The Girls We Wanna Kiss

by queercapwriting (queergirlwriting)

Summary

A compilation of Sanvers minifics from my tumblr, ranging from super smutty smut to extremely fluffy fluff.
Chapter 1

Chapter Summary

Since this has gotten so delightfully long, a beautiful and very generous soul who wishes to remain anonymous has listed out the first 178 chapters, to ease of your perusal of said chapters. The original first chapter is now chapter 242.

update -- the absolutely fabulous and incredibly generous @mrs-riarkle-sanvers over on Tumblr compiled the entire thing through 550 chapters (using the wonderful Anon mentioned above's work for the first couple hundred) into an index!

Enjoy!!!

I've copy-pasted the amazing spreadsheet mrs-riarkle-sanvers made below, but in case you need to be able to zoom in/etc, here's the link to the entire spreadsheet!!! Many many many many many thanks to you, my dear!!!! :D <3 <3 <3

Chapter Summary

Anonymous asked:

can we talk about how Maggie will steal many more items of clothing other than Alex's leather jacket. She probably has joint custody of a sweatshirt or two, and she has to keep giving them back and taking them so they can still smell like Alex

It's their first long weekend together when she first sees Alex in her Stanford sweater, curled up on top of her comforter, cup of decaf coffee in one hand, a tattered copy of Kafka on the Shore splayed open on her bent knees, glasses on, hair still damp from the shower.

The sight nearly stops Maggie’s heart.

The sweater is frayed at the edges of the sleeves, and Maggie immediately notices that Alex absentmindedly picks at the worn strands as she reads, as she bites on her lower lip when a particular line makes her stop, think, and read it again. She can all but see her doing the same in college, huddled into a quiet corner of the Stanford library, glasses askew and pen between her perfect lips.

Alex can’t find the sweater until the next weekend, when she goes over to Maggie’s place and finds her sprawled on the floor with her little niece, visiting National City, Stanford plastered across Maggie’s chest, the sweater slightly too big for her, the sweater absolutely perfect on her.

She says nothing about it, but makes sure to take plenty of pictures of Maggie and the little girl, making certain her college sweater gracing her girlfriend’s body is visible. She’s never quite felt this perfect before, this loved, this domestic.

She finds the sweater returned to her hamper half a week later, and she says nothing about it, but makes sure to wear it again a couple of times before leaving it at Maggie’s place, full of her scent and the anticipation of seeing Maggie in it again.

Her blue flannel is next to slip into Maggie’s joint custody. She finds it on the floor the morning after tearing it off of Alex’s shoulders the night before, and she slips it on, inhaling deeply, smiling softly.

She wears it over her black bra and boy shorts, not bothering to button it as she rummages through Alex’s kitchen, making omelettes and pancakes and coffee and squeezing out fresh orange juice.

When she pads out of the bedroom with bleary eyes and a contented smile, the sight of Maggie in her unbuttoned flannel, her hair tied up on top of her head and humming softly about falling in love, Alex’s heart nearly stops.

From then on, she only ever wears that flannel to give it back to Maggie.

They say nothing about their little clothing arrangement, but they both absolutely love it.

Chapter Summary

Anonymous asked:
After beating up aliens with supergirl, Alex is always a bit more "enthusiastic" with Maggie, and it makes Maggie wonder why.

They don’t always talk about their days. They can’t always talk about their days.
Not because of anything “classified”: before long, Maggie’s gained baseline clearance at the DEO, and Alex has achieved a similar status with the few NCPD officers she meets through Maggie.

No: they often don’t talk about their days because if they do, they’ll bring all the death, all the threats, and all the betrayal, into their homes. And sometimes, it’s necessary to do just that, and they do, and they find it both odd and beautiful to have an understanding shoulder to cry on. But they’re both just as relieved to have someone they can just sit with, just sink into the couch with, and just grumble “long day” or, for that matter, say nothing at all: and the other will get it. The other will be there, the other will be patient; the other will understand the heaviness of her shoulders and the gravity of her sighs, because she shares them.

But – words or not words – Maggie can always tell the days that Alex has taken down some threat, some murderer, some torturer. She can always tell because – while she herself gets silent, gets sullen, on physically brutal days like that – Alex gets… aggressive.

She never hurts Maggie – ever – and she never fails to check in for consent. But whereas on regular nights, Alex’s check ins are soft – wide eyes and gentle fingers seeking permission to take Maggie’s shirt off, to unhook her bra, to slip her fingers inside her – on nights like this, nights that punctuate the days where Alex has survived yet another battle, she seeks permission, but not softly. On these nights, she does nothing softly.

If Maggie’s home first, she’s usually cooking, and Alex will not verbally respond to her “hey babe!”. She will shrug off her jacket, toss her gun onto the chair, stalk into the kitchen, turn off the burner, back Maggie against the sink, and kiss her breathless, kiss her relentless, kiss her hard. “Good?” she’ll ask raggedly, and Maggie will whine and Maggie will nod, because god, yes, yes, it is.

If Alex is home first, Maggie rarely makes it past the threshold of the door, because Alex pins her against it so quickly, tugging down her jacket and yanking up her shirt, pausing only to growl – “yeah?” – before she strips Maggie entirely, pressing her naked body against the back of the door, lifting her, holding her, fucking her, filling her mind with Maggie’s enraptured screams instead of tortured yells, cleansing herself of ripped open skin and hard bone with Maggie’s soft curves and pliant warmth.

When they finally make it to the bedroom – and they will, because especially on the nights that end days of war, Alex is never satisfied with making Maggie cum only once or twice – Alex quickly arranges the pillows so they’ll cushion Maggie’s head before she pushes her down onto the mattress, sometimes on her back, other times on her stomach, always biting into her neck, always clamping her wrists down onto the bed, always kissing her so hard her makeup smears and her lips swell.

“Alex!” Maggie will scream, and Alex will unleash a string of filthy curses into her ear, perfectly calibrated to topple her over the edge, to make her pulse around Alex’s fingers, to make her entire body shudder with the force of her response to Alex’s thrusts, to Alex’s words, to Alex’s raw need.

“You can cum harder than that, baby,” Alex will chide, and every time Maggie think she’s wrong; but every time, Alex will prove herself right.

It’ll usually take at least five or six orgasms – Alex will cum when Maggie does, but quietly, quietly, and Maggie only knows from the way Alex holds her breath, the way the rippled muscles in her back go completely rigid – for the feversed, heady glare in Alex’s eyes to dissipate, and then she’ll gather Maggie into her arms and leave tender kisses on all the harsh hickeys she’s left on her neck, her chest, her tight abs, the insides of her thighs.

She’ll crawl back up to kiss her mouth, and she’ll whisper that she’s beautiful, and Maggie will pull her head down onto her chest and stroke Alex’s hair until her breathing regulates, until her sweaty body shivers with cold and Maggie tugs the comforter over them both.

“Babe,” she asks one night, one of those nights, when Alex destroys threats to earth by day and battles her own demons through her girlfriend’s body by night. “You had a rough day, huh?”

Alex grunts, and Alex sighs, and Alex lets herself relax under the gentle rhythm of Maggie’s fingers stroking her hair. “I nearly lost one of my agents. He’ll be fine, he’s gonna be fine, but… I nearly lost one of my agents.”

“And last week, when you fucked me like this?” There’s no judgment in Maggie’s voice, just concern. Just curiosity. Just understanding and a burning desire to know the woman she loves better, so she can love her better.

Alex shifts so she’s looking up into Maggie’s eyes, and her gaze is steady. “Kara got hurt.”

Maggie nods in understanding. “How come?” she asks, but it’s not about Kara.

Alex sighs silently and she turns her face away, pressing a thoughtful kiss to Maggie’s chest.

“Being surrounded by death like that… beating it like that… it… it gives me this energy, it… it makes me need you. Makes me need to feel your pulse under my lips. Hear the sounds you make, taste you, feel… feel how warm you are, how you move, how… alive you are. I need to feel how alive you are.”

“So you can also feel how alive you are,” Maggie supplies, and Alex nods almost imperceptibly.

Maggie presses a kiss into her hair and pulls her body closer to her.

“I got you, babe. I got you.”

Chapter Summary

atsirc asked:

prompt: smut fic about alex (being a total bottom bc she is) and her magnificent PRAISE KINK

Maggie has always prided herself on figuring out – detecting, one might say – the exact things that the women she’s taken to bed have wanted – needed – most.

Alex Danvers was the first who ever took pride in also figuring out exactly what made Maggie scream the loudest, writhe the wildest, scrape her nails down her back the hardest.

This reciprocity – this enthusiastic, passionate, up-all-night-and-god-everything’s-gonna-be-both-sore-and-worth-it-in-the-morning, because Alex couldn’t seem to ever get enough of pleasing Maggie, couldn’t ever seem to coax her through enough earth-shattering orgasms – this desire that Alex had to please Maggie served to make it that much sweeter, that much hotter, that much happier and that much more pride-inducing, when Maggie took the opportunity to figure out what made Alex cum the hardest.

And she took every opportunity she got.

There was a lot Alex loved – well, everything, really, when it came to Maggie – Maggie’s breath in her ear, her teeth on her neck, her tongue right there, her fingers right oh god – but the thing Maggie was most interested in exploring right now was the way that words, her words, made Alex Danvers beg and whine and whimper and come – and cum – completely and utterly undone.

Maggie first started picking up on Alex’s love, thirst, hunger, raw need, for Maggie’s praise in her ear when her entire body had reacted, hard, when Maggie breathed, “Jesus fuck, Alex, that feels so fucking good.” Alex had screamed into her nipple, then, and her hips had grinded down into Maggie’s, once, hard, like she was so turned on she couldn’t move for a moment. And sure enough, she couldn’t, because she was.

“Just like that, babe, you’re doing such a good job,” Maggie had whined, half for herself and half for the woman between her legs, and Alex had moaned, desperately, the vibrations of her lips humming on Maggie’s clit.

The world didn’t tell Alex enough that she was good, that she was amazing. That she was perfect. Maggie, of course, told her every chance she got. And after Alex screamed like that, moaned like that, moved like that, Maggie decided that the bedroom – and the kitchen, and the bar bathroom, and the DEO lab – should be a place (places) where Alex got all the praise she deserved.

So now, Maggie is struggling to catch her own breath, to compose her own voice, because damn does she mean it when she says that Alex Danvers is perfect, and it’s making her whole body writhe.
“Alex, that feels incredible,” she moans as Alex’s palm pressures her clit. Alex bits her lips and tries – and fails – to swallow a squeaky whine of pleasure.

Alex lets her lips part time time and she lets out a breathy groan. “Maggie,” she rasps, dragging the syllables out, and Maggie doesn’t know if she’ll be able to keep her focus if Alex keeps saying her name and touching her clit, slamming her fingers into her body, like that.

So she tightens the grip of her inner thighs around Alex’s hips and pushes off from one side, flipping Alex over neatly so Maggie is straddling her, riding her. She makes sure Alex is good – the heady look in Alex’s eyes and the way she adjusts her wrist so she can slip deeper inside Maggie tell her that she is – and Maggie lets herself grind down on Alex’s hand, slowly, slowly, letting her head fall back and her chest arch up. Alex gasps and swears at the sight.

“You’re beautiful, Mags,” she rasps, and Maggie’s heart leaps, and she smiles, but she’d flipped them over so she could keep it together long enough to make this about Alex. So she leans down, she kisses her, and she lifts her hips up, letting Alex’s fingers slip out of her. They both sigh keenly at the loss, and Alex looks confused for a moment.

Maggie leans up on one elbow and smooths Alex’s hair away from her wide eyes.

“I want to hear the gorgeous sounds you make while I fuck you, babygirl.” Maggie tells her, and Alex tosses her head back onto the pillow, a sound somewhere between a moan, a gasp, and a scream working its way out of her lips.

“Mmhmm, good girl, I want you to let yourself enjoy, okay?”

Alex nods and nearly squeaks in the affirmative, and Maggie brings their lips together while she adjusts her legs so one of her thighs settles between Alex’s. She demands entry into Alex’s mouth with her tongue, and Alex complies with a gasp. Maggie pulls back and Alex whines and Maggie chuckles.

“Do you want me in your pussy like I was just in your mouth, my gorgeous girl?”

“I – it – Maggie,” is all Alex can choke out, and Maggie accepts her spluttering plea. She skates a hand down Alex’s stomach and puts her lips to Alex’s ear.

“Your body feels so good under mine, baby.” Alex’s hips arch up of their own accord and Maggie is nearly overcome with the sound of Alex whining for her.

Maggie’s fingers skid down below Alex’s waistline, and it’s her turn to moan.

“Mmmm, good girl, Alex Danvers. You’re so fucking wet for me.”

Alex’s nails scrape down Maggie’s back, grab at her ass, try desperately to find her wrist, her hand.

“Fuck. Babe, you wanna be a good girl for me and tell me with your words what you want?”

Alex’s entire body writhes again, and it takes all of Maggie’s self control not to cum right there, just from the desperation in Alex’s face, the ragged tenor of her scream, the strength rippling through the tremors in her body.

“Maggie, I… I want…”
“That’s right, Alex, you’re amazing. Go on, baby, tell me what you want.”

“You. In… inside me. Maggie. Please. Please.”

“Alex, look at me.”

She complies, eyes wide, eyes desperate, panting with need and dripping with desire.

Maggie braces her fingers just outside Alex’s entrance, steadies her palm right above her clit, steadies her eyes right above those of the woman she loves.

“You are so. Fucking. Gorgeous,” Maggie tells her, slipping her fingers deep inside her on the last syllable.

At the combination of Maggie’s fingers, Maggie’s palm, Maggie’s voice, Maggie’s eyes, Alex screams and thanks god her bedroom faces away from the neighbors because ceasing to care, ceasing to remember anything in the multiverse beyond the rhythm of Maggie Sawyer’s hand, the rhythm of Maggie Sawyer’s praise.

“You are so tight for me, my love.”

“You’re doing so good, baby.”

“God, I love being surrounded by you, Alex.”

“God, you are so damn beautiful.”

“You wanna be a good girl and cum for me, babe?”

Alex screams into a shock wave at that, and Maggie brings her free hand to Alex’s hair, to her cheek.

“Look at me, Alex,” she rasps, and Alex obeys.

“You are perfect,” Maggie tells her as she curves her fingers deep inside her, and Alex sees stars.

She rides out her orgasm digging her nails into Maggie’s back, leaving marks Maggie will be very proud of in the morning; she rides out her orgasm with Maggie’s hand behind her head, cushioning her, holding her, surrounding her, loving her; she rides out her orgasm with Maggie’s words coursing through her bloodstream and with Maggie’s name spilling out of her screaming lips.

“Maggie,” she shudders one last time as Maggie coaxes the last wave through her entire body. Her eyes are hazy and slightly unfocused, and Maggie leans up on her elbow and kisses her lips, her nose, her jawline.

“Thank you,” Alex whispers softly, as Maggie gently slips out of her and gathers Alex’s spent body into her chest to ward off the potentially overwhelming nature of this particular breed of vulnerability.

“I meant every word,” Maggie whispers, and Alex falls asleep with Maggie’s lips pressed against her temple and her own curled into a soft, contented smile.
heartsandbrains asked:
3- they are starting the whole sex thing, the first time was sweet and slow but now shit is getting real and even though maggie loves being on top and straddling alex, she notices that sometimes alex initiates a movement to turn them around but never continues so one day she asks and alex just whispers 'i dont know... you are really tiny, i dont wanna hurt you' and maggie is not mad but she cant help to say loudly 'i AM NOT TINY!!!!!!'

Their first time is slow and their first time depends on definition.

Because really, they have a lot of first times.

The first time Alex runs her hands under Maggie’s shirt, tugging it over her head after receiving a breathless “yeah” from Maggie. She’s not wearing a bra, and the first words Alex rasps out are, “Yep. Definitely gay,” and Maggie chuckles throatily until her laughter cuts into a sharp gasp when Alex’s lips and Alex’s tongue – Alex’s perfect tongue – finds her nipple.

The first time Alex lets Maggie do the same to her, trembling with need, trembling with nerves, because Maggie has scars, sure, but they're beautiful to Alex, and anyway, they have nothing on the fresh bruises that have made a mural of Alex’s torso nearly daily since she joined the DEO. But Maggie kisses each one and Maggie’s tongue is magical and her open-mouthed kiss lingers right above the line of Alex’s boy shorts, and suddenly Alex is arching her hips up, begging for more of Maggie’s tongue, so that becomes the first night Maggie goes down on her, too. And the second time. And third, and fourth. Alex loses count around six, and Maggie’s never been so high on the taste of someone else in her life.

Maggie loves the way Alex seems surprised every time Maggie makes her gasp, makes her whine, makes her scream. She’s under the impression that Alex has never been particularly loud, and Alex confirms this when they’re tangled in each other’s arms after the first time Maggie slips inside her, and Maggie’s stroking her hair and Alex tells her how it’s never felt anything like this before.

Alex loves the way Maggie makes her come undone, makes her write with need but instead of feeling vulnerable, instead of feeling whiny and selfish, Maggie makes her feel cared for, wanted, sexy. Taken care of.

“I got you, babe,” Maggie will whisper when Alex slams her hands down and rips at the sheets crumpled beneath them, and the rasp in her voice, her breath in Alex’s ear, never fails to send Alex over the edge.

Which is why Maggie does it, of course.

And Alex makes Maggie feel the same way; makes her feel cherished. Makes her feel worshipped. Makes her feel enveloped, protected. Cared for. The hunger in her eyes outweighing the nerves the first time she drags her tongue over Maggie’s soaking clit; the way Alex moans, the way her eyes roll back into her head, with the sheer ecstasy of tasting her for the first time; the way she uses her tongue, her chin, her nose, her fingers, everything to coax Maggie into an orgasm that tears through her body like nothing she’s ever felt.

Until there was Alex Danvers.

And yet.

And yet, Maggie notices – she’s a detective, after all, and perhaps even – perhaps especially – while she’s making a certain, very naked, very high-ranking DEO agent squirm and beg and scream out her name beneath her, she detects – that Alex is holding back somehow.

Because sometimes – while they’re making out, while Maggie is grinding her thigh into Alex’s soaked core, while they’re fucking – sometimes, Alex grabs Maggie’s hips and starts to move her body like she’s going to flip Maggie off her and over onto her back, like she’s going to flip herself on top of her. But each time, something tugs at the skin behind her eyes, and she doesn’t complete the movement.

Maggie worries, at first, that she’s hurt Alex; that Alex needs to stop; that she’s overwhelmed. Each time, Maggie stills. Each time, Maggie asks, “you good, babe?” Each time, Alex blinks and pulls Maggie back down into a searing kiss.

But Maggie detects a pattern, detects the way that every time Alex starts – and aborts – flipping Maggie over, it’s right after she gets this particularly hungry look in her eyes, after she nearly glares up at Maggie with the intensity of her need, the intensity of her desire.

So one night, when Alex grabs at Maggie’s hips, starts to yank her sideways, but stops, Maggie braces her knees into the bed, wraps her hands around Alex’s shoulders, and completes the motion, rocking herself sideways and tugging Alex along with her, pulling her down on top of her.

Alex’s eyes go wide and her lips go speechless, and Maggie decides that as much as she loves looking down at Alex’s kiss-swollen lips and her hair haloing around her in sexy disarray on the pillow, the view from below is also sheer perfection: Alex’s hair hanging down, framing her face, her chest rising and falling, her eyes now almost feral as she realizes what Maggie has done.

“I take it you like this, then,” Maggie rasps, and Alex leans back, putting her weight up on her elbows, so she can see the perfection of Maggie’s body laying beneath her. She nods hungrily, but there are nerves battling the lust in her body language.

“You’ve been trying to flip me over for a while now.” Alex nods again, seemingly in shock.

“Why haven’t you, babe? It’s okay, you know. There’s isn’t anything I don’t want to do with you.”

Alex finally finds her voice.

“But I don’t wanna hurt you, Maggie, you’re so tiny!”

The force of Maggie’s responses nearly makes DEO Agent Alex Danvers topple off of her.

“I am not tiny!”

Alex thinks about cowering, but rears up on her hands instead, nodding down at their difference in size.
“I mean… babe.”

Maggie shoves at her with a fake scowl. “I am not tiny,” she repeats until Alex grabs her wrists and slams them down on the pillows alongside her head.

Maggie’s eyes fly wide and her breath goes ragged. Alex loosens her grip. “That okay, babe?”

Maggie grabs at her so she doesn’t let go of her wrists. “Ya… yes. God. Yes,” she tells her, licking her lips and staring up at Alex with raw desire written into her every feature.

And that is the first time Alex doesn’t worry about how tiny her girlfriend is.

Nose kisses are the best, I can't wait to read your fic! A question now: who is the biter between them? I'm sure alex or maggie has a bite kink but idk who...

So I’m on a plane and I literally went “OH. Hmmmm” when I read your (very important) question. I'm gonna say… both? I’m also gonna say, here, have a minific, because smut is apparently my coping mechanism on this flight ;)

The first time Alex’s teeth graze Maggie’s neck, it’s an accident born of passion and enthusiasm and raw, raw need.

So when Maggie inhales a sharp breath, Alex freezes and pulls back and her entire body tenses.

“I’m sorry, I didn’t mean to hurt you, I – ”

“Danvers,” Maggie rasps, a heady grin tugging at her lips. “That was a good sound. A really fucking good sound.”

“Oh. Ohhh.”

And because Alex doesn’t know how – and doesn’t care to learn right now – to bite down on Maggie’s neck without leaving a mark, Maggie goes to work the next day covered in hickeys. She gets a lot of thumps on the back from her fellow detectives, and she thinks she might be finally starting to fit in.

The first time Maggie’s teeth sink into Alex’s skin, it’s definitely on purpose. Tentative, yes. Gentle, yes. But definitely, positively, on purpose.

She watches Alex’s face closely to gauge her reaction, but it turns out she doesn’t need to, because Alex is thrusting her hips up and Alex is part-gasping, part-screaming, and she’s burying her hands in Maggie’s hair and she’s panting her name and she’s thrusting her hips up and she’s demanding more.

And Maggie gives her more, all along her throat, her collarbone, her chest. Her washboard abs, her hip bone, the dip between her torso and her thighs. And all the while, Alex begs and Alex moans, and all the while, Maggie obliges, her teeth mapping every inch of Alex’s waiting, burning skin.

I bet one day maggie's cousin will call her "I cannot believe you are not only dating a fbi agent but also she's A DOCTOR?? My boyfriend barely finished college... how dare you! And she's is tall??" Her family will be shook with alex, that's for sure

And Alex’s family is absolutely shook with Maggie.

“Alexxxx, you didn’t tell me Maggie could COOK like this!”

“That’s because I’d like to eat occasionally, Kara.”

“Alexandra, you know Winn tells me that Maggie double majored in biology and chemistry with a minor in literature: why didn’t you tell me your girlfriend was so well rounded?”

“Must have forgotten to bring her CV when I brought her over for dinner, Mom, sorry about that.”

“You know, Alex, Detective Sawyer was able to offer some tactical improvements to our search and rescue drills: quite impressive for a local cop, I have to say.”

“Thanks, J’onn, I’ll pass along your drippingly enthusiastic words of praise.”

“Please thank Maggie again for taking that bullet for me when you all rescued me from Cadmus, Alex: I’m really glad she’s okay. She seems wonderful, if her reaction time and the way she looks at you are any indication.”

“I’ll let her know, Dad, but she told me to tell you that next time you thank her, I should remind you that you should really be thanking the kevlar.”

“Alex, look at the photo Maggie just sent me! You didn’t tell me she likes photography!”

“Yeah, you should see the ones she takes of me in bed.”

“Oh man, Alex, you need to make sure Maggie comes to game night this week, I just got the newest Warcraft and she promised to show me some tricks.”

“Yes, Winn, I’ll tell my nerd girlfriend that my nerd best friend wants to play his nerd game with her.”

“Calling someone a nerd there, Danvers? Takes one to know one.”

“You know my entire family loves you.”

“That so?”

“Mmhmm. Which is pretty convenient for me.”
“Yeah? Why’s that, Danvers?”

“Because I love you too, Maggie Sawyer.”

I hope there's a scene where supergirl and maggie are bonding over how to deSTROY an alien that hurt alex (it was just a scratch tbh), while alex is w/ winn and j'o'on trying to come up with a plan to actually protect the poor bastard. It would be gold!

For me the best part of this is Winn and J'onn trying to defend the poor bastard, like:

“I don’t know, Mr. Schott, I’ve seen Detective Sawyer in action and she’s not quite as… shall we say… enthusiastic about inflicting pain as Alex can be –”

“Okay, but J'onn, remember when Maxwell Lord showed up and tried to hit on Alex again and Maggie gave him a concussion and two bruised ribs before Alex even had a chance to react?”

“… Let’s find this guy before Detective Sawyer and Supergirl can.”

Chapter Summary

Anonymous asked:
Every times Alex bites her lips, Maggie will kiss her, doesn't matter where they're at.
DEO. Crime scene. Grocery store. Kara's apt. EVERYWHERE. Alex knows it and she does it on purpose. =0)

She doesn’t realize the pattern at first.

Doesn’t realize that every single time she’s insecure, every single time she’s being coy, every single time she’s flirting or she’s said something brilliant and is fishing for praise or for a flash of her new girlfriend’s dimples – every single time – Maggie kisses her.

But Alex is a DEO agent and it only takes a couple of weeks to put it together.

It’s every time she bites her lip. Every. Single. Time.

And she loves it.

So when she’s looking over a medical report at the DEO, Maggie describing the weapon they’d catched a glimpse of to Winn, and Alex is turned on by her keen attention to detail, she makes sure to bite her lip. The kiss elicits a tiny whoop from Winn, an oh come on from J’onn, and assorted clapping and whistling from other DEO agents.

When they’re at a crime scene, and Maggie’s signing the last of the onsite paperwork, Alex puts her hands on her hips, taking one last glance around the scene, and bites her lip. Maggie pulls her against her body by the hips and brings their lips together.

When Alex is comparing two brands of peanut butter – searching for the healthiest kind – in the grocery store, she makes sure Maggie is watching, and she bites her lip. They almost knock down an entire shelf’s worth of jam, and Alex is pretty sure she sees Maggie slipping the most sugary brand of peanut butter into their basket, but she finds that she doesn’t mind at all.

When it’s game night and it’s the legendary hero category in charades and they’re watching Winn shout random phrases at James until he comes up with Robin Hood, Alex bites her lip while she’s laughing, and Maggie practically knocks Kara off of the couch as she slips her tongue into Alex’s waiting mouth.

“Why do you kiss me every single time I bite my lip?” Alex finally asks, breathless, bare chest flushed with Maggie’s body heat and her own sweat.

“Why do you always bite your lip whenever you want me to kiss you?” Maggie retorts, rolling
Alex on top of her and smoothing her hair out of her face.

“You knew?”
“Why do you think I did it, Danvers? It’s our system!”

“We have a system.”

“I like our system.”

Alex grins wickedly as she takes her bottom lip between her teeth.

“I like our system, too.”
penvision asked:
Alex’s torso is painted with bruises and scars. Part of the job, which she loves, so they never bothered her, until she thinks about maggie seeing them. Because how could maggie find her sexy like that, still want to kiss her after that?

OMG I love you for sending me this I think about how Alex must be constantly bruised all over her torso and back more often than is healthy.

The first few times they kiss, Maggie is tentative with her hands, keeping mostly to Alex’s elbows, her shoulders, her face, her hair, her neck. It’s hard enough, not just stripping all her clothes off: she’s not trying to make it harder for herself by touching her anywhere else.

But it doesn’t take long for Alex, baby gay though she is, to get, well… handsy.

And the sounds she makes when she lifts Maggie’s shirt to touch the bare skin above her waistline, the way Alex’s entire body trembles when she first slides her hands down to Maggie’s ass, pulling her closer into her body, the look on her face when Alex tugs her shirt off for the first time…

Maggie needs all of this like she needs oxygen, but more, and so, it seems, does Alex.

So when Maggie slides tentative, desperate but gentle hands down to the hem of Alex’s henley, her heart is nearly slamming out of her chest. She waits for Alex to stop her, needing, always, to get her permission before doing anything; and she’s not surprised that Alex does stop her, does reach her hands down to still Maggie’s. But she is surprised by the insecure terror on Alex’s face.

“No, it’s not… I want to, Maggie, I want you.” She looks down at Maggie’s shirtless body, at the way one of the straps of her black bra had slid off her shoulder, and she nearly pounces on her again. “I just…”

Alex swallows.

She stares at the woman standing, open lipped and silent, wanting and patient, understanding and vulnerable, in front of her, and she slowly, her hands shaking, lifts up her shirt.

“I like my body,” she tells her in a voice that she hopes to god isn’t shaking. “I like my body, and I like – not in a self-destructive way, just – I’m proud of what my body lets me do. Of the marks that remind me what I can survive.”

Maggie lets her eyes follow the progression of Alex’s shirt, higher and higher up her washboard... abs, and she inhales deeply, slowly, at the mural of bruises and scars painted on Alex’s torso, on her sides, all in various shades, colors, all in various states of healing.

“But I – no one knows, no one’s… seen. I stopped changing in front of Kara when I started working at the DEO, I… I don’t want you to think that I’m… I don’t want you to stop looking at me like you…”

“Like I what?” Maggie rasps, her eyes memorizing a map of Alex’s current wounds while Alex tugs her shirt over her head.

Stitches, eight, on the fresh side, maybe about three months, diagonal, just above her navel. Probably from the slash of a knife, or claws.

A bruise, bigger than a human fist, deep purple in the center and fanning out in various shades of green and yellow for at least twice that span, on the left side of her rib cage. Probably from being kicked repeatedly while she was on the ground.

A smaller bruise, older, yellower, just below her navel. Probably from a solid punch to the gut.

A jagged scar, just above her bra line, old, but not so old that it wasn’t clearly visible; she must have covered it with make-up when she wore that low cut shirt the other night. Maggie doesn’t want to even begin at guessing what it could be from.

“Like you want me,” Alex answers in a small, small voice. “I don’t want you to stop looking at me like you want me.”

“Alex,” Maggie breathes, sinking slowly down to her knees, not breaking eye contact with her. She braces her hands gently on Alex’s hips and Alex breathes in deeply, slowly.

And just as deeply, just as slowly, Maggie brings her lips to meet every scar, every bruise, every bump and every scrape, that she can find. Alex hisses and Alex sighs and Alex tangles her hands in Maggie’s hair and Alex swears she will never let go of this woman even if keeping her kills her.

“I want you, Alex Danvers,” Maggie tells her as she rises from her knees. “I want you, I want you, I want you.”

And she spends the entire rest of the night proving just how much.

Alex Danvers has never liked intimacy.

But now intimacy – whether it’s holding hands or being fed or undressing her girlfriend or letting Maggie go down on her – is all that’s ever really on Alex’s mind.

And she can’t talk to Kara about it. Kara who always looks so scandalized by the mere idea of her friends having sex, let alone her sister, Kara who always smiles because she’s happy that Alex is happy, but averts her eyes carefully, whenever she and Maggie so much as kiss in front of her.

And she likes Winn, she does – loves him, even, even though she’d be damned if she ever told him that – but talking to him about… sex? No. No. Nope. Nnhnn.

J’onn’s basically her father, so just… no.

James? James might be a good option, but she doesn’t want to make things weird since he and Kara used to be…

Used to be… Lucy. Of course. Lucy. Obviously. Lucy.

She regrets it almost as soon as she brings it up with her, because now she can’t be tentative: Lucy Lane will not allow it.

“Agent Alexandra Danvers, you will tell me every single detail about fucking that woman right now or so help me, I will get myself reinstated in the army and have you court martialed for crimes against humanity.”

I know everyone wants sanvers scenes but I want maggie and kara interactions too!!
And I want maggie to be unfazed by kara pout but the moment alex does it (yes, kara learn that from her) she gives in (and kara is a bit offended by it tbh)

Okay so first YES YES YES and second, there are a bunch of really fun Kara/Maggie interactions in my Sanvers Christmas fic, and tomorrow’s Chanukah fic is gonna be entirely about Kara and Maggie!!

BUT ONTO THE POUT (you are a genius this is a literally perfect concept):

“Alright Danvers ladies, I gotta get home, I have an early meeting – “

“But Maggie, the movie’s not even half over!” Kara rounds on Maggie with a full on pout, which is made even cuter by the fact that her cheeks are rounded with the fistful of popcorn she’d just stuffed in her mouth.

Alex grins, confident and smug and grateful to Kara, while James and Winn snicker, Winn backhanding James’s arm repeatedly, anticipating the way Maggie will inevitably melt: even J’onn is susceptible to the Kara Danvers Pout, and they’ve been speculating that Kara should just pout at Lilian Luthor next time Cadmus is threatening extermination, because hell, even she probably wouldn’t be immune.

“Sorry, kid, no can do.”

Kara nearly chokes and James thumps her on the back while a chorus of shocked what did she just say? and what the hell is happening? and but you just pouted! how are you resisting the pout right now? We thought resistance was futile! practically blew Maggie backward.

“The pout’s cute, Little Danvers, I’ll give you that. I can see where it’d be effective. But I really do have to get home.”

She slapped Kara on the knee as she made to stand up, Kara still wide-eyed and swallowing.

“Maggie,” Alex said softly, grabbing her hand and stopping her from getting up. “Babe, stay a little longer? Just until the end of the movie? Or you can stay over, go to work from here in the morning.” Her eyes widen and her lips pout forward slightly, and her voice is honey and James is hitting Winn this time and Kara’s mouth is wide open with horror because Maggie is already melting back into Alex’s arms and sighing.

“Alright, alright. Just until the end of the movie.”
“Or you can sleep here.”

“We’ll see.”

Another Alex Danvers Pout.

An outraged huff of indignation from Kara, and growing snickers from James and Winn.

“Okay, I’ll stay the night.”

And suddenly the pout is gone and is replaced by the most shit-eating grin Alex has ever worn, as she rearranges her head on Maggie’s lap and settles in so Maggie can play with her hair.

“Did she just –“

“Yeah, yeah, she did. She out-pouted you, Kara.”

“It must be love.”

Maggie’s eyes were on the movie, but she smiled as she responded to their banter.

“It is.”

Chapter Summary

Anonymous asked:
Okay- but what if Alex keeps trying to come out to her mom but things keep preventing her to do so. Kara leaves because of the portal/other universe. Maggie comes by because Alex is drunk/upset/lonely...

(Musical inspiration for this minific is James Arthur’s “Say You Won’t Let Go.”)

It’s not that she hadn’t tried.

It’s not that she hadn’t tried hard.

She drank her way through Thanksgiving, struggling to give herself enough courage to let the words, “Mom, I’m gay” slip past her lips. Struggling to give herself enough courage to rail at her for not giving her the space – because it was Eliza who took her space, not Kara, Kara who was just a little girl who’d lost her entire planet, but it was Eliza who should have known not to put that all on Alex’s back, too – to realize this about herself, or much of anything about herself. Struggling to give herself enough courage to ask how, how, even though Kara swore up and down that Eliza couldn’t possibly have a problem with her daughter being gay, Alex could not be terrified when all Eliza seemed to ever want from Alex was more than she could give?

She’d tried.

But, as was typical in her attempts to communicate with her mother – despite their immense, unflinching love for each other, despite their intense, unwavering connection – Alex failed. She tried to remind herself that it wasn’t her fault, that Kara had been whisked away by Barry Allen to go defend some other Earth – Alex would strangle Barry for letting Kara go alone if she ever got her hands on him – that Eliza had flown back to Midvale for the continuation of classes.

She tried to remind herself that she was Alex Danvers and that the bottom of even the best bottle of bourbon wouldn’t make her feel better.

But dammit, she failed again.

She failed again, because she’d already swallowed an entire half of the bottle in just the last twenty minutes, and her body took action before her mind could protest.

The phone only rang twice before the voice that both stopped and warmed her heart answered.

“Danvers! It’s late, everything okay?”

“Maggie Sawyer,” she drawled, tossing back another sip of bourbon to convince herself that calling Maggie was, in fact, the right decision. “You know I wanted to invite you for Thanksgiving? I wanted you to come, to be part of the family. But I also wanted to come out to my mom, and I figured, best not do that with the woman I’m falling for sitting right at the table next to me!”

“Alex – “

“But the thing is, Maggie, you wanna know the thing, about coming out to my mom?”

“Alex, please stop talking.”

“Okay.”

“Alex, you’re drunk, aren’t you?”

“Pfft, no, why would you – “

“Alex, I’m hanging up now. I’ll be there in ten. Drink some water.”

“But Maggie – “

“I’ll be right there. Drink water.”

Alex dimly registered that it was nine and a half minutes, not ten, when Maggie rapped at her door, and when she tugged it open somewhat sloppily, that Maggie’s perfect hair was perfectly askew, like she’d not only rode her Triumph, but like she’d run to and from it. Her slightly heaving chest proved Alex right.

She chuckled to herself at her cleverness.

“You gonna let me in, Danvers?”

“To the apartment or to the little inside joke I just made with myself there?”

Maggie smiled, but her eyes were guarded. Her eyes were sad.

“Oh, babygirl,” she whispered instinctively as Alex stumbled slightly as she tried to step back to let Maggie in.

Maggie wrapped a gentle, steady hand around Alex’s waist and led her to the couch, kicking the door closed behind them.

“You called me babygirl. I wish I was your babygirl.”

“Alex.”

“I could be your Alex, too, you know. Kara says you don’t know what you’re missing.”

“Kara’s wrong. I do. But, Alex, listen, you drank all that because you were upset about something else. Right? That’s why you called me, you were talking about Thanksgiving, about coming out to your mom?”

Alex squinted and leaned forward and Maggie gulped. Alex pulled back suddenly and Maggie took a breath. Alex’s hands shot up and back in an open-armed shrug.

“The thing is, I didn’t even come out to her! Didn’t get the damn chance! And now she’s back in Midvale and Kara’s away and probably in danger and I can’t do anything about it, I can’t do anything about any of it, and I just – “
Her words dissolved into harsh sobs and her breath shattered into shards as Maggie pulled her gently into her arms, pressing a soft kiss to her fair, rocking her, running her fingers across her back.

“I’ve got you, Alex. I’m here. I’m here. I’m here.”

“I’m sorry, I’m sorry, I – I’m not – I’m sorry, I’m sorry, Maggie, I’m sorry.”

“You’re allowed to be. You’re allowed to break, Alex. I won’t let you lose track of any of the pieces. I’ve got you. You’re okay.”

“I’m sorry.”

“Shhhh.”

“Please don’t go. Please. Please don’t go.”

Alex pulled back, shaking slightly, eyes unfocused. “Maggie, I – I think I have to throw up now.”

“Okay, come on, bathroom this way? I got you.”

And she did. She held Alex’s hair back and she rubbed her back while she was panting, pulling the band out of her own ponytail to tie Alex’s hair back for the next time she retched, both of Maggie’s hands would be free, one to be squeezed by Alex’s hand, one to continue rubbing her back.

“I’m sorry,” Alex moaned, and Maggie just shook her head.

“No apologies, Alex. I’ve been there. You deserve to be cared for. You deserve to be loved.”

Alex responded by throwing up again, and Maggie smiled slightly as Alex squeezed her hand again, hand.

“Stay,” Alex whispered after Maggie had been suitably convinced that she was done throwing up, after Maggie had wiped her face, after Maggie had helped her brush her teeth, had made her sip at least half a glass of water, had helped her into her bed.

“You should get some rest,” Maggie tried to argue, but Alex’s eyes were wide and terrified and her grip was vice like on Maggie’s forearm.

“Please.”

Maggie took a slow, deep breath and climbed into bed behind Alex, gulping and trying desperately to remember everything about calming breathing from that yoga class she went to last year, but all memory, all thoughts other than Alex, were shattered as Alex put her head on her chest, her leg over her hips, her arm over her stomach.

“Thank you,” Alex whispered, already mostly asleep.
Maggie didn’t sleep all night. She didn’t move. She barely breathed.

But she did know that she was already in love.

Chapter Summary

atsirc asked:
prompt: alex running a bath for maggie

After a few months, they’re practically living together.

After a few months, they have a shorthand that’s even tighter than the one they had almost automatically; this one extends into emotional life outside of work. When there can be emotional life outside of work.

So when Alex gets the deflated long day today. quiet night tonight? text from Maggie, she knows.

Knows that her heart hurts and that her body probably hurts, too.

Knows that someone did something racist, something xenophobic, something homophobic. That someone she was pursuing got away, that someone died, that Maggie got beaten down, that she was questioning herself, her purpose, her abilities.

Something. It was always something.

Alex knew, because Alex always had something, too.

Come over, I’ll order in, Alex texted back casually.

In the beginning, she’d always been overly concerned.

In the beginning, she’d overcompensated for making their initial friendship mostly about her needs, her coming out, her growth, and tried to get Maggie to talk about everything with her.

And sometimes, Maggie did. Sometimes Maggie talked and sometimes Maggie cried and sometimes Maggie shook with rage for hours on end.

But more often? More often Maggie sat, and sighed, and took shots of whiskey, and let Alex play with her hair, and sank into her arms, onto her lap, and fell asleep with Alex’s fingers tracing every contour of her face.

So Alex knew, now, not to make a big fuss over Maggie’s long day. She knew not to ask: if Maggie wanted to talk, she would.

She knew, now, just to act.

So she sped home from the DEO and she rummaged way in the back of the cabinet underneath her sink, digging out first aid kits and toothpaste and tampons, until she found the bottle she was looking for: a lavender-scented bubble bath that Eliza had gotten her last year, with a pointed reminder about the scientifically proven benefits of aromatherapy.
She plugged the drain, she ran the water, she dumped a quarter of the spicy-sweet smelling bottle into the mix. She tested the water with her hands, warm, warmer, warmest, bordering on too hot. She watched with satisfaction as the bubbles formed, and she jumped up with another idea, looking haphazardly at her watch as she darted from the bathroom: Maggie would be home any minute.

She shot through the apartment, gathering the candles that Maggie always seemed to like best, and arranged them on the sides of the tub. She lit them. She tested the water again. She took a deep breath in and let her eyes flutter closed.

She grinned and she turned off the water and she ordered them two pies of pizza, because it was bound to be one of those nights.

When Maggie’s key scraped the lock – her heart always leaped at that – she bit down her smile, she bit down the urge to run to the door, to overwhelm Maggie with physical attention, with love, with kisses. Instead, she casually leaned her head over the side of the open fridge door to meet Maggie’s eyes, clinking two bottles of beer together as she did.

“Hey,” she offered.

“Hey babe.” Maggie’s smile was as small as her eyes, which was as small as her defeated body language, and deep empathy combined with a strong desire to destroy whoever or whatever did this to the woman she loved swept through Alex. She bit it down, popping the top off one of the beers and handing it to her girlfriend.

“Thank you,” Maggie sighed, leaning up and kissing her, lingering just long enough to make Alex smile.

“I ran you a bath,” she said as casually as she could muster after Maggie pulled away.

“You did what?”

Alex bit down the series of insecure questions and disclaimers that screeched into her mind, and she nodded her head toward the bathroom with a small smile. She heard Maggie gasp faintly as she took in the scent, the sight, the dim lights and the candles.

“Babe,” she half breathed and half groaned, a small lighting up her every feature, stress already easing off of her body.

“How did you get to be so perfect?”

Alex beamed and Maggie strode over to her, unbuttoning Alex’s shirt without preamble.

“What uh… what are you doing?”

“A bath,” Maggie explained as she untucked Alex’s now unbuttoned flannel, taking her fingers lower to unzip her jeans, “requires a good, long soak. Especially one with all those candles, all those suds. You can’t let a good bath like that go to waste.”

She shrugged Alex out of her shirt, unclasped her bra with one try, and started tugging down her jeans, grinning at how utterly compliant badass DEO Agent Alex Danvers was for her.

“And the thing is, babe, especially after the day I’ve had? That long in the bath, alone? I’d miss you too much. So, either I take a shorter bath, or – “ She tugged down Alex’s boy shorts triumphantly. “–you just join me.”
“So you won’t be lonely,” Alex confirmed as she stripped Maggie of her own clothes.

“Exactly.”

Alex nodded and kissed each newly exposed inch of Maggie’s skin as she worked her way down her body.

“Happy to be of service, my love.”

so I've been thinking about Maggie finding out that Kara's supergirl but instead of being like OMG SUPERGURL shes immediately focusses on Alex because suddenly it makes so much sense that Alex doesnt feel like shes good enough

Kara does the quasi-strip thing she did for Lucy and Alex is standing at Maggie’s side, wide-eyed and terrified, and Kara looks grim, worried that her secret will cause a massive rift between Maggie and Alex (and she’s come to really like Maggie, the way she dotes on Alex and brings that smile to her face).

To both Danvers sisters’ surprise, Maggie doesn’t even pay attention to Kara at all, and it’s not because she’s rounding on Alex to demand to know how she could have lied to her all this time.

Alex is tensed for it, she’s ready for it, ready to fight (because this is her sister, dammit) and ready to beg (because she’s never felt like this before, ever, and she knows she never will again), but when Maggie turns to her, it’s not with anger and it’s not with betrayal and it’s not with hurt.

Her eyes are full of tears and she takes Alex’s cheeks between her hands, pushing stray hair out of her face, out of her eyes.

“Alex Danvers. I know Kara, and I know Supergirl, and now I know they’re the same woman. But do you want to know who the bravest, most powerful, strongest, most intelligent, toughest, most beautiful, most perfect woman I have ever met is?”

Alex swallows and Alex shakes her head, because she genuinely cannot understand where Maggie is going with this.

“You, Alex Danvers. You are.” She strokes her cheeks with her thumbs and smiles softly at Alex’s cloudy eyes.

“No offense, Kara,” she tosses over her shoulder, but Kara is hugging herself and Kara is beaming.

“None taken,” she says to the woman whose wedding to her sister she’s already planning.

Okay but imagine Alex tracking down Vicky Donahue after all those years to explain her actions back then and apologize 0.0 nothing happens but Vicky accepts the apology and asks if they can try being friends again... I don't know why I think about that a lot...

“Vicky?”
“Yeah.”
“Vicky Donahue?”
“I said, yeah. Who the hell is this?”
“Still got your charm and sophistication, sounds like.”
“Amy? Alex Danvers?”
“Hi.”
“Yeah, no, Vicky, everything’s fine, no one’s… listen, I… you have literally no reason to say yes to this, but I just… I been thinking about a lot lately, realizing a lot lately, about… things. About myself, and I… it’s all made me want to apologize for… how things ended. Between us.”

A long silence.

“Vicky?”
“Yeah. Yeah. I’m here. You still cut right to the chase, huh? So this thing you realized… mind if I take a guess?”
“What – “
“You’re gay, right? I mean I always kinda thought so, but I dunno, I guess I assumed I’d just done something wrong and I – “
“What? No, Vicky, I – I mean, yes, yes, I’m… gay, but no, you didn’t do anything wrong, I… I didn’t know, then, I didn’t understand what I… I missed you, in college.”

“I missed you too, Alex. I still – do you wanna – I mean, I know maybe you just called to clear your conscience or something, but if you wanted to, you know, try to be… friends again? I mean, it’s been over a decade, right, so I’d get it if you – “
“No, no, yeah, that’d be great, Vicky, I – friends. That aren’t somehow tied up with work. That’d be new and different.”

“Is that a yes, Alex?”

“Noonan’s, tomorrow. I’ve got this girl I wanna tell you all about.”

The jacket smells like motorcycle exhaust, gunpowder residue, and a hint of lavender, and Maggie can’t possibly imagine not inhaling that perfect scent every morning, every day, every night, every moment in between, for the rest of her life.

sansvers first I love you will be almost unintended, maggie is leaving and says "I need to go now, so bye babe, I love you." With a small kiss and alex just responds "ok. I love you too" and they only realise what happened when they are alone

Alex completely panics and drags Winn by the collar into one of the labs, barking at the poor lab techie to get out, and he scurries to do just that, as Winn runs down the mental list of things he could have done this time, but instead of assaulting him or threatening him Alex just starts pacing and wringing her hands as she tells him far more details than he ever needed about her morning routine ("And it was just a regular morning, you know, we showered together and I washed her hair, and she made me an omelette but just grabbed a piece of toast for herself, put it in her mouth, took it out to kiss me goodbye, and told me she loved me, and I said I love you too, and I mean come on, what happened?"). ("What… happened is that you idiots have been in love since basically day one and it’s about time you all told each other, is what happened. Ow!")

Maggie says nothing, not to anyone, not all damn day, unless it’s about the case. Her work partner glances nervously at the ME on the case a lot, but they’re smarter than to say anything to her. (They do however, keep a running tally of how many times she brings her left hand underneath her lip before lunch time. Her partner swears it’s twelve and the ME counts 14.) And of course today would be the day her phone dies and they’re in the field so she can’t charge it. So she grabs her partner’s when they break for lunch and punches in Alex’s number, because her nerves, her fears, her hopes, will destroy her if she doesn’t hear that woman’s voice, and soon.

“Danvers,” Alex answers, and her heart flies.

“It’s me. And I just… I wanted to say it again, Alex. I love you.”

“And I wanted to say it again, Maggie. I love you, too.”

Chapter Summary

"A surprise for Alex

It has been a long day for alex fighting constantly against the bad aliens. Back at the DEO, she was about to say goodnight when she got a letter signed Sawyer and it stated for her to go home and wait for her. Alex went home and found another set of letter.

You know what I mean? I hope you do. Can’t wait to read it."

^^ prompt from lesbian-loveology

Alex sighs and pinches the bridge of her nose, shrugging out of her combat gear and thanking the newbie agent who jumps to put the rest of the field equipment away for her.

Her muscles are stiff and she’s going to feel that laceration in her side in the morning, but she’d gotten it checked out in the field and she’s really too exhausted to take better care of it right now.

She sighs again as she checks into the control room one last time before leaving for the night, making sure all the agents on late night shift have checked in, that all the new compounds they’d transported earlier that day are in proper storage, that all the cells are locked tight, that all the combat gear has been returned and accounted for.

She almost misses the post-it note, hastily scrawled and crookedly stuck to the computer console.

Danvers, it reads, go home tonight, not Kara’s. She said it’s fine. - Sawyer

Brow furrowed, Alex bites the inside of her cheek, reads the note again, and grins slightly at the flutter of anticipation in her stomach.

She’s not quite as tired when she swings her leg over her Ducati and pulls away into the night.

---

Danvers, the next note, stuck this time to her front door, Bathroom. Take your time. -- Sawyer.

Alex walks into the bathroom, slowly, mystified.

“What the...” she whispers on discovering a near boiling, perfectly sudsy, perfectly scented -- lavender, her favorite -- bath, candles and rose petals littering the sides of the tub, contemporary jazz humming from the iPod plugged into a small speaker above the sink.

She looks back down at the note in her hand -- Take your time, it says -- and she smiles, and she does.
She finds the next note folded into the heated towel waiting for her on the rack.

_Alex_, it reads. _Bedroom. Don’t bother getting dressed._ -- _Sawyer_

Her heart skips and she forgets how to breathe, and she notices for the first time that there’s a path of rose petals leading from the bathroom into her bedroom.

She smiles and she swallows the stinging in her eyes and she takes a deep breath, wrapping the towel around her body, holding it just above her chest as she steps, slowly, tentatively, wide-eyed, into her bedroom.

There’s a tray of homemade pizza, still steaming, and salad, loaded with all of Alex’s favorites, and bottles of beer and a pitcher of water sitting next to her bed, and there’s that contemporary jazz again, and there’s Maggie Sawyer, hair down and eyes soft and lips slightly open, sitting cross-legged on the bed in one of Alex’s Stanford sweatshirts.

“Hungry?” she asks, after a long, long silence, a long, long silence of staring into each other’s eyes and forgetting how to breathe.

“Yes,” Alex smiles, and crosses the room to sit in front of Maggie.

Needing no words, Maggie passes Alex beer and she holds out pizza for her to bite into, and she moans when she does because god is it good. She feeds her the salad and she feeds her the pizza and she caresses her naked body when Alex lets the towel drop.

Still wordless, she slips the final note -- for tonight -- into Alex’s hands.

_Alex_, it reads, _I love you. Always._ -- _Your Maggie_

Chapter Summary

anonymous asked:

alex seems like she never had a night of proper sleep since kara arrived but now with maggie she basically enters in a coma bc she's so relaxed!!!! Can u imagine alex saying in a little voice "I wanna nap now maggie, pleeeeeease *scrunchy nose"

At first, the lack of sleep was from excitement.

A sister. Finally.

Someone to stay awake with at night, to giggle with in the beam of a smuggled flashlight.

Then the lack of sleep came from waiting.

Waiting for Eliza and Jeremiah to fall asleep, to sneak onto the roof, to grab onto Kara’s strong arms and fly off into the night.

Literally fly.

And then she didn’t sleep because she couldn’t sleep.

She didn’t sleep because she snuck up to the roof alone. To watch the stars. Alone.

Because Jeremiah was dead and Kara was sad and Alex was angry and Eliza blamed her for everything.

A few years later, it was studying, and a few years into that, it was partying, because finally, finally, Kara was in a different city and Eliza couldn’t possibly blame Alex for Kara getting a hangnail (even though she certainly did try).

And then it was DEO training and being a DEO agent and then it was Kara being Supergirl while she was a DEO agent, and then, dear god, then it was Maggie Sawyer.

Late nights at the bar, late nights driving out past all the light pollution and making out under the stars.

Late nights seeing who could be made to scream louder, who could be made to cum harder.

Late nights talking and late nights crying and late nights laughing, laughing, laughing.

But then – Alex wasn’t quite sure when – she started… sleeping.

From keeping one ear constantly straining for signs of trouble, for sounds of Kara in danger, for sounds of Kara distressed, for sounds of alien gunmen, Alex went to sleeping past her first alarm, sleeping past Maggie’s second, sleeping past Maggie’s third. Sleeping past Maggie gently disentangling herself from their bed so she could shower, so she could have breakfast ready by the time her sleeping beauty finally stirred.

In Maggie’s arms, Alex found that she loved to sleep. That she couldn’t get enough of sleep.

“Please baby, just five minutes,” Alex whined, and Kara, outside her own apartment door, flinched.

She was happy for Alex – truly, she was – but that didn’t mean she wanted her sister having sex on her couch.

She furiously adjusted her glasses and grasped the handle a little too firmly as she wrenched the doors open, face already screwed up about what she was convinced she’d find.

“AleX —“ she started, but stopped immediately on seeing Alex, fully clothed and bleary eyed, yanking Maggie back down to the couch with the exaggerated motions of one half-asleep.

“Just five minutes of a nap, Maggie, please?”

When Alex scrunched up her nose, Kara knew Maggie’s willpower would be history.

And sure enough, it was.

Kara smiled to herself and backed out of her own apartment slowly, quietly, to let her sister have her nap.

Sanvers Prompt:

Alex: She’s hot.

Maggie: She’s a criminal, a violent criminal.

Alex: Still hot tho.

^^ Prompt above from worldclassbeauty

It all started with a bet.

“Oh please, Danvers, you think you have game with women?” Lucy had teased, shoving her shoulder into Alex’s with a familiarity that made Maggie cock an eyebrow and wonder how much game Alex had unknowingly had with Lucy in the past.

“I must, I have the finest woman on the planet, don’t I?”

“Whoaaaaa!” James and Winn chorused, spilling their beer slightly, and Maggie laughed.

“See, look how smooth my girl is.”

“Oof, that thigh holster.”

Alex’s ears reddened at the attention -- at truly, thoroughly enjoying the attention for the first time in her life, from a woman who was in love with her and from friends who loved her -- and shook her head, pointing her beer bottle back at Lucy.

“No no no, let’s not forget that Lane questioned my lesbian honor! No game with women. Pfft.”

“Okay Danvers, prove it. Pick a woman -- not your woman -- and pick her up. With your smooth, not at all awkward moves.”

Alex’s eyes narrowed and Maggie shook her head defeatedly as James and Winn thumped her comfortably on the back.

“That okay, baby? You wouldn’t get jealous?”

“Oh, I might get jealous, Danvers. But then I get to take you home and show you just how mine you are, so I think I’ll survive.”

Winn whooped and James and Lucy choked on their beer, and Alex didn’t know whether to dive under the table in embarrassment or drag Maggie into the bathroom then, there, and now.
But her pride was on the line, so she chose the third option. She scoped around the bar, eyes out for a woman to try to pick up. She’d show Lucy Lane.

No game with women. Pfft.

“Okay,” she said. “What about her? She’s hot.”

Lucy oofed and James nodded respectfully and Winn put a mockingly supportive hand on Maggie’s shoulder.

“Nuh uh, Danvers. I know that girl. She’s a criminal. A violent criminal.”

Alex’s eyes glistened with the challenge.

“That’s the spirit, Danvers!” Lucy all but dragged her out of her chair and shoved her toward the woman she’d picked out.

James left the bar with a burnt forearm, Winn with a pair of bruised ribs; Maggie with a cut above her eyebrow, Lucy with scraped knuckles, Alex with a laceration on her torso and a ridiculously heavy bar tab.

“Told you she was a violent criminal, babe.”

Alex nodded, but she grinned as she fished something out of her back pocket.

“I got her number though.”

James is the Gryffindor whose always being called to Headmaster Jonzz’s office for teaming up with Winn the Ravenclaw and Alex to defend all the meeker kids against bullies.

At first, they run between each other’s House tables in the Great Hall, never sitting down, but unashamed to be seen crossing House lines to talk to each other.

Gradually, they start sitting with each other, walking each other through the halls to class, passing study tips and jokes to each other between classes.

Whispers, stares, and – often – sneers erupt every time blue holds hands with green or yellow hugs red. Alex threatens anyone who so much as looks at the interhouse crew sideways.

The watershed moment is when the entire school comes down to breakfast to find the Slytherin Beater Alex Danvers locked in a desperate, passionate, loving kiss with Ravenclaw Chaser Maggie Sawyer, the morning of the House Cup match between their Houses.

The next morning, the House tables are ashambles, all mixed and matched and clashed together.

No one explicitly claims responsibility for the interhouse table chaos, but James has a massive grin on his face, the tips of Kara’s ears are red, Winn looks overly pleased with himself, and Maggie is sitting in Alex’s lap, whispering sweet nothings in her ear while the badass Slytherin giggles and kissed her dimples and strokes her hair.

“Good god, they’ve rebelled,” Headmaster J’onzz mutters as he walks in, shaking his head with a small smile on his face.

Maggie or Alex walking in on the other getting herself off to porn

Maggie doesn’t usually need porn to get herself off.

She’s got strong hands and an even stronger imagination.

But it’s been a long day and Alex is in Geneva and Maggie is exhausted but god does she need to get off.

So she sighs and she flips on her computer and she lets her mind fall away and her fingers slip under her unzipped jeans and soon her small gasps and groans are joining those of the short-haired brunette on the screen, her fingers slipping inside herself, her palm pressuring her clit, her eyes fluttering shut, imagining Alex’s tongue, her fingers, her screams, her… voice…

“Mmmm, that feel as amazing as it looks, babe?”

Alex’s strong hands catch her before she can spill off of the couch in shock.

“Alex, you were – I thought you were in – “

“I was. Negotiations went well, ended early, and I… I wanted to uh…” Her eyes drag slowly up and down Maggie’s body, linger on the dampness still lingering on her fingers, her slightly flushed skin, her rapidly fluttering pulse.

“I wanted to see you,” she husks, and Maggie gulps. Alex glances down at the video Maggie had pulled up, and she arches her eyebrow and purses her lips, leaning in close to Maggie’s ear and exhaling headily.

“Anything you’d be interested in watching together?”

“I… it… Alex…”

“Should I take that as a yes?”

The woman on Maggie’s screen screams out an orgasm, and Alex shrugs out of her jacket with her eyes sharp and determined and locked in Maggie’s.

“Let’s see if I can make you scream louder than that.”

Turns out, she could.

And she did.

Chapter Summary

anonymous asked:

sanver smut: face sitting

Maggie’s typically the one with the dirty mouth.

The most Alex can usually rasp out is something akin to “shut up and kiss me” – or, once in a brave while, “don’t stop fucking me, Maggie” – which pales in comparison to the things Maggie whispers into her ears, from the declarations of Alex’s unparalleled beauty to the running commentary on how tight Alex is, how wet she is for her, how amazing it’s going to feel when she cum pulsing around her fingers.

So when Maggie’s sprawled on their bed one Sunday morning, NCPD files scattered in an ordered chaos around her, she’s surprised when Alex perches on the edge of the bed, stares at her for a long moment, and says, matter-of-factly and two or three octaves lower than her voice normally is, “How would you feel about taking a break and sitting on my face right about now?”

Maggie nearly chokes and suddenly she thinks she knows how Alex feels when her words send shock waves through her body. Pleasant shock waves. Very pleasant shock waves.

Alex doesn’t wait for a verbal reply: the hungry look in Maggie’s eyes, the way she licks her lips, the way her body is suddenly keening for Alex, gives her answer away.

Alex gathers Maggie’s files into one hand, taking care to keep them in order even as she tosses them on the floor, in the same motion flipping Maggie on top of her, hips settling around her shoulders.

Maggie is gasping already, and Alex practically growls in anticipation.

Alex urges Maggie up on her left side, tugging her shorts and underwear down while Maggie holds herself up, kicking impatiently until her clothes settle down past her knees.

“Alex, you sure?”

Alex answers with her hands, with her tongue, pulling Maggie’s hips down and drawing out a long, low moan from her girlfriend as she drags her tongue slowly, firmly, across Maggie’s clit.

Maggie gasps her name and her inner thighs start to shake with restraint. Alex pushes slightly so her lips are free enough to talk.

“Babe, you’re not gonna hurt me. Let yourself enjoy.” She knows she’s echoing the words Maggie had told her the first time she’d pulled Alex down onto her face, and she really hopes Maggie doesn’t have anything smarmy to say about it, because she really needs to keep tasting her.
Maggie tries to come up with something witty, something teasing. She really does.

She splutters and she stammers, but then Alex’s tongue is slipping inside her and her thumb is pressuring her clit and god she’s not really known herself to let go, but right now she can’t do anything but grind her hips down desperately into Alex’s face, and when Alex moans and tightens her fingers on her ass in response, the sound vibrates through her whole body before it’s lost in the depth of her own scream.

“Al – Alex, Alex, I need – please, Al – Alex, I – “

Alex smiles, because Alex knows.

Alex shifts and Maggie groans while she waits and Alex chuckles into her clit and Maggie whines and Alex replaces her tongue with her fingers, slipping deep inside her, giving Maggie what she needs while her mouth closes on that sensitive spot just above Maggie’s clit, the spot she needs pressure on to help her cum, and Alex doesn’t care that her teeth cut into her upper lip as Maggie’s body freezes and her back arches and her insides pulse and her throat nearly tears with the force of how loudly she screams Alex’s name.

It takes her long, long minutes to come completely down off her high, and when she does – when Alex wipes her chin, her lips, her nose, on the tender inside of Maggie’s thigh – she grins down at Alex hungrily, desperately. Eagerly.

“Your turn.”

Maggie sees Alex in her glasses for the first time when she visits her in the lab. Even though they're at the DEO, Maggie can't wait...

“Detective Sawyer! Agent Danvers is waiting for you in the lab – you have the sample she requested?”

“Yes, sir, got it right here. Can your super spy lab seriously pull data from this?” She holds up the baggie of ashes burnt beyond anything her NCPD lab could make heads or tails of, and J’onn crosses his arms over his chest and grins smugly.

“I’ll let Agent Danvers prove it to you. Just through that hallway, on your left.”

Maggie smiles her thanks at him and practically skips off through the DEO, trying to hide her smirk at the way the agents she passes grin knowingly at her. Her pulse thrums harder than normal as excitement floods through her veins at getting to see Alex in the middle of the day.

“Hey babe, I brought you the sample from the scene,” she says brightly as she walks into the lab J’onn had indicated, and when Alex looks up from her microscope with a grin, any words Maggie had thought about saying – any moves Maggie had thought about making, any oxygen she’d thought about inhaling – vacate her entirely.

Because Alex is in a white lab coat, and Alex is looking up at her over the black rims of rectangular glasses.

Alex’s eyes meet hers, and her body jolts into a response.

“Alex,” Maggie husks, kicking the lab door closed behind her, dropping the sample she’d brought on the table, and striding over to where Alex is bent over her microscope, ripping off her leather jacket and tossing it onto a chair as she moves.

“Maggie, what – “ Alex asks as Maggie pulls her up and into her body.

“You. Glasses. Never seen,” Maggie manages to grunt as Alex lets her head drop back to allow Maggie better access to her throat.

“Oh. Oh,” Alex moans, and she grabs at Maggie’s hips, but her eyes are darting around the room.

“Mags, I’m in my lab,” she squeals, but she’s working on the buttons of Maggie’s shirt all the while.

Prompt: Alex and Maggie starting the new year off with a bang? Yes? Yes.

Chapter Notes

YES INDEED. Side note: I had shut off my computer for the night, but then this prompt came in and I just broke out laughing like OKAY I’LL WRITE JUST THIS ONE MORE AND THEN BE DONE lmao ;)

Somewhere between Kara’s third dance with Lena and James’s ringing laughter and Winn’s amused entreaties for them to just get a room already, Alex and Maggie finally took his advice.

The room they chose – or rather, the room Alex tugged Maggie into desperately, tugging at her shawl and kissing every bit of lipstick off of her mouth – was a small conference room, off of the lavishly decorated L Corp lobby.

“Tights off,” Alex growled into Maggie’s mouth, and Maggie hoisted herself onto the conference room table so Alex could drag them down for her. Somewhere between Alex, on her knees, reaching up to cover Maggie’s mouth while she licked and sucked her clit, and Maggie wrangling Alex’s dress above her waist so she could slip her fingers inside her while returning the favor, the two dimly registered the excited countdown growing in the party outside, Lena’s guests counting back steadily from twenty.

It was nearly midnight.

Maggie grinned into Alex’s mouth and curved her fingers deep inside her, kissing her lips to stifle her scream as she came undone in Maggie’s arms, as her knuckles grew white on the edge of the table, as she panted Maggie’s name and clawed at her back and tried not to let her heel dig into her exposed skin, as she shuddered hard and deep and thorough.

As the clock struck twelve, and cheers rose up through the lobby outside, and the year passed by, Maggie claimed Alex’s lips before whispering in her ear, “Happy new year, Alex Danvers. I can’t wait to spend it loving you.”
Chapter Summary

Fic idea: Maggie unconsciously tells Alex she's a good girl outside of the bedroom. Alex is super embarrassed but also preens.

She doesn’t mean it like that.

And she doesn’t even mean for Alex – let alone her space dad and best friend and her freaking sister – to hear it. She just kind of says it.

Mutters it, really, because she’s always in awe of this woman, and she’s always proud of her, and it just slips past her lips, under her breath, when Alex single-handedly comes up with a way to power down Cadmus’s latest weapons tech remotely, without putting any agents at risk.

“Good girl, Danvers,” she mutters when Alex finally takes a breath after explaining her plan to the others.

She means it like nice going. She means it like that’s my girl.

She means it like holy shit Maggie how did you land the most brilliant woman to ever exist?

But when Alex goes bright red and when Alex splutters and when Kara notices and groans and when Winn notices breaks out into a laughing whoop and when J’onn notices and good gods and retreats from the room, Maggie realizes.

Realizes that Alex didn’t hear nice going that’s my girl holy shit I am so lucky to be with the most brilliant woman to ever exist.

Instead, in those little words, Alex heard the long nights, the early mornings. The bedroom talk and the bathroom talk and the kitchen counter talk and the shower talk and the back closet of the NCPD precinct talk.

The good girl, baby, that feels so damn good.

The god, you’re so tight for me, good girl, take me in just like that.

The you wanna be a good girl and strip for me, babe?

The oh, good girl, I love it when you beg for me like that.

The ugh, fuck Alex, be a good girl and cum for me.

Maggie is about to apologize and Maggie is about to backtrack, but when her now overheating face turns up to look at Alex’s, her girlfriend is standing straighter, her eyes shining brighter, her smile lifting higher.
Because she’s Maggie’s girl – and good, too – and damn, is it hot.

But she’s also Maggie’s girl – and good, too – and damn, is it perfect.

It doesn’t take them very long for Alex to list them as being on a relationship on facebook. Maggie gulps and Maggie flushes and Maggie almost cries and Maggie laughs and Maggie smiles.

It doesn’t take very long, either, for Alex’s little sister to start commenting on and liking pictures of Maggie that are three, four, seven, nine years old, and her stomach constricts at the same time as she chuckles: the kid is facebook stalking her, checking her out, making sure she’s good enough for Alex. Alex’s boss and that IT kid Winn and James all start doing it, too.

Maggie appreciates the protectiveness – Alex deserves nothing less than a thorough screening – though she finds it mildly amusing that her bespectacled, couldn’t-hurt-a-fly looking sister is leading the charge.

But it helps, ultimately, because when Kara discovers through her facebook stalking session that Maggie loves to cook; when Winn discovers that she won an Intel prize in high school for a computerized model of crime scene analysis; when James discovers how sensitively she takes photos; when J’onn discovers that she was shot in the line twice from diving in front of her colleagues – they begin approving.

They begin going on family outings and they begin posting their own pictures on facebook.

They all snap them – hilariously angled selfies over the pool table and secret snaps of Alex and Maggie stealing kisses at work – but James and Maggie become the annointed group photographers.

So when Maggie is uploading a slew of the gang from Lena Luthor’s latest outing – one with Supergirl in the background, as she tended to be at L Corp functions, which always made Maggie’s stomach roil with mild jealousy at the ease, the intimacy, with which she and Alex interacted – and facebook suggests tagging Supergirl’s face as Kara Danvers, Maggie nearly spits up her coffee.
And Maggie realizes.

And Maggie laughs.

And Maggie gulps, hard, because suddenly Kara Danvers’ threats come with superpowers.

And she keeps laughing anyway, because Alex has never made so much sense, and she has never loved her quite this much.

“She’s bulletproof, Alex, how the hell could you do that?”

“She didn’t need protection – “

“And if you can’t handle that, I don’t know what to tell you, because – “

“Stop, you don’t get to storm out of here. You can’t, because you’re likely to rip this gaping hole in your stomach open again.”

Maggie’s fingers on Alex’s shoulders, holding her down to the bio bed, gentle and tender despite the rage in her eyes, despite her glowering body language, despite the furious tone of her voice.

“Maggie, I… she’s my sister.”

A heavy sigh. Maggie collapsing onto the bed by Alex’s hips. Maggie taking Alex’s hand, careful not to disturb her IV. Maggie bending to kiss each knuckle.

“I know, babe. I know. And you’re never gonna not protect her. That’s why I… that’s why you’re you.”

A long pause as Alex processes the layers of what Maggie didn’t say out loud, but what her wide, wet, terrified eyes are screaming.

“I love you, Maggie. I’m not gonna leave you.”

Another long pause as Maggie’s throat fills with tears and her heart swells nearly outside of her chest.

“You better not, Danvers. Cause I love you, too.”

Sooo I just quit drugs cold turkey on new years eve and it's already pretty hard for me. I kinda headcanon alex to have taken at least mdma or ecstasy in her partying days and wondered if u could incorporate that in a fic? I'd understand if you (1/2)

(cont.) don’t wanna do that. Supergirl and knowing Chyler was an addict once really helped me in my decision to get sober and I feel like it’d be nice to see that you can turn your life around from mdma or speed every week. (It’s okay if u ignore)

Hey Anon – like I said in the other ask, you are so freaking brave, and I’m sending love a shitton of love and support. I’m honored that you asked me to write this, and I hope it does justice to you and to Alex (I share your headcanon, btw), and I hope it can be cathartic. <3 <3 <3

She was drunk the first time she shot up.

Drunk and desperate to feel something aside from the dull emptiness that being kissed by him had left her with, something aside from Eliza’s voice in her ear, asking how she could possibly be at a party when there were tests to take, experiments to run, a sister to be taking care of, a perpetually unsatisfied mother to please, a dead father to somehow replace and make proud at the same time.

She’d rambled at top speed about the chemical composition of meth, about the exact effect it was having on her central nervous system, about exactly how it was crashing into the other chemicals in her body to make her heart race like this, to make her talk this quickly, to make her fuck him this hard, to make her able to run complex chemical equations in her head while he hiked up her skirt and she clawed her nails into his back.

She was stone cold sober – well, only with a glass or two of wine in her, which was sober these days – the next time she shot up.

Because god, she’d gotten her work done quickly that first night, even though she was wasted off her mind, even though the formulas she ran through came to her while she was throwing up.

Eliza wanted her to get her MD and her PhD in less time than it took most people to get their BA? Fine. She could work with that.

With a little help.

But a little help became a lot, and by the time she found herself locked in a cell with some government agent who claimed to know her father – god, what would her father think – her skin was starting to crawl and her body was starting to quake, because what had been a what the hell I’m a failure anyway decision had become a how the hell else am I going to make it through this week without it necessity.
He was the first man since her father – this Hank Henshaw guy – who held her gently, who held her kindly, who held her without wanting to get into her pants, without wanting anything but what was best for her.

He held her while she shook and he held her while she yelled until her throat bled and he closed his strong hands over her protesting wrists when she wanted to hit, when she wanted to claw, when she wanted to slip out of her own skin because Jesus fuck hadn’t she already failed enough, suffered enough?

He watched her when she started to stand on her own and he watched her when she learned how to fight. He watched her when she withdrew to a place inside her mind that looked as dark as some of the corners of his own mind; shadows and demons and terrors that he’d rarely seen behind another human’s eyes.

He watched her as she squinted, as she breathed, as she clenched her knuckles around the edge of lab tables while she analyzed alien cells, as she slammed her fists into opponents in whose faces she imagined her own.

He watched her as she became her own fuel, as she replaced what she could get from a needle, from the edge of a knife, with her own grit, her own growing love for herself, and he watched her as she called her little sister just to say hello, just to say that yes, the lab work was going well, because, finally… it was.

He watched the grin spread across her face when she beat him for the first time, when she completed her training and she became a DEO agent, she became her sister’s protector – again – she became her own person – again.

He watched from a distance as she commanded her first mission into the field, as she gained the respect of the agents she herself started to train. As she drew her arm around the shoulder of another lost soul he’d picked up, as she held the younger woman through her own shakes, through her own screams, and helped her become her own agent, her own superhero.

And he smiled, because – despite who her sister was – Alex Danvers had become his.

And – from the determined grin on her face when she told him that her sister broke the sound barrier, from the relief in her eyes when she brought Kara back from the heaven of the Black Mercy, from the happiness in her stance when she told him she was gay, when she told him she was in love, when her ears grew red when Maggie kissed her hello and told J’onn that she was the lucky one – he smiled because Alex had finally become her own superhero, too.
Chapter 34

Chapter by queergirlwriting

Chapter Summary

anonymous asked:

Maggie has been teasing Alex with few touch here and there all day until Alex has had it. She grabbed Maggie's hand and took her to an empty office. When she closed the door, she immediately had Maggie right against the door. "What a..." Maggie asked but did not finish because she saw the raging desire in Alex's eyes. Alex took Maggie's hands and place it above her, holding these hands with one hand, she kissed Maggie so passionately. She took her other hand and slip inside. (Write this?)

It starts in the morning. It starts with the kiss Maggie presses to Alex’s lips before stepping out the door, flitting her tongue across Alex’s bottom lip, nipping slightly, and pulling away and slipping onto her Triumph just before Alex can react, just before Alex can compose herself enough to grab her, to hold her closer, to kiss her harder.

It continues in the field. Maggie runs her fingers down the small of Alex’s back as she passes behind her to sign a report. She makes sure to bend over, right in front of Alex, knowing full well that her shirt, her jacket, will ride up to give Alex a glimpse of the dragon tattoo she has on the small of her own back. The one that drives Alex nuts. Not to mention the way bending over makes her jeans cling even tighter to her ass. Alex bites her lip and Alex swallows and Alex glares when Maggie just smiles innocently as she straightens and struts away.

It continues at the precinct, in Maggie’s lab, when Maggie makes sure her hand brushes across Alex’s chest when she reaches over to get a vial of dye for the slide she’s preparing. When Maggie makes sure she leans over Alex, breathes hotly on the back of her exposed neck, while Alex is trying to focus.

It continues until Alex can’t – won’t – take it anymore.

And suddenly Maggie’s hand is in hers and Maggie is jogging to keep up with her scowling girlfriend and Alex is shoving her into the first empty office she finds and Maggie is asking “Al, what – “ and Alex isn’t answering because she is shutting the door and slamming Maggie against it and Maggie is looking up into the raw need, the fierce desire, in Alex’s eyes, and she is gulping and she is grinning headily and she is answering the question in Alex’s momentary hesitation by leaning up to kiss her so Alex knows that yes, yes, fuck yes, Maggie is more than alright with this sudden turn of events.

And, knowing, Alex grins almost ferally, grabbing Maggie’s wrists and shoving them above her head, clamping them against the door with one hand, bringing her other hand to unzip Maggie’s jeans.

“Oh?” she asks, and Maggie whines and Maggie grinds futilely into Alex’s hand and Alex grins at the receipt of consent and rips Maggie’s zipper down, slipping her fingers straight under her boy shorts, moaning when she finds Maggie already wet for her, when she finds the woman whose hands she has pinned above her head keening for her to come inside her, for her to stretch her out, for her to fuck her.

“Alex,” Maggie begs, and already her voice is completely wrecked, and already Alex’s fingers have found their way into Maggie’s body, and already Alex is palming Maggie’s clit and already Maggie feels her wrists bruising and absolutely loves it and already Alex’s lips are clamped on Maggie’s neck and her thigh slipping between her legs to brace her, to brace them both, because already Maggie is close to coming undone, to cuming, in Alex’s hands.

And she does, and she screams, and Alex swallows Maggie’s voice with her lips and she holds her and she steadies her and she relishes the pulsing of Maggie’s entire body around her fingers.

“So I should tease you all day more often,” Maggie breathes when she finally comes back down, when Alex is kissing her wrists, her fingers, her knuckles, her palms.

“I’d say so, yeah.”
Alex doesn’t get it, at first.

The way Maggie tightens her jaw and bristles and comments about running buddies and super skirts and hasn’t anyone let Supergirl know how much property damage she causes on her rescue missions?

She doesn’t get it, because Maggie isn’t one of those people who hates aliens on principle. The opposite, in fact.

It’s Winn who breaks it to her.

“All. Alex. She’s jealous.”

“Of what?” she splutters, nearly choking on her beer.

“Well I would be, too, you know, if my girlfriend was all over Supergirl the way you’re all over Kara and I didn’t know you were sisters.”

Alex pffts and Alex shakes her head and then Alex’s eyes fly wide. “Oh my god, she’s jealous.”

And she is.

Because yes, she and Alex have a shorthand, but Supergirl knew her first and – she hates admitting it – the damn superhero knows her better.

And suddenly it makes sense – yes, the bristling and the side comments and the smarms – but also the way Maggie will hold her closer, fuck her harder, kiss her deeper, pour more of her soul into her, on the nights that punctuate the days they’ve jointly worked with the pretty blonde who touches Alex and makes Alex laugh and looks at her with those blue eyes that Maggie is convinced must be more beautiful to Alex than her brown ones.

Alex can’t tell her – not yet, not without the okay from Kara – but she starts holding her hand more. Around Supergirl. Starts calling her babe more. Around Supergirl. Starts kissing her. Around Supergirl.

Which drives J’onn absolutely up a wall, because so often, whenever the two of them are around Supergirl, they’re around J’onn, too.

“Just tell her already,” he implores one night. “If I have to see my daughter…being romantic with her girlfriend in the field one more time I might just surrender my position.”
Kara overhears and Kara laughs and Kara tells Maggie and Maggie’s eyes fly wide and everything makes sense and she doesn’t stop kissing Alex until J’onn clears his throat for the thirteenth time and they’re both weak in the knees and breathless and so, so securely each other’s.
Maggie’s heart slammed hard in her chest and her palms were sweaty and the inside of her cheek was nearly raw from how much she’d been biting it all morning.

She’d slipped out of her childhood bedroom early – even earlier than Alex would wake for her morning run – kissing Alex on the temple lightly, in awe that Alex was here, in Blue Springs, sharing her childhood bed, that somehow her parents were okay with it, that somehow Alex was being taken in by the family in the same way they’d taken to her sister’s boyfriend.

But she was nervous, now, because today? Today, she was taking Alex somewhere she’d never taken anyone. Ever.

And she wasn’t sure Alex Danvers was the type to want a flowery field and a picnic lunch as a date, and she was terrified.

But when Alex padded into the kitchen a couple hours later, her shirt soaked in sweat, mud from her run streaking the backs of her calves, her smile when she saw Maggie packing a picnic basket with all her favorites – Maggie’s Kara Danvers approved eggplant parm sandwiches, that potato salad that always made Alex groan, handfuls of oranges, boxes of bright strawberries, and bottles of beer – her smile made Maggie’s heart leap and her smile made Maggie’s fear melt.

“We picnicking today then, babe?” she asked, slipping her arms around Maggie from behind and kissing the back of her neck, not bothering to care about how sweaty she was: Maggie never cared about that. Maggie liked it.

“Thought I’d show you some place I used to go as a kid a lot, when I needed to uh… get away,” Maggie tried to say casually, but Alex caught the heavy meaning in her voice and Alex pulled her closer and Maggie swooned and Alex grinned and Alex reluctantly left to shower and Alex couldn’t stop smiling while she watched Maggie drive them in her old pickup through fields and dirt roads, one hand on the wheel and one hand on Alex’s thigh.

Alex gasped when she saw where they were going, just as the sun rose over the horizon: an entire field, a hill really, painted with purple bellflowers and brilliant bluebells, spotted with patches of yellow, of green, of white.

“Maggie,” she whispered, and Maggie swallowed hard as she slipped out of the driver’s seat, crossing around the truck to open the door for Alex, to extend a hand to help her down.

To help her off with her shoes, to grab the overloaded picnic basket and blanket she’d loaded into the back of her truck.
She laid her down and she fed her strawberries and she made her laugh and she watched her laugh and she took her picture and she showed her how to string the older flowers together into a crown, into a halo, into something to mark Alex as the angel that she saw whenever she looked at her, whenever she leaned across the blanket to kiss her perfect lips, her nose, her bare shoulder, the back of her neck.

“It’s beautiful,” Alex whispered as she roused herself from a long nap in Maggie’s arms, and when Maggie watched the sun, now setting, reflecting in Alex’s eyes, highlighting the flowers still wreathing her hair, Maggie had to agree.

“Yeah, it is,” she breathed, her eyes forgetting the sky and looking only at the only sight that mattered.
He looks over his shoulder every two or three seconds and he jumps when he hears someone – anyone – that could possibly maybe be Alex walk into the room.

Because she scares the shit out of him, but dammit he loves her, so this Maggie person needs to get clearance from him. Even if he has to risk Alex finding out about his little background checking.

Kara catches him first and scolds him before looking over her own shoulder and pointing to the bottom of Maggie’s very confidential police record. “Check that file there, Winn.”

They both jump a mile high when J’onn clears his throat behind them. His arms are folded across his chest and Winn starts to splutter out an explanation for the use of DEO time and tech for an utter violation of Alex’s privacy – or, more to the point, Maggie’s privacy – but J’onn just shifts his eyes around to make sure Alex is nowhere in sight, leans in, and mutters “Check her blood type and medical history, too.”

In the end, it isn’t Alex who discovers the three of them. It’s Maggie, and she has Winn up against a wall as quickly as Alex did. J’onn backs up and Kara bites her lip and Alex walks into the room with an open jaw and wide eyes.

“Worst thing I found was that your parents had you in ballet, Maggie, and come on, that’s just precious –”

“Do you have any idea how invasive that is, Schott, how much of my life at home depended on keeping my private life mine because if the wrong people found out who I was I’d get beaten, I’d get the girls I dated hurt?”

Winn splutters and Winn flinches and Winn apologizes and Winn tries to point out that J’onn and Supergirl helped him and Maggie growls that she’ll deal with them later and Maggie suddenly lets him go.

“You have good friends, babe,” she says casually, turning to Alex with a cockeyed grin. “I like em.
Glad you have people looking out for you. You deserve that.”

She leans up on her tip toes and kisses Alex lightly, and Winn splutters behind him.

“Sorry Winn, scaring you there was just too good an opportunity to pass up.”

J’onn laughs and Maggie arches an eyebrow at him. “You looked a little scared yourself there, Mr. Director Sir, I wouldn’t laugh too hard.”

Alex snorts and Kara giggles and Winn doubles over and Maggie smirks and J’onn grumbles.

“They’re multiplying,” he mutters as he walks away, shaking his head. But his step is lighter, and he can’t hide his smile, because thank god: Alex has met her match.

Chapter Summary

final one: remember when max tried to feed alex and she hated it? well, she loves when maggie does it tho OMG she doesnt even realize it! maggie does it all the time, with any food she is always "alex, here" and alex turns around, mouth open already, and one day maggie is whipping up alex's mouth after giving her some ice cream ("alex, here. this is so good!!) and alex remembers how she NEVER did that, thats the kind of intimacy she hated, maggie is always on her personal space and she LOVES IT

Alex is used to being around people who love food.

Mostly Kara.

And now, Maggie.

But Maggie’s love of food is different than Kara’s, because Kara will threaten Alex will heat vision to get herself the last potsticker.

But Maggie? Maggie is a food sharer.

Every time something passes her lips that makes her eyes roll back, that makes her chew slowly, that makes her moan in a way that makes Alex jealous of her fork, she wants to share the sensation with Alex.

And she does.

“Alex, here,” she’ll say, her hand hovering under the spoon, under the fork, under her sauce-drenched finger, as she feeds Alex across the table, over the chair, across the negligible distance between their bodies, whether they’re in a five-star restaurant or the bar or Alex’s kitchen, which Maggie commandeers nightly.

And Alex always turns, Alex always leans in, Alex always opens her mouth and Alex always smiles and Alex never thinks anything of it, because it is Maggie and it is happiness and it is perfect.

One night, a bit of Maggie’s homemade strawberry ice cream drips down her chin because – “Alex, here, this is so good!” – she’d wanted the ice cream and Maggie’s lips, so now they’re laughing and Maggie is wiping her chin and they’re looking into each other’s eyes and Alex just realizes.

Realizes that she has never done this before. That she has never wanted to do this before. Because this intimacy, this constant invasion of her personal space that is Maggie Sawyer?

A few months ago, it would have been foreign and it would have been unwelcome and it would have been out of the realm of possibility.

And now? Now it was every day, and now it was melting in her mouth as her heart melted along with her body, and now she knows there is no better way to experience food. To experience intimacy. To experience love.
Chapter 39

Chapter Summary

anonymous asked:

Hey, Do you have any fanfiction of Maggie jealous in the alien bar with her pinning/kissing Alex at the pool table?

I DO NOW ;)

“Hey, check out your sister, Kara!” Winn says, and Maggie’s stomach sinks.

Since she told Alex that they couldn’t be together; since Alex insisted they weren’t friends, that she didn’t think Maggie wanted her (the ludicrous thought pained Maggie beyond belief); since Maggie had pleaded for two minutes of her time and they’d met for pool the next night, they’d been… fine. They’d been good. They’d been close, they’d been caring, they’d been affectionate and they’d been happy.

But only as friends.

And it was destroying Maggie from the inside out.

Especially now, especially as Kara turned, as James turned, as Maggie – not wanting to, but having to – turned in the direction Winn had indicated, to find the sight of Alex, shooting pool with a gorgeous brunette who was giving her bedroom eyes; the sight of Alex, laughing effortlessly at the gorgeous brunette’s jokes, which Maggie immediately decided must be distinctly unfunny; the sight of Alex, bending said gorgeous brunette over the pool table to show her the proper way to position the cue.

It’s not even that Alex is clearly flirting with this woman – and doing a damn good job – that drives Maggie out of her mind. It’s not even that Alex is pressing her body flush against the woman’s backside that drives Maggie most out of her seat. No.

What makes Maggie stand, what makes Maggie gulp, what makes Maggie stride purposefully over to the pool table as Winn, James, and Kara fall silent and hit at each other’s shoulders as they watch, is Alex’s eyes.

Because as she bends another woman over a pool table, much closer than she needed to be to show her how to properly shoot pool, Alex’s eyes seek and find Maggie’s. Alex’s eyes lock into Maggie’s from all the way across the bar, and Alex’s eyes hold them, even as she positions this other woman’s fingers, even as this other woman leans her ass back into Alex’s body.

Alex’s eyes are on Maggie’s, and they hold a challenge, they hold a see what you’re missing, and Maggie can’t accept that.

“You seemed perfectly content to let me keep holding the cue the wrong way, Danvers; this girl must have a game even worse than mine if you need to show her what to do.”
The woman scoffs and the woman turns to Alex to defend her, but Maggie’s hand is on Alex’s wrist and she’s spun Alex around, away from this other woman, this irrelevant woman, because she should have done this long, long ago, friendship be damned, caution be damned, past heartbreak be damned.

She has Alex pinned against the pool table before Alex can formulate a response, before Alex can process what’s happening.

Alex’s breath hitches and Alex gulps and Alex is completely unconscious of the scandalized, offended scoff of the woman whose name she suddenly can’t remember, because Maggie Sawyer’s body is flush against hers, her hands pinning her back against the pool table on either side of her hips, and Maggie’s breath is in her ear and her voice is low and her voice is dripping with hurt and with jealousy and with raw, raw want.

“I never said I didn’t want you, Danvers. So, you wanna spend the rest of the night with a pale imitation of what you really want? Or you wanna spend it with me?”

Alex has no witty response and Alex has no cool retort.

“You… you want me?” she rasps, and her eyes dart to Maggie’s lips.

“I do,” Maggie whispers, and she’s kissing her, and the world is spinning, and their friends are whooping and that woman is storming away and M’gann is raising her glass toward the pool table in an it’s about damn time gesture and Maggie’s tongue is in her mouth and Alex is melting and Maggie’s arms are the only things keeping her on the ground and that is okay because Maggie Sawyer is kissing her and god she should have made her jealous earlier because this? This is bliss.
transypansy asked:

I'm not sure how angsty this is but I have a bit of a headcannon that Maggie puts off having sex with Alex for the first time because she doesn't want to disappoint her, like she wants it to be good and she knows Alex will probably put a lot of stock in it. Maggie worries about her not liking it or something. Idk, I just have a headcannon that she keeps pushing Alex away a little bit and Alex worries that she doesn't want her.

Also, re last prompt or a different one: Maggie stopping them when they get close to having sex to be respectful or because she’s worried and finally Alex basically blurting out “I want to have sex…with you.“

She’s desperate for Alex Danvers.

Cold shower, hours slamming the heavy bag, sprint drills until she nearly vomits desperate for Alex Danvers.

But she stops them whenever Alex gets too handsy, whenever the sounds Alex makes, the feel of her skin, her lips, the thrumming of her pulse, threatens to drown Maggie, threaten to shred every ounce of control she has.

Because it’s too soon, because Alex deserves slow and Alex deserves time and Alex deserves the best and Alex deserves… perfection.

And Maggie is terrified of not being able to give it to her.

So she’s taking a lot of cold showers that don’t work and her hands are sore and she nearly passes out on the track.

Until they’re making out and Alex’s hands are slipping up her shirt and Maggie is moaning and Maggie is writhing and Alex is shifting on top of her and Alex’s tongue is on her neck and her eyes are looking up to ask if her hands can slip under her bra and Maggie is breathless and Maggie is torn and Maggie is scared and Alex sees and Alex takes her hands away and braces them on either side of Maggie’s body and she blurts, with no preamble and with no lack of earnesty, “I want to have sex, Maggie. With you.”

Alex’s lips are swollen and her hair is tousled and her eyes are full of lust and confusion and Maggie doesn’t remember what air is.

“Alex,” she manages to choke.

“Do you not… do you not want… to have sex with me?”

Maggie almost sits bolt upright, and Alex leans back, instinctively wrapping her arms around Maggie’s back to help her stay up.

“Alex, of course I want you, of course I want to have sex with you.” Maggie laughs, and Maggie shakes her head, and Maggie fights back tears. “You just deserve… you deserve everything to be perfect, and I – “

“No. Nope. No.” Alex cuts her off and Alex cups her face in her hands and Alex gently makes Maggie meet her eyes.

“Maggie, you are perfect. Every single time you touch me… hell, Maggie, every time you look at me, it’s… it’s perfect. I want… I want everything with you. Please? Can we? If you want?”

“Oh, Alex Danvers. I do want. I will always want.”

Chapter Summary

After being together but haven’t really made it official until ….. “Will you be my girlfriend?”

^^ prompt from @lesbian-loveology

They hold hands and they kiss and they pass out with their limbs entangled on Kara’s couch during movie night and they have heated make out sessions that make Alex whine and that make Maggie tremble and leave them both breathless.

They go to dinner and they go to the movies and they wear each other’s sweatshirts sitting up on rooftops watching the stars with steaming mugs of hot cocoa.

But they haven’t made anything official.

Maggie hasn’t asked because yes, we should kiss the girls we wanna kiss, but what if Alex discovers she wants to kiss other girls, too, and wouldn’t it all just be easier if they don’t put a label on this thing then?

Alex hasn’t asked because yes, Maggie just wanted to kiss her and yes, Maggie likes her but what if she stops because what if Alex is too inexperienced and what if she’s boring and what if she’s just not good enough at this and wouldn’t it all just be easier if they don’t put a label on this thing then?

It’s James that breaks it to Maggie. “Hey, your girlfriend coming to the bar tonight?” he wants to know, and Maggie freezes and James knows and James touches her arm and James says, “She really likes you, Maggie. Hell, I think she probably even loves you. I’ve never seen her like this, I… don’t let fear stop you two from being everything you can be together, okay?”

Maggie gulps and Maggie nods and Maggie bites her lip and Maggie’s grateful that she suddenly, somehow, has friends.

It’s Winn that breaks it to Alex. “Yo Danvers, your girlfriend’s on TV again, check it!” His smile fades when he sees Alex’s wide eyes, when he sees her pale face, when he sees her suddenly wringing hands. He touches her waist and he makes her look him in the eyes and he says, “Alex, have you not seen the way she looks at you? The way she treats you? You’re all she wants, Alex: you, just being you. You’re perfect to her, for her. Okay?”

Alex gulps and Alex nods and Alex fights back the tears in her eyes and Alex swallows the desire to thwack him in the back of the head just because.

They’re at Alex’s late that night and they’re watching TV and they both keep starting to say something, look at the other, and retreat.

Neither are accustomed to retreating.
One more deep breath. One more moment of terror. And then –

“Alex, I want to be your girlfriend – “

“Maggie, do you want to be my girlfriend?”

They freeze and they stare and they stop breathing and they laugh. And then they kiss and they laugh and they kiss and they laugh some more.

“Good,” Alex finally breathes in response to Maggie’s statement.

“Yes,” Maggie finally sighs in response to Alex’s question.

And James and Winn forever claim credit for their girls making it official.

If you could write domestic sanvers at game night being really cute and all the superfriends being such fangirls over them and then Alex taking a beer out of Maggie's hands saying you can't you're pregnant and that's how everyone finds out

SO A NOTE: I don’t usually do/like pregnancy prompts, especially with this couple (just my own headcanons), but this is super cute so whatever I’m on it.

Winn pretends to vomit and James shoves him in the shoulder and Kara just laughs, because Alex won’t stop kissing Maggie’s temple, her nose. Jumping up whenever Maggie even looks like she might possibly want more pizza, more water, more pillows, more anything.

“God, Danvers, Sawyer made you into such a softie – this mean you’re gonna finally let me win something?”

Maggie looks proud of herself and Alex looks horrified. “Let you win something? Yeah, okay, Schott. You couldn’t win even if I tried letting you.”

“Ooooooooh.”

“No, but for real, Maggie,” James says as he deals out the next round of cards, “You didn’t know Alex before… well, before you knew her.”

“Great logic there Olsen.”

“Let the man speak!”

“I’ve certainly never seen her like this. Kara, have you?”

“Nope. And I have to say, it’s nice to see my sister not constantly wavering between homicidal and mass murder…cidal. Ow!”

Kara laughs as a pillow flies in her face, and Alex doesn’t see Maggie grab the bottle of beer on the table to prevent it from getting knocked over. She only sees Maggie. With a bottle of beer in her hands.

“Babe,” she snatches it from her with an affectionately chiding kiss, “you can’t drink that, not with the baby.”

Kara shrieks and Winn launches at Alex to pull her into an enormous bear hug and Maggie covers her smiling face with her hands and James pulls out his phone to take photos and god, he’s never seen Alex smile quite like this.

anonymous asked:

can u imagine lucy helping alex buy some lingerie? and lucy being like "ok agent danvers, what do your lady like? for what ive heard maggie can be a little freak... while laughing and alex blushes- u do have some great ass so lets focus on that" and when maggie sees it she loses it, they dont even make it to the bed lol

Alex is flustered when the woman working at the store asks her what she thinks her boyfriend would like.

And this is precisely why she brought Lucy Lane with her.

“Boyfriend? Please, no man would ever be good enough to deserve this, have you seen my friend? Her lady is a cop, so I mean come on, we can guess some of her kinks from there, am I right?”

Alex furrows her brow, with the objection “Lucy, you’re a soldier,” on the tip of her tongue, but she shakes her head with closed eyes and decides she doesn’t want to hear Lucy’s retort to that.

And neither does the shop attendant, apparently, because she’s by now made a graceful exit to let Lucy help Alex find the perfect lingerie to wear for Maggie.

“Okay Agent Danvers, now seriously: what do you think Sawyer would want to fuck you in?”

Alex splutters and Alex blushes and Lucy isn’t deterred, squinting at the displays and running her hands over some of the racier options with a careful eye.

“I mean, you always have had a great ass, so let’s focus on that maybe, yeah?”

And Alex splutters harder and Alex blushes harder and she is wordless as Lucy piles options into her arms and shoves her into the fitting room and waits outside with a shit-eating grin on her face, because god has it been too long since she’s had a woman friend who didn’t wear a red cape in her off hours.

Which is unfortunate for women everywhere, because it turns out that Lucy has an excellent eye; when Alex slips out of the bedroom wearing nothing but the pushup bra and lace garter belt that Lucy had settled on – and her glasses (Lucy had been very insistent that Alex wear those damn glasses) – Maggie’s eye go wide and Maggie’s brain loses the ability to process thought and Maggie’s hands push Alex against the wall so fast that Alex loses all hope of getting back to the bedroom.

Which, with the way Maggie is kissing her, holding her, touching her, fucking her, she is absolutely fine with.
anonymous asked:

Omg, lucy would be the BEST of the best friends for alex! And when alex gets shy she would be like "Alex, please. I'm single, I'm living through your sex life. So yes, I won't mind hearing about how maggie made you see stars last night"

“Okay I’m shutting up now, you don’t wanna hear about – “

“Danvers. You’re not used to having girlfriends, are you?”

“I… I’m just coming out, Lucy, of course I’m not – “

“Nope, no, I mean, friends who are girls. Aside from Kara.”

blank stare

“Okay so I’m gonna lay it out for you, Alex. We’re friends, you and me. And as your friend – as your single friend, who is currently living through your sex life – I want to hear about how Maggie-oh-my-god-she-is-perfect-and-have-I-mentioned-how-flawless-she-is-Sawyer made you see stars last night.”

“… Really?”

“Really. So spill. Spare me no detail.”

Sanvers smut: It's raining, Alex doesn't like it/is scared of storms, Maggie distracts her (wink wonk)

Alex doesn’t say anything, but she doesn’t have to.

Maggie sees it in the way she huddles deeper into their blanket, feels it in the way she flinches ever so slightly at every clap of thunder.

Badass DEO Agent Alex Danvers is afraid of storms.

And Maggie has never found anything so adorable.

And she is fully prepared to hold her on the couch and to coddle her and to sing to her and to kiss her forehead gently until the storm passes.

Until Alex shifts in Maggie’s arms and backs her ass up into her body, and Maggie hisses and Alex turns her head and lowers her eyes over her shoulder and Maggie gulps and Alex smirks.

“So something wrong, Sawyer?”

“You seem to dislike this storm, Danvers.” Alex stiffens and Maggie kisses the nape of her neck reassuringly. “I could… distract you. If you wanted.”

Alex relaxes and Alex whines and Alex lets her head drop back onto Maggie’s shoulder.

“Could you now?” she keens, and Maggie pulls her sideways so she can flip positions, so she can straddle her, making quick work of their blanket and of Alex’s sweater.

“Mmhmm,” Maggie hums as Alex gasps, because Maggie is climbing off her, now, pausing with her fingers hooked into Alex’s sweatpants, waiting for her permission to slide them off.

Alex grants it, breathless, and the next time she shudders, the next time she gasps, it’s not because of the thunder or the lightening or the wind.

It’s because of the way Maggie’s tongue feels on her clit; it’s because of the way Maggie’s fingers stretch her out when they slip inside her; it’s because of the way Maggie looks on her knees for her and it’s because of the way Maggie stares up at her and winks as she sucks and licks and moans.

It’s because of the way Maggie fucks her and the way Maggie holds her and the way Maggie loves her, and god, a storm has never felt so incredible.
Chapter 46

Chapter Summary

Maggie returns the favour, buying/wearing lingerie for Alex who then internally combusts

(love your fics btw :) )

^^ prompt from @sawyerdanver

She’s always been a lace girl under her layers of protective leather.

And Alex Danvers? Alex Danvers can lift her up with one arm – and she has – and fuck her senseless on her lab bench, on her kitchen counter, against Kara’s bathroom door – and she has.

So when James slips her a gift card to that new boutique lingerie shop that just opened up and gives her a wink, she goes the first chance she gets.

She bites her lip as she stares at her choices, and she squints and she takes the shop owner’s breath away with the intensity of her stare, the solidness of her stance.

“She’s a doctor, sort of, and a soldier, sort of, and she’s gorgeous and I have no earthly idea why she’s with me, but I just want to look special for her tonight, you know?”

The woman does know, though she can’t imagine why Maggie doesn’t understand what her girlfriend sees in her – she wonders vaguely if she should direct her straight to a mirror – and she smiles and she asks Maggie gentle questions and Maggie answers them and in the end they settle on a black bustier that pushes up her breasts and hugs her hips and shows just enough but not enough at all of the matching thong she buys.

She trembles a bit when she tugs on one of Alex’s flannels over the ensemble at home, but thankfully her voice doesn’t shake when she calls across the apartment.

“Hey Danvers, wanna come here a sec?”

“Yeah babe?” Alex starts into the bedroom. And promptly trips over herself.

Maggie catches her and Alex gapes and Alex pushes her own flannel off Maggie’s shoulders until it’s pooled around her bent elbows and Alex steps back and Maggie’s arms fall and so does the flannel and Alex gulps and Maggie inhales slowly and Alex pounces and the next morning Maggie doesn’t know whether to thank James or apologize to him because he has to see all the marks Alex left on her neck, the way Maggie limps slightly, the way Kara is horrified and ready to beat up the jerk that hurt her and James has to stammer his way through reassuring Kara that he’s sure Maggie is just fine, the way Kara stammers until she realizes with a big “oh my god, Alex!” and Alex bounces into the room on a complete high and can’t quite figure out why everyone is staring at her with such red faces and goofy grins and big eyes and god does she love Maggie in lingerie.

anonymous asked:

2- alex is always on the station so they need her to sign some paper to get her some special badge, the desk girl says 'detective sawyer already filled your information, you just need to sign it, maggie completed all these personal info perfectly without asking anything and just when alex couldnt be more happy, she notices that maggie checked the 'married' box (to be fair it was either that or single, and alex is not single) (i gained 100 years in my life when i imagined that)

J’onn waves off the armed guards escorting Maggie to and from the DEO’s control room after she saves Alex’s life – and the lives of four other agents – in the field. Her ability to come and go as she pleases in his James Bond super spy lab is secured just by his dismissive nod, by his small grin, by his hand on her shoulder, and the words, “The DEO is in your debt, Detective Sawyer. And so am I.”

The process is more formal for Alex coming and going in the NCPD precinct.

She needs to fill out paperwork to get herself a special badge and she rolls her eyes at first because what, my FBI ID isn’t enough for you local cops, and don’t you know I’m in a rush to bring my girlfriend lunch and an update on the case? but then the officer at the desk leans over with a small, private smile, and she hands Alex the paperwork, already filled out.

Alex blinks as she recognizes Maggie’s tight scrawl, blinks as the desk officer tells her “Detective Sawyer already filled out your information, we just need your signature on pages three, and four, and five where I’ve marked the lines.”

Blinks because Maggie had remembered her stories about her aunt’s breast cancer in her medical history, remembered the surgery Alex had told her about having from a surfing injury when she was in high school, remembered her birthday, her address, her mother’s phone number and address in Midvale in case of emergency.

Blinks because Maggie hadn’t asked her anything; Maggie had simply… remembered. Maggie had listened. Maggie had cared.

Blinks and almost chokes when she does a double take at the first page; a double take because Maggie had checked the “married” box when the form asked whether Alex’s relationship status was “single”, “married”, or “divorced.”

Stupid choices, she could just hear Maggie muttering, and she could just see her smirking, her eyes lighting up with a question, her eyes lighting up with hope, when she checked the married box.

Alex blinks down tears and Alex smiles and Alex signs everywhere the desk officer tells her to.

She floats through the halls and slips next to Maggie’s desk, slapping the paperwork that she’d asked the desk officer to photocopy down in front of her without preamble, finger marking the “relationship status” question.

Maggie looks up at Alex’s face and Maggie looks down at Alex’s finger.

“Well, you’re not single, Danvers,” she tells her, pushing back from her desk and standing, putting her hands on Alex’s waist.

“But I’m not married, either,” Alex protests, her fingers reaching up to run through Maggie’s hair.

Maggie glances down at the papers. “You signed them anyway,” she observes, and she gulps.

“I did.”

“Do you wanna be married, Danvers?”

“I do.”

one day maggie's partner will casually say: "it happened right when you and sawyer started dating... back in July" "we started dating in September actually" "really??? She started talking about you in July tho... and never stopped, to be honest."

“Hey,” Alex is saying, hitting Maggie’s cop partner on the shoulder lightly, “I didn’t know you applied to train at Quantico, Maggie didn’t tell me. Congratulations!”

He grins, hands deep in his pockets, and nods. “Yeah, I applied around the time you and Sawyer started dating, back in July.”

Alex stops walking and squints. “But we didn’t start dating until September.”

Maggie’s partner grins and arches an eyebrow. “Really? But she started talking about you in July –” He throws his voice slightly in a hilarious imitation of Maggie. “Danvers this, Danvers that, and god Alex is so gorgeous and she thinks I don’t want her but anyone with eyes would want her, I mean don’t you want her, I mean no, you can’t want her, she’s gay and I want her and you can’t have her, but Alex Alex Alex and by the way did you know she can walk on water?”

Alex cuffs him in the shoulder again, harder this time, and he laughs, and switches back to his regular, deep voice.

“No but seriously. It was July when she started talking about you. And she never stopped, to be honest.”

Alex doesn’t explain why she kisses Maggie so fervently that night, and Maggie doesn’t need an explanation: she just needs Alex, Alex, Alex.
Kara narrows her eyes and Kara slows her approach.

“Maggie… what is that?”

Maggie looks up with wide eyes, with oh shit she caught me eyes, and cradles the ball of blueish fluff in her hands closer to her chest.

“What’s what, Little Danvers?”

“That… that. In your hands?”

Maggie looks down like she’s noticing the fluff ball for the first time. “Oh, this. This little critter. Um… a guinea pig… I think?”

Kara walks closer to Maggie slowly, cautiously. “You think.”

Maggie shrugs and opens her hands a little to give Kara a better glimpse of the creature, all wide eyes and twitching nose and translucent whiskers and soft, soft fur.

“I found him in a cage in one of the Cadmus labs we broke into and I couldn’t just leave him there and I just thought – “

“You want to adopt him, don’t you.”

“His name is Fred.”

“Fred.”

“Fred. And um… do you think Alex will say yes?” Maggie’s eyes are wide and her hands are gentle and her voice is soft and Fred is cooing, now, a low trilling that makes Kara reach out a finger and stroke his little head.

“If you look at her like that, I think Alex will say yes to anything.”

Imagine Maggie Sawyer + boxers + oversized police jacket and thirsty Alex

Alex gets there early.

Of course she’s early.

Maggie’s hair is still wet and she’s only just put her boxers on but Alex is knocking and Alex will panic if she doesn’t answer right away because Alex is protective like that and Maggie really doesn’t want to have to reset the door frame like she did last week after Alex kicked it in last week because Maggie wasn’t picking up her phone.

So she calls out that she’s coming and she half jogs across her apartment, grabbing her oversized NCPD windbreaker and tossing it over her shoulders just before she opens the door.

“Hey b – oh. Oh. Is that all you’re wearing?”

Maggie shrinks just a little. “Oh, no, sorry, I... you’re a little early, I’m sorry, I should have – “

She stills at Alex’s hands on her waist, at Alex’s suddenly heady gaze, at Alex’s cockeyed grin. “No, no, don’t apologize, it’s uh…” Her eyes rake down Maggie’s body, lingering on her bare legs, on the opening of the windbreaker over the center of her chest, her abs. “It’s fine.” She bites her lip. “Completely…” She lifts her up suddenly so Maggie’s legs are wrapped around her hips. “Completely fine.”

She checks in with her eyes before carrying her to the couch, before kissing her, before ripping the jacket down off her shoulders and fucking her senseless. Maggie gasps and Maggie nods and Maggie tosses her arms around Alex’s neck, and it’s all the permission Alex needs.

I just read ur fic about the bit kink and I'm SURE alex is the bitter lol maggie so small and cute she just wants to eat her up (dangerous choice of words I know lol), she's one of those "hard" lovers but still a softie, she doesn't hurt maggie

She won’t – at first – bite the insides of Maggie’s thighs, because they’re too soft and they’re too sensitive and it’s too vulnerable and she’s terrified of hurting her and god does Maggie sound incredible when she whines like that, when she begs like that, and fuck does it feel amazing when she runs her fingers through Alex’s hair and brings her face closer into her, and hot damn if the woman is writhing like that, whining like that, grabbing like that, begging like that, for her to bite down, who is she to say no, really?

So she does, and it’s soft at first, it’s tentative, but Maggie hisses and Maggie screams and Alex swears she will never know anything but bliss again if she can always hear her name sound like that off this woman’s lips.

So she bites harder, next time, and harder, because Maggie’s hips thrust up and Maggie’s hands tug at her hair and Maggie’s throat gets raw from screaming her name, from cursing, from begging.

And in the morning she takes her time; in the morning she kisses each hickey she left on the inside of Maggie’s thighs, and Maggie sighs, and Maggie smiles, because god damn has she never felt this fucking loved.

misguidedghost800 asked:

Much to Alex's dismay, Kara and Maggie team up to tease her about being such an adorable nerd

She’s bio-techno-babbling over a microscope with one a DEO lab tech when she first notices it. Kara and Maggie in the doorway of the lab, whispering to each other, eyes on Alex, and giggling up a storm.

She frowns questioningly in their direction but shakes it off, because she has a bio signature to analyze and if she hears the word “nerd” slipping from their general direction, it’s a compliment, anyway.

She notices it again later, in the field this time, when Alex starts in with Winn over the comm, something about electromagnetic radiation and some other words that Kara doesn’t quite understand.

“What is she even saying?” Alex hears her ask Maggie, and Maggie smirks, happy to translate.

“Basically, she’s using fancy nerd talk to say that they can find the newest Cadmus hideout by tracking the radiation that their weapons give off.”

“And she couldn’t have just… said that?”

Maggie grins and Kara – well, Supergirl – mirrors it.

“Nerd,” they chorus.

The third time Alex notices it, they’re at home and she’s snuck a microbiology textbook onto her lap while they’re watching a rom com she’d objected to from jump.

Kara leans into Maggie and whispers something and Alex may not have super hearing but Kara doesn’t exactly have the whisperiest whisper and she’s sure she hears a hint of “needs a distraction from all that nerd stuff.”

Alex is about to roll her eyes and Alex is about to call them out and Alex is about to threaten to withhold sex from Maggie and tell Eliza on Kara.

But then Maggie is nodding at Kara and she is crawling across the couch to slip into Alex’s lap and she’s nipping at her neck and suddenly Alex doesn’t mind even one little bit that her girlfriend and her little sister keep teasing her senseless.

Chapter Summary

anonymous asked:

Okay so, Alex used to be a Party Girl (tm) right? What if she's one hella sexy dancer and Maggie has no idea until they go dancing somewhere?

Alex doesn’t dance.

Not anymore.

But Maggie talks while they play pool – could be why she always loses – and one night when M’gann throws on some early 2000s pop in the bar, Maggie gets to talking about dancing.

About how she and her best friend in high school – a gay boy, the only other out kid in her school, in her town – used to sneak out in her truck in the middle of the night, drive an hour and a half out of town to the nearest gay bar, and just dance.

Her eyes scream of how she misses it, and Alex distinctly does not miss her dancing days, but dancing with Maggie would be… different. Dancing with Maggie wouldn’t be drunken and desperate to feel something, to feel anything, to feel enough.

Because dancing with Maggie? Would be perfect.

So the next night she doesn’t tell her where she’s taking her. She just tells her to dress hot and she picks her up on her Ducati and she doesn’t stop until she parks in front of a gay club with music pouring out of the doors and thrumming into their veins.

Maggie gasps and Maggie grins and Alex smirks when Maggie’s jaw drops as Alex unzips her riding jacket to reveal the barely-there halter she’s sporting underneath.

She smirks even more when she tugs Maggie onto the dance floor, when she starts to move and Maggie just freezes, because my god, Maggie has been watching women dance since she was too young to know why it felt that good but fuck she’s never seen anyone move quite like this.

Because Alex’s hands are above her head, her fingers are running through her hair and down her neck, her hips are made of the most graceful fluid, and her ass is making every single woman turn and stare and sigh hopelessly when they realize that the entire time, Alex is looking at no one, Alex sees nothing, but Maggie.

And Maggie is looking at no one, seeing no one, but Alex.
They fall asleep just as it starts to rain, and Alex’s arm is draped over Maggie’s bare abs, her head resting on Maggie’s chest.

Maggie is drifting in and out of sleep, relishing the quiet, relishing the feeling of Alex’s breath on her neck, relishing the sound of the rain outside and how warm it is in their bed, under their blankets, with this beautiful woman’s arm strung across her stomach, her leg draped across her thighs.

Alex doesn’t stir when their bedroom door opens, but Maggie stiffens and reaches to the bedside table for her gun, blinking into the darkness until she sees a very drenched, very unhappy Kara Danvers, in full Supergirl gear, looking defeated and looking terrified and looking so, so small.

“I’m so sorry,” she says without preamble, and Maggie drops the gun and sits up as much as far as she can without disturbing Alex, without letting the covers drop far enough to show Kara that she’s not wearing a shirt.

“I had the worst day, and it’s raining and I hate flying in the thunder, have you ever been flying and suddenly the entire sky shakes, I mean it is not pleasant, and I’m sorry because I know you guys are trying to have alone time but I – “

“Just come here already, Little Danvers,” she cuts her off with a soft voice and a small smile. “And bring me my shirt, will you?”

When Alex wakes up hours later, her first thought is to call Kara because dammit it’s raining and she hopes she’s not flying anywhere. Her second thought is confusion as to when Maggie put her shirt back on, and her third thought is pure bliss, is pure I need to marry this woman, because burrowed deep in the covers on Maggie’s other side is her little sister, sleeping soundly through the storm with Maggie’s arm wrapped around her shoulder and a contented smile on her face.
She kept adjusting her glasses and stumbling over her words, and Maggie fought to keep a straight, grave face because the words coming out of Little Danvers’ mouth were so serious, if not loaded with innuendo that she obviously didn’t notice, but her scrunchy face and befuddled body language was just too cute.

“And I like you, Maggie, I do, so far. But if you ever so much as make my sister cry again, I will… I will do things… to you, things that you won’t find pleasant, because Alex is special and she deserves the best and if you can’t be that for her I’ll consider letting you leave quietly right now without doing…. bad things to you.”

Maggie nods and Maggie grimaces. “And if I ever give her anything less than my best, I give you full permission to do…” She almost grins here, because she means it, but the idea of Kara being able to hurt her is just… cute. “All the terrible things to me you can think of. Because if I hurt her, I’d deserve it.” And more, she thinks, but doesn’t add that part out loud.

Kara adjusts her glasses and nods and formally offers Maggie her hand to shake, and it’s not until months later when Supergirl shakes her hand at a formal ceremony celebrating the defeat of Cadmus that Maggie makes the connection.

That the spluttering bad things threats were real, because that handshake is familiar, and damn she’d never intended to hurt Alex anyway but she would never again underestimate a stumbling, awkward threat from glasses-adjusting, hand-wringing Kara Danvers.
Chapter Summary

anonymous asked:

after that oneshot about alex being a good dancer all i can think about is her dancing /for/ maggie, so thanks for that life ruining visual

Maggie closed her jaw before she started drooling – barely – and couldn’t keep her hands off Alex in the club.

There wasn’t a woman in the place that wasn’t jealous, watching the way Alex moved, the way her halter top exposed the muscles rippling in her back when she put her arms up, the way she dipped so low to the ground in those heels, somehow without ever losing balance, without ever losing rhythm, the way her fingers ran through her hair and the back of her own neck, the way her lips glistened, quirked into a perpetually seductive grin, all for the woman whose eyes never left hers.

Alex never lost her rhythm and Alex never was out of step.

But Alex noticed Maggie’s hands, and Alex noticed the look in her eyes. Alex noticed how hard Maggie fucked her when they got home.

So the next night, she lit candles. The next night she dimmed the lights, and the next night she slipped into a little black dress that she’d borrowed from Lucy.

The next night, she pushed a stunned, slack-jawed Maggie down until she was sitting back on the couch. She turned on a Beyoncé track that she’d never really understood until there was Maggie Sawyer, and she danced for her.

She didn’t touch – didn’t let Maggie touch – at first. Because at first, she wanted Maggie just to watch.

To watch as she ran her fingers up and down her own body, letting her hips sway with the music, turning her head to the side so she could half-see Maggie’s wide-eyed expression as she swayed round so Maggie could watch her ass move, could watch how her short dress shifted with her every movement, could watch as Alex put her body on Maggie’s body, backed up into her, grinded down into her, could watch as Maggie groaned and reached up to brace her hands on Alex’s hips, to slip her hands up Alex’s corded thighs, up her dress, around her body to touch her chest.

Alex let herself chuckle softly as Maggie growled into the back of her neck, and the chuckle became a gasp when Maggie bit down. Alex turned and Alex straddled her and Alex didn’t stop dancing for her, moving for her, even when Maggie finally got them to the bed.
Maggie's a lot of Alex's "firsts" but my favourite one is that she's gonna be the "first sex injury" haha a torn wrist or a head bang at the wall

She’d never held anyone’s hand without feeling like she was crawling out of her skin, and she’d never laughed like that with anyone other than Kara. She’d never cum with anyone, and she’d certainly never screamed like that. She’d never held anyone through the night and she’d never stayed for breakfast.

Until, of course, there was Maggie Sawyer.

Maggie’s hand felt perfect in hers, and Maggie made beer come out of her nose from laughing so hard. Maggie made her see stars when she came underneath her, and Maggie made her toss her head back and scream so hard her throat would be sore the next morning from the feeling of riding her. Maggie’s warm, soft body fit perfectly against hers, and damn did she make incredible omelettes.

Maggie Sawyer made Alex understand the phrase “first time for everything.” For the very first time.

And it was all exhilarating. It was all… perfect.

Until Winn’s eyes flew wide and J’onn’s brow furrowed and James grimaced and pretended not to notice that first morning that she limped into the DEO with her first sex injury.

Or… injuries.

Her wrist was wrapped and she was limping gingerly and her eyes were bloodshot from lack of sleep, and her mouth was permanently tilted into a dreamy smile.

“Alex, what happened?” Kara gasped when she flew in, and she didn’t notice Winn shaking his head furiously at her, James clearing his throat and trying desperately to change the subject, and J’onn burying his face in his hands and walking away, muttering to himself.

“Me? Oh, pfft, nothing Kara, everything’s –“

“Alex. What happened?”

“Um… Kara…” Winn cautioned, side-stepping Alex’s wide eyes and swiping hand. “I think Maggie… happened.”

“Maggie hurt –” Kara takes one look at her big sister’s face and her eyes nearly fly out of her head and her fists unclench because she realizes that no, Maggie didn’t hurt Alex. That Maggie did…
quite the opposite… to… with… Alex.

“Oh. Oh. Oh. Alex. Um. I… you know what, Winn, isn’t there a bank robbery somewhere, like, you know, happening right now?”

“Danvers, morning! How’s that wrist? Oh, hey Little Danvers!”

“Maggie, hi.”

“Um, Maggie, this might not be the best time for you to – “

“Oh, hey Little Danvers, how goes it?”

“Oh good god. Supergirl, Agent Danvers, if either of you blush any harder you’ll rupture blood vessels. Can you please take this outside of my control room?”

“Awww, look, Maggie’s blushing now, too! Ow!”

“All of you. Out. Now.”

And J’onn’s children all trooped obediently out of the control room, in varying shades of red, with varying levels of smirks, Alex and Maggie with suspiciously similar limps and ecstatic memories flitting across their faces.

Maggie’s waiting at the DEO when Alex gets back from a sting op in a downtown warehouse.

Waiting and pacing only slightly, because J’onn assures her it’s a routine mission, and that Agent Danvers should be back only slightly late for your date Detective, and where did you plan on taking her tonight and ah, see, there she is now and for a moment, Maggie’s angry because what the hell kind of messed up organization requires near full body armor for a routine everyday op but then her body catches up to her mind because Alex is grinning and Alex is safe and dear sweet lord Alex is in head to toe protective gear and Alex is the absolute hottest thing Maggie has ever seen.

“All according to plan, sir, they’re bringing in the escapee in the second truck. Permission to uh…” She grins, sideways, proud, cocky, as she catches the lust in Maggie’s eyes, the hitch in her breath, the moistening of her lips.

“Yes, yes, of course, Alex, I’ll get the debrief from Sanchez. Go. And pick Detective Sawyer’s jaw up off the floor on your way.”

Okay but Alex in a sports bra and boxers/basketball shorts/sweatpants

She’s run on the beach since she was a teenager.

Then, it was because it was the only way to get away from her mother. Away from Kara. Away from herself. That and surfing.

Now, it’s because it’s the only way to clear her head, to be by herself, to not be responsible for anything but the rhythm of her feet and the rate of her breath. That and sparring at the DEO.

She’s run on the beach since she was a teenager.

Then, it was in shorts and baggy t-shirts.

Now, it’s in nothing but a sports bra and basketball shorts.

Now, her calves are gritty with sand she’s kicked up during her run, and her chest is glistening with a thin layer of salt, a thin layer of sweat.

Now, she pulls out of her run at the sight of a woman.

At the sight of the most beautiful woman she’s ever seen.

With the most beautiful smile she’s ever seen.

“Want me to be in even less clothes, Sawyer?”

“Oh yes.”

“So take me… home.”

“Race you.”

“You’re on.”

I really need a scene of maggie kissing alex's hand and being the soft that she is, "own did you hurt your hand when u were beating down that guy? Come here, I will kiss it better :)") maggie will literally say this everytime alex gets hurt

Alex stopped noticing years ago when her knuckles were sore, when her knuckles were bruised, when her knuckles had broken skin and tender bones from their impact on someone else’s jaw.

Alex stopped noticing because she had to, because if she noticed, she wouldn’t quite be made of the iron that she was.

But Maggie? Maggie noticed.

Even – maybe especially – on the nights when Alex would come home, grab a beer, and just sit, just flick on the television and toss a blanket over her and Maggie and just be, Maggie would glance sideways at her hands, at her jaw, watch her carefully when she took off her shirt.

Monitoring for fresh bruises, fresh scrapes, fresh pains that Alex wouldn’t talk about, that Alex wouldn’t acknowledge.

But Maggie? Maggie would.

“Oh babe, you hurt your hand beating down that Cadmus agent, didn’t you?”

“What? No, it’s fine, just a little swollen I guess – “

“Come here, let me kiss it better.”

“You don’t have t – oh. Oh. Okay.”

Every knuckle. Every scrape. Every fingertip and every bruise, Maggie would press her lips to, gently, tenderly, carefully.

Every knuckle, every scrape, every fingertip and every bruise, Alex would inhale slowly, exhale slowly, eyes not leaving Maggie’s face, as tension that she didn’t even know she was keeping in her body would leave her like a cloud of dissipating fog.

“That feel better, babygirl?” Maggie would ask, every time, and every time Alex would melt. Every time, Alex’s eyes would sting. Every time, Alex would shift, would come closer, would offer more of her body to Maggie’s attentive eyes, gentle hands, soft lips.

Every time, Alex would heal.
Maggie rambles while she’s sleepy. She rambles and she has no idea that she’s doing it.

And Alex absolutely loves it.

“You know what I could never figure out babe? What paramecia think about. Like, do they know they’re furry? Do they like it? Do they ever identify as furry?”

“I’ve never seen anyone as beautiful as you. Like, ever. And let me tell you, I’ve seen my share of beautiful women. But damn, Danvers, you – haha, damn Danvers. Damnvers. Hehe, you get it?”

“Know the only thing you’re not good at, Ally, know what it is? Taking a compliment. A compliment. Like, one day I wanna compliment you and for you to just be like that’s right. You did when I told you you cleaned up nice. That was hot. You being confident and stuff. Like in your DEO gear. God.”

“I wanna kiss you, Alex. I always wanna kiss you. Can I kiss you? Now? Kiss… you…”

Alex laughs softly and Alex strokes Maggie’s hair and Alex leans in slightly as Maggie tries to find Alex’s face with groggy hands and closed eyes.

But Maggie’s lips aren’t coordinated enough, Maggie isn’t awake enough, to kiss her on the mouth.

Maggie settles for bringing their noses together, to shaking her head back and forth, to kissing Alex’s nose with her own.

She chuckles to herself in her sleepiness, and she mutters something about noses making out with each other, and she shifts closer into Alex’s chest and falls fast asleep.

And Alex has never felt more peaceful, more in love.

BFF Lucy Lane insisting on and finally meeting Maggie. "So you're the woman who's turned my top agent into a doe-eyed Bambi" "luCY PLS"

“Lucy, be nice.”

“Of course I’ll be nice, Agent Danvers, when have you known me to not be nice?”

“Um, when you almost sent J’onn and me to Cadmus as prisoners?”

“I rescued you.”

“Lucy. Nice.”

“Relax, Alex, I – “

“Oh, here she comes.”

“Alex, hey!”

“Hey babe. This is Lucy Lane, an old friend from the DEO.”

“Hey, I’m Maggie. Good to meet you, I’ve heard a lot of great things about you from Alex.”

“And I you. So you’re the woman who turned my top agent into a doe-eyed Bambi.”

“Lucy, god, please.”

“That’s what the ladies tell me in bed, mmmmm.”

“Lucy.”

“Don’t worry Lucy, Alex still tops every once in a while.”

“Maggie! Jesus Christ I never should have introduced you two.”

“Oh no, Agent Danvers, I think I’m going to enjoy this friendship.”

“I’m not, don’t I count?”

“No.”

“Nope.”

“Great.”
“It is, isn’t it?”

“… yeah. Yeah, it is.”
anonymous asked:

sanvers friends with benefits? (don't need a whole fic lmao, just a glimpse into their life would b okay)

They don’t hold hands – except when their fingers intertwine on top of the sheets – and they don’t say the words that they both always swallow back just in the nick of time.

Because what they have is good. What they have is fun. What they have is safe.

What they have is late nights at the bar and a lot of laughter. They have early leads on each other’s cases that their colleagues can never seem to access, and they have someone to grab and make out with when someone won’t leave them alone at the club and they’re not in the mood to start a brawl.

What they have is earth-shattering orgasms and scratches from her nails on her back and throats sore from screaming anything but her name, because what they have is just friendship, after all.

What they have is jealousy when the other flirts with some other woman; what they have is a pit in their stomachs when the other winks across the room and leaves with her arm around someone else.

What they have is extra heated bathroom sex the next night, because they might just be friends, but they are each other’s.

What they have is the other’s sweatshirts in their drawers and the other’s heart in their hands and the best friend – who wants to be more than her friend, but doesn’t know how – anyone could ever ask for.
Alex’s heart stops when she sees her.

She should have been more prepared. Maggie had asked her to pick her up at her gym, after all: what the hell should she have expected?

Whatever it was, it wasn’t this, because yes Alex has seen Maggie naked and yes she has seen her dressed to the nines and yes she has seen her in that white button down shirt that shakes her to the core, but god Alex hasn’t seen Maggie in nothing but a sports bra and basketball shorts, beating the hell out of a heavy bag, eyes focused and perfect skin glistening with sweat and ab muscles rippling perfectly with each strike, with each movement, with each kick.

She doesn’t bother saying her name – Maggie’s headphones are on and she doubts if she can form words at this point, anyway – she just leans up against the wall (because something needs to hold her up) and she just stares and if she drools a little, really, who could blame her?

Because the muscles of Maggie’s arms are swollen and her back is perfectly defined and her legs are just, and her hair is just, and Alex can’t, and before she knows what she’s doing, she’s blocking one of Maggie’s blows to the bag and she’s spinning her around into her arms and she doesn’t care that Maggie’s sweat is staining the front of her shirt, all she cares about is the way her neck tastes and the way she grins and sighs into her touch and the way her bare stomach feels underneath her hands.

“Didn’t mean to interrupt your workout, babe, I just – “

“Yeah you did. But uh… you can make it up to me.”

“Oh, can I?”

“Take me home and give me another kind of workout.”

“Oh yeah?”

“Yeah.”

“… That I can do.”

Anonymous asked:

Hey :) I just started thinking about Alex reading a nerdy book to Maggie to help her fall asleep after a long day and I can't handle the fluff (also, we need more book love!) :D Thank you for your writing and your kindness, and much love to our queer family <3

Her old microbiology textbook is her standby.

When her emotions are too scattered for novels; when her body needs a bit of nostalgia; when her mind needs to focus but not on whatever problems are immediately at hand – Alex’s college microbiology textbook is what she reaches for.

Because she remembers marking up the pages and she remembers the late-night studying and she remembers the lab and she gets a thrill out of correcting the book in places where it’s since fallen out of date, where she knows more details, now, than the book included then; when she’s made her own discovery that’s added to, that’s refuted, one of the tidbits in the text.

So when Maggie is restless and when Maggie is bone-dead tired but her eyes can’t close – when Maggie’s day was a living nightmare and if she closes her eyes, she’ll see things she doesn’t want to – Alex pulls her into her lap and Alex wraps her up in the blankets and Alex puts on her glasses and Alex pulls out her old microbiology textbook, and Alex starts reading.

But she doesn’t just read the words. She pauses a few times a paragraph, describing whatever diagram, whatever chart, whatever illustration, the text references. Describing her first encounter with tardigrades and the fight she had with her professor about whether desiccation experiments were a form of torture. Describing the updates that the book needs to make, the discoveries that have been made – that she’s made – since its publication. The way xenobiology and alien physiology both challenge and reinforce the beauty contained within the book’s worn pages.

And Maggie listens, and Maggie smiles, and Maggie nods, and Maggie whines when Alex briefly stops stroking her hair so she can turn the page, and Maggie hums contentedly when Alex replaces her hand, when Alex leans down to kiss her temple; when Alex’s voice coaxes her into a deep, peaceful sleep, dreaming of creatures that thrive near absolute zero and creatures that live in acid and a woman that loves her more than life itself.

“Agent Danvers! Where the hell did you put my eyeliner.”

“Alex.”

“Lucy?”

“Alexandra Danvers I have a date in fifteen minutes and I need my fucking eyeliner.”

“You look fine, Lane, god, grow some confidence.”

“Agent Danvers, so help me I will tell your girlfriend on you.”

“You can’t do that, Maggie’ll be on your side!”

“Exactly.”

“Ugh. Fine. It’s up there.”

“Up… where?”

“The bookshelf.”

“The… top of the bookshelf.”

“Danvers.”

“You know you’re not nearly as scary out of your uniform.”

“That’s it, I’m calling Maggie!”

“What good would that do you, she won’t be able to reach it either.”

“Good god, Alex.”

“That’s what Maggie said last night, have you guys been talking?”

“Oh my god I hate you.”
“You don’t. You rescued me from Cadmus. You wouldn’t do that if you hated me.”

“Maybe I only did that to get in your sister’s pants.”

“What.”

Chapter Summary

anonymous asked:

can u write one where alex doesnt admit shes gay to herself yet but maggie takes the hit and starts undressing herself in front of alex like trying to seduce her idk in my mind it sounded much better

She swears she’s not gay, and Maggie knows better.

Because Maggie sees the way her eyes rake down her body when she bends over the pool table to line up a shot; hears the way her breath hitches when Maggie laughs and slips into her space; feels the way Alex’s entire body reacts when they touch, when they hug, when they make eye contact over the tops of their beer bottles.

Not only is Alex queer; but Alex likes her, and damnit, Maggie’s had enough of Alex’s denial.

So when they’re done sparring – sparring is amazing because Alex is sweating and breathing hard and barely dressed and Maggie is shook and Maggie is grateful for the opportunity to touch her, to feel her, to watch her bounce on the balls of her feet, to watch her concentrate, to watch her strategize, to watch her muscles ripple and god she should have been able to block that punch, but lord is she too gay to handle this shit – when they’re done sparring, Maggie does something she hasn’t yet in front of Alex.

In front of her nope not gay definitely not gay nope no why are you looking at me like that or more to the point why am I looking at you like that nope not gay nope nope no friend.

They’re done sparring, and Maggie starts to strip.

She starts with her too-tight tank, facing Alex as she pulls it over her head, as Alex’s jaw drops and Alex blinks and Alex won’t stop staring.

Which is exactly what Maggie was hoping for, so she doesn’t turn around when she slips out of her sports bra, as she grabs a towel and pats the sweat off her bare chest. Alex coughs and Alex turns around and Maggie just grins.

“Something wrong, Danvers?”

Alex’s voice cracks when she responds, and Maggie smirks.

“No, no, not – no, of course not.”

“Pass me my bag, will you?”

“Mhmm,” Alex squeaks, and she steals a glance in Maggie’s direction as she hands her the duffle. And promptly trips over herself.
Because Maggie is completely naked now, casually unzipping her bag, casually digging around for her change of clothes.

And Alex has never been this…. this.

“Sure you’re alright, Danvers?”

“I…”

“Listen, I’m down to take you back to my place and let you touch everything you keep staring at. As friends. You know. If you want.”

“I…”

“Yeah?”

“I think I’m gay.”

“Well lucky me then, cause that makes two of us.”
The first time she woke up without Maggie next to her, she panicked.

Of course she left, because why would she stay?

Panicked, that is, until she found the note on the pillow next to her.

Alex,

I didn’t wake you because you looked so peaceful. Went out to get coffee and groceries. Be back soon.

Stay in bed, beautiful.

You are perfect, and I can’t wait to be back in your arms.

- M

So now, when she wakes up and Maggie isn’t there, Alex sighs, and Alex stretches, and Alex smiles, because she can hear her puttering around in the kitchen, she can smell the freshly brewed coffee and she can hear the sizzling of pancake batter into the pan.

This morning – this Sunday morning that J’onn banned her from the DEO and that Maggie had wrangled an entire day off – when Alex wakes and sighs and stretches and smiles, Maggie has left CatCo’s Sunday edition on the pillow.

Alex reaches for it eagerly, rolling over onto her stomach, letting the blanket stop just at the small of her back, and grabbing her glasses blearily from the bedside table. She finds her sister’s latest article, and she takes a moment before diving into reading it to cherish the way the sunlight is dancing through the blinds onto her naked back, the way her body is fully, completely calm, the way her soul is fully, perfectly, happy.
She looks over her shoulder when Maggie slips back into the room a half hour later, smiling at the sight of her girlfriend dressed in nothing but Alex’s Stanford sweater and her boxers.

“Morning princess,” Maggie greets, steaming mugs of coffee in her hands, and Alex coos, dropping the magazine on her pillow as she stretches languidly, contentedly. Maggie’s breath hitches as the blanket slips lower on Alex’s body, letting her see the perfect curve of the red boy shorts Alex fell asleep in.

“See something you like?” Alex flirts sleepily, starting to roll over onto her back, but Maggie stops her smoothly as she sets the mugs on the bedside table and crawls on top of her.

Alex hums and sighs and arches her ass back into Maggie’s body as Maggie sweeps her hair off the nape of her neck and presses open-mouthed kisses on her neck, her shoulders, her back.

“Yes and no,” Maggie answered her, and there was a time when that answer would have sent Alex into a panic, but she can feel the smile on Maggie’s lips as she continued pressing kisses to Alex’s back, as she moves down her body, down to the small of her back, to her ass, drawing the blanket gently off her thighs after a pause and an eager nod from Alex, coaxing a gasp and a grinding of her hips down onto the bed as she nips at her thighs, flits her tongue over the backs of her knees, kisses her calves, her ankles, her heels, the bottoms of her feet, before working her way – slowly, carefully, attentively – back up Alex’s body.

“Tell me the yes part,” Alex sighs, and writhes and gasps as Maggie grabs at her hips and presses down into her.

“The yes part is yes, yes, of course I see something I like. My woman, basically naked, in our bed, relaxed and happy and perfect and damn, wearing those glasses, on a perfect Sunday morning? Yeah. I see a lot of somethings I like.”

Alex smiles and groans happily as Maggie slips her hands underneath her body, bringing them around her chest to take her breasts into her hands, and Maggie shudders and growls slightly, grinding her hips down into Alex’s ass.

“And the no part?” Alex flirts breathlessly, and Maggie holds herself up with one hand while drawing the lower, skating against the bed down Alex’s stomach, pausing around her navel for permission to slip lower, which Alex whines and arches her back and grants.

“The no part,” Maggie slips her hand under Alex’s boy shorts, grazing her clit and letting Alex gasp and whine and grind down onto her hand as much as she wants, “is that I don’t just see something I like.”

She shifts her weight to her elbow and smooths Alex’s hair off the side of her face so she can kiss her temple, so she can nip at her earlobe, so she can kiss her jaw, her neck, bite down slightly before breathing into her ear, “My good girl.”

Alex makes a sound somewhere between a gasp and a scream, and Maggie rewards her with a question in her eyes. “Please,” Alex answers, and Maggie leans down to kiss the side of her mouth as she obeys, slipping her fingers inside of her, keeping her palm right on that spot above her clit that Alex needs, needs, to come completely undone.

“I love when you make those sounds for me, babygirl,” and Alex writhes harder, screams louder. “Mmm, good girl, and when you move like that for me.”

Alex slams her palm into the sheets, curls her fingers desperately around them, and Maggie nips at her earlobe and Alex unravels and Maggie is wrecked at the way her body moves underneath hers, the way her back muscles ripple as her inner walls convulse around her fingers, the way her name tastes on Alex’s lips, the way she knows that heaven must be a Sunday morning with this woman.

“I don’t just see something I like, Alex Danvers. I see something – someone – that I love. So, so much.”

The morning after they spend their first night together maggie picks up alex phone by mistake and it's eliza "who are you? Where's my daughter??" "I'm sorry, she's sleeping but I'll wake her up and" "wait! So you are maggie?" beautiful & awkward haha

She doesn’t check the caller ID before answering the phone.

Hell, she doesn’t even check the phone before answering the phone.

She picks it up because the ring is loud and Alex is sleeping and Alex is peaceful and Alex is curled onto her chest with her leg wrapped around Maggie’s waist and god if this is work Maggie is going to contemplate quitting because waking up with a woman in her arms has never felt quite this incredible before.

“Yeah,” she half-whispers, and Alex nuzzles closer into her chest unconsciously. She strokes her hair with her fingers and presses a quiet kiss to the top of her head, a faint and irrepressible smile on her face.

“I’m sorry, who is this? Where’s my daughter?”

Maggie’s stomach swoops and she almost sits bolt upright but the whole point of picking up the phone – shit, Alex’s phone – was to not wake Alex, so she grimaces and swallows and takes a deep breath instead.

“Oh, I’m… I’m sorry Dr. Danvers, she’s sleeping but I’ll uh, I’ll wake her up – “

“No dear, that isn’t necessary, I – so you’re Maggie then? I’m afraid you were flitting in and out of unconsciousness last time we met.”

“Um… yes ma’am, I…”

“So you spent the night with my daughter.”

It’s a wonder that her wildly racing heart hasn’t woken Alex yet.

“Um, Dr. Danvers, it – “

“No no, it’s alright, I understand that my daughter is a grown woman and has sex on occasion. She’s quite taken with you, you know, Maggie – well, yes, I’m sure you’ve realized that if you’re answering her phone at 6 in the morning – when she wakes, just please let her know that I was just calling to check in – she’s usually awake and back from her morning run by now, you see – and that I fully expect to see you both in Midvale for dinner so I can get to know my daughter’s girlfriend when she isn’t either dying or naked in bed with my little girl.”
“I – it – ma’am – “

“Have a wonderful day, Maggie. I’ll be seeing you soon.”

“Yes… um… yes ma’am.”

“Maggie? Babe? You calling me ma’am?”

“Uh, no… your mom.”

“What.”

“Um.”

Chapter Summary

anonymous asked:

I just had a nightmare so I came to tumblr to distract myself then I caught myself thinking "what if alex had a nightmare and maggie comforts her?" But nothing too heavy, I don't want another nightmare hahahaha

Alex isn’t a screamer – not when Maggie’s not touching her, anyway – so when she jolts awake from her nightmare, she doesn’t make a sound. She doesn’t make a sound, but she sits bolt upright, bare chest heaving, some of her short hair stuck to her forehead from sweat, keen eyes adjusting to the dark almost immediately, searching into the night for any sign of a Cadmus laboratory, any sign of scalpels and screaming and test subjects.

But she only finds Maggie’s bedroom, yesterday’s bra slung over Maggie’s desk chair, her oversized NCPD windbreaker on a hook on the back of the door, a glass of water carefully placed next to her glasses on the nightstand because Maggie knew Alex always got thirsty in the middle of the night.

She only finds everything that is Maggie – safe, secure, home – and she doesn’t jump when a pair of warm hands slide around her waist, because the hands, too, don’t feel like her nightmare; they feel, instead, safe. Secure. Home.

“Another nightmare, babe?” Maggie asks, her voice full of sleep, full of gravel, full of concern and full of love.

“I’m fine,” Alex tells her, leaning back into her touch, and she feels Maggie shaking her head against her bare back.

“You’re shaking, Al,” Maggie whispers, and there’s no judgment in her voice, no sign that she thinks Alex is weak, that she thinks Alex should be stronger than imaginary wisps flitting through her subconscious at night. No sign, because she thinks quite the opposite.

“I’m okay,” Alex hears herself say, and she hears her own voice crack, and she feels Maggie’s lips on her spine and she feels herself, for once in her damn life, let herself be taken care of.

She lowers back down onto the bed, back down into Maggie’s arms, back down to the sheets that smell like everything that is Maggie, back down to where Maggie’s long hair tickles her face, to where Maggie smoothes her own hair off her forehead, kisses her jaw, her chin, her nose, her cheeks.

“You?”
“What about me?”

“You’re alright too?” Maggie’s heart nearly explodes and she has to try several times before she can successfully swallow, before she can successfully breathe, before she can successfully do anything but want to bawl, because Alex Danvers worries about her like she… like she’s family.

“Yeah, my love. I’m alright, too.”

“Good.”

Alex smiles sleepily, and her body relaxes. She snuggles closer into Maggie’s arms, and Maggie runs gentle fingers over her naked sides and presses kisses to her hair as Alex falls back into a safe, secure, home, sleep.
anonymous asked:

I love how you always write explicit consent and my head cannon is alex/maggie saying "can we have sex now?" After a fight haha or "can I kiss you now?" When they see each at the end of the day

When their chests are still heaving from Alex’s pacing, Alex’s yelling; from Maggie’s biting her lip and sullenly going quiet, seething, until Alex breaks, until Alex cries, until Alex doubles over and Maggie grabs her and holds her and apologizes, until they both apologize and breathe and fumble for each other’s hands and kiss each other’s knuckles;

When Maggie inhales sharply as Alex’s lips graze her hand, and their wet eyes meet headily over their intertwined fingers;

“Can we have make-up sex now?” Alex will ask, and Maggie will laugh, Maggie will smile, and a relieved tear will splash onto her cheek.

“Yeah, Alex. Yeah, we can.”

And when Maggie comes home from a long day and Alex has flowers on the table waiting for her and an omelette – because Maggie is a massive fan of breakfast for dinner, or breakfast any time, really – on just this side of overcooked, Alex turns off the burner and walks to the door to take off Maggie’s jacket, to take Maggie’s gun, to run her fingers through Maggie’s hair, Maggie will put her hands on Alex’s elbows, on Alex’s hips, and she will smile, and she will ask, “Can I kiss you now?”

And Alex will answer with her beaming eyes, her eager smile, and her slightly parted lips.

Chapter Summary

tacosandjoggers asked:

Do you agree with my headcannon that Maggie is really good at playing darts? One day, she's gonna show Alex up and win some money back.

She used to sneak out in her truck and drive an hour and a half out of Blue Springs to the nearest gay bar with her best friend – the only other out gay kid in her school, in her town – and the bar’s pool table was as bumpy and cratered as Martian terrain.

But the dart board worked just fine.

And she would only ever have enough money for gas, enough money to slip to the little kids who got their lunch money beaten out of them so they could eat, enough money to buy herself the few lesbian DVDs she could get her hands on.

So she got good at darts. Good enough to get her drinks paid for. Good enough to hustle some extra cash so she could start saving up for her first Triumph; some extra cash so she could start saving to go to college far away from this damn town.

When she got to National City, the alien bar didn’t have a dart board. But being a rookie cop didn’t pay much, and she was still in debt from school, and it was nice to make some friends while making some extra grocery money, so M’gann indulged her by setting up a dart board in the back.

When Alex Danvers came around, Maggie was still teaching herself to play pool, and she was so enthralled with the smooth shots Alex made, the confidence in the way she bent over the table, the deftness of her fingers and the slight squint in her eye when she set up another perfect shot, that for a long time Maggie forgot about the dart board.

Until Winn discovered it, loudly, and Maggie smirked. Because she was constantly losing to Alex Danvers – her money; her pride at being able to win whatever game she played; her heart.

But darts? No no. She wouldn’t lose at darts.

And she didn’t, and it turned out that Alex Danvers was a sore, sore loser.

And it turned out, further, that Maggie didn’t mind soothing her with kisses, with barely-there whispers, with a sway of her hips and a wink of her eye that made Alex forget all about the game.

Chapter Summary

anonymous asked:

Okay but how much do you wanna bet that if someone at the alien bar even got CLOSE to touching Maggie sexually without her consent Alex would stop their hand mid swing and slam them into a table, making sure that they know if they do anything like that again she won't hesitate, and when she comes back Maggie's like "what the hell" and Alex is just like "he tried to touch your ass that's unacceptable" (she'd do this even if they weren't together)

It doesn’t matter who it is. It doesn’t matter where they are, and it doesn’t matter how drunk they all are.

Alex does not tolerate anyone touching Maggie without her consent. Anyone. At all.

When other people have zero tolerance for something, they might snap at someone. They might yell, they might call someone out publicly.

When Alex Danvers has zero tolerance for something? She breaks bones.

So when the newcomer to the bar looks like he wants to touch Maggie’s ass as she bends over the pool table to line up her next shot, Alex immediately has his arm pinned behind his back, his head slammed onto the table behind them.

“What the hell, Danvers?” Maggie wants to know, her back stiff and her hand hovering at her waistband for her gun, in case Alex needs anything, in case the worst is happening and it’s going to be the massacre all over again.

“He tried to touch your ass, Maggie, and I just – “ She twists his arm tighter and slams his head back down into the table for emphasis – “needed him to know that’s unacceptable.”

M’gann is frozen at the bar, tap dripping over her still fingers, and the entire bar stares. Maggie flushes and Maggie tries to hide a smile and Maggie touches the small of Alex’s back lightly.

“I think he’s learned his lesson, babe. Maybe don’t dislocate his shoulder; we’re not trying to leave M’gann with a lot of paperwork, yeah?”

Alex swallows and shoves the guy onto the ground before glancing around the bar and holding up her hands mildly.

“Anyone have something to say?”

Eyes are immediately averted and chatter immediately begins again and M’gann realizes how much beer she’s been spilling as she chuckles to herself and grabs a towel.
“You okay?” Alex asks Maggie, and Maggie just grabs her, and Maggie just kisses her until she can’t breathe.

“What uh… what was that for? Not that I’m… complaining.”

“No one’s ever… I stand up for people. People don’t… stand up for me.”

Alex’s heart breaks and she runs her fingers through Maggie’s hair, shaking her head slightly. “Well, now they do. Get used to it, Sawyer.”

Chapter Summary

anonymous asked:

Hey! Do you have a fic about Alex waking up after having spent the night with Maggie and being surprised that Maggie is still there? I kinda feel like Alex used to having one night stands

She’s used to memorizing the path through his furniture to his front door as he drunkenly kisses her, gropes her, as his uncomfortable hands back her desperate-to-feel-but-not-feeling-anything-but-vague-discomfort body to his bed, to his couch, to his kitchen counter. She memorizes the path because she will leave when he falls asleep, without turning any of the lights on, because she doesn’t want to wake him; doesn’t want to be asked for her number; doesn’t want to be asked if it was good for her, because, inevitably, it wasn’t.

Or, in the rare occasions that he seems smart enough, that he seems gentle enough, that he smiles broadly enough, that she’s drunk enough, to take him back to her apartment, the warm body that she drifts off next to is an empty space, a vaguely dented pillow and pulled back sheets in the morning.

Alex Danvers is used to one night stands.

So when she takes Maggie upstairs – takes her upstairs because she’s more than smart enough, more than gentle enough, her smile is more than broad enough, but oddly, neither of them are the least bit drunk – and they fall into bed together, Alex finds herself doing many, many things she’s never done before.

Screaming her name. Gripping at her back because she needs her closeness like she needs oxygen. Gasping and moaning and writhing and cumming, none of it contrived, none of it faked, all of it perfect.

But Alex Danvers is used to one night stands.

So when she rolls her completely sated, completely spent body off of Maggie’s at god knows what hour in the morning; when she kisses her and pulls her close and Maggie sighs and melts into her naked embrace; when she feels Maggie kiss the hand that’s wrapped around her body, when she hears Maggie’s breathing slow and even out in sleep, Alex fights to stay awake.

Fights to stay awake because she’s used to one night stands, and she wants this to last as long as it can.

But sleep wins, and her heart threatens to shred when her eyes crack open into the morning light a few hours later, because she knows – she knows – that the bed next to her will be empty. Will be cold. Will be nothing but a memory.

She doesn’t want to turn. Doesn’t want to see. Doesn’t want to confirm that she was nothing more than an easy fuck for the woman she was falling in love with.

But she is Alex Danvers, and she does not shy from what she’s afraid of, so she turns.

And her heart bursts.

She grits her teeth and she swallows and she resists the desire to light everything on fire.

She drags herself out of bed because dammit, if Maggie Sawyer is so apparently intent on pretending that nothing happened, she can be, too.

But the kitchen smells like pancakes and the kitchen smells like coffee, and the moment she pads out of the bedroom two tiny hands slip around her waist and soft lips find the nape of her neck.

“Good morning, sleeping beauty. Breakfast sound good?”

Maggie’s voice is gravelly with sleep and Maggie’s voice is relaxed and Maggie’s voice is content and Maggie’s voice is happy and Maggie’s voice is there, here, because Maggie stayed, and Alex has never felt so loved.

“Breakfast sounds perfect.”
It starts relatively chaste.

“Never have I ever defeated an alien threat with a computer virus.” (Winn drinks and pats himself on the back.)

“Never have I ever had a crush on my boss.” (Lucy and Kara drink and Kara is bright red and Alex buries her face in her hands and mutters something about that woman to herself.)

“Never have I ever been arrested.” (James and Alex and Lucy drink, and all chime at the same time, “Racism,” “Drunk driving,” and “Public indecency.”)

It’s Winn who does the thing, and he kind of means it as a joke because he can’t think of anything else.

“Never have I ever had a threesome.”

Kara laughs and James awws and Lucy chugs and Alex sips and Maggie leans back and drinks.

Kara splutters and furiously adjusts her glasses; James coughs and stares, hard, at his ex girlfriend, his face not knowing whether it’s amused or horrified or both; Winn yells and points between all three of them and thumps the couch in excitement, spilling his beer everywhere.

Alex blushes furiously and Lucy smirks and Maggie arches a confident eyebrow.

“What – you guys have – with who – when?”

“I’m just gonna say, before Agent Danvers pops a few blood vessels in her face – “

“Aw, my poor baby, come here.”

“ – that there are some hella attractive women in this town. Sorry I didn’t invite you, Jimmy, I don’t think the other girls would’ve appreciated it.”

James cocks his head and James looks between Alex’s guilty face, half-hidden in Maggie’s shoulder; the way Maggie licks her lips in distinct memory; the way Lucy’s pinky finger lingers on the place where the couch meets Alex’s ass; and his eyes fly wide and he turns to an open-mouthed Winn and they both automatically look at a still corrupted-looking Kara and agree silently to say nothing, to say nothing ever, about the fact that Lucy, Maggie, and Alex have slept together. At the same time. With no clothes on.

Until Kara is safely out of super-hearing earshot of the rest of the Superfriends, anyway.

CAN YOU DO A SANVERS LAP DANCE PLEASE PLEASE PLEASE PLEASE OMG LIKE ALEX GIVING MAGGIE A LAP DANCE IN A SILK DRESS OR SOMETHING PLEASE

The silk feels slightly foreign on her skin, which is used to tougher stuff, but she imagines Maggie’s fingers running over the material – running under the material – and she licks her lips and runs her fingers through her hair and checks the low cut, just-barely-covering-her-ass dress (more of a slip, really) in the mirror before grabbing her glasses and slipping them on as an afterthought.

She stares at Maggie for a moment – lounging on the couch, beer in hand, catching up on Quantico for no reason other than to mock the FBI and watch Priyanka Chopra exist – before gulping, before grabbing the remote and pausing the TV, before setting her phone into the speaker Maggie had brought from her apartment and pressing play on one of her favorite Beyoncé tracks.

“Am I interrupting, Sawyer?” Alex asks, licking her lips and keeping her eyes locked in Maggie’s as her hips catch the rhythm, as Maggie’s jaw hits the floor and Alex crosses in front of Maggie, keeping her sitting with a gentle push on her shoulders and a wink from behind her glasses.

Maggie tries to speak and Maggie utterly fails, and Alex holds her bottom lip with her teeth as she pauses.

“Did you want me to stop?”

“I – it – no, Alex, fuck, no.”

“English language giving you trouble, Sawyer?” Alex chides with wicked eyes, her voice several octaves lower than it usually is, and Maggie doesn’t bother to refute her. She just reaches her hands out for Alex’s hips, for Alex’s body, for Alex, because she’s in a silk slip and she’s wearing her glasses and she’s starting to dance and Jesus Christ she needs to touch her.

“Nnhn,” Alex chastises, swatting Maggie’s hands away gently, arching an eyebrow behind those glasses and letting her lips curve into a lopsided grin. “I didn’t say you could touch.”

“Sorry,” Maggie breathes, and Alex smiles, and Alex turns, and Alex watches Maggie over her shoulder because god does it feel good to see the raw need, the raw want, the raw lust on her face as Alex bends, as Alex brings her hips down, brings her hands down to brace herself on the couch on either side of Maggie’s legs, brings her ass down, grinding down in perfect time into Maggie’s body.

“Al – Alex,” Maggie chokes, and Alex hums, and she reaches back to take Maggie’s hands – obediently raised in surrender, obediently raised in a ‘you told me not to touch you so I’m not even though dear god is it destroying me’ palms up pose at her sides – and bring them to her waist. Maggie groans and grinds her hips up into Alex’s ass and Alex chuckles deep in her throat and moves her ass harder and Maggie is tossing her head onto the back of the couch because Maggie is wrecked and can do nothing but moan and splutter and grab and fight to keep her eyes on the woman in a silk slip and glasses giving her the most perfect lap dance she could ever imagine.

“Wanna take me to bed and reward me for giving you a lap dance?”

And Maggie might be wrecked and she might have forgotten what oxygen is and she might have forgotten how to speak, but she remembers how to stand and she remembers how to spin Alex around and lift her up and kiss her mouth and carry her to the bedroom and lay her down and fuck her until her throat is sore from screaming and her eyes are glazed from cumming that hard.

“So… you like when I give you lap dances? Cause that’s… that’s what I’m getting.”

“Know what babe, I’m not too sure. Think you could… try again? Give me a bigger sample size to analyze?”

“And you call me a nerd.”

“In those glasses?”

“You like these glasses.”

“Damn right I do.”

Someone needs to write Daddy kink Alex. I tried and failed.

thesameenshaw answered:

cough slides $5 bill across the table heeeeyyyyyy @queergirlwriting...

She’s naked and she’s wrecked  and she’s layng on her stomach and she’s writhing and she’s whimpering in desperate need because Maggie is on top of her and Maggie is inside her and Maggie isn’t quite done telling her how much she loves fucking her.

“My babygirl’s so tight for me, ugh, you’re such a good little girl, you know that?”

Alex bites into her pillow and Alex writhes and Maggie pulls out of her slightly and Alex whines in protest.

“Daddy asked you a question, babygirl, you gonna answer for me?”

Alex half moans and half screams and Maggie waits and Alex tries to back her ass up so Maggie will slip back inside her, will fill her with everything she needs again, but Maggie holds her hips down roughly before pausing, before freezing.

Maggie pauses and stares down at Alex intently before slipping her fingers onto Alex’s palm, waiting for Alex to squeeze back – which she does immediately – their nonverbal safe word for god yes I’m good please don’t stop the scene.

Satisfied with their check in, satisfied with their safe signal, satisfied that Alex feels respected, that Alex feels loved, Maggie obeys; Maggie doesn’t stop the scene, so she continues to hold Alex’s hips down, to demand an answer from Alex before continuing to fuck her.

“I asked,” Maggie’s ragged voice commands again, still pushing down Alex’s writhing hips. “If you know what a good little girl you are for me.”

Alex whines and Alex nods and Alex tries to remember what breathing is.

“Yes, Daddy,” she whispers, and Maggie growls, and Maggie rewards them both, pushing back down onto Alex’s ass, her strapon slipping back into Alex’s body, and Alex muffles her scream with the pillow and Maggie groans deep in the back of her throat.

“You like being Daddy’s good girl, honey?”

Alex bites her lip and Alex tries not to scream and Alex fails and Maggie smooths the hair off the back of her neck and kisses her gently.
“What’s your color, Ally?” she checks in breathlessly, needing to make sure, needing to know, even though she’s pretty certain from the way Alex is grinding her hips into the bed, into her own hand, that she’s good; because pretty certain isn’t certain enough.

“Green,” Alex gasps, and Maggie smiles in relief, and Maggie fucks her deeper, and Maggie asks her again.

“You like being a good girl while Daddy fucks you nice and deep, honey?”

Alex doesn’t even try to hold back her scream and Maggie grabs for her hand and their fingers interlace and neither of them have never been this wrecked.

“Yes Daddy, I love it.”

“Love what, babygirl? Tell me.”

“I love when you fuck me nice and deep, Daddy. I love feeling you stretch me out.”

Maggie groans and Maggie buries her forehead in Alex’s shoulder blades and Maggie’s thrusts go completely uneven because Maggie is completely unraveled and Alex is way ahead of her, already starting to convulse around Maggie’s strapon deep inside her, around her own hand palming her clit, around the feeling of being completely surrounded by this woman, this woman who checks in with her constantly and who respects her enough to give her exactly what she wants, even when what she wants makes her blush almost as hard as she’s cumming right now.

“I love it too, babygirl. And I love you,” Maggie tells her once she’s gathered Alex into her arms, once she’s kissed every part of her face, once she’s pulled Alex into her chest to listen to her slowly steadying heart beat, to fall asleep to the rhythm of the blood that runs through her veins only, now, for Alex.

one night at game night when maggie leaves the room subject turns to alex and maggie’s relationship and alex says ”i need your advice. i don't want to be her girlfriend anymore-” and maggie walks back in as she says that and insert angst here and alex has to stop her from leaving and says ”i was going to say that i don't want to be your girlfriend anymore because i want to be your wife” then there's fluff and kara dances around like the overeager excitable puppy she is pls can you write this????

She’s going to testify on behalf of a young kid who was wrongfully arrested in the morning, and he calls her and he’s terrified.

She leaves the room with the phone to her ear and an apologetic expression on her face, and when a few minutes later she walks back into game night, it’s with a small smile because the boy is calmer now, the boy is more confident now, the boy is less terrified now.

But the smile fades because as she slips back into the room Alex’s voice washes over her and Alex’s words threaten to break her: “Okay, you all, shut up, shut up, listen, I need your advice: I don’t wanna be her girlfriend anymore.”

“What the hell, Danvers.”

Her voice is expressionless and her face is a mask and her body is a coiled muscle ready to snap, ready to destroy, but only herself, because that’s what she’s best at.

“Maggie, god, no, Maggie, I didn’t – “

“No, you know what Danvers, I’ll save you the trouble. Don’t even worry about it. It was bound to happen anyway, it always does. I’ll just grab my stuff – “

“Maggie, no.”

Kara is paler than usual and Winn’s hands are on his mouth and James is biting his lip and Alex is up and Alex is striding to where Maggie is fumbling for her jacket and Alex is taking Maggie’s hands into hers and putting her fingers under her chin to tilt her head up, to encourage Maggie’s stormy face to look up into her eyes.

“Maggie, stop. Stop. I… I was going to say… I… I don’t want to be your girlfriend anymore because I want to be your wife.”

Kara shrieks and claps her hands over her mouth and Winn and James grab at each other’s arms and Alex takes a terrified breath and Maggie’s jaw hits the floor and Maggie gazes up into Alex’s eyes, her own flooded with hot, stinging tears.

“You… you what?”

“I don’t want to break up with you, Maggie Sawyer. I never wanna break up with you, I… I wanna marry you.”

“Alex, you…”

“Yeah, Maggie, why… how wouldn’t I wanna spend my life loving you?”

They barely notice Kara dancing around in the background and they barely notice Winn and James hitting each other’s arms and fangirling in blissful silence.

They barely notice because their fingers are stroking faces and their lips are kissing away tears and their bodies are shaking and they’re kissing and they’re hugging and they’re gasping for that elusive thing called breath.

“So… so I take it you want to. Marry me. Cause that’s… that’s what I got.”

Winn tosses a pillow at Alex’s beaming face and Maggie blocks it without even moving her head and Maggie smiles and Maggie leans up on her tip toes, and she kisses Alex’s nose and she kisses Alex’s lips and she breathes into Alex’s ear, “Of course I wanna marry you, Alexandra Danvers.”

Chapter Summary

anonymous asked:

Prompt (Has potential to be a little dark, but... Multiple people have mentioned the consent thing so...): Alex being confused by Maggie's constant need to check in with her when they're being intimate, because she's never had someone actually care whether or not she was actually okay with/enjoying what was going on and the fact that Maggie does seem to care completely baffles her. And when she tries to explain this to Maggie she gets more confused when Maggie gets super emotional about it.

HEADS UP for references to past experiences with non-consent

She would drink and she would dance and she would let their clumsy hands slide up and down her body because god she needed to feel something, didn’t she? Something other than mild impatience, mild repulsion, mild is this seriously what people write songs about because god I’d rather be in the stupid lab.

She would drink and she would drive and she would let them carry her to their bedrooms, to their couches, to their kitchen counters – whatever their fantasy was, never asking about hers – and she would try, she would try, and she would fail, like she always seemed to be failing, because when she bit her lip in pain or sighed because she was bored and this was tedious and couldn’t he tell she wasn’t into it he seemed smart couldn’t they just put on Grey’s Anatomy reruns and just talk? or gasped because he needed to slow down, she failed, she failed, because he couldn’t tell and she couldn’t tell him and wasn’t she supposed to be enjoying this anyway.

So when Maggie Sawyer watched her carefully as she took off her shirt; when Maggie Sawyer asked, “does this feel good, babe?” or “do you want me to take this off, Alex?” or “may I?” or “do you like that, beautiful?”; when Maggie Sawyer made sure she was soaking wet before slipping inside her, made sure she was desperate and writhing and begging before coming into her body, made sure she nodded and gasped and screamed and dug her fingers into Maggie’s hair before lowering her face between her legs to lick her until she came; when Maggie Sawyer paused and held her hand and said, “just tap my palm if you need me to stop, babe, okay?”; Alex Danvers was confused.

Confused and disoriented and, if truth be told, a little uncomfortable.

Because Maggie’s eyes were always watching her; Maggie’s ears were always straining for every sound of pleasure, for any sound of discomfort; Maggie’s voice was always asking; Maggie’s fingers were always checking; and it left her feeling overwhelmed, and it left her feeling scrutinized, and it left her feeling under a spotlight.

And she didn’t understand it at all. Because wasn’t sex about getting your partner off? Wasn’t she doing a good enough job of that? Why was Maggie hesitating so much? Was she bored? Was she trying to tell Alex that she could be more... exciting? More attractive? More... more?
She’s on top of Maggie when she finally says it; after Maggie stills her wrist with gentle fingers just as Alex is about to slip inside her; after Maggie looks up into her face with somber eyes and parted lips and asks, “You sure you want to, babe?”

“Am I not doing a good enough job?” Alex splurts in response, forcing the words out in a terrified rush.

Maggie freezes and Maggie scrunches her face and Maggie splutters. “What? Alex, you’re… god, no, you’re perfect, it – I’m confused. What… why are you asking, I’m… I am so turned on, Alex, can’t you feel how wet you make me? I was just… you don’t have to, that’s all I meant, I – what –

“You’re always stopping and asking me if I’m good or if I really want to, so I thought maybe I was doing something wrong, like you’re trying to tell me something or imply that I should be doing something different, something… better.”

And if Alex was baffled before she is utterly bewildered now, because there are suddenly tears in Maggie’s eyes and Maggie looks like she’s about to break and she’s rolling Alex off of her and onto her side and she’s smoothing Alex’s hair out of her face and she’s biting her lip and she’s clearly trying to remember how to breathe, how to speak, how to function.

“Alex,” she finally chokes out as Alex’s heart races in confusion, in terror, in the sinking, familiar feeling that she’s failed, again.

“Alex, I’m so sorry, I’m not… babe, I’m not trying to passive aggressively correct you, I just… you don’t have to do anything, ever. You don’t have to let me touch you, or take your clothes off, you don’t have to go down on me or fuck me or hell, babe, you don’t have to let me kiss you. I just… I’m just trying to make sure you’re good because I couldn’t… I couldn’t live with myself if I ever touched you in a way you didn’t want, if I… I only want you to feel amazing, Alex, I… has no one ever…”

Alex looks like she does when she’s working out a particularly complex equation, and she shakes her head slowly, and Maggie’s chest wracks with exactly one sob before she takes a deep breath and cups Alex’s face with her hands.

“Well, my kill list just grew some. And so did my desire to kiss you. But only if you want. Do you? Want?”

And this time, Alex smiles wetly, and Alex sighs, and Alex doesn’t bother swallowing tears, because Alex knows she is, finally, cared for. Respected. Loved.

“Yes. Yes, I want.”

Chapter Summary

anonymous asked:

Prompt: Eliza visiting, she approves of Maggie but things escalate during dinner as Eliza says something Alex takes as a stab at her for not being perfect enough (unless Kara). There's a huge fight and Maggie witnesses it

It starts with Kara hiding all the bourbon and limiting Alex to one beer and one glass of wine.

It starts with Maggie holding her hand and telling her it’ll be fine and _here babe, have some water._

It starts with Maggie shaking Eliza’s hand with both of her own and telling her what an honor it is to properly meet her and how amazing her daughter is and _thank you for bringing her into the world._

It starts with Alex blushing and Kara beaming and Maggie pouring Eliza a glass of wine and Eliza carefully regarding Alex’s crimson face and bright eyes and mourning the way she’s never seen her _happy_ like this before, _relaxed_ like this before.

It starts with smiles and it starts with an awkward ease, but it doesn’t end that way.

Because Eliza is leaning across the table slightly and Eliza is telling Maggie that it’s so refreshing to hear that she studied literature _because I could never get my Alexandra to expand her horizons beyond the laboratory_ and Alex is reaching for the bottle of wine and Maggie is remarking mildly that Alex’s horizons seem super broad to her and Maggie is rubbing Alex’s thigh under the table and only pouring her a sip or two more between passing the bottle away to a pursed-lipped Kara.

And Eliza is congratulating Maggie on getting Alex to spend so much more time outside of work because _other than all that time she spent surfing at home, I could barely get her to give her mother more than a five minute phone call outside of the lab, let alone spend entire evenings out and away from work_ and Kara is commenting on how often they have sister’s nights and movie nights and game nights and Maggie is letting Alex leave bruises on her hand with how hard she’s squeezing it under the table.

And then Alex is breaking and Alex is standing and Alex is tearing at the seams because Eliza is telling Maggie how _it’s so wonderful to share a table with Alex when she’s sober, Maggie, you don’t know how I’ve worried_ – and Alex doesn’t want to hear the rest of the sentence because Alex is _done_ and Alex is _can you not, Mom? Can you not in front of my girlfriend, in front of the only woman, the only person, I’ve ever brought home to you? You don’t string out all of Kara’s flaws in front of the people she brings home! Oh, but you know what, you don’t string out any of Kara’s flaws at all, because she doesn’t have any, does she, they’re all mine, all my fault, because no matter what you said about me being your supergirl, me being exceptional, it’s never super enough, it’s never exceptional enough, is it? So tell me, Mom, when will I be enough?_
And Kara is crying and Kara is standing and Eliza is sitting and Eliza is staring at the table and Alex isn’t waiting for an answer and Maggie is reaching for her hand and Eliza is seething, because This is really what you’re going to do, Alexandra? Yell at me, accuse me of all these things, demand an answer from me and then storm away? In front of, as you say, the only woman you’ve ever brought home to me? Like a petulant teenager? Alex, you know better than this –

Well apparently I don’t because –

Alex, do you wanna maybe take a walk –

No, Kara, I don’t want to take a walk, but maybe you can take me for a flight around the city, maybe that’ll clear my head –

Alex –

I’m sorry, Kara, I’m not mad at you, it’s not –

I know –

Alexandra.

What?

I think Detective Sawyer is trying to tell you something.

Because Maggie is standing with her head bowed and Maggie is holding Alex’s pinky with her own and Maggie is waiting, waiting, waiting, and Alex furrows her brow at her and Maggie is speaking, softly, softly, telling Alex that I know history with parents is rough, babe, and I know your mom – sorry, Dr. Danvers – doesn’t always talk like she appreciates you for who you are. But babe, I... I just wanted to remind you that I think you’re perfect, and I think you’re enough, and I think hell, you’re too good, so good, so amazing, that I probably don’t deserve you, but I want to try every day and every night and every moment in between to deserve you because you’re perfect to me, Alexandra Danvers. And I just... maybe now’s not the time, but I know when I have smackdowns with my dad I always wish someone would tell me they care about me so I... I care about you. You. In case you... forgot.

And Alex is kissing her and Kara is covering her wet smile with her hands and Eliza is looking down at the table with a bittersweet smile and pursed lips and Alex is breathing in everything that is Maggie and everything that is her and everything that she needs because in Maggie’s kiss she feels everything that she can be, and that includes being, well... enough.

Plzzz

Can I get a sanvers one night stand fic based on the song stay with me

^^ prompt from @percabeth-solangelo03 (I wrote this by turning the song and and seeing where it took me I hope that fulfills the prompt! Turns out it took me to insecure!Maggie angst-ville, so uh… sorry in advance. DON’T WORRY IT ENDS HAPPILY I COULDN’T DO THAT TO MAGGIE MY GOD PROTECT MAGGIE SAWYER AT ALL COSTS)

She’s not quite drunk but she’s flirting with getting plastered.

She’s not quite depressed but she’s flirting with letting herself collapse on the bathroom floor and not dragging herself up until M’gann takes her by the hands and calls her a cab.

She’s not quite in love with Alex Danvers, but when she strolls into the bar, laughing over her shoulder at something that IT guy said, she’s flirting with punching the poor guy out and taking his place at Alex’s side.

“Sawyer!” Alex calls, and she’s not quite off her game, but she does flirt with choking on her beer.

And when Alex waves Winn off and makes her way to Maggie’s isolated table in the back, she’s not quite convinced that Alex is actually straight because Alex is leaning in and Alex is blushing and damnit, Alex Danvers is flirting with her.

The night draws on and Alex draws closer and Alex’s eyes are stone cold sober and Alex is breathing in Maggie’s ear and Alex’s fingers are flirting with Maggie’s belt loops and Alex is whispering “wanna get out of here?” and Maggie is confused but Maggie isn’t complaining and Maggie is fumbling for cash to toss onto the table and Maggie is driving her home and Maggie is getting flipped over and Maggie is gasping and Alex is asking for what she wants and Maggie is nodding and Alex is taking it and Maggie is forgetting about her ex, forgetting about her cold words and brutal accusations, because Alex Danvers is asking with her eyes if she can fuck her the split second before she does and this can’t be happening but it is and god she knows it can’t last because it never does but she knows already that she won’t ask Alex to stay because Alex’s eyes are already frosting in denial, in secrecy, in fear, in repulsion, probably, because who wouldn’t be repulsed by a woman who’s hard-headed, obsessed with work, insensitive, constantly accused of having mental health issues that she swears she’s trying to work out but no one seems to stick around long enough to find out.

And Alex certainly isn’t, because Alex is slipping back into her clothes and Alex is pressing a too-chaste kiss to Maggie’s swollen lips and Alex is smoothing her own hair back down and Alex is slipping her phone into her back pocket and Alex is saying something about having to get back to work but um, thanks for an amazing time, and Maggie’s heart is breaking and Maggie just nods wordlessly because of course and Maggie breaks when the front door snaps shut behind Alex and she doesn’t bother whispering the plea to stay with me that she wants to because why the hell would she, so she screams into her pillow and she slams her fists into her mattress and she refuses to sob and she throws her phone across the room and she thinks about warm hands and soft lips and the way Alex had whimpered her name like a prayer when she was cumming and she rocks herself and she cries.

She stops only when she hears her phone buzzing, a few minutes later, insistently, insistently, and she’s vaguely impressed that the damn thing isn’t broken.

Angry feet kick aside sweat-stained sheets and shaking hands reach for her phone and she cries more, more, because the text is long and the text is rambling and the text is perfect and the text is so, so Alex.

Maggie, I’m sorry I left like that. I’m sorry I didn’t… I should have, I don’t know, romanced you or something. I should have given you more than I did, because you deserve more than I have. I’m not sure of much right now, but I am sure of one thing, and that’s my feelings for this… amazing woman. You. I’m sorry I ran. I’d never felt anything like… Can I take you to dinner tonight? But I’d understand if you never want to see me again. But I’d… I’d love to do much more than see you again. - A Maggie’s hair is tied up and her shorts give short a new meaning and her white muscle shirt showing off her rounded biceps keeps making Alex trip over boxes, trip over the roll of packing tape, trip over her own feet.

Alex has a bandana tied just above her forehead to keep sweat out of her face and her cut-off jeans hug the curve of her ass perfectly, and the combination keeps making Maggie bump into walls, crash boxes into banisters, narrowly miss careening sideways into the closing elevator doors.

“They’re not gonna be able to make it through this move with all their limbs in tact, are they?”

“Don’t worry, Mr. Schott. I have the entire DEO medical team on standby. Detective Sawyer, you might want to watch where you’re going –”

“Fuck, ow!”

"Aww babe, you okay? Come here, let me kiss it."

“I don’t know why I even bother.”

Chapter Summary

anonymous asked:

Sanvers Prompt: just a cute scene where Maggie is fangirling about how great Alex is as a person and how good at her job she is, etc. and then says "you're my hero". Alex is all struck silent cause she's never really thought of herself as a hero, that was always Kara. (p.s. you're a phenomenal writer and I get super excited whenever I see you've posted something new to read <3 ).

It’s a small dinner, because Alex hadn’t said anything, but she’d seen Alex fidgeting with her hands, pulling the strands at the hem of her Stanford sweater on the plane. She’d felt the deep breaths Alex was taking, seen her biting the inside of her cheek.

So instead of her mother inviting the entire family, Maggie talked them into having dinner, just her and her dad and her mom and her… and Alex, because she’d noticed that Alex was calmer around smaller groups of people. It wasn’t obvious to other people – she was amazing, she was always amazing – but the more eyes on her, the more she did the little things. Like picking at the hem of her sweater, before and after (never during. She was too composed for during).

So Maggie had wrangled her mother down into a small dinner, for tonight at least, until Alex got acclimatized to Blue Springs, Nebraska.

And when her skeptical father puts a familiar lump in Maggie’s throat and asks, while Alex is helping her mother in the kitchen, “And how exactly is this woman better for you than that Tomás fellow who’s been asking after you since you were fifteen?”, Maggie swallows rage and irritation and a lecture about what it means to be a lesbian, damnit.

Because instead, she just starts talking about Alex.

“Pop, Alex is…” She stares at her father’s guarded face – one she knows she inherited – and she sighs and she starts again. “She saved my life. I mean, she’s saved my life so many times, but… you know, it’s one thing to put yourself in the line of fire – literal fire – “ She chuckles to herself at her own inside joke. “– for your partner in the force, you know? You spend all day with them, you know their family, you… but Alex? It didn’t matter that she barely knew me, it didn’t matter that I wasn’t on her team, that I… She’s brave and she’s tough and she’s gentle, Pop, she – she’s all these contradictions, like, she’s completely devoted to her job but she’ll throw everything away to protect the people she loves, she… she’s a family woman, Pop, you should see the way she dotes on her little sister, she gives up everything for her, even when it hurts her, even when it could literally kill her, and she just…”

Maggie pauses because she’s a detective, and she detects, sees her father’s gaze flitting over her shoulder, and she turns, following his eyes to where Alex is standing in the kitchen doorway with a stack of plates and watery eyes and slightly parted lips.
They just stare at each other for a long moment, and Maggie swallows the lump in her throat, the fear, the exhilaration, in her belly.

“You’re my hero, Alex,” she tells her, voice full of gravel and voice full of hope.

She turns back to her father and she repeats her words, knowing Alex, knowing that Alex will need to hear them again, because her sister is Supergirl for crying out loud and people don’t tell her enough that she is her own damn superhero.

“She’s my hero, Pop, and I’m in love with her. So uh. Yeah, she’s better for me than some man. Better for me than anyone.”

Her father nods slowly and her father continues looking beyond his daughter to the woman he’s beginning to realize will be his daughter-in-law one day. He sighs without sound and he raises his eyebrows like he’s trying to sort something out in his mind, and he reaches forward and he kisses his daughter’s forehead.

“I hope you’re her hero too, Mags. Because you’re certainly mine.”

“Oh, don’t worry, Mr. Sawyer. She is. She is.”
It starts on the Quidditch pitch, but it doesn’t end there.

It starts on the Quidditch pitch, when Alex sends a bludger straight at Maggie’s elbow because she’ll be damned if she lets Slytherin fall prey to this arrogant new Gryffindor Chaser, who seems to be able to get every shot past their damn Keeper.

She sends a bludger straight at her elbow, but the damn girl rolls completely over on her broom and shoots upside down and still makes the shot.

The Gryffindors roar and Alex swears and Madame Vasquez shouts a warning at her and she swears again, but softer this time, but that’s not even the most infuriating part.

No, the most infuriating part is the grin on the Gryffindor fifth year’s face, the way she hangs there in the air like a flipping sloth, just toes and fingers keeping her on her broom, gorgeous, perfect – no, no, irritating, stupid – hair spilling down toward the ground, the Gryffindors (and, hell, the Ravenclaws and Hufflepuffs, too) cheering on her antics.

The most infuriating part is that shit-eating grin, the way her eyes find Alex’s across the pitch, the way her grin broadens and her dimples shine when their eyes lock; the way she gives Alex a hearty wink, nearly sending the Beater spiraling off her broom in a confusion of heat and rage and heat, god, that heat.

So it starts on the Quidditch pitch, but it doesn’t end there.

It continues in the corridors, in the Great Hall, in DADA. Because suddenly she’s aware of this Maggie Sawyer girl everywhere; suddenly it’s like she’s in her blood, like she’s under her skin, and she’s trying not to think about touching her skin…

And it must be the universe putting them together, or at least that’s the way it seems to Alex, because Professor J’onzz pairs them up the next week in DADA, setting them to demonstrate whether they’ve been practicing stunning spells since last session in front of the entire class.

“You got this, Sawyer,” that irritatingly muscular Olsen boy whispers to Maggie as she steps forward, lopsided grin on, chin up, and Alex realizes with a jolt how tiny the girl is on the ground.

That shock of heat, that shock of energy, surges down deep below Alex’s stomach again when Maggie holds her eyes as they bow to each other, as she mutters “good luck, Danvers,” before they pace back, before they spin back around, before they raise their arms and set their wands and take a breath.
Alex has never lost a duel.

But Maggie’s voice is burning through her veins, her eyes penetrating her every shield, and she hesitates for a moment too long.

It’s Maggie Sawyer’s hands that are on hers when she wakes, when she hears a trembling voice muttering “Ennervate”, when she slips back into consciousness, a serious crick in her back and a mortal wound in her pride.

“Back off, Sawyer,” she growls and Maggie jumps up out of her concerned crouch like she’s been burned.

But she recovers her vague smile as time for class runs out, as Professor J’onzz gives them their assignment for next session, as everyone starts filing out and Maggie just holds Alex’s eyes steadily with hers.

“See you around, Danvers,” she says, and god, Alex hopes so.

Hi I’m really enjoying your stories and it’s making this hiatus so much more bearable. I have a prompt. How about Maggie and Alex keep running into Maggie’s exes and they’re always flirtatious with Maggie and always say her name breathlessly like “Hi Maggie.” And Alex gets super jealous and it just makes her want to remind Maggie that she is hers and only hers. Idk. ;)

^^ prompt above from @blueskyanddryland

She doesn’t think much about Darla being Maggie’s ex, except for that little squirming flame of jealousy every single time she hears Darla speaking English.

So okay, maybe she thinks about it a lot. But at least Darla doesn’t flirt with Maggie like the others do.

Because there do seem to be others.

A lot of others.

Maggie insists that they’re not all exes, not exactly. She doesn’t elaborate, she just drinks a little deeper and shakes her head, and Alex is okay with that for now.

She even finds it funny, sometimes.

“Hi, Maggie,” the Bravak woman can barely force out of her breathless lips and heady eyes.

“Nice to meet you,” Alex offers brightly before Maggie can respond, tossing her arm around Maggie’s shoulders and pulling her slightly closer. “Agent Alex Danvers, FBI.”

She suppresses a smirk as the poor woman wilts and Maggie arches an eyebrow at her.

“Hi Maggie,” the brunette with the horizontally closing eyelids and great cleavage swoons, and Alex acts like she doesn’t hear her, and Alex pulls Maggie into a deep, deep kiss.

“Someone a little jealous, babe?” Maggie asks her finally, after Alex slipped her arms around Maggie’s waist and kissed the side of her neck when the girl with the fantastic dragon tattoo dipping from her collarbone ever lower, lower, lower, offered to buy Maggie a drink, offered to go someplace to get reacquainted.

“Jealous? Pfft, no. Why would I be jealous?” She pulls Maggie closer by her belt loops, dips down for a searing kiss.

Maggie swoons into the embrace and a swell of pride swoops through Alex’s chest.
“I think I like you jealous.”

“I think I like you mine.”

“Well that’s convenient. Because I am all yours, Alex Danvers.”

Can you fic Alex telling Winn about her and Maggie or him slowly piecing it together

He’s noticed that she’s happier, and he’s noticed that she threatens him less. He’s noticed that she smiles more, sighs contentedly more. Checks her phone more.

And he’s noticed that she’s been seeing a lot more of her cop friend.

Which wouldn’t be totally unusual, maybe, if he’d ever known Alex Danvers to have friends. Aside from the Superfriends. But they kind of came from Kara, and this Maggie person? It it’s clear that she was all Alex’s.

He watches the way Alex blushes every time Maggie walks into the room, and he arches an eyebrow but says nothing.

He sees the way Alex bends Maggie over the pool table, allegedly to show her the proper way to hold her cue, sees the way their bodies connect, the way Maggie melts back into Alex’s thighs, into her stomach, into her arms.

He observes the way Kara watches them laugh together with a small smile on her lips and slightly narrowed eyes, like she’s assessing, like she’s making sure of something, like she’s evaluating.

He hears the breathless way Alex picks up her phone when the caller ID reads “Sawyer,” and he hears the way she screams Maggie’s name over the comm when she was shot in the leg; he hears the way Alex throws herself into the line of fire to get Maggie to safety; sees the way she hovers over her, caring for her, fingers gentle, eyes calm, eyes terrified, back in the DEO med bay; hears the softness in her voice as she stitches Maggie up, as she tells her what a great job she did in the field, and he knows the gentleness, the tenderness, he catches have little, or maybe even nothing, to do with the fact that Maggie got shot because she dove in front of Kara.

“Hey, Alex,” he calls to her as she’s heading out later that night, rushing, rushing as she’s never rushed to leave work before, because now, he thinks, she has someone to go home to.

“Yeah.”

“Anything you wanna tell me?”

“The hell are you talking about, Winn?”

“Alex. How’s Maggie?”

He stands and he examines her face, assesses the probability of getting slammed up into a wall and threatened with her index finger again. He judges the situation safe, and he reaches out to hold her arms with his hands.

“Alex. She seems like a really great girl. She clearly likes you, she clearly has no problem protecting Kara, she… Alex, I’m gonna say it once and then we’re gonna forget I ever said anything, okay? I love you. I love you, and if you love Maggie, if you love girls, then the only thing that’s gonna change between us is I’m gonna make you come to me for dating advice.”

“Pfft, please, like you would have anything useful – “

“Alex.”

“I love you too. IT geek.”

“Bioengineering nerd. Ow!”

“Well, you said you didn’t want anything to change between us.”

“… touché Danvers. Touché.”

Chapter Summary

anonymous asked:

So, I happen to believe Alex is a top and Maggie is a bottom. BUT, not until Alex got confident in being intimate with Maggie. But when she gets comfortable, she legit pounces and Maggie is all hot and bothered and confused. (fic request)

YES. Firm belief that they’re both switches, that Maggie loves topping Alex and Alex loves being topped but Maggie has never gotten enough attention/devotion from her past lovers to be able to really bottom before, and when Alex gets confident oh my god Maggie loves it because she’s never felt cared for like this and I live for that headcanon because women of color are not doted on enough and Alex would dote on her so much and she deserves it so much and JUST.

She loves the way Alex whimpers underneath her and she loves the way this badass, full body-armor, take-no-prisoners DEO agent comes completely undone in her hands, under her tongue, in her arms, under her body.

She loves it, and she couldn’t ask for anything more, because loving Alex Danvers, making love to Alex Danvers? Loving Alex, making love to her, is like nothing she’s ever done before.

And she can’t imagine anything better.

Until Alex comes home and Maggie glances over her shoulder with a grin, calling “hey babe!” over the sound of sizzling quesadillas and bubbling rice.

She forgets, momentarily, that she’s wearing nothing but a black bra, one of Alex’s old flannels – slightly too big for her, and tied up at her waist because of it – and black boy shorts.

She forgets, that is, until Alex freezes, until Alex rips off her jacket, tosses down her gun, crosses to the kitchen in a single stride, and pounces.

Maggie gasps and Maggie splutters and Maggie melts into Alex’s kiss, into Alex’s hands, which wrap around her desperately, which reach around her body to turn off the burners, which pause, which freeze, as Alex pulls back, lips already swollen, hair already mussed from Maggie throwing her arms over Alex’s shoulders, already tangling her hands in her hair.

“This okay?” Alex asks raggedly, chest heaving and something almost feral in her gaze that makes Maggie’s knees weak, that makes Maggie feel surrounded, and feeling surrounded has never felt so… safe.

“More than okay,” Maggie rasps, and Alex swallows her next whine with her lips as her hands run under Maggie’s ass, brace on Maggie’s thighs, scoop her up like she weighs nothing.
She carries her away from the stove, away from the kitchen, into the bedroom, Maggie’s elbows over Alex’s shoulders, legs wrapped around her waist, as Maggie kisses her to replace the oxygen she’s losing, she kisses her to keep something on the ground, her fingers woven into Alex’s short hair and her lungs screaming for oxygen but her lips screaming for more first.

More of this, more of Alex, and Alex obliges, laying her down gently on the bed, cushioning her head with her hand, cushioning her heart with her eyes and her nerves with her smile.

“You’re beautiful, Maggie. You are so, so beautiful.”

Maggie swallows tears and she swallows confusion, because Alex is the beautiful one, mussed hair hanging down from her face like that, lips swollen like that, eyes burning like that; because Alex is the beautiful one, and no one’s ever… Maggie doesn’t get to be cared for like this, Maggie doesn’t get to be topped.

But Alex is asking, now, to top her, asking her “You okay, babe? Is this too much? Is this… not something you want? Or not right now, or – “ and Maggie is pulling Alex’s face down to hers to answer her questions, but Alex pulls back again because she has more.

“Maggie, I wanna make love to you, I want… I wanna fuck you, I… I wanna make you feel so good, babe, I… can I? Do you want me… to?”

Maggie swallows tears again because there will be time for them later, and she bites her lip, and she nods, but it’s not enough assurance for Alex, because god she must look scared, but she’s not, she’s just overwhelmed because can someone – can Alex – really want her this much, love her this much?

So she lets out a shaky breath and she gives Alex all the affirmations she’s looking for. “Alex, yeah. Yes, I want… I want you, I want… fuck me, Alex. Please.”

She gasps and she trembles as Alex takes off her clothes, as Alex kisses every birth mark and every scar, as Alex takes a moment to tickle that spot on her side that always makes her writhe, that always makes her laugh.

She screams when Alex slips inside her and she breathes out an affectionate laugh when Alex freezes with wide eyes, terrified that she’d hurt her, but no, no, she’d done the opposite; she scratches at Alex’s back with her nails and when Alex groans, when Alex rasps “that’s right, babe, you enjoy yourself” in her ear, when Alex fucks her harder the louder she begs, tears sting Maggie’s eyes and Alex waits again, but Maggie grabs her closer, Maggie shakes her head, and as Alex kisses the tear that leaks out of her eye, Maggie whispers “Good tears, Al. Please don’t stop. Unless you want to. Please?”

So Alex doesn’t stop.

Alex doesn’t stop biting her lip and growling slightly, doesn’t stop watching Maggie’s face as she fucks her, as Maggie unravels and Maggie cums because Maggie is wrecked and Alex watches her like she’s the most beautiful thing she’s ever seen, because she is, she is, she is.

And when Alex gathers her into her arms and presses soft kisses to her temples, to her hair, to her tear tracks, Maggie feels more home than she ever has before.

Chapter Summary

anonymous asked:

Could you please write a small piece with Maggie cuddling Alex after roleplay/bdsm in general? It's such an important part of some kinks, like not necessarily the sex itself but just maggie comforting her sub and giving her lots of love

Alex’s body is still shaking and her breath is still uneven, and Maggie is not much better off. They’re both covered in a thin sheen of sweat, and Maggie swears she pulled a muscle somehow, but she fumbles down to the edge of the bed – to where Alex had kicked the covers nearly clean off as she was writhing, as she was whimpering, as she was begging, as she was screaming for Maggie not to stop, for Maggie to fuck her harder, please, please, please – and pulls the sheets back over Alex’s body with a shaky hand.

Alex sighs and shifts into the warmth of the blanket, into the warmth of Maggie’s body, wearing only her harness, her strapon that’s still soaked with Alex’s fluids.

“Come here, babygirl,” Maggie whispers, but it has none of the commanding tone she’d been using mere minutes before; none of the edge and none of the gruffness and none of the heat; this time, only softness, only warmth. Only love.

Alex complies as best she can with her hands cuffed above her head, and Maggie reaches up to unclasp them for her, her eyes soft and her hands careful and her breath slowly evening out.

“I got you, babe,” she tells her as she takes both of Alex’s hands into her own, inspecting her reddened wrists with careful eyes and tender fingertips, bringing her lips to the undersides of her wrists, to each of her veins, to each of her bones, to every centimeter of her exposed skin.

Alex watches Maggie examining her, watches Maggie kissing her, caressing her, with a limp body and glazed eyes and a nervous thrumming in her heart.

“You love me, Mags?” she wants to know, she needs to know, because she thinks she does, Maggie acts like she does, but she needs to hear it, needs to be told it, needs it like she needs the water the Maggie is reaching across to the bedside table to give her.

“Alex,” Maggie whispers, smoothing a sweaty layer of Alex’s hair off her forehead as Alex drinks deeply, eyes wide and on Maggie. “Yes, babe, I love you so much. I love you, I respect you, I would never ever hurt you, I – “

“Well. Maybe not never ever.” Alex cocks an eyebrow and winks and Maggie looks down and chuckles and shakes her head.

“I love you, Al. I would never… I would never do this with you if I didn’t. Can I um… do you want me – would you let me hold you?”
Alex blushes and Alex beams and Alex sets down the glass and crawls into Maggie’s grateful arms. She settles with her head on Maggie’s chest, Maggie’s arm under her neck, wrapped around her body, holding her close, her other hand running her fingers through Alex’s hair, running gentle patterns over Alex’s cheeks, her nose, her forehead, her chin, her lips.

“You know you’re perfect, right, Alex? I mean…” She stares up at the ceiling as she talks, but all she can see is Alex’s smile, all she can hear is Alex’s laugh, all she can feel is Alex’s warm body huddled close into hers. “I can’t imagine being happier than I am when I’m with you. You know? And I didn’t… I didn’t know I could love someone like I love you. You… you know that, right? Even when we…”

“Even when you cuff me to the bed and flip me over and smack my ass and fuck me to within an inch of my sanity?”

“Well, someone’s lesbian vocabulary is growing.”

“I have an excellent teacher.”

Maggie chuckles and kisses the top of Alex’s head, kisses Alex’s forehead, her nose, when Alex shifts so she’s looking up into Maggie’s eyes.

Maggie smile and answers the question before it can even reach Alex’s swollen lips.

“I love you, babygirl. I love you, and I’ve got you, and I cherish you, and I’m not going anywhere.”

Alex shivers happily and beams a satisfied smile before burrowing back into Maggie’s body, sighing in perfect security, in perfect contentment, in perfect… well, perfection.

Chapter Summary

anonymous asked:

I've always thought that if Maggie and Alex were at Hogwarts they'd be on rival quidditch teams as seekers, and they'd always butt heads (with underlying sexual tension when the other said "make me" or "try me") but one game Maggie would get knocked off her broom, and Alex doesn't know why but suddenly she's flying towards Maggie, leaping off her broom, grabbing her, and flipping them over so she takes the full force of the fall. Then there's confusion and feelings and Kara being a Little Shit™

“Who died and gave you the right to unchallenged ownership of this side of the lake, Danvers?”

“Yeah, well maybe it’s time we stop building up the divide between the Houses and focus on sharing the damn shade, huh?”

Alex scoffs and Alex tosses her hands behind her back like she’s never heard something so ridiculous.

“Outta the way, Sawyer.”

“What’re you gonna do, make me?”

Maggie is staring up into her eyes and that irritatively sweet-faced Gryffindor she’s always hanging around with – that her sister is always hanging around with – is stepping forward with fire in his eyes and tension in his muscles, ignoring the constantly chattering Ravenclaw boy that’s tugging at his shirt and muttering “Uh, Olsen, maybe we better let the girls sort this out on their own, huh?”

Alex ignores them and steps closer into Maggie’s space and immediately regrets it, because she could drown in Maggie’s eyes and shit she was supposed to have a comeback by now.

“Try me.”

Not her best work, but it’ll do, she thinks, until Maggie just smirks and steps back and strolls off toward Olsen and Schott.

“See you around, Danvers,” she says, and Alex pretends she doesn’t feel the loss of Maggie’s warmth next to her body.
She pretends because she hates her, because sure she’s in her sister’s year and they’re in the same House and Kara swears she’s really nice, Alex, I don’t understand why the two of you are fighting all the time but Maggie’s got that smirk and that swagger and she’s always just ahead of Alex in DADA and Potions, and that is unacceptable and she will kick her ass today at Quidditch. She will, she has to, because then the heat in her core will be about winning, about being maybe, just maybe, good enough to have Eliza write to tell her she’s proud of her for once, not about Maggie’s toughness or her kindness to Kara or the way she defends the kids who get picked on or the way her arm muscles ripple when she slips off her robes and only wears a Muggle tank top in the Great Hall…

But they’re in the air, far above the screaming crowd, and Alex is squinting through the nearly torrential rain for the Snitch, and she has to catch it first because she has to win, even if Eliza will somehow find a way to be disappointed because how could you take pleasure in beating your sister’s House?

She’s got half an ear keyed to Willis’s commentary keeping score blow, and she’s half an eye on Maggie, flying the same routine on the other side of the pitch, until suddenly she’s not.

Alex doesn’t know if it was a bludger or a particularly rough wind current or gust of rain in her face, but whatever the reason, Maggie is plummeting fast to the ground, and Alex is speeding across the pitch faster than she’s ever chased after the Snitch, and half the crowd is screaming because they think Alex has spotted the damn insignificant ball, and the other half is screaming because they’re watching Maggie fall, and Alex isn’t screaming because she’s sticking her tongue out in concentration, in desperation, and she’s maneuvering her broom so she’s flying right under the path of Maggie’s fall and Alex is kicking away her broom and cradling the other girl in her arms so that when they hit the ground moments later, Alex is the one whose bones crack, Alex is the one who absorbs the heaviest blows, Alex is the one who’s keeping Maggie safe.

“Why would you do that for me?” Maggie croaks when Alex finally comes to, blinking in the dim light of the hospital wing, and it takes Alex a moment to realize that the fingers stroking the back of her aching hand aren’t Kara’s, but Maggie’s, because Kara is pacing the back of the room with wide eyes and frazzled hair and disheveled robes that make Maggie’s muddy ones seem neat.

“Kara,” Alex ignores the question, and Kara groans in relief.

“Well, you’d better answer the girl’s question, Alex, and you’d better do it with a kiss and an I’m sorry Kara, you were right, Kara, she really is lovely Kara, because I swear Alex if you did that for her and you don’t like her I will personally force the Sorting Hat to reverse its decision and put you in Gryffindor.”

“Got all your feelings out now, Little Danvers? Feeling better?”

“Actually, yes. Now, Alex?”

“Sawyer, uh… maybe we can talk about it next Hogsmeade weekend? Or something? You know, after my bones don’t feel all fused together.”

Maggie looks down and smiles and squeezes Alex’s hand gently, both of them trying to ignore a very giddily dancing Kara Danvers in the background.

“You’re on, Danvers. You’re on.”
Alex shakes him off the first time, nods him away with a quirk of her eyebrow and a cool I’m all set, thanks, before taking another swig of her beer, eyes returning to the bar disinterestedly instead of on the half-amused, half-affronted looking man who’d just offered her a drink and a time that’ll put a smile on that pretty face.

He scoffs and he stalks away, shaking his head and running his hand over his chin, and the girl with the dimples and leather jacket alone at the corner of the bar stiffens, watches him with careful eyes, sips her bourbon slowly. Makes a note to herself to keep an eye on the gorgeous short-haired woman nursing a beer like she’s wishing for ten more, because if Maggie knows one thing, she knows men in bars, and this guy will be back.

He proves her right a few minutes later, after a raucous conversation at a booth with his buddies, after another shot or two. He saunters up to the woman with the distant eyes again, and she tenses, but it’s subtle, it’s simple, it’s collected. It’s brave. But it’s also tired.

She can’t hear what he tells her, but she catches the woman’s response – no, nothing hurt, and before you can say it, no, I didn’t fall from heaven, but if I did, I’m fairly certain I’d be in a morgue instead of this bar, and also an alien – and Maggie snorts and smirks into her drink before rising halfway up, because the guy is pissed, but the woman just levels an even stare at him and if he expected any resistance from her, it wasn’t this kind of devil-may-care resistance. He splutters and he mutters about not knowing how to take a damn compliment and he ambles back to his friends.

The woman rolls her eyes and shakes her head and orders another beer.

By the third time the same guy comes up to her, she’s irritated and she’s flustered because god didn’t anyone ever teach him the meaning of no, but mostly she’s just tired, because the day she had, all she’d wanted was a drink in a place that wasn’t her apartment, because her apartment was empty of everything except her thoughts, except her memories, except the broken screams she’d heard that day, the ones she’d failed to stop; the ones she’d failed to save.

Alex almost groans aloud when her peripheral vision picks up the man with a lustful blaze in his eyes and fucking her on his mind, but she swallows it because she doesn’t want a confrontation, she can’t do another confrontation, not today.

But before whatever stupid, misogynist pickup line he’s cooked up this time can cross his lips, a warm, gentle arm, touching her but only barely, only just, is slipping around her shoulders, and she starts to jump, starts to go for the gun in her waistband, but the voice that goes with gentle arm stills her fear somehow.

“Aw babe, is this a friend of yours?”

Maggie doesn’t wait for a very baffled Alex to respond before putting her free hand out to the man who’d been bothering her all night.

“Hi, I’m Maggie, this beauty’s girlfriend. And you are?”

Her voice is honey and her smile is dimpled but her eyes are fire and her grip must be out of this world, because Alex swears she sees the man flinch.

He mutters something indistinguishable and he glares and he wrenches his hand out of this Maggie woman’s grasp and they both watch him stalk away, watch his shake his head and watch him sullenly collapse in the booth with his friends as they slap him on the back, as they laugh heartily and entirely at his expense.

As soon as eyes leave them, Maggie takes her arm away from Alex’s shoulders apologetically.

“Sorry about that,” she says gingerly, biting her bottom lip slightly, her eyes examining Alex’s nervously.

“No, you uh… you saved me. My hero.”

Maggie can’t quite read the woman’s face – a mix of grateful and resentful and tired with just a pinch, just a hope, of, maybe, something else, something more— but she definitely feels her own face getting hot.

“Well, the city’s already got one of those.” She points to the bar screens absently and the woman glances up at the news coverage of Supergirl saving a bus full of children from a crash with pursed lips, a raised eyebrow, and something that looks, strangely, almost like pride in her eyes. And that exhaustion again.

“Yeah. Yeah, it does.” The woman drinks deeply and Maggie tilts her head, watching her closely.

“Danvers. Alex Danvers, FBI,” she says suddenly, and Maggie grins slightly.

“Maggie Sawyer, NCPD. Pleasure to meet you, Danvers, Alex Danvers, FBI.”

Alex rolls her eyes but her lips are smiling and Maggie decides she’s never seen anything more beautiful.

“Why’d you do that for me? With that guy back there?”

“What can I say, I can’t resist offering my services when a beautiful woman’s in need.”

Alex looks down and Alex pffts and her ears turn crimson and she shakes her head but then she looks up, then her eyes flicker down to Maggie’s lips, and then Maggie gulps and then Alex grins a little lopsidedly, a little cockily but a little sheepishly.

“That how it is, Sawyer?”

“Only if that’s how you want it to be, Danvers.”

Alex bites the inside of her cheek as some of the tension melts away from her shoulders, as Maggie’s gentle, warm, safe gaze washes over her and sends heat pooling straight into her core, sends renewed energy straight through her entire body, sends hope through her again after an utterly hopeless day.

“You wanna get outta here?”

“I know a place with a great pool table.”

“You’re on.”

Chapter Summary

anonymous asked:

alex loves giving neck kisses

She hasn’t learned yet how to not leave hickeys, and Maggie doesn’t really care.

At all.

Because when Alex’s lips leave hers, she always whines, she always moans, she always grabs at her in protest.

Until, that is, Alex’s lips travel down her jawline, to her earlobe – which always makes her scream and Alex chuckle softly, and, lately, breathe the beginnings of three word sentences into her ear – down lower until she’s pressing open mouthed kisses to Maggie’s throat, to her neck, one hand tangled in Maggie’s hair, the other pulling her body closer, pulling her body deeper.

Pausing to look up at Maggie, pausing to make sure, pausing to get the affirmation she needs to keep going – and receiving it, receiving it, because Maggie’s chest is heaving and Alex might love kissing her neck but Maggie loves being kissed like this – Alex never stops with her lips.

Her tongue always makes Maggie gasp and tug at her hair and scream her name, and the way Maggie’s knees go weak and the way she needs Alex to hold her up never fails to encourage Alex to pull back again, to check again, to receive renewed permission, and, getting it in the form of desperate nods and breathless, incoherent words, Alex nips and Alex sucks and Alex licks and Alex smiles into Maggie’s neck because god does this feel like home.
“Where have you been? I had this whole thing where I was gonna build us a house, but I don’t build houses, because I’m a surgeon!” Meredith Grey is ranting on their TV screen, and Maggie chuckles affectionately at the scene she knows all too well.

Maggie feels Alex’s body tense throughout the scene, and she furrows her brow and glances at her, and as Meredith tells Derek fiercely that she believes they can be extraordinary together, rather than ordinary apart, Maggie turns to look at Alex to find her eyes flooded with tears and her jaw set with effort.

“Babe. Are you crying?” she asks as the couple on screen kiss.

“Me? Pfft. No. To this? No, absolutely not. I’ve got eye allergies.”

“Eye allergies that somehow never bother you except when romantic overtures are happening on TV?”

“Pfft.”

“Do you wanna be extraordinary together rather than ordinary apart, babe?”

“Thought we already were.”

“Oh, we are. Just checking. Just checking.”

i need sanvers slow dancing in the kitchen at night

Maggie doesn’t hear Alex come in.

As many times as Alex tells her it’s okay, she can play her music as loud as she wants, on as many speakers as she wants, Maggie still insists on listening with her headphones, even when she’s alone.

When you’re trying to listen to a strange combination of Lauryn Hill and Tegan and Sara growing up in a house as chaotic as mine, you get used to the headphones, Danvers.

So she doesn’t notice Alex walk in, because she’s too busy absently swaying her hips in time to whatever she’s got playing in those headphones, half humming and half singing under her breath, too busy spicing Alex’s favorite chili, too busy checking on the rice, too busy standing on her tip toes, her henley lifting all the way up her abs with her effort, trying to get at Alex’s favorite wine glasses.

Alex smiles and Alex fights to inexplicable urge to both laugh and cry, and Alex strides forward, putting a hand on the bare skin of Maggie’s torso to steady her, grabbing two glasses with the other easily.

Maggie jumps in surprise for a moment but then she melts, back into Alex’s arms, into Alex’s body, pulling her hand fully around her waist and reaching for her other so Alex is completely surrounding her from behind.

She lets her head drop back on Alex’s shoulder, turning to kiss her neck, and Alex moans out a sigh.

“Welcome home, babe,” Maggie whispers as Alex pulls her closer, as she keeps moving in time with her headphones, as she keeps swaying her hips and pushing her ass back slightly into Alex.

Alex splutters and Alex’s fingers tighten around her body and Maggie lifts her hand up behind her to run her fingers through Alex’s hair, down Alex’s neck, before turning around in Alex’s arms, so they’re chest to chest, mouth to move. Maggie tip toes so she can press a kiss to Alex’s lips as she wraps her arms around her neck, letting her elbows rest on Alex’s steady shoulders as she moves, moves, moves, and cajoles Alex into moving with her.

Alex turns the flames on the stove down before she runs a hand over Maggie’s hair, settles her hands on Maggie’s waist.

“What’re we dancing to?” she asks softly, and Maggie inclines her ear toward Alex, who takes the hint and takes out one of Maggie’s earpods and puts it into her own.
“Coldplay, babe?” she teases, and Maggie scoffs.

