cream to settle pleasantly, savoring her as he did a fine wine.

His excitement, his need for more, grew with each passing second until the sound of his tongue pleasuring her quickly wetting center, eclipsed all else.

Tenderly scratching her nails over the short stubble of his hair, Liz raised her hips to aid in his efforts. The rapturous moment was rudely interrupted by the man’s total withdrawal.

Before she could voice a complaint, strong arms had lifted her bodily, turned her over, while two pillows were unceremoniously placed beneath her shapely hips.

Liz balanced herself precariously with her hands, as Red positioned her for his needs. Their eyes met in the mirror directly in front of the headboard.

“Does my baby need a good fucking?” his hands spread suggestively over the lace of her stockings, his fingers pressuring her flesh languidly.
He subsequently pushed his pants down around his muscled thighs.

His rigid erection hung thick and heavy between her legs, brushing the bare flesh directly above her nylons.

The dark gaze holding hers in the mirror hypnotically, demanded a reply.

She had never seen this side of Red before, the statement he had made had not really been a statement at all. It was a fact he clearly intended her to know and accept.

She found the low soothing timbre of his voice wildly exciting a side of her which she, until this moment, she had not known existed.

She did not know whether the man was playing a part for her benefit or it was just something inherent to his nature. It really didn’t matter because she found herself more than willing to play along and see where this fascinating facet led them.

“...Y-Yes.” she whispered hoarsely. “Yes, I want that.” she suddenly did with all her heart because he made her do so.

“Good, because you're going to get one.” he lifted noble brows.

Liz leaned back into his warm flesh, the soft down of his pubic hair gently scratching her vulnerable opening. She lifted her bottom in open invitation. The crown of his shaft grazed her hot hole, slicking his slit with her wet heat.

Red pushed against the enticement, just catching himself before completing his objective.

“Don’t do that yet, Elizabeth.” he warned more than tersely, his eyes deepening considerably.

He wanted so desperately to plunge himself into her tiny body and fuck her bare. His balls fucking ached. It was an incessant itch he needed to scratch, badly. And right now, he wanted it more than anything in the world for a host of reasons.

He forced himself to grab the required object, suddenly detesting the barrier between them. He rolled the offending material into place plunging instantly into her waiting depths.

He jerked his hips, driving into her heat, watching her face in the mirror as he did so. The look of pure ecstasy on her face, made his dick throb. She enjoyed being taken in this manner.

“That’s a good girl...” he praised roughly, wrapping his large hands around her waist. “Let me fuck you...” he grunted raspingly, stroking his thumbs along her spine.

Liz quaked visibly, grasping the bedpost one hand over the other, preparing her body for the onslaught she knew would be forthcoming. She released sharp, short cries as he pumped her body relentlessly.

Grasping his hand which curled around her waist, she clung to his fingers needing another type of physical connection.

Red readjusted his hold, hooking his fingers with hers. In an instant, what had been almost animalistic in nature turned decidedly intimate and erotic.

Though, it didn’t stop his quickened thrusts or the litany of things he needed to say to her.

After a time, he halted his strokes and the woman was devastated. “Do you know what this is all about, Elizabeth?” he needed to share himself with her. He needed her to know.

Her brow furrowed sensually, pushing back against him, urging him to resume their lovemaking. “I only want you, Red.”

Yes, she thought she knew.

The silence was deafening, so she tightened her hand on the bedpost, trying again.

“Some jerks try to come between us tonight.” she growled breathlessly. “They don’t mean anything...” she whispered, pushing herself into his searching fingers, “you know that.”

“No, I don’t know that.” he was loathe to admit. “And that’s what this is all about.” he hated the part of him that was so weak. “I want to be the one... the only one to experience you,” his eyes dropped to where his body connected with hers, “in such a way.”

“I know that.” she nodded jerkily.

He didn’t think she did know in reality, how could she. He himself, was having difficulty putting it into words even in his own mind.

“I didn’t like the way that bastard looked at you.” a little of the animosity he held so carefully under wraps, emerged. “The way he insinuated that he could have you anytime he wanted... pissed me off.”

Liz’s anger surfaced, “How do you think I felt when that blonde bitch acted like she owned you.” she moved from his vicinity as best she could, severing all connection.

Red felt the moment slipping away, a certain desperation setting in. “No one owns me.” he snapped. “But I will tell you one thing,” he would give her that much, “you are the only one I want to share myself with... willingly.”

Liz’s anger melted by degrees. Her body lost it’s rigidity and some of the tension she had felt.

“I don’t want to fight about this... I don’t want it to be an issue and if you tell me right now,” his eyes held hers masterfully in the mirror, “that it is not, I will believe you.”

The woman’s face softened as her mood. “... That guy pisses me off.” she told the truth. “Not as much as your little ‘past indiscretion’, but damn near close.” she tried to harden her eyes and her heart but the feeling was just not there. Not when they were so close, the possibilities so endless.

“Do you know what it’s taking for me to sit here, when we are...” he dropped his eyes meaningfully to the bare little backside, “and not fuck the hell out of you?”

Elizabeth’s face allowed her own pain. “Then why the hell are you hesitating.” she had no clue.

A reluctant smile touched his lips and eyes. He leaned closer nuzzling her nape. “Because I’m a fucking idiot.” he admitted his fallacies, his arm encircling her waist as he moved into that fabulous ass. “Grab that fucking pole, because you’re gonna need it.”

Red Reddington was a man true to his word.

He nudged the inside of her knee, forcing the arc of her legs wider, his arm tightening about her waistline as he held her stationary.

He grasped his shaft gently easing it back into its warm home, breathing a sigh of relief. He thrust determinedly once again, establishing a workable rhythm.

Red looked up at the woman in the mirror, watching the gentle bounce of her breasts and the look on her face as she inched closer and closer to orgasm.

Skirting his hand up her spine, he cupped her shoulder pulling her back into his deepened thrusts. “I wish you could see this, baby...” his breathing was becoming more shallow and thready. “It’s fucking amazing.”

Liz could feel it, she didn’t have to see it.

“Take what you need...” she suggested heatedly, wishing with all her heart that the man would put a stop to the torture he was putting her through.

Red’s darkened eyes traveled up the bare expanse of her back, watching her dark tresses swish slowly with their erratic movements. He reached out, bunching the soft mane in his hand, gently tugging on the strands, increasing the tremor in her body as he gave her what she wanted, deepening his heavy thrusts.

“Is this what you need.” his deep voice rumbled intimately.

Liz jerked her head, nodding sharply.

“You want to belong to me...” he purred, driving his fat length in deep, “and me, alone?”

“...Yes.” She gasped, blindly grasping the bedding, focusing on the heated slide of his erection.

They had been having a pretty active and energetic sex life, but right now, the man’s apparent urge to take what he needed, was a hell of an aphrodisiac. Only she could give him this depth of pleasure. Which made her feel incredibly desirable.

She tugged at his hand, moving it up her rib cage.

Red followed the directive, leaning into her back. Cupping her breast, he gently kneaded the warm flesh, thumbing her swollen nipple. She looked up quickly, meeting his eyes in the mirror.

“I can’t wait to fuck you without anything between us.” Red whispered roughly in her ear. Her eyes fluttered shut, her soft lips parting with her panted breaths. Her tongue flicked out, wetting the pink lips sensually.

The sight made him wonder what her other lips would look like when wet with his cum.

“Do you want that, baby? You want me to warm your beautiful pussy?” his fingers clung tightly to her hips, holding her from movement. “Do you want me to claim what’s mine, Elizabeth.”

She nodded quickly, bowing her spine, arching her bottom to meet his frenzied thrusts. “Y-Yes...” she stammered, “do that...”

Liz lay her head into the bed post, feeling his arousal peak. To feel him in his natural state, had become such a desperate need, it puzzled her. She had been with men before and had never really paid it any attention.

But now...

“I want to feel that so badly.” she whispered in a heated rush. “I need to feel you...” she pleaded.
The very thought of his bare shaft pleasuring her, made her thighs tremble.

To think of him losing himself, inside her...

Liz tensed sharply, giving herself over to the orgasm. Quaking hard at the wonderful rush of endorphins, she let herself drift into the euphoric state that only this man was capable of achieving.

Looking down, watching his cock fuck that tight little hole, he felt his nerve endings implode.

“Son of a bitch...” Red slowed, his hips jerking without rhythm, shuddering from the tremendous high he was on. “Fuck...” he panted harshly as his hot cum easily filled the thin condom. He gasped shakily. “God damn...”

She had taken him to a place he had never been before and he found himself reluctant to leave such an inviting atmosphere.

Gripping the condom, he slid out at a snail’s pace, groaning brokenly as a rush of her arousal poured wetly from her body.

Red allowed his body to ebb from the emotional high, knowing the physical side would take care of itself. He eased his breathing, taking slow breaths, his head resting on her upper back. He turned slightly, his lips gently kissing a tiny mole just above her shoulder blade.

He felt Liz’s tremble once, before she too, was able to establish some decorum.

The blue eyes sought his as she turned her head, just as he lifted, straightening his form. He kissed her mouth passionately, the feelings still very much prevalent. At least for him.

The woman turned slowly in his arms, as they embraced in a mutual bonding moment as lovers through the ages had done for centuries.

Slipping his fingers between the swollen flesh of her labia, he massaged the slick skin purposely. The woman’s eyes lowered, a tranquil look on her face as he petted her soothingly.

Suddenly, the thought of anyone trying to do this with Elizabeth, besides him... made him feel nauseous. He had to make sure she understood the depth of that loathing.

“I want to feel you...” he continued, furthering her arousal, “I want my cum to warm you...” he reached back, stroking her clit expertly.

Gripping the man’s arm, Liz’s fought desperately to divide her attention between the man’s wonderful ministrations and the commanding voice.

She enjoyed how assertive Red could be at times. Some women would probably hate it, but after Tom, it was kind of nice to let Red take over once in a while.

Plus, Tom had barely talked to her, if at all, during sex.

But Red... she loved the things he said. And how he said them. She thought she might be turned off by the dirty talk, but Red made her fucking quiver.

And at this moment, there was something about how covetous he was of her affections that was incredibly stimulating.

“I want that intimacy with you...” he snarled against her swollen lips, his tongue fighting for dominance inside her sweet mouth, as his fingers increased the pressure on her clit. “Do you understand what I’m saying?”

“Yes...” she practically snapped, pushing against the hand pleasuring her. He was letting her know, in no uncertain terms, he wanted, and was more than ready, to further their commitment.

Now all that was left was for her to take that step with him.

Red slid his fingers along her clit, bringing her to a shuddering high seconds later. The man moved slightly from her allowing Lizzy the space she needed. He arose absently from the bed.

Stripping himself of the last of his clothing, he took his time, his eyes watching her descend from that lofty, wondrous place.

He finally took his place beside Lizzy, wrapping his frame about her smaller one lovingly. Leisurely stroking her soft skin, he stared up at their mirror image, watching his fingers trace an invisible line along her side.

“Hold her breath?” the man chuckled quietly, his thoughts having relived a portion of their evening, one particularly amusing moment coming to mind.

“It was just a suggestion.” Liz stretched lazily, before resettling against Red’s warmth. “One I hope Natalia takes to heart.”
Days in Vegas do not start or end as any other city. It was hot and sweltering but it was only nine o’clock in the morning. At first Liz had felt a little self conscious as she glanced down at her attire. Silas had assured her that no one would turn a head or blink an eye, but to walk through a ritzy hotel lobby in nothing more than a sheer net cover over her bikini clad form... gave her pause for thought.

As she and Silas walked the short distance from the Private entrance, she noted that while she did receive some looks they were all pleasant enough, not to mention there were several other women scattered about who were dressed much more risqué than she.

The cool interior of the elegant space inside, was more than welcomed after the hot sun. She noticed Red off to her left, standing leisurely beside Mark, awaiting the arrival of a set of elevators.

The man turned his head as she neared, his eyes sweeping her bikini clad form, lasciviously. Liz inhaled shakily as she watched him look her over, damning herself as she felt a rush of arousal traverse her body.

Silas’ bemused expression told her he had picked up on the fact. He grasped her arm, breaking the spell, leading her away from the bad influence. She scowled up at the man, then grimaced when she realized, she had almost run into a large pillar directly in her path.

“Good job, Liz. Face plant into a wall, because that’s sexy.”

She glanced back at Red quickly, finding his eyes had dropped meaningfully... more specifically, to her ass.

He lifted those eyes, the heat contained in them, making her blush return post haste. His intense perusal of her suddenly slipped into a dark scowl, his eyes shifting beyond her vicinity.

Liz glanced over, finding Brad standing there giving her a once over which made her pretty face glower over with annoyance.

She listed slightly from Silas’ soft hold, aligning herself within the visual path of Red Reddington once again.

She smiled coyly back at the man, offering a flirty but almost negligible shimmy of her shapely bottom, pleased as hell to see Red’s attention focusing sharply back to where she needed it.

Mark laughed throatily, laying a hand on Red’s advancing form, casting a chastising glance at both Elizabeth and her guard. He waved Silas off, physically turning the older man back to the elevator which had opened as if on cue.

“What did you just--” Liz took exception to the graphically stated observation.

“You got Red’s attention back. Leave it at that.”
“I beg your...” she frowned.

“His mind is on you, not on that dumbass.” Silas shooed her away from the door. “To go back inside right now is only asking for trouble.”

Liz calmed instantly.

“Besides, Sugar Daddy has to work.” Silas waved a hand meaning, proceed forward.

“He is not my Sugar Daddy.” Liz stalked off to a shaded area, to a cabana which looked more than inviting, sitting her sunglasses down on the table.

“He’s mine.” Silas flicked his fingers, shooing her to the water. “You’re not the only one that benefits from that hard earned money.”

Liz sighed, shrugging her shoulders before letting the matter go.

She could, and would, play with Red later. She would just consider the time until then, as foreplay.

Finding the pool half empty, much to her delight, she stepped off into the water with Silas’ help.

“Don’t push it.” he warned. “Your muscles are weak.”

“Well, no shit.” she tested her ankle on the first step, finding it somewhat lacking but the water felt amazing, drawing her deeper into it’s cool depths.

“Hey, I’m having a good hair day.” Silas pointed to said hair. “I am not diving into the pool to rescue your ass and ruining this.”

Liz tried hard to control her smile. “Yeah you’re right, that doesn’t happen very often.” she flicked his hair with a tepid gaze, noting the man had forgone his usual ponytail today.

“I look good everyday, but some days, I’m like a God...” Silas shook his head woefully and for one brief second, he did sort of remind her of the Norse God, Thor. His muscled body gleamed in the sun, his hair flowed wistfully with the wind. She shook the image quickly.

“I bet you want your debased cult to sacrifice virgins for you.” she mumbled dejectedly.

“Why waste a good virgin when I can fuc–”

“Don’t you even...” she warned sotto voce, glancing hastily about their surroundings. Luckily no one seemed in hearing distance.

“Still up to your match of wills, I see.” Francis interrupted having come on scene, tossing his towel and a floral bag to the lounge.

“Of course.” Silas sat into the lounge, crossing his ankles, stretching out his legs, his fingers linked behind his head. “And yes, I’m still winning.” he frowned slightly at Francis, more specifically the bag he was rummaging around in. “Nice purse.” the man gestured to the very feminine tote Francis had.

Silas looked around, then back at Francis. “I don’t see her. So fess up.” the guard needled. “You’re switching teams right?”
“She’s getting a drink.” Francis rolled his eyes. “And I’m too valuable a male specimen to not share the goods,” he made a show of cupping his package, before heading into the pool, “...with the ladies.”

Liz dropped her face in her hands, hiding her enormous smile, finding a woman staring at her friend like he was another life form. A lower one, of course.

A short time later after a few laps, Liz broke the surface, wiping at the water in her eyes. She looked beside the pool, scowling slightly.

“What’s wrong?” Silas asked, knowing the problem could have nothing to do with him.

“Did you take my towel?” she half suspected.

“Yes,” the guard screwed up his face, “I’m holding it hostage until you admit that I am so much more intelligent than you.”

“Funny, asshole.” she crinkled her nose. “What’d you do with it?”

“I didn’t do anything with it,” he murmured around the long straw in his mouth, “because you didn’t bring it.” he shrugged, before leisurely sipping his fruity multi-colored slushy drink. He had not been without the large, foot tall concoctions since their first night at the bar.

“Why didn’t you say anything?” she scowled.

“I was hired to guard you.” the man drawled slowly. “Not remind you that you lack accessories.”

“Could you please go fetch me a towel.” she irritated.

“Do I look like a cabana boy?” he spread his hands expressively, the drink still held carefully aloft.

“No actually, you look like a Norse God.” a feminine voice carried over the wind to a very appreciative guard, who actually sat up searching for the source of such wisdom.

“I don’t know...” Liz snipped, looking around as well for such a delusional person, “go put on a speedo to give me the full effect,” she squinted hard at the man, “and when you do, can you grab me a freaking towel!”

Silas dropped his head back as though the weight of the world was suddenly upon him, sighing heavily.

“You’re so dramatic!” Liz whined.

“Oh, come on baby,” the voice pleaded her cause, “put the Speedo on.”

Silas zeroed in on a little blonde and her friend stretched out luxuriously several longue chairs down to his right. He cast them both a slow sensual smile.

They both giggled, delirious to have been noticed by such a fine example of the male species.

“I can watch her Silas.” Francis chuckled behind her, as he and Lia floated, wrapped around one another in a loose embrace. The woman pouted playfully at the man, kissing his Avengers bandage.

“If someone kills you while I’m gone, don’t come crying to me.” Silas bitched as he shoved his way up from his lounge seat. He tugged negligently at his shorts just where his package sat, the fabric straining over the ample bulge, care anyone look.
The action more than titillated his new found groupies which encouraged even more unconventional actions on his part were he of a mind.

He smiled lazily over, setting his drink aside. He motioned to the blue and pink confection as if to say, ‘keep an eye on it for me, ladies’.

The giggling and salacious looks made Liz want to gag.

“One of these days,” the woman grumbled, “I’m gonna haul back and punch him right in the mouth.”

“You sure you want to do that?” Francis asked seriously. “Sounds like he might think you’re flirting.” he cupped Lia’s bottom, hoisting her up higher around his waist as he floated them backwards. “That could be considered foreplay in his world.”

“Knowing that little bastard,” Liz huffed, “he probably would.”

Silas strolled past the women, to their great delight trailing a lazy finger over the sun kissed shoulders and napes.

“There’s nothing little about me, ladies.” he assured them boastfully as he continued on his trek.

The women literally swooned their approval.

Red had passed through the elegant corridor, his mind still on the meeting they had just attended. Mark was expounding the virtues of several possible scenarios that had been discussed. The man listened attentively.

Pushing out the Private entrance to the pool, Red sighted Lizzy floating around on a raft, a drink in it’s holder, looking to be a breath’s away from passing out into a blissful oblivion.

Or maybe not, he thought wryly, having seen the outlined shadow stealthily approaching from beneath.

“Oh, oh. I see a potential victim in my sights.” Mark nodded knowingly having pulled up his steps alongside Red’s more stocky frame.

“I’ve seen this before.” Red mentioned in passing. “Spielberg, right?”

“It was in the opening shots of the movie.” Mark reminded. “Should I sing the theme music as warning?”

“No, I want to see what she does.” Red held his amusement.

“You’re sacrificing your betrothed to a possible watery grave... because you want to see her reaction?”

Red gave his own opinion. “I don’t think it’s Lizzy that will be visiting Davy Jones’ Locker.”

The two men watched the snorkeled man get closer before dipping down under the water, coming up under Liz’s raft. It was then, lifted high in the air, unceremoniously tilted, which dropped it’s passenger into the swirling water below.

“You little bastard!!” Liz squealed, directly before she fell into the dark depths.
Her assailant turned to flee but was not fast enough. She grabbed the plastic pipe sticking out of the water, snatching it off the man’s head, drawing him back into her sphere of influence.

Liz unceremoniously beat the man over the head repeatedly with the plastic straw.

“Francis!” she spurted, “I’m gonna drown your ass!” She grabbed Francis’ head, pushing it into the warm water, wrestling playfully with the flailing man.

“She hasn’t even seen him yet.” Mark was somewhat confused. “How did she know?”

“Only Francis would be stupid enough to do it.” Red grin widened as he listened to Liz giggling. “He probably wanted revenge for her winning so much at the tables... he can be a vindictive little bastard.”

“Stop it!” She shrieked, twisting and turning this way and that, splashing water madly. “That tickles!”

Red’s eyebrow rose, What exactly was he doing to her down there?

“Don’t you dare! Oooh!” She screamed as she was bodily lifted straight out of the water, then catapulted into the air, landing with a big splash a couple feet away.

Francis shot to the surface, arms raised triumphantly, whooping in victory. Catching sight of their audience, he gave a thumbs up, then glanced around quickly for his foe.

“Where’d she go?” He dropped the goggles around his neck, spinning around once more.

Red looked out at the water himself, actually getting a little worried. She’d been down there a long time, for her anyway. And in the shaded lagoon, he couldn’t see clearly into the pool.

“Where is she Francis?” Red asked, concern lacing his voice.

“Oh, shit!” Francis struggled with something unseen, before hastily ducking below the surface. He popped up seconds later, his powerful legs having bounced him upward.

“Get back here you little brat!” He reached out, snagging Liz’s top with deft fingers.

Red breathed a sigh of relief when Lizzy finally broke the surface, swimming straight for him. She waved something about in her hand.

About ten feet away from safety, she threw the hindrance at Mark and Red, both men side stepping quickly out of the way of the sopping wet projectile.

“Help!” She laughed gaily, continuing her trek frantically, as Francis rapidly gained on her.

Red came to the water’s edge, leaning down his arm, gripping her hand when she slapped it into his.

“Hurry!” She squealed. Just as Red pulled at her, Francis made one final swipe, his hand grazing her wet skin.

“Ohh!” She yelped just as Red lifted her out of Francis’s reach. Unfortunately his timing his had been a little off.

“Francis.” Red growled, his arms shielding the woman’s sudden nudity. The young man had managed to snatch Liz’s top before she had been rescued.
“Hey! She started it.” Francis lied convincingly.

Red sighed heavily, knowing a lie when he heard it. Not to mention he had actually seen the crime being committed.

Liz held tightly to Red’s chest area, glad his coat was shielding much. She briefly wondered how she would extract herself from this particular situation.

Red felt a grin spreading over his face, and it wasn’t only because of the half naked woman he held tightly against his now saturated body.

“Did they make this a nudist area,” Mark laughed, holding up Francis’s swim trunks, “and not inform me.”

Red grinned down at the wet little bundle he held in his arms, “You are a little brat.”

“I am not!” She pulled back ready to argue the point, then quickly clutched Red, remembering her present state of undress. “He dunked me first, then stole my top.” She defended herself. “Kill him, Red!”

“Now, baby.” Red held his smile. “If I kill him, it will render the pool useless. And you don’t want to spoil every one else’s fun.” he nuzzled her jaw line affectionately. “Do you?”

Francis waited patiently, and then not so much so. “Hey!” he demanded an immediate answer.

“I’m thinking!” Liz bitched.

“And why?” Red questioned. “You look quite beautiful the way you are.” he made a show of seeking out her full breasts which were pressed so intimately into his shirt.

“Other men are present, Red..” she countered, sensing his weakness.

Red thought about it a minute, reaching under his jacket for his weapon, his intentions clear.

“Hey man, what the hell happened to bro’s before ho–,” Francis hesitated visibly when Red actually curled his fingers around the stock of his gun. The man’s look issued a certain type of warning. “I mean... chicks.” the young man altered hastily.

“She has so much more to offer me...” Red replied smoothly, cupping Liz’s small ass cheek in his hand.

Liz batted her lashes flirtatiously up at Red, pushing her breasts into his chest more firmly. She looked down at Francis, sticking her tongue out.

“Push her in, Red!” Francis demanded as Lia floated up behind him, looking between the two sides squaring off.

“Now why would I do that after saving her from your evil clutches?” Red questioned.

“She took my drawers!” He gave Liz an evil glare as she crossed her eyes in retaliation.

She hugged herself tighter to Red when Francis made another grab for her, before twisting her face comically at the man.

“Baby, you don’t want your face to stick like that.” Red said conversationally. He chuckled when she dropped the pose immediately. Red leisurely returned his attention back to the troublemaker in the water.

“Mark has your swim trunks now, bargain with him.” Red suggested a compromise.

“Ahh, man.” Francis whined, knowing Mark all too well. “Come on, be a bro! Give me back my dignity.”

“As if you ever had any...” Liz wheedled causing Mark and Red to chuckle. “Give me my top first!”
she countered.

Lia floated up just behind Francis, stroking her fingers over the man’s broad shoulders and muscled arms. Francis did not note her hand disappearing under the water, fluttering around his waist.

“I don’t have it.” Francis grinned maliciously.

There seemed to be a stalemate developing.

“Whoo!” Francis started visibly, then relaxed instantly, his head turning to the cute little brunette who was pressed so intimately to his back now. Their eyes met and held, something intimate passing between them.

Red rolled his eyes, having a pretty good idea what the woman was doing to Francis under that water.

He could not say he did not envy the young man such a inventive partner. But he did have other priorities at the moment.

“Cover yourself.” Red mumbled to Liz, stepping back slightly.

Liz gasped, bringing her palms up, covering her breasts before he pulled entirely away.

Red held out his hand, and Mark cordially placed the offending trunks into his waiting palm.

“Come on.” He winked playfully, taking the woman’s elbow, pulling her along.

“Wait...” Francis groaned, his hand covering Lia’s activities for a beat. Halting the intensely pleasurable pastime went against his grain, but first things first...

“...Yes?” Red turned expectantly, his brows lifting.

Francis sighed, holding up Liz’s bikini top. “I found it...” He pouted.

Red walked over, snatching the object from the other man’s hands. He did not resist when Mark jerked the trunks from his unresisting fingers.

“How am I going to get that back on?” Liz motioned accordingly, glancing around for prying eyes, only to find her guard grinning over at her, the large straw of his drink dangling lackadaisically from the corner of his mouth.

“Turn around.” Red directed, before looping the ties around her neck, then the one around her rib cage. “Good? Not too tight?”

“No, it’s good.” she turned and pulled her hands free. Her ring caught the wet fabric, tugging it, exposing her chilled nipple to his gaze.

He reached out, the back of his finger inadvertently brushing against her puckered flesh as he settled the cup back into place.

She gasped, unconsciously leaning into his touch. There was something decidedly wicked about a such a public display that she found vaguely enticing.

Liz self consciously pulled the cups straighter when he dropped his hand, “Better?” she asked shyly.

“I wouldn’t say that...” he replied roughly, keeping his eyes on the tight nipples hidden from his view.

Liz blinked at the obvious sexual overtone. She felt her body respond under his unwavering stare.

Her tiny nipples strained further against the wet of her suit. He wondered if she had just wet her bottoms with a sweet rush of arousal. He swore he could smell her over the subtle hint of coconut scented lotion.

The woman startled, as a hand came out of nowhere, snagging her ankle.

“Come here, you little...” Francis grunted, stretching as far as his arms and modesty would allow.

Red had grabbed her quickly, pulling her free from Francis’s reach. When Liz settled on her feet, she spun around, doing her own little victory dance.

Red’s eyes shifted hastily to the swiveling little hips.

“Oh ha!” She rejoiced, grinning triumphantly. Francis jumped up out of the water once again, just grazing her feet but she rushed back to the safety of Red’s arms. “That’s what you get for flipping a poor defenseless woman off her raft. You naked pervert!”

“Defenseless?!” Francis’s voice squeaked. “You stripped me bare before I could even blink.”

“A first and most likely last time, that’ll happen for you, Francis.” Liz bent over, brushing her bottom against Red’s crotch, resuming her victory dance.

Red stared heatedly down at the woman bent over in front of him. He ran a territorial hand up her spine. He felt her skin erupt in gooseflesh in response to his touch.

He rested his hands lightly on either side of her hips, his gaze never averting from the sweet little backside.

The vision of how they were positioned made his dick ache.

“Ohhh, when I get out of here...” Francis shook his fist at a disinterested Liz Scott.

Red frowned, looking around beside them and out over the water. Where the hell did Lia go?

In all the distraction he had lost track of the young woman. He turned quickly in Silas’ direction, finding the man grinning, giving a ‘thumbs’ down’ gesture, before returning to his large straw.

Red searched the vicinity indicated chuckling his amusement. The slight form was gathered covetously around Francis legs.

“Can I please have my trunks back now?” Francis drawled before snapping his eyes towards the water, staring disbelievingly into the sparkling depths below. He stood perfectly still, not wanting to disturb the rather satisfying activities taking place.

Lia slowly slithered her way to the surface, a beautiful grin on the beguiling face.

“Damn, girl...” Francis could not keep the admiration from his tone.

“Honey, no matter what he told you,” Silas readily informed the girl, “that ain’t no cinnamon stick!”

Mark dropped the shorts, plopping them wetly into Francis’ face. “More like a hard candy, you can choke on.” he quipped.

“You got that right...” Francis snorted, then scowled, “I mean, you know because I’m so impressive.”

“Oh my God...” Liz scoffed her incredulous disbelief.

Francis threw his best-friend a nondescript glare, before quickly returning his full attention where it was needed.

“We’ll continue that...” Francis sought out Lia’s unseen hand, “later... baby cakes.”

Dropping the trunks under the water, he quickly dressed, bracing his arms on the side of the oasis, coming straight out of the water. He reached back down, grabbing hold of Lia’s hand, pulling her easily to his waiting embrace.

He dropped a quick but meaningful kiss to the full little mouth before holding up a finger. He had business to attend to. “Hold that thought.” he stated. “And anything else that catches your fancy.”

He made tracks towards his foe for a challenge had been issued and he was one not to back down from a challenge.

Red’s hand lifted, halting any advancement, the man’s features formidably set.

“Are you kidding me?” Francis was flabbergasted.

Liz placed her chin on Red’s shoulder, crossing her eyes and sticking out her tongue accordingly.

Francis started forward again only to be waylaid when Red Reddington stepped forward himself, a dark scowl issuing it’s own certain type of warning.

Francis instantly backed down. “This is not over!” he warned Liz more than Red. “I have a long memory, uh...” he suddenly blanked on her name so many other adjectives filling his head.

“Elizabeth...” Silas helpfully offered, waving over a cute little waitress as he held his empty drink aloft.

“Whatever!” Francis swished the assistance aside moodily. “The war wages on.” he prophesied. reaching back, grabbing Lia’s hand as he stalked away peevishly. “Come on, little doughnut hole.” he pouted his best pout. “We have some unfinished business to attend to...”

Lia giggled approvingly, following docilely.
May 17

Red listened to Mark prattling on about the upcoming deal they were involved in.

In reality, he was only catching snippets of the conversation, too busy enjoying his drink and the soft scent of Lizzy in the warm breeze.

He sat in the shade, Lizzy lay beside him, basking in the warm sun. Her normally lily white skin had turned a healthy bronze, though her shoulders admittedly, were slightly pink in color.

Red had massaged the warmed sunscreen over her back and shoulders about half an hour ago but she definitely needed a re-application.

The woman sighed her contentment, lazily sipping her drink through a long straw which stuck up through the slats of her chair. She had adopted the signature drink of her guard.

She had reentered the pool several times when beckoned to come play with Francis, Lia and Amanda, ergo the urgent need for sunscreen.

Red had disappointed her earlier, having begged off joining the group in the pool. Her instant look of communication told him that his excuse of a headache after the tense early morning negotiations, had alerted him to her subsequent faux pas.

She had instantly understood his not joining her, had nothing to do with a headache, but the scarring on his back.

Everyone had their own insecurities, even Red Reddington.

Liz had changed the subject to a safer one, hiding her disappointment well enough.

The incident left him feeling slightly unsettled.

In his entire adult life, Reddington had never presented anything other than a secure, confident, authoritative presence.

Even after the accident that left him scarred, he had held tight to those qualities with everything he had, especially on the worst days. Without those characteristics, he felt he would have lost himself to the looming depression. To do less, would have meant resigning himself to his failures.

It had taken several months to gather his wits about him. After which, a plan was set in motion. A series of events designed to get back at those who had taken his life away, was put into play... a chain reaction which led him back to... Lizzy.

That fateful day, seeing her face to face after so long a period, Red was able to hold the façade he presented to the world. He zealously guarded that civilized veneer, even from the woman.

Of late however, he had noticed himself slipping into a complacency. He wondered if that was such a wise thing to do as Lizzy had proven to be quite intuitive concerning such matters.
After their discussion last evening, they were both more secure in their relationship.

Their trust in one another was solid.

But that didn’t negate the fact that Red wanted to beat the hell out of ‘Brad’.

Red had seen that type of personality so often in life. Good old Brad was more interested in one upping the competition than Elizabeth herself. Nor did he care who was hurt in the interim.

Brad saw a challenge and wanted to defeat his opponent. He believed himself to be better than Red and would stop at nothing to prove it.

Red’s instincts were to beat the bastard to a pulp, leave him stripped naked in the middle of Hoover Dam, handcuffed to the railing.

Even now as he scanned the pool deck, he found the asshole in question staring longingly at Elizabeth from across the way. He watched the scene unfold, as Brad’s companion urgently attempted to get the fucker’s attention.

Evidently, Red’s reputation had proceeded him. He sensed he had been recognized even though the guy was now desperately pretending not to have done so.

Red could guess the direction of the conversation as recognition dawned on Brad’s face. At first the man’s jaw had dropped, the beady little eyes wide with awe as he jerked his head in Red’s direction.

For a split second there was confusion and a little fear. Red enjoyed that second immensely having held the man’s eyes steadily. But then the inevitable kicked in, a sly grin crossing Brad’s smug face.

Brad grinned, pulling the phone free from the gaudy shirt he had chosen.

Red did not have to be psychic to guess the direction the call would take. Thankfully however, he had the FBI on speed dial.

He punched in a button, waiting patiently, smiling politely across the way. For one brief second, Brad’s expression slipped. He could not understand why Red was not intimidated in the least by his tactics.

“Ressler?” Red began. “You’re about to get a call on my location. I’m at the Mirage.”

“Why am I not at the Mirage?” Ressler enquired instantly.

“Get a suit, come on down.” Red magnanimously offered. “Bring the lovely Agent Navabi... it’s on me... the pool is amazing.”

“You make my mouth water.” the younger man sighed heavily for his lot in life. “So what’s going on?” Ressler questioned.

“We have had the misfortune to run into someone from the past who wishes to make trouble,” Red stretched out his legs, getting more comfortable, “and possibly collect the substantial bounty on my head.”

“Well who doesn’t want that?” Ressler quipped, closing the folder he had been working on. “I will alert the others to ignore any info coming out of Vegas for the time being.”

“That would be appreciated.” Red flicked an imaginary piece of lint of his slacks.
“So should we be worried about this informant?”

“At no point did I say this man was intelligent.” Red smiled brightly at his opponent across the way. “Let me worry about him.”

“Yeah, don’t go killing him or anything... or at least don’t make more paperwork for me.” he sat up straighter at his desk. “Oh, hey. You think Liz would mind getting me a coffee cup from Treasure Island? I broke my girlfriends cup a couple days ago and...”

“She doesn’t know.” Red surmised.

“No...” Ressler confessed his sins, “I told her I took it to work with me.”

“Because you treasured it so much?” Red finished the scenario. “Donald, I thought you were the sole of discretion,” he teased, “I thought you never lied, being a Fed and all.”

“So it was black with a 3D skull on it.” Ressler advised. “And if she wants to pick me up something else as well, that would be great too... I gotta go. Navabi just got word of a sighting of your Blacklister.”

Red clicked the phone off just as Mark came back to the cabana, handing Red’s refreshed drink over before plopping down on the lounge beside the man.

“Red, you want me to get rid of the problem?” Mark hooked his thumb to the one in question, before turning a more than intimidating stare to the ‘problem’ in question.

Brad’s companion made a hasty retreat to the safety of the hotel. The man himself, shifted his stare and Red noticed he swallowed visibly.

“You still have the touch, Mark.” he was proud, having sensed Brad’s instinctive fear cross momentarily over the handsome face.

“Boy, he’s just cruising for a bruising, isn’t he?”  Mark said, staring out over the pool.

Red sipped his drink, his attention caught. “Good old, Brad?”

Mark’s face pulled into a slight grimace as he motioned with his head. “...No.” he sighed heavily.

Red refocused his attention on Elizabeth instantly, sighing heavily as well. “I think he has a death wish. And I am the Reaper.” he stood, straightening his vest. “... Excuse me.”

“God, you’re so polite, I love that about you.” Mark saluted the man with his drink. “Cheers...”