“I don’t mock you for that punk rock phase Kara keeps telling me about.”

But the teasing only makes them pull closer; the sharing of the rhythm only makes their heartbeats more in sync; the way the song preaches magic and wanting no else one but you makes Alex blush and Maggie bite her lip before she leans up on her tip toes again, to kiss her again, and their feet keep them rotating in a circle, keep them slow dancing, keep them on the cloud they’re floating on, Maggie’s arms dangling off Alex’s shoulders, curling back to tangle in her hair as they kiss and they dance, and they kiss and they dance, until Maggie’s calves are nearly cramped and Alex is dizzy and they giggle into each other’s mouths because the next song on shuffle is an old school Linkin Park number and it puts something of a damper on the slow dancing idea.

“You’re the most beautiful thing I’ve ever come home to,” Alex tells her, and tears sting Maggie’s eyes.

“Same, Danvers. Same.”

kara will be the annoying little sister that wants to do everything her older sister do. she'll be w/ alex and maggie and be like 'you are holding hands? i want to hold hands too' you would think she'd grab alex's hand but she gets maggie bc she doesnt want her to feel left out bc shes like that. maggie will adopt her, other couples have puppies, she and alex have kara.

Maggie sits hesitantly, nervously, on the edge of the couch, sandwiching Alex between her and Kara. It’s her first movie night with the girls, and though the invitation had come from Kara, she can’t quite shake the feeling that she’s intruding.

But Kara smiles and tosses a blanket over all three of them, so Maggie scoots closer and relaxes into Alex’s shoulder; she grins as she hears Kara shifting and doing the same on Alex’s other shoulder, and doesn’t think much of it.

She forgets that Kara has x-ray vision when she slips her hand onto Alex’s thigh under the blankets, finds Alex’s hand, links her fingers through Alex’s, and smiles as Alex sighs contentedly.

“Alex,” Kara whispers, except Kara’s whisper is more of a whisper-shout. “Are you guys holding hands? Can I hold your hand, too?”

Alex furrows her brow and looks at her sideways, but she offers her free hand to Kara as Maggie chuckles.

It happens again when they’re making dinner together the next week.

“Mm, Alex, babe, c’mere, you have to try this, Kara and I came up with the perfect amount of chocolateyness – ”

Alex slips into the kitchen and obediently opens her mouth and moans happily as Maggie lets her close her lips around the spoon she’s offering.

“Mmm, it’s amazing, you should have some, too,” Alex flirts, drawing Maggie closer by the hips and leaning down for an open-mouthed kiss.

They’re interrupted by a firm tap on Maggie’s shoulder and a glasses-adjusting, furrow-browed Kara. “I get to try some, too!”

“Not off my mouth you don’t, Little Danvers – here, wanna finish off this spoon?”

It happens again at the park, when they’re tossing around a football and Maggie takes Alex down and their laughter becomes a wrestling match, and Kara hovers over them reminding them that she’s really good at wrestling and can’t she play, too.
Maggie is a detective, and as she looks up at Kara’s pouting face with laughter still on her own lips, she detects.

So the next time they’re cuddling at movie night, Maggie makes sure that one of Alex’s arms is around her shoulders, and the other is around Kara’s.

The next time the three of them are walking together, she grabs the hands of both Danvers sisters, swinging her arm back and forth amiably with Kara and interlacing fingers and flirting with thumbs and pinkies and soft security with Alex.

The next time she wants to feed Alex something, she makes sure she offers to Kara first, so Kara will be distracted by the food while Maggie takes her time licking it off of Alex’s lips.

The next time she buys Alex a donut from that tiny food truck on the corner, she buys Kara five.

The next time they’re playing around in the park and Maggie feels like chasing Alex to the ground in a fit of shrieks and giggles that has J’onn pretending not to smile and James and Winn cheering her on like little kids at a soccer game, she knows she’ll have an easier time of it, because Kara is perpetually invited to help.

Because the Danvers sisters are a package deal; and Maggie wouldn’t have it any other way.

Chapter Summary

Alex wants Maggie to Teach Her™

I have been wanting to do this for so long: for those of you who don’t automatically get the reference, or want a refresher, this little pre-Sanvers minific is based on a scene from Grey’s Anatomy.

There’s a knock on the door – just two soft, nervous raps – and Maggie, in a grey tee and black sweats, trudges to answer, befuddled at the idea of company at this hour.

She opens the door and it’s Alex, Alex, fuck, the woman she’s been so desperately trying not to sleep with, the woman who’s just coming out, who has too much to learn, who’s too wide-eyed and vulnerable to be with someone like Maggie.

But before Maggie can even open her mouth – hell, before Maggie can even properly process – Alex is speaking.

“You saved her life. That woman, you ran into that warehouse and you saved her life, she’s alive.”

Maggie’s jaw is open and she can barely breathe, let alone speak, so she says nothing, and for a moment, Alex doesn’t either. Until Alex is stepping past Maggie’s stunned body, side-stepping her and walking a few paces into her living room before turning, before breathing, before sighing, before doing that nervous little thing she does with her hands, before speaking again.

“I respect you. As a woman. As a cop, as someone who’s not fresh off the gay boat, I respect you.”

Maggie’s door is still open and her jaw is still open and her eyes are even more open when Alex shrugs her jacket to the ground with a deep breath and a nervous demand.

“So… teach me.”

“What’re you doin – ” Maggie tries to splutter, Maggie tries to protest, because Alex is leaning over to balance on the couch with one hand and taking off her shoes with the other. “Don’t do that. Stop.”

But even as she slips off her shoe, Alex doesn’t take her wide, eager eyes off Maggie’s face. “Teach me,” she says again, her voice so much smaller than it ever is in the field.

Maggie exhales harshly and shuts her front door with a snap and turns back to Alex, Alex, who’s working on her other shoe now, still staring at her face.

“Stop,” Maggie pleads, not because she doesn’t want Alex – god, she does, and Alex knows, because they’ve talked about it, but she also knows that she’s fresh off the boat, that those relationships never work out.
That she has so much to learn. Which is apparently why she’s here, because she says it again. “Teach me.”

“We can’t do this, you’re just coming out, and and and I wanna do what’s best for you, and I… I’m your friend.”

“So,” Alex rebuts, fingerling the hem of her purple sweater. “Teach me.” She tugs her sweater off and her camisole is lacy and Maggie groans with frustrated need and puts her hand on her own face in a desperate attempt to regain some semblance of self control.

“Na, Alex.”

“Teach me,” Alex says again, tossing her sweater down with deliberation, swiping the hair out of her face.

Maggie’s hands are on her hips and she’s trying to stare at the ground, just the ground, between them, but Alex is sighing and Alex is breathing “Teach me” again, and she’s tugging her camisole off now and her bra is some kind of maroon and her hair is swept across her face and she sighs with a small, insecure tremble in her voice.

“Come on, am I really so bad?” She glances down at her own body, stares across at Maggie’s wrecked face, stares because they’re grown women and they want each other and sure Maggie’s trying to do the right thing but doesn’t Alex get a say in defining what’s right for her and god, no, she’s not bad at all, quite the opposite, she’s perfect.

“No. I am,” Maggie rasps solemnly, because maybe it’s against her better judgement but god, we should kiss the girls we want to kiss, and Maggie just wants to kiss Alex, and Alex’s eyes are wide, are scared, are hopeful as Maggie strides forward to close the gap between them, pulling Alex down into a kiss with her hands under her hair on either side of her face, and Alex is swooning and Alex is wrapping her arms around Maggie’s shoulders and Maggie intends to fulfill Alex’s every wish, starting with teaching her everything she’s ever learned about making a woman happy.
anonymous asked:

think about it though, like some people put their jerseys on the gf’s if Maggie let Alex use her jacket, and it fits better on alex!!

“You’re cold.”

“I am not.”

“Alex. You can still be a badass DEO agent and admit that you’re cold.”

“Pfft, no, I – “

“Here.”

“Maggie, what’re you – “

“Take it, Danvers.”

“Maggie, no, I’m not gonna take your jacket, then you’ll be cold – “

“Oh, so you are cold.”

“Pfft, I – “

“I grew up in Blue Springs, you grew up in Midvale. Our definitions of cold are very different. Just put it on. Please?”

“Fine.”

“Oh.”

“What?”

“Nothing.”

“Sawyer, what.”

“Nothing, you just… it fits you better than it fits me.”

“Mmm. It’s comfy, too.”

“You getting soft on me, Sawyer?”
“Every time, Danvers.”

anonymous asked:

Prompt: Maggie gets protective over Kara and when Kara asks why Meggie goes like "You're my girlfriend's little sister. So it's like I'm your big sister for extension..."

Kara’s had one of those roll up my sleeves and chug the whole glass because if I’m gonna get drunk, I’m gonna get drunk hard drinks, and she’s squinting cock-eyed in a second, a permanently dazed grin on her face.

She’s slurring and she’s laughing and she’s leaning across the booth into Maggie because I have to tell you a secret – don’t worry, it’s not a bad secret, it’s a good secret – my sister’s never had this many feelings for anyone before like she has about you – and Maggie’s grinning and telling Kara to stay put, don’t fly off anywhere Little Danvers, I’m just gonna get you some water, I’ll be right back and Kara is calling out for potstickers, too, and Maggie’s chuckling and shaking her head with M’gann affectionately and then she’s turning and reaching for her gun because then something is wrong.

Because there a couple of hulk-esque guys Maggie’s never seen before leering over Kara’s table, and Kara is smiling and Kara is laughing and Kara is slurring because Kara believes the best in everyone and Kara is not used to being drunk.

She’s back across the bar faster than Barry Allen could have been, and she’s slipping her tiny body between Kara and the men looking down at her like they’ve just been served dessert, and she’s flashing her badge and she’s flashing her gun and she’s if you’re not away from this girl and out of this bar in the next ten seconds I swear to god you will find out why I have the highest marksmenship ratings of anyone in my precinct and just how good being on the science division makes me at knowing how to hide bodies.

And they’re scampering and Kara’s slapping her thigh laughing and she’s leaning across the table again as Maggie thuds down and she’s patting an uncoordinated hand on Maggie’s shoulder and she wants to know those guys were so much bigger than you, Maggie, they were like giants and you’re like a tiny, tiny little ant or something, but you made them run away – it was funny, how they ran away – why did you do that for me? Giants! Ants!

Maggie shakes her head and sighs and puts her hand on Kara’s forearm and gives her the only explanation that makes sense, one that she hopes she’ll remember in the morning: You’re my girlfriend’s kid sister, Kara. So it’s like I’m your big sister by extension. There isn’t anything I wouldn’t do for you.

Kara’s uninhibited smile lights up the room just before her head lolls back and she passes out on her own shoulder, muttering something about gotta tell Alex this one’s a keeper, so tiny though, and I get two big sisters now.

Chapter Summary

anonymous asked:

alex wants to kiss all the time

Maggie’s on the job and she’s got her game face on and the officers in her unit are milling around the scene exactly how she taught them, reporting exactly as she prefers, being exactly as meticulous as she’s been training them to be.

And then Alex Danvers saunters in and asks her a question with her eyes and pulls her in for a searing kiss.

“Alex!” she chides, but her smile is growing along with her blush because most of her guys are cheering and the ones who aren’t are snickering and the one who’s not doing either she makes a note of and she’ll deal with his ass later.

She’s making dinner and Alex keeps sighing and looking up at her and Maggie can’t help but be reminded of Kara, but she puts the thought of Alex’s kid sister out of her mind immediately because Alex suddenly knows what to do with her boredom, and she’s unbuttoning her shirt and Maggie is gulping and Alex is biting her lip and Maggie is kissing her because dinner can burn, dinner can wait, but apparently Alex can’t, and neither, quite frankly, can Maggie.

She’s in the DEO and she’s going over schematics to a new body armor design for the NCPD with Winn and Alex pokes her head in and puts on her innocent face, her innocent voice, but Maggie knows better and so does Winn, because the moment Maggie excuses herself and slips out of the room, Winn hears the distinctive sound of Maggie’s body being pushed against the wall, Maggie’s breath leaving her body in a hiss because Alex’s lips are warm and Alex’s lips are perfect and Winn might as well continue the modifications on his own because this will probably take a while.

She’s in bed and she’s reading and Alex is next to her and Alex is falling asleep, but Alex’s groggy hand is still sweeping for Maggie’s book, is still trying to block the words from her sight. “You want something, babygirl?” Maggie asks, her smile growing, and Alex gestures sleepily for her to lay down, for her to come closer, because she’s sleepy and she wants love and she wants kisses and my god she never thought she’d crave any kind of intimacy at all and now all she ever wants is kisses from Maggie Sawyer.

And she smiles, because that’s exactly what she gets.

Chapter Summary

biisabellelightwood asked:

How about Alex having a "Red" moment one time during sex and Maggie immediately stopping and taking care of her. Maybe even through a semi "drop"
Because not only is consent sexy, but also SUPER important.

She’s naked and she’s on her stomach and she’s soaking wet and her wrists are sore from writhing around so much in Maggie’s handcuffs and she doesn’t quite understand why, but she loves it; just like she loves the way Maggie is moaning raggedly as she holds Alex’s arms down above her head, as she slams her strapon in and out of Alex’s body harder, faster, harder, faster.

“Maggie,” Alex half gasps and half screams, and Maggie’s hold on her arms loosen and her thrusts slow.

“Color, Alex?” she needs to know, and Alex grinds her hips down into the bed.

“Green, fuck, please don’t stop.”

“There’s my good little girl,” Maggie rasps into her ear, and Alex bites down on her pillow and barely stifles a scream as Maggie nearly pulls all the way out of her before slamming back inside and Alex needs more and Alex is wrecked and Maggie is wrecked and Maggie’s thrusts are starting to get the kind of chaotic that they always do before she cums and Alex wants her to, wants to hear that yell she gives when she has Alex completely submissive underneath her like this, but then it’s too much and then Alex can’t breathe for a second too long with how overwhelmed she is and then Maggie’s grip tightens around her arms just a little and the combination scares her too much for comfort because god how how she never felt anything like this before, and she’s gasping, for the first time, that she needs a pause, that she needs a break, that she needs a stop.

“Red, red, red,” she breathes out in one breath and Maggie’s body is arched up off of hers in an instant, strapon still inside her but slowly, gently, slipping out, and Maggie is crawling to her side, concern written all over her face, hands hovering over the handcuffs on Alex’s wrists. Alex nods and Maggie releases them in an instant before slipping back down, hand hovering above Alex’s face, but not quite touching her.

“I’m so sorry, Alex, you okay? Did I hurt you?”

Alex swallows and shakes her head and Maggie looks like she’s holding back tears but still she won’t touch Alex, still she won’t so much as breathe without her permission.

“You didn’t hurt me, Mags,” Alex whispers, and notes the slight relaxation in Maggie’s body before hiding, before burying her face in her pillow and groaning into it, because fuck, can’t she do anything right?

Alex groans louder into the pillow before flipping onto her back violently, suddenly. Maggie pulls back the hand that was hovering over her and brings it to her own chin, watching Alex with careful eyes, waiting, waiting, because she knows Alex’s face when she’s trying to think of the precise words she wants to use, and that’s the face she has on as she tugs the sheets up to cover her body. Maggie gulps and Maggie blinks down tears, because now isn’t the time for her to be crying.

“You were about to cum,” Alex huffs, in that tone she usually reserves for talking about herself in the context of her mother. The tone she reserves for beating herself up.

“Alex,” Maggie breathes, “that doesn’t matter.” She reaches her hand toward Alex’s face, waits. Starts to pull back. Alex doesn’t look at her, but she brings her own hand up to Maggie’s, brings Maggie’s hand down to her cheek. Maggie grimaces a small smile.

“I don’t care how close I was to cumming, babe, when you want to stop, you want to stop, that’s it, that’s all that matters.”

Alex rolls her eyes and Alex looks disgusted with herself and Maggie wants to sob.

“Babygirl. Ally.” Alex finally looks over at her at that, at the name only Maggie Sawyer is allowed to call her, and her eyes are brimming with tears.

“You didn’t do anything wrong, Maggie, I just… it was me, I – ”

“You didn’t do anything wrong either, babe.”

Maggie wipes a tear away from Alex’s cheek as Alex scoffs softly and holds open the sheets for Maggie to crawl into next to her.

“It’s stupid, it’s embarrassing, I just… I was really overwhelmed, because I was so fucking turned on, and I couldn’t breathe and your bodyweight was on my arms and the handcuffs were on and everything just felt so fucking good but then it just got too much and I couldn’t breathe and I just – you were about to cum, I’m so sorry.”

Maggie’s shaking her head and Maggie is smoothing the hair off of Alex forehead and the tears off her cheeks, and she’s kissing her eyes, her nose, her cheeks, her forehead, her lips.

“Alex Danvers, you have nothing to apologize for. It’s literally why we have a color system, babe. I never want to do anything you’re not totally geared up for, you have nothing to be embarrassed about. I like… I like that you tell me what you want. I love it. So, flip side, I love when you tell me what you don’t want. I love you. I only ever want you to feel amazing.”

“I did, I just… it got too much for a second there… it’s stupid.”

“No, it’s not. It’s okay. It’s… actually a little hot that you were that turned on. And it’s hot that you told me what you needed.”

“So you’re saying I’m hot. That’s… that’s what I’m getting.”

Maggie goes into full-on dimple mode and Maggie shakes her head and Maggie sighs and Maggie gathers Alex into her arms because goddamn is she soaking wet, but right now? Right now the feeling of Alex cuddling into her chest and listening to her heart beat is the sweetest kind of bliss she can imagine, which works just perfectly for Alex, because that’s exactly what she wants, too.
Chapter 101
Chapter by queergirlwriting

Chapter Summary

anonymous asked:

Prompt: BOOBS. Alex knows she has sensitive nipples, but aside from the men who would selfishly and roughly grab her chest during those few times she consented, she hadn't explored the sensation. Enter Maggie Sawyer, who has a pair of perfect breasts and Alex finds herself mesmerized by them. Soon night after night of Alex tentatively playing with them, she very pleasantly finds out that Maggie knows exactly to make Alex's feel good. REALLY good.

Alex Danvers was a lot of things. Aggressive was one of them. Tentative was, surprisingly and beautifully, another.

She was both in bed.

But still, Maggie was surprised – not unpleasantly so – to find herself suddenly topless, to find Alex on top of her, staring down at her with swollen lips and mussed hair and blazing eyes, because they'd never quite gotten this far before.

Alex practically growled because god she'd never felt anything even remotely like this before, nothing even remotely like this raw want, this pure need.

And yet – aggressive and then tentative – she froze, because she had no idea where to start.

Because her body had never needed, never wanted, so much before.

And because whatever she did next, she wanted it to be perfect for Maggie.

And Maggie watched all this pass across Alex’s face, across her eyes – the confusion, the fear of not being good enough, the consuming desire, the raging need – and god she’d never been so turned on by anyone’s mere expression before, but then, Alex Danvers wasn’t quite like anyone she’d ever known, anyone she’d ever expected.

Truth be told, she hadn’t expected this, either: to be laying underneath Alex instead of the other way around, at least not this soon, but Alex was raw and Alex was passion and Alex was somehow both forceful and gentle and Maggie was so wet for her and her heart was nearly slamming out of her chest for her.

And speaking of her chest, Alex was looking down at hers like she’d never seen boobs before, like she’s never seen beauty before, and there was something in the fierce tenderness mixed with heady lust in Alex’s eyes that brought tears to Maggie’s.

“You can do whatever you want to me, Alex. I’ll let you know if I need you to stop.”

Alex bit her lip. “But how do I know what you’ll like?”
Maggie smiled softly. “You’ve been doing great so far. Just pay attention to me. Like you already do.”

“But what… I don’t know what to do.”

“We don’t have to do anything, babe – “

“No, no, Maggie, I want you, I want to, I wanna learn your body. So badly. Right now. I just… I don’t know where to start. What you’ll like.”

Maggie tilted her head slightly as she looked up at Alex. “Try what you like on your own body, hm? If I don’t like the same things, I’ll let you know, but either way, we’ll be learning about each other. Just pay attention to what I react to most.”

“Most?”

“Alex, it’s you touching me. Trust me, I’m gonna react to everything.”

“And that’s… good?”

“Yes, babe.”

“I… like when you call me that.”

Maggie’s dimples shine. “Good, babe.”

“So… what I like, huh?”

“Sure. Do whatever you want to me, Alex,” Maggie repeated in a small voice, happier but more nervous than she’d been even her first time, because this was Alex, Alex, Alex.

And Alex looked like she did when she was synthesizing life-saving vaccines or firing deadly weapons: intense, focused, single-minded.

And then her powerful, gentle hands, her tentative, bold tongue, were skating over Maggie’s chest, were finding out exactly how to make her gasp, how to make her moan, how to make her whine, how to make her nipples hard and how to make her bury her fingers in Alex’s hair and tell her how good she is with her tongue.

So when Alex is ready – when she’s panting and she’s eager and she’s letting Maggie kiss every newly-revealed centimeter of skin as she lifts up her shirt, when Alex unhooks her own bra out of sheer impatience with Maggie’s reverent pace – Maggie has a fairly good idea of what Alex might want, of what Alex probably never got, of what Maggie so desperately wants to give her.

“You are so goddamn beautiful,” Maggie tells her as she looks down at her shirtless form, and Alex flushes and Alex bites her lip and Alex thinks – but only for a moment – of rough hands and selfish touches calibrated to get men off, not to make her feel good, and the utter contrast with how dedicated Maggie is to how she feels, the utter contrast with how devoted Maggie is to making her see stars outside of the DEO’s astronomy tower, brings tears to her eyes and renewed desperation to her already ragged breath.

Having thoroughly kissed and nipped and licked every single spot, every single scar and every single rippled muscle and every single bruise on her abdomen, Maggie pauses, Maggie stares, Maggie waits.
“Please,” Alex whispers, and Maggie sighs in released tension and brings gentle fingers for the first time to Alex’s chest, and Alex’s sharp inhale, sharper exhale, heightens Maggie’s suspicion that Alex will love everything she wants to do right now.

“Good, babe?” she makes sure, and Alex nods and Alex writhes and Maggie brings her own thumb to her mouth and Alex whines and Maggie brings her thumb back to Alex’s nipple, watches her hesitate, watches her lock eyes with Alex to ask one more time, and when Alex whines her yes, Maggie’s thumb flits across her nipple and Alex can’t help it; she straight up screams.

“You like that?” Maggie confirms, but Alex is a mess, and the only answer she can give is to nod, and the only answer she can give is to arch her chest up into Maggie’s hand, is to writhes and grab at the sheets as Maggie smiles, as Maggie brings her lips down to Alex’s hardening nipple, as Maggie moans at the contact and drags her tongue slowly across the path her thumb just took.

Maggie is slow and deliberate: she is watchful and she is thorough; her eyes never leave Alex’s face, save when they flutter closed because god Alex is soft and Alex is pliant and Alex is perfect; her careful fingers make sure both of Alex’s nipples are getting the attention she’s begging for while her mouth is fully occupied, while her lips are kissing and her tongue is dragging and her teeth are very softly biting.

Maggie asks and Alex supplies, so when Maggie slips her thigh between Alex’s legs so Alex has pressure on her clit to match the rhythm of Maggie’s tongue, Maggie’s fingers, on her nipples, she can’t bite her lip hard enough to catch the screaming, the swearing, the ragged repeating of Maggie’s name, that slip out of her mouth when she comes completely undone, when Maggie slips one of her arms under her back to hold her as she rides out her orgasm, to hold her as stars explode and universes begin and she glides back down to earth having experienced a miracle.

“No one’s ever…” Alex rasps when she regains some of her breath, when Maggie is kissing her forehead, is stroking her hair, is whispering how beautiful she is.

“No one’s ever paid attention to me like that. Touched my body for… for me.”

Maggie swallows rage and Maggie swallows bloodlust, and Maggie buries it all in a soft kiss to the bridge of Alex’s nose.

“That’s the only way I’m ever gonna touch your body, babe: for you. So get used to it, okay?”

“I think I can do that.”

“Good.”

Chapter Summary

anonymous asked:

so we've had a lot of Baby Gay Alex but what about years later, alex and maggie are seasoned professionals at getting one another off and know exactly what they're doing (or one time you talked about mediocre sex. maybe that's a weird request but i guess i am looking for more feelings of familiarity and comfort than of newness and wonder)

“Ally,” Maggie whispers softly, tentatively, because sometimes when Alex’s breathing is even it’s because she’s deep in thought; sometimes it’s because she’s fast asleep; and sometimes it’s because she’s exactly in between those two states.

It sounds like the latter, this time, because Alex moans slightly and rolls over groggily. “Mmmm?”

“Nothing babe. Sleep.”

“Mmmm, Mags. You want sex, don’t you?” Alex grins lopsidedly with her eyes still closed.

“I – babe – no – it – “

“Maggie Sawyer, I think I know you just a little bit by now. You wanna get fucked, mm?”

“You’re sleeping, babe – “

“If I was sleeping, I wouldn’t be talking to you, you’re the one who talks in your sleep, not me,” Alex teases, and finally, her eyes crack open. “C’mere,” she tells Maggie and opens her arms.

“Al, you’re sleeping, I can… take care of myself.”

“Mmm, ya could, but it’ll be a lot more fun this way.” Alex slips sleepily on top of her girlfriend, slow, soft heat building in her core as Maggie’s breath goes ragged, as Maggie sighs at Alex’s weight on her body.

Maggie’s legs open and Alex braces her hand with her thigh between them, knowing that Maggie was usually all about romance and foreplay, but not when she just needed to get off before falling asleep.

And sure enough, she moans at the contact and Alex grins cockily.

“Mmm, you’re already wet for me, babe,” she comments, and Maggie half laughs and half gasps.

“But get cocky, Danvers, I was just over here thinking about that hot new agent you guys are training.”

Alex laughs and Alex kisses her harder and Alex reaches a hand underneath Maggie’s body to grab her ass, to pull her up closer into her body.
“Yeah, okay, Sawyer, like you really think that rookie’s got anything on what I’m doing to you right now.”

Because sure enough, Maggie’s gasping and Maggie’s whining and Maggie’s scratching at Alex’s back and Alex is putting exactly the right amount of pressure in exactly the right place and she’s kissing her neck and Maggie is convulsing around Alex’s fingers, softly, softly, slowly, slowly, but just hard enough to send a sweet release through her entire body, her entire being.

Alex smiles and Alex smooths the hair out Maggie’s face and Alex kisses her forehead as she rolls to her side and pulls her close.

“Feeling better?” Alex grins.

“Much.” Maggie snuggles into her closer.

“That’s my girl.”

“Damn right I am.”

“Damn right you are.”

Chapter Summary

anonymous asked:

Omg can you write a fic about that last ask? About Maggie calling Alex "Ally" in front of Kara...

She said it first while she was sobbing.

Sobbing and raging and throwing things because she hated losing her cool in front of people; she never ever did, but then again no one had ever insisted on being there, but Alex had insisted on being there and Alex had insisted on staying until Maggie let it out and there was so much to let out it might kill her because they were her friends and they felt safe at that bar and they were all dead and just fuck.

“And I don’t know how to do it, Ally, I don’t know how to go back there and look M’gann and the others in the face and tell them I didn’t know, I couldn’t stop it, I wasn’t there, and even if I was, I would have survived and they all would have died. I just don’t know how to do it, Ally.”

And Alex had held her and Alex had kissed her and Alex had rocked her and cradled her through the night and well into the morning.

So the first time she said it, neither of them commented, because it felt natural rolling off her tongue and it felt natural slipping into Alex’s ears and anyway, there were more important things to think about.

The second time she said it, she was panting and she was gasping and she was scratching at Alex’s back and she was writhing and she was screaming.

“Ally, Ally, just like that baby, fuck, Ally.”

And it made Alex moan and it made Alex fuck her harder because she’d worked so hard over the years to make people see her as Alex, Alex, Alex, because she thought it was a harder name than Alexandra, she thought it was a tougher name than Alexandra, because Alex was the name her father had called her and anything else was for being scolded by her mother, anything else was being weaker than she was, but god when the name just rolled off Maggie’s tongue like that, it felt good and it felt hot and it felt safe and it felt intimate and it felt perfect and it felt like… it felt like coming home.

It especially felt like home because Maggie didn’t overuse it.

She used it when there was raging and tears and grief, because something had to still be sacred in the world.

She used it when there was pure joy and absolute safety and surging happiness, because it was just for them and they were just for each other.
And she used it when she could barely form syllables, when she could barely think, when she was seeing stars, when Alex was on top of her, when Alex was underneath her, when she was checking in for Alex’s color, when she was screaming under Alex’s perfect tongue.

She used it, in short, only when they were alone.

But Maggie still wasn’t used to the whole Kara-has-superhearing thing, so when Eliza was about to come over for dinner and Alex was shaking and Maggie was gently prying the bottle of bourbon from her fingers, Maggie leaned up on her tip toes and kissed Alex’s temple, kissed Alex’s nose, her lips, and said to her softly, softly, with gentle fingertips rubbing small circles onto the back of her sweater, “You’re gonna be just fine, babe, I’m here and I’ve got you. You’re perfect, Ally, alright, no matter what your mom says.”

They jumped apart as Kara squealed loudly across the apartment, her eyes wide and her hands clasped together.

“Ally?” she nearly shrieks. “That is so cute, Maggie – can I call you that too, Alex?”

“Oh hell no.”

“Sorry, Little Danvers, I’ve got a patent on that one.”

“You’re patent. Maggie’s. Nope, nope, no, no.”

“Ohhhhh, it’s your own personal private time nickname. I get it. It’s cool. I get respect that.”

Kara leveled a massive wink at them as Alex reddened and groaned and reached unsuccessfully for the bottle Maggie was still holding away from her, and Maggie just shook her head and laughed, because when your future kid sister-in-law winks at you that dorkily, there’s really nothing else to do.

Chapter Summary

anonymous asked:

imagine alex getting to work one morning all sore and banged up and everyone asks what happened and maggie’s just like “sorry, my bad”

She’s limping slightly and there are harsh red marks just visible under the line of her collar and her wrists are bruised but, oddly, her far-off grin seems permanent.

Winn and J’onn exchange nervous glances as Alex strolls – or rather, sturdily hobbles – into the command center, but it’s Kara who (literally) flies forward and demands an explanation.

“Alex, what the hell happened to you? You’re hurt, why didn’t you call for backup? Who did this?”

“Uh, no, I’m not hurt, nothing, it – “

They both jump slightly at the chipper “g’morning, all” that sounds behind them.

Maggie is somehow balancing five coffees, one for each of them, and Kara turns to interrogate her as she passes them out with a grin that – if Kara stopped and really thought for a moment – looks oddly similar to Alex’s.

“Maggie, look at Alex, make her tell us who did this, it – “

“Oh, yeah, uh, sorry Little Danvers: my bad.”

Winn’s jaw drops and J’onn groans and Alex squeezes her eyes shut but Kara hasn’t gotten it yet.

“You mean you were with her and you didn’t call me for backup?”

“Well, when you say with her… yeah… But uh, I don’t think you really would’ve wanted to be called. At that moment. Those… moments, those… fantastic moments… for… backup or, you know, any other reasons.”

“So you were with her but you didn’t think I’d wanna know that my sister – “

“Oh, Kara – “ Winn’s voice is apologetic, cautionary. Both terrified and excited.

“Wait.” Kara adjusts her glasses.

“There it is.” Maggie tilts her coffee toward Kara in a salute.

“Oh.” Kara adjust her glasses some more.

“Yes.” Maggie nods and sips and watches Kara for increased signs of distress.
“Oh.” Kara adjusts her glasses more furiously than ever before.

“Yeah.” Alex chimes in this time, biting the inside of her cheek and grimacing somewhat – but not entirely – apologetically.

“Alex! Oh Rao, Alex, it – you – ugh – “ Kara speeds out of the room.

“I – I… think we broke my sister.”

“And your boss,” J’onn groans.

“Sorry J’onn.”

“Not me, you didn’t break me, no need to worry about the IT guy, I’m fine over here – ow!”

“Since you still seem to be in a rough mood, Danvers, wanna uh… find a closet or an empty lab or something?”

Maggie’s leaning in and Maggie’s whispering but Kara still shouts.

“Superhearing!”

“Sorry!”

“Not you’re not!”

“Nope. I’m really not all that much.”

Chapter Summary

It’s Winn’s idea and it’s Winn’s birthday party and because the birthday boy decrees that Alex and Maggie cannot be allowed on the same team because come on, it’s my birthday, I don’t wanna be destroyed before we even start playing, and I also don’t wanna declare victory before we even start playing, Alex and Maggie suit up with different laser guns, with different team vests, but with a nearly identical gleam in their eyes and smirk on their faces.

“You know they’re either gonna kill each other or straight-up start having sex right in the middle of the game?” James leans in and half-whispers to Winn as Kara covers her ears and whines, while Susan Vasquez smirks and checks the scope of her laser gun.

Maggie falls into J’onn’s command seamlessly and creatively once they get started, and as he’s crouching into the best angle to demolish Mr. Schott’s supposed surprise attack, he wonders, not for the first time, about asking her to leave the NCPD and come work at the DEO.

Susan and James get locked down in a firefight that Kara breaks up by flinching and shouting sorry!! by sending a more-accurate-than-she-expected-it-be-laser beam right at Susan’s vest.

But it’s Maggie who steals the game.

Because Alex has fought her way through the crossfire and is perfectly positioned to send a beam at J’onn’s vest when suddenly she’s pinned to the wall and suddenly Maggie’s lips are on hers and her mouth is sliding open and she’s nearly dropping her gun because fuck is this why teenagers are constantly making out in seemingly random places, but then Maggie is pulling back and Maggie’s smirking and Maggie’s walking away and Alex is weak in the knees and staring at her ass and Susan is sending an entire volley of laser shots straight into Alex’s spluttering, stunned, still vest.

“Sorry, ma’am. All’s fair in love and laser tag, right?”

“What? Wait, you – you two planned that?”

Maggie’s turned around, now, and she’s smirking like she just won the lottery.

“Thought you were trained to expect the unexpected, Danvers.”

“She has a point, you know,” J’onn chimes in, “I taught you better than that, Agent Danvers.”

“What? I – is anyone not gonna gang up on me right now?”
“I’m not, it’s my birthday and I don’t wanna get killed.”

“Thanks, Schott.”

“Aww, babe, don’t worry, I’ll make it up to you tonight.” Maggie slips back into Alex’s arms, laser gun dropped to her side, hand reaching up to tangle in Alex’s hair.

“You promise?”

“Cross my heart.”

“Good god, can we all just go back to shooting lasers at each other?”
Maggie’s the one who finds his room.

It’s more of a cell, really, truth be told, and Maggie flinches internally at the state of his face; they must have discovered he rescued Kara and Mon-El all those months ago. And Cadmus doesn’t seem to be the forgiving type, if the amount of rounds she’d had to shoot through to get here was any indication.

“Dr. Danvers? Maggie Sawyer, NCPD. I’m here with your daughter – well, both of them – and we’ve really gotta go. Now.”

Jeremiah only stares for a moment before nodding, before grabbing a bag, before taking the spare gun Maggie’s holding out for him, and following her into the near pitch-black corridor.

“Blew out the electricity, the generators, everything,” Maggie mutters to him as she guides him down by the flashlight strapped to her wrist. “We’ve got a rendezvous point just up ahead, gonna take you back to the DEO. You’ll never have to see this place again, sir.”

Jeremiah stumbles into her as Maggie comes to a standstill, hand up to halt him, to keep him quiet, and he’s surprised despite himself by her sturdiness, by the way his body, so much bigger than hers, doesn’t bowl her over.

“You said you’re here with my daughters, but you mentioned one first. Which one were you talking about, primarily?” he whispers as footsteps in a nearby corridor grow and then fade again, and Maggie starts moving again.

Maggie glances back at him with a slightly parted lips and fire in her eyes.

“Alex. I was talking about Alex.”

Jeremiah smiles and cocks his head slightly. “I thought so.”

“Sir?” Maggie asks over her shoulder as she clears the next corridor and waves him to follow her.

“You’re in love with my eldest, Detective Sawyer, I hardly think you have to call me sir.”

Maggie nearly stumbles to a halt.

“How did you – “

“You radiate it. The way you say her name, the way you’re risking your life to rescue me, the way that Alex is trusting you to come get me. The way you think of Alex as my daughter before you think of the one who can fly. No one’s ever done that, Alex’s whole life. I think I’m gonna like you, Detective Sawyer.”

Jeremiah smiles and Maggie reflects it and his smile deepens because lord how his daughter must swoon over this girl’s dimples.

His daughter. His daughter.

Maggie is leading him to the place where he is going to see his daughter soon. Both of them.

He's going home.

fooferah asked:

While revealing Supergirl's identity to Maggie, Alex tells her she was on the plane that almost crashed when the superhero went public with her powers. Afterwards, Maggie seeks out Kara to thank her.

“Little Danvers.”

“Maggie, hey! What – what’re you doing here?”

“Sorry, is… this a bad time?”

“No, no, just finished an article, actually – what’s uh.. what’s up?”

“Alex told me.”

“Told you.”

“Your secret. She said you said it was okay.”

“Yeah. I did. How’re you… are you okay?”

"It was a pretty badly kept secret, to be honest, I mean, just glasses, come on now, but uh… you saved her.”

“Um… we’ve all saved each other, you saved my life just… yesterday. I mean, now I can properly thank you – “

“No, Kara, listen, I um… I came here to thank you. You saved her. Alex. Her plane, to Geneva, when you… when you came out.”

“Yeah…”

“And I just… I know you’ve saved a lot of people, and I know you risk your life every day, but I just… back then, no one knew who you were, what you could do, and you didn’t think, you just… god, literally flew to save her. And I… Alex is… I mean you of all people know how special Alex is, she just… your sister’s everything to me, Kara, I can’t… I can’t imagine my life if she never walked into it, and I have you to thank you for that, for her, so I just…”

“Oh, oh! We’re hugging now. That’s good, I like hugging.”

“Thank you, Kara.”

“You’re everything to her, too, Maggie. So… thank you, too.”
Chapter 108

Chapter Summary

When Kara overhears Maggie call her sister Ally, Kara teases but it's also the exact moment Kara knows she's going to be sharing her sister with Maggie Sawyer for the rest of their lives. Yes yes and yes.

(This piece follows references Chapter 103)

She teases Alex when she hears it, and she teases her almost mercilessly.

Maggie whispering to her big sister in the kitchen, kissing her all over her face, her fingers rubbing that spot at the small of Alex’s back where she feels fear, holding the bourbon away from her, talking softly to her, talking tenderly to her, because Alex is almost hyperventilating at Eliza’s impending arrival for dinner, because Alex is shaking, and Maggie’s eyes are as soft as her voice: “You’re gonna be just fine, babe, I’m here and I’ve got you. You’re perfect, Ally, alright, no matter what your mom says.”

Kara hears – of course Kara hears, because she doesn’t mean to be intrusive but she always tries to pay special attention to Alex’s state of mind when Eliza is in town – and Kara teases Alex until she’s red in the face and flustered, and Kara plays it off, and she lets it go, but she can’t stop staring at her sister and her sister’s girlfriend throughout dinner.

The way Maggie uses only her fork and no knife because one of her hands is constantly rubbing circles on Alex’s shaking knee under the table.

The way Maggie makes sure she refills Alex’s water glass more often than she refills her wine glass.

The way Alex’s entire body relaxes, the way her lips twitch upward, the way she leans almost imperceptibly closer to her, whenever her eyes catch Maggie’s.

The way Alex has an almost normal conversation with Eliza, because every time she starts to get scared, every time she starts to get defensive, every time she starts to get triggered, she glances at Maggie, and Maggie gives her this little smile, this little stare, and Alex just… relaxes.

And Kara thinks she knows what Maggie’s eyes are reminding her sister: you’re perfect, Ally.

Because there’s something about Alex letting Maggie call her that, call her a nickname that’s all her own, call her a pet name that’s private, call her a promise that she can be Maggie’s girl and also her own woman.

There’s an intimacy in the name that Kara’s never seen Alex accept; that Kara’s never seen Alex want; and that’s how she knows that Maggie Sawyer is sticking around. For good.

And, watching Maggie kiss Alex’s temple casually as she insists on the others sitting and enjoying while she clears away the plates and gets the dessert she made just for Kara, she couldn’t be happier about it.

anonymous asked:

Can we have a shy Kara asking Maggie for advice and comfort cause going to her big sister its just too hard? Cuddles between those two we love!

Maggie’s brow furrows when her phone buzzes and it’s not her Danvers sister’s smiling face on the caller ID.

“Everything okay, Kara?” she asks immediately, her gun already slipping into her waistband and her hand already fumbling for her shoes, because they all lead dangerous lives, and Alex, Alex, Alex.

“Yeah, no, everything’s fine, Alex is fine, nothing’s under attack – I just… I’m sorry, I shouldn’t have called.”

Maggie relaxes, but tilts her head, slowly putting her jacket down and resting the phone between her chin and shoulder as she puts her gun back, too.

“No, you’re fine, Little Danvers. Just got me worried is all, you uh… you don’t usually call.”

She can practically see her girlfriend’s little sister adjusting her glasses, practically see the worried tension around the corners of her eyes.

“I know, and it’s so late, I’m sorry – “

“Lord, Little Danvers, you’re just like your sister. You don’t have to apologize for calling; I’m glad you did. What’s up?”

“I… are you busy? Can I come over?”

Maggie fights to keep the surprise out of her voice, not wanting Kara to misinterpret it as annoyance.

“Yeah. Sure, you want me to make some – “

There’s a whoosh at her window and the papers on her desk scatter suddenly, because Kara is already in her living room.

“Food.”

“I’m sorry!” Kara squeals and goes about picking up Maggie’s case files from the floor.

“No, you’re fine, you’re fine – what’s up, kid?”

Maggie’s fingers brush Kara’s as they replace the papers on her desk and Kara’s eyes go wide.
“I think I like girls, like, like like girls, and I like boys, too, well no, I mean, men, and women, and I’ve been thinking about it for a while but now I don’t want to say anything to Alex because she’s just coming out and the whole reason it took her so long in the first place is because I took up so much space that she never focused on herself and now that she’s finally living more of her own life, I don’t want to waltz in and be like guess what I’m bi now we’re both kinda gay and give me all the attention and do you feel like it’s wrong to like someone other people think is a villain, I mean no, not if she’s just misunderstood and really badass and just really wonderful, I mean, come on, it – “

But Maggie’s finger is on Kara’s lip and Kara’s eyes fly wide and Maggie grins softly and Maggie sweeps her free hand toward the couch, gesturing Kara to sit.

“Hold up, Little Danvers. I’m gonna get some beer – “

“Oh, Earth alcohol doesn’t affect me – “

Maggie’s finger is back on her lips.

“The beer’s for me, not you. The pizza and potstickers I’m about to order, those are for you. I’m gonna drink and you’re gonna eat and then we’re gonna talk about your big ole bi crush on Lena Luthor, okay?”

Kara stands with such force that Maggie’s papers fly off her desk again.

“How did you know?”

“I need to invest in some paperweights, don’t I?”

“Maggie!”

“Kara. Hey. Hey hey hey. Come here, come here.” She sees Kara’s lip wobbling and she sees Kara’s wide, fearful eyes, and she knows her world is crumbling and her world is relieved and her world will never be the same, and she pulls her down onto the couch and gathers her into her arms and Kara just cries.

“Shhh, I know. I know. It’s gonna be okay, Kara. You’re gonna be okay. You’re perfect and you’re brave, and no, I don’t think the entire world knows about your crush on Lena, okay, just me, just me.”

“But how – “

“I’m a detective, Little Danvers. I detect.”

Kara sniffs and chuckles and frowns down at Maggie’s grey tee.

“I got your shirt all teary and snotty.”

Maggie glances down and smiles and pulls Kara closer into her arms. “It’s cool. I’ve got two shoulders, kid, and tonight, they’re both for you.”

By the time Alex’s key scrapes the lock – because they’d given up on the pretense that they could stand to spend the entire night alone anymore – it’s three a.m. and Kara is sleeping, exhausted from all the talking and crying and sniffling and laughing, and Maggie’s t-shirt is wet with Kara’s tears and just a bit of alien snot, but there’s a small smile curled onto Maggie’s face, because she’s sitting up on the couch, both arms around Kara’s body as her sleeping form leans on Maggie, keeping Kara safe from nightmares and from anxiety and from the world, the world, the world.

Maggie turns her head as much as she can without disturbing Kara, and she sees Alex’s still frame staring from the doorway, glancing around at the empty beer bottles and decimated potstickers and the pizza box with two slices left, two slices saved, she knows, just for her.

“Maggie, what – “ she mouths, tears stinging her eyes because this woman, these women, the most important people in her world.

“She’s fine,” Maggie whispers, smiling as Alex strips off her jacket, as Alex kicks off her shoes and pads to the couch. “Just got a lot she wants to tell you in the morning.”

“Mmm, good. Come to bed, come sleep. Maggie’s comfy, even though she’s so tiny, have you noticed she’s so tiny, and she has two shoulders, and she said they can both be mine tonight but now you’re here so we’ll share.”

Maggie laughs and Alex tries not to cry and they haul their kid sister to bed so she can curl up safe and protected and loved between two of her superheroes.

Chapter Summary

anonymous asked:

alex and maggie + koala hugs

Alex had always been free with her hugs to Kara. She’d always race to hug Jeremiah, even when she was still in her sopping wet suit, surf board still tucked under her arm. Over the years, she’d gotten more stiff about hugging Eliza, but she would hug her anyway.

Kara had noticed Alex touched J’onn more, Winn more, James more, over the past couple of years.

But she still wasn’t exactly the most touchy person.

Unless you counted body slamming men who were twice her size while disarming them and instilling the fear of god in them as touching, which Kara didn’t.

So when she dropped by Alex’s apartment with pizza and potstickers to cap off a particularly grueling day at the DEO, her brow furrowed when Alex wasn’t in the living room. She lowered her glasses and squinted into her bedroom, and at first, she was surprised, but then, she knew she shouldn’t be.

Because Alex’s arms were both wrapped around Maggie’s body, their knees bent, their legs intertwined, Alex’s stomach pressed flush against Maggie’s back, and every few breaths, Maggie would snuggle back even closer, would pull Alex’s arms closer to her chest, would lower her head, eyes closed, and press a sleepy kiss to Alex’s forearm.

Kara had never seen Alex so much as doze off near someone other than her, let alone wrap her arms – not to mention legs – around them and full-out sleep.

Hell, Kara had never even seen Alex hold someone else’s hand.

But this? With Maggie? This made sense. Perfect sense.

Kara set down the pizza, set down the potstickers, hesitated, grabbed two potstickers and shoved them in her mouth, hesitated again, popped two more in her mouth, and padded softly into her sister’s bedroom.

“Pizza’s here,” she whispers, and Alex smiles sleepily and Maggie starts slightly, but relaxes almost instantly.

“‘Ey, Little Danvers,” she says creakily, and Kara beams at her own special nickname.

Alex makes no move to disentangle herself from Maggie, just she tilts her head up and grins. “Bring the pizza in here, Kara. We’ll make it a party.”
Maggie kisses her forearm again and Alex’s hands squeeze her sides slightly, and Kara watches as they melt into each other’s touches, into each other’s bodies.

And she’s never quite been this happy to have to unexpectedly share food with someone.

Chapter Summary

anonymous asked:

Bashful, easily embarrassed Kara is fun for everyone but her and Alex are actually so close I would love to maybe see them having a serious/genuine talk about Alex’s sex life. Maybe Kara being somewhat concerned about the BDSM because of a lack of understanding but interested and supportive wanting to understand more about it and Alex explaining why she enjoys being submissive. Reminiscent of when Alex tells her how beautiful Maggie is, she’s overwhelmed explaining how it makes her feel.

This piece follows/references Chapter 104.

Kara squeals and covers her face with her hands and furiously adjusts her glasses and turns bright red and flees the room when Alex comes into the DEO limping gingerly, chest painted with red marks, faint redness around her wrists, when Maggie takes the blame and Alex grins and blushes and J’onn groans and Alex threatens everyone to shut the hell up, and they do, because even if Maggie can apparently tie her down in bed, she’s still Alex Danvers, damnit.

So Kara squeals and covers her face with her hands and furiously adjusts her glasses and turns bright red and flees the room, but tonight is sisters’ night, and Kara is worried.

Because Alex is grinning and Alex seems happy, but Alex is apparently covered in even more bruises than she usually does, and Kara just can’t square it with how reverently Maggie seems to treat her outside the bedroom, and Kara just can’t square it without the feeling that someone is hurting her sister, and she needs to understand.

So she accepts Alex’s box of pizza and tears into the bag of potstickers more quietly than she usually does, because Alex’s limp has diminished throughout the day, but she still sits gingerly, she still hisses a little when Kara hugs her and apparently makes whatever marks are on her back sting.

“Alex, can we talk?” she ventures, and Alex freezes slightly, arches an eyebrow slightly, purses her lips slightly, but she nods mildly enough.

“Shoot,” she says, reaching for a piece of pizza and groaning when she realizes she forgot to grab a beer.

“No, let me get it, you’re um… you’ve been limping all day, Alex.”

“Is uh… is that what you wanted to talk about?”

“Kind of, yeah.” Kara cracks open a beer and passes one – just the one – to her sister before collapsing next to her with one foot tucked under her.

“Kara,” Alex sighs and drinks deeply, eyes closed and wheels turning. “I… Just tell me. Tell me what you’re thinking. What you’re scared of.”
Kara takes a deep breath and stares at her big sister for a moment, worrying her fingers on the blanket and grabbing a potsticker – then two, then three – to occupy her mouth while she thinks.

“I like Maggie. And I like that you’re together. You’re happier, you’re drinking less, you’re smiling more, you’re… hitting Winn in the head less.”

Alex chuckles. “That’s actually a downside.”

Kara grins and takes a bite of Alex’s pizza. “Hey! Grab your own.”

She does and she sighs again. “But you’ve also been having these… um…”

“Sex injuries?” Alex wheezes as she tries to manage an enormous gulp of her beer.

“Yeah.”

“And that scares you.”

“I’m not scared – ”

“Kara, I know you – ”

“And I know you. And you’re… you’re a badass, Alex, you don’t take anything from anyone, but you… you’re coming in with all these bruises, and cuts, and limping, Rao, and I know you seem happy about that, and that’s great, it really is, I’m not saying anything bad, or that you’re doing anything wrong, I’m just… I don’t understand. Would you… would you help me to understand?”

Alex sighs and Alex takes her one allotted potsticker and stares at her sister thoughtfully while she chews.

“It… You’re right. I am a badass.” She pauses and grins and takes another bite of pizza. “I don’t take crap from people. You’re right. But this…” She shifts on the couch and she puts her fingers to the top side of her wrist and smiles faintly, distantly, remembering. Loving. “This… remember that guy I dated for a few months in college? The one with the hair?”

Kara smiles, because yes, she remembers. “Remember he’d do things like… like try to hold my hand? Or like, hold the door for me? Or…” Alex’s eyes glaze slightly and she looks away from her sister’s attentive gaze. “Or he’d want to do things. With me. In bed. That I just… I never liked, I never…”

“You’re not limping because Maggie’s a woman, Alex.”

Alex grins and she nods and she gulps down some beer. “I was getting to that.” She taps a greasy finger to Kara’s nose and laughs as Kara squeals softly and grabs a napkin. “I was never comfortable with… well, with any kind of intimacy. You know, we’ve talked about it, we… and it was a lot of things, right, me being gay, mostly, but also, I… I never wanted to be out of control. I never am out of control. Not anymore. I never can be, because if I’m out of control, people… people die. You could die.”

Alex chokes on an unexpected wave of tears and Kara puts her pizza down, leans forward, and strokes Alex’s hair out of her face.

“And I like it. Being in control. Being… able to change things, being able to make a difference in the world. But it… it means I can never, I don’t know… let go. I can never let go, I can never break, except when I’m with you, but that’s different, it’s…” She looks away and she shakes her head and she presses her index fingers to the bottoms of her eyelids.

“When I’m with Maggie… When we’re together, it… she’s gentle with me, Kara, my god, she’s perfect, she’s always checking in, she’s always making sure I’m good, she… And sometimes, when we’re together, when we’re… having sex… I just… I want to let go, completely, like… of everything, of just… I don’t have to be in control of anything, I don’t have to be responsible for everything, I don’t have to make decisions or be on my game because she’s got it, she’s got everything, she’s got me. When I’m… submissive for her, I just… I’ve never been able to let go like that, to trust someone like that, with my body, with my heart, with just… all of me. God, I’m sorry, I’m probably making zero sense.”

She stops because she has to, because she’s crying, because fuck she loves Maggie and god it feels good to talk about, to have Kara’s warm eyes holding her, to have Kara’s cool hands on her face, to have Kara’s unconditional love wrapped around her.

“I just… I love her, Kara, and when I’m laying under her, I just… I feel it. How much she loves me. Because I’m bottoming, sure, okay, right, it looks like I’m out of control, like she’s hurting me, but all I have to do is open my palm, or say a single word, and everything will stop, so really, underneath it, she’s giving me all the control, but she’s letting me feel like she’s got it all, she’s letting me feel everything, she’s constantly figuring out how to touch me best, how to love me best, and I just… I love her so much, Kara, I… and I know it probably scares you, that I wind up with bruises and whatever, but she’s… she’s perfect, Kara. No one’s ever… no one’s ever loved me like she does.”

Alex smiles and sniffs and rests her head on her sister’s shoulder.

“Am I loved enough to get that last potsticker?”

“Don’t push your luck. But I can be convinced to order more.”

“Kara?”

“Yeah Alex?”

“I love you.”

“I love you, too.”
Maggie’s lacing up her sneakers when Alex’s alarm goes off.

“Babe? Why’re you up?”

Maggie shrugs and leans up to the bed to press a kiss to Alex’s lips. “Couldn’t fall back to sleep. Thought I could go on your run with you, if that’s okay?”

Alex blinks out sleep and arches an eyebrow, but she says nothing beyond her nod, her small smile. She knows that look – that look Maggie gets when she’s prepped for a fight, when she’s scared, when she’s excited and when she’s focused and when she’s over-energetic, all at the same time.

She usually gets that look only when she’s going out on a dangerous mission.

Today, she’d switched shifts so she didn’t have to work. I’m not trying to suppress the protests I need to be part of, she’d said casually, she’d said with a blaze deep in her eyes, with a somewhat sad grin quirked on her lips.

So today, the only dangerous mission is going to be the March.

Alex swishes around mouthwash and tosses frozen water on her face and spits and throws on her favorite running shorts, her favorite running jacket. She stares at Maggie, sitting on the bed with her elbows resting on her knees, her phone in her hands.

“You know they took down the civil rights, LGBT, and climate change sections of the White House site already?” Maggie says without looking up, because she’s a detective, and she detects, so she knows when her girlfriend is looking at her.

“Yeah, I read it last night. You sure you wanna go today, babe?”

“I need to go today, Al. Just gonna burn off some energy first. Come on – wanna get in a 5k before we spend all day on our feet?”

Alex chuckles and pulls the phone gently out of Maggie’s hand and pulls her to her feet and kisses her soundly, softly, tenderly, trying to put every ounce of love she feels for her into their touch.

“I’ve got you, babe,” Alex reminds her, because her girlfriend grew up non-white and non-straight in Blue Springs, Nebraska, and she knows that Maggie remembers what this dread of a deadly storm feels like. Maggie melts into her touch, because no one has ever offered her protection before, and god, she knows it’ll be the only thing that gets her through.
Kara’s commandeered the apartment with an odd explosion of posterboards and markers and donuts and coffee by the time Maggie and Alex trudge back up the stairs, the bottom layer of Alex’s hair plastered to her forehead with sweat and Maggie’s wet tank top slung over her shoulder.

“Check it out, guys!” Kara squeals when they walk in, as James tosses both of them a bottle of water and Winn waves through a mouthful of donut, through wiping powdered sugar off his grey t-shirt reading, simply, “feminist.”

“You don’t think that might um… give away your secret?” Alex splutters, red-faced, and Maggie presses up against her, a wicked grin on her face.

“Aww, babe, don’t worry, Kara will wear her glasses and no one will be any the wiser that her big sister’s all embarrassed to see a sign talking about her sister’s pussy. But I happen to know that you’re not so shy in – “

“Maggie!”

“Gonna shower. Come with?”

“Yes.”

“Kara, you might wanna turn off your super hearing.”

“Shut it, Schott!”

The mood is somewhat more grim when Alex and Maggie slip back out of the bathroom, Alex donning a red bandana in her hair and one of Maggie’s Black Lives Matter t-shirts fitting snugly over her chest, and Maggie decked out in cut-offs, a grey beanie, and a Fuck Xenophobia tee.

James doesn’t speak, he just pulls Alex into a hug and presses a kiss to her forehead, and J’onn, who’s just slipped through the door – because someone needs to make sure they get there on time – crosses his arms across his chest and nods at her through a thin layer of tears, M’gann’s head on his shoulder.

Winn touches Maggie’s forearm and she grimaces at him. “You good?” he asks, and she takes a deep, slow breath.

“With you guys all around me? Yeah. Yeah.”

The Plaza is so crowded with people, children on their parents’ shoulders – with posters shouting everything from “Consent is Sexy” to “America is Black, speaks Spanish, wears a hijab, is a woman” to “Supporting My Sisters, not just my Cis-ters” – that it takes a full hour to even get into the flow of the march, a full hour of Alex and Maggie’s hands never, ever leaving each other, of M’gann falling into the embraces of so many bar patrons who learned of the march from the posters she and Maggie had put up around the place, of James having a crouched conversation with a little boy asking if he could be big and strong like him one day, of Kara beaming at the constant comments and compliments on her poster, of Winn earning looks of renewed respect from J’onn for his sign, which reads “Our white masculinity kills people I love: can we cut it out, please?”.

The Plaza is so crowded with people that even the news choppers above them can’t quite capture a photo of the entire crowd, but James does an excellent job with his own camera, climbing on lampposts and balancing, with Alex spotting him, on construction pillars to get the best shots, to get the best angles, to get the photos that are going to reach people’s hearts, that are going to remind people what hope is, that are going to fight hardest.

He photographs Alex with her arm out in front of Maggie protectively in front of a line of cops in riot gear. He photographs the searing kiss Maggie pulls her down for, a crowd cheering around them, the way Alex’s body curves into Maggie’s warmly, protectively, lovingly.

He photographs Winn lifting a little girl onto his shoulders after the girl asked, after her grandparents told him to go ahead, because she wanted to see better, she wanted to chant louder, she wanted to fly higher.

He photographs Kara beaming defiantly with her poster, Kara pressing a kiss to J’onn’s forehead, J’onn wrapping his arm around M’gann’s shoulders, M’gann leading chants and Kara following her lead.

He photographs crowds of thousands upon thousands upon thousands of people surging together to say no to forces, to systems, to people, that would soon see him dead, soon see him erased.

And when he hops down off the lamppost to rejoin his friends – his family – their fierce love and open embraces gives him hope that maybe, just maybe, together they can prevent the worst.

anonymous asked:

Can we also talk about how Alex got there, how she started to trust Maggie with everything she has? You wrote that Kara is like her sister, always apologizing. Could you write about how she lets go of all those insecure habits around Maggie?

The first time she’s late for a date, there are tears in her throat and fear in her eyes.

“I am so sorry, Maggie, there were some complications on a mission – “

“Was anyone hurt?”

Alex feels the concern in Maggie’s eyes like a punch to her gut, because no, no one was hurt, and because no one was hurt, there’s really no excuse, and god can’t she ever do anything right, Maggie doesn’t like to leave a lady waiting but Alex did because god of course she did she’s always messing up everything.

“No, no, everyone’s… fine.”

A warm smile passes over Maggie’s face and her hand moves to Alex’s face in relief. “Good. Good. Here, come here, let me take your jacket – “

“You’re not mad?”

“Alex, why would I be mad?”

“I was late.”

“Ale. The jobs we have, the lives we lead? A little thing I’d like to call traffic? It’s gonna happen. To both of us. It’s okay. You’re okay. You’ve got nothing to apologize for, Alex; you were off saving the world.”

The look in her eyes seems genuine; the way her thumb strokes the back of Alex’s hands seems sincere; her words seem honest.

Alex has never been so confused.

She finds herself confused again the first time she cums without warning, with just a harsh breath and Maggie’s name strangling out of her throat, before Maggie has the chance to cum, too.

“I’m sorry,” she breathes raggedly, tears back in her wind pipe and eyes stinging as she hides her face in Maggie’s shoulder.

“Babe, what – why are apologizing?”
“I… you weren’t… you didn’t… I…”

“Alex, I \textit{want} you to enjoy yourself, I \textit{want} you to cum. As many times as you want. Before me, after me, with me, all of the above, whatever.”

“But – “

“Alex. Babe. Ally, you’re \textit{perfect}. You’re perfect, and I never want you to apologize for \textit{enjoying} yourself. I’m not having sex with you so I can off, Al, I’m having sex with you because I lo – because I wanna make you feel good, I want… I wanna make you feel good. \textit{Please} don’t apologize for that. You don’t have to, ever. Okay?”

She doesn’t understand, not even in the slightest, but she trusts, so she nods, and she cums even harder next time.

She doesn’t understand, either, when Maggie brings over Thai takeout when Alex had tried to surprise her by getting pizza, and instead of getting irritated, Maggie kisses each of her knuckles while she panics, because \textit{I was just trying to be a good girlfriend}, you said you had a long day, but now \textit{you} spent all this extra money and \textit{I should have just told you I was getting pizza}, I’m sorry and she doesn’t understand when Maggie finishes kissing her knuckles and brings her hands to her face and strokes her cheeks until she quiets, until she just stares, until Maggie has the room to tell her that \textit{you are so sweet, Alex Danvers}. And you get all the girlfriend awards, you know why? \textit{Because I’ve never once told a girlfriend ‘hey, I’ve had a rough day’ and had them get me dinner. And you? You did that. You’re thoughtful, and you’re sweet, and you’re an amazing girlfriend. You’re perfect, Alex. You don’t have to apologize for being who you are. Not anymore. And certainly not to me.}

And Alex cries, then, because Maggie had said it, said it so perfectly: she was apologizing for being… \textit{her}. And Maggie didn’t want her to, because Maggie \textit{liked} her. For \textit{her}.

And that’s nothing to apologize for.

Chapter Summary

charis-chan said:

Prompt: maggie is out of town ans alex is mopey but that was expected. What wasnt expected was for kara to feel so sad her second favorite human is not around. Cue somw fluff

She’s upstate training new recruits for the LGBT Task Force she seeded out of the NCPD, and she’s gone for the whole week.

She’s left James with explicit instructions to monitor how much Alex is drinking -- she figures he can take Alex smacking him around more easily than poor Winn can -- and she’s left Winn with explicit instructions to make sure Alex is eating, because the closer they get to rescuing Jeremiah, the more Alex is forgetting.

So James is stealing bottles out of Alex’s freezer and giving Alex very pointed looks that she eventually surrenders to, and Winn is sharing his lunch every day, and Alex is mopey but she’s holding up alright.

What Maggie didn’t do was leave behind instructions for how to care for Kara in her absence, because no one -- not even Kara -- expected the younger Danvers sister to be that impacted by the sudden lack of being called Little Danvers, the sudden lack of easy laughter at the pool table, the sudden lack of intense debates between James, Maggie, and Winn as to which Final Fantasy character could kick Cyborg Superman’s ass easiest.

But, as it turns out, Alex isn’t the only Danvers sister who’s drooping in Maggie’s short absence.

“She okay?” Winn asks J’onn when he walks into the DEO to find Kara idly chewing on the inside of her cheek and sighing, loudly and obviously, every few seconds.

“I think she misses her sister’s girlfriend,” J’onn diagnoses, and Winn nearly squeals.

“Oh, that’s the cutest.”

He snaps a picture of Kara, mid-sigh, and he pulls up Maggie’s number on his phone.

Hey, Sawyer. Hope you’re having fun whipping all those recruits into queer-friendly shape. Check out this pic: turns out Alex isn’t the only Danvers sister pining away in your absence.

He’s surprised when his phone buzzes just a moment later.

Awww, thanks Schott. Seriously, Little Danvers misses me?

Oh come on, Sawyer, we all do. We’ve gotten used to your rapier wit around here.
He grins as Kara’s phone buzzes across the room, as her face lights up, as she presses something on the screen and holds it out like a mirror in front of her.

“Hi Maggie!” She waves at the screen and Winn smiles, because Maggie must have facetimed her.

“Little Danvers! Hey! Listen, I don’t have a lot of time -- there’s a couple recruits that I wanna take to lunch, I think they’re gay and I want to treat them -- but I just wanted to see how you’re doing.”

Kara practically swoons, and even J’onn grins watching her.

“Awww, Maggie!” she squeaks. “You’re so sweet! I miss you! Is that weird?”

“Course not, kid, I miss you, too. You know if you wanna fly up here for dinner tonight, I can move a few things around and make it happen.”

Kara nearly drops her phone in excitement and Winn surges forward to catch it. By the time Alex walks in, Kara’s constant sighing has ceased, replaced by a fervent, eager energy and bright, shiny buzz around her.

“Did you give her extra donuts or something?” Alex wants to know, and Winn just chuckles.

“Your girlfriend’s a keeper, you know, Danvers. A real keeper.”

“Where’d that come from?”

“The bottom of my heart -- ow! No, I’m serious!”

“Well. You do have a point. She really is.”
anonymous asked:

We know Maggie would notice everything about Alex and find what makes her happy.
Until Alex turned the table and surprise Maggie with....

She learns very quickly that Alex forgets to eat while she’s stressed, so she tag-teams with Kara to bring Alex lunch at the DEO so often that J’onn tosses up his hands and gets her clearance to just walk in unaccompanied whenever she pleases.

She learns very quickly that Alex is afraid of thunderstorms -- though she would never, ever say it aloud -- so every time it storms, she makes a fort out of their blankets and distracts Alex with her hands, her tongue, her Netflix account, until the storm passes.

She learns very quickly that Sisters’ Night is sacred, so she always makes sure she’s working late or going out on her own that night, because Alex isn’t sure how to navigate having more than one major person in her life, and she wants to make it as easy as possible on the unnecessarily guilt-ridden woman.

She learns very quickly that Alex particularly loves that black bra she has, and she buys two more just like it; that Alex’s favorite place to get local produce is nearly an hour drive away, and Maggie starts making the trip every weekend while Alex is out on her run; that Alex would never ask for a backrub, but absolutely loves them, so she brushes up on her massage skills and buys massage oil that’s the same brand as Alex’s favorite soap.

She learns all these things, and she does everything; but she doesn’t expect anything back. She’s never gotten anything back.

But somehow Alex figures out that she loves long baths, and Alex seems to find every excuse to draw her one, candles and soft jazz and all.

And somehow Alex pieces together how much Maggie loves it when Alex holds her hand just so, and then their hands are hardly ever not touching.

And somehow Alex knows that Maggie loves when she does that with her tongue, that with her fingers, that with her ass, and god has she never cum this hard with anyone.

But the thing that makes her cry hardest -- the thing that makes her entire body shake because how, how could someone love her this much? -- is when Alex overhears an early morning conversation with her niece in Blue Springs, something about I love you too, mamita, and you know I would be there if I could, I am so sorry, honey, but don’t worry, your dad is gonna give you the best birthday you could possibly ask for, okay? and the very next night, Maggie is getting a call from her niece asking her to pick her up at the airport, because Maggie might not have been able to afford the flight but Alex could and Alex did and the smile on her niece’s face and her shriek when Maggie pulls of her helmet and lets her run into her arms, practically barrelling her over; Maggie’s heart positively explodes, because her family might have issues, but her niece is everything and Alex flew her in for her fourteenth birthday because Alex cares, because Alex pays attention, because Alex loves her.

And she’s never known, until the moment the three of them are having dinner and Alex is making her niece shriek with laughter, quite what that feels like.

anonymous asked:

prompt: our favourite gays have been so busy with work that they've barely seen each other for a few days, they plan a special sexy night in but end up being so exhausted from work they just end up curling up together and going to sleep (idk i just thought this could be kinda funny and cute)

So Danvers. Tonight, huh?

Alex blushes and Alex licks her lips, because Alex knows exactly what Maggie means by tonight. It’s been impossible for them to get more time together than quick lunches and even quicker, handsy make out sessions in stolen moments in alleyways behind crime scenes, equipment rooms in the DEO.

But tonight? Tonight, there are no impending attacks, and they’re both off shift. All night long.

Tonight, Sawyer. I can’t wait to touch you.

Kara arches an eyebrow as she senses Alex’s heart rate increase dramatically as she waits for a reply, as she checks her phone so, so much more often than usual.

Can’t wait to touch you, too, babe.

Alex smiles and blushes hard when her phone vibrates against almost immediately.

And taste you.

She blushes even deeper when her phone goes off again.

And hear you scream for me.

Kara is surprised Alex can even get this red, that any human could get this red, yet somehow look so damn pleased at the same time.

Mags, I’m still at work!

Alex gasps slightly at the response, earning a barely stifled snicker from Winn, a confused stare from Kara, and a deep, long breath from J’onn.

Perfect, I can bend you over that lab bench you look so hot standing over.

Alex smacks Winn lightly on the back of the head before typing out her response.

Oh my god, I need tonight to come. Like, right now.
“J’on, any chance I can head home early tonight? I have some uh… things to take care of.”

“Maggie changed her name to _things_?” Winn wants to know, and Kara’s eyes fly wide.

J’onn buries his face in his hand to hide his smile. “Yes, Agent Danvers. Go take care of things.
By all means, enjoy yourself.”

And she plans to. Very, very much so.

But before evening comes, she’s run two consecutive sting missions and, if Maggie’s later texts are any indication, Maggie’s had a deeply frustrating meeting with top brass and one of her men broke his leg in a raid.

Before evening comes, they’re both even more exhausted than they were to start the day.

“Hey, sexy woman,” Maggie grins when she opens the door with a bottle of wine, because she’d promised to make Alex cum, and she’d be damned if she would go back on said promise just because she was tired.

“Mmmm, I missed you,” Alex says softly into her lips, putting the bottle and Maggie’s gun and Maggie’s jacket onto the counter and pulling her hazily into the bedroom, hands roaming everywhere, Maggie moaning into her mouth and Alex gasping and grabbing at her harder at Maggie’s tongue slipping into her mouth.

They fall into bed wrapped in each other, fall into bed ecstatically and happily and full of relief because this is the perfect remedy for the lives they lead.

They fall into bed wrapped in each other, and then they both realize that they’re laying down. On soft sheets, in warm arms, on soft pillows.

“I want you,” Alex whispers as her body melts down into the comforter.

“I want you too,” Maggie tells her with closed eyes and a soft kiss to Alex’s nose.

“Sleep first, sex later?”

“But I also really just wanna hold you and sleep,” they spurt out at the same time.

Alex relaxes in relief and Maggie laughs and draws her closer, draws her under the covers, draws her jeans off and her bra off and her body close, close, close.

“In your arms? Always.”

Chapter Summary

anonymous asked:

Kara has the keys of Alex's apartment, so one morning she drops in on her sister to update her about a case but Alex is taking a shower and the one she finds in the kitchen making pancakes is Maggie (post 2x08)

She knows she has a lot to apologize for, just heading off to another Earth like that, and if she’s going to grovel to Alex, she figures she might as well do it with a dozen donuts in tow (ten and a half will be for her).

So when her key digs into Alex’s lock and she hears the shower running, she shrugs and figures Alex just got back from her run and that she’ll get started on the donuts without her, because she can grovel more effectively when she’s not super hungry, anyway.

But the room she steps into isn’t empty.

Maggie Sawyer is standing in her sister’s kitchen, spatula in hand, but that’s not the most bizarre thing about the situation.

No, the most bizarre thing is that Maggie’s hair is tied up but it is unmistakably sex hair; and Maggie is wearing nothing but one of Alex’s old button-downs and what must be a thong because nope nope nope no no no not looking nope nhhnn nope.

“Kara!” Maggie freezes, spatula frozen, pancake batter sizzling in the pan in front of her.

“Maggie, what’re you… you know what, I… I don’t wanna hear it, I um… I brought Alex donuts, but I’ll just – “

“No, no, hey, don’t go. I’m sure Alex would love to see you, I just uh – she – I – “

Kara glances at the half-eaten box of pizza, the half-full bottles of beer, that are still on the counter, on the makeup still smudged around Maggie’s eyes, giving her a distinctly sexy, distinctly morning-after look.

“You don’t need to finish that sentence, I think I can figure it out. Except… last we talked about it, you turned my sister down.”

The pan starts sizzling and Maggie flinches and goes to flip the pancakes – which, Kara notes with interest, she does expertly – before looking back up at the little sister of the woman she spent the night making love to.

“I was scared, Kara. She… she came out for me, and I didn’t want to… take anything away from her. I was trying to do the right thing by her. But then I got shot, and she told me that she realized that being gay isn’t about me, it’s about her, and I just… Your sister’s the most incredible woman I’ve ever met, Kara. I was scared of messing it up. Messing her up.”

“And why would you mess her up?”

Maggie stares at Kara as she holds the spatula down over each pancake in turn. She takes a deep breath and licks her lips and remembers Alex’s nails on her back, Alex’s wrecked screams as Maggie made her cum again, and again, and again.

“I – “

“She won’t, Kara.” They both jump slightly to find Alex standing in the doorway, hair dripping wet, baby blue towel wrapped around her body. Maggie’s mouth goes dry and she promptly forgets the pancakes, and Kara reaches over to remove the pan from the burner.

“Her ex apparently has her convinced that she’s a terrible human being, but her ex is most certainly wrong.” Alex shoots Maggie a significant look and Maggie swallows hot tears.

“Did you bring donuts?” Alex asks next, in a much different tone.

Kara grins broadly. “I did.”

“Stay?” Alex asks, her eyes soft and her eyes perfect, and Kara melts, because her sister is perfect and her sister is happy and Maggie was making pancakes for crying out loud.

“Yeah. Yeah, of course I’ll stay.”

“Yes ma’am. Kara, you want chocolate chips in yours?”

“Keep her, Alex. Keep her.”

“I plan to.”
She’s never really bottomed for anyone before.

Her other girlfriends, her other flings? None of them saw past her Triumph, past her leather jackets, smooth words, calm hands, cop badge, gun, and cool smirk.

None of them saw her truly vulnerable; when she tried to let them, it never ended well.

But Alex? Alex held her when she screamed and raged and broke things and sobbed after the massacre at the bar, and Alex held her hair back when she threw up from sheer grief, and Alex booked a flight for her niece to come visit her, and Alex made her laugh and Alex listened to her and Alex cared and Alex protected her.

And Alex watched her in bed, watched what she loved, watched what made her scream loudest, watched, watched, watched, because she didn’t expect to just get fucked, to just get off on Maggie’s body; no, Alex wanted to make Maggie feel incredible.

And she is, she is, holding her naked, writhing body down by her wrists, her eyes gleaming with raw need, raw want, for Maggie’s next scream, for Maggie’s next whine, because Alex is keening with raw need, raw want, to see Maggie’s pleasure.

And it’s new, for Maggie, to be this cared for, to be paid this much attention, but god, god, god, this woman – who spends her days in battle gear and lab coats and her nights undressing her, this woman who saunters onto bloody crime scenes like she owns them, who hauls rocket launchers onto her shoulder like they’re mere paperweights – this woman is giving her all of her attention, all of her fire, and it couldn’t possibly be making Maggie any hotter.

She whines and she groans and she arches her hips up, because Alex is slipping out of her again, and she finds that she can’t help but beg.

“Please,” she keens, and Alex smirks, and Alex still holds her down.

“Please what?”
“Please don’t stop fucking me.”

Alex growls softly in the back of her throat and tightens her fingers around Maggie’s wrists, waiting.

Maggie knows what she wants, and Maggie could cum with the mere thought of giving it to her.

“Please don’t stop fucking me, Daddy.”

Alex full out moans, now, and before Maggie can draw another shaky breath, Alex has her flipped onto her stomach, has her strapon poised to slip back inside her from behind.

“Color?” Alex demands raggedly, and Maggie swallows.

“Yellow,” she whispers, and Alex eases off of her immediately.

“Need to stop, baby?”

Maggie shakes her head into the pillow. “No, I just… you like this, Al? Like, you’re turned on? Not just… not just for me?”

Alex sweeps Maggie’s hair off her cheek and kisses every part of her face she can reach. “I am so fucking turned on, Mags. I love feeling you like this, I love everything about this. About us.”

“So what’s your color?”

“I’m green, babe, but only if you are.”

Maybe it’s something in Alex’s eyes, or maybe it’s something in the way Alex kisses her nose, or maybe it’s something in the way she seemed to love her more for hitting pause on their play instead of being irritated, instead of being resentful, instead of being accusatory and impatient and demanding.

Maybe it’s everything that is Alex.

Whatever it is, it has Maggie biting her lip, Maggie backing her ass back into Alex’s strapon.

“Then I’m pretty sure you were about to fuck your little girl, Daddy.”

Alex groans into her ear and Maggie’s entire body shivers as Alex immediately shifts to slip back inside her – easily, because she’s dripping wet – and Maggie screams into the pillow at the sensation.

“Fuck,” Alex moans into the back of her neck, and Maggie shifts her knees back farther so she can take Alex deeper.

“You’re such a good little girl for me, baby, so fucking tight for me. You like feeling me stretch you out, my girl?”

“Yes Daddy,” Maggie whines, and Alex finds her palm at her side to check in. Maggie squeezes her fingers immediately, and Alex grins wickedly at the sign to keep going.

“Do you wanna feel Daddy cum inside you, baby?” Alex wants to know, and she almost cums then and there as Maggie slips one of her hands under her body so she can put pressure on her clit while Alex fucks her.
“Yes, yes, yes Daddy, please,” she breathes, just barely, because Alex is pounding into her so hard, kissing her back so reverently, breathing so raggedly, and the combination has Maggie more wrecked than she’s ever been.

“You know what I need you to do for me then, baby? I need you to be a good little girl and cum for me, okay? Can you do that for Daddy?”

But Maggie is completely undone before Alex even chokes out her sentence, and Alex isn’t far behind because Maggie’s entire body is shuddering, is pulsing, underneath hers and she’s screaming into her pillow and Alex’s name is spilling out of Maggie’s lips and three words Alex never thought she’d say to anyone are pouring out of hers, and she repeats them, over and over and over and over, when they’ve both rode through their waves, when she gathers Maggie into her arms and calls her beautiful and calls her perfect and calls her her angel and kisses every inch of her face to prove it.

And Maggie has never felt more sated, and Maggie has never felt more loved.

Collage AU; Lena and Maggie are best friends. Maggie has a huge crush on popular girl Alex Danvers. At a party, Lena swoops in like the best friend she is as the wingman. A year later, Kara Danvers, the little sister of Maggies now girlfriend starts collage and it's Maggies turn to play the role of wingman. If you like collage au's, and think lena and maggie could ever be friends, i'd love to see this happen? -hospital anon

Happy news! I'm probably going home this week!

YES YES YES YES I’m so happy you’re hopefully going home this week!!!
Wonderful news!!! Sending lots of hugs your way, darling!!! <3 <3 <3

“You might want to put your eyes back in your skull, Sawyer, or you’re going to spill your HCl all over my notes.”

Maggie hisses slightly and lifts her vial so she’s no longer putting Lena’s organic chem notes in the line of fire. Or, acid, to be more precise.

“Sorry, L, I just – “

“I know, hun. Everyone knows. And don’t panic, because by everyone, I just mean me. Oh, don’t give me that baffled look, you’d have an outwardly over-inflamed sense of self to compensate for scalding inner self-hatred if you grew up a Luthor, too.”

The HCl does spill this time, and Lena yelps and smacks Maggie’s shoulder lightly as she salvages her papers. Alex turns around at the sound, and Maggie’s insides twist like she just swallowed the damn acid because she’s got goggles on over her glasses and she still manages to look every bit the prom queen, every bit the star surfer, every bit the smartest, most popular pre-med student in the whole damn college.

Alex’s eyes scan Lena and Maggie’s work bench even as she holds her own chemicals poised perfectly, measured perfectly, above her beaker. “You two alright there?” she asks, and Maggie’s throat closes up, so Lena flashes her warmest smile, and Lena decides to play wingman – well, wingwoman – because this crush has gone on long enough, as has Maggie’s insistence that she’d never wanna be with me anyway, I mean god, she’s perfect and I’m just… well… me.

“Yeah, yes, fine, my clumsy hands, you know,“ Lena takes the blame, and wets her red lipstick with her tongue, and for a moment, Maggie wants to deliver a sound kick to her shins because oh come on seriously, don’t seduce her right in front of me. But Lena is more loyal than that, and Maggie knows it, and Alex isn’t her type, anyway.
Alex grins slightly and goes to turn her attention back to her own bench. “It’s Alexandra, isn’t it?” Lena asks, and Maggie nearly panics.

“What the hell are you doing?” she hisses.

“Getting you a girlfriend,” Lena mutters under her breath as she strides over to Alex’s bench.

“Alex. Yes.”

“Well, we haven’t been properly introduced. I’m Lena, and that beauty over there’s Maggie Sawyer. She’s the one who figured out that blood spatter problem that no one else could crack in forensics last week, you know.”

And suddenly Alex’s eyes are meeting Maggie’s, and she’s licking her lips, and she’s slipping off her goggles so she can look at Maggie straight through her glasses. “I know. I um… I’ve been meaning to talk to you. About that. Actually. I just, um… You two always seem like you’re together.”

“We’re not,” Maggie splutters as Lena smirks and slips into the background. “Together. But um. But I can… if you wanted, you know, I can take you out on my Triumph, this bar I know. Go over… labs, or… something. Together. You and me.”

Alex’s eyes slip up and down Maggie’s body and a small smile plays at her lips as a blush rises in her cheeks.

“I think I’d like that, Sawyer. I think I’d like that a lot.”

It doesn’t take long for them to become the most popular couple on campus. And it takes even less time for Lena to proudly claim credit for it at every opportunity, to bemoan her singledom and swear that Maggie will simply have to repay the favor of setting her up with her own soulmate one day.

That day comes about a year later, when Alex’s dorm is hosting a party for the new batch of freshmen, and Lena freezes when she sees the blonde with the green eyes, adorable cardigan, and beaming smile.

“Alright there, Luthor?” Maggie wants to know, but Lena just stares. Maggie follows her gaze and smirks and decides not to tell her who the girl is, because if she does Lena’s sure to come up with some excuse not to talk to her.

“Babe,” she whispers as Alex passes behind her, melting into her arms with a smile and a kiss. “Lena’s looking at Kara like she uh… wants to get to know her better. That okay with you?”

“Oh my god, please yes. If anyone can get Kara to come the hell out as bi already, it’s Lena.” Maggie grins and Alex steps back to watch, and Maggie takes Lena by the elbow and practically drags her across the room.

“Maggie!” Kara shouts and launches herself into her arms. Lena’s eyes fly wide as they embrace, in awe of someone who’s so free with affection, who’s so open with love.

“Hey Little Danvers. Someone I want you to meet. Lena, this is Kara Danvers, Alex’s kid sister. Kara, this is my best friend Lena Luthor. She runs the whole businessy sciencey thing – ”

“The Entrepreneurial Society of Bioengineers.”
“Right. That fancy ass, super smart, super socially conscious, super you’ve gotta be a badass and a genius to be in this club let alone run it thing on campus. You two should – you know – talk.”

Kara takes one look at Lena, one look at Maggie’s none-too-subtle wink as she strolls away in search of her girlfriend, and furiously adjusts her glasses with a fire in her eyes and a shy smile pulling at her lips.

“Nice to meet you, Lena.”

“And you, Kara. Has your… sister, apparently… shown you around, or would you like me to give you a tour?”

Lena bites her lip and Kara forgets both English and Kryptonian.

Across the room, Maggie rests her head on Alex’s shoulder, reveling in Alex’s hand holding her close around her waist.

“I think I just got your kid sister laid.”

Alex groans and pulls away, and Maggie staggers, laughing. “Watch it, Sawyer, or she’ll be the only one.”

Maggie laughs into Alex’s teasing kiss as the party spills on around them.

“I’m not killing him, he’s hungry!”

“I just fed him!” Kara protests from an exceedingly awkward angle, upside down next to Maggie’s elbow.

"How do you know he's not Kryptonian and doesn't need to eat as much as you do?"

“Schott, just get over here and spin the damn spinny thing!”

“Whose turn’s it?” Winn scampers over, Kara’s Tamagotchi still in hand.

“Mine,” James says, and he’s been lucky so far – he’s still standing in a relatively non-contortionist position.

Winn flicks at the arrow and they all strain to see where it lands. Maggie’s hands are starting to shake slightly – she’s practically doing a handstand, and has been for the last three rounds – but damned if she’s gonna cave.

“Okay James, right hand on red,” Winn announces triumphantly, and James groans, because the nearest red circle is directly under Maggie’s chest.

“Maggie, you good?”

“Have at it, Olsen, you’ll have the honor of being the only man that close to my boobs like, ever.”

“Awww, James, you’re so special!” Winn squeals, and Kara’s body quivers with laughter.

“Don’t topple over now, Little Danvers.”

“Dream on, Maggie!”

“Watch that arm, Olsen, just remember whose girlfriend she is.”

“I have no designs on your woman, Alex.”
“Yeah and anyway babe, don’t you have a great view of my ass right now?”

“It is a great view.”

“Okayyyyy, whose turn is it now?” Kara desperately wants to know, and Alex and Maggie share a soft laugh.

“That’d be me – make it a good spin, Schott,” Alex tells him, and he sneaks more food to Kara’s Tamagotchi before he does.

“Mmm, and suddenly everyone wants to be close to me,” Maggie hums, and Alex chuckles.

“You complaining, Sawyer?” She shifts and she keeps DEO-style balance and core strength and she easily slides her left hand onto a blue circle that leaves her in a strange contortion and Maggie with a great view of her cleavage.

Maggie hisses and licks her lips, and it’s not the difficulty of her position, but the intensity of Maggie’s eyes, that makes Alex overbalance, that makes Alex slip, that makes Alex fall. Kara jumps up in victory, James hastily slips his hand out from under Maggie’s body, and Alex yanks Maggie on top of her to the tune of Winn’s whoops and James’s laughter and Kara’s really Alex?

“I believe you just lost, Danvers.”

“I was distracted. Doesn’t count. We’ll play Operation next. I never lose at Operation.”

“Mmm, I bet you don’t, Doctor Danvers.”

“Okay guys, who wants to play Trouble?” Kara squeals as James continues to chuckle and Winn’s ears turn red.

“Noooo, I hate the damn sound that dice popping thing makes. My cousin used to just walk around the house pressing it, like, all the time.”

“Like this?” Winn asks, and Maggie groans as she pulls Alex to her feet and into her arms.

“Oh then, Mouse Trap?” Winn flinches as Maggie grabs the Trouble board from his hands and tosses it onto the couch before tousling his hair with a grin.

“No, the poor mice didn’t do anything!”

“Yeah, Kara never used to let us play that one. She’d always try to free them.”

“Awww, Little Danvers! You’re so sweet! But hey, what about another round of Twister?”

“You only want another round of Twister because it ended with Alex pulling you on top of her!”

“And that’s a bad thing because?”

“Because there are things about my sister’s life I don’t need to see.”

“I mean, we can always just take it into the next room, just the two of us –”

“Alex!”
“What, then you wouldn’t have to see anything!”

“X-ray vision! And super hearing!”

“Fair.”

“Wait wait, guys, I got it! Mario Kart!” James calls, and in mere minutes, Kara is thumping Winn, his tongue sticking out in concentration, on his back to drive faster. Maggie is hurling bananas at a cursing James, and Alex is pulling ahead of them all with a smug grin on her face and fire in her eyes.

They’re still arguing jovially about whether Toad or Luigi’s vehicle handles better the next morning when they spill into the DEO.

J’onn only stares at his ragtag group of children for a moment before deciding that the only thing he needs to know is that Alex’s eyes are gleaming and her step is lighter than he’s ever seen it, and Maggie’s name is on her lips, and she’s being more touchy with her friends, more open, laughing harder and smiling bigger.

And he couldn’t ask for anything more for his girl. Even if she and Mr. Schott are currently giving him a headache with their rowdy discussions of some sort of virtual racetrack that he most certainly never needed to know about.

Omg but like can you please continue that mini fic where Kara tells Maggie she's Supergirl it's so cute and I love how you wrote Alex. I can't. Nsjdndbe you're writing is amazing and I can't wait to see what you write more of for sanvers in general. :D

Continuation of Chapter 111.

“What… you’re not mad?”

“Alex, why… why would I be mad?”

Alex steps back, and Maggie’s hands slip off of her cheeks to fall limply by her sides, her face shattering as Alex shakes her head, as Alex blinks down tears she refuses to shed, as Alex’s brow furrows because she doesn’t understand, she can’t comprehend, what Maggie is trying to tell her.

Maggie glances back at Kara, whose eyes are sad, whose eyes are wet, whose eyes are broken, staring at her sister, staring at her world, her world that fails to understand how important she is.

“I lied to you, for months I lied to you, I let you be jealous of Supergirl and I let you get to know only half of my sister, I let you into only a small part of my life, I – I lied to you, Maggie, I’m pretty sure that’s in the first chapter of the how to be a terrible girlfriend handbook.”

“Alex,” Kara whispers, head down and eyes streaming.

“Alex,” Maggie whispers, too, but her eyes aren’t on the ground: her eyes are on the woman crumbling in front of her.

“Alex, you know what? I’ve got the prequel to the how to be a terrible girlfriend handbook. I’ve got the how to be the best girlfriend Maggie Sawyer’s ever had handbook. And you know what’s all over that handbook? Being Alex Danvers. Being exactly who you are, babe. Being the woman who saved my life before she even really knew me, the woman was brave enough to kiss me, to want me, when I was so wrapped up in being a… self-righteous coward, the woman…”

She glances at Kara and she smiles.

“The woman who’s all about her family. Who jumps in front of her bulletproof sister because you don’t care that you’re not bulletproof as long as she’s safe. You take me on picnics and you hold the door for me and you make me laugh and give great massages and you take me for rides on your Ducati and fuck babe, you have a Ducati, and you… you look me at me like… you look at me like I’m worth something, like I’m worth the time of the most incredible woman I have ever met. And apparently, I’ve met more of Supergirl than I thought. Again, no offense, Kara.”

“None taken, Maggie,” she says again, but her voice is choked with tears this time, because this woman, this woman, this woman needs to marry her sister. Like, stat.

“You’re perfect, Alex. More perfect because Supergirl is your sister, not less. Never less. Not to me.”

“So you’re not mad.”

Maggie’s dimples come out in full force and she takes Alex’s hands into hers, kissing each of her knuckles as Kara squeals behind them.

“No, babe. I’m not mad. Right now, I love you more than I’ve ever loved you.”

Alex inhales sharply and Maggie blinks because Maggie suddenly realizes what she said.

“You love me.”

“Yeah, Ally. I love you.”

A single tear drips down Alex’s cheek, and Maggie kisses it away.

“Well good then. Because I love you, too.”
Chapter 122

misguidedghost800 asked:

Jeremiah is rescued from CADMUS and after having a touching and beautiful reunion with his family he has but one request, he wants to talk to Maggie Sawyer privately. Although it may seem strange and awkward, Maggie goes and is surprised when he cries to her and thanks her for being there for his daughters, one in particular. Maggie expresses her love for Alex and asks for permission to marry her (Kara obviously eavesdrops and nearly crying and gets so excited to tell Alex but its a secret)

Alex invites her and Kara says she’s family and Eliza reasons that Maggie rescued Jeremiah, for crying out loud, of course she should come to their first dinner back together as a family, and Maggie declines each time, because you need time just with your dad, babe and you’re sweet, kid, but I don’t want to intrude and oh no, I couldn’t, I was just doing my job, ma’am.

It isn’t until Jeremiah himself calls her – I got your number from Alex, Detective, I hope that’s alright – and insists that she come to dinner does she concede, because he’s the one who’s back from the dead, and it is his party, after all.

So Maggie slips on her black jeans and her red collared shirt and her most fitted black suit jacket and shows up with flowers and chocolate liquor because Alex said it’s your favorite, sir.

She helps Jeremiah cook and she helps Eliza set the table and she watches as Alex clings to Jeremiah’s side like he’ll disappear again if she dares to do so much as blink.

She’s quiet during dinner, because Alex has so many questions, and Jeremiah puts a calm hand on Eliza’s when she tries to interject that I’m sure your father doesn’t want to have such intense conversations at the table, Alexandra and then Jeremiah has questions and Maggie smiles because she gets to hear all about Alex’s teenage years, all about her surfing trophies and her science awards and research grants, none of which she actually tells him about – it’s all a combination of Kara and Eliza, with Alex blushing and Alex squeezing Maggie’s hand under the table and making knowing eye contact with her father, her father, because her father is home and he’s beaming at her like she’s his entire world, and her heart might burst any moment.

Maggie tries to slip out when they settle onto the couch, Alex snuggled against her father but extending a hand up to Maggie, but Maggie shakes her head with a soft smile.

“You guys should spend time together.”

“Actually, Maggie, I was hoping I could talk with you, if that’s okay.”

“Me, sir? Um, yeah, yes, of course.”

He kisses Alex’s bewildered forehead and stands, gesturing Maggie into Alex’s room as Kara’s eyes widen, Eliza’s eyebrow arches, and Alex tries not to hyperventilate.
Maggie tries, too, because the last time she was summoned by someone’s father for a private chat, she left with a bloody lip and a limp that lasted a week.

But Jeremiah smiles softly at her, and she can suddenly see where Alex learned to be so gentle with Kara, so patient.

He pulls out Alex’s desk chair and sits on it, giving Maggie the more comfortable spot on the bed.

“Detective Sawyer – Maggie – I just… I wanted to thank you again for helping get me out of that hellhole. For bringing me back to my family.”

“Best part of the job, sir.”

“Jeremiah.”

“Yes sir. Uh, yes, Jeremiah.” He chuckles compassionately at her nerves, at the way her fingertips are pressed gently together, containing and disguising her fear, but barely.

“I also wanted to thank you for taking such good care of my daughters. It’s clear how much you care for them both. One, in particular.”

Maggie breathes in, breathes out, slowly, steadily. Alex had shakily told him Dad, Maggie’s my girlfriend, and he’d smiled and he’d nodded and he’d shared a private glance with Eliza, and they’d discussed it, as far as Maggie knew, no further so far.

And suddenly there are tears coating Jeremiah’s words, sparkling in his slightly shuddered eyes.

“Alex has always been so strong, but she hasn’t… she hasn’t been very good at doing what’s good for her. Probably the only thing she’s not good at. And I couldn’t be there for her, I wasn’t…”

His voice cracks, and he lets a tear drip down his face, and Maggie wants to reach out and take his hand, but finds that she can’t move.

“But you were. She lets you take care of her, and I’ve never seen Alex let anyone do that. And I know, I know I missed so much, but I… I had my sources, and I was able to keep tabs on my girls, at least a little, and I… she… thank you, Maggie. Just… thank you.”

Maggie’s eyes are full of tears, now, too, and her throat is lined with them as she wets her lips, as she opens her mouth to speak, shakily, shakily, steadily. “I don’t know if I deserve her, si – Jeremiah. Your daughter – both of your daughters, but god, Alex – I’m in love with her. I am… I am so, so in love with her, and I wasn’t gonna ask you, not yet, but, since we’re talking, I… All I wanna do is be good to her, all I wanna do is make sure she has everything she could ever want in her life, and I… I wanna give that to her, so I want… I want to marry your eldest, sir, and I… I know you don’t know me yet, but I’d be honored if I could get your blessing before I ask her.”

A loud thud and excited squeal outside the door makes them both start, forces the hovering tears in their eyes down both of their faces, and Jeremiah is the first to laugh. “Kara’s super hearing,” he says. “We’d better get out there before she can’t contain herself and tells Alex she’s getting engaged before you get the chance to pop the question.”

“So… yes?”

“Welcome to our family, Maggie Sawyer.”

J'oon becoming maggie's space dad too, absolutely hating it "great, another one." While maggie is running towards an alien she's just like alex and kara which means she's trouble. And maggie thinking he doesn't like her but he does, he's just a tired dad

She runs right into the line of fire, and J'onn immediately knows why.

Because she is just like Alex. She is just like Kara.

She is brave, and she is selfless, and she is bold, and she is a hero.

She is, in short, stressful and stubborn and so, so stupid.

“Detective Sawyer, I made it clear that no one was to move until my signal! If you expect to join up with any DEO missions in the future, you need to be willing to respect our chain of command.”

“I do respect it, sir, and I’m sorry, truly, but Alex was in his line of fire, and I wasn’t about to let her get shot, sir.”

He sighs and he covers his face in his hands and he dismisses her with a wave of the other, and as she walks away, shoulders dropping slightly from his chastising her, he mutters affectionately to himself, “Great. Another one.”

Another one to worry about, another one to watch out for, another one to protect.

Another one to love.

do-me-for-your-people asked:

Hey it's the chick from ao3 with the prompt about Sanvers going to maggies high school reunion to face all her homophobic classmates, and the asshole quarterback hits on Alex without knowing she's maggies girlfriend ;)

Maggie splutters helplessly when Alex steps out of her bedroom, taking in the sight of her girlfriend in a tight, low cut black dress, makeup just so, and glasses… glasses very much on.

“Al… Alex, you… you look, um… I don’t know if Blue Springs High quite ready for your… for you.”

“Oh,” Alex pouts, adjusting her glasses and licking her red lips. “Should I change?”

“No, no, nnhnn, no. Not at all, not even a little bit.”

“I think what my daughter is trying to say is that you look beautiful, Alexandra,” Maggie’s mom supplies as she passes Maggie’s room, and Alex blushes deeply.

“Thank you, Mrs. Sawyer.”

“Yeah, thanks for being smoother with my girlfriend than I am, Ma.”

Her mother just laughs and waves them off.

“You’re going to be late for this reunion. Might be nice for you to show up on time, Margaret: show them all you’ve changed some.”

Maggie groans as she pulls her mom in for a kiss on the cheek, adjusting her suit jacket and offering Alex her arm as she led her down the stairs.

“Feel like I’m taking you to prom.”

Alex beams. “Who did you take to prom?”

Maggie wilts slightly. “I didn’t go. I was uh… I was dating this girl, but her dad found out and it uh… wasn’t exactly pretty.”

“Oh, babe.” Alex strokes her cheek and kisses her face gently, lightly, so she doesn’t leave a lipstick stain.

“Oh, so I’m your trophy girlfriend?” Alex flirts, but Maggie’s eyes grow serious.
“No. Never. You are everything to me, Alex, I’d never reduce you to – ”

“Oh honey, I was just teasing.”

“Yeah?”

“Yes. Yes. But… trophy girlfriend or not, I am proud to be going with you. Get to see where you grew up.”

Maggie’s smile is back, and she opens the door of her pickup for Alex and offers her hand to help Alex step inside.

She drives with one hand on the wheel, the other hanging out the window, regaling Alex with stories of her childhood, pointing out which dirt roads led to trouble and which led to adventure and which led to both.

She grows quiet as they pull into her high school’s parking lot, and her eyes grow keen like they do when she’s on a mission. She rattles off the names of the owners of some of the cars in the lot, some of the trucks in the lot, because this isn’t a town that changes very much.

“You sure you’re okay to come with me? These people aren’t all gonna be used to… this. Us.”

“I’m not any less sure than I was the first sixteen times you asked me, Mags. And anyway, wouldn’t Tommy kill you if we bailed?”

Maggie grins at the mention of her high school best friend, the only other out gay kid in school. In town.

And Tommy is the only reason Maggie leaves Alex’s side even for a moment during the night, the gym crowded with memories and old grudges and old flames and old inside jokes and old traumas and old prides.

Maggie steals off with Tommy, just for a moment, to see if a secret passage they used to take partners to make out in is still there, and Maggie wants to bring Alex but Tommy invokes an old code they had to keep it sacred, to keep it only between them and their high school people, and I really like you, Alex, and this one really loves you, but we swore a blood oath and Alex laughs and waves them away because I’ll be fine, babe, you guys have fun, and it’s only for a moment, but a moment is all it takes.

“Hey beautiful,” a deep voice sounds right on Alex’s neck, and she closes her eyes for a moment to refrain from punching him right away, because Maggie’s told her stories, and odds are she’d love to deck most men in this room.

Alex turns and Alex just arches an eyebrow and Alex simply regards the man who still has the lean build of a football star with bored eyes.

“They don’t make ‘em like you in Blue Springs, baby, so I’m guessing you’re someone’s date, but lemme tell you, I came here alone and I can show you a better time than he can.”

“Oh, no man – and certainly not you – could give me a better time than she does.”

The man’s brow furrows and his jaw clenches and he barks a harsh laugh. “What, you Sawyer’s girl? Little science freak’s family should’ve known they didn’t belong here, and she should know that a girl like you deserves a real man. I can give you that.”
Alex puts down her drink and Alex licks her lips and casts her voice low. “A real man?”

He grins and takes a step closer to her, his lips a breath away from hers.

“Yeah.”

Alex arches a quick eyebrow, and Alex nods, and Alex shifts, and Alex slams his head down into the table behind her.

“Next time you wanna be a racist, misogynist prick, you might wanna remember that your entire high school class just watched you get slammed down by a woman in five inch heels who’s going to go home to Maggie Sawyer’s beautiful family and have far better sex with her than any woman will ever have with you.”

She tugs him back up by his hair and she picks up her drink and she strolls away, toward Maggie and Tommy’s slack jaws, Tommy’s eyes alight like a five year old on Christmas morning, Maggie’s eyes alight like she’s never seen anyone quite as attractive as Alex fucking Danvers.

Because she hasn’t.

And the slow clap that starts in the back of the gym and circulates through all the nerds, all the misfits, all the people of color, all the queers, and eventually spreads even to the popular girls who’d never really liked how the quarterback treated them anyway makes Alex curtsy, makes Alex blush, makes Alex fall into Maggie’s arms and swoon as she’s kissed like she’s never been kissed before, to a combination of angry silence and liberated cheers.

And that night, she does have far better sex with Maggie than any woman’s ever had.

With anyone.

Chapter Summary

anonymous asked:

Could you write about Maggie after Alex told her it was a mistake? What was she thinking, feeling, why did she decide to show up when Alex called her?

She doesn’t care that she already took the morning off; doesn’t care that she came into the precinct glowing and came back from her break just a few hours later with red eyes, clenched fists, and a set jaw.

Doesn’t care, for once, that she’s being an emotionally open book at work.

Doesn’t care, because she’s constantly pulling extra shifts, and they were fine without her this morning; they’ll be fine without her again this evening.

She doesn’t get on her Triumph. She doesn’t get on her Triumph because if she does, she’ll speed, she’ll take corners too sharply, she’ll get into an accident. She’ll crash it because she’s so far gone. She’ll crash it because she’s reckless, because she doesn’t care, because she knew it was a stupid idea, knew Alex wasn’t ready, knew she wouldn’t be able to survive if Alex, Alex, Alex was the next woman to shatter her through to her bones.

She blasts Lauryn Hill in her headphones, and she takes the damn bus, because she’s got just enough self-control left to get home safely. Before she lets go. Before she lets herself lose her cool.

She strips to nothing but boxers and her sports bra; she ties up her hair and she puts her iPod into her speaker, switching it to Nas. She wraps her hands, and she slips into the tiny second bedroom that serves as her break room, serves as her sanity room; serves as her heavy bag room.

She jabs and she crosses and she kicks and she sobs and she hits harder and she slams until her hands sting under her wraps.

She hears her phone vibrate, and she glances at it.

Danvers.

She ignores it. She hits harder, throws combinations that would take down someone two times her size, but can do nothing against her own demons.

More vibrations. More combinations. Sweat drips down her shoulders, down her forearms, starting to shake.

Kara is Supergirl.

She doesn’t care that Alex lied. She gets why Alex lied.
She cares that Alex ran. She cares that Alex put her hands all over her body, tossed her head back and gasped her name like a prayer, cares that Alex kissed her, said she wanted to stay in the apartment together forever, forever, forever, and Maggie knew, she knew, it was just because she was bright and shiny, because Alex’s whole world was shiny right now, it had nothing to do with Maggie, because Alex spent the night with her soft, solid limbs wrapped around Maggie’s body, because Alex couldn’t seem to get enough of kissing her, of touching her, of figuring out how to make Maggie gasp, tremble, in her arms, all these things, and she cares that after all that, all that, Alex called it all a mistake.

Maggie is a mistake.

Of course.

But her phone buzzes in the pattern of a voicemail, and her curiosity, her small, tiny sliver of hope tugs the wraps off her hands, backhands the sweat off her forehead, and presses play on her messages.

Maggie, hi. Uh, Alex. Listen, I… I screwed up. I – can you just, come over? Please? I get it if you don’t want to, I get it I messed everything up, but I just… Come over. Please. Okay, um. Bye.

Maggie sighs and Maggie tosses the phone back onto a chair, and Maggie slams her bare fists once, twice, three times, into the heavy bag.

The longer she lets this drag on – the longer she lets Alex use her as a yo-yo, use her as a discovery, use her as an adventure before she moves on to whoever’s better, whoever deserves her more, whoever’s less damaged goods than Maggie – the more it’s going to hurt.

But wearing Alex’s t-shirt had felt like no kind of peace she’d felt before, and Alex’s enthusiasm terrified her, but it also… what if it was about her? What if she really did like Maggie as much as she rambled about?

Supergirl is her sister, and life is too short, and it can’t get any more painful than this anyway, can it, and Alex Danvers might just be worth the risk. Right?

Be there in an hour.

She showers and she arms herself with flannel and she arms herself with caution, but what lets her pick up her Triumph and knock on the door of this woman she’s too quickly falling in love with is a little spark.

A little spark, rapidly becoming a full-out flame, of hope.

Sooooo I guess you know what's coming: we need your interpretation of what happened the night before the morning after that we saw. And also when they called in gay... I mean called in sick. And btw if we need to start a gofundme so you can quit your job and write for us all day, I am so in! ;)

Maggie told her she’d bring dinner, and Alex had assumed that meant takeout.

So she’s surprised when she opens the door and Maggie’s got a soft grin and grocery bags.

“What’s all this?”

“Told you I’d bring dinner, Danvers. Takeout’s great, but you deserve something a little more… personal.”

“Personal?” Alex flirts with a low voice as she closes the door behind Maggie, taking the bags from her and lifting them onto the counter.

“Mmhmm,” Maggie smiles, leaning up on her tip toes to meet Alex’s soft kiss, and she can’t help the low groan that builds in the back of her throat as Alex’s tongue flits tentatively into her parted lips.

“Aww,” she barely breathes, and Alex’s hands on on her waist and Alex’s fingers are slipping up her shirt and Maggie is seeing stars and they can’t, they can’t, they can’t, not this soon, not this soon.

“Yeah?” Alex rasps, pulling back slightly, stilling her fingers, lips slightly swollen, pupils dilating, chest heaving.

“I was gonna make you dinner.”

Alex grins and Alex backs up and Maggie sighs at the loss of contact and Alex leans across the counter to get another kiss with the safety of a granite countertop between them. Maggie obliges and her stomach is nothing but butterflies, and – judging by the dorky and irrepressible grin on Alex’s face – the winged creatures have also made a home in her belly.

“So,” Alex wants to know as Maggie starts pulling groceries out of her bags. “How was your day?”

Maggie smiles at the domesticity of the question, at the casual way Alex steals a grape and pops it into her mouth with doe-eyed innocence.

“Long,” Maggie tells her. “There’s this string of missing persons that I just… I can’t connect it, not yet. Pieces aren’t coming together, it… long. Day was long.”
“You’ll crack it, babe. You’ll bring them home.”

Maggie smiles softly and sets to washing peppers, lettuce, tomatoes, bringing rice to boil. “They’re not my cases, just going around the precinct. I’m still… massacre stuff, you know? Finding families, notifying them. That kinda thing.”

“Maggie,” Alex sighs sympathetically, slipping behind her and putting her chin on Maggie’s shoulder, her arms around her stomach. Maggie leans back into her embrace, lets her body relax, because she’s still not ready to talk about the massacre, still not ready to process it beyond what she has to do at work, but damn do Alex’s arms make it feel just a little better.

Eventually, they disentangle, and eventually, Maggie learns that things have been slow on the alien invasion front so Alex has been spending a lot of time in the lab, a lot of time developing defenses against another biological attack by Cadmus; Alex learns that Maggie’s cop partner’s son is turning nine over the weekend, and she’s planning to get him tickets to a ball game, because she’s the one who taught him to play baseball; Maggie learns that Alex can steal red pepper pieces faster than Maggie can chop them; Alex learns that Maggie swoons and whines breathlessly when she’s kissed on the nape of her neck; Maggie learns that Alex fractured her wrist as a teenager while surfing; Alex learns that Maggie is a phenomenal, phenomenal cook.

They talk while they eat and they stare and they giggle, because god nothing’s ever felt like this before.

And suddenly it’s late, and Maggie’s standing to go, and Alex is taking her hand and looking down into her eyes and licking her lips and Maggie is kissing her, kissing her, kissing her, and Alex is trying to carry on a conversation between kisses.

“Stay?”

“Alex, I should – “

“Please, Maggie, please stay, I want – “

“I don’t wanna go too fast, Alex, we – “

“So we won’t, but I, Maggie, god, how do you do that?”

“What, this?”

“Yes.”

“Like this.”

Alex tosses her head back to allow Maggie better access to her throat, and Maggie’s tongue is perfect, and Alex is dragging them back to her bed and she’s tossing a pillow to the ground because Maggie, Maggie, Maggie, and she’s pulling her down on top of her and Maggie gasps and Alex can’t breathe and Maggie stops and puts their foreheads together and they struggle to breathe, breathe, breathe.

“Alex, please tell me if it gets too much, okay? Whenever it gets too much.”

Alex nods and Alex pulls her back in for a kiss, and Maggie rolls off of her so they’re laying next to each other, so their hands can roam where they’d like, and when Alex tugs her shirt up, Maggie’s throat goes dry but Maggie sits up and pulls it over her head and Alex nearly cries because you’re so beautiful, Mags, and tears are stinging Maggie’s eyes this time, and Alex’s fingers tremble and her eyes ask and Maggie nods because god those eyes, and it only takes Alex two tries to unhook Maggie’s bra and Maggie makes a note to congratulate her later, but now Alex is staring like she’s never seen anything beautiful in her entire life before and Maggie is swallowing tears and Alex asks and Maggie nods while chewing on her lower lip and Alex’s touches are tentative, are soft, are somehow both desperate and tender, and her lips, god, her lips, her tongue, and Maggie’s fighting not to cry because she can’t remember the last time someone paid this much attention to her body and she’s flipping Alex over and she’s asking and Alex is nodding desperately, whining softly, desperately, and Maggie is returning the attention, kissing every newly exposed inch of skin, of scar, of bruise and of fresh scrape as she slowly, slowly, slowly traces Alex’s shirt up her torso.

She lingers on Alex’s navel and she discovers – hell, Alex discovers – which unexpected spots make her squirm, make her yelp, make her grind her hips up into Maggie, and Maggie crawls farther up her body so she can come home to Alex’s lips, and again she slips off of her so they’re laying next to each other, hands tangled in each other’s hair, hands roaming everywhere, feverish and slow, slow, slow.

“How you doing, Danvers?” Maggie wants to know, and Alex beams and it makes Maggie’s entire world spin.

“Amazing. This is… you’re… this is amazing, you’re amazing.”

“So are you, Alex. So are you.”

They smile and they snuggle and they murmur about home and safety and happiness and not quite love because they’re both actively swallowing that four letter word down, and they fall asleep entangled, fall asleep enraptured, fall asleep falling in love.
Alex wakes up first. She’s long since programmed her body to get up for her morning surf, and since she moved from Midvale, her morning run. So she wakes up first, no need for an alarm, and for a moment she’s startled, because there’s a beautiful girl entangled in her arms, looking more peaceful than Alex has ever seen her, certainly more peaceful than she’s been since the massacre.

There’s a small smile on Maggie’s face as she sleeps, and Alex wonders if she’s dreaming. Wonders if she’s dreaming of her.

And god, last night, last night, last night.

She starts to shake, she starts to quicken her breath, because god they hadn’t even had sex but Alex had never been that turned on, never been that into anything, anyone. Just kissing, just touching, just exploring, just cuddling, just… being.

God.

Alex can’t remember any time she actually wanted someone to stay. And she can’t remember any time when someone did, because her body wasn’t of any use in the morning.

She sighs and she smiles and she presses her index finger to her eyes to stem the flow of tears and she slowly, slowly, slowly, disentangles from Maggie’s sleeping form, because she needs to take it all in, she needs to convince herself that this is real. And somehow, feeling Maggie’s breath on her neck makes it feel less real, not more, because how can this ecstasy possibly be real?

Maggie panics when she wakes.

Panics because it never works out well for her when she wakes up somewhere unfamiliar. Ever.

Panics because it might have worked out well, this time, but the bed next to her is empty. The bed next to her is lonely.

Her heart sinks and her throat tightens, but she hears the shower running. She hears the shower running, and – other than the incredible sounds Alex had made last night – she’s never heard anything sweeter. Because Alex didn’t run. Alex is just showering.

She sighs and she stretches and she lets herself remember, because god, they didn’t even have sex and her body had never known that kind of fire before. She’d said they were holding back for Alex, to not rush things for Alex, but god, she needed the slowness too, because if this was what making out, what touching, was like?

She doesn’t know how she’s going to handle everything. But she smiles broadly, because she looks forward to figuring it out with this woman.

She sighs again and as she stretches her fingers out, she stumbles on her bra on the edge of the bed. She hums with the memory of Alex’s trembling lips, Alex’s perfect, swollen lips, and she slips her bra on, looking around vaguely for her shirt but not bothering to look too hard, because she has no idea where she flung it.

She pads over to Alex’s second drawer, takes a guess, and she’s right: shirts. She grins at the first one she sees, because she had no idea Alex owned anything so orange. And slips it over her head and relishes the way it falls all the way down her body. She hugs herself for a moment, because her shirt smells like Alex – she smells like Alex – and she can’t think of a more perfect morning.

She rummages in the kitchen for mugs, for sugar, for coffee, and in each cabinet, she finds more things to love about Alex Danvers: the neat order, the classic designs, meshed with a small collection of mugs that were clearly gifts from Kara, not shoved in the back and out of the way of Alex’s soft aesthetic, but interspersed with it, just like she interweaves her kid sister into her life.

Maggie has always been weak in the knees for a woman who’s all about family.

Her heart races when she hears the shower stop, when she hears Alex padding around the bathroom, because this? This is what happiness feels like, this is what peace feels like, and she knows how beautiful the feeling will look on Alex, and she’s terrified – she’s terrified, because what if this is the only happy morning they get? – but Alex?

Alex might just be the one who’s worth the risks.

In honor of 2x09, how about Sanvers having sex for the first time after their reconciliation at the end of the episode?

I’m gonna change this slightly because I don’t want their first time to be make up sex but I will continue the scene and hopefully it satisfies!!!! <3 <3 <3

She feels Alex sigh in deep relief after a whispered thank you, and she keeps one of her hands on the small of Alex’s back, because she knows, she knows already, that that’s where Alex feels fear.

And she wants to comfort her, wants to tell her it’s going to be okay, that they’re going to be okay, because she never wants Alex to be scared, she never wants Alex to be in pain.

But the words stick in her throat, because she’s still scared, and she’s still in pain. So she settles for her hand on Alex’s fear spot, and hopes it’s enough.

Hopes she’s enough.

To make her not run again. To get her to stay.

Because others have left Maggie, and it’s broken her bones and it’s broken her spirit and it’s broken her heart.

But Alex? If Alex leaves, if Alex calls it, them, her, a mistake again?

There won’t be enough scotch and hot glue in the world to piece her back together. Because Alex is different, somehow. Alex is special, somehow.

And not because her sister is Supergirl.

Alex lifts her hand and runs it through Maggie’s hair, and the small action relaxes Maggie’s body, somewhat, relaxes Maggie’s defenses, somewhat.

“How does everybody not know?” she asks, and Alex pulls back from their hug, baffled, wondering if somehow Maggie talked to people at the DEO, if they told her they could tell that badass, devil-may-care Alex Danvers has something she’s never had before: a weakness.

“Know?”

Maggie chuckles. “About Kara.”

Alex splutters in relief, tugging at the hem of her shirt. “Cat Grant figured it out, but we um… we managed to nip it in the bud as best we could.”
“Cat Grant’s supposed to be a smart woman.”

Alex beams. “You’re a smart woman.”

“Aw, Danvers, don’t tell me you’re gonna resort to random compliments to make up for your running.”

Alex sobers immediately, and Maggie curses herself for screwing things up, for not just taking a damn compliment, for destroying everything. Again.

“I am gonna make up for it, Maggie, I… I’m gonna be the best girlfriend you’ve ever had, I… I’m gonna be braver. Like you.”

Maggie furrows her brow and leans back on the kitchen island, arms crossed over her chest.

“Braver.”

Alex shrugs and tugs more at the hem of her shirt. “I know you, too. I know you’ve been hurt, I know… I know people… women… haven’t treated you like you deserve to be treated. Haven’t loved you like you deserve to be loved. And I… today, I became one of those women. Who just… yo-yoed you. Tossed you aside, begged you to come back. I know you, too, Maggie, and I know you’re scared. And I never wanted to give you more of a reason to be, but I did, I gave you a huge reason, and I just… you’re brave. For coming over, for… hearing me out. For giving me another chance.”

Maggie bites her lip and lowers her gaze, and Alex puts a gentle finger under her chin. Maggie lets Alex lift her face so she’s looking up into her soft eyes.

“Thank you. I value you, Maggie, and I… I’m gonna work really hard. Because that’s what you deserve.”

“Yeah, people don’t… people don’t tend to think I deserve all that much.”

“Maggie – “

“No, it’s fine, I don’t… I don’t wanna be all self-pitying, I just… I really like you, Alex, and I think I can easily… You’re not just another name on a list.” She chuckles and reaches up to touch Alex’s cheek, because she might be terrified, but she’s in this, because she can’t not be in this, because Alex, Alex, Alex.

“There’s only one Alex Danvers. Aaaaand I kinda like her being my girlfriend. So, yeah. You get a second chance.”

Alex bites the inside of her cheek and Alex smiles and Alex leans down slowly, slowly, asking Maggie with her eyes, and Maggie answers with her lips, and their kiss is slow, and their kiss is soft, and their kiss is tender, and their kiss is fear, and their kiss is forgiveness, and their kiss is acceptance, and their kiss is hope.

When their lips part their arms are back around each other, their bodies are pressed against each other, because one hug wasn’t enough, not for tonight, not for any night.

They only part when Alex’s stomach growls and Maggie smiles broadly, because this woman is perfect.

“Can I cook my beautiful lady dinner?” Maggie wants to know, and Alex squirms with a massive smile and reddened cheeks and a crinkled nose, and it is the cutest thing Maggie has ever, ever seen.

“Only if I can regale you with tales of my mission on another planet while you do.”

“Wait, shut up. Another planet? That’s where Kara and the others were? Way to bury the lead, woman! Spill!” Maggie laughs, and Alex obliged.

And as Alex talks, Maggie’s fear melts, because this kind of intimacy? Alex stealing ingredients and popping them into her mouth while Maggie cooks, Alex pressing random kisses to the back of her neck in between breaths, Maggie touching her waist each time she needs to get by to get something, Alex automatically bringing her things from the higher shelves when she sees Maggie going up in tip toes?

This is what they’ve both been missing all along, and damn, is it worth every risk.
Maggie wearing a suit? Maggie wearing a suit for her?

Men had worn ties and tried to dance with her before.

Men had worn suits to try to impress her before.

But god, god, god, none of them did anything to her except make her bored, make her uncomfortable, make her wish she felt something, make her wish she felt like everyone told her she was supposed to.

But Maggie?

Maggie wearing a suit? Maggie wearing a suit for her?

Her knees had survived DEO training and her knees had survived being kicked out from under her and her knees had survived sharing a bathroom with an overeager little sister who could bench press an airplane.

But Maggie. Wearing a suit. For her. On Valentine’s Day. Even though Maggie hated the damn capitalist thing.

Her knees had never been so weak.

And Maggie held her up, Maggie wrapped her arms around her waist, but that wasn’t the only way Maggie held her.

Maggie held her with her eyes, Maggie held her with her smile, and for a long, long time it was forehead to forehead, breathing, breathing, taking it all in because never, never, had either of them felt this giddy yet this peaceful, this secure yet this excited. This gentle. This tender. This perfect.

Months ago, Alex had thought that perfection was Maggie smiling at her. Then she’d thought perfection was Maggie’s lips on hers. Then she’d thought perfection was Maggie’s hands roaming her body, Maggie’s eyes checking in before each new movement, Maggie’s soft moans when Alex moved a certain way, felt a certain way, touched a certain place. Then she’d thought perfection was Maggie, in her t-shirt, making coffee, the morning sunlight blossoming out of her hair and through her smile.

And those things were perfection.

But so was this, this, this.
Because men had worn ties before, men had worn suits before, and Alex had seen all the crappy romantic movies but she’d never understood the appeal, but now, now, now, as Maggie smiles and steps back to crack open a bottle of champagne, now Alex understands what the fuss has been, because now she can’t bare to have Maggie leaving her arms, so now she’s running her fingers down Maggie’s red tie – red, red, to match her dress, to match her corsage, because Maggie thought about it, thought about her, because Maggie cared enough to really romance her, not just try to get herself laid – and Maggie is gulping because Alex is pulling her close by her tie, running her fingers down, down, down, letting the silk run through her fingertips, letting her breath leave her body in a shaky exhale, because now her fingers are shifting to Maggie’s belt loops, pulling her entire body closer, closer, closer, and Maggie’s eyes are giving her all the permission she needs because Maggie’s pupils are dilating and her tongue is wetting her lips and she’s leaning up on her tip toes and she’s kissing Alex slow, she’s kissing Alex steady, she’s kissing Alex like it’s prom night and the world is theirs.

Because it is prom night – their prom night – and the world? The world is theirs.

Chapter Summary

anonymous asked:

Agent Danvers is giggling and she is so happy lately. what's wrong with her?, the DEO agents are a little bit scared of it, but then they see Alex and Maggie talking and everything makes sense. I love your fics so much

When Maggie shows up at the door, the agent who puts out his hand to stop her is confused, at first. Scared, at first.

But when she says “Come on, it’s not like I haven’t been in your James Bond super spy lab before; I need to see Alex, it’s important,” he knows.

He knows because she doesn’t say Agent Danvers, she says Alex, and there’s concern written in her eyes under her tough stance, and suddenly, everything slides into place.

The way everyone’s been whispering about how giggly Agent Danvers has been. The way everyone’s been whispering about she must be getting laid or do you think she’s possessed by some alien or something or maybe she went on SSRI’s? because Agent Danvers certainly has been throwing less DEO agents into walls and threatening less of them lately (poor Agent Schott; everyone had heard about that one).

But everything slides into place, now, because this is the woman Agent Danvers had started working with at the NCPD when she normally had such disdain for local law enforcement; this was the woman Agent Danvers had insisted on stitching up herself a couple weeks ago after the Cyborg Superman attack; this was the woman Agent Danvers had sprinted through the halls, yelling about what the hell happened and where the hell is she and did you catch him? Good, because I’m going to find him and kill him.

And now Agent Danvers is happy and floating and contorting her body into strange, excited shapes and she’s doing unnerving things like giggling.

And so suddenly it all makes sense.

“This way, ma’am,” he says to the tiny NCDP detective, and he leads her through to the command center, because this woman is the reason for Agent Danvers’s sudden spurt of utter happiness.

And he owes fifty bucks to the rookie who said it’s because she’s got herself a girlfriend.

Chapter Summary

anonymous asked:

Could you maybe write a fic about Alex failing at something important? I've been failing at literally everything these past months (mostly school) and now everyone looks down on me like I'm some lost cause. It'd just be nice to see the same situation play out differently. Alex has people who'd still support her even if she screwed up. That'd be nice to read. But I know you're busy and there are a lot more fun prompts to write, so it's okay if you don't do this one. thanks for everything anyway :)

Her baby sister needs her.

Her baby sister needs her, needs her to synthesize an antidote to the venom Cadmus pumped into her veins, the venom that sent her crashing out of the sky, that nearly broke her back in the fall, that left her unable to breathe without a respirator and that left her vital signs falling, falling, falling.

Her baby sister needs her, and she’s working as fast as she can, she’s drawing on everything she every learned in school, on the job, in the field, pouring over her mother’s dissertation drafts in the middle of the night as a teenager. She’s drawing on everything she has, and Kara is still dying.

She’s still dying, she’s still fading, and Alex’s hands are shaking, and she’s snapping at Winn, and she’s yelling at Maggie, and she’s glowering at J’onn when he takes her gently by the shoulders and reminds her that Supergirl needs Dr. Danvers right now, not her sister, and she’s failing, falling, failing.

Kara’s going to die, and it’s going to be her fault, her fault.

“You can do this, Alex, you just need to breathe,” Maggie’s reminding her, and then she’s leaving the lab with a steely, hurt look in her eyes because Alex doesn’t need to be reminded to breathe, my sister can’t breathe, she can’t breathe and I can’t figure it out, I can’t get this to work, I can’t do it, I’m out of ideas, and she’s going to die, so I can’t just relax and breathe, don’t you understand that?

But Maggie comes back a half hour later, and her hair is wind swept because she’s been running, running, running.

“Alex,” she says, and Alex doesn’t turn around because Alex is trying something else, another chemical combination, that is sure to fail, fail, fail.

“Kara just needs to breathe.”

There’s something in Maggie’s tone that makes her look up, that makes her stop, that makes her hope.

Maggie slips over to Kara’s bed, container of gas in hand, and she floods it into Kara’s oxygen mask.

Within moments, Kara coughs and Kara sits up and Kara, Kara, Kara, Kara is going to be just fine.

She doesn’t hear Maggie’s explanation about how their fight about breathing made her think of Kryptonian atmospheric conditions, doesn’t hear Maggie’s explanation about leeching out poison through the lungs, doesn’t hear any of it because she should have come up with it, she should have known, she should have thought of something so obvious, and she failed, she failed, she failed.

She failed and her sister almost died.

She’s home with a fresh bottle of bourbon that night, home and quarter way through the bottle when there’s a knock at her door.

“Alex, babe, come on, I know you’re home.” Maggie’s voice.

She responds by taking another drink.

“Agent Danvers, you realize I can just phase through this door, don’t you?”

She furrows her brow, because what the hell is J’onn doing here?

“Alex, come on, we brought pizza.” James.

“Yeah, at great risk to our health and well-being, since you’re probably in one of those moods where you’ll threaten me with your index finger. Again.” Winn.

Her window rattles and Kara is flying from her living room to her front door, opening it for the others before Alex can even stand up.

“Alex,” Maggie is in the door first, concern and love, love, just unfiltered love, written all over her face. She rushes across the room, kneels in front of her girlfriend, pries the bottle gently from Alex’s fingers, kisses the tears gently from her face, until Alex pulls back, until Alex stands up, until Alex shifts away, away, reaching again for her bottle, for her comfort, for her solace, because she failed, failed, failed.

And she doesn’t deserve the compassion on these people’s faces, she doesn’t deserve the love in their eyes or the pizza in their hands or the openness of their stances.

Them. She just doesn’t deserve them.

“I yelled at you,” she tells Maggie, her voice ragged with worthlessness and her voice ragged with liquor. “I yelled at you, you’re my girlfriend and I yelled at you, and you’re over here trying to make me feel better? And Winn, I snapped at you, and J’onn, I threatened your agents when I found out who was with Kara when she got shot, and James, James, god, I completely ignored you, Kara’s your best friend and you were terrified and I was so selfish, and Kara, if Maggie hadn’t had her brain on right I would have killed you, you would have died, and it would have been my fault, I failed you, Kara, so just leave me alone, all of you, please, because I – “

But Kara’s arms are wrapped around her body and Alex is tense and Alex is resisting but Kara is stronger and Kara knows and she waits and she waits and she’s right, because Alex breaks, breaks, and lets herself collapse into Kara’s arms, grabbing desperately at her like she’ll fade away if Alex lets go even for a moment, even for an instant. Kara pulls her gently back to the couch, and Maggie sits on her other side, and Winn kneels in front of her with one hand over his mouth and his other on James’s knee next to him, and J’onn stands back and hugs himself with his arms across his chest because his little girl is in pain and all he wants is to let her feel what he does, let her believe in herself like he believes in her, because that is what she deserves.

“Alex, the stuff Maggie gave Kara wouldn’t have worked if your antidotes didn’t keep her alive as long as they did. You helped, Alex, you did.”

“But I didn’t bring her back, Winn, I was so stupid, I couldn’t see what was right in front of me, I couldn’t figure it out – “

“All, that’s why you have people. That’s why you have a team, that’s why you have me. You don’t have to save everyone alone, Alex, you… look around you, babe. All these people, your friends – well, your family, really, right? – they all love you, Alex, even when – especially when – you can’t do something on your own. That’s what we’re for. That’s what people who love you are for.”

Kara is beaming at Maggie and James and Winn are exchanging grins and J’onn has never found his feet quite so interesting to stare at.

Alex sniffs and Alex wipes her eyes with the back of her index finger and Alex turns to look Maggie full in the face.

“People who love me.”

Maggie bites her lip and takes a deep breath and Maggie nods.

“And that… includes you.”

“I’m here, aren’t I, Danvers?”

“You love me, Maggie?” Her voice is shattered and her voice is hope and her voice is redemption and her voice is the possibility of self-forgiveness and maybe, just maybe, self-love.

“Yeah, Alex. Yeah, I do.”

Kara barely suppresses an awwwwwww and James and Winn hit each other’s arms and J’onn smiles at his feet.

“Even though I’m a failure.”

“You’re not a failure, babe. You’re not. You’re the farthest thing from it, babygirl. You’re perfect.”

“Maggie’s right, Alex. You’ve saved all of us before. None of us would be here without you. And even if that wasn’t true, Alex, you’re worth more than the number of saves under your belt. You’re amazing, Alex, just because you’re you. You’re my superhero. Always have been, always will be. Okay?”

Alex leans into Kara’s open arms and breathes, truly breathes, for the first time in hours, because Kara’s heartbeat is steady under hers, and she’s surrounded by the people she loves and apparently they love her too – apparently Maggie loves her too – and suddenly, she wants only one thing.

“You guys said you brought pizza, right?”

Maggie’s dimples shine and James laughs and Winn holds out the boxes of pizza with a bowed head like he’s offering riches to a queen.

And he feels like he is, because damn, it doesn’t get more fairy tale happy ending than the best pizza in National City with your family.

Chapter Summary

anonymous asked:

Would you ever write a fic about how Alex and Maggie established their safe words and check ins? I feel like it is a weird but necessary conversation to have but I am curious to see how you would write it since you're so good at making consent normal! (which it should be but is never really talked about in media)

Their first night they slip beyond making out – the first night Alex takes Maggie’s shirt off, the first night Alex runs her nails down Maggie’s back because god she’s never felt anything like what Maggie’s thigh between her legs is making her feel – Alex freezes and her eyes flood with fear, with tears, every time Maggie gasps, every time Maggie writhes, every time a small scream slips out of her swollen lips.

“That was a good sound, Alex,” she’ll explain each time, because each time is peppered with did I hurt you and I’m so sorry and god I’m usually a quick study I thought I’d be better at this I’m so sorry.

“You’re amazing at this, Alex,” Maggie assures her, kissing her face, her eyes, her nose, her chin, her neck, for emphasis. “Maybe a safe word would help you feel better? Good to have one anyway, especially if…” She doesn’t finish her sentence, the thoughts, the fantasies, she’s had about Alex, about Alex and her handcuffs and Alex and kneeling and Alex and on her stomach and Alex… because too soon, too soon, too soon.

“A safe word?” Alex asks, and Maggie’s grateful she’s too caught up in learning something new than following up Maggie’s unfinished train of thought.

Maggie nods and Maggie pulls Alex closer to her, relishing her body heat as she brushes hair off of her forehead. “Something you wouldn’t normally say during… making out, or… or during sex…” Alex blushed and bites her lip and Maggie smiles because god is she falling hard and fast.

“So like, if we agree on a safe word together, then all one of us has to do is say it, and we’ll stop. And we can have on for slowing down, too, but not like, stopping all the way.”

“So something random.”

“Mmhmm.”

“Like pineapple or something.”

Maggie laughs and Alex giggles and it’s the most beautiful sound Maggie’s ever heard.

“Yeah, like pineapple or something. But can I say? Um… I get nervous. About hurting people. And I feel like you do to.”
Alex blushes and Maggie kisses her nose. “So I like to have like, something more systematic than a word. Like, a color code thing. Like, I can ask you what your color is, or you can ask me, and green is yes and yellow is let’s slow down and red is let’s stop. You know?”

“So… traffic lights in bed.”

“Yes, Danvers. Traffic lights in bed.” Alex swoons even though they’re laying down and they kiss and Maggie moans softly and Alex swears it’s the hottest sound she’s ever heard.

“I um… what if I can’t… talk?”

Maggie arches an eyebrow and kisses Alex’s eyes.

“Like what if you want me to gag you?” she asks softly, carefully, and Alex blushes, and Alex splutters.

“I… I mean, that could be… I… fuck Maggie…. is… is that something… is that something we could do?”

Maggie kisses her collarbone, kisses up her jawline. “If you wanted, babe. But only if you really wanted.”

Alex splutters some more and Maggie smiles because badass DEO Agent Alex Danvers spluttering in her bed is absolutely incredible.

“I mean, one day, sure, yeah, but um… I meant…” Alex blushes even deeper and Maggie swipes her thumb over her cheek encouragingly. “Sometimes when you kiss me, I lose all my breath. Or like, what we were doing before, with you on top of me, I like… can’t breathe, because it’s just… it feels so amazing and overwhelming and… I can’t imagine how I could say green or yellow or anything when we’re actually having… you know… sex…. like, what if it’s too intense for me to… talk? You know what, it’s stupid, never mind – “

“No, no, no, Alex, that’s not stupid at all. You think you don’t overwhelm me, babe? I’ve slept with a lot of women, Alex, but nothing… none of that even compares to even making out with you. I… I get it. There are nonverbal things we can do, too. Like, okay, here, can I have your hand?”

Alex offers a fist, and Maggie kisses each knuckle and opens it gently, and kisses her palm before putting two fingers there.

“What if I put my fingers on your palm to check in, and if you squeeze, you want to keep going, and if you don’t, we’ll stop?”

Alex nods, and Alex practices, and Maggie smiles. “Same for you?”

“Same for me.”

“So safe words and safe signals.”

“Mhmmm.”

“You care about me.”

“I do. A lot.”

“Good. Because I care about you, too.”
Maggie beams and they kiss and Maggie loses all her breath.

“Mags? My color’s green right now. Like, neon green.”

Maggie chuckles and Maggie pulls Alex’s body closer to hers.

“Fantastic.”

prompt: alex and maggie have a fight about something semi-serious, maggie expects alex to leave her like everyone else always does but of course, alex would never leave her

“Maggie what – what are you talking about?”

“I screwed up, Alex. I screwed up, and you’re gonna leave, and what the hell, it was gonna happen anyway – “

“Wait, Maggie, why the hell would I leave you?”

“You’ve done it before, after our first night together – “

“Yeah, because I was being stupid and I panicked, but Maggie, you told me I got one, and I took that seriously. I take you seriously, Maggie. I’m not going anywhere.”

Maggie looks up at her, finally, takes her hands away from her face, finally, lets her hands fall as her elbows balance on her spread knees.

“Then why’d you come over, if you didn’t want to get your stuff and leave?”

Alex kneels in front of her, and Alex stares, and Alex thinks, and Alex’s heart shatters because Maggie looks so broken.

She takes Maggie’s hands into hers, and her looks up into her face and she tries, she tries so hard, to let Maggie see every ounce of love she has for her.

“I came over to make sure you’re okay. To make sure we’re okay.”

“Alex, I called you and your entire organization out on its policies in front of your entire organization.”

“And you… weren’t entirely wrong.”

“Alex – “

“Maggie, bad things happen. In our line of work, they happen all the time.” Maggie starts to object to Alex using her own logic to her, but Alex keeps talking, and Maggie lets her, because she’s never felt this before, this calm insistence that everything’s going to be alright, that she didn’t destroy everything, that she’s not completely worthless.
“And sometimes, we react to those bad things. Sometimes, we react to those bad things publicly, in front of all our girlfriend’s colleagues.”

Maggie scoffs and wipes away a small tear and Alex leans up and kisses her forehead.

“I’m not going anywhere, Maggie. Not without you. I did my running, and now I’m done. Okay?”

“Alex – “

“Okay?”

“Okay.”

“I brought pizza.”

“Mmm, a forgiving girlfriend and she’s a mindreader, what do I have to look forward to next?”

“Being loved, Maggie. Being loved.”
“Color, babe?” Maggie needs to know, because her thrusts are getting ragged and rough and she knows Alex is soaking wet for her and she knows Alex is screaming for her but she needs to make sure, needs to confirm, because she’s so turned on, she’s so wrecked, that she’s not entirely sure she’s thinking clearly.

“Green green green,” Alex gasps, her nails scraping down Maggie’s back. “But um – “

Maggie freezes immediately, inhaling shakily, gathering her self-control, gathering every ounce of restraint she has.

“You okay, Al?”

“Yeah yeah, yes, but Maggie… if you want… do you wanna flip me over?”

Maggie answers with her hands, Maggie answers with the low growl in the back of her throat, and Maggie answers by pulling her strapon softly out of Alex, bracing herself up on both feet and one arm, flipping Alex over onto her stomach with the other.

Alex gasps and Alex writhes and Alex grabs at the bedsheets desperately.

“Like this, babe?” Maggie asks, and Alex squeaks, and Alex nods, and Alex begs.

“Fuck me again? Like this?”

Maggie groans and shifts so she can adjust her strapon and Alex whines and stills and waits and backs her ass up when she feels Maggie slowly pushing back into her, and for a moment, a long, long moment, both of them freeze, both of them hold, both of them pause. Maggie brushes hair away from the back of Alex’s neck and kisses it slow, soft. Perfect. Alex sighs and reaches a hand out by her side, and Maggie takes it, and their fingers interlock, and Maggie thrusts her hips down and Alex screams into the pillow.

“I love you, Alex Danvers,” she whispers as she fucks her, as she makes her writhe and scream and as Alex’s free hand slips underneath her body, putting pressure on her clit, building and building along with Maggie’s harder and faster and harder and faster thrusts, because Alex is whimpering for more and Maggie is nothing if not obliging and when Alex cums Maggie cums right along with her because I love you, I love you, I love you.
When Alex decides she wants to return the favor, Maggie chuckles and Maggie nods and Maggie bites down a moan, barely, and she leans a shaky hand to the nightstand drawer to pull out a condom, slipping it over the dildo after Alex slips on the harness, slipping off her own underwear, gulping hard, kissing Alex hard, before Alex makes sure the pillows are adequately comfortable, before Alex lays her down on her stomach, before Alex runs reverent hands down Maggie’s muscled back, perfect ass, tight thighs, smooth calves, calloused feet.

“Fuck, you’re wet for me,” she whispers into Maggie’s ear as she positions her strapon, and Maggie gives a ragged chuckle.

“The hell did you expect, Danvers?” Alex pushes inside her instead of giving a verbal response, and Maggie’s low tone is lost in a high scream, in the way she slams open palms into the bedsheets, the way she bites into the pillow and arches her ass back and repeats Alex’s name over and over and over like a prayer.

She builds her tempo slowly, slowly, asking Maggie for her color every time she wants to push faster, every time she wants to push deeper, because she knows Maggie likes it fast, she knows Maggie likes it hard, and she knows Maggie likes it deep, but she’s always worried about hurting her, always worried about overwhelming her.

So Alex keeps asking, and Alex keeps getting green lights, and by the time her own thrusts are getting uneven with her own buildup from slamming so hard into Maggie’s ass, her own need to cum deep, deep inside her, Maggie’s own hand is pressuring her clit and Alex almost can’t stand how hot the sight beneath her is, how incredible, how perfect, and when she feels Maggie’s walls convulsing, when she feels Maggie’s body writhing, when she hears Maggie screaming Ally, Ally, Ally, she lets herself go, she buries herself deep inside Maggie and rides her own orgasm right along with her.

“Fuck, Danvers,” Maggie whispers, many long, breathless, kiss-filled minutes later as Alex slides slowly, carefully, out of her.

“Yeah, that was the general idea, Sawyer.”

“Nerd.”

“You like me being a nerd.”

“Untrue.”

“What?”

“I mean, true. I do like it. But I also love it. My nerd.”

“Yeah. Your nerd.”

anonymous asked:

i have a prompt, if that's okay - whatever situation you feel right for it but an alex/winn fic and alex ends up saying "sorry but, remind me again which one of us actually has a girlfriend?" i just need more alex/winn brotp fics in this world and your writing is fabulous, thank you

Alex has roses and Maggie’s favorite chocolates and a bottle of red wine and a blush on her face to match.

“Whoa, Danvers, you’re gonna need a shopping cart to haul all that over to Sawyer’s place.”

Alex stops and scowls and Winn grins because he knows she’d smack him upside the head if her hands weren’t so full. But they are, so she can’t, so his grin widens.

“She’s making me dinner at her place, I didn’t want to show up empty handed.”

“So you decided to go full-out Valentine’s Day. In January. Aw, Alex, you’re just so sweet.”

“Meet me in the sparring room, Schott, you’ll find out how sweet I am.” But she’s blushing harder, because his words are teasing but his eyes are proud, his eyes are happy, his eyes love her like the big sister he always wished he had to protect him in the foster system.

“Oohoooh, didn’t anyone tell you the threats don’t work as well when you’re practically bringing your girlfriend a teddy bear?”

Alex pales slightly and her eyes go wide. “Shit, Winn, do you think I should’ve gotten her a stuffed animal, too? She does have that giraffe from when she was a kid, maybe she’d like – “

“Slow down there, buccaneer, you don’t wanna drown the girl.”

“Oh, I’m sorry, Agent Schott, but remind me again which one of us actually has a girlfriend?”

“You know, Agent Danvers, I’m gonna ignore that low, very low, very below the belt, very distinctly unfriendly blow, because you know what? I… I… Because I have absolutely no comeback.”

Alex snorts and smirks and straightens up and starts heading toward the door.

“Alex,” Winn calls, and she turns with a sarcastic grin on her face, figuring he’s come up with a belated comeback.

“She’s lucky, you know. To have you.”

“And in a few decades when you finally date someone, they’re gonna be lucky to have you, too.”
“I don’t know why I bother.”

“Because you love me.”

“I do, yeah.”

“You too, Winn.”

“Go. Send my love to your lady.”

“Yeah.”

“Seriously. Anyone would be really lucky to have you.”

“Aw, Danvers, you’re making me blush.”

“Good night, Alex.”
Sanvers prompt please momma ily: So Maggie is obsessed w/ kissing Alex like all the time, no matter the place. but not just her lips but like her whole face and peppers alex in kisses in the middle of a crime scene, at the bar, at home literally everywhere and one morning alex does it back to Maggie and this is the first time she sees Maggie blush and fumble for words. (can you write this please)

She loves Alex’s lips.

She loves Alex’s lips more than she’s every loved anyone’s, but they’re not the only part of Alex’s face she loves kissing.

So when they’re on a crime scene, Maggie can’t help it. Fellow officers be damned, when Alex makes that concentrating face, Maggie leans up on her tip toes and peppers her temples with kisses, because she knows that’s where Alex feels the tension, where Alex feels her mind buzzing, where Alex needs to be kissed.

When they’re at the bar and Alex snorts with laughter and some beer drips down her chin, James and Winn and Kara whooping in the background be damned, Maggie starts on her chin but doesn’t stop, working her way up Alex’s jawline, to her cheeks, to her nose, to her eyebrows, to the bridge of her nose, to the tip of her nose, because Alex deserves to be kissed everywhere.

And when they’re at home, just before Alex’s alarm jolts her out of sleep, Maggie will lean up on one elbow and pepper snowflake-light kisses all across Alex eyes, nose, forehead, every single centimeter of her face, because the slow, sleepy smile that blossoms on it as Alex wakes proves just how much she loves Maggie’s kisses.

And she never expects these kinds of kisses back.

Because oh, Alex kisses her. And oh, Alex has proven herself to be quite the softie. But Alex is direct and Alex is assertive and Alex doesn’t do the whole butterfly kiss thing.

Until one day, she does. Until one day, Maggie’s reading in bed and Alex crawls over her, glasses on and hair still damp from her shower, and Alex starts with Maggie’s nose. She starts with the tip of her nose and she palms her cheeks with her hands, and she traces every single contour of Maggie’s face, every dip and every dimple and every line, first with gentle fingers, then with soft, light kisses that make Maggie’s heart race, that make Maggie’s heart light, that make Maggie’s heart tremble because no one, no one, no one, has ever touched her like this, ever kissed her like this.

She splutters and she blushes and she fumbles for her words, because her knowledge of any spoken language has left her along with any lingering doubts she might have had that Alex Danvers is the woman she’s going to spend her life with.

“Maggie Sawyer, are you blushing?”

“I… it… I… no, I… Al…”

Alex beams and decides then and there to render Maggie monosyllabic as often as humanly possible.

And she does.
Sanvers Prompt: Alex and Maggie training together in that DEO training room where Alex and J'onn practice fighting. So basically Alex and Maggie practice fighting like Alex and J'onn did. You can do what you want with it :)
No way man, she’s beaten up on Supergirl dozens of times in sparring, and she loves her to bits.

Yeah, but come on, there’s some rage behind all sisterly love, right? The only rage these two’ve got is probably in the bedroom –

No but look, Sawyer’s scrappy. Scrappy enough to be keeping up with Danvers with just regular cop training? I don’t know, she might be able to – ooh, see! Danvers didn’t expect that one.

J’onn is chuckling and Winn is moving along with each of Alex’s blocks and blows, and J’onn leans in and asks, “Who are you placing your own bets on, Mr. Schott?”

“Quidditch World Cup,” Winn replies, and J’onn looks down at him like he’s really lost it this time.

Winn smirks and explains. “Alex is gonna have the advantage most of the way through, but Maggie’s gonna do something that surprises her – like catching the Snitch even though her team is down – and get Alex on the ground again.”

“Snitch, Mr. Schott?”

“Don’t worry about it.”

They fix their eyes on Alex, on Maggie.

“That all you got, Danvers?” Maggie asks, wiping sweat from her forehead with her shoulder.

But Maggie blocks the blow, and Alex’s eyebrows shoot up as various whoops and cheers and oooohs explode along the side of the room.

“Never tell your opponent what you’re about to do, Danvers, or didn’t J’onn teach you that bit?”

“Oh, I taught her, Detective Sawyer. I taught her.”

“Not helping, J’onn.”

“And you’re always supposed to change your tactics based on your opponents, yeah?” Maggie huffs, and Alex strikes, and Maggie parries, and Alex nods.

“Well, you know what I learned from watching you today?” Maggie wants to know, and Alex smirks.

“That you do, in fact, need more training?”

Maggie shakes her head and, lightening fast, strips off her sweaty tank top and tosses it away, leaving her in nothing but her sports bra.

Alex completely freezes, jaw dropped, and Maggie has her on the ground in an instant.

“That your reaction time is that much slower when you’re especially turned on.”

“I… you… cheating!”

Maggie smirks and tugs Alex to her feet.
“Punish me later,” she husks in her ear as she takes a mock bow to the surrounding agents and a loudly cheering Winn.

“There are many things in this life I wish I could unsee and unhear,” J’onn mutters, and Winn smirks.

“And little Alex Danvers growing up and getting laid is one of them?”

“Your existence is going to be one of them if you don’t back away now, Mr. Schott.”

Winn scampers away laughing, and J’onn chuckles to himself, watching his agents surround Maggie and Alex, talking animatedly and offering to show Maggie even more tricks.

“Good god, she’ll need her own badge before nightfall.”
Maggie and Alex having a conversation about their respective sexual histories.

Maggie’s stroking her hair and skating gentle fingertips down her naked torso.

“Are you just saying that because you want me to feel good?” Alex is asking, and Maggie smiles and shakes her head into the pillow.

“Wouldn’t do that, Danvers. No, I mean it, I’ve... I’ve been with a lot of women.” She pauses and chuckles and shakes her head again. “But it’s never felt like it does with you.”

Alex traces the contours of Maggie’s face with her fingers. “How not?”

Maggie takes a deep, thoughtful breath.

“In high school, I made out with a lot of girls, slept with a few more. One of them... one, I was really in love with. Like, wow, you know? Her dad found out and beat the crap out of me. She never talked to me again.” Alex blinks down tears and kisses Maggie’s nose and vows to find out this man’s name and kill him.

“And the sex was incredible, you know, because it was new and it was passionate and risky and in the back of my truck.” She pauses and Alex chuckles and Maggie shakes ghosts out of her eyes. “But looking back, that’s just what it was, you know? Sex. And it was hot because it was different, and risky, and terrifying, not because she returned my feelings with any depth. Am I talking too much? You really wanna hear this?”

“I do. I want to know. About you. Who you are, who you’ve been –”

“Who I’ve done.”

Alex laughs and Maggie continues. “I think college was the first time I really made love with someone. She was a senior so she had a single room and we could take our time and we could cuddle and all that, you know? But she graduated when I was becoming a sophomore and she moved out of state and she wrote a few times, but that was it. Why are you glaring?”

“A senior slept with you when you were just a freshman? You were basically still a kid!”

Maggie kisses Alex for her defensiveness on her behalf: something she’s certainly not used to, and it makes her heart tremble.

“Yeah, like you’ve never slept with anyone older.”

Alex’s eyes shadow over slightly and Maggie’s face goes still, and she draws Alex closer to her.
“My orgo lab TA was older, I guess. I think he was in his thirties, and I went to college young, you know, so I was what, nineteen? He was my first. He was gentle, you know, sweet I guess. Married, too, which he didn’t bother to tell me until he came. I didn’t. Never did, actually, not until…”

She glances up at Maggie and she blushes and she expected Maggie to be pleased, but she’s not; her face is a map of rage and sorrow and grief and love, love, love. But she says nothing, and Alex has never talked about this before, not in this way, so she presses on.

“I had a couple boyfriends after that, you know, nothing serious. One was fine with not having sex, which worked just fine for me, but he wanted to cuddle and hold my hand all the time and I didn’t know how to tell him that I didn’t like even that. But he was alright. Really into astrophysics. I think that’s the part that was attractive about him. And did I tell you I had a party girl phase?”

Again, she expects Maggie to laugh, but Maggie’s smile is soft, and Maggie’s smile is sad, and she strokes Alex’s cheek and she kisses her nose and Alex presses on because she can’t quite process how protected, how cherished, Maggie is making her feel.

“So there was a lot of drunken sex. Like, bathrooms, dance floors, back seats of cars, all that. I don’t remember most of it, I just remember trying to feel… something. I’m sorry. I’m talking too much, you don’t wanna hear – ’

“I do, Danvers. I do.”

Her voice is low and her voice is tired, and Alex snuggles closer to her.

“So what happened after your senior girl?”

“You mean who happened?”

Alex laughs and Maggie’s dimples are back, now, because she never can resist Alex’s laughter.

“No one while I was at the academy – probably the longest stretch I went without a girlfriend since I was a teenager – and then you know Darla, and you met my latest…”

Alex grimaces and Maggie grins as she watches jealousy roil across Alex’s face.

“She had nothing on you, babe.”

Maggie laughs heartily at that, and she kisses Alex’s forehead and smooths her hair out of her eyes and kisses her again.

“There is absolutely no comparison, Danvers. When we were together, I thought she was… you know, she’d asked me to move in with her, so I thought, you know, I thought she was special, that she wanted to commit, you know, but then it was all… kinda downhill from there. I think… I think she knew I was falling for you.” Maggie sighs deeply, and Alex can’t help the surge of pride in her chest.

“But in the end, turns out she was cheating on me, anyway.” Alex makes a sound of indignation and Maggie smiles.

“All worked out for the best, Danvers. Because now I have the best.”

“Yeah?”
“Yes, Alex. Yes.”

“Me too, Maggie. Me too.”

Chapter Summary

kecharasmoon asked:

Maggie and Alex end up breaking up an alien child trafficking ring. When the children are rescued, both end up becoming little climbing gyms for multiple oddly colored and shaped smaller versions of the adult aliens they are used to fighting... something something, Kara getting Lena to help fund an orphanage/foster system for these kids and both couples end up adopting

She’s seen Maggie rage and she’s seen Maggie shake and she’s seen Maggie break almost everything in her apartment after the massacre at the alien bar and she’s seen Maggie after fights with her father and she’s seen Maggie after terrible elections and she’s seen Maggie after court dates where her colleagues succeeded in locking away kids whose behalf she’d testified on, who she’d spent weeks, months, all her energy, fighting to keep out of the system.

But she’s never seen Maggie quite this angry.

Because the trafficking operation that they break up isn’t just trafficking aliens. It’s trafficking alien children, with an emphasis on alien children that can pass as human children of color, and Maggie shoots every single dealer in the head before waiting for backup, before waiting for orders, because the kids are shivering and the kids are in chains and the kids are looking at her like she’s the first bit of hope they’ve seen in god knows how long, like she can rescue them.

And she is, and she does.

That night when Maggie’s tears have finally run dry and she’s finally stopped raging, Alex strips her clothes off slowly, slowly, steers her into the bathroom, turns on the shower, and washes all the blood off Maggie’s hands, off Maggie’s face, off Maggie’s body, out of Maggie’s hair.

She holds her all night and she holds her through the nightmares and she holds her fists steady, she holds her fists safe, when Maggie wakes up trying to punch, to shoot, to protect.

She kisses her when they toss on cut-offs jeans and tank tops and she wraps a bandana in Alex’s hair and head out to meet Kara and Lena and James and Winn to help oversee the construction of the L Corp funded-refugee orphanage, to participate in the building, to play with the kids, to make sure the climbing gym is creative enough to be accessible, to be fun, to be distracting and to be healing, for all the rescued children, whether they have six limbs or four or none, whether they have low vision or no vision or infrared vision, whether they can phase through solid metal or whether their skin scalds on solid metal.

It’s been years since they agreed they didn’t want children, and it’s been years since they agreed their family was perfect enough as it was; but months go by and laughter returns to the children and levity returns to Maggie’s step and they know, they both know, that two of the four refugee children who haven’t been adopted yet – one with no limbs when out of human form and one with spikey hair that isn’t hair at all – are theirs, and the other two of the four – one with wings and one with a perpetual giggle – are Kara and Lena’s, and Lena rushes the adoption papers and the next Thanksgiving features food from six different planets, and when the kids climb into their bed in the middle of the night, in the middle of a storm, Alex kisses Maggie over the top of their huddled-under-the-blankets heads, because she’s never seen her happier.
Maggie is destroyed, but Kara is giving panicked a whole new meaning.

Maggie’s jaw is clenched and she refuses to open her mouth because she’ll vomit if she does; but Kara is shaking and Kara is sobbing and Maggie is the only thing holding her back from ripping every Cadmus agent who hurt Alex limb from limb.

Because Maggie already did.

So now Kara’s rage has nowhere to go. Now Kara’s panic has nowhere to go.

Because Alex is in surgery and James is holding Kara and Winn is wiping Kara’s tears while failing to contain his own, but Kara has eyes only for Maggie.

“You took a bullet to try to protect her,” she says in a deadened voice, a deflated voice, a shattered voice.

“Fat lot of good it did,” Maggie answers bitterly, glancing down at the stitched up bullet wound in her side – a clean entry and exit – that she’d quite frankly forgot about.

Kara bites her lip and Kara sobs again, and Maggie gently nudges the boys out of the way.

“Come here, Little Danvers. Look at me. Hey, hey. Look at me, Kara.”

Kara does, and James nods, and Winn turns away because he can’t, he can’t, he can’t.

“You know your sister better than anyone. You know she’s gonna fight. And you know she’s gonna win. Alex doesn’t lose, Kara. Not to anyone, not ever. And we’re not gonna lose her. You’re not gonna lose her. She loves you too much to disappear on you, okay?”

Kara trembles but her breath evens out somewhat, and she stares at Maggie’s face as though listening to her words without blinking, without moving, without disturbing anything, can bring Alex back, can get Alex through surgery, can wake Alex up.

Maggie knows, and she wipes Kara’s tears while her own burn through her throat, and she forces herself to keep talking.

“She’s not gonna be out of surgery for another couple hours, Little Danvers. And you know what she’d want you to do?”

Kara blinks, and tears spill down her face, and Maggie clears them away.

“I can’t have potstickers while Alex is dying.”

“She’s not dying. And yeah, you can. Wanna know why? Because she’s not dying, and because you got hurt, too.” She pokes Kara just above the burns she’s been refusing to get treated for.

“So you need your strength, and you need to let them take a look at those burns. Can you do that for me, Kara? Can you do that for Alex?”

Kara stares, all wide-eyes and trembling lips, and then she nods.

Maggie grimaces, and Kara lets James call in a medic, and Maggie lets Kara nearly break her fingers with the force of holding her hand.

“Winn,” she says, because he still hasn’t turned around. When he does, his eyes are red. When he does, his eyes are wild.

“She’s gonna be alright, Winn. She’s gonna be just fine.”

He forces a smile, and he nods, and the four of them sit, sit, sit, and by the time Alex is out of surgery – by the time Alex is waking up, by the time Alex is fine, fine, fine – Maggie’s hand is sore from Kara squeezing it so hard, so long, but she doesn’t care at all.

Because Alex is sitting up and reaching for both Maggie and Kara’s hands and Kara is laughing and Winn is pretending he wasn’t crying and James is keeping a steady hand on J’onn’s shoulder and Maggie is breathing again, breathing again, because Alex, Alex, Alex.
Chapter 141

Chapter by queergirlwriting

Chapter Summary

anonymous asked:

Fic idea: Maggie or Alex receive an award and the other accompanies as her date. They get all dressed up and there’s a big to do.

“Hey ba – why do you have the I’m in trouble face on?” Maggie wants to know as she’s tossing down her gun, kicking off her shoes, perching on Alex’s armchair by the door, and rubbing at the tension in her heels.

Alex bites the inside of her cheek and saunters over, kneeling in front of Maggie and replacing Maggie’s hands with her own. Maggie groans in relief as Alex digs her thumb just right into Maggie’s heel.

“Thank you,” she breathes, and Alex grins, but she’s still got that look.

“What’d I do, Danvers?”

“Why did I have to find out from my reporter sister that my girlfriend is getting some really big-deal community-NCPD relationship-building award from the mayor this weekend?”

“I’m… in trouble for getting an award?”

“Why didn’t you tell me, babe? Kara says it’s a big deal – ”

“Maggie.” Alex stills her fingers and Maggie sighs.

“I dunno, Danvers, it’s just… it’s not a big thing.”

“Maggie, of course it’s a big thing. You’re a big thing.”

“Thought you’re always calling me tiny. Are you finally recanting?”

“Don’t change the subject!”

Maggie sighs and stares down at the woman kneeling in front of her, the woman who’s looking up at her with love, with adoration, with frustration because she’s proud of her, because she’s proud to be her girlfriend, and all she wants Maggie to do is let her do that.

She stares because she doesn’t quite understand. She stares because she can’t quite believe that someone would care, that someone would want to share her accomplishments with her; would notice her accomplishments.

Would rub her feet without being asked at the end of a long day because that’s just what Alex does.
Maggie gulps and Maggie sighs, because she’s not used to feeling loved like this.

“Alright then. Wanna be my date, Danvers?” A grin is forming on her lips, now. “You’ll have to wear something nice.”

Alex leans up and kisses her mouth slow, kisses her mouth steady. “I can do that for you.”

And she does.

She meets her outside of the L Corp lobby, where the dinner and ceremony’s taking place, and she’s in a low-cut, tight as sin blue dress that makes Maggie’s heart stop beating, that makes Maggie’s lungs forget what breath is.

“You clean up nice,” Maggie manages, slipping over to Alex and offering her her arm.

“You do, too,” Alex splutters. “With the dress uniform and the… uniform. You… it… uniform.”

“Yes, Danvers, very good. Words,” Maggie teases, but her heart takes flight, because she’d been terrified. Terrified because Alex had never seen her in her uniform, let alone her dress uniform; terrified because she was out at work, but casually; she’d never shown up to a work event with the most beautiful woman she’d ever seen on her arm; terrified because what if it was all too much for Alex, what if Alex only liked her in a dress, what if, what if, what if, but Alex is stammering and Alex is beaming and Alex is practically tripping because she refuses to stop staring, which is convenient, because Maggie’s having a hard time peeling her eyes away from Alex, too.

“No big deal?” Alex repeats incredulously with wide eyes as they walk into the building, and Lena has decked it out for the occasion, with catering and elegant décor and a jazz band and a great deal of champagne.

Maggie shrugs and Maggie stiffens as she meets eyes with her captain, as she shakes his hand and accepts his congratulations on both the award and the beautiful girlfriend, and Alex has never seen Maggie blush until this moment, and Alex’s heart is fit to burst.

The feeling only intensifies when, an hour or so of mingling and thank you so much and just doing my job, ma’am, and yes, she really is, I’m the luckiest woman in the world and well, I don’t know if we’ve thought that far ahead yet, but I’m certainly looking forward to the journey, sir, the mayor calls a beaming teenage boy up to the stage, and Maggie gasps with pleased and shocked tears in her eyes, and leans into Alex and whispers, “I didn’t know he was gonna be here, what the hell – ”

“Who –” Alex starts to ask, but the mayor is answering for her, for the whole crowd, into the microphone.

“This very courageous young man is going to introduce a very courageous young woman tonight: I’m told they have a long history together, which I’m sure Adrian will be more than happy to share with you as he does this city the honor of presenting Detective Maggie Sawyer with the NCPD Community Commitment Award.”

There’s polite applause and some whoops from Maggie’s closest colleagues, and her work partner thumps her on the back. She laughs and nods in his direction, but she has eyes only for the boy with the silver earring, faint scruff, and red bow tie who’s shaking the mayor’s hand and stepping up to the microphone.

“Okay, there’s more people here tonight than I thought. Whoo!” the boy begins. Maggie laughs gently and Alex watches her watching Adrian, a feeling of affection and pride she’s never felt for anyone but Kara growing in her chest.
Adrian resets himself and locks eyes with Maggie. She nods calmly at him, and he grins, and he speaks. “Hi everyone. My name’s Adrian Rodriguez, and Detective Sawyer saved my life.”

Alex inhales sharply, softly, and stares at the woman who will never stop amazing her, the woman she will never stop loving, and Maggie lets her eyes drop as she bites her lip. “Adrian,” she whispers, and makes herself look back up at him as he continues.

“A few years ago, I was running the streets, trying to get my hands on T – um, testosterone, to help me with my transition – because my parents didn’t have insurance. Detective Sawyer – she was Officer Sawyer, then, so I guess we’ve both been moving up in the world – ”

The crowd laughs gently and Maggie fights tears and Alex squeezes her hand because Alex has never felt like this.

“Detective Sawyer took care of me. She took me to a clinic, she helped me get my paperwork in order. She kept me out of the court system, because – I know this isn’t a popular thing to say in a room full of cops, but the other thing that Detective Sawyer taught me to be is brave, so here goes – the court system isn’t safe for kids like me. Brown kids, queer kids. And Detective Sawyer protected me, not only from getting unsafe, tainted hormones, but from being alone. From being isolated and from thinking that it was impossible to get my proper name, my proper paperwork, my proper life in order.”

Maggie is shaking and squeezing Alex’s hand and clenching her jaw because she is trying so, so, so hard not to cry, not to let her heart physically burst out of her chest with pride for Adrian, pride for this boy she loves so much, has fought so hard for.

“When I met Detective Sawyer, I was a scrappy kid that everyone thought was a girl, trying to figure out who I was. She saw me for who I am, and she helped me get here: in the fall, I’m going to college, with M marked down on all those stupid gender boxes, because Detective Sawyer is more than a detective. She’s a hero. And she cares about our community. And we care about her. So um – there’s actually a bunch of us that wanted to give this award with me, so, guys – ”

There’s rustling and there’s cheering and a group of teenagers slips out from backstage, all shapes and sizes and styles, but all beaming, all waving down at Maggie, and Maggie puts her head in her hands, and Maggie shakes her head, and Maggie’s shoulders rack with shocked sobs because she doesn’t do this in front of her precinct, she doesn’t show emotion in front of her precinct, but these kids, these kids, these kids.

“So, we’re happy to present Detective Maggie Sawyer with the Community Award, you know… thing. And also, Maggie, congratulations on the smoking hot girlfriend! It’s Agent Danvers, right? You’re super, super lucky, Agent Danvers!”

“Oh, I know it!” Alex calls up through her own layer of tears, and the kids cheer, and the crowd laughs, and Maggie kisses Alex full on the mouth and the kids whoop raucously and the crowd awes and Maggie’s hands shake as she heads onstage, as she hugs each of the kids close to her, each of them beaming, each of them whispering different words of thanks to her, each of them adjusting her tie and complimenting her dapper shoes and making her laugh, each of them gesturing to Alex and thumping her on the back, and Alex laughs, and Alex wipes away tears, because Maggie, Maggie, Maggie.

She’s never felt this proud of anyone other than Kara, and she’s certainly never felt this happy, because that amazing woman is her girlfriend, her girlfriend, her girlfriend.
Chapter Summary

anonymous asked:

I'm so sorry if this is inappropriate, but I've been hella depressed for a few months and trying really hard not to do anything to myself. I was wondering if you could write something with Kara dealing with that and Alex/Maggie helping her? You totally don't have to and I'm so sorry if this is uncomfortable you can totally just ignore it. Your writing has been very comforting to me so thank you for that either way :) I hope you have a great day!!!

Oh sweetie, there’s nothing inappropriate about this at all! I’m so sorry you’ve been struggling, but I am extremely proud of you for reaching out and asking for something you want: that’s wonderful!!! I’m humbled that you asked me, and I hope I do justice to your vision. Sending you all my love <3 <3 <3

She tries not to think about it. She tries really hard.

She tries not to dwell on it. She tries really hard.

She tries not to show it. She tries really hard.

She fails.

She fails.

And she succeeds.

Until she doesn’t.

Until she can no longer stand under the weight of it, can no longer breathe in the fist of it, can no longer sleep in the midst of it.

It’s nothing in particular.

It’s nothing and it’s everything.

Her planet is gone. Her people. They’ve been gone for years, but still, they’re gone every day, and she’s tired.

They can’t find Jeremiah, they can’t take down Cadmus, and she’s stuck waiting, waiting, waiting.

And waiting is so much worse than fighting, because fighting is something. She can cope with the something.

She can’t cope with the nothing.
And lately, the nothing that is everything is all that she feels.

And it’s starting to chip into her smile, to wear into her laugh, to grate into her bones, to resonate in her voice, to deaden her reaction time to laser beams, to slow her response to punches, to dull her amusement at jokes that she thinks are probably funny, because everyone else is laughing.

Alex notices, and she notices that Alex notices, and that’s when she panics.

Panics because Alex notices, and Alex will try to help, and if Alex tries to help, she will have to talk about it. To deal with it. The nothing that is something, the nothing that is everything.

Kara panics.

And Kara turns to Cadmus for help.

The DEO can’t get a needle into her skin, but Cadmus can.

If she uses the DEO’s kryptonite-impregnated daggers, someone will notice.

But if she uses something scavenged from Cadmus – something that can carve her pain into her arm, something that can hope to reach into her heart, because the weight of everything and nothing is heavy and she can’t escape it, she can’t she can’t she can’t – they won’t notice.

But they do.

Because Kara doesn’t notice Maggie noticing – noticing the droop in her shoulders, the delays in her laughter, the exhaustion behind her eyes – but Maggie notices.

And she nudges Alex’s arm, and Alex nods, because Alex knows, and they watch her closer.

They watch her closer, and they follow her when she steals a Cadmus blade on her own. They follow her, and they find her with the blade in her hand and a tear in her eye, and all Alex says is her name.

Just her name, her name, her name, her name that her parents gave her before they let their entire planet burn, her name that her parents gave her before developing a weapon that could so easily commit genocide, her name that her parents gave her before they exploded and left her, left her, left her.

But that’s not all it is. If it were, she wouldn’t be cradling a blade designed to puncture Kryptonian skin above her arm. If it were, she would be used to the pain.

But this pain, this is something else. This pain is reasonless. This pain is meaningless. This pain will not leave, because it’s not pain, but it is.

And all Alex says is her name, because Alex knows, even though Alex long ago chose a bottle instead of a blade.

All Alex says is her name, and she runs to her, and she takes the blade and she gives it to Maggie, and she gathers Kara into her arms and she rocks her and kisses her hair and she rocks her and she kisses her hair and she breathes her name, her name, her name.

Kara doesn’t know how long they stay huddled on the cold, hard ground, wrapped in each other, wrapped in each other, but eventually Maggie settles down on her haunches next to them, the blade tucked safely into her combat boots, one hand on the small of Alex’s back, one on Kara’s knee.
“You’re never by yourself, Little Danvers. Never.” Kara sniffles and stares and Maggie takes a deep breath and sighs, because Alex is crying and Alex is helping but Alex can’t conjure the words, not yet, so Maggie does, because she lives for the Danvers girls, her Danvers girls.

“Look Kara, you cultivate this image. And a lot of the image is true: your kindness, your generosity, your enthusiasm. You’re sweet and you’re almost frighteningly bubbly and you’re absurdly genuine. You really are. But you don’t have to be all those things all the time. I know you feel like you do, because that’s how people see you, so that’s how you feel like you have to always be, right?”

Kara blinks and tears streak down her face, and Alex and Maggie’s fingers connect on Kara’s cheek as they both go to wipe them away.

“But you don’t always have to be on your game. You don’t always have to be that girl. You don’t have to hide and you don’t have to suffer alone. You don’t always have to wear the same face. I mean hell, Little Danvers, look at your sister. She goes around with this badass reputation to uphold, but we know what a softie she is on the inside.”

Kara chokes out a laugh and she strokes Alex’s hair and Alex shakes her head with a small smile at the two women she loves most in the multiverse.

“But there’s nothing wrong.” Kara objects, because she knows she has more traumas than she has fingers and toes, but that’s not all that this is. This… this.

“There doesn’t have to be something wrong for you to feel like the world is ending, Kara. But you don’t have to feel that way alone. Ever. You get me?”

Kara smiles wetly and Kara nods, and she lets Alex hold her while Maggie presses a kiss to Alex’s temple.

“Anyone ever tell you that you’d make a good superhero, Maggie?” Kara asks as Alex pulls her to her feet, brushes her off, and wraps her arm around her to head away from this place. To head home. Together.

Maggie smiles and bumps her shoulder into Alex’s side. “This one tells me every day, for some reason.”

“Well good,” Kara says, her voice still thick with tears, but lightening now, lightening because she’s not by herself. “She should. Because you are.”

Maggie kisses Kara’s hand and Alex beams.

“Potstickers and pizza?”

“And ice cream?”

“Of course and ice cream.”

“Yes please.”

“Alex? Maggie?”

“Yeah Sis?”

“Thank you.”
“Always, Little Danvers.”

“Always, Kara. Always.”
Maggie Sawyer is unmovable in the field.

She can unmovingly stare down the barrel of a gun, and she can keep herself steady enough, calm enough, sturdy enough, to grapple down men twice her size.

Out in the world, she is unmovable, because she forces herself to be.

But when her fingers aren’t curled into fists, when her fingers aren’t curled around the cool metal of her gun?

Maggie Sawyer is jumpy. She’s shaky and she’s wide-eyed and she startles easily, so easily.

Alex discovers this more quickly than she figures out why.

She discovers it because Maggie is cooking, and Maggie’s got her headphones in, and she’s rocking her hips gently to music and she’s humming to herself, and Alex loves it, because this is her girlfriend, her girlfriend in her apartment, cooking them both dinner.

So she goes up behind her and she puts soft hands on Maggie’s hips.

And Maggie jumps, and Maggie yelps, and Maggie trembles.

Alex jumps back like she’s been burned, hands up in surrender, hands up in I’m sorry it’s only me don’t worry I’m not going to hurt you I’m sorry.

Alex says nothing, letting Maggie catch her breath, letting Maggie collect herself.

“Sorry Danvers,” she says, pulling out on of her earpods and pretending to laugh it off, but Alex knows her, and Alex knows she’s trying to hide how shaken she is. “Was a little wrapped in my own world for a minute there.”

Alex lets it drop, nodding and softly smiling in understanding but not pushing the subject, because she’s never seen Maggie look so uncomfortable.

It happens again when Alex is sitting on the floor, her back against Maggie’s legs as Maggie sits on the couch and plays with her hair while Alex reads, glasses on and breathing soft and even. Relaxed.

Until suddenly, Alex sits up straighter, exclaiming excitedly, because in her reading, she’s just cracked a chemical equation she’s been puzzling over for weeks.

And Maggie flinches, Maggie startles, Maggie bites her lip painfully to keep down the yelp, at the suddenness of Alex’s movement, at the suddenness of Alex’s sound.

Alex turns and kneels and puts her hands on Maggie’s thighs.

“I’m sorry, babe, I just… I just realized something about some chemical thing. I didn’t mean to scare you.”

Maggie tries to shove it off again. “You didn’t scare me, Danvers.”

Alex just looks up at her softly and sighs, and rubs her hands up and down Maggie’s thighs, soothingly, soothingly.

No one has ever done that.

No one has ever looked at her gently, apologized quietly for startling her. No one has ever looked at her like she deserves to be soothed, like she deserves to be held, like she deserves to be paid attention to.

Everyone else has always looked at her like something is wrong with her. Everyone else has always looked at her like she’s an annoyance, like she’s an embarrassment.

But Alex Danvers? Alex Danvers is on her knees, in her glasses, a look of pure love, a look of pure concern on her face, because Alex Danvers notices, and Alex Danvers doesn’t mind, and Alex Danvers wants to help, because Alex Danvers cares.

And that’s what breaks Maggie, and that’s what heals her.

“Sudden sounds and sudden movements… sudden touches… I get…”

Maggie nods and turns her face into Alex’s soft touch. “I’m sorry, I know it’s annoying – “

Alex shakes her head vehemently and she leans up slowly, slowly, to kiss Maggie’s nose, her eyes, her forehead, her chin, her cheeks, her mouth.

“You are never annoying, Mags. You’re perfect, babe. If you startle easily, then it’s my job to slow down around you, and I will. I will. I’ve got you, Maggie. I’ve got you. Okay?”

Maggie chokes on tears because no one else has ever… ever.

She nods because she can’t speak, and Alex crawls up onto the couch and holds out her arms for Maggie to slip into. She gathers her up and she pulls a blanket over them both, and she kisses Maggie’s hair and she hums softly in her ear.
“I love you,” she whispers when Maggie’s breathing evens out. “I love you so, so much, Maggie Sawyer. Exactly like you are.”
Alex is out of the country and Kara is bleeding.

And Kara is not used to bleeding.

She’s sore and she’s shaken and she’s emotionally beaten down, because an agent was killed, and as many times as Winn and J’onn and James have told her that it wasn’t her fault, that there was nothing she could have done, that Cadmus’s new rifles had incapacitated her and it was all she could do to get herself and the other five agents out safely, and she had done an excellent job at that, she still feels the weight of the dead agent’s family, his memory, directly on her shoulders, directly in her hands, directly shredding her heart.

She shrugs Winn off and she insists to James that she’s fine and she waves of J’onn’s attempts to buoy her spirits, and they’re about to follow, they’re about to buy pizza and potstickers and call Alex, but Maggie puts a hand on James’s arm and Maggie stares after Kara’s slumping shoulders and she tells them, “Alex is on a plane, she can’t get your calls right now anyway. Don’t worry about Little Danvers: I’ve got this.”

J’onn nods and James kisses Maggie’s forehead and Winn slips her a twenty so she doesn’t have to foot the inevitably large food bill on her own, and Maggie trails Kara on her Triumph to her apartment.

She doesn’t knock, because she knows Kara won’t answer.

She picks her lock instead, and she knows that Kara knows, because Kara has superhearing and x-ray vision, and Kara could stop her if she wanted to.

But she doesn’t want to. She just doesn’t have the energy to invite her help.

But Maggie gives it, anyway.

When she slips open the door, Kara is wrapped in blankets on the couch, an old black and white film that she’s staring straight through on her television.

“You don’t have to do this, Maggie,” she says without looking at her, and her tone is more hollow than Maggie has ever heard it.

“No, I don’t. But I want to.”
She sets the pizza, ice cream, and potstickers on the counter, and Kara turns at the soft sound.

“Why?” Kara demands.

Maggie tilts her head and waits.

“Why what, Kara?” she asks softly, even though she already knows.

“Why would you want to?” Kara’s fumbling her way out of the mess of blankets, now, her actions rougher, angrier, than Maggie has ever seen her make while she’s wearing her glasses, while she’s wearing her cardigans instead of her family crest.

Maggie just takes a deep, quiet breath. She doesn’t move, and she doesn’t answer. She waits, because she knows Kara isn’t done.

And she’s right, because Kara is up, now, standing, now, and Kara’s face is reddening, now, and Kara is building into a rage.

“Why would you bring me anything, why would you waste your time coming all the way over here, Alex isn’t here, it’s just me, me, and you don’t owe me anything, Maggie, especially not today, especially not when I got a man killed! You know he had a three year old daughter? I met her last week, she was wearing a Supergirl shirt. A Supergirl shirt, and now her mother is going to have to explain to her how Supergirl got her father killed, because what, I was bleeding? So what? You bleed in the field all the time, Alex bleeds in the field all the time, and you keep going, you keep moving! But me? I let a man die! He was Alex’s age, Maggie, Alex’s age! And he’s gone and it’s my fault and my side hurts and it shouldn’t matter, it’s just a cut, I shouldn’t care, but I do, I do, I just – “

And Maggie sweeps forward, because this is the moment that Kara breaks.

She’s taller than Maggie, much, but she crumples into her arms and Maggie has her, has her, has her as she sobs, has her as she gasps chaotically for breath, has her as her entire body dissolves in shakes, in shivers, in convulsions of sorrow and tremors of regret.

“Shhhh, I got you Kara, I got you, I got you. Shhhhhhhh, that’s right honey, get it all out, get it all out, shhhhh, good girl,” Maggie whispers, whispers, whispers, as she pulls Kara back down onto the couch, gathers Kara into her arms, gathers Kara back into the blankets.

“I’m…. s-s… I’m sorry,” Kara sobs as she soaks Maggie’s henley with her tears, with her runny nose.

“No apologies, Little Danvers, no apologies,” Maggie rocks her, kissing each tear as they fall, kissing her hair, kissing her forehead. Kara grabs at her with her hands, and Kara flinches, because her knuckles are bruised, her knuckles are sore, and Maggie notices, and Maggie gently takes each hand and kisses each knuckle, kisses each bruise, as Kara’s shuddering slows, as Kara’s breathing regulates, as Kara’s sobbing transitions into silent tears spilling out of her eyes onto Maggie’s shirt, onto Maggie’s skin.

“I’m sorry, Maggie,” she whispers again. “You don’t have to do this. I don’t deserve comfort, I – “

“Kara. What happened is not your fault. It’s not. People – good people, Kara, people with kids and wives and husbands and siblings and parents – people have died out on missions with me, too, with your sister. You gonna blame me, Alex, for those deaths, honey?”

Kara sighs defeatedly and Kara shakes her head, and Maggie kisses her tear tracks, her fingers stroking her hair thoughtfully, softly, comfortingly.

“I know it’s hard, Kara, but you’ve gotta try to be as gentle with yourself as you are with other people. You’ve gotta try. Okay?”

Kara swallows and nods, and shifts so her body is closer to Maggie’s.

Eventually, Kara’s stomach roars, and Maggie laughs, and even Kara smiles slightly. Maggie gets up and grabs the massive amount of food and melted ice cream she’d brought, and she feeds her girlfriend’s kid sister, because her girlfriend’s kid sister is rapidly becoming like her own kid sister. Because her girlfriend’s kid sister – much like her girlfriend – feels the world so acutely in her own hands.

The food sates Kara for a while, fights away Kara’s sorrow, Kara’s guilt, Kara’s rage, for a while. They cuddle and they watch films and they let themselves simply be, but being right now is dangerous for Kara, so the tears start flowing again, the shaking starts wracking her body again.

So Maggie resumes her whispers, resumes her kisses to Kara’s hands, to her forehead, to her tear-stained cheeks.

They don’t hear the door when it clicks open, but suddenly Alex is in the doorway, her face pale, her chest heaving, because J’onn met her as she got off the plane, J’onn told her, and Alex ran.

She sees her girlfriend’s arms wrapped around her little sister’s shaking body, her girlfriend’s lips on her little sister’s forehead, hears her girlfriend’s soothing voice in her little sister’s ear.

And in that moment, Alex knows two things: that her little sister is going to be just fine, because damn is she well loved.

And her girlfriend? Her girlfriend is going to be her wife, because damn is she perfect.
sameeeeen asked:

Prompt: I really loved that fic with Adrian. Could you write a fic of Maggie and Alex having him over for dinner or something?

I FUCKING LOVE HOW POPULAR ADRIAN IS. HE MEANS SO MUCH TO ME, AND I’M GLAD HE MEANS A LOT TO YOU ALL TOO IT MAKES ME SO FUCKING HAPPY SHOULD WE GIVE ADRIAN HIS OWN SPINOFF SERIES YES YES YES.

Original Adrian fic at Chapter 141.

They’ve had people over for dinner before – Maggie’s work partner, M’gann, a defense attorney Maggie had worked a few cases with, and of course the Superfriends – but Maggie has never fussed like this before.

And Alex is beaming, because of all the people Maggie could fuss over coming to her apartment, it’s a teenage boy that sends her into a cleaning spree, that makes her wring her hands together and run through the menu four times and change even more than that.

“I’m one of the only gay adults he’s got in his life, and certainly the closest, and I just want him to get a good impression of what a happy, healthy queer family, home, looks like,” she explains offhandedly when she notices Alex’s bemused expression, and she’s so frenzied that she doesn’t notice the casual words rolling off her tongue, the casual way she’d called it their home, that she’d called them happy, healthy.

A family.

She’s so frenzied she doesn’t notice the way Alex freezes, the way Alex gasps softly, the way Alex melts. The way Alex wants to get down on one knee right then and there and propose, because Maggie is the one, the one, the one.

But all that will wait – and Alex smiles, because they have time, because Maggie is right: this is home, this is family – because there’s a musical knock on the door, and Maggie jumps up, and Maggie smooths down her flannel and checks that her fly is zipped and leans up on her tip toes to give Alex a quick kiss to the lips with a beaming smile, an excited smile, a smile full of love, a smile full of life. A smile full of all the reasons Alex loves her, is in love with her.

Maggie pads over to the door eagerly, and pulls it open without even checking who it is, because no one else would knock in that musical pattern. No one else but her little boy.

“My favorite college kid!” Maggie exclaims as she throws open the door and her arms.

“My favorite detective!” Adrian responds, pulling Maggie into a one-armed bear hug, rocking back and forth slightly as he holds her, as they laugh just at their closeness, just at finally seeing each other again after Adrian’s first four months away at school in Central City.

Alex watches them and Alex beams. Adrian catches her eye over Maggie’s shoulder and Alex didn’t think it was possible, but his smile broadens.

“Agent Danvers!” he nearly squeals, and Maggie laughs and pulls back to let him in the apartment.

Alex steps forward and opens her arms to the boy. “It’s Alex to you, kiddo,” she tells him, and he laughs as he hugs her.

He steps back and turns so he’s facing both women, and extends a bouquet of cream-colored roses toward Alex and a bouquet of dark pink roses to Maggie.

“What a precious moment.”

Maggie winks at him and Alex blushed, and Maggie nodded Adrian into the kitchen to put both bouquets into water.

“So tell me everything, the texts and calls aren’t enough,” Maggie tells him, while Adrian sticks his fingers into the salad bowl to pick out some croutons and pop them into his mouth with a moan of appreciation.

Alex chuckled and followed suit, and Maggie huffed laughingly. “Adrian’s got an excuse, Danvers, he hasn’t had my homemade croutons in months, but you? You’re a bad influence on my woman, kid,” she nudged him, and Adrian snorted as Alex pffts and steals another crouton.

“Glad to help out,” he winked at Alex, and started carrying the salad bowl to the table without being asked.

“So. Tell me all the things!” Maggie demands again, and Adrian bounces on the balls of his feet.

“I don’t even know, Maggie. College is so different. Central City is so different. But I like it. There’s this queer club at school, I told you, but it’s…” He glanced at Alex apologetically.

“Super white?” she supplied, and he laughed with relief.

“And super cis. A couple of the other brown trans kids and me – there’s more than just me, which I totally didn’t expect, you know? – we’re thinking of starting our own thing, you know, make sure the school gets us the resources we need, too.”

Maggie beams as she spoons salad onto his plate, doling him out extra croutons, doling him out extra tomatoes. He beams back, because she remembers what he likes best.

“I’m trying to figure out if the school’s insurance stuff can cover at least some of my top surgery, too, and if it doesn’t, the others said they’ll help me raise money for it.”

“If you need me to scan through any of the bureaucracy stuff for you, you know I got you,” Maggie tells him, and he raises his glass at Alex.

“You ever met anyone more helpful?” he asks, and she holds Maggie’s hand across the table.
“Haven’t been that lucky, no.”

“Yeah, me too. But…” Adrian squirms with a mischievous grin, and Maggie smacks his shoulder lightly.

“Spill!”

Alex laughs and Maggie whoops.

“Start of every good story!”

“I can’t tell if she likes me, though! I don’t know what to do, she’s just so…”

“Pretty?” Alex guesses.

“Good in bed?” Maggie teases.

“Perfect,” Adrian sighs as he hits out gently at Maggie, and Alex and Maggie exchange a warm glance.

“Yeah, that’s what I keep saying about this one,” Maggie says, and Adrian laughs.

“You know, Agent – uh, Alex – I’ve watched Maggie go through a bunch of girls – “

“Watch it there, kid.”

“I got you, Mags. I’ve never seen her gaga over anyone like this, though. I mean look at her, she’s all domestic and beamy!”

“Beamy?”

“Hey listen, they can’t teach me all the fancy words in just one term!”

The three laugh, and while they do, Adrian watches Alex, watches Maggie. Watches the way they meet eyes while they catch their breath, watch the way Maggie always makes sure Alex’s glass is full of water, the way Alex makes sure Maggie isn’t forgetting to eat in her excitement.

Watches the way they love each other.

Maggie’s told him stories – stories of Blue Springs, stories of being brown and queer in a white and straight world that he feels, feels so deeply, because he’s much darker than Maggie, because he started transitioning before he had support, before he had insurance – and he knows how far-fetched a dream this must have been for her, growing up with constant black eyes and scars on her arms, growing up without any lunch money and without any community.

But here she sits, right in front of him, across from a beautiful woman who looks at her like she’s staring at a piece of magnificent art, in a beautiful apartment with a beautiful meal she made just for him and just for the woman she loves, the woman she’s told him she wants to propose to.

He knows how far Maggie’s come, and he knows, he knows – because of her, because of her, because of this – that he can go just as far, too.

He knows, and his face is barely broad enough for his smile.
anonymous asked:

Alex and Maggie are both turned on by dirty talk. Maggie usually takes the lead since Alex is still a little shy...until she isn't

It starts with Maggie breathing sweet nothings into her ear while she makes love to her.

But it doesn’t end there.

Because you're so beautiful, Alex and god, you're the most gorgeous woman I've ever seen and you're perfect, Ally starts to get interspersed with oh, babe, you feel so good and shit, I love when you scream like that and goddamn you’re so fucking tight for me.

And Alex? Alex loves it.

The huskier Maggie’s voice gets, the more Maggie curses, the dirtier Maggie talks; the wetter Alex gets, the more Alex writhes, the louder Alex screams.

So Maggie does it more, and more, and more, because Alex’s pleasure is her sole priority.

Spread your legs for me, Alex always makes Alex whine.

Let me see you touch yourself, babygirl inevitably makes Alex pant.

Fuck, it feels so good to stretch you out, Ally invariably makes Alex scream.

Goddamn you're wet for me, babe; you want me to make you wetter with my tongue? never fails to make Alex beg.

Oh, fuck, Al, you taste so fucking good, I just wanna lick you all night naturally makes Alex tangle her fingers deeper into Maggie’s hair.

Be a good girl and cum for me, gorgeous of course makes Alex cum, every time.

And it gets Maggie off, too, talking to Alex this way, feeling Alex move under her this way. She doesn’t think about how Alex is shier than her with her words, that Alex doesn’t give the words back to her.

Until, one night, she starts to.

It starts tentatively, small, short. With fuck, Mags, that feels amazing, and Maggie groans, and Alex’s pupils dilate heavily, so she tries again, because Alex Danvers is a scientist, and she likes her experiments to have successful and reproducible outcomes.

So she tries again.
Maggie, you’re making me so wet for you makes Maggie moan and slip her hand between Alex’s legs, so Alex keeps going.

Stretch me out, babe, please, please makes Maggie oblige, makes Maggie bite her lip, so Alex presses on.

I wanna feel your tongue on my clit, Maggie, please makes Maggie shift down between her legs so fast Alex laughs, so fast Maggie blushes, so fast they smile at each other before Maggie licks and Alex screams and Alex keeps going.

Fuck me just like that, Mags makes Maggie hiss and makes Maggie fuck her harder and Alex can’t say anything more than Maggie’s name, now, because Alex cum.

Hard.

And then she crawls on top of Maggie, because Maggie isn’t done, and neither is Alex.

Spread your legs for me makes Maggie whine and makes Maggie obey, and Alex grins, and Alex kisses Maggie softly, because this whole dirty talk thing is absolutely fantastic.
Maggie is kissing her way down Alex’s washboard abs, and she’s stopping at her waistband and she’s staring up at her and she’s licking her lips and she’s gulping and her voice is husky as she asks, “Alex, would you… can I um… I’d love to taste you, babe. Would you… would you like that?”

Alex freezes and Alex panics and Maggie immediately crawls her way up Alex’s body and holds her, holds her, holds her.

“I’m sorry, babe, I didn’t mean to make you feel pressured, we never have to do anything you’re not desperate for, I – “

“No, no, no,” Alex is choking. “You didn’t make me feel pressured, I just… I never… I’ve thought about it, Maggie, I…” She’s bright red and her heart is racing and fuck she she soaking wet but god is she nervous. “I mean, with you. I’ve thought about… you. Going… going down on me. I just, I – “

“Have you never done that before, babe?”

Alex searches for the judgment, for the impatience, for the irritation, in Maggie’s tone, in her face, but she finds none, only love, only respect, only reverence, only attentiveness, only care.

Alex shakes her head, and Maggie nods.

“Well, we can take it at whatever pace you want, babe, we don’t have to – “

“No. No, I want you… I want… I want your tongue… I want… but what if you don’t like it? I… what if…”

“Alexandra Danvers. There is nothing about your body – absolutely nothing – that I don’t love.”

Alex swallows and Alex blinks down tears and Alex kisses her because love, love, love.

Maggie uses every ounce of control she has to not get handsy, just focusing on kissing Alex, which is just fine because kissing Alex Danvers is like a dream.

But Maggie opened the door, and Alex is scared, but Alex doesn’t back down from things that scare her. Not like this. Not anymore. Not with Maggie. Because with Maggie, the fear is wrapped in excitement, and the fear is of what is old, not of what is new.
“Maggie, please?” she breathes into her mouth, and Maggie pulls back.

“Please what, babycurl?” she needs to confirm, and Alex glances down her own body, and Maggie gulps, and Maggie licks her lips, and Alex whimpers.

“Please go down on me?”

Maggie barely stifles a moan, and Maggie obliges.

She starts with a kiss and she starts slow. She starts with her lips and she moans because everything about Alex is perfect, perfect, perfect, and the way Alex screams when Maggie first drags her tongue across her clit is the best sound she’s ever heard, and the way Alex grabs at her hair and pulls her closer to her body desperately is the best feeling Maggie’s ever felt, and the way Alex begs her to fuck her with her tongue, begs her to lick her everywhere, makes Maggie drip onto the bedsheets beneath her, but she doesn’t care, because Alex, Alex, Alex.

“You taste amazing, Ally,” she moans, and Alex whines, and Alex arches her hips up into Maggie’s mouth and Maggie practically cums then and there.

Maggie’s fingers slipping inside Alex after she asks, after Alex screams and nods desperately, while keeping her tongue firmly licking Alex’s clit is what completely unravels her, and the taste of her coats Maggie’s tongue, lips, chin, nose, and Maggie smiles into Alex’s clit as Alex pulses all around her, convulses into her, digs her fingers into her hair and rips her throat open on her name.

“I could do that forever,” Maggie tells her as she wipes her mouth on her shoulder, and Alex lays back with a sigh, tears in her eyes and a smile on her lips.

“Forever sounds perfect.”

Chapter Summary

anonymous asked:

can you PLEASE write that one where adrian walks in on a sanvers BDSM scene? i've read a lot of anti-BDSM stuff recently and just... gah. i'm not even sure i'm that kinky, and even the nicer "critical" people come off as pretty condescending. (it's ok for me to have subby thoughts, apparently, but from what they say i need to basically rise above them because those fantasies reinforce oppression. ) (i'm avoiding it now, it's definitely not good for me to keep looking at.)

Oh sweetheart, I’m so sorry you’ve been surrounded by negative stuff! Hopefully this helps!!! <3 <3 <3

Only two people other than Maggie have the keys to her apartment, and one of them is currently cuffed with her hands above her head, ankles tied down, hot wax dripping onto her bare stomach as she writhes, screams, pants, begs under Maggie’s careful gaze.

The other is on the other side of the door, not hearing Alex’s screams because DEO tech is very good at sound-proofing, as he digs in his saddle bag for Maggie's key, as he scrapes it into the lock, and steps inside.

Neither of them hear the door over their own ragged breathing, but Maggie, kneeling over Alex as she traces softly burning patterns onto her stomach with the wax, sees the movement, and she curses loudly.

“Fuck, Adrian!” She catches the last of the wax she was dripping in her palm so Alex, startled and unable to move because of her restraints, doesn’t accidentally get hurt. She grabs a blanket from the couch and tosses it onto Alex’s body, uncuffing her quickly so she can sit up and untie her own ankle restraints.

Maggie stands, pulling her jeans up, zipping them, buttoning her undone flannel, looking down at Alex to make sure she’s okay, to make sure she’s feeling safe, to make sure she’s not going to run.

“I am so sorry,” Adrian is spluttering, his hands up and his eyes wide. Maggie wipes the still-warm wax off on her jeans and pinches the bridge of her nose, tossing Alex, now completely untied, her tank, her thong, her shorts.

“No, you’re fine, kid, what… what’re you doing here, are you okay?”

“I… um… I...”

Maggie sighs deeply and sits back on her haunches next to Alex, putting a soft hand on her shoulder and checking her wrists, her ankles, for any redness. “You okay, babe?”

Alex is blushing more furiously than Maggie’s ever seen her, but she nods because at least she’s dressed, now, and because hell, at least it wasn’t Kara.

Maggie looks back up at Adrian, elbows dangling off her knees.

“You can sit, kiddo, you’re okay. Everything’s okay, alright?”

Adrian glances skeptically at the couch, and Maggie finally smirks.

“We were on the floor the whole time, don’t worry about it.”

Alex chuckles as Maggie tugs her to her feet with a kiss to her nose, and Adrian sits gratefully, face still guarded with shock.

“I mean, I’m not saying we’ve never flew on that couch…”

Adrian grimaces and Alex shoves Maggie gently in the shoulder. “Oh, leave the kid alone. Hi Adrian.” She tilts her head at him and smiles bemusedly, because he has yet to look at her, yet to make eye contact, yet to do anything but stammer and stumble and look positively mortified and extremely uncomfortably turned on.

Alex plops down next to him and puts a soft hand on his knee.

“Hey. It’s okay. No one’s mad at you.”

“No, I shouldn’t have come in without knocking, I should have called, I – “

Maggie kneels in front of him and puts one hand on his other knee, the other over Alex’s hand.

“Ade, I gave you that key for a reason – “

“But it’s not too big a deal, I just, my car broke down and the buses aren’t running and it’s raining and I don’t have cab fare and I didn’t want to walk all the way to my parents’ place, so I – “

“Hey, hey, that’s okay, I’m glad you were close by, I’m glad you were okay – I was worried it was something worse. This is your home, too, alright? I’m sorry you uh… had to walk in on… that…”

Adrian raises his eyebrows and shakes his head, and he still won’t look at Alex, and will only fleetingly look at Maggie.

“Talk to me, Adrian,” Maggie offers as she exchanges a silent glance, a silent agreement, with Alex, to answer any questions he has, together.

He shrugs and he breathes in deeply.

“It was hot,” he says in a small voice, and Alex blushes and Maggie chuckles.

“You got that right,” she mutters, and Alex blushes deeper.

Adrian grins finally, and finds it in him to look up at his big sister, queer mother figure.

He glances at Alex shyly, and Alex smiles bravely, shoving down her own embarrassment so he won’t grow up with the same shame she did.

“That was wax?” he asks, and Alex nods, fingering the spots where her tank is sticking to her abs from the wax that lingers, yet to be rubbed in, on her skin. “It was melted. Hot.” Alex nods again, and glances at Maggie, who nods steadyingly at her.
“So, hot wax. On your bare skin. It… that doesn’t hurt?”

Alex arches an eyebrow and gives Maggie the briefest of secret, small smiles.

“It does. And it doesn’t. It… it turns me on, the rush, the shock. I trust Maggie, she… she only does it when I want, where I want, how I want, and that trust combined with the illusion of risk makes it…”

“Hot,” Adrian finishes for her, nodding. “I’ve never really thought about subbing for anyone. Don’t have anyone I trust like you trust Maggie, I guess,” he grins, and Maggie looks down with a smile, and Alex beams and squeezes her hand.

“And your wrists and ankles – it doesn’t scare you?”

Alex shifts and sighs and Maggie watches her, watches Adrian, carefully.

“It would. It has. I… I’ve been tied up like that in different contexts, I’ve been… beaten…” She chooses her words carefully and Maggie swallows grief, swallows rage, as she strokes Alex’s knuckles with her thumb. “But with Maggie, when Maggie locks me up like that, ties me up like that, it… I don’t know how to describe it. I get to let everything go, I let to give up control, and I’m always in control, of everything, the weight of the world, so to be able to give that to her…”

“Must hurt your throat,” Adrian teases about her screaming, and Alex blushes.

“You always top?” he asks Maggie, and she grins, and she exchanges another one of those secret, private glances with Alex, and she shakes her head.

“Nope. Not always.”

Adrian nods. “So I don’t have to choose?”

Maggie shakes her head emphatically. “No, Ade. Your only job is to find someone whose priority is to make you happy, to give you pleasure, whatever way that looks.”

“If I wanted to… if I wanted to try that stuff…”

“I will answer any questions you have, kid.”

Adrian grins, and Maggie leans up to kiss his cheek. “Oooh, so much scruff, look at my little man, you’re gonna cut me there.”

Alex laughs and Adrian preens.

“Listen Ade. I’ll make you up the couch, you stay here tonight, and in the morning I’ll take a look at your car for you, okay?”

“And you’d love to continue talking about catching up, but right now you have some unfinished business with your woman,” Adrian supplies with a wicked grin.

“That’s my boy,” Maggie winks, and Adrian shakes his head and laughs, because he’s never seen Maggie this open, this silly, this giddy, this sexual, this safe, and it brings tears to his eyes, because that’s exactly what she deserves.
He’s nervous when he knocks at the door.

She’d been lovely each time he met her so far, and her text was warm and open – Of course I’ll help you out! Physics is one of my things. (Maggie says I’m a nerd, and don’t tell her I said so, but it’s pretty true.) Why don’t you come over Maggie’s apartment around 7 tonight and I’ll get you dinner and we can work together? – but he really wants to impress her, and he’s afraid that his stupid questions about his stupid physics homework will make someone as smart as Alex Danvers think he’s just another stupid kid.

So he’s nervous, but he knocks in his typical musical rhythm anyway, and Alex is grinning already as she opens the door.

“Hey you,” she greets, and pulls him into a one-armed hug. “Got pizza and salad and garlic bread and milkshakes – I figured that’s as good physics food as any, right?”

Tears sting his eyes, because other than Maggie, no grownup has ever done something like this for him. Ordered him food (so much food), interrupted their life – and he knew the FBI kept Alex plenty busy – to don an old Stanford sweatshirt and be vulnerable enough to replace her contacts with glasses, to welcome him home somewhere, to help him, to care for him, asking nothing, nothing, nothing in return, because he had nothing to offer her but the shocked smile on his face, because he doesn’t get paid until next week so he couldn’t even contribute something small like dessert.

But Alex doesn’t seem to mind that he’s come empty handed, because she’s grabbing eagerly at the textbook and notebooks he’s pulling out of his bag, and she’s flipping through them with an almost lusty grin on her face.

“Oh, we’re gonna have a lot of fun tonight, you and me, Adrian,” she tells him, and he gulps as she opens his notebook, because now is probably the moment when she discovers that he really isn’t all that smart, really isn’t all that worth being enthusiastic about, after all.

But her eyebrows arch and her lips twitch upward, and she grins at him over her shoulder as she leads him to the rug in the middle of the living room so they can spread his notebook, his worksheets, his textbook between them.

“Your notes are spectacular, Ade,” she says, and she sounds genuinely impressed, genuinely pleased, genuinely proud. His spine straightens and his heart swells.

“Maybe, but I just can’t get my head around it. How the hell can an electron be a wave and a particle at the same time?"

Alex laughs and adjusts her glasses and flips through his textbook and points to a passage about wave-particle duality. “The thing this isn’t gonna tell you is that we honest to god don’t know. But we have some theories.”

And never has he heard physics sound so interesting, never has it been so intuitive, so exciting, so exhilarating, so important.

Alex talks and Alex demonstrates and Adrian asks and Adrian scrawls notes and Alex asks and Adrian answers and Alex offers her fist and Adrian bumps it because he’s getting it, he’s really getting it.

Neither of them notice the hours ticking by as she guides him through the math, as she guides him through the realities layered underneath the math, inside the math.

Neither of them notice the increasingly messy sprawl of papers as both of them, in their enthusiasm, pick pages at random to start writing on, to start theorizing on, to start drawing an idea for the other on.

Neither of them notice Maggie’s key scraping the lock of the front door, Maggie standing silent in the threshold, taking over the scene that’s taken over her living room: her girlfriend, in nothing but basketball shorts and her slightly tattered Stanford sweater, and her glasses, god, those glasses, forehead so close to her little boy’s that they’re practically touching, pouring over a page of his physics textbook amidst a sea of scattered papers, scattered notes, scattered ideas, scattered revelations.

“Yeah, you got it, Adrian!” Alex is beaming, and Maggie swallows tears, because Adrian’s entire body is glowing with pride, with confidence, and when she takes a step closer, they look up with identical grins on their faces.

“The damn cat is both dead and alive!” Adrian informs her victoriously by way of greeting her, and Alex laughs at the quantum joke while Maggie shakes her head and mutters something happy, something content, something thrilled, about her very own family of nerds.

Chapter Summary

So uh hi! So I was wondering if you could write something about sanvers reacting to the Muslim ban? It hit me pretty deeply and I feel so embarrassed to even ask. But I think it's worth a shot. Trump is a dick

^^ Prompt from a beautiful and brave Anon

Maggie doesn’t answer her phone and she doesn’t answer her texts, because she’s thrown it across the room and shattered the damn thing against the wall, and she doesn’t even give a damn because fuck him, fuck them, fuck this, fuck everything.

Alex calls the precinct and Maggie’s cop partner tells her that Maggie already left for the day, and when she doesn’t find her at the bar, Alex rushes home.

Rushes, because she knows.

She opens the door slowly, quietly, and Maggie is working at her heavy bag, hair tied up in a messy bun, wrists wrapped but roughly, quickly, carelessly.

Shattered plastic and her phone battery lay dead and broken under a small dent in the wall, and Alex sighs, because she knows.

She switches Nas and Usher off of the blasting speaker, and Maggie’s punches still, her shoulders tense. She turns and she wipes her forehead with the back of her hand.

“You heard?” she asks, because Alex is pale, because Alex’s face is almost as broken as Maggie’s insides feel.

“The ban?” Alex confirms, and Maggie nods and throws another punch.

Alex slips off her bag, shrugs off her jacket, and takes her gun out of her waistband. She crosses the room and braces the bag in front of Maggie, who nods in appreciation and throws a cross-jab-kick combo that makes Alex brace her abs to hold the bag steady, that makes Alex’s heart break because of the rage behind it.

“Does he not get that he’s the motherfucking terrorist?”

Uppercut, jab, jab, uppercut.

“That he’s destroying families, that he’s using motherfucking Nazi rhetoric against Muslims and anyone his motherfucker xenophobia doesn’t know what to do with.”

Jab, cross, jab, jab, cross, kick.

“Told my captain I’m not working tonight. They wanted me to patrol the airport, but I’m gonna be protesting instead. You can come if you want. James is gonna pick me up in an hour. I can’t be on duty, I can’t, I’d lose my job. I wouldn’t… I wouldn’t enforce anything. Not tonight, not like this.”

Front kick, roundhouse kick, jab, cross, front kick.

“Of course I’m coming with you, babe. Of course I’m coming with you.”

Maggie’s lips twitch upward for the first time since Alex walked in, and she reaches around the heavy bag to touch Alex’s cheek.

It’s almost jarring, how gentle her touch to Alex’s skin is compared with the rage, the power, she’s been slamming the bag with.

“And you know what, I wish it were just the orange hemorrhoid bastard. But it’s the whole damn system, it’s the whole damn country, this whole fucking place was built on this kind of blood, on this kind of hate, and I just…”

Roundhouse kick, front kick, jab, jab, cross, uppercut.

“I fucking hate everything.”

Alex nods and braces the bag harder, and Maggie catches a glimpse of the love on her face, the rage that she’s suppressing for Maggie’s sake, so Maggie has the space to process, to cope, to grieve, to rage, on her own.

“Well, no,” she corrects herself, crossing behind the bag the sink into Alex’s arms. “Not quite everything.”

“We’ll fight it, Mags. Together.”

“Yeah?”

“Yeah.”

“Good then.”

“Maggie. I’ve got you.”

Maggie sighs deeply and lets Alex hold her, lets Alex kiss her forehead, unwrap her hands and kiss her knuckles and sooth her raging soul.

“I’ve got you. I’ve got you. I’ve got you.”

Chapter Summary

anonymous asked:

alex is away on a trip so maggie and kara cuddle every night

Alex is in Geneva, and Kara is drunk.

Maggie sits across the table from her, leaning back, an arched eyebrow, tilted head, and lopsided grin quirking her face as she listens to Kara Danvers ramble, slur, and generally crack herself up.

Kara leans across the table conspiratorially, and Maggie leans forward too, enjoying the opportunity to humor the kid.

“I’m so happy I can tell you about flying, Maggie. It’s so nice. You’re so nice. Alex really loves you, you know. Love.” Suddenly Kara claps both of her hands over her mouth. “Has she told you yet? Was I not supposed to say that? Oh no, Alex will kill me – “

Tears are stinging Maggie’s eyes and she thinks she might have forgotten what breathing is, but she smiles at Kara and touches her wrists softly. “Don’t worry, Little Danvers, it’ll be our little secret.”

Kara sighs in relief and she slumps and Maggie shifts immediately because she knows what’s coming: sure enough, Kara is passed out in her arms, muttering occasionally about Lena Luthor and alien amnesty and cho - coh - latt and alien alcohol as Maggie tugs Kara’s limp arm around her own shoulders, holding the taller girl’s weight as she nods over to M’gann, who smiles and shakes her head and hails a cab.

“I owe you one,” Maggie grunts as she drags Kara out, but M’gann waves her off.

“It’s what friends are for, Mags,” she calls, and Maggie winks at her as Kara starts giggling because the outside air as they step outside apparently feels like ghost whispers.

Maggie takes her back to her place because she knows Kara’s elevator isn’t working and she’s strong, but there’s no way she’s hauling Kara up all those stairs.

She forces some water into Kara’s giggling, half-asleep lips before she strips off her shoes and unbuttons her jeans and puts her glasses on the bedside table and tucks her in and puts a glass of water next to her for when she wakes.

She’s never seen Alex’s little sister look so peaceful as she does as she sleeps, as she takes one of Maggie’s pillows into her arms and hugs it close to her, cuddles it. Maggie sighs, because it’s both of her Danvers girls that only get the chance to release the weight of the world when they sleep.
She hesitates for a moment after she brushes her teeth and strips down to boxers and a tank. She hesitates, but Kara is cuddling that pillow pretty hard, and Kara is muttering about missing Alex, and dammit, Maggie does too. So she smiles and she sighs and she crawls into bed next to Kara, and Kara automatically shifts back into Maggie’s arms with a contented sigh.

Kara doesn’t get drunk the rest of the week that Alex is gone, but she does start showing up at Maggie’s each night.

Sometimes she knocks on the door hungry for a homecooked meal, and sometimes she flies through the window with a furrowed brow and in need of some serious TV time.

But each night ends the same: Kara huddles deep into Maggie’s bed, and Maggie wraps her arms around her, and Kara sighs sleepily and snuggles deeper into her, and wonders why her sister didn’t get a girlfriend sooner, because this is the best.

Chapter Summary

Sanvers request

Hi!

So I’m loving your girls we wanna kiss series and flustered I just saw something I can’t unsee Kara is my favorite. So what about one where she nearly walks in on Alex and Maggie but stops and watches because she’s curious or sees something that intrigues her (like a strap on or something)

^^ Prompt from Joanne

Kara has a tendency to walk in on people having sex.

Which is unfortunate for her, because there are only so many times she can gasp and back up and furiously adjust her glasses in horror, in mortified embarrassment, in why did I even open this closet door why did they even build this closet and why would anyone ever have sex in this closet what is it about this closet anyway.

She’s used to averting her eyes and she’s used to covering her face and she’s used to stammering and trying not to make eye contact with people as they tuck in their shirts and stumble through explanations and it’s not what it looks like, when in fact it always is exactly what it looks like.

But when her key scrapes the lock to Alex’s apartment and she steps into the living room, Alex and Maggie don’t jump apart, because they don’t notice her.

Because Maggie is bent over the side of the couch and Alex’s jeans are around her ankles and she’s wearing briefs with a dildo coming out of them, a dildo that she’s pushing carefully, raggedly, hard, into Maggie from behind, and Maggie is screaming her name and Alex is moaning and her hands are gripping Maggie’s hips and pulling her closer, and she’s kissing Maggie’s naked back and she’s moaning and Kara gulps, because she’s never been so confused.

Because it’s her sister, her very gay sister and her sister’s very lesbian girlfriend, but they’re fucking with a strap-on and part of Kara wants to cover her eyes and never open them again because it’s her sister, but the other part of her wants to see more, wants to learn more, because girls can do this together, too, girls can love this as much as Maggie sounds like she’s loving it? And why is Alex asking what Maggie’s color is, and what does green have to do with how hard Alex is fucking her and what – “Shit, Karal!” Maggie swears, and Alex swears louder, and Alex takes care to slip gently out of Maggie’s body before yanks up her jeans roughly, and Maggie grabs at her discarded t-shirt and tugs it over her head, pulls her boyshorts back up, shifts uncomfortably, turns and sits on the ledge of the couch she’d just been bent over, just been fucked over, and waits for Alex’s cue on how to handle.

Alex runs shaking fingers over her face as Kara splutters, as Kara backs up, as Kara stammers out apologies and adjusts her glasses and offers to leave and she’s sorry, she’s sorry, she’s sorry.

She looks close to tears and Alex heaves a sigh and pats the ledge of the couch next to her, next to Maggie.

“It’s okay, Kara, you – it’s okay.” Her voice is distant and just a bit strained, but Maggie’s got her hand on her knee and it eases her tension, it eases her embarrassment, it eases the internalized shame she’s still working through.

Kara hovers in place for a moment and Maggie takes a try. “It’s all good, Little Danvers. Not like we put a sock on the door or anything.”

“No, no,” Kara protests, not looking at either of them as she adjusts her glasses furiously, “I should have knocked, or called, or – ”

“Kara,” Alex sighs again, and steps forward to take her little sister by the shoulders. “This is new. For both of us. You’ve never had a reason to knock before, to call before. It’s new for us both, okay? We’ll figure it out, we’ll work out a system, okay? You didn’t do anything wrong.”

Kara freezes and Kara fidgets, because she knows something the other two don’t.

“What is it?” Alex asks, because Alex knows that look.

Kara squirms and sighs and surrenders, because she knows Alex won’t let it drop until she tells her.

“I… I… I didn’t walk in two seconds ago. I mean I wasn’t being creepy or anything, I just didn’t know girls were allowed to have sex like that, or that gay girls liked sex like that, and then you were talking about colors and I didn’t understand but you both seemed like you were enjoying it so much and I was just curious because whenever I’ve walked in on straight people having sex they never seem that into it, not like you guys, and I was thinking about girls and I was thinking about what if I wanted to go that with girls and I just froze and I promise I wasn’t being creepy, I mean, you’re my sister, I – ”

Alex is frozen and Alex is slow to process her sister’s breathless rant, so Maggie hops down from the couch’s ledge and takes over for her.

“Hey, hey, Little Danvers, it’s okay. It’s okay if you want to do this with girls, it’s okay that you were curious, it’s okay that you have questions. Maybe you and I should talk about it when your sister’s not around because it looks like you sent her into shock – ”

Alex pffts and Maggie kisses her nose and Alex blushes and Kara smiles and finally looks Maggie in the eyes.

“It’s okay, Kara. Everything’s okay. Alright?”

Kara nods softly, tearily, and reaches for Alex’s hand. Alex takes it and Kara smiles.

“I’m sorry I interrupted,” she says in a small voice.

Maggie sighs softly and Alex moans slightly. “Yeah, we really do need to figure out a system.”

“Well, I don’t know about you two, but I’m super hungry for… some reason. Pizza and potstickers?” Maggie suggests with a devilish grin, and Kara jumps up and down and Alex rests her head on Maggie’s shoulder with a smile.
“Anyone ever tell you you’re the perfect girlfriend?”

“Aw, Danvers, I can’t be, cause that’s you!”

“Oh boy, this is getting more embarrassing than walking in on the whole sex thing.”

Alex laughs and Maggie orders pizza and Kara eats, new thoughts spinning around her mind and beginning to alter the fabric of her life.

Chapter Summary

anonymous asked:

Could u write a cute piece of alex noticing that everytime she calls maggie beautiful or amazing, maggie gets shy and when alex asks why she says something like "I'm not used to be so complimented by a girlfriend...or anyone"

Alex is so focused on saying what she needs to say, on getting it out just like she practiced, that she doesn’t notice the way Maggie doesn’t seem to know how to react when she calls her amazing.

She’s so caught up in coming out, in her feelings and in her ebullience that she doesn’t notice that Maggie never seems to know how to react – or reacts negatively – when Alex asks who would break up with her, why anyone would not like her, when Maggie deflects with a teasing joke when Alex calls her a great cop.

But when they start dating, Alex starts noticing.

When she brings Maggie into the DEO and tells J’onn that her genius girlfriend figured out where to hit Cadmus next, go on, tell him, babe, it’s so brilliant, Maggie’s eyes get wide, and she gulps a little too hard, and she keeps it together because they’re in front of people, but her body language screams fear and her body language screams confusion.

When she shows up to pick her up for a date and she splutters because Maggie, you look beautiful. I mean, you’re always beautiful, I mean, you know, you have mirrors in the apartment, of course you know, how could you not know, you’re beautiful all the time, but just right now, you look even more beautiful, which I mean come on, who knew that was even possible?, Maggie lowers her eyes and the small smile on her lips looks forced, feels forced, is forced.

And when Alex has her pressed against the wall and is kissing her neck and tracing her way up Maggie’s jawline and whispering into her ear you are so amazing, Mags, Maggie stops panting and Maggie stops whining and Maggie stops grabbing at her, because Maggie just freezes.

Alex pulls back, and Alex takes her face into her hands, and Alex knows it’s time to talk about it.

“You get so upset when I compliment you, babe.”

Maggie sighs and Maggie looks down and Maggie shrugs and Maggie slinks around Alex and away from the wall, to the couch, to her abandoned bottle of beer.

She drinks deeply and she sighs again and she forces herself to look up at Alex. “Well, it’s not something I’m used to, Danvers. From girlfriends, from… from anyone, really. And when girlfriends did compliment me, it tends to be as an apology for treating me like shit, because they want something, because I’m not worth anything unless I’m giving someone something, apparently _”
Alex swallows rage and Alex swallows tears and Alex kneels in front of Maggie and takes her hands and kisses each knuckle, each scar, each finger, each vein.

“Maggie, I only ever want to make you feel good. That’s it, that’s all, I promise – ”

“No, I know that – ”

“You deserve to know more than that, Maggie. You deserve to feel special, and smart, and beautiful, and loved, and respected, and perfect, because you are, Maggie. And I… I’m not gonna stop, because you deserve to hear it every day. If… if that’s okay.”

Maggie sighs and Maggie stares down at her wide-eyed, earnest girlfriend, and a small smile starts tugging unbidden at her lips.

“I think I could try to get used to that, Danvers.”

“Good, Sawyer. Very, very good.”

sabrulesawesomeness

^prompt

@queergirlwriting

@sabrulesawesomeness I laughed SO hard when I saw the simplicity of this. SO FUCKING HARD. My girlfriend was concerned. Thank you for the rush of pleasure. Hope you enjoy!

“Danvers,” Maggie growls into her mouth, because they’re not even in the door yet and Alex is already shoving her into the wall, already tugging her jacket down her shoulders, already slipping her tongue into her mouth and making her so fucking hot.

“Mmm?” Alex flirts as she switches to Maggie’s neck, and Maggie tilts her head back despite herself, pulling Alex closer to her by her hips.

“Danvers, I know what you’re doing,” she rasps, and Alex pulls back, and Alex laughs.

“And what would that be, Detective?”

Maggie smiles, beams, really, because Alex Danvers’s lips are swollen and Alex Danvers’s eyes are happy and Alex Danvers is flirting with her, touching her, waiting eagerly for her to finally get her key in the door; Alex Danvers is her girlfriend, and she’s spending the night in her apartment, and dammit, she’s going to finally try vegan ice cream.

“You’re trying to get me to forget our little bet.”

Alex tosses her hands behind her in indignation as she follows Maggie into her apartment.

“How could I be trying to make you forget? We’re here, aren’t we? Your apartment. Just us…” She tosses her gun onto Maggie’s couch and she saunters toward her, stripping off her own jacket as she bites her lip through her smile, as her eyes flicker down to Maggie’s mouth.

“Mmhmm. Just us,” Maggie agrees, throwing her elbows over Alex’s shoulders and leaning up on her tiptoes to within a breath of Alex’s lips.

Alex’s breath hitches and she waits for Maggie’s mouth to touch hers, but Maggie smirks, and Maggie pulls back, and Alex whines.
“Just us and a pint of chocolate peanut butter swirl,” Maggie skips away, and Alex moans.

“It’s not real chocolate peanut butter swirl, babe!” she protests, and Maggie laughs, and Maggie nearly swoons, because Alex Danvers is making herself at home in her apartment, and Alex Danvers is calling her pet names.

Maggie leans up to the freezer and sets the pint down, turning and bracing herself against the counter with fuck me eyes and a you’re the most beautiful thing I’ve ever seen smile.

Alex gasps softly at the sight, and she pins Maggie softly in place, a hand on either side of her hips on the counter. Maggie stares up at her, licking her lips, nervous suddenly.

“All good, babe?” Alex checks in, because Alex has already learned her better than any of her longer term girlfriends had ever bothered to.

Maggie sighs and leans her forehead into Alex’s neck, and Alex kisses her hair.

“You’re not mad at me?” Maggie asks, and Alex pulls back and tilts Maggie’s chin up so they’re looking at each other.

“Mags, why would I be mad?”

“You don’t like losing. And you like being at your apartment better than mine – “

“Maggie, anywhere you are is where I love being. And losing to you?” Alex leans down and kisses her nose, and Maggie nearly swoons. “That’s not losing.”

Maggie grins wickedly and reaches to the side, and Alex pretends to groan, because she knows.

“Even if it means trying vegan ice cream?” Maggie tugs off the top of the pint and Alex steps back to grab a spoon, because yes, even if it means trying vegan ice cream, losing to that smile, to those eyes, isn’t losing at all.

But Maggie reaches out and Maggie stops her.

“No need,” she says, and her voice is low, and Alex’s mouth suddenly runs dry, because Maggie is holding Alex’s eyes with her own and she’s dipping her index finger into the pint of chocolate peanut butter swirl, and she’s keeping eye contact with Alex as her finger disappears into her own mouth, slow, slow, slow, and Maggie moans for effect, and Alex moans for real, because god, every time she thinks Maggie has done the sexiest thing she’s ever seen, Maggie goes ahead and proves her wrong.

“Still seem that bad?” Maggie asks, licking her lips slowly, slowly, and Alex follows the path of her tongue and tries to remember the importance of oxygen.

“I… it – I…”

“Mmmmm, words a little rough there, Danvers?” Maggie asks, and Alex is entranced, following the path of Maggie’s finger again, but this time, Maggie is putting down the pint, and Alex furrows her brow.

But then Maggie is tugging at the hem of her own shirt, tugging it above her head, black lace bra under it making Alex nearly pass out, because fuck fuck fuck.

Maggie smirks and Maggie tosses her shirt on the floor and Maggie grabs the pint and beckons
Alex to her bedroom.

Her bedroom with a door that actually closes it off from the rest of the apartment, she’d be eager to point out if she wasn’t concentrating so hard on keeping herself together enough, keep her cool enough, because she was seducing Alex Danvers and god how did she ever get so lucky?

Alex follows as though under a spell, because she is under a spell, and Maggie turns with her knees against her bed, eyes sultry, bottom lip between her teeth.

“Lay me down?” she whispers, and Alex lifts her eagerly, leans her back on the bed, making sure her head is cushioned by pillows, and Alex freezes, hovering above her, catching her breath because she’s in Maggie Sawyer’s bedroom and Maggie Sawyer is seducing her and god how did she ever get so lucky?

Maggie smiles up at her, part adoration and part mischief, part love and part lust, and she runs her finger through the pint again, but instead of bringing her finger to her lips, she offers it up to Alex, whose breath hitches, whose pupils dilate even further, who licks her lips and tilts her head to take Maggie’s finger into her mouth, but Maggie moves it out of her reach.

Alex whines and Alex mock glares down at her.

“I thought you wanted me to try the stuff.”

“Mmm, Danvers, are you saying you want to now?”

“Well, when it’s being served like this…”

“Like what? Like this?”

Maggie lets the ice cream drip from her finger onto her washboard abs, and Alex gasps, and Alex moans, and Alex straddles her and Alex brings her lips down to Maggie’s body and god she’s never tasted anything so perfect.

Maggie’s hips arch up when Alex’s hot lips meet the cold ice cream on her skin, and she grabs at Alex’s hair, and she’d intended to keep it cool, she’d intended to keep it together, she’d intended to stay in control, but Alex’s lips, Alex’s breath, Alex’s tongue, Alex’s moans, and Maggie lets herself go, because Alex has got her, Alex has got her, Alex has got her.

“Like that, Danvers?” she asks, but it’s breathy rather than husky, and it’s alright, because she can feel Alex smiling into her skin, and when Alex looks up with shining eyes, there’s a bit of chocolate smeared on her top lip, and Maggie sits up to lick it off, to kiss it off, and Alex’s mouth is warm and Alex’s mouth is cold and Alex’s mouth is perfect.

“Want more?” she asks, and Alex’s eyes dance.

“I want you.”

“Then take me,” Maggie whispers, and Alex’s breath hitches, and Alex does.

The pint is nearly melted by the time Alex’s clothes are mostly off, by the time Maggie’s jeans are inside out and tossed across the room, by the time Alex has traced her name in ice cream onto Maggie’s abs.

“Claiming me, Danvers?” Maggie wants to know, and Alex nods, and Maggie groans as Alex’s tongue traces every contour of Maggie’s tensed ab muscles.
“Or maybe you just really like the ice cream?”

Alex scoffs, but Alex doesn’t stop, and Maggie’s chuckle turns into a heady gasp when Alex’s teeth clamp down slightly on her side.

“Okay?” Alex makes sure, and Maggie nods desperately, and Alex smiles, and Alex continues.

The pint is nearly gone by the time they make their way back into the kitchen, because the night itself is nearly gone and they need water and they need more food, and while last night’s leftovers heat up, Maggie grabs a spoon, and she offers Alex the last of the melted ice cream with a raised eyebrow.

Alex surprises herself, because she doesn’t hesitate, opening her mouth and letting Maggie feed her, and their eyes connect as she closes her mouth, as she swallows.

“So vegan ice cream not as bad as you thought, Danvers?” Maggie asks, her voice soft and low and vulnerable but happy, happy, happy.

“Nothing’s ever bad with you, Maggie.”

“Nerd,” Maggie counters, but she’s beaming, beaming, because Alex Danvers hates losing, but Alex Danvers looks lost in her, and she looks happy about it; and nothing, not even another pint of vegan ice cream, could make the night feel more perfect.
Maggie calls Cat for Kara, because it’s Livewire and Kara needs Ms. Grant. 2x10 missing scene, because HOW DO WE HAVE A LIVEWIRE EPISODE WITHOUT CAT?

She bites the inside of her cheek as the phone rings, rings, rings, and she half expects the Queen of All Media to let it go to voicemail at the unknown number, but a curt voice picks up, and Maggie gulps.

“Yes.”

“Hi, Ms. Grant?”

“Yes, this is she. And this is?”

“Maggie Sawyer, NCPD, ma’am. I’m sorry to disturb you, but – “

“Is Supergirl alright?”

Maggie’s eyebrows shoot up at the clear concern in the woman’s voice, and she thinks Alex’s protectiveness of Kara might have caused her to overlook how much Cat Grant cares for her former assistant.

And Maggie knows that Cat knows, even if she pretended to believe Kara’s insistence that she wasn’t that Alex told her about.

“Yes, yes, Supergirl’s fine, but – but have you seen the news?”

“I haven’t – my son has a science competition today that he’s rather nervous about and – I don’t know why I’m telling you this. You called me for a reason, Detective, I suggest you get to it, I’m a busy woman.”

“Yes ma’am,” Maggie says, watching Alex take care of M’gann through the glass wall separating them. “Livewire is loose, and Supergirl...” She thinks of how distressed Kara was this morning, how out of sorts, how anxious, how enraged, how terrified, and she remembers the news about Livewire chaining Cat Grant to a bench in a park, Livewire targeting Cat Grant, Livewire trying to kill Cat Grant.

“Supergirl could use someone to talk to. You, particularly. I think the only reason she hasn’t called you is she doesn’t want to risk Livewire going after you again – “

“I’m sorry, and you – and you know all this because – “

“I’m um... I’m Alex Danvers’s girlfriend, ma’am. Kara Danvers’s sister’s girlfriend. And I’m... I’m with the NCPD’s science division, and we do quite a lot of work with Supergirl.”
A long pause. Maggie bites her lip as she waits.

“So. You must be a decent detective after all. You figured it out about those ridiculous glasses too, hm?”

Maggie chuckles, and doesn’t answer, not directly, because it’s not her secret to confirm, but the littlest Danvers needs her. Or, more specifically, needs Cat.

“Supergirl needs you, Ms. Grant. So does Kara.”

Another long pause, and Maggie hears children in the background, and she understands suddenly why Cat left National City, why she put her career on hold. Her son was in a science competition, and she was there, of course she was there. Just like Maggie was hoping she’d be there for Kara.

“Detective Sawyer? Thank you. Kara is… lucky you came into her and her sister’s lives.”

“I’m the lucky one, Ms. Grant. Um, good luck to your son today.”

“Oh, Carter doesn’t need luck. He has his brain.”

“Of course, ma’am. Thank you. For helping Supergirl.”

“Yes, yes, I’ll call her right away. Goodbye, Detective.”

Maggie hangs up, sighs, and slips the phone in her pocket before slipping into the med bay to see Alex, to see M’gann, to hold her hand, to whisper stories to her about the bar, to whisper how she needs her to fight, how Alex is going to take good care of her, how she’d better wake up soon, because Alex is her girlfriend now and she’s gotta see them together.

When she hears Kara yelp at the caller ID as her phone rings in the hallway a mere minute later, Maggie smiles softly, because she might not be able to help Alex be a doctor right now, but she can help Kara be Supergirl.

“Keira, what is this I hear from a Detective Sawyer about Livewire being on the loose?”

“Maggie called you? I… Ms. Grant, you and Carter are in no danger, I promise, I’ve – “

“And how would you know this, dear? Snapper have you covering the story closely, does he?”

Kara splutters and Kara adjusts her glasses, and Kara’s heart hammers because Ms. Grant, Cat, Ms. Grant.

“Yes, yes, of course, and I um… my sources, who I met through reporting, you know, being a reporter, tell me that undercover agents have been sent to Carter’s school to protect the two of you… did you wish him luck on his competition today?”

“Yes, Keira, he received all five of your ridiculous emoji-filled texts this morning, and he was so pleased her nearly dropped his project and destroyed it. But that’s not what’s important right at this moment, Keira, and you know it. Are you alright?”

“Ms. Grant, of course, I – “

“Kara.” Her voice is soft, her voice is simple. Her voice is full. Kara blinks and swallows the lump in her throat.

“Yes, Ms. Grant?”

“I told you to dive. I told you to dive, and I was right: it’s rare that I’m not, as we both know. But Kara, you are strong enough and you are smart enough to know that when you choose to dive away from what you’re truly afraid of, rather than diving into it, you will lose, every time.”

“Ms. Grant, I don’t know what – “

“Supergirl isn’t a hero because she locks away her nemeses. Supergirl is a hero because she has a capacity for forgiveness. For hope. And to inspire that hope in others. Fear drives anger, Kara. Don’t let that fear drive you.”

“I… I don’t know what I have to do with Supergirl – “

“Oh, Keira, you know you’ve never figured out when to let people help you, have you? If you’re to rise, you need to learn that one, and soon.”

“I let people help me – “

“Livewire is not Supergirl’s fault, Kara. Supergirl did not destroy her, and Supergirl is not responsible for the destruction she’s wrought."

“I’ll um… I’ll let Supergirl know you said so."

Cat sighs and Kara can just see her taking off her glasses and putting her fingers on the bridge of her nose.

“Do that, Kara. Do that. And keep safe, will you?”

“Yes, Ms. Grant. Always. And Ms. Grant?”

“Keira.”

“Thank you. For calling.”

“Well I wasn’t about to let you spiral down into one of those ridiculous glasses-adjusting moods you get into, was I? I’ll tell Carter you sent him more of those absurd emojis.”

Cat hangs up before Kara can thank her, before Kara can tell her she misses her, before Kara can ask when she’s coming back, before Kara can tell her she needs her. She looks up and into the med bay, and she stares idly at Maggie, holding M’gann’s limp hand as Alex runs tests on her, and she wonders where Maggie got Cat’s number, and she wonders how she got so lucky to have such an attentive future sister-in-law, how she got so lucky to have people who care enough to stop her from spiraling, to still her from crashing, to catch her when she’s in danger of a fall.

She wonders what would have happened to Leslie if she’d had people, too, and she sighs, and she grimaces, and she gulps, and she sets her jaw, because she’ll find her, and she’ll stop her, but she’ll refuse to lose herself in order to do it.

“Alex, she’s bulletproof, even if the Cadmus folks do happen to attack the store – “

“No, Maggie, I don’t mean it’s dangerous for Kara. I mean… have you seen how much she eats? You really want to let her come grocery shopping with us?”

Maggie laughs, suddenly and hard, and Alex revels in the feeling of giving this woman joy.

Once she gathers herself, she puts her hands on Alex’s shoulders bracingly, jokingly. “It’s okay, babe, Adrian has eaten me nearly out of house and home before and I’ve survived. I’m sure we can get through this together.”

Alex smirks and arches an eyebrow and shakes her head, because Maggie looking up into her eyes with love and amusement in her own is all she thinks she’ll ever need.

“And anyway, I kind of already promised Kara she could come with us,” Maggie splutters out in one quick breath, darting to the door as a familiar musical knock raps through the room.

Alex groans laughingly. “Bet you between the two of them, we spend more than twice what we normally would.”

“You’re on, Danvers. My place if it’s Adrian that tosses more in the cart than Kara.”

Alex pffts. “Well, we’ll be at my place for sure tonight, then.”

Maggie laughs as she tugs open the door, and Adrian spills into her arms immediately.

“Mmmmm, how’s my favorite college boy?” she greets him in their traditional way.

“Freezing, unlike my favorite detective, who seems like she’s been kept extra warm by her girlfriend lately,” Adrian squeezes her, and Kara nudges him in the shoulder.

“Adrian, nooooo, I don’t need to think about my sister keeping Maggie warm. No offense Maggie.”

“None taken, Little Danvers.”

“Well, then I probably shouldn’t tell you what I walked in on last week – “ Adrian starts as he steps past Maggie to hug Alex, who promptly puts a hand over his mouth.

“Don’t you dare,” she warns with a grin, raising her eyebrows to secure his compliance before she removes her hand.

“It was even kinkier than that was,” Adrian splutters as he dodges out of Alex’s reach, and Maggie laughs as Kara furiously adjusts her glasses and Alex groans.

“Okay, troop, the fridge isn’t gonna stock itself,” Maggie announces, because if Alex’s face gets any redder, she might bust a vein. She tosses an arm around Adrian’s neck and pulls him down to her gently, gently, him squirming and laughing and letting her press a kiss to his forehead as they trudge out the door and pile into Adrian’s car.

He’s driving better than Maggie remembers, and she beams from the back seat with Kara as he handles his turns smoothly, and she wonders what else he’s been getting better at in the short months he’s been away at college.

He’s still terrible at parallel parking, though, and Maggie’s proud of Alex for not commenting as he tries once, twice, five times before straightening the car out close enough to the curb.

When Adrian puts it in park, he and Kara spill out of the car in a spurt of energy, and Alex looks back at Maggie with wide eyes.

“Told you this is gonna be dangerous,” she jokes as they follow their kid siblings into the grocery store.

Alex wrangles the shopping cart from Kara, and Kara lets her, because she and Adrian are nudging each other and whispering to each other and pointing at Maggie, pointing at Alex, pointing at random on sale food items and breaking out into laughter that neither Alex nor Maggie can’t quite put a pattern on, but they both smile, and they hold hands as Alex steers through the aisles, because Kara is holding onto Adrian’s arm as she laughs and he’s grabbing a pack of pre-made chocolate pudding from the fridge and tossing it to Kara, who thinks she’s subtle about burying it in the cart underneath the vegetables and fruit that Alex and Maggie are filling it up with.

They’re both scientists, and they don’t want to influence the results of their experiment, their bet, so Alex and Maggie feign ignorance as Kara tries to hide the bulge of four extra bags of frozen potstickers into the cart, as she nudges Adrian and points out the boxes of puff pastry apple turnovers he can’t get enough of and he slips three of them into the cart as Alex pretends to be reading the label of the vegan ice cream in Maggie’s hands.

At the cash register, Alex and Maggie are uncharacteristically quiet, both doing the math in their heads, both calculating how much Kara’s additions of potstickers, pizza pockets, pizza bagels, and donuts are compared with Adrian’s additions of apple turnovers, extra bags of grapes, garlic bread, and chocolate-covered pretzels.

And down to the cent, it’s the same cost.

Alex and Maggie freeze, each knowing by the baffled look on the other’s face that their calculations were correct, because they both made the same one.

It’s only when Adrian tosses a Nutrageous candy bar – “Old school!” he says victoriously when he finds it – onto the pile that Maggie lets out a triumphant laugh.

Alex groans and Kara, already digging into her donuts and holding them out to Adrian, is oblivious.
“I’ll put it all on my card, babe,” Maggie leans up into Alex. “To soften the blow of your very tragic loss.”

“Your place tonight, fine,” Alex concedes, her lips brushing Maggie’s as Adrian whoops behind them and Kara cheers even as she covers her eyes. “Not the most tragic loss I’ve had.”

“Oh no?”

“Nnhnn.”

“You two gonna bang right in the middle of the store or yall gonna come home and dive into all this food with us?” Adrian wants to know, and the cashier laughs as Alex reddens and Maggie fumbles into her wallet with a lopsided smirk on her face.

“You were the one who wanted to bring them both,” Alex reminds her, and Maggie grins.

“Yeah, and I don’t regret it, do you?”

They both glance over at Kara, at the way she’s giggling as Adrian holds his candy bar out for her, pulls it back from her open mouth, and then laughingly lets her have a bite, his silver earring catching the dim lights of the store and shining like his smile, like his laugh, like his happiness.

“No. No, not for a second.”
It’s been months, and it doesn’t matter how many algorithms she runs with Winn and it doesn’t matter how many biotrackers she develops in her lab. It’s been months, and she can’t figure out how to find Cadmus’s newest lair, can’t figure out how to find the White Martians that psychologically attacked M’gann. It’s been months, and she can’t figure out how to rescue her father, and she can’t figure out how to protect J’onn. And all of them.

She sits on the couch with her head in her hands, and she thinks, unbidden, about her first mission. About the girl, the alien, that she was hunting. The girl, the alien, who saved her, saved her because she was arrogant, and she was terrified, and that blend made her lose her grip, miss her step, made her fall, fall, fall, and the alien girl saved her, caught her, dragged her up to safety.

And was promptly shot, despite Alex’s pleas, by the rest of her team.

She’d failed then, and she was failing now.

She drank deeper, drank until Maggie’s fingers wrapped around her glass and gently pulled it out of her grasp.

“Wanna talk to me instead of the whiskey, babygirl?”

Alex smiles despite herself, because it doesn’t matter how terrible she feels; it doesn’t matter how much of a failure she is; Maggie calls her babygirl, because she is Maggie’s babygirl, and that is always, always, always a comfort.

“Kara’s angry at everyone, J’onn’s a wreck about M’gann and the other White Martians that are apparently heading this way, Cadmus killed so many of your friends at the bar, and I can’t… I can’t fix my sister, I can’t help J’onn, or M’gann, or anyone, I can’t rescue my father, I can’t… What good am I, huh? As an agent, as a person, if I can’t… If I’m useless to… I.”

“Ally,” Maggie whispers, and pulls her close, kissing her hair and kissing her eyes and kissing her knuckles. “Alex, you… you are the best agent – the best person – I’ve ever met. You have to let people fight their own battles, Ally, you have to believe they can. You can’t battle the entire world on your own, babe. I mean, if anyone could, damn, it’s you, but… do you know why I took you to the bar, that first time?”
“You wanted to buy me a drink?” Alex sniffles, and Maggie kisses her softly.

“Well, yeah. But I could’ve bought you a drink anywhere, Alex. And if I didn’t trust you, I would’ve. But I took you there, because you… you were so… dedicated. So focused, so fierce, so… sharp, and tough, and quick, and smart, and just so… Alex, you were everything that made a good agent, a great agent, but you were more than that, too.”

Alex furrows her brow and lets Maggie continue stroking her hair. “You had a fire in you, babe. A fire that makes you want to protect people, that makes you… that makes you love people, even though you also kind of hate people.”

Alex laughs wetly and Maggie kisses her again, softly, gently, chastely.

“You have a fire in you, Alex. A fire that makes you protect people, that makes you love people, even though you also hate people.”

Alex smiles, because it’s one of their phrases, and she sinks into Maggie’s body, her own relaxed, because maybe Maggie’s right: maybe she’s pretty damn good, after all.

Hi. So I know you've closed your call for prompts and are v busy, and I don't want to give you more work, but I was wondering if you had already received one about Alex and/or Maggie with mental illness, or being diagnosed. And if so, if you would do it soon if you're inspired/comfortable about it. I'm really struggling about working to get better lately and I could use the representation. PS. You're a lovely being.

Thank you for your sensitivity about me closing off the prompts, love: I am so glad you sent this in, though, because this is exactly the kind of “exception” I had in mind when I said people could send prompts in if they really feel like they need to see something. I’m really glad you sent this to me, and I hope I do it justice for you. Sending you lots of love, darling: we could all use the representation!!! <3 <3 <3

Maggie’s had a deep aversion to therapy ever since one of her teachers suggested she needed it for being caught making out with one of the local college girls under the bleachers during her junior year.

She’s had a deep aversion to it, because she prefers solitude and she prefers beer and she prefers her heavy bag, but the precinct is making it mandatory for everyone who’s been working on Cadmus-related cases, and she needs her job more than she needs to avoid a therapist, so she goes, and she sits, and she bites the inside of her cheek, and she waits.

She answers questions stiltedly and directly and stiffly, but she answers them, because she needs to be cleared for duty and anyway, since she’s started dating Alex, she’s had an easier time talking, so it’s not that bad, she supposes.

So when the therapist asks her, in their third session together, whether she’s familiar with borderline personality disorder, she freezes, but she waits, because that’s what her best – only – friend growing up was diagnosed with a few years ago.

“Why’re you asking?” she asked, and the therapist tilts her head, and her eyes are warm, her eyes are nonjudgmental, as she asks if the sudden dips into silence, the sudden dips into isolation, the sudden dips into despair, are ever triggered by a sense – real or imagined – of rejection, of abandonment, of emptiness, of worthlessness, of never being quite good enough, of never being quite worthy.

She leaves the office with a lump in her throat and she’s quiet when Alex comes home, she’s quiet when Alex kisses her, and then she notices that Alex is being quiet, too.

“Stupid mandatory therapy thing again today,” Alex grunts, and Maggie nods, and waits, because she knows Alex wouldn’t have said anything about her DEO-mandated sessions if she wasn’t going to talk more about it.
“Shrink says I’m depressed and have PTSD and also that I’m a functional alcoholic.”

Maggie nods and Maggie swallows, because she’s already known these things, but Alex didn’t, and Alex is sighing and staring at the bottle of whiskey on top of the freezer.

“And what do you say?” Maggie asks softly, softly.

“That I’m a soldier and this shit goes with the job.”

Maggie smiles faintly, and she draws Alex into her body and strokes her hair.

“Mine says I’ve got BPD. The whole worthlessness thing, turbulent relationships thing, that I’ve got going on.”

“We don’t have a turbulent relationship,” Alex objects quietly, and Maggie nods and kisses Alex’s hair.

“Maybe not yet, but I keep waiting for it.”

Alex sits up and kisses Maggie’s face, everywhere, everywhere.

“I loved you this morning, before you got diagnosed. And you’re the same as you were before. Except now, you maybe have different language to help you cope, to help you feel better. That’s all. Same person, different language. And in any language, I love you, Maggie.”

Alex kisses the tear that streaks down Maggie’s cheek, and she strokes Alex’s hair, her neck, her ears.

“You know the same for you, right? That I don’t care if we need to avoid bars or clear the freezer of all the alcohol, that I don’t care if I never have a drink again if that’s what gonna make this easiest for you. Because you’re right, Ally: you’re a soldier. But you’re also loved, and you deserve… you deserve to be cared for, not just stitched up and tossed back into battle. And I… I want to care for you, Alex. Because I do. Care for you. Love you.”

It’s Maggie’s turn to kiss the tears from Alex’s face, and Alex’s heart swells, because this? Diagnosis or not, she can get used to this. They both can.

Chapter Summary

anonymous asked:

I know your prompts are closed but is there any possibility we could get Adrian coming to Sanvers and worrying that he's never gonna find romantic love / someone who doesn't get weird about his body? This is something I really really struggle w as a trans person and I think it would help me a lot to see. Thank u, you're lovely.

They’re making out and Maggie is wrecked because Alex is doing that thing to her neck with her lips, with her tongue, with her teeth, but then the chorus of J Cole’s Hold it Down is blasting out of Maggie’s phone and Alex is moaning with loss because she knows that ringtone, and it’s nothing Maggie would ever ignore, no matter how wet she is, no matter how turned on she is, and sure enough, Maggie is kissing her lips apologetically as she sits up, as she fumbles for her phone, as she slides her finger across the green circle, over the smiling picture of a boy with a silver earring and a beaming smile, and, breathless, tries to keep the sex out of her voice when she says his name.

“Adrian.”

“You… were getting laid.”

“I’m sorry, Maggie!”

“It… I – how did you – you know what, just… what’s up, kid? It’s late, you alright?”

“Nah, Maggie, don’t sweat it, I just… I was just tripping, it’s cool, you be with your woman, it – “

“Adrian, I can fuck her any time, just tell her what’s wrong!” Alex yells, because she loves hearing Adrian laugh through the phone and she loves watching Maggie blush.

“So you were getting laid. Maggie, seriously, don’t worry, I – “

“Adrian. Either tell me what’s up or I’m gonna drive over to get you – “

“On your motorcycle?”

“Oh my god, kid.”

“Why do you automatically assume something’s wrong when I call? You think I don’t love you enough to call just to catch up?”

“No, I know you love me, but I also know your mama raised you right and you’re not gonna be calling at midnight unless you really need something, so are you gonna spill or are you gonna make me get dressed and – “
“Alright, but I… is it okay if I drive over? Pops said I can have the car – “

“Yeah, come on over. You eat dinner, I can order something – “

“Nah, it’s cool. Thank you Maggie.” He raises his voice. “And you, Alex! See yall in like twenty.”

Maggie hangs up and sighs. “He says he ate, but let’s get him some pizza anyway.”

Alex smiles because she loves the thought her girlfriend puts into her every relationship, and she’s still smiling when Adrian’s typical musical knock raps through the apartment.

But her smile fades when she sees his face over Maggie’s shoulder as he hugs her hello, because his eyes are red and his dark cheeks are still streaked with tears.

“What happened?” Maggie asks, because he’s starting to shake in her arms. She leads him to the couch, and Alex sits on the floor in front of them, staring up with big eyes.

“Do you wanna be alone, or is it – “

“No, Alex, you can stay. I… I’m sorry guys, yall were just trying to have a nice night together – “

“Kid, we’ve had this conversation already. Talk to me. Us. What happened? Who do I have to kill?”

Adrian smiles and Alex puts her hand on his knee. “I’m better trained in killing than she is, so I’m just saying…”

He laughs full out this time, but the laugh becomes a sob, and Maggie puts her arm around him, and he surrenders to her touch.

“I’m sorry,” he sniffs, and Maggie and Alex both shake their heads and wait.

“I… I met someone. On tinder. I… I don’t have it on my profile that I’m trans, I mean like, why would I, right, because I’m a guy, I’m a guy, I…”

His voice breaks and Maggie bites her lip to control herself because she already has a dangerous combination of heartbreak in her chest and murder in her eyes.

Alex squeezes his knee and kisses Maggie’s hand and gets up to pour Adrian a glass of water. He waits, and he thanks her, and Maggie wipes his tears, and he drinks, and he continues.

“So I met this girl, we were talking for a couple weeks online – “

“The math major?”

He nods. “And I met her tonight, and it was really great, she was really great, and we kissed, and I’m not packing so when she kind of grinded up on me… sorry…”

“You’ve walked in on us doing worse, honey, you’re fine,” Maggie teases, and Adrian smiles slightly.

“She wanted to know why I wasn’t… if I didn’t like it, and I… I don’t know, I just kinda told her I’m trans, because I panicked, I didn’t know what else to… and she just… she wasn’t mean, you know, she wasn’t even rude, she just… she didn’t… But one second she’s asking me why I’m not hard for her and the next second she’s thanking me for a nice night and saying it was nice to meet me and she’s hailing a cab and I just… I’m just never gonna… how the hell am I ever gonna find someone who’s not… who doesn’t think I’m a…. I’m a guy, dammit.”

His voice breaks again, and Maggie rocks him, and she kisses his forehead and she strokes his unpierced earlobe, and she lets a single tear slip out of her own eye as she whispers to him, tells him to let it out, tells him to let it go, tell him she’s got him, tells him she loves him.

His ragged breathing evens out after a while, and Alex looks up at them both with wide, sad eyes and a broken heart. She watches Maggie, because she has no idea what to say, no idea what to do, and her heart swells with gratitude, with pride, in her girlfriend, because Maggie is pulling back and stroking Adrian’s stubble lovingly, and drying his tears with her steady fingers.

“Adrian Rodriguez. You are too good for people who aren’t secure enough with themselves to know how to love you. You are too kind, too smart, too powerful, too incredible, for people who don’t look at you and see what I see: a dashing young man with big dreams and a big heart and a big brain, with a perfect smile and a damn sexy body. You’re going to find people who are going to see you for you, Ade. I promise you. It might not be this girl on tinder and it might not be the girl in chem lab that I know you’ve been crushing on because you talk about her like every time we check in.”

“I never said I – “

“I’m a detective, Adrian Rodriguez. I detect.”

“She’s used that line on me, too, kid, don’t feel bad.”

He laughs and Alex smiles as a tear streaks down her pale face and Maggie kisses Adrian’s broad nose.

“It might not be those girls, Ade, but I promise you, you’re going to find people – not just one, either – who are going to really see you, who are going to really love you. You’ve already got that, hell. Maybe not romantically, not yet, but you have time. You have lots of time. I promise. If romance is what you want, that’s exactly what you’re gonna find, because you’re amazing and you’re perfect and you deserve it. You hear me?”

“Yes ma’am,” he whispers, and Maggie grins and looks down at Alex with a cocky grin,

“Told you his mama raised him right.”

Alex laughs and Adrian grins. “I love you, Ade. Alright? I love you.”

“I love you, too, Maggie,” he tells her. “And I’m sorry again.”

“For what?”

“Well hey I mean if I’m not getting laid yet, that doesn’t mean I’m trying to stop you from getting some.”

Alex blushes furiously and Maggie smacks him lightly, gently, affectionately, on the shoulder.

“You know what, kid, I take it all back. You’re doomed to a life of isolation and misery.”

But Adrian just beams at her teasing and draws her into his muscled arms.

“Well, if this is what isolation and misery looks like, I’m all for it.”

Chapter Summary

anonymous asked:

Hi! I just wanted to quickly tell you how much I love all of your writing, you are seriously so talented! I have a prompt for you, I'm not sure if it's any good though so feel free to pass on it! Basically I have really bad social anxiety and sometimes I'll get panic attacks if I'm in a social situation with a ton of people so maybe you could write something where that happens to Alex or Maggie? Like they go to a work function together or something and one of them panics? Thank you!!

It hasn’t happened in a long time.

It hasn’t happened because she’s avoided situations where it can happen.

She hasn’t gone to social spaces that aren’t the bar – where it’s never super crowded, where it’s always people she’s comfortable with, where people are more than happy to leave her alone to do her own thing – and she hasn’t let her parents talk her into coming back for the huge family gatherings.

She’s been proud of herself for avoiding her triggers.

But she can’t avoid them forever, and certainly not now, because her captain tells her, with the order very clearly underlying his words, that her presence would be sorely missed if she neglected to go to yet another one of the precinct family outings.

Alex beams when she asks her to go with her, and Maggie can’t bring herself to tell her how terrified she is about the whole thing.

Yes, quite the opposite, yes, and no, just dealing with extreme social anxiety.

And she knows Alex, she trusts Alex, but Alex likes her because she’s tough, because she’s calm, and she doesn’t know how to tell her that on the inside, she feels none of these things. That on the inside, especially when there are so many people around, so many people who want to small talk her and touch her without asking and ask questions about her family that they would never ask a straight person and tell her so many racist things that they would never say to someone darker than her, she feels quite the opposite of tough and quite the opposite of calm.

So she just smiles and she thanks her and it’s settled, then.

But the morning of the precinct’s annual family picnic, she can’t get out of bed.

Alex is surprised that she refuses to go on their morning run, but she figures it’s the frantic, late-night sex and the early morning chill that’s keeping Maggie in bed.
It’s not until she gets back from her run and Maggie is still in the same position, still in bed, but with her eyes wide open, that Alex realizes something is wrong.

“Babe?” she asks, and she kneels by the bedside inside of sitting, because she’s sweaty and doesn’t want to mess up the blankets.

“Hey, how was your run?” Maggie smiles, but her voice is too high, her smile is too pinched, and Alex strips off her running jacket and watches her girlfriend carefully.

“Mags, what is it?”

Maggie bites her lip and finds that she can’t answer.

Alex runs through last night, through Maggie’s last week’s worth of cases, and she can’t find anything particularly disturbing, can’t find anything out of the ordinary.

The only new thing on the radar is the picnic today.

“Babe, are you nervous about today?”

Maggie sits up like a shot and she swings her feet off the bed mechanically. “Why would I be? Come on, it’s just a stupid picnic.”

“Maggie.”

She chances a look at Alex, and she doesn’t find judgment and she doesn’t find irritation. She finds love and she finds concern and she finds respect.

“Just… don’t leave my side while we’re there, okay?” She doesn’t explain further because she can’t. And, she hopes, she doesn’t have to.

Alex stares at her for a moment, a moment that lasts a lifetime to Maggie, but Alex’s eyes stay soft, stay kind, stay open, stay loving.

“I won’t leave your side for a single moment,” she promises, and Maggie’s chest opens up slightly, she can breathe a little more than a moment ago, because Alex isn’t asking her to explain, she’s just helping her to her feet, helping her to the shower, helping her into her clothes, helping her eat at least a little something, helping her out the door.

Alex helps. Alex helps a lot.

Maggie keeps her hand in a vice-like grip the entire time she introduces her around, the entire time Alex makes old white men laugh and young hot women blush.

Alex routinely runs her thumb over Maggie’s hand, and Alex routinely leans down to kiss her temple, picks her hand up to kiss her knuckles. Alex somehow figures out how to get them food without letting go of her hand a single time.

Alex helps. Alex helps a lot.

But Maggie’s panic spills over anyway.

Her chest constricts and her breathing quickens. Her eyes sting and her abs tighten. Her knees shake and her lip nearly bleeds with how hard she bites it.

“Alex,” she whispers, just once, because it’s all she can choke out, and Alex leads her away immediately, brings her to the single-stall family bathroom, ignores scandalized glances from people milling nearby, and locks the door behind them.

“Do you need space or do you need to be held?” is all Alex asks, calmly, soothingly, lovingly, no trace of irritation in her voice, and Maggie reels, because she’s looking at Alex, and she’s looking for signs of irritation, and she can’t find any, and she doesn’t understand why not, but she lets her body collapse forward into Alex’s, and Alex’s strong arms envelop her, and she lets herself go.

She shakes and she sobs and she forgets how to breathe and she rocks and she grabs at Alex’s jacket desperately, desperately, needily.

“I’ve got you, Maggie. I’ve got you, I’ve got you, I’ve got you,” is all Alex says as she holds her, as she rocks her, as she kisses her hair, as she kisses her forehead, as she rubs small circles into her back.

Right when Maggie can’t see, right when Maggie is scared she’ll pass out from lack of oxygen, Alex pulls back, and Alex puts a hand on her chest.

“Breathe into my hand, Mags. You can do it, babe, just breathe into my hand.”

And Maggie does, does, does, focuses on pushing her chest out slow, slow, careful, calm, into Alex’s hands, and oxygen floods into her body again, and she steadies again, and she calms, calms, calms.

“Good girl, Maggie, you’re so brave.” Alex presses her forehead to Maggie’s and breathes with her, slow and steady.

“You’re so brave, my love.”

“Your love?” Maggie asks raggedly.

“Oh, I’m sorry, are you not mine?”

Maggie smiles shakily and looks up disbelievingly into Alex’s eyes. “Of course I’m yours, but I… love?”

“Of course I love you, Mags. Of course I love you. Is that not okay?”

“Yeah, of… of course it’s okay, just… I just had a complete breakdown over a fucking picnic, Al, I…”

“Yeah. Yeah, you did. And I love you. Problem?”

Alex is stroking her cheeks with her thumbs and Maggie has never felt so loved, so cared for, so wanted.

And suddenly, she laughs. “We’re in a bathroom.”

Alex grins. “We are.”

“A single-stall bathroom.”

“Mmmmmm.”

“And I’m sure I look like a mess.”
“You look beautiful.”

“Okay. But, a mess. All the cop wives are going to be scandalized.”

Alex’s grin deepens. “Nah, they’ll just be jealous that I get to get alone time in single-stall bathrooms with the most perfect girlfriend ever to…. girlfriend.”

“The most perfect girlfriend ever to girlfriend, Danvers?”

“Listen, you didn’t start dating me for my way with words.”

“No, you’re right. I started dating you because I was falling in love with you.”

“Was?”

“Yeah. Now I know I’m in love with you.”

“Excellent. Because I’m in love with you, too, Mags.”

Chapter Summary

From an Ao3 user, 1984 – Hey I love your writing it’s beautiful and honest. And I don’t know if your taking any prompts anymore…but if you can and want to of course can you write a post of Alex being or figuring out that she is ace and Maggie loves her still. Kinda feeling scared that me being ace will lead to me being alone forever…

Maggie had told her she only got one.

She told her, and Alex listened, but Alex is panicking.

Because she’d told Maggie she’d never felt comfortable with intimacy. That she’d thought she wasn’t built that way.

And they’d gotten together, because of two kisses: Alex kissed her, and, a week or so later, Maggie kissed her back in earnest, and it was, in a world, breathtaking.

So Alex figured she could do the intimacy thing after all. Because she loved kissing Maggie. She loved kissing her and she loved holding her and she loved being held by her and she loved cuddling with her and she loved their evolving pet names and their flirting and their teasing and their brushing fingers and their burning desire for, simply, each other.

She loved touching Maggie’s skin and she loved when Maggie touched hers, fingertips on cheeks, fingertips on arms, fingertips on abs, fingertips running through each other’s hair, because god, did Maggie have gorgeous hair.

But now she’s panicking, because she knows that Maggie would never pressure her – hell, Maggie always seeks permission before even kissing her – but she also knows that Maggie wants more. Sexually.

And Alex? Alex doesn’t.

She wants more of Maggie. Wants more of her time, more of her affection, more of her voice, more of her stories, more of her laughter, more of her body warm and close and safe next to hers.

But Alex doesn’t want more sexually. And she knows Maggie does.

So she’s panicking, and she wants to run.

But Maggie had said she only got one, so instead of running, Alex calls her, and Alex paces, and Alex waits, and Alex resists finishing the bottle of bourbon in the cabinet.

“You know how scary it is to just be told to come over because we need to talk, right?” Maggie half-teases when Alex opens the door for her, and Maggie’s body language is guarded, and Alex’s stomach swoops unpleasantly because she’s afraid she’s lost her before she even properly tried to explain.
“Yeah, I do, I’m sorry, I just… I’m not trying to run. You said I get one, and I heard you, so I’m… I’m not trying to run, Maggie, but I…”

Maggie blinks and crosses her arms over her chest and sets her jaw. “But you?”

“I’m scared this isn’t going to work. For… for you.”

“For me.”

“Yeah.”

“Why… why would you think that?”

“I don’t know how to explain.”

Maggie takes a deep breath and tries to quell the growing pit in her stomach. “You’ve gotta give me more than that, Danvers.”

Alex perches on the edge of the couch and she stares up into Maggie’s shuttered, guarded eyes and she tries to trust, to trust, to believe, to hope.

“You want to have sex with me,” Alex winds up spluttering, and Maggie tilts her head and quirks her lips and uncrosses her arms.

“I… yes. Yeah, I do, but not until you’re ready, Alex, I – I don’t – “

“I don’t want to have sex with you.”

Maggie’s arms are crossed again and she backs up a small step. “I… I knew this would… you meet someone? I told you it was all just shiny, it – “

“What? No, Maggie, I don’t want to have sex with someone else. I told you I don’t know how to explain, I… I like… I love… I love being with you. I love kissing you and I love when you hold me and I love holding you, I love everything we’ve been doing, I love that you’re my girlfriend, I want you to be my girlfriend, I just… I don’t think I want to have sex.”

Maggie stills and watches her for a moment, tilted head and slowly unshuttering eyes and slowly uncrossing arms. She leans back against the counter and nods to herself, slowly, quietly, watching Alex’s rapidly reddening face, her rapidly tear-filling eyes.

“So you’re figuring out that you do like intimacy with girls. With me. But not all kinds of intimacy. Not sex.”

Alex’s lips trembles and Alex nods and Alex starts to creak out an apology, but suddenly Alex is wrapped in Maggie’s arms because suddenly Maggie is cradling her close to her chest and kissing her hair and rubbing small circles on her back.

“Shit, Danvers, I thought you were trying to leave me for someone else, this… it’s okay, it’s alright, you know you – hey, Al, look at me, babe – babe, you can be gay and you can be asexual – did you know there’s a word, a lot of them, for what you’re describing? – shit, Alex, I’m sorry, I thought you were trying to break up with me, I wouldn’t’v been so… Alex, it’s okay – “

Maggie nods and Maggie smiles and leans down to kiss the tears off of Alex’s cheek. “Yeah. I like having sex. I like sex. I want sex. With you. But I don’t want sex with you if you don’t want it, Al, if that’s not the kind of intimacy you want. I want you, Alex, I… I’m falling in love with you. Not your body, not…”

“But how – “

“Does it make you uncomfortable? That I want you sexually?”

Alex shakes her head and sniffs, and Maggie nods.

“You trust that I wouldn’t try to get more from you than you want to give me?”

Alex nods and brings her hands up to Maggie’s face, and Maggie turns her face to kiss Alex’s palms.

“Would it make you uncomfortable if I um… if I thought about you? When I um… on my own… when I masturbate?”

“You would want to?”

“Think about my girlfriend when I need to make myself cum, yeah, but only if it doesn’t make you feel objectified or uncomfortable or – “

“No. It – no. You can, it… but won’t you… miss it?”

“You like what we’ve been doing so far? The kissing, the touching, the cuddling?”

Alex smiles through a sheen of tears. “I love it.”

“I only need from you the things you love sharing. I only want from you the things you love sharing. Alex, this… you being ace, it… you’re perfect, Alex. You are perfect. And if you wanna be with me, I wanna be with you. Only with you. I told you, Al: I don’t wanna imagine my life without you in it. And now, now that you’re my girlfriend, I don’t… I don’t wanna imagine my life without you as exactly that. As my girlfriend. And maybe, one day, as more. You’re perfect, Alex, okay? Perfect.”

“You’re not mad?”

“I have zero reason to be.”

“You wanna be with me?”

Maggie glances at Alex’s mouth and raises her eyebrows, and Alex answers her question by bringing her lips up to meet Maggie’s.

Maggie smiles into their kiss, and Alex does, too.

“Yes, Alex Danvers. Of course I wanna be with you.”

Chapter Summary

anonymous asked:

Mom, if it's not too much to ask, could you do a story about Maggie having trouble dealing with a perpetually disappointed parent? Constantly being disappointed in her lifestyle choices out of 'love and worry'(style of dress, job, eating habits, etc.) and J'onn noticing and balancing it out with his own brand of space-dad approval? It's getting harder and harder to deal with my mom's disapproval lately. I feel like I can't do anything right. If not, I can wait for prompts to open again.

He only ever hears one side of the conversation, but that's all he needs to hear to put the pieces together.

“Now’s not a great time, Pop, is Ma okay? I – yeah – yeah, I’m on duty. Yeah, Pop, I know it’s eleven at night. No, come on, I can’t do this right now. Because I love my job, Pop, it’s important, I’m changing the force from the ins– you know what, I don’t – I don’t have time for this, I gotta go. I love you. Yes, of course I do, why the hell would you say something like that? I – hello? Bye to you, too.”

Another night, this time earlier in the evening, the day after Maggie picked up Alex wearing a sharp flannel and massive smile, with a dozen red roses in tow. Winn had insisted on taking their picture, and apparently Maggie had sent it to her parents, because I want them to see how absolutely beautiful my girlfriend is.

“Hey Pop, how you doing? Aw, you did? Isn’t she gorgeous? I – it – I – I think I was in a flannel, wasn’t I? It – yeah, I know I’m not on the farm anymore, trust me, I know – no, Pop – “ J’onn almost doesn’t notice when Maggie switches to Portuguese, having known the language for so long the translation came to his mind just as quickly as the English did – “It’s not just a white girl look, Pop, plenty of self-respecting brown women dress like this, I’m not betraying anyt – well hey, you didn’t see anything wrong with raising me in an all-white town – no, I know you love me, I know you want what’s best for me – “ J’onn blinks when she switches seamlessly back to English – “but maybe what’s best for me is having you actually be happy for me when I send you a picture of me so clearly happy with how my life is right now, instead of calling me to just to criticize my – no, I don’t wanna talk to her right now, I – “

She groans and J’onn lowers his eyes and sighs quietly.

It happens again as she and Alex are gearing up for Alex’s first visit to Blue Springs, which has one of his girls wide-eyed and nervous, and the other both loving and terribly, terribly tense.

“Nah, tell her she doesn’t have to make me anything special, I’ll just whip something up for myself when we get there – yes, Alex will eat what she – because, Pop, I’ve been vegan for years, you’d think you both would get used to it by – well somehow I manage, and Mama is the one who taught me to cook, so if I can figure it out, I – no, you know what, you’re right, I’m sorry, I’m not trying to fight with you, just… just don’t go to any trouble, okay, I’ll work it out when I get there, I – no, I didn’t mean – yes Pop. Yes sir. Yeah. I love you. Bye.”

J’onn doesn’t imagine it would help his newest child much if he flew himself out to Blue Springs and gave Mr. Sawyer a piece of his mind.

And Maggie always slips off into a corner, whisper-shouts instead of shout-shouting, turns her face, her body, away when she gets her father’s calls. And she’s not like Alex, but she is, she is, so he doesn’t want to hurt her pride by bringing it up with her directly. Or violate her privacy, for that matter (though he supposes he can’t very well help what his ears pick up).

So instead, he starts doing small things, saying small things, that he hopes she’ll notice, that he hopes will lift, at least a little, the sad sagging in her shoulders; relieve, at least a little, the tension in her coiled lower back, her fists; soothe, at least a little, the burning tears in her eyes, the raging pit in her stomach, the defeat in her chest.

“You know, Detective Sawyer, since you started liaising with the DEO, our communication with the NCPD has never been better. The increased efficiency is saving a lot of lives; that’s a lot you have to be proud of.”

Alex is – nowadays, anyway – generally the one to blush, to squirm, to fumble over her words. And, true to form, Maggie doesn’t squirm, not exactly, but she stammers a bit and it’s clear she doesn’t know what to say, doesn’t know how to respond, doesn’t know how to feel, doesn’t know what to do with her hands, her eyes, her face.

So she falls back on her training, and she nods, and she says, simply, “Thank you, sir. That… means a lot.”

He covers her shoulder with his hand and she looks almost overcome by the gesture.

And then again, later, the next time he sees her decked out in flannel and sharp pants and a belt of the sort that he’s overhead Winn referring to as gloriously gay, he makes sure he smiles at her. He clears his throat, because if what he’s about to say is going to be uncomfortable for her, it’s even moreso for him, but that doesn’t matter, because she deserves to hear it from a potentially father-type figure.

So he clears his throat once, twice, and before she can ask if he wants some water, he forces out, “You look particularly sharp today, Detective. Agent Danvers is fortunate to have a woman as beautiful as you.”

“J’onn, are you hitting on Alex’s girlfriend?”

“Oh, leave the man alone, Schott, just because he knows how to compliment a woman better than you do,” Maggie quips through her smile, through her deep, deep blush. She reaches up to put her hand on J’onn’s shoulder, this time, and he’s sure that as she walks away, it’s with a straighter spine and a prouder strut.

And when it’s one of the rookie agent’s birthdays and Kara insists on throwing him a little party, it’s J’onn who takes Maggie aside to make sure she knows that there are three different flavors of vegan ice cream, just for her.

“You know, when I first arrived on this planet, I was startled by how many human cultures emphasize animal flesh as their major culinary staples. Since then I’ve deeply appreciated humans who can see part their society, to a different sort of ethics.”
Maybe it’s because she and Alex didn’t get much sleep the night before, so her guard is lower than it might otherwise be; maybe it’s because J’onn’s eyes are as soft and as warm as his voice is awkward and gruff; or maybe it’s because her own father’s words are still stinging so sharply, so loudly, so painfully, in her ears; or maybe it’s all of it, everything, because suddenly Maggie is leaning up on her tip toes and she’s reaching her arms up and she’s burying her face in J’onn’s chest.

He only hesitates for a brief, startled moment before he wraps his arms around her, too, one of his hands covering the entire small of her back.

“Thank you, J’onn,” she’s whispering, and he catches Alex’s wet smile from across the room over Maggie’s head.

“Thank you, Maggie. Thank you for giving my girls – both of them – such happiness. We are all… truly lucky to have you in our lives.”

And now, if Maggie doesn’t know what to say, it’s because her body is speaking her gratitude for her, and J’onn nods when Alex mouths her thanks at him, because he means it; even in times like these, they’re still lucky, because they have, somehow, against all odds and probabilities, found each other.

(I know you're not accepting prompts anymore and I'm really sorry but can I throw this one onto the pile? It's okay if I can't, I'm sorry, I don't mean to disrespect you. I was just thinking that maybe Alex could have PTSD? Or maybe she'd self-harm? I mean, I think she risks her life a lot more when she feels like she isn't enough. It would just be great to read that her friends still wouldn't leave her. But it's okay to ignore this, I'm really sorry. And thank you so much for being so selfless.)

Hi hun! No worries: this is exactly the kind of prompt I’m open for and wanting to get to before I sift through the rest of the pile. I do have a fic here – Chapter 158 – where Alex has PTSD, but it’s not as detailed as you seem to want, so I wrote you another one!! :)

TW for self harm, specifically cutting.

It’s not backfiring cars or gunshots resonating into the night that activate her, though sometimes she wishes it were.

Because for Alex, loud bangs and heavy impacts are still her daily life. If they trigger her, she must simply be walking wounded at every moment. And sometimes, when she’s deep into the latest bottle of bourbon, she knows that that’s exactly what she is; perpetually traumatized.

But, more often than that, the alcohol drowns the acknowledgments that would make it real, that would give it words, that would make it something she has to deal with. And she doesn’t want to, because if she does, then she is not perfect. Then she is not made of steel.

Then she has to admit to being forged in the hottest of fires and emerging not just sharp as death, but also burned beyond recognition.

But lately, she is something else. Someone else. Because lately, she’s been more likely to have one beer than six shots. Because lately, she’s been looking forward to bedtime, not dreading it as a waste, a dull necessity, an absolute terror.

Because lately, there’s been Maggie Sawyer.

And she loves it, and she hates it, because now there’s someone next to her – someone who knows, someone who notices, someone who cares – when she wakes up screaming for Kara to come back from Krypton, yelling for Astra not to kill J’onn, please, because Alex doesn’t want to make this choice, doesn’t want to kill her, please, pleading for Non to just kill her, please, it can be as slow as he wants, just please, don’t force her to hurt her sister, please, please, please.

Maggie holds her, and Maggie rocks her, and Maggie soothes her, and Maggie’s body is pliant and willing when Alex’s eyes darken, when Alex pins her down and fucks her, hard, because when Maggie is writhing underneath her, it’s in pleasure, not pain; when Maggie is begging her please, please, please, it’s in desperate rapture, not desperate terror; when Maggie scratches her nails down her back and screams her name, it’s in love, not in fear, in lust, not in horror, in ecstasy, not in hatred.

Maggie knows, and Maggie lets her use her body like a bandage because Alex – even as she is rough, even as she is hard, even as she is callous, even as she is ruthless – is always, always, also somehow gentle, somehow giving, somehow attention, somehow caring. Maggie knows, and Maggie loves her, and Maggie is willing, and Maggie wants her. Just as she is.

But when it goes beyond nightmares – when it’s conversations with her mother that end with her phone shattering against a distant wall, when it’s a sense of failure that seizes her chest like an iron fist because when Alex Danvers fails, people could die, people have died, Kara could die, Kara almost died – when it leaves Alex frozen and broken and nearly catatonic on the bathroom floor, razor in hand because there needs to be something, something, something she can control – when it goes beyond screaming from nightmares and turns into silent, private bleeding, Maggie knows, and Maggie breathes deep to steady her hands, and she picks the lock on the bathroom door, and she doesn’t yell, and she doesn’t ask, and she doesn’t accuse.

She just takes the razor away and she takes Alex’s hands into hers and she examines and she cleans and wraps and she kisses, gently, gently, gently, saying nothing, demanding nothing, because Alex right now can give nothing beyond her compliance, beyond her tears, beyond her exhaustion, beyond her limp-limbed acceptance of Maggie’s help, and right now, that is all Maggie needs from her.

“I’m sorry,” is the first thing Alex rasps when she can open her mouth again, when she trusts herself to open her mouth again, when she thinks she can manage it without throwing up all over Maggie’s bloodstained grey henley.

“Ally, you have nothing to apologize for,” Maggie whispers, and it’s gentle but it’s firm and so is the kiss she places to Alex’s knuckles.

“Oh no? I couldn’t even figure out what was wrong with M’gann, I couldn’t save any of your friends at the bar, I couldn’t stop Lilian Luthor from releasing that weapon, and if Lena hadn’t… and I can’t find my father and I can’t do anything right and I react like such a grown woman, right, locking myself in my bathroom and…” She splutters and brandishes her arm uselessly and she shudders and she wishes Maggie hadn’t interrupted her when she did, because all she can see is the light leaving Kara’s eyes over Astra’s body, all she can see is Astra’s body replaced with Kara’s on the edge of her Kryptonite sword, all she can hear is her mother’s voice calling her exceptional some days and a disappointment most, and all she can smell is the dull mix of chemicals in her lab that she’s useless, useless, useless to help anyone from, and her body curls in on itself, and she collapses into Maggie’s chest, and she knows she can’t ride this wave out, knows she won’t survive it, but Maggie is whispering that she’s brave, that she’s strong, that she’s perfect, that she’s alright, that she’s gonna be just fine, that she’s loved, that she’s loved, that she’s loved.

She doesn’t remember falling asleep, but when she opens her eyes, soft light is pouring through the windows, and Kara is playing a quiet card game with James while Winn helps Maggie make something that smells suspiciously like her favorite kind of pancakes.

“Morning, beautiful,” Maggie calls softly from the kitchen when she glances at Alex’s open eyes on the couch, and Alex panics because her arm, her arm, her arm, but Maggie must have changed her into a long sleeved shirt, because Maggie knows it’s Alex’s to tell, but she also knows that family, family, family.

“What’re you all doing here?” Alex sits up groggily, and Kara goes to hold her, and James smiles softly while Winn flips pancakes and touches squeezes Maggie’s hand.

“We don’t have to stay,” Kara says, “It’s whatever you want. But Maggie said you had a rough night, and we just wanted to remind you that we love you. No matter what.”

“And to thank you,” James pitches in. “You keep saving all of our asses out there, and I think it’s become so normal we’ve kind of forgotten to thank you. So… thank you.”

Alex smiles wetly and stares past them both to Maggie’s suddenly still form in the kitchen.

“I love you,” Maggie tells her, simply, and Winn and Kara both awww while James smiles and looks down.

“Yeah?” Alex asks, and in the one word are a thousand questions, about why and about how and about still and about after last night how could you and about but I don’t deserve your love.

Maggie smiles broader and wipes her hands on Winn’s shirt as she crosses the living room to kneel in front of Alex.

“Always, Alex Danvers. Always.”

Hi, I know you're drowning in prompts and stuff, and I really don't want to pressure you with another one... But I've been struggling with eating disorders for most of my life, and I'd love if you could write about Alex or Maggie dealing with one. I'm sorry, this is quite a stupid prompt... But I've never had anyone who really understood what I'm going through and supported me, so it'd be nice if one of them had the other to love her no matter what. Thanks for your stories, they're amazing! <3

Eliza keeps trying to tell her she’s beautiful, keeps trying to tell her that her body is perfect just as it is, but Eliza doesn’t understand.

Because she can train – and god, does she train – and she can prepare and she can strap herself into armor and she can strut into a war zone with a kind of calm composure no human being should ever have to possess.

But she can’t control what happens, then.

It doesn’t matter how much she trains – though she keeps training harder, of course – her body still has been out of her control. Her body has still not been hers.

Has never been hers, really, not since she was a girl, because her body was Kara’s, her body was Eliza’s, her body was Jeremiah’s; her body was to protect one and make the other, for once, proud, and honor the other’s memory, which she couldn’t even do, now, because he was alive, alive, alive, but she can’t find him and she can’t do anything right because Eliza says she’s beautiful, but she doesn’t mean it, not really, because that pinching behind Eliza’s eyes means she’s frustrated and that slight strain underneath her voice means she wants to call her Alexandra and that small twitch of her left ring finger means that she wishes Jeremiah were here because he was the only one who could stand a chance at talking some sense into the headstrong girl but he isn’t, he isn’t, he isn’t, and before, it was out of Alex’s control, but now it’s just Alex’s fault.

And it hurts, but it feels good, because Kara can remind her that she forgets to eat when she’s stressed and she can tempt her with all the Chicago food truck goodies in the world, but no one – not Kara, not Eliza, not Jeremiah’s not-quite-dead ghost, not the DEO, not Cadmus, hell, not Maggie – can make her open her lips.

Feels good because she can pass it off as being busy, as being stressed, and she’ll force down what she needs, once in a while, Winn’s trying-to-be-subtle concerned squint and J’onn’s furrowed brow can’t make her not bring it back up, because this? This she can be perfect at. This? This she can control.

Until she can’t.
Until her knees buckle on a mission and her world goes black and she wakes up back at the DEO with an IV in her arm that she immediately tries to tear out, because how dare they, how dare they, how dare they, but Maggie’s hand is soft and Maggie’s lips are soft and Maggie’s eyes are wet but they’re not angry, and Kara’s smiling is trembling and Kara’s voice is shaking but her eyes are clear and her body holds no anger, no frustration, no irritation, no sign that she thinks Alex has failed.

And Alex looks for the signs, she searches for them, because she knows, she knows, that she has failed.

But when Maggie asks how she’s feeling, she can’t detect a lecture on the horizon, and when Kara says how scared she was when Alex collapsed, she can’t detect a hint of accusation, a hint of blame.

She doesn’t want to ask because she doesn’t want to concede that anything’s wrong, but she needs to ask like she needs oxygen because if she can’t have the control she needs all alone, maybe she can get it by surrendering some of it – gifting some of it – to the people who hold her like this, who love her like this.

“Stay?”

“Got nowhere better to be, Danvers,” Maggie kisses her forehead, and her broken, relieved eyes swivel to Kara.

“Always,” her sister tells her, and Alex knows – for reasons she can’t understand, not now, not yet, but she thinks maybe she will someday – that she means it.

Chapter Summary

anonymous asked:

Can we please have a fic where Alex finds out that several of Maggie's past relationships have been abusive towards her after observing that she apologizes for everything and that sometimes when Alex gestures a little to wildly she'll flinch like she's expecting her to hit her and she doesn't really believe she's worth being loved because she was told so many times she wasn't. And Maggie doesn't know what to do cause she's actually being loved by someone and it's super overwhelming for her.

Maggie might be the detective in the relationship, but she isn’t the only one who can detect.

It doesn’t take long for her to piece together that she’s not the only one this relationship is difficult for.

For her, it’s because she’s never felt all these things before, she’s never done all these things, and it’s all just so new and exciting and terrifying and what if she’s not the perfect girlfriend but god does she want to be.

But for Maggie, Alex is coming to figure out, the relationship is different for an entirely different set of reasons.

It’s not as much in the words Maggie says, but in the way her body shrinks, the way her voice shrinks, the way her entire energy shrinks, whenever Alex gestures unexpectedly, whenever Alex is laying down reading and gets an idea about something or other for her lab and sits up quickly, suddenly, wildly.

Maggie always flinches away, flinches in, flinches hard, and though she manages to always hold in a gasp, there’s always cold fear in her eyes and resigned determination in her jaw.

That same cold fear comes floods her eyes when she has to ask Alex to get something on a higher shelf when she’s cooking at they’re staying in Alex’s apartment. Especially when Alex is otherwise occupied and Maggie has to ask her to go out of her way, she asks small, she asks timid, she asks with six sorries beginning the sentence and six sorries ending the sentence.

And when she has to cancel a date because there’s an emergency at work, she sends Alex at least eight different apology and how can I make it up to you texts before Alex has the chance to even respond to the first one.

So when Alex brings her flowers for the first time – blushing and beaming and bouncing on the balls of her feet – it doesn’t take her long to figure out why Maggie flinches backward, why Maggie cries, why Maggie shakes her head and refuses to speak and just keeps apologizing, apologizing, apologizing.

Because when Alex refuses to be angry, when Alex refuses to be offended, when Alex refuses to leave, Maggie breathes somewhat more steadily, and Alex waits, and then Maggie talks.

“Right out of college, my ex, she would uh… she would bring me flowers after she’d…” Maggie sighs and shakes and idly fingers one of the scars on her arm. “And she’d be mad at me when they died, even though they’re fucking picked flowers, they’re already basically dead, because I couldn’t take care of anything, or myself, let alone her, and I told her to just not get me flowers then but she would anyway and I – “

“Mags,” Alex is kneeling in front of her, now, leaning up to kiss her slow tears, now. “I will never lay a finger on you. I will never try to convince you that the world is your fault. I will never be mad at you for asking me for something you need, and I will never be mad at you for being good to yourself. I will, however, track down this girl and kill her for you. That I’ll do gladly.”

Maggie chuckles and Alex smiles and leans her forehead up to rest on Maggie’s.

“I will always treat you like you deserve to be treated, Maggie. Like you’re loved. Because I do. Love you.”

Maggie swallows and Maggie tries to breathe because she’s searching for the lie in Alex’s eyes and she can’t find it, and she smiles, because maybe, just maybe, this one won’t sting.

She grows to love when Alex brings her flowers, and Alex knows, and Alex brings them to her all the time.
Alex groans in the bathroom and Maggie pokes her head out of the bedroom door.

“You okay, babe?”

“Ugh, no, fuck me.”

Maggie brightens. “Okay, I’m game.” She hears Alex chuckle and sigh and groan again.

“No, I… I’m on my stupid period.”

Maggie laughs sympathetically and continues getting dressed. “I’m sorry, babygirl. You cramping up?”

“I’m gonna. Ugh, and we have a sting op today.”

“Oh, babe, no!”

“Oh, babe, yes.” Maggie smiles and shakes her head at Alex’s humorless voice, and she turns when Alex trudges out of the bathroom a few minutes later while dry-swallowing a motrin.

She collapses face-forward on Maggie’s bed before turning and curling into a fetal ball.

Maggie tilts her head and her eyes soften before she pads out of the room quickly.

“Why are you abandoning me?” Alex groans after her, self-deprecation layered somewhere under the despair in her voice.

“I would never do that, Ally,” Maggie calls from the kitchen, and she comes back into the room a few minutes later with a warmed up heating pad and a soft smile.

“Come here, Danvers,” she says as she kneels on the bed in front of her, rolling Alex over onto her back and straddling her. Her fingers hesitate at the hem of Alex’s shirt, and Alex shakes her head.

“I’m all bloated and gross.”

“You’re never gross, babe,” Maggie counters, but she moves her fingers, but Alex is suddenly keening at the loss. Maggie arches an eyebrow and Alex slowly lifts up her own shirt to grant
Maggie the access she’d been requesting.

Maggie smiles softly and her eyes light up, as they always do when she’s looking at Alex’s body, and Alex doesn’t understand because she’s bloated and she’s bloody and she’s not at all worthy of being looked at like that. Not today, anyway.

But Maggie strokes her stomach with near reverence, and Maggie bends down to press her lips gently, gently, gently, all across Alex’s lower stomach, tracing the line of her underwear with her lips, wanting to go lower but not wanting to ask Alex, not yet, if even lifting up her shirt was a struggle right now.

“Why are you doing that?” Alex asks, and Maggie looks up from her ministrations and tilts her head.

“Because your body hates you right now, but I love you and I love your body, so I’m trying to remind it whose will is stronger.”

Alex laughs because Maggie Sawyer, Maggie Sawyer, Maggie Sawyer, and Maggie kisses her swollen belly one more time before grabbing at the heating pad she’d brought in, lowering Alex’s shirt again, and pressing the warmth a few inches below Alex’s navel, and Alex moans in part pain, part relief.

“You know you can call in today, babe. Your body’s ragingly upset, same like it is when you have the flu or a stomach virus or something,” Maggie tells her as she pulls her into her arms, kissing her hair and rubbing soothing circles onto her arms.

“Can you call in, too?” Alex wants to know, and Maggie smiles.

“Netflix and chill it is, Danvers.”

“Netflix and cramp, more like it, Sawyer.”

Maggie kisses her and Maggie shrugs and Maggie loves her, loves her, loves her. “Netflix and me convincing your body that I love you more than it hates you and it should release you from this vile spell, most like it, Danvers.”

“Pfft, and you call me a nerd.”

“Takes one to know one, Danvers. Takes one to know one.”

Chapter Summary

anonymous asked:

What do you think would cause Maggie to have a red moment as a top? (just an answer is fine, unless you want to fic this; I would not complain!)

It’s her job to monitor Alex’s color; her job to put her fingers on Alex’s palm and make sure she squeezes before continuing; to make sure, that as Alex’s is cuffed and blindfolded and naked underneath her, her hand clamping Alex’s mouth closed, quiet, that Alex wants everything, wants more, wants it all, wants her.

It’s her job to make sure Alex is good, at every single moment.

And she takes her job very seriously.

But Alex is strong and Alex likes it rough, so when Maggie is buried inside her, ragged breath and hard thrusts, she feels Alex’s muffled screaming in her palm and she glances up, to where Alex’s hands are cuffed above her head, to make sure, to make sure, to make sure.

Because she takes her job very seriously.

But so does Alex, and Alex’s job – at the DEO, anyway – is pain, and Alex doesn’t notice that she’s writhing so hard in the cuffs that her skin is getting red, that her skin is starting to tear, that her skin is starting to bleed.

Maggie’s heart lurches and Maggie is dizzy and Maggie stops moving immediately and Alex whines and Alex begs and Alex pleads and Alex moans, because she thinks Maggie’s teasing her, she thinks Maggie just needs her to show her what a good girl she is, how she deserves to be fucked really good and just like that, but Alex freezes when she hears Maggie panting out, “Red, red, red.”

“It’s okay, babe, I’m okay, it’s okay, you’re okay,” Alex streams out in a single breath, because Maggie’s hand is gone from her mouth now and she’s shaking above her and she’s apologizing over and over and Alex can’t tell what for but she knows she wants to hold her, to hold her, to hold her, to let Maggie hold her, so she offers up her hands, her wrists, so they can be unlocked, so they can be free to soothe through Maggie’s hair and stroke her cheeks and hold her, soothe her, love her.

And that’s when she sees the red marks the cuffs have made with the force of her writhing, and that’s when she sees Maggie’s fingers tremble as they work at the lock, and that’s when she sees Maggie’s eyes water as she brings her lips to Alex’s stinging skin, and that’s when she realizes why Maggie’s color went red.

“Babe, you didn’t hurt me, I’m good, I’m okay, you didn’t hurt me, it doesn’t hurt,” Alex repeats, kissing Maggie’s forehead as Maggie worries over her wrists.

“You told me you were okay and it didn’t hurt last time you got shot in the field,” Maggie protests, and it would be funny if her voice weren’t so shredded with tears, with worry, with fear.

“Hey, hey, hey, this isn’t that. We’re not in the field, we’re at home. I’m in your bed. Your very, very comfortable, but not as comfortable as mine and I don’t know why you keep insisting we sleep here bed.”

“Your room doesn’t even have a door, Danvers – “ Maggie stops her spluttering when she sees Alex’s smile, and her eyes water again.

“You’re okay? I didn’t hurt you?”

Alex glances at her wrists and grins wickedly. “I’m pretty sure I did this to myself. You did warn me not to move, after all.”

Her voice drops and Maggie’s breath hitches and Alex strokes her hair, her cheeks, her jawline.

“I know you’d never hurt me, Maggie. I’m good. I promise. Okay?”

Maggie nods and kisses her softly before gathering her into her arms. Alex melts into her embrace and Maggie needs to make sure one more time.

“You’re not mad?”

“Of course I’m not mad, Mags. I love how you look out for me. So much.”

Maggie smiles and presses a kiss to Alex’s hair. “Good then, Danvers. Because I’m always gonna look out for you.”

“Sounds perfect to me.”

Chapter Summary

Can you do a fanfic about them doing a really intense scene and subspacey Alex and Maggie helping Alex out of subspace and taking care of her?

^^ prompt from anon – and, before folks flood my box with the question, this is the subspace the anon is referring to ;)

It’s been nearly two hours and Maggie still won’t let her cum.

Every time Alex begs – which is against the rules they agreed on – she has to choose a card.

Every time Alex screams – also against their rules for the evening – she has to choose a card.

And Alex hasn’t, tonight, been the best at following rules.

So, according to the scrawl in her own handwriting on the first card she chose – the first time she screamed because Maggie had slipped inside her in one swift, hard motion – she wasn’t allowed to cum until Maggie said so.

She begged, next, because Maggie’s fingers were buried deep inside her but she wouldn’t put her palm on Alex’s clit. The card she chose then was, again in her own handwriting, an order that she bend over for Maggie so she could smack her ass until it was red, until she was dripping down her thighs, but she wasn’t allowed to make a sound, and she wasn’t allowed to bring her hands around to touch her clit.

Maggie asked her color, then, and Alex was green, green, green, so Maggie took pity on her and helped her out, tying a gag around her mouth so she wouldn’t be quite so tempted to scream.

But when Maggie’s hand came down for the first time, she screamed anyway, and the next card she drew had Maggie kissing her, asking her if she’d be okay for a moment, had Alex gasping, nodding, yes, yes, yes, because the card she’d written earlier was instructing her to let Maggie melt ice on her clit, and yes, yes, yes she’d be okay while Maggie went to grab some.

They went on like this longer than Alex could keep track of, Maggie checking at each step of the way, Alex begging for more at each step of the way, until finally, Alex is on all fours, wrists and ankles tied down, and her ass is red from Maggie’s palm and her glasses are all she’s wearing while Maggie is fully clothed and fucking her, fucking her, fucking her harder than she’s ever known she was allowed to ask for, and she’s screaming and writhing in protest when Maggie suddenly stops because Maggie gets to control when she cums and Alex loves it and Alex is wrecked and Alex can’t tell when she stops being able to breathe, stops being able to process, stops being able to answer when Maggie asks for her color, because all she wants is more, more, more.

But Maggie can tell, and Maggie knows her girl has slipped into subspace, knows her girl is flying in an ecstasy she never knew possible, and Maggie’s happy, and Maggie’s proud, but Maggie knows that Alex needs to come down because she’s experiencing such an intense high that her lips can no longer make words and her body can no longer register pain and god Maggie loves fucking her like this, but another time, another time, another time.

“Ally,” she says as she slows her thrusts, with an authoritative edge at first, so the contrast doesn’t jar Alex, so the transition out of subspace, out of ecstasy, doesn’t hurt her, doesn’t scare her.

“Ally, you did such a good job for me, babygirl. You’re such a good girl for me, you know that?” she asks, her voice gentler now, her voice easing out of their scene, now.

Alex whines inarticulately and rocks her ass back into Maggie’s strap on, and Maggie moans softly and pulls back slightly, slightly, slowly.

“You did a great job for me, Ally, but it’s time to come back now. You wanna be a good girl and come back for me?”

Alex sighs heavily as Maggie slips out of her slowly, slowly, gently, and Alex starts sinking down from her knees to her stomach.

“There’s my girl,” Maggie whispers, and she kisses her way up Alex’s spine, kissing a path up to her wrists and back down to her ankles, unlocking the cuffs and kissing the faint pink marks they’d left.

“How you doing, babe?” she asks as she pulls Alex’s slightly shivering body into hers, as she pulls the covers over them both and warms Alex with her arms, with her blanket, with her butterfly kisses on her face.

“Hey Mags,” Alex breathes, and Maggie smiles, and Alex returns it wearily. “I really liked that. We can do it again?”

“Whenever you want, babe,” Maggie kisses her gently, and Alex swoons softly.

“You liked?”

“I’m pretty sure I’m soaked through my jeans, so uh… yeah. Yeah, I did.”

Alex smiles and cuddles closer into Maggie’s body, breathing deep and breathing in everything that is her girlfriend.

“Good.”

“Alex?”

“Mmm?”

“I love you so much.”

“I love you too, Maggie. I love you, too.”

Chapter Summary

anonymous asked:

(so, um, get to this one whenever you want, it's not urgent, but) i know we have the strap-on fic (or two), but maybe could you do one where (maybe after they've had sex once or twice) alex figures out she doesn't like penetration like, at all? (kinda inspired by my own thoughts about what i like doing to myself vs what i might like if i ever actually have sex with someone (i'm a-spec but not opposed to the idea))

She’s soaked and she’s arching her hips and she’s wrecked and she’s holding Maggie’s hand and she’s begging because she wants Maggie, Maggie, Maggie, the first time Maggie slips her fingers inside her.

And she gasps and she moans because she loves how closely Maggie watches her, loves how slow Maggie goes for her, loves how careful Maggie is with her, loves how Maggie asks every few seconds if this is okay, if that’s okay, if this feels good, if that feels good.

And it does, vaguely, because Maggie turns her on and Maggie makes her soaked and Maggie isn’t hurting her, but the pressure isn’t that mind-blowing thing that makes her want to toss her head back and scream like everyone seems to talk about penetration as.

No. That mind-blowing thing is Maggie’s tongue teasing her nipple, is Maggie’s palm pressuring her clit, is Maggie's thigh between her legs, is Maggie’s lips on her neck.

This penetration thing? It’s better than it ever was with men, because god, at least she’s wet, now, at least Maggie’s paying attention to her, now, but it’s not great and it’s actually not even good.

And Maggie freezes, and Maggie pulls out gently, gently, because Maggie reads it in her face, in her body.

And, to her surprise, before she can even start to panic because she messed things up, Maggie smiles.

“Penetration not your thing, Danvers?” she asks, and Alex searches for the irritation, the disappointment, the anger, in Maggie’s eyes, but she finds only respect, only happiness, only the giddiness of learning something new about her.

Alex shakes her head and Maggie’s smile deepens and she crawls up Alex’s body to press a kiss to her lips and whisper headily into her ear. “That’s okay, Al. I think I know something that is.”

And she slips her thigh between Alex’s legs and Alex gasps and Alex grabs at Maggie hips and Alex smiles, because this must be what it’s like to have real intimacy, to have real love.

And it really is fantastic.

Chapter Summary

anonymous asked:

I'm studying for a quiz in my pharmacology class and I'm super super nervous for it, so could you maybe write a fic that's a College AU where Alex fails a test and Maggie comforts her? Thank you! Your writing always makes my day. :)

She’d blown off the class because she was hungover and she was depressed, and hell, all her perfect scores were never going to be enough for Eliza anyway, so what the hell did it even matter?

Well, it mattered now, because she’d failed the next day’s exam. She’d failed, and a stupid organic chem test at that, something she was supposed to be amazing at, something other people, less Alex Danvers people, were supposed to sweat over, panic over. Fail.

But now she was the one with a scarlet F on her chest, and now more people than just Eliza would be able to see her for what she really was: a disappointment.

She ignores her girlfriend’s texts as she storms back to her dorm, and she snaps at her roommate so sharply that Lena just arches an eyebrow, slings her bag over her shoulder, and stalks off to Kara’s room.

She groans irritably at the rap on the door a few minutes later, figuring that Lena forget something, figuring she’d forgotten her keys or didn’t feel like digging for them in her bag, figuring that Lena decided not to let her off the hook for her bad mood so easily after all, and she stomped over to the door and opened it aggressively.

“What.”

Her tirade stops before it begins when the woman standing in the doorway isn’t her roommate, but her girlfriend.

“Lena warned me you were in a mood when I passed by her just now, but damn, Danvers. Do I have to kill anyone for you?”

Alex just huffs and steps back from the doorway to let Maggie in, because her bag is about three times her size and sure enough, she lets it down with a relieved grunt as she sinks into Lena’s beanbag chair and pulls Alex down into her lap.

“What happened, Alex?”

Alex glares daggers at her before leaning over and grabbing at her own bag, thrusting the crumpled score sheet into Maggie’s confused hands.

“Oh, Alex,” Maggie sighs sympathetically, pulling Alex down into her shoulder.
“You’ll make it up, babe, you’re amazing at this stuff. You just had an off few days, your mom really got you down last week, you know? And hey, she doesn’t have to find out. Your mom, I mean. We’re apparently all independent and shit now, babe.”

“Okay, fine, but even if I don’t tell her, this just proves her right,” Alex counters grumpily, but she snuggles deeper into Maggie’s lap because even if she won’t admit it, she loves being held by her (albeit tiny) girlfriend.

“Hey, Ally, don’t say that, okay? She’s not right. You’re a lot of things, great in bed being one of them – ow! that’s a rude way to respond to a compliment – but babe, a failure is not one of the things you are. You’re fantastic, Alex, you’re brilliant, and some stupid test doesn’t define you, or how much you’re worth, okay? And you’re worth everything to me. Everything. Okay?”

There’s a long pause where Alex stares at Maggie, trying to judge the truth behind her words.

“Great in bed, huh?” is what she finally says, deciding that maybe she’s worth something beyond an exam after all.

Something that feels a lot like love, and being loved, and being here, here, here.

Chapter Summary

Toothbrush

It’s a habit leftover from her teenage years.

She would always keep a toothbrush and travel tube of toothpaste in the glove compartment of her pickup.

Because she never knew what girls were going to kiss her under the bleachers (and then tell their boyfriends that she came onto them and their boyfriends would tell her to go back to where she came from and add whatever filthy word they could find for lesbian in their ever-expanding vocabulary, but hey, at least her breath would be minty fresh).

And, more, she never knew when she’d need to climb out her bedroom window or slam out the front door, and drive, drive, drive, and sleep in the truck because she kept blankets in there but still, it was cold, but the cold was better than her father’s reprimands, her father’s disappointment; and in the morning, again, at least her teeth would be clean when she pulled up to school in crumpled jeans and yesterday’s flannel.

So it’s a habit from her teenage years.

She still keeps a toothbrush and a travel tube of toothpaste in the slim saddle bad on her Triumph.

Because in her line of work, one never knows when night will turn into day, when strangers will turn into lovers, when work will follow the bar and something needs to quell the aftertaste of bourbon.

So the first night she stays over Alex’s place, she swishes around some of Alex’s mouthwash when she wakes up to pee, to process, to breathe, around 2 am.

And she’s got her toothbrush waiting in her saddle bag on her bike for when she – eventually – drives to work.

Terrified of moving too fast, of scaring Alex into running – again – Maggie doesn’t mention leaving a toothbrush in Alex’s bathroom, leaving a change of clothes in Alex’s drawers.

They’re both accumulating small piles of each other’s things, and Maggie has taken to wearing the leather jacket Alex left at her place the other morning – but they don’t talk about it, and Maggie doesn’t ask.

Because she’s got her toothbrush in her saddle bag, anyway.

But one evening, she notices a change in Alex’s bathroom. There’s a second toothbrush hanging in the little compartment, and Maggie freezes.
“Hey Danvers, did Kara stay over last night or something?”

“No, what do you – “

Alex freezes in the bathroom doorway and follows Maggie’s eyes with hers. She pales and she licks her lips and her eyes go wide and she stares, nervous, nervous, nervous.

And suddenly, Maggie understands.

“Is this… is this for me?”

“I mean it was, but obviously you don’t need to use it, and I’m not trying to imply anything about your breath, I mean, I just thought you know, since you’re here so often and it’s stupid, you don’t have to use it, I just thought – “

Alex’s spluttering has never been so damn moving, and Maggie is kissing her because no one has ever thought about her needs before, no one has ever thought about her comfort.

No one has ever thought about making their home a little more hers.

Until Alex Danvers bought her a toothbrush and hung it next to her own.

She might be able to break her old teenage habit, after all.
Maggie’s used to waking up alone.

It used to be because even when they would stay the night, they’d slip out in the morning.

Now, it’s because Alex Danvers likes her morning runs. A lot.

Maggie prefers her heavy bag, and her sleep, so she’s perpetually in charge of breakfast and coffee.

And that works just perfectly for her.

But today, she doesn’t just pad out of the bedroom and find herself in the living room.

Today, she finds herself in the house Alex grew up in, in Midvale, and she smiles as she tip toes downstairs, taking her time to gaze at pictures of Alex and Kara in various stages of adolescence, her heart swelling with each moment.

She sneaks past James and Winn sprawled out in the living room, Winn wrapped in blankets upon blankets on the floor, limbs all akimbo, James taking up less space, arms above his head, breathing slowly on the couch.

She loves that Eliza and Jeremiah invited them all to Midvale to get away, to crash together at a beach house without having to shell out a half a month’s worth of rent, after their latest, decisive, victory against Cadmus. They certainly all needed it.

Maggie knows that of course she was invited – she’s Alex’s girlfriend, she was instrumental in rescuing Jeremiah, of course she was invited – but she can’t quiet get over the feeling of shock, the feeling of awe, that Kara and the other Superfriends seem to feel like she actually belongs. That she’s in the house her girlfriend grew up in and her parents aren’t threatening to run her out of town and back to wherever she came from for corrupting her daughter.

Quite the opposite; two of Alex’s parents are sitting quietly in the kitchen together, Jeremiah’s hand on Eliza’s, drinking coffee in whispers so as not to disturb their girls’ friends in the living room, and seemingly utterly unsurprised to see Maggie up so early, to see Maggie’s hair tousled like she’d had sex with their daughter in their daughter’s childhood bed – because oh, she did – to see Maggie in their house as part of something natural, as part of something good, as part of something right.

“Sorry to intrude, I didn’t think anyone would be up – ” Maggie whispers, and Jeremiah shakes his head at her and taps the kitchen’s bar stool next to him.
“When Alex was a girl, she’d wake up every morning to go surfing. She’d be quiet and considerate – too considerate, always, that girl – ” He smiles broadly, fondly, gratefully, when he sees Maggie nodding emphatically in agreement – “but I always knew, and I could never sleep while she was out there. She’s excellent, of course, I just…”

Maggie thinks about every time Alex goes into the field without her, and she nods.

“I know what you mean.”

Jeremiah smiles and Eliza sips at her coffee with her eyes glued to Maggie’s face, and Jeremiah shrugs. “The water’s too calm for her to get any good waves this morning, so she’ll be swimming. But still – I guess a decade of being locked away by Cadmus doesn’t kill all the old habits, huh?”

There’s a pattering of feet upstairs and Jeremiah chuckles.

“Well, the boys are about to get a rude awakening. Kara’s up.”

Maggie grins and Eliza sighs affectionately and sure enough, faster than humanly possible, Kara is downstairs and Winn is yelping and James is groaning and Jeremiah and Maggie are laughing because Kara is come on come on come on time to meet Alex on the beach, the beach, when do we get to go to the beach all together like this, and J’onn’s gonna meet us soon, come on come on!!

“Yeah, the beach is great, Kara, but when do we get to sleep?” Winn wants to know, yanking the blankets back over his head, but James leans down and rips them off, knowing it’s better to surrender than try to fight, because when Supergirl is determined, she gets her way; even moreso, Kara Danvers.

“Alright, alright! I’m up! It – Maggie, why are you already up? You’re making us look bad!”

“I think your bed hair’s already doing that for you, Schott.” Winn groans and his hand flies to his hair. “No, I’m joking, it’s cute.”

The banter and the teasing and the laughter and the sweet relief of just being together and not strapped into armor, lives about to be taken away at any moment, echoes throughout the house as Maggie slips into a bikini under one of Alex’s t-shirts and basketball shorts, as Winn slathers himself in sunscreen and Kara bounds through the house checking on everyone because are you ready yet are you ready yet are you ready yet.

When finally, everyone is, Kara squeals and leads the Superfriends – Jeremiah and Eliza elect to let the kids have their fun – way down to the beach, waving her arms wildly above her head and shouting to the figure way out in the water. “Alex! Alex! Alexxxxx!!!”

Alex pauses and waves and does something with her hand that Maggie can’t see, but Kara can, of course. “She’s got five more lengths to go, she’ll be in soon,” she translates, and Maggie smiles at her girlfriend’s consistency, her girlfriend’s sheer power.

J’onn joins them as Alex is starting to swim back to shore, and he hugs Kara and covers Maggie’s bare shoulder with his hand, and Maggie beams, still unused to the growing fatherly affection from the man, but loving it.

“Nice shades, sir,” she tells him, and he gives her a rare grin.

“I quite like yours as well, Detective Sawyer.”

“What about me, J’onn? Do you like mine?”
“Mr. Schott, your sunglasses are no doubt calculated to make you look sophisticated and cool, which you might have been able to pull off if your swim trunks weren’t emblazoned with the crest of the House of El.”

James snorts and Maggie tries to hold down a chuckle. Winn brandishes the plastic shovel he’d brought to help him build the perfect sandcastle and splutters. “Well hey, listen, I’ll have you know that these shorts were super popular – ”

“In the sixth grade. Before your best friend was Supergirl.”

“Hey, Guardian, did anyone ask your opinion? Mr. Look at My Six Pack I’m So Cool I Don’t Even Need to – to – hey! Wow!”

Everyone turns to follow Winn’s gaze, and Maggie’s jaw drops and her knees go weak, because Alex is striding out of the water, body dripping, hair tossed just so, black bikini highlighting all the right things, a small, cocky grin on her face.

James whistles and Kara whoops and J’onn grins and Maggie just can’t speak, because Maggie’s whipping off her sunglasses to get a better view and Maggie’s brain is short-circuiting.

“Hot damn, Danvers!” Winn shouts, and then his eyes grow wide with giddy excitement. “Hot Damnvers!”

James laughs and Kara groans and J’onn chuckles and Maggie gulps and Maggie wets her lips and tries to remember that little thing called breathing, because water droplets are dripping down Alex’s nearly naked body, and her eyes are fixed, only, on Maggie.

“I don’t care that my sister’s the one with the superpowers, I will personally throw you into space if you say that again, Schott,” Alex calls as she strides closer, and Maggie thinks she should try to speak, try to do something other than stare, other than let her jaw rest in the sand.

She inclines her head toward J’onn, not taking her eyes off Alex. “I um… your Earth daughter’s very… um… very beautiful, Director Henshaw.”

“Yeah, I’m sure beautiful was the word you were looking for, Sawyer,” James teases, and J’onn laughs.

“I’m sure you’re right, Mr. Olsen, but at least Detective Sawyer was raised with some level of decorum.”

“Yeah, you should’ve heard the sounds coming from Alex’s room last night, decorum my – ”

But Alex has reached them, now, and Alex is smacking Winn upside the head, and Winn is flinching and everyone is laughing and Alex is putting her hands on Maggie’s bare hips.

“See something you like, Sawyer?”

“Good god, Agent Danvers, can you not wait until I’ve had the chance to absent myself before you – you – ”

Everyone, even Alex, turns to J’onn, waiting for his wording, shocked because he’s never spluttered before.

“Seduces her girlfriend right in front of you?”
“Makes sweet love to her right here on the sand?”

“Because really, what else is vacation for if not to abandon your friends and bang your girlfriend?”

“I’m right here guys.”

“No one’s abandoning anyone, I can just take her right here right now, yall can stay or leave, I’m not particular, but it’s your call – ”

“Oh, yeah, real nice decorum, Sawyer – ”

“Lalalalala, I am not hearing any of this!”

“Good god, if this is why there were no beaches on Mars, I am eternally grateful.”

anonymous asked:

Omg those strap-on ff are my faves ever atm. I am speechless. I would live to see a third instalment if you feel like it, in which Alex gets to experience it on top as Maggie suggested first and how different it feels yet again, and how powerful it feels when she reciprocates and has Maggie on top of her alskajdks

Alex always gets a particular form of desperate after especially risky missions, and Maggie is always eager to oblige.

So when Alex slams Maggie down onto the bed and breathes, “I need to feel you stretching me out” into her ear, Maggie moans and Alex strips and Maggie splutters and Maggie gulps and Maggie can handle how hot this is, how hot Alex is, she swears she can.

“You good?” Alex asks as she kneels back onto the bed, straddling Maggie, who’s still lying on her back, and Maggie’s throat is dry but yes, yes, yes.

Alex’s eyes flash as she keeps her gaze locked onto Maggie’s face, tracing her fingers down her own chest, down her own stomach, watching Maggie’s every expression as she brings her fingers lower, lower, moaning softly as she brings her fingers low enough to touch herself, to show Maggie how soaked she is for her, and Maggie arches her hips up but Alex chuckles and Alex shakes her head because patience, Detective.

Her fingers glistening with her own need, Alex brings her fingers to the tip of Maggie’s strap-on, and Maggie fights, hard, to control her hips, and Alex relishes the pleasant struggle on her face as she traces her fingers down, down, running the length of the dildo, and Maggie watches until she whimpers, whimpers, begs.

“Alex please.”

“You wanna fuck me, babe?” Alex wants to know, and Maggie moans and Maggie nods and Alex obliges, raising herself up on her knees before carefully, slowly, calculatedly, guiding herself down onto the strap-on, her eyes fluttering to the back of her head as she gasps, as she groans, because Maggie’s been inside her plenty of times before, but Alex has never been on top quite like this, and it feels… she doesn’t know how to describe how it feels.

“You good, babygirl?” she checks, and Alex bites her lip, and Alex nods, and Alex brings her hips down farther, taking more of Maggie inside her.

Maggie moans but controls her hips, not wanting to push inside faster than Alex is taking her, leaning up slightly to watch the dildo disappearing inside Alex, and she doesn’t know if that image or the image of ecstasy on Alex’s face is more beautiful. Probably the latter.

“I love you, Ally,” she can’t help but breathe, and Alex smiles and arches her body down to kiss her soft, to kiss her full, to kiss her desperate, to kiss her passionate.

“I love you too, Mags,” she rasps, and then she starts to move.

She quickly discovers that she loves the way Maggie’s hands brace her hips, her ass, pull her into her, not up and down, but back and forth, so Alex is always full of Maggie, so Alex’s clit is constantly pressured, is constantly stimulated, is constantly getting everything Alex needs.

She quickly discovers that if she arches forward while Maggie is pulling her closer, Maggie will scream, quick, sharp, surprised, thrilled.

She quickly discovers that if she bends down to trace her tongue, her lips, her teeth, along Maggie’s neck, Maggie’s breathing will grow even more ragged, and her hips will arch up on their own accord, and she’ll whimper and she’ll beg and she’ll bury herself deeper into Alex than Alex knew was possible.

She quickly discovers that when Maggie reaches up to tease her nipples between her fingers, Alex spirals toward orgasm quick, hard, intense, perfect.

She quickly discovers, too, that Maggie isn’t done with her, and she couldn’t be more thrilled. Because she quickly discovers that Maggie’s breathing quickens when Alex tugs the harness briefs down off Maggie’s hips, pulls them onto her own, and slips a condom over the dildo. Maggie rasps her name and spreads her legs, but Alex shakes her head, and Maggie gasps raggedly with a grin as she catches Alex’s meaning.

Alex lays down on her back, then, and Maggie straddles her, smoothing Alex’s hair out of her face and kissing her, kissing her, kissing her, the dildo insistently pushing against her stomach, making them both needy, making them both desperate, making them both utterly wrecked.

And when Maggie arranges herself on top of Alex such that she can push down, down, so she’s surrounding the dildo, so she’s surrounding Alex, Alex swears she’s never seen anything more beautiful than the way Maggie lets her head tilt back, than the way Maggie’s back arches, than the way her hands grab at Alex’s thighs for stability, for comfort, for love.

And Alex tells her, because she can’t not, and Maggie blushes and Maggie leans down and brings her lips to Alex’s.

“No, babygirl: the most beautiful thing in the multiverse is you.”

Alex swoons underneath her and Maggie starts to move slow, determined, perfect, and Alex groans and Maggie lets out a low scream that she shifts to muffle with Alex’s nipple in her mouth, and it’s Alex’s turn to scream, because Maggie’s tongue is perfect and Maggie’s ass is perfect, and Alex is grabbing at her body, pulling her close, pulling her desperate, pulling her harder and faster and you good babe yes yes yes Ally please please please and she’s never felt anything quite as amazing as Maggie Sawyer riding her rough, riding her tender, riding her reckless, riding her abandoned, and Maggie screams through her orgasm and Alex holds her, holds her, holds her, and when she tells her how much she loves her, she’s never meant anything more deeply in her entire life.
Chapter 174

Chapter Summary

Superfriends Superbowl

It’s Maggie’s idea.

“Come on, Danvers, it’ll be fun. Something you’re not an expert in for once, plus all the commercials to yell at? Good beer, good food, good people? It’ll be like game night, except the game’s on TV.”

“Are you trying to tell me you’re a football fan, Sawyer?”

Maggie shrugs flirtatiously, and Alex beams. Because Alex loves learning new layers to Maggie.

“College ball was big where I’m from. And, hey, hot cheerleaders.”

Alex mock scowls, and heat pools in Maggie’s core.

“Really, Sawyer.”

“You bet, Danvers,” Maggie snickers, stepping back slowly, sexily, because Alex is backing her into the wall, and Alex is shoving her against it, now, and Maggie’s head tilts back as she moans at Alex’s lips on her neck.

“Hot cheerleaders,” Alex repeats in a growl, and Maggie snickers.

“None of them nearly as hot as you, Danvers,” Maggie capitulates, and Alex smirks.

“Superbowl party it is, then. I’ll invite the gang,” she smiles brightly, walking away quickly and leaving Maggie breathless and wrecked against the wall.

And she’s back on the wall, again, the next Sunday night, as Winn gestures wildly with his beer at the TV, shouting about how it makes no sense, if they’re going to ram themselves into each other like that, they should at least have efficient suits, and James is reminding him that they’re not suits, they’re uniforms, equipment, and Kara is laughing and J’on is rolling his eyes and Alex is digging deeply into the seltzer Maggie’s gotten her really into.

She’s been to her share of Superbowl parties before. Wild college affairs punctuated with even wilder sex in the bathroom, awkward affairs at the home of one of the guys in her precinct, and, of course, the extravaganzas in Blue Springs, featuring her cooking up a storm and dodging drunken uncles and inquisitive neighbors wanting to know when she’s finally going to stop spending more time with things like football and more time with things like boys.

But she’s never been to a Superbowl party that felt quite like… home.

She’d made Kara homemade potstickers, over Winn’s loud and playful objections that potstickers aren't Superbowl food and doesn't your sports knowledge stop basically before it begins, Schott? and awww, leave him alone, Alex, he’s trying, look, he’s wearing my Cam Newton jersey and Maggie are they ready yet and can’t rush the magic, Little Danvers and well the magic would be a little faster if there was less magic going on under the counter, don’t think I don’t see where your hands are, Danvers and oh my god, Winn, I didn’t need to hear that and good god why is Cadmus choosing this night of all nights to not attack somewhere or other?

She’d made Winn homemade pineapple and jalapeño pizza, herself her own cheeseless version, and ordered for the rest of them because it’s not my fault the rest of your taste palates have been killed by fast food joints, and James and Alex took turns getting things down from high shelves for her and James even scooped her up at one point, much to her surprised delight, because she’d never been in a man’s arms that made her feel safe, that made her feel light and happy and playful, but Alex was giggling and Kara was squealing and Winn was yelling for them to freeze so he could take a picture and J’onn was I thought the point was to watch the sport, not create our own in the kitchen.

She’d yelled at the racism and xenophobia in the newest movie trailers with James and she’d beamed when Alex staunchly agreed, and she’d drawn Alex into an open-mouthed kiss that had Kara squealing and James and Winn whooping and J’onn diverting his eyes whenever gay couples were featured in commercials, and she’d drooled and barely restrained herself from taking her girlfriend then and there when Alex slipped into the bedroom to put on her glasses and Maggie’s spare Kaepernick jersey, claiming well this is actually fun and I wanna get in the spirit, and hey, gotta see properly, right?

So now, she’s leaning back, holding up the wall, and she’s watching the people she’s assembled instead of the game she’d used as an excuse to have them all over, to cook for them, to hear them laugh, to make them smile.

Alex catches her eye and arches a questioning eyebrow, and Maggie smiles broadly, softly, and shakes her head. Alex nods, because she understands when Maggie gets overwhelmed and needs to pull back, and when Maggie keeps holding her eyes with her own, Alex knows it’ll be okay to say what she needs to say.

“I love you,” she mouths, and Maggie beams.

“You too, Danvers.”

J’onn notices and exchanges glances with a beaming Kara.

“How’s it feel to get another daughter, J’onn?” she asks him softly, her hand on his arm as James cheers a Falcons touchdown and Maggie laughs when Winn and Alex both ask what happened.

J’onn watches the laughter dance across Maggie’s face, and looks at the bottle of seltzer in Alex’s hand, the glasses – which she would never wear in front of people before Maggie, not ever – on her face, her girlfriend’s Kaepernick jersey on her back, the relaxed smile on her face, the easy laughter, easier than J’onn had ever seen it spilling from his girl’s lips.

“Not bad, Supergirl. Not bad at all.”

Chapter Summary

anonymous asked:

hey :) i fully appreciate you're busy and closed the prompts and all so please don't worry about writing this but i really like the idea of adrian reassuring a younger trans kid who's struggling with accepting themselves that they're valid and maybe sanvers walk in and give their two cents idk i'm just having a really rough time and yeah sorry

He’s had a key to Maggie’s apartment since he and his parents moved to the other side of the city and he needed a place to crash closer to his job after school when he was on the graveyard shift.

He uses it frequently enough, but less so now that he spends most of his time off at college in Star City.

But he’s used it tonight, because she needed a place to go, a place to just breathe, a place to be alone with only good people, only safe people, and Maggie’s apartment was perfect for the job.

He sent her a quick text to let her know he was over, because while he’d gotten fairly used to being over when Alex and Maggie got home, kissing and taking turns slamming each other into the front door before realizing he was there, he didn’t think that’s what Kaylee needs tonight.

Because Kaylee was only fourteen and she’d called him in a panic and he’d skipped biology lecture to drive all the way home, home to his old high school, because Kaylee was a freshmen and she knew – like all the other queer kids in the school – that they could always call Adrian when they needed anything.

And Kaylee had been misgendered three separate times by three separate people today, and a couple of other girls had snickered when she walked out of the gender-neutral restroom that Adrian had gotten at the school a couple years ago, and she needed him, needed him, needed him.

“I’m sorry, Adrian, you didn’t have to drive all this way, I wouldn’t have called if I thought you’d – “

“What, you wouldn’t’ve called if you thought I’d give a shit about what you’re going through? Pretty sure that’s actually literally the reason you called me, girl.”

Kaylee smiles through her wet eyes at that, and she sits up a little straighter. Adrian holds her closer to him and waits, waits, because she’s spilled all about her day but hasn’t yet started to use feelings words, and he’s had this talk, this cry, himself, enough times with Maggie to know those were next.

“I just…” She wipes her tears and he nods, gives her a small smile. She puts her hand up to his face and pauses, and he nods again, a bigger smile now. She touches his stubble and grins through her tears.
“It was a pipedream when I was your age, honey.”

“I just feel like I’m never gonna get to where you’re at. Like… like, people are always just gonna see me as a guy in a dress, and what if like, what if I’m just gay, what if I’m just making a big deal out of nothing? So what if I have to wear a collared shirt when my mom wants to take me to a thing, right, I mean girls wear collared shirts – “

“But babygirl, when cis girls wear collared shirts, ain’t nobody trying to tell them they’re not legit women like the fuckers are trying to tell you.” He stops, bites the inside of his cheek, and sighs. “Butch women aside for a second, bless them.”

Kaylee smiles and nods softly and sighs into his chest, his binder stiff under his shirt.

“You gonna get surgery soon?”

Adrian grins and nods, still waiting.

“It’s just long. Every day. Every day at school and every night with my parents and all those stupid times in between when I’m just trying to be in the library or go bowling or some shit and everybody needs to stare and try to figure me out, and my parents won’t let me get pills or even patches and my voice is starting to drop and it makes me want to just never say anything, not in school, because it’s just my body proving that I’m not real, that I’m just never… never gonna… I just… Adrian, I’m sorry, I’m sorry, you should be in class, I just… I’m sorry…”

“Shhh, no, babygirl, no no no.” He gathers her into his arms and smooths her hair away from her forehead and he smiles softly down at her. “Kaylee. You are so fucking beautiful, you know that? Even with all that snot you got going on,” he teases as he offers his sleeve. “High school’s not gonna last forever, hun. I mean, it feels like it will, especially when you’re just starting out. But I promise you, you’re just as tough as you are gorgeous, and you’re gonna get through it. And then life doesn’t get better, not automatically, that’s some rich cis white guy bullshit, but you’re not by yourself, Kaylee. You’ve got me, you’ve got the rest of Spectrum at school; Ms. Macguire’ll fuck anyone up if you tell her about what happened today, she’s good people. And Detective Sawyer – “

He gestures all around them, at the apartment littered with evidence of two women living and loving together. “She’s got your back, just like she had – still has – mine. The world’s shit, Kaylee, but you? You’re a princess. Nah, better, you’re a motherfucking queen. You gotta know that you’re perfect, just like you are, even – maybe especially – on days like today when the whole universe tries to make you forget. Okay? You’re perfect, Kaylee, and you’re gorgeous, and you are a beautiful young woman, no matter what motherfuckers try to tell you. You get me?”

Kaylee nods and sighs and jumps as the front door opens, as Maggie and Alex appear in the threshold with two large pies and a six pack of root beer.

“I heard we have a beautiful lady joining us for dinner tonight,” Maggie announces, her eyes falling on Kaylee as she beams, and Kaylee blushes, hard, at being addressed like this, at being validated like this, by a grownup – by a police officer – that she’s never met.

“I’m sorry to crash your place, Detective Sawyer,” she says, and she starts to get up to shake her hand, but Maggie waves her down.

“Sit, relax. Ally, baby, you wanna give the kids their pizza, I’ve gotta pee like you can’t believe.” Maggie winks at a giggling Kaylee and kisses Adrian on the cheek briefly as she strides past him to the bathroom.
Alex stares after her for a moment before also kissing Adrian and offering a hug to Kaylee.

“I’m Alex, Maggie’s girlfriend.”

Kaylee blushes again. “Well, I figured, otherwise Detective Sawyer’d be bringing home some other woman and from what Adrian tells me, I don’t think she’d do that.”

Alex laughs heartily and Maggie shouts from the bathroom, “Damn right I wouldn’t, Alex is with the FBI, she’d kill me and the poor girl before I even got the chance!”

“Oh please, Maggie, don’t be fronting like you’re a player, Alex’s got you in the palm of her hand.”

Alex smirks and preens and high fives Adrian as Maggie mutters something incoherent from the bathroom and Kaylee watches it all with tears in her eyes, tears because is this really what she can have, one day? Is this really what she can be part of, even now?

“Rough day, sweetheart?” Alex asks as she doles out pizza, remembering when Kara was her age, remembering when she was her age.

Kaylee nods and looks at Adrian so she doesn’t have to tell it again.

“She got misgendered and laughed at a bunch. Sometimes it happens randomly, you know, and sometimes it’s like all at once and you just can’t, you know? Today was one of those all at once days,” Adrian explains quietly as Kaylee bites into her pizza and lets Alex hold her hand gratefully.

“I’m sorry, beautiful,” Maggie says as she slips back into the living room, kneeling in front of Kaylee like she does in front of Adrian when he’s got a similarly dejected, defeated look on his face.

“We’ve never met, right, but you wanna know what I see when I look at you?” Maggie asks, and Kaylee nods with wide eyes and frozen fingers.

“I see a beautiful, brave young girl who’s not in the place right now that she’s gonna be in forever. I see a massive science geek, because only the geekiest of us let the iodine stain our fingers like that so that everyone knows exactly how much we love bio lab. I see a young woman confident enough to wear circle glasses in a world that still associates them with either John Lennon or Harry Potter. I see a girl who is perfect, exactly as she is, and who’s only gonna keep getting more perfect as time goes on, if she just sticks with it, keeps being herself, because the girl I see in front of me? The girl I see in front of me is absolutely amazing. And for the record, I’m talking about you, Kaylee, not my girlfriend, whose glasses are distinctly rectangular.”

Kaylee laughs and Kaylee cries and Kaylee lets herself fall into Maggie’s arms because Adrian is like a grownup to her and Adrian will always be her queer parent, but maybe she can have more than one.

Pizza and root beer and queer parents all night?

Maybe she can get through school tomorrow, after all.
Can you have Alex come out to Jeremiah, with the rest of her family and Maggie with her, comforting her. I’d love if she was really awkward while coming out since she kind of lost her close relationship with her dad. Tyyyy!!

prompt above from @percabeth-solangelo03-deactivat

When he died – when he was taken – she was a little girl who hadn’t had her first kiss and didn’t know that those feelings she had when sleeping over at Vicky Donahue’s were romantic, were lesbian, were… sexual.

And now that he’s back? Now that he’s back – rescued, finally, from the hell that had been Cadmus – his little girl is a grown woman, and she has saved lives, and she has taken lives, and last night, she screamed her way through four straight orgasms with her girlfriend’s tongue between her legs and her fingers buried deep inside her.

And Alex loves him. She loves him more than she knows how to describe. She loves him, and she knows he loves her, but she doesn’t look up at him when she speaks anymore because she’s not an entire head shorter than him anymore. She loves him, and yesterday, she killed for him, because sometimes, that’s the only way she knows how to prove to her father figures that she loves them, that she is worthy of them.

She loves him, but his eyes are different and his smile is the same, but her eyes are different and so is her smile, and she doesn’t know how to explain to him why.

Doesn’t know how to explain to him that the reason Maggie is over the house for dinner is not because she’s the brave detective who took a bullet to save his life and the lives of four other agents the other week; doesn’t know how to explain to him that Maggie is there because she’s her girlfriend, because she has a girlfriend, because she’s a lesbian.

Maggie knows Alex wants to tell him – tonight – because she changed her outfit six times before leaving, because she kept taking slow, slow breaths, because this morning when they woke up Alex was quiet and warm but scared, scared, scared.

Kara knows Alex wants to tell him – tonight – because the skin behind her eyes is tense, nervous, terrified, because she’s laughing a little too much, a little too easily, because she’s tripping over her own feet and chewing the inside of her cheek like she hasn’t eaten in weeks.

Eliza knows Alex wants to tell him – tonight – because Maggie and Kara keep replacing her wine, her beer, her bourbon, with seltzer, with cranberry juice, with water.

For his part, Jeremiah watches his eldest daughter and squints slightly. He doesn’t remember her like this – giggly, nervous, giddy – and his eyes keep drifting to Detective Sawyer, to the woman who looks at Alex like she is the sun and the moon and every star in the sky, to the woman who didn’t hesitate to put her body between him and a bullet, who Alex had screamed for, who Alex had run for, who Alex had broken formation and killed for.

His little girl took lives for a living now.

His little girl was in love with another girl, now.

He just wasn’t sure if she knew it, so he said nothing.

But Alex did.

“So Dad,” she interrupts Kara as she’s telling him about some inconsequential case at the DEO, and Kara quiets immediately, eyes wide, eyes sharp, eyes protective, eyes believing in her sister, scared that her sister wouldn’t believe in herself. She catches Maggie’s glance and they nod at each other slightly across the dinner table, both ready to help their favorite girl out, both ready to give her whatever she needs.

“Alexandra, you interrupted your sister,” Eliza observes, and Kara puts her hand on Eliza’s, shaking her head that it’s fine, this is more important. Eliza sighs softly, silently, and Jeremiah’s heart cringes at the years he missed, the years where Kara had to play go-between with his wife and his eldest, the years where Kara learned to balance protecting her sister and her adoptive mother, without him, without him, without him.

But he keeps his eyes deliberately dry – a skill he’d honed in Cadmus – and he watches Alex carefully. Maybe she does know she’s in love, after all.

“Dad, I um… there’s a thing. A thing that happened since… since you went away. That you should know about. That I want you to know about, because I want you to know me. I mean, it’s not really something that happened, more of something I realized, but also I guess some things happened, I mean…”

She reaches for Kara’s wine glass and Maggie stills her, soothes her, helps remind her that she can do this sober, she can, she can, she can, with a gentle hand on her knee.

Alex drinks from her glass of seltzer instead, and Jeremiah hates himself, because his daughter needed him, all these years she needed him, needed him, but he wasn’t there, was nowhere, so she poisoned her liver instead.

“I’m in love with Maggie, Dad. I – she – she’s my girlfriend. She’s my girlfriend and I’m gay. A lesbian. I’m gay, and I want you to know because I think I’ve always been gay? I just didn’t know, I didn’t realize, I didn’t want to disappoint Mom, I didn’t think it was an option, but now it is, and now this is my life, and I wanted you to know because I want you to know me, and I want you to love me, as me, not as the long haired straight girl you remember me as.”

Maggie isn’t breathing and a single tear streaks her face, and Kara is beaming through her own tears. Sister and girlfriend alike reach for Alex’s hands, and Maggie kisses her knuckles and Kara squeezes with just the right amount of pressure.

Eliza stares down at the table because she knows she and Jeremiah are going to have a long talk later about exactly what Alex meant by not wanting to disappoint her, but Jeremiah is rising, Jeremiah is striding across the table, and he’s kneeling in front of his eldest daughter and he’s taking her hands from Maggie and Kara and he brings them between his and he kisses them, kisses her tear-stained, trembling cheeks, kisses her forehead. Strokes her short hair, holds her face between his calloused hands.
“Alex Danvers. My brave girl. You know the only thing that got me through all those years?”

Alex bites down a sob and shakes her head, and Kara crouches down on Jeremiah’s other side, putting her hand on Alex’s knee while Maggie guards the small of Alex’s back with a tender hand.

“The thought that you and your sister were safe. Were happy. And Detective Sawyer – Maggie – she makes you happy. I can tell. You never giggled like that, even as a teenager, except with Kara. But it’s different now: you’re right. You’re different. And that’s good. It’s wonderful. Because Alex, I don’t need you to be the girl I remember. I need you to be the woman that you are. And you’re perfect. Just like you are.”

“Dad,” Alex chokes, and she’s slipping out of her chair and into his arms, and Kara reaches out for Maggie’s hand, and Maggie takes it and squeezes, because the person they both love most in the world is sobbing, but sobbing from a decade of relieved grief, almost three decades of relieved suppression, sobbing from the sheer pain of sweet healing.

Eliza watches and lets a tear drop from her eyes, because she wishes she’d had Jeremiah all these years to remind her to remind Alex how perfect she really is.

“I love you, Alex. I love you.”

“I love you too, Dad. I love you, too.”
The DEO is the last place Alex Danvers ever expected to have sex – it’s the last place she ever even thought about sex – but the James Bond super spy lab turns Maggie on.

Or, more to the point, Alex Danvers in a lab coat, Alex Danvers in her uniform, Alex Danvers in full tactical gear – just generally Alex Danvers – turns Maggie on.

So she finds herself dismissing the two rookie med techs whose eyes go wide when Maggie comes up from behind Alex while she’s examining a specimen in her newest microscope and braces her against the lab bench with a firm hand grasping the bench on either side of her hips, on either side of her ass.

She finds herself dismissing the lab techs and trying to turn around, but Maggie’s body is pressed against the back of hers, and Maggie’s pupils are dilating wildly.

“This okay?” she needs to know, and Alex’s breath hitches.

“I’m at work, Detective Sawyer,” she teases, but her smile and her hands reaching around her body to keep Maggie close to her are the eager permission Maggie’s waiting for.

“No one’s stopping you, Agent Danvers,” she murmurs against the back of Alex’s neck as her hands work their way up her lab coat, around her body, grasping at her nipples through her uniform shirt, and Alex moans breathily and grinds her ass back into Maggie raggedly.

“Maggie,” she gasps.

“Good, babe?”

“Don’t stop.”

“Yeah?” Maggie brings her teeth down on the back of Alex’s neck, and Alex bites down a scream.

“Please,” Alex begs, and Maggie obliges, turning Alex around to face her only when she’s about to cum, because it is her lab, after all, and screaming as loudly as she usually does with one of Maggie’s hands down her jeans and one of Maggie’s hands under her bra probably would be inappropriate, so Maggie swallows Alex’s screams with her own mouth, her own lips, and she swears she’s never tasted anything as perfect.

They have the same strategy in Kara’s bathroom during game night – kissing to stifle the screams. with each other’s mouths, each other’s tongues – but this time, it’s Alex that has Maggie pinned up against something. Kara’s sink, more specifically, Alex holding Maggie up by the underside of her thighs, grinding between her legs with her thigh, and Maggie is scratching at her back under her red sweater, and Maggie is grasping for her nipple with her mouth, because Alex’s thigh is giving her perfect pressure and Alex holding her body up against the sink like this – Alex’s kid sister’s sink with all their friends in the other room, no less – is making Maggie positively drip for her, and she thanks the lesbian goddess that she wore black jeans tonight because she’s probably wet enough to soak right through her underwear, and when she cums, she can’t help sighing out Alex’s name, loudly, loudly, loudly.

Loud enough for Kara to be redder than Alex’s sweater when they stroll back out of the bathroom a few minutes later, looking – and feeling – like a pair of guilty teenagers. Loud enough for James to thump Maggie’s back lightly and congratulate her on getting what she deserves. Loud enough for Winn to offer Alex a high five and congratulate her on learning a new set of tricks with her index finger.

It happens at the bar, too. Of course it happens at the bar, too.

Because Alex has taken to showing Maggie the proper way to hold the cue, and because it means pressing her body flush against Maggie’s, Maggie has taken to pretending she just can’t get it, can’t get it, can’t get it, can you show me that again, babe?

M’gann snickers when she notices her friend’s eyes glued to Alex’s ass when she lines up her own shots, rolls her eyes with a small chuckle when Alex gets handsy with her friend while she’s trying to set up a shot of her own, and she groans softly to herself when they tug each other into the single stall bathroom and a soft thud drums up against the door. She cranks up the bar music and she flips a “temporarily out of order” sign on the door in thirteen different languages, because she’s nothing if not an excellent friend.

When Maggie and Alex emerge from the bathroom twenty minutes later with faux-casual expressions on their faces, a pair of hickeys on Alex’s neck and Maggie’s hair hastily tied up, where earlier it had been loose and perfectly arranged, she winks when Maggie slips her a five and thanks her for the sign.

Because it wasn’t the first time, and it won’t be the last, and M’gann can’t help but smile, because she’s never seen Maggie this happy before. And that’s more than worth telling her clientele that they can hold it for a half hour every now and then.

Chapter Summary

anonymous asked:

Alex Maggie and Kara visit Eliza and Alex falls back into old habits

Maggie knew.

She knew that Alex’s weight-of-the-world-responsibility-I-need-to-be-perfect-in-all-ways-at-all-times didn’t come from being Kara’s sister.

She knew that Alex’s weight-of-the-world-responsibility-I-need-to-be-perfect-in-all-ways-at-all-times came from being Eliza’s daughter.

And she was glad – truly – that Eliza had apparently taken Alex’s coming out better than Alex had at first.

But she also knew – and she wasn’t sure if Alex realized explicitly, so she said nothing, because it was something for Alex to work out on her own, and Maggie would be there to support her and love her unconditionally when she did – that Eliza was the reason it took Alex so long to realize she’s gay. Well, Eliza and the violence of heteronormativity. But Eliza. Because Eliza is what that perfection speech was all about.

And it made Maggie furious.

But she said nothing, and Eliza was Alex’s mom, after all, and she of all people knew how complicated parents are, how strange and counterintuitive and unhealthy love from a parent can be, so she was flattered and honored and more than a little nervous when Alex invited her to come out to Midvale with her and Kara for the long weekend.

She packed only her nicest flannels, her sharpest jeans, her most dapper jacket, her hottest boots, because the habit of being as herself, as gay, as humanly possible around women’s parents ran strong in her.

Alex shook harder the closer they got to Midvale. She rambled more and then lapsed into longer silences. Maggie glanced at Kara, who grimaced in solidarity, who grimaced in anticipation, who grimaced because Kara knew, too.

“It’ll be fine, right?” Alex suddenly squeaks out of nowhere. “Right, it’ll be fine, last time I saw her she said I was exceptional, right, I mean, you don’t call someone you’re disappointed in exceptional, right? And Kara, you haven’t really gotten hurt lately – I mean, you went to Earth 2 and that slave trading hell hole all by yourself, she’s bound to hate me for that – ”

“Alex,” Kara soothes, reaching up into the front seat, grateful that Maggie’s driving. “Alex, Eliza loves you. She doesn’t know how to communicate that well all the time – ”
“Or at all, most of the time –”

“Okay, right. But she loves you, Alex. And you know what, if she doesn’t love you right, Maggie and I are here, okay? We love you. Unconditionally. Okay? It’s gonna be okay.”

Alex grimaced a smile and Alex nodded and Alex squeezed Kara’s hand and Alex held her breath, because they were pulling into Eliza’s driveway.

They got a couple of hours in without an incident, largely because Kara changed the subject when Eliza asked about where Alex was when she went to Earth 2; largely because Maggie let Alex squeeze her hand as hard as she damn well pleased whenever Eliza turned to ask Alex a question; largely because Maggie put a steady hand on Alex’s knee, gave her a significant glance, to tell her that she didn’t mind that Eliza was interrogating her on her education, on her history with the science division, on her motivation to become a police officer, to work with aliens.

They got a couple of hours in without an incident, but after Eliza asked what seemed to be the problem with locating Cadmus’s new stronghold and finding Jeremiah, Alex excused herself to go to the bathroom. Maggie didn’t want to make it seem like they had a codependent relationship and Kara didn’t want to make it seem like Alex couldn’t go pee on her own when she was around Eliza, so neither of them accompanied her.

But there was bourbon on her breath when she came back; there was bourbon on her breath and fire in her eyes and a slight wobble to her step, because she must have had way more than one shot, way more than two, way more than three, in the space of the five minutes she’d been out of the room.

Maggie and Kara exchange a worried glance, because they’d taken all the alcohol out of both of their homes, out of Alex’s, but Alex grew up in this home and Alex knew where Eliza kept the best liquor.

Kara excused herself to get water for everyone – but really, for Alex – and Eliza narrowed her eyes as she watched Alex collapse on the couch next to Maggie, tossing her arms around her and her legs onto her lap.

“Maggie loves me, Mom,” she said from her spot nuzzled into Maggie’s neck. “Isn’t that wild? A woman who loves me for exactly who I am? Funny thing is, growing up, after Dad, you know, I didn’t think that was possible. For someone – someone who wasn’t Kara, isn’t that ironic, that Kara’s the reason you put all that pressure on me and yet Kara’s the only one who really loved me – someone to love me. Like, unconditionally love me.”

“Ally, baby, do you wanna show me the beach, take a nice walk?”

“No, Detective Sawyer, I think my daughter’s too out of sorts at the moment to be strolling about.”

“What’ samatter, Mom, don’t want the neighbors to know you raised a daughter whose body can’t break alcohol down before it goes to her head?”

“Al, honey –”

“What brought this on, Alexandra?” Eliza wanted to know, and Alex glared as Kara stepped back into the room with a tray of full water glasses, eyes wide and eyes nervous.

“Do you have to ask about Dad like that?”

Eliza scoffed. “Alexandra, I have the right to ask after the welfare of my husband –”
“No, no, I mean, like that. You have to make it into an accusation, don’t you, like it’s my fault that we can’t find him, like it’s my fault he’s still suffering. Just like everything’s my fault, just like –”

“Alex –”

“No, Kara, I love you, but god, Kara, sometimes you don’t get to play mediator! Sometimes you don’t get to be in the middle! Sometimes you have to pick a side!”

“My daughter, the soldier. Who would have thought?”

“Eliza, she’s upset, she’s –”

“No, Kara, Alex is right. She usually is, isn’t she? You can choose your sister’s side, dear, I won’t hold it against you. After all, I’m only your adoptive mother. But Alex is your sister, through and through.” She stares through tears at Alex, and is silent for a long moment before she says, “At least I gave you one good thing in your life, Alexandra. By taking in Kara, I gave you your sister. At least I can you that one good thing.”

Alex withered immediately and Alex tried to stand as Eliza did, but she stumbled into Maggie’s arms instead.

“No, Mom, I didn’t – I didn’t mean you never – Mom. Mom!”

But the door to Eliza’s room had snapped shut, and Kara was setting down the tray of glasses and rushing to helping Maggie set Alex back down on the couch, rushing to help Maggie hold her shaking, sobbing, torn mess of a big sister.

“I did it again, I did it again, I could have just let it go, I could have just ignored it, why didn’t I ignore it?” Alex gasped, and Kara cooed wordlessly into her ear and kissed her forehead.

“Because you have to stand up for yourself at some point, Alex. And, okay, you know, you and your mom don’t have the most complimentary communication styles. But she needs to know what’s acceptable and what’s not. I would have been upset if she implied that about me too, babe. I was upset that she implied that about you. Because it is not your fault you haven’t found your dad yet. You’re allowed to stand up for yourself, Al. You’re allowed. You’re allowed, babygirl.”

She tugged her into her chest because Alex was sobbing harder, then, and Alex was reaching for Maggie with one hand and Kara with the other, and she was shaking and she was gasping for breath and she would have been inconsolable, but she was in the arms of the two women who loved her more than anything else in the world, so she calmed eventually, eventually, eventually.

None of the three girls noticed that Eliza had slipped back into the room until she was squatting in front of them, a glass of the water Kara had brought in her hand.

“When you were a little girl, Alex, you would always want water when you were upset about something.”

“Not just bringing it to me because I’m a drunken mess on your couch?” Alex grunted as Kara took the glass and brought it to Alex’s begrudging lips.

“I’m bringing it to you because you are my daughter, Alexandra. And I don’t have superhearing, sure, but I heard enough of what Maggie told you, and I… she’s right, Alex. I don’t always know how to talk to you. I don’t always know how to love you. But that doesn’t mean I don’t. You are my world, Alex Danvers. My entire world.”
Kara gulped and Maggie held in a skeptical sigh. Alex leaned further into Maggie for support, for warmth, for a love that she knew for a fact was unconditional, was active, was healthy, was home.

“Then treat me like it,” Alex said simply, and her words were strong, but her voice was small.

Eliza bit down tears and nodded and reached a trembling hand up to touch her daughter’s face.

“I’m going to try harder, Alex. Because when you rescue your father, I want him to see that we’re stronger together. Yes?”

Alex squeezed Maggie’s hand and melted at Kara’s sad smile and nodded down at her mother, hope crawling its way back into her heart.

“Yeah. Yeah. Yeah.”

Chapter Summary

anonymous asked:

Similar to the other one you did: Alex being out of town and Maggie having a breakdown/wanting to slip back into bad tendencies & Kara being the one to help

When she’s with Alex, the world doesn’t sting quite so much.

When she’s with Alex, she doesn’t dwell – not as much – on the massacre of her friends at the bar, doesn’t stay up late at night going through their pictures, going through their files, because she has enough saturation during her days, filled with finding their families, their friends, and telling them, telling them, telling them.

When she’s with Alex, she feels proud of M’gann for going back to Mars to campaign against genocidal racism, not sad and miserable and mildly but guiltily betrayed because one of her only real friends is suddenly on a different planet.

When she’s with Alex, she doesn’t down quite so much bourbon, because she doesn’t think quite so much about the deaths on the job and the torture she’s cleaned up after and the persistent nagging feeling that she’s not doing enough, never doing enough, to make the police force a force for actual good.

When she’s with Alex, she gets called things like the best, and tough, and genius, and sexy, and you stay in bed and I’ll make the coffee today, babe, you’re always so good to me, I want to start taking care of you; she doesn’t have so much time or bandwidth to reflect on past heartbreak, on the terror that this will end the same way, on the way she tends to lose all her friends in breakups, the way she tends to lose all her self-esteem in the palms of women who don’t understand who she is.

But Alex is away in Geneva, and Alex skypes every night, but briefly, briefly, and Alex looks so damn good in a pantsuit and Maggie can’t help but be scared, be terrified, that she’ll meet someone else, that she’ll meet someone new, someone better, someone with a better pedigree, some white chick who has six degrees and isn’t just some local cop and whose only baggage is a six-figure salary and a history of absolutely no mental health issues.

So Maggie is downing as much bourbon as that new white boy will serve her – and he’s not M’gann, he probably doesn’t deserve to be mentioned in the same thought bubble as her, so he doesn’t cut her off, he doesn’t slide her a glass of water, he doesn’t put his hand on her shoulder, on her cheek, and remind her that she’s got a lot to be proud of. He just serves up more alcohol, and she just keeps drinking it, and the world starts splitting in two but he doesn’t stop serving so she doesn’t stop drinking.

And suddenly there are a pair of strong hands on her shoulders, and she thinks of Alex, just for a moment, but it’s the other Danvers sister, the little one, the one Alex idolizes and the one who idolizes Alex, and Maggie feels a lopsided grin twist onto her face and hears the slight slur in her words.

“Ey, it’s Little Danvers! How you doing, kid?”

Kara arches a sympathetic eyebrow and keeps one hand on Maggie’s back as she lowers herself onto the stool next to her.

“How are you doing, Maggie?” She puts the seltzer Mon El silently gives her into Maggie’s hands, and she makes a note to firmly explain to him the finer points of keeping his customers safe later.

“You know your sister looks really incredible in a suit. I met her in a suit, you know. On that tarmac, when she was pretending to be FBI, and damn I knew I was a goner then and there.”

Maggie sips for a long, long moment at Kara’s seltzer and stares into her blue eyes for a long moment. “You’re really pretty too, you know, Little Danvers. Both the Danvers girls, huh? Bet someone in Geneva’s gonna try to pick her up, ya think? And of course she’ll leave me, because come on, who wouldn’t, and I mean, I told her, I knew, right, she only wants me because she’s just coming out and I’m all bright and shiny on account of her just realizing her feelings, right, I mean, who wouldn’t leave me, right Little Danvers?”

Kara listens with soft eyes and puts the straw up to Maggie’s lips, encouraging her to drink more seltzer. Maggie obeys, and Kara reaches a tentative hand out to brush Maggie’s hair away from her face, just like she does for Alex. For her first big sister.

“Alex loves you, Maggie. And not just because she’s just coming out. You know that, right? That she loves you?”

Maggie shakes her head and tries to order another shot, and Kara cancels it and gets another seltzer instead.

“But she’s amazing, Little Danvers. Kara. Does it bother you that I call you Little Danvers? Because obviously you’re not littler than me, but because Alex, you, it.. anyway… I just… she thinks she fails at everything, all the time, you know, but she’s just.. she’s perfect, Kara, perfect for me, and I’ve never… I’ve never had anyone treat me like she treats me, like I’m… like I’m worth a damn, you know, Little Danvers?”

Kara nods softly. “And you’re afraid of that being taken away? Because she looks good in a pantsuit and there are probably hot women in Geneva.”

Maggie laughs bitterly. “Well when you put it that way I sound like a whiny, insecure kid.”

Kara smiles and shakes her head. “No. Not to me. You know what you sound like to me? You sound like someone who dotes on my sister, when my sister has never, ever been paid proper attention to, let alone been doted on, in her whole life. You sound like someone who loves with her whole heart, her whole being, and who’s only gotten punished for it. But Maggie, I know Alex. Alex isn’t… Alex isn’t going to do that to you. Alex loves you, Maggie. For you. Because that thing you said, about her thinking she fails all the time, but really she’s perfect for you? That’s how she feels about you, Maggie. That’s how she feels about you.”

Maggie stares at Kara for a long time, and Kara returns her gaze gently, gently, affectionately. Because she misses Alex, too, and she’s been jealous of Maggie – so jealous – but Maggie has the same fear of losing Alex that she does, and the love that underlies that fear just might be the thing to keep them all together.
“Come on,” Kara concludes abruptly, putting her arm around Maggie’s waist and guiding her to stand.

“Whoa, I know I said you’re pretty, Little Danvers, but I’m not trying to – ”

Kara laughs at Maggie’s drunken ridiculousness gently. “I know you’re not trying to, Maggie. I’m putting you to bed. Oh. Um. That didn’t sound – you need to rest. Come on. I’ll take you home and tuck you in.”

“Does being a saint run in your family, Little Danvers?” Maggie wants to know as she walks as straight as she can out the back door with Kara’s arm around her. Kara just chuckles as she hails a cab, because she doesn’t think Maggie’s stomach could tolerate being flown.

When she has her tucked in – Maggie stumbles out of her jeans and strips off her shirt and Kara averts her eyes – she turns off the light and sets a glass of water on the bedside table.

“Kara?” Maggie mutters, and Kara stills. “Stay?”

Kara smiles and nods and crawls into bed next to her sister’s girlfriend. “Alex loves you, Maggie. Alex loves you so much.”

Maggie falls asleep with Kara’s arms around her and a smile on her face, because this must be what it feels like to have a sister.
anonymous asked:

Hey Mom. I know your prompts are closed and I really want to respect that, but I had a really shitty day and I'm feeling really low and I just need a hug. Could you maybe write a Sanvers cuddling fic? No worries if you don't want to, I'm sorry to bother you.

After a day like today?

Nothing happened. Not anything out of the ordinary in her line of work.

Nothing happened. It just was a positively unbearable day.

A few months ago, she would have gone to the bar and slammed down shots until she couldn’t drive her Triumph home; slammed down shots until she could barely see straight; slam down shots until when the cab finally took her home, her punches to her heavy bag would be way off base and her wrists would strain from the force and her knuckles would bleed, just a bit, just a bit, from the drunken wrapping job she’d do before tearing into the bag, before tearing into herself.

But now?

Now, Maggie goes home to the home that isn’t quite her home – not yet – and Maggie collapses on the couch, because it might be her girlfriend’s apartment, but here, she’s safe, and here, she’s loved, and here, she’s… taken care of.

Because Alex kneels in front of her and Alex smooths her hair out of her face and Alex presses soft kisses everywhere, everywhere, everywhere.

And Maggie doesn’t cry – not yet, not yet – but her body goes slack and her breath goes ragged with weariness, with exhaustion, with need, so Alex picks her up and carries her to her bed – their bed – and strips off her clothes and tucks her in and shucks off her own clothes and draws her body close, draws her body warm, draws her body safe.

It’s not sexual, this cuddling, this night. It’s not sexual, and it’s not hot, and it’s not desire.

This night, this cuddling, is warmth, and it’s comfort, and it’s pure, pure love. This cuddling, this night, is I’ve got you and I love you and I promise it’s not always going to feel like this and I’ll hold you until it passes, and I’ll keep holding you even after it passes, because I’m never, ever going to stop loving you.

And, finally, in Alex’s arms, Maggie knows she’s home.

Chapter Summary

Hi! You absolutely don’t need to do this until you get through the rest of your requests, but I didn’t want to forget- I have the flu right now and am feeling all achy and such and I wondered if you could do a fic where maybe Alex gets sick and Maggie comforts her? Thank you so much. You’re an amazing writer, and please take it easy/be kind to yourself as you work through these prompts :)

^^ prompt above from @a-few-of-my-favorite-turtles

She always goes to work when she’s sick.

Always.

And, always, J’onn has to team up with Susan Vasquez to practically escort her out of the building and force her back into her apartment.

When Supergirl joined the team, she’d help.

But still, Alex would resist.

“I’m fine,” she’d insist as she coughed up a lung.

“I got this,” she’d pant as she finished throwing up.

“I don’t need help,” she’d grumble as she wobbled because her bones ached so, so, so much worse than they did that time she crashed through the ceiling of that warehouse and landed flat on her back.

She always goes to work when she’s sick.

Until Maggie Sawyer, that is.

Because Maggie notices in the middle of the night, when Alex develops a chest cough, when she tries to hide it, when she shifts away from Maggie’s body and curls up in a fetal position and rocks herself while her chest burns and her body burns and her muscles ache and her nose runs.

When Alex drifts into a restless sleep, finally, Maggie gets up to raid Alex’s medicine cabinet. Of course she has no cold or flu medicine. Of course she doesn’t. Alex Danvers is above the common cold, the mere flu.

Alex coughs harshly in her sleep, and Maggie sighs affectionately.

She gets dressed – her jeans, her boots, Alex’s sweater, Alex’s jacket, not bothering with a bra – and pads softly out of the apartment, walking quickly in the chill of the late night to the only 24 hour bodega in the area.
She comes back armed with orange juice, crackers, tea, honey, lozenges, cough medicine, and an assortment of terrible DVDs, because sometimes Netflix just won’t cut it.

She laughs to herself when Alex tries to get up for her run in the morning.

“Where you think you’re going, Danvers?” she wants to know, and Alex jumps, because Maggie usually sleeps later than this, usually gets up to make breakfast and coffee only after Alex has left for her run.

“Run,” Alex rasps, and Maggie arches an eyebrow and reaches up to pull Alex back into bed.

“Mmmm, babe,” Alex flirts, and Maggie grins, but she shakes her head.

“Not hitting on you, Danvers. You’re staying in bed today.”

“I’m… staying in bed today but you’re… not hitting on me.”

“Alice, you were coughing the entire night, and you’re sweating bullets even as we speak. And you’re standing weird like you’re nauseous. You have the flu, Danvers. And I’m going to take care of you.”

Alex pffts and Alex shakes her head and Alex takes one look at her girlfriend and knows that resistance is futile.

“But you’ll get sick,” she objects, and Maggie smiles, because of all the objections she expected – objections about work and duty and the weight of the world and failure and perfection – this is the sweetest one to hear.

“I’d rather be sick with you than out in the world and healthy knowing that you’re all alone with no one to feed you and medicate you and hold your hair back when you throw up and hold you and entertain you when you inevitably get cabin fever in addition to your actual fever.”

Alex stares and blinks down tears and lets herself lean back into bed. “I think I love you, Maggie Sawyer.”

“Good. Because I know I love you, Alex Danvers.”

Chapter Summary

anonymous asked:

little prompt for you if you want: how about instead of being an awkward baby gay coming into her gayness alex is just plain awkward and very very gay and maggie basically has no gaydar to speak of? like maggie goes "i didn't know you were into girls" and alex is like "uh, i thought the leather jackets and the bike and the boots and everything were like neon signs" or smth like that you get my point right? anyways i love your writing!

She leans against her cop car and stares up at Alex with skepticism and maybe a little bit of hope in her eyes.

“I think I read you wrong.”

She hopes, she hopes, because her entire body is smarting, aching, reeling, from the pain of what her ex had said to her, the things she’d accused her of.

And Maggie, self-esteem shattered, is sure her ex had been right about all of them.

She is hard-headed, insensitive. Obsessed with work. Borderline sociopathic (well, that wasn’t her exact diagnosis, but hell, her ex wasn’t to be expected to know all the right terms, right?).

And she knows her ex was right, too, when she’d accused Maggie of having eyes for that damn FBI agent.

She’d tried not to, and she would never have done anything about it – she was nothing if not loyal – but she couldn’t help the feelings. Alex was…

Alex had rescued her, Alex had walked into the line of literal fire for her.

Alex had cared.

So she didn’t have words for Alex.

Except, now, maybe – because it really feels like Alex is asking her out, and hell, she thinks now the word might be gay – the word she hadn’t dared to hope for, because anyway, if she was straight, Maggie couldn’t be tempted any more than she already was.

“What do you mean?” Alex is tilting her head and smiling confusedly and her voice is nervous, nervous, nervous.

“I… I didn’t know you were into girls.”

And the nerves seep out of Alex’s body, now, because suddenly, Alex is laughing. Maggie blinks and furrows her brow, crossing her arms defensively across her chest, because she’d thought Alex was straight, sure, but she’d also thought Alex was just fine with her being a lesbian.

“Problem, Danvers?” And suddenly Maggie’s voice is hard, cold, defensive, protective. The voice she’d honed in Blue Springs. The voice that served her well on the force. The voice that didn’t feel like her at all, and yet felt like her whole life.

Alex reaches out and touches Maggie’s elbows, shaking her head now. “No, no, Maggie, no, I’m sorry, no, no, nothing’s wrong. I just... how could you not have known? I thought the leather jackets and the bike and the boots and the, like, everything, were kind of neon signs.”

Her grin is awkward, now, but with just a twinge of confidence, and her eyes flit down to Maggie’s lips, and Maggie’s gulps, because oh. Oh.

“So... you wanna keep each other company, Danvers.”

“You don’t wanna celebrate singledom, fine. You can be all sullen and quiet, that’s okay, or you can drink as much as you want and I’ll make sure you get home okay, or you can vent as much as you need to, or all of the above. I’m a good listener, Sawyer.”

Maggie tilts her head. “And... venting is all you want?”

Alex smiles softly. “You’re still hurting, obviously. So for now, yeah.” Her eyes flit to Maggie’s lips again. “For now.”

Maggie loses her breath because Alex wants her, and Alex wants to take care of her.

Of all the things she’s used to, this isn’t one of them.

“So what’d you say about a great pinball bar?”

Alex smiles, and Maggie swears she might be blushing. And it feels... like life might be beginning again.
Anonymous asked:

Maggie and Alex are dating and J'onn wants to meet Maggie and talk to her about their relationship. Alex is happy that J'onn is looking out for her. (Write this if you have time, please.)

It’s not how she wanted J’onn to find out, and it’s far from what J’onn would have preferred, too.

Far, far, far from it.

Because when he walks into his earth daughter’s lab and Detective Maggie Sawyer is on the lab bench with her shirt tugged hastily up and her fingers woven into Alex’s hair, whining as she holds her head steady to her chest, he really thinks he’s seen enough of this damn planet.

“Agent Danvers,” he clears his throat, and Maggie’s breathy whining of Alex’s name becomes a curse and he didn’t know Alex could make that kind of squeaking sound.

“Sir,” she breathes, zipping her pants and helping Maggie pull her shirt down, her fingers trying to pat her hair back into some semblance of acceptability as she snaps to attention, lips swollen and slightly parted, breathing hard for very different reasons, suddenly.

Maggie doesn’t turn around as she hops gingerly off the lab bench, because she’s trying so hard to just breathe, breathe, breathe. Because she’s been here before, been caught by someone’s dad before, and it hadn’t been pretty – to say the least – and she was so stupid, she should have known that something so reckless and impulsive would destroy everything.

Like she always does.

“At ease, Alex,” J’onn says, and there’s something in his voice that Maggie can’t identify, and – when she chances a glance up at Alex’s face – she can tell that Alex can’t quite read it, either.

“Detective Sawyer, can I please speak with you for a moment?”

“J’onn, she –”

“No, Alex, it’s fine. It’s fine.” It’s most certainly not fine, but she squeezes Alex’s hand and she winks softly at her and she puts on a brave face, because he is much more powerful than that father who’d called her into his garage and beaten her senseless for kissing his daughter, but she’s long since trained herself to keep a brave face, so she does.

J’onn doesn’t look at her as she follows him out of the lab, feeling a combination of distinct dread and the panicked urge to laugh, because Alex is supposed to be the one feeling like a teenager again, not her, but god, she does.
He leads her into an office and he gestures her into a seat.

“Prefer to stand, sir,” she clips, forcing herself to look up into his unreadable eyes.

He speaks without preamble, and what he says shocks her. And she didn’t think she could be shocked by much anymore.

“Do you love her, Detective Sawyer?”

“I… Sir?”

“Sit,” he says again, and he sits, too, this time, so she follows suit.

“Detective Sawyer, I know a lot of things about you. Protocol, you understand, for letting you into the DEO so frequently, for partnering with you on cases these past weeks. I know that you won an impressive amount of Intel competition awards throughout high school; that you suffered a compound fracture in your left arm when you were sixteen years old; that you rose to the rank of detective more quickly than anyone else in your graduating class at the academy, largely due to your extensive knowledge of alien life and your community work with LGBTQ children. I know, too, that your first girlfriend in college was an alien of unknown origin, and you helped her fix her pod so she could go back to her planet, even though it broke your heart when she told you she was planning to leave.”

He pauses and Maggie tries not to feel naked. “I…”

J’onn speaks again, and his voice is different, now, a little lighter. A little less stoic DEO Director, and perhaps a little more the stoic DEO Director space dad figure that Alex idolizes so much.

“And now, I know more things about you than I ever wanted to know, and good god, I wish now more than ever that Martians didn’t have such impressive memories.”

Maggie blushes and starts to stammer out an apology, but J’onn continues. “So, now I know that you’re deeply attracted to Agent Danvers. But what I don’t know, Detective Sawyer, is if you love her.”

“You wanna know if I’m good enough for her,” Maggie rasps softly, tears in her throat, and J’onn watches her face closely.

“It hasn’t been that long, you know. And she… she’s just coming to realize… things… about herself. That’s for her to tell you about, and she was planning to, you know, soon. Just trying to find the right time.” She looks up at him and gulps. “But that’s not what you asked. It hasn’t been that long, but I… yeah. Yes. I love her. I… I haven’t told her yet, because I don’t want to rush her, I don’t want to pressure her, but I… I know it hasn’t been long, so maybe this is stupid, but I love your daughter more than I’ve ever loved anyone. She… she’s just… you know Alex, she… she’s perfect. For me. She’s perfect. And as for whether I’m good enough for her? Probably not. Almost definitely not. But I’ve been trying to be, every day. And I’m not going to stop trying to be.”

The skin around J’onn’s eyes crinkle slightly, and his lips tilt upward.

“Alex! You can stop hovering in the hallway now.”

Maggie startles and turns, her mouth open and her eyes wide. “How much of that did you hear?”

“Enough to know that two of the people I love most in the world have got my back,” she whispers, and the tilt of J’onn’s lips becomes a full smile, and Alex crosses the room and slips into his arms.
“Thank you for wanting to protect me.” She turns to Maggie, and there’s pure vulnerability, pure love, in her eyes. “And I feel the same way about you.”

Maggie’s breath hitches and she licks her lips and she can’t speak.

J’onn clears his throat. “Do you two need the afternoon off? Because I certainly don’t need to witness anything – like that – ever again.”

“Yeah, sorry about that, J’onn, I – ”

“We’re just not going to discuss it, Agent Danvers.” His voice is gruff, but his warm hand on her shoulder, and then on Maggie’s as he leaves the room, gives him away.

“Maggie, I – ” Alex steps closer to her and takes her into her arms.

“Never again, Agent Danvers!” J’onn calls without turning around, and Maggie and Alex laugh, laugh, laugh, into each other’s arms.

And if they cry, just a little bit, it’s out of the sweet relief of being so, so loved.

anonymous asked:

thank you for the hugs, I have read all the fluffs, and I couldn't write today (cause headaches) and I really need something right now, even a paragraph of fluff would do, even a caption on an Alex Maggie picture would do, I just need something. The fic I read was really well written, it included consent and all, but it was like the 5th in a very short time that had beating, it's overwhelming. Your kink fics are amazing, I really love them.

She tells her that the days of her pushing her feelings down are over, and god, does she mean it. Because last night, Alex held her and kissed the back of her neck and whispered sweet nothings – sweet everythings – into her ear until she fell asleep, because Maggie had come home upset about a confrontation she’d had at work. And this morning, Alex had gone on her run extra early and woken Maggie up with breakfast in bed. And last week, she’d kissed every centimeter of her face with a reverence that Maggie was still reeling from. Alex Danvers was perfect: and Alex Danvers deserves only the best of all things. Alex Danvers deserves, for once, to be put first. And that’s exactly what Maggie’s going to do, because the days of Alex pushing her feelings down are the days before they first kissed, the days before they started dating, the days before the tumbled into the same abyss of falling in love with each other.

Chapter Summary

Fic: Alex talks to Maggie about something that went down in season 1 (General Douchebag Lane, The Red-K incident, Astra’s death, almost getting sent to Cadmus?, Myriad etc.) Aka Alex needs to open up and share herself/her trauma and Maggie gets a window to how loyal and devoted Alex is for people she loves and how much it kills her when she can’t be.

^^ above prompt from @backintheblackparade

Maggie is a detective, and she detects.

She detects when Alex flinches – just slightly, just slightly, just in the skin behind her eyes – when she’s passing out weapons to the strike team and her hands ghost over a kryptonite sword.

She detects when the small of Alex’s back gets tense, when her fingers twitch ever so slightly as if aching for her glock, when Winn announces that he’s found a lead on Cadmus’s newest location.

She detects the darkening of Alex’s eyes when one of the agents mentions Myriad in passing, and while Maggie remembers that night with a clenched jaw and the ghosts of trauma from utter lack of control, she knows from Alex’s eyes, from the stiffening of Alex’s shoulders, from the way the agents fall silent when they realize she’s in earshot, that the night of the takeover was much, much worse for Alex than it was for, probably, anyone else.

She doesn’t ask.

She knows Alex doesn’t like to talk.

So she doesn’t ask.

But on the nights that end the days where Alex flinches, where her back tenses, where her fingers twitch and her eyes darken – those nights, Maggie makes sure to draw Alex aromatic baths and give her hot oil massages and kiss her slow, kiss her soft, kiss her tender, all over her body, all over her heart.

She doesn’t ask, but eventually, she doesn’t have to. Because eventually, Alex starts talking.

“She told me I’m nothing more than… than an abused child. Brainwashed into fighting for aliens, believing they’re good.”

Alex chuckles harshly and Maggie continues playing with her hair as Alex lays in her lap.

“That is, I wasn’t trained that way. Kara is good, Kara is worth fighting for, worth dying for. But other than that? I was trained the other way around.”

Alex chuckles again, and she turns her face to kiss Maggie’s stomach. “Ironic, isn’t it? That a Martian taught me to fear aliens, to kill them? It was you, really. You that made me think of something beyond… I dunno… duty. Something more like… empathy.”

Maggie says nothing. She just leans down to kiss Alex’s forehead, to continue stroking her hair.

“It’s funny, you know. Her talking to me about abuse. Because she’s spent the last decade doing god knows what to my father. And I told her. I told her, I’ve killed before. A Kryptonian.”

Maggie’s hand stills, just for a moment, and she cocks her head in confusion, in pain, in compassion, but she blinks away the surprise, the hurt on Alex’s behalf, and she wipes her face clean and continues stroking Alex’s hair.

“Kara’s aunt.” Alex swallows, and Maggie’s never seen her this close to crying about work, about missions, about the agonies of being a soldier. Of being herself.

“She was going to kill J’onn, she… Kara’s only remaining blood, or my… my father. Figure, anyway. I… I’m a soldier. Right? I’m a soldier. It shouldn’t bother me. It shouldn’t. And Kara… Kara was amazing, she… but I… I still dream about it. About the glow of the sword piercing through her body, the way she gasped. The way Kara cried over her body. I still dream about it. I shouldn’t. It’s stupid. It was war. I’m a soldier.”

She’s starting to spiral, and Maggie knows, so Maggie kisses her forehead again, runs her thumb over the tears streaking down the sides of Alex’s face, and Maggie speaks, softly, softly, softly.

“You’re more than a soldier, Ally. You’re a person underneath that armor, and I’m not just talking about your tactical gear, babe. A damn good person, too. You love hard, Alex. You love hard, so you hurt hard, and you’re allowed. You’re allowed to hurt. Hell, babe, you’re allowed to break. I won’t let you lose track of the pieces.”

Alex gulps, and her body seizes with the effort of holding herself together, and Maggie holds her closer.

“They have my dad, Maggie. It just… it doesn’t end. They torture Kara, they threaten J’onn, so I kill Kara’s aunt, Kara almost dies alone in space, but I rescue her in her pod so yay, we win, right, but no, no, because it doesn’t end, Maggie, they still have my dad and we lost all those people at the bar and Kara’s afraid she’s losing me, and sometimes I think she doesn’t really believe I’m her sister, not really, not really, because she said all these things when they infected her with Red-K, and I said all those things when they had me under Myriad, I almost killed my sister, Maggie, so if she still feels me slipping away, maybe all that will come to the surface again and I’ll lose her for real, and it’ll be my fault, and it – I – I’m a soldier, I shouldn’t be – “

“Babe, you’re not gonna lose Kara. You’re not, I promise. I’ve seen you two. She only worries about losing you because she loves you, Alex, just like you love her. But babe, she has to learn to live her own life, and so do you. She’s more than Supergirl, but you’re more than Agent Danvers. You can be happy, Al. We’re going to get your dad back – we are, I promise you – and you, doing this? Right now? This is you being brave, Ally, this is you being strong.”

“What, strength is getting snot all over your sweater?”

Maggie smiles and kisses her lips and wipes her nose with the hem of her sleeve. “Now you’re catching on, Danvers.”

“You love me, Maggie.”

It’s a statement, but it’s a question, but it’s a statement, and Maggie gulps because she hasn’t said it before, because she didn’t want to scare her, she didn’t want to rush her. But Alex’s eyes are wide and her voice is soft and her tears are crystals and her body is warm and her love is radiating.

“Of course, you’re not gonna go crazy on me, are you?”

Alex laughs, and it’s genuine, this time, not bitter, not full of self-hatred, not full of ghosts and screams and nightmares. This time, it’s full of something that sounds a lot like hope.

“I think I just did, Sawyer.”

“Fine by me, Danvers. Fine by me.”
She’s in the field and she’s got her game face on – shoulders set, stance relaxed but ready, eyes sharp – and when J Cole’s Hold It Down blasts out of her back pocket, her work partner cocks a grin at you.

“Your kid?”

She grins at the term and answers quickly.

“Adrian, I’m on the job, what up?”

“Can I bring a kid to our dinner tonight? Remember that girl Val I was telling you about? She’s trippin cause she had a rough time in school today – “

“Yeah, course you can, kid.”

“You gotta go.”

Maggie grins at his sensitivity, his perceptiveness. “You could be a detective yourself, Ade. See you both tonight.”

She chews the inside of her cheek – a habit she’s been picking up from her girlfriend – and shoots a quick text off to Alex, telling her to expect one more tonight before pocketing her phone and sighing, squatting to analyze the tire marks leftover by the latest Cadmus lackey getaway car.

She pushes tonight’s dinner – a biweekly thing, dinner with her girlfriend and her college boy (she never tires of reminding him how proud she is that he’s in college) – to the back of her mind until she walks through the door of her apartment several hours later to find in her kitchen Alex, Adrian, and a short kid – must the the Val girl Adrian was talking about – with a dapper, short haircut, make-up free face, collared shirt and khakis, skin darker than hers but lighter than Adrian’s, smile just as bright.

Alex has the look of panicked glee of a pale five year old being caught with her hand in the cookie jar; Adrian’s holding the handle of a smoking frying pan with one hand and pointing at Alex with the other; and the new kid is frozen mid-laugh, eyes wide and nervous at finally meeting the detective she’s heard so much about from Adrian.
Maggie appraises the situation with a single glance and grins.

“Alex tried to cook.”

“I – “

“All good, Danvers, we’ll order in, but I gotta say, I’m still surprised your skills in the lab don’t transfer to the kitchen – “

“Hehe, your skills – “

“That’s enough out of you, young man.”

“Yes, Agent Danvers.”

Maggie laughs and shakes her head at their banter as she drops her gun and jacket on a chair and strides over with her hand out to greet the new kid.

“Maggie Sawyer,” she says, leaving the usual NCPD part out because the girl is looking more nervous by the second.

“Valerie.”

“But you prefer Val?” Maggie asks, and Adrian nods behind Val’s back in case she isn’t brave enough to say yes. She is, and she nods, and Maggie smiles warmly at her.

“Okay, Val, so. What’re you hungry for, aside from whatever my woman charred on the stove?”

“Hey – “

“Is it not true, Danvers?”

Alex scowls playfully and Maggie leans in for a kiss. Adrian squeals and leans into Val. “Told you they were the cutest couple ever. My real life OTP!”

Val smiles, but there’s sadness behind it.

“Bad day, kid?” Alex asks, and gestures her to the couch.

“She likes this girl,” Adrian knocks his shoulder into Val gently, and she shoves him with an embarrassed laugh on her face. Alex ooohs and Maggie squeals, and Val almost cries, because she’s never met grown-ups who were this excited to hear about her crushes on girls before.

“She’s really pretty,” Val confesses in a single breath, collapsing onto the couch with her knees spread wide and heat spreading across her shyly smiling face.

“Okay, tell. Everything. But first, tell me what you want for food.”

“Whatever’s fine. Pizza, maybe.”

Maggie chuckles as she takes out her phone to order. “Always with the pizza in this family.”

Alex kisses her and Adrian squeezes her knee when they catch her family comment, and Val flushes to be so easily included in such a term.

“Nothing, I just… she’s really good at math – “
“A definite turn on – “

“Oh, is that why you like coming to my lowly easy-bake oven lab, Danvers?”

“Ladies! There are children present!”

“I’m not a children, I’m sixteen!”

“Children,” Adrian, Alex, and Maggie all chorus, and Val rolls her eyes and continues.

“There’s the math thing, and she’s just really sweet, she always sticks up for the kids who get picked on, and she’s got these gorgeous curls and she’s – “

“Super duper femmey, and totally into soft little butches like yourself,” Adrian says and pokes her in the belly gently. She swats at his hand and shrugs defeatedly.

“I dunno. I mean, I’m not just into femmes… but she is super femmey… but maybe she wants someone harder than me? Or like, femmier than me? Like, less gay, maybe, or more gay, or – ”

“So, basically, you’re creating a girl who’s anything but you in your mind, right?” Maggie grins with a tilted head, and Val sighs.

“I guess.”

Maggie squints at her and exhales sharply and wets her lips and speaks.

“You know before I met Danvers over here, it was… I dated. A lot.”

“Don’t worry Alex. You won,” Adrian whispers, and Alex slaps him five softly without taking her eyes off Maggie.

“I dated, but it was… it was women who didn’t get me, you know? They saw leather jackets and a cop badge and a bike and darker skin than theirs – god, too many white girls, sorry babe, but that’s a story for another day – so they expected me to be a certain type of way, expected me to be… well, more butch, you know? Like, all the time. They were interested in the role I could play – and I can play it, I can be it, and I like it, I love doting on women – “

Val smiles and nods and Alex blushes and Adrian snickers.

“But that’s not all I am, you know?” She shrugs. “Sometimes I like a little lace under the leather. And we’ve got different styles, you and me.” She gestures to Val’s hair cut, her looser clothes, with a grin. “And I love it. Your style. It’s absolutely fantastic. And you look really at home in it. And that’s the thing. You? How you feel, how you are? That’s the only thing that matters. So if she likes you, she’s gotta like your soft butchliness. And who wouldn’t, I mean look at you, you’re perfect.”

Val scoffs and Alex beams at Maggie and Adrian squeezes Val’s knee.

The doorbell rings and Adrian squeals. “Pizza!”

Maggie glances at Alex, and Alex nods with a grin before getting up to get the door.

“Your girl like pizza?” Maggie asks, and Val nods.

“I saved her the last slice last week at the school paper’s party when she was late from class. She was really happy.”
Maggie slaps her own thigh in excitement. “Damn girl, see, you got game! Wanna invite her over? We can watch crappy Netflix movies, and the three of us will check out if she checks you out and it’ll be awesome.”

Val smiles at the thought and pulls her phone out of her back pocket.

“Do you guys do this for all of us? Open up your home like this?”

Alex beams over the small stack of pizza boxes when Maggie looks up at her, and Adrian grins widely, proudly, gratefully, at them both as he cracks open a box and digs in immediately.

“Only to the cool kids,” Maggie teases, and Val nods, and types out a text to her crush, because she’s nervous but she’s perfect just like she is, and what’s there not to like, right, Maggie said so, and also, pizza.

Pizza with new family.

Even if her crush declines to come over, she’s pretty sure it’s going to be a good night.
Alex has been learning how to balance her devotion to Maggie with her devotion to her sister; every Thursday night is reserved for Kara (and the next night if aliens or Cadmus interfere), and every Saturday night is game night with the Superfriends (Sunday night if aliens or Cadmus interfere). Tuesday nights (Wednesdays in case of emergency), they all join Alex and Maggie at the bar.

Maggie comes to game nights, of course — at Kara’s insistence — and Winn thinks, at first, that she’s trying to be accommodating to her sister, that she’s trying to be supportive of Alex living life for herself, for a change.

And she is. She is. He’s never seen Alex and Kara closer than they are now, and it makes his entire being happy.

But Winn also notices other things, other reasons, for Kara to invite Maggie to game night, for Kara to practically drag him out of the DEO (seriously, she nearly dislocated his shoulder that one time) to meet Alex and Maggie for their night at the bar.

Because Kara positively lights up when Maggie smiles at her, blushes profusely and adjusts her glasses when Maggie calls her Little Danvers.

Kara insists on snuggling herself between Alex and Maggie on game night (which usually ends in movie night), and she practically preens when Maggie drapes her arms around both of the Danvers girls.

“Hey, Kara, can I talk to you about something?” he finally asks her, because he’s seen her looking similarly at Lena Luthor and Cat Grant used to fluster her in ways that Snapper just doesn’t.

“What’s up, Winn?” she asks, and he’s glad he hasn’t been drinking.

He glances around the bar for privacy, and he takes a deep, soft breath.
“Listen, um… Kara, you… you’ve been spending a lot of time with Alex and Maggie recently, right? I mean, we all have – “

“Winn, Alex and I are fine, Maggie’s been really great about making sure we get our private sister time in, and I like that Maggie’s part of the Superfriends gang now – Rao, I don’t believe I’m calling us that – and she’s really good to Alex, and Alex is happy, so it’s fine, I’m not – “

“No, no, Kara, that’s not… that’s not exactly what I…” He sighs and squints at her as she adjusts her glasses and looks back at him openly, curiously.

“Kara, remember… remember when you came out to me? As Supergirl?”

Kara blanches slightly at the phrasing, but she nods slowly.

“And I thought you were coming out to me as a lesbian, and you said you’re not gay?”

Kara furrows her brow as she nods, and Winn tries not to comment on the plaid she’s currently rocking.

“You um… Kara, it kind of feels to me like… like you might have a little crush. On your sister’s girlfriend.”

Kara blinks once. Twice. Three times. She adjusts her glasses and she pffts and she looks around the bar and she pffts again and she shoves him in the shoulder lightly.

“What? No. Winn, I told you, I’m not gay – ”

“No, I know that, Kara, but you… you think you might be… bi?” He doesn’t bring up Lena, or Cat, or hell, Lucy, for that matter, because he doesn’t want to ambush her, he doesn’t want to overwhelm her. He wants her to feel supported, not attacked, not cornered. Because Kara Danvers cornered is dangerous. And anyway, he loves her too much to ever want her to feel that way.

Kara stares at him and his heart constricts, because her face is stone, like it was when she found about him, James, and Guardian, and he wants to take it back, he wants to apologize, but then Kara opens her mouth and she buries her head in his shoulder and she groans.

“Oh my Rao, Winn, I have a crush on my sister’s girlfriend what do I do?”

Winn smiles softly and pats her head and raises a hand to assure the other patrons that no, no, she’s fine, she’s just coming out to herself, she’ll be alright in a minute or two.

She leans back from him and looks at him through the fingers covering her face.

“Winn. I’m bi. I – you’re right, I – how could I have not seen it, I – Winn, it – what – Winn.”

“Hey, hey, it’s okay, it’s okay. Me too, you know? And when I realized, it felt like this, too. But listen, hey, it’s okay. You’re gonna be okay. And I know what you’re thinking, Kara, you’re thinking that if you come out now, you’re going to rip focus away from Alex again, just when she’s learning to focus on herself, but you know what? You know what, Kara, coming out is allowed to be about you, just like Alex’s is allowed to be about her. Okay? Hell, she’ll probably be thrilled, you can talk about girls together, and as for Maggie? She’s not the one you’re really in love with, is she, so that’s not gonna be a problem, okay? Everything’s okay. You’re okay. It’s okay, Kara. I love you. Everyone loves you.”

Kara continues staring at her best friend, unmoving, through the gaps in her fingers. She says nothing for a long, long moment, and then she moves her hands away from her face, and she laughs loud, hard, happy. Relieved.

“You’re bi, too?!” she whisper-shouts, and he grins and downs his beer as she leans in to talk more, to explore more, to learn more, about themselves and about each other, and while they do, he makes a note to one day thank Maggie for loosening up not one, but both, Danvers sisters.
Hiya! So I know you closed prompts, but I'm taking this theological ethics class and our lecture was on homosexuality and we're discussing it in our tutorial groups and I feel kinda worthless because all the readings say it's morally wrong to be gay, and the only thing gay Christians can do is either be heterosexual or be abstinent. I'm confident in my sexuality, and I'm not really religious, but sometimes it's hard, y'know? Could you write about Alex or Maggie dealing with this? Thank you :)

“Look Mags, I like you. And I like that Tommy kid. Don’t look at me like that, everyone knows he’s as homosexual as the sky is blue. Just like everyone knows you’re queer as next Tuesday.”

Sixteen year old Maggie furrows her brow at the odd phrase, and Jack shoves her playfully in the shoulder, his pale hands sweaty and his blonde hair slicked to his forehead with sweat, as they continue their job around the school track.

“But it just isn’t right, Mags. You know? And like I said, I like you, so I’m not trying to cause you offense of whatnot. It’s just, I mean look. We live in this town, right, and all of us are good Christians here, right? Even your family.”

Maggie bites her tongue – barely – at the racist aside, and speeds up her run. Jack catches up to her and tosses up his hands.

“Proper form, Whitmore!” their gym coach scolds, and Maggie smirks.

“I’m just saying, Sawyer, it’s right there in the Bible. It’s okay that you’re of the woman-loving persuasion, you know, but you just can’t act on it, Mags. It’s your soul we’re talking about here, like… come on, bet you could find some guy that’s nice enough, girly enough, or just, you know, do what those old spinsters do and get yourself a farm and some cats, huh, they get on just fine.”

Maggie focuses on her running form, focuses on the small white clouds that form with her every exhale, focuses on the fact that Jack is one of the few kids who still even talks to her, and socking him in the face would probably get her both expelled and absolutely no one talking to her. Except Tommy.

She glances at him after a few long strides, because it seems like he’s waiting for her to respond, for her to say something.

She doesn’t.

“It’s just immoral, Mags. Not that you’re immortal, but doing… all that… with other girls? Come on, don’t you just… want to live your best life?”
Maggie speeds up again and she hears Jack groan, but he catches up eventually.

“I do. Wanna live my best life. And that’s what I’m doing, Whitmore. Five!” She shouts their lap number to punctuate her sentence as they pass their coach, and he nods stoically at her.

“Okay, but Sawyer, you’re not worried? About your soul? You’re in church every Sunday, girl, how can you justify that?”

“Plenty of gay Christians who seem to me to be more Christian than the homophobic ones. But question for you, Jack. You know Mary wasn’t a virgin, don’t you?”

Jack stumbles and Maggie smirks but grabs his elbow until he regains his balance.

“It was mistranslated. From the original Aramaic. The word meant young woman. But it got translated somewhere along the way as virgin.”

Jack splutters, and Maggie takes the opportunity to press on.

“And that Sodom and Gomorrah shit?” Jack flinches and Maggie keeps her eyes ahead of her as they pass a group of hissing boys.

“It wasn’t about men sleeping with men, dipstick. It was about men sleeping with little boys. Which, you know, I’d hope the big guy would be upset about.”

“That’s not what the pastor says – ”

“Pastor’s wrong,” Maggie breathes, and slows to a walk. Jack looks relieved as he pants beside her.

“I’m not saying I buy into all this god stuff. But if I did? If I took it as seriously as everyone in this damn hellhole claim to take it? I’d do my homework better. I’d study it harder. I’d read the damn texts and I’d remember that they also say it’s okay to sell your daughters into slavery and that Jesus was a flipping hippie who was friends with sex workers and addicts and, wait for it – gay dudes. I’d use my brain, and, you know, a bit of the heart that Jesus said was so damn important. If I bought into all this stuff. Which, you know, I’m not saying I do. But thanks for worrying about my soul, Jack. I’ll pray for yours, too, how’s that?”

She winks and she shoves his shoulder playfully, and she starts running again.

Because it seems that running is all she ever does, these days. But that’s okay.

It’s okay because she knows exactly the kind of life, what kind of community, she’s running to.
He’s drunk and he’s starting to slur, and James is passing him glasses of water and Alex is tousling his hair and he’s staring at Maggie and Kara, laughing together at the bar as they order another round of root beer, regular beer, and club soda for everyone.

He leans into Alex’s shoulder and she pretends to flinch away from him (but subtly holds him steady) as he points an unsteady finger at her face, his face screwed up in thought.

“Girl, I gotta tell you.” She raises her eyebrows as she looks down at him and fights the smile that’s tugging on her lips as Winn tries to formulate his next sentence. “I think your cop-friend over there has a big crush on you.”

Alex glances at James over the top of Winn’s head and steadies her heart and smirks. “I hope so, Schott. It’d be kinda sad if my girlfriend didn’t have a big crush on.”

James shouts and raises his beer bottle at Alex’s root beer and they spill a little when they clink together but neither of them care because James is thrilled and Alex is ecstatic and Winn… Winn is drunk, and Winn is confused.

“No, nooo no no no no no.” Alex’s wide smile fades faster than James thought was even possible and they both stare at Winn, backing up from Alex’s shoulder now, shaking his head and thrumming the table with the tip of his index finger.

“No no no, see, I vetted her as a friend, I vetted her as a Superfriend, but no one told me I had to vet her as Alex Danvers’s girlfriend. No no no no no no. Unacceptable.”

James is smiling again, now, and Alex’s eyes are shining with relieved tears.

“No, nope, Alex, I’m sorry, she can’t date you yet. I’m not letting her date you until she’s thoroughly vetted, past girlfriends and all that. She’s not gonna break your heart, Alex, I won’t…” He splutters for the right words and Alex tilts her head at him – a habit she’s picking up from Maggie – a bemused smile pulling at her lips. “I won’t permit it.”

Alex jumps slightly when several bottles clink down onto the table, signaling Kara and Maggie’s return from the bar.
“Vet me as much as you need to, Winn. But you’re right. I’m not gonna break her heart. I love her too much for that.”

James awws and Kara squeals and Alex blushes and leans into her girlfriend and Winn frowns.

“Also you’re too terrifying and intimidating. I won’t break her heart because you won’t permit it.”

Winn smiles and nods once, heavily, approvingly.

“She’s passing the Schott Jr. tests so far, Alex.”

“Well that’s a relief, because she’s taking me home tonight and there’s nothing your drunk ass can do about it.”

James whoops and Kara groans laughingly and Maggie catches Winn as he starts stumbling off his stool.

“We’ll save the interrogation for another time,” he tells her as he pats her hand drunkenly, and Maggie laughs gently as she sets him upright.

“I love how much you love her, Winn. I really do.”

“Good. Because it – I – I uncharacteristically have no witty retort. Just – good.”

“Yeah. Yeah, it is.”

Man I need more of Alex taking care of secretly soft Maggie like she's so tough? But bbgirl needs some lovin

Alex watches the way she cradles the phone while she talks to her niece, the way her eyes glass over when she explains that no, no, she can’t come home this weekend, she's in National City, remember, but soon, soon, soon.

And Alex watches the way her shoulders slump because her paycheck isn’t big enough to let her afford soon, soon, soon.

So Alex does some digging and Alex makes some calls, and the next morning, she’s got a round-trip ticket for Maggie to spend the weekend with her niece in Blue Springs.

“Ally,” Maggie rasps, her voice still sleepy, when Alex wakes her with breakfast in bed, presenting her with the printed ticket on a tray along with a single rose, coffee, and waffles.

Maggie’s eyes flood with tears and she shakes her head and she gestures for Alex to take the tray because she needs to stand up, she needs to curl up, she needs to rock herself, she needs to cry.

“I’m sorry, Maggie, I’m sorry, I didn’t mean to overstep, I was just trying to – “

“No, no, Alex, no, that’s not – it’s perfect, you – you’re perfect, I – it just – “ Maggie reaches up to the tray and takes the ticket with shaking fingers, staring at it like she’s staring at the most beautiful nebula she’s ever seen, and when she looks back up at Alex, her eyes stay keep the same disbelieving sense of wonder.

“Why did you do this?”

Alex sets the tray down carefully on the bed next to her and sits, squinting at Maggie and pursing her lips off to the side for a long moment before she strokes Maggie’s hair and speaks.

“You know you’re always telling me I don’t have to push my feelings down, that it’s okay to put myself first. And I’m trying, and it’s… it’s good, it’s great, but Maggie, you… you don’t have to push your feelings down, either. You can put yourself first, too. And I know you can’t afford the trip right now, but I can, and I just… I thought… I wanted to put you first, Maggie. I wanted… I wanted to take care of you, because you… you deserve it, babe. You deserve… everything. Everything good, anyway.”

Maggie shakes her head and blinks out a few tears and swallows harshly and kisses Alex softly, softly, tenderly, gratefully.

“I think I’m in love with you, Alex Danvers.”
Alex smiles and kisses Maggie’s nose.

“Perfect. Because I think I’m in love with you, too, Maggie Sawyer. And um… if we’re all in love and stuff…” She pauses and she squirms happily and Maggie smiles full on because yes, yes, yes, they’re all in love and stuff. “Does that mean I get to feed you waffles in bed?”

Maggie’s smile gets even wider and she snuggles closer to Alex’s body. “If you must.”

And Alex must, so Alex does, and by the way both of them bounce around all day, all their coworkers and friends assume they must have had great sex, but they don’t know that the morning was full of waffles and syrup and giggling and Alex feeding Maggie and Maggie smearing syrup on Alex’s lips while Alex yelped so she could lick it off and stories about Maggie’s niece and excited squeals because thank you, babe, thank you, thank you, thank you, and always, Maggie. Always.

Chapter Summary

anonymous asked:

could you do a fic where maggie uses ice cubes on alex during sex. i have a huge kink for that and i need to see it on these two

It starts with vegan ice cream.

The way that Alex gasps and shudders and freezes momentarily with her eyes closed in that way that she always does when she’s just discovering something she loves, something she’s never experienced before, something she needs more of, more of, more of, when she feels how cold Maggie’s lips are from the vegan ice cream, when she feels that cold on her own lips, on her neck, on her stomach, on every part of her skin.

“Ally,” Maggie rasps, deep in the back of her throat, and the sound makes Alex moan. “Alex, you uh… you like?”

“Yeah. Maggie, I… fuck. Yeah.”

Maggie grins and rests her forehead on Alex’s bare stomach to catch her breath, to remember how to use words.

“You like the… the cold?”

Alex blushes, hard, and turns her face away, and Maggie’s heart sinks and she crawls up Alex’s body so she’s kissing her face, so she’s cooing into her ear, so she’s reassuring her with her body, with her mouth, with her hands, with her heart.

“Alex, no, babe, you don’t… there’s no reason to be embarrassed, babe, I’m so sorry… I was asking… I was asking because… I think it’s hot.”

Alex sneaks a glance up at her, her body more relaxed now, her face somewhat less red.

Maggie grins. “No… pun intended, there.”

Alex laughs, and it’s the best sound Maggie’s ever heard.

“You think it’s hot, Sawyer?”

“I think you’re hot, Danvers.”

“Oh yeah?”

Maggie moans into Alex’s mouth as Alex pulls her down into a searing kiss.

“Why were you asking? Did you uh… did you wanna… do something more?” Alex asks, and her voice is ragged, because she’s hopeful.

“Do you uh… do you think you’d like…” Maggie takes a breath and stares down into Alex’s eyes, pupils dilating, chest heaving slowly. “Do you think you’d like it if I uh… got some ice?”

Alex hisses and writhes under Maggie immediately, and Maggie barely suppresses a groan.

“That a yes, Danvers?”

“Why aren’t you heading to the freezer right now?” Alex practically growls, and Maggie is pressing a kiss to her lips and hopping out of bed faster than Alex had ever seen her move.

“Don’t go anywhere, beautiful,” she calls over her shoulder, and Alex smiles, and leans up on her elbows, and licks her lips, and waits, waits, because god, god, god.

Maggie pads back into the room with two soft hand towels, a bowl of ice cubes, wide eyes, and slightly parted lips.

She kneels on the bed in front of Alex, tucks the towels under either side of Alex’s torso, and runs her tongue slow, slow, slow, over Alex’s stomach. Alex whines and arches her hips and Maggie doesn’t break eye contact with her, not once.

“You good, babe?” she asks, and Alex begs.

Maggie growls and groans and takes an ice cube between her fingers and asks Alex with her eyes again, and Alex begs again, and she traces the ice along the same path her tongue just painted.

Alex screams and slams her palms into the bed and grabs the sheets with her fingers and tosses her head back and bites her lip and begs again, again, again.

“Maggie please, don’t stop, please, please.”

“No, I shouldn’t stop, Danvers?” Maggie’s voice is teasing, but her eyes are warm, because she’s looking up at Alex and she knows she’s never seen anything as beautiful as Alex Danvers with her guard down, Alex Danvers trusting her, Alex Danvers giving her this incredible gift.

“Please, Mags, please,” Alex manages, and Maggie complies.

She spells her name in ice, slow, slow, letter by letter, on Alex’s writhing torso, and she licks the streams of melting water as they drip down Alex’s sides.

She traces patterns up to Alex’s chest, and Alex asks for more, more, more, so Maggie slowly, deliberately, carefully, swirls the ice around both of Alex’s nipples in turn, never touching, not yet, watching her nipples get hard with teasing, with cold, with need, until Alex is whimpering so beautifully that Maggie complies, finally bringing the ice directly onto her nipples before warming them with her lips, with her mouth, with her tongue.

She paints pictures of snow falling and of sunsets and of hearts and of stars and of all the things she wants to do to Alex, all over her inner thighs, all over her stomach, asking Alex and receiving only begging, only yes, yes, please, yes, before she lets the melting ice drip onto her clit, and Alex screams and begs for more and Maggie bites her lip and barely contains a groan and obeys the perfect desires of the perfect woman she loves.

She stops only when there’s only melted water in the bowl she’d brought, when Alex is panting and Alex is spent and Alex is resting with a dazed, contented, safe smile on her relaxed face.
Maggie meticulously kisses the same patterns onto her bare skin that she traced with the ice, and she follows her tongue with soft towels, and whispers – promises, really – of respect, of reverence, of beauty. Of love.

anonymous asked:

turns out I didn't go to sleep and looked for the ask about the fic idea, haha. I actually am enjoying all the dynamic between Kara and Maggie on your fics, they give me life and I need them to have an actual friendship on the show. Here's the plot the other anon suggested and I loved it and you asked to send the reminder about it.

MAGGIE CALLING OUT KARA FOR NOT NOTICING ALEX’S ALCOHOL ISSUES.

She’s late to game night, but Maggie isn’t.

She’s late to game night, and she’s on her way up the stairs to Kara’s apartment when her phone starts buzzing out of control.

Alex, no one’s hurt, everyone’s okay, but you might want to get here as soon as you can.

Um, Alex, I know James just texted you, but seriously. Get here, stat. No invasions or anything, but like. Soon. Please.

Alex sprints up the last stairs and opens Kara’s door to the sound of her girlfriend and her sister’s voices mashing over each other.

“No come on, Kara, I’ve heard Eliza make snide remarks about it, so clearly you all noticed! But no one ever thought to do anything about it?”

“Maggie, she’s a grown woman —”

“Wait a second, wait a second, Little Danvers, I like you a lot, I do, you know I do, I don’t take just anyone to that bowling joint we went to last week, but you can’t seriously be using that argument right now!”

“She is, Maggie, it –”

“Oh, okay, Alex is a grown woman when she needs support and help from her family, but when it comes to how she lives her live in complete denial of her own feelings, in complete denial of her own needs, then she’s, what, just doing right by her family? What about her family doing right by her?”

“Maggie, hey, come on, babe, Kara does right by me all the time –”

“Stay out of this, Alex, this doesn’t concern you!” Kara chimes without looking at her sister, and James, Winn, and Alex all stare at each other, and they all gulp.
“Kara –”

“No, Alex, your sister’s right –”

“But guys, I’m standing right here –”

“Okay, fine, you know what, Al? Fine. Here’s the thing: your sister decided that tonight we’d all have beer instead of root beer, and I –”

“And there are a few bottles of root beer in the fridge for Alex –”

“But it would be so much easier for her if we all –”

“Okay, alright, I get it. Beer, root beer, me, alcohol issues, whatever.” Alex is in DEO mode now, and Kara and Maggie are both shrinking away somewhat, closer together. “Right, so. Kara. Maggie’s right: it would be a lot easier for me if there wasn’t all this alcohol around. But I’m also surrounded by people who care about me. By my family. So I’ll be okay, Maggie. Because, Mags, that’s the thing you don’t know yet about these people: I haven’t always made it so easy for them to love me. Yes, yes, you’re right, living my life completely for Kara, completely for what my parents said I should do? You’re right, that’s not okay, you’re right. But these people? These people who didn’t say anything to me about the alcohol? Maggie, you didn’t know me… before I knew you…”

“Nice one, Alex –”

“Winn!”

“Thank you, James. You didn’t know me, Maggie, I was…” She stops and she sighs and she meets Kara’s warm, wet, supportive eyes, and Kara nods her on softly, lovingly. “I was impenetrable, I was…”

“Downright terrifying.”

“Am I wrong?”

“Winn!”

“Thank you, James. I just…”

Kara takes over, now, and Maggie’s eyes are soft, and her shoulders less tense, and her posture more open.

“Maggie, you opened Alex up in a way none of us have ever seen. She’s happier, she does absurd things now, like giggle. At work.”

Alex blushes and Maggie beams and James and Winn snicker while Kara reaches for Maggie’s hands.

“And something about you – everything about you, Maggie – brought that out of her. And I will always be grateful for you. The first person, probably, to know exactly how to love my sister, how to make her truly happy. How to see the things that we… that I… didn’t want to see. And you’re right, Maggie, you’re right, about the alcohol, and about her independence, and about just… but she’s my sister, Maggie, and you get to call me out, you do, but you don’t get to imply that you’re the only one who loves her or really knows her. Because you’re not.”

Maggie stares into searing blue eyes and she nods slowly, and Alex puts her hands over her mouth as James stands to hold her, as Winn squeezes her arm softly, because Maggie is kissing Kara’s hand and she’s pulling her into a deep, full-bodied hug.

“I know I’m not, Kara. And she loves you, more than I’ve ever seen anyone love anybody. But you know that, don’t you? And you know I would never take her away from you.”

“Promise?” Kara asks as she pulls away, but though she’s still holding Maggie’s hands, she looks at Alex, not Maggie.

“I promise,” Alex chokes, and she brings Kara into her arms, and Kara offers her hand to Maggie while her other arm wraps around Alex.

And it’s a nice moment, it’s a healing moment, it’s a perfect moment.

Until James, Winn, and Alex realize that this bonding moment at the start of game night means that Kara and Maggie are going to start teaming up for everything, in every round, in every game, from Mario Kart to Monopoly.

And against Kara Zor-el and Maggie Sawyer, NCPD as a unified front, none of the others stand a chance.
It starts in bio lecture.

Because bio is amazing, bio is incredible, bio is everything.

But this lecture? This lecture is too damn boring, this lecture is too damn easy, and the girl sitting in the row in front of and slightly below her is chewing her pen and doodling different kinds of neurons in her notebook, and there’s a leather jacket slung over the back of her chair and she is fine.

And, if the state of her notes – and her doodles – is any indication, she isn’t bored because she doesn’t care about enzymes. She’s bored, it seems, for the same reason Alex is – because this shit is too easy.

So Alex does something she’s never done in her life: she passes a note in class.

Hey – sorry to bother, but you look about as bored as I am. Bio’s great – I can tell you think so too, your dendrites are awesome – but this stuff is too easy. Wanna keep each other occupied? What’s your name?

She rips the page full out of her notebook and tosses it down onto the girl’s desk. The girl stiffens, hard. Stiffens like this isn’t her first time getting passed a note in class, and like it hasn’t been a pleasant experience in the past. She glances up to see where it came from, and her eyes – god, her eyes, her eyes are gorgeous – change somewhat when she meets Alex’s gaze. She’s still wary, but now, maybe something else, too. Maybe something hopeful?

She opens the note skeptically, slowly. And she huffs out a smirk as she reads it.

Alex grins down at her and her heart races as the girl scrawls something back.

Her fingers brush Alex’s as she reaches back with the paper without turning around, note in her hand, and Alex gulps because she swears electricity passes between them. She wonders if the girl felt it, too, and her normally steady hands tremble uncharacteristically as she reopens the note. She grins as she reads.

Thank god, someone who knows a neuron when they see one. Name’s Sawyer. Maggie Sawyer. Yours?
Alex doesn’t hesitate.

Maggie’s a beautiful name. Definitely suits you. You know I could write it on my calculator. And mine’s Danvers. Alex Danvers.

Maggie full out chuckles this time, and Alex blushes as Maggie writes.

Their fingers brush again when Maggie passes the piece of paper back, and Alex could swear she did it on purpose.

You this smooth with all the girls, Danvers?

Only the ones who’re made of as much copper and tellurium as you are.

Maggie laughs out loud this time as she turns around and flashes Alex with a dimpled smile. Alex’s heart stops, and she doesn’t care that the kids sitting near them start to glare.

CuTe, Danvers. Very CuTe.

Alex blushes, and Alex squirms in her seat, and Alex knows she’s a goner, because Maggie got the joke, got the line, perfectly, perfectly, perfectly.

She holds the door for her as they leave the lecture together forty-three minutes later, by unspoken agreement, and they realize – as they talk through their schedules for the term that started just yesterday – that they’re in the same lab, too.

They’re dating within a couple of weeks – because Alex passed her a note in lecture (their rapidly-developing tradition) that asked if Maggie was her appendix, because she really wanted to take her out – but that doesn’t mean that Alex stops with the lines.

“Maggie, how many protons do you have?”

“Probably several billion, Danvers,” Maggie answers without looking up at Alex, her head buried in her physics text book during one of their library dates.

“No, I think you only have eleven.”

Maggie furrows her brow and tilts her head and looks up slowly and groans with a growing smile. “Oh no, Alex.”

“Because you’re sodium fine.”

“Jesus Christ, woman, you have no nerd limits,” Maggie says, but what she means is you’re adorable.

Sawyer, is it getting hot in here? Alex scrawls during bio lecture, and Maggie looks askance at Alex’s sweatshirt and knows that she most certainly is not warm. She smirks and she writes a question mark and she waits for Alex’s next move.

Must be our bond forming, Alex writes, and Maggie snorts.

Nerd, she writes, but what she means is I love that you care about making me laugh, I love that you care about complimenting me.

“If I were an enzyme, I’d be DNA helicase,” Alex murmurs in her ear when they finally have Maggie’s dorm room to themselves, and Maggie laughs breathily as she pulls Alex by the belt loops toward the bed.

“Wanna unzip my genes, Danvers?” she asks, but her heart is racing with more than just adrenaline, with more than just lust, because Alex is laughing and Alex is touching her gently, gently, gently, and Alex is putting her hand under Maggie’s head as Maggie lays down, and Alex is the biggest nerd she’s ever met, but she’s her nerd, and Maggie wouldn’t have it any other way.

Chapter Summary

anonymous asked:

Heya Mum (Oh boy i hope i don't set the whole Mum/Mom discourse into motion). I know you're super swamped with asks rn but here me out here. SOOOO today is my birthday (Just turned 21!!! Turn Vertical!!!) and i just really wanted a fluffy Sanvers birthday scene (Either can be celebrating) - but only if you feel up to it, if not that's completely fine. This is my first time intruding anyones asks tbh but I digress. Thank you for all the love you shine unto us, it makes our days that much brighter

She doesn’t tell Alex that her birthday is coming up.

She doesn’t tell her, because it doesn’t occur to her: it’s never been a priority for anyone she’s dated before. She’s never been a priority for anyone she’s dated before.

And in school, before there was dating, there were white kids, straight kids, who glared and who took her lunch money and who would make a regular day ten times worse when it was supposed to be her special day.

So she doesn’t tell her, but Alex knows anyway, because Alex is observant and Alex may or may not have had Winn hack into Maggie’s file because she’s gotta have a birthday sometime and she knows Maggie, knows that she’s not the type to tell her, to expect anything.

But she should expect something – she should expect everything – because Alex notices, and Alex pays attention, and Alex dotes on her.

So the morning of Maggie’s birthday, Alex gets up for her run extra early. She says nothing out of the ordinary as she kisses Maggie’s temple, as she makes sure she’s snuggled tight into the sheets. She says nothing as she tiptoes back into the apartment an hour later, sneaking extra quietly because she has extra things in tow. Lots of extra things.

Half a dozen helium balloons – one in the shape of a motorcycle – and pancakes and syrup and eggs and coffee from Maggie’s favorite bodega, and, to her own surprise, a stuffed animal puppy with wide, excited eyes and tongue hanging out.

Stealthy as she tries to be, the motorcycle balloon knocks onto the door frame, and Maggie sits up groggily.

“Al?” she asks, her voice scratchy and thick with sleep.

“Morning birthday girl,” Alex smiles as she drops everything on the counter and pads into the bedroom – her bedroom, rapidly becoming their bedroom.

“Because,” Alex explains, pushing Maggie back gently by the shoulders, straddling her and kissing her soundly as Maggie’s groggy confusion turns into a sleepy, perfect smile. “The world became a much better place the day you came into it, Maggie Sawyer. And that needs to be celebrated, don’t you think?”

Maggie sighs breathily and arches her body up sleepily as Alex traces kisses from her lips down her jawline and her neck.

“Alex, you… you didn’t have to go to any trouble – “

Alex stills and leans back to look down at Maggie with a furrowed brow and anger at past lovers in her eyes. “Maggie, celebrating you? Treating you like you deserve to be treated? Why would that be any trouble?”

Maggie arches an eyebrow and says nothing, because she can’t say anything, because this must be what birthdays are supposed to feel like, and she glances over Alex’s shoulder and sees the motorcycle balloon and laughs and squeals like it’s Christmas morning and flips Alex off of her and pads across the apartment to see what else Alex got her.

Alex laughs as she sits back up, as she watches, as she follows, and she checks her phone to make sure that Kara and the others are still on for tonight.

Because as thrilled as Maggie is with the balloons and breakfast and stuffy, Alex Danvers hasn’t even begun yet.

There are flowers from her girlfriend on Maggie’s desk at the precinct when she gets there, and all her colleagues know, and all her colleagues thump her on the back and pile bottles of wine and hockey tickets and Supergirl action figures (from their kids) and lesbian sex dice (from her teasing, laughing work partner) onto her desk throughout the day, and Maggie knows exactly who is responsible for making sure everyone knew and shook down with gifts.

Lunch – from her favorite vegan restaurant across town – is delivered to her in the field by one Adrian Rodriguez, the bill footed by one Alex Danvers, Adrian’s absence from physics class excused by Alex Danvers, who has agreed to tutor him in everything he’s missing and pay his train fare so he didn’t have to put out a dime for anything, except for the comic book he’s gotten made for Maggie, tracing the story of her and him and a bunch of the other queer kids she’s helped out and befriended over the years, and Maggie tries not to cry because she’s at work, dammit, but she cries anyway.

And Adrian accompanies to the bar that night – “no alcohol for you, mister underage” – and Maggie expects it to just be Alex, but she should have known better by now, because not only is it Alex: it’s Alex and Kara and M’gann and James and Winn and J’onn, but it’s also her sister and her niece and her favorite cousin and her best (and only) friend from back home.

And it’s all her favorite music blasting out of the bar speakers and it’s a massive vegan rainbow cake and it’s streamers and it’s her girlfriend decked out in a tight red dress, and Maggie knows exactly what she’s wearing underneath it and exactly how her last birthday gift for this year is going to be given to her, and she licks her lips and she has no words for her perfect girlfriend, but Alex doesn’t need them because her smile is enough, and she tries to hold in her tears but she doesn’t have to, doesn’t have to, because this is her family, her family, her family, and – for once – everyone just wants to celebrate her.

Chapter Summary

anonymous asked:

But imagine Maggie finding out about Kara almost getting killed and chewing her out for it but also praising her for protecting her girl.

“Tell me, Maggie,” Alex says as she leans against the kitchen counter with a bottle of root beer, squinting slightly at her girlfriend, who’s barely said a word all evening.

“Tell you what, Danvers?” She tries to smile and she tries to inject bravado into her voice, but she fails, and Alex knows.

“Go talk to her, Maggie. It’s okay.”

Maggie looks up and blinks and shakes her head and blinks again. “I… Al, it – what are you talking about?”

“You’ve got this pit in your stomach, and you’ve had it since you got that call about Lena Luthor this morning, and it got worse when they made you the one to go arrest her, and it got even worse when Kara was there, and it hasn’t gone away. And it’s getting worse, now, just you thinking about it. So go, Maggie. Talk to my sister. I’m not the only one whose days of pushing down my feelings are over.”

Maggie gulps and tries not to blink, because if she blinks, she’ll spill tears, and she’s not okay with that right now.

“But you… made dinner!”

“And it’ll be here when you get back,” Alex says softly as she kisses Maggie’s nose and presses her jacket and Triumph key gently into her hands.

“You’re not mad at me?”

“Maggie, why… why would I be mad at you?”

“You made dinner, and I’m not happy like I should be, and – “

“No, no, Mags, you shouldn’t be anything. You don’t have to live on a script, babe. You feel what you feel. Now go. James and Winn are with her, so be ready for more people than just Kara.”

Maggie has to turn away because she can’t believe that Alex notices, knows, understands, cares, that Maggie has to actively prepare for interacting with people.

“Should I bring potstickers as an offering?” she asks on her way out the door.

Alex squints and grins and tilts her head slightly. “Couldn’t hurt.”
Maggie laughs softly, but her hands don’t start shaking until she gets to Kara’s door. There’s laughter inside and Maggie has the sudden instinct to run, to not intrude.

But she knocks anyway.

It’s James who opens the door, and he grins down at her and gestures her inside. “She’s not mad at you, you know. Just mad,” he whispers, and Maggie grimaces her thanks at him.

“Hey, it’s Alex Danvers’s woman! What brings you by, Maggie?” Winn greets jovially as Kara just stares. Maggie somehow unsticks her tongue from the parched roof of her mouth and forces herself to speak.

“I um… I actually wanted to know if I could borrow Kara for a minute. I… I brought potstickers.”

“Good plan,” Winn winks at her, and Kara crosses her arms over her chest.

“What’d you want to talk to me about, Maggie?” Kara asks, and her voice is guarded, but not entirely hostile. Maggie glances at James and Winn, but it’s clear that Kara wants them to stay, so Maggie puts the potstickers on the counter and rings her hands and curls her hair out of her face.

“Kara, listen, I just wanted to say that I’m sorry. About Lena Luthor. I know you believed in her, and I know you were right, and I just want you to know that I fought with my captain, I tried to get him to look deeper into the footage we were sent, and he did, but our lab is no DEO, and I… it’s the part of my job I hate, Kara, one of the many, and I just… I’m sorry.”

Kara says nothing, just studies Maggie’s face carefully. James stares between them nervously and clears his throat.

“Well, I mean, except for that mishap with you almost getting yourself blown up to save her, everything turned out alright, right? She’s safe now, vindicated — “

“Wait, you what?” Maggie splurts, and Winn cuffs James lightly on the shoulder.

“Alex didn’t… tell you?”

“She told me Kara rescued Lena, not that – nearly blown up? Kara, do you have any idea what Alex would do if you died? What it would mean for her, for them, for the whole damn city? For me? Kara, you need to be more careful, you need to wait for backup – “

“Lena would have died if I waited for backup – “

“No one’s life is worth yours, Kara, you can’t just be so blase about all this, you’re not indestructible!”

“I know that, Maggie. I know that.”

Kara’s voice is steel and Maggie’s eyes are liquid, and they regard each other with a ferocity, with a passion, with a protectiveness, that makes James and Winn hold their breath.

Maggie looks away first, and she crosses the room to take Kara’s hands into her own. Kara accepts them and swipes her thumb across the back of Maggie’s hands.

Acceptance. Because Kara knows exactly what Maggie’s going to say before she says it.

“I would’ve gone in without backup to save Alex, too. You know I would’ve.”
Kara smiles and squeezes Maggie’s hands. “I know you would. And she would for you, too, you know.”

“You’d better not let her.”

“Damned if I could stop her!”

They both laugh, and they don’t let go of each other’s hands. Maggie lowers her voice so much that Kara has to lean down to hear her.

“Good on you for protecting your girl, Kara. And good on you for believing in her. Just… just be safe, okay?”

“My…” Kara straightens up and pffts and reddens and takes one of her hands away from Maggie’s to furiously adjust her glasses and pfft again.

“Lena’s my friend.”

Maggie tilts her head and nods slowly, and takes a deep breath, because she’s going to have to do this with another Danvers girl, now isn’t she?

“Potstickers?” she asks, not wanting to push too hard.

Kara lights up and unexpectedly kisses Maggie on the cheek.

“Mine mine mine mine!” she squeals as she scampers across the room to tear into the potstickers.

“So, you can challenge Kara and survive, and you bring her potstickers. Fundamental makings of a Superfriend, Maggie,” James nudges her shoulder, and Winn nods enthusiastically, and Maggie? Maggie just beams.

You don't need to do this prompt now, but I headcanon that Alex is a really good artist? Like during her childhood, art was her escape from her mother's abuse? So maybe Maggie walks in, sees Alex drawing, and asks to see her art so Alex lets her flip through the pages and she lands on a page of sketches Alex has done of her and Alex explains that "I didn't have a camera, but I do have a good memory so I drew the moments I thought you looked the most beautiful" and Maggie is S H O O K

Precision has always been important to her.

Extremely important.

So when she sketches, it always needs to be as realistic, as alive, as a pencil can make it.

And pencils, she’s discovered, can bring so much life.

When she was a child, her main muse was the ocean, was the crabs she would watch on the jetty, the sandcrabs she’d scoop up in her hands before letting them go each time the surf came crashing onto the shore.

When Kara came into her life, it was Kara. Kara flying, Kara dancing, Kara laughing.

She still draws Kara, and she’s added J’onn and James and Winn to her repertoire.

Her most recent addition – and her most intimate – is Maggie.

Maggie sleeping with the light dripping through the slatted blinds pouring onto her face, her limbs and hair all askew, her lips very slightly smiling, like she’s dreaming something good, something safe, something warm, something happy.

Maggie on her motorcycle, head turned back at a stoplight to look at Alex, her smile radiating through the protection of her helmet.

Maggie under her motorcycle, hands greasy and hair tied up and tongue sticking slightly out of her mouth as she makes her repairs.

Maggie pouring coffee in the morning, sleep and sex still in her eyes, peacefulness in her entire stance, love in her every pore.

Maggie laying on her stomach on Alex’s bed, knees bent, socks half-on, half-off, sprawled out like it’s her own bed – because it is, it is, it is – and reading, her eyes intense, her body transported to whatever fantasy realm she’s reading about this time.
Alex is putting the finishing touches on this last one when Maggie walks in the room, and Alex jumps and slams the book closed. Maggie puts her hands up in surrender and stops in her tracks.

“Hey, Danvers, I’m sorry, I didn’t mean to scare you – “

“No, no, it – it’s fine, you’re fine.”

Maggie tilts her head and waits, and Alex stares up at her, considering her, chewing the inside of her cheek, and then she smiles softly, shyly.

“I was drawing.”

Maggie beams and she approaches again, kneeling in front of Alex’s chair and putting her hands on her knees.

“Babe, you never told me you draw.”

Alex smiles and squirms and Maggie knows she’s in love.

“You… wanna see?”

Maggie nods eagerly and she starts at page one, and she gasps as she flips through page after page of beauty, page after page of intimacy. Page after page of the people Alex Danvers loves most, as Alex sees them, as Alex knows them, as Alex feels them.