Grabbing a bartenders attention, Red pointed behind the bar. “I need that.”

The bartender looked at him oddly, but handed over the requested item to the imposing man.

Francis stealthily crept up behind Lizzy, tentatively reaching out for her bottoms.

Red stood casually, tipping the large pitcher of ice water over the young man’s exposed head.

Francis shrieked his surprise, his body jerking with the sensation. “Shit!” he screeched loudly. “Cold!” He did a weird kind of dance, the small cup of ice water he had held, spilled all over the originally intended target.

“Francis, you little shit!” Liz hopped in place, rubbing her cold bottom briskly. She tried unsuccessfully to recapture her breath.

Francis had recovered sufficiently enough to deposit a handful of ice cubes down the back of her bikini. The woman whooped her shock, digging about for the offending objects.

Reaching into the area, Red grabbed the ice cubes that had been poured inside, lifting her bodily, easing her into the warm pool.

“Better?” He smiled down at her, a loud scream of annoyance gathering both of their attentions.

Silas and Dembe were carrying a frantic dissident to the water’s edge. They swung Francis back and forth, ignoring his protests and threats completely, before letting him fly.

And fly he did.

Red rolled his eyes when the boy instinctively stuck his arm out, looking very much like Superman in flight, before he disappeared into the water in a enormous splash.

After a few seconds, Francis broke the surface, sighing. “Ahh, warmth.” Wiping the water from his eyes, he caught Red staring out at him. “Dude, that was cold, in more ways than one.”

“Be glad I didn’t drop it down your trunks.” Red needled the boy. “God knows you don’t need anything stunting your... growth.”

“Oh! Burn!” Liz snorted, enjoying Francis’ slight flush of embarrassment to the fullest.

Things settled down after a spell and Liz was able to go back to the pool without retribution or retaliation since she knew Red was keeping a close eye on matters.

She was presently working on the exercises her therapist had suggested to strengthen the weakened areas of her body.

Taking a couple of deep breaths, Liz dropped under the water, swimming purposefully, for her stamina appeared to be returning over the past few days.

She felt a bit of relief that her muscle memory was still intact. She pushed off the bottom, coming to the surface gradually.

Wiping the water from her eyes, she twisted, finding Red staring straight in her direction.

For a split second, she wondered if he was remembering her time in the pool at home when she had needed assistance because she had pushed her body too far.

It suddenly hit her how winded she had become and how far from safety she actually was.

Upset with herself, she gently kicked her feet to stay afloat, waiting for her energy to return.

Red arose from his seat, totally disregarding the people sitting beside him. He walked to the edge of the pool, waiting patiently.

“Are you all right?” Francis swam close to her, having appeared out of nowhere.

She smiled wanly at the young man. She also noted that Silas had joined Red beside the pool deck.
“Just waiting for my next burst of energy.” she wasn’t sure one would materialize to be honest. “Really, I’m okay. You can swim... go, have fun.”

Francis gauged the situation, casting a hasty glance back to Red. “Uh, I think I better stay.”

“If Red doesn’t like it, he can come get me, himself.” she snapped knowing she was being waspish, regretting her statement instantly.

Silas ran his hand through the silk of his hair, a worried expression on the handsome face. Red shifted a cool glance in the man’s direction whereby the guard straightened his magnificent body awkwardly, altering his expression accordingly as if to say, ‘It’s okay boss, if I have to go in, I’ll make the sacrifice.’

“Your good hair days are going to be the death of you.” Red prophesied.

Silas had the grace to be bothered but he was more vexed than guilty. He spread his hands slightly, his features glazing over innocently.

“He will have Silas jump in to drown me, Silas’ hair will get wet and then I will end up sleeping with the fishes.” It was Francis’ turn to enlighten the brethren.

Elizabeth’s incredulous look said it all. “Sleeping with the fishes!”

“It applies in my line of work.”

“What is your line of work exactly?” she demanded.

“Trouble in paradise?” Francis frowned his concern, artfully changing the subject.

“More like a difference of opinion.” She tried to tame her mood, her stomach growling loudly. She flushed slightly, her eyes shifting to her friend.

Francis chuckled, glancing at his watch, finding it well past lunch time. “We should head on in and feed that thing.” he stated. “Before it takes on a life of it’s own.”

“Elizabeth...” Red called out over the pool.

“I guess we should.” she sighed. “My master calls.” she muttered playfully, ducking under the surface, pushing off the floor of the pool, slicing through the water before breaking the glassy top in a rush.

Running her hands over her head, she pushed her hair back out of her face as she bobbed effortlessly.

“You look like a mermaid emerging from the sea.” Red’s eyes were gentle on her. “I never did understand why sailors considered them bad luck.”

“Maybe it was because mermaids supposedly lured them to their deaths?” Liz pointed out, trying to temper her tone, wondering at her dark mood.

“You wouldn’t hear me complaining.” Red sauntered closer. “Beckoned by a beautiful woman after months of being trapped at sea with a bunch of men.” He grabbed her towel from the deck chair, waiting for her. “I would have gladly followed her.”

“Even knowing you’d die?”
Nodding, he smiled. “I always wanted to die making love.” He chuckled when she shook her head, exasperated. “It beats the alternative.” He shrugged.

“I suppose it does.” She reached the stairs, grabbing the provided handle. “Not very fun for your partner though.”

“I always deliver, whether they’re trying to kill me or not.” Red said straight faced.

Glancing down purposefully, his eyes lit with an inner flame. “Cold?”

Looking down at what he focused so openly on, she decided a bit of fun was to be had at Red’s expense. Perhaps it might dispel this damnable mood which had come out of nowhere.

“No, I’m not cold.” she dropped her voice seductively, lifting innocent eyes.

She chuckled quietly as the man’s eye twitched in response, before she tucked a towel demurely around her body, hiding from view what he seemed so interested in.

Red realized that he really needed to get laid.

Watching that little ass traipse around pool side all day, that bikini leaving little to the imagination plus the fact he had been awarded an earlier glimpse of Lizzy’s breast, all had left him a little hot and bothered all damn afternoon.

Fifteen minutes... that’s all he asked for. Maybe thirty...

They gathered her things in silence starting the trek back to the hotel. She suddenly reached out, grabbing his hand, pulling up short.

“Would you have come in for me?” the blue eyes held something he could not read. He tried for lightness.

“Now why should I ruin a perfectly good suit when Francis–”

“Would you?” she insisted he answer seriously.

“I would have, yes.” he readily did so.

“Fully clothed, no doubt.” she shook her head woefully.

“Well, I would imagine running to get my swim trunks when you’re drowning would be counter productive.”

“Come swimming with me.” she asked wistfully.

“Lizzy...” the man dreaded refusing her anything, but...

“I know you love the water, Red. I know you want to be in there.” she motioned back to the pool but more importantly the people gathered therein. “The scars aren’t as bad as you think they are. Just... think about it.” She tugged his hand, pulling him along behind her.

Red sighed, wondering why it was so important to her at this stage. Liz smiled at the others as they made their way across the spacious deck. He pulled up short suddenly, a thought occurring to him.

She wasn’t disappointed in him at all. She wasn’t even pressuring him to do something he was uncomfortable with.
She had been encouraging him. Giving her support, but had left the final decision up to him.

The thought of getting in a public venue with her, shirtless...

Red didn’t think he’d ever be ready to do that. Twenty years in and only a handful of people knew his scars existed, and even less had actually seen them. And he didn’t see that changing anytime soon.

But he had to admit, the disappointment he felt in himself for not being able to push past this obstacle, was a hindrance he felt deeply. He felt himself waver just the tiniest bit.

He wasn’t only denying himself the chance to be with Elizabeth, to touch her warmed, wet skin as they played in the pool.

He was denying himself a chance to spend time with her.

Red glanced back at the world they were about to leave, having enjoyed being a part of it. Seeing her in another setting relaxed and carefree, he momentarily wondered if this stumbling block was worth the time and effort he spent worrying over it.

It wasn’t so much what others would think of his imperfections but he did not wish to embarrass Lizzy in any, way, shape or form. It seemed an important issue with the woman. He would indeed, give it more serious thought.

There was another issue the man had given serious thought to...

Once in the privacy of the luxurious Villa, Red fulfilled a need he had experienced all damned afternoon. He could neither explain nor truly justify his carnal tendencies these days. But neither could he deny them.

Having bent the woman over the nearest bed, he did what came naturally. He had never thought of himself as particularly debase in nature but he truly enjoyed these pleasurable interludes more and more of late.

And they were becoming spontaneous and definitely uninhibited. Elizabeth made him feel vital and alive and he was only too glad to express those emotions in his sexual escapades.

The woman lay now, breathless and spent after the spirited quickie. He stepped back to admire his handy work, amused that he had not even taken the time to remove the wet bikini bottoms which swirled around the woman’s bare feet.

He bent, unceremoniously nipping one bare ass cheek making Lizzy squeal her surprise. His smile turned into a low chuckle of amusement as he straightened his stocky frame. He watched her rub the offending spot, something singularly distracting about the action.

“If you still want to keep that shopping slash luncheon date...” his eyes had not once left the tight, rounded little cheeks, “I would cover that sweet little ass or I’ll take it as an open invitation that you would enjoy yet another round of ‘hide the Polish salami’.”

She laughed gaily, turning slightly to seek him out. “First of all, you aren’t Polish. But actually,” her giggle delighted him, “...I am kind of hungry.”

The man started toward her and she had one hell of a time kicking the bikini bottom aside that she could make her escape all the while laughing hysterically for her own wit and playfulness.

Red allowed her escape with but one parting shot. “Come on baby...” he lifted his shaft with a confident hand, “you can bite on this all you like.”

His efforts were met with another round of laughter as the woman disappeared into the spacious bath.

While Lizzy was finishing her hair and make-up, Red headed for the bar in the other room.

“You’re still in a pissy mood?” Francis came alongside Red, having foregone the usual knock and greeting that most common people would offer. “You want me to solve the problem for you?” he offered magnanimously. “I don’t understand why you haven’t gotten rid of the bastard yourself.”

“I didn’t want the distraction right now.” Red muttered irritably. “We so rarely get to spend quality time together...” he sighed heavily.

Francis grinned as he headed to the bar to pour himself a drink.

“I think we should just kill him.” he quipped.

Red tipped his glass, remaining silent on the subject, though he wondered when he’d become so transparent since he had been thinking along those lines once or twice that afternoon.

“I don’t want to hurt her.” Red spoke his thoughts.

“Because you will hurt Brad.” Francis smiled knowingly. “Sooner or later.”

Red didn’t deny the words. He really didn’t know what he would do if faced with the bastard again. He truly didn’t...

“You know, we’re all taking bets on this.” Francis tried to lighten the subject.

Red lifted a sullen glance. “I would never have guessed.” he knew his people well, just as he knew he was be facetious.

“Bottom line here,” Francis motioned with his hands, “if you’re not happy, we’re not happy. Let us help you.” it was offered. “Your happiness... your peace of mind is just as important to Liz, as hers is to you... and it’s important to us too. What can we do?”

Red nodded silently, letting the words tumble around in his chaotic mind. But then realized, while he had good intentions, Francis did not know who Elizabeth really was or the situation which existed between them.

While Red was the ultimate law breaker... she was a FBI agent who swore to uphold the law. It was the contention with which he dealt now.

How could she possibly appreciate his usual method of dealing with his rivals. The question became moot as the subject of his contemplation appeared on the scene.

“We’ll discuss this issue later.” Red informed Francis.

The woman in question came out of the bedroom, smiling in his direction waving to a reticent Francis Holbrook.

Red’s expression carefully masked over as he welcomed the gentle kiss from the small mouth as Liz leaned into his sphere.

Her soft kisses, intimate touches, laughter, moodiness, and that little body tucked up against his, made everyday life better.

Red honestly couldn’t remember how he had functioned before Elizabeth had come into his life. And he didn’t want to remember.

All he knew was he felt a sudden determination to be a better man for her...

For them.

Red sat patiently, absorbed in his surroundings until Lizzy came out of the dressing room once again, twirling about coquetishly.

She turned to the three way mirror, the new dress she was trying for the upcoming nuptials only her third choice so far.

She wrinkled her nose distastefully, tilting her head this way and that before turning towards him, waiting for his verdict.

“You hate it.” Red chuckled. “And rightfully so, it’s not your color.” he gestured to the odd gray shade.

“I’ll say...” she made a slight gagging face. “Why did she give me this?” she pointed to the unseen salesgirl.

“She’s apparently color blind.” Red shook his head, pushing out of his seat. “The style is fine.” he said of the tea length dress as he turned her this way and that, a gentle hand on her elbow.

It was a classic style. The off the shoulder lace lay softly on her smooth skin. It tapered in, highlighting Lizzy’s small waist. The skirt was full and moved gracefully when she walked. It was light and airy, perfect for the outside venue.

But the color was horrendous.

Red searched the merchandise available, finding the same style just to his right, hanging on a convenient rack. Snagging two in different colors, he shoved the dresses at Liz, pointing to the dressing rooms.

“Lavender?” she gasped her horror.

“Just... humor me.” he rolled his eyes for her lack of experimentation, shooing her off.

She reluctantly disappeared into the back as Francis came up out of nowhere as was his tendency, falling onto the bench beside Red.

“She find one yet?” he asked distractedly. “Hey, this couch is plush as shit, I’m going to put one in my bathroom at home.”

Red looked at him oddly. “This won’t take long.” He stretched his legs out in front of him comfortably. “Lia?”

“Yes, she found one.” Francis nodded approvingly. “She was just going to wear her dress that she had for her friend’s wedding...” he said, “but where’s the fun in that?”

Red smiled, turning his attention to Lizzy as she walked out in the off white dress.

“That’s pretty.” Francis watched her walk to the large mirror, swishing the billowing skirt.

“I look like a bride, don’t I?” she cut rueful eyes to both men in the mirror.

“Yeah, I guess it could be used for a wedding dress.” Francis had to agree.

“It’s very lovely.” Red questioned the validity of such a decision. “But I think it’s considered a faux pas, when attending a wedding.”

Liz’s shoulders slumped a tad, before she trudged back to the dressing room. Her spirits a little low.

“What bee buzzed in her bush?” Francis chuckled as the door closed with a thump.

Red laughed quietly at the mixed metaphor. “I chose a lavender dress for the event.”

“Oh my God, you didn’t?” Francis said sarcastically. “So what exact commandment did you break?”

“Lizzy does not do girly.” Red supplied the answer.

The door opened once again and the woman emerged, her expression both sullen and accusing. She stomped her way to the mirror.

Red reserved his judgement. Liz scanned the dress in the mirror, her head falling dejectedly after a goodly spell.

Her alabaster skin looked healthy and glowing... ethereal. Her dark hair stood out against the soft color in a startling manner. The dress accentuated her in all the right places.

Simply put... she looked amazing.

Liz scowled at Red, their eyes meeting in the mirror. She turned once again without a word making her way stalwartly back into the dressing room.

Francis craned his head watching her rather dramatic exit then jerked back when the door closed with a resounding snap behind the woman.

“So,” Francis drawled in confusion, “she... hated it?” he questioned the validity of his state.

“No.” Red grinned, raising from the seat, resetting his hat jauntily on his head. “She loved it.”

“I’ll never understand women.” Francis admitted. “They drag you to these things, kicking and screaming and when you finally do something cool, they get pissed off.”

“They are infinite and enchanting.”

“Well, yeah...” Francis seemed momentarily waylaid. “But they’re also pains in the asses.”

“I heard that!” Liz’s annoyed tone came from behind a closed door.

Francis spread his hands as if to say, ‘my point is made’.

Red busied himself, scanning a multitude of shoe styles and handbags until Lizzy emerged. She shoved the dress into his chest, seemingly resigned to her fate.
She personally, would never have chosen such a color but begrudgingly knew it was the best thing she had tried on in a number of years. It simply chafed her that her choice for the wedding had been totally unsuitable.

Men were supposed to be ignorant about such things. She found herself pointing to shoe after shoe, however, waiting for Red’s opinion before reluctantly snatching up a pair he had given his silent approval on.

She unconsciously moved on to the handbags but found him lacking in support this time.

“Why waste time when you know you’re going to pick the right one?” she tried to keep the annoyance from her voice.

Red bit the inside of his cheek, enjoying the standoff.

Liz crossed her arms refusing to budge. Red finally reached around her, grasping a small handbag, adding it to the pile.

A salesgirl swooped in, eager for her commission.

“What’s wrong with this one?” Francis held up a rather gaudy, rhinestone trinket laced with orange inlay around the leather strapping.

Red was hard pressed not to laugh right in the woman’s totally incredulous face.

“You see...” Red asked innocently, “it could have been worse.” he pointed out helpfully.

Francis took exception critically examining his choice of accessories. “What?” he wanted to know. “The color just pops.”

“I’m gonna pop you right in the eye.” Liz hissed quietly. “You’re embarrassing me!”

Francis glanced around, glowering his annoyance. “Goes to show how much you know...” he disdained, “Lia chose one almost exactly like this.” he proudly proclaimed. “It made the outfit.”

Liz was left speechless.

“You picked it out, didn’t you?” Red surmised.

Francis beamed proudly. “She loved it.”

“I’m sure she did.” Red let him have the moment. Liz’s face still was frozen in the same horrific expression. She cut hopeless eyes to the older man.

As they made their way to the cashier, “It’s okay.” Red whispered aside. “I’ll fix it for her. It will be fine.”

Liz breathed easier knowing Lia would have an out from such a horrendous situation. She waited patiently now only with an occasional ‘look’ in Francis’ direction.

“Thank you...” Red spoke quietly beside her.

“What for?” she questioned.

“For trusting me.” he inclined his head slightly.
The woman glanced at the hideous handbag hanging so obtrusively from Francis’ hand. The man clearly intended to purchase the heinous object.

“Never again will I question anything you suggest.” Liz promised faithfully.

Francis looked over happily swinging his new purchase back and forth, blissfully unaware of any dissension among the troops.

“That butterfly there is pretty, Francis.” she pointed to the object.

Red and Chris stepped off to a side room, discreetly disappearing into the darkened area.

“...Fancy meeting you here.” the voice was instantly recognizable.

Liz exhaled an annoyed breath, before turning reluctantly about. “...Brad.”

She lay a restraining hand on Francis who she had felt tense at the other man’s arrival. She also waived off a rapidly approaching guard who had held back all afternoon, as was his way until something he perceived as ‘danger’ beckoned.

She could handle this. Even as insistent as Brad was, she had absolutely no interest in the man. And didn’t think she’d have a problem verbalizing as much.

“I saw you,” the man smiled charmingly, “thought you might be interested in having that drink now.”

“Oh, I can’t, but thank you.” Liz begged off graciously. “I have to finish shopping for the wedding.” she explained with a wave of her hand to the display cases.

“Well, how about dinner.” the man tried again, persistent if nothing else. “There’s a romantic little bistro up the way.”

Francis’ jaw tightened angrily, before turning his ire directly on the intruder. “Man, she’s engaged.” he warned icily. “...Back the fuck off.”

“I just asked her out to dinner.” Brad laughed inoffensively.

“A romantic dinner.” Francis corrected, remembering the exact wording used.

“What?  Your old Ball and Chain afraid of a little competition?” It was innocuously joked.

“If there was any competition to be had.” Francis scoffed openly. “You’re so out of his league, it’s pathetic.”

Liz rubbed at her forehead, embarrassed by the whole thing. “Brad, I’m flattered,” she began, “but I think it would be best if we didn’t–”

“Look, just have dinner with me.” Brad prodded insistently. “Take a chance.”

“No... thank you.” Liz refused, all nicety aside. “Now, we must be going.” she took Francis’ arm, walking across the show room.

She could feel the man gaining on them, preparing to turn and do battle but at that instant, Red stepped out of the back room.

She was glad to see that the man was going to be civilized about the whole matter, his expression benign for the moment.

Red lifted his hand, taking her outstretched one as she got closer to him.

“Liz...” Brad demanded her attention.

Clenching her jaw angrily, Liz spun, stopping the man in his tracks.
“I said,” she bit out, “no.”

Brad drew back, a little shocked by the forcefulness in her tone. His eyes drifted past her, sensing the problem.

“I get it.” he nodded knowingly. “I’ll talk to you later then.”

Francis stepped forward quickly and Liz could see the powerful fists clenching with rage, “Hey man, why don’t you go fuc–”

Red grasped Francis’ arm, stilling the young man. “Is there a problem here?”

“No problem.” Brad smiled disarmingly. “Just asked Liz for a quick drink... maybe a little dinner.”

“A fucking romantic dinner.” Francis corrected again, his anger barely contained. Was he purposely baiting Red a little, hoping the man might knock the asshole out? He knew Red’s capabilities, he just didn’t know how far he was willing to be pushed in this particular situation.

Red remained stoically passive. “Elizabeth, would you like to have dinner with your friend.”

Francis turned away, shaking his head furiously but Christopher offered a sedate shake of his own head signifying ‘let Red handle it in his own way’.

Liz smiled softly, sensing Red’s ploy.

He was pissed. Clear and simple. Though he was trying to hide it, she knew the set of those shoulders very well.

The man was the epitome of class in her book. Her affection for him swelled to new heights.

“No. I do not want to go.” she gripped his hand tighter.

“You have your answer.” Red turned the all too quiet eyes elsewhere.

“Maybe because she doesn’t have a choice.” the man countered recalling his several attempts garner the FBI’s attention this very day.

Red remained moot on the subject knowing where all this was leading.

“My denial has nothing to do with Red, in any fashion.” Liz replied sternly. “As a matter of fact, I’m finding you rather conceited and rude.” she narrowed her eyes at the intruder to her domain. “Do not approach me again.” she snapped quietly. “Is that clear enough for you?”

“I don’t want to have to point out again... that we are engaged.” Red kept his tone even, just barely.

“But I have to wonder,” Brad countered musingly, “if you will make it to the altar?”

A certain type of rage filled Elizabeth herself at such an unforgivable slur. “Why you son of a–”

Red gripped her hand, gently stilling her outburst. He stepped once, putting himself between the woman and her antagonist. His eyes emptied of emotion.

“...Leave Elizabeth alone.” he gritted coldly.

Brad looked between the hostile eyes staring daggers at him. He sensed Elizabeth’s anger as well, before shrugging nonchalantly.
“Does she know who you are?” he questioned sotto voce before sauntering across the showroom. “I’ll see you later, Liz.” he called back over his shoulder, his smile a confident one.

Red was moving before he knew he had actually reacted but the woman’s hand held him back. He trailed after the son of a bitch with his eyes blazing hidden fury until Brad disappeared behind a large pillar.

Red turned a glacial stare to Dembe and Silas who waited unobtrusively aside. Silas lifted a brow signifying ‘do we kill the bastard now?’

Red offered a jerky gesture in reply. Both men were clearly disappointed by the man’s decision.

“Who’s the clueless idiot?” Chris asked the rhetorical question.

“Her old boyfriend.” Francis grated, sending Liz an accusatory glance.

“Let it go.” Red practically snapped before wrapping his arm around Liz’s waist, pulling her close to his side.

She smiled warmly at the touch, moving into it more than willingly.

Red took a deep breath, trying to control the urge to go after the fucker and do irreparable harm. He felt his rage easing with Liz’s calming presence, but it didn’t quell it completely.

He was trying so hard to not resort to his usual tactics, knowing Elizabeth would not appreciate it, especially since she would consider it her fault. The task almost impossible, however.

In fact, he hadn’t anticipated that it would bother him to this extent.

Lizzy was his. And to not fight for what belonged to him... was a very foreign concept in Red Reddington’s world.

He couldn’t help but ask himself if there was a small part of her wondering why he hadn’t. Did she think he was a coward for not strangling the asshole like he wanted to? Or was she proud of him for keeping his cool?

Liz gripped his hand tightly, dragging him along as she pointed out jewel after jewel to Francis. The young man was rapidly regaining his equilibrium, even making Liz giggle at one point over some nonsensical thing he had said.

To outward appearances, she had let the matter go. Had moved on from the exchange and was having fun.

So why was Red still stewing?

She tapped the glass repeatedly at one point until Francis gave in and gestured for assistance. She waited patiently in the interim, all the while wondering over Red’s quietness.

“Oh, look!” she gasped, pointing to a delicate necklace and earring set in diamond and amethyst. “It’s the color of my dress.” she traced her finger over the glass, looking at the pretty display.

Red waved a man over, pointing to the set.

“Red.” she hissed quietly. “I didn’t say buy it! I said–”
He cupped her face gently, working his mouth softly against hers, feeling the tension easing gradually from his shoulders. She sighed happily against his mouth, for a few moments before sighing in defeat.

“You’re impossible,” she shook her head slightly, “what am I going to do with you?”

“Are you open to suggestions?” Red asked instantly.

Dembe stepped forward, completing the transaction.

As they walked through the hotel, she realized that Red had said very little since the incident with Brad.

She began to feel very insecure.

Was he pissed off at her? And if so, what the hell for! She hadn’t done anything. She had been minding her own business when Brad invaded her space.

They came to the hall leading to the outside area where the car was waiting.

Red had been upset for some few moments. He had felt better after purchasing the small trinket for the woman but his anger had returned almost immediately thereafter. He hesitated, finding a safe object on which to vent his frustration.

Suddenly turning on the head guard who had walked quietly beside him the entire time, Red snapped. “Where the hell were you?”

“Shut up, Red.” Liz whipped around, her own anger surfacing. “I waved him off because I could handle it! You big jerk!”

“I didn’t ask what you were doing.” Red snapped right back. “I asked what the hell h–”

“I can take care of Brad myself!” she gritted. “I don’t need him to do it for me!”

“That’s his job!” Red jabbed a finger towards the conspicuously silent guard. “He’s supposed to protect you!”

“You mean, protect your property!” she bitched before turning on her heel, marching down the long corridor, continuing the trek to the car.

Silas watched her go, before slowly walking after her. He turned a few steps into the effort, glancing back at Red.

“You’re kind of cute when you’re mad.” Silas grinned at his own wit.

“Fuck off, Silas.” Red spat, gesturing for the man to ‘go’. “Do your job, dammit.”

“Aye, aye, Captain.” Silas saluted, resuming his trek.

Red dropped his head, blowing out his vexation before lifting his eyes, finding Dembe and Francis waiting.

“I don’t want to hear it.” he grunted irritably.

Silas trotted after the vexed woman, chuckling as he neared.
“Slow down there, firecracker.” he reached out, snagging her arm, ensuring she obey.

“I can’t believe he spoke to you in that manner!” she hissed. “Besides, I need you to—”

“He knows you don’t need me to ward off that piss ant.” Silas effectively silenced the pissed woman. “Technically, I should have ushered the moron to the door and none of this would have happened.” he was quick to fill in. “But just like Red, I know you can handle that dumbass.”

“He’s pissed off at us for—”

“Red’s not pissed off at you or even me.” Silas corrected.

“He yelled at you for nothing and—”

Silas sighed heavily, guiding her to a nearby hallway away from prying ears and eyes.

“Now, I want you to listen to me.” He held her fiery eyes. “There are two totally different issues going on here and you’re not going to understand it unless someone just maps it out for you.”

“I’m not stupid, you know!” she hissed.

“I know you’re not. But you know, it didn’t fully occur to me until early this morning what’s going on.”

“What are you babbling about?”

“Just be quiet for a second and I’ll tell you.” Silas snapped. “First and foremost, Red was not yelling at me. He was venting in a safe manner.”

Liz tilted her head questioningly. The man shifted his bulk into a more comfortable position.

“Honey, what just happened in there went against everything Red Reddington is.” he explained as best he could under the circumstances. “It was either he blew up at me, knowing full well I understood that it wasn’t personal... or he did what his instincts were screaming at him to do.”

Liz stepped in closer, listening intently now.

“He’s agitated because he went against his natural tendency to fight for his property,” he repeated her words back at her, gesturing accordingly, “but instead, he did what he thought you would appreciate and that was to keep his cool.”

Liz eyed her guard warily, but stayed silent.

“The idiot has probably got it in his head that you think he’s a coward for not fighting for you.” the man laughed at such a notion.

“I don’t think that at all!” she stated vehemently.

“I didn’t say you did.” Silas reprimanded. “Or that it made sense that Red Reddington would think something so stupid.”

“So besides him believing that,” she slowly worked out the problem in her head, “he’s also worried how I’ll react when he finally does blow his top?” she questioned.

“Yes, he is worried about that.” Silas confirmed. “But you and I both know, Red will handle Brad at some point.” he warned, just as a precaution.
She had to admit, she had expected Red to punch the man back at the jewelry store.

“Especially since the little fucker called the FBI and reported a sighting on Red.”

“He what!” she gasped.

“Red has already taken care of it.” Silas assured. “But you should know, Red will do something, at some point. So get ready for it.”

“So I should be...” she searched for the proper wording, “supportive?”

“I can’t tell you how to feel about that.” Silas shook his head. “Your morals are different than ours.”

Liz had to admit that she believed a different set of rules applied most times than she had witnessed with her current associates. Rule of law had been drilled into her for so many years now, that the lines were beginning to blur.

It felt wrong to support Red in this matter when she knew it was so easily handled in a different fashion.

But on the other hand, she had to wonder, when did she have to take a step back and allow Red to handle this his way?

“I told Red I wasn’t interested in Brad.” she confided. “I thought he believed me...”

“I’m not saying he didn’t believe you.” Silas was quick to reassure the woman.

“Then what’s going on?” she was so confused. “I mean, besides him wanting to beat the hell out of Brad.”

“This isn’t about Brad,” Silas shook his head woefully, “it’s about Tom.”

The woman’s frown deepened, having absolutely no idea how the two even connected.

“When he threw Tom in your face last night...” Silas reminded, “he was subconsciously worrying about you taking off with Tom... not Brad.”

“What?” she whispered her disbelief.

“Brad is just a convenient excuse.” Silas spread his hands expressively. “Red has been living a life of nothing but disappointment... right now, he’s desperately trying to find his place in your world and evidently he hasn’t found it yet.” It seemed simple enough to the man. “The foundation is shaky and he can’t find his footing.” ”

“He’s waiting for me to leave him.” she surmised quietly.

Silas nodded sharply. “So it would seem.”

“Have I done something to...” she shrugged.

“It’s not you. It’s just the way guys think, honey.” Silas opened the door, ushering her out when the car pulled up. “He hasn’t been able to make claim to you in any of the ways universally understood by the male species, loathsome creatures that we are... and it’s bothering the shit out of him.”

“What do you mean? What ways?” she questioned, ready to help Red in anyway possible to assure he be more confident of their relationship.
Red stepped through the door, stalking towards the pair, his face masked carefully.

“Fuck!” the woman was more than vexed for the interruption, her expression saying as much.

Silas laughed throatily before opening the back door, waving her gallantly inside.

“Talk to him...” The man suggested quietly, assisting the woman as she took her seat.

They drove the short distance to the Villa in complete silence. Red snapped orders to those assembled before following the woman into the front room, then stalked his way to the bar.

Liz watched him for a long moment, silently wondering how to start the dialogue needed.

“I don’t think you’re a coward.” she stated quietly, stilling the man’s hand directly before his glass reached his lips. “I understand what you did...” she continued quickly, “and that you did it for me.”

Red blinked, a little shocked by her insight, truth told.

“That’s the second time, that I’m aware, that you’ve done that.” she crossed her arms, hugging herself comfortably. “It goes against your nature...” she turned, walking the short path around the divan, “and I don’t...” she hesitated, absently running her finger along the edge of a throw pillow.

“You don’t, what?” Red questioned quietly.

“I don’t want you to do that.” she blurted out. “If you start second guessing everything you do, because of me, it can lead to a choice between life or death.”

Red scoffed disgustedly, “Brad isn’t—”

“I don’t mean Brad.” she scolded. “I mean at work and, yes, maybe even personally.” it was granted. “Two months ago, you probably would have killed the Ashcrofts for what they did to Mark.” she had no delusions in that area. “But because of me...”

“You think I didn’t kill them because of you?” Red frowned, unsure how to take what she was saying. But after New York, he wasn’t going to instantly assume. He would hear her out. “Did you want me to kill them?”

“No, I didn’t mean that.” she frowned, unsure how to put into words what she had actually meant. “You as much as indicated, it was because of me, you changed your method of dealing with them.”

Red thought back, suddenly remembering his phone call to her. He had said... a good woman has a way of changing a man.

“I don’t want you hesitating to do what you feel is best and possibly getting yourself killed because you think... differently now.”

Red stepped forward, understanding dawning. “I didn’t mean that I hesitated to...” he gathered his thoughts, “when I understood what was going on, there was no point in killing them.” he tried to explain, but by her confused expression, he wasn’t doing a good job.

“They purposefully shot Mark low, to not kill him.” he added. “They just wanted to make it so Francis wouldn’t use the O’Sullivan’s again.”

“They couldn’t just lowball the O’Sullivan’s?” she would never understand the criminal mind and she professed to be a profiler.
“The Ashcroft’s are a young bunch,” Red sighed heavily, “who maybe watched too many mobster movies.”

“Regardless, what happened today...” she looked up at him, “I know you did it for me.”

“I did.” he admitted. “Are you implying you would have rather I beat the hell out of him?”

“Is that what you wanted to do?”

“... Yes.”

“And because you didn’t, we got into an argument.”

“I wasn’t angry with you.”

“The point is, I thought you were,” she reminded. “Which again, led us to a misunderstanding.”

“Who’s to say we wouldn’t have fought if I had done as I wanted.” Red countered.

“At least in that scenario, you’re actually standing up for a cause.” she could see that much. “Fighting over some meaningless idiot is exactly what he wants us to do.”

Red couldn’t argue the point. It was the second time Brad had purposefully caused waves with the intention of driving a wedge.

“Plus you got angry with my guard, after I explicitly told him to not involve himself.” she practically pleaded her cause. “Negating my order to stand down.”

Red had told her repeatedly that Silas was to do as she directed, and he came in, in one fail swoop, erasing what he had essentially proclaimed. He vented his anger on the wrong people.

He sighed, nodding slowly. “I did.” he readily admitted again. “I apologize.” he pushed the drink aside, slowly. “I will apologize to Silas as well.”

She turned, seeking solace elsewhere, looking out the French doors, watching the guards make their rounds. “What do I have to do to convince you that I’m not interested in Brad.”

“I know you aren’t interested.” he assured.

“Then why...” she hesitated, unsure how to ask the question.

“I told you...” he walked up behind her, keeping a little distance, “I’m very territorial. It’s a trait that I am not proud of at times.”

For the second time that day, her heart filled with affection for the man behind her. He may be territorial and even possessive at times but that was just part of the whole.

“And watching him openly undressing you... pisses me the hell off.”

“I don’t care what he does.” she scowled.

“I do.” Red murmured quietly behind her.

“Because I belong to you.” she finished for him. “In your world.”

“No, he’s disrespectful to you. And that is something that I will simply not allow.”
And a little more than disturbing, Red thought to himself. Men who didn’t take ‘No’ for an answer were dangerous in his world.

“If it makes you feel any better...” she quirked her head slightly to one side, “I kind of wanted you to hit him... oh who the hell am I kidding? I wanted you to knock him on his ass.”

Red smiled shortly stepping closer, looking to her profile. “You did, huh?”

She sighed, nodding a little. “He’s so fucking annoying.”

“Then you understand that I may not be able to control myself at some point.” he questioned. “And that my actions are in no way a reflection of my feelings and respect for you.”

She looked up at the man, a slow smile tugging at her lips. She guessed if that bitch Natalia came sniffing around him... she would be pretty pissed off herself. Which was a totally foreign concept to her, she suddenly realized.

She fully understood finally, as odd as the emotion involved with Natalia was for Liz to experience, it was just as much an alien concept for Red not to act as his instincts demanded.

“I will not lie to you, Lizzy. He can only push me so far before I react.” he stepped in further as she stepped back. “I have a reputation to uphold granted, but when it comes to you... it’s personal.”

She smiled softly, looking up at the man, “This little territorial thing you’ve got going on is even more hot than I originally thought.” she reached out, stroking his collar. “Not that you have to prove your point by breaking him in half.”

He glanced down, watching her hand trail flirtatiously over his chest. Leaning his arm into the wall beside her, he effectively blocked any exit, not that she seemed to be wanting to go anywhere.

“I had something a little more violent in mind, but whatever...” The man dropped his mouth against her neckline, suckling on her pulse point.

“Are you marking your ‘territory’?” she leaned into his administrations.

“That is in the very near future.” he promised himself more than the woman. “I am well within my rights to beat the fuck out of him.”

“So I should consider myself ‘spoken for’?” she sighed, holding him to his pastime.

“Most definitely.” he muttered distractedly. “Yes, you are.”

“You sound pretty sure of yourself there, Sailor.”