“Ally,” Maggie sighs, and Alex blushes furiously. “These are beautiful.”

She freezes when she gets to the first drawing of her. Freezes, and stiffens, and Alex splutters.

“I’m sorry if it’s weird, I just… I have a good memory, and I wanted to draw you in the moments you look most beautiful, I’m sorry if it’s weird, I – “

But Maggie is carefully putting Alex’s sketchbook to the side and she’s crawling into Alex’s lap and she’s kissing her, kissing her, kissing her.

“I’m wild about you, Alex Danvers, you know that?”

Alex blushes even harder and Maggie beams and swallows awed tears.

“Yeah?”

“Yes. Always.”
She watches the Danvers girl from a distance, because she’s beautiful and she’s the radiantly intelligent and she’s a massive nerd and she’s just got this incredibly sexy haircut and she’s fiercely protective of that blonde freshman girl and she’s everything Maggie wants and she’s nothing Maggie deserves.

So she just watches. “Not in the creepy way,” she defends herself to her roommate, who’s sharp as a whip and doesn’t miss a thing. “No, come on, Lena. We have classes together, that’s all. And she lives just down the hall, so of course I’m gonna see her all the time – “

“Yes. Exactly, Maggie. She lives right down the hall. So why don’t you go talk to her?”

Maggie clams up and Maggie takes a deep breath, and Lena knows, and nods, and slides her the half-eaten box of donuts.

But it turns out that she doesn’t have to bury herself in late night donuts and laughs with her roommate, and it turns out she doesn’t have to work up the courage to go up to her, doesn’t have to practice what she’ll say over and over again.

Because the next morning, Alex Danvers comes up to her on the quad.

Her voice is higher than it is in class, and it makes Maggie fall even harder, because lowering the octave of your voice to make sure you’re heard is a strategy she knows far too well herself.

She stares and she splutters because she realizes, all too late, that Alex is holding her hand out to shake hers, and Maggie clears her throat, and gulps, and tries to remember that she learned the alphabet many years ago and really should have a better grasp on it by now.

“Yeah. Maggie. Uh – hi.”

Nice, Sawyer, she scolds, but Alex doesn’t seem to notice. In fact, Alex seems to…like it.
“So um. Maggie. I noticed… I noticed you’re always the only one other than me to actually get the right answers in chem lab.”

Maggie looks down and grins, because Alex Danvers noticed me, Alex Danvers noticed me, Alex Danvers noticed me.

“So I thought, you know, we could study together. If you want. Keep each other company. During… studying. And there’s this great pinball bar I know, in town. We could… study. Together. And maybe play some pinball.”

Alex’s spluttering – Alex-best-at-everything-at-all-times-Danvers’s spluttering – somehow makes Maggie like her even more.

“You asking me out, Danvers?”

Alex blushes and shifts her feet and wrings her hands and pffts a little.

“Do you want me to be, Sawyer?”

“Heads up!!!” The shout from the quad makes both girls jump, and they both reach up to catch the football spiraling chaotically their way. Alex’s hands close around it first, and Maggie thinks to be embarrassed because of her height, but Alex is beaming and Alex caught the damn thing and fuck is Maggie more than a little turned on.

“Watch where you’re throwing, Schott!” Alex laughs as she chucks the ball back.

“Oh, Winn didn’t throw that! Winn couldn’t’ve thrown that, are you kidding?” a boy that Maggie thinks is called Jimmy calls, and Winn laughs but doesn’t deny it.

“Friends of yours?” Maggie asks as Alex extends her arm to her, and Maggie nearly swoons, and loops her arm through Alex’s to steady herself.

“Of my sister’s,” Alex explains as she waves laughingly as James and Winn both whoop on seeing Maggie and Alex’s arms linked.

“On your way to bio lecture?” Maggie asks, and Alex grins down at her.

“You too, right?” Maggie nods because she’s forgotten about words again.

Alex opens doors for her and Alex sits next to her and Alex scribbles little notes to her in the margins of her otherwise extremely detailed, extremely meticulous notebook.

It’s been two hours since Alex first revealed that she even knew who Maggie was, and already Maggie feels more cared for, more respected, more fun, than she had in any of her relationships – if you could call them that – in high school. And bio lecture had never quite been this incredible.

Chapter Summary

anonymous asked:

I know u said no prompts unless they were super important, but as a bi girl who's been assaulted this would mean so much. Could u pls have A + M on a night out, but M gets nervous about holding hands on the walk home past so many bars. Everything's so shiny to A that she doesn't get it and gets annoyed when M tries to explain that queer girls need to be careful. But at home M cries for 1st time and tells A about the times drunk guys have sexually harassed or hurt her when she's kissed in public.

Alex wants to touch Maggie. All the time.

She’s handsy at home, handsy in the bar, hell, she’s even starting to be handsy at the DEO (much to the relief of the other agents, because now she’s using her hands to skim her fingers across her girlfriend’s lower back, not threaten her soldiers with bodily harm).

And Maggie absolutely loves it.

Loves how Alex’s arms make her feel safe, how Alex’s lips make her feel warm, how Alex’s fingers make her feel hot beyond compare.

But at night, out and about? Strolling through town, walking past straight bars crawling with white straight men?

No no no.

And Alex doesn’t notice the jeers, doesn’t notice the open laughter and the wolf whistles and the suggestions as to where she and Maggie should spend their night, and doing exactly what.

She’s DEO trained and she’s sharp as a knife, but she’s also in love, for the first time, and so she doesn’t notice.

But Maggie? Maggie does.

She doesn’t take her hand out of Alex’s – she refuses to give in, no matter what her body is telling her to do, no matter what her instincts are telling her to do, no matter what her racing heart and pounding ears are telling her to do – but she stiffens, her smile falters, and that?

That, Alex notices.

“What is it, what’s wrong?” Alex stops walking, right in front of a sports bar with men with beer on their breath and cigarettes in their lips loitering out front, and Alex focuses on Maggie, and Alex is, for once in her life, oblivious.

Maggie tugs Alex along, forward, and it’s the first time she’s ever surprised Alex with one of her touches – she’s always so careful about asking, about making sure – and Alex is the one who recoils this time.

“What the hell, Maggie? Did I do something, did I – “

“Alex, no, babe, it’s nothing, can we just – can we keep walking, please? Please?”

Alex doesn’t understand, and her eyes are narrowed, but Maggie’s eyes are wide and her voice is somewhat panicked and Alex calms, and Alex follows.

They lapse into silence on the rest of their walk home, and Alex doesn’t ask, because she’s convinced it’s her, that she’s done something, that Maggie’s upset with her, that she failed, that she’s messed it up, and she just wants to delay the inevitable as long as she can.

Maggie only speaks when Alex turns to her in the doorway of her apartment. “Do you want to come in?” she asks, and Maggie bristles because of course she does, because Alex hasn’t had to ask in weeks; it’s just gone unspoken.

“Not if you don’t want me to,” aren’t the words Maggie had planned to say, but they’re the words that come out of her mouth, and she regrets it instantly.

“I’m sorry, that was mean, I didn’t – Alex, I’m sorry, I’m not trying to fight with you, I – “

“Then what are you trying to do, Maggie? Because I’ve been going over it and over it in my head, and I can’t think of what I did wrong, I… was it because I was talking too much? Was I being selfish, was I – “

“What? No, Alex, it has nothing to do with you, I… can I come in?”

The tension seeps out of Alex’s shoulders at Maggie’s soft request, and she gives her a small smile.

“Always,” she says, and she hopes that’s what Maggie wants, because Kara is working tonight and god she doesn’t know what she’ll do alone if Maggie breaks up with her or something.

Maggie steps inside and wrings her hands and curls the side of her hair with trembling fingers and she paces, paces, paces, and she cracks open two bottles of root beer and she paces and wrings her hands some more. Alex just stares and Alex just waits, waits for her fate to be delivered.

And when Maggie finally speaks, Alex’s heart breaks, but not for the reason she’d expected it to.

“I love that you hold my hand, babe. I love that you always put your arm around me when we walk, that you kiss me all the time. I love it. I just… Sometimes, we’ll be in places where… where that kind of affection scares me. I…” Maggie takes a long swig of root beer and shifts to the couch, and Alex sits next to her quietly, their thighs touching. Alex hesitates before putting her hand on Maggie’s leg, and Maggie offers a small smile and a nod before she continues speaking.

“When I was a kid, the first girlfriend I had – not really a girlfriend, I guess, she was just in it to… I don’t know, use me as her straight girl science experiment or something – I was cocky. I was stupid. I held her hand, I kissed her in public. And the guys in town… didn’t like that. Captain of the football team decided I needed to be taught how to keep my dirty hands to myself.”

Alex swallows and her hand shakes slightly on Maggie’s thigh, because she’s never wanted to murder anyone quite this badly.

“I was small, he was five nine. Turns out he didn’t actually want me to keep my hands to myself, just off pretty blonde white girls.”

She’s not looking at Alex, but she knows Alex is looking at her, and somehow, her gaze wraps her up, makes her safe. Makes her warm, makes her loved. She keeps talking.

“And in college, I figured I was out of Blue Springs, right, it was a college town, things would be better, people would actually know that brown lesbians exist, like, great right? Except it wasn’t, because I walked past this bar – this sports bar – “

Comprehension dawned on Alex and her heart shatters and guilt swarms through her stomach. Maggie’s not looking at her, still, but Maggie knows, and she turns and puts her hand to Alex’s cheek.

“You didn’t do anything wrong, Ally. I was walking past this sports bar and holding this girl’s hand, and basically the same thing happened as it did when I was a kid, except by college I had a black belt and was a bit stronger than I was at 15. But it still… Anyway, my point… my point is, it makes me nervous. Being affectionate with women. In certain places.”

Alex nods and refuses to let tears leak out, because this is about Maggie right now.

“I’m sorry,” she rasps, and Maggie shakes her head firmly.

“I told you, you didn’t do anything wr – “

“That’s not what I’m sorry about.”

Maggie goes silent and looks down and after a long, long moment, she lets herself tilt sideways into Alex’s body. Slow, reluctant tears slip down Maggie’s face and her shoulders tremble violently, so Alex whispers to her and Alex kisses her hair and Alex pulls her into her lap and holds her, holds her, holds her.

“No one’s ever gonna hurt you again,” Alex whispers after a long while, and Maggie shakes her head and pulls back slightly so she can look Alex in the face.

Her mascara is smeared and her eyes are red, and Alex has never seen her look so perfect.

“You can’t promise that,” Maggie croaks, and Alex’s heart breaks, because she knows Maggie’s right.

She swallows rage and she swallows hatred, and she pours love and devotion and pure, pure protection into the kiss she presses to Maggie’s nose.

“How about I just promise to always be by your side, whether we’re holding hands or not?”

Maggie smiles slowly, then, mischievously, then.

“You proposing or something, Danvers?”

Alex returns the smile and pulls Maggie back into her embrace.

“I love you, Maggie Sawyer. I love you so damn much.”

Chapter Summary

Anonymous asked:

So here’s a prompt if it tickles your fancy: Sanvers having a conflict about race. Or privilege, rather? Being in a relationship with a white person can be pretty hard? Because of privileges and (usually, hopefully unintentional and not ill-willed) cluelessness about what it’s like to move through the world when you’re not white. I’ve never seen it dealt with in fic and it’d be cool to read.

Alex always readily agreed – nods her head, says things like yeah and J’onn’s right and James has a point – whenever someone explicitly comments on racism. She’s always supportive, always a little too ready to nod her head in agreement, but she’s also always a bit… clueless.

And it feels a bit more like Alex is agreeing because she’s always so ready to defend her friends, rather than because she necessarily… gets it.

Because she got the part where Maggie said she grew up non-straight in Blue Springs, Nebraska. She got it and she’ll recognize homophobia and she’ll stiffen and she’ll be ready to punch someone into last Tuesday.

But she didn’t quite get the part where Maggie said she grew up non-white in Blue Springs, Nebraska.

Because Maggie will get up extra early some days for court to defend brown kids whose cases have crossed her desk, and Alex doesn’t understand.

“But I thought you said he did have a gun in his glove compartment.”

“He did, Al, but it was his father’s car and it was licensed to his father and that’s not even the point, the point is that they never should have been in his glove compartment to begin with, they never should have forced him out of his car to begin with, hell, they never should have pulled him over to begin with.”

And Alex will sigh and nod and go quiet and make Maggie coffee and Maggie will seethe because she hates having to explain things like this in her own home, but at least Alex is asking (instead of accusing her of caring about work more than their relationship), which is more than she can say for the other white girls she’s dated.

Because some nights, Alex will come over and Maggie is positively tearing into the punching bag in her living room, Nas blasting throughout the house, and Alex doesn’t say anything, but she looks confused when Maggie huffs out between jabs and crosses and uppercuts how much zero tolerance policies in schools just seek out and punish Black girls, and Maggie doesn’t want her to look confused, like she’s hearing this for the first time, Maggie wants her to get it, intuitively, and she doesn’t, so Maggie punches harder.
Because some afternoons, Alex will come to the precinct and ask why Maggie’s captain talks to her so differently than he talks to the other women in the precinct, do they have a difficulty history together, and Maggie swallows the answer about his white ass and just kind of shrugs until Alex lets it go, but it eats into Maggie’s stomach all afternoon and only Alex’s smile, ironically, fixes it. Somewhat.

And one evening, when they’re out in a club and James and Maggie sort of huddle in a corner together and Alex can’t figure out why, Maggie’s grateful when James is the one to say all these white folks, Alex, it could be a Klan meeting up in here and Maggie looks down at her feet because she doesn’t want to see Alex’s face fall, doesn’t want to see Alex’s eyes flood with tears, because she’d picked the venue, and it was a gay spot and wasn’t that good enough and she’d failed and Maggie feels badly because Maggie loves her and doesn’t want her to feel guilty, doesn’t want her to spiral, but damn does she not want to be the one to have to pick up those pieces right now.

It’s that night that Maggie first really says anything about it, that night when Maggie decides that she’s not going to treat Alex like the other white girls she’s dated: allowing them to ignore their privilege, to ignore the ways they steamroll over Maggie, ignore the ways their lack of getting it makes her constantly feel crazy in her own home.

She’s not going to let Alex not learn, because she loves her, she loves her, she loves her, and she’s starting to trust, somehow, that Alex loves her enough back to put in the work on herself that Maggie needs her to put in.

“Babe,” Maggie begins, gently, softly, her hands on Alex’s hips after Alex slinks off her jacket and opens the fridge for some water.

“Are you mad at me?” Alex asks immediately, because they hadn’t spoken about it at the club, they’d just danced, danced, Maggie being extra watchful and Alex not noticing the filthy looks and raised eyebrows they got from white girls who think they own oppression because they’re lesbians.

Maggie sighs and rests her forehead on Alex’s shoulder. “No. No, Ally, I’m not mad, but I… I need that to not be the point.”

Alex turns and furrows her brow and waits, and Maggie’s heart flutters because Alex is not going to yell, and Alex is not going to blame her, and Alex is not going to reject her, and Alex is not going to tell her that she’s making things up and not everything is about race, not, not, not, right?

“There are ways I move in the world that… that you don’t. You could stroll into that club, or hell, anywhere, with Kara, and two beautiful white women? God, Alex, you have all the privilege in the world. All of it. And I… I have a lot of it, too. I can pass sometimes, and I hate it, I hate that, but I… listen, Al, I… I’m not going to teach you about your white flipping privilege. I don’t want to have to, babe. I want to come home and know that the woman I love is going to understand without me having to explain to her, I want the woman I love to get it. That doesn’t mean you can’t mess up and it doesn’t mean you can’t ask me things, but just… you gotta stop treating racism like it only exists in big bad individual people and hella obvious, okay?”

Alex fidgets and sighs, and Maggie’s heart hammers.

“So you’re saying you love me.”

Maggie can’t help the radiant smile that pushes it’s way onto her face, because Alex is ridiculous, and Alex is right.

“And you’re saying you want me to start being less of a ‘post-racial’ jackass.”
Maggie arches an eyebrow and tilts her head. “I’m impressed you know that word, Danvers.”

“I’ve been trying, Sawyer. Because I love you too. And I’m gonna figure out how to love you better. I promise.”

Chapter Summary

anonymous asked:

When you have the time to write again, remember we all loved the college AU. For real, pleas do it again sometime.

She doesn’t normally do parties, but M’gann had wanted a wingwoman, so she’s found herself claiming the one beat up bean bag chair in the corner by the kitchen and smirking over her beer as M’gann talks it up with this boy Maggie had done her duty of introducing her to.

Her eyes shift lazily across the room until they settle on a very freshman-looking blonde with glasses and wide eyes, standing near the bathroom and shaking her head repeatedly with a frazzled-looking smile as a handful of frat boys try to put red solo cups into her hand.

Maggie is up and in the thick of things before M’gann even hears her say she’ll be right back, and she’s straightening her plaid shirt and drawing herself up to her full height, which still only brings her up to these boys’ chests, but what the hell, this kid is a freshmen if she ever saw one and judging by the way she’s furiously adjusting her glasses, she’s never had to deal with pressure from senior college boys – or anyone, for that matter – to drink.

“Problem, gentlemen?” Maggie asks, and they sneer down at her, now. The blonde girl shakes her head at Maggie, concerned, but Maggie ignores her for now.

“Oh come on, Sawyer, the one time you actually come out – hehe, hey, see what I did there? – to a party like the rest of the world, you figure the best thing to do is ruin our fun?”

“Well that’s just the thing, man, I don’t care all that much about ruining your fun. It’s this kid’s fun I’m worried about – and she’s a kid, guys, come on, hey, you’re a kid, right – ”

“I’m a freshman!” the girl pouts, and Maggie hides a smirk.

“Right, exactly, a kid. And you know what, fuck man, even if she wasn’t a kid, she fucking said no. So back the fuck up.”

“Or what?”

Maggie doesn’t flinch as she stares up at the senior boys, her fingers twitching, ready, as her thumbs rest confidently on her belt loops.

“Kara, what the hell? I thought you said you weren’t coming to this thing, I told you it – what’s going on here?”

The bottom drops of out Maggie’s stomach, then, because the most beautiful girl she’s ever seen – short hair, glasses, thin lips but god, soft, soft, soft – is storming up to them, putting her hands on the shoulders of the blonde girl (Kara, apparently) protectively.
“These guys were trying to get me to drink, and this girl was defending me, I didn’t think I was gonna come, but I got done studying early and I thought you were in the lab and I missed you, Alex,” Kara explains quickly, so that the new girl doesn’t include Maggie in the list of people she’s about to beat the shit out of.

The girl’s eyes quickly scan Maggie’s face, and Maggie feels heat shoot straight down to her core, and she wonders if the girl – Alex, Alex, Alex, Maggie rolls the name around in her head – feels it, too.

“You guys gonna beat it or you gonna let me take out years of childhood rage and trauma on your faces for messing with my kid sister?” Alex asks, and the guys glare, and one of them shoves Maggie slightly as they grumble away.

“Are you okay?” Alex focuses entirely on Kara, and Maggie wonders what it must feel like to have that girl’s full attention focused on you.

“Thanks to you,” Kara looks past Alex to Maggie. “And I don’t even know your name.”

“Sawyer. Maggie Sawyer. Kara and Alex, you said?” Maggie asks, holding her hand out to both of them in turn and trying her best to grasp them both the same way, but she can’t help it, she lingers on Alex’s hand, and she swears that Alex lingers back, and sure enough, her eyes are fully fixed on Maggie, now, fully concentrating on her, and Maggie’s suddenly scared she’ll do something mortifying like swoon.

“You don’t know my sister and you’re… sorry, but you’re smaller than my sister, and you put your body between her and all those dudebros,” Alex says, her eyes locked in Maggie’s, and Maggie tries to remember how to speak.

She shrugs. “Happy to,” she says, and Alex’s eyes flit down, just slightly, to Maggie’s lips.

“Are you here with anyone? I just got out of the lab and I was going to take Kara for some potstickers – ”

“Yessssssssssssssssss!!!!”

“So if you’re not here with anyone, I… do you wanna come with us?”

“No, just my friend, and she…” Maggie looks over her shoulder at M’gann, who’s already looking at her and winking suggestively, waving her away with a grin and a you’d better tell me everything in the morning glance. “Where the hell do you find potstickers at this time of night?”

Alex flashes a wicked grin, and Maggie decides she’s falling in love.

She grabs Maggie by the hand and pulls her out of the steamy party atmosphere into the cool night air, and Maggie’s never felt so perfect.

Chapter Summary

anonymous asked:

Okay, Okay, I know, no prompts. BUT, I do think this is sort of an important one. I wonder how Alex's need to be perfect, tied with her need to not screw up again in her relationship with Maggie, would play into her ability or inability to honestly tell Maggie if she is getting to yellow or even red when they are in bed together. I feel as if Maggie would somehow pick up on it eventually.

Alex has never been this wet and she’s never felt this present in bed before, never felt this alive in bed before, never felt this… perfect.

Perfect, perfect.

Maggie is biting her lip and Maggie is panting her name and Maggie is asking for her color and Alex is green lighting her all the way because Maggie is perfect, Maggie deserves perfect, and this? Maggie buried deep inside her, holding her down by the wrists, moaning as she fucks her from behind, as she keeps her still, as she does everything she wants to Alex because Alex wants her to do everything she wants to her? This is perfect.

Every cell in her body is on fire and her throat is raw from screaming Maggie’s name and green, green, green, because fuck yes Maggie that feels amazing fuck fuck fuck, and it does feel amazing, and she’d never thought she could feel this much, this intensely, this overwhelmingly…

This overwhelmingly, this intensely, until suddenly it’s too intense and suddenly it’s too overwhelming and Alex Danvers blazed through her DEO training faster than any other agent in the organization’s history but somehow Maggie Sawyer on top of her is a more overpowering experience than any of that ever was, because suddenly Alex has forgotten how to breathe.

And not in the good way.

And Maggie is perfect, and Maggie deserves perfect, and she knows how wrecked Maggie is – she was in that deep a moment ago herself – because Maggie’s thrusts are starting to get uneven like they do right before she cums and Alex wants her to cum because Alex doesn’t want to mess up because Alex can’t mess up because Maggie deserves perfect, perfect, perfect, so when Maggie rasps, “Color, Al?” Alex doesn’t say red, and she doesn’t even say yellow, because she won’t mess this up for Maggie, so green, green, green is what she whispers, is what she chokes out, and Maggie moans raggedly and her thrusts have never hurt Alex before, but now it starts to sting, just slightly, just slightly, but Alex can take a little bit of pain, a lot of pain, if it means she’s making Maggie feel good, if it means she’s doing a good job, if it means…

But the pain, the slight stinging from Maggie’s desperate rhythm is slowed, stopped, halted. Alex freezes, confused, and turns her face to meet Maggie’s eyes.
“Ally, you – you with me? You good?” Maggie’s breathless and she’s squinting like she’s trying her hardest to concentrate, to control her body, to still her body, to still her raw desire.

“I… yeah, yeah, Maggie, you don’t have to stop.” Alex starts to arch her ass back into Maggie’s strap on, but Maggie backs up and shakes her head and hisses slightly as she pulls out of Alex gently, slowly, gently, slowly.

“Maggie, you don’t have to – “ Alex tries to sound calm and Alex tries to sound collected, but really, Alex just sounds panicked, and Maggie is at her side in a moment.

“Shhh, babe, I’m sorry, I’m sorry, did I – did I hurt you, did I – you said green, I thought – but then you kinda seemed like you weren’t into it, I’m sorry, I didn’t – “

But suddenly Alex is the one apologizing, Alex is the one crying, Alex is the one begging Maggie to forgive her.

“No, no, you were perfect, Maggie, you are perfect, I just… I wanted to be good for you, I wanted to give you what you wanted – “

Maggie stiffens and her eyes go wide. “Did you not want – “

“No, no, I did, I do, I love this, I love… I love having sex with you, like this, like every way, but I… I got overwhelmed, but it doesn’t matter, because you were so close to cumming and I didn’t want to disappoint you, I didn’t want to mess it up for you, I – “

“Alex, Alex, no, no, no, babygirl, no. Ally, you – no. Alex, you’re perfect, you’re perfect, but you’re not perfect to me because you do what I want. You’re perfect to me because you’re you. And babygirl if you were overwhelmed, you gotta tell me. That’s literally why we have colors, hand signals, that’s literally why I’m always asking you, babe, because I don’t ever want to do anything you’re not desperate for. I want you, Alex, I want you, not what you think I want you to be, what you think I want you to do. I want you. And if you need to stop, if you wanna stop, then we stop. Simple as that. You’re perfect, Ally. Always, okay?”

“You’re not mad?” Alex would be embarrassed at the squeak in her voice, at the tears in her throat, but Maggie is kissing every centimeter for her face, is holding her closer than she’s ever been held.

“I will never be mad at you for telling me what you need and what you want, Alex. Never. I promise. Okay?”

Alex bites her lip and stares into brown eyes that are radiating nothing but love, and slowly, slowly, she nods, and slowly, slowly, she smiles.

“Okay.”

Chapter Summary

anonymous asked:

I'm just feeling p worthless and I'm sure at some point Maggie has too so can we have Alex just randomly telling Maggie how much she means to her and how amazing she is, how much she loves her. And I need Maggie to be a mess bc haha same.

Same my darling Anon. Same. Sending you so much love: you are worth everything!!! <3 <3 <3

She doesn’t say anything about it on the days when it hits her worst. She doesn’t say anything about it because talking isn’t exactly her style.

But she hits at her heavy bag harder, she takes more risks at work, she takes more shots at the bar, she’s quieter at dinner, she’s quieter in bed.

She doesn’t say anything about it, but Alex knows anyway.

Knows that Maggie tries not to – tries so hard, sometimes, that it tears away at her insides and eats away at her perfect smile – but she knows that Maggie believes the things her exes have said to her, the things her father has said to her, the things the chemical imbalances coursing through her bloodstream and neural pathways say to her, the things the world has said about brown queer girls who think they have a right to be happy.

Knows that more often than not, Maggie Sawyer feels worthless.

Feels like she’s just going through the motions. Like every achievement she’s had is luck. Like every tear she sheds is weakness. Like every struggle she has is fake. Like every break she takes from a job full of death and full of torture and full of iron bars eats away at her value as a person, because how can she be worth anything at all if she’s not spending all her time, every second of it, in service to others?

So on the days when Maggie’s smile is just a little forced; the mornings when Alex catches her just staring at the ground, elbows resting on spread knees, chewing on her lip; the nights when she laughs a little too loudly or doesn’t laugh much at all; the afternoons when she works at the heavy bag until she can barely stand up; Alex makes sure to tell her extra, to show her more, to prove to her… everything.

She’ll bring her lunch at the precinct, and she’ll whisper “for the most beautiful woman in the multiverse” in her ear as she slips it into her hands.

She’ll draw her a bath and take off her jacket and boots when she walks in the door, and she’ll murmur “only the best for the best girlfriend in history” into her ear as she slowly strips off her clothes and leads her to the candlelit bathroom.
She’ll pull her close during game night, when she’s forcing a laugh that’s slightly louder than it would normally be, not detectable to anyone else, but Alex knows, so Alex tickles her, and Alex kisses her ear and ignores James and Winn’s whooping as she teases, “I’m so proud to finally have such an incredible and perfect girlfriend to help me kick these losers’ asses”, and she smiles when that’s what gets a genuine smile to flicker across Maggie’s face, and actually reach her eyes.

She’ll text her in the middle of the day, just because, and the just because texts range from thinking of you, beautiful girl to I hope the best cop ever is having the best day ever to Have I told you lately that you’re more beautiful than the most perfect sunrise? Because… you are to I had an amazing time last night, Mags. I can’t wait to be in your strong, gorgeous arms again.

She’ll stare across the living room at Maggie, pretending to read while Maggie pretends to work, watching Maggie’s eyes just fix on a single spot on the ground, her jaw grinding slightly. And Alex will take off her glasses, and she’ll close her book, and she’ll just straight up tell her: “Maggie, you know I… I’ve never been in love before. But I’m in love with you. Because you are the kindest, most generous, bravest woman I have ever known. And yes, yes, I know Supergirl’s my sister, but Kara doesn’t count, okay? I just… Maggie, you are everything I have ever wanted, and you are just… you’re smart, and you’re tough, and you’re just… beautiful. You’re so beautiful. That’s what I told my sister, you know, the day I came out to her. About you. And now that we’re dating, now that I know you better? Maggie, my life changed forever the day Kara came into my life. And the day J’onn came into my life. And it… it changed, I hope forever, the day you came into my life. Because you… you’re amazing, Maggie. You’re amazing, and I admire you. I admire you and I… I’m in love with you. And that’s… you’re worth everything. You are everything. I just… I just want you to know that, in case I don’t say it enough, or show you enough, I just… I need you to know those things.”

And suddenly Maggie is on her knees, on the ground in front of the couch, and Alex tosses her book away and she collects Maggie into her arms, because Maggie is sobbing, her entire body wracked with sobs, with grief, with relief, with disbelief, with I don’t deserve you and why would you say those things and Al, Alex, Al, I’m sorry, I’m sorry, I’m sorry and I don’t deserve you, I don’t, I don’t, I’m sorry.

And Alex is shushing her softly and Alex is rocking her gently, and Alex is kissing her hair and kissing the tears off her face and pulling her closer into her lap and, when Maggie’s breathing finally starts to even out again, she’s cupping her face in her hands and looking her straight in the eyes.

“Maggie, I’m not going anywhere. I’m the one who doesn’t deserve you, but that’s not even the point: let’s just say we deserve each other and call it even, okay?”

This gets a shaky laugh out of Maggie, and Alex kisses her nose.

“You’re worth it, Maggie. You’re worth everything. If I am, you certainly are. Okay? We can be worth it together. Deal?”

There’s a long pause and Alex holds her breath, because she’s never done this with anyone but Kara and maybe she’s bad at it, but then Maggie’s lips are quirking into a smile and Maggie is wrapping her arms around Alex’s shoulders.

“You getting soft on me, Danvers?”

“Always, Sawyer.”

Chapter Summary

anonymous asked:

hey, i’m the girl who has red moments without using a strap-on. You’d really write one? I’d be so grateful but i know you're swamped. How about one paragraph, just about one of them saying it and the other being like ‘that's okay’? I'm sorry, i know you're really busy. Thank you so much for that kind and thoughtful answer!!

You’re worth more than a paragraph my darling, though I deeply appreciate your sensitivity to my swamped-ness ;) <3 <3 <3

Alex moans into their kiss and grinds her hips up into Maggie’s, drawing her down closer, closer, because all their clothes may be on and they may just be on the couch making out, but Maggie is straddling her and she’s kissing her neck, now, and Alex has never quite been this turned on.

She grabs at Maggie’s belt loops and pulls her closer.

“Color?” she rasps, because Maggie’s always asking for hers, and it’s a habit Alex has picked up.

“Green, fuck, Al,” Maggie’s whining, and Alex tosses her head back farther because god does this feel amazing.

Maggie’s hands slip under Alex’s shirt and her skin is so warm and the way she hisses at Maggie’s touch, the way she tosses her head back, all of it is pure ecstasy, and Alex comes back up, not for air, but for more kisses, and Maggie obliges, because she could kiss this woman forever.

Except, she can’t, because Alex’s fingers are pulling harder at Maggie’s belt loops, now, and Maggie loves it, loves Alex, but doesn’t want more than kissing, more than touching, right now, and she freezes slightly, and Alex imitates her.

“Color?” Alex asks, her voice calmer this time, and Maggie swallows.

“Yellow, red, uh… is orange a thing?” she rambles, and Alex laughs softly because Maggie is smiling awkwardly into her shoulder, and she cuddles Maggie closer into her.

“I got you, babe. It’s all good. Orange can be a thing. But are you okay, did I hurt you, did I – “

“No, no, Alex, you’re perfect, I just… I just needed to stop.”

Alex stops questioning and she smiles softly in relief and she kisses Maggie’s forehead, her hair, her cheeks, her nose.

“You still in the mood to cuddle?” Alex wants to know.
Maggie shifts off of her so she’s laying with her head in Alex’s lap instead of straddling her, and Alex pulls a blanket down on top of her.

“Yes please.”

Alex bends down and hovers above her face questioningly, and Maggie smiles as she leans up to kiss her lips softly.

“Perfect,” Alex whispers as she switches on Netflix and strokes Maggie’s hair, and as Maggie settles back into her lap, she smiles to herself, because she’s never felt quite this wrapped up, quite this cared for, quite this… loved.

Chapter Summary

anonymous asked:

Sanvers just having a laugh and silly night with pillow fights and climbing all over each other and just being adorkable (prompt)

Before Maggie, Alex’s go-to after long days – the days where she needed to be alone, where not even Kara’s company would do – was a bottle of bourbon.

Before Alex, Maggie’s go-to after long days – the days where she needed to be alone, where not even M’gann and the bar would do – was a heavy bag.

Since Maggie, Alex’s go-to became the massages Maggie would give her, the root beer Maggie would crack open for her, Maggie’s fingers running through her hair as Alex laid in her lap.

Since Alex, Maggie’s go-to became the baths Alex would draw for her, the vegan ice cream Alex would buy for her, the soft jazz Alex would play throughout the apartment for her.

But Maggie still needed physical release; Maggie was wired for physical release.

Sometimes, it was sex; sometimes, it was begging Alex to shove her backwards onto the bed and fuck her senseless, and sometimes, it was bending a pliant, panting Alex over the couch and slamming into her until the were both weak in the knees.

But with Alex, she was also learning about other kinds of intimacy.

With Alex, she was learning to laugh again. More than that, she was learning to giggle.

Because one night, after a particularly long day – after a particularly bloody day – she comes home earlier than expected, and there is a pile of blankets, a fort of pillows, meticulously assembled in the middle of the living room.

And in the middle of all this soft pillow-y chaos, her head and wide, deer-in-the-headlight eyes poking out from under one of the blankets, is Maggie’s badass, take-no-prisoners, secret agent soldier girlfriend.

“You weren’t supposed to be home yet!” Alex squeals, and Maggie tilts her head and saunters forward, barely holding in a laugh.

“Do you… want me to leave? You could be alone with your… fort?”

The fort trembles and Alex’s upper body emerges in protest. “It’s not my fort, Maggie! It’s yours! Well, ours, really. I – it – Kara makes me forts sometimes, when I have a really rough day, so I thought maybe you’d like a fort too!”
Her eyes are still wide and her face is getting redder and redder with each syllable, and Maggie kicks off her boots without breaking eye contact with her, and she bites the corner of her upper lip, and she knows she’s never been in love like this.

Without looking away from her suddenly shy, suddenly nervous girlfriend, Maggie reaches out to the couch for one of the only pillows that hasn’t yet been integrated into the fort.

“Do you uh… need extra pillows for our fort, Danvers?” Her eyes glisten dangerously, and Alex fully emerges from the fort now, holding her hands up protectively.

“Don’t you dare, Maggie Sawyer,” she cautions with a growing smile, and Maggie lunges.

Alex shrieks, part with laughter and part with shock, as she tumbles back into the fort, fall completely cushioned by soft blankets and more pillows than Maggie even knew she owned.

Maggie’s frozen on top of her with laughter, and Alex takes the opportunity to flip her over, to wrest the pillow from her hand and bring it down into her side.

“Oh, that’s how you wanna play, Danvers?” Maggie laughs as she grabs above her head at another pillow.

“You started it, Sawyer!” Alex breathes as she rolls over to avoid Maggie’s pillow blow, but Maggie must know some pillow fighting tricks that Alex never learned in the DEO, because before she can regain balance, Maggie’s found her shoulder with the memory foam pillow.

“Oh, bringing the memory foam to a pillow fight! You play dirty, Sawyer.”

Maggie straddles Alex so suddenly that Alex hisses, suddenly turned on beyond belief. “You know I do, Danvers.”

Alex leans up for a kiss, but Alex comes up empty, because Maggie launches herself off of Alex to the other side of the fort to grab at one of the blankets and wrap it around her shoulders.

“Every good pillow fighter needs a cape,” she declares, hands on her hips, and Alex giggles.

“And you call me a nerd,” she laughs as she swings Maggie’s favorite throw pillow her way.

“Takes one to know one, Ally,” Maggie counters as she blocks the blow, and she can’t stop the last syllable from turning into a scream when Alex scoops her up bridal style and spins her around until they collapse in a dizzy, painful, breathless, hysterically-giggling pile on the fort.

They laugh until tears sting their eyes and stitches ache in their sides, and they laugh until they’ve forgotten what sadness feels like.

“Pillow fights need to be an institutionalized part of game night with the gang,” is the first thing Maggie declares when she gets her breath back, and Alex kisses her soundly, relieved and profoundly, profoundly thrilled that Maggie is exactly who she is.

“Kara and Winn are fiends; we’ll have to team up with James to stand a chance.”

Maggie snuggles into Alex’s still slightly heaving chest and smiles. “Teaming up with you, Danvers? I could do worse.”

“Love you too, Sawyer.”
“Oh come on, Kara,” Winn is teasing as Alex eases the pool cue out of his hands before he accidentally puts an eye out or gives another patron an accidental concussion. “You’re a – ” he leans in dramatically, and James and Maggie lean forward too, humoring him, while Alex shakes her head with a smile and sips at her root beer. “superhero.”

He raises his voice back to regular volume. “All you have to do is put your hands on your hips and throw your voice all deep and sexy the way you do when you’re in your suit – ”

Winn throws up his hands at Alex and James, who both look affronted, while Maggie nudges Kara with a wicked grin on her face. “Not that I’ve noticed, you know, no, not at all, but I’m saying. You can have anyone you want, Kara, just like that. Guy or girl. Glasses or no.”

“The glasses, Winn – on Kara or on her person of interest?” James teases, and Winn points a threatening index finger at him until he realizes it’s only actually threatening when Alex does it.

Kara laughs before grumbling something between a moan and a sigh. “But it’s harder, being a superhero. How am I supposed to have a regular dating life, I mean come on? Barry says Oliver and Felicity couldn’t make it work – ”

“But Barry’s with Iris, isn’t he?”

“Well, yeah, but I feel like they’re the exception, not the rule.”

“Hey, Little Danvers, don’t lose hope, okay?” They all turn to Maggie with looks of mild surprise: she’s always warm with everyone, and she’s always kind, and she’s always open to a good joke, a good laugh. But she doesn’t talk all that much, not in front of everyone, so when she does, everyone listens, and Alex beams.

“Dating a superhero, it’s not all that bad.”

“Oh really, Detective Sawyer?” Winn teases, pointing at her with his beer bottle. “And you would know this from personal experience?”

Maggie glances at a suddenly stiff, suddenly intense Alex, and she looks away before she chugs down some solidarity root beer and nods.

“I’ve spent some time in Gotham,” she finally says off-handedly, and James, Kara, and Winn all lean in at the same time while Alex crosses her arms and perches back on the pool table, staring hard.
“You’re not saying –”

“Of course that’s what she’s saying –”

“Batwoman? No. Come on –”

“Well hey, if Maggie’s good enough for my sister, she’s more than good enough for Batwoman!”

“Aw, thanks, Little Danvers.”

“No but seriously! You and Batwoman?”

Maggie glances again at Alex, who’s chewing on the inside of her cheek, now, staring even harder, now.

“Yeah, it was a good time. She’s got great uh… gadgets.” Maggie grins faintly at her own pun and slinks around James to get to Alex, who stiffens slightly at her touch.

“Batwoman, huh,” Alex says. “Funny you never mentioned her.”

“There’s a lot we’re still learning about each other, Danvers. And you already live with the shadow of one superhero. You don’t need another. No offense, Kara.”

“None taken. About time someone sees my sister for how amazing she is.”

James and Winn toast Kara to that, and Maggie grins off to the side at them, but Alex is still frowning, still stiff.

“Apparently not as amazing as Batwoman,” Alex says, and she can’t believe she’s being this childish, this jealous, this wildly insecure, but there it is.

“Babe,” Maggie shakes her head. “You know who I was actually talking about? When I said dating a superhero’s not all that bad?”

“Yeah, your ex from Gotham.”

Maggie shakes her head again, and Kara squeals and buries her face in James’s shoulder, and Winn awwws and puts his hand over his mouth, because they get it, they understand, but Alex doesn’t.

“Al, I was talking about you. Yeah, okay, I dated Batwoman, sure. But when I think of superheroes I’ve been with? The first one that comes to my mind will always be you, Alex Danvers. You. You’re my superhero, babe. My only superhero. No offense, again, Kara.”

“You know what I’ll be offended by, Maggie? You not proposing to my sister right this minute.”

And suddenly Maggie is laughing happily, and Alex is leaning down to bury her smiling, blushing, teary-eyed face in Maggie’s neck, and Kara absolutely can’t wait to plan their wedding.

Chapter Summary

mqevq asked:

We need an entire fanfic starring Alex and her glasses (ok maybe maggie and a bed too but details...) (referring to the adrian’s one when they’re studying! Alex would totally help out a college student).

(Prompt referencing Chapter 149)

When she first found out she needed them, she cried.

Eliza had gone on about how smart her little girl looked in glasses, and Alex just wanted to cry.

Because she got made fun of enough – she was enough of a nerd, it was hard enough for her to get through lunch without wisecracks or someone spilling a drink on her or general laughter sent in her direction – and glasses? Glasses would just make it worse.

It was Jeremiah that knew. It was Jeremiah that ordered her contacts. It was Jeremiah that fought with Eliza to get Alex to be able to use them, instead of her glasses, when she went out.

Vicky Donahue caught her in her glasses once. She’d dropped by unannounced and Eliza had let her up to Alex’s room without a second thought. It was nice that Alex had such a good friend now, after all.

Alex was laying on her bed, her nose stuck in an astrophysics book, trying to puzzle out the contradictions between the stories Kara told her about Kryptonian physics versus the Earth physics whose math she was scribbling into the margins.

“You wear glasses?” Vicky had asked, and Alex had jumped a mile high, moving to take them off immediately.

Vicky strode across the room quick enough to still her hands, quick enough to push the rectangular frames back onto her face, a small smile tugging at her lips.

“They’re cute,” she said, and Alex felt her face, her entire body, getting hot, felt an odd tugging sensation just underneath her belly, and she adjusted them like Kara did when she was nervous.

“You think?” she asked, and she’d never heard her own voice go that high.

“Yeah! You should wear them more often,” Vicky told her as she pulled Alex’s textbook into her lap before declaring it gibberish and that they should go grab some ice cream.

It was that, more than anything, that made Alex wear them a little more often at Stanford. In her dorm, at least. In her sweater and fuzzy socks and basketball shorts, one pen sticking out of her mouth and one pushed into her hair behind her ear.
They were replaced almost entirely by her contacts, though, when Eliza’s railing on her got too much. When I don’t understand how you could choose your own prestige over Kara’s safety, she’s languishing in Midvale without you, Alexandra became their every phone call, and the alcohol and the clubs and the attention from men with rough hands and cocky smiles at least made her feel… something. Sort of. Not really. But it was worth a try.

So her glasses, then, became standbys only for her worst hangovers, when dragging herself to the bathroom to slip in fresh lenses was just too much to ask.

And then there was J’onn, and then there was the DEO, and the days were so long her eyes would sting, but she would refuse to complain, and she would refuse to put on her glasses – or even acknowledge that she had them – until J’onn showed up, somehow, with her under-used glasses case and insisted that she take a minute to replace her contacts with her frames, because how could she expect to continue training when her eyes were that red, that painful?

He got her improved lenses after that, but he always made sure he kept a pair of glasses for her in storage, for those nights she insisted on working extra late, extra hard, extra, extra, extra.

But for the most part, still, her glasses still only come on at night, when she’s alone, when she’s huddled in her old Stanford sweater and sweatpants and no bra and a single bobby pin keeping her hair off her forehead as she loses herself in reading.

But then there’s Maggie Sawyer.

Because the first time Maggie sees Alex in her glasses – it’s late and they’re settling in for a night of snuggling, of reading, by the fireplace – Alex pads out of her bedroom tentatively, eyes wide, eyes nervous, pajama pants and gray long-sleeved shirt, biting her bottom lip slightly, because what if Maggie thinks she looks weird, what if Maggie thinks she looks ridiculous, what if Maggie thinks her glasses are stupid, that they make her less… perfect?

But when Maggie looks up, her breath hitches and her jaw nearly smacks onto the floor, and she gulps, and she splutters, and Alex reddens, because she’s still just getting used to being this vulnerable, still just getting used to being this… worshipped.

Because Maggie is rasping her name and padding across the floor to her and sweeping her hair away from her face and staring, staring, staring, because “Alex, you… you’re the most beautiful woman I’ve ever seen.”

“You don’t think they look silly?”

Maggie gulps and Maggie takes a long, slow breath. “I think they look like the sexiest thing I’ve ever seen.”

Alex’s heart flutters and heat pools between her legs. “Really?”

Maggie pulls back to take in the whole picture of Alex looking that domestic, that vulnerable, that trusting, that smart, that sexy, that perfect.

“Oh yeah.”

So she starts wearing them at night, to cuddle, to read, to talk by the fireplace, to have tickle fights and laugh, and she even starts wearing them to some game nights, and god is it a relief to not have to always have her contacts in, to always have her guard up.

She starts wearing them while Maggie fucks her, slow and steady and harsh and ragged; starts wearing them when she gives Maggie lap dances wearing nothing but her glasses and a slip; starts wearing them when she puts on a tight-fitting suit and takes Maggie out to dinner, and Maggie can barely speak the entire time, and they don’t even make it fully back into the apartment before she slams Maggie into the wall and gives her exactly what she knows she’s been wanting all night; she starts wearing them and nothing else on lazy Sunday mornings while Maggie makes breakfast and coffee and sweet, desperate love to her.

She starts wearing them to tutor Adrian – and, as it turns out as the term progresses, the small handful of friends he starts bringing by every other week, because our professor doesn’t make physics half as cool as you do, Agent Danvers – and she starts wearing them to brunch on weekends and to the park on evening strolls and to the grocery store with Kara, Adrian, and the woman she swears she’s going to marry one day.

Because glasses?

Glasses don’t make her less perfect.

Glasses make her her, and if it’s good enough for Maggie Sawyer, then dammit, it’s good enough for her.
woeohtherclea asked:

hey mom! i know you have a lot of prompts so you don't even need to respond but i was wondering if you would include a badass black lesbian in a fic? like maybe an 18 year old girl that is recruited for the DEO and meets Alex and then Alex and Maggie become her mentors or something. i don't really see myself represented like anywhere so it would mean a lot! but honestly you don't have to.

Maggie notices her first.

She always seems to be on the edge of this week’s crime scenes, always seems to be there just before the NCPD Science Division rolls up. She notices, and she takes note.

But she doesn’t say anything, not yet. Not until one of the other guys on the team notices, and that’s when Maggie jumps into action.

Because when he notices, he assumes she’s had something to do with the spate of Cadmus attacks. Of course he assumes: the girl has gorgeous, natural hair, and perfect, dark brown skin under her denim jacket, her tall black boots. Of course he assumes she has something to do with the attacks.

Maggie grits her teeth, and Maggie tells him in no uncertain terms what she will do to him if he finishes the sentence accusing a young girl of being involved in brutal attacks just because she’s Black.

Because Maggie knows – she just knows, knows from the way this girl’s eyes flit carefully over the smoking streets, knows from the way the girl shields the eyes of a passing littler kid from seeing the bodies strewn on the street, knows from the way the girl watches the cops, counts the cars and notes their deployment, not for plotting, but for her protection – that the girl has nothing to do with the attacks.

“Hey kid,” Maggie calls, keeping her voice the way it sounds when she’s off duty as best as she can.

The girl stiffens and her legs twitch like she wants to bolt. Maggie holds up her hands in surrender. “Hey, it’s okay. My name’s Maggie.”

But the girl is staring at her badge.

“Yeah, I’m NCPD. But that’s not why I’m talking to you. I keep seeing you around this week. Always around the Cadmus attacks.” The girl says nothing, but she watches Maggie closely, and Maggie keeps her hands raised. Keeps her hands far away from her gun.

“They hurt someone you love, didn’t they? That why you keep coming around? Investigate yourself because who the hell can trust the cops to care, right?”
The girl narrows her eyes and Maggie smiles. “I’m off shift soon as I sign some paperwork – why don’t I take you to lunch and we can exchange what we know, see if we make any progress together?”

The girl looks for a moment like she might run, but maybe it’s something in Maggie’s eyes, or maybe it’s the way her hands are still raised in surrender, but the girl nods, and Maggie grins softly. “Wait right here.”

She doesn’t share any classified intel, but she gives what she can and she learns a lot. The girl’s best friend had disappeared in the Cadmus attack on the bus station last week, and she’d uncovered quite a few strands of evidence that Maggie’s colleagues had failed to turn up.

But that’s not all that Maggie learns. She learns that the girl’s name is Yve, that she’s eighteen. That she’s graduating high school in a few weeks, that she wants to be a bioengineer more than anything. That she’s got a quick sense of humor, and that she’s got a raging crush on one of the girls in her class. That she wants more than anything to put her skills to use to put down Cadmus, but she doesn’t want to be a cop, and she doesn’t know where else to try.

“Detective,” Yve interrupts herself halfway through the milkshake Maggie insisted on buying her. Her body is stiff, suddenly, and her eyes are fixed keenly on something over Maggie’s shoulder. “Get down.”

She says it calm and she says it low, and Maggie ducks just in time.

A laser that looks and sounds disturbingly like the one Cyberborg Superman shot her with explodes the old juke box behind their booth, and Maggie reaches under the table to grab Yve’s hands.

“You good?”

Yve nods. “You stay down here, you understand me? No heroics.”

Screams and the sounds of people running out fill the diner, and more shots land just above the table.

She shoots a text off to Alex – ping my phone NOW – and draws her gun.

“Stay put,” she whispers to Yve again, harshly, and she kneels back up on the booth, in an instant finding her targets and firing.

She hits one Cadmus lackey, and he hesitates but doesn’t fall. She fires again, again, again, ducks to reload, jumps over the booth and slams her elbow into the side of man’s head who thought he could surprise her from behind.

He curses and he sneers, and she gets two shots off, and they’re ineffective and she does the only thing she can – she keeps shooting, both her guns out, shooting one across the diner and one right in front of her, backing away from the booth she was just buying a kid a milkshake in, drawing Cadmus fire away from Yve.

The backs of her knees slam into a wall in a moment, and finally the Cadmus soldier at the far end of the restaurant can’t take any more bullets, and he falls.

The one right in front of her, though, with the pale skin and the blonde hair and the sneer? He’s closing his hands around her throat.

And then he’s collapsing and Maggie is gasping for breath and she’s looking across the room at her girlfriend, weapon drawn but eyebrows raised. She didn’t fire a shot. She hadn’t had to.

Because Yve is standing over the man who’d been hurting Maggie, her jaw set and her knuckles tight around a frying pan.

Maggie gapes at her, and she shrugs with a grin. “I work out. You okay?”

Maggie accepts Alex’s embrace as she rubs her own neck and tilts her head. “Hey Yve. Remember what you were saying about wanting to fight Cadmus, do the whole saving the world thing?” She glances at Alex, and she smiles.

“Let’s clean up and finish that lunch. My girlfriend and I can tell you all about a little organization called the DEO.”

“The hell is this place, Detective?”

It’s a week later and Maggie’s done her arguing with J’onn, and J’onn’s done his begrudging admiration of Alex’s girl’s judgment, and J’onn’s granted the necessary clearances.

“Told you it was like a James Bond spy hideout,” Maggie nudges Yve in the shoulder, and Alex snorts and beams at her girlfriend openly.

“Welcome to the DEO,” Alex spreads her hands back, spinning around as she walks the corridor as agents nod at Yve formally, respectfully.

“You’ll spend the next five months in training, twelve hours a day. Physical, mental, you name it. And on the side, you can work with me and with Agent Schott – and Detective Sawyer – to come up with a way to find your friend. And we will find him, Yve.”

Yve’s eyes are wide and her full lips are open and she’s staring all around. “Twelve hours a day, and work on the side?” She grins and flips up the collar of her denim jacket. “I can do that. But uh – what’s the training?”

“To see when you can beat me,” Alex deadpans, and J’onn catches Maggie’s eye behind Yve’s back and grins.

“Alright, Agent Danvers. Beat you? I took out that Cadmus ass with a flipping frying pan from a diner kitchen.”

“Yeah, after I loaded him through with bullets!”

“Still, Detective. Beating your girlfriend? Sorry, but uh… I’ll get there. When do we start?”

Alex grins and leads her to the green room.

“Right now.”
Maggie makes sure to order three times the amount of pizza and potstickers she and Alex would get if they were alone, because Kara is with them and Maggie’s always prided herself on eating a lot, but Kara’s appetite puts hers to shame.

But Kara is quiet while she eats, and Maggie knows something’s off, knows her brain is buzzing at a million miles a second, knows that even though the two of them had fallen into a comfortable rhythm talking about work and reporting and Winn’s latest pool exploits while Alex slipped into the bathroom to take off her strapon, Maggie knows Kara’s mind is elsewhere.

She knows Kara’s mind is on what she walked in on: Maggie bent over the couch, Alex fucking her, hard, with a strapon, from behind, her jeans pooled around her ankles, Maggie's boy shorts only somewhat down her thighs, Alex moaning and asking for Maggie’s color and Maggie screaming Alex’s name and screaming green, green, harder, please, please Ally, please.

Maggie chews thoughtfully as she glances between Alex and Kara, both of their faces still slightly red, even now.

“You know I might not have your superhearing or J’onn’s mind-reading thing, but I can practically hear your brain buzzing, Little Danvers,” she says, checking with her eyes if the conversation that’s about to unfold is okay with Alex, and Alex nods, because she loves these two women more than anything, so they have to be able to talk about anything.

Kara gulps down an entire potsticker – mostly unchewed, as far as Maggie can tell – and adjusts her glasses. “I… I’m just thinking.”

“About what you walked in on.”

“I’m sorry, I – ”

Alex puts her hand on Kara’s knee and Maggie shakes her head. “No, Kara, I’m not trying to guilt you. I’m trying to get you to talk. It’s okay to talk.”

Kara glances at Alex sheepishly, and Alex wipes her fingers on Kara’s jeans before running them through her sister’s hair slowly. “It’s okay, Kara,” she mirrors Maggie’s words, and Kara nods slowly.
“Why were you asking Maggie what her color is?”

Alex smiles and glances at Maggie, because she remembers when, not too long ago, Maggie was the one explaining all this to her. A swell of pride flutters in her chest, and she leans back into the couch.

“I can’t see her face when we’re… like that. So, especially in moments like that – ”

“But not only in moments like that – ”

“Right. The color thing is a way to check in with each other. Green for keep going, yellow for slow down, red for I need to stop.”

Kara takes Alex’s crust before she gets the chance to bite into it, and Alex just grins and reaches for another slice as Maggie chuckles softly at the Danvers girls’ casual intimacy.

“Why don’t you just say keep going, slow down, or I need to stop?”

“You can. And you do. But two things, Little Danvers: with colors, you’re constantly asking each other, as opposed to leaving it up to the other person to proactively tell you what they need, which can be hard for like, any number of reasons. And, it’s quicker, right, just one word. But also, here’s the thing: words like stop or slow down can be really scary to hear, because I know I’m immediately gonna freak out that I hurt you or something, you know? So it’s a way to communicate what you need without being quite so jarring, even though, like I said, stop and slow down are perfectly valid, too.”

“Except when you don’t want them to be,” Alex offers in a small voice, and Kara furrows her brow.

“She means uh… sometimes, you know… sometimes if you want to roleplay, or play rough, you know, play with power, the color system’s a clearer way to go about things.”

Kara chews slowly and takes another gigantic gulp.

“But you’re gay.” Maggie grins and Alex blushes, and they both wait for Kara to continue. “Why use a…”

“A strap on? A dildo?”

Kara blushes and adjusts her glasses and busies herself with pizza.

“Well first you gotta remember that not all women have the same anatomy, right, so being gay doesn’t have to correspond with anatomical stuff or preference or whatever. But more specifically? It’s hot. Not for everyone, you know, obviously, but if you like penetration, it’s hot. It can be, I mean. To be able to be inside someone and still have your hands free, to be able to have your bodies that close? It’s uh…”

Maggie searches for the word and Alex shyly supplies it. “Intimate.”

Maggie beams softly and kisses Alex’s nose. “Yeah.”

Kara’s eyes flip to Alex, now. “But you don’t get anything out of it, do you? Or like, I mean, how?”

Alex blushes and chews on the inside of her cheek. “It gives you pressure, in uh… the right places.
Even if you’re the one wearing it. You just have to position it right, and figure out a rhythm that works for both of you.”

Kara falls silent for the longest stretch of time yet, and Alex and Maggie exchange glances. Alex’s heart races and Maggie’s heart slows, both of them watching Kara carefully, both of them knowing what she’s going to say next, what she’s gathering the courage to say next.

“Alex, would… would you be mad… I don’t want to take attention away from you again, I don’t want to make it about me again, but… would you be mad if I… if I wanted to do that kind of stuff, too? With… women?”

Maggie smiles and Alex swallows, putting gentle, strong fingers under Kara’s chin and tilting her red face up to meet her eyes.

“Kara Zor-el, you are my sister. You are my sister and the only thing I want from you is for you to be true to yourself, for you to be happy. And if that means that Maggie and I have to take you to all the ladies loving ladies clubs with us now and find you a nice woman to be with, or to hook you up with one you already know, then that is perfect. You’re perfect, Kara. I would never be mad at you for being gay, or bi, or whatever. I love you, Kara. I’m always gonna love you. You understand me?”

Kara trembles and her lower lip wobbles, and Maggie keeps her smile but lowers her eyes, because this is a moment for the Danvers sisters and the Danvers sisters alone.

“I’m always gonna love you too, Alex.”
The rims of her glasses are her safe place.

The feel like Jeremiah comforting her on the bench behind the house after Alex got stitches; they feel like Alex’s strong arms around her – she usually shies from touch, but with Alex, it’s okay, everything’s okay – when she cried after waking up from her first nightmare about Krypton exploding; they feel like Cat Grant’s eyes searching her and telling her, finally, that she always knew she’d be a reporter.

The rims of her glasses are her safe place, and when her fingers go to them, they remind her of all she is, and all she has to pretend to be for the people around her. They remind her of her range, of her depth, of her capacity to be all at once: to be everything; to be nothing; to be on the cover of CatCo Magazine every week; to be invisible.

When her fingers trace their firm outline, when the contours of her fingertips press down just slightly, adjust her glasses on the rim of her nose, comfort seeps through her. Order. It makes sense to her. The world. A little bit more. She can pretend a little bit better. And somehow, at the same time, she can be a little bit more honest. She can be a little bit more her.

She watches Alex’s hands, too, and she loves that she’s not the only one who needs them to feel safe.

Alex’s hands spread open and behind her back, kind of like a shrug, but with her hands down, with her arms splayed. Alex’s fingers find Maggie’s hair, find Kara’s hair, during movie night, and Kara thinks that maybe her hands are talking for her, too. Are comforting her, too.

She starts to watch Maggie’s hands, and she notices that when she’s about to be vulnerable, she holds her left hand just below her lips. She wrings them slightly when she’s nervous. Her thumbs swipe across Alex’s jawline, her cheeks, when they’re kissing in the corner of the bar.
When it’s movie night, their mouths are quiet except for chewing, their lips quiet except for laughter, except for kissing, except for squealing when one of them steals food from the other.

But their hands? All their hands are noisy, all their hands are talking. Maggie’s thumb swipes across Alex’s thigh; Alex’s fingers running through Kara’s hair when a scary part comes on; Kara’s thumb and index finger adjusting her glasses, her glasses, because when she’s with Alex and Maggie, she doesn’t have to stop it, she doesn’t have to hide it.

So she doesn’t. And it feels incredible.

Chapter Summary

anonymous asked:

okay J, now that the writers queerbaited the fuck outta us, it's time for you to work your magic and give us a longer version of the "belated valentine's day prom". PLLLLLLLLLLEEEEEEEEEEEEEEEEEEEEEEEEEEEEEEE

She calls it a pet peeve. But it’s not.

It’s a trauma.

She calls it a pet peeve. But it’s not.

It’s a need.

It’s a need because she was fourteen and high school was amazing because Eliza held her hand and Eliza snuck her dad’s cigarettes down from the house and they crawled into the bathroom of the basement and giggled, their lips so close – Eliza’s lips looking so soft – as they blew the smoke out of the small vent so Eliza’s parents wouldn’t catch them.

But it wasn’t the smoke that Eliza’s parents caught.

It was the card.

The card, the card, the card.

The fucking valentine’s day card.

The betrayal that ended everything.

Because her father called her downstairs with the phone still in his hand and her father smacked her across the face with the back of that hand and her father gave her ten minutes to pack her things and to get out of his house and to never come back because she is filthy and she is ungrateful and she is selfish and she is wrong, and her mother cried but her mother didn’t stop him, and her face stung and her heart stung worse and her hands trembled but her face stayed dry because she would never give anyone the satisfaction of seeing her break for being who she is.

She calls it a pet peeve. Needing to be heard.

Because Eliza didn’t hear her. Her father didn’t hear her. None of her exes had ever heard her.

She calls it a pet peeve because no one has ever loved her enough to let her call it trauma.

Until Alex Danvers, that is.

Because she leaves Alex a card: she leaves Alex a card, and Alex will not give it to her parents. She gives Alex a card, and Alex will do nothing but love her back.

Or she hopes.

She’s probably stupid for hoping. But she hopes anyway.

James and J’onn help her with the set-up, and Winn whips together the dress at the last minute before running off on his own valentine’s excursion. James kisses her cheek before he leaves, as 8 o’clock approaches, and J’onn puts a hand on her shoulder.

“Ale...
Maggie’s heart sinks and she starts panicking, she starts hyperventilating, but then Alex is talking, and Maggie wants to cry for an entirely different reason.

“Maggie, I… you deserve this. The pomp and the fuss. An amazing romance with a woman who is absolutely crazy about you. And I’m absolutely crazy about you. And that… that means… Maggie, that means you don’t have to make it all about me, all the time. I love that you… I love that you thought about me, I love that you did all this, but Maggie, you…”

She stops and she stares down at Maggie’s wet eyes for a long moment, and there’s nothing but unguarded love in her eyes, and no one has ever existed but the two of them.

“You have nothing to apologize for. You didn’t do anything wrong. Maggie, I… I heard you. I heard everything you said. And because I heard you, I… I don’t want you to just shove all that back down to make everything about me. Again. You did it while I was coming out, and I get it, and you’re so sweet, Maggie, but I don’t… I don’t want you putting yourself second for me, not anymore. I don’t want you burying your pain, your… trauma, Maggie, you were a child, that was traumatic, I… I want you, Maggie.”

She brings her fingers to a lips and kisses them, one by one, slowly, deliberately, all while keeping her eyes locked in Maggie’s, before she continues.

“All of you. And this is beautiful, this is amazing, but Maggie, I want you to feel able to just… to vent, and to scream, and to lose your cool, to cry. With me. Because I want you, Maggie, I care about you, not… not just what you can do for me. You letting me in, you letting me care for you, letting me comfort you? That’s the greatest gift you could ever give me, Maggie. You… you letting me love you.”

Alex stumbles to a halt and Maggie’s breath hitches as they both realize what Alex said, as they both lose themselves in each other’s eyes, in each other’s hands, in each other’s hearts.

“Danvers, you – Alex, I – “

Alex shakes her head with closed eyes. “You don’t have to say anything. I just… I want you to know that you’re cared for. That you’re safe. That you’re allowed to put yourself first, that I want you to put yourself first. That you have absolutely nothing to apologize for. That you’re perfect. That I…”

She stares down at Maggie’s wide eyes and she licks her lips and she is Alex Danvers, dammit, so she dives.

“That I love you. Maggie Sawyer. All of you. And I just want you to let me love you, let me care for you, let me be here for you. Let me love you.”

Maggie takes one breath, and then another, and then one word escapes her lips.

The only word that matters in the entire multiverse.

“Alex.”

And her hands are on the small of Alex’s bare back and Alex’s hands are tangling in her hair, cupping her face, her thumbs swiping across her cheeks, and Alex’s lips are soft and Alex’s lips are healing and Alex’s lips are heaven, and she’s never cried while she kissed anyone, she’s never cried in front of anyone without running out the door before the first tear could fall, but she’s crying now, and Alex is catching her tears with her thumbs and kissing them away with her lips, but Maggie doesn’t want Alex’s lips on her cheeks, her eyes – she does, she does, but later, later, because there will be a later, because Alex went to the dance with her, Alex didn’t give her note to her parents, Alex came to the dance with her and Alex is kissing her and Alex is holding her and Alex, Alex, Alex – Maggie just wants, right now, Alex’s lips on her own, and she shifts, and Alex knows, because Alex knows her, and Maggie’s lips are parting and Alex is slipping her tongue in her mouth gently, gently, lovingly, and Maggie sighs into their kiss and Alex echoes it and their breathe, their heartbeats, their bodies, are indistinguishable as their bodies sway to music and to swaying lights and to the rhythm of their perfect kiss.

“I love you back, Alex Danvers,” Maggie’s whispering into her lips, and the tears dripping salt onto her lips are suddenly not only her own, and she pulls back, because Alex Danvers crying is heartbreaking, and Alex Danvers crying is beautiful.

Their chests are both heaving slightly and their lips are swollen and their bodies are flush against each other and their bodies are intertwined and their eyes refuse to leave each others.

“May I have this dance?” Alex asks her breathlessly, and Maggie smiles helplessly, because she knows her life will never be the same.

Because she knows that Alex means it when she says she loves her, and god, god, god does it feel good to be loved – and to love – like this.
Chapter 211

Chapter Summary

anonymous asked:

Man I would fucking LOVE to get a scene where Kara finds out why exactly Maggie doesn't like V-Day. Because I know for a fact that if Kara knew, she would have been so supportive and so comforting and would have helped Maggie deal with her trauma and would not have said what she said. (Also I feel like the writers just started a whole new show with different characters but the same names and faces after 2x09.)

She tells her that she should think about Alex.

She tells her that she needs to remember how much Alex cares for her, how much Alex deserves what she never had.

And she’s not wrong: Alex does deserve beautiful things.

But so does Maggie: so does Maggie, and Kara doesn’t understand – not at first – because Kara is projecting, and Kara is pained.

But she is also, still, Kara.

So she sees the pain flashing behind Maggie’s eyes, and she sees the fear laying in wait there.

She knows that kind of pain, that kind of fear.

Well, not exactly.

But it looks awfully similar to the ghosts in her eyes that stared back at her in the mirror when she first got to earth – when she’d lost everything – and after the Black Mercy, when she’d been forced to lose everything again; and after Astra; and after, just, god, everything.

Kara knows ghosts, and Kara squints at Maggie, because there’s something more than irritation at corporate holidays haunting her eyes.

“Maggie, what is it?” she asks, when she’s about to leave, when she’s about to fly away on her own to deal with the crisis she’s not ready to let anyone help her with yet. She asks, because it looks an awful lot like Maggie is having a crisis she doesn’t want anyone to help her with, too. And she looks like she probably does it a lot.

Something Kara is deeply familiar with.

Maggie doesn’t answer for a moment. She seems startled by the question, startled by the idea that someone would notice, that someone would care to ask.

“Nothing, Kara, it – like I said, I just wanted to apologize, that’s all.”
Kara squints at her and takes a long, deep breath. Maggie looks away first, and that’s how Kara knows for certain that she’s right; that something is very, very wrong.

“Maggie, Alex didn’t tell me what happened, but I… do you want to tell me what happened? Maybe I can help.”

Maggie stares for an incredulous moment, and she pffts – she must be getting it from Alex, Kara thinks vaguely – and she crosses her arms over her chest.

“It’s nothing, it’s whatever, Kara, just – just let Alex know I’m looking for her, will you please?”

She starts to walk away, and Kara stills her with a gentle but firm hand hovering just over her elbow, not quite touching her, because Maggie is tense and Maggie is scared and Maggie might not want unexpected touch right now.

“Maggie, my planet died. My people. I know something about that look on your face. That… losing everything face. What happened?”

Her voice is soft and her voice is low, and Maggie’s heart threatens to burst because she’s always wondered what it’s like to have a sister who loves her like this.

“I lied to your sister.”

Kara bristles and Maggie shakes her head and chuckles, just a bit.

“No need to break out the heat vision, Little Danvers, not like that. I… I told her my parents were cool about me coming out.”

She swallows and glances at Kara’s ocean eyes and forces herself to continue, forces herself to talk to Alex’s kid sister, because Alex’s kid sister isn’t exactly a kid, and she looks like she needs to focus on something other than her own worries right now, anyway.

“They weren’t. Okay with it. I was outed. I was fourteen. My dad kicked me out. My aunt took me in. It was… it was Valentine’s Day, when it happened. Why it happened.”

“Oh, Maggie,” Kara whispers, and her hands hover out to her sides, and Maggie nods almost imperceptibly, and Kara brings them gently to touch Maggie’s arms.

“And Alex didn’t know, and she tried to do a Valentine’s thing for you, and it sparked…”

Kara’s eyes are swimming with tears now, but Maggie can’t see because Maggie is looking anywhere but at Kara.

“Maggie, it’s not Alex’s fault, I… I encouraged her, I asked her what you like, and I told her to make a custom-made Maggie Sawyer Valentine’s Day, so that maybe you could like it again, but Maggie, I didn’t know, I… I didn’t really hear you, Alex didn’t really hear you, and I… I am so sorry…”

It’s that acknowledgment, that insight, that makes Maggie force her eyes up to Kara’s again.

“I freaked out, Little Danvers. What if she’s angry, what if she doesn’t want me anymore, what if… what if I’m too… messed up for her?”

To Maggie surprise, Kara smiles softly, and she runs a gentle finger through Maggie’s long hair.
“Maggie, my sister… my sister is wild about you. My sister has never… I don’t think she’s ever really been in love, Maggie, but with you, I… Maggie, she doesn’t care so much about you because of who she thinks you are. She’s not dating only part of you. She’s dating all of you. She wants to be dating all of you, she wants to know all of you. I know we don’t know each other that well yet, but I know Alex, better than anyone, and Alex lo… Alex really cares about you, Maggie. Deeply. She’s not going to run because you have ghosts in your past. So does she. Maybe your ghosts can comfort each other, you know?”

Maggie is swallowing the painful lump in her throat and she’s forcing tears back into her eyes and she’s tilting her head and clenching her jaw and breathing slow, slow, slow.

“You’re amazing, Kara.”

“So are you, Maggie.”

“I… I want to do something for Alex. I… she deserves… hell, we both deserve… the things we never got. I… I have an idea, but… do you think you could get J’onn and James and Winn to help me?”

Kara’s all smiles, now, and Maggie can’t help but smile, too, because damn, the Danvers sisters have the most infectious joy.

“What do you need them to do?”

“Well, for starters, I’m gonna need Winn to whip up a dress…”
Chapter 212

Chapter Summary

thebiwisebrownkid asked:

ALEX WAS WEARING LINGERIE. SHE WAS GONNA DO SEXY TIMES FOR MAGGIE. I CANT. Can u plz write that? Like after the prom they come home either one brings it up and Alex gives Maggie a lap dance and romantic gentle smut.

It's well after midnight when they finally get home. It's well after midnight, and they'd danced the night away.

They’d danced and they’d cried and they’d kissed and they’d laughed, because may I have this dance and actually feeding each other chocolate-covered strawberries is a lot messier than they make it seem on tv, huh and mmm, don’t worry about making a mess, Danvers, I can uh… clean it up for you and I’m proud of you, you know and for what? and For going through all that and still being exactly who you are. For getting through it, for… hell, Maggie, for telling me, even though I retraumatized you, for… for letting me in, for letting me love you and you getting soft on me, Danvers? and have you seen the dress you had Winn make me, Sawyer? How could I be anything but soft for you right now?

They’re holding hands when they walk through the door because they haven’t been willing, haven’t been able, to stop touching each other all night, and there’s a heavy pause as they step over the threshold.

Alex wants her; Alex wants to make love to her, Alex wants to give her pleasure, Alex wants to make her feel loved; Alex wants to give her everything.

But the night has been so tender, and the kisses have been passionate, but they’d stayed just that – kisses. So Alex isn’t sure what Maggie wants, and what Maggie wants is most important.

But Maggie knows Alex, and she sees the desire in Alex’s eyes, and she feels heat pooling in her own core, feels her own need to be made love to, to be touched, to be taken, by this woman, this gorgeous woman who held her and who didn’t run when she bared her soul, who had kissed her wounds and who seems to love her all the more because of them.

So she tilts her head and she licks her lips and she smiles softly, smiles shyly, smiles a little bit wickedly.

“Danvers, uh… before… when I freaked out… With the candles and the music and that… uh… slip…. thing… what uh… what were you planning on… doing?”

Alex arches an eyebrow and puckers her lips off to the side. “Wanna find out, Sawyer?”

Maggie gulps and she nods and Alex kisses her soft, gentle, perfect.

“Sit down,” she whispers in Maggie’s ear, her breath hot and her breath still smelling like chocolate, like strawberries, and Maggie lets Alex walk her to the couch, and Maggie sits.

“Maggie Sawyer,” Alex whispers as she flicks on the same music she’d had before with the remote Maggie hadn’t seen her grab. “It doesn’t matter what day of the year it is. I want you to feel appreciated. I want you to feel wanted. Because I do. Want you. Always.”

Maggie’s throat is dry because Alex is starting to move, and Maggie has been dancing with her all night, but dancing slow, dancing close, dancing as more of hugging with foot movement and forehead touching and gentle kissing, but now Alex’s hands are playing with her own hair and her hips are finding perfect rhythm and she’s licking her lips and staring down at Maggie and she’s turning her head to the side so she can keep watch on Maggie peripherally as she turns her body around and sinks lower, lower, lower.

Lower until she’s grinding into Maggie’s lap and Maggie is bringing shocked, needy hands to her hips, and Maggie is watching the muscles of her lower back leap in the exposing dress Winn so perfectly made, and she’s hissing because she knew Alex could move but she didn’t know Alex could move like that and she’s whispering her name like the prayer that it is and Alex is bringing her hands back to rest on Maggie’s thighs and Maggie’s head is tilting back into the couch and her eyes are fluttering closed because Alex told her she wants her to feel appreciated, to feel wanted, and god she does, she does, she does.

“Alex,” she prays, and Alex answers, swirling her ass down deeper into Maggie’s lap once, twice, three times more.

“You’re beautiful, Maggie,” Alex rasps as she looks over her shoulder, and Maggie shakes her head vaguely.

“You, Danvers. You.”

Alex presses her ass down one last time and Maggie moans softly. Alex stands and turns and hikes her dress up above her hips so she can straddle the woman she loves.

“I want to make love to you, Maggie. I want to make you feel incredible. I mean, only if you want, only if you’re okay to, I just – “

Her words are lost in Maggie’s lips, and she moans into Maggie’s mouth, around Maggie’s tongue, and Maggie’s warm hands are bringing her body closer by the small of her back and Maggie is whining softly as Alex grinds down into her, as Alex presses kisses down Maggie’s jawline, down Maggie’s throat, gently pressing the collar of her blazer back to kiss her collarbone.

“We don’t have to, Mags,” Alex reminds her, but Maggie’s eyes are on fire when they meet.

“Take me to bed, Ally.”

Alex smiles and Alex shifts off the couch and lowers her dress back over her hips as Maggie chuckles softly. She takes Maggie’s hands and leads her slowly, perfectly, deliberately, to the bedroom.

She hesitates when the backs of her knees hit the mattress, and she stares down at Maggie nervously.

“I’m no more fragile than I was yesterday, Danvers. You wanna make love to me? Make love to me.”

Alex grins and tugs softly at Maggie’s blazer, and Maggie sighs deeply as Alex kisses every inch of her arms, one at a time, being exposed by the slow, painstaking lowering of her blazer.

She doesn’t stop – Maggie whispers for her please not to – until Maggie is wearing nothing, until every single inch of Maggie’s skin has been thoroughly, thoroughly kissed.

“Lay down for me, princess,” Alex whispers, and Maggie’s heart threatens to explode as she does what she’s asked, her eyes not leaving Alex’s body as Alex slowly, deliberately, steps out of her dress, gaze fixed on Maggie’s face the entire time.

Even as she steps out of her thong, even as she slips off her shoes, her eyes belong to Maggie, and Maggie is breathless and surrounded by the warmth, by the radiance, by the protective shell that is Alex’s love.

“You good?” Alex makes sure as she kneels on the bed in front of her, as she slips her thigh between Maggie’s and Maggie’s hips writhe slightly of their own accord.

Maggie can’t speak so she nods, and she whimpers slightly as she tries to control the rolling of her hips, but Alex smooths the hair out of her face and shakes her head and kisses her lips with a soft smile.

“You don’t have to hold back, babe. I’ve got you.”

Maggie lets out a ragged sound somewhere between a sigh and a gasp, and Alex makes a pillow out of her hand behind Maggie’s head, and she slips her other hand under the small of her back so she’s completely holding her body, and Maggie is safe, and Maggie is home, and Maggie decides to trust her.

Alex starts to move slowly, tentatively, her eyes constantly checking with Maggie, and Maggie is nodding, and Maggie is squeaking slightly, and Maggie is grinding her hips up into Alex’s thigh, and Alex barely holds back a moan because she can feel Maggie’s growing wetness pressing against her leg, her coarse hair a heady contrast with her slick, smooth wetness, and Maggie grabs desperately at Alex’s ass, at Alex’s leg, and pulls her down closer, pulls her down harder, as she grinds up against her thigh, as she lets herself take the pressure she needs because Alex told her she can let go, and she can feel herself starting to, and god, this must be what safety feels like.

“Babe, do you want – “ Alex asks raggedly, and Maggie knows, and Maggie whimpers and nods desperately in affirmation, in pleading.

So Alex kisses her lips, her nose, her eyes, her ear, and she shifts, bringing Maggie’s leg up higher, bringing their bodies closer together, so her own heat, her own wetness, is closer to Maggie’s, is touching Maggie’s, is grinding down gently into Maggie’s, and that’s what makes Maggie scream her name, and that’s what makes Maggie truly let everything go.

Because Alex’s strong hands are framing her writhing, naked body, and Alex’s lips are whispering encouragement, whispering praise, whispering love, down into her ear, and Alex’s clit is hot and wet and perfect against hers, and Alex is taking great care to make sure she’s giving Maggie, giving herself, just the right amount of pressure, just the right amount of friction, without slamming bone into bone, and Alex’s eyes are never leaving Maggie’s as Maggie lets herself scream her throat raw on Alex’s name, on Alex’s love, on Alex, as she cums soft, as she cums safe, as she cums undone.

“Ally,” she whispers as she comes down, and Alex shifts so she can draw Maggie’s body into her own.

“You’re perfect, Maggie Sawyer. And you deserve to feel perfect. Every single day of the year.”

Chapter Summary

anonymous asked:

Is there any way you could write something about maggie and the aunt that took her in? whether it be back when she got kicked out or now since they hopefully still talk

It’s nearly 3 am and their bodies are spent, but their minds are buzzing.

Alex is holding her – of course Alex is holding her – and she’s tracing patterns onto Maggie’s skin with her fingertips, the way she knows Maggie loves, the way she knows makes Maggie feel safe.

The silence between them feels good; the silence between them feels comfortable; the silence between them feels like intimacy, because that’s exactly what it is.

When Alex had made love to her – hours and hours spent worshiping every part of her body, every piece of her soul – it was nothing Maggie had expected, but everything she’d needed.

She’d expected to apologize and make the night about Alex, and that would have been perfectly fine with her. Alex did deserve all the fuss.

But Alex had refused, because Alex had heard her – truly heard her – so the night had been Maggie’s.

And Maggie doesn’t know what to say, not yet, because she’s never been cared for like this before.

But she smiles when Alex asks, because of course Alex asks, because Alex is perfect and Alex wants to know her more, wants to learn her better.

“Do you want to tell me more?” she whispers as she traces words of love in Russian onto Maggie’s torso with her fingertips. “About what happened?”

Maggie shifts back closer into Alex’s naked, warm body, and smiles with her eyes closed as Alex kisses the back of her neck.

“I think she knew. My aunt. Before I even showed up at her doorstep. My mom’s sister. I don’t know if my mom had called her or what, but she didn’t seem surprised, anyway. I don’t know. I never asked. I just kind of wanted to forget about it. I showed up with a duffle bag and nothing else and she just took me inside and held me and made me eat something.”

Maggie chuckles, and Alex kisses the nape of her neck again. “She’s always making me eat something. She didn’t ask any questions, and I didn’t tell her anything, except a bunch of jumbled up crying stuff about my dad hating me and saying he never wanted to see me again and calling me filthy and a disappointment and selfish and an ingrate and mentally messed up.”

She feels Alex’s bicep tightening under her head, and somehow Alex’s rage makes her feel safer, makes her feel more loved, makes her feel braver.

“"It took me like a month to finally tell her the whole thing. I’d come home with black eyes from school and all these bruised ribs and stuff, and she’d just patch me back up and feed me and kiss me and let me sleep in her bed when I would wake up screaming, but she didn’t force me to talk. But when I did, I was so scared, Al. Scared that maybe if she knew the whole thing, she’d react the same as my dad, and then I’d really have nowhere to go. But it was destroying me, inside, you know, and I just had to… and it paid off. She didn’t treat me any different, she didn’t even seem all that surprised.”

Maggie chuckles again and turns slightly so she can see some of Alex’s face, then decides she wants to see all of her, so she shifts completely in her arms so they’re facing each other.

“"Turns out she wasn’t surprised, she’d figured since I was a little kid. I mean.” Her eyes darken. “"I was a little kid. But you know. Littler. And I saw my dad in town a few days later – he ignored me, of course, always did after that, pretended I didn’t… anyway – and he was sporting a black eye, and I’m pretty sure it was her that did it. Wasn’t until years later that she told me she’s bi, that she told me her parents had never minded, not that much anyway, and she’d begged my mom not to marry my dad because of how… because of what an ass he is, but my mom was young and in love and all that whatever stuff. Anyway.”

Maggie looks up into Alex’s eyes and holds them for a long moment with her own. “"Am I talking too much?”

Alex smiles and kisses her nose and shakes her head. “"You’re not talking nearly enough.”

Maggie mirrors her expression and snuggles close into her chest.

“"You know I went to college a year early? We had a nice life together, my aunt and me – we’d go on road trips and she took me hiking and camping and I saw the ocean for the first time with her, and she taught me to cook and she took me to my first gay bar and all that – but the town, I couldn’t… I did everything I could to get out, as fast as I could. And I did.”

She looks back up at Alex. “"Which works perfectly, really, because if the timing had been any different, I may not have been promoted when I was, and I may not have met you.”

Alex beams softly. “"I can’t imagine my life if I hadn’t met you, Mags.”

“"Same, Danvers. Same.”

Maggie stifles a yawn, then, and Alex studies her face with endless fascination, with endless love.

“"Sleep, princess. I’ve got you.”

Maggie blinks, suddenly scared, suddenly somber.

“"You promise?”

Alex kisses first one eye, then the other, then traces every inch of Maggie’s face with soft lips and warm breath.

“"Always,” she whispers, and Maggie falls asleep wrapped in Alex’s arms, a small, safe, home smile on her lips.

Chapter Summary

anonymous asked:

Ok I'm trying to keep hope, so what if Kara is really only getting with Mon-El so that she can deny and push down her feelings for Lena? Bc if not the idek what to think just I really hope that's all it is.

Oh honey, the Swan Queen fandom has been doing this for years, and it is a beautiful and clever and necessary coping mechanism. Here. Enjoy.

Alex calls for an emergency Sisters’ Night. In fact, she demands it.

And Kara is excited, because Rao, does she need to talk to Alex. And Rao, does she need to hear Alex talk, because so much is going on with Maggie, and with her lab work to find Jeremiah, and with J’on missing M’gann, and with just… everything.

But even more than talking, Kara just wants to snuggle on the couch with her big sister.

So when Alex lets herself into her apartment and Maggie trails in apologetically behind her, Kara bristles.

She adjusts her glasses and she forces a smile. “Hey Maggie,” she strains, reminding herself sternly that Maggie has been through so much, that Maggie was just retraumatized, that Maggie is probably going to be her sister-in-law one day, so might as well start attending Sisters’ Nights now, right?

But Alex is throwing up her hands and taking Kara by the shoulders, because she knows her sister, and she knows the war that’s raging in her head, in her heart.

“So, Kara, I lied. I want to do Sisters’ Night, just you and me. Because Sisters’ Night will always just be for us. But, tomorrow. Not tonight. I lied, and I’m sorry about that, but I was afraid you’d tell us not to come over if I told you…”

Kara backs away from Alex and furrows her brow.

“If you told me what?”

“We’re worried about you, Kara,” Maggie chimes, and holds out a bag of potstickers that Kara hadn’t noticed before, and Kara snatches them with narrowed eyes and a suspicious glare.

She sits down with a grunt and begrudgingly nods her sister and her sister’s girlfriend to do the same. Alex and Maggie exchange a glance, and it’s like they can read each other’s minds, they work together so seamlessly.

Kara feels a stab of something like jealousy, but she knows it’s not about Alex. She’s purely happy for Alex. It’s about something else, something different. Something that she hopes against hope that Alex an Maggie aren’t going to try to make her talk about, because Rao, she doesn’t know how she can handle it if they do.

She tears into the potstickers and blinks. “So, what are you worried about?”

Maggie and Alex exchange that glance again, and Alex leans forward and puts her hand on Kara’s knee.

“Kara, you know I respect you. And I respect your judgment, and I respect your heart. I love what a big heart you have. It’s what makes you a hero. But Kara, I…”

“You’re getting with Mon-El, Little Danvers, even though you really kind of seem to hate him, and that’s… we’re worried about you, Kara. Not because we don’t think you can handle yourself, or because we don’t respect your decisions, but because I… we… we know what it’s like to be with someone because you feel like you have to, not because you really want to.”

Kara nearly chokes on a potsticker, and Alex thumps her back mechanically, her eyes fixed on her sister’s face.

“That’s ridiculous,” she splutters when she finally swallows. “I don’t feel like I have to do anything, I’m Supergirl, I –”

“Well, Mon-El doesn’t seem to respect that, and you don’t seem to think he does, either.”

“I’ve never told you anything like – what are you talking about, I –”

“Kara,” Maggie says, her voice soft and her voice full of understanding pain, mixed with the beginnings of ironic humor. “The entire DEO heard you yelling at him. And lemme tell you, for secret agents, your people are pretty terrible at, you know. Keeping secrets.”

Alex mock-glares at Maggie before leveling Kara with a look of significant concern.

“Oh please, Detective, it’s not like any of that was a secret. Kara was yelling what a misogynist, unsupportive, manipulative, disrespectful, gaslighting, mansplaining –”

“Nice new vocab, Danvers.”

“Thanks babe, I’m trying.”

“Alex, I –”

“Oh, I’m sorry Kara, did you want me to stop that list?” Alex’s tone, the way she’s caressing Kara’s face, is much softer than her words. “Because I don’t have to. I have more, and they all seem to have come from your mouth in one way or another –”

“Alex –”

“And I love you, Kara. I love you, more than anything, more than life itself, so here’s the thing I can’t understand: why are you throwing yourself at this guy when he spends every waking minute trying to stomp all over the powerful woman that you are? It would be like me actually going for Max Lord or something –”

“You and Maxwell Lord were a thing?”

“Ew, god, no, which is exactly why I can’t understand what you’re thinking, Kara.”
“And she’s not blaming you, Little Danvers, no one’s angry at you –”

“No, Maggie’s right, I’m not, I just –”

“We’re just worried, Kara. Your sister loves you, and I’m growing to love you, a lot, and hell, even J’onn asked us – and believe you me, it was as awkward as it sounds – if we could talk to you to make sure you’re really okay, because this is… we’re worried about you, Kara. So are you? Okay?”

Maybe it’s something in Maggie’s soft eyes, or maybe it’s the way Alex is stroking her hair, or maybe it’s the way they’re both going through so much of their own struggles right now, but they’re making it a point to check in with her. Or maybe it’s all of it, everything, the way his hands were too fast and his tongue too eager, the way he’s an okay guy, she supposes, but as a wayward brother or something, not as a lover, but she was so worn down and she’s just so tired and maybe it’s everything, all of it, because Kara breaks.

She breaks into her sister’s arms and immediately she feels the walls of Alex’s love rise up around her, protecting her from all her enemies, protecting her from herself.

Immediately she hears Maggie kneel down in front of the sisters, in front of her Danvers girls, a hand on Alex’s knee and a hand hovering over the small of Kara’s back until Kara nods through her sobbing that Maggie can touch her, of course Maggie can touch her, because god it feels good to be held by two women who love her for exactly who she is, not for what they imagine her to be, what they wish she were.

“I’m so…” She gasps wildly for breath and Alex kisses her forehead, smoothes her hair, rocks her, rocks her, rocks her. “I’m so scared, Alex,” she chokes through her gasping, through her tears.

“Shhh, I know, it’s okay. I’ve got you, Kara. I love you, I love you, shhhhh. Cry it out, Kara, it’s okay, it’s okay. I’m here. I’m here, always. I’m here, I’m here, I’m here.”

Tears bite at Alex’s eyes, and she glances down across Kara’s body to meet Maggie’s, and she’s almost surprised to see tears gleaming in Maggie’s eyes, as well, and she knows it’s not the time, but she also knows, beyond doubt, that she’s in love with her.

Kara grabs at the back of Alex’s sweater and is forcibly reminded of when Cat grabbed at the back of Supergirl’s suit – her suit – and it’s suddenly all too much, suddenly all needs to come out, no matter how scared she is.

Suddenly, she knows she needs to dive.

“I didn’t want to, Alex, I didn’t want to because you were just coming out and I’ve taken so much from you, so much attention, for so many years, I didn’t want to do it again –”

“Kara, it’s okay, everything’s okay. I’m not angry, I’m not going to be angry, but what… what are you talking about?”

Alex’s face is a map of compassionate confusion and Maggie’s face is a map of compassionate realization, and she glances at Alex because here we go again.

“I was in love with James, so… so in love with him,” Kara gasps, and Maggie nods slowly, and Alex just tries to keep up as she wipes Kara’s running nose with the tissue Maggie passes her.

“And kissing him was nice, it was… he was lovely, he is lovely, and I love him, I do, but it… it didn’t feel… ka-pow.”
Alex smiles uncomprehendingly but supportively, and Maggie smiles knowingly, and they both rub soothing circles onto Kara’s skin as she gathers the courage to continue.

“And I didn’t understand it, I didn’t have to words for it, but then… but then you came out and I was doing research, for you, and I found… I found out that you can be in love, straight love, but not want to have sex with men, be asexual towards men, even though you can be in love with them… and that you can… you can also… at the same time…”

She glances down at Maggie, and Maggie nods slowly at her, a small smile on her lips, because like sister like sister.

“You can also like girls. Women. Romantically. And even sexually.”

Comprehension starts to dawn on Alex’s face now, too, and she gets flashes of Kara spending so many nights crying when Cat left National City, of her terror when Livewire got loose again, because Livewire had tried, so hard, to kill Cat.

Of Kara adjusting her glasses a bit extra whenever Lena came up in conversation.

Of Kara steadfastly refusing to lose faith in Lena, even when everything looked, well, grim.

Of Kara’s desperation to find her. Of her more-than-just-everyday-heroics willingness to die for her. Of her beautifully, passionately written article vindicating her.

“Kara,” is all Alex says, all Alex can say, as she pulls her little sister in closer, closer, closer.

“I’m sorry, Alex,” Kara chokes, pushing back, pushing away, so she can look Alex in the face. “I don’t want to take attention away from your coming out, I don’t… I don’t even know what to label it all, I just know that I… I’m so scared that if I…”

“If you don’t throw yourself into the most easily available thing – if you don’t surrender to the guilt he’s putting you through – you’ll have to confront your feelings for Lena Luthor,” Maggie supplies softly, softly, because Kara is shaking so badly, and Maggie knows that look, knows when someone needs to hear the words before they can say them themselves, and sure enough, when Maggie says it, Kara stops trembling quite so much, and her tears become of the silent variety, and she nods, nods, nods.

“Please don’t be mad,” she whispers to Alex, and Alex does nothing but shake her head and kiss her face, tears and snot and all.

“Kara, listen to me. I need you to really listen, and I need…” She glances down at Maggie as she cups Kara’s cheeks in her hands, and Maggie gives her a small smile. “I need you to really hear me. I would never, ever, ever be mad at you for loving whoever you love. However you love them. Because whoever you love, and whatever kind of love it is, whatever kind of intimacy you want with them? That’s absolutely fine. It’s absolutely perfect. You’re absolutely fine. You’re absolutely perfect. And I would never be angry at you, or disappointed in you, or resentful toward you, for being who you are. I promise. Alright?”

Kara shudders and smiles and reaches for the last of the potstickers.

Alex chuckles and Maggie laughs and Kara chews with a bashful smile.

“Will you help me break up with him? I still care about him, as a person – ”

“We both will, Kara. Whatever you need.”
“You got it, Little Danvers.”

“And then… then maybe you can help me talk to Lena?”

Alex groans with a smile and Maggie laughs and puts both hands on Kara’s thighs as she stands up to slip onto her girlfriend’s mock-traumatized lap.

“Of course we will, Little Danvers. Of course we will.”

Chapter Summary

Anonymous asked:

Okay, nevermind all the episode fuckery we're used to the ballpit of denial anyway. But I need Alex writing Maggie bad poetry all the time to be a thing okay? I just do. And then Maggie going omg Danvers Shakespeare is rolling in his grave but secretly enjoying the hell out of it that sweet dork.

It starts with that damn Valentine’s card, but it doesn’t end there.

It continues with a post-it note that Alex sticks onto Maggie’s coffee cop before she goes to bed one night a couple of weeks later.

“Coffee is good

Coffee is great

But instead of making it yourself

Can I take you on a breakfast date?”

Maggie chuckles and Maggie shakes her head, and she doesn’t stop smiling the entire ride on the back of Alex’s bike to this little diner they both love, because her sweet dork is just that: so, so sweet.

It happens again when Maggie’s rummaging through her gym bag, on an index card this time.

“You’re so hot

All the time

But especially when you’re working out

Damn you’re fine.”

She laughs so hard the woman in the locker room next to her raises her eyebrow, and she finds that she doesn’t care, because what did she do to get so lucky?

It happens with fair regularity, and it happens over the span of months, years.

Sometimes, the notes are at home – their home, now, officially, together – and sometimes, somehow, her secret agent girlfriend finds a way to get them in her locked desk at work, in her lab equipment.

She finds dinner invitations in her jacket pocket.
“Kara wants to do dinner tonight
And Adrian wants to come too,
I’m really excited,
Because I love my family with you.”
She discovers random reminders of her apparent beauty in the side of her boot.
“I saw the sunrise from a chopper
This morning on the job,
But it wasn’t nearly as beautiful as you,
My darling heartthrob.”
She uncovers Alex’s poems in her work notebooks, in her case files, in the box where she keeps her stamps.
“You are my sunshine
And I am your rain
Together we make a rainbow,
And rinse away all the pain.”
She keeps them all.
She jokes with James about how they’re going to have to find a bigger apartment, just to accommodate the ever-growing pile of notes.
But she never throws out a single one.
There is one, though, that they agree to frame.
The one that Alex slides across the table to her, eyes sparkling and nervous and full of life, full of love, full of hope, at a restaurant in the airport whose tarmac hosted their first encounter.
The one that makes Maggie smile hardest, the one that makes her heart soar highest.
The one that says:
“I don’t wanna imagine
My life without you,
And I will treat you right forever;
Please say I do.”
And she does, she does, she does.
anonymous asked:

I am loving all of your fix-it fics you are amazing!!! Could you do one where Alex runs after Maggie when she tries to leave after talking about how her parents found out she was gay and then brings her back in the apartment and comforts her on the couch? I totally get if you are too busy you do so many amazing and supportive things for this fandom

Her voice cracks and Alex knows why she’s running.

“I gotta go, just…” she interrupts herself, and she leaves, and Alex knows why.

Because she’s about to cry. Because she’s about to cry, and she can’t cry, because if she cries now, she’ll never stop. If she cries now, it won’t be whatever. It’ll be something that can still shred her to the core.

But she doesn’t close the door behind her. She lets it linger open, and that’s how Alex knows something else: that Maggie needs to run, because Maggie is about to cry.

But Maggie left the door open, and Maggie is nothing if not deliberate: Maggie left the door open for Alex.

And so she goes, she goes, silk robe and slip be damned, she goes because Maggie, Maggie, Maggie, she was fourteen and she wanted better for Alex and she was fourteen and she deserved a full, happy life and she was fourteen and Alex would be damned if she didn’t give it to her.

“Maggie, stop,” she calls, padding out into the hall in her bare feet, but Maggie isn’t waiting by the elevator. The door to the stairwell is still heaving closed, but the elevator button is lit up: Maggie must have pressed it, pressed it, determined it wasn’t coming fast enough, that her own feet were better, more reliable.

Perhaps the only reliable thing.

But Alex needs to prove that’s not true.

And sure enough, Alex finds her on the stairwell, finds her wracking with silent sobs as she practically flies down the stairs, and Alex tries again.

“Maggie, please.”

Maggie stops immediately, but she doesn’t turn around. Alex gulps, and she’s surprised; surprised it was that easy to get her to stop.

“You’re barefoot, Danvers, you shouldn’t be on the staircase. It’s cold and anyway, you could get hurt.”

Alex walks down to her anyway.

“I don’t care about… Maggie, I… I’m sorry.”

Maggie turns suddenly, and her face is streaked with tears and mascara and old scars.

“I don’t need your pity, Danvers.”

Alex blinks and stiffens and Maggie immediately retracts. “I’m sorry, I’m sorry, I didn’t mean to snap at you, I – “

“No. No, you’re right. You don’t need pity. You need something better. You need to be heard. And I want to hear you, Maggie, I want… I want to… I’m not going to abandon you like that, Maggie, I’m not going to betray you like that. I… I do like you, too.”

Maggie smiles softly and wipes at her eyes at Alex’s self-deprecation, and Alex tentatively reaches up to wipe her tears instead.

Maggie stiffens for a tense moment, but she forces herself to look up into Alex’s eyes and relents. Alex wipes her tears attentively, carefully, diligently. Lovingly.

“I know I can’t make it better, Maggie, but I want to… I want to be able to be here for you. And I am so, so sorry that I didn’t listen better, I… I’m gonna get better at that, I promise.”

Maggie nods slowly, and she takes a deep, deep, long sigh.

“You’re gonna catch a cold, Danvers,” she rasps after a long moment, and Alex shrugs.

“You’re worth it. Hell, Maggie, you’re worth the Bravakian flu.”

A small smile tugs at Maggie’s lips, now. “Or the black lung?” she asks, and Alex returns it.

“You are worth everything, Maggie. Everything. Come back inside? If you want?”

“Alex, I – “

But her phone chirps, and they both grimace, because they know that sound.

Alex helps Maggie finish wiping her tears, finish composing her face so it doesn’t look like she’s been crying.

“Duty calls,” Maggie says bravely, and Alex nods.

“I’ll see you later?” Alex asks in a small voice, and Maggie nods.

Alex kisses her hand and turns sadly to head back upstairs.

“Alex?”

She spins back so eagerly she almost overbalances, and Maggie reaches up with steady hands to catch her.

“You look beautiful.”

Alex flushes and sighs silently. “So do you, Maggie. So do you.”

Chapter Summary

anonymous asked:

I don't think maggie's afraid of heights but she's definitely afraid of the ocean, I grew up at south Dakota and the first time I saw the ocean I was like "Nope. No. No. Thank you" I mean... it can kill you in so many ways lol alex will definitely have to ease her way in when they visit midvale

Alex will lift her up and have Maggie wrap her legs around her hips and put her arms under her ass and Alex will carry her slowly into the surf, kissing her neck and her cheek and whispering into her ear about how beautiful she is, about how safe she is, the whole time, and Maggie will believe her, because Alex’s arms are strong – stronger than the ocean, stronger than Maggie’s fear – and when they get deep enough that Maggie’s toes dip, that waves start crashing gently on her ass, on her back, she clings tighter to Alex but she tells her to keep going, because she trusts her and she never wants to lose this feeling, this feeling of cold, cold water and warm, warm arms wrapped around her, Alex’s heartbeat pressed up against hers, and when they’re deep enough that they're past the point where the waves break and the surf smoothes out and Maggie is weightless in Alex’s arms, she tosses her head back and she loses sight of where the ocean meets the sky, and Alex watches her like she’s the most beautiful thing she’s ever seen, because she is, she is, she is.
anonymous asked:

Hi mom, I have been having a couple crappy days, and I was just wondering, if you're up to it, if you could write a cute fic where Alex and Maggie either do karaoke or get married using Happy Together (Imagine Me & You) and/or Shut Up and Dance? Those two are my favorite on my Sanvers playlist. :) If not that's ok, look after you first. Thank you! <3

“Wow, Danvers, your sister really outdid herself!”

Maggie’s grinning as she glances around the bar and slides her arms around Alex’s waist from behind, and Alex looks over her shoulder and grins.

“Yeah, she really did, huh?”

The bar is decked out in streamers and remnants from classical musical eras on at least seven different planets – it turns out that karaoke is popular on many of them – and Kara is on the makeshift stage, beaming up a storm.

“You gonna sing, Danvers?” Maggie teases, but it’s mostly just thinly-veiled begging, because god does she love Alex’s voice.

“If you make it worth my while,” Alex flirts back in low tones, turning in Maggie’s arms so she can kiss her, so she can take her bottom lip gently between her teeth and –

“You know it was bad enough when it was just screaming out of your mind, Alex, but now I have to see it live and in person, too?” J’onn is interrupting, and Maggie starts to tense, but one look at J’onn’s big smile and soft eyes soothes her.

“It’s okay, Maggie,” he says as he covers her shoulder with a gentle hand. “I was just teasing. I love how much you care for her. I love seeing her this happy.”

Alex squirms and she beams and she kisses J’onn on the cheek, and Maggie’s heart swells and a look that can only be described as family sweeps over J’onn’s pleasantly surprised face.

But then all three of them are jumping, because there’s a loud, high-pitched boom and squeak screeching through the bar, and when they turn they see a very sheepish Kara at the microphone.

“Winn, is it – yes! Okay, it’s on! Welcome to karaoke night, everyone! I um – well, I really wanted to start us off, if that’s okay.”

James whoops as he comes to stand by Alex and Maggie and J’onn, and Kara adjusts her glasses happily.
“With my friend Winn! He and I um… well, my sister’s girlfriend – hi Maggie! –”

Maggie blushes and gives a little wave as Alex furrows her brow with a confused smile.

“My sister’s girlfriend wanted us to do a special song for her and Alex. Because someone –” Kara stares pointedly down at Alex. “Hasn’t been known to dance – like, really dance, not just stand there hugging someone! – since her college days.”

“Oh, come on, the DEO kinda kicks that out of you!” Alex calls, and J’onn shakes his head and laughs.

“So, Winn, come on!”

Winn nearly knocks over a speaker as he scrambles on stage. Maggie catches him, steadies him, and thanks him in advance with a wink.

He grins at her and gives a little wave as he grabs a mic and kicks off the song Maggie asked them to sing.

As the first bars ring out, Winn and Kara stare at each other in the way only fantastic singers do as the sync up, and J’onn nods, impressed against his will, as Winn starts the song.

“Oh don’t you dare look back,
Just keep your eyes on me,
I said you’re holding back,
She said –”

Kara cuts in flawlessly and James and Maggie cheer.

“Shut up and dance with me.
This woman is my destiny,
She said, ooh, shut up and dance with me!”

Winn and Kara both point down to Alex and Maggie, and Maggie is holding her hands out with a smile and tilted head and questioning eyes, and Alex is shaking her head and yelling, “Oh hell no! Traitor, Kara!”

But her shining eyes and her smile give her away, and she takes Maggie’s open hands and lets herself start to move as she laughs, as Kara and Winn whoop before starting to sing again, their voices flowing over and under each other perfectly.

“We were victims of the night
The chemical, physical, kryptonite”

Kara breaks out laughing and Winn twirls her around as J’onn and James watch laughingly an Alex learn to move again, with only pure happiness, pure affection, running through her veins.

Maggie leans into the song, mouthing along with Winn and Kara, making sure Alex doesn’t dare look back, making sure Alex keeps her eyes on her as she moves, and moves perfectly, moves happily, moves without restraint, moves with only Alex on her brain, on her body.
“I said you’re holding back,

She said.” Maggie mouths, hoping against hope that Alex will pick it up, that she isn’t irritated with her for making such a dorky, such a public display, for enlisting her sister and best friend for help, and Alex? Alex doesn’t only mouth the words right back, Alex sings them.

“Shut up and dance with me.”

She pulls Maggie close and her smile has never been brighter.

“This woman is my destiny,” she sings straight into Maggie’s eyes, and Maggie’s heart leaps, because that, that, that line there, that line there is why she loves this song so much for Alex, and Alex is going right in, and Alex is singing it right to her, dancing it right with her, Alex is… feeling it, too.

“My discotheque Juliet teenage dream,
I felt it in my chest as she looked at me.
I knew we were bound to be together,” they half-mouth, half-sing together as their bodies move, and they forget that they’re in the bar, they forget that Winn and Kara are singing on the stage above them, forget that James is cheering them on and J’onn is watching with arms folded across his chest and a broad smile, forget everything else, everyone else, because this woman she’s dancing with, this woman whose eyes are sparkling and locked into her own, this woman is her destiny, absolutely and forever.

Chapter Summary

Motivational Sanvers

Maggie makes a particularly harsh, self-deprecating comment and Alex is having none of it.

I just really need something to motivate me through the next couple of days and I make these kinds of comments all the time but the only person who says something to me about them is my best friend and it means a lot.

^^ Prompt above from @ohthestarsinhereyes

She knows Maggie doesn’t know how to take compliments.

I think you’re a great cop.

You getting soft on me?

All Alex’s questions about how she could possibly not like Maggie, what an amazing woman she is.

Those lowered eyes, the storms that rage in them when she finally does look back up, when she finally does do that thing with her mouth and stare up at Alex in shuttered disbelief, barely concealed shock.

The first time Alex calls her beautiful (to her face, anyway), and Maggie just kisses her, kisses her, kisses her so she doesn’t have to respond, kisses her so she doesn’t have to let Alex see that she doesn’t know what to do with her hands, with her eyes, with her heart.

Sometimes it’s more subtle than others.

When Adrian thanks her for being so amazing with him and all his friends, and Maggie just shakes her head with a small, unreadable smile and puts him in a gentle headlock and kisses his short-cropped hair.

When James comments off-hand that Alex is really lucky to have her, that they’re all lucky she’s becoming part of their family, something flashes behind her eyes and something tenses in her shoulders and even though she smiles, she makes sure that everyone knows that she’s the lucky one to be with Alex, not the other way around.

When she walks in on Kara gushing to J’onn about how amazing her cooking is, how much she makes Alex light up at game night, she pretends she doesn’t hear it, pretends so she doesn’t have to accept the praise, accept the love, accept the appreciation.

Alex knows Maggie isn’t good at taking compliments.
She also knows that she’s getting better, slowly, slowly.

The first day she calls Maggie brilliant and Maggie doesn’t flinch, Alex’s heart swells with pride.

But it’s not all linear progress, and sometimes it’s not just about not being able to take compliments.

Sometimes, it’s about spewing venom about herself.

And Alex is willing to be patient with Maggie learning how to accept praise.

But hearing Maggie talk about herself like… that? No no no. Alex will have none of that.

So when they’re at the bar and Alex is making Winn and James laugh with a story about how some woman had tried to pick her up and Alex had had to explain that she’s already taken, she feels Maggie melt and she hears her when she mutters something about Don’t want to limit your opportunities, Danvers, she could probably give you a lot better than I ever could anyway. Alex is cutting off her story and James and Winn are confused because they didn’t hear Maggie, but Alex did, and Alex won’t have it.

“Maggie Sawyer, being with you is freedom, not limiting. And you… no one can give me better, give me more, than what you do. You’re perfect for me, Maggie: you said it, we’re right for each other. No stupid story about some girl who I couldn’t see anyway because I was too busy thinking about you is ever gonna change that.”

James smiles softly and Winn awws and Maggie doesn’t know what to do other than kiss Alex, so she does, because no one’s ever stood up to her for the sake of herself before.

And when they’re laying at home and Maggie is giving Alex a backrub and her phone chimes and she curses because it’s work and Ugh, you don’t deserve this, Danvers, you deserve someone who can stay and give you everything you want, I’m sorry, you deserve so much better, Alex just straight-up cuts her off.

“No, you know what, Maggie, you’re right. I don’t deserve you. I don’t deserve someone as dedicated and committed and passionate as you are, but I sure as hell am dedicated and committed and passionate to living up to the honor of being your girlfriend. I’m not going anywhere, Mags; when you get home we can both get backrubs, how about that?”

Maggie gulps and she nods and she blinks down tears and her heart races because someone this beautiful, someone this perfect, is fighting, not with her, but for her.

And when they’re at dinner and Maggie is – finally – telling her a story about her father, she interrupts herself, because you know what, it’s whatever, I’m sorry, you didn’t sign up for listening to a grown woman whine about decade-old bullshit that she probably deserved anyway, Alex bristles, and Alex shakes her head firmly, and Alex refuses to let it slide.

“You’re right Maggie, I didn’t. But I did sign up to be here for a beautiful, strong, incredible woman who’s giving me an amazing gift by trusting me enough to share pieces of absolutely undeserved abuse she’s been tough enough and kind enough and brave enough to survive.”

Maggie blinks and Maggie reaches for Alex’s hand across the table and holds onto it like it’s her lifeline, like it’s her reminder, her proof, that she can be loved, that she deserves to be loved, that she is worthy of this beautiful woman who’s all dressed up for her and dedicated to loving her just right.
Because she can, and she does, and she is.
letswreakhavoc asked:

A cool fanfic idea maybe: Alex and Maggie share the couch for movie night and under the blanket Maggie is being handsy and trying to be sneaky - ensue concerned and innocent Kara and her x-ray vision

In her head, she blames Kara.

Blames Kara because she’s the one that picked a lesbian film for movie night, and damn she should have known that a trademark of crappy lesbian films is so. Much. Sex.

So of course she’s going to get handsy.

Under Kara’s blanket.

On Kara’s couch.

Next to Kara.

Next to all of Kara’s friends.

With Kara’s sister.

Kara was the one who chose the film, who had such a fucking hot sister, so damn if Maggie wasn’t going to act on it.

Just a little bit.

So she snuggles closer into Alex, and Alex sighs contentedly, and Winn awws and Alex tosses a lazy, affectionate kick at him and he smiles and she smiles back, because she doesn’t know where she’d be without him.

She wraps the blanket tighter around them, and Kara glances their way and smiles, because she’s never seen her sister melt like this, never seen her sister affectionate like this. Never seen her sister happy like this. Kara meets James’s eyes and they both grin silently, secretly, happily.

Because Alex deserves the world, and Alex has Maggie Sawyer, and that is just perfect.

So Kara digs deeper into her bowl of popcorn and she throws her attention at the movie, at yelling out comments with Winn and James, and she doesn’t immediately notice that Alex and Maggie aren’t quite as verbal as they usually are during movie night.

Doesn’t notice when Maggie raises her head slightly and whispers something in Alex’s ear. Something that sounds an awful lot like I want you, and Alex squirms slightly and nods almost imperceptibly.
Almost imperceptibly.

Almost.

But Maggie detects, so Maggie picks up on it.

Picks up on the way that Alex shifts, slowly, subtly, reaching for Maggie’s hand under the blanket and bringing it between her legs, forcing a slightly belated laugh when Winn shouts out what an awkward camera angle that was, why would anyone film something like that, and when Alex squeaks slightly because she’s guiding Maggie’s hand into her jeans, it’s timed perfectly with a joke in the film that has the other Superfriends laughing uproariously, and Maggie smirks, proud of herself for her timing.

Her fingers explore Alex’s clit and nothing has ever been hotter than watching Alex bite her lip and try to control the rolling up of her hips, trying to control the sounds Maggie knows she wants to make, the way Maggie knows she wants to toss her head back and whine out her name.

She knows, because she wants to do the same things.

But she can’t, they can’t, because when you’re taking the risk of being this handsy under the blankets at movie night, there are trade offs you have to make.

But Maggie forgot about one thing.

Forgot that her girlfriend’s kid sister might be wrapped up in her food, wrapped up in the movie, wrapped up in joking with her friends, but her girlfriend’s kid sister also can detect heart beats. Can detect pulse rates.

Can detect that Maggie’s heart, apparently apropos of nothing, is suddenly racing, hard, fast, and strong. And Alex’s heartbeat is doing the same.

Kara adjusts her glasses and turns with a furrowed brow to her sister and her sister’s girlfriend, confused, because sure, maybe she’s not a relationship expert, but she’s pretty sure that snuggling like that is supposed to calm you down, not rile you up.

Alex shifts her hips slightly, her bottom lip caught between her teeth, even as both her and Maggie’s eyes are fixed devotedly on the screen, and Kara remembers the mission they were on yesterday, another attempt to find Jeremiah, and she remembers that Alex had taken a bit of a beating before getting the upper hand and giving a beating herself.

She must be in pain, and she must be trying to hide it, and if only Kara can see exactly what’s hurting her, she can make sure she gets the right treatment, even if Alex is too stubborn to ask for it.

So she lowers her glasses slightly and she x-rays her eyes through the blanket, and three things happen all at once.

She squeaks, and popcorn from her massive bowl is suddenly all over the living room, and she fixes her eyes on the TV screen like she’s never been so fascinated by any movie ever in the entire history of time and space.

“Sorry,” she mutters as everyone turns to stare at her. “Just had a thought. Um, a story idea. Um, no, not a story idea, just a… just thinking about something, just… wow, isn’t this movie great? Lesbians, huh?”
James furrows his brow at Kara, torn between concern and amusement, but Winn’s eyes are locked on Alex, on Maggie, on Alex, on Maggie. His eyes flit between their matching deer-in-the-headlights expressions, and then lower slowly down to the blanket under which, for some reason, both of their hands are.

He smiles slowly, wickedly, and tilts his head and raises his eyebrows at Alex.

“Shut it, Schott,” she scowls, but her slightly upturned lips and her furiously blushing face, and the fact that Winn is pretty sure he knows exactly how handsy Maggie’s just been, makes her a lot less intimidating than usual.

“Oh, I’m not saying a word. But nice work corrupting both of the Danvers girls, in such different ways and yet in one fell swoop, Detective Sawyer. Nice work indeed.”

Maggie tilts her head in the perfect picture of confusion, the perfect picture of innocence, and James finally catches on, and suddenly his face is all smiles but he’s finding the movie as fascinating as Kara determinedly is.

“Maggie’s awesome, Kara, can we keep her?” Winn asks, still grinning like it’s Christmas morning, because god will he never let Alex live this down.

Kara doesn’t move her eyes from the screen, but she leans over with a slight grin and grabs a fistful of popcorn that had landed in Maggie’s lap.

“As long as everyone wears layers instead of blankets next time, we can keep her forever.”

anonymous asked:

Mom. I had a very terrible day. I was hoping you could make it better, tell me something, a small sanvers love scene? It doesn't have to be long and I know you don't want us to request promt and I totally respect it... thanks mom

“Hey pretty lady.”

Maggie hums contentedly as Alex slips strong arms around her waist and kisses the back of her neck. She lets herself melt back into those arms, and she swears she’s never known any feeling like Alex’s stomach and chest warm and steady against her back.

“Long day?” Maggie asks, because long days either always end with her tied up and writhing under Alex or with Alex snuggling, kissing her neck gently, never letting go of her body.

Alex Danvers doesn’t have a lot of middle ground, and Maggie loves it.

“Mmmm.” Alex traces her lips across Maggie’s neck, and Maggie giggles.

“Ally, I’m making dinner.”

Alex stills immediately, but Maggie reaches behind her to keep their bodies close.

“Wanna turn off the burner?” Alex asks, and Maggie knows the question under her question.

She smiles and she complies and she turns in Alex’s arms, looking up into steady eyes.

“Something you want, Danvers?”

Alex takes Maggie’s bottom lip gently between her teeth, and Maggie swoons.

“Only the most beautiful woman in the world.” Alex tells her in low tones between kisses.

Maggie pulls back and tilts her head, trying and failing to hide a smile.

“So you want… yourself.”

Alex pffts and squirms and blushes, her suave evaporated in Maggie’s warmth for a moment. But only for a moment.

“You, Maggie Sawyer. I want you.”

Maggie licks her lips slowly, slowly enough that Alex’s eyes drag down to watch, that Alex’s breath hitches, and Maggie’s relishes the feeling of being the sole focus of Alex Danvers’s attention.
“Then take me, Alex.”

Alex doesn’t need to be told twice.

Before Maggie can gasp, before Maggie can take another breath, Alex has reached down to the backs of her thighs, picking her up and holding her, legs wrapped around Alex’s hips, and Maggie is glad Alex’s grip is so solid, because she’s swooning again, and Alex’s lips are on hers again and she’s holding her close and if someone didn’t know Alex, they’d think it was going to progress fast, progress hard, but that’s not Alex. Not today, anyway.

Today, the most demanding thing about her is the way she’s holding Maggie up, but everything else – the attention she dedicates to Maggie’s jawline, the homage she pays to Maggie’s lips, the devotion she shows to that sensitive spot at the base of Maggie’s throat – is an act of prayer, an act of solace, an act of worship.

“Can I take you to bed?” she breathes, and Maggie hums her yes into Alex’s mouth.

Maggie doesn’t open her eyes as Alex turns and, still kissing her, carries her up the steps to her bedroom. She doesn’t need to open them, doesn’t need to monitor Alex’s steps, because Alex has her safe, Alex has her steady, Alex has her always.

She can’t count the number of times, the number of languages, that Alex murmurs her I love yous in as she slowly strips off Maggie’s clothes, as she meticulously kisses each newly exposed inch of her skin, marking each burning bit of Maggie’s body as desired, as loved, as worthy, as hers.

Maggie doesn’t scream when she cums in Alex’s mouth, not today, not today, because today is softer than screams, quieter than her usual writhing; but she does still grasp desperately at her hair, does still sigh out her name, over and over and over, does still let her entire body shudder with the soft force of Alex’s love shuttling through her.

“You’re gorgeous, Alex,” she rasps, gravel in her voice, as Alex wipes her mouth on her shoulder and crawls up to hold her. “You’re gorgeous, and I’m gonna love you forever.”

“So... you’re saying you like me.”

“Oh my god, you nerd.”

“So you’re saying you like nerds.”

“Yes, Danvers. This nerd. My nerd. Of course.”
Chapter 222

Chapter Summary

cassiebones asked:

Can I have a ficlet for my bday? Maybe Alex tries to make a tiramisu for Maggie and it ends up going horribly wrong???

She’s swaying her hips absently and interspersing her own stream of curses with an impressively flawless mouthing of Bare Naked Ladies’s One Week.

She forms every word perfectly, stumbling over exactly none of the wild, rapid streams, as the song blasts through the apartment so loudly that she doesn’t notice Maggie leaning against the doorway, head tilted to the side, disbelieving smile on her lips, arms crossed over her chest, staring at the take-no-prisoners DEO agent dancing around her kitchen, singing about she has a tendency to wear her mind on her sleeve and a history of losing her shirt, which is currently dusted with a strange combination of sugar and brandy.

“Oh come on, I can synthesize antidotes to alien poisons, but I can’t make fucking custard?” she’s muttering during a musical interlude, shaking her head with a frustrated grin and taking a swig of the brandy she’s trying to work into the tiramisu she’s attempting to make.

“Alright there, Danvers?” Maggie asks, and Alex jumps slightly, spinning with her eyes wide, with her eyes innocent, with her eyes guilty.

“I’m making you tiramisu,” she splutters anticlimactically, holding up a whisk dripping with egg yolks and frowning down at the bowl of ice she has on standby.

“Looks like you’re several attempts in there, babe,” Maggie grins teasingly as she turns down the music, just slightly.

Alex wilts slightly, a sheepish grin on her face, before unleashing another string of curses as the saucepan starts hissing with too much heat.

“I wanted to make you what you love,” Alex explains with a reddened face as she surveys the sugary kitchen with eggshells scattered across the counter from her previous, failed attempts.

“Oh, babe,” Maggie steps forward, shrugging out of her jacket. “You don’t have to worry, your mama already did that.”

Alex’s heart leaps and she forgets that she’s spent the past several hours failing, failing, failing, at something that shouldn’t be hard, because the way Maggie is looking at her, the way that Maggie is grabbing a dish towel and wiping Alex’s hands without taking her eyes off Alex’s face, the way Maggie is threading their fingers together, the way she’s leaning up on her tip toes to kiss her lips…

This could never be failure.
This could only be perfection.
Chapter Summary

anonymous asked:

So basically once a year Luke just disappeared and nobody knew why just that he was upset and he just disappeared and I was thinking Alex could have a dark day and Maggie gets worried. I'm always freaking out that I'm a burden to others when I'm upset and seeing that in Alex would be kind of cool... Sorry if this is too much

It’s not that Alex does it on purpose.

She doesn’t want to worry anyone. Doesn’t want to burden anyone.

That’s exactly the point.

It’s not that she does it on purpose, the disappearing. The vanishing.

She survived being on a fugitive with a three hundred year old Martian, and she’s not a trained DEO agent for nothing.

She’s good at disappearing. At vanishing.

Very good at it.

But not quite as good, apparently, as Maggie Sawyer is at finding.

Because when Alex does it this time – when they’ve had her father back for a few weeks and she’s just too overwhelmed, too overcome, too everything, too nothing, because she was his pride and joy and then he was dead and then he wasn’t and then she couldn’t save him but then she did and then he wasn’t the same but he was but he wasn’t, so she is overwhelmed and she is overcome and she is everything and she wants to be nothing – when Alex disappears this time, Maggie finds her.

It’s a sunny day – gorgeous – but Alex has all the shades pulled and she courts the darkness like just a few short weeks ago she was courting Maggie Sawyer, and she was courting death, courting danger, courting destruction, as she fought at Maggie’s side, at her sister’s side, to get her father back.

And now everything is fine, and she has no reason not to be fine.

But she’s not fine.

So she courts the slivers of darkness that she can find in the overwhelming sun, the sun with the audacity to shine, with the audacity to boast its brilliance without even doing Alex the courtesy of letting her evaporate.

Because if she is nothing but molecules – just for a little while, just while she rides this out –
Maggie can’t tilt her head and squint slightly like she does when she’s worried, and Kara can’t insist on flying through her window, and Eliza can’t call her Alexandra and J’onn can’t stare at her when he thinks she’s not looking, fighting the temptation to read her mind so he can know exactly what’s wrong and James can’t bring her extra donuts on game night because he knows something’s off and Winn can’t gently touch her arm and remind her that he’s here, always, if she wants to talk about anything.

If she is nothing but molecules, even for a little while, they can’t worry. She can’t worry them. Burden them.

They all have enough going on, anyway.

But Maggie apparently disagrees.

She doesn’t kick down the door of the abandoned warehouse Alex breaks into when she needs to get away, when she needs to kick and scream and collapse on the floor and let herself get dusty, become dust, before her numbed out tears patter onto the cold, hard, unforgiving ground and trace patterns into the cobwebs and sawdust.

She doesn’t kick down the door, and she doesn’t ask what Alex is doing in there.

She’s already asked Winn, and she knows it has nothing to do with DEO business. She knows exactly what Alex is doing, because she knows… Alex.

“Danvers, just tell me one thing, just answer me the one question: are you physically hurt?”

She needs to know, because she knows how hard Alex can punch, and she knows how hard Alex can kick, and she knows how solid concrete is, and how tempting stone walls are when you want nothing to disappear, to be only your own burden.

Alex doesn’t answer for a long moment, because she’s on the ground and she’s shocked at the lack of judgment in Maggie’s voice.

Shocked at hearing Maggie’s voice on the other side of the door at all, because no one’s ever been able to find her before, on these dark days.

Shocked at the question. Not what are you doing in there or why aren’t you letting me in or what the hell is wrong with you.

“No,” she hears her own voice calling before she realizes she’s opened her mouth, before she realizes she’s dragging her body toward the door that Maggie must be crouching on the other side of.

“No, I’m not physically hurt.”

There. Not so bad. She’s used to calling out her condition after an explosion, a shooting, a cave-in. This doesn’t have to be so different.

“Okay. Do you want me to leave, Alex?” Maggie is calling, loud enough to be heard, but soft enough to not send Alex spiraling, and Alex presses her back against the door, and she takes comfort in imagining that, on the other side, Maggie has her hand pressed right where Alex would want it.

She wants to say yes, and she almost does. “I didn’t ask you to come, Maggie. I didn’t even tell you where I am.”
It comes out like an accusation, and she didn’t mean it to. Didn’t mean to sound so angry.

Maggie doesn’t seem to notice. Or rather, she doesn’t seem to mind. “I know you didn’t, Danvers. That’s not what I asked you. I asked you if you want me to leave.”

No. Please don’t leave. Please break down the door, please pick the lock, please break down my door, please pick the lock I chained around myself so long ago.

Yes. You deserve someone whole, you deserve someone full, you deserve someone strong.

No. God, god, god, please, no, don’t leave me, not now, not ever, because if I think I’m broken now, my god, I don’t want to imagine what I’d be if you ever left.

Yes. Your smile is starlight and your laughter is an antidote to my worst poisons and your hands are gentle and your hands are strong and your hands shake when they touch me and you don’t deserve this, you don’t need this, you deserve happiness, not… me.

None of the warring words in Alex’s mind, in Alex’s body, find their way out of her mouth.

She hears Maggie shift outside the door, and she nearly yells out, because she’s nearly convinced that Maggie is leaving.

But she’s not. She’s settling in, with her back against the door – her back against Alex’s, it sounds like – and she’s leaning her head back against it, too, and Alex hears it, feels it, so Alex does the same.

Silence stretches into minutes, into an hour, more.

“I’ve got you, Ally,” Maggie reminds her, just the once. “You are never, ever, ever a burden. And I’ve always, always, always got you.”

She’s so quiet before that, and after it, too, that for a while, Alex wonders if she’s hearing things, if the imposed darkness of the warehouse, of her mood, is clouding her brain.

But the part of her that still knows, even now, that Maggie Sawyer loves her – is even in love with her, maybe – knows that she’s not making anything up.

That Maggie’s got her.

And sure enough, when she’s ready – when she needs to eat and needs to pee and needs to shower and needs to fall into Maggie’s arms and let Maggie play with her hair and whisper sweet everythings in her ear until she falls asleep and wakes to Kara and Maggie making breakfast together and laughing softly so as not to wake her – Maggie’s there, and Maggie’s eyes are soft, and her arms are open, and the way she touches Alex, the way she holds her with her warm gaze, makes Alex think that maybe, just maybe, she’s not a burden at all.

Maybe, just maybe, she’s worthy of being cared for.
Chapter Summary

anonymous asked:

Sometimes I wonder how badly that telepathic link with the White Martian must have messed with Alex's mind. Do you think she gets nightmares about attacking and taunting Kara now?

Ofc she does.

She remembers everything she said.

Everything.

She remembers every one of Kara’s reactions, every nuance of her fear, every detail of her pain.

And it wasn’t her hand, but she still remembers slamming it into Kara’s skin.

She’s punched her sister before.

In DEO training. That time when she was 17 and they both got a little carried away with Mario Kart (it was an accident).

She’s punched her sister before, and she’s knocked her down. She’s taken the wind out of Supergirl, and she’s made Kara cry.

She’s strong. Very.

But she’s not as strong as the white Martian whose flesh wasn’t hers but was, whose memories weren’t hers but were.

And in these memories, she feels how fragile Kara is, how breakable Supergirl is.

All because of the snarl that’s not her snarl, the unearthly strength that’s not her strength.

The agony of knowing what she was doing – and because she wasn’t doing it, she was laying inert, weak, destroyed, shattered – the agony of not being able to stop it.

And it replays every night.

Every night, she watches the insecurity flicker behind Kara’s eyes when the white Martian had called her whiney, had told her it was exhausting to pretend to care about her feelings.

Because it wasn’t Alex – it wasn’t even Alex’s body – but she remembers it like it was, and she knows Kara saw her, heard her, touched her, like she was.

She’d done it to her again.
Tried to kill her, forced her to fight back.

Under Myriad, and now this. This wasn’t the same. And she’d snapped out of Myriad.

She knows this. She knows it.

But knowing it doesn’t stop the nightmares.

She wakes up sweating and she wakes up screaming, and Maggie holds her with one arm, soothes her with soft lips and even softer words, and she angles her body, both of their bodies, so she can reach her phone, so she can type out a one-handed text to Kara.

And Kara is always there, within minutes.

The first couple of times, neither of them are wearing shirts, and the gravity of Alex’s nightmares is temporarily replaced with the awkward hilarity of the situation.

But Alex starts sleeping in a shirt, because she surrenders to the knowledge that these nightmares aren’t going anywhere any time soon, and Maggie follows suit.

Every time, Maggie will transfer Alex from her own strong arms into Kara’s, and Kara will kiss her forehead and her hair and soothe her heavy, gasping, apologetic breathing, coo that she has nothing to apologize for, that it wasn’t her, it wasn’t her, it wasn’t her.

Every time, Maggie will stop in the doorway and watch the Danvers girls for a long, sad moment; sad because Alex is in pain, because the strain of it is eating away at her, at Kara; but grateful, too, because they have each other through it. They’re closer through it.

Every time, Maggie pads into the kitchen to make them all hot chocolate, and she lingers until Alex’s sniffles slow and, eventually, subside.

Every time, they sip in silence, and every time, once their drinks are finished, Alex settles deep into the blankets between her sister and her lover, and Maggie mouths thank you to Kara over Alex’s exhausted head, and Kara mouths exactly the same.

After nearly a week of this, Maggie asks Kara to just spend the entire night sleeping over, and Kara smiles, and her heart breaks in the best of ways, because she’d wanted to from night one but had been scared to impose on Alex’s private time with her girlfriend.

So it becomes a routine: Maggie cooks four times the amount of dinner she normally does, because Kara is Kara, and she and Kara stay awake long after Alex drifts off in their arms, to make sure, to make sure, to make sure.

And eventually, the nightmares stop, but the habit doesn’t, because still, long after Alex has forgiven herself for something she never did, there are nights that Kara just sleeps over with her sister and her sister’s girlfriend, because if they’re being honest, they all sleep better the closer they are to each other.

Chapter Summary

anonymous asked:

How’s it sound if Maggie's first time in subspace is because of Alex?

Referring to Chapter 168.

It’s one of those nights.

One of those nights when Alex comes home with extra bruising on her torso and a legion of ghosts screaming behind her eyes.

One of those nights when words won’t do, and neither will silence.

One of those nights when she needs Maggie, needs her open, needs her pliant, needs her willing, needs… her.

One of those nights when, if she were anyone else, her intensity would scare Maggie.

But Alex Danvers is not anyone else.

And Maggie loves her for her intensity, loves her for how she needs her, loves her for how, even when she’s ragged and rough and wrecked, she is also unfailingly gentle, unfailingly kind, unfailingly giving.

Unfailingly attentive, unfailingly careful to make sure that Maggie wants this, that Maggie wants her.

And she does, she does, she does.

She wants it when Alex kisses her mouth, hard enough to leave her lips swollen; she wants it when Alex sweeps one arm under her thighs and the other behind her back, and carries her bridal style to her bed, their bed; she wants it when Alex asks with her eyes and a growl in the back of her throat if she can strip her naked, if she can tie her ankles down, legs open, if she can cuff her wrists above her head; she wants it when Alex asks if she can gag her, if she can blindfold her, wants it when Alex puts her fingers to her palm and Maggie squeezes because when she can’t say green out loud, she needs to tell her with other signals; she wants it when Alex melts ice on her stomach and drips the frozen water onto her clit, wants it when Alex laps up her wetness and her muffled screams with her tongue; she wants it when Alex leaves her, just for a moment, writhing and whimpering helplessly, unable to speak or see or move, but fully able to feel Alex, Alex, Alex, Alex pulling back and checking in before slipping trembling fingers, steady fingers, inside her soaked opening.

Maggie wants it, wants Alex, so badly, wants to be entirely Alex’s, wants her entire being to just… be, for Alex, wants all of it, everything, so desperately, that she can’t tell when she starts to slip away, can’t tell when her body starts floating, when her words start slurring, even more than they normally would through a gag, when her body stops registering pain, stops registering anything but pure ecstasy and Alex, Alex, Alex.

She’s never felt anything like this before, and if her brain could form coherent thoughts, she might be proud of herself, because if this is what subspace feels like and this is where she helps Alex get to, my god, she has a lot to be proud of because this is what Alex deserves, this feeling, this bliss, this...

“Maggie, babe. Maggie, it’s time to come down now, princess.”

Alex’s soft, trembling voice reaches her as if from a far, far distance, and something in her protests, but something bigger in her trusts, and she starts coming down, down, down, her entire being searching for the points of connection to earth; the places where Alex’s skin touches hers, where Alex’s lips gently kiss her face before slowly, carefully slipping off the gag, before slowly, carefully slipping off the blindfold.

“You’re amazing, Mags. You did an amazing job for me, babe, but it’s time to come down now.”

Maggie hears herself sighing, hears the handcuffs click open above her head. She opens her eyes slowly, groggily, contentedly, to see Alex’s wide eyes and swollen lips gazing down at her with an expression that can’t be described as anything other than pure adoration.

“Ey Danvers,” she croaks, and Alex smiles softly.

“Hey baby. How you feeling?”

Maggie takes a long moment to answer, and Alex panics a bit, hoping she’s done everything right, hoping she recognized Maggie’s subspace and helped her down from it – just as Maggie does for her – the right way, gently enough, lovingly enough, carefully enough.

“Loved. Feeling really loved.”

Alex’s panic dissipates and she presses a small kiss to Maggie’s nose.

“Perfect. Because that’s exactly what you are, Maggie Sawyer.”

Hey, I know that you aren't taking prompts right now, and I want to respect that, so feel free to leave this unanswered. But since Trump has been rolling back the bathroom protection for trans people in school could you maybe write a fic with Adrian reacting to that? I've been stressed because I'm on break right now, but I have to go back to school in a week. Thank you for putting so much kindness into our world, you're the kind of person we need in difficult times like this ❤️❤️❤️

Maggie knows exactly who's banging on her door, and she knows exactly why.

“I’m so sorry, Ade, Kara’s just running a bit late, we were gonna meet you there – “

But the rest of her sentence is cut off by the blur of limbs that surround her suddenly, and tears sting Maggie’s eyes, because Adrian hasn’t hugged her this hard since election night, because she knows he’s crying and she wants to destroy the entire world to take away his pain.

Because he doesn’t deserve it. He doesn’t deserve it at all.

“Ade,” she hears Alex whisper behind her back, and she hears James, J’onn, and Winn grow quiet deeper in the living room.

“Sorry for assaulting your girlfriend, Alex,” Adrian chokes over Maggie’s shoulder, and the three of them let out a strangled laugh as Adrian pulls back from Maggie’s arms and falls more limply into Alex’s firm embrace.

“You smell like gunpowder,” he croaks after a moment, and she laughs, more genuinely this time, as she pulls back from him and lets him step into the apartment.

“Shooting range. Maggie’s go-to when she’s angry is the heavy bag. Mine’s shooting stuff.”

Adrian’s eyes flood with a fresh layer of tears.

“You were that angry… for my sake?”

Alex stares down at him like she’s never seen him before. “Adrian, I… of course. How could I not be… homicidally angry about all… this?”

He takes his full bottom lip into his mouth and turns to Maggie. “Your girl’s a keeper, Detective Sawyer.”

Maggie grimaces at him. “Yeah, you should’ve seen her after he did the Muslim ban. I’d hate to be those targets.”
Adrian steps past both of them toward where James, Winn, and J’onn are standing, eyes all downcast, like they’re afraid to intrude on the three of their moments together.

He pulls up short right before he hugs James, because James’s shirt makes his heart nearly beat out of his chest.

“Trans Lives Matter?” he croaks, and James pulls him in for that hug.

“If some white kid wore it, it’d be irritating and appropriating, but I figure I can get away with it, huh?” James says softly into Adrian’s hair.

“Nah, feminism’s always a good shirt, man,” Adrian fist bumps him approvingly as Maggie leans into Alex’s side and Alex’s kisses the top of her head.

“Aren’t you the one who said feminism is a drag?”

“I know it doesn’t mean much, but you always have a restroom and a shower in the DEO, young man.”

“It means a lot, sir. Thank you.”

J’onn smiles and looks beyond Adrian to Alex.

“Where is your sister, Ale – “

A rush of papers fluttering everywhere chills the room slightly as a blonde blur speeds through the open window.

“I’m here, I’m here, I’m sorry Adrian, I know we’re late, I just had to make sure we had an entire team of reporters on it, not just me – “

Adrian doesn’t hear the rest of her explanation, because he’s hugging her so hard it nearly knocks the wind out of even her.

“Ready for this, kid?” Maggie asks with her eyes tense on on her watch.

Adrian pulls back from Kara and nods grimly, unzipping his running jacket to reveal a homemade black t-shirt that reads, I Am Not a Threat in big white letters, with smaller print blocked under it, reading, I mean, I am – I threaten your cissexist white supremacy proudly – but I am targeted in your bathrooms, not the other way around.

It’s not a long walk to National City’s queer Center, and Adrian’s eyes are steady as they all walk together, Alex and Maggie with their fingers interlaced, Kara constantly whooshing here and there as Supergirl, as Kara Danvers, as Supergirl, as Kara Danvers, James snapping photographs, Winn and J’onn keeping a careful eye out for trouble.

Because the crowd is big, the protest is impressive, and Adrian is vulnerable.

Vulnerable because, no matter what his shirt says, Maggie’s colleagues may well be ordered to act otherwise.

But when Val and Yve and Jordan and Mateo and Sam disentangle themselves from the chanting and the sign-waving to bring Adrian into their arms, Maggie knows he’ll be okay. Because there’s no way his family will permit otherwise.

The crowd goes quiet when Alex helps boost him into the overturned bucket someone had brought out for speakers, and Adrian holds Maggie’s eyes and trembling fists at his side, staring out at a sea of his people surrounded by a sea of people who will now be ordered to keep him out of his own bathrooms, and his voice shakes when he starts speaking, but only for a moment.

“My name is Adrian Rodriguez, and I am a man. I am a man, but that’s not the wildest or most exciting thing about me. The wildest thing, the most exciting thing? You ready for this?”

There are one or two yesses, and he pauses, he grins, he takes strength from the steely pride in Maggie’s eyes.

“Nah, come on, yall ready for this?”

More whoops, now, more cheers, more encouragement, sweeps the whole crowd, and he nods, and he continues.

“The wildest, most exciting thing about me? Sometimes – at least a few times a day, more when I’m keeping hydrated, you know, which I need to do more often – sometimes, I have to pee!”

There’s raucous screaming and raucous laughter tainted with rage.

“The fact of the matter is, that just like the ban that demonizes our Muslim siblings; just like the plans to strip health care from the people who need it most; just like the plans to continue the genocide of Native Peoples for the sake of the same companies that bring you the warmest February day on record – this new order is about nothing but wielding power over those who have least, about spreading hatred and blame onto people who deserve it least. Because when I walk into the men’s room, I am no threat. But I am threatened. And when my sisters – especially my sisters of color – roll and walk into women’s restrooms, girls’ restrooms, they are no threat. But they are threatened, and they are beaten, and worse. And when my nonbinary and gender nonconforming siblings – can I get an amen, Sammy?! – are faced with the agonizing choice of where will be safer, where they are least likely to be assaulted, least likely to have the cops called on them, they are not the threat. Policies like this are the threat. Systems like this are the threat. Hatred like this is the threat. So what do we do?”

“Move up, fight back!” Val supplies, and Adrian grins down at her as he hops down from the bucket into Maggie’s arms, as his chant, her chant, their chant, sweeps across the crowd, into flesh and into bones and into the night.

“Thank you,” he yells to be heard into Maggie’s ear, and she shakes her head with shining, proud eyes at him.

“You, Adrian. You, you, you.”

Chapter Summary

anonymous asked:

Hey! Hope you are having a lovely day... I know you are not taking any prompts but I've been having a really bad week and well.. I don't know why but the thought of max lord coming back at the DEO as a consultant has been haunting me for a while .. I mean max flirting with Alex, he doesn't know she is dating Maggie and she is there ...

“I told you, we don’t need his help – “

“But we do, Alex. I don’t like the man any more than you do, but he is the foremost expert on this kind of technology, whether we approve of him as a person or – “

“Aw, Director Henshaw, it’s always good to hear a compliment from a man of your disposition.”

Alex tenses at the sound of his voice – but slightly, slightly, so that only J’onn and Maggie notice – and J’onn just rolls his eyes.

“And your expertise doesn’t make it worth my time or energy to go so far as to compliment you, Mr. Lord,” J’onn deadpans, and Alex smirks and turns around, just as Maxwell Lord is stepping into her space.

Close into her space.

“And Agent Danvers. As mysteriously beautiful as ever. I like what you’re doing with your hair; it’s less straight now, are you using new products?”

Winn snorts without turning from his computer console and Maggie shares a silent smirk with him.

“The only new product I’m interested in discussing with you is this weapon. That’s all, Max.”

“You mean to tell me you didn’t call me here because you missed me? Shame, Agent Danvers. Shame. But we’ll get there.”

J’onn glances at Maggie and her eyes are tense, her eyes are alert, but this is Alex Danvers, and Alex Danvers can take care of herself, and she swears to herself that she’ll respect that.

But that doesn’t mean she can’t put her body between his and Alex’s, because she knows Alex, and she knows her face is blank and her eyes are sarcasm and wit, but she knows her skin is crawling.

“A Maggie Sawyer, NCPD Science Division,” she steps forward and puts out her hand.

Max’s eyes sweep her body briefly, and Alex can’t tell whether he’s checking her out sexually or cataloguing all her body language for a psychological profile. She hates it either way.

“I see I’m not the only local assistance you’re bringing in. Good for you, Director Henshaw: pride costs us more than hunger, or in this case, annihilation.”

Alex rolls her eyes and strides abruptly toward the lab.

“This way.”

He follows, and Maggie watches, Maggie helps, Maggie observes, as – when he actually focuses on the science – Alex and Max work well together.

Maxwell Lord is a world-renowned genius: a stirring of pride swells in Maggie’s chest that her girlfriend not only keeps up with him easily, but outpaces him, surprises him, comes up with things that make his eyebrows rise in surprised delight.

But anger also boils in her blood, because in the moments when Alex is bent over a microscope and he moves to see next, he stands way too close to her body. His eyes trickle down her neckline, and Maggie sees Alex tense in a way the supposed genius doesn’t notice, or doesn’t care about.

His off-handed comments about her missing him, about her missing them, even though Maggie knows – and Alex knows, and hell, even Max knows – there was never a them, build and build and build.

And Maggie swore she wouldn’t be possessive; swore she would let Alex fight her own battles; but as the afternoon draws on, Alex is looking more and more exhausted, more and more frustrated, more and more resigned to having to put up with his incessant flirting until they’re through with his knowledge.

But those days – the days of Alex having to push down her feelings – are over.

So Maggie takes a deep breath and Maggie passes behind Alex and slips her hand from her waist across the small of her back. Alex knows her touch, knows her hands, knows her gentleness, even while staring hard into a microscope lens, and she smiles.

It’s that smile that lets Maggie know that Alex is comfortable, that Alex is ready, that Alex has nothing to hide.

“Babe, have you thought about asking Supergirl to call Star Labs? Because we were talking about it, just randomly, and I think I remember her saying something about a cold gun, and I’m thinking we could adapt some of the principles to – “

“Oh my god, Mags, you’re a genius,” Alex splutters, and blows past Max to get to Maggie, to frame her face with her hands, and kiss her full on the mouth.

Max blinks and he stares and he grimaces.

“So that’s why we never got anywhere, Agent Danvers: you – “

“No. No no no, stop right there, Max. We never got anywhere because you’re a pretentious, selfish asshole. Also, I’m a lesbian. The things are completely unrelated.”

Maggie smirks and Max blinks rapidly and Alex nearly pats her own self on the back.

One of the agents assigned to keeping an eye on Max smirks while the other lets out a soft sigh as he passes his grinning colleague a crisp fifty dollar bill.

“Told you Agent Danvers would snap first. You owe Director Henshaw a twenty, too.”
Come over.

That’s all the text says.

That’s all it says, and that’s all she’s heard from Alex all day, which is unusual, but she’s not surprised.

Not surprised today, because today was her dad’s first day back in the DEO.

Today was all about Jeremiah, all about Alex, and Maggie is alright with that.

Of course she is.

But when she gets her text – her simple text – she rushes.

She knocks, because she could let herself in, but today was bound to be emotional, and today was bound to be hard.

She’s surprised when Alex just says “yeah.”

When the door is unlocked.

Because Alex Danvers never leaves her door unlocked.

But Maggie doesn’t know – not yet, not yet – that Alex texted Maggie and drank her way through a quarter bottle of liquor, straight.

Maggie doesn’t know – not yet, not yet – that Alex left the door unlocked because she trusted Maggie to rush. And she didn’t trust her legs to be able to get her to the door smoothly by the time Maggie gets there.

"Hey,” she offers as she steps inside, locking the door softly behind her because she knows Alex feels better that way. Hell, she feels better that way.

Alex doesn’t turn toward her, and part of Maggie relishes the trust they’ve built in just a few months. The other part of her stomach sinks as she walks around to try to get a look at her girlfriend’s face.

The other part of her stomach sinks as she sees the liquor bottle that she happens to know was much, much more full this morning.
"What’s wrong?"

Alex says nothing, and Maggie braces herself on the counter with a shaky hand.

“How was your dad’s first day?” she asks, her voice soft, her voice nervous, her voice just this side of apologetic.

Alex answers by draining her drink – draining it long and hard and completely – and Maggie’s eyes watch the way Alex’s hands are oh so slightly unsteady, the way her eyes are oh so slightly unfocused.

The way her eyes have been refusing to meet hers this entire time.

“That good, huh?”

She shifts onto the stool in front of Alex, grateful for the way Alex responds to her touch on her calf, the way she automatically moves her foot so Maggie can sit down.

Grateful, at least, that Alex seems to want her there. Seems to accept needing her there.

Even if she won’t speak.

Even if she won’t look at her.

She goes to pour herself another, and Maggie’s heart clenches.

"Whoa whoa whoa, okay. Hold on.” She guides Alex’s hands away from the bottle and Alex just retreats into herself, looking for all the world like a small scolded child, in that little grey hoodie, shoulders rounded, arms limp, body as tiny as she can make it without actually scrunching up.

It breaks Maggie’s heart. But not, she knows, as much as Alex’s heart must be breaking.

"Hey,” she says, and Alex still won’t look up. Maggie touches her arm softly, softly. “I’m here. Okay? You can tell me anything.”

Alex nods, but she still won’t look up, and Maggie’s left hand reaches for her, almost of its own accord, and her index finger settles gently, tenderly, softly, under Alex’s chin.

"Hey, look at me.”

Alex does, and there is nothing but raw defeat in her eyes. Raw pain. Raw agony. Raw torture.

It stops Maggie’s breath, and she tilts her head to keep herself together. Tilts her head to keep her eyes soft, her breathing regular. Because she needed Alex on Valentine’s Day and Alex had held her and listened to her and soothed her all night long.

And tonight is Alex’s Valentine’s Day.

"What happened with your dad?”

Her voice is soft and her eyes are earnest and Alex takes a shuddering breath in, and Maggie’s heart breaks more than it is already broken.

Alex’s lips tremble and she glances up at Maggie’s eyes, on her own for the first time since she walked in, and Maggie knows.

Knows that her eyes are her words, right now, and that’s all she needs.

She stands and she pulls her close.

"Oh, sweetie. Oh.” She pulls Alex’s face into her chest, draws her back into her body, settles the side of her face onto Alex’s hair, and soothes her, soothes her, holds her, as she starts to cry.

As she starts to sob.

No.

As she starts to weep.

The first two shuddering breaths she takes, Maggie thinks her heart might burst from the pain of it.

And then her voice catches in her tears, catches in her growing hysteria, and Maggie turns her face more toward her, expressionless, expressionless, because her own heart, now, is numb. Because if she allows herself to feel the pain, the rage, the agony, of hearing Alex Danvers, feeling Alex Danvers, come completely apart like that in her arms, she would be the one unraveling.

And her baby needs her. Her sweetheart needs her.

She’s grateful when Alex grabs onto her, more than just a hand on her arm, but her other arm wrapped completely around Maggie’s back and grabbing at her shirt.

Grabbing at her shirt like her grasp and her grasp alone can keep Maggie holding her, can keep Maggie close, can keep Maggie from disappearing.

But she needn’t worry, because Maggie wouldn’t leave her right now, or ever. Not even with the most powerful forces on earth standing against her. Not even with all of Cadmus’s worst weapons trained at her head –

“I…” Alex is gasping, but it comes out like a yelp, like a scream, like a plea, and Maggie kisses her hair and rubs her back.

"I’m here, sweetie, I’m here, shhhh, breathe, Ally. Breathe, breathe, breathe.”

Alex gasps again, yelps again, and Maggie’s face remains motionless.

She swears to herself will murder Lilian Luthor for what she’s done to Alex the first chance she gets, Kara’s feelings for her daughter be damned.

"I coul – I couldn’t kill him, Maggie, I couldn’t… I couldn’t kill him,” she’s gasping, she’s pleading, she’s praying, she’s begging, and Maggie kisses her hair again, again, again, rocks her slightly, holds her face close into her chest.

She doesn’t tell her that she doesn’t understand, doesn’t tell her to slow down and start from the beginning, doesn’t tell her to regulate herself.

Because she loves her, loves her, loves her, and it doesn’t matter if she has all the pieces to the Jeremiah Danvers puzzle just yet: all that matters is that she holds the pieces of his broken daughter together, safe, loved, with her bare hands.

"Of course you couldn’t, Ally, he’s your dad. He’s your dad, he’s still your dad,” she whispers, because she doesn’t know, but she can imagine, and her vow to destroy Lilian grows that much stronger.

”He said…” She’s gasping again, and Maggie nods as she rubs her back and kisses her damp forehead, because Alex’s entire body is shuddering with agony, and Maggie is so proud of her girl for letting it out.

So grateful that she trusts her enough to cry to her like about Jeremiah the way Maggie had cried about her own father.

”He said he was doing it for me. Betrayed everyone I… I love… for me.”

Maggie’s heart breaks, because she knows Alex.

She pulls back and Alex grabs at her desperately, and Maggie gives her a small, broken smile. “I’m not going anywhere, Al, but look at me.” Alex won’t, and Maggie lifts her chin again tenderly, softly, lovingly.

Alex’s eyes are beautiful, even swimming in torture, even swollen with tears, even red with agony.

”Hi,” Maggie whispers, and the ghost of a smile dances across Alex’s features.

”Alex, whatever he’s done – whatever he’s doing – it is not your fault. It’s not your fault that he started in the first place, and it’s not your fault that you let him go.”

Alex scoffs and tries to reach for the bottle again, but Maggie brings her hands to her lips instead, and kisses each knuckle in turn as Alex watches, as Alex cries silently.

”You are an incredible, powerful, brave, smart woman, Alex. You know – you know – that this isn’t your fault. That none of this is on you. You know what the brave thing was, Alex? Not pulling that trigger. The brave thing was compassion. The brave thing was empathy. The brave thing was looking out for your soul, because you never would have forgiven yourself if you killed him, Alex, and you don’t deserve to live with that. The brave thing was trusting the people you love – the people he betrayed – to fix this. With you. As a team. What is it Kara’s symbol means, stronger together, right? The brave thing was trusting that, Ally. Trusting the people who love you best.”

She pauses and she watches the hope growing in Alex’s eyes, watches the self-loathing seep out of her shoulders, out of her jawline.

She has never been in love like this.

”Trusting me,” she adds in a voice so small she barely hears herself say it. But Alex hears it. She hears it and her eyes widen and her breath pauses and her lips part slightly.

Maggie stares at her, trying to read her eyes, trying to read if the word trust is, right now, a substitute for something else. Something like love.

“I trust you, too, Alex.” Another long pause, and Maggie swears Alex is trying to figure out the same thing she is.

“We’re going to fix this. Together. You and me and Kara and J’onn and James and Winn. You have people who love you, Alex, to the ends of the earth and so far beyond. I promise you, we’re going to fix this.”

“I don’t deserve you,” Alex murmurs, leaning forward to rest her head again on Maggie’s chest.

“You deserve everything wonderful and nothing less, Alex Danvers. I promise you that.”

Alex sighs and snuggle closer into her, and warmth courses through Maggie’s boiling veins.

“Stay tonight?” Alex pleads into her shirt softly, softly, softly.

“I’m here, Ally. Always.”

anonymous asked:

I think that anon meant when maggie calmed alex down after she freaked at Mon-el but that was a really good fic

Oh holy fuck you’re right well we can tell where my mind is yes yes okay here have the other version too ;)

“You know what, you need to – “

She pauses because she wants to say something stronger, something more threatening, but her dad, her daddy, she’s his little girl, so what comes out is, “back up.”

Kara takes Mon El’s arm and leads him away, because Kara knows her sister better than anyone, and she might be in shock, she might be restraining herself, but Rao that won’t last for long.

And sure enough, Alex is going to follow, but Maggie is there, and Maggie is touching her arms, her hands, and she’s staring up into her eyes.

“Alex, hey, hey, it’s okay – “

“It’s not okay, Maggie, did you hear what he – “

Maggie stands her ground even as Alex tries to work her way around her body, but without any real effort, because she won’t hurt Maggie, and they both know it.

“Yes, babe, I heard him, I did, and he’s an ass, and we know that, and he’s out of line, and we know that, but babe, there’s gonna be far too much paperwork for poor J’onn to fill out if you murder the bastard in Supergirl’s kitchen.”

Alex stares down at her for a moment with shocked eyes and slightly open lips, and then she’s tossing her hair, and she’s chuckling humorlessly.

“You know I’d kill anyone else for making light of this.”

“Well, good thing you know I’m not making light of it, then,” Maggie says calmly, says firmly, says with cool eyes and a soft grip on her hands. “Alex, he’s an ass. He’s an ass who’s screwing your sister, whom he’s uncomfortably convinced that she has feelings for him because he gaslit and wore her the hell down, and now, on top of all the other reasons to kill him, he’s questioning the integrity of the man who Cadmus has spent years keeping from you. I know. I do. And I can easily order a hit out on him. But not tonight, Ally, not now, not like this. This is about your dad. Okay?”

Alex takes a long, deep breath and stares over Maggie’s shoulder to where Jeremiah is telling Mon-
Eliza leaves. She sighs and puts her forehead on Maggie’s gently.

“Thank you, Mags. I…”

Maggie just shakes her head. “Hey, you stopped me from beating down on that racist homophobe last week while I was on duty, that was deeply helpful for my ability to, you know, keep my job. Irony, but, hey.” She offers Alex a small grin, and Alex returns it faintly, but fondly.

“Let me go check on Kara.” Maggie nods and Alex kisses her lips slowly, softly, deeply.

Maggie’s breath hitches and her lips part in surprise as Alex’s tongue flits into her mouth, just traipsing over her bottom lip.

“You’re perfect,” she whispers as she pulls away with still-closed eyes, and Maggie stays standing motionless for a long moment as Alex squeezes her hands slightly and steps around her to find Kara.

“You have quite the effect on my daughter, dear.” Eliza’s voice shakes Maggie out of her Alex-induced trance, and she reddens and immediately reminds herself to unclench her fists, because no one is going to beat her, no one is going to call her filthy, no one is going to tell her to go back where she came from.

Because this is not Blue Springs, and even if it were, Alex would never allow it. Hell, she wouldn’t allow it, not anymore.

She makes herself focus on Eliza’s soft, if sad, eyes.

“Well, like I told your husband, ma’am, Alex deserves the best, and I… I’m not that, but I try ever day to be for her.”

Eliza stares at Maggie for a long moment, silently, and Maggie keeps her gaze as long as she can handle it.

“She’s never been in love before, you know. My Alexandra. Make sure you never stop trying to be the best for her, alright?”

Maggie and Eliza both turn their eyes toward Alex, who’s got her arms wrapped around an apologetic-looking Kara.

“Never, Dr. Danvers. Never.”

Chapter Summary

anonymous asked:

I could really, really use a fic with suicidal ideation (passive or not) right now. I completely understand if you don't have time for the next few weeks/months as you catch up on prompts, though. Your mental health and sanity and well-being trumps all. Love you & hope you have a good day!

“How could you not have seen this, Alexandra?”

“Eliza, I – “

“No, Kara, you tried to warn her, apparently, but she was too stubborn to – “

“Well, you didn’t see it either, Mom, and you were his wife – “

“That’s enough, Alexandra –”

“And that’s enough, Dr. Danvers.”

Maggie’s voice is soft, and it’s low, but it’s firm, and it’s unexpected, and it makes all three Danvers women jump and turn and stare.

“I respect you, Dr. Danvers, and I care for you deeply because you brought the most beautiful woman I’ve ever known into this world. And I respect that you’re suffering terribly right now, but so is Alex. And I need you to back off of her and let her try to heal.”

“Well, I…”

But there are no other words to say. Eliza stares at Maggie, and Alex stares at Maggie, and Kara stares between all of them as Maggie steadily returns Eliza’s gaze.

“You’re right, dear, of course you are. Alex, I… I’m sorry, I – “

“Sorry doesn’t cut it, Mom,” Alex interrupts, and she swings past her mother and out the door.

“Alex,” Kara calls, but she knows it’s hopeless. She glances at Maggie, and Maggie returns it grimly, and they both know Alex needs to be found. Immediately.

Because Alex isn’t alright. Is far from alright.

Alex is broken, and she’s DEO trained, so she’s already down the stairs and out of the building.

She’s already figuring out the ways she can end it, the ways she can escape it, the ways she can stop being so useless, the ways she can stop being so worthless. The ways she can stop failing.
The ways she can fly like her sister, and die because she can never be her. Never be as good as her. And that’s okay: she wants Kara to shine. Always. Always.

She doesn’t want to leave.

But she doesn’t know how to stay, how to stay with this agony on repeat in her mind, unable to shut off, unwilling to stop, merciless, cold, hateful.

She knows where to go.

Kara takes to the sky and Maggie takes to the garage, and Eliza collapses onto the sofa with her head in her one hand and her daughter’s unfinished glass of scotch in the other.

Kara finds Alex first, and she shoots a text off to Maggie. Just an address. Just the word roof. Just the word now.

“Alex,” she calls, looking for all the world like Supergirl, but sounding for all the world like a scared little sister.

“Alex, come away from the ledge.”

Alex laughs, and it sounds like her, but it doesn’t.

It sounds like her, but it’s tortured.

It sounds like her, but it’s broken.

“You can see it from here. The forest. Where I let him go. Where my father told me I had to kill him or let him go back and help those bastards kill everyone I love. You can see it from here.”

“Alex,” Kara starts again, but Alex is just bringing her toes closer to the edge of the roof, and she’s laughing that hollowed out laugh again.

“Eliza’s right. I should have known. I should have listened to you, Kara, I should have seen it. He’s my father, I should have known that he – “

“Alex, you couldn’t have known.”

The new, breathless voice behind her makes her tremble, and Kara gets ready to dive, but Alex’s feet stay planted.

Maggie approaches from behind her slowly, slowly, carefully, like she’s walking up to a small leopard with her foot caught in a trap.

“You couldn’t have known, Ally.” She uses the name she only uses in private even though Kara is hovering above them; uses it because Alex needs it. Because Alex needs to feel unique. Special. Wanted. Needed.

Because she is.

Alex doesn’t turn around, doesn’t look at Maggie, but she plays along.

“I’m his daughter, I – “
“Yeah, and you know what, babe? I know something about daughters and fathers.” Her voice is soft and her voice is as broken as Alex feels, and it’s enough to make Alex incline her head, just slightly, to the side, just slightly toward Maggie.

Kara nods at Maggie and Maggie steps a little closer.

“I know that when your father betrays you, it doesn’t break your heart. It replaces it with a gaping, bloody hole, just leaves your chest shredded and open and worthless. And you’ll do anything, believe anything, to get him back. Except betray yourself. And you didn’t. Betray yourself. You let him live. You trusted the people you love to help you. To stop him, and Cadmus. You chose you, Alex, and that’s nothing to be ashamed of. But this, Ally? You step off that ledge, babygirl, and I – “

But Alex cuts her off with a harsh laugh that sends chills down both Maggie and Kara’s spines.

“Oh please, you think Kara would let me die? My sister can fly, my sister is faster than a speeding bullet. My sister knows the man who was her father for a year better than I know the man who was my father my entire life, I – “

“Alex, no. It’s not that, it’s not a competition. Your love for Jeremiah isn’t your weakness, Alex. Love never is. You taught me that. Love makes us stronger, Alex. You love hard, you always have. Since the day I came to this planet, you have loved me so hard. And you love J’onn so hard you were willing to throw your entire life away to stand by his side. And you love Maggie, hard. And you love Jeremiah, hard, and you love Eliza so hard that her words feel like knives in your skin because all you want is to feel her love you that hard in return. You love him, Alex, no matter what he’s done, no matter who he’s become. And that doesn’t make you a failure. It makes you a hero.”

“Listen to your sister, Ally,” Maggie whispers, but somehow, Alex hears it.

She’s unaware that she reaches her hand back to accept Maggie’s trembling, outstretching fingertips. She’s unaware that she lets Kara swoop down and carry both her and Maggie away from the ledge, away from her escape.

She’s unaware that Maggie is picking her up, bridal style, that she’s wrapping her arms around her neck as Kara opens the door for them, as Maggie carries her down, slowly, down, Kara spotting her, down the steps, down, down, down, until they reach ground level, when Maggie breathlessly presses a kiss to Alex’s slack forehead and sets her down.

She’s unaware that she keeps her arms wrapped around Maggie’s neck, that she leans them both back into Kara, because standing on her own, standing without her body connected to both of these women – existing without her body connected to both of these women – simply isn’t possible.

She’s unaware of how they wind up getting her home, but she’s aware of Maggie stripping her clothes off while Kara runs her a bath.

She’s unaware of how she gets into the bath, but she’s aware that it smells like all her favorite scents, that Kara has put on her favorite music, that Maggie has set candles all around the bathroom.

She’s unaware of how she gets wrapped in a big, soft towel and when she starts sobbing, weeping, gasping for breath like she’s a newborn just learning how to use her lungs, but she’s aware of Kara’s strong arms around her torso, of Maggie’s soft kisses to every centimeter of her face.

“You are worth it, Alex Danvers,” Maggie whispers as Kara smooths the wet hair from her forehead and nods softly, profusely, lovingly.

“You are worth everything.”

HC for Maggie/James BrOTP: James picks Maggie up in order to hug her: bending that far down is bad for his back. He puts her on the counter for serious/long talks to save both their necks.

Okay I know you said HC but we all need fluff and we all need James and we all need Maggie and we all need James x Maggie BroTP so like.

Alex and Kara exchange raised eyebrows the first time it happens.

It’s at the bar – of course it’s at the bar – and James and Maggie have teamed up against the Danvers girls (Winn has been banned from playing), and James is leaning over Maggie and repositioning her fingers and giving her soft encouragement, and if anyone else were that close to her woman, Alex would be threatening them with her index finger, but it’s James and he’s gentle and Maggie is laughing and Maggie is relaxed and Maggie is happy, and then suddenly she’s sinking the 3 ball into the corner pocket and she’s letting out a victorious yell and tossing up her arms to hug James, and he just scoops her up by the middle of her back and spins her around at his full height, and she grabs onto him and laughs and laughs and squeals and Alex smiles because she loves them so much and because she knows exactly how she’s going to hug Maggie next time she’s that excited.

It becomes a thing, James picking Maggie up.

And Maggie would normally be distinctly anti-loss-of-control, but it feels safe with James, just like it feels safe with Alex.

Because James is the big brother she always wanted and never had, and Alex is the woman she’s desperate to spend the rest of her life with.

But James is even taller than Alex – and they’re not remotely attracted to each other – so when he lifts her, it’s makes her squeal and giggle in a way that’s somehow different than when Alex does it.

And James goes all out with it.

He doesn’t just pick Maggie up when he wants to hug her and spin her around, like when she sank that 3 ball or when she tossed a dart right in the center of the target or when she finished the 10k they were racing together.

He does it when they’re calm and he just wants to talk.

When they’re at the DEO and Alex is out on a mission and Maggie is starting to panic because she shouldn’t have reported in by now, James scoops her up and plops her on the edge of Vasquez’s work station – much to Susan’s bemusement – and looks her square in the eyes (he still has to bend down, but not nearly as much).

“Alex is going to be just fine, Maggie. I promise you.”

“You can’t promise that.”

He has to grab at her waist and swing her off the table so she doesn’t tumble over and sprain an ankle in her haste to get to Alex, and he smiles broadly as he watches her rush into Alex’s arms.

He does it when they’re at Kara’s for game night and they get into involved chats about DEO and NCPD policy. He sets her on the counter and they’re so involved in each other’s perspectives, in I know right and yes exactly and that’s what I’m saying that they don’t notice Winn, Alex, and Kara snapping pictures, because none of them have ever seen anything quite so adorable.

And he does it when she comes to his apartment late one night, wringing her hands and smoothing down her already skin tight jeans. He lifts her up and sets her on his counter and asks what’s on her mind.

“I wanna marry her, James. I need to marry her. She’s everything, she’s just… Help me plan the perfect proposal?”

And when he smiles his megawatt smile and leans down to wrap her in a massive bear hug, he doesn’t have to go far.

“Welcome to the family, sis. Welcome to the family.”

bi-genius asked:

Hi, I know you're not taking prompts so feel free to ignore this, but I was thinking a fix it where Kara and Alex (maybe after Maggie talks to her about it) actually talk about what happened between them with the whole Jeremiah thing? ("You're either part of the family or you're not.") On another note, I'm so sorry things suck at the moment, I'm thinking of you in this hard time. You deserve all the best things in life, I hope you know that. ❤ (again, feel free to ignore the prompt

_Talk to her, Al._

She’d spent the night weeping in Maggie’s arms, spent the night alternating between gasping sobbed explanations of all that had happened throughout the day and allowing herself to be soothed by the strong arms and soft kisses of her girlfriend.

Maggie had said close to nothing for most of the night. Close to nothing beyond affirmations and reassurances and everything, everything, everything, that she knew, somehow, that Alex needed to hear.

But it was morning, now, and Alex’s eyes were still swollen, but they were dry, and she was slipping into DEO-mode, and she could handle a gentle nudge.

So once they both got to work, Maggie texted her two things. The first read _You are amazing, Alex. Thank you for letting me be here for you._ and the second, twenty minutes later, was _Talk to her, Al._

_How did you know I’m scared to talk to her?_

_I’m a detective, Agent Danvers._

The response made Alex smile helplessly.

_You detect, do you?_

_That’s right, Danvers. Now go talk to your sister._

She does.

She finds her standing with James, his arm around her shoulder, no doubt as she tells him about yesterday, about Jeremiah and, probably, about Alex.

“Kara.”

Her little sister freezes with her back toward her, and James looks over Kara’s shoulder at Alex with deep sadness in his eyes. She tries to convey how sorry she is with the expression on her face, and maybe it works, or maybe James just understands how hard yesterday was – how hard today is going to be – for both Danvers girls, because he gives her a small, reassuring smile back.

“Yeah,” Kara says without turning around, and she knows she’s drying her tears. Her heart breaks, because these two don’t hide tears from each other.

“I’ll let you two talk,” James says softly as he squeezes Kara’s shoulders gently and steps away, touching Alex’s arm with a reassuring hand as he does.

“What do you want, Alex?” Kara asks without turning around, and Alex’s heart shreds. They’d worked together so well last night, so flawlessly. She’d hoped that meant they’d forgiven each other. That Kara had forgiven Alex.

She apparently was wrong.

Again.

“Kara, please.” She watches Kara sigh and turn around, arms folded across her chest, and it looks like she spent as much of the night crying as Alex did.

“Kara, I’m sorry. I… the things I said to you, they were… they were inexcusable. I failed as an agent yesterday, but more importantly, I… I failed as a sister.”

“So I’m back to being your sister now,” Kara observes, but her voice is more pained than cutting.

Alex steps forward and nods to herself. “I deserve that.” She forces herself to look into stormy blue eyes, blue eyes that have saved her life on more than one occasion; blue eyes that have been her home for so many years.

“Kara, you will always be my sister. You will always be my family. I don’t know what… I just wanted so badly for you to be wrong, I wanted – “

Her voice cracks and her face twists up, and she’s reminded forcibly of the dreadful day she told Kara that she, not J’onn, killed Astra.

“I’m sorry,” she squeaks, and Kara doesn’t hesitate. She takes her big sister into her arms and she rocks her, rocks her, rocks her.

“You just wanted him back,” she whispers as Alex grabs at her collared shirt, hard, messy, desperate.

“You just wanted him back, and I should’ve… I should have come to you, not Mon-El, not Winn, I just… I was trying to protect you, Alex, I…”

“I know you were, I – “

“You’re not alone in this, Alex. I know you felt alone yesterday. Like you were the only one on his side. But J’onn was fooled, too, and it… you are never alone, Alex. Never. I promise you.”

Alex pulls back and stares at Kara with streaming eyes.

“You’ve been feeling alone for a long time now, too.”

Kara freezes and tries to shake it off, but Alex knows her better.

She pokes the space between Kara’s eyebrows with a shaky finger.
“Crinkle,” she explains, and Kara huffs.

“James and Winn were wrong, Kara. They were wrong to lie to you, and I was wrong to let them. I encouraged them to tell you, sure, but it – you – we all failed you. And I wasn’t understanding with Livewire, and no one believed you about Lena, and I…I know you’ve been feeling alone, too. But you’re not, Kara. Ever. I will always be your big sister, and you will always be my person. You don’t have to be in a relationship with someone who constantly disrespects you to feel close to something, to feel needed, to feel close to all that you’ve lost. You have your family, Kara. You have me. Always.”

Kara’s lips are trembling and her body is starting to shake, and Alex just nods – like Maggie does whenever Alex is silently realizing something – and she pulls her back to her, pulls her close.

“I love you, Kara. You and me are always, always family. Alright?”

“Stronger together,” Kara chokes out as she grabs at the back of Alex’s uniform.

“Stronger together,” Alex whispers, because they are.

Chapter Summary

anonymous asked:

What about morning after the Hug, Maggie stayed the night and then they talk in the morning like idk I just wanna know what happened after the Hug

It takes Alex about a half hour of full on sobbing to realize that Maggie isn’t going to let her drink more tonight.

She cries harder, then, because she’s never felt loved like this, because she’s never had to just deal with the pain like this. Because Maggie doesn’t care that she’s getting tears and snot all over her shirt. Because she’d failed. She’d failed everyone. Kara, Jeremiah, her mother, J’onn, the entire city. Herself. Everyone.

And Maggie is still here, and Maggie is still holding her, whispering soothing words into her ear and reminding her to breathe and telling her that she’s perfect, she’s perfect, she’s perfect.

So Alex cries harder, and by the time she feels like there is no water left inside her, her body feels like she just spent a solid twelve hours training in the green room at the DEO.

She doesn’t know how Maggie knows, because she doesn’t say anything. But as she tries to stand up – she realizes with a jolt that she must still be drunk – Maggie hops down from the stool and braces herself firmly and lifts Alex off of her feet with surprising strength and balance and ease.

Alex just clings to her as Maggie carries her to the bed – their bed, perhaps – and sets her down gently.

Alex stares up at this amazing woman, this woman that she’s breaking in front of yet doesn’t seem to think less of her – if anything, she’s looking at her like she likes her, loves her?, more than ever – and she doesn’t deserve her, doesn’t deserve her strong arms and steady hands and soft kisses to her head and soothing whispers in her ear and being called sweetie. Doesn’t deserve any of it, no matter what Maggie insists.

She doesn’t deserve her, but she needs the pain to just go away.

She reaches up and grabs at Maggie’s face, pulls her crashing down to meet her lips, pulls her off of feet so she lands in a sprawl on top of her, and she hears Maggie gasp into her mouth, feels Maggie open her lips in surprise, and Alex takes advantage, slipping her tongue into Maggie’s mouth, and Maggie lets out an involuntary moan, but then Maggie is pulling away, away, away.

And Alex breaks, again, because maybe Maggie knows she’s right. Maybe Maggie knows Alex doesn’t deserve her.

She’s leaning up on her elbows and there are tears in her own eyes, now, as she stares down at Alex’s terrified face.
“Al, if you want me, if that’s what you want right now, to lose yourself in this, in me, that’s… that’s fine, you can. You can use my body however you need to. I lo – I’m wild about you, and I trust you, and I always want you, and I understand. But you’re… Alex, you’re hurting, badly, and you deserve… you deserve better than a frenzied fix-it fuck.”

Alex stares up at her for so long Maggie is terrified she’s said the wrong thing, terrified she’s made Alex feel rejected.

“Hold me?” Alex rasps after a long moment, and Maggie smiles softly.

“Of course, Danvers.” Alex shifts so Maggie can pull the covers out from under her, so she can help her out of her sweatshirt. Alex watches as Maggie slips out of her jeans, and Alex reaches trembling fingers up when Maggie’s fingers travel to her shirt.

Maggie assents, stepping closer so Alex can undo the buttons herself. She watches as Alex concentrates through puffy, red eyes, and she knows she’s never truly been in love until this woman.

Her fingers skate across her skin as Maggie shrugs out of her now undone shirt, and she hops over Alex’s body to slip under the covers behind her. Alex automatically lifts her head so Maggie can rest one arm underneath her neck, and she shifts back so her body is flush against Maggie’s, and Maggie smiles as Alex’s entire body relaxes, as she sighs into the safety of Maggie’s arms.

Alex’s breathing evens out eventually, but Maggie doesn’t sleep.

She doesn’t sleep, because she knows.

And sure enough, Alex screams for her father, screams for Kara, as she sits bolt upright, shaking and breathless.

“Hey, hey, Alex, I’m here, I’m here, Kara’s okay, everything’s okay, I’ve got you, sweetie, I’ve got you.”

Alex looks around wildly and stares at Maggie like she’s never seen her before, like she’s trying to figure out where she is. Who she is. Why she deserves the woman with the soft hands and soft voice and even softer eyes. But her breathing regulates the longer she looks, and Maggie lets her look as long as she needs to.

It doesn’t happen again.

Because when she sun starts to rise, Maggie is still awake. Still awake and watching over her girl, watching over her sweetheart, soothing her with kisses to her face designed to rouse her out of a dream but not fully wake her each time Alex’s body starts to tense in sleep.

“Good morning, beautiful,” she whispers when Alex’s eyes start to stir open.

And for a moment, for a blissful moment, she remembers nothing but the warmth of the woman next to her, but the smile greeting her, but the love infused in the beautiful.

Maggie knows, and her hands, her lips, her body, is there to soothe Alex when she starts to remember.

“I know you’ve got a long day coming up, so can I… can I treat you to breakfast, babe?”
A slow, grateful smile battles the agony that had been growing on Alex’s face, and she is so, so thankful that Maggie is treating her warmly, treating her tenderly, but also treating her like she’s a strong, capable DEO agent with a tough mission ahead of her.

“At that place with the apple-spice waffles?”

Maggie scoffs playfully, gently. “Always at that place with the apple-spice waffles. What kind of girlfriend do you think I am, Danvers?”

Alex smiles and pulls her down with groggy hands for a kiss. Her tongue flits across Maggie’s bottom lip and she relishes the way Maggie shudders pleasantly in her hands, the way she moans softly, the way she opens her mouth and gives Alex’s tongue entry, the way she sighs into her mouth and the way her strong body goes pliant in Alex’s arms.

“The best kind, Maggie,” Alex rasps when they pull apart with swollen lips and hearts that are starting to heal. “The best kind.”

Chapter Summary

anonymous asked:

So... I was thinking if you could write something to lighten up the mood a bit :/ After all that hurt for Alex and Kara and that much karamel x.x.... How about kara asking alex for a device that would weaken her so she could go on a romantic get away with lena without worrying she's gonna break everything or hurt lena. And maybe some Sanvers Domestic Fluff....

When she hears the fluttering at the window, she smiles to herself and starts brewing extra coffee, starts rummaging around to make extra pancake batter.

“Good morning, Kara,” Maggie sing-songs without turning around. “You realize we have a door, don’t you?”

Kara guffaws and steps into the kitchen with a broad smile on her face. She blushes slightly when she realizes that Maggie is wearing only one of Alex’s old college t-shirts and a pair of boxers, but Maggie doesn’t seem bothered, so Kara decides she won’t be, either.

Especially not if she’s going to ask Alex what she needs to ask Alex.

“Good morning to you, too, woman who makes the best chocolate chips pancakes in the galaxy.” Kara grabs a fistful of pancakes that Maggie had already made and set aside for her and Alex.

“Anahcasathalirly.”

“What’s that there, Sunshine?” Maggie asks with a furrowed brow but a huge grin as she whips up more batter.

“And I can say that literally,” Alex supplies for her sister as she steps out of the shower, hair still wet and wearing nothing but a fluffy purple towel. She pads over to her favorite women and pokes Kara’s nose and kisses her cheek before kissing Maggie’s lips long, soft, passionate.

Kara adjusts her glasses behind them and clears her throat after it seems like they’ve had long enough, thank you very much.

“Sorry, Little Danvers,” Maggie offers, but she doesn’t look sorry at all.

Alex is beaming as she grabs a pancake off of the plate, too.

“God, it’s both of you, isn’t it, what, did Eliza make you compete for food as kids?”

Kara and Alex just lean into each other and laugh, laugh, laugh, because the sun is shining and it’s a new day and they’re all together, together, together.
“Alex, I wanted to ask you something,” Kara ventures when their laughter finally subsides.

“Shoot,” she says, taking another pancake as she perches on a stool, completely unbothered by the fact that she’s naked under her towel.

Kara adjusts her glasses and Maggie glances sidelong at her as she stirs extra batter.

“Oh boy, this is gonna be a doozy,” she interprets, and Kara blushes. Maggie nods, confirming her own diagnosis. “Yep. Out with it, Little Danvers.”

“Well, um, Alex, I… I wanted to take Lena away for a weekend, and I… It’s been so hard, you know, since we defeated Cadmus, you know, for… for all of us, and I… I thought we could use a romantic weekend together…”

Alex cocks an eyebrow and swipes her finger through the batter Maggie’s working on. “You want a destination recommendation or something? Because I’m pretty sure a Super and a Luthor can get a VIP stay anywhere – “

Kara adjusts her glasses again, and Maggie knows what’s coming a moment before she says it. She tries to hide her smirk and watches her girlfriend closely.

“I was… I just… I was wondering if you could maybe make me something. Portable. To drain my powers, just… safely, so I… so I don’t… hurt her or… or break anything…”

Alex blinks and Alex stares and then Alex rounds on Maggie. “Is that why you keep going on those late night runs to Kara’s place? To Lena’s? Are they…” She rounds back on her sister. “Kara, what have you been breaking?”

She adjusts her glasses furiously. “The bed, the couch, the kitchen – “

Alex throws up her hands as Maggie snickers. “Lalalala, okay, yes, good, I’m so glad my sister is happy and getting laid and just… yes, good, but my god I just woke up, Kara, I don’t need a blow-by-blow of my little sister’s kinks – “

“Well you asked her, Danvers. And don’t forget how many times the poor innocent soul’s walked in on our kinks…”

“You hush up or there will be no more kinks for you, Sawyer.”

“Oh please, Danvers, I’d like to see you try and resist me.”

“Um, guys. Still here. Still humbly asking for help.”

“Sorry, Sunshine.”

“Yeah, what she said. Um…” Alex adjusts her towel and stares off into the distance like she does when she’s working on a problem, when she’s conducting an experiment in her head. She nods to herself and she starts muttering slightly, and Maggie and Kara exchange a grin, because they know what comes next.

“It can be done. Yeah. Red sun lamps. We can have them installed in strategic corners of wherever you’re staying, even probably work them up as mood lighting, like regular light bulbs… I’ll have to uh… figure out what to tell J’onn about the allocation of the resources…”

Maggie chuckles. “Oh please, you think he doesn’t know? Alex, your gay thoughts were apparently so loud he knew even though he didn’t explicitly read your mind. You think Kara doesn’t think just as loudly as you do?”

Alex smirks as her fingers collide with Kara’s in the batter bowl.

“I don’t believe I’m helping my sister get laid.”

“You love me.”

“That I do, Kara. That I do.”
It’s the middle of the night and Alex can’t sleep.

She tosses and she turns and she sighs and she bites her lip and she tries to run through the astrophysics equations that used to soothe her to sleep in college, but nothing’s working, nothing’s working, nothing’s working, because Maggie’s sleeping, but all she wants… all she wants is Maggie. Her hand starts to skate down her stomach and under her pajama pants, and she whines slightly before she can stop herself.

“Alright there, Danvers?” Maggie rasps sleepily, and Alex jumps slightly.

“I’m so sorry, did I wake you? I didn’t – “

But Maggie is rearing up on her elbow and squinting into the darkness at Alex’s face, and a slow smile is growing on her lips as her eyes rake down Alex’s needy body.

“Something you want, Danvers?”

Alex’s breath hitches and she licks her lips and she stares wide eyed as Maggie’s body wakes fully, as she documents every piece of Alex’s desire just by looking at her, just by reading her like her favorite book.

And Alex hasn’t the faintest idea how, but Maggie reads her perfectly.

“You wanna be a good girl and strip for me? Not that I don’t love your pajamas, I do, but um… I wanna touch what’s underneath them.”

Alex gasps softly and does as she’s asked, lifting her hips so she can drag her pajama pants and thong down off her ankles, sitting up slightly so she can drag Maggie’s henley over her head.

Maggie growls deep in her throat, and Alex’s hips roll of their own accord.

“You are so beautiful, Ally.”

“Maggie, I – “

“I know. I’m gonna give you everything you want, okay?”

Alex nods desperately, her hips continuing to roll into the air, because she needs Maggie, needs her, needs her.

“Get on your stomach,” Maggie asks, and Alex complies eagerly, willingly, desperately.
Maggie kisses the back of her neck tenderly, softly, lovingly.

“Color, sweetie?”

“Green, Mags, green.”

Maggie grins and shucks off her own shirt, her own underwear, carelessly tossing them to the side. Her focus isn’t on herself. It’s on the gorgeous woman laying underneath her.

She kisses every inch of her bare back, every freckle and every birth mark, every scar and every stretch mark, until Alex is breathless just from her tender kisses, until Alex is whining and desperate and wrecked just from Maggie’s worshiping.

“Something more you want, Al?” Her voice is husky and Alex whines and grinds her hips down into the bed at the sound of it.

“You,” she begs, and Maggie smiles.

“Good girl, Alex, I love when you tell me what you want. You wanna do a great job for me and tell me exactly what you want me to do to you?”

Alex loses her breath but Maggie paints kisses across her shoulders, runs gentle hands up and down her sides, and Alex pants her answer out. “Tie me down and do what you want with me.”

Maggie tosses her head back and groans and she knows Alex is smiling from the effect her words are having.

“How do you ask, gorgeous girl?”

Alex whines and grinds her hips down hard into the bed.

“Please, Maggie. Please?”

“Your wish is my command, princess.”

She leans over to their nightstand and pulls a pair of cuffs out of the drawer, and Alex whimpers as Maggie pauses with them just above Alex’s hands, which are sprawled out above her head.

“Color?” she rasps.

“Green, green, please, please.”

The cuff snap closed and Maggie checks meticulously to make sure they’re not too tight, kissing above and below Alex’s wrists before shifting back down her body to continue her ministrations.

“What I want with you, huh?” she asks, and Alex whimpers again.

She runs a finger down Alex’s inner thigh, and Alex barely contains a scream.

“Oh, be a good girl and let me know how you’re feeling. Don’t hold back, baby, I love your voice, I love when you scream for me.”

She accompanies her words with slipping her hand underneath Alex’s body, soaking herself in Alex’s clit, and Alex lets go for her.

Maggie groans under Alex’s unrestrained scream.
“Good girl, darling, you sound so fucking amazing. Do you want me to come inside you baby?”

“Whatsoever you want.” Alex’s voice is wrecked and Maggie loves it, but she’s not ready to give in, not yet.

“Be my best girl and tell me what you want.”

Alex screams at that, slams her hands down into Maggie’s palm at that.

“My clit,” Alex gasps. “Pressure, you, I need…”

Maggie grins and nods and complies. “Good girl, Ally, you’re perfect. I love when you tell me what you need, babe, it’s so sexy. You’re so sexy, you’re so fucking perfect for me.”

Alex moans and tugs at her cuffs and Maggie stops immediately.

“You okay, babe?”

“Yes, yeah, god, Maggie, don’t stop, please.”

Maggie obeys, grinding her palm up into Alex’s clit as Alex slams her hips down, down, harder, faster, soaking Maggie’s hand with how turned on she is, dripping all over for her and making Maggie nearly lose control.

She stops, stops, stops, because she needs to breathe, because she’s so turned on by this woman, this woman naked and on her stomach and cuffed and writhing and begging underneath her.

“Mags, you’re not gonna hurt me,” Alex reassures her, but Maggie remains frozen.

“I love when you’re this turned on, babe. We can stop, we can always stop, if you want, of course, but Maggie, you don’t… you don’t have to be scared. I want you. I want you to be able to let go. I want you to do what you want to me. Please, Mags. If you want.”

Maggie does want. She wants so badly that she can barely rasp out the words she has planned for Alex next.

“God, babe, you are so fucking wet me for me, do you have any idea how hot you are?”

“Fuck, Ally, that’s right, be a good girl and rock your ass back for me, just like that, good girl, good girl.”

“I love when you scream my name like that, Danvers, I love knowing you’re mine.”

“Wanna be my best girl, my only girl, and cum for, Ally?”

And she does, she does, she does, screaming and writhing and begging and cursing and pleading, but the words that surprise them both aren’t the filthy strings of curses or the screaming of Maggie’s name while she rocks through her orgasm.

The words that surprise them both are the words she says as Maggie unlocks her cuffs and kisses her wrists tenderly, gently, lovingly.

“I wanna be yours like this forever, Maggie Sawyer.”

“Well then you will be, Danvers. You will be.”
anonymous asked:

Hi Mom, I'm really struggling at the moment and I know it's your birthday (happy birthday btw) so I don't want to burden you but I have this thing about contact with people I love and sometimes I focus on their hands. It would be cool to see Alex getting relief from Maggie's touch or the way they connect with touch if that makes sense? Sorry if this is weird and thank you for all you do.

It happens when she’s about to gut Mon-El for going after her father.

Maggie’s hands on her body, Maggie’s hands not restraining, not restricting, just… there. Just there, just tender, just loving. Her hands, the extension of her heart.

And immediately, Alex’s body relaxed.

It happens when she wakes up screaming about Jeremiah, screaming that she didn’t mean what she said to Kara, screaming for them not to hurt Kara, that Kara is her sister, her family, her everything.

Maggie’s hands on her too-hot skin, Maggie’s hands sweeping her hair off her slick forehead, Maggie’s fingers tracing patterns of affection, patterns of safety, that sink through Alex’s skin straight into her bones.

It happens in the field, too. When Lilian Luthor is goading Alex, when she’s taunting her with smoothly spoken words about what Jeremiah’s been through all these years, all for the sake of his eldest. Maggie touches her, just slightly, and it’s through her tactical gear, but it’s enough.

It’s enough to calm Alex enough to take the smart shot – the one, not at Lilian Luthor herself, but at the canister of propellant above her, incapacitating every Cadmus agent they were surrounded by.

It happens at breakfast, when Alex is listening to the news and her hands are starting to shake, and Maggie touches the small of her back as she passes behind her to get something from the fridge. Alex’s muscles relax immediately, because her touch mean that Maggie knows.

Maggie always knows, and her hands have become Alex’s anchor.

And she’s never trusted herself to be this steady.
Maggie called Cat Grant when Livewire was on the loose, because her girlfriend’s kid sister needed her then. And she’s calling Cat Grant again now, because Kara needs her now.

She hadn’t expected the Queen of All Media to save her number, but Cat picks up on the first ring and addresses Maggie by name.

“Detective Sawyer, tell me she’s fine and that you’re simply wasting my very precious time for the sake of a social call.”

Her voice is clipped and just on this side of professional, but Maggie easily detects the concern underneath it.

“She’s fine, Ms. Grant, she’s fine.”

She hears Cat sigh and she bites her lip. “Then what, pray tell, are you calling me for?”

“She’s fine, Ms. Grant, but she… she needs you.”

She doesn’t specify who: Kara or Supergirl. She knows she doesn’t need to.

There’s a long pause, and Maggie is about to ask if she’s still there.

“What happened?” Cat asks before she can, and her voice is thick.

“Best for her to tell you details, but the short of it, Alex’s father came back from the dead only to sort of… well, betray everyone. And she’s in this new relationship that she thinks is going to make her feel at least something, and – “

“I’m getting the next flight out. Thank you, Detective Sawyer.”

Maggie expects that to be it, but Cat’s still on the line. A brief pause. Then:

“Alex. Kara’s sister. Your girlfriend, correct? Is she alright? She… from my experiences with her, she’s a brave woman. And Kara idolizes her. You’re taking good care of her, too, I trust?”

Maggie smiles softly. “I’m doing my best with both Danvers girls, ma’am, but I think Kara could use a more familiar face than mine.”
“Well, as I said, I’ll arrange for a sitter for Carter and be on the next flight out. Thank you, Detective. For taking care of those girls. Don’t forget to be good to yourself, too.”

This time, the line does disconnect before Maggie can say any more.

But she smiles, because Cat Grant is on her way to Kara.

She makes sure Alex knows to keep Mon-El away from Kara’s apartment that night. J’onn invents work for him, gladly.

They don’t need a body to be dropped in Kara’s apartment by one Cat Grant.

The paperwork alone would be more trouble than it’d be worth.

The sharp rap on the door makes Kara think of Maggie, so she doesn’t bother checking with her x-ray vision, doesn’t even bother untangling from her blankets or putting down her pint of mint chocolate chip.

“It’s open,” she calls heartlessly, wondering if Maggie is looking for Alex or if she’s looking for another round of speed stacking to take Kara’s mind off things.

“Well, Keira, I have to say, I expected your apartment to be an explosion of millennial mess and absurd color, but I have to admit, it has a certain charm to it.”

The ice cream scatters and Kara falls ungracefully off the couch in a tangled mess of blankets with a series of loud shrieks.

If Cat is at all surprised, she hides it well, but the sparkle in her eyes and the smile tugging at her lips give her away the moment before she springs into action.

“Are you alright?” she rushes forward, just in time for Kara to unravel herself from the blanket and spring to her feet.

She has to remind herself strongly of earth physics as, pretenses and professionalism be damned, she wraps Cat in a full-bodied hug.

“Ms. Grant,” she breathes over her shoulder, and Cat freezes for only a moment before fully returning the embrace, fingers grasping for dear life onto the back of Kara’s shirt.

Cat is the first to pull back, and she wonders if her own tears are reflected in Kara’s blue eyes. She wonders how she ever forgot quite how crystalline they are.

“I hear you’re having a rough time, Kiera, and if the pint of – is that mint chocolate chip? – is any indication, my source is quite correct – “

“Snapper’s been calling you about me? But he’s been liking my work, he – “

Cat is tsking, now, and moving around the living room, collecting the ice cream and spoon and blanket, rearranging everything into its former semi-order.

“Not Snapper, dear. Your sister’s girlfriend. Seems to think you would benefit from my presence.”

Kara stiffens and her eyes widen and Cat remembers how much she’s missed watching Kara adjust her glasses like this. “Ms. Grant, you didn’t need to come all this way, I – “

“Oh nonsense, Keira. What have I told you? You need to learn, competent and efficient and brilliant as you are, when to ask for help. You’re entitled to do so, you know. And you’re entitled to receive it.”

Tears swim in Kara’s steady eyes, and she’s forgotten how to form words.

Ms. Grant, back in National City. Ms. Grant, in her apartment. Ms. Grant, seeing her be a complete and utter wreck.

“Ms. Grant, really, I – “ She tries to object, just once more, but she can’t even get that far. Because her voice cracks and her knees give out and she collapses back onto the couch, hugging herself because she’s completely lost sense of what is real.

“Oh, Kara,” Cat breathes, and the sound of her name on Cat’s lips works its way into her skin, through her muscles, into her bones, into her bloodstream. Into her heart.

“Thank you,” Kara chokes, and Cat just nods, sitting softly and putting a hesitant hand on Kara’s knee. Kara takes it immediately, and a soft smile flits over Cat’s face.

They don’t talk about Jeremiah, and they don’t talk about Mon-El.

They talk about CatCo and they talk about Carter and Cat’s mother and Alex and Maggie and Kara cries without words and Cat comforts without words and Kara sits up straighter and cries less and less throughout the night.

Cat even shares a spoonful of her ice cream, and it’s this, more than anything, that makes Kara smile. That makes Kara feel so, so loved.

To make Kara remember what it was like when her life was like this.

To make her realize what she has to do to get back to that.

She makes a note to thank Maggie in the morning, but for now, sitting on her couch with Cat Grant and laughing about Snapper, she doesn’t want the morning to come. Not just yet.

do you mind maybe satisfying my horny mind with fix it sex as u referred to before? but it is gentle where maggie takes care of alex and gives her what she needs. if u take the prompt or not, thanks:)

it takes a few days.

a few days full of blood and full of agony, full of torture.

a few nights full of shower after shower, red rings around the tub, full of tears, full of screaming nightmares.

it takes a few days, a few nights, for maggie to feel comfortable giving in to alex’s persistent requests for sex. a few days, a few nights, for maggie to feel like she’s not taking advantage of the pain of the woman she… loves. loves. loves.

they’re laying down and they’re kissing, and it’s the first night since jeremiah betrayed them that alex hasn’t wept, that alex hasn’t tried to drink. the first night she’s making jokes – bad ones, granted – the first night that her eyes are clear, that she slept through the night before.

they’re laying down and they’re kissing, and it’s soft and it’s gentle and it’s loving, maggie’s hands on alex’s jawline, her thumbs swiping across her cheeks, alex’s hands skimming maggie’s sides, alex pulling back slightly to ask if her hands can slip under maggie’s shirt, and maggie nods, because yes, god, please, yes.

she sighs in time with alex as her hands traipse up her skin, under her henley, tracing every curve, every contour, and when she breaks their kiss to look up into alex’s eyes, she knows exactly what alex wants.

“You sure?” she asks, and alex licks her lips and nods, because yes, god, please, yes.

maggie’s fingers tremble as she shifts so alex is laying next to her, so she can strip alex’s clothes off, so she can undress the woman she loves, so she can kiss and lick and nip at every inch of her skin.

alex starts with sighs and whispers of her name, but soon, sighs are becoming gasps, screams, and whispers are becoming moans, ragged pleas.

“She sure?”

maggie pauses and stares up alex’s naked body with wide, patient eyes. “tell me, sweetie. tell me what you want. tell me what you need. i’ve got you, ally. tell me what you want.”
Alex chews on her bottom lip as she stares down at Maggie, considering, considering.

“I don’t want you to make love to me.”

Maggie tenses slightly, already cursing herself, because she should have known it was too soon, that Alex was still hurting too much, that – “I want you to fuck me so hard I forget where I am.”

Oh. Oh. Oh.

Maggie’s mouth runs dry and she has to try to swallow several times before she can croak out something approximating speech, and Alex watches her like she’s the most radiant thing she’s ever seen.

“I uh… yeah. Yeah. I can do that.”

Alex’s eyes flash, and her voice drops an octave or two. “I know you can.”

Maggie gulps and crawls up Alex’s body to kiss her mouth, softly at first, then harder, stronger, firmer. Alex moans and grabs up at her hair, at her strong shoulders, at her back, at her ass.

“Maggie, please,” she begs, and Maggie complies, slipping her thigh between Alex’s open legs, staring down at Alex, already panting, as she starts to move.

“Fuuukkk,” Alex whines, and Maggie tosses her head back and bites her lip, because Alex is so damn soaked for her, because Alex is grabbing at her ass, at the back of her thigh, thrusting up as she yanks Maggie down, scratching perfect lines down Maggie’s back as she tosses her own head back into the pillows because fuck, yes, Maggie, god, please don’t stop, please, harder, please, please, please.

“I love you, Alex,” Maggie tells her, because she might be fucking her as hard as Alex is asking her to, but her hand is resting like a pillow behind Alex’s head and her other arm is wrapped under the small of Alex’s back, enveloping her body, holding her, loving her, embracing her.

“I love you, Ally, I love you, I love you, I love you, I love you.”

She repeats it like a mantra. She repeats it like a prayer. She repeats it like a promise, because she’s exactly what it is.

“Maggie, Maggie, Maggie, Maggie,” Alex whispers, prays, cries. “I love you too, I love you, I love you, I love you.”

She clutches onto her like she is her lifeline, like she is her anchor, like she is her rock, like she is her oxygen, because she is, she is, she is, and when Alex cums from the pressure of Maggie’s thigh between her legs, she brings Maggie’s lips to her own and Maggie swallows the soft gasps, the sudden shudders, the perfect convulsions, that rock Alex’s body, that rock Alex’s heart.

“I’ve got you, Alex. Always and always,” Maggie promises as she kisses every inch of Alex’s face. And Alex, trembling and satiated and safe, believes her.

Chapter Summary

anonymous asked:

Hey Mum, I don't know right now if you are taking prompts so you don't have to write or even read this but I like had a really shitty day cause my dad yelled at me again for no reason. So I thought could you like write something were Alex talks to maggie about her childhood how she was yelled at by her parents for things Kara did? And Maggie like just listents and comforts her afterwards? I would mean really much to me. Thank you!

Her hand doesn’t only flit to the bottle when her not-dead father betrays her and everyone she’s ever loved.

Alex also reaches for the bottle – hard – when her very much alive mother comes within a fifty foot radius. Whenever her mother fixes her eyes on her and asks about work, about Kara, about oh Alexandra I don’t understand why everything has to be such a production with you, I only said you look tired because I’m worried about you.

Maggie notices – of course she does – and she switches her wine glass with her water glass, and she rubs her thigh with a steady hand under the table.

She doesn’t make Alex talk about it – she knows that there are some pains neither of them are ready to put to words – but after a particularly harrowing evening of how could you not have known, Alexandra, your sister apparently tried warning you, I thought you were trained to know when someone is manipulating you, Alex lays in Maggie’s lap, and Alex cries, and Alex talks.

“You know Kara broke my arm twice when we were kids? I mean it wasn’t her fault, she was still learning earth physics, the extend of her powers, you know? The first time I just cried – it hurt like nothing I’d felt before, physically – but the second time, I was angry. I yelled. I yelled at her, and my mom defended her. Kara. Which like, you know, sure, it was an accident and Kara was so upset. But instead of letting me calm down and comforting both of us, because we both deserved it in different ways? No no no. Not only did she scold me for yelling at Kara, but somehow it also became my fault that Kara had hurt me in the first place, something about I should have been more diligent about teaching her about our planet.”

Maggie grinds her teeth in bubbling rage, but she doesn’t stop stroking Alex’s hair gently, doesn’t stop nodding in soft encouragement for her to continue.

Because now that the flood gates are open, Alex doesn’t want to stop.

“I’d be doing things like my homework, you know, because nothing less than a perfect score was ever even an option, and suddenly she’d be in my room carrying on about something I had no idea about, like Kara had gotten made fun of or Kara was called out for daydreaming in class or Kara hadn’t chosen the right colleges to apply to – right according to Mom, obviously – or she’d said yes to the wrong boy for a date or she hadn’t pursued the right boy hard enough, hell, I don’t wanna think about what she’s gonna say now when she finds out Kara’s bi, that’ll be my fault somehow too.”

She groans slightly and turns her face into Maggie’s stomach while Maggie leans down to kiss her ear. She smiles against Maggie’s henley and turns back so her wet eyes are gazing up at Maggie again, and her voice cracks as she goes on.

“You know when we thought Dad died in a plane crash, I… I figured that was my fault, too? Because hell, everything else was. All the time. All my fault, everything…”

Her voice squeaks and her lips tremble, because suddenly she’s not in her past – suddenly her past is firmly in her present, and she’s seeing Jeremiah’s destroyed but enhanced but destroyed arm and she’s hearing Jeremiah telling his own daughter to shoot him dead and it’s her fault, her fault, her fault, how could it not be, he’d even gone as far as to say it, her fault, her fault, just like everything, her fault, her fault, her fault.

She doesn’t realize that she’s started to sob until she’s gasping desperately for breath, and Maggie holds her, soothes her, kisses every part of her face she can reach. Alex grabs at Maggie’s shirt and covers the visible part of her face with her other hand, but only for a moment, only for a moment, because Maggie’s soft lips and warm breath and sweet words are more important than hiding, more helpful than shame, more powerful than every ounce of guilt her mother had instilled deep into her bones.

“You’re perfect, Ally,” Maggie whispers when Alex’s breath evens somewhat, when she can breathe rather than gasp.

“You’re perfect, sweetie, and not because you got good grades or because you always did exactly what your mother expected of you. You’re perfect because you’re exactly who you are: because you love so fiercely, because you feel so hard. Because you had every reason to hate Kara because of what your mom made her to you, but you love her so spectacularly, and that… that’s perfect, Alex. You are perfect and you are so, so, so worth it, babe. None of what you’re saying is your fault. None of it. And if I have to spend my entire life arguing with the parts of you that are convinced it’s your fault, I will. I will. And I’ll win.”

Alex swallows a soft sob and she lets Maggie wipe the tear tracks from her face.

“If you win, will I have to eat more vegan ice cream?”

“Oh my god, Danvers.”

“You love me.”

“I do. I do. I do.”
anonymous asked:

Hiya I sent you an ask about a fic about Kara dealing with body issues (I know you're swamped so please don't worry about answering it soon!) b/c I have a lot of issues with my own body and it's just getting really bad. I feel like there's this voice in my head every time I walk by a mirror that's just really fucking mean and I feel crazy. But I've been working harder at the gym for the last year and I'm hoping that'll make it stop. It just sucks b/c I can't go too often now with school and all.

Alex used to tease her about it – I hope you get fat, she joked as she passed her the last potsticker – and it didn’t feel bad when Alex did it. In fact, it was pretty funny, because it’s Alex.

It still feels funny when the woman at Noonan’s asks how she eats so many sticky buns and still looks like she does, because she answers that she's an alien, and the woman thinks it's a joke.

So it’s funny.

But it’s also not funny.

It's also not funny because her muscles aren’t what her cousin’s are.

It’s also not funny because Mon-El just assumes he’ll be stronger than her because he’s a man, because he’s bigger than her, and she knows he never will be, but sometimes she’s not sure.

It’s also not funny because Alex is solidly human, and James is solidly human, and they can survive – they do survive – without any powers. Without any powers except their training and their wits and their very small, very human, very not-Kryptonian, strength.

They can do what Kara does, but they distinctly cannot fly and they distinctly cannot bench press an airplane.

And she doesn’t hate it. But she hates it.

Because if they’re that strong, and she has powers, but they can survive the same kind of work she does, how weak must she be? How much weakness, how much mediocrity – and Alex wasn’t the only one raised by parents who expected perfection – lives in her skin?

Skin that lasted when everyone else died.

A face that forces a smile when she doesn’t feel it at all.

Hands that all the social media feeds make jokes about what they can do, but really, she just wants to be able to touch someone full force, outside of the green room, without worrying about breaking them?
Because they might be better than her, tougher, more innately strong, more innately special, but she can still break them, completely by accident.

Because her body is not in her control. But it is. But it isn’t. But it is.

But it isn’t.

Mirrors remind her.

Remind her that she must really be nothing special, must really look like nothing special – must really be on just this side of ugly enough to ignore, to not even register, to be completely indifferent to – because they’re all fooled by glasses, because Leslie Willis wasn’t wrong about her awkwardness, her inability to know what to do with her hands, with her face, with her whole damn body.

Her whole damn body that can lift busses and deflect bullets, but that she can’t bring herself to love.

Leslie Willis – Livewire – saw right through her uniform, straight into her damn body.

And everyone else probably does, too.

So she changes in a rush, always.

She changes with Barry Allen-type speed. Always. Even when there’s no emergency.

No point dwelling on what no one’s ever going to notice anyway, unless the uniform catches their eye. No point dwelling on what no one’s ever going to want anyway, unless for the power trip of bedding a Super.

Except, no one sees her with her glasses, so that would never even be a thing.

She doesn’t think about Maggie.

Doesn’t think about how her sister’s girlfriend saw her.

She doesn’t think about how Cat saw her.

How James saw her (sure, he already knew. But still. Still.).

How sometimes, she sees flickers in Lena’s eyes that make her think she sees her, too.

She doesn’t think about these people, these people who see her, who would tell her without hesitation that she is worth seeing – that her body is worth seeing, worth lingering on, worth living in. Worth loving.

She hates how scattered her thoughts are. How contradictory.

How nonsensical.

How raging.

How real.

Alex notices first, that it’s getting worse lately. Kara’s hatred of her own body, of its contradictions, of its dual invisibility and hypervisibility, how everyone wants it and yet nobody notices it. How everyone wants her and yet nobody notices her.

Alex notices.

The way Kara skips quickly over the photos that include her when they’re scrolling through which pictures from game night to throw up on Instagram.

The way she jumps and squirms when Eliza is visiting and tells her how beautiful she looks.

The way she avoids mirrors like a vampire desperate to not be discovered.

“So you’ve seen it, too?” Maggie whispers to her one game night as she watches Alex squinting closely at the way Kara’s hand keeps running over her abs, like she’s trying to reassure herself of something, like she’s trying to wish herself into something, out of something.

Because apparently, Maggie notices, too.

Alex just nods, because she doesn’t bother being surprised with what close attention, with what close concern, Maggie watches over her little sister. She’ll reward her for it later. For now, she’s just scared.

Because Kara’s been particularly unsteady lately, and Kara is training harder than ever at the DEO, and she’s eating less potstickers than normal, and it’s a horrendous and scary combination.

By unspoken agreement, Alex and Maggie linger after game night. They linger after Winn and James give their hugs and leave together, still laughing about who would have won Jenga if a certain someone hadn’t faked a sneeze.

“Hey Kara, I just… I wanted to let you know that you’re gorgeous,” Maggie says casually as she washes dishes, and Kara nearly drops a plate.

“Hey, you’re dating my sister, I mean – “ She tries laughing it off, but the hue of her face and the strickeness of her eyes and the way she’s adjusting her glasses furiously give her away.

Alex smiles. “She is, and I’m standing right here, and you know what? I love that she loves you like she does. That she sees you. All of you, Kara. And she thinks what she sees is beautiful. Because it is. You are.”

Alex is talking casually, too, drying dishes and putting them away in the shelves Maggie can’t reach.

Alex might not have superhearing, but she hears her sister gulp, and she might not have mind-reading abilities, but she can all but hear the voices in Kara’s head telling her that her sister and her girlfriend are lying, they’re being nice because they feel bad for her, they’re exaggerating because they love her – for some reason she can’t possibly fathom – and more importantly, if she’s not feeling good about herself, she’ll be less effective as Supergirl, and…

Kara doesn’t know she’s started sniffling and crying until Alex’s arms are wrapped around her, until Maggie’s turned off the sink and is standing against the counter with her arms folded across her own chest, hugging herself as Alex hugs Kara, as Alex holds the body that feels worthless to Kara up from falling, up from figuring out how best to destroy itself, up from figuring out how best to dismantle itself in disguise as trying to make it better.