Red looked at her with dark and hooded eyes, then reached out, popping the button on her slacks. Her breath caught in her throat as she stood there, stunned.

“With good reason.” He smirked as he pulled the top of the dark fabric, sliding the zipper open easily.

“Hey!” She gasped, then looked around nervously for the Butler, to make sure the door was closed. People were constantly coming and going unannounced around here.

Pushing her further into an alcove of the bar, blocking any view of her with his body, Red traced her belly button with probing fingers, his thumb hooking into the edge of her panties. “Do you want me to stop?”
“...No.” She replied breathlessly.

He slid his hand inside the fabric, touching her with his warm confidence.

“Are you spoken for?” he asked, playing with the fine smattering of hair covering her swollen lips, as he gently teased her clitoris.

“...Yes.” She spread her legs willingly, tensing a little for what she knew was to come.

“Who do you belong to?” He rubbed her clit quickly.

“Red Reddington...”

“I’ve heard of him.” he stated. “Seems like an okay guy.”

“He’s the best.” she sighed dreamily.

He chuckled sensually. “I’ve heard that too...”

She grasped the back of his neck, deepening their kiss, which he happily obliged.

He heard a couple male voices outside the room, possibly nearing their location.

“You better come,” He whispered seductively, “we’re about to have company.” He smiled, feeling her fight for release instead of attempting to stop his actions.

“Come on, baby...” Red rumbled softly against her ear, urging her on. He breathed a sigh of relief when he heard the voices pass, as they headed outside to the deck.

He had no intention of halting this little interlude.

He really loved watching her come. Pushing her hard into the wall, covering her mouth with his, he rubbed hard against her swollen clit until she climaxed against his fingers, mewling softly, raspy gasps escaping her heightened body.

Red thrummed his fingers against her, bringing her down slowly. She relaxed in his embrace, breathing in his warm scent then sighed happily.

He slid his hand free, before repairing the damage he had done. “Are we all right here, now?” he stared down at her contentedly.

“You do what you need to, Red.” she lay her head back on his shoulder. Her eyes gentle and for the man alone. “I don’t like being at odds with you over something so trivial.”

“I don’t either.” he agreed, then smiled a moment later. “Though, I do so enjoy these little make up sessions.”

Liz laughed quietly, reaffirming her hold about his neckline. They stood in comparative silence, neither realizing that, as a unit, they swayed gently as if to some melodic tune.

The sounds of the outside world filtered around them. A masculine laugh echoed from the lush gardens outside the French doors. There was a sound from the kitchen of someone shutting the back entrance door.

“You’re too quiet.” Red murmured, unwilling to break the quiet solitude they had found.
“I was thinking about Tom.” she blurted, feeling the man stiffen hastily. “You don’t have to worry about him.” Liz lifted her gaze to the carefully controlled features. “I know it’s just words but...”

“I shouldn’t have said what I did.” Red shook his head for his own folly. “It was–”

“Warranted.” she interrupted. “I acted impulsively and really disrespected myself.” she admitted. “I didn’t think about it until a couple weeks ago, how unhealthy and sick that relationship was.” she was still troubled by her impulsive actions. “I needed to step away from that but...”

“He was comfortable.” Red supplied the reason.

“But he wasn’t.” Liz disagreed. “I thought I knew him... you know?”

“I know...” Red hated that she had felt that betrayal.

“I hadn’t let it settle in that the man I knew didn’t exist and never had.” she grimaced at the thought now. “I lived with a stranger for two years... then after he...” she shivered at the thought of the violence that had erupted between them.

Red absently massaged her tense muscles, comforting her. He allowed her the time to gather her thoughts.

“I slept with him...” she felt sick by the realization. “What was wrong with me?”

“Tom was a master manipulator.” Red nuzzled her forehead lovingly. “Even after everything that happened, it was hard to erase the good memories you had of the man.”

The people who handled Tom were almost Machiavellian in nature. There were times when Red even understood the desperation the young man must have felt. Caught between a rock and a hard place.

“You can’t just shut off your emotions, Lizzy.” that much he knew.

“I haven’t shut off my emotions.” she hoped he would understand. “I’ve learned to look at the situation from a distance. I know now not everything is black and white.” she stopped for a breath.

“But I need you to know, that with this needed separation from him... I understand how damaging the situation was.” she freely admitted. “And it will not happen again. I can’t let it happen...”

The words, while appearing sound and logical, still troubled him somewhat. He understood what she was trying to convey. He was glad to note however, that she was seriously considering her own happiness and peace of mind, which was very important.

One part of the man sensed that she was trying to soothe the small rift between them in her own way. He was also grateful for that element.

He could see her personal growth, both emotionally and physically.

Knowing that Tom had a ice cubes chance in hell of swaying Lizzy to do anything... felt amazing. He was so fucking proud of her right now... words failed him.

He never thought he’d see the day...

“I know what I said doesn’t magically fix anything,” she began, “and we’ll need to communicate more about such things...”
“But it’s a start,” he allowed. “I’m still sorry for being an asshole and for the crass approach last night.”

His sincere apology touched her deeply.

“I’m sorry I keep bringing up work.” she replied in kind.

“What?” His confusion was apparent.

She was full of confessions this afternoon it seemed, which amused the man. Red had to wonder, however, was there something deeper going on?

“What were you and Silas discussing earlier?” he thought he knew the answer to the probing question.

“Nothing of import.” she waved the insinuation off, sensing his meaning. “He did explain some things to me about Brad and stuff…”

“And you wanted to clear the air…” Red confirmed.

“Yes.” she nodded.

“I’m pleased.” and he was.

“I’ve been thinking,” she brought another troubling subject to light, “it seems like every conversation we have, I bring up work.” she felt her own insecurities. “I don’t mean to, it just happens.”

She shared her concern. It seemed that all they really had in common besides the phenomenal sex… was the Blacklist.

“I’ll find the balance… a normality, soon, Red. I promise.” She was determined.

“Lizzy…” the man chuckled slightly, “that is normal.”

“Really?” her mood lightened somewhat. Red Reddington was sophisticated, worldly… could the mundane really hold his interest for long?

“What did you and Tom talk about at the end of the day?” he queried, amused at her outlook on what a normal relationship should entail.

“I don’t know?” she tried to recall. “I guess, I asked how his day was, if he let Hudson out… did he take the trash out.”

“You asked how his day was?” he clarified. “Meaning, how was work.”

Liz was momentarily waylaid.

“I guess so, yes.” But that was just Tom she was dealing with, not Red Reddington, her insecurities resurfaced.

“Well, that’s all we’re doing.” Red smiled softly. “The only difference is we can discuss work freely, because we happen to work, together.” he pointed out the obvious. “You thought you couldn’t do that with Tom.”

Because things were classified in her line of work, they were off limits to Tom. She didn’t realize until that moment that a part of her had always sort of looked down on his profession. Not that a school teacher was not a vital vocation. In Liz’s opinion it was the most important profession ever because it dealt with the future of children.

But secretly, she had always thought a lot of the more violent aspects of her chosen vocation would have totally turned him off, as most civilians, she supposed.

What a fool she had been.

“To do so now, so openly, is a novel experience for you.” Red’s hands dwarfed her waist as he unexpectedly lifted the slight frame unto the granite counter of the bar. “I should think.”

“It is rather freeing.” she had to admit. Not once did she ever imagine Red would be turned off by any aspect of her work.

“Trust me, Lizzy,” he smiled warmly, his eyes level on par with hers from her lofty position now, “aside from some minor little details,” she rolled her eyes, catching his meaning, “we’re like everyone else at the end of the day. We talk about work, the household bills–”

“How can we talk about the bills, when you pay them?” she twisted her mouth derisively. “Which brings to mind, that is also something we need to discuss, since it is supposedly my house... remember.”

“You asked if I paid the electric bill the other day.” he chose to ignore such logic.

“I did not!” she was relatively sure.

“You most certainly did,” he corrected, “over breakfast, when you were opening the mail.”

She was brought up short. “Well... did you? Pay it?” It seemed an important question after all.

“I did.” he assured her. “Before the due date even.” he replied straight faced, though his eyes were filled with merriment.

Liz giggled a little under her breath, seeing the humor in the situation finally, her manner and eyes softening on the man. “Gold star for you.”

“Are these gold stars redeemable in some fashion?” it was the man’s turn to brighten a little. Because after all, hope sprang eternal.

She loved when he used his wit against her but she loved more the undertone of flirting that had developed between them of late.

“Francis hasn’t received any gold stars, to date.” she mused pseudo seriously. “But Silas has redeemed several of his at something he calls the Muskrat Ranch.” she was delighted that she could produce that throaty chuckle whenever she put her mind to it these days.

“Muskrat love, eh?” he was thoroughly enjoying the conversation. “I believe you meant the Bunny Ranch.”

“Really, what is that?” she feigned innocence.

“I’ll book us a tour.” he called her bluff. “I think you’ll find it very enlightening.

“I’m taking it... this is a house of ill repute? And if so,” she lifted scolding brows, “how often have you frequented this establishment.”
“I’ve been like a monk.” he said straight faced. “But for you, I would renounce my vows.”

The cute little face blanked over for a goodly while and Red could see the gears turning. She was definitively intrigued by such a notion. He could not wait to see what came out of that sweet little mouth now...

“Why didn’t you tell me Brad called the FBI on you?” She wisely changed the subject, using his tactics, her expression an inquisitive one.

To say Red was disappointed would be an understatement, but he had other things with which to contend.

“Well, son of a bitch. I completely forgot.” He was genuinely put out with himself. “Ressler wants you to get him a black coffee cup from Treasure Island with a 3D skull on it.”

“What the hell does that have to do with...” she was a little vexed he had totally ignored the issue at hand.

“Ressler has his priorities straight for once.” Red hid his smile. “Did you know that everything out of that man’s mouth is a lie, but only if you’re his ‘current girlfriend’.” the man ‘air quoted’ the term.

“What are you talking about? Ress is the most honorable man I know... present company included.”

“Unless you’re his ‘current girlfriend’.” he once again, ‘air quoted’.

She held her smile for as long as humanly possible. “A skull mug, you say?”

“Yes, yes...” the man waved the issue aside, “back to this Muskrat Ranch thing...”

At dinner later that evening, Francis picked the correct time to present Lia with her surprise gift. Elizabeth enjoyed the moment just as much as the other woman. Lia’s reaction was totally priceless, much like the diamond necklace that had been chosen.

It must have been ‘priceless’ to see Francis actually choose a gift that was tasteful instead of the gaudy trinkets he had been bestowing.

It was later on that same night that Liz’s intense search for Red led her to all the activity taking place by the pool area.

She found Red and Silas, kicked back in chairs, lazily watching Dembe do laps, both sipping drinks.

In Red’s hand, she noted a stop watch, her curiosity piqued. The woman forgot about that issue for a moment, her real one coming to fore. She marched determinedly across the tiled slate area.

“Red Reddington,” she began her tirade most effectively, “you have got to stop buying me things like this.” she held her gift aloft the shiny bauble shimmering in the moonlight. Even now, as annoyed as she was, she could not help but admire the beautiful craftsmanship.

“Oh, you’re in trouble now.” Silas chortled, setting his drink on a nearby table, ready to turn his attention to a good fight any day of the week.

“You can’t just—” the woman dangled the jewels in Red’s face, needing to make this point hit home.

“I can and will, Lizzy.” Red turned his eyes upward, his tone a scolding one. “You liked it, you’re keeping it. End of story.” he held out an imperious hand, “Plus... what kind of fiancé would I be if I didn’t buy you jewelry and other little trinkets on occasion if only to remind you why you adore me so very, very much?”

Silas picked up his drink, his head shaking woefully. “So much for a good fight.” he grumbled.

Liz sighed heavily, knowing she wouldn’t win this argument. To the rest of the world, she was Red’s fiancée. It would indeed, look odd if he didn’t do what he had said.

“Sounds like bribery to me.” Silas did his bit to provoke the situation.

“You’re not helping.” Red shifted the man a lazy stare. Taking his pre-offered hand, Liz settled comfortably in his lap, the table they had chosen having only two chairs.

“Hey, did I say bribery was bad?” Silas questioned. “It’s got Francis out of some sticky situations, God knows.”

“Speaking of Francis...” Liz leaned into Red, wrapping an arm around his shoulders, “where is the little toad.”

“Ding Dong is with his little tart.” Silas chuckled into his glass.
“Your words I’m sure, not his.” Liz scolded. “And it’s not ‘Ding Dong’, it’s Cinnamon Roll and—”

“Lizzy, please.” Red pretended nausea, a playful hand placed to his stomach. “I can only handle so much saccharine in one day.”

“Well, I think they’re cute. I also think she’s just darling.” Liz added to her narrative, throwing an annoyed glare at her guard. “A lot more classy than the floozies you—”

“They prefer the term, call girls.” Silas corrected haughtily.

Red chuckled, ‘Try ‘escorts’.” He held up his watch, as Dembe pushed off from the end of the pool. “What are you doing?” She continued her visual reprimand of her guard, even though her interest had turned elsewhere by now.

“Timing him. He thinks he’s off his game.” Red absently swirled the scotch in his glass.

“Why would he think that?” Elizabeth was astounded.

“He ran this morning and was off his time by two entire minutes,” Red shook his head consolingly. “He’s getting old.” Silas commiserated.

“You’re older than he is.” Liz reminded.

“Oh, dig the knife in.” the large man cocked his head at the woman. “What is it with you and hotels, always stabbing someone... where it hurts.”

Red held his smile admirably for the less than gentle reminder of the incidents in the young woman’s life.

Elizabeth gasped irritably turning on the man. “I don’t always... those two times were simply...” she lost her train of thought because in reality, she could come up with no logical response.

Silas lifted a patient brow. The woman turned to Red for solace.

“Well, you do.” No help was to be found there evidently. He lifted his own brows slightly. “Stab people... in hotels.” he studied her wounded expression. “But for my part, I thoroughly enjoyed the experience.”

Dembe popped up out of the water just as Red clicked the watch. “Eighteen minutes, forty two seconds.”

“Is that good?” Liz mumbled under her breath.

“For someone who I believe just did a mile and was supposed to only do ten laps, yes.” Red’s tone was pure indulgence.

“He’s been practicing more of late.” Liz made note then glanced over meaningfully at Silas’ flat abdomen. “More people should follow by example.”

Silas waved such folly aside. “As if this body could be any better.”

“He’s preparing himself for the competition at Mark’s get together this year.” Red smiled happily at Dembe’s doubtful frown giving a thumbs up gesture.
“I don’t understand?” Liz stated. “I thought this was about rest, relaxation and entertainment.” She pouted, trying to ignore Silas’ snort of ridicule.

“I haven’t told you much about the event, have I?” Red mused aloud.

Elizabeth exchanged looks with Silas, his self satisfied, hers irritated.

“It’s an annual event, which I usually attend.” he began. “The only time that all rivalries and animosity is put aside.” he threw a warning glance at Silas. “Which is why your little friend here will not be attending this year.”

Silas seemed okay with exclusion.

“Call it holy ground, if you will.” Red continued. “There are competitions to eliminate any hostile aggressions which may be harbored,” once again Red’s eyes shifted to the innocent looking guard, “other challenges, which offer old scores might be settled in a more civilized manner. Fun is had by all.”

“So you’re saying that Dembe is training for one of these challenges, to settle a score?” she was dumbfounded because Dembe was not the type to hold a grudge, in her opinion.

“Dembe is competitive.” Red smiled. “You’ll understand when we get there.”

“But no one is really ever hurt seriously, in these little games?” she had to ask.

“Not permanently.” Red replied straight faced. “If you’re asking if we will be in danger, the answer is no. No more than normal, at least.”

“That’s not really encouraging.” she reminded. “You feel comfortable in the worst of slum areas.”

“True.” he acquiesced. “Then let me put it this way. Why would I take you if I thought you’d be in danger.” he patted her thigh consolingly. “I think you’ll have a nice time. Just keep in mind who you are, where we are and that there is always someone about.” he cautioned. “So remain cautious at all times.”

She tensed suddenly, her thoughts her own.

Red frowned at the sudden change, setting his glass aside. He stood slowly allowing the woman to regain her footing in her own time.

“Do you need me?” Silas placed his hands, linked together, atop his head.

“No, we’re staying in the rest of the night.” Red informed the head guard. “We’ll see you in the afternoon.”

Dembe waved from the far end of the pool before diving under. Silas stretched back, watching Red and Liz disappear into the darkness.

“Good, because I’m fucking bored.” Silas returned his interest to the dark man who was breaking the pool with smooth, effortless strokes. “Swim faster... like the time you did in the Florida Everglades when that gator was gaining on you,” he goaded.

Silas was in one of those moods.
Red opened the balcony doors allowing the fresh, cool mountain breeze inside. The drapes danced by the strong gust of air. Tossing back the blankets, he crawled into bed, relishing the comfort instantly. It had been a perfect day, just lazing around.

Aside from the whole Brad debacle that is.

He enjoyed purchasing things for the woman. What was money for if not to spend on something one enjoyed. They had ended an argument on a high note. Watching Lizzy have fun at the pool had been both entertaining and enlightening.

It had been a good day, indeed.

“What are you smiling for?” The woman climbed up into the bed, giving him an amazing view of her décolletage.

“Francis.” he shared his thoughts.

As she settled, he threw the blankets over her, turning on his side. Propping his head on his hand, he smiled down at her.

“The little troll.” She relaxed under the blankets, sighing happily. “Sticking ice down my backside.” She grumbled. “That was freaking cold.”

He nodded sagely, “How do you feel now?”

“I’m much warmer than I was earlier, I’ll say that much.” She turned on her other side, settling in to the cradle of his body.

Her cold bottom settled against his groin, instantly chilling him, and her feet were freezing.

“Why are you so cold?” He gingerly rubbed her hip and leg, generating heat.

“I think you’re used to me taking a shower before bed, but since I did before dinner...” Bunching the blankets in her fists, she snuggled under them. “Warm me up.”

Red felt his blood heat at the simple request. She couldn’t truly understand how much he wanted to... warm her up. But for now, he’d happily settle for cuddling her close.

“Better?” his arms embraced her in a loving cocoon.

“Hmmm.” She hummed sleepily.

The room fell silent, Red allowing the atmosphere to settle naturally. In less than a few minutes, the woman’s breathing out evened out somewhat. Reaching over head, Red hit the light switch, bathing the room in darkness.

After settling into the pillow, he sighed. “What has you worried?” he asked quietly.

“I don’t know what you mean.” she evaded.

“Are you nervous about Mark’s?” he fished. “You’ve done a wonderful job here.”

“I’ve had to stop myself, twice, from saying something about work in front of Francis.” she had not confided in him as yet, and her lapses were weighing on her mind.
“How did that come about?” he sensed she needed to speak on the matter.

“We were reading the paper. I noticed two cases the local Bureau is handling and shared the information with Francis.” she flipped to her back needing to read his expression. “I got mad when Francis said the perps wouldn’t be caught because the Feds here were useless.”

“Well, they are.” Red tightened his arm about her, covering her lips with his finger, silencing her effectively. “Baby, half of the Feds and Cops are on Mob payroll here.” he explained his statement.

“What?” she gaped her shock.

“Believe me when I say, Francis has inside information on the matter.” he spoke in general terms. “Don’t get me wrong, we have the highest regard for the cops usually.” he gestured. “Here, you’ve entered a whole new world.”

“You’re speaking as if it’s the fifties.” she pulled a face.

He chuckled at such innocence. “Once the mob gets a foothold, they don’t let go no matter what the movies or papers say.” he settled in more comfortably, her body warmed considerably now.

“So, Francis didn’t mean anything by what was said.” he kissed her forehead. “He’s just not a fan of dirty cops.”

“You think you all would be.” she stated the obvious. “I mean...”

“You can gain a cop’s loyalty without turning him to the dark side.” Red lifted noble brows. “For example, I saved one’s life in Utah a couple years back, now he owes me one. And only one.” he held up his index finger. “The dirty cops, that are paid to be loyal, will turn on you in a second.”

“What exactly,” she had to ask, “are the dynamics between you and Ressler?”

“Are estranged.” Red shrugged. “Lizzy, Ressler only sees me as a CI. We have a working relationship, nothing more.” his eyes softened when she seemed hurt by the idea. “If it makes you feel any better, a lot of the people I met in the service are like that with anyone outside their platoon.”

“I don’t understand.” she was honestly confused. “You’re all on the same side.”

“Yes, but your first worry is getting your men home.” he stressed. “You get to know these guys, they’re your family.”

“I don’t think I could do that.” she confessed. “Choose sides like that.”

“You did.” Red corrected quietly.

She genuinely seemed upset by the accusation. “What are you talking about?”

“When I was being held by the King family.” he jogged her memory. “There were a lot of other people being held captive in that room besides me...” he let the intent sink in.

“But I didn’t care.” realization hit the woman full force. “I just wanted to get you out.”

She could explain it away in her own mind, saying that she knew the Bureau was on the way and would rescue those other people. Or that it was her priority to protect her CI. But the troubling fact was, she was beginning to know the truth as opposed to a lie.

Liz wanted to save Red. That was her only focus. If she hadn’t gone back, he would have... died.
Moving closer to him, visions of her walking into that room, finding him with a gun to his head... her embrace tightened about his waist and she buried her face into the warmth afforded her.

The way he had said her name...

“That does not make you a bad person, Lizzy.” Red consoled. “You just naturally save your team first.” His large fingers gently massaged her neckline. “You will always do your job to the best of your ability, sweetheart.” His lips grazed the scented hair. “Don’t ever doubt that.”

Red set his chin on top of her head, rubbing her back soothingly. She clutched him tighter, closing her eyes to what might have been.

They fell silent, lazily stroking one another before he finally felt her growing heavier against him. Thankful that she didn’t let their discussion weigh on her.

Throwing a leg carelessly over his thigh, she slid closer, lifting her face, dropping a soft kiss against his lips.

“Did I forget to kiss you goodnight?” Red smiled warmly, cuddling her close, his mouth descending sensually.

She kissed him back just as gently, her little tongue darting out, flicking his upper lip. His mouth parted to receive the offering, letting her guide the moment.

If this was all they ever did, kiss and cuddle... the man knew he would be oddly content.

Just to be in her sphere, to experience that which was Elizabeth Keen, would be all he could ever ask for.

The rest... was a gift from God.

May 18

Red groaned irritably as he blindly reached for the phone, trying not to dislodge the woman sleeping so peacefully against him.

“Dammit...” He squinted blearily at the clock finding it nearing three in the morning. His fingers finally found the hard plastic of the phone, dragging it closer.

Lizzy mewled softly at the disturbance, her brow crinkling in her half sleep state.

“Shh, baby.” Red soothed, hoping he would not disturb her unduly. He flipped the phone open.

“What?” He hissed quietly.

He listened intently, his expression altering somewhat as the conversation proceeded.

He was silent a moment, then sighed more than heavily. “You what?” He bitched. “Where are you?” he bit the question out. He listened again this time, his expression speaking volumes. His hand fell aside, the phone still held securely within.

Red took a moment to gather his patience. “I’ll be there when I get there.” he grumbled back into the speaker when his annoyance had lessened. He listened yet again, his fingers drumming angrily on the blanket. “Fuck with me and I’ll leave you there.”

Slapping the phone closed, Red dropped his head back into the pillow, shaking his head at the absurdity of life.

“Of all the stupid...” he muttered tightly, jostling her gently as he reluctantly accepted his lot in life.

“What’s going on?” Lizzy questioned sleepily, struggling to a sitting position.

“Go back to sleep, sweetheart.” Red whispered, kissing her bare shoulder before sliding from the bed, grabbing his pants.

Liz blinked, clearing the fog. “No really, what’s wrong?” she sat up straighter, rubbing her eyes watching Red step into his pants.

The man smiled softly as the sheet fell, exposing her breasts to his view. He knew, intellectually, that they had an intimate relationship. But to see her sitting there naked and comfortable in his presence... it was a very nice reminder of what they were.

Liz frowned softly, her hands dropping heavily to the blankets, in acceptance of the inevitable. “What did Francis do now?”

Red laughed quietly, slipping into his shoes. “Oddly, it’s not Francis...this time.”

Liz was stumped.

“Silas has gotten himself into a bit of a bind.” he grinned, pulling his shirt over his head.

Liz instantly threw back the blankets, wanting to help in anyway she could.

“Sweetheart, get some sleep.” he suggested, his expression benign. “I’ll just be a half hour at most.”

She slid her butt off the bed determinedly. “He’s my friend too.”

She hurriedly searched out her clothes, missing Red’s smile when she bypassed her panties entirely, having slipped into the tight jeans, commando fashion.

There was something decidedly sexy about her actions. He could now see the faint imprint of her vulva lips outlined by the tight fabric and he had thought it erotic before she had even worked the jeans up over her bottom.

Breaking his intent gaze away from the captivating sight, he waited patiently for the woman to find her shoes.

Minutes later they were crossing the living room area heading for the exit.

“Hey...” Francis nodded at them, biting into his snack from the kitchen, his arrival on scene not only unexpected, but to Red’s way of thinking... bizarre, “where you guys going?”

“Better question,” Red looked at the boy, “why are you in our Villa’s kitchen... at three in the morning?”
“Well, that’s just rude.” the man was clearly unsettled by such a question. “Now, what’s up?” he dismissed the sensation easily.

“Gotta go save, Silas.” Liz hurried Red along.

Francis rushed after them, quick on Red’s heels. “What did he do this time?” he bit into the sandwich, trailing after them to the car. “And can I go?”

“Yes, ‘you can go’.” Red mimicked the overly excited manner of Francis’ enthusiasm.

“Shotgun!” Francis shouted out, rushing for the front passenger seat.

“Dammit!” Liz tsked her annoyance, cursing her own lack of forethought.

“Baby, you can ride up front if you want.” Red not so subtly reminded Francis more so than the woman.

“No...” she sighed reluctantly, her pout affecting the man more than he wanted to admit, “he called it before I did.”

The way she said it, Red knew that the game had been played before and it made him wonder what the hell happened when he wasn’t at home.

Red headed for the driver’s seat, pulling up short as he noted Francis’ peculiar scowl, he frowned right back.

“What?” he snapped, this night was not going as he hoped.

“I don’t recall ever seeing you drive before.” the young man was somewhat mystified.

A hand came out of nowhere, smacking Francis across the back of the head. “Hey!” he turned around rubbing the spot gingerly, his expression sullen. “It was a legitimate concern.”

“Concern?” Red prompted peevishly.

“Seatbelt...” Liz grumbled from the back seat, still smarting from her loss of the favored seat.

Though both men faced death on a daily basis, facing Lizzy’s wrath was something both wanted to avoid if at all possible. Francis buckled his seatbelt.

“Silas is in a bit of a pickle,” Red slid into the interstate traffic, “as I understand it, while Dembe is somewhere in the vicinity, he is refusing any aid at this time.”

Francis, sensing their direction, grinned. “They’re down on Freemont?”

“At the Golden Nugget or The Four Queens.” Red confirmed, before whipping around a slow car, putting on the gas. “Silas couldn’t remember.”

“When that man lets his hair down,” Francis was visibly impressed, “he really goes for it.”

Liz turned her head, staring avidly at the new sights afforded her. She just loved all the flashing lights of the bustling city. The town literally never slept, leaving her feeling alive and energized whenever she saw it.

She peered over to her right, following Francis’ line of vision, taking in ‘Old Vegas’.
She would have love to have seen Vegas in its heyday, when Gangsters and Crooners ruled the city. When people dressed up to do everything from have dinner to attending a show.

Then, women were elegant in their tailored dresses, while the men wore suits and fedoras. Liz smiled warmly at the man in front of her, suddenly missing his trademark hat.

She had seen a small taste of what it might have been like with the access granted her in the VIP sections. While everyone had a fun time and shared more than a few laughs, there was also a sense of decorum and manners.

All day, when they had switched tables or sat down for a meal, gentlemen pulled out chairs for the ladies. They had stood as a woman would leave or return to a table. They held open doors.

It was a very foreign experience for her, but one she had enjoyed very much.

Nothing had changed much in the last seventy years, if what Red said was true about the city still being run by the Mob underground.

But the classiness of the city, aside from those private areas, was all but gone.

Now, everyone looked as though they literally rolled out of bed. Street performers invaded your space in hopes of a buck. And people on every corner handed out nude pictures of prostitutes available for hire.

Again, every one had to make a living, but it had been annoying a time or two. They had gone out last night to visit the volcano. She and Red had been sharing a very private moment when some variation of the before mentioned, had rudely invaded their space.

She had not appreciated their efforts or timing.

“We’ll hit the Four Queens first.” Red waved some pedestrians across an intersection before swinging up into the Golden Nugget valet area, on South Casino.

“Red, this is the Golden Nugget.” Liz gestured to the lettering on the doors.

“I know, but the Valet for the Queens is around the corner, down a block...” he rolled his hand, gesturing, meaning a long explanation was forthcoming, one he did not want to bother with.

Tipping the Valet, Red took her hand, the three of them walking across the street to the opposite hotel.

“Wait here.” They had entered the still elegant foyer, Red gestured to the elevators before heading to the front desk.

As he talked to the clerk, Liz glanced around her surroundings. While not as jaw dropping as her own accommodations, there was a certain charm she found captivating.

She watched as a clerk slyly slid something across the counter where Red was standing. The man turned and she noted a wad of bills laying in his wake. The clerk nonchalantly pocketed his prize.

“Did you get the access card?” Francis enquired. Red nodded pointing to the elevators, beginning their trek.

“Where are we going?” she followed along willingly.

“He’s in a Suite.” Red explained, sliding the keycard along the card reader.
“I saw how you got that.” Liz threw an accusing glance Red’s way. The man tilted his head at her, his expression saying it all.

“What room number?” Francis asked, stepping into the empty elevator.

“I have it.” Red replied. “It’s a suite... now we have to guess which hotel.”

“A description of the room would have narrowed it down.” Francis bitched.

“Hey, you wanted to come along, stop bitchin’.” Liz reminded.

“His phone was dying.” Red sighed. “Apparently, he’s been putting the video and picture features to use.”

Francis now nodded knowingly, “Ahh...”

They rode up to the top floors quickly, found the room number, and Red knocked discreetly.

The door flew open after a noticeable hesitation to reveal an older, pissed off gentlemen whose complexion verged on apoplexy.

“What!” the man snapped his fury.

“Wrong room.” Red took the moment in stride.

“What the hell... do you think your doing knocking on my door at–”

Francis discreetly lifted his shirt allowing the man a brief glimpse of the weapon that was always by his side. The man’s eyes widened with shock as he rudely shut the door in their faces, a distinct click of the lock and bolt of the door alerting them to the fact... the incident was closed and forgotten.

Francis grinned at Liz’s expression, “I have an open carry.”

“And why is it necessary—” she hissed.

“Well, not legally.” Francis admitted, cutting the inquisition short. “But I’m among friends, right?”

“So, the Nugget it is.” Red turned on his heel, having completely disregarded Francis’ handling of the matter.

They made their way back downstairs, Red slowing his stride to match Lizzy’s smaller steps.

“And Dembe isn’t hunting for our wayward friend... why?” Francis asked as they pushed their way out the hotel doors.

“Dembe told him he had to wait.” They crossed back across the street to their original destination. “He was on a roll...” Red cast a pointed look, his meaning clear enough.

“I’ll be right back.” The process was repeated again, another wad of money exchanged. Liz cast a disapproving glance the desk clerk’s way but other than that, held her peace.

“That is one big ass piece of gold.” she gestured to a display holding what was presumably the second largest Golden Nugget found in the entire world.

Francis crept closer, squinting at the shiny object. “I know people who would attach that to a necklace and wear it as is.”
Liz laughed quietly at the mental picture painted.

They found the room quickly enough. Red went to swipe the keycard, but Liz’s hand stilled his action.

“What if he isn’t here either.” she whispered anxiously. “Do we want to give another old man a heart attack.” she looked accusingly at Francis.

“He’s here.” Red swiped the card, hesitating. “Lizzy, you should stay out here.”

Liz shook her head vigorously. “No way!”

Francis chimed in, “You really should stay here.” he pointed to the spot. “Trust me on this one.”

“I am not going to stay here.” she was more than positive. Both men exchanged cryptic looks.

She followed closely on their heels as they entered the spacious suite. The city was laid out in all it’s brilliance behind a wall of windows. The dark looming shape of a mountain range silhouetted against a velvet blue background, the stars blocked out by the infamous neon lights.

Red got his bearings, his eyes lifting to the second landing, unmistakable sounds filtering down the winding staircase.

Francis cleared his throat, somewhat awkwardly suddenly interested in the décor. He looked anywhere except to the woman beside him.

“Lizzy...” Red’s tone held a hint of warning as the sounds above them became more pronounced. “I should really handle this.”

Francis’ face twisted as he tried to keep his perspective. He clenched his mouth tightly, the creased indentures along his handsome face suddenly more pronounced.

For the woman’s part, all she heard was the sounds of a slight struggle and the unmistakable clink of metal against metal which fairly alarmed her.

“Red why are we just standing here?”

The man sighed, taking the steps two at a time, hoping to arrive on scene well ahead of Elizabeth. His hand tightened slightly on the railing as he came level with the second floor.

Silas’ body held a thin sheen of perspiration, as he thrust heatedly forward and back. A woman’s shapely thigh held fast to his buttocks. Red could see a beautiful set of breasts bouncing enticingly between the space that sometime separated the two lovers.

The woman was upright against the back of a curved chair which sat beside the large master bed. The man’s arm was wrapped around her waist, easily lifting and lowering her into his pumping action.

His free hand supported the negligible weight easily for his purpose. Red said ‘free’ in the sense that the other hand was handcuffed to a lamp just behind the top portion of the makeshift sex surface.

Red stopped in his tracks, human enough to just stare for a second.

He was not staring at what was taking place, but rather a large feather plume, much like what adorned the Showgirls costumes, which was weaving hypnotically about. The apparatus sat proudly on Silas’ head.
He felt Francis come alongside him as the young man too, pulled up short, his mouth dropping agape.

The two foot tall mountain of feathers moved lyrically as Silas thrust into his very willing partner. The heavy headpiece staying in place even as he quickened his movements.

Silas dropped his head into the woman’s shoulder, groaning raspingly. “...Fuck, that feels good.” He cupped the woman’s ass, pushing her harder into his deepened thrusts.

“Come for me, baby...” Silas crooned. “Take me there.”

The woman nodded quickly, curling her fingers around the back of the man’s neck for added support as she complied with the raspy request.

He captured the woman’s mouth in a deep heated kiss. He bounced his partner hard and fast off his shaft while suckling her breasts hungrily as the cuffs clinked loudly against the metal base of the lamp.

It took only seconds before the amorous couple reached their peak.

Red heaved a sigh of relief because Francis had managed to block Elizabeth’s passage way up to this point.

Silas slumped in a sweaty, breathless tangle of limbs against the chair which cradled him and his partner.

“You couldn’t fucking wait?” Red snapped, advancing up the stairs, ignoring the gasp of indignation issued from the little blondes mouth as she realized, she and Silas had just put on a free show. “...I told you I was on my way.”

Silas kinked his body this way and that, yanking the sheet off the nearby bed, tossing it over the blonde’s nudity.

“You pass the time your way,” Silas glanced over to the new arrivals, “I’ll pass it mine.”

“Hide your balls,” Francis advised sagely, “there is a woman in house, oddly not interested in seeing them. Go figure.” he glanced back at a rapidly advancing ‘woman’.

Liz’s mouth dropped open, as she barely cleared the top of the landing.

Silas lay on his side in a swooping brown leather chair, a woman huddled beside him. Liz’s eyes widened at his nudity.

The man seemed have no qualms concerning his nakedness, but he did as Francis bid, none to subtly shifting his... things, from her view. Leaving her an unobstructed view of the man’s entire bare backside.

Red had opened a little pouch, fiddling with a tiny instrument. “Maybe next time, you will heed my advice.” he glanced over to a completely stunned individual. “You want to go downstairs now?”

Liz’s expression grew even more quizzical as she noted the large pink feather on top of a headdress which adorned Silas’ thick skull.

While this sort of... predicament, was nothing new to either Red or Francis. It was clearly a complete shock to Lizzy.
“The blanket, idiot.” Francis helpfully reminded, whereupon Silas leisurely pulled a portion over his lower body.

Red made his way around the cramped position, crouching between the wall and the chair in which Silas reposed. Pulling his lock pick free, he began the task at hand.

“Why didn’t you pick it yourself?” Francis queried. “It’s a lamp...” he gestured to the light object they were bound to, “not an anvil.”

Silas yanked at the tall gold lamp, not budging it an inch. “It appears to be bolted to the floor.”