“Hey, hey, hey,” Alex is soothing her, and Kara tries to push her away, because she doesn’t deserve to be soothed, she didn’t mean to break, she didn’t mean to tell anyone, she didn’t mean to, but her body’s betrayed her again with its tears and its quaking, but Alex knows, and Alex has planted her feet, and Kara doesn’t put any real heart behind the push anyway, because Alex is kissing her forehead like she loves her and supporting her weight like it’s nothing and rubbing her back like it’s beautiful and whispering to her like she’ll never lose faith in her, even if Kara loses faith in herself.

“You’re perfect, Kara,” Maggie is whispering, then, because Alex is using all her energy holding her little sister up. “It’s okay if you can’t feel it now. Your sister and I will feel it enough, believe it enough, for you, until you can figure out a way to believe it yourself. Okay?”

She’s helpless in Alex’s arms and under the thrall of Maggie’s soft words, and she nods as she sniffs and sobs and sobs and sobs.

When she’s stopped shaking quite so much – when she feels like there’s no water left inside her, when she’s wept her way through her thoughts, through her deepest fears, through her stickiest shames, through her toughest contradictions – she just clings to Alex life the lifeline that she is.

She lets Alex carry her to bed and tuck her in like she used to when they were kids and she’d had another nightmare.

“Stay?” she grabs Alex’s hand after she kisses her forehead and starts to stand.

“Of course,” she says without hesitation, and Maggie leans in to kiss Alex’s cheek.

“See you in the morning, ba – ” she starts, but Kara cuts in.

“You too, Maggie?”

Maggie grins down at her girlfriend’s little sister and nods. “Anything you need, Little Danvers. Anything you need.”

Chapter Summary

benedoodlecumberpoodlestudyblr submitted to queergirlwriting

Hi there :) could you please write a fanfiction about: Alex getting bitten/scratched by some alien during DEO assignment but she thinks of it as nothing and after work goes home to see Maggie (pizza night). But in the morning she feels really bad and her temperature is rising so Maggie calls Kara. When Kara gets there Maggie is in the shower holding (barely conscious) Alex, trying to lower her temperature. Kara decides to get Alex to Barrys Earth (with that thing she got from Cisco) but Maggie won't leave her side so she comes too…? :)

She shrugs it off and she brings home pizza and she smiles as Maggie fawns over the scrape on her wrapped arm, as Maggie presses soft kisses all around her bandage, as she dotes on her girl even as Alex insists, insists, that she’s fine, that it’s just a scratch, that it was no big deal, really.

But she secretly loves the attention Maggie is giving her, the big deal Maggie is making; how strong, how heroic, Maggie is making her feel.

Maggie knows. She lays it on extra thick, because Alex has spent enough time neglecting herself – enough time being neglected – enough time in the shadow of other heroes, of other injuries, to have hers attended to, to have hers honored.

But in the morning?

In the morning, they both realize that she wasn’t fawning over just a scratch.

Because in the morning, Alex is burning up and Alex is dry heaving and Alex’s temperature is rising by the minute.

Maggie calls Kara with the phone balanced on her shoulder as she half drags, half carries Alex into the shower, stripping her drenched clothes to run her body under cool water, to try, to try, to lower her temperature. To try to keep her somewhat stable until Kara can get her medics that will know what the hell alien poisons are.

The DEO’s med bay was trashed in the attack the night before, so for a moment, Kara panics. But only for a moment.

“Cisco,” she calls into the communicator he gave her. “I need you. Now.”

Maggie knows better by now than to be shocked when a swirling blue vortex appears behind her in Alex’s bathroom.
“Flash,” Alex giggles vaguely as her head lolls loosely onto Maggie’s shoulder. “Bastard took Kara. Dangerous. Without me. Need words with him.”

“Shh, that’s right, Ally,” Maggie whispers, looking askance into the vortex as Kara lands in the bathroom door, ignoring the vortex all together as she rushes toward the shower.

“What the hell happened?” she asks Maggie, grabbing a towel to wrap her sister in, switching off the water as she kneels over her. “It’s okay Alex. I’m here, I’m here. I’ve got you.”

“That’s right, Alex. Star Labs is going to help you.” She glances at Maggie. “It’s gotta be an infection from that scratch last night.”

Maggie nods, and her eyes are wide as she watches her girlfriend slip in and out of consciousness. She barely notices when two men appear in the bathroom behind them, breathing slightly heavily, the one with the strange goggle-glasses with his hand on his chest and a vague grin on his face.

“Only took one try this time! My man, we’re getting better at this!” He holds up his hand for the man in red to hit, but the Flash leaves him hanging as he goes to kneel next to Kara.

“This isn’t how I wanted to see you again. Or how I wanted to meet your sister.”

“Thanks for coming, Barry.” Kara gives him a sideways hug as he looks down at Alex’s drenched body.

“Hey, secret identity,” the other man murmurs, but Kara waves him off.

“Maggie’s family, Cisco.”

Maggie glances up at him – at Cisco – and grimaces a greeting, too numb with fear to fully register the impact of Kara’s words.

“Looks like an infection, obviously, but metas aren’t exactly like aliens, so I don’t… Come on,” Barry tells Kara. “We have to get her back through the vortex. Caitlin’ll come up with something, Kara. I promise.”

Kara nods grimly and picks up Alex’s limp body in her arms like she weighs nothing. Barry gingerly positions the towel more completely around Alex’s body while somehow averting his eyes from her nakedness at the same time, and Maggie immediately decides she likes this Flash character.

She rises to follow Kara into the vortex, and they all look at her and hesitate.

“It’s a parallel earth, Maggie. It’s not… the more people we take over, the bigger the risk of –”

“Look, I know you don’t know me, and I know you have this big superhero system on your earth, and I know you have super speed and you have some vibing shit, but I swear it doesn’t matter what superpowers you both have. She’s my girlfriend and I am not leaving her side.”

Barry stares for a moment and then nods grimly, once, while a broad smile grows on Cisco’s face. “Dude, she gay?” he asks Kara. “Nice work!” He grins down at Alex’s unconscious form, and soberes immediately. “I guess I’ll… congratulate her when she comes to.”

Kara rolls her eyes and Maggie grins faintly at Cisco’s enthusiasm for queerness, at his persistent belief, his obvious faith in this Caitlin person to save Alex, the way his eyes grow somber and focused and intense as he turns back to reopen the vortex.

“Nothing bad’s gonna happen to your girlfriend, Maggie. We’re not gonna allow it.”

He reaches back for her hand and squeezes slightly before he opens the vortex, and Maggie gulps her appreciation, because her throat is too constricted to allow for any more words.

“Kara,” a beautiful white girl rushes forward when they step through the vortex. “Lay her right here.”

Kara obeys and the woman – “Caitlin Snow. Best doctor on this or any earth. She’ll fix your girl. I promise,” Cisco leans in and whispers to Maggie – slips into mode immediately, with an intensity of focus Maggie has seen in Alex so many times, both in the field and in the bedroom.

“Do we know anything about the species that gave her the wound?” Caitlin is streaming through questions with Kara, with Maggie, as she checks Alex’s vitals, as she drapes a medical gown over her body, as she makes notes to herself and exchanges significant glances with a concerned-looking Barry.

Kara and Maggie are fielding answers as best they can when two more people burst into the lab, one in a yellow suit that almost matches Barry’s and one in a pair of jeans that would have Maggie gulping under other circumstances.

The woman with the jeans falls into Barry’s arms after pulling Kara into a long hug. “Are you alright? I know what it’s like to watch a sibling in danger,” she says, shoving the boy who ran in with her gently.

“I trust Caitlin,” Kara says softly, but her eyes are wide and her eyes are terrified.

“Iris West, and my brother, Wally. Kid Flash,” the woman holds her hand out to Maggie. “You’re Alex’s girlfriend.”

Barry, Wally, and Cisco all turn to stare at Iris, and even Caitlin glances up with an arched eyebrow.

Iris shrugs. “Journalist. Also, I know a little something about watching your unconscious superhero partner get prodded and poked on a medical table: I know that look.”

She nods her head toward Barry, but her warm eyes don’t leave Maggie’s.

She nods her head toward Barry, but her warm eyes don’t leave Maggie’s.

“Maggie Sawyer, NCPD,” Maggie recites automatically, and Kara reaches out and squeezing the hand that Iris doesn’t have.

Iris offers Maggie a small smile. “My dad’s a cop, too. He’d approve of you for someone as amazing as we’ve heard Kara’s sister is.”

Maggie gulps and her hand clenches Iris’s harder without meaning to. “Caitlin’s the best. Alex is gonna be okay.”

“Alex is gonna kill Barry for letting Kara go fight an army of aliens without her alien-fighting sister,” a ragged, exhausted voice croaks from the medical table.
“Alex!” Maggie and Kara both exclaim, and Caitlin smiles as she steps back from the table to allow Alex’s family to surround her.

“Babe, I’m here,” and “Alex, I’ve got you,” accompany “Damn, Caitlin, alien infections stand no chance against you!” and “It was simple, really, and important that Maggie got Alex’s temperature down as fast as she did” and “Told you Caitlin’s the bomb” and “Please no bomb references, not after last week” and “Should I leave before she comes to fully? Because I really think she might make good on her threats to kill me for bringing Kara over here without her” and “Run Barry, run.”

And Star Labs had never been quite so full of superheroes, or quite so full of relief, or quite so full of love across earths.

Chapter Notes

This was originally chapter one -- where it all began lmao -- but some lovely tumblr human who wishes to remain anonymous made a content guide to the first 171 chapters (I've had too much anxiety to put it up until now, where just do it already is taking over), so that content guide is now the first chapter! Shoutout to you, wonderful one!! <3 <3 <3

The first time Maggie does it, it’s an accident.

Alex hisses and Maggie immediately lifts her hands off of Alex’s back, mentally chastising herself for not being more careful, more mindful, more gentle with Alex and more considerate of her lack of experience with all this.

But at the loss of her hands, Alex whines and looks down at her, confused, wide-eyed, hungry-eyed.

“Why’d you stop?” she half gasps, half squeaks, and Maggie’s breath hitches.

“I thought I hurt you,” Maggie apologizes, running her fingers gently over the spots on Alex’s shoulders, Alex’s rippled back, that she’d just scraped her nails down.

Alex can lie during a lie detector test, but she has absolutely no desire to lie to the very naked, very beautiful woman laying underneath her.

So she doesn’t tell her it didn’t hurt.

“I liked it,” she says in a small voice, and Maggie takes a deep breath. “A lot,” Alex clarifies, eyes not quite meeting Maggie’s.

Maggie’s lips twitch up into a smirk, and her eyes narrow slightly. “Good then,” she says raggedly, and leans up to bring Alex back down into an open-mouthed kiss, moaning into her lips, grinding into her hips.

When Alex shifts her lips, her teeth, her tongue, down Maggie’s jawline, to her throat, Maggie sends tentative nails down her back again. Alex gasps and growls and shifts her lips to clamp onto Maggie’s nipple, shifts her thigh to grind down onto Maggie’s clit.

It’s Maggie’s turn to scream, her head slamming back into the pillow, her nails full-out scraping down Alex’s back now, and Alex fucks her all the harder, gasps all the louder, growls all the deeper, because the harder she fucks her, the louder she gasps, the deeper she growls, the harder Maggie’s fingernails dig into her back, the louder Maggie screams, the deeper Maggie cums.

By the end of the night – by the end of most nights after that – Alex’s back is covered in scratch marks, covered in thin red lines that sting so good when she showers, that she smiles at over her shoulder in the mirror because they remind her of Maggie’s screams, of Maggie’s writhing body, of Maggie’s tender kisses all down each scrape afterwards, of the fact that not all pain comes from menacing threats and cruel intentions.

Maggie never leaves marks that are deep enough to pain her during the day; nothing that chafes against her tight-fitting DEO shirt, her sports bra for her morning runs.

So, in the field, Alex – focused entirely on her mission – will forget that her back is a map of her love life.

After a particularly harsh mission, Alex rips off her shirt when she slips into the DEO lab, J’onn, Winn, and Kara hovering worriedly over the second-degree burn that had scorched her side.

“Whoa,” Winn exclaims, standing behind her, and she furrows her brow because she didn’t think the burn was that bad.

“Alex, what happened to your back?”

Alex’s frown gets deeper, still confused.

“Agent Danvers, you need to call in all your injuries, you never know what infections you might acquire in the field – “

Realization dawns on Alex slowly, harshly, and her stomach swoops and her eyes fly wide open and she jumps off the med table she’d hopped onto and turns to face her little sister, her space dad, and the annoyingly lovable little brother she’d never had but always wanted.

“It… you know what, guys, I’ll uh… I’ll finish up here myself, it’s just a burn, no need to – “

“But Alex, those scratches – “

“Are no problem, no problem, not an issue at all, nope, I uh, I mean hey, you know, I’m not a bio-engineer for nothing, I can take care of some little scratches that aren’t even a big deal – “

“But they’re all over your back, Alex, how could you properly treat – “

Winn squints intently at Alex’s burning face, at her wide-eyes and fidgeting hands, and gasps suddenly, backhanding Kara’s concerned arm softly.

“Um, Kara, I think Alex can take care of – “

“No, Winn, did you see those marks, she needs – “

“You know what, Kara, I’m sure Alex has it under control – “

J’onn is looking back and forth between Winn’s pale face and Alex’s red one, and suddenly he gets it, too.
“Good god, I have lived too long on this planet,” he mutters to himself and sweeps out of the room with his face buried in his palm.

“Come on, Kara, you know what, let’s call Maggie, get her to help Alex with that burn – “

“But – “

“Come on, Kara,” Winn insists, and pushes her out of the room.

“You owe me, you kinky woman you,” he mouths over his shoulder at Alex with a shit-eating grin on his face, and he barely dodges the rolled up shirt Alex chucks at him on the way out.
Hi! ♥ Smut request! :-) Sanvers pre first sex making out, Alex on top, she instinctively starts moving against Maggie's leg between hers. Alex is embarrassed when she realizes what she's doing. Maggie is supportive and encouraging.

She has no idea how she wound up on top.

She just knows that Maggie's body is soft and Maggie’s body is pliant and Maggie is moaning encouragingly, her hands firm but tentative on Alex, and maybe that’s why she wound up on top, because Maggie is being so careful with her, and she wants more, fuck, and god Maggie tastes like scotch and just a hint of earl grey and something Alex can’t quite identify, but she wants to spend as long as it takes to investigate properly, and Maggie is suddenly grabbing at her hips at moaning louder, harder, her head tossed back in surprised ecstasy, and Alex has never been this turned on but she can’t figure out why Maggie’s responding like this until her body tenses up and she realizes.

Realizes that she’d opened her legs for the woman beneath her, realizes that Maggie’s knee is slightly bent and her heel is planted firm down on the mattress so that when Alex moves her hips – and god, she hadn’t realized she was moving her hips like that – there’s a firm, sweet, indescribably perfect pressure on her clit from Maggie’s thigh, even through the denim they’re both sporting, and it’s the hottest thing she’d ever felt because every cell in her body is on fire, but now that she’s realized that she’s been grinding down on Maggie’s thigh, a lump forms in her throat and redness rises to her chest and her face and her face and she freezes, freezes, freezes.

Because nothing’s ever been about her pleasure before. Nothing’s ever been about her being able to let go, being able to take what she wanted, and god, she’s never wanted anything like this.

So her body is frozen and her face is beet red and Maggie’s glazed eyes are looking up, are focusing, and her hands are reaching to smooth Alex’s hair out of her burning face, away from her suddenly stinging eyes.

“Did I hurt you, Alex? I’m sorry, I’m so sorry, I didn’t want to pressure you, I didn’t –”

But Alex is shaking her head profusely. “No, no, Maggie, you didn’t – you – I just…” She chews on the inside of her cheek and can’t quite meet Maggie’s eyes, so she doesn’t see it when a heady mixture of realization, compassion, rage, and affection does battle for dominance on her face, in her eyes.

Affection wins.

“Alex, are you… are you embarrassed?”

She can’t look at her. She can’t. She just nods, and tries desperately not to cry, because god, what’s sex going to be like for Maggie if she even fails at making out? She’ll probably leave, it’ll be so bad, if she won’t leave now.

“Alex… can you look at me?” Alex almost shakes her head, but Maggie’s voice is soft, and her hands are gentle, and her body is already becoming home, and Alex is a DEO agent, for chrissake, so she forces her wet eyes to look down and meet Maggie’s soft ones.

“Listen Danvers, I… you’re perfect. What you were doing, grinding down on me like that? It felt good?”

Alex blushes at least three shades deeper, which Maggie didn’t think possible, but she nods, and Maggie can’t help but smile.

“Good. It’s supposed to. I… I want you to feel good, Alex. I want you to take what you want from me, I want…” She sighs and leans up on one elbow and pauses halfway to Alex’s face, and Alex gives her a trembling, almost-but-not-quite-disbelieving smile and leans down further to meet her lips softly.

Both of their eyes stay closed, their foreheads touching, for a long moment after their kiss ends.

“Alex, I care about you, I care about your… pleasure. And it was hot. You grinding down on my thigh like that. Did you not… notice?”

Alex bites her lip and stares down at Maggie’s tentative smile, growing more confident with each of Maggie’s words, with the shyness that’s suddenly coming over Maggie’s features.

“I noticed,” she rasps almost cautiously, and Maggie gulps.

“Wanna… get back to it, then, Danvers?”

Alex’s response is in the force of her kiss and the upturn of her lips; the gentle power of her touch and the low moan that rises in concert with Maggie’s when she lets herself, simply, enjoy.

I know you got about a Billion Requests (cause you're damn good) but, if those ever dwindle down I'd love to see Adrien introducing Maggie to his college's trans+queer group "this is my queer mama Maggie and her wife Alex" (regardless of whether sanvers is married yet, bratty kids y’know)

Alex wrings her hands in the car the entire drive over.

Until, that is, Maggie takes one hand off the wheel, reaches over to the passenger’s seat, and laces fingers with her girlfriend.

“They’re gonna love you, babe.”

Alex takes a deep breath and nods and just turns up J. Cole, losing herself in mouthing every word flawlessly (closing her lips, of course, at every n-word), and Maggie’s thumb swipes across Alex’s hand in understanding silence until she has to make the sharp turn onto Star City University’s campus.

“You ready for this?” Maggie asks after she parks in front of the Student Union building, and Alex’s eyes are in secret agent overdrive as she assesses every single student walking by.

“I had a… rough time in college.”

Maggie watches her with soft eyes and a tilted head. “The drinking?”

Alex nods, eyes fixed on a passing group of pajamas-wearing students, one of the boys jumping up on the other’s shoulders, making the entire group erupt in raucous laughter and a humorous backpack fight.

“I wonder how different it would have been if I’d known I was… gay.”

Maggie smiles faintly and leans across the car to kiss Alex’s nose. “Wanna go find out?”

Alex bites her lower lip and adjusts her jacket. “You’ll hold my hand?”

Maggie grins. “The entire time. On that note… wait there.”

Alex furrows her brow as Maggie practically hops out of the car and jogs around to the passenger side. She yanks the door open and holds out her hand to help Alex out.

“I’m a woman of my word, Danvers. You want me to hold your hand the whole time, then I’m gonna do it the whole damn time.”

Alex blushed and slips out of the car, gulping at the idea of finally holding another woman’s hand on a college campus.

“Adrian says the club room’s in the basement, first left after the bookstore. This way.”

Alex holds tight to Maggie’s hand as they weave through college kids with faces buried in their smart phones and college kids with faces buried in their books and college kids with faces turning up into grins that Alex doesn’t quite know how to interpret at the sight of Alex and Maggie’s interlaced fingers.

But Maggie’s stride doesn’t lose cool confidence, and Alex finds herself turned on at the way her girlfriend moves in the world, the way she navigates every space like she knows it so well, even when she most certainly doesn’t.

Like she has a right to be in the world, even though it’s worked so hard to convince her that she doesn’t.

They’re staring at a door utterly covered in an explosion of rainbow flags before Alex knows it, and Maggie shakes her head.

“Well, Adrian’s clearly made his impact,” she chuckles, and the sound relaxes Alex.

True to her word, Maggie doesn’t let her hand leave Alex’s once, even as they nod at each other and Maggie pushes the club room door open; even as there’s a high-pitched scream and Maggie stumbles backward slightly with the force of Adrian’s hug; even as the blurry mass of excited college boy shifts from Maggie to Alex.

“Good to see you too, Ade,” Alex wheezes, wondering vaguely what would happen if Adrian and Kara ever had a competition to see who could hug hardest.

Adrian beams, his new silver stud earring glistening almost as brightly as his brown eyes as he bounces on his toes and splays his hands open to the rest of the room, which – Alex only now notices – is littered with old couches and arm chairs, nearly every inch of the walls covered in artwork, in posters, in rainbow flags, bi flags, ace flags, trans flags, flags for orientations and identities Alex doesn’t have the words for yet.

And scattered across those couches, chairs, and upturned crates are teenagers in varying states of studiousness. Two are crouched in the corner and utterly absorbed in their laptops, headphones in; others have notebooks in their laps but conversation on their lips; and some are sprawled in each other’s laps.

“Everyone!” Adrian announces with all the flair of a theater major. “This is my queer mama Maggie and her wife Alex!”

Even the kids on their laptops grin at that, and one of them takes out one of their earpods and gestures with a pen in Maggie and Alex’s direction.

“Good to meet you two – we were all starting to suspect that Adrian made up his mythically supportive cop friend and her lovely girlfriend, Adrian, no one’s trying to pretend we believe you that they’re married yet.”

Maggie laughs and Alex blushes, and Adrian gasps in mock horror.

“Are you questioning my honor, Dani?”

Dani arches a lazy eyebrow, a grin on their face, and looks right past Adrian to Maggie. “Detective Sawyer, right? Are you two actually married yet?"

“Not yet, kiddo,” Maggie answers, squeezing Alex’s hand as she beams and Alex’s stomach somersaults pleasantly.

“Well, married or not yet, we’ve heard a shitton about you both from this one;” a girl with buzzed hair and a green streak on one side grins up from her sprawl on a femmey-looking girl’s lap.

“And we’ve heard a lot about you all. Lemme see if I can do this;” Alex perks up, and Maggie beams proudly as her girl gets animated with the rush of excitement, the rush of acceptance; the rush of a challenge where she won’t be punished if she gets something wrong.

“You’re Mariah, and unless you’re up to something on the side, that must be Carrie.” The girls squeal and Adrian and Maggie exchange glances and beam.

Alex squints around the room and rattles off the names and random facts about everyone in the room, and they all cheer more and more raucously the farther along she gets. When she circulates back around to Adrian, she holds her hand out to him.

“But I don’t believe I’ve met this handsome young man. Alex Danvers, FBI. And who is your absolutely beautiful lady friend?” she asks, cocking her head toward Maggie, and the kids in the room – even Dani on their laptop – explode with laughter as Maggie blushes deeply and hides her smiling face in the hand that isn’t still holding Alex’s.

Adrian doesn’t miss a beat.

“Pleasure to meet you, Alex Danvers, FBI. I’m Adrian Rodriguez, National City born and bred, Star City transplant, general badass. And my absolutely beautiful lady friend is Maggie Sawyer, NCPD Science Division: into motorcycles, girls, badassery, reforming the system she works in, and wildly kinky sex. I think you two’ll get along just great.”

Dani shrieks and Mariah leans over and smacks Adrian’s arm lightly, and he ducks as both Maggie and Alex go for a playful headlock.

“Is anything I said untrue?!?” he squeals, and Maggie’s blush grows as she buries her face in Alex’s shoulder.

“You’re lucky I love you, Ade!” she stammers when she finally turns around, Alex wrapping her arms around Maggie’s waist from behind as Adrian laughingly leans in for a kiss on both cheeks, which Maggie happily gives him to a chorus of awwwws.

They’re in a completely different city; in a public college, whereas Alex had gone to Stanford; in a club room in the basement of the Student Union, whereas Alex had spent her entire college career in the lab or throwing up in the bathroom; surrounded by queer kids with bright smiles and barely hidden scars, whereas Alex was just coming out a decade older than them.

And she’s somehow never felt more at home.

anonymous asked:

More fics with Maggie getting hurt please. Not by alex, but in the line of duty. I like Alex fussing over her

She’s not used to being fussed over.

The first time she fell off her two-wheeler, her dad started to run after her to gather her in his arms, but when he saw her friend Tommy – six years old and already walking on the tips of his toes and swishing his hips – he stopped, grimaced, and let her cry it out on her own.

She’d stopped crying at flesh wounds after that.

When she went through the torture they put her through at the academy, she nursed her bruises privately, iced her pride in secret.

The first time she was hurt on the job – getting in the way of some white guy trying to beat on a queer brown kid – her girlfriend at the time had arched an eyebrow, had asked why she’d bothered anyway, and I guess you can’t take me to dinner then.

When she was kidnapped and Alex first patched her up – when she was still in awe of the James Bond spy lab this smoking girl who literally threw herself into fire to keep her safe, who’d insisted on treating her herself, whose fingers could break someone’s neck but were so gentle in the medical bay – she didn’t even bother telling the woman who dumped her soon thereafter about her kidnapping, about her injuries, because she didn’t want to be accused, again, of being obsessed with work, and when her ex had stripped her clothes off that night in a rush of fuck me so I know you’re still mine, she’d ignored the wince of pain she barely made, because I thought tonight was supposed to be about me and well it’s your precious job and you came out with me anyway, so it really can’t be that bad.

When she was shot by Cyborg-Superman and finally let herself pass out after telling Supergirl, Kara, Supergirl, to just get the bastard, she came to in Alex’s arms, Alex’s steely eyes angry, focused, rimmed with just a touch of terror, as her fingers worked to carve out the infection, to synthesize the right balance of chemicals to counteract the poisons his laser shot was laced with.

She hated needles, and she hated stitches, but she’d never felt so… cared for.

And now?

Now that she and Alex are officially dating?

She’s never been fussed over before, but Alex is making up for lost time like it’s going out of style.

Because one night she comes home limping, and Alex won’t even let her hobble to the chairs at the breakfast island. She carries her, bridal-style, to the couch, and she helps Maggie off with her jeans, and she mutters about incompetent easy bake local cop medics and does it hurt when I do that, babe and honestly who do I have to kill for hurting you like this and I’ll have Susan come by with some meds from the DEO, you’ll be pain-free and healed in no time.

And another night – one of those graveyard shifts for both of them – they’re in the field together and Maggie takes a blow to the ribs and Alex is on the guy before Maggie even knows she’s within range, and Alex’s hands are gentle as she tugs up Maggie’s shirt, as she checks for bruising, for breaks, and when she gets her home, her lips trace a hundred different pathways over Maggie’s purple torso, her lips make art of Maggie’s bruising, her lips forge a home in easing Maggie’s pain.

And when Maggie makes her work partner swear not to call Alex, because it’s the middle of the day, man, she has a very important job, you know and it’s fine, it’s barely a fracture, come on, I don’t want to worry her, he calls Alex anyway, and she’s there within ten, and within thirty she has Maggie laid up in bed with eight different pillows and a veggie burger and fries from her favorite burger joint and a two-liter bottle of seltzer and three books on Maggie’s to-read list and the TV remote with Netflix all cued up and ready to go.

“Babe, why do you always make such a fuss when I get hurt?” Maggie finally asks after Alex spends a full hour soothing her burnt back with aloe and absent-mindedly serenading her with that soft voice of hers.

Because even after all this time, she can’t quite understand. And she doesn’t quite believe it.

A look of pure confusion settles over Alex’s features. “Maggie, why wouldn’t I make a fuss? Hell, I don’t make enough of a fuss, I… you deserve to always be fussed over, whether you’re hurt or not. Don’t you… don’t you know that by now?”

It takes a long time for Maggie to swallow the lump in her throat down deep enough to answer the woman with the lethal, gentle fingers and the steely, soft eyes.

“Alex, you’re the one woman who can make me believe that. Thank you.”

“It’s called being loved, get used to it, Sawyer.”

Chapter Summary

the first time Maggie finds herself staring at Alex with heart eyes and thinking "i'm going to marry this woman"

She feels something stir in her when she first hears her voice, when she first sees her face, on her haunches in that tarmac, on that crime scene.

Something that feels like fate.

Something that feels like forever.

She feels it harder when Alex comes to rescue her, when Alex notices that she’s gone. When Alex literally walks into fire for her, to keep her safe.

When M’gann tells her later, over comped drinks, that Alex had damn near killed someone to find out where she was, to find out how to get her back safely.

She feels it when Alex puts her fingers on that pool table, her voice an octave lower than it usually is, asking Maggie if she’s still good for those drinks she promised, and she feels it when she pulls Alex in for a hug, and she feels it when Alex’s lips touch hers.

An explosion. A shift.

A destiny.

It keeps happening.

In the field.

On the phone.

At… home.

Because Alex’s home is quickly becoming hers, and Maggie’s home – so desolate for so long – is quickly becoming Alex’s.

She feels it, but she doesn’t put it into words.

Fear – no, absolute terror – prevents that.

Until one day, it doesn’t anymore.

Until one day, she’s watching Alex with Adrian, with Kara.
It’s Adrian’s first game night with the Superfriends, and he’s getting into it laughingly with James about the proper protocol for playing Twister with an alien who can fly, and Kara is leaning into Alex and laughing, laughing, laughing, and Alex is kissing her little sister’s forehead and then she pulls Adrian forward, too, to press her lips against his forehead, too, and James and Kara are awwwing and Adrian is beaming and Winn is don’t get any ideas, kid, Sawyer might love you to bits but she might have to kill you if your teenage boy hormones go anywhere near her woman and Alex and Adrian are laughing, and she’s drawing him into her shoulder with one arm while the other is around Kara.

Her little siblings.

Both adopted, both misfits out there in the world.

Both safe in Alex’s arms.

In Alex’s home.

Their home.

She jumps when James’s soft voice is suddenly whispering in her ear, standing next to the fridge, because she hadn’t noticed him get up.

“What’s up, Maggie? Everything okay?”

Maggie realizes only then that her eyes are wet, that her cheeks are hurting from smiling so hard for so long.

She doesn’t take her eyes off Alex as she leans into James’s chest and answers his question.

“Nothing’s wrong. Nothing at all. Just… I’m going to marry that woman.”

James wraps his arm around her and kisses her forehead – Alex isn’t the only one who’s gained siblings with this whole Superfriends, Superfamily thing – as he beams.

“I’ll take all the photos you could possibly want.”

“Good. Good. No. No, not good. Perfect.”

mrriggerworld asked:

Imagine Maggie as a softball coach, teaching kids how to throw, how to catch, pushing them to improve their skills, taking the team out for pizza after games, making sure that they remember winning's great, but not the most important thing, listening to problems when necessary, and basically being the coach you still talk about after you've grown up. All the kids insist on vetting Alex after she shows up at one of their practices, because they have to make sure she's awesome enough for Maggie.

It’s not like she’s swimming in free time, but she can’t resist the kids.

The kids with the big eyes and uncoordinated runs, who want to play softball but don’t want to be separated along gender lines from their friends; who don’t want to be chewed out by people three times their age for missing a catch; who want to be part of something, but don’t want to go through the ritualistic humiliation that is most organized sports to get it.

So every Saturday, without fail, her work phone is off. Her captain knows; her captain approves. I think he might be... you know... in your community, he tells her out of the side of his mouth one day about his nine year old son, and she immediately takes the boy onto the team.

Every Saturday, she pulls her ponytail through the back of a beat up Brooklyn Dodgers cap, and trades in her boots for cleats, and slings two bags more than half her height over her back, full of bats and balls and mitts and caps and water bottles and other assorted treats for the horde of nine year olds who stream onto the field she’s reserved just for them in varying states of readiness, varying states of dress (sometimes in skirts, sometimes in older sibling’s baseball jerseys, once – memorably – in a rabbit onesie because it’s Purim, okay, and who says rabbits can’t play softball?), varying states of excitement to get away from their parents, their homes, their schools, for a few solid hours under the California sun.

The only thing she doesn’t accept on the field is giving up; but she does accept anxiety and she does accept tears, because whoever said there’s no crying in baseball clearly has never played softball with a band of misfit kids who spend so much of their time trying to be perfect that sometimes it takes a while for them to realize that on this field, with these kids, with this coach, they can revel in their uniqueness, in their imperfections.

She has a system worked out for their little bodies slipping into existential crises: the swing set nearby. She holds the crying kid, whoever it may be at the time, and she rocks them, and she wipes their tears and she gives them a bottle of water and some animal crackers, and she sends them with two friends – always two friends – off to the swing set for a few minutes, so they can swing the sad away.

She keeps on eye on the ball and the other on them, and they always sprint back with smiles and giggles, ready to keep going, ready to learn more, ready to be more.

So she teaches them to throw and she teaches them to hit; she teaches them to move their hips right along with the rest of their bodies, and most importantly, she teaches them to let go. To let go of what everyone’s ever told them about perfection, about winning, about success, about their self-worth. Because each of them are stardust, and doesn’t that sound cooler than defining themselves by winners and losers.

They run drills and they support each other when the ball trickles through someone’s feet and they eagerly shout me me me me me! when Maggie stands at home plate with a bat in one hand and a ball in the other, knees bent and ready to aim a hit at each of them in turn.

They play against the other local teams, and even though they don’t always win, they always shock the smug-looking parents and coaches of the other teams, and they always win over some new friends – with the more expensive uniforms and pressure to win constantly on their backs – because they always look like they’re having more fun, like they’re feeling more confident, than anyone else to ever step onto the field.

And the first time Alex Danvers steps onto the field, Maggie’s spare cap backwards on her head and a red bandana sticking out of her back pocket and a nervous but thrilled grin on her face, they decide that they need to interrogate this pretty new lady holding Maggie’s hand and helping her carry her bags.

Because Maggie’s never held another girl’s hand before in front of them before, and she’s certainly never let anyone carry her bags for her before.

“Everyone, this is my girlfriend, Alex. Alex, this is the squad.”

They all form a line, squinting up at her and trying their best to look intimidating, and Alex is forcibly reminded of that Sandlot movie Kara made her watch over and over when they were kids.

She glances at Maggie, who’s regarding them gravely, and she follows her girlfriend’s lead, biting down her amusement and contorting her face into seriousness as she squats down on her haunches to be more on their eye level.

“You all seem like you have something to say to me,” she says, doing her best to not address them like they’re nine, but rather, like they’re a threat to her physical safety.

A girl with Bantu knots and a serious set to her jaw steps forward and gestures at Alex with her red glove.

“You all seem like you have something to say to me,” she says, doing her best to not address them like they’re nine, but rather, like they’re a threat to her physical safety.

A girl with Bantu knots and a serious set to her jaw steps forward and gestures at Alex with her red glove.

“Coach Maggie told us she was bringing someone special to meet us. Coach never brings anyone special to meet us.”

“Yeah, even though we’re pretty sure you’re not the first girl she’s dated. She’s pretty pretty!”

“Shhh Andy, let Chase talk, we all agreed!”

Maggie closes her eyes to keep from doubling over with laughter and Alex reminds herself that she can beat a polygraph test.

“So we just want to make sure you’re really special enough for her.”

“Because Coach Maggie’s the best!”
“She brings us for pizza after every game!”

“Even when we lose!”

“And she told off Janelle’s parents when they tried to tell her she couldn’t wear a tie or shop in the boy’s section!”

“Yeah, and look how fabulous I look now!”

“And she – ”

“Order on the field!”

Alex’s eyes open wide and wonders if in a decade or so, Chase would be interested in a job at the DEO.

“So,” Chase continues happily when silence falls immediately. “Tell us why you’re special enough for her. What are your intentions with the best coach ever to coach?”

Maggie bites her lip and stares down at Alex for a moment before squatting next to her.

“Guys, you’re like the inquisition, Alex doesn’t have to – ”

“No, no, Maggie, it’s fine. I love how much they love you.”

She looks squarely at Chase, then at each of the children in turn as she takes a deep breath and speaks.

“And you’re right: Maggie only deserves the most special things and the most special people. Because – and you guys all already know this – she is so, so special. And she’s special to me. The most special. I ask myself the same question every day, you know: am I special enough for her? And honestly? I don’t know. I don’t know if anyone can ever be special enough for Maggie Sawyer. Except maybe you guys, but that’s different. And as for my intentions?”

She turns to look at Maggie and puts a hand on her knee, and Maggie immediately puts her hand on hers to steady herself, because her heart is in her throat and her eyes are waterizing at Alex’s words.

“My intentions with the best coach ever to coach – the best girlfriend ever to girlfriend – are to try, every day, to be special enough for her. To care for her – to love her – better than she’s ever been loved. Every day, every night, and every moment in between.

“Ally.” Maggie’s whisper is barely a breath, and it’s almost lost in the whisper-shouting conferring of intensely defensive nine year olds.

After a few long moments of staring into each other’s eyes, a few long moments during which the softball team confers with each other in the consensus-driven style Maggie taught them, Chase nods and clears her throat for Alex’s attention.

“Dr. Danvers, would you like to play ball with us today? We’re going to learn how to slide into second base, and we think it’d be great if you learned with us.”

Maggie beams and kisses Alex’s hand as Alex shakes Chase’s with her other one.

“It would be my distinct honor.”
She didn’t go with Alex because she knows Alex.

She knows Alex will be more focused if Maggie is safe. Knows she will be less likely to get herself killed if Maggie is safe.

She hates it.

But she knows her.

And anyway, there are other refugees to keep safe.

And that’s the point of a power couple, right? Stronger together, but sometimes ride or die means riding solo on different parts of the same mission.

So she kisses her like she loves her – because she does, god, how she does – and she tries not to think about the kind of danger Alex is strutting into while she makes rounds on every alien in National City she knows, warning them, smuggling them out when necessary.

She has a few bruises of her own by the end of the day, but that pales in comparison to the pain that shoots through her core when Susan Vasquez calls her with a tight voice and shaking hands.

“Maggie, it’s Cadmus. They’re launching a ship with the refugees into space. Alex… Alex is on the ship.”

She doesn’t hang up the phone so much as she drops it, and she only bothers with her helmet because of muscle memory, and she only pays attention to red lights so she can swerve away from creating four-way crashes, and she forgets what speed limits are because Alex, Alex, goddammit how could she have ever let her go alone, Alex.

“What’s happening?” she demands, and Vasquez won’t let her into the control room. She takes Maggie around the waist and she holds her and she pins her arms to her sides and she rocks her when she breaks.

“Then why won’t you let me into the damn control room?” she chokes with a wet rage she hasn’t felt since the massacre at the bar.

“I – “

But a cheer rises up, then, and Vasquez choking out a dry laugh and lets Maggie run out of her arms.
“They’re okay? She’s okay?”

J’onn’s face is in his hands but he nods at the sound of her voice, and she takes Winn into her arms and doesn’t complain when he lifts her off her feet and spins her around.

She does complain a little when he damn near drops her, and Susan has to run over to stabilize them both.

But only a little.

She doesn’t let go of Winn’s hand until the troops return.

The troops, of course, being Supergirl, Alex, and a ship full of refugees, brutalized for being their very selves, abducted and maimed and hunted to satisfy the agenda of xenophobic supremacists who would surely add Winn and Maggie to the list of deportees, gladly, after finding that both of them had dated, had loved, aliens.

Only Supergirl and Alex come back to the DEO, of course, and Winn kisses Maggie’s cheek, hard, before sprinting off the moment he gets a text from Lyra telling him to meet her at the bar.

When a cheer erupts from the agents in the hall, Maggie sprints, too.

Straight into Alex’s arms, and Alex lifts her off her feet – more effectively than Winn – and pulls her in for a deep, breathless kiss that has J’onn averting his wet eyes and Susan whooping and all the agents clapping and Kara somehow laughing and crying at the same time.

Maggie pulls back first and starts checking over Alex’s body with worried hands before Alex has even put her down yet.

“Are you hurt, are you – you – fucking space, Alex!”

Because suddenly the laughter, the relief, is gone from her eyes, and only sheer terror fills them. Alex splutters and Maggie shakes her head and yanks Alex down for another hard, long, desperate kiss.

She’s the first to pull back. Again.

“Space, Danvers! That wasn’t part of our deal!”

“Deal was, you help me save everyone – “

“Alex – “

“They needed me, Maggie, my father – “

“Yeah, I know, I’m proud of you, babe, and I’m in love with you for exactly that, but damnmit, Danvers, I need you too!”

Her voice is thick with tears and her eyes are shining with them, her face a map of defiance, of rage, of relief, of agony, of love, of loss, of fear, of hope, and the agents who were laughing and cheering moments before are now being shooed away by Supergirl and Susan, because the kissing was fun, but the confessions are private.

“You… Maggie you’re… you’re…”

“Not exactly how I wanted to tell you,” Maggie chokes, not meeting Alex’s eyes, her arms wrapped around her chest now, her jaw set, now, her heart shredded with feeling an infinity of different things at once, now.

Alex stares at Maggie’s downturned face for what feels like a millennium – which is how far away she could have been from her, forever, if her sister hadn’t saved them all – and when she can’t bear it anymore, she touches her index finger to Maggie’s chin and gently – gently, so gently, and god she’d almost forgotten what a gentle touch feels like in the last few hours – lifts Maggie’s face up to meet her eyes.

“I’m in love with you, too, Maggie. I… If Kara hadn’t saved us, I… my only regret would’ve been… I’m in love with you, too, Maggie.”

For a long moment, neither of them moves, and for a long moment, neither of them breathes.

“Ally.” Maggie breaks the silence, and this time, her kiss is soft, her kiss is open, her kiss is tender and firm and healing.

Her kiss is forever.

“Alex. When you get a moment to disentangle from Detective Sawyer, I need to speak with you upstairs.”

J’onn’s voice makes them jump apart, but they stay in each other’s arms.

“Acknowledged, sir,” Alex’s voice trembles, but her eyes keep locked in Maggie’s.

“They’ll want to question me, too, I imagine. It might be a few hours.”

“I’ll be here. Always.”

Alex smiles softly and squeezes Maggie’s hands and starts to walk away, though it makes her body ache.

But Maggie pulls her back, and Alex hears her breath hitch.

“I’m home, Maggie. I’m home. I’ll only be upstairs.”

“Not in space.”

“No, not that far upstairs.”

They share a watery laugh.

“Nerd.”

“Your nerd.”

“No one else’s, Danvers. No one else’s.”
Chapter Summary

anonymous asked:

We need to see Maggie getting to Alex's place after J'onn's test right? How Alex explained it and how Maggie reacted? Basically from him leaving to Kara showing up. Cause they are ride or die and all.

She texts her before she stares into the glass of bourbon she was about to down.

She texts her, because she needs her.

And aside from Kara, Alex never admits to needing anyone.

The text is simple.

_I need you._

Maggie’s response is instant.

_I’ll be right there._

And sure enough, she’s there within ten.

In those ten, Alex stares into the bottom of the glass, into the amber liquid, and she swirls it around and she relishes how it will feel burning down her throat.

She thinks of Maggie.

_I need you._

She thinks of Maggie and she thinks of Kara – because of course she’s sent Kara the same text – and she screams, and she throws the glass across the room with all her force.

It shatters against the far wall, and she shatters with it.

Maggie opens the door with her gun drawn and her shoulders set.

“Alex.”

“Here, it’s fine, I’m not – it’s fine. Ow.”

Alex is crouching near the wall, cleaning up the glass with trembling fingers, and Maggie puts the safety on and slips her gun into her waistband immediately.

“Sweetie,” she whispers as she crosses the room, as she squats next to her gathers Alex into her arms, holding her head to her chest.
She glances at the different spills across the apartment, and she reaches her free hand down for Alex’s fingers.

“Sweetie, don’t use your hands to clean glass, I’ll do it later, it doesn’t matter right now.”

“It’ll stain – “

“I know a guy who can fix that. What happened, Ally?”

Alex shakes and she sobs and she lets Maggie pull her up and to a chair by the table, shushing her protests about being too big as she gathers her into her lap.

She says nothing as Alex talks. She says nothing as Alex’s voice gains strength, as she stands up from Maggie’s lap and starts to pace.

“Kara’s on her way,” she offers as explanation, and Maggie just nods quietly.

And she just listens while Kara gently, lovingly, worriedly, tells Alex that she thinks J’onn was right. She sits forward a bit, just a bit, because this is going to be a long night.

Hell, it’s going to be a long few days.

Because Alex is wrong when she takes Maggie’s silence this whole time to mean that she has been thinking what Kara thought.

“Ride or die,” she tells her, and god, does she mean it.

They’re up all night crafting a plan.

Figuring out which explosives are strong enough to blow wherever Cadmus is holing up to hell.

“You’ll need something to detonate on drop, babe, here, look at these schematics –”

“Ugh, Detective Sawyer, NCPD Science Division, I love it when you talk technical.”

“Keep it in your pants, Danvers, we’re working here.”

Figuring out their likeliest next victim.

“It would be Brian.”

“Of course it would be Brian.”

Figuring out exactly how many seconds it will take to hack the information off their GPS.

“Yeah, but look, Winn taught me a trick, this’ll get it to work faster – “

“Well thank god he’s better at his job than he is at pool –”

Figuring out what lies Maggie is going to concoct for her captain, and figuring that “family emergency” is not, in fact, a lie.

“I mean, it’s not untrue.”

“Maggie, I – “
“I know, I know, we’re not really family – “

“That’s… that’s actually not at all what I was going to say.”

“Oh. So you… agree. That it’s not untrue?”

“We ride or die for family, right?”

“Take this,” Alex tells her as they finally get ready to head out.

Maggie splutters and stares and shakes her head.

“Alex, that’s your baby, I – “

“No. Well, yes. But also, you’re my baby, and your NCPD gun and very perfect aim – “

“Aww, Danvers, you noticed – “

“That my girlfriend’s a badass, of course I noticed – “

“Buuuut you’re about to insult my lowly local cop glock.”

“Yes. I am. Please take it, Maggie. I’ll feel better knowing you’re safe.”

“I’ll be with you, Alex. Of course I’ll be safe.”

“I feel the same.”

“Good. You should.”

“You ready to do this?”

Maggie slips Alex’s favorite gun into her waistband and kisses her like she’ll never kiss her again.

“Let’s go.”

Chapter Summary

anonymous asked:

I could use some Maggie raging about the actual aliens being deported across the universe.

She’s at it earlier than she normally is.

The heavy bag.

And hard.

Alex is still groggy and still sore – she can’t tell whether the last part is more from Cadmus or from the possibly dangerous amount of sex they’d had when she got back from nearly being flung halfway across the galaxy – and if Maggie were anyone else, Alex wouldn’t be able to possibly fathom why or how Maggie is up this early, slamming at the bag as hard as she is.

But Maggie is not anyone else, and Alex knows her.

“Give the poor bag a break and give me a shot, Sawyer,” she greets, and Maggie stills on the balls of her feet, and she tenses just slightly in her left thigh, and she turns into a high kick that Alex parries.

“The tension in your left leg is one of your classic tells. Again,” she says, keeping her eyes on Maggie’s.

They’re red, as she knew they would be.

Because Maggie’s been crying.

“I hate them,” she says between blows, all pulled so as not to hurt Alex, all somewhat more gentle than she would be in the field, because this woman is the woman she lives and breathes for.

This woman is not who she wants to be fighting.

“I hate,” she hisses as she ducks under Alex’s swing. “The whole fucking lot of them. And I know, I know.” She sidesteps a punch and lands one of her own, pulled, easy, gentle. Alex nods so Maggie knows she’s okay.

“I know, empathy. Even for people who act like they have no soul. Fine.”

She turns and slams her wrapped fist into the heavy bag, because pulling punches on her girlfriend isn’t good enough anymore, because she can’t bring herself to imagine Lilian Luthor’s face interposed on her beautiful, perfect girlfriend’s concerned, open, loving one.

“But I just… it’s just more of the same… fucking… white supremacist… bullshit.”
She punctuates each word with a different combination, and Alex watches, and Alex listens, and Alex hears.

“What, oh, you don’t belong here according to our goddamn KKK roster, but hey, listen, we’re generous people, we’re good people, we’re just gonna destroy your lives instead of end them, hooray, look what humanitarians we are.”

She plants her feet and rotates her hips and slams over, over, over again into the bag. Fast, hard, angry. Hurt. Terrified.

“Why, Alex?” She’s sobbing now, her voice cracking, sweating forehead on the bag, and she lets Alex wrap her arms around her waist and she lets her warring body go limp in Alex’s strong arms.

“Why are they like this? Why… No, how. How can they… how can they hear those screams and see that pain and not… how can they so completely convince themselves that they’re not people? Hell, that James and Susan and Adrian and me aren’t people? I don’t… Ally, I…”

She breaks and Alex nods and Alex turns her pliant body around so her face is buried in Alex’s shoulder and she kisses her forehead, her hair, and she tells her it’s okay, to let it out, that she’s not alone, that she’s loved, that she’s seen, that she’s heard, that she’s perfect.

Because she is, she is, she is.
anonymous asked:

This is so extra™ but is there any way you could write a smut fic as a continuation of the last scene with Alex and Maggie, where they're both incredibly turned on by each other and they can't help but get it on at the DEO

“So, arm candy, huh?”

“I mean have you looked in a mirror lately, Danvers?”

“Ugh, not lately, god Maggie, I probably look like hell.”

Maggie stops walking and Alex almost stumbles, but Maggie steadies her as she looks up at her gravely.

“You look perfect, Alex Danvers. Perfect. As always.”

Alex’s eyes flit down to Maggie’s lips, and Maggie is a detective.

So she detects.

And she bites her own lip and tries not to gulp.

Alex is a secret agent.

So Alex notices.

“Maggie,” Alex whispers, and her voice is ragged, and Maggie needs her.

Now.

“Tell me, Agent Danvers. Does being so newly reinstated mean you’re opposed to um… reminding your girlfriend what it’s like when you go rogue?”

Alex practically growls, and Maggie swoons.

“Say for example… right now? I mean this place has to have supply closets or something, ri – ”

Her sentence is lost as Alex tugs her forward, and if Maggie were anyone else, she wouldn’t notice Susan Vasquez subtly raising an index finger to point Alex in the direction of a room where the cameras were currently experiencing an inexplicable glitch.

But Maggie isn’t anyone else. She sees the gesture, and she mouths her thanks, and Susan just winks.
Alex doesn’t stop tugging on her arm until they’re reached supply room number 237, apparently, and they’re barely through the door before Alex has Maggie pinned against it, chest already heaving with need.

“Color?” she demands, and her voice is as rough as her eyes.

Because she was just almost flung across the galaxy.

She almost just lost this woman staring up at her with soft lips and eager eyes and desperate hands.

“Neon green, Al,” she rasps, and Alex practically lunges.

Her mouth, her teeth, her hands, are everywhere at once – Maggie’s lips, her throat, her chest (because Alex checks in with her eyes and when Maggie whines and nods desperately, Alex makes quick work of her shirt, of her bra), her stomach.

“Fuck me, Alex,” Maggie begs, and Alex growls as she picks her up effortlessly, and Maggie wraps her legs around Alex’s waist and her arms around Alex’s neck and Maggie screams, because Alex is holding her up with one arm and fucking her with the other hand and Alex is biting down onto her neck and Alex is crying and Maggie is crying but both of them keep reminding each other, green, green, green, please don’t stop, more, please, Alex, yes, fuck, more, harder, fuck, Alex, I’ve got you, I’ve got you, I’ve got you, mine, mine, mine, mine, and Alex isn’t satisfied with Maggie only cumming once, twice, three times, drenching her fingers and staining her underwear and leaving scratches all across Alex’s upper back.

“Let me get you home,” she rasps, and Maggie nods, and Alex makes a show of licking her fingers clean and Maggie whines and writhes and tries to kiss her, but Alex shakes her head.

“She can get you home,” she says, because she wants to go home, but also because she is home.

Maggie knows, and she steps forward and hugs her, just hugs her, hugs her long and solid and safe and loving.

They might hug longer than they’ve fucked – neither of them are quite sure – but eventually Alex helps her get dressed, lethal fingers suddenly tender again, burning eyes suddenly soft and shy and timid again.

Until, that is, they get home.

Because Maggie glances at the way Alex’s leather jacket is unzipped just low enough that she can start to see her cleavage, and Maggie gulps, and Alex notices.

Of course Alex notices.

And she sweeps everything unceremoniously off the kitchen island and bends Maggie over on top of it.

“All good, babe?” she asks, even though she’s already read the answer in Maggie’s wrecked eyes.

“Don’t stop,” Maggie prays, and Alex promises to oblige. But some business first.

“Be a good girl and strip for me, Maggie,” she orders, and Maggie gasps at the command in her tone, at the confidence in her voice, at the authority in her heady gaze.

The authority, the determination, the audacity, the brazenness, that had been turning her on all day.
And while Alex was in agony – while she herself was in agony – she’d kept it to herself as much as she could.

And they’re both still in agony, but Alex’s roughness is an escape and Maggie’s compliance is a balm, and their skin touching skin is heaven on earth, and they’re safe, safe, safe, safe.

For now.

So they use it for all it is, and Maggie strips for Alex slow, strips for her determined, strips for her deliberate. She never takes her eyes off of Alex’s hungry ones, and the nearly feral look on Alex’s face is reward enough.

Enough, that is, until Alex has her begging for more, because Alex has turned her around again, has bent her over again, is slipping inside her again, is whispering how beautiful she is, what a good girl she is, supporting Alex like that all day, is this a good enough reward, how wet she is, how tight she is, how perfect she is, into Maggie’s ear, and Maggie comes completely undone in Alex’s strong, solid arms, backing up wildly against Alex’s strong, solid body.

And when Alex carries her to bed and presses kisses against every hickey, against every birthmark, against every old scar and every new bruise, Maggie knows only one thing in the entire multiverse:

That she is in love with prodigal-DEO-agent-gone-rogue-loyal-daughter-perfect-sister-gorgeous-ruthless-determined-genius-unrelenting Alex Danvers.

And she’s pretty damn sure Alex Danvers is in love with her, too.

Which is why Alex lets her crawl on top of her.

Why Alex wants her to crawl on top of her.

Because after a day of being impenetrable, of being almost worryingly hard-headed, of being a coiled muscle, a veritable force of nature, Alex is in love.

Alex trusts her.

Trusts her enough to let her guard down.

Trusts her enough to believe that letting Maggie give her back what Alex just gave to her doesn’t make her weak and it doesn’t make her less.

It makes her loved.

“You want this, sweetie?” Maggie asks, and Alex just arches her hips up so Maggie can strip her naked.

“Oh, Ally,” she whispers as she catalogues every new bruise, every fresh cut, painted onto Alex’s torso, onto her arms, onto her legs.

And Maggie kisses each one of them, memorizes their locations, their severity, in a map in her mind, so she will know exactly how to move when she does what she does next, what Alex is starting to whine for, what Alex is starting to grind her hips up for.

“Alex, you – “

“Yes, Maggie. Please.”
And Maggie obliges.

She starts slow, but she doesn’t end slow.

She starts soft, but she doesn’t end soft.

Because Alex begs her for more and Alex begs her for harder and Alex begs her for faster, please, please, Maggie, god, fuck. I’m yours, I’m yours, I’m yours, fuck just like that, god, fuck, Maggie, Maggie, Maggie, please don’t stop, please please please.

She shifts so her thigh is between Alex’s legs, and she groans as Alex grabs at her ass and bites at her shoulder as she pulls her down, harder and harder, closer, closer, struggling to find friction because Maggie’s thigh is so slick with how wet Alex is, and she kisses Alex’s hair and puts one hand behind her head and braces herself with the other and times her movements perfectly with Alex so that proximity, rhythm, outweighs friction and Alex is so wrecked underneath her that Maggie forgets what air is, that she can have this effect on a woman so powerful, so ruthless, that she single-handedly infiltrated and exploded Cadmus’s lair, and that woman cums screaming Maggie’s name and it’s almost more than Maggie can handle, because even without direct pressure, she cums again, too.

“I’ve got you, Ally,” she whispers, kissing her face as Alex shudders through the last waves of her orgasm. “I’ve got you.”

“Promise?”

“Ride or die, Danvers. Ride or die.”

Chapter Summary

gayasever asked:

kara and alex talking about her job instead of m*nel

They don’t quite have sex all night.

Because when they’re – eventually – taking a breather, Alex checks her phone, and Maggie knows why.

And she tosses one of Alex’s sweaters onto her face immediately.

“What gives, Sawyer?” Alex emerges from the sweater with even more tousled hair than she started with, and Maggie can’t help but lean down and kiss her nose.

“You wanna go see your sister. And you should. Do you want me to come with?”

Alex squints at her for a long moment and reads everything in her eyes.

I don’t want to intrude on your sister time, and I don’t want to get in the way. But I almost lost you, Alex, forever, and I need you near me, I need you close, I need you, I need you, I need you.

“Course you can come, babe.”

“Funny, I thought I already did. Several times, in fact.”

“And you call me a nerd.”

They carry on the snark and the flirtation – and the hand holding, always the hand holding, because they’ll have to deal with the fallout of living through hell in the morning, but god at least they’re both alive and very much on earth to get through it together – until they reach Kara’s door with two bags overflowing with potstickers.

Alex doesn’t knock, and Maggie finds herself wondering how her life would be different if her family loved her as much as Alex and Kara love each other.

Unconditionally.

Kara’s eyes are droopy and even Maggie knows it’s a terrible sign that she’s not even stress-eating anything.

“We brought potstickers,” Alex sing-songs softly, but there’s a sadness underneath her voice.

Kara hears it, and she appreciates it beyond belief. Her lower lip wobble, and she’s in Alex’s arms almost before Maggie can grab the potstickers and get them to safety.
“You almost were on the other side of the galaxy,” Kara sobbed. “I didn’t think I could do it, but you… you never stopped believing in me, and I… but that was as Supergirl, not…”

She sniffs and straightens and tears bitterly into the bag Maggie’s holding.

“Apparently Kara Danvers isn’t even worth keeping around at CatCo.”

“Kara, no.”

“Karayesh,” Kara mutters with a full mouth, and Alex is relieved that at least she’s stuffing her face.

“Oh, Little Danvers, I’m so sorry,” Maggie reaches for Kara’s forearm. “But listen, kid, you did what you thought was right. Alex lost her job, too. And she got it back. You’ll get it back, Kara.”

But Kara just shakes her head at the potstickers. “Snapper would never let me. He was… so disappointed. If Ms. Grant was here… Well, no, Ms. Grant would have run the story in the first place, she…”

Kara’s shoulders shake and Alex gathers her into her arms as Maggie leans back to send off a quick text.

_Ms. Grant – Maggie Sawyer again. Sorry to bother, but Kara went out on a limb to save lives with an article, and Snapper fired her. Anything you can do?_

“Kara,” Alex is whispering, over and over and over again, relishing the feeling of her sister’s safe, safe, safe, alive body in her arms, even if that body is wracking with sobs.

“CatCo was my normal, Alex, it was everything, it – I’m nothing without CatCo, I – “

“No. No no no no no. First, Maggie’s right, you might get it back, but even if you never did, Kara, you… You were the one who refused to believe us all about Lena Luthor. And look who was right? You were the one who wrote those expose articles, you were the one who figured out how to save all those missing people. You. Not Supergirl. And you… Kara, you were my sister such a long time before you were Supergirl. And my sister? My sister’s a hero. Always has been. Because my sister – you, Kara, you – you started saving my life so long before you ever put on that cape. You’re loyal, Kara, and you’re compassionate, and you are so much better, so much kinder, than I could ever hope to be. And that? After all you’ve been through, all you’ve survived? That is a superpower, Kara Danvers. And I know how much you love CatCo, and I know what it does for you, but I promise you, sis, you don’t need to ever worry that Supergirl is the only thing you have going for you. Because Kara Danvers? Pretty amazing all on her own.”

“Argyle sweaters and all, Little Danvers” Maggie kisses her cheek, and Kara smiles as she sniffs.

“I haven’t been wearing that much argyle lately.”

“Yeah, you’ve been dressing a lot gayer, Little Danvers, been meaning to ask you about that and a certain Luthor – “

Kara jumps when her phone rings and Alex arches an eyebrow at Maggie.

“Ms. Grant! Is everything alright, is Carter okay, I – “

“I don’t know what you were thinking, Keira, with this Danvers.com fiasco, but I certainly hope that the reason you didn’t simply reach out for advice in such a dire situation was because your phone only just now miraculously recovered from whatever millennial beverage you spilled on it – “

“Ms. Grant, I – “

“No need for apologies, Kiera, I’ve called your boss and explained that in no uncertain terms is her permitted to let the most promising young reporter I’ve ever seen get scooped up by some scrap of a publication like The Planet simply because he was too hard-headed about priming you to be a reporter to see the broader picture you were trying to paint for him about, you know, that little matter of saving lives. So you’re to report back to your desk tomorrow morning, Kiera, and you are going to tolerate his wrath and you are going to tolerate the whispers from your co-workers and you are going to hold your head up high because I seem to have heard something about a ship full of refugees being rescued, and don’t think I don’t know you had quite a lot to do with that.”

Alex and Maggie beam as Kara blinks and adjusts her glasses furiously.

“No no, none of your tired excuses or gratitude speeches, it’s too late and I’m too exhausted for either of them, just one more thing before I end this conversation: I’m proud of you, Kara. I am so, so very proud of you.”

The line disconnects before Kara can splutter out anything even resembling words, and when she falls asleep an hour or two later snuggled between Alex and Maggie on her bed, it’s with a smile on her face and something that feels like confidence in Kara Danvers in her heart.

a post-ep fic with Sanvers cuddling in bed and Maggie notices a cut or bruise on Alex and has to kiss it all better. ;)

When they get home from Kara’s – it’s almost sunup, now, and the only reason they come back to Alex’s is precisely because Kara has no bathtub and Alex is stiff as all get out from falling asleep at such an awkward angle, cuddling both her little sister and her girlfriend – Maggie draws her a bath while she brews her a strong coffee.

“Maggie, you don’t have to do that,” Alex’s voice is soft as she tries to work out the stiffness in her own torso at the same time as she sends a text to James and Winn to please be there with Kara when she wakes up.

“Don’t have to do what, dote on my beautiful arm candy who almost got flung across the galaxy after single-handedly infiltrating and exploding a genocidal hotspot last night?”

Alex quirks her lips to the side and shakes her head.

“When you insist on putting it that way – “

“I do, Danvers. Come here.”

She leads her to the bathroom, where bubbles are nearly overflowing the bath, and candles are glowing softly on the sink.

“Maggie,” Alex breathes.

“Take your time, sweetie. I’ll be here when you get out.”

But Alex grabs her hand.

“Stay?”

Maggie’s heart trembles with gratitude, because god, she hadn’t wanted to let Alex out of her sight for more than a second, but she also hadn’t wanted to overwhelm her.

“Of course.” She puts the toilet seat down and sits, fiddling with her phone until she finds some soft jazz. She watches without comment as Alex strips slowly, painfully, and she mentally catalogues every new bruise, every new gash.

When Alex slips out of the bath a full hour later, Maggie wraps her in a towel and leads her to bed, shrugging out of her own clothes and cuddling up close to her.

Her fingers trace soft patterns on Alex’s arms, her torso, her face, and every time she comes upon a fresh injury, she stops.

“Can I kiss it better, Danvers?” she’ll always ask, and always, Alex will swoon.

Always, Alex will say yes.

Her lips always flutter around the injury first, tracing its limits and its boundaries, as though delineating them and mandating that the bruise will spread no further than the border she’s marked with her mouth. And then slowly, gently, so softly Alex can sometimes barely feel it, Maggie presses her lips to each bruise, to each cut, to each scrape, to each soon-to-be scar.

She says something different each time.

“You’re perfect, Alex.”

“You are so fucking brave, Danvers.”

“Do you want me to take care of whoever did this to you? Because I’m just saying, if you let me borrow that gun again, or just give me that grenade, I’m down. Hell, I’m down without them, too.”

“You are so goddamn precious, Ally.”

“I’m yours, you know. And you’re never gonna lose me.”

Alex leans up on her elbows at that.

“You’re never going to lose me, either.”

Maggie trembles, her bravado, her care-taking, gone, transforming in an instant to let Alex see the pure terror, the rage, the pain, the agony, of coming so close to losing her forever.

“You’re never going to lose me, babe.”

She gathers Maggie into her arms and presses soft kisses to the back of her neck while Maggie cries, while Maggie trembles, while Maggie grabs at her hands and holds them tight.

“I’m here, I’m here, I’m here.”

“Don’t leave,” Maggie whispers raggedly, and Alex nods away her own tears.

“I won’t, babe. I won’t, I won’t, I won’t.”

could you please do a slow passionate, emotional sex scene between maggie and alex after alex almost got sent into space? Thanks so much

She draws her a bath and she kisses all her fresh injuries, and she thought she was overcome before, but then Alex turns the tables on her.

“You didn’t have such an easy day, either. Smuggling all those refugees out of the city. You have any injuries I should see?”

And Maggie never answers her girlfriends like this – is never this open, is never this vulnerable, but Alex is different, Alex is the one woman who is, in a word, everything – so she lets her lip tremble instead of forcing her jaw to clench, and she lets her eyes water instead of forcing her tears back down her throat.

“Only this one means anything,” she chokes, tapping trembling fingers to her heart. “I almost lost you, Ally. I almost lost you.”

Her tears reflect in Alex’s soft eyes – eyes that were forged in fire and carved into lethal steel just hours ago – and Alex takes Maggie’s face into her hands and kisses every single part.

“I’m here,” she reminds her with each kiss she presses to her nose, to her eyes, to her eyebrows, to her dimples, to her forehead, to her chin, to her jawline, to her temples. “I’m here, I’m here, I’m here.”

She hesitates before kissing her lips, unsure if that’s what Maggie wants, what she needs, right now. Their eyes lock and their breath freezes and they decide what they want, what they need, in the same moment.

Maggie sighs into Alex’s mouth and Alex shifts to cover Maggie’s body with her own, holding her weight up on one elbow, her other hand cupping Maggie’s face.

“I’m here,” she whispers again before Maggie opens her lips and Alex slips in her tongue, slow and soft and needy and intense.

She gasps slightly when Maggie flips her over, when Maggie’s heart threatens to break at the way Alex’s strong arm is shaking now with the task of holding herself up so all her weight doesn’t fall on Maggie’s body; when Maggie rolls them over so she’s on top, so her hand is pillowing Alex’s head and her lips have free reign on her throat, her collarbone, her lips, her forehead, her chest.

“Maggie,” Alex whispers, and Maggie freezes immediately. Alex smiles faintly, dazedly, at her attentiveness. “No, I didn’t… please don’t stop.”

Maggie nods and complies, kissing every surface of Alex’s trembling skin, always with her eyes on Alex’s face, always waiting for Alex’s nod before moving lower on her body, always waiting for Alex’s hands buried in her hair to direct her where to go next before assuming what she wants.

“My gorgeous soldier, gone rogue to save the world,” she murmurs as she kisses the swollen bruise on Alex’s torso, not sure if she even means Alex to hear it.

But she does, and hot tears sting her eyes, and she pulls Maggie back up her body to meet her lips.

“You could have died helping me,” Alex breathes between kisses, and Maggie shakes her head.

“Small price to pay.”

Alex freezes. “Don’t talk like that.”

“I’m not, I didn’t mean… I just meant…”

“Ride or die.”

“Yeah.”

“You’re safe.”

“So are you.”

“Make love to me, Maggie.”

“Your wish is my command, Danvers.”

They smile soft and they smile broken and they smile hope into each other’s lips, and Alex exhales loudly as she arches her hips up, and Maggie moans slightly, because she knows what her soldier wants.

She shifts so her thigh is between Alex’s legs, so her fingers are caressing Alex’s nipple, and sure enough, Alex tosses her head back into the pillows and grinds her hips up onto Maggie’s thigh and grabs Maggie’s ass and pulls her down with one hand, using the other to reinforce Maggie’s hold on her chest with another.

“Maggie.” Her breath is ragged and her breath is wrecked, and the sound washes over Maggie like coming home.

“I’m here. I’ve got you, Ally. I’ve got you. You need to stop?”

“No, no, Maggie, please. Please.”

Maggie nods into Alex’s neck and grinds down into her until her thigh is slick with how wet Alex is, with how desperately Alex wants her.

“I wanna be inside you, Mags,” Alex moans, and shocked heat courses through Maggie’s body as she nods, as she lets Alex flip her over, as she bends her own knee and plants her heel on the mattress so Alex can ride her thigh, her knee, while she fucks her with her fingers deep, slow, thorough, complete.

“Al,” is all Maggie can choke out as Alex grinds down on her leg, as Alex pushes so deep inside her with fingers that took lives today, but now are only about pleasure, about passion, about need, about love.

So she does let go, and she arches her hips up and tosses her head back as Alex worships her neck with her lips, as Alex curves her fingers inside her, beckoning forth an orgasm that tears through Maggie’s body hard and intense and quiet.

Alex feels her pulsing around her, feels her thigh shaking between her own, watches the ecstasy, the passion, the love, flashing across her face, and she lets herself cum, too.

“I’m not going anywhere,” they whisper to each other at the same time, when the waves have crashed through them both and they’re sated and shaking in each other’s arms.

They laugh softly at the simultaneity.

“Thank you,” Alex croaks, and Maggie pulls back and tilts her head.

“I can’t say I’ve ever been thanked for sex before, Danvers.”

Alex pffts and blushes and warmth courses through Maggie’s heart because if Alex can still be this soft, this nerdy, maybe they’ll both be able to heal from this Cadmus-induced string of agonies after all.

“No, I meant… for having my back. For supporting me, unconditionally, for… for you.”

Tears mist over Maggie’s eyes. “I mean, you let me borrow your gun, Danvers, it’s not like there wasn’t anything in it for me.”

“Maggie.”

“Always, Alex. Always.”

“Same in reverse, Mags. Same.”

“I know.”

“Good. But you’re still not getting that grenade.”

Chapter Summary

anonymous asked:

I was kinda disappointed Maggie wasn't at the DEO after the explosion. I liked J'onn finding Alex beating up that Cadmus crony but like maybe Maggie comforting her after that scene cause she seemed like she could really use a good hug?

“I would have stopped,” she repeats over and over to Maggie – or to herself, Maggie can’t quite tell – as Maggie examines and ices her knuckles.

“I know, sweetie,” she whispers after something like the tenth time Alex says it, and Alex startles like she’s just now realizes Maggie is there, kneeling in front of her and caring for her lethal hands.

So she was repeating it to herself, after all.

Maggie didn’t know her heart could shred any more than it already has since she got the text from Winn – Alex went rogue on a Cadmus prisoner, I’ve got her for now, but I think she needs you – but it does.

“So, look at me?”

Alex stares down at her with a mixture of defiance and desperate need for validation in her eyes. Maggie envelops the first and provides the second.

“Alez, you were trying to save lives. I know it…” She looks at Alex’s hands and wonders how much worse the prisoner must look, and her heart shreds just a little more. “But I know you would have stopped. Wanna know how?”

Alex gulps and blinks down tears and shakes her head. Maggie runs gentle fingers across her cheek.

“Because you’re so upset over it now. You wouldn’t be if there wasn’t something inside you setting your own lines that you will and won’t cross for the people you love.”

“But what if…” Alex’s voice cracks and she looks up to gather herself. “What if I’m just like him? Like my dad? He… He’s being used, he’s being manipulated, he’s… what if I’m like that? Doing more harm than good because I’m… trying to settle some sick equation in my head?”

“Are you like that, Alex?”

She thinks about her body count and how she’d made sure to set that alien weapon to stun.

She thinks about the mothers who’ve hugged her for saving their children and J’onn’s hand on her shoulder telling her that the world was a safer place because she was in it.
J’onn.

Alex trembles.

“I don’t think so? I don’t know.”

“Well, you know what the good thing about being part of a team is, Danvers? You get to lean on each other when you don’t know something. Come here.”

She reaches up and brings Alex into a long, close, quiet hug.

And Alex melts right into it, and she grabs at Maggie’s jacket and holds her closer and revels in the way her arms feel safe and strong and trusting around her, because she doesn’t usually do well with partners, either.

But they do make a pretty good team.
anonymous asked:

After the attack on the alien bar when Maggie got pushed by the explosion and Alex got held at gun point they both worriedly checked each other to see if they were hurt (and Alex definitely hugged tight her and kissed the top of her head)

Lyra’s screams, Winn’s screams, aren’t going to leave either of their minds for a long time.

If ever.

Maggie pulls him back and she holds him close to her body, not noticing or caring that her hair is still in her face, in the corner of her mouth.

Because god, that’s how ICE does it with people who look like her, who look like James, and now Cadmus is on that same xenophobic, genocidal list.

But with much better weapons.

“We’re gonna get her back, Winn,” she says, but even to her, her voice sounds hollow. She blinks an tries again, turning his numb body to hers and holding him by both shoulders.

“Yeah. Yeah,” he breathes, but his entire body is shaking. “Are you okay, and Alex? Guardian?”

He turns toward the others, they both do, to find James with his mask off, holding Alex to his metal-plated chest.

“We’re fine. We’re gonna get her back, Winn,” James calls. “All of them. All of them. Come on, man, let’s… come on.” He kisses Alex’s temple before striding over and putting his arm around Winn, leading him back to the van where he can change, where he can offer Winn an anti-anxiety pill, where he can offer Winn all the quiet, soft hugs he needs.

“Thank you, Maggie,” Winn tells her as James nods and starts leading him away.

James smiles and glances between Alex and Maggie. “Always.”

Both women smile and watch Winn and James leave.

“Alex.” Maggie is the first to break out of it, and she rushes to Alex’s arms, stopping just short of hugging her, her hands running everywhere on her body, checking for injuries.

“Did he hurt you, did – “
“No, I – you? You shouldn’t’ve come after me like that, it was just a regular police gun – “

“Alex, I would come after you with my bare hands if that’s all I had.”

Alex’s breath hitches and her body trembles and she pulls Maggie into a deep, hard hug. Maggie hisses slightly and Alex yanks back immediately.

“The explosion! You must have gotten burned, I – “

“Alex, I’m okay. You can check me out later at the DEO, I promise, okay? Just – we’ve gotta get back in there before any of them come to, but I – I want to feel you right now, just… just hold me?”

Alex presses her lips to Maggie’s forehead and Maggie lets herself melt, lets herself be not alright, lets herself be comforted, because Alex is safe, safe, safe, and they’re going to get the others back. They have to. And they will.

Together.
Chapter Summary

anonymous asked:

Maybe a quick, lighthearted scene of Maggie being playful/seductive with Alex talking about toys in the bedroom but really she's just trying to get Alex to let her use the laser gun again or sexual favors for said laser gun

“You know you’ve been down with learning a lot in the bedroom, Danvers.”

Alex looks up from her book and quirks an eyebrow behind her glasses.

“I have.”

“Mmmm. Strap-ons and vibrators, and all kinds of bondage toys.”

Alex purses her lips to the side and closes her book, because Maggie is licking her lips and looking at her with a smile that needs a reward and eyes that are hotter than fire.

“Go on.”

“Well, I was just thinking.” Maggie crawls closer to her, seeking permission with her eyes, and Alex grants it by lowering her knees so Maggie can straddle her.

“You’re all about toys in the bedroom, and I know how much you love your… mmm… outside the bedroom toys.”

“I’m not giving you that flash grenade, Sawyer, you’re a pyromaniac, I – “

“Nnhnn, not the grenade.” She sweeps Alex’s hair away from her neck and places her open lips on her throat. Alex exhales raggedly and tosses her book to the side, putting her hands on Maggie’s hips instead.

“I was just wondering… since we share all the toys in the bedroom…” She nips at Alex’s neck and Alex bites down a gasp. “If I could make it worth your while to share your laser gun with me again.”

“Baby, that’s the third time this week!” Alex protests, but her smile gives her away, her rolling hips give her away, and the whine she emits when Maggie pulls back gives her away.

“Exactly, and you haven’t lent it to me again yet. So I thought… like I said…” She gently pushes Alex’s silk robe to the side so it falls off her, and her lips find the newly revealed skin, and Alex damn near starts panting. “I could make it… worth your while.”

“What’ve you uh… got in mind, Sawyer?”

“I can make you cum in my mouth until you don’t even remember your name,” Maggie offers with the innocent nonchalance of offering to go to the store and get Alex a donut.

Alex hisses and licks her lips and rolls her hips up into Maggie’s body, fixing her with desperate eyes behind her glasses.

But she’s still got some shred of pride, some shred of stubbornness, left.

“You do that anyway, Maggie, so why would I give you my gun to – “

But she interrupts herself with a desperate whine and grabbing out for Maggie, because Maggie has shrugged and started to swing her body off of Alex’s.

“No, you know what, babe, you have a point, so you might as well go back to your reading – “

“Don’t you dare, Maggie Sawyer.”

Maggie pauses and tries to hide her smile, but her burning eyes do it for her.

“Don’t I dare what, Danvers? Leave you all hot and bothered and desperate for my tongue on your clit and my fingers stretching you out?”

“Maggie.”

“Alex.”

Alex groans and smiles and shakes her head, because this woman, this woman, this amazing woman who can somehow make her laugh and make her safe and make her more turned on than anything she’s ever known all at the same time.

“Okay, you can borrow my gun.”

Maggie grins smugly and settles down between Alex’s legs.

“And you can cum in my mouth as many times as you can handle.”

“Deal.”

“Now about that grenade – “

“Oh my god, why are you like this?”

“Oh hush Danvers, you love it.”

“That I do. That I do.”
Alex picks him up on her bike because his car’s broken down, his girl lives in National City, and she and Maggie don’t want him to have to pay for a train all the way back from Star City.

And, instead of shelling out the money themselves – which they’ve had no problem doing on numerous occasions – Alex decides she’ll finally give in to his persistent requests to learn how to drive a motorcycle.

“I’m not teaching you to drive today, kid, but we’ll see how well you can take in the turns with me – you gotta move with me, but not too much or I’ll spend all my time overcompensating, okay?”

Adrian nods with the same big eyes he gets when he’s working on a physics equation with her.

“Oh, and here,” Alex says with practiced nonchalance, pressing a package from her saddle bag into his hands.

“Alex, what – “

His response is lost in his sob, in the bone-crushing hug he pulls Alex into. She kisses his cheek and makes a big show of pulling back from the scratchiness of his scruff, which makes him bounce on the balls of his feet.

“Alex, it – why – “

“Maggie and I decided if you’re gonna ride with me, you need a proper jacket to go with it. Synthetic leather, of course.”

And what a proper jacket it is. Thick and masculine, sheer black with just the right amount of toughness, just the right amount of softness. Just the right amount of everything.

He hugs her again and when he pulls back, a mischievous grin combines amusingly with the tears in his eyes.
“Maggie has no idea, does she? That I’m riding with you, that you bought this for me.”

“Had it made, actually. And pfft, no. Why would she – “

“Because she’s terrified of me riding a bike.”

“Dude, if you’re old enough to ride a girl, you’re old enough to ride a bike.”

Adrian doubles over with laughter and Alex has to resist patting herself on the back.

“Come on, kid,” she says, putting his helmet into his hands. “Let’s go meet your girl.”

They drive right to the restaurant, because Adrian and Maggie had decided that for first meeting his first girlfriend, a public setting would be less intimidating than his queer moms’ den.

“Seriously, Danvers?” Maggie asks with a tilted head and quirked eyebrow when Alex pulls up smoothly and revs the engine as Adrian holds onto her shoulders and swings off shakily but smoothly.

“Hey, listen, first girlfriends are a big deal, I wanted him to be able to pull out all the stops,” Alex defends herself as she pulls off her helmet and shakes her hair out.

“Slash you wanted to look like the cool mom,” Maggie mutters with a grin and wink at Adrian as she smooths his jacket and pulls at the rugged collar affectionately.

“It suits you, Ade,” she kisses his cheek, and he beams as he slips his phone out of his pocket.

“Myra should be here in a couple minutes, so are you two gonna kiss out the sexual tension now or wait until appetizers?”

They both mock glare at him as Alex steps into Maggie’s space tentatively, and Maggie looks up into her eyes and smooths her hair while she shakes her head.

“I love how much you love him, Al. And if I’m going to trust him on the back of anyone’s bike, of course it’s yours.”

“You’re not mad?”

“Only if your next ride’s with me.”

“Ew, Maggie, come on, innocent child’s ears here!”

“How come you’re a grown-ass man when you wanna be and a child when it’s conven – “

“Adrian!”

“Myra!” He jumps and his voice lowers an octave and Alex and Maggie exchange nervous, excited, happy glances.

“Hey, glad you made it – “ He touches her arm and kisses her cheek sweetly, and when she beams, Maggie nods slowly. “Sorry I couldn’t bring you flowers or anything, I uh… Alex picked me up in style.”

He gestures to the bike and Myra oohs and Alex mutters “see? Total girl magnet” and Maggie nudges her in the shoulder and mutters back “Fair enough. Worked on me, didn’t it?” before stepping forward and extending her hand to Myra.
“Detective Maggie Sawyer, NCPD. And this is my girlfriend, Special Agent Alex Danvers, FBI.”

“Thought we talked about introducing yourself with titles, Maggie.”

“You talked, Ade, I didn’t say I was listening.”

Myra giggles as Adrian and Alex roll their eyes at each other.

“No, it’s good. You’re protective of him, I… I like that. He deserves it.”

Alex grins as she shakes Myra’s hand while Adrian gulps and beams and tickles Maggie’s sides behind them.

“Shall we?” Maggie sweeps toward the restaurant, and Adrian steps back to let Myra pass.

“Such a gentleman,” Alex murmurs, and Adrian only beams brighter.

“Reservation for four for Sawyer,” Maggie leans on the welcome table casually, disguising the way she’s scoping out Myra’s body language with her easy body language. Alex notices, of course, and kicks her softly.

“So kids, get whatever you want, okay? Tonight’s on Alex and me.”

“See, I told you they’re basically married.” Myra giggles again as Alex blushes and looks at the ceiling and Maggie squeezes her hand and kicks Adrian gently under the table.

“So Myra, you’re from National City, too?”

She nods and gulps at her water to quell her nerves. “Adrian and I actually went to the same elementary school. We had Ms. Beckendorf together in second grade – “

“Ms. Beckendorfffff,” Adrian groans, and Myra puts a casual hand on his.

“And have similarly traumatic memories of gym class. But he went to a different high school than me, so we sort of fell out of touch until um…”

Adrian nods supportively and runs his thumb over the pad of her hand. “It’s okay, they know how we reconnected, they’re cool.”

“That drag show?” Maggie supplies with a head tilt and a soft grin.

Myra nods. “Sorry. I guess I’m still not used to adults who are…”

“Queer as all get-out?” Alex offers, and Maggie shakes her head at how far her girlfriend’s come.

“I guess so, yeah.”

“And what drew you to Adrian?”

“Maggieeee!”

“Sorry Ade, queer mama’s gotta do what queer mama’s gotta do.”

“His kindness. All the other boys were all raucous and crude, and Adrian knows how to have fun – “

“Oh, we know – “
“But he was always so respectful, you know, of the performers, and he just… he stood out.”

“Also didn’t hurt that I was the only brown boy in the bunch, I bet.”

“I mean listen, it wasn’t the best venue to find people, but we both wound up there, right?”

Adrian puts his forehead down to hers and kisses her hand.

“We did, yeah.”

Alex squeezes Maggie’s hand under the table and Alex’s grip is the only thing keeping Maggie from sobbing because her little boy is growing up.

And even if it’s not forever, it looks like he’s found love.

A strange and unfamiliar feeling sweeps over her, and it’s with a jolt that she realizes she’s only ever really felt it on game nights with the Superfriends or grocery shopping with Alex, Kara, and Adrian or Sunday mornings with Alex’s glasses and the newspaper and burnt toast and coffee at midnight.

Family, she realizes.

It feels like family. And when Alex squeezes her hand again, when Adrian meets her eyes and reaches for her hand across the table, she knows they both feel it, too.

“Good answers, Myra. Good answers.”

Myra beams and maybe, just maybe, she feels it, too.

Maggie sure as hell hopes so.

Chapter Summary

Missing Phone and Home

“Come on, Maggie! Kara and James are already waiting for us!”

Maggie groans from her bedroom and Winn exchanges an arched eyebrow with Alex.

“You alright in there, babe?” Alex calls.

“I can’t find my phone!”

Maggie’s voice is muffled, and Winn leans into Alex.

“She sounds like she’s… is she checking under her bed?”

Alex snorts. “Pfft, no, why would her phone be there?”

“Babe, do you remember if I took it out of my pocket last night before we – “

“I’m calling you right now, hold on!” Alex cuts her off, a blush rising in her face as Winn’s smirk grows.

“Nice work, Danvers,” he mutters, and Alex smacks him lightly, gently, affectionately, on the back of the head, but her own pleased grin gives her away.

She dials Maggie’s number and Maggie appears in her bedroom doorway, head cocked to the side, waiting for the call to go through.

John Legend’s Save Room starts blasting through the apartment from somewhere near the couch, and Maggie bites her lip with wide eyes as Winn awes and Alex blushes and bends to scoop the phone out from between the cushions.

“Babe – “ She says when she glances at it, and Maggie closes her eyes like she’s waiting to be hit, like she’s thinking she’s done something so stupid; like she’s thinking she forgot something, and that something might destroy everything.

Alex stares down at the caller ID picture of herself on Maggie’s phone – a beautiful shot, one that James took at game night a few weeks ago, Alex with her face frozen in laughter, holding Maggie’s hand and leaning into Kara’s shoulder – but that’s not what has her attention, what’s made the blood rush from her face.

The picture isn’t what’s tearing Maggie’s stomach into knots and making Winn stare between them, completely unaware of what’s happening, wondering if he’s going to need to call Supergirl and Guardian.

“I’m sorry, Danvers, I’ll change it, I know it’s probably uncomfortable, I – “
Winn leans over Alex’s shoulder just before her call goes to voicemail. “Maggie, no, that picture’s beautiful, why – oh. Oh.” He stares between them now, and he knows what Maggie’s afraid of. But he also knows Alex, and he knows Maggie has no reason to be apologizing, no reason to be scared.

“No, Maggie, I…” Alex holds up Maggie’s phone numbly, even though the screen’s faded to black by now. “You have my cell number listed as Home.”

Maggie lowers her gaze and licks her lips. “Like I said, Danvers, I’ll change it, I’m sorry, I – “

Alex is across the room before Maggie can say anything else, and she’s lifting her chin up with gentle, gentle fingers. “No. No, no. You’re not reading me right, I… I’m not angry, I’m… I love it, Maggie. That I’m…”

“My home,” Maggie supplies in a soft, tentative, terrified voice, and Alex’s smile has never been more tender.

“Why… why would I be upset about something so… beautiful?”

Maggie shrugs and tries to look away again. “It’s clingy, it’s – “

“No,” Alex corrects gently. “No, it’s not. It’s amazing. You’re amazing. I… I want to be your home, Maggie, I want to give you that. I want to give you everything, because you… you deserve everything. And I… I want to build mine with you. My home. If you want.”

Maggie is silent for the longest of moments, trying desperately not to cry, trying desperately not to weep.

“You getting soft on me, Danvers?”

Alex laughs and it’s the best sound Maggie’s ever heard.

“When you’re done proposing to each other, any chance we can go meet Kara and James at the brunch place? Kara’s blowing up my phone with texts, and I’m pretty sure if we don’t get there soon, she’ll fly in here and forcibly carry us or something. You know how she gets when she’s hungry.”

Alex laughs again but doesn’t turn around, her eyes still locked in Maggie’s. She kisses her knuckles before turning and tossing one arm around Winn’s shoulder and the other around Maggie’s.

“Tell Kara we’ll be there in ten.”

“And to get extra nachos when she inevitably orders the entire left side of the menu.”

“Mmm, I love how well you know my sister.”

“Do you two just… wanna text her yourselves? Or keep… making out… right next to… me… How can you walk while you’re doing that? Is it some kind of special lesbian superpower? Okay you know what, I’ll just be over here.”

Alex tousles Winn’s hair without looking at him as she and Maggie come up for air and press their foreheads together softly.

Being such an obvious third wheel has never left Winn feeling so happy, so peaceful.

Because their joy is infectious.
Because he’s not really a third wheel, because they are his family.

Because really, they’re his home, too.

Chapter Summary

anonymous asked:

Hi, I know you're swamped with prompts right now so totally understand if you give this a pass. I just really love the care you put in writing ace Alex. My partner is ace too and when I 'take care of myself' sometimes they're there holding me and kissing my face, neck, or shoulders and just whispering to me, and it's just so wonderful and intimate and I was wondering if you'd write that for Maggie and ace Alex? :P

Alex knows the look well: that somehow both raw and guarded expression Maggie gets sometimes when they kiss, when they touch, when they cuddle; when Alex talks about science, when Alex talks about herself, when Alex does something ridiculous, when Alex goes rogue and lights up an entire terrorist group on her own.

Alex knows the look well: when Maggie’s turned on. When Maggie wants her.

She never asks for anything Alex doesn’t want to give. She actually never asks for anything at all.

And usually, when she masturbates, she’s alone. But sometimes, Alex wants to help. Sometimes, Alex enjoys the intimacy of the closeness, of the raw desire that Maggie has for her; of the intensity with which Maggie respects her, wants her close, loves her.

And tonight is one of those sometimes.

One of those sometimes when Alex is reading in bed, all silk slip and glasses, and Maggie stops when she steps into the room, all tank top and boxer shorts, and splutters and stammers and seems to forget how to breathe.

Alex chuckles fondly and quirks her lips to the side.

“Something you want, Sawyer?”

“You’re beautiful,” is all Maggie says – all Maggie will ever say, never anything about wanting to fuck her, never anything about wanting things that Alex just isn’t interested in.

Alex blushes and tilts her head to the side – something she’s picked up from her girlfriend.

“Come here.” She pats the bed next to her and puts down her book but leaves on her glasses, and shifts down so she’s leaning on her elbow, facing where Maggie will lay when she’s finished gulping and stammering and remembering how to put one foot in front of the other.

“Alex, you don’t have to – ”

“I know,” Alex tells her as she lays down on her stomach, as she turns serious eyes to Alex’s, as she runs a hand through Alex’s hair in the way she knows Alex loves.
“We can just cuddle,” Maggie tries one more time, but Alex just grins.

“I can cuddle. You can… take care of yourself. And I can help a little.”

Maggie’s eyes flutter closed and her chest heaves and her hands shake, and Alex leans forward and kisses her lips soft, slow, deliberate.

“You sure?”

“Sawyer.”

“Yes ma’am.”

They both grin and Maggie lets her hands slip underneath her own body, sighs as her fingers find where they need to be, as her hips find the rhythm she needs.

Alex runs her fingers through her hair and kisses her earlobe. “You’re beautiful,” she whispers with a soft smile, and Maggie bites down a groan as a shudder runs through her body.

As Maggie’s breath starts to quicken, Alex wraps an arm around her body, loving the closeness, loving the warmth leaping from Maggie’s body to her own, loving how gorgeous Maggie looks with her eyes closed like that, face turned to the side, facing Alex, and Alex leans down to kiss her cheek, her nose, her eye, her temple.

“Alex,” Maggie whispers softly, and Alex smiles into her hair.

“I’m right here babe, I’ve got you,” she assures her quietly, shifting so she can kiss Maggie’s rippling shoulders, her neck, her hair, her face again.

Maggie hisses with each kiss, and Alex runs gentle fingertips up and down her raised tank top as Maggie’s breathing gets more ragged, as her movements get more chaotic.

“I love you, Maggie Sawyer,” Alex whispers with a final kiss to her earlobe, and Maggie’s body stiffens, and she moans Alex’s name with closed eyes and pulsing hips and shuddering breath.

Alex relishes the way the muscles in Maggie’s back tighten so they’re rock solid as she cums, relishes the way Maggie’s tongue caresses her name, making it sound like a prayer, relishes the way Maggie immediately shifts closer to Alex’s body as the waves of her orgasm calm down, the way Maggie wants immediately to kiss her hands, her face.

The way Maggie wants immediately to hold her, to cuddle her, to take her own turn whispering about how beautiful Alex is into Alex’s ear.

To give her the kind of intimacy that makes her feel as complete as Maggie does right now.

“I love you too, Danvers. I love you, too.”

Alex smiles into Maggie’s hair, because this is what intimacy feels like. This is what perfection feels like.

“The harm? James, she wants me to give her a flash grenade. A flash grenade, James! Don’t be fooled by that perfect smile and those shining, gorgeous eyes and that – “

“Okay, okay, Alex, I get it. I won’t be seduced by your girlfriend.”

“That’s not what I – “

“Alex, it’s just a gym date. And I’m – “ James glances around shiftily before leaning in and whispering in Alex’s ear. “I’m Guardian, Alex, I think I can handle your incredibly strong but also incredibly tiny girlfriend in the gy – “

“James, hey! Ready to go? Hi babe! James and I are gonna work out together, did he tell you? Wanna come with?”

Alex’s eyes go wide and her mouth opens hesitantly and her eyes swivel to J’onn, who smirks but looks away, offering absolutely no help. Her eyes land next on Winn, who’s leaning back in his desk chair and already gesturing at her with a pen.

“You know, I think I’ve had enough of a workout for the day – “

“You call scampering in here late for your shift a workout, Mr. Schott?”

“Not helping J’onn,” Winn says through clenched teeth, and Maggie goes over to him and slaps a welcoming hand on his shoulder.

“Next time, Winn, I know how to take a hint.”

“Thank you,” he whispers with relief, and Alex snickers.

“You, on the other hand,” Maggie says, running a finger from Alex’s throat down the slight neckline of her uniform’s zipper. “You’re just lucky I don’t want to crash James and my plans.”

She leans up on tiptoes to kiss her and James laughs as he tosses an arm around Maggie’s shoulders.

“See you all later,” he waves, looking back at Alex over Maggie’s head. “Nothing to worry about,” he mouths at her.

“There are cameras in the gym they’re going to, aren’t there?” Alex mutters to Winn, and he grins and points at his screens.

“Already on it.”

“Mr. Schott, Agent Danvers, I hope that you’re not planning to use DEO resources to surveil your closest friends – and for you, Alex, your girlfriend – while they’re working out together.”

“J’onn,” Alex holds up her hands, and the innocence on her face reminds him of when he’d keep an eye on her when she was a little girl, laughing with Kara in the back yard. “You have no idea how competitive Maggie is. James doesn’t know what he’s walking into. It’s gonna be hilarious.”

J’onn has never felt more like her father as he realizes where Kara learned to pout from, as he takes a deep breath, sighs, and walks off in the other direction, muttering as he goes, “At least Vasquez can be counted on to do her job.”

Winn snorts, because he knows Susan is bound to be on her way to join them any minute now, that even Pam might come up from HR to catch the latest.

Alex grins fondly after her space dad, her heart swollen with love, with pride, with feeling, unusually, like a child while also feeling perfectly loved, perfectly happy, perfectly confident.

She hopes James has his confidence in tact, too, because Rao, is he going to need it.

Because when Maggie and him hop on a treadmill to warm up, it takes him a minute to notice that she’s eyeing his speed and consistently keeping hers a few notches above his.

It takes him a minute to notice that when he runs through some dynamic stretching, she makes sure to flex slightly farther than he does.

He grins good naturedly and winks at her. She grins right back, because god it feels good to be working out with a man who’s going to love her and admire her and keep up with her, not want to overcompensate for his masculinity with her.

“Squats, Olsen?” she asks, and he wonders vaguely how sharing a rack is going to work with their… well… height difference, but if Maggie’s workout rotation is on leg day, he’s not going to get in the way of her having the most effective workout she can.

She doesn’t surprise him when she cranks out a beautifully formed workout set with just the 45-pound bar, but she does surprise him when she gestures him into the rack for his own warm-up set and she gets right down to bang out a set of perfect tricep pushups.

“So you superset, Sawyer?”

“Always.”

And she surprises him again when – after he lowers the bar to her shoulder level after his own warm-up – she leaves the 25 pound plates that he used to warm up on the bar and cranks out another perfect set with no problem.

“Maggie, doesn’t that weigh almost what you do?”

She shoves into his chest with her shoulder as they switch places. “Please, Olsen, I’m not that tiny, don’t believe the slander my woman spreads.”

He realizes quickly that Maggie is integrating endurance training with strength training – a lot more reps than he would normally do with heavier loads, even putting weighted plates on her back while she does her pushups – and her dedication makes him smile. The way she’s attentive to him when they’re both panting, when she’s spotting him, but the way her eyes seal themselves off in pure focus when she unracks the bar on her shoulders and sets her feet, the way her form is perfect every time, the way it’s like nothing else exists in the world while she’s lifting.

“Alex is a lucky woman,” he pants after his own set of weighted pushups, after Maggie’s latest set of squats.

“Why’s that?”

“You share her passion for focus. It’s something photographers have to have, too. No uh… no pun intended.”

Maggie looks around and grins before putting both hands on his shoulder and pulling herself up toward his ear. “And karate-style superheroes too, huh?”

James laughs as she lowers herself down.

“Apparently.”

And she helps with his own focus, too, counting out his reps for him, her voice pushing him to do more, more, more.

He’s so lost in his own focus during his next round of pushups that he almost doesn’t notice when the location of her voice rises from where she’s leaning back on her haunches next to him.

He doesn’t notice, that is, until she’s straddling him, full-out sitting on his lower back.

“Seriously?” he chokes, trying desperately to hold in his laughter, to keep his arms from shaking.

“Oh come on, Olsen, you can get in at least another ten, I thought you all are always saying I’m supposed to be microscopic or something.”

He laughs so hard at that that they both collapse in a heap on the padded gym floor, and as they’re gasping for breath, as they’re waving away the concern of other gym-goers, Maggie nudges him and points to one of the security cameras in the corner of the room.

“Say hey to the DEO, James,” she grins, and he groans with a broad smile.

“They hacked in, didn’t they?”

“Of course they hacked in. And you know what they saw?”

“Oh, god. Winn and Alex – and Vasquez, too, probably – oh thank god Kara’s at CatCo all day – seeing me collapsing with you on my back.”

“Wanna redeem yourself, Olsen?”

“You’re on, Sawyer. You’re on.”

Can we expect another fic tonight? Maybe a small cute one about them going to sleep?
Their nightly routine

Maggie loves getting home after Alex.

If she doesn’t find her at Kara’s -- which is about half the time -- she’ll find her in her bed, in one of Maggie’s henleys and adorable pajama pants, propped up with three different pillows, glasses on, pen in her mouth, medical journals sprawled across the bed.

“Ehay!” she’ll say brightly, pen still in her mouth, and Maggie will know, but she’ll ask anyway.

“What’s that there, Danvers?”

And Alex will blush and take the pen out of her mouth and start the clumsy process of disentangling herself from the blankets and pillows without spilling reports on the most cutting edge medicine all across the floor.

“I said, hey babe!”

And Maggie’s smile will light up the entire apartment, hell, the entire building.

The entire city.

“Stay in bed, Alex, I’ll be there in a few,” she’ll laugh as she bends to give her a kiss, and Alex will kiss her back and try to pull Maggie down on top of her but Maggie will pull back and kiss Alex’s nose and giggle that perfect giggle.

And Alex will settle and content herself with watching Maggie from the tops of her glasses as she moves across Alex’s apartment -- their apartment? -- like she’s been living there her whole life.

She’ll put away her gun and badge first, then kick off her boots, and she’ll sigh softly each time.

She’ll strip her shirt off and stride around without it, or with her button-down open but not quite off, and Alex sometimes wonders if she does it to make her throat run dry or if she does it when she’s alone, too.

Water is next, an entire glass downed in one go, and she’ll refill her cup and bring Alex one, too, giving her another kiss as she checks in about Alex’s day. And they fill each other in about the big things -- another fight with Eliza, who sends her love to Maggie anyway, and a case closed almost single-handedly -- and the little things (or the big things, depending on one’s perspective) -- whether Pam from HR and Jess over at LCorp are just friends of something more, Winn’s latest antics, Maggie’s partner’s latest date with his wife.
Some of these stories are slurred, because Alex has long since brushed her teeth, but Maggie does it while they talk, and Alex loves how thorough she is, loves how she flosses meticulously, loves the sound of her rummaging around in the bathroom, the sound of her jeans dropping so that when she strides back into the bedroom, it’s in nothing but a bra and boy shorts, boxers, or a thong, depending on the day.

And Maggie will pick up one of the medical journals Alex has been studying and flip through it while Alex watches, and she’ll intentionally garble the pronunciation of eight-syllable words just to watch Alex’s smile, and she’ll want to know what’s wrong with a good novel every now and then and she’ll want to know if Alex knows how happy she makes her, because god, god, god, she’s never had anything nearly as perfect as this.

Maggie saving Alex's number as "Home" had me in tears.... (thank you, you're the bomb!).... Also how would Kara's number be saved?

And thank you so much – that meant a lot to me. It was a lowkey fic but it was hella emotional to write...

As for how Kara’s number would be saved?

Chapter Notes

The other fic referenced in this lil thing (Alex being away and Kara and Maggie cuddling at night) is here -- http://archiveofourown.org/works/9122290/chapters/21524555

It changes from time to time. First it’s “Kara Danvers”, but after Kara invites Maggie to her first game night, she changes it to “Kara.”

When Alex flies to Geneva for a week and Kara sleeps over at Maggie’s every night because she’s lonely without her big sister, Maggie changes it to “Little Danvers.”

From there, it changes just for fun, from “Little Danvers” to “Sunshine” to “Specs” to “Tiny Danvers” to “Fav Reporter” to “Just Ask Lena Out Already, Kara.”

When she and Alex get engaged, she changes Kara’s contact info in her phone one last time.

To “Little Sis.”

When Alex sees, she cries and says she wants to marry her right then and there.

And when Kara sees, she bawls and almost breaks Maggie’s ribs with the force of her hug, but god, is it worth it.
It was a relief when they chopped their hair off.

Sure, it was because J’onn – well, Hank at the time (Alex wasn’t the only one who’d gone through some identity clarifications in the last couple of years) – strongly recommended it because their training wouldn’t necessarily work too well with long hair.

But it was a relief nonetheless, even if they wouldn’t acknowledge it as such at the time.

Even if they wouldn’t let themselves acknowledge why the mirror made them feel like they were crawling out of their skin, like they had to drink into a stupor nearly every night to force it down, to forget, to erase.

To want girls?

Bad enough.

To want girls and maybe not quite even be one?

Worse.

But it hadn’t been bad, and it hadn’t been worse. Not really.

It had actually been… good.

Because J’onn had smiled his “of course I knew, I’m psychic” smile and pulled them in for a hug, and Winn had asked if it was still okay if he called them “dude” or if it made them uncomfortable, and James had hugged them and kissed their temple, and Kara?

Kara had wept because she thought it was her fault it had taken Alex so long to realize and be okay with such important things. But she swallowed it quickly enough, because it was about Alex right now, and she wanted to hear everything.
And now? On the extra low dose of T that they got from the local clinic— they didn’t want to change their body that much, just a little bit, just enough—and with everyone at the DEO using the proper pronouns for Agent Danvers and J’onn, Kara, James, and Winn all threatening to destroy anyone who intentionally didn’t, Alex had never felt more alive.

And then some cocky NCPD detective showed up at their crime scene, and they knew they were screwed.

Because coming out to family had been one thing.

Dating? Now? Or like… ever?

No no no.

T or no T, supportive family or no supportive family, Alex Danvers was not exactly good at the flirting thing. At the being good with people thing.

Except the strangest thing was that Maggie Sawyer didn’t seem to think so. Because Maggie Sawyer trusted them enough to take them to the alien bar.

To touch them when they reached for their gun.

Alex couldn’t remember when the last time was that they were touched by someone who wasn’t family, and the touch wasn’t violent.

“How do you think she learned English? She’s my ex,” Maggie was saying, and Alex’s eyes were wide, because god, god, god, the cute girl with the dimples and that voice and those eyes and that hair is queer, she’s queer, she’s queer.

But their stomach dropped almost as quickly as their heart rose.

Because she’s probably exclusively into girls.

God dammit.

“I don’t exclusively date aliens, though,” Maggie was saying, and a lump rose in Alex’s throat. “Or women, not exactly,” she continued, her eyes sharp and her voice a little low and her gaze locked both tentatively and headily on Alex’s face.

“Not exactly,” Alex repeated questioningly, never more aware of their T-lowered voice than they were right now.

“I mean you’re pretty cute, wouldn’t say no to a person like you,” Maggie had said, and Alex had promptly spilled their drink.

And Maggie hadn’t rolled her eyes or pointed and laughed. She’d shot up from her seat and she’d grabbed the towel off of Darla’s passing shoulder and she’d patted down Alex’s hands, their lap, their chest. Her fingers brushed their collared shirt, the tight nylon of the binder underneath, and Maggie’s breath hitched and her eyes locked with Alex’s.

“Hi,” she gulped, and Alex just stared, because their brain had stopped working.

Girl, pretty girl, smart girl, badass girl, close to me and not disgusted and looks a little turned on by just… who I am, by being close to me, what do I do what do I do what do I do what do I –

“Sorry there, Danvers, I didn’t mean to get all up in your space,” Maggie said as she backed up.
“Darla, can you get them another beer please?”

She said nothing about how or why it had spilled, just offered Alex a soft grin and pressed the towel into their hands and padded back to her seat across the table.

“So this is where you get all your intel,” Alex tried to steer the conversation back into terrain they knew, terrain they were confident in, terrain they could excel in.

Maggie tilted her head and squinted for a moment, like she was trying to figure out if Alex was flustered or just disinterested.

Alex wasn’t quite sure what conclusion Maggie came to, but her reply was light, banter-y. Maybe even a little flirty.

“Well, when our labs are about as effective as Easy-Bake ovens, we make do with what we’ve got”, Maggie scoffed and nodded her thanks as Darla set down another beer.

“Thanks,” Alex offered Darla, a crooked grin on their face. “And hey, sorry, I didn’t mean to be a jerk out there. I just get protective of my crime scenes.”

“Please Danvers, it was my crime scene.”

“Wanna bet?” Alex asked, smiling, because now they were sure Maggie was flirting, because those eyes, that smile, couldn’t mean anything else.

Alex felt like they were flying as they stood and grabbed both of their beers in one hand and offered Maggie their other, nodding toward the pool table.

“You say this is where your informants go? No better place to gather intel than at the pool table, right?”

Maggie squinted up at them and licked her lips and accepted their hand. Electricity crackled and Alex’s heart soared.

“A fed who knows how to play. Better every minute, Danvers.”

And Alex had never seen a more perfect smile, or felt more perfect in their life.

Chapter Summary

anonymous asked:

Since you made a minific about sanvers nightly routine yesterday, maybe you could do one about maggie trying to figure out which side of the bed she likes to sleep pretty pleaaase

“Danvers.”

“God, Maggie, again?”

Maggie whines slightly and rolls over and gives Alex her best puppy eyes.

Alex melts, but tries to pretend she doesn’t.

“Oh come on, Ally, you should be complimented.”

“Complimented that you keep me up all night every night?”

Maggie smirks at that and nips at her neck. Alex moans softly and her hips roll of their own accord.

“I thought you like me keeping you up all night, Danvers.”

Alex whines and squirms and tosses her head back and tangles her fingers in Maggie’s hair.

“That’s not what I meant, Sawyer, and you know it,” she giggles, and that mixed with her soft moans is music to Maggie’s ears.

She pulls away, and the whine of protest Alex emits is a symphony that makes Maggie feel wanted, safe, needed. Happy. Loved.

She grins and she winks and she kisses Alex’s nose and shifts so her body is closer to hers.

“Okay, but I meant you should be complimented that I’m having this problem. I’ve never shared a bed with anyone consistently enough to know what side I like better. Because see, if I’m here – “

She flips over onto her back and bounces on the mattress, and Alex laughs softly at her girlfriend’s antics.

“ – then I’m closer to the window, but also I’m off center with the rest of the apartment. And if I’m here – “

She crawls quickly over Alex, nudges her over, and plops herself down onto the right side of the bed.
“– then I’m more on center, but this side is more squishy, and I’m not sure if I like that, like I do sometimes, but then – “

“Baby.”

“I love being your baby.”

“And I love that you are my baby. But Maggie. You know we’ve had this conversation every night for the last week, right?”

“It’s important, Ally!”

Alex smiles, hard, because she knows she’s the only person in Maggie’s life that knows how ridiculous, how silly, how insistently and intentionally whiny, she is when she’s sleepy.

She knows she’s the only one who Maggie trusts enough to be like this.

So she sighs with a smile and she kisses her softly and she settles in for what will be a long half hour of Maggie’s wide-eyed chatter and pushing of Alex to different sides of the bed – and sometimes, even tossing their pillows to the bottom of the bed to see what that angle is like – because Maggie is absurd, and Maggie is ebullient, and Maggie is all hers.

And she wouldn’t have it any other way.
“Stay still there, Sawyer, or it won’t be my fault if I stick you with this pin again.”

“That sounded dirtier than you intended, Schott.”

James laughs and Maggie tries not to squirm again as Winn finishes his final adjustments to the suit he’d designed for her.

“Are you guys sure this isn’t stupid? Or like, arrogant or something? Like, really, a photoseries of me as a present? Like come on, how conceited can I get?”

“’a-ee.” Maggie and James smirk down at Winn and he takes the two pins out from between his lips.

“Maggie. Okay first, you’re gorgeous. Handsome. Whatever you’re feeling. And Alex is gonna be gaga over this. Seriously, she’s not gonna know what to do with herself. And anyway, hey, it was James’s idea.”

James uncrosses his arms and nods. “You look incredible, Maggie. And Alex is gonna love it. I promise.”

“Yeah?”

He reaches for the coat Winn designed and slips it over her shoulders as Winn stands up with a satisfied grin.

“Oh yeah. Come on, let’s hit the park.”

Maggie’s shy at first, intimidated by being photographed – in public, no less – by the Pulitzer Pride winning photographer she’s spent years secretly idolizing.

“I keep telling you, he posed for that shot,” James smiles when she shyly mentions it.
“Doesn’t make you any less amazing at what you do.”

James sighs and looks around, casting about for something that will convince her how incredible she looks, something that will convince her that the honor of this photoshoot is truly his.

“Okay, listen. I want you to look at the lens, and think about two things, one layered on top of the other. And this might be hard, okay, but the best photoshoots are, okay?”

Maggie nods, curious, her heart hammering. She adjusts the fedora Winn had bought her in a thrift shop and based the suit and coat design around.

“All right, so the first thing to think about is something hard you’ve been through, something devastating. Something that lays at the core of your being and won’t let go.”

Maggie gulps and James’s hand covers hers, because he has a fair guess about where her mind is.

“And then, on top of that, I want you to layer your feelings about Alex. How badly you want her, how much she means to you. Not separately from the pain: integrated with it. Look into the lens like you’re looking into her eyes, like you’re letting her look back into yours, like you’re letting her read every part of your soul. Okay?”

“Damn, Olsen, when you go, you go deep.”

“Maggie.”

She smiles and she flips her palm up so she’s squeezing his hand. “I think I can do that.”

James nods and arranges some of her hair so it’s framing her face, ghosting onto her neck.

“You ready?”

She nods, and he squeezes her thigh and adjusts her collar just so before shifting back to sit on the bench next to hers.

He snaps photo after photo, and she channels everything she has into the lens, and he smiles behind the camera, because god, Clark was right when he told him he could find himself in National City.

When he has the photos developed, Maggie insists that both he and Winn are there when she gives them to Alex; they helped, after all.

Alex gasps at the display and her eyes flood, and Maggie rings her hands, and Winn watches with a massive grin and James puts his hand on Maggie’s to calm her nerves.

“Maggie, you’re – you’re perfect, these are perfect, I… you did all this for… me?”

“You seemed to like how I looked at our private prom,” Maggie shrugs, and James lets go of her hands because Alex is taking them now, and kissing every knuckle, and gazing deep into her perfect eyes.

“James, Winn, I’m going to thank you both later. But right now I’m going to thank Maggie, and I really don’t think you want to be here for that.”

“Yes, point taken, on our way.” Winn is up like a shot, and James follows with a soft laugh.

“You two have fun now,” he teases as he closes the door behind them.
“Dude, did we do all that to get Maggie laid?” Winn asks as they both grimace as Maggie’s ecstatic moaning of Alex’s name somehow follows them out the door.

“I mean hey, as long as they’re happy, man, we’ve done our part.”

Winn grins mischievously. “Well, it sure sounds like they are. It sure sounds like they are.”

Chapter Summary

cantcontrolthegay -- hellooo officer queergirlwriting -- Someone make the Officer Danvers and Detective Sawyer AU immediately.

That awkward moment when I prompted myself before the gifset was just too alluring.

She knows there’s a cute rookie with a penchant for ponytails wandering the halls, getting acclimated.

She knows because she’s heard the guys, and she really wishes she hadn’t, because whoever this new kid is, she doesn’t deserve to be talked about, gawked at, that way.

But she doesn’t actually see this rook – Officer Danvers, she remembers hearing – until they wind up at the same crime scene.

The kid’s not even sitting on her haunches next to the three bodies in the alleyway – she’s just standing. Gaping. Standing as the ME and other officers examine the scene, gather evidence from the scene. Just… standing.

With a sad, sad look on her face that’s just this side of nauseous, just that side of shocked.

“First murder scene’s always rough, kid,” Maggie says softly as she goes to stand next to her, and the rookie jumps, but only slightly. Her fists are balled at her sides, and Maggie wants to reach out and make sure she’s not digging her nails too hard into her skin, but the kid hasn’t even looked at her yet, so any intimacy further than conversation is simply not an option.

“I’ve seen dead bodies before,” the girl answers, and Maggie takes a deep, slow breath.

“Well, that can make it even harder, then.”

Officer Danvers furrows her brow and, finally, turns toward Maggie. “How do you mean?”

The girl blinks rapidly when they make eye contact, when she takes in the gentleness in Maggie’s face, and Maggie immediately knows she’s queer. But quite probably not out, possibly not even to herself.

“Well, it can just… make it harder, is all. Give you memories of a specific person or people, or something.”

Officer Danvers crosses her arms across her chest and stares at Maggie for a long moment, shifting from foot to foot as she does so. Maggie wonders what she’s searching for in her face, and if she’ll find it.
Apparently she does, because next thing Maggie knows, she’s shaking the rookie’s outstretched hand.

“Kara Danvers.”

“Maggie Sawyer.”

Kara glances down at her lack of uniform, at the badge on her hip.

“A detective. Sorry, I don’t want to waste your time with rookie problems.”

“Not at all, kid. That’s my job.”

“Helping me with my rookie problems?” The girl – Kara’s – voice is deeper than it was a few minutes ago, less distant, and Maggie smirks.

“Yeah, don’t you know? Detecting rook issues and sorting them out’s part of the job description.”

She’s pretty sure Kara blushes, and they both jump slightly when someone calls out for Maggie.

“Detective Sawyer!”

Maggie nods Kara along with her.

“Your assessment, Detective?”

She turns to Kara with a small grin quirked onto her lips. “What do you think, Officer Danvers?”

Kara squints and gulps and looks panicked for a moment before reading Maggie’s eyes. Before reading in Maggie’s eyes that she’s trying to help her, that she believes in her, that she’s trying to give her a chance to be heard, not testing her.

So Kara crouches, and Kara examines, and Kara assesses the scene.

And she’s spot on, as far as Maggie can tell.

“Nice work, Danvers. You’ll get your detective shield in no time.”

Maggie switches some things around with their captain so Kara’s assigned to her detail, and she spends the rest of the week showing her the ropes.

Kara’s a quick study, always eager to learn, always eager to impress, if a little clumsy sometimes, if a little distant sometimes, in those moments when she doesn’t think anyone will notice.

Maggie notices, and she keeps an extra eye out to make sure she’s okay.

They’re leaving the precinct together one evening later in the week when Kara squeals, her distance gone, her guard completely tossed down, and suddenly she’s in the arms of the most beautiful woman Maggie has ever seen.

She shifts and stares at the ground, because dammit, of course Kara would have the hottest girlfriend on the face of the earth.

“Detective Sawyer!” Kara’s calling, and Maggie deliberately arranges her face into an expression of pleasant neutrality. “I want you to meet my sister, Alex.”
“You’re the sister! Wow, um, I’ve… I’ve heard a lot of great things about you from Kara.”

“And I’ve heard all about you,” Alex shakes her hand, and her grip is firm and her hands are somehow both smooth and calloused and Maggie has to concentrate to avoid swooning.

“Nothing incriminating, I hope,” Maggie says, and she wonders if Alex notices that their hands are still connected, that Kara is furrowing her brow and starting to smile as her eyes shift back and forth between them.

“Pfft, no, she um… she actually told me you’ve been a really great mentor to her, and I… thank you.”

Maggie forgets how to breathe but damn, does she remember how to feel.

“Well, I mean, she’s a great kid, gonna make a fabulous cop.”

“She’s… also standing right here,” Kara murmurs with a small grin to no one in particular before perking up and saying, perhaps a little louder than intended, “Okay, you two, um, I’m actually gonna go meet James at Noonan’s, so um… maybe you two should grab dinner or something. Together. Okay, um, bye!”

She’s gone, somehow, before Maggie or Alex can snap out of their spell and turn to her to protest.

“So… I guess it’s just you and me, Danvers.”

“Looks that way, Sawyer.”

“Dinner on me?” Maggie offers, and doesn’t at all regret how suggestive it sounds.

“Perfect.”

Chapter Summary

anonymous asked:

you dont gotta do this but id rly like to see Alex calling out Maggie for standing on her tippy toes in pictures so they are the same height! It seems cute in my head... Thanks!! love your fics!!! <3

“Oh my god, Maggie, get down.”

“Um, Danvers, we’re kind of… in front of your sister… and all our friends…”

Alex takes a moment to get it, and when she does, her jaw drops open and her eyes go wide and she turns beet red.

“No, not – Jesus, Sawyer – I meant get off your tip toes!”

Maggie’s eyes get wide and innocent, and James rests his camera on his hip in resignation and exchanges bemused and slightly terrified grimaces with Winn and Kara, because lord, this might take a while.

Because all of them had been perfectly happy to get away with it. With trying her best to look as tall as Alex in pictures.

Kara had even stood behind her and lifted her slightly once or twice to spare her calves.

But Alex Danvers loves everything about her girlfriend. Everything. Including how her stature makes Alex feel strong – though she knows, of course, that Maggie can and does kick some serious ass – and like she can protect her, like she can hold her, like she can dote on her, like she can toss her arm around her and just wrap her up and let the world know mine, mine, mine.

And if she likes to record that feeling in photographs, she should be allowed to, shouldn’t she?

She won’t be thwarted by Maggie standing on her tip toes and thinking her secret agent girlfriend doesn’t notice.

“I don’t… I’m not on my tip toes, come on, Danvers.”

Maggie glances around the family for support.

Kara suddenly has found something very interesting to stare at on the ceiling, Winn has suddenly gotten a very urgent text, and James bravely – probably because his Guardian suit is in the bag on the couch – furrows his brow, purses his lips, and pumps a supportive fist at Maggie.

“I saw that, Olsen.”

“See Alex, I think you might be imagining things. Imagining Maggie standing on her tiptoes, imagining me doing something out of the ordinary just there…”

Alex swings her arm off of Maggie’s shoulder and starts toward James.

“Give me that camera, Olsen.”

He backs away quickly, backwards, and reminds Winn forcibly of that scene in the last Harry Potter movie when Hermione demands Harry give her wand back and – even though she’s unarmed – he scampers away from her with the kind of terror he’s never shown Voldemort.

“Relax, Guardian, I’m not gonna destroy it, I just need proof.”

He lets her snatch it from his hands to avoid doing it damage, and he winks at Maggie over Alex’s shoulder.

“Seriously, James?” Alex’s indignation spreads across the whole apartment.

“None of these pictures have our feet in them? Even the full body shots? None of them? Come on. I thought you were supposed to have a Pulitzer Prize or something.”

“Hey, listen, I was told to take great pictures of you two. I wasn’t told they had to include your combat boots.”

Maggie beams at him behind Alex’s back, and Winn gives her a secret solidarity high five while Kara adjusts her glasses and tries to take her sister’s faux-rage seriously.

“Maybe Maggie’s just trying to be closer to your pretty face, Alex,” she offers, and Alex quirks her lips off to the side as she turns toward Maggie.

“Is that what it is, babe?”

“No idea what you’re talking about, Danvers,” Maggie maintains staunchly.

“You know what then? Fine. You wanna not look shorter than me. Come here, you.”

“Alex what – “

But Maggie’s sentence turns into a laughing shriek, and suddenly her arms are around Alex’s neck and Winn and Kara are cheering and James is adjusting the camera Alex had thrust back in his hands and snapping photograph after laughing photograph.

Of Alex with Maggie in her arms, bridal style, laughing.

Alex with Maggie in her arms, staring into each other’s eyes like no one else had ever existed or ever would exist again.

Alex’s hair falling over her face as she kisses Maggie like her sister isn’t desperately adjusting her glasses just a few feet away.

Alex setting Maggie down and standing behind her, head over Maggie’s shoulder, smiling into the camera like she’s never been this happy in her life, and Maggie holding Alex’s hands – which are wrapped around her waist – and smiling the same exact way.

Alex turning her face and kissing Maggie’s cheek, and Maggie swooning and giggling back into her strong hold, the most brilliant of smiles on her face.
Winn and Kara leaping behind both of them, mouths wide open in hilarity, as Maggie turns her face to kiss Alex’s lips.

Every single photograph gets framed, and Maggie never feels the need to stand on her tip toes next to Alex again.

Except when she needs to kiss her, of course.

Because that? That is just perfect.

at some point adrian storms into maggie's apartment and just starts ranting about how people always call it lgbt and half the time there's never any mention of the t (oh hi alex how are you didn't see you there) and gender =/= sexuality and if peoPLE MEAN LGB THEN GODDAMMIT JUST SAY LGB i'm sorry this is happening all through my uni atm and i'm about to blow a gasket and i like to think adrian would too (this isn't a prompt just a rant but y'know you always make me feel heard hope that's okay)

(I’m gonna treat it like a prompt because it deserves to be a prompt kthxbai)

The door slams open and Maggie doesn’t even jump – this has happened before – but Alex grabs her gun.

Maggie takes her hands into her own. “Whoa whoa whoa, hey, it’s okay, it’s okay.”

Alex’s eyes fix on the door and relax as Adrian steps through, but before either of them can say anything, he does.

“You know what I can’t deal with? They all walk around saying LGBT this and LGBT that, and they don’t give any shits that they’re leaving out our ace and nonbinary siblings and they give no shits, which should be their first clue that they’re doing something wrong, but you know what they do, they say the T, they say it, they do, ain’t nobody’s trying to talk about LGB, but you know what they all – oh, hey Alex, I didn’t see you there, why do you have your gun out? How you doing, I heard Cadmus gave you a rough time, you should let me know if you need anything, okay? – because of no, we’re so inclusive, like oh my gawd we’re just so inclusive and welcoming here, like, we’re a rainbow right, so like, I don’t understand why we don’t have more trans people or people of color here, like, we’re just so accepting, but you know what they should say instead of all that bullshit? They should just say LBG, goddammit, they should just say what they mean if they’re gonna keep leaving us out and not giving a shit about any of our issues or any of our fucking lives, and I just – ”

Maggie had chuckled as he did his best rich white kid imitation, but stood with her arms crossed over her chest when his voice got higher, when he said he wished people would just say what they meant, because she knows Adrian, knows him, and knows he’s about to break.

So she’s right there when he does, when his voice cracks completely and his face scrunches up and he falls forward into her body as she uncrosses her arms, nods softly, whispers softly, and holds his head to her shoulder, to the side of her face.

“Okay, okay. I know, sweetie, I know. Cry it out, Ade, it’s okay. I’ve got you. I’ve got you.”

Alex’s eyes well with tears as Adrian’s chest starts wracking with sobs, as he clings to the back of Maggie’s shirt and lets her support his weight, and she quietly slips into the kitchen, heating up almond milk on the stove to make him hot cocoa with.

She hears only snippets of the rest of their conversation as Maggie guides him softly to the couch.

“Shit about we can’t spread ourselves too thin –”

“Ugh, Ade, I’m so sorry, that’s such bullshit –”

“I just don’t –”

“I can go rough the assholes up –”

“Or we could sic your girlfriend on them –”

“That we could –”

“I just… how can we just not matter to them, I –”

“I know, honey, I know. Come here, come here.”

Eventually, Adrian’s sniffling evens out and his cracked, ragged voice raises to carry across the apartment.

“Looks like someone’s got you all domesticated, Alex,” he teases her, and she turns with a soft grin.

“Not so domesticated I can’t take out anyone you need me to, Adrian.”

He stands and he strides over shakily, wiping his eyes with the backs of his hands, and pulls Alex in for a hug and a kiss on the cheek.

“I’m so glad I have you guys,” he whispers into her ear, and Alex meets Maggie’s red-rimmed eyes and soft, I’m-so-in-love-with-you smile over his shoulder.

“Always, Ade. Always.”

Chapter Summary

anonymous asked:

I need Alex and Barry to meet! Imagine those nerds talking about science ❤ Brotp at first ramble

The first time they meet – because Cisco has opened a vortex in Kara’s living room, again – she pins him up against the back of the couch, holding him up by only the collar of his shirt so he’s constantly in danger of toppling backwards as she lights into him, all how could you even think of bringing her to another universe without backup, and don’t tell me you gave her backup when the entire reason you brought her over was because you and your supersquad was so out of their league, whereas her family is literally trained to fight off alien invasions, and I don’t care how fast you are, Barry Allen, if you so much as consider taking her anywhere without me to back her up again I will chase you down, and I will catch you, and I will –

She stops only because Kara takes one arm and Maggie the other, gently, cautiously, Kara all okay Alex, I think he gets the point and Maggie all whoa whoa whoa, babe, come on, it's okay, Kara’s safe, it’s okay and Cisco’s all well damn I think we know who the Sith in the family is, and I kinda like it and Barry’s all I see now that thinking Kara was the most powerful one in the family was the wrong thing.

But when she lets him go, a small victorious smirk on her face at the wide-eyed fear in his, she actually lets herself listen to what he has to say – once he’s straightened up and dusted off and taken a deep breath and apologized, at least four times, for his error in judgment and it’ll never happen again.

“And actually Alex, um… Kara tells me that you and your girlfriend – it’s Maggie, right? Nice to meet you, I’m Barry Allen, and this is Cisco Ramon – are the science geniuses and forensics nerds in the family, so I’m actually here for your help.”

Alex would be irritated by the obvious flattery, but his eyes tell her that Barry’s sincere – that he doesn’t have an insincere bone in his body, and god, he so naturally called Maggie family – so she lets her stance soften as she watches Maggie and Cisco immediately develop the most complex, nerdiest nice-to-meet-you handshake she’s ever seen, and she can’t help but share Barry’s bemused smile.

“You’re a CSI, right? And you work at Star Labs? What could you need from me?”

Barry’s eyes sparkle, and Kara beams in the background. “Glad you asked.”

He digs in his back pocket for what looks like a small marble to Kara, but Alex gasps and leans forward and touches her fingertips to Barry’s to get closer to the metallic marble, tilting her head in a way she’s picked up from Maggie as her eyes flit between the marble and Barry’s excited eyes.
“That’s not a –”

“Bioelectric dampener with the capacity to shut down the neural circuitry in cyborgs? It is.”

“But you don’t have a charging module –”

“Exactly. That’s why I thought we could use your help. Disabling circuitry without killing the part of a cyborg that’s still human? Caitlin’s been working on it, but without the right –”

“Capacitor, right, you’d need to –”

“Stabilize the energy flow –” Maggie’s leaning forward now, too, and Cisco and Kara glance at each other above the three of their heads.

“Pizza and potstickers and Star Wars?” Cisco suggests. “We still have to look for any differences between our earth’s original trilogy, and it looks like they’re gonna be a while.”

“Yeah, exactly! If you ever get tired of that red suit, you should come work for the DEO –” Alex is practically squealing.

“Oh my god, I loved it in there, I mean Star Labs is amazing but you guys have space ships –”

“You know I flew Kara’s pod into space last year –”

“No way –”

Kara grins.

“A while might be an understatement. You get the movie ready – I’ll order the food.”

“Donuts too!” Barry, Alex, and Maggie all call in unison, and Cisco and Kara laugh.

A while’s an understatement indeed.

Chapter Summary

anonymous asked:

Mom, I’ve been feeling so down bc my (ex) girlfriend broke up with me and she just told me that all she ever wanted was sex and i was so in love and idk. You can totally ignore this but if you can could you please write Alex feeling insecure and Maggie reassuring her, that she loves her and its just not great sex. I'm sorry if it bothers you

She spends the nights laying up in bed, a thin sheen of sweat still clinging to her bare skin, because she’s just waiting.

Because it’s happened before.

Faking an orgasm – not that she’s faking now, god, god, she doesn’t have to fake a damn thing anymore – and feeling his (hers, now, and god, god, how could she not have known?) and he’ll be gone in the morning, no matter how many times he told her it was great, no matter now many times he told her she felt incredible; he’ll just be gone in the morning, every time, every guy. Which is fine because it wasn’t ever good for her anyway, she was just trying to feel something anyway, she just always failed again anyway, but you’d think she’d be worth at least a phone call the next day, right?

But it was always just sex, and it was fine with her, it was, because she didn’t want them, with their clumsy hands and careless thrusts, but she wanted… to be worthy. She wanted to be more. More than just a warm body to get off on, in. More than just a good fuck on a Friday night when she should have been at the lab.

It never stung, not exactly, because it was always uncomfortable anyway, always mildly repulsive anyway.

But now?

Now, there’s Maggie.

Now, there’s Maggie, and her laughter makes Alex’s heart backflip.

Now, there’s Maggie, and the way she says her name – over dinner, on the phone, at game night, in the field, underneath her body in bed – makes Alex’s entire body swoon.

Now, there’s Maggie, and she’s smart, and she’s tough, and she’s beautiful… so beautiful.

And Alex is wildly in love.

So when Maggie tears her throat on Alex’s name, Alex tries not to get her hopes up, because it’s probably just sex to her.
And when she asks if it’s okay before she scrapes her nails down Alex’s back, Alex tries not to feel cared for, because for sure Maggie’s done this before, for sure it’s nothing more than common courtesy to her.

And when she tells Alex how amazing it feels to be inside her, how beautiful she is, how incredible her body feels, Alex tries not to let her heart take in the words, because it’s just dirty talk, it’s just sex talk, it’s just… sex.

It has to be.

And she’s a secret agent, and a damn good one, and she prides herself on her poker face, but now?

Now, there’s Maggie.

And Maggie sees right through her.

“Alex, what’s wrong?” she asks as she’s pulling Alex close to her after they’ve both cum – and Alex is still trembling from that, because god, god, god, that’s never happened before – and concern is etched all over her perfect face. “Did I hurt you, babe, did I go too fast, did I – “

“No, no. It’s fine, it was… amazing, Maggie, everything’s…”

But Maggie’s head is tilted and her eyes are soft and her hands are gentle and her face is patient and kind and… something like loving, Alex dares to, maybe, hope.

“You can tell me anything, Alex, it’s okay.”

She’s fought off entire armies, goddammit. She can say an honest damn sentence in bed with a beautiful woman.

Right?

Right.

“It’s not just sex for you, is it? Like, I mean, it’s great, right, having sex with you, it’s great, it’s amazing, I’ve never… it’s amazing, Maggie, and don’t get me wrong, I don’t want to stop having it, but I don’t just… I don’t just want that, I don’t just want sex, I… but… for you, is it – I mean, I don’t want to be clingy, god, I’m not – “

“Whoa whoa whoa, Danvers, slow down.” She puts a gentle finger to Alex’s lips and Alex kisses it automatically and Maggie’s eyes light up softly, perfectly, and Alex tries not to feel loved, because what if she’s wrong? Because Maggie is perfect, and she’s so… broken, and damaged, and inexperienced, so how could it possibly be anything other than… sex?

“Alex, I would never…” Maggie bites her lip and strokes Alex’s hair and blinks tears away from her eyes. “I get it. Feeling insecure like that. Alex, I feel that way all the time. You… how could a gorgeous, genius woman like you even give me the time of day, let alone… share my bed? I… Alex, those questions you just asked me? I want to ask you those all the time, too. Because I… I’m crazy about you, Alex, and I just… yes, yes, I just want to kiss you, but I don’t only want to kiss you. I want… I want everything with you, Alex, I want to… to build things with you.”

“Like… Legos?”

“Nerd.”
“You said build things.”

“A life, Danvers. I wanna build a life with you, I… I’m wild about you, Alex. You could never, ever just be sex to me. You are so much more than that, I promise you. And if you ever feel insecure like that? Then I will move entire continents to make sure you know how I feel about you. Because how I feel… how I feel is amazing. I’ve never felt this way before, for anyone. You’re special, Alex. You’re perfect. I promise.”

“So you’re saying you like me?”

“You’re never gonna let that one go, are you?”

“You love it.”

“I do, Danvers. I do.”
Maggie’s never used the term partner before, with anyone she’s dated.

Not that she’s introduced any of them to Adrian – none of them have been special enough, kind enough, open enough.

Until Alex.

But he’s always grilled her about her love life like it was going out of style, so he knows all the stories; the girlfriend who loved zip lining, which was great, but ultimately left Maggie for another woman; the girlfriend who was verbally abusive and the one time it got physical, she tried to not talk about it with him and he just stared at her gently until she did, because how many times had she been there for him; the girlfriend who Maggie constantly fought with about race, but the sex was amazing and after the last relationship, she was just about broken enough to stay until she was dumped.

Adrian hadn’t met any of them, but he’d heard all the stories. All of Maggie’s girlfriends.

She never used the term partner.

Too close to work – she had a cop partner, after all – and it had always felt too clinical for her.

Until there was Alex.

Adrian’s ears perked because now when she said the word – partner, my partner – it wasn’t about the guy she spent her days driving around with in an NCPD car.

The word, now, is laced with adoration, laced with love, laced with intensity that Adrian has never heard Maggie have for anyone before.

“So, when do I meet them?”

Maggie beams at his automatic use of Alex’s pronouns, at his intuition, at his heart. But then she blinks.

“You’ve never asked me that before.”

“And you’ve never swooned like that before.”

She tilts her head and glares slightly, but denies nothing, and the quirk to her lips gives her away.
“Please, Alex does not make me swoon.”

Adrian just stares, and Maggie’s phone buzzes. “Hey babe,” she answers eagerly, her voice rising an octave or two, and Adrian chuckles to himself.

“Sure you don’t swoon,” he mouths, and Maggie sticks her tongue out at him.

The three of them decide – through a series of gestures and mouthing and suppressed giggling between Maggie and Adrian – that Alex should come for dinner that night.

Maggie paces while Adrian does most of the cooking.

“They’ve never met anyone really, from my life. And you’ve never met anyone really, from my life. What if you two don’t get along, what if – “

“Hey. Hey hey hey, Maggie.” He wipes his hands on the “Kiss the Cook, He’s Hot, Just Look at Him” apron Maggie keeps in the cabinet for him, and rests them on her shoulders. “It’s gonna be fine. I promise.”

She sighs and she nods and she grabs a spoon and pokes at the simmering rice.

“Hey, get outta there, it’s not ready!”

She scowls and sighs again and surrenders the spoon.

“Was I like this before you met my friends when I was in high school?”

“Please, you were so much wors – “

The sharp but somehow also gentle knock at the door interrupts her, and Adrian kisses her cheek as she heads to the door.

“Hi babe,” she greets, and Adrian watches carefully from the kitchen as this new person in Maggie’s life presents her with flowers – red roses, so they’re serious, he observes – and kisses her cheek and holds up a small paper bag and says something softly.

They’re in loose fitting jeans, a spectacular belt, and a henley over a pretty flat chest that makes him grin – it’s always nice to not be the only one binding in a space – and their hair is a short, almost red mess of post-motorcycle emotions.

“Hey there,” he calls from the kitchen. “Sorry I’m not coming to you, I don’t wanna burn the plátanos – “

“No, you’re fine.” Alex says with an easy grin, and he observes their confident stride, their low voice, the way they casually kiss Maggie’s hand before letting it go to walk toward him, with a deep-seated joy.

“I’ve heard a lot of about you from Maggie,” they smile as they lean on the counter next to Adrian, offering their hand and smiling deeper as Adrian rushes to dry his own before taking it.

Alex’s handshake is firm and confident and Adrian hopes his matches up – from the nod Alex gives him, he’s pretty sure it does.

“So, I hope this isn’t weird – I mean, it might be totally weird, and you can tell me if it is – “

Adrian glances at Maggie as Alex’s swagger melts into adorable prattling, and Maggie is beaming and Adrian makes a note to tell her later that yes, Alex Danvers definitely makes her swoon.
"But I know how much you mean to Maggie, and I wanted to get her flowers, but I didn’t want to not bring something for you – I mean, not that I think you’re a child and wouldn’t be okay with it or anything, but – I wanted to bring you something. Anyway, I hope you like it.”

They slide the paper bag they brought close to him, and he lowers the stove’s flames under his various dishes before diving eagerly into the bag.

“I always like presents! But you didn’t have to bring me anything, I – whoa, cool!”

He digs out a pair of astronomical binoculars and turns them over and over in his hands, his eyes wide and his smile even wider as he presses them to his eyes.

Maggie shifts to stand behind Alex, wraps her arms around their waist, and stands up on her tip toes to kiss the back of their neck, their cheek. Alex melts into the touch, but Adrian isn’t watching to be able to note that Maggie also makes Alex swoon, because he’s too busy with his new toy.

“Maggie said you were taking astronomy in Star City, and I figured you might as well be able to see the places you’re studying. They’ve got really great resolution, you can see the – “

“Do you like hugs from people you don’t know?” Adrian is interrupting, something he generally tries not to do, but his eyes are flooded with tears and his heart is moved beyond telling.

“I – no, not usually, but if you’re asking if you can hug me right now, then yeah, I’d like that.”

Maggie beams and steps back from Alex so Adrian can slip into their arms, and Maggie notes with both a full and broken heart that Adrian is almost as tall as Alex, and given another growth spurt, he’ll probably wind up taller.

He meets her eyes over Alex’s shoulder and winks.

“This one’s a keeper, Maggie,” he says softly, but intentionally loudly enough for Alex to hear him, and they hug him closer.

“You take care of her, okay?” he tells them as he pulls back from the hug.

“Always.”

“And fortunately, you have all of dinner to give them the shovel talk, but for now, can we eat, is everything ready?”

Adrian and Alex laugh.

“You sound like my sister, babe” Alex comments, and Maggie flinches with a lopsided grin on her face.

“I’m pretty sure I didn’t sound like your sister last night – “

“ Innocent child is present, please don’t corrupt innocent child!”

Maggie laughs because she knows he’ll be grilling her for details about their sex life later, but for now, his interest is in feeding his queer mom and her partner, in making them laugh, in feeling like the kid in the… family.

Family. Family.

She stands on tip toes and kisses Alex’s cheek again. They turn to her and beam down at her. “You and his parents have raised a beautiful son,” they tell her, and Maggie burrows into Alex’s chest as they watch Adrian taste-testing the rice.

“I mean he can cook like a god, so he’s worth keeping around.”

“Oh my god, he should meet Kara! Adrian, you should meet my sister, she exists to eat!”

“Sounds like my kinda woman! Now sit down, you two, I will accept no help from any mere mortals in my kitchen.”

“Technically, it’s my kitchen, Ade.”

“Technically, now I will make you help, so go set the table with your partner, Mags.”

“Yes sir.”

“Thank you ma’am.”

Alex laughs. “Are you two always like this?”

“Yes.”

“No.”

“Oh please, Maggie, tell them the truth!”

Maggie looks up into Alex’s shining eyes. “He brings out the worst in me.”

“Really? Because you look like the best to me.”

“There will be no making out in my kitchen! No – it – okay, fine, just don’t knock over the – okay. I’ll clean it up, I… oh well, they’ll come up for air eventually.”

And when they do, it’s to grab onto each other and gasp with laughter.

Between the three of them, it doesn’t stop all night long.

Chapter Summary

woeohtherclexa asked:

hey mom!! i really love Yve and i was wondering if u could write a fic where Yve goes on her first mission and takes a bullet for Maggie and then Maggie gets mad at her and Yve says she did it because it's something Maggie would do for her.

First Yve fic here -- Chapter 207

She swears she’s not nervous, and they’ve been training her to – among other things – be an expert liar.

But Alex puts her hands on Yve’s shoulders and stares her steady in the eyes anyway.

“I was terrified my first time out, Agent Butler. But you have done incredible things: you’re ready for this. You were born ready for this: to protect your friend, and beyond. I believe in you, okay?”

Yve nods and wishes vaguely that they’d let her wear her denim jacket instead of this damn DEO uniform thing, but Alex had known exactly what to say: calling her an agent, to invoke her protective streak. To tell her she was born ready.

Because she was.

“Yes ma’am.”

Alex grins. “Let’s move out then.”

It’s a routine recon mission, coordinated with the NCP – Alex hadn’t been expecting too much danger, and Maggie met them at the scene.

She was wrong about the not expecting too much danger part.

Because within a few minutes of them infiltrating the old Cadmus warehouse, they discover what even Winn’s most sensitive equipment couldn’t – that it’s not so old after all.

Because within a few minutes, bullets are raining down on them from all sides, and Alex’s stomach twists, because Yve is trained, and Yve is ready, but Yve is a child, and Maggie, Maggie, Maggie.

She swallows her fear, just as she was trained to, and shouts out orders and covers the techies brought along to salvage what they could from the old Cadmus computers behind her.

She glances at Maggie and all the has to do is jerk her head, and Maggie knows. The two of them circle around behind their Cadmus attackers while Alex’s team lays down cover fire and, moving as one body even across the warehouse from each other, they slap cuffs on their targets.
“Nice work, Danvers,” Maggie grins grimly, and the bang comes out of nowhere.

So does the yell of Maggie’s and the sickening sound of bullet meeting flesh, and Alex doesn’t shoot to injure, she shoots to kill, because Yve is bleeding on the ground and it could have easily been Maggie and Yve’s blood is on her shoes and Maggie is shouting for a medic and Alex Danvers is nothing if not ruthlessly protective of her team.

Of her family.

“Hang in there, Agent Butler, you’re gonna be just fine,” Alex tells her steadily as she kneels next to Yve, biting her lip and trying not to groan, her head in Maggie’s lap and Maggie’s fingers joining Alex’s on Yve’s upper arm to pressure the wound and stop the bleeding.

“Why would you do that, Yve? Why the hell would you do something so stupid?” Maggie’s voice cracks, and she runs a shaking hand across Yve’s sweaty forehead.

“The gratitude,” Yve chokes, and Maggie lets out a shaky laugh as Alex takes over on Yve’s arm.

“She’s alright, babe, I promise, it’s just a graze,” she whispers to Maggie, and Alex’s voice, Alex’s skills, Alex’s confidence, Alex’s reassurance, is the only thing that keeps Maggie together.

But it doesn’t take away her anger.

“Yve – “

“You’d do the same for me, Maggie,” she cuts her off through gritted teeth. “Look down into my gorgeous eyes and tell me you wouldn’t.”

Her voice is weak and strained and painful, but she forces her eyes open to look up from Maggie’s lap at the woman who recruited her, at the woman who thinks it’s her fault she’s been shot, but Yve knows differently: it’s Cadmus’s fault she’s been shot, and Maggie is the reason they found her friend all those months ago as she was starting training, and Maggie is the reason she founded a queer support group in the DEO last month, and Maggie is the reason she gets to wear this stupid, non-denim, amazing uniform.

“I would in a heartbeat, Yve,” Maggie tells her and leans down to kiss her forehead, and Alex wants to kiss Maggie’s lips, but she waits because the medical evac team is loading Yve out of Maggie’s lap, out of Alex’s hands, and onto a stretcher now.

Alex wants to kiss Maggie, to make love to her, but not yet.

Later, later, later.

Soon.

“Agent Butler,” she calls, standing, and the evac team pauses. Alex bends over and strokes Yve’s cheek.

“Thank you. For protecting Maggie. It should’ve been me, not you, it… thank you.”

“What are secret agents for, Agent Danvers? And hell, it’ll make a great first mission story,” Yve grimaces bemusedly.

“And here’s to many more.”

Yve grins broadly. “Alright boys, take me away on my throne to the med bay!”
“Do we only recruit massive nerds to the DEO?” Maggie asks as she stands shakily, hugging her arms around her own chest. Alex goes to stand behind her and wraps her arms around her waist, pulling her close and kissing her hair.

“Naturally. Come on babe, I’ll give you a ride back to the DEO. Yve’s gonna be on some great painkillers when they take the bullet out of her arm, and Adrian is definitely gonna want to get on the phone with her for that.”

“Good god, what have we done?”

“Bringing Yve into the fold? Made the world a safer place, that’s what we’ve done.”

“You promise she’s alright?”

“I promise. I promise.”

And she is. When later that night, she walks out of the med bay with her arm in a sling, it’s to the applause of all the agents on shift.

“Glad you’re back on your feet, Agent Butler. We need that courage and those smarts of yours,” J’onh nods in solemn gratitude and approval, and Yve bites her lip as seasoned agents applaud her, thank you, wish her well.

Because she’s sacrificed for people before – too many times before – and she’s never gotten recognition, gratitude, appreciation, love, from virtual strangers that welcomed her into family, not like this.

Because this? This is the start of the rest of her life.

rushman2-0 asked:

Hey mom, I know you're not taking prompts right now and I totally get if you can't bc you always come first (never forget that) but I'm having a really rough night and I was wondering if you could write something for Alex having OCD and needing to control things and she's pretty good at knowing herself (she'd have to be) but sometimes she can't and she throws herself into work and training bc they're the things she can control and Maggie pulls her out of it? idk if that makes any sense sorry ily

She’s generally got it under control.

It’s generally not something that gets visible to anyone else.

J’onn knows. Of course J’onn knows. And Kara knows. Of course Kara knows.

They help, when it gets overwhelming.

When her thoughts spiral and won’t stop, won’t stop, won’t stop, when she needs to have everything in the lab just so because it won’t stop, won’t stop, won’t stop, when she needs to get out of the apartment and get into work because she knows what will happen if she stays. Which is how Eliza knows.

She wishes Eliza didn’t know.

That never helps. Eliza never helps.

Eliza makes her cycles stronger.

It won’t stop.

Now? Now, it’s Maggie. Now, it’s Maggie, because she’ll find out that Alex isn’t cool and badass and calm and kickass. She’ll find out that Alex is a complete wreck inside. She’ll find out and she’ll leave and Alex will break and she needs to be in the lab. She needs to be training new recruits.

She’s good at those things.

She’s good at those things.

She’s good at those things.

J’onn sighs when he sees her – feels her, really – slip back into the DEO after two long shifts that most certainly mean she should be home sleeping and eating ice cream and resting, not coming back for more.
He tries to make a habit of never deliberately dipping into her or anyone’s thoughts, but strong, powerful surface thoughts always leave impressions in his mind.

So he sighs, because he knows, and smiles softly, because he’s proud. Because somewhere in Alex’s struggle right now, she remembers that she copes better when she doesn’t close herself off, alone. And she’s doing what’s best for herself by dragging herself here.

He will never stop being proud of his eldest Earth daughter.

And he’s hardly surprised when his newest daughter shows up with a bewildered, concerned look on her face a few minutes later.

“Hey J’onn, I’m sorry, is Alex here? I thought she’d be home, I know she just got off some really long shifts, but she’s not picking up her phone, and – “

He puts his hand on Maggie’s shoulder and leads her to one of the sparring rooms without a word.

“She’s not feeling so great, is she?” Maggie asks, and J’onn glances down at her, curious and impressed.

“I may be new, but I know her,” Maggie answers his unspoken question, and his eyes smile down at her.

“She’s not feeling so great, no,” J’onn confirms softly as they stop in the entryway of a room identical to the green room except lacking in Kryptonite-emitters. She’s got some new recruits lined up and she’s teaching them a new set of moves, and damn, is she good at it.

She’s good at it.

Excellent.

A demanding but thorough teacher. A ruthless, smart fighter.

Excellent.

She can’t control her mind, maybe, but dammit, she can control the way her body wraps around a new recruit’s and shows him how to throw her down. She can land perfectly, and call attention to the way that she let herself fall without breaking any bones, so the rookies can learn how to both throw down and be thrown down most effectively. She can flip herself off of her back and back onto her feet without using her hands, because she can control her strong, how agile, how useful, her body is.

Maggie watches her with a tilted head and soft eyes, and she sees the battle raging in Alex’s, and she knows that she’s in love.

J’onn can feel it radiating off of her, and he smiles.

“I’ll leave Agent Danvers in your very capable hands,” he says, because Alex’s family is growing and he couldn’t be happier. Even if it added another child for him to worry over. It was worth it.

“Hey Danvers, you about done beating up the newbies?” Maggie calls, and Alex stiffens, and the rookies grin.

“Oh come on, it’s just training, once we finish basic, we can take her,” Yve calls, and Alex scoffs.

“Doubt that, Butler,” she parries, but stiffness and dismisses them to practice on each other in a different room nonetheless.

Maggie squeezes Yve’s hand on the way out, and Alex has barely-controlled terror in her eyes. “I’ve got to go join them, supervise their session,” she tells Maggie quickly, efficiently.

Maggie nods softly. “You can do that if you need to, babe, but I think you need some sleep.”

Alex gulps and her breathing starts to get ragged, her heart rate starts to skyrocket. “Can’t sleep.”

Maggie is quiet for a long, long, long moment, and then, “Thoughts spiralling, Danvers?”

Alex blinks rapidly and swallows and fights the instinct to run. “How – “

“I know you, Alex. Here babe.” She puts her hand on Alex’s chest. “Breathe out into my hand, okay? Just breathe into my hand. Just breathe into my hand.”

Alex glares for a long, panicked moment before closing her eyes and conceding. Her coiled muscles relax somewhat in a few breaths, and Maggie strokes her cheek softly. “Come home with me, Ally. You need to rest.”

Alex tenses again.

“Breathe into my hand,” Maggie repeats, and Alex does.

“I have to…” She splutters, at a loss for explaining, and thinking, hoping, from the kind, patient, affectionate look on Maggie’s face that maybe, just maybe, she doesn’t have to.

“I know. I know. What if I promise not to leave your side until it gets quieter in there? Hm?”

“And then you’ll leave?”

“Would you want me to?”

Alex shakes her head fearfully.

“Then no, I’d stay to celebrate the quiet with you.”

“Why are you – “

“Because I love you, Danvers. Because you’re amazing and you’re allowed to feel what you feel and be supported every step of the way. Okay?”

Alex quirks her lips to the side and Maggie nearly swoons.

“You’re the best.”

“I certainly hope so, because the best is exactly what you deserve.”
It starts with a shaking that she can feel, but that no one can see.

It starts with a trembling, like she’s trembling on the inside but it won’t translate into the outside of her body.

She doesn’t know whether to be relieved – at least no one can see – or scared – is it in my head?

She runs tests on herself and she tells no one.

Maggie notices anyway.

So does J’onn.

But when she loses balance on a basic mission and misfires her gun and Kara doesn’t believe her explanation that she’s fine, she’s fine, she just got distracted, she’s just tired, she submits to a full work up. Finally.

Maggie’s eyes are wide as she hugs herself in the back of the room, as she watches Alex get a full neuro exam, as she watches tubes get filled with her blood, as she watches the DEO medics whisper to J’onn and Alex’s body tense as she sits up and Kara has to hold her down.

“You people realize I’m a doctor, right? You realize I’ve been practicing longer than the both of you combined, that I – ”

“Alex – ”

“No! No whispering! No whispering and no sad eyes and no – just tell me what’s going on.”

And they do, and she expects Maggie to cry. Hell, she expects Maggie to leave.

Because already, Alex is running it all through in her head.
She won’t be able to hold a gun. Not even the ray gun that shoots so easily.

She won’t be able to reliably keep herself or others safe out in the field. Hell, she may not be able to navigate in the field.

And forget lab work, forget sticking needles into people’s veins and stitching up her fellow agents and conducting emergency field surgeries and...

And saving lives.

Forget saving lives.

Failed. Again. It figures.

And not just at work.

Because Maggie loves how steady Alex’s fingers are inside her, how strong. Maggie loves Alex’s precision, Maggie swoons under Alex’s touch. Maggie moans in ecstasy when Alex lifts her up and carries her into the bedroom, when she holds her down and fucks her senseless while whispering how much she loves her into her ear.

And now?

And now the failure is physical. Now the failure is everything. Now the failure is permanent.

She keeps her face steady and she listens as J’onn steadily instructs the medics to listen to Alex, to do as she says and continue giving everything to her straight up.

So they do.

Kara bites her lips and adjusts her glasses and holds Alex’s hand and asks more questions than Alex knew her little sister could have about biology.

Maggie doesn’t say anything at all. Not with words, anyway. She crosses the room and sits on Alex’s other side, and she kisses Alex’s forehead, but that’s all Alex knows because Alex won’t look at her eyes. She doesn’t want to see resigned obligation, and she doesn’t want to see pity, and she doesn’t want to see heartbreak.

She doesn’t know that if she looks, she’ll just see warmth.

“Yoga can help a lot, right?” is the first thing Maggie says, after a long while. “In addition to the DBS, if she decides to have it?”

“I’ll have it,” Alex says immediately, without hesitation and without emotion and without looking at her girlfriend.

“For a lot of people, yeah, holistic treatments can be quite effective.”

“See Danvers, I finally have the perfect excuse to get you to come to yoga with me.”

Alex hears the grin in Maggie’s voice and turns to her, finally, disbelief on her face.

“Why are you being so – ”

Maggie cuts her off – not something she makes a habit of, but she knows Alex, and she knows this isn’t going to be something Alex wants people to hear – “Guys, could you give us the room,
J’onn nods the DEO doctors out, and Maggie lifts her hands to stop J’onn and Kara from leaving. “No, you guys are Alex’s family, I didn’t mean you guys should leave.”

They both beam down at her, and Alex waits.

“What were you saying, Alex?”

“Why are you being so… calm? I’m going to lose my job, my entire life, hell, our sex life, Maggie, it – ”

“Danvers, I’m not calm. I’m furious. You don’t deserve this kind of pain, and I know, I know, that this is going to be so hard for you. But ride or die doesn’t mean bouncing when things change, Alex. And it’s change. And that change is gonna be hard. Dead hard. But I don’t love you because you shoot guns and beat the shit out of people and are incredible in bed. Sorry guys.”

“Should I leave?”

“No, J’onn, that’s the most graphic I’ll get for now.”

“Thank god.”

“Alex, I love you because of why you do those things. Because you’re so desperate to protect the people you love, to fight for what you know is right, to take care of people, to make me… to make me happy, to give me pleasure. Wasn’t too graphic, was it?”

“Getting there, Maggie.”

“Sorry, Little Danvers, I promise it’s done now.”

Alex smiles, shocked that she still can, and her heart warms, shocked that it still will.

“Those things, Ally? Those things haven’t changed. Those things aren’t going to change. You’re still you. And we have a lot to figure out, a lot about how you’re going to move differently in the world now. But we’ll figure it out together, Alex. You and me and Kara and J’onn and James and Winn. We’re gonna figure it out. Together. Okay? You haven’t failed a damn thing. I promise.”

“You’re perfect, Alex,” Kara echoes, and Alex is shocked by the lack of pity in her voice. She sounds exactly like she did when Alex came out to her: full of love, full of emotion, but not full of pathetic sympathy.

And that? Alex can stomach that. She squeezes Kara’s hand, and when her own trembles with the effort, Kara just smiles.

“You’re my big sister, Alex. And you’re never gonna stop being a badass.”

“We should still come with a warning?” Alex asks, and Maggie kisses her hand as she watches the two of them.

“No one ever gave me a warning about you two,” J’onn deadpans, and Alex laughs at the normality in his voice, in the good god they’re going to figure out a whole new set of danger to get themselves in now voice.

“The Danvers sisters will always come with a warning.”

Hey! Can I call you mom? The situation at home is not good, mom is literally avoiding the fact that I'm bi, and every time she is mad at something she yells at me and it's horrible.... okay not why I'm here, but could you write something about sanvers in high school? Or something? That would be awesome, sorry if I bother you, you are really incredible and thank you for always taking the time to write and answer us. :)

Oh sweetheart, I am so so so sorry things are so tough for you right now. Please don’t forget that you are perfect and you never deserve to be yelled at, and of course you can call me mom. I am sending you all my love, darling: and you never have to apologize: you are never, ever a bother. You are worthy of all the best things, always!!! <3 <3 <3

She always walks Kara from class to class. Always.

Because Kara’s still getting used to the whole earth thing and it’s her job to take care of her and she has to take care of her and no one other than Vicky is trying to walk through the halls with the science nerd freak with the even freakier little sister, anyway.

But her stupid English teacher kept her whole stupid class a whole stupid three minutes late, so now she’s sprinting through the halls, weaving through overconfident jocks and small-looking freshmen and that girl with the gorgeous eyes until she skids to a stop outside of Kara’s algebra class.

Where Kara is talking to another girl, an older-looking girl – certainly not a freshmen, anyway, but she can’t be a junior because Alex has never seen her – and Alex knows this can’t be good.

No one in this school talks to Kara without wanting a laugh out of it.

“Kara!”

“Hi Alex!” Alex furrows her brow because she’s bouncing on the balls of her feet, the way she does when she’s excited, not scared or hurt or confused. And she’s not furiously adjusting her glasses: she’s just… smiling.

“This is Maggie! She just moved here from a place called Nebraska – have you heard of – anyway – and she asked me how to get to the science office and I was showing her and she likes my glasses and she wants to be friends!”

Alex turns her attention to the girl next to Kara. Her jeans are ripped like they’ve seen a lot of wear, and her ponytail is high and her eyes are as guarded as the beaten-up leather jacket that covers her basketball jersey.
“Maggie Sawyer,” the girl sticks her hand out, the grin she’d worn while watching Kara ramble still on her mouth, but her eyes cautious now, as she regards this new arrival.

“Alex Danvers,” Alex shakes, wondering why the core of her stomach feels this hot just from touching this girl’s hand, wondering why she seems so solemn, why she was apparently being so nice – so normal – to Kara.

“Danvers – so you’re the sister! I’ve already heard a lot about you from Kara. Apparently I’m not the only one looking to spend study periods in the science office?”

Alex grins, guardedly.

“You like science?”

Maggie stiffens, and Kara’s wide eyes flit between her big sister and her new friend.

“You find that surprising?”

There’s something in the way Maggie defends herself, something in the way her hurt is masked but somehow also oozes out of her lips that makes Alex stop, and smile. That makes her desperate to reassure her.

Maggie’s posture relaxes somewhat, and she shifts her backpack on her right shoulder. “All of the above. You?”

“Same.”

“Ladies, you need to be in your classrooms now!” one of the sophomore math teachers calls, and they all jump.

“Kara, see you after!” Alex pushes her gently into her classroom.

“I’ve got my study period now. You?”

“Yeah.”

“Ladies!”

“We’ve got a free! We’re going!”

Maggie grins at Alex’s indignation. “Don’t like being yelled at much, huh?”

Alex grimaces. “Does anyone?”

There’s something behind Maggie’s nod that Alex wants to hug, which feels odd, because she’s never really wanted to hug anyone but Kara. And Vicky.

“So, Nebraska, huh?” Alex asks as she leads Maggie down the hall to the science office.

“Trying to put it behind me. Kara says she’s not from around here, but that you grew up in Midvale.”

“You two talked a lot in a few minutes, huh?”
Maggie laughs gently and steps back to hold the door for Alex as they get to the office. “Kara did most of the talking.”

Alex searches her tone, her face, for mockery, but she finds only disbelief that someone can be that nice, and something that looks a lot like affection. Like relief that the girl she asked directions from wasn’t looking to hurt her.

Alex’s heart twists guiltily. “She is.” She shows Maggie where she can set up her books, on the table where the science teachers let the nerds work and eat and rest from the stimulation, the abuse, of outside, during their free periods.

“Alex, you brought a friend!” her freshman biology teacher calls with equal parts pride and shock from her desk in a slightly separated room, and Alex blushes furiously.

“Maggie Sawyer. Just transferred, ma’am,” Maggie says in a small but trained-with-confidence voice, and Alex wonders why she had to develop it.

And she wonders why she didn’t correct her teacher – that Maggie wasn’t her friend, just a tagalong who was nice to her sister.

Because maybe she’s right.

Maybe the girl with the guarded eyes and adorable dimples – who’s already pulling out a peanut butter sandwich and offering Alex half – is going to be her friend after all.

Chapter Summary

superfan94 asked:

Hi! So this is a prompt for whenever you have the time I just need to get it out there before I forget! Totally not a priority right now! So I got this scene in my head of Lucy (I miss her!!!! And Jenna) walking in on Maggie and Alex in the middle of sexy times! And a week later still teasing Alex about it! Sorry it's just you've made me obsessed with Alex/Lucy friendship. Again not sure priority just wanted it written down before I forget.

If they absolutely had to be walked in on by Lucy Lane – if it had to happen – Alex would have wanted it to be on one of the times she was on top, one of the times she had Maggie held down and screaming her name and begging her for more.

Because that? That, Lucy would have congratulated her for and teased her about, but the teasing would have been more of the same, more of what she already got from her friend.

But as it is?

As it is, Lucy lets herself into Maggie’s apartment when Maggie has Alex wearing nothing but her glasses, on her knees in front of the couch, cuffs on her wrists above her head as Maggie holds a vibrator inside her, tilted to pressure Alex’s clit, and Alex is nothing if not wrecked.

Lucy’s jaw drops and her eyes widen and her mouth goes completely dry.

And she promptly trips over her own feet.

Maggie swears and Alex pants, barely able to react to the interruption, and Maggie holds up a hand to Lucy, leaning over Alex to grab a throw blanket to wrap her in.

“I’ve got you, babe, okay? It’s just Lucy, everything’s okay, alright?”

Alex nods and lets her eyes flutter closed as Maggie uncuffs her hands, kisses her wrists, and wraps her up.

“So Agent Danvers,” Lucy starts as Alex recovers from the interruption, safe with Maggie’s arm around her. “Badass in the streets, bottom in the – “

“Don’t finish that sentence, Lane, or I’ll show you that badass part right now.”

“What, you naked except for a blanket and those sexy sexy reading glasses that your girlfriend apparently loves so much?”

Lucy smirks and Maggie chokes and Alex pffts and takes off her glasses immediately.
“We’re going to never speak about this again, clear?”

“Mmhmm. Clear as crystal, Danvers.”

But that doesn’t stop Lucy from asking Alex to read out an ingredient list for her and Maggie while they cook, nudging her glasses toward her as she acts.

“Wanna make sure you can see properly, Alex.”

It doesn’t stop her from, a few days later, asking Alex how her wrists are doing. If her throat is still sore from all that screaming of Maggie’s name.

“Just looking out for you, Danvers.”

And it doesn’t stop her, a full week later, from checking in with Alex while she’s watching her spar with new trainees at the DEO.

“Careful there, Agent Danvers, you don’t wanna reopen the rug burns on your knees.”

Each time, Alex wants to be irritated and she wants to be annoyed.

She really does.

But each time, she can do nothing but blush, and splutter, and gulp, and pfft, and forget how to string words together.

Which is exactly why Lucy keeps doing it.

Until, that is, J’onn overhears her latest crack about whether Alex’s ray gun has as many settings as her vibrator, and begs her, for the love of all that is decent on this god forsaken planet, to leave Agent Danvers’s love life at home.

“I will if she does,” Lucy mutters at that, and Vasquez snorts.

“Good god, I need to retire.”
anonymous asked:

I just discovered your fics and holy hell you're amazing! Any chance you can do one about Alex's first reaction to Maggie calling her babygirl?

She doesn’t register it for a minute or two.

“Can you pass me that measuring cup, please, babygirl?”

Their relationship is new – not so new that Maggie doesn’t know her way around Alex’s kitchen, that Alex doesn’t know exactly how many yoga classes Maggie goes to per week – but it’s new enough.

New enough that Alex is still getting used to calling Maggie her girlfriend; new enough that Maggie is still trying to calm herself down, trying to convince herself that Alex is worth trusting, that she isn’t just Alex’s coming out affair.

New enough that Maggie has called her gorgeous, but not babe; new enough that Maggie has called her sweetie, but only when she was crying; new enough that this? This whole babygirl business?

Makes Alex’s heart jump and makes her cheeks grow red and makes her stammer and splutter and generally lose her grip on the whole language thing.

But only a minute or two after the endearment slips out of Maggie’s mouth.

Because it feels natural, it feels right. And it feels… it feels like coming home.

“Here you go, Detective,” she flirts, making sure to graze Maggie’s fingers with her own, to bend down and kiss her forehead, her nose, in a way that always brings out Maggie’s dimples.

But then Alex freezes, and then the spluttering begins.

“Wait, Maggie, I – what – did you – it – babygirl?”

“I’m sorry, is – is that not okay? If it’s not okay, I don’t – ”

“I didn’t say it’s not okay – ”

“Because I don’t wanna make you uncomfortable, Danvers – ”

“No, I wanna be. Your babygirl. I want… that’s what I want.”

“Yeah?” Maggie looks up at her with wide eyes and the beginnings of a smile.

“Yes.” Alex’s voice is soft and her lips are softer when she leans down to kiss Maggie’s.
“Good then. My babygirl.”

Alex blushes and preens and squirms in the way James swears only Maggie can make her do.

Because she’s never liked being anyone’s, never liked the possessiveness, never understood the intimacy of endearments like that.

But being Maggie’s? And Maggie integrating that affection, that… love… into her language?

That kind of intimacy feels, now, absolutely perfect.

Chapter Summary

anonymous asked:

I know prompts are closed and I feel bad about asking this but my girlfriend just broke up with me because she doesn’t have enough time in her life for me so could you maybe write something about Maggie feeling like Alex doesn't have time for her and Alex comforts her? I just need someone to have a happy ending that I didn't get. But if you don't have time don't worry about writing it.

It’s always the other way around.

She’s always the one accused of putting work ahead of the relationship, always accused of not caring enough – even though she bends over backwards, every day, every night, every moment in between, to be as affectionate as she can be, to be as thoughtful as she can be, even when she’s exhausted, even when she’s a nervous wreck, even when god this really has to get done, but she needs to know she means something to me – but now?

Now that she’s dating a secret agent with a superhero for a sister?

Now, she thinks she knows a little bit what it feels like.

And she understands, she does. She truly, truly does. Because their jobs are so different, but they’re also so the same.

So when Alex’s workplace is on lockdown and she misses their first concert together, she gets it.

And when Alex gives her a quick kiss and a grimace and a promise to make it up to her and sprints to the DEO in the middle of dinner at one of the fanciest restaurants in the city because Kara – well, Supergirl – needs something that only Alex can give, she understands.

And when Alex leaves early – so early the sun isn’t even up yet – and Maggie wakes up to a cold, empty bed, she’s not angry.

(Especially because Alex leaves the sweetest notes: You’re so beautiful while you sleep, princess, I didn’t want to disturb you; I can’t wait to see you tonight, beautiful; Thank you for an amazing, amazing, mind-blowing night (I always thought that was an exaggeration. Thank you for proving my hypothesis wrong, Detective); There’s coffee and a dry double-toasted bagel (gross) on the table for you, beautiful.)

So it’s not Alex. Truly, it’s not.

It’s the ghosts of everyone else – everyone else who’s left her, everyone else who’s done everything in their power to prove she isn’t worth anyone’s time, anyone’s effort, anyone’s real love – that seep into her head, her heart, and twist her stomach into knots.
So when Alex comes home—three hours later than she’d said she would—and kicks off her boots and pulls Maggie into a soft kiss, Maggie melts.

She melts, but she’s also fighting tears, fighting fear, fighting the terror that Alex only wants her when it’s convenient, that Alex only wants her because it’s convenient, that Alex only wants her when Alex wants her, and nothing more.

Alex feels it, feels her stiffen at the same time as she melts, and she runs her hands down Maggie’s arms until she’s holding her hands, and she pulls away from their kiss and she looks down with concerned eyes and a soft voice.

“What’s wrong?”

Maggie steps back automatically. “Nothing, I—you guys get that last weapon back in containment?”

“Yeah, we did, Winn and I had to—no, Maggie, no. Something’s wrong.”

“Nothing’s wrong, Alex, it—I—”

Alex’s stare is fixed, but her eyes aren’t angry. They’re worried, and more than a little tired, and guilt digs into Maggie’s veins.

“I’m sorry. Nothing’s wrong, Danvers. Did you eat dinner?”

“Maggie.”

“Danvers. Did you eat dinner?”

“Maggie, please.”

Maggie’s back is to her, now, and Alex watches as her shoulders stiffen, as her hands open and close, as her left hand rises to her chin, then falls and rubs nervously up and down her own thigh.

“I don’t want you to feel like you have to spend time with me.”

Whatever Alex is expecting to hear, it isn’t that. “Like I have to—what?”

Maggie whirls around, and her eyes are calm on the surface, but raging just beneath, terrified just beneath, and Alex’s heart threatens to break.

“You just got off a—what—sixteen hour shift? After yesterday’s twelve? You should be able to rest when you come home, not listen to your girlfriend.…”

Alex shakes her head and furrows her brow and steps forward tentatively, stopping just short of touching Maggie. “Listen to my girlfriend what?”

“You know what, Danvers, it doesn’t matter, I—if you didn’t eat, I made you that pesto pasta stuff you like, there’s leftovers in the fridge, I’m going to bed—”

“Maggie. Are you angry that I didn’t come home on time?”

“No. No, I’m not angry, I’m not, I just…I don’t want to take up more of your time, Danvers. You’re only human, even though you don’t treat yourself like one. You run yourself into the ground at work, for Kara, and that’s…that’s what I love about you, Alex, but I don’t want to be…a distraction, or an annoyance, I don’t want you to feel like you have to come home and entertain me, like you’re obligated to spend time with me when you’re tired or you just want to be alone or –"

“Yeah. Yeah, you’re right. Alone time’s important. But I go for my runs, and you do your heavy bag, and I think we’ve been pretty decent at carving out other separate time. Your outings with James, mine with Winn, and with Kara, your video games sessions with Winn… But if you think we need to get better at that, Maggie, that’s okay – I didn’t have to come over tonight, I just thought –”

“Right, exactly, you thought I needed you to, and I don’t want to put that burden on you, Alex.”

“Can I touch you?”

“What?”

“Can I touch you? Would you like it if I touched you? I want to hold you. If you want to be held.”

Maggie blinks down tears and nods defiantly, and Alex wraps her up in her arms and kisses her forehead.

“Maggie, you are never a burden. I love spending time with you. I love coming home to you. And yeah, okay, I don’t have the most spare time in the world, but the spare time that I do have, Maggie? The spare time that I’ve created for myself since I met you? And no, stop, please, don’t apologize – I love it, Maggie. Because I love… I love you, and carving out time for you, for us? That’s part of carving out time for me. Because you make me so happy, Mags. I never could have imagined being as happy as I am with you, I… you’re never a burden, Maggie. I don’t care how many hours I work, or how demanding both of our jobs are. Loving you, Maggie Sawyer, will never be anything but an honor and a joy. I promise.”

“Even when I get all whiny and insecure like a twelve year old?”

“Even when you get all self-deprecating and have legitimate trauma from being abandoned so often and need some understandable reassurance, yes.”

“Big words there, Danvers.”

Alex preens. “I went to Stanford.”

“Nerd.”

“Your nerd, Maggie. Okay?”

“Okay.”

“You said you made pasta?”

“Your favorite.”

“Ugh, you really are the best.”

am i the only one that imagined alex or maggie stalking one another on fb or instagram after they met at the crime scene just because something about them was bugging one another? like can u imagine maggie seeing alex’s pictures with kara as suprgirl and being like "interesting.." someone needs to write this

She would pfft and deny it if Kara asked her, and she’d come dangerously close to breaking his nose if Winn asked her.

But no one asks her, because she only does it on her phone, and only when she’s sure she’s alone.

“Detective Maggie Sawyer, NCPD Science Division,” she mutters to herself, irritated that the arrogant woman – it was her crime scene, dammit – won’t leave her mind.

Irritated that the arrogant woman… does things to the inside of her stomach.

Things that she’s not entirely sure are unpleasant.

She pours herself a glass of bourbon and opens Instagram on her phone.

Just because she wants to check this hard-headed cop out, of course.

Not that way. Just… check out what she gets up to off the job. See if she can figure out if she’s actually any good at her job.

She must be – she knew Infernians, Kryptonians, heat vision, could spot sloppy methods of bagging evidence from twenty yards away – but Alex finds herself needing to know more.

For no reason, really.

To feed her irritation, probably.

She drinks deeper and types her name into the search function.

She doesn’t have to scroll long before she finds that infuriating grin, that gorgeous hair, that…

She knows she shouldn’t, but she does it anyway.

She clicks and she scrolls – slowly, more slowly than she would ever admit to – through photos of the detective sitting at a table with her hand up, a confident but somehow still soft, but somehow still edged, somehow still unreadable, expression on her face, in something just off black and white; photos of the easy-bake local cop sporting a gym bag and a confident, head-tilted stare that captivates Alex for longer than she’d care to admit; photos of the hardcore, unshakeable detective shrieking with apparent laughter on the back of a tall boy with a silver earring and dapper shirt, banter that’s cuter than Alex would care to admit in the comments section between Sawyer and some kid with the username arodriguez_nottheballplayer.

She idly slips over to the boy’s Instagram and finds that Maggie is all over his, too, at Pride parades and activist events, at college visits and a high school graduation, the boy beaming with his diploma and the detective on her tip-toes, kissing his slightly scruffy cheek, his skin darker than hers but his eyes just as bright.

Alex wonders how the apparently hard-ass detective wound up so full of smiles around this kid, and she wonders if maybe he’s Maggie’s Kara.

But no, Maggie can’t have a Kara.

Maggie can’t be a person to Alex.

Maggie’s just a local cop who got in the way of her investigation, who impeded on her territory, who stepped into her jurisdiction.

And is, apparently, refusing to leave.

“Hey M’gann, what’s the wifi this month?” Maggie wants to know, and M’gann smirks.

“Morn made it up this time – guess.” She grins as Maggie laughs into her beer and types in the quiet but ever-present alien’s name into her phone, and she goes immediately to Instagram.

“My lab is not an easy bake flipping oven,” Maggie mutters to herself as she searches the name of the overly self-assured, overly hot – that suit, my god, why would she do that to a person? – secret service agent who’d trampled onto her crime scene earlier today.

“Ooh, new hot date?” M’gann asks as she passes behind Maggie with a tray of north Bravakian ale. “She’s cute.”

Maggie rolls her eyes. “Come on, M’gann, you know I’m still with –”

“Yeah, I know, and you know I don’t think you should be.”

“Yeah, yeah.”

Maggie sighs and drinks deeply and squints as she scrolls through photos of Alex with pursed lips and smoldering eyes that set Maggie’s core on fire; older photos, it seems, of the secret service agent with shorter hair, a few with longer hair; a few of an apparent game night with two men with broad smiles and collared shirts, and a pretty blonde who makes Maggie’s stomach twinge with unwarranted and completely inexplicable jealousy; and even a couple in the field with Supergirl, their easy, intimate rapport clear even from the way they’re standing, from the ways they’re looking at each other.

“Interesting…” she murmurs.

“What’s interesting?” M’gann wants to know, and Maggie closes the app on her phone, knowing she shouldn’t be going down this rabbit hole, she shouldn’t be looking up photos of some – beautiful – woman just because something’s bugging her about her, just because she can’t get her out of her mind, just because…
“Nothing. Nothing. Just someone I met in the field today.”

M’gann arches an eyebrow; she doesn’t need her telepathy to know better, but she doesn’t push.

“Scotch? On the house?” she offers instead.

Maggie grins and pushes her empty beer bottle at her friend.

“Only if I can interest you in a game of pool when you get off shift.”

“You know you have no chance, Sawyer,” M’gann laughs.

Maggie thinks of that agent – Alex Danvers – her name feels better than she wants to admit on her tongue – and shrugs.

“I’ve got hope.”

Chapter Summary

sandstonesunspear asked:

Hi mum! Here’s the prompt: Eliza deliberately misgenders nb!Alex and stuff, and Maggie comes to Alex's defense and completely loses it.

Maggie has held her tongue through a lot. She’s only had gentle, measured responses to Eliza – and a firm, supportive hand on Alex’s thigh – through the worst of it so far.

Oh honestly, Alexandra, putting Kara in the position where she had to blow out her powers again just to save you from your own reckless decision?

Respectfully, Dr. Danvers, if Alex hadn’t been so incredibly brave, we would have had no way to stop that ship at all, and hundreds of innocent people would have been stranded all the way on the other side of the galaxy and most likely left to suffer and die.

Alexandra, I know you’re still upset about your father, but really, that’s no reason to drink yourself into another stupor.

Actually, Dr. Danvers, it’s root beer, so the only stupor anyone will be in is from sugar overload.

She always does it with a gentle tone, and she does it with a modicum of respect in her voice, because Eliza likes her – really likes her – and she knows it’s better for everyone, better for Alex, if it stays like that.

But that doesn’t mean she’s going to just watch Alex get gaslighted, get beaten down, get loved so painfully by a woman who doesn’t know how to love properly, doesn’t know how to say Alex I love you to the ends of the earth and you terrify me because I’m always so worried about you.

And since then?

Since then, Maggie has held Alex’s hand while they managed to stumble through yet another coming out to Eliza – another I feel more like me than I ever have, and that reason is – what, no Barry Allen mystery portal this time? Great, I was kind of counting on – Mom, I’ve never felt more like myself than I do now, because I realized that I didn’t grow up knowing any labels that fit me right, but now I – I’m nonbinary, Mom, I’m – I’m me, same as ever, but they and them instead of she and her, because it just… it makes so much sense, you know? – and Alex had nearly broken her fingers with the force of their grip as Eliza had blinked, had blinked again, had stood, had swallowed, had looked directly at Alex and after long, long minutes of Alex quietly begging her to say something, said, So you’re not quite a boy but you’re not quite the beautiful young woman I raised, and I assume your very lesbian girlfriend is for some reason okay with this because she’s holding your hand, and your sister is giving you that unconditionally supportive look because her heart is purer than mine will ever be, so I assume I’m alone when I say I’m a little bewildered and am going to have to get used to losing my daughter.
Kara’s arms are around Alex before the first sob can choke out of their lips, and Maggie holds them from behind and Alex splutters and Alex breaks as Eliza retreats to Kara’s bedroom.

Kara – once her own temper with Eliza has calmed somewhat – runs interference between her sibling and her foster mother, enough of it to get them back in the same room, enough of it to get Eliza’s arms around a crying Alex while Maggie watches with rage on her face. Kara slips her fingers into Maggie’s.

“They’re going to be okay. They have us. They have you,” Kara whispers, and Maggie kisses her on the cheek.

“I love you, Little Danvers.”

Kara smiles with sad eyes as they both watch Alex sniffle in Eliza’s arms.

And now?

Now it’s been a month, and there have been good phone conversations – Alex, you’re my da – my child, and I will always love you, and I will always be proud of you, however you are – and there have been explosive phone conversations – I’m sorry, Alexan – Alex – it’s a mother’s instinct, I’ve known you one way for twenty-eight years and you’re expecting me to catch up with all these sudden changes overnight! – and now, there’s another family dinner.

Alex throws up with nerves beforehand, Maggie and Kara taking turns between rubbing Alex’s back and holding their hand and making sure the apartment is in order for Eliza’s arrival.

“How’re they doing?” Maggie calls into the bathroom as she sets the table, deliberately addressing Kara so Alex can hear their pronouns, so Alex can hear their validation, and sure enough, Alex’s stomach settles somewhat.

Kara smiles and kisses the back of Alex’s neck and calls back out, “They’re doing just great, they could infiltrate Cadmus single-handedly all over again!”

Alex laughs wearily and leans back into their sister gratefully.

It’s the last laugh they get that evening.

Because Eliza blinks a little too much before complimenting – stiffly – Alex’s new haircut; stares a little too hard when Maggie switches easily between calling Alex babe, honey, Alex, and Al; completely blanches when Kara calls Alex both Al and Alex and refers to the Danvers siblings; and clenches her jaw when Kara passes behind Alex to get the cookies from the oven and rubs the back of their head, with its newly buzzed style, and laughs about how scared she is that Lena – who’s unfortunately out of the country right now – might just leave her for Alex, if the way she loves touching Alex’s new cut is any indication.

“So you’re saying your sister’s doing this to be more, what, butch, is that the word? That she just wants to be more attractive to women? I thought she – I thought you already have Maggie, dear, and everyone’s completely fine with you being a lesbian, no one would care if you cut your hair this way and wore those shirts and were just a woman, so I don’t understand why you feel the need to make things more complicated by – “

Maggie is up before Alex can start crying and she’s up before Kara can say more than Eliza, you need to –

“You know what, I’ve been respectful and I’ve held my tongue and I’ve – no. No more. Dr.
Danvers, you’re having trouble processing your kid’s identity? Fine. Whatever. Talk to people, talk to Kara, talk to me. Hell, talk to Alex if you want to, but don’t you dare misgender them just because you can, just because that’s what makes you feel more comfortable, more righteous. Not in this place, this place where Alex feels at home with their sister. And you know what else, did you ever stop to think that Alex lives in the same damn world as you do? That they have been forced to swallow the same heteronormative bullshit about you’re either a man or a woman, this way or that way, nothing else, no complexity, no wiggle room, and if you feel outside of that, you’re a freak, you’re just trying to get attention, you’re just trying to make your life harder, you’re being selfish, you’re being ridiculous? Did you ever stop to think that Al has been forced to swallow those same toxic lies, so maybe they have the same questions, the same insecurities and fears and fears and self-doubts, that you’re interrogating them about? That you’re hitting every one of their fears, every one of their triggers, and to what? You think they haven’t already been over and over all of this with themselves, with me, with Kara and James and J’onn and Winn and Vasquez and Lena, nights of agonizing and crying, not because the nonbinary part is the hard part, but because toxic expectations like the ones you’re laying out are the only thing that surrounds them? It’s not about being difficult, and it’s not about making anything harder, it’s about discovering that there is something that fits you better, that helps you breathe better, than the little boxes we’ve all been hacked and wrangled into. It’s not Al’s fault that they grew up without the proper language to fit themselves, with all the shame that you’re shoving onto them with this interrogation. Because you know, don’t you, Dr. Danvers, that there’s a difference between questions and interrogations. This is your child. Love them. That’s it. Just love them. And if you can’t do that properly right now, I’m sorry Kara, I know this isn’t my house, but you need to leave. Now.”

There’s a long silence, and Maggie’s chest heaves slightly as she glowers, trembling, at Eliza; Kara beams sadly at the woman she hopes her sibling marries; Alex stares up at Maggie in disbelief, in relief, in shock, in gratitude; and Eliza stares between the three of them in a very different kind of shock.

“Alexan – Alex, you’re going to let your girlfriend speak to your mother that way?”

It’s Kara who answers. “Eliza, please. Not now. Maggie said what Maggie said, and I… I agree with her. And so does Alex. Please. We’ll try this again another time, okay?”

The pit in Maggie’s stomach – the pit in all of their stomachs – doesn’t even begin to fade until hours later, when they’re sharing two tubs of vegan ice cream, Alex cuddled between their favorite girls under layers of throw blankets, and Maggie’s phone buzzes.

Maggie dear. I’ve thought a great deal about what you said, and I wanted to thank you for saying it. You clearly love my child very much, and I am very grateful that they found you. I don’t imagine they want to speak with me right now, and I understand that. But when they’re ready, perhaps you can show them this message? Thank you for fighting for Alex when I don’t know how to. They’ve always fought for everyone else; I’m so glad they’ve finally found someone to fight for them.

“What’s that, babe?” Alex asks. Maggie stares at their red-rimmed, still swollen eyes and kisses their nose.

“Show you later. For now, more cuddles.”

“Cuddlessssssss,” Kara throws her arms over both of them, and as their girlfriend leans over them to tickle their little sister, Alex can’t help but smile; can’t help but laugh; can’t help but feel safe, and loved, and wanted, and defended. Can’t help but feel perfect.

Because they are, they are, they are.
They’re up just as the sun is rising, and the most beautiful woman they’ve ever seen is wrapped up in their arms.

They kiss her forehead and Maggie sighs in her sleep, shifting close to Alex, her lips tilting up into a smile in the tendrils of dawn’s light.

Alex groans internally, but the way they stroke Maggie’s hair gives them away: sure, they want to go for their run, but if this – this amazing woman – is the thing preventing them from leaving the warmth of the blankets, the warmth of her naked body heat, the warmth of her still-sleeping smile?

Well then, Alex Danvers figures they have it pretty damn good.

They watch the growing sunlight dance across Maggie’s sleeping face, and they run their fingers over Maggie’s bare shoulder, torso, ass, thigh, which is hitched up over Alex’s stomach so she’s half on top of them.

“My little koala,” Alex whispers to no one in particular, and kisses Maggie’s hair.

They don’t know how long they watch Maggie sleep, how long they wonder what she’s dreaming, how long they wonder what they ever did to deserve this kind of peace, this kind of happiness, this kind of perfection.

“You’re staring at me, Danvers,” Maggie croaks eventually, without opening her eyes, her smile growing and her voice thick and gravelly with sleep.

“Pfft, no, I’m not – no,” Alex splutters, and Maggie cracks open first one eye, and then the other, shifting groggily so her body is fully on top of Alex’s.

“You were, Danvers, no point denying it.” She plants sleepy kisses on Alex’s face, on their very slightly fuzzy jawline, on their neck.

“No?” Alex asks, running their hands up and down Maggie’s body, making sure the blankets are still over her so she’s still completely wrapped in the warmth their bodies have made together all night.

“Nope,” Maggie concludes, her tongue flickering out against Alex’s throat, and Alex tosses their head back and groans softly. “I’m a detective, Agent Danvers, or have you forgotten?”

“Such a detective you even detect things in your sleep, huh?”
“Mmmhmmmm. And I detect you didn’t go for your run this morning.”

“An accurate assessment, Detective Sawyer.”

Maggie swoons and pretends not to, and Alex kisses her fully on the mouth. She can’t pretend not to swoon anymore, and neither, quite frankly, can Alex.

“So here’s what we do,” Maggie proposes between soft kisses. “You go out for your run, and when you get back, I’ll have coffee and pancakes and much fresher breath than I currently have.”

Alex chuckles and kisses her deeper.

“But I’ll miss you if I go for my run,” they protest, and Maggie beams and rolls off of them. They whine and Maggie mercifully rolls back halfway to kiss them again.

“And you’ll be grumpy all day if you don’t go, Danvers. Miss me for an hour and come back to coffee and breakfast and me wearing nothing but one of your flannels, how’s that?”

Alex tries to pull Maggie back toward them, and Maggie shrieks a giggle and dodges before getting twisted up in the covers and surrendering happily to Alex’s touch.

“Okay?” Alex confirms, and Maggie kisses their shoulder.

“Yes.”

“Was that a promise?” they want to know, and Maggie tilts her head as she looks up at the person she loves like she’s never loved anyone before.

“Was what a promise, Ally?”

Alex swoons at the use of the nickname that only ever feels right off of Maggie’s tongue, that feels perfect off of Maggie’s tongue.

“To only be wearing one of my flannels when I get back.”

Maggie bites her lip and Alex practically growls with desire. “Hurry back and find out.”

It takes several kisses and a mild tickle war that leave them both gasping for air and finding it in each other to get Alex dressed and out the door, and Maggie sighs into the silence when they leave.

She’s never had this before – this intimacy, this domesticity, this perfection – and she never, ever wants to lose it.

She takes her time in the shower, remembering as she does each place Alex touched her, licked her, bit down gently – and, at her urging, not so gently – into her skin last night, each place Alex had worshiped her, and she’s never felt more cared for. More beautiful.

As promised, she slips on one of Alex’s old flannels as she makes four times the amount of pancakes she normally would, because it’s Sunday and Kara will be over soon after Alex gets back from their run. She hums to herself the entire time, even as she listens to the news and occasionally interrupts her own rhythm to yell indignantly at some story or other.

Before long, the scents of coffee and homemade pancakes – some plain, some with cinnamon, some with bananas, some with chocolate chips – fill the entire apartment, and by the time Alex steps back in, the red bandana just above their forehead dark with sweat and their cutoff, sleeveless Stanford sweatshirt perfectly highlighting the rippled muscles in their arms, the table is set and soft jazz has replaced the news and Maggie’s hair is still wrapped in a towel and Alex’s racing heart stops at the sight and scent and sound of it all.

Because before?

Before, their apartment was just that: an apartment. A place to store things, a place to sleep, a place to drink, a place to function.

And now?

“What, no double-toasted dry-as-the-desert bagel this morning?” they ask, and Maggie laughs and shakes her head as she presses a glass of water into Alex’s strong hands.

“I love you too, Danvers. I love you, too.”

And Alex beams, and Alex kisses her, and Alex pours every emotion they have into it, because together, they’re home, home, home.
Lena Luthor does not shy away from challenges.

She’s tackled hostile business men – perhaps not literally (that’s her new girlfriend’s job), but effectively – and she’s survived her mother (enough said).

But this? This overly-casual invite from Kara?

“You don’t have to, you know, I know how busy you are, but if you wanted to, I’d love you to get to know everyone, but you know, you don’t have to – “

“Don’t be ridiculous, Kara, of course I’d love to spend more time with your friends.”

This sends her into a spiral that has her digging into her purse for her anti-anxiety medication, because she wasn’t lying when she told Kara that she was her only friend in National City.

But she was exaggerating slightly; because Kara was her only friend… anywhere.

So this idea? This idea of taking off her CEO blazer and fuck-me pumps to sit on a throw blanket with Kara and her sister and her sister’s girlfriend and their best friends – their family – and play board games and Mario Kart like she’s not horrific? Like she’s not vile?

Like she’s not a Luthor?

This idea is at once the nicest, kindest, sweetest thing anyone has ever proposed to her; and also the most terrifying.

Maggie knows, and Maggie talks her way past Jess: it’s not that hard, she just mentions Pam from HR and their outing the other night when Jess had that late meeting, and when it becomes clear that Maggie had no love for arresting Lena earlier; when it becomes clear that she’s concerned about her girlfriend’s kid sister’s girlfriend (“queer girl geography, right?” she jokes), Jess lets her through.

“Here to escort me out of my own building in handcuffs again, Detective Sawyer?” Lena glances up, holding in the amount hostility she’d normally show for Kara’s sake.

“Here to escort you to your girlfriend’s place for game night, actually.” Lena looks up from her paperwork with a slightly furrowed brow, and Maggie puts left hand under her lip briefly.

“Look, I… I didn’t have much by way of family. Before National City. Before Alex. And now… it’s scary. It’s scary, having people who just… accept you without an agenda, and want you to come eat potstickers and play crappy 90s board games in your socks on their living room floor, especially when they’re all already…”
“Family,” Lena supplies, skepticism still in her voice but shocked warmth growing in her eyes.

“Yeah. But Kara… Kara’s wild about you, Lena, and I… Here’s the thing. I understand what it’s like to feel like you don’t deserve a Danvers girl. But instead of beating myself up about it, I just try to earn it – earn her, earn Alex – every day. And I know you do the same for Kara. And she wants you there tonight, Lena. No one’s going to test you, no one’s going to ask you to prove yourself.”

Lena tries to swallow the tears stinging her eyes – she’s deeply unfamiliar with this feeling – and she bites her bottom lip slightly, at a loss for words.

“Unless you try to verse Winn in Mario Kart. He will try to crush you.”

Lena laughs, softly but irrepressibly, and Maggie grins. “Yes, he would be competitive about that sort of thing, wouldn’t he?”

Maggie nods and shoves her hands deep in her pockets. “I know Kara was gonna pick you up to take you over to her place, but I just… I don’t know. I could have used a pep talk from someone that wasn’t my girlfriend before my first game night with the squad, so… consider yourself pep talked.”

If Lena is expecting Maggie to ask anything in return – to hold anything over her for her kindness – she’s mistaken, because by the time she and Kara slip into an already full apartment about an hour later, Maggie greets her warmly from the floor, from Alex’s arms, but doesn’t give any indication that they’d just talked. Doesn’t give any indication that she’d just reached out to try to be Lena’s… friend.

“James Olsen,” James shakes her hand near the door with a small smile, and Lena gulps almost imperceptibly.

“A Pulitzer Prize winner, I daresay I know who you are, Mr. Olsen.” Also Kara’s ex. The pit in her stomach grows wider, but James smiles broadly.

“I’m happy for you,” he whispers, and she kisses his cheek while still holding Lena’s hand. Or, more accurately, while Lena keeps her hand in a vice-like grip.

She’s already met Alex, Winn, and Maggie, so none of them bother getting up, all engrossed in some sort of card game that has Winn screaming something about cheating and index fingers and unfairness in between waving enthusiastically at Lena.

She perches on the couch in front of them all as Kara sinks back in the pillows.

“It’s okay, Lena, you can relax. I promise,” she whispers, and Lena melts and leans back into her.

Alex glances up and grins.

“I hope your thumbs are ready for war,” she says, and Lena blanches slightly. Maggie leans her head back into Alex’s shoulder so she can meet Lena’s eyes.

“She means Mario Kart.”

“Hey, so does Kara, it’s not just me!”

“Oh please, Schott, you almost gave Maggie a bloody nose with your flailing last week!”

“The key word is almost, Danvers!”

“Yeah Alex, no need to take out my tech man with some index finger trick just because your girl’s face got in the way of his maneuvering – sorry Maggie – “

“Not at all, Olsen, I’ll just make sure to toss some turtle shells at you – “

“You wouldn’t – “

“Try me!”

Kara laughs along with the banter, and Lena just tries to follow it all. Kara watches her carefully, a soft smile on her face. “I’m so glad you’re here,” she kisses her cheek, and James smiles affectionately and nudges Winn.

“We’re outnumbered, man.”

Winn laughs happily and tosses aside his cards – he would never admit it to Alex, but he was losing anyway – to set up Mario Kart as Alex takes the opportunity of Kara’ diverted attention to kiss Maggie senseless.

Between Winn’s excited yelling and wild gesturing, James’s cheering a squinting, focused Kara on, and Maggie’s cheering a pursed-lips, focused Alex on, none of them notice immediately.

None of them notice immediately that Lena is silent but Lena is determined. That Lena’s expression is set, is fire, is blazing with the shock of being surrounded by people who love having her there, who toss their arms around her to grab more popcorn easily, who make sure she’s getting enough to eat, to drink.

Who only ignore her when they’re focusing on driving their Mario Kart characters forward.

Who notice her – who care – at every moment except exactly when she wants to be stealthy. When she wants to sneak up behind all of them, perfectly calculated to pull ahead with a burst of speed just on the last lap, with a brilliantly timed maneuver that puts her strategically-chosen Toad kart ahead of everyone else’s for a first-place win.

Kara beams and bounces on her seat and squeals because if she can’t win, then her girlfriend definitely should; Alex tosses down her controller and exchanges a slack-jawed expression of begrudging admiration with Winn; and James and Maggie try their very hardest not to giggle, not to tease Kara, Alex, and Winn over the ultimate Mario Kart upset.

Lena smiles nervously into the silence and shrugs. “It’s all about strategy, isn’t it?”

She gulps and she fights down panic and she fights down agony because maybe she shouldn’t have won. Maybe they accepted her only before she stole their spotlight, their rush.

But then Alex is leaning in and Alex is grinning and Alex is more than the hardcore, take-no-prisoners agent that unflinchingly and single-handedly blew up Lena’s mother’s most updated facility, because Alex is congratulating her and Alex is, “Okay, you’re definitely coming to this every week. Anyone who can make Winn lose like that? Definitely a keeper.”
She squeezes her sister’s knee and Kara beams and practically tackles Alex with a hug and Maggie nudges Lena softly while James and Winn egg on the tickle fight that ensues.

“Our Danvers girls, huh?”

Lena fights down tears again, worn out Play Station controller still in her hands. But this time, the tears aren’t anxiety or disbelief or distrust.

This time, the tears are just happy.

“Our Danvers girls, indeed.”
They know they’ll fall asleep.

These days, Alex has trouble falling asleep in bed. Unless it’s in Maggie’s arms, immediately after being thoroughly fucked. But tonight? Tonight’s a cuddle night.

So they know when they fall asleep, it’ll be on the couch.

It has been lately.

Since the white Martian infiltrated her brain.

Since Jeremiah.

Since… since Jeremiah.

And Maggie’s been having her own difficulties.

Her own traumas.

With her own set of memories that Valentine’s Day stirred up.

With her own set of memories, of terrors, of the bar full of her friends’ bodies, of wounds that haven’t even gotten the chance to scar yet, that Cadmus’s latest attacks stirred up.

That Alex nearly being launched across the galaxy, being held at gunpoint, conjured.

Maggie doesn’t like to talk.

But Alex knows.

Alex knows, and she makes her dinner and she pours her scotch even though Maggie’s insisted she doesn’t need to keep any in the house – and she surprises herself, because she’s not even tempted to have any for herself – and she pops popcorn, allegedly just for Maggie (I don’t know how you eat it with just coconut oil and sea salt, it’s gross, Sawyer and Doesn’t stop you from stealing it out of my bowl, Danvers and Any excuse to be closer to you, babe and Get over here, woman, you never need an excuse to be closer to me).

Alex melts when Maggie moans happily with her eyes closed at the pasta Alex made, because unless Maggie’s cooking for someone else – namely, Alex and Kara and Adrian – she never bothers being much more than utilitarian with her food. (Tiramisu doesn’t count. It has its own category, Danvers.)
And Maggie melts when Alex gets out the pillows and the blankets and refuses to let Maggie get up to put her dishes in the sink, because you work so hard all day, Sawyer, let me take care of you for once, and Alex’s top is lacy and low cut and Maggie watches her move, listens to her hum to herself, watches her smile over her shoulder because Alex knows – she always knows – that Maggie’s eyes are glued to her body, to her bare skin and to her collection of bruises, and she almost swoons.

She would claim almost, anyway.

But Maggie knows the truth: that her gaze doesn’t make Alex almost anything.

She full-out swoons, and Maggie settles back into the couch and waits eagerly for Alex to return, because she has never felt quite this domestic, quite this safe, quite this… home.

“Thank you, Ally,” she says softly as Alex sits back down and throws out her arm and puts Maggie’s favorite pillow onto her own lap, inviting Maggie to lay down on her.

“For what?”

“For…”

_For dinner. For giving me scotch but not drinking any yourself. For that top with that lace and for that smile and for letting me lay in your lap and letting me put on Doctor Who episodes that you didn’t love but I did as we fell asleep and for putting the dishes away and for knowing, just knowing, that I’m spending the night, for pulling the blanket over my legs but not my torso because you know how claustrophobic I can get if the blanket is up too high, for putting your arm on my waist and making me feel safe, for making me feel wanted and making me feel loved. So, so, so loved._

“For you, Danvers. For you.”

Alex tilts her head – a habit she’s quickly acquiring from her girlfriend – and tilts her mouth to one side.

“Come here.”

Maggie does – eagerly – and when their lips meet, it’s fire under a waterfall and it’s stars exploding in the vacuum of space and it’s lethal hands turning tender and strong hearts being vulnerable and soft lips on tossed-back necks and low moans growing louder and unspoken love transporting on hitched breath and passionate sighs and whispered names.

“You knocked my pillow on the floor, Danvers,” Maggie teases, her voice several octaves lower than normal, when they part for breath, their foreheads pressed together, their arms around each other, their legs somehow, now, entwined.

“Oh, it’s your pillow, is it?”

Maggie freezes and Alex realizes her mistake, and she takes Maggie’s face into gentle hands and strokes her hair and kisses her nose.

“I love that you’re at home here. I want… I want you to be. Hell, Mags, you can have all the pillows in the universe if it means you sleep in my arms more often.”

Maggie swallows tears and Alex bites her lip, because maybe it was too much, maybe –
“I don’t want all the pillows in the universe, Alex. Only the ones that keep me here.”

They both lean down for the pillow at the same time, with the same smile, with the same hope and the same fear and the same love, love, love.

And the promptly knock their heads together.

They laugh and they take turns spluttering apologies and kissing each other’s foreheads and eventually – somehow – Maggie makes sure a pillow is behind Alex’s head (she always forgets), and Alex resets Maggie’s pillow on her lap, and Maggie lays back down, and Alex puts the blanket back on her, and Alex sighs, and Maggie sighs, and Alex plays with her hair and holds her safe, holds her close, holds her perfect.

And if they both breath soft I love yous when their eyes are dragging and they’re drifting into a more peaceful sleep than either of them have ever gotten on their own, the air between them holds their most cherished, most exciting, most terrifying, most beautiful secret.

Until they’re ready to speak the obvious into existence in the full awareness of day and not just the soft glow of sleepy perfection on the couch at midnight.
Chapter 285

Chapter Summary

gayasever asked:

i was v turned on by maggie interrogating and i high key feel like alex would be to (aka we always need more smut written by you)

Alex watches.

Watches still with disbelief that this is her girlfriend.

That her girlfriend is interacting with her best friend.

That her best friend is clapping his hand on her shoulder because she’s fighting for him – she was fighting for him from the beginning – and he has no idea how hard.

Alex does.

Alex knows that her ass of a partner’s been racking up the number of lives he shatters and calling it fun in the precinct pool – the one competition that Maggie always turns down.

So she watches as Maggie makes that adorable little oh my god you weren’t exaggerating he really is as extra as Kara I love him so much what the hell how is he real face in response to Winn’s boom; watches as she teases Winn and maybe makes him a bit terrified: a good big sister’s job, as Alex comforted him lovingly last game night.

Watches as the woman she’s falling in love with – is already in love with – what’s this supposed to feel like, anyway? – whatever it is, it’s perfect – entwines deeper and deeper into her life.

“Think I scared him?”

Alex slings her arm around Maggie’s shoulder and relishes the way Maggie automatically leans into her, relishes the way she reaches up and puts her own hand on Alex’s shoulder.

“Almost as good as I do.”

Relishes Maggie’s adorable giggle, her perfect smile that Alex feels, hears, rather than sees.

“Take me home,” she tells her, and she relishes the way Maggie swoons at the intimacy of the statement, the way that – for the first time – it feels right, it feels natural, it feels perfect.

“Mmm, Danvers, my place or – “

“Nice work today, Sawyer. Good to see you arresting the bastards instead of protecting them for once, huh?”

And suddenly the perfection is gone, because Maggie’s body is stiff and her stance straightens and her perfect smile vanishes.

She nods stiffly at her partner, and Alex could kill him, and Maggie knows it, because Maggie feels the rage coursing through Alex’s blood. And that rage? That rage is what keeps her calm, keeps her voice level, keeps her suddenly slightly trembling arm around Alex’s shoulder bravely, as she counters smoothly, “Well, not all of us need to beef up our records with profiled cases, partner.”

“You accusing me of something, Sawyer?” His thin lips curl and Alex nearly reaches for the laser gun in her waistband and Maggie nearly lets her.

“Cool it, man, I’m just trying to go home for the night.”

His eyes drag up and down Alex’s body and he smirks.

“Bet you are, Sawyer.”

Maggie is out from under Alex’s arm faster than even her DEO agent girlfriend can react, and she is mere inches from her partner’s body and despite having nearly half a foot on her, he backs up. He’s seen her in action too many times not to.

“You look at her like that again and I swear to god you won’t have eyes left to look with, we clear?”

“No need to get all – “

“We clear?”

“Yeah. Yeah. Clear.”

“Apoloize to the lady.”

“Maggie, it doesn’t – “

“Yes, it matters. You matter, Alex. Donnelly. Now.”

“Apologies, Agent Danvers. You have a lovely night now.”

He retreats through the hall quicker than Maggie’s ever seen him move when not chasing down an innocent suspect, and she sighs with her eyes closed and relishes the way Alex’s arms wrap around her waist, the way her lips nudge aside her hair and find the nape of her neck.

“You didn’t have to do all that for me, Maggie. I don’t want to make work harder for you.”

“He makes work harder for me, Alex, not you. You never deserve to be disrespected like that, you – what?”

She’s turned her face to look at Alex, and Alex’s eyes are fire and fierce, fierce desire.

“What?” Maggie asks again, a slow grin starting to form, because she knows Alex, and she also knows what excited Alex Danvers looks like.

“Take me home,” Alex repeats, and Maggie gulps and grins and giggles and practically yanks her out of the precinct.

They’re barely even in the door before Alex finds herself slammed against a wall, Maggie’s lips crashing up into hers, Maggie’s tongue slipping into her mouth and making her melt, making her moan, making her reach down to undo Maggie’s belt.

“Uh uh, Danvers. You gotta earn it,” Maggie chastises with a kiss to her nose and a grin so sexy Alex’s knees threaten to buckle.

“I didn’t earn it, Maggie? I busted a crime ring for you, I – “

“Yeah, you did, and while we can… discuss… how attractive I find that later, while you were spending your twenty three hours and fifteen minutes beating the shit out of bad guys, I spent my twenty three hours and fifteen minutes jumping through administrative hurdles and holding off my terror of a partner from hauling Winn’s ass back into the precinct and getting my ass investigated for assisting a criminal enterprise.”

“Well, see now,” Alex gasps as Maggie nips at her neck and runs her hands through her hair. “That’s the kind of day that deserves a reward. And that’s all I wanna do, babe. Reward you. For protecting my friend, for protecting his girlfriend and her brother, for putting yourself on the line for someone I love, for your principles. For putting yourself on the line for me. For looking so damn sexy in that blazer – “

“Oh, you liked that blazer, did you?” Maggie asks between open-mouthed kisses, letting Alex back her over to the couch, nodding when Alex asks with her eyes if she can lay her down and, practically whining with desperation when Alex asks if she can nudge her legs open with her thigh, if she can hold her hands down above her head, and grind down with her thigh. Hard.

Maggie gasps and tries not to let it become a scream, and Alex smirks.

“I did. So much authority in that interrogation room, Detective Sawyer.”

Maggie chuckles breathily and glances at the way Alex’s hands are holding her wrists down.

“Not so much here though, huh?”

“You can change that if you’re in the mood to,” Alex invites, and Maggie moves.

Moves faster than Alex has yet seen her move in bed, until Alex is pinned beneath her, panting and whimpering and spreading her legs and sighing in relief when Maggie presses her thigh between them.

“So am I any closer to earning it?” Alex wants to know, and the frustration of Maggie’s day, the tension in her muscles, all ripples across her face, throughout her body, as she practically growls down at her beautiful, perfect, preening girlfriend.

“Keep being a good girl for me and we’ll see.”

Alex shrieks and Maggie grins and kisses her forehead. “All good?” she makes sure, and Alex rolls her hips up into Maggie’s thigh in response.

“Please,” she pants.

“Please what, Danvers?”

“Take me.”

Maggie tosses her head back and groans from deep in her throat. “Yeah, Ally? You want me to “Well you already took me home, so…”

Maggie’s heart leaps and Alex’s eyes soften from the lust because they’re not in Alex’s home. They’re in Maggie’s.

Home.

Their home.

In the same moment, Alex leans up and Maggie leans down and their lips crash together because home, home, home, and Maggie makes good on Alex’s plea to take her.

Takes her with her jeans still on and her hair a tousled mess, takes her with her thigh between Alex’s legs and her wrists held carefully above her head. Takes her with Alex’s desperate pleas for more and Maggie’s body shifting so she can unzip Alex’s jeans, so she can slip her hand beneath her underwear, so she can check in one, two, three more times before Alex begs her to just fuck her, please, please, please, and Maggie does, she does, and Alex grabs at her ass and prays for more and Maggie obliges, bracing herself with one hand next to Alex’s waist so she can get a better angle, so she can fuck her deeper, fuck her harder, palm her clit firmer, and she reminds her what a good girl she is, and she reminds her how tight she is, how amazing it feels to stretch her out, how incredible it feels to take her, her, her, hers.

“All yours,” Alex breathes right before she slams over the edge, and Maggie watches her face because her face is beautiful and her face is rapture and her face is lust and her face is something that Maggie dares to hope is love.

And it is, it is, it is.

Chapter Summary

anonymous asked:

Can we please have Sanvers comforting Kara after the break up. Like... We all hate him but she thought he was special and she's probably hurting a lot right now and could use some older sister TLC at the moment.

She cums hard and she cums loudly – something she’s never done before, with anyone – and she cums so many more times than once that even competitive nerd Alex loses count.

And normally, she’d drift off to sleep.

Safe and happy and peaceful and home in Alex’s arms.

And normally, Alex would press endless kisses to her forehead and they’d whisper to each other – about work, about their teenage years, about their exes, about their adventures, about their terrors, about the random cat memes that Kara would send and Maggie’s latest gym shenanigans with James and her latest pool hilarities with Winn and how beautiful you are and how lucky I am and what did I ever do to deserve you – until they fell asleep.

But tonight, they both lay awake.

Tonight, they look into each other’s eyes and they smile, and then they laugh resignedly, because they both know what the other is thinking.

Kara.

“I’ll order ahead for the pizza and potstickers. You let her know we’re coming,” Maggie says as she passes Alex her shirt, her bra, and grabs one of Alex’s for herself, a habit that Maggie has never had with anyone else and a habit that Alex loves, loves, loves.

“I lo – you’re… you’re incredible, Maggie.”

“In bed? Yeah, you seem to have informed me – oof!”

A pillow smacks her shoulder lightly and they both giggle as they languidly pull their clothes back on.

“For knowing. For caring. About Kara. For not… for not being mad at me. For needing to go be with her.”

“Alex, she’s your sister. Of course you need to go be with her.”

“You’ll come too? She’s kind of gotten attached to you.”

Maggie smiles, thinking of the last game night when Kara had encouraged Mon-El to go home and get some sleep, but practically begged both Alex and Maggie to stay, and she fell asleep in both of their arms with a safe, comforted smile on her face that was too rare nowadays.

“Of course I’ll come, if you think she wants me to.”

Alex laughs as she looks down at her buzzing phone, and she holds it out to show Maggie.

Yes. Please bring potstickers, pizza, and your girlfriend.

They hold hands the entire drive over – taking Maggie’s car because Alex’s bike needs an oil change and they’d walked home from the station, and because they can’t bear the loss of physical contact – and they somehow still manage to keep holding hands while carrying three pies and two heaping bags of potstickers up to Kara’s apartment.

She’s curled in a ball and she’s sniffling and she’s red-faced and puffy-eyed when they get there, and she holds out grabby hands for the food and for her sister and for her sister’s girlfriend, but she says nothing, because there’s nothing to say.

“Do you feel relieved at all?” Alex asks softly, only after Kara’s torn through five potstickers and a slice of pizza.

Kara’s lip wobbles and she shrugs and Maggie squeezes Alex’s hand and elaborates gently.

“It’s okay if you do, you know. He was a piece of home. Or, well, closer to home than any human could give you. Because he might be the prince of all assholes – no, not might, he is – but Little Danvers, he knew your language. Your history. And not because you told him about it, but because he grew up knowing them. Like you did. That’s important, and it’s powerful, and it can make you overlook a lot. Hell, Kara, you could kiss him without breaking his nose, you could be… intimate without hurting him. That… that’s special, Kara, those are… those are special things, and they’re hard to… They’re hard to lose, even when maybe we should. It’s okay if you feel relieved, though. It’s okay. You’re not betraying your history. You’re being true to yourself.”

Alex beams at her girlfriend and kisses her sister’s forehead and strokes her hair and pulls her into her arms.

“I’m proud of you, Kara. Do you… your text said he told you he loves you. Do you…”

She nods, and then she shakes her head, and then she nods, and then she shakes her head again. And then she shovels three more potstickers into her mouth, and Maggie grabs four subtly – two for her, two for Alex – before they’re gone.

“It’s what Maggie said, I think, I… Daxam was… complicated, it was wrong, but if I’ve learned anything about my past since coming out as Supergirl, it’s that Krypton wasn’t all that much to be defended, either. That weapon my father made, Fort Rozz, I… he’s part of home. Not like you, Alex, not – you’re my home, Alex, you’re the only home I’ll ever need, I just – “

“I know. It’s okay, you don’t have to explain. I know.”

Kara sighs her head into Alex’s shoulder and Alex draws her closer and Maggie’s heart warms watching them.

“I just can’t believe it took me this long to realize that he just… I deserve so much better than someone who lies like that, who invalidates me and manipulates me and – that’s what he was doing, right? Am I making that up just because I’m hurt now, I – “
“No, you’re not.”

“Absolutely not – that’s what abusive, gaslighting relationships make you think, Little Danvers, that you’re out of touch with reality, that things are your fault, that you’re making things seem worse than they are…”

“It wasn’t abusive…”

“Alright. That’s okay. That’s a big word, and it’s a scary one. I get it, I do. You can process that how you need to, at whatever pace you need to. We’re here, both of us, through all of it, okay?”

Kara nods slowly, her brain spinning, and Alex kisses the crinkle between her eyes.

“Kara, you’re amazing. And I’m so proud of you for knowing what you deserve. You know that, right? That you deserve only the best?”

Kara sighs and takes her glasses off and rubs her eyes and Alex smiles.

“You are so beautiful, Kara. For yourself. Not for some man to redeem himself for. For yourself.”

“You have to say that, you’re my sister.”

“Well I’m not, and I say she’s right.”

“You have to agree with her, you’re her girlfriend.”

“I – “

“She’s got a point, Sawyer, I mean, ride or die, right?”

Kara laughs softly as Maggie fake scowls up at Alex and kisses her knee.

“I want what you two have.”

“Ugh, just like Brian.”

“Briannnn.”

“Please don’t compare me to – “

“Then please don’t use his phrases.”

“How was I supposed to know he said – “

“You don’t wanna know more, trust me.”

Kara sighs into a laugh and snuggles into Alex’s lap. “Don’t leave?”

“Never, Kara. Never.”

“You too, Maggie?”

Kara smiles sleepily – all the crying, all the pain, will knock her right out – as Alex strokes her hair and Maggie wraps her in a blanket.
“I love you, Kara. For exactly who you are.”

“I love you too, Alex. For the same thing.”

Maggie doesn’t say anything – not yet – but in her mind, she repeats their words over and over, because as the three of them drift off to sleep in a bundled, pizza-heavy heap on the couch, she feels that love, too.

Chapter Summary

anonymous asked:

Hi mom... recently my anxiety has gotten really bad and to cope i squeeze my hand really hard and dig my nails into my palm.... I don't care if you write a fic or not, I know you're super busy. I just needed to tell someone. Thanks

It always happens before Eliza visits – without fail – but it will also happen when Kara is sad, and she feels like she can’t do anything about it.

It’ll happen when someone mentions Jeremiah, or Cadmus, and glances at her quickly, furtively, to see if she’ll nod efficiently and talk strategy with them and slam them into the nearest wall or console and threaten their life with her index finger.

And it’ll happen seemingly at random, for no apparent reason.

When she thinks of a project in the lab she’s not completing as fast as she’d wanted to, or when she thinks of that time last week she was late for dinner with Maggie – Maggie had assured her it was fine, but was it, really? – or when, for no apparent reason at all, her chest just seizes up and she starts to panic but god, god, god, she is ruthless, blew-up-Cadmus-single-handedly DEO Agent Alex Danvers, so god, god, god, no one can see.

So she just clenches her fists – and who would be surprised to see her with a resting pre-punch pose, really? – and she digs her nails into her palm, and she digs harder, and harder, and harder, the stinging, the beginnings of blood under her nails, the pain, so sweet, so needed, so focusing, so sanity-inducing, so grounding.

So perfectly invisible to anyone looking at her, she convinces herself.

But Kara notices.

And Maggie notices.

Of course Kara and Maggie notice.

They exchange a glance over the pool table when it happens in the bar, when Alex is clenching her fists and staring off into the distance, because Maggie had told her they could find a pool hall without alcohol, but Alex insists on the bar, but she’s surrounded by drinks she wants to have and highs she needs to numb the pain, and she’s surrounded by her failure to save everyone that night – doesn’t matter that she wasn’t there – and the burns Maggie got on her back in that explosion, and combined with the sweet, sweet memories of falling in love and first dates and long laughs, her body, her brain, goes into a bit of an overload and she clenches her fists to steady herself, to calm herself, to ground herself.

“Alex, you’re up,” Kara calls gently after getting a nod from Maggie, and they both watch her hands, Kara from over her glasses, to x-ray and see the scrapes, the little nail marks, Alex has pressed into her own skin. She nods at Maggie as Alex squares her shoulders and fakes a smile and gingerly picks up a pool cue.

“It’s okay if you’re not alright you know, babe,” Maggie runs a gentle finger down Alex’s back, and Alex stiffens.

Maggie pulls her hand back immediately, but Alex melts back into it.

“Why wouldn’t I be alright?”

Maggie looks at her, head tilted, for a long moment – her face completely lacking judgment, her face completely lacking anything but adoration and love – and she glances at Kara, who nods, because she knows Alex, and she knows she needs this.

Maggie gently takes the cue from Alex’s hands and holds up her palms, bringing her lips to each indentation gently, softly, tenderly.

“You know, holding ice cubes helps, Ally. When your body needs a release. It won’t damage you, but it’ll give you that rush. That grounding.”

Alex blinks and pffts and looks wildly over her shoulder for help from Kara, but Kara has her arms gently across her chest and her eyes full of love and concern and unwavering support.

“And you can tell us, Alex. You can tell us when you’re tense, when you’re… panicking.”

Alex shifts, but she doesn’t move her hands from Maggie’s gentle grasp. “I don’t panic, Kara, I’m a DEO agent, I – “

“Alex. It’s okay. You’re okay. It’s okay.”

Alex stares between the two women she loves most – between her girlfriend’s soft eyes and supportive half-smile, and her sister’s trembling hand as she strokes her hair and those ocean eyes that have seen worlds of agony – and she wants to feel defensive. She wants to feel angry. She wants to lash out and she wants to deny and she wants to rage and kick and scream.

But Kara’s eyes are nothing like Eliza’s, and Maggie’s hands are nothing like any that have ever touched her, and Alex surrenders to being supported. To being loved.

“Can we go home? Ice cream and cuddles?”

Because getting support is making her panic more, because she’s not worth it and she’s making a big deal out of nothing and she should be stronger than this, better than this, but their eyes are telling her that’s not true, that she is perfect and valid and real and worthy and her heart is racing and if she’s going to panic and have it be acknowledged, have it be honored, have it be loved as she is loved, she wants it to be at home – any of their homes, because they’re all home, now, to her – so that if the tears come, at least they will come only in front of her family, not in front of aliens and humans alike in front of whom she has a reputation to uphold.

“Ice cream and cuddles it is, Danvers,” Maggie kisses her cheek, and Kara snuggles into one of her sides as Maggie wraps an arm around the other as they head out of the bar, Alex looking for all the world like she’s confident and cocky, draping her arms around two beautiful girls, but feeling for all the world like her girlfriend and her sister are holding her up, are the only reason her legs are moving forward, are the only reason her palms are alright, the only reason her heart hasn’t beaten out of her chest yet.
And she knows, somehow, that it’ll be alright. That she’ll be alright. That she’s loved. That she’s not weak for leaning on them. That she’s strong for leaning on them.

That they love her all the more for it.
She’s sleeping in Maggie’s arms when her phone buzzes. Persistently.
Maggie rouses before she does and fumbles her hand across the scattered sheets for the phone.
“I think it’s yours, babe,” she mumbles sleepily, and manages to find the phone in Alex’s jeans pocket, dangling at the edge of the bed.
“Mmm, thank you,” Alex kisses her cheek with a sleepy smile as she checks the text – the texts – that are coming through.
Alex, I’m so sorry, but I miss you.
I know you’re spending time with Maggie, but – you know what, never mind, forget that last text.
I’m sorry.
I love you.
I hope you’re sleeping well. Or whatever you’re up to. Say hi to Maggie for me.
Maggie watches Alex read and kisses her bare shoulder. “Go, Ally. I’ll be here when you get home. Or if you want to spend the night there, I’ll see you at lunch tomorrow.”
“How do you – “
“I know your Kara needs me face by now, Alex. Go. And give her a hug from me too, okay?”
Alex squints and quirks her pursed lips to the side as she examines Maggie’s sleepy, perfect face.
“You’re the best, you know that?”
Maggie’s smile broadens.
“Not so bad yourself, Danvers. Don’t forget to put on pants.”
She chuckles as she tugs them on and she relishes the crisp coolness of the night’s breeze whipping over her body as she speeds her Triumph to her little sister’s apartment.

“Hey sis,” she calls softly as she opens the door, finding Kara exactly where she expected to: wrapped in blankets, surrounded by donuts, on the couch.

She sighs at the sight of her sister’s sad, confused face, and she shrugs out of her jacket as she approaches the couch and perches on the edge.

“You didn’t have to come,” Kara mumbles through a mouthful of donut, and Alex’s heart breaks.

“Do you want touch?” she asks, and Kara nods without looking at her.

Alex shifts closer and strokes Kara’s cheek with a gentleness that, until Maggie, she’d only ever had for her little sister.

Kara sighs and closes her eyes and leans into her touch, so Alex brings her other hand up to stroke her hair, too, and lets Kara lean into her shoulder.

“I can’t make anything work out right, and there’s never a break,” Kara says after how long, she couldn’t tell. Alex nods quietly and watches her sister.

“Can I be closer?” Kara asks, and Alex opens her arms.

Kara cradles herself into Alex’s chest, because her steady heartbeat is even more comforting on contact than it is with her superhearing.

“You’re not the reason things haven’t been going well, Kara. You’re not responsible for the horrible things other people do, for the way the world works. I know you think you are, I know you take on the weight of all that. I know you’re a hero, Kara, but that… that doesn’t mean you can fix everything, every time. It’s okay to just… take this. Carve out breaks. You deserve to be loved, Kara. You can make this time for yourself. It’s okay.”

“But I’m taking you away from your girlfriend.”

“There’s enough of me to go around, Kara. I have enough love for both of you, I promise. And you will always be my sister. I will always, always be here for you. Okay?”

Kara tilts her head so she can look up into her big sister’s eyes, and Alex smiles down at her.

“Hi.”

Kara grins softly. “Hi. Can I show you something?”

Alex furrows her brow but nods, and Kara scrambles out of the blankets, stands, and offers her hand to Alex.

“Where are we going?”

“Up.”

“Flying?”

Kara chuckles. “We don’t have to fly to go up. I just want to be Kara tonight.”

Alex nods and accepts her hand eagerly. Their fingers lace automatically.
It’s a short flight of stairs to the roof, and Alex is glad Kara grabbed her jacket on the way out. She tugs it around her and Kara hugs herself and Alex steps behind her, following her gaze up, up, up.

“I know you’re Kryptonian and therefore above things like chilly California nights, but since you’re just Kara tonight, you want to snuggle away the cold?”

Kara smiles and nods, and Alex wraps her arms around her little sister, and they sit, Alex’s legs open around Kara, Kara leaning back into her sister slightly; like they used to in Midvale, like they used to when they went sledding on those ski trips that Kara pouted Eliza into taking them on.

“Tell me,” Alex asks.

Because she knows all the stellar classifications and distances from Earth and proximity to exoplanets and all the facts, all the science.

But she doesn’t know the stories.

Kara does, and Alex never, ever tires of hearing them.

Her little sister’s soft voice brings her across the sky, to planets she could only imagine, to planets that have amazing desert, but nothing as incredible as Eliza’s chocolate pecan pie; to planets with three suns and planets whose governments aren’t governments so much as consent-based communities.

Neither of them notice when the sun starts to come up, but they both notice that they feel lighter, feel happier, feel safer. Feel home.
Chapter 289

Chapter Summary

anonymous asked:

Hey Mum :) might you at some point be able to fic college Alex pulling an all nighter and Maggie looking after them/putting them to bed/checking on them afterwards, please? It's been a rough term.

If they were anyone else, they wouldn’t feel the need to pull an all-nighter.

If they were anyone else, they would have deemed that they’d studied enough, that they deserve a break, that they’d reached their limit and that they needed sleep, or at least time with friends or Netflix.

But Alex Danvers is not anyone else.

So they settle into the dorm’s study room so they don’t keep Lucy up in their own room, and they completely take over the long table with notes, with textbooks, with scrambled calculations and their glasses case and their granola bar wrappers.

They don’t notice when the door opens behind them because they’re muttering about exothermic reactions and the possibility of harnessing the energy created to – “Delivery for Dr. Danvers,” a soft voice behind them makes them jump before smiling tiredly.

They turn and their girlfriend is behind them, decked out in reindeer pajama pants and a tank top that perfectly highlights her arm muscles, holding out a bag with a couple slices of pizza and a latte.

“Pfft, I’m not a doctor yet,” Alex splutters, and Maggie sets the pizza down on one of the only clear spaces on the table and presses the latte into Alex’s hands along with a kiss to their lips.

“Might as well be, Danvers, the amount of shit you know that even our professors can’t keep up with. What’s the game tonight?” she asks, her hand lingering on Alex’s waist as she turns to rifle through some of their papers, making sure to keep them all in the order Alex has them in.

“I can’t crack the formula I need, and I wanted to have it all squared away before the presentations tomorrow.”

They run their hand through their hair and moan with relief as they sip at the latte, and Maggie has to forcibly restrain herself from not lunging at Alex and taking them then and there.

She knows there’s no point in reminding Alex that the presentations are meant as progress updates, not finished products, because she knows that the call Alex will inevitably get tomorrow afternoon from Eliza asking how it went will send them into a spiral if they can’t report at least somewhat adequate progress by her standards.
Hell, the call will probably send them into a spiral anyway, but Maggie’s just grateful she doesn’t have classes tomorrow afternoon, so she’ll be able to be there.

“Eat, Alex. You can’t live on granola bars, okay? Eat. And here.”

She tugs a water bottle out of her pajama pants pocket.

“Drink all of it. The pizza’s salty and the caffeine’s not gonna help.”

The chaotic, stressed look in Alex’s eyes fades for a moment as they look down at Maggie.

“You’re amazing, you know that?”

Maggie grins and reaches up to adjust Alex’s glasses and kiss their nose.

“I have my laundry in the wash, gotta go switch it out. While I do that, can you do me a big favor please? Go take your binder off? You’ve been wearing it a long time today, I don’t want you to get hurt.”

“Why are you this perfect, huh?”

Maggie beams and licks her lips. “Takes one to know one, Danvers. Go. I’ll be right back.”

And she is, and Alex smiles as she curls up in the armchair in the corner of the study room and falls asleep. Alex strips their sweatshirt off and wraps Maggie in it, complete with a gentle kiss to her temple.

It’s nearly sunrise by the time Alex falls asleep, and Maggie stirs in the chair.

“Oh, Al,” she sighs as she takes in the sight of Alex face-planted in their papers, leaning forward on what has to be the most uncomfortable chair in the entire dorm.

“Baby,” she whispers, padding over to Alex and kissing their hair.

“Babe, come to bed, come get some sleep. Your presentation isn’t until nine. I’ll wake you, I promise.”

“All my stuff – “ Alex mutters, more asleep than not but leaning compliantly into Maggie’s arms.

“I’ll come back and clean it up. Come on, handsome, let’s get you to bed.”

Even half asleep, Alex smiles broadly at the term of endearment Maggie knows they’ve come to love, and they let Maggie guide them to their room, all the while muttering about the breakthrough they made around three a.m.

“You’re so brilliant, Alex,” Maggie assures them as she tucks them in, nodding good morning at a bleary-eyed Lucy, shuffling through their shared space in a long ROTC t-shirt and slipper socks.

“They pull another all-nighter?” Lucy asks quietly as Maggie kisses Alex again and tip-toes out of their room.

“Mmhmm. Got coffee?”

Lucy pffts. “Got coffee? Whose room do you think you’re in, Sawyer? It’s coffee paradise in here.”

Maggie laughs and rubs sleep out of her eyes.
“Perfect. Just black please?”

“Das gross, Mags!” a very groggy voice calls from Alex’s room, and Maggie and Lucy collapse in silent, loving giggles.
anonymous asked:

Do you have any fics dealing with feeling worthless as a bottom? I'm very femme-y and I love being taken care of in bed. Being aggressive and dominant don't come naturally to me. I've accepted that I'm a giant softie who likes a more dominant partner. The problem is THEY do the work. I can initiate a kiss and fondle and go down on a girl and all that stuff, but I'm truly in my element under a nice pair of breasts, feeling safe and taken care of. It feels selfish/greedy, though. :/

Maggie absolutely loves topping her.

She loves how pliant her body is underneath hers, loves the sounds she makes, loves the way her eyes flutter closed, the way she scratches at her back, the way her own back arches helplessly. The way she screams her throat raw on Maggie’s name.

She loves the way that badass, take-no-prisoners, ruthless, perfectionist, take-care-of-everybody-and-what-do-you-mean-I-have-needs-too DEO agent Alex Danvers surrenders to being worshiped by her. Submits to her love. Writhes and begs and whines and lets everything go for the prayers she plays out on Alex’s body.

The way Alex trusts her.

Fully, completely.

The way Alex gives her everything by taking everything: the way Alex gives her everything by letting her love her, by letting her adore her, by letting her be trusted.

But the first time Alex’s eyes flash and she asks with her eyes, with her gentle touch, with her body, if she can put Maggie’s wrists above her head and return every bit of worshiping she’s gotten in their first times, Maggie doesn’t hesitate.

Because Alex’s desire to please her, to touch her, to do everything with her, to her, is palpable. Is radiating.

And god, does Maggie want her.

Want to be taken by her.

And god, does Alex take her.

She makes sure Maggie’s head is resting perfectly on her favorite pillow and she kisses every centimeter of her face and she takes her time stripping her naked, and every time Maggie tells her that she doesn’t have to do anything she doesn’t want to, that they can stop whenever Alex wants, that she doesn’t owe Maggie anything, Alex pffts and Alex rasps, “do you want me to stop?”, and Maggie splutters – no woman has ever made her splutter before, and she wonders if she picked it up from Alex or if Alex was just always fated to have that effect on her – and she shakes her head and Alex grins and Alex continues.

Alex is a quick study – of course Alex is a quick study – and she takes her time bringing Maggie to orgasm after orgasm after orgasm, her mouth exploring her breasts, figuring out exactly what rhythm of her tongue over her hardened nipples makes her whine loudest, pant hardest.

Takes her time figuring out which spots on her stomach make Maggie giggle and which spots – when Alex’s teeth gently, and then at Maggie’s desperate urging, not so gently, graze her skin – make Maggie unravel.

Takes her time figuring out that Maggie has no problem keeping one leg up on Alex’s shoulder so Alex can fuck her deeper, can fuck her harder, can reach deeper inside her, touch places in her body, her soul, that no one has ever bothered to explore.

Takes her time figuring out that if she puts her thigh between Maggie’s legs and arches to take one of Maggie’s nipples into her mouth at the same time, it won’t take her long to cum. Hard. Again.

And because Alex is a quick study, Alex imitates Maggie’s constant checking in, her constant questioning – “are you sure, babe?” “do you want this, Maggie?” “all good?” “like that?” “do you need a break?” “do you like when I lick your clit like that, or like that? Both? Mmm, excellent” – and Maggie is so swept away, so caught up, in being the center of this gorgeous woman’s attention, the sole focus of this brilliant soldier-scientist’s incredible brain and body power, that her answer, truly, madly, deeply, is always yes Alex, please, god, don’t stop, Alex, Alex, Alex.

But when Alex wipes her mouth on her bare shoulder and kisses the insides of Maggie’s thighs, a satisfied, deeply affectionate but also deeply smug grin on her face after making Maggie cum for the upteenth time, Maggie panics. Panics because it’s almost sunrise, and she’s done nothing for Alex all night.

She can’t count the number of times she’s cum, and the only thing she’s done has been begging Alex for more.

The only thing she’s done has been selfish preening and worthless whining and god, how can she be this self-involved, this lazy, this unwilling to work for such a gorgeous, perfect, dedicated woman?

How can she have let Alex dedicate herself solely to her pleasure and offer her absolutely nothing in return?

So she panics. She panics, and shame sweeps through her stomach because maybe this, this, this is why she’s never truly bottomed for anyone before, because she isn’t lazy, she isn’t selfish, she isn’t worthless, she isn’t greedy, she isn’t… except she is. Because the last few hours – god, the last few incredible hours – prove that she is exactly those things.

“Hey, hey, hey, I’ve got you. I’ve got you. Did I hurt you, are you okay?”

And suddenly Alex is out from between her legs and crawling up to where she could cradle her body, hovering because she’s unsure of whether to touch her, but concern is radiating from her eyes – genuine, full-throated concern – and that concern just makes the shame sweep harder through Maggie’s stomach.
“You didn’t hurt me, I’m fine. It’s nothing, it’s whatever, it – “

“No, Maggie. It’s not whatever. Your whole body tensed up, you… it matters, Maggie. You matter.”

Alex’s face is a map of confusion, a map of worry, a map of god please tell me I didn’t hurt you.

Maggie makes a futile grab for the covers – being naked right now is just a reminder of how selfish she is – and Alex immediately lunges down the bed to get them and tuck Maggie in.

“No, no, you don’t have to… see, that’s just it, Danvers, I…”

“I’m sorry – “ Alex drops the sheets and holds up her hands immediately in soft surrender.

Surrender. Surrender.

“No, Alex, I’m sorry, you didn’t do anything wrong, I just…”

She looks away and she clenches her jaw and she can feel Alex staring down at her, can feel Alex thinking, can feel Alex calculating.

“We’ve never had sex quite like that before,” Alex observes softly, so softly, after a few long, silent moments.

Maggie still won’t look at her, and she desperately tries to control the burning in her eyes, the churning in her stomach, but she tries to remember the trust that led her to let Alex top her to begin with, so she nods.

“I’ve never really… taken the lead.”

Maggie nods again.

“Was it bad? Was I bad? Because I can get better, I – “

“No! No, Alex, you were… you were amazing, it…”

“You can tell me if I – “

“No. You were perfect, Alex, I promise, it’s not that – “

“Then what is it, Maggie? You can tell me.”

A long silence. Alex rests her body down on one elbow and holds out a hovering hand, a question in her eyes. Maggie nods again and Alex strokes her hair softly.

And that’s exactly what Maggie needs, which is exactly why Maggie breaks.

“Why would you… what did you get out of all that, Alex? I just… I just laid there, I didn’t do anything for you, I… how selfish could I be, it… I didn’t do anything for you, Alex, all night, I just _ “

“Maggie, wait. That’s not… are you kidding? Do you seriously want to feel how wet I am right now?”

Maggie pffts at Alex’s earnesty with wet eyes. “Nerd.”
Alex smiles with relief and kisses her forehead.

“Maggie, I… I’m so glad you let me… top you? Is that the way to say it? I…” Alex pauses and searches Maggie’s face for the right words. “Maggie, you’re always in control of everything. You’re always responsible, you’re always making decisions. Life and death decisions! And you… you always take care of me, you always just… you make me so happy, Maggie, and I… you deserve it. You deserve to be taken care of. You deserve to lay back and let me worship you, because you… you’re amazing, Maggie, and you deserve to let go, you deserve to be cared for. And – and… it’s giving me a gift, Maggie. You trusting me like that. You letting me lo… letting me care for you like that, that’s a gift, Maggie. It’s perfect. You’re perfect, and you deserve to be shown that. And, if you’re worried that you weren’t doing anything for me… you’ve gotta be kidding. That was the… sexiest, hottest… thing I’ve ever done… the… you… I came, you know. A bunch of times, not that that was the point, but I’m just saying, feeling you like that, touching you like that? Listening to you like that? I came. Because it was so incredible, I just… I didn’t make a big deal out of it, because I wanted to focus on you. You deserve to be focused on, Maggie. I promise I love…d it. I promise.”

Another long pause, another thick silence.

“So you’re saying you liked it. Cause that’s… that’s what I’m getting."

“Oh my god, you’re never going to let me live that down, are you?”

“Not a chance, Danvers. Not a chance.”
Chapter 291

Chapter Summary

Sara Lance Decks Man-Hell, ft. Sanvers and SuperCanary feels

She takes risks every day.

She throws herself in front of bullets – with or without the kevlar-lining in her suit – and she’s long since learned how to stitch her own body back together.

It’s a lesson one tends to learn on that island. On that boat. In the League.

She’s long since learned how to channel fear into a cocky strut and rage into spinning kicks and blood lust into herself.

She’s long since forgotten what safety feels like.

Because when your entire life is a risk – risk of death, risk of torture, risk of rapidly-building panic, constant drowning in self-loathing, that (you hope) no one but you can detect – when your entire life is a risk, you tend to forget what it feels like not to take one.

But then there’s Kara.

Supergirl.

She can’t quite remember, she can’t quite keep it straight in her head.

Well that’s a pun.

Can’t quite parse out how the girl with the glasses and awkward laugh and brilliant smile is also the bulletproof woman with the lowered voice and laser eyes and undefeatable stance.

Well, no.

No, that part, she can understand.

She can understand that part because when people look at Sara? When people look at Sara, they also see a helpless blonde with stars instead of the seven levels of hell in her eyes; until she starts to fight.

So she understands that part, actually: Kara and Supergirl. The contradictions, the agony of stitching them together, of keeping them apart.

Sara understands that because she lives it herself every day.

Except the flying. The flying part would be cool.

Maybe one day Kara will take her flying…
But no. No, she won’t, because she’s busy, now.

And not the kind of busy that they all are: busy saving lives, busy pretending they don’t need saving of their own, busy pretending their stitches will hold.

No.

No, now Kara is busy with some man who’s gotten in her head and won’t leave. Some man who tells her her loves her in the same breath that he that he tells her his mistakes are her fault.

Some man who’s worn her down and shattered the light in her eyes by replacing it with his own.

And that? That, Sara understands all too well, too.

But she wishes she didn’t.

“You approve of this guy for your sister?” she leans into Alex, elbows on the table, both their eyes fixed on Kara, laughing in the guy’s arms one second, scolding him harshly for something or other the next.

“Hell no.” Alex leans over quick as anything to grab Sara’s drink and chugs deeply, and Sara knows that type of swig, the desperation behind it. The need behind it. Knows it too well from her father, from her sister.

Her sister. Her stomach lurches.

She glances at Maggie, who nods grimly, confirming Sara’s fears about Alex, about alcohol, about need. Sara gently pries the glass out of Alex’s distracted fingers.

“Why don’t you stick to your club soda there, Danvers?” she suggests gently, and Maggie smiles gratefully, softly, sadly, at her.

Alex grunts and grumbles, but clearly she and Maggie have had this talk before, because she returns to her own, non-addictive, drink sullenly.

“No, I don’t approve of him. How could I? She’s screaming at him every day, do you know she told him explicitly not to tell anyone they’d slept together and he literally made a public announcement about it at her job not five minutes later?”

“And let’s not even go there with the guilt trips,” Maggie chimes, and Sara’s blood boils.

Because Sara’s life is one risk after another.

But visiting Earth 38 because Iris and Barry told her that Kara seems to be in trouble, that Kara seems to need an extra arsenal of help disentangling herself from this web he’s created around her?

It’s one of the scariest risks she’s taken.

Because she has to watch sisters who love each other. Has to watch one watch the other suffer with a smile, and she remembers that feeling, but god, at least Kara is alive for Alex to watch.

Laurel would’ve liked Kara. Laurel would’ve killed this guy. Laurel…

“You okay, Sara?” Alex interrupts her train of thought, and she shoots back the rest of her whiskey.

“You know it’s harder for Kara to listen to you and your girl because you’re her family, right? That happens sometimes.”

She shudders slightly before rising steadily.

“Lucky for her, I’m not family.”

Alex and Maggie watch with excited trepidation as Sara stands, straightens her shoulders – even at full height she’ll come up to something like his chin, and Maggie grins because she knows that or his super strength won’t matter – and struts over to the pool table, where James is rubbing his forehead and Winn is trying his best to look anywhere but his best friend as she tells her off-again-he-insists-that-it’s-on-again boyfriend that, for the hundredth time, she hates when he touches her like that in public.

She thinks of Mick and Snart and their first bar brawl together, the way that Leonard grinned at her when she asked him to hold her beer, the cocky confidence they’d had in her as they watched her fight off an entire bar’s worth of men more than twice her size.

She claps Winn and James on the shoulders and gives them both a soft, genuine smile before her eyes blaze again.

“But you know the thing I can’t understand? Why other guys just can’t seem to get the meaning of the word no.”

Kara licks her lips and starts to speak, but one look into Sara’s flashing eyes keeps her quiet. Because he won’t listen to her.

He won’t listen to her, and he won’t listen to Alex, and he won’t listen to Maggie.

He listened to Winn, but only for about a minute.

But maybe he’ll listen to a former member of the League of Assassins?

Kara dares to hope, and Sara dares to breathe, because it was lust at first sight with Supergirl, and it was I-wanna-get-to-know-you-because-god-I-could-probably-fall-in-love-with-the-light-in-your-darkness with Kara.

Her boyfriend straightens up and starts to speak, starts to rage, starts to twist words into weapons that will keep Kara his.

Sara winds up, rotates her hips, and decks him clean onto the ground before he gets the chance.

James oofs and Winn puts his hand over his mouth and Kara gapes and Sara stares down at him with fists on her hips and death in her voice.

“The lady told you she doesn’t like when you touch her like that in public. So you know what you’re gonna do, since you can’t seem to stop yourself? You’re gonna leave. Now. Because you think the DEO teaches you a lot of different ways to kill people? I can do it a lot slower than Alex Danvers can.”
“That… sounded dirty,” Winn mutters, and Sara tries her best not to smirk when James backhands him lightly on the arm as Maggie – coming over to stand behind Kara with Alex – snorts.

Kara’s boyfriend – ex, soon, Sara’s hoping, they’re all hoping, hell, Kara’s hoping – tries to object again, but Alex, Maggie, James, and Winn all turn to him with crossed arms and stony expressions. Kara’s lips part and she takes a step toward Sara, like she wants to collapse into her arms and just might if she lets herself.

“I’ve said it before, and I’m saying it again for the last time – it’s over. We’re over. We never should have even started. Sara’s right, just… just leave.”

Sara’s pulse quickens in her neck at the way Kara’s tongue wraps around her name, but she keeps her hands – and her thoughts, and her wants – to herself as she watches, as they all watch, the prince of Daxam stomp his disbelieving way out of the bar.

Brian applauds from a side-table, and Alex, Maggie, and Kara all call out at the same time.

“No one asked you, Brian.”

“Hush, Brian.”

“Don’t you have your own life to be living, Brian?”

Sara puts a tentative arm out toward Kara, and Kara leans into the touch. Maggie nudges Alex and Alex’s eyes fly wide, and Sara imagines a potential shovel talk in her near future.

She gulps, clears her throat imperceptibly, and forces words out of her throat.

“You okay?”

Kara takes a long, long moment of leaning back into Sara and reaching out for Alex’s hand to answer. “No. But I’ve got my family. So I will be.”

Sara swallows quietly and Maggie catches her eye with a smile. She knows exactly what the detective is thinking.

See? You’re family, after all. I didn’t expect it either. But isn’t it amazing?

And yes. Yes, it is.
Chapter Summary

anonymous asked:

Okay but have we discussed Adrian and Maggie walking into their apartment and Alex is in a bad place and it's the first time Adrian has seen her that way and Maggie is amazing with her because when is she not?! And Ade realises how healthy communication works and please may you write this it would mean the world?

She forgot Adrian’s coming over tonight.

Forgot because she’s desperate for the bottom of a bottle but Maggie doesn’t keep alcohol in her apartment anymore, and Maggie believes in her, and Kara believes in her, Kara, Kara, Kara.

Kara, who’s on a fact-finding mission with J’onn at the Fortress of Solitude.

So instead of being face-down in a bottle, Alex is face down on Maggie’s couch, just sprawled.

Sprawled and utterly depressed and utterly unable to move.

Almost unable to breathe.

Waiting for Maggie to come home.

Waiting to be able to breathe again.

Her heart leaps – but it feels distant from her body, like she’s hovering over herself, watching herself, not really feeling anything except numb pain, numb agony, numb restlessness and worthlessness – when she hears rustling in the hallway outside.

Maggie.

But she panics because a voice rises alongside Maggie’s footsteps, and Alex remembers.

Remembers that Adrian’s coming over for dinner tonight, that she was supposed to tutor him in physics again tonight, that she was supposed to be put together, on top of things, efficient, Stanford-grad, smart, collected.

Not sprawled face down on the couch, unable to move because the gravity of her pain is stronger than the gravity of the sun.

She scrambles and she jolts and she tries to arrange her body, her face, her brain, into a space that fits the laughter she hears as Maggie’s key scrapes into the lock.

“Oh come on, it wasn’t even like that, Maggie – “

“Oh sure it wasn’t Ade, because you didn’t have a crush on that girl at all – “
“Oh.”

“What – oh. Oh. Alex – “

“Hi guys! Sorry, I forgot to start dinner, I just got home and – “

The laughter freezes on Adrian’s face as he turns to Maggie, because Alex’s eyes are wild, her voice is strained, her body is tense. Her body is about to break.

“Alex, hey, it’s fine. It’s fine, sit… sit down, come on.”

“No, Maggie, everything’s fine, hi Adrian, let’s – “

“Alex.”

“Maggie.”

“Alex. You don’t have to… you don’t have to perform for me.”

“Yeah, Alex, I can leave, you’re allowed to take care of yourself, it’s cool – “

“No, Adrian, I promised I’d tutor you, I – “ Alex’s voice cracks and her knees give because sometimes, sometimes, people being understanding, being caring, is the thing that breaks her hardest.

Because, aside from Kara, it’s the thing she’s been least used to in her life, and now it just surrounds her and she…

She’s in Maggie’s arms and Maggie is cradling her head into her chest and she’s kissing her hair and she’s whispering that it’s okay, it’s okay, come sit down, babygirl, I’ve got you, I’m here, it’s okay, and Adrian is bringing her a glass of water and sitting quietly on the floor because Alex grabs at his sleeve when he tries to leave, so he waits with water in hand and he stares down at the floor and he’s never seen Alex anything but perfectly composed before.

“Did something happen, sweetie?” Maggie’s asking her gently, lifting her chin gently so their eyes meet, and Adrian lifts his own head to watch, because he knows depression, he knows anxiety, he knows breakdowns, but he’s never known a romantic partner to hold it so beautifully, so patiently, so lovingly, before.

Alex shakes her head and her bottom lip wobbles and Maggie nods and draws Alex’s head back into her chest.

“That’s okay, Al. There doesn’t always have to be a reason. It’s okay. I promise you it’s okay. You’re okay.”

“I’m sorry,” Alex gasps. “Adrian, I’m sorry, you shouldn’t have to – “

“Al,” Maggie interrupts her softly, carefully, lovingly. “Adrian cares about you. Just like I do. I mean, not exactly like I do, don’t get any ideas, kid, she’s my woman.” Adrian grins and even Alex laughs softly. “He cares about you, and you’re important. You’re important, and you deserve an evening of us taking care of you, if that’s what you need.”

“Yeah. Fuck physics. We can watch sci fi all night – that counts as physics, right?”

Alex turns her face to rest on Maggie’s shoulder and looks down at Adrian, accepting the water glass he holds out to her with wide eyes.
“I’m sorry, Adrian, you just caught me at a… bad time.”

“Hey, I… it’s like Maggie said. I care about you, and…” He looks at Maggie, and she nods softly at him, love shining in her eyes. “And I get it. That whole depression, can’t get up, can’t breathe, but shit other people are here so I have to act natural thing. It’s so hard. But it’s like Maggie said, I don’t want you to have to act around me. If you’re comfortable. You can just be sad. That’s okay. If you like blankets and Netflix and food, I know where Maggie keeps her softest blankets and you can pick the show and I’ll make you both the best dinner you’ve ever had. And if you want me to leave so you can be alone, or alone with Maggie, I can do that too. But if you want me to stay, I… it’s okay if you’re just sad. You’re allowed to be sad. We’re here for you. Whatever you need. Right Maggie?”

And Maggie’s crying now, because how did she get this lucky? She reaches down for his face and pulls him close to her and kisses his cheek for a long, long moment.

“So spiky,” she mumbles when she pulls back, and he grins proudly and sits up straighter. “My little boy becoming a man. And he’s right, Alex. Everything he said. He’s absolutely right.”

Alex smiles through drying tears watching them, her breathing coming slightly easier now.

Gravity, agony, numbed pain that feels like it might never end is still tugging at her, but now? Now it can tug all it wants, and she doesn’t have to hold herself up, because her girlfriend and their might-as-well-be-son and the texts she hears pouring in from her sister?

They’ll keep her steady. They’ll keep her safe.

They’ll keep her loved.

Chapter Summary

anonymous asked:

Hey there, I hate to bother you but life is pretty hellish for me right now and praise kink Alex is really keeping me going, any chance we could get a lil bit more?

It’s one of those nights.

One of those nights when Alex is restless, reckless. One of those nights when Alex feels worthless. When Alex wants a drink.

When Alex wants nothing more than to lose herself in Maggie’s bed, underneath Maggie’s body, inside Maggie’s heated breath and even hotter words.

One of those nights when Alex needs to be reminded that she is worth a damn, that she is not just wanted, but fiercely, desperately, desired. Needed.

One of those nights when cuddling and pillow forts and laughing and exchanging stories about Pam from HR and Brian at the bar and their college crushes just won’t cut it.

One of those nights when she needs to be as reckless as she feels, so she can feel more worth it than she thinks she is.

Maggie knows. Maggie always knows.

Knows from the feverish look in Alex’s eyes when she kisses her; knows from the way she surrenders to Maggie taking the lead, the way her strong body goes pliant under Maggie’s touch, the way she whines and whimpers and begs.

“Bedroom?” Maggie asks, because she knows, but she needs to be as certain as possible, and she is when Alex nods eagerly, desperately, hungrily.

Maggie knows how she wants it when Alex stops next to the bed, tentative and breathless, turning and looking at Maggie, waiting. Waiting for orders.

“I want you to strip for me, Alex,” Maggie tells her, softly, and Alex bites down a whimper.

“Understood,” she breathes, and it’s Maggie’s turn to bite down a groan.

She watches carefully as Alex undresses – never, ever breaking eye contact, even as she bends to slip off her pants, her thong – and when she’s standing naked and open and vulnerable, waiting for Maggie’s next move, Maggie needs to make sure, again.

“Color, Ally?”

“Green,” is her soft reply, and Maggie nods slowly, surveying Alex’s body with nothing short of
“Be a good girl and lay down for me,” she asks, and Alex complies readily, with another soft understood.

“Spread your legs.”

Alex can’t control her whimpering, now, and she opens her legs for Maggie, trembling with need to be taken, and to be taken care of.

“God, Alex, you’re perfect. You know that?” Maggie kneels at the edge of the bed and kisses her feet, her shins, her knees, her thighs.

She punctuates each kiss, each lick, each soft nip, with praise for the woman who deserves it more than anyone but has always gotten it less than anyone.

“You are so brilliant, Alex.”

“I’ve never seen anyone as gorgeous as the woman laying underneath me right now, babe.”

“I am so lucky to be with you, Ally. You are so damn perfect.”

Alex pants and Alex sighs and tears sting Alex’s eyes and she tangles her fingers in Maggie’s hair and begs for more, begs to be taken completely, please please please, I’m yours Maggie, please make me yours.

And Maggie does.

“God, you taste amazing, you know that, Alex. My amazing woman.”

“Alex Danvers, you are so fucking wet for me. Be a good girl and tell me what you want next.”

“That’s right babe, you’re moving so good for me, my perfect girl.”

“Oh Alex, you like when I stretch you out like this? Yeah? Be a good girl and show me how much you like it, babygirl.”

“I love having your nipples in my mouth, you know that, babe? They get so damn hard under my tongue, it’s so hot, Alex. You’re so hot.”

“Your body is so fucking perfect. Reflects what’s on the inside, huh?”

“You wanna be a good girl and cum all around my fingers, Ally? Let me feel you tight and pulsing for me, there’s my good girl.”

“Mine, Alex Danvers. All mine.”

Alex screams her throat raw on Maggie’s name, on filthy strings of curses she didn’t realize she knew until Maggie started whispering in her ears, started talking her into sweet oblivion, perfect ecstasy.

“I’m yours, Maggie. Yours,” she whispers when she comes down from her high, from her waves, from her thoroughly wrecked release.

“And I’m yours, sweetie. I’m all yours.”
Chapter 294

Chapter Summary

anonymous asked:

We want more of Maggie bottoming

She knows the look the moment Alex walks in the door.

The look that means that Alex wants her.

The look that means that Alex has been thinking about her – about her naked, about her panting, about her whining, about her on her knees, on her stomach, legs spread and lips swollen – all day.

She knows the look, and the look alone is enough to get her completely wrecked.

She tries to keep her cool, to play it smooth.

She tries.

And she utterly fails.

Because when she tries – “Alright there, Danvers? You seem – “ – Alex cuts across the room and, hesitating only long enough to read the eager consent in Maggie’s eyes, kisses her senseless.

And Maggie surrenders immediately.

Surrenders to being surrounded by her girlfriend. Surrenders to Alex’s tongue in her mouth, teeth on her throat, hands up her shirt.

“All good?” Alex growls, and Maggie moans, and Maggie swoons, and Alex reaches a strong arm around the small of her back to keep her up, to keep her flush against her body, as Maggie’s knees nearly give out.

“Bedroom?” she begs, and Alex complies, sweeping her up easily into her arms and kissing her hard, kissing her passionate, kissing her permanent, until she sets her down on the bed and steps back to survey her breathless body.

“Clothes off,” Alex commands, but the way she doesn’t touch her, the way her body doesn’t demand it, makes Maggie feel safe, makes Maggie feel like she can say no, like she can stop at any moment.

But god, god, god, she can’t imagine wanting to stop.

So she strips for Alex.

Strips completely and strips slowly, lifting her hips off the bed to pull down her jeans, her boy shorts, sitting up to unbutton her flannel, to unhook her bra, to take down her hair, keeping her eyes locked on Alex’s face the entire time.

“What do you need, Alex?” she asks, and Alex kneels at the foot of the bed.

“You.” Her voice is full of gravel and her voice is full of reverence and her voice is full of raw, raw need.

“Then take me,” Maggie whispers, and Alex? Alex does.

She takes her soft and she takes her hard. She takes her on her knees and she takes her on her back. She takes her screaming her name and she takes her whimpering in desperate ecstasy.

She kisses her way up and down and across her body, leaving no surface untouched by her lips, her tongue, and – when Maggie whimpers, tangles her fingers in her hair, and begs her please, please, please – her teeth.

She flips Maggie on top of her, holding Maggie’s hips and bending her own knee, planting her heel into the mattress, and encourages Maggie to ride her thigh, to leave her leg soaked with how desperate she is, to cum all over her body, to bottom for her while she’s on top of her, and god, she does, and she does hard and screaming for Alex and Alex reaches up and takes her nipples between her fingers because she knows how sensitive they get when Maggie cums and she screams louder and rides her harder and god, god, she’s still not done with her.

Because all that time grabbing Maggie by the hips, by the ass, pulling her down harder into her so she can get as much pressure from Alex’s thigh as she needed?

Now, Alex needs Maggie’s ass against her clit, and now, Alex asks with her eyes and Maggie pleads yes, yes, yes, so now, Alex flips her over onto her stomach, onto her knees, and gets Maggie’s ass soaked with her own wetness, because god, god, god, topping Maggie Sawyer, watching the muscles in her back ripple like that, watching her hands slam down in ecstasy and grab at the sheets like that, listening to her scream her name into the pillows like that, is the hottest thing Alex Danvers has ever experienced.

That is, until she rasps, “Be a good girl and touch yourself for me, Mags,” and Maggie gasps raggedly and Maggie obeys, bringing both of her hands underneath her body so she can slip her fingers inside herself, so she can pressure her clit with her palm as hard as she needs while Alex pounds her from behind, and that? That makes Alex cum all over her ass, makes Alex cum hard, cum ragged, cum undone, completely and utterly wrecked, and Maggie follows close behind.

“All right,” she whispers, and Alex kisses her way up Maggie’s spine, smoothing her hair away from the base of her neck to kiss every part of her skin she can, covering Maggie’s trembling body gently with her own.

“All good, babe?” Alex makes sure, and Maggie sighs contentedly, her dimples peaking out from her mess of hair, of pillows.

“You’re amazing, Danvers,” she murmurs, voice thick with sex and sleep, and Alex kisses her temple tenderly.

“That’s you, Maggie. You.”

Chapter Summary

anonymous asked:

Pretty pretty please can you write something where Alex and Kara see Maggie when she's on the heavy bag or upset and Kara goes to comfort her but Al's like 'sweetie, I've got this' and it's sweet and comforting and amazing and I've been crying since I woke up this morning please give me something fluffy!

Kara knows something’s wrong the moment she enters the building.

Maggie’s heartbeat is steady, but elevated, hard, and while she’s generally learned to avoid walking into Alex or Maggie’s places – or her own bedroom during game night – when their heartbeats are quick and rapid, Maggie is alone.

She’s alone and loud hip hop that Kara can’t identify is pounding along with a rhythmic thudding.

Kara sighs.

Maggie’s working on her heavy bag.

Normally, Kara wouldn’t give it a second thought – Maggie loves that thing – but she’d had breakfast with James this morning and he’d regaled her with tales of how hard Maggie had just pushed him – and herself – in the gym.

So this probably isn’t her regular workout.

She gives up on the door after it becomes clear that Maggie’s not going to hear it, so she jets around the building and raps, instead, on the living room window.

Maggie’s face – sweat-streaked with focused, furious, intense eyes and messy hair swept off her neck in a high bun – doesn’t change when she sees Kara, and she doesn’t stop bouncing on the balls of her feet.

But she does tug at her gloves with her teeth, and she sheds one to yank the window open for her girlfriend’s little sister.

“Need something, Little Danvers?” she yells over her music, glad she doesn’t have to turn it down because of Kara’s superhearing. Without waiting for an answer, she replaces her glove and goes back to slamming combinations into the bag, working on her breathing and hip rotation with singular focus.

Kara watches her for a long moment.

“How do you do that? Alex says I always drop my left shoulder before I throw a punch, that it gives me away.”
Maggie sighs and gestures Kara in front of her, still weaving up and down on the balls of her feet.

“You shouldn’t have to drop your shoulder because it shouldn’t be up like that to begin with. Keep the tension in your core, not your shoulders.”

She reaches around Kara’s body and hesitates before touching her. Kara nods, suddenly breathless, suddenly shy, and Maggie is somehow both gentle and firm as she shows Kara with a splayed hand on her stomach, how to brace her abs, with gently tapping fingers on her shoulder, prompting her to relax it.

“Good, Little Danvers. Now when you punch, try not to send my bag through the wall, okay?”

Kara grins and pulls her punches, and Maggie surveys her with sharp eyes.

“You seemed pretty in danger of putting it through the wall yourself, Maggie.”

She catches the question in Kara’s voice, and she grunts and shifts Kara by the hips to the side so she can go at the bag again.

“I heard you already had an exhausting one this morning.” There’s no judgment in Kara’s voice, just concern, but Maggie launches a rough roundhouse kick at the bag anyway.

“Our line of work, you can’t train too hard.”

“Actually, you –”

“I’m fine, Kara. What did you need, anyway?”

Kara slips her phone out of her pocket and texts Alex as Maggie launches a new assault on the bag.

“Winn and I are in the mood for pool, and we wondered if you wanted to come.”

“No phone?” Maggie asks without looking at her, and Kara’s heart threatens to break, because she knows her sister’s girlfriend is breaking, but she doesn’t know why.

And her worst nightmare – both of their worst nightmares, she imagines – is not knowing how to help.

“You weren’t answering.” Kara finally reaches over and turns down the music, because her own senses are starting to overload. Maggie opens her mouth to object, but glances at Kara’s face and nods immediately, silently, like she understands without needing an explanation. Because she does.

Kara finds herself hoping that her sister marries this woman.

Maggie keeps her gaze on Kara’s face and her eyes soften somewhat. She stills for the first time since Kara flew in and rips off her gloves with a sigh.

“You ever just… for no reason, everything feels like the world’s ending? Except it’s not actually?”

Kara nods softly, slowly. “This one of those days?”

Maggie just stares at her face for a long moment, like she’s evaluating how much she wants to risk, and before she can decide, Alex’s key scrapes the lock.
One look at Maggie’s somehow both guarded and open face, the sweat pouring down her body, the slow swiveling of the heavy bag, and the concern in Kara’s eyes tells her everything she needs to know.

“Oh sweetie. I got this.” She strides over to Kara, squeezing her hands and kissing her cheek gratefully. “You wanna go get us some takeout?”

“I’ll go to that organic place in Austin, okay?” she tells Maggie, who fights tears and shakes her head, struck silent by the way the Danvers girls just… want to care for her. For some reason she can’t fathom.

“You don’t have to, Little – ”

But Kara’s already kissed her cheek, smiled softly at her sister, and flown back out the window.

Silence rises in her wake, and Maggie goes to put her gloves back on.

“Whoa whoa, okay,” Alex reaches out with gentle hands to stop her. “You don’t have to talk, babe, but you need to be gentler with your body, okay? Can you do that for me?”

Maggie stares at the ground and Alex kisses her forehead.

Maggie backs up.

“I’m all sweaty and gross.”

Maggie sighs and Alex waits until she knows Maggie’s ready for a tiny push.

“One of those days?”

Maggie nods, humiliation written everywhere on her body, and Alex’s heart shatters.

“Well, Kara will be back in a little under an hour. You know what that gives us enough time for?”

“I’m not really up for sex, Danvers.”

Alex pffts. “No! Here, you shower. It’ll help. I’ll warm the towels for you. And I’ll have a surprise waiting when you come out, okay?”

Maggie sighs skeptically, exhaustedly.

“Do you trust me, babe?”

Maggie nods, because if she’s not beating the life out of something, it’s about all she can do.

“Good. So go. Shower.”

She does. She does and she hates every moment of it, especially the parts that make her feel somewhat, somehow, better.

But her throat unsticks and when she steps out of the bathroom in the tank and boxers Alex had slipped in and left for her, she speaks, because she panics.

Because her studio isn’t all that big, yet she can’t see Alex.
Alex, who told her to trust her. And yet she couldn’t see her anywhere.

“Alex.”

“Down here, babe!”

Alex’s voice is muffled and the smile in it, the barely restrained, bursting enthusiasm, is so clear that Maggie’s lips start tilting upward of their own accord.

“Danvers, what—“

Because as she rounds the couch, she finds Alex buried in a fort made, it seems, of every single pillow and blanket Maggie owns.

“It’s the Bad Day Tunnel. Or hole. Or fort. Or burrow. I can’t decide what it should be called. Kara would always call it the Fortress of Sistertude, but I very much don’t want you to be my sister, so I figure we should come up with something else.”

In spite of herself, Maggie plops down in the fort next to Alex, who tosses a blanket over her shoulders and lets her lean into her body.

“What does one do in the Bad Day… thing?” she asks in a monotone, because she’s scared that if she allows any emotion into her voice – like the overwhelming feeling of being cared for, being heard, being seen, that Alex is giving her so perfectly – she’ll break.

“One has a bad day. It’s where you go when you’re extra sad. You can do anything you want in the fort. Drink scotch – don’t worry, the scotch is for you, I brought myself root beer – ” And sure enough, there are bottles and glasses in the center of the fort – “and when Kara gets back, eat food. There can be music and there can be crying and there can be yelling and there can be cuddling, and I brought tissues and your favorite stuffed animals and your phone in case you want to just zone out and scroll through Instagram or something.”

“So basically you made me a depression tent. Where I can be depressed and it’s okay.”

Alex’s eyes fly wide, thinking that Maggie hates it. Thinking that she’s messed up, thinking that she’s hurt her more, offended her, been insensitive to her, not heard her.

“Yes?” Her voice is small and her voice is terrified, but then Maggie’s soft lips are on hers, and it’s one of the softest kisses they’ve ever shared, because Maggie has the energy to beat a heavy bag senseless but she doesn’t have the energy to sustain a passionate kiss, so Alex lets it stay soft, stay gentle, stay tender, stay perfect.

“I love you, Alex,” Maggie whispers into her lips, and Alex swears she won’t cry.

“I love you too, Maggie. However you feel, whenever you feel it.”

They’re both asleep in the depression tent when Kara returns with three heaping bags of takeout, and she smiles and sets the bags down and crawls into the fort, the tent, the safety, with her sister and her future sister-in-law. Alex feels Kara’s warmth and hums happily, shifting in her sleep so Kara can slip onto Maggie’s other side and help Alex hold her safe, hold her steady, hold her loved.

Chapter Summary

anonymous asked:

Not a prompt unless you wanna write it: Sara lance hitting on Alex constantly until she says "if you kiss me I'll never flirt with you again" and she assumes Alex won't do it right? Wrong. Alex spins around and just straight up plants one on her while Maggie and the entire DEO watch Sara splutter, while Alex just struts off leaving multiple turned on agents (including Maggie and Sara because duh)

It’s all in good fun.

Maggie doesn’t mind because I mean hey Danvers, I plan on sticking around, but I can’t be the only hot woman you ever get to flirt with and because it’s Sara, and Sara is kind and Sara is fun and Sara is protective and Sara is deeply respectful of their love and Sara is… well, Sara is hot.

So it’s all in good fun, but Alex?

Alex keeps rebuffing even Sara’s smoothest (and corniest) moves.

At the bar.

Hey, Danvers, I know your sister can shoot lasers out of her eyes, but did you know you can make me wet with yours?

Oh please, Lance, if that’s the line you used on the Queen of France, it must not translate well into English.

In the green room.

Nice maneuver, Alex. Wanna try it out horizontally?

I did last night with Maggie, but nice try, Sara.

In the DEO control room.

Hey Maggie, does she look as good out of that uniform as she does in it?

Even better, Sara.

Good god, can the three of you take this outside? It’s bad enough how loudly you all think, I don’t have to hear it verbalized, too.

And that’s when it happens.

“Well, if you kiss me, we can stop traumatizing J’onn, because I’ll never flirt with you again,” Sara tells her, the smirk on her lips matching the playful one in Alex’s eyes, and Maggie arches an amused eyebrow as Sara turns to head out of the room.

But Alex grabs her arm and Alex spins her around and Alex glances at Maggie and Maggie nods because hell, why not, she’s coming home to her tonight, and Alex kisses Sara hard, kisses Sara hot, kisses Sara with tongue and with fervor.

J’onn groans and Winn trips over himself and Maggie’s grinning jaw is on the floor and Vasquez is resisting the temptation to take her phone out and film it and the only thing that tears Sara’s swooning body away from Alex’s strong arms is the loud clatter of a very flustered, very turned on rookie agent dropping the pile of paperwork he was supposed to be bringing down to Pam.

Alex stares at Sara’s flushed face and swollen lips and heaving chest and spluttering words for a moment before smirking, winking, and strutting out of the room, head high and hips swinging more than they normally would.

“So I…it… damn, Sawyer, your girlfriend can kiss like… does that mean I have to stop flirting with her?”

Maggie grins and watches Alex’s strut, her head tilted and eyes smouldering.

“You know what… I’ll just go… go…. ask her…”

And Maggie rushes off after Alex, fire in her core and a proud smirk on her face.

“You know they were somewhat more well-behaved before you came aboard, Ms. Lance,” J’onn mutters, and Sara winks.

“I can’t help who I am, J’onn,” and he turns away before she can see him grin, because god, he’s going to need to draw up more adoption papers.

Chapter Summary

anonymous asked:

emotional-ish prompt: I've got a few weeks sober and a couple weeks in the program. I like how you write newly sober alex. Could you maybe write maggie going to an open meeting with her. or just like generally just alex doing pretty well in recovery and maggie being her usual supportive self? Thanks!

Alex still hates the whole meeting thing.

She doesn’t talk on the way, and she doesn’t talk there, and she doesn’t say much on the way back, either.

But every single day – sometimes twice a day, those days when J’onn practically forces her downstairs to one of the agent meetings because Jeremiah, because Eliza, because Kara got hurt, because Maggie got hurt, because Winn got hurt, because James got hurt, because J’onn himself got hurt – she makes herself go.

Every single day, sometimes twice a day, Kara drops her off. And every single day, sometimes twice a day, Kara picks her up.

And every single day, sometimes twice a day, Maggie’s waiting there with Kara after.

It becomes a routine.

“How was it?” Kara will ask.

“I want a drink,” is all Alex will say, and Kara will pale as she holds her hand, but Maggie will grin softly, sadly, knowingly.

“You gonna have one, Danvers?” she’ll ask, and Kara will always be awestruck at how gentle, at how loving, at how adoring, the steel-edged detective’s voice gets around Alex.

And that’s where the response varies, and that’s where sister and girlfriend can gauge how Alex is doing.

On the nights that are going to be full of raging and full of misdirected anger and full of begging, she’ll start by answering Maggie with a, “why not, it’s all I’ve been doing for the past few years anyway,” and Kara and Maggie will exchange a soft glance and Kara will take one side and Maggie will take the other and they’ll take her home and they’ll listen and they’ll validate and they’ll hold her when she breaks and they’ll soothe her while she drifts into restless sleep.

On the nights that are going to be full of Kara going home alone because Alex is going to fuck Maggie senseless, is going to fuck Maggie hard, is going to fuck Maggie rough, is going to fill Maggie up with her fingers, fill her own lips with Maggie’s wetness so she doesn’t fill them with bourbon, she’ll start by answering Maggie with a, “not if I can have you instead,” and Maggie will gulp and blush and lick her lips and Kara will groan and adjust her glasses and speed away muttering about some emergency or other.

And on the nights that are going to be full of soft touches and easy laughter and old musicals and prank calling Winn as he’s out on a date with Lyra, she’ll start by answering Maggie with a, “no. No, I’m not. You can be proud of me now,” and Maggie will kiss her softly and Kara will blush and Alex will swoon and they’ll debate which movie to start the evening with the entire way home.

She doesn’t slip up, even though she wants to.

She doesn’t give in, even though she’s burning for it.

She doesn’t let go, except when she’s in Maggie’s arms and nothing can hurt her.

“You know I’m proud of you, Ally.” Maggie whispers one night, a few weeks into Alex’s sobriety, a couple weeks into her program; a couple weeks into what makes DEO training seem easy in retrospect.

“For making you cum five times in as many minutes?” Alex counters, her voice thick with sex and her own orgasms, thick with love and her own release.

Maggie chuckles and splutters, and decides not to point out – not right now, anyway – that Alex is the only woman who’s ever made her splutter. “I didn’t – it wasn’t five min – “

“It kinda was, Sawyer.”

“You timing me, Danvers?”

“I mean – “

“Alex. Seriously. I’m proud of you.”

Alex sighs and turns – Maggie had been holding her, had been kissing the nape of her neck, but she wants to see her eyes, now, wants to watch her face, now – and waits for Maggie to elaborate.

“You’re so gorgeous, Alex,” she whispers, and Alex’s entire being melts. “I…” She strokes Alex’s hair and she kisses her nose and she surprises herself to realize she’s almost crying. “You know, everyone thinks you’re tough because you scare the shit out of Winn and can defeat a team of hit men with a pool stick, and they think you’re strong because you single-handedly blew up an entire Cadmus facility and all that. And they’re right. But you… to me? Those aren’t the reasons you’re strong, Alex. Not the only ones, anyway.”

Alex nearly chokes on her own breath and her eyes widen and her pulse quickens.

“What are the reasons? To you?” she asks, and Maggie hasn’t heard her voice this small since Jeremiah, since ‘babe ride or die includes AA meetings, okay, it’s okay, I’m not going anywhere, you’re perfect, it’s okay.’

Maggie kisses her nose and she kisses her eyes and she stares at her like she’s never seen anything quite as beautiful, because she hasn’t.

“You didn’t have a drink today. And you didn’t have one yesterday, or the day before that, or the day before that. And you’re not going to have one tomorrow, or the day after that, or the day after that. But you know what, Alex? If you did? You’d just fight harder, because that’s how strong you are, and you’d get back here all over again. Because you’re that powerful. Because you let Kara take care of you. Because you let me take care of you, and J’onn and James and Winn. Those things are the strong ones, Alex. Not just you being what everyone else needs. You letting people be what you need. That’s… you’re amazing, Alex. You’re amazing, and I’m so proud of you, I… I’m so proud to be yours.”

Alex blinks out tears and quirks out a soft grin and kisses Maggie’s still slightly swollen lips gently.

“Mine, huh?”

“It’s called being cherished, get used to it, Danvers.”

Chapter Summary

anonymous asked:

I had to get teeth pulled yesterday and i get your not taking prompts so i feel really bad for asking but i could really use a fic where alex or maggie gets teeth pulled and its just funny because laughing gas and novicane

Of course she’s avoided going to the dentist.

“I have worlds to save and a superhero little sister to take care of, Kara, I don’t have time to let some stranger poke around in my mouth with sharp implements.”

But Kara pouts, and Alex has a acquired a limited immunity to it, but when Maggie joins in with a “Danvers, you were in so much pain last night we had to stop while you – “, Alex yelps and blunes and “alright, alright, alright, I’ll go to the damn dentist.”

Of course her wisdom teeth are impacted.

Of course they are.

Maggie holds her hand even though Alex mutters something about being a grown woman, but Kara just laughs gently and spills the secret of how much Alex hates, hates, hates needles.

Alex would normally mind, but it’s Maggie; it’s Maggie, and Kara knows this, and sure enough, Maggie doesn’t laugh – she hates needles, too – and she doesn’t tease. She just kisses the inside of Alex’s arm, the underside of her wrist, gives her hand to Kara, and tells her she’ll be right back.

Turns out she’s asked if they can give Alex gas before they give her any needles, and she’s given them death glares when they tell her they usually only do that for children, and they’ve acquiesced and Alex?

Alex is bad enough at being taken care of normally, but coming out from under laughing gas while on novocaine? She’s an absolute terror.

“Alex, hey. Maggie’s in the waiting room, do you want her to come in, too?”

“Kara! Heyyyyy. You know those glasses don’t make you look all that much different. Maggie knew. Maggie’s so smart. Isn’t she smart, Kara? And pretty? Isn’t she so pretty? Hehe, my girlfriend. Isn’t it funny that she’s so smart and she’s so pretty and she’s so my girlfriend? And your glasses. Hehe. People are stupid.”

Kara fetches Maggie immediately.

“Hey soldier, how you holding up?”
“Hey, Kara look! It’s my girlfriend! You know I was just talking about you. I mean, I think I was. Was I, Kara? It’s… did they do the thing yet? Oh, hey, there’s all this stuff in my mouth… That was fast, wasn’t that fast? Hey, Maggie, you know if you kissed me right now I probably wouldn’t feel it? How weird is that? Not feeling your kiss? Because your kisses are amazing, I’ve never – “

“Well, I’ll leave you two alone – “

“No, little sis, stayyyyy! Stay, we won’t make out, Maggie doesn’t kiss me when I’m not sober, she’s annoying like that, all consenty and stuff – “

Maggie kisses her forehead and Alex preens and her gauze slips out of her mouth and Maggie chuckles as Alex splutters and she replaces it tenderly with a fresh one. Kara’s heart melts and Alex’s heart swells.

“Oh heyyy, I get to have smoothies, right?”

“Yes, babe, I got you all kinds of – “

“Ugh, is it vegan ice cream? Because I… it… gross…”

Kara and Maggie exchange smirks as Alex passes out. It’s another half hour or so before she wakes up again, before she’s cleared to be taken out of the recovery room and into Maggie’s car home.

“Ally, it’s okay, you’ve gotta go slow – “

So naturally, Alex tries to sprint down the hallway.

Kara and Maggie both wonder when they became the parents instead of Alex and Maggie.

In the car – another ordeal, because Alex is exhausted and high and rebellious all at the same time, and keeps trying to get into the driver’s seat, something about Maggie’s legs not being long enough to reach the gas pedals – Kara pulls Alex’s head into her lap in the back seat and strokes her hair until she falls back to sleep.

Maggie adjusts the rear view mirror before she pulls out of the parking space so she can take a long glance at her Danvers girls, a soft smile on her face and an unfamiliar warmth in her heart.

She’s not sure, but she thinks the warmth might be something like family.

Chapter Summary

anonymous asked:

ok, but if you're taking prompts again could we have ace!alex and hardcore kinky cuddle porn? with alex restrained well maggie gives her a deep massage, the kind that hurts at first but it's a good hurt? with lots of kisses and caresses and some sweet smelling lotion or oil? and lots of praise kink? (i might be a touch-starved ace baby gay, i won't confirm or deny...)

Maggie watches her while she works and she squints and she tilts her head and she bites the inside of her cheek, a habit she’s recently picked up from her girlfriend.

“You’re tense, Danvers,” she observes softly, wanting Alex to ask for it, not wanting to suggest it, because she knows Alex is still struggling with not trying to be overly accommodating, still struggling with not trying to be the ‘perfect girlfriend.’ Especially since she's come out as ace.

Alex looks up at Maggie over her glasses and kneads her hand into her own shoulder. “Yeah, well, you know. Long day at the lab bench, long night with med journals. Sometimes I think the days getting beaten around in the field are easier on my body.”

Maggie grins and nods, relieved to finally be with someone who not only gets it, gets her, but feels it, too. Because no one Maggie’s ever been with has understood what Alex just said; but Maggie feels it, too, every single day her life isn’t on the line.

She thinks vaguely that they both might want to bring that up in therapy, but she pushes the thought to the side for now, because Alex is shifting, and Alex is stewing in nervous thought.

“Maggie, would you… would you want to give me a massage?”

Maggie gulps and licks her lips and nods and beams, because god is she proud of Alex for asking for what she wants, asking for what she needs.

“I would love absolutely nothing more. Roll over, Danvers.”

Alex flushes and tosses the journals she has scattered across the bed to the floor and lays on her stomach eagerly. Maggie takes a long, slow, deep breath staring at her girlfriend, at her perfect body, at her perfect openness, at her perfect… god, everything.

“Tie me up?” Alex asks, her voice small but full and low and so, so, so damn hot.

“Tie you up to… to give you a massage?” Maggie gulps, and Alex buries her face in the pillow.

“I’m sorry, it’s weird, forget it, I – ”

“No no no no no, Alex, no. I… it’s not weird at all, it’s just… hell, Alex, it’s really hot, I was just clarifying, I promise, just clarifying.”

“So you want to, then?”

“Want to tie the most gorgeous woman I’ve ever seen up so I can give her the deepest, most amazing massage she’s ever had? What do you think, Danvers?”

Alex blushes and pokes her face out from where she’s buried it in the pillow.
“I think you’re saying you like me.”

Maggie grins and kisses her temple, kisses her cheek, and Alex turns so she can kiss her lips, and they both sigh deeply into the kiss, Alex opening her lips and Maggie trying not to moan and failing in a strangled way that makes Alex smile, that makes Alex giggle, that makes Alex want more.

Maggie complies, bringing her lips down the side of Alex’s jawline, her neck, her shoulder blades.
“You’re so beautiful, Alex.”

Alex preens and Maggie grins, slipping away from Alex’s body. Alex whines and reaches behind her in protest. Maggie catches her hand and kisses each knuckle.

“Shhh, sweetie, I’m just getting some things I need to give you a proper massage, okay? I’ll be right back. I promise.”

Alex sighs in mock disapproval and Maggie can’t help but lean down to kiss her lips again. Alex goes to deepen it and Maggie pulls back, dimples on full display.
“You want this massage or not, Danvers?”

Alex concedes and Maggie smooths her hair away from the nape of her neck and kisses her gently.

She fiddles with her phone for a moment until she finds her playlist of the most calming music from FFX, and Yuna’s Theme starts up on her speakers. Alex hums in contentment and Maggie can’t help but lean down and kiss her again until she pads into the bathroom to collect what she needs.

True to her word, she comes right back, armed with lavender scented massage candles and sticks of incense scented the same. Alex keeps her eyes closed as she listens to Maggie padding around the bedroom, the sound of a lighter striking up and the scent of woody, sweet spice starting to fill her senses.

“Do you wanna take your clothes off, Ally?” Maggie asks, and Alex smiles, because she knows it’s a genuine question, not a hint or subtle command.

And she does, taking her time shirking out of her sweatshirt and pajama pants, knowing exactly what that kind of thing does to Maggie and relishing every second of it.

Maggie’s breath goes ragged at the sight of Alex wearing nothing but her glasses, laying on her stomach, trusting and waiting and open for her.

“You still want…?” she confirms, and Alex grins, lifting her hands above her head and raising her wrists for Maggie to tie them with the bondage rope they’ve invested in.
“Too tight?” she asks, and Alex hums and shakes her head. Maggie straddles her and leans down to kiss her bound hands before shifting back down her body, settling around her ass, and she runs her fingertips up and down Alex’s back lightly while she waits for the massage candle to melt enough wax to use.

Alex hisses when Maggie drips the wax onto her shoulders, and Maggie pulls back, wipes it up with her hands rapidly.

“I’m sorry, was it too hot? I should’ve waited – “

“No no, don’t stop, it just… your touch, the… the heat… it feels amazing.”

Maggie takes a deep breath and settles herself, starting by digging the pads of her thumbs into Alex’s knotted shoulders, working the waxy lotion into Alex’s skin, the heat into her muscles, and Alex moans loudly, tugging at her rope.

She answers Maggie’s unspoken question, obvious hesitation.

“Please don’t stop.”

So she doesn’t.

She digs her thumbs, her palms, her knuckles, into every one of Alex’s tightest muscles, letting the wax and the music and the incense surround them both as Alex moans with the slight pain of the release, moans and whispers for Maggie – always scared of hurting her – to please keep going, right there, just like that.

Her shoulders, her lower back, that spot in her midback that she’d strained when she’d gone rogue the other week. Maggie traces her muscles with nothing short of reverence, with nothing short of intimate knowledge of how Alex holds her body, of how Alex keeps her tension. She digs into exactly the right spots, circles around exactly the right places, making Alex moan and arch her body and beg for more of Maggie’s touch, more of Maggie’s hands, more of Maggie’s love.

And when Maggie shifts lower, Alex moans louder, because Maggie is working the tension out of her ass, out of her hamstrings, her calves, her feet, leaving a trail of soft kisses all along the path hands trace, the path her hands carve, the path her hands memorize.

“That feel good, Danvers?” she asks, and she smiles when Alex’s affirmative response is less comprised of actual words than of sighs and moans and arching of her body to get more of Maggie’s touch.

“Your hands must be tired, babe,” Alex murmurs after a long while, after the incense has burned itself out and Maggie’s crawled her way back up Alex’s body to work on her bound arms, her ragged breath in Alex’s ear as she kisses her neck, licks at her earlobe.

“They’re not nearly as tired as you are beautiful, so…”

Alex chuckles, her voice full of relaxed ecstasy that she’s never really understood before.

“Come hold me?” she asks, and Maggie immediately goes to untie her hands, kissing the spots Alex had made a bit pink with her writhing under Maggie’s touch.

“I’ll always hold you, Alex. Okay?”

“I can get used to that.”

Chapter Summary

The Yoga Class

She lies when Maggie asks if it was really that bad and she says yes.

She lies, but it’s okay, because Maggie knows she’s lying.

She knows because Alex knows that Maggie saw the way her jaw was on the floor the whole. Entire. Time.

The whole entire time, because the things Maggie can do with her body?

How she can hold herself up with only her hands, how she can go from stiff body slams on the job to graceful, steady, peaceful movements on that adorable pink mat of hers? (She’d laughed when Alex had insisted on getting a blue one for herself – to match – and she’d kissed her and she’d looked like she was in love.)

True, there were parts Alex hated.

Like the parts where she wasn’t the best one in the class.

Like the parts where the instructor had welcomed her as a newcomer, and the only okay part about that was the way Maggie had reached over and touched her arm and beamed because she was hers, hers, hers.

“Why do you do this stuff anyway, Mags? Isn’t it too… calm for you? Don’t you love your heavy bag?”

“I do, Danvers, but if I only got my release through my heavy bag, I’d just kind of stay angry all the time.”

“And this… breathy stuff… helps you not be angry all the time?”

“How do you do this stuff anyway, Mags? Isn’t it too… calm for you? Don’t you love your heavy bag?”

“I do, Danvers, but if I only got my release through my heavy bag, I’d just kind of stay angry all the time.”

“And this… breathy stuff… helps you not be angry all the time?”

“Some days,” Maggie had explained, and Alex could kind of see why.

Because, though she’ll never admit it, she found that it was kind of comforting – and kind of hot, okay, very hot – to watch Maggie move so peacefully, to watch the way her eyes fluttered closed.

Even if it earned her a gentle, smiling reprimand from the instructor, who softly reminded her to focus on her own practice for now.

Alex refrained from retorting that Maggie was her practice.

Because part of her? Part of her wanted that. Wanted to be like that. Like Maggie.

Because she admires the crap out of her, and damn, it would be kind of nice to be just as flexible as her girlfriend.

It would be… helpful.

In sting ops and such.

And in bed.

Her practice. Right. Focus on her practice.

And when she tried – when she took inspiration from Maggie’s soft breathing, from the way she wasn’t embarrassed to keep her eyes closed in this room, wasn’t scared, wasn’t guarded, like she was everywhere else in public spaces, and even alone together sometimes – Alex could see where this stuff was… relaxing.

Not to mention a little physically challenging.

Okay, a lot physically challenging.

Alex was used to motion. She wasn’t used to stillness.

And stillness? Stillness can be so much harder.

Stillness can require so much more strength.

The kind of strength she sees in Maggie. The kind of strength that makes her love her even more.

The kind of strength she wasn’t to develop in herself.

So she lies when Maggie asks if it was really that bad, because it’s funny and because they love teasing each other and because she’s still Alex Danvers, and she has a reputation to uphold, after all.

But really? She can’t find the words to tell her. Not yet.

How much she’s inspired by her.

How in awe of her she is.

She’ll find the words, one day.

But today? Laughing and nudging each other and flirting and teasing in the rain, neither of them caring enough to take their umbrellas out of Maggie’s gym bag, because god does everything, including the mist on their skin, feel perfect right now?

Today, this minute?

She’s got Maggie’s smile, and Maggie’s got hers, and that’s enough for now.

Chapter Summary

Maggie’ POV Running into Emily

No one makes her giggle.

Not anymore, anyway.

But Alex Danvers?

A league of her own.

So she finds herself practically squeaking in the middle of the street, because Alex is just… Alex is everything.

And here she is, slinking her hand through Maggie’s arm, calling them that couple, and it’s perfect, and Maggie says as much, because it is perfect, because Alex is perfect, but then her stomach drops, and nothing, nothing, nothing is perfect anymore.

“Emily?” she calls, because she can’t help it, because it was years ago, but it was for five years years ago, and because god, god, god, she knew they were lesbians in rain boots and carrying yoga mats but she didn’t realize they signed up to be on an episode of The flipping L Word.

“Maggie,” is all she says, and she remembers that look, she remembers that voice, like it was yesterday, like everything was yesterday.

“Hiiii.”

“Uh – “ Emily starts, and Maggie starts at the same time.

“Are – are you, um, back in town?” Because she’d only left because of Maggie.

Only left because of those stupid, drunken nights, those stupid, fucked up mistakes.

Those stupid, reckless blunders – because Emily was starting to talk about getting married, because Emily was starting to talk about Maggie being the one, and no, no, no, that couldn’t happen because no, no, no, it couldn’t be real, it was too good to be true, how could it ever be true, she’s just a fucked up kid from nowhere Nebraska with more scar tissue than skin – that ruined everything, everything, everything.

Just like she always does.

“Yeah. Yeah, just for the week. I’m staying at the Baldwin.”

Of fucking course she’s staying at the Baldwin.

The Baldwin, where Maggie had taken those women, during that awful week, that stupid week, that self-destructive, hey-baby-my-girlfriend’s-out-of-town week, to crash, to drink, to fuck away the terror of being loved, because she’d only leave in the end anyway, because everyone did.

Might as well speed it along.

Or at least get some release out of it.

Of course she’s staying at the fucking Baldwin.

“Oh. Okay.” She forces a smile and she closes her mouth and she stares, because she doesn’t deserve to be happy, and Emily was right, she was right, and she was right to take that little dig, that little reminder that you cheated, that you’re a terrible person, that you could never be happy because you don’t know what happiness actually feels like, because I was always at arms length all these years, wasn’t I, you don’t deserve to be happy because hell, Maggie, you don’t even want to be.

“Hi! I’m Alex.”

Alex’s voice makes her jump slightly, and the pit in her stomach grows. Something she didn’t know was possible.

“Oh, I’m sorry. This is my – my girlfriend, Alex.”

Her voice softens when she says her name, because her name is her only anchor right now.

Her name is her only anchor.

Period.

But it shouldn’t be. It shouldn’t be because god, god, god, she doesn’t deserve it.

And she certainly doesn’t deserve Emily seeing the way Maggie’s found herself another white girl with kind of red hair, the way she knows they look perfect together. Emily doesn’t deserve that.

And Maggie doesn’t deserve an anchor.

“I’m Emily, nice to meet you.”

Maggie knows that tone, even after all these years; that tone, that face. The rushedness of her words, the curtness, but the politeness.

Knows she’s in pain.

And god, she thought she couldn’t hate herself more than she already did, but she can still stir that up in Emily, and god, what if one day she does that to Alex?

No.

Not to Alex.

It was years ago. She was a kid. She was… she has no excuse.

But not to Alex.

“We used to date,” she tosses up her hand, because what else is there to say, and from Alex’s “oh” and little hand clap, she knows Alex already knew, knows Alex already detected, but hearing it out loud is probably giving her a pit in her stomach something akin to what’s roiling in Maggie’s.

Another thing to hate herself for.

“A lotta years.”

Three years, about eight months, give or take a couple of weeks.

“Yeah.”

Emily’s eyes rake her body and she remembers the sex they had – the wild, unrestrained, loud, rough sex, in the Baldwin, because Emily wanted her to fuck her one last time, wanted her to fuck her like she’d fucked those other girls, where she’d fucked those other girls – and she knows, she knows, that Emily’s thinking about it, too.

Knows because of the way her voice drops like it always had when she was thinking about sex when she says, “We should catch up sometime.”

Maggie almost splutters, but manages not to. “Sure, yeah. That would – that would be good. Sometime.”

The ground. Alex. Her anchor.

Doesn’t deserve an anchor.

The ground again.

Back to Emily’s face. Emily’s face that had been tear-stained and angry the last time she’d seen it, when she’d begged for forgiveness, knowing she didn’t deserve it, not knowing if she really even wanted it.

“I should go. Let you guys get up to whatever you’ve got going on, but it was really good to see you.”

“You too,” Maggie answers, a little too quickly. A little too quickly because god, this hurts.

“Uh, nice to meet you.”

“Nice to meet you, yeah.”

She turns to Alex – oh, Alex, Alex, still playing with her hands, because she doesn’t know what else to do with them when they’re not around Maggie’s body, when they’re not holding a gun – and she starts walking away, because she needs scotch. Preferably sooner than later.

But Alex stops her. “What about tonight?”

“Huh?”

“What, she wants to catch up, we don’t have any plans.”

Maggie’s stomach sinks again, and her heart starts racing, and now she thinks she needs a Klonopin instead of a scotch.

“No, I can’t, come on, it’s cold – “
“Hey, do you see how cool I’m being about that?” She can’t help but smile, because this nerd. This nerd.

She doesn’t deserve this nerd.

“I mean, come on.”

She doesn’t think. She just does.

“Emily. Do you wanna have dinner with us tonight?”

A long pause, during which Maggie wants to disappear into the wet concrete.

“Uh, yeah. Sure. I have the same email, just… let me know where.”

Maggie nearly throws up at the mention of the same email – the same email that they’d sent countless letters from, countless dirty pictures, countless everything – but she knows she deserves it.

She couldn’t be more grateful when Alex answers for her.

“We will.”

“Okay.”

Alex puts her arm around her as they turn again. “See, that wasn’t so bad.”

It was, it was, it was.

But Alex had said “we.” We. Us. Alex and Maggie.

She isn’t going anywhere.

And Maggie isn’t going to fuck this up.

Not again.

Even if she doesn’t deserve the woman kissing her cheek as they walk, asking what kind of food Emily likes, and where she thinks they should go tonight.

Even if she doesn’t deserve her at all.

Chapter Summary

Waiting for Emily (Sanvers at Dinner)

Maggie doesn’t say much, and Alex lets her stew.

She lets her because she knows Maggie isn’t into the whole talking thing anyway.

She lets her because Maggie changed three separate times before settling on one of Alex’s sweaters, and she lets her because she’s been off all day, and she lets her because she looks at the door every single time it opens with equal parts relief and terror when it’s not Emily.

And Alex isn’t used to seeing Maggie terrified.

Not even when they’re fighting back-to-back against assassins who’d like to see them both skewered. (Alex being held at gun point is the exception. She still has nightmares about how scared Maggie had looked.)

But she looks scared, tonight, and so Alex lets her stew.

She lets her stew while she feeds her small talk about her and J’onn’s latest training sessions with Winn, “because honestly that boy needs to be able to do more than wield a stapler at someone if he’s gonna be out in the field,” about Pam from HR’s latest scoop on whether Theresa from accounting is leaning in the sapphic direction, about Kara’s latest health-food kick with Lena.

The benign topics are a nice break from the heaviness of their days, their lines of work; the benign topics make Maggie crack small smiles, make Maggie hold Alex’s hand instead of wringing her own.

“You look absolutely beautiful, you know,” Alex tells her at some point, because lord almighty, she does.

Maggie just shakes her head, and Alex squints.

But she lets it go. For now.

She doesn’t ask. For now.

Because Maggie doesn’t talk until she’s ready.

And Alex isn’t going to push.

For now.

But she might, soon.

Because Maggie looks like she might break, soon.
And Alex cares too much for her – loves her too much – to let that happen.

So she lets her sit and she lets her stew and she lets her listen to Alex’s DEO gossip until it’s forty-five minutes later and Maggie and Emily apparently used to fight about Emily’s distaste for parking regulations and Alex hates her, she hates her, she hates her, because who tells someone they don’t deserve to be happy?

She tries to tell her on the drive home.

“You know she was wrong, Maggie. Don’t you?”

“Alex, I told you, it’s whatever, it – “

“Danvers. Drop it. Please.”

Alex takes a deep breath and Alex does. For now.

For now.

For now.
“Look, Alex, I just wanna be alone, okay? It’s not… it’s not you, I just… I just need to be alone.”

Alex swallows rage and Alex swallows the desire to scoop Maggie into her arms and never let her go, ever. To kiss her every scar and to extract her every pain.

But she needs to listen better.

Because Maggie needs to be heard.

So Alex hears, and Alex drops her off, and Alex kisses her good night, and tells her to call if she changes her mind.

She knows she won’t.

She thinks about heading home herself for about .38 seconds. But she’s driving to the Baldwin before she even consciously decides to.

She leans on a pole and she checks her watch and she tries some of those breathing exercises from this morning to keep her somewhat calm, to keep her able to talk instead of punch, to keep her able to speak instead of scream.

Even though her blood boils when she sees her. Even though her body is running through all one hundred six ways she knows how to kill someone with her bare hands.

“Emily.”

God is she suddenly grateful for those damn yoga breathing exercises.

“Alex, right?”

“Yeah. I wanted to come… see you. I wanted to talk to you, just to see if…”

She takes a step closer and she’s almost grateful when Emily starts speaking, because she might have just punched her instead of finishing her sentence.

“Look, if this is about missing dinner – “

“Why didn’t you show up?” Her voice is low and her voice is death, and she can’t sink her fists into Maggie’s father, so Emily will have to do. For now.

“I should’ve, but… the whole situation, it just brought up too many painful memories.”

“What about Maggie? All the things you said to her back then, that wasn’t painful?” She wants to say more. She wants to say so much more. Do so much more.

She doesn’t, because she doesn’t want to make things worse for Maggie. But god, god, god, does she want to.

“Everything that I said to her, she had coming.”

“She dedicated five years of her life to you, and you bailed on her.” Her voice feels like it does before she splits her knuckles on prisoner’s faces, before she drops bombs that blow up buildings she’s still standing in.

“I bailed on her? Seriously, that’s – that’s what she told you? – she cheated on me.”

The bottom drops out of Alex’s stomach and the fight goes out of her gut.

And suddenly she’s picturing Maggie in bed with Emily, in bed with Darla, hell, in bed with her yoga instructor, naked and writhing, screaming someone else’s name.

Someone’s name that isn’t hers.

She gulps and she hates herself because she’s done it again.

Caused someone pain. Again.

Failed. Again.

“I’m sorry, I… I didn’t know.”

She can’t look at her, at this woman with hair that’s only just a little redder than hers, with a voice just a little deeper than hers, with a body just a little more perfect than hers.

This woman who Maggie apparently cheated on.

And Alex knows it’s true.

Knows because she knows Maggie.

Knows because she knows what Maggie is like when she’s scared.

Knows what Maggie is like when she hates herself more than she usually does.

“I shouldn’t have said anything.”

Alex isn’t looking at her, so she doesn’t see the way Emily’s eyes run up and down her body, just once, quickly. Just once, imagining Maggie underneath her, on top of her, whatever she’s feeling these days, and she can see why Maggie chose this woman. This woman who just wanted to defend her.

This woman she’s apparently lying to.

And she knows Alex knows it, because when she looks up, her eyes are wide and terrified and regretful.

“I just… really wanna forget about it.”

Because that shell-shocked look on Alex’s face?
She wore that look for almost two whole years.

She only just recently stopped wearing it all the time.

Alex looks off to the side because she can’t look into the eyes of the woman Maggie slept with, spent five years probably doting on, and then cheated on.

“Sorry, I… I’mma go.”

She doesn’t give Emily a chance to say anything else.

She can’t hear anything else.

She just walks.

She walks and she walks, and she takes out her phone and she calls her sister.

Chapter Summary

Kara Comforts Alex Post Emily-Confrontation

She’s walking away and she won’t stop walking because if she stops walking she’ll break.

She takes out her phone and does the only thing she knows how to – aside from hitting the bottle – when she’s going to break.

She calls her sister.

“Maggie cheated on her ex,” she says without preamble, and she can practically feel Kara clenching her fists in rage.

“Alex, no. Are you okay? No, that’s a stupid question, of course you’re not okay. Do you want me to – “

“No no no, don’t hunt her down and kill her, that’s not why I – I just… I need my sister.”

“Where are you? I’ll come get you – “

“No, Kara, you can’t, you need to keep a low profile, remember? I just… Do you think it’s possible for someone to change?”

She might not have J’onn’s telepathy, but she practically hears Kara thinking about Mon-El, and this isn’t the moment – because Maggie has started to get her a little bit better at focusing on herself when she needs it, and god does she need it right now – but she wishes she’d think of other people who were complicated, who changed. Astra. Jeremiah. For better or worse. Hell, even Eliza was trying. Alex herself.

“I do,” Kara says, but her voice is careful and her voice is protective. “I do, but Alex, a lot of times when someone cheats – “

“It doesn’t make you a bad person, Kara – people are allowed to make mistakes, and it was years ago, it – “

“I know that, Alex, but you’re my sister, and I only want you to have what you deserve.”

“I know. And I want the same for you. And we’re going to talk about that, because Kara, there’s a reason you’re breaking up with him every other day.”

“Alex – “

“I’m just saying. But I… look, it… Maggie… she’s guarded. Too guarded. After her dad, growing up in that town she grew up in, she… she doesn’t talk, Kara. To me. I mean, she does, she talks, but not really. Maybe I’m not a good listener, I don’t know – “
“No, Alex, you’re an amazing listener. It just… it sounds like Maggie has a pattern. A not talking pattern. She didn’t tell you about her dad, and now this, it… didn’t you say she keeps telling you that you’re not supposed to shove your feelings down anymore?”

“Yeah, she reminds me at least twice a day.”

“Well, she’s right. But Alex, maybe she has the same struggle you do. Shoving her feelings down. To protect herself. And that’s not an excuse for cheating! Or for not telling you about it! And you have a sister with laser vision, I’m just saying, I can – “

“Kara, no – “

“Just a warning shot – “

“Kara.”

“I will kill her if she hurts you, Alex.”

Alex stops walking and runs a hand through her hair and looks up at the stars and sighs.

She needs a shower. She needs a change of clothes. She needs to give Maggie more of the time alone she asked for.

And then she needs Maggie.

“She won’t. I trust her, Kara, I… let me hear her out before you go all rogue on her.”

“So, before I go older Danvers sister on her.”

“Right.”

“Alex.”

“Kara.”

“I love you. You only deserve the best.”

“She is the best, Kara. I… I think she is.”

“She’d better prove it.”

“She will. She does, every day. And hey, Kara. He’d better prove it, too. And not just with bacon. You’re worth more than that, Kara. So much more than that.”

“I love you, Alex.”

“I love you too, sis. I love you too.”

Chapter Summary

The Alex Comforting Maggie Scene We All Deserved (aka Alex doesn’t get called away, and “I love you” happens)

She is so fucking proud of her.

She walks away.

She snaps and she freaks out and she walks away, but she doesn’t try to head out the door.

Instead, she heads straight to the couch and sits down.

And Alex is so fucking proud of her.

And that?

That’s the final proof Alex needs that Maggie is perfect.

Not perfect.

But perfect for her.

Because Alex had told her that it was a relationship and she didn’t get to just walk out.

And Maggie?

Maggie had listened.

So Maggie’s on the couch and she’s in agony and Alex hates it, hates the catches in her voice and the not-quite biting she does to her lips to keep them from trembling when Alex brings up her parents, hates the nod and the anguished “I know” and the terrified drop and tremble of her jaw.

She hates it, because she’s defeated and she’s helpless and she’s destroyed.

But she loves it, too, because she… because… because she’s Maggie.

She hears her own voice tremble on the word heal and the only thing that keeps her from breaking herself is how warm Maggie’s face is, how soft her hair is, the way that Maggie finally looked at her when she said her name, the way she’s leaning into her hand, probably without even realizing it.

“You don’t think I’m a bad person?” she asks, and Alex knows how many years Maggie’s spent feeling like she is, and Alex knows exactly, exactly, exactly what that kind of self-hatred feels like.

She looks off to the side because she knows Maggie, she knows that there’s only a certain amount of intensity, of vulnerability, that she can handle at once. So she looks off to the side and she quirks her lips and she says, “Actually, I always thought that you were perfect. But it’s really nice to see that you have problems, too.”

Maggie’s voice shakes when she says thank you, and Alex smiles because god, she’s never been so... she’s never felt this...

She pulls back because she needs to see her face again.

Pulls back – but not before pressing the side of her face to Maggie’s hair, because god she loves how close it feels, how perfect – because she needs to tell her something.

Because if she’s going to call Maggie out for keeping things to herself, she can’t do the same.

“Yeah,” she whispers as she strokes her hair, as she looks into wet brown eyes and steels herself for the scariest thing she’s ever done.

And she’s a DEO agent with a superhero little sister.

Scary is her job.

“Listen, I know we haven’t been together for five years, I know... I know it’s not... I know we’re still learning each other, and ourselves, but I... I never want to stop learning each other together, and I... No, Maggie, I don’t think you’re a bad person. I think you’re the most... Maggie, I’m not going to run. I’m not going to run just because you have a history – hell, I have a history, too, we all have histories – and I’m not going to let you run just because you’re scared. I’m going to prove you can trust me, I’m going to prove I’m going to be here for you, unconditionally, always, no matter what ghosts you have or what scar tissue you’ve got, because I...”

Maggie’s eyes are wide and her lips are trembling and her heart is bleeding and Alex needs her to know, needs her to understand, needs her to feel it.

“I love you, Maggie. I love you, I love you, god, Maggie, I love you, and I’m not going anywhere, and you’re not a bad person, and you – “

But her next words are lost in Maggie’s lips, in her tongue, in her arms and in her sob, in the way she pushes Alex back onto the couch, in the way her body wracks with sobs even as her lips cover Alex’s.

“Whoa, whoa, whoa,” Alex pulls back, and Maggie stills immediately, sits up immediately. “No, no, you don’t have to get off, come back, come here, please, I want to be near you, I want to kiss you, I just... you’re crying, Maggie, I don’t – “

“You shouldn’t.”

One of Maggie’s tears drips onto Alex’s cheek, and Alex reaches up to wipe her eyes, to stroke her hair, as she shakes her head, as she furrows her brow and confusion defines her every feature.

“I shouldn’t what, Maggie?”

She reads the answer in Maggie’s eyes before Maggie can force the words out of her lips, and it shatters her heart.

“Love me. You... you shouldn’t love me.”

Maggie sits up and crawls off of Alex, crawls to the opposite end of the couch, and Alex stays laying down, leaning up on her elbows, watching her. Watching her, scared to move, because if she moves, Maggie might run.

And she would understand why.

Because if Maggie loved her, and said so, god, she would say she didn’t deserve it, too.

Because she didn’t, she didn’t, she didn’t.

“I’m sorry, Maggie, I shouldn’t have said anything, I should have just kept my mouth shut – “

“No, Alex, it’s not you.” Her voice is distant and her voice is firm because she cheated, she lied, she destroys everything, not Alex, and she won’t have Alex blaming herself for this, too.

Alex stiffens and Maggie notices out of the corner of her eye, so she forces herself to relax her shoulders somewhat and she sighs and wipes her eyes roughly. Alex stays leaning back on her elbows, stays watching her carefully, stay wishing she would be gentler with herself when she wipes her own tears away. Wishes she were as gentle with herself as she is with Alex.

“I’m sorry. It’s…” She chances a glance at Alex, and the confusion, the adoration, the pure concern, the pure… love… in her face makes her want to scream, and makes her want to weep, and makes her want to cling to Alex and never, ever, ever let her go.

“You are the most amazing woman I’ve ever met, Alex. You… I loved Emily, yeah. I did, a lot. She was… we met in college, and she… and we were together a long time, my longest, like I said, but it… I wasn’t… I loved her, but not… not like this. Not like I love you.”

Alex’s heart stops beating and she sits up slowly, slowly, slowly. Maggie’s crying again, soft tears, silent tears, and Alex is pretty sure she’s crying now, too.

“But I shouldn’t, Alex, and you shouldn’t, because I don’t… you see what I did to her, what I… what I do. To the people closest to me. Because it’s not only about not trusting them, or you, it… it’s about trusting myself. I tore my family apart, Alex. I did that. Me.”

“Maggie, no, it wasn’t – “

“I know. I know. But that’s never… that’s never how it felt. It felt like it was me. Everyone told me it was me. And I believed it, Alex, because hell, you know, you believe what your mother says about you, too.”

Alex looks down and Alex takes a deep breath and Alex is in shock because she loves me, she loves me, she loves me.

“It’s why I tried not to date you, Alex, because… yes, because you were just coming out, but also because I… I ruin things, Alex. It’s what I do, and I never… I never want to ruin you. You’re… you’re a masterpiece, Alex. You’re the greatest thing this damn planet’s ever come up with, and I just… I destroy things. And I shouldn’t have gotten with you, because I don’t know what I’d do if I ever destroyed you, but I couldn’t help it, because Alex, I… I’m so sorry. You deserve to be loved by someone… whole, someone… Someone who doesn’t ruin everything she touches.”

Alex is sitting up fully, now, is kneeling back on the couch in front of Maggie, now, her hands in her own lap, now.

“Are you done?” she asks softly, gently.
Maggie nods and looks away, and Alex raises her index finger to her chin and helps Maggie meet her eyes.

“You do not ruin things. You do not destroy things. You aren’t broken, Maggie, and you aren’t a… a curse. You’re the masterpiece, Maggie, because you… you have survived hell – hell that your own family put you through, hell when you were a child and needed all the love and protection that I wish I could have been there to give you then – and after all that, the worst thing you do, what, you cheated on someone? Okay, that’s bad. That’s really, really bad. But Maggie, doing a bad thing doesn’t make you a bad person. It makes you a person. I’ve tortured people, Maggie, I’ve… I’ve killed people. People with families, people… people. And you still say I’m… those things you said I am.”

“A masterpiece, the most incredible woman in all of creation, the – “

Maggie’s smiling now, and it makes Alex smile, too, but she shushes her softly, because she’s not done.

“Maggie, I don’t love you because you’re perfect, or because I thought you actually were perfect. I love you because you like gross food like double toasted bagels and vegan ice cream, and I love you because you take care of the queer kids of color your precinct would rather lock up, and I love you because you have terrible morning breath and I love you because you make me laugh and I love you because you stand up for yourself and I love you because you’re stubborn and because you’re loyal and because you’re passionate and because you’re neurotic about parking regulations and because you’re into weird things like bonsai trees.”

“Hey, don’t hate on my trees.”

“And I love you because that’s the thing you decide to pipe up about. I love you, Maggie, and god, I’m sorry, am I saying it too much, I just… it’s like a floodgate, now that I told you I have to keep saying it, because Maggie, you deserve it. You deserve to be loved, and you deserve to be loved for exactly who you are. For everything you’ve ever been and everything you’ve ever done and everything you are now and everything you will be in the future. I want to be in your future, Maggie, I… you’re amazing, Maggie. You’re amazing, and you just… I love you, Maggie. I love you. I love you, I – I’m going to stop talking now. Sorry.”

“I don’t deserve you, Alex.”

“But you said you love me?”

A silence. A long, long, long silence.

Alex’s eyes are wide and Maggie’s eyes are soaked and she reaches to cup Alex’s cheeks in her hands and she kisses every centimeter of her face because “Yes, Alex. Yes, yes, yes. I love you more than I’ve ever loved anyone.”

“Well then. I don’t feel like I deserve you, and you don’t feel like you deserve me. But I love you. And you… you love me? You love me.” She can’t help but straighten and smile and Maggie chuckles wetly.

“Nerd.”

“You love that I’m your nerd.”

“My nerd. I like the sound of that.”
“Maggie. I want to be with you. Let me be with you. But like… really with you. So you have to try to trust me, to let me love you properly. Okay?”

“Do I have to?”

“Maggie.”

“I don’t like talking about myself, Alex.”

“I know.”

“But I… I trust you.”

“Well that’s a start.”

“Yeah.”

“You know what else would be a start?

“Mmm?”

“Heading over to the Baldwin and talking to Emily. You deserve closure, Maggie. You both do.”

“Alex, I – “

“I’ll drive you. I’ll be right outside the whole time.”

“You won’t leave?”

“Never.”

“Because you love me.”

“Who’s the nerd now?”

“For you? Every time, Alex. Every single time.”

Chapter Summary

The Ride Home (with the Passionate Sanvers Kiss --> Smut we all deserve)

Alex drives her and she promises her once, twice, three times, four, that she’ll be waiting right outside.

That no matter what Emily says, no matter what feelings it brings up, Maggie will have a woman who loves her unconditionally – no judgment, no shaming – to take her home.

Maggie shakes and Maggie very nearly starts crying again, but she puts on her cop face, her impenetrable face, and Alex kisses her hand and watches her stride out of the car, watches her call after her ex.

“Emily. Hey. I… I’m sorry, I don’t mean to keep bumping into you like this, I just – “

“Listen, Maggie, if you’re here to tell me off for telling your girlfriend the truth, I don’t want to – “

“No, that’s not it, that’s not… Emily, I never… I never apologized. Not really, not enough. I apologized for… for myself, to make myself feel less guilty, less at fault. And then you said some things – which I totally don’t blame you for – and I… it made me feel justified in what I did, so I stopped trying. And I shouldn’t have. Stopped trying. I mean, I should have respected your space and all that, sure, but I… I’m just trying to say that you never deserved the hell I put you through, and you didn’t do anything wrong to cause it, it was me, it was all and only me, and I know I can’t do anything to make it right but – “

“Maggie, stop. Just… stop. Look, I’ve moved on. And clearly, so have you. I… you’re right. You’re right. You did a lot of damage. I loved you, I wanted to spend my life with you, I…”

Maggie looks down and tries not to feel, tries not to hate herself, tries not to… But Emily’s talking again, and she looks back up to listen to her like she deserves to be listened to.

“You shouldn’t have cheated. You know that. We don’t need to rehash that. It’s been too many years to… but look. You deserve to be happy. Of course you do. You made a mistake, you… but clearly, you’ve changed. You found yourself a great girl, you really have. And it looks like you treat her well.”

“I do.”

“Good. Do that. Don’t do to her what you did to me. That’s how you make it up to me, okay?”

“Yeah.”

Maggie’s voice is small, but Emily’s smiling, because that’s the Maggie she wants to remember; the girl who loves hard and fights hard and plays hard and hurts hard.
She turns and she looks out the window to see Alex is waiting, leaning on the hood of the car, and Alex puts up a hand and offers a small smile and waves.

“She’s great,” Emily says, because who else goes to defend her girlfriend, finds out she cheated on her ex and lied about it, and then drives her to make amends?

“I know,” Maggie says, because she really, really does.

“You’re lucky to have her.”

And then, “It’s good seeing you,” because really, oddly, it is. They hug and it’s brief because if it’s any longer it’ll burn, but Emily gives a soft wave to Alex as Maggie walks away, because she hopes she doesn’t need luck, she hopes she just needs Maggie.

Which is exactly what Alex needs.

All Alex needs.

All she needs when she asks how it went and Maggie thanks her, and tells her that Emily said she was lucky to have her, but god, god, god, it’s the other way around.

She grabs the lapel of Maggie’s jacket and she pulls and Maggie’s lips are soft and warm and perfect and Alex keeps hold of Maggie’s jacket even after they pull back, and Maggie reads the look in Alex’s eyes.

Reads the needs, reads the want. Reads the excitement, the desire.

“Let’s go,” she says, and heads back into the car, because she knows what comes next, and god, does she want it.

Alex smiles and practically hugs herself, because it’s called being happy, Danvers, and she’s getting used to it, kind of, but she thinks she may never get fully used to the feeling of being smiled at by Maggie Sawyer, of being kissed by Maggie Sawyer, of being…. god… loved…. by Maggie Sawyer.

So she smiles and she practically squeals and she follows Maggie into the car.

“Thank you, Alex,” Maggie says without preamble, and Alex strokes her hair and shakes her head.

“Always.”

“Kiss me again?”

“Always.”

She leans across the car and she kisses her soft and she kisses her slow and she kisses her like she’s falling and Maggie is the only one who can catch her, because god, she is.

Maggie opens her lips and sighs into the kiss and reaches over to tangle her hands in Alex’s hair and Alex lets out a soft moan and god, does Maggie taste incredible.

“Home?” Alex asks, because she might not be fully briefed in lesbian cultural norms, but she’s reasonably certain it would be rude to have sex in the car right outside one of your ex’s hotels after making amends with said ex.

And she’s reasonably certain that if Maggie keeps touching her like that – touching her like she’s the only thing that exists in the world – that’s exactly what they’ll wind up doing.

So they settle for holding hands as Maggie drives with her other, their fingers interlaced, neither of them speaking, but both of them glancing at each other, both of them with small smiles and barely suppressed giggles because somehow, somehow, somehow, they found each other and somehow, somehow, somehow, they’re each other’s healing.

They’re barely through the door before Maggie has Alex’s jacket off, before she’s kissing her way down Alex’s jawline, but Alex hums and Maggie stops immediately, eyes concerned and hands up and off Alex’s body in surrender.

“I’m sorry, I thought you wanted – “

“I do, Maggie. I want you. But I want… I want to focus on you. I want to make you feel special. I want to make love to you, I want… I want to worship you, Maggie. Will you let me? If you want?”

“Alex, I don’t deserve – “

“Maggie. Let me show you what you deserve. If you want.”

Throat too tight with love, with gratitude, with disbelief that someone can love her like this, that someone can look at like this, that Alex Danvers can love her like this, that Alex Danvers can look at her like this, Maggie just nods.

And Alex smiles, and Alex does the last thing Maggie expects her to do: she walks away.

Before Maggie can panic, Alex takes her hand and kisses each knuckle.

“I’m not going anywhere,” she promises, and she sets about the apartment, turning on soft jazz and lighting candles and humming to herself.

“Pour yourself a drink, babe,” she offers, but Maggie declines, because she doesn’t want Alex to have to taste the alcohol on her lips. Alex notices, and her heart expands so much she thinks her chest might burst.

“Make yourself comfortable,” she whispers as she crosses behind her to light the candles on the kitchen island, and Maggie fights off tears, fights off weeping, because how can she possibly deserve this?

Candles lit and music on, Alex offers Maggie her hand.

“Let me show you what you deserve, Maggie.”

A stream of violent images – things Maggie deserves – flash unbidden through her mind. She shakes them off, forces herself to focus on those eyes, that soft smile, those perfect lips, that gentle touch.

And she lets Alex Danvers show her exactly what she thinks she deserves.

She thinks she deserves to be carried to bed while being kissed gentle, kissed passionate, kissed perfect. Kissed soft but hard, somehow at the same time, while being held, being carried, being surrounded, like she weighs nothing, like she’s nothing of the burden she’s always believed herself to be.

She thinks she deserves to be stripped naked slowly, being told how beautiful she is with every new inch of skin revealed, being told how perfectly the candlelight plays off of her skin, how it’s like the most beautiful piece of art she’s ever seen, but better.

“Nerd,” she whispers, and Alex just chuckles as she shucks off her own clothes.

“And Maggie can’t disagree, doesn’t want to, because Alex is kissing each of her toes and her shins and her knees, concentrating on the old soccer scars, and she’s pausing and waiting for permission before proceeding up her bare thighs, and Maggie grants it because god, Alex, Alex, Alex, and Alex asks if she wants this again before spreading her curls open with her thumb and index finger and closing her lips around Maggie’s clt, and Maggie can do nothing but whimper, can do nothing but gasp, can do nothing but scream, because this worshiping is what Alex Danvers thinks she deserves, and god, no one’s ever told her she deserves to be quite this cherished before.

Because Alex’s eyes are glued to her face, even as her tongue slips inside her, even as her tongue revels in how soaked she is for her. Alex’s eyes are glued to her face, making sure she’s good, making sure she wants everything Alex is doing, and the look in her eyes is nothing if not reverent.

Nothing if not the most moving, most sexy thing Maggie has ever seen.

Until, that is, Alex reaches up and brings one of Maggie’s nipples between her fingers, and that image? Alex, tongue between her legs, watching her face intently, lovingly, hotly, with her fingers teasing her hardened nipple?

She has no idea what she’s done to deserve Alex Danvers, but god is she grateful she has her.

“Do you want to cum in my mouth, babe?” Alex pulls back to ask, and Maggie tosses her head back and screams in response, and Alex grins and takes that, accurately, as a fuck yes.

She works her tongue over her clt and she asks with her eyes if Maggie wants her fingers inside her, and Maggie begs and Alex complies and fills her up, deeper, harder, deeper, harder, because Maggie keeps begging for more and Alex keeps providing, and when she cums pulsing around Alex’s fingers and streaming wetness around Alex’s palm, around her tongue, Alex moans in delight, in ecstasy, in perfection.

“I love you, Maggie,” she whispers, her voice thick with Maggie’s cum in her mouth, and Maggie has never heard anything so perfect.

“Do you want more?” Alex asks as she wipes her mouth and nose and chin on her shoulder and kisses a trail up and down Maggie’s inner thighs.

“Do you… want to give me more?”

Alex grins and crawls up Maggie’s body so she can kiss her lips, so she can feel their bodies touch everywhere.

“When are you going to get it, Maggie? I always want to give you more. Because that’s always what you deserve.”

“That sounds fake, but… please.”

Alex chuckles and Maggie giggles and Alex shifts and asks with her eyes and Maggie nods and grabs at Alex’s ass and begs please, please, please, Alex, please.
So Alex slips one leg between Maggie’s and shifts back, shifts close, so her own wetness can slip onto Maggie’s, and they both moan and scream and writhe and grasp at each other’s skin with the heat, the overwhelming heat, of their bodies pressed together.

“Too much?” Alex makes sure, and Maggie shakes her head.

“Please don’t stop,” she begs, and Alex doesn’t.

She grinds her hips down slow and firm and careful and perfect, her clit on Maggie’s in perfect rhythm, with perfect pressure, with perfect timing. It’s something that’s taken them hours of giggling and practicing and yelping and toppling over, but now that they’ve gotten their own bodies, their own needs, each other’s bodies, each other’s needs, it’s automatic, and it’s absolute ecstasy.

Maggie grabs at Alex’s ass and pulls her down deeper, closer, harder, and Alex moans as the slick heat of Maggie’s clit under hers, the firm grasp of Maggie’s hands on her naked body, the desperate writhing of Maggie’s torso, the needy whimpering of Alex’s name from her lips, tosses her over the edge, and when she arches back and moans Maggie’s name, it’s the most beautiful thing Maggie’s ever seen, and she thinks that maybe, just maybe, if this woman – this ruthless, stubborn, guarded, passionate, badass, blows-up-buildings-while-she’s-still-inside-them woman – trusts her enough to let her watch her cum like that, to let her watch her unravel like that, to watch her vulnerable and undone and open like that?

Then maybe she might just deserve her love after all.

Chapter Summary

Alex Goes After Kara to the Daxamite Ship (because I’m still happily living in Season 1)

She leaves Vasquez in charge, because J’onn might have told her not to come, to monitor the transport from this side, but he knew better than to think she’d obey this one. She knew, because she’d seen him going over the specs with Vasquez earlier.

She leaves Vasquez in charge and she sprints through the transport, remembering the unpleasant, swooping feeling it had left her with last time and feeling no different about how much she hates this form of travel this time.

Not to mention the fact that the last time she was in space, she was almost flung halfway across the galaxy.

But her sister needs her.

Earth can wait.

She lays her new gun straight into the chests of the first three guards she sees – set to stun, because Maggie had insisted once Alex finally let her get a look at the thing – and she slams her elbow into the armor of one who tries to come up behind her.

She feels something in her body crack – she has no idea what the hell kind of armor it is, but she knows she wants some for the DEO – and she promptly ignores it, twisting around to shoot him point blank in the leg, and down he goes.

She ignores the pain in her arm because there are still four more guards, four more guards between her and her sister, and J’onn is fighting Mon-el’s father and Alex has only death on her mind, because her sister, her sister, her sister.

Still four more guards, and she ignores whatever’s broken in her body to kick and to shoot and to slam and to disarm, until there is nothing but an unconscious slew of bodies around her.

Because Kara isn’t the only badass in the family.

But she has no time, and quite frankly, no desire, to catch her breath, because Mon-el’s mother has not one, but two, Kryptonite daggers.

And her sister is on her knees. And Alex will not have any of that.

“Hey,” she calls, death in her voice and plasma in her eyes.

“You make one more move toward her and I swear to whatever gods you have on Daxam, I will make sure you meet them right now.”
“A human with fire. What an interesting diversion,” she drawls, and goes to strike Kara anyway.

Alex shoots. And shoots again. And again. And again.

The Kryptonite blades fall and Alex sprints forward to kick them away, and she grabs her sister and she holds her close, holds her steady, holds her permanent.

“I got you. It’s okay. I got you.”

She nods at J’onn because Winn’s jogged back in with Mon-el, and J’onn gives the man’s father one final push, one final shove – one final nod, because as the man looks across at his son, he knows that he’s made his choice, and he’ll convince his wife of that when she comes to, he must – enough to give them all time to go, go, go, back through the transport, back home.

“Kara!” two strangled cries go up on the other side of the transport, and Kara spills from Alex’s arms into James and into Maggie’s.

“Are you hurt? Babe, what about you, are you okay?”

Maggie touches Kara’s cheek and James holds her to his chest and Maggie looks Alex over and hisses with rage when she notices the awkward angle of her arm.

“J’onn, she needs a medic.”

But Vasquez is already on it, and they’re dragging both Alex and Kara off to the med bay, despite their protests, despite their insistence that they’re fine.

“Can you two be less alike when it comes to resisting what you need?” J’onn wonders aloud, and Kara and Alex’s responding pouts are nearly identical.

Maggie laughs, relieved, into James’s shoulder.

“Our Danvers girls, huh?” she asks him, J’onn, and Winn. They grin and they nod and they breathe in, breathe out, because their Danvers girls are home, are together, are safe.

Chapter Summary

Winn, Get me a Wrench (ft. Sara Lance and Oliver Queen)

Alex has always been a little on the side of reckless.
A little on the side of ruthless.
But lately?
Since Cadmus, since Jeremiah, since Kara has almost died again, and again, and again?
Lately, “gone rogue” has been Alex’s middle name.
Lately, “you can catch me torturing people on my lunch break” has been her first name.
So when the bounty hunter goads them that humans don’t have what it takes – that they’re too weak-willed, too sensitive, too soft, too moral – to get the information they need from him, Alex demands a wrench.
And she doesn’t only mean it.
She wants it.
And J’onn steps in, not only because his way is less messy. But because his way will spare the shattered remains of his eldest earth daughter’s soul.
“So I heard about the wrench thing, babe,” Maggie tells her, because of course Kara called her, and of course they made a plan.
Because she’s been getting better in some ways: she’s been drinking less, laughing more. Sleeping more. Taking more time to herself. Learning to assert what she wants, what she needs.
But she still also needs, apparently, to beat the living shit out of people when she feels out of control. When she needs to protect the people she loves.
“Don’t get me wrong, babe, I love that about you. How fiercely protective you are of the people you love. I admire it. I admire you. But Danvers, have you considered – ”
“That I have anger issues? Yeah, your friend at the bar suggested it.”
A long silence. A kiss, because Maggie, too, isn’t here to judge. She’s here to help her heal.
“Have you considered he might be a little right?”
Alex pffts and Alex stands and paces and stares to Kara and J’onn for support, and they give it to her, but not the kind she wants.

She wants the kind that says Maggie’s wrong, that it’s leadership skills, that it’s part of being a good soldier.

Instead, they give her the support of, we understand, we love you anyway, we’re here for you.

So she concedes – she’s not quite sure if it’s J’onn’s concerned eyes or Kara’s pout or Maggie’s soft, reassuring kisses – to heading over to Earth 1 to grab a coffee with Oliver Queen and Sara Lance.

He’s stoic and she’s flirty, but she’s also serious, because there are storms just behind her impossibly blue eyes that Alex is surprised to realize that she’s seen in her own mirror.

“So Alex, your sister says you’re enjoying torturing people these days,” Oliver begins, and Sara groans.

“Way to kill all possibilities of small talk, Ollie. He does this. I’m sorry.”

Oliver shrugs and allows himself a small smile, and Alex can’t help but grin. “Well she didn’t travel to a different universe to chat about the weather.”

“No, apparently I came for an intergalactic intervention therapy session… thing.”

Sara sighs and nods across Jitters to the table where Kara and Maggie are sitting with their heads together, whispering about who knows what.

“They really care about you. To bring you all this way to talk to the most messed up people they could think of.”

“That’s not quite how Kara –”

“No, of course not, Kara’s made of literally nothing but sunshine over all that grief she keeps so well hidden, but even if she had said it directly, she wouldn’t be wrong,” Oliver deadpans, and Alex furrows her brow.

“He’s always like this. Except when he’s all domesticated by Felicity. He makes soufflés.”

“I tried to make Maggie tiramusu. It didn’t work.”

“The trick is in the ice –”

“Oh god, they have something else to talk about other than torturing people. Can I go sit with Kara and your girlfriend?”

“Sara.”

“Alex, it’s a rush, right? To control someone’s life like that, because you can’t control whose they take? The more of someone else’s blood is on your knuckles, the less blood your sister, your girlfriend, will shed? Right? But then it becomes a rush. An addiction. A thirst.”

Alex swallows and looks down into her coffee cup.

“We’re trained to not feel anything, but then we’re told that there’s a code,” Oliver says softly. “It can get confusing for your body to know which way is up.”
“And how much blood is too much.”

Alex blinks and grips at the table, because they understand, they understand, they understand.

“I just want to protect her. Both of them. J’onn. My friends.”

Oliver and Sara both nod, and Sara hesitates with her hand hovering above Alex’s until Alex nods, and their hands touch softly on the table.

“Our hands – his too – are lethal. Our hands were made to kill. But yours? I bet they’re so gentle when you touch her.”

She nods over at Maggie, and a soft smile grows on Alex’s lips. “You have to let her love you, Alex. Both of them. All of them. Getting lost in it is so easy, and it happens before you even can identify it. But you have to. That rage, that anger, that hate… you can’t take it out on yourself, not completely, because if you do, you won’t be able to protect them. But you’ve gotta get it out, and why not on a prisoner you need information from, right? But Alex, you… they love you. They love you, and you have to love you, or you’re not… You love them so hard you’ll torture and kill for them, Alex, but you’ll make yourself less human in the process. You’ll make yourself the thing you’re trying to protect them from.”

“The road back is the hardest one,” Oliver says softly, thinking about Felicity and Diggle and the League and falling off a mountain with a hole in his torso.

“Let them love you, Alex,” Sara almost whispers. “It’s not a cure. There isn’t one. And you’re going to have to keep fighting. Every day. But look at them. Look at the way they love you.”

Alex turns to see her girlfriend and her little sister both pretending not to watch the three of them, and she can’t help but smile.

“I used to believe the hero couldn’t have the girl, Alex. And I…” Oliver thinks of Felicity and he swallows and he moves on. “But that girl? Don’t let her go. Don’t let her go, Alex. She just traveled to a parallel universe to get you help. Let her love you. Alright?”

Alex watches as Maggie makes Kara’s face red with laughter, and she smiles faintly and squeezes Sara’s hand.

“Yeah. Yeah, I will.”
Chapter Summary

Help You Heal (ft. James, back from the war)

Prompt from recklesslove over at Ao3 – You have been a goddamn legend to write and post all of these scenes we deserved from this episode and if it’s not too forward I love you for it and I sincerely thank you. Absolute and utter goddamn perfection in each and every one of these.

If you’ve got any juice left in the tank (and I’d completely understand if you didn’t because 8 fics in a few hours is a mammoth effort), I’d love to see what Maggie did after Alex left up until her return, maybe to just before your fic where they went to talk to Emily together.

Regardless of anything, you should be ridiculously proud of yourself for your contribution to this fandom and your amazing talent <3

“I wanted to,” she’d told her when Alex said she wasn’t going to tell her about cheating on Emily, and god, god, she’d meant it.

Alex, I was with this woman for five years, and she told me she wanted to think about getting married, she told me she wanted to take the next step, and I... I panicked, and I did some fucked up things, and I just... But it was a long time ago, Alex, and I would never do that to you, to myself, again.

Alex, I cheated in the longest term relationship I’ve ever had. Please, please, please, god, please don’t leave me because of it. Please. I told you I don’t want to imagine my life without you in it, but now I just can’t. So please Alex. Please don’t leave. I’m sorry.

Alex, if I tell you that I have more scar tissue than skin, will you still think we’re perfect? Will you still want to be that couple with me? How could you? How could you if you knew that all my exes have been right, that I’ve never deserved happiness, that I can’t ever deserve it because I... because I destroy everything I touch, and every single day, I’m terrified of destroying you?

Alex, I don’t know how to let myself be loved. Teach me?

She’d wanted to. God, she’d wanted to.

But she only had words for other people’s pain, other people’s pasts, other people’s agonies.

Never for her own.

Because if she gave that to someone, of course they’d leave. Of course they’d send her away.

And why wouldn’t they?
She was just damaged goods.

Nothing more.

“You don’t like to talk about you,” Alex had said, and she’d countered with an immediate “I know,” with an immediate this is why everyone leaves, this is the kind of thing everyone says before they leave, god Alex please, please don’t leave.

Because you’re a rock, Maggie, and you never let me in, do you not love me?

And how can I possibly love something so hard, Mags, jesus, how could anyone?

And you go around like such a badass, but really you’re just broken inside. And I don’t think you can ever be fixed.

So when Alex’s tells her she doesn’t like to talk about her, she knows what’s coming, and she can’t tell if she needs a Xanax or a scotch, or hell, both.

But those aren’t the words coming out of Alex’s mouth. No.

Not Alex.

Because Alex is saying that she totally gets that, and Alex is saying her name, and it’s soft and it’s sweet and it’s pleading and it’s something like loving, and it’s certainly not the way you say someone’s name before you abandon them.

“You don’t think I’m a bad person?” she asks, and she leans into Alex’s hand, because it’s warm and it’s gentle and she might break if it gets pulled away.

She asks because the answer – from everyone else – has always, unequivocally, been yes.

The answer, from everyone else in her life, has been that she’s bad, that she’s broken, that she’s damaged, that she’s not worth it.

But Alex is talking about healing like it’s something to be done with love, something to be done together. She’s talking about healing like it’s something that means that Maggie is worth it to her. That Maggie might not be useless, worthless, terrible, after all.

“No,” is Alex’s immediate answer, and she starts talking nerdy and she opens her arms, and Maggie scoots into them like Alex is oxygen and she’s drowning.

Because she has been, for nearly two decades, and Alex is her first breath above water.

“Thank you,” she says, because she doesn’t know what else to say, because there is nothing else to say, nothing but I will never hurt you like that, nothing but I don’t deserve you, nothing but I love you, I love you, I love you.

Alex pulls back and goes to stroke her hair and it’s everything she needs, but then the bottom drops out of her stomach, because Alex’s phone is vibrating, is ringing, and Alex is standing, and Maggie won’t speak, won’t ask if there’s anyone else who can help Kara, won’t ask if there’s anyone else who can save her, anyone else who can keep her from breaking, because she needs help, she needs saving, she needs to keep from breaking, too.

But she won’t speak, she won’t ask, because she would never do that to Alex. Because Alex is pale and Alex is scared and Alex is choking on words that sound like she wants to say I promise, that sound like she wants to say the same words Maggie wants to, but then Alex is gone and Maggie is alone and she hasn’t been this small, this exposed, this naked, since she showed up at her aunt’s door with the little duffle bag her father had given her five minutes to pack when she was a child.

She finds herself wishing M’gann wasn’t so damn far away, because M’gann had known about not talking.

She finds herself wishing it had been her job that called, not Alex’s, because at least that way, she’d be forced to shove it all back in, to shove it all into her gun and her steely expression and her badge.

She deliberately tries not to think about the irony of telling Alex she doesn’t have to push down her feelings, when that’s all Maggie knows how to do with her own.

She doesn’t know how long she sits there, hands in her lap, staring at the door, like a child, conjuring up the image of Alex, forcing into her mind Alex’s soft hands and soft voice and I’m not here to judge you for things that happened in the past, I am here to help you heal.

She doesn’t know how long she sits there, still, as though the longer she stays in this position, the more likely it’ll be to preserve Alex’s presence near her.

She doesn’t know how long she stays there, but she suddenly knows she can’t stay.

Knows because this is Alex’s home, this is… okay, so she has a baby bonsai tree and recipe books and all kinds of cooking utensils she hadn’t had months ago.

Okay, so she has Maggie’s toothbrush and favorite mouthwash in her bathroom, and okay, she’s slept here more in the past few months than she has at her own place.

But it’s Alex’s home.

Alex’s. Not hers.

Because Alex is sweet and Alex is kind, and that’s exactly the point: Alex is too good for her. She doesn’t know what she’s asking for when she’s asking Maggie to not be so guarded with her.

She doesn’t know what a massive disaster she would unleash.

And she won’t do that to Alex.

She’s standing up and she’s hugging herself and she’s trying not to break – at least not until she gets home, at least not until she’s on her own, as always – when her phone buzzes.

She doesn’t know if she hopes it’s work or if she hopes it’s Alex.

It’s Alex.

Stay there, please, Maggie. My home is yours. I’ll come back to you as soon as I can. Please stay.

She doesn’t know how Alex knew. Doesn’t know why Alex cared.

Doesn’t know where Alex found the time between getting to the DEO and doing god knows what to save her sister.

Doesn’t know why Alex bothered putting in the effort.
It’s not like she was worth it.

Her phone buzzes again.

You’re amazing, Maggie. Please don’t run. Please.

She doesn’t run.

She doesn’t run, because she collapses instead, a heaping mess on Alex’s living room floor, clutching her phone to her chest like it’s Alex herself and shaking her head and fighting, fighting, fighting, because every single awful thing in her life is flashing through her mind, is screaming in her skull, is activating her hands, wanting them to lash out at her own skin, wanting them to give herself what she really deserves.

She rocks herself and she clenches her fists and she pounds them into her thighs because she can’t, she can’t, she can’t.

Because Alex cares about her, and she has to be worthy of that, she has to be –

Her phone buzzes again.

Hey Maggie. It’s James. Alex said you’re having a hard night – no details, don’t worry – but since she and Winn are helping out Kara, I wanted to let you know I can come over. If you want. Keep you company. No pressure.

He doesn’t tell her that Alex had begged him to hang back from this mission she he can be on standby for Maggie. He doesn’t tell her because he knows it’ll make her feel babysat, not cared for.

She knows anyway.

And it stills something in her heart, something that, a moment before, had been raging about how she can’t possibly, ever, be truly lovable.

No worries, James. I’m fine. Thank you though.

His response is immediate.

Alex said you’d say that. You don’t have to talk. We can watch crappy movies or set up some shooter games on Alex’s TV.

Shooter games.

Maggie grins and rubs a tensed fist over her eyes.

Bring pizza.

She can’t see James smiling, but she imagines he is.

And, true to his word, he doesn’t ask her to talk. He doesn’t ask if she’s okay and he doesn’t tell her that her eyes are still swollen or that she still has some lint from the floor on her jeans.

He just glances around Alex’s apartment and nods, impressed. “Somehow I always pictured her as living in a cave of some sort.”

“Oh, it basically was before I got here,” Maggie jokes, in a voice that doesn’t sound like her own.
Because her voice sounds like she has friends. Her voice sounds like her girlfriend cares enough about her to send someone to make sure she’s okay. And that someone doesn’t mind at all, because he cares about her, too.

No strings and no sex and no demands in return.

Just the offer of pizza and the question of do you prefer Halo or Call of Duty?

She doesn’t think about how strange it is to sit on the floor she was just breaking on with a straight man she barely knows, letting him yell out at the game through a mouth full of pizza. Normally, she’d yell right with him, but tonight, her throat isn’t working.

And he doesn’t ask. He just nudges her with his shoulder when they pause so she can grab a slice, and he looks down at her and he says, “Alex is really lucky to have you, Maggie.”

She says nothing, because if she says anything, she’ll break. Like she’s not already broken.

If she says anything, gravity will win and word vomit will win and no, no, no.

Not yet, anyway.

When Alex returns, it’s to questions of are you hurt? and in space again? and how’s Kara? and I’ll go be with her right now and thank you, James and anything for the Danvers girls and the people they love, right?

They stare at each other long and hard, Alex with her head slightly tilted, trying to read Maggie’s face, trying to read her body.

“I am so sorry I left, Maggie, I – ”

“Alex, your sister was in danger, I get it – ”

“But so were you. Not… not in the same way, but I… you know I was thinking about it on the way back. She’s only here for a week.”

Maggie stiffens. “Yeah. And.”

“And, babe,” Alex reaches out, pausing before touching her, and Maggie nods, and Alex touches, and Maggie’s body immediately relaxes. “If you’re going to work on being less guarded with me, you’re going to also have to work on being gentler on yourself. And that means forgiving yourself. And sometimes, that means asking someone else’s forgiveness first. Even if you don’t get it, asking can be important. If you do it for the right reasons.”

“I never meant to hurt her,” Maggie’s voice is small, and Alex kisses her forehead.

“I know, babe.”

“Why do you just trust that?”

“Because I trust you.”

“Alex, I – ”

“I know. Me too.”

“What – ”
“I love you, Maggie. I love you more than I’ve ever thought it was possible to love someone who’s not Kara. And I want what’s best for you, always. So let me drive you to the Baldwin. Okay? You deserve closure, and Emily does, too.”

“You…”

“Yes.”

“I don’t deserve you.”

“Actually, it’s the other way around, but if I work on deserving you, and you work on deserving me, then really, what can go wrong?”

“Nerd.”

“Should I get the car?”

“Yeah. But first, I… I love you, too, Alex. I love you so fucking much.”

Her chest heaves and Alex pulls her close and Maggie rises on her tip toes and kisses her like she’s never kissed her before and like she’ll never kiss her again, hands in her hair and hands up her back and hands on her face and lips parted and tongue in her mouth and Alex swoons and Maggie holds her and Maggie swoons and Alex steadies her and they only part when neither of them can breathe, when neither of them can think, when neither of them can do anything but she loves me, she loves me, she loves me.
The last time Alex gathered them all to make an announcement, it was a little bit anticlimactic.

James and Winn had blinked for a moment, and thought about it for a moment more, and immediately it made sense that of course Alex was dating a woman, and of course that woman was Maggie.

The most dramatic thing that happened that night was Winn trying to play geometry with sticks.

So they’re not sure what to expect tonight, and Kara’s not spilling.

“Maybe they’re getting engaged,” James suggests, and Kara just grins and adjusts her glasses.

“Or maybe that supposed mission out of state the other week was really a shotgun wedding in Vegas,” Winn suggests.

“Mr. Schott, they returned with three members of Cadmus in handcuffs, in what way does that strike you as a fake mission?”

Winn’s voice goes up slightly and it reminds Kara forcibly of Cisco, and she smiles to herself.

“They could’ve had some downtime, we don’t know!”

“Hi guys,” Alex interrupts, face a combination of flushed and terrified and excited.

“Look at them holding hands like that, see, totally shotgun wedding!” Winn splutters, as Alex and Maggie cast him identical mock glares.

“We didn’t get married, Winn,” Maggie sing songs as she plops down next to him, her hand still in Alex’s vice-like grip.

“What’s up, Alex?” James asks, and J’onn looks on with soft eyes.

Alex looks, wide-eyed, at Kara, at Maggie. They nod and Alex gulps and Alex fiddles with Winn’s bottle of beer and Alex speaks.

“So since I’ve come out, as gay, I’ve been… doing a lot of research. Learning a lot of things. About… about queer life. And about myself.”
“I knew those lesbian movie nights were a good idea!” Winn high fives Maggie, and she laughs softly and shakes her head, her eyes fixed supportively on Alex.

“And I’ve been learning new concepts… identities… well, not new, but things I didn’t know… possibilities I didn’t know were there. And I’ve been realizing a lot of things… about myself… and who I am. Inside. And I… who I am is… do you guys know the word nonbinary?”

J’onn smiles proudly and James cocks his head and Winn raises his hand like a proud nerd in math class.

“Neither one extreme nor the other!”

“In terms of gender, Winn.”

“Sometimes it means neither woman nor man; for others, it means both; for still others, it means different things at different times,” J’onn supplies softly, and they all turn to him with identical expressions.

“I’ve lived long lives on two planets,” he waves them off, gesturing back to Alex, still wearing a proud, soft smile.

“Is there a different pronoun you’d like us to start using for you, Alex?” he invites, and Alex could cry with relief, and squeezes Maggie’s hand, hard.

Maggie brings it to her lips and kisses each knuckle.

“They,” Alex says, softly at first, but then they clear their throat and look into Kara’s warm eyes as they say it louder, stronger.

“They. I want they pronouns. It just… it fits me better than… than anything else. I just didn’t know it was a possibility before.”

“And you’re still okay with Alex, or do you want us to go with something else?” J’onn prompts into James and Winn’s silence.

“I like Alex. Or… or Al. I like Al… a lot. But Alex is… Alex still fits.”

Maggie kisses their hand again, and Kara nudges her shoulder into James and tosses her hand toward Winn.

“You two are awfully quiet,” she speaks her sibling’s fear for them, and Maggie rubs her thumb across their hand as they wait for the boys to respond.

“No, no, I’m sorry Alex, I’m not… I’m just processing, that’s all. Come here,” James gets up and leans over and Alex hugs him hard and trembling and terrified.

“Is it okay if I have questions?” he asks, and Alex nods nervously.

“Do you want us to treat you different? Like, I want to treat you how you want to be treated, and I guess now that I’m thinking about it, I’ve treated you kind of like a sister. Do you need me to adjust that? Treat you more like a brother? Or both? Or neither? Or different things at different times? Is it okay to ask that?”

Alex grins and nods and touches his shoulder. “Yeah, I said you could ask. Uh… you know I don’t know yet? I like… I like feeling like… like the boyish parts of me are acknowledged, that makes me really happy… like, Winn, when you call me dude, it makes me feel really proud. Like you see me, you know? But I don’t think I would want to be treated basically like one of the guys all the time. I still feel like a lesbian. So there’s that. I guess I’ll let you know what I like and don’t like as it happens?”

James nods and smiles at them, and reaches out to touch their hand. “I’m really proud of you, Alex. Al. You’re amazing, you know that? Whatever pronouns you use.”

Alex grins again and suddenly Winn is up and suddenly Winn’s arms are around their shoulders.

“I never had a brother or a sister. Then I got James, and then I got you. And Maggie. And now I have a brother and a sister and a sibling, and it’s… I always wanted a full family. I love you, Alex. I love you so much.”

Alex pats his arm and pulls their head back to look at him. “You alright there, Winn?”

“I’m just proud of you, okay?”

They smile and kiss his cheek.

“You’re not so bad yourself, Winn. You can get off me now.”

“Yes soldier,” he murmurs as he scurries back to his seat.

“And you knew already,” they say across the table to J’onn.

“I had a feeling, Al. And your brothers aren’t the only ones who are proud of you.”

Alex bites their lip and Alex battles tears. “You’re not disappointed? Because you don’t have two daughters anymore?”

Their voice cracks and everyone reaches across the table toward their hands all at once, because suddenly not a single Superfriend has dry eyes.

“Alex. I watched you grow up, and I watched you turn into the finest child any man could ever ask for. You’re a protective sibling, a loving partner, a brilliant doctor, a fearless agent. And you’re the best child any parent could ever ask for. I’m not losing a daughter, Alex: I’m not losing anything. I’m gaining a child who’s learning more about themself, who’s growing more comfortable, more happy, within themself. And that is all I could ever want for you, or for your sister.”

Before he’s even finished talking, Alex is up and across the table and kneeling next to his seat and burrowing themselves in his chest.

“I love you,” they whisper as Maggie squeezes Winn’s hand and Kara cries happily into James’s shoulder.

“I love you too, Alex. I love you too.”

Chapter Summary

anonymous asked:

Hey could you maybe write another physical injury/hurt/comfort fic? I’d really need some comfort and the only way my mind accepts it is if it comes because of physical pain. It's like non-physical pain isn't 'worthy' of comfort for my mind. Logically I know that's stupid but my feelings still beg to differ, if that makes sense. And not even that works in real life lol. I ended up in a hospital a couple months back and I refused to let anyone visit and insisted to help out everyone. My mind sucks :(

She’s not wearing her vest when she gets shot.

She’s not wearing her vest and the bullet just misses collapsing her lung and she’s in surgery for eight hours.

Eight hours during which it takes the combined strength of the Martian Manhunter and Supergirl to keep Alex from torturing and killing the man who shot her.

Despite their unearthly strength, Alex still gets a few solid hits in.

She tries to wash off most of his blood before they finally tell her that her girlfriend is in recovery, that she can go see her (J’onn and Kara had delivered a few carefully worded threats about the hospital’s “family only” policy ahead of Alex’s arrival, mainly to prevent Alex from straight up murdering a nurse or physician’s assistant).

“Danvers.”

Maggie’s voice is groggy and unfocused, but it’s her voice, it’s her voice, it’s her voice.

“Hey.” Alex’s voice is hoarse from eight hours of screaming and raspy with unshed tears and quaking with she’s alive, she’s okay, she’s okay.

“You look like you’ve been through hell,” Maggie whispers like she’s not the one with oxygen tubes in her nose and IVs in her veins and stitches holding her torso together.

“You were touch and go for a while,” is Alex’s only explanation, and tears flood Maggie’s eyes.

“I’m sorry.”

“What? No. No, Maggie, you have nothing to – why would you – Maggie, please don’t apologize, I should be, I wasn’t there to protect you – ”

“It was a routine patrol, Danvers. It’s fine. I’m fine. I’m not going anywhere, okay? I’m fine.”

And she is, she is – Alex has to repeat it like an unending mantra in her head – but her recovery is going to be long, and if Alex thought Maggie was stubborn before, she reaches a whole new level with this.

Because she’s not supposed to walk unassisted.

But Alex catches her getting up to go to the bathroom alone in the middle of the night because “you looked so peaceful sleeping, Danvers.”

And she’s not supposed to change her own bandages, but Alex catches her trying anyway, because “Why should you have all the fun, Danvers?”

And she’s supposed to take her pain meds regularly, but Alex finds the bottle just as full as she left it when she headed out to the DEO, because “They get me loopy and it’s whatever, it’s just a flesh wound at this point.”

“Maggie. I need you to listen to me, and I need you to try and hear me. Okay?”

Maggie gulps because she thinks she knows what’s coming, and her lip trembles and she clenches her jaw because who wants to be with someone who’s gonna take so long to recover from a stupid injury, who wants to be stuck in the house when she could be playing pool, making out, with someone else?

Someone who’s not scared of getting addicted to the pain meds, someone who doesn’t need the damn things to begin with?

“I know you don’t like talking about yourself. And I know you don’t know how to be taken care of. Because I don’t think anyone’s ever really taken care of you. But I want to, Maggie. I want to take care of you. That’s what I’m here for. But I need you to not sabotage that, okay? You have to let your body heal, okay? You have to try and trust me, just a little bit, just enough to take care of you while you’re still healing up. And then you can go back to pretending you can kick my ass at sparring.”

“I can, I can do it right now, Danvers – ”

Alex laughs and Maggie cracks the first real grin she’s had in days.

“You’re not mad at me?”

“Maggie, how could I possibly be mad at you?”

Maggie’s lip wobbles and her jaw clenches and she looks away.

“I’m all needy, and… and boring.”

Alex sighs and lays down next to her, tossing the covers over both of them and propping herself up on a stack of pillows. She grabs at the remote and puts her arm around Maggie’s shoulders and snuggles her close, flipping on Netflix as she kisses Maggie’s temple.

“Mandatory bed rest, Netflix, comfy pillows, and an even comfier girlfriend? How could I ever be bored, Maggie?”

The next time she has to go to the bathroom in the middle of the night, she pokes Alex awake timidly and lets her help her hobble inside.

The next time she has to change her bandages, she watches how gentle, how loving, how attentive, how skilled, Alex’s hands are, and she makes Alex blush with a series of comments about her hot doctor girlfriend.

The next time she needs pain meds, she lets Alex regulate her amount and makes sure she eats and has plenty of water.

And the next time she feels like she doesn’t deserve to be taken care of, like it’s just a flesh wound and she should be able to take care of it all herself, she lets Alex kiss her and whisper sweet everythings in her ear, and she lets Alex help her heal.
“What?”

Maggie just grins and looks away, dimples out and blushing full force.

“Nothing, Danvers.”

Alex tilts her head and furrows her brow, clapping her book shut and shoving it down onto her mattress, flipping her glasses up to rest on the top of her hair for good measure.

“No, Maggie, you were staring! What?”

Maggie bites the inside of her cheek and puts her left hand up to her chin, shuffling her feet slightly.

“Nothing, Alex, you just… You’re the most beautiful thing I’ve ever seen. And sometimes it just… hits me, you know? That you’re… everything that you are, and for some reason, you want to share yourself and – ” She tosses her hands up at Alex’s apartment, toward her massive, room-sized bed. “ – all this, with… me.”

Alex takes a deep, silent breath and purses her lips off to the side before shoving her book to the foot of the bed and patting the mattress next to her.

“Come here,” she invites, and she delights in watching Maggie pad forward, jumping up slightly to kneel beside Alex.

“You know I think the same about you? About how lucky I am to have you? I’m in awe of it every day. I’m in awe of you every day.”

“Alex,” Maggie whispers as Alex runs her fingers over her hair.

“Come here,” Alex invites again, and this time it’s a whisper. This time, it’s a plea. This time, it’s a prayer.

Maggie smiles and complies, letting her eyes flutter closed as her hair sweeps over to frame both her face and Alex’s, to frame the way their lips meet, soft and sweet and slow.

Alex sighs into Maggie’s mouth, and Maggie melts into Alex’s arms.
“Can I come on top of you?” she asks softly, and Alex brings her knees down immediately so Maggie can bring her body closer, so she can crawl up and over her legs and straddle her, their lips close the entire time.

“You’re so warm,” Alex whispers when she runs a tentative hand up Maggie’s shirt, and Maggie leans back with a grin.

“Nebraska girl, California weather,” she breathes, putting her hands on the hem of her own shirt and asking with her eyes if Alex wants her to take it off.

“Please,” Alex whispers eagerly, and Maggie tugs the t-shirt over her head smoothly, leaving Alex breathless because she’s not wearing a bra under it, because her skin is bare and Alex can see every scar and every stretch mark and Alex loves every part.

Maggie grins and goes back down to kiss her, but Alex stills her with soft hands.

“Wait, wait, wait. I just… I just wanna look at you.”

Tears sting Maggie’s eyes and she nods and breathes deep, breathes slow, breathes the way Alex outlines her body with trembling fingers, leans forward to paint murals on her torso with reverent lips.

“May I?” she asks with her hands, her lips, hovering just shy of Maggie’s breasts.

“Yeah,” Maggie whispers, and god, Alex’s fingers, her lips, her tongue, are gentle fire, tracing every nuance and every bump of Maggie’s chest, tracing circle after smaller circle until she looks up to confirm and Maggie whimpers softly with gentle fingers tangled in Alex’s hair, and it’s all the permission Alex needs to close her mouth around Maggie’s slowly hardening nipple.

“Ally,” Maggie pants with her head tossed back, and Alex moans softly as she works her tongue every which way across her nipple, one hand snaking around her arched back to hold her up, to hold her steady, the other grasping at her other breast, teasing her other nipple in gentle rhythm with her tongue.

“Alex, I – ”

Alex stops immediately, but Maggie whines in protest.

“No, god, don’t stop, I just… I want more…”

“More of what, princess?” Alex husks softly, and Maggie whimpers again and grinds her hips down around Alex’s.

“More of you.”

Alex beams and shifts Maggie easily off of her, not worrying for even a moment that she won’t have room, because her bed can more than accommodate what she has in mind for her girlfriend next.

She kneels and she shucks out of her own clothes slowly, keeping her eyes the entire time on Maggie, who’s topless and panting and leaning up on her elbows like she’s staring at a work of art.

Alex leaves her glasses on top of her head for good measure, and Maggie grins softly, appreciatively.
“Like I said, Danvers. The most beautiful thing I’ve ever seen.”

“I want more of you too, Maggie,” Alex tells her, and her statement is a question, and Maggie answers with a smile, answers by digging her heels into the bed and arching her hips up so she can pull off her boxers, giggling along with Alex as she tugs off her socks and chucks them somewhere into the kitchen.

“I hope they didn’t wind up under the counter again,” Alex muses, and Maggie smirks.

“That really the life problem you wanna occupy yourself with right now, Danvers?”

She licks her lips and she spreads her legs and Alex gulps and Alex splutters and Alex nearly passes out because Alex is very, very in love and Alex is very, very gay.

“I uh… I wouldn’t call this a… a problem…”

“Two choices, Danvers. Argue semantics with me, or get over here and make love to me. Or get over here and let me make love to you. So, three choices, I guess.”

Her words are sarcastic, but her voice is honey and her voice is affection and her voice is, in a word, love.

“The last two, please,” Alex whispers as she crawls forward with a smile, and Maggie returns her grin into their deep, deep kiss.

“Good choice, Alex.”

Alex hums in response and Maggie relishes the vibration the sound creates through Alex’s tongue in her mouth. She gasps softly as Alex shifts so her thigh is between Maggie’s legs.

“Good?” Alex confirms.

“Very,” Maggie grabs gently at her ass and pulls her closer.

It’s Alex’s turn to gasp as Maggie raises her own knee and takes Alex by the hips, her eyes never breaking contact as she uses her hands to encourage Alex up and down, up and down her thigh, moaning contentedly when Alex picks up her own rhythm and lets herself ride Maggie’s thigh with abandon, with peaceful recklessness, with trust and with soft screams of her name, of you’re beautiful, of I love you.

“You wanna cum for me, gorgeous?” Maggie asks, her voice thick with raw need, and Alex unravels, her entire body convulsing around Maggie’s thigh, in Maggie’s strong hands, her glasses falling off the top of her head and onto Maggie’s chest, and Maggie doesn’t care because god, god, god, this woman is perfection.

“Switch places,” Alex husks as soon as she rides out her last wave, but Maggie shakes her head.

“Babe, rest, you don’t have to – ”

“Oh, I am gonna rest. I’m gonna lay on my back for you and you’re gonna ride me like I just rode you until you cum as hard as I just did. Sound good?”

Maggie splutters and Alex chuckles as Maggie eagerly flips her over onto her back, slipping her thigh between Alex’s legs.

But when Alex goes to bend her knee, Maggie shakes her head.
“I wanna ride you, babe, but not your thigh right now. I want to feel your clit on mine.”

Alex hisses and tosses her head back into the pillow and shifts eagerly, shifts desperately, so Maggie can turn enough, adjust enough, until she’s dripping onto Alex’s own wetness, and the overwhelming heat of it, the way Maggie’s eyes flutter closed at the contact, wrecks Alex completely, thoroughly, permanently.

She knows Maggie can’t cum like this, no matter how hot they both find it – she can never get enough pressure, even on top, to toss her over the edge without hurting them both – so when she feels Maggie starting to lose control of her rhythm, when she feels her clit throbbing and soaked and desperate, when she hears her hissing in ecstatic frustration, Alex rasps, “Maggie, I wanna be inside you,” and Maggie practically topples over in eagerness to accommodate Alex’s hand between her legs.

“That something you want, babe?” she teases, her voice pure love, and Maggie chuckles raggedly.

“Hush up and fuck me, Danvers,” she croaks, and Alex makes sure her wrist is at a good angle, and Alex complies.

Maggie’s back arches and she tosses her head back and Alex’s name is a plea, a prayer, a hymn on her lips.

Alex slips one finger, two, more, deep, deep inside her, resting the back of her hand on her own thigh so that when Maggie grinds down for more pressure – riding Alex’s fingers for all either of them are worth – she gets enough of it to wreck her completely.

To toss her full and hard over the edge, to make her she collapse forward on top of Alex, bracing her hands onto the mattress, crashing her lips down to Alex’s as her body tightens around Alex’s fingers, as Alex whispers everything she needs to hear into her ear, everything about you’re beautiful and I love when you let go for me and I love you, Maggie, you, you, only you.

They’re so lost in each other’s eyes, in each other’s heartbeats, in each other’s arms, in each other’s love, that neither of them notice the front door opening.

And neither of them notice the front door closing, a blonde streak clutching at her chest and clawing at her glasses and muttering about “who doesn’t have a bedroom door? My sister. My sister doesn’t have a bedroom door. Sweet Rao I will never unsee that.”

Chapter Summary

Superfamily Trip to the Zoo

A birthday commission from a very beautiful and brave person, for a very beautiful and brave person.

Last time they’d all had a day off – a day away from attacks and betrayals and offices and labs – it was the beach.

Today? Today, it’s the zoo.

Kara practically skips on the way, holding Alex’s hand on one side and Maggie’s on the other, and James grins broadly behind the Danvers girls and their Maggie to snap photo after photo after photo.

“Hey, what about me, Olsen? I’m photogenic too! Where’s the love?” Winn teases as J’onn chuckles with his arm around M’gann, and James pulls Winn into his chest for a selfie.

Kara whines slightly about the line – “Shouldn’t Supergirl get to stroll in for free? And, you know, without waiting?” – and Alex laughs and asks before pulling Kara into her arms, because it’s going to be a long day of sights and smells and overstimulation of Kara’s Kryptonian senses, and the more love she buoys her with, the better. Kara sighs and leans back into her sister, letting her eyes close, blocking out – just for a moment, because Alex has got her, Alex won’t let anything happen to her – all sights, all sounds, all scents, all senses, except the ones that are anchoring her to the ground, to Alex.

“All good, sis?” Alex asks, and Kara takes a deep breath and nods as she opens her eyes.

“I wanna to see the birds. Can we see the birds first?”

“You don’t get enough time with them spinning around up there, Little Danvers?” Maggie teases as she tries to hold out her credit card to the cashier, but J’onn waves her away.

“DEO mental health budget. Pam will make sure Theresa approves it,” he leans down and whispers in her ear, and Maggie grins, leaning into M’gann.

“Young man’s got moves.”

“Oh, I know he does.”

They giggle and J’onn casts them a baffled look as he distributes the tickets to his children and his girlfriend.

“I take it we’re starting with birds for Ms. Danvers?” he asks, and Kara squeals in delight, tugging Alex’s hand forward. Alex yelps and grabs at Maggie, and the three of them lurch ahead, Winn stumbling after them and James racing to the front, weaving between throngs of children and parents and strollers and balloons, to get in front of his friends – his family – to photograph their laughing faces.

“What do you think they think about?” Kara wonders aloud as they slip into a steamy recreation of a forest, her head cast all the way back to skim the tops of the trees, Alex’s hand in hers the only thing keeping her on the wooden floor.

“Their songs!” a passing toddler chimes as they bump full speed into Maggie’s legs. “Sorry!” Maggie doesn’t miss a beat, getting down on one knee to be eye-level with the kid.

“That’s okay, kiddo. It’s an exciting place! So you think the birds think about their songs, huh?”

“Yeah!” The kid launches into an elaborate imitation of the chirps and calls all around them, and James asks the parents’ permission to snap a photo of the child laughing with Maggie, with Kara – because of course Kara’s dropped to her knees and started singing along with the child – Alex beaming behind them, leaning into Winn and smiling like she’s never seen such a beautiful sight as her girlfriend and her sister making bird songs with a random child.

When eventually the child’s parents thank James for happily agreeing to email them his photos – “that’s James Olsen, honey!” – they set off toward the reptile house, and Winn shudders.

“Do we um… do we have to go… you know… there? That’s usually connected to where they have the spiders and um… you know spiders and I don’t really see eye to eye…”

“Well yeah, they have so many more than you do, man,” James puts his arm around Winn’s shoulder, and Winn jumps.

“Distinctly not funny, James!”

“No, come on, we’ll avoid the spiders for you, okay? Besides, I think I know where Alex wants to go next,” James grins.

“Aww, babe, do you have a secret favorite animal you’ve never told me about?”

Alex blushes when they wind up gaping at the polar bears, a look of pure joy and pure sadness somehow mingling perfectly on Alex’s face.

“Iorek Byrinson, huh?” Maggie asks, and it’s the only thing that could make Alex tear her eyes away from the majestic creatures.

“How did you know?”

“All the other girls wanted to be Lyra. I bet you wanted to be Iorek. All that perfect armor, always protecting people he loves.”

“Are they… are they bonding over The Golden Compass?” Winn asks no one in particular, and M’gann burrows into J’onn’s chest as they all watch Alex kiss Maggie soft and tender and warm.

“See, this is why I need to finally meet Cisco, I’ll have someone to bond over Star Wars with,” he groans, and James and Kara clap him on the back supportively.

They all have to stop and wait for Alex and Maggie to finish kissing again when Maggie discovers that Alex absolutely loves butterflies – “don’t worry, I won’t tell anyone at the DEO, Danvers, wouldn’t want to ruin your ruthless rep with how gentle and melty and soft you actually are” – and James snaps a fantastic series of photos of Winn jumping up and down alongside a group of toddlers, in excitement to see a few zebras full out sprinting in their dwelling.

Maggie and Kara both break down squealing over the otters, Maggie reduced to utter mush as she gushes about how smart they are, how thy use rocks as tools, and Alex breaks down squealing over her girlfriend and her sister’s adorableness.

James squats down and stares, long and hard and serious, at a small family of elephants, and Maggie takes her turn photographing him, because “he doesn’t have enough pictures of himself, and look how sweet he looks.”

She snaps even more photos when Kara goes over and squats behind him, wrapping her arms around his waist and resting her chin on his shoulder as they both watch the creatures watching them.

Maggie earns another series of kisses from Alex – “god, Danvers, can you keep it in your pants for like a minute?” “No one asked you, Schott!” – when she buys Kara half the food court, and as Kara happily stuffs her face and debates loudly with James and Winn about the ethics of zoos and Alex and Maggie take the opportunity to thief some of James’s fries – Alex giving a portion of her share to Kara, who can never have enough – M’gann leans against J’onn, snacking on a bag of peanuts.

”And to think I was convinced I’d never have children again,” J’onn says softly, and M’gann leans up to kiss him gently.

"In your defense, no one could possibly have predicted you winding up with this crew.”

They watch as a food fight breaks out and Alex shields Kara from flying french fries while Maggie goes on the offensive against James and Winn nearly falls off the bench with laughter.

"No. No one could possibly have predicted this crew. And honestly, M’gann? I wouldn’t have it any other way.”

Chapter Summary

Comforting Winn

Alex’s phone chirps and she grabs it immediately, instinctively, before it can wake the woman sleeping next to her.

She squints at the caller ID, at the time, and her stomach drops.

“Winn, are you okay? Is Kara okay? Is –”

“No, no, relax Alex, it’s not DEO stuff, it’s – everything’s – you know what, that’s your I-was-sleeping-so-hard-because-I’m-recovering-from-a-wild-night-with-my-lady voice, so I’m just gonna let you –”

Alex rubs her eyes and sits up, making sure the covers stay wrapped around Maggie’s nearly naked body as Maggie sighs and shifts around at the loss of contact without opening her eyes.

“I don’t have a voice for – you know what, no, Winn, what is it?”

“I – it – I’m sorry Alex, it’s just… Kara and James are in this really intensive training with J’onn and Lyra’s out of town with her brother and I –”

“Spit it out, Schott, what is it?”

“My dad… my dad called. I didn’t take it, but I – he –”

Alex’s stomach lurches and she runs a hand over her face, her heart breaking more than she wants to portray in her voice.

“Where are you?”

“I’m home, where else would I –”

“Come over. I’ll leave the door open for you.”

“No, Alex, I shouldn’t have called, you’re with Maggie, I –”

Maggie rolls over and gropes sleepily for Alex’s body with her eyes closed. “And donuts,” she calls groggily, and Alex grins down at her.

“You hear that, Winn?”

“Loud and clear. Give me a half hour. And Alex –”
“Don’t make me regret being nice to you, Schott. Just get over here.”

She hangs up before he has the chance to change his mind, before he has the chance to talk himself out of reaching out to her.

She purses her lips and shudders slightly and sighs, slipping out of the bed to unlock the door for him.

“He okay, Al?” Maggie croaks, sitting up to watch Alex pad across the living room sleepily.

“He will be,” Alex whispers across the house. “Sleep, babe. He won’t be here for another half hour.”

She slips back into bed and Maggie melts into her arms immediately. “You’re not mad? I mean, you don’t mind?”

Maggie turns and puts a clumsy, groggy hand to Alex’s cheek. “Why’d I be mad at you for being a great big sister, Danvers?”

Alex pffts and shakes her head and is grateful Maggie can’t see her blush.

“You’re the best, you know that?” she kisses her, and Maggie grins with her eyes closed.

They’re not sure how or exactly when they drift back to sleep, but they both immediately snap back awake when the front door creaks open and light from the hallway spills into the apartment.

“Don’t shoot, don’t shoot, it’s me,” Winn holds up his hands as best he can with coffee and donuts, because if he knows nothing else, he knows the women in his life.

“C’mere, you,” Alex invites, and Maggie remembers with a jolt that she’s not wearing a shirt.

“Also, pass me that t-shirt on the floor in the kitchen, would you?” Maggie asks with a cocky, sleepy grin, and Winn chuckles slightly.

“Kitchen fun times, huh Danvers? Nice – ”

“Don’t – don’t say anything else,” Alex cuts him off, and Maggie chuckles this time.

He steps up into Alex’s room and passes Maggie her shirt with his eyes studiously closed.

Alex takes the opportunity to study him. His shoulders are stooped and he’s in one of James’s old hoodies and his eyes, even closed, are swollen. He looks tiny and he looks terrified.

She remembers sobbing into Maggie’s arms about her father.

She remembers Maggie sobbing into her arms about her own father.

How small it made Alex feel. How small it made Maggie look.

“Okay,” Maggie tells him, shirt on now, and Alex shifts and pats the bed between her and her girlfriend.

“Come on,” she says, and Winn just stares.

“You tell anyone about this and you will find out exactly what those index finger techniques are – ”
“You know it’s not as scary when you have sex-bed hair and your girlfriend just needed me to collect her shirt from your kitchen floor – ”

“Yeah, babe, also, index finger threats? Like, has a whole new meaning now, doesn’t – ”

“Traitor! You’re supposed to be on my side!”

“Actually, um… you invited me over to support me? So, it’s all about my side?”

Alex sighs and shrugs and holds out her hands for her coffee, and Winn provides.

Maggie holds out her hand too, but when he offers the coffee, she just shakes her hand again. He grins and presents her with the entire box of donuts.

“Now you’re getting it,” she says through a mouthful of chocolate glazed. “Get over here before Danvers and I make like Kara and eat the whole damn box.”

Winn gulps and sets his and Maggie’s coffees on the bedside table and crawls over Alex – she doesn’t move to make it easier for him, a shit-eating grin on her face and a mock-glare on his – to settle between them. Maggie tosses the covers over him and holds out the donut box.

“So what happened?”

Winn sighs and shrinks into himself and stuffs a donut into his mouth.

“Caooellheae?” he tries to ask around a mouthful of chocolate frosting.

“Try again, Schott,” Alex furrows her brow at him, and he tastes a gigantic gulp.

“Can you tell her, Alex?”

Alex heart breaks and she sips at her coffee and she almost reaches out to touch his face. Almost.

“Winn’s dad called him tonight. And he’s… he’s in prison – for um – ”

“He’s the Toyman,” Winn supplies quickly, like ripping off a bandaid, leaning over Alex to get his coffee so he doesn’t have to meet Maggie’s eyes.

But Maggie just nods and puts her hand on his knee and urges him to take another donut.

“I figured, Winn. I just – it’s not mine to bring up if you don’t wanna talk about it.”

Alex and Winn both turn to Maggie with looks of identical shock.

“Detective, guys. It’s kind of my job. And it’s not like your names aren’t, you know, the same.”

Winn casts his eyes down and digs into a jelly-filled.

“Funny thing, though. Because the names are the same, but the people are so different,” she continues, softly, softly, and Winn looks up at her with wide eyes and a set jaw.

“That’s not what he says. He says we’re the same. He said it when he escaped, and he said it again in the voicemail he left tonight.”

Alex does reach out to touch his face this time, briefly, softly, and Maggie smiles sadly across the bed at her girlfriend.
“Well, my dad says the reason he was willing to forcibly deport thousands of innocent people is me.”

“And mine says I’m a disgusting disgrace and selfish and am going to hell and he never wants to see me again.”

Alex exhales with tears in her eyes and Winn turns to Maggie with a furrowed brow, concern and sadness all over his face.

Maggie tilts her coffee cup toward his in salute, and offers simply, by way of explanation, “Lesbian.”

“Maggie, I… I didn’t know. I’m… I’m so sorry.”

“Well hey, dysfunctional, abusive relationships with fathers’ club in this bed tonight. At least there’s donuts, right?”

Winn smiles and leans to put his head on Maggie’s shoulder, and Alex wishes it were game night, not comfort night, so she could take a picture.

“Invite Kara and James with their dead dads and we’ll have a real party,” Winn deadpans from Maggie’s shoulder, and Alex tosses her arm around him, her fingers playing on the back of Maggie’s neck.

“You’re nothing like your dad, Winn. Nothing. And even if… even if you have those things inside you, it’s the choices, you know, that you make. And you’ve chosen to… to save the world, dude, not destroy it.”

Winn sighs and sits up, grabbing a third donut from the box at Maggie’s feet, biting into it and offering the rest to Alex miserably. She accepts and keeps her arm steady around his shoulders.

“How can you be sure?”

Alex sighs and chews thoughtfully.

“You know, Kara didn’t really have a lot of friends. Growing up. She was the weird kid, the freak who never quite fit in. People always took advantage of how kind she is, how… how amazing she is. And then she interviewed at CatCo, and she met you, and you know when she first told me about you, about this IT guy who takes her to lunch and explains all of Cat Grant’s idiosyncracies so she doesn’t get fired, and laughs at her terrible jokes and makes terrible jokes of his own, and has toys all over his desk and stammers when he gets nervous but always, always stands up for her when people try to dismiss her as incompetent just because she’s… well, Kara… I was suspicious of you. I… I didn’t trust it. You. I thought you just wanted her, that you wanted to use her for something, that you were making fun of her. But the stories never stopped. The stories about how good you were to her. And then I met you, and you… you were real. You just… you just really cared for her. And then she started dating the only other friend you had and you just… you took care of yourself, and then you just… you kept caring. You’re rare, Winn. You… you saw Kara. You always saw her. So no. You’re nothing like your dad. Because you see goodness in the world and you’re not threatened by it, you don’t want to destroy it, you just want to make more goodness yourself.”

“Alex, I – ”

“No, nope, don’t say anything. I’ve just fulfilled my yearly quota of being nice to you, so really, you don’t wanna push it.”
“I was just gonna tell you that you have some powdered sugar on your lip.”

“I can get that for you, babe – ”

“God, guys, I’m right – ow, Maggie, that’s my foot – it – okay – I’ll just… I’ll be on the other side of your inexplicably massive bed…”

“Mmhmm.”

“I love you. Okay?”

“I love you too, Alex. I love you too.”

“Aww, guys, you’re so sweet!”

“If anyone at the DEO finds out about this, I swear to god, Sawyer – ”

“What are you gonna do, babe, threaten me with your index finger? Cause that’s not a threat – ”

“Oh my god, why are you both like this?”

“Oh Alex, come on. Look at my puppy eyes! And your woman’s dimples! You love us!”

Winn activates his best puppy eyes and Maggie flashes her biggest smile, and Alex, for once in her life, is defenseless and feels amazing about it.

“Yeah. Yeah, I do.”
Anonymous asked:

Would you write NB Alex having sex with Maggie for the first time since coming out?

They haven’t had sex since Alex came out.

Not that Maggie hasn’t wanted to. God, has she wanted to.

And not that Alex hasn’t wanted to. God, have they wanted to.

But their fear’s been outweighing their need, and Maggie reminds them every day that she’s here, that she’s not going anywhere, that Alex is the one she wants, the only one, no matter what – “ride or die doesn’t exclude pronouns, Danvers” – but every time they kiss, Alex feels Maggie holding back.

So every time they kiss, Alex feels like Maggie’s just being nice to them, just sticking around until Alex is secure enough with this whole coming out part two thing to be fine on their own.

“Do you not want me?” they splutter on the couch one night, a week or so into binding – only on some days, only in some moods – a few weeks or so after the haircut, a month or so after starting to come out.

“I… what? Al, what are you – yes, of course I want you, I – ”

“You’ve been holding back. You’ve been… I don’t know, Maggie, I just feel like you’re not into me… physically… since…”

Their jaw sets and they look away and Maggie gasps softly and Maggie curses internally because of course, of course she’s fucked everything up again, of course she has.

“Alex, babe, no, that’s not… I’m sorry. Alex, look at me. Please? Al, I want you. I do. More than I ever have, I’m just… you are going through so much right now, with yourself, with your body, and I wanted to let you take the lead, I wanted to let show me what you want, in case what you want is different now, and it’s okay if it is, but I can’t know unless you tell me, unless you show me, so I held back and when you didn’t go forward, I just thought… I thought you weren’t ready. That you didn’t want to start having sex again yet, that… that you were still figuring things out.”

“So… so you do. Want me.” Their eyes are soft and vulnerable and hopeful, and god, yes, yes, yes, does Maggie want them.

“Alex Danvers, I can’t imagine myself ever not wanting you.”

Alex gulps and runs a hand through their newly shortened hair and takes a deep, long breath, eyes locked into Maggie’s.

“Then let me take you to bed.”

Maggie’s breath hitches and she nods and accepts Alex’s hand and chews on her lip watching Alex walk, watching Alex’s thumb caress the pad of her hand, watching Alex turn at the bed and look at her like they’ve never been quite this starving for anything before.

“Kiss me, Al?” Maggie asks, her voice so small, and Alex obliges with a sureness, a steadiness, that reminds Maggie of their very first kiss; with a sureness, a steadiness, that makes Maggie swoon in a way she wouldn’t allow herself to that first time in the bar.

Alex’s strong arms keep her standing and turn her around, even as they keep kissing her, even as their tongue slips past her open lips and they groan their relief into Maggie’s mouth.

“You wanna lay down for me?” they ask, their voice ragged and needy and everything Maggie wants to hear.

“Yeah,” she breathes and lays back on the bed, smiling when Alex, as always, rushes to make sure her head rests on the softest pillow.

“I missed your body,” Alex whispers, straddling her and staring down at her like she’s got nothing on even though she’s still in her henley and jeans.

“I’ve missed yours,” Maggie answers, and Alex stiffens.

“Al. I’m sorry, I didn’t mean it like that. I meant… You tell me what you want, you show me. I’m not gonna ask to touch you wherever or however you don’t wanna be touched. And if you wanna be touched somewhere and then you change your mind, that’s okay. And if what we do tonight is different from what we do tomorrow night, that’s okay, too. I just want you, Alex. I want all of you, whatever you want to give me. And if you’re not sure, we’ll figure it out together. Okay?”

Alex swallows their relieved tears into a searing kiss that has Maggie whining and writhing underneath them, and Alex moans into her mouth, their hands pausing at the hem of Maggie’s shirt.

“Yes, please, please, please,” Maggie begs, and Alex grins as they lean back and tug Maggie into a sitting position, tugging her henley above her head and bringing their fingers to rest on the back of Maggie’s bra.

“Can I?” they ask, and the wrecked raggedness in their voice almost destroys Maggie, and she decides she never wants to be anything but ruined underneath Alex again.

“Yeah,” she husks, and Alex unhooks Maggie’s bra in one go, a shit-eating grin forming on their face.

“Proud of yourself there, Danvers?” Maggie flirts, and Alex pffts.

“I… No. That’s ridiculous, I can diffuse bombs, I’m not proud of myself for… yeah. Yeah, I’m pretty proud of myself.”

“Good, you should be,” Maggie rasps into their ear, and Alex groans and pushes Maggie back down on the bed.

“Okay?”
“Oh yeah.”

Alex grins and kisses their way down Maggie’s collarbone, pausing above her whimpering form to ask with their eyes if they can take her nipple into their mouth. Maggie nods wordlessly, because words won’t form right now, and Alex’s mouth is warm and wet and hot and Alex’s mouth is absolutely perfect.

Maggie grabs at Alex’s short hair and Alex moans and Maggie grabs harder.

“Fuck,” Alex swears into her chest, and it’s Maggie’s turn to be proud of herself, even as she lays writhing under Alex’s tongue, Alex’s teeth, Alex’s lips.

“I want… Al, I… do you want my mouth on you?”

Alex stills and looks up, a combination of lust and confusion in their eyes.

“What do you have in mind?”

“Well, I um… I love what you’re doing to me, and I just kind of… wanted to know if I could return the favor. Maybe… suck you off? If you wanted?”

Alex’s eyes roll into the back of their head and they moan deep from the back of their throat.

“And I can’t wait for when you do. But um… there’s other ways to suck you off. Sit up. If you want.”

Alex furrows their brow, but they’re curious and god, god do they want what Maggie’s suggesting, and god, god, god do they trust the woman licking her lips and looking at Alex – boy haircut and boy tank top and marks from their binder still on their skin under that tank top – like she’s never seen anyone more attractive. More beautiful or more handsome. More desirable.

So Alex sits and Maggie gestures them to the edge of the bed, and Maggie slips off the bed and Maggie kneels and Maggie looks up at them with swollen lips and raw passion in her eyes and Alex nearly passes out because fuck, fuck, fuck.

“Do you trust me?” she asks, and Alex nods because yes, of course, yes, of course they do.

“If you want to take off your shirt for me? You don’t have to.”

Alex’s heart races and Alex gulps but Maggie’s been helping them with their binder and Maggie’s been perfect and it’s nothing Maggie hasn’t seen and it’s Maggie, it’s Maggie, so yes, Alex slips off their shirt and Maggie grins softly and kisses a trail along the small marks left from the binder they took off when they got home.

And then Alex’s heart really starts racing, because then Maggie leans up from kneeling and runs her tongue along one of Alex’s nipples, and Alex hisses and Maggie stops and Alex shakes their head because they think they know what Maggie’s doing and god, god, god, Maggie is perfect.

And sure enough, she takes Alex into her mouth like she’s going down on them, and her eyes are glued on Alex’s as her lips close around Alex’s nipple, around their chest, and Alex looks down and Maggie’s kneeling for them and Maggie’s respecting them and Maggie’s sucking them off because Maggie doesn’t care what pronouns Alex uses, she just wants to make Alex happy, make Alex feel validated, make Alex feel connected to their body, make Alex feel fucking incredible, and god, fuck, dammit, they do.
“You like it, Al?” she pauses to ask, and Alex doesn’t remember words, so they tangle their fingers into Maggie’s hair and bring her head back toward their body, and Maggie moans happily, eagerly, and continues with her tongue, with her mouth, with her lips, with her eyes.

When Alex can’t take anymore – when the visual, the feeling of pure validation, of Maggie giving them a blowjob on a part of their body that they’d been feeling so confused about and suddenly felt so fucking alive with, but in their own way, is too much, is going to make them pass out from relief, from desire, from intensity – they pull back and offer Maggie their hands, pulling her off of her knees and back onto the bed.

“Can I take your pants off?” they ask clumsily, because right now, all they need is Maggie, and words are getting in the way of that.

Maggie chuckles and brings her pants down herself, her eyes on Alex’s face the entire time.

“Something you want to do to me, Danvers?”

Alex shakes their head, their lust, their need, paused for a moment, because god, Maggie is gorgeous. And they tell her so, and Maggie bites her lip and smiles, suddenly shy, and that shyness makes Alex love her even more somehow.

They slip their tank top back on and Maggie nods softly, making a note in her head, and shrug their jeans off but leave their boxers on, something else that Maggie smiles at faintly and nods softly about.

Alex loves being paid this much attention to, being this heard, but right now? Right now, they want to give all that attention to Maggie.

“Spread your legs for me?” they ask, and Maggie gasps harshly, loudly, and Alex grins as they kiss their way up Maggie’s open thighs, Maggie whimpering and starting to thrash her hips and twist her fingers into the bedsheets to try, in vain, to control her need.

“Al,” she pants, and Alex smiles up at her.

“I’ve missed the way you taste,” they tell her, and Maggie tosses her head back in ecstasy, and it’s all the permission Alex needs to seal their lips over Maggie’s clit and lick slow, hard, solid, steady, until Maggie comes completely undone, until Maggie begs please, please, Al, I need you inside me, Alex, please baby, please, and god, does Alex love fulfilling Maggie’s requests.

They slip their fingers one at a time into Maggie’s soaked opening and Maggie whimpers and screams and keeps begging for more, and Alex gives more, takes more, does more, bringing their lips back down onto Maggie’s clit until she cums, hard and chaotic and loud and perfect, all over Alex’s fingers, all over their eager tongue.

“Alex,” Maggie sighs as she comes down from her high, as Alex crawls back up her body and wraps her up with theirs.

“I got you, babe,” they tell her, and she curls contentedly into their shoulder.

“I wanna get you too,” she tells them, but Alex just grins and kisses her forehead.

“Next time, Maggie. Right now? Right now I wanna hold you.”

Maggie nods and tosses one of her legs over Alex, burrowing onto them completely.
“Don’t let go?” she asks, and Alex kisses her hair for a long moment.

“Never,” they tell her, and they mean it as a promise.
Maggie’s used to taking care of people.

She’s used to it because it’s really all she ever does.

She overempathizes – she always has – but not deep, not hard, not desperate.

Because what she told Alex is true: there aren’t a lot of people that she cares about. Like, really cares about.

Abstractly, she cares about everybody. It’s why she is who she is.

But personally, passionately?

She cares about Alex.

A lot.

So when Alex sinks into a deep depression after Jeremiah, after almost losing Kara again, again, again, and when Alex tries – hard – not to drink, and fails once, and fails again, and Maggie picks up the pieces, she’s happy to do it.

Happy to do it, because god, she loves her, she loves her, she loves her.

Which is precisely why it’s so hard to watch Alex gasp for breath, tears streaking down her face, apologizing, apologizing, apologizing, her words slurring and the kisses she tries to give her sloppy – kisses that Maggie doesn’t accept because “not like this, baby, not when you’re drunk” – tasting like whiskey.

Which is precisely why it’s so hard to watch Alex sit on the couch, remote in hand, bottle of club soda open next to her, eyes vacant, not moving, not doing anything but staring at god knows what on the television, for hours, hours, hours on end.

She and Kara develop shifts.

To be with her. To take care of her.

Because alone time is important.
But right now, for Alex, alone time is a bit dangerous.

It was going to be Maggie’s night – they were going to watch movies and cuddle.

But she watched a child nearly die in the field today, and she can’t, she can’t, she can’t, be even partially responsible for someone else’s mood, for taking care of someone right now.

She calls her, though, because she needs to make sure.

Needs to make sure Alex feels loved. Feels cared for. Feels adored.

Because she is, she is, she is.

“Hey babe, how you doing?”

“Bored. I want an invasion or an explosion or something.”

Maggie grins and shakes her head faintly. “You’re in a league of your own, Danvers. Listen, I was thinking about tonight – would it be okay if I duck out of movies and Kara comes over instead? I had a rough case today, and I kind of just wanted to blow of some steam and lose my cool a little bit – “

“No, no, of course. Kara’s here right now, I – hey, wanna do a movie tonight?”

Maggie pulls the phone away from her ear at the sound of Kara’s excited squeal. There’s shuffling and static and then Kara’s voice takes over from Alex’s.

“Hey Maggie! I have just the musical in mind for me and Alex to watch! But um…”

Maggie hears footsteps, and Kara is clearly walking rapidly away from her sister.

“Are you okay?”

Maggie sighs. “Yeah, Little Danvers, I just… I need to take care of myself a bit, I need – “

“Yeah. Yeah, of course Maggie, whatever you need. Should I send Winn and James over to your place with boxing gloves and beer?”

She’s ready to say no.

No because she already feels horrible – like she’s abandoning Alex, pawning her off onto Kara, like she’s being a terrible girlfriend, like she’s being unsupportive and insensitive and a general, all around selfish asshole – by canceling their date, but she can barely breathe because her own depression is so strong, she can barely fight the gravity pulling at her chest because the weight of her own hurt is so heavy.

But Kara would die to protect Alex.

Hell, Kara has none of Alex’s ruthlessness, but she would kill to protect Alex.

And Kara isn’t angry. Kara isn’t calling Maggie selfish and accusing her of abandoning her sister.

Instead, Kara is offering to send in the cavalry to make sure that Maggie, too, is getting what she needs.

And the idea of Winn with boxing gloves really is hilarious.
“Yeah. Yeah, okay, ask them. Please.”

“Great! Okay, let me give you back to Alex – “

“Little Danvers – thank you.”

“Thank you, Maggie. I’m proud of you. Here’s your girl.”

“Hey.”

“Pfft. That’s what she thinks.”

“Al.”

“Maggie?”

“You know I love you, right, babe? And you know I’m so proud of you for how strong you’re being, with everything that’s going on?”

There’s a long silence, and she thinks she hears Alex sniffle.

“I love you too, Mags. Have a good time unwinding with the boys tonight, okay? Maybe we can get breakfast in the morning?”

“I’d love that.”

And, in the morning, she does.

But she also winds up loving her night.

Because James and Winn don’t ask questions when they come over.

Winn has pizza and beer, and James has a gym bag, and he admires the heavy bag Maggie has set up in the corner of her studio while Winn bustles through her kitchen grabbing plates and tugging through drawers for her bottle openers.

They don’t talk about anything real until James and Maggie have finally taught Winn to throw a proper punch, Maggie showing him how to align his fist, James helping him rotate his hips properly.

Winn begs for a break – “I finally did it right! Gotta go off on a high, right?” and collapses onto her couch with a slice and a bottle in his hands. He watches Maggie wrap her wrists, James steady the bag, and Maggie dig into it with perfect form, with perfectly dispassionate passion.

Of course Alex is in love with her.

Winn cheers her on around mouthfuls of pizza and gulps of beer and she grins and punches harder. But her punches become less about form and more about rage after a while, and James and Winn exchange glances. Winn changes tactics.

“So how’s she doing? Your woman?” he in between Maggie’s blows and James’s soft encouragement.
Maggie freezes and James gently reminds her to relax her shoulders, and her nearly clips the side of his face with the force of her next punch.

“Not great.”

Jab, jab. Uppercut.

“I mean, of course she’s great. She’s amazing. I just… It’s never hurt me this much.”

“What’s never hurt you this much?” James asks, eyes on Maggie’s, hands bracing the bag.

She slams into it until she can’t anymore.

“I love her. I love her. I love her like I’ve never loved anyone, and watching her hurt? It… it makes me want to… to murder people, you know, but… but sometimes there aren’t any people to murder, sometimes it’s just… brain chemistry or something, you know, and I can’t do anything about it, at all, so it’s helpless, I’m helpless, and I just… I love her. You know? I just love her so much.”

She rests her forehead on the bag for a moment, panting, sweating, staring at nothing in particular. At anything but James or Winn’s face.

The boys glance at each other, James with a soft smile on his face, because god, Alex has long deserved someone who loves her like this.

Winn swallows a gulp of pizza – he’d stopped chewing while Maggie was talking – and stares at her for a long moment.

“You know what makes everything better, Maggie?”

She grunts and halfway turns her face in his direction.

“Pizza.”

“You know I can still toss you in lockup for fun,” she deadpans, but she tugs off her wraps and grabs a slice, collapsing on the couch next to him anyway. James follows suit and settles on the floor in front of them.

“You know Lois almost died. A lot. When Lucy and I were together. Hazard of being Superman’s girlfriend, I guess. And Lucy would really get… well, down. She’d collapse in on herself, kind of like Alex tends to do.”

“It’s not a coincidence they’re both soldiers,” Winn chugs his beer, and Maggie toasts him silently, thoughtfully, with her own bottle.

“And it was hard. Watching her going through it, and feeling like I couldn’t do anything about it. But what you’re doing right now, Maggie? Taking a night to take care of yourself, to make sure you have the boundaries you need? Letting yourself acknowledge when you have your own tough day, and do what you need to do for yourself? That’s just as important as taking care of Alex directly, Maggie.”

“The man speaks the truth, Sawyer,” Winn chimes softly, and Maggie exhales slowly, softly.

“I’m not abandoning her?”
She keeps her voice steady and she keeps her voice invulnerable, but the question itself almost tears her throat on the way out anyway.

“No.”

“Absolutely not.”

“Anyway, Alex told me she’s going to make her watch Not Another Teen Movie.”

“Alex hates that movie,” Maggie’s brow furrows.

James grins. “Kara hates it more.”

“That’s… unexpected.”

“The Danvers girls are unpredictable,” Winn declares, and Maggie grins.

The boys both sigh with soft, resigned grins, and all three of them drink – deeply – at the same moment.

“Yep. Yep, they are.”

Chapter Summary

syllabicacronyms asked:

ok, but when and how does adrian find out kara is supergirl?

Something’s familiar about Kara the first time he sees her, when she walks almost timidly into Maggie’s apartment – which Adrian’s filled up with the scents of the cooking his dad and Maggie have taught him to do over the years – and hugs her sister and hugs Maggie.

There’s something familiar about her when she walks toward him, where he’s stationed in the kitchen with the “Kiss the Cook, He’s Hot, Just Look at Him” apron Maggie keeps in his little cabinet.

Maggie squints and watches him closely, her lips pursed with the beginnings of a grin.

Alex nudges her gently in the shoulder.

Maggie nudges her gently right back.

Kara adjusts her glasses, and Adrian – ever relishing the opportunity to play host, especially tonight; the first night that he’s meeting anyone from Alex’s life – wipes his hand on his apron and extends it toward her.

“Firm handshake,” they both say, impressed, at the same time, and Maggie and Alex exchange a partially nervous, partially excited glance.

“I’ve heard all about you from Maggie and Alex,” Kara tells him after they power through their slightly awkward giggling and let their hands drop awkwardly to their sides.

“And I’ve heard all about you. So I cooked a lot! I love food, too,” he enthuses, and he gives her a whirlwind tour of all the dishes he and Alex have been making.

Kara is groaning within seconds, and she leans into Maggie eagerly.

“Can I borrow him sometimes? He cooks so much!”

“I helped!” Alex protests, offended, and Maggie, Adrian, and Kara exchange a secret glance that has all three of them stifling laughter.

The tickle war that ensues – Adrian only joining the Danvers girls and their Maggie after Alex yanks him in – bonds him and Kara into a solid tickle team against their older sisters.

As the night goes on, Adrian’s initial impression of familiarity with Kara fades as he gets to know her.

Gets to know the way she snorts sometimes when she laughs; the way that Alex and Maggie really weren’t exaggerating when they told him to cook extra food; the way she doesn’t flinch, not once, when Adrian and Maggie swap queer jokes; the way she laughs along, because maybe, just maybe, she’s queer, too.

He doesn’t think about it – that familiarity, that jolt of ‘haven’t I seen you before’ – until he’s face down on the cracked concrete, his university in Star City under some sort of Cadmus attack.

He doesn’t think he’s injured – he thinks he can feel all his limbs – but his hands shake on his phone.

Everyone around him must be calling 911. He knows that. Him?

He doesn’t care if she’s entire cities away.

He calls the only police number that makes him feel safe.

Maggie’s.

“Okay, Ade, can you get somewhere out of the way? Somewhere hidden? I’m sending someone for you. I promise we’re getting you out of there, I promise you. Just stay on the phone, okay, kid? I’ve got you. Just… just stay on the phone. And no heroics, kid, you here me?”

He can’t hear what she shouts next – it’s garbled and there’s so much screaming on his end that he can’t get his head around it – and he doesn’t have time to protest that whoever she sends can’t possibly get there in time, because these guys have guns that look like they can blow up the entire quad with one or two shots…

And he heard her, he did, when she said no heroics, but there’s some kid that looks like a freshman and he’s sitting ducks, looks like his ankle is broken, and Adrian doesn’t think – Maggie wouldn’t think – and Adrian sprints, and Adrian hauls him to his feet, and Adrian turns, and there’s a Cadmus weapon trained at him, and Maggie’s voice will be the last thing he hears, and somehow, that’s okay.

But then there’s a shadow flying low above him, and there’s a rustling and his hair flutters and there’s a red cape and an explosion from the weapon that was pointing at him but the explosion doesn’t hit him or the kid he’s supporting, doesn’t hurt him or the kid he’s holding.

He doesn’t even feel its heat.

Because Supergirl has landed in front of him, and he hears his schoolmates scattered across the broken quad, cheering, because Supergirl is snapping the weapon over her knee and knocking the Cadmus guy out cold easily.

She turns to Adrian and the boy with the broken ankle with her hands on her hips, like she hadn’t just flown across multiple cities and beaten up an armed Cadmus lackey with her bare hands, grinning faintly at the applause in the background.

“Oof, looks like you need a doctor,” she tells the boy, and he nods breathlessly.

“Can we get a couple medics here?” Supergirl calls, her voice low, and something twitches in the back of Adrian’s mind, that familiarity, but he can’t place it.

She doesn’t look at him and he vaguely wonders why as two paramedics on scene run up to help the boy Adrian had protected. The boy kisses Adrian’s cheek with a soft thank you, scribbling his number onto Adrian’s forearm as they help him limp somewhere he can get his ankle looked at.
Adrian watches him go with wide eyes, and he raises his phone to his ear again, but Supergirl takes it from him before he can speak.

“I thought you told him no heroics!” she scolds into the phone, and suddenly Adrian knows why he felt that sensation of familiarity when he met Kara.

“Well, apparently he’s just about as good at obeying orders as you and my sister are; when I got here he was busy rescuing some kid with a broken ankle – I know, I’ll tell him – I – well, I think he’s earned it. I mean, you trust him, right, and he just proved he’s got the heart of a hero – I know you’ve always said that – okay, you know what, I’m on duty, I’m putting him on the phone. I’ll see you at movie night tonight. Tell Alex everything’s under control here, but they should still send a team to clean up the mess. Here, Adrian,” she finishes, handing him back the phone.

“Thanks Kara,” he says faintly, softly, looking levelly into her eyes, and she grins softly at him.

“Welcome to the Superfriends,” she puts a hand on his shoulder with a soft wink, letting her voice rise more into Kara’s than Supergirl’s for a moment.

He puts the phone back to his ear, still slack-jawed, as Kara flies up, up, and away with a whoosh that blows his jacket back, over to survey the rest of campus, to make sure there’s no lingering threat.

“Maggie – “ he begins, but stops, because he has no idea what to say.

“The glasses really don’t help, do they, kid?”

He laughs explosively, because in the last five minutes, he’s almost died, he’s saved a boy’s life, he’s gotten said boy’s number, and he’s found out that his queer aunt slash sister-in-law just happens to be Supergirl.

He’s alive, and he has a boy’s phone number on his arm, and Supergirl – Kara, Kara, Kara – trusts him with her biggest secret.

So he laughs explosively, he laughs happily, he laughs with relief and with love and with affection, because no. No, the glasses really don’t help.
Hi! Don't mean to bother, I'm really sorry, I just wanted to ask something. There is this part in many of your fics when Maggie or Alex has a rough day and they go home and the other 'let's them use their body'. I get it, i really do, but maybe once when you're writing a scene like that—for whatever prompt— in the future, could you write it in a way that the other says no to that? I understand that it's all consensual and out of love, it'd be just great to see one of them say no for once.

They talk about Maggie hating to talk about herself.

But Alex kind of hates it, too.

She prefers alcohol and she prefers forcing other people to talk. By whatever means necessary.

But Maggie and Kara have her working on her drinking, and they’re both teaming up with J’onn to make her work on her rage, so sex?

Sex is a great option for not talking, too.

And most nights – most nights when she can’t talk, when she just wants to strip Maggie naked (or not) and fuck her hard and fuck her fast and listen to her scream in ecstasy so she doesn’t have to listen to the screams of agony blaring through her brain – most nights, Maggie lets her.

Most nights, Maggie likes it.

No.

Most nights, Maggie loves it.

Not that Alex is in pain. Never that Alex is in pain.

But most nights, Maggie loves letting her body be Alex’s bandage.

Most nights, Maggie begs for more and takes her deeper than Alex ever thought she could go, lets her pound into her harder than she ever would without Maggie’s desperate encouragement, eager hands, open legs, heaving chest, soaked opening.

But tonight? Tonight, Maggie’s tired and Maggie’s got her mind on the cases she’s working and she’s still sore from that sparring session with James and tonight, if they’re going to have sex, she wants it gentle and she wants it slow and she wants it tender.

Tonight, she doesn’t want it hard and fast and wordless.

So when Alex kisses her in greeting, she kisses her back, because god, her lips are like coming
And when Alex keeps kissing her, she opens her mouth readily, because Alex has still got her afternoon coffee on her breath, and god does she taste perfect.

And she sighs softly when Alex’s hands slip up and under her shirt, because Alex’s hands are cool to the touch and Alex’s hands are calloused and soft all at once, just like Maggie’s.

But when Alex pushes her back into the counter and pulls back and raggedly asks, “Yeah?” – Alex’s hands bracing, Maggie knows, to spin Maggie around by the hips and fuck her from behind over the counter – Maggie takes a nervous, terrified, panicked breath and tries to say the word no.

She can’t.

Her throat closes, because god, what if Alex gets mad?

What if she doesn’t feel loved, cared for?

What if she just leaves because Maggie’s not going to give her what she wants, so she’ll get it elsewhere?

Or she’ll get it from alcohol, and it’ll be Maggie’s fault?

She thinks about what she would tell Adrian, about what she tells the kids at the queer youth center when they’re talking about sexual health and safety, and she breathes deeper.

And she shakes her head.

Alex blinks and squints, looking down at her like she’s focusing through a fog for a long moment.

And then her hands drop away and she backs away so hard, so quickly, Maggie almost overbalances.

“I’m sorry. I’m sorry, Maggie, I shouldn’t have – it – I’m sorry, I should go – “

“Alex, no. Remember what you told me? That it’s a relationship, and you don’t get to walk out? You don’t get to walk out, Ally. I don’t…”

She takes an enormous gulp of mostly air and she reaches out for Alex’s hands, and Alex takes hers, and the rapidly-forming pit in Maggie’s stomach shrinks somewhat.

She continues softer, continues quieter, continues with one of her hands leaving Alex’s to stroke her cheek.

“Alex, I need to be allowed to say no without you getting this upset and wanting to leave.”

Alex’s lip wobbles and she looks for all the world like Maggie just told her they’re breaking up, and she gasps out another apology.

“No, Alex, it’s not… you didn’t do anything wrong. Okay? You didn’t. I was okay with everything – I liked everything – until I said no. And then you stopped. And the whole reason I had the opportunity to say no is because you stopped to make sure. Right? So you didn’t do anything wrong, Danvers. Okay?”

“Do you not… am I not…”
Maggie shakes her head and lets her thumb trace a path down Alex’s trembling jawline.

“Yes, I want you. And yes, you are incredibly attractive. I just… I can’t do the rough and tumble tonight, Alex, I… I don’t want to.”

She tilts her head and studies Alex’s face as she processes, as she thinks it through; studies Alex’s face as she tries to convince herself that Maggie is not rejecting her, that Maggie is not angry with her, that Maggie just doesn’t want to have sex right now.

She watches as Alex nods slowly, and her own heart rate settles down, because god, god, god does she love this woman.

“But,” she offers quietly, and Alex brings still shaky eyes to meet hers, “seems like you had a pretty rough day. So even though rough sex isn’t on the menu, I can offer you fairly aggressive cuddles.”

A grin starts to tug at Alex’s mouth and a spark starts to return to her dulled, terrified eyes as she tilts her lips to the side.

“Aggressive cuddles, Sawyer? Is it even possible to cuddle aggressively?”

“Oh, Danvers. Come. Let me show you. Okay?”

She lets Alex hold her firm, hold her hard, hold her close, every single curve of their bodies snug against each other like puzzle pieces.

“I love you, Maggie,” Alex whispers, letting the sound of Maggie’s soft breathing and the candles she lit and the music she flipped on block out the agonized moaning, panting, begging, and screaming instead of ecstatic moaning, panting, begging, and screaming.

She would never have thought it would work.

But Maggie’s body is soft and pliant, and Maggie’s body is safe, and Maggie wraps her own hands over Alex’s arms around her body, cradling Alex to her even as Alex cradles Maggie to herself.

And god, does it work.

More hogwarts AU of Maggie and Alex?

She loves flying.

Loves it.

The wind in her hair, the broom between her legs, the way her robes whipped back behind her, like they were her wings and she can soar over the Forest, over the castle, over the lake, over Hogsmeade. Over everything.

It makes her forget. Or, almost, anyway.

Forget – or, almost, anyway – that she can’t go back to her parents’ place over the holidays, because they tolerated her being a witch but dammit, he would not stand for her being a… a homosexual…. too, because how could she possibly be so selfish?

“God, you’d think he’s afraid of getting hexed for even saying the word ‘lesbian,'“ she mutters mid-flight.

Almost forgets.

Almost.

But a voice calls her back, a voice calls her down.

“Maggie! Maggie, it’s almost dinner, and if Professor J’onzz catches you using the pitch without permission again – “

“Alright, alright, I’m coming, Little Danvers!” she calls, and she grins, relishing the way the third year looks after her, cares for her. No one’s ever done that before.

She takes in a deep breath, and she catapults her Comet 260 into a nearly ninety degree dive. She hears Kara scream for her to be careful, and she pulls up cleanly – well, less cleanly than she would have with a less rickety broom, but hey, at least she’s not a pile of mush on the grass – just above the ground, just before it’s too late.

“You know I get so nervous when you do that,” Kara says shakily as Maggie swings her leg off her broom and tosses her arm around Kara’s shoulder, setting off toward the Great Hall.

“I’m sorry, Little Danvers. I just couldn’t resist. I love the feeling, you know?”

“You love the feeling of practically getting yourself killed?” a voice drawls as they stroll past the greenhouse, and Kara lights up, but Maggie stiffens.
“Danvers,” she greets as Kara slips away from Maggie’s side and into Alex’s arms.

Kara – the Hufflepuff third year – is the only one who touches Slytherin fifth year Alex Danvers and lives to tell the tale.

Maggie – proud Hufflepuff fifth year – would love to join that elite crew.

Because Alex is rumored to be ruthless, but Maggie only ever sees that streak when someone she loves is threatened.

And Alex is rumored to be cold, but she’s spent too many nights listening to Kara’s stories of Alex’s warmth to believe the facade the Slytherin puts up.

But she’s always afraid that Alex only ever tolerates her because, in Kara’s first year, Maggie put her body between Kara and a bunch of Slytherins who didn’t yet know Kara was The Alex Danvers’s kid sister.

Maggie doesn’t know that she’s nearly all Alex ever thinks about.

But Maggie has a smile that lights up the entire Astronomy Tower at midnight, and Alex is withdrawn and distant and cold to everyone but Kara.

Maggie is kind and Maggie is selfless and Maggie is so brave Alex often wonders why the hell she’s not in Gryffindor and she’s so smart Alex often wonders why the hell she’s not in Ravenclaw, but the only House Alex knows Maggie doesn’t belong in?

Her House.

Slytherin.

And Maggie deserves someone better than someone who lives in the dungeons and likes it.

Maggie deserves sunshine.

Kara is sunshine, but Alex? Alex is the opposite.

So she keeps her distance and she keeps her cool, because anyway, she doesn’t want to imagine Eliza’s response if she came home saying she wants women, not men. Because how could that ever be good enough? How could that ever be perfect?

“So what do you call that?” she greets, her eyes cooly raking Maggie’s body up and down. “You pulled that off on that old Comet?”

Maggie shrugs and tosses her broom from hand to hand.

Alex stares between Kara and Maggie and Maggie’s rickety old broom, and Alex thinks about Kara’s pleas, which come in almost daily now – Alex, come on, I think she likes you, and I know you like her even though you pretend not to; wouldn’t it be amazing, for my sister and my best friend to date? Because let’s face it, you already have huge crushes on each other; Alex, guess what spell Maggie taught me last night?; Alex, Maggie loves astronomy, too, you should ask her on a date to the Astronomy Tower, I can set it all up for you! – and she bites her lip, and she sighs, and she thinks about how she wouldn’t be afraid to put her name in the Goblet of Fire, so dammit, she’s not going to be afraid to be vulnerable with a girl anymore.
“Well hey. If you ever want to take a ride with me, I um… I can lend you my Nimbus 2001. The ride would be smoother and the way you fly… it… you know, with the maneuvering and the control and the finesse… watching you fly on a steadier broom would be… I mean… kind of beautiful. If you wanted. Whatever. Isn’t it dinner time? We should get to the Great Hall.”

She squeezes Kara’s hand and sweeps off for the Great Hall at breakneck speed, and Maggie is left spluttering and stammering, and Kara is left with a grin that lights up the entire dusk.

“Little Danvers, did your sister just… did your.. your extremely badass, super hot sister just ask me out?”

Kara just squeals in response, and tugs Maggie along.

“Alex! Wait up! Maggie says yes!”

Alex stops without turning around, because her smile is bright enough to match her sister’s, and her cheeks are more crimson than that Olsen kid’s robes.

So she doesn’t turn around, but she waits for her little sister and the girl who – maybe – is going to be her girlfriend, and they head into the Great Hall, hearts pounding with everything that has been and everything that might be, together.

More smut please I'll pay you (not really I'm poor)

She breathes in and she breathes out, and she’ll never admit it, but god she’s thankful Maggie’s been taking her to those yoga classes, because otherwise she’s pretty sure she’d have forgotten how by now.

Because her hands are bracing against the brick wall that serves as a headboard to Maggie’s bed, her triceps tensed with the pressure of holding her steady, of holding her up.

Because she’s kneeling and her legs are open and Maggie’s hands are on her ass and Maggie’s tongue is on her clit and she’s trying to focus on breathing because they’ve already gotten several noise complaints in the last week alone, and sitting on Maggie’s face?

Is not really helping her keep quiet.

Especially not as Maggie reaches up to tease one of Alex’s nipples between her fingers; especially not as Maggie drags her tongue lower to slip inside her, letting her lips, her face, keep pressure on Alex’s clit; especially not as Maggie moans and her hand tightens on Alex’s ass, encouraging her to let go, encouraging her to enjoy herself fully, encouraging her to let her hips rock.

Encouraging her to fuck her face without holding back.

So she focuses on breathing and she focuses on not tearing her throat on Maggie’s name.

And generally, when Alex Danvers focuses, she succeeds.

This time?

This time, she fails.

Hard.

Because Maggie is doing that thing with her tongue where she’s alternating between fucking her and licking her clit, and she’s moaning into her pussy and she’s grabbing at her ass and she’s teasing at her nipple and Alex can feel her rocking her own hips beneath her, and she can’t help the way her whimper becomes a scream, the way her ragged breathing becomes a series of gasps.

And it just makes Maggie lick her harder, fuck her deeper with her tongue, thrash more erratically with her own hips, desperate for a pressure she’s not getting right now.

And suddenly, Alex grins. Because suddenly, she knows how to focus her energies, how to distract herself from screaming.
She shifts to lean up on her knees and Maggie whines at the loss of contact.

“You good, babe?”

Her voice is thick with raw desire, coated with sex, and her lips, her chin, are covered in how wet Alex is for her, and her eyes?

God, her eyes love her so much.

“Yeah,” Alex whispers, bringing a shaky hand down to wipe Maggie’s lips. “Just uh… shifting.”

“Oh, no no, this is… this is perfect. I just… You may proceed,” she teases with a grin, and Maggie smiles back, but only briefly, because Maggie doesn’t hesitate before bringing Alex back down onto her mouth, moaning at the reconnection.

Repositioned slightly, subtly, Alex has the balance, now, to lean back like she wants to, needs to, to rest one hand, not on the wall in front of her, but on Maggie’s thigh beneath her.

Her other hand? Her other hand goes hovers right above Maggie’s clit.

She pauses and lifts her hips slightly.

“Seems like you wanted some… pressure. So um… this okay, babe?” she asks, and Maggie’s eyes are wide, and her eyes are wild, and her eyes are completely, completely wrecked.

“Oh, no no, this is… this is perfect. I just… You may proceed,” she teases with a grin, and Maggie smiles back, but only briefly, because Maggie doesn’t hesitate before bringing Alex back down onto her mouth, moaning at the reconnection.

Repositioned slightly, subtly, Alex has the balance, now, to lean back like she wants to, needs to, to rest one hand, not on the wall in front of her, but on Maggie’s thigh beneath her.

She pauses and lifts her hips slightly.

“Seems like you wanted some… pressure. So um… this okay, babe?” she asks, and Maggie’s eyes are wide, and her eyes are wild, and her eyes are completely, completely wrecked.

“Yeah,” she answers raggedly, and Alex lowers herself onto Maggie’s face again with a sigh and a grin, her fingers smoothing down through Maggie’s curls and trembling ecstatically when she feels how soaked Maggie is.

“Damn, Sawyer, you’re dripping for me,” she rasps, and Maggie shifts so she breathe, so she can talk.

“What’d you expect, Danvers? I love when you sit on my face like this. I fucking love it. I love… I love it.”

Alex’s breath hitches and she licks her lips and she feels the way Maggie’s chest starts to heave, sees the way her pupils are dilating, even in the dim light.

She loves her too. God, she loves her, too.

But they both know that now, naked and sweaty and completely ruined for each other, might not be the best first time to say it.

And as if by unspoken agreement, they say it with actions, not with words, Alex lowering back down onto Maggie’s waiting, eager lips; Alex bringing her fingers to rest on Maggie’s increasingly thrashing hips; Alex riding Maggie’s face, making Maggie moan in encouragement, in ecstasy, until she cums hard, cums fast, cums unrestrained.

Maggie thinks her upper lip might be bleeding with the force of Alex rocking into her, but god, god, god she doesn’t care, because Alex Danvers coming undone on her face is the most beautiful thing she’s ever felt, the most incredible thing she’s ever heard, the most erotic thing she’s ever known.

And if she has some explaining to do to some rookie cops about the sixth noise complaint in as many days in the morning, well, damn, it’s absolutely worth it.
Chapter Summary

anonymous asked:

I have my first crush on a girl and it’s awesome. Also, thank you for being such an awesome person. One more thing, do you think that Alex and Maggie ever drive to the desert or someplace outside of the city and stare up at the sky and talk about nothing all night, just for a break from life? Thanks again!

Ofc course they do.

The first time they go, Alex just picks Maggie up on the back of her bike after Maggie’s had a long, rough day on the job. She doesn’t say anything other than, “wanna go for a ride?”, and Maggie immediately accepts the spare helmet she’s holding out for her, because there’s no need for any other words.

Maggie guesses that Alex drives for maybe three hours, always sticking to long, winding roads, always taking the routes that avoid traffic lights, traffic signs. Always taking the routes that avoid human beings.

Because sometimes, Maggie likes aliens better than humans, and this? This, Alex knows, is definitely one of those days.

So she takes her out way past the city limits, DEO’s old spot in the hills. Takes her out into the desert, takes her out far enough to get away from lights, from sound, from any people, alien or human.

Far enough away so that the only lights are the headlight on her bike, the stars starting to peak out of the increasingly velvet sky.

Far enough away so that the only sound is the soft roar of her Ducati’s engine, the wind whipping past their helmets.

Far enough away so that the only people are the two of them, the only people are present in the way Maggie’s arms wrap snug around Alex’s waist, the warmth of Maggie’s body pressed against Alex’s back, leaning into every curve, of her body and of the road, the thoughts, the love, the appreciation, passing between their bodies like oxygen that they’d starve without.

“Alex,” is all Maggie breathes when Alex finally pulls over and tugs off her helmet, her eyes not on the beauty above her, but on the beauty in front of her.

Because Maggie is holding her helmet slack at her waist and her perfect lips are parted and her eyes are wide and her head is tilted back because the stars, now, are endless, are infinite, are… everything.

Alex smiles and doesn’t bother trying to keep her lip from trembling as she slips off her jacket and puts it on the ground next to her bike, sitting and taking Maggie’s hand, drawing her down, drawing her close, drawing her head down to rest on a pillow made of Alex’s arm, of Alex’s love.

Neither know how long they lay in silence together, and neither cares.

Occasionally, one of their hands will shoot up and point, to make sure the other doesn’t miss the random meteors that soar over them, dying embers on a canvas of dying plasma.

Occasionally, they’ll see the same meteor at the same time, and they’ll both point, and they’ll both exhale a small laugh, and their fingers will intertwine as they bring them slowly back to earth.

Occasionally, they’ll be tempted to tell the other that they’ve always wished on shooting stars, and right now, there is absolutely nothing to wish for.

Because they have absolutely everything.

Alex thinks about telling Maggie of all the nights alone, and with Kara, and alone, on her roof in Midvale.

Maggie thinks about telling Alex of all the nights alone – just alone – in the back of her pickup in Blue Springs.

And they will, they will.

They will.

But right now?

Right now, the stars do the speaking for them.

Right now, the stars tell them everything they need to know about what it means to, finally, be home.
“Hey pretty lady,” Alex greets from the couch after Maggie’s key scrapes the lock and she steps inside, and she looks up from her reading and smiles, watching.

Because she told Maggie that she thinks she’s starting to get used to this whole happy thing, but god, she doesn’t think she’ll really ever get used to Maggie coming to her apartment like its her own home after a long day at work; doesn’t think she’ll really ever get used to the way Maggie’s smile lights up the entire night when Alex’s words wash over her ears; the way Maggie freezes slightly and licks her lips and her eyes flash when she sees Alex in nothing but a henley and pajama pants and glasses, god, those glasses.

And Maggie? Maggie doesn’t think she’ll really ever get used to coming home to Alex Danvers, feared and renowned for her ruthlessness, being soft and domestic and vulnerable and relaxed, in her glasses, laying on the couch, waiting for… her. For her to come… home.