“Oh...” Francis shrugged, before pushing at a lamp beside him, which was also stuck in place. “What the hell? Who steals a fucking lamp?”

“I heard some woman on Family Feud say something about taking a lamp from a hotel.” Liz muttered lamely, the conversation seeming odd to her own ears. Her eyes pulled to the naked leg of her guard before she hastily averted her stare.

Silas pointed, “I couldn’t reach mine.” His jeans lay on the floor across the way, his own lock pick set securely tucked in his back pocket.

Red shook his head, aggravated. “It’s going to be difficult to do this with all this racket.” he bitched staring moodily at the cuffs.

“Don’t give me that shit...” Silas disdained, “you could do this blindfolded.”

“And has.” Francis piped in. “Remember the time in Madrid when you and that little–”

“Shut up, Francis.” both Red and Silas spoke in unison. Silas motioned to Liz as if to say, ‘his girl is in the room’.

Francis took exception. “Oh like it’s fine that she sees your naked ass though?”

Liz tried valiantly to look everywhere but at the display, but her eyes continuously flitted back to the debacle. It was as if she were witnessing a car wreck in progress. One simply could not look away.

Red felt the give of a cuff, sighing with relief as it let go.

Silas yanked, breaking the cuff free of his wrist.

Red peered up over the chair, amused at Lizzy’s reaction to everything happening around her. Her complexion was bright red and she was striving so hard for sophistication. And failing miserably.

Perhaps had it been anyone else but her personal guard, she might have reacted differently.

Red popped the second cuff open.

“Oh, thank you ever so!” the little blonde gratefully acknowledged Red’s handiwork, taking the pre-offered handcuff as she slid to the edge of the chair, standing without a care as the sheet fell away from the very well endowed form.

Red kept his gaze on the pretty blue eyes as he watched the young woman flounce happily away.

Patting her bottom affectionately, Silas shooed her to the large bed all the while attempting to keep the sheet tucked around her body to little avail. He arose, following suit. Forgetful in his haste, to address his own nudity.
Francis hastily stepped, blocking Liz’s field of vision but not before the woman covered her eyes with a gasp of shock and dismay.

“Yes that’s right,” Francis saved the day, or did he, “he’s part Jewish. I’m sure we’re all pleased to note that.”

“I certainly was.” the girl piped up from the bed, smiling flirtatiously up at Silas as he approached. She shook her full breasts slightly, hoping to entice and entertain.

Red lifted a cautious brow, arising from his position grinning slightly at Silas’ rejoinder.

“Oh, I’m coming baby.” the guard promised, slipping in beside his little minx, laying the sheet over their bodies.

“Nice hat...” Francis remarked casually, hoping to remind the other man of priorities. “Let me guess, you’re a Showgirl?” he addressed the woman directly, making pleasant conversation.

She shook her head, a quizzical expression appearing on the pretty face “…No.”

Silas waved a hand across his throat, which signaled Francis to ‘shut his damn mouth’.

Liz gaped at Red, understanding dawning on her. Silas had slept with a Showgirl before he ended up with this woman.

How long had he been out tonight?! Red’s cryptic words came back to haunt her at such a moment. He had been right all along... Silas was a slut!

“Have you been wearing that the whole time.” Francis was curious.

“It tickles.” the woman giggled, stroking Silas’ chest, most specifically, his nipple. Her intent clear.

Red placed his hand on Lizzy’s back, guiding her towards the stairs. “I take it, you’re staying?” he enquired of the guard.

“You said I wasn’t on shift until the afternoon.” the man reminded, maneuvering himself over the now prone woman.

Working his thigh between the warm valley, he settled comfortably in the luscious cradle, grunting his contentment. The woman beneath him giggled as the feathers of his head dress brushed against her breasts and throat, as he assumed the position.

“Just checking...” Red called back over his shoulder, “come along, Francis.”

“Huh?” the young man blinked, breaking his attention which had been focused entirely on the couple. “Oh, right. Well,” he address the amorous pair, “don’t do anything I wouldn’t do.”

“And don’t use the damn cuffs again!” Red barked back up the stairs.

“On her?” Silas called back, though his voice was muffled for obvious reasons when the woman’s giggle turned into a long, breathy moan.

Liz hustled down the stairs, as fast as she possibly could but she could discern the metallic click of the cuffs being engaged over the subtle sound of Red’s soft laughter despite all she could do.

“I’m not coming back, Silas.” Red warned as he opened the door, ushering Liz out into the silent hall.
“Speaking of coming...” the guard gritted, as the woman with him let them all know she was enjoying her evening just fine.

Red’s chuckle echoed down the hallway as he watched Lizzy book ass, jabbing the elevator button repeatedly when she finally arrived at her destination.

Francis shut the door behind him, blocking out the sounds of the amorous couple. He checked with his cohort in crime, “I wish I could relax like that.”

Red smiled at the quip, noting Liz had already bolted into the now open elevator, waving frantically for them to join her as fast as humanly possible. He pointedly kept silent the entire time it took to reach the Valet parking area.

“Dembe,” Red had thought to check on his other friend, “are you handcuffed anywhere in the city?” he held his laughter at the man’s reply but just barely. “Just be sure your pants are in reach.”

Liz and Francis exchanged quizzical looks. They returned to the Villa, each headed for their respective quarters.

“I don’t know about you...” Francis grinned lecherously, “but I think I’m going to see if Lia is up for a little–”

“We get the picture.” Red interrupted the narrative, jerking his head to indicate ‘get the hell away from me, I’ve had enough’.

Francis snickered as he walked away, “And to all a good night.”

“Good night, Francis.” Liz replied distractedly.

Red guided her to the room, softly shutting the door behind them. “Quite an eye opener, hum?” he asked of her mood in his own way.

“Yeah...” she shrugged, “I mean, it was weird, but we’re all adults here, right?” she hesitated in her steps, looking back at Red. “You know, it’s funny,” she crinkled her nose. “I knew he had cuffs of course. Why did I never think of him using them in such a manner.”

Red remained moot on the subject.

“Were they having sex in that chair?”

“...Yes.” he nodded.

“How does that work?” she questioned, then flushed. “I mean, I know how, I meant...” she sighed, “it looked... awkward.”

“No different than having sex against a wall or headboard.” Red pulled his shirt off over head, tossing it to the chair beside him.

Liz closed her eyes, visualizing how it could be done, only to open her eyes a moment later to find Red standing just a foot away. He unceremoniously dropped his pants, his eyes deepening considerably.

“Would you like me to show you?” he asked, as he pushed his boxers down, his erection bobbing free from it’s confinement.

He reached out, dragging her against his waiting chest. His thick fingers moved over the plump ass cheek, as he greedily ground against her abdomen. His breath quickened as he remembered she wasn’t wearing a stitch of clothing under those tight jeans.

Liz sighed her contentment, feeling his straining shaft push against her body. The man slowly walked them backwards until her thighs hit the arm of the couch.

Red grinned, popping the button of her pants, seductively sliding the zipper over her flat stomach, pushing the tight fabric off, revealing her bare ass.

Liz startled slightly, feeling the cool leather meet her heated flesh.

Red tugged on the offending material. Pulling downward revealed that very secret place he loved so much. It’s fragrant scent called to him.

He played in the soft down of her pubic hair, his tongue sliding into the recesses of the hidden alcove as he worked her jeans further down her shapely legs.

She palmed Red’s head to steady herself. A moment later, he lifted her leg, settling it over his shoulder, his tongue delving deeper between her legs, expertly torturing her quickly throbbing sex.

Red felt himself harden with the first taste of her arousal. Flicking her faster, he was granted the sweet cream he needed.

Breaking the moment, he smiled softly as her groan of disappointment turned into the sweetest mewl he had ever heard, when his hardness brushed against her thigh, taking her breath away.

Sliding his stiff erection along her swelling sex, he removed her top with deft fingers.

“You didn’t answer the question?” he stated, even as he slid a condom on over his raging hard on.

“Yes, thank you ever so.” she replied breathlessly, pushing herself against his bulbous crown.

He chuckled his appreciation of her wit.

Liz clutched his arms as the man lifted her abruptly, sitting her ass on the arm of the couch. He ran his hands down her arms, deepening his kiss. She looked down quickly as she felt a slip of silk wrap around her wrists, binding them together.

“Just recreating the scene...” Red rumbled deeply.

Liz watched as he looped the last bit, tucking it securely.

“Do you trust me, Lizzy?” he asked, sensing her nervousness.

“...Yes.”

“Pull your hands apart.” he suggested.

She gave a gentle experimental tug, the tie coming free easily. Red caught it, securing it quickly back in place.

“It’s just an illusion.” the sensual quietness washed over her.

She trusted Red implicitly, but that trust suddenly soared to new heights.

She gripped the tie, allowing herself to get caught up in this wondrous illusion. Being bound, the experience, heightened her arousal.

Leaning her back into the slope of the couch, Red dragged her ass to the edge as the woman’s slim legs found purchase over Red’s arm and a side table. The frantic movements displacing a vase to the carpeted floor.

Stepping into the space afforded him, his cock instantly sought out her heat, allowing him to ease into the molten depths in one long, slow continuous stroke.

“Good?” he groaned as his body fit perfectly against hers. “That feels... so fucking good.” he panted.

“Oh, hell yeah...” Liz whispered huskily, as the man steadily rocked his thick erection in a frenetic rhythm that had her legs already quaking. She scratched at his chest with her fingers, drawing a groan from the man’s throat. “So good...”

So good in fact, both instantly forgave Silas for his late night transgressions. There was something to be said about the primitive aspect of the mating ritual.

Red and Elizabeth were exploring the possibilities of such an outlet.

Just wanted to give a shout out to the readers leaving kudos and following the story! I see you guys and thank you for your support!

May 18

The following day brought more than a few surprises.

They took a drive to a private residence where some of the pre-wedding festivities would be hosted within the sprawling estate, according to Red. The owner was a friend of the groom’s, having offered up the expansive venue as a wedding gift.

As Red escorted Liz through the gorgeous gardens, she tried hard not to gawk at her surroundings. The landscaping was lush and green, keeping in mind, they were in the middle of a desert. The surrounding acreage was peaceful and tranquil.

Liz inhaled deeply, relishing the sweet scent of foliage from desert cacti to the most delicate flowers imaginable.

Crossing a bridge which traversed a waterfall and babbling brook, she attempted to control her smile of growing excitement. A gigantic swimming pool wrapped around the majority of the entire house. It was the most amazing sight the woman had yet to see in Vegas. Such luxury stunned her senses.

The grounds were littered with tents and tables, waiters mingled with the large crowd of guests, carrying huge trays of delectable delicacies.

Fancy food stations lined the entire west wall of the massive structure.

It was quite a set up. The rolling hills were a gorgeous back drop for guests with every type of food one could possibly want, right at your fingertips. It all smelled so heavenly, Liz found her appetite returning with a vengeance.

The large open tents held arcade style games enticing the more adventuresome. Games of horseshoes, croquet and lawn bowling were intermixed throughout.

If it wasn’t for the women in light airy dresses, obviously of designer origins, Liz would have thought she was at a country fair. Men in summer suits, most of them having discarded their jackets of course, dotted the landscape for as far as the eye could see. Many guests also frolicked in the pool.

“I’m starving.” Francis sniffed at the air, focusing in on a tent offering Gyro’s.

“You just ate.” Red was astonished, his expression saying as much. He checked with Elizabeth to confirm his hypothesis that there was something definitely wrong with Francis, finding her too, eagerly checking out the passing food trays.

He chuckled, his opinion on the matter altering somewhat. Settling his hand on her back, he ushered her over to a nearby delicacy, ordering up one for her... and himself.

The smell had been too damn enticing after all.

“IT’s all this fresh mountain air.” Red concluded.

Francis pushed his way through the couple before Red could order, holding up two fingers, signifying a ‘double’ order of the fare offered.

“Well, look who we have stumbled upon.” Red had ignored the young man’s rudeness, as was his way, having nodded in the direction needed.

Elizabeth sank her teeth into a scrumptious bite, obediently following his field of vision.

Dembe sat, looking really cool in a grey suit and sunglasses, at one of the nearby tables sat up for any weary guest. In his right hand, he sipped a cup of coffee, his left held aloft a copy of a J.D Salinger novel. A half eaten breakfast sandwich lay waiting on an expensive plate.

As they approached, Liz struggled to manage her own plate and heavy purse which she insisted upon bringing. “Haven’t these people ever heard of paper plates? I’m afraid I’m going to break this thing.”

Red laughed around his next bite of food. Stopping in his tracks slowly, having really focused on the black man who had stood with Elizabeth’s approach, he scrutinized Dembe’s demeanor and appearance for some few seconds without saying a word.

If the large man was uncomfortable, one would never have guessed from his manner.

“Good morning, Elizabeth... Raymond.” his accent always lent a charm to any moment. “And others.” the dark eyes twinkled as Dembe noted the late arrival of Francis Holbrook. “You are looking radiant today,” he returned his attention to the woman. “As usual.”

“Well, thank you, Dembe.” Francis managed around a mouthful of food.

“He meant me.” Red quipped, handing over a napkin to his young friend.

Liz chuckled softly for Red’s good mood. “Thank you, Dembe.” she cast Red an annoyed look. “You’re the only one to notice my new dress.”

“I’ve noticed other things.” Red’s eyes swept her figure appreciatively. “Dembe, you are looking somewhat radiant yourself.” he returned to his previous thoughts.

“I have passed a very relaxed morning.” was Dembe’s response.

Elizabeth sensed something pass between each man. “What are you guys up to? What did I miss?” she allowed Red to assist her with her seat, sitting the fragile looking china down ever so carefully.

“Something’s up.”

“Well,” Red lifted knowledgeable eyes to a placid Dembe, “not any longer.”

Francis guffawed, slapping the large man on the back. Dembe shifted a cool stare but allowed the unheard of action good- naturedly for once.

Liz was getting antsy, unaccustomed to being excluded from the moment.

“He got laid, twit.” Francis artfully supplied the missing piece of the equation, his plate tinkling dangerously as he practically flung it on the unforgiving surface of the table.

Elizabeth gasped her shock, watching Dembe saunter across the wide space to refill his coffee cup. “Oh, my...”

Dembe was an attractive man. Why it surprised her that he might be interested in such things, she could not have said at the moment.

Dembe was Dembe, an extension of Red Reddington. He was an enigma. Silent, seemingly brooding, but she knew how infectious his laugh could be, how quick the dark eyes could find amusement with the slightest provocation.

Liz was suddenly so pleased. “Oh, I’m so glad.” that Dembe had found a little happiness in life.

“So is he.” Red grinned around the coffee cup Dembe had brought him.

“You are speaking of me, I presume?” the man found his seat, his expression benign.

“We were telling her you got laid.” Francis hurried over the faux pas, ignoring Dembe’s annoyed glance. “Hey, we all got lucky in Vegas. It’s my kind of town.”

“That’s Chicago... according to Sinatra.” Red hummed the tune to Liz’s amazement, his tone very pleasing to the ear.

Dembe cast a scolding glance around the table.

“It’s okay Dembe,” Liz defended her friend, “they’re just being crude.” She threw Red a questioning glare for his cavalier behavior.

“I can just tell, Lizzy.” Red defended his stance, still attempting to annoy Dembe somewhat. “It’s in how he walks, the set of those broad shoulders...” he motioned accordingly, his eyes twinkling mischievously, “I can smell her perfume.”

“I bathed.” Dembe took offense with Elizabeth’s presence, his tone censored.

“I lied about that one.” Red granted.

Elizabeth could not be anything but content. Red seemed totally relaxed today. He would sometimes tease Dembe, more so than any other of his friends, but Liz was beginning to know it meant, his mood was light and carefree.

“What the hell are you?” she grunted around her Gyro, turning on the man anyway though. “You have the ears of a bat, the nose of a blood hound... super human powers, huh?” she questioned. “Let me guess, you can see through my dress.”

Red stared over at the woman’s torso, making her fidget under his intense scrutiny. “You’re wearing...” he mused thoughtfully, “a matching pink bra and panty set, trimmed in white lace.”

“Ohh.” Francis cackled his delight for the woman’s mouth had fallen agape once again, her astonishment complete.

Red discreetly placed a hand over his mouth, to hide his smile, for the woman had automatically looked down at herself, as if checking his facts before lifting shock filled eyes.

“I most certainly am not.” she lied.
“Hey Red,” Francis wasn’t buying it, “be honest with me, she’s a natural blonde.” He took a sip of his wine. “Am I right?” his own eyes were gentle with good natured teasing.

“That is a question, son...” Red playfully warned the man, “to which you will never have the answer.”

“Not if you live to be four thousand, which you won’t.” Liz snapped. “Because I’m going to kill your ass.” her fists clenched, her temper flaring but she lost the mood as quickly as it had arisen. “If there weren’t so many damned witnesses about.”

Dembe laid a gentle hand over the woman’s small fists. “You are picking up on the ways of our world.”

Red’s chuckle felt good as it washed over the object of his affection.

Liz settled instantly. “Francis, stop being such an asshole... as difficult as that may be for you.” She suggested strongly, swiping her hand out, smacking him across his arm, directly over his ‘flesh wound’.

“Ohw...” Francis rubbed the wound. “No offense meant, just curious by nature... and that hurt.”

“Good.” the woman sat back, satisfied for a moment but something was still irritating her. She cast Red an annoyed look.

“I didn’t say it.” Red reminded, knowing the ‘look’ well.

“She’s still wondering how you knew the answer to her probing enquiry.” Francis sensed, leaning in as if to confide in Liz alone. “You didn’t think maybe, he saw you getting dressed this morning? A guy notices such things.” he drawled.

“I knew that.” she half-heartedly defended herself.

Francis wasn’t buying that one either.

“You are charmingly naïve concerning a few subjects.” Red corrected. “A fact I personally, find very...” his eyes deepened considerably, “endearing.”

“Good save.” Francis approved, returning to his food with a relish, the matter ended to his way of thinking.

“I saw your lingerie laid out this morning.” Red ended the woman’s torment, holding his smile admirably.

“I knew that.” Liz pulled an endearing face, dismissing the man in the next instance, her attention taken by all the activity about her. “...What’s going on over there?” she craned her neck as a crowd was developing across the way.

Red adjusted himself in his seat, even as the rest for a better look.

Large targets were being set up down the long stretch of lawn at the far end of the green expanse. Several men were looking over the laid out equipment, testing the weight and balance of the compound bows.

“Archery?” Liz was fascinated by the diversity exhibited.

A large umbrella shielded the group from a mild early sun as they watched the proceedings.
“It’s my understanding this was how the bride and groom met.” Red offered a lackadaisical explanation.

“But any form of rivalry is welcomed.” Dembe explained the deeper meaning behind the gathering of such diverse individuals.

The minor competitions grew as the different personalities of those competing emerged.

“Hey,” a thought occurred to Liz, “where’s Lia?”

Francis reseated himself, having half arisen for a better look as a female took position at one of the first starting lines.

“She’s wasting her time.” he concluded.

"With you? Most assuredly." Red quipped.

"Not Lia..." Francis huffed, drawing a smile from Red. "Her." he pointed out to the woman archer.

“A chauvinistic viewpoint.” Dembe pointed out.

“Nah,” Francis reassured, “I’ve just seen her shoot, she’s worse than me.” it was dismissed. “Lia is with her girlfriends.” Francis yawned, stretching out the kinks in his neck. “They’re getting some last minute things for her friend’s wedding. I’ll pick her up shortly.”

Liz tugged on Red’s sleeve, leaning to share a confidential moment with him. “Were we supposed to bring a gift to this thing as well as the formal...”

“I have a gift.” Red patted the outside of his jacket over the padded wallet within.

“Oh, Red.” she chided. “Something personal.”

“The larger the denomination, the more personal thought attached.”

Liz sighed heavily.

“Today was just to give guests something to do that will keep them from killing one another in the interim.” He delivered blandly.

“So they give them sharp objects?” Liz screwed up her face comically.

“We’re a competitive lot.” Francis beamed happily.

“Take these two for instance.” Red gestured to the two present players, taking their place at the ‘shoot’ line. “John, the man in the blue shirt,” he motioned accordingly, “lost his boat to Andrew in their last poker game. John is trying to win it back.”

The man in question released the arrow, getting damn near to the center of the target.

“And he seems to be doing well in his endeavors.” Red lifted impressed brows.

“Is this what you meant about personal grudges being fixed during these competitions?” Liz asked. “It all seems so...” She hesitated, searching for the correct term.

“I think the word you’re looking for is, civilized.” Red shrugged, checking with the new arrival on scene. “We’re speaking about your place.” he filled in for Mark Donovan, who sat in an empty seat, making himself comfortable.

“So... winner takes all, no hard feelings? No fighting?” Liz was skeptical, nodding her hello to Mark.

“Well... there was a scuffle a while back.” Red shrugged, then looked at Mark. “When was this... I’m thinking last year.” he checked with Mark, but the man was vague in his reply. His own memory faulty on the subject.

“Don’t leave me hanging here.” Liz leaned eagerly into the table, waiting for the story to unfold. “What happened?”

“This guy, Paul Wise, didn’t know when to quit. Kept betting. His car, house, plane.” Red settled into the story. “The other man, Bill Schaffer, tried backing out gracefully with each wager, allowing Paul to save face but he was a sore loser with a hot temper.”

Mark nodded recalling the incident, finally.

“When Bill went to leave,” Red continued, “Paul pushed for double or nothing.” he shook his head disgustedly. “Bill, being tired of the game and Paul’s poor attitude offered an unfortunate remark concerning Paul’s not having much else to wager, except maybe his wife.”

“Which intimated Paul would have no compulsion about making such a bet.” the distaste was apparent in Mark’s statement.

Liz’s attention was rapt. “What happened!”

“Fists flew, poker chips went flying, as did my drink all over my hat.” Red was still perturbed, that had been his favorite hat after all. “It took six of us to break them apart.”

“You got in the middle of it?” Liz was somehow not surprised.

“It was either that or offer them a seat in my lap.” Red waved to the object in question.

“You were a participant at the game?”

“No, a spectator.” he mused. “But I had ring side seating, apparently.”

“Was that the end of it?”

“Paul wouldn’t back off...” Francis shrugged, sipping his drink. “So Dembe knocked him out cold... one punch.” the young man demonstrated, by punching Dembe in the arm in open camaraderie.

Dembe shifted a menacing glance which stated succinctly, ‘don’t touch me’.

Liz gaped, sharing her new reverence for the individual. “Look at you...”

“Dembe’s up.” Red pointed out the fact. The man inclined his head regally, rising slowly. He made his way to the ‘starting’ point.

Francis and Mark arose from their own seats, eager to take in the spectacle.

“This should be fun,” Red mentioned offhandedly, “he’s never done it before.”

“Have you?” Liz was curious.

“I enjoy archery.” Red responded, his interest still with Dembe.
“Then why aren’t you playing?” the woman asked.

“I wanted to relax today.” Red chuckled because Dembe’s arrow had gotten away from the man, hitting entirely outside the target.

Red held his amusement. Dembe’s next attempt slowed mid-way down the course, falling into a drooping arch, sticking straight in the ground, a foot away from the target.

The large black man turned his frustration to Red, holding the bow out, arms wide, silently asking what the hell?

Red and Francis respectively gave the man a golf clap in open support. Mark on the other hand, gave an enthusiastic thumbs up. Dembe gave them a two finger salute in response... an obscene gesture he had picked up in Europe.

He loaded his next arrow, oblivious to the gentle laughter erupting throughout the gathered crowd.

Red could see the humor in the situation, as he fell back into his chair his shoulders shaking with mirth, “Speaking of sore losers.”

Three arrows later, none of which hit their target, Dembe conceded defeat of sorts, rejoining them at the table. “There is something wrong with that bow.”

“The user, perhaps?” Red quipped.

“Hey, we didn’t see you up there.” Liz defended Dembe.

“I can’t win at everything, Lizzy.” Red remarked, tongue-in-cheek. “It wouldn’t be fair to the others.”

“You’re so full of shit Reddington.” Liz rolled her eyes.

Red sat his glass down, standing. “I know doubt when I hear it.” he proclaimed.

He walked up to Christopher, the man in charge of the event, gesturing meaningfully. He then confided something that had the other man laughing easily.

Red made his way through the spectators, receiving back slaps and gentle chides of camaraderie as he made his way back to the group.

“I’m up after these guys.” he pointed to the men now shooting.

“This would be an ideal time to wager for something you really want, Red.” Mark remarked innocently, not so subtly jerking his head in Liz’s direction.

“You think I need to make a wager to get what I want?” Red questioned.

“He’s so cocky.” Francis stated to any and all.

“Never mind about my cock.” Red snapped. “And what is it with you people wagering on every little thing under the heavens.”

“I’ll bet you.” Liz sat up, ready to take him on.

Red looked at Liz, his face expressionless. Dembe discreetly lowered his own head.
There was a part of the man that wanted to make that bet. But what he wanted most in the world from her, he wouldn’t make a wager on. It was far too personal a subject for such frivolity.

“Well, what’ll it be?” Liz leaned forward, her hand held out, ready to shake on it.

Red looked at the hand, his eyes softening considerably.

Christopher whistled sharply, catching Red’s attention, the moment broken. It was his turn to shoot.

Red gripped her fingers, turning them in his large hand, placing a kiss on the soft skin.

He sat his fedora upon Lizzy’s head. “Hold that.”

Francis and Mark looked after the retreating man, nudging each other knowingly. Dembe only settled more into his chair, his face just as expressionless as Red’s had been, when the ‘bet’ had been called into question.

“I think he was going to shoot for that ever elusive anal sex.” Francis remarked pseudo seriously. “What say you, Dembe?”

Dembe smiled, then quietened. “He’s been wanting a new boat.”

Mark scoffed, drinking from his tumbler. “That was not the face of a man after a new boat.”

“A new dock to park his dinghy, maybe.” Francis cackled.

“You guys disgust me.” Liz finally having found her voice.

“That man wanted to do something to you.” Mark shrugged nonchalantly.

“But was too much a gentleman to wager on it.” Francis had his own opinions. “Mark my words.”

The young man had been ribbing her all morning. Having fun. And Mark had been playful too, having become more comfortable with her since their time together in DC. So this time she would let it slide.

But there had been a silent communication that transpired between Red and Dembe that she had not understood. Liz had learned some of their body language and eye contact since she’d been staying with them, so she was sure something had been said.

She wasn’t going to ‘rock the boat’ today with any insecurities. But her curiosity was piqued.

Liz looked out after the man, watching Red choose a bow, then set his first arrow.

“Yes well,” she replied, clearing her throat of the slight quivering she heard in her own voice, “it just meant he didn’t think he’d win.”

“Yeah, that’s it.” Francis commiserated. “You just remember, when he wins, you could have ended the day twisted up like a pretzel in a German...” the man appeared momentarily lost, “…pretzel factory?”

Mark and Dembe exchanged quizzical glances.

“An excellent metaphor, Francis.” Mark championed. Dembe rubbed the middle of his forehead to ease the slight ache behind the area.
Taking his stance, Red drew back, aimed, took a deep breath, released it and the arrow along with it. It flew through the air, shooting into the target. Just an inch from the center.

“You’ll never hear the end of this...” Francis muttered, watching as the next attempt struck just to the right of the first arrow.

The following shot traveled in the same pattern, looping around the center of the target. Red drew back on his last arrow, hesitating. He took two deep breaths, exhaled, held his posture and let the arrow fly.

They watched it zing down the greens, thwacking loudly into the paper target... dead center.

Liz turned to the man, finding Red’s eyes locked on her, his gaze unwavering. Even from this distance, she could see the heat contained within those amazing orbs, feeling her body respond accordingly.

Red finally broke the lock, his message conveyed, before turning his attention to Dembe. He waved the man over.

Liz glanced over at the men beside her. Their looks were superfluous.

“I don’t know what he wants from you,” Mark smiled, “but that look was enough to make me break into a sweat.” the man waved himself with a napkin.

“This not knowing may very well kill me.” Francis proclaimed loudly. He looked Liz over speculatively. “Hey, narrow it down for me.” he poked at her arm relentlessly. “What have you done?”

Liz’s swatted at him, but he side stepped the effort. “Stop it you little pervert.”

Thankfully their attention was momentarily diverted.

Red stood just behind his friend, speaking to him...instructing. Dembe pulled the bow back, halting when Red touched his arm.

Red adjusted the aim then tapped Dembe’s shoulder. Liz watched the dark man inhale then exhale like Red had done then he released the arrow. It cut the air, hitting just to the left of Red’s centered one.

He smiled his pleasure, laying a hand on Dembe’s shoulder before glancing to the small group, now all standing, surrounding the table he had only just left.

He waved the woman over.

Liz glanced about aimlessly, then pointed to herself. Red’s grin widened and he waved again, this time more emphatically.

She held up her arm to remind him of her weakened muscle state and those compound bows were very difficult to shoot. Red nodded that he understood her hesitancy but motioned yet again, his expression more adamant.

“You’ve blown him, right?” Francis, on the other hand, had other priorities. “I can tick that off the list?”

“I’m gonna blow a hole in you if you don’t be quiet.” she hissed, then rolled her eyes when the men fell into each other’s shoulder, laughing hysterically.

Liz offered a scathing glare before stomping across the way, self-consciously straightening her dress. She ignored the stifled chuckles behind her, turning her focus elsewhere. “...I don’t know about this, Red.” she approached, her expression a wary one. “I don’t think I can pull back on that...”

“When have I not been here for you?” the man teased, guiding her into the sphere of his arms, lifting the bow into position. “Put your hand just here.” It was directed.

Liz attempted to pull the heavily strung string to little avail. Red’s fingers curved a little above hers, easily accomplishing the feat. “Line up with your target.”

Liz marveled for she knew what strength it was taking for the man to hold the stance, so she quickly obeyed.

“I’m there.” She focused on the target center determinedly, well aware of the large crowd of onlookers judging her performance.

“Three count...” Red moved very much closer and she was wrapped in a heady scent of his cologne, the heat of his body doing all sorts of nice things to her system.

“Inhale.” He dropped his eyes to her breasts, enjoying the visual. “...Exhale...” A small smile graced his lips as the lovely mounds moved hypnotically to his commands. “...Let go.”

The raspy tone washed over her and she felt herself mechanically obeying, her eyes closing to the erotic sensations erupting involuntarily within her body.

The arrow shot down the green, puncturing the target just to the left of Dembe’s shot.

“Good job.” The praise delighted her, even more so than the spontaneous eruption of applause from those that had watched the display. Red smiled down at her, and her world fell into place.

She beamed him a special grin. “Just you wait until my arm gets stronger.” She tried not to notice the knowing smiles of several faces in the crowd which returned her sweep of the arena. “Now, there will be something to bet on, Fella, trust me.”

“There is only one thing I want from you at present.” Red confided, his tone low and meaningful, as was the heated stare he offered. “I only bet on a sure thing...and I would never take you for granted.”

Even in the warm spring air, Liz felt slightly chilled with the withdrawal of his arms. He handed the bow to Dembe who had waited patiently for another turn at bat, so to speak.

“Go get ’em, Slugger.” Red smiled in open affection to the other man. “Stop embarrassing the group.” he motioned slightly to Francis and Mark. “You’ll never hear the end of it, otherwise.”

Dembe seemed to accept his fate, stepping up to the marked out chalk line. “I can always turn the weapon around and accidentally shoot them in the ass.”

Red chuckled appreciatively. “I like the way you think.”

They returned to the table, Red’s good mood still high, it was apparent.

“So, did you win?” Mark’s eyes drifted down the course. “You’re the only one, so far to hit dead center.”

“So far.” Red chided. “The day is young, besides, my shot won’t be counted.”

“That’s not fair,” Francis was incensed, “I bet on you.”

Red sighed lightly. “When the hell did you have time?” he waved the issue aside. “It won’t be counted, so go recoup your losses elsewhere.” he lifted a graceful arm. “I hear they are racing cockroaches over by the chocolate fountain...I personally, like the one in the little yellow jacket.”

“They are not.” Francis was truly disappointed, it was clear. Liz held her smile of sympathy. “...Are they?” He lifted his head, second-guessing himself.

“Hope springs eternal.” Mark laughed easily. “They wouldn’t allow cockroaches at such an exclusive shin-dig, Francis.” The man pooh-poohed such a notion. “They do, however...have a nude ‘Miss Minus a Swimsuit’ competition that starts,” Mark consulted the expensive watch on his arm, “…in about twenty minutes.”

“Holy shit!” Francis felt decidedly better. “I’m there!”

Liz sighed. “We know you are, Francis.” She patted his arm consolingly.

“Remind me again, why we hang with this crowd?” Red flicked the brim of his hat which still sat jauntily on Liz’s pretty head, tipping it back a fraction to plant a light kiss on the full mouth.

“Because no one else will hang with you.” Mark answered for her. “A high-profile criminal would be just too conspicuous for this crowd.” He swept the area, and Red could see his point.

In that small sweep alone, a crooked judge...two mobster associates, a questionable politician and a big-time swindler all smiled happily back at him.

“Besides, with that infamous temper of yours, one can never be quite certain if one will be alive at any given moment of association with you.”

“I’m carrying right now.” Red lifted his jacket meaningfully, enjoying the exchange in spite of himself but he managed to keep a straight face.

“I know you are.” Mark’s remark was said in much the same vein as Elizabeth’s when she had remarked to Francis. “But then...who isn’t.”

Red let it go.

Francis returned to the food tent and Mark left to meet Amanda who had been seen milling around like a lost puppy. The crowd was growing and she was searching for her party in vain.

Elizabeth watched the reunion with a gentle smile. “I’m glad they seem to have worked out their problems.”

“Love will find a way.” Red smiled down at her.

“Well, not sure that is love.” she made mention, returning his smile. “But, they seem happier now, thanks to you.”

“What did I do?” he questioned.

“What you always do,” she stated. “Make everything better.”
The man held no recollection of the event in question. “I will take praise any place I can get it.” he shrugged stocky shoulders. “Especially from such a lovely source.”

She glanced at him askew. “Do you think you will always speak to me in that manner?” she teased.

“Well, the new wears off.” he teased right back. “If you mean, will I always remember to be grateful for what God has granted me? I hope the hell so, Elizabeth.” he turned serious for a beat. “But if I fail in that endeavor, you have Dembe or Silas kick the shit out of me. Knock some sense back into my addled brain.”

“I’ll hold you to that.” she watched Dembe graciously hand over the equipment to the next competitor. “...Looks like you have some competition.”

Red stepped closer. “Point him out.” he deliberately misunderstood. “I’ll kill the son-of-a-bitch on the spot.”

Liz lifted a stare. “Dembe just shot a bull’s eye.” she explained her meaning.

Red spared the man a glance. “And after all I’ve done to him.”

She grinned. “You’re competitive, don’t lie.”

“About some things.” His eyes told her more than he was saying.

“Must be killing you, not to be competing this year.” She pushed the envelope.

“Not everything is about winning, Lizzy.” he tilted his head, removing his hat, setting it on it’s proper place. “You’re hair is too lovely to hide...but it did look damned cute, sitting there atop those adorable little curls.” He indicated his meaning.

“You must be thinking about the other end.” She mused. “My hair is straight, for the most part.”

“I’m always thinking about ‘the other end’.” She was summarily informed. “There is fun to be had.” the crowd was getting rowdy, which is just how Red Reddington like things. “What are we standing here for? I’m mildly interested in that nude ‘Miss Minus Swimming Suit’ pageant which is about to begin, if my inner clock is still functioning properly.”

“I have a feeling,” Liz did, “that when it comes to ‘nude’ this or that...you will be functioning to perfection.” She allowed herself to be maneuvered. They headed out into the sun, looking for adventure.

“Well, shit.” Red’s annoyed statement caught Liz’s attention. They had been moving through the crowds, checking out the competitions here and there, meeting new people that enthralled the woman.

There had been world renowned authors, noted celebrities, even a few world leaders popped in from time to time.

Liz was dazzled by the intellect and variety of those who knew Red Reddington.

“What is it?” She was alerted by his tone that all was not well.

“I see Antonio Crocetti.” Red turned to Dembe. “Tell them I will meet them in the Blue Room.” He drew in a cleansing breath. “Duty fucking calls, baby.” He searched about for Francis or Mark. “Can you spare me for a few minutes?”

“Is there a major proble...”

“I got it covered.” He kissed the tip of her nose, grinning down at her.

“Red, would you tell me if there was anything really wrong?” She held on to his sleeve for he had found Francis and Lia in the crowd, having motioned them over.