So she shrugs off her jacket and she tosses down her gun. She kicks off her boots and she makes sure her eyes never leave Alex’s, because she doesn’t want to miss any nuance of the way Alex watches her, the way Alex’s eyes widen slightly when she takes off her jacket, when she strides over to the couch.

Alex’s couch.

Their couch.

The way Alex gulps slightly and immediately tosses her bioengineering journal to the floor when Maggie says, “May I?” and Alex nods so Maggie straddles her and Alex gulps again.

“I missed you today,” Maggie whispers, stroking Alex’s cheek, and Alex immediately reaches up and mirrors her activity.

“Yeah?” she flirts.

“Yes, Danvers, I wouldn’t say it if I didn’t mean it.”

“Show me.”

Maggie blinks.

“Show you.”
“Show me how much you missed me?” She says it like a question, because it is a question, because she still does need to be shown, not just told, because she still can’t wrap her mind around the fact that someone like Maggie would miss her, would like her, would love… her.

Would come home to her.

“Oh, Alex,” Maggie shakes her head, and she leans down and lifts her glasses, resting them on top of Alex’s head, so she can kiss her eyes, her nose, her temples, her forehead. She kisses her cheeks and her chin and, just when Alex’s contented sighs turn into small, needy whines, she kisses her lips.

They both sigh into the contact, into the kiss, because it’s only been ten or so hours, but god, that’s ten or so hours too long.

Alex parts her lips and runs her hands over Maggie’s hair and Maggie takes the invitation, slipping her tongue softly, gently, slowly, into Alex’s mouth, nearly moaning in relief at Alex’s response, the way her hips roll of their own accord, the way one of her hands wanders down Maggie’s back and grabs at the back of her shirt, making sure she doesn’t let go.

And she won’t.

God, she won’t.

“You good?” Maggie pulls back slightly to ask, because Alex had propped a pillow on the couch’s ledge while she was reading, but couches aren’t always the most comfortable places to be laid down and kissed senseless.

Alex answers by pulling her back down into a kiss, and Maggie does moan softly this time, Alex’s tongue teasing her lips before traveling down her jawline, down to her throat. Her teeth graze Maggie’s pulse point and Maggie’s entire body trembles.

Alex freezes but Maggie shakes her head. “You don’t have to stop.”

So she doesn’t. She marks Maggie’s neck like she knows Maggie likes, and she lets herself get lost in the sounds Maggie makes, the way she smells, the way her skin tastes, in the way Maggie’s hands travel haphazardly across her entire body, always reaching for more, groping at Alex’s breasts over her shirt, making Alex sigh and gasp and smile into her ministrations before shifting to return her lips to Maggie’s mouth, and Maggie kisses her back eagerly, desperately, hotly.

“You are so fucking beautiful, Danvers,” she murmurs in between kisses, in between Alex’s hands exploring her body like a randy teenager, in between her own hands doing exactly the same.

“Yeah?” Alex asks, pausing, and Maggie pulls back to look her in the eyes, in her perfect, perfect eyes.

She smiles softly and tilts her glasses back down from the top of her head onto her face, and she smiles deeper.

“You are the most gorgeous woman I’ve ever seen, Alex,” she reiterates, and Alex melts up into her body.

“I love kissing you,” Alex whispers, because she doesn’t know what else to say, doesn’t know how else to respond, to the intensity, the thing that looks a lot like love, in Maggie’s eyes, in her voice, in her hands and in her lips.
“Well that’s good, Danvers. Cause I love kissing you, too,” Maggie chuckles sweetly, leaning back down to kiss Alex gentle, kiss her slow, kiss her always.

She makes a map of Alex’s mouth with her tongue, a guide to Alex’s lips with her own, a prayer to Alex’s breathless sighs with her thumb on her cheek, her hand on her waist.

She almost whispers that she loves her, but decides, for now, to show her instead.

And it works – the way her lips part for Alex’s, the way she pays attention to and fulfills her every need, the way she makes out with her like she’s never been made out with, and god, nothing’s ever felt this perfect – because, who knows how long later, Alex’s eyes are glistening and her lips are quirked into a shy smile when she asks, “So you’re saying you missed me. Cause that’s… that’s what I’m getting.”

Maggie chuckles and her heart thrills at the game that’s become their own.

That’s become their coming home.

“Of course, you’re not gonna go crazy on me, are you?”

“Probably.”

Maggie licks her lips and shakes her head slightly and kisses Alex again, again, again.

“Perfect.”

Chapter Summary

What Maggie Didn't Tell Her

She didn’t tell her that she knew, the moment she looked up on that tarmac and saw her, that she was going to fall in love with her.

And not because Alex was the most beautiful woman Maggie had ever seen (even though she was). It was the way she carried herself, her confidence, her fierce protectiveness. Hell, even her territorial, borderline condescending arrogance.

She didn’t tell her that knowledge put a pit in her stomach, because she’d made the mistake of cheating before. She’d been self-destructive enough to let herself get caught in that damn Baldwin hotel with some girl she barely knew, because Emily had suggested moving in together, taking the next step. And it couldn’t be real, it couldn’t last. So she’d made sure it didn’t.

She wouldn’t do that again. Even if her current relationship – now her ex – was on the rocks anyway, was borderline abusive anyway.

She didn’t tell her that her ex never picked her up from the job. Certainly not from the field.

She didn’t tell her that her ex was the jealous type, that the night they’d busted – and then been forced to release – Roulette, her ex had texted, wanting to know where she was. If her new secret service friend was with her. The one who’d busted up the bar just to find her. The one who literally threw herself into fire to save her life. The one who’d patched her up after.

She didn’t tell her that her ex only showed up to pick Maggie up that night because she wanted Alex to know that Maggie was hers, hers, hers.

She didn’t tell her because telling her would involve telling her that she was falling for her. And that wouldn’t be fair. Wouldn’t be safe.

For anyone.

She didn’t tell her that when Alex first kissed her next to that pool table, she saw stars, she saw fireworks. She saw everything she’d ever wanted, and nothing she’d ever had.

She didn’t tell her that pulling back, that telling her no, was one of the hardest things she’d ever done. And she’d done a lot of hard things.

She didn’t tell her that her ex’s words stung her, bad, cut her, hard, but that underneath it, she was relieved. Relieved to be dumped, because maybe, Alex, maybe, it could… no. She didn’t tell her because she couldn’t tell her because she couldn’t destroy someone as perfect, as beautiful, as gorgeous – inside, outside – as Alex Danvers.

She didn’t tell her that her only thought after getting shot by Cyborg Superman, on feeling the mechanical poisons from his laser rip through her bloodstream, was Alex. Alex, Alex, Alex.

She didn’t tell her that confessing that she wanted to kiss her was scarier than her first mission out with the Science Division.

She didn’t tell her that she could never quite believe that they were together, that Alex wanted to be with her, that Alex wanted to love her. Didn’t tell her that she didn’t think she was worth it. That she only ever destroyed the women she touched. Only ever destroyed herself.

The first time they made love, she didn’t tell her that no woman had ever made her moan like that, scream like that. Ever. Until Alex.

The third or fourth time they made love, she didn’t tell her that no other woman had ever made her cum. She didn’t tell her that she’d just thought she couldn’t cum during sex. She didn’t tell her that when her body rocked through the deepest, hardest orgasm she’d ever had, all over Alex’s thigh, with Alex’s strong hands on her hips, on her back, she almost wept, because god, god, god, she didn’t tell her that no one had ever paid attention to her needs, her raw desires, like that.

She didn’t tell her that she was in love with her. Fully, irreparably, completely, absolutely in love with Alex Danvers.

She didn’t tell her, that is, until Alex was laying in the DEO’s med bay, barely breathing after a series of surgeries, barely recovering from a collapsed lung, second-degree burns over a quarter of her body, a series of broken ribs, courtesy of Cadmus’s revenge for Alex’s single-handedly blowing up their biggest facility.

She didn’t tell her that her stomach was sicker than it ever had been, even when her father stood over her fourteen-year-old self, watching her pack the one bag she’d been allowed to take before she had to leave his house forever – she didn’t tell her, because Alex, barely conscious, didn’t need to hear that right now. Alex only needed to hear one thing.

“You have to get better, Danvers. You have to get through this. You are the strongest person I’ve ever met, Ally, and I need you. I need you, and I’ve never… I’ve never needed anyone. But I need you, Alex Danvers, because I… because I am so wildly in love with you, and I… I love you, Alex. I love you, I love you, I love you. Please be okay. Please.”

Alex’s eyes stirred under closed lids and Maggie’s heart leaps when Alex’s lips twitch and her eyes, slowly, blink open. Kara inhales deeply on Alex’s other side, hope returning to her tear-stained eyes.

“You… love me?” she croaked in a voice so ragged that it almost sounded nothing like hers. Kara reached for the cup of water and straw by the bedside and put it to Alex’s cracked lips. Alex sipped and gave her sister a faint smile.

“Hey Kara,” she tried to lift a groggy hand to Kara’s face. Kara stilled it, kissed it, gave Maggie an unsure glance because maybe Alex didn’t remember what she just heard two seconds ago.

“The pretty lady I’m in love with is in love with me too. Whaddaya know?” she whispered, and Maggie sobbed with relief as Kara laughed and J’onn, at the foot of the bed, breathed for the first time in hours.

So maybe, just maybe, telling Alex Danvers the things that she felt wasn’t such a terrifying idea after all.

Chapter Summary

like-rain-and-phones asked:

I live in the gym. Can we get a Maggie/Alex gym routine?

It’s James’s fault.

Or at least that’s who Alex blames.

Because at first, she had her morning runs and DEO sparring sessions, and Maggie had her pullup bar and heavy bag.

Separately.

But then somehow – she still can’t figure out who brought it up first – James and Maggie started hitting the gym together.

And Alex got roped into yoga with Maggie.

And then she got roped into the gym, too.

Maggie would be the eager one.

“Come on, Danvers, it'll be great. James is picking up protein shakes on the way!”

“What the hell shake place is open at this unholy hour?”

“What, so you can go for runs before sunrise but the gym is too much?”

“I don’t have to talk to anyone on my runs.”

Maggie grins bashfully and takes the hint, but preens when Alex softens her words with a kiss.

Maggie drives. Alex tries not to complain about the time and instead tries to focus on how damn good Maggie looks in her Adidas running jacket.

But the moment they step into the gym – and Maggie bounds up to James and leaps into his arms (“Look, Al, I’m giving him his warmup!”) – Alex tunes into her body and tunes out her general distaste for all things morning (all things morning, that is, except Maggie naked in her arms. Because that morning thing? That morning thing, she’s in love with).

She hits the treadmill while James and Maggie hit the mats for a more plyo-oriented warmup – there’s always been something calming to her, something like running on the beach to get her body primed for a long day surfing, about the rhythm of running – and generally, they’ll meet somewhere in the middle to push each other through their workouts.
Twice a week, it’s sparring, it’s weighted vests and double-unders and box jumps and sprint drills. Twice a week, it’s who can push harder, who can jump higher, who can run faster, who can recover quicker.

The rest of the time, it’s bodyweight drills and it’s cardio intervals and it’s weight training, Alex and Maggie grabbing sweaty kisses between sets while James racks the weights with a small grin on his face.

Alex isn’t used to the stillness of weight lifting, but – like with yoga – she trusts Maggie to show her, she trusts Maggie to build her skill at moving slower, at pushing her body differently, steadily, mentally, without her life on the line.

And it’s hard – hard, because Maggie and James are better at weight training than she is, and she’s unaccustomed to being bested – but neither of them tease her. Both of them meet her where she is, help her learn to move her body, to move with control when she isn’t aiming for someone’s throat, to move with explosive discipline when she isn’t trying to save the world.

And when she realizes that it’s both calming and exhilarating – when she realizes that it’s both centering and energizing – she lifts harder, she lifts better, she lifts more. And she watches James’s eyes glint with pride and Maggie’s sparkle with a combination of pride and lust, and she stands a little bit straighter, grins a little bit harder, because this whole gym thing?

Is totally worth getting up early for.

Chapter Summary

Alex’s Hands

Her hands are ruthless.

Her hands are lethal.

Her hands can snap, break, squeeze the life out of human beings, out of nine foot aliens – out of people.

And her hands have.

Many times.

Her hands are strong and her hands, even when clean, are constantly coated in blood.

Her hands are aggressive and her hands are vengeful.

Her hands are fearless and her hands are deadly.

Her knuckles are a map of the men she’s broken, of the soldiers she’s cracked, of the rage against herself that she’s brought down on someone else’s jaw.

Her fingers are loud, her fingers are expressive; her fingers know exactly where to apply pressure, exactly where to stick needles, exactly where to stop a person’s breathing, end a person’s life, make a person scream in agony.

Her palms are accustomed to breaking her falls, accustomed to burning but not sweating, the better to hold the guns, the grenades, the rocket launchers, that she needs to end the people who threaten her family.

Her hands are ruthless.

Her hands are lethal.

Her hands are her little sister’s home.

Her hands protected Kara from the terrifying sounds of the popcorn-maker when she first got to Earth, and a few days later, her hands broke under Kara’s too-firm grasp, but when they came out of their casts, Kara’s tear-stained face was the first thing that her gentle, soft, forgiving hands reached for, caressed, loved.

Her hands hold Kara’s when her little sister cries, scoop out ice cream and fold homemade potstickers and carry box upon box of pizza into Kara’s apartment when her sister needs an impromptu Sister’s Night.
Her hands tuck Kara into bed after long days of a double life that only Alex can really understand, and her hands smooth Kara’s hair away from her forehead, and her hands watch over her and protect her from the nightmares that her teenage hands started protecting her from all those years ago.

Her hands are forgiving.

Her hands are protective.

Her hands are Maggie Sawyer’s home.

Her hands stilled in shock the first time Maggie held them, and her hands told the rest of her body, the rest of her soul, that her life would never be the same.

Her hands caress Maggie’s hair and her thumbs sweep across her cheeks, her jawline, and her hands make Maggie feel loved, make Maggie feel appreciated, make Maggie feel worshiped.

Her fingers trace words of love in Russian, in Kryptonese, in Portuguese, in English, onto Maggie’s naked torso after her fingers slip deep, deep inside her and bring her to oblivion and back, her palm serving as a pillow for Maggie’s head the entire time, holding her, protecting her, loving her, the entire way through.

Her knuckles let Maggie’s lips heal them and her palms let Maggie’s fingers trace them and her fingers interlace with Maggie’s because this woman, this woman, this woman, is the woman she’s going to spend her life with.

Her hands are ruthless, and her hands are lethal, and her hands are forgiving, and her hands are protective.

Her hands, like the rest of her, are made of the stuff it takes to love and to love hurt and to love hard, and her hands, in Maggie’s, on Maggie’s body – and, eventually, on her own, too – are gentle, are firm, are simply, simply, love.

Chapter Summary

Facetime Healing

So I’m having kind of a really crappy day… Can you make a one-shot with lots of fluff where Alex or Maggie are out of town or something like that, and the people around them are being terrible, so they call the other or they tell the other about it when they are together again? I understand that you’re busy but I would love to see this… Thanks

^^ prompt from LittleSanvers over at Ao3

She’s never really used facetime.

Kara would just fly over when they wanted to see each other, and whenever she called Eliza, it was better for everyone involved that they couldn’t see each other (Eliza seeing Alex’s eye rolls and tightening lips and – pre-Maggie – chugging of bourbon to get through the conversation wouldn’t exactly help matters).

But with Maggie?

Now, facetime is the only way either of them get through their respective trips for work, because now? Now, going an entire day without seeing the other’s face would be cruel and unusual punishment.

Especially when one of them had had a day like Maggie’d just had, alone at a specialized training conference with a bunch of cishet white dude cops who weren’t even a little bit interested in listening to the small brown woman giving them a workshop on addressing the needs of – rather than punishing – queer youth who live on the streets.

Alex knows the moment the calls connect, the moment Maggie’s slightly pixelated face pops up on her phone’s screen, and her smile of anticipation fades into a look of cautious concern.

“What’s wrong?” she asks instead of her usual greeting, and she watches Maggie stiffen, watches Maggie work harder to arrange her face into something that’s not exhausted, something that’s not defeated, something that’s not rage boiling under resignation, under determination, under self-hate and under hopeful hopelessness.

“What? Nothing, it’s whatever, Danvers – how was your day? I heard Supergirl – “

“Yes, Kara had an eventful day, and yes, Kara is fine, but you, Maggie? You’re not. Talk to me,” she insists gently, she insists firmly, she insists steadily.

And it’s that steadiness – Alex’s steadiness – that makes Maggie gulp, that makes Maggie talk.

“Whatever, just… some assholes pulling some all lives matter shit, making a joke out of the kids I work with, and they don’t…” Maggie’s face swoops out of Alex’s view for a moment as Maggie shifts on her hotel bed. “They don’t get it, or care, I don’t know, who they’re hurting. How violent they’re being. Whatever, it’s whatever, I – “

“No, no, Maggie, it’s not whatever. You’re not whatever. I… Maggie, I’m sorry. I’m sorry you have to hear all that nonsense. I… what do you need? What can I do? I can get Vasquez to come out there with me and we can kick some ass with you.”

That gets Maggie’s lips to turn upward, and she shakes her head before staring deeply at the screen for the first time this call, at Alex’s face, her eyes, for the first time this call.

“You’re beautiful, Danvers, you know that?”

“So are you, Maggie. So are you.”

A long pause. A lot of staring at each other. A lot of silent wishing that their hands could touch everything their eyes were feasting on.

“Why do they have so much hate in them? I mean, them, my… my father, hell, Lena’s mother, it… why – do you get it? Because I don’t.”

Her voice is small and her eyes are liquid and Alex’s heart breaks as she shakes her head slow, soft, somehow reassuring.

“I wish I could hold you right now, babe.”

Maggie’s breath comes out in a ragged exhale, and the static from it grates Alex’s ears, making her wish even more she were actually with her instead of just Facetiming her.

But they both have good imaginations. So Alex smiles faintly at Maggie’s trembling jaw.

“Close your eyes, babe.”

“So the yoga has been catching on after all, ey, Danvers?” Maggie tries, and Alex hears the sadness, the defeat, roiling underneath Maggie’s attempt at levity, but she lets it go.

“Hush up and close your eyes, Sawyer,” she teases right back, and she’s almost surprised when Maggie complies immediately.

A stray few strands of hair fall over her face, and Alex itches to tuck it behind Maggie’s ear.

A few days. She’ll be home in a few days.

Until then…

“Okay, so,” Alex starts, and she’s awkward, because she’s not good at this kind of intimate, emotional thing.

Or, rather, she never used to be. Because she never used to like it. But now? With Maggie? She’s miles away and she’s in pain and she doesn’t want to talk and it’s unfair to try to get her to when she’s all alone, and Alex just wants to help her.

So she’s awkward, but she tries.

“So,” she repeats, “imagine where you want my hands. I want… I want to smooth your hair out of your face…” Maggie smiles faintly with her eyes closed, and she pushes her own hair out of her
“Like that?” she whispers, eyes still closed.

Alex nods before realizing Maggie can’t see her.

“That’s right, babe. Except… except I’d kiss you, too. Your cheeks, your temples, your forehead. The bridge of your nose. And um… and I’d hold you. If I were there. I’d pull you close to me and kiss the back of your neck and let you listen to my heartbeat and I’d… I’d tell you I love you, and I’d tell you that you’re worth it, and that your feelings are real, and that I know you did an amazing job today, no matter what those assholes said. I’d tell you you’re perfect and I’d give you a backrub and I wouldn’t let you go until you fell asleep in my arms and had the sweetest dreams. Okay?”

Another long silence. So long Alex is mildly concerned that Maggie’s fallen asleep sitting up.

“You love me?”

Her voice is so soft, so low, that if Alex hadn’t watched her lips move, she wouldn’t have realized she’d said anything at all.

“I love you more than I ever thought it was possible to love anyone, Maggie,” she says, and her voice shakes, and Maggie’s lower lip quivers, and her eyes open, and they’re full of tears, and they’re full of something Alex swears means I love you too.

And she’s absolutely right.

Chapter Summary

Talk to Me (A Coming Home Story)

@peggycarterislife wrote: Hmm idk… I’m dealing with my homophobic family rn… so maybe you could write Maggie running into her family or something like that?? Or some smut? That’s always great Don’t wanna bother you though… and as follow-up,
@all-the-gay-feels wrote Maggie doesn’t like to share her emotions AND is also killer in bed and hot af. She uses her body/ sexuality w/ women to avoid digging deeper/ feels. What if she doesn’t wanna talk and throws herself at Alex to use her body instead of words and Alex calls her out on it.

I combined the prompts, and this is what happened.

She calls her mother every year on her birthday.

She probably shouldn’t.

She should have been defended as a child.

She probably shouldn’t call.

But she does, anyway, in the early hours of the morning when she knows her mother will be awake, but her father won’t be.

But this year? This year, for whatever damn reason, he’s awake. And he answers her mother’s phone.

He wants to know why she would ruin her mother’s day by starting it off with a call from such a selfish child who could have been such a beautiful daughter, but chose to abandon them all with her filth.

He wants her to know how much her mother loves her, how much he loves her, that she was the one who left them. That she was the one who broke their hearts. That she was the one who chose to be selfish. That she was the one who abandoned them, just like – he’s heard – she keeps abandoning these women she engages in such sin with.

He wants her to know – she hangs up the phone.

She doesn’t cry and she doesn’t think and she barely even breathes.

She tugs on her jacket. She tugs on her helmet. She kicks her Triumph to life and she speeds to Alex’s apartment.

She knows Alex will just be returning from her morning run. She knows Alex’s body will be warm, will be sweaty. Will be perfect.
“Maggie, hey, what – “ Alex asks as Maggie lets herself into her living room, as Maggie tosses her helmet onto a chair, as Maggie cuts off her words with a searing kiss.

A searing kiss that tears through Alex’s entire body, that makes Alex swoon, that makes Alex melt.

“Maggie,” she tries to say again, and Maggie pulls all the way back, fire burning in her eyes.

“You wanna talk or you want me to make you see stars?” Maggie asks, her eyes hard, her voice wrecked, her hands somehow both demanding and trembling, her body somehow both gentle and rough.

Alex gulps, because god, god, god, she knows what kinds of stars Maggie can make her see. Not even your typical G-class star. No, Maggie makes her see stars explode, makes her see supernovae, makes her see the birth and death of the universe in the curve of her fingers, the arch of her hips, the heat of her tongue, the insistence of her teeth. The intensity of her eyes, the relentlessness of her hands.

Alex gulps, and Alex wants, but there’s something off about Maggie’s stance, off about Maggie’s voice, about her eyes.

“Maggie, what’s wrong?”

Maggie grunts dismissively and backs Alex against the kitchen counter, eyes on her lips, on her body, like she’s starving for her, because god, she is.

“Wrong? The fact that you’re not writhing and screaming for me right now, Danvers.”

Alex’s body swoons of its own accord, and Maggie takes her weakened knees as consent, swooping in for another burning kiss.

Alex melts under her lips, her tongue, for a long, lingering moment, her lips parted and her body achingly pliant for Maggie’s aching hands, but only for a moment.

Only for a moment, because Alex knows Maggie.

She knows Maggie, and she knows she’s avoiding talking. Knows something’s wrong.

knows she has something to say – so many things to say – and wants to write them into Alex’s skin with her body instead of forcing the words out of her lips, because fucking is easier than talking, because I want you is easier than I love you.

So she gathers all her strength, all her resistance, and she pulls back. Maggie growls, and the sound makes keeping from drowning in Maggie’s lust that much harder, but Alex loves her more than that.

“Maggie, stop,” she says soft, she says gentle, she says insistent, calibrating her voice carefully, intentionally, so Maggie doesn’t think she’s hurt her, because she hasn’t, she hasn’t, but god, she’s hurting herself.

“Tell me what’s wrong, Maggie.”

Maggie pushes away from Alex and retreats to the other side of the kitchen, the opposite counter, by the fridge. She crosses her arms over her chest and she glares.

“Why does something have to be wrong for me to want you, Danvers?” she counters, and Alex studies her with sharp eyes and a breaking heart.

“I love that you want me, Maggie. And I love when you’re rough with me. I love how much you tell me with your body. You make me feel wanted and cared for and respected and paid attention to. You make me feel…” She stops ahead of the word “loved,” because god if she’s wrong, she’ll never get over the humiliation.

“But you… you can fuck me like this, Maggie – I love it when you do, hell – but you can’t fuck me like this instead of talking to me. You can’t do it as a replacement. In addition, sure. But whatever’s bothering you, hurting you, right now? You have no intention of letting me help you with it. You have every intention of dealing with it alone, and the only way I get to help you is by spreading my legs for you. Is that right?”

Her voice is firm but her eyes are gentle, are brimming with empathy. With understanding.

And it’s that understanding that breaks Maggie.

She clenches her jaw so hard it might break, and she takes a shuddering breath, and she uncrosses her arms, and she steps forward.

Alex meets her in the middle and wraps her in her arms and kisses her hair as she shudders, as she counts her breaths, as she tries to still her own trembling.

“I got you,” Alex whispers. “I got you.”

“I’m sorry,” Maggie responds, her voice full of gravel. “I’m sorry, Alex, you don’t deserve… I… I tried to… it’s my mom’s birthday, and I tried to… I call her every year, but my… my dad answered and it… When he kicked me out, Alex, I never felt at home anywhere. Ever again. Anywhere. Not in college, not in Gotham, not when I first moved out here. Nowhere.”

She takes a shuddering breath and she steps back from Alex’s arms so she can look her in the face, because Maggie Sawyer is nothing if not absolutely brave.

“And then I met you. And then you kissed me, and then I kissed you, and then I… Alex, you’re… you’re my home. Now. You’re my home. My first home, my… my only home. So when my dad said all those things this morning, I… I had somewhere to go. For the first time in my life, I could… I could go home. To you. But I…”

“But you don’t like talking about yourself.”

Maggie nods, and Alex strokes her hair, and Alex dives, because if Maggie can be that brave, then dammit, so can she.

“You’re my home too, Maggie. And I… I love you. I’m here. Okay? I’m not going anywhere. Because I love you.”

Maggie doesn’t speak – she’s far exceeded her speaking quota for the day – but Alex doesn’t need her to. Not right now, anyway. Because the way she lets Alex hold her, the way she holds Alex back?

Those are all the words, all the promises, that she needs. All the words, all the promises, that she’s ever, ever wanted.
superspies-and-apple-pie asked:

Hey Cap! If it's not too much to ask, could you write something about Alex or Kara getting migraines/massive sensory overload and Maggie helping them deal with it? I'm home from work today because of a horrible migraine and I feel achey and useless and bummed out. one of those ones where everything is just a shade too much and where you want to go curl into a huge pile of pillows and never leave.

She can’t fly – not like this – so for once, she actually does take the bus.

Turns out, the bus doesn’t help.

Because the bus itself is almost as loud as weaving through National City’s wind tunnels, and because on the bus, people touch you – even by accident – and people talk loudly and babies cry and the bus swerves and it squeaks when it makes a sudden stop and Rao, she should have just flown, because this migraine is starting to blur her vision but at least the overload from sound, from scent, from touch, from everything, might have been less in the air, alone, alone, alone...

Except she doesn’t want to be alone.

She wants to be with the only person who’s ever understood her overloads, her migraines, her panic attacks from too much, too much, too much.

So she nearly vomits with relief when the bus finally slams to a stop a block from her big sister’s apartment.

She doesn’t know how she makes it up the stairs and into Alex’s apartment, but she knows immediately – because the only heartbeat in the apartment isn’t Alex’s, is slightly higher than Alex’s – that Alex isn’t home.

“Hey, Little Danvers,” Maggie looks up from the couch, a newspaper lowered as she looks up at her, her legs bare until the very tops of her thighs where her boxers end.

Her sister’s girlfriend starts talking, but immediately stops with one look at Kara.

She nods and she tosses aside the paper and she stands.

“Come sit,” is all she says, her voice softer than her initial greeting, and Kara doesn’t ask how she knows, doesn’t ask if she’s mad at the intrusion, doesn’t ask anything at all.

Kara stumbles to the couch and sits, and before she can wish desperately that Maggie would turn off the jazz she has playing through the entire apartment, Maggie switches it off, in the same motion that she strides over to switch off all the lights.
She says nothing as she pads up the step into Alex’s bedroom and returns with the entire comforter – because she’s noticed how much Kara loves that thing – and manages to wrap Kara up without once touching her skin.

She says nothing as she slips into Alex’s bathroom, then into her kitchen, and returns to press a pill from a bottle labeled “Kara’s Aspirin” and a glass of water into Kara’s hands, gently, gently, gently.

Kara accepts them docilely, swallowing the pill, the water, in slow, shaky gulps.

“Can I snuggle on you?” she asks in a small voice after a few long, long moments of silence, of Maggie sitting on the opposite end of the couch, waiting patiently, waiting quietly.

“Come here, Kid Danvers,” Maggie whispers, and Kara all but topples over to Maggie in her massive buffer of Alex’s massive comforter.

Maggie would normally swipe her thumbs in circular patterns on Kara’s back, but today, she keeps her hands still. She would normally pepper her hair with random kisses, but today, she barely moves.

Because today, Kara needs the contact, but Rao, does she need the stillness just as badly.

And Maggie is happy to provide.

She lets her own head tilt back on the edge of the couch as Kara snuggles into her chest, and when she hears Kara’s breathing slow, when she feels Kara’s body lose its tension, she lets her own breathing slow, lets her own body relax.

She doesn’t realize she’s fallen asleep until the front door opens and a crack of light seeps into the apartment.

Maggie’s eyes open immediately, but she realizes who woke her before her body has the chance to tense up.

“I think she got overwhelmed and had a migraine,” Maggie whispers softly, so softly, before Alex has the chance to ask.

Alex slips off her boots and pads over to the other side of the couch quickly, kneeling in front of Kara and smoothing the hair gently out of her face, kissing her forehead and feeling it with the back of her hand like she’s checking for feverishness.

“You gave her aspirin?”

Maggie nods.

“And she drank water? And no music, and no lights, and no movement, and no talking?”

Maggie nods at each need, a soft smile on her face, loving Alex for the way she loves her sister, for how hard she loves her, for how fully she loves her.

Alex blinks, and Alex stares, and Maggie gets the distinct impression that Alex would throw herself at her and kiss her senseless if her little sister wasn’t out like a light in her lap.

“Thank you,” is all Alex says, but she injects it with all the love, all the passion, all the disbelieving gratitude, that she’s ever had.
“Anything for my Danvers girls. Anything at all.”

Chapter Summary

hazingblur asked:

Hey mom I went out with some friends on tuesday night and have been sick since then
Could you write some sanvers being sick? Maybe Maggie starts throwing up and is a very bad sick person? Ps. Congrats on your engagement

She hasn’t thrown up in front of anyone since that party in college after that cute girl from organic chem lab dumped her, and god, how that backfired.

(Instead of taking care of her, her supposed friends had laughed and her supposed friends had let her drag herself back to her dorm and her supposed friends couldn’t be bothered to check in on her when she missed classes the next morning because, surprise surprise, she was still throwing up.)

This time, the cause wasn’t alcohol.

This time, the cause was the damn flu.

And Maggie is used to taking care of herself. She’s used to powering through, because no one had ever… offered. No one had ever taken care of her.

At least, not without making sure she knew what a burden she was, what other, better, things (or people) they could be doing. How grateful she should be.

So she doesn’t text Alex to come over, because sure, she’s a doctor, but why the hell would she want to be around Maggie when she’s gross and snotty and achy and – yep – there it is again – throwing up?

Alex wants to be happy with her, not be a caretaker, for crying out loud.

But when she doesn’t show up for work – because even Maggie isn’t stubborn enough to go infect the entire precinct with this damn flu – and Alex asks after her, and her cop partner tells her she’s got the flu, Alex is livid.

And she’s at Maggie’s apartment a half hour later, with medicine and tissues and cough drops and crackers and soup and and chapstick orange juice and a handful of old 90s and early 2000s DVDs she grabbed from Kara’s on the way over.

“I can’t believe I had to hear you have the flu from Donahue, Sawyer! This is a relationship, you need to tell me when you’re – Maggie?”

Because she’s not on her couch and she’s not on her bed.

But there’s retching coming from the bathroom, and Alex’s heart breaks as she deposits her grocery bags hurriedly on the counter and rushes to the bathroom door.
She pauses before opening it – because even alone, Maggie is a door-shutter – and she inclines her head toward the door, knocking softly.

“Mags. It’s me. Can I come in?”

“I didn’t call you, Danvers,” Maggie rasps miserably, and Alex hears her spit, and she sighs silently.

“I know you didn’t, Maggie, but I’m here now. Let me help you. Please?”

Maggie wretches and Alex flinches, because she knows that pain, and she hates that pain, and god, she’s only two feet away from her and the only thing between them is a very breakable wooden door, but she’s never felt farther from her, more useless to her.

Maggie, poking her head out of the bathroom, looking up at Alex like she’s terrified, like she’s just killed someone and Alex is here to clean up the mess, like she’s wracked with guilt, like she hates herself for being sick, for being weak, for inconveniencing her. For being gross.

“You don’t have to be here,” she croaks, and Alex just tilts her head and smiles softly.

“I want to be here, Maggie.”

“I’ll get you sick.”

“Worth it.”

“Danvers – “

“Sawyer.”

“I have to throw up again.”

“Okay.”

To Alex’s surprise, Maggie lets the door stay open, and Alex slips inside as Maggie kneels, as Maggie starts holding her own hair back. Tears sting Alex’s eyes as Maggie retches, because her entire body is wracking with the force of her vomiting, but her hands are steady, calculated, holding her own hair back expertly, and Alex’s heart breaks wondering how much practice Maggie has had being sick and all alone.

Not anymore.

Alex’s gentle hands replace Maggie’s, stroking her sweaty temples and holding her hair back, one hand focused on her hair, the other focused on keeping a steady hold on her back, a comfort, an anchor.

Maggie starts to apologize, but her entire body tenses, and she convulses again, emptying whatever could possibly be left in her stomach.
She sniffs and she trembles and she shakes her head and she spits once, twice, three times. She wipes her mouth with toilet paper, and she shudders, and Alex thinks she might be crying, but she doesn’t let Maggie know her suspicions.

She starts to rise on her own but Alex shifts so Maggie can brace herself on Alex’s arms. Maggie hesitates, but concedes, and Alex smiles softly, flushing for her as Maggie gropes for her toothbrush. Alex moves to put toothpaste on it, and Maggie grimaces a disbelieving thank you. Alex keeps her hands out and waiting for Maggie to stumble as she brushes, rinses, mouth washes, spits.

When she’s ready, Alex puts a gentle hand around her shoulder, gingerly avoiding touching her queasy stomach, and guides her out of the bathroom.

“Do you like the couch or the bed when you’re sick, babe?”

“Couch,” Maggie grunts, and Alex smiles.

“Me too.”

Maggie’s exhausted eyes go wide when she notices the grocery bags Alex brought on the counter.

“Danvers, what – “

“I got you the necessities. Including…” She tucks Maggie in and darts across the house, pulling out old L Word and Sex in the City DVDs and holding them up excitedly.

“You know I have netflix, right Danvers?”

Alex grins, looking just like her little sister, and Maggie cracks out a smile.

“It’s better on DVD!”

Maggie doesn’t question her nerd’s logic, just watches as she bustles around the studio, bringing Maggie chapstick and water and tea.

“Why are you here, Danvers?”

“You’re sick,” Alex says like it’s the most obvious thing in the world.

“I’m gross,” Maggie amends, and Alex shakes her head and kneels in front of Maggie, stroking her hair and kissing her nose.

“Maggie, you’re my girlfriend. I want to take care of you. You deserve to be taken care of. Let me? Please?”

She doesn’t understand why, and she doesn’t really think she deserves it, but god, do Alex’s hands feel nice on her clammy skin, and god, do Alex’s eyes sparkle when they look at her.

She nods, slowly, nervously, and Alex’s smile goes straight to her heart, and she swears it’s that smile that’ll make her flu go away.

Chapter Summary

anonymous asked:

Hey! I really loved your fic where Kara came out to Maggie! Do you think you'll write/would you write a follow up of the next morning where Kara says all the things to Alex? You are amazing and I am in awe of your artistic gifts

(The first fic that this wonderful Anon is referring to, chapter 109.)

“Hey, hey, I can walk. Or fly. Should I fly?” Kara’s sleepy words are stumbling almost as much as her feet, and Alex and Maggie both smirk softly.

“Nah, Kid Danvers, best save the flying for later, huh? When you’re a little less – ”

“Groggy,” Alex supplies, and presses a kiss to Kara’s forehead as she and Maggie work to lay Kara down squarely in the center of Maggie’s bed.

They tuck her in from either side, and Kara whines when they start to retreat back into the living room space of the studio.

“Nooo, Alex, you just got home, don’t go! Maggie’s comfy, tiny, so tiny, but she’s comfy, and you’re comfy, and – ”

“Shhh, Kara, I’m gonna eat something, and then I’ll come right to bed, okay?”

“Maggie too?”

“Yeah, Little Danvers, I’ll come too.”

“Promise?”

“Promise.”

Satisfied, Kara grins sleepily and settles down into the pillows, her breathing starting to even out again.

“She’s been crying,” Alex whispers to Maggie, and Maggie nods as she pours water for Alex and gestures her toward the two slices of pizza they’d left for her.

Alex digs right into it cold, a habit she’d picked up from Maggie; and normally, Maggie would made a snarky comment, but tonight? Tonight, she lets it go with a soft, affectionate smile and a passionate kiss to Alex’s cheek.

“Mmmm,” Alex hums, leaning into Maggie as she chews, and as soon as she swallows she turns her face to put her lips on Maggie’s, and Maggie sighs and sinks into the kiss, and her lips part and Alex wants to take her right here, right now, but Kara, Kara, Kara.
She pulls back and both of their bodies keen at the loss.

“She’s okay, Alex. She just… like I said, she just has some stuff she wants to talk to you about.”

Alex chugs water and pizza and more water and more pizza.

“Okay but what stuff? Is she alright? Did someone hurt her? Why didn’t she come to me? What – ”

“Whoa whoa, okay, Danvers, listen to me. Eat your pizza and come to bed. Okay? I’ll go out in the morning to get you both breakfast, and Kara will talk to you then. She’s fine. I promise. And if you’re not fine when she tells you what she has to tell you, that’s okay. I’ll be here. And so will she. Okay? Nothing’s wrong.”

With anyone else, Alex would fight. With anyone else, Alex would resist and insist and push harder, harder. But with Maggie? Alex stares at Kara’s sleeping form – she’s safe, she’s safe, Maggie’s been taking good care of her, she’s safe – and sighs, and chews, and swallows, and nods.

“Let me brush my teeth. And then you’re going to find out what it’s like to share a bed with a little sister who fidgets in her sleep. And has Kryptonian strength.”

“Well, her sister’s pretty damn strong, and I can handle her in bed just fine,” Maggie lowers her voice an octave or two, and Alex nearly swoons.

“Maggie! Kara’s right there!”

“She’s sleeping – ” Maggie tickles her.

“No funny business with Kara around, even when she’s in dream land. Yes ma’am. Come to bed, Danvers.”

And she does, and she stays awake long after Maggie settles on the other side of Kara, long after Maggie’s breathing evens out, long after the soft circles Maggie’s tracing on Alex’s arm – both of their arms thrown over Kara’s stomach – slow and stop because Maggie’s fallen asleep.

She stays awake, and she relishes the heat of her little sister next to her, the way that Kara, even in sleep, feels safe enough to snuggle with both her and Maggie.

She stays awake, and she wonders what Kara could possibly have told Maggie before telling Alex.

She doesn’t remember falling asleep, but she’s woken up by a soft kiss on her lips.

“Morning, beautiful,” Maggie greets, and Alex smiles groggily and reaches for Maggie’s cheek.

“Hey,” she croaks, and Maggie’s smile deepens.

“Hey there. Listen, your sister’s in the bathroom, and I’m gonna hit the gym with James and then bring you both back breakfast. Okay?”

“Mmmmmmm.”

She’s still yawning and stretching when Maggie kisses her one more time – two more times, three more times – and slips out of the apartment.

She jumps when Kara speaks, not having noticed her slipping out of the bathroom. She’s wearing one of Maggie’s college hoodies, and Alex’s heart warms.

“You really love her, don’t you?” Kara asks, and Alex rubs her eyes and sits up.

“What makes you say that?”

“You’re usually out of bed like a shot. But you trust her. She makes you feel safe.”

Kara plops on the bed in front of Alex as her older sister sits up, nodding.

“She makes you feel safe too, apparently. What was so scary you couldn’t come to me first, Kara? I mean, not that I mind you going to Maggie. I like it, I like that you trust her, love it, but I… Kara, what is it?”

Alex might be more relaxed in the morning, being with Maggie, but she certainly hasn’t lost any of her directness. Kara sighs and adjusts her glasses before staring at her sister and taking them off completely.

Alex’s stomach twists. That means they’re in for a really intense conversation. She puts her hands on her sister’s, careful not to interfere with the way her fingers fidget with themselves, with Maggie’s sweatshirt, with the comforter.

“Kara, I love you. Whatever it is, you can –”

“I like girls. Women. I like men, too. I’m bisexual, Alex. Or, pan. I – I don’t know. I’m not sure what word feels right yet. Maggie says it’s okay that I don’t know yet. She says I don’t have to be sure. But the thing I am sure of is… is that I like girls, too. Not just guys.”

She looks more terrified than she did when facing off with Reactron, and Alex blinks once. Blinks twice. Blinks again.

“So, you’re queer.”

She stands and she paces and her brow stays furrowed and Kara’s lip trembles.

“I’m sorry, Alex –”

“Sorry?” Alex drops to her knees and gathers Kara’s hands back into her own and smooths the hair out of her face and shakes her head. “Sorry? Kara, why would you apologize?”

“Sorry? Alex, no, I’m not angry! I’m just… I’m just trying to figure out why you’d tell my girlfriend before you’d tell me. And like I said, I love that you’re comfortable with Maggie, I really do, I just don’t understand –”

“Because you just came out, Alex! You just came out, and you’re just figuring yourself out, and the whole reason you didn’t figure yourself out earlier was me and how selfish I was and now I’m doing it again, I’m taking up that space from you again, and I don’t want to, I don’t want to take anything away from you, I just like her so much and I can’t keep it to myself anymore, but I don’t want to take space from you, not again –”

“Kara. Kara. Kara. Stop. Stop it. Please, Kara, listen to me. You… you didn’t… Eliza gave me responsibility over you, you didn’t ask for it. You’d just lost your entire planet, Kara, you didn’t ask for me to… to give up my whole life for you. You just wanted a family, and that’s… that’s what you are, Kara, and nothing – nothing, you understand me? – is ever going to change that. You’re not taking anything away from me, Kara. You can be bi, or pan, or queer, or whatever label you like, but you are my sister before you are anything else, Kara. And you deserve to figure yourself out with me at your side, not with… with tears on my girlfriend’s shoulder in the middle of the night when I’m not home. Okay? It’s okay, I just… I want what we’ve always wanted – to share our lives. And if that’s queer lives, all the better. Kara, I love you, always, I – wait. Wait, Kara, did you say – who do you like so much? Who’s her?”

Kara’s wet, smiling eyes suddenly go wide, and Alex’s hand that had been so busy stroking Kara’s hair, wiping her tears, stills.

“Kara.”

“Yeah, this um… this is the other part I was scared you wouldn’t like.”

“Kara. It isn’t Livewire?”

Kara busts out a laugh that nearly causes Alex to overbalance. “What? No! No, it’s not – it’s Lena, Alex. Lena Luthor.”

Alex is quiet.

Alex is quiet for a long, long moment, and she bites the inside of her cheek, and Kara tries desperately to keep breathing.

“Well, she definitely likes you back. And you, Kara, not just Supergirl. So, you know, when Maggie gets back, we can strategize. If you want.”

“Strategize?” Kara’s voice is small, strained, because Alex says Lena likes her back, Alex says Lena likes her back, Alex isn’t mad, Alex isn’t mad, Alex loves her always, always, always.

“Well, come on, Kara. You have about as much game outside of that suit as… as Winn has.”

Kara reaches to adjust her glasses and fumbles when she remembers that they’re not on her face. Alex arches an eyebrow and leans back, her case in point.

“It – I – that’… I – I have plenty of game – ”

“As Supergirl, maybe. We’ve gotta figure out a way to channel that SuperSuave into Kara Danvers.”

“I… you love me, Alex?”

“Always, Kara. Always.”
They’ve been having lunch every couple of weeks since Maggie arrested her.

Since Maggie had brought her an apology bag of donuts – having gleaned the intel from Kara that Lena secretly appreciates the fried sugary dough – and they’d accidentally discovered they’d had a lot to talk about.

At first, nerd stuff. Science stuff, tech stuff, police stuff.

Then, their Danvers girls.

And, Maggie suspected, Lena did, indeed, think of Kara as her Danvers girl.

She didn’t know if Kara knew it – hell, she didn’t even know if Lena herself knew it – so she said nothing about it.

She said nothing about it, that is, until Alana – something’s off about her, Maggie thinks to herself, and files it away for things to bring up with Lena at lunch – lets her into Lena’s office when she absolutely shouldn’t have.

Because Lena’s legs are open and her head is tilted back and a blonde woman with fantastic arms is standing between her legs, holding her up with ease against her desk, a reddish glow bathing the office as the blonde’s lips trace their way up Lena’s throat, and –

Oh.

Oh shit.

Shit shit shit shit fuck damn dear god Kid Danvers isn’t such a kid after all.

Because the blonde currently fucking Lena senseless against her desk?

Is Kara Danvers.

Kara whispers something in Lena’s ear that makes Lena gasp and claw at her back, that makes Maggie infinitely grateful that she doesn’t have her girlfriend’s little sister’s superhearing.

Her girlfriend’s little sister.

Little Danvers.
Fuck.

She slips out of Lena’s office and she gives Alana a stiff nod, refusing to give her the satisfaction of seeing shock on her face, of seeing anything out of the ordinary on her face. Because she’d definitely known exactly what was going on in that office, and she’d her walk in anyway.

She texts Winn to pull up files on her.

And then she texts Lena.

_Hey – I am so sorry, I’m all tied up at the precinct – could we reschedule for tonight? Six? At the bar?_

And then she texts Kara.

_Hey Little Danvers – meet me at six, at the bar?_

She grins and shakes her head when, half hour later, they both respond with a certain overeagerness that Maggie recognizes all too well from her post-orgasm text checks.

She grins again when, that night, Kara’s eyes fly wide when she sees Maggie sitting with Lena in the bar.

“I – it – Lena! Hi! Maggie didn’t say you were going to be here, I – hi! How, um… how are you?”

She adjusts her glasses and she shifts her body like she’s not sure whether to go in for a hug, a kiss, or to run away. Or better, to fly away.

“Have a seat, Little Danvers,” Maggie nudges out a stool toward her.

“What’s this about, Detective?” Lena asks, back to formalities and back ramrod straight, terror growing in her eyes.

Maggie shakes her head and gives the softest smile she knows how.

“Relax, Luthor. This isn’t an ambush, it’s just… Kara, you gotta tell your sister. She might have preconceptions about Luthors, but she trusts you, Kara, and Lena, you’re… you’re not your mother. Or your brother. If anyone can get her head around that, it’s Alex. And Kara, you… you deserve to not go through this whole liking girls thing alone. Or… only with your girlfriend. Okay? Alex should know. And Lena, I can be your… person. If you want to talk about… things.”

Kara and Lena fumble for words, exchange a glance, Lena sitting back tensely and Kara furiously adjusting her glasses. Lena remembers verbal communication first.

“And how did you come to the conclusion that there are… things… that Kara and I should be discussing? With her sister and with you?”

Maggie blinks and Maggie sighs, knowing she’ll never – try as she might – get that image out of her mind.

“You know what, let’s not focus on that. Let’s focus on, congratulations! You two look like you make each other really happy! And I don’t want you to have to hide it. And let’s be honest here, I don’t want to have to hide it from Alex. I want to go on double dates instead, and do all the cutesy double date things that queer women get up to, like… like bowling!”

“Bowling,” Lena deadpans, and Kara just laughs before sobering and asking,
“You’re not mad?”

“Why the hell would I be mad?”

“Because I… because we…”

“A Luthor and a Super? Kara, you gotta know me better than – ”

The rest of Maggie’s words are lost, choked off by the strength of Kara’s arms around her body, by Kara’s sobbing relieved tears into her shoulder.

“Kara, sweetie, there are no red sun lamps in here, surely you don’t want to come out to your sister by means of accidentally breaking her girlfriend’s ribs.”

Kara squeals out a series of apologies and Maggie exhales carefully, rubbing her ribs and wheezing her thanks at Lena.

“I’m happy for you, Little Danvers. And for you, Lena. Our Danvers girls, huh?”

Lena blushes as Kara slips her hand into hers, her heart slamming and her head spinning, because she’s not ashamed to be with me, she’s not ashamed to be seen with me, she’s not ashamed, she’s not ashamed, she’s not ashamed.

“Danvers girls, indeed.”

Chapter Summary

iiithisismyusernameiii asked:

I know this isn't your norm but can we have some kind of SuperCorp Bridal Style something? Because you know they are obviously dating now... right?

“Oh come on, Alex, she totally knows.”

Alex pffts and looks away and looks back and looks away and looks back.

“Noooo.”

“Alex. Yes. She does.”

Alex squints and leans across the bar to get a better look at Lena, at the way she’s fawning over Kara, at the way Kara’s leaning into her, the way Kara’s arm looks like it’s just twitching to toss itself over Lena’s shoulders.

“I’m not saying she doesn’t like Kara for Kara – hell, she seems even more in love with Kara than she’s enamored with Supergirl – but I’m saying, Danvers. She’s not stupid. And we’ve already agreed that the glasses really…”

“Are ridiculous, yeah,” Alex murmurs distractedly, staring all the harder at her sister and her sister’s maybe-not-really-what-are-you-talking-about-Alex-we’re-just-friends-come-on-I-meanure-I-like-her-what’s-not-to-like okay-I’m-gonna-stop-you-right-there-Little-Danvers-because-what’s-not-to-like-is-literally-the-phrase-your-sister-used-about-me-right-before-she-became-my-girlfriend girlfriend.

“What do you think they’re talking about?” Lena asks Kara on the other side of the bar when she catches Alex and Maggie both staring.

Kara has to try – hard – not to tell her exactly what Alex and Maggie are talking about, because in a bar this crowded, this loud, there would be no other way to explain her knowledge except superhearing. And she’s going to tell Lena – really, she is – but not yet, because she’s terrified, because Lena likes Kara for Kara, which is unbelievable and amazing but what if when she realizes that Kara is also Supergirl, she doesn’t like her for... her... anymore?

But she can’t say all that, not yet, not yet, so she splutters and she adjusts her glasses and she tries very hard not to spill her club soda all over her baby blue collared shirt that Lena had commented earlier brought out her eyes beautifully.

“Oh, um… probably… girlfriend stuff. Definitely girlfriend stuff.” She adds an authoritative nod for good measure, and Lena’s laughter sounds like faerie wings, and Kara’s heart leaps because she’s laughing, but she’s not laughing at Kara, and that... she... is perfect.
“Girlfriend stuff,” Lena deadpans, her voice rich and low and full of barely contained amusement.

Kara adjusts her glasses again. “Yeah. Like uh… what… hey, what do girlfriends talk about, anyway?”

Lena takes a long sip of her wine, and Kara tries – and fails – not to look at her lips.

“The same things we do, probably.” Lena answers after a thoughtful swallow, and Kara’s stomach flips because sometimes she thinks she knows Lena so well, but when they go anywhere near… this territory… she just can’t figure out what her feelings are… if she’s just happy to have a friend, or if these dates they’ve been going on are actually… you know… dates.

She should ask Alex. Or Maggie. Or both. But not now. Not now, because now, Lena is draining her wine and standing up and Kara’s ex-boyfriend – not the amazing one – naturally chooses that moment to cross behind her, causing Lena to overbalance, to stumble, to start to fall.

Kara doesn’t think and she doesn’t calculate. She just sweeps one arm under Lena’s thighs and the other, strong around her back, scooping her up bridal style so she doesn’t fall, so she doesn’t roll her ankle, so she doesn’t…

But oh. Oh. Oh no.

Because now Lena’s breath is hitched and Alex and Maggie’s jaws are both on the bar and Lena’s pupils are dilating and her breath smells of wine and nothing has ever smelled so perfect and Kara can hear her heartbeat, feel it, and she hasn’t had anything but club soda but Rao does she suddenly feel drunk, and Rao is Lena’s body warm, and Lena’s arms are wrapped around her neck and Lena is speaking, softly, speaking, low, speaking, intimate.

“Well, these arms certainly do feel familiar,” Lena’s practically whispering, and it doesn’t matter that the bar is crowded, and it doesn’t matter that the bar is loud, and it doesn’t even matter that Kara has superhearing: the words penetrate her every cell with subtle, heated precision.

“I… I didn’t want you to… fall,” Kara splutters, and neither woman says anything about the fact that Kara still hasn’t put her down.

“Oh, Kara Danvers,” Lena husks softly, “I told you. You are my hero. I know you’d never let me fall” She brings her lips to Kara’s ear easily, protective of her secrets, of her safety, of her comfort and of her happiness. “Whether you’re in or out of that suit and cape.”

Heat sears throughout Kara’s entire body, and she has no words because she barely has breath, and she pulls back so she can look Lena in the eyes, and Rao she can’t help the way she glances down at her lips once, twice, three times, until Lena breathes, until Lena wets them, until Kara can’t take it anymore and closes the gap, because she can’t process anything except Lena, Lena, Lena.

They startle apart at a loud whoop from across the bar, and Kara sets Lena down gently, carefully, though they stay entangled in each other’s arms, entangled in each other’s breath.

“Boom! You owe me that flash grenade, Danvers!”

“I never said the glasses aren’t ridiculous!”

“Flash grenade!”

“Do we want to know why your sister’s girlfriend wants a flash grenade to begin with?” Lena grins into Kara’s ear.
“Not even a little bit,” Kara grins, and finishes what she started, and Rao, are Lena’s lips soft, and perfect, and smiling into their kiss, and Rao, Rao, Rao, she likes me for me, for me, for me.
anonymous asked:

Can we pls have suicidal!someone, if it's not too much trouble? I know that you already wrote one but I just really really need it right now. Maybe trying to keep it a secret until there's an attempt or something. idk. whatever you write will be fantastic, I'm sure :)

It’s not something she talks about – Danvers is right.

She doesn’t like talking about herself.

And with good reason. Who’d stay, if she really let herself talk?

Who’d stay, if she said that the first time she tried to kill herself, she was fourteen and the second time, she was seventeen and nearly wrapped her beloved pickup around a tree?

Nearly, because at the last moment, she couldn’t bear the pain she’d cause the tree with the damn truck.

The concussion and the stitches from the crash off to the side were almost enough pain to make the attempt worth it.

Almost.

But it was still pain.

Which was exactly the problem.

So it’s not something she talks about.

But it’s something she thinks about – usually passively, sometimes actively, sometimes a painful combination of both – nearly every day.

Because who the hell would miss her, anyway?

For a long time, she didn’t know how to answer that question.

For a long time, the idea that her father might miss her spurred her to do it, to end it, to spite him, to relieve him, because look what he did to the daughter he called disgusting. He might miss her, but he’d also be happier if she were out of his life.

Is having a daughter who killed herself more or less humiliating than having a daughter who loves other women?

No one would miss her.
But now?
Alex would.
And she loves her for it.
And she hates her for it.
Loves her, because god, god, god, no one’s seen Maggie’s scars and not flinched before. Alex just looks and listens and holds her, and tells her things about helping her heal, about not judging her, about wanting to be there for her.

Hates her, because god, god, god, if she didn’t feel guilty enough, selfish enough, before, well, having someone care about her? Having someone care about her, maybe even love her – Alex says she loves her, and god, Maggie wants it to be true, doesn’t want it to be true, because god, so much pressure – having someone love her gives her all this responsibility.

All this responsibility not to break Alex’s heart.

And she’ll fail.

She knows she will.
She always fails.

Better sooner than later, she figures, on one of those nights.

One of those nights when her one side convinces her other that she’s not enough, that she’ll never be enough. That it’ll never get easier, that there’s no point in hoping in a hopeless world, because turn on the news, because look out the window, because check the twitter feed.

Everywhere there’s hope, there’s even more pain.

Because hope is just that – pain. Delayed. Pain brewing, pain waiting to bloom, to consume, to destroy.

She sits on the edge of her bed and she fiddles with the bottle of sleeping pills she holds loosely in her hands. She turns it over, and over, and over.

She reads and rereads the note she wrote – and wrote, and destroyed, and wrote, and destroyed, and wrote, and destroyed – the note she’s been writing since she was fourteen years old, now finally addressed to someone who might cry over it. Not that she wants that. Not that she wants her to be in pain.

But better pain now than later, right? She’ll move on better, the sooner it is.

Alex. Alex, Alex, Alex.

Her hands don’t shake with the fistful of pills, but her entire body jumps, because there’s a knock on her door. An insistent knock.

A knock with a voice.

“Maggie. Maggie, open the door.”

Alex.
“Gimme a second, Danvers,” she calls, and she’s surprised and a little bit impressed by how normal she thinks her own voice sounds.

She’s not sure if she’s relieved or disappointed or infuriated.

She’s probably all of the above.

She thinks she spills all the pills back into the bottle, and she thinks she puts the bottle safely under her pillow.

She does neither successfully, and Alex? Alex notices right away.

“Maggie,” is all she says, because she must read something in her face, she must see something in her stance, she must have gleaned something from her overly affectionate, then overly withdrawn, then overly affectionate, then nonexistent, texts.

She strides past her and she crosses the studio in one step and she sweeps the random pills Maggie missed off the floor and her hands shake when she retrieves the hastily stashed bottle from under the pillow, and her hands shake even more as she takes Maggie’s folded note into her fingers.

She doesn’t open it, but she stares at her name on the front of it – ornately written, beautifully written, simply written – like she’s burning the script into her memory, and she doesn’t look up at Maggie for a long, long time.

She sits on Maggie’s bed – where Maggie had been sitting, just moments before – and she stares at the note without reading it, and she stares and she stares and when she speaks, her voice is calmer than Maggie expected it to be, and her voice is deader than Maggie expected it to be.

“I’m not gonna ask you to tell me why and I’m not gonna ask you to talk more than you want to. Which, I get, is probably not at all. And I’m not gonna ask to read this note, because dammit, Maggie, I never want to have to. I’m not going to call you selfish because you’ve had enough of that bullshit in your life, and I’m not going to tell you it’ll get better, because I can’t promise that it will. But I am gonna be here for you, I can promise that. Whether you like it or not, I can promise that I’m gonna be here and I’m gonna love you and I’m gonna make you as happy as anybody can, as often as anybody can, and I’m gonna promise you that you’re worth it, because god, Maggie, you’re everything good in this world and you don’t even know it. But before I promise you all that, before I show you all that, I need you to step outside the apartment. Just for a minute.”

Maggie’s too bewildered to argue. Too bewildered to protest, too bewildered to do anything but turn and step out into her own hallway.

She tries not to listen. Tries not to listen, but she does.

Because Alex is letting out muffled screams, probably against a pillow, and then the chain on her heavy bag is clanging and punch after punch after punch is being thrown, and Alex is sobbing and Alex is raging and Alex is beating herself senseless because she’s not enough, she’s never enough, and god, god, god, she doesn’t know what she’d do if Maggie wasn’t… here… one day, if… she can’t…

Maggie waits in the hall like Alex told her to, because she’s too numb to do anything else, and the silence that soon fills her studio is scarier than Alex’s fists, than Alex’s muffled screaming. But still, she waits. Waits. Waits. Not sure if she’s feeling nothing or everything.
Alex opens the door again, and Maggie catches a glimpse of bloodied knuckles before Alex holds her hands out, palms forward, telling Maggie that she’s gotten out what she needed to get out, that she wants Maggie in her arms. If she wants to be there.

Maggie shakes her head and pushes past Alex into the apartment, dragging her by the wrist into her bathroom.

Neither of them speak as Maggie sits Alex on the edge of the tub and rummages for alcohol and neosporin and gauze.

Neither of them speak as she kneels in front of her and cleans Alex’s knuckles and bandages Alex up.

Neither of them speak until Maggie, inexplicably, chuckles.

“I’m the one trying to kill myself and you’re the one getting injuries cleaned up.”

Alex inhales sharply, and Maggie shakes her head, leaning forward to rest her forehead on Alex’s chest.

“I’m sorry, I know I shouldn’t joke, I just – ”

But Alex’s arms are around her and Alex is kissing her hair.

“I know. I know. I know.”

“It’s not that I want to leave you – ”

“I know.”

“Or for you to be hurt.”

“I know.”

“I never want you hurt.”

“I know.”

“I just – ”

“Maggie. This isn’t about how I feel. This is about you. And we’re still somehow talking about me.”

It’s Maggie’s turn, this time.

“I know.”

They both smile a little at the role reversal. Smile through bloodshot eyes and stinging tears and shattered spirits.

“You don’t think I’m a bad person?” Maggie chokes out, not for the first time, and what’s left of Alex’s heart breaks.

“No. I think you’re a brave person. I think you love so deep it feels like it can kill you, so I think you need to learn to let me love you, to let me be here for you. To love you… yourself. But no, Maggie. Of course I don’t think you’re a bad person.”
A heated combination of disbelief, disgust, relief, and pure, pure agonized love do battle on Maggie’s face, and she shudders in Alex’s arms.

“You’ll stay with me tonight?” she’s terrified to ask, but Alex doesn’t think she’s a bad person, Alex thinks she’s worthy of her love, Alex thinks she’s worthy of loving herself, Alex is… here.

“I’ll stay with you always, Maggie.”

hey mom!!! two things: 1) my gf is in china rn and i miss her more than i thought would like it's physically painful. 2) could i please get a badass Yve fic to cheer me up? oh and congrats on your engagement!!!

First Yve fics linked here: Chapter 273

She usually doesn’t like to show off.

Actually, she’s not trying to kid anyone.

She usually loves to show off.

So when Adrian texts to tell her he’ll be at Maggie and Alex’s for dinner that night, she takes a few deep, steadying breaths, and she snaps to attention, and she strides with as much outward confidence as she can into the command center.

“Agent Danvers. A word, ma’am?”

Alex smirks slightly before turning around. Rookies are always so formal.

“Agent Butler. What can I do for you?”

“Um, I was wondering if it would be appropriate to… well…”

“You wanna have dinner with us and Adrian tonight.”

“I – “

“Don’t worry, Yve, Director Henshaw’s the one who can read minds, not me. Adrian just sent me a… very animated text.”

She holds up her phone as proof, and Yve relaxes somewhat.

“You haven’t seen him since you made Agent, have you?”

The beginnings of a smile tug on Yve’s lips.

“No ma’am.”

“And you want to show off a little bit.”

“No ma’am.”
Alex quirks her lips off to the side and leans into Yve’s ear. “You want to show off a lot.”

“Yes ma’am.”

They share a private smirk and Alex straightens, nodding.

“See you at seven, then. Maggie’s place. We’ll leave the job at the job, understood?”

But the idea of leaving the job at the job fades rapidly, because it’s 6:50 and there’s a Cadmus attack three blocks down from Maggie’s apartment, and it’s Yve who first spots Adrian in his beat-up old Ford.

Right in the line of Cadmus fire.

“Agent Danvers!” she shouts, and Alex sees, and Alex yells, and Alex sprints.

Maggie and Yve are right alongside her, shorter legs notwithstanding, and Alex shouts a command, and they both understand without really hearing, and Alex shoots from one angle, Maggie from another, Yve from another, and the enhanced Cadmus soldier is down right before he could take aim at Adrian’s car.

“Ade!” Maggie keeps sprinting, trusting Alex and Yve to deal with the aftermath, at once both grateful and infuriated that the attack was so close to the apartment, that they were all on the scene so quickly.

She tugs him into her arms as he gets out of his car, shaking slightly.

He lets her kiss him and run her hands up and down his body to check for any injuries, to check for any pain.

“You know you three looked like something out of Baywatch meets The Terminator, sprinting down the street with your guns out like that,” he says, his eyes locked on Yve and Alex, a broad, shaky grin on his face.

Maggie exhales, hard, with relief into his shoulder, and Alex glances up at Yve as they both work to cuff their newest Cadmus prisoner.

“One decent thing about Cadmus: gives you plenty of opportunity to show off. Nice work, Yve. Really nice work.”

Yve grins.

“Well, I learned from the best.”

Alex straightens slightly, and Yve swallows a laugh.

“Maggie’s really great.”

“I can demote you any time I want, rookie.”

“I thought I just did really nice work, Agent Danvers.”

Alex thinks about keeping up the charade of being offended, but J’onn is arriving in the van to collect the Cadmus lackey, and they’re officially off-duty.

And they officially have a dinner to get to.
“That you did, Yve. That you did.”

She tugs at her own hair and she tries – and god, she fails spectacularly – not to scream Maggie’s name.

Tries because on one hand, she loves being vulnerable with Maggie, for Maggie.

On the other, that smug grin and that little chuckle Maggie will sometimes give as Alex starts to unravel?

She’s got her competitive streak to think of.

Fails because her legs are spread open wide and god Maggie looks amazing with her hair all around the pillow she’s laying on, her breasts moving freely each time she slams her hips up into Alex’s.

Fails because Maggie’s hand is resting on her own body, and her fingers are burying deeper and deeper into Alex’s each time she thrusts her hips up.

Fails because Maggie’s knee is raised and Alex is somehow riding both Maggie’s fingers and her thigh and fails because Maggie is reaching up with her other hand to play with Alex’s nipples and fails because Maggie is talking to her just like she knows Alex likes.

“Good girl, Alex, ride my fingers just like that, babe. You can let go, sweetie, you’re not gonna hurt me. I want to feel you let go, Ally,” she’s saying, and Alex tries, and she fails, not to scream Maggie’s name.

But this time, Maggie doesn’t give a smug chuckle and she doesn’t smirk that cocky smirk, because the image, the feeling, the sound, of Alex riding her fingers, of Alex coming unraveled all over her, Alex dripping onto her body and slamming her hips down onto Maggie’s fingers hard, harder, fast, faster, riding her thorough and riding her with the reckless, passionate abandon that made Maggie fall in love with her in the first place?

Maggie’s too damn wrecked to do anything but moan, to do anything but writhe, to do anything but fuck her woman harder.

But harder soon isn’t enough for Alex, because Alex needs more, more, more, Maggie, please, please.
“What do you want, babe?” Maggie asks, because she needs to be sure, she always needs to be sure.

Alex answers by leaning up, leaning over, reaching across Maggie’s body to the bedside table, tugging out her strap-on and harness.

Maggie takes full advantage of Alex’s suddenly horizontal position, taking one of her nipples in her mouth and flicking her tongue the way she knows drives Alex out of her mind, sucking the way she knows makes Alex whine just like that, and sure enough, Alex pants harder, and sure enough, Alex whimpers, Alex freezes and lowers her body more, so Maggie can put more of her into her mouth, reach more of her with her tongue.

“Thought you wanted to ride me some more, Danvers?” Maggie shifts her mouth to tease, and Alex moans at the loss of contact.

“Intermission?” she squeaks, and there’s Maggie’s cocky chuckle, and god, Alex is in love.

Maggie throws herself fully, completely, absolutely, into intermission, and Alex rides her face with her chest like she was just riding her fingers, and only when she’s desperate for more pressure between her legs, to be fucked deeper, deeper, harder, by Maggie, does Alex lean back up and shift off Maggie’s body temporarily so Maggie can slip on the harness.

Alex pants while she waits, and Maggie’s eyes are just as eager.

“Want me to fill you up, Danvers?” she husks, and Alex could cum then and there.

Instead, she crawls back over Maggie’s body, straddling her again, and they both pause, staring deep into each other’s eyes.

“All good, Al?” Maggie asks, and Alex nods.

“You too?” she confirms.

“Yes please,” Maggie pants, and Alex grins, and Alex lowers herself onto Maggie’s strap-on.

Maggie groans and Alex sighs, Maggie forcing her hips to keep still as she leans up to watch herself disappear inside Alex’s body, as slow as Alex needs to get adjusted, to make sure everything feels right. To make sure everything feels perfect.

Because god, does Maggie want to make her feel perfect.

“How you doing?” she asks, and Alex nods with closed eyes.

“You feel so good, Mags,” she rasps, and Maggie smiles.

“So do you, babygirl.”

Alex nearly screams into Maggie’s mouth and she gives her one more kiss before lifting herself back up, vertically on top of her, and Maggie’s breath goes even more ragged than before because Alex is riding her hard, and deep, and fast, her head tossed back and her breasts moving in time with her reckless fucking, and Maggie puts both of her hands on Alex’s hips, Alex slamming up and down harder and faster, stretching herself out on Maggie’s strap-on, pounding down onto Maggie’s clit, onto her own clit, until she collapses forward and holds herself up above Maggie’s body with trembling arms, pausing only to check with Maggie, to check to make sure she’s not hurting her, scaring her, and Maggie just tells her to let go, and Alex?

God, she does.

She lets go and she rides Maggie harder than she’s ever done, her clit getting all the pressure she needs from Maggie’s body, her g-spot getting all it needs from her persistent thrashing, from Maggie slamming her hips up in perfect time to meet hers, from the control Alex has over their rhythm, their speed, their angle, her heart getting all it needs from the way Maggie is staring up at her, raw want and raw love naked and shining in her eyes, from the way Maggie whispers her name over, and over, and over, with each exhale, with each moan, with each thrust.

Alex, Alex, Alex, Alex.

She comes undone just when she thinks she can’t take anymore, just when she thinks her body’s going to give; she feels herself squirting all over Maggie’s strap-on, all over her harness, all over her thighs, all over her sheets, and she feels Maggie’s fingers tighten on her hips, on her ass, because her own orgasm, her own screams, have tossed Maggie over the brink, too, and she watches Maggie’s eyes squeeze shut as she rides out her waves in time with Alex’s.

“Damn,” is the first word either of them says, who knows how many minutes or hours later.

“Damn, Danvers.”

Alex grins smugly, her face still buried in Maggie’s chest, still catching her breath.

“You like when I ride you, Sawyer?”

“Like it? Shit, Danvers, did you not feel how hard I came?”

“Oh, I felt it, Maggie. And you know I um… I think I’d like to feel it again.”

“Would you now?”

“Mmhmm.”

Alex shrieks with laughter and Maggie does the same as she flips herself on top of Alex, as they go from kissing to tickling to kissing to tickling, as they laugh and shriek and giggle and gasp deep into the night.

Chapter Summary

anonymous asked:

Is Alex or Maggie more of a grump in the morning?

Alex swears it’s Maggie.

Maggie swears it’s Alex.

Alex argues her case with meticulous evidence.

“You won’t get up and go for a morning run with me, but you’ll beat the crap out of your heavy bag in the middle of the night, Sawyer?”

“You only ever get up after I get in the shower, and you eat the driest things – gross – because your stomach can’t handle anything else so early, but you call me a morning grump, Maggie? Come on.”

Maggie counters with just as much ease.

“Danvers, let’s face it. The only reason you go for runs in the morning is to delay any kind of human interaction. Running doesn’t mean you’re a morning person: it means your body is capable of doing things before your brain is capable of not snapping at people.”

“Oh, okay Danvers, dry bagels are gross but my little babygirl can’t eat anything at all in the morning and you’re still claiming to be less grumpy than I am at sunrise?”

“Um, guys. You realize neither of you are morning people, right? Like, you realize you’re even more terrifying in the mornings than you are the rest of the time, don’t you?”

“No one asked you, Schott.”

“Go play with your computer, Winn.”

“You know he’s not entirely – “

“No one asked you either, James.”

“Don’t you have something to be guarding, Guardian?”

“Agent Danvers, Detective Sawyer – “

“Not you, too, J’onn!”

“I… I wasn’t going to weigh in on your morning habits, Agent Danvers. There’s an attack unfolding in the city square.”
“Right. Yes sir. On it.”

They turn as one to suit up, Alex already barking orders at her team.

J’onn leans into James and Winn, arms crossed over his chest as he watches his crack team of Earth daughters jog out to battle, to keep each other safe, to watch each other’s backs.

“My money’s on her girl being right.”

Winn claps and whoops and holds his hand up for J’onn to slap. “Yeah! That’s what I’m talking about, J’onn!”

James shakes his head behind J’onn’s back and J’onn just stares at Winn as he keeps holding his hand up, spluttering now, pursing his lips and muttering nonsensibly now.

“I’m not going to give you five, Mr. Schott.”

“Right, I’ll just… I’ll just go monitor the… attack…”

He lowers his hand, swivels in his chair, and turns to typing, turns to saving his big sisters with his intel, once again, for which they’ll all take him for drinks and revelry later.

As long as their mission doesn’t last until morning.

When both of them will be competing degrees of grumpy.

Chapter Summary

statuepuppie asked:

O Captain, My Captain! (Janeway would approve!) Would you please feed my soul with some Kara and Maggie bonding? Thanks!

Alex hasn’t been dating her long.
And Kara is still adjusting, is still stiff about it.
Not around Alex – around Alex, she’s all heart eyes and thrilled that she’s with Maggie, that she’s happy.
Because she is happy that she’s happy.
But around Maggie?
Kara’s still stiff, still distant.
And Alex knows her sister. And Alex knows her girlfriend.
So one night, she does one of the things she does best: covert operations.
And they both show up at Alex’s door at the same moment.
Kara, through one of the hallway windows; Maggie, up the staircase.
Kara, bearing ice cream and potstickers; Maggie, with pizza and root beer.
“What are you – “
“Why are you – “
“She had a rough day – “
“She texted me – “
“I just thought she’d want some – “
“I wanted to bring her – “
“Sorry, you go ahead – “
“Sorry, I keep interrupting – “
“Ahh!”
“Okay.”

“Hi Kara.”

“Hi Maggie.”

“So your sister had a rough day.”

“She did.”

Kara’s voice is just a little more tense than it usually is.

Just a little more prim than it usually is. A little more reserved, a little more… maybe… angry?

Maggie’s heart tears.

She doesn’t exactly have a good history with the families of girls she likes.

And Kara’s always nice to her, she’s always… cordial. But there’s a distance, a nervousness, maybe. A protectiveness. And Maggie gets it. She does. But it still scares her. It still hurts.

Both of their phones buzz at the same time. They have an identical novel of a text.

_Kara, Maggie – my day was fine. I just didn’t know how else to get you two alone together. To bond. And I want you to bond. Because you’re the most important women in my life. Kara, I know you’re not used to sharing me, and Maggie, I know you feel like you don’t fit in with my family. So… surprise? I’m with James and Winn for the night – use my apartment, have at it. Kara, just don’t make her watch old musicals. She’ll probably like them, and then I’ll have to hear random bursts of corny old songs from both of you._

Kara finishes reading first, and she gulps a rough gulp and studies Maggie while she finishes reading. While she tries not to shake. Kara knows, because Kara can hear her heartbeat. She tries to pretend she can’t. She adjusts her glasses and waits. Watching.

Maggie gulps, too, and glances up nervously.

“So I guess she thinks we’re not sufficiently bonded, huh?”

“Well, you did break her heart. And she is my sister. I’m going to be protective.”

To Kara’s surprise, Maggie smiles.

“I like that you’re protective of her. She deserves that. Someone to fight for her like you do.”

Kara adjusts her glasses and stares.

“And you want to fight for her, too?”

“I never want to stop.”

“Why?”

“Are you finally giving me the shovel talk?”

“Why do you want to fight for her, Maggie? Because you didn’t, when she left that bar hysterically crying, trying to convince herself she wasn’t even a lesbian to make the pain go away. The Kara starts at the intensity of the hurt that flashes across Maggie’s face, and she regrets her uncharacteristically harsh words immediately.

Maggie swallows and nods for Kara to open Alex’s apartment door and follows her inside, putting the pizza and root beer on the counter and pacing immediately, left hand settled below her lips.

“You know Alex. She’s… she’s quick, and she’s brave, and she’s… she’s the most gorgeous woman I’ve ever seen, but not just on the outside. Your sister… she didn’t give up on me. Not when I was kidnapped, not when I was being stupid and thinking that she’d be better off… I didn’t want her coming out to be about me, Kara, I was… I know it’s screwed up, but I was trying to protect her. I was trying… I was trying to be good enough for her. And I know I never can be, but I want to try. Every day. I want to try to be good enough, because Alex deserves that. You… you know what I mean?”

Kara stares and Kara thinks and Kara thinks about that goofy grin Alex has developed in the last week or so, that distant look in her eyes that means she’s daydreaming about Maggie, about this girl who makes her smile, who makes her giggle, who makes her laugh like Kara’s never seen her laugh before.

“More than you know,” she answers softly, and then her face splits into a grin.

“I know you have a thing for vegan ice cream – and I agree with Alex, gross – but how do you feel about potstickers?”

“That all depends, Little Danvers – how do you feel about pizza and root beer?”

“Like you’d better be ready to give me most of it.”

“Done.”

When Alex gets home late that night, she doesn’t expect Maggie to still be there.

But she’s pleasantly surprised.

Because it might be midnight, but the two women that mean most to her – that she… loves… – are still awake, still there, surrounded by empty root beer bottles and pizza and potsticker boxes and pints of ice cream.

And her apartment is full of 90s boy band music and raucous laughter and deliberately off-key singing.

She’s not sure what she’s started by giving her sister and her girlfriend a compulsory bonding night, but she’s sure of one thing: she loves it, she loves it, she loves it.
Chapter 338

Chapter Summary

anonymous asked:

Hey mom! (Is it cool if I still call you mom? Or you prefer another word?) I’ve been feeling kinda down because I had the opportunity to come out to my friend but I didn’t. I really like your fics :) I know you are not taking prompts, and I feel that I’m bothering you, so sorry. Could you write like.. maggie meeting clark, and Alex has to come out to him and it's really cheesy and cute, idk I need this right now. You are awesome and I really really like your new look.

Alex is pacing.
It’s not the same as the way she paces when Eliza comes to National City.

But it’s close.

She’s pacing and she’s wringing her hands and she keeps glancing at the freezer, even though she knows that Kara has long since cleaned out her apartment of liquor.

Maggie glances at Kara, and Kara grimaces a small smile before taking Alex by the hand.

“Alex. Clark loves you. Okay? You might not be Kryptonian, but you’re his cousin, too.”

Alex nods distractedly, glancing behind her at Maggie, who nods silently, letting Kara take the lead, because this is a moment for her Danvers girls. The Danvers sisters.

Kara sighs and strokes Alex’s hair, bringing her face back toward her. “Alex. He’s going to love Maggie, too.”

“Well yeah, what’s not to love? But I mean… my girlfriend?”

“He’s not going to care, Alex, he – “

“Yeah, but he’s so… white bread good old boy.”

Maggie snorts and Kara pffts.

“Alex – oh! He’s here!”

Maggie furrows her brow and Alex shrugs, a small grin on her face. “You get used to the superhearing after a while.”

“Oh. Right.”

“Clark!!!”

Because suddenly Kara is throwing open the door and barreling into her cousin’s arms, and he’s kissing her forehead and spinning her around slightly, and she’s giggling madly and Alex takes a deep breath, because yes, he abandoned her, but yes, he loves her, and god, family is complicated.

And speaking of complicated –

“Alex!” he says, and she doesn’t need to be looking at him to hear the huge smile in his voice. He steps out of Kara’s arms and pulls Alex into his, and she revels in it despite herself, because there aren’t a lot of men she lets touch her, ever, but Clark is one of them, and his arms make her feel… accepted.

And speaking of accepted –

“And who’s this?” He’s pulling back from her, still with a warm smile, but stiffening slightly but nearly imperceptibly in the way that he does when he has to maintain his cover.

“Um, Clark, this is Maggie Sawyer, NCPD Science Division. Maggie, Clark Kent.”

“Big fan of your work, Clark,” she says, shaking his hand with a smile that matches his, and Kara’s eyes almost burn through Alex, knowing – because she can hear it – exactly how hard her heart is pounding.

And Clark can hear it, too.

“Well, Science Division, seems like something I’d be a big fan of too. Even though Alex is the brains of the family.”

He looks at his adoptive cousin, then, trying to give her an opening, for whatever she wants to say, because clearly – if her slamming pulse is any indication – she wants to say something.

And she says it, sudden, fast, rambling.

“Clark, Maggie’s my girlfriend. She’s my girlfriend, because I’m gay. A lesbian. And a lucky one, too, because um… yeah, she’s my girlfriend.”

She bounces slightly on the balls of her feet, Maggie and Kara delicately channeling their amused chortles into their proud smiles.

Clark doesn’t raise his eyebrows and he doesn’t comment about men not being good enough and he doesn’t seem disappointed and he doesn’t laugh and he doesn’t do anything except pull Alex back into his arms, kissing her hair and smiling, smiling, smiling.

“I’m proud of you, Alex. And Maggie, welcome to the family. This one’ll take good care of you – you’re gonna do the same for her, right?”

“That’s the plan,” Maggie beams, and Kara tugs a relieved, exhaling Alex sideways into her own arms.

“You don’t seem… surprised?” Alex narrows her eyes along with her smile.

Clark digs his hands deep into his pockets, glances at Kara, glances at Maggie, and grins.

“Well, Lucy has been telling Lois for a while that she thought…”

“What’s a while? She knew? And J’onn! God, you’d think they could’ve told me! Did everyone know before I did?.”

“Not me, I thought I was falling for another straight girl – “
“Ever been more happy to be wrong, Sawyer?”

“Never.”

“Um, guys… we’re… right here?”

Clark and Kara adjust their glasses and turn away in tandem, identical smiles on their faces and identically wide can’t-erase-that-from-my-mind-but-Rao-is-it-good-to-see-her-happy eyes.
anonymous asked:

hi! my depression's been acting up lately and I've been having a really tough time. I know you've written similar things before but i could really use a comfort fic. Most likely with lots of hugs and honest feelings and talking. Thank you and keep up the great work!

“I wanted to,” she’d half choked out, half snapped. Wanted to tell her. About the cheating.

And she meant it.

Sort of.

She’d wanted to tell her because Alex had said she didn’t want there to be any secrets between them.

Secrets.

Ha.

Secrets, like Maggie’s father. Like cheating on Emily.

Like the senior guys on the football field when she was a freshmen – because she was fourteen, she was a freshman, and a tiny one at that.

Like getting spit at in the street.

Like her depression.

Like her anxiety.

Like her tendency to bottle everything up until she just bursts.

Sometimes – well, once – by cheating.

Usually – much more than once – by punching, by drinking, by punishing herself, by pushing people away (hence the cheating).

She’d wanted to tell her.

But telling her would be a can of worms, a bombshell of damage, that she’s terrified will make Alex run. Will make Alex look at her like…

Will make Alex lose that spark in her eye, that smile, that softness. For her.

But when Alex shows up at her door – “Maggie, come on, I know you’re home” – Maggie has to text her instead of call out to her, because she can’t open her mouth right now. Doesn’t have the energy for it.

Barely has the energy to move her fingers over her phone’s screen.

Come in. I gave you the key for a reason.

Alex is in faster than Maggie even thought the text would send, and her eyes are swooping over Maggie’s body, scanning for damage, for injuries, for pain.

But it’s all inside.

“Maggie, what happened? You weren’t answering your texts, your captain said you called in sick but you weren’t sick this morning – “

Maggie just looks up and Maggie just stares, and tries not to let her chin tense, her lip wobble. But they do.

“Can I touch you?” Alex is asking, because Alex doesn’t miss a thing.

Maggie nods and she sighs with unexpected relief when suddenly she’s enveloped in Alex’s arms, when suddenly she’s gripping at her like she’ll drown if she lets go, and she will, she will, she will.

“I just hate it sometimes, Alex,” Maggie chokes, hating herself for her weakness, for her whining, for her patheticness.

“Hate what, Maggie?” Alex asks, trying to pull back so she can look at Maggie’s face, but Maggie doesn’t let her, because she can’t see those perfect eyes, that perfect face, right now, because seeing would mean Alex seeing her, and she is messy and she is a mess and she is damaged and she is damage itself.

“Life,” Maggie chokes, and she feels Alex tense.

She braces for goodbye, she braces for ableist shaming, she braces for this is too much, you’re too much, you’re not worth it, you’re not worth anything.

But she should know Alex better, because Alex just hugs her closer.

Alex just turns her face to kiss her temple. Alex just strokes her hair and whispers sweet nothings, sweet everythings, into her ear as she starts to shake, as she starts to break, as she starts to let the bottle burst through her tear ducts, through her chest wracking, through her hands grabbing, holding, needing.

“Did something happen? Or does this… do you get this feeling a lot?”

Maggie’s stomach churns, because she knows what Alex is asking.

Did something happen, or are you crazy?

“I’m not crazy,” she defends against an attack that isn’t there, and she feels Alex shake her head, and Alex succeeds in pulling back this time, in taking Maggie’s face between her hands and making sure she’s looking into Alex’s warm, warm eyes.

“Depression isn’t crazy, Maggie. Or whatever word fits for you. And hell, if anyone has a monopoly on crazy in this relationship, it’s me. You should see my rap sheet with the DEO shrink.”
“Psychiatrists don’t have… rap sheets, Alex, that’s not… how it works.”

“But it made you smile.”

“Nerd.”

“Shrink says I have BPD. And PTSD. All the acronyms. Kara has a few, too, but those are for her to tell you about if she wants – my point is, I get it, Maggie. I hate life so much sometimes I just… were you afraid? To tell me?”

Maggie sniffs and lifts her hand to her face, but Alex stops her and wipes her nose with her own sleeve, and Maggie has never been so moved.

“Well you know how much I love talking about myself, Danvers.”

“Maggie, I meant what I said. I’m here to help you heal. Even if there are things you can’t heal from. Even if there are things you’re always gonna to experience. Okay?”

“But why? I… I have zero emotional intelligence and I attach super quickly – hell, if I ever went to therapy they’d probably knock me with a BPD diagnosis of my own – and I do stupid things like cheat and lie about my parents and how do you know, Alex? That I won’t cheat on you after five years? Because you want to take the next steps with me, because I can’t handle it and I bottle things up and I lash out because I don’t know how else to end things, how else to destroy everything? Because that’s what I do, Alex. I destroy things. People. I destroy people.”

Alex strokes her hair and she takes a long, quiet breath, and she kisses her temple and she pulls her back into a soft, passionate hug.

“I don’t know, Maggie. I don’t know that you won’t cheat on me after five years because I want to take the next step with you. But I do know that we’ve taken a lot of steps already, and you’ve already stopped leaving the house and going to the couch when you need to walk away. And I know that you’re wrong. About yourself. You don’t destroy things, Maggie. You maybe don’t always make the best decisions, but you know what I see? I see the most beautiful woman I’ve ever seen trying so hard to navigate so much pain. And sometimes, you’re gonna make mistakes. I will, too. You’re human, Maggie. And I love you for it. I love you for how human you remind me that I am. Because I forget, too. So maybe… maybe we can remind each other?”

“You… love me?”

It’s Maggie that’s pulling back so they can make eye contact now, Maggie with the wide eyes and stilled breath, Maggie framing Alex’s face with trembling hands.

“Yeah, Sawyer. I love you. I’m soft on you. That okay with you?”

“Only if it’s okay that I love you back.”

“That’s more than okay, Maggie. So much more than okay. And you’re gonna be, too. I promise.”

Prompt: Sanvers in the rain!! One of them is grumpy and hates it and is complaining that they’re getting all wet and the other is skipping and twirling and getting soaked and pulls her girlfriend into the joy of it and it’s happy and they’re happy and it’s pouring and they’re soaking wet and kissing and don’t care that it’s the middle of the night or they’re wet and freezing give me all the sanvers fluff

They only bring one umbrella because Alex hates carrying things and because Maggie likes the idea of snuggling close together under the same one, anyway.

But that’s not at all what happens.

Because Alex is twirling and Alex is laughing with her head back and Alex is splashing into puddles and Alex is giggling and Alex is tugging at Maggie’s sleeve.

“Danvers, it’s cold,” she grimaces as Alex splashes into a puddle so hard that droplets jump up and into Maggie’s boots.

“Maggie, it’s beautiful!” Alex retorts, tossing her arms back and spinning around.

“Not worried about your badass agent reputation there?”

Alex stops spinning and tilts her head, a habit she’s picked up from Maggie, and her eyes are sparkling, and her hair is dripping, and Maggie has to try hard to stay grumpy.

“Maggie. I just got out of an hour of staring at you while you do all this flexible stuff, and it’s pouring but that’s okay because last night you told me how beautiful I am while you fell asleep holding me and it’s pouring but it’s warm and everyone’s safe and we’re here and we’re together and this is all so cliche but you told me that’s just being happy and I should get used to it, and I am, Maggie, and we’re that couple, and we’re always gonna be that couple, because I love you, and the rain is perfect just like you’re perfect, and we’re perfect together, and I am – ”

But she can’t ramble anymore, because Maggie’s abandoned her umbrella, abandoned her pretense, scaled the walls that she’s built, leaping over the fears that have been slammed into her, and her lips are on Alex’s, and it’s wet and whatever Alex says, this is cold, hell, it’s freezing, everything is freezing, except Alex’s lips, because Alex’s lips are warm, and when she opens her mouth and tastes Alex’s tongue with her own, it gets even warmer, like their mouths are the only sources of warmth in all the universe, and her hair is getting soaked and she’s soaked and they’re soaked and that’s okay, that’s okay, everything’s okay, everything’s happy, because Alex is lifting her off the ground and spinning her around while they kiss and Alex is giggling into her lips and god, she’s giggling right back because this woman, this woman, this woman?

This woman is both the rainstorm and the rainbow afterward, and god, Maggie’s never been so in love.
Chapter 341

Chapter Summary

superspies-and-apple-pie asked:

Also possibly a bit of NB!Alex? Maybe more of domestic Sanvers and Kara and Adrian interacting? Today’s been a bit of a shit day in terms of feeling like I’m normal and valid and not being purposefully ignored and shot down.

It’s Sunday.

It’s Sunday, and – miraculously – they both have off.

It’s Sunday and they both have off and there’s not a Cadmus invasion in sight.

It’s Sunday, and it’s noon, and they’ve refused to get out of bed – a combination of naked Sunday morning cuddles and lazy Sunday morning sex, and Maggie tracing, kissing, caressing the scars painted on Alex’s torso, and Alex whispering how much they love her in as many languages as they can speak, traipsing their gentle fingers, their tongue, down Maggie’s throat, her collarbone, her breasts.

It’s Sunday and Kara and Adrian don’t bother knocking, but they probably should have.

“Whoa, guys, seriously? It’s noon! Did you forget about us?” Adrian squeals and turns around, covering his eyes even though his back is now to his queer moms.

Kara does the same, groaning and furiously adjusting her glasses.

“Maggie, can you please get some clothes on my sibling?”

“And yourself, Mags, I mean let’s be real: both of your bodies are bangin, but I’m your kid and Kara’s your sister and we’re not trying to think about you like that.”

“Wait, Ade, does that make me your aunt? Oh Rao, that is just – ”

“Nope, nah, I take it back. Brother. I’m their little brother. We’re all siblings here. Except those two. Are you dressed yet?”

They both have to fight their instincts not to turn around when they hear a small crash, a string of curses from Alex’s lips, and giggles and dirty talk from Maggie’s, which Adrian might not be able to hear, but Kara sure can.

She hums loudly and sticks her fingers in her ears and turns to whisper-shout to Adrian.

“They still need a few minutes.”

“No we don’t you nerds, you can turn around now.”

They do, and Maggie’s in boxers and Alex’s flannel and Alex in flannel pajama pants and an oversized NCPD shirt.
“Well if that’s not the gayest thing I’ve ever seen.”

Adrian dodges the pillows Alex and Maggie both launch at him, and Alex turns away, chuckling.

“I’m gonna shower. Babe, coffee please? Do you mind?”

“You got it, handsome,” Maggie kisses them softly, and Kara sighs happily.

“Aww, Maggie, they make you so happy. And, you know, more than a little bit whipped.”

He squeals as Maggie lunges to wrap her arms around his waist and tickle him senseless.

“He’s not wrong,” Kara chimes as she takes down four mugs.

“Sure, but he’s still fun to tickle. Lucky your binder gives you some shielding, kid.”

Adrian grins and preens. “You notice my arms are getting bigger?”

Maggie puts her hand on his bicep and kisses his cheek. “Oooh, look at you! Oh, I got that, Kid Danvers. You wanna go set chill on the couch? You had a long night last night, you don’t have to make the coffee.”

“How about you two are a bad influence on each other.”

Kara and Adrian beam and put their heads together like they’re posing for a picture.

Maggie chuckles and wonders when this family started happening. If it was always destined to happen.

By the time Alex comes out of the shower, their pajamas replaced by their glasses and the Star City University hoodie and sweats Adrian bought them during his first term, Maggie and Adrian have pancakes cooking and coffee brewing, and Kara – despite Maggie telling her to rest on the couch – is padding around the kitchen with them, sticking her fingers in the pancake batter and licking them clean at every opportunity.

“Hey pretty lady,” Alex kisses the back of Maggie’s neck, and Maggie melts into their arms.

“Mmm, you smell good.”

“I should hope so, they just showered!”

“You’re such a menace, Ade.”

“My straight mama raised me better than that, but queer mama raised me right.”

Alex fives him around Maggie’s body and Maggie heaves a mock groan.

“Maggie, can I flip the pancakes?” Kara wants to know, and Maggie normally doesn’t let anyone other than Adrian cook in her kitchen – and she does, now, consider Alex’s kitchen hers – but Kara’s eyes are wide and eager, and Alex’s arms are strong and warm, so she leans her head back into Alex’s shoulder and hums.
“Flip your heart out, Little Danvers.”

Kara and Adrian high five eagerly and giggle as they each grab a spatula and do battle over the pancakes.

Alex grabs two mugs of coffee and they pad over to the couch with Maggie, giving her the mug with no cream or sugar – gross – and giving her a space to sit, to snuggle, between their legs.

“I make you happy?” they ask after a few minutes of watching Kara and Adrian’s pancake wars.

Maggie turns to look up into Alex’s eyes, a grave expression on her face.

“Of course you do, Danvers. And I make you happy?”

Alex kisses her soft, smooth, permanent, in response, and when they pull back, Maggie’s eyes are shining and her dimples are on full display.

“I like when you answer things nonverbally.”

“Mmm, I bet you do.”

“Not to interrupt the continuance of Sunday morning sexy times, but breakfast is ready!”

“Breakfassstttt,” Kara moans, reaching across Adrian to grab a pancake with her bare hands.

By the time the coffee is nothing but dregs and the pancakes are nothing but syrupy crumbs, Alex and Maggie are sprawled on the floor, intertwined in each other’s arms, and Kara and Adrian have claimed either side of the couch, his Supergirl socks occasionally doing battle with her fuzzy slipper socks.

They don’t say much as they nap and giggle their way through food coma, through the musical Kara’s put on in the background, but they’re all thinking, feeling, the same thing:

Chosen family feels so, so, so good.
anonymous asked:

So... Can we please have a demisexual Maggie who's never been close enough to any of her girlfriends to develop sexual feelings for them but she's actually opening up with Alex and stuff and eventually realizes that she's actually reached that point for the first time in her life which leads to her and Alex sleeping together for the first time and it's all super emotional and shit. (My grandmother told me she wants me to see a therapist so I can "get over" being demi and I kinda need validation.)

She doesn’t panic when it’s just kissing.

Kissing is nice.

And kissing Alex Danvers is spectacular.

So she doesn’t panic when it’s just kissing.

She loves when it’s just kissing.

And Alex is aggressive in the way she starts things, the way she pulls Maggie into her body – at the bar, in her living room – and puts her lips on hers, but Alex always freezes, like she doesn’t quite know what to do next, like she’s on overload.

Like maybe, she’s like Maggie. Like maybe, she doesn’t know Maggie well enough yet to want to do anything more with her.

Anything more sexually, that is. Because god, does Maggie want to do everything else with Alex.

Late night pizza and Netflix, rainy morning yoga, kissing and cuddling until they fall asleep, shooting pool until Maggie finally can win, movies and books and science and the job.

Saving the world.

Together.

Maggie wants all of it, and apparently – to her perpetual disbelief, because how could someone so powerful, so gorgeous, want her? – Alex wants all that with her, too.

And it’s gradual.

It’s gradual, the way Maggie starts wanting different kinds of intimacy. With Alex.

Gradual, the way she realizes that she’s kissing her deeper, that her hands are slipping under Alex’s shirt, that Alex’s body is arching in response to her touch and her own body catches fire at the sound of Alex’s soft moans.

That she’s breathing her own moans into Alex’s parted lips.
And that’s when Maggie panics.

Because Alex is going to leave.

Maggie’s sure of it.

Because Alex has been teasing – a lot – about how inexperienced she is, about how much experience Maggie must have, how Maggie should feel free to give her kissing tips, touching tips, ladies-loving-ladies flash cards, whenever she wants.

But Alex has slept with men. Not that she loved it, or even liked it.

But Maggie? Maggie hasn’t slept with anyone.

She’s never… wanted to. She’s never felt close enough to anyone, never known someone enough to feel for someone else what she does to herself with her own hands, alone, when she needs to cum before falling asleep.

She’s never wanted to, not with anyone else, but with Alex?

God, with Alex, she’s starting to… to want everything.

But when Alex finds out? That Maggie’s just as inexperienced as Alex is, in some ways moreso, that she’ll probably be an emotional mess – not to mention a physical one – if they keep going in this direction, if they keep taking off each other’s shirts and touching each other over bras and panting at grinding their thighs between each other’s legs?

She’ll leave for sure.

Right? Because everyone leaves. Because Maggie drives everyone away.

“Whoa, whoa, hey, you alright? Did I hurt you?” Alex is asking, jolting her out of their kiss, her thoughts, her terrors, her fears. And, apparently, her shaking.

Alex’s eyes are wide, concerned, and Maggie knows, knows, that even though Alex is amazing, she’s going to think Maggie’s broken. Going to think Maggie needs to get over it. Going to think Maggie’s weird and unworthy and too much, and she should have her coming out affair with someone who can have sex with whomever, whenever.

“I want you,” Maggie chokes out in a whisper, and it’s the first time she’s ever said it to anyone, because getting herself off at night is one thing, but sleeping with another person is completely, completely another.

They’re the scariest three words she’s ever said, and Alex? Alex just smiles, strokes her hair, kisses her forehead.

“You have me,” she tells her, her voice at once a reassurance and a question.

Reassurance because she’s there, she’s there, she’s not going anywhere; a question because yes, yes, she wants her too, but why is that making her this scared?

“I want to have sex with you,” Maggie clarifies, tears in her eyes and her body on fire and her lungs barely working, and Alex’s breath hitches.

“Yeah? Good, because I um… I’ve been thinking about it. Wanting it. A lot. And I’ve been… researching a little, and I… I want to have sex with you, too. I… if you want. I mean, I know I’ve never done this with a woman, but –"

“I’ve never done it at all.”

There’s silence and Maggie braces herself for goodbye, braces herself for laughter, braces herself for mockery and judgment and all the things that part of her brain, her heart – the parts that have let herself fall in love with Alex Danvers, the parts that have let herself want Alex Danvers – know Alex would never do. But she’s terrified, anyway.

Alex just cocks her head and squints and freezes slightly, but she blinks and she swallows and when she speaks, her voice is soft and her lips are twitching up into the same supportive smile Maggie wore when Alex stumbled her way out of the closet.

“God, you must think I’m such a jerk.”

Maggie blinks. If she was expecting any reaction, it wasn’t that. “What?”

“I’ve been teasing you this whole time about being so experienced, and I… I’m sorry, that must have made you so uncomfortable, I didn’t… I just assumed. I shouldn’t have. Maggie, I’m so sorry. But… can I ask you something?”

Maggie nods because something in her throat might be broken.

“Do you really want me, or do you just… are you just trying to give me something you think I want? And I mean I do. Want it. Want you. But only if you do.”

“No, I… I want… I want you. Alex. I… I’ve never… I don’t get attracted to people. Sexually. If I don’t… know them, if I don’t feel a certain way for them, I…”

She stammers off, because what kind of loser tells someone they love them before sleeping with them? How pathetic can she get?

But Alex’s eyes are light, are happiness, are reciprocal, and Alex’s touch is gentle, and Alex’s lips press against her own so slightly, so carefully, it’s like they’ve never kissed before but she wants to for the rest of her life.

“So you’re saying you like me? Enough to want me.”

“Danvers –”

“Cause that works perfectly for me. Because I like you, too, Maggie Sawyer. Enough to want you.” Her eyes drag down Maggie’s body, slow and steady and hungry, but also… reverent, somehow. Maggie’s heart contorts into fireworks. “All of you.”

Maggie forgets what breathing is, and her heart’s never raced like this before, but Alex’s hands are warm and comforting on her cheeks, and god, does she want those hands all over her body.

“So take me. All of me.”

Alex grins like it’s Christmas morning – or maybe Chanukah, Maggie’s not sure what the equivalent would be, and makes a mental note to ask her later – and then all thought exhales out of Maggie’s body because Alex is up and Alex is tugging her up, too, and Alex is carrying her to bed, all the while kissing her, kissing her, kissing her like she’s oxygen, and she is, god, she is.

“Alex,” Maggie breathes as Alex lays her down, careful to put a pillow under her head, careful to not put all her weight on top of her, and Alex stops immediately, concern back in her eyes.

“Too much? I’m sorry, we can stop, or slow down, I’m sorry, I just… I’ve been wanting to do this,” she husks, her eyes again raking down Maggie’s body, like they did after she first kissed her in the bar, and the path of her eyes ignites heat in Maggie’s core that no one’s ever made her feel before and no, no, no, it’s not too fast.

Because it’s not fast enough.

“Kiss me,” she begs, and Alex grins again, and Alex complies, and Maggie shifts so her thigh is between Alex’s legs, and Alex tosses her head back and she moans and she looks down into Maggie’s eyes like she’s the entire universe, because she is.

“You are so beautiful,” she says, and one of her hands traces up Maggie’s shirt. “I want… I want to feel your skin. On mine.”

Maggie nods and Alex slips off her, shucking off her own shirt and watching as Maggie does the same, watching as Maggie arches her hips off the bed and tugs down her jeans as Alex kneels and mirrors the action.

“Wait,” Maggie asks as Alex reaches for her own bra clasp, eyes still on Maggie’s. “May I?”

“Yeah.” Alex voice is ragged and wrecked and Maggie imagines hers sounds about the same.

She gasps softly when Alex’s bra slips down her shoulders, and Alex bites her lip.

“Don’t be nervous, you… you’re perfect, Alex. You are so fucking gorgeous.”

“Can I?” is all Alex says in response, nodding at Maggie’s chest, and it’s Maggie’s turn to bite her own lip, because her heart is slamming so damn hard but she nods because yes, yes, yes, please.

Alex smirks when she unhooks Maggie’s bra in one try, and Maggie scowls but gives a laugh that turns into an excited gasp when Alex leans back down on top of her, both now wearing nothing but their underwear, Maggie in boxers, Alex in boyshorts.

The difference in the heat between their legs without their jeans; the difference between being shirtless and topless; the difference between being nearly naked and mostly clothed, makes both of them freeze, makes both of them stare, makes both of them shake.

“I love you,” Maggie breathes at the same moment that Alex says the same, and Alex drops her forehead to Maggie’s as they both giggle, as they both exhale in shaky relief, as tears prickle both of their eyes.

“May I… I want to make love to you, Alex.”

“Yeah, same.”

“Good then.”

They have to stop every few moments, every few touches, to catch their breath. To avoid hyperventilating with excitement, with nerves, with new sensations, with overwhelming need. And each time they do, they kiss; each time they do, they stare into each other’s eyes; each time they do, they ask if the other needs to stop; each time they do, they giggle slightly with relief, with shared nerves, shared excitement, shared exhilaration; each time they do, they press their foreheads together and breathe. Just breathe.
When their need to have skin on skin outweighs their fears, outweighs their nerves, so that they’re completely naked, Alex freezes, and Maggie freezes, and Alex holds most of her weight up on her left arm while interlacing her right hand through Maggie’s fingers.

“All good?”

“This feels perfect. You?”

“I want you so bad.”

“So do something about it instead of talking about it, Danvers.”

They both giggle at that, but Alex swallows their soft laughter in the ferocity of her next kiss, her eagerness to live up to Maggie’s teasing challenge.

Her teeth graze Maggie’s throat, her tongue traces her collarbone, her lips claim one of her nipples. Maggie screams and Alex pauses, and a tear streams down Maggie’s cheek and Alex crawls up to kiss it, to kiss her, before Maggie shakes her head and pushes her head back down.

“Please don’t get all soft on me now, Danvers,” she teases, and Alex grins wickedly instead of pointing out that Maggie’s crying – it would be a useless argument, because she’s got tears in her own eyes, too – and she occupies herself again with Maggie’s breasts, knowing that yep, yep, yep, she’s definitely gay, and she’s definitely gone completely soft on this woman.

She slips one of her thighs between Maggie’s legs tentatively, and when Maggie lets out a gasp that’s more of a scream, she freezes again, but Maggie just raises one of her own legs so Alex has pressure between hers, too. And it’s Alex’s turn to gasp, to scream, and they keep their eyes locked as Maggie arches her hips up, as Alex arches her hips down, each riding the other’s thigh slow, soft, frictionless.

Frictionless, because, “Damn Danvers, you’re so wet,” and “Never for anyone but you, Sawyer,” and “Same, Alex. Same.”

They arch their hips harder, faster, both of Alex’s hands now holding Maggie’s down against the mattress, fingers interlaced, Maggie nodding constantly to let Alex know yes, yes, yes, and when the muscles in Alex’s back tense with her orgasm, she screams Maggie’s name and her eyes squeeze shut and that image, that sound, that feeling of how wet Alex is all over Maggie’s thigh, that feeling of Alex’s body hot and sweating and firm on top of her, of Alex’s leg between hers, giving her all the pressure in all the right places, sends Maggie over her own edge, with Alex’s name on her own lips, but softly, softly, softly, sending up a perfect harmony with Alex’s louder screams.

“Maggie,” Alex whispers as they both come back down, as she untangles their fingers and lifts her body to make sure she doesn’t collapse her entire weight onto Maggie’s, resting her forehead on Maggie’s collarbone, breathing, breathing, breathing.

“Was that okay?” she asks, and it’s tears, not just sweat, on Maggie’s face.

And, she realizes with a start, on her own, too.

“More than okay, Danvers. You?”

“Yeah. Definitely yeah. Uh… was that something you’d… wanna do again?”

“With you, Alex? Definitely yeah.”
anonymous asked:

no rush obv but if you're so inclined: we're not gonna see it on sg but i'd like to see how alex processes being queer (post-coming out & being w maggie). like, she had some brief gay panic but we didn't get to see her really accept and then get comfortable w it.

If people want, I’ll do more follow-ups like this, but in keeping with minific style, here’s a oneshot of her reaching out to Kara about Things. I also have this piece that I wrote much earlier about Alex coming out -- Chapter 8 of I Didn't Know You Were Into Girls

She said she couldn’t do this without Kara.

This coming out… thing.

This realizing that her entire life isn’t what she thought it was. That she’s completely different than she thought she was.

Except she’s not. Except she is.

Because Alex knows what she’s good at. And she’s good at training.

Training to be Kara’s protector, at the demand of her mother and the passive agreement of her father.

Training to be a scientist, under the tutelage of the most renowned bioengineers in the country.

Training to be a soldier, under the sometimes harsh care of the man who’s come to be her… well, her father.

Training is something Alex is good at.

But this? This thing, this… this liking Maggie? This… this being… whatever this is…

Gay?

Lesbian?

The words still make her flinch inside.

This… thing? This thing that she can’t do without Kara?

It goes against all her training.

It goes against her training – and she’s good at her training – because she’s been trained to be sexy for me. She’s been trained to appeal to men, she’s been trained to not even consider her feelings for women as real, as noticeable, as an option that wouldn’t be… imperfect.

Because she’s been trained to be perfect.

And she’s pretty damn good at it.

But this?

She’s fallen out of a spaceship, she’s freefalling to earth, and god, she hopes Kara knows how to catch her, because she doesn’t know if she can catch herself.

She tells her mother that she knows better about people. And she wishes she didn’t.

And she does know better about people.

About men. About men whose hands are too rough – not that she minds things rough – but she minds when the roughness isn’t for her, isn’t about her, doesn’t consider her, doesn’t realize that she might have needs, too.

About soldiers. About watching people die and about having to kill. About having to sleep at night, somehow, with the last breaths of people whose lives she’s ended lingering in her ears, under her fingernails, deep in her throat.

About perfection. About the way perfection tastes like the bottom of a bottle of bourbon and sounds like her mother’s ringtone and feels like Kara’s smile hiding the storm behind Kara’s eyes that Alex will never, ever be able to soothe.

No matter how perfect she is.

So this? This… gay… thing?

She means it when she says she can’t do it without Kara.

She calls her late one night, late one night after shooting pool with Maggie, because Maggie had shown up at her door and told her she didn’t want to imagine life without Alex, and who could say no to that?

And Maggie had been kind, and Maggie had been gentle. Maggie had been careful and she’d been funny. She’d been her normal self, on just this side of cautious.

Because Alex knew it then, more sure than she’d been even when she kissed her – knew from the way her stomach swooped when Maggie bent over the pool table to line up a shot, from the way heat pooled between her legs when Maggie’s tongue stuck out slightly in concentration, from the leaping of her heart when Maggie touched her arm and the flight of her soul when Maggie laughed, when she was the reason Maggie laughed, the reason she smiled, the reason she seemed happy – that she was falling in love.

With a woman.

She’s nearly vomiting when she calls Kara, so distraught that she barely even registers Kara’s sleepy tone, the way she clearly just woke her little sister up from a sound sleep. It is well past midnight, after all.

“Alex?”

“I’m…”
“Alex, are you okay? What happened, do you need me to – ”

“No, no, I’m not hurt, Kara, I… I’m g… I like Maggie.”

She’s collected enough, now, to hear Kara’s relief, her soft smile, in her voice.

“I know you do, Alex. Do you want me to come over so we can talk about it? About her? Or about you?”

Alex’s stomach swoops, because talking about Maggie? That would be hard. It would be hard, but it would be easier. Because if it was just about Maggie… just about this girl she liked, and then kissed, and then rejected her, and they were just being friends, so it was no big deal, really, it was just this one thing, this one little phase, this one little mistake, misinterpretation, right?

But Kara knows, and Kara said they could talk about… Alex.

So Alex’s stomach swoops, and she stammers out a no, no, go back to sleep, she’s sorry for calling, but then there’s a tapping on her window and she sighs, because her sister is Supergirl, and her sister is just as fast as Barry Allen.

She lets her in and Kara takes the bourbon out of her hands immediately.

“Talk to me, Alex, not the whiskey.”

Alex sinks back onto the couch and shrugs and sighs and thinks about the way Maggie smiles and the way she smells faintly of motorcycle exhaust and something sweet that Alex can’t quite identify, and –

“Alex.”

And then she’s crying, and god Kara’s arms are strong, and she’s never been more grateful for it, because she’s breaking and it’ll take a lot of strength to hold her together.

More strength than she has on her own, apparently.

It’s while she’s gasping for breathing and trying not to hyperventilate that she chokes the words out.

“Kara, I… I’m g… I’m… a lesbian.” It churns her stomach just to say it. It churns her stomach and it burns her face and it makes her sob harder, but god, god, god, relief also sears through her like oxygen. Relief and truth and something that feels an awful lot like… herself.

“I’m so proud of you, Alex. I’m so proud of you.”

Kara is kissing her forehead and stroking her hair and wiping her tears, and Alex’s phone vibrates and she and Kara both laugh wryly, because maybe one day they can cry on each other without being interrupted by work.

But it’s not work.

It’s someone that makes her heart leap, that makes Kara smile when she sees the caller ID and how quickly her sister goes to open the message.

I had a really great time with you, Danvers. Thanks for coming. Let me know you got home safe, if that’s okay?
Kara arches an eyebrow – when Alex’s tears are dry and her heart rate is a little steadier, it might be a better time to talk about the fact that Maggie sounds an awful lot like she might like her, after all – and smiles as she watches her sister’s normally steady fingers type out a response, as she watches her sister’s normally shrewd eyes sparkle like a teenager’s.

“I’m so proud of you, Alex,” she repeats, because Alex might have been trained by the world to think that being gay, being a lesbian, is less than perfect, but Kara knows better: because the happiness, the hope, the excitement, the affection in Alex’s eyes right now?

That look defines perfection.
They use silly string like a weapon. Like a training exercise.

Or at least that’s how their stoic, badass exteriors justify it to their inner nerds.

Sometimes, they’ll hide behind furniture and spray each other all over whenever the other blows their cover.

It gets all over the walls and they both scramble to peel it off right away so the residue doesn’t stay for too long.

Alex always knows Maggie wants a silly string war when she comes home to find a plastic tablecloth spread over the fluffy rug.

Maggie always knows Alex wants a silly string war when she steps out of the bathroom and gets sprayed all over.

She’ll shriek and Alex will laugh maniacally and toss her her own can of the stuff because even though she’s not opposed to sneak attacks, she is opposed – with someone she loves, anyway – with going against someone who’s perpetually unarmed.

Alex assumes she’ll always have the upper hand because of her long and seasoned history of silly string wars with Kara, and of sneak attacking Winn and James at game nights.

But she doesn’t account for Maggie’s resourcefulness, the way she’ll keep an extra bottle in her back pocket and spray with two hands at once.

Maggie wants a silly string grenade.

“How would that even work, Sawyer?”

“You’ve got the fancy James Bond lair lab, Danvers, you can figure something out.”

And she does, because when Maggie asks, Maggie receives.

(Except for the flash grenade. No way she’s getting her hands on that.)

And they have to shower together – long and hot and not entirely about cleaning each other off – to get all of the silly string pieces out of Maggie’s hair.

Alex notes that if silly string grenades result in showers that incredible, she should explode them in Maggie’s path daily.

Maggie wholeheartedly agrees.
I would love to see Alex and Maggie comforting Kara after Kara gets blown up in a car and watches the person who is confiding in her die just because he's confiding in her.

Alex is her first phone call.
Alex is always her first phone call.

Her shirt is burned through and her jacket smells of gasoline, smells of fire, smells of ash.
Smells of the ash of the man who had just been speaking to her, confiding in her.

Trusting her.

And she failed him.

Failed him, like she failed all the aliens in the bar that night she wasn’t there to stop the massacre.

Failed him, like she failed to save Kelly the night of Myriad, because James and Winn were her friends, and somehow that made their lives more valuable than the life of someone she barely knew but saw every day for two years.

Failed him, like she failed time and time and time again.

So she calls Alex.

She calls Alex, and she can do nothing but sob.

Alex comes to get her, and she’s in DEO gear, and she’s in the DEO van, but that’s not how they’re leaving.
Because Alex isn’t there to pick her up to report for work.

She’s there to take care of her sister.

Of Kara Danvers, Kara Zor-El. Not Supergirl.

Supergirl can be debriefed later.

Kara needs comfort, now.

“I got you,” is all Alex says as Kara falls into her arms, as Alex covers her burnt-through shirt with a pullover sweater as Kara shrugs out of the jacket that smells like her failure, like his death, and then there are sirens, and Maggie is sprinting out of her cop car like a bat out of hell, and Kara dimly assumes that she’s running for Alex, but she’s not, she’s not, because when she grinds to a halt in front of them, it’s Kara’s name that’s on her lips.

“Kara, I am so sorry, are you – are you hurt, I mean, physically? You know it wasn’t your fault, right? The explosion pattern, there wasn’t anything you could have done – “

And Kara breaks, then, because Maggie knows, and Alex knows, exactly what is on her mind.

That a man with a husband and kids and a mother and a father and a best friend from high school is dead.

And it’s her fault.

Maggie knows, and Alex knows, because they’re both experts in blaming themselves for deaths they couldn’t possibly have prevented.

“Sawyer! You gonna get a witness statement or what?” her partner calls, and Maggie tilts her head at her girlfriend’s little sister.

“Do you want to go home, Kara? I can hold off my guys for you if you need to breathe for a while before we – ”

But Kara, still wrapped in Alex’s strong arms, shoots out a hand for Maggie’s wrist.

“I want to go home. But come with us,” she barely whispers, and Alex almost sobs, and Maggie has to fight down tears, and Kara doesn’t even bother, her tears tracking through the ash on her face.

“Come on, you two. I’m gonna get her attended to, I’ll have the statement for you later. Catch a ride back with Taylor, would you?” Maggie calls, and her partner gives a curt nod, and Maggie ushers her Danvers girls into her squad car.

She doesn’t comment when Alex slides into the back seat with Kara instead of riding in the front with Maggie, and she doesn’t comment when instead of buckling up, Kara just lays down on the seat and puts her head in Alex’s lap and lets Alex pet her hair, whisper in her ear, kiss her forehead, hold her steady.

She doesn’t comment. She just drives extra carefully, because she has precious cargo in the back seat.

Alex helps Kara stumble out of the car when they get to her apartment, and Maggie carries Kara’s jacket as Alex half-carries her upstairs.

“It’s my fault,” are Kara’s first words when they step inside.

“I get to live because I can just fly out of there, because nothing’s going to penetrate my skin, but he… he doesn’t even… his family won’t even have a body to…”

“Kara. This… this isn’t your fault. You couldn’t have anticipated it, you couldn’t have known – ”

“Alex, what good am I if my reporting puts people at risk and I can’t even rescue them as Supergirl? How… what good am I, then? Any of it?”

“Kara, listen to me. If you start blaming yourself for things you can’t control? You’re never going stop. Ever. Trust me. I know. You can’t let this get inside you like this. You can’t. This wasn’t your fault.”
“Alex, I’m not a soldier, I don’t –”

“Hey, Little Danvers, listen, neither am I. Look, you can grieve, Kara, and you can rage and you can mourn, and James told me you used to set up a car next to his heavy bag and have a punching fit, and I can take you out to the garage right now if you need to. But your sister’s right. You start blaming yourself for this, and it’s not gonna stop, and you don’t deserve that. I promise you, you don’t.”

“But I lived. And he died.”

“There’s no shame in surviving, Kara,” Alex whispers, and Kara sobs, and Alex wraps her in her arms, shushing her and soothing her and holding in her own tears because her little sister needs her right now.

Maggie kisses Alex’s forehead and puts a hand on Kara’s shaking shoulder before she stands up and pads into the kitchen.

“Where you going?” Kara mutters from where she’s buried her face in Alex’s polo.

“To order you some potstickers, Kid Danvers.”

Kara sniffs and Alex grins.

“So can I keep her?” she asks, and Kara sniffls and nods.

“You can keep her,” she agrees, and she thinks that maybe, just maybe, if she has big sisters like this, she might be worth something after all.
Chapter 346

Chapter Summary

anonymous asked:

Ok but what if maggie joins Alex for her knife throwing practice and that's like their idea of a date

She used to practice with J’onn.

And she still does, on Tuesday evenings, but their Thursday mornings?

Those have recently been taken over by either Cadmus attacks or Pam from HR making sure J’onn is actually keeping on top of the budgetary requirements, because Jim from accounting ironically isn’t getting his checks on time and he’s got those three pitbulls to feed at home.

J’onn shrugs and he sighs and he tries to pass the paperwork off to Vasquez, but Vasquez is in charge of managing his weekly calls to M’gann, and he’d rather not put those in jeopardy.

“Why don’t you practice with Detective Sawyer, Agent Danvers? You two seem to enjoy… getting physical.”

It’s the closest he’s come to a sexual joke, and she doesn’t know if it makes her feel giddy because she’s still so thrilled with how supportive he is, or odd because he’s her father, for crying out loud. But he’s grinning and he loves her, god, he loves her, and he’s filed all the proper paperwork for Maggie to be admitted into the DEO whenever she pleases, so Alex?

Alex starts bringing her in for Thursday morning knife training.

“Not your basic NCPD tactics,” she says, and Maggie rolls her eyes, flips the blunted sparring knife around in her hand, shifts her feet with bent knees, and grins.

“Bring it, Danvers.”

Alex grins, and it’s almost carnal, and Alex knows exactly what that does to Maggie (in bed, anyway), and she takes full advantage, lunging and going for the left side that Maggie tends to leave vulnerable, until she’s got her arm twisted behind her back and her blunted practice knife gently at her throat.

“Distracted by something, Sawyer?”

Maggie grins and shoves away from Alex, grabbing the arm that was wrapped around her and forcing it up, up, so that Alex’s knife clatters to the ground.

“Surprised, Danvers?”

“Not at all, Sawyer,” Alex retorts, but there’s a husk in her voice as she picks up her knife, as she and Maggie round each other, glaring slightly, grinning slightly.
They’re so focused on each other that they don’t notice the small crowd of agents peering through the training room’s doorway, nudging each other, whispering to each other, placing bets, trading cash around.

“Keep your ribs protected, Mags,” Alex instructs as she lunges, and Maggie deflects her blow with her forearm.

“Good. Now what do you do if I do this?”

Alex switches the knife, lightening fast, to her left hand, holding Maggie from behind again, and Maggie tenses, freezes.

“What’s wrong? I’m sorry, I thought you wanted to – ”

“No, I do, Danvers, I’m sorry, I just… can we switch places?”

Alex furrows her brow, but she nods and does as Maggie asks, stepping in front of her so Maggie’s holding her from behind, holding her practice knife at her throat.

“Can you get out of this, Alex?”

Alex feints an elbow into Maggie’s face while she slams down with her heel, just shy of actually slamming onto Maggie’s foot, and Maggie releases her accordingly, nodding to herself, over and over and over again.

“What is it, Maggie?” Alex asked, knife limp at her side.

“Just… outside the bar, that night. The night they took all the refugees… When he had that gun to you… you would have been okay, right? Even if James hadn’t come by?”

“Yes,” Alex nods, dropping her knife and taking Maggie by the shoulders, her eyes burning from her devotion and her forehead sweating from their sparring. “I’m not going anywhere, Sawyer. I promise.”

Maggie gulps and Maggie nods, and then she tilts her head toward the door.

“Looks like we have an audience.”

Alex glances over and her nearly feral grin is back.

“Should we give them a show?”

“I’m sure they’d love to see their commanding officer get whomped by a lowly local cop,” Maggie grins, and Alex pffts.

“Who’s lowly? My girlfriend’s all powerful,” Alex brags.

“Nerd.”

“A nerd who’s about to bring DEO training to an NCPD knife fight.”

“I love it when you talk dirty.”

“Come at me, Sawyer, you’ll see how dirty I can talk.”

Maggie grins and Alex mirrors the expression, and by the time the rookies need the room for training, Alex has nicked Maggie with the training knife just as many times as Maggie has nicked Alex with hers.

“Draw for now, Danvers?”

“We’ll see who draws tonight, Sawyer.”

“Deal.”

J’onn’s passing by as they toss towels at each other to dry off, as they think their thoughts about later tonight loudly, loudly, loudly.

Too loudly.

“Good god, we need crime to increase in this city, stat.”
Maggie tends to have odd hours.
Part of her odd hours?
Thursday mornings off.
J’onn knows, when Alex mutters something about Thursday morning knife training.
Winn knows, when Alex walks away with that gleam in her eye.
Kara doesn’t know, and if she did, she’d wish she didn’t.

Because Alex is grabbing her helmet and ignoring Vasquez’s knowing smirk and she’s speeding her Ducati to Maggie’s apartment, and she’s letting herself in and she’s grinning because her girlfriend is still in one of Alex’s tank tops and boxers, and, gloriously, nothing else.

“Danvers!” she greets, her dimples shining along with her eyes.

“Know what happens when crime is slow in National City?” Alex asks by way of greeting as she strolls across the studio to take Maggie into her arms.

“Mmmm, you get bored and decided your girlfriend could be adequate entertainment?”

She arches up on her tip toes and kisses Alex softly, but with promise, with a question, and Alex answers with parted lips and an exploring tongue. Maggie swoons and Alex holds her and nearly swoons herself.

“Something like that.”

“That’s a tall order, Danvers. Keeping you entertained.”

“Well I didn’t say the burden would be all on you. I could uh… keep you entertained too, you know.”

“Oh, could you?”

“Mmhmm.”

They’re talking between kisses, between breaths, between eager hands running over each other’s bodies like they hadn’t only parted a few hours before, and Maggie giggles when Alex’s fingers skim over that pesky part of her side that is always, eternally, ticklish.
“I want you,” Maggie breathes into Alex’s lips, her own turned up into a smile, and Alex moans into her mouth.

“Do you now?”

“Danvers.”

“Sawyer.”

“If I said I want you, it means I want you.”

Alex grins at Maggie’s need, at Maggie’s openness, at her grinning vulnerability, at her trust.

“You have me, Maggie. You have me.”

So she lifts her up, right under the thighs, and Maggie wraps her legs around Alex’s waist eagerly, their bodies pressing together as Alex kisses her, as Maggie whimpers and pants in anticipation, as Alex lays them both down on Maggie’s bed.

“You sure, babe? You don’t have to, just because I came home – ”

“Alex Danvers, I want you to cum all over my thigh, and then I want you to fuck me until I can’t remember my own name. Think you can do that for me? I mean, if you want – ”

Alex pffts. “If I want,” she growls, grinning as she leans down to kiss Maggie slow, soft, sensual.

“Is it okay if I take my time? Before I cum all over your thigh and fuck you senseless?”

“Alex,” Maggie just breathes, her hips arching up of their own accord, and Alex grins deeper.

She kisses her mouth and she kisses her cheek. She kisses her eyelids and she kisses her temples. Her eyebrows and the bridge of her nose, and her jawline and her earlobes – which has Maggie whimpering and panting and writhing – and her throat and her collarbone. She takes her time undressing Maggie, takes her time undressing herself.

“You don’t have to go back into work, babe?”

Alex chuckles. “Thursday morning knife training.”

“Oh, is that what I am?”

“Oh, Maggie. You are so much better than that.”

“Coming from you, that’s high praise, Danvers.”

“Want high praise? Spread your legs for me, Sawyer.”

“Alex,” Maggie gasps.

“Only if you want. I’m sorry, was that okay – ”

“Yes, Alex, god, yes,” Maggie says, complying with her request, and Alex moans as she trails kisses down Maggie’s chest, paying special attention to her nipples, to that sensitive spot right under her navel.

She pauses when her lips are just above Maggie’s curls.
“I know going down on you wasn’t on your agenda, but um… do you want me to? Because if you do, I’d like that. A lot.”

“As part of your training?” Maggie husks, her voice thick with humor, thick with raw desire, raw need.

“Well, it’s a certain kind of training, isn’t it?”

“You want to? You sure?”

“Oh god, yes.”

“Then please, Alex. Please?”

Alex obliges, and moans into Maggie’s clit when she lowers her tongue to taste her, when she parts her curls with her fingers and traces her tongue through her wetness, paying close, close attention to Maggie’s rhythms, her sounds, the ways her fingers tighten in Alex’s hair, the ways her hips arch up, the way she whimpers “god, Alex, just like that, fuck, yes, please please please,” and Alex grinds her own hips into the sheets because god does Maggie taste incredible and fuck, fuck, fuck she never imagined going down on someone could be this hot.

But then Maggie is tapping her open palm, their safe gesture for stopping, and Alex stops immediately, her eyes wide with concern, but Maggie’s shaking her head and grinning.

“I love cumming in your mouth, Danvers, but that’s not what I want right now. Flip over for me? If you want?”

And god, does she.

So she rolls over, wiping her mouth on her bare shoulder as she does, and spreads her legs obediently, excitedly, and Maggie eagerly kisses Alex’s mouth, moaning at the taste of herself on her girlfriend’s lips, moaning at how wet Alex is when she asks if she can slip her thigh between Alex’s legs and Alex is yes, yes, yes, Maggie, please, fuck, please.

“You wanna be a good girl for me and cum all over my thigh, Agent Danvers?” Maggie asks, and the words alone could make Alex cum as she slams her hips up, up, down, down, desperate for friction, desperate for pressure, and Maggie gives it to her hard, and Maggie provides it for her perfect, one of her hands bracing herself up on the mattress, the other resting as a pillow underneath Alex’s head, and it’s that, even more than the dirty talk – that protectiveness, that care, that thoughtfulness – that send Alex over the edge, that send her nails running down Maggie’s back, that send her screaming Maggie’s name as she sees stars, stars, supernovae, stars.

Maggie smiles and starts to cuddle Alex close, but Alex shakes her head, and Alex asks with her eyes if she can push Maggie onto her back, and Maggie nods wordlessly.

“You said something earlier about wanting to make me cum all over you, and then you wanted me to fuck you until you can’t remember your own name. Can I do that for you, Maggie? Do you still want that? Because we don’t have to – ”

“Why are you still talking, Danvers?”

So Alex grins and Alex leans down for a crushing, gentle, passionate, tender kiss, slipping her hand between Maggie’s legs, asking her once, twice, three more times if this is what she wants before slipping one, two, three fingers deep, deep inside her. Maggie moans and writhes and grabs at Alex’s hips and tries to keep from screaming Alex’s name.
Tries, and fails.

“Deeper Alex, please,” she whines, and Alex moans, and Alex obliges, making sure her palm stays right on Maggie’s clit, giving her all the pressure she needs as she arches her fingers inside Maggie’s body, working her up as much as she can handle, as much as either of them can handle, because god she loves feeling her fingers stretch Maggie out, loves feeling Maggie come completely undone beneath her, loves watching Maggie whimper and whine and gasp and scream and writhe, because it’s all from pleasure, all from ecstasy, all from Alex, Alex, Alex.

Maggie cums hard and she cums loud, just as Alex’s phone starts buzzing, just as Alex is being called back into work.

“Decent timing then, huh Danvers?” Maggie rasps, and Alex kisses her face, kisses her lips, kisses her forehead, kisses her hair.

“Never decent timing to leave you, babe,” Alex romances, and Maggie would swoon if she were standing up, if she had any coordination at all.

“What are you doing?” Maggie asks, bewildered as Alex pulls her into a close snuggle.

“It’s not an emergency. They can wait for a few extra minutes – I’m not gonna leave you all naked and sweaty with no cuddles to be had.”

“Aww, Danvers, are you getting soft on me?”

“Pfft, no.”

“Don’t worry, babe. I won’t tell your secret. I promise.”
It’s not the double date she expected, but god, is it more than she could have dreamed of.

It’s months after Jack and it’s months after Kara gave her ex boyfriend the final rejection she should have given him from the start.

It’s months after, and the double date isn’t with Lena and her partner and Kara with hers.

The double date is Lena and Kara.

With Maggie and Alex.

Lena shakes a little beforehand, and she doesn’t bother trying to hide it. Kara can hear her heartbeat, but even if she couldn’t, she knows her. Really knows her. In a way no one else ever has.

“Lena, it’s going to be fine. You already know them, and they’re going to love you even more after getting to know you better.”

“You sister’s DEO, and Maggie’s a cop. She’s arrested me, for crying out loud, Kara. I’m… just a Luthor, to them.”

“You’re not,” Kara says, and her voice is firm, less like Kara and more like Supergirl, and Kara’s power, her strength, sends a heady rush through Lena’s body, calming her. Soothing her. Reminding her.

Kara chose her. Kara will protect her. Always.

She doesn’t know that across town, Maggie is having a similar meltdown.

“I’ve arrested her, Alex. For something she didn’t even do!”

“And you’ve apologized, babe, and she said she understood, and she – ”

“I don’t want to disappoint you.”

“Maggie, how… how would you ever disappoint me?”

Maggie shrugs, her eyes averted. “I don’t want to mess the date up.”

“You won’t. You’re going to make the date perfect. Okay?”
Maggie can’t help but smile at the calm confidence, the steady faith, in Alex’s eyes.

“Yes. Okay.”

A sudden breeze blows through both of their hair, but they don’t bother jumping.

“You just love the fact that you can carry her around like that, don’t you?” Alex asks without even turning around, and Lena laughs lightly as Kara sets her down from her bridal-style position in her arms.

“You’re telling me you don’t carry your woman around like that, Agent Danvers?” Lena teases, and Maggie smirks as Kara shoves her fingers in her ears and starts humming loudly.

“Oh, Kara, your sister’s allowed to have a sex life,” Lena laughs.

“Yeah, but not in front of me, she’s not!”

“Don’t worry, Little Danvers, we’ll keep things PG for you.”

Kara gives her a fake glare, and Alex pulls her into a laughing hug.

“So – we said bowling?” she asks Lena, and Lena nods gamely.

“Lex taught me – it’s one of the ways I learned physics, largely,” she offers almost shyly, and Alex’s eyes light up.

“I learned physics from surfing! I would study it obsessively before I even…”

Maggie and Kara hung back as Alex and Lena strolled out of the apartment.

“We both just lost our dates to science, didn’t we, Sunshine?”

Kara grins. “Maybe we can team up and beat them at bowling!”

They both smile, relishing the idea, but once they have a chance to think about it, they frown at exactly the same moment.

“Maybe we shouldn’t do that,” they course correct at the same time, and they laugh the entire way there.

Lena and Alex keep rolling perfect strikes.

Of course they do.

Maggie isn’t bad – she’s slightly better at this than she is at pool – and Kara is, by painful necessity, excellent at Earth physics, but for the sake of fun, she’s trained her body to not always be the best at every single sport.

So Lena is really holding their team up.

And Alex is holding up hers and Maggie’s.

They grab pizza and fries and root beers and club sodas in between rounds, and Lena’s eyes sparkle at how enthusiastically her girlfriend eats.

“Get you a girl that looks at you the way Lena Luthor looks at Kara Danvers,” Maggie writes on her snapchat to James, and Alex glances over at it and laughs.

“What about a girl who looks at you the way I do?” Alex wants to know.

“What other girls? I only see you, Danvers.”

Kara and Lena have to toss french fries at them to get them to stop making out and carry on with the game. Maggie just wears a shit-eating grin as she thanks them for the fries, collecting them off of her and Alex’s laps and popping them into her mouth.

Lena rolls her eyes, but it’s out of happiness, out of laughter, out of… friendship.

It’s midnight before any of them are ready to leave, before both couples have won enough games to safely call it a draw.

It’s midnight before Alex takes Maggie home and shoves her up against the door of her apartment the moment they get inside.

“This okay?” she asks, and Maggie giggles.

“What brought this on, Danvers?”

“Have you seen those jeans you’ve been wearing all night?”

Maggie looks down at her own body and shrugs. “You certainly have.”

“I want them off. If you do, I mean.”

“So take them off, Danvers.”

And she does.

Across town, Kara and Lena are having a similar… conversation, though Kara’s is about Lena’s bra, about how she’s conflicted because it’s so lacy, so pretty, but so is what’s underneath it, and Kara just can’t figure out what the best course of action is.

“Why don’t we do an experiment?” Lena proposes in her richest voice, and Kara’s insides melt in the best of ways.

“I’m listening,” she husks, an almost feral grin on her face.

“You can fuck me with my bra on, and then you can give it another go with my bra off. And we can… evaluate the results.”

“I like the way you think, Lena.”

“And I like the way you make love to me, Kara.”

“So I will then.”

“That, my darling? Is the best news I’ve heard all night.”
“Okay, okay, yes, Lyra and I were there last night, but her brother’s safe and sound now, so no art thievery, I swear, we just – ”

“Whoa Winn, slow down. I don’t know where you and Lyra were after your Guardian stint last night and I really don’t want to. That’s not why I’m calling.”

“Oh.”

“Yeah. But I do have donuts for you, if you… I kind of… I need to talk to you… alone… I mean, I’m sorry, you and Lyra probably have plans – ”

“Name the time and place, my favorite pool shark, and I’ll be there.”

“You gotta stop calling me that.”

“You love it.”

“Do we wanna go back to the public undecency you and Lyra apparently got up to last night?”

“Time and place, Maggie. Uh, Detective Sawyer.”

“8 o’clock. The bar okay for you?”

“Only if we can shoot some pool, my favorite… um… girlfriend of Alex’s…”

“Sure, Winn. Sure.”

She hangs up and she glances at Alex and James and Kara.

“Still not sure why you guys wanted me to be the one to call him.”

“You’re new, Maggie. If you say you want to see him without his girlfriend, he’ll come. He likes you and he doesn’t want to get off on the wrong foot with you.”

“Because he’s scared of me?”

“Yes, babe. You’re terrifying.”

James and Kara snort, and Alex and Maggie glare teasingly.

“You’re sure Brian’s information’s accurate?” Kara asks one more time.
One more time because Winn is happy, and Winn is giddy, and she doesn’t want to take that from him.

Or, worse, have him turn away from all of them because he’s offended by their intervention.

“Winn might be more scared of your sister than he is of me, but I’ve got fear down to Brian’s boots. He might be a little… odd. But his intel’s never failed me before.”

James sighs and rubs his hand over his face.

“It’s not hard to believe, Kara. I mean, I wish it were, but… you should have seen Lyra go after that boy at the liquor store. He was just a kid, you know, and it was like she had no empathy.”

Maggie sighs and Alex twitches. Maggie takes her hand, because she knows that Alex, of all people, understands Lyra’s tendency to go overboard. To cause pain, and to enjoy it. And they’re working on it together. Slowly. Excruciatingly.

They’re pretty quiet until 8 o’clock rolls around and Winn strolls into the bar.

His brow furrows immediately, and he points to each of his friends in turn.

“Is this an ambush, Sawyer? I thought it was gonna be just you and me, mano a mano, shooting shots and shooting pool and – ”

“Stop talking and sit, Schott,” Alex cuts him off, and Kara leans over to tone Alex down.

He obeys, silently, staring at James.

“What’s this about, man?”

James clears his throat and folds his hands on the table. He adjusts in his seat and he glances at Kara and he looks back at Winn and he takes a deep breath.

“Winn, man, listen. I haven’t felt… I haven’t felt like I’ve had a brother since Clark. But you, Winn? You’re my brother. And I love that you’re happy, and you deserve that, man, you deserve it so much. But Winn, you’re such a nice guy that it… it can be easy for people to take advantage of you.”

“Like Kara. With Mon-el,” Maggie supplies gently, and Kara nods while holding Alex’s hand across the table.

“But we had an intervention for Kara about Mon-el, it… wait…” Winn looks around and almost stands back up, but James takes one shoulder and Maggie takes another, and they gently, very gently, push him back down to sit. “Is this an… intervention? About Lyra? Because I talked to her, James, and I told you, if you don’t want her on team Guardian, she won’t be, I talked to her – ”

“Yeah, and she apparently broke a glass and did a lot of screaming and accusing you of calling her crazy, Winn,” Kara says, her eyes soft, her voice almost softer.

Winn looks at each of them in turn, stammering.

“She’s… she’s passionate, okay? She just wants to help, and she felt like I was calling her crazy and telling her she wasn’t worth it – ”

“But that’s not what you were telling her, man. And even if you were – to break a glass like that? To yell at you like that?”
“Dude, my sister has superpowers. If she broke every glass she came across when she’d be angry, we… Winn, she’s gotta have more control than that. It’s abusive, dude, she can’t – ”

“Oh, right, Alex, and you can talk about control, and abuse, Miss Get Me a Wrench.”

Alex almost stands, the shadows behind her eyes bursting into flame. Kara and Maggie still her with their hands, their whispers, and James stills Winn with his own.

“Alright, alright! I’m sorry, Alex, that was out of line, I didn’t… I’m sorry, I just… got defensive, I… I’m sorry, Alex.”

“You’re not wrong,” she mutters, like she’d rather admit anything else in the world. “But it just makes me get it even more, Winn. It wouldn’t be acceptable if I carried that… rage… into my relationship with Maggie. Hell, it’s apparently not even acceptable when I carry it into the DEO. So dude, I get it. I sympathize with Lyra, I do. But Winn, she can’t treat you like that. She can’t. It’s not okay.”

His eyes bore into Alex’s for a long, long, long moment. Maggie and Kara exchange a tense glance, and James keeps his eyes focused on his brother.

“But I think I might love her.”

Kara stands and crosses to Winn’s side of the table, kneeling next to him and pulling him into a soft hug. “I know. And I’m so sorry, Winn. But that’s the thing. About you. And, I guess, about me. We love so hard and forgive so easily that it’s almost impossible to see when we’re being treated badly. And you don’t deserve it, Winn. You don’t.”

“You’re all not… mad at me?”

“No!”

“Absolutely not!”

“No.”

“Dude, why would we be mad at you?”

“Because I’m stupid, apparently, I’m just… stupid.”

“You’re not. You’re not stupid, Winn. Your kindness is… it’s beautiful, man. But you gotta look out for yourself. And sometimes you forget to, or don’t know you deserve to, so…”

“So you have your family to help get you there.”

“Family, huh, Kara?” he looks down at her, his lips twisting into a soft smile.

“Family,” she confirms, and Winn doesn’t remember ever feeling this loved. This cared for. This… home.

Chapter 350

Chapter Summary

Sanvers in College: Alex Drunk Dials the Cute Girl from Bio Class

Original prompt from @wlwprompts: “Person A is drunk and decides to randomly call that cute girl from biology class to tell her she’s pretty”

@lesbapocalypse you also asked for this so like.

She’s drunk and she’s stolen Kara’s phone, because it’s finals week and all bets are off and that cute girl from biology class?

She’s 1000% sure that her name is Maggie – Maggie Sawyer – not that she paid attention.

Pfft.

No. Of course she didn’t.

And she’s 1000% sure that said Maggie Sawyer is the same Maggie that her little sister has befriended.

And therefore, that cute girl’s number – and when she says cute, she means it, but god, she also means blazingly sexy – must be in Kara’s phone.

So she swipes the phone from her sister’s bag while Kara laughs with James and Winn. Swipes it and chugs another gulp of illegal punch and she finds Maggie’s name – complete with a picture, god, a gorgeous picture, because damn, those dimples, that hair, those downcast eyes – in Kara’s contacts.

Finds the name, and tries once, twice, three times, to successfully hit the big green button that makes the phone dial.

She giggles and almost bounces on the balls of her feet as the phone rings, rings, rings.

“Hey Kara!”

Alex freezes at the sound of her voice – her voice that she’s used to hearing only asking the best questions, only giving the best answers, in bio lecture, in bio lab – and she contemplates hanging up and leaving it to her sister to explain the butt dial.

“Kara?”

But now Maggie sounds concerned, because she must hear the party in the background, and Alex has seen her smile, seen her nerdiness, but she’s also seen her motorcycle, her leather jacket, her gym bag. And she doesn’t want her to be concerned, to feel like she has to speed to the party to rescue Kara from whatever situation she might be in.

“Hey! No, nope, not Kara. I mean, of course you thought it was Kara, I took her phone, I mean, obviously you thought it was her – ”

“Danvers?”

“Not the blonde one!”

“Alex.”

“Hiiii.”

There’s a pause and she thinks she hears Maggie shuffling something.

“Danvers, you drunk? Are you with people, drinking water?”

“Awww, Sawyer, you care about me!”

“Well I sure don’t want you passing out in your own vomit, Danvers. I’ve been there, it’s not pleasant.”

Her voice is pleasant, though, and Alex collapses drunkenly onto a half-occupied couch, completely oblivious to the couple that had been making out, who shoot her irritated looks as they get up to find a better spot to kiss.

Alex thinks she hears that shuffling again, and maybe some wind, but she’s drunk and everything is oh so slightly hazy, but pleasantly so – pleasant, because Maggie Sawyer is on the phone with her, Maggie Sawyer cares whether she throws up or not. Maggie Sawyer. God. How can anyone be that perfect?

“I’m finnneee. I just… it’s just, I know you’re Kara’s friend, but we’ve never really talked, and I… even if you weren’t Kara’s friend, I’d have noticed you, you know. I mean, how could I not notice you? Do you know we’re in the same bio class? You’re always so smartest. The smartest girl in the class. The smartest and the cutest. And my sister’s friend! What are the odds, huh? Maybe we can calculate it with genome mapping or something. But we’re more than our code, right, we have to be. You believe that, right, Maggie?”

“Hey, Danvers, I’m not cutting you off, but can you do me a favor?”

Alex preens. Her last name sounds so nice on Maggie’s tongue. She wonders what else would feel nice on Maggie’s tongue. Everything, probably.

She nods before she realizes vaguely that Maggie can’t see her.

“Mmhmm.”

“Remind me which house is throwing the party you all are at.”

Alex squints as she tries to remember. “The one across from the science building. Where we take bio. Together. But now term is ending and maybe we won’t do anything together again. Not even that we did anything in bio together, because I was too nervous to – ”

“Danvers, whoa whoa. Can you do me another favor, sweetie?”

Alex’s heart backflips and she almost careens off the couch, because she called her sweetie, she called her sweetie, she called her sweetie.

The sound of wind on the other line increases in her ear, but maybe that’s just a side effect from how hard she’s pressing the phone to her ear, like the closer she clutches it, the closer she’ll be to Maggie.

“Yeah.” She thinks her voice might be higher, might be breathier, than it normally is, but that’s alright, because Maggie Sawyer called her sweetie.

“I know you have things you feel like you want to tell me right now, and I want to hear them, but only if you still want to tell me when you’re sober, okay?”

Alex blinks and furrows her brow at the phone, because – maybe she’s more drunk than she thought – Maggie’s voice seems to be coming from two places, now. One, through the phone, and one, less static-y, closer to her body.

She looks up from the couch and she startles, because Maggie is standing over her, crouching down next to her as she hangs up her phone, all basketball shorts and hoodie and flip flops and hair hastily tied back into a messy ponytail.

She’s grinning softly, but she’s breathing kind of heavily, like she’d just sprinted from her dorm room. Because, Alex realizes dimly, that’s exactly what she just did.

“Hey Alex,” she says as Alex splutters, as Alex fumbles to sit up straight, to fix her hair, to hang up Kara’s phone without dropping it.

Alex thinks she may be imagining it, but Maggie’s voice is softer, now, more breakable, now, more vulnerable, now, than it had been when they’d been on the phone. When Maggie had been on a search-and-give-water-to-the-drunk-girl mission.

But now that she’s arrived, water bottle she must have grabbed on the way out of her dorm in hand, her voice is shy, and her eyes are shy, and her eyes are something that look a little scared.

“Hi Maggie,” Alex whispers, and then giggles because she’s not sure why she’s whispering. Maggie grins, and it’s the sweetest sight Alex has ever seen. She made Maggie Sawyer smile.

“Why did you come all the way here? You didn’t have to come all the way here, I – ”

“Well, clearly your sister doesn’t know what you’re up to or how drunk you are, because if she did I would have heard her in the background telling you to think before you dial and all that stuff.”

Alex covers her face with hands made clumsy by alcohol.

“Ugh, I’m sorry, you’re right, I shouldn’t have – I ruined your night, I embarrassed myself, I’m sorry, Maggie, I – ”

“Hey, hey, no, that’s not what I meant.” Maggie gets up from her crouch to sit on the couch next to Alex, and she opens the water bottle for her and presses it gently into her hands.

“Drink. Please?”

“I’m not that drunk.”

Maggie just nods, and Alex does as she’s told.

She finishes the entire bottle in one chug, and Maggie just watches her with cautious but glistening eyes.
“Okay, come on. Kara!” she calls across the room, and Kara seems to materialize next to them instantly.

“Maggie! I thought you weren’t in the mood to party toni – Alex? Are you okay? What –”

“Here. Your phone.”

“How did you –”

“Tell you in the morning. Right now, I’m gonna take your sister back to my room – no funny business, I promise – and help her sober up a little. Okay?”

Kara glances between Maggie’s disheveled appearance and Alex’s drunken one, and she kisses Alex’s cheek.

“Don’t give her a hard time, okay, Alex?” she teases, and Alex giggles as she stands unsteadily, both Kara and Maggie stabilizing her.

“When do I give anyone a hard time?”

Kara just kisses her again, just thanks Maggie, doesn’t object to their arrangement, because she trusts Maggie not to take advantage of her sister, and she knows that her sister would like nothing more than to get to know Maggie better. She just wishes she’d have had the courage to reach out sober. But they’ll work on that. The three of them.

Alex leans on Maggie, who’s wrapped her arm around Alex’s waist, and revels in the contact.

As they walk, she rambles about the chemical structure of alcohol. About its impacts on the brain. Maggie listens and Maggie smiles and Maggie nods in all the right places, and Maggie lets her talk, lets her talk, because she’s focused on making sure she doesn’t let the taller girl stumble and fall.

When Maggie shoves her dorm door open, Alex freezes.

“You know I’ve wanted this since like, the first time I saw you. For you to take me back to your room. To…” Her eyes flit down to Maggie’s lips.

“To kiss you.”

Maggie gulps and slips away from her, taking care to keep her hands on Alex’s arms to help her stabilize.

“Go pee.”

“What?”

“You’re this drunk? You for sure need to pee. Bathroom’s right there. Can you make it on your own?”

Alex nods with tears in her eyes, and Maggie hates herself a little bit, but she’d hate herself a lot more if she let this conversation continue.

The bathroom door shuts and the water flushes and the sink runs for a long, long, long moment.

When Alex stumbles out, it’s with confusion and the shadows of hurt in her eyes.

“Did I do something wrong? I don’t have to stay here, you didn’t have to – I just thought – you ran to… to rescue me, and you gave me water, and you took me home, and I thought that meant you like me as much as I like you, and I –

"Alex. Alex, Alex, look… We can talk about all this when you’re sober. If you still want to talk about it. I promise. But right now? Right now, we can talk biology. Or astrophysics, or about the dessication and revival of tardigrades, whatever you want. Just not us. Not now. And certainly no kissing. Okay?"

Alex slumps down onto Maggie’s bed without asking, and Maggie just grins and kneels to help take Alex’s boots off.

“Why not?”

“Because you’re drunk, Danvers,” Maggie giggles like it’s the most obvious thing in the world.

“It’s never mattered to any guy,” Alex almost whispers, and Maggie stiffens, and her nostrils flare, and her eyes are more serious, more full of rage, than Alex has ever seen them.

“Well, it matters to me. Okay? Come on.”

She helps Alex swing her legs up onto the bed, holds her up to take in one more glass of water, hastily poured, and she kicks off her flip flops and grabs a pillow from the other side of her bed.

“You’re not gonna come to bed?”

“The floor’s perfectly fine for me, Danvers.”

“But –”

“When you’re sober. If you still want to. I promise, Alex. Okay?”

“You promise?”

“Yeah, Danvers. Yeah. I promise.”

But Alex is asleep, a small smile on her face, before Maggie even finishes her promise. Her promise to her best friend’s big sister, who she’s been trying to gather the courage to ask out for months now.

She snuggles down onto the floor and – eventually – falls asleep with a smile on her own face, too.

College Alex Drunk Dials the Cute Girl from Bio Class: Part Two (the morning after)

By absurdly popular demand

@danielagzzda @a-few-of-my-favorite-turtles @mahaokby @kryptons-lesbian @like-rain-and-phones and all yall commenting on Ao3, see what happens when you ask nicely? ;)

She wakes before Alex does.

Of course she wakes before Alex does – she doesn’t have red solo cups brimmed with punch working its way out of her bloodstream.

The sun’s just coming in through the blinds on her small window, and she can’t help but stare at the girl laying above her, in her bed, tangled in her sheets.

Alex hasn’t moved all night – she’s still out cold in the same position Maggie helped her into a few hours ago.

She smiles, and she forces herself to look away from how peaceful her best friend’s big sister looks. How peaceful, as opposed to how intense she always seems, how intent on getting everything right, on understanding everything immediately, on protecting Kara. How gorgeous she looks. Like she always does.

She forces herself to look away because it wouldn’t be fair.

Wouldn’t be fair to stare at the sleeping form of the girl she’s had a crush on since she first laid eyes on her – sitting front center in their bio lecture, while Maggie sat all the way up in the back – it was just the back of her head, then, her sweater and the way she took copious notes, and the clean, confident quality of her voice when she answered questions, when she demanded explanations for things that seemed to make no sense – things the professors didn’t have answers for, so the girl found her own.

Maggie had lingered in her seat, that first day. Lingered, because she wanted to see this girl stand up, turn around. Wanted to see her face.

And when she did – god, when she did – Maggie almost swooned, because god, she’s the most beautiful girl Maggie had ever seen.

She knew immediately that she had no chance. That this girl was way out of her league.

So when she befriended Kara Danvers in her English class, her stomach clenched when she slowly started to realize that the girl she had a crush on was her new friend’s older sister.

God, to be a lesbian.
So it wouldn’t be fair to stare at her now, even after Alex’s drunken confessions the night before.

Because hell, she was probably just lonely, just drunk, just looking for a good time.

Because there was no way someone as brilliant, as dedicated, as gorgeous as Alex Danvers would ever even notice her, let alone…

Whatever. It’s whatever.

She stands quietly and pads into the kitchen, rummaging for instant coffee, for water, for a banana, for aspirin. Alex will probably need all of them when she wakes.

Maggie settles back onto the floor with a calculus text book, her back against the wall, eyes deliberately not on Alex’s sleeping form, but facing her so she can make sure she’s alright. Make sure she’s not having nightmares or anything.

She forces herself to focus on studying – just one more exam, tonight – so she doesn’t focus on the deep, slow rhythm of Alex’s breath. Doesn’t focus on the idea, the image, of Alex in her bed.

In her bed.

God.

She needs to focus.

But then Alex is stirring, and Maggie is glancing up, and Alex is checking to see if she has her clothes on, and Maggie’s fists clench and her heart breaks.

“Maggie.” Her voice is groggy and her voice is perfect.

“Morning,” Maggie offers, still like if she moves, she’ll scare Alex more than she already looks scared.

“Did I – did we – ”

“No.” She shakes her head firmly, and Alex instantly believes her.

“God. Because if we did, I’d want to remem – ” But then she does remember.

Remembers her drunken call, remembers her confessions. Remembers Maggie calling her sweetie, remembers Maggie running to get her, to give her water.

Remembers telling Maggie she wants to kiss her, and something about a promise to continue the conversation when Alex is sober. If she wants.

And she does want. God, does she want.

But right now? Right now, her face is red and she’s rolling over in Maggie’s bed – in Maggie’s bed – and she’s groaning and she’s apologizing, apologizing, over and over and over.

And then there are tentative hands on her back, on her shoulder, and there’s whispering, soft and gentle and careful and protective.

“Hey, hey, hey, Danvers. Alex. You have nothing to apologize for. Okay? It happens. Being drunk and all. It’s okay, you’re okay, I don’t… I don’t think any less of you or – ”
“But I was so pathetic –”

“No.” The sternness in Maggie’s voice makes her take her hands away from her face and look up at her, at her messy hair, still in the basketball shorts and hoodie she’d thrown on last night.

“No, Alex, you’re not pathetic. Okay? Far from it, you –”

“Maggie.”

“Yeah.”

“Can you get up?”

“Oh! Yeah, of course, I’m sorry, I shouldn’t have just –”

“No, it’s not that, it’s just – I have to pee.”

Maggie grins, partly amused, mostly relieved that Alex wasn’t repulsed by her touch. She bows and sweeps her hands toward her bathroom, and Alex returns the grin shyly.

Maggie collapses onto her bed and sighs and stares at her hands and tries to calm her racing heart, her burning desire.

She waits a few long minutes, until she hears Alex call, “Hey Maggie, can I use your mouthwash?”

“Course you can!” she calls back, her heart racing, glad she’d brushed her own teeth while Alex was still sleeping, because Alex had said she wanted to kiss her, and maybe, just maybe… but no. No, no. She was probably just trying to get rid of the taste of old alcohol in her mouth. That had to be it.

She’s still trying to convince herself not to get her hopes up – because god knows that never does any good – when she realizes that Alex has opened the bathroom door, is leaning on it, holding it, her head resting on it, staring at Maggie with a slightly tilted head.

“You okay?” she asks, and Maggie almost jumps.

“Aren’t I supposed to be asking you that? You hungover?”

Alex stretches her neck out like she’s testing herself, and she shakes her head.

“Not really. You took good care of me.”

Maggie splutters, and she doesn’t remember any girl ever making her splutter before.

“I just gave you some water.”

Alex nods to the banana, aspirin, and water Maggie had already set out for you. “You did more than that.”

Maggie shrugs and stands, pushing off the bed with her hands on her thighs.

“Just being a good campus citizen, Danvers.”

Alex’s face drops, and Maggie’s heart goes along with it. Alex crosses the room slowly, tentatively, and Maggie forgets how to breathe.
“Is that all?” Alex wants to know, and Maggie can look at nothing but her lips, breathe nothing but her breath, think nothing but her confessions the night before. Noticing her. Liking her. How smart she is. How cute. That she’s been wanting to have Maggie take her back to her room. Been wanting to kiss her.

“I… Alex…”

Alex backs up immediately, her face a map of disappointment, of humiliation. Of self-hatred.

“I’m sorry – ”

“No, Alex, I… I sit all the way up in the back of the lecture hall, how did you even… notice me?”

Alex smiles at that, at the hope she hears in Maggie’s voice, and she plops back down on Maggie’s bed. Maggie joins her on the rumpled sheets, and they both gulp when they realize that they might be fully clothed, they might be sitting up, but they are, technically, in bed together.

“I can’t imagine ever not noticing you, Maggie,” Alex admits with no breath, with a bright red face and with shaking hands.

“But I’m just…”

“Beautiful. You’re so beautiful,” Alex whispers, and Maggie shakes her head.

“Alex – ”

“You said… I know I was drunk, but I could never forget this – you said you’d come to bed with me. Kiss me. If I still wanted to, sober. And I’m sober. And I… I still want to kiss you. Were you just being nice, or do you – ”

Maggie cuts off her words with her lips, with gentle hands on Alex’s face, thumbs swiping over her cheeks, index fingers lost in her jawline, under her short hair, and Alex raises her eyebrows, still with shock for a moment before she steadies herself with one hands on Maggie’s shoulder and the other on her face, kissing her back, kissing her back, kissing her back.

Maggie gasps when Alex’s lips part for her tongue, and heat tears through her body when Alex swoons against her with a gasp softer than air but more intense than anything Maggie has ever heard or felt.

Alex tastes like her mouthwash and she tastes like her heaven, and god, god, god, she’s never understood the whole fireworks thing until this moment, here, now, Alex Danvers’s trembling fingers on her shoulders, Alex’s tongue exploring her lips, Alex’s body shifting so they’re as close as they can be without laying down, Alex kissing her like she’s never been kissed, like she’s never been seen, like she’s never been cared for, attended to… appreciated.

They kiss until neither of them can breathe, until they have to part their lips and press their foreheads together and breathe. Just breathe.

“Wow,” Maggie whispers.

“I’ve been wanting to do that,” Alex smiles, and Maggie mirrors it.

“Same, Danvers. Same.”

“So you’re saying you like me back. Cause that’s… that’s what I got.”
Maggie chuckles. What a nerd.

What a perfect, perfect nerd.

“Of course, you're not gonna make me wait a whole term for our next kiss, are you?”

It’s Alex’s turn to chuckle, to run her fingers over Maggie’s hair, to pull her into their next kiss.

Their next kiss, and far, far, far from their last.

Chapter Summary

anonymous asked:

please write nb!alex in college, like could they meet maggie in college too? also just as a personal preference cause I love the idea could alex have a really cool undercut? wow I love your writing and college nb!alex would be amazing

It’ll all be okay next term.

Next term, when Kara comes to school with them, when Kara will be a freshman.

Because Eliza is always talking about Alex needing to take care of Kara, and Alex is always thinking of taking care of Kara.

But it’s been a while since they’ve realized how much Kara takes care of them, too, without even meaning to.

Because the phone calls and the FaceTime sessions aren’t enough.

Especially now.

Especially now with their new undercut – it took a couple anti-anxiety meds to actually go through with it, because you’re already underperforming in your coursework, Alexandra, and now you’re distracting yourself further with ridiculous haircuts? – and especially now with the binder they’d saved for all of fall term to be able to afford.

The binder that finally helps them be able to wear henleys, because the damn shirts never fell right on their body before. The binder that will undoubtedly draw cries of protest from Eliza, because oh Alexandra – or would you prefer Alexander? You know this is all so much for me to take in – your body is beautiful, and aren’t you concerned about the wear and tear with such intense compression, and what will you do when you have to spend hours in the lab and you get overheated in that thing? You are still intending to spend hours in the lab, aren’t you? Because after you failed that last test, I keep worrying that you’ll just forsake all that you’ve spent so long building for… what? Some girl? Is there a girl? God, can you let me deal with this gender stuff before bringing home a girl? Would that girl be a lesbian, anyway? Oh, Alexan – Alex – why can nothing ever be simple with you, it used to be so simple with you.

The binder that will draw protests, but hell, they’re failing a couple of classes anyway – and Eliza makes sure they can’t forget it – so why not fail at everything, right?

At least, when Alex looks in the mirror with their new binder on – their roommate Lucy had grinned like a fiend listening to Alex stumble around the bathroom, pulling it up over their legs and ass, upside down and backwards, so they could slip it up their body properly, and Lucy’s grin had only gotten bigger at Alex’s excited squeals as they tossed open the door and kept running their hands over their flattened chest, standing front ways, sideways, all ways, tossing on shirt after shirt after shirt, just to watch them finally fit properly – at least when they look in the mirror now, they see their own smile, their own tears, Lucy’s grin, hear Kara’s squeals over FaceTime, rather than Eliza’s disapproval.

“The girls are gonna love you even more than they already did, Danvers,” Lucy nudges them as the two friends sit very illegally on the ledge of their first floor dorm room, their legs hanging out of their window, a couple of feet off the ground, and Alex pffts, and Alex splutters, and Alex blushes.

But then Alex glances down at their newly-bound chest, first with excitement, first with pride, then with… panic, and they grow serious.

“But what if my mom’s right? What if the gay girls just want… well…”

“Straight up girls?”

Alex nods with tears in their eyes.

“You’re amazing, Alex. Binding or not, whatever pronouns you use. Any girl can see that a mile away. And uh… hey. Looks like that gorgeous one already has.”

Alex’s heart plummets and they try to follow Lucy’s gaze, the slight nod of her head, subtly, subtly, subtly.

And then they almost tumble right off the windowsill, because the girl Lucy’s talking about?

The girl who just parked her motorcycle in the lot across from their dorm room, all thick leather jacket and boots and denim and dimples?

That girl is the most beautiful girl Alex has ever seen, and she’s staring right at them.

Alex sends a silent thank you to the queer goddesses that Lucy’s lawyerly aspirations include a military-style commitment to fitness, because somehow, even with her much smaller frame, she manages to grab Alex subtly enough to not make it obvious, strong enough to make sure they don’t splat out of the window.

The girl notices despite Lucy’s subtlety, and she grins.

Her eyes are bright and her dimples are adorable and Lucy mutters a reminder for Alex to breathe.

“Alright there?” the girl calls, and Lucy nudges Alex in the ribs.

“Nice ride,” they call back, and Lucy sits a little straighter, proud of her friend for using… words.

The girl struts over – Alex doesn’t know how to think about her walk as anything other than a confident, almost cocky, strut, and Alex is gone, gone, gone – with a small grin still on her face, a thin backpack slung over both shoulders and her helmet still in her hand.

“You two supposed to be hanging out of your window like that?”

Alex thinks of a lot of possible responses.

You supposed to be so hot amongst unsuspecting queers?

You supposed to be riding that motorcycle on campus? You can cause an accident with how good you look on it.

You supposed to have a voice that sounds like my first kiss and a face that looks like my heaven?
They think of a lot of possible responses, but they only splutter one.

“Sure, we – I mean, no, but pfft, rules? I mean, you rode a Triumph to school, like come on, screw rules, right?”

Lucy grimaces, claps Alex on the shoulder, and swings her legs up and back into their dorm room.

“Well. Good luck with this one,” she says to Maggie with a grin. “I’m Lucy Lane, and their name – if they never get around to telling you – is Alex Danvers. Feel free to stop by any time…”

“Maggie Sawyer,” the girl answers, but her eyes are on Alex’s face, which has gone pale since Lucy used their proper pronouns to introduce them to this gorgeous girl, since Maggie’s eyes traced slowly up and down Alex’s body, taking in their undercut, their flat chest, their boy jeans, their black, short-sleeved henley.

“Well. You kids have fun,” Lucy claps Alex’s shoulder again, and Alex thinks about asking her – begging her – to stay, but Lucy’s hopped back inside before Alex can form words.

“So, college has you so busy that you’re window hanging, Danvers?” the new girl teases. Maggie. Maggie Sawyer.

Alex rolls the name around in their mind, on their tongue, and decide they love it.

They shrug. “I’m usually in the lab.” They point haphazardly in the direction of one of the science buildings. “But I uh… I’ve had a lot going on lately, depression and whatever, and my mom’s been ragging on me more than usual, so I haven’t been doing so great in classes, so they gave me time off from the lab to fix my grades and – shit, I’m sorry, I… I don’t know why I’m telling you all this.”

“They tend to ramble in front of cute girls, Sawyer!” Lucy shouts from inside their living room, and Alex nearly leans in to take a swipe at her, but Maggie just grins.

“They’re lucky I find rambling charming, then,” Maggie calls back with a tilted head and a bright smile.

She used my pronouns. She used my pronouns. She used my pronouns and she’s smiling at me like maybe she can like me and holy shit, is she – she is – oh shit shit shit fuck fuck fuck I’m gonna either kill Lucy or get her a car or something as a thank you…

Because Maggie is swinging her backpack off her back and gingerly placing her helmet on top of it on the ground, and she’s arching an eyebrow.

“Want some company up there, Danvers?” she asks, holding up a hand, and Alex gulps, and Alex leans down to grasp it.

They both inhale sharply at the other’s touch, at the strength in the other’s grip. At the spark, the heat, that shoots through both of their bodies on contact.

Alex tugs her up easily, and Maggie situates herself next to them on the window ledge.

“So your parents have hella painful expectations of you too, huh?” she asks, her voice deliberately light.

“Just my mom. My dad, he uh… plane crash.”
“Oh shit, Danvers, I’m sorry, I didn’t mean to – “

“No. No, it’s okay. Your parents too? Expectations?”

Maggie grins wryly and studies their fingernails. “It’s whatever. But hey – looks like you got yourself a nice roommate.”

“Damn right they do!”

“Oh my god, Lucy!”

“What, am I cramping your non-existent style, Al?”

Alex groans but Maggie just laughs. “She looks out for you,” she says softly after a few moments, like it’s hard for her to believe that people have relationships like that. Friendships like that. Family like that.

Like it’s a foreign concept to her.

Alex runs their hand over the side of their head that’s shaved, and bites the inside of their cheek.

“Do you not? Have people who look out for you?”

Maggie just shrugs. “I’m new here. New to… cities, generally.”

Alex studies her for a moment. “Welcome, then, Maggie Sawyer. Consider yourself looked out for.” They hold out their hand, and Maggie looks wary, like touching them again will catapult her into a world she’s scared to go, terrified to trust, petrified to hope for.

But Alex’s face is kind, and it’s open, and damn, it’s cute as hell.

And cute queers always were Maggie’s weakness.

Or, now, maybe… her hope.

She takes Alex’s hand, and shakes it, and she watches Alex groan good-naturedly when Lucy whoops from inside their living room.

“Can you get your own life?!” Alex calls back inside, not bothering to take their hand from Maggie’s.

“Not when yours is so straight out of a movie!”

Alex blushes and Maggie beams and Alex thinks, for once, that maybe, if this is part of their life movie, that they’re not such a failure after all.
anonymous asked:

Hey J, I know you'll probably be full of fix it asks but... Would you do something with Alex and Maggie being the best queer moms ever? I'm not out to my family, but just hearing what they say sometimes makes me sick. Besides, Adrian is one of the best OCs I've ever read. Thanks for being such a great person.

He’s never been drunk before.

He’s never been drunk before, but god, is he drunk now.

He’s drunk and he thinks he might be seeing double, but he can’t be sure because he can’t exactly count.

He thinks he might need to throw up, but he can’t be sure because – no. No, definitely sure.

He needs to throw up.

He makes it to the bathroom and he texts Maggie from his knees.

It’s incoherent because looking at the screen makes him throw up more.

He nearly drops his phone in the toilet when it starts to vibrate.

Maggie’s picture shows up on his caller ID, and he grins faintly and mutters her name mildly and spits into the toilet.

“Detective Sawyerrrr,” he slurs once he figures out how to put his finger on the green button thing.

“Where are you?” she asks, and he thinks he might throw up again, because she definitely knows.

“Maggie, don be mad! Don be maaad, Maggie, is Latinx night and I didn’t mean to have this muchhh – I don’t even think I had that much, just – did you know you’re not supposed to drink super fast? Or mix drinks? I think you’re not supposta do those things.”

“I was gonna teach you to drink, Rodriguez, you couldn’t tell me you wanted to before this?”

“Well you coulda told me you were gonna teach me!”

“Adrian.” He can’t tell if she’s frustrated or smiling or worried or all of the above, but he definitely here’s Alex in the background.

“Hi Alex,” he calls, trying to wave before he remembers they can’t see him.

And suddenly the phone is out of his hands, and he looks up, and a friend he met through the queer center, Mateo, is crouching over him, running a damp paper towel over his lips with one hand, holding his phone with the other.
“Maggie?” he asks, and Adrian tries to grab the phone back, but Mateo shrugs him off easily.

“Mateo? Is he okay? Where are you guys?”

“Maggie, I’m so sorry, I lost track of him for just a few minutes, I thought only one beer couldn’t hurt him, but you know how cute he is, some people must have bought him drinks —”

“Mateo, you have a boyyyyyfriend, don’t let Jordan hear you call me cuteee.”

“It’s okay, Mateo, it happens. Just tell me where you are and we’ll come get him. And get him some water, okay?”

Jordan greets them both outside the club when they roll up in Maggie’s car – which she bought exactly for situations like this – and she flashes her badge when someone says they can’t double park, and she flashes her badge when the bouncer asks for ID, and when he balks, she says something to him in rapidfire Portuguese, and Alex can translate enough to know that it’s something about letting underage kids in, letting underage kids drink, and don’t think she won’t be checking back in if they don’t take this warning very, very seriously.

Jordan and Alex exchange raised eyebrows before Jordan leads them to the men’s room.

“Lady, you can’t – “

Maggie doesn’t even bother, on the warpath, just flashing her badge again, but she’s kneeling on the ground next to Adrian and Mateo in an instant, and her eyes are suddenly so, so, so soft, and Alex is so, so, so wildly in love with her.

“Hey, bud,” she greets softly, her hands running over his hair, his collared shirt, after squeezing Mateo’s arm in greeting, in gratitude.

“Maggie,” Adrian slurs, barely awake, and Maggie nods and grins.

“He throw up more since I called?” she asks Mateo, and he shakes his head as he shifts to let Maggie take over holding Adrian somewhat upright.

“Alright Ade, I know this is gonna be awful, but you’ve gotta throw up a little more now.”

“I don’t wanna – “

“I know, Ade, I know, but you gotta.”

“Are you mad at – “

But he doesn’t get the words out, because he’s suddenly rigid and retching violently into the toilet, and Maggie just holds his hand, rubs his back, nods softly, sympathetically.

“It hurts,” he whispers hoarsely, and Alex kneels behind Maggie.

“I know it does, Ade, but I promise it won’t hurt forever. Trust me, I know. When I was your age, damn, I got much worse than you are right now. I know how you feel, and you know what? I promise, it’ll feel better.”

“Alex! You came too. I’m sorry. I’m sorry, I messed up your night, I messed – “

He vomits again, and Maggie kisses the back of his neck when he spits.
Alex takes the small bottle of mouthwash she’d grabbed from the apartment out of her back pocket.

“Here, Ade, swig this around your mouth. Don’t swallow it, okay?”

Adrian nods faintly as Maggie smiles at her girlfriend, opening the little bottle for him and guiding it to his lips.

He swishes and he spits and he leans his forehead on Maggie’s shoulder.

“Mateo, could you please – “ Maggie starts to ask, but he and Jordan have already come back with new glasses of water.

“Thank you,” she says, pleased with their thoughtfulness, with the concern and regret in their eyes.

“How you feel, Ade?” Jordan asks, and Adrian gives a mock grin and a weak thumbs up.

“You think you have more in you, buddy?” Maggie asks, and he shakes his head as she offers a straw to his lips.

“I know the idea of water hurts, but just a few sips. Just a few sips, okay?” Alex coaches, and she praises him when he forces some down, his face a tight grimace.

He whispers something that sounds a lot like thank you, and he remembers nothing else.

He wakes up in Maggie’s bed, jeans unbuttoned, top buttons of his shirt undone, shoes off. He wakes up with water, a banana, aspirin, coffee all next to his bed. With the curtains all drawn so the light doesn’t hurt his eyes, and with Alex and Maggie tiptoeing around in the kitchen, being as quiet as they can.

“Ey,” he tries, and even though it’s a whisper, they both spring to attention, spring to either side of the bed.

“How you feel, soldier?” Alex asks with a grin, and Adrian groans.

“I passed out?”

Maggie nods. “We only just got home a couple hours ago.”

Adrian’s brow furrows as he accepts the water Alex is giving him, accepts the help Maggie’s giving him with sitting up slow, slow, slow. “But it wasn’t that late when I called.”

“I figured you wouldn’t want us to carry you to the car, so we let you sleep it off in the stall until you could kind of walk. It’s okay if you don’t remember. Nothing bad happened. And Mateo and Jordan send their love, and their said they’re sorry they didn’t watch you closer. I’m pretty sure they blew up your phone with texts.”

Adrian blinks.

“So… so I get into a club illegally, and I drink illegally, and you just… let me sleep on you on a gross bathroom floor for hours and then take me home and take care of me?”

“What else should we have done, Ade?” Maggie asks with narrow eyes and a tilted head.

“I don’t know… yell at me? Arrest me?”
“Well, arresting you wasn’t gonna happen. That’s not what the law… But I did made it very clear to the club that if I ever catch them serving underage kids again… And yell at you? Why would I yell at you?”

“I was stupid.”

Maggie smiles, and she kisses his forehead, and she nods.

“Yes. But Adrian, you called me. Or, well, you texted me. You reached out when you were in a bit of trouble, and that’s all I can ask. I can’t ask you to never make mistakes. I can only ask you to make sure you call me – or Alex, or your parents, or all of us – when you’re in trouble so we can help you.”

“So… you’re not mad?”

Alex snorts. “Oh, she’s hopping mad. But we figure we’ll let you come down from the hangover before you get lectured, Sawyer Style.”

“Not helping, Danvers.”

Alex just winks at him, and Adrian lets out a groggy giggle, and Maggie can’t help but melt.

Because he’s home, and he’s safe, and he’s growing up, but god, he’s still their kid, and he always will be.

And she can’t ask for anything more.
She doesn’t speak for an entire week.
An entire week where she refuses to open her mouth, even to eat, to drink.
She accepts the IV fluids, nutrients, without complaint, without comment.
Without comment because she won’t open her mouth.
Won’t open her mouth because if she does, the water will rush in.
If she does, her lungs won’t just burn. They’ll burn while they drown.
If she does, she will never stop screaming.
If she does, she will never see her sister again.
At least her death will be protecting her. She’d told her in no uncertain terms to negotiate. That Supergirl – that Kara – is bigger than her. So at least her death will protect her.
Maybe Eliza will take comfort in that.
Maybe Eliza will finally be proud of her.
But she wants to live even more than she needs her mother’s approval, so she doesn’t open her mouth.
If she does, the screaming won’t be hers.
It’ll be Kara’s, it’ll be Maggie’s.
James has already lost his father.
Winn had only just started to have a family.
J’onn’s already lost too many daughters.
J’onn can’t lose her too.
Won’t.
So she doesn’t open her mouth.
Even though he’s standing over her, even though he’s keeping watch over her. Over her sister. Over her girlfriend. Over his sons.
She wonders who’s keeping watch over him.
But she doesn’t open her mouth.

Not when Vasquez drops in to visit, to force Maggie to shower, to eat something.

Not when Lena comes to visit, to force Kara to do the same.

Not even when M’gann rushes in, windswept and desperate, like she just launched herself through the vacuum of space to get to her, to get to J’onn.

Not when M’gann forces James and Winn to help each other eat. Shower. When she nearly has to wrestle J’onn to make him do the same.

Alex just watches.

Unblinkingly.

Never with her eyes closed.

Never with her eyes closed, until the drugs they pump into her force her to, because it’s a relief, really, to see people, other people, people who love her, instead of her own reflection in that damned cage.

Instead of her own panicked eyes, floating hair, her own drowning body.

She watches, but she doesn’t speak.

And they don’t ask her to.

Kara tells her stories. Stories she used to tell her when they were kids – when they were kids and Rick had a crush on her and all she could think about was how he meant Eliza would be proud, even though she’d rather spend time with Vicky Donahue – about Krypton and about laughter and about alien science.

Winn sets up a video game console in the room and he has James and M’gann play Mario Kart with him. They all look at her more than they look at the screen, and Winn thinks he sees her almost crack a smile once.

“You’re my sister, Alex. Both of ours,” he tells her in the silence after, James taking her other hand and nodding. “We’re never gonna lose each other, understand?”

She understands that he doesn’t want to ever lose each other.

She also understands that there’s nothing he or any of them can do to prevent it.

She blinks at him, and that’s as much of a response as she’s been giving anyone, so he squeezes her hand and accepts it.

James talks to her about CatCo, about being Guardian. About how much he admires her for being a superhero without a suit.

“This doesn’t change that, you know, Alex. You’re not weak and you haven’t failed. If it had happened to any of us, you’d tell us the same. I know it’s easier said than believed, but it’s true.”

M’gann tells her stories of Mars, of red skies and fighting white supremacy, of old loves and new hopes.
J'onn says nothing, except that he couldn’t be prouder to have her as a daughter. He lets the rest of their time together lay in silence.

Neither of them are much for words.

But Maggie says even less than J'onn. Almost as little as Alex.

She never leaves. It’s James who calls her captain and arranges paid time off for her. It’s M'gann who forces her to shower when Vasquez can’t do anything more, but like Kara, Maggie refuses to go anywhere other than the bathroom right off the med bay. It’s M'gann, too, who forces her to eat, but she won’t do it anywhere but Alex’s bedside.

She just stares at Alex.

Stares at her eyes. At her chest, like she’s making sure it’s still rising and falling with her breath. With life.

And that’s exactly what she’s doing, what she’s assuring herself of.

None of them try to get Alex to talk, but they all let her know she’s loved.

Cared for.

Watched over.

Safe. Safe. Safe.

The first nightmare that breaks through the sedative has her talking again.

Or screaming, more like.

For Supergirl. Whose life is worth more than hers. Whose life is so valuable that it doesn’t matter what happens to hers.

Supergirl is too important.

Her screams make Kara hold her, whisper to her, as she wakes up.

Her screams make Maggie stand, make Maggie, for the first time since they found her, string together more than a few coherent words.

“You matter too, Alex. You’re important. Yes, your sister is important, Danvers, your sister is everything because she’s your sister, but did you ever stop to think that maybe there is no Supergirl without Alex Danvers? Did you really think you’re the only one willing to die for the people in this room? Did you really think the people who love you could ever bear to live without you? Did you really think Kara could live without you? That I could live without you?”

Alex blinks and Maggie’s low voice cracks and Kara blinks out tears and Winn’s eyes widen and James holds his arm because he knows Winn scares at raised voices, even if they’re raised in beautiful words, and J’onn stares at his daughter and M’gann stares at hers, and nobody, nobody, nobody breathes.

And then Alex says her first words since her gasping, desperate greetings when they’d found her.

Her voice is chapped and her voice is gravel, but her voice is alive, alive, alive.
“The people who love me?”

Maggie cracks a small, wet grin through her tearstained face.

“More than I’ve ever loved anyone, Alex Danvers. And I’m sorry I didn’t tell you before, I’m sorry I didn’t let you tell me, I’m sorry I almost waited too long for this first, I – “

But Alex is reaching for her and Alex is kissing her, kissing her, kissing her, and M’gann is escorting everyone else out of the room because they need this moment, they need forever’s worth of first moments like this.

“So life is too short, and we should tell the girls we love that we love them, huh?” she asks when they break for breath, breath that Maggie easily breathes into Alex’s lungs, safe, safe, safe. Loved.

“Something like that, Danvers,” Maggie smiles against her lips, and Alex lets herself cry, lets herself break, lets herself be… loved.

“I love you back, Maggie. I love you back, I love you back, I love you back.”

Neither of them say aside from variations of those three words for hours – hours while they kiss, while they touch, while they cry and while they breathe, breathe, breathe – they say nothing but I love you, I love you, I love you, I love you, I love you, I love you, I love you, I love you.
DEO agents part like the Red Sea for her, because Alex Danvers terrifies them.

Alex Danvers’s girlfriend with tears in her eyes and murder in her step?

They’ve been trained better than to pick fights they can’t win.

But James?

James knows better. But he also knows Maggie better.

He steps out of the sea of agents just itching to get their hands on Rick, and he blocks Maggie’s path with his hands already partially raised in mock surrender.

Neither of them comment on the social poignancy in their position.

“What?” she snaps, and her voice is rough, ragged. Terrified.

“You’ve gotta go easier on Kara,” he pleads, his voice soft, not wanting to embarrass her in front of the agents. He knows she’s been trying to win their respect for quite some time now. And he knows Kara isn’t exactly making that any easier right now.

“Alex is the only family I have, James,” she snaps again, anger in her eyes but grief in her voice.

It almost breaks him, because Alex is his family, too.

“That’s not true,” he tells her soft, he tells her gentle, he tells her bracingly.

But for a moment, she thinks about punching him.

About doing to him what she’d had to do to the boys in Blue Springs who told her she was disgusting, broken, who wanted to fix her, who told her that her love wasn’t legitimate, wasn’t real. Was dirty.

About doing to him what she wants to do to Rick, for kidnapping Alex, for torturing her. For the leer in his eyes when he talked about her playing for the other team, when he talked about having wanted her. About stalking them. About whatever other terrible things were in his mind when he thought about them. Looked at them. Watched them. Invaded their lives. Torturing Alex, killing Alex, for his father, yes, but also for his scorned crush, also for his loss of a girl to her sister, to her studies, and then, ultimately, to a woman.

She wants to load it all into James, because how can he do this? How can he tell her that Alex isn’t her family? Hadn’t he helped her set up that whole valentine’s thing? Hadn’t she explained the situation to him? Didn’t he remember about her… family? Wasn’t he supposed to be the… kind one?

She tenses when suddenly his hands are on her shoulders, but before her body can react, his voice reaches her ears.

“She’s not the only family you have, Maggie. You have all of us, too. And we’re going to get her back together. As a family. I promise you.”

Maggie doesn’t know if it’s the steadiness of his hands, or the softness of his voice, or the tears in his eyes, or the way she swears he knows what she was just thinking, or the way he calls her family, family, family. But whatever it is, it almost breaks her.

She steps away from his grasp, from his eyes, from his warmth, from his love, because she can’t break.

Not while Alex needs her.

She swallows and she nods and she bites her bottom lip slightly, slightly, and she watches his face, because she’d spent seventeen hours the day before – was it only a day ago? – trying to talk a man down from killing people, and she’d succeeded (they were alive, alive, alive, just like Alex had better get out of this alive, alive, alive). She watches his face, because Kara might think her job is less than hers, somehow, but this? This is her job.

Reading people. Knowing people. Understanding people.

Empathy.

Empathy isn’t typically the job of the police. Quite the opposite. She knows it, because she’s seen what cops typically do to people who look like James. To people who look like her.

And she’s in it to change all that.

So empathy. Empathy is her job.

So she watches his face, and she narrows her eyes, and she steps back into his space, because now she has someone to take care of, and that can keep her in control, in command, composed. Just for a little while longer.

“Are you alright?”

She reaches up to touch his arm, and he stares at her for a moment.

Maggie scoffs at her own stupidity.

“Of course you’re not alright. Do you need anything?” she amends.

“Work with Kara. Don’t fight her. You two can be an amazing team. And Alex needs an amazing team right now. Alright?”

Maggie swallows and Maggie nods and Maggie almost stands on her tip toes to kiss his cheek, but that, too, might break her.

And she can’t break yet.

So she heaves a sigh and she nods again and she turns around and she raises her voice.
“Hey, Little Danvers.”

Kara turns, surprise and nerves and a little bit of anger written all over her face, and half the DEO turns with her.

“Come on, let’s save our girl. Together, okay?”

Kara blinks, and Kara glances at James, and she glances back at Maggie, and she uncrosses her arms.

She nods, and she means it.

“Together.”

J'onn clasps James’s arm as he walks past him.

“Thank you, Mr. Olsen,” he says softly, and James nods grimly.

“We’ll get your daughter back, J'onn. We will.”

J'onn nods and he sighs and he does something he hasn’t done in centuries.

He prays.

And he hopes someone, somewhere, hears it.
She flew Maggie there.

She could tell Maggie hated it.

She could tell Maggie wanted to throw up.

She could tell because she could hear Maggie’s heartbeat, she could feel Maggie’s stomach roiling.

She could tell because she wanted to throw up, too.

And when they found her?

When they found her, and she spilled out of the water, the longest moment of Kara’s entire life was the moment before Alex did the most beautiful thing Alex had ever done.

Coughed.

She’d held on.

She’d held on.

She’d held on.

And now Maggie was holding on to her, and Alex was holding on to Maggie, and Kara knows that this morning, she would have been jealous. This morning, she would have been territorial. This morning, she would have been angry.

Because this morning, Maggie was an arrogant cop who only barely deserved her sister.

But right now? Maggie is the woman who loves her sister so much that she saved her.

No.

They saved her.

Together.

And Kara? Kara will never look at Maggie the same way again.

But she needs Alex. Just Alex.

She needs her sister.
Because Alex is breathing, breathing, breathing, and they’re loading her onto a stretcher but Kara doesn’t want that. Kara just wants to fly her home, fly her home in her own arms, because she never wants Alex to leave her arms again.

And she doesn’t.

Because the medics must know.

They must know that if they try to pry either Maggie or Kara away from Alex’s barely conscious form, all hell will break loose.

So they work around the women.

The women who love her most in the world.

It takes hours for Alex to rouse from when she passes out on the way back to the DEO.

Hours during which James and Winn have to pry Kara from her side so she can eat, so she can rest, so she can breathe, breathe, breathe.

But only after, of course, they’ve done their share of touching her, of crying over her and pretending they’re not, of watching her chest rise and fall, rise and fall, rise and fall, because she’s only sleeping, only resting, not dead, not dead, very much not dead.

J’onn tries to reason with Maggie. James tries to reason with Maggie. Winn tries to reason with Maggie.

She won’t move from the room.

Kara decides that Alex is adequately protected.

So she lets Winn and James take her away, take her to get out of her suit, to shower, to eat, to try, just for a moment, to breathe.

And when she checks in on her sister less than an hour later – they couldn’t keep her (or themselves) away longer than that – she’s awake, and she’s busy.

Busy making out with the woman who loves her, busy wiping tears from Maggie’s eyes, from her own eyes, in between open mouthed kisses, in between foreheads pressed against each other and I love yous whispered over and over and over again.

Kara smiles, and Kara nods, and Kara waits.

She waits, and she waits, and she waits, and she wonders vaguely how someone who just nearly drowned can possibly kiss someone for that long, but then again, if anyone can figure out a way, it’s her sister.

Her sister who’s alive, alive, alive.

“Kara,” she hears, and Alex’s voice is weak. Weak and somehow strong at the same time.

Weak with exhaustion and weak with tears and weak with something that sounds an awful lot like happiness. Like relief. Like being alive, alive, alive.

She crosses into the room so fast it blows Maggie’s hair back, blows Alex back with an oof onto the bed, and Kara apologizes desperately, but Alex just wheezes a laugh and pats the bed next to Maggie stands and then bends to kiss Alex’s hand – one knuckle at a time, slow, staring into her eyes the entire time, and Kara thinks with a jolt of Lena before shoving the thought away – and then she’s touching Kara’s shoulder, and she’s hesitating, and she’s leaning down to kiss Kara’s cheek for a long, lingering moment.

“Thank you, Kara,” she whispers, and Kara splutters.

“For what?”

“For bringing her back to us.”

“Maggie, you – “

But Maggie just puts her finger on Kara’s lip affectionately and makes to leave. “Spend time with your sister, Little Danvers. I’ll go get extra potstickers for when you inevitably need to refuel.”

Alex laughs softly. “I love you, Maggie Sawyer,” she calls out as Maggie leaves.

Maggie stops full in her tracks, her smile too big for her face, for the room, for the world, for the universe.

“I love you, Alex Danvers.”

She leaves without another word, and Kara raises her eyebrows at her sister as she links their fingers together.

“Well that’s new.”

Alex shakes her head, still smiling like she didn’t just nearly die.

“No, it’s not. It’s just new to be saying it out loud.”

Kara smiles and leans down to kiss Alex’s face.

“I thought I lost you.” Her lips quake – her entire body quakes – against Alex’s forehead, and Alex raises her hands to hold her sister close to her.

“Can’t snag the title of only badass in the family that easy,” she quips, and Kara just sobs harder.

Her voice cracks, and Alex almost breaks.

“I know. I know. I know.”

“It was my fault,” Kara squeaks, her face now buried in Alex’s shoulder, her body shaking so uncontrollably she jolts up from the bed so she won’t accidentally break Alex’s bones.

So she won’t accidentally hurt her. Again, again, again.

Alex furrows her brow and tries to sit up.

“Kara, what – “

“All of it, it’s my fault! That he knew who I was, that he knew to target you! That… that you broke your arm. I broke your arm, Alex. And then I… the water, it…”

“Kara.”

“You would have been fine, we would have worked it out, I… the water, you almost drowned, Alex, I can’t… I can’t imagine how scared you were, I… and that was my fault, Alex, mine, mine, and I don’t expect you to ever forgive me, but I – “

“Kara, stop it. Please.”

“Alex, it’s all my – “

“Kara. Listen to me. Can you do that? For me? Please?” She sounds exhausted and she sounds exhilarated and she sounds worn out and she sounds alive, alive, alive. So Kara stops, and Kara worries at her lip, and Kara wrings her hands, and at Alex’s weakened beckoning, Kara sits.

“Kara, none of this was your fault. Okay? None of it. None. Not the plan, not the… the water…”

Kara shakes and starts to sob again, and Alex lays a hand on her thigh.

“Hey, hey, listen to me. Remember… remember that surf competition, when I was a junior in high school?”

Kara adjusts her glasses and sighs out a soft laugh. “Yeah, you wiped out and nearly dr – oh. Oh.”

Alex grimaces, too, but she shakes her head. “When we were kids, I… what I thought about, then, was… was how much I wanted to tell you. About how you weren’t just… an annoyance, you weren’t a hindrance on my life. You weren’t a nuisance, you were… you were my everything. And you still are. Kara, I… this time?”

Alex shudders and Kara knows there will be long nights, and there will be nightmares, and they will be so much different than after that surf competition, because that wasn’t deliberate and it wasn’t torture. Traumatizing. Very. But not… not this.

But Alex presses on, and Kara files it away for later.

“This time, I knew… I knew you know how much I love you. I knew you know… Kara, that was… short of hurting you, or threatening you, that was the scariest thing that anyone has ever done to me. But I… Kara, I would do it a thousand times, a million, more, if it was to protect you. If it was to keep you safe, keep you from being blackmailed like that again.”

She doesn’t say that next time, it could have been James. Winn. J’onn. Lena. Cat. Maggie. She doesn’t say any of it, because she can barely bring herself to think it.

All in all, she’s grateful.

Grateful it was her, not any of the other people Kara loves.

“Alex, I would never want you to – “

“I know. I know you wouldn’t, but Kara, I just… I love you. I love you, and I would do anything for you. But I don’t have to anymore, not right now. Because look! I’m safe, and I’m here, and I’m not going anywhere. Okay? I promise.”

Kara sobs again, and this time, when she curls down onto Alex’s chest, Alex sobs, too.
She breaks her promise when Maggie comes in and Kara shifts back out, to replenish the water she’d drained from her tear ducts onto Alex’s shirt, to try to stave off the brutal headache from her crying session.

She breaks her promise because she unleashes her puppy eyes on Maggie, and Maggie is helpless, and Maggie is all but forced to help her limp out of bed, and Kara can’t do anything but beam, because if the way Alex breaks her promise to not go anywhere is simply by stumbling away from her bed with her girlfriend’s strong, loving arms around her?

That’s something that Kara can definitely, definitely live with.
Chapter 357

Chapter Summary

The “I Love You” Make Out We All Deserve

She tells her she wants to have all those firsts.

All those firsts, and so many more.

All those firsts, and firsts they haven’t even thought of yet.

Because they’ve had their first fight, and they’re had their first tickle war, and they’ve had their first rogue mission together, and they’ve had their first time having Winn walk in on them.

They’ve had their first date and they’ve had their first dance and they’ve had their first cuddle and they’ve had their first sleepover and they’ve had their first time kissing the night through and they’ve had their first time making love the night through.

They’ve had their first Valentine’s Day, and Maggie has no idea in all the world while Alex would want to name a dog Gertrude, but they’ll do it, they’ll do it, they’ll do it, because Alex is perfect and Alex is alive, alive, alive, and they’ll have their first dog because she’s here and she’s in Maggie’s arms and she’s sitting up and she’s telling her she wants to have all those firsts, all the firsts, and then she’s steadying herself, and they can’t stop glancing at each other’s lips, and Maggie thinks her heart might burst right through her chest because Alex Danvers never wants to stop having firsts with her, and then she’s taking a breath – a breath because she’s alive, alive, alive – and then she’s smoothing Maggie’s hair behind her ear.

“I love you, Maggie Sawyer,” she’s whispering, and something explodes in Maggie’s core, because this woman, this woman, god, this woman, this woman who’s survived hell, who held on, held on, held on, this woman who’s looking at her with a tenderness no one has ever looked at her, this woman whose voice is still hoarse from nearly drowning but from surviving, surviving, surviving, this woman whose touch to her skin resonates through her entire soul, this woman whose lips are going to save her life.

This woman loves her, loves her, loves her.

And god, god, god, she loves her back.

“I love you, Alex Danvers.”

“Yeah?” Alex asks, because of course Alex asks, and there’s no pause, no hesitation, no breath, before Maggie’s voice squeaks and she confirms.

“Yeah.” Of course, yeah. Always.

Always.
Always.
A lifetime of firsts.

They inhale as one being and Alex forgets to be scared of losing her breath again, because her hands are framing Maggie’s face, and Maggie’s hands are framing hers, and that is all she needs to keep her safe, keep her dry, keep her breathing.

Keep her loved, loved, loved.

They part quickly, because Alex is going to sob.

They part quickly, because Maggie’s forgotten how to breathe.

They part quickly, because neither of them have ever felt this much.

They still grasp at each other’s faces, still grasp for each other’s closeness, and they rest their foreheads together, eyes closed, shared breath, shared pulse, shared life, shared love.

“I love you, I love you, I love you, I love you,” Alex whispers again, again, again, and Maggie laughs, and Maggie does the same, because they have lost time to make up for, and they have the rest of their lives to do it, but god, it’s so nice to start right now.

She feels Alex’s eyes on her lips before she lifts her forehead to see them, and her eyes drift down, too, because she loves her, god, she loves her, and she can never get close enough to her, ever, ever, ever.

But god in heaven, she can try.

They fall back into each other’s lips, into each other’s breath, into each other’s blood, and when Alex’s lips part, Maggie doesn’t hesitate.

Doesn’t hesitate because she’s spent too much of her life hesitating.

She slips her tongue into Alex’s mouth, and Alex moans softly and pulls her closer, closer, closer, shifting so Maggie can have more access, so her own tongue can flit across Maggie’s lips, because Maggie is warm and Maggie is soft and Maggie is here, here, here, loving her, loving her, loving her.

“I love you,” they both breath each time they shift position, each time they tilt their heads a different way, try a different angle, because who says getting caught desperately making out on a medical bay bed by Alex’s father isn’t one of the firsts they should try?

He clears his throat and he averts his eyes, and Alex giggles but she doesn’t stop kissing Maggie.

Can’t stop kissing her.

Won’t stop kissing her.

She smiles into their kiss and feels rather than sees J’onn’s smile, senses rather than hears his chuckle, and she’ll run to him in a moment, in a moment, and she’ll hug him like she’s needed to hug him for too many hours, but right now she can do nothing but kiss the woman who loves her – god, she loves her, how did that happen, she loves her – and J’onn?

J’onn crosses his arms over his chest and her guards the door with a gravely serious expression, warning James and Winn that they really don’t want to go in there at the moment.

But his heart, the entire time, is singing.
Chapter 358

Chapter Summary

Post-Rescue J’onn and Alex

He waits.

He waits, because his children come first.

Kara comes first, her bursting need to touch her sister, to make sure she’s real, to make sure she’s really breathing, to make sure she knows that Kara is sorry, sorry, sorry, because she knows she blames herself for the water, and he knows that Alex will comfort her, and Kara will comfort Alex, and they need it so, so badly. They need each other so, so badly.

Maggie comes first, her skills at getting into a person’s head nearly as impressive as his own, and hell, he’s psychic, her ability to keep her cool, to keep her conviction, to keep her temper, when J’onn had been having trouble with his own, balancing perfectly with Kara, with Supergirl – just like Maggie balances perfectly with their other Danvers girl – and he knows, he knows, because it’s radiating off of them both, that they have things to tell each other. Important things. Things that can’t wait, because they’ve already waited too long.

Winn comes first, his tears held back for so long, his tears lost in his fingers, flying across keyboard after keyboard, running cross-check after cross-check, algorithm after algorithm, and Winn helped them save her, helped them more than any other techie would even know how to begin, but he knows – because it’s radiating off of Winn, too – that he wants to apologize, too, because he should have done more, he should have been more creative, because he loves her, god, he loves her, because she’s his sister and she’s his world and he’s sorry, too, that he stole her from hidden stash of Reese’s Pieces the other day, and he knows they joke all the time, but god, he loves her like she’s never thought he could love anyone. Family.

James comes first, his fists clenched for hours, running interference between Kara and Maggie while his own heart threatened to burst, because Alex saves him, and he saves Alex, and he understands Alex, and Alex understands him, because when Kara was under the Black Mercy he knew, and she knew he would know, that she would rather die than let go of Kara, and that’s what she just almost did again, and he hated being able to do nothing, but they’d had nothing to go on, and he’d run all the searches that Winn asked him to with his CatCo contacts but nothing, nothing, nothing, and he couldn’t save her this time, but she had to live so they could keep saving each other, keep taunting each other at game night, keep taking photoshoots of her for Maggie, because he’s never had a sister, but god, he’s always wanted one, and that’s Alex, Alex, Alex.

His children had come first.

Alex’s siblings, and Alex’s girlfriend, had come first.

J’onn had waited.

And he was a patient man.
But this was one of the longest waits of his long, long life.

He knows he should be angry when he sees her stumbling out of the med bay, supported by Maggie, announcing resignedly that she refused to stay in bed.

He knows he should reprimand her and send her right back.

He knows, but he can’t, he can’t, he can’t.

Because his girl is alive.

His girl is standing.

His girl is… breathing.

His daughter.

She falls effortlessly from Maggie’s arms into his when he strides over, strides over and envelops her in his arms, in his hands.

Envelops her like his arms alone can protect her, can keep her safe, can prevent this from ever happening again, can turn back time and prevent it from happening to her in the first place.

“I love you, Alex,” he whispers to her, and he feels her chest rack with a sob in his arms. His own threatens to do the same.

“I love you too,” she chokes back, and it’s been so long since he’s cried like this, but by the gods he doesn’t care who sees, because he’s already lost everything.

He couldn’t stand to lose everything again.

And here everything was – is, is, is – in his arms. Safe.

A little shaky. A little unsteady. More than a little traumatized.

 Alive.

He pulls back so he can look her in the eyes, and he stares for longer than he ever has. She lets him, because she needs to see his eyes, too.

“I’m so sorry it took us so long,” he says, because his children weren’t the only ones with apologies.

But she shakes her head and she kisses his cheek and she frames his face with her lethal, fragile hands.

“I’m home now. I’m home,” she tells him, and he hates that she’s the one comforting him, but she wouldn’t be his Alex Danvers if she weren’t.

“You need to let your girl take care of you,” he tells her as she sways a little in his arms, and her ears redden, and Maggie beams behind him.

“She’s a stubborn one,” she chimes, and he laughs.
“That she is.” He strokes her face with the backs of his fingers. Just once.

She melts into her father’s touch.

“You are the bravest woman I have ever met, Alex Danvers.” He pauses and grins. “And I’m surrounded by you all every day.”

Maggie and Kara laugh wetly, and J’onn knows they’ll be writing M’gann about his comment, and he knows she’ll tease him about it, and he knows it will make him proud.

To have this family to joke with.

To have this family alive, alive.

Alive.
Chapter 359

Chapter Summary

Alex Refusing to Stay in Bed

They kiss until they can’t breathe.
They kiss until they can’t stop laughing.
They kiss until their hands won’t stop roaming each other’s bodies, and they need to save that for home.
Their home.
Their home because they need to have more firsts, more firsts, more firsts.
All the firsts.
Together.
Because they love each other.
Because they’re in love.
Alex can’t stop smiling.
Neither can Maggie.

But they have to stop kissing, they have to stop touching each other, they have to stop repeating I love you, I love you, I love you, I love you, or Alex will pass out. And, for that matter, so might Maggie, from sheer emotion.

Alex starts swinging her legs off the side of the bed, and Maggie startles.

“Whoa whoa whoa, Danvers, what do you think you’re doing?”

“Thought you said I was a badass.”

“You are, of course you are, but – “

“Well badasses can get out of bed.”

“No, badasses know when they need rest, and when they need to stay in bed.”

Alex pauses at that, tilting her head – a habit she’s acquired from the woman who loves her, loves her, god, she loves her, and Alex lets out an impromptu giggle – and she squints.

“Your logic makes sense, Sawyer.”

“Good,” Maggie nods, and starts to ease Alex back down by the shoulders.
Alex refuses.

“But that doesn’t mean I’m gonna listen to it!”

“Alex!” Maggie protests, but her laughter gives her away, because if Alex wants to get up, then she’s going to get up, just like she held on.

She held on.

She held on.

“Make yourself useful, Sawyer, and help a woman out here,” Alex commands breathlessly, and Maggie is helpless for her.

Helpless for her, and that helplessness is the best thing she’s ever, ever felt.

“I’d like you to note my objection,” she murmurs, even as she can’t stop smiling, as Alex loops an arm over her shoulder, as she loops an arm behind Alex’s waist, and they shift, and they stand slow, steady.

Together.

“Noted and respectfully disregarded, Detective,” Alex flirts, and Maggie has never, ever been so happy to be overridden in her life.
Chapter 360

Chapter Summary

Pre-Rescue Winn, James, and Lucy (Coping)

(not technically Sanvers, but I figured yall would want this, anyway)

He’s in mode all day.

He’s in mode and he doesn’t eat and he doesn’t sleep.

Until, that is, James forces him to.

“Dude, I get it, but Alex is in trouble, I’m not gonna just – ”

“Winn. Man. You’re not gonna be any help to Alex if you don’t put something in your body. And just thirty minutes. You can nap for thirty minutes. That’s all. Let your programs run… something, I don’t know. Doesn’t it take them time to run analyses, anyway?”

Winn scowls and he moans, but he chomps down the food James brought him.

He hadn’t realized he was hungry.

“Who’s taking care of you, Olsen?” Vasquez wants to know as James watches Winn eat, his brow furrowed in concern, his eyes red with the weight of sheer refusal to panic.

“I can take care of myself alright,” he offers, and she knows he can, but she also knows that right now, it’s a lie.

“I’ve got a call in for you,” she tells him, and she puts a phone in his hands and walks away without explanation. He stares after her for a moment before putting the phone to his ear.

“Hello?”

“Jimmy. I heard about Alex, I’m getting on the next flight out. Are you alright? Is Kara okay? Oh god, she must be a wreck – ”

“Lucy, what – what are you – ”

“Vasquez called me, James, what do you think I – it doesn’t matter. Are you okay?”

“Yeah, I’m… I’m good, I just… you’re right, Kara’s a wreck, and Winn hasn’t eaten or slept since she’s been taken, and – ”

“And you haven’t either, I bet.”

James sighs and he can practically hear Lucy’s reprimand.

“Jimmy. Please eat something. I know you can’t sleep when you’re terrified like this – and don’t deny that you’re terrified, James Olsen, don’t you dare do it – but please at least eat something. I don’t know, steal half of whatever you got for Winn or something.”

“We have to stop stealing food from that man.”

“Yeah, we really do. But it got you to laugh.”

There’s a pause, a silence, and it feels comfortable. It feels safe. It feels like maybe Alex will be okay after all.

“You’re on your way?”

“Of course I’m on my way. She’ll be alright, Jimmy. She’s tougher than nails, Alex Danvers.”

James grins, because god, he knows.

“Yeah. Yeah, she is.” His voice threatens to crack, and someone else might not have heard it, but this is Lucy, and Lucy does.

“She’s gonna be alright, Jimmy. I promise you. This is Alex Danvers. She’s going to be alright.”

It’s Lucy’s voice that trembles this time, but James knows better than to comment. Lucy needs to get here in one piece, and calling attention to the cracks in her armor isn’t going to help her do that.

“Yeah. Yeah, she is,” he repeats. “Fly safe, Lucy, okay?”

“Yeah. See you soon, Jimmy. Eat!”

“Yeah.”

He gives the phone back to Vasquez and plops down next to Winn.

“Feeling better?” he asks.

“I’m not gonna feel better until that girl is back here and that guy is six feet under.” James raises his eyebrows, because this is not how Winn Schott talks.

Winn notices, and he grimaces.

“I’m sorry, I just… it’s Alex, you know?”

James nods, because god, does he know. When his eyes find Winn’s next, they’re exactly as bloodshot as he imagines his own are.

“We’re going to find her, Winn.”

“But what if we’re too late?” he asks, his voice broken. His voice something like it must have sounded when they took his father away to prison. When they yelled at him in foster home after foster home after foster home. When Lyra repeated the pattern and he threw up his hands because Winn is braver than he knows, but he has terrors that only betray themselves in the defensive raising of his hands, the soft cracking of his voice, the wildly calm look in his eyes.

James puts his hand on Winn’s thigh, and the touch seems to calm him. To soothe him.

Both of them, if James is being honest.

“We won’t be. I promise. We won’t be.”
Winn nods and forces the rest of his sandwich into James’s hands. “I’m not the only one who has to keep up his strength,” he tells him, and he claps a hand on his shoulder as he stands.

“Thank you, James.”

“You’re the one doing all the work, brother.”

“I’m just playing with computers. Keeping us all together? That’s the real work, man. And you’re amazing at it.”

James sighs and he nods and he forces himself to eat.

Because Alex will never let him hear the end of it if he passes out from hunger and exhaustion when she gets back.

When.

Not if.

Because she is coming back.

Alive.
Chapter 361

Chapter Summary

Kara and Maggie take Alex Home

It’s adorable that they thought they’d be able to keep her in the DEO overnight for observation.

“I was just in a cage for thirty-six hours, and you want to confine me somewhere else?” she asks, and J’onn lets the medics get good and terrified for a few moments for his own amusement – because after this hell, god, he needs some amusement – before clearing his throat and stepping forward and telling them, with as much seriousness as he can muster, that the medics should give the younger Ms. Danvers and Detective Sawyer a full briefing on Agent Danvers’s immediate medical needs before sending her home.

Because if even Maggie couldn’t keep her in bed, heaven help anyone who tries to keep her there overnight.

Especially not for observation.

Maggie drives and Kara lays Alex down in the backseat, her head on her lap.

Maggie looks back at them through the rearview mirror every few seconds.

Partially because it’s a beautiful image, and she wishes she weren’t driving so she could snap a photo.

But mostly, she keeps looking to make sure Alex is still there. Still breathing. Still safe.