“I don’t keep things from you, Elizabeth, but this is just a minor glitch.” He told the truth. “But it does have to be addressed. You take the rest of the day for shopping or whatever...or enjoy the festivities.” The atmosphere had changed in his opinion. “Although, if you ask me,” he sighed lightly, “The ‘A’ list has vacated the premises and now...” He grinned affectionately, “the low-lives are filtering in. My type of people, granted but not necessarily yours.”

“If you don’t mind then.” She bit her lip anxiously, not wanting to sound unappreciative. “I would love to hit a few of the casinos again.” She confided in the man. “Red, that was the most exciting time of my life, that first night here.”

“I’m sure you refer to the time in my bed, but playing the slots runs a close second, I take it.” He sent her on her way. “There are slots here but like I said, the atmosphere is much more congenial at the actual casinos...tell Francis to amuse you.”

“I can amuse myself.” She frowned.

“You can show me that later tonight then.” He replied sensually. “Prove your boast. Can I video it this time...for posterity’s sake.”

“You’re a dirty old man.” She was relatively certain but had flushed slightly for she remembered the first time she had allowed him to ‘watch’ that particular spectacle.

“And you love that about me, right?”

She turned, flouncing away. He watched her hook up with Francis and Lia before turning to the business at hand.

“Let’s blow this joint.” Francis had picked up on Red’s subtle ‘look’ even from a hundred meters away. “I know a little hot dog vendor just waiting to load on the fixins. You women haven’t lived until you’ve tasted these babies.”

“Big spender.” Lia giggled, hooking arms with Liz at her arrival. “Knows how to show a girl a good time.”

“I showed you a good time last night.” Francis grumbled. “Or at least, that’s what you said.”

“Oh, Apple Strudel, you know you did!” Lia’s eyes went wide. “The Earth moved...twice!”

“Three times, but who’s counting.” Francis’ good mood had returned. “I’m just hungry, My Little Dumpling...forgive me.”

“Always.” Lia transferred her arm to ‘her man’, laying her head on Francis’ shoulder.

“We should find Amanda.” Liz had been scanning uselessly. “If Red had to bail, Mark did too. She’s probably searching for us.”

An hour later found them scouring the shops at Caesar’s Palace. Having found a resting respite, Liz glanced up from unloading all her treasures, for she had won big at the slots in this fine establishment, then headed out to spend all her ill-gotten gains as quickly as humanly possible.

Which is, she was given to understand by the other ladies in her group, the thing to do while in Vegas. If one held on to such bounty, it was bad Ju-Ju or something to that effect.

Liz, not wanting to go against tradition, had a literal ball finding new and inventive ways to blow her wad.

She loved Las Vegas! It was the only place she had ever encountered where she could do a sinfully wicked thing and not feel like she should go to Confession in the very next instant.

Never had she gone through so much money so quickly and felt so amazing for the fact.

She was flushed and beautiful when Red finally arrived on scene.

It was like the ‘parting of the waves’...to see his people walk through an area. People literally moved aside and stared.

Women discretely stole looks at the handsome men as they passed. Men’s faces beamed a welcoming ‘hello’.

Red acknowledged each person who happened to catch his eye with either a smile or a slight tilt of his head.

The man had charisma that was for sure.

He pulled up short just feet away, his arms encompassing ‘it all’.

“I see someone did well at the tables?” he made his way through the myriad of shopping bags, finally reaching his destination. He removed his hat, the object dangling in his fingers as he leaned to kiss her lips.

“I did.” she beamed. “I even have money in the safe back at the Villa.” she proudly announced as he sat down beside her. She slid over, turning towards him. “Are you going to sight see with us?”

Red chuckled at the thought. He hadn’t gone sightseeing, in the traditional sense, in so very long. He actually could not remember the exact date or time. He was curious to see if he could mingle in with a crowd full of people from various walks of life any longer, and not be recognized.

“All right.” he nodded. “But if I say, we have to go...” he muttered.

“I know.” she smiled, before standing up. She understood his limitations.

The day turned out well, much to her surprise, and his. Seeing things through Lizzy’s eyes put a whole new perspective on the mundane.

A couple of times Red noticed Liz tense when someone stared their way a little too long.

He would steer her interest to another shop, something having caught his own eye, but she had to wonder if he had felt their eyes as well.

“Relax, Lizzy.” Red reassured, whispering softly in her ear after yet another individual, this one with short cropped hair, looking every bit the stereotypical cop on an everyday outing, kept repeatedly checking them out. “He wasn’t looking at me.”
“You...” she nodded minutely, “you saw him then?”

“Of course I saw him. And the other two back at the shop we just left.”

“Do you think they’re cops?” she whispered.

“I doubt it.” he laughed quietly. “Lizzy, they were staring at your ass.”

“Wha–” she was flabbergasted.

“They had no interest in me what-so-ever.” he craned his own head about, openly checking out her ass. “You on the other hand...” He cupped said bottom, squeezing the orb gently. “Not that I can blame them.” he traced the seam of her pants suggestively.

She shooed his hand aside. “I guess I’m a worry wart.”

“Trust me Lizzy, I know when I’m in the crosshairs.” he pulled a face. Yes, that was one thing Red Reddington knew.

She read the sincerity in his eyes. After twenty years on the run, he would definitely sense when he had a target on his back, of course.

After about twenty minutes and nine more shopping bags, Red suggested they grab a bite.

She and the girls opted for a quick change in the bathroom into some dresses that thankfully, went swimmingly with the sandals they were wearing. After a quick fluff to their hair and a little makeup fix, they were more than ready to dine at the fancy restaurant Red had chosen.

Near the end of another delicious meal, Red was interrupted yet again as Mark shared a text he had sent. Red’s approval was immediately forthcoming.

“We’re about to meet the owner of this fabulous establishment, thanks to Mark here.” Red indicated with a sweep of his hand. “I’m certain we will be entertained in the highest of fashion so if there is anything on anyone’s wish list, now is the time to speak up.”

Liz thought back over the days activities. She knew Red was doing this all for her, since he didn’t seem the type to walk around Las Vegas like a common tourist, but she was so very glad he was.

She loved how they blended in with everyone else and were like every other couple enjoying a little getaway.

Amid boisterous backslapping and introductions, yet another hotel big shot graciously offered any services available.

Today alone, she had pet dolphins and held a baby lion. Liz and the girls had even got to take their picture with a large cat and it’s trainer. She was amused, looking up to see, the guys stood ever so watchful, their hands on their weapons.

She supposed they were nervous about attack after what happened to that famous trainer a few years back.

But the cat was a bigger version of Keres, if anyone asked her. Even going so far as to lay it’s head in her lap, licking her thigh, much to Red’s annoyance. That was his job after all, he proclaimed to any and all.

Silas said the animal was simply tasting the meat before committing to the buffet, but Liz thought, the
They had hit everything from Louis Vuitton to M&M World. All of it had been ransacked by Red and company. He and Francis alone, almost cleaned out each store along the way. Luckily, the purchases were sent back to the Villa’s in a chain of Uber drivers, or at least that was how Red put it.

But she and the girls weren’t much better, aside from shopping at the luxury stores, they had taken every free thing tossed their way by the hotels, from sweatshirts to decks of cards.

An entire auditorium was made available to them to watch performers for Circus De Soleil have a dress rehearsal for a new show that hadn’t even premiered yet.

They went with the guys up to the top of the Stratosphere so the macho fools could experience the thrill ride, though she and the girls hid their eyes, lest they see them fall to their deaths.

Liz, admittedly peeked the entire time if only to see Francis’ face.

They fed the sharks behind the scenes at the Mandalay Aquarium. Their group went to the top of the Eiffel Tower alone.

Come to think of it, everything they did, they had done as a group, alone. Because of the guys having connections everywhere in the city, access was available to them where some others may not have such good fortune.

Through it all, Liz’s favorite moments were the little things.

Taking a picture with Red in front of the iconic Las Vegas sign or at the Luxor. Kissing him with the Statue of Liberty or Eiffel Tower as their backdrop. Walking hand in hand through the entire day.

The evening ended at the Bellagio, watching the water show.

Liz leaned back into Red’s support, her hands covering his which wrapped around her waist. The water shot high into the air before settling back down in a mist, as the lights dimmed and the crowds clapped their appreciation for another brilliant show.

“Have you had a good day?” Red asked quietly, having noticed the serene smile on her face.

“I’ve had a fabulous day.” she beamed happily up at him. “Thank you for sharing it with me.” she hugged him tightly as they walked to the waiting car, heading back to the Villa.

And so the clock struck twelve, Liz mused. Her Cinderella got to go home with the Prince, however. She glanced over to Red, thinking her thoughts aloud.

“A perfect ending to a perfect day.” she mused quietly.

“It hasn’t ended.” he met her eyes. “Don’t count me out just yet.”

May 19

Red wished his contemporaries a good night before retiring to the room.

Having waded his way through the mountain of shopping bags and souvenirs from a day well spent, the man took sanctuary in a favorite spot.

Sitting in a plush chair, Red sat looking out over the quiet solitude of the tranquil pool and lush gardens which stretched before him.

Normally, his thought were disciplined and focused. But tonight, they were varied and disorganized. Which was a very rare occurrence for the man.

He listened contentedly to the off-key singing drifting into the room. Lizzy sang in the shower.

It had become a part of their ‘routine’.

She usually serenaded him, unconsciously of course, with a rousing rendition of “Don’t It Make My Brown Eyes Blue”. He strained to hear the exact tune tonight, pleased by her choice. She must be remembering their “Unforgettable” time on his boat.

He was suddenly flooded with a sense of contentment.

The first time he had ever felt this comfortable was the second week of his marriage, after everything had settled down. He and Carla were in their new home after a long day of unpacking.

Though his ex-wife had never sang, she had been in the shower while he had enjoyed a beer on the porch, staring out at a lawn that was now his responsibility.

There was a comfort with Carla, yes. But there had always been an undercurrent of... something he could not define... until years later.

Indifference, had been the word he’d been searching for.

They married, but were virtual strangers come to find out. They both worked long hours, trying to climb the ladder to afford the new home they had purchased. They had romantic dinners, weekend trips away... made love. Normal couple activities.

Into their second year, when they were comfortable in their situation, they decided to have Jennifer.

They ran the gauntlet millions of other couples did everyday... in hindsight, it had all felt very mechanical.

He had vividly remembered thinking, ‘Was this the new norm?’

While he felt that now, there was a vast difference between the two worlds.
He chuckled softly as Lizzy hit a high note... pretty well actually. She must have grown accustomed to the acoustics available to her.

Red allowed his thoughts to drift. Were he honest with himself, there was something inside him tonight. He was trying to define it.

Thinking back over the past two weeks the man was suddenly amazed. It seemed so much had happened in their relationship in such a short amount of time. What was more amazing to Red, is that how very special the mundane had become.

Something as simple as Liz’s every day interaction with those people Red kept close to himself. An easy camaraderie had been established which allowed Reddington to truly relax and enjoy his surroundings.

He had felt that all day.

He could never imagine Carla in such a situation. He did remember however, that he never felt the need to invite people into his home... well his friends. Hers were always about and underfoot. Carla never seemed to click with the Navy lifestyle.

Perhaps had he tried harder. Red dismissed such futile thinking. The past was the past.

Liz had opened the door to the bath area. A sweet smell of lilac and roses drifted out with the billowing shower steam. Red relaxed back against the expensive fabric of the chair, one leg dangling over the other.

He lazily swirled his forgotten drink, the glass drooping from his fingers.

A smile played about his lips listening as Lizzy hummed what he was sure was an upbeat version of “Afternoon Delight”. The woman did say she was eclectic.

Red chuckled appreciatively arising from his chair. He entered the bath offering a brief glance to it’s sole occupant, who ignored his arrival completely, too wrapped up in her nightly ritual to give a mere male a second thought.

He stripped, climbing in the shower, inhaling the intoxicating scent of the female essence. Body lotions abounded on every surface available, shampoos, conditioners, scented soaps... the works.

Liz watched the hazy movements of the man behind the opaque shower wall. She had noted the well built physique discreetly as Red had entered the enclosure, her eyes taking in the well rounded derriere.

Red was totally oblivious to the fact. He fingered a few objects on the shelves, absently reading the labels. He searched for his own brand, chuckling when he found them pushed far back among the other assorted sundries.

He affixed the temperature, inhaling luxuriously. It had been a long time since the simple scent of a woman made his heart race, but then, Lizzy’s scent was like no other.

Not only did she wear the softest of perfumes, but her natural aroma... the pheromones she released... drove him insane at times.

The subtlest shift in her mood, alerted him to what she was feeling.

He was amazed how many times a day the woman became stimulated. Though, it was to be expected. Liz was a young, vital woman in her prime.

Experiencing that sweet redolence was like smelling the first bloom of a rose.

He breathed in the soft feminine perfume surrounding him, the tensions of the day melting away.

The day came back in other ways, very pleasant ones. Seeing a slip of the woman’s thigh through a slit in her dress, catching a glimpse of the voluptuous and sensual curve of her back. The sound of her laughter, the fullness of her mouth, the firmness of her bottom, the swell of her breasts...

Red glanced down at his penis. It had arisen to half mast, he chastised it with a look.

His need to mount the woman and fill her with his warmth became overpowering to the extreme at times. He was slowly learning to curb such tendencies, but there was a part of him that wondered why he should.

He hadn’t ridden anyone bareback since his ex-wife. Otherwise, with anyone else, it was too personal. Too committed.

But with Lizzy... he suddenly realized just how much he wanted that intimacy. The exclusivity.

While the Alpha side of the man needed to mark her as his own, the male side, wanted to see the evidence of their union fresh inside the woman’s body.

Everyone had their fantasies, even Red Reddington.

Condoms were all very nice... thank God for condoms, however he had been pleased that Lizzy had rejected his own attempt at civility.

He had recently presented her with an updated print off of his STD free status as proof, but that had been after they had already started using lambskins, which only protected against pregnancy, not the latter.

Liz had rolled her eyes at the gesture, reiterating that she trusted his word, then wadded up the test, tossing it at a indolent Keres.

The cat had looked at the makeshift toy with great indifference until Hudson had taken a liking to it, then the fight had begun over ownership rights.

Lizzy had stepped in the middle, cooing lovingly to both animals, diplomatically ripping the balled paper in half. Giving each their own toy... both lost immediate and complete interest, much to Lizzy’s vexation.

Red lathered his body, a soft smile gracing his lips. It was another thing he loved about the...loved? Should he bandy that word about so soon, he wondered. His smile grew. What was the politically correct term for what he felt for Elizabeth Keen?

Didn’t matter because Red had never been one to kowtow to society’s dictates. And his emotions were not a subject to be discussed openly.

He rinsed absently, visions dancing in his head. What would it be tonight? That tight little black see-through top and non-existent panty set that made him want to drool or perhaps one of those delectable knee length satin gowns so easily removed. Either choice delighted him.

He hung his towel, crossing to grab the necessities, stepping into the silk boxers as an afterthought.
Rounding the opened doorway he pulled up short.

Lizzy lay casually back against the pillows, book in hand...completely naked...sans clothing...raw...in the buff...

This was new...

Tonight, she had cut out the middle man, as it were. The middle man being himself. A fact Red found he could live with. He hoped she was in a playful mood, because dressed like... or not dressed like that, there was no way he was not going to play a few games tonight.

“I feel a bit overdressed.” he gestured to his boxers, his face placid.

“So, take them off.” Liz replied, absently sitting her book aside. Turning her attention to the man, she watched his boxers slide down those amazing thighs until she heard the soft rustle of them hit the floor.

Her eyes raked the man’s form appreciatively.

He had well formed arms, chest and thighs that she found very attractive. And believe it or not, the slight swell in his stomach was cute as hell.

She remembered thinking at one time, that she found her very apparent attraction to Red odd, after Tom and his six pack abs.

But the more time she spent with Red, the more she found she appreciated his attributes, as it were.

Besides the fact that the sex was beyond amazing. When they made love, she felt sheltered and protected in Red’s embrace where she had never felt such things with Tom.

Red was so powerful and commanding. When he settled his weight into her, she felt comforted.

The man literally oozed sensuality.

Tom couldn’t muster even half of what Red exuded. Just thinking about being with Red in a sexual situation made Liz’s tummy flip chaotically, all because of what the man had to offer.

When his thick thighs brushed against her soft ones, she withered inside. The strong arms that rippled with his movements as he made love to her, turned her on. The thick mat of hair on his chest could tease her nipples into sharp points of throbbing sensations within seconds.

His mouth... that blessed mouth, which could kiss her senseless, also had the expertise to bring her to a shuddering climax anytime he pleased.

And his cock. She loved the man’s dick more than life itself. She had never felt so complete, so full... until Red Reddington.

Liz tossed back the blankets, her eyes issuing a warm invitation, pleased when the man didn’t hesitate in the slightest to join her.

Climbing under the sheet, Red sighed, loving the freedom his nakedness afforded him.

Laying against him, Liz felt the butterflies in her tummy flutter about. The man’s soft fuzz on his chest rubbed against her quickly swelling breasts. The smattering of hair on his stocky thighs fascinated her no end. Her knee deliberately brushed against the head of his well hung penis.

She felt a tightening between her legs, her breasts tingling in response to the overpowering masculinity of her lover.

Red refused to extinguish the lights tonight, even when Liz sent a questioning glance to the bedside table.

“They stay on tonight.” he informed her seductively. He expected a slight flush but was disappointed when Liz moved to his side, relaxing totally into his sphere.

He was more than fine with that.

Liz twirled her finger through his light chest hair, trailing a leisurely path to his stomach with a well tapered nail.

She was truly looking forward to the chance the man had offered. When they were intimate, Red was so concentrated on her and her pleasure that she had never had the opportunity to concentrate on his.

Not that she was complaining, in the least. She had never had a lover so in tune with her body and mind.

Tonight she was looking forward to returning the favor. She planned some undivided attention to be cast his way.

Stroking his arm, Liz felt the muscles bunch under her touch. She gently moved her hand over, threading her fingers casually through the abundant blonde hair, teasingly circling his nipple.

She traced the flat dark skin, rolling the small peak, smiling her pleasure when it became taut under her administrations.

So, Red Reddington enjoyed it when someone played with his nipples. How enlightening. She smiled sweetly at the man.

Red lay silently, watching her explore his form. He had explored just about every inch of her and had a pretty damn good idea what made her tick but that didn’t mean he wouldn’t keep searching for new little hidden treasures with which to play.

He recalled the morning after they had made love for the first time. He could not stop staring at her profile.

He hadn’t realized how full her breasts were, finding himself completely mesmerized by the movement the beautiful tear shaped mounds made when she moved an arm or stretched just so.

Or her ass... he had finally seen it bare in the soft morning sunlight. There was nothing more beautiful than the human form in its natural state.

He could not get his fill of touching the perfection of Lizzy’s form. Often, he touched her simply because he could. One of his favorite things was to walk up behind her and press himself into that firm little bottom.

Instantly his cock would react. In the beginning she would start at his unexpected presence but of late, the woman’s reaction was more natural and instinctive which is what he hoped would happen eventually.

The feel of her mouth, how the full lips seemed to fit perfectly to his. Her warmth, the intense pleasure just the slightest flick of her tongue gave him always astounded him.
He loved to feel the edge of her opening, the wetness of her body against his fingertips.

Chauvinistic or not, Lizzy was so tiny in comparison to him, so feminine, it turned him the fuck on.

One of his favorite pastimes was mapping out freckles on her body purely to see her reaction.

The long line of her neck allowed him to sense the quickened heart beat of her pulse point. Softly draping his thick fingers down the exquisite expanse of her naked back, elicited a score of gooseflesh allowing the man to actually see the affect he had on her.

His hands fit her waist and shapely hips perfectly which had proven an incredibly sensitive area of her flesh.

The woman’s stuttered breathing meant he was on the right track.

Hooking her knee and sliding his length into her wet core was one of his favorite positions, especially if he had her pinned against a wall.

He had shared all of this with the woman. He was never less than honest in anything he did, but especially in those intimate moments, which Lizzy seemed to appreciate.

Their passionate couplings had been more primal, hot and dirty of late, which was like living out his more baser instincts. There were moments of concern when Red thought perhaps, he was being too rough with her, but the woman’s raspy moans of pleasure, flushed cheeks and blown pupils had erased any doubts or recriminations.

Liz was usually a very vocal lover but the intensity of their more recent lovemaking sessions had amplified tremendously. Red could not have been more gratified by the fact.

They often ended up in a sweaty, panting mess of tangled arms and legs, which felt fucking wonderful.

Red brought his thoughts back to the present with a jolt. Lizzy was tracing his skin like she’d never seen a naked man before. He could actually feel her curiosity spiking.

He suddenly realized he had never allowed her to explore. While he had been fine with that, finding exploration of her much more interesting, it didn’t mean Lizzy wasn’t curious about him.

He lay silently, finding her fascination with his body charming as hell. Some people might feel uncomfortable under such scrutiny, but in fact, Red was learning just as much about the woman as she was him.

By now, most men would probably have been rock hard and ready to fuck. But Red kept himself under control, allowing anything Lizzy thought to do.

His eyes deepened as she inched the sheet down, exposing his pubic hair which covered the beginning of his shaft. When he didn’t stop her, she boldly advanced until his flaccid cock was exposed to her gaze.

It did pulse slightly, stirring to life, but who could blame it? He was only human, contrary to popular opinion.

If someone had told him a year, hell, a month ago... that he and Lizzy would be laying naked in bed, playing games only lovers played, he would have laughed in their face. Granted, he would have imagined it down to the smallest of detail... but he still would have laughed.
She reached out, running a tentative fingertip over the length of his still dormant shaft which altered the condition rapidly enough, admittedly.

But still, he waited.

He watched her trace the tip of his cock, her face allowing her fascination.

And then it dawned on him. She’d never been with a man whose penis was uncut.

Their appearance turned a lot of women off.

He wondered what his lover thought of it? Lizzy had obviously been with cut men.

Did she dislike his appearance? Did she enjoy it? Did it make her feel good? Could she tell a difference?

Liz sat up, leaning her weight on her arm, studying Red more closely.

“You can touch me, Lizzy.” he encouraged quietly.

She lifted intrigued eyes.

“...Touch me.” he bid.

She arose to her knees, sitting beside him, wrapping her fingers around him, testing his weight and girth. She played with the extra skin, experimenting with it’s movement and texture.

Red drew in a breath, relaxing his head into the pillow as her warm, slim fingers encompassed his flesh.

“Does this feel good?” she asked hesitantly, searching out his features.

“Yes.” he rasped hoarsely.

She stroked his shaft diligently, moving the skin up and down, revealing his cock head to her view before it was covered again with the foreskin. She watched the movement of her hand hypnotically until Red was semi-erect.

“You’ve never held one before, have you?” Red murmured quietly, unwilling to break her concentration.

She shook her head, her eyes wide, “My God, am I doing it wrong?”

“Oh hell, no.” he grunted aside, concentrating on the moment.

Liz relaxed somewhat. “...Show me what to do.”

Wrapping his fingers around hers, he adjusted her grasp, moving the extra skin on his rapidly growing shaft.

“Does it bother you?” Red had to know. “There are variations of circums–”

“No...” Liz focused entirely on his penis, which caused Red to react to the visual stimuli.

Liz gasped quietly in awe as her fingers gapped around his now growing girth.

“I could get ask Dr. Bryan to...”
“No, please don’t.” Liz frowned up at him. “What do you mean ‘variations’?”

He wrapped his hand around hers, bringing the foreskin over his glans.

“My father refused to allow them take but a little off the top,” Red put it that way deliberately, hoping to make light of the subject. Running his finger over the tip, he showed her where the tiny bit of extra skin had been, but was now missing, “to make it more ascetically pleasing... hopefully.” he watched her face carefully.

She inspected him closely. She decided she appreciated his appearance, finding him very attractive.

Red was by far, the most erotic man she had ever seen, cut or not.

Besides being incredibly nice looking in color, length and in his grooming. What there was of the extra skin, actually showcased his very large mushroomed head for her viewing pleasure.

He had just the right amount of... everything, going on. Of course, that was only her opinion, she hoped it mattered.

“I like it.” she decided. “I love how it looks and it feels just perfect.”

He was hoping she’d say that. God how he was hoping. Red silently thanked his father, a first that he could remember.

His first wife hadn’t been a complete fan of his cock and blasé about the chest hair. His vanity had suffered a little granted, although he finally made the point, that she married it and had to live with it.

His other partners had one goal in mind. Physical attributes weren’t important. Just the release.

And then there was Lizzy.

Sometimes, you were directed to a certain person for a reason. And Red was ever so thankful to be thrown into the path of this woman.

“The option is always open to you,” he corrected immediately, “...to us.”

“I’m serious about this.” she replied breathlessly, tightening her grip around him, pumping with a more established rhythm. “Don’t you dare do anything like that, Red Reddington.”

She was being completely honest.

She hadn’t realized until Red, how big a difference such a small thing made. Or perhaps it had nothing to do with circumcision. Red always worked his way up to a gradual climax, only really fucking her harder because she just enjoyed how it felt.

But more importantly, she loved his reaction to the request when it came from her end.

She loved when the man got assertive in the bedroom.

Red would growl low in his throat, grasp her tightly and fuck her until she was left a quivering mess. It was one of the major things she loved about Red Reddington.

Her fingers tracked the bulging veins beneath his velvet skin, Liz memorizing the feel of him. “I want to learn what makes you happy.”

“Touching you makes me happy.” Red replied honestly.
Liz was too enthralled to take her concentration from her pastime even though the statement made her ‘happy’.

“Though, I have to say,” he sighed contentedly as she pumped his shaft with both hands, her thumb running back and forth over the slick head, “I am enjoying this interlude tremendously.”

Well, that felt great. The man stifled a heartfelt moan.

She smiled softly, enjoying the man’s reaction to her touch.

“I like touching you.” she murmured indistinctly.

“I’d say the feeling is more than fucking mutual.” he muttered silkily.

She traced his flesh, alternating her touch from soft to insistent, at first hesitatingly and then with more confidence.

The woman was always contradicting herself. But it didn’t seem to matter to his dick as it grew in her hand. If anything, he enjoyed the fuck out of her uncertainty.

He couldn’t remember the last time he got a hand job for no other reason, but to give him pleasure. With no hidden agenda.

He had been with other women who could get him off in five minutes flat. But this... this was real.

Not that he was judging any woman. He would never do so. The women he had known, usually had a standard procedure. They only cared about the end game, the deal, the fragile loyalty.

While he understood and accepted the rules. He was ever so glad he had found a woman who actually cared enough to find out his likes and dislikes. Not just about what worked.

Lizzy surpassed them all if only for her willingness to try. That contagious giggle when she was bent in an awkward position say... or if some unforeseen ‘incident’ amused or mildly shocked her, was the most captivating quality he had ever found in a woman.

Lizzy cared about the man.

“In fact,” the man growled his involvement, “no one has ever touched me the way you are.” Red knew the statement could be taken two ways, which is exactly how he meant it.

Liz smiled her pleasure, hearing such a statement, such encouragement urging her onward. Stroking his shaft, she rimmed his head, cupping the sensitive area under her palm, keeping no set pattern. The little cock tease.

“That feels really good, baby.” He whispered, closing his eyes to the reality.

“What do you like?” She squirmed about, pushing at his knee.

“What you’re doing.” Red moved his leg, allowing her to kneel in the open space.

“There must be something else?” She questioned softly, something occurring to her. She dropped her hand down to his sack, rolling them about gently, feeling the pliable flesh.

“God....” he sighed blissfully for such initiative.
“See, I knew there had to be something else.” She was very pleased with her discovery, settling more into her task.

He almost chuckled outright at such enthusiasm until the woman put two and two together, alternately stroking his shaft and his balls, while her other hand continued to play with his head.

He lay very still under her ministrations, relaxing, watching the show.

His cock throbbed wondrously in her small hand. His eyes deepened considerably as the tip of that tiny tongue flicked out about the full lips.

He had often wondered what her mouth would feel like.

Would she be experienced? Or hopefully, a novice. Why did it bother him so much to think of her with other men in similar situations. He had been with other women.

Red’s jaw tightened, his body tensing. The woman had caught those red lips between startling white teeth. He sensed the turn of her thoughts, hoping beyond hope that they were on the same level of communication.

Even if not, even if she didn’t do anything, that visual alone about made his balls spasm.

But if she did... it would be the first time those beautiful lips would be wrapped around his cock. An event he fantasized about... often.

He had many fantasies about oral sex. Her full lips sliding down his erection, the thought alone could almost bring him to orgasm. Would her tongue flicker about his sensitive flesh. Would she suckle intently or just half ass the job. Would she swallow? Not that he preferred one over the other, he was just damned curious.

Okay he was lying about that one.

Some women hated it. Other’s enjoyed it. What he really wanted to know, was Lizzy’s preference?

If he could come in that amazing mouth it would be the pinnacle of any man’s sexual desires.

Lizzy’s cheek brushed lovingly against his length. She found his clean fresh aroma arousing. She knew that scent, she found comfort in it. And she wanted more of it...

Turning her head slightly, the woman blew out a slow, controlled breath. Red’s fingers twitched at his side as her chin inadvertently brushed his glans.

Unconsciously holding his breath, he watched that sweet pouty mouth part subtly, her hot breath fanning tantalizingly over his more than sensitive skin.

He watched avidly as her tongue flicked out, tasting his head teasingly. He groaned softly as the little pink muscle flickered timidly over his taut skin.

He watched avidly as her tongue flicked out, tasting his head teasingly. He groaned softly as the little pink muscle flickered timidly over his taut skin.

Touching him with more pronounced pressure, Lizzy rubbed the course surface against his glans, getting the feel of him, before fully capturing his bulging crown between her luscious lips.

“Shit...” Red gasped shakily, clutching the sheets tightly in his hands, to stop himself from grasping at her hair.

Having been on the receiving end of blowjobs a few times in his life, a universal rule was to not touch a woman’s head unless given express permission. Or they would invariably stop all movement.

His stomach flipped pleasantly as her eyes fluttered open, staring straight up at him.

Red watched the very stimulating sight of her voluptuous mouth sliding in an agonizingly slow pace, down over the bulging flesh, fully encasing his cock head.

“Son of a bitch...” he murmured tautly as the woman’s tongue suckled him gently.

Liz eased her way down the engorged flesh, pressing the thick crown against the roof of her mouth. Flattening her tongue along the underside of his penis, she hummed melodiously at the first taste of him.

She felt a powerful sense of accomplishment as the man’s mouth parted sensually, his dark eyes remained steadily fixed on her face.

She moaned softly as the large muscle involuntarily contracted, followed by the subtle heady mix of earthy musk and salt. Suckling gently, she tasted the warm pre-cum, memorizing the elixir that was all Red.

The man grunted deeply, the carnal sound making heat pool between her legs, leaving her slick and ready. Reaching between her legs, Liz ran her fingers through the thick arousal, teasing her own clit.

Red almost lost it at the sight of her touching herself. Before, he had almost sold his soul to simply get her to the stage where she felt comfortable enough to do such a thing. And now here she was, instinctively taking care of not only his needs, but her own.

Truth told, the whole damn picture was turning him the hell on.

More so, her total lack of experience, that she was a novice, meant she hadn’t done this often, and it thrilled him beyond belief... the combination was working wonders.

He had blowjobs from experts, but truthfully, had never been this hard, this close to coming, after just a few moments in a hot wet mouth.

Her experimentation, hesitation and nervousness was driving him out of his fucking mind. In such an unbelievably good way.

Liz bobbed her mouth on the straining organ, rolling her tongue over the bulging flesh. She listened intently to what the man did and did not respond to.

She had been wanting to do this for a while, but had lost nerve at each opportunity presented. She had to say, she was really enjoying the experience. More so, the intimacy of it.

She had Red’s penis... in her mouth. Besides making love, there was nothing more intimate than this. And that he seemed to be enjoying it, made it even more exciting.

Even if she was nervous as hell.

She really hadn’t done this a lot, maybe a handful of times with each partner she had. She knew the mechanics of it of course, but had never felt confident in her abilities. To be as forward as she had a moment ago, when she had taken the initiative, to proceed on her own.

Normally she had been asked to perform the activity by any given partner.

She had always been so concentrated on what she was doing before, so worried about her performance and lack of skills.

She had never really obtained the sexual thrill she had read about from performing oral sex on anyone... until now. There was something about doing it to Red that was such an aphrodisiac.

Liz sensed Red was allowing her to take control. Having watched his fingers occasionally gripping the sheet from time to time told her that the man was holding himself in tight check.

She absolutely loathed when guys would grab her head, trying to control her movements. In her mind, it signified that she was not pleasing them in some manner. So she truly appreciated Red’s control, allowing her to feel her way, to adapt to his size.

That infamous control slipped a notch, the man’s hand lifting of it’s own volition, halting mid-stride as it almost touched the shiny crown of the dark head. He curled his fingers into a tight fist willing himself back under restraint.

Liz caught the tentative hand, encouraging his touch.

Red groaned brokenly, “Oh, fuck...” he whispered hoarsely, very much enjoying the visual presented.

Softly curling his fingers into the dark strands, he reached out brushing aside the bouncy locks blocking his view.

Completely enraptured by the sight of the woman’s pink lips stretched around his thickened shaft, the man’s steady breathing became labored as the two moved in a steady rhythm.

He knew the time was nearing to put a halt to her pursuit, but at present he just did not have the will power.

“Okay, baby...” he offered a feeble protest. “We should stop.”

The sight of the little extra skin he had, meeting with her swollen lips and the titillating sensation of her hair brushing his thighs and groin, had him quietly cursing his lot in life.

“Really, baby.” the man tried for more emphasis. “Maybe it’s time to...”

Threading his fingers through the thick strands of hair, Red cupped her breast, drawing a long moan from the woman as his crown settled against the back of her mouth. The slight suction and the vibration tickled along his cock head and shaft deliciously, snapping any restraint he had left.

“...Stop.” he whispered his growing agony.

It was a toss up between his need to complete the act and his common sense that told him, the first time should be accomplished with a little more finesse.

“Get the fuck up here!” he snarled, having lost the battle in reality, for he so longed to complete what his body was crying out for. “Now!”

Liz hesitated visibly, unnerved by his tone. She wondered what she had done wrong, unaware that her mouth was still suckling at the taut skin of his penis.

“Oh.... fuck.” the man trembled visibly, abruptly pushing his hand between their bodies. Thumbing her chin, he broke the amazing suction as quickly as humanly possible.

She sat up slowly, still unsure as to what exactly had happened. She tried to keep her perspective but secretively she was a little hurt by his actions.

“Did I do something wrong?” she asked anxiously, absently crawling, straddling the man’s hips.

“I was about to come down your damn throat... “ he panted shakily, “so no, you didn’t do a fucking thing wrong.”

She felt a little better, pleased with his apology, of sorts. “Oh well, okay... but...” in her opinion, he could have been a little bit less astringent about such a gift.

Pushing a hand between their bodies, he cupped her mound possessively, “I want to be here,” he pet the wet hole with his thick finger, “when I come.”

Liz shivered slightly at his roughened voice and manner. Pushing back, she purposely teased the erection straining against her backside.

Red’s eyes darkened as his cock head slid along her slit. His jaw clenched as the woman lifted, catching the throbbing crown with her body. The tip just easing into her drenched center.

“Dammit!” he snapped, quickly rolling the woman to her back. Gaining control of the situation once more.

Shoving her legs apart, he settled himself commandingly between her thighs.

“You’re playing a very dangerous game here, Elizabeth.” he growled his frustration, pushing his groin against hers as he reached for the drawer on the side table. “You’re pushing me beyond...”

Liz reached out, stopping his quest for what denied their total intimacy.

“...No.” Her eyes beckoned him.

“What the hell are you doing?” he gritted painfully, needing to be with her so badly, he ached.

“I want to feel you.” she looked up at him, her voice shaking slightly.

Red’s body trembled at the implication. He dropped his head, groaning as his cock brushed against her opening, feeling her center flood with wet heat. Fuck that felt good...

“Are you telling me,” he looked at her almost sternly, his hand having withdrawn from the drawer and it’s contents, “you don’t want–”

“Not tonight, okay...” she pleaded softly. “Please, I need to feel you.”

He pushed his thigh against hers, opening her legs wider as he adjusted his stance. Steadying himself on one arm, laying warm fingers against her sex.

“God, baby, I know...” he groaned piteously. “I want that as well, so much.” he dropped his head.

Liz shifted her hips, his shaft naturally falling where she wanted it most. He slid forward slightly, the temptation too great. He teased her swollen labia, before pulling away almost angrily. He swore under his breath.

“Sweetheart, we haven’t discussed this.” the man reminded tightly.

“We’re discussing it now.” she reminded peevishly.
“This isn’t really a good time for me.” he reminded waspishly. He grasped the bedding, holding back on giving into his need. He looked into that little face, feeling himself cave by degrees.