They don’t discuss it – they don’t have to – Maggie just drives straight to Alex’s apartment.

Alex shudders as they walk into the front doors, and she nearly vomits when they walk into the elevator, though she tries to hide it.

But she’s with the women who know her best in the world.

So naturally, she’s unsuccessful.

They don’t comment other than to soothe her as she shivers her way up, up, up, until she scrambles off the elevator as quickly as she can.

Maggie doesn’t ask. She doesn’t have to.

She goes into Alex’s apartment first, with Kara holding Alex up at the threshold, and she checks every corner, every crevice, every window, every space.

“Clear,” she says, but soft, soothing, not like she would shout it to other officers on an active scene.

Alex nods and steps forward.

“Of course it is. I’m sorry, I’m being ridiculous.”
“No, Alex, you’re not.”

“No you’re not, babe!”

Alex’s eyes widen, and she looks between her sister and her girlfriend nervously.

But they’re smiling at each other like they’ve been best friends for years, and Alex furrows her brow.

“So a lot happened while I was away, huh?” she asks, looking between them happily, happily, because she’s never seen them get on this well, and it’s that, more than anything, that’s going to heal her.

“Turns out, Kid Danvers and I make a pretty good team.”

“Kid Danvers?” Kara grimaces, but her shining eyes give her away.

“I mean, you said on that other Earth that have Kid Flash, right?”

Kara sets Alex down on the couch and smiles, gesturing at Maggie to sit on Alex’s other side.

They surround her and wrap her with blankets and loving arms.

“So, tell me.”

“How my favorite women rescued me.”

Kara and Maggie exchange a glance, and Maggie begins with a tentative voice.

“Well, I might have borrowed your gun at one point…”

They take turns telling Alex of their fights, of their discoveries. Of their breathroughs and of their nightmares.

Maggie jumps in and glosses over the part where Kara caused the water to flood the cage.

She knows Kara’s already told her, already sobbed, already apologized, already begged forgiveness that it never occurred to Alex that she needed to give, but Kara doesn’t need to relive it.

Alex catches it, and Kara catches it, and they’re both grateful for her tact.

“You’re amazing at all this, Maggie,” Kara tells her when they end with finding her, finally, finally, finally.

Maggie shrugs. “Just doing my job.”

“No, but Maggie, Kara’s right. With that hostage thing before I was taken, I mean babe, seventeen entire hours of talking that guy down? That’s incredible. You kept all those people alive for seventeen hours.”

“And then I caused a lot of property damage,” Kara adds sheepishly, but instead of agreeing sternly, Maggie waves her off.

“And figuring out how to talk to Rick, that thing with the security cameras – ”
“It would have worked with a flash grenade, too.”

“Oh my god, Maggie.”

“I’m just saying, Danvers.”

“No, but really, Maggie,” Kara interrupts, because she knows if they restart their debate about why the hell Maggie wants a flash grenade to begin with, they’ll never, ever stop.

“Can you…” She turns bashful again, and Maggie tilts her head curiously.

“What, Kara?”

“Can you… teach me? How to be more… like you? I mean, how to read people like that. How to talk to them. How to… control your anger?”

“Yeah, you have a lot of that, huh Little Danvers?”

Kara hangs her head like she’s embarrassed, ashamed, but Maggie is on her knees in front of her almost instantly.

“Hey, Kara. No, don’t do that, I didn’t mean it like that. Hey, look at me. Kara, he was torturing your sister. He would have killed her. He was taunting you. He was… he was… I can’t describe to you the things I wanted to do to him.”

Alex stares, and Kara stares, and they both know that maybe, just maybe, the three of them are so tightly bonded – even through their strong differences – because the three of them have the same kind of rage at their core.

“But how did you… control it?”

Maggie sighs and bites her lip and stares at something in the distance that isn’t really there.

“Kara, if I didn’t control my anger, I’d be…”

“Angry all the time.” She says it in a soft voice, and Alex takes her sister’s hand, because her too, her too.

“Yeah. I’d be behind bars, not… I just have to keep focused on what’s ahead, not what’s inside, if that makes sense.” She grins slyly and shifts her gaze to Alex. “Yoga helps. That kind of mental discipline. And physical discipline. So does a punching bag. James says you hang up cars sometimes.”

Kara nods and Alex kisses her temple.

“Remember what Cat told you, too,” Alex reminds her softly. “About using it. Your anger.”

“Last time I did that I solar flared.”

“But was she wrong?”

“Ms. Grant is rarely wrong.”

“I’m sure she’d be very pleased to hear you say that.”

Kara grins faintly.
“You look a little woozy, Alex.”

“Well, that’s because I am,” Alex sways slightly in her seat, and Maggie stands at the same time as Kara leans, both of them bracing Alex between them, standing her up and maneuvering her to her bed.

“Stay? Both of you? Please?” she asks, her voice groggy, finally giving out, giving in, now that she’s safe, safe, safe.

“Always, Danvers.”

“Always, Alex,” they say simultaneously, and they grin at their newfound simultaneity, and Alex grins even harder, even as she’s falling fast asleep, because her sister loves her. Her girlfriend loves her. And they’re both here, and they’re both safe, and they love her, they love her, they love her.

And god, does she love them.
Chapter 362

Chapter Summary

Alex and Water

It was always Kara that was scared of thunderstorms.

“They weren’t like this on Krypton,” she’d say when they were kids as she huddled into Alex’s bed, into Alex’s body, under Alex’s covers.

It was always Kara that had a hard time with showers.

“They’re so loud, and it’s like a rainstorm just on you,” she say when they were kids as Alex drew her a bath instead.

It was always Alex that was in the water.

Always Alex that was surfing, paddle boarding, swimming, diving.

Laughing.

Always Alex that was laughing.

Alex doesn’t drive out to the beach anymore.

She will again.

One day.

Maybe.

But not now.

And Maggie catches on quickly that the sound of running water terrifies her, now.

Sends her into a cold sweat, now. Which scares her too, now.

So Maggie only does the dishes when Alex isn’t home.

She only showers when Alex is out of the apartment.

She fills up all their ice trays, all their water bottles, when Alex is still at work.

She controls everything she can for the woman she loves.

Water itself. She controls it.

She helps Alex give herself baths with wet washcloths.

She helps Alex breathe through the anxiety and she helps Alex breathe through the night terrors.
She controls everything she can for the woman she loves.

But she can’t control the damn weather.

The damn thunderstorms.

And, naturally, the first rain after Alex’s torture has to be a damn thunderstorm.

Maggie thanks whatever powers there might be that Alex is home, that she’s home, when it starts.

When rain starts pattering on the roof, on the windows. When lightening starts flashing and thunder starts screaming.

And Alex starts screaming, too.

Moaning, more like. And rocking. Hugging herself back. And forth. And back. And forth.

She gasps for air like she’ll never have any more, because god, she almost didn’t.

Maggie pulls her close and Maggie puts her hand on her chest and Maggie kisses her forehead.

“Breathe out into my hand, babe. You can do it, Alex, you’re a badass, remember Danvers? Breathe out into my – yeah, just like that. See? That’s right, sweetie, one more. One more. There you go. I got you. I got you. I got you.”

Her breathing is still ragged and her breathing is still too loud, too much gasp and not enough oxygen, but there’s some. There’s enough.

Until the door slams open and they both jump and reach for their guns, but it’s Kara, it’s Kara, it’s only Kara.

She’s drenched and she looks defeated and she looks almost as terrified as Alex does.

Maggie puts two and two together before either of her Danvers girls can say anything, and she points to the closet where she keeps extra towels.

“Dry yourself off, toss on fresh clothes, and get over here, Sunshine,” she tells her, and Kara says nothing.

She just obeys.

When she’s towel-dried her hair, her face, and she’s padded into the bathroom to strip out of her cardigan and pull on one of Maggie’s oversized NCPD t-shirts and basketball shorts, she curls up next to her big sisters on the bed.

“You okay?” she asks Alex, and Alex is trying to be, trying to be, trying so damn hard to be.

She opens her arms for Kara, and Maggie opens her arms for them both.

They stay that way – holding onto each other like lifelines, because that’s exactly what they are – until the long after the storm passes, until long after the birds start to chirp again.

“Potstickers?” Maggie whispers when she thinks it’s safe, when she thinks both of her girls feel something that might, again, resemble safe.

They turn to her with identical grins, and Maggie just tosses her head back and laughs.
“Two paychecks worth of potstickers it is,” she teases, and she’s never been so happy to spend her money on comfort food.
Chapter 363

Chapter Summary

Sanvers, Mothers, and Garbage

(heads up for abuse references)

He tells her that she doesn’t know what it feels like to have a mother who tells her every day that she’s garbage.

But she knows more about hiding bruises than she lets on.

Because her mother stood there while her father gave them to her. Most emotional. Some physical.

Stood there while he forced her to pack her childhood -- her childhood while she was still a child -- into a single bag.

Stood there while he called her disgusting. A thing. An abomination.

She’d pleaded with her. Begged her.

She’d fallen to her knees and begged her.

And her mother had simply crossed herself and told her that she’d pray for some sort of miracle that wouldn’t land her right in hell. But it wouldn’t work, because the kind of sin that Maggie was committing -- the kind of sin that Maggie was -- wasn’t a sin that could be cleansed. Wasn’t a sin that could be forgiven. Wasn’t a sin that any daughter of hers could choose to commit.

It was the last time Maggie Sawyer had begged for anything.

Even when she saw her mother -- passed her, right by her, in the streets -- her mother said nothing. Once, her mother spit at her.

Or, in her general direction.

Depending on her mood, Maggie’s interpretation of whether it was at her or a coincidence varied.

Garbage.

Yes.

Maggie knew what it was like to be called garbage. To be treated like garbage.

To be garbage.

Disposable.

Trash.

Thrown away.
Disowned.
Forgotten.
Disgusting.

And she knew that Alex did, too.

Knew that even though it had been better for Alex -- her mother had hugged her, for crying out loud -- she still knew what it was like.

To be told she was worthless.
Useless.
Not needed.
Unwanted.

Unless, of course, she took proper care of Kara.

Because Alex’s only worth, Eliza had made it very clear -- continued to make it very clear -- was Kara.

Was her grades and her lab work and her prestige and her sacrifices for Kara.

To her mother, Alex’s life amounted to how much she could bolster her little sister.

And it was more complicated than that. Of course it was. It always is.

But still.

Alex thought she had to be perfect.

Because without perfection, she is worthless. She is nothing. She is bad. She is no good to anyone.

Without perfection, she, too, is garbage.

According to her mother.

But with nicer words. With more I love yous peppered in the mix.

So when he tells her that she doesn’t know about being called garbage every day; when she tells her she doesn’t know about hiding bruises; she doesn’t tell him.

Doesn’t tell him that she’s hiding her bruises right now.

Doesn’t tell him that she has to remind herself, every single day, that she is not, in fact, disposable. That she is not, in fact, garbage.

Sometimes, she’s successful.

Most of the times, she’s not.

Alex makes her more successful.

At believing she is something more. At believing she deserves something more.
And he is trying to take Alex from her.

And she is restraining herself from beating the information out of him, because she will not be the reason he has more, no matter how much she wants to.

Because she knows more about hiding bruises -- about being him, sans the straight white man’s entitlement that his vengeance wreaks of -- than he thinks.
Chapter 364

Chapter Summary

Alex Calling Lucy Post-Rescue

Lucy answers on the first ring.

“Maggie loves me,” she says, and even though Lucy can’t see her, she’s preening.

“No kidding, Danvers,” she can hear Lucy grinning, and her heart skips a beat.

“No, but really – she said she loves me. And then she wouldn’t stop saying it, and I wouldn’t stop saying it, and I don’t ever want to stop saying it, and god, I’m rambling, aren’t I?”

“Such a long way from the badass agent I tried to send to Cadmus,” Lucy chimes wistfully, and Alex scoffs.

“Yeah, and you couldn’t even get that right, Major.”

“Regrets, Danvers?”

“You know I don’t think the dating prospects would have been great in Cadmus.”

“Yeah, that and you’d have been tortured to death.”

Alex freezes and Alex flinches, and even though Lucy can’t see her, she immediately knows something’s wrong by Alex's lack of immediate retort.

“Danvers,” she starts slowly. “Why did Maggie say she loves you?”

“Because she… does?”

“Yeah, I know, I’ve known that for months, but why… now?”

“Because I… said it to her.”

“Ooh, nice one! But Alex, same question: why now?”

Her voice is careful and her voice is scared, and she forces herself to remember that whatever happened, Alex is safe, safe, safe.

Alex keeps her voice deliberately casual, calm. Cool.

“I got kidnapped and held for thirty-six hours and almost drowned in a cage tank thing.”

“Alex!”

“Lucy!”

“Shit, Alex, I’m getting the next plane out, how – way to bury the lead, Danvers, are you okay?”
“Actually, the lead was that Maggie loves me – “

“Only you, Alex.”

“I hope she only loves me.”

“No, I mean – only you would almost flipping die and come out of it with the major takeaway of a girl likes you.”

“She doesn’t just like me, Lane, she loves me, pay attention.”

“Oh my god.”

“Are you still coming?”

“What?”

“To National City. You said you were getting the first flight out.”

“Of course I’m coming, Alex. You almost died. You were tortured. I don’t care how much of a badass you are, you need to be around all your friends. And you don’t have that many to begin with, so…”

Alex ignores her quip, because she’s fixated on something else.

“Maggie called me a badass.”

“Oh my god, I’m gonna regret this, aren’t I?”

“Probably.”

“See you in a few hours.”

“She loves me.”

“Yipee.”

“A lot.”

“I’m hanging up now.”

“Maggie loves me.”

“I can’t imagine why.”

“Fly safe, Lucy.”

“Yeah. Yeah, of course, Alex. I’ll see you soon.”

“I love you.”

“I love you, too.”

“But not in the way I love Maggie.”

“Oh my god I take it all back.”
But she doesn’t stop smiling the entire ride to the airport.
Chapter 365

Chapter Summary

Maggie is Turned On™ (we all know exactly why)

She’s impressed when Winn steps in front of the bastard and tells him he doesn’t get to talk to Alex.

She’s impressed, and she wants to buy him as many drinks and video games as he wants for it, especially because she may have only just started joining this misfit family, but she already knows that he hates confrontation.

Hates confrontation, can barely fight to save his life, and yet he doesn’t hesitate to put his body between Rick and Alex.

She’s impressed, and she loves Winn all the more for it.

She’s impressed, but she’s alright.

But when Alex says she has one thing to do before J’onn wipes his mind, when Alex turns, and when Alex damn near breaks his nose, Maggie is well beyond impressed.

Maggie is utterly wrecked.

Her mouth opens and she doesn’t know whether to laugh or to pounce, and she’s frozen because god, this woman was just kissing her so tender, so gentle, so perfect.

This woman loves her. Is in love with her.

And this woman throws an incredible punch.

And it usually doesn’t do it for Maggie.

She knows what Alex gets up to with unauthorized “interrogations.”

It’s the one thing they consistently fight about.

It’s the one thing Maggie can’t stand.

And Alex is working on it.

She is.

But this?

This feels different. This feels… acceptable.

More than that.

This feels fucking hot.
And suddenly, the making out they’d just done in the med bay isn’t enough.

Because that had been sweet and it had been tender and it had been loving and it had been perfect.

But now?

Alex with that sneer, with that low lilt to her voice, with that set in her jaw and the casual way she slaps Winn five, like damn right I punched him did anyone expect me not to?

She needs more than tender.

Now, she needs Alex to take that sneer, that energy, that aggression, to bed.

With her.

Posthaste.

Because Alex is alive, and Alex is safe, safe, safe.

And Maggie wants to feel the pulse in Alex’s neck with her tongue.

She wants to hear Alex’s ragged breathing into her ear while she wraps her legs around her and lets her pour all that life, all that vitality, all the survival, into Maggie’s body.

She wants to her Alex moan and she wants to hear Alex tell her that she loves her while she ties her to the bed, while she fucks her so hard she can’t remember anything but the way she feels right now.

In love. In lust. In… Alex.

But she can’t, she can’t, they can’t, they can’t.

Because, bravado aside, Alex is still healing.

Heat aside, Maggie’s insides are still quaking.

And she knows Alex’s are, too.

So she takes Kara aside, because her girlfriend’s kid sister is pretty enough, if she thinks about it, but she’s her girlfriend’s kid sister, so she doesn’t think about it, so there’s really no better way to cool off than to walk Kara away from Alex, away from the woman she needs to bend her over their couch and slam into her hard, fast, aggressive, alive.

Away from Alex – just for a moment, a moment, because she knows she won’t be able to tolerate being away from her for long – because yes, she needs to talk to Kara, but she also needs to not beg Alex to take her in front of the entire DEO.

Although, that sounds…

No. Kara. Talking to Kara.

Yes. Yes. Talking to Kara.

Now.

But she files that punch in her memory for later. For when they’re both more healed.
Because damn, is that going to be incredible.
She’d been so focused on not drowning that she almost didn’t register that the water?
The water was cold.
Very cold.
So cold that when she reaches for Maggie’s hands, Maggie can barely distinguish them from ice.
She loses consciousness on the way to the DEO, and Maggie leans over to take a look at Kara’s hand. To make sure Kara didn’t hurt herself breaking that glass.
Because she might be Supergirl, and she might still be in that suit, but right now, staring frantically at her big sister in the back of the DEO van, only moving so the medics can surround her, can make sure she stays alive, can make sure her temperature comes down safely?
Supergirl looks an awful lot like Kara Danvers.
An awful lot like the girl who almost lost her big sister.
So she offers her free hand to Kara, and Kara accepts it with her own.
They say nothing, but they don’t have to. They ride back to the DEO holding hands.
Keeping each other solid. Keeping each other steady.
The medics report to J’onn that her temperature has returned to safe levels, and it’s then that Maggie finds her voice.
“Howherhandsstillfeellikeice.”
The medic glances at her sympathetically. “Her limbs aren’t in any danger, and her core temp’s getting to where we need it to be, you don’t have to worry – ”
If he’s going to object to what Maggie’s started to do, or question it in any way, J’onn and Kara both stop him with a silently raised hand. Because they know better.
Because Maggie is maneuvering into the tiny medical bed next to Alex, shimmying under the covers and diligently making sure Alex is completely covered. She pulls Alex close to her, gently, gently, carefully, carefully, so that their bodies are flush together.
So that she’s giving her all of her heat.
Because that’s all she has to offer right now.
And that’s all she ever wants to give Alex: all she has to offer.
Winn chooses that moment to rush into the medical bay, and his brow immediately furrows on seeing Maggie in the bed with Alex, and J'onn and Kara hush him, too, before he can say anything.

But Maggie reads his expression, and she grins.

“Don’t worry, Winn, I’m not naked under here. You’re not interrupting anything.”

J’onn covers his face and Kara snorts as she reddens, and Winn splutters and stammers and James, entering behind him, just laughs, because Alex is alive, alive, alive.

“She still unconscious?” Winn finally forms the words to ask, and James grins.

“That’s probably the only reason Maggie’s still wearing clothes,” he teases, because she’s alive, god, she’s alive, and J’onn groans and promptly leaves and Kara shoves her fingers in her ears and hums loudly.

“Is she… how was she? When you found her?” Winn asks, his voice almost reverent.

Like it’s a miracle. Like Alex is a miracle.

And god, she is.

“She’s gonna be okay,” Maggie whispers, and she pulls Alex even closer to her and kisses her forehead. “She’s gonna be okay.”

Chapter Summary

Post-Rescue Game Night

They have to wait a couple of weeks.

Because it’s a week or so until Alex and Maggie can – emotionally and physically – start having sex again.

And after that, no one has any hope of seeing them at night.

So they have to wait a couple of weeks.

But when they have it again – game night, because that’s what families do, and god, are they a family – Kara invites Lena, and Alex puppy eyeses J’onn into coming, and Lucy’s in from out of town because “you think you can almost die on me and get away with it, Danvers?”

Winn is withdrawn, at first – he won’t stop staring at Alex like he’s seeing a ghost – until she taps James on the shoulder, replaces him on the couch next to Winn, and throws her arm around him.

“I’m not gonna disappear if you take your eyes off me, Schott,” she says, and her voice is softer than any of them have ever heard it when she talks to Winn, and he puts his head on her shoulder and she kisses his hair.

“Yeah yeah, don’t get used to this,” she murmurs when James, Lena, and Kara awww, and he smiles and pulls back.

“You’re my sister. You’re not allowed to disappear, okay?”

Alex’s eyes flood.

“Yeah,” she promises, gravel in her voice, and Kara hugs Maggie into her chest.

Operation?” Winn suggests, and Kara shouts him down, arm still slung around Maggie’s body, because “precision isn’t exactly my thing,” and “yeah, we know Little Danvers, that’s why we wanna play,” and “well I think Kara should pick the first game, since she is gracious enough to be hosting us,” and “of course you’re on her side, Lena, she’s like your sworn protector and kombucha buddy,” and “but no kale!” and “oh, god forbid kale!” and “what’s wrong with kale?” and “same thing that’s wrong with vegan ice cream, Maggie,” and “maybe you two should just give up and let your girlfriends date each other, at least their weird healthy food choices would match up” and “good god, I don’t believe I agreed to participate in these shenanigans,” and “you ain’t seen nothing yet, Director Henshaw. Um. Sir.”

They settle on Mario Kart, because all of them have too much energy for quieter games – Alex is alive, and she’s safe, and she and Maggie love each other and will actually admit it now – and Lucy climbs over Kara’s back to see better and Kara starts hovering without thinking about it and Lucy shrieks and grabs on and Lena laughs a little too vindictively because isn’t Kara supposed to be hers and James snaps a photo because the image of Lucy shrieking and grabbing hold of Kara’s waist on finding herself suddenly airborne – all the while Kara refuses to take her eyes off the video game, controller steady in her hands – is too good an image to pass up.

None of them – except Kara, of course, except Kara – expect her to, but Lena leaves them all in the dust, never failing to toss a perfectly aimed turtle shell at the last moment to unseat the apparent victor and crown herself Mario Kart Queen.

Alex steps back from the couch when it gets too much – when it’s so much love in one room, when so recently the only room in her life was full of water – and J’onn joins her first.

“I’m so proud of you, Alex,” he reminds her, and she almost blushes.

“Just doing what you taught me,” she tells him again, and he shakes his head.

“You’ve far exceeded anything I’ve ever taught you, Alex. Your heart sees to that every time.”

She cradles her body into his chest, and she closes her eyes as he just holds her, holds her, holds her.

Neither of them notice James turning around and snapping a photo, but all of them notice the photo on Alex’s mantle and on J’onn’s desk at the DEO the very next morning.
Chapter 368

Chapter Summary

“You’re Alive” Sex

The first time they try, it’s days later.

Days later, because Maggie wants her.

God, does she want her. (Especially after that punch. Jesus, that punch.)

But she won’t do more than kiss her tender, kiss her sweet. Kiss her passionate, yes, hold her close, absolutely, but nothing more.

Because her body is still sore, although Alex keeps trying to pretend it’s not.

Because her insides are still healing, although Alex keeps trying to use the argument that she’s a doctor herself with her own doctors.

It’s days later and they try because Alex is licking her lips and Alex is breathing headily and Alex needs her, needs her, please Maggie, I want you, I want you, I want you.

So Maggie kisses her all the way back to the bed, because god, does she want her to.

She kisses her all the way to the bed and she lays her down and Alex looks up at her expectantly, her pupils dilated, her lips wet, her hair mussed, her shirt askew.

Alex looks up at her, wanting, wanting, wanting.

And Maggie wants nothing more than to give.

Give her everything. Everything and beyond, because they haven’t been able to stop saying I love you, because they have so much time to make up for, and so much time to prepare for.

But she looks down and Alex’s hair is haloed around the pillow and her eyes are vulnerable and her body is vulnerable and her breathing is vulnerable and Maggie wants to give her everything.

But Maggie can do nothing but wrack with sobs.

There’s a split second where Alex is alarmed.

Where Alex is alarmed, and confused, but then, suddenly, she isn’t.

Because Maggie has been so solid, these past few days.

Solid and steady and giving and… and perfect.

And Alex had asked.

It was the first thing she wanted to know.
“You okay?”

But of course Maggie had deflected. Of course she had.

And she’d spent the last few days deflecting.

But now?

Now it’s bursting out of her chest like – well, like the water had burst out of the damn pipe, and Alex pulls Maggie down on top of her and she just holds her solid, holds her steady. Holds her giving. Holds her perfect.

“I can’t lose you,” Maggie gasps, soaking Alex’s shirt with her tears, with her snot, and Alex kisses her hair and lets herself cry too, but softly, softly, because Maggie needs this. Maggie needs her.

She whispers the words until they bleed into each other, until they seep into Maggie’s skin. Until Maggie remembers how to breathe slow, how to breathe even. How to breathe without choking on tears. How to rest. How to remember that Alex is safe, safe, safe, her body warm and solid underneath hers.

Safe.

Alive.

They cling to each other until they both fall asleep.

They try again a few days later.

Try again, because they’ve spent the last few days giving Maggie all the space and time and attention she needs. Giving her shifts with James and Winn and Kara and J’onn, giving her all the time and all the space to grieve what almost happened, what could have happened, what was minutes away from happening.

They try again, because it’s a Friday night, and they’re kissing, and god, her lips are so soft and god, she tastes like chocolate, and god, her hands are slipping under her sweater and god she needs her, needs her, needs her.

Now.

“I want you, Alex,” Maggie whispers, and Alex nods into their kiss.

“Yeah?”

Maggie smiles, and it lights up the entire room.

“Yeah.”

“I’m yours,” Alex assures her, and Maggie knows, and Maggie acts on it.

She strips her slow and she strips her steady. She asks her about every centimeter, every movement.

“This okay, babe?”

“You good, Alex?”

“You want this, yeah? It’s okay if you don’t.”

But she does, she does, she does. Every touch. Every kiss. Every lick. Every soft nip.

Everything.

“Let me undress you,” Alex whispers when Maggie’s kissed her way all across Alex’s body, her clothes a heap on the floor.

Maggie nods and kneels and lets her, and it’s quiet and it’s reverent and it’s needy and it’s constant.

“I love you so much,” Alex reminds her, and it still makes Maggie’s heart leap every time.

“I love you so much,” she mirrors, and helps her by kicking off her boxers.

“You sure you’re okay for this?”

“Are you?”

“Are you asking me if I’m gonna cry again, Danvers? Because if you are – “

Maggie pretends to reach for her clothes, and Alex grabs her back – grabs her back like their first kiss, but naked, now, horizontal, now, in love, now – and when their lips connect, it’s fire.

It’s fire and it’s cleansing and it’s dangerous and it’s healing.

It’s everything and it’s eternal and it’s now, now, now.

“May I?” Maggie asks, her voice desperate against Alex’s lips, and Alex opens her legs to accommodate Maggie’s thigh, and Maggie moans at how wet Alex already is for her.

Alex grinds up into her and tosses her head back, Alex relishing the way Maggie takes full advantage of the access to her neck, Maggie relishing the way her tongue can trace Alex’s pulse, alive, alive, alive.

“I love you,” she breathes into her throat, because she’s alive, alive, alive.

“I love you, too,” Alex gasps back, because her pulse is leaping with the rhythm of Maggie’s hips, because she’s alive, alive, alive.

Maggie moans at the admission, their first time during sex – and they both smile as they realize at the same time, because firsts, firsts, firsts – and Alex touches everywhere she can, her hands never still, tracing everywhere on Maggie’s body, because god, she thought she’d never touch her again.

She knew she was coming.

She knew she would hold on.

But god, god, god, there was that terror.

“I love you,” she whines as Maggie kisses her way down Alex’s breasts, down her stomach, pausing at her hipbones.

“May I?” she asks, and Alex has to restrain herself from shoving Maggie’s head down with her desperation.

“Oh. And I love you, too,” Maggie responds before closing her lips around Alex’s clit, before slipping her tongue inside her, before moaning into the feeling of Alex thrusting her hips up into Maggie’s mouth, fucking Maggie’s face with all the desperation of a woman who would be dead if she had any less courage, any less conviction, any less need to live.

For this, for this, for this, for I love you, I love you, I love you.

For you’re alive, you’re alive, you’re alive.

Maggie worships every inch of Alex’s skin – alive, alive, alive – and she can’t get enough of making Alex cum.

In her mouth – twice – with her tongue inside her – twice – with her fingers inside her – three times – and, when Alex begs for it, when Alex is panting and whimpering and soaked and utterly wrecked for her, with her strap on, slipping inside her slow and steady and fast and hard, because she can feel how tight Alex is around her, can feel Alex’s hips rising to meet hers, can hear Alex’s screams, all of them of her name, all of them in ecstasy, none of them in pain, none of them in fear, all of them in sheer love, love, love.

Maggie holds off on cumming – holds off until she’s inside Alex with her strap on, until she’s free to fuck her with one hand holding hers, their fingers interlaced, and the other wrapped around her body, her face buried in Alex’s neck, slamming into her as hard as Alex is begging her for, because she’s alive, alive, god dammit, Alex is alive.

Safe.

Warm.

Writhing underneath her and very, very wet for her.

Alex feels Maggie’s thrusts go uneven, and she smiles into her hair, because she knows Maggie’s signs, and she knows Maggie is about to cum, hard, raw, needy, buried all the way inside her.

And that sends Alex over her own edge yet another time.

“I love you, Maggie,” she gasps as she reaches the stars.

“I love you, Alex,” she screams helplessly as she kisses her neck, her pulse point, her heartbeat, steady, steady, racing, racing, for her, for her, for her.

They come back to earth together, slowly, slowly, slowly.

Spent and sated and soaked.

Exhausted and ecstatic and euphoric.

“I’m right here,” Alex whispers, because she knows.

“I’ll always come for you,” Maggie whispers back, because she knows, too.

“Was that a pun, Sawyer?”
“Oh my god, Alex, seriously?”

“For you? Always.”

“Nerd.”

“You love me.”

“Yeah. More than anything, Danvers, I do.”

Chapter 370

Chapter Summary

Gertrude

As it turns out, they have their first fight about what to name their eventual first dog before they have their first fight about where to go on their first vacation.

They’re naked and they’re cuddling and Maggie’s body is wrapped around Alex’s because it’s been days but she still can’t get close enough, still can’t touch enough of Alex’s skin.

Still can’t fall asleep without her head on Alex’s chest.

Without her ear to Alex’s steady heartbeat.

Her fingertips are tracing patterns on Alex’s side and her lips are pressing gentle kisses along Alex’s neck, and suddenly she smiles into her skin, because suddenly, she’s both heartbroken and amused.

“What, babe?” Alex half turns, still languid, still hazy, still sated.

“Nothing,” Maggie soothes, not wanting to disturb her if she was drifting off to sleep.

Because sleep has been hard to come by the last few days.

“No, it’s okay – what?”

Maggie grins again and presses a few more thoughtful kisses to Alex’s neck.

“Why Gertrude?”

“What?”

“Dog name? Gertrude?”

“Oh.” Alex chuckles to herself. “You know I honestly couldn’t tell you? I mean, the name means strength. Well, spear, more specifically.”

“So you want a homicidal dog.”

Alex giggles, and Maggie wants to bottle the sound and listen to it for eternity.

“No. A strong one.”

“But Gertrude, babe? The other dogs on the playground will mock her.”

“What’s wrong with Gertrude?”

Alex is sitting up, now, and Maggie whines. Alex concedes, and lays back down, but facing Maggie this time.
Because Maggie’s not the only one with a sudden addiction to the other’s closeness.

“What?”

“What?”

“Nothing.”

“Nothing.”

“Sawyer.”

“Sawyer.”

“Danvers.”

“Danvers.”

“Maggie.”

“Maggie.”

“Old fashioned!”

“Old fashioned!”

“So you mock one of the last things I could have said to you as old fashioned?”

Maggie stills and Alex regrets the quip immediately.

“No, no, Maggie, I’m sorry, I didn’t – that was stupid, I’m sorry.”

“Yeah, it was.”

“I’m sorry.”

“I know – ”

“You can’t treat it like a joke, because it wasn’t, Danvers, I almost lost you! I almost lost you and then I would have had to go out and get a dog and name the poor girl Gertrude and it would have been your damn fault!”

“…. Maggie.”

“Alex.”

“Are you laughing or crying?”

“I don’t know. Both?”

“Both is okay. Both is good.”

“You don’t think I’m crazy?”

“I think you’re crazy about me.”

“Oh my god, Danvers.”

“Am I wrong?”

“I love you, Alex. I’m more crazy about you than I could ever describe.”

“So we can name our first dog Gertrude?”

“Absolutely not.”
Chapter 371

Chapter Summary

First Vacation

Maggie wants somewhere hot. With a beach.
Alex grew up somewhere hot. With a beach.
Alex wants somewhere cold. With hiking.
Maggie grew up somewhere cold. With hiking.
They start to bicker.
Their first fight about where to go on their first vacation.
Maggie cheats.
She walks out of their bathroom – well, technically, her bathroom, but theirs, really, because I love you and I want a lifetime of firsts with you changes some territorial rights, doesn’t it? – in nothing but a bikini and shades and an expression that screams desire.
Alex doesn’t fight very hard.
She books their flight nearly the next minute.
Well, as soon as she fucks Maggie senseless both in and out of that damn two-piece.
Maggie doesn’t usually like airports with people.
Doesn’t like traveling with people.
Hell, Maggie usually doesn’t like people.
But traveling with Alex?
Traveling with Alex is absolute bliss.
Because Alex plans everything – every. single. thing. – but she also gets excited by everything. Every. Single. Thing.
All the little gift shops and all the little sweatshirts and all the little keychains and all the little stuffed animals.
Maggie winds up rolling their bags around while Alex darts from airport shop to airport shop, and Maggie wants to shout to the world that she loves this woman.
And she almost does. (She doesn’t realize her smile is already doing it for her.)
And Alex is just as excitable once they land.

She scours every inch of the hotel suite, uncovering goodies and testing the bed and pillow fluffiness and grabbing Maggie by the hand and jumping on the bed with her before pulling her back down and fucking on the bed with her.

And that’s all before they even unpack.

The beach itself?

The beach Alex claimed would be boring to her because she grew up on one has her climbing massive surf-side rocks and seeing how far out she can swim and seeing how long she can lay still on their towel before Maggie needs to touch her, to kiss her, to carry her off into the ocean and hold her safe, hold her warm, hold her alive, hold her happy.

“I love you,” Alex tells her when her hair is sopping wet, the experience so different now than it was… then.

“I love you,” Maggie tells her when she’s buying her dinner at a restaurant that overlooks the beach.

“I love you,” Alex reminds her when she’s scratching at her back and writhing underneath her.

“I love you,” Maggie reminds her when she’s cumming, hard and abandoned and raw all over Alex’s naked thigh.

“Next time, we’ll go to see the Aurora Borealis,” Maggie promises as they fall asleep in a bed that Alex has deemed suitably vacation-worthy, not telling her that she’s already bought the tickets.

“I love you,” Alex murmurs into her skin as she falls asleep, wildly in love.

Wildly safe.

“I love you,” Maggie breathes, already half asleep, Alex scent in her nose and her body in her arms and her love all throughout her being.
Maggie Needs TLC Post-Rescue

She gets a little bit from James, who holds her to his chest and tells her she’s a hero. That they wouldn’t have gotten her girl home with her.

She gets a little bit from J’onn, who welcomes her to the family, and even though she has to crane her neck up to hug him properly, it’s one of the best hugs she’s ever had.

She gets a little bit from Winn, who hugs her tight and tells her that Alex is lucky to have someone who loves her this much, who’s this amazing, who’s this badass.

She gets a little bit from Kara, who hugs her back and who invites her to her first game night and who tells her that her sister couldn’t possibly do any better, because she’s amazing, and she is living proof that a cape doesn’t make a hero; a heart of gold does.

She gets a little bit from Alex, who asks her, before anything else, if she’s okay, which shouldn’t surprise Maggie because that’s so quintessentially Alex, but it does anyway, because how can this woman be so absolutely, absolutely perfect?

But after she breaks? After she breaks in Alex’s arms, days later – days after holding it up, holding it down, holding it together – after she breaks, and after Alex holds her, after Alex wipes her tears and her running nose and kisses her shredded heart, Maggie finally makes the call she’s been avoiding for days.

“Hey kid,” she says, and she doesn’t bother to keep the trembling out of her voice, because he’ll know anyway. “Feel like coming on an all-expense paid trip back to National City?”

She’s bought him his tickets within minutes, and he’s on the next train out from Star City.

He has nothing with him but a small duffel and a worried expression, because all she’d said was that Alex is fine, that everything is fine, but it almost wasn’t and she’s broken and she needs her family.

And Adrian Rodriguez is her family.

He doesn’t knock and he doesn’t text. He just uses his key to open her door, and when she spills into his arms, he kisses her hair and he rocks her gently, because he’s seen her sad and he’s even seen her tear up, but he’s never seen this.

And it breaks his heart.

It breaks his heart, because he loves her more than he knows how to say, but he also… he also feels proud.

Proud that she called him. That she considers him enough of an adult, enough of her peer, to reach out to, to cry like this with.
They don’t make it past the threshold – his duffel is still hanging off his shoulder – for many long, long, long minutes.

They don’t make it past the threshold because she can’t move except to grab at his shirt and wrack with sobs in his strong arms, and even though he’s reasonably sure he could scoop her up easily, he doesn’t want to risk shutting her down, doesn’t want to risk her speeding back into her shell.

Into her armor.

So he just stands there and he just rocks her and he kisses her hair and he wonders, exactly, when she got this much taller than her.

He doesn’t know how long they’re standing there, limbs merged like they’re one creature, his comfort slipping into her ears, but they both jump slightly when Alex steps into the door behind them.

She takes one look at the way Maggie backs away, turns her back, wipes her eyes, and her heart breaks.

“Sweetie, you’re allowed to be upset. You’re allowed to cry, we’ve talked about this – “

“You were the one in that cage, Alex, not me – “ she chokes, her back still to Alex, still trying to dry her eyes, and Adrian’s stomach sinks, because cage? God, just how bad were the last few days?

“Maggie, if the roles were reversed, I don’t even know how I’d be functional. I… you’ve been so strong, baby, but you… you don’t have to be solid all the time. Let me in. If you don’t want me to, about this, more than you already have, I get it. I do, babe. But don’t stop letting Adrian in. Please?”

“She’s right, Maggie,” Adrian offers in a small voice, and Maggie nods slowly, unsteadily, and sniffs unflatteringly. She chuckles and holds up a finger and walks into the bathroom.

“Hey,” Alex greets, and pulls him into a hard hug.

“Are you okay?” he asks, and she just hugs him harder.

“She’s been taking perfect care of me. Just you make sure you take perfect care of her, understand?”

“Understood, Agent Danvers,” he whispers, and they both turn as Maggie pads back into the living room, eyes swollen and red but face dry.

“Can we go bowling?” she asks suddenly. “The three of us?”

“Yeah, babe. Whatever you want.”

“You realize I’m gonna kick both your asses, right?”

“We’ll see about that, Rodriguez.”

They do see, and he does kick both of their asses.

But by the end of the night, they’ve both laughed harder than they had in what feels like years.
By the end of the night, they’ve made out with exchanges of I love yous so many times Adrian’s mockingly threatened to leave more than once.

By the end of the night, when Alex kisses her soft and kisses her perfect and goes home to Kara, Maggie is ready to talk to Adrian.

And god, does she talk.

She tells him everything.

Every detail.

Even the most painful ones.

Alex floating.

The credit card.

The taunts about parents.

The taunts about sexuality.

She tells him everything, in fits and in starts, and by the time the sun rises, she’s asleep in his arms, tear tracks still on her face, but a small smile on her lips, because Alex is safe, and Adrian’s here, holding her, loving her.

Safe.

When Alex’s key scrapes the lock, Adrian’s fallen asleep, too, his mouth all askew and his neck tilted straight back on the couch.

Alex dries her eyes before pulling a comforter over both of them and kissing both of their foreheads softly, tenderly, lovingly.

Family.
anonymous asked:

hey I don't know if you're taking prompts atm, but if you are could you please write some more nb!alex college au, I love them so much and your writings make me so happy!

“Wanna get outta here?” Maggie asks, chuckling at Alex’s banter with their roommate, but also wanting the full attention of this adorable enby.

And it terrifies her.

Her desire.

Her question.

Terrifies her because the only people she’s kissed have been girls in high school who took her underneath the bleachers to make out, only to tell their boyfriends later that she took advantage of them.

Terrifies her because of Eliza Wilke.

Terrifies her because of her father.

But she’s away, now.

Away, for the first time.

And Alex Danvers? This kid hanging out of their window, undercut and tank top and sleeveless vest and and flattened chest and baggy shorts all but screaming their queerness? Their braveness?

Maybe Alex Danvers won’t punish her for her desires.

But at her question, Alex almost topples out of their dorm room window.

Maggie catches them by their stomach, and they both pause at the contact. “I’m sorry, I shouldn’t have been so – “

“No, no, it’s… it’s just funny, right? Because usually when someone says ‘you wanna get outta here,’ they mean go home or something, but I am home, so you don’t mean go home, right, you mean go away from my home instead of to it, and it’s just…”

Alex putters like they’ve run out of fuel, and they shrug awkwardly. Adorably.

Maggie’s never wanted to kiss anyone this badly, and she chastizes herself harshly. She barely knows Alex.

Doesn’t know them at all.
But their rambling is awkward, and it’s earnest, and earnestly isn’t something Maggie comes across a lot.

“Just what, Danvers?” she helps them out, a small smile tugging at her lips.

“It’s just funny,” Alex finishes, starting to blush, and Maggie hears Lucy sighing dramatically at Alex’s lack of chill inside the dorm.

Maggie gulps and she lowers her eyes to Alex’s lips and she looks away as soon as she realizes she’s done it.

“Your room isn’t the only home on this campus,” Maggie says, her voice low, her voice hopeful.

Alex nearly falls again, and Maggie grabs them again.

Alex opens and closes their mouth helplessly.

“But for now, wanna take a walk?” Maggie grins, hopping down from the window and retrieving her backpack and motorcycle helmet from the ground.

Alex takes nearly a full thirty seconds to stammer a yes, and somehow their rambling makes them more attractive to Maggie. More unassuming. More… earnest. More honest. More genuine.

“Uh – yes, just – uh, can you come around the front entrance? I’m sorry, I – “

“Yeah, yeah, it’s cool. Meet you in a minute. Um – nice to meet you, Lucy!” Maggie raises her voice at the end.

“Have them home by midnight, Sawyer! It’s not a huge campus, I can easily find out where you live!”

“Yes ma’am!” Maggie offers a mock salute. Even though she knows Lucy can’t see her from inside, she knows Alex can, and Alex laughs.

She decides she wants to make Alex laugh as much as she can.

“See you on the other side,” she offers up to Alex, and they nod as they scramble backwards off their windowsill, nearly falling in.

Maggie chuckles to herself once she listens to make sure Alex is okay. She slings her bag over her shoulder and sets off at a jog toward the main entrance of Alex’s dorm.

It takes Alex more than a minute or two to get there.

It occurs to Maggie that they might not come.

That Maggie asking if they wanted to go somewhere – to get outta here – might have been rude to Lucy. Might have been a turn off to Alex.

Because why would someone that attractive want to go anywhere with Maggie anyway? Why would someone that soft want to have anything to do with Maggie, anyway?

Maybe Alex had only said she could come up and sit on their window to be polite.

They seemed like they were a polite person.
Politeness was good. Nice.

Good and nice didn’t deserve Maggie Sawyer.

How could she have been so stupid? So overconfident? How could she have been so –

“Maggie.”

Her stomach backflips at the slightly breathless sound of Alex’s voice, and she turns.

“You’re a lot taller than me,” is the first thing she says, because she couldn’t really tell when they were sitting on the windowsill together. It’s the first thing she says because the shock of Alex actually standing there in front of her, eager and ready to head out… wherever… is so unbelievable.

Alex grins and straightens, puffing out their chest slightly.

“I uh…”

“You don’t have to actually respond to that, it was a stupid comment.”

“No! It wasn’t stupid, I… um… I’m sorry I made you wait. I’m uh…” They glance around and take a deep breath, but Maggie had used their pronouns without hesitation and without any reluctance, and she still wanted to go out with them – go out? were they going out? did this count as going out? – and it feels so good to still, maybe, be wanted, and they want to talk, to share, so badly… “I’m not used to my uh… to my binder yet, it’s uh… I’m still not used to things like uh… hopping out of windows and stuff.”

Maggie grins and nods, giving Alex another once-over with her eyes. “Well, it’s good self-care: you’re not supposed to be all breathless with them on anyway, right?”

“Gonna be hard to be around you while I wear it then,” Alex blurts out softly without thinking, without considering, and Maggie’s breath hitches, and Alex’s face flushes.

“I’m sorry, that was forward, I just meant – “

“No. No, Danvers, I…” She realizes there are tears in her eyes and she’s not quite sure why. She clears her throat and she forces down a gulp. “Where do you wanna go? On campus, off? There’s this pizza joint a few blocks off the SU that I like. Do you like pizza?”

“Isn’t it kinda the law?” Alex chuckles, and starts walking.

Maggie falls into step, and after a quiet moment, Alex offers their arm out for Maggie to hold onto.

“Oh, a gentlehuman,” Maggie laughs, accepting their arm. She looks up at Alex with soft eyes. “Is there a word you prefer? Something less gendered, more?”

“Context,” Alex shrugs. “Right now?” They glance down at Maggie, at her leather jacket and tight jeans and gorgeous, gorgeous hair. “Gentleman would be just fine. I mean, unless you… you’ve only dated girls before? Not that this is a date, I mean – “

“It’s not?” Something’s dancing in Maggie’s eyes, something a lot like that confidence she’d had in her walk when she’d first gotten off her bike. But this is less affected, less defensive. This? This is happiness. This is hope.

“Is it? I mean, do you want it to be? If – I mean, I know it’s not how dates typically happen – “
“What, you mean sitting with a girl on your windowsill, getting egged on by your roommate, and then taking the girl on a walk to a pizza place off campus? That’s not your typical MO, Danvers?”

Alex laughs, and Maggie grins.

“I don’t have an… I mean, I don’t usually – we just met, I don’t want you to think I’m trying to…”

“To what?”

Alex shrugs, stiffening as a group of frat boys laughs their way past them. They glance down at Maggie, whose face is suddenly steel, and Alex decides they like her even more than they already did. They put their arm over her shoulder and pull her closer to their body protectively.

The boys pass, and Alex shifts their arm, unsure of what to do.

“Is that okay?”

Maggie nods with a tight throat and a throbbing heart. Alex keeps their arm around her shoulder.

“You said you’re new here. New to cities. I told you I’d look out for you. I don’t want you to… to think I want anything in return.”

“Except maybe a date,” Maggie deadpans, but she’s smiling and her dimples ease Alex’s worry.

They lapse into a surprisingly comfortable silence, taking in the campus, taking in the football game on one side of the quad, the class being held outside on the other.

“Why would you want to?” Maggie asks after a while.

“Want to what?”

“Look out for me.”

Alex shrugs again. “You don’t seem like you need it. Looking out for. But everyone should have someone. It’s lonely otherwise.”

“Yes,” Maggie says after a long moment, and her tone tells Alex she’s not responding to their comment about loneliness.

“Yes what?” they ask, furrowed brow and nervous heart.

“Yes, this is a date, Danvers,” Maggie grins, and Alex can practically hear Lucy whooping from all the way across campus, can practically hear Kara’s excited squeals when they call her later tonight.

And all these things?

Make them feel like they’re flying.

Alex’s Nightmares, Kara’s Comfort (post 2x19)

Prompt from @youngjusticeimaginesus -- “a post rescue scene where Kara has to wake Alex up and comfort her after she has a nightmare”

She swears she’s fine.

She swears it wasn’t that big a deal anyway.

She swears that she doesn’t need any time off, that she doesn’t need any special attention, because she’s fine, she’s fine, she’s fine.

Kara knows better.

Maggie knows better.

So neither of them let her sleep alone.

And, truth be told, neither of them can sleep without her, anyway.

Maggie’s not sleeping much, period.

Even with Alex in her arms, even with Kara on the other side of the bed, on the other side of Alex.

Kara can tell because every night, she can see the faint glint that is the nightlight – all three of them need a nightlight, now – reflecting off of Maggie’s open eyes, staring up at Alex’s face with her head on Alex’s chest.

Feeling her heartbeat. Listening to her heartbeat.

Because she can’t hear it like Kara can unless she puts her head on Alex’s chest.

Alex’s heartbeat is the only rhythm that can coax Maggie to sleep. Sometimes.

Kara knows because she isn’t sleeping much herself.

But it’s a little easier on her body than it is on Maggie’s.

Yellow sun and all.

So one night, when Maggie’s slipped off of Alex’s chest, completely unconscious in what Kara estimates to be the first solid sleep she’s had in upwards of a week, Kara is awake and Maggie isn’t when Alex twitches.

When Alex twitches and when Alex murmurs and when Alex’s smooth, deep breaths become ragged, pained gasps.
“Alex,” Kara whispers, grabbing her trembling shoulders and trying to rouse her out of her nightmare. Out of her hell. “Alex.”

Alex’s eyes shoot open before’s fully conscious, and for a moment, she’s gasping for that last centimeter of air; for a moment, she’s not in her bedroom, she’s hanging onto that fence, she’s breathing what can’t be her last breath, but what will be, will be, because she knows Maggie and Kara are coming for her, but she knows they’re coming too late, and god she doesn’t want them to have to see her dead, not like this, not like this, and god she doesn’t want to be dead, there’s too much more to do, and god this hurts, why didn’t anyone tell her how much dying would fucking hurt –

“Alex.”

“Kara?” she asks, because she really doesn’t know, because the last time she heard Kara’s voice, she couldn’t see her. The last time she heard Kara’s voice, that tank was filling with water.

“Hey, yeah, it’s me, hey. You’re okay, Alex, you were dreaming.”

She looks around wildly, around her bedroom, down to her other side at Maggie’s sleeping form, back up to Kara’s sad, sad eyes.

“I’m sorry,” she mutters, still trying to catch her breath, but Kara just strokes her hair and shakes her head.

“You have nothing to apologize for, Alex.” Her voice is soft and her voice is home, and Alex grabs hold of her hands because she and Maggie did get there in time, they did, they did, they did.

“Do you wanna talk about it?” Kara asks, and for a brief, brief moment, Alex feels like she did when she was coming out. How long ago was that? Her brain still feels foggy and her lungs still feel like they’re on fire.

Alex gestures Kara toward her, back to laying down inside of leaning up on her elbow, and Kara takes her fully into her arms.

Like they did when they were kids, and Kara would have nightmares about Krypton. About her parents. About fire and about explosions and about that random kid she studied with as a small child that she never thinks about, but who is, like everyone else she’d ever known, dead.

Like they did when they were kids, except the nightmare is Alex’s now, and Kara is holding Alex instead of the other way around.

Either way, they fit perfectly together.

Kara kisses her hair and hears Alex’s heartbeat calm. Only slightly, but that’s something.

“Have I said thank you enough?” Alex whispers, and Kara furrows her brow.

“Alex, you don’t have anything to – “

“No, I mean, I would die for you over and over and over again, Kara, that’s not a problem, I just… I’d rather live for you. Thank you for making sure I can.”

Kara swallows and her eyes burn and she pulls Alex even closer to her.

“I don’t know how I’d ever live with myself if we didn’t get to you in time.”
Alex tilts her head back so she can look up into Kara’s eyes. “You would be fine, Kara. You would keep being Kara Danvers, and you would keep being Supergirl, and you would keep being the hero that inspires people and saves people and – “ Her voice breaks, and Kara’s chest racks with a single sob.

“I can’t lose you, Alex.”

“You won’t.”

“I almost did.”

“Hey, hey… I’m right here.”

Kara scoffs and dries her tears with hands that are infinitely less gentle than they are when they brush away her sister’s tears.

“No, you had a nightmare, Alex, I’m supposed to be comforting you – “

“How about we can comfort each other?”

Kara smiles softly, and she sighs, and she clings to her sister because she’s safe, safe, safe. Alive. Here.

Maggie’s Nightmare, Alex’s Comfort (post 2x19)

Prompt from @sanverscorp – “Maggie having a really bad nightmare about not being able to save Alex or something and she wakes up crying and Alex assures her she’s right here :)

Her “hey you” had been the best words Maggie had ever heard.

Because staring out the window, Maggie had been seeing all the ways they could have been just a few minutes later. All the ways they could have been just a few minutes earlier.

Because later, and Alex would be… no. She’s fine, she’s fine, she’s fine. Right?

Because earlier, and maybe Maggie would hate herself a little bit less, because she couldn’t imagine the pain, the terror, the…

Because she would never get the image of Alex’s body, floating there, out of her mind, so she can’t imagine how Alex can possibly forgive her for getting there so late, so literally last second, so…

The “hey you” had brought her back. Had roused her from her waking nightmare. Had brought her into Alex’s arms.

And then Alex had asked if she was okay. Of course Alex asked.

And Maggie brushed her off.

Brushed her off because she was the one whose lungs had burned, she was the one who’d sliced open her own body with a credit card, for crying out loud, she was the one who’d almost…

Brushed her off because it’s whatever, because Alex is fine now, right, because Alex needs all the attention, all the care, not Maggie.

Maggie, who almost didn’t rescue her in time.

So she brushes Alex off, because Alex has suppressed her own feelings, her own needs, for far too long, and Maggie will be damned if she lets her do that now, of all times.

But all that dedication, all that determination, can’t stop the nightmares.

Alex is having a lot of her own, lately – more than usual, anyway – but when she’s having a dreamless sleep, she’s out cold, and Maggie has to put her head on her chest to feel it rise, feel it fall. Hear Alex’s heartbeat.

But it’s good, too, because when Alex sleeps that hard, she can’t hear Maggie’s nightmares. Can’t hear the aftermath.

Can’t hear Maggie’s sobs, her desperate gasping for breath.
Her wishing she’d been the one kidnapped, not Alex, not Alex, because god, hasn’t that woman been through enough?

She’s been through enough – more than enough – so when Maggie wakes in a cold sweat from a dream, a dream where Alex is floating, floating, but she doesn’t gasp for breath when Kara punches the glass, doesn’t move, doesn’t react, doesn’t gasp back to life, back to herself, back to the woman Maggie’s in love with, back to the woman Maggie is supposed to share all her firsts with, doesn’t respond to Maggie’s shouts and her CPR and her desperate, desperate pleas… when Maggie wakes, she can’t tell which parts of her face are covered in sweat and which parts of her face are covered in tears.

She doesn’t want to wake her – god, she doesn’t want to wake her – but she needs to see her chest rise and fall, needs to feel her breathing, breathing, breathing.

She turns desperately in bed, her own chest racking with violent sobs, and Alex gives her more than deep breaths. Alex cracks open her eyes, and Alex sits up immediately, because Maggie’s eyes are wild and her face is contorted and soaked and Alex knows.

“Come here,” she says without asking for an explanation, because she doesn’t need one. She holds out her arms, but Maggie refuses them, refuses them, because she’s the one who’s supposed to be taking care of Alex, she’s the one who’s supposed to be –

“Maggie, I’m right here. I’m right here, please – please, let me hold you, let me – “

“No, you don’t get to do that, Danvers! You don’t get to make like you’re fine, like everything’s fine, because it’s not fine, Alex! Nothing’s fine. You almost died, I almost lost you, you had to cut into your own skin with that damn credit card and now I panic and almost throw up every single time I’m at the damn grocery store and pay with my bank card because he tortured you, Danvers, you, not me, so you don’t get to comfort me, I’m not the one who gets to be comforted, you understand me, I’m not the one who almost…”

She breaks and she collapses and for a long, long moment, she’s the one without breath, gasping for air like each time might be her last, and she’s clinging to Alex helplessly, helplessly, because Alex’s arms are strong and they’re warm and Alex is alive, alive, alive.

“Maggie, I’m here. I’m here and hey, listen to me, hey, hey, hey.” Maggie looks up and her lips tremble and her eyes are bloodshot, and Alex kisses her face over, and over, and over.

Because this is why she held on.

“Maggie, he didn’t just torture me. He didn’t just stalk me. That was both of us, babe. Kara, too. He put you both in an impossible position, Maggie, and he – I wasn’t the only one, Maggie. You’re allowed to have feelings, you’re allowed to react. You’re allowed to have nightmares, babe. If it had been you, I…” She shudders and the only thing that stops her from starting to hyperventilate is Maggie’s hand on her chest, her lips on her jawline.

“We’re in this together, okay? We held on together, and we’re going to figure out how to keep living together, okay babe? I love you, Maggie. I love you, and that means we’re gonna do this together. Okay?”

“Say it again?” Maggie whispers, because she’ll never forgive herself for not letting Alex say it earlier, because what if, what if, what if.

Alex smiles and kisses her lips slow and tender and long.
“I love you, Maggie Sawyer. I love you, I love you, I love you, I love you.”

A fresh wave of tears spring into Maggie’s eyes – to match the ones swimming in Alex’s – and she can’t help the smile on her face, the leaping in her heart.

“I love you too, Alex Danvers. I love you so damn much.”

There will be more nightmares. Too many.

There will be more cold sweats and more screams.

They both know.

They both know, but tonight?

Tonight, there will only be more I love yous.

And all those future nights, with terrors and tortures and tremors?

They’ll get through those together.

Because I love you, I love you, I love you.
Chapter 376

Chapter Summary

cassiebones asked:

How many girls do you think Alex accidentally flirted with before she realized she was gay? Like she was SO flirting with Maggie before she realized but like how often do you think that happened and she just thought she was being nice or whatever? Fucking oblivious gay nerd.

She’s six and the girl’s brothers had left her all alone in the sand as they dashed into the ocean, yelping and shoving and splashing each other as they barrel deeper into the water.

The girl looks lonely and the girl looks listless, and Alex knows the feeling.

“You don’t like the ocean?” she asks without preamble, because six year old social code permits so much more direct communication than older codes will.

The girl turns to her and sighs. Her face is pretty, even when it’s sad, and Alex bites the inside of her cheek. “I’ll just slow my brothers down,” she says, and Alex holds out an open hand.

“You won’t slow me down."

They take each wave together, the girl never letting go of Alex’s hand, and Alex never wanting her to.

Eliza, watching from their balcony overlooking the beach, is proud that her shy little Alexandra is finally making a friend.

She’s ten and the pretty girl from homeroom has the best science fair poster in the whole lunchroom.

Except for Alex’s, of course, but Alex doesn’t mention that when she tells her that it looks great, and how did she get such clear images of a monthly progression of sunspots from a homemade pinhole camera?

Alex thinks the girl blushes, but it must be because she’s shy, or maybe she doesn’t like talking in such a crowded, bustling space. Or it’s Alex’s imagination.

Either way, she decides that the best course of action is to keep complimenting the girl, because she deserves it, and if Alex’s life as a professional ten year old nerd is any indication, the girl can use all the compliments she can get.

She’s fourteen, and her newest surf instructor is eighteen, and Alex has never been nervous before classes before, but she almost throws up each time, now, because what if she messes up, and what if her instructor decides that Alex has only been accelerated to an advanced class by luck, and she demotes her back down to surfing with the other fourteen year olds, and –

“Nice job, Danvers!” she calls, and Alex nearly spills off her board at the way her heart leaps, at the way she says her name.

When her boyfriend picks her up after class – her instructor’s boyfriend, not Alex’s, because who would ever want to date her, anyway? – Alex stands a little bit straighter, gets her instructor to laugh a little bit louder.

“Make sure he takes you somewhere nice: you only deserve the best places, you know?” she tells her, and she thinks she’s smooth, thinks she’s putting the college boy in his place, even though she’s not quite sure why she wants to.

She’s sixteen and Vicky Donahue is always on her mind. And that’s okay – they’re best friends, and best friends are supposed to always be on each other’s minds, right? – and Vicky is nice to Kara and Vicky smells so damn good and Alex wants to be just like her and she usually loves school but god the days before the nights she gets to sleep over at Vicky’s are horribly, horribly long.

Because Vicky’s mother keeps offering to set up an air mattress in Vicky’s room, and Alex keeps telling her, “It’s alright, Mrs. Donahue, you don’t have to go out of your way, I don’t mind the tight space, honest.” Because it is a tight space, sharing Vicky’s bed, but it means that Vicky’s body is close to hers, and best friends snuggle all the time, right?

And friends play dress up, too, even in high school, right, and when Vicky goes through her parents’ closets and tosses her top off without thinking to try on something new, Alex gulps extra hard and she blushes like she’s Kara and she stammers but she obeys when Vicky tells her to come zip her up, and she nearly kisses the back of her neck because friends are affectionate with each other, right, and she’s sincere when she tells her that she’s beautiful, that she’s the prettiest girl in the whole school, the whole town, and Vicky gives her something of a strange look, and she turns her back to Alex before she changes again.

She’s nineteen and she doesn’t have much use for English class, but that girl who sits across from her makes great drawings in her notebook and Alex has to tell her, right, because who doesn’t want to be complimented?

“Hey – I really like your uh… art.”

The girl giggles. “They’re just doodles.”

“No, but they’re really good! You’re really good.”

The girl shrugs, her eyes lingering on Alex’s face a beat too long. But not long enough.

She starts doodling for Alex, nudging her and edging her notebook toward her, sometimes ripping out the sketches and gifting them to a spluttering Alex. She keeps every one of them and she takes them out during long days in the lab, and she chews on the inside of her cheek, and she fantasizes about what the girl’s boyfriend probably likes to do to her in bed, because some of the doodles are a bit sexual, so it’s only natural for the mind to wander, right?

She’s twenty-three and she’s partying way too hard, because college was too easy and grad school is easy but what’s not easy is Eliza’s voice in the back of her head, is the constant guilt of having gone off to Stanford without Kara, is the constant confusion and loneliness because she can get everything else right, but not dating, not men, and Eliza is starting to ask uncomfortable questions.

She goes home with men with clumsy hands and overeager tongues, but she dances with women with scintillating touches and vodka on their breath. She smiles and sometimes, she winks, and sometimes, she puts her hands on hips that aren’t hers, and sometimes, her blood rushes through her veins so fast she can barely breathe because her body will go home with a guy, but her mind will stay here on the dance floor.

She’s twenty-seven and it’s been too long, and that’s okay, because the DEO keeps her busy, the DEO keeps her focused. The DEO saved her life.

But she’s twenty-seven and Lucy Lane walks in and Kara isn’t wrong about how nice she smells and how smart she is and how date-able she is, but she’s the enemy because of who her father is and she’s the enemy because of who her ex-boyfriend-sort-of-still-boyfriend is and she’s the enemy because she almost sends Alex and J’on’nn off to Cadmus, but suddenly she’s not the enemy because she rescues them and fights for them and she throws everything on the line for them and Alex thinks of that thing she felt during her interrogation, correcting Lucy from calling her Alexandra, Lucy’s piercing eyes when she called out that Alex was lying, Lucy’s uncomfortable shifting when what’s his face was going on yet another xenophobic rant, and Alex can’t think about any of this now because now, she’s on the run, and sure, she’ll always have Lucy to thank for that, but later, later, later.

She’s twenty-eight and it’s her crime scene, dammit, not some arrogant detective’s with gorgeous eyes and gorgeous hair and a confident smirk and god, god, god, how is she that smart, how is anyone that sharp?

She’s twenty-eight and it’s innocent, it’s pool, they’re friends, and of course she’s not jealous when she says she’s got a hot date, because sure, whatever woman has a hot date with Maggie Sawyer is probably the luckiest woman in the world, but Alex is just excited to finally meet someone that can go toe-to-toe with her, that can challenge her, that can change her. And if her stomach flips a little bit when she saunters off in those jeans and that tank top to that date, it’s just because she’d hoped maybe they could go for a drink, because it’s been so long since Alex has had a friend outside of work.

She’s twenty-eight and she’s up all night, because she’s twenty-eight and she’s falling in love. In gay love. Lesbian love.

God, god, god, how has she not seen it before?

She’s falling in love with a woman, and memories are exploding out of her like water bursting out of a dam, and she’s terrified and she’s confused and she’s never felt more… herself.

And Maggie Sawyer is the reason why.
anonymous asked:

I need an alex relapsing due to everything with her father and maybe her past and maggie being there for her because I relapsed myself :/ being an alcoholic is fun....

She’s thrown things and she’s screamed and she’s stormed out of the apartment and she’s wanted to, wanted to, god, she’s wanted to.

But she hasn’t had a drink in three months and fourteen days.

Three months and fourteen days because Maggie Sawyer noticed. And Maggie Sawyer cared.

But she almost gets catapulted across the galaxy, and her sister blows out her powers saving her, saving them all – again – and her father says he’d understand if she shot him, and she hates herself because part of her wants to, wants to, because how dare he tell her that he participated in a genocidal plan for her, for her, for her.

Isn’t Eliza already blaming her for enough? For how didn’t you see this, Alexandra, I thought you were supposed to be trained for this sort of thing and how could you have gone in there alone, Alexandra, I know you’re powerful, but you’re not your sister, dear, you need to accept that you have limitations, for she wouldn’t have had to blow out her powers saving all of you if you had thought this through more rationally, Alexandra.

She kicks at the couch and she heads downstairs.

Heads downstairs, because Maggie had helped her get rid of all the alcohol in her apartment – and god, it had been a lot – but Maggie can’t close the liquor shops around her apartment.

Heads downstairs, because the liquor store is closer than the closest meeting.

And Maggie’s at work.

And Alex is a grown woman.

A grown woman whose father abandoned her, whose father participated in a genocidal forced deportation plan in her name, whose father was everything and whose father was nothing, nothing, nothing, like the man she’s spent all these years agonizing over. Wanting to be like.

Alex is a grown woman, and doesn’t she fight hard enough, and doesn’t she deserve just one, just one, because without anything, she can’t. Without anything, there’s no dulling her heightened senses and there’s no dulling her hellish agony.

Just one.

She pays in cash and she’s more than halfway through the damn bottle before Maggie’s tentative knock on her door. She chuckles wryly to herself, because she always knew she’d be a disappointment to Maggie.

Always knew she’d fail her.

She staggered to the door, a masochistic grin on her face, because let’s see how far ride or die really goes.

Maggie takes one look at her and Maggie doesn’t blink and Maggie doesn’t yell and Maggie doesn’t even let her face fall.

“Alex,” is all she whispers, and she stares at her like she’s never loved anyone more.

Alex doesn’t realize that her lip is trembling, doesn’t realize that her body is shaking, until she’s collapsed into Maggie’s arms, until she’s racking with sobs and almost toppling them both over, but Maggie’s stance is stronger than Alex’s worst self-hate, and Maggie calls her sweetie when she gasps out how sorry she is, and Maggie tells her she’s wrong when she moans out what a failure she is, and Maggie tells her she’s so brave when she sobs out how she’s ruined all of her progress, ruined them, ruined herself, ruined everything.

Failed everything.

Everyone.

Again.

“Alex, you’re allowed. You’re allowed to relapse, and you’re allowed to still love yourself. Is tonight ideal, babe? No. Did you mess up? Yeah. But you know what, sweetie? You’re doing something so brave, so hard, so terrifying, and you’re doing so good. You’re allowed to be human and you’re allowed to make mistakes. Because you know what, Danvers? You can slip up and still be worthy of love. You can slip up and still be perfect. You can slip up and still make it better. I promise you. Okay? I’m not going anywhere. I’m not. I promise.”

“I wouldn’t blame you if you did.”

“I’m not going anywhere, Alex. Understand me? Ride or die includes relapses. It’s part of the deal, babe.”

“But I failed you.”

“No. You didn’t hurt me, Alex. You’re not being abusive to anyone but yourself, babe, and we can work with that. Okay? I’m not going anywhere, Alex. Unless you want me to.”

Alex grabs at the back of her shirt and pulls her closer, closer, closer.

“Please stay.”

“Of course, Alex. Of course I will.”

Chapter Summary

Hi Cap, I know you already wrote something a bit like this but I tend to crawl back into my shell when I'm upset and sometimes I'm scared nobody will ever make the effort to crawl in there with me when I need them the most... Does that make sense? Sorry for burdening you!

Tagging @smolsawyer just for like… a fun sense of spite ;)

She doesn’t like talking about herself.

Alex knows this.

Anyone who’s ever met her knows this.

And when she withdraws – which, especially these days, is pretty often – Alex will crawl right in after her.

Alex finds her each time she runs.

Sometimes, she literally runs.

All across National City, in her jogging gear, in the pouring rain. Alex will follow close behind, watching her, caring for her, making sure she runs safe, making sure she runs careful.

Sometimes, she drives.

Drives her motorcycle all the way out of National City, all the way into the desert, and she rips off her helmet, and she tosses her head back, and she screams.

She doesn’t know how Alex knows, but she’s always waiting up at home with a steaming mug of healing tea and warm, warm arms to crash down into.

Sometimes, she runs without actually going anywhere.

Sometimes, they’re on the couch and they’re watching some old movie or other, and Maggie just… goes away. Alex can’t articulate how she knows – maybe it’s something about the pattern of Maggie’s breath, or maybe it’s something about the way her body stiffens, the way she forgets to laugh at her favorite parts of the film, the way her eyes are staring at the screen without seeing it at all – but she knows. She always knows.

And she’ll whisper to her and she’ll ask if she can put her arms around her and she’ll tell her she’s beautiful and she’ll tell her she’s worth it and she’ll tell her she doesn’t have to run, because she’s right here, right here, right here, and she’s not going anywhere.

So usually, it’s Alex that finds her, that puts in the effort to know when she’s depressed. To know when she’s anxious. To know when she’s on the edge of breaking down.

But then Alex is away in Geneva, and she calls every night, and she texts every couple of hours, but it’s not the same.

It’s not the same, and Alex’s friends have invited Maggie out with them, and she agreed before Alex left, but now? Now, the idea of going out just seems funny.

So she bails.

Bails on James and Winn and Kara.

Bails because her couch is comfortable, and her couch is safe, and her couch doesn’t expect her to laugh and be in a good mood and be clever and be sociable. Her couch just wants her presence, and she can barely even give that.

She doesn’t know that James and Winn and Kara also don’t expect anything from her.

She doesn’t know, because – aside from Alex, and she’s still getting used to that, still trying to believe in that – no one has ever demanded… nothing… from her before.

But when she sends them the text that she’s gonna stay in tonight, she doesn’t expect them to care.

Doesn’t expect them to notice, because it was sweet of them to invite her, really, but it was probably just as a favor to Alex.

It was probably a relief to them that she wasn’t coming.

She didn’t really fit in with them, anyway.

She didn’t really fit in with anyone, anyway.

So she’s startled when there’s a soft knock at her door.

Startled when she opens it and it’s James bearing DVDs and Winn bearing root beer and Kara bearing box upon box upon box of pizza.

“We texted you back when you said you weren’t coming, but you didn’t answer,” Kara says by way of greeting.

“And if you don’t want us here, we can totally take all this delicious pizza and root beer and all these vintage, can’t-find-em-on-Netflix DVDs and go to Kara’s place,” Winn offers.

“But if you do want us here, you don’t have to say anything, and you don’t have to laugh at Winn’s terrible jokes. Heck, you could even just go to sleep. But we thought it might be nice to not… be alone,” James tells her, soft, studying her face like it’s a work of art. Because, to him, it is.

She fights down tears because she is still getting somewhat comfortable – somewhat – with crying in front of Alex. But in front of her sister and their friends?

She fights the tears back down. Hard.

“Did Alex send you or something?” she asks, and Kara shakes her head.

“No, we just… we wanted to make sure you were okay. And we wanted to spend time with you. But if you don’t want – “
But Maggie is stepping back and Maggie’s heart is swelling and Maggie’s face still doesn’t remember how to smile, but she thinks her heart might be, slowly, figuring it out.

“Get in here and quit letting the pizza get cold, Little Danvers,” she says, and though she can’t return any of their three brilliant smiles, they don’t seem to mind.

They just seem to want… her.

No matter what state she’s in, no matter how solid her shell is, no matter how hard she’s made it for them to connect with her.

And it makes her think that maybe, just maybe, she might be worth the effort after all.

Hey mum. I’ve had such a bad week. My cat died, and it’s just been going downhill from there. Your fics give me life. I know you’re not taking any prompts and you’re swamped but I could really use like.. some drama that ends well? Could we have a big serious Sanvers fight and then one of them starts to walk off but then stops and they have make up sex? Like angst, fluff and smut all in the same chapter? This would make my day, I really need the pick me up. I love you ! <3

She’s pacing and she’s fuming and she’s refusing to look at Alex, because Kara got those puppy eyes from somewhere, and that somewhere was her big sister, and Maggie is really not in the mood to be handled.

“You didn’t even try, Danvers! You didn’t even try to get in touch with any of us, you just strolled on in there on your own – “

“What happened to ride or die, Maggie, you said – “

“Yeah, I know what I said, Alex, but the thing about that is you gotta give me the opportunity to ride with you in the first place! I knew where you were going, Alex, I understood why you had to do it alone. But this? This was ridiculous, Danvers, this was reckless and careless and just – you know what, whatever, I can’t stay here, I gotta go – “

“Maggie, stop.”

Maggie ignores her, throat too tight to speak and pride too strong to turn around.

“Maggie, please.” Alex’s voice breaks, and Maggie knows when she’s being manipulated, and she knows when she’s being handled, but the break in Alex’s voice? The break is real, it’s genuine. It’s not meant to be manipulative. It just… is.

“What.” She doesn’t turn around, but she does stop walking, her hand on the doorknob.

“You wanna know why I went into that factory alone, without backup and without telling anyone where I was going?”

Maggie turns around, her arms crossed over her chest.

“That’d be nice, Danvers, yeah.”

Alex takes a deep breath and she sighs and she bites the inside of her cheek and she steps closer to Maggie.

“Rick Malverne.”

Maggie stiffens.
“What about him?”

“He was stalking us. He was doing it from somewhere. He had equipment somewhere. I had Winn track it. I went to destroy it. To destroy everything he’d done.”

Maggie’s arms are still crossed, but her eyes soften, and her voice does, too.

“Alone.”

“I didn’t want to bring those… memories back for you. You still have nightmares, Maggie.”

Maggie uncrosses her arms and she heaves a frustrated sigh.

“So do you, Alex.”

“I know. It just… felt like it was my thing to do.”

Maggie bites her lip and Maggie nods slowly and Maggie looks up at Alex and cautiously, tentatively, frames her face with her hands.

“I can’t lose you, Alex. Your thing to do or not, I… I need you to be more careful, I… I can’t lose you, you understand me? I can’t. I won’t.”

The tears in her eyes are forged from steel, and her voice was born in a volcano.

“Understood,” Alex backs down, because Maggie Sawyer with that gleam in her eyes, that death, that desire, that raw need to have Alex alive, to have Alex with her, to have Alex here, to just… have Alex?

That will be her surrender every time.

Maggie hears the lilt in her voice, sees the spark flash across her eyes, and she lowers her gaze to Alex’s lips.

“Understood, is it?” she rasps, and Alex nods softly, eyes wide and heart pounding.

“You still want me to stay, Danvers?”

“I want you to do more than stay, Maggie.”

Maggie’s eyes flash and Alex gulps in anticipation.

“What kind of more, Danvers?”

“What kind of more do you want?” She shifts so her hips press up against Maggie’s, and Maggie hisses.

“Get on your knees, Alex.” She says it like a statement, like a command, but heat tears through Alex, because she knows, really, that it’s a question, that Alex can say no, that Alex can always say no, and that knowledge? That makes her want to get down on her knees for Maggie Sawyer even more than she already wanted to.

“Understood,” she whispers, and Maggie practically growls as she rushes over to grab a pillow off the couch. She might want to see Alex on her knees for her, but she can’t stand the idea of Alex in any kind of discomfort. Alex smiles and Maggie leans down to kiss her forehead.
“What do you want next, Maggie?” she asks, wanting to make it up to her, to make everything up to her, because god, she only wanted to make things better, she didn’t want to scare her, and because god, the look in Maggie’s eyes is one of the sexiest things she’s ever, ever seen.

“You wanna go down on me, Danvers?”

Alex squeaks and nods desperately because god, god, god, she does.

“Can I?” she asks, her fingers raising to the zip of Maggie’s jeans.

Maggie licks her lips and nods and it only takes Alex a few moments to strip Maggie of her jeans, of her boy shorts, to shift so Maggie can put one leg up over Alex’s shoulder, back against the door, foot resting on a nearby chair, and Alex takes a long breath and a long look up at Maggie’s face before giving her what she wants.

“Tell me again?” she asks.

“Suck my clit, Alex,” Maggie breathes, and Alex obeys.

Maggie’s head tosses back against the door, and she doesn’t care, doesn’t care, doesn’t care, as she buries her fingers in Alex’s hair for leverage, for balance, for pressure, bringing her mouth closer to her body, bringing her tongue deeper inside her as Alex shifts wickedly between her clit and her opening, between licking her and sucking on her and fucking her with her tongue.

“Danvers,” she gasps raggedly, and Alex screams into her clit. “That okay? You good?” she asks, and Alex nods into Maggie’s clit, and she thrusts her own hips futilely, because god, god, god, this is one of the hottest things they’ve ever done.

“I need to be inside you,” Maggie moans, and Alex whines, because she wants it, wants it, wants it, but she doesn’t want to get off her knees, doesn’t want to move her lips from Maggie’s clit.

“Oh, you like this, Danvers?”

Alex nods and Alex whines and Alex looks up at her with wide eyes, seeking permission to continue.

“Then keep going until you need something else, Alex,” Maggie tells her.

“Understood,” Alex whispers, and buries her face back between her legs, grabbing at her ass with her hands and moaning at the taste of her, at the way she drips onto her tongue, onto her lips, onto her chin.

“Color, Mags?” she pulls her lips away to ask, because she’d told her she could keep going, but Maggie’s the one balancing on one leg with her back pressed against the front door.

“Green, Alex,” she gasps, hands still tangled in Alex’s hair, and Alex asks at regular intervals until Maggie cums with uneven thrusts and pleasantly painful fingers tugging at her hair and Alex’s last name bursting out of her lips like a prayer.

Alex holds her by the hips to keep her balanced, to keep her safe, and she helps her bring her leg down, down, slowly, slowly, her knees cracking slightly as she stands, wiping her mouth on her shoulder and pulling Maggie close into her chest.

“You good?” she asks, and Maggie is still too breathless to speak, but she nods.
“Still want me to fuck you, Alex?” she asks after a long, long moment, and Alex chuckles.

“Can you even right now, Sawyer?”

“Is that a challenge?”

“Do you want it to be?”

They’re laughing and they’re teasing and they’re hugging and they’re kissing and suddenly Maggie’s eyes sober and when she frames Alex’s face with her hands, it’s with love and it’s with tenderness and it’s with something much more than just sexual need.

“Don’t you ever do anything like that again, Alex.”

“Kneel for you and lick you until you cum in my mouth?”

Maggie chuckles and Alex is relieved to see her smile again. “Not that. You can do that… you can do that whenever you damn well please. No, I mean… I can’t lose you, Alex. No more unnecessary risks. Please?”

Alex stares down at her long and hard and steady.

“Anything for you, Maggie. Even if it’ll totally wreck my reputation.”

Maggie’s dimples shine, and there’s both laughter and heady desire in her voice when she speaks next.

“I can think of something else about you to wreck, Danvers.”

“Can you now?”

She shrieks with laughter as Maggie kisses her and tugs her back to their bed, finishing what they started very much on her mind.
Chapter 380

Chapter Summary

anonymous asked:

Hey could you like write something about Maggie being jealous because someone is flirting with Alex or something? Btw you are so talented, keep up the good work! ❤

She’s never thought of herself as a particularly jealous person.

If you’re not used to having something, she figures, you get used to it.

And she’s not used to having good things.

So when good things start to slip away from her? Jealousy isn’t exactly what occurs to her.

But then she fell in love with Alex Danvers.

It wasn’t hard.

Falling in love with her.

Well, it was.

It was because it was terrifying because Alex was good and Alex was devoted and Alex was kind and Alex was trusting and Alex didn’t deserve someone like… her.

So it was hard, but it also wasn’t, because Alex Danvers makes it easy to fall in love with her.

And Maggie apparently isn’t the only one.

Because there’s a new girl in town and she’s gorgeous and she’s everything Maggie isn’t – she’s tall and she’s blonde and she’s high femme and she’s easygoing and she’s funny and she’s smooth and she’s confident and, the crappiest part of all, she actually seems really flipping nice – and, of course, this girl is flirting with Alex.

And Alex?

Alex is lapping it up.

She’s laughing a little too loudly and she’s leaning in a little too close and she’s buying her another beer.

“You okay?”

Maggie jumps, but it’s just James, just James, standing over her shoulder, his eyes in the same place Maggie’s are – across the bar, at the pool table, at her new girlfriend flirting away with this beautiful woman who obviously, obviously, obviously wants her.

“Yeah. Course I am, Olsen, why wouldn’t I – “
Alex bursts into laughter again, and Maggie doesn’t even bother to finish her sentence.

James sighs. “You know she’s new at all this, Maggie.”

“Right. Which is exactly what I was afraid of. That the second someone else comes along and shows interest – and who wouldn’t show interest in Alex, right? – she’d just – “

“No. No, that’s not what I meant – “

“I’m not slut shaming her or anything, James, I’m saying, I get it. It’s perfectly understandable for her to want to be with more than one person, it – “

“No, Maggie, stop. That’s not what I meant at all. I meant. She’s new at this, and she doesn’t really know what flirting is.”

Maggie rolls her eyes up at him, piercing him with the skepticism in her eyes.

“Maggie, you guys have told us the story. How many different ways did Alex flirt with you before she realized she was doing it? And anyway, Maggie, that girl? Look at Alex’s eyes. Really look.”

“I’d rather not look deeply into my girlfriend’s eyes while she’s flirting with a beautiful woman.”

“You’re a beautiful woman, Maggie. And trust me. Look at her.”

Maggie sighs and does as she’s told, because there’s something in James’s voice that doesn’t sound consoling. It just sounds… right.

“She’s happy to be making a friend. To be out of the DEO, to be having fun. She didn’t do that before she met you, unless it was with Kara. She’s happy, but really look at her, Maggie.”

And Alex chooses that moment to look past the girl she’s flirting with and give Maggie a huge smile, a huge wave. “Come on, babe, how long can it possibly take to grab another round?” she calls, and Maggie holds up one finger at her.

“See? See how her eyes changed? She’s having fun, Maggie, but she only wants you. She doesn’t know she’s flirting. She knows a lot of things, Alex Danvers, but not…”

“Girls,” Maggie says with a grin, and James returns it.

“Girls.”

So the next time Alex laughs at this other girl’s jokes, Maggie swallows the jealousy and instead, tosses her arms around Alex’s waist. And Alex leans into her, reaches her hand behind her head, strokes Maggie’s hair, and turns her face to kiss her cheek.

And the next time Alex leans into the girl while she’s laughing, she also leans the other way. Into Maggie’s body. All the way into Maggie’s body. And she kisses her soundly.

By the time she opens her eyes, the other girl has slipped away.

Because listening to Alex talk about her girlfriend the entire time she thought they were flirting was one thing.

Having Alex’s girlfriend actually come by, and watching Alex be all over her, was quite another.

Alex barely notices, and James grins, because Maggie?
Maggie had nothing to be jealous of, after all, and she kisses Alex all the deeper because of it.
Their first order was years ago. He was just a freshman then. In college and at the pizza joint.

There was a loud bang, a louder crash, and an even louder curse that didn’t sound quite like English, or any language he’d ever heard; there was some scrambling, some “no, it’s fine Alex, I’ll get it, just – this stupid box!”, and the door swung open.

A pretty blonde with an enormous, warm smile and rectangular glasses was at the door, cash in hand and slightly disheveled.

“Hi!” she offered brightly, and he held out the two pies with every topping imaginable automatically. This girl was not exactly what he’d pictured when the order was placed, but this job was teaching him a lot about the deceptiveness of appearances.

“Just moving in?” he asks, because he doesn’t have to crane his neck to see the boxes littering the apartment behind her.

“Yeah! My sister’s helping me, but I’m a bit… clumsy sometimes, so…” She adjusts her glasses and chuckles, more to herself than anything, before exchanging two crisp bills for the pizzas.

“If you don’t get in here with those damn pizzas, clumsiness will be the least of your problems, Kara!”

Jessy wonders what her sister looks like, to be able to somehow balance that much humor with that much menace in the same sentence.

He and the girl – Kara, he now knows – exchange a quiet, secret smile, complete with raised eyebrows.

“Keep the change,” she tells him, and it’s not until he’s halfway down the hallway that he realizes she’s tipped him nearly fifty percent.

Their next order, a week or so later, someone else answers the door. Short, straight dark hair, wary eyes. He can tell she’s the type that checks through the peephole before opening the door. But her stance is nothing if not confident.

This must be the sister. Alex, he thinks he remembers Kara shouting.

She doesn’t make small talk, but she, too, tells him to keep the change.

Kara is yelling for Alex about the show starting as the door closes in front of him, and he grins. Must be TV night.

He starts being able to predict why they’re ordering, depending on the time of night, how many toppings, how many pizzas. With beer or without. He starts bragging to his friends about the

It doesn’t matter who answers the door or how red their eyes are or how many voices her hears shouting about Mario Kart in the background. They always tip him absurdly well, and they always – he’s not sure when it starts, or who asked him his name, but it was probably Kara – greet him by his name.

“Jessy with a y! My favorite pizza guy!” Kara will charm him on Game Night Pizza nights.

“Thanks, Jessy,” Alex will grunt on Alex And The Terrible, Horrible, No Good, Very Bad Day Pizza nights.

He’s pretty sure Alex doesn’t live there, but she’s always with Kara.

Except on Alex Is In Geneva Pizza or Alex Is Working Late and Kara Is Lonely and Hungry and Grumpy Pizza nights. He wonders if Alex ever even sleeps at her own place.

Until late one night, when he’s working the counter instead of deliveries, a small woman with gorgeous hair and a leather jacket puts in an order for a pie and a six pack of beer while she’s talking on her phone.

“Hey, M’gann – no, no, I’m fine – yeah, she did a great job patching me up – listen, that’s actually why I’m calling. I can’t get a hold of Kara – do you know if Alex is with her, or at work, or home, or – of, she is? Okay, great, I just wanted to – oh, shut up. Good night. No. I’m hanging up now. Bye. Sorry about that. How much do I owe you?” she redirects to Jessy. She bounces on the balls of her feet and blows air out of her cheeks like she’s nervous about something while he rings her up. No, not nervous. Terrified.

But she, too, tells him to keep the change.

After that, he starts getting delivery orders to Alex’s apartment, too.

The first time she answers an unfamiliar door for him, his heart jumps. “Hey, you actually have a place of your own!”

Alex scowls at him, but she tips him even more than she usually does, so he sees right through it.

The next time he delivers to the older Danvers girl’s address, the woman from the shop answers the door, in an oversized shirt and basketball shorts.

He grins knowingly at her, his heart leaping hard and happy. “Her stuff looks good on you,” he murmurs conspiratorially. “I wear my boyfriend’s stuff all the time, too.”

The cautious, guarded look that crossed her face at his first sentence is replaced by a massive, dimpled smile at his second, and he gets his biggest tip yet.

He adds Late Night Sexy Times with My Girlfriend Made Us Both Hungry Pizza night to the list, but he doesn’t add that category to the pool with his friends at the shop. He feels more protective of the Danvers girls now than ever before.

The next time he sees Alex’s girlfriend – the late night pizza and beer she picked up all those months ago really must have worked – it’s at Kara’s place, and he’d guessed rightly: Game Night Pizza was back in action.
He alternates, now, between Alex’s place and Kara’s, and Alex looks happier than he’s ever seen her, her hair getting curlier and redder and her smile getting easier by the week.

When Kara greets him at the door tonight, he’d put in back at the shop pool for Movie Night Pizza, and he chuckles in part amusement and part disappointment when Kara opens the door and he sees Alex waving an aggressive towel at the smoke detector like it insulted her sister instead of her cooking.

So it’s an Alex Almost Burned The Place Down Pizza night.

He shrugs with a smile. He might have lost tonight’s bet about why the girls were ordering tonight, but they seemed happy – the Danvers sisters and Alex’s girlfriend, whose name, he’s gathered by now, is Maggie – and that is more than enough for Jessy.
They’re freshmen.

They’re freshmen and Alex isn’t sure why, but every time she sees Eliza Wilke, a small flash of... something... floods her veins.

It feels a little like she does when her new little sister shows her the powers she has.

Something like jealousy.

Something like feeling... less.

She’s not sure why – she’s made fast friends with Vicky Donahue, and Vicky’s great, Vicky’s funny and a great bio lab partner and likes to read, so why would Alex care that Eliza Wilke and that Maggie Sawyer girl are always laughing together, are always standing close to each other, are always cracking up about some horror movie special effects, are always together, together, together?

She’s not sure why she cares so much.

It’s not like Maggie Sawyer ignores her or anything.

To the contrary.

The first day Alex walked into school to greet the whispers that accompany getting a new sister overnight – a new sister who doesn’t even seem like she’s from this planet – Maggie comes up to her with a soft smile and an offer to help show New Danvers around.

“Siblings can be rough, Danvers, and you didn’t have that whole nine month thing to prepare. Just find me if you want some space to yourself, to adjust or whatever.”

But then Eliza is tugging Maggie along, tugging Maggie away, and Maggie is looking over her shoulder apologetically and mouthing “let me know” and “sorry” and Alex thinks that it’s maybe, definitely, jealousy.

Because she hears Maggie Sawyer give answers in class.

And they’re always sharp. So sharp they make Alex want to know what goes on in that Sawyer girl’s brain. All the time.

But she can’t, because Maggie Sawyer seems to belong to Eliza Wilke.

Until February 15th, that is.
Until February 15th, when Maggie comes to school with swollen, red eyes and disheveled clothes and a jaw set in fury, set in rage, set in total and utter agony. Set in a perpetual challenge.

The whispers are that she’s lucky her father only sent her to live with an aunt. That he didn’t send her to get fixed, because how disgusting is that? How can any girl ever trust her if she’s just going to try to… ew? How can she ever expect to have any friends? There was always something off about her, anyway.

Alex doesn’t just hear what.

Alex hears why.

Something about a note in Eliza’s locker. Something about Eliza telling her parents, and her parents telling Maggie’s parents. Something about Maggie’s parents calling her the scum of the earth.

“Hey,” she shouts across the hall, and Eliza Wilke turns around with defiance in her vaguely red eyes.

“Why the hell would you do that?” Alex demands, slamming her open palm into the locker above Eliza’s head.

She doesn’t care that the entire hallway goes instantly silent, and she doesn’t notice that Maggie is peeking out from the science department office with wide, disbelieving eyes.

“Do what, Danvers?”

“How could you do that to her? She’s never been anything but nice to you – “

“Yeah, because she wanted to have sex with me or something – “

“Well she doesn’t deserve to be punished for her terrible taste in women!”

An oooooh rises up from the forming crowd, now, and Alex is seeing red, and Alex doesn’t care. Because she’s had enough of people making fun of her, of people making fun of her little sister.

Kara’s not in her grade, not even in the same school building as her yet. She can’t always prevent things from happening to Kara. And she’s already beginning to hate herself for it.

But dammit, she won’t fail the girl with the soft eyes and the open heart, too.

“Careful, Danvers, people are gonna say you play for the other team, too!” Rick Malverne snickers from behind her, and Alex turns, and Alex punches him straight in the face.

“Yeah, so what if I did? I’d rather be gay than a jerk like all of you any day!”

Only then does she notice Maggie.

Maggie’s wide eyes and Maggie’s hand under her lips, her face not knowing whether to smile or cry.

Alex flushes and she storms down the hall, away from a groaning Rick, away from a sad-eyed Eliza.

Toward a wide-eyed Maggie.
She tosses her arm around her shoulders and she tugs her away from the crowd, away from everything.

She knows a place on the fifth floor staircase where no one ever goes.

It’s a good place to come to rest.

To read.

Or to comfort.

“You didn’t have to do that, Danvers,” Maggie says, and her voice is small, defeated. Alex has never heard it like that – and she’s paid a lot of attention to Maggie’s voice, she’s realizing suddenly – and it breaks her heart.

“Well, someone had to,” she brushes it off, collapsing onto a stair and digging into her bag.

“Peanut butter and jam?” she says, and she holds out the entire thing to Maggie.

She’s in yesterday’s clothes. Alex doesn’t imagine her aunt bothered to pack her lunch.

Tears flood her eyes and she nods wordlessly and she lets Alex hold her close while she eats.

Alex doesn’t ask anything, and Maggie doesn’t tell anything.

She doesn’t have to.

“You’re coming home with me tonight,” is all Alex says into the silence of the abandoned stairwell, and she knows that for all Eliza rags on her, she will never turn her back on another child in need.

And Maggie? Maggie is smart, and she’s tough, and Alex, looking at her as though for the first time, thinks she’s the most beautiful girl she’s ever seen.

So beautiful.

Alex knows she can take care of herself. But she doesn’t want her to have to.

“Why?” is all Maggie asks, and Alex thinks of Maggie’s lips briefly, thinks of how it would have made her heart sing if Maggie had left a Valentine in her locker instead of Eliza’s.

But that’s all for later, because now? Now she thinks of Kara. Kara’s nightmares and Kara’s tears and Kara’s stories from back home.

She shrugs and she passes Maggie a tangerine from her bag, because Maggie is hungry and because she can’t stand all the healthy food Eliza packs for her, anyway.

“We’re stronger together,” she offers with a small smile, and when Maggie returns it, she thinks maybe everything’s going to be alright, after all.
She doesn’t realize she’s doing it.

Singing.

But Maggie sure does.

She stops and she stares and she almost cries, because a few months ago, this woman was badgering her about whose crime scene it was, and now… well, now, she still does that, but she also wears silk slips and pads around their apartment in bare feet, wearing her glasses and singing softly to herself while she gets ready for bed.

She doesn’t want her to stop – god, god, she never wants her to stop – but she needs to touch her skin, to press her lips against the back of her neck. So when Alex is pouring them both some tea, Maggie slips behind her and hesitates when they’re close enough to feel each other’s body heat.

“May I?” she whispers, and Alex hums contentedly and melts back into her arms. The singing stops, and Maggie’s heart sinks, but it also soars because her lips are on the back of Alex’s neck and Alex is nearly swooning and she’s so warm and she’s so soft and she’s so, so, so beautiful.

“You don’t have to stop, babe,” Maggie whispers, and Alex tilts her head as she leans it back onto Maggie’s shoulder.

“Stop what, stop doing the tea thing? Because I’d kind of rather be in your arms.”

Maggie smiles and kisses Alex’s exposed neck, and Alex moans softly. Maggie hisses at her responsiveness and fights the urge to carry her to the bed and make love to her all night long.

“Singing,” she breathes. “You didn’t have to stop singing.”

Alex turns in Maggie’s arms so they’re chest to chest, and Maggie has to remind herself to breathe.

“I was singing? Mmm. I guess I was. Kara says I do that sometimes. But only accidentally. I never really realize I’m doing it.” She stops and she thinks and she stares at something nonexistent over Maggie’s shoulder.

“Come to think of it, I think I’ve only ever done that around Kara.” She returns her eyes to Maggie’s face, to her lips, and smiles a smile that could restore Kara’s powers if ever she solar flares again. “I must be pretty comfortable with you, Sawyer.”
Maggie leans into their embrace and kisses her lips softly, gently, tenderly. “Get used to it, Danvers.”

Alex kisses her back, and it’s sweet and it’s slow and it’s dancing without music and it’s floating without gravity.

They’re hugging as much as they’re kissing, and they’re smiling as much as they’re breathing each other’s breath.

“So you like when I sing?” Alex asks, and her voice is shy, and her eyes are almost timid, and Maggie chuckles, because how in the hell did she wind up with the most perfect woman ever to exist?

“I love it, Alex. Couldn’t really hear you too well, but – “

“Come to bed.”

“Danvers?”

“Come on.”

Alex is smiling and she’s stepping back from their embrace, their tea abandoned.

Abandoned, because Alex has thought of a better way to get Maggie to fall asleep.

It’s been hard for her – hard for them both – since the massacre. Since the deportations and since Jeremiah. Since Rick. God, since everything.

But Alex is interlacing their fingers and she’s smiling and Maggie is following, following, because she would follow Alex to hell and back, but it looks like they’re going to heaven, instead.

Because Alex is laying her down and Alex is laying next to her, leaning up on one elbow, facing her, stroking her hair and warming her skin and kissing her eyes.

“In the mood for anything in particular?” she asks, her eyes wide with nerves, her lips curved with shy excitement.

Maggie can’t speak, because she’s never loved anyone like this, never been looked at by anyone like this, and Alex just smiles because Alex feels it, too.

She wets her lips and she swallows her nerves and she closes her eyes and she sways slightly to music Maggie can’t hear, and she opens her mouth.

“It’s late in the evening

She’s wondering what clothes to wear.”

Maggie knows the song – of course Maggie knows the song – and her breath hitches and tears immediately start stinging her eyes.

“She puts on her makeup

And brushes her long brown hair.”

They share a giggle and a nose rub at the unapologetically adorable face Alex pulls at changing the lyrics from blonde to brown, and Maggie has never felt more loved. She snuggles closer into Alex’s arms, and she knows Alex is trying to sing her to sleep, but she can’t close her eyes, because how could she possibly look away from this?

From Alex, in a silk slip and glasses, soft voice and even softer eyes, stroking her hair while she sings to her about how wonderful she looks tonight?

They both laugh when Alex injects a comment about arm candy when she sings about a beautiful lady walking around with her.

They both let a single tear slip out of their eyes when Alex sings about the love light in Maggie’s eyes, about how Maggie just doesn’t realize how much Alex loves her.

Neither of them know exactly when they stop crying, when Alex stops singing, when they stop giggling at Alex’s commentary on the songs she chooses and when they stop kissing in between verses, but even as they stop all those things and drift into sweet, dreamless sleep, tangled in each other’s arms, in each other’s love, neither of them stop smiling.

Chapter Summary

Alex’s Birthday
jemily Happy, happy, happy birthday, my darling. You deserve all the best things, and you deserve to be celebrated: I am so proud of you for being you! Here’s to you and here’s to an incredible year ahead

Here, have two birthday fics I’ve already written, and one made special for you on your special day!

Chapter 194 and Chapter 105

She forgets to eat when she’s stressed, and she forgets the day of the week when her shifts tend to bleed into each other.

Some years – years like this, years with Jeremiah and Cadmus and Rick Malverne and coming out, god, falling in love – she forgets her own birthday.

Maggie nudges Kara in the bar a few nights before Alex’s birthday.

“She hasn’t said anything about it, you know. Her birthday. I only know because it was on the forms we had to fill out with Pam down in HR. Does Alex not like her birthday or something? I don’t want to upset her if I – “

“No, no no no, Alex loves her birthday. Eliza always makes a big thing out of it, and I think it was the only time Alex felt like she was the center of things…” Kara trails off, adjusting her glasses and guilt flashing over her face.

Maggie hesitates before touching her shoulder, and Kara leans into her touch, a small smile on her face. She may still be getting used to sharing Alex’s love with someone – with trusting someone with Alex’s heart, with Alex’s soul, with Alex’s body – but she is getting used to it. Slowly. But it’s happening.

Finally.

“Were you thinking of doing something for her?”

Maggie shrugs and takes a swig of her root beer, leaning over the bar counter and watching Alex laugh with James and Winn at the pool table.

“Sure, I have some ideas. But I don’t know what traditions you guys have, and I didn’t want to impose or wreck anything for you all, you know?”

Kara smiles, and it’s genuine, because Maggie’s making it easier by the day to like her. To trust her.

“Kara! Maggie! Come back, Winn has no shot with you on his team!”
“Hehe, Winn having a shot. Nice work, Alex!”

“Oh my god, you guys, leave me alone. Kara! Maggie! Come back!”

Maggie and Kara lean into each other when they laugh, and as they stroll over to the pool table, Kara whispers to Maggie to meet her for lunch at Noonan’s tomorrow.

To plan for Alex’s birthday.

And plan, they do.

Because Alex might have forgotten her own birthday – or maybe she’s just not saying anything about it because she assumes everyone else has forgotten and doesn’t want to impose – but her family sure hasn’t.

Because when Alex gets home late a few days later, her apartment is crammed with the people she loves most.

Kara has somehow wrangled J’onn into a party hat, and James is laughing behind his camera, and Winn and Lucy are whooping as Kara giggles and claps when Maggie pulls her into her arms, Alex eagerly parting her lips for Maggie’s tongue, tugging Maggie closer, closer, both of them slightly off-balance, caught between laughing and crying and kissing, until Lucy shouts, “My god, you two, you’re gonna give J’onn a coronary, can you wait until we all go home?”

They part breathless with lust and breathless with laughter, and Kara bursts into Alex’s arms.

“Happy birthday, Alex,” she whispers into her ear, and Alex squeezes her tight, squeezes her close, close.

“You didn’t have to do this, Kara,” she says, because even though there are candles in a dozen donuts – like they do every year for her birthday – and even though the Bare Naked Ladies are blasting through the apartment – like they do every year on her birthday – she’d thought everyone forgot this year.

Hell, she almost had.

And she had so much blood on her hands this year – so very much blood – that she didn’t think anyone would find her worth celebrating, anyway.

But James does, gifting her with a photospread of her and Maggie in different stages of their relationship.

And Winn does, presenting her ceremonially with a specially-designed thigh holster for her alien gun.

And Lucy does, grinning from ear to ear as she gives her a lesbian sex handbook and a pair of handcuffs that makes Kara groan, Maggie gulp and bring her hand to her lips, and J’onn wish his newest daughter thought much more quietly.

And J’onn does, pressing a kiss to her forehead as he gives her a letter – because to write things down is to truly, truly say them – calling her his daughter, telling her how proud he is of her, telling her that nothing makes him happier than her happiness, telling her that he loves her, now more than ever.

And Kara does, squeezing her close as she gives her an entire array of gifts, ranging from a new set of medical gadgets from Caitlin Snow to a painting Kara made herself of Alex and Maggie cuddling on Kara’s couch. Alex cries, and Maggie isn’t far behind.

And Maggie does – love her, god, love her, think she’s worth celebrating, every single day and night and all the times in between – nervously presenting her with her tickets to their first hockey game, a handwritten card talking about love and need and joy and hope, and a dog collar with the name Gertrude engraved on it.

Alex weeps and she laughs and she weeps some more, and she doesn’t stop celebrating with her family until long after midnight, until long after her birthday is, technically, over.

But none of them stop celebrating her, stop laughing with her, stop taking turns holding her, because it doesn’t matter what day it is: Alex Danvers is always, always, always worth celebrating.
Chapter 385

Chapter Summary

Maggie Worshiping Alex (“I love you” smut)

prompt from @thebiwisebrownkid – “some like happy playful smut where they focus on the i love yous and alex’s badassery. Basically maggie worshipping alex and showing her how much she loves her by wrecking her in multiple different ways. plz dont dwell too much on the trauma or the stalking or alex almost dying. shit happened recently and im focusing on the what ifs too much and rn sanvers is the only thing distracting me and alot of the new fics arnent really doing that.”

They said it once, and they said it twice, and they said it three times.

They said it, and they haven’t quite been able to stop saying it.

“I love you, Alex Danvers,” Maggie whispers as she kisses the back of Alex’s neck while Alex is brushing her teeth.

“I love you, Maggie Sawyer,” Alex grins after she spits, Maggie kissing the toothpaste away from the corners of her lips.

“I love you,” Maggie gasps when Alex lets her mouth roam down her jawline, down her throat.

“I love you back,” Alex breathes while Maggie navigates her by her hips out of the bathroom and into the bedroom.

“Do you want me?” she asks before she goes any further, because Alex’s pulse is thrumming under her lips and Alex is whining and Alex is exhaling “I love you’s with every breath, but she needs to be absolutely sure.

“Please,” Alex begs, and Maggie smirks.

“Please what, Danvers?” she can’t help but tease, because Alex Danvers is always, always, always destructively attractive.

But Alex Danvers, blushing and grinning and spluttering and flustered? Is near the top of Maggie’s growing list of weaknesses.

“I… Maggie, please, I…”

Maggie steps back just to hear Alex whine, and she’s rewarded richly.

“Maggie!” she moans, reaching for her, and Maggie melts into her instead of dodging her, lets Alex toss her backwards onto the bed, the thrill of Alex’s strength coursing through Maggie’s blood like oxygen.

“Such a badass, Danvers,” Maggie tries to sound cool, collected, unsurprised, but Maggie is shook and Maggie is soaked and Maggie is so, so far from chill.

“Mmm, I am, aren’t I?” Alex tries to straddle her, but Maggie has other plans.

“May I?” she asks, and Alex cocks her head in an unspoken question.

“May I make love to you, Alex Danvers?”

Alex softens immediately, all the cockiness of a moment ago gone like it was never there, and Maggie delights in the way Alex trusts her enough to let go like this with her.

“I love you, Maggie,” is Alex’s only answer, and her body pliantly follows Maggie’s down to the mattress, Maggie arranging Alex on her back, slowly, slowly, slowly stripping away her clothes, lifting her shoulders, her hips, as needed, asking each step, each new thing, if it’s alright, if she wants it, if she wants her.

“God, Maggie, yes, please,” Alex whines, and Maggie chuckles into her stomach.

“And here we are again, Danvers. Please what?”

“Mags – “

“What, my badass girl can’t tell me what she wants?” Maggie winks, but her gentle fingers on Alex’s wrist tell Alex that if she really isn’t in the mood to talk, of course she doesn’t have to. But god, does she want to.

“I want you to fuck me, Maggie. Please.”

Maggie smiles and crawls up her body to kiss her lips soundly.

“Mmm, I will, Ally. I promise you that. But I’m gonna worship you a bit first, okay?” She leans up on her hands and glances down Alex’s naked body, licking her lips unconsciously.

“The woman I love deserves to be worshiped.”

“The woman you what now?” Alex asks, because she will never, ever, ever tire of hearing it.

“The woman I love, Danvers. You, in case you were wondering.”

“Mmm, I was, you never know, you could be talking about someone – ah!” Her banter cuts off into a sharp scream that makes Maggie freeze, but Alex begs her, begs her to keep going, because Maggie’s lips have found Alex’s nipple, and Alex needs more, more, more.

She tangles her fingers in Maggie’s hair and she grinds her hips up into Maggie’s thigh, and she moans and she writhes and she begs and she pants, I love you, I love you, I love you.

When Maggie lifts her lips from Alex’s hardened nipple, Alex whines and tries to press Maggie’s head back down, but Maggie presses her palm over Alex’s breast and tugs at her nipple just the way Alex likes.

“Gotta give both of them the proper amount of attention, babe,” she chides her playfully, and Alex’s laugh turns into a sharp gasp when Maggie makes good on her word, lowering her lips, her tongue, her teeth, to Alex’s other nipple, licking and sucking until it’s hard and pebbled in her mouth, until Alex can do nothing but whine and moan and beg her not to ever, ever stop.
“I’ll never ever stop because I will never, ever stop loving you, Alex,” Maggie whispers when she pauses for breath, pauses so her jaw can take a break, pauses so she can look down instead of up into Alex’s eyes.

“I love you, Ally Danvers. I love you more than I’ve ever loved anything.”

“Maggie,” Alex breathes, tears stinging her eyes, and Maggie kisses her until both of their faces are wet.

“Can I continue?” she asks, and Alex squeaks, and Alex nods, and Maggie grins, because Maggie will never, ever finish her task of worshiping this woman, of making sure this woman feels as special, as loved, as needed, as wanted, as desired, as worthy, as she deserves to.

She starts with a continuation of what she started on Alex’s breasts, but she doesn’t end there.

Doesn’t end there, because she has other places she needs to be.

So she takes Alex’s fingers into her mouth, slow, slow, searingly slow, keeping eye contact with Alex the entire time, and Alex has never thought she could cum from just looking at something, but the way her fingers disappear into Maggie’s lips, the way Maggie’s eyes scald hers with raw want, raw reverence, raw need?

She is so, so quickly coming undone.

Maggie takes Alex’s fingers, wet from her lips, from her tongue, from her mouth, and places them on Alex’s nipples, and, with her own hands, encourages Alex not to stop playing with herself while Maggie occupies her mouth elsewhere.

Alex tosses her head back into the pillows and Alex writhes and Alex screams, and Maggie has never been more in love.

“I love you,” she whispers with each kiss she presses down Alex’s torso.

“I love you,” she murmurs with every lick she sends shivering up Alex’s inner thighs.

“May I?” she asks when her face is between Alex’s legs, and Alex begs, and Maggie tells her she loves her with words, and then without, as she lowers her mouth to Alex’s clit, dragging her tongue firm and slow across her most sensitive spot, making Alex pant, making Alex writhe, making Alex beg and scream and bruise Maggie’s lips with her wild thrusts, and Maggie doesn’t mind because god, god, god, this woman is everything.

“I love you, Alex,” she moans as she brings her tongue lower, lower, so she’s fucking Alex with her mouth, and Alex pleads for more, for deeper, for harder.

“You want my fingers inside you, Danvers?” Maggie wants to know, her voice an octave lower than usual, and Alex can only answer with her screams, with the way she brings her hands to tangle with her own hair, with the way she keeps repeating that she loves her, she loves her, god she loves her so much.

So when Maggie slips her fingers into Alex’s dripping body, one by one by one, and she feels Alex tighten around her, and she curves her fingers deep inside her body that she knows Alex needs, she keeps her lips, her tongue, occupied with her clit, shifting so when Alex thrusts – and god, does Alex thrust – Maggie’s chin can give her the pressure on her clit she needs to accompany the way Maggie is beckoning her fingers deep, deep inside her.
And when she cums, it isn’t loud like it usually is.

When she cums, squirting all over Maggie’s hand, all over Maggie’s forearm, making Maggie moan deeply into Alex’s clit, grinding her own hips down into the mattress because god, the woman she loves is the sexiest woman that’s ever existed or ever will exist, she isn’t loud like she usually is.

When she cums, it’s with a string of soft, desperate “I love you”s on her tongue.

“I love you, Maggie Sawyer. I love you, I love you, I love you, I love you.”

“What a coincidence, Alex Danvers. I love you, too. So, so, so much.”
Chapter 386

Chapter Summary

anonymous asked:

Alex is one of those people that enjoy watching themselves have sex lol she likes doing it the bathroom just to see maggie fucking her in the mirror, that's a fact

The first time it happens, it’s an accident.

It’s an accident because Maggie is fucking her from behind over the side of the couch, and when she tosses her head back, she catches a glimpse of her body, pressing back into Maggie’s, one of Maggie’s arms tight around her lower waist, keeping her steady, muscles rippling against Alex’s skin, her other hand working in and out of her, Maggie’s face a map of concentration, of devotion, of careful attention, as she looks down at Alex’s stripped body, looks down at the work she’s doing, at the art she’s creating. And it is art, Alex’s body bent over, nipples hard, breasts at attention even as they move with the force of Maggie fucking her entire body, hair all mussed and mouth all askew.

And the image, in the mirror?

The image makes Alex cum without any pressure on her clit.

That’s never happened before and she tries not to think about it because it’s a bit narcissistic, and Maggie would probably think it was weird, anyway, and the last thing she wants to do is turn Maggie off.

But the next time she’s brushing her teeth, Maggie comes up to her from behind.

“May I?” she asks, and Alex nearly chokes on toothpaste as she nods, and Maggie slowly, luxuriously, licks the back of her neck.

Alex moans and spits and her toothbrush clatters into the sink and she wipes her mouth with the back of her hand before grabbing either side of the sink for support.

For support, because there’s no way her knees are going to hold her body up by themselves with Maggie… doing that.

“Do you want to watch me fuck you, Danvers?” Maggie husks, because of course she’s put two and two together.

Alex lets go of shame, lets go of embarrassment, because Maggie doesn’t look weirded out – Maggie looks anything but – and Alex will stomp away on principle alone if she has to hear that Maggie knew because she detects one more time.

“Yes,” she says, and her voice is small, and Maggie stands on her tiptoes to nip at her earlobe.

“I don’t blame you, Danvers.” She makes eye contact with her in the mirror, and Alex loses all her breath. “You are so fucking gorgeous.”
Alex blushes and she stammers and Maggie traces a finger along Alex’s collarbone.

“Wanna take this off, Ally?” she whispers, and even though it’s soft, it sends a huge shiver down Alex’s spine. She nods wordlessly, and holds her hands above her head so Maggie can tug off her shirt, Alex helping her out when the shirt reaches her elbows.

The sound of the old tee hitting the floor is the only sound apart from their breath in the bathroom, and Maggie’s eyes are once again locked into Alex’s in the mirror.

“May I?” she asks, hands raised, and Alex takes her by the wrists and brings both of Maggie’s hands to both of her own breasts. The sight of her hands covering Maggie’s, of Maggie’s fingers toying with Alex’s rapidly hardening nipples; the sight of Maggie’s eyes rolling into the back of her head at the contact, the sight of the pulse leaping in Maggie’s throat; all make Alex start to drip with need, with want, with raw, raw desire.

“You like that, babygirl?” Maggie asks her, and Alex fights to not toss her head back, to keep her eyes locked on the mirror, on the sights Maggie is conjuring up for her.

“Yes,” she admits, and Maggie kisses the base of her neck.

“You’re perfect, Danvers,” she reminds her, and Alex thrusts her hips chaotically.

“Mmm, you uh… you want something, Alex?”

“You,” Alex rasps, and Maggie chuckles into her shoulder blade.

“You wanna um.. take this to the bed? That full length mirror you have, if we keep your closet door open…”

Alex practically tugs Maggie out of the bathroom at that suggestion.

“Strip for me?” Maggie asks, and Alex obeys eagerly, shucking out of her pajama pants and underwear.

“When you think about watching me fuck you, do you imagine me with clothes on or without?” Maggie asks with the casualness of asking about the weather, but her eyes are thick with need.

“Both,” Alex whispers, and Maggie grins.

“I want to feel your skin against mine. Is it okay if I take my clothes off now?”

Alex nods desperately, tentatively opening her closet door, watching Maggie strip out of her boxers and tank top through the full-length mirror within.

Maggie steps up behind her, so close they can feel each other’s heat, but she doesn’t touch her.

Not until Alex asks.

“Please, Maggie?”

“Please what, babe?”

“Please let me watch you fuck me?”

Maggie grins and Maggie closes the gap between them, her chest pressed into Alex’s back, and Alex gasps at the contact, gasps at the image, Maggie’s eyes searing into hers through the mirror as she takes her own fingers into her mouth, slow, slow, slow.

“Not that I think they need any extra lubrication,” she rasps. “But you know. Tonight’s about the visual, isn’t it?”

Alex gulps and nods and begs one more time, and Maggie braces her with a strong hand on her hip, and Maggie slips inside her in one practiced, deliberate gesture that she knows never fails to unravel Alex.

And it does, always, but especially now.

Especially now that Alex can watch Maggie’s face, Maggie’s fingers, Maggie’s rippling muscles, Maggie’s effort, while she fucks her hard, while she fucks her solid, while she fucks her senseless.

She can see Maggie’s free hand reaching around to encourage Alex to play with her own breasts, can see the way Maggie’s fingers encourage Alex to tease her own nipples, can see, not just hear, the way Maggie groans at how deep inside Alex she is, how soaked with Alex’s heat her entire hand is getting, how amazing Alex’s fingers look on Alex’s nipples.

“You are so fucking hot, Danvers,” Maggie tells her, leaving Alex’s breasts in Alex’s own capable hands so she can bring the hand that’s not fucking her down her body to her clit.

Alex screams, watching the way Maggie’s fingers part her hair, rub that spot right above her throbbing clit. Watching the way her body tenses, the way her body shakes, the way Maggie nearly overbalances with the force of Alex’s need, the way Maggie bites her lip with the effort of keeping Alex steady, of keeping Alex satisfied, the way Maggie bites into her shoulder to keep herself from screaming into her ear, the way Maggie’s fingers are coated in Alex’s desire, and Alex locks eyes with Maggie in the mirror, and that, that, that, is what tosses her over the edge, screaming and writhing and pulsing around Maggie’s fingers, in front of Maggie’s body, enveloped in Maggie’s love.
anonymous asked:

I really want Kara to stand up to Eliza for Alex. It's not Kara’s fault that Eliza put so much pressure on Alex and she had her own very considerable problems to work through at the time, but those sisters would go to the wall for each other and I can't imagine Kara not calling her out for it once she'd twigged what was happening. Especially with Maggie’s backing.

She loves Eliza.

She always has.

She’s loved her since she took her face into her hands and first called her sweetie.

Loved her since she introduced her in public as her daughter, but made sure Kara knew that she would never, ever, ever pretend to be replacing her mother, because her mother would always be special, always be cherished, always be alive in Kara’s memories, in Kara’s heart.

She loves Eliza, and she thinks, now, that her love for her – her need for her, for an older woman’s arms to wrap around her tiny body when she had a nightmare [and Rao, she had so many of them], to tell her it was going to be alright, that there is no shame in surviving – might have made her miss certain things.

Certain things about how Eliza treats her older daughter.

Certain things about how Eliza holds Alex to superhuman expectations.

Superhuman expectations that have made Alex drink. That have made Alex suppress herself. That have made Alex isolated and self-destructively reckless and, until Maggie, almost completely unable to assert what she needs, what she wants, beyond when she needs Kara to be safe, beyond when she wants to protect Kara.

And of course she wants to protect Kara, because Eliza has made her believe that she, as a person, is worthless without doing so.

Without being perfect.

So Kara keeps her eyes, her ears, extra open the next time Eliza comes for dinner.

She tries to keep a lid on the shame burning inside her that it took her so long to realize, took her so long to realize that Alex’s extreme anxiety, extra drinking, around Eliza was actually a response to emotional abuse wrapped in love, not an overreacting paranoia that was kind of cute but not that serious.

She tries to keep a lid on her own shame, because she’s been talking with Maggie about it – drinking with Maggie about it – and Maggie is nothing if not straight-up with her.
“Should you have realized when you got older, Little Danvers? Sure. But when you were a kid? Kara, your entire planet had just died, you had no one. You had to restrain yourself in ways I can’t even begin to imagine, and it… of course you just wanted someone to care for you like Eliza did. And you know what the point of beating yourself up for not realizing it sooner is? There is none. Absolutely none. Point is, you’re realizing now, and you can validate Alex now, and that’s what you’ve gotta focus on, okay?”

So she tries to keep a lid on her own shame, so she can be at her best when Eliza comes over next. She brings pie and Kara groans in ecstasy, and she brings tiramasu and Maggie thanks her profusely, but both little sister and girlfriend exchange tense glances behind Eliza’s back when Alex’s face falls, because Eliza hasn’t brought anything for her.

“You’re always going through so many different food phases, Alex – almost obsessively healthy some weeks, carelessly unhealthy other weeks – I can’t keep track of all that, dear.”

Alex grimaces and Kara steps forward. “Next time just ask me, Eliza: I always know what Alex is eating these days, so if you want to surprise her, I can help!”

“You’re so thoughtful, Kara dear,” Eliza praises, and Maggie squeezes Alex’s hand as Alex rolls her eyes and bites her lip.

Kara flushes.

That didn’t work.

She’ll have to try harder.

Eliza gives her the opportunity again when they’re sitting down to dinner, and Eliza wants to know why Alex could have not recognized Rick Malverne until it was too late, how she could have let herself get her sister put into such an impossibly position, and of course she did a wonderful job keeping herself alive until Kara and Maggie could rescue her, but really, Alexandra, how could she have let it come to that in the first place?

Alex guzzles root beer like it’s whiskey and Maggie is about to speak, her hand on Alex’s thigh, but Kara beats her to it.

“Eliza, Alex has been through hell and back, and I love you, Eliza, you know I do, but you don’t get to speak to my sister that way. She did things that you can’t even imagine to keep herself alive, to keep me safe. She would have died for me, protecting me, and she almost did. And if there’s anyone to blame for all this, anyone whose fault this whole Rick Malverne thing is? Other than him? It’s mine.”

“Kara, don’t – “

“No, Alex, it’s true.. It’s true and it doesn’t matter how many times you tell me it’s not my fault: Eliza clearly wants to assign blame, and I understand that. I do, too. And it’s Rick’s fault. But it’s also mine. Mine, because I was the one who didn’t listen to Alex – Alex, who you unfairly put in the position of caring for a devastated child when she was just a child herself – and ran to the scene of that car crash. I exposed myself to Rick, and I was the one he was using Alex to try to manipulate. Alex is a hero, Eliza, and I know you love her, I do, I know, but you need to start talking to her like you do. Or you can leave my home until you’re ready to give Alex the respect she deserves.”

Her voice trembles and she adjusts her glasses with trembling fingers, and Alex is crying and Eliza’s eyes are wide and Maggie is holding Kara’s shaking hand under the table, biting her lip because Kara is nearly breaking her fingers, but she doesn’t mind because god, Alex’s kid sister really is a hero, isn’t she?

“Kara, I’m sorry I – “

“It’s not me you have to apologize to, Eliza,” Kara interrupts, her voice soft and her voice coated with love. For Eliza, but mostly, mostly, for her sister.

Her sister, who she would die for without a second thought.

Her sister, who would die for her without a second thought.

Her sister, who she lives for, every day.

Her sister, who lives for her, every day.

Her sister, who Eliza spent years emotionally abusing in Kara’s name.

And Kara won’t have it anymore.

“Allan – Alex – I – Kara’s right. Your sister – you’re sister’s right. I’ve never been fair to you, Alex, and I’ve never… I told you last year to take care of yourself, and I told you I’m not disappointed in you for being gay, but Alex, beyond that, I haven’t… I’ve quite failed you, haven’t I?” She voice quakes and she closes her eyes, counting to ten, a habit she’s acquired when interacting with her oldest daughter over the years.

“I love you, Alex. And I know I haven’t been nearly good enough at expressing it. But I’m going to do better. And when I fail – and I will fail again, I’m sure – I want you to tell me. And I want Kara to tell me. And you, Maggie, sweetie. And Alex, I… I am so proud of you. Of the hero you’ve become. The hero you’ve always been.”

“It took Kara telling you to get you to say all that,” Alex whispers, and Eliza nods sadly.

“Yes. And that isn’t right. I know. But let me try, Alex? Let your mother try?”

Alex grips Maggie’s hand, swiping comforting circles onto her thigh, and Alex leans into Kara’s strong arms.

“I’ll think about it, Mom. I’ll think about it. Okay?”

Eliza nods, a small, hopeful smile on her face. “That’s all I can ask for, I suppose, isn’t it?”

Alex nods as her lips tremble, and she breathes in her little sister’s scent, focuses on her girlfriend’s touch.

She’s going to be alright. Because these women think she’s perfect, including all her imperfections, even if her mother is still learning that.

Sanvers: Maggie loves pet names and she loves giving them to Alex who never had a relationship long enough to enjoy them but with Maggie when there is a new one she is enjoying it a little bit more every single time. Maggie notices so she finds new pet names on a regular basis cause Alex deserves all of them.

Sweetie is the first one she uses, and it’s when Alex is crying, when Alex is sobbing, when Alex is in pure and utter agony.

Babe comes next, and it’s casual, and she can’t even remember the first time she uses it, but god, she knows she uses it when the water is rising and Alex is not, not, not going to die, because they just started this thing, and she hasn’t called her nearly enough pet names yet.

Alex positively preens whenever she uses them outside of a deeply traumatic situation.

When she calls her babe when Alex rolls up on her Ducati, Alex nearly overbalances on the bike, because god, does she swoon hard.

When she calls her sweetie in bed, and Alex blushes, and Alex screams, and Alex cums hard, hard, hard.

So she realizes that Alex likes it.

Pet names.

Small and enormous intimacies spilling from Maggie’s lips straight into Alex’s soul.

Profound intimacies, profound I love yous without the actual three words, things Alex had never liked before, never been comfortable with before.

But now?

Now, these intimacies are perfect.

So Maggie uses them. With gusto.

“Do you want me to take your clothes off, babygirl?” she asks, and Alex writhes, and Alex scratches at her back, and Alex positively melts.

“You want sugar in your coffee, sugar?” she wants to know, because sometimes on Sunday mornings, Alex likes things a little sweeter, and god, god, god, is it sweet being called Maggie’s sugar. She loves being Maggie’s sugar.

“Have a good day, angel,” she tells her on her way out the door, and Alex swoons, and ordinarily she wouldn’t have a good day, because most of it is spent down in HR filling out an abundance of paperwork for Pam, but today is a spectacular day, because she’s Maggie’s angel.

“Wanna go to go bowling tonight, darling?” Maggie asks, and Alex does want to go bowling, she really does, but first she wants to shove Maggie against the back of the door and fuck her senseless, because god, god, fuck, does Maggie make her feel amazing. Wanted. Special. Loved.

And she absolutely is.

“I Need Her” -- Alex Calling Maggie after 2x20

@gertrudesawyerdanvers wrote: “Alex running home to see if maggie is there and getting worried when she can’t find her and she isn’t picking up her cell so she has a panic attack which is drawn out untill maggie comes running to the apartment to see Alex curled up on the floor unable to breath. So we get a comfort scene and a reassurance scene and have maggie go with alex to the deo to start next weeks episode.“

She makes sure Kara’s alright.

She makes sure Kara’s alright – and of course she isn’t, of course she isn’t, but Alex gets her to stop shaking, Alex gets her to stop crying, Alex gets her to stop blaming herself, because Rhea is wrong, Kara’s survival is not a waste, and Lena will be alright, they’ll save her, she promises, she promises – and then she runs.

Runs and doesn’t care that there are Daxamite spaceships in the sky.

Runs because J’onn and that damn DEO shrink have forced her to desk duty, and the desk isn’t going to need much tending during this damn attack, and anyway, she needs her.

Needs to see her, needs to hold her in her arms.

Needs to be in her arms.

She calls as she runs.

She calls and she calls and she calls.

Maggie doesn’t pick up. Not once.

Alex nearly kicks down her door, too terrified to use her key, but Maggie isn’t home.

She isn’t there.

She’s not picking up her phone.

There are countless Daxamite ships in the sky.

She can’t find Maggie.

Kara’s girl is gone, and Alex’s is…

They have too many more firsts to do together.

Where the hell is she?
Alex paces and Alex calls and Alex texts and Alex screams at nothing, at no one, because Maggie isn’t picking up, Maggie isn’t texting back, and Maggie isn’t here, isn’t here, isn’t here.

She crashes to her knees and she forgets what breathing is.

Her chest gets tight and her vision swims and god, swimming is a bad metaphor, because dammit now she’s remembering the taste of that fencing, the taste of that water, and all she wants to taste is Maggie’s lips on hers, but Maggie isn’t here, isn’t here, where the hell is she?

“I need her,” Alex chokes to herself, fetal on the bathroom floor without quite knowing how she got there. “I need her, I need her, I need her.”

She rocks herself and she gasps for air and she finds absolutely none because Maggie loves her, but where the hell is she, where the hell is she, where the hell –

“Alex? Alex? Alex!”

The door slams open and Alex can’t speak, because she’s too relieved, too shaken, too overwhelmed.

Too humiliated.

She’s a secret agent, goddammit, and is this really how Maggie is going to find her during a Daxamite attack?

Fetal and pathetic on her bathroom floor, all snot and tears and tight chest and shaking hands and no breath?

“Alex,” Maggie says, but her voice is softer, now, not yelling for her, now, because now she sees her, is kneeling behind her, is gathering her into her arms, is checking her for any wounds, is checking her for any bruises.

But the only bruises are on the inside.

And Maggie knows.

“I’m right here, Ally,” she whispers, and she rocks Alex in her lap, bending to kiss her face, bending to wipe her snot, her tears, her sweat.

“Breathe into my hand, babe,” she soothes, wrapping a hand around Alex’s body and placing her open palm on Alex’s chest.

Alex can’t, can’t, can’t.

“I’m right here,” she reminds her.

“I need you,” Alex gasps.

“And I need you, Danvers. Good thing neither of us are going anywhere then, right?”

Alex shudders, and Alex nearly vomits, but Alex breathes out into Maggie’s hand.

“Good girl,” Maggie praises absently, and Alex smirks.

“Are you sex talking me, Sawyer?” she asks weakly.
“Somehow I don’t know if the best time for coming onto you is during a Daxamite invasion,” Maggie smiles, pressing kisses to Alex’s forehead, her temples, her eyes.

“I mean, it could be one of our firsts,” Alex counters, her voice still weak, her hands still desperately grasping at any and every part of Maggie she can reach.

“We’ll save it for next time, Alex. Something to look forward to. Okay?”

Alex looks up into Maggie’s steady eyes, and she gulps.

Maggie says there will be a next time.

That they’ll get through this.

All of them.

Together.

So Alex believes her.

Because she has to, and because she trusts her.

Because she loves her, and Maggie loves her back.

And if anything is going to get them both out of this? It’s exactly, exactly that.
Chapter 390

Chapter Summary

James, Sanvers, and Good Old National City Racism

@chortles81 wrote “I kinda wanna see how the Superfamily (hell throw Clark in considering his historical influence on this setting and history with James!) deal with noticing how those people in National City “are as racist as the network you’re on”…” (that last bit referring to my post here) (I went with a more Sanvers x James focus here, hope that’s alright!)

He gets it.

He doesn’t want to, but he gets it.

He doesn’t want to, especially not when Winn doesn’t see it.

When Winn doesn’t know why he called it a night after a white woman – another one – runs screaming from him faster, more terrified, than she’d run screaming from the two white men who’d actually been attacking her.

He doesn’t want to, but he gets it.

Gets why it’s Kara and Clark.

Why it’s always Kara and Clark.

Even when they cause oil spills and get infected with Red Kryptonite and get the brunt of a bored, needs-to-skewer-someone news cycle, they still come out of it heroes.

Of course they do.

Clark the white midwestern farmboy and Kara the perky white blonde reporter.

He doesn’t want to get it.

Why Alex says “thank god Supergirl was there.” Right in front of him.

Like he doesn’t have a suit.

Like he doesn’t have a history.

Of being a hero.

Of saving people’s lives.

Hell, of saving her life.

He doesn’t want to get it, but he does.
Maggie meets him for lunch – she makes him meet her for lunch – because the woman who’d run from him reported the attack.

Reported the attack, and it landed on Maggie’s desk, and of course this white girl was acting more scared of the Black man who saved her than the white men who attacked her.

So he tries to tell her that he’s busy, that there’s this kid he’s taking care of.

Maggie already knows about the kid.

She’d texted Alex telling her to take him the hell out of that cell, to at least give the kid food, to treat him like a terrified child instead of a threat.

He tries to tell her that he’s busy, because he’d really rather not think about it.

She won’t have it.

“Great, I love kids,” she tells him. “When they’re not trying to beat me up. And I feel like this kid won’t. So bring him. I’ll buy.”

He has no choice.

The tone of her voice tells him he has no choice.

And she must have been serious. About loving kids.

Because even though he likes this kid – even though this kid might be his… reason – he hasn’t been able to get the kid to smile all day.

But Maggie gets him to smile in fifteen minutes.

Just once, just small. About how she keeps asking her girlfriend for a flash grenade – “you know, the ones that make those huge sounds, but she won’t give it to me. Seems to think I’d do something irresponsible with it. Can’t imagine why.” – and she looks up at James’s grateful smile as the kid occupies himself with food.

“So that woman you saved last night came to the precinct.”

“Did she.”

“I’m sorry, James.”

He glances at Marcus, and figures there’s nothing they can say that he doesn’t already know.

“Not your fault I don’t look like Kara or Clark.”

“And it’s not your fault that people are too…” She gestures toward Marcus with her chin to indicate that she doesn’t want to swear in front of him. James gives a small grin. “To understand that you’re just as much of a hero as them. More, even.”

“More?” James furrows his brow.

“They’re not risking what you are, James. And I’m not just talking about them being bulletproof. Because what happens when you take off that suit and one of my guys sees you heading home down a dark alley? Or on a brightly lit street, for that matter?”
James grimaces and has the sudden impulse to wrap his arms, his shield, around Marcus and never let go.

“Right. And that’s not your fault, you hear me?”

There’s a long silence, and James can do nothing but stare across the table at the woman who’s going to be his sister-in-law one day.

“Alex acted like I wasn’t even there. Just talking about how Supergirl saved the day. I got all those people out of the way. No armor, no protection, no thanks. Nothing. Me. And all those people, applauding her like it wasn’t my hands that… and Kara’s amazing, Kara – you know how I feel about Kara – I’m not trying to take anything away from her, I just…”

“A little more thanks and a little less racism, huh?”

“Something like that.”

“I’m not gonna make excuses for Alex.”

“You can, Maggie, I know she’s going through so much right now – “

He reaches across the table and touches her hand gently. “How are you both sleeping?”

“We’re not.”

Marcus is staring between them both now.

“Alex was scared. To be in that room with me. She felt like she was in a cage. And cages scare her,” he whispers, and James’s grip tightens around Maggie’s hand, and Maggie’s heart shatters into more splinters than her body can hold.

“You felt that from her, Marcus?”

Marcus nods, and Maggie forces a small grin onto her face.

“Thanks for telling me, kid.”

Marcus nods once, and then retreats back into his own world, his own thought processes, his own ruminations about his mother, about his people, about his father, about this man who’s trying to care for him, about this woman who just wants a flash grenade, about this other woman who just wants to never be in a cage again.

“James,” Maggie pivots the subject, because she’s not going to break in front of this child, and because James needs this. “You are a hero. Same as Kara, same as Clark. But you risk even more. And that’s… you’re amazing, you know that? A Pulitzer Prize winning photojournalist by day, Guardian and protector of National City by night? Not too shabby of a resume, Olsen.”

He grimaces and he nods and he can’t wait for Alex to marry this woman already.

And Alex is waiting for him at the doors of CatCo when he brings Marcus back from lunch.

“Hey, listen, I can’t stay, J’onn’s got me basically confined to HQ until the shrink lets me back in the field, but I um… I wanted to apologize. For before. For implying that you weren’t in that square, too. I saw the footage. How many people you saved. You were a hero, James. Without that suit. And Winn’s working on some algorithm or other, but he told me to tell you the same thing. And to slap you on the chest like you always do to him. I’m not gonna do that. But I told you.”
James smiles down at her, and she kneels in front of Marcus.

“And I brought you something too, sweetheart,” she says, her voice softer, her eyes lighter. She holds out a gyroscope, beautiful silver that glistens with rainbows in the light. “I couldn’t find any toys from your planet, but J’onn says this is pretty close.”

Marcus says nothing, but he takes it from her hands, letting his fingers brush hers, linger on hers.

A thank you.

And an apology for her experience in that cage.

She stands and James thinks he hears her knees crack, thinks her she sees pain flash across her eyes.

“I’m sorry, James,” she says again. “I know it’s not enough, but I’ll make it better. And everyone’s going to know what a hero James Olsen is. Guardian is. Okay?”

He tugs her into a hug, because his sister isn’t perfect, but she’s still his sister.

And he’s relieved to have her on his side.
He won’t let her back into the field.

J’onn.

Or the DEO shrink.

“He’s a therapist, babe,” Maggie tries to soothe her, but Alex insists on calling him her shrink.

And she insists on telling everyone who will listen that she’s fine, she’s fine, and can everyone stop acting like she’s not and can someone just please give her back her damn gun already?

They let her interrogate the boy because she’ll probably kill someone if she doesn’t have something to do.

And with Alex’s history of violence? Extreme violence? Sadistic violence?

It’s not an idle possibility.

So she kneels down when Marcus comes into the DEO, and J’onn notices her flinching, still in pain from the week before, but he thinks he only notices because her thoughts are so loud.

Because her pain is so damn loud.

“Hey Marcus. I’m Alex. You wanna come in here and have a chat with me?”

He says nothing. He just stares at her. Alex’s eyes shift from J’onn to James and back again, and she guides the boy into the interrogation room.

“You like burgers, Marcus?” No response.

“I’m gonna order us a couple. Okay?”

She makes a point of calling the place herself. In front of him.

So maybe he’ll see her more as a regular person and less of a secret agent. Less of a soldier.

Hell, she doesn’t feel like much of a soldier lately anyway.

Especially not now.

Not locked in this interrogation room, technically in control but really completely out of it, the boy holding all the cards, the walls holding them both in, and she knows it won’t start filling with water but she can’t help but constantly checking the corners of the rooms for pipes, and she knows it won’t start filling with water but she can’t help constantly wondering how long the boy can hold his breath, if his species even can hold their breath, what kinds of things he’d need if submerged in Surely she’d die. Holding him above her.

She tries to talk to him.

Tries to ask him about school. About his mom.

He says nothing.

The burgers come. She thanks Vasquez, who gives the boy a wink.

He still says nothing.

“You’re really not hungry, Marcus?” she asks, but she knows damn well he’s not.

Because she wasn’t, either, after everyone she knew watched her father nearly massacre hundreds of people.

And she isn’t, now, when her skin keeps crawling, when her body keeps threatening to seize, when every small sound indicates the oncoming rush of water that her brain knows won’t come, but that her body is convinced will happen.

That the throbbing scar on her shoulder is convinced will happen.

Kara notices first.

It’s Alex’s heartbeat that gives her away.

She waves over J’onn, and she points and she whispers, and he sighs, because he knows, and he wishes she would talk to him.

But he knows she won’t.

Not yet.

She tells him that she wants to help his mom.

That they need to find her, so they can protect her from doing bad things to other people.

James flinches.

J’onn flinches.

Finding the boy’s mom would do no such thing.

And Alex doesn’t know this, because to her, Marcus is just a child. A little traumatized, maybe, but innocent. Oblivious.

She doesn’t know he doesn’t have the privilege to be oblivious.

Because he might be an alien, but he’s an alien with the wrong color skin on a white supremacist planet.

And he might be a child, but he knows that when government people – or whoever she is, anyway – want to find people who look like his mom, who look like him, it’s not to protect her from doing bad things to people.
His mom would never hurt anybody on purpose.

But of course this woman who thinks she’s being nice to him doesn’t know that.

Because she sees his mother’s purple eyes and she sees his mother’s brown skin, and she doesn’t know it, but she’s telling him exactly what he needs to know.

That he should keep his mouth shut, because this woman doesn’t know how to help her mother.

Because protecting his mother from doing bad things to people is hurting his mother. Is locking his mother away. Forever. Supposedly for her own protection.

A euphemism.

He learned that word in school last week.

A euphemism to make her feel better about the work she does.

And he knows she’s scared. Scared of something about this room. Something about this cage.

He doesn’t blame her. It scares him, too.

He thinks maybe they have more in common than she understands, but also less in common than she assumes.

She’s itching to get out of this room.

Her skin is crawling.

So is his.

Maybe that’s enough common ground.

Maybe it isn’t.

He doesn’t know.

He just knows her wants to be let go.

And he imagines she does, too.

It’ll happen sooner, the less he says.

She’ll get overwhelmed. She’ll get frustrated. She doesn’t seem like the type to give up, but to get out of that room? She will.

He knows. So he waits.

And he’s right, because she slips out of the room, and she tells them that the man with the suit and the shield and the helmet would do a better job getting through to him.

He likes that man.

Maybe.

Maybe he can like that man. James, he said his name was. James.
His face had felt smooth. Solid. Safe. He knows he scares James. That James is terrified of failing him. Of failing him, of something happening to his mother, to him, and being powerless to stop it. Marcus knows about feeling powerless. He thinks he can like James.

And Alex?
Alex runs into another woman’s arms, shorter than her, longer hair. Because “Kara texted me, babe, told me your heartrate went through the roof,” and Alex says she’s fine, she’s fine, but Marcus knows better, and so does the woman holding her.

“Alex, it’s okay to not be able to be in an interrogation room. And I – “ He sees the woman glance in the room. At him. And he sees her face run cold.

“Babe, what – he’s a child, what the hell is he doing in an – “

“His mother was responsible for – “

“I don’t give a damn what his mother was responsible for, Danvers – J’onn, James, how the hell could you allow this?”

“Detective Sawyer, this is DEO business, and – “

“And this is my damn city, Director Henshaw, and I’ve kept my mouth shut about your alien Guantanamo for too long, but J’onn, he’s a little boy, how – “

“Maggie, I was just trying to talk to him – “

“Well maybe you could have taken him out to eat or something instead of – “

“That’s exactly what Mr. Olsen was about to do, Detective Sawyer.”

“I… I was?”

“J’onn’s right, James. Look at him. He’s looking at you. He wants you.”

James stares and James sighs, and Maggie touches his hand, and it steadies him. He nods and Maggie grimaces relief.

“Alex, I’m sorry, I know we’re not supposed to interfere in each other’s jobs, I just – “

“No, no, Maggie, you’re right, I…” Maggie’s brow furrows, because Alex Danvers never gives in this easily.

“Alex, are you – “
“I’m fine. I’m just capable of admitting when I’m wrong, okay? Sometimes. I just… I’m tired, Maggie. I’m just… I’m tired. Of being stuck here, of… of feeling like getting information out of an elementary school kid is the best I can do for my team. And I couldn’t even do that, I couldn’t… I couldn’t…”

And suddenly Alex is breaking, and Maggie and J’onn are taking her to a side office, and then she’s sobbing, sobbing against J’onn’s chest and Maggie’s arms, hyperventilating because she has oxygen, now, she’s not in a cage, now, except she is, she is, and she doesn’t know if she’ll ever get out of it.

“I got you, babe,” Maggie whispers into her hair, and J’onn tries desperately not to feel, because Alex’s thoughts are loud and her feelings are louder – screaming, screaming, so much screaming – and his face holds stoic, and his body holds steady, but he misses M’gann and he misses his daughter’s smile, and he misses the time when he would never have put that little boy in a box, but so much has happened, too much has happened, and he’s losing his grip and he’s losing his empathy, and if Alex was his way out, she’s also got to be his way back in.

“We’ve all got you, Alex,” he tells her, and she sobs harder, and Maggie holds her closer, and J’onn wishes harder for James to trust himself with that boy, to trust himself because he won’t fail another child, another one of his children.

But he has faith in them.

And maybe that faith is exactly what they all need.
Chapter 392

Chapter Summary

anonymous asked:

Did you have any fix it fics featuring j’onn tonight? B/c I legit almost started crying at what he said about "his family" :’)

(Alex-heavy, but not Sanvers... but I didn't think yall would mind???)

He tells James about finding his purpose on Mars.

With his daughter.

He doesn’t tell him about his purpose on Earth.

When his daughter – both of his daughters – were dead and gone.

Slaughtered.

He doesn’t tell him about finding Alex Danvers.

Alex and Kara.

Stumbling into a lifetime of caring for them.

He doesn’t tell him because he almost lost her. Just last week. Almost lost her and it was his fault.

His fault, because Alex thinks it’s her job to protect the world.

And maybe that’s technically part of her job description, but his entire life?

His entire life is about protecting Alex.

And he failed.

He failed because her lungs nearly flooded with water and her body quaked with fear and her girlfriend yelled and threw down that laptop and Kara nearly heat visioned a man’s face off and destroyed an interrogation room and Alex had to slice into her own skin with a goddamn credit card and it was his fault, his fault, his fault.

Her scars – the one on her shoulder and the ones on the inside that she won’t admit, but that he knows, keep her up at night – are his fault.

Because he’s supposed to protect her.

And he failed.

And he’s supposed to protect this Marcus boy.
And Alex wants to be the one to interrogate him, because she needs so desperately to be useful, confined to the DEO as she is.

And he needs so desperately for her to feel better that he lets her.

Even though he shouldn’t. Because the boy shouldn’t be interrogated at all.

And Alex is kind to him.

Or the DEO version of kind, anyway.

But the fact of the matter is, none of this should be happening. Not this way, anyway.

None of it should be happening, but Alex is thirsty for routine.

And routine, for her, is interrogation rooms.

Something else that’s his fault.

Because he took her fire and he forged her into a soldier.

His fault, his fault.

His fault.

So when Kara falls, when Kara’s body hits the ground like she’s under a red sun, he tells her.

Tells her what’s been boiling inside of him.

“You don’t mess with my family.”

But she can, she can, she can, and she does.

Because she’s stolen white Martian technology.

White Martian technology that they used to enslave his people. To slaughter his people.

And he remembers the feeling.

Of his control, his sense of self, his sense of everything, slip away.

Alex is the first one to get to him.

After she collects Kara, of course. After she comforts Kara, of course.

And rightfully so.

Kara needs her sister. Alex needs her sister.

But then she’s running to him, running to him because she heard, she heard, and she doesn’t care if she’s not supposed to be in the field, she heard, and don’t worry, they’ll find a way to combat that goddamned mind control thing, they’ll find a way, he’ll never have to go through that again, not ever, not ever, not ever.

He doesn’t cry and she doesn’t hold him.

They’re soldiers.
They’re too much of soldiers for their own good.

But he puts a hand on her shoulder and then it feels too distant.

So he puts a hand on her cheek, and she grasps at it, holds it there, leaning into his calloused palm, her eyes flooded with tears.

With the same guilt that’s swimming in his eyes, the same ghosts.

She wasn’t there for him.

He wasn’t there for her.

But they’re always there. For each other.

They have each other, now. Always will.

Always.

“I couldn’t ask for a better daughter, Alex,” he tells her, and she shudders with emotion, shudders with need and shudders with pain and shudders with suppressed fear.

“And I couldn’t ask for a better father,” she tells him, her voice small, her voice laced with death and laced with life, laced with love and laced with understanding.

There is no shame in surviving.

He only hopes they can both learn that, truly learn that – he and Alex and his other daughter, he and Alex and her little sister – together.
Chapter 393

Chapter Summary

anonymous asked:

Hey! I love your fics. I was wondering if you could write about Maggie being scared to hold Alex's hand in public again? Bc Rick mentioned it when he said he spied on them. And that's super invasive and stuff. And Alex noticing somethings wrong and then comforting Maggie when she tells her the truth. Thanks!!

Alex is laughing, and Alex is reaching for her hand, and Maggie was laughing a moment ago, too, but then she pulls away.

Hard.

She doesn’t mean to.

She doesn’t mean to, and she doesn’t want to.

She wants Alex’s touch – she craves it like she craves oxygen, it’s physically painful to not be touching her skin at every single moment – but she pulls away.

Because his memory is wiped.

He doesn’t remember.

But other people might.

Be watching.

Other men who’ve decided they’re entitled to Alex’s body, to Alex’s love. Hell, other men who’ve decided they’re entitled to hers.

And if someone can go that long, watching both of them – a detective and a secret fucking agent, for god’s sake – without either of them noticing?

Well, you really can’t be too cautious, can you?

Because Maggie remembers.

Remembers the consequences of making her affection for women known.

But she was the one who suffered for that.

Only her.

But this time? This time was worse. Worse than her father kicking her out, worse than her mother letting him, worse than her aunt’s indifference and worse than her entire town’s disdain.

Worse, because this time, Alex was tortured. This time, Alex almost died.
So Maggie pulls away and she suppresses a scream, because she’s been reliving it all every night, every night, but god, please, not during the day, too.

Alex stops walking, and Maggie’s stomach sinks.

“Maggie?” is all Alex says, and Maggie wishes she had Kara’s ability to just take off.

Not that she’d leave Alex.

Not that she’d go anywhere without Alex.

So she has no choice. But to tell her.

She was going to tell her anyway.

But this was their first day outside the DEO med bay, their first day outside of Alex’s bedroom.

Alex had only just started smiling again.

She was going to tell her, just not… so soon.

But now she’s looking at her, with that look, with that face.

And Maggie knows that her bad habits – the keeping things from her, to protect her, she tells herself – are surfacing again.

Dammit.

“Maggie, what?” Alex repeats when Maggie forgets to respond.

“Not here, Alex, I – “

“Not here, what? You don’t want to tell me what’s wrong here or you don’t want to hold my hand here?”

“I – both, I – Alex, please, can we go somewhere? Somewhere private?”

But nowhere is private.

Nowhere is private, and she’s been coping with it. She doesn’t want Alex to have to, as well.

“Alright. Alright, come on, let’s go home. Can I put my arm around you?”

Maggie wants to say no. Wants to scream no.

But they’re safe.

They’re safe and she wants Alex. Wants her touch, wants her affection. Wants her warmth, wants her love.

Wants to feel her heartbeat, because she needs to remind herself it’s still beating.

“Yeah.”

Alex nods slowly, puts her arm around Maggie slowly.

Half of Maggie’s body melts in relief, and the other half stiffens in terror.
She tells her the moment they get inside.

She tells her everything.

Everything, and she tries not to cry, because this was about Alex, not her, not her, not her, and she’s sorry, she didn’t mean to make it about her, but Alex is cutting her off, kissing away her tears, framing her face with her hands because, “babe, this is about us. Us. You and me. Not just me alone. You’re allowed to be upset, you’re allowed to cry. You’re allowed to be scared.”

Maggie tries to tut. “I’m not scared.”

Alex smiles softly, and Maggie mirrors the action. grateful when Alex brings her forehead down to touch hers.

They stay there, breathing each other’s breath for a long, long moment.

“We’ll talk to Winn. About extra security measures. He’ll figure all of it out, if he hasn’t been doing it already. Okay? And in the meantime… in the meantime, or even after, if you don’t want to touch in public, we don’t have to, alright? It’s okay, Maggie, I don’t want you to be scared –”

“I don’t want you to feel like I’m… ashamed of you. Of us. Because I’m not.”

She says the first part broken. She says the last part fierce.

And Alex loves her broken. And Alex loves her fierce.

“Maggie, I know you’re not ashamed of me. Of us. You’re the one who taught me to… to be myself, Maggie. How could I ever think you’re ashamed of us?”

Maggie gulps and she blinks out burning tears. “I can’t lose you, Alex.”

“You won’t. You won’t, I promise you. I held on, remember?”

“You held on,” Maggie whispers, entire body quaking in Alex’s arms.

“It doesn’t matter how long it takes, Maggie. For you to feel safe. I’ll be here. The entire time.”

“You promise?”

“I promise. I love you, Maggie Sawyer.”

And that’s the perfect thing to say, because that will always, always, always make Maggie smile.

“I love you too, Alex Danvers. I love you so damn much.”
Chapter 394

Chapter Summary

anonymous asked:

Have you done a fic of Maggie not being able to let Alex out of her sight/ panicking when she's a few minutes late coming home from work since the whole "don't wait up for me" turned into a kid napping thing?

Alex tells her she’ll be home at 7:00.

At 6:50, Maggie is pacing by the door.

At 6:55, she’s thinking that time has never moved slower.

At 6:57, she’s counting the seconds.

At 6:59, she’s staring at her phone, perpetually checking for texts from Alex, anything indicating where she is, that she might be late, that she’s on her way.

At 7:00, Maggie starts forgetting how to breathe.

At 7:01, Maggie calls Kara.

At 7:02, Maggie grabs her jacket, grabs her gun, no matter that she can’t breathe, no matter that her throat is too tight to say anything, no matter that she’s broken out into a cold sweat. She will kill anyone who –

At 7:02 and thirty seconds, Alex opens the door that Maggie is about to burst out of.

Alex takes one look at her and Alex knows.

She eases the gun out of her hand and she she kisses her, everywhere, everywhere, everywhere.

“I’m here, Maggie. I’m home, I’m home. I’m here. I’ve got you. I’ve got you.”

But Maggie squirms away, her face contorted, her lip trembling.

“You’re not supposed to have me, Danvers. I’m supposed to have you! And I didn’t, and you could have died, you almost died, I should have known something was wrong earlier, I should have – “

“Hey, hey hey hey, slow down. Listen to me, Maggie. Listen to me. Please? This is a relationship. I love you. You love me.” She pauses because she knows that will make Maggie smile, even through her thickest tears. She’s right. “We love each other, Maggie. So it’s not one of us has the other. It’s both, Maggie. We take care of each other. And you took care of me. You found me, okay, you got me out.”

“And you held on.” Maggie’s voice is broken, and Alex’s heart breaks with it.

“And I held on.”
“I don’t know how to… function. Without you next to me, without…” She pauses and she laughs unexpectedly, and Alex tilts her head in question.

“Nothing, sorry, just… you know that mirror? In Beauty and the Beast? Where he can see anyone he wants, whenever he wants? I want that. For you. Except minus the lack of consent thing. I just… I don’t know how to function. Not knowing you’re safe. I mean, Jesus, Danvers, you were, what, a minute later than you said you’d be, and I nearly started World War Three.”

Alex smiles wetly at that. At the woman who would tear down the world – with smarts, with words, with sheer genius – to bring her home.

“We’re going to figure it out, Maggie. I’m going to figure out how to shower without meds, and you’re going to figure out how to be okay when I’m not next to you. And in the meantime…” Alex pulls her closer, and Maggie positively melts. “I can just make sure to be next to you as much as possible. That sound acceptable?”

“That sounds perfect, Danvers.”
anonymous asked:

Hey captain!! I know you have a looot of prompts to get through so like ignore this please but I just wanted to send it since your asks are open.. could you maybe write ace!alex and maggie going out and maggie gets hit on and alex gets all insecure? I need some ace positivity in my life...

She knows Maggie wants her.
Sexually.
She knows because they talk about it, and it makes Alex feel good. It makes Alex feel special.
Not like other people who’ve wanted her.
That made her feel wrong, and uncomfortable, and somewhat violated.
But this? Maggie?
Maggie makes her feel perfect.
Because Maggie never asks for anything more than Alex wants to give, and Maggie asks if it’s alright for her to think about Alex while she masturbates.
And god, is it alright.
Maggie tells her she’s perfect, and Maggie tells her she’s more than enough, and Maggie tells her she loves her, god, she loves her so damn much.
But Maggie is sexual. Very sexual.
And Alex… isn’t.
So when she’s late to one of their dates at the bar and she sees some new woman in town all up in Maggie’s space, the bottom drops out of Alex’s stomach.
It doesn’t matter that Maggie’s body language is screaming that she’s flattered, but totally not interested.
It doesn’t matter that Maggie is shaking her head, that Alex hears something about “my girlfriend” and “meeting me soon” and “yes, we’re monogamous, and happily so.”
It doesn’t matter.
It doesn’t matter, because that woman is looking at Maggie like she wants to give her sex.
And Alex?
Alex can’t do that.

She panics.

Of course she panics. She panics when she can’t be perfect, and this woman? This random woman, wanting to fuck her girlfriend? Or, who knows, get fucked by her girlfriend? This random woman, in this moment, to Alex, feels more perfect than she can ever be.

So she panics. And she runs.

She’s not sure how Maggie knows – she thinks maybe Darla points it out to her – but she’s barely back on her Ducati before she hears Maggie’s rapid, jogging footsteps, before she hears Maggie calling her name.

“Alex, hey, whoa, where you going?” she wants to know as Alex slams on her helmet and revs her engine.

“Danvers,” Maggie pleads, and Alex heaves out a labored sigh and rips her helmet back off.

“She was flirting with you!”

“I wasn’t flirting back, Danvers,” Maggie’s voice goes hollow. “I told you what I did to Emily was a horrible mistake, you told me you weren’t judging me, I – “

“What? Maggie, no, that’s not – “ Alex slips off her bike and puts her helmet on the seat, holding her hands up in surrender. “Maggie, that’s not what I meant, I promise. I know you weren’t flirting back, I didn’t think you were going to cheat on me, I just… I mean, you could. If you wanted.”

Maggie narrows her eyes, tilts her head, and blinks. “What?”

“You could. If you wanted. Go back in there and take her home. Or go back to her place. Or whatever. If you wanted.”

“If I wanted.”

“Yeah.”

“Danvers.”

“Maggie.”

“What the hell.”

“I’m just saying. I don’t want to limit you.”

“Limit me? Alex, what – “

“You know what? Forget it, okay, I – “

“No, Alex, you don’t get to do that. You gotta give me more than that, babe, I don’t understand – “

“She wants to have sex with you, Maggie! And she’s gorgeous, and she wants you, and she’ll do all kinds of things with you that I won’t do, and I’d rather you be happy than settle for someone who – “

“No.”
The force of Maggie’s single syllable cuts Alex’s tearful ramble off abruptly, and she blinks.

“No. Alex, please don’t finish that sentence. Okay? Because I’m not settling for you. I’m not settling. Because you’re not someone who... I don’t know, however you were going to end that sentence. You know what you are? You’re someone I love. Someone I’m in love with. You’re someone I want to have a lifetime of firsts with, someone I want to get a dog with. You’re someone I want to save the world with over, and over, and over, and you’re someone I want to laugh with and cuddle with and have game nights with your sister and her friends with. You’re someone I want to marry one day, Danvers. You. Just you. I don’t need to have sex with you to want to spend the rest of my life with you.”

“But you... want to have sex.”

“With you, Alex. Not anyone else! You. And no, no, I don’t mean it like we should have sex, I don’t mean it like that at all. I don’t feel bad that we don’t have sex. Because I can get myself off, Alex, that’s not a problem, and the... the intimacy that we have? You and me? The kissing and the cuddling and the talking and the way you wear your glasses around me and nobody else and the way we brush our teeth together and the way you get up to swish around some mouth wash every morning so we can kiss without morning breath? That’s all the intimacy I need, Alex. You’re all the intimacy I need. You’re all the intimacy I want. You’re everything I want, Alex. Everything. Alright?”

A long silence.

A long silence of breath and tears and shaking fingertips reaching for shaking fingertips, trembling soul touching trembling soul.

“Understood.”

Her voice is soft and it’s cracked and it’s whole and it’s perfect, perfect, perfect.

Just like she is.
Sanvers College AU: Finals Week

This goes out to all of yall going through finals: you are amazing and I promise, you will get through it! Remember that your grades are not a reflection of your self-worth, and you have so much to be proud of. You’re almost there and you can do it!!!! <3 <3 <3

The only advantage of finals week is that she almost never has to change out of her pajamas.

Maggie says they’re cute.

She only hears Eliza’s voice in her head, laughing softly and asking her why exams prevent her from proper hygiene.

Because of you, Mom, she wants to say, but she only says it in her head.

Because Eliza also texts her every day, wishing her luck while telling her she doesn’t need luck, because she is brilliant, and she is proud of her, and she can do this.

It warms her heart, but it makes her feel the pressure more acutely, somehow all at the same time.

She lets Maggie read the texts over her shoulder.

Maggie never says anything.

There’s been radio silence from her mother for going on five years now.

So they don’t talk about it. Eliza. Because Alex wonders if it’s better to have a mother who showers her with both love and with pressure than to have a mother who doesn’t even know her daughter’s in college, let alone going through finals week.

They don’t talk about it, but Maggie squeezes her thigh and kisses the back of her neck and Alex does the same for her.

It’s just as well.

They have studying to do.

Sometimes Alex needs to down anti-anxiety meds and coffee – it makes her shake terribly, but it keeps her awake and it keeps her from panicking so hard she can’t breathe – and lock herself in a study room in the library, alone.

Maggie smuggles in food at three am, and she makes sure Alex eats and drinks before she retreats back out of Alex’s frenetic study space.

Sometimes Alex needs to lay on the floor of Maggie’s dorm room, flat on her back, her feet up on Maggie’s couch, in Maggie’s lap, while Maggie and Lena quiz her, rapid fire – the only way she likes it, under pressure – on quantum entanglement and polyatomic anions and seventeenth century French politics.

Lena has to help them both with that last bit: boarding school prepared her for those history tests better than anything Maggie or Alex had experienced.

Alex still nearly fails.

Maggie has to hold her all night to remind her that she is not her test grades. That her worth is far greater, always, than the sum of her scores.

Maggie doesn’t talk much about her own stress.

About the way she studies long after even Alex falls asleep.

Because Lena’s mother is paying for everything, and Alex’s mother is paying for everything, but Maggie doesn’t even know her mother anymore, and even if she did, paying for college would be a waste because she could just stay on the family farm.

She scoffs to herself.

She could have, if they let her.

But they didn’t, so she’s on scholarship. She’s on scholarship that she worked silently, steadily, desperately to get.

She’s on scholarship and she cannot lose it.

Because if she loses it, she will have no education, no housing, no job, no income, no Alex. No anything.

If she loses it, she’ll be fourteen again.

So Alex sets her alarm for four am, because they don’t talk about it, but Alex still knows. She sets her alarm and she bundles herself in her biggest hoodie and she stumbles out to the only all night cafeteria across campus, and she comes back to feed Maggie, just like Maggie feeds her.

She holds her and she tells her she’s incredible and she’s tough and she’s smart and she’s going to kick this exam in the face.

Lena, sleeping on her and Maggie’s couch with an astrophysics book still in her hands, mutters something about blackbody radiation, and Alex and Maggie have to stifle each other’s giggles.

None of them wake up in time for their biology exam.

Lucy Lane has to burst into Maggie and Lena’s dorm, hollering about Alex needing to text when she’s not going to come home, to text when she’s planning to sleep away that perfect grade they all know she’s going to get, and “hey, Sawyer, anyone tell you you look adorable in Danvers’s sweaters?” and “Danvers, I know we have to get going, but damn, do you maybe wanna put on some pants first?”

Her jovial spirit doesn’t fool any of them: they know she’s been up all night, same as them, pacing, panicking, but they know James and Winn kept her sane, kept her safe, kept her stable.

Alex smiles down at the text she gets from Kara, from Eliza, a selfie of the two of them together, holding a sign that Kara clearly made, telling her that her semi-permeable membranes are only letting in the best of luck.

Maggie reminds Alex to eat something to go with her anti-anxiety pill, and Lena takes hers when she thinks no one’s watching. Lucy touches her arm and gives her a small grin.

“The boys are saving us seats,” she tells them all. “I don’t think Schott wanted to risk getting decapitated by any of you if he walked in and you weren’t decent or something.”

“He knows we’re all queer, right?”

“He also knows you’re all dangerous.”

Alex, Lena, and Maggie grin, shrug, and nod. “Fair point.”

They walk in together, and Maggie hugs James, hugs Winn. Lena and Alex sort of grin at them faintly.

Maggie kisses Alex’s hand.

“You’re amazing, Danvers,” she whispers as they settle into their lecture hall seats. “And when we’re done, you can make like DNA helicase and unzip – “

“Oh my god, Sawyer, we’re about to take a final, could you not?”

“Hey, I’m just trying to comfort my girlfriend, you don’t have to get all snappy because you don’t have one.”

She, Lucy, and Alex all stare at each other for a long moment, and then lean into each other, bursting into hysterical laughter.

Maybe this – this friendship, this love, this community – maybe this was more important than the letter they earned, after all.

Alex still nearly throws up when the exam is placed in front of her, and Maggie closes her eyes for a long moment, doing what she always does with exams: wiping her mind completely blank – thank god for yoga – so when she opens her eyes, her knowledge will be fresh, her approach will be fresh, her spirit will be fresh. She focuses on writing her name, clean and neat and confident.

She’ll dive into the rest of the exam with that confidence.

The confidence – the drive – that the burden of her name gives her.

To her other side, Lena is doing the same.

Alex and Lena are the first to finish and the last to leave.

Maggie, James, Lucy, and Winn all finish at different paces, but they all wait, idly going over their tests, doodling on their scrap paper, breathing, fantasizing, wishing, waiting – until Alex and Lena are done meticulously going over their answers, meticulously making sure that not a mark is out of place.

They don’t leave before their friends do because they know it’ll send them into a panic. That they did something wrong. That they’re stupid for taking too long. That they’re alone, alone, alone.

And they’re not alone. So they wait.
And they all leave together, Alex with her phone bursting with congratulatory texts from Kara, taking selfies in her high school bathroom with thumbs up and kisses and congratulations on finishing captions.

They all leave together, pushing out the doors of the lecture hall, out of the maze of the science building, and into the dazzling daylight of their campus.

None of them have slept, and none of them have treated their bodies particularly well, beyond what the people who love them forced them to eat, to drink.

But now? Now they get to lay on the quad – James spreading his jacket down for Lena, Maggie pulling Alex into her arms, Lucy adjusting Winn like he’s a pillow – and they get to laugh, and they get to sleep, and they get to dare to dream that they’re worth it, that they did it, that are, indeed, more than the sum of their scores.
Anonymous asked:

I have a headcanon that Kara is Autistic (I am irl) and Alex is real sweet and protective of her. Maybe high school au?

The glasses help.

The glasses help because they dull the overstimulation.

They help, but Rao, they don’t help everything.

Sometimes, they make things worse.

Because her hands are noisy, and her fingers need the solid feel of the rims underneath their tips.

So she adjusts them constantly – adjusts them when someone expects her to look at them, adjusts them when she jumps when someone touches her, adjusts them when she doesn’t know what to say, because she has her own codes, but it doesn’t seem to match the others’ – and when she adjusts them, people laugh.

They act like she can’t hear. They act like she can’t see.

They act like she doesn’t understand.

But she’s heard her planet scream and she’s seen her planet die and she understands more than any of them ever will.

And she hears them, and she sees them.

And she understands that their hatred exists.

She just doesn’t understand why.

Alex punches them, sometimes.

She punches them when they don’t lay off. When they surround Kara at her locker and make a game of seeing who can get her to stim with her glasses more fiercely.

But they don’t call it stimming.

Because they think she’s the one that doesn’t understand, but really, it’s them that don’t understand… anything.

So Alex punches them, when her words aren’t big enough.

Alex’s hands talk, just like Kara’s do.
And sometimes, they shout.

Just like Kara’s do.

And when Alex is hauled into the principal’s office, it’s Maggie who slips up beside her.

It’s Maggie who looks at her without expecting, without demanding, a direct look back. Maggie who speaks softly because she knows everything else is so loud.

“Hey Kid Danvers. Do you feel like a soft hug? Or maybe something to squeeze?”

Kara grins.

“Why do you ask me?” she wants to know, and she adjusts her glasses and this time, with Maggie at her side, waiting for her big sister to get out of the principal’s office, it feels good, not weird. Relieving, not stupid.

“Because everyone deserves to control how they interact with the world, kid.”

Kara glances at her and shifts so she’s leaning into Maggie’s arms.

The pressure is soft and the pressure is constant, and the pressure is so, so welcome.

Maggie doesn’t move, and Maggie doesn’t speak, because the touch is more than enough stimulation for Kara.

They wait together, in the abandoned, after-school halls, for Alex to emerge.

Kara flinches when she hears Alex yell inside the office.

“No, I don’t care! They were hurting her, they were taunting her, they deserved it! I don’t care if you call my parents, because you know what my mom tells me to do? Protect my little sister. And you all clearly aren’t interested in doing that, so someone has to! And that’s going to be me, forever.”

She comes out of the office twenty minutes later with a lopsided grin on her face.

“You should have heard Jeremiah going off on the old man. Something about punishing his daughter instead of the boys who were being mean to you. It was great. I never knew Dad could get scary like that. It was awesome.”

Kara smiles and says nothing, and Alex sighs and lets the adrenaline rush out of her body slightly.

“Hey, looks like you’re pretty comfy there with Maggie.”

“Your girlfriend’s nice to me,” Kara offers by way of explanation, and Alex blushes hard while Maggie beams.

“Anything for a Danvers girl,” Maggie grins, and Kara curls in on herself proudly and Alex preens.

“Ice cream?” Alex invites them both, and she’s not sure who squeals louder, her sister or her girlfriend.

She just knows it’s the best feeling in the world.
It had been hard.

The whole being friends thing.

Hard because Alex’s eyes were stone when they weren’t flickering down to Maggie’s lips, and hard because it kept tearing open Maggie’s heart that Alex didn’t realize that of course she wanted her – of course she did – but she was trying to do what’s best for her. What’s best for Alex.

She was trying to put Alex first. She was trying to protect Alex.

From herself.

From falling for a girl who didn’t deserve her, who would only break her.

And she was trying to protect herself.

Because she’d fall hard and she’d fall fast – hell, she already has – and then one day she would stop being so bright and shiny to Alex, and Alex would ditch her for some other woman, some more deserving woman, or women, and Maggie has been broken before, but she can’t be broken by Alex Danvers.

Because somehow she already knows that there isn’t enough scotch and tiramisu in the world to fix being broken by Alex Danvers.

So it had been hard.

The business of figuring out how to just be friends.

It had been hard, but Maggie told her she didn’t want to imagine her life without her, and Alex didn’t want to imagine that world, either.

So it was pool the next night and it was pool the night after, and it was late-night poring over case files and it was early-morning breakfast at Noonan’s and it was, eventually, laughter and banter and real, solid friendship.

And it was, eventually, Alex dating other women.

Because Maggie gave up on her before they even began, didn’t she?

Because Maggie had no right or reason to object, did she?

And it was hard.

Hell, it was torture.
Watching Alex get nervous about what to wear, what to say, where to go.

Listening to Alex’s recaps, watching Alex blush.

It was torture, but Alex didn’t know.

Didn’t know, because somehow, the secret agent had missed the one thing that Maggie always assumed screamed off of her body: that she wanted Alex. No, more than wanted her. Respected her. Revered her. Liked her. Cared about her. A lot. Could love her. For her whole life.

It was torture, but Alex didn’t know.

Or at least, Maggie thought Alex didn’t know. She wondered sometimes, in her more confident moments – in the moments where she could swear Alex’s eyes were drifting down to fixate on Maggie’s lips; in the moments where she could swear Alex’s breath hitched when Maggie touched her arm while they played pool; in the moments where she could swear Alex tensed up every time Maggie so much as greeted Darla – if Alex did know.

What she was doing to Maggie.

Because she never brought dates to the bar.

Never brought dates in front of Maggie.

So when Maggie is having yet another night drinking alone at the bar, she’s not cautious about who she’ll run into, about what she’ll see, when she pushes open the multistall bathroom door.

She expects quiet.

She doesn’t expect Alex.

Alex, pinned against the space between two stalls, her head tossed back against the cold metal, her breathing ragged, her back arched.

With some blonde woman’s hand up her shirt and lips on her throat.

Maggie contemplates leaving.

She contemplates leaving and she contemplates screaming and she contemplates throwing up in the alley before getting on her Triumph and riding away, away, away.

Fast.

She contemplates it, but Alex chooses exactly that moment to open her eyes – to glance down – and her eyes lock into Maggie’s.

Hard.

And Maggie’s seething anger rides the wave of how perversely turned on she is, and her mouth speaks before her brain can think.

“Don’t you think the lady deserves something better than a quick fuck in a bathroom stall?”

Her mouth speaks before her brain can think, which makes her voice more raw, more vulnerable, more hurt, than enraged or indignant or even jealous.
She wants to run, now.

But the woman is whipping around, her hand retreating from Alex’s chest, a combination of irritation and anger on her lips.

“Who the hell are you?” she demands, and Alex just leans against the metal of the stalls like it’s holding her up. Because it is.

“Maggie,” Alex says, and it’s almost a whisper, almost an apology, almost an explanation.

“I asked you something first,” Maggie counters, ignoring Alex’s prayer, spine straight and eyes anywhere but Alex’s mussed hair, swollen lips, rumpled shirt.

Realization dawns on the other woman’s face, and she smirks as she glances between the woman she was just fucking and the woman who’s demanding she give Alex better than a bar bathroom.

“So you’re the one she’s hung up on,” the woman says, and Alex groans softly, and Maggie blinks.

“What?”

“This is your detective, isn’t it?” The woman smirks and doesn’t wait for an answer. “She talks about you a lot. Hell, I half-expected her to scream your name just now. I think you have your answer now, sweetheart,” she turns to Alex. She leans into her ear and she whispers hotly, “She likes you.”

She runs a slow fingertip down Alex’s side, gives Maggie a once-over, and saunters out of the bathroom with a small smirk on her face.

Alex splutters and Alex tries, desperately, to breathe.

“Why did she say that?”

“Say what, Danvers?”

“That you like me.”

“I dunno, you can always catch up to her and ask – “

“Maggie.”

“Alex.”

“Was she right?”

“Danvers – “

“Was she right.”

There’s a silence, a pause, in which they both live entire lives, and Alex shifts off the stall, toward Maggie, eyes wide and lips parted and voice soft, soft, soft.

“Was she right, Maggie?”

“It doesn’t matter, Alex, I’d only wind up hurting you – “

“So she was right.”
“Alex.”

“Take me on a date.”

“What?”

“I don’t want to be dating these other women, Maggie. I mean, it’s been nice and it’s been… but I just… I wanna be dating you. I thought you didn’t want me, but if – “

“I told you, Alex. That was never why I…”

“So take me on a date.”

“Take you on a date.”

Alex takes her hands and smiles soft, smiles slow, smiles shy and smiles perfect.

“You said I deserve better than a quick fuck in a bathroom stall. So show me what I deserve.”

And Maggie can’t help it: she smiles, too, and the entire bar lights up.

“It’d be my honor, Danvers.”
anonymous asked:

I don't know why but when there's sexual tension I really need Alex to be talking to Maggie about something trivial (movie choice or something) but the infliction she puts on it makes it sound very suggestive and she just stares Maggie in the eyes (and the lips) and she just undoes Maggies' belt and pulls it out all slow and doesn't look down the whole time. Idk I'm just imagining it and it's REALLY hot. (This isn't a prompt but it'd be cool if it was treated as one) (ily)

Maggie’s been sending her filthy texts all. Damn. Day.

Texts about I want you sit on my face, Danvers.

Texts about Are you in your lab right now? God, I’d love to bend you over that lab bench you have and fuck you until you cum so good for me.

Texts about I’m gonna make you scream so loud tonight, Danvers.

Texts about I love you, babe. I love you so damn much.

It’s all well and good for Maggie – she’s swamped with paperwork, Alex knows, so she’s stuck in the precinct, but damn, at least her boss isn’t her telepathic father figure.

And the worst part? The most torturous part, the most wicked part?

When Alex gets home that night, Maggie acts like she hasn’t been riling Alex up all day.

She just smiles and greets her: happy, not seductive; cute, not sexy.

Like she hasn’t been making Alex drip for her all damn day.

Alex assesses Maggie’s game immediately; and immediately decides that two can play it.

She kisses her hello with no fire – with love, yes, god yes, but with no undertones, no hints of all the things she’s been fantasizing about all day – and she returns her innocent smile and she starts rambling on about some experiment or other that she’s running in the lab, and how about you, how was your day, babe?

She listens and she nods and mmhmmms in all the right places, and when Maggie says she just wants to settle in for a movie because god, that paperwork was more draining than a day in the field, Alex saunters up to stand right in front of her.

“I could go for a movie too, babe,” she says, her voice caressing the term movie like it’s one of the filthiest words that’s ever crossed her lips. Her eyes are locked into Maggie’s, and she’s suppressing a smirk because Maggie’s knees are suddenly going weak and god, vengeance has never been sweeter.
Because Alex’s eyes are locked, hard, down into Maggie’s, but her fingers?

Her fingers are unbuckling Maggie’s belt, all on their own, her gaze never straying from the path between Maggie’s eyes and her lips. God, her lips.

The only sound in the apartment is the sound of Alex unbuckling Maggie’s belt, metal against fake leather against denim against detective shield, mixed with Maggie’s hitched breath and Alex’s tortuously casual tone.

“I could go for any kind of movie, really. Action.”

Eyes locked in Maggie’s, her belt successfully undone, Alex starts to pull.

Slow, steady.

She reads Maggie’s dilating pupils for the consent she needs, and she talks her way through pulling Maggie’s belt off.

Slow.

Steady.

“Sci fi.” The belt slips out of the first loop.

“Horror.” The second loop, and Maggie bites her lip.

“A western.” The loop behind her back, and Alex fights to keep herself from grinding her hips forward here and now.

“Hell, I could even go for a rom com.” Another smooth tug, and Maggie’s belt is nearly off, Alex’s gaze still searing into her eyes, her lips.

“Any kind of movie you want, Sawyer. Is what I wanna give you tonight.”

She lets Maggie’s belt clatter to the kitchen floor, and it’s the only sound that resonates in the moment before Alex slips her index fingers through Maggie’s front belt loops and pulls her hips close, pulls her hips fast, pulls her hips hard.

Maggie’s gasp and Alex’s hiss fill the slowly closing gap between their parted lips.

“Any kind of movie, Danvers?” Maggie smiles into their kiss.

“I’m also not opposed to more than one genre,” Alex rasps, and Maggie nearly swoons.

“Take me to bed, Alex,” is the last articulate thing she says – other than Alex’s first name, other than Alex’s last name, other than please babe don’t stop, other than you like it like that, babygirl?, other than I love you, I love you, I love you, I love you – all night long.

Sorry to all non-caps people I got a bit excited. Pretty please may we have one of your wonderful fics about the evolution of The Nudge™ :) :) :)

She’s not sure, at first, how Alex feels about PDA.

Hell, she’s not sure how she feels about PDA.

She’s been out for over a decade, and she’s unapologetic about who she is. She’s not afraid of people’s reactions.

Anymore.

But people’s reactions used to get her bruised lips and black eyes and other people’s spit on her clothes.

People’s reactions cost her her father. Her family. Her home. Her childhood.

But she’s better with it, now. She thinks.

She’s just not sure where Alex is at.

Because Alex is just coming out, and Alex is just getting comfortable, and Alex is just starting to love her new normal.

And sure, Alex grabbed her by the forearm and made out with her in the bar, damn who could see, but that was impulse, that was instinct, that was passion.

Day-to-day life is different. And Maggie isn’t sure what Alex will want.

And, if she’s honest, she doesn’t want to make Alex feel pressured by asking. Doesn’t want Alex starting to think that she has to be the perfect girlfriend, and to be the perfect girlfriend, she needs to love PDA.

She doesn’t want to give Alex that kind of pressure, even if unintentionally.

So she doesn’t try to hold Alex’s hand in public, and she doesn’t try to kiss her in public.

But god, does she want to touch her.

So sometimes, when they’re walking, and Alex can’t help herself from being a massive nerd, Maggie nudges her.

Never with her elbows into her ribs, like the kids did in high school. That always looked like it hurt, and anyway, she and Alex both have enough bruises on their torsos from training, from the field, that Maggie would never want to nudge her that way.
Always with her shoulder. Softly. Playfully, into Alex’s arm.

It starts when they’re walking out of a movie theater and Alex is catching her breath after a five minute rant on the inaccuracies of the film’s science. Maggie is giggling, and she nudges her shoulder into Alex’s arm.

“Nerd,” she smiles, all dimples, and her heart leaps when Alex nudges her right back.

It happens again when she’s cooking Alex dinner for the first time.

She’s nervous and she’s almost embarrassed, but Alex is stealing pieces of sliced peppers from the cutting board and she’s calling it helping, and Maggie nudges her, laughing.

“Thief,” she grins, and Alex doesn’t deny it, but she nudges her back and swipes another few slices before Maggie can slide them into a pan.

It becomes a habit and it becomes a home.

It becomes a check-in and it becomes a language.

An unspoken way to say, “you make me smile more than anyone ever has.”

A nonverbal way to say, “I’ve never laughed like this before.”

A silent way to say, “I’m falling in love with you, you massive nerd.”

It’s losing bets about vegan ice cream and sleepovers and it’s how they’re That Couple with their yoga mats and flirtatious banter.

It’s the stable unsteadiness of falling irreparably, irretrievably. Joyfully.

Until all the things that pass between their eyes when they look at each other, when they laugh together, no longer go unspoken.

Until their nudge is still their way of letting love, letting affection, letting playfulness and letting joy – that neither of them used to get nearly enough of – pass between them, but it can accompany, now, the spoken words of love, the verbally declared desire for a lifetime of firsts, the whispered and the shouted proclamations of this is the woman I want to spend my life with.

And when James asks them if they’ll be each other’s anchors in sickness and in health, in laughter and in sorrow, in winning at pool and losing at darts, they hold hands with tears in their eyes and they laugh and they nudge each other.

Maggie first, then Alex right back.

They nudge each other, and they’ve never smiled this big, and James blinks away tears, and James declares them wife and wife.

Post-2×19 prompt: Maggie now always needs to hold Alex oh so close to sleep at night

She has dreams about drowning.
Dreams about drowning, about her lungs burning.
Dreams about dying.
But she’s not herself, in these dreams.
She looks at the glass cage – the one that’s become the tank that she will die in, that she is dying in – and she doesn’t see her own reflection.
She sees Alex’s.
Because she’s not drowning.
Alex is.
Her Alex.

After the first couple of times she wakes up, trying not to gasp for air, trying not to scream, she stops sleeping all together.

Stops sleeping, that is, unless Alex is right next to her.

Unless Alex is in her arms – unless she’s in Alex’s – unless they’re naked and skin-to-skin and warm and dry and breathing, breathing, breathing.

She stops sleeping, unless Alex’s heartbeat is steady under her ear. Unless Alex has her arm wrapped around Maggie’s shoulder, holding her so, so, so close, Maggie’s leg wrapped over Alex’s, arm thrown over her stomach, her head on Alex’s bare chest, listening to her breathe. Listening to her heart.

“I love you,” she’ll whisper with every breath, with every exhale, with every kiss she presses to Alex’s collarbone.

“I love you, I love you, I love you, I love you,” she’ll murmur long after Alex has fallen asleep, long after Alex’s breathing has evened out. Long after Alex has twitched away the initial images she has when she closes her eyes now. Long after Maggie has kissed away her nightmares.

“I love you, Ally,” she’ll tell her as she drifts to sleep herself, her body wrapped around Alex’s, alive, alive.

Alive.
Chapter 402

Chapter Summary

anonymous asked:
Do you think Alex ever beat herself up because she met a great guy but she just couldn't fall for him, be into him? And she was scared of being messed up and missing out on something great and she was angry with herself? She could have, right? It wouldn't have been her fault, right? And she doesn't 'deserve' to be alone forever because she can't make it work with him, right...?

He was sweet.
Matt Capraro.
He was sweet and he was smart and he was a decent writer.
He wrote poetry about them, when they weren’t studying.
When they weren’t in the shadowing doctors in the hospital.
He was sweet. Her med school boyfriend.
He was sweet, and he wasn’t like the guys she picked up in clubs. He was gentle with her and he didn’t shove her tongue down her throat the second they started kissing and he asked every time he took her clothes off, went slow every time he fucked her.
“He’s great,” she’d tell Eliza when Eliza would call to check up. Would call to congratulate her for balancing med school and a boyfriend.
“Is he giving you the space you need to focus on your studies, Alex?” her mother would ask, and Alex would say yes, because yes, yes, he was.
Because he was great. Really, he was.
“I didn’t understand why I couldn’t really fall for him,” Alex tells Maggie years later, and Maggie listens, and she doesn’t ask Alex why she dated him anyway. Because Alex will say it, when Alex is ready.
“He was funny, you know? He’d make me laugh. And that was hard to do, then. In med school. I had a rough time, you know? With the pressure, with everything. But he’d make sure I ate and he’d write me poetry.” She chuckles to herself, and Maggie grins while she swipes her thumb over Alex’s open palm, listening. Making a note to herself that Alex would like to have poetry written about them.
But then Alex’s faint smile is cracking her voice, and her tears are flooded, because she’s in love with Maggie, god, that she’s sure about, but it still shocks her.
It still shocks her, every time she realizes – more and more every day – just how much the world assuming she was straight, the world not giving her any other representation, any other options, really hurt her.

Could have killed her.

“And I tried to love him, you know? I really did.” Maggie nods softly, because she knows exactly where this is going. “I thought... I thought if I couldn’t make it work with this great guy, you know, then I didn’t deserve to make it work with anybody. Like there was something wrong with me for not being wild about him. Everyone always told me how lucky I was, you know, to have such a sweet guy, and that’s the thing. He was sweet. He wasn’t like, sweet to everyone else and then crappy to me. He was good to me. But I just couldn’t…”

She wipes her eyes with the back of her index finger and she sighs and breathes out a soft laugh, looking into Maggie’s understanding eyes.

“Now that I’m thinking of it, he reminds me a little of like... what Winn and James’s kid would be like, if they had a kid. Like, a combination of both of them. How sweet they are, how thoughtful, and smart, and loyal, you know? Don’t you dare tell either of them that.”

“Your secret’s safe with me, Danvers.”

They both smile, and Maggie kisses her hand, and Alex continues.

“I just figured, it was me, you know? That something was wrong with me, that I couldn’t be happy with him, couldn’t love him like that. He broke up with me, eventually. I think he knew. Maybe not that I’m a lesbian, but he knew I wasn’t into him like he was into me.”

She chuckles.

“Like I said: he was a good guy. But if he hadn’t… god, Maggie, I can’t imagine... I don’t know how I would have broken up with him. How I would have been brave enough to. Because I figured I had to stay with him, right, how could I hurt him when he was nothing but good to me?”

Maggie tilts her head and strokes Alex’s hair and cheek with the back of her hand, the front of her thumb.

“You would have met me anyway, Danvers. You would have met me and I would have been your friend. I would have told you that you deserve to be happy, and there’s nothing wrong with you for not being in love with him, and that you’re brave and amazing for being able to admit it, and that you deserve a full and happy life, and you’re allowed to pursue that for yourself, even if it means breaking up with someone who everyone else says should be perfect for you.”

Alex’s eyes fill with tears again, a rush of what she’d felt when she first came out to Maggie; that relief, that surge of understanding, of acceptance, of... loving herself.

Maggie smirks, then, and her voice drops just a bit.

“And then you would have broken up with him and I would have swept you off your feet with my charm and good looks.”

Alex laughs, full of love, full of the happiness she hadn’t known how to find before – full of the happiness that she now knows she deserves – as she pulls Maggie in for a kiss.

“Oh, you would have, huh?”

“Every time, Danvers. Every time.”

[small nudge] if you're out of stuff to do i left you a reply on a requests post a couple days back asking for fic of Alex healing and growing after cutting Eliza out of her life ('cause of the emotional abuse). no pressure or anything i just. yeah. mother's day was last weekend and yesterday was the 1yr of me not talking to my own mother for the same reasons, and I doubt I'm the only person who's having Feelings about all this rn lmao. still think you're awesome btw.

She never recognized the pattern.

Never recognized the pattern, and J’onn waited patiently for her to figure it out on her own, not wanting to violate her privacy by sharing the insights he got by how damn loudly his Earth daughter thinks.

Because she thinks very loudly, on the mornings after her phone calls with Eliza.

She thinks very loudly, and her thinking is about how inadequate she is. How imperfect. How disappointing.

And she never recognized the pattern, but she would bruise her knuckles in training, and she would work the new DEO recruits harder, and she would work herself so hard she nearly vomited.

Always on the days that followed the nights she talked to her mother.

She never noticed the pattern, but Maggie does.

Maggie notices and Maggie cleans up the glass when Alex throws her bourbon at the opposite wall, and Maggie makes a note to bring up her drinking after they process this latest call with her mother, this latest fight, this latest abuse.

Maggie holds her when she sobs apologies and Maggie holds her when she begs forgiveness and Maggie knows that it’s not only Maggie she’s seeking forgiveness from.

It’s Eliza, yes, but it’s Kara, and it’s Jeremiah.

Because in Alex’s eyes – after she talks to Eliza, anyway – she reliably believes that she’s failed them both.

So Maggie holds her and Maggie gently refuses to make love to her even when Alex begs for it, begs hard and begs long; refuses because Alex has liquor on her breath and tears in her eyes, and Maggie won’t, ever, take advantage of that.

Even with Alex begging her to fuck away her inadequacy. To make her feel worthwhile. To make her feel good enough.

Maggie focuses on making her feel good enough in other ways.
Whispered words and soft kisses all over her face, strong arms and gentle touches.

And when it’s morning and Alex wakes up with distant eyes and a vacant voice, Maggie asks her.

Asks her, in a small voice – terrified that Alex will be furious with her, will leave her, will think she’s accusing Alex of being a bad daughter, a bad person – if she’s ever considered cutting Eliza out of her life. At least for a little while.

Alex doesn’t yell and Alex doesn’t snap at her. She doesn’t reach for bourbon. Instead, she collapses back down onto the bed and she reaches for Maggie’s hand.

“But wouldn’t I be a terrible daughter if I did that? I mean, my mom, she’s not… she… she hugged me when I came out, Maggie, she… she’s so good to you, and she loves me, and she paid for college, and med school, and she loves me, she really does, she would be crushed if I stopped talking to her. Wouldn’t it be mean? Wouldn’t it just make things worse? I mean, I only get upset when we talk because I overreact and I’m oversensitive – ”

“Alex Danvers. You are not oversensitive and you don’t overreact to your mom. You respond to her. Rationally. It’s rational for you to feel like you have to be perfect – to hold yourself to impossible and unhealthy standards – because of everything she expects from you. You respond to her telling you that you’re not good enough, that everything that happens with Kara is your fault. Alex, your mom… you’re right. She probably loves you. Fine. But that doesn’t make her a great parent, or even a good one. Her loving you doesn’t make her good at loving you: it doesn’t make you two have a healthy relationship.”

“But I can’t just cut her off, Maggie. Then everything would be my fault.”

“No. Nothing would be your fault, Ally. You’d just be asserting what you need. You’d be doing what’s right for you. And you’d be setting a new standard for how your mom has to treat you.”

Alex bites the inside of her cheek and she thinks and she listens and she argues and she thinks some more.

She tells Eliza that she needs to take some time away from their relationship a couple of weeks later. Tells her that she doesn’t know how long it’s going to take, but to please leave their contact in her control.

She stops training so hard she throws up right away; but at first, she doesn’t understand why.

It’s easier for her to stick to one beer, once in a while, socially, rather than half a bottle of bourbon, often, on her own; but at first, she doesn’t understand why.

She also doesn’t understand, at least not at first, why she stops – slowly, slowly – blaming herself when Kara has a bad day. She doesn’t stop caring, and she doesn’t stop trying to make her little sister feel better, but the pit in her stomach, gnawing, ripping, that Kara’s bad day – whatever the reason – is her fault, her fault, her fault, starts diminishing. She barely notices when it disappears almost completely, the healing is so gradual.

She surrounds herself with a little sister who adores her and a girlfriend who supports her and a father who is unfailingly proud of her and brothers who tease her but always, always, always love her.

She surrounds herself with affirmation and she surrounds herself with validation, and after a while, she realizes that she’s not waking up with such burning loathing for herself anymore.
It takes time – it takes years – but eventually, when she’s laying awake with Maggie sleeping in her arms, she realizes that she really loves the person she is.

It feels strange and it feels unfamiliar, but god, god, god, does it feel good.

Hi! You are amazing and your writing lights up my day. There's something I would like to see. We're always portraying Eliza being hard on Alex and I really feel that. I also love my mom and I'm sure she loves me, but I grew up with high expectations from her, she was always harsh without even noticing. I just wanted you to write something that showed Eliza being sorry for the way she treated Alex, taking the blame for once, that really comin from her. And also showing them just loving each other Alex has been fighting with her for years.

Usually, without acknowledging the real problems. Usually, making mountains out of seeming molehills, because the mountains are too terrifying, too vulnerable, to mention.

Sometimes, tackling the real problems head on.

"Why hasn’t it ever been enough?"

It takes Eliza a lot to realize how deep the scars she caused go.

It takes Eliza a lot to realize that what she’d thought of as support, Alex had received as abuse. As condemnation. As affirmation, not of how smart and strong she is, but as affirmation that she really is worthless at the core.

It takes Eliza a combination of Alex’s sister and Alex’s girlfriend to unveil her denial, her unwillingness to see just how badly she’s damaged the daughter she loved more than anything in this world.

It takes Kara, rising from the Thanksgiving table, and telling Eliza point-blank that instead of reprimanding Alex for drinking so much, Eliza should stop to consider why she is, what she’s coping with, and she knows Eliza loves her but Rao, couldn’t she show Alex that a little more often instead of just telling her and expecting her to feel it?

It takes Maggie, taking Alex’s hand into one of hers and the car keys with her other, thanking Eliza for her hospitality but telling her in no uncertain terms that she couldn’t stay under a roof where the woman she loves is being made to constantly feel like she’s not enough, because Alex is more than enough just as she is, and she’s sorry, but they can’t stay somewhere that’s so hostile to Alex’s ability to recognize how incredible she really is.

Eliza doesn’t call for a week.

Kara texts to tell her that Alex needs time.

Maggie texts to tell her that Alex needs space.

Alex doesn’t text at all, simply nodding her red-eyed approval at the messages her sister and her Eliza doesn’t call for a week, but when she does call, she knows what she has to say, and – for the first time – she understands why she has to say it. And she feels it. Means it.

“Alex,” she says softly, stopping herself from saying her full name, because Kara’s pointed out how Alex flinches at her full name, every time, so why use it as a weapon? “Everything you’ve said to me over the years? About me making you feel responsible for Kara, like the weight of the world is on your shoulders? You’ve been right, all this time. Of course you have. My beautiful daughter. I took a fourteen year old child and I put the weight, not only of this world, but of another, on her shoulders – on your shoulders, my Alex – and I blamed you for things that weren’t, ever, your fault. When your father was taken by the DEO, I… and this isn’t an excuse, Alex, I have no excuses… I expected you to… to somehow replace him while also living up to impossible standards as a sister to Kara, and I… I didn’t see how you suffered. I didn’t want to see it, Alex, because if I did, then I… I would never be able to forgive myself. But that’s my problem, my darling daughter, not yours. I can’t ask for your forgiveness, Alex, because I’ve already asked for far too much from you, but I… I wanted to say that, forgiveness or not, I am sorry. And I love you. I love you more than I’ve ever loved anyone, and I… I will do better, Alex. If you want to give me the opportunity. I know you’re a grown woman, and I am so, so proud of the woman you’ve become – I’m so sorry I don’t say that enough – but I’d still love the opportunity to be a better mother to you. The mother you deserve. The mother you should have had all these years.”

Alex can’t speak because all Alex can do is sob, but Maggie drives her to Midvale the next morning, and she waits in the car, a small, somewhat sad smile on her face while Alex falls into her mother’s arms and sobs some more.

But the sobs are happier, now, than they have been in the past, and when Alex and Eliza both come to the car to insist Maggie come inside and eat with them – Eliza’s bought tiramisu, and Alex’s favorite pie, not Kara’s – Alex makes sure to hold Maggie close to her side, all day, all night, pressing extra kisses to her face.

And Eliza gives her extra attention, extra love, too, because she might be making up for lost time with Alex, but Maggie has lost time with parents to be made up for too.

And that idea?

Eliza, mothering both her and her girlfriend with warm smiles and affectionate pet names and incredible cooking and even more incredible nerd talk?

Makes Alex the happiest woman in the world.

Chapter Summary

anonymous asked:
Hi, I know you're not taking prompts, so feel free to ignore me.. but I'm in love with my best friend and she just got a boyfriend, so I was wondering if you could write about Alex and maybe Maggie too comforting a baby gay teenager about something like this? That would mean so much to me. Also, you're incredible, all the love and advice you give out on this page, we're all so grateful for you.

He does what he always does.

He hears about a sad baby queer from his old high school, and he takes the train back to National City as soon as he gets out of physics lab, and he picks them up and takes them to dinner at Maggie’s.

Mags, I’m bringing a newbie over tonight. They’re all messed up because their best friend just got herself a man. They’re gay as all hell for this girl and they really, really, reallllllly like pizza.

Maggie smirks when she reads it and forwards it to Alex.

I guess it’s pizza tonight, babe. Ade’s bringing a kid over – that okay?

Of course it’s okay.

Of course it’s okay, because the whole gay thing might be wildly new to Alex, but she’s taken to it like she takes to everything: intently. Studiously. Full-bodied and wholehearted and no looking back.

And a huge part of her coming out was Maggie, was Adrian, helping her through it, teaching her, showing her, helping her… love her.

And Alex Danvers is about nothing if not giving back.

So she and Maggie have taken to faux-adopting all the queer kids – Adrian calls them strays, and says they should all get jackets as Maggie and Alex chuckle about their apartments being the Island of Misfit Toys, and laugh even further when Adrian is too young to get the reference – that Adrian brings home with him.

Home.

Their home.

Open. Always.

So it’s pizza night and J’onn lets Alex off early with a soft smile and a gentle hand on her shoulder: I’m proud of you, Alex, he tells her, and she could cry with relief, because it wasn’t too long ago she was terrified that being a lesbian would make her a… disappointment. Somehow.
But her space father’s eyes are shining, and the slight breeze feels amazing, if not a little harsh, whipping over her riding gear as she speeds her Ducati home.

Home.

Adrian and Maggie are already there – already home – already cracking open bottles of root beer and laughing about something or other with a curvy, cautiously beaming teenager with a fade and perfect eyeliner and a dimpled smile.

Alex hugs Adrian and kisses Maggie – awwwwww, Adrian sing-songs, and Maggie reaches over to give him a soft shove without opening her eyes, without taking her lips off of Alex’s – and, when they’re done – finally, Adrian giggles, and it’s Alex who fake-shoves him this time, but the teasing gesture doesn’t disguise her blush – Alex holds out her hand to the new kid.

“Hey, I’m Alex,” she offers, and the kid takes her hand almost eagerly.

“Em,” they say, and Alex grins.

“A good name,” she affirms, and Em beams as they lean into Adrian with excitement.

Sometimes, with the kids Adrian brings over, it only takes minutes before they break down, before they cry, before they bare their souls and beg for healing that the rest of the world refuses to give them.

And other times, most of the night is about fun, is about forgetting, is about living in a world they want to live in, if only just for one night, to sustain them, to get them through, to give them hope.

Tonight is a combination.

Because Em laughs at Adrian’s terrible jokes and they even laugh at Alex’s worse ones, but they all catch them with their eyes glued to their phone, always eager for a text, always sad when there, inevitably, isn’t one.

“She used to text all the time, huh?” Adrian asks when everyone’s just about done with pizza, just about ready for Alex and Maggie to bicker about vegan ice cream.

Em’s spine stiffens.

“We don’t have to talk about it if you don’t want, I’m sorry,” Adrian starts, but Em shakes their head and fidgets with the hem of their sweater dress, with the collar of the shirt that they’re wearing under it.

“No, we can, I just… I don’t wanna bring down the mood.”

Maggie leans forward and shakes her head. “Danvers here is about to start insulting my dessert choices, Em: trust me, it’s not you who’s gonna bring down the mood.”

Em chuckles and nods, chewing the inside of their cheek, chewing on their words.

“I have this friend. This best friend. She’s been my best friend since we were ten. So, forever. Jessica, her name is. And she was there for me when I came out as gay, and she used my pronouns right away when I came out as genderqueer, and we used to… we used to talk all the time, text all the time… And she just got a boyfriend, and I’m an ass – sorry, can I say that? – because I should be happy for her, right?”
Em’s voice squeaks, and Maggie hesitates with her hand slightly above Em’s knee. Em nods and Maggie puts her hand down and squeezes supportively.

“And I am, she seems… he’s a nice guy, you know, but I’m such a jerk, because I love her, I’ve been in love with her since forever, and I should be happy for her, but now when we talk, it’s all about him, him, him, and I try to be supportive and all that, you know, but it’s killing me. It’s killing me, it literally feels like… I don’t know. I’m not trying to be overdramatic. I’m sorry. We don’t have to talk about me, I’m sorry, I – “

“Hey, hey, no, you’re okay. This is why Adrian brings all the baby queers here. You’re okay,” Maggie tells her, and Em accepts the napkin Adrian passes them to wipe their eyes.

“And you’re not being selfish, you know,” Alex chimes. “I used to…” She chews on her own cheek and stares at the table for a moment, collecting her words, her thoughts, her traumas. “I used to think the entire world rode on how much I devoted my life to my little sister. And I still do: devote my life to her. But before, it was… I thought that meant I couldn’t ever do anything for me. Feel anything. For me. I would push my feelings down because it was all about making her happy, only about that… and the balance is hard. I’m still figuring it out. But these two clowns help.”

“Oohh, don’t Alex, you know how I feel about clowns.”

“You and Winn should form a support group.”

Em and Maggie exchange a silent giggle at Adrian and Alex’s quips.

“But really, Em,” Alex turns her attention back to the new kid. “You’re allowed to be hurt. You’re allowed to be in pain. Not that she’s doing anything wrong, this Jessica girl, but you’re allowed to have feelings. And if you want to, you’re allowed to talk to her about them. She’s still your best friend, you know?”

“Is your sister still your best friend?” Em wants to know, terror in their voice.

“Yeah. Yeah, she is. And it’s different, obviously, you being in love with Jessica, but listen. It’s literally my job to figure out people’s strengths and weaknesses, basically just from looking at them. And you, Em? You’re made of strength. It’s going to be hard, getting through this. But you will. I promise.”

Maggie beams softly at her girlfriend and nods toward Adrian.

“Ade’s been gaga over his best friends more than once, and somehow he’s still in one piece.”

Adrian puts a dramatic hand over his heart, and the other over his forehead. “Barely. No but really, Em, Alex and Maggie are right. You’re gonna get through it: you’re not by yourself. Okay?”

Em breathes and looks from their surrogate older brother to their new queer moms, understanding and pride and faith resonating in each of their eyes.

They nod slowly, until a soft smile creeps onto their face.

“So. Vegan versus regular ice cream, huh?”

“Oh my god, now you’ve done it, they’re never gonna stop.”

And they don’t. But somehow, watching them laugh and tease and giggle and kiss is all the hope Em needs.

Chapter Summary

anonymous asked:
If you're in the mood to write some smut, I would love to read some dirty talking at a place where dirty talk shouldn't be happening and one gets very flustered and has to go "deal with this" and the other secretly follows them and walks in on them getting themself off and joins in yes please

Maggie’s signed all the paperwork with Pam and she’s been given separate tours from Winn, Vasquez, J’onn, and, of course, from Alex.

She has, now, pretty much free reign to stroll through the DEO as she pleases.

Her own retinal scan and everything.

Usually, she uses it for Space Dad Approved Reasons.

Reasons like bursting in to help the DEO plan a defense against Cadmus, against Daxamites, against the U.S. military.

Reasons like bringing his Earth Daughter lunch because she knows Kara’s busy at CatCo and Alex will forget to eat otherwise.

Reasons like picking up Alex after a sixteen hour shift when she would otherwise forget that it’s well-past time to stop working and go home.

But sometimes?

Sometimes, Maggie uses her all-access pass to the DEO for reasons that make J’onn desperately wish his Earth daughters didn’t think so damn loudly.

Because Maggie steals behind Alex is Alex’s lab, and slips her hands around Alex’s hips.

“Mmmm, you look so damn fuckable like this, Danvers.”

Alex squeaks and jumps, her face immediately reddening, and Maggie studies her face carefully.

“That okay, Alex?”

Alex’s eyes shift around the lab, and her heady grin grows with each passing second of silence, of Maggie’s breath on her neck.

“Yeah,” she whispers, and feels more than sees Maggie grin.

“So what are you working on?” Maggie asks at a typical – a socially acceptable, no-I’m-most-certainly-not-talking-my-girlfriend-nearly-to-orgasm – volume and tone as another couple of agents walk into the lab and nod at Agent Danvers and her girlfriend.

Alex gulps and tries not to splutter through her explanation.
Maggie mhmms in all the right places, and nods at all the right times, but the words that slip past her lips next have nothing to do with the molecular structure of Daxamite DNA.

“I wanna go home and grab your glasses and eat you out right here. While you’re wearing nothing but those glasses.”

Alex rapidly transforms her gasp into a cough, her moan into a clearing of her throat.

“Okay?” Maggie confirms, and Alex’s eyes flutter closed over her microscope, and she doesn’t move her body – though god, how she wants to – and she nods.

Maggie leans up on her tip toes and whispers, soft, hot, and low, right into Alex’s ear.

“Are you getting wet for me, Agent Danvers?”

Alex nods, again almost imperceptibly, and she bites her lip as she changes slides.

“Good. Because I want to slip inside you and stretch you out until you can’t do anything but scream my name.”

Alex bites down on her lip harder to prevent the scream that she needs to let out right. The fuck. Now.

“I’m going to uh… check the progress of those latest blood samples. The ones we need for the… the study,” she announces in a most-certainly-not-thinking-about-my-girlfriend-fucking-me-right-now voice.

She adds, lower, to Maggie, “I have to go deal with this. You… you just… I…” She splutters and she blushes and she stares at Maggie’s lips and she forces her eyes away because she needs to deal with this. Now.

Maggie grins, and Maggie follows.

She loses track of her girlfriend for a moment, as she turns down another long DEO corridor, but she finds her in the first supply closet she finds, head tilted back, eyes fluttered closed, one hand bracing her body against a table, the other in her unzipped black pants.

Maggie’s name is on her parted, panting lips, and it’s one of the hottest, most beautiful things Maggie’s ever seen.

“Alex?” she asks, and her voice is softer, sweeter, than it had been a few minutes ago.

Alex’s eyes snap open and her body freezes before it relaxes – before she relaxes.

“Lock the door,” she rasps, and Maggie obeys, suddenly shy, suddenly wide-eyed. Suddenly in awe of the power of this woman; the raw desire this perfect, gorgeous woman has for… her.

Alex slips her hand out of her pants and steps toward the door; toward her girlfriend.

Her girlfriend who was just deriving a great deal of pleasure from teasing her, from driving her absolutely out of her mind. In her own lab.

And Alex Danvers? Is nothing if not competitive.

And she decides two can play at that game.
Maggie’s back is against the door and Alex’s chest is flush against hers before Maggie can react.

“Color?” Alex husks, pupils dilating dangerously, lovingly, needily, her hands loose – ready to either release or hold harder – on Maggie’s wrists, pinned above her head.

Maggie’s eyes drift up to where Alex has her hands pushed down, and she barely stifles a moan. “Green, Alex,” she whispers, and Alex’s hands tighten, and she brings her lips down to meet Maggie’s – hard and fierce and knowing exactly, exactly, exactly, what she wants.

Maggie grinds her hips forward as they kiss, as Alex keeps her hands immobile above her head. Desperate for pressure from Alex’s thigh, desperate to touch her, desperate, desperate, desperate.

But Alex chuckles into their kiss and she pulls her lower body away from Maggie’s. Her whine almost makes Alex relent – almost – but instead, she bends to nip at Maggie’s neck, to flit her tongue across Maggie’s earlobe, whispering huskily into her ear.

“You were having such a good time teasing me, Sawyer. You shouldn’t deal out what you can’t take, hmmm?”

“Alex,” Maggie whispers, helpless, writhing, desperate for Alex’s pressure between her legs, desperate for… for Alex.

She glances up at Maggie’s wrists, and asks again.

“All good?”

Maggie nods, biting her lip.

“Please, Al,” she begs, and Alex arches an eyebrow.

“Thought you wanted to fuck me in the DEO,” she rasps, and Maggie gasps raggedly as she gets her girlfriend’s meaning.

“Please, Agent Danvers,” she whispers.

“Please what, Maggie?”

“Please let me touch you,” Maggie whines, and Alex drags her eyes up and down Maggie’s body and smirks as she presses a quick kiss to Maggie’s forehead.

“Is that all you want?” she demands, and Maggie shakes her head. “So tell me.”

“I want you to fuck me.” Alex waits. Maggie gulps. “I want you to fuck me, Agent Danvers.”

Alex grins and groans and takes one of her hands off of Maggie’s wrists, traipsing down her arms, her face, her throat, her chest, her torso, to the buckle of her belt.

She sets her focus on that damn buckle, and the look of concentration, of raw desire, of pure focus and dedication, lights a very different kind of fire in Maggie’s core than the one already burning.

Before Alex can react, Maggie flips her so it’s Alex with her back against the door, Alex with her hands pinned above her head, Alex panting and whining and writhing for Maggie to press her body closer.

“That okay, Alex?” Maggie asks gently, and Alex nods once, twice, three times, over and over and over, because god, yes, it was alright. More than alright.
“I’m pretty sure you came in here to um… deal with certain things, Agent Danvers,” Maggie tells her casually, her voice low, her voice dripping, her voice raw.

“I did, yeah,” Alex rasps, her voice gravel, her voice needy, her voice absolutely wrecked.

“And what were those things?”

“You.”

“Me?”

Alex whines and writhes against the wall. “You fucking me.”

“Is that all?” Maggie’s eyes rake down Alex’s body as her hands hold Alex’s wrists steady.

“You going down on me.”

Maggie’s eyes roll to the back of her head for a moment, and she almost gives up the game then and there. But she started this, and dammit, she sees things through.

“Oh yeah?”