“Yes, agreed.” he was going to try diplomacy if it killed him. “We’re both wanting more than anything to go bareback.” he gritted roughly.

Liz reached between them, wrapping her small fingers around the thick girth, setting his crown at her opening. Dragging the smooth skin across the area, she melded the thick head in her heat. The stiffness of his erection made her body flutter about the bulbous head, which tried to grasp and pull him in.

“Baby, you’re ovulating..” he tried reasoning, suckling on her sweet neck. “And don’t even think of telling me to pull out, because I won’t.” he wouldn’t lie. He pushed against her a little, feeling her tight little hole fluttering already. “I’ll fill you so fucking full...” he growled at the thought.

He could not prevent his large fingers sliding into her body as he slowly pumped them, testing her arousal.

Red grunted deep in his throat, finding the woman more than ready for him. Sliding his fingers free, he circled her small nipples, wetting them before suckling away the intoxicating taste of Lizzy.

“We’re covered.” she pointed to her table, showing him a depressed spermicide plunger. “I got that stuff you hate.” she held his eyes imploringly. “I did it while you were in the shower.” she explained hastily. “I so want this, with you.”

Red felt his heartbeat quicken in anticipation. This had not been spontaneous. She had planned for it to happen.

Elizabeth wanted this just as much as he did.

“I have not done this since my ex-wife.” he confessed. “Do you understand what it means to me, if we do... proceed?” he asked her seriously.

“Yes.” she replied shyly. “You’ll be sharing something with me, you don’t anyone else.”

“And what does that mean to you?” grasping his cock in his hand, he brushed the mushroomed crown along her damp curls hoping it wasn’t to influence her decision in anyway.

“It’s a commitment, to you.” she answered quickly, moving up into his touch. “And you, to me.”

His breathing stuttered as the tip of his erection grazed her clit, producing a fresh wave of wetness flooding from her body, and his.

Shit...

“And you want that... with me?” he pushed along her swollen sex, groaning. His slit warm with pre-cum, massaging her clit further as their arousal mixed together.

“Do you want it with me?” She lifted hopeful eyes.

“Damn right I do.” Red lowered his mouth, kissing the woman fiercely. “God knows I do.”

Even though she was thrilled to share this with Red, she was nervous as hell. His large shaft stroked her, heightening her arousal, her body trembling with growing excitement.

They were really going to do this.
“Are you all right?” His deep voice full of concern and lust made her fingers shake.

“God, Red,” Her hand trembled as she placed it on his shoulder, “I’m so nervous.”

He smiled softly, gently nuzzling her nose. “You have done this before.”

“No on purpose.”

Red slowed slightly, the confession giving him pause for thought. “You’ve never...”

“No.” she dropped her eyes embarrassed slightly, a mild trepidation overtaking her. She hoped Red would not change his mind.

“I thought you and Tom...” he questioned his own sincerity.

“You’re the first one I’ve ever felt...” she looked up at him, desire shining in her eyes, “it was so warm...”

And they said dreams didn’t come true.

The thought that he would be the first to intentionally ride her bareback and fill her with his cum, made his dick throb with anticipation.

She gasped softly when she felt his shaft pulse against her, as she wiggled about, needing to feel closer to the man.

“Are you sure you want this?” the question devastated the man, but it had to be asked. “There is no rush, Lizzy.” he forced himself to say as much.

“I know... I know.” she was quick to respond. “I’m nervous... excited.” she admitted. “I want this, Red.” she reassured. “I want to share this with you, and only you.”

Red’s heart hammered in his chest as he pushed at her wet core.

“If you change your mind...” he finished the statement in his head... I’ll fucking die of a fucking heart attack right here on the fucking crisp white sheets.

“I won’t.” she promised shakily, urging him to nudge forward. She held her breath as his warm thick head pushed past her tight opening, popping through with effort.

“Oh, Red...” the woman moaned sweetly, heightening the man’s pleasure two-fold.

“Fuck...” Red gasped, having forgotten how good this could feel. Especially as her downy thatch of hair rubbed along his length.

It was as if he had waited his whole life for this moment.

“Tell me we’re good here.” he pleaded softly, very much wishing to continue the journey he had begun.

Liz moaned breathlessly as she felt the exquisite stretch of his large bare crown breaching her. She clutched his arms, curling her fingers tightly into the bulging muscles.

“God, please answer me...” He growled through gritted teeth, pulling back, feeling the heavy drag as she clenched hard around him, trying to make him stay.
“Please don’t stop.” she whimpered softly. He pushed back against her hot, moist cradle in response.

She couldn’t help but feel delighted by the man’s reaction.

Red had savored their lovemaking from the very beginning of their relationship. Always taking his time penetrating her. There was a time or two when she thought she might snap and drive him in herself, the man had been so meticulous. Which, come to think of it, had actually happened once or twice, making the man chuckle at her impatience.

But tonight was different. This time, she was just as concentrated as he. She had never felt anything so wonderful... so breathtaking.

She’d never felt anything like him before. His shaft was massaging her in ways she didn’t think were possible.

He was so thick, filling her, stretching her like no one else had. The ripples and ridges on his long shaft that she had only vaguely felt before, rubbed along her tight walls, electrifying her already sensitized core.

His heat... she hadn’t realized how hot a man could be. He felt amazing.

He was inside her body with no barriers what-so-ever between them.

“Oo... oh...” She tensed, her muscles locking around his shaft as an orgasm ripped through her unexpectedly.

Red snarled softly as she trembled hard beneath him seconds before a hot gush of fluid surround his cock head.

He held himself still, his chest moving in deep, irregular breaths. He meticulously watched his lover enjoy just a taste of what he was capable of giving her.

“I take it that was good for you?” he rasped.

She nodded jerkily, caressing his torso languidly.

He couldn’t blame her for coming as fast as she did. From the minute he had pushed inside, she felt even more amazing than he had imagined. He was truly surprised he hadn’t blown his own load as yet and he wasn’t even half way inside her.

Bracing on his arms, he waited for her to relax before pushing in again, bumping her already sensitized clit. In response, her core rolled around him in a wave.

“God, Lizzy...” he slid in further, pushing at her tight walls, “I have never felt anything so wonderful in my entire life.”

“Re...” she broke off, a deep throated moan over taking her. She had never come that quick from straight penetration and certainly not without her fingers helping. He was stroking her so expertly, she felt her arousal growing before she knew it.

He knew this was going to be memorable, but she was even more responsive than he dreamed she’d be. Her obvious enjoyment made his all the more potent, sending a warmth spreading through his body.

When he did come, it was going to feel fucking phenomenal. He had to admit, the male in him was rejoicing at the thought of coming freely inside her. He had missed the sensation and was anticipating a spectacular release.

Dipping his head, he tongued her nipple into a hard peak, his bare shaft sliding further inside the molten cavern.

There was no way in hell anything was going to prevent him completing this union. If the next Messiah were to arrive at the door in the upcoming moments, Red knew he would remain exactly where he was.

He didn’t give a shit what was happening outside this room. Unless someone physically came through that door, he wasn’t about to leave the cradle of Lizzy’s thighs until they were well and truly finished.

He rolled her nipple with his thumb, dropping a soft kiss to her throat.

“This is where I want to be.” his voice deepened as he felt her spreading for him. “I have needed this from the moment I first laid eyes on you.”

“You couldn’t have known...” She broke off, gasping when he slid his entire length inside her. “Oh, God...” He was so thick. The ridges of his shaft dragged along her slick walls, making her pussy quiver in a fluttering wave.

“I knew.” he murmured contentedly withdrawing slowly, placing his tongue over the her pulse point as he pushed back inside. “God knew.” he was relatively sure. “Hell, I think everyone knew except you.” his mood was so high he found himself grinning at the absurdity of his next statement. “They were even taking bets on it.”

“Don’t stop...” she moaned breathlessly. The sharp, hot breath brushed against his neck, delighting him.

He bent his leg, placing his thigh under her raised one, changing his angle allowing him to slip in even deeper. His mouth concentrated on her neck, shoulders and breasts. Sucking, licking and nipping the glowing skin leisurely.

He groaned brokenly, slowly pumping his shaft inside her welcoming warmth.

“You’re so hot, baby.” He pushed at the tight walls grasping hold of him, pulling him in deeper. “So fucking tight...”

The condom had always made the ride so slick, he hadn’t realized how damned perfect she was. He could feel his sack growing heavier the more her body gripped at the extra skin, massaging his cock superlatively.

Their mouths clung languidly, their kisses both ardently passionate and amorously sensual.

Liz rubbed her smooth legs along his thighs. He pulled tighter on her waist, tilting her hips, as he dragged his shaft along her swollen clit.

She inhaled sharply, whimpering. “How did you learn to do that?”

Red enjoyed the reverence in her tone, his mouth curving into a smile.

Drawing back, he braced a hand against the low headboard, increasing his tempo. He deliberately watched her sinewy body undulating back along his cock.
“You do realize I’m going to fuck you bare from here on out, yes.” the man needed confirmation.

“Promise...” she gasped sharply, enjoying the slight dusting of hair which tapered down into his pubic area, as it brushed along her flat stomach.

“Oh, I fucking promise.” he snarled. “I’m going to take full advantage of this every chance I get.”

Lizzy’s young perky breasts, erect with arousal, bounced slightly under his constant assault. He felt the low throaty groan seconds before he actually heard it, as he watched her pinch and roll the dusky tips in order to ease the growing ache behind them.

Red ran his hand against the soft thatch of hair on her mound, laying the flat of his palm on her abdomen, covering her from mound to belly button. She was so tiny in comparison to him, so delicate.

Getting lost in her sweet cries of passion, he wrapped his hands about her waist. Drawing her against him, he focused on the sight of his heavy girth disappearing repeatedly into her wet hole.

He couldn’t believe there was anything more captivating than the sensual wave of her body as he made love to her. But as his bare cock came into view, glistening with her arousal, a low growl of satisfaction rumbled deep in his throat.

Red’s mouth lifted at the corner, watching as her brow furrowed critically, her mouth falling open as Liz released the sweetest cry of ecstasy he had ever heard.

She rolled her hips hypnotically into his in an effort to ease the building pressure inside her.

“That’s good,” he praised roughly, “fuck me with that tiny pussy.” he panted shakily, watching her make love with him.

Gripping the man’s ass, she pushed back against his long thrust, dragging the peak of her sex determinedly along his fat length.

“Help me...” her impassioned plea made his stomach flip wildly. “Do something.”

Hearing that sultry voice begging for more and feeling his own impending orgasm approaching, he dutifully doubled his efforts. Panting with the exertion, he got lost in the damp slide of their bodies moving together so rhythmically.

Liz had never felt anything so intimate before in her life. To know in mere moments he would come freely without restraint, filled her with excitement and a little uncertainty.

She had placed high expectations on this moment and hoped that it lived up to her dreams and imagination. Not to mention his.

So far, she was very pleased with their efforts.

“Let me hear you, honey.” Reaching down, he circled her abused clit lovingly with his fingers, “Come on, sweetheart.”

Over sensitized, she wriggled from his touch, the moment too intense to prolong. Red grasped her hip, keeping her in place.

There was no way in fucking hell was he going without her.

“Be a good girl and come for me...” he crooned silkily. “Come on my cock...”
“Ray...” She mewled, arching into him as the man gently pinched his fingers around her swollen flesh, giving her the jolt to slip over into the white hot release she so longed for.

That was the first time she’d said his name while he was balls deep inside her. For the first time in his life, he fucking loved his name. But only when she said it like that.

He’d never heard anyone say his name quite like that before. So passionate, filled with so much desire.

Her walls rippled around him, massaging his length, drawing tightly on his hard cock before shuddering with the power of her climax. Her knees tightened against his side, the slim legs shaking erratically as they gripped him.

Crying out, her body gave into his.

“I love watching you come.” he praised her, feeling the indescribable tingling along his spine and throbbing in his shaft intensify, signifying he was nearing the end.

The sight of her readily accepting his thick spread, the push and pull of her rosy labia enfolding his bare erection in a warm lover’s embrace... was incredibly and utterly satisfying.

As was the look of anticipated suspense on her glowing features.

“So you sure, baby...” he panted, the longing in his voice apparent.

“Ray, please.” She pleaded, tilting her pelvis up in invitation.

Correction, he forgot how good this felt.

He felt a frisson of pleasure and overwhelming anticipation that she truly wanted to share this deeply intimate moment, one she had never experienced before, with him.

The man concentrated on the repetitive movement of his hips easing his shaft into her cushioned depths. Slowing, he ran a large hand over the soft thigh brushing his side in the steady rocking motion he had established.

“Let me feel you...” she pleaded.

The tiny hands gripping his forearms and sharp sounds of enjoyment echoed around the room, and her beautiful features lit in euphoria, made his arousal spike.

Her eyes fluttered open, gazing up at him. The look in her eyes, the desire to share this with him made him fully relax.

Red bent his elbows, brushing his lips against his lover’s, their ragged breathy moans mingling as one. Her fingers curled into his side as his own worked through her thick mane of hair.

Their erratic breaths and tongues flicked sensually against each other. The natural give and take of his cock, pleasured her receptive flesh as they murmured ambiguous endearments aloud.

The sensation pushed the man over the edge as he gave into his body’s dictates.

Keeping his eyes locked on hers, Red let go... emptying himself into the woman.

He shook with the intensity of the powerful release, both gasping and moaning fervently as his cock jerked powerfully, expelling his thick essence in her suddenly tightly coiled body.
“Oh God, oh God...” she drawled methodic phrases of ethereal emotions, as his warmth hit her cervix, the experience literally mind blowing.

“Lizzy...” He breathed against her mouth as she clenched tightly around his cock, her little hand erotically scratching at his back. “God, baby...”

He had just come in Lizzy and the thought thrilled him no end. He could feel the hot proof backwash over his swollen cock head.

And it was the most intense experience of his life.

Easing to his forearms, as his chest pushed into her warm breasts, he laced his hand with hers. He squeezed, their fingers entwining. He felt the band of her engagement ring... his ring... against his fingers.

“Come here...” he whispered forcefully, bunching her hair in his fist. He palmed her tiny ass, pushing his cock head against her swollen cervix, pumping the remains of his hot load deep inside.

“When you feel me, baby?” he growled against her neck as the thick cream flowed in massive quantities from his sensitive slit.

“...Yes.” she moaned passionately. Her center flooded with his cum, leaving her feeling content and dreamy.

“Does it feel good?” he questioned roughly.

“More...” she lifted breathlessly, rocking her hips up to take what he had to give, “give me more.”

Red gripped her thigh, keeping it upright. Rocking slowly, he eased their bodies through the last of their spasms as his erection softened.

Reluctantly sliding free of the tight cavern, Red kissed her swollen lips sensually.

He dropped his lips against her neck, nuzzling her silky flesh, bringing his breathing back under control before rolling from the bed.

Leaving her warmth left him cold.

Coming back a moment later with a warm cloth, he cleaned up his mess, mesmerized by his arousal pouring freely from her body. The sight of his thick white cream wetting the soft brown hair covering her swollen sex, made his dick stir to life yet again.

Blinking away his focus, he cleaned himself off.

“Lift, baby.”

Liz blinked lethargically, finding the man unfurling a soft towel. She felt her cheeks redden at the realization that there was a growing wet spot under her bottom.

Moving a little, Red laid the cloth on the soiled sheet before crawling back into bed.

He slid in behind Lizzy, pulling her into the cradle of his body.

The sated woman yawned sleepily, wiggling against him before settling down. She blinked hazy eyes, trying to stay awake.
“Sleep, Lizzy...” his roughened voice soothed. Kissing her shoulder and neckline, Red whispered quietly watching as her breathing slowed and she eased into a deep, restful sleep.

Pulling the blankets over them, Red allowed his body and mind to assimilate all that had passed between them.

Well, that was... unexpected. So unexpected, he couldn’t quite grasp the fact that it actually happened.

But it had.

Not only was his body still thrumming with the vestiges of how wonderful the experience had been, leaving him incredibly sexually gratified, he had the evidence right here between them.

He could smell himself mixed in with her own intoxicating aroma, calming his heart.

He couldn’t remember when he had felt so happy. Even the simple act of holding Lizzy’s hand made him feel peaceful. And her kiss, Lizzy made a kiss feel brand new.

Which meant the sex itself was mind blowing. With all his experience and her naiveté, they made quite the pair. But even with all his experience, only she could have made that feel... so damned fulfilling.

He wouldn’t admit it to anyone, except Lizzy. But he had never experienced such a raw and powerful emotional connection with anyone... not even his ex-wife.

Lizzy made him experience so many wonderful emotions he hadn’t felt in years. He honestly felt like his soul was at peace for the first time in his life.

But with that, came the other side.

The jealousy. His long dormant territorial side.

Since his entire focus had been on Elizabeth, he knew that she didn’t have a wandering eye and seemed completely oblivious to the men who stared at her.

But he wasn’t.

All he knew was that when he warded off Brad’s intentions or he stared down an admirer, he felt something inside him click.

He felt the Alpha Male inside diminish somewhat if he simply set his arm around her waist.

Red felt a surge of pride that he tried desperately to suppress, but then he didn’t.

Talk about marking his territory. No man could dispute his rights after what transpired tonight.

Of course he couldn’t say it right out, but he would make certain that other men knew and kept their place.

Elizabeth mewled softly, cuddling closer to him before settling into the circumference of his arms.

He lay his chin against the soft curls of her hair, his hand naturally curving around her breast. Even in sleep, Liz leaned into his touch. He smiled tenderly down at her averted profile before reaching to turn out the lights.
He settled more comfortably into his pillow, his thumb absently brushing across a convenient nipple.

He could not wait to see what tomorrow brought where this woman was concerned. She had pleased him as no other tonight.

She pleased him in so many different ways, and often surprised him just how inventive she could be.

He realized suddenly that his life with Elizabeth Keen was just beginning and he also knew... he couldn’t wait to share it with her.

Chapter End Notes

I’m sure we’re all aware that Spader is “cut” from his nude scene in Supernova.

I know this because Beta Jami not only slowed the scene to a crawl. She paused it, zoomed in and stared at it for a good hour while I patiently contemplated the universe and waited for the movie to resume.

I have yet to see the ending...

I am also bombarded by the fact because Beta Jami has also made that screen cap her desktop photo, so I see Spader in all his naked glory almost daily.

But we have been having a discussion in email with some readers who think of Reddington as being different than Spader. One side of the issue wanted au natural. The other, wanted him cut. Ouch.

So we did a little of both worlds and gave him a little trim off the top, hopefully pleasing both parties.

Could I run for office or what?

Hope you guys take no offense and just enjoy the hell out of this little outing.
Having overslept the next morning, Liz found herself having to rush about in preparation for the wedding.

But Red’s thoughts were running to a rush of another sort. The man was valiantly trying to set aside his desire to be with her again.

There was a new intimacy between them that had not been there the day before. He had almost felt something like this with his ex-wife after their daughter was born.

The emotion was close to elation verging on euphoria.

They had both been so exhausted, Carla more than himself, of course. The labor had been long and tedious. But as they held their sleeping infant between them, there was a shared feeling of excitement, fear... hope for the future.

Last night, Red had experienced the same emotions, along with a sense of unity and overwhelming love.

As he watched Liz dry off, sneaking furtive looks in the mirror from time to time, he felt his body start to react. Liz’s hands moved her breasts this way and that as she dusted powder and dabbed perfume. Small glimpses of that beautiful ass, had him moaning inwardly.

Determinedly clenching his fists at his side, he turned away from temptation. The sex he could actually handle, but to experience the addictive emotional bond they had shared, that was proving an insurmountable obstacle.

Red glanced at the clock, finding their time short. While he wouldn’t normally give a shit, he thought Lizzy might.

She had been looking forward to attending this wedding and wearing her new dress for what seemed like ages to the man.

There seemed to be an air of contained excitement about the woman in regards to the wedding itself.

He had gathered from Francis, that Lia’s expectations ran as high as Lizzy’s. The man had said, Lia was looking forward to seeing it because of the caliber of the wedding party.

Red could understand that, he supposed. The rich and infamous did tend to have a certain flair about them.

So maybe that was what Lizzy was looking forward to? The venue, reception... the bride’s dress.

He likened it to himself enjoying a fine vintage or a long conversation with an intelligent, eloquent orator.

“I’m going to shave.” he quietly resigned himself to waiting for the right moment, the thought of disappointing Lizzy more powerful than his heightened libido in this instance.
She came alongside him, grabbing her hair dryer from the basin, critically surveying her reflection before attempting to dry the wet strands.

Liz inadvertently dropped a hair pin which had been dangling from her mouth. She muttered an oath, bending over directly before him. Red glanced down.

He stood transfixed on the soft weight of the robe covering her shapely curves. It was evident she wasn’t wearing anything beneath. The outline of her body was draped by the silken folds, the imprint of her vulva clearly visible, right there for him to see.

Holy hell...

He gripped the handle of his lathering brush tightly. His eyes closing momentarily to his lapse of control. Jabbing the bristles into the thick foam, he gathered some on the ends before smoothing the frothy cream around his face. Dropping the brush into the bowl, he snatched up the razor and slid it over his cheek.

“Can I watch?” Liz asked, having arisen, pushing her hair from her face, intently scowling at a wayward strand of her bangs as it waved haphazardly about. The woman blew fruitlessly, annoyed when the soft hair fell right back into place.

He gestured for her to have a seat on the low part of the basin where she had sat her cosmetics.

Liz watched the razor glide over his skin, then his fingers checking the cleared area before rinsing the blade. “Can I do it?”

He looked down at her and where her robe fell away from her leg, giving him a tantalizing view of the top of her thigh.

“Have you ever done it before?” He asked, rinsing the blade again.

She shook her head. “No.” she piped up gingerly. “But I’m a quick study.”

“Hop up here.” He patted the higher counter, grabbing the supplies he’d been using. “Firm, down unless I say otherwise, rinse the blade after every stroke.”

He handed the razor, pulling it out of her reach just before she took hold of it.

“And it goes without saying,” he cast her a stern glance, “don’t slit my throat.”

He stepped into the space between her open legs, placing his hands on her thighs. She did as directed, before hesitating when she got to his upper lip.

“You take over.” while she had enjoyed the interval immensely, she hesitated at this point.

“You can do it.” He encouraged.

Inwardly holding his breath, hoping like hell he had a top lip when all was said and done, he readied himself appropriately. Her tongue poked out the side of her mouth, making it damn hard not to smile.

“Phew...” She relaxed and rinsed the blade, peering back at her work. She ran her fingers over the bare area, tracing his lips with her thumbs.

Red stayed very still under her touch. He watched her face. She was lost in what she was trying to accomplish.
Tilting his head up, he could feel her position and reposition the blade several times before committing to the task.

“You can press harder.”

“My God, don’t talk.” she practically snapped his head off.

“Relax, you’re doing fine.” He bent the other way, stretching his neck to assist in her efforts.

Taking one last swipe, Liz felt his neck, finding it smooth as a baby’s bottom. “There. How’s that?”

He felt over his face and neck proclaiming a job well down. “Give me a wet cloth will you.”

She wet the soft cloth, ringing out the excess water before wiping it across his face herself. His eyes shut to the soothing touch.

“Aftershave lotion?”

“Behind you,” his voice lowered softly, not wanting to break the quiet moment, “black bottle.”

She opened it, sniffing the warm and mellow aromatic liquid. Pouring a bit into her palm, she rubbed her hands together then smoothed it over his face and neck. “More?”

“No..” He muttered. “It’s good.” he glanced down, watching the gentle slope of her breast and nipple move under the light weight of her robe, and couldn’t take it anymore. He needed to touch her... badly.

“You smell nice.” she sighed.

He dropped his nose into the crook of her neck breathing in her scent, his hands encompassing her small waist. “So do you. You always do.”

“Yeah, say that after I’ve just left the gym.” she teased. “Or had a training session with Silas.” her pretty brow pulled into a dark scowl. “I’m beginning to hate that man.”

“As long as you don’t hate me...” he murmured quietly. His mouth gently connected to hers for a brief eternity. “You... smell... good.”

She smiled, “I haven’t even put anything on yet.” she giggled, his nose nuzzling tickling her neckline.

“You don’t have to wear anything.” he touched the tip of his tongue to her, tasting the warm flesh. “I love how you smell. I’m happiest when you’re near me.”

She understood what he meant. It didn’t matter if he had just come from the shower, a long flight or a smoke filled room. Anytime or anyplace they happened to be, she would catch a whiff of him and feel a maelstrom of emotions ranging from happiness to safety to, most recently, intense arousal.

She couldn’t remember when it had started, she only knew when she smelled his scent, all was right with the world.

He stepped further into the space between her legs, the fabric of his towel rubbing erotically against her vulnerable flesh. She gasped as his warm palms encased her buttocks pulling her insistently closer.

Red ran his hand from her knee to her thigh, pushing the robe open, baring more of her leg. His eyes dropped to his handiwork.

He lifted her chin, his mouth parting hers hungrily as he angled her head, devouring her soft lips.

She mewed softly lifting her arms about his neck to encourage his actions.

Leaning back on the basin she braced her hand, wrapping her bare legs around his waist, lifting herself closer to the man. Grunting against her mouth, he cupped her ass, rocking her against him in the ancient movements of lovemaking which produced that wonderful sound again.

The sound that made his cock vibrate.

He kissed the dip in her throat, trailing down to where her robe gaped open, to kiss the very top of her breast.

He tightened his embrace about the small waist, the action easing aside her robe. He revealed more of the pale mound, his mouth working a sensual path about the soft curve, halting just inches away from her nipple.

All that stood between them now was his damnable towel. All he had to do was drop it and slide into her heat.

Red felt very comfortable at this moment. He had taken the time to have a very long talk with those closest to him about interruptions and untimely intrusions.

How he had got laid in the last few years was a wonder, but just these last few days... it seemed the entire fucking universe was against him. Especially given that a very sexually willing woman was sharing his bed.

Some would say that he had more than ample time with Lizzy, but if anyone asked him... Red would have said that his devout wish was to have just one day to stay in bed and make love to Lizzy whenever the mood struck... and to hell with the outside world.

In Red Reddington’s world that was almost an unheard of concept. Odd, he had never really minded before.

Liz’s eyes wandered the room behind her, her thoughts certainly not on her surroundings until... she gasped pushing frantically against the man’s stocky frame. She had noticed the clock on the basin.

“We... uh,” Liz sighed her distraction, squirming slightly trying to close herself up to Red’s attention, “better get ready.”

“Oh huh.” the distracted reply came at a leisurely pace. Red worked his hand between their bodies, ignoring her feeble protest to halt his advancement.

“...Red.” she prevented him reaching his goal, her hand stoutly refusing to move, which protected her virtue. “I have to get ready. It takes me longer than you.” Scooting forward, she managed to wrangle some space between them. “Though, I’m not sure why. You wear more clothes than I do.”

“I can remedy that...” he pulled her back determinedly.

“Later.” She moved past him skillfully, pushing at his hands. “You can sniff me and whatever, all you want... later.”

She was openly flirting with him. She had said he could do... whatever. And she had said it in the proper tone and she had given him the look. The possibilities of... whatever, filled his mind.

“I’ll hold you to that.” He said, walking stiffly into the closet.

Opening the drawer, he pulled out a pair of boxers slipping them on just as she breezed back in, wearing nothing but her bra and panties.

“I forgot to grab my dress.” she grimaced apologetically, grasping the beautiful garment frantically.

“Jesus...” Red gaped, seeing the dark thatch of hair on her mound and her rosy pink nipples through the delicate lavender lace barely covering her. “Oh, you conveniently forgot your dress.” He nodded thoughtfully. “And then you come in here wearing nothing but a smile...”

Liz glanced down at her lingerie, a little perplexed. A thought fleetted through her anxious mind.

“I don’t know where I put my shoes.” she began a frantic search throughout the spacious area, oblivious to the fact that her body was on display with every movement she made.

Red lifted his hands in the air shaking his head, raising his eyes to the heavens. “And now she’s bending and stretching and parading around like she doesn’t have a care in the world, and does she give a shit what she’s doing to me...” he voiced his frustration, muttering quietly aside.

It was official. God hated him. Was punishing him. And it was a painful punishment.

His whole body ached to touch her, to be touched by her. He would give anything to have her. He boiled inside with the need to be with her.

He wanted her so fucking badly. His head throbbed, both of them, one more than the other, granted.

He enjoyed the build up to making love until they couldn’t take it anymore and the only release was being connected to one another. He loved getting her on the edge of–

But it wasn’t going to happen. He knew as much.

“Are you all right?” Liz asked. He refocused his attention, finding her staring at him with a concerned look.

“Why wouldn’t I be all right?” He asked almost pleasantly.

“Well, that’s what I’m asking.” she was almost annoyed. “Red Reddington, if you spoil this for me today...” she pointed an accusing finger.

He stepped threateningly, “I need to be with you again...” his passionate gaze swept her frame, “more than you can possibly imagine.”

Her eyes widened at the incredibly lustful way the man was looking at her. She was sure if she had been dressed, her clothes would have been ash within seconds.

“Well, I understand that...and I so appreciate the thought.” she tried to placate.

“Oh, you appreciate the thought.”

“Of course I do, you know I do.” Liz wailed. “But you’ve been to hundreds of these things, thousands. This will be my only one.” she turned the ‘pout’ his way. “It seems to me, that you could put aside your needs for once.” she stepped forward threateningly as well, her fists clenched at her side. “And help me find my shoes! I want to see this wedding.”
All the fight went out of Red. She looked so damned cute standing there like she was.

Red took a steadying breath, his grip on the dresser next to him tightening. “Fine.” he quirked his head jerkily. “With that said, you should put some clothes on before I forget all my good intentions, get you down on all fours and fuck the hell out of you.”

Liz blinked her disorientation. Actually, that sounded just fine to her. But she was torn and she did have a new dress and shoes.... and jewelry.

“Are we fine here?” Red wanted an immediate decision.

Liz hesitated only slightly before taking the dress from it’s hanger. She stepped into the cool tulle, wiggling it up her body.

“Can you zip me up please.”

He paused in buttoning his trousers, his annoyance still not completely satisfied. He reached, however pulling the small tab up slowly before leaning to kiss the bare shoulder, the cut of the dress allowed.

He felt better when he noticed her reaction to his touch when he latched the tiny eye hook. He patted the indentation of her waist signifying when he finished.

He looped a tie around his neck in the same lavender color as her dress. She turned about gazing at the finished product.

“Oh, we match.” she reached out, running her finger down the rich silk. “Everyday with you really is like Prom.”

“I got laid Prom Night.” he replied sourly, then not so much so. His look stern. “Should I assume that this evening will end with the same results?”

“Yes, you should.” She batted her lashes flirtatiously, before sitting down at her make-up mirror.

“Well, I do.” he grumbled. He grabbed a cigar, heading out onto the balcony away from temptation itself.

Liz watched the man’s retreating back, a smile overtaking her face.

“Well, good.” she called after him.

She was really enjoying this flirtatious side of Red. He had been flirtatious before but hadn’t really been aware how much attention the man had truly paid her. But now that his touch was more than acceptable, she was very conscious of Red’s appreciation of her presence in his life.

Her eyes softened at the thought. At one point, she was sure she’d never get involved with another man. But now, here she was... involved beyond scope.

Liz’s eyes drifted towards the man as he settled himself on the spacious deck. A odd emotion settling in her stomach.

She didn’t recall ever feeling anything like it before.

Closing her eyes, she tried envisioning her first year of marriage with Tom, but could only remember feeling anxious, stressed, scared. And it wasn’t because of Tom. It was just the weight of the adult world caving in around them.
But if she thought about it, she should really be experiencing those emotions now, ten fold. She was an FBI Agent dating Red Reddington. A renowned criminal.

Surely she should feel some anxiousness. But she didn’t. Not one bit. She felt... content. Serene even.

Because she trusted Red. He had tirelessly proven himself time and time again. She knew he would always have her back, would always support her. Constantly repeating the mantra seemed to engrave some image on her heart and mind. It was an image she was beginning to value above all else.

Red looked at his watch, in turn causing her to do the same. She started when she saw the time. She would have to woolgather later. She had a lot to do before their departure.

Turning away from the wind, Red lit the cigar, puffing until the end was completely lit. Drawing the sweet smoke, he let it sit on his tongue before blowing a thin stream up into the gusty air.

He drew in again, retrohaling, blowing most of the heady smoke out through his nose, tasting the full flavor the cigar had to offer. Alternating between the two methods every other draw, he was surrounded by the relaxing aroma in no time.

He sat, staring off into the trees thinking about last night. Normally it would bother him that he could not seem to get it out of his mind but for some reason, he was not going to even try to explain... he did not feel in anyway discontented.

It was an odd feeling but he thought that he could get used to it. The thought brought a smile to his lips.

“Drink?”

He turned his head to see Lizzy standing at the door with a tumbler in hand.

“Yes, thank you.” He sipped the cool beverage, sneaking a drag of his cigar before the taste of the liquor dissipated.

“Yes or no to nylons?” she asked the crucial question.

“You do tend to get chilled.” he offered both alternatives. “We may be in the shade and it does get breezy... but you don’t need them.” he glanced at her tanned legs.

“I’ll go ahead and put some on,” she shrugged playfully, “if it gets too hot, I’ll take them off.”

Red rolled out the cigar, tapping off the last of the cherry. “Decision made then.”

Finishing off his drink, Red guided her back inside and straightened his tie, placing it under his vest. He put on his jacket waiting for her.

She walked out with her nylons and shoes in her hand. She bent over, working the nude stocking over her foot, before sliding it up her leg.

Red stood there, transfixed by the show. He didn’t think there was anything more fun than taking those off, but watching as they were put on, was just as enjoyable.

Especially when he watched her run her hand up her calf, straightening the soft fabric, before raising her skirt and adjusting the elastic around her bronzed thigh.

She balanced herself on her leg, then wobbled. Trying again, she just couldn’t keep her balance on the weakened leg.

“Sit down.” He directed. Taking the stretchy fabric, he knelt before her. Bunching the hose in his hand, he slid it over her foot, making sure the toe was aligned correctly, before sliding it up her leg.

The warmth of his touch delighted the woman, sending chills up her spine.

By the time he got to her knee, they both were breathing a bit more rapidly, which amused Red no end.

“What?” she asked, a slight quiver to her voice.

“Normally I am told, one should be aroused when assisting a woman undress,” he inched the stocking up her leg watching his progress, “not the other way around.”

He pushed the sheer fabric over her knee completing his task, then held his hand out, helping her stand. He ran his hands up her leg, adjusting the elastic at her thigh.

“I don’t know...” She said breathlessly, “it just sounds like an old-wives tale to me.” He looked up at her, grinning slightly.

He took her shoe, slipping it on her foot, palming the object in his hand as Lizzy balanced herself on his shoulder, to fit the other.

He waited, holding her hand as she stood in the low heels. “This is your first excursion after your recent injury, how do they feel?”

She held his hand, taking a tentative step and then another. “It feels okay. No pain.” she clasped her hands together joyously. “Oh, I’m so happy because I love these shoes.”

Liz walked cautiously to the dresser, slipping on the jewelry he had purchased before grasping her new bag.

She reached for the door handle only to find herself being pulled back into Red’s embrace.

“The minute I find an opportunity...” his rough voice tickled her ear, “I’m going to warm you exactly like I did last night...” the sybaritic statement delighting her no end, “in the very same manner.”

Red’s mouth curved sensually as he felt the woman relax in his arms. He crooked his head, leaning down to her level to tease her lips with soft, fleeting caresses only just touching the surface of her mouth, leaving the woman wanting for more.

Liz pushed to her toes, wrapping her arms around his neck. Flattening her breasts against his chest, she methodically deepened the kiss.

Red ran his hands over her shapely bottom, kneading the tight cheeks provocatively. Bunching the billowing skirt, his fingers brushed the lace of her panties while capturing her small whimper of pleasure in his mouth.

A soft knock on the door alerted them that the car was waiting. Red tapped back in response, loathe to break the contact just yet.

He could not resist one last squeeze of that luscious bottom. Reluctantly pulling back, the small smile reappeared as he looked down into her deep blue eyes, his own sweeping the kiss swollen lips possessively.
Just knowing he was going to cock tease her all damn day, heightened the man’s mood two-fold because after all...

A little foreplay never hurt anyone...

While Liz didn’t know the couple personally, she still couldn’t help but get a little weepy during the ceremony.

Not only was the bride beautiful, the venue was idyllic. While it was a large area, it was surrounded by lush trees, flowers and romance. Giving not only the bride and groom, but the guests, a sense of privacy.

Red chuckled softly, handing over a handkerchief to Liz. She appreciated the gesture greatly because the other guys in their party gave her friends the business when the couple repeated touching vows and exchanged the rings... things that touched a woman’s heart.

The mother’s in the bridal party both offered endearingly touching thoughts on each perspective new family member.

Liz had to admit, both speeches had been meticulously prepared. She held her breath in anticipation of what was to come. She had been to weddings before and usually one or the other side of the family would somehow cause trouble.

While such antics sometimes proved entertaining, Liz was so very pleased in this instance, to see so much love given on both sides.

One of her favorite moments of the ceremony was when the couple lit a candle, signifying their unity.

As the officiant spoke of commitment and love, Liz gripped Red’s hand, dabbing her eyes with the pre-offered handkerchief.

Red squeezed the small hand in his, kissing it gently as the priest gave permission for the groom to kiss his bride.

He laughed quietly as the women sniffled as all arose. A boisterous clapping followed as the couple was first introduced as man and wife then took the obligatory walk down the aisle.

Red turned towards Elizabeth, an odd light shining in his eyes. She questioned it silently, her attention being caught by Mark’s quiet chuckle.

Amanda was making a show of having the man check that her makeup was still intact, swiping feverishly at imaginary mascara marks beneath her immaculately made up eyes.

“Don’t you love weddings.” Francis grinned as he hugged a weepy Lia against his side. “So many vulnerable women.” he sent a teasing glance down to the tiny woman. “So little time.”

Liz smacked the man smartly on his arm, causing Francis to wince painfully.

“Flesh wound here!” the man cringed, holding the area protectively.

“Who’s the vulnerable one now.” Lia quipped playfully.

The reception was an epic gala affair with delicious food and tasteful décor.

Everyone watched as the bride and groom cut a magnificent cake which was of course, followed by the bouquet and garter toss.

Liz was pleasantly surprised to see Red right up front with the gentlemen lined up for the event.

But as it turned out, Red’s participation consisted of nothing more than forcibly holding Francis back from catching the garter. Even though the young man struggled valiantly against an entertained and amused older opponent, he never gained very much ground.

Liz had never seen Red laughing so freely before and she found herself laughing right along with him.

Watching the fight Francis was putting up was hilarious.

The man virtually clawed at the floor with everything he had, trying to win the prize. But Red gripped his belt in a stronghold, not giving the younger man an inch of wiggle room.

Liz, Lia and Amanda were a little shy about going up for their turn at the bouquet. None of them well acquainted with the other ladies in attendance. But they stuck together, playfully jabbing elbows, as the bride let the bouquet fly...

Liz was totally shocked when the fragrant bunch of roses landed smack in her outstretched hand. She stared at the hastily clutched sprig, trying to ignore the jostling and good natured ribbing going on around her.

She gaped at the flowers in hand, quickly cradling them to her chest when another woman made a swipe for them. She scowled hard at the intruder to her space as Red’s deep laughter echoed from across the room.

He sauntered across the gleaming hardwood floor towards her, his mood high.

“T’d back off if I were you.” he warned the other woman as he approached, his eyes dancing mischievously. “She knows people…”

Francis Holbrook swaggered past throwing Liz a smug look.

Red was amused when the other woman’s complexion paled slightly as she made a rather hasty exit from the scene. Evidently Francis’ reputation had proceeded him.

Seconds later, Red’s warm breath tickled Liz’s shoulder as he dropped a kiss to the bare flesh. “Congratulations, my little bride to be.”

Liz lifted scrunched brows having noticed the odd exchange. “What’s with her?”

Red glanced after the departing woman, more pleasant things on his mind.

The man had taken every opportunity presented to brush his hand along Lizzy’s body anywhere and everywhere he could inconspicuously touch, throughout the entire proceedings.

He made certain the woman knew he had not forgotten his earlier promise of how the evening should end.

Turning gentle eyes towards Lizzy, Red held out his hand. She blushed a deep crimson, being only one of three couples on the dance floor. She could feel hundreds of pairs of eyes on her, and while Red could shrug off such attention, she was as yet, unaccustomed to the scrutiny.

She placed her fingers into his warm palm trustingly, however, as he pulled her into his embrace.

Swaying gently among the other couples, Red took the opportunity to reflect on the time and place. Under the low lights, a beautiful woman in his arms, the evening seemed filled with enchantment.

The bride was lovely and seemed so very much in love. He couldn’t help but wonder if he would ever get Lizzy in such a state of mind. Where they wouldn’t be guests at a wedding but the honored couple themselves.

He remembered back to his wedding with Carla. He had actually stalled for months, struggling with the decision to ask her the important question or not.

There had been doubts and a certain fear that he attributed to his youthful age and inexperience in the world. But with Lizzy, there was only an eager anticipation about when he could ask her and it be acceptable.

He didn’t want her feeling backed into a corner. Like she had to make an immediate decision. He didn’t want her stressed out over the matter or feeling that pressure he had felt.

But that didn’t mean he didn’t want to ask.

As the song came to an end, he led his partner back to the table and it’s grinning occupants. While Liz and the girls fussed over the fragrant bouquet and chatted about how elegant and pretty the entire affair turned out to be, exceeding their expectations. Red and the other men squeezed in a smattering of business on the side.

Time was made for several dances with their respective partners however.

And of course, Dembe and Silas cornered the market on the other eligible ladies.

Before the festivities started winding down, a tipsy Francis came up, grinning madly, showing off the party favors he was sporting. Huge glasses, an equally enormous hat and a blinding bow tie.

The young man always found the most fun wherever he managed to be. His lust for life was contagious.

Dragging the girls off to the photo booth, they too, donned boas and tiaras before taking a series of photos to commemorate the memory of a wonderful day.

Liz gestured Red over in the midst of all the merrymaking, giggling happily before plunking a top hat down on his head. She somehow managed to persuade him into a series of photo shoots of the same caliber.

It was an odd feeling, purposely taking a photograph of himself. After all, there was a perfectly good one on the Post Office wall.

They had taken quite a few the day of the city tour but Red’s instinctive survival mechanism had kicked in and later Liz had complained that there was not one good front face of the man to be found.

As she posed next to him, laughing joyously at the absurdity of the moment, he could not help but feel his affection grow with each passing flash of the camera.
At one point in the proceedings, he turned the tables on the woman having suffered through several coquettish attempts to embarrass him, by turning her into a full on kiss.

His mouth worked expertly on hers, teasing her tongue languidly. He tightened his arms about her waist, his fingers spreading over the lower part of her back as he pressed insistently forward, melding her body to his.

He felt all resistance drain away as she responded fully for a brief eternity before another bright flash brought her to her senses but not before Red got a picture he wanted.

They waited patiently for the photos to come off the printer. Looking around at all the festive revelry he realized that he had actually had a very good time today.

He watched Lizzy eagerly flip through the photos, sharing each one. Her face beamed with happiness. Each member of the group ran around like chickens with their heads cut off sharing in the frivolity.

There was a warmness in his heart that had not been there before. Red really never allowed himself to let go to the extent he had this evening. There was always a part that remained reclusive, his mind never really shutting off from the danger surrounding him at any given time.

He was surprised to note that he had not once checked on Silas’ whereabouts. He was heartened to see the ever vigilant individual standing off to the side, smiling at all the shenanigans going on around him.

Lizzy’s laughter pulled Red’s attention plus the fact that she had lay a gentle hand on his rolled up sleeve.

Dembe, Francis and Mark posed with their weapons in the classic 007 style, while Lia and Amanda played the proverbial bombshells. Silas was even pulled into the fray and immediately took center stage, his powerful frame working well to his advantage.

Even Red was impressed with the end product, his brows lifting to signify as much. Liz crumbled into a heap of helpless laughter.

“Oh, I wanted to be a Bond girl!” she playfully whined.

“You’re Red Reddington’s girl.” the man reminded artfully for her ears alone. “Which is infinitely better.”

He looped her arm through his, laying her warm palm on his bare flesh.

“We better get these characters back to the hotel before they’re too much to handle.” he nodded in the said direction, going off to gather up his little entourage.

Red had not the time or the opportunity to practice one of his favorite pastimes until this evening. Taking advantage of the down time afforded them, he actually sat in on a few of the higher stake games at the tables.

Liz was excited to see the big man in action. She had heard of his legendary prowess from Silas and Francis, of course, but until this moment, had never experienced the thrill herself.
They had bounced a few tables, trying just about everything before Red and the boys wanted to try their luck at Baccarat.

She personally found the game confusing. Silas had tried explaining it to her, but she just hadn’t been able to catch on.

He thought she wouldn’t enjoy it much anyway, since it was a high rollers game and movement was pretty swift. With that said, she had avoided it at all costs.

She had preferred the more relaxed fare. Poker, blackjack, the roulette wheel.

After about an hour she and the girls settled in behind the guys at a private table. Christopher had sent refreshments and food. She had eaten at the wedding but she found she was famished and was very grateful that their host had been so very thoughtful.

In between fun conversation with Lia and Amanda, Liz watched the guys and had to agree with Silas. They did move quickly through the cards. She could not keep up with what was what. She knew the stakes were high because even Silas had began pacing back and forth at one particular ‘iffy’ moment.

The tension was broken by an abrupt raucous celebration. Francis pounded Red heartedly on the shoulder having jumped up triumphantly as the man played his hunch.

Liz pushed from the table, excusing herself. She slid in artfully behind Red’s stool, leaning her chin on his shoulder.

“What’s going on?” she smiled, casually pressing her breasts into his back.

“He just won a huge pot.” Mark applauded the man. “Much to Christopher’s dismay.” He chuckled his delight.

Chris smiled openly, shaking his head. “I knew what I was in for, prior to your arrival.”

“Do you have a reputation?” Liz whispered playfully in the man’s ear, the undertone of the question more than apparent.

Red turned his head slightly, smiling at the woman. “This surprises you?” he questioned, kissing her cheek.

“No.” she laughed in a carefree manner, “it’s just, that reputation of yours exceeds even my expectations sometimes.” she smiled, leaning into the kiss his mouth fully. “I’m going to play Blackjack with the girls.”

Red turned his head, searching for the extra guards. “Have fun, baby.” he was satisfied of her safety. “Bet big.”

Liz rolled her eyes, dropping her lips against his neck as another stack of chips was shoved his way.

As they played their respective games, Red glanced over frequently when ever he heard the woman’s laughter, feeling a smile spread across his own face in response.

It pleased him to see her having a good time.

She had obviously taken to these women, and the female dealer now seemed part of the group. A good time was being had by all.
He had never had the opportunity to see Liz interact with her own sex in a normal setting. It was obvious that the card game was just a ploy for the women to share gossip and bitch about the men in their lives.

Red watched Liz return from a third trip to the ladies room. He was amused that she listed slightly as she walked and when she took her seat, she almost missed the mark.

The hour was getting late.

Pleased with his success at the tables, Red cashed in his chips.

Lizzy was just this side of tipsy and he was in dire need of a shower, so while the others decided to play for a while longer, he and Lizzy were going to retire for the evening.

Caressing her neckline provocatively with his lips, Red smiled as Liz giggled her delight at the slight tickling sensation.

“You ready to go to bed, Pussy Galore?” his tone matched Sean Connery’s to a ‘T’.

“Oh, say that again.” she lifted astonished eyes. “And in the same accent.”

His smile widened as he helped her from her seat.

“Accents do it for you, huh?” he mused to himself, his eyes dropping to the deep cleft of her breasts. “I speak several different languages as well. Which do you prefer?”

The other girls at the table were suitably impressed, all making appropriately cutting remarks.

“You know...” Francis nudged Red, his glassy eyes dancing merrily in Liz’s direction as she gathered her things, “we are in Vegas, a couple hundred chapels everywhere.”

“No!” Red groused, looking over his shoulder quickly to make sure Lizzy hadn’t heard the little twerp.

Francis tittered even as Red wrapped his hand around the young man’s nape, dragging him forward, holding the boys bloodshot eyes steadily.

“And don’t you do it either.” the older man warned.

Francis snickered drunkenly. “Yeah, okay.”

“Watch him.” Red turned warning eyes towards Silas. “Make sure he gets back to the Villa.”

Silas gave a lazy salute, absently pulling the handle on his machine. In the next second, he had dragged Francis to the slot beside him, shoving a bucket full of coins at the inebriated man.

“Baby?” Red searched out Elizabeth. “You ready?”

Liz turned around in circles, her face perplexed. “I can’t find my purse.”

Lia piped up, “Maybe you left it in the ladies room?”

“Oh my God...” Amanda’s face showed her concern. “Did you leave it at the wedding?”

“Or...” Red lifted the strap of the fancy little bag, which lay against Liz’s bare shoulder, he waited for Liz to make the connection.
“Oh you found it!” All three women seemed to breathe a sigh of relief.

“Ready now?” he was all set to usher the woman through the crowded casino area.

“My bouquet!” Liz was devastated.

“In your right hand.” Red helpfully supplied, nodding to the sprig.

Again the women were very grateful for his timely intervention.

“And on that note...” he nodded in a gentlemanly fashion, “we wish you ladies a very good evening and the best of luck at the tables.”

He carefully guided a wobbly Lizzy out into the coolness of the night. He glanced at the pretty profile all sorts of wickedly sinful visions dancing in his head all of which he reluctantly was forced to dismiss.

It would not be right to take advantage of her in such a condition.

Sometimes he cursed his code of ethics and tonight he was unleashing a string of vulgarity in his mind, that would make a Sailor blush.
May 19

The short drive from the hotel to the Villa had been entertaining enough to pull Red from his doldrums.

On the best of days, Lizzy was affectionate and even playful. She enjoyed being held and kissed, and seemed to especially relish their time in bed. Or at least, that was the story from Red’s perspective.

But drunk Lizzy... was something entirely unexpected, which isn’t to say...not unpleasantly so.

What had started innocently enough with her cuddling against him, laying her head against his shoulder in quiet contentment, had eventually graduated to the woman literally squirming into his lap, becoming amusingly demanding of his attentions.

Red smiled warmly at the less than suave gestures generated by such impulsive quests. He almost felt as if Lizzy were a kitten searching for a source of nourishment, as she, at one point... inexplicably nuzzled the front of his expensive shirt. He expected at any moment, she might start kneading him to get the desired results, whatever they were in her mind.

He could not be less than affected by such naïveté at one point returning the affection in kind. His lips gently trailed a searing path along the silky flesh of her nape.

He had meant it as nothing more than a gentle reassurance but the action had the opposite effect, in it encouraged the woman to new heights of exploration.

He chuckled against the sweet mouth ravishing his as Lizzy’s hands accosted his person at every turn. She more than aggressively pulled at the tails of his shirt, working her way under the light fabric, her warm touch encompassing every inch of his available torso.

Her palms flattened on the hardness of his abdomen, the slim fingers running through the smattering of hair which led onto his chest. She squeezed his nipples hard, causing Red’s amusement to grow by leaps and bounds as he jerked from such indelicate handling.

Fortunately, her attention span moved quickly in such a state and soon enough he was being man-handled at every turn as she tugged on the secure buckle of his belt.

He tried to halt his throaty chuckle for he had reached to assist in one instance only to have his hand knocked aside unceremoniously.

“I can do it.” she grumbled her dissension, as she advanced her assault only to be waylaid by the layer upon layer of lilac tulle which crinkled delicately in thick bunches in Lizzy’s uncoordinated hands as she pushed uselessly at the skirts as she attempted to straddle his thick thighs.

“Where the hell...” she muttered irritably, wading through the thick tulle as best she could.

Taking pity on her, Red bunched the sheer fabric around her hips, baring her thighs for his viewing pleasure... inadvertently unearthing the object she had previously sought.
“Oh, there it is.” she nodded amiably, as though she had stumbled over the discovery herself. Her uncooperative fingers clumsily yanked at the heavy buckle to no avail, yet again.

“What the hell is wrong with this thing?” she muttered gruffly. Undeterred from her lack of headway, she tugged on the clasp with more determination.

Red shook his head ruefully, his amusement barely contained as the woman roughly wrenched him this way at that in her pursuit to free him from his confinement.

“I don’t think this,” he waved a hand over the simplistic catch, “is the problem, sweetheart.”

“Well, there’s something wrong with it.” she frowned disgustedly at the unyielding enemy, huffing her irritation.

Red’s chuckle deepened as Lizzy focused intently on the gadget, staring at it in open bewilderment. The car smoothly slid in under the Villa’s awning, alerting the man to a more pertinent fact.

“We’re here.” he raised her chin with gentle fingers, breaking her concentration.

Smothering a laugh, the delight clearly shined in the man’s eyes as Lizzy tsked her frustration at the disturbance.

“I almost had it figured out.” her face showed her utter disappointment.

“How about we figure it out together.” Red suggested, drawing her attention to their new surroundings.

“Oh!” Liz smiled excitedly, rubbing her heat against the bulge hidden beneath the offending material of his slacks.

Wincing visibly, Red grasped the woman’s hips hastily, stilling her erotic enticement.

“...Inside.” he prompted huskily.

The woman’s reddened cheeks plumped into an enormous smile as she wrangled with the door, just as unproductively as she had his belt. Her eagerness endearingly touching.

Red grasped the handle in sure fingers, pushing it open. Throwing out his arm quickly, he caught the woman as she toppled outward.

Liz giggled her delight as Red effortlessly eased her feet to the ground.

“Are you steady?” He slid out behind her, looking down, only seeing the billowing dress. Sighing, he bunched the skirt in his fist, finding the tiny feet flat on the pavement.

Hooking her arm securely, Red stuck his head back in the car, quietly directing the driver to remain on stand-by for the others which would shortly be arriving. He remembered to grab her purse and bouquet.

A short time later, after a quick shower and even quicker snack and some hastily contrived aspirin concoction for the morning after hangover, Liz was somewhat in better condition but not nearly enough for Red’s liking.

Checking with security as was his nightly ritual and seeing that all was in place, Red rejoined Lizzy, finding the woman already in bed, as naked as she was the night before. The nightgown he had wrangled her into with such difficulty... totally absent, discarded on the floor beside the bed.
She grinned drunkenly up at him, patting the open space beside her invitingly.

Red shook his head, scolding her antics before crawling into the bed. He wasn’t the least bit surprised when the woman accosted him the very second his head hit the pillow.

He chuckled quietly, kissing her for countless minutes. Rather enjoying her inebriated state.

“You’re drunk, Lizzy.” he chastised, working her onto her back.

“No...” she disagreed, pointing a debating finger his way, “I’m tipsy.”

“Same thing.” he countered. “You need to rest.” he softly nudged her nose with his, showing his affection for the woman.

“You deliberately teased me all day...” she sighed happily, rubbing her little muff against his thigh in open enticement, “and don’t you think I didn’t notice.” she chided. “And now I need you to make love to me.” she corrected. “It’s clearly your fault.”

“You’re drunk.” he repeated.

She tilted her head, quizzically. “Are you trying to tell me, you won’t have sex with me because I’m tipsy?” She made it sound like the worst insult given in the entire history of the world.

“I don’t want to take advantage of you.” Red replied, grinning. “Well, I do, but only when you’re an active participant.”

“While I think it’s sweet, maybe even charming that you think like that...” she smiled seductively, “but I am perfectly capable of making rash decisions on my own.”

Red bit his lip to keep the smile from his face.

Liz impulsively reached, grabbing her phone, putting it on speaker... admittedly it took her a good few seconds to push the screen correctly. She waited patiently and then not so much so.

“Francis are you there?” the ring tone was still in effect until suddenly a young, masculine voice answered the line.

“Francis, what’s twenty plus two?” Liz asked without preamble.

“Umm.” Francis slurred slightly, and Red could hear the wheels turning. “Sixty-nine?” he snorted at his own wit.

“Let’s try that again,” she giggled infectiously while Red shook his head woefully for his lot in life, “what’s four plus four?”

Red sighed heavily as the sound of silence greeted them. Liz on the other hand seemed more than content to wait it out, her fingers tracing his lips over and over, the pressure contorting his mouth comically. All of which was allowed.

“Better yet,” Liz tried again, “four minus four.”

“Umm,” Francis obviously was putting his all into this effort, “is it a Queen of Hearts?”

Red closed his eyes, fighting the build up of the beginning of a slight headache. “And he wonders why he loses at cards.”
“Lizzy, I can’t see you.” the young man’s voice wavered, for he was obviously looking around for his unseen friend. “Are we playing a game?” the delight was apparent suddenly. “Is this hide and poke!”

“Hide and seek, Francis.” she corrected, giving Red an ‘God, he’s stupid’ look.

“Not how I play...” it was tittered.

“Francis!” Red barked at the boy. “Give the phone to someone else.”

“I think it’s for you?”

The phone was fumbled, then slid along a felt table top before it was picked up by more capable hands.

“Yeah?” Silas’ clear voice came across the line.

“Cut Francis off.” Red grumbled. “He sounds like a toddler coming off a sugar high.”

“You got it.” the man stated distractedly. “Hit me.” The dealer was sharply informed.

“Silas, if you lose him...” Red was clearly aggravated.

“Can’t lose him, boss.” the man rattled the ice in the glass at a passing waitress, “Jack and Coke, honey.” Silas flirted openly before returning his attention. “Kaplan knows where all the bodies are buried.”

Red’s eye twitched irritably, his mouth opening to offer his own retort. Liz pulled the phone from his hand, purposely turning aside.

“Keep Francis alive and breathing, please.” she asked sweetly. “And come back home safe tonight.”
Red reached around her, jabbing the screen, cutting the call off.

He pushed the woman to her back, kissing her hungrily. “Forty eight plus twenty five.” he questioned roughly.

“Seventy three.” she sighed, as the man drew her nipple into his mouth, his growing length pushing insistently against her thigh.

“The square root of 9?” he moved her thighs apart, settling his weight along her body.

She rocked her hips seductively, sliding along his length incessantly. She got lost in the wondrous sensation, pushing her clitoris against the rigidness with determination.

A muffled laugh built in Red’s chest as the woman’s concentration wavered, instead focusing entirely on her needs.

His little kitten wanted the cream all right, and was doing everything in her power to get it... and was doing well in her endeavors.

Her plump lips wrapped about his erection, the rigidness of her clit raking against his heightened flesh, his cock head beading with a prelude to the elixir she craved.

Red let her rub against him to her hearts content, nudging her with his cock as incentive.

“Lizzy...” he muttered warmly, coaxing her back to the question posed.
“Umm, three?” Liz questioned, much in the same vein as Francis before her.

“Are you asking me or telling me?” he muttered, nipping her lip erotically.

“No. No it’s three.” she groaned as the man cupped her ass, sliding wetly along her slit then between her ass cheeks. “Oh God, do that again.”

Red chuckled appreciatively, obeying mechanically.

“You like that?” he questioned roughly, once again directing his shaft between her cheeks.

Liz nodded jerkily, tilting her bottom up for more connection, pressure. “... More.”

She focused on the bulging shaft, her eyes closing dreamily as the heavy weight slid along her tender flesh. The extra skin of his shaft massaging the hypersensitive skin of her vulva and... God...

Her cheeks clenched as the man’s thick head scrapped over her sensitized ass.

The foreskin she had grown to adore more than anything in the world, rippled along her puckered hole, drawing a fresh wave of heat from her center.

“Oh, you do like that.” Red drawled hoarsely as the slick heat coated his shaft.

Reaching for one of the spermicide plungers, Red slid it into her wet body.

“Spell, sexual intercourse.” he rumbled deeply, depressing the plunger.

Liz felt the gel fill her center before the man replaced the plunger with the bulging crown of his shaft.

“Fuck...” she drawled in a long moan.

“Close enough.” he chuckled, slipping the mushroomed head in further. “If a train leaves New York at–”

“Shut up...” she grumbled, as his bare shaft pushed at her cushioned tunnel, “no one can answer those stupid questions.”

Red’s throaty laugh turned into a rumbling moan as he met the tight resistance of her body.

The woman opened her legs wider in open invitation, enjoying the low growl in the man’s throat before he gently thrust, seating himself in her warmth.

“You like that?” she asked breathlessly.

“I love that...” the man sighed his contentment as her little body fluttered around him, trying to accommodate his girth. His head fell forward as her tunnel rolled about him in a wave as his pelvis nudged her clit.

“My next lesson is the coupling between a man and his lover.” he groaned, sliding back out into the cool air of the room, his dick instantly missing the connection.

“Yeah?” she questioned, setting her heels comfortably on his rounded ass. “How does that go?”

“I insert my hard cock into your very wet pussy.” he instructed, before sliding back inside in illustration.
“And then what happens...” she waited for more.

“I move in rhythmic thrusting motion... repeatedly.” he bumped her cervix, enjoying the feel of her thighs quaking already. “Until we reach the point of climax.” he dropped his mouth against her neck, suckling her gently.

“Your body releases a thick cream over my shaft.” he schooled her in the sexual congress happening between them. “Slicking my way to achieve a climax of my own.”

“What happens then?” she mewed as he grasped the crook of her knee, pulling it up alongside his hip, allowing him to slide even deeper than before.

“I fill your little pussy full of the hot cream you so desperately want from me.” he snapped his hips, upping the speed of his movements, fucking her harder. “Would you like that?”

Raising up on her elbows, she whimpered softly at the sight of Red’s thick, wet erection and the incredible feel of it’s heavy drag sliding easily and disappearing into her snug depths.

As Red’s large sack pressed intimately, nestling snugly against her bottom, she knew without doubt, he would give her what she had been wanting all damn day.

“Yes...” she purred, “I would love that.”

“Good,” he gritted, watching what she was, “because it’s going to happen.”

Their heady moans grew in volume as they watched their bodies move together until the need to come became too much.

Liz’s head fell back into the pillow, grasping the man’s tight ass in her small hands. He grinned, crooning lovingly to her as she urged him to go faster.

“God...” she gasped, her back arching off the bed. Her cries of ecstasy grew as the man’s thick shaft dragged along her pulsating clitoris. “Don’t stop...”

Red readjusted his stance, adding pressure to her clit, drawing the woman’s orgasm out, much to their delight.

“Don’t stop, baby.” he urged. “Keep coming on my cock.”

Her center gripped at him in strong waves, pulling at his thickened shaft, making the man moan louder as he neared his own release.

“Baby, look down...” his voice shook amorously.

She felt the first hot splash of his semen warm her, then watched the man slide his throbbing erection free.

Liz gaped as a powerful stream of white cream shot from his large pulsing crown, landing hot and thick on her mound and tummy before he slid back into her still rippling body.

“Oh my God...” she gasped, the feeling of his essence warming her body became even more potent, actually having seen the visual.

“That’s what I’m doing to you.” he nestled his mouth against the gentle curve of her neckline, a long groan of satisfaction rumbling from the man’s throat sending shivers down the woman’s spine until he came to a slow stop, his cock spent.
She moved her hand between them, touching the still warmed liquid, looking at it in the low light before bringing it to her tongue, tasting it.

Red snarled, grasping her wrist, pushing it into the bed. Bunching her hair in his fist, he dragged her into a heated kiss, his tongue dancing along hers.

The man grunted, finding his taste on her tongue. The mix alluring as fuck.

His waning erection slid free, a hot gush of their union following his exit. He moved her hand between her legs. She moaned softly as the thick cream flowed from her and along his shaft and her fingertips. He swiped his fingers through the thickened fluid, holding it up for her to see.

“I did that to you.” He growled heatedly.

Which each clench of her body, more of his warmth wet her lips and the bed beneath them. Red lay into her, his tongue teasing her own until the man rolled to his back, taking her along with him.

Liz sat up, rolling her hips, slicking his pelvis and stomach in their lovemaking for several minutes until the man pushed at her hips, scooting her back against his straining erection.

Taking him into her body, she watched the man beneath her divide his attention between her and her mirror image. His obvious appreciation of their activities and her body... of her, were fully on display in the man’s handsome features and in the way he touched her.

She was so glad she had listened to her heart and had taken a chance to be with the man... a man who clearly worshiped her.

But more importantly, she was never so happy to have someone to share in this deeply intimate moment, to share her life and happiness.

Red frowned up at the woman, smoothing a hand up between her breasts, laying his palm over her heart.

“Baby, what’s wrong?” concern was on his face for he sensed something not present before.

“No one damn thing.” she smiled, concentrating fully on her lover.

The amazing night seemed to go on and on.

Red’s cock throbbed once more as a breathy quivering sound, one he was highly addicted to hearing, rushed past Lizzy’s lips as they enjoyed yet another round of passionate and vigorous lovemaking.

Lizzy had more than fulfilled his earlier need for her, ten fold.

Her inebriated state, had not stopped him from partaking in her many... amazing qualities.

Just when he thought he may have had his fill of the woman, he would catch a tantalizing glimpse of her shapely form peeking out from under the crisp sheet and feel his body respond of it’s own accord, demanding more of what only she could provide.

What he thought was going to be a self sacrificing night had turned into one of the most amorously passionate events of their relationship.
“You were grumpy this morning...” Lizzy murmured, pushing back against him to take all he had to give.

“Now you know why.” he bit softly, traversing the silky flesh of her shoulder. “I needed this, Lizzy.”

“Have you had your fill of my... female charms, now?” she moaned as his tongue traced a tingling path up her spine. “Please tell me you haven’t...”

“Sweetheart, I’m not even close to getting my fill of the amenities you provide.” he stifled his bubbling amusement at the description provided.

“Amenities?” she giggled. “What, I’m like a bottle of hotel shampoo?”

“God baby, you are so much more that,” the scent of the dark strands of her hair enticed him, “you’re that unexpected shower cap, or the ever elusive, but much needed, sewing kit.”

Red trembled with the last vestiges of his orgasm, shaking the last drops of cum from the tip of his cock inside her overfilled body, very much enjoying the sensation.

“Your sexy talk makes me all aquiver.” she rasped as the man unexpectedly moved his shaft just so, etching a wide smile across Red’s face when she did indeed... quiver.

The moment was shattered much to the man’s growing discontent by the sound of men’s voices yelling out through the silenced Villa, jolting Red to action.

“What the fuck.” he pulled free quickly, grabbing his weapon.

Sliding Lizzy off the bed, he flicked the light off, handing her a weapon. Walking quickly to the door, he listened intently, silently slipping into his pants.

“You stay here.” he warned sotto voce.

He inched the door open, hitting the lights off in the hallway as he crept slowly out into the open area.

“Where the hell are you!” a man’s gruff voice snapped as footsteps walked closer. A shadowy figure appeared through the arch way. Seconds later the bulky frame was highlighted against the softly lit adjoining corridor.

The man froze instantly, hearing the sound of Red’s weapon being racked. Slowly, ever so much so, arms were raised, hands out, showing no weapons.

“Who the fuck–” Red hit the lights, finding Silas standing stock still, a disgruntled look on the handsome face.

“We can’t find Francis.” Silas bitched, dropping his hands before stalking to the powder room, shoving the door open, checking inside.

“You lost him?” Red grated irritably, sliding his gun into the back of his waistband, following the man’s trek.

“You know, I do have to piss from time to time.” Silas snapped right back.

“Did you find him?” Mark appeared on the scene, leaning casually against the open archway.
“He is not on the premises.” Dembe’s mouth was pinched with irritation as he approached from the opposite direction.

“Where was he before you lost sight of him?” Red demanded answers.

He rubbed his eyes wearily hearing the door crack open behind him. He turned, pushing it open, gesturing to the woman peeking out, to join them. Liz came up alongside, absently tying her robe.

“He was all over that girl in the casino...” Silas huffed, “trying, probably unsuccessfully, to get his long john to fill his jelly donut with their special cream.” the man air quoted much to Liz’s amusement.

Mark chuckled until Red glared at him. “I’m sorry, every time he talks about them,” he air quoted to indicate Francis and Lia, “he refers to them by a different pastry category.” The man laughed out loud. “HoHo and Pound Cake. Yule Log and Twinkie. Sno balls...” he snorted, chuckling his amusement, the image simply too much to contain.

“Think.” Red cut the tirade short, returning his interest to his head guard, “if you were Francis...”

“I can’t be that fucking stupid.” Silas grumbled.

“...Where would you go?” Red finished irritably.

The silence was deafening as each individual unsuccessfully tried to place himself in the confines of such a minuscule brain.

“He wouldn’t...” Red’s face was a mask of incredulous disbelief.

Silas’ head fell back as he picked up on the insinuation.

Mark started laughing again as he too realized the direction the conversation had taken.

Dembe’s face was a study of sullen gloominess. Each man reacted differently and in their own inimitable fashion.

Red hurried to the bedroom, crossing into the bath, Liz hot on his heels.

She matched Red’s movements, quickly slipping into her clothes watching the man dress far more quickly than she could.

“What? Where is he?” she questioned, sliding her feet into her shoes, her fingers combing her wild hair into some semblance of order.

“That little moron is getting married.” Red groused.

“Can I have just a second.” she grimaced endearingly, gesturing to the facilities behind them.

Red nodded his understating.

“We’ll wait.” he murmured for her alone, watching after her as she scurried off, ignoring the men blathering outside the bedroom door. He reluctantly drew his attention to where it was needed.

“Francis did not catch the garter.” Dembe was stating sagely, as Red approached.

“Who the hell does he think is?” Silas feigned shock. “Going against tradition like that. There’s no way he can be getting married, Red.” the guard’s mood was surprisingly high.” He can’t claim something he didn’t rightfully win.”

“He could be anywhere.” Mark tossed his hands out to his sides, shaking his head at the absurdity of the moment.

Liz hurriedly came out of the bathroom, taking Red’s outstretched hand.

“No...” Red stomped off towards the door, the little entourage close on his heels, “it’ll be one of a couple places.”

Silas waved off the driver, taking the position himself as the others gathered around the large vehicle.

Liz caught the man’s arm, drawing Silas up short. “Are you sober?”

“Sober enough to go moron hunting.” he held open her door, shooing her inside. “Isn’t that like the pot calling the kettle black?”

Liz gave him a disgruntled look before sliding into the sleek automobile.

“...Silas?” Red eyed the man critically.

“I haven’t had a drink since we lost Honey Buns and Spotted Dick.” Silas replied seriously.

Mark fell into the car, laughing fitfully.

“... Spotted Dick.” the man wheezed, as he wiped the tears of amusement from his eyes.

Red looked up to the heavens for deliverance, before gesturing Lizzy to take center seat. Liz’s lips quivered as she valiantly tried to withhold her own amusement at Mark’s good humor.

He was right. Silas’ comical branding of nicknames for Francis or Lia was actually rather funny, if one thought about it.

“How do you know where he’ll be?” Liz asked to get her mind back to the subject at hand.

“He’s drunk.” Red explained his reasoning. “They have theme weddings... the idiot will want to put on a good show. It’s how he operates.”

They checked the first two chapels that fit the bill and found nothing.

“We should have split up.” Liz said, climbing back into the car, Red right behind her.

“It’s always the last one you check.” Mark grumbled as he slid into the back seat, directly behind Dembe.

“How long have they been gone?” Red asked as they pulled out into traffic.

Silas looked at his watch, grimacing. “An hour and a half.”

“They would have had to get a marriage license, right?” Liz queried.

“Yes, but that only takes a couple minutes.” Red sighed. “They’re nothing but efficient here, especially with a top money maker.”

“How can they even do this?” Liz was confused. “I mean, they’re drunk.”

“Francis can skirt any rule, if he really wants to, Lizzy.” Red said knowingly. “Plus, you throw enough money at people...”

“They look the other way.” Liz concluded. “Regardless, I don’t get what the big deal is.” she shrugged. “It’s not like they can’t get it annulled.”

“And if anyone finds out about Francis’s little escapade?” there was an edge to Red’s tone.

“What do you mean?” she asked.

“Let’s just say, Francis has a reputation.” Red quirked his brow. “Lia seems like a sweet girl. There’s no need to drag her into this lifestyle blindly.”

Again, Liz didn’t quite catch the reference but her questions would have to wait as they pulled up to the last of the top choices.

She quickened her steps, following after Red as he stalked his way into the stucco style chapel.

Liz craned her neck, hastily reading the neon sign looming large above the entrance. She hesitated in her footsteps as the receptionist came out of her seat, calling after the men beginning their search of the premises.

“Sir! Sir, you can’t go back there.” the stout young woman was traipsing after Silas who was ignoring the warning completely.

Mark came alongside, taking the woman’s hand lifting it gallantly to his lips. “We’ll only be a second, sweetheart.” he reassured. “He wants to look over the accommodations before we commit.”

Silas threw him a caustic glance. “He’s so impetuous, that’s what I love about him.”

Liz quickly scurried after Red, ignoring the woman herself.

The blaring sounds of 2001 Space Odyssey filled the small cathedral, halting everyone in their tracks.

The lights lowered, a purple hue filling the room, strobe lights danced merrily over the fog which now crept eerily along the floor.

Liz stood rooted to the spot, her eyes wide and startled. “What the hell...” she whispered her stunned awe.

Dembe stepped aside in a gentlemanly fashion as two scantily clad Showgirls sashayed into a well worn carpeted walkway which led up to the eternally decorated altar.

Mark craned his head to the large looming palm trees above them, having almost ran face first into a trunk that had been hidden by a fake plant.

Red’s head swished back and forth as unmistakable music of Elvis Presley’s smash hit, “That’s All Right”, rang out.

Wide doors opened from somewhere behind them, a fierce beeping of a horn alerting any innocent bystanders to the arrival of a brand new, shiny, pink 1964 Cadillac.

Red stepped in front of the car quickly, leaning his large palms into the hood, making the driver come to a sudden halt and the passengers in back flop around haphazardly.

“Francis!” Red barked resoundingly even over the strands of the incredibly loud music. “Don’t even think about it!”
"You guys made it!" Francis called out jovially, as though they had responded to an elegantly issued invitation.

He slid up the seat onto the back trunk, attempting to swing his legs over the open side, greeting Red’s arrival just in time to offer a sincere hug. "You will be my best man, right?"

Liz squinted hard through the flashing lights, taking in the young man’s outfit, chortling softly under her breath.

Francis was dressed in close resemblance to Captain Jack Sparrow, minus the gold teeth, and his bride-not-to-be, was dressed as a female pirate, though the costume left very little to the imagination. It was low cut, short and tight.

If anyone asked Liz, they were the cutest couple she had ever seen.

Though, she had to wonder, if they were having an Elvis wedding… why the pirate gear?

Red looked Francis up and down, sighing shakily. “Boy,” he ventured an opinion, “what the fuck have you gotten yourself into this time.”

“You like it?” Francis grinned, waving theatrically over his rented threads. “I’m like early ‘Navy bad guy’.”

“No, you’re a pirate. There is a difference between Navy and....” Red hesitated, realizing a lost cause when he saw it because Francis’ eyes were glazed over, vacant, but concerned. “What the hell am I doing?” he muttered to himself.

“I even get to carry my own weapon, see.” Francis pulled it free, waving the weapon about haphazardly until Red snatched it free from unresisting fingers.

“They had flintlock pistols, not Glocks.” Red snapped peevishly, checking the safety was on before shoving the confiscated weapon in his waistband. “Let’s go, Francis.” He thumbed to a nearby door.

“I’m getting married.” Francis’ face fell. “Aren’t you happy for me?”

“There will be no wedding.” Red’s patience was waning.

Francis looked around at the chapel, then at the officiant, openly confused. “It’s all legal?” he held up the paper as proof for Red to see.

Red took it, folding it into his pocket. “You’re drunk.”

“On love...” Francis sighed dreamily at the woman across from him before frowning hard when he didn’t see her at her proper place by his side. He glanced down, finding the object of his affection, helping her slide up to his level. “Our love will be written about in songs.” the man professed.

“Only a country tune will fit the bill.” Mark muttered his growing amusement. Liz hit his arm gently as a rebuke.

“Walk away now before she takes your dog and truck and you end up in prison.” Silas clarified the statement, walking on scene, having turned the music down to a discernable level.

“I don’t have a dog.” Francis looked to Red for confirmation of the fact.

“See, she’s already started.” Silas pointed out. “She’s taken the dog.”
Francis frowned suspiciously at Lia before shaking off whatever the hell he had been thinking.

The Elvis impersonator leaned comfortably against a nearby pew, laughing quietly, enjoying the show being put on for him, for a change.

Silas moved around the car, helping the equally inebriated woman from the back. He stuck his other arm out quickly, catching her as she toppled from the car in a fit of giggles.

“You all right there, hon?” the large man asked.

“Yep.” Lia grinned happily, before throwing Francis an affectionate ‘finger wave’.

Red gripped Francis’ hand, stopping the man’s response in mid-wave. He gripped Francis’ chin, forcing his focus.

“What’s her favorite color, song... book?” Red questioned.

“Uhh...”

“Where is she from?” Red tried again.

“She’ll be from Washington D.C.” the man was proud of his sudden cognitive abilities. “Isn’t that right, sugar britches?”

“I thought she was love muffin?” Mark muttered to the men standing beside him. Dembe and Silas chuckled, both in good humor now that they had their wayward Lothario well in hand.

The stocky guard frowned, looking down at the small woman leaning into him, snuggling her cheek into his chest.

“You’re really cute...” Lia giggled, softly stroking Silas’ goatee.

The man grinned lecherously, winking at the small soused woman. “Is that right?”

She smiled drunkenly up at the man, before resettling her head on Silas’ strong chest, patting it absently.

Silas quickly caught the woman as she started a slow slide to the floor. Hooking her legs with his arm, he drew her up against his chest.

Lia sighed happily, settling her head on the man’s shoulder, gingerly tracing his soft beard with overly familiar acquaintanceship.

“You’re really cute...” she grinned happily.

“Yeah, I get that a lot.” The large guard nodded amiably. Mark snickered quietly, returning his attention to Red and Francis.

“I’m her cinnamon roll...” Francis proclaimed. “And she’s my tootie frutti...”

“What is her name?” Red sighed.

Francis blinked heavily, shaking at the forming cobwebs. “Lia!” he smiled triumphantly.

“He’s got you there, Red.” Liz grinned happily for the man.
Red returned the smile, finally finding humor in the situation, now that they had Francis under control... for the most part. Now all he had to do was cut through the drunkenness and get Francis to leave, peacefully.

“Her last name.” Red purposefully fished.

Francis hesitated, staring off into the stained glass so long that Red wondered if the boy was still with them.

“She’s taking my last name.” Francis waved a finger about, as if signing off on it. “Isn’t that right, baby cakes?”

Lia looked around for Francis over Silas’ shoulder, away from the direction everyone was facing.

Silas tapped the woman’s thigh, getting her to turn the right way. “Honey, you’re man is over there.”

The young woman rolled bloodshot eyes Francis’ way, wrinkling her nose in a cute manner at the man, waving once more.

Rubbing her cheek affectionately against Silas’ shoulder, she smiled blearily up at the man. “He’s my special brownie.”

“If you mean, pot laced, then you may be correct.” Silas muttered.

Liz looked at the couple and couldn’t help but think of how cute they were together, how they got along so well...

Red shook his head when Liz looked at him imploringly. “No, Elizabeth.”

He gestured for the boys to take Lia to the car. “She’s going to sleep this off.” he said, before wrapping his hand tighter around Francis’ arm. “And so are you.”

Lia pouted in a decidedly childlike manner, making the revealing costume she wore seem suddenly too risqué for the woman.

“But...” Francis protested.

“When you wake up in the morning wide eyed and sober,” Red made the boy focus, “and you still want to get married. I will bring you back here personally.”

Sliding Lia over to Mark’s waiting arms, Silas chuckled finding the woman’s beseeching eyes looking up at him, then forlornly at her suddenly lost love.

“We’ll bring Fruitcake along in a minute,” he brushed an errant strand of hair from her face, smiling, “I promise.”

She smiled brightly, before hugging Mark around the neck and giggling. “You’re really cute.”

Silas rolled his eyes, sighing. “They’re so fickle these days.”

“But I paid for it already...” Francis pouted, pointing around the chapel and his costume as Red pulled him from the car.

Silas stepped forward quickly, helping Red keep the man from taking a nose dive into the large flower arrangement beside the car.
“Whoa!” the man yelped, before straightening quickly. “There’s a step there”, he pointed in warning to the flat even floor beneath his feet, “be careful.”

Red shook his head ruefully before gesturing for them to vacate the premises.

Francis pulled up short suddenly, falling into the pillar beside him, grinning at Red. “Hey! Why don’t you use it!”

“What?” Red questioned, re-righting Francis.

“The chapel.” Francis suggested gleefully.

Red staggered in place, inadvertently tightening his grip on Francis, making the young man wince. “Ow...” Francis’ response was a genuine one, he rubbed his arm casting Red a suspicious glance.

Mark and Dembe stopped in their tracks, slowly turning to look at the group behind them.

Red looked at Dembe quickly, instant communication passing between them before the spell was broken when Raymond had to quickly grasp the weaving man’s arm to keep Francis upright and functioning.

“You and Lizzy...” Francis reached out, grabbing Liz’s hand, dragging her closer to his side. “You’re engaged to be married, the place is bought and paid for... she caught the bouquet.” he pointed out the logistics of his plan. “No need for it to go to waste.”

Liz’s mouth gaped at the suggestion, looking quickly at Red, finding him staring steadily at her, before returning his attention to the man beside them.

“No, Francis.” the man moved the younger one closer to the end of the car.

“What do you mean, no?” Francis dug in his heels, refusing to budge suddenly. “You don’t want to marry Lizzy?” The statement was a sacred whisper.

“I didn’t say that.” Red managed tightly.

“You didn’t have to...” Francis pouted, hastily turning a slurred explanation on Elizabeth. “He didn’t mean he wouldn’t.” he placated any supposedly hurt feelings. “He just meant...” the man hesitated visibly, his anger suddenly more than apparent, “what did you mean?”

“Francis.” Red grated. “This is not the time.”

“Do you think you’re to good to marry her?” Francis gripped blindly for something to halt their progress, wrapping his arms around a large urn of flowers.

“She caught the bouquet.” he reiterated, speaking through the large four foot tall floral arrangement, his face all but hidden by the fabric Calla Lilies.

Elvis chuckled heartily at the theatrics, enjoying this show more than anything he’d seen in a while. Red shared a look with the bedazzled man, suddenly feeling like the father of a wayward teenage boy who could, and did, get into the strangest predicaments possible.

“Francis, why don’t we just go back to the Villa and get some rest.” Liz tried her hand at placation.

Red took the flowers, sitting them back on the table, shoving the man forward roughly. But Francis gripped the door jamb quickly to halt their progress.
“See, you’ve hurt her feelings.” the man’s mouth drooped sadly. “She’s trying to, uhm...” the man scrunched his face, desperately searching for the word.

“Improvise?” Red supplied, wanting to move things along.

“Yes...” Francis drawled, “Improvise... something,” he frowned, having lost his train of thought. The man scowled hard at Red, his mouth turning down considerably having remembered something. “You hurt Lizzy’s feelings.”

Red ran a hand over his face, scrubbing the surface hard before looking at the man, then in turn, Elizabeth. The man’s gaze steady and unreadable.

Liz felt a course of shivers run down her back, though she wasn’t sure why. “We u-uh, don’t have a license.”

“It’ll only take a couple minutes.” Francis nodded knowingly. “They’ll even bring it here.”

“Y-you...” she stammered, “you can’t walk me down the aisle, silly.” she smiled warmly at her friend. “You’re far too,” she steadied him with Red’s help, “…wobbly.”

“You want me to walk you...” he pointed at himself, truly touched that she wanted him to do that. Francis blinked hard and shook his head, as though trying to make the drunk go away. “Coffee... give me some coffee.”

“I-I...” she thought quickly, “I don’t have my dress either, Francis.”

“Get a new one.” the man replied. “Or better yet, go back there.” he gestured to some unseen room. “They got a bunch of stuff...”

Liz caught her lip with her teeth, thinking of something to say, to help get the man to leave peaceably.

“Oh. I get it.” the man nodded. “Your dress...” he shot a finger gun her way, “it’s your mom’s right?”

Liz’s brow furrowed, instantly wondering if her mother had a wedding gown when she’d married. “Dammit, Francis!” Red growled, shoving the young man towards the door and into Silas’ capable hands. “Get in the fucking car!”

“What’d I say?” Francis pouted up at the bulky guard as Silas righted Francis to his feet.

“Something stupid.” Silas sighed. “Something you won’t remember.” he granted. “But something she’ll forgive you for.” he dragged the prattling man to the door, trying to give his boss a moment alone with Liz.

“Francis has left the building!” Francis called out before striking a pose Elvis would have been proud of... until the man fell into the guard trying to guide him along.

Red approached the silent woman, his face sympathetic. “You all right?”

“Did she have a wedding dress?” she asked quietly.

“I don’t know.” Red shook his head slowly. “I wouldn’t think so.” he fairly scoffed, before catching himself. “She wasn’t...”
“She didn’t love him, did she.”

Red found himself at a loss on how to answer that question. He was really never sure why Katarina had married Constantine.

It could have been the man’s status. He did provide her with easy access to the ‘inside’. She could have needed access to his money. She could have been genuinely fond of the man. There were so many reasons why she married and stayed with the man.

But love? He didn’t think so.

He couldn’t imagine being unfaithful to someone he loved. But then, he was beginning to wonder if Katarina ever loved anyone at all.

“I would never cheat on you...” she muttered quietly.

While Red was thrilled by the statement, he also felt a sense of melancholy. That she felt the need to defend herself, against her mother’s actions... as if the trait were hereditary.

“I know, baby.” he soothed her worry. “And that’s a two way street.”

Liz stood taller, tilting her head, sensing that there was a question hanging between them.

“There may come a time when...” Red began a difficult transitional subject matter.

“Red...” Silas stuck his head back through the doorway, “Francis is heaving in the gutter.”

Red hung his head dejectedly, the moment between himself and Lizzy thwarted for the moment.

Liz chuckled quietly, leaning into Red’s chest, muffling her amusement.

“I’ll be there in a minute.”

Silas gave a thumbs up, then grimaced as he looked out to the unseen man and the grisly sound of further regurgitating.

“We’ll discuss this later.” Red gestured towards the door.

“Not taking the offer?” Elvis grinned, casually leaning against the door jamb of the exit.

Red glanced down at the woman beside him, softly sighing his disappointment.

“Not at this time.”

“I think we should notify someone.” she watched Lia sleeping peacefully before closing the door gently, having left on a small night light.

Waking up in a strange place always unsettled her, so having a dim light somehow was reassuring.

“Try her phone.” Red suggested, motioning to the bag Silas had dumped on a nearby table. “But I would suggest a friend instead of the parental units.”

Liz balked at such a personal invasion but she did have to live up to a responsibility.
“We don’t need the parents embroiled in this mess.” Red stated his reasoning.

“She’s an adult, Red.” Liz rolled her eyes as she scanned the contact menu.

“You think that a grown woman’s daddy wouldn’t demand a shot gun wedding?” he pulled the buttons on his shirt free, leaving the front dangling open.

Liz giggled, then outright laughed, “If they only knew the term ’shotgun wedding’ would take on a whole new meaning with this crowd.”

Red quirked his brows in agreement, allowing the woman to make the necessary calls.

“Lia’s a bridesmaid,” the woman winced having disconnected the line. “The bride asked we give her a nine am wake up call.”

Red grinned accordingly, checking his watch. “Talk about bloodshot eyes. Well...” he quipped, “everyone is supposed to focus on the bride anyway. Who will notice. Right?”

Liz grimaced again. “Poor Lia.” she sighed heavily. “A wedding should be perfect.”

The statement sobered the man’s thoughts.

“I want to marry you.” he began without preamble.

“Wha...” Liz blinked quickly, trying to wrap her head around what he’d just said.

“I wanted to take Francis up on his offer. Don’t think for one second that I didn’t.” he continued his narrative. “But I’m not going to marry you because it’s convenient.”

“Are you saying...” she stammered her confusion, “if I had agreed,” she hesitated visibly, “you would have... even at that horrible place...”

“Yes, I would have.” she was trying to see humor in the situation but his steady gaze robbed her of any sense of convention. “In a heartbeat.”

Liz’s mouth fell agape. “I was just thinking, most men need to be dragged to the altar.”

The man’s face suddenly became expressionless.

“I am not most men.” Red clarified. “And their bride, certainly isn’t you.”

Liz’s cheeks brightened at the compliment.

“I told you...” he iterated, his former beliefs, “I want more than anything, to work towards that goal with you.” his eyes hardened slightly. “If I thought for one second, you were of the inclination, I would not have hesitated to make it happen this very night.”

“But we just started dating.” Liz thought back over the last two weeks, her head swimming with details and memories. “You don’t even know for sure you like me or—”

“Oh, I like you.” she was instantly assured, the deep resonate tone vibrated along her spine.

“But...”

“Listen to me Elizabeth.” the man demanded her full attention. “I would marry you this very second, if you allowed it.”
“I...I...” she stammered, torn between two possible realities.

“You don’t have to say anything.” Red calmed her quickly. “I just needed you to know.” he clarified. “Tonight, tomorrow night, next week,” he stopped for emphasis, “all you have to do is say the word... or allow me to say them.”

Liz twisted the ring on her finger, thinking of all the reasons why she shouldn’t... but each was over shadowed by every reason she should.

Red took a deep breath, pulling her into his embrace.

“I’m sorry.” he interrupted the woman’s silent musings. “I just made that sound like you had to decide right this minute.” he soothed.

He had worried about pressuring her earlier at the wedding, and here he was... doing exactly that.

She smiled up at him, listening intently, hoping he would continue.

“If you want to go back, I am more than up for it.” he began. “But there’s also a part of me that wants you to pick flowers you love, a friend of your choosing by your side and a cake made just for us.” he lowered his voice, keeping the conversation just between the two of them.

“I want to see you in a beautiful dress...” he painted the picture. “I want you to throw a bouquet... I want to hunt for a garter.” he voice lowered intimately, drawing Elizabeth’s heart from her body.

“I want us to have a wedding that we will look back on with happiness and fond memories. You deserve that special day... full of love.”

She held his gaze steadily, picturing what he said, and felt a warmth spread through her.

“You are a damn good thing for me.” Red declared. “You center me. You make me feel alive. You make everything, everyday... perfect.” he kissed that little mouth gently, adoringly. “When you’re ready... I can be that for you as well, Lizzy.”

Liz honestly felt at a loss as to what she should do. No one had ever said those wonderful things, those heartfelt words to her before in her entire life. Not with such meaning, anyway.

There was a part of her wanting so badly to take Red up on his offer, right then and there in their jeans and tennis shoes.

But there was also a part of her that wanted to give him what he wished for as well, and that was a wedding that was just for them. Something they had built up to and grown to anticipate.

He ran his fingers through her long hair, rubbing his fingers against her scalp soothingly. “I’m not letting you get away from me, if I can help it.”

Even if she decided to get married a week from now, or if she should wake up tomorrow, after having let the idea settle more...

She had time.

“Unless something changes before our departure,” he left the option available to her, should she desire it, “I will ask you to marry me, Elizabeth.”

She blinked rapidly, comprehending the words.
“And when I do...” he let the idea settle, before gently grasping her chin, “I will expect a response.” She couldn’t help but wonder, if he did ask, as he stated he would...

How would it happen?

What would he say? Would he get down on one knee? Or ask after they had made love? Maybe he’d whisk her off on a romantic holiday? Or maybe when they were home, enjoying a rainy day together?

The anticipation she felt, that Red would pose the question when it was the right time for them and for all the right reasons... to join two lives together based on the love they had for one another.

The wait for the real thing, besides being an exciting and exhilarating thought...

Was a wish she desperately hoped would come true.

MAY 20

Francis and Lia finally came pitifully shuffling out while the others enjoyed their breakfast.

Both wore dark sunglasses, sitting heavily in their chairs, grimacing at the smell of the food around them.

“Sausage?” Silas passed a plate of steaming meat under Francis’ nose. The man’s pasty complexion paled even more so.

“You’re a real bastard, Silas.” Francis grumbled, having turned aside hastily. “And remember, I too have a gun. And I know how to use it.”

“Well, we got up on the wrong side of the bed, didn’t we?” Silas grinned happily, his mission accomplished.

Red allowed the moment, sipping his coffee leisurely. “Eat something,” he suggested, “you’ll feel better.”

Francis and Lia turned a shade of green at the thought, but looked relieved when only fruit and vegetable were placed before them.

They nibbled the offering, and before long, they were easily putting the light food away as the nourishment worked its magic.

Red and Mark conversed quietly for a spell, before Mark excused himself. He patted Francis consolingly as he passed, chancing a quick wink in Lia’s direction.

“Any plans today, Lizzy?” Red turned the conversation to the mundane.

“I guess I might shop a little,” she shrugged, “play in the pool.” She locked eyes with him, conveying a message. “I have to check my email.”

Red nodded his understanding. She had been checking it since they’d been here, but after receiving word that they were closing in on one of the fugitives she had profiled, she needed to stay on top of it.
“Francis?” Red enquired solicitously.

“Unless you need me, I’m going with Lia to her friend’s wedding.” he dropped his head into his hands, pressing hard into his temples, before seeking out the others. “...Did I get married last night?”

Red chuckled into his coffee cup. Liz giggled musically, arising with a small shake of her and a scolding look to both Lia and Francis.

Silas and Dembe were embroiled in a debate encompassing the situation in South Africa. Neither were paying any attention to anyone but themselves and the topic at hand.

Red sighed heavily, arising as well, taking his coffee as he made his exit with but one chastising look in Francis’ direction.

“Seriously,” Francis called after the retreating figure, “did I get married?”

The young man exchanged worried glances with an even more concerned young woman.

Chapter End Notes

I would have given anything to see that all play out on the Viva Las Vegas Wedding Chapel Earthcam site.
May 20

It was a quiet morning considering. Red had left an hour ago to attend to his business dealings.

Liz caught up on her correspondence with the BAU and the Blacksite. With all the interruptions with people in house, especially Francis, she was pleasantly surprised to have popped out a difficult profile as quickly and thoroughly as she had.

She was doubly thrilled to have found that just a few short hours ago, the criminal had been apprehended. She did not delude herself that her profile was the reason but it certainly had helped according to the Special Agent in Charge.

Applying her signature to the preliminary paperwork, she continued in the process of checking her other mail.

She was at first surprised, then shocked, drawing in a startled breath as photos of her and Red started filling the page as they loaded one by one.

She perused the array frantically, her eyes darting from one image to the other.

A couple showed she and Red with their entourage as they toured the Las Vegas Strip. A few contained shots of Silas and her alone.

One was an intimate pose as she and Red watched the Bellagio water show. Yet another had Red’s arm wrapped about her waist as they looked over the canal at the Venetian. There they were, as they took in the aquarium at the Mandalay.

The affection between them was apparent. To Liz at least.

They were supposed to be affectionate of course. She was playing the part of Red’s fiancée.

Really, the pictures had all been relatively tame, which was not how she vividly pictured their time here.

But that didn’t stop the fact that each contained a plethora of scathing vitriol beneath each photo.

Reddington is a vile and atrocious being, tainting everything he touches
Rid yourself... the world... of his evil, violence and killing
To keep in his company, will only lead you into an eternal damnation
No one will think badly of you, should you kill him. They will understand your reasoning
Tonight, Elizabeth. End Reddington’s reign so we can be together in peace.

“Yes, the rambling diatribe of a psycho nutjob was just the incentive I needed to act on murderous intent...” Liz rolled her eyes expressively, “so I’ll get right on that.”

Scanning back through the photos, she thankfully found, none were of their time in the Villa. With the high walls and heavily guarded property, to see into the sanctuary had obviously been impossible.

She tried to remember a camera pointed at them, but it was difficult to pinpoint anything for sure because...

Everyone had a camera in their hand as they took in the sights of Vegas, so singling out any individual purposely surveilling their group was virtually impossible to detect.

Moving the cursor over the delete option, she hesitated fighting her natural instincts. Red had been saving these horrible things and even the envelopes, looking for a point of origin.

She made a hasty decision, calling Silas for an expert opinion.

The man’s grey eyes darkened as he pulled his phone free, issuing an order to track the origins of the IP address, having seen the problem laid out before him.

Liz put in the same request of Aram. She mentioned that the content was private, instinctively knowing her privacy would be respected.

Within moments, the information was relayed that the email had been sent from a library a couple blocks away from their hotel.

A view of the surveillance, only produced a grainy image of a man in a black hoodie sitting at the computer for about five minutes before exiting the building.

Silas directed the computer geek to trace DOT and hotel cameras to track “Black Hoodie Fucker” to and from his last known position.

“Should we phone Red?” Liz bit her nail nervously.

“Red is in tense negotiations at the moment and shouldn’t have the distraction at this time, unless absolutely warranted.” Silas answered almost absently, his mind clearly on the problem at hand. “I am exemplary in my job.” he practically teased to lighten the mood. “What are you worried about? I might begin to think you don’t trust my impeccable credentials.”

“Well, Red is going to be pissed as hell later on,” she cut doubtful eyes his way, “and I’m going to blame it all on you.”

“So what else is new.” he motioned.

She felt very secure in Silas’ care... but he didn’t have to know that.

“That new bag you’re taking me to buy.” she shut down the computer, intent on enjoying her well deserved day off. “Let’s go shopping.”

“I’m glad you’re not letting this creep get to you.” he nodded approvingly. “But isn’t there some soap opera you can watch or Bon Bon’s you can eat?” he pulled a slight grimace. “I’ve got manly things to do.”

“After we get my purse...” she batted her eyes coyly up at the tall man, “we can take in a car exhibit, which is a very manly thing to do.”

She wasn’t much of a car aficionado, but the exhibit was interesting. Silas fell into the mood of the day, so next they hit the wax museum.

She felt very much the tourist as they took photos of one another with countless statues as they went
She had tried to make her poses look as natural as possible, most of Silas’ photos on the other hand, were of him with his arm wrapped around the wax figure, cupping a breast or ass cheek... sometimes both.

Lunch was nearing, so they decided on the burger joint at their hotel.

Liz craned her head this way and that. “I’m going to the bathroom.” she had spotted what she needed.

Silas turned his bulky frame in the booth so he could watch the door.

“If she comes back before I do,” Liz stated, “can you get some mustard and ketchup on the side?”

“Yeah, you want extra pickles too?” he asked, knowing the woman’s penchant for the staple. “I know you absolutely love anything resembling the phallic shaped vegetables.” he held his smirk.

“Remind you of the boss, does it?”

“You’re a dirty old man.” she tsked.

“That sounded vaguely like a compliment.” the man’s eyes constantly surveyed his surroundings, Liz noted.

“An observation of fact only, you perv.” she corrected. “And yes, I want a pickle.”

“Are we using that as a euphemism...” the man chuckled.

“The fucking vegetable.” Liz snarled then grimaced when the guard chortled.

“What you do with it is your own business...”

“I’m gonna shove it so far up your a–”

“Intrigued by the idea of anal play, are we?” the man enquired innocently.

Liz’s retort was lost, as her thoughts wandered. A vision popped into her head that was both intriguing and yet a little off putting.

Unaware of the smile playing about Silas’ lips, the guard seemed to read her mind.

“There’s nothing quite like it.” the man further needled the woman. “The trust formed between lovers after such an event is quite spectacular.”

Liz cocked her head, staring sightlessly at the table top, a frown pulling at her brows. “Spectacular you say?” she mused quietly.

Silas bit the inside of his cheek, “Please do tell Red who turned you on to the notion.” he settled more comfortably into the wall, drumming his fingers on the Formica. “I’ve been anticipating a bonus for quite some time.”

“If I tell him you said that, he’ll likely knee cap you.” Liz allowed her humor of the situation through, very aware her guard was pestering her.

“No he won’t.” Silas replied matter-of factly. “He’ll be too busy thanking me as he tries to get his dick buried in that tight–”
“Going to pee now.” Liz sighed, turning on her heel without a backward glance to her chuckling protector.

She did her business, checked her appearance and smiled. She looked like she was glowing... and didn’t think it was just because of the slight sunburn on her nose and cheeks.

Granted, she was still lost in thought about her discussion with Silas, but not the specific details of what he suggested.

She was more caught up in the intimacy she and Red had shared. The trust that was building between them. She had every intention of making sure that connection was solidified.

Suddenly, to be with him... to feel him so very close again, was a high priority. She sincerely hoped Red got off work early tonight.

Smoothing her hair, she opened the door, the good thoughts vanishing into an angry veil.

“What the hell do you want?” she grumbled irritably as Brad smiled, pushing off the opposite wall.

“I want to know what you see in the old guy?” he shrugged. “I mean, I know he must be pretty loaded but...”

“You don’t know shit.” she snapped peevishly, pushing past him aggressively. She was more than incensed when he reached out, grasping her arm in a no-nonsense grip.

“I know he’s Raymond Reddington.” the man grinned maliciously.

“Tell me something I don’t know.” she scoffed, jerking her arm free, making a move to pass him yet again.

Brad scowled at the unexpected response, before capturing her arm again to stop her departure, trying a different tactic.

“We were pretty good together.”

“We were so good together,” she saw the ploy for what it was, though he seemed to have forgotten one minor detail, “...it made sense to you to cheat.”

“I was drunk.” he explained it away. “We could be that way again.”

“No, thanks.” she grimaced disgustedly. “I like what I have now and like my friend said, you pale in comparison in every way imaginable.”

“I can be your new Sugar Daddy, if that's what you're worried about.” the man baited.

“No, you can’t.” she replied coldly. “You will never be as charming, kind, caring or as good a fuck as Red is.” she spat and the man’s face grew furious. “Now, if you’ll excuse me, I have more important things to do,” she side stepped the man, “like eating my burger before it gets cold.”

Brad readjusted the hold he had on her arm, pulling her up against his chest as his face descended towards hers.

“Back off!” she snapped viciously, pushing hard against his bulk.

Delivering a swift punch across the man’s jaw, much to his astonishment, she landed another to his cheek in his stunned stupor. She blinked her surprise when the man was suddenly hurtling down the
She snapped her eyes to her right, finding a large dark shadow looming over her, snarling it’s rage.

“I told you...” Red grated angrily, “she wasn’t fucking interested.”

Ripping the fedora from it’s perch, he plopped it on Liz’s head, stalking towards the man who was attempting to shake off the jolt he had just received.

Grasping the collar of Brad’s shirt, Red bodily lifted the man to his feet.

“Get her out of here!” Red barked before shoving Brad back through the double doors of the kitchen.

Liz glanced back quickly, finding Silas and Dembe moving stealthily down the corridor as patrons craned their heads around the bulky frames. The men grinned mischievously, waving for her to follow after Red.

She scurried into the kitchen upon hearing an enormous crash. Pushing her way through the doors, she found Red throwing Brad into a stainless steel shelf, the glass sundae cups tinkling merrily as they wobbled dangerously back and forth. Large metal trays fell haphazardly to the floor making a resounding crescendo of noise echoing down the hallway.

The door behind them burst open as two new arrivals stumbled their way on scene.

“Yes!” Francis pumped his fist energetically, his face beaming his joy. “I didn’t miss it.”

Christopher grimaced his delight. Red punched the man square in the face, sending Brad careening out the back, knocking the door slightly askew as Red stalked his way after him.

“What part of, no,” Red vented, viciously punching the man square in the abdomen, “don’t you fucking understand!”

He lifted his arm, blocking an intended hit, before nailing Brad in the solar plexus. Brad grunted, falling into the wall behind him for support.

Red reached out, grasping the younger man’s collar, holding him steady. “Do you fucking comprehend it now you stupid son of a bitch!” he seethed, before delivering a series of blows to the man’s jaw, “Disrespectful little fuck!” he spat his disdain.

Liz blinked rapidly, wincing with each hit Red landed. Even against Edward, she had never seen Red so furious.

She instinctively sought help, glancing about for Silas or Dembe. Her hopes in that direction were dimmed considerably as she watched all concerned crane their necks this way and that to get a better look at the proceedings taking place.

Francis was jabbing his fists in open air in silent encouragement, the look on his face of total delight. Christopher was right there beside him, literally dancing back and forth as a boxer, his beefy arms warding off “air blows”.

Silas and Dembe nodded thoughtfully from time to time if Red happened to deliver a blow of which they approved.

Liz motioned insistently for her guard to step in and do his ‘duty’. Surely someone of Red’s so called friends should be attempting to put a halt to this fiasco.

Silas waved a careless hand as if to say, ‘woman, there’s some serious betting going on here, back off’.

She turned her eyes back Red’s way, wincing when Brad finally landed a punch of his own.

She looked anxiously at her guard, only to find the man smirking. He caught her in his vision, sighing. The man sidled closer to her, not taking his eyes from the men trading hits.

“Lucky punch.” he muttered. “Won’t happen again.”

Liz flinched as Brad landed another, then frowned up at Silas who shrugged nonchalantly. It looked as though... it was almost as if Red left himself open to the hit.

She looked imploringly at Silas, only finding the man oblivious to her. Through it all, Red didn’t stop once in berating good old Brad. No matter who hit who.

“He’s feeding off it.” Silas explained cryptically.

As Brad hit him again, she watched Red’s eyes go ebony black, only then truly understanding what Silas had meant.

Red drew back, delivering a blow that left Brad clumsily stumbling backward, sending the young man to his knees in an ungraceful slump. The crunching sound of the man’s kneecaps hitting cement could be heard over the sounds of Red’s angry cursing.

Curling Brad’s shirt in his fist, Red yanked him forward, pulling the man close until their noses almost touched.

“And if I wasn’t perfectly clear the first fucking time.” Red spat. “She’s mine, asshole.” he growled dangerously.

Liz had never liked the macho mentality, but something about Red’s tone sent shivers down her spine. Something primitive, something deeply ingrained sparked to vivid life.

Understanding dawned on her. It went beyond territorial. Reflection and logic did not apply here. That she was okay with such a concept neither surprised nor shocked her.

“He’s staking his claim, honey.” Silas muttered, solidifying her thoughts.

She suddenly realized, Red needed to do this, for a host of reasons. And she needed to allow it.

He needed to do what came natural to him.

Someone had accosted his woman, and that was something a man like Red Reddington simply could not tolerate.

He needed to vent this frustration, to protect her... and stake his claim for his own peace of mind.

Just as she said he should, if he felt it was warranted.

As she watched Red shake Brad like he was a rag doll and backhand him with a closed fist... it was obviously a moment where he felt such action was warranted.

“Look at me!” he hissed until the man blearily focused bloodshot, swollen eyes on Red’s furious
Brad closed his eyes, turning his face away from the enraged man.

Red snarled murderously at the perceived brush off. Releasing his grip, he let Brad fall to a heap on the wet ground. Pulling his weapon free, he racked it and settled it against the man’s chest before Liz could blink an eye.

Silas quickly reached out, laying a stilling arm over her chest, though was surprised to find the woman standing stock still and watching quietly.

She was looking between both men anxiously, but stayed perfectly silent.

“Do not ever come near what’s mine again.” Red repeated darkly, his weight leaning into the weapon. “...When Elizabeth speaks... obey,” he snarled. “I will not hesitate to put a fucking bullet through your fucking heart.” he hissed. “Do you understand the words I am saying.”

Brad coughed wetly, spitting a mouthful of blood on the pavement.

“Do you understand me?” Red once again grated harshly, shoving the barrel of his gun painfully into the man’s chest.

“... I u-understand.” Brad slurred.

Red stayed hunched over the man for countless moments, his thumb rubbing along the stock of his weapon before finally pushing off the son-of-a-bitch.

Glaring angrily down at the man at his feet, Red took a deep breath trying to batten down the rage he still felt. Lifting angry eyes, he pulled up short when he found Lizzy standing there.

Glancing at Dembe and Silas, his look informed them of his displeasure for not doing as he had directed. He stepped over the heap on the ground, his eyes sweeping Liz’s form.

“Are you all right?” he asked. While he knew Lizzy could handle Brad admirably on her own, he couldn’t help but worry for her emotional state.

It wasn’t everyday you watched your lover beat the living hell out of someone. This was his world, not hers.

“I’m fine.” she murmured quietly.

Red inclined his head, understanding the quiet tone. They would need to speak later.

Turning to their host, Red took a deep breath, controlling the anger that simmered just beneath the now cool exterior. “I apologize for the disturbance t–”

Christopher laughed, shaking his head. “Don’t apologize...” he slapped Red’s arm in open camaraderie, “I’m sure the patrons loved it. It’s Vegas after all.” the man chuckled. “Besides, I’ve had security checking surveillance to alert me if a confrontation came about... so I wouldn’t miss it.”

“That was so fucking awesome!” Francis grinned widely, as he hopped excitedly in place. This was a fight he would have come a long way to see.

The young man jerked his head to the right as the back door was thrown open violently, revealing a panting, disheveled Mark Donovan.
“Ah, dammit!” Mark bitched seeing the man laying on the ground and Red’s red and bloody knuckles. “I fucking missed it!?”

Francis waved his phone excitedly in the air, thrilled to share his enthusiasm with someone who would appreciate it as much. “I got it!”

Gesturing the man over, Mark rushed towards Francis, his face beaming.

Silas came out the same door at a leisurely pace, carrying a couple of ‘to go’ orders.

Red sighed heavily, shaking his head for the guards lackadaisical outlook on life. He startled when he felt cool fingers tenderly trace his face.

“Are you all right?” Liz asked quietly, blotting a small split in the corner of his lip with her finger.
